Green Hill Church—The largest country church in our connection west of the Mississippi, having a membership of almost 200. This church is situated only a few miles from Mt. Pleasant, Texas, in the midst of a fine farming section of East Texas. Rev. R. L. Owen, pastor of our church at Mt. Pleasant, is acting-pastor of this church, in the absence, at present, of a regular pastor. You never saw the like of young people in this congregation, most of them alrcady members of the church. Dr. Hall preached here July 20-31. It was very hot during this meeting, one day the temperature rising as high as 110 degrees. But, in spite of the heat, crowds attended the services to the end. There were 22 professions, 16 being received into the church on examination and by baptism, five by statement, and probably there will be more to follow. This field offers a wonderful opportunity to some energetic and consecrated young minister.

WEST VIRGINIA

Renick—Rev. D. McD. Monroc, of Greenback, W. Va., assisted the pastor of the Spring Creek Church at Renick, W. Va., recently in revival meetings at two school houses, Brownstown and Rapp's School House. The visible results of these meetings were 17 professions of faith in Christ, 16 of whom united with the Spring Creek Church, of Renick. There were 19 baptisms. The gospel was preached with power, the people prayed and worked and God blessed their efforts to the salvation of souls. We ought to have more of this kind of work—pastor assisting pastor in evangelistic work. J. E. Flow, Evangelist.

Horton—Rev. James L. Fowle, Synodical evangelist recently closed a very successful meeting, beginning July 31st, and lasting to August 8th, at this church. The services were enjoyed by all who attended, interest increased each night. The results were very gratifying. There were 69 professions, 72 reconsecrations, and the church membership tripled and many more to come in later. Mr. Fowle was well received and went away leaving many warm friends here, also a friendly feeling among all denominations. We know the community has been much benefited by his earnest efforts.

PARCEL POST FOR CHINA

(The following communication from the Post Office Department to Dr. Price, of our Mid-China Mission will be of interest to those who may wish to send Christmas packages to our missionaries):

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

Second Assistant Postmaster General

Washington, March 22, 1923.

Rev. P. F. Price, Executive Secretary,

Nanking Church Council,

Nanking, China.

My dear Sir:

Acknowledgement is made of your letter dated February 19th, concerning the existing parcel post service between the United States and China.

In reply, you are informed that parcel post packages for China, both ordinary and registered, when prepared at the postage rate of 12 cents a pound or fraction of a pound will be accepted up to a weight limit of 22 pounds when addressed to steam-served office, and 11 pounds when addressed to non-steam-served offices. Parcels addressed to steam-served offices may have a maximum dimension of six feet in length and girth combined, while those addressed to non-steam-served offices may have a dimension of five feet in length and girth combined, but not exceeding one and one-half feet in length. Ordinary and registered parcel post packages addressed for delivery in the city of Shanghai will, however, be accepted up to a weight limit of 50 pounds. Each parcel must be accompanied by one customs declaration which must be filled out and attached to the parcel at office of mailing.

In this connection, if you will advise as to the post offices in the United States which appear to be in doubt concerning the acceptance of parcel post packages for China, the matter will be taken up with such offices and the matter properly adjusted.

Very truly yours,

For the Second Assistant Postmaster General,

Signed: Edwin Sands, Superintendent.

FREE LITERATURE

Free literature on Christian public education will be furnished to pastors who are planning to speak on any phase of that subject on the day of prayer for public schools, the second or other convenient Sabbath of September. This literature consists of a packet of pamphlets together with the September educational number of the Christian Statesman, the official monthly journal of the National Reform Association—usual price 20 cents per issue. The Statesman will contain among others, especially timely articles by President John C. Acheson on "Education in the shaping of National Life," and by Dr. William S. Fleming on "The Present Status of the Bible in the Public Schools." This literature may be obtained by addressing the National Reform Association, 209 Ninth St., Pittsburgh, Pa., requesting it and stating where this notice was seen.

News of the Week

In the Kemmerer coal mine disaster, in Wyoming, last week, 97 persons are known to have lost their lives. The cause of the explosion is unknown.

De Valera, President of the Irish Republic, is at last in custody of the Free State authorities. The Free State cabinet seems to be equally divided as to the wisdom of arresting him.

The representatives of the United States and Mexico, on August 15th, signed a plan making possible new diplomatic relations. Negotiations have been progressing 13 weeks.

Former Representative Slemm, of Virginia, has been appointed private secretary to President Coolidge, at a salary of $7,500. Mr. Slemm has already been discussing federal jobs in the South.

Mr. Slemm said that he went over the matter of the appointments with the President in a general way and that no definite decisions were reached. One of patronage matters touched upon concerned the office of United States marshal for South Carolina, now held by Joseph W. Tolbert, who was given a recess appointment by President Harding, after failure of the Senate to confirm Tolbert's nomination.

President Coolidge, returning to the capital from Marion, where he attended the funeral of President Harding, summoned cabinet officers to his temporary executive offices and expressed to them his desire that the administration forces close ranks and march ahead. He reiterated his wish that all the present cabinet members continue in office, and some of his callers are of the opinion there will be no changes in the executive's official family for some months, at least.

In Germany Chancellor Wilhelm Cuno and his entire cabinet have resigned. Dr. Gustavo Stresemann, leader of the German's people party, has been commissioned by President Ebert to form a new government, which will be a coalition of all political parties. It will accept the program of the United Socialists, who have arrived at an understanding on tax and financial matters.

In Eberbach, Germany, Grover Cleveland Bergdoll, Philadelphia draft dodger, on August 11th shot and killed Schmidt, a German engineer, and wounded a man named Roger, said to be an American soldier, who tried to kidnap him and carry him out of Germany.

It is stated that Senator Shortridge (Cal.) intends to reintroduce the Dyer bill in the Senate when it reconvenes, and in that event Senator Bruce (Md.) will offer his bill calling on the states to take the initiative with a substitute. He would have them get together on a substitute for the Dyer bill, which was held back by a filibuster in the last session of Congress.

A "yellow book" of diplomatic documents issued by the French government brings out clearly that the United States ultimately will be asked by the Allies how much of the inter-allied debts she expects to be paid.

Bertram M. Stewart, of Washington, was instantly killed when an airplane he was piloting fell 1,000 feet. John Ward, Jr., of Harlan, Ky., was seriously injured. The accident occurred across the Potomac river from Washington. Ward, who had come to the capital with a party of tourists, had gone up with Stewart as a passenger in a sight-seeing plane.

The decision of Federal Judge Woodrough, at Brooklyn, that the seizure of foreign vessels hovering near the American coast, although outside the three-mile limit, to land rum cargoes, is justified, is regarded by officers of both the department of justice and the prohibition bureau, as one of the most important handed down by the lower courts in connection with prohibition enforcement.

That it has virtually been determined the Seaboard Air Line will protest the acquisition of the Clinchfield and Ohio Railroad Company by the Atlantic Coast line through its subsidiary, the Louisville and Nashville railroad, was authoritatively learned. It was announced several weeks ago that the Atlantic Coast line interests had leased, for 999 years, the Clinchfield road, which serves the Clinchfield coal district. It is understood that the Seaboard feels it has a better claim on the Clinchfield road if it is to go to any other system, but that it is not so much disposed to press that claim as it is to urge that the Clinchfield line be kept in a neutral capacity.

Seventy-five citizens representing every section of Gaston County assembled in Gastonia, unanimously went on record as favoring the undertaking of a vigorous campaign to raise sufficient money in land and endowment to move Lenoir College from Hickory to Gastonia. Sentiment in favor of moving the college was overwhelming. Not a dissenting voice was heard. There was not an indifferent or doubtful note sounded. The meeting resolved itself into a veritable love feast in which every part of the county from Cherryville to the South Carolina line pledged its hearty support in a campaign to be waged.

The elevation of Mr. Coolidge to the presidency seems to have made no difference in the business world. Judge Elbert H. Gary, head of the great United States Steel Corporation, issued a statement, assuring the captains of industry that Mr. Coolidge was all right, and predicted that the country would be safe in his hands. That had a good effect. With the exception of the wailing of the wheat farmers of the west the people of the country seem to be in very good shape.

Representatives of union miners and operators in the anthracite field were summoned by the Federal Coal Commission to meet in New York City to renew negotiations designed to avert a suspension of anthracite production September 1st. The summons, which constituted the first step of governmental intervention in the existing deadlock over a new wage contract, was issued with the approval of President Coolidge after he had discussed the situation with Chairman Hammond, of the coal commission, and Dr. George Otis Smith, a member of the commission.

A reduction of one cent a gallon in the retail price of gasoline in five states in the territory of the Standard Oil Company of Kentucky, was announced in Louisville, Ky., by S. W. Coons, president of the company. The reduction, effective Tuesday morning, will apply to Kentucky, Florida, Mississippi, Alabama and Georgia. The one cent cut brings the price at filling stations in Louisville to 22 cents a gallon.

EDUCATION AND THE SOUTHERN PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

By Rev. Henry H. Sweets, D.D., Secretary

The Presbyterian Church has always "stood for education." It is a sad fact that for a period of 30 or 40 years the Church almost stood still with regard to this fundamental work.

In the early days of the Presbyterian Church in the South little could be accomplished. The Civil War had swept away its resources, laid waste its private and church property, and in many instances closed its institutions of learning because trustees, professors and students, had gone to the front in defence of their country.

At the close of this period, the Church determined to arouse and build. Many schools, academies and colleges were revived or erected. Some of these have ceased to be; others have had a hard struggle for their existence; others have made slow but steady progress and have brought untold blessings to the Church and the Southland.

Until very recent years there were no well-defined plans—no unity of action. Each institution was concerned for its own life, and its struggle for existence and for an enlargement of its life and influence had oftentimes limited its vision and narrowed its sympathies.

In 1899 the General Assembly took up in earnest the consideration of Christian Education. A permanent committee on Church and Christian Education was erected to have charge of this work. The General Assembly declared that it did not "consider it safe for any church to turn over to any other parties, either religious or civil, the entire education of our sons and daughters. The history and tradition of the Presbyterian Church in this and other countries amply prove that denominational fidelity in this matter has not only secured the best results for our Church, but has accomplished great good by its influence on others."

In 1907 the General Assembly established an executive committee on Schools and Colleges. Little was accomplished by this committee at first on account of their failure to secure a secretary. In 1908 arrangements were made to use part of the time of the Secretary of Ministerial Education and Relief. The next year a secretary was elected. In 1910 the executive committee of Schools and Colleges was consolidated with the executive committee of Ministerial Education and Relief, and the title was changed to The Executive Committee of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief.

In May, 1913, the first large and representative body of our educators met to confer together and plan for greater things in Christian Education. The General Assembly was requested to appoint a committee to "consider all matters relating to the discovery, definition, co-ordination and allied questions of the schools and colleges con-ected with our Church." The Assembly complied with this request and directed that this committee call the Christian educators of these schools and colleges into conference with themselves to discuss matters coming under the purview of this committee and report its findings with or without recommendations to the General Assembly of 1914."

The General Assembly further urged "all the Synods and Presbyteries to give earnest attention to the work of Christian Education, using every endeavor to arouse our people to a deeper appreciation and a more liberal support of our educational institutions." It was also directed that "the next General Assembly be an 'Education Assembly' and the first Friday and Saturday evenings be given over to popular meetings in behalf of our schools, colleges and seminaries." This was the first of the "special" General Assemblies.

In 1914 a book, "Our Presbyterian Educational Institutions," containing pictures and full information concerning the 95 institutions then under control of the Church, was issued. This was the first time in the history of the Church when such information had ever been gathered together in concise and effective form.

In later years, at the request of the executive committee, a permanent advisory committee on Education, consisting of one member nominated by each of the Synods of the General Assembly, has been meeting each year to survey the field, unify the forces and plan for the future of this fundamental work.

In 1913 the Presbyterian Education Association of the South was formed. Its annual meetings are attended by a large number of presidents, principals, faculty and board of trustees of the various educational institutions of the Church. The unifying influence of this organization has done much to save the educational work of our Church from disintegration and disaster.

None of our institutions had endowment funds. Most of them were poorly equipped. None of them were in the budgets of the churches. Because some Godly men and women were willing to sacrifice ease and pleasure and to give their life's blood for the sustentation of this work, some of these institutions during the past have poured out to the Church and the world great streams of spiritual blessings. They have given trained and efficient and devoted leaders to the home, the Church, the school, the state, the nation and the world.

The unprecedented development in the field of education in recent years calling for large equipment in libraries, laboratories, buildings and grounds seriously imperiled the place of the Church in education. Our fathers were not able to erect the endowment now so greatly needed. The Church had quietly given itself to enlarging its activities in other fields and had taken little thought of the great liabilities that were piling up against its work of education. Individual institutions made desperate efforts to try to meet the serious and pressing needs in equipment and endowment and some efforts were put forth to have Christian Education included in the budget of the Church. The executive committee began to help the institutions to locate men and agencies who could conduct financial campaigns. Little was accomplished by these commercial agencies and men.

After numerous conferences, many attempts and several failures, the Presbyteries and Synods were induced to place this important cause in their budgets, and the executive committee erected its own staff to conduct financial campaigns in the Synods.

Successful campaigns have been completed in Missouri for Westminster College, and in the Synods of North Carolina, South Carolina, Appalachia, Virginia, West Virginia, Kentucky and Arkansas for their various educational institutions and in the Synods of Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana and Tennessee for Southwestern Presbyterian University and for other institutions in Louisiana and Alabama. The field men employed by the executive committee have been able to assist these Synods in campaigns that have brought to our educational institutions in cash and pledges $9,500,000.

Let no one think that the Church's duty to this fundamental work has been discharged. Much larger sums for equipment and endowment must be secured. Our schools and colleges and seminaries must find a place in the budget of the churches along with Foreign Missions, Home Missions, Ministerial Education, Ministerial Relief, Publication and Sabbath School work and all of the other causes for which these institutions are training a leadership for our generation and for the future.

GOOD ADVICE

On every occasion of uneasiness, we should retire in prayer, that we may give place to the light and grace of God, and then form our resolutions, without being in any pain about what success we may have.—John Wesley.

HER FIRST LETTER

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl 11 years old. I was promoted to seventh grade at school. I go to Sunday School every Sunday I can. My Sunday School teacher is Mrs. A. F. Johnson, I like her fine. As this is my first letter to you I guess I had better close for fear of the wastebasket. Hoping to see my letter in print, I am your new friend,

Wilma Chesnutt.

HIS DRIVING TESTED

Dear Standard:

I am a little boy eight years old. I live in the southern part of Georgia, but I often visit relatives in North Carolina. I went to see my sister who taught in that state last spring; I may go again in August if mamma goes. I play a great many games my older brothers play. I ride horseback, and drive the Ford almost as much as anybody. I think I had my driving well tested the other day when I took mamma to ride. She didn't act a bit frightened either. I hope some of my little cousins will see my letter.

Your unknown friend,
Jack Culbreth.

LOST ITS HEAD

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl five years old. I am anxious to start to school, but mamma doesn't want me to go yet. I have three sisters and four brothers. They are older than I am and are always teasing me. I have several dolls I play with. The one I like best is three years old. It is large and looks just like a baby. Its head is gone now but I still play with it. I hope my letter will miss the wastebasket as I want to surprise some of my little cousins in North Carolina.

Your little friend,

VISITING AT GRANDMOTHER'S

Dear Standard:

Please make room in your corner for a 13-year-old stranger. My home is in Winston-Salem, but I am spending the summer with my grandmother in Woodleaf, N. C. I have finished the sixth grade and will be in the seventh grade when school opens. We take your nice paper and enjoy reading it. We go to Sunday School at the Presbyterian Church. I have three sisters but no brothers. Please print this as I want to surprise my grandmother.

PEGGY PARKER'S MARCH WIND SURPRISE

It was the first day of March, and the March wind was celebrating. Peggy Parker can run pretty fast, but not as fast as the March wind. And, besides, the March wind can fly so high. And Peggy cannot fly at all—yet. Her Uncle Don, who is an aviator, or "bird man," has promised her that some day he will take her for a fine flight. But at present Peggy and the March wind are not evenly matched for a race. That is why Peggy could not catch up with her beautiful rainbow scarf. She was hurrying along down the hill to school, with the March wind doing its best to help her, like a very earnest, conscientious wind, which wanted to be of some use in the world, besides sailing sailboats, and breaking off old dead limbs, and clearing the stale air out of corners, and all those things which the winds do without getting many thanks. It pushed Peggy so hard, indeed, that she had to run in order to keep on her feet. And while it pushed so helpfully, it mischievously squeezed in between her scarf and her neck, and sent small shaky chills down her back. So when she reached the big boulder on the flat just before she came to Uncle Dana Bartlett's wood lot, she slipped in behind it—in the "lee" of it, her sailor uncle would say—where it kept the wind off. Then she laid down her books and lunch-basket, and took off her scarf, to put it on double, and more snugly. And just then—would you believe it?—the March wind—just as if it had missed her, and was looking for her—came whewing in behind the boulder; and then—just as if it felt rather miffed that Peggy should try to get out of its way, when it had been helping so well—it caught the scarf right out of Peggy's hands, and "Whish!" It carried it off over the wall, across the pasture, and up, up, up, and away over the treetops like an escaped rainbow! Then, through the leafless branches, Peggy could see it falling, falling, down into Mr. Azel Bumper's pasture, beyond the woods. But there was no time to go and get it then. She would be late to school.

"I'll go after it on the way home from school," said Peggy to herself, as she flew along to school—no, not flew, exactly, for we have seen that she couldn't do that, but ran so fast that her feet seemed scarcely to touch the ground.

Johnny Horner was waiting for her at the foot of Goose Lane. He said at once that he would go and help her look for it, after school, as he did not have to hurry home that afternoon. So Peggy skipped along to school, a bit chilly about the neck, but not worried at all about finding her rainbow scarf.

Well, after school, Peggy and Johnny hurried off, as soon as Peggy had 'phoned her mother, so that she would not be worried about her little daughter being late home. (Yes, the Little White Schoolhouse has a 'phone, but how it got it is another story!) They hurried through Uncle Dana Bartlett's wood lot, and into Azel Bumper's pasture, where they expected to find the scarf in about a minute or two. But when they had hunted until dusk the scarf was still missing! Then they had to give it up, for that afternoon. But they came the next afternoon, and the next! And then Peggy said some hunter passing through there must have picked it up and taken it home to his little girl. And she even tried to hope that the little girl was enjoying it, even while they were hunting for it in vain! She tried to be contented with her old brown scarf, but it was not easy.

The last day of March came. Pretty near April, you see. But that day the March wind blew harder than it had blown for more than a week. It seemed as though that stirring wind felt that now was its last chance, for a whole year. Besides, it was cold. And every little while a few chilly raindrops came flying along on the wings of the wind. It seemed as though that day was trying to be a January day, and a March day, and an April day, all together.

But Peggy had promised to gather some boxberries for little Betty Martin, who was still staying in a dark room, on account of her eyes being bad, after measles. She would be looking for Peggy with the berries, on her way home from school. The best ones were in a pasture beyond Mr. Bumper's pasture, with another woodlot between. So, when Peggy came to the best place to climb the wall, she wound her old brown scarf tighter around her neck, patted her chilly hands together, climbed over, ran across the pasture, through the woods, across the next pasture, through the second woods, and into the boxberry pasture, climbing—let me see—three more walls on the way. Across the pasture were the best boxberry knolls. And those berries were fine! But, oh, it was cold work picking them. But Peggy kept on. Then, finally, she saw the best knoll of all, just beyond a deep hollow, full of dead leaves. She jumped up, and plunged through the deep leaves, when suddenly she tripped; and when she picked herself up, and pulled her feet out of the leaves, something bright clung around her ankles. The rainbow scarf. All safe, and sound, and dry!

"Oh, March mind!" said Peggy, "you did have a fine play with my scarf, didn't you? But I forgive you! It's so pretty, I don't wonder you liked it, for I do myself!"

And then she gathered those finest boxberries, and skipped away to Betty.—Minnie Leona Upton, in The Presbyterian.

HAPPY HELPERS

It was June, but the world still looked new with its wonderful fresh green dress and new flower trimmings every day. She had grown tired of her lovely appleblossom parasols, and lily-of-the-valley strings of pearls, and had thrown them away. Today she seemed decked for a gay party, with frills and sashes of daisies and buttercups.

The fields were quiet and warm, with just enough breeze to make the daisies bow and whisper to each other. Here is a field stretching far, far away to the edge of the deep woods. And here are four children I am going to tell you about—Gladys, Timothy, Patty and John. These children lived in a home of such wisdom and gentleness that they had early learned the dear happiness of giving happiness to others. Today they are gathering flowers for two shut-ins of their neighborhood. One is a little boy, Bobbie Brown, in Patty's class at school. He has broken his hip and it will take long for it to mend. The other one is old Mrs. Crone, lying in a hospital bed.

Gladys has an armful of daisies. She is the one at the left. John, in his careful, sympathetic way, has brought a basket, and is selecting only the finest, largest flowers. In the middle are the younger ones, Timothy and Patty. Timothy is trying his fortune by pulling the petals from a daisy, and Patty is watching him. "Oh, Tim, why don't you get your flowers?" Gladys is saying. "It's almost time to go. Don't you care anything about Bobby?"

To tell the truth, Tim really didn't care very much at that time. Neither did Patty. The sky was so blue, the world so pretty, their little bodies so well and strong, that they were happy like two little playful puppies, and they just couldn't imagine anything wrong with anybody. Imagination, you know, is a magic key which can open many secret doors.

Timothy and Patty just chased each other, and chased butterflies, and caught grasshoppers, and poked buttercups under each other's chin until it was time to go.

Then they snatched a few ragged flowers, with short stems, and scampered gaily along the path toward home.

They came upon a surprise—a little white and gray rabbit. They wondered why he didn't hop away as they drew near, but as they crept cautiously nearer they saw that something was wrong. His hind legs were limp and bloody. Every now and then he raised up on his forelegs and strained forward to get a piece of sweet clover, which was always just beyond his reach. Then he sank back as if exhausted.

"He's just like another shut-in," whispered Gladys, pityingly. "He can't help himself at all."

"No," said John. "He must have gotten his legs caught in a trap, and he probably would have starved to death if we hadn't come along." Patty burst into tears, and Tim did, too, because now they understood what it might mean to be a "shut-in." They were distressed because they hadn't any nice flowers for Bobby, but Gladys consoled them.

"You know," she said, "real giving must come from the inside, anyway. In your heart you must really care, and try to understand the person you are helping."

Patty and Tim did care now, and that was why the nice things came along for them to do for Bobby and Mrs. Crone.

They took the little rabbit home in the basket—he was so full of pain and hunger that he wasn't afraid of them. They were sure their mother could help make him well.

On the way home they passed Mrs. Crone's little cottage. It looked sad, with the green shutters all closed, and the weeds growing among the pretty flower beds. "Oh," cried Patty eagerly, "I can go in and pull up all the weeds for Mrs. Crone."

"Yes," agreed Gladys. "Mother says she loved every one of her flowers so! We can finish in a few minutes if we all work together."

No sooner said than done.

"She'd like flowers from her own garden better than all the daisies in the world," said John.

"Yes, Tim and Patty can take them—Tim, old-fashioned pinks, and Patty, moss roses. She will know where they came from before we tell her. No other garden around here has them."

And so it was. They went to the hospital on the way home. Tears of joy sprang to the old lady's eyes when she saw the flowers, and she laid her hands on the little heads in silent blessing. By sympathy they had found out the thing she would like best.

Can you guess what they did with the rabbit? In a few days he was well enough to go to visit Bobby, who laughed with delight at sight of him. In a few more days Tim and Patty took him to Bobby's to live, and as his hind legs were still weak, he was the most cuddly and satisfying pet for a little still boy.—In the Church School, by Julia Logan Archibald.

A HURRY CALL

Good morning, Mr. Doctor Man;

I'm coming to you quick,

Because I'm so dreadful 'fraid

My dollies will get sick.

Ruth's doll has got the fever,

An' Flossie's has the mumps,

An' Stella's has the hoopin' cough,

An' Beth's some awful bumps.

Clarissa's has a broken leg,

And Faye's has lost one eye,

An' Susie's has some chicken pox

And measles, too—oh, my!

So hurry, Mr. Doctor Man,

An' blaccinate my two,

For if these dreadful things should spread,

Whatever should I do?

WHAT THEY LEARNED

"I don't want to wear my rubbers," Ethel grumbled.

"Why-ee!" said grandpa. "The duck puts its little red rubbers on when it walks in the soft, cold mud."

"I don't want to practice my music," complained May.

"Why-ee!" said grandpa. "The locust has worked hard at the scales ever since it was old enough to know how. Now it can sing from low 'z' to high 'z' and back without an uneven note."

"I don't want to stop to wash my hands," said Ned.

"Why-ee!" said grandpa. "The ant stops and cleans up whenever it gets soiled. Its feet are covered with hairs that make them a good brush, and it lets not a bit of dust stay on its body."

"I don't want to help in the garden," and Ray pouted.

"Why-ee!" said grandpa. "The worm helps Tom every day, for as it crawls along it turns the bit of dirt over and over with the queer little hooks on its body, and that keeps the ground nice and soft."

"I don't want to fill the wood box full of wood," declared Ted.

"Why-ee!" said grandpa. "The bumble-bee goes steadily from one blossom to another and never stops until its honey bags are quite full of honey."

"I don't want to take this note to the village," said Jack.

"Why-ee!" said grandpa. "The pigeon carries messages for a long, long way. They are tied beneath its strong wings."

And what do you suppose those children did?

They sat right down and promised each other that they would not grumble any more; they were so much ashamed to find that the duck and the locust, the ant and the worm, the bumblebee and the pigeon were all better natured than they.—Ex.

HOW THE ASTERS CHOSE THEIR COLORS

One summer evening a cool breeze swept over the land. It refreshed all nature and sang to the tired grass.

Most of all it talked to the flowers in a beautiful garden and told the asters it was time to think of blossoming. They were only little green buds now, but they smiled back to the wind and said they would be ready.

All the next day they whispered to one another, trying to plan what colors they should be. At last one of the smallest buds said: "Let us wait till the sun sets and watch for its tints. A raindrop told me they were beautiful, but I have never been tall enough to look at them."

The other buds listened eagerly, for they had never heard of the sunset colors. So they stretched their little heads high all the afternoon and then! O, then! When the sunset hour came, they held their breath, it was so glorious.

They were happy and quiet for a long time, even till the twilight hours. Then one said: "I'm going to be that velvety purple; it rested me to look at it." "And I," "And I," said several more.

"The bright red dazzled my eyes," said one tall plant. "Come, sisters; be red with me." "Yes, but the pink is like our dear friend, the rose, who died just as we came to live here. I loved her so much in those few days. I wish you would all be pink," quietly said another.

"But little Dorothy's eyes are blue, and she brings us water every day. I'm going to be the sky blue that showed among the bright colors," spoke up one floweret.

Then the baby plant of them all, the one who had told them of the sunset, whispered softly: "I am going to be white; that is the color I saw last. I looked and looked, and by and by there was only a beautiful white, and I shall be white."

So day by day the flowers grew, and day by day they thought only of trying to be like their color. The little plant that wanted to be white found it must be true and kind and good and thoughtful, for when it was selfish or unkind, even a little, some of its petals began to grow dark and spotted.

One glorious day they all blossomed out, and Dorothy and her mother came to pick them.

Dorothy clapped her hands and cried: "Who ever saw such perfect asters! Some fairy wand must have touched them."—Ex.

PRAIRIE DOG, "PETE"

When the Bensons first moved to Montana, they lived on a ranch 10 miles from the nearest white people.

George Benson was nine years old. He had no playfellows, so he made friends with all the little wild creatures that he could.

One morning his father came in from the pasture with a baby prairie dog in his pocket. The little thing had been very much hurt by some animal, probably a coyote.

Mr. Benson handed it to George and said: "Here, son, see what kind treatment will do for a prairie dog."

So "Pete" became an inmate of the Benson home. The hair on his back and sides was a reddish gray, on his belly it was a very light gray. His legs were short, his breast and shoulders wide. His little ears looked as if they had been cropped. The two inner toes of his front feet were long and sharp. George's father explained that they grew that way, so that Pete could dig his home in the hard earth.

George bound up Pete's injured leg and washed the cut places on his back. He kept him in a box and fed him with tender green grass. He never handled him roughly nor spoke in gruff tones. After four weeks of kindness and care, Pete was following George everywhere and was as playful as a puppy.

When Peter was full grown, he measured 12 inches from the tip of his nose to the root of his shaggy tail, and the tail itself was five inches long.

One day in October, while Mrs. Benson was working in the kitchen, Pete ran in. He sat up on his haunches, and barked in his high-pitched voice. She went on with her work. Pete got as close to her as he could, sat up and barked again. It was the first time he had ever acted in such a strange manner. She went to the other end of the kitchen. Pete followed and repeated his strange performance, then he hurried to the door.

Mrs. Benson followed him. She saw two-year-old Helen going down the road toward the creek. Evidently Pete knew that the water was no place for baby Helen, and he found a way to tell her mother.

Prairie dogs live in burrows in the ground. They damage thousands and thousands of dollars worth of crops every year. Farmers consider them great pests and try to get rid of them by putting poison down in the burrows.

Prairie dogs are nearly always plump and fat. They seem to be happy little creatures in spite of the unfriendliness of the world about them.—Dorothy C. Ret-sloff, in Our Dumb Animals.

THE RIGHT GIRL FOR HIM

A Scotchman, wishing to know his fate at once, telegraphed a proposal of marriage to the lady of his choice. After spending the entire day at the telegraph office he was finally rewarded late in the evening by an affirmative answer.

"If I were you," suggested the operator, when he delivered the message, "I'd think twice before I'd marry a girl that kept me waiting all day for my answer."

"Na, na," retorted the Scot. "The lass who waits for the night rates is the lass for me."—Selected.

RESOLUTIONS OF THE WAXHAW PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH SESSION IN MEMORY OF DUNCAN CATHERINE McDONALD WHO ENTERED INTO HIS REST JANUARY 13, 1923

He was a charter member and brother elder of the Waxhaw Presbyterian Church, and for quite a while was the only elder of the session and carefully and faithfully looked after the church in all her activities. He was an unyielding patriot, and true Christian gentleman, who never compromised with evil, in war and in peace duty and service was his watchword. He was endowed with a kindly Christian character attracting a multitude of friends. He gracefully and uncomplainingly passed away at his brother's home in Waxhaw, N. C., with no regrets and nothing to fear in his 78th year, and whereas God in His wisdom and love has called unto Himself our devoted, charter member, leader and brother elder Duncan Catherine McDonald therefore be it resolved:

First, that while we humbly bow in submission to Him who doeth all things well, yet we do herein express our great grief over the loss of our friend and brother.

Second, that we extend to the brother and relatives our tender sympathy and love in this their great bereavement.

Third, that a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved relatives and to the Presbyterian Standard for publication, and that a page in our minute book be ascribed to his sacred memory, and these resolutions be spread thereon.

Respectfully submitted by your Committee.

CAP'N'S MILLION-DOLLAR DOUGHNUTS

Mabel S. Merrill, in C. E. World

A pair of troubled eyes watched Blake Edgewood as he came swinging down the middle walk of the Welland College campus towards the little house in the garden across the street. That little house was used to his coming, for it was the home of Coralie Haydon of the sophomore class, Blake's class. The troubled eyes of the girl in the garden smiled a little as she watched him come.

"He says it puts luck in his heels to come down here the last thing before a race. The events will begin in an hour, and he looks as if he would win the two-mile and everything else in sight. But I do hope I sha'n't have to tell him what I've done—not till afterwards."

Coralie's hope was vain; the guilty secret had to come out almost as soon as Blake had thrown himself on the grass beside her garden chair.

"Guess what I've come for," he began. "Of course I'd have come anyway, to get that final touch of luck in my heels. But there's something else. We had a class-meeting this morning—why weren't you there, miss?—and they put me on chairman of committee to collect our class subscriptions for the million-dollar fund. I knew I could count on you to do your level best for the sake of the old class and the old college. Your example always fires up the rest of the bunch. How much do I put you down for, Coralie?"

Coralie's answer lifted him off the grass with a jerk. "Not a cent," she declared firmly, though her voice quavered. "I've spent all of the fifty dollars I had saved up to give to the fund."

"You spent it?" Blake's gray eyes grew dark with displeasure. Every member of every class at Welland College had begun making the most heroic efforts to raise money. The young and struggling institution was much in need of that million-dollar addition to the endowment; and, though it seemed a giant's task to raise it, the alumni, alumnae, and students were already working desperately. At an enthusiastic mass-meeting each class had pledged what they thought they could give, and were now trying to do more than the pledges called for. The sophomore class was one of those of whom much was expected. And here was Coralie Haydon, recognized leader among the girls, already fallen out of the ranks!

"It would be just like a girl," scoffed Blake, "to put a new dress or a string of beads before the chance to help lift the class over the top. But I must say I didn't think it of you."

Coralie's troubled eyes flashed with sudden anger. "On the contrary," she said icily, "I saved that fifty by going without a silk sweater, a new hat, and a pair of silver-colored shoes to go with my crepe-de-chine dress. And this is all the thanks I get for it, being set down as a slacker without any hearing at all."

"Well, the fact that you saved the money won't prevent your being called a slacker now that you've been and spent it for something else," argued Blake. "But of course I'm waiting to hear what you have to say for yourself. Though, whatever your excuse is, it won't fill up the gaps that keep coming. Four or five I've seen this morning can't pay their pledges on account of sickness; and Edna and Ned Royal, who were to have given a hundred dollars apiece, have got word that their father has gone into bankruptcy."

Coralie's face had grown blank with dismay over these details, but she still looked wrathful. What right had Blake to talk to her like this? For a moment she had a good mind not to tell him what she had done with that fifty dollars. But she could not quite make up her mind to such drastic treatment of him as that would be.

"If you've made up your mind to look at the matter just one way," she said, "and that's what you always do, Blake Edgewood,—I can't expect to make you understand why I did such a thing. But, after all, it may turn out an investment for the million-dollar fund; and then you'll wish you hadn't called me a slacker, maybe. You may come and see, if you like."

Blake hesitated a moment as she stalked away; then he followed sulkily along a path through some shrubbery to the upper side of the old garden, an odd corner separated from the street only by an old stone wall. Across the street the college campus lay in full view under its sheltering trees. Behind the wall stood a little building once used for a cobbler's shop, but now converted by means of paint, paper, and whitewash into a minute but rather pleasant bungalow of two rooms.

"The materials didn't cost much; I could get them all with my fifty dollars, and he did the work himself," explained Coralie eagerly, forgetting her wrath for a moment. "And he hadn't any place in the world to go; they were actually coming to take him to the poor-farm, and Gran used to go to school with him; so she said to let him live in the old shop if he could. But he couldn't, the way it was; so I helped."

Blake had easily recognized the old man who stood on the top of the wall, busy with some job. His name was Swain, but nobody in the village ever called him anything but "Cap'n," a title left over from the days when the old militia trained on the village green.

"He's got a few hens, and he's going to plant a garden; you see Gran and I have never been able to use this acre of land," went on "Cap'n's" rescuer. "Oh, we had such a good time fixing up that little house so it would be fit to live in. And when I told him all about the million-dollar fund, and how we were all going to earn every cent we could in whatever way, he said he wasn't too old to help out a bit. Look; do you see what he's doing?"

Blake had seen, with gloomy amazement. Cap'n was on the top of the wall fastening to the limb of an oak a large swinging sign whose tall black lettering could be plainly seen from almost any part of the campus:

"MILLION-DOLLAR DOUGHNUTS SOLD HERE"

A scrawny hand luridly painted in cart-wheel blue plainly indicated the little building among the shrubbery.

Blake began to understand, and a sudden violent distaste for the whole business seized him. It might be well enough for ordinary girls to mix themselves up in all these jobs the college bunch was getting into—selling things in stores, cleaning office windows, and doing all sorts of things in places where the whole town could stare at them. But it was all wrong for Coralie, and he wouldn't have it. And here she had been and mixed herself into it without saying a word to him! He hated the idea so that he turned suddenly savage.

"Great Scott, Coralie! you're nothing but a baby, and your grandmother must have been out of her head to let you do it. Throwing away your money just to make a spectacle of yourself for everybody that goes by in the street—"

The flash in her brown eyes stopped him, but before she could speak the little old man had hopped off the wall and entered briskly into the conversation.

"Don't you go worrying your head, young feller, whoever you be," he said firmly. "The little lady ain't going to be mixed into no work that ain't fit for her. I made doughnuts in a restaurant so many years I can fry 'em in my sleep, and I shall always be right here to tend shop. We're beginning small; but we've figured things down fine, and we are going to make a profit when we get going. There won't be much to come out for my living. I can get along on peptaters and the doughnuts that scorch in the kettle. You step this way a minute."

He led them swiftly to the two-room bungalow, the most of which was occupied by an old cook-stove. There was a long slip of a room behind, which was the Cap'n's sleeping-quarters. Around the main room ran white painted shelves, flawlessly clean, and loaded with bright tin pans which were heaped with crisp new doughnuts, so many doughnuts that it made Blake dizzy to look at them.

"I couldn't help thinking they turned out finer'n common," proudly remarked the doughnut-maker. "Have a sample, young feller; maybe it'll soothe your feelings." He thrust a couple of doughnuts deftly into the pocket of Blake's sweater. "Look, little lady; the automobiles are beginning to go by for them big games. Now you'll see these doughnuts fly out of this shop like a swarm of bees."

Blake cast a startled glance at the automobiles in question. This street led straight to the college athletic field, and this was the first day of the carnival of sports to be held there by four great colleges. Blake himself was one of the stars, who was expected to put the name of Welland on the map before night, the two-mile run being his surest hope. He knew he had no business to be down here at this hour.

He took his leave without a glance at Coralie, and her eyes grew wistful again as she stared after him. "I didn't even wish him luck," she murmured; "and he depends on me for what he calls the final touch in his heels. Oh, dear—but there, maybe his getting so furious with me will make him run all the better. Blake couldn't lose. And I'm sure to hear the college bell while we work over the doughnuts. I know just when the race starts, and of course the bell will go off like mad the minute he comes in winner."

Coralie's brows were wrinkled as she worked away to help the head doughnut-maker. Blake thought her a silly little kid trying to show off; that last thing he had said to her she could never forgive; it would be no use his trying to smooth it over when he came tomorrow. She frowned darkly at the doughnut-kettle, and forgot to answer the cheerful remarks of Cap'n. But, when she looked at the old man's happy face, she refused to repent of what she had done. It was her fifty dollars!

She fled back to her garden east when the first automobile stopped opposite that great swinging sign. In spite of herself she couldn't help remembering what Blake had said about making a spectacle of herself. But she cheered up a little when she saw that the doughnuts had taken wings, and were flying out of the shop like a swarm of bees. In half an hour Cap'n climbed on the wall, and hung a big flapping white cloth over the staring sign. He was sold out.

With congratulations on her lips Coralie flew to the shop, expecting to find a beaming proprietor heating up the big kettle for another batch. Instead of that Cap'n sat with a bitten doughnut in his hand and his wild eyes fixed unseeingly on the opposite wall.

"O Cap'n, dear, I hope you're not tired out already," she cried, "because all those folks will want bushels of doughnuts when they come along back after the games."

"No, they won't," groaned the Cap'n. "Little lady, what'll you say when I tell you I've ruined the trade first jump? Salt instead of sugar in them doughnuts, and not one pinch, either, but cupfuls. They'll all strangle themselves with the first mouthful, and the million-dollar doughnuts will have a reputation this shop can never live down."

He looked so woebegone that Coralie had to smother her own dismay. "It was only because you weren't settled in your mind yet, and maybe I put the salt-firkin where the sugar ought to have been. Let's get right to work and make doughnuts like lightning till we have more than we had in the first place. They'll be hungry enough to try again when they come back; and, when they've once had a taste of such doughnuts as you can make, we shall be safe."

"They'll never stop to taste," returned the doughnut-maker gloomily. "I could see 'em firing doughnuts into the ditch 'fore they got out of sight. 'Twas that made me bite one to see if there was anything the matter with 'em. Luckily if there ain't a mob down on us 'fore night with brickbats and pails of water. I wish you'd run home, little lady, and spend the day with your grandma."

Coralie silently scorned this advice, and they fell to work on a second huge batch of doughnuts. She was wild to be at the athletic field, where the girls of her class had gone in a body to cheer on their heroes. She would have given anything to watch Blake make that sensational win which she knew he would make in the two-mile run. She worked with one eye on the clock and both ears listening for the college bell. The people had long ago stopped streaming by, and the events were in full swing. The hour for the race came and passed, and still there was no sound of the triumphant peal. There was only the faint noise of cheering, which might mean anything or nothing at all—for Welland.

If the doughnuts in the kettle had been half as heavy as Coralie's heart was when she took her last look at the clock, the million-dollar stop would have been in a bad way indeed.

"He didn't win the two-mile," she lamented silently. "Blake didn't win, and everybody was dead sure he would! And it's my fault. He's never like himself when we've quarrelled. It took all the luck out of his heels! Oh, dear! oh, dear! at this rate I shall ruin the college trying to help it along."

Both faces had grown steadily more and more gloomy as the shining tin pans slowly filled up again. But the doughnuts seemed to have absorbed the cheerfulness their makers had lost. Light, crisp, and delicious to the eye, they would have tempted an epicure.

"Those you made this morning looked lovely, but these are lovely," pronounced Coralie, finishing her second sample. "Look, the games are over for today, and here are the first automobiles going by home. Now if some of them will only stop!"

"All I'm afraid of is that they will stop," muttered Cap'n. "I know as well as I want to that them doughnuts have been the talk of the crowd up there all day long. I can see 'em with my mind's eye, laying in win'rows and icking around underfoot. Look at that now!

A tall man in a passing automobile had risen to shy a battered doughnut at the swinging sign. From a machine behind, a shower of the muddy pellets came whizzing in the direction of the little shop in the shrubbery.

"They've brought them doughnuts instead of the brickbats I spoke of," whispered Cap'n hoarsely. "You scoot for home, little lady, quicker'n a cat! That crowd is mad because they think they've been made game of, and they may not stop to notice that you're here."

But Coralie stood her ground, and her brown eyes blazed with sudden relief. Leaping over the wall came the figure of a runner with the grime of the conflict still upon him. It was Blake Edgewood. He darted into the little shop, and caught up two of the largest pans of doughnuts.

"These all right, aren't they?" he demanded. "Bring 'em along fast as you can, Cap'n. Miss Haydon will stay in the shop and hand us out the pans. Make it snappy now, and we'll head those fellows off, besides saving the reputation of the million-dollar doughnuts."

When Blake leaped on the top of the wall with his two pans, he faced a surging mob well armed with muddy doughnuts. They stopped at sight of him. They had been fighting all day for a glimpse of this very hero. He held up his load of doughnuts, and his ringing voice challenged the crowd.

"Million-dollar doughnuts right here!" he shouted. "Everybody that got a salted one for three cents this morning step up and get a sweetened one for nothing, and remember that accidents will happen in the best-regulated families. Be a sport, and take a second chance."

As before, the contents of the little shop seemed to take wings and vanish in air like a swarm of bees. It was no time at all before they were all gone, and Blake came laughing into the shop.

"There, Coralie," he said, "have I made up for acting like a bear with a sore head this morning? You see I bit one of those doughnuts Cap'n put in my pockets, and then I found out what everybody was jawing and laughing about. Later on, I got wind of what the crowd meant to do down here. So I bolted to the rescue."

"You've rescued us," sighed Coralie, "but, O Blake, what does that matter when I made you lose the race? I took all the luck out of your heels."

Blake stared. "Lose the race? You didn't think I lost it! Why, I won it just by thinking what a little sport you were to take the chance of being called names to help a friendless old chap to a roof over his head. It must have taken more courage than saving your money for the fund. It was fine, Corrie, and I'm not such a fool I couldn't see it as soon as I cooled down."

"But—but the race," protested Coralie with a gasp. "I never heard the bell."

"No, you see Welland scooped in so many honors right from the beginning that we thought we'd better wait and do it all up at once as soon as the day's work was over. There she goes now!" as the mad, glad clang of the college bell shivered the silence.

Blake vanished at the sound; the fellows would be hot on his trail, and the impromptu celebration on the campus would start off with a hang as soon as they got hold of him.

Coralie glanced dazedly at Cap'n, who had brought in the last stack of empty pans, and was standing in the attitude of a conqueror in front of the clean shelves.

"That bath of salted doughnuts will have to be charged up to profit and loss," he said. "We're going to begin all over again, little lady, and the results will make you open your eyes. It's a lucky business that gets such a scnd-off as the million-dollar doughnuts have had this day."

Why He Wanted a Short Sermon

Canon Cureton was to preach at the Abbey on a certain saint's day when the boys of Westminster School attended service and afterward had the rest of the day as a holiday. Mr. Cureton was looking over his sermon when his son asked anxiously, "Father, is your sermon long?"

"No, Jimmy, not very."

"But how long?"

"Well, about twenty minutes, I should say. But, why?"

"Because the boys said they would thrash me if you are more than half an hour."—Public Ledger.

DR. D. CLAY LILLY'S SCHEME

It has been some four months since Dr. Lilly announced his purpose to accept the pastorate of the Reynolda Church, at Winston-Salem. In connection with that announcement Dr. Lilly outlined a scheme for building up the defences of our Christian faith. He very truly stated that this faith is being fiercely assailed from two sources in particular, that of radical, or destructive criticism of the Bible, and that of materialistic theories of science. Of course, all who believe the Bible to be the Word of God, believe in the ultimate triumph of the Christian faith. God has a definite and repeatedly declared purpose to accomplish in the world through the preaching of the Word, and never when this word is preached will it return unto Him void. "It shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it." This, we believe, is God's own declaration, and it is not qualified by any conditions. It is not added, even by remotest implication, "provided the Word meets with no opposition from radical critics and materialistic scientists." The best defence of the Christian faith is the fearless, earnest and persistent preaching of the teachings of the Bible. It is the sword of the Spirit, and the best way to defend it is to thrust with it.

No one would assent to the truth of the forgoing more readily than Dr. Lilly. He does not doubt for an instant the ultimate triumph of the Gospel, because he believes that God is the Author and that He stands pledged to make it victorious. He is not for erecting defences because he is trembling for the ark of God. But there are ample reasons to justify the scheme which he proposes. God fulfills His promises through human agencies. He wins the victory by putting courage into the hearts and strength into the arms of those who fight His battles. He commissions us to stop the mouth of gainsayers, and bids us to contend earnestly for the faith. If the history of the church teaches anything it teaches that God never intended that His Church should be "carried to the skies on flowery beds of ease." He has taught us to sing, "Sure I must fight, if I would win." We must not only fight the sins in our own hearts, but also all the evil forces that array themselves against the truth. In this fight God means that the church shall draw on all its intellectual resources, as well as its stores of moral and spiritual resources.

Of all people in the world, Christians are the last persons who should retreat before those who are making assaults in the name of truth. They claim to be the champions of truth. They know that while error is manifold, truth is one, and that no lie is of the truth. They know that if saved they must be saved by the truth. They hear their Saviour praying to the Father: "Sanctify them through thy truth, thy word is truth." All their hopes are based upon the truth. Why do they believe the Bible to be true? Because they believe it to be God's Word. But they just as firmly believe that this world is God's world as they believe that the Bible is God's Word. Both the world and the Word are revelations of the one only living and true God. They believe that it is impossible for these revelations to contradict each other. Their one concern is to get a correct interpretation of these revelations. Now this is precisely what Dr. Lilly has in view in the conferences which he has in view. He proposes to bring together scholars who have devoted themselves to the study both of God's world and of God's word. He will give them an opportunity to compare notes, to interchange knowledge, and thus furnish us the results of the devout study of various phases of Divine truth.

The urgent motive for the kind of work that Dr. Lilly has in view is found in the fact that in many of the institutions of higher learning certain branches of science are being taught by those who are all too willing to leave God out of their studies, and to find an explanation of all the facts of science in mere material forces. They have no love for the Bible, and consequently are at no pains to discover a possible harmony between what they discover in their laboratories and what is taught in the Bible. It is to be feared that some of them find a pleasure in discrediting the Book which the church has ever held up as an infallible rule of faith and practice. In these institutions are gathered thousands of choice young men and women. They are just at that age when most disposed to chafe against the restraints of religion, and to be fascinated with novelties. They are ready to discount the old merely because it is old, and to embrace the new merely because it is new.

Would it not be a signal service to all the aspiring youth of our land, if we could bring together eminent students of science who are also devout Christians, and have them go over the many points of difficulty that have been raised, and show how those difficulties are to be smoothed out? As we understand it, this is the kind of service that Dr. Lilly is proposing. We feel that such a service is safe in the hands of Dr. Lilly. He will encourage a full and fearless disclosure of the truth, but will see to it that nothing shall go forth bearing the label of truth unless it has had its credentials thoroughly tested. The church is accused of cherishing a suspicion of scientific investigations; that it fears lest something might be brought to light that would disturb its comfortable composure. The church has some reason to cherish suspicion of the fairness of many scientific investigators, for it is notorious that infidelity is ever on the alert to use the findings of science to undermine the foundations on which the church rests.

THE FRUIT-TEST

In every discussion of the drifting away from the "Faith of our Fathers," whether in public or in the press, a standing reply is that these men who have left the old paths are drawing men as never before, and that therefore they cannot be far wrong, else God would not bless their work.

One pious soul whom we have long admired for her intellect and her goodness in defending the chief of that school, said that whenever she heard him, she felt as if a hand had reached down from heaven and had drawn her closer to her Saviour.

Another cited the fact that this same minister attracted the young men as no other in the city of New York did.

Then one of our men, in his famous appeal for toleration, insisted that we must judge these wanderers from the faith by their fruits rather than their roots.

Dr. Neil Anderson, the pastor of the Independent Presbyterian Church of Savannah, Ga., in a recent sermon gave the result of the application of this test in the churches of New York City.

"We are told," he said, "that the old Gospel 'makes a minister the calm expositor of doctrinal form, while the Gospel of Jesus—that is the so-called new Gospel—'makes a minister the impassioned advocate of dynamic force.' Is this true? Does this new, emasculated Gospel, that eliminates the story of the Virgin Birth, the unique Divinity of Jesus, His vicarious atonement, His bodily resurrection, and His personal second coming, reach the hearts of young men and young women with a power that does not reside in the old message?"

"Not if we measure the effectiveness of the Gospel message by its transforming power in the lives of men leading them to accept Jesus Christ as their personal Saviour, and to surrender themselves to His service. Here the so-called new Gospel fails to be a Gospel of power at all.

"The failure of the present so 'attractive preaching' of certain ministers of the Presbytery of New York to persuade men to accept Jesus Christ as their Saviour, is strikingly illustrated by the reports of the churches they serve to the spring meeting of their Presbytery.

"I take, for illustration, three churches in New York City, whose leading pastors—each of them has several—have denounced the fundamentals of faith as relics of an age of credulity. These three churches have a combined membership of upwards of 5,000, they are served by eight regular pastors, with numerous paid assistants, they have a combined corps of officers and teachers in their Sunday Schools of over 125, with over 50 ruling elders, and they spend on their local, congregational work, over a quarter of a million dollars, and received into their membership on confession of faith last year less than 104 new members!

"One of these churches, whose leading minister was most outspoken in his repudiation of the 'antiquated creed' of the Presbyterian Church, with upwards of 1,000 members, reported less than 20 members received on profession; while another whose preacher-pastor has been hailed throughout the land as the great leader of the religious thought of the young men and women too learned to accept the old creed, a church of approximately 2,000 members, received just 40 members on profession of their faith! If the one great business of the church be the salvation of souls, it must be manifest that the Spirit of God has not set His seal to such a ministry. It is more evident every day that a dynamic faith in the twentieth century as in the first, a faith that propagates itself, a faith that can gird itself to the task of world redemption, is a faith that rests upon the assured conviction that the Bible is the Word of God, and that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, and the only Saviour of a lost and ruined world. What the church needs today is not the argumentation of the fundamentalists, not the defence of the creed of the church, but the proclamation of the Gospel of the grace of God that saves sinners."

"CLERGY" AND "LAITY"

We hear and read much, these days, of evolution, and consequently the very word is in bad repute among our readers. We would assure them that we have in mind, not the doctrine of evolution, as exemplified in the growth of man, but only the doctrine as found in language.

Every student of the Bible knows that our language has undergone a great change since the time of King James' Version. For example the word "prevent" now means "to hinder," while in King James' time, it meant "to precede."

The word "let" means "to permit" or "allow," but at that time it meant "to prevent."

In I Thess. 4:15, we have: For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep—that is, we shall not "precede" them.

Or again in II Thess. 2:7: For the mystery of iniquity doth already work; only he who now letteth will let, until he be taken out of the way—that is, he who now "prevents," will "prevent."

These gradual changes in words may be expected, but before they can have authoritative standing among us, they must have established themselves in our literature.

Such is the case with "let" and "prevent." If one were to use them in their old meaning, few would understand. There are, however, two words that have a new meaning in our day, the words "Clergy" and "Laity," whose new use teaches a dangerous error.

As the new meaning seems to teach an error, it would seem that every student of the Bible would set himself against the change. One great difference between Protestantism and Romanism is that one teaches that we are still living under the Old Dispensation, with its priesthood and people, so that no one can approach God except through this priesthood, a teaching that was used with dreadful effect as a weapon to lord it over the people and to fill the treasury of the Church with their offerings. The priests were God's inheritance as in the case of the Levites—who had no part in the allotment of the land, but they were God's inheritance.

Peter in his epistle not only teaches that all believers are priests, which gives them free access to God at all times, but towards the close of his first epistle he teaches that they are God's heritage. He warns the elders that they must lord it over God's heritage. I Peter 5:3.

In this respect Protestantism differs from Catholicism, so that when Protestants use the word clergy as applied to the ministry, they are recognizing the Catholic doctrine that the priests are separated from the people, and stand as intercessors between God and men.

Protestantism, on the other hand, teaches that with the coming of our Great High Priest, the old priesthood was abolished, and the way of access to Christ opened to all believers without the intervention of any man.

Under the old dispensation the priests were called God's inheritance, His Cleros, and the people were called the laity. Under the new dispensation, the whole body of believers are called God's inheritance, as when Peter would exhort the elders to feed their flocks, he says: Feed the flock of God which is among you, taking the oversight thereof, not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind; neither as being lords over God's heritage, but being examples to the flock. Here the flock that the elders are to feed is called God's heritage or clergy.

When, therefore, we call the ministry the clergy and people the laity, we are not only contradicting Scripture, but we are teaching the Romanish view that the ministry still stand as priests between man and God.

It may be replied that usage has fixed the distinction and that no other words will express it.

Under ordinary circumstances this would be a valid plea, but we must remember that words are things, and that we must not only avoid the errors of Romanism, but we must do all we can to prevent the raising of a wall between the ministry and people, which would mean that each class has a world of its own—and each having a different standard of living.

On his last visit to this country Henri Vignaud, for so many years our secretary of embassy at Paris, told a story of one Renaud who came to Paris as senator from a district in the Pyrenees.

Renaud engaged a room at a hotel in Paris and paid a month's rent—$40—in advance. The proprietor asked him whether he would take a receipt.

"A receipt is unnecessary," said Renaud. "God has witnessed the payment."

"Do you believe in God?" sneered the host.

"Most assuredly," replied Renaud.

"Don't you?"

"Not I, monsieur."

"Ah," said Renaud, "in that case please make me out a receipt!"—Lippincott's Magazine.

THE ROAD

By L. T. Newland

I stood and watched the swirling mist
Sweep up the mountain side;
Until the peaks, both near and far,
Were gone; while on a wide
And twisting sea of tortured clouds
I looked, and then behold!
Out in the West the stoniest peak
Broke through and shone with gold.

I stood and watched the stormy clouds
Sweep down upon my life;
Until my soul grew sick with fear,
Of sorrow, toil and strife;
But when the road had darkest grown,
I saw the climbing way
Break through the clouds and lead to where His smile made endless day.

D. J. BURRELL, "FANATIC FOR CHRIST"

By William G. Shepherd, in the Christian Herald

Dr. David James Burrell is a rock-like man in the Christianity of America. He reminded me of a great stone, set in a certain place, to hold a great burden. His square, chiseled face, his broad shoulders and his medium stature gave me a sense of his solidity; the grayness that comes of his 78 years gave me an impression of the hoariness that settles, through centuries, on an immovable stone.

Did this rock of a Burrell ever move with the waves, I asked myself, as he spoke?

He did. He was a shifting sandpile, once. He told me all about it.

"When I was graduated from Yale," he said, "and went to my home in Illinois where my parents had raised me in the Indian days, my mother met me at the gate and threw her arms around me and cried with joy and said, 'Now, David, you'll go into the ministry, won't you?'"

"I couldn't answer her. I told her I would go to a theological seminary and see what they had to give me. In the university I had lost all the religion she had taught me. I had forgotten how to pray. I couldn't believe in the Divinity of Christ. I hadn't any belief. But I went off to the seminary. I couldn't get anything there; it was all dogma and theory. There was no living Christ in it, that I could reach. To keep myself going I took charge of a boys' mission class near Washington Square, in New York City. I told them how to keep clean, how to save their money; I told them they must not steal and that they must try to be good citizens. But I couldn't tell them anything about Christ. I couldn't even pray with them.

"One night a boy came to my room and told me his father was dying, 'Won't you come with me?' he asked. I had to go. I had never seen a man die; I had never been at a death-bed. I had no comfort to give to a dying man, but I HAD to go. In a tiny, dirty room of a tenement in the near-by slums the boy showed me his father, lying on a ragged bed. Then began a night of lies.

"Are you a parson?" asked the man.

"I had to lie and tell him I was," said Dr. Burrell. "I couldn't see anything else to do.

"Very well," said the man. "I'm a Scotchman. I was raised in the Kirk of Scotland. I know just as much about the Bible as any parson. But I'm dying and I want you to tell me that the Bible is true, before I die. I want you to tell me that I can believe in every word of it and that all my old mother taught me was right."

"And then he asked me if I believed in the Bible. I had to lie again. I told him I did. I told him I believed that Christ was Divine. I told him I believed in every word in the Bible.

"And then he quoted verses to me. 'Do you believe that, parson?' he would ask me. And I would have to answer yes. 'Well, make me believe it, then,' he would say. And I, not believing it at all, would do my best to help him believe it. Verse after verse he quoted to me. Now and then he would say, 'I'm slippin' away, parson. I want you to make me believe. I've wrecked everything around me in my life, and myself, too, because I couldn't believe.'

"We talked and talked and talked," Dr. Burrell told me, "while the boy listened. The man's eyes began to glaze. It was a terrible night; the most terrible of my life. About 4:00 o'clock in the morning, when the early noises of the city began to enter the room, he said to me, 'Parson, I'm slippin' away fast. Can't you make me believe?'"

"I tried to talk to him again and finally he said: 'Parson, come over here to my bed and pray for me. I'm almost gone.'

"I knelt down at his bed and I prayed and prayed. I tried to talk to God on that dying man's behalf. And while I prayed the man died."

It was then and there, in that room, that David James Burrell's life took the turn that led him to a position of power and authority in Protestantism of America.

The ring of Dr. Burrell's voice as he told me of the decision he made in that tenement room, at the bedside of the dead man who had tried so hard to believe, I'll remember through life.

"I decided then and there," he said, "that I WOULD believe. I resolved to take the Bible, word for word, without any questioning, and put my faith in every word. I determined to become a fanatic for this Christ. And I have been a fanatic ever since."

Toil on—faint not; keep watch and pray!

Be wise the erring soul to win:

Go forth into the world's highway; Compel the wanderer to come in.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEES OR EXECUTIVE COMMISSIONS—WHICH?

By Rev. Walter L. Lingle, D.D.

On the front page of the Presbyterian Standard of August 15th there is an article entitled "Women on Executive Committees" in which the writer takes certain positions which ought not to pass unchallenged. By a deductive process the writer undertakes to prove that our General Assembly's Executive Committees are executive (or ecclesiastical) commissions. Having arrived at this conclusion, he takes the correct position that only ministers and ruling elders can serve on commissions, and then draws the conclusion that the last Assembly violated the law of commissions by putting on the executive committees women who are only private members of the church. And finally he advises the executive committees to disobey the action of the last Assembly when it directed each executive committee to elect three women as full members of the committee. The conclusions of the article are correct if it is true that executive committees are executive (or ecclesiastical) commissions, though the advice to the executive committees to disobey an order of the Assembly is open to grave objection.

But are executive committees executive (or ecclesiastical) commissions? Let us inquire into this by the inductive and historical process.

Long before our Southern Assembly was organized, Dr. J. H. Thornwell was protesting against church boards and arguing for executive committees. He and Dr. Charles Hodge, of Princeton, had elaborate debates on this subject. When our Southern Assembly was organized in 1861, Dr. Thornwell had his great opportunity to put his theory about executive committees into practice and he did it. In fact executive committees were to be a special feature of the Southern Presbyterian Church as over against boards in other denominations.

Our first Assembly in 1861, under the leadership of Dr. Thornwell, created four executive committees—Foreign Missions, Home Missions, Education, and Publication. In creating the Executive Committee of Foreign Missions, the Assembly of 1861 took the following action with reference to the membership of that committee: "It shall consist of a secretary, a treasurer, and nine other members, three of whom at least shall be ruling elders, or deacons, or private members." Note that deacons and private members were eligible. Note also that while the minimum of "elders, deacons, or private members" is fixed at three, there is no maximum stated. That being true, all the members of this original executive committee might have been private members of the church if the Assembly had so elected.

The Assembly of 1861 also took the following action: "That the principles of organization involved in the establishment of the Executive Committee of Foreign Missions be considered as applying to all executive committees to be appointed."

In creating the Executive Committee of Publication the Assembly of 1861 took the following action: "The executive committee shall consist of a secretary, a treasurer, and nine other members in communion with the Presbyterian Church, four of whom at least shall be ruling elders, or deacons, or private members." Note again that deacons and private members were eligible to membership on this executive committee. Note also that while the minimum of "elders, deacons, or private members" is fixed at four, no maximum is stated. That means that the whole committee could have been made up of private members if the Assembly had so elected.

It seems to me that these few historical facts in connection with the creation of our executive committees utterly demolish the whole theory that executive committees are executive commissions on which only ministers and ruling elders may serve. Dr. Thornwell and the distinguished leaders of that first Assembly knew the difference between executive committees and executive (or ecclesiastical) commissions, and they knew that deacons and private members could not serve on an executive commission, yet they deliberately put deacons and private members on the executive committees, and left the way open for the whole membership of an executive committee to be deacons or private members if the Assembly so elected. Not only so, but Dr. Thornwell and the fathers of our first Assembly were accustomed to the use of the most exact terminology in discussing church law, and we may be sure that if they had intended to establish executive commissions they would have called them executive commissions and not executive committees. They knew the difference. As a matter of fact we may be reasonably sure that they did not want executive commissions. When a church court appoints a commission it does not as a rule instruct it, but turns the whole business in hand over to the commission without instruction to deliberate upon it and conclude it and report its action back to the court. A commission has large powers entrusted to it. This is precisely what the fathers of our first Assembly did not want to give to the executive committees. Their objection to church boards was that too much power was entrusted to these boards. To use the words of this first Assembly: "It is our purpose to rely upon the regular organs of our government and executive agencies directly and immediately responsible to them." It was not the purpose of that first Assembly to establish executive commissions with large powers, but to appoint executive committees with limited power, whose business it was to take orders from the Assembly and execute those orders, hence executive committees.

So much for the first Assembly and the creation of executive committees. I have searched the records of our Assembly to see if any Assembly from 1861 to 1923 ever identified executive committees with executive commissions, and have searched in vain. I have not been able to find a hint of such identification. On the contrary we find that the Assembly has from time to time elected deacons and private members of the church as members of the executive committees. The last Assembly put on the executive committees several men who are neither ministers or ruling elders. The Book of Church Orders says: "Deacons may properly be appointed by the higher courts to serve on committees, especially as treasurers." Much of the work done and business transacted by the Assembly's executive committees lie within the sphere of the deacon's office rather than in that of the minister or ruling elder. The fact that the Assembly has from time to time without question elected deacons and private members as members of the executive committees is clear evidence that the Assembly has never thought of her executive committees as executive (or ecclesiastical) commissions, subject to the law of commissions embodied in paragraphs 92-95 of the Book of Church Order.

There is nothing in our Book of Church Order or anywhere in the Constitution of our Church relating to the Assembly's executive committees. The only thing in the Book of Church Order which could be made to relate to the Assembly's executive committees by the wildest stretch of the imagination is paragraph 95, which reads as follows: "The General Assembly shall have power to commit the various interests pertaining to the general work of evangelization to one or more commissions." There are two lines of argument by which this paragraph is made to apply to the General Assembly's executive committees: The first line of argument is this: If paragraph 95 does not refer to the Assembly's executive committees, then what does it refer to? The second line of argument is this: If the Assembly's executive committees are not referred to in paragraph 95, then where are they referred to in the Book of Church Order? But this kind of argument is not especially convincing. It would probably take a "Philadelphia lawyer" to tell what paragraph 95 does mean. It is certain that the fathers of the Assembly of 1861 would never have applied paragraph 95 to the Assembly's executive committees, for they put deacons and private members on the executive committees. It is certain that our Assemblies since 1861 to the present would not have applied paragraph 95 to the Assembly's executive committees, for these Assemblies have felt free to put deacons and private members on the executive committees.

Paragraph 94 of the Book of Church Order tells us that a commission of the Assembly shall consist of not less than twenty-seven, of whom thirteen shall be ruling elders, and that it takes two-thirds of the twenty-seven to make a quorum. So far as I can discover no Assembly has ever tried to make the number of members on the executive committees correspond to the number of members on a commission of the Assembly. Each executive committee has about fifteen members, not enough to make a quorum of an Assembly's commission. So turn which way you will, you will not find any solid historical or documentary basis on which to rest the conclusion that executive committees are executive (or ecclesiastical) commissions.

What then is the status of our executive committees if they are not ecclesiastical commissions, and if they are not found in the Book of Church Order or in the Constitution of our Church? They are the creatures and direct agents of our General Assembly, just as a Presbyterian Home Mission Committee is the creature and agent of the Presbytery, and just as a Synodical Home Mission Committee is the creature and agent of the Synod. The General Assembly of 1861 called these executive committees into being and the General Assembly from that day to this has made every rule, or law, under which these executive committees have operated. The Assembly has exercised the right to create an executive committee, or abolish it, or merge into another committee at will. The Assembly has always determined the number and the personnel of the members on an executive committee, and has felt free to elect ministers, elders, deacons, or private members to the membership of these executive committees. So the last Assembly violated no constitutional law and no rule of its own in putting private members of the church on the executive committees.

The last General Assembly took the following action: "Resolved, that every executive committee be, and they are hereby instructed to promptly select and add to their membership three women, one of each class, which number shall not be exceeded in any event."

The meaning of this resolution is perfectly clear and explicit. Each executive committee was ordered by the Assembly to elect three women to full membership on the committee with all the powers that any member of the committee has. The writer of the article gives this advice to the executive committees: "What should our executive committees do in the way of carrying out the command of the last Assembly? They should appoint women as advisory members of the committees. They should not permit them to vote." In other words, the executive committees should deliberately disobey the explicit command of the Assembly.

That is an amazing piece of advice. It is not to the point here to discuss whether the action of the Assembly was wise or unwise. The Assembly, after hearing all the objections, thought that it was wise and expressed its thought by a very large majority. The point is that it is not the business of the executive committees to decide just which actions of the Assembly are wise and which are unwise. It is their business to obey the orders of the Assembly.

The writer of the article advises the executive committees to disobey the orders of the Assembly on the ground that the Assembly did a thing that was unconstitutional. The argument for unconstitutionality is based on the ground that executive committees are executive commissions and only ministers and ruling elders can serve on commissions. But we have seen that the identity of executive committees with executive commissions will not stand the historical test, and therefore the indictment of unconstitutionality is void. But even this is not to the point. What if an executive committee should feel that a command of the Assembly is unconstitutional? Is an executive committee the supreme court to decide just which acts of the Assembly are constitutional and which are not? The executive committees are the direct agents and servants of the Assembly. There are two lines of action open to the members of the executive committees, one is to obey the orders of the Assembly and the other is to retire from the committee. Deliberate disobedience and defiance would lead to confusion and anarchy in the church.

This does not mean that our Assembly is infallible. Our Confession of Faith distinctly teaches that Assemblies and Synods may err and do err. Nevertheless, the Assembly is the highest court of our church and is final interpreter of the wisdom and constitutionality of its own acts, and the executive committees were not appointed to pass upon either the wisdom or constitutionality of the acts of the Assembly, but to carry out the orders of the Assembly. While the Assembly is not infallible we need to cultivate the highest respect for its acts and deliverances, for it is the highest court of the church of the Lord Jesus Christ. Moreover, it does seem more likely that the Lord would express His will for His church through the highest court of His church as it speaks from time to time, than through some committee or some individual.

A GRATEFUL APPRECIATION OF THE WORK OF MRS. R. G. VANCE AND COLLABORERS, BY ONE OF THE MISSIONARIES

Permit me through the columns of your esteemed paper to express to Mrs. R. G. Vance and her devoted band of co-workers, the deep gratitude of the many missionaries whose work has been made so much more efficient as well as broadened, and the gratitude of the hundreds of native girls who because of this work have been enabled to secure a Christian education.

It may not be known to the Church at large, that Mrs. R. G. Vance, the wife of one of our consecrated elders of Waynesboro, Va., has undertaken to be the home representative of all our Mission Industrial Schools for Girls whether at home or abroad and to market all their products, where they are entrusted to her care. This work beginning on a small scale a few years ago, has grown in magnitude until now schools in Japan, Mexico, China, Korea, and the mountain fields at home, are sending in their industrial products, such as rugs, counterpanes, embroidery, bead work, brass, fancy work of all kinds, torchon lace, etc., all of which is sold and every cent of profit, without the deduction of a cent of commission, is sent direct to the one who consigns the article and this money in turn is paid those girls who make these articles and enables them to pay their expenses through the Christian school and to gain a Christian training, where otherwise they would be doomed to ignorance.

All the overhead expense of such work, with the exception of the custom duties which the consigner pays, is borne by Mrs. Vance who gives also freely her time and business oversight to the entire work. Many devoted women in various parts of the South have joined hands with Mrs. Vance and enabled her to extend the work until the day is not far distant when one can foresee the annual sale will amount to $50,000 and then $100,000 if a devoted worker in each city or district will join hands with Mrs. Vance and represent this work. The more articles are sold, the more girls who will be enabled to secure a Christian education. If you could see the gratitude of the recipients of this self-aid, you would wish to help in every way to extend its benefits to the thousands of other Christian girls who wait patiently, hoping against hope, that the door of opportunity may be opened for them. To enable a girl to make her own way through is the highest type of Christian philanthropy.

If any one wishes to aid in selling these articles which our mission school produces let them write to Mrs. R. G. Vance, Waynesboro, Va. Mrs. Vance is a wife of a beloved Virginia elder and banker, not the wife of Dr. James I. Vance of equal fame.

DR. BLAND AT JUNALUSKA

By Rev. W. M. Hunter

I heard three addresses at Lake Junaluska (July 17, 18, 19) by Dr. Bland, of Canada. It was generally known at Junaluska that he was to deliver six lectures under the auspices of the Sunday School Board, as a part of a Sunday School Teachers' Training Course, and no teacher to be given a certificate who had not heard at least four of these addresses.

Some things the speaker told the people: "No one is required to accept my teaching. I am simply telling you what great scholars believe about the Bible."

"Moses did not write the Pentateuch but four unknown men wrote the first six books of the Bible, by compiling fragments of history, traditions and old laws gathered from the heathen nations of a much later period than that commonly accepted by our Church."

The speaker emphasized the fact that the Book of Genesis gave no history that could be depended upon until we came to the days of Abram, all of the early history being a myth; even the Ten Commandments were of a Pagan and heathen origin.

The speaker referred to several passages of Scripture which he said were not true as God would not allow the destruction of women and children or sanction the calling down of the wrath of God, by one of His servants, on people.

The speaker invariably referred to "Jesus," seldom, if ever, using the name Christ. When asked by some one in the audience if he believed in the Deity of Christ, he answered "Yes," and seemed almost hurt at this question being asked.

There were a number of people in the audience who protested against such teaching.—Sunday School teachers and other leaders of the Church, most notably Secretary Bennett, of Nashville, and Bishop Cannon — while there were, a number of leaders in the audience who appeared to be much pleased with the speaker.

The whole affair seemed to provoke considerable discussion around the hotels.

The platform manager took occasion to explain that the speaker had been brought there by the Sunday School authorities to offset a certain line of "old fogeyism" and give light and liberty to the people.

In addition to a daily address in the auditorium, Dr. Bland was a regular teacher in the Teachers' Training School. At the chapel devotional services of the Teachers' Training School, the morning after Bishop Cannon and others had protested, the superintendent of the training school took occasion to say to the people that the speaker was being criticised by some people who accused him of stirring up the common people, but he reminded his audience that "this was exactly the same accusation brought against Jesus Christ in His day."

Some one in the audience asked Dr. Bland if his "new thought" which he claimed he had been preaching for 20 years, had brought about any new births.

In a hesitating manner he admitted that very few souls had been converted by his preaching—but explained that it was because this new Truth was contradicting old error and it of course made the people mad and they were in no humor for a revival.

As an illustration, he said it was like putting green wood on an old fire—it would smother out the blaze at first, but by-and-by the fire would be hotter than ever—"When the Church really accepted the Truth, there would be a great revival."

QUIET TALKS ON THE SIMPLE ESSENTIALS

No. 9—The Knot on the End

The Knot on the end of the sewing cotton holds the seam in place, and the garment together.

There is a Knot on the End of our Christian Faith that holds all in place. It is tightly knotted. That Knot is the tragic end of the outstanding Man of the race, with the tremendous finish the Third Morning After.

The race has one outstanding religion. That one religion produced the one Book. The Book reveals the one Man. That Man's personality stands wholly alone in its sheer size. His life stands solitary in its purity and humanness.

That His life went out, and so tragically, has become the central point of history. The calendars of the nations revolve around His birth. The calendars of human hearts revolve about the hour when His great heart broke.

Look at that Knot on the End. Thirty years were in Nazareth. Three and a half more were tireless in helping man. That last week spells graphically the Man's lonely homelessness.

Each night He walked out to Olivet and slept under the stars. Each morning he walked into the city where the world crowds were gathered thick, and where His enemies were supreme.

For two or three days His steps can't be traced. Was He off in the quiet gathering strength for the coming day of days? Then there is the bold ride into the capital on the royal ass. The King comes to His own. But His own received Him not.

The common thousands sing their grateful hearts out as they lovingly strew the roadway with garments and living green. But the leaders with green narrowing eyes, and tightened fists held the national reigns tight and drove hard.

The Betrayal Night finds the little inner company gathered about the frugal board. Then the traitor's withdrawal into the dark night, and the last long quiet talk under the full moon. And then the sore strain of spirit under the olives.

Now the arrest, the pretended trial before the two chief leaders, the courtyard with the soldiers' coarse, cruel mockery, and the thorn crown, and poor Peter by the fire. Then the Jewish Senate's official action, and Pilate, and Herod.

Then Pilate again, conscience-pricked, coward and cowardly, with the crowds jeering and the coldly passionate priests insisting. And the terrible scourging, the dramatic hand washing, and at last the decision wrung out by bitter hate, given out by official cowardice.

One could never tell the story if he were not held in the hard grip of a great purpose. Both shoes and hat go off, and one stands with bated breath and hushed pained heart, and watches with staring eyes.

The Man is laid down upon the crossed logs, and the spikes driven into sensitive hands and feet. Then the cross is lifted and dropped roughly into the hole prepared, the Man's weight coming suddenly down on the nails. It is 9:00 of the morning clock.

As the nails are being driven, the Man is speaking quietly, "Forgive them, the soldiers, they don't understand; the blame's farther back." And the soldiers greedily throw dice for the cast off garments. The leaders dicker over the kingly inscription hung over the Man's head.

The passing crowds with morbid curiosity throng and jeer. Yonder in the group of pain-stricken friendly faces, John's arm is tenderly supporting the woman of the grief-stricken spirit.

In the thick of it all the one masterful Man is on the middle cross. He forgets all else for the personal touch with the man hanging by his side. Again he turns and quietly speaks to his mother, and then to John. What thoughtfulness! What self-mastery!

And now it's high noon. The sun is at its flood. Then the sudden fearsome darkness. Noon suddenly becomes midnight. And a terror spreads in the very air, and seizes men's vitals. What is this? Who can this be? And for three long hours that strange darkness!

Then the distinct piercing cry heard, "Why did'st thou forsake me?" That's the hardest thing for the suffering Man, the loss of sweet consciousness of His Father's presence. But it's past now. Then the tense thirst. But nothing will be drunk that dulls in the slightest, for even the briefest moment, His masterful consciousness.

Then the great shout of victory: it is finished: the thing's done: the battle's fought; it's over now. Victory! Full victory! Then the quietly breathed prayer, "Into thy hands I commend my spirit."

And then the most striking thing of all, "He yielded up His spirit." He was not overcome by death. He yielded to death, masterful to the last breath.

And the Roman spear revealed how death came. The blood and water separated tells of a broken heart. The tense suffering of spirit, it was that that snapped the life cord when He yielded up His spirit. And out from that cross of suffering rings out to all men the cry, "I gave my life for thee."

The Knot was tied on the End, and tied tight. He died. He died for us. He died of His own accord. It was His own act, the time, the manner, the fact.

It had a purpose. Its meaning is found in His own heart. It had to be done.

MONTREAT—SPLENDID AND INSPIRING

By Rev. Jno. J. Rice

Montreat with its high green mountains, sky-piercing and cloud-mantled was the scene last week of the Home Mission Conference. For 16 years Montreat has continued to make its large contribution to the kingdom but until this year I had neglected to visit the place. I cannot tell how much I have lost, and I think of my negligence with regret for through all these years I have as a gospel minister neglected many opportunities to urge others to go there. Those who have not gone have missed elevating pleasures, inspiring sermons, and a spiritual atmosphere rarely to be found anywhere. Through a consciousness of my negligence in not visiting this wonderful place I am prompted to write. No one in authority has asked me to send in a report. My sentences are the free and spontaneous expression of a satisfied visitor.

All of us like to breathe fresh air, drink good water and eat wholesome food. We found all these and excellent meals and a room included for a very small cost. Rev. R. C. Anderson is to be congratulated for the zeal and management whereby he has made this place a mecca for Presbyterians. More than 235 cottages have been built, the hotels are splendid, and more than 3,500 visitors were there in August.

The writer went in company with Col. Tom Talbot, of Lexington, Ky., who proved a rare companion, indulging in much wit and carried it into the big auditorium for two speeches. He knew most of the people and most of the people knew him. Even all the colored folk were addressing him with reverent air when he left. A service for colored people is held Sunday afternoon, and Col. Talbot preached at this service. He used lots of good natured humor and common sense and as usual gave the emphasis to the Cross of Christ.

Dr. Homer McMillan had charge of the Home Mission Conference and conducted one of the best Montreat has ever had. The church owes this able and tireless worker a great expression of appreciation for all that he has done. The Bible Hour was conducted by Dr. Curry, of Austin Seminary. He possesses the happy faculty of mixing humor and truth. The audiences grew larger from day to day and heard the lectures with much profit. On the opening night Dr. Venable, of Norfolk made a fine address. The following night Mr. Frederick Sullens, of Jackson, Miss., told the story of his conversion in a Gypsy Smith meeting held 18 months ago in that city. The meeting changed Mr. Sullens and he in turn changed the policy of his newspaper which now stands for Christianity, virtue, prohibition, political righteousness and a lot of other things good Christians are interested in. Dr. Albert Sidney Johnson, of Charlotte, N. C., closed the conference with a splendid sermon. We enjoyed hearing this representative of one of our largest churches speak out boldly in behalf of the Fundamentalists as opposed to the Modernists.

Montreat also brought to us precious memories. High up on the mountain side stands the Chapman home. The noted evangelist loved to come to Montreat and lived there during the summer months. Since his death the home has been given to the Montreat Association.

We saw the church where Rev. Anton Ver Hulst preached during part of the time he battled against tuberculosis. He was one of our ablest young ministers and did valiantly in the great cause, but God saw fit to close his career just when it was bright with prospect and promise.

A minister who had enjoyed the saintly teaching of Dr. R. A. Webb, the noted theologian who taught in Clarksville and Louisville pointed out the corner on the veranda of the Montreat Hotel where he used to sit and pass the hours, watching the crowd and observing the swimmers in the lake below. Since Dr. Webb's death his students have thought of him many times, and every time I look at the corner I thanked God for his great life and his influence upon all who knew him.

The Montreat season for 1923 will soon come to a close with the Bible Conference, and thoughts of appreciation will rise in the ten thousand minds that have been blessed within her gates. The memory of her mountains where clouds are born and crystal springs begin to run; the inspiration of her lecturers and preachers who pleaded anew the cause of Calvary and placed His holy name above all those of the sons of men; the strong and thrilling stories of the home missionaries—the circuit riders of today in mountain mist and craggy glen; the heavenly atmosphere created by men and women following the lead of the Son of God; these will all come to us in future days with all the sweetness of silver bells ringing in the evening time, as the sun sinks behind the cloud bank and reveals with golden street and fiery castle a glimpse of what heaven shall be.

IS FAITH DEAD?

By Rev. J. P. Robertson

The editor of "World's Work," in his August number, takes up the cudgel again. A few months ago he was publishing articles on the glories of Darwinism and the supposed blunders of the Church and of the Bible. Now he throws a rock at an Episcopal cathedral in New York City, which they are trying to complete, "One fact is apparent; the age of faith is gone . . . One thing that the cathedral solemnly emblazons is religious faith. Like faith it belongs to the Middle Ages." He then speaks of "Columbia University, an intellectual kingdom in which Darwin reigns supreme." Now those who are posted on religious conditions know the Church of Christ, despite abounding infidelity, is displaying more vitality with each rolling year. Taking the Southern Presbyterian Church as a fair average among Protestant Churches, the records show that in 1890 the per capita gifts to missions was only $1.24; this year they are $6.40 per member—five times as large. And the number of young people offering for missionary service is so large that, despite this splendid increase in liberality, a fine young man has just written me that he could not go to China for another year because the Church can send out only two-thirds of the volunteers that are ready. So, if "faith" is a corpse, it surely is acting in a lively fashion. We must infer that our editor is not reading the Church Press very much, and does not know any better. Or could it be that he is imitating the average politician who seeks to create the desired conditions by declaring they already exist? We would prefer to believe that he associates with a certain class so much that he does not know what others are saying and doing. If one lived among "rum-runners" that throng the ways between Bermuda and New York, he would be sure that prohibition has increased the use of alcoholics; but a comparative view of the whole country yields a truly different opinion. That unbelief is rampant in many quarters, no man can deny; but it is only as it has been repeated before. Two hundred years ago, when the power of God began to come down through such men as George Whitfield and the Wesleys, the infidel writings of men like Hobbes and Berkeley had paralyzed the church until preaching of the true Gospel had almost ceased. And men were saying then as volubly as now that intelligence was a monopoly of infidelity. The editor of "World's Work" is a gilded rhetorician; but glittering assertions are not reasons. If I was a disciple of "Liberalism," I would be "shy" of this man as a defender. Dr. Faunce, a foremost advocate of Liberalism, recently in the same columns, has dignified Darwinism as "science," but was honest enough at the same time to admit it is "a guess" or "an hypothesis that cannot be proved." So let us not surrender the citadel to men that in honest moments confess they are using blank shells.

Shelbyville, Tenn.

One may find God through a great emotion, one may find through a sorrow, or in meditation apart from human affairs, but to the vast majority of us He must be found "as we are" and where we stand. It is to be in our life, in our work, and also in our play that we are to recognize His companionship and His interest and His strength.—H. B. Wilson.

ADVISORY HOME MISSION COUNCIL

Three things characterized the annual meeting of the Assembly's Advisory Home Mission Council at Montreat, August 7th-8th—bigness, importance and intense interest from beginning to end. Eleven Synods were officially represented and twelve other brethren either directly or indirectly engaged in home mission work were present.

Personnel of the Council

The Synods and their respective representatives were: Alabama, Rev. C. M. Boyd; Arkansas, Rev. W. Moore Scott; Georgia, Rev. R. O. Flinn; Kentucky, Rev. W. H. Hopper; Louisiana, Rev. George Summey; Mississippi, Rev. A. A. Little; Missouri, Rev. I. F. Swallow; North Carolina, Rev. A. W. Crawford; South Carolina, Rev. E. E. Gillespie; Texas, Rev. T. W. Currie; West Virginia, Rev. T. P. Allen; and the Assembly's Home Mission Committee was represented by Rev. Homer McMillan. The visiting brethren attending one or more of the sessions were Revs. J. M. Clark, L. W. Curtis, O. G. Jones, I. E. Wallace, W. M. Langtry, U. B. Currie, Louis Voss, G. G. Mayes, H. L. Snedd, William Crowe, and Mr. J. W. Fields.

Topics Discussed

A glance at the vital and timely questions claiming the attention of the council gives some idea of the importance of the council's work. The docket carried out was: The Rochester Plan of Evangelism, the Relation of the Church to State Schools, Young People's Conferences, Duties and Responsibilities of Chairmen of Home Mission Committees, the Employment of Christian Workers and the Equalization of Salaries, Congregational Missions, Church Erection, the Budget and Special Appeals, and the Schedule of Activities. All of these topics were most carefully considered and on most of them action was taken.

Conclusions Reached

Some of the resolutions adopted by the council which are of general interest were:

"That an evangelistic meeting be held in every church and an evangelistic meeting be held by every minister during the year."

"That the council most cordially commend the Pre-Assembly Evangelistic Conference to all commissioners, evangelists, pastors, and all who may be able to attend as most helpful and inspiring."

"That the Rochester Plan of Evangelism be presented to our Synods and Presbyteries and that they be referred to the Assembly's Home Mission Committee for suggestions on operation of the plan and for literature."

"That Dr. Glass and those associated with him be invited to confer with the council next year relative to fixing dates and securing speakers for Presbyterial and Synodical Conferences."

"It is the judgment of this council that the time has come in the providence of God when it is imperatively necessary that we make some large and adequate provision for church and manse erection beyond anything the church has previously known."

"We face this as the very result of the blessing of God in the advance already made, and in view of the large development immediately facing us."

"It is our judgment that unless such large and adequate provision can be made we will be balked in every advance."

"We are led to this judgment further by the example of our sister churches who have recognized the need and are making large and adequate provisions to meet it."

"In our judgment this is a need of our city boulevards and prosperous towns as well as and in many cases more than our back country and mountain districts, and if we are to adequately face our task, the home mission committee of our church must be provided with a fund sufficiently large to help finance large enterprises by gifts, or loans at low rate of interest, as well as to house the newly organized churches in our mountain or back country sections."

"We heartily endorse and commend to the whole church the movement now on in the General Assembly for an adequate equipment and any similar movements which are in progress or may be undertaken by the Synods or Presbyteries to meet their own individual needs."

"It is the judgment of this council that each Synod should at once determine its specific need for Church and Manse Erection and undertake a special Synodical campaign for the raising of a fund adequate to that end."

"That it is the judgment of the Assembly's Advisory Home Mission Council that churches in their canvass for the annual budget, should not promise the people that no further calls would be made for special causes during the year."

"This council expresses an emphatic judgment that the chief purpose of the congregation is its own mission work. It exists as a congregation not first for culture but first for extension and the spiritual culture comes with it. The first expression of this vital force is not the mission work done by agencies which it supports but first of all the mission work in physical reach of its membership.

"It is the judgment of this council that as far as possible every church ought to finance and control the mission work in physical reach and not to call on the Presbytery for aid to do the work which they are able to do themselves. They are the first responsible for it. So far as possible, their own members should personally do this work, both in conduct of public worship and instruction of Sabbath School classes and other forms of mission work."

"The judgment of this council is that this should not be permitted to interfere with the financial obligations of the church for other forms of home mission work and their obligations to the other causes of the regular budget."

"That the council commend 'The Presbyterian League' of Richmond, Va., for meeting the Presbyterian opportunities in our cities, and that the Presbyterian League be asked to furnish a lay speaker for any city desiring one."

The next annual meeting of the council will be held at Montreat and all Presbyterial superintendents and chairmen of Home Missions will be invited to attend and sit as corresponding members.

HEARING THORNWELL

"Did you ever hear Thornwell preach?" The question was asked me by a visitor to our town, with whom I was taking a pleasant ride in the country. He knew that I was from the South, and had a large acquaintance with Southern ministers, and it was natural that he should ask me whether I had ever heard Dr. James H. Thornwell, of Columbia, South Carolina. "O yes," I replied, "I studied theology under him, and heard him preach almost every Sunday the last year of his life. You know he died when he had scarcely passed 50 years of age." "I never heard him but once," he went on to say, and then proceeded to give me the following narrative:

"I was traveling on business in Alabama, and stopped one Saturday night in Selma. After breakfast next morning, a beautiful spring day, I took a walk, intending at church time to drop in somewhere and enjoy preaching. I had made no inquiries about the churches or the preachers, but when the bells began to ring I observed that the crowd seemed to be going mostly one way, and I fell in and went with them, not asking what church we were going to, nor what preacher we would hear. We entered a large and attractive building, which was soon filled to its utmost capacity, and there seemed to be an air of expectancy on the faces of the people. Still I asked no question."

Soon two ministers entered and went up into the pulpit. I observed them critically. One was a large, fine looking man (Dr. Abner Porter, probably) and I hoped he would preach. The other did not attract me. He was a delicate, unprepossessing man, with a thin face and a narrow forehead. I hoped he would not preach. I wanted to hear the other man, and to my great satisfaction this one conducted the preliminary services, which he did in a very impressive manner, making me the more eager to hear him preach. But, when it came to the sermon, the smaller man rose to preach. I was disappointed and was in no humor to hear him.

He began by saying, "I wish to present some thoughts in connection with" the passage of Scripture which he gave as his text. "Thoughts," I said to myself, "I wonder if you know what a thought is; I wonder if you ever had one in that little head of yours."

The text being announced in a clear and not unpleasant voice, the sermon began. The first sentence startled me—it was so concisely spoken, so clear, so direct. It made me take notice. The next sentence was so illuminating, so indicative of what was coming, so wide in its sweep, that unconsciously I leaned forward to catch every word. From the start he gripped me, and he held me to the last word. I wanted to turn to the man at my side and ask who this preacher might be, but I was afraid I might lose a word if I turned my head for a moment. I was held perfectly tense. I was like a man holding the reins with his horses running away; all he can do is to hold on without looking this way or that. And for one hour or twenty minutes I held on while this preacher ran away with me. Such a torrent of burning, blazing thought I never heard before in my life. From first to last it was logic on fire. And when he stopped I sank back in my seat, with my back aching (without knowing it) from the strained position in which I had sat for more than an hour, and taking a long breath, I said to the man at my side, "Who is this that preached?" Looking at me somewhat contemptuously he said, "I guess you are the only man in the United States who would ask that question. Who could preach that way but Thornwell?" Then I said to myself, "I have wanted to hear Thornwell all my life, and I have heard him without knowing it."

Montreat for One Week—A week at Montreat is not half long enough, but it's just that much better than no time at Montreat at all. It's a charming and a unique place and every Southern Presbyterian should write it large in his summer calendar. From a physical point of view it's lovely and restful; from a social point of view, charming and distinctive; from a spiritual point of view, a veritable feast.

Foreign Missions was to the fore the week we were there and everywhere we turned we saw some representative of the foreign work. Dr. Smith, Dr. Chester and Mr. Willis represented the Foreign Mission office. Sermons, addresses and exhibits all brought a message from "earth's remotest bounds." Brazil, Mexico, China, Korea, Japan and Africa, each had a worker to tell of its needs and its triumphs.

One evening Mr. E. F. Willis, the treasurer, spoke on the financial, or business side, of Foreign Missions. It must be "some business" and that it is being handled in a business-like way one could not doubt—also that a good deal more money could be used to advantage in this biggest of undertakings—that of carrying out the Master's great commission.

One evening a delightful "symposium" was staged. As this had to be explained to a Montreat audience, we will not take too much for granted but will explain that this proved to be a series of human nature stories direct from the field and told by the lady missionaries. Mrs. W. C. Porter, of Brazil, told of a remarkable life reclamation; Mrs. J. S. Nisbet, of Korea, of some plucky girls from a Christian school who told the authorities they feared nothing but the devil and the principal of the school and Miss Annie Wilson, of China, told of a Chinese Christian's devotion. Miss Edmonia Martin closed the symposium by a delightful story of a unique joy-ride and of the reward she gave herself after a strenuous day—a dish of good old-fashioned North Carolina mush!

A prayer chain proved a beautiful devotional. Dr. McCallie one evening called on each missionary on the platform to pray for the field of the man sitting next him, and in fervent and earnest manner. Stuart of China prayed for Japan; Myers of Japan for Korea; Nesbit of Korea for Mexico; Lewis of Mexico for Brazil; Hardie of Brazil for Africa and McElroy of Africa for China. Dr. McCallie closed with a petition for each man on the platform—calling him by name. One saw literally the great round world bound to the throne of God by the golden chain of prayer.

One morning the missionaries—all that were in Montreat, with their households—stood on the platform and were presented to Montreat. It was the Church abroad meeting the Church at home and everyone who met a missionary we know will feel a bigger interest in the field represented.

A "questionnaire" proved illuminating. Questions had been written out and placed in a box from which they were taken and read and then answered by Dr. E. W. Smith. It showed the people were interested, and that they were thinking things through.

Some fine addresses featured the week. Dr. Alva Hardie, of Brazil; Dr. Harry Myers, of Japan; Mr. Frank J. Gilliam, of Africa; Rev. Warren Stuart, of China; Rev. Porter Smith, of Brazil; Rev. Z. V. Lewis, of Mexico—these were the speakers we heard and each one brought an inspiring and at the same time appealing message.

This particular conference closed on Sunday, August 19th with a masterly sermon by Dr. J. L. Mauze, of Huntington, W. Va., who showed the "Wherefore of Missions" in the finest way we had ever heard it presented. This wonderful sermon was the climax to a wonderful week.

The auditorium is beautiful and big, and it was "crammed full" of people Sunday morning. Where did they all come from? we asked, for one would never suspect the size of Montreat "just to see it." It reminded us of the Easter-egg hunts of our childhood—we would find cottages hidden away in the most unexpected places! A "slow trip" in an airplane would be the only adequate way to see the "residential part" of Montreat.

There were scores of other things that interested us at Montreat, but the Editor of the Woman's page reminded us only last week that brevity is literally the "soul of wit"—and one thing we pride ourselves on is that we can take a hint!

S. Grier.

The Sunday School Conference—A larger number than ever before attended the Sunday School Conference at Montreat this year, August 1-8. There were hundreds of others though, who wish to become efficient, successful Sunday School teachers, who have never availed themselves of this wonderful opportunity. Many, perhaps, do not fully realize the nature of this conference.

The Sunday School Conference is a training school in every sense of the word, for Sunday School workers. It matters not in which department of the Sunday School one's work may be, from beginners up to superintendent. A special course in the department of one's choice may be taken two lessons each day for one week, complete the course.

The faculty is composed of men and women of recognized ability, each a specialist in his line. They are among the very foremost instructors to be found in this country.

One week of intensive study is followed by commencement night. This entire evening is given over to commencement exercises, which consist of an address and the delivering of diplomas and certificates. Each class in turn is called to stand before the rostrum, the certificates are awarded, and each graduate returns to his seat, proudly bearing a hard-earned certificate, feeling all the joy and thrill of a college graduate.

Those who really wish to become efficient and successful teachers, are given a wonderful opportunity during this conference.

THE CHOICE

By Irene S. Woodcock

I said: "O Lord, this is the way;
It is so broad and smooth and fair;
The sun shines brightly all the day
And music fills the scented air.

"There are no stones to wound or bruise,
No briars to scratch, no thorns to tear;
It winds and winds, a pleasant road.
I pray thee, let my way lie there.

"The other way is narrow, Lord,
There is no shelter from the heat,
No fresh'ning breeze, no song of bird,
And sharp the stones for tired feet."

Still, by my side, the Master stood,
And sweetly, tenderly, He smiled.
Almost I heard His gentle voice
In pleading pity, "Oh, my child!"

I turned from Him, and down the road
So broad and wonderfully bright
I hastened on my eager way,
With anxious feet and heart alight.

But soon I found the music stilled,
The breeze had gone, the sun grown dim,
And I was on the road alone
For I had turned away from Him.

Back to the parting ways I went,
Along the road that once seemed fair,
My heart upon one purpose bent:
To find the Master waiting there.

And when I felt His presence near,
The narrow way seemed fair and wide;
And paved with peace, and filled with song,
Since I was walking by His side.

Are American Children Getting a Fair Share of Religious Instruction?—Henry Frederick Cope, General Secretary of the Religious Education Association, says: "After investigations and studies covering every section of the country and every type of community, and extending over nearly 20 years two conclusions are reached:

1. That the present system of religious instruction in Protestant churches reach in any effective manner whatever not more than one-fourth of their children.

2. That the present system of religious instruction in Protestant churches affords a continuous and effective system of religious education to much less than one-tenth of their children.

In summary the situation stands:
Only one-fourth of our children get as much as 35 periods of less than 30 minutes each annually of religious instruction."

Judging from the above statistics we can safely say that American children are not getting a fair share of religious instruction. In order that the children of our Church may have a fair chance to know the Word of God there will be Week Day Bible Classes held this winter in the Church House. Miss Alice Rivers, who was director of the Summer Bible School, will be in charge of the school. It is proposed that each department of the Sunday School shall meet for an hour and a half one day each week. A graded course of study will be used including Bible stories, Bible memory work and Bible geography. There will be no enrollment fee and no charges whatever for the instruction.

The classes will begin Monday, September 17th. September 9th to 16th will be enrollment week. Miss Rivers will be in the church office every day from 10 to 12 from now until that time and will be glad to give further information about the school to anyone desiring it.

Let's make the school a great success and have 100 per cent of our Sunday School enrolled for these Week Day Bible Classes. Surely we can all give one afternoon a week to learn more about the Wonderful Book.—(We take this question, with its progressive new note from the calendar of the North Avenue Church, Atlanta.)

An important field of mission work for those who cannot go overseas to dedicate their lives to God was pointed out to those who attended the Presbyterian Women's Missionary Union at Montreat, N. C., on July 16th, by John M. Yonan, a young Armenian boy who has just graduated from Charlotte, N. C. high school.

Young Yonan told of the 110,000 orphans of Armenian martyrs we are being fed, clothed, sheltered and educated and build in the future Armenian nation as the only hope for the churches of America to redeem the Bible lands from the Mohammedans. The smaller Christian nations of the Near East have been all but exterminated by the Turks, he pointed out, and but for the big-hearted American public, the work of all missionaries we have sent there would have been in vain.

Thanks to the protection of the American flag, he declared, these children who are all now safe from Turkish murder parties, will grow into men and women with American ideals and Christian training ready to do His work when He wills that the Mohammedans shall be Christianized.

He told of his own experiences when he and his family were driven from home. He declared his belief that his own salvation is a miracle and that he was delivered to help his stricken countrymen in their fight for national existence. We die in our country for our Bible, he said, and submit to tortures rather than renounce our Christ.

In each State in America there is a Near East Relief Committee composed of the most prominent and influential men and women in the State, with headquarters at the State capital or the most important city. In each county of each State a campaign will be waged next fall and winter, he declared, for the quota necessary to keep alive its allotment of these children, whose parents were killed in the battle to keep Christianity alive in the Near East.

"You do not have to go overseas and risk your life and health to be a missionary," he said, "Right in your own community, you will have an opportunity to do real missionary work by helping to keep alive these children. If your State committee does not reach you just offer your service to them. We need every live man and woman we can get on our local committees."

Young Yonan made a splendid impression on his hearers none of whom would doubt that his type of people will be well worth saving to do His work in the future in the stricken Bible lands.

Persecuted for Attending Sunday School—It is hard to realize that any parents would ill-treat their children because they were eager to attend the Sunday School. Yet that is the condition which prevails in some sections of Japan. In most parts of that country the Sunday School is a welcomed institution and many non-Christian parents send their children to the school where the Bible is the one text-book. H. E. Coleman, Educational Secretary for Japan for the World's Sunday School Association, tells of some conditions which he noted on a recent trip to the West Coast. "Christian work in this section is very backward and the Buddhists very active. We found a number of cases of serious persecution. One girl we heard of was taken from a school where she had become a Christian and when she refused to marry a non-Christian who had been selected for her, she was badly beaten, taken from her sickbed and banished from her home. She was helped by friends and finally found safety in Tokyo. At Nanao, a harbor town, where an evangelist went a few years ago, the people refused to sell him anything to eat.

At present two earnest girls are conducting a kindergarten and the little preaching place and kindergarten where I gave my lecture on Sunday School work was well filled. The missionary in (Continued on page 16)

ADDRESS ALL COMMUNICATIONS TO THE DEPARTMENT EDITOR DAVIDSON, N. C

EDITOR'S LOOKOUT

We are carrying this week a contribution from one of our correspondents regarding the help given by two members of the Christian Endeavor Training Class of Davidson College. The representatives of that organization whose names are mentioned considered themselves just as representatives of the organization.

The work of this class has been mentioned before, and the class has used various means of letting the churches and schools know of their desire to be of assistance. We would like to urge that these college students be called upon. They realize that they are just young men and young in their knowledge of and experience in young people's work, but they are studying every week to fit themselves for better service to the future leaders of the church. A number of churches and schools found their visits last year helpful. Our pastors and young people will find a delegation from this class quite worth-while in bringing new consecration, enthusiasm, and ideas to the society by whatever name it is called. A letter to the class at Davidson will receive prompt attention.

This issue is the last in the last of the "summer months." The "fall months" are at our doors, and they are bringing with them the returned vacationists and an opportunity for real service. We have urged earlier this summer that definite plans be made for the fall work. If these have not been made, let us make them at once and not let several weeks slip by without earnest work being done. A courageous plan for study courses, better meetings, active community service, more prayer, larger giving, is sure to bring results that will help the local church and the Lord's work as a whole, as well as bringing joy and growth to the young people. Let us be up and doing! No young people's society or Sunday School will run itself. See that yours has an energetic and prayerful pushing!

SCRIPTURE LESSON

3 I am verily a man which am a Jew, born in Tarsus, a city in Cilicia, yet brought up in this city, at the feet of Gamaliel, and taught according to the perfect manner of the law of the fathers, and was zealous toward God, as ye all are this day.

6 And it came to pass, that as I made my journey, and was come nigh unto Damascus about noon, suddenly there shone from heaven a great light round about me.

7 And I fell unto the ground, and heard a voice saying unto me, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?

8 And I answered, Who art thou, Lord? And he said unto me, I am Jesus of Nazareth, whom thou persecutest.

9 And they that were with me saw indeed the light, and were afraid; but they heard not the voice of him that spake unto me.

10 And I said, What shall I do, Lord? And the Lord said unto me, Arise, and go into Damascus; and there it shall be told thee of all things which are appointed for thee to do.

Phil. 3:7 But what things were gain to me, those I counted loss for Christ.

8 Yea, doubtless, and I count all things but loss, for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord: for whom I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but dung, that I may win Christ.

9 And be found in him, not having mine own righteousness, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith:

10 That I may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made comfortable unto his death;

11 If by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead.

12 Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfect: but I follow after, if that I may apprehend that for which also I am apprehended of Christ Jesus.

13 Brethren, I count not myself to have apprehended: but this one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before.

14 I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus.

SHORTER CATECHISM

Q. 52. What are the reasons annexed to the second commandment?

A. The reasons annexed to the second commandment are: God's sovereignty over us, his propriety in us, and the zeal he hath to his own worship.

The Apostle Paul was one of the most remarkable men of the age in which he lived. He was notable for his endowments, his attainments, and his deeds. No intelligent man can read his writings without being impressed with the vigor of his intellect and the tenderness of his heart. As a persecutor of Christians and their faith he showed marvelous zeal and persistence. When converted to Christianity he manifested a similar energy in spreading Gospel tidings and making converts to Jesus. God used him in writing the larger part of the New Testament and in planting the Christian Church in many of the larger cities of the Roman empire. Following the line of thought indicated in our lesson, we will consider Paul's Gifts and Culture; His Conversion to Christ; His Submission to Jesus; His Consecration to the Lord.

I. Paul's Gifts and Culture

Mental power is usually possessed by those who impress themselves strongly upon their generation and mankind. Paul had a vigorous intellect, and manifested it in his epistles, in his oratory, and in his influence in the church and in intelligent centers of the Roman empire. He also had not only a powerful but a cultured mind. Most of the apostles were unlettered men and owed their intelligence and efficiency to three years' instruction by Jesus Christ. But God does not despise human learning when properly directed and can use it for his own glory and human welfare. Paul was born in Tarsus, a free city, and noted for its culture and commerce. He was a Roman citizen by birth and entitled to all the privileges of such citizenship. He was familiar with Latin and Greek and revealed this in his epistles. In Jerusalem as a young man "he was brought up at the feet of Gamaliel," a noted doctor of the law, and was conversant with Hebrew lore. Christianity then at its birth was sustained and advocated not merely by unlearned men, but by one the peer in intellect and culture of any of his cotemporaries.

II. Paul's Conversion to Christ

He was on his way to persecute Christians at Damascus in Syria. Near that city, at noonday, he was smitten to the ground with blindness by a light from heaven above the brightness of the sun. He heard a voice from heaven saying, "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?" "I am Jesus, whom thou persecutest." "It is hard for thee to kick against the pricks." As the foolish oxen only hurt themselves by kicking against the goad, so you only injure yourself by resisting me. Paul inquires, Who art Thou, Lord? and receives as answer, "I am Jesus of Nazareth, whom thou persecutest."

III. Paul Submits to Jesus

He calls Him Lord. He says, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" He is told, "Go to Damascus and it shall be told thee what thou must do." Paul submits to be led by the hand blind into the city. There he remains three days without sight. Ananias is sent to him to restore his sight, to receive him by baptism into the church and to instruct him as to his duty. This willingness to submit to Jesus' authority at the beginning of his career as a Christian was manifested during all his subsequent life.

IV. Paul's Consecration to His Lord

Paul became devoted to Jesus not only at Damascus, but during his whole subsequent life. He urges his fellow believers to like consecration "by the mercies of God." He manifests his devotion by sacrifices endured, by perils encountered, by losses suffered, by epistles written, by labors performed, by incessant toil, by generous giving, and by "pressing to the goal unto the prize of the high calling in Christ Jesus," even to a Divine likeness and sonship. Nobly did he verify his grand pledge, "For me to live is Christ."

Sun., Sept. 9—Topic: Different Forms of Gambling, and the Evil of It. Prov. 16:8; Jer. 17:9-11.

What is one common form of gambling?

What is the wrong in gambling?

How do boys learn to gamble?

When we are young we have games of all kinds. Rivalry and competition create interest and when a prize is given, or honors and distinctions are won the enthusiasm is even greater. Then when property or money is forfeited or won by the chances of the game it is most exciting to be in the game. But that is gambling.

What is Gambling?

When money or property are exchanged in any game or sport we call this gambling, because then the ownership of property or money is decided by chance. There are five ways in which property or money may become ours, by a gift, by purchase, by discovery, by labor, and by chance. Chance really means by the decision of God directly. All property belongs to God, and He divides it among men as He sees fit. Gambling is forcing God to decide on the right to property, when God has made labor and purchase the main and ordinary ways to obtain property. God rules all chances. There is no such thing as luck.

Why is Gambling a Sin?

Gambling is a sin. It is a sin because it is opposed to God's laws by which demand that men shall exchange property by giving a fair value in exchange for it. The gambler gives nothing and takes all. He is a thief. Gambling is a sin because a bet is a sinful prayer to God to give the gambler the other man's property or money. He hopes and prays he will gain all and lose nothing. Gambling is a sin because the gambler is playing false to the property entrusted to him for high purposes, and because he is helping another to be false to his property.

Why is Gambling Unlawful?

All governments have laws against gambling, and police raid and arrest gamblers and gambling halls. Gambling is a form of theft and robbery. The gambler never fails to take advantage of his opponent in his weakness and ignorance. The civil law demands that men shall be just and fair in their dealings, and punishes thieves, robbers and oppressors. Civil laws recognize work, purchase, gift and discovery as the only grounds upon which a man may possess property and governments try to make fair laws to protect the rights of all. Gambling overturns all these laws.

How Gambling Begins

The instinct to get something for nothing is in us all. It is often sinful, and yet it begins early. Gambling is getting something for nothing. Children often practice it in their games. Playing marbles and tops for keeps is gambling. Playing "crackalou," matching pennies for soda and ice cream, and playing any card games for small stakes is gambling. Gambling usually begins at the school grounds and in the back yards and parlors of our homes.

Gambling With Sports

Many people cannot take an interest in sports for the sake of the sport alone, but want the excitement of a stake or bet besides. Baseball games, football games, track meets, horse races, automobile races, cards, pool and billard games, tenpins and many other games are used to foster gambling. Sports need not be wrong in themselves unless played or attended to an excess, to the waste of time, money or strength. But it is a great sin against God and a crime against civil law to make a gamble or bet, money or property on any game. Even playing cards for prizes is a sin because it is a prayer for God to give you property you do not work for, and other sins often enter such as hate, malice, evil-speaking, trickery and sometimes life-long resentment is created.

Christians Should Not Gamble

Christians should not gamble because it is sinful. Gambling is dishonest, it is as blasphemous as swearing, it is deceitful, it undermines integrity of character and destroys unselfishness, inflames anger, and excites evil desires, and often leads to murder or self-destruction. Gambling is against the laws of God and man. Gambling brings a reproach on your good name, the name of your church.

It grieves Jesus our Saviour and drives away the Holy Spirit, the love of prayer and Bible study and the worship of God.

Gambling creates a bad influence of one person over another, and Christians should love and help one another and all men.

Churches should never have raffles or lotteries or any chance games at their festivals, if they have them at all, though any church supper or bazaar is a questionable thing in itself.

Christian schools and colleges should prohibit and discourage all gambling on sports and games.

KANNAPOLIS, N. C. ENDEAVORERS SHOWING NEW LIFE

Owing to the absence for some months of a pastor's assistant the Christian Endeavor Society of the Kannapolis Presbyterian Church was slightly on the "sick list" so early in November we sent for "Doctors" Gamble and Carr of Davidson, and asked them to inject a stimulant. This they did in the most approved manner, and we are glad to say that the effect of their ministrations has not yet vanished. Following are some of the results:

At Thanksgiving we distributed boxes of fruit to several needy families. At Christmas we made a liberal contribution to a dinner for the convicts. In March we observed Dixie Endeavor Day, contributing $14. Later we sent $9 to Beechwood.

Aside from our financial efforts we have regular monthly meetings of the Executive Committee, and monthly socials. For the July social we had a picnic, seasoned with swimming, and our August social was a watermelon feast. Our crowning blessing, however, is the deepening spirituality evident among our members, resulting from the enrollment of a goodly number as Comrades of the Quiet Hour. More and more our society rests upon prayer, the source of all strength. Before each meeting three or four members meet with the leader to ask the Father's guidance and blessing. As a result we have an increased attendance, and better still the presence of the Holy Spirit is felt in each meeting.

For these and all other blessings we are humbly grateful.

BARIUM SPRINGS NEWS

There must have been a well attended conference of the Church and Sunday School treasurers at Montreat this whole month of August. Our total receipts for support for the entire month was less than $2,000. Our expense over $6,000.

We hope that these treasurers will get back on the job greatly refreshed and strengthened and will take their pens and check books in hand and commence with a firm hand to write checks and commence right at the top of the alphabet. BARIUM SPRINGS for instance.

Mr. W. P. Nesbit, the high school principal was on the campus for a few days this week and already there is talk of getting up a band. Mr. Nesbit was one of the enthusiastic members of the Davidson band a few years ago and believes that with a few instruments we can get up a dandy band here. We wonder if there are any band instruments lying around anywhere that might be put back into service here.

Mrs. John Q. Holton, our beloved seventh grade teacher, is again with us and if she feels anything like the pleasure in being back with us that we feel in having her here, she is indeed a happy woman.

Vacation time is, fast drawing to a close, and the children on visits are commencing to scuttle back here like chickens coming in out of the rain. The additional numbers are most easily noticed in dining room.

Coming events cast their shadows before, and the coming of Christy Brothers' Circus in Statesville Saturday began to cause a mighty planning among the boys of Synods and Alexander early in the week. About 80 boys finally rustled up the necessary 25 cents and arrived in town in time for the big doings. Then after paying their way in, the kind-hearted management finding that this big bunch of boys were from an orphanage, returned the money to each boy.

We had a most delightful small picnic from Rocky River on Thursday, but are sorry to report that the Statesville crowd were held off by the rain.

Last but not least, we had a short visit Saturday from our good friends, Mr. and Mrs. S. P. Stowe, of Belmont. In addition to being Presbyterial Secretary of Orphanage Work in Kings Mountain Presbytery, Mrs. Stowe and her husband are among our most loyal and liberal supporters, and it is always with the keenest pleasure that we welcome them to Barium.

PERSONAL

The address of Rev. J. Blanton Belk is changed from Piedmont, S. C., to Clover, S. C.

Rev. W. M. Duncan, of Troy, Ala., is spending his vacation in North Carolina.

NORTH CAROLINA

Charlotte—Dr. J. R. Howerton, a former pastor of the First Church, filled the pulpit on last Sabbath at both services, preaching two very excellent sermons.

The Presbytery of Wilmington will meet in regular stated session at South River Church, near Garland, N. C., September 25, 1923 at 11 a. m.
W. P. M. Currie, S. C.

Charlotte—The pulpit of the Second Church was filled on last Sabbath morning by Rev. J. Layton Mauze, D.D., of Huntington, W. Va., who preached a very fine sermon to a large congregation. On next Sabbath Dr. McGeachy, the pastor, will have returned from his vacation, and will preach at both services as usual.

Big Rockfish—This church has just had and enjoyed a season of earnest and practical gospel preaching by Dr. E. C. Murray, of St. Paul's, N. C. Four professed their faith in Christ and their desire to unite with this church. We feel that the membership of our church has been greatly edified by Dr. Murray's messages.

Gilwood—This church has been greatly helped by a week of the preaching of Rev. R. C. Clontz, pastor of Bethel and Cornelius churches. He preached with great earnestness and force clear, simple Bible sermons on subjects well chosen for evangelistic effect. Attendance and attention were good and five were received on profession of faith.

Whiteville, Westminster Church—Our vacation Bible school was a great success. It covered the month of July, and the children were intensely interested in every session. They memorized Scripture, hymns and the catechisms, and studied many phases of life. There was a good element of play and singing of catchy songs on the outside of the church which made them enter the more serious part of the work with more zest. We are glad that our experiment was so successful, and expect certainly to repeat the effort next year. Miss Laura Howell was the teacher. Several ladies of the congregation assisted. Six of the young pupils recited perfectly the child's catechism and one the shorter catechism.

Hopewell Church—The annual protracted meeting was held July 22-29. Rev. C. H. Little, of Sharon

Church was the preacher and he preached to the edification and delight of the people who heard him. There was good attendance and two were added to the church on profession of faith.

Thursday, August 16th was our "Home-Coming Day." We had a big crowd, a good dinner and best of all a meeting and greeting of old friends. It was a very happy day for many. There was no program, but the pastor welcomed the crowd and he was assisted in doing this by Rev. Messrs. D. T. Caldwell, of Wilmington; W. C. Underwood, of Charlotte; H. M. Pressly, of Charlotte, and S. W. Moore, of Bluefield, W. Va. The last mentioned also preached at Hopewell on the 19th and it is needless to say he received a hearty welcome, for he loveth this people and they love him, and enjoy his sermons, which are always fresh and invigorating.
R. S. B.

Charlotte—The calendar of the Caldwell Memorial Church for August 26th carried the following:

A Message from Mr. Paisley.—The following is an extract from a letter from our representative on the foreign field, Mr. Paisley, under date of July 2d. We are sure our people will all read it with interest.

"I want to thank the church and my unknown benefactor for their kindness in selecting me as a special object of their benefactions. I only hope that I will not disappoint them. We are new missionaries, having come out in October, 1921. We received a warm welcome at Kwangju. We have attended two terms of language school of two months each, and spent two months at Soonchun last winter before and after our baby's arrival, because there was no foreign (missionary) doctor at this station. We expect to stay here this summer. I expect to study the language consistently this summer, so that in the fall I can go into the field assigned me, conduct the services, examine catechumens, and baptize. I will find it very difficult because of the language. It is very difficult and requires usually three years before you can have what is called a working knowledge of it. The opportunities here for the preaching of the Word are magnificent. The people come and give attention. When they accept the Gospel offer of salvation they become very zealous and their whole life is transformed.

"Please pray that we may quickly get the language, so that we can have more of a part in the work."

The pastor, Dr. G. F. Bell is spending his vacation in Alabama. The pulpit last Sabbath was filled by Rev. A. H. Frazer.

Brittain Church—Friday may be an unlucky day to some, but not so with the Brittain Church. Rev. George W. Sheffer, of Little Rock, Ark., closed a very happy and successful meeting in this church, Friday, August 24th. A very unique service was held Friday morning, in which Rev. W. L. Boggs, of Greenville, assisted. Two elders and two deacons had been previously elected, these were ordained and installed. Twelve members were received into the church, eight upon profession, and four by certificate; six adults and three infants were baptized, and after the sermon by Mr. Sheffer, the communion of the Lord's supper was administered. After the benediction, a joint meeting of the session and diaconate was held and Mr. Miles Hampton, newly ordained elder was elected clerk of session and Mr. D. Hicks Long was elected church treasurer. The preaching during the five days, by Mr. Sheffer, was helpful and effective. Just one year ago to the day Mr. Sheffer held a meeting for a week in this church with good results.

Mr. R. T. Baker, student supply, has done very effective work during the summer and there is deep regret on the part of the congregation as the days draw near for his return to the Seminary at Columbia.

A big picnic, composed of all Presbyterian churches of Rutherford County, was held at Andrew's Mill August 17th. Good fellowship, a big dinner, and some very helpful talks characterized the gathering. The picnic was for the purpose of getting better acquainted and to boost the opening of Westminster School. Mr. T. L. O'Kelley will be in charge as principal.

SOUTH CAROLINA

At a special meeting of Piedmont Presbytery, held at Anderson, S. C., August 13th, the resignation of Rev. J. B. Belk as pastor of the Piedmont Church was accepted, and he was dismissed to Bethel Presbytery, to become pastor of the Clover Church.

Licentiate H. R. Foster was dismissed to the care of Tuscaloosa Presbytery.

Robert Adams, S. C.

Fulton Church, Greer—This church has been greatly revived and drawn much closer to God as a result of the preaching of Rev. W. T. Smith, of Roberdell N. C. We feel that Mr. Smith "was a man sent from God" before His people as God sent Joseph before His people. Psalm 105:17: "And He sent a man before them." A man who had a creed which he lived and preached to others with power. The creed was that of Joseph, Loyalty to God, Man, and Work. God very richly blessed our people and Mr. Smith's preaching. Seven were added to the church on profession of faith. We believe that the invisible results of Mr. Smith's preaching are really larger than the visible. We know of several who were convicted by his preaching and many were quickened. Mr. Smith lifted up the Christ, and He himself said: "If I be lifted up I will draw all men unto me." We are grateful to God for having sent Mr. Smith to us, and thereby drawing us closer to Him. The boys of our church recently returned from week's camp in the mountains. Our pastor, Rev. D. C. Stogner accompanied them.

We are looking forward to our winter's work with delight and praying that God will continue to richly bless us and use us largely in His great work. We are resolved to make Joseph's creed, Loyalty to God, Loyalty to Man and Loyalty to Work, our creed, because we believe it to be an excellent creed.

ALABAMA

Birmingham, South Highland Church—Dr. William Ray Dobyns will begin his fourth year as pastor of this church when he returns in the fall from his vacation. The general condition of the church is such that it deserves special notice. The unity of all the people in every phase of the work makes a splendid spirit throughout the church. There is a manifest interest in the church in the study of the Bible. Dr. Dobyns closed on the last Sunday in July a series of sermons on Revelation. In this series he gave to the people a comprehensive view of the book as a whole. Dr. Dobyns held during the year a number of weekly Bible classes for the Auxiliary and other workers. He has taught the Bible for five semesters in the Birmingham Graded Union, an organization of the Sunday School teachers of all denominations in the city. In January the Woman's Auxiliary brought Mrs. Margaret T. Russell to the church for a week's Bible studies and to these were invited the women of all the church organizations of the city.

The Sunday School is doing excellent work. It is fully organized in the regular departments. Representatives were sent to the Synod's and Montreat Young People's Conferences. Two of the workers were sent to the Sunday School Conference in Montreat. The Woman's Auxiliary shows a continual increase in membership, interest and gifts.

The membership of the church has slowly but steadily increased. There is now a resident membership of almost 500. Two of the members of the church received appointments as missionaries to China during the past year. There are at present on the foreign field three representatives whose names appear on the roll.

The financial condition of the church is especially good. The Every Member Canvass is held each November, the financial year beginning in January. The response in the offering through the weekly envelopes has been such that several times the deacons have publicly expressed their delight in ministering the trust that the people have placed upon them. This church gave to the Educational Campaign Fund held in 1922, more per capita than any other church in the Synod and the treasurer of the campaign fund reports the quota of the church is fully paid to date.

For all these signs of spiritual growth a prayer of thanks is offered to the great Head of the Church.

GEORGIA

Savannah—Rev. Neal L. Anderson, D.D., pastor of the Independent Presbyterian Church of Savannah is preaching during August and part of September in the Park Street Church, of Boston. This is Dr. Anderson's second summer with this church. In his absence the pulpit of the Independent Church is being supplied by the assistant pastor, Rev. M. R. Williamson and two Sundays by Rev. A. H. McArn, D.D., of Cheraw, S. C.

Atlanta—From the calendar for August 26th of the North Avenue Church, we take the following:

Rev. Plato Durham, D.D., of Emory University, will preach for us at both services Sunday at 11 a. m. and at 8 p. m. Dr. Durham needs no introduction at North Avenue as we all remember his ministry last spring during the evangelistic services.

Next Sunday, Dr. Flinn our pastor, will be in the pulpit for both services. As most of you know Dr. Flinn has been spending a most delightful and restful vacation at Montreat and Clayton. We are all looking forward to his return.

KENTUCKY

West Lexington Presbytery—Mr. Thomas J. Ray, Jr., has recently closed a very successful meeting at Bairds Presbyterian Church, near Sadieville. Mr. Ray is a young man who was recently taken under the care of the Presbytery. The meeting lasted two weeks and the attendance was splendid from the first. On many nights the crowd overflowed into the vestibule. There were 11 additions to the church, eight of them on profession of faith in Christ. These eight were baptized by Rev. H. J. Scott and Rev. J. E. Park, who were in attendance upon the meeting. Mr. Ray is a very young man but God has graciously endowed him and his preaching was very acceptable. During the meeting Mr. Thomas B. Talbot, Sunday School missionary of this Presbytery, was present one day and conducted a Sunday School Institute. There were something more than 200 present. A splendid Sunday School was organized, with officers and teachers, and the people have gone into the new work with enthusiasm.

This church has been without a pastor for a number of months but the meeting has put new life into that whole section and prospects for the future of this church have never been so flattering. Mr. Ray will conduct services here two Sundays each month and the other two Sundays he will give to Oxford and Bethesda.

At the Sunday School Institute Mr. Talbot was assisted by Rev. H. J. Scott and Mr. E. H. Davis, who rendered good service.

VIRGINIA

Potomac Presbytery meets in Catocin Church, Waterford, Va., September 25th next, at 8 p. m.

Wm. H. Woods, S. C.

Patrick County Field—The Danube Church at Kibler has just experienced a wonderful series of meetings. Rev. Thomas B. Ruff, of Gloucester County came to us August 7th and remained through August 16th, preaching every night and the latter part of the meeting at ten o'clock also. His sermons were of high order and delivered with great forcefulness, and his earnest personality won the admiration and respect of all. Some of the regular attendants had to walk two or three miles from home to the church but they did this cheerfully. Some of the visible results of the meeting were as follows: Eleven members were received by profession, one by statement, one child presented for baptism, and 20 people promised to practice tithing. This gives some idea of the incalculable blessings that have come to this entire community, for which we are thankful.

WEST VIRGINIA

MOODY BIBLE INSTITUTE

Appointment of Rev. P. B. Fitzwater, D.D., as director of the evening classes of the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, will establish a new program for this department of the institute work. A course of four years is to be offered, which will entitle the student to the institute diploma, while a shorter course of two years will qualify men and women as teachers, pastors' assistants, gospel singers, and other lines of Christian activity.

The popular Saturday evening class will feature the study of the English Bible by books and the consideration of the Sunday School lesson for following Sundays. The latter will be conducted in person by Dr. Fitzwater who is already known in more than two and a half million homes in America through his weekly lesson article in the syndicate press.

Last year 1,437 students, representing 280 Chicago churches, were enrolled in the evening classes.

By special arrangement with the employment bureau of the institute, it will be possible to assist students living outside of Chicago in securing work to enable them to support themselves while attending evening classes.

RELIGIOUS PACIFISM

During the late war the Government had the problem on its hands of deciding what to do with the pacifists, who for conscientious reasons refused to respond to the call of arms. It dealt with them gently in some cases; in others rather harshly—much according to the method and the manner in which the pacifist defended his principles. But pacifism had to be dealt with. No pacifist nation could long maintain itself against a neighboring predatory nation. Principles that are worth holding are worth defending, worth fighting for.

To be a pacifist is to be indifferent as to what is demanded to protect one set of truths and principles and rights against an opposing set. There is a great deal of such pacifism in the Christian Church today. It is either blind, or indifferent, to the truth, and tolerant of nearly everything that runs counter to it. Truth? No church that believes its faith to be founded solely and only on the Scriptures can long exist on a pacifist theory of its calling and mission. It does not deserve to exist. A church without deep and abiding convictions, or without a sense of the obligation that rests upon it to come to the defense of its convictions, is a feeble church, a losing church. When it can no longer be held together on the basis of one Lord, one faith, one baptism, it may still be an imposing organization, but it ceases to be a faith-imparting organization; it ceases to be a witness-bearing church. "Do away with the assertion of your convictions," says Luther, "and you do away with your Christianity."—Lutheran.

A SCATHING INDICTMENT OF EVOLUTION

By Prof. Dyson Hague, of Wycliffe College, Toronto, Canada, as Given in The Bible Champion, March, 1923

We feel then that Christians must stand against evolution for these simple reasons:

1. Cosmic evolution is a definite contradiction of Genesis 1:1, and organic evolution is in flat antagonism to Genesis 1:26, 27, and 2:7. It seems impossible to deny that John 1:1-3, and Col. 1:16 cut at the very heart and destroy the very root of evolution in the Spencerian and Haeckelian sense of that word.

2. It destroys, and destroys absolutely, the teaching of the third chapter of Genesis, and the third and fifth chapters of Romans. These great chapters are the basis of all Biblical soteriology. For without Adam's fall, the original head of the human race, in whose fall all mankind fell (Romans 5:12), the science of theology is evacuated of its most salient feature, the atonement. The evolutionary theory of the progress in development upward of the ape-descended or ascended man, is totally opposed to the teaching that man created in the image of God fell by sin into condemnation, and became as fallen the first link in the glorious evangel of redemption by the atonement of the second Adam, the Lord Jesus Christ from heaven. As Canon Barnes recently declared, "The inevitable acceptance of evolution means giving up belief in the fall, and in all the theology built upon it by the theologians from St. Paul onward."

3. Evolution undoubtedly cuts the nerve of moral accountability. If a man was not a direct creation of God, but a mere indirect development through myriads of years of no one knows what, or how, or why, or when, or where, then it must follow that the very heart of moral accountability is gone. A lowered anthropology must mean a lowered theology, and a lowered theology must have its effect upon the lives of the preceptors and pupils. One of the leading American professors sounded this note to the college world when he said: "The Fatalistic conception of man's personal and moral life is the deadly gift of naturalistic evolution to our age."

4. Last, and worst of all, it destroys the Christ of God. To us it is sad to think that any Christian teacher should believe and teach that our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, the Lamb of God, the Son of God, was simply an evolution in the development of the human race; the climax of the evolutionary chain of sequences from the atom to the worm, from the worm to the ape, from the ape to the ape-man, from the ape-man to the cave-man, and from the cave-man to the Christ. In this case the Lord Jesus was not conceived by the Holy Ghost; nor was He God of God; Light of Light, Very God of Very God. His divinity is only such as we poor humans possess. He did not redeem us, for there was nothing to redeem. "The conception of man as condemned," says Shailer Matthews, "is but a figure of speech."

We have no hesitation, therefore, in stating our profound conviction that the believer in Christ today has to make a choice between a philosophy which, however specious, has its roots in the denial of the first chapters of the Word of God, both in the Old Testament and the New Testament, of Genesis 1, Matthew 1, Luke 1, and John 1; and the teaching of the Lord Jesus. Christ in the days of his flesh strongly asserted the creation of man by his heavenly Father (Matt. 19:4) and after His resurrection from the dead—a fact which itself disproves the very essentials of evolution—declared that all things must be fulfilled which were written in the Law and the Prophets and the Psalms concerning Himself.

We believe in our heart of hearts, in these days of too easy compromise and of too hasty concession, that the need of the hour is for ministers, young and old, in the words of Sir Monier Williams, "to dare to be downright with all the uncompromising courage of your Bible; be fair, be just, be Christlike, but let there be no mistake. Let it be made absolutely clear that Christianity cannot, must not, be watered down to suit the palate of men denying the very fundamentals of the evangelical faith."

SENTENCE SERMONS

Words better left unsaid come back to give us grief when we think them dead.

Happiness is a perfume that you can not pour on others without getting a few drops on yourself.

Disappointment should be taken as a stimulant and never as a disappointment.

A miser grows rich by seeming poor. The extravagant man grows poor by seeming rich.

Forget not to show love unto boys, for thereby some have entertained great men unawares.

Satan has many tools, but a lie is a handle that fits them all.

Life is like an empty lamp without the oil of love. The Bible promises no loaves to the loafer.

Work without worship means worry.

Educational

Davidson—His church and the community generally have a sense of personal loss in the recent death of Mr. John Hill, an elder in the Presbyterian Church and known the community over as a man of marked and devoted piety.

Until ill health necessitated his retirement from active work, he was during the later years of his life superintendent of grounds and buildings for the college. An Englishman by birth and from early boyhood a sailor and world traveler he had seen many countries and known many peoples. In this section of the state he is best known as a master builder, having some years ago had charge of the building of the First Church, Charlotte, First Church Gastonia, and other large structures. Mr. Hill is survived by his widow and several children, all grown and occupying positions of responsibility. One of his daughters is in the mission field of China and another engaged in community or like work in this country. Mr. Hill was about 77 years of age.

College opens on September 13th, but students will begin to come in on the 10th. Work is being rushed on the new Watts four-story fire-proof dormitory to have the building ready for use at the earliest possible date.

Rev. D. M. McIver, of Bishopville, filled Dr. Richards' pulpit the past Sunday, speaking with acceptability and profit to good congregations morning and evening.

Mr. J. P. Williams, for some while past serving as president of the Lewisburg (W. Va.) College for Women, has notified the authorities here that he will accept the position offered him at Davidson—that of General Secretary of the Y. M. C. A. In addition to the duties of this office he will have charge of the publicity department of the college. Earlier in the summer it was announced that Rev. Jas. T. ("Tim") Pharr, of Renick, W. Va., had accepted the secretaryship here, but his Presbytery, backed by the unanimous vote of his congregation, refused to dismiss him from his pastorate in West Virginia.

Mr. Williams, a member of the class of '16, and through his four years in college an assistant to President Martin, is well equipped for the duties of his office here. He is a young man of wide and varied experience. For a year he was principal of the Montreat Normal School. For a year he studied municipal finance in New York and did special work in investigating methods in use in various cities. As an earnest Christian, zealous in church work, he has established his claim to confidence in this line of activity and endeavor.

Announcement is made of the appointment as associate professor in public speaking and debate of Fred L. Dendy, now resident in Alabama. Professor Dendy is a graduate of Valparaiso University and has pursued graduate study at the Universities of Chicago and Indiana. He has also several years' experience in teaching. At Davidson, in addition to classes in oratory, he will teach some sections of freshman English. He succeeds Prof. Russell Wagner who will teach in Iowa this winter.

President Martin is in receipt of the following letter from Maj.-Gen. David C. Shanks, commander in charge of the fourth corps area:

"I take great pleasure in informing you that the Camp McClellan R. O. T. C. camp trophy, a silver cup, has been awarded Davidson College for 1923. This cup is awarded each year to the senior unit whose students make the highest average in the R. O. T. C. camp. The cup is a perpetual trophy, to be competed for each year. This trophy, now at the Presbyterian College, will be forwarded to you some time in September. Please convey to the students of Davidson College, who were at Camp McClellan this summer, my heartiest congratulations on their success in winning this handsome prize.

Queens College will open for the fall term on Wednesday, September 12th indications now pointing to a capacity enrollment with all dormitory space practically filled up at this date. The new domestic science practice house is now under construction and it is hoped to have this building completed by the end of October. The faculty has been greatly strengthened in order to meet the requirements laid down by the State and by the Southern Association of Secondary Schools and Colleges and now contains six teachers holding the master of arts degree and two holding the degree of doctor of philosophy. The following appointments are announced: W. H. Frazer, A.B., D.D., president, department of Bible; Miss Sallie McLean, dean; Miss Charlotte Moore, Ph.D., English; Miss Rena Harrell, M.A., assistant in English; Miss Susan A. Dunn, A.B., Latin; Miss Anna Read West, A.B., modern languages; Miss Marie Mitchell, A.B., assistant modern languages; Miss Florence M. Stone, M.A., science; Miss Meta Byrd, M.A., assistant in science; Miss Edna Earl Shelton, M.A., history; Miss Mozelle Ashford, Ph.D., philosophy and education; Mrs. Warren H. Booker, B. S., household economics; (assistant to be supplied); Miss Olive M. Jones, M.A., mathematics; Miss Ethel M. King, expression; Miss Margaret McCleuer, physical culture; Joseph R. Ninniss, director of music; Miss Flora Brasington, assistant in piano; Miss Carrilee Schuessler, assistant in piano; Miss Elizabeth Star, voice; A. D. Lajoie, violin; Miss Lillian Bremer, A.B., art; Miss Lucy Naive, M.A., principal fitting school; Miss Virginia Hutcheson, secretary. The formal opening exercises will be held on Thursday morning, September 13th at 9 o'clock in the college chapel.

Flora Macdonald College — Flora Macdonald alumnae continue to make good in the educational and business world. The rotogravure section of the New York Times of August 19th carried a photograph of Miss Willie Lawson, class of 1915 with the following caption: "The first and only woman deputy state superintendent of the state of Arkansas who personally superintends the 400 adult schools of her state." Following her graduation Miss Lawson began work as supervisor of opportunity schools for the state of Arkansas and has been almost constantly in the field preparing the way for assisting in organizing hundreds of schools for adults.

The date for Scotch Day has been definitely set for Friday, October 12th and plans for the full program are now being formulated. The entire day will be given over to the entertainment of Lochiel, chieftain of the Clan Cameron and his wife Lady Hermione. The culminating event of the day will be the Scotch concert to be given at night in the college auditorium by the Adanac quartet of Toronto, Canada, a group of singers recognized throughout Canada and the United States as one of the great male quartets. The singers will appear in Scotch costume and will sing all of the old Scotch favorites.

Overseas papers in Scotland have recently given space to the visit of Lochiel to the United States. Prior to his sailing on the "Cameronia" he will be given a farewell reception and dinner by the officers of his regiment which saw active service in the Great War. When the European war broke out he raised the 5th battalion of the Cameron Highlanders and became its colonel. During the war the battalion fought with great distinction under his leadership. Lochiel is the representative of a line of chiefs which goes back for a thousand years. He was educated at Harrow, and at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, joined the Grenadier Guards where he attained the rank of captain. He fought in the South African War of 1902 and was badly wounded. He succeeded to the Lochiel estates in 1905 and since the war has devoted his time to administrative affairs.

Greenbrier College, formerly Lewisburg Seminary, Lewisburg, W. Va., will this year have on its faculty three Flora Macdonald alumnae: Miss Sallie N. Austin, 1904, dean; Agnes N. Coxe, 1919, home economics; Marie Nash, ex-1920, secretary.

The Presbyterian College of South Carolina opens September 4th. The first meal served in the refectory will be supper Monday evening. The college now has more applications than it can accommodate in the dormitories. A house near the campus has been rented and other students will be accommodated in private homes.

The work on the enlargement of the dining hall is progressing rapidly. It is hoped to have the building ready by the last of September. The dining hall when completed will seat 350. There is to be a large kitchen equipped with all modern cooking apparatus. Also serving and storage rooms and an up-to-date refrigerator.

Bids for the new gymnasium will be opened Friday, September 7th, and work will begin right away. The new athletic field is completed. The college greatly needs a new dormitory, which it hopes to have by September next year.

Governor Morrison was peeved by the arrest and declared that he would fight the case when it comes up for trial. After venting his wrath at being caught by the law he gave bond and left town.

An appreciably more optimistic view of business outlook was apparent in financial and commercial circles during the past week.

This growth of confidence was due partly to reassurance in the matter of the new administration, partly to firmness in wheat and cotton prices, and partly to suggestions that a turn may be at hand in the forward buying of the more important industrial products.

The sharp increase in imports into this country from Europe reflects the improved business conditions in the United States rather than competitive production on the part of Europe, says an announcement made public by the department of commerce. Similarly the decrease in American exports to Europe is interpreted as a sign of decreased productivity with a consequent decreased purchasing power in certain European areas due to disturbed economic conditions.

"I heard of a boy who was attending a certain Sunday School in Kanazawa. Soon after this was started, the Buddhists opened one of their Sunday Schools in the same neighborhood. The parents demanded that their boy go to the Buddhist Sunday School and as an obedient lad he felt he must obey. So although he found no pleasure in it he went each Sunday morning. When he found a Christian Sunday School for smaller children which was held in the afternoon he began to go there also. In a short time the parents noticed that the results of attending the two schools were entirely different. When he returned from the Buddhist school he was glum and unhappy but when he came from the Christian school he was agreeable and cheerful. On seeing this the parents said he need only go to the Christian Sunday School."—World-Wide S. S. News.

FLUFFY'S CLOSE CALL

It really was too bad, for Fluffy had no one to tell her what not to do. She simply did what all the other little incubator chicks were doing, only she tried to do it first.

They were all so big and nicely feathered out that they no longer spent the night in their box with the warm dark bedroom to keep them cosy. They were big enough to roost on the top of the box, that is, most of them were. But some perched on the rounds of an old chair which stood nearby.

You see, this family lived on the porch of a cottage by the side of a beautiful lake. They were too young to be kept in the chicken yard, and so were allowed more liberty. They would have wiggled through the fence of the chicken yard, for it was not very tight and they might even have strayed too far toward a neighboring yard, where a big black cat watched patiently for just such dainty tidbits.

When the sun came up over the hills across the lake and made the dew-drops glitter on the grass, all the little chicks would scamper down the steps and begin to scratch about in the sandy yard, finding small bugs and tender leaves and shiny bits of grit to help their digestions.

But for three or four days now not one of them had set claw on the ground. It had rained and rained and rained. They soon got tired of running for shelter when the drops came down too fast. Besides, it made them cold and shivery, and it was much more comfortable to stay on the wide porch or to run about in the funny little shed just back of it. However, they might have ventured out when the rain did stop for a few minutes, if it hadn't been that one morning when they woke up the sun was shining—and, of course, that pleased them, but what caused them great astonishment was that the lake had come right up into the yard and was rippling around the steps and even under the house. Fluffy could see the sparkle of the water through the cracks in the floor. It was all very astonishing and there was nothing to do but make the best of the situation.

After all, things might have been worse, for they had plenty of food served them in a shallow pan, and, of course, they could get a drink whenever they wanted it, but it wasn't like getting out and digging their toes in the good soft dirt. They could ruffle their feathers and bask in the sun on the porch, but it wasn't like dozing out under the leaves that grew at the base of the little maple tree where an occasional bug would come traveling by, and the warm sand could be dug into cozy hollows that just fitted their breast bones. Fluffy and her brothers and sisters began to wonder if they would have to stay on that porch forever. It was not a pleasant prospect.

Fluffy was the first chick to spy dry land when the lake began to go back where it belonged. She had to run through a puddle to reach the little brown knoll just beyond, but she felt very proud when she found a big fat angleworm the very first thing. Of course, the other chickens spied her and came running out to help her eat the nice fresh dainty. They had no mother to tell them that it was very bad for chicks to get wet.

That afternoon the Nice Lady who fed them went away, telling her little boy to keep an eye on them and to see that none were so foolish as to get into deep water. But the other children were all playing up on the road, where it was dry and sunny, so that is how it came about that Warren, which was the little boy's name, went up there to play, and of course, there wasn't a soul near and Fluffy couldn't make anybody hear.

She thought it would be easy to run through a puddle that lay between her own yard and the next. There was unusually good picking in the other yard, and besides it would seem good to be able to run and flutter one's wings.

Fluffy thought about it for several minutes. The other chicks were all snoozing on the porch and it seemed quite a safe undertaking. At most, she would only get her breast wet, she decided, so in she plunged.

The water came up over her back. Her feet could hardly touch bottom. How cold it was! And oh, it was a terribly wide puddle. Would she ever get across? A little off at one side Fluffy saw the top of a tiny stump, hardly more than a stick, but at least big enough to stand on. She made her way toward it and managed to claw her way anxiously to the top. There she perched peeping with all her might in a high piercing call for help.

Fulffy was wet through and her feathers clung together and separated into little wisps that let the cool breeze from the lake blow upon her shivering bare skin. The sun couldn't reach her here, and she didn't dare to go through the puddle again to reach the sunshine.

By and by, Fluffy stopped calling. She was getting weak and it was all she could do to stay on her perch. Besides her claws were so cold that she couldn't tell whether they were there or not. Fluffy's eyes closed, and she felt very strange and dizzy.

After a long time, when she felt she could not hold on much longer, she heard the welcome voice of the Nice Lady calling all the chicks for their supper. Fluffy managed to open her bill and to give three or four high, sharp peeps. Then she found that she couldn't open her bill at all and her eyes closed and she tumbled right off into the puddle again.

But before she had time to get very much wetter, Fluffy felt herself being picked up and in just a little while something warm was wrapped all about her so that only her bill stuck out. She heard the Nice Lady's voice telling Warren that they would pour some warm milk down her throat and it might be a good idea to put some pepper in it, too. That drink certainly tasted good, even if it was turned down Fluffy's throat with a spoon. Then everything was quiet.

Cold as she was, she began to feel more comfortable and soon went to sleep. Fluffy dreamed that she was under the little old brooder where she used to take her naps and where it was always so warm and comfortable.

After a while Fluffy woke up to find the sun shining all about her. For a minute she couldn't think what had happened. Inside the cloth blanket, she ruffled her feathers and they felt almost dry. She tried her legs and they seemed almost as good as new, so she stretched and wiggled until the cloth loosened and she could step out. Fluffy found herself on the porch chair. It was a good place to be. She stretched her wings and preened her breast feathers and ruffled herself all over.

What was that pecking she heard around the corner of the porch? It must be that the chicks were eating their supper. Fluffy had never missed a meal yet and now she fluttered down from the chair and ran as hard as she could go to get there before it was all gone.

After that Fluffy kept away from puddles. She had forgotten all about her unpleasant experience, but something inside of her seemed to say, "Stop!" whenever she saw a puddle in front of her and that was even better than having someone to say it to her.—Wallace Mead, in Banner.

THE STORY OF A DONKEY

By Caroline Kellogg

John had one habit. He would cry, long and loud, when things did not go to suit him. It distressed father and mother, for John was four years old, and they wanted him to be a man and not a cry-baby. They had talked to him about it many times, but still John cried.

One day something went wrong, and John began to cry. Aunt Helen went over to John's blackboard and picked up a piece of chalk. John saw her through his tears, but went on crying. "Once," Aunt Helen began, "there was a boy whose name began with J."

John heard her, but he only cried louder.

"Sometimes," Aunt Helen said, "he smiled; sometimes he looked cross; and some other times he opened his mouth wide and cried loud, like a baby, even though he was four years old."

John was not crying now. He was standing close beside Aunt Helen, watching her, but Aunt Helen didn't turn round to look at him. She just went on talking.

"This boy's name began with J, but it wasn't John. Oh, no! His name was Joey. Joey lived in the country, where they had horses, and cows, and pigs, and chickens, and almost everything except ponies; and Joey did wish he had a pony!"

"One day a man came to Joey's home with something to sell. 'Oh, father!' Joey said, 'it is a pony.' It did look a bit like a pony, but it was not one. It was a dear little gray shaggy donkey, with long, floppy ears, and the kindest eyes you ever saw."

"'He's four years old,' the man said. 'Does he cry?'" Joey's father asked.

"The man looked puzzled, first at Joey's father and then at Joey. 'Oh!' he said, and then he laughed. 'I don't think he knows how, but I guess he could learn.'"

"'Oh, but we don't want him to learn, do we, Joey?'" asked Joey's father; and Joey said, "No, sir."

"'Well,' the man said, 'if he doesn't ever hear anybody cry, may be he won't learn how.'"

"Joey's father bought the donkey, and Joey was so happy he felt as if he would never, never cry again.

"In a few days he and the donkey were very good friends. The donkey's name was Jerry. Every morning Jerry would come up to the side door and wait for Joey to come out, and ride him and play with him.

"But one morning something went wrong at breakfast, and Joey cried. He cried loud, and he didn't want to stop; but all at once he heard a noise. It was louder than his crying, and it was out-of-doors. Joey had to stop crying and listen.

"E-aw, E-aw, E-aw-aw!" he heard. "Joey's father got up from the breakfast table, and looked out of the door.

"Oh, dear! oh dear!" he said. "It's Jerry. Now he's learned to cry! A crying boy and a crying donkey—that's too much! We can't keep them both. We have to keep the boy, so we'll have to get rid of the donkey."

"Oh, father, father! please don't," Joey begged, and he was starting to cry again, but remembered just in time. "Truly, father, I won't be a crying boy, and then we can keep Jerry, can't we? And, father, maybe if I don't cry any more Jerry won't either."

"Father promised to give them a trial, and Joey really did try not to be a cry-baby any more, and when you try real hard you can always do a thing, can't you, John?"

But John only answered, "Please tell me that again, auntie."—Ex.

THE COW THAT LIKED COMPOSITIONS

Caro had never written a composition. At the city school nothing had ever been said about them. But here in the country, where they had lately come to live, every Friday was composition day, and Caro was expected to write something on the subject printed upon the blackboard. "Cows," she read, and felt perplexed at once.

"Make your compositions this week humorous, or funny, if possible, the teacher said, which sent Caro home in a puzzle. What was funny about a cow?"

After school the little girl took a paper and pencil, and went out into the pasture back of the house to study their cow, and to write her composition.

Billy Carpenter had told her that cows sometimes chased people; but this cow that her father had just bought looked too clumsy and too lazy to run after anybody. So Caro sat down upon a big stone, and wrote "Cow" in big letters at the top of her sheet.

The cow switched her tail from side to side, to drive off the flies; so presently Caro wrote:

"Cows are big animals, with long tails that go wigglety-waggle."

Then she watched to see the cow do something funny; but all she did was to nibble at the grass.

Pretty soon this went down on Caro's paper:

"Cows eat all the time, and never stop. They have big eyes that stare at you, and they have horns to let down the bars with, when they go home at night. Our cow is reddish, and isn't funny at all."

Just then the cow walked off under a tree, and lay down chewing her cud.

"Oh," thought Caro, "that is funny! They do their eating first and then they go and chew and chew!" So she wrote down her discovery, adding, "I wish I could do that way; but mamma makes me chew as I go along."

A railroad passed near the farm, and just then a whistle sounded shrilly not far away. It frightened the cow, and getting on her feet in a hurry she came bounding in Caro's direction at a lively pace.

"Oh!" screamed Caro, dropping paper and pencil, she scampered away toward

THE COUNTRY VISIT

The big horse walked beside her with a gentle nose thrust out, The colt came running from the field and frolicked all about;

The chickens crowded close, until the farmer's wife said "Shoo!"

"I think they like to have me here," said little 'Liza Lou.

The ducks were swimming in the pond; they gave a friendly quack;

The turkeys came to greet her from behind the golden stack;

The rooster strutted up and said, "How do de doodle do?"

"I'm pretty well, I thank you, sir," said little 'Liza Lou.

The old eat waked and slept again, stretched out upon the floor;

The hen with all her fluffy brood was clucking near the door;

The long-legged calf came skipping, and the mother cow said, "Moo!"

"I like the country very much," said little 'Liza Lou.

The pet lamb snuggled at her side and gave a timid bleat;

The kind old house dog wagged his tail and laid down at her feet;

And from the dovecot, soft and low, she heard the pigeons coo,

"Oh, let me come again, sometime!" cried little 'Liza Lou.—Ex.

Story and Incident

"I AM A DEBTOR"

By Annie Rankin Carr

It was late in the winter when Faith Trueheart paid Tony a visit at the Round House.

Tony's history is worth chronicling—if there were time. A mite of a youngster was Tony, his eyes dark as black pansies, a lie coming as easily to his lips as a laugh, when Mrs. Trueheart set out to win him. Through the years Tony responded to the winning. He had straightened out like a clean young sapling. Now for some months he had held a position at the Round House, having risen to this responsibility by gradual steps indicating honesty and unflinching faithfulness. To these traits were added the vigor of a Christian young manhood. For this end Faith Trueheart wearied not in praying.

As a wife of a mission pastor in the down-town district of a Southern city, Mrs. Trueheart lived strenuously. The flying hours of seven days in the week she crowded with a multitude of matters of signal importance to her family and the members of her husband's spiritual flock.

As pastor Trueheart saw his wife preparing for a walk that afternoon in late winter the apprehension which he had felt of late smote him afresh with a sudden chill. Faith appeared to him to be markedly worn. An increasing pallor and weariness seemed possessing her.

"I fear you are not well, dear," he said as she started for her hat and coat. "Don't go out today. You must not stay all the time in the front line benches."

With characteristic cheeriness Faith maintained that she was in usual health, but admitted to being "rather tired."

"The chief wonder of my life is," often had she thought, "that I dare keep so well." In youth she had been considered a frail child, with no inherited tendencies, but of slight build and capricious health. "Of course the care of the home comes first," she had said in the early years of her marriage. "My big job as wife and mother must have primal place." Consistently had the purpose held to keep the home sweet and lovely for the children and their father. Dull monotony of house-work? No, Mrs. Trueheart had not found it so. It was difficult for her to understand how anyone could hesitate over the doing of a manifest duty. Her own simple creed: "Whatever thy hand findeth to do—" made her give herself as interestedly and whole-heartedly to housekeeping as to leading the Women's Mission Class or her Boys' Club.

Through his study window the husband watched her leave. Wistful and unconvinced his eyes followed Faith as she stepped to the pavement. "My little windflower," he said, almost involuntarily, as he saw her more wan and fragile than she had ever seemed. "The will to do, no matter how inexhaustible nor how freely given, can not accomplish miracles. Sooner or later nature will exact payment," he thought with a pang.

Mrs. Trueheart seldom paid a purposeless visit. Her purpose at this particular time was to invite Tony to gathering of the young fellows of the neighborhood to the minister's home the following evening.

Faith Trueheart had, in a marked way, the gift of sinking herself in another's personality. Because of that trait and the warmth of a kindly nature she had touched her life with the lives of all who crossed her path. In the tiny cottage across the street she had helped nurse when the baby lay ill. In the nondescript boarding-house around the corner she had managed a cosy wedding for a working-girl. Down the alley in that tumbling-down tenement she had closed the eyes of a tired mother in the last long sleep. And if she kept serene and brave-hearted amid experiences which take toll of physical health and heart's ease it was because she drew constantly upon the Source of her strength.

Arriving at the Round House Faith sought out Tony. With warrantable pride and gratefully, he showed his friend over the place, remembering her words of recommendation which had helped put him there. Engines of various sorts and conditions were reviewed with interest. Some had overturned in wrecks, others had been damaged in head-on collisions. Suddenly they came upon a powerful one, all new and shining, seemingly ready for action. "What's wrong here, Tony?" inquired Faith with vivid attention.

"She's busted' as the fellows say," answered Tony. "She pulled an overload."

Machinery had always a fascination for Faith—pulsing and throbbing as if with human heart-beats. With live eyes and breath coming fast, she stood motionless, looking up at the mighty thing. "I can imagine it with something akin to a soul," tears glistening on her cheeks, "swaying with easy grace over the rails on a mission of service to mankind."

That evening several hours afterward, they found Faith on the couch in her friendly living-room. The glow of the firelight heightened the shine of her dark hair. With head pressed against the pillows she stared at them with fever-flaming eyes. Incoherent words fell from her lips, the pulse in the slender wrists fluttering so pitilessly.

"A nervous collapse," pronounced the kind-faced doctor when they called him in.

For hours the fever lasted with torturing pain, and sleep mercilessly refused to come to tired eyes.

Whiteoaks, operated by the most skilled nerve specialist of the city, was an expensive establishment. But pastor Trueheart would have none but the best care for Faith, though it wipe out the small savings he had put by for the children's education.

Not the least call upon Faith Trueheart's powers throughout the years of her married life had been the ever-present ends—failing-to-meet condition of their family budget—a condition which was graying her husband's hair and leaving scars on his economic conscience. Assuredly a Gospel minister should claim the inherent right to stand before his fellows without shrinking and without embarrassment because he had followed the injunction, "owe no man anything." Thus Faith reasoned within herself, not bitterly, but in the white light of justice, as she saw her husband's mind burdened with the problem of living within his salary, as well as with "the care of all the churches."

"Guess she carried an overload," mourned Tony as day after day he came to the door of the sanatorium with an odd arrangement of winter's flowers—arbor vitae, snowdrops, and violets.

Time moved laggardly to the Trueheart family. Six weeks later Faith was sitting in a big rest-chair in the sun-porch of Whiteoaks. Slowly, doggedly had she fought her way back to life. The flush of health was returning to her face, the old-time note of gladness in her voice.

Near Faith, in another chair, reclined Adorna Selfease. The trouble with Adorna was that all her life she had too much of everything—too much play-time, too much wealth, too much of herself. She, too, had lived strenuously, as a woman of fashion lives.

In the winter there were cruises in the South seas, in the summer, long vacations in the mountains. There was no space for calm, no time for refilling empty cisterns. A futile life, nevertheless taking toll of physical strength and mental energy.

A rather singular attachment between these two women, so unlike in temperament and far apart in aim, had developed during their acquaintance at Whiteoaks. Adorna although artificial, had not lost her admiration for the real. In Faith Trueheart she recognized qualities lacking in her herself, and was attracted thereby. With that clear perception with which both nature and experience had endowed her, Faith very eagerly discovered the good, the genuine, in Adorna's untilled, unfruitful soul.

Adorna talked charmingly of her travels—it seemed she had always been poised for flight—and to Faith, whose travels had been limited to her native land, these accounts of distant countries thrilled as personal experiences.

In imagination she stood beneath flowering trees in fair Japan as the cherry blossoms came fluttering down upon her upturned face. She watched crystal streaks come leaping down the mountain sides, then with the easy grace of the Orient, glide through the deep grass on the way to the sea. By night she walked under brilliant star-drifts in the land of the Southern Cross, or by day sailed into strange harbors. Across the greening barley fields of Palestine she heard the pheasant call to his mate, as the slow-moving ex-carts came creeping along the dusty highway. But the story of a Garden—a Garden where olive trees spread their kindly shade as in the long ago—Faith loved best to hear.

In the quiet corner of the sun-parlor, with the first breath of spring in the air, Adorna had just finished describing again, at her companion's request, the scenes so hallowed by the presence of One who once dwelt among them.

For a long time each woman sat silent, thinking.

It was Adorna who broke the spell. "Mrs. Trueheart," she began in a voice full of emotion, "you may be surprised to know that for some days I have been thinking—the most serious thinking in all my life. And—," she hesitated awkwardly, this woman of poise, "I've come to the conviction that fundamentally my life is all wrong,—wrong in its springs."

Faith let her talk on. It was what Adorna needed. Only she gave her an understanding, sympathetic smile.

"Since knowing you," began Adorna, "I've begun to look at life with different eyes. I'm beginning to discern that I've been guided by wholly insufficient standards—false values. My church membership? I count as a mere numeral!"

Faith listened interestedly, waiting to know where the other was leading.

"Won't you forgive me if I seem personal?" inquired Adorna somewhat timidly.

With Faith's reassuring smile she went on: "With a distinct shock I've come to realize that my life is empty, my hands idle, my heart hungry."

"But you are not unhappy—"

"We cannot put happiness on as we do a garment," quietly interrupted Adorna. "Happiness comes not from indulging ourselves under cover of exercising our rights, but chiefly from thinking of others. That, I believe, is the secret of the dynamic within you."

"Even as the Son of Man came not to be ministered unto—" gently quoted Faith.

"And, naturally, you have many friends," her companion reasoned. "One who has a friend that cleaves as David to Jonathan drinks deeply of contentment," and she sighed regretfully. For Adorna Selfease, in spite of her luxurious trappings, was a lonely soul, without kith and kin, and no ties that are sacred, like home and dear ones.

During the weeks just gone she had looked upon Faith with new-wise eyes, seeing a motive power which gave something that she could not claim, a balm she knew not of.

Faith was a good listener. After a pause Adorna resumed: "Tomorrow you expect to return to your home and family. Before you go I want your advise concerning something I wish to do. I can trust your judgment, Mrs. Trueheart, when it comes to the heart or the head," she laughed brightly.

"Unfold your plan." Faith told her. "I'll try not to disappoint you."

As Adorna talked, her tones charged with earnestness, Faith, realizing that it is easier for the camel to go through the needle's eye than for the Adornas to break the silken chains of self-centered lives, lifted her soul in unuttered thankfulness for Heavenly Grace that had been steadily at work performing its gentle cure upon Adorna.

When aroused, Adorna did nothing by halves. She had a way of beginning at the core of a matter. Her proposition clearly and succinctly laid before the minister's wife, and enthusiastically approved by that lady, Adorna made her decision with that alacrity of mind characteristic of her.

Obtaining permission of the white-capped nurse in attendance, her lawyer was immediately summoned by telephone.

nite purpose, and then her eyes found the words: "I am debtor—" Paul felt himself debtor because of the love which constrained him, a debtor to every individual soul to all classes, and peoples. And the thought which had animated the great apostle had become a vivid, living power in the soul of Adorna Selfease.

With a sweep of mental vision clearly could Faith see the Home for Children—those "little ones," fatherless, motherless, homeless—that would arise in due course of time because of Adorna. Beyond the noisy city, there in the great out-of-doors, flooded with sunshine and enveloped in sweet-scented air, would gleam its sheltering walls. Faith could almost hear the sound of swift-winged feet pressing up to Adorna, as the children greeted her with glad faces and out-stretched hands—gold exchanged into lives.

"I MAKE IT MY BUSINESS TO REMEMBER"

A young man now a member of a large hardware firm attracted attention when he was an employe drawing a small salary, by his remarkable memory. Again and again as he approached a customer to wait on him, he called him by name. The clerks who had been much longer in the business were acquainted with only a few of their customers, while this young fellow seemed to know every one. And it was not because he had made their acquaintance before securing his position, for he lived in a country town all his life, until he went to work and began as a total stranger in the city.

One of his superiors having noticed that he called by name a man who had come into the store to make a purchase, found his curiosity aroused. He himself could not remember ever having seen the man before. "How did you come to know that customer, John?" he asked.

"Why, he bought some nails from me one evening about six weeks ago, as near as I can remember."

"How did you come to know his name?"

"Well, we got into a little talk and he told me his name. I always like to know the names of my customers," said John simply.

"You've seen a good many strange faces in six weeks," the employer remarked. "I should think you'd get confused. How do you remember them? What is the secret?"

"I don't know that there's any secret about it," said the boy, showing signs of confusion as he discovered that several of his fellow clerks were paying interested attention to the conversation. I think that customers rather like it when you call them by name, so I make it my business to remember."

"I make it my business to remember." What volumes are expressed in that simple speech! How simple it makes the difference between the youth who gets ahead and the one who fails! The boy who blunders, who forgets an important commission entrusted to him, is inclined to be indignant when he is severely censured. He is sorry, of course, extremely sorry, but how is he to blame for forgetting, he wants to know. Anybody ought to realize that he did not do it on purpose. And he is the boy who stays on, year after year, at the same salary, watching wistfully the associates that pass him and wondering why some fellows have all the luck.

"I make it my business to remember." In that simple sentence is compressed the secret of success.

EDITORIAL

"WHAT DO JEWS BELIEVE?"

Such is the title of a little tract sent to us by a Jewish society which is anxious to have the world know what Jews believe. It supplies for us a long felt want. Doubtless we are to blame for an aloofness which has prevented us from asking any Jewish acquaintance what the Jews believe. We did venture once to ask two intelligent Jewish ladies to tell us frankly about their religious beliefs. We have credited them with being intelligent, and yet we failed to get any intelligent ideas from their answers to our questions.

This little tract does give us some very definite, clear-cut positive ideas. The author of this tract says the Jews believe in the existence of God, not as the result of any process of reasoning, but instinctively. "The Jew has always felt the existence of God as a basic fact in life."

The Jews believe in the unity of the Godhead. As the author of the tract puts it, they believe in the "uniqueness" of God, evidently using this word to discriminate their Monotheism from the Christian's Trinitarianism.

They believe that God is holy, and good, that he is omniscient, omnipotent, and omnipresent. They believe that God created the world, either by His fiat or by a process of evolution. In either case they trace its origin to Him. Having created the world, He stays with it to care for it and govern it. Just how far this government intervenes in human affairs is not made clear.

"What do we believe about man? To put it negatively first, we do not believe in a great many doctrines that are current among other people, as the doctrine of original sin, the fall of man, the need of vicarious atonement and such like." When the author turns to state positively the Jewish doctrine of man, he is very unsatisfactory. He declares that God made man in His own image, and that all continue to "bear the impress of the Divine image in their soul. Furthermore, to realize this Divine nature and enact it in his life is man's paramount duty and purpose." Suppose he fails, is he then a sinner? And if a sinner, what notice, if any, will God take of the fact? The author leaves these questions without even an inferential answer.

The Jews believe the Bible is in some sense a revelation of God's will. But obviously not in the sense that it is an infallible rule of faith and practice. The author takes great liberty with the Bible. He picks and chooses under the guidance of his own flickering light of reason. The Jews are in their treatment of the Bible rationalists.

"What becomes of our soul? Do we believe in a hereafter? Briefly speaking, we certainly believe that the soul survives the dissolution of the body, but just what occurs after death, and what the state of the soul is, the purest teaching of Judaism has never attempted to define." It can hardly be said that the Jews believe in future rewards and punishments. They believe the soul outlasts the body, but beyond that they seem to be agnostics.

"What do we believe about the Messiah? Jesus, the Messiah, or the Christ, of the Christian world, was a Jew, and it was the question of His Messiahship that created the cleft between the two religions. Doubtless some Jews still entertain the hope of a personal Messiah. Reform Jews, however, do not. They do not believe in the miraculous Messiah." We are thankful for so much information on this subject of the Messiah, but are disappointed that he did not tell us definitely what the Jews think of Jesus of Nazareth. It is clear that they do not believe in miracles, and to eliminate the miraculous from the historical accounts we have of Jesus, leaves rather meagre data for forming any intelligent conception. Our author goes on to say: "All Jews, however, agree in the hope of a Messianic age—an age when humanity will enjoy the reign of righteousness, unity and peace, and all hearts shall be united in pure worship of the One and Only God."

Do the Jews believe in a Messianic age without a Messiah to bring it about? Not exactly. Notice that it is said the Reformed Jews do not believe in a "personal" Messiah. They believe in a national Messiah. In other words they believe that the divinely appointed mission of the Jews is to imbue the rest of mankind with their superior ethical, social and religious ideas, and thus gradually introduce the golden age, so splendidly portrayed by their prophets.

Contrast this cold, barren system of thought with the warm, pulsing, ecstatic religion of that Jew who met with Jesus on the way to Damascus, and gave his heart and life to Him.

THE RESIGNATION OF DR. J. W. BACHMAN

It is a wonderful experience for a man to have been pastor of a church for 50 years in a large city, where he influences not only his own people, but all people; yet such is the experience of Dr. Bachman. In 1873 he became pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, of Chattanooga, Tenn., and now 50 years after, he is to lay down that office and retire to his well-earned rest.

In all those years he has been faithful to his ordination vows. He has preached a pure and old-time Gospel, with no attempt at sensationalism. The following is his letter of resignation to his Presbytery.

To the Presbytery of Knoxville:
Moderator and Brethren: On October 1, 1873, the Presbytery of Knoxville, at the request of the congregation, placed in my hands the call and work of the First Presbyterian Church of Chattanooga, Tenn.

From that time until the present, I have tried to give the strength of body, mind and spirit to the service, for the honor of God and the good of my fellow men.

It has been a labor of love and joy. The members of the congregation which called me have long since fallen asleep, but I desire to make record that they were true and faithful all their days, and their children and their children's children, together with the goodly multitude who have united with us from year to year, have been true and encouraging all their days.

As you know, I have long since passed my four score years and find myself unable to meet the responsibilities and do the work of such a large congregation, as we now have, as pastor; and I herewith present my resignation to take effect October 1, 1923, and ask that you relieve me of the many responsibilities of the work of the church.

Your fellow servant,

At the conclusion of the morning service the congregation formally concurred in the request to Presbytery. The following was their action:

Whereas, The Rev. J. W. Bachman has notified us that at the next meeting of the Presbytery he will tender his resignation as pastor of this church to take effect October 1, 1923, at the close of fifty years of service;

"And whereas, While we cannot think of losing him as our pastor without deep sorrow, we recognize that he has reached that age when his splendid service entitles him to be relieved of the burdens of an active ministry. Now, therefore, be it Resolved, That we concur in his request for dissolution of the pastoral relationship between him and this church, and, at the same time, assure him that it will be our pleasure to add in every possible way to his comfort during his days of well earned rest."

THE CLOSING DAYS AT MONTREAT

The last week at Montreat is always the best, and, in thus planning, they seem to be following the bill of fare of the marriage at Cana of Galilee, as it appeared to the guests on that occasion when they found the wine furnished at the close of the feast to be much better than that given first.

Dr. Wm. Evans and Dr. James I. Vance were the speakers and each measured up to the expectations of the great audiences that greeted them, morning and evening.

Business called me to my office in Charlotte from Tuesday till Thursday night, so that I only heard Dr. Vance once and Dr. Evans twice during the week.

Dr. Vance is always heard with pleasure by a Montreat audience, and, as we learned from those who were present at his various services, he fully sustained his well-deserved reputation as a master of sentences, "magister sententiarum," as the Latins used to express it.

We heard Dr. Evans twice in his Bible readings during the week, and twice on Sunday, when he preached two masterly sermons. His Bible readings were in the First Epistle of John. We heard the opening lecture and the closing one.

We have attended closely every Bible hour in nearly all the years since the Montreat Conferences began and we doubt whether we have ever had any one who has surpassed Dr. Evans in close analytical dissection of the Word of God, or who has handled it with more reverence. As Dr. Lingle said, the last night, in the closing remarks of the season, that he had studied the Epistle of John as he hoped thoroughly, but that under Dr. Evans it had been opened anew to him.

It gave him a fine opportunity to defend some of the doctrines now called in question by the liberals of our day.

For example, in this Epistle, he finds that John was laying down the tests whereby man could enter into fellowship with God. These tests are moral and doctrinal.

The Moral Tests being: (1) Walking in the Light, I John 1:5-7; (2) Fellowship with each other, 1:7; (3) Absence of Sin, 1:8-2:2; (4) Obedience, 2:3, 5; (5) Christlikeness, 2:6.

This test excludes: (1) Ill-feeling, 2:9; (2) Worldliness, 2:15-17; (3) Wrong Views, 2:18-26.

The Doctrinal Tests being: (1) Belief in the Incarnation, 4:2, 3; 5:1, 6, 8; (2) Belief in the Deity of Christ, 4:2, 3, 10, 14, 15; 5:1, 4, 18, 20 cf. II John 7-9; (3) Belief in the atoning death of Christ, 4:10, 14, 15; 5:6-8 cf. 2:2, 1:7.

These readings attracted large crowds, nearly each one being armed with a note book.

On Sunday, at both services magnificent audiences greeted him, and sat patiently through sermons of over one hour long. His sermon in the morning was on the Resurrection of Christ and the proofs of it, based on I Cor. 15:3-19.

This sermon was a closely linked chain of logic, not cold as logic is supposed to be, but glowing with the fervent heat of a man who believed that the old doctrines were in danger and who was determined to hold to them.

We have lived our allotted time, and we have heard many of the master preachers of our day, but we cannot recall any sermon that could surpass, or ever equal this one.

To one whose heart is sore over the looseness of views prevailing over our land, these ringing words were like "the shadow of a great rock in a weary land."

His sermon at the evening service was from II Cor. 5:1-8, "The Sustaining Truths of the Christian Religion. He showed these great truths:

1. A cheerful view of death. 2. Death only a sleep. 3. Sleeping implies an awakening.

It was a comforting and cheering sermon, just what many needed, and all enjoyed. This sermon closed the conference for the season, and by Monday the crowds began to move homeward.

This season has been the most successful one in Montreat's history, one of the special features has been the music. C. G. Vardell, Jr., the dean of music at Flora Macdonald College led the singing. To our uncultivated ear he did fine work, but of course our endorsement will amount to little.

However, it takes no special ear for music to know the difference between a dignified leader who enters into the spirit of the old hymns and one of these musical buffoons who dispenses jokes with his music, and who imagines that it adds to the praise of God to separate at intervals those who sit on one side from those who sit on the other, or those who use sugar in their coffee from those who take it straight.

The singing of Mr. Connor, Mrs. Bauman, Mrs. Vardell, Miss Lucile Belk, and Rev. Mr. Mann added greatly to the enjoyment of the meetings during the last week.

Soon the visitors will be gone, and Montreat will be left to the regular inhabitants, including the normal school girls and brother G. W. Belk. "God be with us, till we meet again."

REV. A. S. JOHNSON'S DECLINATION

All the Presbyterians, especially those who are interested in its development in Charlotte will learn with interest and gratification that Dr. Johnson has declined the flattering call, extended to him by the Central Presbyterian Church of St. Louis, Mo.

This call in the matter of salary and other inducements was such that any man would have felt inclined to consider it. When declined, this church proposed to send another committee to press the matter.

Dr. Johnson felt that his work here is not finished, so that he declined every proposition.

His firm stand for conservative doctrine, and his spiritual messages each Sunday have made him a power in this city.

We have a fine body of ministers in the city at present, and we would hate to see the number reduced.

REV. W. L. LINGLE, D.D.

The Presbyterian of the South announces that Dr. W. L. Lingle will be added to its editorial staff, making the combination a threefold one. W. S. Campbell, A. A. Little and W. L. Lingle, all having the mystical letters, "D.D." after their names.

This is a strong combination, and we congratulate our esteemed contemporary upon this new move.

Dr. Lingle is a man whose common sense and clean mind is peculiarly strong, and he enlightens any subject with which he deals. He knows the history of our Church as few men do.

THE UNBOUGHT GOOD

By Annie Johnson Flint

What would our land be worth to us,

The land we sell and buy,
And fence about, and call our own,
Without God's open sky
To hold the sunset's rose and gold,
The white clouds floating high?

What would our fields be worth to us

Without the gifts he sends;
Without the sunshine and the rain,
On which our bread depends,
His little brooks to flow for us,
His birds to be our friends?

Oh, as the land without the sky

That ever bends above,
So barren and so desolate
Our lives without his love—
The blessings that no gold can buy
Our greatest riches prove. —Ex.

Creek and Pleasant Hill Churches, in the death of his beloved wife.

There is no loss to a man in life that leaves a greater gap than to lose the companionship of one who has shared his joys and sorrows through a long life.

POWER OF A CHRISTIAN

Some men are afraid of being too religious. What we need today is men who believe down deep in their soul what they profess. The world is tired and sick of sham. Let your whole heart be given up to God's service. Aim high. God wants us all to be His ambassadors. It is a position higher than that of any monarch on earth to be a herald of the cross; but you must be filled with the Holy Ghost. A great many people are afraid to be filled with the Spirit of God—afraid of being called fanatics. You are not good for anything until the world considers you a fanatic. Fox said that every Quaker ought to shake the country ten miles around. What does the Scripture say? "One shall chase a thousand, and two shall put ten thousand to flight." It takes about a thousand to chase one now. It takes about a thousand Christians to make one decent one now. Why? Because they are afraid of being too religious. What does this world want today? Men—men that are out and out for God, and not half-hearted in their allegiance and service.—D. L. Moody.

RETURN TO GOD

"O Israel, return unto the Lord thy God."—(Hosea 14:1).

Thank God that He does not let His children go on comfortably when they wander and fall! Have we not known (God grant we may never again know!) a wretched mental nausea, a sense of discomfort and restlessness, a misgiving that something is wrong, though we cannot say what? no actual pain, no acute attack of anything, but a nameless uncomfortableness, most easily described by a negative, that we are not "as in months past." If this is the present state of any reader of this message, do let me most earnestly and affectionately entreat you not to remain another hour in this most dangerous state. Do not let yourself drift on. Every day's delay will make your case worse. Five infinitely gracious reasons are given why you should return. Return! . . . for thou hast fallen by thine iniquity;" the very thing which seemed the barrier to return! "Return! . . . for I am merciful, saith the Lord." "Return! . . . for I have redeemed thee." "Return! . . . for the Lord hath dealt bountifully with thee." "Come, and let us return unto the Lord; for he hath torn, and he will heal us." All these gracious words for you! and the Lord Himself is waiting that He may be gracious! Will you keep Him till a more "convenient season?"

Return!

O fallen; yet not lost!

Canst thou forget the life for thee laid down,
The taunts, the scourging, and the thorny crown?
When o'er thee first My spotless robe I spread
And poured the oil of joy upon thy head,
How did thy waking heart within thee burn!
Canst thou remember all, and wilt thou not return?

—F. R. Havergal.

PUT ON CHRIST

"Put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ."—(Rom. 13:14).

"We are to 'put on' Christ. We are to make our own every separate element of His righteousness and holiness. We are to make His humility ours, and His courage, His gentleness, and His invincible integrity; His abhorrence of sin, and His mercy for the penitent; His delight in the righteousness of others, and His patience for their infirmities; the quiet submission with which He endured His own sufferings, and His compassion for the sufferings of others; His indifference to ease, and wealth, and honor, and His passion for the salvation of men from all their sins and all their sorrows. We are to make His perfect faith in the Father ours, and His perfect loyalty to the Father's authority; His delight in doing the Father's will; His zeal for the Father's glory. The perfection at which we have to aim is not a mere dream of the imagination, but the perfection which human nature has actually reached in Christ. The fountains of my life are in Him. It is the eternal purpose of the Father that as the branch receives and reveals the life which is in the vine, I should receive and reveal the life which is in Christ.—Dr. R. W. Dale.

QUIET TALKS ON THE SIMPLE ESSENTIALS

No. 10—Earth's Roughest Hill

Contrasts make things sharper to the eye. Black looks blacker on white, and the white whiter. A dirty mongrel stands out uglier in a brood of well-kept thoroughbreds.

Contrasts never were sharper than in the one Man of the race. He was of the blood royal of earth, yet He lived in a white-washed stone cottage. He was a lineal aristocrat of the aristocrats, yet He earned bread as a carpenter. He came from a throne; He came to a dirty obscure Oriental village. He came for a world throne, but He lived among a people peculiarly provincial and flannish.

His hand had held a sceptre; it handled a hammer and saw. His brow had graced a crown; it was scarred by a crown of thorns. He came, He said, to reign over a race; He hung on a rude cross.

He was the purest of men by consent of those that hated Him; He suffered as the vilest of outcast sinners. He came to bring in a new blessed order of things to this war-scarred, thorn-growing earth. But sin broke the plan. But the thing's not finished yet. The game isn't played out. The innings will turn. Wait a bit.

Those contrasts didn't just happen. That Man wasn't spoiled. The thing was planned. The purpose of the Man's heart shaped the plan. The passion of His heart drove it through, even though His heart broke in the drive. Passion and purpose drove the Man steadily up the roughest, steepest, tallest hill on earth.

The geography of Jesus' life is fascinating. He was the Son of the Earth as well as the Son of Man. Every phase of human experience He knew, and every sort of the earth's surface He touched. He belongs to us down here, doubly.

He was born in a little village of the plains. In infancy he crossed the desert, and slept by the pyramids of Egypt, the cradle of history. He lived thirty out of thirty-three years in a common country village.

He was baptized in the muddy waters of the Jordan River. He was tempted in the Wilderness. He drew the crowds perilously thick by Galilee's pretty blue waters. He was transfigured on towering snow-clad Hermon. He went through the sorest strain of spirit in a garden under gnarled olive trees.

He was hurt to death on Calvary's hill. His body found a three days' resting place in a new-hewn tomb of the rock. He was Son of Man and Son of Earth. He touched both intimately at every point of contact.

But the highest hill He ever climbed, the steepest, the roughest, was Calvary. It was tallest. It lay on the top of another hill, Nazareth. Nazareth was the human life He lived. Nazareth was the underpinning of Calvary. It was the quality, the purity of the Nazareth life that gave the distinctive meaning to the Calvary death.

It was steepest. None other climbed it, nor could, nor can. And only He by giving His life clean out. It was the roughest. Thorn-growing, sin-roughened, it took His very life out getting to its top. But He went.

Have you ever been on Calvary? It faces three ways.

It faces up—toward God. The condition of things on the earth is a scandalous blot of God's administration. Surely God can't be good. It can't be that He cares, to let things go as they do, suffering for the innocent, wrongs unrighted, selfishness riding roughshod over men, evil unpunished. Where is God? Does He know? Does He care? Why aren't things straightened out?

That roughest hill answers. It gives God's estimate of the wrongs that scandalize earth. They deserve the treatment His Son received. Does He feel? He Himself suffered at Calvary when His Son suffered, to tell His estimate of sin, and to destroy sin's power, and to hold judgment, sin's self-judgment, in abeyance till man has had fullest opportunity. God's embarrassment was to show His intense hatred of sin, and yet His intense love of man. He did both in that Calvary event.

Calvary faces down—towards Satan, that splendid foul spirit prince. Sin is obeying Satan. It enslaves man. The Calvary Man took on Himself what was due us. We are set free. Satan is answered fully and defeated stingingly. His power is broken. Calvary makes slaves free men.

And that Hill faces out—toward men. It breaks our hearts with the love of it. For that Man didn't have to die, except the have-to of His love. Ten or eleven times they tried to do Him to death. And they easily could so far as sheer force were concerned.

Each time He held them off with a power they couldn't understand, and couldn't resist. Then He yielded. The dying was voluntary. It means just what meaning the Man put into it. It had to be done, He said. He did it out of love for us. And the love of the thing, once it gets home, breaks a man's heart.

Sainted Bishop Whipple, of Minnesota, sat by the sick bedside of a cultured old judge in the southland, talking in his scholarly way. At last the judge politely said, "Pardon me; but you know I'm facing the real things. Won't you talk to me like you'd talk to my black boy Jim?"

And the Bishop said quietly, "You're a sinner, like me. Jesus died for our sins. Trust Him as a little child." And the judge said, "Thank you, Bishop, I can get hold of that. That gives me peace."

When one faces the real things of life, or beyond, it's touch with the man of the Calvary Hill that gives peace.

SOUTHERN PRESBYTERIAN EDUCATION

By Rev. D. H. Gage, D.D., Secretary

The Presbyterian Educational Association of the South and the Assembly's Advisory Committee on Education met in their annual meeting at Montreat, July 25-27.

Thirty institutions were represented by over 40 representatives. The usual broad, free, informal and helpful discussion of educational problems, covering such subjects as the Local Church Administration, Book-keeping, Literary Societies, Loan Funds, Discipline, Chapel Attendance, and a number of other topics gave the meeting its characteristically beneficial tone. This meeting, however, gave special discussion to some very important topics.

For the first time, one session was given to Sectional Groups, Colleges, Junior Colleges, Women's Schools, Preparatory Schools, Financial Workers, Theological Seminaries, each considering their own special problems.

As "Seminary Week" was in progress, a large number of seminary professors were in attendance. It gave opportunity for discussion of preparation of candidates for the ministry, which at present presents special problems, owing to the almost total absence of Greek from academic preparation. An ad-interim committee of Drs. Mack, Wells, Currie, and Hemphill, from the seminaries, and Drs. Clyce, Douglas, Sentelle, and Gage, from the colleges, was appointed to study and report on the whole situation. A resolution covering the chief points causing inadequate preparation was adopted which is printed elsewhere. Plans were begun for closer articulation between college and seminary curricula.

The committee on Bible Textbooks reported that many safe texts were in print, but that lack of time had made it impossible to examine and report on all, and it had merely prepared a list of texts most widely used from which each Bible teacher could select texts suited to his own needs.

The discussion of the Christian atmosphere of our schools was one of the most helpful. It is to be regretted that the full discussion can not be given here—it would certainly be a comforting piece of reading, full of hope for the future and giving greater confidence in the value of this part of the church's work. It was significant, in view of the widespread laxity of customs and youthful discipline, that it was agreed that the time had come for the enforcement of stricter standards of morals and diligence in study in all our institutions.

The vital importance—the imperative need, for establishing courses and chairs in Religious Education and Church Work that the Church may speedily secure her greatly needed army of trained workers, was emphatically presented.

One session was given to Preparatory Schools, opened with a fine paper by Principal J. K. Coit, of Nacoochee. The wide field open here, its difficulties and needs, the relative place of the Church's schools and the public high schools, were studied.

The excellent work and growing usefulness of the Westminster Bureau were heartily commended.

The necessity for immediate provision for adequate financial support of women's colleges, standard and junior, was vigorously presented and a paper was adopted which will appear elsewhere, and to which the earnest and prayerful attention of our people, our officers and pastors, is asked. That paper will speak for itself.

The powerful influence for good on our whole national system of education, which is possible to Inter-denominational Association of Christian Colleges was presented, and the association accepted the invitation of the Council of Church Schools of the South to meet with them at their meeting in Memphis, next winter.

The association was pleased to have with them President R. C. Grier, of Erskine College, of the A. R. P. Church, whose helpful remarks added much to the value of the meeting. A unanimous invitation was extended to the schools of the A. R. P. Church to affiliate with this association and sit with us regularly each year. We sincerely hope our brethren will lend us the benefit of their presence and spiritual support.

The above is by no means a full statement of the helpful discussions of the meeting. The value of these meetings is so great that no proposal for any form of substitute has ever met any measure of favor. Would that every school could be represented. It was voted to again print enough minutes to send a copy to every pastor, session, officer of the Auxiliary and others interested. It is sincerely hoped they will receive a careful and prayerful reading that all the Church may fully learn the vast importance of Christian education for the rising generation.

PRESBYTERIAN PROGRESSIVE PROGRAM

Depts. I and IV

Spiritual Life --- Fellowship

In the Schedule of Activities recommended by the Assembly, the month of September has assigned to it, important features of the Progressive Program. The Departments of Spiritual Life and Fellowship contain a number of themes claiming particular attention at this time.

Timely pulpit themes in line with the Program of the Church are: Prayer, The Bible and Bible Study, Family Religion, The Church, Loyalty to Church, Worship, The Sabbath School, Service, Sabbath Observance, The Social Life of the Church.

The reader's eye will fall upon this paragraph just at the time of the opening of many of the public schools. An excellent field is now opening up in many of the states, for the introduction of Bible study in the public schools. Dr. J. M. Holladay, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, Marion, S. C., has prepared for the Earnest Worker an interesting account of this plan so successfully operated in his community. Dr. J. P. McCallie, chairman of Assembly's Committee on Men's Work, has been a pioneer in the introduction of this plan in the city schools of Chattanooga, Tenn. Information and assistance to pastor and church leaders, in this connection, will be gladly furnished by the Executive Committee of Publication, Box 1176, Richmond, Va.

Rally Day in the Sunday Schools comes this year on October 7th, but an entire month of preparation and planning should be devoted to making this event all that it is designed to be. Interesting programs and helps may be secured from Mr. R. E. Magill, Box 1176, Richmond, Va.

The Family Altar, September 16th

The foundation stone of Christianity is the Bible. The home is the first place for its message to be given to the boy and the girl. What an enormous waste of opportunity is going on in Christian homes today in the precious days of youth! Prayer by father or mother in the home has saved many boys and girls after they left the home. Our goal is a Family Altar in every Home, and the Assembly asks its pastors to present this subject on the third Sunday (16th) in September. For literature, write Mr. R. E. Magill, Executive Secretary, Box 1176, Richmond, Va.

Bible Cause, September 23d

The work of The American Bible Society, Bible House, New York, in publishing and distributing millions of volumes of the Word of God, justifies its place in our budget. The Assembly asks for Bible Cause Day in Churches and Sunday Schools with special offering in the Sunday Schools and in those churches not having the Every Member Canvass. Sunday, September 23d, is recommended as the day. For literature, write to above address.

Social Visitation Day, September 30th

An annual every family visitation for the development of the Social Life of the Church, is approved by the Assembly, and September 30th, the Sunday prior to Rally Day, designated as the most appropriate date. Copies of Home Visitation Cards and "The Social Visitation Day" leaflet will be furnished to pastors and churches by the Assembly's Stewardship Committee upon request.

Assembly's Training School for Lay Workers

The last Sunday in September (30th) is named by the Assembly as Assembly's Training School Day. Attention should be called to the work of this school from the pulpit, special prayer be offered and an offering taken for the school in all churches not having the Every Member Canvass. For information write Assembly's Training School, 3218 Chamberlayne Ave., Richmond, Va.

THE ZURICH CONFERENCE—JULY 21-27, 1923

By S. L. Morris, D.D.

The Pan Presbyterian Alliance of Reformed Churches was the joint product of Dr. James McCash, of Princeton, and Dr. Stuart Robinson, of Louisville, Ky., the preliminary meeting being held at London in 1875 for the purpose of organization and preparing a constitution. The meetings occur at intervals of four years, and are held alternately in America and Europe. Only one meeting failed. It was scheduled for 1917, but on account of the World War did not take place till 1921 at Pittsburgh, Pa., being the eleventh general council. The next will be held at Cardiff in Wales during 1925.

The Continental Conference at Zurich was not a meeting of the General Council, but an ad interim conference held in the interest of the suffering Reformed Churches of Central Europe to devise ways and means of relief and to give them encouragement in their dire distress. In many respects Zurich was the most appropriate place for such gathering. It is in the central section of Europe and would involve the least expense. Switzerland was neutral during the war and might be considered as a bond of sympathy for the gathering of delegates recently at war with each other. It was not only one of the first and foremost countries to promote the great Protestant Reformation, but Zurich and Geneva harbored and protected the refugees driven out of many countries on account of their religious faith. It was, however, especially appropriate, being the 400th anniversary of the great council in the city in 1523, which arranged for a public discussion between the Reformers and Catholics, resulting in its taking its place in the ranks of the Reformation and contributing perhaps more towards its success than perhaps any other country.

It was to Zurich that Zwingli came in 1519, and his service to the cause entitled him to a place along with Luther and Calvin as the immortal trio who broke the chains of Rome and liberated the Church from its spiritual thralldom. Calvin said he would cross many seas in the interest of unifying Protestantism, and it was Zwingli who extended his hand to Luther, which, had it been taken, might have saved Protestantism from its present unhappy and paralyzing divisions. It is also worthy of note that the smallest countries in the world have had the greatest influence on the character and destiny of men—Greece in literature, Palestine in religion, Switzerland, Holland and Scotland in influencing the world in behalf of spiritual types of Christianity.

Zurich did itself great credit in arranging for the comfort of the delegates to this Continental Conference, and for their social entertainment. Never in the same length of time was it ever the privilege of most of us to attend so many banquets and functions of social order, with literary and spiritual features, where music was added to contribute to the enjoyment. Some of us had never before had the privilege of hearing the peculiar type of singing known as "yodeling"—but I must forbear, for so many things rush for consideration it would take all the space of this communication to mention them.

The conference opened on Saturday, July 21st, with Rev. Professor Curtis, of Edinburgh, Scotland, as convener. It was, perhaps, the most representative and international body of Protestantism which ever gathered for conference—certainly of the reformed faith. The Pan Presbyterian Councils have always had somewhat larger attendance, but they have been composed of Anglo-Saxons, chiefly from America and Great Britain, with a sprinkling of other nationalities. The Zurich Conference contained more than a hundred delegates, and the Anglo-Saxons were a very small minority. If Great Britain were counted by separate countries there were 32 such represented. However, an analysis showed 38 reformed bodies and 23 nationalities were present by delegations. The United States only had four and Canada two; but nearly every country in Europe was well represented in numbers, and they came from far away Egypt, India, New Zealand and South Africa. It is doubtful if any gathering of equal numbers ever had a larger per cent of the leaders of their constituency represented in the person of men of such worldwide fame and recognized ability. It was ascertained by inquiry that practically all persons could understand either English or German; so Dr. A. Keller, of Zurich, acted as official interpreter and translated each of these two into the other.

The conference was opened by singing the 100th Psalm: "All people that on earth do dwell." The first official statement announced that the Southern Presbyterian Church led all others in European Protestant Relief, which made its representative from that moment almost an honored guest. He was invited to make the opening prayer, to make the first talk in explanation of the methods of his church, and to preside over the conference on Wednesday—an honor accorded his church as he was practically unknown.

It is almost impossible to report a conference of this character in one letter, lasting as it did one week and dealing with a variety of subjects. To do justice to it would make the communication entirely too long. To give the merest outline would make it unintelligible. The best that can be done is to give specimens of the treatment of some of the more important features and some of the conclusions embodied in resolutions.

The second day was Sabbath, which was observed by holding, first, a German service in the cathedral where Zwingli preached, followed by an English service and communion in that part of the building known as the choir in every cathedral. Dr. Main, of Glasgow, preached on "Except the Lord build the house," etc. Dr. Martin, of Geneva, made the prayer of consecration and assisted in distributing the elements, and Dr. Anderson Scott, of Cambridge, England, moderator of the English Presbyterian Assembly, made the post-communion address. At the evening service Professor Lang, of Germany, spoke in German; Dr. Cairns, moderator of the Scottish General Assembly—in official uniform, gown, ruffled sleeves and knee pants—spoke in English, and Bishop Ravasz, of Buda-Pest, Hungary, spoke in Magyar, presumably. Some of these Reformed churches have "bishops," but without Episcopal authority, very similar to the bishops in the Moravian Church.

Beginning on Monday there were reports of religious conditions in the various churches and countries represented in the conference. The first was Dr. Forgacs, of Hungary. He began with the statement that Hungary before its dismemberment contained the largest Presbyterian church in Europe, more than three million souls. It is now torn to pieces by the war and its consequent demoralizations. This great national church is now divided among four countries and not allowed to meet any longer as one body. Transylvania, with its great Kolosovar University, has been annexed to Rumania and persecuted unto death. Another section has been given to Czecho-Slovakia, and a fragment to Jugoslavia. He spoke for Hungary proper—at least what is left. He emphasized the following facts: (1) His church has now a new understanding of its spiritual tasks; (2) a growing desire of the congregation for spiritual things; (3) intercourse with other reformed churches of the alliance, uplifting, making it impossible to go back to former ways; (4) the menace of Roman Catholic propaganda; (5) he insisted that their own faults were their greatest hindrances.

Rev. Professor Imre spoke for Transylvania, now transferred to Rumania, which contains 780,000 adherents of the reformed faith, and 796 ministers. He could not speak of their sufferings for prudential reasons, but stated that they accepted their cross and contended not for power but for the souls committed to their trust. Bishop Balogh told of the fragment in Czecho-Slovakia, 210,000 souls, emphasizing their difficulties: (1) Dismemberment, separated from their brethren; (2) money has lost its purchasing power, the salaries of ministers ranging from $4.80 annually to $31.00; (3) no theological school and not allowed to get ministers from other countries; (4) their schools in the hands of the nuns and their girls being proselyted. He closed with a grand expression of faith, saying: "God has always found ways to help in the past and will in some way come to our help in the present."

Dr. Klepp represented Jugo-Slavia in behalf of the 58,000 adherents of the Hungarian Church in that country, saying they were without organization, without institutions and without means, yet trying to hold together—a small scattered family of Presbyterians among millions of Roman Catholics.

Dr. Kalopothakes, of Athens, spoke for Greece, son of our first native missionary. He paid tribute to the Southern Presbyterian Church as having initiated the work, and which organized the church at Athens. The mission became independent in 1886 and entered Asia Minor, organizing a church at "Thyatira" and other places. However, the entire Christian population was exterminated by the Turks, and a million refugees driven into Greece, increasing the population 20 per cent, where they are in great destitution. The Turks publicly hanged two Presbyterian professors. Formerly the church was bitterly persecuted in Greece, missionaries stoned and windows of the church smashed, but this is now changed and the Reformed Church is held in great respect. He emphasized the need of traveling evangelists. "Greek, the language of the New Testament, should again be made the vehicle of propagating the faith in the regions where great Paul preached."

Dr. Soucek, of Prague, spoke for Czecho-Slovakia, the most progressive country in Central Europe, with the greatest door of usefulness open to the Reformed Church in all the world. Seventy thousand left the Roman Catholic Church in one year—in all one or two millions have forsaken Rome. John Huss has come back and his anniversary celebrated by thousands. The Reformed Church has 234,000 adherents, 39,000 pupils in the weekday parochial schools, but only 192 ministers. Tens of thousands of former Catholics are seeking Bible instruction. The opportunity is overwhelming but the expense is tremendous. They have insufficient supply of ministers, no houses of worship to accommodate the crowds, and no money to meet the need and take advantage of the opportunity. "The Presbyterian Alliance is our only help."

The above must suffice as specimens of reports. Similar accounts were given by Dr. Scmadeni, of Poland; Dr. Jacobenas, of Lithuania; Dr. Brushnell, of Russia; Dr. Lang, of Germany; Dr. Keller, of Switzerland; Dr. Van Ness, of Holland; Dr. Costabel, of Italy; Dr. Morel, of France; Dr. Buse, of Belgium, etc. It is unfortunate that I cannot tell the thrilling story as narrated by representatives of the Reformed Church of each country.

Space must be given to the acute problems raised by these accounts. It was proposed to hold a private session and bind the delegates to secrecy lest some of these ministers should "lose their heads" by reporting real conditions and religious persecutions. It was finally agreed to let "refugees" speak as they are beyond the reach of their former governments. Even in that case, perhaps, it would be better to omit names as one can never foretell consequences.

The following are some of the facts narrated, showing intolerable conditions resulting from the war and the adjustments of the peace treaties.

1. In Rumania ministers preach with government officials present or secret spies to report any unfortunate expression which can be seized on as a pretext for persecution in the form of imprisonment, fine or bodily chastisement. The churches of the reformed faith are forbidden to sing certain hymns—Luther's included, "A Mighty Fortress Is Our God." One minister was arrested for using the Lord's Prayer, because it contained the petition, "Thy Kingdom come"—this being held as inconsistent with the government's aims.

2. The Minister of Finance refuses to allow subscriptions from church members for support of their ministers. Any church with less than 300 members is forbidden to call a pastor, and this makes small churches and new missions impossible. The state does not allow any church to exclude disorderly and ungodly members, which makes all discipline impossible.

3. The state holds that the majority in any community is entitled to the property of any denomination, and that the Minister of Affairs has the right to decide such ownership and can assign the property according to his arbitrary will.

4. The schools for girls belonging to the Reformed Church have been seized and used as hospitals for venereal diseases. Lands of the Reformers have been taken by the state, allowing the owners only a small acreage and their own lands—confiscated—rented to the former owners at prohibitive prices, etc., etc.

The days of persecution have not ended, and our Presbyterian brethren are martyrs to the faith, while most of the world is ignorant of the facts, and others contemplate these persecutions with unconcern. These suffering saints are asking that the alliance send a deputation to investigate and report. Petitions are also before the League of Nations praying for relief. Their complaint is not against any of the provisions of the Versailles Treaty, but against the violations of these provisions. They only ask that investigations be made and the rights of minorities be respected as guaranteed. The Zurich Conference adopted the following resolutions:

"This conference of the Alliance of the Reformed Churches holding the Presbyterian System, assembled in Zurich, July 21-27, 1923, and consisting of representatives of 38 branches of the Reformed Church in 23 countries of Europe, of America, of Great Britain and Ireland, and many parts of the British Empire, is seriously distressed to hear of the grievances under which several of the churches within its fellowship, in common with their fellow Christians in some of the lands where they form sections of racial and religious minorities, labor to the detriment of their civil rights and their hindrance in the service of the cause of Christ, and extends to these brethren of their own and other communions its sincere sympathy. The conference records its judgment that nothing less than the carrying out of the clauses in the peace treaties and in the special minority treaties, securing the rights of such minorities under protection of the League of Nations, will make for freedom, justice and contentment, and it therefore appeals to all governments concerned to fulfill these obligations, accepted under their seal and signature, in a spirit of magnanimity. This conference requests the Eastern and Western Sections of the Presbyterian Alliance to give constant consideration to this subject, and to use all means in their power, both by appeal to public opinion and to their own governments and to the League of Nations, to secure the inalienable civil and religious rights of such minorities."

One of the most surprising problems was a protest against the use of American money in the interests of sectarianism, greatly complicating the situation and confusing the minds of the people. The representatives of these Reformed Churches state that theirs is the historic church which has contended with Catholicism and maintained the faith in their respective countries for centuries. They insist that certain denominations are buying property in communities where they are absolutely unknown, and that they are taking advantage of the dire financial distress of certain ministers by employing them for propaganda and proselyting purposes. In some cases they have represented that they are the "true" Reformed Church, etc. Instead of operating in countries where there is no Protestant Church, they are dividing Protestantism against itself and weakening its citadel of faith in the presence of united and aggressive Catholicism. One blushes for our common Christianity!

Still another problem, one of the most practical, which came in for much discussion and serious consideration, was "Common Action for Church Aid." In the effort to relieve suffering Protestantism, there has been no concerted action and no safeguard against waste and duplication. This has caused unequal distribution of funds and bitterness between worthy and needy brethren. This led to the establishment of a Central Bureau for Relief of the Evangelical Churches of Europe, with Dr. Adolf Keller, of Zurich, Switzerland, as secretary, for equalizing distribution of funds. A statement and appeal have been made stating that Protestantism in 14 countries of Europe is fighting for existence, while only a few, such as Holland, Switzerland, etc., are asking no aid.

The Zurich Conference expressed its mind in resolutions which, in substance, are as follows:

1. Funds would be more wisely expended if sent through this responsible Central Agency.
2. Any church preferring to send funds direct is accorded that privilege.
3. Churches which choose to send funds direct are earnestly urged to notify the treasurer of the Eastern Section in Edinburgh, and Dr. Adolf Keller, of Zurich, so that there may be equitable distribution in ministering to the needs of the suffering.

One whole session was given to the discussion of the problem of "Relations to the Catholic Church in New Europe." It was most illuminating, but space can be given only to a few expressions as specimens: "France has become the most religious country in the world. Disestablishment saved the Catholic Church. Its improved spiritual character has greatly helped Protestantism." "The Protestant Reformation rendered the Catholic Church the greatest service, else there would have been no Catholic Church by this time. It is different in different countries and always best when modified by contact with Protestantism. It profits by revolution. It suffers most in countries where there is a revival of nationalism as in Czecho-Slovakia." "Ireland has been the shuttle-cock between the two great political parties of England. It has been an instrument in the hands of Rome; but there has always been an element in Ireland opposed to Rome. The opposition is stronger than ever, and Ireland is inclined to shake itself loose from Rome. However, Ireland is the country where the inevitable never happens and the impossible often does." "Beware of Rome; it is political power," said an eminent speaker; but he was followed by Rev. John Victor, the eloquent Hungarian evangelist, a graduate of Princeton, N. J., who said: "Rome is imitating Protestantism in introducing Bible study and a more spiritual religion, and in so doing she is playing with fire. We must, however, love the Gospel more than we hate Rome."

The discussion of "the Church and Peace" was the most thrillingly exciting, almost sensational, and called forth a brilliant display of eloquence. It is a burning question in Europe; and I regret exceedingly the length of this article will not permit quotations of some of these sensational statements.

The following resolutions were adopted, but exceedingly tame compared with the utterances of the speakers:

"The Churches and Peace—This conference of the Alliance of the Reformed Churches holding the Presbyterian System, assembled at Zurich, July 21 to 27, 1923, and consisting of representatives of 38 branches of the Reformed Church in 23 countries, of Europe, America, Great Britain and Ireland, and many parts of the British Empire, views with great anxiety the present unrest in Europe, and the spirit of hate, suspicion and mistrust, so sadly prevalent among the nations, and deplors the vast sums that continue to be spent on armaments and preparations for war, and the great numbers of men remaining under arms.

"Convinced, that only in the application of the principles of Christianity, and the prevailing of that spirit of brotherhood and conciliation, which the Spirit of God inspires, can the way of abiding peace be found, and recognizing that in loyalty to our Lord and Master, and to our duty in this our day, a special responsibility rests on the Church of Christ to care for friendship and goodwill among the nations.

"This conference calls on the churches of our order, here represented, and on all the members thereof, to seek ever for the settlement of all disputes between nations by methods of conciliation and arbitration, and to maintain, both by personal influence and by the national and international activities of the organized Church, the spirit of Jesus Christ.

"The conference reaffirms its belief that the League of Nations, strengthened and enlarged so as to include all peoples, offers the best security for peace in the coming generations, and for the removal of the wrongs and grievances that provoke war, and pledges itself to do all in its power to awaken enthusiasm, and the support of the peoples, for this great institution.

"The conference is gratified to hear of the activities and increasing influence of the World Alliance for Promoting International Friendship Through the Churches, and recommends the churches connected with the Presbyterian Alliance in all lands, to associate themselves with this organization, so that by the common and united effort of the whole Christian Church the cause of peace and brotherhood may be advanced.

"The conference appeals to all the members of the churches of the reformed faith, to abound in prayer to the God and Father of all men, that He may guide the nations, and their rulers and statesmen, and all leaders in the Press and public life, ever to seek those things that make for peace."

The practical conclusions and recommendations of the conference approved of a deputation to visit the Dutch Church of South Africa to bring it into the Alliance, the appointment of a deputation to visit Eastern Europe to report on the Rights and Treatment of Minorities, and the appointment of a Continental Committee to bring together the Reformed Churches of the Continent for sympathy and mutual support—similar to the Western and Eastern Sections of the Alliance.

The Zurich Conference made history and will undoubtedly unify and strengthen Presbyterianism throughout the whole world, as the most cosmopolitan church of Protestant Christendom.

SOCIAL VISITATION DAY AND ENROLLMENT CAMPAIGN FOR SUNDAY SCHOOLS

Sunday, September 30, 1923

Fellowship, friendliness, a manifest Christian feeling for and interest in one another—this is one of the desperate needs of the world today and represents one of the great undeveloped fields in the life of the Church. The absence of a social, friendly spirit in a Christian communion oftentimes paralyzes the work of the organization and at the same time makes an unenviable, unfavorable impression upon those outside of the Church.

The world in its present distress and distrust seems to be shot through with selfishness, coldness, aloofness, all of which constitutes a clear call to the Church, and the constituency of the Church, to show to the world that the secret of real life and real living is the measure of the life that is given in devoted, unselfish interest in others.

Friendly visitation in the homes of the Church by officers and members, as called for in Department Five of the Presbyterian Progressive Program, will prove of untold value in enlarging the efficiency and usefulness of the Church, and surely it is in keeping with the spirit of our Lord and His teachings.

What Is Social Visitation Day?

It is an annual every-family visitation, approved by the Assembly and recommended to the churches, for the primary purpose of encouraging and developing a more friendly spirit in the churches.

Fellowship with God implies fellowship one with another, and the atmosphere of a church should be charged with the spirit and practice of getting acquainted and keeping acquainted, by visitation and kindly interest among its membership. A Friendly Church multiplies its usefulness and influence, above estimate, in its community and far beyond.

Social Visitation Day, then, is one of the important features in the Church's Program, designed for the purpose of bringing about this happy and wholesome condition in the churches of our Assembly.

When Is Social Visitation Day?

Sunday, September 30th

This is the most logical and appropriate date that could possibly be selected during the Church year for this "Friendly Visitation." There are two principle reasons why this is true:

(1) The usual disorganization existing in many churches, incident to the summer movement of the membership, is just about over at this time and the members of congregation are again at home, waiting to welcome the visitors and facing the church activities of the autumn and winter.

(2) It serves also as a most helpful feature in the preparation for and the promotion of the Annual Sunday School Rally Day, which is scheduled for the following Sunday. Social Visitation Day (September 30th) and Rally Day (October 7th) remarkably supplement each other, and Rally Day should reap a rich harvest if the Social Visitation is properly and successfully conducted.

How It May Be Done (Proposed Plan)

Each church should feel free to follow its own method in carrying out Social Visitation Day. The essential thing is proper preparation, best adapted to individual church, for insuring largest results.

A brief summary of plan used successfully by one of the churches is here given for information to pastors:

The elders and deacons are first committed to the importance of developing a spirit of friendliness in the church and for making an every-family call for interests other than financial.

The names and addresses of all members are kept up to date, the congregation divided into districts, and these names are available for visitors at all times.

The members of congregation are requested from the pulpit to remain at home in afternoon to receive the visitors in the name of the church.

After an appropriate sermon, cards are distributed in congregation, to be signed by those willing to visit. These visitors are then arranged in teams, and families to be visited, assigned.

The visitors are brought together for a dinner and conference. Instructions are given and visitors impressed with the fact that they go as representatives of the church to talk about the church and spiritual things, and, where advisable, to have prayer with the family. Home Visitation Record Cards are supplied for obtaining helpful information about the families.

Results

The results are manifold and far-reaching. Probably no single feature in the church's program will prove of such general value in awakening, stimulating and sustaining interest in the entire work of the church as the observance of the Social Visitation Day. And the best results will follow the date that is designated. Criticism of the church being mercenary is disarmed; aggrieved members are reconciled and estranged members are restored to loyalty and activity; prospective members are located for the Church and Sunday School. In a word, the spirit of the Church becomes that of Christian fellowship and the work quickened and vitalized. Many pastors report splendid results from last year.

A supply of Home Visitation Record Cards will be sent upon request.

THE PRIZE BOOK FOR 1922

By order of the Assembly the Publication Committee endeavors to secure each year, on a competitive basis, a manuscript for a new book which will be a worthwhile addition to the religious literature of the day.

The purpose is to encourage authorship in our Church and to enrich religious literature. The manuscripts are examined by a select committee without the name of the authors being known. This assures an impartial examination and the acceptance of books solely on their merits.

Frankness compels the statement that the experiment has been disappointing and it is apparent that the best authorship is not promoted by this method.

A writer to do his or her best work must have a message that burns to be delivered and a literary style that will command a reading of the message.

In 1921 none of the manuscripts submitted promised to make a valuable addition to current literature and all were returned to the authors.

In 1922 several manuscripts were submitted which gave evidence of painstaking work and after most careful examination by our sub-committees a manuscript submitted by Rev. Richard D. Dodge, of Logan, W. Va., was accepted for publication.

The title of the book will be "Rational Faith," and it will be issued in attractive form about November 1st and sold for $1.25 postpaid.

Manuscripts for examination this year must be in our hands by December 31st. The conditions for the contest remain as for the past two years and will be furnished on request. The contest is open only to members of the Southern Presbyterian Church.

Secretary of Publication Committee.

Out of my bondage, sorrow, and night,
Jesus, I come! Jesus, I come!
Into Thy freedom, gladness, and light,
Jesus, I come to Thee!
Out of my sickness into Thy health,
Out of my want and into Thy wealth,
Out of my sin and into Thyself,

Woman's Auxiliary

Conducted by Mrs. J. M. McIver, Gulf, N. C.

How Can I Tithe?—"I have no personal income," says one. "How can I tithe?"

One good woman pondered much on this subject. As a result she decided to tithe her Time, her Talk, and her Talent. She knew she had a gift of personal persuasion and this she decided to use in securing new members for her Auxiliary and new subscribers for the papers. Part of her "Time" she used in this work and, of course, her "Talk" and her "Talent" both found play here. Now see how God helps one who uses what she has for Him. Among those whom she reached with the story of the need in our own land was a shut-in of abundant means, who not only through her gave generously to aid the work, but opened a door where, by the exercise of her gift of "Talk" money came to her hands which she devoted to the Lord's cause.

"What is that in thy hand?" is a pertinent inquiry which many a good woman who really wants to help in the Lord's work may well ponder and pray over.—Missionary Outlook.

Dr. Evans at Montreal—In all the experience of Montreal in inspiring speakers, seldom have the summer throngs been so greatly edified as by the recent series of studies and addresses given by Dr. William Evans, of Chicago, during the last week of conferences, closing August 26th. To give, as has been requested by the editor, a judicious and accurate account of these addresses is impossible for one who has been providentially hindered from hearing the entire series. Nevertheless some vital aspects of the experience may be passed on to those who have heard no part of it.

Each morning the lessons were taken from the first epistle of John, the preferred method being that of digging down into the text, with the illumination of references and kindred passages. Sparks from one or two of hammer-strokes on the anvil may be interesting.

In the lesson on fellowship with the Father, I John 1:3, 4, and the tests of this fellowship, the edge of thought was as keen in its flash as the sword of the Spirit has a right to be, cleaving to the joints and marrow of one's own spiritual experience. Qualities that test this fellowship were obedience to God's commands, likeness to Him, etc. Just there, was a startling perception on the part of the audience of their own daily inconsistencies. Without in the least dissipating the atmosphere of deep reverence, Dr. Evans touched humorously upon the appearance of many of His followers, striving (?) to be like Him, promenading the streets with quids of tobacco stuck in the cheek; adroitly shuffling cards for hours at a time, and vociferously applauding the immodest displays of anatomy on the stage of some of our theatres.

Under the things excluded from this sacred fellowship, Dr. Evans uttered a challenging epigram to the effect that the worldling possesses no moral initiative; the Christian does. Using the three Greek words for the world, he proved that the great enemy of Christian life is the subtle and powerful spirit of the age in which we live.

During the study of I John 4:1-4, on "proving the spirits whether they of God," in his exuberant loyalty Dr. Evans held up the vital tests of belief in the incarnation of Christ, in His deity and in the power of His death and hurled a sharp arraignment at those who, professing to break to a hungry world the bread of life, yet deny the essential elements of its life-giving power.

The entire series of studies and addresses was shot through with a wealth of illustration from past and present and with quotations from great poets and thinkers, full of beauty and aptness. His wide range of suggestive reading was most notable and well calculated to whet the appetite of his thoughtful listeners.

On the last week-day of the conference, there was a special hour for ministers and a few others; an hour replete with advice that was the logical outgrowth of his previous methods. Close study of the Bible, if possible in the original tongues; the vigorous exercise of independent thought, comparing scripture with scripture; wide reading of history, poetry and the best current literature; the plentiful use of illustrations, growing out of this study and not artificially tacked on to it; these were some of his instructions, elaborated and deeply impressed.

The strength and beauty of the addresses on the World War and the present age in its relation to the Hebrew people in prophecy; on the resurrection from the dead, given Sunday morning; on the certainty of the life beyond the mystic veil of death, spoken Sunday evening, are not to be conveyed by a mere reporter. They were replete with the stimulating thought, rich imagination, piercing vision, that come from deep study and genuine scholarship.

Among his memorable utterances we recall the statement that "Deep thinkers are not usually epigrammatic. Snappy speakers usually are!" Just then no one wished to be merely a snappy speaker! Also, in the great sermon on immortality, "Life is not a flower-garden, but a sand-strewn wrestling ground!" May we who have heard be better equipped for the stern wrestling that must characterize the combat against "the world rulers of this darkness, against the spiritual hosts of wickedness in the heavenly places."

"DOE YE NEXTE THYNGE"

From an Old English Parsonage,
Down by the sea,
There came in the twilight
A message to me
Its quaint Saxon legend
Deeply engraven,
Hath, as it seems to me,
Teaching from heaven.
And through the hours
The quiet words ring
Like a low inspiration;
"Doe ye nexte thyng."

Many a questioning,
Many a fear,
Many a doubt
Hath its quieting here.
Moment by moment,
Let down from heaven,
Time, opportunity,
Guidance, are given.
Fear not tomorrows,
Child of the King;
Trust them with Jesus.
"Doe ye nexte thyng."

Do it immediately,
Do it with prayer,
Do it reliantly,
Casting off care.
Do it with reverence,
Tracing his hand
Who lays it before thee
With earnest command.
Stayed on Omnipotence,
Safe 'neath His wing,
Leave Him the issue:
"Doe ye nexte thyng."

Charlotte—Beginning September 10th and continuing for one week there will be held in the club room of the Second Presbyterian Church an interdenominational mission study class. It will meet at 4 p. m. each day and continue for an hour and will be conducted by Mrs. J. B. Spillman. The subject will be Japan, and on Tuesday the Golden Castle School in Japan will be presented in the form of a pageant.

Purity Church, Chester, S. C.—From the Church Bulletin of September 1st, we take the following schedule of activities for the next few weeks, which goes to show what a busy organization a live Auxiliary is:

"The gold star given for best attendance at both the Circle and Auxiliary meetings for August was won by Circle No. 3, of which Mrs. N. A. Peay is the leader. . . . The Auxiliary has a busy fall ahead. September 10th-17th is "Survey Week," during which time the effort will be made to place the Survey in every home in the congregation. The campaign is to be made through the circles, and the gold star for September goes to that one securing the largest number of subscriptions. . . . The last week in September sees the organization of the Home Mission Study Classes. The study book this year, "The Child and America's Future," together with a unique method of study this year, should interest every member of the Auxiliary. . . . Another work as outlined is a most appealing one. In forty-eight years there has never been a baby cared for at Thornwell Orphanage. Many young children and babies have been turned away, often separating families of children because the lowest age limit was five or six. The women of the Synods of South Carolina, Georgia, and Florida, are to erect a Baby Cottage at Thornwell to be known as the Louise Mayes Memorial Baby Cottage, in memory of our late Synodical President. South Carolina's portion of the $30,000 required is $15,000, and Purity's portion of that amount is $350. Each of our seven Auxiliary Circles is to be responsible for the raising of $50.00, and will put on their campaign during October that all funds might be raised at once and the cottage dedicated at Thornwell's semi-centennial celebration."

ANNUAL MEETING IN KOREA

Kunsan, Korca, June 13, 1923—With Capt. M. L. Swinehart, retiring chairman, in the chair, the thirty-second annual meeting of the Southern Presbyterian Mission in Korea convened today, just outside the heat and strife of this busy port on a quiet hill a mile from the city center, where is located the S. P. Compound. Kunsan is one of the smaller stations of this mission, but it was with no stinting hand that full preparation had been made to welcome the delegates from the other four posts in the Southern part of the peninsula, and all found every convenience awaiting them and every possible provision made. Right royally were the members entertained, and a good spirit was felt from the start as each was greeted with a delicious ice-cold drink after the hot ride in from the railroad, and the well stocked ice houses, store rooms, and food supplies were seen in the background. The Kunsan gardeners furnished excellent fruit and vegetables, and the hill and sea furnished the necessary coolness with a proper amount of breezes, showers, and shade.

The meeting was called to order by the retiring chairman at 8:30 on the night of the 13th, when thanksgiving was offered for the many rich blessings of the past and prayer made for the success of the meeting just to open. Already had many been in prayer for the outcome of this meeting, and all felt that the prayers were to be answered, and that any plans made were to be in the will of the Master.

A number were noted absent for various reasons; particularly were some of the younger members of the mission missed, and some of the wives felt that they could not make the trip. But grass widowers answered up for their families, so that all were well represented. Since last meeting the mission has welcomed several new members to the various stations—a dentist with his family who will fill a great need and increase the efficiency of our number, a doctor for the long-vacant Mokpo Hospital, and Miss Hopper, a school ma'am of experience and youth, and a number back from furlough, and it was good to give them the greetings from the mission as whole at this time. It was also noted with heartfelt thankfulness that those of the mission who had been sick had recovered or were in so much better health, and all felt that their blessings were full to overflowing.

The elections resulted in Rev. J. C. Crane being chosen as chairman, Capt. M. L. Swinehart as secretary and treasurer, and Rev. E. T. Boyer as recording secretary. As the future meetings proved, a better selection could not have been made, and amidst the hearty applause of all present the new officers took their seats.

In behalf of Kwangju Station, Captain Swinehart presented the new chairman with a real gavel, a beautifully carved brass instrument, made in Korea, of appropriate size and weight. Each felt that a long standing need had been met, and throughout the meetings the gavel came into most efficient use in the hands of Mr. Crane.

After the adoption of the program as presented by the arrangements committee and a short preliminary session adjournment took place till next day at 7:15 a. m. for prayer service, and 9:00 a. m. for regular business.

At the regular session of June 14, the first order of the day was the reading of station reports, and did space permit these should be given in detail, for every word was inspiring and most impressive to those present. For the work in Korea is evidently a great work, a work blessed by God in a most wonderful way, and there was no one but was deeply touched as he or she listened to the reading of these well-prepared, carefully written life experiences of the past year's work, and all realized that here was the real life of active service for the Master. Now as never before all felt that the field was ready, the wheat ripe, and the call for laborers and equipment for the work, for means to carry on, was a need that must be met. Such an opportunity must not be lost, and it was with this in mind that a call for funds was made.

As usual the standing committees met two days ahead of the regular meeting, and reports were ready to be made and voted on right after the opening sessions. These reports were well worked out in the committees, so that little discussion was needed on the floor, and decision were made in a wonderful spirit of unity and harmony this one giving in to that one, and this station setting aside itself to see another advance.

Doubtless the meeting would have been one of unusual brevity as well as unity but for the fact that all felt that

YOUNG PEOPLE'S DEPARTMENT

(Conducted under the auspices of Synod's Committee of Sunday Schools and Young People's Work, in the interest of Sunday Schools and Young People's Societies)

W. ARNETT GAMBLE, JR., Editor

ADDRESS ALL COMMUNICATIONS TO THE DEPARTMENT EDITOR DAVIDSON, N. C

EDITOR'S LOOKOUT

We are running this week a suggested plan for a young people's prayer meeting, a plan that has actually been used successfully. Recently we gave a suggested plan for a social. It will be our policy to run from time to time, such plans, for socials, prayer meetings, membership activities, and plans dealing with other phases of the work of our young people's societies. Some of these can also be used by Sunday School classes. We cordially invite our readers to join in helping to make this phase of our department's work a success.

Definite plans are needed by any organization that is to succeed. The Endeavorers of Dixie believe this and have for some time been promoting a Monthly Service Program, with some particular work outlined for each month in the year. Each State Union has a "M. S. P." Superintendent, who presents the monthly theme to the societies and tries to get reports on the success with which each suggestion is carried out. Mr. S. Wilkes Dendy, 1600 Blanding street, Columbia, handles this work for South Carolina, and Miss Maud Little, 902 West avenue, Charlotte, handles for North Carolina.

The theme for September is "Publishing Our Programs, and First Month of Study Classes." Legitimate advertising of the young people's work is to be carried out, by use of church announcements and calendars, the daily press, circulars, and personal work. Study classes in missions and methods of society work are to be started. We hope that our young people will use these plans as far as they apply, and will at least adopt some definite plans for carrying on the fall work. Now is the time for getting down to earnest work in making the fall months really count.

JOHN MARK

Lesson: Acts 12:12, 25-13:13; 15:36-40; Col. 4:10; II Tim. 4:11; Philemon 24; I Pet. 5:13
Printed Text: Acts 12:12, 25-13:5; 15:36-40; II Tim. 4:11

GOLDEN TEXT—"Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might."—Ecc. 9:10.

SCRIPTURE LESSON

Acts 12:12 And when he had considered the thing, he came to the house of Mary the mother of John, whose surname was Mark; where many were gathered together, praying.

25 And Barnabas and Saul returned from Jerusalem, when they had fulfilled their ministry, and took with them John, whose surname was Mark.

Ch. 13:1 Now there were in the church that was at Antioch, certain prophets and teachers; as Barnabas, and Simeon that was called Niger, and Lucius of Cyrene, and Manaen, which had been brought up with Herod the tetrarch, and Saul.

2 As they ministered to the Lord, and fasted, the Holy Ghost said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them.

3 And when they had fasted and prayed, and laid their hands on them, they sent them away.

4 So they, being sent forth by the Holy Ghost, departed unto Seleucia; and from thence they sailed to Cyprus.

5 And when they were at Salamis, they preached the word of God in the synagogues of the Jews: and they had also John to their minister.

Ch. 15:36 And some days after, Paul said unto Barnabas, Let us go again and visit our brethren in every city where we have preached the word of the Lord, and see how they do.

37 And Barnabas determined to take with them John, whose surname was Mark.

38 But Paul thought not good to take him with them, who departed from them from Pamphylia, and went not with them to the work.

39 And the contention was so sharp between them, that they departed asunder one from the other: and so Barnabas took Mark, and sailed unto Cyprus:

40 And Paul chose Silas, and departed, being recommended by the brethren unto the grace of God.

II Tim. 4:11 Only Luke is with me. Take Mark, and bring him with thee; for he is profitable to me for the ministry.

SHORTER CATECHISM

Q. 53. Which is the third commandment?
A. The third commandment is: "Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain; for the Lord will not hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain."

Except for the gospel which he wrote and which bears his name, "John whose surname was Mark" (Acts 12:12) would be almost completely unnoticed by modern readers. Very little is said of him in the New Testament, and he gains attention chiefly because of those with whom he associated.

We are not told the time or place of his birth or death, nor the name of his father. His mother was Mary, a well-to-do woman, whose house was a place of prayer and gathering point for the disciples (Acts. 12:12). Evidently she was one of the earnest, devoted saints of the Apostolic Church. He was not far away at the time of Jesus' arrest, and fled (Mark 14:51, 52). He was kinsman of Barnabas (Col. 4:10, nephew, A. V.; cousin, R. V.), and was highly regarded by him. Mark went with Barnabas and Paul to Antioch, started with them on the first missionary journey, but for some untold reason turned back (Acts 13:13). Planning for the second circuit, Barnabas was "determined" to take Mark, but Paul refused, and a sharp contention arose, and the two separated (Acts 15:36-40). Mark disappears from the record for a space of ten years, and we find him next with Paul in Rome (Col. 4:10; Philemon 24), and Paul speaks of him to Timothy (II Tim. 4:11). He was with Peter in Babylon (I Peter 5:13), and is spoken of as his "son." Ancient and trustworthy tradition makes Mark's Gospel a reproduction of that which Peter told him.

Abundant Early Advantages

Some have more to start with than others. "To whom much is given, much shall be required." Mark stands among the most highly favored. It is plain that his mother was well-to-do, according to the standards of that day. Not every disciple could have a house of his own large enough to hold prayer meetings. Properly regulated and restricted (emphasize that) to be born to material comfort is an advantage. It is not to be overlooked that good circumstances of parents have ruined proportionately more young people than poverty ever did. Greater than good circumstances was a godly mother. Mary was evidently conspicuously religious. Clubs, parties, committees, and politics were omitted in the interest of religion. Blessed is he who has a mother of that sort! A young man starting in life—clean, attractive, not without brains and money, failed to make a "go." "No wonder," said a wise observer, "no boy can succeed who has had a mother like his." She was not gross, coarse or wicked, but socially a climber, financially a spendthrift, personally a silly blunderer, and religiously a zero. John Mark owed much to his mother. He associated with great souls. Another great advantage. He was close to the best in his formative days. A man who was conspicuous for the nobility of his life, testified that he thought the greatest influence for good came to him from the great and good people who visited his boyhood home. They did not say much to him nor he to them, but their influence upon him was decided. Who comes to your home as frequent and familiar guests? The frivolous and the gambling, or the high-minded? Mark was favored in having Barnabas; Peter, doubtless John, and all the best of that infant church, in his mother's home most of the time. And it was a home of prayer. Family altar? Of course. There were regular prayer meetings, too. When Peter was imprisoned, they gathered there to pray. There is not one of these great advantages which any growing boy or girl today may not possess if the parent has a mind. Keble in his "Christian Year" characterizes Mark as "Companion of the Saints." A companion of saints becomes saintly.

Mark Was Wise With His Advantages

Advantages, even the largest and best, never made a man or woman better unless used aright. Indeed, it is safe to remark that advantages misused or neglected are the greater curse. Barnabas evidently loved Mark with intense affection. Peter calls him "son," indicating his favor. Peter testifies to his usefulness. To be so regarded by such men was no ordinary testimony to his personal worth. Mark was an excellent helper, and what is a greater achievement? To be sure, he turned back once for a reason which we do not know. It was not commendable, else Paul would not have made such a fuss about it. We need not minimize Mark's fault in that matter to recognize that he mended his mistake, and on the whole, used the advantages of his life wisely and diligently.

The Men in the Second Rank

Mark was not an apostle, but, like Barnabas, he was close to the apostle. How could the commander get in without his adjutant? "Useful to me," writes Paul. Perhaps men do not give enough praise to those who stand behind the first. One church had a succession of pastors conspicuous in success. Not one failed. One who knew revealed the secret, viz., the remarkably able, prayerful and loyal elders. Taken all in all, year in and year out, the elders of a Presbyterian church will determine its character more certainly than the pastors. The pastors receive the censure or carry off the praise, but much belongs to the men, and the women, too, who are just behind. Mark was one of the large and noble company of helpers to the great.

Mark Wrought on His Own Account

He was one of four to write a truthful and accurate record of the life of Jesus. That he was in close association with Simon Peter is generally conceded, but God picked out Mark, moved him by the Holy Spirit, and caused him to give us a record that we cannot spare. Written largely for the Romans, it is brief, graphic, giving large place to deeds and miracles and little to addresses. It is the gospel of activity, and is a very important part of the fourfold record.—The Presbyterian of Philadelphia.

Sun., Sept. 16—Topic: How Apply Religion to Manners? Prov. 1:8-9; Luke 14:7-11.

What spirit lies behind good manners?
How do manners manifest unselfishness?
What is the difference between manners and mere etiquette?

We are human beings and it is necessary for us to live together. We are dependent on each other for everything, and no one can live alone. But in all our associations and dealings, happiness and good feeling are controlled as much by our manners as by righteousness and truth. A Christian ought to be polite as well as truthful. You can be truthful and very courteous at the same time. We must apply our religion to our manners.

The Home and Good Manners

The first school of good manners is the home. Our parents are our teachers both by precept and example, and their instructions and practices should be carefully given and as carefully followed. A home is the sweetest place in the world when kindness, unselfishness and thoughtfulness of each other govern our daily and most insignificant words and actions. As Solomon says, the laws of our fathers and mothers are like necklaces of gold.

Good Table Manners

Eating is a very important matter, but our manners at our meals make the family board either a pig trough or a human dinner table. Religion enters in and makes the difference. Saying a grace or asking a blessing is the only polite way for a family to begin a meal. Then all begin together and wait for each other, and do not reach and shove and gulp down the food as though you feared you would not get your share. Parents should teach their children the best table manners as a religious duty, and young people should study table etiquette with great care. Jesus must have had beautiful table manners.

Good Manners at the Fireside

We ought to be courteous in all the home duties and associations. Rudeness, selfishness and thoughtlessness ruin the home atmosphere. Give the old folks the best place always at the fireside. Men and boys should rise when ladies enter the room, and wait on them. Don't carry jokes and fun beyond the point of endurance. Working together should be done with consideration for others' feelings.

Good Manners on the Street

We must carry our religion into our street manners. The public thoroughfares don't belong to us, and we must give all their due. Some people use roads, sidewalks, street cars and aisles of stores as if they owned them. A Christian will not be selfish and rude, jostling and crowding ahead regardless of those around them. They will do unto others as they would be done by. Christian girls will not be loud and noisy. Christian boys will give room to ladies and older people, and both will observe traffic rules.

Good Manners at Public Gatherings

Churches, public halls and places of entertainment are also good places to show real Christian courtesy. Some people seem to reserve a whole seat to themselves by taking the first end of a bench or row of seats instead of going to the center, and people have to crowd past them. It is impolite to be needlessly late and disturb attention at a service. It is also very impolite to crane your neck and look at everybody who comes in, or turn to see the cause of every noise behind you. Talking in church is hideous manners, and it must be very grieving to Jesus and the Holy Spirit. All public gatherings are splendid opportunities for Christian courtesy.

Rewards of Good Manners

It always pays to be polite. It wins favor and approval and opens the way to enter good society, and it is far more certain to bring success in life than incivility and discourtesy. Politeness keeps your conscience peaceful and really encourages morality, high thinking and good conduct. It gives one a good influence over others and spreads a cheerful, happy atmosphere over all. Jesus commands us to keep the Golden Rule and the Holy Spirit will only dwell in the kindhearted and unselfish heart.

NEWS FROM THE FRONT

There is a splendid union Junior C. E. Society at Rose Hill, N. C., the majority of the members being boys and girls from the Presbyterian Church. Mrs. F. F. Newkirk is the superintendent of the society and is leading the boys and girls in a fine work.

They have recently had a birthday missionary party, each member bringing one cent for each year of his or her age as a contribution to home mission work. The amount of $3.28 was sent to the State Junior Superintendent for distribution.

The society has a class of 18 who have just completed the first year of graded memory work gotten out by the United Society of Christian Endeavor.

Mrs. R. W. Mitchell, of Charlotte, N. C., reports eight new Junior Endeavor Experts. This Junior Society has also recently graduated ten members into the Intermediate Society.

Fifteen Junior Endeavorers of Whitsett, N. C., have been lately graduated from the society and formed into the church's first Intermediate Society, each Junior having fully qualified according to Junior standards. Miss Isla Willis Thompson has been in charge of this fine set of Junior boys and girls. Full graduation exercises were held here, as well as at Tenth Avenue Church, in Charlotte, with presentation of diplomas.

PRAYER MEETING PLAN

A "Cross" Meeting

The following plan, with variations, should provide an interesting way for carrying out a young people's meeting, particularly one on a missionary theme.

Some wooden strips four to six inches wide can be made into a "boxed-in" cross, on the front side of which may be fastened some pieces of glass. Probably some scrap glass can be secured. Before fastening the glass in, make a hole in the back of the box at about the center of the intersection of the cross pieces, and put an electric light bulb in the box, the cord hanging out at the rear ready to connect with the electric light system. Candles or a small lamp might be set in the bottom of the upright section of the cross if one is careful.

Paste some black cloth on the face of the glass, splitting the cloth down the center and marking it off in sections with chalk.

Two assistant leaders should be provided, each of these assistants to see that one-half the members prepare to take part in the meeting. Each group should sit together during the meeting, and on different sides of the aisle or of a given line. The light is turned on. As one member in either group takes part in the meeting, the black cloth on the corresponding side of the cross is stripped down to the next white line. The members will strive to get their cloth off first in order that the light of the cross may shine through soonest on their side. Some of the lights may be kept off during the participation, and when the entire cross is freed of black cloth, all other lights can be turned off, allowing the illuminated cross to shine forth. A season of prayer and a quiet talk by the pastor will then prove quite impressive.

Keeping in close touch with the affairs of the Church—which can only be done through extensive reading of the Church literature—is pretty conclusive evidence of the reader's personal interest—as well as a pride in being informed.

We might despair if we thought that God came and went, that Christ lived and died and vanished. But no thoughts of fear can ever disturb those who believe that the Incarnation meant a perpetual fact, a gift never recalled, a power that never ceases to work, a promise that is always hastening to its fulfillment.—J. H. Greenhough.

A REQUEST FROM THE STATED CLERK OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

The General Assembly in May directed that the Rural Route and Street Address, as well as the Post Office Address of Ministers be printed in the Alphabetical List in the Minutes.

It is necessary that the Stated Clerk of the Assembly be furnished this information at once. This work must be completed before the Spring Reports are sent in.

Will ministers who receive their mail by Rural Route or at their Street Addresses please send me this information at once. If the Stated Clerks of Presbyteries have this information I will be very grateful if they will send it to me. A prompt response will greatly facilitate the work. If you have changed Post Office and Presbytery recently, please give me the old and new address and Presbytery.
J. D. Leslie, State Clerk.

BARIUM NEWS

The last week of vacation is now just a memory, and we are all set for a successful school year. The teachers are on hand and all but a very few of the larger girls are back and ready for work.

Our recollection of the beginning of school is that it was a rather doleful occasion, but not so here. You can fairly feel the enthusiasm both in the teachers and students and everybody seems just ready to hop to it.

For the last three Sundays, our services have been conducted by laymen, the first Mr. F. L. Jackson we have mentioned before, Dr. Frontis and Mr. Z. V. Turlington, both of Mooresville on the 19th and 26th gave us splendid messages. We wish that both these consecrated men could have heard the expressions of appreciation from the children about their talks.

This has been a week of visitors, picnics from the Statesville First Sunday School, that actually succeeded in making about sixty small boys say "enough" to watermelon and ice cream, and from Olney Church, South Gastonia, that again invited every Kings Mountain Presbyterian, man, woman, and child to eat with them, were the largest groups of visitors. But delegations and single visitors from Greensboro, Salisbury, Wilmington, Winston-Salem, and Charlotte were also on the campus every day.

Our Christian Endeavor under the guiding hand of Miss Alexander is flourishing, their activities for the week culminated Saturday in a hike to Statesville about 3 p. m., where a moving picture show was enjoyed as guests of the Crescent Theatre. Then about seven o'clock another hike to a spring in the woods near Barium where a feast of weenies, bananas, marshmallows, etc., was most thoroughly enjoyed. After a strenuous hour when we could again sing "Yes we have no bananas," the telling of ghost stories, and song singing made the balance of the evening pass all too quickly.

Visits during the week from Mary Nowlan, of Winston, Harry Estridge, of the University, and Bob Hess in the dairy business near Greensboro and all being our folks, were very much enjoyed by all of us. One day while we were in conference with some of our friends from Charlotte, something took place that at first alarmed these visitors very much. We can't blame them considering the number of recent bank failures, and the way this came about.

We had just finished showing our friends the savings bank and were going out when a regular cyclone seemed to meet us, 36 small boys came bursting in and quickly formed in line and began to grab blank checks, and in rather hurried tones, not lacking in authority to demand money. It had all the earmarks of a disastrous run, and alarm for the welfare of our very popular little establishment could very plainly be seen on our visitors' faces. To dispel this we led them outside where a watermelon wagon was awaiting the return of the financiers. In a very short time 36 dimes had gone into watermelons and in a still shorter time the melons had gone into 36 boys. A word about these boys, they, the Synod cottage group are the most consistent customers of our bank. They just always manage to keep some money on deposit against a time of sudden and dire stress, like the above or a circus coming or such like.

Today a candy counter was opened in the office, and a busy day was reported, the profit from this enterprise will be used for the common good, for athletic supplies, etc.

Since July 1st 45 operations for tonsils have been performed, and the total expense to the home has been the transportation to and from the hospital in Statesville. We want our friends to know what splendid friends we have that so willingly do this for us. Both hospitals have done this work but the great majority have been at the Carpenter Davis.

We are happy to report that commencing this week the whole department of clothing will be in charge of Miss Mary Lee, who brings to this work a wealth of experience in more or less similar work in other institutions. She will not only keep track of each individual's needs but will look after all correspondence with clothing people and all other matters in this very important department.

PERSONAL

Rev. K. A. McCaskill has changed his address from Broadway, Va., to Olivia, N. C.

The address of Rev. John McSween, Jr., is changed from Timmonsville to Clemson College, S. C.

NORTH CAROLINA

Charlotte, First Church—Dr. Johnson has returned from his vacation, and occupied his pulpit morning and evening. His people are delighted that he is to remain with them, he having declined the call to St. Louis, Mo.

Charlotte, Second Church—The pulpit of this church was filled Sunday morning and evening by Dr. Alexander Sprunt, of Charleston, S. C., and present Moderator of the General Assembly of our Church.

He was heard with pleasure by large congregations at both services.

Mount Airy—Rev. Joe H. Carter, of Mount Airy, has accepted a call to the pastorate of the local Presbyterian Church, which news is learned with pleasure by his friends here of all religious denominations. Mr. Carter and family resided here last year, at which time he was editor of The Renfro Record. Feeling that his mission in life was the work of a minister, he completed a theological course in Union Seminary, Richmond, Va., last spring, and has since been ordained to the ministry.

Monroe—A week's meeting was held in the Lee Park Church, Monroe, beginning July 16th. The week before the service began prayer meetings were held. Rev. C. E. White, of Marshville, N. C., assisted Rev. B. B. Shankel in the meeting. The Gospel was preached with power and we believe the community was strengthened and made better by the meeting. Four were added to the church by profession of faith. B. B. S.

Mount Airy—This church is very much interested and pleased now over the progress that is being made in the campaign for funds to install the new pipe organ. After getting estimates as to what the organ would cost, from a number of organ builders, the goal was set and the campaign is now on with the result that more than three-fourths of the amount has been pledged, with a number of subscribers yet to be seen. The plan of the congregation is to have the entire amount pledged before the order for the organ is given to the builder.
Z. V. Roberson, Pastor.

Steele Creek—The contract for the new Sunday School building has been let to Blythe and Isenhour, of Charlotte. The excavation is practically completed, and brick are being laid down. The congregation is responding generously to the call of the committee to assist in the hauling, etc. We shall soon see the foundation laid, and then it will be only a short time until we shall have our finished building. Then we shall be able to put our Sunday School on a surer foundation, and give our children better instruction in the Bible.

Dr. Henry W. McLaughlin, pastor of New Providence Church, in the valley of Virginia, the second largest country church in the General Assembly, is expected to be with us and preach on the fifth Sabbath of this month.—Church Bulletin.

Turner Presbyterian Church on the Monroe and Lancaster Road, six miles from Monroe is less than a year old. It was organized last Fall and now a brick building has been completed at the cost of between seven and eight thousand dollars. The pastor, Rev. B. B. Shankel was assisted in a meeting at this place by Rev. H. C. Carmichael, of Unionville, N. C. Prayer meetings were held before hand—then we had a Sunday School picnic on Saturday before having with us Rev. A. W. Crawford, who preached two very interesting and instructive sermons. Mr. Carmichael beginning the series on Sunday afternoon. The services were well attended, both afternoon and night. The sermons were very earnest and forceful and we feel that the community has been greatly blessed. Three were added to the church on profession of faith. B. B. S.

Nazareth—From August 12-21 one of the finest meetings ever held in this historic church was conducted, in which Rev. H. Waddell Pratt, D.D., of Columbia, aided the pastor, Rev. C. O'N. Martindale. Dr. Pratt is a capital preacher and his messages were greatly enjoyed by all who heard him. The attendance was excellent, and a new piano added greatly to the song services. There were ten professions. We have a vigorous Christian Endeavor Society under Mr. Vernon T. Anderson as president. The pastor and family had just returned from a month's vacation at Montreat. He also attended the Synod's Young People's Conference and General Workers' Conference at Clinton for several days. God be praised for all of His many blessings!

The Synod of North Carolina will convene in the Graham Presbyterian Church on Tuesday, October 9, 1923, at 8 o'clock p. m., and will be entertained, jointly, by the Graham and the Burlington churches. All the reports and communications for the Synod should be in the hands of the Stated Clerk before the Synod meets.

Notice to the treasurers of the several Presbyteries of the Synod, is hereby earnestly given, that their assessments for Synod are due October 1st, and should be paid at once, as the treasury is empty and in debt.

D. I. Craig, S. C. and Treas.

Obids—This mountain church has recently enjoyed one of the finest series of evangelistic services it has ever experienced. Rev. Geo. W. Lee, for ten days, preached with great power and interest. There were five professions and one reconsecration with four additions to the church. There was a stirring of the community. The Christians were edified and strengthened. Voices never before audible in public prayer were heard asking God's spirit to come in mighty and converting power.

The future of this church is bright. Members who have not been present for years come out for the communion service. One couple 71 years old and having been married 50 years walked three miles to attend this service.

Mr. D. R. Freeman ably assisted the progress and success of the meeting with his cornet and in directing the congregational singing. From time to time he, in a most beautiful way, sang the gospel.

Too much in appreciation of the services of Mr. Lee cannot be said. He endeared himself to hundreds of friends. He is a regular John the Baptist in warning the people and in telling them of their SIN. Boldness, fearlessness, simplicity and powerfulness of appeal characterize him in the pulpit. His genial manner and happy personality out of the pulpit was a God-send as he went from home to home.

Marion—The churches of this town have enjoyed a feast of good things the past week in the Co-operative Training School for Sunday School and Church Leadership conducted last week. The faculty consisted of our own Prof. C. T. Carr, superintendent of Sunday Schools and Young People's Work, and Mr. O. V. Woosley, Miss Georgia Keene and Miss Virginia Jenkins, of the Methodist Church. Eighty-six enrolled from the Methodist and Presbyterian churches. Sixteen Presbyterians and 31 Methodists and two Baptists received credits looking towards a diploma of graduation when 12 unites have been received.

There was a fine spirit of co-operation between all the churches represented. There was heard on every side the most favorable commendation of the great and lasting work done here by these faithful and efficient Sunday School leaders.

Our church has been greatly blessed. Words can not express the appreciation of their efforts on the part of our people. At the close of the school on Friday night it was unanimously voted to have another co-operative school conducted under the management of Professor Carr, of the Presbyterian Church and Professor Woosley, of the Methodist Church, with their splendid assistants. Sunday School leaders are coming to the definite conclusion that if we are to have well equipped Sunday Schools in which the children of our Church acquire a true knowledge of the Bible, we must have better trained teachers. Our pastors change, they move on, but the teachers remain with the children. The teacher is the key to the situation, the teacher offers the real solution of the problem of Sunday School work. Just as in secular education the teacher in the Sunday School must be trained for his work. The Co-operative School for Church Leadership is a step in the right direction. In securing Professor Carr the Synod of North Carolina has taken a forward step in developing leadership in the laity. J. C. Story, Pastor.

SOUTH CAROLINA

Enoree Presbytery will meet in Fairview Church, at Fountain Inn, S. C., on October 30, 1923, at 7:30 o'clock p. m. E. P. Davis, S. C.

Piedmont Presbytery will meet in Pelzer, S. C., Tuesday, October 2d, at 8 p. m. Robert Adams, Stated Clerk.

APPALACHIA

Blackey, Ky.—The new pastor, Rev. W. C. Frierson, has arrived and assumed responsibility for the pastoral and evangelistic programs in this important field. He came from Leslie, W. Va., where he did a constructive work. He is a verile young man, bristling with energy. A fine sense of humor and a merry twinkle proclaim him a friend of man, and carry their own welcome.

Though in the field but a short time, Mr. Frierson has opened a new work in a nearby community, and is planning Sunday schools and preaching points in others. In these activities he will be assisted by members of the faculty of Stuart Robinson School.

Stuart Robinson School—Mr. Donald W. Miller, of Wooster, Ohio, has come to be principal of this school. Mr. Miller is a young man who has definitely prepared himself for the career of an educator. He is a representative Christian, achieved his three "letters" at college, and has had experience as school executive, and athletic and literary coach. He is carefully planning the courses of study for maximum adaption to the needs of mountain students, and with a view to recognition as a first-class high school by the State Board of Education, a distinction enjoyed by few schools in the mountains of Kentucky.

For seven years Rev. E. V. Tadlock has carried the double responsibility of pastor of the Blackey Church and principal of Stuart Robinson School. The growth of the institution finally made the burden insupportable. The coming of Mr. Miller and Mr. Frierson will release Mr. Tadlock to a general supervision and the stressing of aspects of the work that have of necessity been neglected. Just at this time the field is in need of the fervent prayers of all friends of Home Missions in the mountains.

An illustrated account of the formal opening of Stuart Robinson School in its new plant will appear in the near future.

FLORIDA

Tampa Heights, Tampa—The Ladies' Auxiliary of this church recently tendered a "farewell party" to the student members of the church and congregation, 17 in number, who will shortly leave for various colleges and universities in the South. After a devotional meeting conducted by the pastor along lines of interest to the young people, a musical program followed by dainty refreshments was rendered by the ladies. The church is very proud of this splendid bevy of young students it is sending out to colleges—most of them for the first time—this year. The new auditorium is practically complete except for a few minor finishing touches, which, with the splendid new pipe organ, is a great source of pleasure to the congregation. Church attendance, and in fact all church activities, have been exceptionally good all summer. Rev. J. Logan Irvin is pastor of the church.

GEORGIA

Macon, First Church—Rev. George Stanley Frazer, recently called to this church comes from the North Georgia Conference. He was pastor of the Methodist Church, of Eatonton, Ga., when called to succeed Dr. R. E. Douglas, who went to Kentucky.

Columbus—The last Sabbath in August was one of special interest in the First Church of Columbus. During the Sabbath School hour, Rev. A. G. Harris, the assistant pastor, gave an unusually fine address on the "Building of Good Citizenship," to the Men's Bible Class, who had as their guests the Ladies' Bible Class of the church, and Civitan Club of the city.

At the morning hour for worship Dr. McConnell preached a special sermon to the young people of the church, on "The Stewardship of Life," emphasizing the challenge of the pulpit, and in response to his appeal 27 young men and young women came forward, offering themselves for such form of definite service as the Master may open up to them in the future. In the afternoon at the colored Sunday School, initial steps were taken toward the organization of a colored Presbyterian church.

The First Church will join with the other churches of the city in holding simultaneous evangelistic services, beginning September 13th. Dr. B. R. Lacy, pastor of the Central Church of Atlanta, will do the preaching in the First Church.

Mr. T. B. Hay, of Charleston, S. C., who for the past year has done such faithful and efficient work in one of our mission churches, and as leader of the Young People's work in the First Church, will resume his studies in Columbia Seminary at the beginning of the session September 19th. Mr. Hay has endeared himself to a large circle of friends in the city. He is a young man of splendid gifts and unusual promise, and his friends predict for him a bright future. He expects to become a missionary to Africa, and after completing his studies in the seminary, will also equip himself for Medical work.

At a recent meeting of the elders and deacons, a permanent organization was formed, composed of these officers, to be known as "The Deacon's Court." They will meet every three months, for the purpose of promoting fellowship, and discussing the interests of the church.

KENTUCKY

Maxwell Church, Lexington—Since the coming of Dr. Johnson Archer Gray last spring, the church has taken on a new lease of life. The church is filled at every service, and during the first three months, he received 63 new members into the church, more than half of them on confession of faith, several of them being more than sixty years of age, and one 69 and one 80. Several of these are substantial business men who will strengthen the church in many ways. The various departments of the work are tightening up and a constructive program is being arranged with great objectives. The church is just two squares from the state university where thousands of students spend nine months of the year, and the church is setting out to tackle this hard problem in a way that will mean large things and hard work for the winter. Dr. Arthur J. Smith, evangelist, successor to Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, who is now in Birmingham holding a big tabernacle service with four churches, and where conversions are being recorded by the scores, comes in November for three weeks and great things are being looked for. The men of the church hold a monthly social, and more than a hundred gather regularly. This is a "feeder" for the two men's Bible classes, the younger men being taught by Major Wm. S. Webb, head of the department of Physics at the State University, and the older men being taught by Mr. Charles M. Marshall, a consecrated business man. The present membership of the church is more than 600. One feature of the large Sunday night services when the congregation almost fill the auditorium, is that at the close when the minister gives the invitation, invariably someone comes forward to accept Christ and join the church. With the exception of the two first Sunday's of Dr. Gray's pastorate, new members have been received every Sabbath up to the time he left for his seven weeks' vacation the first of July.

During the month of August, the pulpit was ably filled by Rev. Willis Thompson, of the First Church, Jellico, Tenn. Dr. Thompson is a deeply spiritual man, delightful socially, a close student of God's Word, and a devoted Christian. His sermons were marked by a Gospel spirit and a sincere desire to see men and women born into the kingdom. The three Sundays in July had for the preachers, Rev. W. T. McElroy, of Louisville; Dr. John C. Acheson, of Danville, and Mr. Thos. B. Talbot. Dr. Thompson stayed in Lexington the entire month of August, conducted the mid-week services and did the work of the minister during that time.

MISSOURI

St. Joseph, First—Rev. Bunyan McLeod has accepted the call to the First Presbyterian Church of Lexington, Ky., and will begin his pastorate there the first Sunday in October. On leaving Mrs. McLeod was presented with a silver coffee service and Dr. McLeod with a most substantial check as a remembrance of affection and good-will. In view of the urgent call to Kentucky Dr. McLeod was compelled to cancel an engagement to supply one of the largest Presbyterian Churches of London, England. Dr. and Mrs. McLeod are spending the month of September on the shore of the Bay of Fundy.

WEST VIRGINIA

Alderson—This church has been greatly benefited by 15 days of special services. Rev. J. L. Fowle, one of Synod's evangelists, preached twice a day for most of this period, giving us the straight gospel in no uncertain tones. Mr. Fowle's assistant, Rev. Bruce Cumming, did no little in making the meeting a success. He conducted the song services and the special children's services. There were 32 professions and 240 reconsecrations. Six joined our church last Sunday and we are expecting more later.

A CHALLENGE FROM KERRVILLE

By Rev. C. T. Caldwell

In far away Kerrville, Texas, nestled among the bristling hills, beside the beautiful Guadalupe River, in a land of flocks and herds—a wonderful western scene—there met a group of Presbyterian men and women; among them pastors, elders and deacons, in a conference to consider the causes of the Church, led by Dr. Brooks I. Dickey, Synod's Chairman of Systematic Beneficence; and in attendance was Dr. D. Clay Lilly, who spoke four times on "Life and Stewardship." There was much prayer, much meditation, much praise, much discussion, and there was such a spirit of worship through it all that souls were lifted to a new vision of the Lord and of fervently expressed devotion to Him.

During the last moments of the last day the following resolution was offered, considered and unanimously adopted by a rising vote:

"The conference for the study of the work of the Church, consisting of pastors, church officers and other Christian workers, both men and women, assembled at Kerrville, Texas, August 12, 1923-August 22, 1923, after earnest and prayerful consideration, proclaim it as our profound conviction that our General Assembly and the subordinate Church courts, should call upon our whole Church to give to the work of the Kingdom—for themselves and others—at least as much as a tithe of its income, year after year."

This was done by a small group of Christians—away off in a corner; but it did a very courageous thing to ask the whole Church to give its attention to the same object, namely: the adequate support of the cause of Christ. The whole Church can do what this small band proposes, and if it dares to do so, all our troubles shall have given way to triumph and our problems to praise. After carefully examining the needs of our Church it was seen that the tithe was necessary to meet all of them, and it is not a curious coincidence that God projects His work on that very basis. Coincidences are providences. God is the author of the need. Man figures it out. The two must coincide. It was also urged that it will be easier to get all that God wants us to have, in order to meet the need, than to get a part of it. The Lord will be more gracious to the faith which assumes the whole responsibility than to the half-faith which acknowledges a duty and attempts only a partial performance.

Surely this action cannot be considered presumptuous simply because those taking it were few. It was taken after days and nights of prayer and yearning for Christ's Kingdom to be hastened.

May not a little band anywhere make a plea to the Church everywhere? If this action is not wrong, it is right. If right, the Church should act upon it. It is a simple proclamation of faith and devotion. It is a small voice from the wilderness, speaking out of the heart free from artificial heat. The love of the Lord was burning in their bones. Their action was the natural outcome of the conference. May it prove to be a call to the Church to mount up to higher altitudes of Christian service and to finish the work God has given it to do.

Responsibility for high prices paid by the consumer for anthracite last winter was laid directly to "the speculative jobber or wholesaler," in a report issued by the coal commission. In some instances, it was found by commission investigators, four wholesale purchases intervened between the mine and the retailer, "margins" running from 20 cents to an aggregate of $4.75 a ton.

Governor Pinchot submitted to representatives of the anthracite miners and operators in joint conference, a proposed basis of settlement providing for a 10 per cent increase in pay, recognition of the eight-hour day for all employees, and full recognition of the union by the operators without the check-off but with the right to have a union representative present when the men are paid.

The veterans of foreign wars will foster a movement to erect somewhere in the United States a gigantic tuberculosis hospital, as a memorial to war mothers and to other women in America who made sacrifices for the cause in the world war. It will cost $12,500,000. A resolution placing the organization behind this movement was presented to the annual encampment by J. H. Toulouse, of Albuquerque, New Mexico, the commander of the department of New Mexico which originated the plan. The veterans adopted the resolution with a cheer.

H. L. Whitfield, of Columbus, former president of the Mississippi State College for Women, will be the next governor of Mississippi, the Jackson Daily News announced after it had tabulated the complete vote of the democratic primary from 81 of the 82 counties in the state. Nomination in the democratic primary is equivalent to election.

Marion Butler is said to be a "receptive" candidate for the post of ambassador to Mexico, if the United States should extend recognition to that country. It is believed that as a result of recent negotiations President Coolidge will adopt a new policy as to that country.

The United States and Mexico have agreed to resume full diplomatic relations. Formal announcement of the agreement was made August 21st by the State Department. The restoration of relations carries with it full recognition by the United States of the Government of President Obregon. It results from the negotiations recently concluded in Mexico City by Charles B. Warren and John Barton Payne. The American Embassy at Mexico City and the Mexican embassy in Washington are to be restored at once to official standing, for the first time since the collapse of the Carranza regime in 1920, and all pending claims will be submitted to specially appointed commissioners for settlement.

The hearings before a referee of the east of the Hardaway Contracting Company against the Western Carolina Power Company involving claims for one million, three hundred thousand dollars will be resumed September 10th. The hearings have been held at intervals over a period of about 18 months.

a change in policy needed careful thought and attention, for the educational committee considered that at this time a decision must be made in regard to schools. Since the government has recently lifted the restrictions from the study of the Bible, the school men felt that at least one of the boys' high schools and one of the girls' schools should seek recognition from the government, but in order to do this more equipment and a larger budget are needed, so that it was deemed advisable that the other schools be slightly restricted. After much thought and prayer the mission decided that the educationalists were right, and by an almost unanimous vote the decision was reached to strive for recognition for the boys' school at Chunju, and for the girls' school at Kwangju, the other schools not to have more than two grades each of high school work. A system of examinations and grading is to be enforced so that the graduates from the lower schools can go on and graduate from the recognized schools. Thus graduates from Christian schools will have diplomas that mean as much as those from government schools, and at the same time enjoy the privileges of instruction in the Bible and by Christian teachers.

A conference was held on evangelistic work in which many helpful suggestions were made and valuable information given. Also the prayer services in the early morning gave a right start for the busy days, and the devotional hours, from 10:30-11:30, were well led and full of inspiring thought from God's Word. The leaders were exceptionally fitted to give the messages for the members of the mission, messages to encourage, calm, and inspire. A special service was held in memory of Mrs. W. M. Clark, the dearly beloved wife of Rev. W. M. Clark, lost to the mission while on furlough last year. The value of her services can not be overestimated, and it was with deep feelings of sincere sympathy for Mr. Clark and his family that all engaged in this simple memorial to this beautiful servant of God.

It was with regret that the members of the mission saw the last of such a delightful gathering, though each was anxious to get back to his work. Heat had been avoided both on the floor and outside by the weather, and all were indeed grateful for what the year had meant, and for the progress that had been made. As the delegates departed on their several ways they felt that the best spirit had been manifested that had ever been known, and that plans had been formed in true harmony so that all would do their best with God's help to carry them out.

Men of the church at home, do you realize where Korea stands, and what she needs to help do this great work that God has given to your missionaries here? Do you realize that the work in this country can not go on unless you respond to the call, unless you fully comprehend the need just now and respond with money, men, and prayer? Do not let this time pass without putting forth your most earnest effort for the work in this land, and answer the appeal for help, knowing that in so doing you are not only giving to the great cause of missions, but also meeting a peculiar situation and a rare opportunity that must be seized now, an opportunity that only comes once in a lifetime for service for the Master. May God put it into each of your hearts to answer the call in the way that He wants you to do.

CURING BETTINA

Every little breeze that came into Fairyland brought the same shocking tidings: "Bettina!—why, she's the vainest child in all the world."

So Old Doc Silverwings swung his tiny figure aboard the westwind express and was whirled into Bettina's bedroom window just as the first streak of rose appeared in the sky. Landing on the very center of the foot-board of Bettina's bed, he gravely smoothed his wind-blown whiskers and settled his black rimmed spectacles more securely on his nose. Then he began to study the little face on the pillow above the rose-pink quilt. Eyelashes glinting gold next the lid, shading into deep brown. Cheeks, the color of daybreak carnations, mouth, a richer shade of the same color. Curls, soft, golden brown ringlets lying in profusion over the pillow—one resting lovingly against the hollow of the little neck.

"Lovely, lovely!" breathed the little doctor, forgetting quite what he came for. "Ah," sighed he, remembering, "sleep washes out heaps of sins when you're young, but it gets tired after a while and lies down on the job."

Tapping his shiny black enameled medicine case which he carried strapped to his shoulder, he buttoned his coat of invisibility tightly about him, and settled himself comfortably to wait for Bettina to awaken. He hadn't decided yet exactly the colors of the medicine he would use. He had brought all colors and plenty of brushes, too. Yes; and two dozen envelopes of pills. He was ready—ah, the eyelashes were fluttering, lifting, opening wide. He tumbled off the footboard; flop, he landed on the rose-pink rug. For Bettina with surprising suddenness had shot out of bed and landed straight in front of the mirror. Her eyes laughed straight into the eyes in the mirror. "Morning, Pitty Sin," she cried adoringly; then kissed the pink lips in the glass.

"The little dickens!" exclaimed the doctor, sitting up on the rose-pink rug and clasping his hands about his knees, "I am plumb flabbergasted."

And he kept on being flabbergasted. Throwing aside the blue and white checked gingham which her mother had laid out for her, Miss Bettina tried on every dress in the closet. Twisting and turning in front of the mirror, she finally decided on a filmy yellow organdy—but not before her mother had called half a dozen times and her dad had left for down-town. Sent up after breakfast to change into the blue gingham, the vain little miss slipped out the back way and walked around the block to display her yellow organdy. Even then she didn't go to her own room; she went into her mother's. Far back in the closet she found her mother's party gown and arrayed herself in its pink satin folds. Pinning her curls in a delightful bunch on top of her head, she was so pleased at the effect that she called her white Persian kitty to admire her.

Then Doc Silverwings made up his mind. Ripping off his coat of invisibility, he snapped open his medicine case and, brush in hand, waited for Bettina to look his way. He was perched on the edge of the bureau directly in front of the mirror. Bettina for the moment was making a deep courtesy before the kitten. "Aren't I the bee-you-tifullest thing you ever saw, kittykins?" she was saying. Trailing the gleaming pink satin behind her, she then stepped mincingly toward the bureau.

"Who are you!" she cried in astonishment.

"Me? I'm old Doc Silverwings."
"The one who cured Tommy Totkins?"

"Exactly; and I'm going to cure you."

"But I'm not greedy."

"No; but you're the vainest child in all the world. Hold your face still now." Bettina had to do it. Carefully the little doctor dipped his brush into a pan of green medicine and made a lovely smooth wash over Bettina's face.

"Now," said Old Doc Silverwings in a business-like tone, "you won't enjoy staring into the glass so much. Have time for something else probably."

Poor bewildered Bettina. Under the direction of the fairy doctor, she put away the pink satin party gown carefully in the very back end of the closet, then donned the blue and white gingham.

"Now, my dear, I wish to give some final directions to your mother; so we will go down stairs." Bettina went—the doctor perched on her shoulder.

"Don't be frightened, my dear madam," cried the little doctor when the mother sprang to her feet; "the change in the color of your daughter's face need not be permanent. No, indeed—not if she follows directions. The fairies have decided to cure Bettina of being vain."

"A—a very good idea; she—she was getting beyond me," stammered Bettina's mother. "But you did startle me."

"Sorry, madam, very sorry; but I wished to give you some final instructions about Bettina's cure. Here"—taking some little envelopes from his medicine case—"here are some pills. Use as per directions."

Immediately Bettina buried her emerald green face in her mother's lap and began to cry—oh, very hard indeed. "I'll wash it off. I will wash it off," she screamed running out to the kitchen sink. Scrub, scrub, how she did scrub!

But of course it didn't come off. "Little girl,"—her mother put her arm around Bettina's waist—"when the fairies decide to do a thing they do it. The best thing mortals can do is to follow directions. These pills, now—"

"I shan't swallow one of them!"
"You don't have to. The directions say to cover them with rich black earth in some sunny place until they sprout; then water them and weed them till they grow into plants."

"A garden! I'd get freckles and horrid sunburn." Then she remembered her changed complexion. "I don't care," she cried; "I won't anyhow." And she picked up a book to read.

"I believe I will plant those seeds," said Bettina suddenly; "or I suppose I'll never get my own face back."

Six weeks later, Bettina was in her little back yard which was quite crowded now with flowers—soft, velvety pansies, dainty pink sweet peas, brilliant yellow and orange nasturtiums, scarlet poppies and, in the exact center, a tall strange plant with one big bud on its long stem. Bettina, her enameled green face full of eagerness, was gazing up at the bud. It looked as though it might open any time now.

"Bettina, my dear."
Turning, the little girl saw Old Doc Silverwings perched on the fence. "Oh, doctor, I thought you'd never come. When—"

"Just a minute. Call your mother; I'd like to ask her a few questions."

"Ah," exclaimed the little doctor, as Mrs. Brown joined them. "How much time would you say Bettina spends before the mirror nowadays?"

"Very little, doctor. She wouldn't spend any if I hadn't explained to her that too little is as bad as too much. You should have seen the frowsy head she brought down to breakfast with her at first."

"And the pills; how did they work?"
"You can see for yourself. Bettina is so crazy about her flowers she thinks of little else. Except the baby next door."

"Oh, doctor, he's the prettiest thing. And he isn't one bit afraid of my ugly face," put in Bettina.

"Ugly, my dear! Emerald green is a very beautiful color."

"Oh, doctor, please don't tease. When—"

"Just a moment, my dear. Will you please arrange yourself directly under that big bud. That's right; tilt your chin up just a wee bit more. The bud is going to open."

Chin tilted, Bettina waited. The bud threw back its petals and sent a warm shower of perfume over her upturned face, washing the green away—every vestige of it. Bettina was herself again.

"Congratulations," cried the little doctor; "we'll see how you treat it this time." Then he was gone.

That night before going to bed, Bettina sat long before the mirror in her room. Her mother, peeping anxiously in through the crack in the door, was worried. Old Doc Silverwings, peeping in through the window, was worried. Bettina herself was worried. "But I'm so glad to get it back that I can't keep from looking at it," she told herself.

Next day she ran into the house several times to look at it. "Dear me, dear me!" sighed her mother. But by the end of the week Bettina had become used to her recovered complexion and thought very little about it.

"Oh, yes, it's a cure all right," declared Old Doc Silverwings proudly to the fairy queen. "Just think, her mother actually has to run after her with a sunbonnet; she forgets all about her complexion herself. Think of that for Bettina!"—Myra A. Wonn, in Continent.

Story and Incident

YELLOW DAHLIAS

Elmer Mills, in The Banner

Miss Charity Sheldon crouched down lower among the dahlias, but her view of the front porch was still unobstructed; by peering between the stalks she could see without being seen. She anxiously watched the two ladies ring the bell again, and hardly breathed as they turned and stood waiting.

Miss Charity was reticent; years of living alone had made her so. Since her sister Rebecca's death, ten years ago, she had withdrawn more and more from neighborhood activities. Her wants were simple and her circumstances amply comfortable. She sought isolation from the community, and after a little, Oakdale Valley—wondering what had changed her—grew accustomed to leaving her entirely alone. One man to do the chores and take care of the garden, and an elderly maid of all work, composed her service-staff, while she efficiently managed the household, and raised dahlias—yellow dahlias.

The first seedlings had sprouted in the barnyard one spring 12 years ago. The fall before Miss Rebecca had impatiently thrown out a motley collection of bulbs which her sister had carefully stored in the cellar. That was how the ugly quarrel began; while the younger sister's hobby was flowers, the autocratic Rebecca termed it time thrown away, and that she wouldn't tolerate all that rubbish littering up her nice clean cellar. So the bulbs were thrown into the barnyard.

Miss Charity, all that winter, was filled with dull resentment. The next spring—thanks to a mild winter and a generous covering of warm salt-hay, provided by the sympathetic Patrick, the bulbs sprouted, and sheltered from Miss Rebecca's vigilant eyes, matured into bloom. Among them, by a strange freak of nature, was a new dahlia—a new dahlia—a cross of several of the old varieties—forming an immense flower of unusual color—a rich velvety yellow—the shade of the English primrose.

That winter the precious bulb was housed in Miss Charity's washstand closet until one day her sister discovered it. Words were said then that were never forgiven by either sister—and Miss Charity began to harden. But she saved the bulb.

Next autumn there were two bulbs. And each successive season she gathered more and more, until now it required nearly an acre of ground for their accommodation.

Oakdale Valley—in the way of small villages—was neighborly and personal. Charity Sheldon's dahlias in a year or two became the town topic—and as the years came and went, and the dahlias multiplied, Oakdale Valley every summer over its dinner plates and its tea cups asked why Charity Sheldon clung so tenaciously to her one variety. Dealers, attracted by her annual prize-taking exhibits at the county fairs, wrote letter after letter, each time raising their offer, but she had as often declined. And she did not give away bulbs or flowers.

The two ladies upon the porch did not show any inclination to depart; rather, they seated themselves leisurely in rocking chairs behind the trumpet vines.

Reconciling herself to the fact that they would wait much longer than she had patience to hide, Miss Charity noiselessly rose and made her way to the house. Her pink sunbonnet, bobbing among the tall dahlias, attracted the attention of the two ladies, who came down the path to meet her.

"We were waiting for you, Miss Sheldon, on your cool porch," the lady in lavender approached with a hand out-stretched genially: "I have always wanted to get the view from here. I am Mrs. Chatfield, you know. My summer place is just a bit further up the road. This is my friend, Mrs. Robertson—"

"What wonderful dahlias you have Miss Sheldon," Mrs. Robertson said, taking the reluctant old hand. "Such an extraordinary color. We called this morning—so informal, isn't it—about those dahlias."

Miss Charity shut her lips into a straight line. Another request for flowers. Each summer the ladies of the shore colony stopped to ask for dahlias to use for a wedding, or a party. Mrs. Chatfield read the old lady's thought with a smile. "It's the request of a child. Mrs. Robertson's little daughter Ruth. She was in a motor car accident this spring and has been very ill since; whether she will eventually wholly recover is problematical. She is staying at my house for a fortnight. We thought the fresh salt air from the Sound would be beneficial. Yesterday, driving past here, she noticed your dahlias, and asked for some. One or two blossoms will do. We are so encouraged, because that is the first time her interest has been aroused—and the doctor said it was a hopeful sign—"

Miss Charity shook her head: "A child's whim," she said harshly. "That's all it is. A child is as full of notions as an egg is of meat. They don't know what they want, especially when they're sick. A handful of buttercups would be just as good as my dahlias for her to pull to pieces and litter up the floor—"

"Please—" Mrs. Robertson interrupted with a note of pleading in her tones, not acknowledging the old lady's ungraciousness. "You don't realize how much this means to me. For the first time since that awful accident my darling little daughter takes an interest in life—only a trivial interest, but still an interest. It may lead to something—her complete restoration to health, we hope—and pray. Surely you will give her a few dahlias, won't you, Miss Sheldon?"

"Not one," declared Miss Charity, beginning to walk towards the house. "I never encourage nonsense—in grown-ups or children. I would never think of giving away my dahlias. Its not my duty."

The two ladies watched her slim, straight figure going up the path. Suddenly Mrs. Robertson turned quickly and broke off a brittle stalk on which were three blossoms and some buds.

"My conscience tells me to do this Agnes," she exclaimed, with a nervous little laugh. "If she sees me before I get to the gate, let her arrest me. It will be publicity in a good cause."

But Miss Charity did not look around. Perhaps she did not think of the incident at all—then. But one afternoon of the next week, when she was in the kitchen with Mollie, making jelly, the big Chatfield car, driven by the Chatfield chauffeur, dashed up noisily at the gate, and a moment later the Chatfield house-keeper dashed without ceremony into the kitchen.

"Such a time never was," the old Scottish dame was on the verge of hysterics. "Forgive me for bursting into your house like this. I am Mrs. Chatfield's house-keeper. This morning the family left for a trip in the motor boat, to be gone till tomorrow. And there's no way to reach them. Ruth Robertson, a sick little girl, was left in my charge. About half an hour ago she suddenly took worse and the maids and I don't know what to do. The town doctor is away, so we telephoned for one from the city.

CENTRAL BUREAU of PUBLICITY

FOR

Presbyterian Schools and Colleges

"Likewise the people who contribute to the support of the denominational colleges have a right to be informed thru their newspapers of what is happening at such institutions just as the tax payers have a right to know what is happening at the State institutions. The sooner the executive heads of the State institutions and denominational colleges learn that the campus is not a little principality apart from the balance of the world and that the friends and supporters of such institutions have a right to be kept informed of what is going on thru the public press, the better it will be for such institutions."—(Charlotte Observer, August 28).

meantime, I set out for help—and our house was first. So we stopped." Miss Charity quietly dropped the empty bag she held into a pan of juice, and began to unroll her sleeves and tidy her hair. Then she took off her apron and reached for a sunbonnet.

"Mollie," she said as she opened the screen door for herself, half pushing out the stout stranger, "if I shouldn't be back tonight, don't forget to shut the chicken house door tight. There's been a skunk around here the last two nights."

Not a word was spoken while the big machine sped towards the Chatfield mansion. Sitting erect in one corner, Miss Charity was conscious only of one thing; somewhere in her nature, not much affected by the increasing cynicism of the last ten years, was a traditional sense of duty. Conscience was pounding into Miss Charity's sense of being: "Your duty is to administer unto this child with your whole mind, your whole heart, and with your whole soul."

In her characteristic quick, efficient way she took charge of the sick room. Experience and traditional herb lore had taught her much, and when the young physician from the city arrived, the girl was sleeping peacefully, and Miss Charity sat in a low rocker by the west window.

She listened in silence to his words of commendation and refused his offer to take her home. And he, in his turn, was relieved visibly when she expressed her determination to remain in the sick room until Mrs. Robertson returned.

That night the child was stricken again, and Miss Charity never left the bedside for hours. The next day, when the family returned, although Miss Charity was plainly "tucked out" and anxious to get home, the girl would not have it. In the unreasonable way of the sick, she clung to the old lady and grew feverish when her mother remonstrated.

So Miss Charity stayed. Both doctors advised it. All through the long night, the next day, and for the nights and days of two whole weeks, she sat by the bedside. While she was near the sick girl was patient and considerate of others, and whenever she moved from her chair, Ruth became uneasy and fretful.

Everyone was at Miss Charity's service; the whole household at her feet. The cook sent up choicest dainties, and the housekeeper and the maids were at her beck and call all day—and all night. Mrs. Robertson—whose sense of gratitude was too strong to be influenced by memory of Miss Charity's former ungraciousness, clung to her. She even confessed the theft of the stalk of blossoms; the old hand closed over her's quickly, and they smiled together.

During the period of convalescence, it was Miss Charity whom the patient most desired, and each October afternoon the little drab colored calico attired figure would sit by the girl's couch. They rarely spoke—but the sympathy between them was all sustaining. After Miss Charity went home at night, Ruth began to anticipate her coming the next day. And Miss Charity's imperceptibility began to change—first carrying bouquets of dahlias to the sick room every other day, and then by allowing the Chatfield car to bring her home each evening. It was only a little, but for Miss Charity it meant much. And Oakdale Valley held its breath.

With the coming of November the Chatfields closed their house. When the big car stopped at Miss Charity's gate on its way to the city, Ruth's thin arms entwined the old shoulders in a long embrace; then as the machine finally started, Miss Charity thrust into the child's hand a small parcel.

"It's a dahlia bulb," she raised her voice above the whirr of the engine. "I thought you might like to plant it—next spring in your garden. Good-bye."

She didn't see the tears start to the girl's eyes—or see Mrs. Chatfield's look of surprise, for there was a certain mistiness in her own eyes. She was aware of Patrick's keen glance as he opened the gate for her, and later that day she overheard him discussing it with Mollie in the kitchen. But she said nothing.

The cold weather coming on vigorously hastened the work of digging the bulbs and storing them in the warm little cellar under the kitchen. It took Miss Charity and Patrick two whole days. When they were at last safely embedded in sand and the walls hung with blankets, Miss Charity stood for a minute in the doorway.

"I may be like the rich fool in the parable," she said to herself. "But I do feel a lot of pride in my bulbs. There's enough to plant two acres next year."

The bleak fogs of mid-November were followed by snow and severe cold. Oakdale Valley of recent years had seldom experienced such a winter. At Christmas the thermometer registered 12 degrees below zero all day. Then came the January thaw, followed by rain and then more freezing weather.

Just before Easter it suddenly became mild and spring opened up quickly. Warm winds took out the frost from the ground and the sun dried up the mud. Seasonable flowers began to sprout in the garden and robins and wrens again fought for possession with the loud-voiced, quarrelsome days that had disturbed the peace of the place all winter.

"I think, Patrick, that it is quite safe to put in a row of dahlias along under the high north wall of the garden," Miss Charity said one sunny morning. "The ground there is warm and mellow. And the sun shines there all day long. Placed between the red hollyhocks they'll be effective. We'll go right down and get a dozen bulbs—"

Five minutes later she heard herself saying dully and disconnectedly, "Yes," Patrick, clear it all out. Wash the cellar thoroughly. Yes. It was the cold weather, I suppose. The sudden changes. Never mind. No, no use doing that. They're all gone."

Oakdale Valley heard of the loss as soon as Molly could conveniently find an excuse to run to the village. The neighbors were sympathetic, but they did not know how to approach Miss Charity. She repressed her own emotion, and the village tried to appear unconscious of her lapses into dull apathy in public. A few—over backyard fences—whispered that "if Charity Sheldon hadn't been so close and tight-fisted with her dahlia roots she wouldn't have found herself in such a predicament—other cellars they could mention weren't as cold as hers—" But Miss Charity said nothing. The sun rose and set with its customary regularity and serenity, and life in Oakdale Valley moved on with usual calm.

The day before Easter came Miss Charity was stirring early. She had astonished everyone—herself included—by inviting the young minister and his bride to dinner on Easter Day—and they had accepted. She was as excited as Molly. For the first time since the popular old deacon had died—15 years before—guests were to be entertained.

It was an epoch making event—and worthy of preparation. Busily engaged with pastries and roasts, she did not hear a motor car at the gate, nor foot-steps on the paving stones. But presently at the open kitchen door she heard the hearty tones of Robert, the Chatfield chauffeur:

"Good morning, Miss Shelton. Did I surprise you? Mrs. Chatfield sent me up with this," placing a tall, well wrapped parcel on the rag rug, "with her compliments. And here's a letter—"

"Come right in, Robert," Miss Charity held the door open cordially. "It is very kind of Mrs. Chatfield to remember me. An Easter lily, I presume. Mollie, will you lay out a bit of lunch while I unwrap this? A cup of hot coffee and some sandwiches for Robert—"

She paused; she had torn off the upper portion of wrappings and from under the tissue paper came a gleam of yellow. Then she began with the strings at the bottom and although her fingers were quivering, she untied knots thoroughly and unwrapped steadily until—

"Why, ma'am, it's one of your own dahlias—" Mollie stood staring at the tall plant full of great golden blossoms.

Miss Charity nodded; she silently opened the letter—bits of it blurred her eyes.

preciate the thought, although you have so many dahlias of your own, or will have when the summer rolls around again. One little flower means so much sometimes—"

"One little flower—one little flower—" Miss Charity saw it all night long.

That night Oakdale Valley knew about it. And the next day when the larger part of the village walked through the churchyard on its way to morning services, a bright spot of yellow attracted attention to Rebecca Sheldon's grave. And inside the church, on the little stand in the pulpit was another bouquet of yellow dahlias. And—Oakdale Valley stared hard—in the family pew sat Charity Sheldon.

Cincinnati, Ohio, August 27th.

Fruit and vegetable growers throughout the South will be interested in the formal opening of the new Cincinnati fruit exchange building here today as it will provide better facilities for handling the large volume of perishable products from the South destined for markets of the Middle West which moves through Cincinnati.

The new building was built by the SOUTHERN RAILWAY SYSTEM and has been leased for a long term to THE UNITED FRUIT AUCTION COMPANY composed of the principal fruit and vegetable handlers of Cincinnati.

It is of reinforced concrete construction and has every modern facility. The lower floor will be used as a warehouse and has Southern Railway tracks on one side and a paved team way on the other. The auction room and the offices of the various dealers are located on the second floor. Both telegraph companies have their own office in the building. The location of the exchange building on the VINE STREET TERMINAL of the Southern makes it very convenient both for the prompt handling of cars arriving from the South and for the delivery of produce to Cincinnati dealers.

"I am not going to talk long this evening," said the speaker. "I've been cured of that. The other night I was making a speech when a man entered the hall and took a seat right in the front row. I had not been talking an hour when I noticed he was becoming fidgety. Finally he arose and asked: 'Shay, how long you been lecturin?'" "About four years, my friend," I replied. "Well," he remarked, as he sat down, "I'll stickaround; you must be near through."—Western Christian Advocate.

"This fellow tells me that he has had the same automobile for five years, and has never paid a cent for repairs on it. Do you believe that?" "I do," replied the other sadly. "I'm the man who did his repair work for him."—Christian Register.

Her hat obscured his view at the theater, and in a kindly voice he leaned forward and asked if it would be possible for her to remove it. A stiffening of the head was his only answer.

Then he rolled his overcoat and placed it on his seat, sat on it, and getting his hat from under the seat, placed it on his head.

In a moment there was a cry of "Take it off!" "Take that hat off!"

The lady unfastened her hatpins and removed her hat. So did the man.—Ex.

"At intervals, ma'am," responded the tramp.—Detroit Free Press.

THE THEISTIC EVOLUTIONIST

Some of our brethren are in a strait betwixt two, whether to hold with the scientific evolutionist, and thus "save their faces," as intellectuals, or to reject evolution and take their stand among the non-scientific ministry.

They have finally found what the Latins used to call a "tertium quid," whereby they can be both scientific and orthodox. They have revived an old view of evolution, which they call theistic evolution, thinking that by admitting the divine workmanship before man is pronounced ready for his part in the drama of life, they can recognize God in creation and yet admit the testimony of science.

By this time we ought to be accustomed to new names. We hear of the new age, the new woman, the new thought, and the preacher of the new religion. Under these circumstances courtesy demands that we receive this new comer into the sphere of religious thought, who appears under the name of theistic evolution.

Before however taking it at its face value, we would like to examine its claims.

Some of our own beloved brethren, we understand, style themselves as believers in this theory—which to us appears to be a contradiction in terms.

As far as we are able to understand the evolution theory, man began with the protoplasm countless ages ago and by a process of natural selection, he passed from one grade to another, each time rising in the scale, and eventually passing from the ape to man, who has since grown from the lower grade of man to the man as described in Genesis who God pronounced to be very good.

If we understand the theory of the theistic evolutionist, just when this evolving creation reached the physical man, God stepped in, breathed into this physical body the breath of life, and he became a living soul.

Thus they recognize natural law, and at the same time they think that they give a place for God as the Creator of the spiritual part of man.

This may satisfy some minds, but not ours, which would have to be made over in order to accept such a theory.

The old doctrine taught us that this man, the product of theistic evolution, was the federal head of the race.

God pronounced him good, and then in order to confirm his will in holiness, He put him to a test—and let him stand as the federal head of his race, so that if he stood the test, his posterity would share in the benefit of his victory.

If it had been the other way, so that each of his posterity would have to stand the test alone, then the result would have been ruin for the race, without any hope of success.

The further they went on in sin, the more certain would have been the fall of each generation, because each generation would inherit the tendency to sin of the preceding generations. Under God's plan the first man who was without sin in himself and had no sinful inheritance, came to the test with everything in his favor.

But when we consider this evolutionary man, who had developed from the lowest form of life to the fully developed animal nature, whose appetites had never been controlled, but who had all through this long process of development yielded to that appetite, there was no possible escape from yielding when the proper inducement was presented to that appetite.

Picture if you can this animal monster, devoid of any spiritual nature, then given that spiritual nature and put to the test.

Under the old plan, there was some hope for Adam's posterity; but under this theistic evolution theory, there was no hope whatever.

Instead then of the federal headship of Adam being an example of the justice and mercy of God, it was a cruel act of injustice to make our future depend upon the test of a spiritual nature, joined to an animal nature, developed through countless ages, with no control over the appetites. We prefer to believe that the first man Adam was made a living soul: the last Adam was made a quickening spirit.

When we read that Adam was "the figure of him that was to come," we love to picture that Adam as God's direct creation, coming fresh from His hands, a fit type of Him who, amidst the sins of an immortal age, was able to say, "Which of you convinceth me of sin?" We could never believe that the animal man of evolution, suddenly joined to a spiritual nature is a fit type of Him who was "holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners, and made higher than the heavens."

Let us have the matter clearly before us. Under the Scripture theory of man's creation and fall, our federal head whose success or failure was to determine the weal or woe of our race, for all time, was a perfect man, framed by the hand of God, both physically and spiritually, made in His image, with no bias to either good or evil.

On the other hand, according to this new theory, the blind forces of nature develop the animal man from the lowest order of life to the perfections of physical manhood. Then when he had reached the height of physical nature, God steps in, gives him a spiritual nature, and then selects this new combination to stand as the head of our race.

As the head of our race, we are responsible for him. If he wins in the test, we are to share the fruits of his victory, but if he fails, we also pay the penalty of failure. The test is an appeal to appetite, and when we remember that his progress from the lowest order to the height of the animal kingdom has been made by the yielding to blind appetite, then we realize how certain failure on his part was.

According to the Scripture theory, God made man in His own image, with a will in equilibrium, biased neither to good or evil, which gave mankind more than an equal chance to win.

One theory is that of science falsely so-called, while the other is that taught by God in His Word. When we balance one over against another, we say with Paul, "Let God be true, but every man a liar."

WOODROW WILSON COLLEGE

Rev. Edgar Tufts whose death saddened this Synod, left a monument, not of brass, but of human lives elevated and a community transformed.

His son has taken up his work, and gives every indication that the mantle of his father has fallen upon him.

One of the cherished dreams of the elder Tufts was the establishment of a Junior Christian College that would be the capstone of his educational work.

With the consent of ex-President Wilson he named it Woodrow Wilson College, and his son is now seeking funds to complete what his father began. Mr. Tufts makes the following appeal;

"The First of the three buildings that are planned for the foundation of Woodrow Wilson College is now completed and being used temporarily by the Graded School of Lees-McRae Institute. This building would be a credit to any campus in the United States. It is built of native stone and covered with slate. We have estimated the cost of building into the walls of this building, one ton of stone, to be Five Dollars.

The next building will be a stone dormitory of fireproof construction throughout, and the cost of a ton of stone built into its walls will probably be the same. Are you willing to pay for One or More Tons? If so, send Five Dollars to Woodrow Wilson College, Banner Elk, N. C., for each ton you are willing to pay for."

We do not know a more worthy investment, or a better way in which to honor the memory of this dear brother who exemplified in his life the practical side of religion.

He carried this life into the coves and cabins that had been shut off from the world, and thus transformed entire communities. This Junior College was the dream of his life, but just as it began to take shape, he entered into his well-earned rest. Let his friends see that this dream is realized.

GOOD BAPTIST DOCTRINE

We read the following from a Baptist book. The author is speaking about the Kingdom of Christ, and he says: "Its functions are spiritual only. They greatly err who seek to make it the means of conveying directly all kinds of secular benefits to the world. This is to weaken it in its distinctive work and mission, which is to call men to repentance and faith and to sanctify them in character and conduct. Yet it leavens all society in every sphere. The modern doctrine of separation of Church and State is the belated return of the world to Christ's ideal, after fifteen centuries of forgetfulness." This is said just as well as we could have said it; and it expresses as clearly as we have tried to express from time to time the historic position of the Southern Presbyterian Church.

It rejoices us to find one of the most distinguished, and one of the most highly honored ministers of the great Baptist Church standing solidly with us in vindicating a position of the greatest practical importance. While all the Evangelical Protestant Churches of this country are avowedly committed to this doctrine, with few exceptions, they act in utter disregard of it. The one conclusive proof of this is furnished by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. This council boasts of representing some thirty denominations, and some twenty millions of communicants. Its activities are exercised through its officers and various commissions. One has but to read its official bulletins to learn that its energies are largely exerted in the sphere of civil affairs. It is trying to aid the Federal Government, and to assist in adjusting the relations of capital and labor. It is using the Church as a means of "conveying directly all kinds of secular benefits to the world." The Southern Baptist Church has refused to become a party to this line of ecclesiastical procedure by refusing to enter the Federal Council. It can, therefore, preach consistently the vastly important doctrine of the exclusively spiritual mission of the Church and the complete separation of Church and State. Would that our own Church were as free from all "entangling alliances." We have rendered our testimony impotent.

Though we thus gratefully recognize the noble stand of the Baptist Church in the large, yet we find that some of the local churches are swept into the popular current. In the little city where we happen to be visiting at this time, the Northern Presbyterian Church, the Methodist Churches, North and South, and the Baptist Church are banded together as a kind of Law and Order Society to assist the Federal revenue officers to apprehend and convict bootleggers. Only last Sunday evening at a union service of all these churches, one of the pastors held up a letter received from one of these revenue officers who had been wounded in a raid to capture a still. The letter was addressed to all the churches, and was an expression of thanks for their sympathy and aid. The pastor did not read the letter as it was quite lengthy, but merely indicated its contents, and then exhorted the congregation to stand faithfully behind the officers and give them all the assistance in their power. Now we cherish no profound respect for bootleggers, but we do cherish a profound conviction that the Friend of Publicans and Sinners never commissioned His Church to join with the civil authorities in waging a campaign of violence against them. We cannot conceive of Jesus as volunteering His services to help a revenue officer capture and convict a moonshiner. Jesus came to seek and to save moonshiners as well as revenue officers, and both stand in equal need of His saving grace. It is the mission of His Church to carry on His work; and it is disloyal to Him, and recreant to its highest duty when it joins hands with any class of sinners to regulate the conduct of another class of sinners. It should keep itself free from all political affairs and from all secular pursuits, that it may serve with greatest efficiency all classes and conditions of men. In this way it will best serve its Divine Head, and accomplish most good in the world.

WHAT DR. WM. EVANS THINKS OF MONTREAT

Dr. William Evans is a man known on both sides of the water, and wherever he goes, he impresses all who hear him with his wonderful knowledge of the Bible and his deep insight into its truths. As a popular lecturer on the Bible he is always in great demand at the summer conferences, which gives him an opportunity to know them all.

Each season at Montreat, there is a "Montreat Night," when Montreat is considered from various angles.

This year among those who spoke was Dr. Evans, and from Rev. A. J. Crane, we obtained the following summary of his remarks:

There are three things that commend Montreat to me:

1. The high ideals of the place. For example, a lady who came here, at least, luke-warm in Christian service, told me that under the aroused interest in Christian work she had led to Christ a young girl at the hotel, after she had been shown the joy of Christian service in the Missionary Conference, and that hereafter she intended to be a "soul winner."
2. The delightful spirit of fellowship and genuine Southern hospitality found here as nowhere else he had ever been. He came here a stranger and was now leaving, feeling that all were his friends.
3. The splendid loyalty to the Scriptures, as the inspired Word of God, and the genuine belief in

THE CALL

By Henry Fries Primrose

Luke 5:1-10

The fishermen on the Lake of Gennesaret,
Overcome by failure, were washing their nets;
Another night gone!—Another day lost!—
While on the lake their empty ship tossed,
When lo; came the Master and said to the men,
"Go out into the deep and cast in again."
"We have toiled and labored all night, in vain,
If we cast out nets, Master, what hope we to gain?"
But, they rode to the deep and cast into the Lake,
And the draught they caught their nets did break;
E're the amazed fishermen had time to think
Their overladen boat began to sink,
Cried Simon, the captain, "Jesus, depart from me
I despaired, I have sinned, I doubted Thee."
But Jesus blessed Simon saying: "Follow me then,
I'll make you a fisherman, yea, a fisherman of men."

Durham, N. C.

all the cardinal doctrines of the true Christian Church.

If these doctrines are to be saved and conserved to the world, it must be done by the Southern Presbyterian Church, because the Northern Church has already discarded them.

Devotional

"AT EVENING TIME"

William C. Allen, in Advance

Days of my age,
Ye will shortly be past;
Pains of my age,
Yet awhile ye can last;
Joys of my age,
In true wisdom delight;
Eyes of my age,
Be religion your light;
Thoughts of my age,
Dread ye not the cold sod;
Hopes of my age,
Be ye fixed on your God.

—St. George Tucker.

I came across the following a few years ago: "When John Quincy Adams was eighty years of age, he met in the streets of Boston an old friend, who shook his trembling hand and said: 'Good morning, and how is John Quincy Adams today?'"

"Thank you," was the ex-president's answer. "John Quincy Adams himself is well, quite well, I thank you. But the house in which he lives at present is becoming dilapidated. It is tottering upon its foundation. Time and seasons have nearly destroyed it. Its roof is pretty well worn out. Its walls are much shattered, and it trembles with every wind. The old tenement is becoming almost uninhabitable, and I think John Quincy Adams will have to move out of it soon. But he himself is quite well, quite well!"

It is good to see old people with an unconquerable spirit. When their earthly course is almost run how often they fearlessly look into the future. It is well when they have such vital faith in God that they think of the worn body, shaken by every wind, as only becoming "uninhabitable," that soon they must "move out of it" as expressed by the venerable ex-president of the United States.

Generally speaking, there are two kinds of old age. One represents an attitude of mind that has become mistrustful or cynical after participating in the great adventure of life. This sort has not laid hold on that restful confidence in "the eternal goodness" that Whittier sang of. It relinquishes its uncertain hold on this life with doubtfulness or dismay. God pity such—but let these remember that he ever loves them! The other kind of old age reviews its career as a wonderful school in which sweet and bitter lessons have been learned but during which preparation has been made for the mellow years and for the triumphant life beyond. These experiences have developed a firm reliance on the gracious intent of the Great Caretaker of men. The valley of the shadow of death may, in some of the waiting hours, look dark but beyond is the victory and the glory, the beauty and the joy that awaits the faithful child of God!

And now the searching question comes home to each one of us: Are we regulating our lives so that our swiftly passing days shall become fragrant and beautiful if ripe years shall overtake us? Are not youth and middle age the periods in which to form the habit of voluntary obedience to God and to acquire the happiness of unmixed trust in Him? Shall not his fortitude and grace finally sustain us when physical and mental powers shall diminish and our earthly ties are soon to be sundered? I ask my readers to think of the abundant possibilities associated with age and of how it can become a flower-strewn pathway to the gates of heaven! Zachariah, the far-seeing prophet, wrote:

"At evening time there shall be light!"

The highest security against temptation lies in the steady development of an affirmative life. The final aim in life is to be something rather than to avoid or to escape something. . . . The best form of defense lies in spiritual attack. If we walk in the grip of some splendid, far-reaching purpose, we shall put down temptation under our feet. We are in the conqueror's path if we walk in the Spirit; we shall then walk secure from attack.—Charles R. Brown.

"AND THE GREATEST OF THESE IS CHARITY"

A Letter from Dr. E. R. Kellersberger

Elizabethville, Belgian Congo, Africa, Apr. 8, 1923.

Many months have elapsed since I have taken up pen to tell about my work. My last letter came to you when we were forced to lay down the work that we had but taken up—with the future very uncertain and dark. But surely it was true, as Dr. J. Stuart Holden once said, that the future holds as many hidden joys and blessings as it does evil things. Looking back on nearly two years of unusual experiences, in retrospect, there is great thankfulness for definite evidences of God's hand upon us. Testings are only preparations for higher service, and as I sit here in a little room of the American Methodist Mission in Elizabethville on this lovely Sunday morning—listening to the songs of the natives in the close-by church, my mind goes back over the vast stretches of African plateaus just crossed during six days of constant journeying, goes further back to the calm, glistening seas of the quiet South Atlantic, further still to the unruly North Atlantic and ice-covered Hudson, and finally to a simple back street home in a North Carolina mill town, where far away in miles, but near in spirit and oneness are those loved ones who had to be left behind.

After spending some nine months in England, and on the continent studying tropical diseases during the illness of Mrs. Kellersberger, we went to the U. S. A. in September, 1922. It was not considered wise for Mrs. Kellersberger to return to the tropics at this time. After a mature, earnest, and prayerful consideration we came to the conclusion that if ever there was a need for a doctor in Africa it was now. The hospital at Bibanga, so kindly given by one of God's servants in America, was being well advanced by the skill and perseverance of Mr. Longenecker; and, there was no one to direct this hospital. Today I am near the last and longest leg, in time, of my journey, waiting for my faithful caravan to come to Bukama—345 miles from Bibanga—on foot, to take me back to the work, needy beyond description. I, the only doctor for days' march in any direction, both for whites and natives.

Having received special permission to come by Cape Town, and to spend some time in the Government Hospitals here at Elizabethville, in wealthy Katanga, I am here now accomplishing this one purpose of my journey.

Perhaps it has never entered into your local mind that here in South Africa a great race struggle is going on, that there are three colored to one white person, that there is a great mixed population, and that the franchise is already extended to all colors in Cape Colony? Some day the white man will have to give account of his dealings with the black man. He is taking from the black his own laws, his own tribal customs, and is by degrees making a "black white man" out of him. What is he giving him in return? The next few decades will see great changes and movements in this continent.

Please don't think any longer of "Darkest Africa"; it no longer exists. Twenty-five miles up the Cape to Cairo Railway will disillusion you. Kimberly with its ugly mountains of dirt, and uglier native compounds, reminds one of nothing less than a busy western mining town, with this difference that in Kimberly still every third house is a bar, one of the first I saw having this label, "Colored Bar." Skirting the western border of Natal, and Transvaal, where lies the great city of Johannesburg, we reached Mafeking, also famous historically. From here to Congo border, one passes through British protectorates, and is impressed with seeming evidences of good government and nice towns. Buluwayo, the metropolis of Southern Rhodesia (some four to five thousand white inhabitants?) means in native language, "the place of blood." It was here only 27 years ago that in the famous Matebele revolt some three hundred white settlers were exterminated. Now it is an attractive city with many farms and ranches about it. After passing Wankie, the great Rhodesian coal mine, we came, and on Easter Sunday, too, to that one of the seven wonders of the world, "the smoke that thunders" of the natives, or David Livingstone's Victoria Falls. Some miles before we got there, the great clouds of spray could be seen rising up high into the sky. It is rather a flat, wooded country, and all at once you see a great cut or a fault in the land—the canyon of the Zambesi. As the train came nearer, it began to rain—a mile away from the falls, and when we crossed over the great suspension bridge just below the falls, the spectacle was sublime beyond words. The falls are nearly a mile wide; we saw them at flood tide; they are much higher than the Niagara. The hotel there is fine, and was full of Easter visitors. If you want to see a lunar rainbow, and succumb to the witchery of an African moonlight night, come here to this spot.

What an interesting place Elizabethville is. Twelve years ago it was unknown. Now it is known over the world—political and industrial center of the rich Katanga. Since the discovery of these great ore bodies things have changed tremendously. I visited the seven great furnaces of the Lubombashi smelter at night. Almost everything was run by American machinery. It was a wonderful sight—in Central Africa! Then my host took me to the club house of the Union Miniere, and after seeing an impossible, sensational, garden variety "Metro" production from New York, we ended up with our friend Charley Chaplin. With a start I woke up to the fact that I was not in New York, but in the heart of Africa, and where 12 years before there was a wilderness. It is a fact of immense significance. The white man's search for money and wealth is irresistibly drawing the native into the maelstrom of industrial life. He is thrust all at once from the bush, where he has lived under a certain law and order, into a great crowded compound. He is free to live almost as he pleases, just so he works. His already weak moral fabric goes to pieces. It is time for the Christian forces to bestir themselves before it is too late. It is a joy to see the nucleus of Christians here in the Methodist work, but it is folly pure and simple to put all the burden of carrying the redeeming and purifying love of Christ, on the shoulders of one or two men. There should be poured into this center money for hospitals, industrial schools, day schools, churches, and new workers, for the white as well as the black population.

Three weeks in the Government clinics and hospitals have opened my eyes to the great tasks that lie ahead of the medical profession in this needy land. We need doctors who come here not to make a good living, but to give a life.

Bibanga Station, June 10, 1923.

On April 25th I left Elizabethville for Bukama, that hot and rocky little port on the upper Congo (Lulaba). It is very important, as it is the junction point between rail and water, and here the new railway to the Kassai, in fact to Luebo and Ilbo is being started now. Here I spent five days with the well known Professor Kleine, head of the German sleeping Sickness Commission, who has just finished very important experiments on protecting cattle from death by trypanosomes by the prophylactic injection of Bayer 205. It was a thing of great interest to me, as Mrs. Kellersberger was cured by this very same drug.

On May 1st my faithful 25 men arrived from Bibanga, marched 350 miles through strange country to get me. It was a joyous meeting with old friends. On May 2nd we crossed the Lualaba at daybreak, and for three weeks pushed forward day by day. What an interesting trip it was. How you would have enjoyed it. I rode some 250 miles on a wheel, and walked the rest of the way. The first hundred miles it was very hard to get any food, and the men lived almost wholly on sweet potatoes. During these 10 days we all slept outside, as every village was infested with the African tickfever tick—Ornithodoros moubata. In this section I was also able to make a collection of the tsetse fly, Glossina morsitans, the carrier of both human and animal sleeping sickness. On May 22nd, long after the station had been visible from the beautiful hills on both sides of the Lubilashi River, we entered Bibanga, being met by natives one and two miles outside of the station. It was a real welcome. As I saw the dear old dirt house that had so many memories for me and my family, it was hard, and is still hard all the days, but as I see in my mind now the man who came this week dragging a tumor along, the tumor weighing 100 pounds, I am willing to forgo for a time those things that are dearest to any man on this earth—loved ones and a home. Again it is worth while when in the last 10 days probably two or four lives were saved by instrumental delivery. Again it is worth while when I see the case of sleeping sickness looking at me pitifully with his dull, stupid glance. It is worth while when I see the mother carrying her little girl to me for some miles, with a great sore on the whole knee that threatens to ruin the child's capacity to walk forever. It is worth while when an anxious mother comes in with her little baby in her arms, a bundle of fever and rapid respiration—a blood examination showing a very heavy infection of tropical malaria ring forms, and a rapid injection of quinine finishing it all. Finally it is worth while when the little child comes in all caten up with several kinds of worms. Also, don't forget the leper, and other loathsome diseases! And, remember, in this case, I am the only possible help of these unfortunates. You of course have your choice of a thousand doctors, and you won't especially care about these out here. They are too far away to hurt you any, but I am praying God that He will burn some pictures in some of your hearts so that you will have to be interested, and some of you young doctors will have to come out here into this great work. The man who says this work is not worth while is selfish and ignorant, and in that enlightened country of ours is some day going to have to give account of himself, as sure as you and I are living.

Put May 24, 1923, down as a red letter day; on that day we moved out of our filthy mud house into the first unit of the new hospital plant, and are rejoicing that the foundation of the second building is going up—this to be the ward building. I hope some day soon to let you see pictures of the plant and also of some of the patients who come there to be healed. What a joy to work in a place where you really have some room, and a ceiling and a brick floor, and what a luxury to have a tile floor for a neat little operating room.

When you have a little spare time think of this work out here, and utter a prayer for it, and avail yourself of the privilege of giving financial support to such a great institution as this hospital. If you don't agree with me in some of the views I have expressed, write me about it; anyway, let me hear from you some time, and if I can manage it, I will try to answer you personally or by another round letter.

If you aren't a subscriber to the "Missionary Survey," become one now. It is ridiculously cheap, and you will profit very much by it. If you want any more information about our work out here, write to the Foreign Missions Committee at Nashville, they will be very happy to let you know anything you would like to know.

Any letter with five cents postage, or postcard with two cents postage, addressed to Dr. E. R. Kellersberger, care A. P. C. Mission, Bibanga, Kabinda, Lomami District, Congo Belge, Africa, via Cape Town, will reach him in due course of mail.

COLLEGE DAY

Dear Secretaries of Christian Education and Young People's Work:

This is a letter to you from your Church at large about something very dear to your home church. For is there anything dearer to you than those boys and girls whom you saw stand this last June to receive their high school diplomas? Some of you there that night remembered the day their parents brought them to the old church to be baptized, and now they are going away to college to get their last training for the great adventure of life.

If you, as their leaders and friends, look with open vision into the world they must live in, into the new associations they must form, into the years ahead in which they must do their work, you know these are fateful days and that the future, not only of America, but of the world, depends on the choices that college men and women are making in these great days of destiny. So we are asking you to see to it that their Church stands behind them, eager to serve them when and wherever she can, and as a visible expression of this spirit, we ask you to arrange a farewell service and social for them.

The time—The first or second Wednesday night in September would be a good time. Your pastor will gladly make the weekly prayer meeting service give way for it and help you to plan it.

Program—Ask the Christian Endeavorers or other Young People's Society or Circle to have general charge of both service and social, and the Woman's Auxiliary to take charge of the refreshments.

These committees should be appointed:

Invitation Committee—See that every boy and girl going to or returning to College, Seminary, Training School, Business or Technical School or Hospital receives a special written invitation for themselves, their families and friends, and that their public, high and Sunday School teachers are invited.

Decorating—This committee should decorate the Sunday School room as attractively as possible with flowers, vines and potted plants, but especially with the colors and the pennants of the different colleges represented.

Music—Select the hymns that appeal to college students, hymns of conflict, heroism and aspiration. Get the Sunday School orchestra to furnish special music, with a solo by some good singer.

For the Service—Where it can be done, have the college group sit together and have the Christian Endeavor boys usher. There should be several five-minute addresses by the superintendent of the high school, the superintendent of the Sunday School, and some outstanding layman of the Church, closing with a short address from the pastor. All these talks should have as their theme the love and pride of the Church in her boys and girls and her high hopes for their lives. If desired, the college group may select one from their number to respond for them.

For the Social—Be sure to have a good pianist, the orchestra, and a book of college songs. There should be songs and stunts and stories and a debate as to the relative merits of the different colleges. Try to give the students some little token for their memory books. A kodak picture of the church pasted on a card with a few words "for remembrance" is suggested.

"Goodnight and Goodbye"—Have a few good singers at the piano, and as the end of the evening comes, let the pianist play some strains of "Home, Sweet Home," then changing into the music of "God Be With You 'Till We Meet Again." Let the singers sing the first two verses and the chorus.

It is not much your Church, through its Department of Christian Education, asks of you, is it? Only a simple farewell service and a social—and the Church behind her boys and girls "for the duration of the war."

No, we are not asking much when you remember just how much these boys and girls are worth, not only to you and to us, but to that Best Lover and Ideal of Youth, Jesus Christ, who today, perhaps more than ever before, is calling them to His side.

Henry H. Sweets,

Secretary for Christian Education of the Presbyterian Church in the United States.

A BRIEF STATEMENT OF OUR FAITH

GOD—God is a Spirit, infinite, eternal and unchangeable in all His glorious attributes. He is merciful and gracious, and not willing that any should perish but that all should come to repentance and divine fellowship. He exists in three persons, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, who are one God, same in substance, equal in power and glory.

THE BIBLE—The Scriptures of the Old and New Testament were written by holy men of God as they were moved by the Holy Ghost and are the Word of God. It is the only infallible rule of faith and life.

GOD'S PURPOSE—The eternal purpose of God includes all events; it is holy and wise, and does not deprive man of freedom, nor make God the author of sin.

CREATION—God created the world and all things therein; He made man after His own image with an immortal soul, endowed with knowledge, righteousness and holiness.

SIN AND THE FALL—Sin is the violation of God's law either by omission or commission. Our first parents, being tempted by Satan, disobeyed God's command, and so by their own choice fell from their original state of innocence and communion with God, and all men being their descendants are born with sinful natures.

SALVATION—God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son to be the Saviour of sinners. His salvation is sufficient for all, but is efficient only for those who accept Christ as their Redeemer.

ELECTION—God the Father chose unto Himself in Christ a people that should be holy and without blame before Him. Those who come to years of discretion receive salvation only through faith in Christ; those who die in infancy, and others who are incapable of exercising choice, are saved by the electing love of Christ; His grace has peopled heaven with multitudes and has never sent one soul to hell.

CHRIST THE REDEEMER—The Lord Jesus Christ being the eternal Son of God became man, being conceived by the Holy Ghost and born of the Virgin Mary, yet without sin. By Him alone we can come to the Father because His perfect obedience and sacrificial death made a perfect atonement for all sinners who receive Him. He rose from the dead and ascended into heaven where He makes continued intercession for us. He will come again to receive and reward His people, and to judge the world.

THE HOLY SPIRIT—The Holy Spirit is the third person of the Godhead who persuades and enables men to obey the call of the Gospel, and applies the redemption purchased by Christ. He continually dwells in every believer to restrain, comfort and bless him.

JUSTIFICATION BY FAITH—Every one who humbly relies upon Christ for salvation, and in repentance confesses and forsakes sin, is pardoned and accepted of God on the ground of Christ's obedience and sacrifice.

THE CHRISTIAN LIFE—The Holy Spirit imparts spiritual life to all believers. He purifies them more and more from sin until at last they stand perfect before Him in glory. Believers may, at times backslide, yet God does not cast them off, but chastens them and restores them through repentance to His loving fellowship.

THE CHURCH—The visible Church is composed of all who profess faith in Christ, together with their children, and it is the duty of all believers to openly profess their faith by uniting with the church. The visible Church consists only of those who truly live the Christian life.

THE SACRAMENTS—There are but two Sacraments—Baptism, which symbolizes the work of the Holy Spirit, and the Lord's Supper, which symbolizes the sacrificial death of Christ.

DEATH AND RESURRECTION—The souls of Christians are at their death made perfect in holiness, and do immediately pass into glory; and their bodies do rest in their graves till the resurrection, at which time they shall be raised up, acquitted in the day of judgment and made perfectly blessed through all eternity; but the wicked shall go away into everlasting punishment.

THE FINAL STATE—The eternal home of believers is heaven, while the abode of the impenitent is perdition. Man retains his identity after death, and there will be recognition in the future life. We believe in the ultimate and complete triumph of the Saviour's kingdom.

(In these days of doctrinal drifting, it is refreshing to find such a clear and sound statement, as the above, which is taken from the Church Bulletin of the First Presbyterian Church of Durham, N. C. Rev. Dr. D. H. Scanlon is the pastor.)

GOD WANTS THE WHOLE LIFE

When one who had waited until extreme old age before accepting Christ, was asked, "If he were not afraid to die?" he replied, "No, I am not afraid to die, for I am now a saved man and at peace with God, but I am ashamed to die. I am ashamed to enter the presence of my Saviour with years and years of a wasted life."

The lines below illustrate the truth that a child's acceptance of the Saviour is of far more importance to the Church and the world than an adult's. The figures below the lines represent the age of accepting Christ. A child who accepts Christ at 10 years of age may fairly expect to live 48 years in Christian service. If the decision is made at 15, 44 years of Christian usefulness remains. The Sunday School is the greatest evangelistic agency with children in the world.

Where Do the Criminals Come From?

It is said of a certain chaplain of a State Prison, with its hundreds of prisoners—criminals of every type and degree, that his personal investigation had revealed the amazing fact that not a single prisoner had come from a distinctly Christian home. They had never known of an atmosphere, during childhood and youth, of Bible reading, prayer and reverence for God. No, the Christian homes are not filling up the jails and prison walls of America.

No. 11—Shoes and Character

Shoes divide men into three classes. Some men wear their fathers' shoes. They make no decisions of their own.

Some are shod by the crowd. They unthinkingly decide to follow the throng. The strong man is his own cobbler. He insists on making his own choices. He walks in his own shoes.

Every man makes his own choices. And his choices make his character, and reveal it. This is the image in which man is made, this power of choice. This is man's distinctive characteristic. Every man is an absolute sovereign in his power of choice.

This explains why there is such a tense moral battle on. It's a battle for man's choice. The powers of evil lay siege to every man's will to win his choice. The Man on the Throne is ever wooing man to choose His way.

If that Man be in the Evil One is besieging to get in, if only by a hair. If the Evil One be in, that Man is warmly wooing to be allowed in, not by a hair, but all the way. And man decides.

Commonly, a decisive victory ends the conflict. That's history. When the daring Drake drove back the Spanish Armada that settled Philip's ambitions to dominate England and Europe. When Nelson downed the French boats at Trafalgar that settled the Emperor on the water. And when Wellington faced Napoleon himself at Waterloo that settled him on land, and for good and all.

But here is an exception. Calvary was a pitched battle in the unseen spirit world. The Third Morning After was the decisive victory. The Man of Calvary was the victor. The unseen spirit power was stingingly defeated. Yet the decisive victory has not ended the conflict.

That Man wasn't fighting his own fight. He was fighting our fight and our foe. He offers us His victory, if we'll take and use it. But each man must decide.

We can't win alone. Long years have proven that. Two things must be tied together, that Man's victory and our choice. But these two, Jesus and a set will—these are invincible. And the decisive factor humanly is our choice.

This is the biggest story of the old Book. Here is the first page. In a garden God says to His human companion: "Eat freely of all these trees. But here is one, the Tree of Choice. Please don't eat of it. I ask you not to, so that you may have the opportunity of showing your love by choosing what I prefer.

"But you choose. You may eat of it if you choose. You're free. Do you as you will. But, please, for love of me, use your power to keep in sweet touch. But you're free." That's the first page.

Now, the last page. A free translation makes the thought clearer. Listen: "He that is set in his choice on doing the thing that isn't right, still let him be utterly free to follow the bent of his choice, even though it be against the way I want him to go."

Then the same thing regarding the gutter stage of doing wrong. And then the same thing regarding choosing right. That's the last page.

Now, turn the leaves of the book, slowly, thoughtfully. And, on every page, practically, is this: Choose; choose right; don't choose wrong; choose now. But—you choose. Choose as you choose. Either the word, or illustrations of good choice or bad—that really is the Book.

There's only one knob on the door of a man's heart. And that's on the inside. The Evil One can't come in till the man inside twists the knob and throws open the door. And God won't come in until the door opens freely to Him.

Choice makes the man. Right choice strengthens the man. It lets his friendly God in. It defeats the Evil One.

Wrong choice weakens the man. It shuts God out. It lets the Evil One in. It stiffens up the joints of the choosing power. It's tougher work choosing right, easier choosing wrong.

And it's striking that wobbling indecision practically results as wrong decision does. The tempter is strengthened in his approach. God is still out. The door is not open to Him. The will weakens. A wobbling will is a weakening will. Not choosing is choosing not to.

It is striking that, as a bit of mere psychology, choice of the Christ includes all moral choices. By common consent He stands for the purest and strongest and humanest.

Choice of Him opens the door for a new power to come into one's life. That power re-knits all the moral fibre of character. No conflicting choice can be made as long as one remains true to that one choice.

And life becomes a succession of choosings. Choice stares in at every window pane. It knocks at every door. It rings the bell unceasingly. Its wireless cries come on the wings of every wind. The darkness intensifies the call, and the light brings it sharper and closer home.

And peace of heart, without which there is no strength, comes only in right choice made and unwobblingly persisted in.

Leigh Hunt was right. A friend looking at his new painting, since so famous, of Christ knocking at the vine-clad door, said, "There's a mistake. You put no knob on the door."

And the painter quietly said, "There is only one knob to the door of a man's heart, and that's on the inside." Every man makes his character by the use of that knob.

REPORT OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF THE MASSANETTA SPRINGS SUMMER BIBLE CONFERENCE ENCAMPMENT

The Executive Committee of the Massanetta Springs Bible Conference Encampment begs to report to the Synod of Virginia that five conferences were held beginning July 16th and closing August 26, 1923. The conferences were as follows: Young People's Conference, Standard Training School for Church and Sunday School Workers, Woman's School of Missions, Men's Conference and Bible Conference.

Very Brief Statement Concerning Conference

The Massanetta Springs Conferences, held at Massanetta Springs, near Harrisonburg, Va., under the auspices of the Synod of Virginia, were pronounced a phenomenal success in every sense of the word. Attention is called to four points, namely:

1. The program.
2. The attendance.
3. The showing financially.
4. The success from a spiritual and educational standpoint.

1. The program was the equal of that of any Bible Conference program in this country. Among the speakers on the Massanetta Springs platform were: Dr. G. Campbell Morgan, Dr. A. C. Dixon, Dr. Wm. Evans, Dr. H. E. Tralle, Dr. W. L. Lingle, Dr. J. G. Venable, Dr. J. L. Mauze, Dr. J. O. Reavis, Dr. Homer McMillan, Dr. H. W. DuBose, Dr. W. H. T. Squires, Dr. J. A. McClure, Dr. W. C. Campbell, Rev. S. W. Moore, Rev. W. L. Carson, Mr. George Trotter, Mr. Chas. A. Rowland, Mr. C. R. Caldwell, Dr. E. T. Wellford, Dr. Warren H. Stuart, Dr. John C. Acheson, Mrs. E. L. Russell, Miss Hilda White, and Mrs. Chas. S. Shawhan, were among the speakers at the Woman's Conference. Mrs. C. R. Vaughn had charge of the program. The song leaders were Rev. S. K. Emurian, Suffolk, Va.; Mr. Chrystal Brown, Paterson, N. J., and Mr. Homer Hamontree, Grand Rapids, Mich.

2. The attendance this year at each of the five conferences was at least a third larger than last year.

The Young People's Conference was the largest ever held in the South under the auspices of the Presbyterian Church. There was a registration of 545 delegates not including faculty. In addition to this number there were probably 150 young people who attended occasionally and on Sunday there was probably an attendance of a thousand at the morning service.

Certificates were awarded to 70 students for having completed a unit in the Standard Training School. However, there were probably 150 who attended the classes occasionally, and from 200 to 1,000 heard the lectures on Religious Education, by Dr. H. E. Tralle.

More than 300 women were enrolled at the Woman's Summer School of Missions, and a daily attendance at the classes of about 200. The crowds hearing the popular addresses varied from between 200 to 1,200.

The crowds attending the Men's Conference the first four days were unusual. During this period from 250 to 1,000 people attended each service. On one day there was probably 275 men from Lexington Presbytery alone.

The daily attendance at the Bible Conference varied from 500 to 1,200. On each of the Sundays, including the three services, there were probably 7,000 people on the Massanetta Springs grounds.

3. The conferences were a success financially. The daily gate fees and collections on Sundays amounted to $2,847. This sum, including the revenue from the hotel, will more than pay for the expenses of advertising, honorariums, etc., but will be far from sufficient to take care of the annuity, insurance and upkeep, which amounts to an annual sum of about $5,000. The permanent improvements which are imperative in order to run the conferences next year will total about $10,000. It should also be stated that the permanent improvements which have already been made on the property have amounted to $15,000. A subscription was taken on Sunday, August 19th, which amounted to over $5,000. On Sunday, August 26th, a subscription was taken, amounting to $1,645.

The loose collections on this day amounted to $358.05, making a total of $2,003.05. The total amount of gate receipts, collections and subscriptions were $9,515.00. The ease with which these offerings were taken revealed the supreme enthusiasm of the delegates for Massanetta Springs as a summer conference center.

4. The Training School for Church and Sunday School Workers, the School of Missions and the daily classes during the Young People's Conference were of great spiritual and educational value. At these conferences text-books on Home Missions, Foreign Missions, Christian Endeavor and Sunday School Methods were studied. Pupils taking these carefully prepared courses of study will be very much better prepared to do efficient work in their various churches and communities.

The Young People's Conference, however, stands out in a class by itself. This wonderful crowd of picked young men and women of potential gifts were deeply moved and greatly blessed by the conference. The climax of the meeting came at the last service after a sermon by Dr. Venable, when 85 of these choice young people, in response to his appeal, came forward and dedicated their lives to whole-time Christian service. A number of these young people made professions of their faith in Christ and united with their home churches.

The addresses of Dr. H. E. Tralle, on the subject of "Religious Education," were illuminating and very helpful. Dr. Squires' addresses at the Training School on "The Last Days of Jesus," were characterized as masterpieces of exegesis.

One of the interesting features of the conference was the thorough orthodoxy of the speakers. Also a number of delegates observed that the fundamentals of the Gospel were presented in no uncertain way. For example, the cross, the resurrection, the divine inspiration of the Scriptures, were themes of the Bible teachers.

The Men's Conference was extremely helpful, both from an educational and inspirational standpoint. The Assembly's plan of organizing the men was thoroughly discussed. Dr. H. W. DuBose gave a thrilling address on the importance of harnessing the man-power of the Church, describing what had been done in his church in Spartanburg. He said in part: "The men of our time have more appetite for religious things than they did in times past. No man can handle an army which is not divided up into companies and regiments." A number of our leading laymen gave helpful contributions on the subject.

The crowning feature of the Men's Conference, however, was the wonderful expositions of the Bible by the famous Bible teacher, Dr. Wm. Evans. The Sermon on the Mount was the subject of his morning addresses. He seemed almost super-human in presenting the theme, "The Death of Christ for the Sins of Mankind."

The Bible Conference was the cap sheaf of all which had gone before. It was a most inspiring sight on Sunday to see an audience of 2,500 people listening with rapt attention to Dr. Campbell Morgan and Dr. Wm. Evans, two of the greatest Bible teachers in America, and still more thrilling to see the people, out of their sheer love for this conference center, subscribe a round sum of $5,000 in about 30 minutes. As the days passed the conference grew richer and sweeter. The sermons of Dr. A. C. Dixon were greatly appreciated. His religious fervor and his defense of the fundamentals of the Gospel pleased the delegates immensely. Dr. Campbell Morgan was at his best. His eloquent expositions of the Bible sparkled with wit and humor, but above everything else his exhaustive and profound study of the Bible in its original language and his grasp of history and the philosophies of the world made him a teacher in whom every one exercised the greatest faith and confidence. In each of his sermons he held the close attention of his great audiences. He won the hearts of everybody. Like Dr. Dixon and Dr. Evans, he spoke on the great fundamentals of the Gospel. He took for his morning addresses, the subject, "The Portrait of Jesus in the Fourth Gospel," and for four of his night addresses, Luke 9:23. In one of his morning addresses he put on the blackboard the eight miracles of Jesus and the eight emphatic "I am's," making the divinity of Christ stand out in a most impressive way. He quoted the verse, "I am the Resurrection and the Life," and stated, "Would any man dare make such a statement, or could these words be put into the lips of any human being?" Then he asserted that the words of the Lord were more wonderful than His works.

The singer for the Bible Conference was Mr. Homer Hamontree. He and his accompanist, Mr. Hermanen, came from their closets to every service. Mr. Hamontree has a real message. He truly sings the Gospel. He has a beautiful voice and skill in getting people to sing. One of the commendable features of his ministry of song is that he sings the old-time Gospel hymns. A true and genuine revival was in progress throughout the entire Bible Conference. It was a real spiritual feast.

On the last night of the Bible Conference, Dr. Morgan preached a wonderful sermon on the text, "If any man thirst let him come unto me and drink," after which an appeal was made to the audience to stand if they wished to dedicate their lives afresh to the Master and be channels of living water to others. To this appeal some four or five hundred people arose to their feet, making a most profound and impressive spectacle.

On the last night Dr. Morgan spoke in a beautiful and encouraging vein concerning Massanetta Springs as follows: "You have here the making of one of the greatest spiritual influences I know. This is the kind of thing which is supremely a plant of the Lord's planting. If an industrial school were established here God and eternity alone could reveal what it would mean."

As Massanetta Springs is located in the heart of the famous Valley of Virginia, where there are beautiful roads radiating in every direction, it is not surprising that such phenomenal success could be achieved.

KWAIANFU (CHINA) EQUIPMENT NEEDS

Dispensary—We have two small rooms and a chapel seating about 50 women. In the court is a small mat shed for the men, hardly worth mentioning. Attendance during the year was 5,194, highest number in one day, 140. Counting relatives, friends, and servants who came along, there were easily over 10,000 last year. With a crowded chapel and confusion in the court, the Bible women and evangelist work under great disadvantage. $1,500.00 is needed to provide suitable buildings; otherwise the main purpose of the clinic is defeated. Most of these people never come in contact with the Gospel in any other way.

Residence—At Hwaianfu, the mission has two foreign style houses and one native house remodeled. The buildings are occupied by the small force, two families and three single ladies. The equipment is small but the work is growing and calling loudly for more workers. With eight evangelists promised to China this autumn and as our station is third on the list in North Kiangsu, we confidently expect a family to be added to our force, and need $3,650 to provide a house. It is quite probable that a second house will be needed in the near future.

Boys' School—Our Boys' School is getting to be too extensive and too expensive to keep in rented quarters. We need a place where we can have good class rooms, quarters for teachers and rooms for country boys from Christian homes. In our own property, we can plan for enlargement and development of the school and not feel that any time the rent may be raised or we may be turned out. Hwaianfu is an excellent place for a boys' school (population, 150,000 in the city and a field of 1,500,000). For building $5,000.00 is needed. These schools are proving to be good investments.

Chapels—The building sites for two country chapels (with room for school and manse) have been given by Chinese Christians. But we need more money for the buildings. Not only would we save rent but we would have much more satisfactory places for worship and work. Four hundred dollars is enough to build a splendid plant and at present $800.00 is needed. Individuals or churches wishing to make a contribution to the foreign work which will be of great use in winning souls, could not do better than give a country chapel. Of this $800.00, $500.00 has been sent to the field. Who will contribute $300.00 so that both chapels, manse and school can be completed.

Girls' School—The Martha D. Riddle School is the only school exclusively for girls in the city of Hwaian. For two years there have been averages of 60 girls, all day pupils. We need permanent plant and equipment. Part of the $5,000.00 needed has been given in answer to desperate appeals in order to buy desirable property before the opportunity passed. Other property is needed and the permanent buildings are an urgent necessity to house the school and to prevent waste of funds in temporary quarters. A boarding department has long been demanded and must be supplied that the girls too old to go back and forth on the streets may be held. Many girls have been led to Christ in this school and some are being led into Christian work. The time for its expansion has come and it must be maintained.

THE JESUS OF OUR FATHERS

I have read with increasing pleasure and satisfaction Prof. John W. Good's book, "The Jesus of Our Fathers." It is refreshing to find an exposition of the Bible written by one who believes in it and who interprets God's Word according to its letter and its spirit. It ought to have a wide circulation among all Christian readers. It will instruct the young, not only in the teachings of the Bible but in the reasonableness of those teachings and in the evidences supporting it. To those who are older it will furnish many suggestions that will be helpful in the presentation of the Bible as the Book of books, the only infallible guide to life and conduct.

This meeting will be on the conference plan, open to the public, and while not entertaining will be informing. The evening meetings will be inspirational. Mrs. J. D. Hawes, president of the Louisville Presbyterial, will report the Kentucky work of colored women on the first evening, and Dr. M. E. Melvin, secretary of the Progressive Program will present his work. The second evening Dr. Henry Sweets, secretary Christian Education and Ministerial Relief, will be the principal speaker. All Presbyterial officers are entitled to attend this meeting. Those expecting to go will please notify Mrs. W. L. Yancey, 516 Davies Street, Owensboro, Ky.

HOME

"When God started a nation, He began with a home," said Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman at a meeting in Bethany Presbyterian Church, Philadelphia, where over 3,000 men and women had gathered to hear his noted sermon, "An Old-Fashioned Home."

"We find that God began with Abraham. It takes a single sentence to tell the reason: 'For I know him, that he will command his children and his household after him.'

"The father is the priest in his household, but a man can never be what he ought to be until he is a Christian.

"Two great principles must prevail in every home, authority and example. And in order to command, we must ourselves be controlled.

"If we are to set before our children and our household the right example, I find we cannot begin too soon. The home is rather a training school for eternity. It may be the poorest house imaginable, but if it is serving its mission it is a place of joy. We have an idea, some of us, that our homes are for display. They are not. They are to drill our boys and girls for an unending eternity. God pity us if we miss the one aim."

Auxiliary of Fayetteville Presbytery—Through your loyal support, Elise High School has steadily advanced, and now I bring you the good news of the fine opening of the school on September 4th. The dormitories are crowded and a cottage has been rented to accommodate the overflow, until the new dormitory can be completed. The walls of the new dormitory are going up, and now we appeal to the Auxiliaries for all the help they can give us this year. Mrs. Fairley has asked for the salary of the assistant principal and has also asked Auxiliaries or individuals to furnish the rooms of the new dormitory as memorial rooms, as was done at Barium. Each room will cost $50 and it will not be necessary to furnish anything else (i. e., bed linen, etc.), but $50 will cover the entire cost of a memorial room. We hope to occupy the new dormitory by Thanksgiving.

As treasurer of Elise High School, I want to thank you for the support you have given in the past, and to beg you to help us to the utmost this year.

W. L. Wilson.

(In connection with this article by Mrs. Wilson, we feel that not only the women of Fayetteville Presbytery, but the Presbyterian women of North Carolina will be interested in this clipping from the Charlotte Observer of September 7th. We believe that the money invested in this Christian school is paying higher dividends in "Life Enlistment" than any school in the State.—Ed.)

HELPS TO SECRETARIES

By Rev. Henry H. Sweets, D.D., Secretary

Sometime ago Mrs. W. P. McDowell, of Norfolk, Va., who is serving as secretary for Christian Education and Ministerial Relief of Norfolk Presbyterial, conceived the idea of getting together all the local secretaries of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief for conference. It was later decided to include other local secretaries and a second conference was held on May 30, 1923. About 70 women were present.

What a wonderful thing might be accomplished if such conferences as this could be carried out in all of the Presbyterials! Mrs. McDowell has furnished to each one of the secretaries for this year the following suggestions:

Each year the cause of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief should be studied at a regular meeting of the Auxiliary.

See that each circle leader has literature to give to her members on Christian Education and Ministerial Relief.

Try to get parents to select Christian schools for their children.

Make a Service Flag to hang on the wall somewhere in the Sunday School or Church with stars for ministers or missionaries who have been sent out from your church. See leaflet now being prepared by the Louisville committee.

Look out for boys and girls who want an education and need financial help.

See that a special day is set aside for prayer for colleges.

See that youths away from home get the leaflets on Life Work.

Try to establish in your church more families to have Family Worship.

Pray more earnestly that our people will help our Ministerial Relief financially this year.

We earnestly hope they will be helpful to all of those who are engaged in this important and fundamental work.

Louisville, Ky.

The Woman's Auxiliary of the Synod of Tennessee will meet in Murfreesboro, Tenn., October 3, 4, and 5. Special speakers on the program will be Rev. J. P. Smith, D.D., of Brazil; Miss Hilda White, of the Home Missions Committee; Mrs. Frank Gray, Secretary of Spiritual Life of the Synodical will conduct the Bible study.

Margaret McNeilly, Cor. Sec.

Study Classes for Home Missions!—September is the month set this year to begin the study of Home Missions. The books are "The Child and America's Future" for adults, "For a New America" for young people. They may be ordered for 50 cents from the Presbyterian Committee of Publication, Richmond, Virginia.

The Auxiliary is responsible for young people's classes as well as classes among its own members. Secretaries for Young People's Work may share the responsibility with secretaries for Home Missions.

Begin work now! Select leaders, organize classes, watch the church papers and Survey for suggestions for study. Make Home Mission study the big thing for your Auxiliary this year!

TO MY SON

Do you know that your soul is of mine such a part
That you seem to be fiber and core of my heart?
No other can pain me as you, dear, can do;
No other can please me or praise me like you.

Remember, the world will be quick with its blame,
If shadow or stain ever darkens your name;
"Like mother, like son," is a saying so true,
The world will judge largely of "mother" by you.

Be yours, then, the task, if task it shall be,
To force this old world to do homage to me;
Rest assured it will say, when its verdict you've won,
"She reaped as she sowed; behold; this is her son."

THE MULE AND THE MINISTER

By Mildred Welch

The mule belonged to a missionary in a far-away tropical land. He was a small, gray animal, swift of gait and of wonderful endurance. And much he needed it during the 15 years of service through which he carried his master on long journeys into the interior.

There were days when they traveled from dawn to sunset, with the tropical sun beating full upon them. Days, when master and beast went "on the King's business" from early morning till late at night, without food; nights when they had no shelter but a rough shed, where the pack-mules and their drivers rested and the missionary read to the men from his Bible by the flickering light of a little lard lamp and a bit of rag.

When at last the little gray mule broke down and could no longer carry him, the missionary remembered the faithful service of many years through which the mule had borne him over rough roads, through beating storms, under the mid-day sun, and the lonely starlit skies when he had had no companionship but that of the patient beast and his single guide. And remembering this, he turned the old mule out to graze in the mission compound.

There were to be no more long journeys now, but instead, the freedom of green grass, cool water and shady trees and he rested, with the odor of sweet flowers, the songs of birds and the happy sound of children's voices about him.

And the minister? It was different with him, you see, because he was only—a minister. He served our Church for 65 years, gave to her a whole life-time of service. But when he was 92 and his invalid wife was 83, no one seemed to remember the 65 years of patient, self-sacrificing work. So through one long, hot summer, this minister old and gray-headed, stood behind the plow, trying to wring a scanty living from the hard ground.

If it had been your father or grandfather who stood in the furrows through that long summer, the snows of 92 years upon his head, what would you have said?

Not long after this, the summons came and the old minister sees the King in His beauty now and rests in the land that is afar off.

"We did not know," you say. "It is a terrible thing that we let him plow—at 92 and now it is too late." Too late for him, yes; after the weariness and pain he sleeps well. But there are other old ministers and every year they pass beyond any need of our tenderness or care. Will it always be too late for them too?

The General Assembly calls upon the Church to increase the Endowment Fund of Ministerial Relief as rapidly as possible to at least $1,000,000, and especially commends it to our people of wealth for their gifts and legacies.

In making your will remember this sacred cause. Contributions will be held as "Memorial Funds" if so desired. Such gifts will continue to do good through the coming years.

Send the gifts that will brighten the last years of our old ministers to Mr. John Stites, Treasurer, Fifth and Market Streets, Louisville, Ky.

The Executive Committee of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief of the Presbyterian Church in the United States.

For further information address Rev. Henry H. Sweets, Secretary, 122 South Fourth Avenue, Louisville, Ky.

CAN YOU FIND A BETTER INVESTMENT?

By Rev. Egbert W. Smith, D.D.

The Church at large will be glad to know that the 30 odd young missionaries who were waiting to be sent have been provided for, on the $2,700 basis, and have sailed or are about to sail, for their foreign fields.

Emergency calls are coming in for several others. Will you not help us to send them? The minimum pledge accepted on missionary support is $300, though a larger pledge is more welcome still. All contributions for the support of a brand new missionary must be (1) over and above accustomed foreign mission contributions, and (2) payable not for one year only but year by year.

The payments may be made in monthly, quarterly, or semi-annual installments, as is most convenient to the givers.

Any Church, Sunday School, Auxiliary, or individual pledging $300 or more of new money per annum will be assigned a new missionary who will sail when the rest of the $2,700 is pledged.

Simon Flexner, head of the Rockefeller Institute of Research, says:

"There is no organization in the world, either philanthropic or business, which is getting as large returns out of the money it spends as the various Boards of Foreign Missions."

In making this $300 pledge you will have the joy of knowing that you are placing your money where the need is the greatest and the returns are the largest. Do not wait. Procrastination is the grave of achievement. Write now, right now, to Executive Secretary, Box 330 Nashville, Tenn.

LUKE, THE BELOVED PHYSICIAN

Lesson: Luke 1:1-4; Acts 1:1-5; 16:9-18; Col. 4:14; II Tim. 4:11
 Printed Text: Luke 1:1-4; Acts 1:1; 16:9-15; Col. 4:14;
 II Tim. 4:11

GOLDEN TEXT—"A friend loveth at all times, and a brother is born for adversity."—Prov. 17:17.

SCRIPTURE LESSON

Lu. 1:1 Forasmuch as many have taken in hand to set forth in order a declaration of those things which are most surely believed among us,

2 Even as they delivered them unto us, which from the beginning were eyewitnesses, and ministers of the word,
 3 It seemed good to me also, having had perfect understanding of all things from the very first, to write unto thee in order, most excellent Theophilus,

4 That thou mightest know the certainty of those things wherein thou hast been instructed.

Acts 1:1 The former treatise have I made, O Theophilus, of all that Jesus began both to do and teach.

Ch. 16:9 And a vision appeared to Paul in the night; There stood a man of Macedonia, and prayed him, saying, Come over into Macedonia, and help us.

10 And after he had seen the vision, immediately we endeavoured to go into Macedonia, assuredly gathering that the Lord had called us for to preach the gospel unto them.

11 Therefore loosing from Troas, we came with a straight course to Samothracia, and the next day to Neapolis;

12 And from thence to Philippi, which is the chief city of that part of Macedonia, and a colony: and we were in that city abiding certain days.

13 And on the Sabbath we went out of the city by a river side, where prayer was wont to be made; and we sat down, and spake unto the women which resorted thither.

14 And a certain woman named Lydia, a seller of purple, of the city of Thyatira, which worshipped God, heard us: whose heart the Lord opened, that she attended unto the things which were spoken of Paul.

15 And when she was baptized, and her household, she besought us, saying, if ye have judged me to be faithful to the Lord, come into my house, and abide there. And she constrained us.

Col. 4:14 Luke, the beloved physician, and Demas, greet you.

2 Tim. 4:11 Only Luke is with me. Take Mark, and bring him with thee; for he is profitable to me for the ministry.

SHORTER CATECHISM

Q. 54. What is required in the third commandment?
 A. The third commandment requireth the holy and reverent use of God's names, titles, attributes, ordinances, word and works.

In apostolic days as now men of different worldly callings were used to advance the interests of the Gospel. Among them is Luke, a faithful companion of Paul, when a free and active worker and when a prisoner because of his zeal for Christ. He is called the "beloved physician," because of his excellent qualities and helpful deeds. He made to the New Testament two most valuable contributions, the Gospel which bears his name, and the book of Acts. Contemplating the lesson, we will attend to Luke As An Author; Paul Called to Macedonia; The Conversion of Lydia; The Proofs of Her Piety.

I. Luke as an Author

The Gospel of Luke, written by him, was prepared by him for "the Greeks," or the Gentile world. It deals mainly with his humanity and presents some phases of his human experiences not found elsewhere. He dwells upon some facts of his boyhood and gradual development that are very interesting. It shows his submission to the authority of his parents during his ministry and while he dwelt at Nazareth. The Christian fathers maintain that Luke's Gospel was written under the direction and with the sanction of the Apostle Paul. But if the Gospel of Luke was written to apprise the Gentiles that Jesus' humanity was like their own, but without sin, the book of Acts described the spread of the Gospel according to Christ's plan, under the guidance of the Holy Ghost. Both books were written with great accuracy and elegance in the purest Greek.

II. Paul Called to Macedonia

He has essayed to go into proconsular Asia, and the province of Bithinia, but "the Spirit suffered him not." He is called to preach the Gospel in Europe, in Macedonia, by a vision in which he sees "a man of Macedonia saying come over into Macedonia and help us." No place is mentioned in the vision, but in the exercise of a sound judgment Paul goes to the chief city of Macedonia and a Romany colony. Here he waits till the Sabbath day and goes to a company of praying women met by the riverside for worship. To them he declares Gospel tidings and makes his first convert in Europe to Christ. Here was the beginning of that Christianity in Europe which has since done much for planting the religion of Jesus in the world.

III. The Conversion of Lydia

Lydia was a business woman of Thyatira, a seller of purple dye, having a household and some means. We are told that "she worshipped God," and was evidently a seeker after true religion. Her conversion to the Christian faith manifests the condition under which most persons become Christians. She was a seeker after religious truth. She associated with those that prayed, and asked herself for Divine guidance. The Lord says, "Then shall you seek me and find me, when you search for me with all your heart." She heard the word as preached by Paul, "Faith cometh by hearing and hearing by the Word of God." "The Lord opened her heart to attend to what Paul spoke." "No man can say that Jesus is the Lord by the Holy Ghost." "She attended to the things spoken by Paul." She gave earnest heed to the word and did what was enjoined. This is the road to discipleship and salvation.

IV. The Proof of Lydia's Piety

She brought her family to Christ. She confessed Christ as her Saviour and associated with His disciples. Christians must confess as well as believe. He who is ashamed to avow himself a Christian him shall Christ be ashamed to claim as disciple. Lydia used her means to sustain Jesus' cause, and to minister to the needs of His servants. Christian love dominated her heart and life.

 What is the value of keeping notes on our reading?
 What poetry helps you most?

Quotations About Reading

"Reading is to the mind what exercise is to the body. As by exercise, health is preserved, strengthened, and given life, so by reading, virtue, the health of the mind, is kept alive, cherished, and established."—Addison.

"My early and irresistible love of reading I would not exchange for the treasures of India."—Gibbon.

"If time is precious, a book that will not improve by repeated readings does not deserve to be read at all."—Carlyle.

"In science, read the newest works; in literature, read the oldest. Classic literature is always modern."—Bulwer.

Advantages of Reading

Let us thank God for the printing press, by which so many excellent books are supplied us for our pleasure and profit. There are many advantages in reading. It delights the imagination, by drawing a panorama of pictures before our fancy; it cultivates the powers of observation, and we see things as others see them. Reading improves the memory, and furnishes it with interesting topics to recall; it develops the reason, compelling us to think the thoughts of others; it enlarges our experience by making us pass through the scenes in others' lives; it employs our time and keeps us from wasting the hours we might spend in mischief; it elevates our ideals, and inspires us to be better men and women.

Books For Juniors

Those who give us books are among our best friends, and younger boys and girls should cherish these books, and read them with care. As children 8 to 14 need certain kinds of books, let us think of some for them to read. I think fairy stories are excellent, such as Anderson's Fairy Tales and Kingsley's Water Babies. Knights of the Round Table Stories are fine, too. Then there are the Little Colonel Stories, Amy LeFevre's The Odd One, and Louisa M. Alcott's Little Women, Jo's Boys, Little Men, Under the Lilacs, and her other stories. These are mostly for girls. Boys should read the Henty Books, the Alger Books, Boy Scout and Tom Swift Stories. Visit libraries, and you will find many other good books to read.

Books For Intermediates

When you become an adolescent, that is 14 to 16, other kinds of books will strike your fancy, and you should keep up your reading habit. Boys of this age will enjoy

Robinson Crusoe, Swiss Family Robinson, Black Beauty, Ivanhoe, Tales of a Grandfather, Leather Stocking Tales, by Cooper, such as The Spy, Pathfinder, Deer-slayer, and so on, and Westward Ho!, Treasure Island, and Kidnapped. Ernest Thompson Seton's books on animal life are fine, such as Wild Animals I Have Known and others. Magazines, such as St. Nicholas, American Boy, and Youth's Companion, will fit this age. Don't waste all your time at baseball, football, and basketball. Keep your mind busy with good books.

Books For Young People

When we become young men and young women, and turn into 17, we ought to take up books of a more serious style, books which will be informing, improving, and interesting at the same time. Read history and historical tales, such as Surry of Eagle's Nest, Last Days of Pompeii, Les Miserables, and many more like them. Now is the time to read Dickens' Nicholas Nickleby, David Copperfield, and Old Curiosity Shop. The Wandering Jew, Vanity Fair, Mill on the Floss, all the novels by Scott, Bulwer, Brontë and other older novelists are necessary to our education. At this age we should read poetry, as Longfellow's poems, those of Tenyson, Lowell, Sidney Lanier, and if you can get the courage to read Milton's Paradise Lost, you will deserve a feather in your cap.

Studying Literature

Our school teachers will probably take care that we study literature in the schoolbooks devoted to that course, but we ourselves should make it a time to get acquainted with all the masters of the pen. Our education is incomplete without some knowledge of the lives and manners of authors, both men and women. And now, we should read Ruskin, especially Sesame and Lilies, Dream Life by Ik Marvel, and other books that teach us to reflect on life. And all the while, let us crown our reading with the daily study of God's Word, which Sir Walter Scott called The Book, for it is the one book of all earth's volumes we must not neglect in work, play, sorrow or joy.

It is a very good plan to make a list of all the books you have read and keep adding to that list, by reading new books constantly.

RALLY DAY, OCTOBER 7TH

Claude T. Carr, Supt. S. S. and Y. P. Work

Is your school making preparations for Rally Day? Have you arranged a good program?
 Have you thought through the purpose of Rally?

The day set apart for the observance of Rally Day throughout the Sunday Schools of the country is always the first Sunday in October.

Our own Committee of Publication has arranged a splendid program for this occasion, based on the theme "Building the Kingdom through the Teaching of the Word." Along with the program they have given us a unique poster which graphically puts before us the various agencies that are at work extending the Kingdom. Preachers, missionaries, teachers, officers, and leaders, with trained talents, along with dedicated possessions and consecrated lives, are all at work through the study of God's Word in spreading the Good News to all parts of the world "beginning at Jerusalem."

While it is true that one of the purposes of Rally Day is to rally our forces, rather scattered through the dissipating influences of vacation time, yet let us remember that its meaning is far deeper than this mere physical aim.

On this day we should deepen the interest in all Sunday School work, we should realize more and more the great service which our schools are rendering, we should give to all those interested a broader vision of the purpose and scope of Religious Education, and we should arouse a spirit of such fervor that it will show itself not only on Rally Day and a few succeeding Sundays but will continue throughout the entire year, a constant source of inspiration.

Our committee is asked this year that we contribute to Sunday School Extension the amount of $100,000. This money is all used in the one purpose of evangelization through the Bible-studying and teaching service of the Church.

Let your contribution to this cause be as liberal as possible

ASHPOLE SENIOR CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR SOCIETY

The Ashpole Senior Christian Endeavor has held splendid meetings and has shown much progress during the summer months. The programs have been in charge of the young people and they have shown their interest and enthusiasm by their willingness to take part in the programs. The programs have been very interesting but perhaps the most interesting one was the "Lie Family," given on September 2d. All the meetings have been well attended and we feel that Ashpole has a worthwhile Christian Endeavor.

TRAINING SCHOOL FOR SUNDAY SCHOOL WORKERS

The superintendent of Sunday School and Young People's Work reports the following schools for the Fall already decided upon. Other schools are in process of arrangement and a fuller list will be given as soon as these have been definitely arranged:

Marion, August 19-24.
Mooresville, September 2-7.
Salisbury, September 10-14.
Rocky Mount, September 23-28.
Lincolnton, October 1-5.
New Bern, October 28—November 2.
Charlotte, November 4-9.
Winston-Salem, November 11-16.
Greensboro, November 18-23.

Church News

OUR MISSIONARIES SAFE

Dr. E. W. Smith, our Secretary of Missions, wired us last week that the latest advices received at his office assured the safety of our missionaries in Japan. This will be grateful news to our Church. These faithful servants, laboring so far from home are very dear to the Church, and the thought that they were exposed to the horrors of fire, famine and earthquake, gave much anxiety to us all. We thank God that He, according to promise, gave his angels charge concerning them, so that in their hands they bore them up.

A NOTE OF THANKS

We wish to say to all of our old friends, and to the new ones we have made, how much we have enjoyed our furlough among you. We want to thank you for all your kindnesses to us, and they have been many, that have helped to make our visit home a pleasant one. We are turning our faces back to the Congo feeling that we are rich in friends at home, and the memory of you all is going to make our work lighter.

May we pledge our loyalty again to you and ask that you pledge yours to us, but more that you pledge it to the black man we represent and for whom we are going to work. "May the Lord watch between us while we are absent one from the other."

Rev. and Mrs. A. Hoyt Miller.

BARIUM SPRINGS

This week marked the beginning of school, our official family composed of teachers and workers and their families has grown so large that it is quite possible for a whole year to pass without all becoming acquainted. To prevent a condition like this continuing a reception was given Monday night at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Johnston to the teachers to meet all the other workers and the senior class.

We wish this reception could have been to the entire membership of the Synod of North Carolina, for it would be a privilege for them to meet this loyal body of consecrated men and women, and the splendid seniors soon about to take their place in the world.

On Tuesday morning at ten o'clock both the morning and afternoon sections of the school met in the auditorium, and brief opening exercises were held. A hymn, a prayer by Dr. Parker and a most inspiring address by Rev. Mr. Long constituted the program.

Practically every room in the school building is doing double duty, having both morning and afternoon classes, and at night during study hour every room and the library are in use. In order to get in the commercial course we find it necessary to put a partition in the library room to have any place for this at all.

Miss Bonadum, our music teacher has returned and already the music is sounding better, with Mr. Nesbit's cornet and Mr. Privett's leadership we are expecting great things in a musical way this year.

The Christian Endeavorers gave us a treat Wednesday night. Mr. Wilson, field secretary for this work in North Carolina and Virginia, was on their program and by his enthusiasm and humor not only entertained us but made us all want to belong to this society. Due to his help and the generosity of Miss Alexander, two of our members attended the district meeting at North Wilkesboro this week-end.

The time of year has arrived for making reports and casting up the results of the year's work; when we look at the progress made in improving the plant in the condition of the various departments we are glad to report material advancement, while we see so many places yet for improvement, we do not like to dwell too long on what has been done.

We are now caring for many more children than ever before and having to meet conditions entirely new to us on account of this increased number but regret to report that the money to support the institution is still not coming in in sufficient amounts. In spite of the increased generosity of a few the church as a whole is not taking care of the increased needs of this place. Recently we sent out a personal appeal to about five thousand church members, we received something over $3,500 from this special appeal but the August slump in receipts more than counter-balanced this.

We hate to be the bearers of bad news, but feel that our people should know this.

PERSONAL

Rev. E. C. Bailey, who has been temporarily supplying the church at Accomac, Va., has changed his address to Greenville, Tenn., where he is supplying the Meadow Creek Church.

We had the pleasure of a short visit from Rev. A. E. Wallace, of Lancaster, Texas, who was on his way to preach at Indian Trail, between Charlotte and Monroe. We are always glad to see our Texas brethren.

NORTH CAROLINA

Mecklenburg Presbytery—The constitutional requirements having been complied with the Presbytery of Mecklenburg is hereby called to meet in Charlotte First Church, Monday, September 17, 1923 at 12:15 p. m., to dismiss Rev. Geo. H. Atkinson to Congaree Presbytery.

C. H. Rowan, Moderator.

C. C. Anderson, S. C.

Fayetteville Presbytery will meet at West End, N. C., on September 25th, 8 p. m. Will pastors please report to M. C. McDonald, as to their attendance and the names of elders who will come? A car will meet S. A. L. train from Raleigh at Southern Pines at 6:40 p. m., if any one so desires and will write as above.

Charlotte—At the evening service last Sabbath the pastor of the First Church, Rev. A. S. Johnson, D.D., preached a special sermon to the young people of the church who are leaving this week for college. It was based on Daniel's resolution that "He would not defile himself," and was an earnest plea for clean Christian living during these formative years of their lives.

Rutherfordton—The Westminster School, which has been closed for the past year, reopened September 3d with good prospects for a successful year. The devotional exercise was conducted by Rev. J. C. Grier, pastor of the Rutherfordton Presbyterian Church. The opening address was delivered by Dr. A. R. Shaw, of Charlotte, N. C. He spoke on the "Three Royal H's"—the training and development of the head, the heart and the hands. Under the supervision of Prof. T. L. O'Kelley as principal, we are expecting the school to prosper.

Duncan's Creek—A very successful meeting, which began August 26th was closed August 31. Rev. Albert E. S. McMahan, of Columbia, S. C., did the preaching. The Gospel was presented in such an attractive and forceful way that the whole church was revived. The Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Society have taken on new life and the prospects for advancement of the Lord's work in this community are very bright. Twenty were added to the membership of the church, 14 on profession of their faith in Christ and six by letter.

Littleton—The pastor of the Warren County field, Rev. J. M. Millard, being invited by a friend of another denomination went to Gibsonville the third week in August to conduct a series of meetings, preaching twice a day for 12 days in the M. P. Church. The Lord sent his spirit and a great meeting was the result. Everyone seemed to be greatly revived and there were about 70 who made a profession of faith in Christ Jesus and a great number reconsecrated themselves to Christ and His service.

Wilmington Presbytery—It is the desire of South River Church to have a full representation when Wilmington Presbytery convenes with us Tuesday morning, September 25th at 11 o'clock. Letters have been mailed to all pastors and clerks of sessions urging a full attendance and requesting a prompt notice of your purpose to attend. If any pastor or clerk of session in Wilmington Presbytery reads this notice, please let it remind you of the letter that you either did or should receive. Attention is called to the importance of arriving on the morning train for otherwise you will miss a days work.

R. E. McClure, Pastor.

Duncan's Creek—Rev. R. T. Baker, of Georgia, a student of the Theological Seminary, of Columbia, S. C., who has been supplying the churches of Union Mills, Duncan's Creek, and Brittain, has closed a series of meetings at Duncan Creek, where he was assisted by Rev. Albert E. S. McMahan, of Columbia, S. C., who did the preaching. Rev. Geo. W. Sheffer, of Forest City, formerly of Little Rock, Ark., and Rev. J. C. Grier, of Rutherfordton, were called to assist in the reception of 20 members, which were added to the church, 14 on examination, and six by certificate.

R. G. H.

Mallard Creek—That it pays to advertise even such a delicate matter as one's birthday was demonstrated the past week in the case of Dr. W. H.

Frazer, the popular president of Queens College, who is the supply pastor of the Mallard Creek Church. On the Sabbath preceding Dr. Frazer announced to his Bible class that on the following Sabbath he would celebrate his 50th birthday and that he wanted, in honor of the day, 50 men in attendance on the class. In response to this announcement the Mallard Creek men rallied to the class in such numbers that when the teacher on his natal day arose to address them he found an audience of not fifty, but seventy men to hear him.

And then as a special mark of the affection in which they hold him the men of the class presented Dr. Frazer with $50 in gold—a dollar for each year of his life. The occasion was a very happy one for both pupils and teacher.

Rev. R. C. Long—From the Church Bulletin of the Gastonia First Church we take the following tribute to Rev. R. C. Long:

The resignation of Rev. Roswell C. Long as pastor of the West Avenue Church occasions not only the most sincere regret but means a very notable loss to the religious forces of Gastonia. Mr. Long has accepted the earnest invitation of the Assembly's Stewardship Committee, which is located at Chattanooga, Tenn., to join their staff of workers in a very important capacity. His new position will open to him a field of labor that is as wide as the bounds of the Southern Presbyterian Church and a sphere of influence that has great possibilities. Mr. Long expects to take up the duties of his office September 1st, and will make his home in Chattanooga. Every one will join in heartfelt regret at the loss his removal will mean to the work here, while rejoicing with him in the larger promise of service it will mean to him and the Church. He will be greatly missed here both as a man and a minister; nowhere, of course, quite so much as in West Avenue Church, where he is universally honored and beloved. Mr. Long's ministry there has been crowned with the highest success. The church has multiplied in numbers and gifts, while in organization and efficiency it has no equal in the Presbytery. In every way it has grown and developed under his wise and earnest leadership. But Mr. Long's departure will be sincerely deplored by a circle that far transcends the limits of his own congregation. He has made a distinct place for himself in the entire social, civic and religious life of the city. His genial personality, versatile gifts and varied accomplishments, united to his fine Christian character, have not only made him a favorite but a real force in all the life of Gastonia.

Nowhere will his loss be felt more than among the young people of Kings Mountain Presbytery. In a few short years, by his tireless interest and efforts, he has given a tremendous impulse to Christian Endeavor work and to all religious activities among the young people. The Sunday School has also felt the stimulus of his personality, and in the work of the Sunday School and the young people the whole Synod of North Carolina has been distinctly benefited by his ministry. Kings Mountain Presbytery loses one of its most faithful and useful members, and will give Mr. Long up with the greatest reluctance. He has rendered specially fine service as a member of the Home Mission Committee, of which he is the secretary.

The results of the distinguished service rendered among us by this talented and devoted minister will be seen and felt for many years to come. Our heartiest interest and esteem will follow Mr. and Mrs. Long to their new home, and our prayers for their future happiness and ever enlarging usefulness.

Marion Training School for Sunday School Workers—During the week of August 19-24 the Methodists and Presbyterian churches of Marion held a Co-operative Standard Training School for the officers and teachers of the Sunday Schools of Marion and vicinity.

A good crowd was in attendance at all the sessions and a marked interest was manifested throughout the entire week.

The following courses were offered: "Sunday School Organization and Administration," taught by Mr. O. V. Woosley, superintendent of Sunday School Work for Western North Carolina Conferences.

"Principles of Religious Education," taught by Mr. Claude T. Carr, superintendent of Sunday School and Young People's Work, Synod of North Carolina.

"Junior Organization and Administration," taught by Miss Virginia Jenkins, Elementary Superintendent, Western North Carolina Conference.

"Primary Organization and Administration," taught by Miss Georgia Keene, Elementary Superintendent North Carolina Conference.

At the close of the school the following resolutions were adopted:

We, the pupils of the Marion Standard Training School, desiring to express our appreciation of the splendid work which has been done by Messrs. Woosley and Carr, and Misses Jenkins and Keene, do resolve,

1. That it is our conviction that the work, in each department, has been of a high order and beneficial, in a marked degree, to everyone who has attended and that its influence will be felt in every Sunday School represented here. It is our great regret that all Sunday School superintendents and teachers in this vicinity did not avail themselves of this unusual opportunity.

2. That we commend our church leaders for planning work of this character, which, undoubtedly will be far-reaching in its results. The splendid spirit of co-operation between the churches shown during this school has been an inspiration to all.

3. We urge those in authority to continue this work each year in our community and elsewhere, until the Sunday School in every church has been reached by it, for, in our opinion, the great need in Sunday School work is intemperate Christian leadership.

R. C. Goforth,
Mrs. D. F. Giles,
J. C. Story.

Rev. Wade Smith, of Greensboro, N. C. was in London during the summer. From the "Daily Graphic" we cup the following notice of him and his work:

The Church-by-the-Road—You seldom recognize American clergymen when you see them in London, for they do not wear clerical garb.

Mr. Wade C. Smith, an American minister who was visiting London yesterday, comes from the Church-by-the-Side-of-the-Road at Greensboro, far away in North Carolina. He was once head of a real estate business, but he has given it all up for the ministry.

When I saw him yesterday I thought he was a schoolmaster by his horn-rimmed glasses and learned books which he carried. But, no! He is the minister of the most novel church in America.

Cows Leased Out—His church has three cows, which it rents out to poorer members of the congregation for a dollar a week. I doubt if any cattle of aristocratic lineage or wonderful butter-fat producers have wider fame than those three Greensboro "bovines," as Mr. Wade Smith called them.

"There are many families of little children who are under-nourished in our town, because they cannot afford to buy milk, so we decided to purchase some cows and lease them out to families," he told me.

One cow is furnishing four gallons of milk a day. "Another cow is needed," he added, "for a family in which there are many children but no cow."

Seven-Day Religion—Clearly Mr. Wade Smith does not believe in only Sunday religion. "We meet the needs of the community in our church," he said. "Our religion is a seven-day programme. The Church has its playground and athletic field, a nurse, whom it provides with a Ford car, a night school, a home-nursing class, and all kinds of educational side-lines."

Then there are all kinds of bright helpers in the church. There are:

"Go-Getters," who are sent to try and get new members.

"Come-Bringers," who try to make people attend church regularly.

"Dough-boys," who have finance as their objective.

"Quill-drivers," those who write reports about the church and its doings for publicity purposes.

"Bailiffs," who visit and help prisoners.

"Salesmen," who "sell Christ to men"—that is, try to convert men to religion.

This seems to be a courageous effort to meet the problem of empty churches.

Rutherfordton—This church was honored last Sabbath, September 2d, by the presence of Dr. A. R. Shaw, of Charlotte, and Rev. and Mrs. J. S. Nisbet, missionaries to Mokpo, Korea, who were accompanied by Miss Shay, a young woman converted to Christianity in Korea.

Miss Shay delivered a short address during the Sabbath School hour in the Korean language, which was interpreted by Rev. Mr. Nisbet. It was an inspiration to hear Miss Shay tell of the coming of the missionaries, bringing the good news of the Christ of Galilee, bringing light and life to those in darkness, and showing the wonderful results of the power of God and the power of His word, sent to the nations of the world.

Dr. A. R. Shaw, of Charlotte, occupied the pulpit at the morning hour's service, bringing the comforting message of the providence of God to His children.

The ladies of the church and their friends of the other churches of the town had the pleasure of hearing Mrs. J. S. Nisbet speak on Korea, at 5 o'clock Sunday afternoon. Among other things told by Mrs. Nisbet was the pathetic story of one of the older women of Korea who had inquired of one of the missionaries how long she had known about Jesus as the Saviour of the world, and who replied that she had known about him from childhood. Then your mother was a Christian said the Korean to the missionary, yes, said the lady, my mother is a Christian, and how long has she known about Jesus, and been a Christian? the missionary replied, that her mother had known about it since her childhood, and then the Korean spoke those awful heart-searching words that may confront us when we stand before God in the day of judgment, then if you have known about Jesus so long, why did you not come and tell us about it before?

At the service Sunday night, Rev. Mr. Nisbet occupied the pulpit, delivering an interesting and instructive address on Korea, and present-day conditions and needs in Korea. Among the instructive yet pathetic things spoken of in his address was the story told of the natives who have not yet accepted the Gospel of Christ, and found light from its teachings, yet groping in darkness, and who in the hours of sickness and death, in their ignorance and superstition, relatives try to appease the wicked spirits who they think have come for their loved-ones, by placing in the room a bowl of rice, some money and a pair of shoes, which are explained thus: the rice is for the spirits to eat so as not to be hungry, the money to buy some little things that they might want, and the shoes to be worn on their journey protecting their feet from injury.

But another picture is given telling of the missionaries carrying the good news of the son of Abraham, the Christ of calvary, offering eternal life to the peoples of the nations of the world, who will accept Christ as their saviour and become his faithful followers, and when His journey shall have been completed, will be received by Jesus the elder brother who will present us faultless, pure and holy to our heavenly Father, in the paradise of God prepared for those who love him from the foundation of the world.

SOUTH CAROLINA

Charleston Presbytery will meet in the North Charleston Church, Thursday, November 1st, at 8 p. m. Alexander Sprunt, S. C.

Pee Dee Presbytery will meet in Kentyre Church near Hamer, S. C., October 23, 1923, at 11 a. m. A. H. McArn, S. C.

New Harmony—Our summer's meeting began on the second Sunday in August and continued through the following Friday. Rev. J. K. Roberts preached 11 splendid sermons, full of rich Gospel truth simply, plainly and forcibly spoken. God's children were greatly refreshed. This is a unique church and congregation of about 100 members, and not one of all our following over eight years of age outside its membership.

By arrangement with Rev. C. W. McCully, pastor of the Woodlawn Presbyterian Church, Sharon, S. C., Dr. Shepperson has been able to continue his services in the Woodlawn Church through Sunday, and have Rev. Mr. McCully here today. It is a splendid thing that this church can exert her evangelistic influence by the loan of its pastor to a church in this Presbytery, and much of such work should be done on the part of the churches in this Presbytery.—Calendar of Purity Church.

Fountain Inn—Rev. C. O'N. Martindale began a meeting here August 23d, which closed the 29th. He made plain the way of salvation in Christ Jesus, showing "What it means to be a child of God." "Why become a Child of God," "How become a Child of God," "How know one is a Child of God." Sin and its consequences were clearly and forcibly shown. This resulted in the reception of ten children into full membership from the Sunday School, and the quickening of God's children.

The church has recently added seven new Sunday School rooms and furnished them. A number of other needed improvements have been made.

Jordan—Wednesday, September 5th, Dr. W. H. Miley, and his singer, Mr. W. Furman Betts, closed a meeting of eight days here. Our church here is small, and the community sparsely settled, but made up of splendid people. The services were held in the school house, the congregations were good, and much interest was manifested.

Cards were signed as follows: Profession of faith 28; reconsecration 74; loyalty pledge 55. Of these last, seven were for life service. Two deacons were ordained and installed.

This church forms a part of the Summerton field. Mr. Vernon A. Crawford, a student in Columbia Seminary, has done good work as supply during the summer. They are looking for a regular pastor, and this is a fine field for a good man.

APPALACHIA

Newland, N. C.—The new church at Smoky will be dedicated September 30th. We expect to have an excellent program.

The Hon. Sam Sells, of Johnson City, Tenn., is expected to speak that day. Also Rev. J. A. MacMillan, D.D., chairman of the Home Mission Committee and Rev. T. J. Hutchison, pastor-evangelist. We also will have singers from Newland, Linola and Linville. Everything will be complete if we can only secure $100 for the ceiling and some odds and ends. We also need some seats and a pulpit. Is there not some church that wants to discard their old seats and pulpit and give them to us and make us glad? If so try and get them to us at once for the dedication. The entire cost of the church will not be over $350, in fact we have paid out but little for anything but for the material. The pastor and the people have done the work and the hauling.

Only two or three friends have given us anything and it was these gifts that made it possible for this needy mountain field to have a church. May God bless these friends for their gifts. Rev. D. Lacy, D.D., of Washington, will help the pastor in a meeting at Newland beginning the tenth, in fact the meeting began the fourth, assisted by Rev. E. C. Bailey, Rev. Wood Hall and McCoy Franklin. So far the meetings have been well attended—it looks as if we were going to have a good meeting. We will begin meetings at Smoky just as soon as they close at Newland. We hope to begin just after the Smoky meeting to build on to the Pinola Church. There have been but few repairs in the last 20 or 25 years. I need at least $2,000 to get the field in good shape. We need five furnaces and we haven't one.

D. B. McLaughlin.

ALABAMA

Montgomery—Dr. Robert McCaslin for ten years the pastor of the First Presbyterian Church occupied his old pulpit Sunday, August 12th and 19th. Large congregations were present and on the 19th 23 new members were received into the church. The Big Brothers' Bible Class celebrated a home-coming day on the 19th at which time many letters and telegrams from former members were read. There were 1,100 men present on this occasion. The class was addressed by Dr. McCaslin and Judge Leon McCord. This class has brought into the church on profession of faith more than 200 men since its organization three years ago, and has contributed about $4,000 to the various causes of benevolence and charity.

GEORGIA

Macon—Rev. Frank Sims, D.D., has declined the call to the Vineville Church of this city.

Atlanta—Rev. J. G. Patton, Jr., formerly of Lawrenceville, has accepted the call of the Pryor Street Church of this city and began his pastorate on the first Sunday in September.

FLORIDA

Rev. A. E. Spencer, for several years the superintendent of Sunday School Work in Suwanee Presbytery has been called to similar work in the Florida Presbytery.

Jacksonville—The Presbytery of Suwanee received under its care as a student for the ministry, at a special meeting on the 10th, Mr. Samuel P. Bowles, a member of the Springfield Church.

Jacksonville—The Riverside Church, of which Dr. Robert H. McCaslin is pastor received 27 new members during the month of July. The pastor spent the month of August on his vacation preaching in Gainesville, Montgomery and Atlanta.

MISSISSIPPI

Crystal Springs—Last week this congregation enjoyed a most delightful picnic at a place about nine miles from town. Swimming, seining, and popular games were interesting features besides the good things to eat. Recently Mr. C. M. Huber presented the church with a piano which helps very much the music. Last Sunday morning six persons were received into the church—four on profession of faith and two by letter. Eight others have been received in the past few months. We are asking our friends to remember in their petitions our evangelistic meetings which will begin October 10th. Rev. Oliver G. Jones, of Pontotoc, Miss., will assist the pastor during these meetings. D. H.

TENNESSEE

Meadow Creek—Rev. E. C. Bailey commenced a meeting here August 27, preaching each night for eight days. The church was filled at each service and more interest (in a quiet way) was manifested than in any meeting we have had for a long time. Many reconsecrated themselves to Christ; many asked for prayer; and 12 made a profession of faith in Christ. This congregation unanimously requested Mr. Bailey to supply them, as he would not consider a call as pastor; and Mr. Bailey being impressed with the splendid opportunities in this Presbytery, consented to do this. From us he went to Newland, N. C. to begin a meeting with Rev. D. B. McLaughlin, and to preach for him until relieved by the coming of Rev. J. McD. Lacy, of Washington, D. C. Returning from North Carolina Mr. Bailey will resume his work here and our church will welcome him to our midst.

Summer Evangelistic Meetings held by the Superintendent of Home Missions, Memphis Presbytery.—July 29th through August 3d I assisted Rev. A. L. Rhea, at Denmark. This was once the leading Presbyterian Church in West Tennessee; but is now very weak on account of the change in the population of the country. Attendance was good at each of the 13 services conducted. Christians of all denominations were strengthened, and one professed faith in Christ and applied for membership at the next regular service. Rev. A. L. Rhea, of Somerville supplies this church one Sabbath a month, and is doing good work.

August 5th through the 12th I assisted candidate W. D. Morriss, at Mason. Seventeen services were conducted and church members of all denominations were revived. Four confessed conversion, three of whom united with our church. Five asked to have their church membership transferred to this church. The outlook is bright for Mason Church.

August 17th through the 24th I assisted Rev. W. E. Powell, at Zion, in Gibson County. This was once a flourishing church, but time has brought about changes which have been adverse to our church. The 14 services were well attended by the entire community, and church members were greatly refreshed. Two professed faith in Christ and one united with the church. Brother Powell is doing splendid work as pastor, and there is a future for old Zion.

August 26th through the 31st I assisted candidate W. D. Morriss at Dancyville. This church was a daughter of Hawfields Church in Alamance County, N. C., and for many years was a good strong church; but like Denmark and Zion, the country has undergone a great change in population, being now filled with tenants and croppers, and these largely negroes. The 12 services were well attended by all the white people of the community, and Christians of all denominations enjoyed the meetings. There were five professions of faith, one of whom united with our church. Mr. Morriss has done good work in Stanton, Mason, Dancyville and Hebron during the summer. He returns to Columbia Seminary the latter part of September. J. J. Hill.

News of the Week

The all-absorbing event of the past week was the earthquake in Japan, which has been without parallel in the past. It is too soon to estimate the loss of life or property; it will run into the millions, whether you count lives or dollars.

On Saturday, September 1st, the earthquake began. Tokio, Yokohama and neighboring cities were burning ruins, while more than 100,000 persons in the vicinity of these cities were reported dead as a result of Saturday's earthquakes, according to advices received in San Francisco by the Associated Press from its Shanghai correspondent and by the Radio Corporation from its station at Tomjoka. Death and destruction were spread over an area roughly comprised within a radius of 50 miles of Tokio. Deaths number 320,000, according to the latest estimate received by the Eastern News Agency from the Osaka Asahi. This estimate said there were 150,000 dead in Tokio; 100,000 in Yokohama; 60,000 in Yokosuka, and 10,000 in Attami.

Water mains have been broken and food supplies destroyed by fire, so that the people are near starvation and suffering from thirst. It is reported, but not confirmed, that the section of Tokio where most of its foreign population resided, is not greatly damaged.

Martial law has been proclaimed and no one is allowed to enter the stricken districts at the capital, although thousands whose friends or relatives resided there have gathered about the city seeking entrance that they may at least find the bodies of their loved ones.

Yokohama is a charnal house, the canals and water front are filled with dead and the stench from decomposing bodies is unbearable, according to refugees arriving from the stricken city. It is estimated that more than 200 foreigners lost their lives there.

The machinery of the American Red Cross was set in motion to speed aid to the stricken millions in the section of Japan devastated by Saturday's earthquake.

Instructions have been cabled to the society's central committee in the Philippines and China, its chapters in the Orient, to inform headquarters immediately as to the number of Red Cross nurses and the amount of relief supplies available for quick dispatch to the zone of disaster. Red Cross officials said parties would be rushed to Japan by destroyer and any other fast ships obtainable. Appropriation of funds to finance the relief will be made, it was declared, as soon as the needs are determined.

Later reports from the Red Cross at national headquarters are that the relief fund had reached a total of $2,247,000, or nearly one-half of the minimum sum of $5,000,000 which is sought.

At the same time John Barton Payne, chairman of the Red Cross, who has returned to Washington to assume direct control of the nation's humanitarian effort, announced that food, medical supplies and clothing to the amount of $2,422,500 had been purchased and would be dispatched to Japan without further delay.

An agreement settling all the main issues in the controversy between mine workers and mine operators, which has caused a shut-down of anthracite mining, was reached as a result of Governor Pinchot's intervention. There remained, however, a number of minor points to be settled before the agreement could be considered complete and a meeting of miners' and operators' representatives, called to consider these, adjourned without final action.

More confidence over fall trade prospects reflected by a quiet sentiment all around were noticeable in financial quarters during the past week. While improvement in the stock market has not proceeded far enough as yet to attract the public which naturally becomes shy of re-entering after a long period of declining prices, many active traders are reported to be working on the constructive side.

Collections of internal revenue by the United States from all sources during the fiscal year ended June 30th totaled $2,621,745,227, a decrease of $575,705,855 from the total for the preceding fiscal year. Of the revenue received last year, $1,689,177,409 was derived from taxes on incomes and profits, as compared with $2,086,918,464, in the preceding 12 months.

If the precedents for a half century are followed, Mrs. Harding, widow of the late President of the United States, will receive the residue of her husband's salary for the fiscal year 1923-1924, which amounts to $68,750. In addition to this sum, Mrs. Harding will receive $5,000 a year as the widow of a President, just as Mrs. Thomas J. Preston, widow of President Cleveland, and Mrs. Roosevelt, widow of President Roosevelt, do.

The rigid airship ZR-1 of the United States Navy, made its first trial flight over the naval air station. The monster ship rose rapidly to a height of 1,000 feet and headed east for the Atlantic ocean. As she rose two airplanes, one representing the Army and the other the navy, left the ground to accompany the balloon on her maiden voyage.

The excelsior plant of the chair company at Thomasville, N. C., was burned September 1st. The loss will reach one hundred thousand dollars, partially covered by insurance.

Henry Ford took under advisement a request by Secretary of War Weeks, concurred in by President Coolidge, to modify his offer for the purchase and lease of the government's power and nitrate projects at Muscle Shoals, Ala. Mr. Ford is expected to give his final decision after thorough consideration at Detroit. Secretary Weeks is understood to have asked Mr. Ford to eliminate the Gorgas power plant on the Warrior river from his proposal for the operation of the Muscle Shoals property.

The railroads, Southern, Seaboard, C. C. & O., Richmond, Fredericksburg and Potomac, have increased wages of employees, effective August 1st and July 1st.

A flat advance of $60 a bale will be made to members of the North Carolina Cotton Growers' Co-operative Association, as first payment on cotton handled through the association, it was announced following the regular meeting of the directors of the association.

Italy and Greece are on the verge of war, and the League of Nations has been asked to intervene. Italy refuses to recognize the right to do so.

Premier Mussolini, it is understood, is ready to withdraw the Italian delegates from the Geneva conference if his viewpoint concerning the conflict with Greece is not shared by the League of Nations.

It is reported that 16 children were killed by the Italian bombardment of Corfu.

Educational

Davidson—College opens formally on Thursday, September 13th, but vacation is at end on Monday the 10th for students and teachers alike. On that evening there will be held the first faculty meeting since the end of the session in June and with Tuesday begins the heavy work of registration and classification of all students, not to mention examinations. Unless very many should unexpectedly at the 11th hour withdraw their applications for admission and dormitory space, the buildings will be filled to overflowing and a number of students will have to be assigned rooms in town. It is clear at this writing that the new large four-story dormitory—the restored and enlarged Watts dormitory—cannot be finished for the opening of the term, but a temporary crowding for a brief time and doubling-up of roomers will be the only inconvenience. Inability to get materials shipped in promptly and not the lack of foresight on the part of those in charge nor the lack of laborers and builders is responsible for the delay.

The indications are that all of the faculty will be in place with the opening of the term.

Dr. and Mrs. J. M. McConnell landed in New York from Europe on the 4th and Dr. and Mrs. W. R. Grey are expected to reach home on the 11th from their stay in Europe. The summer absentees and instructors in the several summer schools at State College, the University of North Carolina and the University of Virginia (Professors Lingle, Shewmake, Hood and Fleagle with the Douglasses that were at Cornell) have all returned. New faces are Professor Dendy, succeeding Professor Wagner in Public Speaking and Debate, Professor Blythe in Spanish, C. K. Brown in Mathematics, W. Bebane in Physics, and in the R. O. T. C. Captain Weems, a West Point soldier, formerly of Tennessee, who succeeds Captain Wetherby, assigned to duty in Panama.

Dr. Richards' pulpit was filled the past Sunday by Rev. H. M. (Home Mission, he himself terms it) Pressly, who according to his usual fashion preached two strong and edifying sermons, mingling theology, ethics, practical and homely philosophy, religion of true type and humor all in one.

Westminster School—The Westminster School reopened Monday, September 3, with fair prospects for a successful school year, according to information received, which will doubtless be good news to numbers of the members of King's Mountain Presbytery.

The opening devotional exercises were conducted by Dr. A. R. Shaw, of Charlotte, who spoke on "The Three Royal H's," the trainings of the head, the heart and the hands. Rev. J. C. Grier assisted in the opening exercises of the school.

The names of the members of the faculty follow: Prof. T. L. O'Kelly, of Georgia, principal; Messrs. W. G. Rhodes, of Hendersonville, and Miles Hampton, of the Westminster community.

Agnes Scott College—The 35th session of Agnes Scott College will begin September 12th. The college will open with a capacity attendance. The limit for several years has been 450 students. Applications have been received from Canada to New Mexico, and from Florida to Minnesota, besides foreign countries.

There will be several new members of the faculty this year. Dr. Sanford M. Salyer comes as head of the English department. He has his Ph.D. from Harvard University, and has been on the faculty of the University of Georgia, University of Oklahoma, and Sweet Briar College. Miss Elizabeth Jackson, Ph.D. will teach in the department of history. She received her degree from the University of Pennsylvania. She has been teaching at Russell Sage College. Miss Emily S. Dexter, Ph.D., will be in the department of Education. She holds her doctorate from the University of Wisconsin. Miss Dexter has been head of the department of education at Missouri Wesleyan College. Miss Mary Campbell, M.A., comes from the Latin department of Vassar College to fill a temporary position in the Latin work at Agnes Scott.

In the administrative side of the college, President J. R. McCain will serve his first term, having succeeded the late F. H. Gaines, the first and only president of the institution until his death in April. Professor S. G. Stukes has also been elected registrar of the college.

Among the recent gifts to Agnes Scott is the legacy of Miss Jennie Inman which has just been turned over to the institution by her executor. It consists of $75,000 worth of Atlanta real estate, and stocks and bonds amounting to about $85,000 additional. This is one of the largest gifts for education of women ever made in the South.

Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, Va.—The very extensive structural changes in Watts Hall, undertaken for the purpose of providing for the increased attendance of students, have been pushed energetically through the summer and are now approaching completion. It is hoped that the building will be in perfect readiness at the beginning of the session on September 26th. The new dormitory across the way on the Westwood Place near Mission Court is also rapidly approaching completion. The two additional houses purchased in the Spring have been put into good order, and it is expected now that all who wish to enter seminary this Fall can be accommodated.

A gentleman in the North, who is much interested in theological seminary, sends the following gratifying quotation from the Bible Champion in regard to Dr. James I. Vance's volume on "Being A Preacher:"

"The book comprises lectures on the James Sprunt Foundation at Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, Va. You may know that if Dr. Vance was invited to give these lectures by that school he stands on a solid evangelical basis."

The gentleman sending the quotation says, "That is one of the handsomest compliments I have ever seen. You are a city set on a hill, a lamp on a lampstand, a Tenneriffe or Atlas unremoved, the shadow of a great rock in a weary land. You have fought a good fight. You have kept the faith. You are known and read of all men."

The Mississippi people were so much impressed with Dr. Thomas Cary Johnson's lectures to the Synodical Conferences of Christian Workers at Hattiesburg that they have requested him to allow them to have them published in book form.

Another new book of great interest just appearing from the press is "The Preacher's Old Testament" by Rev. Edward Mack, D.D., McCormick Professor of Hebrew and the Interpretation of the Old Testament. It comprises the five lectures delivered by Dr. Mack on the L. P. Stone Foundation at Princeton Seminary last spring. They are not technical but popular, and, as he is a man of specially rich attainments in this field and a writer of great charm, the book will be welcomed not only by our ministers but by all intelligent students of the Old Testament.

The work on the new edition of the Alumni Catalogue has been diligently prosecuted throughout the summer, and most of the thousand living alumni have sent in the information requested by the editors, but there are some from whom they have not yet heard. A second copy of the blank asking for the requisite information is being sent out this week. It is earnestly requested that the alumni who have not yet furnished this information will do so without delay. The time is short and it is desired that the catalogue shall be as complete as possible.

Many inquiries have been received as to the exact dates of the James Sprunt Lectures by Rev. James Black, of Edinburgh. He is expected to begin on October 4th and to close on October 11th, the lectures being given on eight successive evenings at 8 o'clock in Schauffler Hall.

LIVE NEAR TO GOD

Lord Bacon says: "Let not a man trust his victory over his nature too far; for nature will be buried a great time, and yet revive upon the temptation." Furthermore, the mere entertainment of a sound morality in one's thoughts will not be enough to keep nature dormant. Only a passion for righteousness—a profound spiritual attachment to God—can do that.

THE RED CROSS EXPRESS

The Willing Workers had earned ten dollars for the Red Cross fund by selling rags, paper and rubber, but now that housecleaning time was over there seemed to be nothing to do but wait until spring came again. There were eight of the Willing Workers—four boys and four girls—and none of them were past nine years old, so it did seem like a hopeless task. The big boys and girls had the war gardens, and the mothers were sewing and knitting, but the younger folks could think of no service for their country.

"Hey! Janie! Billy!" called old Mrs. Proctor, pounding on the porch with her cane to make the children hear. "You children make so much noise that you can't hear when you're called. I want one of you to run up to the corner and see if you can find Grant's express wagon for me. I have a big bundle of socks to send to the Red Cross rooms, and I want to hire him to carry them for me in his wagon."

"We'll take them for you!" shouted five of the Willing Workers at once.

"It's too big a bundle for you to carry," said Mrs. Proctor.

But when Billy and Fred came with their stout little wagons Mrs. Proctor said she felt sure they could carry the work all right, so she did it up in two large parcels.

"And bring me some yarn back again," she told them. "I knit a sock a day and yarn runs out fast."

The children did the errand in a very short time, and when they came back Mrs. Proctor wanted to give them fifty cents, because she said that was what Joe Grant would charge.

"We don't want a penny," said Billy. "We're working for our country."

"Let's go up to the Red Cross rooms and tell the ladies that if they want any bundles delivered, we'll take them," said Fred. "Mrs. Proctor said she would give that fifty cents to the Red Cross Society when we did not take her money, so we're helping two ways."

The Red Cross ladies were delighted when they found out that four or five stout little wagons would be at their service during vacation, and after school hours later, for they knew it would save many dollars for the society. The express business became so popular that the Willing Workers were not worn out with too many tasks, for other boys and girls willingly joined in the good work. All summer the little wagons rolled back and forth down the shady streets, and the children felt proud of helping the good work along.

"I declare, I used to think those children were the noisiest, loudest youngsters I ever saw," said old Mrs. Proctor to old Mrs. Lake one beautiful autumn day, as they sat knitting together, "but I've changed my mind. I never have to wait a minute for my yarn, and they're so willing to do errands for the Red Cross. They are the best children in the world."

"I think so, too," said Mrs. Lake, forgetting how many times she had grumbled about their noise. "I never dreamed they would give up their play time so willingly, but it only shows that even the children of America want to help win the war. Maybe some folks think it a little thing to take their express wagons and deliver parcels, but I know it is no small sacrifice, and if they were not the best children in the world they never would have done as much as they have this summer."—Hilda Richmond, in The Herald and Presbyterian.

THE LAND OF SWEETS

Timmie stretched himself out on the long green grass and yawned. It was a hot August morning, and he had tired himself out weeding in the flower beds. "How I wish I had a glass of chocolate ice cream soda!" he said.

Now, if Timmie had one fault in the world, it was that he wanted too many sweets. Some one was always saying: "No more sugar on your oatmeal, Timmie. It's too sweet now."

Or if he were eating waffles: "That's enough sirup. You're simply drowning your cakes."

If he ate grapefruit in the morning, he smothered it with sugar; and if he made lemonade, he put five or six spoonfuls in a glass. Nearly all his spending money went for cakes and candy—that is, things used to be that way. But Timmie saw for himself that he was getting too fat, and he knew that his brother Robert was stronger by far, although he wasn't a great deal older.

Timmy was a brave boy, and he was trying to get over his habit, only he couldn't look at things quite in the right way.

"I suppose I'll go in and get an old glass of water," he grumbled. "I'd like to go to a place where it wouldn't be wrong to eat and drink only sweet things."

"I'll take you to the Land of Sweets," half sang a birdlike voice.

"Who are you?" asked Timmie.

"I am the bluebird of your happiness, Timmie."

"Well, you seem to know who I am. I'll follow you, little bluebird."

"Then sit down on my tail," sang the bluebird.

Timmie looked and saw her tail grow long and broad until he could easily seat himself on it. Then they sailed away. They sailed and they sailed until they came to a beautiful lake. On the shore of the lake the bluebird settled. Timmie got off, and the tail went back to its usual size.

"What clear water!" said Timmie.

"That isn't water, answered the bluebird: "that is lemonade. Try it."

Timmie knelt down and took a long sip.

"It's good," he said, "and very sweet; just what I like."

"Of course it's good. Now look about you," said the bluebird, for this is the Land of the Sweets.

"The trees are rather odd," noticed Timmie. "The leaves are as round as cakes. Those mountains over there are just the color of chocolate. I see that they are covered with snow."

The bluebird trilled an odd little laugh: "Just pick a bunch of leaves and let's go over to the mountains."

They were only a little way off, and in a moment they had reached them. Without thinking, Timmie nibbled leaves. He found them made of richest cake.

"Better have some chocolate and vanilla ice cream," laughed the bluebird, pointing to the mountains.

Timmie picked up first a white rock and then a brown one and found them delicious.

So it went on. They passed through flower gardens where blossoms of every color were made of candies of every kind. Timmie ate so much of everything that finally even he had all the sweets that he could eat.

"I'd like a glass of water," he said. "I don't care for lemonade just now, so I'll drink at this fountain."

A white spray was falling over the flowers so cold that it did melt them. But when Timmie drank he discovered that it was a soda fountain and not water. For the first time in his life he was disappointed in soda.

"I'll try this brook," he said next.

But the brook was clear sirup.

"What a sweet little boy!" he heard some one say. "I could eat him alive."

Now, when Timmie was very little he had heard people say that, but no one said it much any more. He looked behind him and saw a black bear cub.

"Don't mind. He's only a licorice cub," said the bluebird.

Timmie looked down at himself to see what it was that the bear wanted to eat, and he saw that his legs were red and white stripes.

"I've turned to peppermint stick candy!" he cried. "I'm so cold too."

"That's because your heart is ice cream. The sun will do you good, my dear," advised the bluebird.

So Timmie sat where the sun could strike him hard, and pretty soon he began to melt and melt and melt until finally he had all dripped away.

"Why, I've been asleep in this hot, hot sun," he said. "How could I sleep? My, how thirsty I am!"

He ran into the kitchen to the cook. "Mammy, please give me a good cold drink," he said.

"Wait a minute, honey, and mammy will make you a good, sweet lemonade."

"O no! Water; good, cold water," said Timmie. "And, mammy, please give me a slice of bread and butter."

"With plenty of sugar on it, ah 'spose," said mammy.

"Not this time, mammy. I've had enough sugar. Some day soon I'll want some more. I'm not sick of it. But some things, mammy, are better plain."

"La child," said mammy, "how you do explain matters! You're bound to be a professor some day just like your pa."—By Viola Woodville, in Christian Advance.

THE GRUMBLE-BEE

Have you ever been stung by the Grumble-bee?

If not, you may well rejoice.

A surly fellow, and grouchy, he,

With his rumbly, bumbly voice.

The under lip is the place he stings

Till it swells to a fearful size.

The pain is so great that it sometimes wrings

The tears from the victim's eyes.

You'll hear him buzzing his way along

Ere the sunshine had dried the dew;

All out of tune is his booming song:

"Too-too, too-too, too-too-o!"

"Too cloudy," "too sunny," "too wet,"

"too dry,"

"Too sour," "too soft," "too sweet,"

"Too much to do-o!" "too-too, too-too-o!"

And more that I won't repeat.

Oh, bold and bad is the Grumble-bee!

He spares neither small nor great.

Run quick, when his ugly face you see,

And hide ere it be too late!

For the string is quick, but the cure is long,

And all in a moment, you

Will find yourself droning his hateful song:

"Too-too, too-too, too-too-o!"

PRINCESS SILVER FUR AND THE PUSSY IN THE GLASS

When I was a little girl we had a beautiful silver Persian cat. Her fur was so long and soft and thick that she looked like a big, fluffy ball. Her name was Princess Silver Fur, but we called her Princess, and she seemed just like one.

She always wanted to get to the top of everything, and would climb to the curtain pole or sit on the top of any door that chanced to be open.

One day she went into a bedroom and gracefully walked up the handles of the bureau drawers. She stepped so daintily among the combs and brushes, perfume bottles and cold-cream jars that she did not disturb even a hairpin.

And then she caught sight of the pussy in the mirror! She had never seen herself in a glass, and thought it was a strange cat.

Oh, how angry she was! She snarled and spit, ruffled up her fur and struck out with her paws to slap and scratch. Of course the pussy in the mirror did just the same, and after a minute or two of fighting, Princess Silver Fur saw there was something strange and stood still to wonder about it all.

She waved her beautiful, feathery tail and turned her head from side to side. Presently she seemed to think that the cat she saw was very pretty indeed, and that she liked her very much; so she began to purr and tried to snuggle their two heads together. Of course she only touched the hard, cold glass.

She stood back a little and wondered how she could make friends. Then she very slowly walked as close up to the mirror as she could get, doubled her four paws under her, and lay down, purring just one big purr. Every now and then she opened one eye to see if the other cat were right there beside her and, always finding

RHEUMATISM AND INDIGESTION

Practically all physicians and medical writers are agreed that there is a close relationship between Indigestion and Rheumatism. This view is substantiated by the fact that Shivar Spring Water, which is probably the best American mineral water for Dyspepsia and Indigestion, relieves Rheumatism and the Rheumatoid diseases, such as Gout, Sciatica, Neuralgia and Nervous Headache. Physicians who have studied this water and who have observed its effects in their practice believe that it relieves these maladies by rendering the digestion complete and perfect and thereby preventing the formation of those poisons which inflame the joints and irritate the nerves, and also by eliminating, through the kidneys, such poisons as have already been formed.

If you suffer from Rheumatism, Indigestion, or from any curable disease accept the guarantee offer below by signing your name. Clip and mail to Shivar Springs,

Box 3D, Shelton, S. C.

First, our sense of bereavement at his death,

Third, our sympathy for his family and friends in their bereavement.

If I could wash my foolish thoughts
And hang them fresh and white
Upon the line across the yard
To catch the wind and light . . .

They would not seem so dull, I think,
So weary and so old,

Once they had known the wind's clear touch,
The sunlight's sudden gold.

I think that I could put them on
And wear them gladly then,
And teach myself the way to laugh,
The way to smile again.

MRS. JOHNSON'S SUMMER BOARDER

H. M. Farmer, in Epworth Herald

The young man's worn face brightened as he lifted his hat to the girl. The young man was very young, and the girl was good to look upon. She was dressed in white—even her dainty slippers were white. Under her arm she carried a book and a cushion. Undoubtedly she was a stranger in Harmony Center. In Harmony Center women did not wear white. It made too much washing. Also in Harmony Center women did not appear on the street—road rather—with books and cushions at ten o'clock in the morning. Such an act would have branded them as "shiftless." Clearly, the girl was a stranger, but a friendly stranger. Surely, then, it was the young man's duty to be friendly also.

"Good morning!" she said in answer to his greeting. "I have been told that down the road at the distance of about a quarter of a mile there is an apple tree in the middle of a large field. The apples on this tree are summer apples, already ripe, and may be had for the picking. In all my city-spent years I never dreamed that such a thing could be. I am going to see this marvel with my own eyes. Tell me, on your word of honor as a gentleman, is this thing true, or have I been deceived?"

The young man laughed. "It is quite true," he assured her. "I have seen the tree often. In fact, I am on my way there now. May I walk with you?"

The girl surrendered the cushion and the book, and the two walked on down the road together. It was not long before the self-appointed guide was able to point out the apple-tree standing in the middle of a large field. True to report, it hung full of ripe apples. The young man soon filled the girl's lap, supplied himself also, then seated himself beside her.

"Don't you think," said the girl, after a short silence, during which she tested the quality of the apples, "that it is time that we were introducing ourselves?"

"I had flattered myself that we were fairly well acquainted, considering the amount of time we have had to get acquainted in," he replied.

"Oh, we are," the girl assured him, "but I mean the conventional things—name, age, place of abode, and so on."

"In your case that is entirely unnecessary," laughed the young man.

"Your garrulous landlady has attended to that for you. All Harmony Center knows you are Mrs. Johnson's summer boarder. Your name is Helen Jackson. She has not been able to find out your exact age yet, but she has her suspicions. You come from the great and wicked city of Chicago. Mrs. Johnson watched you narrowly for some days to see if you smoked cigarettes or did any other wicked things which she has been told are habits with women in the large cities. Now, however, her mind is quite relieved on that score. You are an orphan. You write for the magazines and, in spite of the fact that you are a city girl, you are not at all stuck up. Do you wish any more information about yourself?" he asked mischievously, "for I can refer you to Mrs. Johnson for anything else which you care to know."

"Shades of Sherlock Holmes, no!" cried the girl, wiping the tears of laughter from her eyes. "But tell me, why, oh, why, is my worthy landlady wasted in Harmony Center? I assure you she extracted that information so painlessly that I never knew it. As a detective in a large city, she could make her fortune."

"She meant no harm in extracting it, Miss Jackson, or even in spreading it," he assured her. "There are so few of us in Harmony Center that we take a friendly interest in each other and in the stranger within our gates as well. Mrs. Johnson has the kindest heart in the world. She will take good care of you."

"Unfortunately for me," said Helen, after a short silence, "my landlady has not been so communicative about her neighbors as she has about her boarder. I have no information at all about yourself."

"Do you see that steeple down there in the village?" he replied. "That is Harmony Center's only church. I am its minister. My name is Edward Rob-

JOIN THE STANDARD PIANO CLUB

AND PLAY WHILE YOU PAY

This Club Plan of piano buying solves all the complex problems of the piano purchaser, and takes out all the risks so frequently found in the regular methods. The Club positively insures satisfaction—with the quality and tone of the instrument—the price—and the terms. If not, the instrument is returnable and your money refunded—every cent you've paid in. You have nothing to do with organizing a club—the management does this—but you get the advantage of being a member of the club, comprising 100 members. And, it is through the organization of such a Club that makes it possible for you to secure a standard grade piano at a reasonable price, on a safe and convenient plan of payments. This is not the installment plan—it is better, safer and easier—it is the ideal way to secure your piano.

A Saving In Price

This is one of the attractive features of the Club Plan of buying a piano. And, how is it done? The explanation is simple. A Club of 100 Buyers, securing 100 pianos can, most naturally, buy them for much less money than the individual who only buys one at a time. This plan gives the Factory an enormous volume, and by turning out a big volume they recognize the big saving, which they, in turn, give to the Club Members. Thus, you get the lowest possible price ever paid for a high grade instrument. You are responsible only for your own purchase—we assume the responsibility for securing the 99 other Club Members. You should join this Club today!

Our Guarantee

In joining this Piano Club you take absolutely no risk whatever. Each and every member is fully protected in every respect. The Club provides a permanent guarantee against all imperfections of workmanship and materials, made by one of the oldest and strongest piano houses in America. If you could read the hundreds of letters we daily receive from enthusiastic Club Members, you would not hesitate to join the Club. You, too, will be just as greatly pleased.

Ludden & Bates, Atlanta, Ga.—"The Piano is a treasure, and everyone remarks on the sweetness of tone, and it has been so much pleasure to the family. The Club Plan places the Piano in so many homes that otherwise would have to wait an indefinite time to buy. Accept my sincere thanks for your courteous treatment." MRS. R. A. SPINKS.

College Grove, Tenn.
 Ludden & Bates, Atlanta, Ga.—"In regard to the Piano, I am perfectly delighted with it, and everyone that has heard it, or played on it says they never heard a finer toned one, and I can observe such a vast difference in this one and others that are in this community, that have been placed by agents. Too, every one, even those that know nothing about music, can tell the superiority of my piano over others. Wishing you much success, I am," MRS. JORDAN RIGGS.

Columbia, S. C.
 Ludden & Bates, Atlanta, Ga.—"I have had one of your pianos in my home for several months and I find that it comes up to your representation in every particular. Your Club Plan for the payment of same strikes me as being very lenient and I think that every home can afford a Piano on this basis. Trusting that you have a very prosperous business along this line, I am," MRS. AVA JACKSON.

inson. I try to care for the spiritual needs of the people in Harmony Center and the surrounding country. Sometimes I think that I am having a little success, but other times I feel that I am failing completely. This morning I am in the latter mood, and city boarders are responsible, in part at least, for my discouragement."

The girl looked at him questioningly, but said nothing. Evidently she was waiting for an explanation.

"You see, Miss Jackson," continued the young minister, "people from the city are continually coming here to spend their vacations. Then all the time that they are here they criticize our little town, and talk of the delights of city life, until our young people grow wild with the desire to see its delights for themselves. At the earliest possible moment they leave home and go to the city to work in stores and offices for a pittance. They live in hall bedrooms, eat poor food, wear shoddy clothing, and call it 'seeing life.' God help the poor youngsters!"

"I really owe you an apology for this soliloquy," he broke off suddenly, turning to the girl. "I was really talking more to myself than to you. The last possible pianist for the church left the village this week to take a position in a department store in the city at the munificent salary of nine dollars per week. I am facing the prospect of conducting my church services in the future without music. The prospect is decidedly disheartening. Hence this outburst."

"It certainly is not a pleasant prospect," agreed Mrs. Johnson's boarder, sympathetically. "I—I play a little. If I could—"

"Will you do it?" interrupted the minister, eagerly. "But I am sure that you will! Oh, if you knew what a relief this is to me! Do you mind if I shout?"

"Not at all," she answered laughingly, "only don't let Mrs. Johnson hear you, or I will be forced to explain."

Next morning Harmony Center was electrified to see Mrs. Johnson's boarder in church. When the minister went to speak to her before the service, and she left her seat to take a place at the piano, an audible gasp of surprise came from the congregation.

When Helen had told the minister that she played "a little," she was measuring her talent according to the standards of the outside world. In all of its experience, Harmony Center had never heard such playing. The old hymns took on a new meaning under her skillful touch. Tired shoulders straightened and dull, worn faces became glorified as the congregation put its whole soul as well as its voice into "Coronation" and "Jerusalem, My Happy Home," inspired by the skillful work of the pianist.

"I never can thank you enough," Edward Robinson told her at the end of the service. "Your playing transformed the congregation and the preacher as well."

Much as he desired it, he did not ask her to come back for the evening service. His experience with summer boarders in the church had made him feel their unreliability. "It's something new for her," he thought. "She will soon get tired of it like all the rest. I must not develop the habit of depending upon her."

Nevertheless, when she appeared in the church door just before the beginning of the evening service, Robinson confessed to himself that he had hoped for her coming. Evidently others, too, had expected her, for the church was filled, a thing never before known to happen on a hot summer evening. The morning congregation had spread the news of the morning service throughout Harmony Center and the surrounding country.

"This is your congregation, not mine," said Robinson to Helen, as he stood beside her a moment later. "They have come hoping that you will play again."

Helen looked over the congregation, and involuntarily her eyes filled with tears. "Oh," she whispered to him, "do you suppose that they really love music like that?"

"They are starving for it!" he responded instantly, "but they never knew it until this morning."

Helen made no reply, but she slipped over to the piano, and in the minutes that remained before the service she played for the people of Harmony Center. She seemed to feel instinctively what would please her audience, and she gave them variations of the old hymns and songs, with an occasional theme from some of the great masters of music. In all her life, Helen had never played as she played that evening.

That experience sealed Helen's relation to the village church. All through the long, hot summer, Sunday morning and evening found her in her place at the piano. She was happier that she had believed it was possible for her to be. She had lived a peculiarly lonely life in the city, for she had no relatives, and she made few friends. The affection of the people of Harmony Center, as she came to know them in their homes and in the church, became very dear to her. For the first time in her life, too, she felt that she was really necessary, and she found the novelty of the sensation pleasant.

The four weeks which Helen had planned to spend in the country lengthened into twelve. Each week she told herself that she must surely be going, but the end of the week found her still at Mrs. Johnson's with her going postponed "just one more week."

"I must be going back to Chicago next week, I think," she said to Robinson, as they sat on Mrs. Johnson's veranda one evening after walking home from church. "I have been here now much longer than I dreamed of staying when I came."

"How in the world can we spare you?" he asked. "Harmony Center needs you so much."

"Oh Harmony Center will soon find some one to fill my place, and forget me when I am gone," she replied lightly.

"No," he said, "Harmony Center will not forget. You will go back to your friends, your writing, your music, and you will soon forget us, but we have nothing to do except to remember. I—well, I shall remember most

SOUTHERN RAILWAY SYSTEM

Keeping pace with the South

The first American locomotive to enter actual service was the "Best Friend" of 1830. Built in a New York foundry, shipped by sea to Charleston, it hauled the first passenger train on what is now the Southern Railway System.

Twenty-two hundred locomotives, some of them fifty times as heavy as this famous pioneer engine, and 70,000 cars, operating on 8,300 miles of Southern Railway System lines, are now doing the work that was begun by the "Best Friend."

From the Ohio and the Potomac to the Gulf, from the Atlantic to the Mississippi, the far-flung rails of the Southern reach across twelve states with 40,000,000 inhabitants.

The Southern serves the South—from the northern gateways at Washington, Cincinnati and Louisville—and the western gateways at St. Louis and Memphis—to the ocean ports of Norfolk, Charleston, Savannah, Brunswick and Jacksonville—and the Gulf ports of Mobile and New Orleans.

Operated by men of the South, who have been bred in its traditions to understand its problems and its needs, the Southern keeps pace with the South. The investment in its properties is now more than $710,000,000, of which $285,000,000 has been expended in the past two decades.

With the continued cooperation of the people of the South, we will be enabled to command the capital for the greater transportation facilities that Southern development will inevitably demand.

of all. I suppose that you know that already, but I could not let you go without telling you."

His voice broke suddenly at the end of the sentence. He was not looking at Helen. He was gazing straight before him across the lawn, his hands clenched and his body rigid with the effort to control the rising tide of emotion within him.

Helen leaned toward him with a great joy in her eyes. "Edward," she whispered, "are you trying to propose to me? Because if you are, you are not doing it right. I write for magazines, and I know."

Down in Texas the short cotton crop forced a large number of country negroes to the cities. One of them applied for a job at one of the large employment agencies. "There's a job at the Eagle Laundry," said the man behind the desk. "Want it?" The applicant shifted uneasily from one foot to the other. "Tell you how it is, boss," he said finally. "I sure does want a job mighty bad, but de fack s, I ain't never washed a eagle."—The Open Road.

THE CHILDREN UP IN HEAVEN

"Oh! what do you think the angels say?"

Said the children up in heaven;
"There's a dear little girl coming home today,
She's almost ready to fly away
From the earth we used to live in.
Let's go and open the gates of pearl—
Open them wide for the new little girl."

Said the children up in heaven.

"God wanted her here where His little ones meet,"

Said the children up in heaven;
"She has grown too fair, she has grown too sweet
For the earth we used to live in.
She needed the sunshine, this dear little girl,
That gilds this side of the gates of pearl."

Said the children up in heaven.

"So the King called down from the angels' dome,"

Said the children up in heaven;
"My little darling, arise and come
To the place prepared in the Father's home,
The home my children live in.
Let's go and watch the gates of pearl,
Ready to welcome the new little girl,"

Said the children up in heaven.

"Far down on the earth do you hear them weep?"

Said the children up in heaven;
"For the dear little girl has gone asleep;
The shadows fall as the night clouds sweep
O'er the earth we used to live in.
But we'll go and open the gates of pearl;
Oh! why do thy weep for the dear little girl?"

Said the children up in heaven.

"Fly with her quickly, O angels dear,"

Said the children up in heaven.
"See! she is coming! Look there!
Look there!
At the jasper light on her sunny hair,
Where the veiling clouds are riven.
Oh, hush, hush! All the swift wings furl;
For the King himself, at the gates of pearl,
Is taking her hand; dear, tired little girl,
And is leadig her into heaven."

WE CERTAINLY DO

Oh, say, don't you wish that some one would write

A singable tune to our National Anthem?

For the sentiment's good and the words are all right,

But merely the tune is sufficient to can them.

For it sinks in the bass,
And it soars into space,
And no one can ever keep up with its pace.

'Tis "The Star-Spangled Banner," that wonderful thing

That every one loves, but that no can sing.

Oh, it sounds well enough when it's played by a band

To make all Americans love and revere it,

And to make all the loyal ones instantly stand

Whenever it happens to play and they hear it.

But my voice is so weak,
When I try for the peak

I quaver and tremble and end in a squeak.

'Tis "The Star-Spangled Banner," that wonderful thing

That every one loves, but that no one can sing.

TAKING CARE OF YOUR CLOTHES

When pressing trousers or other articles of clothing where creases are necessary, add a teaspoon of sugar to a cup of water and sponge crease with it. You will find the crease will stay in twice as long.

A little orris-root tied up in a piece of muslin and boiled with handkerchiefs will give them the fresh delightful perfume of violets.

When rubber heels begin to run over, remove them from the shoes with a small screw-driver and reverse the rubber heels. This brings the wear on the other edge and gives double usefulness to one pair of rubbed heels.

Before threading a needle with wool, twist a tiny piece of cotton around the end of the thread and into a point. The thread will then go into the small eye of a needle without any trouble.

When the fastener on a glove comes off, reinforce the place with a bit of old kid, then scw on an ordinary dress fastener in place of the old clasp.—From the Designer.

REWARD

By Blanche Bane Kuder

All day I did the little things,
The little things that do not show;
I brought the kindling for the fire,
I set the candles in a row,
I filled a bowl with marigolds,
The shallow bowl you love the best—
And made the house a pleasant place
Where wearines smight take its rest.

The hours sped on. My eager feet
Could not keep pace with my desire,
So much to do, so little time!
I would not let my body tire.
Yet, when the coming of the night
Blotted the garden from my sight,
And on the narrow graveled walks
Between the guarding flower stalks
I heard your step, I was not through
With services I meant for you!

You came into the quiet room
That glowed enchanted with the bloom
Of yellow flame. I saw your face
Illumined by the fire-lit space
Slowly grow still and comforted.
"It's good to be at home," you said.

Why He Felt Safe

Pat was employed by a subway construction company. As he was leaving the house his wife said:

"Do mind yez don't git hurt, Pat. It's so dangerous working in that subway."

"That's all right, Biddy," replied Pat. "I borrowed two dollars from the foreman and he don't let me do any dangerous work any more."—Selected.

A wise Congressman confessed that, although he was always forgetting their faces and never remembering their names, he had no difficulty in being pleasant to his followers in the House. "When I meet somebody in the lobby whom I don't know from Adam, and I see he expects me to know who he is, I take him warmly by the hand, look straight into his eyes, and say, 'And how is the old complaint?' I have never known it to fail."—Epworth Herald.

Linotype Laughs

C. D. Gibson, of Life, has a choice collection of newspaper misprints, some of which are screams. At a dinner in New York he quoted a number of them. One was about a bishop who was laid up with a cold. A newspaper reported that he was "confined to the house with a violent scold."

Another told of a "surgeon" being taken alive in the river and being sold for six cents a pound. But the most amusing one, he said, was clipped from a Vermont paper. This paper, wishing to say in praise of a very aged and distinguished citizen that he was "a noble old burgher proudly living in his native State," was made to say, according to Mr. Gibson, "John Green is a nobby old burgher, prowling around in a naked state."

Well, What Is It?

In the motion picture, "Robin Hood," Lady Marian desires to send a message to the Earl of Huntington, and chooses Little John to act as her messenger. She presents John with a scroll which is protected by what seems to be a black case or tube.

As she handed it over, a small boy in the audience asked his mother what it was.

"That's a flashlight," she answered in a loud voice.

"Don't show your ignorance, Mary," snapped her husband. "They didn't have flashlights in those days. That's a thermos bottle."—American Legion Weekly.

Where Cash Is Bulky

A story is told of a continental traveler who brought with him into the restaurant car an enormous bag, which he deposited by the side of the table.

The conductor promptly rebuked him, saying, "You mustn't bring that bag in here. You must put your luggage in the van."

"That's not my luggage," was the reply. "I'm going to Austria; that's my purse."—Toronto Telegram.

THE EVIDENCE OF CHRISTIAN EXPERIENCE

Can Christian experience be properly addressed as proof of the truth of Christianity? Some books on the Christian Evidences make use of it. Is it entitled to be heard as a witness in the case? Of course, it will be regarded as a biased witness. When a Christian says "I know from my own experience that Christianity is true," the non-Christian might plausibly reply in the language of Scripture, "Thou bearest witness of thyself, thy witness is not true."

There can be no doubt that experience is the most satisfactory of all testimony to the man who has the experience. The Apostle John says: "He that believeth hath the witness within himself." And Jesus said: "If any man willet to do his will, he shall know of the teaching whether it is of God, or whether I speak from myself." The Apostle Paul also speaks about the spirit of God bearing witness with the believer's spirit. When some one asked a Christian woman why she believed the Bible to be true, her prompt answer was, "because I am acquainted with the author." It is unquestionable that a ripe Christian experience begets the assurance of faith. It speaks the language of certainty. "I know him whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed to him against that day." Moffatt translates, "I am certain that he is able to keep that which I have put into his hands."

The question we raise is, how much is this experience worth as proof to one who is not a Christian? Is there any reason why he should accept the Christian's experience as proof that Christianity is true? Is not that experience merely a matter between the Christian's soul and his Saviour? Does it not belong altogether to the sphere of the invisible, and for this reason fails to furnish any tangible evidence of reality? Cannot the non-Christian say: "Of course, you believe your experience is based on reality, but your believing it so, does not make it so"? In a word, does Christian experience furnish any evidence for the truth of the Christian religion of such kind that it can be investigated and tested in a scientific manner? Science deals exclusively with facts, with realities that can be discerned by the senses. John boasted that his experience had to do with facts that were manifest to his bodily senses—"that which we have seen, which we have heard and which our hands have handled." But the Christian of today can appeal only to the testimony of his inner consciousness. Is there, then, anything in present-day Christian experience that is of the nature of scientific proof to the outsider? We think there is. We believe that every genuine Christian experience is accompanied by external manifestations that ought to carry conviction to the non-Christian. Certainly the Scriptures claim this. "By their fruits ye shall know them." Jesus said, "So let your light shine that others may see your good works, and glorify your Father in heaven." The gospel purports to be a remedy for a spiritual disease. Jesus, by His own showing is a physician of souls. Suppose a man is suffering from physical disorder. He is conscious of severe pain. He calls in a doctor, and the doctor gives him a white powder and tells him that will ease his pain. He swallows the powder and the pain is relieved. That pain was as invisible as the pain of an awakened conscience. Jesus prescribes for the distress of the guilty conscience. The sinner takes the remedy and finds relief. Where is the difference in these two cases as respects the credibility of what takes place? The on-looker hears a man say he has a pain in his body. He sees him take a remedy prescribed by a physician, and accepts the man's testimony that the pain is gone. Does not the other case furnish precisely the same data. We hear a sinner complain of a pain in his soul. We see him take a remedy prescribed by the Physician of souls. If he testifies that the remedy has given him relief, ought we not to accept his testimony as true? Does not the result prove as much in the one case as the other? Suppose that thousands take the same white powder, and all find that it produces the same result, would it not be unreasonable for one to say that in all cases, they were victims of delusion, and that after all there was no real virtue in the powder? How many millions have taken the prescription of the Divine Physician for their spiritual troubles, and have found substantially the same result in every case? Not only peace of conscience, but comfort in trouble, strength to resist temptation, hatred of sin, love for God and fellow-man, have resulted. These are all visible fruits of Christian experience. While they are not all manifest in connection with all professed Christian experience, they are abundantly manifest in millions of cases. We were taught by Jesus to expect these spurious cases. So there is nothing in them to weaken the evidential value of the others. Hence we conclude that Christian experience affords ample evidence of a scientific kind for the truth of Christianity.

WILL YOU HELP?

On another page will be found the announcement of the Circulation Campaign of the Presbyterian Standard now completing its sixty-fifth year as a church paper.

Bishop Joseph F. Berry, of the Methodist Episcopal Church is reported as having said recently:

"If the 18,000 ministers of our Church would devote one entire week to a tactful, pushful, canvass for our church papers, and do nothing else during that time, it would be the best investment of seven days that the denomination has ever made"

We utter a fervent "Amen" to this expression coming from the representative of a great sister denomination.

AN UNFORTUNATE REQUIREMENT

While at Montreat we heard Dr. Evans, in his talk with ministers, young and old, affirm that out in the active service of the Church they would not be asked what degree had been bestowed upon them but what they could do.

In many states the laws require that instructors in collegiate schools possess an A.B. degree and in many instances, the degree of Master of Arts.

One fly in the ointment, however, is that oftentimes along with an array of letters there frequently exists small teaching ability, and sometimes very limited scholarship.

A laughable incident has been credibly reported to us. Recently a group of young college women heard an A.B. graduate urge upon some younger girls the propriety of studying the "Westminster" catechism.

Another queer development of present conditions is that an A.B. graduate may accumulate credits at some of our universities in Domestic Science and allied subjects, obtain a Master's degree and be more eligible for a college chair of English, Romance languages or history than some woman, like the widow referred to above, who has delved for years in these subjects, studied under private instructors and then taken post-graduate courses in them under the great university professors.

We concede that the experimental stage of almost every reform is attended with embarrassments and inconsistencies in its first decades, but there should surely be some method of adjusting the absurdities of such instances as those mentioned above.

It is to be conceded that while there is a large per cent of wearers of degrees who do not come under the criticism suggested in the remarks made above, there does exist a number of them sufficient to afford perplexity to students of standardization.

THE NEGRO IN NORTH CAROLINA

A foreigner reading some of our Northern exchanges would conclude that throughout the South the negro is the object of unjust legislation, being deprived of his rights, both civil and social.

We have always been ready to confess that the negro rarely obtains the same justice in our courts that the white man does, and that our record in lynching ought to bring the blush of shame to our cheeks.

It has been shown by experience that, all things being equal, the whites, whether in the North or in the South, will take in their own hands the execution of the law, when a certain crime is committed.

We are not undertaking to defend the entire South with regard to its treatment of the negro, because the facts are not available.

There are certain facts in connection with North Carolina and the negro that we do know, and we are anxious for that foreigner alluded to in the beginning of this article, and any of our fair-minded contemporaries, to know.

We quote from a secular paper:

"North Carolina is at this time spending more than $3,500,000 a year on negro education. Salaries, alone, paid negro teachers last year footed up $1,800,000, that having been an increase of $300,000 over the preceding year.

And Professor Newbold, head of the division of negro education under the State Department of Public Instruction, advances another very important point. He says the negroes leaving the State are divided into three classes, no one of which is representative of the best negro citizen.

NOT THAT HE DOES NOT KNOW
When home from school's long day he drifts,
And to my gaze his fresh face lifts,
I read the tale of all the joys
And sorrows that are every boy's.

FELLOW-WORKERS WITH GOD

If there be lying before you any bit of work from which you shrink, go straight up to it. The only way to get rid of it is to do it.

WESLEY'S ADVICE

On every occasion of uneasiness, we should retire in prayer, that we may give place to the light and grace of God, and then form our resolutions, without being in any pain about what success we may have.—John Wesley.

DOWN OR UP?

In that great sermon that Bishop Dobbs preached at Ensley recently, he said this significant thing "Men are usually down on what they are not upon."

REST IN THE LORD

Learn to rest; not only from sin and self, but from all stress. Refuse disquiet. Sink into God. Hide in Him. Understand the attacks of evil, why they come, and how to defend them.

A TEST

A missionary tells of a poor Hottentot in Southern Africa living with a good Dutchman, who kept up family prayer daily and invited all the members of his household to share in it.

One evening he read from the Bible. "Two men went up to the temple to pray." The savage, whose heart was already awakened, looked earnestly at the reader and whispered to himself, "Now I'll learn how to pray."

BE YE RECONCILED

In the garret-room of a house in the underworld quarter of Los Angeles a man sat motionless before a small table. He was past middle age, and his face, seared by sin, was now strangely attentive.

The minutes sped past. As the silent man in that upper room heard the pleading voice, he pictured the great church from which this radio sermon came. It had been years since he had attended church, and the smile on his face was self-mocking.

THE CHALLENGE OF THE ALL-DAY SINGING

By Rev. J. S. Robinson

It is Sunday morning and there is to be an all-day singing in a near-by Georgia town. It has been well advertised in the papers in several surrounding counties, and it is known that many people will attend. It is a common gathering in many parts of the Southland where the all-day singing as an institution has long existed and in many parts has flourished.

Soon the roads are lined with autos, mostly "flivers," en route to the great gathering. There has been hurrying and scurrying on the part of some in order to get off at an early hour, for the "sing" begins at 9:30, and they will want to get there for the entire program. It is a hot summer morning and there has been no rain lately; the road soon becomes a line of dust stretching across the country through which the tireless auto wends its way.

After a trip of from ten to fifty miles, and sometimes as much as a hundred miles, the place is reached. The crowd is gathering fast. Likely it is a small town and the place soon becomes literally filled with autos, with here and there a horse and buggy appearing as odd as an automobile did a dozen or so years ago.

Now we are at the singing proper. Perchance it is a church or school house. It may be an old warehouse fitted with rough, crude benches for the occasion. It is an open, airy building. The populace has gathered, and there can be seen the old and the young, male and female, rich and poor. The grey heads are in striking contrast to the children to be seen on every hand. Young men and maidens are seen everywhere. With hundreds of fans in motion the crowd presents a scene of ceaseless activity.

The front of the building is a veritable mass of people. The leaders are in evidence a dozen or more in number. There is a young woman at the piano. The president of the association is in charge of the meeting and announces that Mr. So-and-so from an adjoining county is present and will lead the convention in two or three songs. The leader comes forward and announces a number. With perhaps some little introductory remarks about the song, or may be without such remarks, the singing begins, the leader with hand or make-shift baton directing the singers. By-standers take turns in fanning the pianist because of the excessive heat and the pest of gnats.

The song is likely to be of the "glory" type, with rolling, catchy melody. Every one loves to sing about heaven, even those who are least prepared for entering its pearly gates. Mr. So-and-so finishes his quota of songs and retires to give place to another director, and so the singing continues.

There is only a small part of the people singing, necessarily so, for there are only a few hymn books. Most of the people are interested on-lookers making one think of the crowds that witness the great ball games of the country. Enthusiasm is written on every face, old and young alike. Here on the front seat is a girl of 13 singing with as much interest as the leader himself. All four parts of the simple songs can be distinctly heard. The old men give their commendation by the nod of the head or by spoken word when the song is ended. No one who witnesses a scene of this kind can hardly fail to be interested in the exercise. All the people are in ecstasies of joy notwithstanding the scorching September weather.

And now the morning session has rolled away and the dinner hour is near at hand. At the announcement of the approach of dinner the crowds are seen to begin wending their way toward the long tables prepared under the shade trees for the occasion. Most likely there is a barbecue and the dinner will be free to all. But here and there may be seen a few people with dinner baskets as if they were at an old-time picnic or camp-meeting. The barbecue has been in preparation for several days, but very actively so during the past 24 hours. Now the workers have finished their tasks and the people are gathering to the fray. There is likely to be plenty and to spare for the hundreds or the thousands, for there was a determination on the part of the entertainment committee that this dinner would not fall behind any other dinner of the season. Consequently the pit but shortly contained dozens of carcasses, mostly hogs, amounting to hundreds, and perhaps thousands of pounds of meat. And besides, there are many other good things, such as chicken, pies, cakes, etc., that have come from somewhere and quickly disappear once the crowd is well assembled.

A PRAYER FOR A NEW CHURCH

Dedicatory Prayer, Lincolnton Presbyterian Church, August 12, 1923

By Rev. W. R. Minter, D.D.

O God, who dwellest on high, we bless thee that thou hast thy dwelling place also on the earth. Thou who lovest Zion more than all the tents of Jacob, we do magnify thy name for bringing these thy people together in this holy place on this glad day.

In thy good providence thou hast permitted us to build for thy worship and unto thy glory this beautiful temple. In every part of this holy task, we believe thou God, hast been with us to guide and to bless as truly as thou didst guide and bless those who built the tabernacle and the temple. And, now, blessed Giver of every good and perfect gift, we are met with thee today that we might give back to thee this house of prayer, and with it, anew, our hearts, ourselves. We do, here and now, out of overflowing hearts, dedicate this building to thy worship.

Do thou be pleased graciously to accept us and this gift of our hearts. Do thou make every one the happier today because he had a part in the sweet privilege of sharing in building this house. And some, we cannot but recall, dear Father, who prayed and labored to see this day, thou hast called to be with thee. We pray (if it be possible, and with thee nothing is impossible) these may witness from beyond the veil this scene today, that all unseen, yet not unfelt, they may rejoice with us in the fullness of our joy.

Grant, dear God, that unto the end of time, those who preach and teach here may preach and teach thy gospel—and only thy gospel. Be gracious to thy servant, the pastor of this Church, and anoint him with thy spirit for all the duties of his holy office. Bless those who before him spoke for thee, O, God, in this place, and those pastors whose voices are forever stilled on earth, bless thou, even to the end of time, their ministrations of love. And, whoever down the years shall stand in this sacred place to speak for God breathe upon them thy Spirit, that they may ever bring God's own message.

And grant that here a great number shall hear and accept and confess thy Son our Saviour; that within these walls our doubts shall be resolved into faith, our weakness become strength, and our burdens be cast upon thee. In this place where thou hast caused thy name to dwell, may the weary find rest, the tempted victory, the discouraged hope, and the needy the God who shall supply all their need in Christ.

When young man and maiden shall meet in this place to plight their troth in holy marriage, hear thou their vows, O God, and keep them always in each other's and in thy love. When parents bring to this hallowed spot the little ones God has given them, to give them to God in holy baptism, covenant-keeping God, remember forever to hold these in thine strong hand. And when, one by one, as pleaseth thee, we shall be called home to thee, and with their precious dead, loved ones and friends shall come to this place for consolations for their sorrowing hearts, God of comfort and grace, fail not thou them with thy peace and solace.

And when in the fulness of time this house shall be dismantled forever, and the last sermon shall have been preached here and in all the world, grant that this people with the great blood-bought throng may worship thee on high in that temple not made with hands, where congregations ne'er break up and Sabbaths have no end.

And we ask all these mercies in Jesus' name. Amen.

In all this gathering can be seen people meeting from different sections of the county, or from different counties, some kin folks and some just friends and acquaintances. And as the crowd scatters again they can be seen at the wells or at the springs in great companies. And there are many of the young people that evidently have come for the good time that will be afforded by the day. They can be seen on the several roads leading into the place going and coming in cars that one gets tired of counting. It is a day of renewing friendships, of making new ones, and the beginning of romances that often end only at the matrimonial altar. It is a high day for these young people who do not have either the ability to sing or the inclination to sit in a hot building and listen during the long session.

The afternoon session begins on time after a sufficient recess for dinner. The crowds are back again. One might think that they had all gathered there had he not seen the surrounding country side dotted over with Fords full of young folks, and the large number of the more or less indifferent, social people who have come mainly to see their friends and are now taking advantage of the time outside the singing hall. So the singing goes on and the enthusiasm rises again to white heat under the leadership of the directors. The morning scene is re-enacted and old and young make a most interesting gathering, exhibiting all those features that draw one irresistibly to the crowds of common people. Here is life in action. Here is an exhibition of those strange psychological results that comes from the commingling of many people in crowds.

The minister may be present, because the Sunday Schools in all the surrounding country have been either abandoned for the day or badly demoralized. And may be the pastor has had to call in his morning preaching service here or elsewhere because of the gathering and has come to make the most of the day. Maybe he is bent upon getting the convention to pass a motion setting the singing on a week-day instead of Sunday. Perhaps he will succeed; perhaps he will fail.

When the singing is over, a few brief items of business are attended to, which properly should have been taken up at the business session on the previous day. And now the crowds must have time to return home before night, and the convention adjourns towards the middle of the afternoon. But long before adjournment many vehicles have been seen starting out in various directions. For some people have evidently come for the free dinner, and now that that time is over they are ready to start home, specially if one lives at a distance. By the time the singing ceases the crowd has broken off considerably and the streets and lanes are becoming cleared of the sudden influx of the morning traffic.

At first sight one wonders at such a gathering. But when he reflects that people are social in nature, he stumbles upon one of the big reasons of this otherwise puzzling matter. What social life have these hundreds of young people in their homes and in the homes of their friends? What social good times have they had in the homes of the Christian people of their respective churches? It is a safe conjecture that such social life and good times have been very limited. Perhaps there may be an occasional social gathering not very desirable in nature. But how many of them have been received into the Christian homes of their respective communities and made to feel that the fathers and mothers are interested in all that makes or unmakes the social life of their young men and women? There is no better way for young people to be entertained than by these fathers and mothers; there is no better place than in their homes.

The pastor, too, should recognize these social and spiritual instincts of his young people and capitalize them in the work of the Sunday School and young people's societies. These cravings are seeking to be satisfied in some way or other and will often find vent in an unworthy manner.

And in this work the preacher will have the help of but few of the song leaders for unfortunately most of them are inactive in the work of Sunday School and Church, and some are not even professing Christians. So the minister must often stand almost alone in this matter. But some of the leaders are active in all the work of the churches at home. Perhaps they are not seen at many of these annual gatherings—maybe this one is near by, or perhaps in their community. They are just plain, dependable men who love to mix and mingle with their fellows.

The minister's preaching will doubtless bear upon the principles and issues herein involved, commending the good and condemning the evil. He will remind his good folks, many of whom remained at home from conscientious scruples, that they have been negligent in that they have not opened their homes to the young people. And may be they have been unconcerned about the place of the young people in the church and its services.

Yes, the all-day singing has its objections without a doubt—as a result of which the Sunday Schools far and near are disrupting, the Church services in many places have had to be called in, and most serious of all, God's holy day has been desecrated. But after all there is a challenge to the faithful pastor in such a community. These God-given instincts of the spiritual and social nature are natural and right, and they should find expression in some proper manner. Whether the social gathering is that little circle that meets privately in a home, or the entire community meeting in a public and periodic picnic or other occasion upon some week-day, both are equally important and should call forth both encouragement and co-operation from the minister and Christian leaders. Also whatever will lead to the development and enjoyment of the spiritual life of the young people should certainly elicit the hearty support of their spiritual leaders and advisers. Then, and only then, will the minister be in position to preach Sabbath observance in a convincing way, and show that, while "the Sabbath was made for man and not man for the Sabbath," it is nevertheless fearfully true that there is coming a day of solemn reckoning for the profanation of the holy day of rest that God has given for man's good and His glory.

Again we say, that the institution with its commendable and objectionable features, bring with it a tremendous challenge to the pastor in such a community. How will he meet it? To what account will he turn the opportunity?

FOUR HAPPY MARRIAGES

By Warren H. Stuart

Four marriages of unusual interest to our Church have taken place in the last few weeks. Each promises to be a long and happy union with much fruitful co-operation. The grooms reside in Louisville, Nashville, Atlanta, and Richmond. For many years they have been housekeeping in bachelor quarters, meeting many problems difficult of solution. It is believed that after marriage many of these problems will be solved more easily, and that joys will be doubled and troubles halved through sharing.

These marriages were considered so important that special licenses were issued for them by the General Assembly last May. It is needless now to add that the grooms are the Assembly's four Executive Committees, and the brides the recently appointed contingents of woman members.

Leaving aside the legal aspects of the question, which the writer does not feel prepared to discuss, there does seem to be much pragmatic justification for the Assembly's action. Experience seems to show that in many spheres the best results are produced by men and women co-operating. This is especially true of civic, educational, and other human betterment enterprises, such as resemble most closely the work of our committees. If there is no inherent reason why women should not be on these committees, it would seem to be the part of wisdom to avail ourselves of the tact, sympathy, judgment, intuition, and enthusiasm which they will so richly contribute.

Speaking as a member of our Foreign Mission force, I am inclined to think that the change as far as the Nashville Committee is concerned will very generally be welcomed by missionaries on the field. Not but that we are excellently treated as it is; but out experience in our mission leads us to favor heartily the extension of womanly co-operation into the committee itself. The active sharing of our responsibilities and problems by the ladies of our mission has created a comradeship and co-operation that would not otherwise exist, and has made our work more effective than heretofore. It is reasonable to assume that this will also be true of the Assembly's Committees.

Dr. J. P. McCallie at Montreat paid the newly-elected members of the Foreign Mission Committee a well-deserved tribute, saying that no other members had shown so much intelligence about the work at their first meeting, as these did.

And finally one cannot get rid of the thought that there is more fairness in the women co-operating to appropriate and spend wisely, the money they have done so much to raise. However, I speak from the viewpoint not of legal right or fairness, but of gratitude for the service and counsel they will give.

QUIET TALKS ON THE SIMPLE ESSENTIALS

By S. D. Gordon, Bijou Theatre, Boardwalk, Atlantic City, N. J., July-August, 1923, Auspices Atlantic City Council of Churches

No. 12—Faith? Or Fear

Every one is controlled by faith or by fear. And these two are sworn foes. They can't get along together.

When faith comes in fear takes to its quickest heels. When fear comes in faith has already gone out. The man is the doorkeeper. Neither gets in till he throws open the door.

Fear cramps the nerves, dries up the juices, sets the imagination wild, the heart a-racing, and the will to wobbling.

I'm talking of course about the fear that's afraid. There are three kinds of fear. There's the fear of reverence. It grows out of love. It is good. It's a tonic for nerves and spirit.

Then there is the fear of caution. It grows out of the presence of danger, and of wrong. These must be guarded against. And this, of course, is only good. Its absence is bad, and exposes one to danger, bodily or worse. Its presence means a wholesome discipline that restrains and steadies.

And then there is the fear that's afraid. It's afraid of something or someone. It is slavish. It is bad, bad clear through, only and always bad. This is the sort that is most commonly thought of when the word is used. This is the sworn foe of faith. There are two kinds of faith. The word is commonly used for a buoyant optimism. There's a rare bubbling-over confidence that's sure of itself and of the outcome.

It goes easily and naturally with youthful strength, that has not yet had any breaks. Sometimes it is planned for in an artificial way, through stimulants, by those who have had breaks. Then there is a worse break sure to come, some day.

Sometimes such faith is the outgrowth of hard study, and careful planning, and unflinching self-discipline. And then the results are sure to come. The confidence has its roots in deep and strong.

This sort of faith is recognized as a great asset, especially in commercial circles. It rides almost rough-shod over difficulties. The man that never knows when he is whipped never is whipped. He's unwhippable.

And at its roots it is always faith in some one. It may be in one's self, a good self-confidence, or in others. Back of the bank is the man or group in control, back of the scheme being pushed is the brainy experienced thinker, and the backing capitalist.

This faith is a mental faith. It is quite distinct from what is called properly Christian Faith, though it may grow out of this under certain circumstances.

Sharper thinking leads to stronger action. It helps much to recognize that the thing called Christian faith is distinctively, at first flush, faith in a Person. It always begins there. Thinking about that certain Person grows in you the thing called faith. You don't think about the faith but about this Person. And your first thought and attitude toward Him—that is the thing called faith.

That Person is the one in whom the whole Christian scheme of thinking and acting centers. He's the Man about whose birth the calendars of the world revolve today.

He's our fellow man, the solitary God-Man, who died in the distinctive way, and lived again, and still lives. He is the throbbing heart of our common Christian faith.

And there's one thing more here: Christian faith means believing this Man for some particular thing. That's of the very essence. You believe Him for settling the old sin score, for personal power against the thing that's wrong, for your bent-knee request. You accept at face value what He says in the old Book.

And the striking thing to mark keenly is this, that the faith that is a mental trait or characteristic grows, and grows strongest, out of that faith in this Person.

You yield your life and your plans to His guidance. You go as you understand He would have you. And there is now the strongest kind of a bubbling-over buoyancy in the outcome. For he is back of you and your plan. And he is unflinching. He—this Man—becomes the center. Faith isn't thinking about your faith, how much there is, or how strong. It's thinking about Him. Your thought doesn't turn in; it turns out and up, to Him.

Look at that Man, Jesus. There He is sitting up there in the place of masterful control. He can do;

he has the power to. He will do; He has the love to. He will do for you; you two are in touch of heart. He will do at the right time. He has the wisdom to.

"Oh," someone says, "that's sentiment." Yes, you're quite right. It is sentiment; but not sentimentality. It is sentiment that holds the vast British empire together. It was sentiment that sent thousands of our best sons to France only yesterday, and that holds our homes, our commercial fabric, and our very nation together. Sentiment, a strong high dominating conviction, is the very life blood of life itself.

A small boy asked his mother, "What does it mean to believe on the Lord Jesus?" Recognizing that her little son was beginning to think for himself, the mother said quietly, "It means thinking about Him, thanking Him for dying for you. It means loving Him, and telling Him you will try to please Him."

The boy went off without replying. By and by things were unusually quiet in the boy's corner. And the mother called, "What are you doing, Charles?" As she spoke she came in sight of the boy sitting among his playthings, head bowed in thought, as he quietly called out, "I'm believing on the Lord Jesus."

Thinking of that Person begets faith in Him. Faith grows love. Love turns fear out-of-doors.

No. 13—Does Prayer Count?

"WASTE AND WANT"

In the church of which you are a member it is very probable that there is a discarded pulpit, or several pews, or a number of gospel hymn books, or sets of hymnals or library books, or carpet, or blackboard or some other part of church equipment, all of which is useless. And while this is true, there are hundreds of mission churches (many being now built) that would only be too glad to pay for the packing, handling, and freight, if you would only take the trouble to ask the session to meet and give these things to these struggling mission fields. Personally I do not need these things; for my church is well-equipped, but I have been recently traveling in the mountains of North Carolina and Tennessee and know where I could place these much needed articles. If any individual member will take the trouble just to drop me a post card telling me of such I will write to the pastors and take up the matter with them. In this way "waste will supply want." We are only asking you for a card with such information—that is all. And do not depend upon the other fellow to give such information! Write now—right now! And let us remember that want is always right on the very heels of waste. And if all of the clothes and shoes and other apparel, rotting and wasting, were gathered together and sent to the various orphanages in the country, instead of being sold to peddlers for less than a song, then our orphan children would be clothed and the church would get in its right mind. Most of us are too full of vanity and foolish pride to do these little things that count for so much. But a man or woman who has "come from somewhere" can go anywhere and discharge these little duties of life with the dignity of a prince. Address Rev. E. C. Bailey, Greenville, Tenn., Greene County.

FISHING

"And passing along by the sea of Galilee He saw Simon and Andrew casting a net in the sea: for they were fishers. And Jesus said unto them, come ye after me and I will make you to become fishers of men."

These words are recorded in the Gospel of Mark, 1:16 and 17.

Remarks:

1. Jesus only can make any one a fisher of men. A high degree of mentality and the ornaments of learning, will not, cannot make a fisher of men. Great versatility, and eloquence of speech with tongue or pen cannot, do not make one a fisher of men. That high and heavenly art is the work of Jesus alone.

2. Do you sincerely desire to learn how to win, how to save men? Come after Jesus! Let Him have all of your life and He will do the rest. Be assured of that.

"SUPPOSE THE TITHE LAW IS REPEALED—WHAT THEN?"

This is the title of an attractive and impressive little booklet recently issued by the Assembly's Stewardship Committee. Its author is Dr. A. M. Frazer, of Staunton, Va., who has given years of thought and study to this subject. By placing major emphasis on the moral and spiritual side of this great theme, the writer presents the subjects in a way equally interesting and attractive to that body of Christians who hold that the Law of the Tithe is still binding and to those who believe that it passed away as one of the features of the Mosaic Economy.

It will prove helpful to every Christian to read carefully this discussion, presented in such readable form and so aptly illustrated. A sample copy will be sent free upon request. Orders will be filled at a small cost of $3.00 per 100 copies, by the Assembly's Stewardship Committee, 410 Times Building, Chattanooga, Tenn.

WHY THE BIBLE SO FULLY AND FORCIBLY ENJOINS BENEFICENCE

(An attempt to answer this question will be presented in the form of three brief statements, appearing in this and the two succeeding issues of this paper, in the Progressive Program section.)

That Beneficence does occupy a place of special prominence in the Scriptures is self-evident. No deep, pains-taking research is required to discover this fact. It is said by those who have looked carefully into the subject that about one in every five verses of the Gospel records deals with man's relations to material things. And nearly all of the 38 parables of Jesus relate to subjects of this class. The Old Testament is likewise full of positive teachings bearing on this theme. Nobody, who is at all familiar with the Bible would dare ask, "Does the Bible teach Beneficence?"

The point before us is, why is so much emphasis thus placed on Beneficence or Benevolence? Three principle reasons may be mentioned in answer to this question and also to the question, "Why Christians should obey this injunction?" The first reason is:

1. It Is Designed to Meet the Distressing and Pressing Needs of Humanity

Millions in the world at this moment are in dire need of those things that a benevolent and generous Christianity, under the blessing of God, can and ought in a large measure, supply. Some are starving for food, some are cold and without sufficient clothing in a freezing climate, some are homeless and shelterless and multitudes of these are little children who are fatherless and motherless, some are in the grip of terrible disease and wasting sickness, without medical attention, physician or nurse, some are helpless and hopeless and friendless, in need of a helping hand and a voice of inspiration to cheer and to change their whole outlook in life. All of these need Christian charity, they also need more than charity, they need a reasonable chance to help themselves; more than all they need Christ. The following lines beautifully express the thought:

"I gave a beggar from my little store of wealth some gold;
He spent the shining ore, and came again and yet again,
Still cold and hungry, as before.
I gave a thought—and through that thought of mine,
He found himself, the man supreme, divine.
Fed, clothed and crowned with blessing manifold;
And now he begs no more."

To view this tragic and burdened class of humanity should bring to us the meaning of those masterly words, "Bear ye one another's burdens." Sir Philip Sidney's refusal on the battle-field of a cup of cold water, which he offered to a wounded private soldier with these words, "Drink, friend, thy need is greater than mine," must have been inspired by these other words, "We then that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak."

You and I, as Christ's men and women, may move in a more or less restricted sphere, in ministering to humanity's needs in person, but through our consecrated means we can make our life a mission of mercy, blessing and evangelism, reaching in its ministry the whole world round. Our money placed on God's altar can become for us our vision of need, our compassionate heart, our helping hand, our voice of inspiration, our ambassadorship for Christ. There is no limit to the good we can do with our possessions, even where we cannot go and after we have gone from this earth.

Money is a God-given opportunity for service. It is a power for good or for evil. "Never were doors, at home and abroad, so wide open and appealing. Never were the agencies of education and missions so well organized. Never were there so many men and women, the choicest of the land, waiting to serve. What is there that our consecrated possessions cannot do?"

The world's greatest distress is spiritual and humanity's deepest need at this hour is Christ. This is one reason why the Bible urges Christian Beneficence.

SUNDAY SCHOOL EXTENSION — THE CHURCH'S GOLDEN OPPORTUNITY

By Gilbert Glass, D.D., General Superintendent

Sunday School Extension means in brief, home evangelism and missionary evangelism through the teaching of God's Word. This is the Church's primary duty in direct obedience to the command of Christ. Our Commander-in-Chief has given His orders—"Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and lo I am with you always even unto the end of the world." There is no escape from this responsibility unless the Church is to break absolutely in spirit and conduct with her Great Head.

Sunday School Extension is, of course, not the Church's only method of evangelism. Yet there is no better way, nor is there any way so fruitful, so natural and so economical. This is so evident on the slightest examination.

Fertile Soil

The hearts of children and young people, those who are reached most easily and effectively by means of the Sunday School, are fertile soil for the seed of God's Word. In the parable of the sower and the soils, the good ground which brings forth 30 or 60 or 100 fold, may be said to represent chiefly the minds and hearts of those who are young. Children and young people are curious and eager to learn new things. They are therefore ready for the good news of the Kingdom. They are also ready for new friends, and those who seek to introduce them to Jesus Christ, the friend of sinners, and the elder brother of all the saved, will find them easy to approach and warm of heart. The character of youth is in the process of formation and is not hardened into indifference or cynicism or worldliness. It is only a step for the tender feet of children from the way of death to the way of life. Here, then, are hungry minds and hearts, responsive wills and easily molded characters, waiting for the shaping hand and witnessing voice of the teacher of the Word. This is the golden opportunity of Sunday School Extension which holds out the Word of God to the minds and hearts of youth for the saving of their souls and the building of the Kingdom.

Woman's Auxiliary

Conducted by Mrs. J. M. McIver, Gulf, N. C.

The North Carolina Synodical will meet in the First Presbyterian Church of Wilmington, October 17th and 18th. Much important business will be brought up for discussion and it is hoped that all who are eligible will attend. Synodical officers and secretaries, all Presbyterian officers and two delegates from each Presbyterial.

Gypsy Smith, Jr., will be holding a meeting in Wilmington during October. No night sessions will be held, in order to give all delegates an opportunity to hear this great evangelist.

Mrs. E. F. Reid.

The South Carolina Synodical Auxiliary will meet in Rock Hill, October 8, 9, 10. The first session will be held Monday evening, the 8th, at 8 o'clock.

All representatives are asked to notify Mrs. A. Eugene Hutchison of the date and hour of arrival. Mrs. Leslie Stribling, Rec. Sec.

An Open Letter to the Auxiliary Presidents—Dear friends: Once again we are facing the Auxiliary work of the autumn and winter, and I know you, as president, feel a great responsibility for its success.

The first and most important step toward any achievement is a good beginning, hence the annual Auxiliary Rally Day in October. Make this meeting a success and the work the rest of the year will be easier. Read carefully the enclosed leaflet "Suggestions for Rally Day." Follow them out promptly and you will have a good meeting.

Enclosed you will also find the Auxiliary calendar. Look this over carefully and put it where you can frequently consult it during the coming months. Determine that your Auxiliary shall "keep step" with the calendar, for that means you will be carrying out the full program of the Church.

A new leaflet on "How to grade your Auxiliary on the Standard of Excellence" will be ready by October 1st. Send 2c for it. Keep the Standard ever before your Auxiliary, showing them at each meeting just where they grade on it.

Have an Executive Board meeting as soon as possible and plan the season's work with your officers and circle chairmen. Urge your treasurer to collect the arrears that often accumulate during vacation time, and begin the last half of the Church year with all pledges paid up-to-date.

Suggest to your secretaries of causes that they send for the latest literature on their department (enclosing postage) and thus be ready with information and plans for their educational work and visitation of circles. Ask your pastor to bring to your first board meeting any plans in which he wishes special co-operation from the Auxiliary. Encourage your secretary of Spiritual Life to start the Bible classes promptly and to give to the prayer bands definite subjects for prayer.

In other words, dear president, now is the time to start afresh all the machinery of the Auxiliary which may have slowed down or stopped altogether during the warm summer. You are the most important human cog in the machine and if you start promptly all others connected with the organization will follow your example. Let's start NOW!

We want to assist you in every way possible, so, if you need us, write, and we will do our best to help you.

With prayers for your success, I am
Faithfully yours,

H. P. Winsborough.

Charlotte—The calendar of the Second Church, September 16th, carries this notice which shows the interest the women are taking in Home Missions:

"Home Mission Text Book—So great has been the demand for the Home Mission text book, 'The Child and America's Future,' that 50 extra copies have been ordered, and are now in Miss Terry's office. This book is of unusual interest and help to mothers and teachers. Please secure a book at once if you wish one. Price, 50 cents a copy."

Charlotte, Tenth Avenue—From the calendar of this church we take the following items:

"Graduation Exercises—The Junior Christian Endeavor held their graduation exercises at the church on Wednesday evening September 5th. Those who attended feel that this was the consummation of a very fine piece of work among our boys and girls. Members of this class received certificates for completing the Junior Expert Course, and diplomas were awarded for memorizing the String or Pearls, and completing other requirements for becoming efficient Junior Christian Endeavorers. Mrs. R. W. Mitchell and her assistants, Mrs. C. S. Manies and Miss L. Clemmer, who have given so much of their time and competent leadership to this work, are largely responsible for the training of these boys and girls. Those who graduated are: Helen Boyd, Violet Dunn, Ruth Ellis, Catherine Mitchell, Melba Ridenhour, John Edward Boyd and Frank Vest."

"Children's Choir will meet at the church at 3:00 o'clock this afternoon."

"Christian Endeavor—The Seniors, Intermediates and Juniors will all meet at the church this evening at 7:15 o'clock. All of our young people are invited to come and unite with us in this phase of the church's work."

"Children's Story Hour—The day for the Story Hour has been changed to Thursday at 4:00 o'clock in the afternoon, instead of Friday, as heretofore."

It's a wise church that looks after the children of the church, and at an early age links their interests up with its own, and possibly there is no church in the Synod of North Carolina that is doing this more consistently than the Tenth Avenue Church, Charlotte. The women who are training the Junior Endeavorers are doing as constructive a work for the church as women can do—hence we appropriate these items for the Woman's Page as a suggestion to women who are looking for a definite service to render.

The children's choir which sings regularly one selection at each evening service, attracts the children to this service, as well as attracting the parents

MOTHER OF FIVE

She mothered five!

Night after night she watched a little bed,
Night after night she cooled a fevered head.
Day after day she guarded little feet,
Taught little minds the dangers of the street;
Taught little lips to utter simple prayers,
Whispered of strength that some day would be theirs
And trained them all to use it as they should.
She gave her babies to the Nation's good.

She mothered five!

She gave her beauty; from her cheeks let fade
The rose's blushes; to her mother trade,
She saw the wrinkles furrowing her brow.
Yet smiling said, "My boy grows stronger now."

When pleasures called she turned away and said:

"I dare not leave my babies to be fed
By strangers' hands; besides they are so small
I must be near to answer when they call."

She mothered five!

Night after night they sat about her knee
And heard her tell of what some day would be.
From her they learned that in the world outside

Are cruelty and vice and selfishness and pride;
From her they learned the wrongs they ought to shun,

What things to love, what work must still be done.

She led them through the labyrinth of youth
And brought five men and women up to Truth.

She mothered five!

Of her the outside world but little knew.
Her name may be unknown save to the few.
But somewhere five are treading Virtue's ways,
Serving the world and brightening its days.
Somewhere are five, who, tempted; stand upright

Clinging to honor, keeping her memory bright.
Somewhere this mother toils and is alive
No more as one, but in the breasts of five.

To Local Auxiliaries of the North Carolina Synodical—Dear friends: We are fortunate in having for our Synod's manager a fine business man, Mr. J. B. Spillman. His report which appears in this issue of the Presbyterian Standard should be carefully studied by every woman in our Church in order that we may be fully informed about our financial standing.

Mr. Spillman says, "I am very anxious to get the women squarely lined up behind our campaign"—and pledges his assistance in the work of the Synodical.

Sincerely yours,

Mrs. E. F. Reid.

Korea Topics in Brief—The Koreans have a thriving foreign mission work in China.

More post cards and Red Cross buttons are needed for our Sunday School work.

This year four men graduated from the ten-year normal course in the Bible class in Kwangju.

Kim Ik Do, a Korean evangelist, has read the Bible through 20 times and spends three hours daily in prayer.

A wealthy Christian Korean, living near Chunju recently erected a modern style brick Bible school at a cost of $4,500.

The average student eats only one-half the usual amount of food while attending Bible class because he is supplying his own food and can afford no better.

Rev. W. E. Biederwolf, D.D., had advised us that with Homer Rodeheaver and Miss Grace Saxe he will visit Kwangju for a series of meetings in November of this year.

Two men, living 15 miles from a Christian group heard the Gospel through a medicine peddler, believed, attended a class 25 miles away and then walked 60 miles to attend the men's Bible class. These men believe in spite of united and bitter opposition in their home village.

An elder in the Kwangju church asked to be released from eldership because a member of his family was guilty of a sin which he thought as head of the family he should have prevented.

Educational

Queens College opened Friday, September 14th for the 67th session with appropriate exercises in the auditorium of Ninniss Hall. Members of the board of trustees, ministers of the city and members of the faculty were on the platform with Dr. A. A. McGeachy, president of the board of trustees presiding. Following prayer by Dr. Luther Little, of the First Baptist Church and reading of Scripture by Rev. Floyd Rogers of St. Peter's Episcopal Church the speaker of the morning, Hon. John A. McRae, president of the Kiwanis Club and member of the General Assembly was introduced. Mr. McRae in a very happy address of welcome to students and faculty spoke of the many changes in the education of women and of the many opportunities open to woman today in the business and professional world. He referred to the glorious past of the institution, of what the college means to the city of Charlotte and urged that the needs of the school be met. He closed his remarks with a hearty welcome to the city and laid upon the student body the injunction to seize hold of the many opportunities before them. Dr. McGeachy in turn presented to the audience Rev. Mr. Hardin, of the Tryon Street Methodist Church, Dr. J. R. Bridges, a former president; Dr. J. P. Munroe, and Dr. A. A. Walker, financial agent of Queens, all of whom spoke briefly. Miss Wearn of the student body led in cheers for trustees, visitors and new students after which President Frazer welcomed the students and introduced the following new members of the faculty: Dr. Charlotte Moore, head of the English department; Dr. Mozelle Ashford, department of education and psychology; Miss Olive M. Jones, mathematics department; Miss Meta Byrd, assistant in the department of science; Miss Florence Gahr, assistant in household economics; Miss Marie Mitchell, tutor in modern languages; Miss Carilee Schuessler, assistant in piano; Miss Anna H. Capelle, matron, Miss Carroll Graham, stenographer. Miss Sallie McLean, dean of the college made a number of announcements with regard to classes and the benediction was pronounced by Dr. Albert Sidney Johnson of the First Presbyterian Church. Queens opens this year with the largest enrollment in its history and with indications pointing to one of the best years in its existence as an educational institution.

Arkansas College, Batesville, Ark., opened its 52d session on September 6th. The enrollment was far in excess of that of any previous year and indications are that the student body will reach a total of 200 before the year is out. The following states are represented in addition to Arkansas: Alabama, South Carolina, Tennessee, Mississippi, Kentucky, Oklahoma, Kansas. The freshmen class numbers more than 70. Four additional teachers have been added to care for the increased enrollment.

At the opening, the new president, E. B. Tucker, delivered an inspirational address, and this was followed by the convocation sermon on Sunday, September 9th, preached by Rev. William Hoge Irvine, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church at Helena and moderator of the Synod of Arkansas.

The recently erected three-story dormitory for men is filled to its utmost capacity since only two floors were completed. Steps are being taken to complete the third floor thus almost doubling its capacity before the opening of another college year. The overflow of men students is being cared for in one of the dormitories formerly occupied by young women. The dormitory formerly used by the men has been remodeled and is this year occupied by young women.

The college year has opened with renewed interest and enthusiasm and there is every indication of progress and successful achievement.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S DEPARTMENT

(Conducted under the auspices of Synod's Committee of Sunday Schools and Young People's Work, in the interest of Sunday Schools and Young People's Societies)

W. ARNETT GAMBLE, JR., Editor

ADDRESS ALL COMMUNICATIONS TO THE DEPARTMENT EDITOR DAVIDSON, N. C.

EDITOR'S LOOKOUT

The attention of the young people is called to the circulation campaign being put on by our paper for the period October 4th to November 11th. Readers of the Standard know it is an excellent paper, well worth the three dollars subscription price. Our young people should have a copy for their Sunday school class or society, and should have it in their homes.

Besides the benefit that will come from reading the paper and the opportunity to show our denominational loyalty, societies and individuals can make good commissions on subscriptions secured or money collected, and from prizes, a nice sum, which can be used in sending delegates to conventions or conferences or for other worthy causes. Write to the Presbyterian Standard in Charlotte for full particulars and for free copies of the paper, blotters, and folders, for distribution. Help the paper and help yourself and society.

With the opening in 1915 of the work of the All-South Extension Committee of the United Society of Christian Endeavor, to promote this work in Dixie, an interesting contest was inaugurated. A banner was offered for the state having the most efficient work during the year. Some warm contests have been staged year by year, and the points in the contest have been gradually developed in such way as to make the striving for them more and more valuable to the young people and the churches.

It is our feeling that the points outlined for the Senior societies for the year beginning June 1, 1923 (shown in our department this week) are the best as to value in Christian growth and as to detailed explanation of the whole eight years.

Extension of the work by the formation of new societies is provided. Finances and subscriptions to the papers carrying Christian Endeavor news and helps, are cared for. And the work of the denomination in which the societies operates is looked after. Denominational gifts and study classes are a vital part of the requirements. The individual's development in a knowledge of God's Word is stressed through the placing of emphasis upon the Pocket Testament League.

The contest may be expected to be warm this year. And what a fine thing it will be to have so many young people striving for such worthwhile accomplishments! The Standard will try to help the societies in its particular territory make a commendable effort in the work outlined and in winning the attractive banner.

TIMOTHY, A GOOD MINISTER OF JESUS CHRIST
Lesson: Acts 16:1-3; Philippians 2:19-22; 2 Timothy 1:16; 3:14, 15

GOLDEN TEXT—"Be thou an ensample of the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity." Tim. 4:12.

SCRIPTURE LESSON

Acts 16:1 Then came he to Derbe and Lystra: and, behold, certain disciple was there, named Timotheus, the son of a certain woman, which was a Jewess, and believed; but his father was a Greek:

2 Which was well reported of by the brethren that were at Lystra and Iconium.

3 Him would Paul have to go forth with him; and took and circumcised him because of the Jews which were in those parts: for they knew all that his father was a Greek.

4 Phil. 2:19 But I trust in the Lord Jesus to send Timotheus shortly unto you, that I also may be of good comfort, when I know your state.

5 For I have no man likeminded, who will naturally care for your state.

6 For all seek their own, not the things which are Jesus Christ's.

7 But ye know the proof of him, that, as a son with the father, he hath served with me in the gospel.

8 2 Tim. 1:1 Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God, according to the promise of life which is in Christ Jesus, to Timothy, my dearly beloved son: Grace, mercy, and peace, from God the Father and Christ Jesus our Lord.

9 I thank God, whom I serve from my forefathers with pure conscience, that without ceasing I have remembrance of thee in my prayers night and day;

10 Greatly desiring to see thee, being mindful of thy tears, that I may be filled with joy;

11 When I call to remembrance the unfeigned faith that is in thee, which dwelt first in thy grandmother Lois, and thy mother Eunice; and I am persuaded that in thee also.

12 Wherefore I put thee in remembrance that thou stir up the gift of God, which is in thee by the putting on of my hands.

13 Ch. 3:14 But continue thou in the things which thy hast learned and hast been assured of, knowing of whom thou hast learned them;

15 And that from a child thou hast known the holy scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus.

SHORTER CATECHISM

Q. 55. What is forbidden in the third commandment?
A. The third commandment forbiddeth all profaning or abusing of anything whereby God maketh himself known.

Timothy was from Lystra, in Lycaonia, one of the provinces of Asia Minor. His mother was a Jewess, but believed in Christianity. But his father was a Greek or Gentile. Paul was his spiritual father in the Gospel ministry. Finding that the young man had a good reputation among them that knew him, the apostle when at Lystra, desired Timothy to go with him. As it was known that his father was a Greek and as Timothy would have readier access to the Jews if he complied with their rite Paul circumcised him, thought he did not deem it essential to salvation. In examining the lesson we will consider: Timothy's early life; Paul's commendation of him; Paul's sending him to Philippi; Paul's last instructions to Timothy.

I. Timothy's Early Life

Though as a boy he lived among idolatrous people, he had good home influences. His grandmother Lois, and his mother Eunice, were believers in revealed religion, and in the inspired scriptures. They were devout women themselves and taught Timothy from a child, "The Sacred Scriptures that were able to make him wise unto salvation." They reveal God's character as just, holy, yet merciful. They make known a promised Saviour, the Messiah, through whom sinful man can be saved from the guilt, penalty and power of sin. They describe His natures as perfect, divine and human. They portray His deeds, sufferings, death and resurrection. They state that all the sinner has to do to secure salvation is to believe or accept this Saviour, and to do what He commands in the strength that He supplies. Timothy was wise enough to receive this Saviour and was a Christian when Paul met him.

II. Paul's Commendation of Timothy

The young man was in good repute among his own people, as most young people are reared, like Timothy, under gospel influences. But after knowing him for years and after repeated trials, Paul had a still higher opinion of Timothy's gifts and graces.

Writing of him to the Philippians he calls him "My dearly beloved son," invokes for him "Grace, mercy and peace from God the Father, and Christ Jesus our Lord, and declares "Without ceasing, I have remembrance of thee in my prayers night and day." He calls attention to the pious teachings he had received from his devout grandmother and mother and that his reverence for them should cause him to continue in the ways in which they had led him. He also affirms of him "For I have no man like-minded, who will naturally care for your state." "But ye know the proof of him that as a son with the father he hath served with me in the Gospel."

III. Paul Sending Timothy to Philippi

The Philippian Church was the first Church planted by Paul in Europe. It was ever faithful and helpful to him, and he received aid from them in prosecuting his ministry, that he declined to accept from others. He cherished for this Church a warm and abiding affection. He writes to them, "But I trust in the Lord Jesus to send Timotheus shortly unto you that I may be of good comfort when I know your state. His sending Timothy to this favored Church shows his confidence in His ability and wisdom.

IV. Paul's Last Instructions to Timothy

Paul writes his second epistle to Timothy near the close of his earthly career. He not only urges him to "continue in the things which thou hast learned and been assured of," by an appeal to the memory of his pious relatives. But he exhorts, "Preach the word—reprove, rebuke, exhort with all longsuffering and doctrine." "Endure afflictions, do the work of an evangelist, make full proof of thy ministry." He also closes with a paean of victory, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith."

Christian Endeavor

By Rev. J. G. Garth, Chairman of Synod's Committee of Sabbath Schools and Young People's Work.

RECENT TRIUMPHS OF MISSIONS AT HOME AND ABROAD

(The Christian Endeavor topic this week was prepared by Mrs. J. G. Garth at the request of Mr. Garth.)

Sun., Sept. 30—Topic: Recent Triumphs of Missions at Home and Abroad. Acts 14:19-27.

From our scripture lesson let us read together

Acts 14:27, "And when they were come, and had gathered the church together, they rehearsed all that God had done with them and how He had opened the door of faith unto the Gentiles."

This gathering together of the church was a wonderful experience meeting held about two thousand years ago. How we would love to have heard the rehearsal of the things God had done through those first Christian missionaries!

But we can even now praise God for all that He did through them and through those who have followed in their train.

Now let us imagine that we can call together our missionaries from all the countries east and west where they are at work and hear them rehearse all that God has done with them and how He has opened the door of faith unto the Chinese, the Japanese, the Koreans, the Africans, the South Americans, Mexicans, Cubans, Mountaineers, Negroes, Foreigners in America, Indians and Negroes.

Would that not be a wonderful gathering and a glorious praise service! We are going to think of our missionaries as a body of knights that have gone on errands of mercy to all these distant lands—amid great dangers and perils and surrounded by great and difficult mountains of prejudice, ignorance and sin. As they appear before us each knight is clad in glorious and shining armour, having on the breast-plate of righteousness; his feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace. Above all, wearing the shield of faith wherewith he has been able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked and also the helmet of salvation and the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God.

No knight of the Round Table was ever clad in such splendid armour.

First we will call one who works among the colored people. "Sir Knight, tell us what you have done for the negroes of our Southland." "We have established the Presbyterian Colored Mission in Louisville, Ky.; the Seventeenth St. Mission, Richmond, Va.; and two missions in Atlanta, Ga. We also have many Sunday Schools taught by white teachers. We find there are millions of negroes in the South, and we have much concern for their spiritual welfare. For this reason we have established Stillman Institute, where we train leaders to conduct their own affairs and carry on the work of our Church in the Southland."

Foreigners in Our Country

"Will some Knight report what is being done among the foreigners in our land?" "The greatest foreign mission field in the world is our own America. We are preaching the Gospel to the Mexicans in Texas, and the Cubans in Florida, to the French in Louisiana, to the Italians in Birmingham and other places and to the Jews in Baltimore. We have the wonderful privilege of giving our gospel to these people and they are receiving our message with joy."

From the Mountains

"How about the people who live away from us in the mountains? Are we doing anything for them?" "Oh, yes. We have established Beechwood Seminary and other schools even in the recesses of the mountains and have built churches there, and have driven out the bootleggers and closed the stills hidden away in the hills by teaching of better things and of the Saviour of whom they have ever heard, who is grieved with the sin and ignorance of his mountain children."

Near East

One from the Near East arises to speak among others: "I come to speak in gratitude for what the Christians of America have done to relieve the great suffering in Beirut, and in Constantinople where more than 100,000 children are being cared for. Our hearts were touched as we saw these children marching and heard them singing 'Praise God from Whom all Blessings Flow.'"

Japan

Before this messenger is seated one from Japan rises to bring a message of gratitude from their stricken country for the assistance sent by the Christians of America at this particular time. Already the Gospel has made wonderful advances but the Spirit of Christianity has so impressed the people of Japan that she is turning her heart to the true God, who puts into the hearts of men this spirit of sympathy and brotherhood.

Other Lands

From Korea and from China, from Africa and from Mexico, Brazil and Cuba come the the knights, bearing all of them messages of victory over the enemy sin, and of great things that are being done in the name of the Master, but all of them bring with this message of victory the call for more Knights to go forth to conquer unclaimed subjects.

Let us pray that many may go forth with them to claim great victories for our King. That His way may be known upon earth, His saving health among all nations.

Jesus shall reign where'er the sun
Does his successive journeys run;
His Kingdom stretch from shore to shore
Till moons shall wax and wane no more.

Let every creature rise and bring Peculiar honors to our King;
Angels descend with songs again
And earth repeat the loud Amen.

BARIUM NEWS

During the week we have enjoyed visits from the following graduates: Harry Estridge, now at the university; Berta Craig, at N. C. C. W.; Madeline Strickland, of Mitchell, and Charley Carriker, and Edward Fraley on their way to Davidson.

One item of news while not happening right at Barium was of such general interest that we feel we must mention it. On Thursday we received an announcement of the wedding of Miss Annis Barnette, who so long and faithfully served this institution as bookkeeper and general correspondent. We still think of Miss Barnett as one of us and our good wishes for her happiness go to her most heartily from the biggest to the very littlest one in our family.

We are again glad to report visitors from nearly every section of the state, Wilmington, Greensboro, Charlotte, Aberdeen and Lincolnton, being especially well represented. We also had one of those rare events, a visit from a member of the Board of Regents, Rev. R. Murphy Williams, of Greensboro, and president of the board spending half of Tuesday, planning the Fall meeting of the board and other important matters. Mr. Williams' visits are always enjoyed and the time for his leaving comes all too soon.

The cool weather has brought football enthusiasm to a head, the game with Statesville High School Saturday will be a peppery affair. We think our sixty-three breakfast early enough, but these mornings you can hear quite a bunch of ball players on the field running signals and getting ready, long before the breakfast bell.

Miss Maggie Montgomery the matron in the Lottie Walker building was called home Friday on account of the illness of her sister. The infirmity girls have had so little to do lately that they have commenced to make patients of themselves. Madeline Hunt burnt her fingers with hot grease, and for a day looked as if she were fixing up for a prize fight. Then Cathlene Linder mistook the radiator near the head of her bed for the pillow and placed her head very suddenly on it, and now she looks very interesting with a large bandage around her raven locks.

Miss Brown the very last of the vacationers is expected back Saturday, then we will be all set for the year's work.

OFFERINGS FOR JAPANESE RELIEF

The Executive Committee of Foreign Missions has received notice of special offerings to be made by various churches and laymen. The committee heartily endorses the appeals of the Red Cross for all general relief and urges Presbyterians to co-operate with the Red Cross in this effort.

While it is known that our missionaries are all safe, yet no news has been able to come through as yet regarding property losses, especially at Nagoya. The committee may have to provide considerable sums for such objects as helping some of its missionaries repair damage to their homes and personal property, restoring destroyed or damaged school property, aiding in rebuilding ruined churches, assisting Japanese ministers, evangelists, and teachers in mission schools, and administering relief to and through the Japanese churches.

Special gifts for these purposes will gladly be received by the committee and may be sent to the Treasurer, Edwin F. Willis, P. O. Box 330, Nashville, Tenn. It is of course understood that all gifts of every description due to this great disaster in Japan, whether sent to the Red Cross or to the committee, are outside of the regular Foreign Mission budget for the year, whose undiminished amount is imperatively needed. Such gifts therefore will not be credited to the budget but will be received for to the donors as special extra offerings for Japanese relief and be subject to such use as our mission may deem it best to make of them.

Executive Committee of Foreign Missions.

PERSONAL

The Citizen Association of Statesville, which has for its object the beautification of the city has selected Rev. Dr. C. E. Raynall as their president. He is a fine authority on the aesthetic, whether in literature or civic improvement.

During the past week the Thornwell Orphanage has placed an order with the American Laundry Company for the needed machinery for the new laundry building, the gift of Mr. M. S. Bailey, of Clinton, and bearing his name. The machinery is of the most modern type and entirely adequate to take care of the laundry work of the institution. It is hoped that delivery will be made within sixty days and when the plant is installed, the institution's most pressing need at this time will have been met.—Purity (Chester, S. C.) NORTH CAROLINA Albemarle Presbytery—The 69th session of Albemarle Presbytery will be held at Falkland, N. C. on Tuesday, October 23, 1923, at 7:30 p. m.

J. N. H. Summerell, S. C.

Concord Presbytery will meet in regular Fall session at Centre Church (near Mooresville), September 16th, at 7:30 p. m.

E. D. Brown, S. C.

Waxhaw—For three days before the first Sunday in August Dr. F. M. Hawley, of Kershaw, preached twice a day, assisting the pastor, Rev. J. B. Hillhouse in preparatory services. As a result there were several additions to the church on profession of faith; others agreed to join the following Sunday on statement of faith or have their church letters sent for.

Pastors of North Carolina Synod—Brethren: Kindly call attention to the Million Dollar Campaign and ask all delinquent subscribers to remit to the Treasurer at Greensboro immediately. We want all delinquents to pay up before Synod meets, October 9th. Please tell them that it saves time and considerable expense if they will send check—rather than have me call for it. W. M. Hunter, Field Secretary, Million Dollar Campaign, Davidson, N. C.

Old Fort—On last Wednesday evening I closed a meeting in Old Fort, N. C., in which I was ably assisted by Rev. H. W. Roth, an evangelistic singer. This meeting was launched under the auspices of the Presbyterian Church of that place, but being held in our Presbyterian tent, it soon took on the aspect of a union meeting and continued throughout with such a feature. Both the Baptist and Methodist ministers of that place joined heartily and took part in the meeting. The congregations were large when not interfered with by rains and storms which were numerous during the meeting, which continued 11 days. The greatest results accomplished, we think, were in the way of reviving church members which is a great need now everywhere. There were about 150 reconsecrations, of church members, to God and the Church; about 13 definite conversions, and several pledges to erect the family altar. Next Sunday (16th) I begin a meeting in Kannapolis, N. C., which will be the seventh meeting which I have held since April 1st, in addition to my work as superintendent of Home Missions of Concord Presbytery.

J. M. Clark.

Mt. Olive—Will you please print this tardy appreciation from our church of the most excellent work of our new superintendent of Young People's Work?

Mr. Claude T. Carr, of Mooresville, N. C., was with us for a week in April for a "one unit school of methods in Sunday School work." He taught "The Teacher," by Wiergle, to a large class of enthusiastic workers and teachers of our Sunday School here and Calypso and a few of the Methodists from Calypso. His work fitted in in the course our Teacher Training Class is using and they had just gotten to this unit.

The attendance averaged about 30 for the week. Two chapters of the book were covered each evening, 45 minute periods for work with a ten-minute recess between. During this short recess light refreshments were served by one of the Sunday School classes. This social period was a real feature in our program. Twelve of the class took the examination at the close of the work and received credit. Our people were very interested and enthusiastic in the work and thoroughly enjoyed every bit of it. Every one fell in love with Mr. Carr and agree with their pastor that Mr. Carr is the right man in the right place and that our Synod has made a wise choice in placing him at the head of its young people's work.

If you want an antidote for the ills of your Sunday School, one that will start it humming, get Mr. Carr for a week.

W. M. Baker, Pastor.

Fayetteville Presbytery met, in adjourned session, at Maxton, N. C., September 4, 1923, at 3 o'clock p. m., with an attendance of seven ministers and five ruling elders.

Rev. R. A. McLeod, the last moderator present acted as moderator, and Rev. G. F. Kirkpatrick was chosen temporary clerk.

Pastoral relations were dissolved between Rev. C. E. McLean and Ashpole Church, and between Rev. E. B. Carr and the Cameron Hill Church.

Rev. Kenneth McCaskill was received from Lexington Presbytery, and order taken for his installation as pastor of Rock Branch and Cameron Hill Churches. The installation is to be made Sunday.

September 16th, by a commission of which Rev. M. D. McNeill is chairman.

Messrs. A. L. Currie, of Galatia Church, and Robert Bruce McQueen, of Rowland Church were received under the care of Presbytery as candidates for the ministry.

A paper relative to the office of Synodical Secretary of Stewardship was received and docketed for consideration at the regular Fall meeting.

Special prayer was offered at this meeting for the restoration to health of Rev. and Mrs. H. M. Dixon, and for the restoration of the voice of Rev. C. E. McLean.

Adjourned, with prayer, to meet in regular stated session at West End, Tuesday, September 25, 1923, at 8 o'clock p. m.

Peak Creek—On Sunday night September 9th, the series of evangelistic services conducted by the pastor, Rev. R. H. Stone, and Mr. D. R. Freeman came to a close. There were five professions and five additions to the church. The Lord's supper was commemorated on Sunday afternoon. The congregational singing under the leadership of Mr. Freeman, who is also a soloist and cornetist, shows great improvement. The people were encouraged to read their Bible and a report was made each night. Over 57,000 verses were read during the meeting. A large number of pastoral calls were made. The future for this being a large country church is exceedingly bright. Some of the audiences to whom the pastor preached were capacity ones with quite a number on the outside.

Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Finnie, Sunday School Extension workers, have done and are doing a wonderful work there. Numbers are learning the catechism and it is a forward looking school.

From the Ocean City Sentinel, we learn that the "Kiwianians were amused with negro tales by Rev. Whaling."

"Rev. Whaling" referred to here is not a colored brother, but the scholarly professor of theology of the Louisville Seminary.

He is evidently enlightening the New Jersey people with reference to negro dialect. We quote from the Sentinel:

"The members of the local Kiwanis Club spent a delightful hour last Wednesday, the entire company convulsed with laughter.

The chief speaker of the occasion was Dr. Whaling, of Louisville, Ky. Besides being a theologian and educator of national fame, nature has endowed Dr. Whaling with a rare sense of humor, and an inimitable style as an anecdotist.

A student of the negro character and temperament, Dr. Whaling's recital of an "Uncle Remus" yarn, told with a charming Southern accent, was a masterly effort."

Home-Coming and Revival at Bethlehem—On the fourth Sunday in August, a large congregation assembled at Bethlehem for Home-Coming Day.

In the morning, we had an interesting sermon from Mr. Caldwell, of Graham; this was followed by a sweet communion service.

After a bountiful dinner and a time for social intercourse of many friends the congregation again gathered to hear Rev. Harry Myers (missionary to Japan).

Every one grieved that the time he gave us was shortened by sadness which called him to Greensboro.

We again had services on Monday night, and after that throughout the week also the following Sunday morning and night.

The meeting was conducted by Rev. Walter Robertson, who did some earnest preaching.

We also had the pleasure of having for a part of the time, Rev. W. P. McCorkle, of Burlington.

The meeting was indeed a feast of good things.

Our pastor Rev. M. E. Hansel, was with us, and others joined in with their prayers and interest. On Sunday night the services closed with the admission of six new members.

We pray that the influence of the meeting may go on for years and years.

Mooresville—The Standard Co-operative Training School for Sunday School Workers was held in the First Presbyterian Church of Mooresville from September 2d to September 7th. Mr. C. T. Carr, of Mooresville, Mr. O. V. Woosley, of Lexington, Miss Virginia Jenkins, of Salisbury, and Miss Georgia Keene, of Durham were the teachers. Most of the Presbyterian and Methodist Churches of this vicinity were represented. The spirit of co-operation among those attendig was fine. The Presbyterians won 38 credits and the Methodists won 14 credits.

The Methodist teachers were as sound in their teachings and as sane in their methods suggested for use as our most conservative Presbyterians.

It is the unanimous opinion of our people that the school was a great help to the community. The teachers and working forces got an inspiration to try for better things and to do their work more efficiently.

On the Sunday following the closing of the school, the attendance on the First Presbyterian Church Sunday School increased very noticeably. The Young Business Men's Bible Class felt the impulse and their attendance was almost 100 per cent over the previous Sunday. They elected new officers for the next year and took on renewed interest.

The school was a success in every way and we are looking forward to the time when these good people will return next year for another week of instruction.

Albemarle Presbytery—Since the Spring meeting at an adjourned meeting at Raleigh, Rev. C. Connor Brown was dismissed to Louisville Presbytery.

Rev. J. A. Boyd was received from Tuscaloosa Presbytery; Rev. L. Cook Campbell from Fayetteville Presbytery. Licentiate W. B. Sullivan from Atlanta Presbytery, and Candidate Coyte Hunter from Mecklenburg. Mr. Boyd takes the work of Rev. F. H. Sattergood, who became pastor at Elizabeth City.

Mr. Campbell is now in charge of Pinetops and Fountain Churches.

Mr. Sullivan is assistant pastor of Raleigh First.

Mr. Hunter is pastor of four churches in Wake county.

Two candidates were received: Mr. John Crinkley, of the First Church, Raleigh, and Mr. W. I. Howell, of Oxford. The latter is a candidate for medical missionary.

Geneva Church sought aid in the crection of a new church.

A committee, Dr. White, A. J. Crane, and elder J. G. Ramsey was appointed to formulate a clear understanding of the position and relationship of county evangelist to all parties concerned.

Messrs. Sullivan and Hunter were ordained and Mr. Sullivan was installed.

October 23d, 7:30 p. m., was selected as time for the regular Fall meeting at Falkland.

At a call meeting August 10th, Rev. Stanley White was dismissed to Potomac Presbytery; and Rev. J. A. Vache automatically became chairman of the Presbyterial Foreign Mission Committee, to bring in the Fall report.

S. C.

The Home-Coming at Bethesda Presbyterian Church, near Amity, in Chambersburg Township, Saturday the 18th, was attended by probably a thousand people. The following was the program: Praise God from whom all blessing flow.

Song—"Home Sweet Home," by the choir.

Address of Welcome—Rev. J. E. Robinson.

Response—Prof. M. F. Albright, of Waynesville, N. C.

Reading of Church History—J. A. B. Goodman.

Song—"The Church in the Wildwood," by the choir.

Presentation of Testaments to two girls for studying the catechism and committing to memory—Rev. J. E. Robinson.

Address on "The Sunday School"—Attorney J. V. Turlington, of Mooresville.

Collection.

Song—By the Young People's Department.

Talk on "Work in Japan,"—Rev. J. Harper Brady, returned missionary.

Song—From Greenland's Icy Mountains.

Announcement for public dinner on the long table in the grove—Mr. J. R. L. McNeely.

Song—"Meet me there"—By the choir and congregation.

Benediction—Rev. J. Harper Brady.

The music under the direction of Mr. J. C. McLean, with Miss Mary Cook as organist, was exceptionally good and added very much to the occasion. Also the teachers' quartette of Statesville rendered some fine music.

A bountiful dinner was served in the grove and many lingered to renew old acquaintances and meet old friends, the like of which we had hardly seen before.

The church has been newly painted and in the shady grove in which it is located, presented an attractive appearance.

After the devotional exercises and reading of the church history by the pastor, Rev. Mr. Brady, in charge of the exercises, called on your correspondent for a short speech, who though a Lutheran has been closely connected in many ways with these good people for over 30 years, gladly testified to their old-time integrity and genuine honesty, and gives credit to an elder of this church for the godly influence upon a son who is now a minister in the Lutheran Church.

The next speaker was Mr. J. R. L. McNeely, superintendent of the Sunday School at Knox Chapel (Methodist). Mr. McNeely can always talk and he made a good talk this time as usual.

The next speaker was attorney Geo. A. Morrow, of Mooresville (son of G. M. Morrow), who also made a splendid short speech.

Mr. J. S. Leonard, of Statesville was next called on, and he wanted all of his old scholars who ever attended singing school to rise, and about 30 stood up, and were asked to come up and sing a few old pieces which they did.

Next was Mr. Alex Witherspoon, of Salisbury, who made a very interesting speech, telling about his boyhood days spent around Amity and Bethesda.

Next came Mr. J. W. Shepherd, of Winston-Salem, who was an elder in this church once, but like many others had moved away and had not been back here in 48 or 49 years.

Next came Mr. Walter Murdock, near Statesville, who can talk well too; and then came Mr. Robert G. McNeely, of Statesville, who left here 23 years ago and spoke with interest of his boyhood days here, and pointed out the very seat which his father's family occupied.

Before the congregation was dismissed it was announced that the ladies of the Church wanted a suitable monument or tombstone to mark the grave of Mrs. Margaret L. McNeely an aged and honored member of this church, and whose grave was unmarked, and donations were received by her grandson, Mr. J. R. L. McNeely. She claimed to be the first one to suggest the name Bethesda for the church, as also did Mrs. Ebenezer McNeely.

Mr. A. W. Cook, 90 years old, who was present, says he and Mr. Jesse McNeely cut the logs that built the first log church where the present church now stands.

Mr. Cook and Esq. J. Alanson White, of Statesville, aged 84, and who alone occupied the front seat as guests of honor were the oldest men there. This church stands as a monument to those grand old people who have nearly all passed over the river.

J. A. B. Goodman.

SOUTH CAROLINA

Reedy Creek—This field has recently branched out in rural Home Mission work. At old Selkirk, four miles from Minturn a Sabbath School was organized that has now reached an enrollment of 50. On the McLaurin Plantation a school of colored children and adults has been opened with an attendance of almost 100. Special services were held at Reedy Creek and Selkirk. Nine signified their intention of living a better life at Selkirk. A unique feature of the meetings was the addresses delivered in the morning on Sabbath School, Y. P. S., C. E., Rural Church Work and Education. Dr. S. C. Byrd and D. H. Dulin assisted the pastor in the work. The congregation was delighted to have Dr. Byrd with them as he had never visited the community before.

Dunbar—Last week this congregation held special meetings. Dr. D. McIntyre, pastor and his assistant D. H. Dulin, opened the meetings. In the course of the week Wm. McInnes and D. H. Henderson, students of Columbia Seminary, who were visiting at home in Carolina gave stirring addresses. A unique feature of the meetings was the visit of the men's club of the Bennettsville Presbyterian Church. Three of them addressed the gathering with splendid effect. Three young people took a stand for Christ and two of them joined the Church. This was perhaps the most popular meeting that was held in this church for years.

Marlboro and Drake—Mr. D. H. Dulin has just closed his engagement with these two mission fields under the care of the Blenheim Church. Special meetings were held at both points before he left. Dr. D. McIntyre and the Bennettsville men's club helped. The sacrament of the Lord's supper was dispensed at Marlboro last Sabbath night in the presence of a large congregation and two adults were baptized and received into the church. Mr. Dulin rendered splendid services last summer at these points and many regrets were expressed at his return to the seminary.

D. McIntyre.

Blenheim—A vacation school was held in this congregation with a total attendance of 118. Representatives from the four mission schools of this congregation were present. One school came out in large numbers. The work was done by the teaching staff of the church assisted by D. H. Dulin. Dr. S. C. Byrd spent the week-end at the manse and delivered splendid addresses. The congregation was glad to hear of the splendid work that was going on at Chicora College of which Dr. Byrd is president and the plans for an enlarged plant. The men's club of Bennettsville gave valuable assistance which was greatly enjoyed. A spiritual impetus was given to the church and its various departments. One member was received by certificate.

Bethel, Harmony Presbytery—Evangelistic services were conducted twice daily August 5-12. Dr. F. M. Hawley, of Kershaw, a former pastor of this church did the preaching, Mr. W. M. Coker, Turbeville, led the singing. A few joined the church on profession of faith, and several are expected to send for their church letters or join later on statement of faith. Scores of cards were signed pledging the lives to more consecrated service, greater activity in some form of church work, or specifying renewed efforts for the Master in the matter of proportionate giving and family religion. Several children were baptized.

Olanta—A former pastor, Dr. F. M. Hawley, of Kershaw, preached in this church twice daily from Sunday night, August 12th through Sunday morning, August 19th. A local choir, led by Mr. J. P. Kelley and assisted by Mrs. Hawley, encouraged the congregation to do what was pronounced possibly the heartiest singing the Olanta congregation has done in many a day. Many cards were signed indicating reconsecration, renewed activity in church work, or a purpose to lead a Christian life. Some pledged themselves to conduct family prayers and some to tithe. Several are expected to join the church later, either by letter or on re-affirmation of faith.

APPALACHIA

Plumtree, N. C.—We have fallen on strenuous times in Plumtree School—canning, canning, canning food-stuff for the coming winter, for prospects are bright for a large attendance and we will need an abundant supply. Some friends have given us a canning outfit, but, before its arrival, a make-shift boiler had been erected on the campus and many cans filled with beans, white beans, beets, tomatoes, to be followed soon by apple concoctions, beef and

News of the Week

Seventy-four thousand bodies were cremated in Tokio up to September 10th, the Japanese embassy was informed today in dispatches from its foreign office dealing with earthquake and fire casualties. Since September 4th, the advices said, 500,000 persons had left the capital by train, but no estimate was possible of the number who departed afoot, by boat, or other means.

"In Yokohama up to the eleventh," the foreign office said, "there were 68,000 destroyed houses, out of a total of 93,000. The food supply is fairly good.

"In other parts of Kanagawa prefecture, casualties known to date (eleventh) are as follows: Houses shaken down 53,000; houses burned, 4,500; swept away by tidal wave, 70; houses partly burned, 22,000; number of dead, 4,300; injured 24,000.

The dead counted by Japanese authorities up to September 7th numbered 47,000 in Tokio and 23,000 in Yokohama, the foreign office in Tokio reported to the Japanese embassy here.

The message said 150 foreigners had been killed "so far as has been ascertained."

About 316,000 houses, or 71 per cent of all, were destroyed in Tokio, while 70,000 of the 85,000 houses in Yokohama met a similar fate. Police of Tokio, according to the message, estimated 1,356,000 persons homeless there, constituting 67 per cent of the total population.

Within a ring of bayonets extending around the gigantic shambles where a week ago Tokio and Yokohama were in flames, teeming millions of Japanese are feverishly laboring, piling up the dead, clearing away the ruins, and building temporary structures to house the homeless thousands who are encamped like great armies in tents in the streets and the plazas where the cities stood. This ring of bayonets, backed by Japanese soldiers, symbolizes the power that saved Japan after earthquake, flood, and fire had laid waste one of the richest and most thickly settled sections of the island empire—and the district where nearly all the foreigners in the country live.

Seven United States Navy destroyers and the Pacific mail liner Cuba were wrecked the past week. The navy vessels crashed off the rocks in a dense fog off Aguillo Light, 75 miles north of Santa Barbara, and the passenger steamer on a reel off the southeast end of San Miguel Island, 35 miles off this port.

Twenty-five enlisted men of the destroyers lost their lives in the naval disaster and all the destroyers were reported as total losses.

The death list in the disaster which sent seven naval destroyers crashing on the rocks of Point Honda, had increased to 29, according to a message from a correspondent of The Santa Barbara Morning Press.

Twenty-one battleships and cruisers of the United States are to be sold for scrap in a series of sales to begin next month. The vessels for elimination from the navy lists by the limitation of armament treaty ratified August 17th, last, and must be scrapped within 18 months from that date, according to the treaty provisions.

Several hundred persons representing a dozen or more cities in North Carolina were present for the formal presentation of the Cannon Memorial building to the Stonewall Jackson Training School, Winston-Salem, High Point, Salisbury, Charlotte, Albemarle and Greensboro were among the cities represented.

The formal presentation of the building was made by David H. Blair, commissioner of Internal Revenue and a son-in-law of Mrs. James W. Cannon, the donor. The building was accepted for the school by James P. Cook, chairman of the board of trustees.

Charlotte's population is 64,835, according to an estimate prepared from school census figures of this year, as compared with corresponding figures for 1919, the year when the last federal census, which gave this city a population of 46,338, was taken. At the end of the first week of school in the public institutions of learning in Charlotte in 1919, when the Queen City had a population of 46,338, there were 7,518 pupils enrolled, according to figures supplied by Superintendent H. P. Harding. At the end of the first week of school this year, the enrollment was 10,519 pupils.

The navy cannot legally be used in enforcing prohibition, Attorney General Daugherty ruled. In addition, he declared, there is no national emergency in the situation calling for the employment of warships to make the dry laws effective.

Although the death rate from tuberculosis in the Southern states has greatly decreased in the past 10 years, is still sufficiently large to occasion alarm, Dr. L. B. McBrayer, superintendent of the North Carolina State Sanatorium, at Sanatorium, said in the opening address at an informal conference of approximately 50 tuberculosis workers.

The conference has been called for the purpose of reorganizing the Southern Tuberculosis Conference, which became defunct in 1920.

Improved business conditions and an estimate from Washington, placing this year's probable cotton crop at only 10,750,000 bales, have caused a condition which amounts almost to a stampede among cotton users both here and abroad, the New York Cotton Exchange announced.

The demand in futures has been so great, the statement said, that the facilities of the exchange have been taxed to the utmost and clerks have been working nights in a unsuccessful endeavor to keep the books up to date.

Six weeks ago cotton for October delivery sold at 20.3-4 cents on the New York Cotton Exchange. Today it closed at 28.

This advance is equal to more than $35 a bale, and is equivalent to an increased return to the cotton planters in the South of about $400,000,000, the statement said.

The annual address of State Commander James A. Lockhart, of Charlotte, in which he flayed the war records of State Auditor Baxter Durham and Judge W. P. Stacy, and a message from Gen. Frank T. Hines on the work of the Federal Veterans' Bureau, of which he is chief, marked the first day's session of the fifth annual convention of the North Carolina department of the American Legion, which opened with approximately 2,000 delegates and visitors in attendance.

Col. Wiley C. Rodmar, of Washington, was elected commander of the North Carolina department of the American Legion at the concluding session of the fifth annual convention of the state department, defeating Col. George S. Bunker, of Wilmington; Tom Daniels, of New Bern, and Dr. Chas. O. H. Laughinghouse, of Greenville, on the sixth ballot.

Italy accepts the terms of the council of ambassadors and agrees to evacuate Corfu and adjacent islands when Greece has satisfied all of Italy's demands for reparations.

A semi-official statement says the government will consider its demands satisfied as soon as Greece carries out the demands of the council of ambassadors, which are substantially the same as those Italy forwarded to Greece.

At a meeting of the trustees of Catawba College in Newton, Tuesday the building and grounds were sold to the University of Asheville for $60,000. Dr. Hubbell, president of the Asheville institution, accepted the offer of the Catawba College trustees, subject to the approval of his board.

From 1900 to 1920 the percentage of people owning the homes they live in decreased, but North Carolina and all other states of the South except West Virginia and Florida showed an increase in ownership. Virginia lead by a nose in actual ownership. The South Atlantic group of states made a better record than any other.

FAVORABLE WINDS

While on his recent visit to this country, Marshal Foch made a reply to a man who was a guest at a dinner party in Denver, given by a party of Americans, took exception to French politeness. "There is nothing in it but wind," he said, with questionable taste. "Neither is there anything but wind in a pneumatic tire," retorted the gallant marshal, "yet it eases the jolts along life's highway wonderfully.—The Argonaut.

The most necessary things in the forsaking of sin is a real, heartfelt desire to do so.

Flora Macdonald College opened for the fall term on September 12th with the following states represented in the student enrollment—an increase of two states over last year: Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Mississippi, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia and West Virginia. Two foreign countries Japan and China are on the list. The board of trustees met hereon September 14th to discuss matters in connection with the further expansion of the college.

The General Alumnae Association has been active in carrying on the College Beautiful Plan under the direction of the chairman, Mrs. W. E. Sikes with the following improvements effected: office of the faculty dean refurbished; eight faculty rooms refurnished and repainted; walls of the college auditorium kalsomined.

The class of 1912 has placed a handsome alumnae register bound in russian calf and containing five hundred pages in the rotunda of the college.

President Vardell, Miss Della McGoogan, president of the general alumnae association and members of the executive committee were in conference here last week and plans were outlined for the celebration of Founders Day, October 23d, when the alumnae will meet to discuss their especial interests and plans. Representatives of the 43 branches will be entertained by the college and one of North Carolinas distinguished women will make the address of the day.

The complete program for the celebration of Scotch Day, October 12th, has been announced. The meeting of the Scottish Society of America will be held at 11 a. m. in the Woodland Theatre on the campus with Governor Morrison, of North Carolina, Governor T. L. McLeod, of South Carolina, A. W. McLean, of Lumberton, John Gordon Gray, of Philadelphia and Lochiel, chieftain of the Clan Cameron delivering addresses. A basket picnic will follow the exercises and in the afternoon an informal reception will be tendered Lochiel and his wife, Lady Hermione in the college rotunda. At night the Adanac Male Quartette of Toronto will give a concert in the auditorium.

Davidson—In accord with confident expectation the college has had a splendid opening, the initial day before its close seeing a registration of more than 560 men, this being in excess of the total enrollment of last year, which at that time, as will be the case this year, was limited to a fixed number by virtue of lack of accommodation in class room and dormitory for any more would be matriculates. Of the present number about 225 are first year men. The higher classmen have returned in larger relative numbers, it would appear, than possibly ever before. This too, is in the face of the fact that the outgoing senior class last June, class of '23, was the largest the college has ever graduated.

At chapel this morning both rostrum was filled with teachers and the auditorium proper crowded to overflowing with students. It is manifest that for the immediate present the only way to provide seats for the student body in Shearer Hall will be by dividing the Senior class into sections and allowing the class to attend by sections on alternating days, or in some such way as will not require the entire class to be present at each morning service.

This year promises to be a most happy and successful one and students and faculty alike begin the session with enthusiasm and high hopes. Plant and courses indicate expansion and growth and would point to an ever widening influence and enlarging sphere of usefulness for the institution. President Martin spoke briefly and to the point this morning at chapel in welcoming the students to the campus and in challenging them to make the session of 1923-24 one of which the college from every viewpoint would be justly proud in its record of work well and worthily done.

SUMMER CHRISTIANS

The long, hot days of July are here. With them comes the longing to get away from the routine, and rest. Some can accomplish this by a summer month spent away from home. These we shall miss from our Sunday School and church services. Our hope is that some other church will gain what we lose.

There are others who will feel that attending the usual Sabbath services can be dispensed with during this enervating period. Therefore we usually expect the congregations to be smaller at all services in July. This is the time when the Christian most needs the inspiration and spiritual power which is acquired in God's house in prayer and praise. It is likewise the time when the Church most needs the Christian. So many are absent from the city and cannot attend and there will always be some who will not attend. For this reason the faithful should measure up to their privilege and duty.

Our Sunday School is still very much alive all the year round. Our morning worship in the church is short and helpful. At night, with others of Christ's disciples, we can worship Him on the lawn of the Capitol Square.

When bodies are weary and minds are sluggish refreshment which is gained by united expressions of devotion will renew us for our every task.

Let us at Central this summer have a real spiritual blessing.—Bulletin Central Church, Atlanta, Ga.

Report of Every Member Canvass For Synod of North Carolina

For the Year Beginning April 1, 1923

Stewardship Committee

J. B. Spillman, Secretary

This year we have reports of the Every Member Canvass from 340 of the 516 churches, 65 more than last year. There are 176 churches with a membership of 12,407 that made no report. The report shows 28,062 subscriptions to the Benevolent Causes and 29,867 to Current Expenses. This is a gain over last year in Benevolent subscriptions of 4,358 and Current Expense subscriptions of 4,273.

The Benevolent subscriptions total $617,492, a gain of $94,062 over the Benevolent subscriptions of last year and a gain of $84,376 over the amount actually paid to the Budget of the Benevolent Causes for the year closing March 31, 1923. The Current Expense subscriptions total $665,255, a gain of $143,303. Total for Benevolent Causes and Current Expenses this year, $1,282,747; last year, $1,047,507, a gain of $235,240.

The 176 churches that made no report gave last year $37,156. If we add this to the Benevolent subscriptions of $617,492, it would give us a total of $654,648 that we should be able to count on for the Benevolent Causes this year. It is noticeable that the gain of 8,631 subscriptions did not decrease the per capita amount subscribed. The per capita subscriptions for both Benevolences and Current Expenses this year is $44.34; last year 42.63, a gain of $1.71 over last year.

It is becoming more and more apparent that we need to teach the members who are received into the church the fundamental principles of Christian stewardship of time and money if we are to develop their Christian lives and meet the opportunities and responsibilities that face us. It is not to our credit that there are 27,963 members in the churches that made the Every Member Canvass who made no subscriptions to the world task of the church; and 12,407 in churches that made no canvass. If our church members practice the methods and proportion of Christian giving taught in God's Word we would have money to do all the work God had intrusted to us. Our committees are unable to meet the calls upon them because of our failure to teach and practice the principles of stewardship and not because God has not given us sufficient means to meet the needs.

Result of the Use of Flying Squadrons

The good work done by the Flying Squadrons in Concord Presbytery, Fayetteville Presbytery, Mecklenburg and Wilmington Presbyteries, is shown in the large increase in the number of tithers and family altars in these Presbyteries. It was thought by many that it was almost useless to try to secure a congregation for a mid-week service during February and March, especially in the country or small town churches, but we found that where the pastor made ample announcement and preparation, there were sufficient numbers attending these meetings to more than justify the trouble and expense. In some places rain and bad roads interfered with the meetings, but in the great majority of places the meetings were held on time and fair congregations attended.

In many small churches it was the first time in their history that they had the opportunity of hearing four Presbyterian preachers during one day in their own church. In one group of 16 churches in Mecklenburg Presbytery, Flying Squadrons increased the family altars from 86 to 190, starting 94 new family altars. This is but an indication of the readiness of the people to begin holding family worship in their homes. Our report for the Synod shows an increase in family altars from 1,864 to 2,902, and of tithers from 3,353 to 5,152. These increases are largely due to the interest stimulated in the churches by the Flying Squadrons.

Folders

A new experiment in church publicity was tried out in this campaign. Your Secretary prepared a series of four folders for the Assembly's Stewardship Committee for use by the entire Church. One hundred and eighty-one churches in this Synod used 19,958 sets of these folders, distributing them during the four weeks previous to the canvass. That the folders produced results is shown by the records of these churches. Churches using folders this year subscribed 91 per cent of their quota. The same churches last year subscribed 75 per cent of their quota. Our total gain in the subscription to Benevolent Causes this year was $94,062. Of this amount the churches that used folders report an increase of $91,000. The per capita subscriptions to Benevolences for the churches using the folders is $26.36, the total per capita for the Synod is $22.05.

These figures show conclusively that if we give our members the facts they will contribute the money needed for our Benevolent work. Another series of folders is being prepared for the campaign next year, and we hope to get many more churches to use them.

Contributions

The comparative contribution for the past two years is shown in table No. 3. Our statistical tables are so badly arranged as to make it extremely difficult to separate contributions to the Budget from Special Contributions.

In the Educational Institution column, the Assembly Training School and contributions from churches and Special contributions from individuals and churches to Schools and Colleges are tabulated. The only way to separate these amounts is by securing statement from the Treasurer of the Assembly's Training School and the Treasurer of the Schools and Colleges funds, and deduct these amounts from the total given in the statistical table. This is the way these amounts were separated.

The Special amounts contributed to Barium Springs is an estimate as there was no way of separating Specials from amounts contributed to the Budget.

It is to be noted that the subscriptions for the year ending March 31, 1922, were $510,000, and the contribution was $495,187, or $14,817 less than subscribed. This is probably due to reporting as subscription to the Budget Special amounts that were not included in the Budget.

Last year's subscriptions were $523,430, while the actual contributions were $533,116, or $9,786 more than subscribed. It is gratifying that the year shows a gain in actual contributions to the Benevolent Budget of $37,929. With the increased subscriptions, this year should show a gain of $121,452 over the year closing March 31, 1923.

A statement was sent to every church last year and this year showing the comparison between the quota and the amount actually paid to the Benevolent Causes. For the year closing March 31, 1922, we could find only two churches in the Synod contributing their full quota to every Benevolent Cause. This year we have 23 churches paying in full all quotas. There are 34 other churches that paid the full amount of their quota, but did not pay in full the quota to each cause. The officers of one church checked up their Benevolent receipts and found that they were $9,000 short of their quota. They made a hurried canvass and raised the $9,000 before the close of the year. Another church finding they were $3,500 short, raised that amount.

As the quotas for the present year are upon a much more equitable basis, we should show a large increase in the number of churches meeting all apportionments.

RECOMMENDED BENEVOLENT QUOTAS AND INCREASE IN PASTORS' SALARIES FOR THE YEAR BEGINNING APRIL 1, 1924

The quotas for the year beginning April 1, 1924, have been worked out after very careful study of contributions for Benevolences, pastors' salaries and current expenses, covering a period of four years. It was the study of these figures that led to the definite conclusion that we have been making a mistake in recommending Benevolent quotas for churches without taking into consideration the amount of salary churches were paying to their pastors. In order to obtain accurate information we secured a list of the amounts paid every pastor in the Synod by the Churches having paid their quota to each Benevolent Cause in full for year ending March 31, 1923. Only amounts contributed to the Budget included in this tabulation.

Synod's Home Mission Committee and the Presbytery's Home Mission Committees. These amounts were added to the amounts paid the pastor by the local church. We found that 25 pastors received $1,200 or less, 86 pastors received from $1,200 to $1,800, 73 pastors received from $1,800 to $2,400, 36 pastors received from $2,400 to $3,000, five pastors received from $3,000 to $3,600, 11 received from $3,600 to $5,000 inclusive. One received above $5,000.

We have had before us the wage scale in this State secured from a recent report of the Department of Labor and Printing and information from other sources. Some of these wages are as follows:

Barbers	Per week	$33	a year	$1,716
Bakers	Per week	35	a year	1,820
Brick Layers	Per week	42	a year	2,288
Carpenters	Per week	32	a year	1,664
Electricians	Per week	49	a year	2,548
Civil Engineers	Per week	50	a year	2,600
Machinists	Per week	43	a year	2,236
Plumbers	Per week	47	a year	2,444
R. R. Conductors	a year	3,000
R. R. Engineers	a year	3,000

The average paid the ministers of the Synod is $2,055. There are 111 who received $1,800 and less and most of them keep a car at a cost for upkeep, repair and depreciation of from $400 to $600 a year. This leads to the definite conclusion that in fixing a quota for Benevolences we must take into consideration the amount paid the pastor and that we should also suggest an increase in salary where needed as well as recommend the quota for the Benevolent Causes. In some cases the Benevolent quota has been reduced in order that a fairer salary should be paid the pastor. Many cases have been found of ministers who were receiving salaries entirely inadequate to meet their needs. There is one large country church of over 300 members, situated in a splendid agricultural community, that is paying their pastor only $1,200. This man's brother is aiding in his support. Two churches, one over 200 members, the other a small church in a good farming community, are paying their pastor only $600. The Home Mission Committee is paying him $700. He has a family and is trying to give a college education to his daughter. He drives a 16-year-old horse. His members have automobiles. Another minister with four children is supporting his family and paying for the upkeep of a car on $1,500 a year. He has a private income of about $600 outside of his salary. Another with a wife and four children of school age is supporting his family and maintaining a car on $1,800 a year. Two of his children will be ready for college in a short time. He has been unable to save up any money for their education. Is it fair? Is it good business? Is it wise for the church to pay a minister a salary so small as to keep him from buying the books he needs, to keep him from attending a Bible school or conference every now and then, and support his family as he should?

We can easily pay the increased recommendation of $100,331 in the salaries of our ministers and raise the Benevolent quota besides if we conduct an effective Every Member Canvass in every congregation. There are 40,370 church members who are reported as not having made a subscription to either the Current Expenses or Benevolent work of the church. Why have not these members learned the joy of laboring with Christ to carry the Gospel of Jesus to the world? We are robbing them of the blessing that they should be enjoying if we fail to teach them the great privilege of partnership with God in the greatest work committed to man.

Excuses are made that many of these are children, many are non-resident, some are very poor, but are those sufficient excuses? Shall we not each the children their obligation and responsibility to Christ by seeing that they contribute weekly? Have we no follow up system of reaching the non-resident members? If a man has food to sustain his body, clothes and shelter, is he not without excuse and is he not robbing himself of the very blessing he is in need of by his neglecting to obey God in the matter of proportionate giving?

There are numbers of churches that are securing subscriptions from over 75 per cent of their members and quite a number from over 90 per cent of their members. The remedy for our present financial condition is at hand, if we will use it.

Presbyterian Orphan Home

The increase in the number of children at the Home is calling for larger contributions for maintenance. Attention is called to the present plan of financing the expenses.

Synod has set aside for the Home 7 1-2 per cent of the Benevolent Budget of $790,000, which is $59,250. Synod recommended last year that an offering be taken on the first Sunday of the month in each Sunday School for the Orphanage. Also that the Thanksgiving Offering be given to the Orphanages. The Orphanage received some money direct from individuals.

The maintenance cost will run from $90,000 to $100,000, depending upon the increased number of children taken in. Our problem is this, unless our churches realize that the Thanksgiving Offering, the Sunday School Offering and contributions from individuals are to be in addition to the amount put in the Benevolent Budget for the Orphanage, the Orphanage will not receive sufficient money to meet the increased expenses.

It will be necessary to secure for the expense funds about $30,000 a year in addition to the amount put in the Budget for the Orphanage.

Recommendations

First: That the increase in pastor's salary and the Benevolent quotas for the year beginning April 1, 1924, be adopted.

Second: That the Stewardship Committee of each Presbytery be asked to present these Benevolent quotas and recommended increase in the salaries of pastors to their Presbytery for adoption at the fall meeting.

Third: That the Secretary of Stewardship of the Synod be instructed to write to the Clerk of Session of each church that has been asked by the Presbytery to increase their pastor's salary, calling the attention of the session and board of deacons to the action of Synod and Presbytery and ask that they arrange to comply with the request.

Fourth: That the Woman's Auxiliaries and other Church Societies be urged not to take on special work for Causes that have not been approved by either the Assembly, Synod or Presbytery, until the entire Benevolent quota has been subscribed by their church for each cause in full.

Fifth: That the Benevolent funds be distributed as follows: Foreign Missions, 33.3 per cent; Assembly's Home Missions, 16. per cent; Christian Education and Ministerial Relief, 7.5 per cent; Sunday School Extension, 2. per cent; Assembly's Training School, .6 per cent; Bible Cause, .6 per cent; Synod's Home Missions, 10 per cent; Educational Institutions, 10. per cent; Barium Springs, 7.5 per cent; Presbytery's Home Missions, 12.5 per cent.

Sixth: That all churches be urged to organize the Men of the Church according to the plan of the Assembly's Committee on Men's Work.

Seventh: That the Budget of the Synod's Stewardship Committee for the year beginning January 1, 1924, be $12,000, and provided as follows:

Synod's Home Mission Committee	25%	Total $3,000
Educational Institutions	14%	Total $1,680
Barium Springs	27%	Total $3,240
Presbytery's H. Mission Committees	34%	Total $4,080
Presbyteries as follows:
Albemarle	10.5%	Total $ 428
Concord	16. %	Total $ 653
Fayetteville	16.2%	Total $ 660

Kings Mountain	6.4%	Total $ 267
Mecklenburg	26. %	Total $1,060
Orange	13.6%	Total $ 552
Wilmington	11.4%	Total $ 465

Eighth: As the General Assembly's Stewardship Committee has appropriated $3,000 to the expenses of the Stewardship Committee of this Synod with the understanding that $700 of this amount is to be used to pay the Secretary of Stewardship of each Presbytery and as the two previous appropriations of $2,000 each covering two years, was used by the Synod's Committee to meet its expenses for the one calendar year of 1922, and as the larger part of the expenses of this work come in the first quarter of the calendar year we recommend that: The committees contributing to the support of the Stewardship Committee be requested to continue their appropriations through the present calendar year and that the reduction to be credited to them be made the last quarter of the calendar year of 1924. It being understood that the amount credited will be after the $700 heretofore mentioned is deducted and after making up any deficiency that may occur in the Budget fixed by the Synod for this Committee.

CHILDREN

VISITING WITH GRANDFATHER

Dear Standard:
I am a little boy six and a half years old. I went to school to Miss Ruth last year and can go in the third grade in the public school next year. I go to the Church of the Covenant and our minister is Mr. Mann, he is fine. My Sunday School teacher is Miss Blanche, I like her fine. I have a sister named Rosalie and a brother named Preston, but I am the biggest one. I read the stories in the Standard and love the letters too. I read it every week. I am on Wrightsville Beach with my grandfather and am going to Asheville with them in the car. I had better close for fear of the wastebasket.

HAS BEEN TO HOSPITAL

Dear Standard:
I am a little girl 12 years old. I go to Sunday School every Sunday that I'm not sick. I love to go. I've just come from the hospital and I sure did hate to miss Sunday School. There was a nice old man there that would give the patients Sunday School papers and Standards. It sure was nice of him. I play the piano for Sunday School. Please publish my letter as I want to surprise my father and mother.
Your little friend,
Dorothy Onery.
Wellford, S. C.
P. S.—If any of you little readers would like to write to me, I would answer all the letters I receive.
Dorothy Onery.

FOUR PETS

VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL

Dear Standard:
I am a little girl 13 years old and I go to Sunday School every Sunday and my teacher is Mrs. R. C. Carson, I like her fine. Our Vacation Bible School started July 2d and ended July 27th. Our teacher was Miss Laura Howell, I like her fine. I did not miss a day or was not tardy a time. I have recited both the child's catechism and the shorter catechism and have received my Testament and Bible; so I close for fear of Mr. Wastebasket.

READ HER AUNT THE LETTERS

Dear Standard:
I am a little girl seven years old. I live in Gastonia, N. C., but am visiting my great-aunt in Charlotte. She is nearly 83 years old. I read her all the children's letters in this week's Standard. My little friend Marianna Nicholson, from Statesville, is visiting here with me. I will answer Sarah Perrin Spencer's question: Jacob had 12 sons. I hope you will print this for I want to surprise my mother and daddy.

WHEN LITTLE BEAR VISITED SCHOOL

Once in midsummer when wild roses were blooming along the river bank behind the Three Bears' house in the forest and wild birds were singing from every thicket, Father Bear built a raft and took his family floating downstream. The raft was made of logs firmly fastened together. It was big and strong, and had three rustic chairs on it—a big, big chair for the big Father Bear, a middle-sized chair for middle-sized Mother Bear, and a wee, wee chair for wee Little Bear. There were also poles to keep the rafts from bumping against the river bank: a rather heavy pole made just for huge Father Bear, a middle-sized pole for middle-sized Mother Bear, and a long, light pole for Little Bear.

Soon they were far from home, but it was afternoon that day before anything special happened. There was a bend in the river, and when the raft came swishing and tumbling round that bend the Three Bears saw a little log house on a hillside and many children playing outside the door.

At that very moment, bump! went the raft into the bank, and there it stuck among the willows!

"Oh, please do not push the raft into the stream for a few minutes!" whispered Little Bear. "Let us watch the children!"

"Yes, let us watch the children," added Mother Bear.

So Father Bear, being willing to please his family, seated himself in his huge chair, and Mother Bear seated herself in her middle-sized chair; but Little Bear stood on his tippy-toes in his little chair, so that he could see better.

"Oh, I wish those children would let me play with them!" cried Little Bear, as the youngsters joined hands and danced round and round in a circle.

Plainly, the log building was a school-house, for a moment later out stepped the schoolmaster and began to ring a bell.

The children straightway formed in line, boys first, girls behind. Then they all marched into the schoolroom, saying, "Left foot, right foot, left foot, right foot," and their feet made a merry stamping.

After the children were all in the school-house and the door was closed, a song came floating through the open windows.

When the singing was over, and the only sounds that the bears heard were the song of birds, the lapping of the water, and the humming of bees, Little Bear said to his father and mother, "I see a little path leading from the river to the school-house, and I see bushes beside one of the windows. If I will go softly, softly, and climb softly, softly into the bushes, may I go and peep into the schoolhouse and see the children?"

"Oh, I do not know about that!" began Mother Bear; but Father Bear said, "Oh, let him go! Only, Son Bear," he added, "if one of the children should say 'Bear,' you run straight down to the raft, and we shall be ready to push into the stream and get away!"

So Little Bear crept softly up the path on the hillside, climbed softly into the bushes, and peeped into the schoolroom. All the children were in their seats with their heads bent over books and slates, until the teacher said sternly, "Primer class! Come forward!"

Then two little girls and one little boy, with blue-covered books in their hands, went to a spot in front of the teacher's desk and stood with their toes on a crack in the floor. The little girls edged away from the boy as far as they could while the master looked at them. Little Bear was so much interested that he climbed closer to the window.

"Open your books," said the schoolmaster.

The three opened their blue-covered books.

"Joan, you may read the lesson first, if you please."

So Joan read, "I—see—a—cat."

"Good!" said the master. "Mary, you may read."

"I—see—a—cat," read Mary; she knew every word of that lesson.

"Now, Simon," spoke the master to the boy, "let us hear you read."

Little Bear was sure that Simon did not know his lesson; he was sure of it because Simon acted so foolish and looked so unhappy. He stood on one foot and then on the other and twisted and squirmed until the girls giggled.

"Come, Simon," urged the master, "we are waiting."

It happened that Little Bear felt so sorry for Simon that he forgot all about himself, and leaned forward until his paws rested on the window-sill. No one noticed him there, because bushes clustered close round that window and he had made no sound.

"Simon," the master commanded at last, "read the lesson!"

"I—see," began Simon, "I—see—a"—Then he looked up; but instead of saying "cat," as the primer said, Simon, with eyes as large and round as saucers, dropped his book and cried, "Bear! I see a bear!"

Sure enough, he did; so did all the children; so did the master; because Little Bear was right up in the window, trying to tell Simon the word cat!

Down the hill ran Little Bear as fast as he could go, and scrambled on board the raft. Father Bear and Mother Bear used their poles and quickly pushed the raft into the middle of the stream, and away went all three of them, laughing. But Little Bear did not wish to visit school again that day—or that summer.—Frances Margaret Fox, in The Youth's Companion.

THE JEWELERS

They were playing jewelry store, Edith and Corinne, when Mrs. Barr call from the back door. Edith ran up at once.

"Hadn't you better invite Mrs. Mills' grand-daughter over to play with you?" her mother asked.

Edith scowled. "We don't either of us know her," she said.

"It won't take long to get acquainted. She looks lonesome."

"Well," yielded Edith.

The two little girls talked together in whispers for a minute; then Edith slowly crawled through the place in the fence where the pickets were off, and walked toward the little girl in the big, old-fashioned garden.

"Would you like to come and play with us?" she asked. "We're going to have a jewelry store; we're making the jewelry now."

"Oh, thank you! I'd love to!" cried the other. "I'll run right in and ask grandma. You will have to teach me how to play it; I never did," she said.

"Oh, we're stringing snowberries for pearl necklaces and making pins out of asters, and doing things like that. When we get enough we'll ask the other children to come and buy."

"It must be fun!" and Laura Mill's face glowed with pleasure.

The bench, which was now a counter for the display of jewelry, showed several necklaces.

"How pretty!" cried Laura. "Oh, I know what I'll make!" and she ran back into her grandmother's garden.

"I don't think that's very polite—to go off first thing!" said Edith, as the visitor did not return.

"Let's tell her she can have a store by herself," suggested Corinne. "Probably she won't make anything nice."

So Edith called through the fence: "If you want to you can have your things on your side!"

"All right!" came back to them from behind the flowerbeds; but it did not have a joyful sound.

For a long time the three worked quietly. Finally Edith and Corinne were ready for customers. "We'll have to go and tell her," whispered Edith.

Together they approached the fence.

"Oh, what a lot!" exclaimed Corinne.

"Why, it's just like a real jewelry store!" cried Edith.

"Aren't they pretty?" said Laura, smiling.

There was a large wooden box close by the "gate," and on it, in small paper boxes, lying on white and pink cotton, were the articles she had made. The blossoms of scarlet sage strung together looked almost like a coral necklace, red, rosy lips made a pretty bracelet, yellow baby roses put together with wire answered for pins and belt buckles, while fuchsias were pretty earrings.

"Nobody will want to buy ours after seeing yours," declared Corinne.

"Oh, I think they will!" returned Laura. "But why not put them all together? I'd rather."

"Would you, really?" asked Corinne, her face growing hot, as she remembered that she had been the one to propose separate "stores."

So more shallow boxes were obtained and the whole stock was soon in readiness for the real play to begin. Business was brisk, and Laura soon had to leave her place behind the counter in order to fashion more jewelry.

By dinner-time all the children were wearing pretty ornaments, and both Corinne and Edith thought there could not be a pleasanter playmate than Laura Mills.—Montreat Star.

HISTORICAL SKETCH

Blacknall Memorial Presbyterian Church, West Durham, N. C., 1894-1923

Early in the year of 1894, in an old and dilapidated brick building that had formerly been used as a barroom, in the settlement known as "Tlickstown," just west of what is now known as West Durham, was started a Sunday School.

It had long been in the minds and hearts of that beloved elder of the First Presbyterian Church of Durham, Mr. R. D. Blacknall, and of his devoted wife, who lived on their plantation about a mile distant, to do something for the redemption and Christian education of the people who lived in this apparently God-forsaken community, so near their door. And so, with the enlisted sympathy and support of Mr. W. P. Jordan, another elder of the First Presbyterian Church of Durham, Mr. and Mrs. W. O. Blacknall, Miss Samantha Sykes, Miss Hallie Holman, and Mr. Wade Adams, was started a work which, under the providence of God, was destined to grow into a power for good in the growing and still growing community of West Durham, a work that has grown into a thing of beauty, an ornament in the Kingdom of our God, and by His grace shall be a joy forever.

The work itself was very meagre in its beginning, meeting with apathy and, in some cases, with open hostility on the part of those who were intended to be benefited, as such movements often do in communities of like nature, but the faithful devotion and untiring enterprise of this little band of earnest Christians held the work together, and the progress, though slow and oftentimes tedious, was sure and steady.

In 1896 the school was moved to a small cabin in West Durham, the better to accommodate the growing population of this community. This move was a wise one as evidenced by renewed growth and activity. About this time Mr. Jordan, who had been superintendent of the school, gave up the work to serve in the Edgemont work, and Mr. R. D. Blacknall, who had been assistant superintendent, became the superintendent, which position he held with untiring devotion, unmitigated zeal and a supreme faith, until called to his reward in the year 1900.

In 1896 Dr. L. B. Turnbull, pastor, and the officers of the First Presbyterian Church, who had been actively interested in the work from its earliest conception, taking cognizance of the growing needs of this and other missions of the church, called Rev. C. W. Maxwell to labor as assistant to the pastor, in charge of the mission work. He began his very faithful and fruitful labors in September, 1896, and continued for 16 months, resigning November 16, 1897. On July 14, 1897, the first definite steps were taken to erect a house of worship, the land for church and manse having been donated by Mr. J. R. Blacknall. On the 25th of that same month Dr. Turnbull and Mr. Maxwell were authorized to proceed "as far as funds in hand would permit," and the building was occupied and dedicated August 7, 1898, during the pastorate of Rev. R. L. Wharton, who was called to the work May 25, 1898, and labored faithfully until called to the foreign mission field in December, 1899.

On December 12, 1899, Rev. J. L. Wicker accepted a call to this work and during his brief pastorate, which ended in death April 15, 1900, he endeared himself to his people and advanced God's Kingdom by his deep piety and faithful devotion.

In Mr. Blacknall's death, which occurred March 26, 1900, the work sustained such a shock as to make it almost appear that it had grown up entirely around his personality and was dependent upon him for its existence. The succeeding five or six years witnessed the heroic efforts of such men as Rev. R. Gordon Matthewson, who labored as stated supply from April 7, 1901, to 1905; Messrs. T. J. Fetzer, W. D. Carmichael, W. O. Blacknall, Ewell Somers and others, to bolster up and inject new life into what was a decadent and apparently hopeless institution. In this connection we should not neglect to mention the work of Mr. C. C. Cross, then a member of the Baptist Church, who acted as superintendent when the school was without regular superintendence, and otherwise aided in conducting the school and holding it together, with the same unselfish devotion that he would have exercised toward a school of his own denomination. Also this record would be incomplete if we failed to mention the services and devotion of the Godly women who labored, in season and out of season, for the success of the work—Mrs. W. O. Blacknall, who at one time made an every member canvass and functioned as deaconess; the Misses McDonald, Holman, Conrad, Goodwin, Irvin, Hines, Sims, Maples, Anderson, Singleton, Thomas and others.

It is impossible to depict, in this brief narrative, the discouragements, the obstacles, the apparent hopelessness, which these workers were called upon to endure and overcome, and had it not been for the unfeigned faith, the untiring devotion, and the sublime spirit of unselfishness which characterized the workers, a grave stone, instead of the beautiful church edifice which overtops this memorial, would have been the result.

On February 13, 1906, Rev. T. F. Haney took up the work laid down by Mr. Matthewson, and found that through various circumstances the pathway, over which the little flock was called to travel, was becoming harder and harder. On August 26th of that year Mr. W. O. Blacknall's death robbed him of one of his mainstays in the work. The passing of this beloved elder and co-laborer was indeed a blow, as his love and genial fellowship constituted a mighty factor in holding the work together in these trying days, and is still dear to the hearts of the membership of this church. Shortly thereafter the removal to another State of Mr. Ewell Somers and family still further crippled the work.

About this time, from various causes, the workers became so few and the work itself so weak and discouraging that it was made the subject of special sermon and prayer by the pastor of the First Church, Rev. E. R. Leyburn, who, at the close of the service, called for volunteers for the West Durham work. Mr. Geo. H. Beall, Mr. A. L. Kirkland, Mr. Zeb V. Roberson and Mr. Jos. L. Conrad volunteered to take up the work and on the following Sabbath started. Mr. Conrad was elected as superintendent of the Sunday School, which position he has held continuously up to the present time. Mr. Roberson was elected secretary and continued to function as such until he began preparation for the Gospel ministry. Mr. Beall was elected teacher of the Bible Class, and Mr. Kirkland teacher of a class of boys. These also continued to faithfully and efficiently serve the school as long as their circumstances permitted. The infusion of this new blood into the organization of the school and chapel work seemed to put new life into the institution, to encourage the other workers to renewed efforts and zeal, and marked the beginning of a new era.

Starting off with a school, the average attendance of which was about 25, the uphill climb was commenced, and although attended by discouragements and adverse circumstances, this climb was continuous, steady and gratifying. The Sunday School was reorganized under their leadership, new classes formed, additional teachers appointed, and a full program of self-help and development of local talent commenced. The wisdom of this program has been proven through the succeeding years of growth in all things tending toward efficiency, stability and usefulness.

Mr. Haney left the charge in 1909, to be followed by Rev. M. N. McIver, whose genial pastorate covered the period from October 10, 1909, to May, 1910.

Rev. John L. Yandel was called to this work in March, 1911, and continued to minister faithfully and effectively until July, 1914. During his pastorate continued improvement was experienced. The interior of the church was remodelled and refinished, and Christian liberality became an outstanding feature among the people. A tower and bell and new organ were added to the physical equipment of the church, and gratifying activity in the various departments of the work was experienced.

At intervals during this period the advisability of withdrawing from the West Durham work and closing it up had been discussed by the officers of the First Church, and it fell to the lot of Mr. J. L. Conrad, who himself was a member of the diaconate, to champion the cause of West Durham, oftentimes in the face of strong opposition, and it was largely due to his determined stand and influence that such action was prevented. As late as September 11, 1912, the session commissioned Mr. Geo. W. Watts, lifelong friend of West Durham and the Pearl Mill work; Mr. W. D. Carmichael, and Mr. Jos. L. Conrad, "to consider the discontinuance of the West Durham work." The eventual outcome of this commission was that in October, 1912, Mr. Yandel became the first full-time pastor of the West Durham Chapel work, the First Church to pay half his salary and the chapel to pay the other half. This arrangement was continued until July, 1914, when Mr. Yandel resigned to accept a charge elsewhere.

He was succeeded by Rev. J. A. Satterfield, a Godly and consecrated man, who came to the work in November, 1914, and who labored in this field effectively and untiringly for the Master for about two and one-half years. During his pastorate several families moved into the community, notably Dr. J. Reid Sterrett and family, Mr. P. B. Parks and family, and Mr. S. L. Claytor and family, all of whom were most excellent workers in the church and Sabbath school and societies and deeply interested in every activity of the church.

Also during Mr. Satterfield's pastorate the church was organized. At the spring meeting of Orange Presbytery a petition of 73 members of the Presbyterian Church residing in West Durham having been presented, requesting the organization of a church, a commission consisting of Rev. E. R. Leyburn, chairman; Rev. K. L. McIver, and Rev. H. S. Bradshaw, alternate, and Elders Hill C. Linthicum and W. P. Jordan, were appointed to effect the organization, if the way be clear.

The commission met in the West Durham Chapel at 3:00 o'clock p. m., May 7, 1916, the appointed place and hour. The commission was called to order and its session opened with prayer, Mr. W. P. Jordan elected clerk, the purpose of the commission stated and the church organized, in accordance with the provisions of the Book of Church Order, with 93 charter members. The congregation then elected the following officers by ballot, without nominations: Elders—J. Reid Sterrett, P. H. Gwynn, E. N. Woods. Deans—S. C. Woods, T. W. Cole, Joseph Jones.

After the ordination and installation of these officers, Mr. H. C. Linthicum moved that the new church be named the "Blacknall Memorial Presbyterian Church," which motion prevailed. A call was extended to Rev. J. A. Satterfield, accepted by him, and he became the pastor and served the congregation with untiring devotion until the spring of 1917.

In July, 1917, Rev. C. D. Whiteley, who had just completed the course at the Union Theological Seminary, accepted a call to the pastorate and was duly ordained and installed. A short time thereafter a congregational meeting was called for the election of additional officers, and Mr. S. L. Claytor and Mr. J. L. Conrad (he having recently deposited his letter from the First Church) were elected elders, and Mr. P. B. Parks was elected deacon. He immediately started an aggressive work and great zeal and enthusiasm characterized his labors in organizing the young people's work. The church grew in membership and activity steadily and the need of a new church edifice, which had been apparent for some time, began to loom large on the horizon.

After a careful analysis of the situation by the officers, the congregation purchased a lot on the corner of Trinity Avenue and Eighth Street. A building fund campaign was organized and made considerable progress. The whole church rallied to this work and was greatly benefited. In January, 1921, Mr. Whiteley resigned as pastor and was succeeded by Rev. J. S. Kennison in July of that year. The work has gone on a pace since he came to it, the deep piety and fervent zeal of the man making its impress, not only upon the congregation but upon the community. His labors, augmented by those of his faithful wife, have been richly blessed and of a truth we can say, "God has promised good concerning Israel" for the prospects and attainments of our church are bright and gratifying.

The building committee, consisting of Messrs. J. L. Conrad, chairman; P. B. Parks and J. J. Woods, after considerable delay in securing plans, made a contract with Mr. W. H. Woods and started actual building operations in November, 1922. Today a beautiful building stands as a monument to the heroic sacrifice and self-denial of a loving and united people, whose chief end is to glorify God and enjoy Him forever.

It is with great joy and thanksgiving that we enter this new house of worship, erected to God and dedicated to His service. There is a touch of sadness that reaches every heart, however, as we enter here and note the absence of our beloved brother elder, J. Reid Sterrett, whose heart was in this work and whose service and Christian liberality were so very typical of that spirit which made this edifice possible. He looked forward to this day with joy and, although the Great Architect of the universe has called him to a higher service, he is no doubt rejoicing with us in this good hour.

Truly can this church sing:

"Thro' many dangers, toils and snares
I have already come,
'Tis grace has brought me safe thus far,
And grace will lead me home."

The fire upon the hearth is low
And there is stillness everywhere,
And, like winged spirits, here and there
The firelight shadows fluttering go;
And as the shadows round me creep,
A childish treble breaks the gloom,
And oftly from a further room
Comes: "Now I lay me down to sleep."

And, somehow, with that little prayer
And that sweet treble in my ear,
My thought goes back to distant years,
And lingers with a dear one there,
And as I hear my child's "Amen!"
My mother's faith comes back to me—
Crouched at her side I seem to be,
And mother holds my hands again.

Oh, for an hour in that dear place,
Oh, for the peace of that dear time;
Oh, for that childish trust sublime,
Oh, for a glimpse of mother's face!
Yet, as the shadows round me creep,
I do not seem to be alone—
Sweet magic of that treble tone
And, "Now I lay me down to sleep."

SUNDAY SCHOOL EXTENSION

local school by the gathering in of all in the community who are without gospel teaching. Sunday School Extension also promotes the outpost mission school one of the most fruitful and effective evangelistic agencies of the local church. Teachers in many of our mountain schools do Sunday School Extension Work on Sunday, reaching thousands of children who otherwise would not be touched by the school or the church.

The Sunday School missionary renders a difficult and adventurous service in the hard places of our Church's territory. He is the agent of Sunday School Extension the great home mission and evangelistic agency which claims the financial and moral support of the Church.

What Has Sunday School Extension Done for the Church?

In these days of business methods and practical testing of results in Church work, concrete facts and figures make the best appeal to those who have money for investment in spiritual values. There are some results which cannot be expressed in figures, such as the creating of a friendly atmosphere for the approach of the evangelist and the home missionary, the recruiting of future ministers, teachers and missionaries for the Church out of these fertile but uncultivated fields which the Sunday School missionary develops, and the influence of the missionary's work in the lives of those who move in a steady stream from the outlying sections into the well-churches villages, towns and cities.

During the past 20 years there have been ups and downs in Sunday School Extension, and during much of the time the number of workers in the field has been greatly reduced because of the slender financial support, yet the following figures covering this period challenge the attention and sacrificial giving of the Church:

Sunday Schools Organized by field workers....	819
Sunday Schools re-organized by field workers	348
Churches organized out of Mission Sunday Schools	152
Conversions	14,663

The opportunity for effective Sunday School Extension Work along the lines indicated above is greater now than ever before. Quite a number of Presbyteries yet unsupplied with workers are eagerly asking for Sunday School Missionaries. They write that the fields are white unto the harvest and that the Church has a golden opportunity for an abundant ingathering of souls.

Our present expenditures for Sunday School Extension are running beyond the income furnished by the Church. We cannot take further steps until the Church gives us warrant to do so by larger contributions. What will be the response of your school to this golden opportunity? Workers are ready to enter the fields. Will you not greatly increase your offerings this year so that the Church may move forward and take possession of a larger area in the name of Jesus Christ?

DECLINE OF ANCESTOR WORSHIP

This clipping is the leading editorial from the English edition of the Osaka Mainichi for May 31st. Although the English edition is only a small four-page sheet it reproduces for English-speaking readers and Japanese students of English the leading news items and the general attitude of the great Japanese Osaka Mainichi Shinbun (Osaka Daily), one of the most influential papers in Japan, having perhaps a larger circulation than any other Japanese daily.

The Government action quoted by the Home Minister here, together with the attitude of the editor of the Mainichi, should give American readers some idea of the relation of Shintoism to the Japanese state and society, also of how necessary it is considered by those in authority for the welfare of the nation. Naturally it constitutes an ever-present and ever-obtruding problem for the missionary and the native church. It is noticeable in this article that although an attempt has long been made both by the Government and by private individuals to identify Shinto worship with reverence rather than worship, the writer of the editorial uses the English word worship about which there can be no quibbling.

The hope in the whole situation lies in the change that is taking place in the Japanese people and their social relationship. And the elements in this change that give the hope are those brought about by Christianity. The prayers of God's people are needed to the end that the Government may see the futility of attempting to stabilize society by means of idolatrous practices or anything short of God's truth.

In his speech at the Governors' Conference which is being held in Tokyo, Dr. Mizuno, Home Minister, made the following remark concerning our ancestor worship:

"The Government, realizing that ancestor worship is the essence of our state and that it has close connection with the spiritual welfare of the people, has decided to establish a commission which shall investigate the affairs relating to Shinto shrines throughout the country. The Government believes this to be the first step towards developing our national virtues."

It is indeed deplorable that worship of gods and ancestors has been declining throughout the land. There is little wonder that the Government should take measures for meeting the present situation. They should guard against taking any hasty measure against this state of affairs, however, because of the magnitude of the question. Before taking any definite step towards remedying the present condition of our ancestor worship, we must go deeper into the root of the problem.

So far as our knowledge goes, the reason why the Japanese have excelled other nations in ancestor worship is the fact that our social system has hitherto been built upon a simple family system. It follows, therefore, that, if we are to preserve ancestor worship, we must preserve the family system itself.

Whether or not it is possible to preserve the family system at the present time is a very difficult question. It is undeniable that our family system, which has been revered and regarded in Japan for several thousand years as indispensable, is being undermined every year; and it has ceased to be either the basis, or economic unit, of our present day society. The ancestor tablet, which our parents used to worship with laud and chant at their family altars, is now being neglected by our housewives; and the commands of the house father, who was formerly regarded as the source of wisdom and authority, are no longer regarded.

As the result of all this change the relations between father and child have undergone a great change, and the father now neglects his part in instructing his child, and the child disregards the filial obedience due to him. Not only that, but mutual sympathy and help and also the spirit of self-sacrifice as well as obedience to superiors have been given to the wind.

The decline of the family system in Japan is due to numerous causes, such as the transformation of the economic system, development of individualism, and the increase in the number of women engaged in industry. If we are to preserve the family system, therefore, we must study the causes of its disintegration. Dr. Mizuno, however, did not touch on this matter at all in his recent speech before the Governors.

We would advise the Government authorities not to be contented with the mere establishment of a commission but to go deeper into this question which so greatly concerns the welfare of our nation.

"RAGS, BONES, OL' IURN!"

By Rev. Geo. F. Robertson

When at Princeton Seminary, the writer heard this cry—"Rags, bones, ol' iurn"—he was puzzled at first to know just what the fellow said. But hearing it frequently, he soon learned what the man said and meant. It was plain as day. From one of our mountain schools has come the cry, "Old clothes, old clothes," so often that we think we know what it means. Some perchance think it not quite dignified enough for the purpose in view. The writer heard Sam Jones once when he answered his critics as to his irregular methods. He said, "Buddy, you show me your string of fish by your regular methods, and I'll show you mine by my methods." This is not to defend extreme irregularity in our work, but to show that sometimes this undignified way of building a school is a success. We have heard Dr. Mary Martin Sloop's call for "ol' clothes" until we think we know what it means. But, Reader, you can never realize what this appeal means to hundreds of the mountaineers and their homes or to the great outside world, until you see for yourself.

Crossnore School is a living example of the power of old clothes. It is said that clothing makes the man. Well, clothing has made Crossnore School, which is in the business of making men and women worth while. I guess that Dr. Mary Martin Sloop is willing to compare strings with any institution in the land when you take into account the raw material she begins with, the means of support and especially the great results which will be felt sooner or later to the utmost bounds of the church. Old clothes did it. This means little or nothing to the donors, but volumes to the Crossnore School.

It would pay any of our strong churches with so much money in their possession to send some of their money-holders to the mountains, first to places not yet overtaken in the work of church and school, and then to Crossnore, Banner Elk and other places well known to the readers of our Church papers, just to see how the grace of God can use and has used the few men and women and the meagre means in the development of some of the finest of character—men and women—the equal of any in the land.

I have just been to Crossnore. I was amazed at what I saw and heard while there. Of the three or four graduating classes of the accredited high school taught there nearly every one will go to some college. Most of these graduates have some worthy vision to whose realization they are working. One of the graduates of the last year is the mother of two boys who were in the lower grades. This very worthy woman will take a course in dress-making and return to Crossnore to teach this art to the girls. The teacher of agriculture, a man above the average in intelligence, a graduate of the state school, is a product of the mountains and of Crossnore, a man on his job and well qualified for his place.

In a room not over 30 feet square are as many looms as can be put in to allow the least space for passing between. Here is the miracle room so far as material things go. Those deft-fingered girls take the thread and weave such wonderful old-fashioned counterpanes, towels, hit-and-miss rag carpets (other patterns, too), scarfs, table covers, and even a beautiful pattern for dress goods. "Weavers in the Sun" are these happy, busy girls.

Send orders to Crossnore for these goods. You will get the worth of your money, to be sure, and will be helping to build up a school that is building character. Send your second-hand clothing also to Dr. Mary Martin Sloop, Spruce Pine, N. C., C. C. and O. Railway. There is immediate demand at good prices for every sort of wearing apparel, from hats to shoes—absolutely everything that is not worn to a frazzle is saleable and that readily.

Crossnore needs more buildings. The boys' only dormitory is the little old school house that had but one room when Dr. Sloop took charge, but is now enlarged to four rooms, accommodating at best only 16 boys. What are they among the many who want to come to this splendid school?

The pupils are aided as much as possible by fair wages for work done, but every fellow gets his wages in money, and is expected to pay promptly for his board and meet all necessary expenses. The honor system prevails, and, if there is persistent failure, why, the distance back home is no greater than it was when the recalcitrant first came to school, but it may be the via dolorosa to him. It may prove the turning point in his life when he can return with every promise of making good.

The girls at work during vacation in the weaving room were neatly dressed, and in good taste, and as clean as that pure mountain water, good soap and plenty of elbow grease could make them. Take them as I saw them and put them unchanged in any way into any city public school, some of those city girls will have to be mighty good lookers to outlook them.

Churches, send your men to visit these mountain schools. Send your money and your cast-off garments and help to put up the buildings so much needed, as dormitories, industrial building, reading room and gymnasium with shower and tub baths, and when you shall have done your part, the blessed return will be not only in the satisfaction of having done your duty, but of having a part in the development of life and character that will bless and gladden the world.

THE TAX ON WINDOWS

In Edinburgh once my eye was arrested by the aspect of blank windows in certain fine old residences. Sills and headers were there, but no frames, or if frame and glass, the latter was painted against outlook. Houses were built thus in order to avoid the tax on glass. When the symmetry of a wall seemed to require windows, they were built "blind," as we say. That particular inhibition is a thing of the past. Yet, even today, there is a tax on those windows through which the soul looks away toward the greater realities. Spiritual outlook is costly always, as Daniel found in Babylon. Babylon were not Babylon at all—it were a sort of New Jerusalem, if one could be conscientious and brave, loyal to his brightest dream and his God, without expense to himself. But the soul's open window is worth all that it costs.—George Clarke Peck.

anything else "canable." Quite a few of the boys stayed on during the vacation period and were of great assistance in the work. It gives one a happy and a restful feeling to take a look at the cans, realizing the help their contents will be this coming season in a varied menu and a saving of expense. Cor.

GEORGIA

Decatur—Our church has opened its fall and winter campaign with enthusiasm. Mr. S. W. Dendy's work with us this summer was particularly helpful, especially in the matter of perfecting details of our church organization. Our new Sunday School building promises to be ready for occupancy by or soon after Rally Day. This will furnish us one of the most complete plants in this section, and should mark a great advance in our church life. Dr. Campbell Morgan's coming to us for this year is set for the week beginning November 18th. We are welcoming this week our affiliate members from the crowded lists at Agnes Scott. Dr. McGeachy and his family report a most pleasant vacation in North Carolina.

KENTUCKY

West Lexington Presbytery—Five young men, all of them of great promise, have been taken under the care of West Lexington Presbytery during the past six months, as candidates for the ministry, one of them looking to the foreign field as medical missionary.

Maxwell Church, Lexington—Upon Dr. Gray's return from his vacation which was a chautauqua lecture trip through the central west, where he gave 100 lectures, speaking twice a day, it being his 16th year in this work, he was surprised by being presented with a beautiful manse opposite the church, which the members had purchased during his absence. The house has ten rooms, is of white brick construction, and cost $11,500. Up to the present time the church has allowed the minister to live where he pleased and paid the rent, but owing to a shortage of houses it was a difficult matter for the minister to secure just what he wanted in the right location.

Notes on the Kentucky Field of Christian Endeavor—A remarkable society in Kentucky is in the county jail at Harlan. Out of 75 men in the jail, 32 are active members of the society, 72 are Comrades of the Quiet Hour. They have a Bible Class whose lessons are carefully prepared for recitation, and the work is greatly enjoyed by the men. A new library is being started for them and the county judge gave ten dollars as a beginning of the library fund. Christian Endeavor papers and good magazines have been subscribed for. The society at Pleasant Valley heard about this work and sent a number of Bibles and Testaments.

The first of our series of summer and fall conventions was that of the Tenth District held at Pineville the last week-end in July. Out of 14 societies making up the District 12 were represented. Ninety-one registered for the great fellowship banquet on Saturday night. Resolutions were adopted supporting State and National aims. This District is but three years old and has been making a very fine record.

The Garrard County Christian Endeavor Union held a rally at Fairview on the evening of August 9. This county has societies in every church but three of the brotherhoods supporting Christian Endeavor, and efforts are now being made to organize in those churches. Most of these societies are in rural districts, the numbers are good and the workers as a rule very efficient. This is the home county of the State Field Secretary.

A new society has been organized in the Presbyterian Church at Corbin, and one in the Congregational Church in that city.

MISSISSIPPI

Senatobia—The attendance of the Sunday School in the church has almost been doubled since July 1st. And the attendance at church has increased fully 50 per cent since that time. By increase is meant new attendants largely.

The pastor, Rev. W. L. Latham, has rendered service to the entire town and community by his public spirit and activities for the uplift of the community. And the appreciation of the people is shown by church attendance.

The membership of the church has increased 10 per cent since April 1st, and there are prospects for further growth.

The consecrated and faithful wife of our pastor has done excellent work with the Junior Young People's Society, for which the entire church is grateful. Cor.

OKLAHOMA

The Presbytery of Mangum met in the First Presbyterian Church of Gotebo, Okla., September 11, 1923, at 8 p. m. The opening sermon was preached by the retiring moderator, Rev. Henry Austin. His topic was, "Rahab's Faith." Elder H. H. Anderson, of the Gotebo Church was elected moderator; elder

C. E. Devin, of the Apache Church was elected temporary clerk.

Since the last meeting of Presbytery three strong ministers of the Presbytery have been lost: Rev. W. W. Sadler has moved to South Carolina; Rev. C. V. Crabb to Mississippi; Rev. G. P. Devin to California. The chairman of the Home Missions Committee spoke favorably of the evangelistic work of Rev. R. P. Davis, Presbytery's evangelist. It is the hope of the Presbytery to have a meeting, led by the evangelist, in every church of the Presbytery. Presbytery will meet in Minco at its Spring meeting. J. W. Moseley, S. C.

TENNESSEE

The Synod of Memphis will meet in the Woodland Street Presbyterian Church, Nashville, Tenn., September 25, 1923, at 8 p. m. J. H. Lumpkin, S. C.

Nashville Presbytery—At a called meeting of Nashville Presbytery in Nashville, Tenn., on September 10th it was decided to hold the next stated meeting of the Presbytery following the Synod, at Decherd, Tenn., on Tuesday, October 9th, at 8 p. m. W. C. Alexander, S. C.

Presbytery of Memphis—The provisions of the Book of Church Order having been satisfied, the Presbytery of Memphis is called to meet, September 26, 1923, in Woodland Street Church, Nashville, Tenn., at a convenient hour, during the sessions of Synod there sitting, for the purpose following, if the way be clear:

1. To receive several ministers, seeking admission into Presbytery.
2. To place in their hands calls from churches, and take orders for their installations, as the cases may require.
3. To transact any other business growing out of the above matters.

C. W. Sommerville, Moderator.

Memphis, Second Church—On Sunday morning, September 9th, a number of Memphis churches made special appeals for their missionaries and their work in Japan. At the Second Presbyterian such an appeal was made. Up to date $194 in cash was given by the congregation and $27 in pledges; $25.75 from the Sunday School, not including $20 from the Philatheas; $18.85 from the "Boosters" class; making a total of $285.60. It is hoped to make this $500 next Sunday.

The reason for these special appeals is evident to a thoughtful observer. They are in no way to compete or oppose the Red Cross appeal. The idea is to stand back of each mission with funds to enable the representatives to do any personal relief work, not only in the name of America, but of Christ and His Church. As a matter of actual fact, most of the American General Relief will come from the generous hearts of Christian Americans in the churches. It was so during the war in relief contributions. No opportunity for service by our missionaries for preaching Christ in Japan has ever equalled this.

To add to the interest in the Japanese situation the large sheet of Japanese missionaries' pictures issued by our committee, was placed in the vestibule of the church and the missionaries living in the devastated area were marked with a cross. Along the side was a map of Japan and our missions there with the affected area encircled. Fully a half of our mission work in Japan has been affected directly and of course all of it has been indirectly affected. Mr. Alfred Mason, an elder of this church and superintendent of this Sunday School is a member of our Foreign Mission Committee.

WEST VIRGINIA

Romney (Synod of Virginia)—The pastor-elect, Rev. Charles R. Bailey, together with his family arrived the first day of September. The good ladies of the congregation had prepared the manse for immediate occupancy by making up the beds and laying the kitchen fire. The men had already brought in provisions and placed them in the pantry. The new pastor preached to large congregations both morning and evening the following Sunday. The manse has recently been refinished throughout. The church has four Sunday Schools and the outlook for the future is bright.

Greenbrier Presbytery—The Presbytery met in regular Fall session in the Liberty Church near Greenbank, W. Va., on September 4, 1923, at 3 p. m. There were present 18 ministers and 22 ruling elders representing the churches.

The opening sermon was preached by the retiring moderator, ruling elder, Calvin W. Price, of the Marlinton Church, from the text, II Chron. 24:5: "Howbeit the Levites hastened it not."

Rev. O. N. Miles was elected moderator, and Rev. Paul Nickell and ruling elder F. C. Nickell were elected temporary clerks.

Rev. W. C. Frierson was dismissed at his own request to the Presbytery of Abingdon that he might accept the call to become pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Blackey, Ky.

Rev. S. E. Paxson was received from the Presbytery of Ebenezer in Kentucky and a commission was appointed to install him pastor of the Richlands Church.

Rev. Paul Nickell was called to Alderson Church and a commission was appointed to install him pastor.

Rev. R. B. Hudson resigned as pastor of the Mt. Pleasant and Hillsdale churches and the relation was dissolved and he was given permission to labor without the bounds of Presbytery till the Spring meeting.

Rev. R. L. Kinnaird preached the Presbyterial sermon on the subject of "Unbelief." His text was I John 5:10.

Conferences were held on Men's Work and on the subject of General Assembly's Home Missions, in which several interesting addresses were made on these important subjects.

By appointment of Presbytery sermons were preached by Rev. T. P. Allen and Rev. J. E. Flow.

Rev. H. H. Orr and Rev. F. W. Gray were added to the Committee on the Revision of the Book of Church Order which consisted of Rev. F. P. Sydenstricker, Dr. John I. Armstrong, and Dr. J. E. Flow.

Dr. Flow was reelected unanimously as Presbytery's evangelist for another year.

A special committee to study the matter of the incorporation of religious bodies in West Virginia, consisting of Rev. F. W. Gray, J. E. Flow and Calvin W. Price. This committee is to report at the Spring meeting.

Rev. J. C. Johnson with Dr. Armstrong as alternate, was appointed to preach the Presbyterial sermon next Spring on the theme: "How does Christ the Son reveal God the Father?"

A resolution of thanks was adopted by a rising vote to the good people of Greenbank for their generous hospitality in entertaining the Presbytery.

The invitation of the Spring Creek Church at Renick was accepted for the Spring meeting of Presbytery. The time was set for the Monday after the second Sunday in April, at 8 p. m.

Presbytery adjourned to meet in Lewisburg at 1:30 p. m., on September 21, 1923. J. E. Flow, S. C.

The Junior Endeavorers of the Presbyterian Church of Abbeville, S. C., have recently organized and are interested in getting new plans in order that they can be the best society in South Carolina. Miss Mamie L. Morse is their superintendent.

Miss Willie Clyde Lloyd has reorganized the Junior Society at the First Presbyterian Church in Augusta, Ga. This is a big church and big things can be expected from the Juniors.

The Battle Hill Sanitorium Junior C. E. Society of Atlanta, Ga., writes that it has just elected new officers and is ready to begin some real work. Every one of its nineteen members has completed the First Grade Memory Work since the society was organized in February, and is now working on the Second Year. Mrs. Carswell and Miss Hatcher, a nurse, with their Juniors, are doing a fine work.

Miss Elizabeth Falk, of the Midway Church, Maxton, N. C., a Christian Endeavor Expert, has just given this course and graduated three new experts. They are: Messrs. Lee McFarland, Chas. F. McRae, and Mr. Altan Thompson, the first and last named being elders in the church, Mr. McRae being a deacon and also a candidate for the ministry.

The Midway society held five special meetings in August, besides its regular meetings. The special meetings included several held in the homes of shut-ins.

THE TWO PRAYERS

Last night my little boy confessed to me
Some childish wrong, and, kneeling at my knee,
He prayed, with tears: "Dear God, make me a man
Like daddy, wise and strong; I'm sure you can."
Then, while he slept, I knelt beside his bed, Confessed my sins, and prayed, with low-bowed head:

"O God, make me a child, like my child here—Pure, guileless, trusting thee with faith sincere!"

—Andrew Gillies, in the "Church School."

It is the sweep of the tide that carries the waves over the bar. The vehemence of righteousness breaks down barriers and sweeps on to victory.

CHILDREN

to see if it is really so. Yes, there they are—one, two, three, up to twenty. They are at the end of the long parade, but they are worth waiting for. See them go by, every elephant with his trunk stretched out and holding fast to the tail of the elephant in front of him. They look so big and their skin is so tough. No wonder hunters use them in India to hunt tigers with. You have seen pictures of these great animals with a saddle looking something like a summer house. In this house ride the hunters at a safe distance from any man-eating tiger. The elephant doesn't look very afraid either. I imagine he doesn't mind a tiger's scratch any more than we do a cat's scratch.

There is, however, a tiny little animal that elephants are very much afraid of. I used to be afraid of them myself, for they swam around in the water of the pond where I went swimming when I was a boy. Sometimes they would fasten to my leg, and before I could get at them they would be filled with blood. We called them blood-suckers, but a more polite name is leeches. Dan Crawford, who lived 23 years in the jungles of Africa, tells us that these leeches are very plentiful in that country also. Now an elephant is deathly afraid of a leech. That seems almost nonsense, for what can a tiny leech do to a great elephant? His skin is so hard that no leech can bite him. It certainly would seem so. But an elephant has to drink through his long trunk, and the inside of that trunk is very sensitive. It may happen that a leech will be in the water and fasten himself to that sensitive skin. Then there is a terrible commotion. The elephant cannot scratch the leech off. He is almost "tickled to death." Yes, I really mean it, for sometimes the elephant is so irritated by the tiny leech that he thrashes out his own life. Dan Crawford says he has come upon places in the forest where an elephant has rolled over and over in a frenzy, snapping the trees off and sometimes dashing out his own brains just because a tiny leech was fastened inside his trunk. That is why elephants are so careful to wave their trunks over the water they drink. They are looking for leeches.

The worst enemies we have are like leeches. They are very small, but when they fasten themselves upon us they cause much misery. One bad word hidden away in our minds, one evil thought cherished in our hearts, a little anger or jealousy that clings to us—how these things do bring misery! Do not be deceived just because some call it a "little sin." Remember the little leech and the big elephant.—Ex.

WHAT THEY CAUGHT

"Four deluded youngsters
On a summer day,
Just to go a-fishing
Slyly ran away.
Willows, worms and tackle
To their work they brought,
And, if you'll believe me,
This is what they caught.

"Tommy caught a wetting,
He was over-bold;
Jimmy caught a scolding;
Johnny caught a cold;
Harry caught a whipping,
Much against his wish.
But, with all their trouble,
No one caught a fish!"

Story and Incident

HOW JACK WON

By Helen P. Hansen

It was too bad. Jack loved his father and mother dearly, but it was beyond him to understand their way of looking at things sometimes. Now why couldn't they go with him next Sabbath?

He sat thinking the matter over. 'Rally Day!'—that was what the superintendent had called it. Next Sunday would be Rally Day. How his face had shone as he spoke of it! "It will be a big day for our splendid church school," he had said. Bring every member of your family. And particularly invite father and mother to enjoy the program with us.

Then after the lesson, Jack's teacher had spoken so earnestly and happily to them about the fine program for Rally Day, and had given each one of them an envelope containing an invitation, which she herself had written, to their parents. All of the six boys in the class secretly adored her and would do anything for her, and, besides, they knew there would be a big time next Sabbath. Had not their class been drilling on a special part in the program?

So it was no wonder that Jack had run home full of enthusiasm, and could talk of nothing else at the dinner table that day. Not only father and mother must come to the church school, but even tiny sister, Lou. Jack knew there was a special room where baby girls and boys could be taken care of while the school was going on.

But somehow his enthusiasm had failed to be catching. He had cornered father alone, and then had interviewed mother, but to no effect. Both had smiled at him and said they were glad he enjoyed his Sabbath School, and so on; father had even joked him a little about it; but as for taking his invitation seriously—they simply put him off by saying there was too much to do on Sunday.

He had gone so far as to offer to take care of baby Lou all Sunday afternoon, if mother would go in the morning. If that did not work, what would? And it didn't.

Jack had never stopped to think of it before, but really, father and mother never went to church. They liked to have him go to Sabbath School, but never asked him what he learned there. If they only could hear the stories and songs and the verses, and meet the teachers they would understand. Yet he remembered that they had been very particular when they moved to this neighborhood where there was a good church, but—funny now, wasn't it?—they never went to that church.

He paused a minute in his whittling. How was there "so much to do on Sundays" that Rally Day had no attractions? Mother had said something about household duties, and guests for dinner, and taking care of the baby. But father—"I know!" exclaimed Jack to himself, and went on whittling again, "it used to be the Sunday paper, but now it's the automobile!"

That was it! Sunday morning was father's big chance to go out and rub and polish and tinker and experiment with the pride of his heart, the handsome new car, only one month old, that stood in the garage. How they had all wanted a car! From the time that Jack had first learned to steer a tiny automobile with pedals, and then his velocipede, and roller-coaster, he had dreamed of the day when he would get his hands on a giant steering wheel and make a real automobile go the way he wanted it to.

So he knew how his father felt about his auto. He loved it too. And one day he had been allowed to squeeze up close beside his father and take the big wheel and guide it almost a mile; and his father had said, "You have a surprising knack at it for such a small boy."

"Brrr-rrr-rum-um-um-um!" came a sudden rumble from the direction of the garage.

Jack started up. Who was stealing their car. The garage door opened and there was mother driving out the car with baby on the front seat beside her. She had resolutely pulled herself out of bed to keep her promise to meet father with the car at his office four miles away.

"Hop in, Jackie!" she called, holding the front door open invitingly.

In a moment he was beside her, lifting baby Lou over to the protection of

Why The L. C. Smith Cuts Better Stencils

The ball bearings and mechanically exact construction of the L. C. Smith makes it especially efficient in cutting stencils. right arm so that he could be next to his mother.

"Your father wanted me to come for him early, at four o'clock. We must have time to make it if we go a good pace," she remarked, as they turned into the street.

They rounded one corner and another, and then turned on to the highway that gave them almost a straight run to the business district, with a stretch of country between.

On they sped. Suddenly Jack realized their machine was moving from the side. It started to veer to the right.

He shot one look at his mother's face and then grabbed the steering wheel. That glimpse had shown him his white face and closed eyes!

He threw all his strength on the wheel, wrenching it from the edge of the ditch. At the same time his mother seemed to collapse sideways away from him. She had fainted.

Jack did not dare to look at her as he clung to the wheel. The car swayed this way and that before his "snack" of steering seemed to return. As white-faced as his mother he got in the middle of the road and held it there.

But how could he stop it! He knew nothing as yet of throttles or levers, and all of his strength could not have handled the brakes.

Beside him baby Lou was calling, "Mommer! Mommer!" and beginning to clutch at him, somewhat sensing danger.

Then behind him the throb of an engine growing louder. A man's voice was calling, "Hold on, boy! Hold on!"

A car loomed along side. A man stood on the running board. With one leap he was beside Jack, grasping the wheel and jamming down the throttle. Leaning over the wheel he

HOW SHIVAR MINERAL WATER RELIEVES RHEUMATISM

According to the standard medical books, Rheumatism is not a germ disease but is the result of imperfect nutrition. The food is either imperfectly digested or imperfectly assimilated. Poisons accumulate and these irritate and inflame the delicate linings of the joints, the heart and other organs. To relieve Rheumatism it is therefore necessary to stop the formation of these poisons and get rid of those already formed.

The celebrated Shivar Mineral Water acts on the stomach and kidneys. It corrects the digestion and washes out the poisons through the kidneys. This is the opinion of physicians who prescribe it. If you suffer from rheumatism, dyspepsia, indigestion, disease of the kidneys, bladder or liver, uric acid poisoning, or any curable condition due to impure blood, read the following letter, then sign it, enclose the amount and mail it. Only two out of a hundred on the average report no benefit.

Shivar Springs,
Box 3 B, Shelton, S. C.
Gentlemen:

I accept your offer and enclose herewith three dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if I report no benefit you agree to refund the price of the water in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return within a month.

switched off the power, and then held the car steady until it stopped.

"That's a plucky lad of yours, sir." The man who had leaped from the other car now stood in the office of Jack's father. He had driven the car the rest of the way into the city, after Jack's mother had been revived and tucked in with the baby on the back seat. He had stopped just long enough to describe what had occurred, and to remark on Jack's bravery.

That night they sat around the fire close together, father, and Jack, and mother. They talked but little, sobered by the crisis through which they had passed, and the thought of what might have been.

Suddenly, as if just remembering something, Jack's father said, "What were the words, son, that our friend heard you saying when he stopped the car?"

Jack hesitated, then answered slowly, "Be strong and of good courage, sir."

"Where did you learn it, boy?" "It is the motto of our church school class, father. It is one of the verses and stories we learn there."

"Did it help you, Jackie?" asked his mother, quietly.

"Oh, mother, I—I don't think I could have hung on without it—I was so scared!" and Jack turned his face away where no one could see it for a minute. And then they were all quiet, looking into the fire.

But next Sabbath, at the Rally Day program, Jack was radiant; for on one side of him sat father and on the other was mother. And even baby Lou came and toddled about in the cheche.—N. Y. Advocate.

DEATH OF WELL-KNOWN AUTHOR

Mrs. Kate Douglas Wiggin Riggs, the American author, died on August 24th, at the age of sixty-four. She was taken seriously ill on her voyage to England last June, as a delegate to the Dickens Fellowship, and went to Liverpool for treatment. She is said to have failed to fully recover from the effects of an operation which she underwent shortly after her arrival.

Kate Douglas Wiggin, to use the name by which she was best known in literary work, was born in Philadelphia, in 1859. She was one of the most accomplished women engaged in literary and philanthropic work in the United States.

It was back in 1878, Mrs. Wiggin, then Kate Douglas Smith, left her home in Maine and journeyed to California for the purpose of studying kindergarten methods. She taught for a year in Santa Barbara College, and was then called upon to organize the Silver Street Kindergarten in San Francisco, the first free school of the kind west of the Rocky Mountains.

Little was known of kindergarten work at the time, but the ideas of Mrs. Wiggin soon began to attract wide attention, and it was not long before she was joined by Mrs. Sarah B. Cooper, who assisted her in forming the California Kindergarten Training School. It established more than sixty schools for poor children in the West.

After her marriage in 1880, to Samuel Bradley Wiggin, she gave up teaching and turned attention to literature, using the rich material she had gathered in her kindergarten work to weave into stories of greater influence for a wider public.

Her first story, "Half a Dozen Housekeepers," had appeared in 1878, before the thought of giving up teaching. It was several years later "The Story of Patsy," and "The Birds' Christmas Carol" were published and met with unexpected success.

In 1888, Mr. and Mrs. Wiggin moved to New York, where Mrs. Wiggin published "A Summer in a Canyon," "Timothy's Quest," and "A Cathedral Courtship," which were translated in several languages, and became popular in Europe, leading to a large output of novels.

Mrs. Wiggin's second husband was George Christopher Riggs, whom she married in 1895, six years after the death of her first husband.

MOTHER'S CLOTHES

"Why mother," cried the little boy, his eyes shining, "you look just like a school-girl in that white waist and blue tie. I like that, wear it again!"

Children do notice mother's clothes and are quite fine little critics. It is interesting and profitable to question the reasons for their approval or disapproval of various dresses, and a wise mother will talk over her clothes with the children. If she explains the reason she chose a certain color, how she matched her hat to her gloves, why this cloth is stronger than something else, and all the little effects that combine thrift and good taste, the children will not only be pleased at her confidence in their understanding, but will absorb much useful knowledge about clothes.

Sometimes a mother does not realize the pride and interest the children take in her clothes.

"I like to go out with you since you made that new skirt," said a little girl, "the other one didn't look so nice."

If a mother gets careless or discouraged and lets her clothes lose their charm, the children resent it even if they do not voice it. It is only fair to the children for mother to spend as much effort and thought on her own clothes as she does on their fascinating apparel, and then in later years they will not demand everything, but will want mother to have pretty things too.

It pays to understand and weigh a child's remarks about clothes as that is one way of learning how the little brain is working. A mother came into the room where two boys were playing and showed them her new silver gray straw hat.

"You look just like a hearse," announced the younger boy delightedly.

The remark was rather startling, but the mother smiled and said, "Do you like this hat?"

"Oh yes, it's so shiny and pretty," replied the boy, "and I like the silver look."

"Did you see anything today about that same color?" asked the mother, still searching for the reason back of that first remark.

"Yes, I saw a carriage all silver and shiny like your hat," nodded the child, "and brother said it was a hearse."

The connection was explained, for, childlike, he had connected the first gray hearse he had seen with the silver gray hat. His mind was grasping the fact of a new color effect. If the mother had been irritated at his impulsive remark, or had laughed it away, she would have hurt the child and driven his new thoughts and confidences back into himself.

To dress tastefully, to bring the children into companionship with mother by sensibly discussing clothes and the art of dressing, to make it a jolly, festive occasion when mother has something new, is to realize that in the development of the child life an important part is played even by mother's clothes.—By Lydia Lion Roberts.

MRS. FRYE EXPRESSES HERSELF ON CHURCH-GOING

"Yes, I used to be just like the rest of them, but I've learned different."

It was a hot Sunday evening and Mrs. Frye was sitting on the back porch, fanning herself, and recounting to an old school chum the changes of the last twenty years.

"I used to go to church just like I'd go to a picnic, or to a circus," she continued. "But now I go like I go to dinner. You see, the whole trouble with these folks is they haven't the right idea. They take church as they do light refreshments—few and far between, instead of taking it like hearty meals—regular and often. I know because I've done it myself. But I know better now.

"The way it happened was that I was reading my Bible one night, just anywhere, knowing I ought to get something out of it, but not expecting anything. I read the old story about Jesus asking Peter if he loved Him and then telling him to feed His sheep. And the idea occurred to me all of a sudden that the preacher's business was to feed his people—spiritually, of course, I meant. 'Well,' I says to myself, 'our preacher doesn't do that.' Then I happened to think that I didn't know because I hadn't been there for a month. Of course I reckoned that I had had plenty of excuse. Molly had been sick one Sunday, and we had had company two Sundays, and it was terribly hot the last Sunday. Of course I'd 'a' eaten my victuals even if it was hot, but going to church was different. That was the way I used to reckon.

But that night I got a vision—I guess it was a vision—of what Jesus meant church meetings to be to us. He meant them to be meals—regular and wholesome and tasty. I couldn't sleep that night for thinking through my new idea, and I made up my mind before morning that I'd give the preacher a chance to feed me. That I wouldn't expect him to come to the house to do it, any more than I'd expect Mary to serve me my breakfast in bed, and she's done that three times in the last five years.

"It's ten years since I made that resolution and it's worked just fine. Of course I don't go to church three times a day, but I do go three times a week—public worship Sunday morning and Sunday School and prayer meeting—just as much a matter of course as I go to dinner. And I feel so satisfied and strong. I don't get nervous and weak when the children are irritable, and I don't collapse when a neighbor says some nasty

Health is Wealth

Health is one of the greatest things your family can possess. It brings happiness and success. But health must be safe-guarded by good wholesome foods that are prepared from the purest ingredients. This is especially true of bakings. If they are not properly raised, we all know that they are not easily digested. Many times when self-rising flour is used in place of good plain flour and dependable baking powder—the results are flat, soggy and heavy foods.

Don't take chances! Use a reliable brand of baking powder and plain flour. Then you will be sure of healthful bakings that are easily digested.

Remember, science has never found anything to take the place of the tried and tested method of using plain flour and good baking powder in preparing bakings. Millions of housewives now know by actual experience that many preparations that are claimed to take their place are worthless and dangerous to health. There is no comparison.

Calumet, the Economy Baking Powder, is known to be one sure and positive aid to successful bakings that are always pure, sweet and wholesome.

That's the reason its sales are 2½ times as much as any other brand.

thing, and best of all, I don't worry all the time for fear some terrible thing is going to happen. The folks in the church that can't stand anything aren't eating enough. They're under-nourished. Malnutrition, I believe, is the word they use now-a-days."

"But Perhaps they don't enjoy the services as much as you do," suggested her patient listener.

"Perhaps not, but that isn't the point," went on Mrs. Frye. "Of course, not every sermon is a feast any more than every meal is a banquet. You know how it is, sometimes our meat is tenderer than other times, and we get it cooked to a turn, and have a favorite vegetable and something extra for dessert. And just so sometimes Mr. Smith gets his sermon done extra well, and we feel as though we were sitting in heavenly places while he is preaching it. There was a sermon two weeks ago on the everlasting love of God. Why, I felt as though I could sit the rest of my life and just listen to him talk about how God was like a father. And then once in a while he says something I don't like, but once in a while, too, I eat something that doesn't set just right.

"But the great mass of sermons are just plain helpful talks that just keep me going like a bread-and-meat diet. I can't say that I'm always especially hungry for it beforehand, but I always miss it if I don't get it."

"But don't you sometimes want a change?"

"No, I don't if you mean a change of boarding house. I don't believe in boarding 'round. I boarded 'round for two years before I was married, and I got indigestion, and now I eat at home. Oh, of course I'm invited out two or three times a year and I go, and two or three times a year I go visiting to hear a bishop or a missionary, but unless there's something very extra special (as they say) I plan on eating at home physically and spiritually."

"But don't you sometimes like to go to a tent-meeting or a mission and hear a good old-fashioned gospel sermon?"

"I used to. When I went to church only half the time I went to all the extra meetings. But I don't piece between meals any more. And I don't believe the folks that are always exhorting us to repent and believe have any better gospel than the regular preachers. Again it's like eating. We used to think that if we feed milk to babies, and had a good dinner of meat and potatoes and pie ourselves, it was enough. But now I understand they feed carrots and spinach and tomato-juice to babies and we have to eat lettuce every day. Just so, I suppose repentance and faith are not enough, but we ought to add life-service and tithing and good citizenship to our spiritual diet. I reckon it isn't any worse to have new ideas about duty than about food.

"But I didn't mean to go on like this. I'm no philosopher, you understand. Only I know that folks who aren't on a hunger-strike ought to go to church pretty regular. But tell me, how's Sally Ann? Is she as clever with her tongue as she used to be?"—Grace Morrison Everett, in N. Y. Advocate.

IRONING

I have ironed my husband's shirts, oh, very smoothly;
I wish I could as easily erase
His frowning, worried look of inattention—
I cannot read the new lines in his face.

Mary lets me iron her crepes and laces;
I wonder if she thinks that mother's hands
Would tear the fine-meshed fabric of her love-dreams?
I wish she knew that mother understands.

Jack likes the finest nainsook, trim, athletic,
Next his skin. Most finical of men,
How can he bear to waste his time on Gladys?
I wish he were a little boy again.

Oh, well! My task today is just the ironing;
But while I iron, I can not help but pray,
"Dear Lord, please let me smooth my loved ones' pathways;
Please do not let them drift too far away!"

—May Williams Ward, in Good Housekeeping.

The clerk was showing a customer some parasols. As he picked up one from the lot on the counter, he struck an attitude of admiration and, holding it up to the light, said:

"Now, isn't that lovely? Look at the silk. Observe the quality, the finish, the general-effect. Feel it. Pass your hand over it. No nonsense about that parasol, is there?"

"No," said the customer, "that's my old one. I just laid it there."

An enthusiastic haberdasher raves, "Don't miss our shirt ad tomorrow." We did not see it, and we did not miss it.—Life.

EDITORIAL

WOMEN ON THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEES

The readers of the Standard have doubtless forgotten what was said on this subject in an editorial of August 15th. Possibly they have also forgotten the broadside fired against the editorial by our highly esteemed brother, Dr. Walter L. Lingle. We would refresh their minds by recalling that the editorial took the ground that executive committees are, in virtue of the work committed to them and the functions with which they are endowed, commissions in the sense defined in our book; and that consequently they should be composed exclusively of officers of the church. We must admit that the broadside of Dr. Lingle did some execution. But we still believe that the editorial embodied correct principles. Our brother concedes that "the conclusions of the editorial were correct if it is true that executive committees are executive (or ecclesiastical) commissions." If commissions at all, they are executive and ecclesiastical commissions. We still believe they are commissions according to the definition of our book.

1. They are called commissions. It would take a "Philadelphia lawyer" to make paragraph 95 of our Book refer to anything else than executive committees. It belongs to the section treating commissions. The opening paragraph of the section implicitly defines a commission as an extraordinary committee. The language is "commissions differ from ordinary committees in this." The necessary antithesis to "ordinary committee" is extraordinary committee. The only committee differing from an ordinary committee of which we have any knowledge is an executive committee.

2. The functions of this extraordinary committee are executive functions. It is "authorized to deliberate on and conclude the business referred to it, subject, however, to the review of the court appointing it." Does not this language describe executive functions? And is not this precisely the authority with which our executive committees are clothed, and which they continually exercise?

3. It has been the custom of the church to call its executive committees commissions. See Baird's Digest, pages 233-246. This is still the custom of our Church. Paragraph 93 of our Book tells us that "the taking of testimony in judicial cases, the ordination of ministers, the installation of ministers, the visitation of portions of the church affected with disorder, and the organization of new churches, may be executed by a commission." That is to say, whenever any church court appoints a committee to execute any given work, that committee is distinguished from "ordinary committees" by calling it a commission. The number of persons appointed on the committee has nothing to do with the nature of the committee. Its nature is determined by the functions assigned to it. If it is appointed merely to "examine, consider and report," it is an ordinary committee. If it is "authorized to deliberate on and conclude the business," it is an extraordinary committee or commission.

4. If we mistake not, the first executive committee of Home Missions in the history of the Presbyterian Church in America was appointed by the Synod of Virginia. This was done at its second meeting, in the year 1789. They called this committee a commission. The Synod resolved "that there shall be a committee of Synod appointed consisting of four ministers and four elders who shall be called the commission of the Synod, to receive the recommendations of such men from the respective Presbyteries, to examine into their credentials and fitness for the discharge of such an office. All give them such directions and instructions as the exigencies of different places, in their wisdom, may require; and they shall meet annually, and oftener if thought necessary." See Foote's Sketches of Virginia, page 525. Precisely the same functions as are now exercised by our executive committee.

5. Rev. John B. Adger, D.D., who was made chairman of the Revision Committee by the Assembly of 1863, had more to do with framing our Book of Church Order than any other one man. He says, "Our own executive committees are all of them just commissions, with powers limited severally to a specific object." He further says: "Now it is to be observed, in respect to these commissions, that they have always consisted of a number of ministers and elders." Southern Presbyterian Review, Vol. XVI, No. 1, page 68. He probably wrote the section on commissions as it stands in our Book.

6. Not only are our executive committees called commissions, but their functions are precisely those indicated as distinguishing commissions from ordinary committees. An "executive committee deliberates on and concludes the business referred to it, subject, however, to the review of the court appointing it." Our executive committees look like commissions, they act like commissions, they are treated like commissions, and they are called commissions, in the old Church, in our Church, and by the man who probably worded the section of our Book on commissions. From all of which we still think they are commissions, notwithstanding all that Brother Lingle has said on the subject.

But what about the language of our first General Assembly which created the executive committees? The Assembly said, speaking of the executive committee of Foreign Missions: "It shall consist of a secretary, a treasurer, and nine other members, three of whom at least shall be ruling elders, or deacons, or private members of the Church." Because of our profound reverence for the fathers of that Assembly, it is with painful regret that we must admit that they used this language. It certainly does them no credit. It plainly implies that six members of the executive committee of Foreign Missions need not be communicants of the church. The requirements would be met if six of the members were Atheists. We hazard nothing in saying that no General Assembly of our day would endorse this language, even if the last General Assembly did put women on its executive committees. It is gratifying to note that the Assembly's action was far better than its words. When it came to appoint its executive committee of Foreign Missions, it made it to consist of seven ministers and four ruling elders. We have not the slightest doubt that the other three executive committees, created by that Assembly were made up in the same way, exclusively of ministers and ruling elders. John B. Adger was a member of that first Assembly, and writing about executive committees two years later, he says: "It is to be observed that they have always consisted of a number of ministers and elders." Actions speak louder than words, and we put over against the strange and poorly considered language of the Assembly, its sane, sober and scriptural action.

Our dear Brother Lingle writes as if it were just the commonest thing in the world, a kind of every-day occurrence, for the General Assembly to put private members on its executive committees. He is a member of one executive committee, and he, of course, knows what happens to that committee. Our knowledge is confined for the most part to the executive committees of Home and Foreign Missions. We have it from the highest source that no private member has been appointed on the Home Mission Committee in the last twenty-two years. We have not the faintest suspicion that any private member of the church has ever been appointed on that committee. Until quite recently, we are fully persuaded that the same is true of the Foreign Mission Committee. That committee now has one private member of the church on it. Presumably he was supposed to be an officer of the church at the time of his appointment.

Apparently Dr. Lingle is trying to make small of executive committees by saying that the Assembly "has exercised the right to create an executive committee, or abolish it, or merge into another committee at will. The Assembly has always determined the number and the personnel of the members on an executive committee." All of which may be true granting that executive committees are commissions. Surely the Assembly can appoint other than judicial commissions, and it is only judicial commissions that require a membership of twenty-seven. The reason for this is plain. It takes two-thirds to make a quorum, and two-thirds constitute a quorum of the court appointing it. The business entrusted to a judicial commission is too important to be transacted by fewer than a quorum of a court. Just as in the ordination of a minister, the commission must always consist of a quorum of the court.

Dr. Lingle notes the fact that the General Assembly has made every rule or law under which these executive committees have operated. The same would certainly be true, granting that these committees were commissions. Committees and commissions are alike agencies of the court, and of course the court that appoints directs the proceedings of its agents. This is true even of judicial commissions. There is no such thing as lawless processes in the Presbyterian Church, either in the courts, or the agencies created by them.

It is in vain that one attempts to belittle executive committees. On them has been laid a task of momentous importance. Through them the Church is carrying out the Master's great commission. The executive committees of Home and Foreign Missions exercise administrative control over every messenger, clerical and lay, male and female, that is privileged to carry the Gospel into the destitute regions of the homeland, or into the darkness of pagan lands. They pass judgment on their credentials. They open the door of opportunity to them, or close it in their face. If they open the door, they point those who pass through to their field of labor, determine their salary, and transfer them from place to place as they deem best for the work. If there is any such thing as episcopal authority in our Church, it is lodged in the hands of our executive committees. Is it congruous with the principles of our Church for private members to be put in a position of such grave responsibility? They do not represent the people. They have not been subjected to any doctrinal test. They have not taken on them any solemn vows of loyalty to our standards. Is it right to place women in a position of authority where even ministers of the Gospel must submit their credentials to them, and crave of them permission to carry the Gospel to mission fields? We are open to conviction; but it takes more than the voice of an impatient Assembly, deciding a question of profoundest significance in a hurried and tumultuous manner, confessedly under the influence of a chivalrous sentiment, to convict us. If we had membership on either the executive committee of Home or Foreign Missions, we should advocate compliance with the Assembly's command by giving the women the position of advisory members. If called to account by the next Assembly, we would at any rate have an opportunity to give the Assembly the benefit of Paul's views of woman's position in the church.

Alas, the question now is a purely academic one. Revolutions never go backward. "You can't unscramble scrambled eggs." More is the pity.

QUEENS COLLEGE AND ITS PRESENT DILEMMA

Those interested in the education of our women have for years been praying for and striving for the establishment in Charlotte of a high college for women, where our daughters may be educated under Christian influences. Many of us know the struggles of the past and the strenuous efforts to make one dollar do the work of two, and to make our own people realize the importance of patronizing their own institution.

For over 20 years this struggle has gone on, but at last there are signs of victory.

Under the efficient presidency of Dr. Frazer, the college is within sight of success. Its very success, however, has brought it face to face with an embarrassing dilemma—whether to seek more students, or to close its doors to any further addition to its rolls on the ground that it cannot accommodate them.

Already college authorities have been forced to rent space outside, but, besides the inexpediency of such a measure, there is a limit to such accommodations. Our prayers for more students have been answered, yet we know not what to do with the answer. The only step to take is to build more dormitory space, and in order to do that we need to raise a building fund, which means that the Presbyterians of this section must give to this cause liberally.

We know that there are many calls, both for education and for church growth, yet it seems to us that the women have a strong claim upon the people. In the first place, when you educate a woman you educate her children and thus bless both the Church and State. Then in the second place, we have done more for the colleges for men than for the colleges for women, both in the Church and in the State.

Both are important and should receive our attention; but let us help them proportionately.

LETTING DOWN THE BARS

Our Episcopal and Baptist brethren constitute a valuable part of the Lord's army. Both have some excellent traits that always have commanded our admiration.

For example, what an example has the Episcopal Church always been to the other denominations in the example of reverence for the Lord's house and His orderly worship. The worship may at times lack fervor and the sermon may not be one that will grip a man's conscience, but the service will always be orderly and reverent, and the worshipper will always be the better man, because he has been in the church.

Our Baptist brethren also have their fine traits. They stand, as a general thing, upon the old foundations, and they magnify the Word of God as few denominations do.

In enumerating the commendable qualities of these two great churches, we are reminded of the Bible's description of Naaman, the Syrian. He "was a great man with his Master, and honorable; he was also a mighty man in valour, but he was a leper."

The fatal "but" seems to qualify and tone down all that is good.

So with our excellent brethren of both churches. They are examples to the flock. The fatal "but" comes in. They are mighty forces in the Lord's army—"but" they have certain drawbacks—that to a certain extent neutralize their good influence, and prejudice many against them, and give the world occasion to point out an inconsistency between the teachings of Christ and the practice of His followers.

The Episcopal Church builds a fence about its pulpit and bars out all ministers who have not been ordained by one in the line of apostolic succession.

The Baptist Church builds a fence around the Lord's table, and makes immersion the passport that admits one to its blessings.

There is so much to admire in each of these churches that one always regrets that there are these grounds of complaints against them.

For this reason we rejoice over every sign of any lowering of the bars.

In the Northern Baptist Church the fence around the Lord's table is gradually disappearing. In many of their churches in the North and more frequently in England open communion is being practiced, with the result that the denomination is less on the defensive, and finds it easier to reach men of the world with its message of love.

In the Episcopal Church the bars are up and down, according to the locality. In some states they relax their rule forbidding any minister to occupy their pulpit unless he has been regularly ordained by one in the line of the apostles. In other states the bars are still up.

In Canada, after a long debate, the bishops have decided to permit outside ministers to speak from Episcopal pulpits on special occasions. They thus define what they mean by special occasions—"a time when the message has some direct application of the principles of the Gospel to a practical phase of life."

Of course it is encouraging to see even the slightest relaxation of the prohibition, yet we can easily see that the Episcopal minister who wishes to have a Presbyterian preacher to occupy his pulpit, would have some difficulty in deciding whether the forthcoming sermon would directly apply the principles of the Gospel to a practical phase of life. We do not see how he could safely throw open his pulpit unless he first had the sermon preached on trial.

How much more in keeping with the spirit of the Lord who made no distinction between believers, it would have been to follow the example of other churches and use any man who preaches a pure Gospel. However, these straws indicate that the wind is rising.

REMOVING BLEMISHES

You may recall the story of Herkomer, born in the Black Forest, the son of a simple wood-chopper. He afterward rose to fame and established his studio in London and brought his father there to be with him. The old man became very fond of moulding clay and would spend most of his time at it, and really became quite an artist along that line. But as he grew older and his eye lost something of the keenness of its vision, and his hand something of its skill, the old gentleman became heavy hearted, like a man who thinks his best days are gone, and he would go upstairs at the close of the day's work with sad heart. Herkomer, the unrivalled artist in clay, noticed it all, and many times when the old man had gone upstairs he would slip into the studio and take the work his old father had left with the marks of deficiency and failure on it, and with his own wonderful touch he would make it as fair as the genius of man could make it. And in the morning when the old man would come down and look on the work he had left the night before, disappointed with its deficiencies, he would hold it up to the light and rub his eyes and exclaim: "Why, I can do it as well as I ever could!"—Ex.

Every man needs Christ. Christ is able to meet every man's needs. I owe to every other man everything that Christ is to me. When every man in the Christian world realizes these great facts, and is willing to assume his share of responsibility and to put forth earnest effort to meet and fulfill his obligations, the world will soon be won for Christ. "Owe no man anything, but to love one another." Love is a continuing debt, but the duties that it brings should be performed promptly and faithfully.

Jesus said concerning the Holy Spirit, "I will send Him unto you." Who is this "you"? It was to His own and not to the world, that the Spirit would be sent. When He is to come to you, "He shall convince the world of sin and righteousness and judgment." How important that we recognize this teaching! We must have the Spirit before the world can be brought to Christ and be saved. Many things are awaiting the connection of the laity to the Spirit. Many Pentecosts are overdue because of lack of consecration of God's people and ministry. There is power and ability to make the Church glorious and efficient, but it awaits our connecting with that upper room. It yet remains to be seen what God can do with a Spirit-filled Church and ministry.—Elwin Lincoln House, in "The Glory of Going On."

A striking tribute to Protestant missionary work in Chile was paid by a Roman Catholic bishop. The occasion was the Eucharistic Congress held in Santiago. One day the topic for consideration was, "What shall we do with the Protestants?" When the discussion was begun, one man, in the spirit of the old Inquisition days, said: "Let's burn them at the stake and thus get rid of them!" Others spoke in about the same way, until finally Bishop Edwards rose and said: "Brethren, say what you will about the Protestants, but there are three things that we may well learn from them. They have a clergy whose life is above reproach, whereas ours is the laughingstock of the whole country. They practice temperance, and we ought to do the same. They have the open Bible and they put it into the hands of the people."—Missionary Review of the World.

so vigorously pushed by the secretary, are not receiving support is evidenced by that fact that out of 516 churches 176 do not report results of an Every Member Canvass and in the majority of them probably none was made. Out of a total membership of 68,432, 30,000 appear to have made no subscription either to Benevolences or Current Expenses. We are lagging and apparently it is largely due to a lack of effort and co-operation on the part of a large number of churches.

The goal accepted five years ago, $650,000 for specified causes, has never been reached, though our per capita wealth has doubled and trebled. Our committee might make the wisest plans in the world and exhaust every means available, but if the pastors and churches are not willing to co-operate, even to the extent of putting on an Every Member Canvass, it all comes to nothing. If our Synod had advanced in the proportion of the average of the other six Synods, in these six years, we would now be contributing more than $1,300,000 to Benevolent causes.

MEXICO MATERIALLY SPEAKING

By Rev. J. E. Lewis

We wish to state facts and not lambast the hen that lays the golden egg. Our Mexico field is a fine new one which was entered in 1919, after consummating plans for redistribution of territory. Our new responsibility in Mexico is 2,125,000 souls who inhabit a territory about the size of the state of Virginia. To care for this great responsibility there are 10 male missionaries, six of whom do evangelistic work, and five single female missionaries. They are sure-enough red-blooded working folks and just ask a little material equipment in order to be able to do more work.

In this great field with such bright prospects there is not a single equipped school, not a single missionary home, not a single real church building, and a very limited number of chapels. Friends of the cause of God, take in this situation and as at the close of this year you are counting your blessings to see what the Lord hath done, wont you take a look on the fields that are so white unto the harvest and divide your blessings with God's lost sheep who so need your help in Mexico?

We are asking this year five missionary homes, that our missionaries, being better housed, may do better work. Mexican architecture is not very conducive to health and comfort and besides rent is very high. Building materials are high and thus each home will cost $6,000.

Mexico is a land of poverty largely because the people do not know how to work. A crooked stick still scratches the ground and it is called plowing. This primitive mode of cultivation together with the fact that little or nothing is done to improve or preserve the soil would foretell very clearly a short yield in crops and half fed people. A good site has just been bought for an industrial school and we ask $10,000 that at least a decent beginning may be made in this much needed industrial education.

For vital contact with the native peoples the medical work stands at the very forefront in any mission field. Our hospital building is a fine piece of property and there is some equipment, but we ask $4,000 that this institution may begin to hold up her head and take her stand beside similar institutions in other mission lands. Much of Mexico has an ideal climate yet it is a land of sickness and 65 per cent of the babies die in childhood. Much of this sickness and death is very preventable and there is a vital need for a fully equipped hospital.

In scores and hundreds of the towns and villages of Mexico an impressive Catholic cathedral of stone or adobe towers above a town of straw and mud and poverty and sorrow. In these towering cathedrals Mexico's pitiful millions bow before idol-covered altars and plead for soul-peace and comfort, whispering their longings into deaf ears, and then turn away hungrier and more sorrowful still. Where the Protestants have places of worship they are so very often ugly and gloomy huts of straw and mud. We ask $5,400 that at least a small beginning may be made in providing more wholesome and attractive places of worship for the native Christians who so gladly lend a helping hand in this work.

Last but not least we speak of our social center work at Toluca. This is a city of about 30,000 inhabitants, with a large Catholic church for every thousand of population. There are a fine bunch of young people who are open in their views and a live social center would be a strong connecting link to tie them up to active Christianity. We have a live man, but he needs some tools in order to have a live social center. One thousand four hundred and seventy-five dollars in this work would be a good investment that would yield large returns.

Friends, we are happy in our work and proud of our field and mention these needs only that it may be possible for us to do more for the Master among His needy ones. Cuernavaca, Mexico.

QUIET TALKS ON THE SIMPLE ESSENTIALS

By S. D. Gordon, Bijou Theatre, Boardwalk, Atlantic City, N. J., July-August, 1923, Auspices Atlantic City Council of Churches

No. 13—Does Prayer Count?

Prayer changes things. It changes things at the other end. It changes things at this end.

When prayer can make any change it likes at this end, the praying end, it will make any change you like at the other end.

When God can reach in and do as He likes in you, you can reach out your hand and do as you like with God, and among men, and in the circumstances of life.

And you think that's getting it too strong. That seems irreverent. Well, if so, you get off in a quiet corner, and look at the first half of that sentence. If you stand the tug of the first half you'll have no bother with the second half.

Without doubt when the God-Man can reach in His pierced hand, and do as He likes with us, we can reach out eager, longing hands and do as we like with Him. The last part of the sentence is under the hard thumb of the first part.

Today's talk is a simple story out of life that I know personally. So I speak with positiveness. It came to me direct from the man himself. He was born in Maine, college bred, trained in the law, a big man in physique and in leadership among his fellows, and a confirmed skeptic.

He moved to the middle west, and later represented his you think good to have come, if only Henry may be out and out for Thee."

What were the results for her? Well, she was the wife of a lawyer with large practice and large income. She was the wife of the Congressman of that district. She would likely have been, so far as things political can be judged ahead, the wife of the governor, and the first lady socially of the state and capital.

She became a methodist preacher's wife, with a very different income and social status. Yet I have never met a woman with more of that fine beauty in the face that comes only when the heart is at rest.

Prayer changes things. It changes things at the other end. It changes things at this end. When prayer can make any change it chooses at the starting end and it will make any change you choose at the other end.

I told the story one morning to two thousand business and professional men in Cincinnati, at a laymen's missionary convention. As I finished the talk the song leader was asked to sing a solo, but declined. And I wondered why. Then we were dismissed.

As I turned to go I found myself facing the song leader. Then I knew why he hadn't sung. With a fine control over the emotions stirring him, he said, "Was that Henry Otis Pratt that you were talking about?"

I said, "Yes." Gripping my hand hard, he said, "The other woman in that covenant of prayer was—my mother!"

And that close personal touch brought close home the reality of the unseen and of the power of prayer.

Let's all go to Sunday school Rally Day

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 7TH
Let's All Go to Sunday School Rally Day

The Sunday School Department of the Southern Presbyterian Church, under the capable direction of Mr. R. E. Magill, executive secretary, represents one of the most vigorous and aggressive activities of the Church. Its place of importance and its far-reaching possibilities cannot be over-estimated, because it is concerned largely with the unfolding of life, the making of character, the planting of seed in fertile soil, laying the foundations of faith and godliness in the very heart of a rising generation.

Rally Day then is much more than a one-day program, a one-day bulging of Sunday School attendance. It is a day of vision and inspiration, a day that marks the beginning of a sustained enlistment and loyalty throughout the year. Rally Day finds its place, and rightly so, in the realm of the most vital and essential department of the program of the Church—that of Spiritual Life.

A great blessing should come to every Sunday School and Church, in carrying out the specially prepared program on October 7th, in accordance with the plans of the Executive Committee of Publication and Sabbath Schools. For information and literature write Mr. R. E. Magill, Box 1176, Richmond, Va.

If Invited, What Will You Do?

It is possible that a number of fathers and mothers and elderly persons will receive a most cordial invitation from one of their children—little Mary or Johnnie—to go with them to Sunday School Rally Day, on October the 7th. And of course they will go, for it is hard to imagine anyone refusing an invitation to such a good thing from such a wonderful source. Go and you will never regret it.

THE MINISTRY

By Rev. James Russell

Work of pastors is not duty done but souls saved. I make you fishers of men. A true worker will never rest satisfied with membership already attained, but go out after others, yes, compel them to come by drawing messages of love, till the house be filled. Some men will preach to an audience he could accommodate in his parlor. Let these preachers turn evangelists, and gather souls for Christ. Fear not, salary will come. The God of the Harvest will pay his true workmen.

Another grand opportunity is given us at the death bed. Men may live fools, but fools they cannot die. Then it is the duty of the man of God to make plain the way to the gates of day. Standing by the bed of the Jew a few days since, I asked who he rested on. Abraham's God is my district in the lower House at Washington. One day, listening to an unusually exciting congressional debate, the impression came to him, very quietly but quite distinctively, that God was right there. (He could prove logically that there was no God!) God was looking at him, thinking about him, and displeased with his attitude, and so on.

And he said to himself, "I guess I've been working too hard. I am getting morbid. I'll have a long walk and a good meal and get rid of this absurd impression."

He had his long walk down by the Potomac, and his well ordered meal, and came back to his seat the next noon in Congress. And so did the impression come back, quiet, distinct, clear. He was greatly shaken. But nothing more took place at that time.

Then he returned home in the middle west, for personal matters, and political. He was planning to secure the nomination of his party for the governorship. His party was dominant. The nomination was practically an election. And he was in the line of such action.

Reaching home his wife tactfully told him that two of them had made a covenant of prayer that he might decide to be a Christian. Instantly he thought of that strange Washington experience.

But he didn't want her to know how interested he was. So he asked in a careless tone when this praying began. He did some quick thinking back. And he knew that she had named the day when that strange impression first came.

He was greatly shaken. He was honest. He really believed there was no God. But he was a lawyer, used to sifting evidence. When these two women did something they called praying out by the Mississippi, something akin, of an unprecedented sort, happened to him down by the Potomac.

After a day of intense inner conflict, the next night he surrendered his strong will to the higher will. Then an old boy-time conviction from the early Maine days came back. And from that hour he gave his trained powers to pleading the cause of a new Client, and with marked power and results.

Then I got his wife's story. "She had had a fresh touch with the Man that died. There had been a readjustment in her life. Some things, not wrong, but not best, went out, and others came in. The old time desire for her husband took on a new life. A covenant of prayer was made with an intimate friend."

That night, kneeling, a quiet inner voice seemed to say distinctly, "Are you willing for the results?" A second time and a third time the question came. Then she seemed to understand and said, "I am willing for anything

God, in Him I rest, in Him I trust. It is our privilege as well as a duty, to light up the valley of death with light from the garments of our risen Christ. His face shines as the sun, thus all fear is gone as glory deathless shines from Emmanuel's land.

AMAZING! THE WOMEN AND THE ASSEMBLY

By Rev. Emmett W. McCorkle

The writer is not among the privileged number of the readers of the Presbyterian Standard, and therefore did not see articles on this subject until marked copies were sent him by a friend.

He saw in these that a beloved brother was "amazed" at the answer to the protest, to the effect that the Assembly might appoint "anybody" on its executive committees. The answer did not say that the Assembly might appoint anybody, but that there was nothing in the Word of God or the Covenant of the Church to prevent the Assembly from appointing private members upon its executive committees. But private members on executive committees were provided for by the authority of the Assembly when first organized in 1861. That Assembly said that the Executive Committee of Foreign Missions shall consist of a secretary, treasurer, and nine other members, three of whom shall be ruling elders or deacons, or private members. Also that the principles of organization involved in the establishment of the Executive Committee of Foreign Missions be considered as applying to all executive committees to be appointed. The private member therefore is on the executive committees by the authority of and by the explicit action of the first Assembly of our Church. Amazing it is that only three of the nine shall be elders or deacons or private members. That is the committee could consist without an elder, and, if necessary, all of them might be private members. Evidently Thornwell and Palmer did not think there was anything in the Word of God or the government of the church to exclude the private member from these committees.

The good brethren in order to bolster up their well meant contention fly to that haven of refuge, paragraph 95 in the book. And they say that had former Assemblies been true to this law, giving them power to commit the various interests pertaining to evangelization to one or more commissions, the private member would have been shut out. But even this succor fails them and for the reason that this was exactly what the fathers did not do and did not wish to do. Dr. Peck often said that in order to a correct interpretation of an action we must get the setting of that time. At that period the church was engaged in a life and death struggle with the boards, that power behind the throne greater than the throne itself. It was a deadly menace, dominating the church by its constant and resistless usurpation of authority both at home and abroad. The pendulum at the South was swinging in the other direction. And these sorely pressed men were looking around for the most innocuous agency with which and through which the Church could do her work. Would they have hit upon the commission? Never. Because the commission, according to Thornwell's view, was the court itself, with all the authority of the court. He held also that "these powers could not be transferred but must be exercised exclusively by the court." If that be true he would have erected an imperium in imperio—the very thing they were struggling desperately to avoid, if under his noble leadership the work of evangelization had been committed to commissions. Between the harmless committee and the extraordinary commission there is a great gulf fixed, because the commission is the court and not an agency of the court, as the committee is. Our brethren are perfectly well aware of the fact that a commission for ordination must have a quorum of the court. Also that in the commissions of the Synod and Assembly each must consist of a quorum of the court, and must therefore be vested with all the powers of the court itself. Is the executive committee a court in the sense that a commission is a court? Not in any sense. It is true the committee has supervisory powers, but these are exercised under the eye of the Assembly and the missionaries under the supervision of the committee are directly connected with and responsible to their Presbyteries. The private member has a right on the committee because it is not a court. Do we think of the executive committees as appointed "to ordain ministers, install ministers, visit portions of the church affected with disorder, and organize new churches?"

Is it not amazing to think that these men in their distress because of the encroachment of the boards would have rushed into the arms of the extraordinary (court) commission with its extraordinary ecclesiastical powers? Therefore they committed their fortunes to the innocent executive committee, and therefore they admitted private members to the membership of these committees.

The writer does not take seriously the suggestion of his honored brother that after women are admitted to membership they should be bound hand and foot and then gagged. This would deprive the committees of their valuable co-operation. That is what they wish to do, co-operate, not control. So far as the writer is aware they have co-operated with the courts in the most loyal and enthusiastic manner. In the words of the godly editor of the Standard, it seems as if this whole movement in our Church has, in God's providence, been guided by God's Spirit. Therefore this action of the Assembly has met with general approval in the Church. In fact in the Mission Court at Richmond, where these private members have been on the committee, they have been most capable and efficient members.

AFTER THE EARTHQUAKE

By Rev. W. C. Cumming, written on Empress of Canada en route to China

The Yokohama-Tokyo earthquake and fire will perhaps be an old story when these lines are read, but to us here on the "Empress of Canada" it is still very vivid and present. A wireless message on Sunday (day before yesterday) gave us an inkling of what had happened on Saturday, but we thought it exaggerated until the refugees began coming on board. Beginning less than an hour after we anchored in Yokohama harbor yesterday morning boatload after boatload came—about 50 at a time—until we have 1,400 aboard. As I write they are strolling up and down the decks with heads and limbs bandaged and in clothes that have been contributed. They tell horrible stories: One man was in the bank, his wife came for him and was outside in an automobile when the whole wall collapsed on her and buried her. A woman was talking to her husband in the street when he disappeared into the earth, but managed to crawl back out. Some were buried and some were burned. Some stood in water all night and immersed themselves over and over—women putting mud and water on their heads—because the heat of the flames was too great for them to bear. One man whom I took to my room for a shave was out on a pier—an explosion cut the pier in two. As it burned towards him he jumped off and swam to a scow. Later that caught and he swam to another and then to another. He was in the water two hours before he got to the "Empress of Australia" and was picked up. The British Vice-Consul escaped through a window just before the consular building fell and made his way to the park, because that was the largest open space in the city. It was filled with thousands upon thousands of Japanese and foreigners who were crowded into the part not flooded by the burst of water mains. After standing for hours he tried to make his way to the Bund, or water front, and had to wade for quite a distance through water more than knee-deep. While wading he fell into a man-hole and was injured, but was later carried to the ship. The American Consul was killed, I understand. Some men from his office in Tokyo made their way on foot all the way to Yokohama and tell of a desolated country—bridges down, rails twisted like snakes and nothing standing.

One man said that he had just arrived in the city and was riding from the railroad depot in an automobile when the shock came. He jumped out and ran—seemed to go crazy, and when he came to bricks were lying on him and his leg was hurt. A Japanese lifted what was on his leg, but he was crippled and could not get to the shore. After a day and two nights he was picked up by a searching party. He seemed overjoyed to be on the ship at last.

A woman walked 60 miles in three days and is completely exhausted. Another saw her husband crushed and her children burned to death and is raving. A boy to whom I just gave a shirt doesn't know whether his parents were saved or not—and there are many with members of their family missing.

From the various accounts it seems that the first shock came without warning at about 12 o'clock and demolished everything at a stroke. There was no warning at all and as several have said, stone and brick buildings went down like houses of cards. The ground twisted and heaved. Automobiles were turned up on their sides and everything fell prostrate. Where a solid block of business buildings had stood a minute before one could look straight across through dust above debris. Other shocks came rapidly. There was a terrible wind and then fire. The fire seemed to start simultaneously all over the city and there were no fire companies left, no streets through which they could pass and no water mains intact. The people went mad trying to outrace the fire over fallen buildings and wreckage and dead bodies. Japanese and foreigners alike made for the park or for the Bund. Many were trapped and many suffered agonies in their escape. Through glasses we could see the ruins along the waterfront and everything looked like desolation. No war could have brought completer destruction. One man said that there was not a square foot of wood or combustible material left in the city—he had wandered there for hours.

But one horror followed another. Even those who escaped into the sea were not safe, for the fire followed them there. An enormous quantity of oil from the Standard Oil tanks got loose and spread over the water, and caught. Many trying to swim were burned, and boats and docks were burned. The "Empress of Australia" in some way got afloat of a Japanese boat and broke a propeller and came near being burned with the thousands of passengers and refugees on board. The way she kept her nose playing on the burning waves as the flame a foot or two deep came nearer to her, and, disabled as she was, managed to extricate herself from the wrecked pier, is regarded as a remarkable feat of seamanship by the Dutch sailors who watched her.

Many of the prisoners and criminals seem to have escaped from jails and looting and personal tragedies came on with the night. The authorities seemed paralyzed—or dead. It was not safe to go about the city. The Australia sent searching parties ashore one after another all day Sunday and kept picking up foreigners—Europeans and Americans. She was crowded with them the next morning when we arrived and began taking them off. Most of the fourteen hundred that we are carrying to Kobe were from her, and she has remained to pick up others. Many more who do not know that Yokohama has been destroyed keep coming in from the desolated region all around.

None of our passengers who were planning to get off at Yokohama were allowed to leave the ship, so we are quite crowded. The original passengers have given clothes until I think that now every man has a shirt and pants and all the women have stockings and other garments and practically all have shoes. But what they are wearing is all that they have. They wander around collarless with no change of clothing at all. Some of our missionaries have given until they themselves have very little left, and they have given very liberally of their money. More than $8,000 was raised this morning by the original passengers of the ship, and most of it has been paid in cash. Dr. Wilson has worked like he was in his own hospital, Mrs. Hall has been a trained nurse with a whole string of patients, the Pattersons and Richardsons have given up a room for refugees. All sorts of things have been done and plans are now being made to care for the more needy among those who have been rescued after Kobe is reached. We feel that we were very fortunate in arriving at the scene in time to be of help to some, but we are sorry that we could not stay there longer and reach more. The Australia is going to stay, however, and other ships are arriving daily.

SPECIAL PRAYER FOR LUEBO MISSIONARIES

By Rev. Egbert W. Smith, D.D.

We have been receiving distressing news from Luebo. Dr. Stixrud has started home, accompanied by his family, to be treated in England or America for sleeping sickness; and the news has just reached us that Mrs. T. C. Vinson, with her family, is also westward bound to be treated for the same trouble. We are also informed that Rev. and Mrs. A. C. McKinnon have been ordered home by the doctor, though we do not yet know what the specific trouble is.

And now comes a letter informing us of the sudden death from septic pneumonia of Mrs. Joseph Savels, a most lovable and gifted young Belgian lady and one of our efficient missionaries, the wife of Rev. Joseph Savels, another of our highly efficient missionaries of Belgian birth and formerly a priest of high rank in the Catholic Church. The bereaved father is left with two little children. A sketch of the life and work of Mrs. Savels will appear in due time.

We earnestly ask that our whole Church will remember in their prayers these sick missionaries on their way home and this bereaved family at Luebo. It is encouraging to remember that all cases of sleeping sickness thus far among our missionaries have resulted, in answer to earnest prayer, in complete restoration to health. Let us remember these dear friends in their hour of need.

"NEVER REFUSED GOD ANYTHING"

Florence Nightingale, looking back over a long life, said: "If I could tell you all, you would see how God has done all and I nothing. I have worked hard, very hard, that is all, and I have never refused God anything." "Never refused God anything"—there is the secret of the life of service she lived. If our lives as Christians are not wholly a success, it would be well to test them by Florence Nightingale's test—"I have never refused God anything."—Ex.

Woman's Auxiliary

Conducted by Mrs. J. M. McIver, Gulf, N. C.

Charlotte, First Church—Auxiliary Bible Studies—Beginning Monday afternoon, September 24th, and continuing through Friday, September 28th, the Woman's Auxiliary will hold a series of Bible studies, in the church parlors, under the leadership of Mrs. H. E. Gurney. The studies will be taken from the first twelve chapters of Acts, and will be held each afternoon from 4:00 to 5:00 o'clock. The subjects are as follows:

Monday: "The Beginnings." Tuesday: "Prayer." Wednesday: "Stewardship." Thursday: "Growth." Friday: "Power."

All ladies of the congregation are most cordially invited to attend all meetings.

The regular annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Synod of Virginia will be held in the Presbyterian church at Waynesboro, Va., in October. At 8:00 o'clock on Wednesday evening, October 10th, there will be a meeting of the executive committee, and Thursday morning of the 11th the opening meeting of the Synodical will be held and continued through Friday.

Among the speakers on the program are Rev. Harris Kirk, D.D., of Baltimore; Rev. A. C. Bridgman, of Norfolk, chairman of the Auxiliary Advisory Committee, and Rev. T. K. Currie, of Richmond, superintendent of Young People's Work of the Assembly.

There will be several helpful conferences and a very fine meeting is anticipated by those in charge.

To the President and Secretary of Literature—Dear Friend: Home Mission Week comes earlier than usual this year, November 11-18, so if we are to get through with our study classes before that time we must begin to plan at once.

The subject for study this year is a fascinating one—"The Child and America's Future"—and surely no more important theme could have been chosen. If "the church of tomorrow walks in the girls and boys of today" it behooves us to study well the needs and possibilities of these same boys and girls. The enclosed announcement tells you all about the study books. Order your supply in good time so there will be no delay.

Now about the kind of study class to have. The earnest though small group of students who used to spend at least five hours of real study on the text-book seems to be giving way to the one-day "Birdseye" view of the study book. This change is a cause for regret and alarm. Let us all try to have the ideal plan which includes both of the above classes.

Organize a class of those who will agree to meet for an hour a day for five days, or if necessary, an hour a week for five weeks. Let them really study the book under a good leader. Don't be discouraged if only a few enter in this class. It will be worth while if only three or four enroll for they will be your future leaders. Close the real class with a "one-day" meeting to which all the women of the church are invited. In this way something is offered for every woman.

The president, secretary of A. H. M. and secretary of literature are together responsible for the Home Mission study class. Won't you set to work at once to arrange for both these classes in your Auxiliary?

The Church is counting on you in this important matter. With many good wishes, Faithfully yours,

H. P. Winsborough.

Concerning the "Acts of the Apostles," Past and Present—In our last year's report of the Women's work in all the Auxiliaries of the Southern Church, some startling facts were disclosed, for instance, the women gave $90,000 more to "miscellaneous" than to our own Foreign Mission work, to which their support was pledged. North Carolina, though leading in amount given to Foreign Missions, yet fell short $16,000 of the 33 1-3 per cent due for that cause, and gave $42,124 to miscellaneous.

Is this because our newly elected and zealous circle chairmen prefer to work and give to these outside objects? No! but these things are brought to their notice, whereas the general ignorance and misconception of our foreign work is most surprising and appalling. As a case in point, three days ago, a letter was received, asking questions about foreign work. The writer had recently moved into one of our prosperous towns and become a member of an influential church. On her inquiring about the activities of the church, a prominent woman of the church remarked, "I've never felt any interest in Foreign Missions, for you know only 33 cents out of every dollar ever reaches the foreign field." She added that two of the elders (wealthy men) felt exactly as she did. (Needless to say an informing letter, with various leaflets, was immediately dispatched.)

It is well known that the gifts to Foreign Missions come from those intimately acquainted with the missionaries and their work.

Now, how shall we get the interesting facts concerning this great cause before our women? Assuredly at our Auxiliary and circle meetings. And yet, we find a number of Auxiliaries devoting a half hour to Bible study, after the regular devotional, at every circle meeting. An item in last week's "Christian Observer" mentioned that a certain Auxiliary had all the circles studying the "Acts of the Apostles," and writing on slips, all references to prayer.

Why was it that the Holy Spirit included the "Acts of the Apostles" in our Scriptures? Was it not that the early church, and every church since, should know and appreciate and co-operate in the work of the missionaries? Apostle means, "one sent" missionary. St. Luke says that the "Acts of the Apostles" is a continuation of "all that Jesus began both to do and teach." No one acquainted with the facts, questions that He is still continuing to work and teach through our present-day apostles. Such study of their accomplishments and needs would open our eyes and our hearts and our purses, and thus advance His Kingdom.

Let us study earnestly our Bibles and how to pray, at our adult classes every Sunday, and in our homes every day, and then, in the short time that we have in our Auxiliary and circle meetings, let us study our "Present Day Apostles" so that we will hear and answer the prayers they have been making so long for help and sadly needed equipment. The present wealth of the church and her comparative parsimony toward her soldiers at the forefront hinders her spiritual growth more than any other cause.

A word to our earnest "Secretaries of Spiritual Resources": Bible study is not our only source of spiritual uplift, as a visit to Montreat during Foreign or Home Mission Week clearly demonstrates.

Can't you imagine our Saviour grieved at our blindness and lack of understanding, when we study Paul and Silas and Barnabas and give never a thought to their successors, who in many instances, are passing through even more trying situations?

Mrs. L. Richardson.

Report of Secretary of Spiritual Life for Year 1922-23—When we mention Stewardship, we think of money, but in the Christian sense its using for God's glory whatever He has entrusted to us—our time, our talents, every faculty of our minds and soul should be used for God.

As the church year comes to a close and the churches are sending in financial reports, if these reports show that the budget has been raised, how it fills us with joy and pride.

Suppose there were reports sent giving lists of those who really pray, who study God's Word faithfully and prayerfully, who keep up the family altar, who make it their business in life to win others to Christ; would these lists fill us with joy and gladness, or would we be filled with dismay?? No such lists are sent, but a record is being kept and God grant that when the books are opened your name and my name will be found there.

If the Auxiliaries would only realize that the department that we call "Spiritual Life" is the very foundation of the whole work of the church, and would give this department its proper place that all the problems of the church would be solved—the gifts would follow as naturally as day follows the night!

I urge the secretaries of Spiritual Life to organize Bible classes, prayer bands, to observe the weeks and days of prayer appointed by the Assembly, and to make every effort to promote the spiritual growth and deepen the spirituality of your Auxiliary in the coming year.

Reports from the Auxiliaries show a deepening of spirituality in most cases, and we should thank God and take courage. Still truth compels me to say that this department is very much neglected in most of our Auxiliaries.

I have written several letters to each Auxiliary during the past year and have received encouraging reports from some of them, while others have taken no notice of my letters.

Respectfully submitted,

Mrs. T. B. Fraser,

Secretary of Spiritual Life for Harmony Presbyterial.

Narrative of Recording Secretary—As recording secretary of Harmony Presbyterial, I am glad to report a wonderful improvement in the correctness, punctuality and neatness of reports.

Most of the questions were answered, for which I am deeply grateful.

My report was mailed to the Synodical secretary April 5th, with every Auxiliary reporting, therefore I am glad to report an "On Time Presbyterial."

On March 10th a personal letter and report blanks were mailed to 28 local Auxiliary presidents.

On March 12th, two days later, the report from Mayesville was received, the others were received in the order printed on chart.

There was an increase in gifts in 11 Auxiliaries, as follows: Mayesville, Bishopville, Sumter, Indiantown, Wedgefield, Lynchburg, McDowell, Central, Concord, and Salem Black River.

Special attention is called to the per capita gift of McDowell—$25.00. We have one new Auxiliary to report—Summertown—with 15 members. We extend a welcome to this organization.

We regret to report that only eight of the 27 Auxiliaries (this does not refer to Summertown, as it is recently organized) reported the use of the new Standard of Excellence, our average percentage is therefore only 51 per cent.

Auxiliaries reaching Standard of Excellence: Blue, 8, Tirzah, Wedgefield, Bishopville, Hebron, New Harmony, McDowell, Salem Black River, and Concord.

Silver, 6, Andrews, Georgetown, Williamsburg, Sumter, Manning, Indiantown.

Manning reports 90 per cent, and Williamsburg 87 per cent, the other four 80 per cent.

Nineteen Auxiliaries celebrated the tenth birthday of our organization, contributing $256.00 to Miss Dowd's School.

Twenty-one Auxiliaries contributed $350.00 to our Special.

Total to all causes, $6,151.00, a decrease of $170.00, compared with last year. Our per capita gift is $7.00, the same as last year.

Letters written, 153; cards, 70; minutes mailed, Presbyterial, 126; Synodical, 40.

Miss Bettie Aycock, Recording Sec'y.

(We are especially glad to have these two fine reports taken from copy of minutes of Harmony Presbyterial Auxiliary. "A wonderful improvement in the correctness, punctuality and neatness of reports" is a note that we are glad to hear sounded. Mrs. Fraser's report as secretary of Spiritual Life is thought-provoking, and well worth pondering.—Ed.)

First Presbyterian Church, Charlotte—The September meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of the First Presbyterian Church was largely attended and was a meeting of unusual interest, made so by the bright, happy faces of the future Woman's Auxiliary of this church, viz., the girls of the church who are going away to college.

As the guests of honor were school girls, the program of the afternoon was patterned after a day at school. The devotional was conducted by Miss Mary Hunter, the chairman of the young ladies' circle, after which Mrs. Ward Orr sang "Ivory Palaces." The first period was a history lesson, with Mrs. J. A. Fore as teacher. The subject of the lesson being "The History of the First Presbyterian Church, Charlotte," which the teacher by much previous research made most interesting as well as profitable. Each member present left feeling well qualified to answer any question that might be asked them as to age, membership or Rev. History of this grand old church.

The next period was covered by the Geography and Spelling classes combined, taught by Mrs. W. H. Fowler, secretary of C. E., Japan being the subject for study, and prayer during the month of September. Mrs. Fowler chose for the day's lesson the geographical location and spelling of name of our different mission stations in Japan. This was a lively contest, but as no one was kept in we felt that the class had a fair knowledge of their subjects.

The last period was given to the reading class, with Miss Gladys DeArmon as teacher. The subject was most interesting, as it was a newsy folksy letter from Miss Bessie Martin Blakeney, a former Mecklenburg girl who is now a teacher in the "Golden Castle Girls' School" at Nagoya.

After lessons were over the president of the Auxiliary, Mrs. Parks Kirkpatrick, spoke very feelingly to the girls, assuring them that the love, confidence and prayers of the Auxiliary followed them as they went out from the home church, and delivered to each girl present a miniature diploma as a token of this fellowship.

Mrs. E. M. Cole then presented each girl with a small prettily bound copy of the Gospel of St. John, recommending it to contain an antidote for "Modernism" in Bible teaching, viz., Jno. 1:1: "In the beginning was the word and he word was with God and the word was God." She also called their attention to many other blessed things found in this Gospel, such as the assurance of God's love and that our prayers are heard and answered.

This being a special occasion, delightful refreshments, home-made cake and ice cream, were served by Mrs. Chas. Lambeth's circle. To this part of the program the boys of the church also who were leaving for college were invited. The church has 54 of its young people leaving for college, and the Woman's Auxiliary feels especially interested in them every one.

Charlotte—The week of prayer of the Woman's International Missionary Union was observed September 10-15, and the Charlotte chapter of this organization of women of the various Protestant denominations of the city made arrangements to observe the week in a most fitting manner.

Under the capable leadership of Mrs. J. B. Spillman, the needs of Japan as a missionary objective were presented in a most interesting and instructive manner each day of the week of prayer, in the club room of the Second Presbyterian Church, these daily presentations being made by the women of the various churches, about 100 women taking part in same. Japan is the missionary center which is being studied in a special way this year by the Protestant churches of the United States, and several mission study books are being used by the different churches in this connection.

Mrs. Spillman was the representative of the Charlotte Women's Interdenominational Missionary Union at the recent missionary conference held at Blue Ridge, and the outline of "The Creative Forces of Japan" and the accompanying mission studies which she prepared constituted a prominent and very instructive feature of the program of the week of prayer. The meetings each day during this week were held in the Second Presbyterian Church. More than 100 women were present each day and were enthusiastic in their interest in the daily studies.

The closing day of the week of prayer the following resolutions were adopted unanimously:

"Resolved, That we, the members of the Woman's Interdenominational Union of Charlotte, take this opportunity to express to the women of the Second Presbyterian Church our most sincere appreciation of their kind invitation to hold our mission study class in their well appointed club room.

"That we assure them of our enjoyment of the gracious hospitality and welcome extended to us each afternoon, and the benefit derived by the increased attendance secured by holding our class in a building so centrally located and so well adapted to our purpose.

"Resolved, That we express to Mrs. Spillman, the efficient each of our mission study class, our grateful acknowledgement of her unbounded enthusiasm, thorough preparation, and careful presentation of the subject for study.

"That we assure her of our appreciation of the great amount of time and work she has given to its presentation and arrangement of attractive and instructive programs, posters, and charts.

"That we assure her of our deep sense of obligation in giving to others, through organized mission study classes in our respective congregations, some of the interesting and vital information she has given to us, that the Master's Kingdom may be advanced in all lands, especially in that land on which our thoughts have been centered this week of study—The Island Empire of the East—Japan.

"Resolved, That we express our thanks to all those who have given time and talent to the preparation of those special features on the program for each day, which have added so much to their interest.

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be given to Mrs. Spillman, sent to the Charlotte Press, and inserted in the minutes of this body.

"Respectfully submitted,

"Mrs. J. L. Crigler,

"Mrs. W. W. Hagood,

"Miss Eva Liddell."

YOUNG PEOPLE'S DEPARTMENT

(Conducted under the auspices of Synod's Committee of Sunday Schools and Young People's Work, in the interest of Sunday Schools and Young People's Societies)

W. ARNETT GAMBLE, JR., Editor

ADDRESS ALL COMMUNICATIONS TO THE DEPARTMENT EDITOR, COLUMBIA SEMINARY, COLUMBIA, S. C.

EDITOR'S LOOKOUT

We give especial attention this week to news and plans of interest in connection with Junior Society activities. It is a pleasure to tell from time to time, what work is being done for our boys and girls. To one who has done even a little work with the Juniors, such activities are of considerable interest. We feel sure that nearly all, if not quite all, of our Junior superintendents count their service with the boys and girls a priceless training and an indescribable pleasure.

Member of the Senior Society, or young man or young woman in the Church not identified with any young people's work, do you want to avail yourself of a splendid opportunity? Ask permission and organize the boys and girls. You will enjoy it and will do a fine service to your church, the boys and girls, and yourself. Do you say you don't know how? You can learn! If you love Jesus Christ and have a heart for the little folks, you can get the equipment you need. Write to us for information. Pray over the prospect; ask for strength and guidance from above; do something yourself; get started soon; strive for ever higher standards; and you will have a joyous, useful service.

What are you doing, reader, in the Presbyterian Standard subscription campaign? Are you getting ready for the drive October 4th-November 11th? Why not earn some money for yourself or your class or society, and help put the Standard in every Presbyterian home? Write to the Standard, in Charlotte, at once for particulars. No more generous offer will come your way in many a day.

Mr. C. T. Carr is holding in North Carolina a series of Training Schools for Sunday School Workers. The remaining ones are to be held in Lincolnton, Oct. 15-19; New Bern, October 28-November 2; Charlotte, November 4-9; Winston-Salem, November 11-16; Greensboro, November 18-23, and Albemarle. These schools are well taught and should have the support of our Sunday School workers in each city.

REVIEW: GREAT MEN AND WOMEN OF THE NEW TESTAMENT

Selection for Reading: Hebrews 11:13-16, 39, 40

GOLDEN TEXT—"Wherefore seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us." Heb. 12:1.

SCRIPTURE LESSON

13. These all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth.

14. For they that say such things, declare plainly that they seek a country.

15. And truly if they had been mindful of that country from whence they came out, they might have had opportunity to have returned.

16. But now they desire a better country, that is, an heavenly: whereof God is not ashamed to be called their God; for he hath prepared for them a city.

39. And these all, having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise:

40. God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect.

SHORTER CATECHISM

Q. 56. What is the reason annexed to the third commandment?

A. The reason annexed to the third commandment is, that however the breakers of this commandment may escape punishment from men, yet the Lord our God will not suffer them to escape his righteous judgment.

It is beneficial to study the biography of distinguished persons. Their lives are usually connected with notable events in the history of mankind, which it is desirable for us to know. Their virtues stimulate us to imitation and improve our characters. Their failures and vices give us warning and may help us to avoid them. The biographies of the scriptures are more accurate and complete than those written by uninspired men. They mention the faults and sins as well as the excellencies of the persons described. We will contemplate some distinguished men and women of the New Testament, referred to in the lessons of the third quarter. We will consider them in groups.

I. John the Baptist, Simon Peter, John the Apostle

John the Baptist, who baptized those professing repentance, was the herald of Messiah. He was predicted by Isaiah and Malachi. He preached repentance, rebuked iniquity and reformed the morals of his people. He consecrated Christ to His redeeming work and pointed Him out as the Saviour to the Jews and mankind. Christ declares that he was the "greatest among those born of women." He was great in his gifts, his functions and his deeds. He died as a martyr for his faith and fidelity to duty.

Simon Peter was courageous and bold and yet yielded to cowardice and from fear of man thrice denied his Master. He declared Jesus to be "the Christ, the Son of the living God." He was restored to faith and office and ever afterwards was devoted to his Master.

John the Apostle wrote his gospel to prove that Jesus was God. His love for Jesus was supreme. He was with Him in Gethsemane, stood by Him before the Sanhedrim, and was present at the cross. He had committed to him Jesus' mother, and closed the scriptures with "Revelation."

II. Matthew, Stephen, Barnabas

Matthew was a custom house collector; followed Jesus at His call; wrote his gospel to prove that Jesus was Messiah; and recorded the fulfillment of many prophecies.

Stephen the martyr was stoned to death by a mob for reproving the sins of his people and declaring that he saw Jesus alive at the right hand of God. He expired praying for his murderers.

Barnabas' name meant "Son of Consolation," and he brought comfort to many hearts. He was Paul's companion in their first missionary tour. He set the example for the church at Jerusalem of selling his property to help his brethren.

III. Paul, John Mark, Luke, Timothy

Paul, educated at Tarsus and Jerusalem, the most cultured of the apostles, converted on the way to Damascus, selected by the Holy Ghost with Barnabas for mission work, wrote the larger number of the New Testament books, "labored more abundantly than all the rest of the apostles, and died a martyr's death."

John Mark, the nephew of Barnabas, went with Paul and his uncle, on their first tour, but deserted them by the way. Paul refused to take him on a second tour, repented and reformed, wrote the Gospel of Mark and became a useful minister.

Luke, a beloved physician, wrote the Gospel of Luke, and Acts. Companion of Paul, when active and in prison, and faithful during life.

Timothy was from Lystra, had pious mother and grandmother. Paul his spiritual father in the ministry, and wrote him two epistles. Paul was tenderly attached to him and attests his faithful service.

IV. Four Eminent Women. Mary, the Mother of Jesus

Mary, the Mother of Jesus. She was highly favored in being of the seed of David, and chosen to give Christ to the world. She possessed strong faith in God's promise and power, and great meekness or submission to the Divine will, and constant thoughtfulness respecting her Son.

Mary Magdalene derived her name from Magdala, had been a demoniac out of whom Jesus cast seven demons; though afflicted was not a vicious woman; showed tender love for Jesus; ministered to Him of her substance, and was the first to see Him after His resurrection.

Martha was the older sister of Lazarus, lived at Bethany, and often entertained Jesus. She was a practical, capable housekeeper and actively engaged in household duties. She probably allowed them to absorb too much of her time and did not attend sufficiently to the "one thing needful." But she trusted Jesus, loved Him and desired to serve Him.

Mary of Bethany. She was contemplative in mind and gave piety the highest place. "She sat at Jesus' feet and heard His words." She loved Him and His religion supremely. She chose it as her chief portion. She showed it by attending to His teachings and by anointing His person with costly ointment. She won His approval.

W., Oct. 3—Points to Christ: John 5:39.

S., Oct. 6—Keep the Word: Rev. 3:7-13.

Sun., Oct. 7—Topic: Lessons from the Psalms. 10. The Word-of-God Psalm. Ps. 119:9-16, 105. (Consecration meeting.)

Psalm 119 is the longest Psalm and the longest chapter in the Bible. It was written to the praise of God's Word, and is intended to encourage Bible study, with the hope that we shall obey its precepts, and learn to admire and honor God. Our prayer as we study his Psalm should be verse 18: Open thou mine eyes that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law.

The Structure of the 110th Psalm

The 119th Psalm has 176 verses. It is divided into 22 parts of eight verses each. Each part is named by one of the 22 letters of the Hebrew alphabet. All the verses, except verses 90, 122, and 132, have some word in them that means God's Word, such as statutes, law, testimonies, judgments, and so forth. Thus by repeating the names for the Bible we are impressed with its greatness and value.

The Practical Value of the Bible

Paul in writing to Timothy (II Tim. 3:16, 17) says that "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, and for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto every good work. The Bible teaches us the way to live and prepares us for death and the life beyond the grave.

The Bible Teaches us True Doctrine

The Word of God teaches us doctrines or great truths and principles. In verses 93, 99, and 100, the Psalmist shows us that we learn more from the Bible than all other books put together. The Bible teaches us of God, man, sin, righteousness, duty, death, judgment, Satan, and many other doctrines which are all important for us to know.

The Bible Teaches us Reproof for Sin

We are sinful creatures, and it is our nature to love sin and to commit it. God gave us each a conscience to reprove us for sin, but it is necessary for the Bible to show our consciences what things are right and what are wrong. Verse 9 says: Wherewithal shall a young man cleanse his way? By taking heed thereto according to thy word. God's Word points out sins, such as lying, swearing, stealing, impurity, disobedience to parents, and so on.

The Bible Teaches Correction of Sin

The Bible not only shows what sin is, but tells us how to get rid of sin. In verse 59 we are told that reflection or thinking about the sinfulness of sin, will lead us to do right. Again, we are commanded to repent of our sins and to forsake them. Again, the Bible says that Christ's blood saves us from sin, and the Holy Spirit will cleanse us from evil. It tells us God afflicts for our sins. Read verse 67.

The Bible Instructs in Righteousness

It is not enough to know what sin is, or to be corrected for it, but we must have the way of righteousness and truth pointed out to us. This God's Word does. Read verses 128 and 165. Thus we know what God wants us to do.

Ways of Studying the Bible

We should read the Bible through. It has 1,189 chapters. By reading three chapters each week day and five on Sabbaths we can read it through in one year. We should learn the divisions of the Bible, as the Old and New Testaments. The Old is divided into the Pentateuch (five books), the Historical (12 books), Poetical (five books), Major Prophets (five books), and Minor Prophets (12 books). The New Testament has the Historical (five books), Paul's Epistles (14 books), General Epistles (seven books), and the Revelation. We should know the Bible by periods. Creation to Flood, Patriarchal Period, Mosaic Period, Period of Conquest of Canaan, Period of the Judges, Period of the Kings, Period of the Captivity and Return. This divides the Old Testament. The New Testament has two periods, the Period of Christ on Earth, and the Period of the Early Church. The Bible can be studied by characters, from Adam, Noah, Abraham, Moses, Joshua, David, and so on. The Bible can be studied by doctrines, as God, Creation, Providence, Sin, and Salvation, and many other doctrines. Let us study God's Word and lay up its truths in our

"BRIDGE WHIST" AS A MEANS OF GRACE

From the bulletin of the First Church, Asheville, N. C., we clip the following request:

Bridge Whist

The pastor wishes to make a study of bridge whist, not in order to learn the game, but to get, from those who play, an honest statement of the reaction on themselves of this popular game of cards.

What effect has it had on your domestic life, as wife, mother, and housekeeper? How has it affected your health, your nerves, and your temper? What influence has it had on your religious life, on your interest and activity in spiritual things? Has it made you more prayerful, or less so? Has your interest in the Bible as the Word of God, and in the Church as the House of God, been quickened or dulled? On the whole, do you consider the game conducive to a well-ordered home-life, to personal poise, and to spiritual growth, or the reverse?

Those who play, or who, for one reason or another, have given up the game, will confer a great favor if they will answer these questions, pro and con. You may sign your name or not, as you choose. The pastor wants your honest opinion, whatever it may be. Drop your communication through the letter-slot in the Study door or send it through the mail. Get your friends to do the same.

BARIUM SPRINGS

During the week Mr. Johnston attended the meeting of the North Carolina Orphanage Association at Raleigh and took with him Miss Mary Lea, supervisor of the clothing department and three senior girls, Louise Kelly, Irene McDade, and Anne Faysoux Johnston.

In addition to attending the meeting of the association, visits were made to Children's Home, Winston-Salem; The Methodist Orphanage, Raleigh; Elon Christian Orphanage and the Baptist Orphanage at Thomasville. Stops were made also in Durham and Greensboro, making all in all a rather full two and a half day trip.

Our football team while not exactly winning any games yet is commencing to give the other teams a pretty hard tussle. Statesville High trimmed us about 40 to 12, and Mooresville 24 to nothing. After the latter game a report was circulated that one of our boys had died from the effects of the game and so persistently did this rumor grow that some people came up from Mooresville to actually see the boy cutting corn in the field the next day before they were convinced of their error.

The Christian Endeavor continues to grow both in size and popularity and the organization of the Juniors is under way; they are all looking forward minds and its precepts in our hearts. As Psalm 119:11 declares, Thy word have I hid in mine heart that I might not sin against thee.

WORTHWHILE NEWS AND NOTES

The story of the graduation exercises of the Tenth Avenue Junior Endeavorers, of Charlotte, N. C., has been told in our paper. The paper has been furnished a copy of the program of the graduation meeting of this society. After an opening song, short prayers were offered by the graduates. The 13th chapter of I Corinthians was read by the girls, and the 1st Psalm and the 12th chapter of Romans were read by the boys. The graduating class recited the 24th Psalm and then the names of the books of the Bible. A three-minute talk, "Which Is the Most Important Committee, and Why," was given by Violet Dunn, and another three-minute talk, "Which Is the Most Important Officer in the Junior C. E. Society," by John Boyd. A display of scrapbooks and the showing of the "String of Pearls" for each graduate, were followed by a song and the presentation of diplomas by the pastor, Rev. J. F. Ligon, then the memory song by the graduating class.

Those graduating were: Helen Boyd, John Boyd; Violet Dunn, Ruth Ellis, Ruth Johnson, Catherine Mitchell, Melba Ridenhour, and Frank Vest.

Miss Merle Mayhew, superintendent of the Junior C. E. Society, Glenwood (N. C.) Presbyterian Church, reports that five Juniors and her two assistant superintendents have completed the First Year's Graded Memory Work. The Juniors are: Elsie Shannon, Harry Mitchell, John Mayhew, Susie Hogshead, and Wilbur Hodgkin, the latter two being members of the Junior committee.

Seven Junior Endeavorers of the Rowland (N. C.) Presbyterian Church have completed the First Year's Graded Memory Work, which entitles them to be placed on the Dixie C. E. Honor Roll. This is a young society and, therefore, the members and the superintendent, Miss Margaret McQueen, deserve particular credit for this energetic and effective work. The Juniors are: Bessie Bracey, Mary Stuart McCallum, Alice McLaurin, Locklin McLaurin, Jean McLaurin, Louise McNeil, and Sara Faircloth.

to the treat promised them by Dr. Frazer of Queens when he comes to give them a lecture Friday night next.

The swimming pool is beginning to lose some of its attraction and it will soon be in the discard till next spring. Out-door athletics are the order of the day now, but there is already talk of the activities that we will take up when the weather shuts us in more or less for the winter. A singing week, something like the all-day sings is being discussed and we are commencing to look around for some of the old-time masters at this sort of thing for chief instructor. Just before or just after the holidays will be about the time.

NORTH CAROLINA

Orange Presbytery will meet in regular session on Tuesday, October 23, 1923, at 2 o'clock p. m. in the Little River Presbyterian Church in Orange County. Stated Clerk.

Galatia announces a home-coming, October 5th. All former members and friends who are scattered abroad are invited and urged to be present on this happy day. It will encourage the old mother church to have you back, and it will give you an opportunity to renew the associations and friendships of former years. Appropriate services will be conducted at 11 a. m. The old hymns will be sung and there will be a sermon by Rev. M. A. Ray, of Jonesboro.

Parkton—We have just closed a successful revival service at the Rex Presbyterian Church. Rev. Wm. Black, the Synod's evangelist, assisted the pastor in these services. Brother Black came to us on the second of September, and remained through the ninth, preaching twice each day. He is well-known and loved through this entire section. The congregations were large and toward the close of the meeting there was an overflow. The gospel was preached with power, and proved a blessing to those who heeded it. Thirteen united with our church on a profession of faith.

V. G. Smith, Pastor.

Union Church—Rev. J. G. Garth was with Rev. J. E. Berryhill last week at Union Church, Gaston County, in the county-wide campaign. This is a fine congregation with a splendid modern building, and beautiful grounds. For 29 years it was served by Rev. Geo. A. Sparrow, whose hallowed memory abides.

Mr. Berryhill and his excellent wife have been on the field for a year and are greatly beloved and doing an excellent work. The meeting last week was well attended and deep interest was manifested. There were several additions to the church. Mr. Garth preached a series of sermons on John 3:16.

Greensboro, Buffalo Church—A congregational meeting was held, as ordered by our session, at the close of the morning service Sunday, September 16th, at which time a committee of nine was appointed to look for a new pastor and report back to a later meeting of the congregation. This committee met immediately and W. G. Wharton was elected chairman. At a meeting held early in July the congregation voted to join with our former pastor, Rev. E. Frank Lee, in asking Orange Presbytery to dissolve the pastoral relations effective September 1st, which will be acted upon at an early meeting of Presbytery.

Notice! The Synod of North Carolina will convene Tuesday, October 9th, at 8 p. m., and be entertained by both the Graham and Burlington churches. The first session or opening meeting will be held in the First Presbyterian Church, of Burlington.

All who expect to attend the meeting of the Synod are requested to go to Burlington and not Graham, on Tuesday, October 9th. This applies to Tuesday only, as the Synod will be shifted to Graham, Wednesday, the second day. Burlington, however, will be registration headquarters where our guests will be assigned homes by the joint committee on entertainment from the two churches. Supper will be served at the new hut in Burlington on Tuesday evening from 6 to 8 o'clock for the convenience of the members of Synod, who are urged to reach Burlington as soon as possible Tuesday afternoon.

Wm. R. Potter, Pastor.

The Salisbury Standard Training School for Sunday School Workers—During the week of September 10-14 the First and Second Presbyterian Churches of Salisbury and the Spencer Presbyterian Church held a Standard Teachers' Training School for their officers and teachers. There was an enrollment of 53, while quite a larger number attended various sessions of the school. There were 33 who received certificates of credit on the courses.

The following courses were offered: "Sunday School Organization and Administration" taught by Dr. G. F. Bell, pastor of the Caldwell Memorial Presbyterian Church, Charlotte, N. C.; "Primary Organization and Administration," taught by Mrs. W. C. Edmondson, author of our Primary Graded Lessons, Richmond, Va.; "The Teacher" taught by Mr. Claude T. Carr, superintendent of Sunday School and Young People's Work of the Synod of North Carolina.

An unusually fine spirit and interest were manifested by those taking the courses. The work in each department was of a very high order and will be beneficial to every one who attended. Our church is to be commended for carrying on work of such great helpfulness, the results of which are so far-reaching. It is answering a great need in many Sunday Schools in training consecrated leaders and teachers.

At the conclusion of the school the following resolutions were adopted:

We, the pupils of the Salisbury-Spencer Training School for Sunday School Workers, wishing to express our appreciation for the work done in our midst by Mr. C. T. Carr, Dr. G. F. Bell, and Mrs. W. C. Edmondson, do hereby resolve:

1. That the work done in each department has been of a high order and that it will redound to the glory of God in making our Sunday School more efficient.

2. That we express our personal appreciation to each of these leaders and pray for their continued usefulness in this great work.

Wilmington Presbytery—Rev. J. S. Crowley has received a unanimous call from the Beulah and Bethel Presbyterian Churches, in Harmony Presbytery, and has been to visit the fields and look over the needs. These churches have been without a pastor for one whole year and are hungry for the Gospel. Exceedingly large congregations greeted Mr. Crowley at both churches and were very enthusiastic in expressing to him their desire to have him as their minister.

Mr. Crowley has accepted the call from these churches, subject, of course, to the will of Presbytery.

Mr. Crowley preached his farewell sermons at his last appointment at the Topsail Presbyterian Church, which he has served for the last seven years. These good people feel very badly over having to give up Mr. Crowley who has served them as pastor so many years.

Mr. Crowley's address will be Olanta, S. C., after October 1st. This group of churches has a splendid manse of the bungalow type and the good people are going to put water and electric lights in it, which will make it as convenient and comfortable as if it were in the city. Mr. Crowley feels that his lot is to be cast in pleasant places.

Cor.

Flat Branch—This church and community has just been through a season of great refreshing and confirming of faith in the fact that the "Gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." Rev. Letcher Smith preached the Gospel for a week with simplicity and power, the outward result of which was thirteen united with the church, and some of these heads of families. The entire church and community received a great blessing.

We are gratified with the way the work here at this old church is making progress since our coming here the first of February. The Sunday School has grown from about 15 to 86. All of the teachers are overcrowded and new members are coming in each Sunday. A Christian Endeavor Society has been organized with 50 charter members, the attendance at each meeting is between 75 and 100.

The young people are intensely interested, and always ready to take part in the program, the only trouble being we can't get them on fast enough.

Our Sunday School picnic was a great success and has stimulated more interest in the work of the Sunday School. Our singing in the church, Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Society has been greatly improved as a result of the singing class which lasted for a week. Now we are looking forward to Rally Day, and also to a live Christmas program. For all which we give God the glory.

F. M. Bain, Pastor.

Wilmington Presbytery—Evangelistic and Home Mission Notes—Pink Hill—Rev. Leonard Gill, Synod's evangelist, conducted a very successful meeting during June at Pink Hill, in Lenoir County. There were six additions to the Presbyterian Church and three to the Methodist Church. Our church has no building at Pink Hill, and we have been using a union building along with the Methodists, Unitarians and Universalists. The congregation is ready now to build its own church if they can get some help. Rev. H. N. McDiarmid, of Kinston, in Albemarle Presbytery is supplying this church for us.

Rev. J. J. Murray, superintendent of Home Missions and evangelist has been engaged in seven meetings during the summer:

At Acme, with Rev. J. K. Fleming, in April. There was a good deal of interest, with congregations that filled the church, and the whole community was reached. There were 40 reconsecrations; 17 members were received into the Presbyterian Church on profession and five by letter; and 11 joined the neighboring Baptist Church on the last day of the meeting. The success was largely due to the faithful work of the pastor before and during the meeting.

At Woodburn, in Brunswick County, on the Wilmington-Charlotte highway, in May. This is an outpost Sunday School point of the First Presbyterian Church of Wilmington. The meeting was held in a home where the Sunday School has been conducted for some time. There were 22 reconsecrations and 11 were received on profession and statement. The Wilmington Church has almost completed a building for this work and we hope to have an organized church there soon. Dr. L. E. Farthing, of Wilmington, has been the leader of this work.

At Bladenboro, with Rev. J. E. L. Winecoff, in May. Our church is small but the community was interested and the attendance good. There were 24 reconsecrations, two were received on profession and three by letter.

At Rockfish, with Rev. W. P. M. Currie, in July. The meeting began with a full church on a Monday morning, and the interest continued. There were 72 reconsecrations, seven members received on profession and one by letter. This church, over 100 years old, is increasing in activity, especially in the Sunday School work, and plans are being made for a new Sunday School building or church.

At Garland, in July, where Rev. R. E. McClure was a preaching point. We held the meeting in the Baptist Church and were met with a cordial welcome and splendid congregations. There were 35 reconsecrations and one profession, a man who gave his name for the Methodist Church.

At Muddy Creek, with Rev. J. M. McBryde, in August. This is an outpost point of Chinquapin Church in Duplin County. The school-house was too small, and the meeting was held in the open from the start. New seats had to be made several times and the closing night the congregation numbered close to 500. That night 20 men and women and young people stood up to be baptised by the pastor, and 32 in all were received. Rev. E. G. Lilly, Larus Fellow at Union Seminary, did a good work at this point during the summer. Plans have been made for building a chapel here this winter.

At Wildwood, in Carteret County, in September, with Rev. J. R. Phipps. There were 31 reconsecrations and five members received on profession. On the afternoon of the closing Sunday the evangelist and the pastor, with some of the members, went across Bogue Sound in a boat and held a service at the village of Salterpath over on the Banks. This is an isolated village of fishing people. We used the little Northern Methodist Church. As far as we could learn, this was the first Presbyterian service ever held at this place.

During the summer five buildings have been under construction in the Presbytery. The old Beth Church has been torn down and replaced with an attractive new building. The Croatan Church, in Waven County has been completely remodelled on the interior. A chapel has been built by the Whiteville Church for their Sunday School at the Harrelson outpost. A chapel is being built for the Sunday School at Six Forks in the Hopewell congregation. And the building referred to above at Woodburn is almost finished.

This Presbytery has always been very fortunate in its selection of summer student workers, and we have been much pleased with the four men we have had this summer: Mr. E. G. Lilly in the Chinquapin field, where we had the first country Daily Vacation Bible School ever held in the Presbytery; Mr. Chester Alexander in the Black River group; Mr. L. B. Schenck at Castle Hayne and Rocky Point; and Mr. James Carr at Tabor. The first three men came from Union Seminary; the last is one of our own candidates, from Burgaw, and is now at Davidson College.

We have opened a new field in Onslow County and have been fortunate in securing Rev. W. M. Curcie as county evangelist. He began his work in June, and in addition to serving as pastor of Jacksonville and Maple Hill churches has already opened up some needy and promising points.

J. J. Murray.

SOUTH CAROLINA

Old Antioch—This church has just passed through an interesting series of meetings, September 10-16, in which Rev. C. O'N. Martindale, pastor, was assisted by Rev. J. G. Walker, of Greenville Third Church. The messages were clear, earnest, and appealing; the singing with the new emphasis put upon it by the Juniors was excellent; and the attendance very good. There were five additions on profession. To God be the praise. A good purse was made up for Mr. Walker in appreciation of his work. The Laymen's Association, the Woman's Auxiliary, and the Endeavor Societies enter on the fall work with zest.

Blacksburg—Recently, our Church has had the privilege of an eight-day Bible Conference, with Rev. Robert C. McQuilkin, Dean of the Columbia (S. C.) Bible School, as leader. He spoke twice daily during the eight days, opening the Scriptures in a wonderfully simple and convincing way. He believes that our Saviour saves from sin, and that since Paul, with Christ living in him, was enabled to live "holily and justly and unblameably" at Thessalonica, and to be "pure from the blood of all men" at Ephesus, so Christians today, under the same manifestation of resurrection life of Christ, may "walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing," "seeing He ever liveth to make intercession for them." The last night of the conference almost filled the Baptist Church—the largest auditorium in town—and upon Mr. McQuilkin's invitation, 40 or 50 men, women, and young people crowded the area around the pulpit to testify in that way to the value of the conference to them. It was not those who had gotten a blessing, but those who had gotten the Blessing who were asked to come forward—either as having found the Saviour for the first time during the eight days or as having received Him in a new way as their Good Shepherd, as the Supplier of all their needs.

Some members of the Billy Sunday Evangelistic Club of Spartanburg, S. C., came to Blacksburg on two successive Sunday afternoons, and made their testimony to what the Saviour was to them, and to the joy they find in doing evangelistic service for Him. On the second trip, an evangelistic club of about 20 members was organized here, with S. R. Fry, Presbyterian, president, Hughes Moorhead, Baptist, vice-president, and Tom Peck, Methodist, secretary. May the Lord of the Harvest continue to thrust forth and to use these laymen's clubs to carry the Good News to needy and, at present, often neglected places!

Congaree Presbytery met in the First Presbyterian Church of Columbia on Tuesday, September 18th, at a meeting called by the moderator, to receive two sons of the old First Church under the care of Presbytery.

Messrs. James Woodrow Clark and W. S. Scott were present, and after examination were taken under the care of Presbytery. Mr. Scott has entered Columbia Seminary to prepare himself for the ministry, and Mr. Clark will enter the Medical School of the University of Pennsylvania for his preparation for medical work in the foreign field. Mr. Scott is a graduate of the Presbyterian College of South Carolina, at Clinton, S. C., and has in his work in college given evidence of ability that promises useful and effective service for the church. Mr. Clark is a first honor man of Davidson College, of the class of 1918. He then entered West Point, and after graduation was commissioned as first lieutenant in the Engineers of the United States Army. Having become convinced that he was called to the service of the Master, he retired from the army and now volunteers for foreign service as a medical missionary. To answer this call, he gives up his desirable position, comfortable financial remuneration, and a splendid field for the development of his unusual talents and ability. He feels, however, that the position that he seeks is a far higher one, and the field that he is to enter, a far greater one for service.

Rev. George H. Atkinson, another son of the First Church, was received into Congaree Presbytery from Mecklenburg Presbytery after examination.

Columbia Seminary has opened with a fine enrollment, and the prospect of the best year of service is before this great institution.

APPALACHIA

ARKANSAS

Camden First—On last Sunday morning nine new members were received into the membership of this church. On the first Sunday of September the pastor, Rev. Charles Haddon Nabers, preached a special sermon to the young people of the church who went off to college this fall. Representatives of the congregation will be in the following colleges: Austin Theological Seminary, University of California, Watern Military Institute, Lindenwood College, Cumberland University, Hendrix College, University of Arkansas, Ouachita College, Kid-Kee College, and Johns Hopkins University.

FLORIDA

The Presbytery of Florida stands adjourned to meet at DeFuniak Springs, Fla., on Friday, November 16, 1923, at 7:30 p. m.

Glendale Church—On September 16, 1923, the official force of this church was strengthened by the ordination and installation of two new officers: Mr. L. E. Casey, who was made an elder, and Mr. T. E. Wilkerson, who was made a deacon.

GEORGIA

Columbus—Rev. A. G. Harris, assistant pastor of the First Church has accepted a call to the church at Seneca, S. C. He has rendered faithful and efficient service here as teacher of the men's Bible class and pastor of one of our mission churches. He is a young man of splendid ability and a host of friends follow him with their prayers for a successful pastorate and fruitful ministry.

Some time in the early summer a Sabbath School for colored people was started by a few members of the First Church, and as one result of the work done, a petition, signed by some of the most substantial negroes in the city will be presented to Macon Presbytery, at its next meeting, asking for the organization of a colored Presbyterian Church here.

Commerce—During Rev. J. D. McPhail's visit to relatives, friends and former parishioners in this place while on his summer vacation, he filled his former pulpit in the Presbyterian Church of this place, on last third Sunday to the delight of his numerous Commerce friends. He preached on the subject of "Reddigging the Wells," his text being Genesis 26:8.

Mr. McPhail served our church as pastor for many years, and was one of the most universally beloved and highly esteemed ministers and men of God who has ever occupied this position. It was indeed a rare treat to his host of friends among all denominations in Commerce as well as to his former parishioners to once more have an opportunity of hearing this devout, Christian minister expound the Word of God, and it is sincerely to be hoped that his life will be prolonged for many, many years of continued usefulness in Christ's cause.

KENTUCKY

Lebanon—Rev. Joseph Hagins, Synodical evangelist of our Church, recently closed a splendid meeting at the Lebanon Church. This is an old country church in Boone County and they have not had regular preaching for a long time. The meeting resulted in several additions to the Church, three of them on profession of faith. The attendance upon the services was large and increased nightly. There is a Sunday School at this place and Mr. E. C. Fritz, a student of Lane Seminary, Cincinnati, has been preaching here once a month. Mr. Hagins' preaching was of a high order, scriptural and evangelistic. At the close of the services, arrangements were made to have preaching at this church every Sabbath. This service will be conducted by a young school teacher from Crittenden. Mr. Fritz also has charge of the work at Crittenden and Crescent Springs. All of these fields are in the Ebenezer Presbytery.

Nonesuch—Mr. Hagins closed a meeting at Nonesuch in Woodford County, West Lexington Presbytery, on Wednesday night, September 19th, which resulted in ten additions to the church, five of them on profession of faith. The attendance at this old country church ranged from 100 to 225, and the meeting was considered about the best held here in recent years. The pastor of the field, Rev. C. G. Lynch, was associated with Mr. Hagins in the meeting and gave splendid service all the time. Mr. Thomas B. Talbot, Sunday School missionary, attended this meeting two or three times and spoke on the work of the Sabbath School. Much interest is being manifested in the work at Nonesuch and all feel that this country field will be one of our best country churches in a little while.

Canyon Falls—Rev. W. J. Gammon, of Troy, closed a meeting at this place on Sunday, September 9th. There were 12 additions to the church, most of them on profession of faith. This field is in charge of Mr. D. T. Brandenburg, and the General Assembly has a school here. Most of the additions came from the Sunday School. Mr. Brandenburg has done a splendid work at Canyon Falls and St. Helens and goes this fall to attend the seminary at Louisville. Mr. Gammon did splendid service and the people were pleased with his preaching. Canyon Falls has really taken on new life in church work and the outlook of the field is very promising.

MISSOURI

The Presbytery of St. Louis met in the Overland Church, St. Louis County, Mo., on the evening of September 18th.

Opening sermon by Rev. C. Y. Ycargan, of Troy. Officers, Rev. J. H. Rosenberg, moderator; Rev. J. J. Squire, temporary clerk. Present, 11 ministers and 13 elders.

The Home Mission report showed four vacant fields, some of them of great promise. Other Home Mission fields made excellent reports of their progress.

A great deal of interest was manifested in church extension in the city of St. Louis, and plans were begun for securing a new location for the Church of the Open Door, one of our prosperous new churches.

A committee was appointed to prepare for a Bible rally, in the interest of the orthodox faith in the Bible as the Word of God—to be held in the largest building available, with one of the most prominent speakers in the country.

Reports from the churches showed an encouraging condition in the Presbytery.

Next meeting, Troy, Mo., preceded by an evangelistic conference in the afternoon.

VIRGINIA

Newport News—We are very happy to report from this City by the Sea that the Bible has now been introduced into the high school as a regular part of their curriculum. One hour is set apart each school day in the Newport News high school and in the Morrison High School for the study of God's Word. It is an elective part of the curriculum and units of credit are duly given to all those who stand the school examination on the subjects taught. Competent teachers are provided whose salary is paid through the Ministers' Association by the united churches of the city. This successful attainment has not been accomplished in a year but is the consummation of long cherished ideals quietly and steadily maintained and constantly kept to the front. The classes last year were taught only twice a week and had to meet after the close of school. With the beginning of this term the hour recurs daily and is within the regular school period as well as in the school building.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Central Church of Washington—On Friday, September 14th, our pastor emeritus, Rev. Dr. A. W. Pitzer, now living in Salem, Va., reached his 89th year. He organized this church with 29 members, May 31, 1868, and has thus been in connection with it for over 55 years; as active pastor for nearly 38 years, May 31, 1868 to April 18, 1906, and as pastor emeritus since the last date. His people remember him with gratitude, affection, and honor, and give special evidence of this on his birthdays. At the prayer meeting Thursday night, September 13th, 43 postal cards were written to him and mailed at once. Yesterday morning (Sunday, September 16th) Rev. Dr. Jas. H. Taylor read from the pulpit a message from Dr. Pitzer saying that nearly 100 telegrams, letters, cards, and postals had been received, besides other tokens of remembrance. "It is impossible to answer. Do thank the people for me."

This congregation has contributed about $250 for Japanese relief. This sum includes a generous contribution from the Sunday School.

Educational

The PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD through the Central Bureau of Publicity for Presbyterian Schools and Colleges has recently invited all the church institutions to make a greater use of the Educational Page. The invitation has met with a prompt response on the part of our church schools and colleges and we are glad to welcome them to our columns. Our church membership ought to have a better working knowledge of all of our schools and colleges throughout the South—our institutions on the other hand ought to keep their friends and supporters informed of what is going on and to this end the STANDARD is offering this special service in an effort to have Christian education emphasized through publicity.

Davidson—Dr. Edwin Mims, head of the department of English at Vanderbilt University, well-known lecturer and author and who has recently returned from a six months stay on the Pacific coast where as lecturer and man of letters he has been the guest of California universities, spoke here last evening in Shearer Hall before a large audience of students, faculty members and people from the town of Davidson and other points. His subject was the Fight for Idealism in the United States. The lecture was at once informational, noble in its appeal for the best in man, and tonic in its challenge to all forms of materialism that claims to see in man nothing higher than that which is possible for mere brute or animal life.

Rev. Dr. Egbert W. Smith filled Dr. Richard's pulpit Sunday morning. Before an audience of seven or eight hundred people the large majority of which was students he delivered his very striking address on A Visit to Africa and the Mission-field.

In the Y. M. C. A. reception given in the gymnasium the first of the week to the new men there was presented a very full and engaging program. Speeches of welcome were made by W. T. Jones, president of the association; J. P. Williams, general secretary, Coach Younger, and President Martin, each dealing with different phases of college activities and interests.

Queens College—Vesper services were held Sunday evening, led by Miss Annie Parks Moore, 1925, with the Misses Fannie Good, Mary Bankhead, and Alice Gibbon taking part in the musical program. A short drama representing the real purpose of the Y. W. C. A. was given by the Misses Rosa Mercer, Alice Gibbon, Irene Kennedy and Carmel Ferguson.

The first issue of the Queens Blues, the student publication will appear on Saturday, September 29th under the editorship of Miss Annie Parks Moore.

Gymnasium and swimming classes were organized last week under the supervision of Miss Margaret McClure. The use of the Y. W. C. A. pool has been tendered the students of Queens.

Misses Marjorie and Mattie Neal McLeod, Beulah Holmes, Meme Hampton, Lois Rogers and Winnie Frazer attended the Freshman reception at Davidson College on Monday.

Agnes Scott—The 35th session of Agnes Scott College began on September 12th with 480 students and 55 officers and teachers in attendance. The students number about 40 more than in any previous year on account of the use of two additional houses for increasing the capacity of the college.

The devotional exercises of the opening day were in charge of Rev. J. W. Caldwell, Jr., D.D., pastor of the Westminster Presbyterian Church of Atlanta, and Dr. D. P. McGeachy, pastor of the Decatur Presbyterian Church. The keynote address was delivered by Dr. R. O. Flinn, pastor of North Avenue Presbyterian Church of Atlanta, on the "Power of Influence." This was a remarkably helpful and timely message. Inspirational remarks were also made by Mr. J. K. Orr, chairman of the Board of Trustees, Mrs. H. B. Wey, president of the Alumnae Association, and Dr. D. P. McGeachy.

President J. R. McCain is in active charge of the institution and is greatly pleased with the prospects for the year.

Montreat—On September 12th the Montreat Normal opened with an enrollment of 88 students. Buildings in addition to the regular dormitories will have to be used to accommodate the increased number.

In the absence of Dr. Anderson, Mr. A. R. Bauman presided and in a few well-chosen words, welcomed the student body, and introduced Miss Nannie G. Watkins, the principal, a graduate of Randolph-Macon Woman's College and of the Assembly's Training School in Richmond, Va.

The address of the day was delivered by Rev. C. R. Hemphill, D.D., a professor in the same seminary. It was characterized by rich illustration, genial humor and a vast vision of the possibilities of the future. A suggested motto, "the good enemy of the best" based on Philippians 3:13, 14, was set forth in a stirring appeal that will not soon be forgotten.

An arrangement of "The Lord is my Shepherd" sung by Miss Ruth Siler, with Mrs. Crosby Adams at the piano, was given with fine interpretation. The students of the Montreat Normal will have the great privilege of studying choral music under the direction of Mr. Crosby Adams.

Greenbrier College—It is not every day that a school becomes a college, but such an important step was taken on September 19th, when Lewisburg Seminary had its formal opening under the new name of Greenbrier College for Women. This school, about to begin its one hundred and twelfth session, has back of it a long life of service to young womanhood, and now that its standard has been raised, its opportunity for usefulness is enlarged.

Rev. D. A. Beery and Rev. L. M. Courtney, the local pastors, took part in the exercise and Mr. L. L. Bell, former member of the Board of Trustees, spoke a word of welcome to the new president, but the two principal addresses of the occasion were made by Mr. J. L. Bumgardner of Beckley, W. Va., and by Mr. J. Marion Moore, president of Greenbrier College. Mr. Bumgardner spoke on Christian Education—what it means and what the lack of it costs. Mr. Moore spoke of his ideal for the school—to make it a great college, one that can rank with the best in the country, and one that will be unsurpassed in the work of developing the highest type of Christian Womanhood. He called on the people of the community and the students to help him and his co-workers in this.

Greenbrier College has a splendid location in the mountains of West Virginia. The school is well filled this session, there is an able faculty and everything seems to promise a good year for the new college.

The Presbyterian College of South Carolina opened September 4th. The opening enrollment is 202, the largest in the history of the college. The work is well organized and everything points to a successful year.

Greenbrier Military School, Lewisburg, W. Va., opened September 13th with the largest enrollment in the history of the school. There were 200 at the opening and new cadets are being received each day. Practically all rooms are taken and indications are that this will be a fine session for the school.

The football squad was in training two weeks before school opened at Camp Greenbrier and are in good shape for the first game Saturday, September 22d. There were 46 boys that attended this camp. Greenbrier has a heavy schedule in football and the cadets are working hard.

Mitchell College and Academy opened for the 68th session on the 13th of September. On the following day a more formal opening was held at which several of the local pastors, the mayor of the city, and superintendent of the public schools made short addresses. The names of the faculty were announced, and their assignment of work. Several new members were present, but the larger part of the faculty is the same as last year. The grades have all been discontinued, and the work of the college is now organized on the strictly Junior College basis, viz., four years of standard high school work in the academy, and two years of standard college work. By reason of these changes the total enrollment is not quite so large as last year, but under the new plan of work we are confident the college is entering upon a new era of prosperity. On Saturday evening the "Y. W." gave a reception to the new students.

Peace Institute—The formal opening of Peace Institute was held Thursday, September 13, 1923, at 10:30 a. m. Rev. McC. White, president of the Board of trustees, conducted the devotional exercises and assured the girls of the hearty welcome the churches of the city are waiting to extend to them.

Miss Meribah Moore, director of the the voice department, sang "How Beautiful are Thy Dwellings". Miss McLelland welcomed the girls to Peace, speaking of the fine spirit of loyalty and devotion that has always characterized Peace girls.

The annual faculty-student reception was held Saturday evening, September 15th. The following faculty members taking part in the program: Mr. J. P. Brawley, head of music department; Miss Lovie Jones, Miss Vera Rountree, Miss Meribah Moore, Miss Miriam Evarts, head of the expression department, gave some delightful readings.

Following the musical numbers, an informal reception was held. Members of the trustees and their wives received with the faculty of the school. At the conclusion of the reception, group singing of the school songs was participated in.

Flora Macdonald College—Mrs. John Drake, Bennettsville, S. C., president of the South Carolina Federation of Women's Clubs has accepted the invitation of the General Alumnae Association of Flora Macdonald College to deliver the address on Founders Day, October 23d. Mrs. Drake is a graduate of Winthrop College and has been active in educational work in the state. Last year she made the race for the office of state superintendent of education in South Carolina and although defeated by a close margin created a fine impression during the campaign. Founders Day will be given over to the alumnae and representatives of 43 branch associations are expected to be present. There will be special exercises in the morning in the college auditorium followed by luncheon, business meeting, reception, a special program put on by the student body and a feature motion picture at night.

Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, Va.—The 112th year of the seminary began on Wednesday, September 26th. The opening exercises will be held in Schaeffler Hall at 8 p. m. Dr. Eugene C. Caldwell, professor of New Testament Interpretation, will make the address. The registration shows an increased attendance. As there was a capacity attendance last year, the largest, in fact, ever enrolled in any Southern Presbyterian seminary, the institution had to enlarge its accommodations this summer, adding three buildings to its plant. The students are drawn from 20 states and six foreign countries, and they represent 43 universities and colleges. Besides the large number of undergraduates there are this year two post-graduate students of distinction, Mr. J. Russell Woods of Tsing Kiang Pu, China, who won the Moses D. Hoge Fellowship and Mr. Edward G. Lilly, of Winston Salem, N. C., who won the Charles D. Larus Fellowship.

The six graduates of the seminary who sailed a few weeks ago for the Far East, Messrs. James E. Bear, of China; W. C. Cumming, of Wilmington, N. C.; C. Houston Patterson, of China; E. H. Hamilton, of Georgia; G. Raymond Womeldorf, of Virginia, and Robert Price Richardson, of Memphis, Tenn., arrived on the other side of the Pacific about the time of the great earthquake but suffered no harm.

News of the Week

Ambassador Woods, at Tokio, handed to Premier Yamamoto a certified check for $1,000,000 as the first large installment of the relief fund for Japanese earthquake sufferers collected by the American Red Cross.

Attorney General Daugherty advised President Coolidge that the Lasker-Farley plan for solving the merchant marine problem is not legal, thus once more throwing into the lap of government officials the task of formulating a shipping policy. Under the shipping act, the attorney general held, the government's vessels may be disposed of only for cash or credits.

N. C. Corporation Commissioner Allen J. Maxwell issued a statement declaring the financial report to Governor Morrison a "continuation of the farce of public accounting set up by Price, Waterhouse and Company," and made public a letter addressed to Auditor Durham and Treasurer Lacy requesting a balance sheet of revenue receipts and disbursements for the period January 1, 1923, to September 1, 1923.

A world conference to halt completion in aircraft building again was urged by Alvin Owsley, commander of the American Legion, in a statement which said that with conditions as they are "America must either work for peace or prepare for war."

While the other states of the union were reporting decreases in Federal tax collections averaging 18 per cent. North Carolina was reporting an increase of 15 per cent. Gilliam Grissom, the Tar Heel collector of internal revenue, pointed out in reporting supplemental figures on the state's contributions to Federal government revenues. Total collections in North Carolina for the last fiscal year were $140,000,000. Only five states exceeded that amount: New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Michigan, and Ohio.

President Coolidge and his cabinet have considered the farmer. They decided that the Southern cotton planter is in pretty good shape and needs no special attention. They were told by reports to the Department of Agriculture that he had some trouble with the boll weevil, but with a heavy crop and good prices he could weather the storms. The corn grower is also able to get on. So is the stock man. But the wheat producer is hard hit by big crops abroad and decreased demand for exports.

"Hands off" the reparations problem, for the moment at least, was the decision reached by one of the main commissions of the League of Nations. The decision, it is believed, will effect the entire attitude of the League Assembly on this problem. It was not reached without some murmurs.

Labor disturbances are the most serious obstacle to superabundant production of coal in the United States, the coal commission declared in a report to President Coolidge on the subject of "irregular operation and overdevelopment of the bituminous industry."

Chapel Hill is all agog with old and new students, more than 1,000 matriculated on the first day for registration, according to latest estimates. This breaks all records. Another thousand are expected.

New York went without its leading newspapers for the better part of 24 hours when a strike of 2,500 web pressmen prevented publication of a majority of the city's morning and evening dailies.

By a vote of four to three the South Carolina Railroad Commission voted its disapproval of the proposed lease of the Carolina, Clinchfield and Ohio railroad by the Atlantic Coast Line and the Louisville and Nashville railroads. By this vote the commission reverses itself on a former vote, by which it approved the proposed lease.

CHILDREN

THE TWINS' PRESENT

The twins could hardly wait to tell mother about the farm. Never had they been on one before—oh, why didn't the train go faster! The weeny little pigs almost like puppies, so clean that you could hug 'em, the lamb that had to be fed out of a bottle (Skeezix, they had called it) and best of all, Margaret, the big gray horse that had carried them so carefully and gently on her broad back. So much had they to tell and so eager, were they to tell it that quite naturally it should have popped out the very minute they set eyes on their mother.

And they thought it was going to. Hopping down from the big bus, they simply tore up the front walk and steps, nearly running into Aunt Elizabeth who opened the door.

"Where's mother?" Just like that they said it, both together, holding back their news; mother must hear it first.

Quick, with a wonderful smile, came Aunt Elizabeth's astonishing answer: "Upstairs with baby brother."

"Baby—baby brother!" Isabelle's face went quite blank; Annabelle's went blanker. They stared at Aunt Elizabeth as if she were some strange monster instead of something very good to look at—especially at this minute.

With eyes full of tenderness she caught the two girls in a quick squeeze then: "Run upstairs and see for yourselves," she said.

But they didn't run. No; timidly over the familiar red carpet of the stairway they walked step by step to meet this new and altogether startling state of affairs.

Yes, there was mother in the sunny bay window sitting in a low rocker, and on her lap—the twins gasped—yes, it was true!

From that minute on the twins poured questions out, and the mother, one arm about her newly recovered twins, the other about the new baby, did her best to slip answers in between their questions. The baby was nearly four weeks old, weighed nine pounds 2 1/2 ounces, scarcely cried at all and was called John after his father. "And look at that smile!"

Swiftly it came and more swiftly it left—a flash of a smile, one corner of the tiny mouth much higher than the other. But his twin sister had seen it. Not for an instant had their eyes left the tiny funny little face peeping out of the pink and white blanket. And if it needed anything to win them over, that did. Then in the bath when the wee, curled up hands actually splashed water on them and he gave his crooked little smile again, they fell head over heels in love with him and were quite willing to take a back seat and let this wonderful new baby rule. Even when they discovered that the room opening out of mother's, the room that had always been theirs, now belonged to the baby, they managed to smile. Sort of twisted smiles, something like the baby's, but still smiles. The room across the hall that used to be the spare room held their twin beds, their little rockers and Mother Goose table, and their big Noah's ark of toys. Everything was strange, unreal somehow.

But the twins woke up quite thoroughly when mother opened the drawers in the white enameled chiffonier in the baby's room and displayed all the presents brother had been given for coming into the world. Such dainty, snowy-white things with touches of pale blue or palest pink here and there—booties, sacks, dresses, coats, caps, the most beautiful soft eiderdown bathrobe, a pink silk munny-blanket robe for his buggy, even a fluted ribbon carriage strap with darling rosettes of pink, rattlers. Nothing indeed was missing. Aunts, grandmothers, cousins, friends, all had given something. But they, his only twin sisters, had given nothing. This thought sent them flying to their banks. Pennies, nickles, dimes, a few quarters, two big round half dollars. With the help of mother they counted them. Four dollars and ninety-nine cents exactly. Before mother could give them another penny they were off for the stores.

They would get baby brother something lovely with all that money, something different that he didn't have at all. Crossing Main street carefully, they soon entered the largest department store in town. Helped by a kind floor-walker, they found the right counter, but, alas, they had nothing new here. The obliging clerk brought out scores of beautiful things; other clerks came and helped—till the twins were surrounded on all sides with pink, white and blue fluffiness.

But no; the twins shook their heads and turned away. "We want something different that he hasn't got any of," they explained timidly. "Thank you lots anyhow," called back Annabelle. "Yes, lots," echoed Isabelle. And out they trotted to another store.

The same luck however followed them from store to store. Even in The Marguerite Baby Shop they found nothing different enough for twin sisters to give their only baby brother. The clock in the court-house tower struck 12. Time for lunch; they'd have to come back afterwards. Such a long line of autos to wait for, then a big yellow bus, then a street car before they could cross Main street. Now straight down Sixth street home.

But first—what was that crowd on the corner? A monkey? Pressing closer, they discovered, nestling against the dark coat of a shabby, comical, little man, a snow-white dog with a blue bow at its neck. And it was for sale. The very thing for baby brother. Boys loved dogs; of course they did. Why hadn't they thought of it before? And this was such a beautiful velvety white one.

Before they could say a word, though, a gray-haired lady lifted the velvety dog from the man's arms. Cuddling it against her cheeks, she exclaimed: "I'm just going to take it, anyway. If my husband doesn't like dogs, he should learn to like them. Five dollars, you say? Yes, I have it."

Isabelle and Annabelle with sinking hearts saw the crisp five dollar bill drawn from the glittering bead bag and on its way to the shabby man. "No," decided the lady suddenly, "I'd better not take him after all."

"Please-could-we - have-him - we - have-all-but-a-penny?" The words tumbled out of Annabelle's mouth in a hurry.

"Count 'em," cried Isabelle. Into the broad palm of the shabby, comical, little man they poured the flood of pennies, nickles and silver. Anxiously they watched him count it.

"One penny missing, right you are," said the man fixing his snapping black eyes on the eager twins. "One more little penny, and the dog is yours."

"I'll run home for it," cried Isabelle. "One minute," put in the man. "I do believe I see one behind your ear." With a quick motion of his hand and a delighted grin, he captured a penny from behind her ear. How Isabelle did jump and the crowd laugh! He was a trick man evidently.

And the dog, the cunning velvety dog with the mischievous brown eyes, was theirs. Warmly it lay in Annabelle's arms with Isabelle's hands stroking its coat. Surely nothing in that while enamel chiffonier could compare with this. Their present would be quite the prettiest of all.

Strangely enough their mother agreed with them, and so did dad.

"But," put in Aunt Elizabeth, "who will take care of him until the baby is big enough to do it himself?"

"We will," cried the twins quickly. "We'd love to do it—for baby brother."—Doris Dexter, in The Continent.

THE APPLE TREE NEST

One bright morning in March Marjorie was awakened by a sound that made her jump out of bed, and look out of the window.

"Harry," she called, "I'm sure it's a robin."

Again the warbling notes sounded, and this time the two children could see the bird's bright red breast as he hopped about on the lawn looking for his breakfast.

They dressed quickly and went out to see if they could find him, but he had flown away. Toward night it began to grow cold, and the next morning the ground was hard with frost.

"O Harry," said Marjorie, "let us put some crumbs out! I'm sure our robin will want something to eat this morning."

They scattered some bread crumbs on the lawn, and then they waited. Before long the robin appeared. He hopped about pretty stiffly, but he found the crumbs and had a good breakfast. The next day it snowed, and every morning for a week the children scattered the crumbs over the lawn for the robin friend.

Then it turned warm and the robin sang merrily. One day another robin came with him. They flew in and out of the old apple-tree, and didn't seem a bit afraid of the children.

"Oh," said Marjorie, "I believe that it is Mrs. Robin, and that they are looking for a place to build a nest! I wonder if we can help them."

They ran into the house and asked mother about it. She explained that robins liked to build their nests with strings, so the children put some string out on the grass. Pretty soon father robin flew down, picked up the string in his bill, and flew back into the apple-tree. Every day Harry and Marjorie furnished string for the birds until the nest was finished.

One day they were very much excited. From the window they could see a speck of blue.

"I believe it's an egg," said Harry.

That evening father lifted them up so that they could see the beautiful blue eggs in the nest, and then he made them promise that they would not go near the tree until the little birds were hatched. It was very hard to obey, but they were so glad they had obeyed when they saw three wide-open mouths above the top of the nest.

They watched the little family until father and mother robin had taught the little birds to fly. Now the apple-tree is deserted, but the children are sure that the first warm, sunshiny day next spring Mr. and Mrs. Robin will be back again.—Ex.

A man, who had bought one of John H. Twachman's landscapes, wished his opinion on the hanging of the picture. Mr. Twachman expressed his approval of the background, the height at which the canvas was hung, and the light. "Indeed," he said, "there is only one change to make." "What is that?" inquired his host, solicitously. "Why," said the artist, "I should hang it the other side up. I always have."—Everybody's Magazine.

Dear Standard:

I am a little boy ten years old. My home is in Parkton. I have a little sister eleven months old, she is just beginning to talk and walk. I am spending this week at my aunt's near Maxton. GRANDMA'S GRANDMA

By Alice May Douglas

Once grandma had a grandma;
How very odd 'twould be
If she were here to tend grandma
As grandma tends to me!

I wonder if, when grandma's sick,
She'd carry her upstairs;
And would she tuck her into bed
And hear her say her prayers?

Should grandma's grandma chance to keep
Her pockets full of candy,
Whene'er she gave some to grandma
I'd always be real handy.

I really hope she would not kiss
Her wrinkles all away;
For she'd not be a grandma then
And stories tell each day. —Ex.

Mrs. Anna Johnstone Culbertson, daughter of the late John Dickey Johnstone and Eleanor Johnstone was borne in Rowan County, October 4, 1862 and died August 29, 1923, after an illness of only two days at her home in Central Steele Creek, Mecklenburg County, N. C. On May 6, 1885 she was married to Rev. R. W. Culbertson. He with the following children survive her, Miss Ruth Culbertson, Washington, D. C., Mrs. C. F. Melchor, Mooresville, N. C., Mrs. W. G. Caldwell, Raeford, N. C., and Misses Kathleen and Eleanor Culbertson, of Steele Creek. One sister Mrs. W. L. Wharton, of McLeansville, N. C., and a brother, Mr. J. B. Johnstone, of Mocksville, N. C., also survive. Miss Mary Getlon Culbertson, a daughter died May 1, 1908. The only son, John Kingsley was killed while serving his country August 26, 1918 at Carlstrom field, Archadia, Fla. During the four years Mrs. Culbertson had lived in the Central Steele Creek community she had won many friends who also mourn for her. She loved her church and was loyal and devoted to it's contributing liberally to its support, a helpful neighbor, a good friend, a noble Christian woman, cordial, cheerful, contented she lived among us and was honored by all who knew her.

The following resolutions were adopted by the Woman's Auxiliary of Central Church. Whereas it pleased God in His infinite wisdom to call from her earthly labors to eternal rest our beloved friend and co-worker therefore be it resolved:

1. That we bow in humble submission to His will.
2. That her loving face and sweet smile will be missed in our Auxiliary.
3. That as a testimony of our affections and appreciation of her, this memorial notice be inscribed in our minutes, and a copy be sent to the Presbyterian Standard for publication.

SEALED LIPS

Little Mrs. Wheeler stepped in today, quite wrought up over the news that the reason why the McKeens didn't get in their winter's supply of coal as usual, is that they have received a large legacy and are going to move to the city. "I presume you knew about it long ago, but you never tell anything," she added reproachfully.

I smiled and lived up to my reputation by not giving some additional information which would have interested her. If Cousin Charles gets that position in the woolen mill, he will bring his bride here and rent the house vacated by the McKeens. They are both good singers, and quite peaceable, so we shall dare to get them into our choir. But there may be a slip in the negotiations going on, or, if not, my excitable neighbor will hear of results in due time.

You see, I am a minister's daughter, so I early learned the value of golden silence. Now that I keep house for my brother, who is also a minister and who doesn't mean to get married (for surely I gave him sufficient chance the winter I took care of Aunt Cora's broken arm and boarders), I have his reputation to guard. Paul has the masculine faculty of sliding out of tight places without committing himself, so I daresay we are known in the place as "those close-mouthed Sherwoods."

Never mind! Fifteen years spent in a country village have emphasized the truth of the Oriental proverb, "Thy friend hath a friend, and thy friend's friend hath a friend, therefore be discreet." Paul couldn't stay here a month if he should make in public the remarks he may make safely to me, while I should be overwhelmed with chagrin if I ever repeated the blunder of my first year here when

You can get the most food value out of wheat by eating bakings that are made from good plain flour. A dependable baking powder must be employed or you do not get the full nutritious value of the wheat—nor will your bakings be as palatable and easily digested.

The same results cannot be had if you use Self Rising Flours, or any so called ready-to-use substitute for plain flour and good baking powder. Food authorities and physicians agree that bakings that do not raise properly are bad for the health. Such foods are hard to digest and in time cause stomach trouble.

Mothers who are interested in the proper growth and health of their children (and all mothers are) should never use anything but a good brand of plain flour and a time-tested leavener such as Calumet—the economy Baking Powder.

Calumet has more than the ordinary leavening strength. It raises every baking to its height of nutritious value. It is pure and dependable—do not look for a substitute—there is none.

Use Calumet and be positive of wholesome nutritious and economical foods.

CENTRAL BUREAU of PUBLICITY FOR Presbyterian Schools and Colleges

"Likewise the people who contribute to the support of the denominational colleges have a right to be informed thru their newspapers of what is happening at such institutions just as the tax payers have a right to know what is happening at the State institutions. The sooner the executive heads of the State institutions and denominational colleges learn that the campus is not a little principality apart from the balance of the world and that the friends and supporters of such institutions have a right to be kept informed of what is going on thru the public press, the better it will be for such institutions."—(Charlotte Observer, August 28).

I told Miss Haight the kindly criticism made by Mrs. Love upon her playing. Since then my motto has been, "I will take heed to my ways, that I sin not with my tongue," and I am sometimes tempted to add the rest of the quotation.

I have learned also that the time to give advice is when it is asked, and that, even then, it should be indulged in sparingly, since "he who takes the lead takes the responsibility." An excellent woman of my acquaintance antagonizes all the young people of the neighborhood by what they call "putting it in her oar." "Why doesn't she stand straight herself?" demanded Dick Richards when she had been lecturing him about his round shoulders, and Amy Fort, on being told how much a dollar saved a week would amount to in ten years, replied with ominous meekness, "Of course I never thought of that before." If any one is sick, this adviser is promptly on hand with a remedy which she recommends by saying, "It can't hurt you." "It DID hurt me!" cried Ella Price, after a sad experience which nearly blinded her; "I'm never going to do anything she says again." That was a wise resolution, for advice is usually valuable in inverse ratio to the anxiety to give it.

Lips should be sealed against gossip or the betrayal of secrets, or undue interference with the affairs of others. They should NOT be sealed when wrong is to be rebuked or testimony given to the Lord's goodness. A member of my Bible class who is a college student, asked me to pray for his chum. He said, "I want him to be a Christian." "Have you told him so?" I asked. He looked startled. "Why, he is a better man than I am. I went home with him last vacation; his father is an elder and they have family prayers. Bateman has swung off; he doesn't even go to church. Do you think I ought to speak to him?"

When I replied that I did think so, he promised to try. Later I received a sorrowful note which said: "It didn't do a bit of good. Bateman was scornful; he said if he wanted to hear religious talk

RHEUMATISM AND INDIGESTION

Practically all physicians and medical writers are agreed that there is a close relationship between Indigestion and Rheumatism. This view is substantiated by the fact that Shivar Spring Water, which is probably the best American mineral water for Dyspepsia and Indigestion, relieves Rheumatism and the Rheumatoid diseases, such as Gout, Sciatica, Neuralgia and Nervous Headache. Physicians who have studied this water and who have observed its effects in their practice believe that it relieves these maladies by rendering the digestion complete and perfect and thereby preventing the formation of those poisons which inflame the joints and irritate the nerves, and also by eliminating, through the kidneys, such poisons as have already been formed.

If you suffer from Rheumatism, Indigestion, or from any curable disease accept the guarantee offer below by signing your name. Clip and mail to Shivar Springs, he'd go to his father and not to a fellow who can't keep his temper." I wrote back: "Your friend could not know your concern for him unless you expressed it, and I think the seed sown may yet bear fruit, for I once had a decided rebuff like that which ended in the conversion of the one who resented my appeal. In any event, you have witnessed for Christ, and that is what Christians are for."

We are all proud of Miss Farley, the president of our Audobon Society. She grows eloquent over the wrongs of birds, and, last winter, she gave an address about a reservation at the South where they are protected, before a large audience of men and women. Yet when I asked her to lead in prayer at our missionary meeting, she replied, "Oh, I couldn't! I'll not come at all if you ask me to do such things." "But why?" I persisted, and she answered, "I should be frightened to death." She has no fear of man when advocating a cause on which her heart is set, but, apparently the fear of a dozen quiet women is too much for her. One time, Paul gave her something to read in a Christian Endeavor meeting and she made such a fuss about it that I heard him say afterward in the dry tone with which I am familiar, "Well, you survived, didn't you?"

There is a contrast to such behavior. A young girl, not in this place, who belonged to a small prayer circle, was so timid that when her turn came, we always had to wait until she got her courage up. It was painful; I would gladly have excused her, but she didn't want to be excused. She loved her Saviour and was determined to persevere in this Christian duty. The time came when her voice was

SOUTHERN RAILWAY SYSTEM

Southern produce for Northern markets

Carrying the products of Southern orchards and gardens to Northern markets has become one of the most important services of the Southern Railway System.

The tonnage of fruits and vegetables hauled is three times what it was fifteen years ago and double what it was ten years ago, and now equals the cotton tonnage.

Building up this great market for Southern produce, which increases the prosperity of the South, would not have been possible without dependable transportation, and this the Southern has provided.

Transportation of perishable freight on the Southern Railway System is a model of its kind—a special service that emphasizes the fact that the Southern serves the South.

Southern Railway System last year spent in the South $20,000,000 more than it received from the South.

"If there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath and not according to that he hath not." This applies to service as well as to giving.

Ah, that willing mind! When it is absent from a church the pastor's heart is heavy. If anything could seal his lips it would be the constant need for urging. When he finds that mind on a sick bed, he bids the one laid aside from active work to help by prayer. In the fortnight it had been used 31 times, as follows:

- Five times for salary. Five times for tobacco. Five times for cigarettes. Three times for candy. Twice for men's furnishings. Three times for meals. Once for automobile accessories. Once for bacon. Once for washing powder. Once for garters. Twice for shaves. Once for tooth paste. Never for a book or magazine. Never for charity or benevolence. Never for church.

A KENTUCKY TEST FOR A WIFE

Do you know any unmarried women who can comply with these qualifications?

- 1. How to handle young-uns to the queen's taste. 2. Somebody who can cook good. 3. A woman who can sew and weave and spin and keep coats and blankets for you and your young-uns. 4. A nurse-woman—mighty handy when the young-uns all take down sick. 5. A good old settled woman—that's got more, or anyway as much on the inside of her headpiece as the outside. 6. A woman who knows how to milk good and handle cow-brutes. That is the test which had to be met by candidates for the hand of Jeems Craddock, a Kentucky mountain widower with nine children, according to Lucy Furman, in "Quare Women" (Atlantic Monthly Press). It was on the last point that the "fotched-on" women failed to qualify. They couldn't milk, in spite of the mountain belief that "any woman anywheres can milk—hit's woman's nature to."

The fact that the best business men, including bankers, merchants, farmers, and professional men are most enthusiastic members of the Standard Piano Club is conclusive evidence that the club is founded upon sound business principles, and is conducted in a business-like manner. Every business man knows the difference between retail and wholesale prices. He can therefore appreciate the big saving in price which results from clubbing his order with those of ninety-nine other Club Members in a big wholesale order for pianos and player-pianos.

The club finances the deal and gives each member his share of the saving. Each member is responsible only for his own purchase and the terms of payment are arranged to suit his convenience. You are thus relieved of the details and responsibilities of forming the club, and yet you receive your share of the benefits.

If you are thinking of purchasing a good piano or player-piano, you will be delighted with the big saving in price, the convenient terms and the protective guarantees afforded you by the club. You are cordially invited to join the club.

THE INTERNATIONAL MISSIONARY COUNCIL

It seems to us that some of the finest talent in the various churches of the world is occupied all the while in getting up conventions and forming new organizations. The last of these organizations to attract our attention is the International Missionary Council. This held its first meeting at Oxford, England, in July. It was composed of eighty-two delegates from all the continents of the globe, and from many of the islands of the sea. These delegates represented quite a number of national missionary councils.

Dr. John R. Mott presided over the sessions of the council. One who was present writes in a very enthusiastic strain of the feelings awakened by looking on such a significant gathering. "There was something," he says, "profoundly impressive in the sheer contemplation of the range of world-contacts shared among these representatives of the leadership of the world's Christian missionary forces—their far radiating influence, their individual quality, their collective strengths. It cannot be going beyond strict and accurate truth to say that in no organized body of men on earth are so many types of experience with so varied an outlook and representing so wide a range of nations and races knit into so close and thorough and practical a fellowship for so great an objective. To look around at the men and women there and to try to build up a living picture of the experience that lay behind them was to be filled with something approaching awe at the cumulative sacrificial gift enshrined there—the wine of life poured out by strong souls for the redemptive programme of God among peoples of all lands."

What is the object of this International Missionary Council? This can be answered only in general terms. The very name suggests that the leading purpose is to unify the missionary forces to the extent of securing co-operation and preventing friction. It is obvious that the many great missionary armies marching to a common conquest should have an orderly plan of campaign. They all profess to be soldiers of the One Great Captain, to be animated by the same spirit, and to be seeking the same end, namely, to put the crown of universal dominion on the brow of that Great Captain. How important that there should be agreement as to the disposition of the forces, the methods of attack, the terms to be offered to the enemy, and the manner of conserving the territory as it is won.

The council faced and discussed numerous problems.

1. The problem of the Native Church. What is to be done with the fruits of the victories already won? The writer from whom we have quoted says: "Here emerges perhaps the greatest and most decisive problem for collective Christian statesmanship to solve since the Reformation. In range it even exceeds that historic parallel. A native church in a great country must be a sovereign church." How is this sovereignty to be safely transferred from the parent church in the homeland to the child in heathen lands.

2. Another problem was that of education. The church must take a hand in this important character building work. The question is that of "making education fitted to the community needs and the cultural traditions of the Orient and Africa rather than of imposing western conceptions on them; the nature of a Christian missionary education and its relation to government educational policy; these and other vital aspects were illuminated by expert minds from each continent."

3. A most interesting problem was raised by the outstanding, intrusive fact of almost limitless theological differences. How far shall these differences be permitted to limit co-operation? In the varying degrees of departure from the traditional faith of the Evangelical Churches, where shall the line be drawn? Shall it be drawn at all? Shall the extreme of liberalism be recognized, and the effort be made to ignore the difference between that and the extreme conservatism? No definite answer can be given to these questions, but the spirit of the council was very broad, and the obvious tendency was toward peace on the mission field at any price.

4. Recognizing that divergent views were held by the various representatives constituting the council, no effort was made to lay down any elaborate statement of doctrine as a basis on which they could agree. But it was felt that those who were committed to the common task of making disciples of all nations, and teaching them to observe all things that Christ commanded, should let it be known that they did hold some views in common. So they said: "The council is conscious of a great measure of agreement which centers in a common obligation, and a common loyalty. We are conscious of a common obligation to proclaim the Gospel of Christ in all the world, and this sense of obligation is made rich and deep because of our sense of the havoc wrought by sin and of the efficacy of the salvation offered by Christ. We are bound together further by a common loyalty to Jesus Himself, and this loyalty is deep and fruitful because we rejoice to share in the confessions of St. Peter, 'Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God,' and of St. Thomas, 'My Lord, and my God.' The secret of our co-operation is the presence with us of Jesus Christ, Human Friend and Divine Helper."

Certainly the idea of uniting the forces of Protestant Christendom in the world-wide work of missions is impressive and attractive. If the Gospel of Christ meant the same to all, there would be no difficulty. Fortunately Christ is able to guide the movement.

"THE ASSEMBLY'S TRAINING SCHOOL FOR LAY WORKERS"

In a general way our people no doubt know that there is in Richmond a Training School for Christian Workers, but few know very much about its history or its scope. The need for such training had long been felt, both in the work of the pastorate, in training helpers for the mission work at home, and also in the foreign field.

The Presbyterian League of Richmond took the first step to give the dream "a local habitation and a name." They bought the Smith house, known as "Bright Side," and used it for a training school. Later No. 3207 Seminary Avenue was bought, and then No. 3217 Seminary Avenue was purchased through gifts, thus giving the school three houses, but as the number attending soon outgrew these accommodations, other houses were rented. Those in charge, seeing the necessity for expansion, later bought three lots on the same square. As these lots had increased in value, they were later sold, and with the proceeds of this sale, seven lots were bought as sites for homes for the professors.

The present location, on Brook Road, at Laburnum, cost $50,000. It consists of eleven acres, and it will easily bring $75,000 if put on the market. This valuable asset has been made possible by gifts and the proceeds of the sale of the Wight House and Bright Side.

Through the kindness and great liberality of friends, a new dormitory is being built. Then from the proceeds of the Million Dollar Campaign in Virginia they are building a new dining hall.

The whole history of this institution reads like a fairy story. The school, which is owned by the General Assembly and is an entirely separate institution, began with nothing, and it now has property that will be worth about $400,000 when the new buildings are completed. Such is the rapid growth of the school that already other buildings are needed. One should be erected for the men.

Its claims should be recognized on the budget of each church. This will enable its professors to give their full time to the work. They need endowment of the different chairs and an equipment fund for the new buildings.

Such in brief is the wonderful history of this new work, whose success is already beyond all expectations.

That it has supplied a demand in the Church is evident, and it is also evident that such a demand will grow as pastors avail themselves of the help of trained assistants.

THE CHARLOTTE METHODIST PROTEST

The past summer at Junaluska, the Methodist "Montreat," Dr. Bland, of Canada, aired some broad views on inspiration.

At a recent meeting of the Methodist ministers of Charlotte, the following paper was passed, and will be laid before their next General Conference:

"Whereas, according to reports from individuals and through the Press, lectures were given during the summer, within the bounds of our Conference, under the auspices of the General Sunday School Board of our Church, in which, if true, the integrity of the Bible was so questioned as to have a tendency to undermine its influence and power in the minds of many of our people.

"We, therefore, believing such teachings to be a serious hindrance to the spiritual development of our people, and to the extension of the Kingdom of God, do hereby resolve:

"1. That we register our emphatic, vigorous, and determined protest against it.

"2. That we request our S. S. Board as soon as convenient to take such steps as are necessary to prevent a repetition of similar teaching."

The above has the true ring about it, and it shows that however others may be wandering away from the old paths, the Methodist ministers of Charlotte still stand on the fundamentals.

THE RADIO AND THE INDEX EXPURGATORIOUS

In order to protect their people the Pope and his Cardinals have what is known as the "Index Expurgatorius," a list of forbidden books which no faithful Catholic must read. By this means one of the greatest weapons of Protestantism is rendered useless, that of instilling truth in order to overcome error.

No matter how clear the argument may be, nor how telling the facts are against the claims of Romanism, they will amount to nothing, when no Romanist will read them.

The strength of the church depends upon the ignorance of the people, which explains why you find the Catholic Church the strongest where the people are the most ignorant. Witness South America, Italy and Spain.

Their authorities can place the "Index Expurgatorius" on books assailing their teachings, and we are powerless.

However, since the use of radio, in broadcasting sermons, has been introduced, it is found that the air cares nothing for the "Index Expurgatorius," and all over our land, especially in the cities, the truth is creeping in, and their people will soon begin to think. Sermons are flying through the air and whether the hearer is seeking the truth or not, the truth creeps in, and soon it begins to make an impression upon the mind, and gradually this ignorance of Protestantism will yield to the light.

Ever since the Reformation, Protestantism has been trying to reach the ear of the masses, living under the iron rule of Rome. They have tried the open air meetings, religious debates, the tracts and private appeals. It has been all in vain. Books are burned, meetings are dispersed and deaf ears turned to every appeal.

Science steps in and does what the great Protestant Church has never done. It has outwitted the priests and by appealing to the natural love of the novel, it is reaching the ear of the masses, and slowly undermining the belief in the infallibility of the church.

We doubt whether the extensive use of the radio in broadcasting sermons will help church attendance much, but if it will carry the truth to Romanism, we can put up with that disadvantage.

FUNDAMENTALISM

We have Shakespeare's authority that by any other name a thing will smell as sweet, which leads us to remark that, since the name "fundamentalism" is in bad repute among Christian men who ought to know better, we are willing to change the name, provided that the principles denoted by the name are retained. It is amusing to see the horror certain men have of the name, yet it is a name that should carry with it the assurance that it is the foundation of true doctrine. When we are concerned over our belief, what word would better express our aim than the word that means foundation.

Our Lord in His Sermon on the Mount concluded His teaching by showing men that the foundation built upon determined the lasting character of a man's profession.

There is a Christian Fundamentals Association of which we are not a member, but to their doctrinal statements we are ready to subscribe, with the exception of Article VII, which we would like to amend as follows: We believe in "that blessed hope," the personal and imminent return of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. We purposely omit the time of His coming, whether pre or post, we do not know. We are sure that He will come in such an hour as ye think not.

We do not profess to be wiser than what is written. We remember our Lord's words, "But of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven, but my Father only."

We give this statement in full, only reminding our readers that we qualify the seventh article, as stated above.

I. We believe in the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments as verbally inspired of God, and inerrant in the original writings, and that they are of supreme and final authority in faith and life.

II. We believe in one God, eternally existing in three persons: Father, Son, and Holy Spirit.

III. We believe that Jesus Christ was begotten by the Holy Spirit, and born of the Virgin Mary, and is true God and true man.

IV. We believe that man was created in the image of God, that he sinned and thereby incurred not only physical death but also that spiritual death which is separation from God; and that all human beings are born with a sinful nature, and, in the case of those who reach moral responsibility, become sinners in thought, word, and deed.

V. We believe that the Lord Jesus Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures as a representative and substitutionary sacrifice; and that all that believe in Him are justified on the ground of His shed blood.

VI. We believe in the resurrection of the crucified body of our Lord, in His ascension into heaven, and in His present life there for us, as High Priest and Advocate.

VII. We believe in "that blessed hope," the personal, premillennial and imminent return of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

VIII. We believe that all who receive by faith the Lord Jesus Christ are born again of the Holy Spirit and thereby become children of God.

IX. We believe in the bodily resurrection of the just and the unjust, the everlasting felicity of the saved and the everlasting conscious punishment of the lost.

When one reads this statement of the Gospel faith, he cannot understand why one good Methodist brother in a recent Advocate, in speaking of the dangers of "Modernism," should write as follows:

"There must be an effort put forth to save the ship of Methodism from drifting into the quagmire of 'Fundamentalism' and the cesspool of Modernism."

We wish every success to the ship of Methodism and hope that it will not drift into the "quagmire of Fundamentalism," but that it will anchor upon the one Fundamental, Jesus Christ, our Lord.

We would, however, protest against putting Fundamentalism in such bad company. Instead of sailing between Scylla and Charybdis, as our brother imagines, the good ship of Methodism is sailing in a safe channel, if it keeps near the firm rock of Fundamentalism. That is the course taken in all ages by the "Old Ship of Zion."

Devotional

DOUBT

Doubt or uncertainty about great moral and religious truths is not an indication of mental strength, but rather of mental weakness. There is no strength in unbelief; all mental strength comes from believing. It comes from the sight of truth, from clear and strong convictions. There may be no guilt in doubting, but there is always weakness.

There are, however, those who take credit to themselves as advanced thinkers, because they doubt and question all things. When a steamboat is in a fog it does not advance; if it does so it is in danger of shipwreck. The mind which is in a fog cannot advance, it drifts helplessly without aim.—(James Freeman Clark, in Every Day Religion, page 211).

Amid the mysteries which are becoming the more mysteries the more they are thought about, there will remain the one absolute certainty that he is ever in presence of an infinite and eternal energy from which all things proceed.—(Herbert Spencer, quoted by the Archbishop of York, in an address to the clergy on the best way to deal with agnosticism).

"Faith cometh by hearing."

"How shall they hear without a preacher?"

A large majority of the human family are in such circumstances that if they ever arrive in heaven, they must be guided there by a living ministry on earth. Many can't read, many have no time to search the scriptures for themselves; while many who can read possess so little mental cultivation that they can't distinguish between sophistry and argument, to discern the wolf in sheep's clothing. They place themselves under men as scriptural guides, and these guides are responsible for their souls. If any assume the office of the ministry while destitute of qualifications for it, his own soul and those of others are put in jeopardy. It is the blind leading the blind. If I be true and faithful, my soul will be saved while you perish. If I give false counsel we perish together.

We are happy or unhappy in this life as our children choose to make us. The joys, amenities, and pleasures of home, with health, make life worth living. But these must abound and be enjoyed by all who come in contact with us. We must not only be happy in our own homes, but must all do the good we can outside of our own homes and try to make others happy too.—(J. Marion Sims, M.D., in "Story of My Life," see page 342).

WHAT IS IMPERISHABLE?

Their good works do follow them: either their own good works and words which outlive themselves, or those which they have inspired in their successors and survivors. The vision of a noble character, the glimpse of a new kind of virtue does not perish . . . this keeps alive in us the ideal of human nature and the essence of the divine nature.—Dean Stanley.

JESUS ONLY

If Christianity be called a building, Jesus Christ is the cornerstone. If Christianity be called an arch, Jesus Christ is the keystone. If Christianity be called a science, Jesus Christ is the fundamental principle. If Christianity be called a system, Jesus Christ is the center of that system. To preach the Gospel is nothing more nor less than to preach Jesus Christ.—Ex.

BEFORE THEY CALL I WILL ANSWER

I trusted Thee, my Father,
I rested in Thy Word;
Heartsick with hope deferred,
In my extremity I cried,
And knew my prayer was heard.

Then, for Thy gracious answer,
Or come it soon or late,
I was content to wait.
And, while I prayed, Thy messenger
Was knocking at my gate!

With answer, rich in mercy,
That met my climbing prayer
Upon the heavenly stair.
Yet still I linger at Thy feet;
Dear Father, keep me there!

THE NEW TESTAMENT PROPHET

By Rev. I. S. McElroy, D.D.

Who was the New Testament Prophet and what has become of him? Did he cease from the churches by limitation of his functions? Or was it because his functions were appropriated by others? Or was it in part for both these causes and for other causes besides? He has received sufficient attention from the writers of our New Testament Scriptures to warrant some attention to these and kindred inquiries.

I. He was a multitude in his day. He was found in all the congregations of the Apostolic church. Dr. Burger, in the Schaff-Herzog, says: "The charisma of prophecy was found in the congregations of the apostolic times everywhere." When the Apostle Paul in the fourth chapter of his epistle to the Ephesians says, "And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers: for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ;" he evidently points to a condition that prevailed in all the churches in the last half of the first century. This conclusion seems to be confirmed by other passages such as Acts 13:1; Rom. 12:6; I Cor. 12:28; 14:1, 3, 29.

II. The position of the New Testament prophet was one of high honor and his work of very great importance. Indeed he ranked second to the apostles. In every list of the officers given to the church by our risen Lord the prophet is named next after the apostle. "And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, etc." Bishop Gore, in his very learned book on The Christian Ministry, says: "In the Epistle to the Ephesians (2:20, 3:5, 4:11) as also in Acts 13:1 and 2, and in the Didache they (the prophets) are given a position of very great importance in the church as a whole closely allied to that of the apostles as founders of the church." This is strong testimony especially when we remember not only the great learning of the author, but that he was also a stalwart defender of the myth called "Apostolic Succession."

III. The chief function of the New Testament prophet was that of an inspired preacher. He was sometimes charged with foretelling the future, as was Agabus (Acts 11:28 and 21:11) but this was not essential to his office. He was often the agent through whom the Holy Ghost revealed the will of God not otherwise known to the people, as recorded in Acts 13:2, and probably also in Ephesians 2:20. Dr. Hodge says, "Prophecy was the gift of speaking as the organ of the Spirit in a manner adapted to instruct and edify the hearer." And again, "The gift of occasional inspiration was essential to the prophetic office." Meyer says, "The prophet spoke in an extemporary way what was unfolded and furnished to him by revelation of the Spirit; the teacher developed the deep knowledge which he had acquired by investigation, in which he was himself active, yet was empowered and guided by the Spirit."

There can be no question as to this function of the New Testament prophet, but was it his chief function? Was the way by which he came into possession of the truth essential to his inspiration? If through study of the scriptures under the guidance and illumination of the Holy Spirit he came into possession of truth that was profitable for "edification, exhortation and comfort," would his preaching be prophesying according to I Cor. 14:3? Archdeacon Farrar says: "Prophecy is the gift of sacred preaching." Canon Headlam says of the New Testament prophet: "His gifts were those of inspired oratory, of insight into God's dealings with mankind, a serious grasp of spiritual truth, earnestness, a power of arousing religious enthusiasm, consolation, revelation, exhortation." Professor Thomson says: "Prophecy is the uttering forth by man as God's messenger of God's mind and will, and so understood it has never ceased in the Church of the Lord Jesus. John the Baptist was a prophet, but he appeared as a preacher of repentance and righteousness. New Testament prophets were the teachers or preachers of the Word; men to whom God had given special insight into His divine truth and a happy faculty of imparting that truth to others. The gift of prophecy or preaching is the most useful and most practical of all gifts. The work of the Christian pastor is precisely this—by teaching and preaching to cultivate the spiritual life of believers." Mr. Marcus Dods says: "Prophecy is speaking for God, whether the utterance regards present or future matter. 'Aaron shall be thy prophet (spokesman)'. The function of prophecy is for edification. The results of prophesying are described in I Cor. 14:24 in terms precisely such as we would use to describe the results of efficacious preaching." It seems to be the prevalent opinion of scholars who have given special attention to this subject that the chief function of the New Testament prophet was that of a preacher called and qualified by the Holy Spirit to speak as the messenger of God for the conviction, edification or comfort of his hearers; and when occasion required he was furnished directly by the Spirit with the truth needed for this service.

IV. What has become of this so prominent and so important New Testament prophet? If he was essentially a revealer of new truth then of course his mission was at an end when there was no more new truth to be revealed, but what if his chief function was that of a preacher speaking under the guidance and illumination of the Holy Spirit? The apostles fulfilled their mission and the office ceased from the church, but was this also true of the prophet? He certainly filled a large and important place not only in the apostolic, but also in the post-apostolic church as late at least as the third century. Dr. J. G. Fraser, in the Britannica, says: "Until recently it was impossible to form any distinct idea of the Christian prophet in the post-apostolic age, not so much from want of material as because what evidence existed was not sufficiently clear and connected. It was understood indeed that they had maintained their place in the church till the end of the second century. But the discovery of the Didache has immensely extended the range of our knowledge."

The Didache probably dates from the fourth century and from it may be gathered that to the close of the second century the prophets were regarded as an essential element in the church and were the regular preachers of the churches. They were not necessarily attached to any particular church, but when they chose to exercise this right of settlement they were entitled to support, and they exercised this right with increasing frequency with passing years. Bishop Gore finds in this habit of the prophets to settle with a particular church "one way in which the transition was effected from the apostolic ministry to that of the later church. What in fact was Polycary of Smyrna or Ignatius of Antioch but a prophet who had become a bishop?" From this it seems that Bishop Gore would answer our question by saying that in the post-apostolic age the prophets became bishops, or as a Presbyterian would put it, the functions of the prophet were appropriated by those presbyters (bishops) "who labored in word and doctrine." If this be a fact, it is quite interesting and suggestive.

Dr. Thornwell, in his famous articles on the eldership, has made it clear that presbyter means ruler and nothing else; that preaching is a function superadded to the presbyterate and not inherent in the order, and yet he says that in the age of Ignatius the preacher was distinguished from the presbyters by the title of bishop; and that it was owing to accidental circumstances that the presbyter ever became a preacher. Would such "accidental circumstances" include the settlement of a prophet in a particular church especially if he should be elected their preaching presbyter (or bishop) by that church? I do not know what Dr. Thornwell would say to this question, but remembering the proneness of the presiding presbyter of the early church to appropriate things not inherent in his office it would not be surprising to know that he had appropriated the chief function of the prophet.

AGNES ERSKINE COLLEGE PERNAMBUCO, BRAZIL

By Rev. W. C. Porter

Five thousand dollars are urgently needed for the following items of equipment:

1st. Three thousand dollars, at once, to finish the dormitory and rebuild the kitchen. The roof of the dormitory is already in place, but flooring, plastering, ceiling, painting and electric fixtures are still lacking.

The old Brazilian kitchen is too small, too dark and unsanitary, and must be enlarged and have plumbing put in.

The contractor who built the new wing, has furnished an estimate of $3,000 to do the above work.

Miss Douglas is refusing boarders because she has no room for an additional camp bed. Even the guest room is full of girls.

2nd. The front of the school property must be closed in with a six-foot brick wall, and a cement pavement must be constructed by order of the city mayor. He has already given formal notice for the work to be done.

The mason has submitted an estimate of $2,000 for this job.

The school opened this year with 135 girls, and could have 50 more within six months if there was room for them.

All Brazil is clamoring for American schools, and it is our opportunity to teach the Bible to the younger generation.

Will not some church or individual in the Southern Church enter into partnership with the Lord, and furnish the $5,000 to the Executive Committee, at Nashville?

Mrs. Porter and I sail from New York on October 13th for Brazil, and we expect to hear from you in answer to our prayers.

No. 14—Culture? Or Christ

Has Christianity become heathen? Ridiculous! Christianity stands for the best culture and achievement of the race. And "heathen" stands for crude savagery, ignorant barbarism.

Yes. True. Yet—if you think into the thing a bit there's enough to make one straighten up, and knit his brows and stare out.

The most outstanding distinction of history is that between heathenism and Christianity. When the two first came into contact and conflict the contrast couldn't have been sharper.

Heathenism did stand for the crude and savage. And it stood also for the world's best culture. It stood distinctively for all that was not Christian. That was the common contrast between the two.

Greece stood for the best culture man has achieved. In art and philosophy, in knowledge and intellectual vigor, and in personal beauty, Greece led the race. Its standard of beauty and art has never been surpassed, and rarely equalled. The world still copies Greece.

And when Greek culture was at its highest, the moral fibre of the Greek people was at its lowest. It was because of moral rottenness that splendid Greece went to pieces. And Rome copied faithfully Greek art, and Greek moral break-down, too.

Their religion was a religion of culture, a philosophy, nothing more. Vague, uncertain, with no note of positiveness, its distinctive trait was lack of personal moral ideals, and, yet more, lack of power to make moral character.

In sharpest contrast with this the new thing that came on the world scene, Christianity, was distinctively a religion of positiveness and of power. It claimed to be a revealed religion, something direct from God.

Its most distinctive claim was that it was supernatural. That stood out bold and big. The Book, the Man, the Man's exceptional experience after dying, the Something put into a man who was a moral wreck, and which made him ever new morally—these were the outstanding things that marked the new faith. The supernatural power that changes character was certainly there. It was as certainly lacking in the cultural systems of heathenism.

We look askance at that word supernatural. It's rather considered the thing to do. Its meaning should be made clear. It does not mean something contrary to nature, but something higher up than the natural order we are familiar with. It means a power more than the power that's common working through natural channels.

God loves the natural. Nature is nearly God's method in action. He is chary of the supernatural. His use of the supernatural is always as an emergency measure. It is brought into play by some emergency caused by evil. Evil is plainly here. So is God. So is the supernatural, to offset evil, when need be.

Christianity is not merely a code of ethics, nor a system of culture, a humanitarianism, nor a bettering of the world. It is all of these. It outclasses all others in these things. But these are incidentals, mere by-products. They are the glow of the fire, not the fire itself.

Christianity is distinctively the one only religion of power, supernatural power. It makes the lustful man pure in heart, the thief honest, the trifler earnest, the victim of passion self-masterful, the bodily diseased whole. The storm-swept knows sweet peace of heart.

And when Christianity becomes a mere code of ethics, a humanitarianism, and so on, and only these, nothing more, its distinctive trait has gone. It is down on a level with the splendid cultured heathenism of Greece and of Rome.

Culture means developing something already possessed. It can be carried to an almost infinite degree. It calls into play the highest and best, and delights the appreciative. It never changes the sort, only the quality. Culture never gets a Baldwin apple out of a Burbank potato. Larger, mealier, better-flavored, it remains a potato.

You can't get a saint out of a rascal, by any sort of culture, carried to whatever degree. Skilled, polished, taught, the rascal only becomes a greater menace. The rascal inside will break through some day.

Christ put something new inside, a power, a life, with a direct God-touch in it. There is now a supernatural power working through natural channels. Habit's long-time grip is broken. Then there is play for the best culture of that new life. This is the distinctive touchstone of Christianity.

The test of any teaching, and the test of any civilization, is moral personal character. The world's civilization is in the sorest test today. The moral break-down everywhere is a heart-breaking commonplace.

Is it possible that Christianity is losing its one distinctive trait? If the salt, that has been blessedly salting all life, and keeping it from going clean bad, these centuries, if the salt loses its saltiness! Saltless salt! That's a desperate case. The distinctive thing gone!

An officer of a Japanese liner on the Pacific, pacing the deck one day, listening to an American companion talking about the Christian faith, with pathetic intensity broke into his companion's talk with the abrupt question, "But is here power to make a man live it?"

An Imperial University man, with the keenness characteristic of the Japanese, he touched the one critical spot. Happily he learned about the Man who died, and lived again, and lives, and gives power to live it. His face showed something new inside.

And for the rest of the voyage he kept bringing men to his friend's stateroom to learn about the power, yes, the Man, that can help a man actually live the thing.

No. 15—A Bad Get-Together

THEOLOGICAL EDUCATION AS A CONCERN OF THE WHOLE CHURCH

By Rev. Arthur G. Jones, D.D., LL.D.

(A paper read before the Theological Seminary Conference in Montreat, and published by request of the Conference).

If this theme be considered as a query there can be no answer except an affirmative one. Theological education is a concern of the whole Church. It is so in fact even if it is not so in the consciousness of church. We might ask, What is the status of theological seminaries in the mind of the Church? There is one part of the Church which seems to regard these schools as seed-beds of heresy, dangerous places into which it is not safe for the faithful to go. Another part of the Church seems to regard them as being almost quiet cities of the dead, the abode of moss-backs who grope amid the cobwebs in ancient attics of forgotten lore. If our memory is correct, a great Roman once testified that all Gaul was divided into three parts, and in this respect at least we trust the Church resembles ancient Gaul and that there is in it a third part which appraises the theological seminary and its function more fairly.

But whatever may be the status of theological seminaries in the mind of the Church, as a matter of fact there is no agency of the Church and no activity in which the Church is engaged which is of greater importance. The peace and purity and power and progress of the Kingdom of God on tomorrow depend in no small measure upon the theological education of today. Every interest which is dear to the Church's heart and to which she would put her hand is dependent for success upon the character of her theological education. These seminaries are the institutions which prepare the seed-corn of the Kingdom and they, more than any other agency of the Church, determine what the harvest will be. The faith and character of her ministry will surely influence the faith and ideals and policies and achievements of the Church of the future. It is this fact which makes theological education such an incomparably serious and solemn business. We have stood in the pulpit with fear and trembling lest the message might not be in every way God's own message to dying men. But the issue in the pulpit is not so critical as in the theological seminary. The teacher of the future ministry of the Church of God carries the heaviest responsibility which is carried by mortal man in this world. The Church may or may not be mindful of this, but we are sure the burden is felt in the heart of every true man who faces this solemn task.

1. If theological education is a concern of the whole Church, this fact should first of all lead the Church to furnish the seminaries with an adequate and choice student personnel. Recruiting for the ministry is not outstanding in the mind or program of the local church as one of its definite objectives and as a vital part of its service for Christ. It ought to be so. This recruiting activity should have a definite place in the desire and prayer and effort of every local church because that is the source of supply. The Church should furnish the seminaries with a student body which is not only adequate in number, but also choice in quality, men of good native endowment and with proper previous academic training. This responsibility rests upon the Church. It may be said the Church is trusting in the Lord for this. It is well to trust in the Lord for all things needed. But the haphazard attitude toward this need sometimes tempts us to think we are trusting to luck. There ought to be, through the agency of the local church everywhere, a wise and earnest effort to enlist our finest youth for the vocation of the ministry. In the same way that intelligent effort is put forth to achieve in the local church proper results for Foreign Missions and Home Missions and all other vital interests of the Gospel, even so there should be definite concern and effort to interest her choicest sons in this pressing need for ministers. We are sometimes tempted to think that one restraining influence upon youth of superior talent is their feeling that the Church does not deeply care and that anything can get into the ministry.

There will always be a place in the work of the Church for the "extraordinary case"—men of good natural ability but with imperimenta of one sort or another which deny them the normal scholastic equipment. But there should be care lest the "extraordinaries" become too frequent. The case which is extraordinary because it is minus scholastic attainments ought also to be extraordinary in some other direction. If any case is extraordinary only on the minus side and is ordinary in all other respects, its ministerial desirability is doubtful. Presbyteries are eager for candidates, and properly so, but they ought not to accept any man who offers himself without careful scrutiny. There should be a definite quest to find and enlist for the ministry the very choicest material. A superintendent of Home Missions in the southwest, confronted with the problem of finding ministers for the work and men of special ability and resourcefulness capable of meeting the peculiar difficulties of that territory, appealed to us to have our seminary incubator send out a supply of such men. We could do no other than reply that the kind of chickens which came out of the incubator would depend upon the kind of eggs which the Church put into it. The type of ministry which the seminaries furnish to the Church can be no better than the material which the Church furnishes to the seminaries. Theological seminaries, even though some of them still believe in miracles, are not quite able to work them.

2. The fact that theological education is a concern of the whole Church ought to secure adequacy of training for those who are being prepared for the ministry. This is a day of short cuts. A quick and superficial course in religious instruction is thought by many to be sufficient preparation for preaching the Gospel. It is even the opinion of some that theological seminaries educate a man away from the people and from the simple Gospel, even if they do not impair the vitality and vigor of his own Gospel faith. It is true that the training ought to be practical as well as scholastic. It is also true that it ought to be scholastic as well as practical. It should be both. The staples of the inherited standard curriculum should be retained. Special training for new issues should be added to and not substituted for any of these staples. There is a definite tendency today to discount the value of thorough scholastic training. The Church must resist it. Such training will furnish a background, a solid foundation, a scope of vision, a degree of confidence and power to a man's ministry which is not possible without it. If it has ever been important that the ministry should receive such training, it seems to us that it is so in a peculiar degree today.

3. Another concern of the Church in theological education involves soundness in the faith. It is a matter of primary importance that the coming ministry shall be trained and taught to propagate that which is the real faith of the Church. Acquaintance with the vagrant mutations of the world's religious thought may be desirable and of value, but the influence of the seminary should stimulate in the men whom it trains a definite and high loyalty to the Church's faith and a firm purpose to proclaim that faith unto men.

4. Because of the fact that theological education is a concern of the whole Church there ought to be substantial uniformity of training in all her seminaries. The courses of preparation should be standardized. The life of the Church is one in all its parts. The goal of the Church in every part of it is the same. The Church's chief function is confessional, it is established primarily to bear witness. Unless her testimony is consistent and harmonious its influence will be impaired.

5. The whole Church has a vital concern in the piety of the product of theological education. These schools should send out scholars and skilful practical workers, but chiefly they ought to send out men of God. A man without scholarship may have some success; a man who is not an expert workman may have some success; but the Church can not win without leaders who are first of all men of God. Men who themselves have a vital personal hold upon God and who are competent to show all sorts and conditions of men how to get the same divine contact. A little girl was attending church worship for the first time and was deeply impressed by it all. During an interval she whispered to her mother, asking, "Does the minister live here all the time, or does he come down from heaven every Sunday?" The minister ought to come from the study; he ought to come from the haunts of men with a personal knowledge of life as it is; but chiefly he ought to come down from heaven when he enters into the sanctuary to function as an exponent of the Gospel of God.

We would not advocate an uneducated ministry. Yet I would take off my hat and stand with uncovered head in the presence of many an old-time uneducated Methodist circuit rider. They were men who fought real battles for the souls of the people, and fought with the power of God. In a camp meeting, the hour for worship had come, the people were assembled, everything was waiting for the minister, but he could not be found. At last they did find him, out in the brush, his face upon the ground, his eyes weeping, his heart burdened, pleading with God to come with power. He was not ready to face the people, not willing to preach the Gospel without the conscious presence and power of God. The Church needs educated ministers, men expertly trained, but her supreme concern is that we furnish her with men of God. With all else that we do and try to do for our men, we must help them in this. Men of God can use scholarship, but scholarship can not make men of God.

6. By some means there ought to be a closer relation between the Church and her theological schools. The Church ought to know more clearly what they are doing and the relation which their service bears to the progress of the Gospel in the world. Upon the basis of such closer relation and better understanding, there might come into the heart of the whole Church with reference to her seminaries, a new interest, a fresh confidence, a larger love, more earnest prayer, and we need all these.

"RIGHTLY DIVIDING THE WORD OF TRUTH"

By Rev. H. M. Pressly

A considerable "Tempest in a Teapot" has raged in the columns of a great daily over the question of correct, incorrect, or garbled quotations from Shakespeare. It is well that the friends of the Bard of Avon should guard the good name of that great writer by insisting that his words be exactly and wisely quoted by all who use them.

We have a Book much more important than Shakespeare's writings inasmuch as its author is God Himself. A Book which reveals the mind, will and heart of our Father as no other does and teaches us how to live as no other can. How carefully should His children guard God's Book lest He be misrepresented by incorrect quotation or unwise use of His Word.

Some misrepresent God by using as Scripture statements not found in His Book.

One mild day in January, a man said, "This must be the time mentioned in the good old Book, when 'summer and winter shall be alike except for the green leaf.'" One replied, "Those words are not in the Bible, but God does say in Gen. 8:22, 'While the earth remaineth, seed time and harvest and cold and heat, and summer and winter and day and night, shall not cease.'" Another says "We read in the Bible, 'Wilful waste makes woeful want.'" When told that such words are not found in God's Book, he said "I have always heard them used a scripture."

A Sabbath School teacher said, "I have my class commit a Bible verse each Sabbath for a motto through the week. Last Sabbath we learned 'Cleanliness is next to godliness.'" Not in Book. And yet that lady was teaching a class of young people to learn and use it a scripture.

Another inserts a word that gives a different meaning from that of the right word. See Jude 20: "But ye beloved, building up yourselves on your most holy faith etc." Have we not heard preachers pray that these people "may be built up in their most holy faith?" What a difference between "building on" and "building in"!

Again a passage may be taken out of its setting of time, place and circumstance, and its real meaning is lost.

How the old-time temperance lecturer rang the change on "Touch not, taste not, handle not," (Col. 3:21) a God's rule concerning intoxicants! Read the context and you will see that Paul was discussing the old ceremonial law with its many requirements and prohibitions, now fulfilled and laid aside, with no reference at all to alcoholic drinks.

Another quotes only a part of a verse or paragraph and thus perverts its meaning. See I Cor. 2:9, "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things that God hath prepared for them that love Him." Stop there and you leave us in hopeless ignorance concerning God's great and gracious provision for His children. But read the rest of the statement "But God hath revealed them unto us by His Spirit for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God." Now having heard the whole passage, we stand not with Ingersoll in a "dark vale between the cold and barren peaks of two eternities," with no possible light upon our pathway, but on the sun-lit heights with God's revelation of all we need to know concerning life here and hereafter. May we all be helped to know, rightly divide, and honestly and wisely use God's Word.

RALLY DAY AND HELPFUL INFORMATION

Without a doubt Rally Day will have a new meaning for us if we take just a little time to survey the field of work of the Executive Committee of Publication and Sabbath Schools and also inform ourselves of its splendid accomplishments. Its work may be called "foundation work." It will help us all to go to the Rally Day service, Sunday, October 7th, with the following facts fresh in our minds:

Scope and Purpose

This committee is the Assembly's agency for supervising and promoting the activities of the Sunday School and the young people's organizations of the Church, and is responsible for the Program of Religious Education for young people. It is faithfully endeavoring to measure up to its large responsibilities, with the support of the Church, (1) in the organization of a mission Sunday School within the bounds of every self-supporting church; (2) a trained worker in every Synod, every Presbytery, and in every needy and promising field; (3) assuming our share of evangelizing the thirteen million neglected children and young people of the South, through generous offerings for Sunday School Extension, and (4) training the young people in our churches for leadership by wholesome home influence, by adequate religious education in our Sunday Schools at hands of trained teachers.

WITNESSING TO THE TRUTH

A Free Thinker, one H. J. Bridges, of the Chicago Ethical Society, has written an article entitled "The Fundamentalist Movement in American Protestantism," which is of interest, coming as it does from a purely intellectual, with no religion:

"There are several features about this movement which should render it welcome to those who believe in freedom of thought and desire extinction of superstition. For one thing, it brings into clear focus an issue which has vexed the conscience of thoughtful men for many years, but which has hitherto been utterly ignored by the mass of the public. I mean the question of intellectual honesty in church and pulpit. In a recent conference of religious liberals in the middle west, after I had expounded the standpoint of the ethical society and expressed the conviction that religious reconstruction on the basis of any theological creed whatsoever is impossible, I was followed by a distinguished teacher in the divinity school of a great university, who gave one of the cleverest exhibitions of the art of riding two horses at once that I have ever witnessed. He paid his compliments in clear enough terms to the 'Fundamentalists,' but expressed his own views about God, Christ, the Bible, and the Church, in language of masterly vagueness and ambiguity.

"The next speaker was a 'Fundamentalist,' and with him the fun began. To me he was exceedingly polite. My language had at least been plain. I did not claim the Christian name, or pretend to be preaching the old doctrines. One knew exactly where I stood, and if one didn't like it one stayed away. There was no deception about my goods. But Dr. —, and the many hundreds like him in all churches, were paltering with words in a double sense. And the first mission of the Fundamentalist movement was to insist upon men's saying exactly what they meant and meaning what they say. The old dogmas were to be applied as tests. The Bible was the Word of God. This meant that every word of it was true, and divinely revealed. Christ was God made man, born of a virgin, who died to save men from an eternal fire into which they would certainly go if they refused Him. No preacher was to be tolerated who would not positively, ex animo, profess and teach these things. No more talking about them in a Pickwickian sense. No more calling the Bible inspired and meaning that it is no otherwise inspired than Plato or Shakespeare. No more mouthing about 'the divinity of our Lord' and meaning that He was only a rather more enlightened and helpful teacher than Buddha and Mohammed. No more blather about miracle, and meaning that the thing either didn't happen or was perfectly natural. No more saying, 'Conceived of the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin Mary,' and meaning, 'Conceived of the carpenter Joseph and born of his wife.' No more using the word 'I believe in the Resurrection of the Body' (or 'the flesh'—if that's any different) and meaning, 'I have a vague idea that, although the body is done for, the spirit may possibly survive.' In short, no more pulpit lying, no more 'economy'; common honesty and truthfulness in the pulpit. The preacher must say what he really believes, like a man. If his congregation agrees with him, they will retain him, and drop their old creed and their old denominational name. If not they will retain these things and send their man to look for another job. When people go into a Baptist or a Methodist church, they have a right to expect Baptist or Methodist doctrine.

"The satisfaction of being thus complimented by a man who thinks you are doing the work of the devil, and who uses you to belabor other men to whom you feel far nearer in spirit, is a fairly dubious one. But, withal, one could but feel that in this protest there was something extremely healthy and necessary. The Modernist preacher in the old churches is in a position of such grave difficulty and moral danger that even the hardest-headed Rationalist might well pray to be delivered from it. So long as he is clearly trying to be sincere with himself and his hearers he is entitled to the warmest sympathy of those of us who enjoy a larger freedom. But there is nothing more repellent than the preacher who privately admits that he doesn't believe what he publicly utters, and laughs at the stupidity which prevents his hearers from finding him out. Nothing could conceivably be more demoralizing than this game of sanctified make-believe. The preachers denounce loose living, unchastity, drunkenness, the sensationalism of the cinema and the newspaper, the jazz band and the unseemly dance; and well they may. But none of these things, and not all of them together, are so profoundly corrupting, so ruinous to the very principle and standard of moral integrity, as that which must be plainly called religious lying. By this I do not mean preaching false doctrine—doctrine which you and I think false. I mean preaching, as the highest and holiest truth, doctrine that the preacher himself thinks false; keeping silence about things that your church professes, and your position implies that you yourself hold, when, in fact, you do not hold them; using 'weazled words' to plant in other minds a different meaning from that which they convey to your own, humbugging the naive and unwary, for the glory of God and the security of your own income and social position."

WHAT JULY DID FOR PROTESTANT RELIEF IN EUROPE

The Montreat Assembly changed the day for taking the offering for Protestant Relief in Europe from Reformation Sunday, which is always the last Sunday in October, to the first Sunday in July. It also combined it with another cause on that day, the Lord's Day Alliance, asking that $100,000 be contributed to the two causes and the offering divided, 80 per cent going to Protestant Relief and 20 per cent to Lord's Day Alliance.

Every effort was made to get the matter before the Church in the brief time allotted, there being only about one month for this. The Church will be interested in knowing the result. About 500 churches, including gifts of 150 individuals, have contributed $10,749.28. Of this, Protestant Relief gets $9,151.73, and Lord's Day Alliance $1,597.55. All undesignated funds have been divided on the percentage basis named by the Assembly. Contributions specifically assigned to one or the other of these two causes have gone where assigned.

Thus far, very few of the larger churches of the Assembly have given anything, some of them writing that they would follow the old practice of taking the offering on Reformation Sunday. It remains to be seen how many will do this; but we are far from our goal of $80,000, and it is evident that something must be done if the goal is even approached. It is also evident that if the 3,000 churches of the Assembly which so far have sent in nothing would only give their people a chance to contribute to Protestant Relief, the sum sought would probably be reached. The churches responding are for the most part small, struggling congregations. Surely the Church at large can maintain this average. It is therefore merely a matter of opportunity. I do not believe our people are indifferent to the pitiful plight of our religious kin in Europe. It is largely a matter of allowing other things, more insistent, to thrust this cause aside.

The Assembly has set July 1st as the day for this offering, and I would not be disloyal to the Assembly. But I feel that the Assembly is more interested in the cause than the day, and that it would rather a church would take this offering on some other day than the first Sunday in July rather than not take it at all.

The session is the only church court with authority in this matter, and I appeal to the session to find a way.

Below is a statement, showing by Synods what has been given thus far this year, up to and including receipts on September 17th:

EMERGENCY CALL FOR TRAINED NURSES

By Dr. Egbert W. Smith

After next February, unless nursing reinforcements are rushed to our Congo Mission, there will not be a trained nurse in the mission. There is an urgent call for at least three trained and registered nurses to sail for Africa at the earliest possible moment. For information address Candidate Department, Box 330, Nashville, Tenn.

Woman's Auxiliary

Conducted by Mrs. J. M. McIver, Gulf, N. C.

Charlotte, Second Church—The Women of this church will have the privilege of hearing Miss Mattie S. Tate, the missionary in Chunju, Korea, supported by our own Second Church Woman's Auxiliary, in the club room, Monday afternoon, at 3:30 o'clock. At 4:30, in the same place, a reception for Miss Tate will be held, to which every woman in the congregation is cordially invited. Mothers of small children are asked to note the fact that a nursery will be open in the Primary department during the hours of the meeting and reception.

A Call to Prayer—We dare not attempt to hold a meeting of the North Carolina Synodical in our own strength, therefore we call upon every member of our Synodical to pray earnestly for this meeting, that we may be guided in all things by the Holy Spirit. All Synodical officers, secretaries of causes and chairmen of committees, all Presbyterian officers, secretaries of causes, and two delegates at large from each Presbyterian are expected to attend. The theme for this meeting will be Christian Education. Please do not fail to write to the committee in Wilmington as soon as you receive your invitation, that they may know how many to expect. This is most important, and the only courteous thing to do.

Mrs. E. F. Reid.

Sugar Creek—The Woman's Auxiliary of Sugar Creek Church entertained most delightfully at the manse Saturday afternoon, in honor of Miss Mary Hunter, of Derita, who is leaving to enter the Richmond Training School, preparing to enter the mission field.

The manse was beautifully decorated for the occasion with quantities of flowers sent by friends of Miss Hunter, who is a much beloved and valued member of the Auxiliary.

As the guests arrived they were welcomed by Mrs. Martin Davis, president of the Auxiliary. Members of the young girls' circle had charge of the register.

Progressive conversation was enjoyed. Mrs. Ralph Robinson, at the piano, then played a clever contest in which the names of articles comprising a traveling outfit were mentioned. The prize was won by Mrs. Vinton L. Hunter.

Miss Kate Neal and Mrs. J. P. Robinson, accompanied by Mrs. Ralph Robinson, sang a beautiful duet, "Whispering Hope."

Mrs. M. E. Peabody, wife of the pastor of Sugar Creek Church, and Miss Alma Hunter, gave interesting readings.

An artists' contest, to determine who could draw the best picture of Miss Hunter, taxed the skill of the guests, Miss Moore being judged the most accomplished artist.

A miscellaneous shower was given the honor guest, Miss Minnie Hunter, dressed as a colored washerwoman, entered, bearing a large basket overflowing with the "week's wash," in reality a number of pretty and useful articles of apparel. Miss Hunter thanked her friends in gracious manner for their kind thought of her.

Mrs. Peabody then invited the guests out on to the spacious lawn, where the young girls served delicious punch and cake.

As a fitting close to an afternoon most happily spent, Mrs. Charles Robinson and Mrs. Peabody sang "A Perfect Day."

Greensboro—The women's societies of the various churches of Greensboro had a meeting Friday afternoon at the Church by the Side of the Road and organized a central society to be called Woman's Interdenominational Missionary Union. The Greensboro News said in reference to the organization:

"Twenty-five churches were represented. The city Y. W. C. A. and the North Carolina College Y. W. C. A. also sent representatives. These, reporting for the women's societies of their churches, told the outstanding features of their organizations and offered helpful suggestions to their sister societies. All expressed enthusiasm for the interdenominational meeting made possible by the Woman's Auxiliary of the Church by the Side of the Road.

"Mrs. W. C. McGill, president of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Church by the Side of the Road, was in the chair. The reports were divided into two parts with an intermission of 20 minutes between.

"Before dismissing the session for the social 20 minutes, Mrs. McGill appointed a committee to work during the intermission on tentative plans to present to the representatives concerning organization into an interdenominational body. The committee reported that it heartily approved the organizing of such a body and made the following recommendations:

"That the name of the organization shall be the Woman's Interdenominational Missionary Union;

"That the union shall consist of all the Woman's Missionary societies in Greensboro;

"That there shall be a council which shall consist of the officers of the constituent societies;

"That the executive board shall consist of the presidents of said societies;

"That Mrs. W. C. McGill be made tentative president and shall call a meeting to perfect organization."

"The committee making the above recommendation was headed by Mrs. Dorian Blair, of St. Andrew's Episcopal Church, who was elected chairman by the eight members of the committee.

"The Presbyterians as a whole emphasized the necessity of mission study with the purpose of disseminating information and the importance of prayer for particular and specific purposes.

"The Baptists laid their emphasis upon their methods of influencing their members to study the mission books and described the system of seal and certificate awards made by the church to inspire the societies to measure up to the standard of excellence as prescribed by it.

"The Episcopalians laid stress on the devotional part of their meetings as a thing especially promoted by their denomination.

"Prominent among the points emphasized by the Methodists was the effort of the societies to make the home meetings interesting. The plan worked out by the West Market Street Church is that of having different women perfect themselves in one line of study and go about to the different meetings making talks on the subjects.

"The Friends and Christian Disciples spoke of the novelty of the circle organization in their churches and expressed pleasure with the results of their brief experience. The Friends stressed the necessity of giving each individual member of the society work to do as a method of increasing responsibility and interest. The Disciples spoke of the educational program and said that they considered all disinterest to arise from lack of information.

"The Christians advanced tithing as important in missionary organization.

"Miss Lois McDonald, secretary of the North Carolina college organizations, and Miss Frances Brandis, of Salisbury, of the College Y. W. C. A., made appeals for the support in the Christian international weekend to be held at the college this fall with its object to create a world conscience among the students. All denominations were invited to send any of their returned missionaries to the sessions and requested to make exhibits at the conference."

Fayetteville Presbyterian Auxiliary is planning to hold a "group conference" during October in each of her nine counties. These conferences will be in charge of the "district chairman," as the "Presbyterian visitors" are now called.

Mrs. Herbert A. Love, president Florida Synodical, says: The group conferences are still the most helpful agency in our work throughout the state, and the women are interested and instructed as never before. These conferences are making the work more uniform, and helping the officers to understand the importance of accurate and prompt reports.

Bethel Presbyterian Auxiliary will hold five group conferences on five consecutive days beginning on Tuesday, October 2d.

Will those in charge of the programs for these conferences please send a full report to the Auxiliary column of the Standard.—Ed.

Attention, Wilmington Presbyterian!—Women of Wilmington Presbyterian: Please prepare for the six days of prayer group meetings to be held in your Presbyterian during the month of October. They will be held as follows: St. Andrew's Church, Wilmington, Monday, October 8th, for District No. 1; District No. 3 meets at Atkinson, October 9th; District No. 2 meets at Bolton, October 10th; District No. 5 meets at Teachey's, October 11th; District No. 6 meets at Warsaw, October 12th; the date for District No. 4 has not yet been arranged.

Special emphasis will be laid on mission study, the work of the secretaries of spiritual life and financial budgeting. The standard of excellence will be fully explained and discussed. We also expect to have a good missionary speaker at each meeting.

Every woman in every church in every district is invited to attend the meeting nearest her; and the executive committee of the Presbyterian very earnestly requests that, without fail, the president, secretary of spiritual life, mission study leader and treasurer of every local Auxiliary be present at one of these meetings. All present are asked to bring note book and pencil. Also there will be on sale copies of the home and foreign mission study books at 50 cent each, the standard of excellence at 25 cents, and the history of Wilmington Presbyterian at 50 cents. If your society is not supplied with this necessary literature please be prepared to buy it at these meetings.

The programs will be arranged with a view to giving ample time for visitors to take the afternoon trains, or to reach their homes, going through the country, before dark; and all visitors are asked to come prepared to stay to the close of the session.

Every item of the program has been arranged with great care, and each one is important to the well-being of your Auxiliary. Please help your executive committee with your prayers and your attendance in making these days of prayer meetings to be the finest we have ever had.

Mrs. Andrew J. Howell, President.
Mrs. G. W. Oldham, Recording Sec'y.

"The Child and America's Future." Shall we allow the youth of our country to grow into men and women of the nation without stamina of body and mind to meet the tests of modern existence and without any real knowledge of the Christian faith? This book presents our Christian responsibility to furnish the foundation upon which high ideals may be built.

"The title indicates the content of the book. It stresses the importance of winning the youth of this nation to Christ, and is a strong plea for holding them true to the highest Christian ideals of service and leadership."—Ex. Committee of Home Missions.—Ed.

EDITOR'S LOOKOUT

As this paper reaches you the Standard's subscription campaign will get into full swing. October 4th to November 11th are the big days for promoting the circulation of our paper. Generous commissions and cash prizes have been offered. Individuals and societies and classes will profit in many ways by entering the campaign. You cannot lose, and you can gain a great deal and help your Church paper and the denomination's work.

Rev. Roswell C. Long, who recently left the West Avenue Church, in Gastonia, to take up work as Assistant Secretary of our Assembly's Stewardship Committee, tells us that they are anxious to have the young people realize the importance of studying Home Missions. Mr. Long is a friend of the young people and knows what they can do and ought to do. We recently heard a Christian Endeavor field worker say in a meeting, "The C. E. society that is not teaching denominational missions is not a real C. E. society." This applies to all the societies and classes in the church. It is a duty and a privilege to study the Church's mission work.

Three Home Mission books are now being presented:

"The Child and America's Future," for adults; "Better Americans," for leaders of Junior groups, and "For a New America," for Junior groups. These books can be secured from the Presbyterian Committee of Publication, in Richmond or Texarkana.

Rally Day is scheduled for the coming Sunday. Let us take someone to Sunday School with us, and let us contribute generously toward the fund for Sunday School Extension. Let us make the day one of departure from our old satisfied ways, and launch out upon a larger usefulness and more energetic life in and through the Sunday School.

ABRAHAM, A BLESSING TO THE WHOLE WORLD

Lesson: Genesis 12:1-4; 18:17, 18; 22:1-18; Hebrews 11:8-10, 17-19.

Printed Text: Genesis 12:1-4; 18:17, 18; 22:15-18.

GOLDEN TEXT—"In thee shall all families of the earth be blessed."—Genesis 12:3.

SCRIPTURE LESSON

1 Now the LORD had said unto Abram, Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will shew thee:

2 And I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee, and make thy name great; and thou shalt be a blessing:

3 And I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee; and in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed.

4 So Abram departed, as the LORD had spoken unto him; and Lot went with him: and Abram was seventy and five years old when he departed out of Haran.

Ch. 18:17 And the LORD said, Shall I hide from Abraham that thing which I do;

18 Seeing that Abraham shall surely become a great and mighty nation, and all the nations of the earth shall be blessed in him?

Ch. 22:15 And the angel of the LORD called unto Abraham out of heaven the second time.

16 And said, By myself have I sworn, saith the LORD; for because thou hast done this thing, and hast not withheld thy son, thine only son;

17 That in blessing I will bless thee, and in multiplying I will multiply thy seed as the stars of the heaven, and as the sand which is upon the sea shore; and thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies:

18 And in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed; because thou hast obeyed my voice.

SHORTER CATECHISM

Q. 57. Which is the fourth commandment?

A. The fourth commandment is: "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labour and do all thy work; but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy man-servant, nor thy maid-servant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates, for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day; wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day and hallowed it."

Abraham was one of the most remarkable and highly favored men known to human history. He was "the father of the faithful and the friend of God." The church was more fully organized in his family than in any other and in it were established abiding ordinances. No member of our race except perhaps Moses ever had such intimate and constant intercourse with Jehovah as did Abraham. He had a spiritual seed that continued longer on the earth than any other man mentioned in sacred story. We will consider Abraham's Call; His Promises; His Revelations of God's Purposes; His Severest Test.

I. Abraham's Call

He was called probably by an audible voice to leave Ur of the Chaldees, his native land, his kindred, his home and his friends, to go into not a designated land, but into a land that God would show him. He had naught upon which to base his action, but the word of Jehovah. But He obeys and comes to Haran. Some of his father's family come with him, and this shows that Abraham had much influence with his father's house. They remained in Haran five years and his father Terah died there. Again the call is made, and Abraham, with his wife and with the family of Lot, his nephew, and all their substance, left Haran to go into the land of Canaan. This separation from his country, home and kindred was a great trial of Abraham's faith, but was needful to Jehovah's purposes, and was to be made yet more complete.

II. Abraham's Promises

To stimulate his faith and obedience God made Abraham "exceeding great and precious promises." He promised "to make of him a great nation," though he was then 75 years old and had no children. He said his seed should be as the sand by the seashore, and as the stars of heaven. This has been literally fulfilled when we consider his natural and spiritual seed. He assures him that "his name shall be great" and that "he shall be a blessing" to mankind. This prediction has been verified throughout the earth. He promises to "bless them that bless him" and to "curse them that curse him." This declaration has been fulfilled not only during Abraham's lifetime, but to his descendants through succeeding ages.

III. The Revelations to Abraham of God's Purposes

God says Abraham was His friend and destined to be a blessing and a great nation and He would not hide from him what was concealed from others. We have many illustrations of this. He told Abraham of the impending destruction of Sodom, saved Lot from its sad overthrow, and granted Abraham every petition asked for the doomed city. He informed His friend that his seed "should be strangers in a strange land, that they should be greatly oppressed, that the nation that affected them He would judge, and that they should come out with great substance. Those familiar with Egypt's judgments will recognize the truth of these predictions.

IV. The Severest Test of Abraham's Faith

It had been tested by his call, by his sojourn in Canaan and by his experience in Egypt. But a sterner test was applied through Isaac. He was commanded to "take Isaac, thy son, thine only son, whom thou lovest, and offer him as a burnt offering upon a mountain that I will show thee." Isaac was the child of promise, waited for 25 years, and Abraham had been promised through him a numerous seed. Abraham obeyed without a murmur and with great promptness, though He did not see how promises could be fulfilled. It was the last and sternest trial of his faith.

Christian Endeavor

MY DENOMINATION'S FUTURE

M., Oct. 8—More Consecration: II Cor. 6:1-10.

T., Oct. 9—Preaching: II Cor. 4:1-7.

W., Oct. 10—Neighborly Service: Isa. 42:5-9.

T., Oct. 11—Co-operation With All: John 17:20-26.

F., Oct. 12—Missionary Zeal: I Cor. 9:1-5:1.

S., Oct. 13—Larger Benevolence: I Cor. 16:1-3.

Sun., Oct. 14—Topic: What My Denomination is Planning for the Future. Luke 4:16-21.

Family Altar

My denomination is seeking to get every family in the Church to establish a Family Altar. Some families repeat Scripture verses at the breakfast table and the father leads the prayer. In other families every one offers a short prayer, after the reading of the Scripture. The father does the reading and the praying in many families. It is easy enough to have family worship in the morning if everyone will get down to breakfast five minutes ahead of the hour. Any family should be willing to give God five minutes of 24 hours.

Prayer

My denomination is seeking to get every person leading in public prayer. The young people in their Christian Endeavor societies, the ladies in their Auxiliaries and the men in Bible classes and men's clubs. In Korea every Christian prays in public. They are taught to pray before they are received into the church.

Personal Workers Band

My denomination is seeking to have a personal workers band in every church. There should be such a band in every organization in the church who are praying and working and speaking to the unsaved about Jesus. Some church members think that this is the business of the pastor only, but Jesus said, "Ye shall be my witnesses," and He meant for everyone who accepted Him as their personal Saviour to witness to others. Order personal work literature from the Assembly's Home Mission Committee, Atlanta, Ga.

Home and Foreign Mission Study Classes

My denomination is seeking to get a Home and Foreign Mission study class in every church so that every Presbyterian will be informed about our Home and Foreign Mission work. The "White Field of Japan" is the Foreign Mission study book and "The Child and America's Future" is the Home Mission study book for this year.

Home Missions

My denomination is seeking to get the members of every church to conduct a mission among some people in the community who are not regularly going to church and Sunday School. According to government figures there was in North Carolina 759,947 over 10 years of age who are not members of any church, and 418,111 in South Carolina who are not members of any church, counting 28 per cent of population as being under 10 years and subtracting the church membership from the balance. Some of these people must be in reach of every Presbyterian.

A Church Paper in the Home

My denomination is seeking to get every Presbyterian to subscribe for and read a Church paper and the Missionary Survey. We read the news in our daily papers to keep up with the times, shall we not also keep up with the work our Church is doing in the world for the cause of Christ?

Life Enlistment

My denomination is seeking to get every church to see that at least one member is enlisted for whole-time service for Christ and the Church. There should be at least one boy or girl at school or college in course of preparation.

Stewardship Study Class

My denomination is seeking to get a Stewardship study class in every church in the Synod. A fine book for young people to study is "Life as a Steward," by Guy L. Morrow, price 25 cents. Another is "A Catechism of Christian Stewardship," by R. L. Walkup. This is a leaflet that will be furnished free by the Assembly's Stewardship Committee, 410 Times Building, Chattanooga, Tenn., to any Endeavorer that will use it. You can order one copy for each member who attends regularly.

Weekly Contributions

My denomination is seeking to get every church member: man, woman, boy or girl, contributing weekly to the support of the work of the Church as God says in I Cor. 16:2, "Upon the first day of the week let everyone of you lay by him in store as God has prospered him." Certainly every boy and girl should be willing to do a little work each week in order to have some money to contribute to advance the cause of Christ.

Tithers

My denomination is seeking to get every member to enroll in the Tithing League of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States. One-tenth of our income is a small amount for us to give to advance the cause of Christ when we consider that the Jews paid two-tenths every year and every third year another tenth and God did not tell them as He did us to "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature."

Every person who enrolls in the Tithing League of the General Assembly will be sent a certificate and a tithing account book. Tithing cards should be distributed at the closing meeting of the series of studies in Stewardship so the members may have an opportunity of enrolling. Order tithing cards from the Assembly's Stewardship Committee, 410 Times Building, Chattanooga, Tenn.

The manual of the Presbyterian Progressive Program gives in detail the work that the Southern Presbyterian Church is planning to do in every church. There are five departments: First, Spiritual Life; second, Evangelism and Missions; third, Christian Training; fourth, Stew-

PERSONAL

Correspondents will notice that Rev. W. M. Sikes, of Canton, N. C., has been made stated clerk of Asheville Presbytery. All communications should be addressed to him.

We had the pleasure of a call from Rev. H. W. McLaughlin, D.D., pastor of New Providence Church, of Lexington Presbytery, which is next to Steele Creek, the largest country church in our Assembly. Dr. McLaughlin is here as a member of the committee appointed by the last Assembly, to consider the problems of the country church. The other members of this committee are Rev. W. H. Mills, D.D., of Clemson College and ruling elder F. S. Neal, of Sugar Creek Church.

NORTH CAROLINA

The Presbytery of Mecklenburg will meet in stated fall session at Central Steele Creek Church, Tuesday, October 23, 1923 at 11 a. m.

Fall Meeting of Concord Presbytery will meet at Centre Church (near Mooresville) October 16th, at 7:30 p. m., instead of September 16th as stated in last week's Standard.

Charlotte—Work on the new Williams Memorial Church building is progressing satisfactorily. It is thought that the building will be ready for occupancy in less than two months. Church services are now being held at the Nevin's community house. The Sabbath School, under the efficient superintendency of Mr. Bruce Hutchison is growing in numbers and in interest.

Notice! Concord Presbytery will meet at Centre Church the 16th of October at 7:30 p. m. The representatives that come in automobiles are hereby requested to report at the church that afternoon between 3 and 5 p. m. Those who come by train will be met at Mooresville. As far as possible, we want ardship; fifth, Fellowship. Dr. M. E. Melvin is general secretary of the Stewardship Committee of the Assembly, with office at 410 Times Building, Chattanooga, Tenn. This committee is responsible for promoting the Presbyterian Progressive Program. The Manual can be secured from the committee's offices.

TO THE SECRETARY OF YOUNG PEOPLE'S WORK

Dear Friend: You will be especially interested in the subject for the Home Mission Study this year, "The Child and America's Future." Surely no more important subject could have been chosen, and we expect great results from this intensive study of a most important part of the Church's life.

But while the adults are studying about the young people, the young people themselves should be studying about the tasks of the Church. "For a New America," by Coe A. Hayne, is a most attractive book and is prepared for young people by one who is himself a young person.

It is your duty as Secretary of Young People's Work in your Auxiliary to aid in organizing these classes of young people. The president of your Young People's Society will have a letter from Miss Nancy White, of the Home Mission Office, urging the need of a study class. Perhaps your help and encouragement is all that is needed to launch a good class. Help them find a convenient time for their meeting. There is some plan that will suit your conditions. Won't you help the young people to organize in the best way possible? It may all depend upon you!

With many good wishes for your success,

Faithfully yours,
Hallie P. Winsborough.

SOME JUNIOR PLANS

The following plans have been sent to us, principally from the First Presbyterian Juniors, of Wilmington, N. C.

Every cause of the Church is put on the Junior Society budget, and a definite amount paid to each cause. The information committee or the superintendent give some information regarding the cause for which the gifts are to go in any given month. This plan is an educational one as to the work of our Church, and also trains in systematic giving.

Five minutes at each prayer meeting is given for some one to spring a surprise, carried out in the way of asking questions of each other. A member of the prayer meeting committee may ask the chairman of the lookout committee what the duties of that committee are, the lookout chairman being supposed to answer. At times the officers are called upon to answer questions as to what their work is. These times of questioning make every member strive to be posted on the work of the committees and officers.

One Sunday a month—the second is urged—can well be given to a Birthday Sunday program. The birthday committee has charge of the program, including both the devotional and birthday exercises. The birthday offerings are given to some definite mission work.

Church News

to assign those coming from a distance, to their homes before Presbytery convenes. This announcement, therefore, does not apply to those who expect to attend Presbytery from home.

W. E. West, Pastor.

The Presbytery of Orange will meet at Little River Church, October 23d at 2 p. m. All representatives coming by train will be met at Hillsboro and Rougemont. Rougemont is on the road from Lynchburg to Durham. Those coming by private cars will please be here by 12 m. as dinner will then be served at the church. We will be glad for as many as possible to come in their own cars.

Gastonia, Olney Church, Rev. T. G. Tate, pastor.—This church co-operated in the Simultaneous Evangelistic Campaign in Gaston County, September 16-30. Rev. W. A. Murray, of Shelby, N. C., preached for us a week including the two Sundays. His sermons were of a high order, clear, convincing and full of the Gospel. Some of the visible results were the addition of nine persons to the church on profession of faith and one handed to the Baptist Church, the erection of 12 new family altars, and the rededication of many of our members to God. The spirit of fellowship and co-operation among all denominations was delightful, and great good was accomplished for the Kingdom.

Gastonia, First Church.—Since September 16th this church has participated in a simultaneous evangelistic campaign that was launched in all of the protestant churches of the city and county. Possibly the largest city and county-wide campaign ever attempted anywhere. For eight days Rev. W. W. Akers, of the Lincolnton First Church, assisted the pastor and two meetings daily were held. Attendance was the largest in the history of the church, the loyalty of the members more pronounced and the interest more intensified than at any similar meeting held in this church. Forceful Bible sermons were preached at all services and the good accomplished exceeded by far the expectations of pastor and people. Several additions were made to the membership and many took upon themselves the vows of renewed spiritual life and vigor.

Charlotte.—The Men's Fellowship Club of the First Presbyterian Church, in a fine spirit of hospitality, on Thursday, September 25th, entertained the men's clubs of the other Presbyterian churches of the city at a delightful get-together-meeting in the church. A buffet supper was served after which a program was rendered. Five hundred men attended.

In the main auditorium of the church Dr. Addison Brenizer, president of the club presented Rev. W. B. McIlwaine, Jr., who made the opening prayer. In the felicitous speech Dr. W. H. Frazer, of Queens College presented Dr. Ben Lacy, the "fighting parson," of Atlanta, Ga., as the speaker of the evening. Dr. Lacy made several happy and interesting references to his early life in Charlotte—to some of his experiences while a substitute on the Davidson College football eleven and then launched in to the address of the evening. Turning back to the days of the Great World War the "fighting chaplain" as he was known overseas narrated incident after incident to show the spirit of intense sacrifice and devotion on the part of the men at the front. Every story was told in graphic style, giving each man present a vivid picture of the grim days of the great struggle. Dr. Lacy stated that he referred to these war incidents not for the purpose of glorifying war but to show the fine spirit of devotion and service on the part of the fighting American soldier. Advancing to the front of the pulpit and with uplifted arm and speaking with great fervor the speaker said:

"At the moment the Armistice was signed 60,000 American soldiers were out of their places, away without leave—three percent of the entire army sent across the sea.

"If no more than 30 per cent of the soldiers of the Cross were out of their places today, the army of the Lord would be capable of winning the battle and turning the tide toward King Jesus."

"It is time for the men of the Church to realize that in the fight in which they are enlisted, they must give their all, not some little part of their lives or their talents but give as the American soldiers gave in the great conflict yonder," the speaker declared. "They gave their all whether they had much or little, and some had both."

It was the voice of a man who spoke with great earnestness and on whose mind and heart lay the necessity for a greater service on the part of men enlisted in Christ's army. His appeal moved the splendid audience and after the meeting many remained to meet the fighting parson. Dr. A. A. McGeachy pronounced the benediction.

The Kannapolis Church, of which Rev. W. C. Jamison is pastor has just experienced a gracious reviving as a result of an evangelistic campaign in which Dr. J. M. Clark, of Statesville, N. C., superintendent of Home Missions in Concord Presbytery, did the preaching. Dr. Clarke preaches with power and earnestness and brings a clear-cut Gospel message of the kind we love to hear.

He was ably assisted in the ministry of song, by Mr. W. Reece Long, of Charlotte, N. C., a singing-school master of wide experience. Mr. Long in his sweet spirit and refreshing explanations makes the song to live before the congregation and enables them to sing with the understanding. He was a valuable asset to the meeting.

As visible results of the meeting there were 17 who joined the church by profession of their faith in Christ and four by letter, making a total of 21 additions to the church. There were 19 family altar cards signed and a goodly number of reconsecrations.

Notice of Synod of North Carolina!—Letters and return post cards have been sent to the ministers of the Synod and also to the vacant churches. If any who expect to attend the meeting of Synod have failed to receive same, please notify at once Mr. Paul E. Morrow, Box 38, Burlington, N. C., and Mr. H. W. Scott, joint chairman, of your purpose to come, when and how,—whether by automobile or on train. This information will be exceedingly helpful to churches (Graham-Burlington) entertaining Synod.

Be sure to come direct to Burlington, if you come Tuesday, which will be registration headquarters and where you will be assigned a home and where supper will be served at the new hut from 6 to 8 p. m.

Note that the opening session will be held in the First Presbyterian Church, Burlington, Tuesday, October 9th, 8 p. m.

(Signed) Wm. R. Potter, Pastor.

Rutherfordton.—Beginning the third Sabbath in November, Rev. James C. Grier, pastor of this church, will hold a series of evangelistic services here.

He will be assisted by Rev. Leonard Gill, of Charlotte, Synodical evangelist, who will do the preaching.

Mr. Gill will be accompanied by his singer, who will conduct the song services, which will be a feature of the services.

The Rutherfordton congregation was fortunate in having a visit, last Sabbath, September 23d, from Rev. C. Fred Hancock, missionary to Taichow, China, North Kiangsu, mission, who preached Sunday morning at 11 o'clock.

At 4 o'clock Sunday afternoon, a service was held for the ladies of the church.

Mr. Hancock brought one of the most interesting messages ever heard by the writer on China, at the evening hour's service.

The sympathy of the church will doubtless go out to Rev. and Mrs. Hancock in the illness of his companion at Montreat.

Durham Church House Dedicated.—The late Geo. W. Watts, ruling elder for over 30 years in the First Presbyterian Church, Durham, N. C., made provision just prior to his death for a Church House to be used in connection with the splendid plant already built completing the three unit idea of the modern church, namely a building for worship, a building for religious education, and a building for social activities.

The latter building has been completed and was dedicated recently with impressive services conducted by the pastor, Rev. David H. Seanlon, D.D., Rev. T. W. Simpson, assistant, and Mr. W. D. Carmichael who was associated with Mr. Watts in the work of the Sunday School for many years.

The Church House is an excellent brick building, the architecture of which is in keeping with the elegant simplicity of the church and Sunday School buildings hard by; it consists of a large social room for men and also one for women on the first floor, together with a business office, bachelor apartments, a spacious dining room, kitchen and serving room, and a moving picture room; on the second floor are well-appointed rooms for Boy Scouts and American Rangers, and similar facilities for junior girl activities together with two apartments for the members of the local staff.

It is one of the most practical and attractive buildings of its kind in the South and beautifully furnished throughout.

Mr. Carmichael in a brief address interpreting the purposes of this building as intended by the donor said in part:

There comes to us all tonight a deep sense of the many blessings which Almighty God has bestowed upon this church. We have been blessed with a splendid church building, with a splendid Sunday school plant, and now with this house which ought to mean so much in the life of this church. Above all, we are conscious of our blessing in the line of strong, forceful, consecrated personalities who have dwelt among us and led us, but tonight, we think particularly of one whose life among us meant so much to us all who were privileged to touch, and dwell with him, and to know him, and feel the power of his leadership. Tonight we think of him, as we open this house which he provided for us as one of the last expressions of his love for this church and of his thought for extending its usefulness and power in leading men to his Master.

The blessing of his life, and of the material things which he was inspired to leave here, have placed upon us who are left behind a commensurate responsibility, which we all wish to discharge.

As we open this house and dedicate it to the service of God, we shall best measure up to our responsibility in its use, by trying to catch Mr. Watts' vision of what he intended this place to be. He had such a building in mind for some time before his death. He had talked about it, and his ideals for it, with his family and members of this church. He had a well-formulated vision of what this place ought to be. It is quite certain that he had not formulated in his own mind by exactly what methods it should be made the kind of place he would have it. Had he lived, he would have given to making it such a place, his best and most prayerful thought.

His idea, it seems to me, was that this place should be a home for this church family. A place where all of us should have the opportunity to come more in touch with each other, that we might know each other better, and have more of the spirit of the family among us. He longed to see us more tolerant of each other's weaknesses, to strive more to help each other, that we might learn to dwell together more and more perfectly as the ideal family. His idea was that this should be a tranquil place, an attractive place, a place which might have inscribed over its doors "Peace, Joy and Love." To understand how to make it measure up to this ideal would have been his prayerful endeavor had he lived.

He thought a great deal of the unattached young people of the church and of the town, both the young men and the young women. He thought what a church home might mean to the young boy who was for the first time away from home, of the young woman who had left father and mother to come here to work among us. He wanted them to find here on Sunday afternoon and in the evening when the day's work was done, a cheerful, home-like place with magazines and other good reading; a place to write a letter; and good fellowship and the spirit of love that keeps one from being lonely, blue and home-sick. He wanted it to be a place where the older members of the church could drop in occasionally and have touch with one another and with the young people; where old men and young men might sit down together, and rest, and talk, and learn to know each other better. Hardby the church, with the spirit of home, it would be a place where Christ would delight to come in spirit, and where young men and young women would get something of the influence that a good father and mother had kept around them before they left their own home. He had a vision of little children coming in here at times and finding joy and pleasure and happiness.

He meant it, I think, for a place where the societies of the church might have their meetings; where the men's Bible class might sit comfortably in a large room as they went over their Sunday morning lesson; where the women's Bible class might have the same sort of room; and where they both might have the sort of informal and close together sort of lesson, that the spirit of this place would make for them.

There was no thought apparently in his vision of this place's being made a work house. It was rather to be a home with all that means, as I have tried to suggest in what I have said. A place where we might learn to know and appreciate and love one another, and talk together. A place where the contemplative side of our religious life might be developed.

SOUTH CAROLINA

The Synod of South Carolina will meet in the First Church, Spartanburg, Tuesday, October 16th, 8 p. m. The clerks will be in the church from 4 to 6 in the afternoon for the purpose of enrolling in advance the members, who are requested to report by person or information as early as convenient after arrival. Thos. H. Law, S. C. H. Waddell Pratt, P. C.

Fairforest—A splendid series of services were conducted at this church September 2-9 by Rev. C. O'N. Martindale, of Reidville, S. C. He preached the Gospel with the unction and power of the Holy Spirit. His messages were strong, persuasive and permeated with the spirit of the Master's love. There were large congregations both morning and night with the ministers of the other denominations in attendance. The interest was gratifying, and the spiritual results stimulating and lasting in the entire community. The church was revived and reconsecrated itself to a more faithful warfare in the Master's Kingdom. Cor.

Pacolet—Rev. J. K. Roberts, of Conestee S. C., closed a most successful week's meeting here September 23. He preached the Gospel, even from the Old Testament, in manifested power, and made the way of salvation plain to all. His messages were strong and appealing to the church and entire community. The attendance was good and much interest shown in the meeting. A number were added to the church, five children of the covenant were brought into full fellowship of the Lord's body. In connection with the meeting Mr. Roberts formed a teachers' training class, and taught through the first unit. This is the second meeting and training class he has conducted for this church with gratifying results. Cor.

Greer—September 16th, Dr. W. H. Miley and his singer, Mr. W. Furman Betts, closed a meeting of eight days here. Business houses closed at the hour for service, the meeting was well attended throughout, and much interest was manifested. The field has been closely worked by the different churches, and most of the material gathered in. During this meeting there were over 200 reconsecrations; 70 loyalty pledges; 14 professions of faith; and six letters brought in, while 26 pledged to maintain the family altar, and 46 to practice the tithe. A splendid offering was made for the work.

Dr. A. G. Wardlaw, the pastor, and his excellent wife have been doing splendid service here. The congregation has recently moved into a splendid new building, and there has been advancement along all lines. The town, too, has greatly improved in recent years, and here, again, the influence of Dr. and Mrs. Wardlaw, with their splendid people, has been a moving factor.

Asheville Presbytery convened in its 55th semi-annual session, on September 18th, at the Slagle Memorial Church, in Macon County, N. C., and was opened with a sermon by the retiring moderator, Rev. James T. Gillespie, from the text Gal. 6:9, "And let us not be weary in well doing; for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not."

Rev. H. B. Denny was chosen moderator, and Rev. W. M. Sikes, D.D., temporary clerk. A goodly representation from the churches was present.

On the second day the Presbyterial sermon was preached by Rev. R. F. Campbell, D.D., from the texts, "That which is crooked cannot be made straight," Eccl. 1:15; and, "The crooked shall be made straight," Isaiah 40:4. This was a strikingly interesting and helpful sermon, and was followed immediately by the communion of the Lord's supper.

Another splendid sermon, preached on the third day, by Rev. R. S. Eskridge, was from I Peter 1:7, "That the trial of your faith, being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise and honor and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ."

Two petitions for the organization of churches came before the Presbytery and were disposed of as follows: Holston Presbytery was granted permission to organize and maintain a church at Mt. Sterling, Haywood County, N. C., on the border of Asheville Presbytery. Also a commission was appointed from Asheville Presbytery to organize a church at Red Oak, in north Buncombe County, N. C.

The Committee on Men's Work in the Presbytery showed great zeal and earnestness in planning to maintain the Maxwell Training School for Boys, which is located on a splendid farm in sight of the Slagle Memorial Church. The management of this school had previously been turned over to a Board of Directors consisting of nine laymen of the Presbytery. The Home Mission Committee agreed to assist financially to the extent of $1,800 per annum, and the Presbytery gave the Executive Committee of the Board of Directors the privilege of going before the churches of the Presbytery to raise the remainder of the necessary amount for the running of the school.

An aggressive program of evangelism was adopted, by which an evangelistic meeting is planned for in every church of the Presbytery during the coming year. A schedule was adopted assigning each pastor to a definite church for a meeting.

The Presbytery also adopted a recommendation to pay the sum of $100 per year to Presbytery's Secretary of Stewardship in order the better to enable him to promote the interests of Stewardship within the bounds of the Presbytery.

The Presbytery went on record as giving an emphatic negative to that part of the report of the Assembly's Ad Interim Committee on Amendments to the Book of Church Order, which concerns the proposed incorporation of churches and church courts.

Rev. W. S. Hutchison offered his resignation as stated clerk of Presbytery, which was accepted, and Rev. W. M. Sikes, D.D., was elected stated clerk in his stead.

The next regular meeting of Presbytery will be held in the Bryson City Church, on Tuesday before the full moon in April, 1924, at eight o'clock P. M. W. M. Sikes, S. C.

ALABAMA

East Alabama Presbytery—Called meeting, Trinity Church, Montgomery, Ala., Friday, September 28, 1923.

Received Rev. Lynn R. Walker, D.D., from Nashville Presbytery. Presbytery arranged for his installation as pastor of the Church at Andalusia.

Received Rev. Robt. L. Bell, D.D., from Atlanta Presbytery. Presbytery arranged for his installation as pastor of the Church at Union Springs. W. S. Patterson, S. C.

Montgomery, Trinity Church—Rev. Chas H. Pratt, D.D., has returned from Montreal, N. C., where he spent his vacation. The church had ready for him a beautiful new manse.

A most complete religious work building, a chapel at Milbrook, the mission of this church, and this commodious manse are the three building enterprises of Trinity Church under his ministry.

A crowded house listened to him at his initial fall service as he preached on "Christianity's Debt to the Jew."

Mrs. Francis Tappey, widow of the late Dr. Francis Tappey, of Huntsville, Ala., has been secured as executive secretary. Her training under the guidance of this progressive and beloved minister is her qualification for service to her Master.

A very definite program in all departments of the church will be inaugurated. W.

Pea River—The Pea River Church, near Clio, Ala., recently celebrated its centennial. For a few days prior to the celebration the annual protracted meeting was conducted by Rev. J. D. McPhail, of Eufaula, whose preaching was much enjoyed by all and much good accomplished. The centennial address was also made by brother McPhail and was a masterpiece; he took as his subject "Reddigging the Old Wells."

Dinner was served on a long table in the woods near the old spring which was the cause of the church being placed where it is, but just as the large crowd was beginning to enjoy a most bountiful and inviting "spread," a big storm came up suddenly and everything was thoroughly drenched. The afternoon meeting, which was to consist of historical, sketches, reminiscences and letters of greeting from former pastors, had to be postponed until a later date.

The July meeting is the great annual event with this congregation; it is the home-coming time and a kind of religious and social festival. An unusually large crowd was present this year and relatives and friends enjoyed the renewal of mutual love and friendship.

Pea River Church is one of the oldest religious organizations in the state and has the distinction of being the largest country congregation in the Synod of Alabama. She is the mother of Presbyterianism in this section and after sending out three colonies, she is still a vigorous church and maintains three Sunday Schools.

The original founders came from the Carolinas and you find such Scotch names as McEachern, McRae, McLean, McDonald, McKinnon, McKee, Baxter, Cameron, Currie, Patterson, Shaw, etc.

We trust that Pea River Church may ever continue to stand for truth and righteousness in this community and to the uttermost parts of the earth. Robt. M. Mann, Pastor.

ARKANSAS

Champion Hill—During the second week of September Rev. Thos. H. Watkins, evangelist for the Synod of Arkansas, assisted Rev. Charles Haddon Nabers in a revival in this church. Large congregations were greatly blessed by the earnest, spiritual and eloquent sermons that were preached during the eight days of the meeting by Mr. Watkins. Five new members were received into the church. An offering of over $60 was made for expenses and Synodical Home Missions.

Ouachita Presbytery will meet at El Dorado on the morning of Tuesday, October 9th, and will be opened with a 20-minute sermon by the retiring moderator, Rev. C. H. Nabers. Synod meets at El Dorado on the night of October 9th, and the docket of Presbytery has been considerably shortened in order that the business of the meeting may be concluded in a single day. Among the more important matters to come before the meeting will be the reception of several new members: Rev. F. R. Dudley, who comes from Tupelo, Miss., to take charge of the El Dorado Church; Rev. J. S. Sleeper, who comes from Hillsboro, Texas, to take charge of the First Texarkana Church, and Rev. W. A. Daniels who comes from Earle to take charge of the Junction City-Scotland field.

FLORIDA

The Synod of Florida will meet in the Presbyterian Church, Tallahassee, Fla., on Tuesday, October 16, 1923, at 7:30 p. m. Wm. B. Y. Wilkie, S. C.

GEORGIA

College Park—The building of this church is now more beautiful than when first constructed. It has been elevated three feet and commodious class rooms and auditorium have been provided below. The committee having this in charge were superintendent J. O. Stakely, chairman of the deacons; Leo Stillman and deacon R. T. Aderhold who was contractor and builder. A series of services were conducted the first week in October with several Atlanta ministers preaching at night. The work of the church and its various activities has opened up this fall most encouragingly. The members of the church delivered to the manse recently a dray load of good things that filled the larder to overflowing. They timed the pounding to the minute of the anniversary of their pastor's wedding. It was a happy event for which we are truly thankful to God and our good people. J. W. Stokes.

LOUISIANA

The Synod of Louisiana will meet in the St. Charles Avenue Church, New Orleans, on Tuesday, November 20, 1923, at 8 p. m., and not in Alexandria, November 21st, at 7:30 p. m., as stated erroneously in the Minutes of the General Assembly, inside page of back cover. Louis Voss, S. C.

TENNESSEE

Memphis, Second Church—Mr. Alfred D. Mason who is widely known because of his activities as a layman and a member of the Foreign Mission Committee, celebrated during the past week, his 27th anniversary as superintendent of the Second Presbyterian Sunday School. The Sunday School has grown from 400 to 500 percent since Mr. Mason became its leader. In appreciation of his services Dr. Curry in behalf of the Sunday School, made a fitting presentation of a basket of beautiful roses at the morning service of the church. In response Mr. Mason asked Dr. Curry to lead in prayer and in a few words, modestly gave credit for the work which has been done to his associates and asked for the continuation of attendance in support of the Church and Sunday School.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Central Church of Washington—The pastor, Rev. Dr. James H. Taylor, was in Annapolis, Sunday, September 23d, where he preached to the United States Naval Academy. His pulpit was supplied morning and night by Rev. Dr. W. J. McMillan, of the Maryland Avenue Presbyterian Church, of Baltimore. A. H.

Educational

Queens College—Sunday evening in the college chapel an impressive "Recognition Service" was held for the new students. Dressed in white the girls marched in single file around the chapel lighting candles from other candles held by the officers and cabinet of the "Y." Forming a circle they sang "Blest be the tie that binds" followed by "Onward Christian Soldiers." Dr. Frazer made an impressive talk on "The Source of Light" and the meeting closed with the singing of "The Light of Life."

Queens College Student Government Association is composed of the following officers, Miss Aletha Bracey, president; Miss Carolyn Rogers, first vice-president; Miss Marie Bethune, second vice-president; Miss Sara Thomas, secretary; Miss Mary Emma Frazer, treasurer. Following are the class representatives in the association: Senior class, Misses Lois Rogers and Virginia Perryman; Junior class, Misses Mildred Campbell and Annie Hammiter; Sophomore class, Winnie Smith; Freshman class, Mary Scurry; Specials, Alice Gibbon. The faculty advisory board is composed of Dr. W. H. Frazer and Miss Sallie McLean, dean and Miss Florence Stone of the faculty.

On Friday the school will have a half holiday—College Day—and the entire student body will attend the Exposition.

Davidson—Making use of his first opportunity since the opening of college to address the students, pastor Rev. Dr. C. M. Richards on Sunday last brought to them a strong virile and stirring message based on Gen. 12:1, the command to Abraham that he should go out and away from his father's house. The significance of a similar departure of the young man of today as he enters college and the possibilities for good to a waiting and needy world that will come into actuality and be realized by those that imitate the faith and the courage of Abraham were forcefully and earnestly set forth.

Announcement is made from the campus of Homecoming Week to be celebrated on October 13th, the events of special interest to be a football game with the Citadel cadets of Charleston and at a later hour in the evening a "Stunt" carnival, this to be a substitute for the festivities connected with Senior Speaking Week.

Athletics of course is attracting its full share of attention, but likewise too academic work proper, the four literary societies, debating clubs, journalistic and scientific organizations and not least, but rather all embracing in its reach of the students the Y. M. C. A., whose leaders are wide-awake and are introducing as often as conditions warrant new ideas and new plans by which to increase the efficiency of the association and make it more and more a blessing to the student body.

The Davidsonian, this year an 8-page paper, printed at the offices of the Presbyterian Standard, is itself, a fine advertisement of Davidson's prosperity.

Greenbriar College—Every room in the new dormitory at Greenbriar College has been taken this year. The boarding students represent nine different states, the District of Columbia and one foreign country as well. One girl comes all the way from New Orleans, La.; another from Griffin, Ga.; and another from Ohio. This is the third year that Grace Chay, of Korea, has been a student in the school.

Full Freshman college work is being offered and there are 26 students applying for this work. This enrollment seems a promising beginning for the new college.

On the first Saturday evening after the opening of the college, the Y. W. C. A. entertained the faculty and students at a roof-garden welcome party. The girls sang familiar songs and played Charades and other games. Sandwiches and punch were served and everybody had a good time getting acquainted.

The Assembly's Training School for Lay Workers began its tenth session on September 27th. About 140 students have been enrolled. They have come from all the Southern states. The school opened its splendid new buildings and they are already being taxed to the limit by the large student body. The faculty and working force of the training school are perhaps better organized for effective work than ever before. During the summer Miss Natalie Lancaster of Ashland, Va., was elected dean of women and has entered upon her duties. Miss Lancaster is of a fine old Presbyterian family, received her education at the Virginia State Normal at Farmville and at Columbia University, and has been social director at the Harrisonburg State Normal in Virginia for the past ten years. She comes to the training school with fine equipment for her work and with the very experience she needs for the position. She will have oversight of the government of the student body and of the internal organization of the school. She will also be director of religious work, advising and guiding the students in their mission work and various forms of Christian service.

King College, Bristol, Tenn.—That the present session of King College will be the most prosperous in the history of the institution, is the prediction of the college officials.

During the past few months numerous improvements have been made on the college buildings, campus, etc. The Synod of Appalachia has the matter of constructing drive-ways about the college now in hand.

"The Mountain Tornado," King College's crack eleven, which attracted so much attention in this section during the football season last year, is in fine shape for the coming season. "Coach" A. C. Adams is managing the department of athletics this year, and under his guidance it is expected that King College will have the championship team of the Appalachian section.

King College boasts of a very strong faculty this year, members of which are:

Tilden Scherer, M.A., D.D., president; King A. Hagy, M.A., Latin and education; Orville R. Post, M.A., English and Greek; Frank W. DeFricce, M.A., LL.B., history, economics, and business training; W. A. Garrison, M.A., Ph.D., mathematics and psychology; Robert Yost, M.A., D.D., English Bible and college pastor; A. C. Adams, B.S., chemistry and biology, football and basketball; A. P. Berghauer, A.B., modern languages.

Agnes Scott—Under the direction of the Young Women's Christian Association, the College Sunday School is getting finely organized for a good year of work. Miss Victoria Howie, Abbeville, S. C.; is president of the Y. W. C. A.; Miss Frances Amis, Fordyce, Ark., is chairman of the Fellowship Department; and Miss Emily Spivey, Eatonton, Ga., is the student director of Sunday School classes.

The faculty representatives in organizing the work are S. G. Stukes, Mrs. Alma Sydenstricker, Miss Janet Preston, and Miss Ruth Pirkle.

The local college community numbers about 540 persons, and it is thinking of challenging the local Decatur churches to a Sunday School contest. These churches range in membership from 750 to 1,100, but the college believes it can compete successfully with them.

Peace Institute—Miss Margaret Wright, president Pi Theta Mu Literary Society, entertained the members of her society and the new girls Friday afternoon, September 22d, at her home. Those in the receiving line were Miss May McLelland, Mrs. J. B. Wright, and the officers of the society, Margaret Wright, Raleigh, president; Frances Walser, Lexington, N. C., vice-president, and Bleeka Cornelius Mooresville, N. C., secretary and treasurer.

The members of the Sigma Phi Kappa Society gave an informal get-together party in honor of the new students on Saturday evening, September 22d. The officers of the Sigma Phi Kappa are Elizabeth Oden, Washington, president; Earle Lawrence, Ahsoskie, vice-president, and Ida Stewart, Spartanburg, S. C., secretary and treasurer.

The Y. W. C. A. held its annual reception to the new students Saturday, September 22d. Supper was served at 5:30 in the dining hall, which was decorated with the Y. W. colors, blue and white. During the supper old and new girls joined in singing Y. W. C. A. and school songs; following this a party was held in the chapel, giving old and new girls a fine opportunity to become better acquainted. The officers of the Y. W. C. A. are Alma Harvey, Littleton, president, Elizabeth Turner McCullers, vice-president, and Mary Allen Morgan Mebane, secretary and treasurer.

Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Pressly were at home to the Peace Institute faculty at Wynne Hall Saturday, September 22d. Miss Elizabeth Moseley, a former Peace teacher, at present teaching in the Durham High School, was a guest.

The First Presbyterian Sunday School and Church gave a reception Monday, September 24th, in honor of the Peace Institute girls and faculty and the Presbyterian students of the North Carolina State College. The members of Mrs. M. B. Sherwood's Sunday School class and of the Brotherhood class were in charge.

Columbia Theological Seminary—The seminary opened on Wednesday, September 19th. The formal address was delivered by the president, Dr. J. M. Wells in the Shandon Presbyterian Church, at 8 p. m., and was followed by a reception given by the church to the faculty and students.

In his opening address Dr. Wells stressed the importance of the demand for good preachers, with distinct emphasis on good. In defining his subject, he gave to the student body a very lofty conception of their calling, indicating, however, the many means placed at their command in helping them attain such ideals.

The work of the seminary has gotten well under way. All of the members of the faculty are in their places with the exception of Dr. Henry Alexander White, who is detained in his home in Richmond on account of ill health. His classes in New Testament Exegesis will be taken care of by various members of the faculty.

The student body is well organized as to its activities:

Frank W. Langham, president student body; Carl W. McMurray, secretary and chairman of campus religious life; A. W. Dick, student manager of the dining hall, and state president student volunteers; R. M. Dickson, local leader of the student volunteer band; H. N. Alexander, president of the society for missionary inquiry; Mr. E. A. Beaty, chairman of committee on student preaching.

Among the students there is one of unusual interest in Mr. Alois Edward Tregler, who comes to us from Czecho-Slovakia, of the Bohemian Brethren, which is the Presbyterian Church of that country. He has already attended a seminary in Prague and, while he knows little English, he readily understands much that is said. He is a fine musician, having graduated at a conservatory of music. Although he is only 23 years old, he is a veteran of the World War, and one who has suffered many hardships, even imprisonment for the Protestant faith in that new republic. He converses quite well in German, French and Italian. He and his companion, who is at Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, arrived in the United States on the 12th of August.

Centre College, Danville, Ky.—Centre College opened its 104th year on September the 11th.

The Freshmen matriculated on the 6th, and attended the matriculation lectures until the 11th.

The enrollment is continuing at this date and indicates the largest enrollment in the history of the college.

There are 38 men in the Senior class, almost 100 per cent gain over the Senior class of the last two years.

The Freshman class will enroll 125. The mortality in the last years enrollment as indicated by this registration has been very greatly reduced.

Hampden-Sidney College opened on Wednesday, September 12th, with the brightest prospects of her history. The enrollment is well over the 200 mark, and there are others to come. The faculty is the largest and the ablest that Hampden-Sidney has ever had. Professor Macon Reed, head of the department of mathematics, has been elected to the office of dean, in addition to his other duties. Professor David C. Wilson, M.A., of Princeton University, has the chair of Greek and German. Professor W. L. Bell, recently of Johns Hopkins, has the chair of French. Professor D. M. Allen, just completing his work for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy at Harvard University, has the new chair of Philosophy and Psychology. Up to this time philosophy and psychology have been combined with the chair of English Bible, but now Dr. Massey will give his entire time to Bible, and Dr. Allan will teach the separate chair of philosophy and psychology. Dr. Allen's great passion is to teach Philosophy and Psychology from the Christian view-point, and in his hands the work of the chair will be sane and sound. Dr. Chas. S. Sydnor, recently of Johns Hopkins University, has the chair of history and political science. All of these additions to the faculty are able, well equipped, cultured, and, best of all, deeply spiritual Christians. Never has the work of Hampden-Sidney been of a higher order, and never has that work gone on with more smoothness and efficiency than at the present time. The whole atmosphere is charged with enthusiasm and optimism. There is an unusually large number of the students looking to the ministry and medical missions. The Y. M. C. A. held its annual reception on Monday evening, the 17th. There was a large attendance. The Y. M. C. A. is starting off on a constructive program, and there is every reason to believe that it is going to be an increasing spiritual force.

CHURCH NEWS

TENNESSEE

On Wednesday evening, September 16th, the Second Presbyterian Church held the greatest prayer meeting in its history. There were 275 present. The meeting was in the nature of a "surprise" for the beloved pastor of this church, Dr. A. B. Curry, who the week previous returned from his vacation. To say that Dr. Curry was surprised expresses it mildly; he could not believe it was a prayer meeting, but it was, and in the words of one of the elders "the sweetest prayer meeting he ever attended." The crowd was so large they had to be adjourned in the main auditorium. There was special music by the Sunday School orchestra and also a special solo by one of the young ladies of the church. Aside from these there was nothing else that would not be had at any prayer meetings, the rest of the program consisted of hearty singing of old hymns, repeating of "precious promises" by various ones present, several prayers, and a wonderful talk by Dr. Curry on "Brotherhood."

In addition to much prayer which has been the key to the whole movement, ten captains were appointed, each captain having five lieutenants and each lieutenant personally phoning or writing 12 members about the prayer meeting. In addition, a letter was sent out from the church office to all families in the church. It is believed that the interest in this prayer meeting marks the beginning of a revival in this church and a new era of spiritual interest. There are still some 750 members who were not present. Plans are now being made to make the prayer meeting the freshest and most interesting service of the mid-week. To this end many are working and praying. They are going to stay in the auditorium.

"Social Visitation Day" will be observed September 30th and "Forward-Step Day," the regular "Rally Day," October 7th. Dr. Curry will preach the sermon September 30th at the celebration of the 50th anniversary of Dr. J. W. Bachman's pastorate of the First Church of Chattanooga.

VIRGINIA

Patrick County Field—Rev. C. W. Maxwell, of South Boston stayed over after Presbytery and conducted a week's meeting at Bethel Church. There was good attendance and considerable interest in spite of the fact that the people were very busy in the tobacco field. One member was received by statement and one by profession; the latter a young father, who immediately after his own baptism, brought his infant daughter forward to be baptized.

A WISE OLD HORSE

Long, long ago, before there were any automobiles, all farmers owned horses. They had carriage horses and work horses and all sorts of horses. Sometimes when the faithful animals grew too old for hard work and could no longer plow or draw hay wagons, they were sold to cab drivers in the cities, which is a sad way for a farm horse to end his life.

But there was a farmer who loved one of his old horses so much that he wouldn't sell him when he grew too old for the hardest work. "Instead of doing that," he said, "I shall give old Toby to Lucy for a pet." Then he laughed, because Lucy, his little girl, was only four years old. She was fond of pets and had a great number of them, but Toby was the biggest pet she had.

He already loved the little girl, for she went to the pasture fence and called, "Come, Toby, Toby, Toby!" and when he came galloping across the field, he was almost sure to find a lump of sugar in her hand. Then he would stand perfectly still while she climbed to the top of the fence and from there to his back.

After that when Lucy said, "Get up, Toby, get up!" Toby would give his head a toss and go stepping along, stepping along, slowly and carefully, so that the little girl shouldn't fall off; and she, hanging tight to Toby's rough mane, rode on, smiling and happy. Toby also liked to have Lucy walk up to him and say: "Good old Toby, good old Toby." Then he would put his head down low so that she could pat his long nose and brush the flies away.

But one day Toby and the little girl had a sad accident. Lucy was taking her usual ride, and Toby was stepping along, stepping along, slowly and carefully, when something unusual happened.

It was a warm day, and Toby made up his mind that he wanted a drink of water; so he walked splash-splash, splash-splash into the creek and stood there for a minute in the cool water and looked up the creek and down the creek. Lucy began to brush back her curls, which the wind had blown into her face.

Then Toby bent his head to drink, and in doing it, it made his neck into a steep hill, and he did it so suddenly that little Lucy, at the top of the steep, high hill, went slipping, sliding, slipping down the hill so fast that the next thing Toby knew his little friend had gone splash! into the deep water. It was a loud splash, too, enough to scare any horse.

The creek was deep, and Lucy could not swim and would surely have been drowned had not Toby been a wise horse. Before she could sink even once he bent his head and stretched out his long neck and picked the little girl up by fastening his teeth in her gingham dress. Then he walked fast, splash, splash, splash, splash, straight across the creek and up the bank on the other side, and there he dropped Lucy, soaked and scared, on the soft, green grass.

The hired man saw what had happened, for he was away up on a high platform, oiling the windmill. Down the ladder he slid as fast as he could slide; and when he reached the ground, he ran over the little bridge across the creek as fast as he could run. Then he snatched up little Lucy and ran with her to her mother. By that time, although she was still dripping wet, she wasn't frightened, but was laughing.

Toby came home at last over the bridge, stepping along, stepping along rather slowly, as if he expected to be scolded, perhaps, and maybe wishing that he could say to the family: "Accidents will happen." But when he reached home, he was astonished. The family came to meet him. They petted him and fed him with sugar, and patted his long nose and called him "Good old horse, good old Toby," just as if he were the most wonderful horse in the world. Lucy's mother put her arms around his neck and kissed him, the big brothers brushed his coat until it was as smooth as satin and combed his mane until it was soft and silky, and ever afterwards as long as he lived nothing was too good for him.—Ex.

THE STRANGE ADVENTURES OF CELLA LLOYD

"Just how do you spell the name Cella?" asked Clarabell, looking up from her work.

"I never heard such a name," said the little girl's big sister Doris. "Don't you mean Stella, perhaps?"

"No," said Clarabell positively; "I mean Cella."

"Ce-l-l-a, then, I suppose," said Doris, "but wherever did you hear the name?"

"Why, that's the name auntie gave my new dollie," said Clarabell.

"I didn't know that auntie named the doll," said mother.

"Why, of course she did," said Clarabell; "you read it to me from her letter your very own self."

"I'll get auntie's letter," said mother then.

The Lloyd family was spending the summer in a cottage upon Clear Creek Canyon.

Every day the children went for a swim in the crystal-clear pool down at Idaho Springs. But it had been a source of regret to Clarabell that none of her doll children could share her good times at the pool without spoiling their looks. Even her wooden doll Betsy, who was plainly marked "indestructible," had lost her pretty rosy cheeks after a short time in the water.

Then on her birthday had come a doll from her aunt. The new doll could float beautifully on the water. She had fluffy yellow curls that would not soak off and she was almost as large as a baby. With the doll had come a cunning bathing-suit, and Clarabell wanted to mark the doll's suit with her name in cross-stitch, as her own.

"Here is auntie's letter," said mother, returning to the porch. "I'll read the part about the doll again. Let's see, 'I am sending Clarabell a doll for her birthday, a sensible doll that cannot be hurt by water. Even her hair is waterproof—a cemented process. She is light enough to float—she's celluloid.'"

"There!" cried Clarabell triumphantly. "Oh!" exploded brother Dick, who had been swaying lazily in the hammock, "of course being a member of our family, her last name would naturally be Lloyd."

"Cella!" cried Doris dropping on to the porch step, where she sat rocking helplessly with laughter, "Cella Lloyd!"

"Oh!" said mother, suddenly seeing a great light. She did not laugh, but how her eyes did twinkle as she explained carefully that celluloid referred not to the doll's name but to the material she was made of.

"Well," said Clarabell, "I don't care. I think Cella is a pretty name anyhow. I can call her that if I want to, can't I? I've already told lots of the girls her name and I won't like to change it."

"Don't think of changing it," pleaded Doris; "it's altogether too delicious."

"Call her Cella Lloyd, of course, if you want to," smiled mother; "only don't mind if people laugh at it."

"Oh, I shan't mind," said Clarabell airily. "I like a joke, and so, I'm sure, does Cella."

So it was that the front of the new doll's bathing-suit was plainly marked in red cross-stitch letters, "Cella Lloyd, Idaho Springs."

And immediately Cella became a general favorite at the pool.

"Take good care of Cella Lloyd," laughed the lifeguard one afternoon when Clarabell with Cella under her arm climbed dripping from the pool and started to run toward home to miss a fast-coming storm.

"Indeed I will," called Clarabell over her shoulder. "I wouldn't have anything happen to her for the world."

"Sit here on this boulder while I hurry and wash the dust from my feet," said Clarabell to her doll.

Dick had waded in with rock a little pool where she could safely wash her feet at the edge of the creek before starting up the rustic steps that led to the cottage.

She had often left Cella safely on the big boulder, but never before had there been such a strong wind.

All at once a gust lifted the light doll and tossed it over the little girl's head. Clarabell jumped to catch it, but missed, and the doll, struck by her outstretched hands, fell not into the quiet pool, but out in the raging, churning water of Clear Creek.

Just one bereaved cry rang from the little girl's lips as the loved doll was tossed over the waterfalls below and then out of sight. Sobbing she ran home.

Little did Clarabell imagine that a passing motorcycle policeman heard her cry and saw her hands outstretched toward the golden curls floating down the angry river.

In a flash he followed along the river road. Perhaps the little figure might be caught at the next dam.

On his machine roared, his eyes never losing sight of the golden spot in the water.

Below the next bend some miners had been clearing out a fume box. The water was quieter here and the small floating figure was caught by some floating brush and swirled round and round over an eddy.

The oncoming policeman shouted and pointed, and before he had reached the spot the miners had drawn the brush to the shore.

One man lifted Cella by her curls. One look and he sat down and laughed weakly.

The breathless policeman hurried up, saw, dropped his mouth open with astonishment, mopped his forehead several times and finally he laughed long and loud.

The next day Clarabell received a note. It read:

"Miss C. Lloyd, Idaho Springs: If Miss Lloyd will get in touch with the Plumed Knight Mining Company office at Chimney Gulch, she will learn something to her advantage. Signed, The Mine Superintendent."

"There must be some mistake," said the family.

"Still," said Mr. Lloyd, "Clarabell and I might as well drive down to Chimney Gulch to investigate."

"Do you see anything here that belongs to you?" asked the superintendent as he led her into his office.

"My doll!" cried Clarabell, overcome at the sight of a somewhat disheveled Cella standing on the superintendent's desk.

"It was lucky you put your name on the doll," said the superintendent when he had told the story of the doll's rescue by the policeman and the miners who had taken the doll for a child, "else we'd never have found you."

"It was her own name," said Clarabell, "but we have the same initial."

"What is her name?" asked the superintendent politely, "You see all the given name was torn away but the first letter."

"It's Cella," said Clarabell. "Her whole name is Cella Lloyd. Some people think it's a joke, but I think it's a pretty name, don't you?"

"I must have a picture of you and your doll," said the man choking as he reached suddenly for his kodak.

So it happened that a picture of Clarabell and Cella appeared in the big city paper, with the story of the strange adventures of Cella Lloyd.

"My dear child," said Clarabell, looking at the paper, "my dear child is getting famous."—Mary Ritchie Word, in "Junior World."

and a candidate for the ministry, is leaving with his family for Richmond, where he will pursue his studies at Union Theological Seminary.

There is quite an urgent need in our field for a number of Christian teachers for our day schools, who would have a fine opportunity for service in our Church and Sunday School work.

Roy Smith, The Hollow, Va.

Warm Springs Church—On September 23d, Rev. J. T. McCutchan was installed pastor of the Warm Springs Church. Lexington Presbytery had appointed the following commission: Dr. W. C. White, of Churchville, formerly pastor of this church for more than 20 years, to preside and preach; Rev. W. S. Trimble, of Staunton, an uncle of our pastor, to charge the pastor; and Mr. Campbell Pancake, elder in the First Church, Staunton, to charge the congregation. Each performed his part exceptionally well, many remarking that it was the most impressive installation service they had ever witnessed. The two charges will not soon be forgotten by the large audience of members and friends present.

The Warm Springs Church is 100 years old this month, and plans are made to celebrate the anniversary on October 17th and 18th, by which time our new Sunday School building will be completed.

Tomahawk Church, in Winchester Presbytery, recently had a notable Home-Coming celebration, when great congregations of present and former members and their friends assembled in the morning, afternoon and evening of Sunday, September 16th.

Three sermons of unusual strength and appropriateness were the principal features of the program. Rev. John Calvin Siler, D.D., who was reared in this church, brought to the friends of his boyhood days an inspiring message on Christ as the only sure foundation of a profitable life. Rev. G. G. Sydnor, D.D., who, a year ago, won the hearts of the people in an evangelistic meeting, preached a strong, practical sermon on the Church. Rev. E. R. Leyburn, D.D., a former pastor, brought the day to a fitting close with a searching appeal for personal faith in Jesus Christ, "the same yesterday, and today, and forever."

At the Sunday School hour Dr. Siler taught the adult class, and in the afternoon Dr. Sydnor conducted a service of song and thanksgiving, during which letters and talks from ex-pastors and former members were heard. In addition to Dr. Leyburn, who was present, there are four living ex-pastors, all of whom were heard from by letter, viz: Rev. S. M. Engle, Rev. J. C. Leps, Rev. R. V. Lancaster, Jr., and Rev. B. H. Franklin. Two of the former members, the Hon. Wilbur Thomas and Mr. Hamilton Shipper, gave striking testimony to the saving influence of the old church in their lives.

Mr. L. A. McMurray, a student in Union Theological Seminary, conducted an interesting Young People's service.

Much of the success of the day was due to the efficient leadership of Mrs. G. C. Pearrell, who, while not a member of this church, is of great help in its work. The singing at all the services was hearty and uplifting. The ladies of the congregation served a bountiful dinner and supper.

Although the day surpassed the most sanguine expectations, not only in the way of good-fellowship, but especially in spiritual value. The old church, with its 150 years of history, seemed to be calling pastor and people to more consecrated effort, that its future may be worthy of its honored past.

WEST VIRGINIA

Marlinton—This church has had the privilege of having C. Morton Hanna, of the Middle Class of Louisville Seminary as pastor's assistant for the summer. Mr. Hanna has done most efficient work especially in the outpost work of the church. The church has been able to do some intensive work that it could not have done otherwise. The work at Buckeye has been developed sufficiently to organize the members there into a church of their own. Mr. Hanna has returned to Louisville for his last year in the seminary.

News of the Week

Henry Ford's much controverted offer to buy Muscle Shoals was wholly upset when the government sold to the Alabama Power Company the Gorgas steam plant—a part of the property—at a price of approximately $3,500,000. This development forces a revised offer from Mr. Ford if he wishes to bid for the remainder of the project.

The "Made-in-Carolinas Exposition" was opened last week with a military parade. The Governor of South Carolina and United States Senator E. D. Smith have been in attendance. The citizens of both states have turned out in such numbers that the attendance has been nearly doubled, compared with last year.

America's open handed sympathy in Japan's sorest need will forever drive from the Japanese mind all thoughts of "American aggressiveness in the far east," Ambassador Hanihara said in an address before the opening session of the American Red Cross annual convention.

The strike of New York pressmen is over and the New York papers have resumed publication under their own names.

An increase in the tariff duty on wheat as a means of assisting western producers of that commodity was suggested by Representative Anderson, republican, Minnesota, who discussed the agricultural situation with President Coolidge at the White House.

President Coolidge and his cabinet again considered ways and means to improve the situation in the wheat growing regions of the United States. Secretary Wallace made a partial report on a survey he undertook at the suggestion of the President. Three plans are being considered. First, to encourage the production of other crops until the demand abroad for wheat increases; second, to adjust the tariff duty to keep down foreign competition; and third, to get the railroads to reduce freight rates on wheat and flour intended for exportation.

The state corporation commission submitted to Governor Morrison a report on the proposed lease of the Carolina, Clinchfield and Ohio, which avoids a recommendation, but which favors in purport its consolidation with the Atlantic Coast Line. The report received the approval of the governor and will be placed before the interstate commerce commission as setting forth the official attitude of North Carolina.

Supervision of the coal industry through a specially created division of the interstate commerce commission was recommended to President Coolidge by the coal commission in its final report. Declaring that in the life of the average citizen the problem of fuel is subsidiary only to "food and water," the commission urged that it be handled by "an effective agency, with sufficient funds, experience, and powers at its disposal" and charged with direct responsibility.

According to former Representative Jno. H. Small, the much-talked-of solution of the coal problem by Governor Pinchot amounts to very little. The consumers will have to pay more for fuel.

The mayor of Johnstown, Penna., having ordered from the town all negroes who have not lived there for a certain number of years, J. S. Wannamaker, president of the American Cotton Association, takes up cudgels in their behalf, and offers to furnish legal defense for innocent blacks.

Senator Oscar W. Underwood, Alabama's candidate for the democratic presidential nomination, denies having asserted recently in Chicago that he was "no longer a strong advocate of the league of nations." He added he had not been discussing the league "because that is not an issue." "My views of the league of nations are well known," he said. "I voted for the Versailles treaty without reservations, which included the league of nations covenant. I have no apologies now for my action then."

That way to world peace, peace that will be based on the fourteen points enunciated by President Woodrow Wilson, at Paris, and the means for the stabilization of the European markets for this country, lies open to the American people, if the leadership of this country has the courage and honesty of purpose to say that America stands for "the peace of God," declared Senator Oscar W. Underwood, of Alabama, addressing more than 400 members of the Charlotte Chamber of Commerce and invited guests from cities in the two Carolinas.

John H. Small is for Underwood for President. He thinks that the time has come for Southern recognition, and that his nomination would discard sectional fear.

DR. FRANK ROBINSON

Whereas God in His all-wise providence has called home our senior elder and "father in our church," Dr. Frank Robinson, we, the session of the Lowell Presbyterian Church do hereby resolve:

First, That the church has lost one who was universally loved, who was honored with positions of trust and leadership, whose presence seemed indispensable and whose loss in consequence appears irreparable.

Second, That the session has lost one whose council and guidance was wisdom and love.

Third, That a copy of these resolutions be presented to Mrs. Robinson and a copy be spread upon the minutes of the session and copies be furnished the church papers for publication.

Fourth, That we extend to his family our deepest Christian sympathy in their sorrow with the assurance that we share their loss and suffer with them in their bereavement, but are comforted in the abiding confidence that he has entered upon the rewards of the faithful.

"With us his name shall live

Through long succeeding years,
Embalmed with all our hearts can give,

Our praises and our tears."

Story and Incident

THE GIRL WHO CLIMBED A STONE WALL

Della Dimmitt, in The Epworth Herald

Joyce from hospital room 15 looked out through clear, wide windows on to the bit of lawn where a few convalescents in wheel chairs lay basking in the warm spring sunshine.

There was the gaunt old woman who looked as though she were about done for and wished she were out of everybody's way.

There was the very long young civil engineer who pulled his cap low over his eyes and stared gloomily ahead as though not liking what he saw there.

There was the little girl with the crooked back the doctors were trying their best to make straight, lying so patiently, believing in a day coming when she would walk and run as the other children.

And last of all there was the young mother in whose limbs had settled a strange and stubborn malady the doctors had as yet found no means to combat.

Joyce knew them all from seeing them there so often. She felt a sort of kinship—the kinship of pain—for them.

"I wish you'd tell that lady who can't walk to cheer up," she said to the nurse who was freshening up her bed. "Why, all the bright things she has are submerged in the one thing she can't have. Of course it's hard to have to put up with those useless sticks but why doesn't she think of that darling baby sitting there so contentedly in its nurse's arms, sucking its mite of a thumb? I declare that woman makes me tired. I wish you'd tell her so for me."

"I just believe I will," said the nurse. "I'll tell her, too, that you called her legs 'useless sticks.' She's got to be shaken out of that apathy before the doctors have half a chance with her. I wish I could distribute some of your spirit among those depressed human beings out there. Except for that little girl, they are all enough to make any nurse throw up her job. They simply won't try to do one thing to help themselves."

"And do you think I'm different from them? Joyce asked as though it were the most casual thing in the world.

"Different! I should say you are different. Why, you would dig your toe-nails into a perpendicular stone wall and try to pull yourself up—that's the kind you are."

Was she that kind? Joyce meditated that after the nurse had gone out. She had so bitterly fought the first suggestion that she come to the hospital, mainly on account of the expense. And it had made frightful inroads into the hoard of savings accumulated through much self-denial during her three years' service as bookkeeper with Stearns & Co.

Joyce was an orphan, and life had been hard for her in the home given her by a spinster aunt who could ill-afford it and who had never liked children anyhow.

And then, when the long, toilsome grind of college life was over with her hard-earned diploma in her hand—Joyce had worked her way through—she had faced the world alone in a strange city.

Stearns & Co., had offered no easy job, but they must have appreciated her painstaking service. She remembered with real pleasure that Stearns senior, a cold man by nature, had said, "We hope, Miss Baxter, that this indisposition of yours will be of slight consequence. We need you. Come back when you are able."

"Make the new girl dust my desk," she said. "I hate to leave it—and you, Mr. Stearns," and thus lightly, with smiling eyes, she flitted out of the office, facing she knew not what.

It was easy to smile on the outside—to deceive even the keen-eyed nurses—but what about the lonely watches of the long, long night? Could she dig her toenails into a perpendicular stone wall and go up—up—could she? Joyce didn't dare answer that.

"I told her what you called her legs," the nurse said to Joyce next day, "and, say, but that woman was mad. She said it was a pity if a poor sick person couldn't sit out on the lawn without comment from the other patients. She ordered her nurse to place her chair in a new spot where you can't possibly see her."

"I hope she won't have the baby moved," laughed Joyce, "nor compel her husband to get out from under my gaze. He is good looking."

"I just believe I'll tell her that, too," said the nurse; "she may get jealous, you know."

"Don't let it come to a lawsuit. I can't stand any more costs just now," and as Joyce said that her doctor came in.

"What's all this racket about?" he demanded and he, too, laughed when he was told.

"She doesn't deserve a husband and a baby," scolded Joyce.

"You'd better be careful," the doctor admonished, "or that woman will be walking in on you and pulling every spear of hair out of your head, for she's going to walk," and as he said that the great doctor's jaw set with a sudden iron determination.

"If you're going to make her walk, why don't you hurry up and send me back to my job? I don't like such partiality," and back of all the smiling bravery in Joyce's dark eyes a look the doctor did not care to meet just then.

"Don't you like it here with us?" he parried. "Isn't Miss Minard good to you? I see you have some roses. Who sent these—the husband of the woman with the poor pair of legs?"

"No, it wasn't," retorted Joyce icily. "It was my aunt sent them. They're out of her own garden. She's coming to see me, if ever she gets her housecleaning done."

"A woman with a conscience, that. Good! Tell her to bring some more roses. I'd like some of these for that little girl out there. She hasn't any aunt."

"Take them all," begged Joyce. "O, please do, doctor and tell the little girl outside they're from her big sister inside."

"She'll like that," beamed the doctor in warm approval. "I doubt if ever she has had a flower given her in all her life before."

"Why doesn't that old woman out there who lies near her all day long ever say a word to the child? Even though she is sick, herself, she might make that much effort."

"O, yes, but did you ever hear of a disease called selfishness? It is quite prevalent, and hard of a cure."

"The young man I see out there every day must have a touch of it, then, for I never see him bestow so much as a glance on the little girl, or on anybody else, for that matter."

"How is his hand, doctor? You are not going to let him lose his hand, are you?"

"Not if I can help it," said the doctor, gravely, "but it will be a long, slow pull, and he's a fellow apt to get dangerously low in his spirits."

"Why doesn't he set about seeing what he can do with his other hand? I should think he'd be thankful that he had one good hand left. Why, I've read of folks learning to write with their toes," and Joyce was so fired with the saneness of her idea that she quite failed to notice the frowning scrutiny the doctor was just then bestowing on her.

From her window she saw the great man whose brain directed all the manifold and ceaseless activities of this huge hospital walk across the lawn and himself hand her roses to the small beneficiary of his own private charity. She saw the thin, childish hands reach eagerly out and then a colloquy took place of which she guessed the import, for the doctor turned the wheeled chair about so that it faced directly on Joyce's window. From his pocket the doctor drew a handkerchief which the child waved feebly in token of her thanks.

All afternoon Joyce kept glancing now and then out at the bright spot of color the roses made against the covering as the child lay hugging them closely to her breast.

"The little girl has sent you a note—she wants to correspond," the doctor said next day. He produced a folded scrap of paper. "It's safer for you," he went on, "than writing notes to married men, as I warrant you'll be doing next if that woman permits her good-looking husband to stray past your window any more. And what is more, I offered your suggestion to the civil engineer down there, and he said something under his breath which I couldn't quite catch. No doubt, since he knows the suggestion emanated from you, he will seek revenge in some way. The words he muttered would indicate it. O, you are in for it, all right."

The doctor went over to study the chart and Joyce, unfolding the scrap of paper, read in a wobbly childish hand, "I love you." She was smiling to herself when the doctor turned around.

"I see you cried in the night," he said, looking piercingly at Joyce through his great steel-rimmed spectacles. "What was that for?"

"O, did she put that down?" hastily exclaimed Joyce. "I don't know, doctor—just to disobey orders, I guess. But I got a notion somehow you were going to do something more to me—break a bone, maybe, just to see if you could mend it, and I—well, I went all to pieces. You're not thinking of taking me into the operating room again, are you?"

The doctor came back from his study of the chart and seated himself in the chair beside Joyce's bed. He was a large man every way, large in bone, in muscle, in innate power. It seemed to Joyce at that instant as she lay there, something clutching at her heart, that the doctor's mere physical presence overshadowed and overwhelmed everything in creation.

"If I saw that there was a chance to reach your difficulty through another and more searching operation, wouldn't you face it?"

The face on the pillow turned to a deadly whiteness.

"Let me think it over first, doctor," she begged with dry, parched lips.

"No, let there be no thinking, none whatever." All the brusqueness, all the badinage had dropped out of the big full voice, leaving only an exceeding gentleness, the gentleness of the strong man who comprehends.

"Is it absolutely necessary, doctor?"

"Absolutely." There was still the gentleness, but no suggestion of compromise. "It is but fair that I should tell you—it is the chance left you to escape a life of invalidism."

When the nurse came in again one glance assured her that Joyce knew that which she herself had known since the first indecisive operation. Once again the girl must go down into the valley of the shadow, her life hanging by a single slender thread—the success or failure of a daring feat in surgery resorted to only when there is no alternative.

For a little space Joyce lay white and still, then as though rallying some fine inner force she turned to the nurse with just a touch of beseeching in her voice, "Would you mind asking that lady downstairs if she will loan me her baby for a little while? I—I think I need the baby."

"To be sure I will," and straightway Miss Minard went out to solicit the loan of the baby.

"Good news," she cried on her return, "great news. The baby's mother can wiggle one of her toes," and she placed the baby on Joyce's bed.

"O," said Joyce, forcing a little piteous smile. "I am so glad. Tell her, I'll be having a jubilee all by myself on her account up here in room 15," and then she turned to begin acquaintance with the baby, brought up as regularly each morning thereafter as Joyce's breakfast tray, through all those days of trial while she waited—just waited.

Frequently the doctor on his daily rounds came in and found the baby there, and the baby would gaze up fixedly from under its cap frills in round-eyed wonder at the mammoth spectacled figure of the doctor, who never failed of inquiring, "And where did you get this baby?" as though it were invariably a new one fetched up from an inexhaustible reservoir of babies somewhere.

The baby helped a good deal those hard days and the queer, misspelled notes from the little girl helped, and any number of other things helped, too.

"They all like you," said Thekla, the maid, who would have fought for the privilege of bringing up Joyce's tray, one day. "The cross old woman, she ask me today, 'How is the girl what never get the blues? I would like to see that girl.' I wish she did, ma'am, for might be then she not all the time complain that the things I got her to eat is not good. It is easy to see why she is not liked. And so I tell the young man. He is not hard to please like that cross old woman. And what do you think, ma'am, today he asks me was you good looking. I say to that young man, 'You wait and see her in her well clothes.'"

"Mercy, Thekla!" cried Joyce in consternation, "you don't tell him things about me, I hope."

"And why should I not tell him about you the same as all the rest? I tell him about the cross old woman. I tell him about the lady what moves all her feets now. I tell him how many candles I have on the cake of my birthday. I tell him what Herman to whom I am betrothed send me for present, and why should I not tell him about you, ma'am, when he so kind as to ask?" and Thekla's round face was so expressive of stupefied wonder that Joyce could find no fitting answer.

So they had all heard of her—they thought of her. There was a something pleasant in that.

And presently the little girl was not the only one to send a daily message up to room 15. The lady into whose limbs the life was slowly creeping back began sending up some bright word of cheer. Once the old woman dispatched some choice fruit, and Joyce fancied that on more than one occasion the eyes under the gray cap strayed up to the windows of room fifteen.

It made her pain easier to bear, it lightened the long nights, it helped keep down the black thoughts about tomorrow—O, that tomorrow—no, she must not allow herself to think of it. Resolutely shutting her eyes Joyce would try by every means in her power to induce sleep.

And then one day she did sink into sleep, a very profound sleep, a deep and care-forgetting kind of sleep that lasted many long hours. Her last distinct recollection was of seeing the doctor enter all in white, with the air of a general about to take supreme command, then Miss Minard's cool touch lay on her, there was a pungent odor and next—she was coming out of a strange drowse—waking in her own snowy bed in hospital room 15.

Not for many days thereafter was she permitted to lift so much as a finger.

But a day did come when she was pronounced out of danger, the last desperate expedient in surgery for cases of her kind a complete, a glorious success. She would be well, sound, fit again!

The great doctor himself, beaming with joy at the outcome, told her that, "Were you very much afraid?" he asked.

"Afraid? O, yes," honestly confessed Joyce, "but what was I to do other than submit?"

"Submit—ah, yes—there you have it, the secret of your body's successful resistance. When you could no longer fight, you laid down your arms in peaceful, quiet submission. They all know it—all these folks here in the hospital—and you have been a lesson to them in courage, in patience, in serenity of spirit.

"That young man is no longer glooming with despairing eyes into the future. He remembers what you said about his having a good left hand—he may be surprised yet at finding that he has a perfectly good right one, too. That old woman, old as she is, has begun to see beyond herself. She is taking an interest in the little girl, and I shouldn't be greatly surprised if that child will yet find a home with her, and love and care.

"And to you is the credit for all this largely due. A spirit such as yours can never know defeat. You have interpreted anew to some of us grown callous the meaning of pain. It is not always in punishment of sin. Sometimes it is for growth—for larger life—it is that the works of God may be made manifest in man," and the great and good doctor took his departure, followed by Joyce's glowing, grateful eyes.

Miss Minard presently came in.

"You must have heard some good news?" she said.

"I have," said Joyce radiantly.

"Well, I have some more for you. A box has just arrived for you, which I will let you open for yourself."

"From my aunt?" murmured Joyce. "That is twice she has remembered me, and today I had a letter from her asking me to spend my convalescence at her home. O, Miss Minard, God is good. I didn't know where I should go, or how I could afford to pay for going anywhere. And now more flowers. Why, this is the happiest day of my life—the very happiest.

But the flowers, as Joyce well knew the instant she lifted the lid off the long white box, were such as never grew in her aunt's old-fashioned village garden. These were roses—to be sure, but such roses—lovely, melting Catherine Mermots, a riot of tender pinks with golden glowing hearts—such roses as she had never dreamed of possessing.

Joyce gave a cry of rapture. Such beauty—and for her! Surely—surely there must be a mistake somewhere. But no—"Miss Joyce Baxter" was written on the box plainly enough.

"Can you solve this mystery?" she asked. Miss Minard laughed.

"Likewise the people who contribute to the support of the denominational colleges have a right to be informed thru their newspapers of what is happening at such institutions just as the tax payers have a right to know what is happening at the State institutions. The sooner the executive heads of the State institutions and denominational colleges learn that the campus is not a little principality apart from the balance of the world and that the friends and supporters of such institutions have a right to be kept informed of what is going on thru the public press, the better it will be for such institutions."—(Charlotte Observer, August 28).

Substitutes are generally more expensive in the end than genuine articles. Housewives have learned—they KNOW this is true where bakings are concerned.

Self rising flours are classed as substitutes for plain flour and good baking powder. The use of these special mixtures is very liable to result in false economy, failures and waste on bake day.

Remember there is a big difference, in many ways, between biscuits and other bakings made from these so-called self-rising flours and those made from good plain flour and a dependable leavener. Try the experiment—make a baking from each—convince yourself.

You will find the baking made from flour and baking powder far more attractive in appearance. It will raise higher—retain its full food value and taste better. For best results, do not fail to use Calumet, the Economy Baking Powder, and a reliable brand of plain flour.

Just think of it—the sale of Calumet is 2½ times as much as that of any other brand. It contains only such ingredients as have been officially approved by the United States Food Authorities. It is pure and sure.

You save when you buy it—you save when you use it.

CHINESE PECULIARITIES

The Chinaman shakes his own hand instead of yours.
 He keeps out of step when walking with you.
 He puts his hat on in salutation.
 He whitens his boots instead of blackening them.
 He rides with his heels in his stirrups instead of his toes.
 His compass points south.
 His women folk are often seen in trousers, accompanied by men in gowns.
 He laughs on receiving bad news. (This is to deceive the evil spirits.)
 His left hand is the place of honor.
 He says westnorth instead of north-west.
 His favorite present to his parents is a coffin.
 He faces the bow when rowing a

 To bore a hole, he uses an instrument that works up and down instead of around.—Ex.

Why He Wanted a Coffin

A friend went to the undertaker to order a coffin for Pat Connell.
 "Dear me," said the undertaker, "is poor Pat dead?"
 "No, he's not dead yet," the friend answered; "but he'll die tonight, for the doctor says he can't live till morning, and he knows what he gave him."

To the Pastors and Officers of Our Church

The General Assembly is asking every Church to make a determined effort on the FIRST SUNDAY OF DECEMBER to raise by a Special Offering at least $500,000 to meet the most pressing Equipment Needs of our Home and Foreign Mission work.

Complete information will be given through the Church papers and by direct mail. To any open-minded man it will be made clear also why this Special Fund should not be put into the regular Church budget, but kept as the LEADING ASSEMBLY SPECIAL.

Nothing can be done without the full and enthusiastic co-operation of the PASTORS AND OFFICERS OF OUR CHURCH. With their united support we can on DECEMBER 2d answer the pathetic appeal of our Missionaries.

WHAT WE ARE ASKING YOU TO DO NOW IS TO CLEAR YOUR DECK IF POSSIBLE FOR THE FULLEST CO-OPERATION IN YOUR CHURCH ON THE DAY SET APART BY THE ASSEMBLY.

Watch the mails and the Church papers for detailed plans and full information.

IN THE MOUNTAINS OF OLD KENTUCKY

The Church Keeping Step With Other Developments.

LOCATED at Phelps, Ky., is the Matthew T. Scott, Jr., Academy and Industrial School, a vital part of the system of Christian education in Kentucky.

It is in Pike County, the largest of all the mountain counties of Kentucky, and is 25 miles from Pikeville, the county seat. Within a radius of 15 miles from Phelps, not less than 5,000 people are living, into whose communities the Christian influence from this center is constantly flowing. It is favored of God with a wonderful opportunity in this hour when the long sleep of the mountains is broken and eager souls are reaching out for the light.

For many years the church at Phelps has had no building, worshipping in the small chapel room of the Academy. But now as the material development of the coal and timber fields is going on so swiftly, the leaders in the church have seen in it a challenge to their faith and have undertaken to build a church which will draw to the Master's service many more of the people there who are now more than ever before awake to the call of growth and progress.

The accompanying picture, copied from the architect's sketch, gives a faint idea of the new building. It will be erected in the beautiful native blue sandstone. The work is progressing splendidly, and in about 30 days the stone work will be completed. Carpenters and decorators will not take long, and it is expected that the next days of next October will see the house of worship dedicated to its sacred service. The Sunday School and Community Social Room are on the lower floor, and a commodious assembly room above for the regular church service.

An important consideration is the fact that Phelps, with the academy and the church, is a center from which are radiating lines of work which will be much strengthened by the new and attractive church building. There will be a new zeal generated throughout the whole field, and the Gospel light will shine brighter at Argo, and Woodman, and Devon, W. Va., and other points where strong missionary efforts are being put forth to help save the mountains for Christ.

The long years of quiet consistent service by Mr. Erickson and his associates have established the Presbyterian work firmly and given us the first place of opportunity in the teeming activity that now surges through the hills of Pike. And, as always, opportunity carries with it responsibility, and is freighted heavily with the duty of service to our fellows. The church at Phelps seeks to meet this great opportunity and to perform her full duty for the mountain folk and the incoming tide of workers, and most of all the children on whom rests the future of Church and State. She has stepped forward to line up with industrial and commercial progress, believing it her duty and rejoicing thus to honor the name of Him she is called to serve.

PHELPS CHURCH
Presbyterian Church, Phelps, Pike County, Ky.

THE LIFTING OF THE LOAD BY MANY HANDS.

REV. ALFRED ERICKSON
Pastor and Superintendent of Matthew T. Scott, Jr., Academy

The church at Phelps, as above described, is estimated to cost $10,000. Of this amount $4,000 is asked from the Church at large. There are Presbyterians and their friends whom God has richly blessed and who will be glad to have a part in so fine a piece of work as has been placed before us in this Pike County field. Some can give largely; others in smaller amounts, but if many will respond the thing can be done easily.

This request is made earnestly, prayerfully,—in faith that our Heavenly Father will bless the call and move His children who are able, to make thank-offerings through this channel. Every gift will go into the Building Fund and be an investment in the one big business of all Christians—to save the world for Christ.

THE SYNOD'S SECRETARY OF STEWARDSHIP

At the last meeting of our Synod there was an effort made to reduce overhead expenses by doing without a Secretary of Stewardship in the Synod. This move was fortunately defeated, and for the past year this valuable officer has been at work.

We understand that the attempt to work without his aid will again be attempted at the coming meeting of Synod. This will surprise no one who is acquainted with the character of the men who made the move last year. They are some of the most active pastors, men who have the real welfare of the cause at heart, and who believe that what they are trying to do is essential to the reduction of overhead expenses.

We not only have nothing to say against their motives, but we grant to them a sincere desire to help the Church and conserve its interests. They are not men who for the sake of carrying out their plans, are not amenable to reason, else we would not waste either time or space in any effort to convince them that they are mistaken in their conclusions.

They advance as their chief reasons against employing a Secretary to look after contributions and to spur up the churches to greater liberality and to systematic giving, that such work can be done by the pastor, elders and deacons of each church, without this expensive outside help; and furthermore that, even granting that the officers cannot do this work as well, the results of such extra expense is not justified by the increase in benevolences.

If either of these two points can be established, we are willing to give up the fight, and let the Secretary go. When we try to decide the question of the ability of the pastor and his officers to do a certain work, we must keep in mind that distinction of the old Scholastics between power "in potentia" and power "in actu." There is power in a stick of dynamite to blow up a house. It is there at all times, but it is only "in potentia." When, however, it is in the act of blowing up, it is "in actu."

In every man there is much potential power, but it will never do much good to the world unless it is in action.

The potential power of the minister, elders and deacons of every church is enormous, yet many a church has languished because the power was all "in potentia" and never "in actu."

If each minister, elder and deacon of our churches would work as incessantly and systematically as the Secretary, there would be no need for him.

A glance, however, over our Minutes will show that such has not been the case. For years we lived at a poor, dying rate, and not until the Every Member Canvass was inaugurated, were there results commensurate with the ability of the Church.

Again we confess that the expenses of this Secretary are large, especially so to the pastor who is living on a meagre salary. We must not, however, measure these expenses by those of individual congregations or individual ministers. The question ought to be, Has he increased the benevolences of the Synod enough to justify this outlay?

A study of the benevolences ought to convince the most doubtful that such is the case. We have steadily grown in the grace of giving, with the result that we stand high up among the Synods.

Then the plea that a Church or Presbytery has no right to take funds given for one purpose and divert them to another, will not hold in the face of the fact that every committee has to use funds given for one cause in furthering that cause. The committee uses such funds in paying the Secretary, the bookkeepers and stenographers, and no one calls that a misappropriation of funds.

We contribute to Synod's Home Missions, yet part of that money goes to pay Mr. Crawford's salary. It is money well spent, because he keeps us up to the mark.

We contribute to the Orphanage, and they use part of our contributions for salaries of the manager and helpers, and we never question this right.

We must, in considering this question, remember that we are not independent churches, but each church is a part of a whole, and that as one suffers, others suffer with it. The strong church may, as is claimed, do its own work, but not so with the weaker church. They need to stir up their pure minds by way of remembrance. We would commend to the pastors of the strong churches who opposed this work, the injunction of Paul, "Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others." Your church may get on without the aid of this Secretary, though we doubt whether you will get the best results. Think of the smaller churches, who through the help of this Secretary have been making such wonderful progress.

Remember that the Church of God is one body, and that "there should be no schism in the body; but that the members should have the same care, one for another."

ARE THESE THE LAST DAYS?

Our Premillennarian brethren have always regarded us as antagonistic to their views, yet when we analyze our creed on that score, we find that we agree with them on more points than we differ. It is true that we have protested more than once against that proneness of the over-zealous to thrust their views upon every gathering, and to place outside the pale all who do not accept every article of their platform. On the other hand we believe that our Lord will come in person and that He will come at such an hour as we think not.

We, however, are not experts in prophetic interpretation. According to our Lord's warning, we know not the day nor the hour of His coming. Even in considering the signs of His coming, we hesitate to dogmatize, though to any observing man it must be evident that we have many of the signs of His coming as predicted by Him. He said: "For nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom, and there shall be famines and pestilences, the earthquakes in divers places. All these are the beginning of sorrows."

Surely these last few years we have had all three of these signs. Famine has laid waste the people of China and Russia, pestilence in the form of flu has visited Europe and the country about us.

Of course in the past there have been famines, pestilences and earthquakes, but never before in such magnitude, such as has recently visited Japan.

It is to many a great temptation to be wise above what is written and to divide all time into sections, devoted to this thing or that. We have never desired to pry beyond the veil, but we are content to know what is plainly revealed.

There are some things that we do know, both from observation and experience. We know that this world is full of sin, and the devil seems to be triumphant. We know that Christ Jesus, born of a woman, took on Himself our nature, and that He is eventually to triumph over sin, and restore this world to redeemed man.

Some day, we know not when, He will come, the second time, without sin unto salvation. He has told us not to be troubled in spirit when these things occur, but to know that His appearance is near. He may come in the second watch, or in the third watch, no man can tell when. Let Him find us watching and ready to welcome Him. Let our loins be girded about, and our lights burning.

A NEW THING UNDER THE SUN

The Preacher in Ecclesiastes assures us that the thing that has been is that which shall be, and that which is done is that which shall be done; and there is no new thing under the sun.

Of course he was exercising the license of the poet. If he lived in our day he would find much new, and some new things passing belief.

Among the many new things of this age we do not know anything that will seem newer to the old-time Presbyterians than a Presbyterian dance. From time immemorial the Presbyterian Church has pronounced against its evil tendencies. The Digest of both Assemblies abounds in such deliverances, many of which were made when the dance was by no means as indecent as at this time.

Notwithstanding our past record and our reputation for strictness in such practices, it seems to be creeping into our churches, both North and South.

We venture to say that there is not a pastor in either branch of the Church who has not been confronted with this problem.

There was a time when failure to heed these Assembly deliverances was a cause for discipline. That, however, has become a portion of the past, and pastors in despair quiet their conscience by pleading the uselessness of the attempt. We are not blaming them, because as pastor we were guilty of the same failure.

It is bad enough for the members of the Presbyterian Church to indulge, but it is worse when the individual church itself officially endorses such practices. The Roman Catholic Church has long been guilty of it, and we condemned them. Then during the war when the Episcopal churches here and there turned their parish houses into dance halls for the benefit of the soldiers, we were shocked.

Now, however, we can cast no stones, as our Church seems to be doing the same thing.

The First Presbyterian Church of New York, of which Dr. Fosdick is pastor, has that form of amusement among other attractions for the young.

We hear a great deal about the great attraction this brilliant preacher has for the young men, and in view of this we are ready to believe that he has. The question is, Does this attraction help young men? However, this church in New York is not a sinner above all Galileans. We can only name a few more taken from a letter to the Philadelphia Presbyterian:

1. Last summer, the Young People's Society of a conservative Presbyterian village church in New Jersey gave "a pre-dedication dance" in the new $20,000 parish house.

2. A Presbyterian church in Philadelphia, a few months ago, at its annual congregational meeting and social, cleared the lecture room of chairs, after the business had been hurried through, and officially danced until after midnight.

3. One of the largest Presbyterian churches in New Jersey, when it dedicated its great parish house recently, announced in its official publication that "dancing will be permitted on certain evenings of the week, if properly supervised."

4. The Brotherhood of a strong Presbyterian church in New Jersey recently placarded its city and community in this wise: "A comedy and farce will be given by the Presbyterian Brotherhood in the High School Auditorium. Dancing after the show."

5. A Young People's Society of a Philadelphia Presbyterian Church holds its social and business meetings at the home of a member, whose father's barn the young people use as a dance floor until the small hours.

6. An Italian Presbyterian Church in New Jersey is advised to use its social room as a dance hall, in order "to hold the young people." The consecrated deaconess protested, but without avail. The authorities then accepted her resignation.

THE HOME MISSION DEFICIT

We are now at the end of our Synodical year, and we are face to face with the results of our efforts. According to Mr. Crawford, our superintendent, we needed for our work $62,082.81, in order to care for those engaged in it. We have fallen short $10,614.85. Those are cold facts, but if one will use his imagination, they represent suffering on the part of the hardest workers in our ranks. They trusted us to carry out our promises, and now they have to face this deficit, and to let bills go unpaid with their constant loss of credit and standing.

If these workers were getting large salaries, it would not be so bad, but they are not. There are no men in our ranks who work harder and enjoy fewer of the comforts of life than our Home Missionaries, yet now they find themselves in debt, while the Church of God seems unconcerned.

Let us do something to help them. Treasurers of churches will stir themselves and send to Mr. Crawford every cent possible. Then let pastors make a special appeal. If our people know these facts they will rally to this cause. At least let the pastors give them an opportunity.

"WHOM THE GODS WOULD DESTROY"

Though the baiting of Catholics is a favorite amusement with some people, we have never indulged in such an unnecessary method of opposition. In the first place, it is undignified in a Church paper and out of place in a Christian. In our experience, all that is necessary is to give them rope and they will hang themselves.

Our good old professor held that the devil is the power behind the Romish hierarchy, as only in that way could we account for the wisdom that has always characterized the schemes of that body.

As a general thing we have always endorsed his teachings, but in this instance we find ourselves questioning the correctness of his conclusion.

To our mind the Romish Church does more foolish things than one would like to charge to the devil, unless we refuse him the subtlety with which the sacred writers credit him.

From a contemporary we learn that in New York the Jews and Protestants agreed to recommend a school reader with passages from the Bible, mostly from the Old Testament, except the Beatitudes and the two major commandments. The Roman Catholics not only refused to take part in the making of this Bible reader, but they started a movement to defeat it. In Rochester there was held a meeting by a prominent Catholic society to defeat this non-sectarian movement. Such was the power of the Catholics in New York that the Commissioner of Education for the State prohibited the use of this Bible reader.

It seems to us that any men of ordinary intelligence ought to know that such measures always act as a boomerang and hurt the party using them rather than the party against whom they are used. Let us therefore, instead of abusing them, as so many are inclined to do, seek to find the good in the individuals.

We should remember that many of them are better than their creed, and that it is not fair to take the acts of a church as a whole, and hold each member responsible for them. If you give the church, as an organized body, rope enough it will hang itself.

The devil is very shrewd, and we can see his astuteness in much that this so-called church does in the realm of political life, yet on the other hand we are constantly impressed with the fact that he is constantly over-reaching himself in his efforts to help his own.

ALL THE DAYS

"And, lo, I am with you alway." Matt. 28:20

Yea, I am with thee when there falls no shadow

Across the golden glory of the day,
And I am with thee when the storm-clouds gather,

Dimming the brightness of the onward way;
In days of loss and loneliness and sorrow,

Of care and weariness and fretting pain,
In days of weakness and of deep depression,
Of futile effort when thy life seems vain,

When youth has fled and Death has put far from thee

Lover and friend who made the journey sweet,
When age has come with slowly failing powers,

And the dark valley waits thy faltering feet,
When courage faints before the unknown future

And the heart sinks beneath its weight of fears,—

Still I am with thee, Strength and Rest and Comfort,

Thy Counsellor through all earth's changing years.

Whatever goes, whatever stays,
Lo, I am with thee all the days.

DELIGHT THYSELF WITH GOD

God expects us to be whole-hearted with Him. The slightest reservation is fatal to full consecration. A silliness may hold the latch upon the door of the heart. Not until we open every portal will He in His fullness come in. The completeness of our surrender qualifies and controls the fullness of our blessing. God searches us with jealous scrutiny and claims complete surrender and living sacrifice. It is when we are Christ's that all things are ours. It is one thing to say, "Christ is mine;" it is much more to say, "I am Christ's." Let us be whole-hearted with God. For God is whole-hearted with us. The reason He asks a full surrender is that He may free to give us infinitely more in return. Like Solomon and the Queen of Sheba, He gives us back all that we gave and His own royal bounty added. He wants us to believe in His perfect love. It is a great thing to take the place of John on the Saviour's breast and count ourselves the disciple whom Jesus loved. We are invited to delight ourselves in the Lord; and if the Lord delights in us, He will bring us into our full inheritance "with His whole heart and His whole soul."—Ex.

"THE CROWN OF THORNS"

Among the wonder-plants of modern floriculture is one called "The Crown of Thorns." The plant itself bears the shape which gives it its name, and is studded thick with thorns. The flower is both delicate and beautiful. But the most significant feature of this unusual plant is that it blooms continuously. And this is a parable, too. The only crown which ever blooms is a crown of thorns. Sacrifice is the most fructifying thing in the world. There are few joys like the joy of a great renunciation. One does not need to trust the future to prove the truth of Jesus' word about finding one's life by losing it. One who lavishly gives any part of his life to his child, his friend, his age, discovers that he has "found" by "losing." The joy of Christ is perfectly plain. It is the joy of giving up; a joy that none can take from us because no one can ever deny us the ability to give. The crown of thorns always hurts; but, worn heroically, it always blossoms. Ex.

LOVE THY NEIGHBOR

To live in peace with one's neighbor is a desirable thing. It is the only way to get any satisfaction out of life. The Master said, "Love thy neighbor as thyself." That is Christ's law of life. A chorus of voices responds, "It is possible." That depends on which one puts first, love or law. We are not made for law, but for love. Failure to love one's neighbor is an omission that works infinite injury to the non-lover. A man is made on a scale large enough to so love his neighbor and his brother as to make that habit of life the law of his being. The human society of which we are a part has a constitution, unwritten may be, but real. It is the two emphatic truths given by Jesus, love to God and love to man. When a man does what God wants him to be, and what God is constantly working to make him, his enemy is changed to his friend and love has won. The working of love is purity, gentleness, kindness, perfect life.—Ex.

SECOND TIMOTHY 2:15

When Paul wrote his last letter—that to his son Timothy—he gave him some splendid suggestions. One of them was in this verse:

"Study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, handling aright the word of truth."

Which word is the most important in that sentence? Is it study, or approved, or God, or ashamed, or workman, or handling aright?

Isn't it the first? You must study to be approved of God, you must study to be a workman that needs not to be ashamed, you must study to be able to handle aright the word of truth.

Are you doing it? The Week Day Bible Classes told about in this issue offer you an unparalleled opportunity. Will you seize it?—Bulletin of North Avenue Church, Atlanta, Ga.

Redeemer, come, I open wide
My heart to thee; here, Lord abide!
Let me thy inner presence feel,
Thy grace and love in me reveal.

The moment you begin to speak of your humility there is none there.

THE UNPARDONABLE SIN

A Study of Matthew 12:31, 32, Mark 3:29, and Luke 12:10

By Rev. H. B. Searight

To my mind these are the most fearful and terrifying words that ever fell from the lips of the Son of Man. They re-echo across the centuries like the deep and solemn knell of a dead and doomed soul—a soul which has sinned so flagrantly and defiantly as to be past redemption. We could wish the Master had never uttered these tremendous and dreadful words; because they have undoubtedly a vast amount of misunderstanding, of melancholy, sadness, and despair. Religious melancholy frequently takes the form of believing that one has committed this offense, and is beyond forgiveness. Many good people have suffered grievously under this delusion, or obsession, e. g., Bunyan, Cowper, etc. And I have known such cases in my own pastoral experience.

Yet there must have been a reason for this hard saying. Jesus knew what was in man—the desperate depravity and diabolical wickedness of which the human heart is capable; and He warned men as well as persuaded and comforted them.

He here intimates that there are dark and mysterious depths of iniquity in the soul—black abysses of sin and rebellion, where lurk foul and malignant passions, and ugly and depraved propensities; to which a man may yield himself, and become so lost to all goodness and virtue, and so allied to Satan and his hellish works, that he will be deserted of God's Spirit, given over to a reprobate mind, and delivered to everlasting destruction and perdition.

II. These words of the Saviour do not stand alone in the Bible. Gen. 6:3, II Chron. 36:15, 16; Hosea 4:17; Hebrews 10:26-31; and I John 5:16, all imply the possibility of such a sin.

III. What, then, is this unpardonable sin—this transgression which is so great, so heinous and aggravated, that God will not, and cannot, pardon it? I say can not, because I think this sin leaves its author so seared in conscience, so hardened in heart, as to be "past feeling," incapable of repenting, and consequently impossible of being pardoned.

(1) It is not murder; though "no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him." Certainly not as long as he has hatred, malice and murder in his heart. But some murderers undoubtedly have so repented of their crime as to be pardoned—e. g., David.

(2) Nor suicide. Some good Christian men, in a season of despondency, mental aberration, and irresponsibility, have taken their own lives. The late Dr. Babcock was a distressing instance.

(3) It is no sin against Jesus Christ, the Son of Man, or even blasphemy against His holy name; nor the final rejection of His grace and salvation. All sins and blasphemies against the Son of Man are expressly said to be forgivable. Paul blasphemed His holy and blessed name, yet he obtained mercy.

Men may sin against Him ignorantly, in unbelief. In Jesus Christ, the Son of Man, the deity is obscured by the veil of His flesh, or humanity. He appeared in the lowly garb of a servant, and was made in the likeness of sinful flesh. Hence men might be pardoned for not understanding His true character, and divine nature and dignity. Only after several years of intimate association did the disciples discern His real nature, so as to be able to make the great confession.—Matt. 16:16.

(4) It is not sinning away one's day of grace; nor final impenitence. This is a fearful and fatal thing to do, and seals the doom forever. Bunyan's man in Iron Cage of Despair was in a most dreadful condition; but from the description I see no good or necessary reason to conclude that he had committed the unpardonable sin. His was not this particular transgression; but a long course, or progress in sin, resulting in spiritual atrophy; and the impossibility of repentance. Could he have repented, pardon would have been extended. The result was quite as fatal, though the acts, or causes, were different.

IV. Its positive nature. What, then, is this unpardonable sin? It is the sin against the Holy Ghost. More specifically, it is blasphemy against the Holy Spirit—a particular sin against the Spirit of God of so heinous and malignant a nature that the Saviour Himself in the most emphatic terms declares it to be absolutely unforgivable. The Holy Spirit, in this passage, denotes not so much the third person in the trinity, as God in His holy essence, or pure and perfect spirituality; as contrasted with God manifested in the flesh in the person of Jesus Christ. It is a conscious and deliberate insult to God in His pure deity, or divine and holy personality, as opposed to blasphemy against the incarnate Christ, committed in ignorance of His true dignity and divine nature.

The Holy Spirit in Himself is no holier or diviner than the Infinite Father, or the Eternal Son.

To wittingly and wilfully curse, defame, insult and revile the Divine Being is to commit the unpardonable sin. It is lese majesty against Almighty and Most Holy God—the crowning act of a daring and defiant sinner, which puts him beyond the pale of forgiveness—undoubtedly it leaves the rebellious and outrageous offender "past feeling," "twice dead," abandoned of God, and given over to reprobate mind.

Contributed

This state of spiritual deadness and indifference is not the unpardonable sin itself, but a consequence of it. It is also a condition of moral death, or spiritual atrophy, that may be arrived at by other routes; as by a long course of sin and dissipation, increasing in guilt and degradation, until the second death ensues.

The sin against Holy Ghost presupposes such a progress in sin and increasing of hardness of heart; but is not identical with it. Job's wife did not miss it far when she gave her afflicted husband the fiendish advice to "curse God, and die." Such a deliberate, daring, and devilish affront to the Deity is an unpardonable offense against the majesty of God.

While this blasphemy is a sin against the Divine Being as such, there is a propriety in specifying it as in a peculiar sense an offense against the Holy Spirit; because He is the Divine Person with whom we have especially to do in this age and dispensation. He is the author and giver of life, our enlightener, renewer, sanctifier, and comforter, whose office it is to convict of sin, to call men into the Kingdom of God, and carry on the work of Christ in the world.

There are kinds and degrees of sin against the Holy Ghost, only one of which is declared to be unpardonable. It is a sin to resist the Holy Spirit, yet every sinner, prior to his conversion, has been guilty of this offense. It is a greater sin to vex or grieve the Holy Ghost; yet what believer has not done this repeatedly by his trespasses and inconsistencies? If these sins against the Spirit of Grace were unforgivable, then who would be saved?

To quench the Spirit, or to do despite unto Him, approximates more closely to this great transgression, and comes so perilously near it as to easily pass into it.

The Divine Spirit is designated in the New Testament as the Spirit of Truth; as the Holy Spirit, or Spirit of Holiness; and the Spirit of Grace. He is God in His pure essence and perfect holiness and love.

Philosophical theologians like Augustine, Aquinas, and Edwards, identify Him with the Divine Love, considered as a personal energy, and an imminent and operative power in the world. To blaspheme, or insult and revile this Divine and blessed Spirit of God is to commit the most heinous and diabolical sin possible, or conceivable, for which there is no more sacrifice, or no forgiveness.

The Pharisees verged on this sin when they ascribed the beautiful and benevolent miracles of Christ, works manifestly and unmistakably wrought by Divine Power, to diabolical agency. Such was their bitter prejudice, deep malice, and their fierce opposition to Christ and His Kingdom of truth and grace, that they slanderously and basely accused Him of being in collusion with Beelzebub, the prince of the devils; thus impiously inverting the works wrought by the Holy Spirit of God—who anointed Christ without measure—to the black arts of the foulest and filthiest spirit of the bottomless pit.

This was so perilously near the unpardonable sin that Jesus proceeded to utter the awful warning in the following verse.

When men become so hardened and sunken in sin that they hate the truth, despise goodness and scorn and spurn the love of God in Jesus Christ, there is but a step between them and the second death; one audacious and crowning act of blasphemy will put them over the line and forever beyond the pale of mercy. These haters of God, and despisers of His purity and goodness, virtually say, "Evil, be thou my god," and henceforth have their portion with the devil and his angels in the everlasting fire of God's righteous indignation and wrath.

V. Inferences from this scriptural study:

1. Comparatively few are guilty of this terrible sin—at least we may indulge the charitable belief that but few people become so depraved and desperately wicked as to blaspheme the Holy Spirit. Charles II, the most profane profligate of English kings, seems to have been guilty of such iniquity. Some of the insolent Atheists of the French Revolution approximated this impiety; Nietzsche raved against Christ and His Gospel, and blasphemed everything holy in a frenzied and fiendish way to indicate his guilt of this odious and awful sin. Other hardened and abandoned transgressors have been guilty of terrible blasphemies against every person in the Holy Trinity.

2. Those who think they have committed this fatal sin, in all likelihood are innocent of it. Evangelical commentators and theologians are agreed on this point. Fear that one has sinned against the Holy Ghost, and consequent darkness and despair, are an almost infallible sign of innocency of such an offence. It shows a conscience still tender and sensitive to sin, and capable of repentance and salvation. Utter unconcern, absolute indifference and spiritual deadness, are the results of blaspheming the Holy Spirit, and being forsaken of God, and delivered over to Satan. Wherefore, "comfort the feeble minded"—or faint hearted.

3. But let no one presume on God's patience; nor assume that he is safe because he has not committed this unpardonable sin. Unpardoned sin will prove just as deadly—any sin persisted in, unrepented of, and unforgiven, will become fatal, and end in death and destruction. "The wages of sin is death." "Sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death." Sin is spiritual suicide. "Evil shall slay the wicked." Every sin dishonors God, defies His power, and aims at His dethronement—particularly the sins of pride and rebellion—and tends toward the sin unto death.

"Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish." "Seek ye the Lord, while He may be found, call ye upon Him while He is near." "Today, if ye hear His voice, harden not your heart."

A PROPOSED NEW STATION FOR OUR CONGO MISSION

By Rev. R. F. Cleveland

On the southern frontier of our Congo Mission there is an untouched tribe, waiting, pleading, dying without Christ! They are called "Bakete," but since they speak the Buluba language they are strictly our responsibility, for our mission is accountable for all Buluba speaking tribes. For many years the Macedonian call from this tribe has reached our missionaries at Luebo, delegation after delegation of natives having walked 200 miles into Luebo to ask for teachers. In vain they have been sent away with a promise that some day we will open up a mission station in their territory. In the meantime the missionaries have been praying for men and money to enter in. At the last annual meeting of the mission it was decided that the time is now ripe for the new station, that we must definitely call upon the home church for the necessary equipment to open up the new station. Is the Church ready for this new enterprise which will carry the Gospel to the remotest tribe of its remotest mission? The door is wide open now and here are some of the important reasons given by our missionaries why the new station should be opened without further delay:

1. Since the Southern Presbyterian Church has assumed before the world the responsibility of the evangelization of all the Buluba speaking tribes of the Congo, and since the natives of this new district speak the Buluba dialect, they are strictly our responsibility, and if we fail to enter into their territory with the Gospel, no other missionary society will.

2. They have long awaited our coming, and many times native delegations have walked 200 miles into Luebo to ask for native teachers. "How long must they wait?"

3. To send native teachers so far away with no mission station nearby to follow up their work, no permanent work can be established.

4. A railroad now under construction will pass through the center of our Congo Mission field but will not touch any of our present mission stations. The road will pass through the above mentioned new territory. The railroad passing through this rich and populous territory will cause an influx of commercialism and western civilization which, if unaccompanied by Christianity will mean worse than heathenism to the native and a lost opportunity to our Church. The new station will be near the railroad and will give our Congo Mission an unparalleled opportunity. The door is now open, our missionaries want to enter. "How long must they wait?"

5. A magnificent site has been found only 15 miles from Dibaiya, the state post of that district. The site has been visited by at least seven of our missionaries, including a doctor and two industrial men, and it is pronounced by them all to be a strategic point from the standpoint of: (a) Population, (b) Evangelization, (c) Transportation.

6. The station site chosen is in close proximity to: (a) Abundance of building materials, (b) Good water, (c) Splendid soil for cultivation, (d) Boundless pasture lands for cattle, (e) Railroad only half mile away connecting our mission up with South Africa!

7. The altitude of the site is approximately 3,000 feet. This is higher than any other station, Luebo being about 1,800 feet and Bibanga about 2,800 feet. Such an altitude will be favorable to the health of our missionaries.

8. The site connects us with Luebo, Mutoto, and Bibanga Stations by automobile roads recently opened up by the state.

The estimate drawn up by the mission under the ten years equipment program for the opening up of the new station and the ultimate and complete equipment for same amounts to $35,000, but the following is an estimate of the urgent and immediate needs for the first year to get the station started:

1 Missionary home -----	$2,500
Clearing and Improving site -----	700
1 Store House for supplies -----	800
1 Ford Truck for transportation -----	1,000
	$5,000

Individuals! Societies! Churches! Here is an opportunity to place a memorial church, school, or hospital in the very heart of Africa! Choose one or more of the above items as your part toward the opening up of this new station.

QUIET TALKS ON THE SIMPLE ESSENTIALS

No. 15—A Bad Get-Together

Standing may be making real progress. Moving forward is sometimes moving morally backwards. It's better to stand than move the wrong way. Keep moving, but keep your eyes open while you move.

The get-together spirit is one of the commonest characteristics of our time. In union there is incalculable strength. The Roman Empire, the Roman Catholic Church, are historical instances of the power of organization under unified vigorous control.

Our time is witnessing that spirit of organization to an unprecedented degree, especially in the commercial world. And it has come into the church in a marked way, and has done great good.

Compromise is the very genius of organization. That word is used in the good sense. It means the give-and-take principle, in active force, until common action becomes possible.

Yet—it is to be keenly marked, that there are exceptions. When compromise goes past mere method and habit of action and involves moral principles, it is not good. When it means giving up, or cutting down, essentials, it is distinctly bad.

There are some get-togethers that are at once recognized as bad. If a man has loose ideas of honesty you refuse fellowship with him. That's mere common prudence. You have no idea of a union that permits him access to your bank account. That may bring your dollars down to his moral level.

A young man may be personally cultured, with charm of manners and conversation. But if you know him to be loose in his ideas of chastity you wouldn't think of his fellowship even for an hour with your daughter. Such a social get-together might involve a blighted life for her, and a broken heart for you.

And so when a get-together is proposed one examines it rather critically, balancing advantages and possible perils.

There have come to be two broad groups in the church world, the conservatives and the liberals. These are both fine words. Really they are twin brothers born of a common mother.

True conservatism simply means a recognizing of certain things that are of the very essence. They are as unchangeable as honesty and truth and chastity. There is of course a conservatism that lacks the brotherly spirit and insists upon non-essentials. And that is not good.

True liberalism means a constant openness to, and an eager seeking for, every ray of new light, and every new bit of knowledge. It adjusts to these, but is utterly unchangeable on the real essentials.

There is a liberalism falsely so-called, that ignores essentials. Both true conservatism and true liberalism insist on an anchorage. That, once clearly fixed, there is fullest freedom and range of thought and action.

What are the essentials? In morals they are truth, honesty, chastity. There can be no union or fellowship where loose views of these are held.

What are the essentials in our Christian faith? History gives the answer. They are the things in which, in the early Christian centuries, Christianity stood in sharpest contrast with the whole outer religious world.

A supernatural Person, standing solitary in His human beginning, in that tremendous after-death event, and the power marked in His action—that was the throbbing heart center.

That Man's death, standing utterly by itself in its voluntary character, and in its distinctive significance as caused by sin, and as settling man's sin score—that stood out as sharp and clear.

The damnable badness of sin as treason against the loving God, a sheer bold setting of the human will against God,—the Man Himself coupled these two, the death and sin.

And the absolute necessity of personal choice of this outstanding Man as a Saviour, to settle the sin score, and make for present character, and fix future destiny,—this stood as sharply out.

And with these stood the supernatural Book in its two parts, telling the whole story, and making the greatest plea for free personal choice of that Saviour-Man. It was reckoned, not merely as a record of the past, but a living thing, in which there was a living divine Spirit speaking to man's heart and conscience.

These five marked the historic distinction between the Christian faith and its religious opposite. These are of the essence of our Christian faith. There can be no compromise on these any more than on chastity and truth and honesty.

And it is striking to note that, when all is sifted down, these five essentials mark the boundary line between those two dominant groups in the church.

Recently a leading voice in the church has sent out a ringing call for a church big and broad enough for both groups together, in most intimate touch.

Yet clearly such a get-together would be a compromise on the central essentials. It would be rank disloyalty to the Man who voluntarily poured out His life-blood for us. It would be breaking faith with the distinctive historic past of the church.

And, be it keenly marked, any such get-together would go to the lower of the two levels. Any moral union takes on the tone and coloring of the lower level group. And eventually the whole united group goes to the lower level.

Let there be the utmost spirit of brotherliness in contact, in helping the man that's hungry and that's down. Let the fine spirit of love permeate as the fragrance of a wild rose in June. Let there be the utmost openness to every new bit of knowledge and of light, and an eager seeking for these, and readjustment to them.

But let there be not the slightest shadow caused by turning from the simple few essentials which are the very life breath and blood of our Christian faith.

GOODLAND INDIAN ORPHANAGE

At a meeting of the board of trustees of this school, July 3, 1923, it was decided to ask the Synod of Oklahoma to take charge of this institution, assume complete control, management and ownership, also to perpetuate the same as an Indian orphanage.

This memorial was presented to and adopted by Synod in session July 17, 1923, which body at once elected a Synodical board of trustees consisting of 11 members from the three Presbyteries comprising the Synod of Oklahoma, while the school property, valued at $60,000, was also deeded to the Synod. The trustees organized, elected the following officers: President, Rev. E. Hotchkiss; vice-president, W. F. Semple; secretary, T. W. Hunter; treasurer, Mrs. J. P. Gibbons.

The Twenty-Seven Indian Boys and Girls Who Received Bibles and Diplomas for Reciting the Shorter Catechism

The school began as a day mission school in 1894, under the support and control of our Home Mission Committee, in Atlanta, Ga., having an average enrollment of 30 pupils. Through aid received from our committee and also from many church organizations and friends the school plant has reached its present valuation, has grown into a home and school of 139 pupils, with over 400 applications on the waiting list. During our last school year we received 528 applications, enrolled 148, 34 of our pupils were admitted to the church, 33 enrolled for life service, 27 finished Shorter Catechism, 10 graduated from the literary school.

It is just and fitting that this church orphanage for Indians should be permanently located in Oklahoma, the home of all the larger Indian tribes, and as it is now a distinct church school it will be enabled to reach a much higher standard, educationally, serve in a broader field of usefulness than ever before.

"HE SHALL GIVE HIS ANGELS CHARGE OVER THEE"

The Message of Dr. and Mrs. R. M. Wilson

God in His mercy has spared us, on the Empress of Canada, from the horrible disaster of Japan, for which we are very grateful. Our hearts go out to those in this great peril.

It is a picture that is indeed hard to describe or give any general estimate of. Before this letter reaches home there will probably be full reports about the matter.

I will write this message to let you all know what we have seen with our own eyes.

The first evidence of any disturbance to us was about midnight Saturday, when there came a terrible roaring and tossing of our ship; this we took to be the disturbed waters of some heavy winds, for the weather about us was clear. Sunday morning we read the wireless paper on ship telling of a terrible disaster, quite indefinite, stating that Yokohama had been wiped out and the deaths were many. One or two more messages came during Sunday, but not until Monday morning, when our ship was pulling up the coast near Yokohama did we realize the real terrors of the occasion. About 12 miles from Yokohama we saw a great smoke as of a forest fire, this being the oil tanks of a naval station which had been burning for 30 hours. Then pulling nearer we could see the smoke from all parts of Yokohama, and then ruins of the buildings.

Sunday night we could see the glow west of us, which was Tokyo burning. Our boat slowed down its speed and traveled very cautiously for 24 hours lest some new eruption had taken place in the sea, but they found that instead the sea was 40 feet deeper than before; this near Yokohama.

Our ship dropped anchor about one-fourth mile from the Empress of Australia, which was stranded as an anchor chain had become tangled in her propeller. The Australia was at dock and a large crowd were down to bid farewell as it was to leave at 12. At 10 minutes before 12 the sudden earthquake came and many of this great crowd on dock were cast into the sea as the dock sank.

As soon as the first crash came the buildings in Yokohama, Tokyo and many other parts were crumbled to the ground and in 10 or 15 minutes fire broke out in almost every building, fanned quickly by a very heavy wind that was blowing. In so many cases people were caught under brick, plaster or timbers and before they could get out the fire consumed them. A barber next door to the Grand Hotel got away and he told us that there were about 100 guests and about 200 employees of the Grand, and only about five escaped. A Chinese told us of 21 being in his restaurant and only one escaping. Practically every building in Yokohama was destroyed, most of them totally.

Soon after we stopped small launches from the Australia began to bring to our ship the refugees who had been gathered on it. The wind was blowing, a rain falling, and here these loads of people brought across in roughest weather to our ship. Some clad in night shirts, a pair of pants, torn clothes and with no baggage or anything more than what they had on at the time. Some had been left for dead, legs broken, and in every miserable condition; 1,400 of these miserable creatures were loaded into our ship and every nurse and doctor went to work to care for their wounds. Of course the ones more seriously wounded were burned or killed in the streets. Some had had no food from Saturday to Monday. Faces white, weak, and many having lost a mother, husband or all their family. One man estimated that of the 555,000 population probably one-third were destroyed. Of course time will tell more about this. It happened just after 12, when most of the business men were still at their posts.

We have been able to learn very little so far about the conditions in Tokyo, though they are not quite so bad as Yokohama.

Passengers on this ship began to hand out clothing until every person was provided with clean, dry clothes, the wounded all cared for. I have been working for two days in the ship hospital caring for the sick. We operated the first night on a baby whose skull was fractured. An old man, an old captain 68, had both legs broken above the knee and he is in a critical condition today. Most of the cases on board are with only slight wounds.

The officers and crew of this ship have done heroic work, taking on 1,400 people with no charge for travel, food and care. All praise to the C. P. line and her men.

An offering was taken on board this morning for these people who have lost all earthly possessions, and about $7,000 received. It may total more than this later.

We had hoped so much to get in Saturday, but what a great blessing we did not.

People told us of seeing hands, legs, and parts of bodies caught in the earth, under rock or stone, and in all a terrible sight. One man shoved me a set of gold teeth, he scratched from the ashes as he looked for his keys.

THE SITE OF THE NEW CHURCH OF THE PILGRIMS AT THE NATIONAL CAPITAL

By Rev. Russell Cecil, D.D.

The National Geographic Magazine for the month of September contains pictures and describes in fascinating fashion the plan of our government for making Washington City a capital worthy of this great country in the eyes of every citizen.

A Necklace of Pearls in a Setting of Emerald
Among the features planned by Congress for the beautifying of the city, few are more striking than the project to create a parkway through the city. This parkway will connect the lovely park that lies along the Potomac River on the south, with the park area that parallels the upper and almost mountainous reaches of Rock Creek on the north.

The Commission of Fine Arts, selected by President Taft, with the co-operation of Congress, in 1910, faced the problem of the disposal of the lower reaches of Rock Creek as it passes through the city before it empties into the Potomac. For years this stream so romantic, so clear and lovely, to the north of the city, had been forced to carry sewerage and its banks had been used as convenient of our new Church of the Pilgrims, to be erected by the gifts of many thousands of our people from all our Synods.

The hand of God which was so evident in the initiation of the effort of the Church of the Pilgrims to give a knowledge of the spiritual conditions in Washington to the Church at large and to enlist the united support of all our people, again has guided in a striking manner in the selection of the site.

The present utterly inadequate church building is located about two squares west of the Dupont Circle on Twenty-second street between P and Q streets Northwest. The parkway as originally planned by Congress ran within about 100 yards of this structure.

Seeking God's Guidance

During the past two years, while the subscriptions to the campaign have been maturing, the pastor, Rev. Andrew R. Bird, and his people, have been praying earnestly for the guidance of God in the important question of a permanent location for the new church.

A map of the city prepared by the Federation of Churches shows this section where the church is now located to have the fewest Protestant churches of any of the thickly populated parts of the city, there being only three other Protestant churches within an area of more

Then if the Church of the Pilgrims should purchase this additional 75 feet front, it would have a 175 feet frontage on the Twenty-second street side of the parkway and a 150 feet frontage on the P street side of the parkway. Thus the church, instead of being in the middle of a block as at first seemed necessary, would occupy the angle between the two arms of the parkway at a distance of about a hundred feet from the intersection of Twenty-second and P streets. (See sketch).

For the government, however, at a time when economy was the watchword, to be willing to undertake the part assigned to it in the plan, seemed utopian indeed. But the Church of the Pilgrims felt that the difficulties in the way would only serve to make it more clear whether or not it was the will and wisdom of the Father that the church should be so located; and rested their case entirely with a letter written to the Rock Creek Parkway Commission, in August, 1922. This letter merely pointed out the additional effectiveness of the parkway as a means of beautifying the capital for all the people of the nation who visited it—if the desired changes were made—noting the key position held by the triangle "A" and the desirability of having an attractive public building like a church facing the parkway.

God Reveals His Will Through the Mazes of Red Tape

The Park Commission, consisting of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of Agriculture, with Lt.-Col. C. O. Sherrill as their executive officer, approved the suggestion, and recommended the necessary appropriation to the United States Budget Commission, of which General Dawes was chairman. This commission also approved, and the bill was sent to Congress.

In the House of Representatives, however, this appropriation was stricken out on a point of order, i. e., "New legislation in an appropriation bill." It happened that this point of order was made by a Congressman, who was a friend of Mr. Bird's, but who had no idea that this legislation had any connection with any church at all. The Church of the Pilgrims, even when all seemed lost, determined not to use any earthly influence in this matter, but to leave all in the Father's hands that they might gain His leadership as to where the church should be located.

But the legislation did not finally fail. In the providence of God, some of the senators were sufficiently interested, to insist, when the bill came to conference between House and Senate, that this particular appropriation for widening the parkway at this point should be restored to the bill. It was done, and on the 28th of February, President Harding signed the bill; and the changed course of the parkway was law.

Possessing the Land

After thus waiting upon God, the Church of the Pilgrims felt that He had opened the way for them, and that to follow His guidance they must acquire the additional land. This they have done. They now possess the land and have a clear title to this splendid property. We Southern Presbyterians may well thank God for thus giving us one of the most outstanding and lovely sites in the capital of the nation for our Church of the Pilgrims.

Their Faith, and Patience, and Our Opportunity

We should all realize, however, that it required no little faith for the Church of the Pilgrims to make the necessary outlay for the purchase of this additional land. Every subscriber will rejoice that they showed this faith, and that they are patiently working to the end that this church in which all of us are interested may stand forth in worthy physical fashion in our national capital, even as it has stood forth earnestly for the faith of our fathers, and for sacrificial service in our Saviour's name.

Surely, He who has led so far, will lead some of those who have subscribed to increase their gifts somewhat, or those who have delayed in helping, to do so now, in order that this worthy site may be suitably surmounted by an adequate structure. Thus shall the faith which our Protestant forefathers fought and suffered for in the Old World, be better equipped for service, in this strategic, and contested center of the New.

"HE SHALL GIVE HIS ANGELS CHARGE OVER THEE"

And that he opened his safe only to see the last of his possessions pass up in smoke as the door opened. Another man went to his office to get some money, having probably $200 in the safe, and as he touched the key another quake came, so he left all and came away, leaving a wife and boy covered under earth, and only a small child left.

Well, I'm sure you will get more and fuller news, so I send this as a brief report of what we saw. We did not go ashore for we were not allowed to leave the ship. Much looting has been going on, they say.

These things be a warning to people to put more trust in our Father.

All on the Canada are safe. With love from us all.

Vicinity of new Church of the Pilgrims. Original site of the Church, lot 20. Purchased up to January, 1923, lots 19, 21 and 22 (except a garage in rear of No. 22). Recently purchased, in order to secure the corner of the Parkway, lots 23, 24 and 25.

dumping grounds, until it seemed that it would soon share the fate of two other streams which have been tunneled over, filled in, and lost almost to memory, in the growth of the city.

In this rapidly disappearing stream and vale, this group of American artists saw the opportunity to realize a vision of rare beauty for their capital. At once a large protecting sewer was built paralleling the creek to the Potomac, that its waters might be fresh and sparkling throughout its whole course. They also laid before Congress a plan for the complete development of this connecting parkway following the windings of Rock Creek through the city, that it might be as a necklace of pearls in a setting of emerald across the city. The plan was adopted and about $3,000,000 was constructively appropriated for its realization, various sums to be made available from time to time by act of Congress to consummate the plan.

The war, of course, delayed all such plans for artistic development, but the last Congress again took up the project and made available funds for carrying it forward.

Of Especial Interest to Southern Presbyterians

All Southern Presbyterians will be especially interested in this feature of the physical development of our national capital, since in the province of God one of the most outstanding points on this new parkway is to be the site than 100 city blocks, extending from Seventeenth street on the east westward to Twenty-seventh street, and from K street on the south north to W street, or Wyoming avenue. In this area are the British and several other Embassies, and a population estimated at 30,000 people. It therefore seemed that the church should be kept in this important and spiritually-needy neighborhood.

Waiting Upon God

The problem of securing a suitable site in this neighborhood where land is very expensive and for the most part occupied by buildings, was a very difficult one. After much prayer and study of the locality, Mr. Bird was led a year ago to take one step toward what seemed a most desirable but almost impossible solution of the problem; and then to leave the development of the matter entirely in God's hands without any further effort on his part.

The projected parkway, it will be remembered, was to run within 100 yards of the land now owned by the church. If the government should decide to change its "taking line" (as indicated in the accompanying sketch) and purchase over 20,000 square feet additional land for the park, including the generous triangle marked "A" in the illustration, it would bring the parkway within 75 feet of the present church property.

Korea—As the subject for Foreign Missions in October is "Korea," this letter from Rev. Dwight Wim, of our Korean Mission, seems especially timely:

The arbitrary division of mission work into four branches—Evangelistic, Educational, Medical, and Literary, is a familiar one. During the 12 months covered by this report it has fallen to my lot to have part in each one of these departments of our work.

From May until the middle of September I was acting principal of the Boys' School of 300 students. My term of office was of sufficient length to give me a keen appreciation of the problems in our education work; problems greatly enhanced by lack of proper equipment and sufficient budget. It was long enough, too, to make my welcome to Mr. Eversole as he took up the work again a very sincere one!

For two months in the winter before Dr. Timmons came and while Miss Kestler was on her vacation, I was placed in charge of the hospital. My duties were merely those of superintendent and treasurer, the actual medical work being carried on very efficiently by our two Korean doctors and the nurses and assistants.

My "literary work" consisted in a translation job assigned me by the Presbyterian Council. Two weeks were given to the completion of this work after it had been begun and worked on at intervals during a much longer period.

Of course during the whole year my regular evangelistic work has been carried on. More than 40 churches have been under my care, all of which I have visited once for examinations and administering the sacraments; and three-fourths of the number I have made two visits to. The usual time has been spent in teaching in Bible classes in the Bible Institute—always a delightful and inspiring part of the work.

One of the chief regrets of the year is that little time has been left for extension work among the heathen; though I have directed the Korean assistants in the work of carrying the Gospel to unevangelized sections. This work has been richly blessed—several new groups having been started. Another regret is the falling off in contributions to helpers' salaries and to the various church causes. It has been a most stringent year financially for the Koreans.

There is much to thank God for. About 80 souls have been baptized and received into the churches; 16 children of believing parents baptized; while 175 new believers have been enrolled in the catechumenate during the year.

Life and growth is evidenced in other ways. Several new church buildings have been erected. One group that had long since outgrown its small church has finally gotten together several hundred yen (50c) and purchased a nice large building which has been converted into a place of worship. There are more schools in connection with the work in this field, seven of which receive aid from the mission to the extent of half of a teacher's salary. There is a decided increase in the number of students attending the station schools from the churches in the field; one church 70 miles from Chunju sending five boys to our Chunju Academy. Two young men are attending the Theological Seminary in Pyeng Yang.

It has been a joy to administer baptism for the first time in new groups. One, in what is perhaps the largest village in Korea, is like the Church of Berea, literally "searching the scriptures" daily. Nearly every night during the winter the little group of new believers gathered to read and study God's Word. I was astonished when examinations were given to see the progress they had made in a knowledge of the Bible. The helper who heard the answers to the questions I asked, said to me, "They have answered like those who have been studying the Bible for five years instead of one." Surely God is fond of them who seek Him!

Suggestions for Auxiliary Rally Day, October, 1923

—The two important elements in a successful Rally Day meeting are the attendance and the program. Little is accomplished if you have a crowd and a poor program, or if you have the best of programs and only a few faithful souls are there to hear it! So let's first consider how we can secure a good crowd.

Attendance

1. Printed Invitations—Invite every woman in the church and congregation to come by mailing her one of the attractive Rally Day invitation cards issued by the Auxiliary office (50c per 100). Don't be afraid to use the invitations generously. Perhaps you would like to invite some friends of other churches as visitors, or some neighbors or acquaintances who have no church affiliations.

2. Church Bulletins—Have notice of Rally Day meeting in your Church Bulletin for at least two Sundays in advance of meeting.

3. Newspapers—Often the news section of your local paper is open for such announcements. Get all the publicity possible for the meeting in advance, and after it is over have it well written up for local papers.

4. Circle—Chairmen—At your executive board meeting which you should hold as soon as possible, confer with the circle chairmen and secure their help in getting out all members of circles on Rally Day. Perhaps the chairmen themselves would like to mail the invitation cards to members of their circles. Start a friendly rivalry between circles to see who can have 100 per cent attendance of circle members, plus guests who are possible members.

5. Advertise—Advertise the meeting by word of mouth! Talk about it! Let everybody know it is going to be a great meeting and you want them to come.

Program—Two programs are furnished in the Year Book. One on Korea and one on "The West." If you had Korea for last Rally Day perhaps you would like to exchange this year and take "The West" for the Rally meeting and give Korea for the circle meeting. Do as you think best about that. Both programs are good. If you wish, a young woman dressed as a "Cowgirl" may bring "radiograms from the Rio Grande," these being items on the West from the October Survey. She may wear riding boots with spurs, riding costume with handkerchief knotted about her neck and sombrero hat. Other articles on the West from the October Survey may be added to the program. Whatever program you use, be sure to call the roll by circles. One or two musical numbers may be used.

Accessories—Have the place of meeting as attractive as possible. Use flowers and greenery in profusion all arranged by the committee or circle on decoration appointed at the executive board meeting, but not necessarily from their number.

The committee or circle in charge of social hour should have suitable refreshments daintily served perhaps by members of the girls' circle.

The hostess committee or circle should greet arrivals if the meeting is in a home or usher them to seats if in the church. They may also see that strangers are introduced and all are pleasantly located during the social hour.

Use as many women as possible in getting ready for the meeting. The more people interested in and responsible for the meeting, the more certain is its success.

Souvenirs—If you wish appropriate souvenirs these may easily be made by cutting the outline of either a sombrero or Korean hat out of cardboard and writing "Auxiliary Rally Day, 1923" on it and running a ribbon through top so it may be easily tied or pinned to dress. The girls will gladly make them for you.

Last and Most Important—Set to work promptly with prayer and dependence upon God and your fellow officers in the Auxiliary, determined that you will start the last half of the church year with the greatest meeting you have ever had, and success will crown your efforts.

Begin now.

OLD MOTHERS

I love old mothers—mothers with white hair,
And kindly eyes, and lips grown softly sweet,
With murmured blessings over sleeping babes.
There is something in their quiet grace
That speaks the calm of Sabbath afternoons;
A knowledge in their deep unflinching eyes
That far outstretches all philosophy.
Time, with caressing touch, about them weaves
The silver-threaded shawl of age,
While all the echoes of forgotten songs
Seem joined to lend a sweetness to their speech.
Old mothers, as they pass with slow-timed step,
Their trembling hands cling gently to youth's strength;
Sweet mothers, as they pass, one sees again
Old garden walks, old roses and old loves.

—Presbyterian Witness.

Charlotte, N. C.—Monday afternoon, over 400 women of the congregation of the Second Presbyterian Church gathered in the church auditorium to hear an address made by Miss Mattie S. Tate, returned missionary from Chunju, Korea, who is supported in the mission field by the Woman's Auxiliary. Miss Tate made a most interesting talk on her work, describing the conditions and needs of Korea.

Following, at 4:30 o'clock, a reception was given in honor of Miss Tate in the club rooms of the church, which were most beautifully decorated for the occasion with autumn flowers and foliage, and potted palms.

At the head of the receiving line stood Mrs. A. A. McGeachy, wife of the pastor of the church, who presented the callers to the president of the Auxiliary, Mrs. Harry J. Spencer, who in turn introduced them to Miss Tate. Also receiving were: Mrs. H. N. Pharr, secretary of foreign missions; Miss Lilly Long; Mrs. James Parter, treasurer of the Auxiliary; Mrs. James B. Spillman, vice-president of the Auxiliary; Mrs. Clyde Sloan, secretary; and Mrs. William R. Wearn, a past president of the Auxiliary.

Delicious refreshments were served, and a very delightful social half hour held.

Durham, N. C.—We have just finished studying the Home Mission text-book, in the Woman's Auxiliary of the First Presbyterian Church, of Durham, N. C. The method used in the study of this book, "The Child and America's Future," was a change from our usual one. There were several features connected with its presentation which we thought might be helpful to some other organization.

The secretary of home missions, Mrs. W. F. Franck, had been studying the book during the summer, and had the work carefully outlined. In our Auxiliary, we have 11 circles, and each circle leader was asked to have the book presented to her own group of women. The various groups came together for two afternoons, taking five chapters in the book, with one, sometimes two leaders, for each chapter. The sixth chapter was presented on the third day, being an evening service to which all were invited. The secretary of home missions had dramatized this chapter, calling the little play "Begin at Home," showing how practical application could be made of the principles taught in the book. This was given in a simple, earnest and most effective way.

In the study, there were 146 women in attendance, there were 61 active leaders, and there were 60 text-books used. One of the circles went to a mission church and studied the book with the women of that church.

The book proved to be most interesting, and we consider the class a great success, both from the standpoint of the number of women who were interested and the leadership developed.

Steele Creek Church has this item on its calendar: "Hats off to the Ladies' Auxiliary again, for they have given the manse a new coat of paint, for which the occupants are very thankful."

Auxiliary Notes from Hickory—Mrs. E. F. Reid Synodical president, and Mrs. Z. V. Turlington, Presbyterial president, are to be guests of honor at the October Auxiliary rally meeting.

The executive committee has made plans for an active campaign for "Church Paper Week." The enrollment in the home mission study class promises to be the largest in the history of the Auxiliary.

The September meeting was in the nature of a Japanese tea party. At this meeting Mrs. R. B. Peery, a Lutheran missionary for 14 years to Japan, made a most interesting talk.

The five circles of the Auxiliary are using Mrs. A. Kew's studies in stewardship as a Bible study. A special set of questions were prepared for these studies and pasted in each book.

The Auxiliary is putting on a monthly 15 minutes program in the Sunday School. This work, under the direction of the president of Auxiliary, Mrs. E. D. Yoder, is perhaps the outstanding feature of this year's work.

Fayetteville, N. C.—The Highland Church Auxiliary is looking forward to a week's Bible study during November, with Mrs. Margaret Russell as the teacher. The Auxiliary is hoping not only to give this great opportunity to the members of the church, but to the public.

Mt. Vernon Springs, N. C.—The "Group Conference" for Chatham County Auxiliaries, held at Mt. Vernon Springs Church, Sunday afternoon, September 30th at 3:00 o'clock, was a real success. The program was prepared by Mrs. Lacy, the district chairman.

The meeting was opened with a most helpful devotional by Miss Estelle McIver. An interesting paper on Prayer was read by Mrs. H. A. Russell, secretary of spiritual resources. Mrs. J. M. McIver gave some timely suggestions on "Best Methods of Work," and Miss Estelle McIver, who has been connected with the Lees-McRae Institute for a number of years, told of the good work that has been accomplished there. We were most fortunate in having Mrs. W. L. Wilson to present the needs of Elise High School in a most earnest and appealing way. The Auxiliaries decided to furnish a room in the new building at Elise. The attendance was good and attention fine.

Chester, S. C.—Purity Church, in its "calendar," records another activity of its Woman's Auxiliary that might carry a suggestion to other Auxiliaries. "Keeping the Church Beautiful" is a real service for the women of the church: "The ladies of the Auxiliary are asked to have the annual 'Clean Up Day' in the church on Friday, October 12th. The assignment is as follows: Circle No. 1, Junior Department; Circle No. 2, Beginners Department; Circle No. 3, Auditorium; Circle No. 4, Gilmour Room; Circle No. 5, Kitchen; Circle No. 6, Church; Circle No. 7, Session Room."

Charlotte, N. C.—From the calendar of October 7th it appears the Second Church is not neglecting its women—also the women are not neglecting "Home Missions." "The prayer meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary will be held, as usual, in the club room, Wednesday morning at 10:30 o'clock. The leader this week is Mrs. E. F. McGowan.

"Circle No. 10, Mrs. O. M. Norwood, leader, will meet two hours each week, for three weeks, in the club room of the church, for the study of the Home Mission text-book. The meetings this week are on Tuesday and Friday, at 3:30 o'clock in the afternoon.

"Circle 12, Mrs. R. H. Lafferty, leader, will meet for the study of the Home Mission text-book, in Mr. Spencer's class room, on Monday and Thursday afternoons of this week, at 3:30 o'clock.

"Circles 7 and 17, leaders, Mrs. W. L. Hand and Mrs. C. N. Gillette, will meet in the club room of the church, Wednesday morning, at 11:30 o'clock, for the study of the Home Mission text-book. The members are requested to bring their luncheons.

"Woman's Bible Class business meeting is postponed one week and will be held Tuesday, October 23d, at which time Dr. McGeachy will give a lecture on Church History."

Rally Day!—Breathes there the woman with soul so dead she does not respond to the cool, crisp message of a saucy October morning?

That mysterious "something" in the air imbues one with a spirit of energy which ought to make the October Auxiliary meeting the big thing of the whole year. This is the time for ambitious new presidents and other officers to make strenuous efforts to get every woman in the church to the Rally Day meeting.

Send each one an invitation card, and if she is a stranger or a rather indifferent member, follow it up with a telephone call or an offer to accompany her to the meeting. If she never does come to another one get her to attend this, and see that she is welcomed and made to feel that her presence there means something to the other women.

For invitation cards and suggestions for an attractive meeting, write to the Auxiliary Office in St. Louis, Mo. A good, clean start goes a long way toward making the same kind of finish.

Greensboro, N. C.—A total of 151 persons, the largest number in many months, attended the meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of the First Presbyterian Church yesterday afternoon and heard an interesting program centering on foreign missions. Mrs. Lunsford Richardson was in charge of the program and made one of the most important talks. She spoke of the need of foreign missionary work and especially emphasized the necessity of each circle's studying the situation and having a clear idea of the extent of the field and the nature of the work being done. Special messages from several missionaries supported by the church were read by Mrs. Richardson.

A message from the Montreal conference was brought by Mrs. W. C. Smith and a delightful solo by Mrs. W. H. Stone added much to the enjoyment of the meeting.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S DEPARTMENT

(Conducted under the auspices of Synod's Committee of Sunday Schools and Young People's Work, in the interest of Sunday Schools and Young People's Societies)

W. ARNETT GAMBLE, JR., Editor

ADDRESS ALL COMMUNICATIONS TO THE DEPARTMENT EDITOR, COLUMBIA SEMINARY, COLUMBIA, S. C.

EDITOR'S LOOKOUT

On October 26th through the 28th the North Carolina E. Union will hold what is being termed its "Quarter a Century" convention, with the Greensboro First Church and the Greensboro Endeavorers as hosts. The list of speakers and leaders is a splendid one, with our Presbyterian folks taking a large part in the leadership.

The list, as yet incomplete, includes Mr. Clarence Hampton, Field Manager of the C. E. World; Southern States Secretary Charles Evans; Dr. R. F. Kirkpatrick, Anderson, S. C., Presbyterian Church; Dr. A. E. Cory, formerly of the Men and Millions Movement; Miss Mamie Cole, All-South Junior Field Secretary; Field Secretary Frank Wilson, of North Carolina; Field Secretary Bert Jones, of South Carolina; Wilkes Dendy, Director of Religious Education in the First Presbyterian Church, of Gastonia.

Entertainment will be on the "bed and breakfast" plan, this available for those registering in advance with Miss Eunice Long, Greensboro. The prospect is that there will be a fine attendance and a great spiritual uplift for the young people.

About this time, we imagine, some of our young people are comforting themselves with the thought that the leaders of the society or class have gone away to school and the work cannot do anything more than die peacefully. If there are any who think thus, let them be up and doing. If the work in the past has been of the right sort, those who have gone away will help where they now are. Their going has left not only a challenge but an opportunity for those behind to press forward and fill the gaps. Any other plan would spell the end of growth. If the trained leaders stayed on forever, others would have little opportunity to expand. If those behind fail to make a special effort to keep the work up to the highest point even after some have left, they miss an opportunity and fail in a duty to themselves and the church. Fearful ones, we hope you are few in number; and we hope you will take courage and press on, encouraging your pastor and strengthening yourself.

ISRAEL, A MISSIONARY NATION

Lesson: Exodus 19:1-6; Isaiah 43:9-11; 45:20-22

GOLDEN TEXT—"Ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and an holy nation"—Exodus 19:6.

SCRIPTURE LESSON

Ex. 19:1 In the third month, when the children of Israel were come forth out of the land of Egypt, the same day came they to the wilderness of Sinai.

2 For they were departed from Rephidim, and were come to the desert of Sinai, and had pitched in the wilderness; and there Israel camped before the mount.

3 And Moses went up unto God, and the LORD called unto him out of the mountain, saying, Thus shalt thou say to the children of Israel, I have seen what I did unto the Egyptians, and how I bore you on eagles' wings, and brought you unto myself.

5 Now therefore, if ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people: for all the earth is mine.

6 And ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and an holy nation. These are the words which thou shalt speak unto the children of Israel.

Isa. 43:9 Let all the nations be gathered together, and let the people be assembled: who among them can declare this, and shew us former things? let them bring forth their witnesses, that they may be justified: or let them hear, and say, This is truth.

10 Ye are my witnesses, saith the LORD, and my servant whom I have chosen; that ye may know and believe me, and understand that I am he: before me there was no God formed, neither shall there be after me.

11 I, even I, am the LORD; and beside me there is no Saviour.

45:20 Assemble yourselves and come; draw near together, ye that are escaped of the nations: they have no knowledge that I set up the wood of their graven image, and pray unto a god that cannot save.

21 Tell ye, and bring them near; yea, let them take counsel together: who hath declared this from ancient time? who hath told it from that time? have not I the LORD? and there is no God else beside me: a just God and a Saviour; there is none beside me.

22 Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth: for I am God, and there is none else.

SHORTER CATECHISM

Q. 58. What is required in the fourth commandment?
A. The fourth commandment requireth the keeping holy of God such set times as he hath appointed in his word: expressly one whole day in seven, to be a holy Sabbath to oneself.

Our lesson presents Israel's relation to the other nations of the world and the peculiar relation it sustained to Jehovah. Israel did not receive Messiah and the Gospel salvation for itself alone, but in trust to be imparted to the rest of mankind. Their functions are clearly described in the passages cited. It was their duty to make known to the world the Christ and the salvation from sin that He offers to all mankind. Some of them were faithful to their trust and others were rebellious. We will consider "Israel Chosen as God's Treasurer; A Kingdom of Priests; A Holy Nation; Their Functions to Attest the Unity of God; They Bear Witness to the Folly of Idolatry; Jehovah the Only Saviour."

Israel Chosen as God's "Treasurer, a Kingdom of Priests, a Holy Nation"

The first article in the creed of the chosen people is "Hear O Israel, our Lord is one God." It was a protest against the universal tendency of mankind to worship many gods. Israel would be Jehovah's treasure, "A kingdom of priests and a holy nation" if they "Kept His voice." They became His treasure because He committed to them the Redeemer and the Gospel salvation for all mankind. As the priests drew nearer to God than the people, so Israel had better knowledge of Jehovah than other nations. As through the priests the people approached the Holy Ghost, so through Israel the more ignorant nationalities could draw near to God. They thus might become a "Nation of Priests." Had they as a nation obeyed God's voice and given the Gospel to perishing men, they might have become a "Holy nation, devoted to Jehovah's service."

II. Israel's Function to Attest the Unity of God

There is no function more important, for if received it destroys all idolatry, material and spiritual. If Jehovah is the self-existent and eternal God, having all wisdom, power and excellence, there is no room in the universe for any other. In the 43d chapter of Isaiah the Almighty claims to be God alone. He says, "Before me there was no God formed, neither shall there be after me." "I even I am Jehovah and besides me there is no Saviour." Though Israel was appointed to testify to there being only one God and had ample evidence of the fact, yet they often fell into the grossest idolatry and rejected as Messiah, Immanuel or God manifested in the flesh.

III. Israel Testified to the Folly of Idolatry

In the 45th chapter of Isaiah the prophet declares the folly and wickedness of worshipping the work of men's hands. He says, "They have no knowledge who set up the wood of their graven images, and pray unto a god that can not save." This is only one of the passages where this same prophet ridicules the worship of idols. He says, "Men nourish a tree, burn part of it in the fire with a part roasteth a roast, and of the residue maketh a god and boweth down thereto." Israel as a nation instead of imitating the benighted heathen should have attested the folly of such a course and have condemned an idolatry insulting alike to the one true God and to the reason of man.

IV. Jehovah the Only Saviour

In Isaiah 45:21-22 it is declared "There is no God else beside me, a just God and a Saviour there is none beside me. Look unto me and be ye saved all the ends of the earth, for I am God." Two truths are expressed in these words. First that salvation from sin is offered to mankind. The whole human race are tendered its blessings, and Israel was only an agent for making it known to them. By this same prophet it is affirmed that the Messiah, the Saviour to come, was a "Light to lighten the Gentiles as well as the glory of God's people Israel." It is also declared of the Christ, "The Gentiles shall come to thy light and kings to the brightness of thy rising." The other truth here inculcated is that "The Saviour of fallen man must be God." The speaker here bases his claim to be a Saviour upon his godhead. God only can regenerate, atone, pardon, justify, sanctify, perfect and elevate to divine sonship and eternal life.

Christian Endeavor

Sun., Oct. 21—Topic. What Is Christian Citizenship? Isa. 62:1-7. (Citizenship Day.)

How does good people's neglect of politics help evil men?

How can we improve our city's government?
Why is citizenship a duty?

For the Leader

Let the leader emphasize the following from the Scripture reading: Isa. 62:1-7. V. 1: There is no rest for the good citizen. There are always evil to fight. V. 2: A righteous city is an example to other cities. It attracts attention. V. 3: No city can be glorious until it is righteous. V. 4: Sin makes desolate. God can take no pleasure in sin. V. 5: God rejoices in the way of the righteous. V. 6: The citizen must be a watchman. He must cry aloud. V. 7: One of the most powerful weapons of the citizen is unceasing prayer.

Who Are Citizens?

The fourteenth amendment says: "All persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof are citizens of the United States and of the state wherein they reside."

What Is Citizenship?

Ashley defines citizenship thus: "Citizenship is the sum total of those rights and duties which come to us from our membership in this American nation." It is social, it is universal, it is natural.

What Is Christian Citizenship?

Christian character is the basis of Christian citizenship. Paul with a few bold strokes of pen has sketched nine elements of Christian character in Gal. 5:22-23: love, joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance.

The Five C's in Citizenship

Some one has said that there are five C's in citizenship. The first C is courage. Moral bravery as well as physical, the willingness to stand for the right even when it is unpopular. Another C is cheerfulness. Looking on the bright side, being happy and optimistic. Another C is courtesy. The courteous greeting, the thoughtful consideration of another's need. Co-operation. The spirit of working with and for others. The last C is Christianity. "The outliving of the inliving Christ," as Dr. Schofield puts it.

MARKS OF A CHRISTIAN CITIZEN

Respects Law

A Christian citizen will not only keep law, but will see to it that others keep it. To wink at law is to aid and abet evil. "The spirit of patriotic Americanism should combat the present dangerous tendency toward disobedience of law," declared General Pershing in a recent address. "Moral standards have become materially weakened. The criminal elements of society are less cautious in their activities. It is time for all citizens who cherish our heritage of free government to assert themselves and cry out against lawlessness and immorality. We must stand for enforcement of the law or concede that free government is a failure. Open adherence to lofty ideals is quite as essential now as during war time."

Works For Peace

A Christian citizen works for peace. "Peace" is the Christian's watchword. Peace must be followed in the home, in the state, in the nation, and in the world.

Respects Other Peoples

A Christian citizen respects the capacity of other peoples. He does not dwell upon the defects of others but upon their potential possibilities and promises. He is enthusiastic over the advance of humanity.

Responds to Human Need

A Christian citizen is responsive to human need. He endeavors to respond to appeals for help. The Associated Charities, the Salvation Army, the Y. M. C. A., the Y. W. C. A., the Church causes find a sympathetic response to their calls.

The Psalmist Pictures a Christian Citizen

In the 15th Psalm we read that "He walketh uprightly, worketh righteousness, speaketh the truth, backbiteth not with his tongue, nor doeth evil to his neighbor, nor taketh up a reproach against his neighbor, contemns vileness, honors those who fear the Lord, changeth not his vows, putteth not his money out to usury nor taketh reward against the innocent.

Paul Pictures a Christian Citizen

In the 13th chapter of I Corinthians, Paul says that a Christian is patient, kind, not envious, not proud, not conceited, is not discourteous, is unselfish, has good temper, has a pure heart, does not rejoice in iniquity, but does rejoice in the truth. (Vs. 4-7).

Jesus Pictures a Christian Citizen

In the fifth chapter of Matthew, Jesus pictures a Christian citizen when He says, Blessed (or happy) are the poor in spirit, they that mourn, they that are meek, they that hunger and thirst after righteousness, they that are merciful, that are pure in heart, that are peacemakers, and they who are persecuted for righteousness' sake.

WORTHWHILE BITS IF NEWS

The Senior Christian Endeavor Society of the First Church, Wilmington, N. C., has recently had a reorganization meeting and made plans for an aggressive work. The new officers are a reasonable guarantee that good things are in store. These are: George Mitchell, president; Marion Sluffler and Jas. McKoy, vice-presidents; Miss Helen Watson, recording secretary; Miss Estelle Benton, corresponding secretary; Mr. White, treasurer; Miss Russell, church secretary, Intermediate superintendent; Mrs. W. H. Howell, Junior superintendent. Most of these officers, together with Rev. W. W. Morton, assistant pastor, will attend the State C. E. Convention in Greensboro, October 25-27.

Mrs. M. C. McDonald, of West End, N. C., reports that the Junior Endeavorers of the Presbyterian Church there hold their meetings on the church lawn each Sunday evening during the summer. Mrs. McDonald tells us that the children attended well and showed much interest. A summer Sunday evening out in God's great open is calculated to help attendance.

Columbia, S. C., has gathered there this winter a number of Christian Endeavor workers. Wyatt A. Taylor, former field secretary and former South Carolina Union president, is a resident of Columbia, city editor of the Columbia Record. Mrs. Taylor is treasurer of the All-South C. E. Extension Committee. At Chicora College is Miss Emmie Osteen, secretary of the South Carolina Union. At Columbia Theological Seminary are S. Wilkes Dendy, former field secretary; B. S. Hodges, one of the South Carolina District presidents; S. P. Bowles, former officer of the Florida Union, and Arnett Gamble, former president of the Georgia Union. J. Arthur Flanagan, president of the South Carolina Union, is planning to enter the seminary in a few weeks.

We have been furnished with the following news from a recent issue of the city newspaper of Hendersonville, N. C.: "Last Sunday evening the Junior and Senior Endeavor of the Presbyterian Church held a joint meeting at the church house, and Miss Hallie Covington, a returned missionary from Korea, gave a most interesting talk of her work while there. She showed many articles of native workmanship which she had brought back with her. Among them was a very quaint costume for a child. Little Miss Jimmy Reid dressed in this native Korean costume, excited much attention, and gave a striking touch of oriental color."

"The Juniors and Seniors entertained at the church house last Wednesday evening with a picnic supper. The honor guest was Mr. Frank Wilson, who is the field secretary of the Christian Endeavor of North Carolina. Music was enjoyed for some time after the supper, and then Mr. Wilson gave a very splendid talk on 'Christian Endeavor Work.'

"Several out-of-town guests were there: Miss Hallie Covington, returned missionary from Korea; Mr. McKay, who is supplying the pulpit during the absence of Dr. Wilds, and Miss Wilfong and Miss Bowen, of Rugby."

The Chattanooga City C. E. Union held a city-wide tennis tournament, closing on Labor Day. Preliminaries were disposed of beforehand and the finals were played Labor Day at the City Union Outing on the top of Look-out Mountain. The playing started at 10 in the morning and lasted until nearly 10 at night. The awards were handsome C. E. trophies, donated by leading Chattanooga firms and C. E. leaders. A few nights after the tournament Miss Margaret Ferger, one of the Endeavors, gave a recognition party to the players and a number of C. E. leaders.

The talents, our today, may be demanded by the Owner tomorrow.

A sense of duty may not be the highest motive, but the best men are moved by it.

BARIUM NEWS

One of the outstanding events of the week was the lecture Friday night by Dr. Frazer, of Queens College. It is no light undertaking to drive from Charlotte to make a 40-minute speech and then back again the same night, but the appreciation of all who heard Dr. Frazer was enough to repay any one for the effort.

Our football team gets better and better, being defeated badly by Statesville, not so badly by Mooresville and not nearly so badly by Davidson High School, whom we consider the best team of the three. By the way, this last game was played on Richardson field at Davidson and is the first match-game played on this magnificent place. When you go up to see the wonderful games that will be played there just remember that we started it off.

The time for Presbyteries is right now upon us, the General Manager attending two during the week, Wilmington and Fayetteville, Synod comes next, with a weeks grace in between.

Our run of visitors continues, the largest delegation from one place this week being from Cramerton. The Bible class came over, and in addition to looking over the whole place, signified their intention of taking upon themselves the entire support of a child. This is going to be a fine thing not only for us but for them, as they will get much pleasure out of doing this good work.

Passers by on Sunday may have been startled by seeing several Indians in full war paint and feathers emerge from one of the buildings, we want to assure them that there has been no massacre here but only an organization of Junior Christian Endeavorers.

We are beginning to see daylight in the farm work, most of the corn being cut, but only about half of the hay is up. Then right ahead of us is the preparation of the wheat land, and wheat planting. The coming of cool weather adds to the darning too, so the girls have their troubles too.

Madeline Hunt and Vanilla Bolden spent the weekend in Greensboro, they having worked at Montreat all summer without a chance to visit their people.

REV. S. H. HAY, SR.

Rev. Samuel Hutson Hay died at Boiling Springs, S. C., September 21, 1923. He was born at Columbia, S. C., and was graduated at Columbia Theological Seminary. He was licensed April, 1889 by the Presbytery of Charleston and ordained by the Presbytery of Bethel, 1890.

He held pastorates in various sections of South Carolina, doing quiet and faithful work. Such men are the bone and sinew of our ministry, and deserve the highest honors. Their history is found in the souls converted and in the saints built up. Their works do follow them.

NORTH CAROLINA

Brevard—John R. Hay, pastor of the church of Brevard, is spending a part of his vacation attending the Sprunt lectures given at Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, Va.

Steele Creek—The new Sunday School building is fast taking shape, and in a short while we will have the building completed. It is evident to all who have examined the building that it is going to be a model structure for religious education. It will be a happy day when the Sunday School can move in these commodious quarters. It will call for a reconsecration on the part of every one to the study of God's Truth, and for more efficient work.—Bulletin.

Burlington — Shiloh Church has just passed through a refreshing series of revival services, in which the pastor was assisted by Rev. R. H. Stone, of Jefferson, N. C. For ten days Mr. Stone preached most earnestly, persuasively and effectively, and the services were attended by large and interested congregations. Mr. Stone is a young man of fervent zeal, of decided ability, and of most agreeable personality. A number of new members were received by the session, as the visible fruits of these services, and were publicly baptized and confirmed by the pastor last Sunday.

Wm. P. McCorkle.

Salisbury, First Church—During the past six months there have been 52 additions to the membership of this church. An increase of $1,000 has been made to the salary of the pastor and an assistant to the pastor has been secured. A "hut" for the young men's Bible class has been erected and the young women's Bible class is asking for larger quarters. Eighty-seven young people are at work in the Christian Endeavor societies. A church nursery has been organized and fitted up, so that parents with young children may attend church services. One hundred and fifty men and women are enrolled in the adult classes.

Mooresville—On the last Sunday of September elders W. R. Grey and C. H. Hamilton, members of the commission appointed by Concord Presbytery to complete the work of organizing a church at Brawley school house, four miles west of Mooresville, were present and took part in the work. Ministers present were Rev. Dr. J. M. Clark and Rev. F. Hollingsworth, of Statesville, and Rev. R. White, of Mooresville. The sermon was preached by Mr. Hollingsworth. The church has been named in honor of Rev. J. Kemp Hobson, now of Luebo (African) mission, who as a student at Davidson College some years ago showed such interest and worked so faithfully in the establishment of Sunday School there and arranging for preaching services at stated intervals.

Wallace—Rev. Geo. M. Matthis, of Clinton, N. C., conducted a series of evangelistic services in Willard Presbyterian Church, beginning on Monday night, September 3d, and closing the following Sunday night. The attendance was good, especially the night services, and the attention by the congregation was marked. Mr. Matthis is a gifted speaker and presents the Gospel in a manner that arrests the attention and excites the interest of hearers. The people heard with gladness of heart, and, we believe, some of them at least, have been stimulated to greater activity by these services. There was one addition to the membership of the church.

Burlington—The congregations of Piedmont and Shiloh churches have acceded to the request of Rev. Wm. P. McCorkle, that they consent to the dissolution of the pastorate. Both churches have asked him to serve as supply until next Spring meeting. Presbytery, should they not succeed in securing a pastor by the 1st of January next. It is his earnest desire to be relieved, if possible, by that time. Mr. McCorkle does not propose to retire from all ministerial work, being still in vigorous health, preaching every Sunday with his wonted energy. But he wishes to be relieved of pastoral responsibilities and desires to devote his time to pulpit supply work together with evangelistic work, as the churches may need his services.

Macedonia—This church has just closed an interesting and profitable meeting September 24-30, in which the pastor, Rev. W. L. Baker, was assisted by Rev. S. B. Lyerly, pastor of St. Paul Presbyterian Church of Charlotte. Mr. Lyerly preached plain, straight-forward and forceful sermon throughout the whole week. The whole church was revived by these sermons delivered in the power and demonstration of the Spirit and 20 new members were added to our number—19 on profession of faith and one by letter. Mr. Lyerly has endeared himself to the whole community. We feel indebted to St. Paul Church for so graciously lending him to us for this season.

A promising Sunday School has recently been organized in this church and the pastor is very much encouraged about this part of his work.

Gastonia, Charles B. Armstrong Memorial Church—Rev. Geo. W. Sheffer, of Little Rock, Ark., formerly field worker for Assembly's Sunday School and Young People's Committee, closed an eight-day meeting at this church Sunday night. The meeting was in connection with the county-wide evangelistic campaign to "Win Gaston County for Christ." Mr. Sheffer carried home to the hearts of his hearers the "Old, Old Story" of Jesus and His love in a manner that testified to his sincerity and earnestness as a most forceful preacher of the Gospel. Eighteen united with the church during the meeting, with many more to come next Sunday. The meeting was the best ever held in this church and the love and loyalty of the members demonstrated as never before.

Albemarle—It has been a great pleasure indeed to have had Rev. and Mrs. J. S. Nisbet, of Korea, in our midst for the past week. Dr. Nisbet spoke to the congregation both Sunday morning and evening telling in a most interesting manner of their work over there. The same old story of woman's condition in the Orient is brought back—and what the Gospel means to her. The church was filled to overflowing at both services. He also spoke to the Junior Endeavorers in the afternoon, carrying his sermon "in a basket," which the children enjoyed to the utmost.

Mrs. Nisbet talked to the Senior Endeavorers and the Woman's Auxiliary. She is an unusually interesting speaker, and her message from the women and girls was most touching. The simple child-like faith of the Korean Christians was often spoken of.

We deem it a great privilege, and it lends impetus to our work, to have our returned missionaries visit us. They are always heartily welcome.

Rev. D. B. Green, Pastor.

Mooresville, First Church—Our Rally Day Vacation Bible School in June was quite a success. It continued two weeks and enrolled in all 154 scholars. Average daily attendance was 110. Some 35 or 40 persons took part as regular teachers, story-tellers, givers of habit talks, or directors of hand and craft work and leaders of music. The school closed with an exhibition of its work which made a fine showing.

At the July communion service five splendid boys were received on profession and three other persons by letter. Three infants were baptized.

Mr. Dwight M. Chalmers, a first year man from Union Seminary, in Virginia, was assistant to the pastor this summer and has rendered most efficient service. In the absence of the pastor on vacation Mr. Chalmers, assisted by Rev. Mr. Clontz, of Cornelius, held a meeting at our mission at Brawley's, with the result of adding six to the church; two on re-affirmation and four on profession. Last Sunday, September 30th, a commission met there and organized a new church with 18 members and two officers. The name given the church was Hobson, in honor of Mr. J. Kemp Hobson, now one of our missionaries in Africa, who first began work at this point by organizing a Sunday School.

Wilmington Presbytery met at South River Church, near Garland, N. C., September 25, 1923, at 11 A. M., and the opening sermon was preached by the retiring moderator, Rev. D. M. McGeachy. Present 22 ministers and 30 ruling elders.

Ministers Deceased—Two ministers have died since our Spring meeting, namely, Rev. J. D. A. Brown, of Aberdeen and Rev. C. V. Cavitt, of Sanford.

Presbyterial Sermon—Rev. D. L. Jones gave us an excellent sermon on "The Virgin Birth of Christ," and he was asked to furnish manuscripts of it to the Presbyterian Standard for publication.

Special Prayer—Two of our brethren who are sick, Rev. Dougald Munroe and ruling elder Dr. Gilbert McLeod, of Carthage, were remembered in a special prayer.

Synod's Home Missions—This cause was represented by the superintendent, Rev. A. W. Crawford, and the report presented by the chairman, Rev. R. A. McLeod, showed an appropriation for the Synodical year, now closing, of $64,000, and receipts up to September 20th, of $52,000. All churches are urged to send in to the treasurer all money now on hand for this cause.

Stewardship—This was ably represented by Mr. J. B. Spillman, Synod's Secretary, and by Mr. J. A. Hafner, of the Assembly's Stewardship Committee, who spoke specially of the Equipment Fund.

The Woman's Auxiliary and other church societies were urged to undertake no outside benevolent work until approved benevolent causes of the church have been fully subscribed.

All our churches were urged to organize the men of the church along the lines of the Assembly's Committee on Men's work.

Educational Institutions—Flora Macdonald College and Elise High School both received the special attention of the Presbytery at this meeting, and the Presbytery has undertaken to make an earnest and united effort to raise $150,000 for Flora Macdonald, and $7,500 for Elise. The college needs this much added to its endowment to make it an "A Grade College," and the Presbytery is determined, with the help of Orange and Wilmington Presbyteries to make it second to none in the South.

Laymen's Association—Through its chairman, Mr. A. C. Ray, this organization, which is now the Men's Work Committee of the Presbytery, reported great activity during the last six months in holding religious services in vacant churches, and filling the appointments of pastor on vacation, and were tendered a hearty vote of thanks for their splendid service to the church and to their Lord.

Presbytery's Home Missions—This report showed 41 organized churches served, 13 other points supplied regularly with preaching, 700 sermons preached during the last six months, 73 professions of faith, 57 additions to Presbyterian Church by profession and 13 by letter; 3 Sabbath Schools organized, and 6 church buildings in process of construction. Only 2 vacant groups in the Presbytery now, with good prospects of having these filled shortly.

Pastoral Relation Dissolved—The resignation of Rev. I. N. Clegg of the pastorates of Iona and Midway was accepted and the pastoral relations dissolved.

Manual—A committee, with Rev. E. L. Siler, chair-was appointed to revise the manual and report at Spring meeting.

Overture to Assembly—An overture, presented by Rev. Dougald Munroe, was adopted, asking the Assembly to change the church year to conform to the calendar year, and have the E. M. C. in November instead of March.

Nominations—Rev. E. L. Siler, stated clerk, and Rev. E. C. Murray, treasurer, were re-elected for a term of three years. Rev. J. W. Goodman was elected permanent clerk for a term of three years. Rev. J. F. Menus was appointed to preach the Presbyterial sermon at next meeting, on the subject of Sanctification.

Evangelistic Meetings—The following appointments were made: St. Pauls, S. K. Phillips; Union, R. A. McLeod; Manly, W. C. Brown; Vass, Leonard Gill; Cameron, A. R. McQueen; Midway, L. A. McLaurin; Mt. Pisgah, W. C. Brown; Leaflet, A. T. Lassiter.

Christian Education—On the recommendation of this committee, Presbytery decided that "the campaign for Flora Macdonald College and Elise High School should be combined upon such terms as may be deemed wise by the trustees of these institutions.

After adopting a hearty vote of thanks for the splendid entertainment given us by the West End Church and community, Presbytery adjourned to meet on the call of the moderator during the session of Synod at Graham.

E. L. Siler, S. C.

SOUTH CAROLINA

Community—This church has more than doubled in attendance at all services since Rev. W. J. Hunyutt has been with us. Two new members have been received into the church and more are expected soon. Our Sunday School is growing at a rapid rate and we are expecting to have a great time on October 7th.

N. B. C.

Little River—There is no Presbyterian church at this point but it is one of the mission points of Pee Dee Presbytery. Services were held at intervals during the summer months. The Methodists co-operated in permitting us to use their church for our services. A series of six services began on August 15th, ending August 19th. Rev. Dr. J. M. Holladay, of Marion, S. C. did the preaching. No special evangelistic efforts were put on, the principle object of the meetings being to inquire into the possibility of a Presbyterian organization at that place. As results of the services four children united with the Kingston Presbyterian Church, at Conway, S. C., and two other children were baptized. J. M. Carr, Supply for Summer.

Piedmont Presbytery met at Pelzer, S. C., October 2d. The opening sermon was preached by Rev. H. A. Knox, the last moderator present.

Fourteen ministers and 22 elders were present. Rev. F. D. Hunt was elected moderator, and Rev. S. H. Fulton, temporary clerk.

Rev. H. A. Knox was re-elected secretary of Stewardship.

Marshall Coleman Dendy was received as a candidate for the ministry.

The next stated meeting is to be at Westminster, April 15, 1924.

Robert Adams, S. C.

Great Falls—Since the fire which destroyed the Presbyterian Church the Presbyterians of Great Falls have worshipped in the auditorium of the school building. When the present pastor was called it was decided to defer the building program no longer, but to lay plans for a place of worship where denominational activities could be taken care of. A building project has been set on foot which will result in a building modern in every respect, where every phase of church and Sabbath School activity may be carried on. Within a very short time ground will be broken and building operations will begin.

The session of the church, sensing the opportunities in Great Falls for aggressive religious work, has provided the pastor with a permanent assistant, whose labors will begin as soon as the suitable person can be secured.

The men of the church have organized, and already there is a noticeable change in the interest taken by them in religious matters. One definite form of work engaged in by the Men's Club is a monthly paper published in the interest of Presbyterianism and religion in Great Falls.

During the past three months 17 have been added to the membership of the Church, the Sabbath School has been re-organized along lines of the Standard of Efficiency, and there is an awakening determination on the part of the congregation to make Presbyterianism a telling force for righteousness in this community. Altogether the pastor and congregation face the future with optimism.

ALABAMA

Anaïusia—Rev. Lynn R. Walker, D.D., has been called to this church.

Union Springs—This church has called to its pastorate Rev. Robt. L. Bell.

Auburn—The Alabama Polytechnic Institute, generally known as Auburn, opened this fall with the largest registration in its history. The increase in the number of Presbyterian students corresponds to the growth of the college. Everything points to a splendid year in all departments of our Church's activities.

The pastor, R. W. Miles, is glad to note that so many ministers and parents throughout the State have written to him in regard to students here. There are three flourishing classes for students in the Sunday Schools; one for girls and two for men. The whole work of the school has taken on new life under the leadership of Mr. Jas. L. Sibley. Our opening student reception was a great success. The church is filled both morning and evening—the night sermons of the pastor especially are attracting large congregations. Last Sunday there were eight additions to the church. The Lord is blessing the work here and a spirit of optimism is felt on all sides.

APPALACHIA

The Synod of Appalachia met in ninth regular session in the Central Church of Bristol, Va., on September 11, 1923. The opening sermon was preached by the retiring moderator, Rev. J. W. Tyler, D.D. Rev. R. P. Smith, D.D., was elected moderator, Rev. T. J. Hutchison, stated clerk and Rev. C. R. Lacy, permanent clerk.

Forty-six ministers and 34 elders were in attendance. At the invitation of Synod's Educational Institutions, King College for boys at Bristol and Stonewall Jackson College for girls at Abingdon, Va., Synod has two most pleasant visits to these institutions and was pleased with the fine progress they are making.

Judge F. B. Hutton, an elder of the Sinking Spring Church, Abingdon, delivered a memorable address in which he vigorously opposed the measure sent down from the Assembly for the incorporation of churches; the substance of which address was approved by the Synod and recommended to the Presbyteries.

Rev. R. D. Carson, D.D., was re-elected secretary of Synods work and Rev. J. J. Fix, D.D., secretary of Sabbath Schools and Young People's Work.

Time of next meeting, second Tuesday of September; place, to be selected.

FLORIDA

Pensacola, First Church—Rev. C. H. Nabers, of Camden, Ark., has been called to this church to succeed the late Rev. Francis Tappey, D.D.

On October 7th the new Sunday School building which was the last work of Dr. Tappey, will be dedicated to his memory, and will be called the Francis Tappey Memorial Sunday School Building.

The suggestion that it be a memorial to Dr. Tappey came from the children whom he loved.

KENTUCKY

Lebanon—The United Presbyterian Church of which Rev. W. A. Hopkins is pastor has begun a campaign for $100,000 for a new church and Sunday School Building. This church was organized by combining the First Church U. S. and the Second Church U. S. A. Rev. S. Waters McGill, D.D., will have charge of the financial campaign. On Sunday morning Dr. McGill preached on Christian Benevolence and outlined the plan of the campaign to secure the $100,000. Following the sermon the congregation heard the report of the building committee which had been approved by the session and unanimously ratified the report. It is expected that the necessary amount will be subscribed promptly.

TEXAS

Lancaster—September 30th closed the present pastorate, of Rev. Albert E. Wallace. At the morning hour four members were received; two babies baptized and Lord's supper was observed by a large congregation.

Our pastor left on Monday, October 1st to take up his new duties in Mecklenburg Presbytery and will supply the Indian Trail and Siler group of Churches. His permanent address is changed from Lancaster, Texas, to Indian Trail, via. Charlotte, N. C.

Austin, First Southern Church, W. R. Minter, D.D., pastor. September 30th was Rally Day in this church. At Sunday School service 462 were present and offering $153. At morning church service the 65 officers and teachers of the Sunday School were installed. At the evening service, the annual Christian Endeavor Rally was held—at which promotions were announced; the organization of a fourth C. E. society announced (the Senior), officers of Junior, Intermediate and Senior societies (Young People's officers are installed annually in April) were installed by Dr. H. C. Evans; after which pastor preached a special sermon to these young people.

Messrs. Wendell Crofoot and Gus Craven of this church have recently been received as candidates for the ministry by Central Texas Presbytery. Five young ladies from this church, Misses Kittie Shanks, Lillian Hildinger, Maurine Priest, Inez Ratchford, and Gladys Kendall are in Assembly Training School in Richmond, Va.

"Below we give the names our young people who are at college: At the University of North Carolina: Reece and Billy Berryhill, Paul Cathey, Wilton Cathey, William Clark, George Sloan, Marion Query, Dennis Weaver; North Carolina State: Frank Freeman, Auther Herren Freeman, Edgar Berryhill, Starr Neely, Joe Wooley, Harry Brown; Davidson: Tally Neel, William Brown; Union Theological Seminary: Ralph Freeman, Grady Brown, Lec Williamson; Assembly's Training School; Evelyn Sadler, Myrtle Williamson; Queens; Lorenc Brown, Minnie Blair Porter, Janice Montgomery, Lucile Boyles; Red Springs: Marie Faires; Greensboro Normal: Mary Berryhill; Winthrop: Helen Cathey; Presbyterian Hospital: Edith Mae Stowe; St. Peter's Hospital: Ethleen Berryhill; Sanitarium: Kate Bigham; Margaret Fahnstock Nurses' School, New York City: Mae Faires; Asheville Normal: Irene Rhyne, Lucile Cathey; King's Business College: May Berryhill. Total 35.

Brown; Peace Institute, Raleigh: Mary M. Price; at Scotland Neck: Elbert Neel; at Belmont: Laura Price; at Dillingham; Bertha Abernathy; at Rowland: Edith Brown; at Cramerton: Ruth Davenport, Faye Sloan, Marie Rhyne; at Hart Grove: Annie Weaver; in the City Schools of Charlotte: Mary Price, Addie Brown; in the Public Schools of Mecklenburg County: at Big Springs, Mary Boyles, Willie May Whitesides; at Dixie, Rufus Grier, Laura Grier; at Observer, Bess Grier; at Woodlawn, Mary Spratt; at Paw Creek, Janice Neel, Faye Choate; at Newell, Duell Marshall. Total, 25. Adding this number to the list of those who are away at school we get an even 60 from this congregation who are either in college or teaching school, the same number as last year. It is a list of which this church may justly be proud.

Queens College—The Missionary Survey for October carries a very interesting "Farewell Letter" from Dr. and Mrs. R. M. Wilson (Bessie Knox), a former student of Queens. Dr. and Mrs. Wilson are now on their way back to Korea after a year spent in America.

Efforts are now being made to organize the alumnae of Mooresville and Statesville into a branch association. There are 25 "old girls" living in this section.

The entire student body of Queens attended the Made-in-Carolinas Exposition on Friday of last week. Miss Beulah Holmes, of Fayetteville, appeared on the musical program and was greeted with applause.

The Queens Blues carries a formal announcement of the launching of the $500,000 endowment campaign to be conducted under the management of Rev. A. A. Walker, of Clarksville, Miss.

Southwestern Presbyterian University, Clarksville, Tenn., enjoyed a most auspicious opening. The writer, Dr. C. B. Chapin, has just taken the chair of Biblical literature and he has found the personnel of the student body above the average—a fine set of boys and girls from cultivated Presbyterian homes. There is a strong religious atmosphere in the college. Dr. Diehl, president of Southwestern, raised a high Christian and Spiritual standard before the students in his opening address.

It is a little unusual to have all the members of a faculty in our colleges today take in turn the chapel exercises, but this is what is being done at Southwestern even by the athletic coach and director.

The Y. M. C. A. has made a fine showing in the matter of interest and attendance and is already planning for a series of evangelistic meetings in early December to be conducted by Dr. J. M. Vander Meulin, of Louisville, Ky.

Especially worthy of notice is the goodly attendance of college boys upon the weekly prayer meeting of the local Presbyterian church and their participation therein.

Educational Campaign in Kentucky (J. C. Norton)—The Presbyterians of Kentucky are measuring up in their payments to the Christian Educational Campaign. Of the 242 churches, U. S. and U. S. A., making pledges to the campaign, a survey of the church cards shows the following:

30 churches have made first year payments in full (7 of these are mountain mission churches). 152 churches owe less than $100. 45 churches owe between $100 and $500. 11 churches owe between $500 and $1,000. 4 churches owe more than $1,000.

The total amount due and unpaid according to the statements sent out September 1st, is $34,532.11 representing 2,383 individuals. This is less than $150 per church. With $1,131, 215.80 pledged, the amount due and payable the first year is a little less than $283,000. We are now a little more than 11 percent behind in our first year payments. The first year closes October 31st, and it is hoped this will be reduced considerably below 10 percent by that time.

How has this result been accomplished? First and most important of all is prayer. Each morning we have prayer at our headquarters office asking God's guidance and that He will lead us. We ask the prayers of the whole Church, pastors, officers, laymen and women. Will you not put us on your prayer list?

Another factor is the magnificent co-operation given by pastors and key-men in both Synods. The pastors have consistently shown a deep and sympathetic interest. Some of them are exceedingly busy men. Always when approached they have given of their time and have helped in every way possible. The key-men have worked hard. They have a great pride in their Church. Each one wants his church 100 percent in its payments.

Peace Institute—A delightful program was given on Friday evening, September 28th, by the new faculty members in the music and expression departments. Miss Vera Rountree, pianist, opened the program with the brilliant McDowell "Etude de Concert." The performance was impressive in its sincerity, good tone and dynamic gradations. Later she played with much charm a group of Frank La-Forge's compositions.

Miss Moore, head of the voice department, sang as her first offering a group of classics, and later, a well-balanced group of modern songs. She possesses a beautiful, fresh high soprano voice and she sings with rare intelligence. Her diction in both the French and English groups was agreeably clear. Miss Rountree, as the accompanist of the evening, was in full sympathy with the soloists.

Miss Evarts, the head of the expression department, brought with her reading a company of invisible players. In the dramatic sketch, "A minuet," and later in the humorous "Neighbors" one felt this company to be almost visible. Through a fine feeling for dramatic proportion in the first, and an exquisite sense of humor in the second, she swayed her audience from tears to laughter.

Agnes Scott College—The college had the privilege of entertaining at lunch the members of the Georgia committee on Synod's Work Wednesday, October 3d.

While Agnes Scott does not operate a department of Home Economics, its students do know a good deal about cooking. It was gratifying that Agnes Scott girls won second, third and fourth prizes in a great cooking contest last week, which was open to veteran housekeepers, demonstration agents, and other experts as well as to young women. The college winners were Miss Elizabeth Henry, Augusta, Ga.; Miss Lucile Gause, Stockton, Ala.; and Miss Beulah Davidson, Fort Valley, Ga.

The Executive Council of the Student Volunteers of Georgia were the guests of the college during October 4-8; and they were planning for a state-wide convention later in the year. Miss Emmie Fricklen, of Agnes Scott, is the State president of the organization; and the group of volunteers in the college is one of the largest and most active in Georgia.

Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, Va.—The seminary has begun the new session with an enrollment of 127 students, an increase over that of last year.

The usual reception to the members of the Junior class, with its addresses of welcome and its musical features, was given Thursday night in the recreation room of Schaufler hall, and was a bright and happy occasion.

The communion service, which always marks the first Sunday in the term, was conducted by Dr. W. Taliaferro Thompson and Dr. T. Cary Johnson.

The James Sprunt lectures on "Preaching" by Rev. James Black, of Edinburgh, Scotland, began on the evening of October 4th and are to continue for eight days. A number of ministers from different parts of the Church have come in to hear them.

Flora Macdonald College—Over 200 volumes have recently been added to the college library—the largest gifts being 130 volumes from Rev. W. I. Sinnott, pastor Union Presbyterian Church, Salters Depot, S. C., and 45 from Rand McNally Publishing Company.

The Y. W. C. A. starts out with splendid prospects for a successful year. One week after the opening of college 50 per cent of all membership dues had been paid. The annual reception to the new students was given on September 17th and on Sunday, September 23d the "Candle Light Service" was held. The "Y" members have this year pledged themselves to the following causes: Home Missions (Negroes) Foreign Missions (Miss Anna McQueen) Social Service; Christian Education; Orphans' Home; Delegate Fund; Student Loan Fund; Assembly's Training School. On September 27th the "Y" Cabinet attended the meeting of Fayetteville Presbytery held at West End.

The Glade Valley High School opened September 4th with the largest high school enrollment in the history of the institution. The registration for the opening day excelled the total enrollment for last year. Over eighty-five pupils have been enrolled in the high school department and 18 in the sixth and seventh grades. Twenty-five have registered for music, and the Senior class out-numbers any previous one—the present class has 27 members.

The opening exercise was conducted by Rev. Geo. W. Lee, Winston-Salem. Mr. Lee gave the young people some beautiful lessons of life drawn from the 19th Psalm.

The annual meeting of the Alumni Association was held in the afternoon, and plans formulated to promote the interest of the association and school. At the conclusion of the meeting lunch was served on the campus by the alumni, and every new pupil was given a hearty welcome to Glade Valley.

We have a splendid faculty this year and with the deep interest they have in the work and with the experience in the class-room we are expecting much success for the year. And may we have the prayers and support of our friends in this wonderful work.

Davidson—The fall meeting of the executive committee of the board of trustees was held here October 2-3. The committee among other matters authorized measures by which work will be begun on the southern wing of the handsome and greatly enlarged Chambers building during the winter or early spring and will be pushed to the point of having the section ready for use at the opening of the 1924-25 session. The entire building is being planned on an ambitious and elaborate scale.

Rev. Dr. C. M. Richards, preaching Sunday morning from the text, I Peter 2:4-5, To whom coming as unto a living stone . . . ye also as living stones are built up a spiritual house, maintained the very high level that is marking his pulpit work and by which he sustains his reputation as the right man in a pulpit that has the responsibility and the privilege of bringing a message from God's Word every Sunday morning to a congregation of seven or eight hundred people nearly 600 of which are students.

The sermon was a beautiful and forceful presentation of the greatness and majesty and loveliness of the Divine Saviour.

News of the Week

Heroic measures to remedy one of the greatest common labor shortages in the history of the city of Asheville were taken when uniformed police cleared Pack Square of negro vagrants who have for months been cluttering the benches of the city's central park, and officers were dispatched through the colored districts to warn the blacks to go to work or prepare to go to jail.

Over 1,600 special correspondents of The Journal of Commerce now place their average estimate of percentage condition at 49.5, a loss of 7.3 per cent. This compares with 56.8 per cent last month, 70.4 per cent in July and a 10-year average of 60.6 per cent.

President Coolidge issued a proclamation calling for observance of the week beginning November 18th as national education week.

LIKES THE LETTERS

Dear Standard:

This is my second letter to the Standard as my other letter came out. I sure do enjoy the children's letters. I haven't any pets, only my little baby sister, her name is Annie Margaret. She will be two years old the 16th of next month and my next little brother's name is Lynn. So I will stop. Hoping to see my letter printed. I am, your little friend, Edith Cole.

HOW BILLY WAS A SOLDIER

"My, but I just wish I was growned up so I could be a soldier!" said Billy as he and his father passed a little group of soldiers on the street. "I s'pose by the time I'm a man the war will be all over."

"I sincerely hope it will, my boy," answered his father gravely, "and that there will never be another; but if there should be I trust you will be ready to do your duty though you will find it far from pleasant."

"Isn't there any way little boys can hurry up and grow faster when they want to, Papa?"

"Not that I know of, but let me tell you, my son, a good soldier has a great many hard lessons to learn before he is fit for service. You can be learning many of them while you are growing up if you will, and you can find all the fighting you want to do every day of your life."

"Why father Baker, I'd like to know how," said Billy, stopping right where he was to stare at his father in amazement.

"One of the first and most important lessons a soldier has to learn is to obey promptly and without a question. I think I know a little boy who is very apt to question why he must do things he is told to do. And very often, I am sorry to say, he disobeys father, mother and teacher."

Billy looked rather discomfited.

"That's different," he said, "if I was a soldier of course I'd obey."

"I'm afraid not unless you had learned to do so before. Suppose you begin this very day to try to do just as you are told every time without one question or murmur, will you? You can imagine that you are in a training camp, if you like."

"That will be sort of fun," said Billy, "but I don't see what chance there is for me to do any fighting."

"Don't you? Well we are all encountering enemies every hour of our lives, and either we overcome them—or they conquer us. Sometimes we have to make a pretty hard fight if we want to come off victorious."

"Every time you are tempted to say or do anything that is not strictly true you are face to face with the enemy deceit. When you are tempted to think of your own pleasure first, or to keep things for yourself, and not share with others—Selfishness is trying to get the best of you. When there is work you ought to do and you try to shirk it—Indolence is the foe. Then there is Disobedience, Ill Temper and—"

"Don't tell any more, please—that is enough for once, it sort of makes me tired to think of so many things. But I guess it will be easy enough to conquer 'em. I can do most anything if I just make up my mind to it."

"Billy," said mother that very afternoon, "I want you to look after baby while I go down street to do an errand."

"Oh dear!" exclaimed Billy fretfully, "I was going over to Tommy's, and we were going to have lots of fun. But that's always the way when I want to go anywhere I have to stay home to do something."

"I thought you were going to be a little soldier boy," said mother gravely. "Isn't this a good time to begin fighting? Here's disobedience and selfishness trying to overcome you, are you going to let them conquer? I shall not make you stay home—go to Tommy's if you wish, but I shall be disappointed not to be able to do my errand, and I shall be even more disappointed to have my soldier boy defeated."

Billy felt very uncomfortable. He wished that mother had not such an unpleasant way of making him decide things himself.

"I told Tommy I'd be sure to come," he said, "he will be 'specting me."

"Very well," said Mamma.

Billy waited a few minutes, hoping she would say more, but she did not.

"You most generally say I must keep my promises," he continued, but there was no reply to this.

He waited a few minutes, then he slipped out of the room, took his cap and went out doors.

"Aren't you ashamed of yourself?" something kept saying inside of him. "You're a pretty soldier to be beaten the first thing like this. You are selfish not to be willing to give up your play when mother does so much for you. And you are disobedient, because if you go you are doing what you know mother does not want you to. You're no soldier at all unless you can fight better than this."

Billy was almost to the gate when all at once he squared his shoulders and marched back doublequick.

"I most got beat," he said, "but not quite. You go right off, and I'll take care of baby. But I wish it was as interesting and easy to be a soldier as it is to think about being one."—By Kate S. Bates, in Christian Intelligencer.

THE STORY OF A DONKEY

By Carolina Kellog

John had one habit. He would cry, long and loud, when things did not go to suit him. It distressed father and mother, for John was four years old, and they wanted him to be a man and not a cry-baby. They had talked to him about it many times, but still John cried.

One day something went wrong, and John began to cry. Aunt Helen went over to John's blackboard and picked up a piece of chalk. John saw her through his tears but went on crying.

"Once," Aunt Helen began, "there was a boy whose name began with J."

John heard her, but he only cried louder.

"Sometimes," Aunt Helen said, "he smiled, sometimes he looked cross; and some other times he opened his mouth wide and cried loud, like a baby, even though he was four years old."

John was not crying now. He was standing close beside Aunt Helen, watching her, but Aunt Helen didn't turn round to look at him. She just went on talking.

"This boy's name began with J, but it wasn't John. Oh no! His name was Joey. Joey lived in the country, where they had horses, and cows, and pigs, and chickens, and almost everything except ponies; and Joey did wish he had a pony!

"One day a man come to Joey's home with something to sell. 'Oh, father! Joey said, 'it is a pony.' It did look a bit like a pony, but it was not one. It was a dear little gray shaggy donkey, with long, floppy ears, and the kindest eyes you ever saw.

"'He's four years old,' the man said.

"'Does he cry?' Joey's father asked.

"The man looked puzzled, first at Joey's father and then at Joey. 'Oh!' he said, and then he laughed. 'I don't think he knows how, but I guess he could learn.'

"'Oh, but we don't want him to learn, do we, Joey?' asked Joey's father; and Joey said, 'No, sir.'

"'Well,' the man said, 'if he doesn't ever hear anybody cry, maybe he won't learn how.'

"Joey's father bought the donkey, and Joey was so happy he felt as if he would never, never cry again.

"In a few days he and the donkey were very good friends. The donkey's name was Jerry. Every morning Jerry would come up to the side door and wait for Joey to come out and ride him and play with him.

"But one morning something went wrong at breakfast, and Joey cried. He cried loud, and he didn't want to stop; but all at once he heard a noise. It was louder than his crying, and it was out of doors. Joey had to stop crying and listen.

"'E-aw, E-aw, E-aw-aw!' he heard.

"Joey's father got up from the breakfast table, and looked out of the door.

"'Oh, dear! oh dear!' he said. 'It's Jerry. Now he's learned to cry! A crying boy and a crying donkey—that's too much! We can't keep them both. We have to keep the boy, so we'll have to get rid of the donkey.'

"'Oh father, father! please don't.' Joey begged, and he was starting to cry again, but remembered just in time. 'Truly, father, I won't be a crying boy and then we can keep Jerry, can't we? And, father, maybe if I don't cry any more Jerry won't either.'

"Father promised to give them a trial, and Joey really did try not to be a cry-baby any more, and when you try real hard you can always do a thing, can't you, John?"

But John only answered, "Please tell me that again, auntie."—Herald and Presbyter.

GOING TO BED

When I go up to bed in the evening

And the big moon is shining so bright,
She seems to be smiling and saying to me:

"Good night, little girlie, good night."

So I nod and smile back from my window
And whisper a soft "Good night" too.

While she seems to be saying: "I hope
all the day

You've been loving, obedient and true."

Then I knelt by my bed to say "Thank you"

For the things God has given to me
And to ask Him to bless the dear children afar

Who are hungry and cold o'er the sea,
And when I wake up in the morning,

In my box goes a penny or two Or more if I have it to help the dear Lord
Do the things I have asked Him to do.
—Elizabeth F. Guptill, in Ex.

MISS POPPY

Miss Poppy is the gayest one

Of all the garden flowers;
She dances lightly in the sun
And brightly in the showers.

On pleasant days I love to see
Her shade hat, broad and red,
When breezes flap it playfully
About her nodding head.

But when it's time for flowers to nap
She pulls her draw string tight
And makes a cunning little cap
To sleep in through the night.

—Eleanor Cameron, in Youth's Companion.

AFTER ALL

Blackberries big as thimbles,

Peaches yellow as gold,
Crowds of fluttering daisies

Thick as the hills will hold,
Bluebird's song on the tree tops,
Meadows tumbled with hay—
If only beautiful summer
Could always stay!

Yet nuts are ripening slowly.

And apples are growing sweet;

Crickets will soon be playing

Their wee flutes at our feet;

Leaves will be colored and lovely,

And silver frosts will fall.

We couldn't spare sweet autumn

After all.

Story and Incident

A CHILD GOES TO CHURCH

By Mazie V. Caruthers

First, all the people sing and then—they say

"Our Father," just as I do every day; It makes me feel so proud, because I, too, Know how to pray the words that Grown-Ups do.

Right after that, four men march down the aisles—

(My Uncle Joe is one; he always smiles On week-days—but on Sundays, what a change!

Church seems to make him look so stern and strange).

They all pass silver plates, and each one there

Must put in money, like you pay a fare. I carry my own purse, and when it's time

For me to pay, put in a brand-new dime. I like this part of church, but later, when

The man in robes begins to talk, why then

My thoughts, like birds, go flying any-where—

(But God, who lives here in this house, won't care

So long as I sit still). The sun shines through Three stained glass windows just above our pew;

One of them shows a Shepherd with a lamb

Cuddled close to his shoulder. Oh, I am So fond of Him! Within that kind, strong arm

No little lamb could ever come to harm. A lovely Lady in a queer blue gown

From out the second window frame smiles down,

Holding her Baby—'twould be great if He Should climb down from her lap and play with me!

The middle picture is the best of all; A bearded Man, tall as my father's tall—

Stands underneath a great, big, spreading tree,

And little children gather 'round His knee—

They seem to talk together like dear friends—

His face is beautiful.

When service ends, The organ plays a lively tune, as though

It means to tell us, "Hurry up and go." So everybody crowds to reach the door.

But I turn back to look at them once more—

The Shepherd and the Lady and the Man And say good-bye as often as I can!

Their eyes all follow me—they cannot speak—

But church will be locked up a whole long week,

And they'll be lonely till next Sunday, when

They know I'll come to see them all again!

—The New York Times.

A ROMANCE OF CLOVELLY

By Kate Douglas Wiggin

Have you e'er seen the street of Clovelly? The quaint rambling street of Clovelly, With its staircase of stone leading down to the sea, To the harbor so sleepy, so old, and so wee, The queer crooked street of Clovelly.

Have you e'er seen the lass of Clovelly? The sweet little lass of Clovelly, With kirtle of gray reaching just to her knee, And ankles as neat as ankles may be— The yellow-haired lass of Clovelly.

There's a good honest lad in Clovelly, A bold fisher lad of Clovelly,

With purpose as straight and swagger as free

As the course of his boat when breasting the sea,

The brave sailor lad of Clovelly.

Have you e'er seen the church at Clovelly?

Have you heard the sweet bells of Clovelly?

The lad and the lassie will hear them maybe,

And join hand in hand to sail over life's sea,

From the little stone church at Clovelly.

THE POST CARD

By Susan Hubbard Martin, in Kind Words

Miss Narcissus lifted her head suddenly. She had been weeding the pansy bed when she heard little Jimmie Allen's voice. He had come in the gate so quietly she did not hear him.

"Well, Jimmie," she said in her pleasant voice.

Jimmie came closer.

"I'm selling post cards, Miss Narcissus," he began. "Post cards of the inside of the church. The proceeds go to buy new red chairs for the primary room. Want to see one? They're ten cents apiece."

As he spoke he thrust one into her hand.

Miss Narcissus took it, adjusted her spectacles and looked at it long and meditatively. "It looks as natural as life," she remarked slowly. "I can see the pulpit as plain as day. And bless me if there ain't the big Bible and how fine the pulpit chairs look."

She paused—

"I'd like to have one for myself," she went on, "But ten-cent pieces are scarce. I'll go without. I can see the church any time but I'm going to buy one for somebody who can't. Remember Noel Randall who went out west?"

Jimmy nodded—

"A little. He's been gone a while, hasn't he?"

"Yes, several years."

"Was he in your class, Miss Narcissus?"

Miss Narcissus nodded.

"Yes, he was one of my boys. But he don't write any more since his ma died. I am afraid he's kind of lost interest in us. But a picture of the old church won't hurt any. Go in the house, Jimmie, and look on the clock shelf and you'll find ten pennies. Leave one of the post cards on the table. I want to weed my pansy bed a bit more."

* * *

Noel Randall rode into town that Saturday afternoon. He wouldn't go back to the ranch until Sunday night. There was always a good time to be had at Donovan's.

"There's a card here for you, Noel," called out the postmaster as he passed by, "been here a week."

Noel alighted from his horse and went in and the postmaster, a little thin gray-bearded man, handed him the card.

Noel took it, turned it over and read the words Miss Narcissus had written on the other side.

"Dear Noel," she began. "This is a picture of the old church. I thought you might like it. I've marked the pew where you used to sit with your ma. Remember you are still one of my boys."

"Your old Sunday School teacher,

"Narcissus Barton."

Noel winced as he read the words.

Miss Narcissus, his old Sunday School teacher, and she hadn't forgotten him. He turned the post card over.

Yes, she had, as she said, marked the old pew where he and his mother had sat so many years. Blessed mother—and the old church. He stood there in the dusty little post office and he saw himself a little boy holding the hymn book and standing by his mother's side. There was one psalm that Miss Narcissus had taught him when he was about ten.

"Lord, Thou hast been our dwelling place in all generations. Before the mountains were brought forth or ever thou hadst formed the earth and the world, even from everlasting to everlasting, Thou art God."

He had forgotten it. God had occupied small place in the restless life he had lived since he had come west.

How good to see a picture of the old church. How desirable the old days seemed to be with their peaceful Sundays and mid-week prayer meetings.

He studied the post card again and as he looked a wave of longing rolled over him. He wanted to see mother's grave once more. He wanted to stand beside it and touch with reverent fingers that grass that grew over it. He wanted to see Miss Narcissus. Would she still claim him as her boy if she knew how far he had fallen short?

He walked out of the little post office unheedingly, with the post card still in his hand.

There was a little sum at the bank that he had managed to save. He would take it and go back—back to the town—back to the little church—back to Miss Narcissus.

He threw back his shoulders.

"Thou art God."

The old postmaster called him as he went out.

"Come in early, did you, Noel," he asked. "Anything special going on?"

Noel nodded.

"You might call it special," he smiled,

"I'm leaving on the next train for home."

The old postmaster nodded.

"It's a good place to go back to," he added soberly. "I'm glad, Noel."

Noel nodded—

"Thanks," he replied, huskily.—Susan Hubbard Martin, in Kind Words.

THE CHURCH MUSIC

The April number of the Etude published the result of a poll of some 32,000 of its readers as to their favorite hymns. It is rather gratifying to note that the real old hymns of the church that have stood the test of time and good literature were the most popular.

"Abide With Me" led in popularity, while "Nearer, My God, to Thee," "Lead Kindly Light," "Rock of Ages," "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," "Holy, Holy Holy," "Just As I Am," come next in the order named.

"Down in Gawgia" there are perhaps thousands of followers of the "singing school music." These are mostly among the untrained musical ears, among the good common people. The music they have is nothing much but rhythm, and it has plenty of that. The words are a meaningless sort of jargon. At any rate, they do not compose poetry or poetic thought, and will not stand the test of time.

Based on this fact, we venture the assertion that rhythm is very passing in its appeal. We soon grow tired of just merely a catch air and discard it as a child does an outgrown plaything. There is nothing there to fasten itself upon the heart and breathe itself into the life of a person.

The stately hymns of the church, some of them centuries old, are good literature; they state living, vital truths; they represent the experiences of fervently religious lives poured out under inspiration in a burst of melody; they have sounded the depths of religious experience; they meet a religious need in the life; they satisfy; they preach the gospel in music.

Theodore Roosevelt enjoyed the rugged life of the western plains; he had lots of dash and speed and force. He was fond of a good horse that could cover the ground. But he did not select as a favorite hymn one of rhythmic appeal. Characterized as the most typical American of his day, after all it is not surprising that his favorite gospel hymn was "How Firm a Foundation." This was also the favorite of our beloved Robert E. Lee.

Hon. Chauncey M. Depew, statesman, financier, a man prominent in the business and political world, now past 80 years of age, prefers above all other hymns, "Rock of Ages." Perhaps in his intimate relations with the world he has found out that "change and decay" is found in all things, and has learned that the "Rock of Ages" changes not. This, one of the grandest hymns ever written, was also the favorite of the great English statesman, William E. Gladstone.

The father of Dr. Chas. W. Eliot, now president emeritus of Harvard, and a man 90 years old, suggested to his son Charles when he was nine years old that he learn "The Spacious Firmament on High," which he gives as his favorite hymn at this time.

Our own beloved Georgia Bishop, one of America's greatest of men, is quoted as preferring "Sun of My Soul." This is a very simple, expressive hymn that moves upon the heart with power. Any one who has had the privilege of hearing the Bishop sing this song may know that he pours out his whole heart in the singing, and we catch new meanings from his expression.—W. A. Tyson, in Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

FATAL FLUENCY

I should like to utter a word of necessary warning to the man or woman who possesses a natural gift of fluent and effective speech. Words come to them so readily, and voice and action have such excellence, that they easily win their way to attention and admiration. The toil which alone enables the unready orator to speak at all they find unnecessary. They therefore are tempted to do something which is known as "trusting to the inspiration of the moment." A fatal phrase upon which many promising orators have been wrecked.

The surest road to inspiration is preparation. The more voluble you are naturally, the harder you ought to labor. A natural fatal snare for the indolent orator is to see many brilliant men caught and arrested by their own talents. I have seen many men of undoubted courage and capacity fail for lack of industry. On the other hand, I have seen many a clumsy but persevering tortoise waddle successfully to the goal. Mastery in speech can only be reached by mastery in your subject.—Lloyd George in The World's Work.

SHALL WE EQUIP OR QUIT?

Read the full page of Equipment Needs in this issue of the paper. There is a pathetic story connected with practically each one. These are not all the urgent needs—only those approved by the Foreign and Home Mission Committees as being perhaps the most urgent at this time. Some have been left out because all could not be listed.

The Assembly for three years has plead for an Equipment Fund. Other causes have had the right of way. Some are insisting that we put the Equipment Fund in the Budget. To do so will kill the Equipment Fund or hurt the budget. Shall we force our missionaries to limp along when our people have the money and will give it if they know the facts?

The greatest single need right now is for the pastors and officers of the churches to become really informed on and interested in this great problem of our Church. It is impossible to make any progress in this effort without their support. In many instances we might as well quit if we are not going to equip.

Study the list of needs. Ask your church to take one of them. If you can individually assume one make this a subject of prayer and write us at once. Watch the mails and the Church papers for detailed plans and information. PLAN AND PREPARE FOR EQUIPMENT FUND SUNDAY—THE FIRST SUNDAY IN DECEMBER.

HOW SHIVAR MINERAL WATER RELIEVES RHEUMATISM

According to the standard medical books, Rheumatism is not a germ disease but is the result of imperfect nutrition. The food is either imperfectly digested or imperfectly assimilated. Poisons accumulate and these irritate and inflame the delicate linings of the joints, the heart and other organs. To relieve Rheumatism it is therefore necessary to stop the formation of these poisons and get rid of those already formed.

The celebrated Shivar Mineral Water acts on the stomach and kidneys. It corrects the digestion and washes out the poisons through the kidneys. This is the opinion of physicians who prescribe it. If you suffer from rheumatism, dyspepsia, indigestion, disease of the kidneys, bladder or liver, uric acid poisoning, or any curable condition due to impure blood, read the following letter, then sign it, enclose the amount and mail it. Only two out of a hundred on the average report no benefit. Shivar Springs,

Box 3 B, Shelton, S. C. Gentlemen:

I accept your offer and enclose herewith three dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if I report no benefit you agree to refund the price of the water in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return within a month.

"Well, sir," answered the attendant, "he must have got his base on an error."—Selected.

OUR WOMEN

THE Standard has made no secret of its disapproval of the last Assembly's action in putting women on the Executive Committees. In disapproving of the General Assembly, the Standard is far from disapproving of the women. Our contention is that it contravenes the fundamental principles of our representative system of government to put private members of the Church in positions of executive authority, and to give them administrative control over the most important work of the Church. But if private members are to be placed in positions of such responsibility, let them be women. We prefer them to any other class of private members. For that matter we prefer them to any other class of members, private or official. The women are our greatest asset. Is it said that preachers are more important to the Church than women? We answer that without the women there could be no preachers. Not only so, but the women determine largely the quality of the preachers. Had there been no Susannah Wesley, there would have been no John and Charles Wesley. Had Susannah Wesley been different from what she was, John and Charles would have been different. To use her own words, she devoted "twenty years of the prime of her life in the hopes of saving the souls of her children." She put religion first in thought and effort, and consecrated twenty years of her prime to making the highest type of Christian out of her children. She had her reward from on high, but the world can never pay the immeasurable debt which it owes to that sensible and saintly mother. Her face should appear on the same tablet with the faces of her illustrious sons on the walls of Westminster Abbey. Had she been other than she was that tablet would not be there.

Augustine, Bishop of Hippo, wrote his name in letters that will never fade from the pages of history. But before that, and as the explanation of that, the name of Augustine's mother had been written in fadeless characters in the Lamb's Book of Life. Had the devout Monaca never prayed, her son Augustine had never preached. He is better known on earth, but it may well be that in heaven she outranks him. And so with Authusa, the mother of John Chrysostom, had she not been enrolled among the saints, and had she not given herself to the training of her fatherless boy, the Church would never have been thrilled and blessed with the eloquence which won for her son the title "Golden-mouth."

What honor has God ever put on woman in connection with His redemptive work. At the head of the list stands Mary, the mother of our Lord. She is crowned with the "glory that excelleth." So impressive is this fact that a large part of the Christian world has exalted her to the position of a goddess. While this is carrying praise to sinful excess, Mary is worthy to receive the highest reverence short of worship. The intuition of her own heart was true: "From henceforth all generations shall call me blessed." Mary heads the list, but a great company shared with her the honor and privilege of ministering to our Lord in the days of His humiliation. No lowliness of birth, no marks of poverty, no scorn of rulers could hide from their eyes the celestial beauty of the Divine Man. They followed Him on His last sad journey to Jerusalem, and when even His dearest friends among the twelve lost faith and deserted Him, they remained true. They pressed close on His footsteps up to Golgotha, and their devotion wavered not, as with weeping eyes and breaking hearts, they looked on the final tragedy. Nothing was left then but to pay a last, loving tribute to the lifeless body and to mourn at the grave. This they did, while the stunned and despairing Apostles were in hiding. These women of quenchless ardor, of unflagging fidelity, were the forerunners of an innumerable multitude, whose pious zeal and tireless labors have been the richest possession of the Church in every period of its history. It is the same today. Mary and Martha, Euodia and Syntyche, Tryphaena and Tryphosa are still with us; and they still labor with their pastors in the Gospel, and many of them like the beloved Persis, "Labor much in the Lord." It often happens that men are too selfish to sacrifice business, or too self-indulgent to sacrifice pleasure, in order to serve the Church. But our women make it their business and find it their pleasure to give of their meagre means, and to serve with their utmost strength the cause of Him "Whom having not seen, they love." It is the glory of Christianity that it finds its most ardent devotees among the women. It is the glory of women that they furnish the noblest examples of the pure doctrines of Christ.

THE SYNOD OF NORTH CAROLINA

It is an old axiom that a thing cannot be in two places at the same time. The recent meeting of the North Carolina Synod, while, of course, it could not overthrow an axiom of such evident truth, it is nevertheless proved that one thing can come very near being in two places at once.

It met in the churches of Burlington and Graham in such a way that while no one could say,

"How happy could I be with either,
Were t'other dear charmer away,"

he could at least quote,

"Two souls with but a single thought,
Two hearts that beat as one."

Though separated by two miles, by the aid of the automobiles and the fine road, they functioned as one.

The opening was in Burlington, but in Graham the business meetings each day were held, and the lunches served, and such was the blending together of the two congregations that no one could tell either by the conversation or appearance, where any particular one belonged.

The Southern railroad, by mismanagement which was remarkable because so rare, kept us in Greensboro all night because the train for Burlington moved out before the passengers on the train from Charlotte could pass from the rear of one train around the engine and reach their train on the next track.

This blunder caused us to miss the opening session, always full of interest by reason of the Moderator's sermon and the election of his successor. Dr. E. D. Brown's sermon, according to the Greensboro News, was well worth hearing, as it sent forth a blast of no uncertain sound and called attention to the dangers of Modernism in our day that would be a shock to the "peace-at-any-price" men who preach and teach toleration both in the pulpit and press.

Rev. Dr. J. H. Henderlite, of Gastonia, and Rev. J. Murphy Williams, of Greensboro, were nominated as Moderator, and as only one was needed, the choice fell upon Dr. Henderlite. It was clearly a case of the embarrassment of riches.

We have not as yet the figures of the number attending, but unless our judgment has failed us, it was a record-breaking Synod in point of attendance.

The Synod kindly gave the editor a chance to set before them the claims of the Standard on their support by the following suggestive points: Being the official organ of the Synod implies a mutual relation and mutual duties. The duty on the part of the paper has been to place valuable space at the disposal of the various agencies of the Synod, especially the Home Mission work, while the duty on the other side is to see that the paper reaches the membership of the Synod. The paper has met its obligation and has never refused space and support to any request of the Synod. On the other hand, the pastors have been so intent upon their own work that they have, in a large measure, left the paper to work out its own salvation. He cited as proof that the present Circulation Campaign to increase the number of subscribers had not received the support that was its due. Nothing could have been more gratifying than the effect of this speech. The editor found, as he always knew, that these men are loyal to the paper, and would rally about it when their attention was called to it.

Dr. McCain, president of Agnes Scott College, made a fine address, when the editor had closed his speech. He explained in a clear manner why the colleges face the demands of the Educational Associations of this day. He urged the Church to rally to the support of its schools by placing them upon an equality with the State institutions, thus enabling their graduates to draw a salary in teaching equal to that of other high-grade schools.

Dr. McCain was thanked by a rising vote for his excellent address.

According to our usual custom, the morning hour was devoted to a Synodical Communion of the Lord's Supper. Dr. A. R. Shaw and Dr. W. P. McCorkle occupied the pulpit. Dr. McCorkle read Isaiah 53rd chapter and offered prayer, and Dr. Shaw preached a strong doctrinal sermon on "The Atonement." Dr. E. C. Murray and his son, Rev. J. J. Murray, presided at the communion, which was administered by a large number of ruling elders, who by their presence gave tangible evidence that the eldership of our Church comprises the bone and sinew of agriculture and trade in every community.

The communion, as is our custom, was followed by the reading of memorials of deceased ministers. This is always a solemn service. The following memorials were read: That of Rev. J. Andrew Smith, by Rev. S. L. Cathey; that of Rev. E. H. Harding, D.D., prepared by Dr. D. I. Craig, but read by Dr. C. M. Richards; that of Rev. J. D. A. Brown, by Rev. C. V. Gaston; that of Rev. J. F. McKinnon, by Rev. J. C. Grier; and that of Rev. C. V. Cavitt, prepared by Rev. R. C. Gilmore, but read by Rev. E. L. Siler.

The reading of the report on Schools and Colleges consumed much time and occasioned some warm speeches. The report proposes to raise a large enough endowment to make two A-grade colleges for women and two Junior colleges for the same sex.

Rev. J. Murphy Williams threw, as some thought, cold water on the proposition by contending that one A-grade college for women would be enough.

It was, however, explained that it would be wiser to put one on its feet, and then work for another, rather than by trying to handle both, to lose all.

The report of the Stewardship Committee was next in order, and it occasioned a very warm debate. As intimated in a recent editorial, there has been an under-current of criticism of this Committee upon the ground that its results did not justify the cost.

We do not believe that there was anything personal in this dissatisfaction, but it was felt that the amount expended had not brought in results commensurate with the out-lay.

Mr. J. B. Spillman, the Secretary of the Committee in this Synod, made a very calm address outlining what he had done—and closing by saying that if, in the judgment of the Synod, he was not the man, they ought to get another man and that if they did, he would not blame them.

Dr. Byron Clark said that he had been opposed to a manager—but that after watching the workings and having the Secretary in his Church, he had become an enthusiastic advocate of it.

Dr. Scanlon, of the Durham Church also spoke in its favor. These two speeches had much to do with the keeping of the Secretary.

The Home Mission meeting Wednesday evening was a great success, and the program was wisely framed.

Four workers, fresh from the front, in a quiet way, described their work and the difficulties confronting them.

Rev. J. T. Wildman, of Martin County, said that he came from a land of bull frogs and bad liquor, and that he had to preach wherever he could gather people.

Rev. J. A. Vache, who works in Albemarle made a good speech. Rev. E. G. Clary described his work in Wilson County, and he was followed by Rev. J. J. Murray whose field of labor is largely in Hanover County.

In order to show how the Synod and Presbyteries were helped by the Home Mission Committee, all who were in any way helped by the Committee, were asked to stand. A general uprising took place, which made a deep impression upon the audience, showing as it did, how far-reaching was the money spent on this work.

Rev. Dr. Wm. Black and Rev. Leonard Gill were re-elected the General Evangelists of the Synod, and Rev. A. W. Crawford was re-elected Secretary.

The meeting was a great success as we have intimated.

The speeches were short and to the point. The only criticism we heard was that the Chairman in introducing each speaker talked as long as the man introduced, and to that extent deprived the audience of the pleasure of hearing more from the young men.

Dr. Foster's report on Church and Manse Erection proved that both, Churches and Manses, are sadly lacking in the Home Mission field. It is proposed to raise some few hundred thousand dollars for that purpose.

Let us hope that this motion will be speedily put to work. That we need such buildings and manses is evident to all, and it is also evident that there is money enough in Presbyterian pockets to build all we need. The problem is how to move the money from one place and invest it in the other.

On Thursday morning Dr. Melvin, the Secretary of the Stewardship Committee of the General Assembly made a wonderful speech which ought to be heard all over the Church.

Those who are disposed to criticize this Committee and charge it with assuming autocratic powers, would find that it can only carry out the wishes of the Assembly, and that its powers are only advisory.

Dr. Richard and his Committee presented a report on the erection of a new Presbytery.

This report we propose to illustrate by a map very soon. We are enabled to do this through the generosity of two elders, E. P. Wharton, of Greensboro, and J. R. Young, of Raleigh. This report changed the bounds of several Presbyteries and moved several towns from one Presbytery to another, so it was natural that sentiment should play a large part in the discussion.

The making of this report, its plans and its success, will ever be a ground of wonder to us—proving as it does that the Chairman must be a past-master in rounding sharp curves and neutralizing prejudices.

The Synod adjourned to meet in Washington, N. C., October 14, 1924, at 8 p. m.

The entertainment at this Synod deserves more than a passing notice. The editor, by reason of his office, has to attend every General Assembly, where the entertaining church always serves a lunch to the commissioners. These lunches have always been good and sustaining. He however must confess that Graham and Burlington in serving lunches deserve the blue ribbon. Did any one, ever in their liveliest dreams ever hear of feeding three hundred preachers and elders with fried chicken!

Not only did they give fried chicken, but with a lavish abandon they put three pieces on each plate, in connection with chicken-salad sandwiches, stuffed eggs and good coffee, and then capped it all with as much ice cream as the greediest man could ask.

Rome, in her degenerate days, when man was celebrated according to his skill in preparing dishes to tempt the appetite, really had nothing on these two churches and their excellent women.

OUR WOMAN'S EDITION

The present edition of the Standard is devoted to our women, of whom the Southern Church is justly proud.

We present to our readers contributions from many of them, which will prove that even the editors of our Church papers have no advantage over them in the ability to frame rounded and pointed sentences, rich in thought and suggestiveness. We take pleasure in giving place and full recognition to their talent and worth, because, by reason of our desire to see the Church keep within our constitution, we have been compelled to occupy a position of seeming antagonism.

Whether we measure their value to the Church in dollars and cents, or in keeping alive the spiritual life of the Church, by their work around fireside, or in the prayer circles, they stand ahead of the men.

No greater tribute could be paid them than seen in the fact that while they in their Auxiliaries are running smoothly and efficiently, the lay of our Church have not yet grown accustom to their new harness, so that they pull together.

We have followed the development of woman work in the churches of other denominations, and are proud of the fact that our women stand the front rank of those who are laboring for the upbuilding of the Kingdom of God on earth.

We hope that our readers will not fail to enjoy the contributed articles. If they will devote a few moments to their perusal, we are sure they will conclude that we have not done justice to our subject, and that without their help our Church would not occupy the position it does among the churches of this country.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION IN STATE SCHOOLS

In another column will be found an important action of the North Carolina Synod, concerning the moral training of our young people in State schools.

Without regard to denominational views, the people of this State are beginning to realize that no man can be educated whose morals are undeveloped.

This is the business of the Church and not the State, yet it is a difficult problem, how the Church can do this work without teaching doctrinal views. The object of this action of the Synod is to confer with our sister denomination to see if we cannot work out a plan to teach the Bible as a history of God's people, and at the same time to leave to the respective Churches the work of instilling doctrine.

We believe that the denominations have reason enough to do this.

THE BIGGEST BUSINESS IN THE WORLD

Dr. James I. Vance, of Nashville, in his new book "Being a Preacher," tells the following incident which commended to the attention of our Christian boys.

"We were a little group of preachers and laymen meeting in Richmond, Virginia, to consider a matter that had been referred to us by the General Assembly of the Church. One afternoon we visited Union Theological Seminary, the leading school of Southern Presbyterianism for training ministers. We were shown around the grounds and through the buildings, and came to the library, on whose walls hung the portraits of a number of the former students of the institution.

"One of our group was the distinguished Chief Justice of a Southern state. As we drove away, he turned to me and said: 'I would give twenty thousand dollars to have my portrait where yours hangs there in the seminary library.' Then with a sigh he added: 'Yours is the greatest calling in the world. The regret of my life is that I did not become a preacher instead of a lawyer.'"

MY SAVIOUR'S HANDS

A pair of little hands I see,
Two chubby infant hands so wee,
Clutching sweet Mary's face in glee.

Two boyish hands, sturdy and brown,
Holding the plane in Nazareth Town
In Joseph's shop, as the sun goes down.

Two hands of a youth, older grown,
Folded in prayer by a rugged one
Out on the hill-top, all alone.

A young man's hands, toil-marked and strong,
Seeking to aid in the restless throng,
The helpless victims of sin and wrong.

Two tired hands 'neath the olive tree,
In the garden of grey Gethsemane,
Clasped for my sins in agony.

Two hands outstretched on a cross of wood,
From cruel nail-wounds red with blood,
Bringing a lost world back to God.

O hands of my Crucified Christ Divine,
Take into thine own these hands of mine,
And teach them to serve with a love like thine.

THE DAUGHTERS OF ZELOPHEHAD A Devotional Study

By Mrs. Henry E. Gurney

Then came the daughters of Zelophehad, of the families of Manasseh, the son of Joseph: And these are the names of his daughters, Mahlah, Noah, and Milcah, and Hegliah, and Tirzah. And they stood before Moses, and before Eleazer the priest, and before the princes, and all the congregation, by the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, saying, Our father died in the wilderness, and he was not in the company of them that gathered themselves together against the Lord in the company of Korah; but died in his own sin, and had no sons. Why should the name of our father be done away from among his family, because he had no son? Give unto us therefore a possession among the brethren of our father. And Moses brought their cause before the Lord.

And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, The daughters of Zelophehad speak right. Thou shalt surely give them a possession of an inheritance among their father's brethren; and thou shalt cause the inheritance of their father to pass unto them. Numbers 27:1-7.

Perhaps the last three verses of the previous chapter should have been included in the lesson, to give us the proper appreciation of the action of these women. There we learn that the numbering of the children of Israel, in preparation for entering the promised land, had been accomplished; and in the list, excepting the faithful Caleb and Joshua, was not one name which had been counted in the first numbering some 40 years before. They had all died in the wilderness; they could not enter the promised land because of unbelief. Among the unbelieving was Zelophehad. He having left no son, his house had not been numbered with the rest, and his five daughters were left without lot or portion in the land to which they went.

From their childhood these women must have heard of the land of Canaan. Through all the wandering in the great and terrible wilderness their hearts had been cheered by the thought of that land; the home, the rest, the bountiful provision, reserved for them across the Jordan. But now at the very entrance death had snapped the one link connecting them with the inheritance, and they were to be, as far as human eye could see, left destitute in the land of plenty.

However, the eye of faith discerns things invisible to mortal sense. These daughters, looking around, were distracted, looking within were miserable, but looking up to their God their fears became radiant and their faces not ashamed. With no law to guide them, and no precedent to give them confidence, they presented themselves at the door of the tabernacle and made known their request. The very simplicity and boldness of their faith was a splendid testimony before all that congregation, and God justified their confidence in Him by giving them exceeding abundantly above all they had asked or thought. First the precious word of approval, "The daughters of Zelophehad speak right." Then the full portion for which they had asked, and furthermore, made them a channel of blessing to succeeding generations, by establishing this decree a statute in Israel.

Is this scripture written for our instruction, and is it possible for us to learn from these daughters the secret of effectual prayer? No matter how we word our petitions, we want exactly what they obtained: God's approval, His blessing for ourselves and for others.

Back of their prayer was a fervent desire. They realized their need. True they had never seen the promised land, but they believed the word concerning it, the grapes of Eschol, the vineyards and olive trees, the bread without scarceness; and with all their hearts they desired to possess their possessions. The Psalmist might have been thinking of them when he sang, "One thing have I desired of the Lord, that will I seek after." One of the most precious promises of our Lord concerning prayer, begins, "What things ye desire when ye pray." Whole-hearted desire emboldened them to seek, and the Lord has pronounced a special blessing upon those that seek Him with the whole heart.

We have already noted their faith in God. I do not know how much faith they had in the event, whether they expected the answer in just the way it came or not. It is not just faith, it is faith in God which wins, and that they had. They had reason to believe in a God who had guided, guarded, and fed them through all the years; who had declared Himself to be "The Lord God, merciful and gracious, longsuffering, and abundant in goodness and truth." That was an age when God was giving frequent manifestations of His presence, and faith was in most cases greatly aided by sight and sense, yet in this matter they were shut up to faith alone. This was a new thing in Israel, and contrary to all previous usage.

If their thought of God had been small they might have timidly requested an obscure corner in Canaan where they could eke out an existence; but they honored Him as the Queen of Sheba honored Solomon by communing with him of all that was in her heart, they asked for the full inheritance, and the perpetuation of their father's name. Solomon gave Sheba's queen all her desire, and a greater than Solomon gave these women above all they asked.

Contributed

Quite possibly we need larger thoughts of God and more fervent desire when we pray. Perhaps our Lord is saying to us as He did to the Samaritan woman beside Jacob's well, "If thou knewest the gift of God, and who it is that speaketh to thee, thou wouldest have asked of Him and He would have given thee."

If we knew—If we only knew.
"For this cause I bow my knees unto the Father, that He would grant you that ye may be able to comprehend what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; and to know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fullness of God."

AUXILIARY ENROLLMENT AS AFFECTED BY CONTINGENT FEE

By Nancy Campbell Spillman

One of the greatest advantages of the Woman's Auxiliary over the old Ladies' Aid is the fact that all of the women and girls who are members of the church automatically become members of the Auxiliary. When new members come into the church, they do not fall into the habit of doing nothing while they are deciding whether or not they will join the woman's organization; their names are immediately enrolled in the Auxiliary, they are placed in circles and at once become assimilated into the working body of the church.

It has been said by those who know that 60 per cent of all church members are women and girls. The question then arises that since our Auxiliary plan calls for the enrollment in the Auxiliary of all the women and girls of the church, why then is our percentage of enrollment so low? Why is it that the Synod which has the highest percentage of enrollment, enrolls only 32 members out of every 100 when she should enroll 60 members out of every 100, while the Synod with the lowest percentage of enrollment enrolls only 13 members out of every 100?

The enrollment of the eight highest Synods stands as follows: Virginia, 32 per cent; Florida, 29 per cent;

Arkansas, 25 per cent; South Carolina, 21 per cent; Tennessee, 20 per cent; and North Carolina, 19 per cent.

In Mecklenburg Presbyterial, of North Carolina, we feel that the contingent fee is largely responsible for our low percentage of enrollment. We have a fee of 50 cents per member and the majority of Auxiliaries are not adopting the Auxiliary plan of enrolling all the women and girls of the church. We find that they are enrolling only those members from whom they expect a revenue. Should some of the weaker Auxiliaries pay the contingent fee for all the women and girls of the church, they would be paying more to the running expenses of the organization than they contribute to the great benevolent causes of the church. Consequently the Auxiliary is not reaching the women who most need the instruction, the information and the inspiration which the Auxiliary furnishes, and the contingent fee is one of the great aims of the organization—the development of all the women of the church. This goes to prove that the financial basis for the support of our woman's work is wrong.

At the last meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary, at Montreat, the budget plan was suggested as a remedy for this situation. The Synod of Virginia, which shows the highest percentage of enrollment, has adopted this plan and is already reaping the benefit of it by an increased enrollment. The Synod has made out a budget of its running expenses and this is prorated among the Presbyterials according to their financial strength. The Presbyterials follow the same plan, including the Synodical fee, in their budgets and prorating the whole among the Auxiliaries according to their financial strength, and this amount put into each Auxiliary.

The question now is how shall the financial ability of Presbyterial and Auxiliary be determined.

The best gauge of the financial ability of an Auxiliary is the percentage of the benevolent quota assigned to the Presbyterial and church. The quotas are assigned by men who have made a careful study of the finances of all the churches. The percentages are adopted by Synod in the fall and could be adopted by the Presbyterial in the spring and handed over to each Auxiliary.

As a result of such a system, the bumptious, irritating, contingent fee, which has been given a prominence at all our deliberations far out of proportion to its importance, will be relegated to a back seat where it belongs, and our attention may be turned from a detail of the machinery of our organization to the discussion of important phases of our work.

The question of the amount of the contingent fee would

A VISIT TO THE OFFICES OF THE WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

By Mrs. W. W. Keyser

There is a good map of the territory of the Southern Presbyterian Church in the U. S. which gives the 15 Southern states in compact form, with Missouri standing way off by itself—for all the world, like a handle to a pan! This handle is joined to the work of the Assembly, at St. Louis, at a point where the Missouri empties into the Mississippi river.

West of the northeast boundary of Missouri to the Gulf of Mexico, lies the largest home mission field of the Assembly, and it seemed a fitting decision that brought the office of the Woman's Auxiliary from Atlanta, Ga., in September, 1918, to this location in St. Louis.

It is the only office of the General Assembly west of the Mississippi river, unless we count the book depository at Texarkana.

Situated in the heart of the city, adjacent to the two largest Southern Churches, the Field building has proven a most hospitable home for the organized work of our women.

The Auxiliary office force 11 years ago consisted of the superintendent and a stenographer, and they did the work in one office room.

Today the work employs nine regular assistants, while emergency helpers are often called in in times of rush. Five of the regular helpers are experienced stenographers.

Two of the official force of the Auxiliary reside in other cities. The treasurer, Mrs. D. A. McMillan, of Fulton, has been with the organization since its beginning. The funds supplied by the Executive Committee for the support of the Auxiliary all pass through her hands and are disbursed by her according to the prepared budget approved by the supervisory committee for the year. In addition to this for the past two years Mrs. McMillan has handled the gifts of the Auxiliary for the Equipment Fund, viz: Miss Dowd's School in Japan and the School for the Mexican girls in Texas. Mrs. McMillan's books are a model of accuracy and neatness and always receive especial commendation from the public accountant selected by the supervisory committee to examine annually the Auxiliary books.

Three years ago the growth of the work called for a regular visitor, and Miss Agnes Davidson, for six years president of the Synodical of Florida, was called to be field worker for the Auxiliary. Miss Davidson has done intense organization work in the Presbyteries of Texas, Tennessee, Missouri and West Virginia. As a result of her faithful labors the Auxiliaries of these states became standardized in their work, new Auxiliaries were organized and much better work has resulted.

Wishing to see the Auxiliary "machine" at work, I dropped into the Field building one day last week and visited the five offices now occupied by the Auxiliary.

An atmosphere of warmth and cheerful activity pervaded the place as I entered: The pleasant clic, clic of the typewriters; the buzz of telephones; the "lilt" in quiet voices directing the affairs of the day. As I looked about, I saw shining in every face a light which could only come from a happy, contented spirit within.

Friendly hands were extended to greet the visitor and I was ushered into an inner sanctum. It was not difficult to account for the spirit and atmosphere back in the outer rooms, when I was greeted here by Mrs. W. C. Winsborough, who is the master mind and the heart too, I might almost say, of this Woman's Work in our Assembly.

She sat at a huge flat-top desk, dictating one of the numerous articles which later will appear in leaflet form for our edification, and there again, I saw that steady clear light burning in her face too!

While waiting her leisure, I took in my surroundings. It was a delightful room, with its three Southern windows each boasting a healthy growing plant—overlooking a lovely flower garden across the street adjoining the Eugene Field Grammar School.

There was a warm thick rug on the floor; two comfortable chairs; a long couch which appeared never to have been used; two well filled book-cases; a coat rack; a lavatory and a dictaphone, which I secretly hoped it would be necessary for Mrs. Winsborough to use during my visit.

Of the three pictures on the walls, one was an autographed portrait of Mrs. Booker T. Washington.

Then there was the big desk at which the superintendent sat. It was completely covered with neatly arranged papers; letters to be answered; piles of "proof" to be read; communications from sister denominations to be acknowledged; a hurry call from the Texas-Mexican Presbyterial to be considered and solution of its problems to be given; pictures of new friends in Mexico, who wished not to be forgotten, and many other documents whose headlines I could not take in, all awaiting the action of this wise woman whose judgment has never failed of a right solution of our problems.

In this office are formulated and directed the general policies of the Auxiliary in co-operation with the executive agencies of the Assembly. This phase of the work, with the general supervision of the office, would be a heavy undertaking for any ordinary person, but in addition the superintendent has a large personal correspondence to attend to; the writing of all circular letters; editing the Auxiliary department of the Survey; representing the Auxiliary in interdenominational movements; the writing of leaflets and four months of the year spent in field work, not to mention the planning for and carrying on the Annual Women's School of Missions at Montreat.

Only one of her indomitable courage, strong physique, rare ability and faith in the cause to which she stands pledged could ever bring to fruition the great ever-enlarging work among the women of our Southern Church.

I was roused from my contemplation of these facts by a hand on my shoulder and Mrs. Winsborough's cheerful voice saying, "Come, I want to introduce you to my girls and their work."

Arm in arm we passed into an adjoining room. The walls were lined with book cases containing mission study books; bound copies of the Survey and Minutes of the Assembly; Annual reports and Minutes of the Women's Advisory Committee. There were shelves of letter files and three huge odd looking books which contained the name of every officer in every local Auxiliary! Think of it! Not only were the records of the names kept, but literature was sent out to them. I began to understand the necessity of keeping this office informed of all changes in officers that the connecting link between office and individual be not broken. This splendid office—with its perfectly ordered system, is presided over by Miss Rosa Gibbins, who accepted the position of general office director when the Auxiliary removed its office to St. Louis five years ago. Her previous experience with Dr. Barnardo's Homes in England, her native land, as well as service rendered the Red Cross in America prepared her especially for the important work of supervising the clerical force in the office and have made her most valuable as secretary to Mrs. Winsborough. She is also bookkeeper for the Auxiliary office.

The leaflet order department was the next object of our inspection. Here again, the walls lined with pigeon hole boxes containing all manner of information about our work, listed according to subjects, and general missionary literature from other boards. Two typewriters stood at two deep windows, one of them clic-clicing under the expert fingers of Miss Eleanore Schmied at her daily task of addressing hundreds of envelopes to be ready for the circular letters and program literature which the department sends out each month. I was told this young assistant was also a commercial artist especially skilled in poster making.

Miss Florence Gibbins, who for three years has had charge of the literature order department of the Auxiliary, is responsible for the onerous task of dispatching monthly packages of literature to carry out the Year Book programs to all subscribers. The monthly literature for the Auxiliary and Circle programs of the year book number 3,000 packages. As every department of the Church work is promoted among the women through the Auxiliary, circular letters concerning these various departments are sent at stated times and involve an enormous amount of work, which the committees feel brings rich reward to their treasuries. Approximately 500 packages of free literature are sent monthly on request.

Dozens of orders for special literature are filled daily while 83 Presbyterial meetings and 16 Synodical meetings receive carefully selected packages for the table at their annual meetings.

At a large table in the center of this room Miss Lucille Duggan, who has charge of the promotion department and circular letters, was occupied in filling special orders for literature, the three mails a day, often bringing in hurry-call orders, which must go out at once. One can readily understand why an extra assistant is needed in this busy department, and Miss Mary Quidor, who assists in the literature department as well as in this circular letter department, renders valuable help in time of need.

The office was in process of filling orders for 50,000 Rally Day invitation cards, but there was no sign of confusion or hurry—just everybody turning in with a good will—the work interchangeable when the emergency arises.

In the publicity department I was introduced to Miss Mary Isabelle Saunders, who having studied in Vanderbilt and specialized in Journalism at Peabody, is well equipped to become the literature secretary for the Auxiliary as well as assistant editor of the Auxiliary department of the Survey. She is also historian for Tennessee Synodical.

In the literature room itself I beheld a veritable feast for lovers of good literature! From floor to ceiling, from floor to window, from window to door, were books, pamphlets and great manilla envelopes bursting with leaflets. Shelves groaning under the weight of organization literature for Synodical, Presbyterial and Local Auxiliaries. Leaflets for the promotion of better work on the part of officers; literature on all foreign and home mission subjects, spiritual development and stewardship. There was a copy of every leaflet issued on all subjects by our Southern Presbyterian Church representing an immense outlay of money! Here was a perfect wealth of information just ready to our call! How many women avail themselves of the opportunity?

After a delightful quarter of an hour my guide opened a small door, which had been unobserved by me, and to my astonishment, we were back again in that inner sanctum, where all questions met and were solved! This room was the center of the office—as the superintendent was the spirit and inspiration of the work!

As we stood saying goodbye—after a most enlightening visit, Mrs. Winsborough spoke with deep feeling of "the girls" who had, during the summer, banded themselves together for daily prayer, that her health might be speedily restored.

Shall we be surprised then at the harmony and good will existing among these efficient women. I came away with thanksgiving in my heart, for this great machine so perfectly tuned to meet the needs of the Master's work among the women of the Southern Presbyterian Church.

WOMAN'S WORK IN THE CHURCH

By Mrs. W. B. Ramsay

This is not an article for or against women serving on the Executive Committees of the Church. Neither is it a history of the work of the Woman's Auxiliary. It is rather some comments by one who has worked with the women in the work of the Church.

We believe that 99 out of every 100 women in the Church were surprised at the action of the Assembly last May in directing that women be placed on the Executive Committees. Certainly there was no concerted effort to put this action across. However, we have yet to hear of a protest from the women, and, frankly, we do not expect to see any Synodical Auxiliary president impeached for signing that expression of appreciation of the action of the Assembly. So little is said in Auxiliary circles about woman's place and authority in the Church that it seems superfluous to write about these issues. Our hands are so busy doing the work outlined for us and our energies are to be taken with filling the places that are open for service that we must leave it to editors and seminary professors to keep us straight on church history and polity.

Our organization is credited with being episcopal rather than Presbyterian in its form of government. Some one sees that after an anniversary gift to Miss Dowd's School another anniversary gift to Home Missions is in order. It may be that some minutes somewhere record a resolution to this effect; but it really must be done, and in less than a year the papers are full of descriptions of Mexican fiestas and the Auxiliary treasurer was able to report at the Montreat conference that the $50,000 had been raised. No one really has the authority to object for of course there is no authority to authorize. The circle plan came near awakening the Presbyterian propensity to protest. However, a few successful demonstrations in each Synodical led the way, and as easily as changing the length of the skirt to suit the style so easily did the circle plan take. We women Presbyterians have learned that there is something more precious perhaps than the right personal opinion, and that is the satisfaction of sacrificial co-operation.

We believe this spirit of co-operation is the secret of the success of the Auxiliary activities. There is a swiftness and momentum that would be impossible without the teamwork of the Auxiliary hosts, headed by the general officers, flanked by the 16 Synodical and 84 Presbyterial presidents, and supported by the 20,000 secretaries, leading a hundred thousand women in studying about, in giving to, and in working and praying for all the causes of the Church. These are working without remuneration and are asking no reward save the joy and honor of sharing in the Church's growth and progress.

The highest place of service that the women have in the Church's work is the ministry of intercession. It is in the place of prayer that our asking becomes God's doing. In this we know one headship even Christ, one helper even the Spirit, and one partner even the Father.

As women we claim all the precious promises of the Bible. We ask believing that we shall receive; we come weak and heavy laden finding rest for our souls; we confess our sins knowing He is faithful and just to forgive our sins. As we rest on the precious promises, we seek to obey the commands. We strive to "seek earnestly the best gifts;" to "pray without ceasing;" to "love one another;" to "go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." And how the Master has opened the way through our Auxiliary for us to obey these commands! There are the Eunices and Lois who among us whose first and greatest place of service is the training of the children in the home. There are the Syllias and Dorcas who labor in material things for the advancement of the kingdom. There are the Marthas who serve at luncheons and banquets, and the Marys and Annas who seek the knowledge of God's will. There are the Deborahs whose duty it becomes to encourage the barakats to service and to go more than half way in helping to render that service. There are the Women-at-the-well and the Mary Magdalenes who go tell the glad news of salvation. We find these counterparts in our home circles, in our business women's circles, in the mission study and Bible study classes, in our social activities, and in our witnessing for Him in home and in foreign lands and "in every place."

We do not claim perfection for any member or for any branch of the organization; but we do believe the plan of organization is near the ideal. And our last comment shall be that we covet some such an in-the-church-through-the-church-for-the-church organization for the young people of our denomination. We believe our Church has as great a program of service in the kingdom as any other Christian organization. It is big enough to challenge the men of the Church with its progressive program; it is full enough to call forth the activities of all the women of the Church; and we believe it is broad enough to be the channel through which its young people may serve the kingdom.

EIGHTH ANNUAL CONFERENCE FOR COLORED WOMEN AT TUSCALOOSA

By Edith G. Hinds

The eighth annual conference for colored women, held at Stillman Institute, Tuscaloosa, Ala., September 8-15, exceeded all expectations. With six other conferences held this year, a decrease in registration and attendance was naturally expected, but it was a source of great joy and satisfaction to all that the registration this year was the largest in the history of this conference.

One hundred and two enrolled: 34 from out of town and 68 from the town and surrounding country.

In point of interest and earnestness this conference has never been surpassed.

The usual program, with some innovations, was followed.

The day began with the early morning watch, ably conducted by Mrs. J. W. Whittaker, of Tuskegee. The morning sessions were given over to Bible study, talks on Community Problems, Home Nursing and Home Improvement. The afternoons to the sewing and handicrafts and a recreational period. The evenings were devoted to helpful addresses along various lines.

Mrs. J. G. Snedecor very ably conducted the Bible hour. The Extension Department of Alabama and the State Board of Health generously co-operated by sending to the conference some of their ablest workers. Splendid talks on "Nutrition," "Sanitation and Health," the "Care of the Sick," and "Improved Home Conditions" were given.

One innovation this year was the project undertaken during the sewing period, viz: fitting up and beautifying a girl's room. One of the student's rooms at the Institute was used for this purpose. Bedsprad, stenciled curtains, bureau scarfs, rugs, pictures, etc., were made by the women, a close account being kept of the expense. On the closing day of the conference the room was opened for inspection and the materials (costing four dollars) presented to the Institute. This room is to be used for the two highest ranking students this coming year.

The handicraft work, including the making of hats, paper flowers, and scaling wax novelties, proved very interesting to the women. So enthusiastic were they that every spare moment outside the lecture periods saw groups of women busily at work.

The intelligence and earnestness of the delegates and visitors in attendance this year were very marked. Several ministers and other prominent colored people were present at the session. A reporter for one of the colored magazines came to write up the conference.

A conference song written by one of the delegates from Indianola, Mississippi, was sung at the closing session.

Mrs. J. W. Whittaker, in behalf of the delegates, as a mark of their appreciation presented a purse of $18.50 to Mrs. Snedecor to be applied toward a scholarship for a girl at Stillman.

The conference prayer, "O Lord make me a thousand times more useful to my fellow men," seemed to voice the sentiment of every one as the conference closed and the delegates departed to go back to their various communities.

A group of outstanding leaders among the delegates was called together the closing day to talk over conditions and lay plans for another year. This group urged that greater publicity be given this conference among the colored organizations and churches. A publicity committee was appointed for this purpose.

The three outstanding things this group of women asked for another year were:

1. A model Sunday School.
2. A baby clinic.
3. A mission study class.

It was the general consensus of opinion among the leaders that this conference would be more productive of good results than any previous one.

In reporting this meeting mention must be made of the splendid co-operation of the faculty at Stillman, who gave unstintedly of their time and strength to make this conference a success.

QUIET TALKS ON THE SIMPLE ESSENTIALS

No. 16—Six Woman Words

Woman is the index of civilization. Her status tells the story of any civilization.

A low standard of appreciation of woman means a low stage of civilization, and so on. This is true through the calendared ages, and around the planet.

Broadly, the religions of the race fall into two groups, the cultural and the Christian. By the cultural religions I mean those built up by man's ideas and practices.

The Christian religion is characteristically a divine revelation, given through a Book and a Man. It includes the rarest, broadest culture, but begins farther back, with something different.

It is very striking that woman's position characteristically under these two stands in sharpest contrast. Where Christ has full sway her place is highest. Where He has least sway or none, lowest.

A prolonged errand of service in non-Christian lands brought vividly to me the sharp contrast in the meanings of six words dear to woman's heart. These words are windows into two distinct civilizations. You look through the window and see woman's sharply contrasted position.

In the non-Christian meaning of the word a "woman" is a mere thing, to be bought and sold like any other chattel.

Sometimes she is a plaything, sometimes a mere vent for a passionate lust, and all times at men's beck and nod and whim, as having no choice or soul of her own.

This, be it keenly marked, was the common meaning everywhere when Christ appeared. And it is still the common meaning where Christ's influence has not made a change.

In the Christian meaning woman is the complement of man in making up the human unit. She is distinct from man, and he from her.

Neither is complete without the other. Each grows more like to the other in constant companionship, she stronger, he gentler. So each grows into the full human being.

The second word is "wife." In the meaning of the cultural religions, uninfluenced by Christian touch, a wife is the husband's personal property. She is the particular bit of womankind that has become his by due bargaining and legal transfer. She is bargained for, bought and sold, hired out, sometimes for unmentionable purposes, or otherwise used, as he may choose.

In the typical Christian meaning a wife is the man's closest friend, his constant companion. She walks and lives at his side.

The third word is "mother." The old meaning—shall I give it? The common profaned meaning among most of the race today?

Let the brevity of utterance make the naked ugliness of truth stand boldly out. A mother is the breeding machine of the human kind. The meaning is as lacking in every feeling of sacred tender humanness as that.

The Christian definition of mother? A fellow-creator with man and with God, in the most sacred and most potent task done by human hands.

The fourth word is "babe." The non-Christian meaning: an indispensable link in the family line. In the old civilizations the family is that unit. Everything centers in the family. So the babe is essential. But it is notorious that non-Christian civilization has not appreciated the child, and loved it for its own sake.

Notice the meaning where the Christ touch has come. A babe is a fresh act of God. His creative breath has been given direct at birth.

The babe is tenderly loved for its own sake, even when its lengthened out life is a question. Child culture is characteristically a thing of Christian civilization.

The fifth word is one fraught with more depth of meaning to more human hearts than any other, the word "love." The pre-Christ meaning, the non-Christian meaning today—please listen quietly, for it is difficult to tell the story, yet it is true.

Love yonder is most commonly spelled with the initial l indeed, but then a u and an s and a t.

The Christian meaning? Love is the purest and most purifying, the strongest and most tender, and most impelling emotion that can fill the human heart and shape and dominate human lives.

The sixth word is one peculiarly dear to our own English language. Its exact English equivalent is rarely found elsewhere. It is the word "home." In the cheapened meaning it's the place where a man keeps his personal goods and chattels, where his special woman-slave slaves, and breeds family perpetuation links.

The true Christian home? It is that sweet, sacred spot where love reigns and trains. There tenderest memories linger and cling, and send fragrance out into life. There a man goes to refresh himself, and knit up his strength anew for the battle in the world.

These are the meanings found today in those parts of the world where the two sorts of religion are found in the most characteristic stage.

Yet there is more to be said. It is impossible to build walls around any sort of civilization. Today the whole earth is in touch as never before.

And happily some of the incidentals of Christianity are being copied and enjoyed in parts of the world distinctively non-Christian.

Yet it is clearly as true that the winds are blowing the other way, too. Through every crevice, and where there seem to be no crevices, and through wide open doors and windows, the characteristic traits of a non-Christian civilization are coming into our Christian lands.

Today some of the blessedly sacred meanings of these six words are being tainted and spoiled. They are having a desperate fight for life against the subtle incoming sweep. This is particularly true of two—love, and home.

Those among us today who would take away Christianity's distinctly supernatural meaning may well stop and weigh the influence of merely cultural religion, as seen in this most sensitive thermometer.

A SUMMER IN CHILPANCINGO, MEXICO

By Miss E. V. Lee

If the friends at home have read the report of the Mexico Mission they will have heard of Chilpancingo, one of the latest stations occupied and one that is considered rather inaccessible.

I had not felt that it was so inaccessible, for I know how difficulties can be overcome, but I did know that it was considered rather an undesirable place, as it is in the earthquake zone and has had some very severe quakes.

From the intense heat of Laredo the change of climate was very grateful. Far south of the tropic the elevation and the Pacific breezes give it an ideal climate, neither hot nor cold. Some say they do not think the temperature varies five degrees all the year. A fire may be needed some time, but certainly during this summer no fan was ever needed, and light wraps were used sometimes. And this in tropical Mexico in the summer!

Chilpancingo is old. The first Mexican Congress met here in 1813. It is the capital of the state of Guerrero, though not by any means a pretentious city. On account of the earthquake the houses are all of one story, and those of the better class are all strongly built with walls braced to resist the shocks.

It is some 80 miles from the railroad terminus from which point we go in canions (automobiles) crossing the river Balsas in a ferry boat. It is a most beautiful road all the way to Chilpancingo, and shows fine engineering and hard work. All the way the road goes through deep canyons and follows streams. The scenery is magnificent and the vegetation luxuriant. But there are very few birds. We heard tales of the great rattlesnakes that are in these canyons; some they said were 25 feet long.

Our work in Chilpancingo follows that of the Northern Mission, from whom, in the adjustment of territory, it came to us. Between their departure and our occupancy came the years of revolution, when no American missionary was stationed there, and little supervision could be given either to the work in the city itself or in the surrounding villages and ranches. It speaks well for the faithful seed-sowing and for the soil in which it fell that the native church kept the faith during these years. For not only in the city itself, but in some of these villages regular services were maintained.

Thus it was when Mr. and Mrs. Williamson came. The mission building was almost in ruins. But he has been at

WHAT DO YOU KNOW ABOUT KOREA?

Eva M. Cavers

What do you know of Korea?

Have you given it a thought?

Do you feel no obligation

Toward this land so dearly bought?

Bought by Christ, through His atonement?

For those whom He calls His own.

What have you done for Korea

Have you ever stopped to pray

That the Lord would send the reapers

To this harvest field, today,

To gather into His garner

Sheaves, from seed that has been sown?

What will you give to Korea

Christ has freely given His all

To redeem and save these people

From the curse of sin's dark thrall.

Let the gift be sacrificial

That we lay before His throne.

Study and pray for Korea,

Give, too, as you have been blest;

Do all that lies in your power

And leave to Jesus the rest.

Then we'll meet with glad rejoicing

When the last trump shall be blown.

A Lancaster-Kershaw County Group Conference of Bethel Presbyterian was held with the Heath Springs Presbyterian Church, Friday, with Mrs. I. R. Hayes, chairman, presiding. The meeting was opened with a devotional conducted by Dr. F. M. Hawley, of Kershaw. Words of greeting were extended to the visitors by Mrs. Nellie Baldwin to which Mrs. R. E. Wylie, of Lancaster, responded in a happy manner. The outstanding feature of the morning session was the address of Miss Lois Young, of the Girls' High School, Hsuehoufu, China. In a very direct and pleasing manner Miss Young told of the conditions prevailing in this mission district, and of the great need of money and workers backed up by the prayers of the people "back home." She told the high school boys and girls, assembled to hear her address, of the great difficulties under which the

A WORD OF SYMPATHY TO THE EDITOR OF THE WOMAN'S PAGE

To the women who know Mrs. McIver personally, and to those who have come to know and love her only through the Woman's Page in the Standard, which she has edited so efficiently since its introduction into the departments of the paper, the news of the great sorrow that has come to her the past week we are sure will bring real sorrow.

Mr. J. M. McIver, the beloved husband of the editor of the Woman's Page, died of an acute attack of pneumonia at the Charlotte Sanatorium on the early morning of October 10th and was buried the following afternoon from the Gulf Presbyterian Church, in which he had served so long and so faithfully. Mrs. McIver and other members of the family were at his bedside when the end came.

Aside from the sympathy that our readers will feel for Mrs. McIver in this sad separation that has come to her, they should know that the Woman's Page has lost a real friend in the death of Mr. McIver, for he it was who often encouraged her to go on with the work when she felt that in the stress and claim of other duties she should give it up. By him it was regarded as a real service to the Church that she was rendering and his love for the Church in her every branch and phase of work was one of the out-standing qualities of his life.

Through the columns of the Woman's Page we would express to its editor heart-felt sympathy in this her hour of great need.

Chinese children of the poorer classes, especially the girls, labored to get a Christian education; they having to work all summer, with no vacation at all sometimes, to get money to pay their expenses for the next term. Mrs. E. E. Gillespie, president of Bethel Presbyterian, gave a most interesting talk on "Why we are here;" explaining that the object of these group conferences was to bring the work of Presbyterian closer to that large body of interested workers who do not get to attend the central meeting each spring. She gave a very clear and concise explanation of the Standard of Excellence which is being used by all local Auxiliaries. "Methods of Home and Foreign Mission Study," given by Mrs. J. M. Williams, Jr., was of particular interest just at this time, as a great many of the Auxiliaries have already begun their Home Mission Study for this year. A very delightful feature of this meeting was "Methods of Bible Study," and a demonstration of a Bible Study Class conducted by Mrs. Hal Dick, of Columbia. After the noon hour recess, during which a cafeteria lunch was served in the Sunday School room, the program was resumed. Miss Ada Saunders, of York, S. C., gave a most sincere and appealing talk on Stewardship. No one who heard her could fail to be impressed with the thought of the grave responsibility resting upon each individual as regards the dispensing of his or her time, talents or means. A talk by Mrs. J. C. Bailey, of Rock Hill, S. C., on S. P. and C. Home Missions, and one by Mrs. R. T. Bailey, of Lancaster, S. C., on the Conference for Colored Women to be held at Benedict College, Columbia, S. C., June, 1924, brought the program to a close. The report of the credentials committee showed present, 55 visitors, five Presbyterian officers, and 49 representatives from eight churches. The church at Kershaw, S. C., led with 16 representatives. E. S. S.

The Christian Missionary (From the Houston Post)—Isn't there a new spirit in evidence in China where the Chinese Government voluntarily lifts the embargo on rice, as a measure of aid to the Japanese quake and sufferers, and contributes $200,000 out of the meagre treasury for the relief of the stricken Japanese? China and Japan have not been on good terms for a long time. The Chinese have felt that Japan, with her superior military strength, was encroaching upon them. But spite of this old feeling of hostility, when disaster came to their Japanese neighbors, the Chinese join the rest of the world in offering succor. In a way, nothing finer has been done for Japanese relief. This generous act may be traced to the influence of Christian missions in the Orient. It constitutes one of the visible triumphs of the Christian missionary.

New Orleans, La.—On Tuesday, October 2d, an all-day Presbyterian conference was held at the St. Charles Avenue Church. Though it was a real summer day, the attendance was fine, 157 representatives, from nearly all the Auxiliaries in the Presbyterian, being registered. The conference was presided over by the newly elected president of the Presbyterian, Mrs. Charles J. MacMurdo. Rev. John Land, pastor of the church, gave an address of welcome and made the opening prayer. The various city churches had been asked to each take charge of a part of the program and after the devotional services Canal Street Church held a Bible study, conducted by Mrs. John Many. The First Church then had an ideal meeting of a business woman's circle. This was conducted by Miss Davis, a returned missionary to Mexico of the Northern Church.

A typical circle meeting was held by the Prytani Street Church. A charming feature of their program was the singing of "The Crusaders' Hymn," by Mrs. A. B. Dinwiddie, a member of the Auxiliary. The Standard readers will be interested to know that Mrs. Dinwiddie, the former president of the Presbyterian is a daughter of Rev. Dr. George Summey, her husband being president of Tulane University.

At noon a box lunch was served, supplemented by sandwiches and creole coffee made by the hostesses Auxiliary. The secretaries of the various churches lunched with their Presbyterian secretary and conferences were held during the lunch hour.

Afternoon sessions were opened with an "Inspiration Auxiliary Meeting" by the women of the Napoleon Avenue Church. The use of the Year Book in the Auxiliary meetings was shown and a beautiful devotional service was conducted by Mrs. W. K. Seago. Member of the Third Church showed the use of the budget system. Mrs. Charles J. MacMurdo, of the St. Charles Street Church conducted an ideal mission study class of "The Child and America's Future." To make an application of the teaching of the lesson Mrs. A. Baumgarten, of the First Church, spoke of work in New Orleans. Mrs. Baumgarten is a member of the school board of the city, and spoke especially of the work done by "Warrington House." Those of you who have read Cable's "Strange True Stories of Louisiana" will recall the story of the Haunted House. Mr. Warrington, an elderly gentleman, has acquired this famous old house on Royal Street and has devoted all that he has to giving food and shelter to men and boys who come out of prison and then to finding work for them. Representative women from the various churches help him in this work and it was of this work that Mrs. Baumgarten spoke.

Miss Lucy Smith of the Napoleon Avenue Church then told of work in aiding the boys who come to Warrington House. It is a beautiful thing to know that this old historic house, once the abode of selfish pleasure and of great cruelty has become a place of rehabilitation, where those who have been "sick and in prison" are given another chance.

The young woman's circle of Carrollton Avenue Church, held a representative meeting. This circle is a Bible study class, as well as a circle, with Dr. W. O. Bethea as teacher, so he met with them and briefly conducted a very delightful lesson.

The closing number was of work done by a young girls' circle. This was demonstrated by the girls of St. Charles Street Church under the guidance of Mrs. MacMurdo. She has directed their reading and given them material but their wonderful program on Japan and the treatment in keeping with it were given without assistance. The conference was addressed by Mr. Burt Jones, field secretary of the Christian Endeavor in behalf of C. E. Work, and by Mrs. George Terriberry in behalf of the school of missions to be held in November.

ADDRESS ALL COMMUNICATIONS TO THE DEPARTMENT EDITOR, COLUMBIA SEMINARY, COLUMBIA, S. C.

EDITOR'S LOOKOUT

The North Carolina Christian Endeavorers have secured Rev. J. M. Wells, D.D., president of Columbia Theological Seminary, to preach their convention sermon on Sunday morning at their coming meeting in Greensboro. Dr. Wells is a real friend of the young people, and will give them a strong and helpful message.

Two of the five weeks of the Standard's subscription campaign will have passed when you read this. Is your society in the contest, or are you personally? You ought to be very much interested. As the subscription list of our paper increases, the opportunity for improving the quality will increase, and our paper, already a good one, will be still better. Again, as the subscription list increases the number of persons reached for the interests of the Church and kingdom will increase. And, as a special inducement, an offer is made whereby you can increase your supply of shekels in proportion to the share you have in increasing the subscription list. If you need any more details than have been given you in the paper, write to the Standard, in Charlotte, and get busy.

Information was given in the Standard last week that Durant College, Durant, Okla., has enrolled on faith more than 25 worthy girls for whom scholarships must be provided. The cost of each of these scholarships is $75 for the session. Here is an opportunity for a Sunday School class or young people's society. We knew several C. E. societies who during the war days purchased one or more Liberty bonds for the church's mission work. Seventy-five dollars is far from being an impossible amount. Young people, put some of your tithing dollars here.

SCRIPTURE LESSON

Josh. 1:1 Now after the death of Moses the servant of the LORD it came to pass, that the LORD spake unto Joshua the son of Nun, Moses' minister, saying,

2 Moses my servant is dead; now therefore arise, go over his Jordan, thou, and all this people, unto the land which I do give to them, even to the children of Israel.

3 Every place that the sole of your foot shall tread upon, that have I given unto you, as I said unto Moses.

4 From the wilderness and this Lebanon, even unto the great river, the river Euphrates, all the land of the Hittites, and unto the great sea toward the going down of the sun, shall be your coast.

Isa. 2:2 And it shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the LORD'S house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow unto it.

3 And many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the LORD, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the LORD from Jerusalem.

4 And he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruninghooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.

Ch. 19:23 In that day shall there be a highway out of Egypt to Assyria; and the Assyrian shall come into Egypt, and the Egyptian into Assyria; and the Egyptians shall serve with the Assyrians.

24 In that day shall Israel be the third with Egypt and with Assyria, even a blessing in the midst of the land;

25 Whom the LORD of hosts shall bless, saying, Blessed be Egypt my people, and Assyria the work of my hands, and Israel mine inheritance.

Ezek. 5:5 Thus saith the Lord GOD, This is Jerusalem: I have set it in the midst of the nations and countries that are round about her.

SHORTER CATECHISM

Q. 59. Which day of the seven hath God appointed to be the weekly Sabbath?

A. From the beginning of the world to the resurrection of Christ, God appointed the seventh day of the week to be the weekly Sabbath, and the first day of the week ever since, to continue to the end of the world, which is the Christian Sabbath.

In the material world at creation, God placed two great light-bearers, the sun and the moon. After man's fall, Jehovah put in the moral firmament two great luminaries, Christ, man's Redeemer, and the believing Church on earth. In the scriptures Christ is compared to "The Light of the World," and the sun is no more the source of day to earth than Jesus is the origin of Gospel day to mankind. The moon has no light of its own, but shines by reflected light from the sun. The Church has no moral light in itself but is radiant when it reflects the light of Jesus. The moon does not shine resplendently when turned from the sun, nor does the Church when averted from Christ. We will consider Joshua Succeeding Moses; The Promises Made Him; The Promises Made Israel; Zion Exalted Among the Nations; The Death of Moses, Their Deliverer and Law-giver, Must Have Discouraged Israel; but God had a successor ready.

I. Joshua Succeeding Moses

The nation, after 40 years of wandering, had again reached the border of the land of promise. They may have been despondent as to entering their heritage, as Jordan was in flood and their leader had departed when he seemed to be most needed. But Jehovah's plans embrace all agents, obstacles and events. He never lacks instruments for serving His purposes and accomplishing His will. The departure of Moses only opened the way for Joshua to take his place. Joshua was not an unworthy successor of Moses. He had all the moral qualities needful for his appointed task. He had strong faith in Jehovah, faithfulness to duty, heroic courage, and unswerving obedience to Divine commands. He had been trained as Moses' minister for 40 years, and had a far more intelligent and devoted people than Moses brought out of Egypt. Moses himself was not better fitted to put Israel in possession of Canaan than was the heroic and intrepid Joshua.

II. Jehovah's Promise to Joshua

There shall not any man be able to stand before thee all the days of thy life. What an encouraging promise was this when this leader was about to engage in a struggle with seven nations. "As I was with Moses, so will I be with thee." In every crisis in Egypt and in the wilderness Jehovah had helped Moses. He engages to do the same for Jehovah. "I will not fail thee nor forsake thee." "Unto this people shalt thou divide for an inheritance the land which I swear unto their fathers to give them." How exactly and perfectly were these engagements fulfilled!

III. God's Promises to Israel

In Is. 2:2-4 great promises are made to God's Church, the spiritual Israel. In the last days the nations shall be brought into it. And in the last days the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains and shall be exalted above the hills, and all nations shall flow into it. "And many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob and He will teach us His ways and we will walk in His paths, for out of Zion shall go forth the law and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem." In Is. 19:23-25, Egypt and Assyria, two nations that oppressed Israel and wasted Zion, are represented as being in harmony with her and uniting in honoring Jehovah.

IV. Zion Exalted Among the Nations

In Ezek. 5:5 it is written, "Thus saith the Lord God: This is Jerusalem, I have set it in the midst of the nations and countries round about her." She was thus placed not only to receive Divine revelations, but to give her light to the nations and to tell them of that Messiah who was promised as "A light to lighten the Gentiles as well as the glory of God's people Israel." They were unfaithful to their trust and therefore had sore judgments. But in Ro. 11:26 Paul says: "There shall come out of Zion the Deliverer and turn away ungodliness from Jacob."

Sun., Oct. 28—Topic: How Can We Answer Those Who Say That Prohibition Cannot Prohibit? Hab. 2:1-14.

Prohibition and Law

"If prohibition cannot prohibit, then all law is a failure and we are adrift."

Speaking before an audience of 14,000 in the auditorium in Denver, Colorado, our late President Harding took a pronounced stand for rigid prohibition enforcement. "I am convinced," said Mr. Harding, "that they are a small, and a greatly mistaken minority who believe the Eighteenth Amendment will ever be repealed. Details of enforcement policy doubtless will be changed as experience dictates. Further, I am convinced that whatever changes may be made will represent the sincere purpose of effective enforcement, rather than moderation of the general policy."

Prohibition and Business

Commander Evangline Booth, in a recent address, said "The corners vacated by saloons are not desolated wastes but are occupied with profitable and reputable business." It is estimated that five billion dollars that went into saloons now go into business, into homes, into life insurance.

Prohibition and Crime

Crime is no worse since prohibition went into effect. The figures supplied by 25 of our largest cities show that for all causes there was a reduction of over 122,000 arrests. There has been a decrease in the number of persons arrested for drunkenness of over 600,000 per year.

Prohibition and Liberty

Some one says: "Prohibition invades personal liberty." This is a supposed city of refuge that the anti-prohibitionists run into. They say, "Prohibition invades our personal liberty by prescribing what we shall eat and what we shall drink." Miss Booth answers this indictment thus: "The principle which enters into the prohibition law is no more nor no less than that which is basic to the restraints of all law. No man objects to the denial of his liberty to steal; anyway, he doesn't object to the curtailment of his neighbor's liberty in this direction; therefore he should intelligently accept the application of this same principle to that of house-breaking, home-destroying, child-abusing, business-wrecking this, Alcohol."

Who's Everybody?

Under the caption, "Who's Everybody?" Miss Anna Gordon, National W. C. T. U. president, answers at length the assertion often made by superficial thinkers, "Everybody says prohibition is a sad failure." After excluding from everybody, heath officials, who declare that the prohibition regime has been record-breaking ones as to health; bankers, who testify to "saving accounts;" manufacturers, big employers of labor, educators, a majority of the United States senators, the majority of the people of the country, we reach the final analysis and find that Everybody may be divided into three classes: First, those who love liquor so well that they are willing to put appetite above loyalty; second, those who want the money in the traffic, and put avarice above loyalty; and third, those who let liquor propagandists do their thinking for them. The last class may be aroused and educated. The first two classes must be dealt with by law enforcement.

Christian Endeavorers and Temperance What Can They Do?

Join the total abstinence forces and take the pledge. Emphasize the fact that good Americans believe in the observance and enforcement of all law. Make a study of the federal and state enforcement codes and help create a demand for officials to redeem their oath and office by strict enforcement of the law.

"Through persistent prohibition publicity help change prohibition passivity into prohibition patriotism."—Miss Gordon.

Teach and help foreigners to understand our laws. Endeavorers should count one in the allegiance to the constitution enrollment on file at the Washington Legislative headquarters of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

By making November 4th, World's Temperance Day, an opportunity to present prohibition facts to the world.

Endeavorers must realize that the return of light wines and beer would make the dry law almost valueless and that such a resolution must not pass.

Believe that prohibition can be enforced and realize that there is no such thing as an unenforceable law.

Never make fun of prohibition; do not tell jokes that minimize the good that prohibition does.

Read about what prohibition has done for Kansas and believe that it will do the same for all of the states.

"Kansas was experimental ground, and we have proven that in our largest city as effectively as in our rural districts, prohibition can be and is enforced. I have but to cite the case of Kansas City. When the joints were closed, the business men were up in arms, so to speak, believing the enforcement of the prohibitory law would drive trade across the line into wet Missouri. However, such was not the case. The city grew by leaps and bounds. New business houses, bigger and better stores, larger high schools and public ownership of an immense water and electric light plant followed. Bank deposits increased a hundred-fold, clearing house receipts made a decided advance and, best of all, the great body of working men, who were renting houses, began buying homes, and today Kansas City has a far greater percentage of working men owning their homes than any other city of its size in the United States. Prohibition is a fact, not a theory, in Kansas. The census proves that its people live the longest. War records show that Kansas contributed the best men, physically, to the World War. We have 516,400 children of school age who have never seen a saloon. Kansas is the college state of the United States, with a larger percentage of its young people attending colleges than any other state in the union. Illiteracy has been reduced under prohibition, from 49 to 1.6 per cent. We have no sweat shops, no child labor, and every child must go to school at least eight months in the year, until 16 years of age. We pay our soldiers the largest bonus of any state and our only indebtedness is comprised in the bonds voted for that purpose. Out of a total of 105 counties Kansas has 40 which did not send a prisoner to the state penitentiary last year. Thirty-nine counties have abandoned their poor-farms. We have the greatest wealth per capita of any state in the union—$1,773 for every man, woman and child. We have few millionaires, though we have billions of wealth, a cleanly earned wealth, more equitably distributed than the wealth of any other state. Too much can not be said about our commercial, educational and moral advancement."

Attention, North Carolina Southern District Endeavors

A meeting of the Southern District officers will be held some time during the state convention at Greensboro the last week in October. A place and date for our next district convention will be selected at this time. Invitations from any place wishing to have the next district convention, which will be held in the early spring, will be considered.

The officers would be glad to have new plans or suggestions that would make our district work more practical and effectual.

Sincerely,
Carey P. Lowrance, President.

Columbia Seminary Students Enjoy Evening of Fun-Making

On Friday evening, October 12th, the reading room and refectory of Columbia Theological Seminary were the scene of a happy party for the seminary students and their friends. The occasion was the annual entertainment given by the Seniors and Middlers to the Junior Class of the Seminary. The young ladies from Chicora College were invited over, as were also the students of the Lutheran Seminary. Several members of the younger set of the city were included among those enjoying the festivities.

The Seminary students and early arrivals among the girls constituted themselves a receiving line and welcomed those who came after. This touch of formality, however, was no index of the real character of the program for the evening. Mr. T. C. Bryan "fried the lid off" with one of his happy little speeches of welcome that made every one feel good and ready for a lively evening. The matter of introduction was handled by announcing that certain ones present had pennies and would give them to the twentieth person shaking hands with them. Following this was a peanut hunt, which rivalled the greatest Easter egg hunt in history.

Considerable life was added by a telegram relay race, between the blue-eyed persons present and those with eyes of another hue. Chiclets were the pleasing awards given the possessors of the non-descript eyes. The telegrams were read, the winners expressing their mirth through adroitly worded phrases.

A foot race, performed by the shortest and the longest girl and the shortest and longest man, showed how nimble young people can be. Painfully and slowly they put one foot before the other, with no space between, until the "last white line" was reached.

Slips of paper with numbers on them divided the crowd into five parts. Letters on the reverse side of the slips when properly put together spelled out some stunt that the group was then to perform. Courting, barber shop, battle, automobile, blacksmithing, were well carried out. The barber shop group, with its barber, bootblack, and manicurist, was decided to have done the best and was given the prize by Dr. Wells.

Dividing the group into four sections by the means of birth months, "Buzz" was carried out and the finals between the representative of each group proved quite interesting.

AN IMPORTANT ACTION

Presbyterian Synod of North Carolina in session at Graham, N. C., October 10, 1923, adopted the following resolution at the request of the Committee on Bible and State Institutions of Higher Learning:

Your committee suggests the following plan of action:

1. That the Synod and the other Protestant churches of this State shall unite in the support of teachers of the Bible, of their own choice, whom they shall nominate to the Trustees of the University of North Carolina and other State colleges.

2. That the Synod of North Carolina address a communication to the governing bodies of all the other Protestant churches of the State, inviting them to join with us in requesting the various State institutions of higher learning to permit us to establish and maintain these proposed chairs for teaching the Bible as a part of the regular course of study.

3. That the committee be authorized to call a meeting of the denominations of the State on the second Tuesday in January, 1924.

MEDICAL MISSIONARY MUCH NEEDED IN KENTUCKY MOUNTAINS

For some time our hospital at Guerrant, Ky., in connection with our Highland School, as well as the immediate community round about, have been without a resident physician. We have a splendid trained nurse whose services have been most valuable. But when a physician was required we have had to send about ten "mountain miles" for him. Recently an active friend of our mountain work, whose name is now withheld by request, kindly volunteered to provide the salary of a medical missionary for the Highland institution and communities nearby, provided a suitable physician with the missionary spirit could be found by the first of the year. We are now trying to find a suitable volunteer for Medical Home Missions at this point who is willing to begin the work with us by January first. We will be grateful for your prayers that God may send us the physician we need.

Help Find this Missionary

Anyone—physician or otherwise—reading this article who knows of a Christian physician who might be secured is invited to notify at once Rev. J. W. Tyler, D.D., 207 Burns Ave., Winchester, Ky. And better still any physician to whom this brings a personal appeal is urged to write to above address at earliest possible date.

REV. THOMAS DREW, D.D.

Rev. Thomas Drew, D.D., passed away last Friday afternoon, October 12th, at his home in Chase City, Va., at the advanced age of 98 years.

He was a native of England, but for something like 40 years he had been in the ministry of the Southern Presbyterian Church, having held pastorates at Roanoke Church in Charlotte County, Va., at Grace Street Church, Richmond, Va., and at Clarksville and Chase City, Va., his last pastorate.

He was a great preacher and was much in demand in evangelistic services up to a few years ago when the infirmities of age came upon him.

The writer heard him preach a very powerful sermon at a meeting of Presbytery when he was 92 years old.

An unusual thing occurred not long before he gave up active work. Presbytery was in session in his church in Clarksville, and at the unanimous request of Presbytery, he preached one night during its sessions in his own church.

For several years he had been too infirm to attend Presbytery or regularly attend the church services; but for the past two years or so he had been able to be regularly in the house of God on Sunday morning, until he was stricken with his last illness a few days before his death.

Nearly all his ministry in this country was in the Presbytery of Roanoke where he was greatly honored, revered and loved.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Because of some unexpected changes I will be at liberty to assist either pastors or evangelist in revival or special meetings during the fall and winter, as chorus director, soloist and personal worker. Address, C. P. Curry, Hendersonville, N. C.

PERSONAL

The Synod of North Carolina and the State of North Carolina have lost a most valuable member and citizen in the death of John M. McIver, of Gulf, N. C., who passed to his reward, in Charlotte, at the advanced age of 85 years.

Mr. McIver was a successful business man whose success in business helped to build up his community. Above all, he was a Christian gentleman, who followed closely in the steps of his Master, and gave of his means to the upbuilding of his church.

The intelligent and consecrated eldership has ever been the strength of the Presbyterian Church. Among the many elders, conspicuous for their piety and devotion to the Church, we can recall none whom we would place above John McIver.

The sympathy of the Church will go out to his devoted wife and children.

Alamance Church—Rally Day was observed October 7th. A program "Teach the Word to Build the Kingdom" was rendered by members of the Sabbath School. A short inspiring address was delivered by A. C. Davis, of Greensboro. Collection for Sunday School extension, $32.00

Shearer—This little country church has greatly profited by a week of the preaching of Rev. W. H. Eubank, of Poplar Tent. Congregations were good all week crowding the building several times. Eighteen young people professed their faith in Christ and 12 have already been received into this church, some from families not previously connected with the church.

Charlotte—On last Sabbath morning the students of Queens College were the guests of the Caldwell Memorial Church at both the Sabbath School and the preaching service. The pastor, Dr. G. F. Bell, preached an appropriate sermon, "Love is Life." The beautiful musical program also added to the attractiveness of the service.

Charlotte—Ground has been broken for a three-story Sunday School department to be erected at the rear of the Tenth Avenue Presbyterian Church. The cost of the structure with all necessary equipment will be about $18,000.

The department will be 40 by 50 feet and will contain a large auditorium, class rooms, kitchen and dining room with the basement fitted out for the men's club of the church. It will take care of the needs of the rapidly growing church for some years.

A large building and finance committee has the project in hand.

Charlotte, First Church—The Men's Missionary Society will meet next Sunday morning at the close of the morning service. This organization, which now has a membership of about one hundred, has a long and useful history, and is now contributing, yearly, more than $7,000 to the support of foreign missions. Any man of the congregation who would like to become a member of this society, and have a part in this splendid work, should give his name to Mr. J. M. Oldham, the president.—Calendar.

Mecklenburg Presbytery will convene on October 23d, at 11 o'clock, a. m., at Central Steel Creek Church, in Steel Creek township, Mecklenburg County.

All passenger trains arriving in Charlotte on October 23d and on the morning of the 24th will be met by the Entertainment Committee and the commissioners coming by train transported to the church, where homes will be assigned. Dinner and supper will be served on the church grounds.

Sunny Side—This whole community enjoyed and was greatly profited by the evangelistic services held by members of the Fayetteville Laymen's Federation under the leadership of Dr. J. H. Judd, August 19 to 26. The attendance on these services was remarkable from the beginning. There were a large number of professions of faith in Christ and many reconsecrations. Eight joined this church on profession of faith and two by letter. Nine joined the nearby Baptist churches and two or three united with the Methodist Church.

Sherwood—Evangelistic services were held at this church, September 2-17. The services for the first eight days were conducted by members of the Fayetteville Laymen's Federation under the leadership of Dr. J. W. McNeill. During the second week of the meeting, Rev. C. M. Gibbs, of Linden preached for us twice daily. The earnest talks by the laymen and the practical sermons by Mr. Gibbs were both very helpful to the hearers. Seven united with this church on profession of faith and one by letter. Several expressed a desire to unite with the Baptist Church. Four or five joined the Methodist Church.

To the Presbytery of Kings Mountain, Greeting:

Being host to Presbytery this fall, we desire to make your stay with us most enjoyable. In order to do this we ask that all who come will report at Union Church in time, Wednesday afternoon, October 24th, to be assigned to your homes for supper. Hoping to have each minister and elder with us we are, fraternally,

J. E. Berryhill.

Lowell, N. C., R. 1., Oct. 15, 1923.

Laurinburg Church—Dr. J. Ernest Thacker, General Assembly evangelist, began preaching a series of sermons on Sunday, October 8th. Fully 800 heard him the first day and the interest is growing continually. He is most ably assisted by Mr. Thos. B. Roddy, director of the singing, and Mrs. Roddy, pianist. Not only Laurinburg Church, but the entire community is being stirred by the splendid Gospel preaching and singing, and the meeting is not half over.

The excavations have been made for a handsome and commodious Sunday School and Social Building some 40 feet east of the church building. The new structure is to be of three stories. A large Sunday School auditorium occupies the middle portion of the building while the ground floor affords space for a large dining hall, kitchen and reception room. This building, carefully planned after study of various model Sunday School rooms in several cities, is to be a handsome building of brick with stone trimming. Besides, auditorium, kitchen and dining hall, there are 23 class rooms, with sound-proof walls between, and adapted to departmental work. It will probably be many months before this structure is complete, but we are eagerly counting the days till it may be put to use.

The Senior Christian Endeavor in this church is only two years old. But much progress has been made under the loyal and efficient officers in the past, and there are 85 members on the roll. New officers were installed with appropriate services on the evening of October 7th. They are as follows: President, Miss Margaret Wilkinson; Vice-President, Mr. Hervie Evans; Recording Secretary, Miss Hattie Regan; Corresponding Secretary, Miss Agnes Lynn Buchanan; Treasurer, Mr. Clifton Fairly.

Our Junior Christian Endeavor is only about three months old, but is making very rapid strides under the efficient leadership of Miss Sallie Thrower.

Fayetteville Presbytery met, according to adjournment, in the Presbyterian Church, Graham, N. C., during the session of Synod, with an attendance of six ministers and one ruling elder.

Rev. A. T. Lassiter, the last moderator present, presided, and Rev. D. L. Jones acted as temporary clerk.

On recommendation of the Committee of Christian Education, aid was granted to the amount of $150 to each of the following named candidates for the ministry: W. C. Smith, W. M. McLeod and John S. Johnson. Also candidate Johnson was instructed to take the English course offered at Union Theological Seminary.

A communication from Rev. R. C. Gilmore in regard to White Hill Church, was docketed for future consideration.

A memorial of Rev. C. V. Cavitt, prepared by Rev. R. C. Gilmore, was adopted by a rising vote.

Rev. R. A. McLeod was substituted for Rev. S. K. Phillips on the commission to organize a church near the J. Van Lindley Nursery, in Harnett County.

The matter of regrouping certain churches in and around Fayetteville (Rev. W. E. Hill, chairman) was docketed for future consideration.

On recommendation of the special committee appointed to consider the regrouping of certain churches in Scotland and lower Robeson counties, Presbytery decided to allow the group composed of Laurel Hill and Smyrna churches to remain undisturbed. Midway was allowed, for the present, to employ some minister of the Presbytery for afternoon services. Hillside was placed under the care of the Rowland church and pastor. A new group, composed of Fairmont, Iona and Elrod was made, and Presbytery agreed to supplement the salary to the amount necessary to secure a pastor. A committee, composed of Rev. L. Smith, Dr. W. E. Evans and McKay McKinnon, was appointed to visit Fairmont with a view to putting this action into effect.

Adjourned to meet in the First Church, Fayetteville, Tuesday, November 20, 1923, at 1 o'clock p. m.

D. L. Jones, Temporary Clerk.

Attest: Stated Clerk.

SOUTH CAROLINA

Bishopville—A delightful reception was given on the church lawn, in honor of the fourteen young men and women of this church, who are going away to college. Appropriate addresses were made by the pastor and superintendent of the Sunday School. Refreshments were served by the Auxiliary.

Clover—Rev. J. Blanton Belk was installed at the Clover Presbyterian Church Sunday morning by a committee from Bethel Presbytery, consisting of Rev. Alexander Martin, of the Oakland Avenue Church, Rock Hill, who preached the sermon; Rev. H. D. Corbett, of the Bowling Green Presbyterian Church, who charged the pastor, and Elder Alexander Long, of Oakland Avenue Church at Rock Hill, who charged the congregation. Rev. George Belk, of Montreat, father of the pastor, was present at the installation services and pronounced the benediction. Rev. Blanton Belk was formerly pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Piedmont and has already proved himself to be a forceful and able minister and a splendid pastor. He has been in Clover since September 1st.

Concord Church, Harmony Presbytery—A meeting for several days was conducted by Rev. D. M. Melver at Concord Church, W. H. Workman, pastor. The attendance was good, large congregations attending every night, manifesting much interest, and earnest attention to the word as delivered, much good was done. Eight members were received on profession of faith and three by letter from the A. R. P. Church.

This church for some time in the recent past has been holding weekly prayer meetings, with good attendance, conducted mainly by the young people.

The church has been for this purpose and in order for the protracted meeting lighted, by installing a sufficient number of Gasoline lamps. The congregations have been increasing in number and in the interest in spiritual things.

There is a good Sunday School and great interest on the part of teachers and pupils.

W. H. Workman, Pastor.

Easley, Rev. F. D. Hunt, Pastor—While the pastor was away on his vacation in Virginia in the month of August, the whole interior of the Easley, S. C. church was changed, painted and new electric light fixtures of the most modern type put in. It is now one of the most beautiful churches inside to be seen anywhere. Everyone, who sees it, is delighted with the brightness and beauty and the exquisite taste shown by those who had the work in charge. On last Sunday, October 7th, the Rally Day was observed in the Sunday School with an attractive program, and a liberal offering made for the cause of Sunday School extension.

We have all three of the C. E. organizations and very encouraging reports have been made since the fall work has been taken up.

The Woman's Auxiliary is doing splendid work along the lines of its activities. Several additions have been made to our membership recently, and we have good prospects of others soon.

We praise the Lord, take courage and press forward.

Hopewell Church, Pee Dee Presbytery—September 9-16 were eight remarkable days with us, days in which great things were accomplished in the Kingdom. During these days we had the pleasure of having Dr. J. B. Green, of the Columbia Seminary with us. He preached to constantly increasing congregations both morning and evening. The closing service marked the greatest attendance at our services for many many years.

Dr. Green's messages were logically and forcibly addressed to the three following questions, What is meant to be a Christian? Why be a Christian? and How to be a Christian?

The music was in charge of Mr. Harry Thomas, of Florence, S. C. His solos added a deeper reverence to the services. Hopewell, built before the war, has an old-time balcony built for its colored people; during the meeting many of the colored brethren came and the music that came from the balcony was greatly enjoyed.

Our church and whole community feels deeply indebted to Dr. Green for his visit to us, which has meant great things for our old church; a revived membership and ten additions to the membership, two by letter and eight by profession of faith.

Greenwood—This church has recently faced a hard problem and won a victory. Increasing numbers and the lack of adequate equipment had created a crisis in the life of the Sunday School. Because of financial conditions, it seemed impossible to build. But two weeks ago, the congregation met, following the Sunday morning service, and after earnest prayer, considered the whole problem. In response to an appeal to make an effort and do the best possible, those present pledged the sum of $26,180. Since that time, additional pledges bring the total to more than $30,000. These pledges represent real and heavy sacrifices. This sum will be sufficient to build an addition to our present Sunday School room, adequate to take care of the needs for some time to come. The full amount required is pledged, before the building is begun.

The Senior Christian Endeavor Society is now completing a very interesting series of programs. Representatives of several professions and businesses have presented their respective vocations as opportunities for Christian service. The talks included the subjects of law, medicine, nursing, journalism, banking, teaching, merchandising, and stenography. It was interesting to note that each speaker seemed convinced that his profession or business offered the greatest opportunity for service. The whole program will be concluded, on next Sunday night, when the society will have entire charge of the evening service, and Mr. MacLean, the pastor, will deliver an address on "The Romance of Preaching."

ALABAMA

Huntsville, First Church—The Sunday School of this church observed Rally Day with an interesting program, and an offering, amounting to $41.15, was given to the cause of Sunday School Extension.

The communion was also observed on that day when a larger number communed than at any regular communion for many years. The first year of the pastorate of Rev. Neill G. Stevens has just ended, and during that time there has been an increased interest, with a larger Sunday School attendance, and larger congregations at the church services

More members are using the duplex envelopes than formerly, which enabled the church to reach its benevolent quota last spring. The Woman's Auxiliary has a budget of $1,250, and so far has been able to meet the quarterly payments promptly. Thirty-one members have been received into the church during the past year.

FLORIDA

Gainesville—The new pastor, Rev. J. R. Cunningham has arrived and begun his work as pastor of the First Church of this city.

Springfield Church, Jacksonville—A large congregation was present for the opening service in the new church Sunday morning, October 7th, the pastor, Rev. W. A. Cleveland, preached the sermon, taking as his subject, "The House of God." The names of thirty-three new members were announced as having been received since the July communion.

Jacksonville—The Riverside Church, of which Dr. Robert McCaslin is the pastor, observed Rally Day in its Bible School on October 7th. Careful preparation was made by the workers and an earnest effort was made to secure an attendance of 1,000. Goals were given each department, and the adult classes. The attendance in the school was 924, which did not include any of the three mission schools under the care of this church. In the men's class there were 211 men present. The exercises were marked by great enthusiasm and a very deep interest. The highest record attendance of this school on any previous day was 496. The youngest member present was two months old, and the oldest member present was 83 years of age.

GEORGIA

Rome, First Church—Promotion Day in the Sunday School of this church was observed with appropriate exercises on September 30th, one week before Rally Day. A large class from the Primary Department made quite an impression on the school as they came out on the rostrum of the main school dressed in white caps and gowns, and after answering questions and reciting some of their memory work for the year, were given their certificates of graduation from the Primary Department, and promotion to the Junior Department. The Juniors made a fine showing, and greatly impressed the large audience by their fine drill on their memory work. The same things was true of the Intermediates. The members of the Cradle Roll were also present on this occasion, and one of the most attractive and impressive features of the service was the baptism of a large number of infants.

The Men's Bible class undertook, by personal invitations and special letters, to get out a large attendance for Rally Day, both for the Sunday School and Church services. The result of their efforts and of the special efforts of the different classes was that we had the largest attendance, with one exception, in the history of the school, and unusually large congregations at both the morning and evening church services. All of the departments of the church's work are now well organized and are taking up the work after the Summer's relaxation with renewed zeal and energy.

Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, Va.—The flying of the Covenant flag with its blue ground and white cross from the tower of Watts Hall is the signal of the opening of the session at Union Seminary. These are the historic colors of the institution and these were the colors used in the decoration of the recreation room in Schauffler Hall for the reception tendered by the older students to the incoming class. Mr. Edgar A. Woods, of China, a member of the Senior class, was the master of ceremonies. He first called on Dr. Moore, the president of the seminary, to make an address of welcome. In the course of his remarks, Dr. Moore greeted, along with the Junior class and the 125 young women from the General Assembly's Training School, and the people of the community, the visiting alumni, referring to the homing instinct, like that of the famous pigeons of Holland and Belgium, which Union Seminary always implants in the hearts of her sons and which brings them back to the institution whenever occasion offers. Quite a number of the alumni were present, some coming from points west of the Mississippi. The program was enlivened with instrumental and vocal music. The numbers of the sextette with stringed instruments were received with special enthusiasm. Mr. L. A. McMurray, president of the student body, made an address on behalf of the old students, featured by an earnest appeal to them to maintain and develop the spiritual tone of the institution. There were many comments on the thoroughness of the organization and perfection of the arrangements in giving all the visitors opportunity to meet everyone of the new men and in serving the refreshments quickly and comfortably. A special guest of honor was Rev. James Black of Edinburgh, one of the most celebrated of living preachers. He has greatly enjoyed his stay in the seminary community, being struck, as all visitors are, with the exceptionally fine spirit of Christian fellowship that obtains here. He has spoken also repeatedly and emphatically of the extraordinary quality of the teaching in the classrooms, which he has freely attended.

The eight lectures on Preaching, which Dr. Black has been giving to the students have drawn very large audiences to Schauffler Hall. They are as fresh and striking and rich in practical suggestions as any lectures on the subject that have ever been heard here, and they will make a volume of great value for all ministers and students for the ministry. W. R. M.

Centre College has enrolled 308 students. The Senior class now numbers 43, a gain of almost 100 percent over last year's class. A number of other institutions contributed to the upper classes this year, but the large enrollment is accounted for in the return of students of last year. The Freshman class is less than 30 percent of the entire student body, brought about by the exacting requirements for entrance.

The first week after college opened Rev. S. S. Daughtry, minister of the United Presbyterian Church of Harrodsburg, Ky., delivered a series of four addresses to the student body. Miss Mary Dan Harberson sang at each of these services, greatly assisting in the bringing of a Gospel message to the students of Centre College.

Flora Macdonald College—Scotch Day brought to Flora Macdonald a distinguished group of notables, including Col. Donald Walter Cameron and his wife, Lady Hermione, two governors, Cameron Morrison, of North Carolina, and Thos. G. McLeod, of South Carolina, Col. Bennahan Cameron, chief of the clan in the United States, Angus W. McLean, former chairman of the war finance corporation, John Gordon Gray, of the St. Andrews Society of Philadelphia, W. M. Britton, of the export and import board of Baltimore, Capt. P. N. Calhoun, of Washington, custodian of the sword of Prince Charlie and Dr. Peter McIntyre, of the Arran Black River Society. The exercises were held in the Woodland Theatre on the campus and were witnessed by an audience of three thousand. The guest of the occasion was introduced by Angus W. McLean. Loehiel was enthusiastically received and his address was in the nature of an appeal for the security of world peace. He referred to the spirit of kinship between the two nations, Great Britain and America, and expressed the hope that the two nations would always be found standing shoulder to shoulder in times of stress. He spoke at length on Scottish history and Scottish customs and paid tribute to the memory of the Scottish heroine Flora Macdonald. Following the address a barbecue dinner was served on the campus—a reception was tendered the distinguished visitor and at night the Scottish quartette, of Toronto, sang in the college auditorium.

Founders Day will be observed on next Tuesday, October 23d, with Mrs. John Drake, president of the South Carolina Federation of Women's Clubs making the address of the day. Alumnae from Laurinburg, Lumberton and Cheraw, S. C., will appear on the morning program and a business meeting, reception, student program and special movie will feature the afternoon and night session.

Columbia Theological Seminary—Dr. John M. Wells will attend the meetings of the Synod of Georgia and the Synod of South Carolina.

Dr. Melton Clark will attend the Synod of Florida. Dr. R. C. Reed will attend the Synod of Alabama. Dr. W. M. McPheeters, Dr. Jas. B. Green and Rev. Hugh R. Murchison will attend the Synod of South Carolina.

Among the interesting features of campus activities is a model Presbytery, which the students have named in honor of the president of the seminary, "Wells Presbytery." The Presbytery is organized with Mr. H. N. Alexander, moderator; C. W. McMurray, stated clerk; L. E. Polk, writing clerk, and J. C. McGehee, reading clerk. At its last meeting interesting reports were presented on the various activities of the Church. This Presbytery has proven a splendid mode of teaching parliamentary rules as especially applied to a Presbyterian Church code.

The Seniors and Middlers gave a delightful reception to the members of the Junior class last Friday evening. The invited guests consisted of the students of Chicora College and Columbia College, Lutheran Seminary, and members of the faculty with their wives.

Quite a number of the students are filling preaching engagements this week-end: Mr. S. W. Dendy is assisting the pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Gastonia, N. C., in his young people's work.

Messrs. A. W. Dick, of the Senior Class and Vernon A. Crawford, of the Middle class, attended the Fall Retreat of the Student Volunteer Band, of South Carolina. Mr. Dick is the president, and Mr. Crawford is the retiring president. Mr. Dick will preach at the A. R. P. Church Sunday evening.

News of the Week

Fayetteville and Fort Bragg vied with each other in paying honor to Cameron of Lochiel, chieftain of the Clan Cameron, and his charming wife, Lady Hermione, who arrived in Fayetteville and spent the greater part of the day before leaving for Red Springs, where Colonel Cameron delivers the principal address at the annual meeting of the Scottish Society of America.

Par-collection of checks and the placing of all banking under federal supervision were among the measures urged before the joint congressional committee investigating failure of state banks to enter the federal reserve system.

Members of the party of foreign public health officials studying health work in North Carolina stated that Charlotte has the finest public school system of all cities they have visited, and particularly in regard to public health work in the schools were they complimentary. The nursing staff of the city and county health departments here, which is operated under the direction of the Charlotte Nursing Association, came in for great praise from the foreign physicians, who asserted that the local nursing department, under the direction of Dr. W. A. McPhaul, city and county health officer, and Miss Clara Ross, supervising nurse, is the largest and best they have inspected in this country.

Train No. 13, the Southern Pacific railroad's crack San Francisco express and mail, was held up by two robbers just as it emerged from tunnel No. 13 in the Siskiyou mountains, on the California-Oregon line. Three trainmen were shot and killed; the mail car was dynamited, the charge killing a mail clerk, and looted. The robbers escaped with an undetermined amount of loot.

Lucius Polk McGehee is dead. He was dean of the N. C. University Law school, a faithful servant of the institution, an inspiring teacher.

Receipts from national forest resources during the fiscal year ended June 30, totaled $5,335,818, according to the final tabulation made by the department of agriculture. This amount is greater than the receipts for any previous fiscal year and is about $1,000,000 larger than the average annual receipts of the preceding five years. A portion of these funds will go to states for roads and schools. North Carolina will get $11,774 for her share.

Grover Cleveland Bergdoll, fugitive from justice in Germany, intends to return to this country, and to serve his sentence for draft evasion, his mother, Mrs. Emma Bergdoll, declared on her arrival from Germany, where she visited her son.

The most spectacular event of the financial market: last week was the sharp rally which occurred on the New York Stock Exchange, Wednesday. Perhaps the most significant development was the continued advance in grain prices. Cash corn in Chicago sold at the highest price in three years and the principal futures gained several additional cents. December wheat set a new high level for the crop and commanded at least 10 cents more than the price of two months ago.

CHILDREN

THE DAY AFTER MOTHER'S DAY

We celebrated Mother's Day in the loveliest way," remarked Billy one, as he met Miss Fowler, his lovely school teacher, and walked proudly along beside her. "We gave her a present."

"How nice! I suppose you love her very much, don't you?"

"Lots."

"Well, Billy, my man," said Miss Fowler, stopping a moment at the corner where she was to turn off, "don't forget your lesson last Sunday. You know what our Bible tells about how true love shows itself." Yes, Billy knew. He walked on thinking of it, and presently his round face grew very sober.

Yesterday we told Mother that we gave her the present with our love. Today is only a day off, and I couldn't get up in time for breakfast. I was late at school; I made the twins mad, and I sneaked out of the back door so as not to have to go for the mail. I can't see how anybody, by looking at the way I've acted, could tell that I liked my mother at all."

It was beginning to rain when Billy reached home. He and the twins, who had been playing in the yard, all went to the shelter of the kitchen together. Mrs. Stone, at work in the next room, looked out of the window with a sigh. She had so much to do, and she was liable to be troubled when the children must stay indoors.

Billy thought of this, too.

The twins were hanging their caps up with a shuffle.

"I say, Robin," asked Billy, abruptly, "how much do you love Mother this afternoon?"

Robin turned and stared at him. "What a queer question; it was not a bit like a boy!"

"Why?" he giggled. "Do you want me to write some poetry about it?"

"Poetry!" sniffed Billy. "I want to know how much—just plain how much—that isn't poetry, is it?"

"That arithmetic," said Dora.

Dora was the eldest of them all. He was bolstered up in a big arm-chair by the fire; she had been ill for fortnight.

"How much?" repeated Robin. "How can you tell how much you love a person?"

"In plenty of ways," said Billy, wisely. "I'll tell you one right now. I love Mother a boxful."

With that he picked up the kindling-box and marched out into the shed.

A light broke upon the twins. "Oh-oh!" cried Harry, "that's what you mean, is it? Well, I love her a awful," seizing the water bucket and tартing for the pump.

"I love her a scuttleful," said Robin, and he plunged down cellar after coal. Dora looked at the clock. She had looked at it five minutes before, and said:

"I do believe by darling mother is going to forget the medicine this time. I shall not remind her, that is sure! But I guess," she said now, reaching for the bottle with a wry face, "I guess at least I can love her a spoonful."

There was a shout of laughter as the boys came back in time to hear her. Mrs. Stone heard, and glanced anxiously at the door.

"I hope there is no mischief on foot; I'm in a hurry to get this sewing done."

Kitty Stone had roused herself from her book in the old-fashioned kitchen window-seat to listen to Billy and the rest. So far she had said nothing. But when the kindling-box and the pail and scuttle were full, and the medicine bottle a little less full, the covers of Kitty's book went together with a snap.

"Don't you think," she said, "that all of us together, if we hurried, could love mother this room full before she came in and caught us? I'll clean the stove out and blacken it."

They worked like beavers. The last tin was swung on the nail and the last chair set back to the wall when Mrs. Stone's step was heard coming rapidly down the hall.

"Yes'm," said Dora, demurely; "I took it for pure love—to you, not for it."

Her mother looked around the tidy room, and when she saw how spick and span it was, and when she saw the ring of smiling faces, she kissed them every one, and her own face was as bright as the brightest.

"There's no mother in the country," said Mrs. Stone, "that has such children as mine!"

"There, now, do you see?" said Billy to Robin. "Can't you tell how much you love a person? We're going to make every day 'Mother's Day'!"—Evangelical.

WHEN WIGGLE-WAGGLE WENT VISITING

Tommy Moore sat on the back doorstep eating a lovely cream puff just hot from the oven, when he heard a peculiar noise at the board gate back of the house; hesitatingly he laid aside the cream puff and went slowly down the walk. Tommy thought sure he was going to find Jimmy Brown at the back gate, and he didn't want to see any of the boys that afternoon, for he had been sent home from school that morning for blowing a horn in the schoolroom. Of course he didn't do it; but the horn when found was one that everybody recognized as his, though he declared over and over that he had lost his. But he had been sent home nevertheless, and he didn't feel as if he wanted to see any of his old playmates.

Finally, however, he decided to open the gate; and when he did, in walked the cutest, fuzziest little black dog Tommy had ever seen, which immediately went trotting up the walkway wagging his tail in the friendliest manner possible; and Tommy, like any other good-natured little boy, divided his cream puff with his visitor. And such a nice visitor as the little fluffy-haired dog made, too; he could sit on his hind legs and wave his front feet and could play ball almost as well as some of Tommy's friends. Slowly but surely Tommy was forgetting the disgrace of the morning in play with the dog, when he heard another knock on the back gate.

This time he didn't hesitate to answer but immediately went to the gate. When he opened it, Harry Horner was standing there.

"What you want?" Tommy asked almost impolitely.

"I—I want to tell you that it was me who blowed that horn this morning. I—I really didn't mean to—and I didn't tell, for I knew I'd be sent home, and I knew I'd get a licking besides, for my step-father ain't like my real father was at all, and, somehow, I couldn't bear to think of him whipping me. But after school was out I told the teacher it was me instead of you and asked her to lick me instead."

"She didn't, did she?" Tommy asked anxiously.

"No," Harry answered, "she didn't; but I can't say why."

Just then the little dog came trotting down the walk and dropped the ball at the boys' feet.

"Well, of all things!" Harry exclaimed, "if their ain't Wiggle-Waggle."

"What you know about him?" Tommy asked.

"Why, Tommy, everybody who lives here long knows Wiggle-Waggle; he's the dog that won't live any one place long at a time, but goes from house to house, visiting everybody. Any funny thing, Tommy," Harry continued, "he always has a knack of paying a call just when he's needed most."

"I guess that's right," Tommy answered solemnly, "for I certainly needed a friend when he came in."

And Wiggle-Waggle wagged his tail as if he thoroughly understood what the little boy said.—Elizabeth Anne Slater, in Herald and Presbyter.

TEN LITTLE ERRORS

By Adelbert F. Caldwell

Ten little errors once spoke to Bobby Tryne.

He learned, "It is I" for "It is me." Then there nine.

Nine little errors; sorry to relate— He said, "It doesn't" for "It don't," and then there were eight.

Eight little errors. (I'm glad there weren't eleven!);

"He spoke to whom?" for "He spoke to who?" Then there were seven.

Seven little errors. His tongue the words would mix!

He learned, "It isn't," for "It haint"; and then there were six.

Six little errors—sure as I'm alive— He said, "May I go?" for "Can I go?" Then there were five.

Five little errors. He struggled o'er and o'er

To say, "There is no," for "There isn't no"; then there were four.

Four little errors, ungrammatical as could be!

He said, "He lay down," for "He laid down." Then there were three.

Three little errors. (It's fine there were so few!)

He learned, "Were I you," for "Was I you"; and then there were two.

Two little errors. Both he tried to shun.

"It is she," for "It is her." There there was but one.

The last error at length was on the run—

He used "sitting hen" for "setting hen,"

Then there were none!

No, it wasn't easy, to make such errors right;

But by his perseverance, Bobby won the fight.

THE REASON

I wonder why it rained today, And kept me from my out-door play; And why there wasn't any sun, My garden beds to shine upon.

Perhaps a cloud was passing by, And leaning nearer from the sky Saw all the little dusty trees, And heard them whisper "wash us please."

OUT FISHIN'

"A feller isn't thinkin' mean, Out fishin'; His thoughts are mostly good and clean Out fishin'; He doesn't knock his fellow men, Or harbor any grudges then; A feller's at his finest when Out fishin'.

"The rich are comrades to the poor, Out fishin'; All brothers of a common lure, Out fishin'; The urchin with the pin an' string Can chum with millionaire and king; Vain pride is a forgotten thing Out fishin'.

"A feller gets a chance to dream, Out fishin'; He learns the beauties of a stream, Out fishin'; An' he can wash his soul in air That isn't foul with selfish care An' relish plain and simple fare Out fishin'.

"A feller has no time for hate, Out fishin'; He isn't eager to be great, Out fishin'; He isn't thinkin' thoughts of pelf, Or goods stacked high upon a shelf, But he is always just himself, Out fishin'.

"A feller's glad to be a friend, Out fishin'; A helpin' hand he'll always lend, Out fishin'; The brotherhood of rod and line An' sky an' stream is always fine; Men come real close to God's design, Out fishin'.

"A feller isn't plottin' schemes, Out fishin'; He's only busy with his dreams, Out fishin'; His livery is a coat of tan. His creed to do the best he can, A feller's always mostly man, Out fishin'.

THE GOLDEN RULE OF OUT-OF-DOORS

There's a Golden Rule to govern our visits to the woods, The pastures, fields and meadows of country neighborhoods Where we go for flowers and berries and other treasures wild, 'Tis a rule that should be memorized and kept by every child.

The sign "No Trespassing" is placed for those who take no pains To put up bars and fasten gates when leaving fields and lanes, And for those who break the branches off and tear the fences down— Who left their manners far behind when they tramped in from town.

The little signs along the road were also meant for those Who "hook" the farmer's apples from beneath his very nose; For those who tease his watch-dog and rob the phœbe's nest; Most farmers think such folks are worse than a caterpillar pest.

Should we be always welcome in the country, you and I Must never be ill-mannered to our hosts, and always try To keep Dear Nature's golden rule, which should be widely known— Treat wood and field and all therein as if they were thine own.

A SUMMER IN CHILPANCINGO, MEXICO

work here for almost a year and some of the results are worth telling.

First came the repair work, slow and tedious. Now the mission building is in order and the school begun. A boarding department has been added and the name of "Wallace Institute" given in honor of the veteran worker of the sister mission who was here many years ago and is remembered by many. Miss Gray is in charge of this school. I wish the friends at home could see the group of girls in her care, happy and busy from morning to night.

Another departure here is a "Home" for boys who come from far-away villages and ranches where there are no public schools. These boys go to the public schools here, but are in this Christian home under the direction of Mr. and Mrs. Williamson in the first place, and under the care of a faithful Mexican worker and his wife who look after material interests and carry out the directions of Mr. and Mrs. Williamson. This co-operation with the city public schools has met much approbation.

This summer another advance step was Vacation Bible School, the second, as far as I know, in Mexico, and the first in our field. This school could not be exactly as they are in the homeland, for lack of many things, equipment, let me call it. We had no kindergarten teacher nor equipment, but we had the "kinder." So we did the best we could, the little ones were taught hymns and Bible verses and heard Bible stories and they seemed satisfied.

There were classes for older ones. One room had the Life of Christ, and a group of adults, under my care, had a series of Old Testament studies.

And then there were catechism classes. I do not know if the vacation schools at home teach the catechism. But they could and perhaps they should. I was at the school a great deal and from morning to night heard them studying the catechism. Fifteen recited perfectly the Children's Catechism and one the Shorter, receiving as prizes the certificates and diploma offered by the "Observer" and also the Testaments and Bible as prizes for the respective catechisms. These are beautifully bound and greatly prized. The prizes were awarded at Sunday School and it did one good to see the large number who came forward to receive them.

The congregations are wonderfully encouraging. The church in the city has no native pastor now so all the preaching has to be done by Mr. Williamson with less than two years in Mexico. But such congregations should inspire him. The last Sunday that I was there there were 115 in Sunday School and at the following Wednesday night meeting 93. The little church was almost filled that Sunday, and the day is not distant when a larger building will be needed. May it be more attractive than this in many respects.

This whole state of Guerro is ripe for the sowing of the seed. The villages around, visited as often as possible, are "open doors."

Mr. and Mrs. Williamson also dream of the day when workers can go to the many villages on and near the Pacific coast. There is entrance everywhere, and the calls are many. "Equipment" here means the means to send out native workers throughout this great field, and the building not only of a church in Chilpancingo, but chapels in villages where the services are held now in homes of believers.

If the Church at home could realize the wonderful opportunities here surely the means to meet them would come. From that great almost uncared for coast field we believe we have some preparing for service. Two girls in the boarding school and three boys in the "Home" are from the coast, and are preparing to work there.

These are Christ's little ones here in Guerrero. The workers are faithfully carrying the light. In the church and in the villages, in the homes where Mrs. Williamson as a trained nurse finds much to do, in the school and in the "Home" the seed is being sown. There will be a rich harvest one day.

YOUR PLACE AND YOUR WORK

Just where you stand in the conflict,
There is your place!
Just where you think you are useless,
Hide not your face!
God placed you there for a purpose,
Whate'er it be;
Think you He has chosen you for it:
Work loyally.

Gird on your armor! be faithful
At toil or rest,
Whiche'er it be, never doubting
God's way is best.

Out in the fight, or on picket,
Stand firm and true;

This is the work which your Master
Gives you to do. —Selected.

A ROMANCE OF Human Love and Divine Grace

By Rev. E. W. Smith, D.D.

So touching and beautiful is the following letter, so romantic and unusual the story of its writer and his lovely wife, and through it all shines so radiantly

"The light that never was on sea or land," that it seems but a fit tribute to divine grace that we give our people the letter and a brief outline of the events preceding it.

Born and reared in Belgium, Rev. Joseph Savels until a few years ago was a Roman Catholic priest in the Belgian Congo. There his ability had won for him high ecclesiastical rank and wide influence and authority. But his study of church history had gradually undermined his faith in the Romish system. His personal observation of the life and spirit of Protestant missionaries had deeply impressed him. Finally, after long continued prayer, he sacrificed his earthly all for conscience sake and openly embraced Protestantism. His conversion produced a tremendous sensation in Congo Catholic circles, both Belgian and native. The only explanation that the priests could give to their native followers was that he had lost his mind. Eventually he became a useful member of our Congo Mission and is now an ordained Presbyterian minister at Luebo. While stationed at Bibanga he erected there the finest church building in the mission.

Among the Belgian refugees driven to England by the German occupation during the Great War was a young lady of Catholic faith and rearing whose eyes were opened to the truth by what she saw of English Protestantism. She followed her conscience, and thereby alienated her relatives as Mr. Savels had done. The latter coming to England from the Congo, after his conversion, the two met. Outcasts alike from country and kindred, yet one in Christian experience, they soon became all in all to each other. The rest of the story is told in Mr. Savels' letter.

As we read of her sunny and heroic spirit, shown in the little things as well as in the great, how she relinquished her first-born child, and later laid down her young life, with a smile for duty's sake, for Africa's sake, for Christ's sake; as we think of another grave opened in far-off Congo, where sleep the bodies of Lapsley, Mrs. Adamson, Mrs. Snyder, Slaymaker, Mrs. Rochester, Dr. and Mrs. Morrison, God grant that we may dedicate ourselves afresh to that sacred task to which they gave the last full measure of devotion.

"They climbed the steep ascent of heaven
Through peril, toil, and pain;
O God, to us may grace be given
To follow in their train."

Luebo, July 23, 1923.

Dear Dr. Smith:

Little did you and I think that my dear wife whom you saw at Brussels would one year later be carried to her grave here at Luebo.

She died on the 11th of this month. My heart is calmer now, but feels heavy with a dull throbbing pain. At times I smart under an overwhelming feeling of loneliness.

God knows why He allowed this young life to be cut off in its spring, when so many signs pointed to ripening gifts

Her age was 24 years and 11 months.

Born and reared a Roman Catholic, she left Belgium at the beginning of the war, and in England learned the truth of the Gospel. She left the Roman Church in spite of much opposition. It caused a total break with her family. In 1917 she married me.

We were exiles in a foreign land and at the start of our married life had a hard time. Never did a hearty smile leave her face. We were poor. I learned later that many a day she lived on a glass of milk, a piece of dry bread, and a couple of apples, so as to have the means of giving me a good meal at my return from work.

We left for the Kasai in 1918. We left in England a little daughter of eight months. It was mighty hard on the young mother to separate herself from her first-born baby at such a tender age. Yet she did it, not without tears, but without one word of complaint.

We spent part of our first term of service at Luebo, the latter part at Bibanga.

She won the love of all, and earned for herself the name of "Sunbeam" on account of her lively, joyous, and obliging character.

And all through her too short life she has been a sunbeam to her husband, to her children, to her friends, and to all who came near her.

Her religion was not one learned in many books, mere formulas and empty words. She was very simple, and very humble, conscious of her limitations. She loved the Lord Jesus, and was untiringly kind to the smallest of the small.

The very essence of her character was kindness. She was never more happy than when a chance came her way to oblige somebody. She was a smiling giver. Whatever her worries and ailments she put up a bright and brave face towards others.

Above all she did her Duty.

During her first term of service she had weathered rough seas and her health had been shaken. However the furlough made up for this. Yet just a few days before we sailed from Antwerp, in February, she told me about a feeling of fear, a sort of premonition that Congo would this time prove fatal to her. "I do not know what waits me there. Rather I think I do know. But all the same it is my duty to go; and I will."

At Luebo she looked at the graveyard and told one of her friends, "I will be buried here."

Her health was good then, and the idea of approaching death did not in the least do away with her habitual joy and eagerness for work.

How could I tell the comfort she was to me at home. There was never a worry I brought to her without finding solace, never a problem without receiving a simple, calm, and common sense solution.

An ideal wife to her husband, she was a splendid mother to her children. Not a native who did not come to her with childlike confidence.

She was stricken with blackwater fever, the typical tropical disease, in the beginning of June. The skill of Dr. Stixrud and the untiring devotion of Mrs. Stixrud and Mrs. John Morrison saved her that time. The disease left her very weak, and the convalescence was slow. Prospects, however, were good. Then on the 6th of July she went to bed with what proved to be an abscess in the throat, acute tonsillitis, which caused septic pneumonia.

Her sufferings were intense. To swallow even a drop of water caused agony. Yet she never complained, never showed so much as a sign of impatience. Even among bitter pains she smiled and whispered thanks for the service people tried to render her.

It was hard to believe that the bright little woman was dying. She knew it and was not afraid. Calling me she said two hours before the end, "Darling, I am dying. I will not reach evening. It is all for the best. I feel very tired. I did what I could. If it has not been much, the Lord knows that I tried hard to do my best. He has forgiven my sins. Take care of our children."

The breath became shorter, heavier. What human skill could do was done by the doctor who fought to the last for a precious life. The fever rose, and finally, with her hand in blessing on the head of her two-year-old son, she lost consciousness. For five minutes she lay very still. Then, two short gasps, and she stood before the Throne.

She had given her young life, and greater love there is none.

She was buried at evening when the splendor of the heavens above proclaimed the glory of the Creator.

The service was very simple and impressive. The body first raised on the shoulders of the missionaries, was later carried by the elders and deacons of the native church. Not only hundreds of natives, but all the white people of Luebo, officials and traders, led by the Chief Magistrate of the District, were present as a last token of affection and respect to a humble missionary lad whom all loved.

Our Lord said, "Unless you become as little children ye shall not enter the kingdom of heaven." She was little child at heart, and therefore she is now happy and at rest with God.

Remember me in your prayers, so that the Lord's presence may soften my loneliness.

Yours sincerely, J. Savels.

Mr. Reginald Lowe, a promising young man of the congregation, was received recently by the Presbytery as a candidate for the Gospel ministry.

Dr. Thacker and party are to conduct a 15-day meeting next month. This is to be the first series of services in the new church, and the congregation is ready to give its heartiest support.

TENNESSEE

Memphis, Second Church—On Tuesday morning, October 9th, Rev. Trigg A. M. Thomas, D.D., of Kansas City, Mo., widely known in our General Assembly as an evangelist, and Mrs. Lilly Mitchell Wadsworth, of Winona, Miss., were united in marriage by Rev. A. B. Curry, pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church. The wedding occurred at 11 a. m., in the church auditorium. Only a few friends were present. The bride is a daughter of a Methodist minister, and the romance the result of a meeting held by Dr. Thomas several months ago. The congratulations and best wishes of the entire Church go with Dr. and Mrs. Thomas.

The ladies of the Auxiliary of the Second Church have most agreeably surprised the new assistant pastor and his wife, Rev. and Mrs. C. G. Gunn, with a wonderful shower—which more nearly resembled a "cloud burst." In addition to the many and beautiful and useful gifts was a small basket, in which was a small white bull terrier puppy.

The kind and generous thought of this showed, along with the splendid welcome from all, since arriving, has been much appreciated.

The prayer meeting on October 9th was in charge of one of the deacons, Mr. Jesse Houck. The subject for discussion was "Home Visitation Sunday." Mr. Houck delivered a splendid address and called upon 12 members of the committee of 96 who made the canvass. Everyone greatly enjoyed the accounts given of the visitation, which has done much for our Church. There were 114 at prayer meeting.

The Memphis Bible Conference opened Sunday, October 14th, in the Second Presbyterian Church. This conference is undenominational and will be attended by members from all the Protestant churches here. It will extend through October 28th. Among the speakers are Dr. T. W. Calloway, Chattanooga, Tenn.; Dr. W. H. Griffith Thomas, England; Dr. Leon W. Tucker, New York City; Dr. Mark A. Matthews, Seattle, Wash.

WEST VIRGINIA

Romney—The commission appointed by Winchester Presbytery to install Rev. Charles R. Bailey pastor of this church met here September 30, 1923.

Rev. Geo. L. Cook presided, preached the sermon, and propounded the constitutional questions; Rev. J. B. Bittenger, D.D., delivered the charge to the pastor; Hon. Wm. McCauley, of Moorefield delivered the charge to the people.

Dr. Foote, Dr. Finley, Dr. Washburn and Dr. Brooke, former pastors of this church, were all among the best preachers of the Synod of Virginia. This congregation, therefore, are good judges of preaching, and so their calling Mr. Bailey is a high compliment to him.

Buckeye—The minutes of another General Assembly will show a church at this point. On Sunday, September 23d, a commission of Greenbrier Presbytery composed of Revs. J. C. Johnson, J. E. Flow, D.D., and H. H. Orr and elders A. P. Edgar and T. S. McNeil met at the M. P. Church, Buckeye and organized a church of 24 members; 23 of these were received from the church at Marlinton and one received on profession of faith. Messrs. Hiram Barnes, Eustace Brindle and Withrow McClintic were elected, ordained and installed elders of the new church. Harper Adkinson was elected, ordained and installed deacon with Moody McNeill and Meade McNeill elected deacons to be installed later. Less than a year ago there was not a member of the Presbyterian Church in this community.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Central Church of Washington—Wednesday night, October 3d, the A. W. Pitzer Bible Class held a social meeting in the lecture room. The program included a very helpful address by Mr. Homer J. Councilor, president of the Vaughn Bible Class of the Calvary Baptist Church of this city. The next evening the weekly prayer meeting was made the preparatory service for the communion on the following Sunday, at which time, besides a number of additions by letter three were added on profession of faith, and one of these was baptized. Rev. M. B. Lambdin, now a resident of this city, assisted the pastor in the communion service. The offering made by this church for the Japanese sufferers was nearly $350, and not $250 as reported in this paper several weeks ago. A. H.

YOUNG PEOPLE

The boys fished for their partners and refreshments were served, after which Mrs. Byrd took her little birdies back home and the party broke up, everyone declaring, as usual, that they had had a fine time.

Those engineering the evening's frolic were Messieurs W. C. Copeland, of the Senior class, as general chairman of arrangements; M. B. Dendy and J. W. McFall, in charge of decorations, and J. D. Henderson and T. C. Bryan, in charge of amusements.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Secretary Hubert Work, of the department of the interior, has accepted the invitation of Chairman J. Elwood Cox, of the Pageant of Progress committee, to attend the celebration of North Carolina good roads building which is to be held October 25th. Secretary Work wrote Mr. Cox that he would leave Washington the evening of October 24th and would be compelled to return to the capital the night of the 25th.

The supreme court announced that it would not review its decision in the case brought by the Farmers and Merchants Bank, of Monroe, N. C., and others against the Federal Reserve Bank, of Richmond, Va., in which it held that states could by law authorize their banks to charge for their services in the collection of checks drawn upon them.

Senator Copeland, of New York, who spoke at the Kings Mountain battleground celebration and journeyed about that section of the state with Frank A. Hampton and other enthusiastic North Carolinians, was delighted with his visit and reception. He came back to Washington a Tar Heel booster. His bouquets for the North Carolinians are large and numerous.

"The most successful show in every respect in the three years of the history of the Made-in-Carolinas Exposition" is the way J. C. Patton, executive secretary, and John L. Dabbs, president, of the exposition company, characterized the third Made-in-Carolinas Exposition, which came to a close October 6th. In square feet of space sold for exhibition purposes, in number of exhibitors, in attendance and in general interest, and particularly in the interest displayed in the show by Charlotte folk, the exposition, officials of the company declared, was most gratifying.

THE OLD HYMNS

By Frank L. Stanton

There's lots of music in 'em—the hymns of long ago,
And when some gray-haired brother sings the ones I used to know

I sorter want to take a hand—I think of days gone by—
"On Jordan's stormy banks I stand and cast a wistful eye!"

There's lots of music in 'em—those dear, sweet hymns of old,

With visions bright of lands of light, and shining streets of gold;

And I hear 'em ringing—singing where memory dreaming stands,
"From Greenland's icy mountains to India's coral strands."

They seem to sing forever of holier, sweeter days,
When the lilies of the love of God bloomed white in all the ways;

And I want to hear their music from the old-time meetin's rise
Till "I can read my title clear to mansions in the skies."

We never needed singin' books in them old days—we knew

The words, the tunes of every one—the dear old hymn book through!

We didn't have no trumpets then, no organs built for show,
We only sang to praise the Lord, "from whom all blessings flow."

An' so I love the good old hymns and when my time shall come—

Before the light has left me, and my singing lips are dumb—

If I can hear 'em sing them then, I'll pass without a sigh
To "Canaan's fair and happy land where my possessions lie."

One day Carlyle and some friends were discussing Titian's paintings. "There is his wonderful drawing," said a friend. "And his gorgeous coloring," said another. "And here I sit," growled Carlyle, "a man made in the image of God, who knows nothing about Titian, and cares nothing about Titian, and that is another fact about Titian." "Pardon," interrupted Thackeray, "but that is not another fact about Titian; it is a lamentable fact about Carlyle." This illustrates how we may blame God for the lack of beauty in the natural and spiritual spheres of the universe, when the trouble can be traced to our unresponsive minds and hearts.—Forward.

BLESSED IS THE MAN

Blessed is the man whose calendar contains prayer meeting nights.

Blessed is the man who is faithful on a committee.

Blessed is the man who will not strain at a drizzle and swallow a downpour.

Blessed is the man who can endure an hour and a quarter in a place of worship as well as two hours and a half in a place of amusement.

Blessed is the man who is generous to his neighbor in all things except the application of the sermon.

Blessed is the man whose watch keeps church time as well as business time.—Selected.

A RAINY SABBATH

When you wake some Sabbath morning and hear upon the roof

The sharp and steady patter of the rain,

Don't say, "Dear me! it's raining, so I can't go out today,"

And close your eyes and go to sleep again;

But thank your Heavenly Father who has sent you health and strength

To enable you the stormy wind to face,

For you're neither salt nor sugar, and on any other day

You know you'd be at business in your place.

But if you're sorely tempted to tarry on at home,

And miss the song, the sermon, and the prayer,

Just reflect that if each member should make the same excuse—

Why, there wouldn't be a single person there;

And the minister would surely have to preach to empty seats,

Though why should he not hug the fireside, too?

For when you come to think of it, you'll have to own that rain

Is just as wet for preachers as for you. —Ex.

SOUTHERN RAILWAY SYSTEM

The spirit of service

To provide freight and passenger transportation for the millions of patrons of the Southern Railway System requires the services of 60,000 men and women and the use of railroad properties in which $710,000,000 has been invested.

This is the largest business enterprise in the South, and one of the largest in the world. It is an institution of the South, operated by men bred in the traditions of the South.

We of the Southern, well knowing that the successful operation of this great transportation service depends upon our gaining and holding the good will of the Southern people, appraise our day's work not in the cold figures of income accounts and balance sheets, but in the value that the South places on Southern Railway service.

"The Southern serves the South" is the spirit of the day's work of the men and women of the Southern Railway System, who are serving you night and day on 8,300 miles of lines throughout the South.

Southern Railway System deposits in Southern banks an average of $150,500 each banking hour.

The SOUTHERN SERVES THE SOUTH

Story and Incident

THE LITTLE GATE

The little gate had been placed there years before, when Aurelia Davis had married and come to live next door to her old schoolmate, Isabell Bond. Isabel herself had had it made and put in the neat, white, picket fence that divided the two places.

It had been a real delight and comfort to the two women, and though more than one acquaintance had shaken a dubious head over the neighborly arrangement, and Isabel had even read a magazine article or two strictly advising against the familiarity of such an affair, the fact remained that the little gate had disproved them all.

That was before the children began to come, however; or rather, before they began to find their way through the little gate, leaving behind them, on Isabel's velvety lawn, a motley trail of small, battered toy automobiles and little, lopsided red wagons, and enormous rag-dolls the size of a two-year-old baby, to say nothing of the unsightly litter of paper cuttings and scraps of cloth which disfigured the lawn and the cement walk as Aurelia's girls reached the age of paper dolls.

No one could possibly blame Isabel Bond's orderly and methodical soul for being vexed and disturbed by this disorder and litter on her neat premises; but for a time she patiently picked up and carried back through the little gate the accumulations of hours of play.

She had talked to them, too, about the matter, and had watched their irresponsible ways as they tugged home their various possessions, only to forget and bring them back again the next day.

No one could really blame Isabel for her final loss of patience. "I declare," she said to herself, "I'll nail up that gate if they don't do better! If Aurelia wasn't one of the most shiftless mortals alive, she'd see how provoking it is and teach those children to take care of their playthings! I'm just worn out bending over and picking up and taking home all that litter, and I'm about through. I'll speak to Aurelia once more about it and see if she'll do anything; then—if she doesn't—"

When Isabel mentioned the disagreeable subject to her neighbor,

Aurelia looked at her with distressed brown eyes.

"I know just how it is," she apologized, "and I'm to blame for it! If I didn't have so much to do, I might watch them better and see that they didn't do such things. I ought to, anyway, but—"

Her brown eyes filled with sudden tears and the soft voice trailed off into silence.

Isabel Bond listened in disapproving silence.

"I've a good notion to nail up the little gate," she said. "Goodness knows, I hate to, for we've enjoyed it so all these years; but—well, you say yourself you know how it is. I'm terribly proud of my little place, if I do say it! It's the prettiest on the whole street—I've been told that more than once, and I know it without being told. The lawn is like green plush, and the flowers are lovely, and I do take pride in keeping the walks swept neat and clean. I don't want to brag—I hope you don't think I am bragging, Aurelia, but I'm just stating facts. Some days I've been so provoked and mortified! The other day the doorbell rang and I went to the front door. There stood the new minister and his wife, coming to pay their first call, and right up against the door was every one of Evelyn's dolls, from the big rag one down to the littliest china one! And spread out in front of them was the set of dishes I gave her for Christmas, with bits of sticky jelly cake on the plates. The flies were dreadful, and you know, Aurelia, I don't have flies in my house! And right at the bottom of the steps was Bobby's broken rocking-horse with his rag-doll tied on its back with a rope! And all the way to the front gate was some sort of train fixed up with empty boxes they'd tugged through the little gate!"

Isabel stopped talking. Her cheeks were flaming and her heart seemed to be pounding away inside her body till she could hardly breathe.

Aurelia's eyes were swimming with tears.

"What a shame!" she said. "Isabel, I want you to nail up the little gate. I want you to. And I'll do my very best to keep the children from going around in front. They've got so used to playing over there—you've always been so good to them—giving them cookies and things for their little tea parties. I won't be a bit hurt if you close up the little gate. I would, if I were in your place."

Isabel looked at her, an eager light in her eyes. "You would?" she asked quickly. "You won't be offended if I do? I don't want to—I don't—for I love that little gate and all it has meant to us; but if I do—you'll know I had to."

One morning, a week later, Aurelia, bathing two-year-old Stevie in the bath-room, heard the energetic sound of hammer and nails and, a little later, the curious questions the children were asking one another. She could hear their wondering tones as they discussed the strange fact that the little gate would not open as it had always opened for them.

She prepared herself to explain matters to them when they should come rushing in with excited voices and round-eyed wonder. She would have to tell them that they must not take their playthings over to Auntie Isabel's any more. Auntie Isabel could not pick up their old, broken toys for them any longer. Children who annoyed a good, kind auntie as they did must learn what it meant to stay away from her. And more—much more—to the same effect.

The children went out and hung themselves upon the fence, looking across the neat, white pickets at the Promised Land to which they had no further rights.

The little side path was newly swept, and not a shred of paper or cloth marred the green velvet of the lawn. The side porch and the front porch shone spotless in the morning sun, and Isabel's canary, in its pretty cage, was singing its sweetest song. The bed of pansies beside the steps was aglow with color and sparkling with the hose spray they had received that morning. There was one pretty blue-and-gold pansy lifting its saucy head. How little Peggy's hands longed to pluck it! And—yes, there was an unmistakable odor in the air—delicious, comfortable, sugary odor—the smell of fresh baked cookies.

Isabel Bond, her heart relenting within her, came out with her hands full. "Three apiece," she said, and distributed them to the children across the fence.

A year later the little gate remained closed, and though the two women only dimly realized it, a little gate between the pleasant gardens of their friendship had slowly but surely closed also. There were still occasional little visits—over the picket fence—and sometimes one or the other went around to the front gate and up the flower-bordered path to the front door.

There had been no open break, but the old, happy, friendly days were gone. If Aurelia found herself out of baking powder, in making a cake, she sent one of the children to the grocery instead of borrowing from Isabel in the old way.

If Isabel missed her evening paper, instead of borrowing the one next door, she telephoned the office and had one delivered to her.

If Aurelia bought herself a new hat, she did not run over, as in the old days before the little gate was closed, to get Isabel's opinion as to its becomingness.

And if Isabel made a dripping-pan of hot biscuits which she wanted to share with the family next door, she looked at the closed gate, hesitated, and did not go over.

There began, after a time, to be lonely hours in Isabel Bond's immaculate house. She could hear, in the soft dusk before her lights were lighted, the sweet voice of the mother next door singing the youngest child to sleep, settling small arguments among the older children, or calling out something gay and laughing to the man of the house.

She loved these little homey sounds, but they brought a heartache with them. She began to realize, little by little, what a lonely woman she was, after all, here in her pretty, well-ordered house, where gay cretonne cushions were always in place and magazines and books neatly arranged on the library table; where neglected and broken toys did not lie in wait to trip unsuspecting feet, or disreputable dolls sprawl their ill-dressed bodies on porch or walk.

One day Aurelia went away to spend a few weeks with her mother in a distant town. She took the children with her, and the house next door was strangely silent.

Aurelia had made a half-hearted attempt to leave it in order, both outside and inside. She had had the children pick up their toys and stack them away on the back porch, but there remained countless little odds and ends of things—a broken teapot, a bent and battered tin watering-pot, a broken doll's head, gay-colored bits of cloth, and scraps of paper. The heliotrope bush beside the front door looked shabby and broken down, too, and the pansy bed under the window had been trampled by small feet.

Sometimes it seemed to Isabel Bond, as she stood there looking across the neat white picket fence, that she could not possibly bring herself to do the thing her heart longed to do—unfasten the little gate! She could not bear to think of what might be the result should she do such a thing—probably a repetition of the unpleasant experiences of the past, when the little gate had swung open at the touch of childish hands. She almost flinched at the thought of little, sticky hands upon her door, of discarded toys and shabby little caps and coats forgotten on porch or walk, of chalk-marks and pencil-marks.

No, she could not be expected to do it! Nobody could possibly expect it of her. She and Aurelia were still friends, in spite of the closed gate. Why disturb the existing peace?

Day after day Isabel Bond fought the absurd battle, and at last her better nature won. The day after Aurelia's husband had gone to bring her and the children and the new baby home—for there was a new baby—Isabel listened to her heart.

She deftly and thoroughly moved the boards that had so firmly closed the little gate, and hid them away in her woodshed. Idly, but with a keen

"The Woman's Work"

In the Presbyterian Church in the United States

Possibly in no other Church in America are the women being more thoroughly educated and enlisted in the entire work of the whole denomination.

Especially marked and important have been their interest and help in recent years in the varied fields of activity committed by the General Assembly to the Executive Committee of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief. Their study and help are being especially enlisted along the following lines:

1. The students of the Church are our greatest asset. They will soon be the leaders in the Home, the Church, the Schools, and the State. The Auxiliaries are rendering valuable help in the establishment of Life Enlistment Committees, and in following up the students in the schools and high schools, as well as those in the colleges and universities.

2. Our Presbyterian Educational Institutions are the strategic centers of our Church. They need better equipment and larger endowment. The women are helping them to guide the youth of the Church. They are praying for them, sending students to them, and helping them to secure better financial support.

3. It is of supreme importance that the students of the Church be tied up with the Christian associations and the local churches. The women are giving valuable assistance along this line.

4. The Louisville office is corresponding with and sending literature to thousands of the choice boys and girls of the Church—trying to help them to discover God's plan for their lives. The Circles are furnishing these names and helping follow up the work.

5. Many of the youth of our Church are looking for fields of service. "The Westminster Teachers' Bureau" of the Executive Committee is accomplishing wonderful results along this line. The help of the women has been a large factor in its success.

6. The "Life Annuity Bonds" of the Executive Committee furnish a safe and profitable investment for life, and an opportunity to use one's means for God's work after death. The study of this plan in the Auxiliaries has been of wonderful help.

7. Many of our ministers are laboring on wholly insufficient salaries. The women of the Church are helping us carry out the injunction of the General Assembly: "That the Executive Committee do all in its power to secure, through the co-operation of the officers and members of our churches, an adequate salary for every minister in active service."

8. The Vocational Exercise for use at the 1923 Christmas season by "Mildred Welch," "The Dayspring From on High," is one of the choicest pieces of literature issued by any Church. The Auxiliaries are helping introduce this into the churches and Sunday Schools.

9. By means of "The Student Loan Fund" and "The Funds of Education for the Ministry and Mission Service" choice boys and girls from poor Presbyterian homes are receiving education. The women of the Church are helping to increase these funds, and to discover promising youth, encouraging them in their work and remembering them in their prayers.

10. Some of the faithful ministers of our Church have become disabled on account of sickness or old age. These and the needy widows and orphans of our deceased ministers are being cared for from the Funds of Ministerial Relief. The women are deeply interested in this work and praying for and giving to it.

11. An Endowment Fund amounting to $1,460,500 has been raised and is now safely invested. The income from this is used to supplement the annual offerings in caring for needy ministers' homes. The General Assembly urges "the Church to continue to push this cause until at least the sum of $2,500,000 be reached." The women's societies are contributing liberally to the success of this work.

new sense of pleasure, she swung the little gate back and forth. There seemed something free and joyous to her in its very swing, as though it were glad to be of use once more.

That night Isabel rested as she had not rested for many weeks. What strange emotion had been working within her—conscience—remorse—no matter by what name it might be called—had emerged now into a feeling of peace.

She lay in the quiet of her room upstairs and listened to the song of the night-singing mocking bird which had long made its home among the eucalyptus trees in the back yard.

Sweet night sounds came up to her, some one's phonograph down the street playing an old-time song; some one calling out a gay good-night to a departing caller.

Isabel smiled to herself as a series of pictures trooped before her mental vision and disappeared—the children next door growing up! She could see Bob and Evelyn, high-school pupils, hurrying through the little gate to tell her something or show her something. And little Peggy coming through the little gate to try on the party dress she would be making for her. And little Stevie coming over to let her pull a baby tooth for him.

She laughed aloud. Oh, what dear young folks they were going to be! Aurelia's children growing up next door! She even wondered if she might not help Evelyn with her school work, thought it had been so many years since she had herself been a teacher, and teaching methods change so much! Never mind, there were still plenty of things she could do for them, even though her teaching ideas might be old-fashioned. She still could give a pretty twist to a bow of ribbon and crochet yards of wonderful lace for Evelyn, and help Bob out with a little pocket money now and then. And—and—Isabel drifted off in a soft confusion of young faces and older ones passing and re-passing through the little gate.

When the five-o'clock train whistled next day, and a little later the depot bus came down the street and stopped before Aurelia's gate, Isabel smoothed down her white apron and went out into the side yard.

She looked across the picket fence, and swung the little gate wide open. "Come right over," she said, "all of you. I've got supper all ready."

From the open kitchen came delicious odors. "The first green peas and new potatoes," she said, "and strawberry shortcake with whipped cream!"

She went through the little gate—it was a whole year since any one had gone through it—and took the small, blue-blanketed hundle from Aurelia's arms. She held it close, and smiled down at the children, in their Sunday best. They were looking up at her with round, wondering eyes.

"Come right over," she said; "everything's ready."

The little gate, restored to usefulness once more, swung to and fro and let them through—father, mother, and the five children. They trooped up the clean-swept steps and into the house.

Aurelia, in the spare room, taking off her wraps and making the new baby comfortable on Isabel's immaculate bed, looked up at her.

"Before we eat, Isabel," she said, before anything else, I want you to know this baby is named after you. It just seemed to me I must. I wanted to. When I'd get to thinking how the children had bothered you, and how good you'd always been to them, it seemed to me I couldn't name it anything else."

Isabel kissed first her and then the tiny, rose-leaf face among the pillows. "You dear," she said. "Now let's go out. All of you sit down at the table, while I take up the supper, and we'll eat right away. I know how tired you must be."

A little later there were homely, delightful sounds from the dining room, the clatter of dishes, and grown-up voices and children's voices and laughter.

The little gate, out in the soft beginning of twilight, swung gently to and fro when some one had forgotten to latch it. Life seemed worth living again to the little gate.—Harriet Crocker LeRoy, in Banner.

QUEEN ANNE'S LACE

Queen Anne, Queen Anne, has washed her lace

(She chose a Summer's day)

And hung it in a grassy place
To whiten, if it may.

Queen Anne, Queen Anne, has left it there,

And slept the dewy night;
Then waked, to find the sunshine fair,
And all the meadows white.

Queen Anne, Queen Anne, is dead and gone

(She died a Summer's day),

But left her lace to whiten on Each weed-entangled way!

THE NEXT GREAT NEED!!

The next great need in Home Missions is adequate equipment. We say "next" because missionary support unquestionably comes first.

But on scores of fields the time has come when a proper return on our missionary investment cannot be expected without better equipment.

WHAT CAN THE CHURCH EXPECT—

When many of her missionaries are living in places that cannot be called homes; when many of her missionaries are trying to do their work in buildings wholly inadequate and unsuited for the purpose; when a congregation worships in a rented room or in a tumbled-down shack that ought to be condemned as unfit for human use.

MILITARY PREPAREDNESS—

The nation does not require its soldiers to make war without proper weapons. To send an army against the enemy without arms and commissary is to invite defeat and disaster. It is no less a tragedy for the Church to send brave men and women against the forces of sin and Satan and not give them proper support and equipment for their tasks.

IN EVERY DEPARTMENT OF OUR CHURCH'S HOME MISSION WORK THE DEMAND FOR BUILDINGS IS URGENT AND APPEALING

Watch the mails and the Church Papers for detailed plans and information. PLAN AND PREPARE FOR EQUIPMENT FUND, SUNDAY, DECEMBER 2D.

RHEUMATISM AND INDIGESTION

Practically all physicians and medical writers are agreed that there is a close relationship between Indigestion and Rheumatism. This view is substantiated by the fact that Shivar Spring Water, which is probably the best American mineral water for Dyspepsia and Indigestion, relieves Rheumatism and the Rheumatoid diseases, such as Gout, Sciatica, Neuralgia and Nervous Headache. Physicians who have studied this water and who have observed its effects in their practice believe that it relieves these maladies by rendering the digestion complete and perfect and thereby preventing the formation of those poisons which inflame the joints and irritate the nerves, and also by eliminating, through the kidneys, such poisons as have already been formed.

If you suffer from Rheumatism, Indigestion, or from any curable disease accept the guarantee offer below by signing your name. Clip and mail to Shivar Springs,
Box 3D, Shelton, S. C.

Gentlemen:

I accept your offer and enclose herewith three dollars for ten gallons (two five gallon demijohns) of Shivar Spring Water. I agree to give the water a fair trial in accordance with instructions which you will send, and if I report no benefit you are to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns, which I agree to return within a month.

"Say," the angry citizen exclaimed as he stormed his way to the editor's desk in the newspaper office. "What'd you mean by listing me in the death column this morning?"

"Was it a mistake, sir?" the editor asked mildly.

"Of course it was. Don't you see I'm alive? You've caused me a great deal of annoyance. What are you going to do about it?"

"It is a rule of this paper never to admit having made an error, or to publish a correction," the editor told him firmly. "But," he added consolingly, "we wish to please our readers, and we'll fix you up all right. We'll put you in the births column tomorrow."—Country Gentleman.

A few Sundays ago five-year-old Edith's mother was showing her some Bible pictures. After intently studying a picture of the Garden of Eden, Edith turned to her mother and in a perplexed little voice asked, "But, mummy, where is the motor?" "Motor!" exclaimed her mother, "what do you mean? There weren't any motors in the Garden of Eden." "But," said Edith, much perplexed, "you told me that the angel drove Adam and Eve out of the Garden!"—N. Y. Advocate.

A GLIMPSE AT THE SYNOD OF SOUTH CAROLINA

It is always a pleasure to get away from one's desk and mingle with the brethren at the courts of the Church.

Last week we attended the North Carolina Synod's meeting at Graham and Burlington, going there as a member.

This week we had the pleasure of a short visit to Spartanburg, where the South Carolina Synod held its meeting.

After subtracting the time necessary to make the round trip, it left very little time to enjoy the Synod, when all had to be done in a day. It, however, had one advantage—the day was full of movement, as the Rhetorics express it, and when the editor started home, he had the consciousness of having put in full time. When we reached the church, we found the members discussing the report of the committee having in charge the erection of a Memorial Chapel to Dr. H. C. DuBose, whose work in China is known all over the Church. It is proposed to raise $20,000 with which to erect a chapel in China in memory of Dr. DuBose. Thus far there has been raised $7,920 in three years, but as $1,777 was raised outside the Synod, they have raised within their bounds only $6,143. They resolved to continue their efforts, and we are confident that they will succeed.

The editor was courteously given an opportunity to present the cause of the Standard, and to urge their co-operation with N. C. Synod in its support.

At the memorial services, memorials of Rev. S. H. Hay and Rev. E. N. Andrews were read respectively by Dr. Sprunt and Rev. Robert Lapsley.

The question of the removal of the Columbia Seminary either by uniting with Union Seminary, at Richmond, Va., or by going elsewhere as the best opportunity offered, occupied the evening session. Dr. J. M. Wells spoke in favor of the Board's recommendation, and Dr. Wm. McPheeters, of the Seminary faculty, opposed any removal whatever. Dr. Wells stated that the income of the Seminary was small, and had become smaller practically, as the number of students increased, and the purchasing power of the dollar decreased. By a special effort this income had been increased to the extent of $10,000, but still the problem was not solved. Dr. Wells made a strong speech that must have a great effect upon the Synod.

Dr. McPheeters, who has been a professor at the Seminary for 35 years, opposed any suggestion of removal. He began by claiming that only a sense of duty impelled him to speak, his conviction that he ought to do all he could to preserve an old institution to the Church. He stated that he had remained at his post, when he had attractive offers to go else where, impelled by this same sense of duty. He tried to show how the president could raise the money by personal solicitation. This was a strong speech, appealing as it did to the sympathies of his hearers, yet it was not an entirely convincing speech.

It was evident that strong reasons exist on both sides, some based on sentiment, and some on expediency.

Since our visit we are informed that the Synod has placed itself overwhelmingly in favor of retaining the Seminary in that section of the Church. The vote as between merging with Union and seeking to retain the Seminary in its present section of the Church was 101 to 43.

The Synod of Florida has also recommended the consolidation with Union Seminary, while the Synod of Georgia recommended that the Board of Trustees of the Columbia Theological Seminary, Columbia, S. C., controlled by the Presbyterian Synods of Georgia, South Carolina and Florida be granted the authority to conduct a survey and if possible find a location for the institution within the bounds of the three states.

It further recommends that if the board fails to find a location within the three controlling Synods, the Georgia, Florida and South Carolina Synods shall decline to grant authority to combine the school with another institution beyond the three states, except upon reference and consent of the Georgia Synod.

The time was when members of church courts went to the homes where they were entertained in order to get luncheon. The country congregations were the pioneers in a sensible form of entertainment, when they spread a basket dinner in the church grove, where the brethren in the most democratic fashion ate "pies and things" cheek by jowl. The city churches, under the stress of limited household help, soon adopted this custom, with the result that Presbytery, Synod and Assembly, each eat together at the mid-day meal.

When the recess for luncheon arrived the Synod moved over, en masse, to the Y. M. C. A. building, where the ladies of the church had prepared, not simply a modest lunch, but a dinner of the regulation type.

Then after adjournment in the afternoon, Converse College played the host, and in addition to the reception, served a bountiful dinner. In the midst of this tempting feast, the editor had to leave, but not without replenishing the inner man.

Dr. Pell and his dean did the honors of the occasion most gracefully, while the young ladies acted as guides through the buildings, explaining the various objects on display, whether in the domestic science department or in the physical laboratory.

"And still the wonder grew
That one small head could carry all they knew."
Of course we refer to those receiving, but not to those imparting this knowledge.

We brought from Synod most pleasant memories of the good fellowship of the South Carolina brethren. This was our third visit to this Synod, and each visit makes us feel more grateful to them for their generous reception and for their allowance of time.

SOUTHERN PRESBYTERIANS

We have been asked to give a brief history of the Southern Presbyterian Church for the benefit of the readers of the Standard. This seems a very reasonable request. The Standard has a very intelligent clientele, but most of them have grown up since the Civil War. And while they may have informed themselves about the political questions connected with that tragic affair, they have not concerned themselves about the ecclesiastical questions connected with it.

The Civil War divided the country into two parts. It was almost inevitable that this division should result in dividing the churches of the country. Perhaps it is quite generally assumed that this is a sufficient explanation of the origin of our Southern Presbyterian Church—the country separated into North and South, and consequently the Presbyterian Church separated into North and South. In other words, it may be generally taken for granted that the Civil War is the sufficient explanation of the separate existence of our Church. Doubtless it is true that if there had been no Civil War there would have been no split in the Church at that time. As a matter of fact, however, the Civil War was not the cause but merely the occasion of the split.

How then was the split brought about? How did it happen that we left the old home just when we did, and set up housekeeping on our own account? We wish all our Southern Presbyterians were able to give a correct answer to this question. They would know that we do not owe our existence as a distinct body to the hot passions of war. The real cause lies deeper and its operation is more enduring. The story of how we came to be is an interesting one, and will bear rehearsing in detail. The Presbyterian Church was divided in 1837 on the ground of doctrinal differences into Old School and New School. Our Church was a part of the Old School branch. In 1861 the Old School Assembly met in Philadelphia on the third Thursday of May. The composition of this Assembly was peculiar, unique in the history of Assemblies—nothing like it before, nothing like it since. Previous to its meeting, seven Southern States had seceded from the Union, and set up a central government at Montgomery, Ala. All the commissioners from these seven states who sat in the Philadelphia Assembly of 1861 were citizens of a new nation, the Confederate States of America. Thus the Assembly was composed of members from two separate nationalities. Another feature is to be noted. Fort Sumter, in the harbor of Charleston, S. C., had been fired on a little more than one month before the meeting of the Assembly; and President Lincoln had called for 75,000 volunteers to put down the insurrection. The two nations were actually at war with one another. Political excitement was at fever heat. Members of the Assembly were not immune. They were men of like passions with others. They differed as did others. Some of the members believed in the depths of their souls that the seceded states were guilty of a most wicked rebellion. Other members were equally clear in their convictions that those states were acting within their constitutional rights, and that President Lincoln's call for volunteers to invade their territory was an act of tyrannical aggression. They believed that it was the duty of the states to repel such invasion with all the resources at their command.

How was peace to be preserved in an Assembly composed of such hostile political elements? Obviously there was only one way to preserve peace, and that was by rigorously excluding all reference to the state of the country. Any political allusion would be like a lighted match to a powder magazine. All the commissioners recognized this, and for some days held themselves under strict control and refrained from such allusion. There was strong pressure from the outside. The city in which the Assembly met was seething with excitement. The galleries of the church in which the Assembly was sitting were filled with onlookers charged to the brim with the passions of the hour. Some members of the Assembly were in correspondence with members of President Lincoln's cabinet, hoping to get some words from that source to make plain the duty of the body. Members of the cabinet were slow to assume responsibility. Finally a telegram was received from Mr. Salmon P. Chase, Secretary of State, saying: "Cannot properly advise, but see no valid objection to unequivocal expressions in favor of the Constitution, Union and freedom." The reading of this telegram was greeted with loud applause. It stimulated the courage of those who were already persuaded that some expression of loyalty must be given, that the Assembly owed it to a distracted country to lend moral support to the government.

On the sixth day of the Assembly, Dr. Gardiner Spring, pastor of the Brick Church, N. Y., introduced two resolutions. The first was harmless, merely calling for a day of fasting and prayer. The second was as follows: "That this General Assembly, in the spirit of that Christian patriotism which the Scriptures enjoin, and which has always characterized this Church, do hereby acknowledge and declare our obligation to promote and perpetuate, as far as in us lies, the integrity of these United States, and to strengthen, uphold and encourage the Federal Government in the exercise of all its functions under our noble constitution, and to this constitution in all its provisions, requirements and principles, we profess our unabated loyalty. And to avoid all misconception, the Assembly declares that by the term 'Federal Government,' as here used, is not meant any particular administration, or the peculiar opinions of any political party, but that central administration, which being at any time appointed and inaugurated according to the terms prescribed in the Constitution of the United States, is the visible representation of our national existence." This was the lighted match which set off the powder magazine. Or to change the figure, it lifted the gate and let loose the pent-up floods of oratory. For several days the torrents of impassioned rhetoric poured forth with undiminished impetuosity. It was clearly seen and frankly confessed by those favoring and by those opposing the resolution that its adoption by the Assembly meant the rending of the Church. The practical result could be nothing short of the extrusion of all those Synods and Presbyteries embraced within the territory of the seceding states. With this result plainly in view, the resolution was put to the vote and adopted by 156 yeas to 66 nays. It was thus demonstrated that a large majority of the Assembly, knowing what it would cost the Church to testify its loyalty to the Federal government, were willing to pay the price. They believed, with an intense ardor of conviction, that the testimony was well worth the price.

Dr. Charles Hodge, the eminent Professor of Theology in Princeton Seminary, at once entered a protest which was signed by 57 members of the Assembly, including 14 of the 16 commissioners from the South. The protest reads: "We make this protest not because we do not acknowledge loyalty to one's country to be a moral and religious duty, according to the Word of God, which requires us to be subject to the powers that be, nor because we deny the right of the Assembly to enjoin that and all other like duties on the ministers and churches under its care, but because we deny the right of the Assembly to decide the political question to what government the allegiance of Presbyterians, as citizens, is due, and its right to make that decision a condition of membership in our Church." The view expressed in this protest commended itself to the Presbyteries throughout the South. As was said on the floor of the Assembly, had the commissioners from the seceded states testified their loyalty to the Federal Government, and pledged themselves to uphold the constitution, as the Spring resolution required them to do, they might very properly have been hung as traitors on their return home. During the summer and fall of 1861, 47 Presbyteries in the South met and by formal vote severed their organic connection with the Old School Presbyterian Church. Ten Synods at their meetings in the autumn of the same year ratified the action of their Presbyteries.

A BEAUTIFUL LIFE

This world is a beautiful place, but it is marred by the presence of sin. There is beauty in the mountains, with their shadows, changing with the progress of the sun, from its rising in the east to the time when it sinks out of sight in the west. There is beauty in the sea, reflecting as it does the sunlight, and also in its ceaseless motion. There is beauty in the human face and form, that have always won the homage of men in every age.

The highest type of beauty is the beauty of a consistent Christian life, exemplifying in daily life the Gospel preached and practiced by our Master. Before this beauty men everywhere bow in reverence, however much they may reject that Gospel.

Recently in this city there passed away a man who, not only professed the faith of Jesus Christ, but who came nearer living it than any man we have ever known. Holmes Blair, a native of Pennsylvania, a civil engineer by profession, an elder of the First Presbyterian Church of this city, after a life of single-hearted devotion to his Lord, passed to his reward on October 13, 1923.

He came to this city, not many years ago, a comparative stranger, yet in a short time he had become identified with every movement having for its object the betterment of the poor. He was connected with the Y. M. C. A., the Associated Charities, the Victor Mills work, the work in North Charlotte, and the County Layman's Association.

In a quiet way he visited the poor and the afflicted. For example, he took time from his business to take an afflicted boy to Gastonia for treatment. He helped a poor couple of aged people, and visited regularly a paralytic. The "down-and-out" found in him a friend, and when he died, there was sincere sorrow among the poor of the city.

We have lived beyond the time allotted to man, and we have come into touch with men and women in every rank of life, but we have never met any one whose heart responded as quick and as practically to the cry of the poor. At his funeral services many of them were present, and the tears they shed were the highest tribute a man could receive from his fellows.

"He was a good man, and full of the Holy Ghost and of faith."

But I have seen the first wonder of the world, the fairest sight earth holds up to the heavens. I have seen God lead men out of jail.

II.

Every soul must break out of a prison of things. We are dunged by possessions, smothered by a clutter of merchandise, the life flattened out by the cumulative instinct of selfishness. The prison house of selfishness is the common jail of mankind, caging them in the fit cell of personal advantage.

There recently died in the village of New Hartford, Conn., an elderly man of wealth who was born and lived all his life in the same room in which he died. The newspaper account of his death states that he had never slept in any other room and always had a great dislike making any changes and grew angry when a new wallpaper or a new carpet was suggested. However broad may have been his interest, his actual physical life was spent in a one-celled universe. That life in a single room is a fair picture of the walled-up life of millions with the cage of selfish absorption; their contented, chain-souls pace up and down as restlessly and uselessly as grizzly bears doing his endless marching behind the bars of his cage in the zoo. Frequently selfish lives are not paraded up and down one cell only, but before a tier of adjoining cells. Their interest bulges out to take in other members of their family, their relatives, and even their neighbors as far as three blocks in all directions.

Now, of course, it is perilously easy to inveigh against selfishness, and much exhortation against it is vague and confusing. We cannot live on earth as disembodied spirits. We must have things. It is one evidence of the sanity of Jesus that He always realized that "You heavenly Father knoweth ye have need of these things." More than that, even with the most unselfish of motives unless we approach life with a definite equipment, with some skill and some means of service, our contribution will be fragmentary and weak. We need a self-regarding which will equip and sustain us for worth-while service. But that does not mean the absorption of our whole time and strength and money in that task. Our home, our business, our personal interests ought to be a haven from which we start equipped for a cruise of service; not a drydock in which we are interned for the duration of life.

The great emphasis of Jesus as He sought to lead men out of jail into freedom was that life was more than meat. That great truth can be heard through His discourses like the constant roll of the sea.

In the First Epistle of Peter there is a statement of haunting suggestiveness, that Jesus "preached to the spirits in prison." Just what that means we do not know. The words lend themselves to a multitude of fancies. But this we do know, that Jesus preaches to "the spirits in prison" today and brings this great word of hope from a heart full of love: "If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed."

III.

Strong jails can be made out of very delicate and flimsy things—thoughts.

"Stone walls do not a prison make,
Nor iron bars a cage," but thoughts frequently do. A closed mind may be as terrible as solitary confinement in the county jail. Men make out of their cherished prejudices and cozy and finished dogmatisms a cell of extremely small size and dark in which their minds are fed on the restricted fare of bread and water.

In Edgar Allen Poe's haunting story of horror, "The Cask of Amontillado," he tells of the revenge taken by man against an enemy. This enemy was invited down into the wine cellar and told to step into a narrow circular-shaped closet and select a bottle of fine wine. When he stepped within, the opening was immediately sealed up and the man was left to perish there. Many a man unconsciously gives the same brutal treatment to his mind. We allow our minds to be hemmed in by prejudices which shut out the light and air, and the terrible revenge which nature always takes on the closed mind that the man dies. . . .

Jesus came to preach deliverance to the captives. Have you had life's great adventure—its romance of escape? Outside the barred gates—waiting—"The Master is coming and calleth for thee."—Halford E. Luccock, in N. Y. Advocate.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH OF CHRIST

By Rev. D. L. Jones

Text: Luke 1:35.

Scripture Lesson: Matt. 1:18-25; Luke 1:26-38.

I. The Virgin Birth of Christ, An Historical Fact

For years past there have been some who have denied that Jesus Christ was born of a virgin. The primary question about the virgin birth of Christ is the question, is it an historical fact? Was Christ actually born of a virgin? Did he have no human father?

That Jesus Christ was born of a virgin is plainly recorded in the opening chapters of Matthew and Luke.

1. Luke's Record. Luke tells us (Luke 1:26-38) that an angel was sent from God to Nazareth in Gallilee to a virgin named Mary who was betrothed to a man named Joseph. The angel foretold that Mary should bear a son who should be the Messiah. Mary inquired how that could be since she was not married. The angel answered, "The Holy Spirit shall come upon thee and the power of the most High shall overshadow thee wherefore also the holy thing which is begotten shall be called the Son of God."

2. Matthew's Record. Matthew tells us (Matt. 1:18-25) that Joseph and Mary were betrothed but not married and that Joseph discovered that Mary was with child and planned to put her away. An angel appeared to Joseph and told him that this child was conceived by the Holy Spirit.

3. The Validity of the Text of These Passages. There is really no question of text to cast the Virgin Birth into doubt. These gospels are not known in a form that omits these narratives, except the mutilated Gospel of Matthew used by the Ebionit heretics, and the version of Luke used by Marcion, the Gnostic heretic, who omitted the first and second chapters. There never was a time when either of these gospel records was without the narratives of the birth and infancy of Jesus. The testimony of the manuscripts and versions is uniform in giving the narrative of the Virgin Birth.

4. The Reliability of These Gospel Records.

(a) Date. These gospels originated in the first Christian century, being written probably about the year A. D. 80.

(b) Authorship. It was the constant tradition of the early church that the Apostle Matthew wrote the gospel bearing his name. That Luke, the companion of Paul, wrote the third gospel is commonly accepted.

(c) Accuracy. Luke tells us that he has "traced the course of all things accurately from the first" (Luke 1:3). His reliability as a historian is generally conceded. These gospels were accepted by the early church as authoritative.

(d) Two Independent Witnesses. One of the most marked features of the two accounts of the birth and infancy of Christ is their difference of standpoint. Luke's record is from the standpoint of Mary; Matthew's, from the standpoint of Joseph. It is probable that Joseph and Mary are the sources of two narratives. Certainly we have two independent witnesses to the Virgin Birth. Neither account is dependent on the other.

(e) These narratives bear in themselves the stamp of truth and honesty. They are sober and detailed narratives and are quite definite as to time and persons involved. These narratives are worthy to be received as true and were so received by the early church.

II. How does the Fact of the Virgin Birth Harmonize With the New Testament Teachings About the Person of Christ?

1. The New Testament Teachings About the Person of Christ.

(a) John's teaching: The Prologue to John's Gospel (1:1-14) represents Christ as the pre-existent and only begotten Son of God, and identifies Him with the person who "Was made flesh and dwelt among us,"—that is John teaches that Christ is both God and man.

(b) Paul's teaching: Paul frequently asserts his faith in both the humanity and the deity of Christ. Sometimes he teaches both in the same passage. Gal. 4:4, "God sent forth his Son born of a woman," Rom. 1:3-4, "Jesus Christ our Lord, who was born of the seed of David according to the flesh, and declared to be the Son of God with power." In Rom. 9:5, in speaking of the Jews, Paul says, "Of whom is Christ as concerning the flesh, who is over all, God blessed forever."

(c) The deity of Christ is common presupposition of all the New Testament books. As Warfield says, "The duty of Christ is in solution in every page of the New Testament. Every word that is spoken of Him, every word which He is reported to have spoken of Himself, is spoken on the assumption that He is God."

(d) The New Testament books no less plainly affirm the humanity of Christ. He is born of a woman. He gets hungry and tired. He is tempted. He weeps. He is crucified, dies and is buried.

Evidently then the person of Christ is supernatural,

Contributed

as He is both human and divine. Our Shorter Catechism reflects the New Testament teaching when it says, "The only redeemer of God's elect is the Lord Jesus Christ, who, being the eternal Son of God, became man, and so was, and continueth to be, God and man, in two distinct natures, and one person, forever."

(2) How does the Virgin Birth harmonize with these teachings? (a) "God sent forth his Son, born of a woman." (Gal. 4:4). That was the manner of the incarnation of the Son of God. That was how the Son of God became man. "The moment of the conception was the moment of the incarnation, and just there the unique miracle of the Virgin Birth entered, and a divine paternity was substituted for a human."

(1st.) Being the child of Mary, Jesus inherited a true humanity. He was really a man.

(2nd.) Being conceived by the Holy Spirit, His human nature was without taint of sin.

(3rd.) Being the incarnate Son of God, His deity is beyond question.

(b) When the Son of God entered into human life it was fitting that there should be something supernatural about the manner of it. Christ's supernatural birth was in keeping with His supernatural life, His sinlessness, His miracles, and His resurrection.

III. Why Does Anyone Deny the Fact of the Virgin Birth?

1. Not because it is not in the Gospel records, nor because there is any reason to doubt the text of these passages, but—

2. The denial of the fact of the Virgin Birth is a part of the effort to substitute a naturalistic explanation of the Bible and its records for the supernaturalistic explanation which the Bible gives. The question is this: Shall we believe in a divine intervention in behalf of men, an actual sending of the Son of God to earth, or shall we do away with the supernatural and explain Christ and the Bible as natural developments, remarkable items in a process of evolution?

3. What are the results of such an effort? Consider the case in hand.

(a) To deny the fact of the Virgin Birth is to deny the inspiration of the Scriptures. For if these plain statements of fact are not true then surely the record is not inspired of God.

(b) Today the fact of the Virgin Birth is to deny the reliability of the records of the life of Christ. If we cannot believe this part of the record, what part can we believe? If we begin by denying the Virgin Birth of Christ, we will probably continue by denying Christ's resurrection, and explaining away Christ's miracles. Where will we stop this process? The sinlessness of Christ is as supernatural as anything in the record. Will we throw that overboard and be left with a Christ who is only a sinful man? There is no logical stopping place between the denial of the Virgin Birth of Christ and the denial of the deity of Christ.

The Christ of the Gospels is supernatural, sinless, divine. This is the only Christ of whom we have any record—the Christ who was virgin-born, who worked miracles, who was tempted but did not sin, who rose from the dead, who is the only begotten Son of God. The naturalistic Christ, the Christ who was a mere man, is an invention, a figment of the imagination. He is not the Jesus of history. The gospel records do not tell us about such a Christ. We have no records of the life of such a person.

The supernatural is so interwoven into the texture of the Bible that to remove it would be to destroy the Bible. We have a record of supernatural events or else we have no record.

4. To explain the life of Christ on a naturalistic basis leaves us without any adequate explanation of the great picture of the Christ given in the Gospels. Who could have invented the parables and the Sermon on the Mount, if Christ was only a man? Who could have portrayed consistently the life of the God-man, if such a person did not exist? We must account for the Gospel record somehow. The supernatural explanation is the simplest and the easiest to believe.

5. If Christ was only a man, what explanation have we of the church, its great history and vitality? Whence the secret of its power? Why the loyalty of its millions if Christ was not what He claimed to be, the incarnate Son of God, the Saviour of men? Who persuaded men of the truth of the Gospel if it is not true? Who persuaded men of the power of Christ to save if it is not true?

IV. Conclusion

The historical person, the God-man Jesus Christ is the chief cornerstone of our religion. As Sir William Ramsay puts it, "That in the man, Jesus Christ, the Divine nature was incarnate is an essential and fundamental part of the Christian religion."

"I believe in God the Father Almighty, maker of heaven and earth, and in Jesus Christ, His only Son our Lord, who was conceived by the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin Mary."

QUIET TALKS ON THE SIMPLE ESSENTIALS

No. 17—Communication With the Dead

It is natural to want to communicate with our loved dead. We had communication with them, sweet and continuous.

Then rude death broke abruptly in. Communication was suddenly snapped. Can we have communication with them? Not "may we?"—is it permissible, proper. No, "can we?"—is it possible?

Death has run riot the last decade. The usual toll is never light. But war, violence, gaunt want, strain, disease, have increased the human toll terrifically. And so this question is being asked anew in all six continents, asked tensely by aching hearts. The distinctive literature has increased by leaps and bounds. All current literature has been invaded.

It is striking to note that the Cult of the Dead is the underpinning of almost every religion, civilized and savage. There are two exceptions, the Hebrew, and its child the Christian religion.

Elsewhere the haunting hand of the dead slavishly grip the living. In every nation and generation can be found the group of experts in this baneful Cult of the Dead.

But the question is: Can we have such communication? Three groups answer "yes." There are those who share the common belief in ghosts. Yet it seems strange if those who loved would not disturb and harrass.

There are the professionals, known by various names. These insist that you can have, and they will help you to have it, if you can command a sufficient fee. Their alleged spirit skill has a distinctly earthly value.

On a higher level comes research into psychical phenomena. And it should be said that there is a legitimate sphere of psychical research. Though it is rather outstanding that the various societies of this sort are largely in the hands of groups that manipulate investigations for certain desired conclusions, with some exceptions.

There is here a department of psychology that has not yet been adequately explored and charted in a scholarly way for the thoughtful student. There are most remarkable faculties in the human mental equipment that seem to have been largely lamed or obscured through the common hurt of sin.

And there are undoubted responses to the attempted communication. But, it should be keenly noted that there are five possible sources to these responses. Some say they do come from our loved dead.

They may come through the working of our subjective minds, that psychical part of our mental equipment so inadequately understood, so much misunderstood. They may come through deception by the experts, commonly called mediums in our day.

They may come—and this is most significant, and it is said very thoughtfully—they may come from evil spirits, demons, seeking to impersonate our loved dead, and deceive our sensitive hearts. Or, they may come as a blend of two or more of these.

I have been investigating this sort of thing rather thoroughly for years, simply for my own better footing. I have read all sorts of literature, and talked with those in many nations who have had singular experiences. Though I have never gone to a seance. You don't need to touch pitch to know that it will blacken your fingers. You don't need to commit adultery to know that there is such a thing, and that it is wrong. You needn't go on the devil's territory to find out about him.

And I have reached three clear settled convictions. I have yet to find, anywhere, after most searching investigation, any exception to these conclusions. The first is that the spirits of humans never do return to communicate with us.

The second is that haunted houses and apparitions, and the like, can be adequately explained otherwise. It is wholly a matter of fully gathering and rigidly sifting the actual facts. The third conclusion is that the responses that do come never come from our loved ones gone.

But now turn to the Book. It is the one authoritative word on the matter. And the striking thing to mark is that the whole practice of attempted communication with the dead is fully discussed and is sharply characterized as devil-craft.

An index to a long string of passages is Deuteronomy, eighteen, nine to fourteen. Here are eight terms used for the various methods of the experts. "Familiar spirits" is old English for "devils." Necromancer means one who consults the dead. The eight terms are interchangeable for the one thing—devil-craft. The whole thing is plainly stamped as dealing with evil spirits, and is sternly forbidden, with extreme penalties.

It is striking that most intensive investigation makes clear beyond any qualification the utter incompetence of these attempts to get into touch with our loved dead. The most that can be gotten is a cruel deception of aching hearts.

It is further significant that such attempts persisted in are attended with extreme danger mentally. He who tampers here opens a door that most likely he can't get shut. And through that door demons come in that threaten mental integrity as well as moral character.

But what shall we do? There is the lonely fireside, the unused chair, and the rain of grief ceaselessly hammering on the roof of your heart. Well, there is an answer.

Listen: There is One who will come and sit by your side, and start the music a-singing within, and hold a shelter over the roof of your heart.

Who? A very real Person, the other Jesus, the Holy Spirit. He knows every human experience. Recognize His presence. Yield to His control. Listen to His Voice in the Book. There will be comfort of the real sort, today.

And some day coming, He will bring you face to face again with your loved ones in the glorious Presence. He becomes your very real communication today.

No. 18—A Second Chance

A HOME MISSION AWAKENING

There is no one fact more manifest than that we are at the beginning of a great Home Mission revival.

Aware that the hour has struck for a great advance, all Protestant denominations are making larger provision for their Home Mission enterprises than ever before. Our own Assembly at Montreat expressed the judgment that Home Missions is the most urgent business of the Church in this critical hour of the world's need.

Not only is America's security dependent upon a Home Mission advance, but without an aggressive and sustained campaign of Evangelism and Church extension the Church cannot adequately meet its responsibility for the evangelization of the heathen world.

Magnitude of the Work

The Assembly's Committee supports in whole or in part 634 workers—ministers, evangelists, teachers, Bible women and community workers, who serve 828 churches, schools and missions, in the mountains among the Indians, the immigrants, and on the plains. This army of splendid men and women represents the advance line of the Southern Presbyterian Church on the margins and frontiers of the Nation's life, and is the chief factor in our denominational growth.

Imperative Needs

(1) Better Support: The salary of the Home Missionary is pitifully small and inadequate. It is not sufficient for bare necessities. According to Government reports the cost of living has increased 60 per cent since 1914, but the average salary of the Home Missionary has not been increased more than 25 per cent. Salaries that were inadequate in normal times are doubly inadequate now.

There is no class of workers serving the Church in any field upon whom the burden of living bears more heavily, and who find life so difficult to sustain.

The salary of the Home Missionary cannot be increased to a living basis unless we reduce the numbers of our workers or there is an increase in the committee's income.

(2) Better Buildings: Many of our Home Missionaries are living in places that cannot be called homes. They are trying to do their work in buildings wholly inadequate and unsuited for the needs. One of the saddest stories of the great war was of the Russian army being sent without weapons against the Germans who were equipped with all the modern implements of destruction. It is no less a tragedy for the Church to send brave men and women against the forces of sin and Satan and not give them the proper support and equipment for their task.

New Organizations

The church that builds most grows most. To enlarge the church it to enlarge its resources. There were never so many challenging opportunities for new churches. These opportunities are not peculiar to any Synod or section. It is the same in all the growing centers of the South and Southwest. The only question is, shall we claim these opportunities for our church and the Kingdom of Christ?

But the Church should remember, as it faces these opportunities, that we can no longer build a shack on a side street and expect a Home Mission enterprise to prosper when other denominations in the same community are providing modern plants on the main thoroughfares.

Assembly's Apportionment

Home Missions was assigned $760,000 in the Assembly's Benevolent Budget this year. During the first six months there was a gain of $7,847 from Progressive Program sources over the same period last year. This was $240,112 less than the amount due on this date.

If the full apportionment for Assembly's Home Missions is received, the Committee will be enabled to make better provision for the workers, and provide some of the sorely needed buildings.

No preferential treatment is asked for this cause, only loyalty to the budget approved by the Assembly.

This is 16 Percent of the Benevolent Budget

THE PROTESTANT CRISIS IN EUROPE

By S. L. Morris, D.D.

The Protestant Churches of Continental Europe are passing through the most serious crisis in their history and are fighting hard for their very existence. In an especial sense, this is true of the Reformed (Presbyterian) Churches. As an illustration, the Hungarian Reformed Church was until recently the largest Presbyterian denomination in Europe, but has been dismembered by the readjustments of boundary lines. Nearly a million of its constituency have been transferred to Rumania, where its ministry is subjected to every kind of persecution and indignity, compelled to preach under surveillance, its churches stripped in some cases of their property, forbidden to exercise their Christian liberties and its membership enduring persecution as bitter as that of the Waldenses and Huguenots of past ages. Another section has been transferred to Czecho-Slovakia, where they have no facilities for securing an adequate ministry. Part of its membership has been assigned to Jugo-Slavia, where it is a band of 60,000 without organization and without money, described by its representatives at the Zurich conference as "a scattered family of Presbyterians trying to hold together among millions of Roman Catholics." The remnant left in Hungary is financially demoralized but heroically struggling to maintain the faith of their fathers.

This is a specimen of conditions in Central Europe which called together representatives of 38 Presbyterian denominations from all over the world in the Zurich conference to devise ways and means for the relief of their suffering brethren. It was most heartrending to listen to tales of distress from dozens of countries detailing their wretched conditions and their heroic struggles against superhuman odds. This was, however, counterbalanced by accounts of the great movement in Czecho-Slovakia, where they have left the Catholic Church by the thousands and are joining the Reformed Church in such numbers that it cannot provide houses of worship to accommodate the growing congregations.

The Zurich conference sent out the following address to the whole Presbyterian world, quoted here only in part: "The World Alliance of Reformed Churches holding the Presbyterian system, assembled at its second Continental conference at Zurich, July 21-28, 1923, consisting of representatives of 38 churches, send a greeting to all the Reformed and Presbyterians.

To the Reformed Churches of Europe it expresses its pleasure in learning of the courage and faithfulness with which they—some of them at great cost of suffering and sacrifice—have endeavored to maintain the faith once delivered to the saints. Those churches that are still suffering it assures of its fraternal sympathy and affectionate prayers. It trusts that the great Head of the Church may give them all needed guidance and grace and that soon they will return to their former strength and prosperity, purified by suffering and made fitter for the Master's service.

To the Reformed and Presbyterian Churches of Europe and America, which have not suffered so severely by the war and which have nobly striven to assist the distressed churches, it desires to express its great appreciation of their generous sympathy and liberal gifts. We know that already they have had, through the blessing of Almighty God, an enrichment of heart. It trusts that they may continue to abound and even increase in sympathy and in gifts, both of which are still sorely needed, especially in Central and Eastern Europe.

To all Reformed and Presbyterian Churches in all parts of the world, it sends the message of the urgent importance of prayer in view of the confused condition of a bewildered world. In the inspiring brotherhood of the conference, it experienced the reality and blessedness of the doctrine of the 'communion of saints.' Let prayers from many lands and in many languages rise to the throne of grace, in one spirit and with one accord, to an all-powerful and loving God in assurance of a Pentecostal blessing."

The official statement was made at Zurich that the Southern Presbyterian Church was leading all others in this blessed relief work. Its representative never felt prouder of his noble Church. He made a visit to Compeigne, France, and inspected the magnificent new building erected by its generosity for the congregation whose house of worship was destroyed during the war. He was urged again and again to express the profound thanks of the people for this generous assistance.

The last General Assembly called upon its churches to contribute $80,000 for these suffering Presbyterian churches in Europe. Only about $10,000 have been received and chiefly from the smaller congregations. Surely our larger churches will not disappoint the expectation of their brethren who are passing through the fiery furnace. Is there anywhere, greater need, or any appeal more worthy or calculated to accomplish more for the Kingdom of Christ? Our people have responded nobly to famines in China and to the earthquake in Japan but at best this is to supply temporal needs for those who perhaps will still remain and die heathen. Paul recommends benefactions "especially unto the household of faith." The salaries of some of our brethren in Europe range from $4.80 to $30.00. Shall we share with them God's bountiful gifts to us in this favored land? Opportunities in Czecho-Slovakia are unmatched anywhere in the world for Presbyterianism. Shall we take advantage of this open door to enter into this fruitful field challenging faith and effort? Shall our Church continue to lead the hosts of God's people in this blessed work? If pastors and sessions have not given their people an opportunity, will they not come to the relief of their suffering brethren in a noble response?

CONCERNING THE INCORPORATION OF CHURCHES AND CHURCH COURTS

There seems to be some misunderstanding in regard to the action of the last General Assembly, in reference to the incorporation of churches and church courts. This misunderstanding is due to an error in and an omission from the minutes of the Assembly. Perhaps a brief statement of the facts in the case will help to clarify matters.

The Assembly of 1921 took the following action: "Resolved, 1. That an ad-interim committee be appointed, consisting of Judge W. H. Baker, of Jacksonville, Fla.; Mr. Helm Bruce, of Louisville, Ky.; Mr. George Bryan, of Richmond, Va., to consider the whole question of the legal title of individual congregations to its church property, the rights of Presbyteries through their trustees to hold property of churches which have been dissolved; and the power of trustees in all our church courts, suggesting any amendment to our Book of Church Order which may be needed to cover the matter referred to above.

2. That they prepare a standard set of by-laws for the government of church corporations in the exercise of their corporate functions, especially defining the duties and powers of trustees, in accordance with the laws of each state, and make a report to the next General Assembly." See Minutes 1921 Assembly, p. 59.

All three members of the above committee are Presbyterian elders and able and distinguished lawyers.

This committee made a very thoughtful and thoroughgoing report to the Assembly of 1922. This report is signed by W. H. Baker and George Bryan, and will be found on pages 193-196 of the Minutes of the 1922 Assembly. The Assembly referred this report to its standing committee on judicial business, of which Dr. T. W. Sloan was chairman. The committee on judicial business made the following recommendation which was adopted by the Assembly: "We recommend that the report of the ad-interim committee on judicial powers of trustees be referred to the ad-interim committee on the revision of the Book of Church Order, with the request that they carefully consider the whole matter and report their recommendations to the next Assembly." See Minutes of 1922 Assembly, page 55.

The ad-interim committee on the revision of the Book of Church Order consisted of Drs. W. L. Lingle, C. R. Hemphill, R. C. Reed, Arthur G. Jones, I. S. McElroy, and George H. Gilmer. The full report of this committee to the General Assembly of 1923 will be found on pages 113-136 of the Minutes of the Assembly of 1923. The part of the report dealing with the incorporation of churches and church courts will be found on pages 133-135 of Minutes of Assembly of 1923. Note well that the part of the report referring to the incorporation of churches and church courts has nothing to do with the revision of the Book of Church Order. It was a separate matter which had been referred to the committee on revision. The committee on revision never thought of it for a moment as a matter that ought to go into our Book of Church Order, and become a part of our constitutional law. The committee on revision reported as follows to the Assembly of 1923: "We have given the report (of Messrs. Baker and Bryan) our most serious consideration. It will be observed that we have already dealt with the seventh item of the report by recommending that a section be added to the Book of Church Order on the trustees. We now recommend that the following action be taken with reference to the remainder of the report:

"I. The General Assembly approves the first six recommendations of the report of Messrs. Baker and Bryan, as recorded on pages 193-196 of the Minutes of the Assembly of 1922, and commends them to the favorable consideration of church courts and congregations." (Following this the six recommendations are printed in full. Note they are not referred to the Presbyteries for action that they may become a part of church law. The General Assembly is simply saying to congregations and church courts that they will find some valuable suggestions here on the subject of incorporating congregations and church courts).

"II. The General Assembly advises each Synod to appoint a judicious committee to prepare a form of charter for the use of such Presbyteries and congregations as may choose to become corporate bodies, said charter to be in harmony with the laws of the state and of the Presbyterian Church of the United States, and to be reported to the Synod for its approval, and to become effective only when it has been adopted by a majority vote of the members of the congregation or Presbytery seeking to be incorporated, at a meeting regularly called. Before action is taken, notice of at least 30 days should be given to a congregation that a motion will be made looking towards incorporation."

All of this will be found on pages 133-135 of the Minutes of the 1923 Assembly. These two recommendations made by the committee on revision were approved by the Assembly but they were not sent down to the Presbyteries to be acted upon as proposed amendments to the Book of Church Order. They are not material for the Book of Church Order, and they are not in form for amendments to the book.

But just here the tangle comes in. On page 62 of the Assembly's Minutes (1923), where we have the record of the action of the Assembly on this partial report of the revision committee, we find this language: "That portion of the report relating to corporations was adopted and sent down to the Presbyteries for their advice and consent." That is where the error comes in. It was the most natural thing in the world for the clerks to suppose that the report of the revision committee would be sent down to the Presbyteries for their advice and consent, but that is not the language or the idea of the report itself and was not the language of the one who moved the adoption of the report. When the minutes were read nobody seems to have caught this error, and there it stands in the printed minutes.

Members of the Assembly may recall the circumstances under which the report was made. On the last day of the Assembly, when the chairman of the revision committee, who had been trying for days to get his report before the Assembly, saw that it would be impossible to get the full report before the Assembly, he stated to the Assembly that the latter part of the report had nothing to do with revision and would require only Assembly action, and asked that the Assembly would consider that part of the report and dispose of it so that the revision committee would have before it in the future only matters pertaining to the revision of the Book of Church Order. The Assembly granted the request of the chairman and adopted the part of the report relating to the incorporation of churches and church courts.

To show that this is the understanding which the entire revision committee has of the action of the Assembly, I will quote some paragraphs from the minutes of the revision committee in session at Montreat, July 30, 1923:

"The chairman was directed to communicate with the stated clerk of the Assembly, and call his attention to certain errors in the printed minutes of the Assembly, in connection with the report of this committee, made to the last Assembly.

1. The minutes of the Assembly state (p. 62) "that portion of the report relating to corporations was adopted and sent down to the Presbyteries for their advice and consent."

The committee, in presenting this part of its report to the Assembly, distinctly stated that this part of the report has nothing to do with the Book of Church Order, and was not any part of the amendments proposed, but was another matter which had been referred to the committee by a previous Assembly, and needed only Assembly action. The members of the committee present at the Assembly distinctly remember that this part of the report was simply adopted and was not sent down to the Presbyteries at all. The very nature of the matter involved indicates clearly that it has no reference to the Book of Church Order, and was not to be a part of our constitution, and therefore needed only Assembly action, and was never meant to be referred to the Presbyteries.

2. That the Assembly's Minutes omits section II of that part of the committee's report which related to the incorporation of churches and church courts, and which will be found on page 53 of the Assembly's Blue Book (or on page 135 of the Assembly's Minutes, 1923). The Assembly, as the minutes show, adopted all that part of the committee's report which relates to the incorporation of churches and church courts. The printer simply failed to print section II of that part of the report."

Section II of the committee's report should have been printed near the top of page 64 of the Assembly's Minutes, 1923, but it evidently dropped out in the printing. I have quoted it in full in an earlier part of this article. It is printed on page 135 in the Appendix of the Minutes of the Assembly.

If any one who is perplexed or disturbed by the action of the Assembly will study that action in its historical setting, along the lines indicated above, he will discover that the action is only advisory and suggestive, and was never intended to be any part of our church law.

Chairman of Com. on Revision of Bk. of Ch. Order.

JEWISH MISSIONS

By Rev. Paul L. Berman, our Missionary to the Jews in Baltimore

The Jew has had his day, and is played out; nothing more to expect from him. Jewish Missions are a failure. In these two sentences may be summed up all the adverse criticism levelled again Jewish Missions; and both are not only wrong, but absurd. If the Jew "has had his day, and is played out," then why has he been allowed to remain in a most miraculous manner, a separate people, scattered everywhere, yet not absorbed among other nations.

When nations are played out they become extinct. When a watch is played out it stops. The Jews show a most remarkable vitality; they are distinguished in every profession, they take a prominent part in politics, finance, literature and music. Is it not then absurd, in the face of the very conviction of our eyes, to say the Jews are "played out."

Some, however, apply this phrase to religion only, and wish to imply that God gave the offer of salvation to the Jew first, but since they rejected it, they have now lost all chance. But is there any passage of scripture to prove this? How many statements about the Jews are made with the greatest assurance, but which are absolutely wrong? The Jews have been condemned without a hearing by spurious Christianity in the dark ages of the Church; and although we have reformed many of our doctrines and church practices, and have brought them into line with primitive and apostolic Christianity, we still retain to a very great extent the prejudices of the Middle Ages.

To take one illustration only: Note the misleading titles which are placed at the head of each chapter of the Bible, more particularly in the Prophets. In one chapter the Jews are denounced for their sins, and threatened with severe punishments. The titles rightly attribute this chapter to the Jews. In another chapter God is promising great blessing to the same people, to the same place. The expressions, "Judah and Israel," "Zion and Jerusalem," occur in both cases. But our titles refer these blessings, not to the Jew, but to "the Church." Now, can an interpretation be right which applies "Judah and Jerusalem" to the Jews in one place, and to "the Church" in another? Surely if these expressions apply to the Church when blessings are mentioned, they should apply to the Church in every case. But this would reduce the exposition of scripture to an absurdity. I prefer to adopt the most obvious and natural course—every passage containing the names of "Zion," "Daughters of Zion," "Judah," "Jerusalem," applies to the Jews, whether the subject of the prophecy refers to blessings or curses.

When we are clear on this point, and turn to the sacred scriptures, we find that God says in Jer. 31:11, "Though I make a full end of all the nations of the earth, yet will I not make a full end of thee." Paul predicted a time when "all Israel should be saved," and Zechariah says, "They shall look on Him, whom they have pierced, and mourn." Hath God cast away His people? "God forbid," says Paul. And we have the distinct command of our Lord to "begin at Jerusalem" (Luke 24:47). Like other passages, it has been wrested from its true meaning. If we are in doubt as to its true meaning, we have but to turn to the men who were likely to be the best judges, namely, the apostles.

In the Acts of the Apostles we find that they always went to "the Jew first" in every city they came to, showing by this very act how they understood our Lord's command. Our Lord would surely not have given so direct a command nor would the apostles have obeyed it so faithfully, had they believed that the Jews were "played out."

The annals also of Jewish Missions are clear on this point. Jewish Missions are not very popular, and do not appeal to a very large body of Christians; the support received therefore is small. Yet God has blessed the work beyond all expectations, and in any comparison between Jewish missionary enterprise and work in heathen lands, Jewish Missions certainly take the first place so far as results go. Many may be prepared to question this. The following facts I would venture to commend to our readers:

1. There are today about 700 ministers of all denominations who are descendants of Abraham.

2. The Jews have given to the Episcopal Church three bishops.

3. The Free Church of Scotland through its missionary in Budapest baptized over 200 Jews last year.

4. Twenty chairs of the great universities in England and America and other countries are occupied by Christian Jews.

5. They have produced many distinguished authors and theologians like Edersheim, Saphir and Neander; musicians like Felix Mendelssohn; financiers like Sir Moses Salvador; lawyers like Lord Herschel.

6. They have supplied the ranks of nearly every mission society with some of their most faithful and devoted workers.

7. They gave the Chinese a translation of the Old Testament in the Mandarin dialect, and for the Mongolians one who was able to translate and revise parts of God's Word. They gave to the Afghans their translation of the Bible.

8. And the number of Jews converted to Christianity during the 19th century, on the authority of Professor de la Roi, is 240,000.

Can any mission give such a record? These facts must not be misunderstood. We are not attempting to decry other missions and other societies. These facts must be plainly stated because Jewish Missions have been decried; it is therefore necessary to draw a comparative statement, and show how unfounded the attacks are which are so thoughtlessly made against Jewish Missions.

The writer hopes that every reader of this article will become a warm friend and supporter of Jewish Missions. The Executive Committee of Home Missions of the Presbyterian Church, U. S., has a mission to the Jews in Baltimore, Md., with a staff of five workers, and doing a great work for the ingathering of Israel.

Jesus Christ took not on Him the nature of angels, but the seed of Abraham. Christ was a Jew. Do you believe this? Then we claim your love and sympathy on behalf of our Lord's own brethren.

"Go, tell my brethren."

Should the Lord lead you to have fellowship with us in the support of this work, send your contribution to A. N. Sharpe, Hurt Building, Atlanta, Ga., and mark your check for Jewish work.

NEEDS OF HWAIANFU STATION

By Jas. N. Montgomery

In view of the splendid effort being made by our Church to better equip the work of our Church in the home and foreign mission fields, I want to bring before the Church, some very urgent equipment needs, which have just come fully explained in a letter from my colleague in China. Having recently returned from China to this country on furlough, I can earnestly second the enclosed description of needs.

Up to the present time the Hwaiianfu station has been working in very cramped quarters. God has greatly blessed the work and now as our chapels, school and dispensary are so overcrowded, we feel that the time has come for better housing. Think of receiving sick men in the dispensary under a mat shed, which leaks when it rains and is bitter cold in winter. Since a new family is expected to join the station in the Fall or at a very early date, a new missionary residence is greatly desired. Either families will have to double up in houses built for one family or someone will have to live with little children perhaps, in unsanitary Chinese houses.

One of the missionary leaders of our Church, after seeing the work of this station said that it offered the best opportunity for expansion of any work he had seen. The work demands that we be so equipped, that it can be properly developed.

We hope that all who may see that letter, with the enclosed statement may be led to pray that God may speedily supply so many of our needs as may seem best to Him. Of course, our greatest needs are not material but the outpouring of God's Spirit.

The only condition which the Executive Committee wisely requires in making contributions to the above described work is that it shall be money over and above what is now being given to the foreign work and shall not interfere with present contributions. Gifts for this purpose will be sent immediately out to the field and be used, going through our Treasurer in Nashville.

Inquiries in regard to further details about the equipment needs of the Hwaiianfu station, can be made to J. N. Montgomery, 827 South 30th St., Birmingham, Ala.

These needs have been approved by the station, the Mission and the Executive Committee of Foreign Missions.

Woman's Auxiliary

Conducted by Mrs. J. M. McIver, Gulf, N. C.

The Woman's Synodical Auxiliary of South Carolina held its 10th annual meeting in the First Presbyterian Church of Rock Hill, October 8, 9, 10, the theme being "Personal Evangelism."

The first session was held on the evening of the 8th in the church auditorium, and was entirely inspirational. Dr. Melton Clark, of Columbia, chairman of Synod's Committee on Woman's Work was the speaker of the evening. Dr. F. W. Gregg, of the First Church and Dr. Martin, of the Oakland Avenue Church, presiding.

The choirs of the two churches furnished fine musical programs for the evening sessions.

The business sessions were held in the splendid new Sunday School building and the Auxiliary members were made entirely comfortable.

The first business session was held on Tuesday morning with Mrs. Andrew Bramlett, of Columbia, president of the Synodical Auxiliary, in the chair. The representations was unusually good.

The Lord's supper was observed, followed by a memorial to Mrs. F. Louise Mayes, led by Mrs. Leslie Stribling, after which the regular business was taken up. The reports of committees were heard followed by those of the recording secretary, Mrs. Leslie Stribling; treasurer, Mrs. A. B. Morse; and president, Mrs. Andrew Bramlett.

In the afternoon Mrs. Fraser James, of Spartanburg, discussed "The Neighborhood Bible Class, An Evangelizing Agency," which was followed by the reports of the secretaries of causes.

The Presbyterian presidents asked that they be allowed to file their reports with the secretary and retire for private discussion of their problems. This was granted. At the close of the session all committees were requested to meet.

The speaker for the evening session was Dr. Henry H. Sweets, Executive Secretary of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief. His theme was "Overlooked Obligations."

The Wednesday morning session was devoted to information and inspiration upon the following subjects: Thornwell Orphanage, The F. Louise Mayes Memorial Cottage, The Auxiliary Members a Soul Winner, Work Among Colored People, Group Conferences, The Summer Conferences, Auxiliary Publicity.

The Bible Hour was devoted to the theme: Personal Evangelism, and was conducted by the Secretary of Spiritual Growth, Mrs. A. L. Blake, of Rock Hill.

The evening session was devoted to business and the election and installation of new officers.

The lunch hour was at once social and business, the business being to solve the problem of eating all the good things provided by the luncheon committee in their spacious church dining room. The liberal time allowed enabled the women to become better acquainted with each other, which in itself is information and inspiration.

The invitation to hold the 1924 session in the Second Presbyterian Church of Charleston was accepted.

The following officers were elected: President, Mrs. Andrew Bramlett, Columbia; vice-president, Mrs. Leslie Stribling, Seneca; recording secretary, Mrs. Parker E. Connor, Edisto Island; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Wyatt Taylor, Columbia; treasurer, Mrs. A. B. Morse, Abbeville; secretary of Foreign Missions, Mrs. James S. White, Rock Hill; Assembly's Home Missions, Mrs. S. D. Fraser, Oswego; secretary local Home Missions, Mrs. M. S. McKinnon, Hartsville; secretary C. E. and M. R., Mrs. J. W. Allen, Spartanburg; secretary Y. P. and S. S., Mrs. T. C. Peden, Westminster; secretary Spiritual Growth, Mrs. S. C. Hodges, Greenwood; secretary of literature, Miss Ada Saunders, York; historian, Miss Margaret Gist, York. E. A. D.

Schedule of Mecklenburg Presbyterian Conferences—The District Conferences of Mecklenburg Presbyterian will be held from 11 o'clock to 4:00 o'clock on the following dates in the churches named below: District, Church, Date and Chairman, respectively:

Richmond; Rockingham; November 6th; Mrs. Marshall French.

Anson; Wadesboro; November 7th; Mrs. J. M. Boyce.

Union; Monroe; November 3rd; Mrs. R. H. Hargett.

Montgomery; Troy; November 13th; Mrs. J. W. Stork.

Stanley; Albemarle; November 14th; Mrs. W. E. Milton.

All Officers, Secretaries of Causes, Circle Leaders and as many other members as possible are urged to attend one of these conferences, preferably the one in their own county. If, however, it is more convenient to attend one held in another county, we hope that they will do so. Mrs. J. B. Spillman, President Mecklenburg Presbyterian.

Chester County Institute—Blackstock—By invitation the three Auxiliaries, that of Blackstock, Concord and Cornwell, the third Institute of Bethel Presbyterian took place at Blackstock on the 6th instant. The spic and span church looked so inviting in its fall coat of white paint and cream calomine, it being further made more attractive with a profusion of cut flowers and pot plants.

Mrs. A. M. Aiken, of Chester, being the Chester

County Visitor, was present to preside. There were present also five Presbyterian officers, a very satisfactory number of delegates and many invited guests and visitors. The acceptable and esteemed pastor of the group of churches, Mr. Littlejohn, opened the exercises with appropriate devotionals, but immediately after was noticed to be taking long strides towards the open door.

Mrs. Aiken in a few timely remarks called the meeting to order and feelingly alluded to her distinguished brother-in-law, Dr. Neville, who in his young pastoral days had charge of these churches. The commodious and substantial two-story manse still bears silent testimony to his well-known executive ability.

Miss Annie Smith, president of the Blackstock Auxiliary, in a most cordial and ornate little speech, welcomed us, responded to by Mrs. John Hamilton, of Chester, in her own usual happy expressive way. Throughout, the splendid program was interspersed with appropriate music rendered by Mesdames Aiken and Williams, whose beautiful blending voices so often charm Chester audiences. A recent sweet-girl-graduate of Chicora, Miss Eliza Walker, of Chester, gave the opening solo in her own mellow, well-trained voice, Miss Lottie Klutz, also of Chester, presiding at the organ.

Our official Presbyterian president, Mrs. Gillespie, of York, was the first on the program to speak on the Standard of Excellence. In a most lucid way she explained its cardinal rules with their affixed stars in their various hues and shades, that taken singly seem easy, but the goal of the whole to taken collectively seems as difficult of attainment as the keeping perfectly of the Ten Commandments. But in a nice, persuasive way she urged us on to further strivings, assuring us of the reward of service in which we may some sweet day be made exceedingly glad in the meriting of the much-coveted shining golden star.

Miss Lois Young, a returned missionary from China, gave us an interesting talk on her work in the school there. A few of the nerve-racking things she told us of were the scarcity of water and its consequent many draw-backs, the extreme untidiness of the girls, and the slow gradual unbinding of the feet and straightening of the toes, taking in all six months to accomplish. She exhibited samples of the handiwork in embroidery and lace that is sent to this country to Mrs. Vance to be sold for the benefit of their education that they are so eager to acquire.

Mrs. Hal Dick, of Columbia, having been especially invited to instruct us in her splendid method of Bible study, was the next speaker. We sincerely regret that in this short report we can't give even the outline, which was fine and listened to with the closest attention. Interesting indeed was her story of the small beginnings of the Interdenominational Bible Class of Columbia, and how it has developed into its present large proportions. She told us also of some of the marvelous answers to prayer, lamenting the fact of how little we appropriate God's wonderful promises and what blessings we miss thereby. With the first chapter of Acts she demonstrated Miss Saxe's method of Bible study.

To some who had risen at the early hour of four in the morning to be present at the meeting, the announcement for dinner was most welcome. Weather conditions being ideal, it was served in a lovely grove in front of the manse. Tables are usually spread, but these were piled with all the good things of life. The aroma of that steaming hot coffee, supplemented with the richest of Jersey cream, still lingers with us, while the piled tables shall ever be a mouth-watering memory picture of abundance.

After recess, Mrs. Vance Davidson, of Chester, was on the program to tell of the "Model Auxiliary." This theme was made especially interesting to the delegates of some of the country churches who still cling to the old way, fearing that the new plan can't be practical in such far scattered congregations, but believe in it for town churches. In her own convincing, pretty way she explained how the annual changing of circles develops leaders, forms and cements new friendships, love and helpfulness for each other are engendered until they become as one big family "like to that above."

It was a most happy selection when Miss Janie Stringfellow, of Chester, also was put on the program to tell us of the Thornwell Baby Cottage, for who is more interested than she and who has ever given more prayerful thought to the needs of the orphans? So enthused is she now over the appealing subject of the Baby Cottage that it was necessary to put a time limit on her, much to our regret as well as to her own, and even with a gracious extension of time she took her seat feeling that the half had not been told.

The Colored People's Conference was Mrs. M. S. Lewis, of Chester's, subject. It being so full and comprehensive, we recommend that it be printed in leaflet form and broadcasted. It is a subject too that is very dear to the big, loving heart of Mrs. Winsborough. In the course of her talk it was pleasing to learn of Mrs. Lewis that at the close of the Civil War there were as many as one million colored people members of churches in the Southern States.

Mrs. May Dickens and Mrs. N. A. Peay, delegates at large sent from the Chester Church to the Workers' Conference at Clinton, gave fine reports, declaring that Montreat is not the only place on the map to go for a feast of inspiration. They also recommended it as an ideal, restful, quiet resort for a short vacation, and board excellent.

The last number on the program was Young People's Work, by Mrs. Frank Wardlaw, of Bethel Church, York County. As delegates she brought several children with her to tell of some of the good work they are engaged in and how it is progressing. Two of these delegates were once lambs of Purity Church, the Crawfords, and pleasantly remembered. Mrs. Wardlaw urged that children be early taught to save and to give, and also that the principles of tithing be included. At this point she emphasized her talk by asking our accommodating singers to softly and expressively sing "I Gave My Life for Thee," which was indeed most impressive.

Mrs. Robert Abell, of Chester, chairman of Resolutions and Recommendations, recommended:

First. That a lot of the Chinese fancy goods be ordered through Mrs. Vance to be sold in behalf of the Chinese girls for the benefit of their education.

Second. That in lieu of the benefit of Bible study that classes be organized wherever possible, and Third. That the Standard of Excellence be often read in the Auxiliaries, it being yet a meaningless chart to many.

After sentence prayers, joined in by many, invoking the Divine blessing on all that was said and done in His Name, the meeting adjourned.

The thanks of the Institute and of all present are due Mrs. Aiken, its Visitor, for the very educational and entertaining program she prepared and for the able and pleasing manner that she conducted it, many characterizing it as being one of the most spiritual and inspiring meetings they ever attended.

Mrs. Alexa Macaulay,
Publicity Chairman.

To the Presidents and Secretaries of Literature—Dear Friends: Did you, as a child, ever play that fascinating game "Just Suppose?" Our childish imaginations constructed a wonderful "Just Suppose" world in which everything was quite to our liking. No wonder we enjoyed the game! As we are "children of a larger growth," let's engage right now in a game of grown up "Just Suppose" about our Church. What say you?

"Just Suppose" our members were well informed about the government of the Presbyterian Church, the agencies through which it functions to accomplish its great work; that they were familiar with the fields, at home and abroad, in which our missionaries are laboring to discharge our foreign responsibility. Would not there be a sudden and inspiring increase in the receipts of our Executive Committees?

"Just Suppose" our young people had always at hand the very best helps for the program of the Christian Endeavor Society; that our Sunday School teachers knew just where to go for a fine exposition of the lesson; that the children could always turn to a delightful story for Sunday afternoon reading. Would not the problem of our young people become a much less serious one?

"Just Suppose" that instead of the Sunday papers, we had fine sermons to read, beautiful poems to enjoy, expositions of God's Word to ponder over and spiritual truths to appropriate to our own lives! Would not the consistent Christian life be easier?

"Just Suppose" all the women of the Church were interested in making the Auxiliary more effective in its work; that they knew all about the Home and Foreign Mission text-books and Mission Study seasons; that they were interested in better programs and methods in the Auxiliary. Would not your own work count for far more as President and Secretary of Literature?

Suppose! oh "Just Suppose" that all our church members were growing in spiritual strength every week; that we were really understanding and practicing in our lives God's plan of stewardship, more fully utilizing the power of prayer, more constantly advancing in the study of God's Word—what might not such a church accomplish in the advancement of God's Kingdom?

Are such suppositions merely a child's game? Is such a goal only an idle dream? It need not and should not be. You can make the dream a reality!

How? By placing a Church paper in every home in your congregation.

Our Church papers furnish all the information, inspiration and helps necessary for reaching such a goal. No group, from the youngest to the oldest, is forgotten, but its pages provide the very best for all. These wonderful resources are placed weekly at the disposal of every subscriber. Can you do a better thing for your Auxiliary, for your Church, for the advancement of the Kingdom, than to increase the number of homes receiving a Church paper?

November 4-11 is the week set aside by the Assembly for the Annual Church Paper Canvass. The President and the Secretary of Literature are responsible for conducting this canvass. Will you read carefully the literature and begin at once to arrange for the canvass in your own church? You will note that for each subscriber a premium of one dollar may be added to your Auxiliary budget.

We earnestly request the President and Secretary of Literature to confer together and formulate plans for the canvass. Set to work at once to place a Church paper in every home in your congregation. You can if you will.

Faithfully yours,
H. P. Winsborough.

The Woman's Auxiliary of the Belmont, N. C., Presbyterian Church held its regular meeting Tuesday, October 9th at 3:30 o'clock. This was also Rally Day, and after the usual business session a special program was carried out. The program consisted of special music, and a most interesting address by Miss Mattie Tate, who has spent 30 years on the mission field. Korea was the topic for the month, so we were specially fortunate to have Miss Tate with us. She gave most instructive information.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S DEPARTMENT

W. ARNETT GAMBLE, JR., Editor

ADDRESS ALL COMMUNICATIONS TO THE DEPARTMENT EDITOR, COLUMBIA SEMINARY, COLUMBIA, S. C.

EDITOR'S LOOKOUT

We are running this week a report that came to us late, of the Young People's Conference, in the Synod of Tennessee. The program carried out at this conference is one of the most comprehensive that we have seen, and that might well be taken as a model for other like meetings.

Each day was opened with a devotional hour. The work of the Church as a whole was covered by classes in Home Missions and in Presbyterian History and Doctrine. The work of the Sunday School was taken care of by classes in Sunday School Methods and Teacher Training. The work of the young peoples societies was taught through a class in Expert Endeavor. We can well imagine that the two hundred and twenty-five delegates were much better fitted on their return home, to be better Presbyterians and better workers.

The leaders of our Church's Progressive Program are stressing the promotion of Home Missions for November. In the Sunday Schools a special Children's Day for Assembly's Home Missions is being planned. This is to include an educational program and a special offering for Assembly's Home Missions. A special missionary program has been prepared for the Sunday Schools for November 18th, called "Citizens of Tomorrow." Another missionary program of general interest has also been prepared, "Heirs of the Kingdom," for use during Home Mission Week, November 11th to 18th.

Our Assembly's Committee supports in whole or in part 634 workers, who serve 828 churches, schools and missions, among the Indians, in the mountains, and elsewhere. Better financial support and better equipment in homes and buildings are greatly needed. Our young people should give their support and their prayers to this work.

SOME MISSIONARY TEACHINGS OF THE PROPHETS
Lesson: Isaiah 60:1-3; Jonah 4:10, 11; Micah 4:1-3; Zephaniah 3:9

OLDEN TEXT—"Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising."—Isaiah 60:3.

SCRIPTURE LESSON

Isaiah 60:1 Arise, shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the LORD is risen upon thee.

For, behold, the darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people; but the LORD shall arise upon thee, and his glory shall be seen upon thee.

And the Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising.

Jonah 4:10 Then said the LORD, Thou hast had pity on the heifer, for the which thou hast not laboured, neither madest thou sorrow; which came up in a night and perished in a night: and should not I spare Nineveh, that great city, wherein are more than sixscore thousand persons that cannot discern between their right hand, and their left hand; and also much cattle?

Micah 4:1 But in the last days it shall come to pass, that the mountain of the house of the LORD shall be established in the top of the hills; and people shall flow unto it.

And many nations shall come, and say, Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the LORD, and to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths; for the law shall go forth of Zion, and the word of the LORD from Jerusalem.

And he shall judge among many people, and rebuke strong nations afar off; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruninghooks: nation shall not lift up a sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.

Zephaniah 3:9 For then will I turn to the people a pure language, that they may all call upon the name of the LORD, to serve him with one consent.

SHORTER CATECHISM

Q. 60. How is the Sabbath to be sanctified?

A. The Sabbath is to be sanctified by a holy resting all that day, even from such worldly employments and recreations as are lawful on other days; and spending the whole time in public and private exercises of God's worship, except so much as is to be taken up in the works of necessity and mercy.

As Israel was a missionary nation, charged with giving the truths of the Scriptures and the Gospel to other nations, we would expect their prophets to inculcate and emphasize this duty. Such is the case. The Hebrew prophets plainly indicate that the Messiah and His salvation were offered to the race of man. Christ claimed to be "the light of the world," and you can no more reject the light of the sun to one land or nation or class in which you can limit Jesus and His Gospel to one class or nation of mankind. We will consider Christ the Light of Israel and the Gentiles; Jonah's Mission to Nineveh; The Exaltation of Zion; The Nations Seeking Her.

I. Christ the Light of Zion and the Gentiles

In Isa. 60:1-3 it is written, "Arise, shine, for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee." The very object of Messiah's coming to Zion was that she might enlighten her, so that she could dispense His salvation to other nations. He did give knowledge of the truth, duty, sin, salvation, atonement, mercy, pardon, Divine help and holiness. At the time of His advent the world was in darkness. "Darkness covered the earth and gross darkness the people." But Isaiah predicted, "The Gentiles shall come to thy light and kings to the brightness of thy rising." Elsewhere he says, "In Him shall the Gentiles trust." "He shall be not only the glory of God's people Israel but a light to lighten the Gentiles." If the Jews did not recognize their Messiah nor the duty of missions it was from no want of revelation.

II. Jonah's Mission to Nineveh

Jonah was one of the earliest of Hebrew prophets. He lived 862 years before Christ. Nineveh, the capital of Assyria, was not only a Gentile nation, wicked in their ways, but one of the early and most powerful of Israel's enemies. Yet Jonah was sent to Nineveh to warn its people of approaching destruction and to bring them to repentance and salvation. He was reluctant to go and required stern chastisement to render him obedient. His woeful message, "Yet forty days and Nineveh shall be destroyed," produced surprising results. The whole people, from the king down, repented, assumed the signs of repentance, and brought forth fruits meet for penitence. Therefore they were saved by a merciful God. His threatening was conditional and was designed to prompt repentance. Jonah was not pleased by the effects wrought but a gracious God kindly reproves him and gives cogent reasons for his own conduct. In Jonah's mission, Israel had a vivid illustration of mission work.

III. The Exaltation of Zion

In Micah 4:1-3 there is an account of Zion being elevated to place and power, of the nations being brought into it and of the gladsome effects secured. "But in the last days it shall come to pass that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains and it shall be exalted above the hills and the people shall flow into it." "And many nations shall come and say, come and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord and to the house of the God of Jacob, and He will teach us His ways and we will walk in His paths, for the law shall go forth from Zion and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem." "He shall judge among the people and rebuke strong nations," and the final result shall be universal peace. The unrest of the world is because the principles taught by Zion are not dominant.

IV. The Nations Seeking Zion

In Zep. 3:9 Jehovah says, "For them will I turn to the people a pure language that they may call upon the name of the Lord to serve Him with one consent." When human speech is purified from error, falsehood and wickedness, and all nations consent to worship God and serve Him, this will be a redeemed earth and here will Immanuel reign.

11. The Church Psalm. Ps. 84:1-12. (Consecration meeting.)

How can we best serve our church?
How has the church served us?
How does the church keep alive in the world belief in God?

The 84th Psalm seems to have been written by a Jewish prophet who was an exile from Jerusalem. In a far-away land, he recalls the house of God and the delightful service there, and longs to be at the temple worship he so much enjoyed. As he sees in his mind the beautiful house of God sitting high up on Mt. Moriah, its towers pointing to the skies, with the swallows circling around them, fitting here and there, darting to their nests, he almost envies the birds their privileges, while he is denied the opportunity of entering the courts of the Lord.

The Beauty of the Lord's House

The Psalmist exclaims, How amiable, or lovely, are thy tabernacles O Lord of Hosts. The temple was a beautiful building, and we are warranted by that fact to build beautiful houses for God's worship. But anything is beautiful that we love. The little old country church away down in the grove, surrounded by God's watchmen, the great oak trees, is lovely to us who used to worship there.

It was there we started to Sunday School as children. There we learned to know Jesus as our Saviour. There we grew up to manhood or womanhood, and got our first ideals of character and duty. The beauty of God's house comes from our love for it.

The Happiness of Those Who Worship in the Church

The Psalmist sees a crowd, dressed in their best clothes, wending their way to the old temple, with gladness in their hearts, and joy going forth from their lips in praise and thanksgiving. They are finding strength, guidance, comfort, and opportunity for service, and they are glad, and rejoice in God, and as they go they seem to make the desert glad, and springs of water rise up along their pathway, and bring blessings to all nearby.

The Worshipers Find God's Favor

Those who worship God receive God's favor and grace. By their repentance of sin, their hearts are prepared to ask God's forgiveness, and God pardons their sins. They are believing and trustful, prayerful and thankful, and as they go from company to company, or as the Psalm says, from strength to strength, having fellowship with other worshippers, as they appear in Zion, they tell of their love and faith, and their joy to do God's will, and all join in united prayer for the church, and the victory of God's cause in the earth, saying, Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven.

The Contrast of the Church With Worldly Places

The Psalmist makes a comparison between the blessings and pleasures of being in God's house and being in worldly places. He says that one day spent in the church is better than a thousand spent in the resorts of sin. He declares he would rather be a plain doorkeeper in God's house than to dwell in, or be the master of the house of wicked men. Those who love God's house have good fellowship, uplifting thoughts, easy consciences, inspiring purposes. Those who dwell in the tents of wickedness are full of suspicion, fear, anxiety, disappointment, and sadness at last. They think they have pleasures, but their pleasures canker their souls. Christians ought to go nowhere they cannot ask God's blessing to attend them.

The Supreme Blessings of God's House

We are told in this Psalm that God is a sun and a shield. God gives us light to guide, warmth to cheer, revelation of beauty, just like the sun does. God is also a guard to those who trust Him; He protects us from evil temptations, and comforts us in our times of trial. He is the source of all good, and will not withhold any good thing from those who try to do right and fear God. And at last he leads us home to glory and eternal reward. It pays to go to church and to love God.

WORTHWHILE NEWS ITEMS

The North Carolina Presbyterian Junior Christian Endeavorers have decided to give a blackboard to Beechwood Seminary. The board is to be six by three feet and will cost fifteen dollars. Half of this sum has already been raised and the Juniors are working to raise the balance.

A few weeks ago a Junior Endeavor Society was organized in the First Presbyterian Church of Fayetteville, N. C. Mrs. Charles Rose is the superintendent. Mrs. Rose is planning to attend the State C. E. Convention in Greensboro the last of October, to get new ideas and inspiration for the work with the boys and girls.

During the month of September, Miss Hester Steele, of Mooresville, N. C., secretary of the Southern District of C. E., wrote 152 post cards, with return card attached, asking for the name of the church, society, and name and address of the corresponding secretary, of each C. E. organization which was thought to exist. The district treasurer, J. C. Boyd, of Charlotte, wrote 26 letters, attended two executive meetings, and spoke to 225 people. All this in addition to his busy work with a Charlotte banking concern.

Of 39 students at Columbia Theological Seminary who gave reports, about half the student body, 17 stated that they had been directly or indirectly influenced in their decision for the ministry by a young people's society. Ten of these were indirectly influenced by Christian Endeavor, five directly by Christian Endeavor, and two indirectly by societies other than Christian Endeavor.

President J. Arthur Flanagan, of the South Carolina C. E. Union, did a big work during September. In addition to handling the fifteen-day itinerary of Field Secretary Bert Jones, no small job, as anyone who has done this knows, he sent out 240 letters in regard to the C. E. World campaign. With the 115 letters in regard to the tour of Mr. Jones, it looks like Mr. Flanagan did quite a lot besides helping his father in their store at Bowling Green.

Miss Emmie Osteen, the state secretary, Columbia, also had a busy month. A new list of society and district leaders was made, and fifteen letters were written.

These are just samples of what our Presbyterian young people are doing in the leadership of work for other young people.

TENNESSEE YOUNG PEOPLE'S CONFERENCE

By Miss Juliet D. Alexander

The third annual Young People's Conference of Tennessee, composed of the Presbyteries of Nashville, Memphis and Columbia, was held June 19-26, at Ovoca, in the lovely upland country near Tullahoma. The delegation numbered about 225, including the three members of Synod's Committee in charge—Rev. Clyde Johnson, chairman; Rev. H. S. Henderson, and Rev. B. E. Wallace, D.D.; also the Synodical's Committee members, including Mrs. C. S. Kinkcad, chairman; Mrs. Bruce Cochran, and Mrs. Warren Newson.

The delegates from the three Presbyteries gathered in three clans under the names McGregor, McPherson, and McDonald, with three proud chieftains to direct in friendly rivalry the affairs of the clans in the realm of student government, athletics and general clan spirit. Each chieftain was a member of the Athletic Council and an interesting athletic program was carried out each afternoon under the successful leadership of Prof. Mason Cashion, athletic director of the boys, and Miss Mary Anderson, for the girls.

Each day's program of the conference began with the Quiet Hour for 15 minutes. Then followed the Bible class, conducted by Mrs. Margaret Russell.

Four elective classes were held during the next hour: S. S. Methods, by Rev. J. J. Fix, D.D.; Presbyterian History and Doctrine, by Rev. J. P. Robertson, D.D.; Foreign Missions, by Rev. J. B. Carpenter, and a class in Home Missions, taught by Rev. J. W. Caldwell, D.D.

Another group of classes was conducted in the next hour: Expert Endeavor, by Rev. J. J. Fix, D.D.; Personal Work, by Mrs. Margaret Russell, and Teacher Training, by Rev. B. E. Wallace, D.D.

The Conference Hour which was conducted by the young people themselves at the 11 o'clock hour each day breathed the very spirit of the conference. On the last day the hour was spent in impromptu expressions on the influence of the conference. Opportunity was also given for any who had decided to offer themselves for life service to rise. Three volunteered. "Here am I for Service" was chosen as the conference motto. The music of the conference was ably led by Mr. Warren Newson, of Memphis.

Impressive Vesper Services were conducted by Rev. R. Excell Fry, D.D., Rev. B. E. Wallace, D.D., and Miss Charlotte Jackson, Life Work Secretary from our Christian Education Office, at Louisville, Ky.

Rev. E. D. McDougall, D.D., delivered the first inspirational address of the conference, on Tuesday evening. Rev. Egbert W. Smith, D.D., Rev. Chas. E. Diehl, D.D.; Rev. Z. E. Lewis, missionary from Mexico, and Rev. Ben R. Lacy, D.D., were among the speakers during the week.

The conference was brought to the climax Sunday evening when Dr. Lacy brought the message from God to every young person present, in the Life Service sermon. The words, "Young man, what are you going to do with your life?" are ringing in our ears still.

"TO OBEY IS BETTER"

There are occasions when God's servants shrink from duty. But what is the consequence? They lose the presence and comforting enjoyment of God's love. When we obey our Lord Jesus as believers should, our God is with us; and though we have the whole world against us, if we have God with us, what does it matter? But the moment we start back, and seek our own inventions, we are at sea without a pilot. Then may we bitterly lament and groan out, "O my God, where hast thou gone? How could I have been so foolish as to lose all the bright shinnings of thy face? This is a price too high. Let me return to my allegiance, that I may rejoice in thy presence."—C. H. Spurgeon.

ATTENTION! SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS

The Montreat Assembly changed the special Home Mission Day in the Sunday School from the last Sunday in March to the third Sunday in November.

There is a peculiar fitness in this change. November is the Home Mission Month; November 11-18 is Home Mission Week, and November 18 is Home Mission Day. Each Church and Auxiliary will observe some phase of this annual Home Mission Celebration. It is earnestly desired that every Sunday School in the General Assembly plan to observe Home Mission Day, November 18th.

The children of the Sunday School are the future leaders of the Church and Nation. Patriotism and religion are the noblest passions of the heart. Every child loves his country and every child should know something of its religious needs. Home Mission Day in Sunday School is an opportunity to emphasize the necessity of giving the Gospel to the millions of strangers who have come from foreign lands to make their homes in America.

A beautiful Sunday School program, "Citizens of Tomorrow" has been prepared for Sunday, November 18th, and will be sent upon request to any school desiring to use it.

Address Executive Committee of Home Missions, 1522 Hurt Building, Atlanta, Ga.

REV. JAS. H. JARVIS

Rev. James H. Jarvis died at his home in Washington, N. C., on Wednesday, October 17th, in the 66th year of his life. He was born in Beaufort County, N. C. He entered the ministry rather late in life; studied theology privately under Rev. Dr. C. M. Payne, then pastor at Washington. In 1901 he was ordained by Albemarle Presbytery. All of his ministry was spent in Home Mission fields in Albemarle Presbytery, where he labored faithfully in the service of the Master in building up the waste places of Zion. He served fields in Beaufort, Halifax, and Hyde Counties. About ten years ago infirm health forced him to retire from active labors, and he made his home in Washington, N. C. He bore his physical sufferings patiently in submission to the will of God. The immediate cause of his death was pneumonia. A humble and faithful servant of Christ has entered into his heavenly rest, and his works will follow him. H. B. S.

MONTREAT CONFERENCE FOR 1924

Before the 1923 conferences at Montreat were over, the Program Committee began preparing for the 1924 conferences. Dates for nine different conferences were fixed, beginning with the Young People's Conference, June 24-July 6, and ending with Presbyterian Week, August 24-29.

Speakers are already being engaged. Dr. Campbell Morgan has accepted the invitation to speak every day during the Bible Conference, August 16-24.

Rev. Andrew Blackwood, now of Cleveland, Ohio, has also accepted the invitation to be one of the Bible teachers, but his dates have not been fixed.

Mr. Homer Harmmuntree, the noted leader of song, has also accepted an invitation to be at Montreat for a part of the summer.

It has always been the policy of the Montreat Program Committee to invite not only able speakers, but speakers who are sound in the faith. A definite resolution along this line was adopted at a recent meeting of Program Committee and put on record! It reads as follows: "The Program Committee would respectfully request and direct those having charge of the programs for the various conferences, that they exercise the utmost care in the selection of speakers and teachers, so as to avoid having any advocate or defender of modernism on the platform at Montreat."

The conferences of 1923 reached the high watermark in every way. It is the hope and prayer of the Program Committee that the conferences of 1924 may be better still.

BARIUM NEWS

Some of our visitors of last week were, Mrs. French, from Wilmington; Mrs. Page, from Aberdeen; Mrs. Cannon, from Concord; Mrs. Stowe, from Belmont; Mrs. Hodge, from Charlotte, and Mrs. McGuire, from Louisville. We wish they could know how much pleasure a visit from each of them always gives us.

Superintendent Joseph B. Johnston represented our Orphanage, and Mr. S. A. Grier represented our Church at Synod in Burlington last week.

Mrs. Ketchie and Miss Templeton, two of our teachers, entertained the members of the faculty very delightfully at Sunshine Lodge, Friday evening.

Rev. G. R. Gillespie, of Gastonia returned from Asia Minor where he served on the Near East Relief Committee, most delightfully and entertainingly gave a lecture on the Near East with slides illustrating conditions there.

We are eagerly awaiting the first issue of our paper, The Barium Messenger. It is a revival of "Our Fatherless Ones." An interesting feature about it is that it will be written, printed and entirely managed by the student body. Just at present Mr. John A. Brady is coaching the boys in the use of the machines and management in general.

It is worth a trip to Barium now to see the campus trees in the gaiety of their autumn colors. The children are all enjoying these last beautiful days to the fullest extent. Football claims the attention of the high school boys during all their free time; the pony and several most complicated marble game-furnish amusement for the smaller boys. The high school girls are interested in basketball, and their teams show marked improvement. The smaller girls seem very domestic; around the roots of each big tree are elaborate houses outlined with acorns and decorated with scarlet and yellow leaves presided over by one or two or more Annie Louise girls.

The observance of Children's Book Week, November 11th-17th affords an opportunity which we hope our friends will not neglect, for books mean much not only to the pleasure of our children but to their educational development.

PERSONAL

The church at Catlettsburg, Ky., has called to its pastorate, Rev. John R. Hay, of Brevard, N. C.

Rev. G. P. Stevens and two children will sail on the S. S. President Taft from San Francisco on November 8th. The sailing has been recently changed from President Wilson, November 1st to the above date. Mrs. Martha Remington is to accompany them as a teacher for the children of missionaries at Tengersien.

From "The Nashville Tennessean" we take the following notice which will be gratifying news to Southern Presbyterians:

"I like Nashville too well," stated Dr. James I. Vance, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, in giving his reason for not accepting a call extended him by the Third United Presbyterian Church of Pittsburgh to become its pastor. Dr. Vance announced to his congregation Sunday morning that he wouldn't accept the call.

F. A. Cousley, Oliver Hurst, and a Mr. Charters, of the Pittsburgh Church, spent two days in Nashville last week in an attempt to persuade Dr. Vance that he should go to Pittsburgh. Their mission was unsuccessful.

Dr. Vance will write his formal declination to Pittsburgh Monday, he said.

NORTH CAROLINA

Lumber Bridge—The regular fall communion of the Lumber Bridge Presbyterian Church will be held on the third Sunday in October. The other churches of this group, Parkton and Rex, are invited to commune with the Lumber Bridge congregation and it is hoped that as many former communicants as can possibly do so will come and help make this a memorable day for this old church.

Rally Day was observed by the Sunday School October 7th, at which time our pastor, Mr. V. G. Smith, made a splendid talk on Sunday School Extension. The attendance was large and a good offering made for this work.

Statesville—Further steps were taken Sunday morning by the congregation of the First Presbyterian Church, Statesville, in their movement for a new church with the naming of a building committee. It consists of Messrs. N. B. Mills, C. V. Henkel, C. M. Steele, J. T. Montgomery, and P. D. Kennedy, the first three members being transferred from the finance committee. The finance committee is composed of Messrs. D. J. Craig, L. B. Bristol, John A. Scott, Jr., F. A. Sherrill, R. L. Poston, H. O. Steele, J. E. Sloop, Fred H. Deaton, Fred W. Sherrill, Fred Slane, W. Herbert Morrison, Oscar Marvin, J. A. Brady, H. L. Kincaid, J. B. Hall, James R. Hill and Dr. R. S. McElwee.—Landmark.

Concord, Poplar Tent Church—In a meeting held at this historic old church, September 16th-23d inclusive, the pastor was ably assisted by Rev. Wm. Black, D.D., of Charlotte, N. C. The meeting attracted large congregations from the start so that not only the seating space of the first floor was crowded but the several galleries were well filled. As a visible result of this meeting, and the careful preparation preceding it, 43 new members were added to our roll, several family altars established and many reconsecrations. Mr. Burr, who leads the service of song for Dr. Black, added much to the success of the meeting, not only by his soul-stirring messages in sacred song, but by his personal congeniality.

Our resident membership now numbers about 225. We have a strong Christian Endeavor Society and a well-attended mid-week prayer meeting.

W. Hampton Eubank, Pastor.

Charlotte—The calendar of the Second Church for October 20 carries the following interesting items: "Do You Know—That our Sunday School had 847 present on Rally Day, but there are many others who should be members."

"That the Young Men's Bible Class had record attendance for the last four Sundays, but four out of five of our men are not in Bible classes."

"That 230 men were present at the last meeting of the Men's Club and 22 new members were added."

"That 26 of our Men's Groups have met for 1:00 o'clock lunch during the past four weeks and the men are showing much interest."

"Bible Class—The week of November 12th-28th is

Week of Prayer and Self-Denial in the Woman's Auxiliary of our Southern Presbyterian Church, and our own Auxiliary will observe the week with a series of Bible studies, preceded by a short prayer service. The teacher of this Bible course will be Mrs. Stokes Lott, of Winston-Salem, and the hour is 3:30 p. m., Monday through Friday, of that week. The prayer meeting is at 3:15 p. m. on those days.

"The flowers today are in memory of our boys who died for their country: David Graham, John Hutchison, Charles Bowers, and Donald Wearn."

Tarboro Field—Yesterday was a banner day in the history of Presbyterianism in Edgecombe County. The field known as the Tarboro field, of which Daniel Iverson is pastor, held Rally Day for all their Sunday Schools. Seven of the nine Sunday Schools of this church were brought together for the occasion. Five of the Sunday Schools met at the Tarboro Church and two met at the William and Mary Hart Chapel. At the Rally Day service in William and Mary Hart chapel there were over 280 present and at Howard Memorial Presbyterian Church there were over 450 present. At all of the Sunday Schools directly connected with this church there were almost 1,000 present.

This is a banner day in the history of the Howard Memorial Church. Last year at Rally Day there were 351. In this section of North Carolina where a traditional prejudice against Sunday Schools has to be overcome as they are organized, this is a remarkable showing and for which the church is thankful.

Through the splendid co-operation of the membership of this church, the pastor is conducting nine Sunday Schools and ten mission points. The assistant with the pastor conduct ten services a week and the workers of the church conduct the nine Sunday Schools. There are 75 Sunday School teachers and workers who are giving their time in advancing this great work. The church hopes to place a Sunday School within the reach of every family in Edgecombe County.

SOUTH CAROLINA

Sprunt Selected to Head Forces—Charleston—Rev. Alexander Sprunt, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church here and Moderator of the Southern Presbyterian Church, has been selected as general chairman of the Charleston Billy Sunday campaign committee and has accepted. Dr. Sprunt will be at the head of the general committee, and there will be some 800 in the personnel of the various subcommittees. Fred W. Rapp, advance agent of the Billy Sunday organization, held a conference with the local central committeemen tonight on further details looking to the campaign opening on November 4.

Great Falls—Sunday evening Rev. George B. Thompson, who has been called by the Great Falls Presbyterian Church to this pastorate, was installed by Rev. R. W. Joplin, pastor of First Presbyterian Church, Lancaster, assisted by Rev. Roy R. Brown, pastor of Richburg Presbyterian Church, Richburg, and Elder M. S. Lewis, of the First Presbyterian Church, Chester, who were appointed by the Bethel Presbytery, to conduct this installation service, and which was very impressive in every detail in the presence of a large audience.

Mr. Thompson was called here from the Presbyterian Church of Waxhaw, N. C., where he served for about two years. Mr. Thompson has been serving this pastorate for the past few months.

Trough—Rev. F. B. Estes, of Lockhart, S. C., closed a profitable meeting at Trough, S. C., October 15th. The meeting was held with a view of establishing a church there. Mr. Estes preached the Gospel in an impressive way, staying near the cross at all times. His clear, forceful sermons were heard and appreciated by large congregations at each service. The meeting was held in the Methodist Church building, with the pastor and his people co-operating in the spirit of the Master. There were a large number of reconsecrations, and a few responded to the Master's call for the first time. At the close of the meeting a number of the representative people of the town signed a petition asking Presbytery to organize them into a church. From all indications we will have a good strong church here in the near future. Cor.

Van Wyck—This church is in the upper part of Lancaster County. They have an elegant brick building well put up and all paid for. About 14 years since the enterprise was undertaken by a few faithful Presbyterians, Mr. W. Ash, Mr. Ed Nesbeth and Mr. Massey. They have now a strong church, and a good Sabbath School. When it was my privilege last Sabbath to preach for them I had a large congregation of attentive worshippers and a live Sabbath School. Rev. J. J. Brown is their pastor; he is a man beloved by all as he tries to build them up in spiritual lines. This place is building up. They have a large brick public school house that will be opened up January 4th, next year. The church building will have two additional brick rooms put up for Sabbath School—their present rooms are too small. I built this house 12 years since. I do wish all the houses I built were thus, but the three I built in Chesterfield are almost gone. I get complaints from their members of the cold, dead conditions. I am truly sorry that in some parts there is almost spiritual death.

May the Lord of Harvest send us showers of blessings.

James Russell.

Arsenal Hill—Last Sabbath was an important day in the history of the Arsenal Hill Presbyterian Church. With the largest attendance in its history the Sabbath School worshipped in the new Sabbath School building for the first time.

This building, which is just being completed at an approximate cost of $28,000, is constructed according to the most modern plans for an ideal Sabbath School. There are three stories containing two assembly halls, 16 class rooms, pastor's study, woman's parlor and when completed will have rooms for the social functions of the church. The class rooms when fully furnished will contain all the equipment for conducting the work of the school in accordance with the latest methods of Sunday School pedagogy.

The building was constructed under the direction of a committee composed of A. B. Langley, Rev. W. H. Boggs, Dr. W. R. Barron, E. C. Barnard, N. A. Shields, J. A. Hancock, T. E. Kell and C. O. Cooper.

The Arsenal Hill Church was organized 37 years ago by the late Rev. John L. Girardeau, D.D., professor of theology in the Columbia Theological Seminary, as a result of a mission that had been conducted in the vicinity for some time. The first building was a small frame structure erected on Richland Street.

Dr. Girardeau was succeeded in the pastorate of the church by Rev. George A. Blackburn, D.D., who continued pastor until his death, a period of more than 31 years. During the pastorate of Dr. Blackburn the little wooden church building was moved to the present site on Laurel and Assembly Streets. The congregations soon outgrew the capacity of the small building and the present church building was erected. The building was then converted into a Sabbath School building and has continued to serve as such until the past week when the new building was ready and the little wooden building in which the church passed its youth into manhood became a memory of the things that have been.

The present pastor, Rev. Wade H. Boggs, came to the church five years ago. During his pastorate the work of the church has so grown that the equipment was hopelessly inadequate to take care of the enlarging work of the church.

APPALACHIA

Davidson River Church—Dr. R. D. Carson, Synodical evangelist, held a ten-day meeting at Davidson River Church, beginning September 28th. He is a man of charming personality and an unusually strong and able preacher. His preaching of the Gospel drew people to hear him who had not been in any church for years. The congregations grew larger as the meeting progressed. The pastor, W. S. Hutchinson, had organized a prayer league and the Holy Spirit was present to bless the preached word. Twelve people united with the church; ten on profession and two by letter.

Also the members were revived and now the church work along all lines is being pressed forward. They all urgently asked Dr. Carson to return next year.

This church is one of the oldest churches in Western North Carolina, having been organized in 1878. October 7th was the regular annual observance of Davidson River Day, which day has been kept for years. It has grown out of the camp meetings held at this place a generation and two generations ago. A large crowd assembled; some came a long distance; other, who were cripples, had to be carried. Many old people were seen in the crowd.

A bountiful dinner was served on the grounds. In the morning Dr. Carson delivered an encouraging message; ruling elder R. L. Gash read an instructive historical sketch, and in the afternoon the pastor made an able address. W. P. Chedester.

FLORIDA

Jacksonville—Services morning and night, marked the formal opening of the Springfield Presbyterian Church. Rev. W. A. Cleveland is the pastor for this congregation, which a few years ago made a small beginning and now has one of the most beautiful churches in the South, a building which has been designed and completed not only for the present congregation, but to take care for several years to come of the growth of this church. The church is at the northwest corner of Silver and Sixth streets.

In this building, the Springfield Presbyterian Church has followed the modern trend of all progressive institutions by building one unit while providing for other units to be built in the future, the whole design to care for the rapidly growing needs of this church.

KENTUCKY

Maxwell Presbyterian Church—At a special congregational meeting held three weeks ago for the election of elders and deacons, the following were elected and ordained and installed with impressive ceremonies the following Sabbath: Elders, Charles M. Marshall, Judge J. B. Eversole, Major Wm. S. Webb, Raymond T. Randolph. Deacons, John Wason, Harry V. Rouse, Sr., George R. Smith, Fred Bryant, Morgan Smedley, Prof. W. D. Nichols. All departments of the church are showing growth. One hundred men attend regularly the monthly meeting of the men, the Y. P. S. C. E. and Intermediate societies are most enthusiastic, the Sabbath School is larger than ever in its history, and has a fine 12-piece orchestra playing at both Sabbath School and C. E. Dr. J. Archer, the minister has instituted a new idea in the school, that of getting a list of all the absent scholars on a specially printed card and having each absentee visited sometime during the week. A large university class of men and another of young women are features of the school.

November 4th, Dr. Arthur J. Smith, evangelist, will begin special meetings at this church, and will preach every night for three weeks, closing Sunday, November 22d. Dr. Smith was for 15 years minister of the First Presbyterian Church at Savannah, Ga., and for several years teacher of evangelism at the White Bible School, New York. Dr. Smith was associated for many years with the late Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, whom he resembles very closely in appearance and style. Dr. Smith is being welcomed with the greatest enthusiasm by the Church and they are eagerly awaiting his coming. Mr. S. K. Strother, director of the Maxwell choir, and himself an evangelistic singer with a wonderful voice will have charge of the music during the campaign.

WEST VIRGINIA

Tygart's Valley Presbytery, Fall Meeting, 1923, Mingo—The 23d stated meeting of the Presbytery of Tygart's Valley convened in the Presbyterian Church at Mingo at 7:30 p. m., Tuesday, October 2, 1923.

The opening sermon was preached by the retiring moderator, Rev. H. L. Cathey, of Richwood, W. Va., after which the sacrament of the Lord's supper was observed, with Rev. W. C. Williams, of Elkins, and Rev. George H. Rector, of Sutton, distributing the elements.

Roll call showed the following ministers present and churches represented: F. H. Barron, Davis Memorial Church, Elder Judge James A. Bent; H. L. Cathey, Richwood, Elder W. J. Gayley; L. B. Hensley, Beverly, Elder Geo. Crawford; A. C. Powell, Elkins, G. H. Rector, Sutton, Elders F. L. Fox, Sutton; C. A. Wade, Burnsville; F. M. Ryburn, Davis, Memorial, Gassaway; W. C. Williams, Superintendent Home Missions, Elkins; Elders Howard B. Grant, Philippi, L. H. Buzzell, Gladys, A. S. Gear, Mill Creek, S. H. Wood, Mingo, Ray V. Willson, Parsons, Squire Isner, Midland; Walter McElfresh, Bower. In addition to these brethren Rev. O. N. Miles, stated supply of the Mingo Church was present.

Following the roll call, Hon. F. L. Fox, Ruling Elder in the Sutton Presbyterian Church was elected moderator, who by his strict attention to the business in hand, together with his ready understanding of parliamentary law, contributed much to the smooth transaction of the work of the meeting. To assist stated clerk Rev. L. B. Hensley, Elders H. B. Grant and Walter McElfresh were elected temporary clerks.

The entertainment committee under the able direction of Rev. O. N. Miles, and Elder S. H. Wood, of the Mingo Church, assisted by all the good people of the community had made ample preparation to care for all the representatives and visitors. Breakfast and supper were served in the various homes, while dinner was a picnic spread, served on a temporary table underneath the trees at the church. "The Standing Rule" was "six inches from the table, stay until you touch." It is said that many chickens entered the ministry, and that the vacancy so often reported, has at last been filled.

This Presbytery being preeminently one of Home Missions, the report of the Home Missions Committee, through the chairman, Rev. F. H. Barron, together with the discussions concerning the work of this committee occupied a large place in the meeting. To the Home Missions forces have recently been added the following:

Rev. H. G. Kenney, Parsons and Holly Meadows. Rev. Sterling L. Hunter, Coalton and Norton. Mr. Kenney comes from the First Presbyterian Church, Statesboro, Ga., and Mr. Hunter from The Church by the Side of the Road, Greensboro, N. C. Miss Ruby Sprinkle a graduate of the Assembly's Training School in Richmond, and a worker of experience has been employed and is at Gladys.

Wednesday was largely taken up with hearing reports from the various committees, both standing and permanent. Wednesday evening Rev. L. B. Hensley, of Beverly, preached the Presbyterian sermon, to a large and appreciative congregation, the subject being: Heaven.

Following the Presbyterian sermon, Rev. T. P. Allen, secretary of Stewardship for the Synod of West Virginia presented the work of the Presbyterian Progressive Program.

Commissioners to the next General Assembly at San Antonio, Texas, May 15, 1924, were nominated as follows:

Ministers—Principal, W. C. Williams; alternate, L. B. Hensley; elders, principal, Howard B. Grant; alternate, C. A. Wade.

All reports having been received and disposed of, all committees appointed, all business presented and concluded, Presbytery, after having voted a resolution of thanks to the people of Mingo for their lavish hospitality, and good fellowship, adjourned at 2:30 p. m. Thursday the 4th.

Davis Memorial Church, Elkins, was chosen as the place for the Spring meeting, to be held the last Tuesday in April, 1924. Cor.

Davidson—Advance copies of Miss Shaw's History of Davidson College are expected daily. The price is $1.50.

It is expected that the Alumni Catalogue will appear before the Christmas holidays. The book will sell for $1.50 cloth binding; $1.25 paper back.

Events of special interest the current week (following Home-Coming week-end)—always including football and what pertains thereto—were first an address on Sunday morning by superintendent Joseph B. Johnston, who spoke about and in behalf of Barium Springs and too in a telling way, and secondly an illustrated lecture by Mr. Lex Klutz, class of '15, world traveler and student and Red Cross worker in the Near East Relief, who narrowly escaped death in the Japan earthquakes and who now both by his graphic recital of the story and by the pictures which he took of the cities in ruins and enveloped in flames thrills an audience wherever he speaks.

Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, Va.—Francis Makemie Hall is the name of a new apartment house which has just been completed by Union Seminary on the tract of land adjacent to the campus. It is named in memory of the first Presbyterian minister who located in the colony of Virginia, Rev. Francis Mackemie. It has four apartments of five rooms each, admirably arranged and completely furnished, with the exception of crockery, kitchen utensils and bed linen.

Many young men find after marriage that they have been called into the ministry. There are 21 married men in the present student body of Union Seminary. This apartment house is erected to provide comfortable quarters for such students, and is the fifth building owned by the seminary dedicated to these uses.

Of the four families occupying Francis Makemie Hall, two are from North Carolina, one is from Virginia, and one is from Tennessee.

The Society of Missionary Inquiry of Union Seminary was organized in the year 1818. This more than a century young society is a fine example of youthful vigor at this time after 105 years of continuous and efficient service.

Its name implies simple inquiry into missionary conditions. Its history is a record not of inquiry only but of vigorous effort to meet the needs disclosed. The organization for city mission work for this session has just been completed. On last Sunday afternoon one delegation went to work in the Sunday School at the State penitentiary; two other groups went—one to the County Jail and the other to the city jail Sunday morning; on Saturday afternoon still another group conducted street preaching services at the crowded corner of Fourth and Broad Streets; six groups have been assigned to conduct meetings each Monday at noon in six of the Richmond factories; one delegation goes to the boys' reformatory every Sunday afternoon, and another goes to the girls' reformatory once a month. The largest group does various forms of work in connection with the Seventeenth Street Colored Mission.

Two new moves are being made by the society this year. One is in the form of an organized committee to help the various young people's societies of the churches within reach of the seminary to organize and further expand their work; the other is a systematic presentation of the claims of the gospel ministry in the colleges of the South. This work has been done with some thoroughness in the Presbyterian colleges in the past; now it will be systematically and vigorously done in all the colleges.

Peace Institute is planning a series of lectures on Citizenship, to be delivered by the Governor, members of the Council of State, and others prominent in State affairs. Governor Morrison made the first address Monday evening, October 8th. His subject was "The Duties of the Governor of North Carolina."

The Governor pointed out and emphasized certain changes which if made would render the executive department more efficient, would give the chief executive officer greater power and at the same time establish more clearly a line of demarcation between the legislative, judicial, and executive powers of the State.

The Governor's address was well received by the Peace student body and faculty and he made a strong appeal to the girls to study governmental problems and duties so that they may become better citizens.

Secretary of State W. N. Everett is expected to make the next address.

The Pi Theta Mu Literary Society gave a reception for the new girls Saturday evening. Misses McLelland, Linton, Margaret Wright, Frances Walser and Blecka Cornelius were in the receiving line.

The Sigma Phi Kappa Literary Society entertained the new girls Saturday afternoon with a hay ride and a camp fire supper at Lassiter's Pond.

The Peace girls and faculty gave Mrs. Mary Fowler a birthday party on Thursday, October 11th. It was also in honor of her 19th year spent at Peace. A huge birthday cake was presented by the faculty, and the students presented her with cut flowers. Mrs. Fowler's 10 years at Peace has been full of service to the school.

President J. R. McCain has recently attended the meetings of the Synods of North Carolina, Alabama, and Georgia, speaking in the interest of Christian Education for young women.

Austin College—With the largest college registration in its history, Austin College has begun its Diamond Jubilee year under the most favorable circumstances. The registration of college students at the beginning of the long session has passed the 300 mark for the first time. All sub-freshmen work having been discontinued two years ago, the present student body includes only college students, and represents a considerable increase over any previous year in the history of the college. The registration for the entire year, including summer school and summer normal, and excluding duplicates, will approach 450.

Graduate students and those enrolled in the two upper classes constitute approximately 20 percent of the total registration. The sophomore class includes between 20 and 30 percent of the whole. The freshman class includes more than 40 percent. Of the latter, practically all are graduates of accredited high schools; the number of students admitted on the basis of entrance examinations has been unusually small. Approximately 50 percent of the entire student body are new students in Austin College, but not all are freshmen, there being a considerable number of transfers from other institutions who will rank higher than freshman.

That Austin College is continuing to have the fullest support from local territory is indicated by the fact that 116 students, or approximately 38 percent of the total number, are registered from Sherman. In the student body are representatives of six states and one foreign country. Fifty-four counties of Texas are represented.

Virtually isolated by the greatest flood in its history, Oklahoma City sheltered her little army of refugees and waited for the muddy, turbulent expanse of the North Canadian river to recede and reveal the damage it has wrought. $2,500,000 are preliminary estimates of city officers. Although the river has fallen approximately two feet from the 35 foot crest that swept down on the city, the swift waters were still swirling through streets heretofore considered immune. More than 2,000 of the 15,000 persons who fled before the flood still were homeless.

It is charged that President Coolidge is trying to sidestep the prohibition row. He is between Haynes, on the one side, and Secretary Mellon and Commissioner Blair, on the other. The dry leaders are determined to separate the prohibition unit from the internal revenue bureau. This was clearly indicated at the White House. The Pinchot attack jolted the calmness out of Mr. Coolidge, but it never loosened his tongue.

THE STORY OF A SMILE

There were five little brothers once who lived in the country. All day they lay in the warm field in the sun and grew. They looked much alike, for all were round and green. They were five little pumpkins which grew on a strong mother vine.

They were pleasant little fellows, except one. He was the largest and smoothest of all and should have been the jolliest; but he was not.

If the sun shone, this little brother would say: "It's too hot. I feel as if my skin would burst." If it rained, he said: "B-r-r-r! It is chilly. I feel myself growing soft."

Nevertheless, in spite of his troubles, the pumpkin kept on growing until he was so large and smooth that he was quite proud of himself.

By this time the brothers had turned a deep yellow. How they glowed among the green leaves!

They were so pretty that one bright afternoon some children who came into the field clapped their hands with joy. "What beauties!" they cried. "How big and yellow!"

They walked about and lifted the leaves from the pumpkin, patting them with their warm little hands. At last they stopped in front of the largest of the five brothers and cried: "This is the biggest! Let us take this one!" The pumpkin was very astonished at these words and very angry too. It did not suit him at all to have these children pull him about. He clung tightly to the vine, but it did no good. One of the boys took a sharp knife and cut away until with a great shudder the pumpkin was torn away from the vine and lay blinking in the sun.

The children lifted him up and carried him toward the house, where they set him on a bench under some trees.

The pumpkin had no time to notice the strange objects about him, for he was too interested in what was being done to him.

The children had brought a sharp knife, and one of the boys was cutting a piece like a slice of pie from the middle of the poor pumpkin.

"What a fine nose," cried a little girl. "Now make his eyes."

The boy cut out two circles on each side of the nose, and the children laughed.

"Now I'll make his mouth," said the boy, and he began cutting very carefully.

The pumpkin felt that he was being made very ridiculous, for as the boy cut the children began to laugh merrily. Several grown people came out of the house, and when they saw the pumpkin they laughed too.

Then the boy cut the top from the pumpkin and hollowed out the soft flesh and the seeds. Some of the seeds he stuck into the mouth for teeth. The children were delighted.

They set the pumpkin on a fence post to dry; and when the four little brothers in the field saw him, they laughed and nodded at him.

The poor pumpkin was miserable. No one had ever laughed at him before. Now every one made fun of him.

That night the children put a candle in the pumpkin. When it was lighted, they said he looked splendid.

The pumpkin was glad to hear this; and when other children came, carrying other pumpkins carved like himself, he could well believe it, for they looked splendid indeed.

All these pumpkins were smiling broadly. As he looked at them the sad pumpkin could not help smiling too. He did not know that a smile was already on his face, but he did know that the pleasant words, the bright smiles of the others, and the warm glow within him made him feel happy.

"What a jolly old fellow!" cried a gentleman, and the pumpkin fairly beamed.

He found that when he smiled he felt so much better; so he kept right on smiling and settled down to enjoy the party. After that it seemed that the boys and girls were not laughing at him but with him, and he was happier than he had ever been in all his life because he was smiling all through.—By Christine Noble Govan, in Christian Advocate.

PETER, PETER, PUMPKIN EATER

"The pumpkin field looks pretty bare," said Farmer Barrow. "I've just sold Warner the last load."

"Oh, aren't there any pumpkins left?" asked Peter, dismayed.

Peter, a city boy, was visiting the country for the first time. He did not know much about farm products, but he did know that pumpkins have great uses—they made delicious pies, and they were fine Halloween playthings. For weeks he had been planning to make his first jack-o'-lantern; that was why he looked so anxious now.

"There are two left," the farmer answered, laughing. "I guess," he added, "you'll have to choose between jack-o'-lanterns and pies."

"That's so," said the farmer's wife. "I was going to make pumpkin pies for dinner tomorrow. But I can make apple pies instead."

Peter considered the matter. He did not like apple pies nearly so well as he liked pumpkin pies. Still, he was very reluctant to give up those pumpkins. Before the last load was taken away he had gone out into the field and cut his initials on several of the big round fellows. That would not hurt the pumpkins, he knew, and "P. P." stood so plainly for Peter Phelps that the sight of them made his jack-o'-lantern seem secure.

He stood very still in the kitchen thinking about it. At length his longing for his favorite kind of pie got the better of him.

"Wouldn't one pumpkin be enough for the pie?" he asked.

"Suppose something happened to the other one?" the farmer said.

"I'll see that my mark is on it," Peter replied. "It will be safe."

So Mrs. Barrow made pies of one of the pumpkins, and the other was left in the field to grow as large as it would.

But alas for Peter's plans! When he ran down to the field on the thirty-first of October a sad sight met his eyes. Old Polly, one of the cows, had broken down the fence and was eating the Halloween pumpkin. She switched her tail with keen pleasure as she finished the last juicy mouthful.

Peter stopped short and stamped his foot angrily.

"Aren't you ashamed of yourself?" he cried. But that did not help matters. The Halloween pumpkin was gone. Peter walked sadly back to the house.

Good Mrs. Barrow was sorry for him. She found a tin box and punched eyes and a nose and a mouth in the top.

"There," she said, "that is the best I can do for you!"

Peter thanked her politely and walked off with the makeshift jack-o'-lantern under his arm. He did not feel very cheerful. It was almost sundown now, and soon all the other boys in the neighborhood would be out with jack-o'-lanterns, and none of the lanterns would have square faces.

He wondered why he had been so foolish as to think that merely putting his initials on a pumpkin would keep it safe.

"Those letters stood for pumpkin pies and for Polly's pumpkin," he said to himself ruefully, "just as much as for Peter Phelps."

In front of Warner's store he stopped short. There on the porch, right before him, he saw a sight that made him feel worse than ever—a great pile of golden pumpkins.

Peter gazed at the pile. "If I only had some money," he thought.

The storekeeper came and stood in the door. "My boy, you seem to have plenty of time on your hands," he said. "Suppose you run down to the post office and get my mail for me."

Peter willingly trudged away to the office, which was at the other end of the village.

"Well," said Mr. Warner as he took the mail a little later, "I suppose you might fill your overcoat pocket with apples by way of pay."

Peter looked at him. "There isn't any charge," he said gravely. Then, as he saw the storekeeper make a move toward the apples, he said:

"Would you just as soon let me have a pumpkin instead?"

"A pumpkin? Why yes," was the good-natured reply.

Two minutes later Peter was racing back to the farmhouse with a big yellow pumpkin under his arm. It was nearly dark by that time; he would have to hurry, he knew.

In the light of the kitchen window he stopped and looked at his prize.

"Whoopie!" he cried.

For there he saw, big and crooked but plain as daylight on the yellow pumpkin, his own initials!—By Roger Wingfield, in Youth's Companion.

THE ORIENTAL WELL

In India the well is a social institution. Here the women, escaping briefly the narrow routine of domestic life, gather to fill jars of red earthenware that roughly follow very ancient models, and to exchange the gossip of the day. In some villages there are wells for high-caste people and others for low-caste people. In some members of low castes must depend upon the bounty of their betters, who gain merit by filling gingerly the vessels of the defiling ones. But in all, the well is a center of life. So it is throughout the East. Daily, from Suez to the Pacific, millions of women fill millions of pitchers at wells and sources. If the poets and story-tellers are to be believed, many a romance, like that of Rebecca, has begun at the well. For though she may be closely veiled and shrouded in shapeless garments, a woman looks her best as she walks erect, with her jar on her head—erect and with stately dignity, for she would not waste a drop. The jar is heavy and fragile. The face under the full vessel often shows the strain of its weight and the ground about each fountain has its tale of broken pitchers to tell. No wonder the eastern woman is forsaking the earthenware vessel for the lighter and more durable petrol-tin. Comfort and picturesqueness, alas, are so often incompatible! Yet in the evening sun the tin is turned to silver and the graceful garments of the bearer show dazzling white or rich in color. And the eyes of the young men turn toward the village maidens as they pass to the well.—From Living Waters, by Elizabeth Titzel, in Asia Magazine.

WHAT'S IN A NAME?

In the morning he's a pirate, with a cutlas and a gun,

And we tremble at the flashing of his eye;

His name, as he informs us, is an awe-inspiring one:

"Lord Ferdinando Roderigo Guy!"

By ten o'clock our pirate has renounces his gory trade;

In armor new, he has a lance and shield;

He gallantly advances to defend a helpless maid,

And we know that bold "Sir Lancelot" has the field.

And next, a skulking savage, he is lurking in the hall,

Most alarming in his feather war array;

But he graciously assures us he will answer if we call

"Hawatha Mudjeekeswis Ojibway!"

As "Horatio Nelson Dewey" he's an admiral of parts,

And last in all his catalog of names Comes the very simple title under which he rules our hearts,

For when he's sound asleep he's merely "James!"

—Hannah G. Fernald, in "St. Nicholas."

"I have been twenty-five years in your employ today, sir!" "Quite right, Schmidt! And see how you have got on here! Only 100 marks ($25) a month at first, and now you are getting 100,000 ($1)."—Meggendorfer Blatter.

Marriages and Deaths

MARRIED

McLean-Kennedy—In Emporia, Va., by Rev. T. A. Painter, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, on June 17, 1923, Mr. John Flynn McLean, of Eagle Springs, N. C., and Miss Mary Frances Kennedy, of Quitman, Ga.

DIED

CLARENCE V. CAVITT

Clarence V. Cavitt was born in Robertson County, Texas, March 5, 1855. His father was Josephus Cavitt, who moved to Texas from Tennessee, and his mother was Catherine Ann Dunn, whose parents came directly from Ireland.

Mr. Cavitt attended college at Lebanon, Tenn., and at Hampden-Sidney, Va., and then graduated from Roanoke College, Salem, Va., in 1876. He attended Union Seminary, Virginia, for one year and then went to Columbia Seminary, South Carolina, where he graduated in 1879.

After being licensed by Brazos Presbytery he married Miss Bessie Harrison, of Goochland County, Virginia, and lived for several years on a ranch in Texas.

After the death of his first wife he married in 1889 Miss Elizabeth P. Johnston of Salem, Va., who now survives him.

In 1890 he took up again the work of the ministry and attended Austin Seminary, Texas, for two sessions.

In 1892 he supplied several churches in Missouri. In 1894 he was called to the pastorate of the church at Warren, Ark., ordained by Pine Bluff Presbytery and enjoyed a happy and successful pastorate.

Later he served the churches of Brenham, Texas, St. Joseph and Bunkie, La.

In 1907 he took work in Fayetteville Presbytery and served the churches of Mt. Pisgah, Broadway, Salem, and Barbecue.

In all his pastorates he was loved by the people and honored by the communities in which he lived. His work was successful, especially in its Sunday School and missionary efforts.

In 1910 he was taken with typhoid fever and suffered a relapse that left him in such physical condition that he was never able to take up his work.

He then made his home in Sanford, N. C., where he and Mrs. Cavitt endeared themselves to the people of the community, irrespective of church affiliations, by their friendly manner and high Christian character.

Mr. Cavitt possessed an unusually quick mind and a happy, buoyant disposition. His last years were spent in serving the community in any way he could.

In May, 1923 he was stricken with paralysis and for nearly four months was practically helpless and on September 6, 1923, Clarence V. Cavitt, minister of the everlasting Gospel and servant of his fellowmen, fell asleep.

The funeral service was held in the Presbyterian Church at Sanford, and the burial took place at old Buffalo cemetery.

"Mark the perfect man and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace."

T. M. ALLEN

Whereas it hath pleased Almighty God to remove from our number our beloved brother, T. M. Allen, be it therefore resolved by the Men's Bible Class of this church:

1. That our class, of which he was formerly the teacher, feels keenly the loss of his inspiring presence and wise counsel.

2. That the influence of his simple child-like faith and godly walk will be greatly missed by our church and this community.

3. That we would extend to his bereaved family our tenderest sympathy and would comfort them with our conviction of his readiness to meet the summons.

4. That our pastor be requested to read these resolutions from the pulpit, a copy be sent to his family, and another be given to the Presbyterian Standard for publication.

Story and Incident

THE BLUE CHINA DOG

On the very top shelf of the parlor mantle, above the mirror, sat the little china dog. He stared down at the girl enveloped in one of Grandmother Phillips' enormous gingham aprons, in an uncompromising manner, and Ursula, clutching her dust rag, glared back defiantly.

"If you think for one minute that I'm going to dust you, then you're mistaken! How they ever dusted you I'm sure I don't know—way up there out of reach. I haven't time to get a ladder from the shed. Anyway, I don't care how dusty you are!" And she fell upon a chair with her dust cloth, rubbing energetically. Somehow that little china dog rumbled her feelings. He had, from the very first day, made her feel that the whole thing she was undertaking was such an enormous, unfinished task, almost beyond her strength.

"They'll get you down at house-cleaning time," mumbled Ursula, at the table now. Then she drew in her breath sharply. House-cleaning time! Yes, it was the end of the summer, not the summer she had planned, but nearing the end of weeks of work and loneliness. Ursula whisked her duster over the window sills and pretended not to see the tear that splashed in the heavy gathers of the apron tied around her neck.

"They might have written and told me how it was," she said to herself with smarting eyes, "Cathy just wrote when they arrived saying it was so beautiful, the lake so big, and the motor boats—" Ursula choked a little as she put the last chair in place. The room was done at last. She straightened the braided rug before the parlor stove and hurried to the door. Just before she closed it after her, she glanced about the room. Everything was in order and just as grandmother would want it, except the little blue dog.

"Why are you staring down at me like that?" demanded Ursula. "Trying to remind me of something undone? You're out of my reach, like Dean Academy! You look as if you knew it, too, and gloated over it! You're gloating over something—I can see it!" And she closed the door hurriedly.

Last spring Ursula and Cathy and Ina Williams had resolved to go to Dean Academy. It had been their last term in the little country school, and the girls earnestly desired to get a better education. Dean Academy in the next large town offered a wonderful opportunity to earn a teacher's certificate. But how were they to get there without money? Then came the wonderful plan. At a certain fashionable summer resort they arranged to take places as waitresses in a small hotel. And when they were through, there would be enough money for Dean Academy.

It was almost time for the trio to start, when Ursula's mother received the letter from Grandmother Phillips. She had a very bad spell with her knee again, so bad that she couldn't get about the house. Being unable to afford hired help, couldn't Ursula come and stay until she was well again?

Ursula's mother had comforted. It would be only a few weeks, and then Ursula could go to the hotel and earn her Academy tuition.

But the weeks had deepened into months, and still Grandmother Phillips sat upstairs with her bad knee. Ursula never let her grandmother see that she was bitterly disappointed. In fact, she told her that she was glad to come and stay. She did not want her grandmother to feel that she was doing the work grudgingly. Nor did she work all the time. When the daily round was done, there was always time left for a stroll down in the little glade, where the brook hurried over the pebbles, or to sit upstairs and listen to stories of long ago. Then Ursula forgot all about Cathy and Ina and the coming term at the Academy.

Ursula hurried to the kitchen. She peeped into the oven, critically examined a golden pie, and carefully took it out. She tried the potatoes and put the tea water on to boil. But all this was mechanical. All the time her thoughts ran: "Next week begins the term at Dean, and Cathy and Ina will be there! They've had so much fun all summer they haven't even had time to write me. Next week, when the term begins, I'll still be here, dusting the parlor and being stared at by that china dog. I believe he knows that the Academy starts next week; he smirked at me so this morning. The ugly little beast! I wish I could break him. I believe I would if he weren't out of my reach." She began to arrange a tray for the invalid.

Carefully she carried a tempting dinner upstairs, hastily putting on her best smile before she entered her grandmother's room.

"That smells good, Ursula," declared grandmother as the girl arranged the dishes on a small table before the aged woman. "You're a good cook, and a fine, conscientious worker."

Ursula flushed, for the thought of the blue china dog, undusted, would force itself in. Then gently she asked, a great hope in her heart: "How's your knee, Grandmother? Have you tried to walk today?" Oh, the tre-

"Likewise the people who contribute to the support of the denominational colleges have a right to be informed thru their newspapers of what is happening at such institutions just as the tax payers have a right to know what is happening at the State institutions. The sooner the executive heads of the State institutions and denominational colleges learn that the campus is not a little principality apart from the balance of the world and that the friends and supporters of such institutions have a right to be kept informed of what is going on thru the public press, the better it will be for such institutions."—(Charlotte Observer, August 28).

mendous hope that the knee had suddenly improved, that she might go home, and in one short week desperately hunt for means to attend the Academy.

"Worse, Ursula," answered the old lady after a sip of tea. "I do believe we're going to have a rainy spell."

With black despair in her heart, Ursula murmured, "I'm sorry, but it may suddenly get better, you know."

"It'll be weeks before I'll be able to be about as usual. I can tell by the feel of it, my dear."

Ursula sat down limply on a chair. It was her custom to keep her grandmother company while she ate. Either the invalid had a good appetite, or she ate very slowly, but it seemed ages before she finally finished.

"Is everything in order downstairs?" asked the old lady. It was her daily question after dinner.

"I've cleaned up as usual," answered Ursula.

"How's the parlor?" asked the old lady sharply, "I'm particular about the parlor, you know. Everything dusted? You never can tell when some one will drop in."

Ursula could not answer. She saw too plainly the blue china dog undusted. So she asked a question instead of answering one. "Did Hamby have a letter for me when he brought the mail bag?"

"None for you, Ursula," answered Grandmother, "but one for me from your Aunt Nelly. She is coming home to take care of me. Where are my glasses, Ursula? Get them and I'll read what she says. I think she's coming tonight."

Ursula was too dazed to speak. Mutely she found the desired glasses. Aunt Nelly coming tonight! Why—why that meant she could go home. Yet even if she did go, how could she raise enough money in one short week to cover a whole long term? It was too late, too late! Oh, why couldn't Aunt Nelly have come sooner?

"Let me see," Grandmother was saying, as she glanced over the letter. "Yes, she comes tonight after supper. And then, my little housekeeper, your duties will be over! You can go home whenever you want, but I'm hoping, child, that you'll stay a little while. It will be lonely without the patter of your feet and the sound of your voice."

Ursula came close and laid a slim arm around the old lady's stooped shoulders, but she couldn't say a word. Grandmother patted her cheek. "You've been a good girl and a cheerful, conscientious worker, dear. Now take down the tray and eat your dinner, and when your dishes are done and everything is in order, come back to me. I have something for you."

"Grandmother!" Ursula could hardly speak. Her eyes glittered with a wonderful, new-born hope. A present! Oh, could it be possible that Grandmother would give her the necessary money for Dean Academy? The hands that carried down the tray actually shook.

It was quite impossible to eat any dinner, though Ursula made an effort to choke down a few mouthfuls. The present! She was almost positive it was what she hoped for. Queer that not once during the summer had she thought such a thing possible. After all, was it possible? "Grandmother Phillips is too poor to give you the tuition charges," something seemed to say to her. "Oh, how could I ever think of such a thing?" she moaned to herself. "I know she can't. But then, she said she had something for me! I've never said much about Dean Academy to her, but maybe mother wrote."

There was a big temptation to stack the dishes and rush upstairs. Then, remembering the little china dog, never dusted all summer, she made herself, by sheer force of will, wash them. Never had dishwashing seemed such an endless task. Several times she came near dropping a plate, and the more she hurried, the harder to clean the kettles seemed.

Finally the last dish was put away and the kitchen hurriedly swept. She flew upstairs, hastily bathed her face and trembling hands, smoothed her hair, and, trying very hard to breathe naturally, went to her grandmother's room.

There was the old lady in her chair, fast asleep! Ursula thought she must scream, but instead she sat down on a little stool and waited, her hands clasped tight together in her lap, her lips moving nervously.

In about 20 minutes, which, to Ursula seemed fully so many hours, Grandmother stirred, opened her eyes, and smiled at the girl.

"Everything in order?" asked the out you. No hired housekeeper and nurse would have done so well, nor been so kind, dear child."

Ursula flushed happily and a little guiltily.

"I've enjoyed having you, my dear," went on Grandmother calmly, "and I want to give you a little something before you go, a funny little present, but one I think a great deal of, Ursula. I never could give it away, but you shall have it." Grandmother stopped a moment for breath and Ursula grew a little pale. Could she be mistaken, after all? "Now, if I had lots of money I'd reward you handsomely. But remember that what I am giving you was always very precious to me." Ursula got up from the stool; she felt that she was smothering. "Down in the parlor," went on the old lady softly, "away up on the mantel, if a dear little blue china dog. He was given to me when I was a little girl and I want you to have him and take him home with you."

Ursula stumbled out of that room and into her own, where she flung herself across the bed and smothered her long, racking sobs in the big pillows. Oh, that miserable little china dog! No wonder he had smirked at her this morning! She'd never take him home with her—never. She'd go downstairs this very minute, get the ladder, and dash him to the floor in a thousand pieces. Never again would he bother her!

She jumped off the bed, hot with rage and disappointment, and flew downstairs to the shed. She dragged the big stepladder out and took it into the parlor. She looked up at the top of the mantel, where sat the little china dog gazing down at her. Ursula hesitated. "I won't break you, but I'll leave you up there, undusted.

Good-by! I'm going up to pack my things, but I shall not take you along."

Ursula started to walk upstairs, stopped, conscience-stricken. Grandmother would be coming downstairs one of these days, and then she would see the little china dog still high up on the mantel. She would know then that her granddaughter had put a mercenary value on services that should have been given in love. Burning shame filled Ursula's heart, and she sank down on the lowest step. What mattered Dean Academy, after all, compared to losing the respect and love of her grandmother?

Up the ladder she climbed until she could reach the little dog. He was quite heavy. In fact he rattled, and there was a slit on the top of him. Ursula's eyes opened wide. Hastily she poked a hairpin into the slit and brought out an old green bill with a V in the corner! Ursula almost tumbled down the ladder. There were others inside.

She was upstairs, her head and the little china dog in Grandmother's lap. "Oh, did you know, Grandmother, did you?" she asked.

"Why, of course," laughed the old lady. "I put pennies and dimes and bills in that dog for years and years, and I just never could make up my mind to break him to get the money. There must be quite a sum in him, Ursula, and it's yours. You're to break the little blue china dog, dear."

Ursula sat up straight, her cheeks flaming. "Never! I'm going to keep him as long as I live! Now I know why he smiled. O Grandmother, I hated him! It seemed as if he knew I wanted to go to Dean Academy, and there he sat smirking at me. I haven't dusted him all summer long."

finished Ursula with a breathless gasp.

Grandmother Phillips laughed. "Well, I should hope not! We never do. I put him up high so that no one could reach him. I wash him very carefully myself twice a year at housekeeping time. Now, break him, Ursula and we'll count the money. I hope there's enough for a couple of years at the Academy."

But Ursula pressed grandmother's hand against her cheek, and never made a move to break the little blue china dog. "He's mine, and I'm going to keep him all my life."

When Aunt Nelly arrived quite late that evening, there sat Ursula at Grandmother Phillips' knee, with a hairpin and oceans of patience, drawing out bills and shaking coins out of the little old blue china dog, while the old lady dozed comfortably.—Lily Waudel, in Forward.

THE MODERATOR'S PLEA

REV. ALEXANDER SPRUNT, D. D.

Charleston, S. C.

We shall all agree, very likely, that there are no more willing and faithful workers for the Master and His Church than our noble band of Missionaries, and, maybe, there are none more ready to deny themselves for His sake. With many of them, their whole career is a life of self-denial, from beginning to end. But is it really necessary that they should be hampered in their usefulness and subjected to the trials and distresses of body, mind and soul which is the common lot of the average missionary of our Church? There is scarcely a single honest member of our Church anywhere who believes we could not do more for them and for their efficiency and comfort. The movement to provide an Equipment fund for our wider usefulness and success at home and abroad is certainly wide, and an intimation of better things. May we all endeavor to carry it on to a glorious fruition, and may the day soon come when there shall be no lack.

Durham, N. C., July 25, 1923.

Dr. M. E. Melvin, Gen'l Sec'y.
Chattanooga, Tenn.

My dear Dr. Melvin:

The Session of this church has voted unanimously to assume, for this congregation, the amount of $7,200.00 of the Assembly's Equipment Fund; the same to be devoted to the erection of a Bible School building at Soonohun Station, Korea, said amount being the estimated cost of such building.

The late George W. Wette, a beloved Ruling Elder and Superintendent of our Sabbath School was deeply interested in that work, and after visiting that field, pronounced it the best investment of his life; as this fund is to largely come from our Sabbath School it will be in loving remembrance of him from the many young persons brought under his helpful influence.

It is understood we are to have three years, more or less, in which to pay same.

Very sincerely,

David H. Scanlon

HOW SHIVAR MINERAL WATER RELIEVES RHEUMATISM

According to the standard medical books, Rheumatism is not a germ disease but is the result of imperfect nutrition. The food is either imperfectly digested or imperfectly assimilated. Poisons accumulate and these irritate and inflame the delicate linings of the joints, the heart and other organs. To relieve Rheumatism it is therefore necessary to stop the formation of these poisons and get rid of those already formed.

The celebrated Shivar Mineral Water acts on the stomach and kidneys. It corrects the digestion and washes out the poisons through the kidneys. This is the opinion of physicians who prescribe it. If you suffer from rheumatism, dyspepsia, indigestion, disease of the kidneys, bladder or liver, uric acid poisoning, or any curable condition due to impure blood, read the following letter, then sign it, enclose the amount and mail it. Only two out of a hundred on the average report no benefit.

Shivar Springs,
Box 3 B, Shelton, S. C.
Gentlemen:

I accept your offer and enclose herewith three dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if I report no benefit you agree to refund the price of the water in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return within a month.

The London cockney, who leaves off his h's from some words and adds them to others, is the constant sport of newspaper and magazine writers. Here is a recent example from Tit-Bits: A district visitor was calling on Mrs. Harris, a new arrival in the village.

"You seem to have a good many children, Mrs. Harris," said the visitor.

"Yes, mum," she replied, "and what's more, all their name begin with haitech. There's 'Uberty, my oldest. Then comes 'Ilda, 'Arriet and 'Orace. Then there's 'Arnold and 'Arry and 'Ector and 'Onoria. They're all haiteches—all except the baby, and we christened her Holive."

Sibilant Praise

There was a commotion in the rear of the theatre, and the usher was seen ejecting a man. The man was sputtering angrily when the manager of the theatre came into the lobby.

"Why did you eject this fellow?" asked the manager.

"He was hissing the performance," replied the usher.

"Why did you hiss the performance?" asked the manager.

"I d-d-d-didn't h-h-hiss," sputtered the man. "I m-m-m-merely s-s-s-said t-t-to m-m-my f-f-f-friend beside me, 'S-S-S-S-Sammy, is-s-s-n't the s-s-s-s-singing s-s-s-s-superb?"—Ex.

"Oh, George, I'd much rather have a touring-car."—Life.

SOUTHERN PRESBYTERIANS

THE ten Synods which severed their connection with the Old School Assembly in 1861 were for the time being in an anomalous and acephalous condition. Each was an independent entity. But they were closely drawn together by community of views, sympathies, and interests. Hence immediate steps were taken to integrate into a General Assembly. By correspondence among the leaders, arrangements were made for holding a convention in Atlanta, in August of 1861. This convention sent overtures to all the Presbyteries, asking them to appoint commissioners to meet on the 4th day of December, 1861, in Augusta, Ga., to organize a General Assembly. The Presbyteries took action as requested; and at the time and place appointed, 93 commissioners, 55 ministers and 38 ruling elders, met together in the First Presbyterian Church. Dr. J. N. Waddel nominated Dr. Francis McFarland, from the Synod of Virginia, for temporary chairman. The nomination was approved. On taking the chair, Dr. McFarland proposed that Dr. B. M. Palmer, of New Orleans, should preach the opening sermon. This proposal was cordially accepted by all the commissioners. It is not to be supposed that Dr. Palmer was taken by surprise. He knew to a moral certainty quite awhile beforehand that he would be called on to render this service. He loaded his gun accordingly, and it goes without saying that he put in a heavy charge. His text was Eph. 1:22, 23: "And gave Him to be head over all things to the church which is His body, the fulness of Him that filleth all things." We will give but one short passage, as a specimen of the thunderbolts which he hurled: "But a little while since it was attempted in the most august court of our Church to place the crown of our Lord upon the head of Caesar—to bind that body which is Christ's fulness to the chariot in which Caesar rides. The intervening months have sufficiently discovered the character of that state under whose yoke this church was summoned to bow the neck in mute obedience. But in advance of these disclosures, the voice went up throughout our land in indignant remonstrance against the usurpation, in solemn protest against the sacrilege. And now the Parliament of the Lord's freemen solemnly declares that by the terms of her great charter none but Jesus may be King in Zion. Once more in this distant age and in these ends of the earth, the Church must declare for the supremacy of her head, and fling out the consecrated ensign with the old inscription, 'For Christ and His crown.'"

This sounds like a thunderous echo from the glens of Scotland, when the Stuart kings were trying, by the use of Caesar's weapons, to force Episcopacy on the church of our forefathers. Note well the doctrine preached; it is that the Church of the Lord Jesus Christ owes loyalty to no earthly power "that none but Jesus may be King in Zion." This goes deeper than Dr. Hodge's protest. That protest acknowledges the obligation of the Assembly to express "loyalty to our country." It merely denied the right of the Assembly to decide for all its members to which country their allegiance was due, and to make that decision virtually a condition of church membership. Dr. Palmer proclaims the doctrine that for the church to pledge its loyalty to any civil government is to take Christ's crown and place it on Caesar's head.

At the conclusion of the sermon, the Assembly was organized, Dr. McFarland still presiding. The roll was called, and the commissioners were enrolled. Their first act was to elect Dr. B. M. Palmer moderator. Then they elected Dr. John N. Waddel stated clerk, and Dr. Joseph R. Wilson permanent clerk. The Assembly adopted the Westminster Standards as its constitution, and chose as its name The Presbyterian Church in the Confederate States of America.

It is quite a common propensity to magnify the glories of the past in comparison with the present. But we believe it is only just to history to say that our Church at the time of its birth was blessed with a number of great men unequalled at any other period in its history. At the head of the list stood James H. Thornwell. He was pronounced by John C. Calhoun the "greatest mind on the American continent." As a philosopher he ranked with Sir William Hamilton; as a metaphysician with Jonathan Edwards; his eloquence was compared to that of Demosthenes; and as a theologian, his name is worthy a place by the side of the greatest of the past. All his transcendent gifts were laid with adoring reverence at the feet of his Saviour. Second only to him, and scarcely second to him, was Benjamin M. Palmer, whose massive mind and lofty eloquence put him among our nation's most illustrious sons. He made for himself the place of first citizen of New Orleans, and by the wisdom of his counsels and the majesty of his Christian character wielded a power to which all classes paid homage. Next to be mentioned is the name of John Leighton Wilson. He won wide recognition by his heroic labors in "Darkest Africa." He wrote a pamphlet which, falling into the hands of Lord Palmerston, Prime Minister of England, had a large influence in suppressing the slave trade. In later years, first as Secretary of the Board of Foreign Missions of the undivided church, and afterwards as the first Secretary of our Executive Committee of Foreign Missions, he came to be recognized as a leading missionary statesman. Joseph R. Wilson, elected by the first Assembly as permanent clerk, was richly endowed with various gifts. He was notably handsome, an intellectual countenance, a broad forehead, and eyes that would have been piercing had they not been usually twinkling with merriment when in conversation. As a preacher and writer and man of wide culture, he ranked high. Perhaps, however, his most lasting distinction will be due to his being the father of our great President, Woodrow Wilson. It would be unpardonable not to give special notice to Charles Colcock Jones. He was one of the choicest spirits of that generation. His intellectual gifts and attainments were of high order; but the one thing that marked him off from others was the sweetness and saintliness of his character. Inheriting an ample fortune, he devoted the greater part of his ministerial life to preaching to the negroes and ministering tenderly and sympathetically to their needs. He did this not only at his own expense, but at the sacrifice of honors which an appreciative church wished to thrust upon him.

Other names are found on the roll of that first Assembly that deserve to be signalized, such names for example as those of John N. Waddel and John B. Adger, one a distinguished educator, and the other an accomplished historian. But we cannot go further into detail. Only three names of great prominence are missing—R. L. Dabney, M. D. Hoge and Stuart Robinson. Doubtless their absence was due to insuperable obstacles. It was not by accident that the average ability of the first Assembly was so high. Knowing that this Assembly would be epoch-making, a land-mark in history, the Presbyteries made a point of sending their ablest men. Superior ability was not confined to the ministers; among the ruling elders of that Assembly was found some of the finest legal talent in the South.

Thus the Southern Presbyterian Church was launched and started on its career. The war-clouds were hanging in heavy folds over the land, and the greatest civil strife in the history of the world was already in its first stages.

MECKLENBURG PRESBYTERY

The opening day for the meeting of Mecklenburg Presbytery was too stormy for even an editor, and therefore the Presbytery was constituted without the blessing of his presence. On the second day, however, he was on hand and stayed by his comrades till dewy eve, when the final adjournment was had.

Rev. W. C. McLaughlin, missionary in China, was made moderator, and conducted the business with efficiency. This Presbytery has "a gentleman's agreement" to honor its returned missionaries by placing them in the moderator's chair whenever possible.

The proceedings of the first day will have to be gathered from the official report, but as to what was done on Wednesday, the writer is ready to vouch for the accuracy of this report.

Rev. A. W. Crawford in a clear and forcible manner set forth the work of Home Missions in Synod. We have often spoken of the excellent work done by this committee within our bounds. A comparison of our Home Mission work with that of any other Synod in the Assembly will show that we have made more progress within the last few years than any other.

Three young men were received under the care of Presbytery as candidates for the ministry—Claud McIntosh, of the Tenth Avenue Church, and Jack Hand, of the Second Presbyterian Church, both of this city, and T. F. Grier, of Central Steele Creek. Rev. J. G. Garth, at the request of the moderator, delivered the charge to the candidates, which was timely and in fine spirit.

The interests of Queens College then occupied the attention of Presbytery. There were present, besides Dr. Frazer, the president, and Rev. J. J. Walker, the financial agent, five of the trustees and the president of the board. Dr. Frazer brought in a most encouraging report. There are present this year 268 boarders and day pupils. Dr. Frazer made a most feeling address and was followed by Rev. J. J. Walker. A. E. McCausland, one of the trustees, made a strong speech, which evidently impressed the Presbytery. The point stressed by Dr. Frazer and those who followed him was that, according to the present status, a graduate of this college, if she chose teaching as her profession, would have to take $33.33½ less than a graduate of a State school or of a school of the A-grade.

Presbytery as a result of this discussion agreed to give 10 per cent of all contributions to educational institutions, and of this 10 per cent 20 per cent will go to Queens. This will enable the college to stand among the A-grade schools, so that her graduates will receive pay equal to that of any school.

Mr. J. B. Johnson, manager of Barium Orphanage, made an encouraging report of conditions there. He urged the pastors to take up the special Thanksgiving offering, but not to credit it to the budget.

The Standard was commended and recommended to the members of our churches.

The Home Mission Committee made a most encouraging report, with the exception of the lack of means with which to finish churches. At Corneliuss, Ellerbe, Norwood, Marshville, and Candor, there are churches built, but needing means for finishing the work begun. The story of the efforts of these brave workers was pathetic, yet the committee having no money is powerless. It was finally decided to make a special effort in the churches of Presbytery, beginning October 28th, to raise $5,000 for meeting these pressing demands. We hope that every Presbyterian in this Presbytery will strain a point to contribute, because the fact that there is this need is proof of the growth of Presbyterianism in our bounds and also of the activity of these young pastors.

Presbytery before adjournment elected W. E. Price, treasurer, in place of John R. Pharr, who for so many years has given faithful services.

Thanks were given to the people of Central Steele Creek Church and its pastor for the bountiful entertainment provided twice daily during its sessions. The writer exhausted the English language in trying to describe the entertainment at the Synods of North and South Carolina, else he would try to describe the fried chicken, the juicy and tender country ham and other edibles. He can only say that what he said of the entertainment of the other Synods applies most appropriately here.

CHURCH PAPER WEEK

On Sunday, November 4th, the regular canvass in behalf of the Church papers of our Assembly will begin.

In this work our Church has been practically the pioneer, so that other churches are quoting the action of our Assembly, in order to spur their own people into activity.

The success of this movement has been due to two causes. In the first place, common sense convinces our members that, as Presbyterians pride themselves upon the stress they lay upon an educated ministry, it follows that the church also needs an educated membership, and that the best way to attain that end is to have a membership, not only taught by the pulpit, but also by the religious press.

We need to reach the people in their hours of leisure, and not simply twice on Sunday. In this way we are training an intelligent constituency, who knowing the work in its different phases, will be ready to support it, not only with effort, but also with money.

The other great contributing cause to our success in extending the circulation of our religious press, is the fact that the Assembly very wisely laid this work on the consciences of our women. Of course our men are endowed with a conscience as well as our women; but it is not always one that is susceptible to the claims of duty.

The women are better organized along the different lines of church work and are not burdened with the pressing problems of business as are the men, with the result that they have given themselves whole-heartedly to this work, and have canvassed their respective fields with a zeal and thoroughness that must win success.

This good work has now gone on for several years, so that in time we shall find our people, almost as a unit, subscribers to one of our papers.

GOOD NEWS FOR OUR WOMEN'S COLLEGES

In our recent report of the proceedings of the North Carolina Synod we did not mean to imply that our women's colleges were left in the air by the action of Synod. They on the contrary are on a firmer basis than ever before, and unless we are greatly mistaken, they will soon take their places among the A-grade colleges. From the action of the Synod and the report of Chairman Hunter three things are clear:

1. We can count on the co-operative action of all educational institutions in the Synod and also of the Presbyteries.

2. Each Presbytery is to apportion the full 10 per cent of its contribution to benevolences.

3. Each church must send the full per cent direct to F. L. Jackson, treasurer, Davidson, N. C.

It is hoped that no church will undertake to charge off the Million Dollar Campaign or Davidson Campaign money to this account.

The success of this entire measure depends upon faithful compliance with the three points made above. If each church will faithfully follow these directions we shall see our colleges for women take their stand among the A-grade colleges of the land, where their ability and worth have long since entitled them to stand.

A RECORD TO BE PROUD OF

Our old friend and seminary mate, Rev. J. H. Morrison, D.D., of Holly Grove Arkansas, in a few months will reach the ripe old age of 75 years, having passed five years beyond the scripture limit of man's life. Like the old Scotchman who, when warned that he had only a short time to live, said that dying was the last thing he intended to do, Dr. Morrison is as busy and full of energy as if he were standing upon the threshold of the ministry instead of being near the dividing line between this world and the next.

At present he is pastor of three churches in Arkansas—Holly Grove, Marvell, and Valley Grove. He has been in the ministry 45 years, and has labored in Kentucky, Tennessee, Oklahoma, Alabama and Arkansas.

He has built 11 church buildings and organized 13 churches, at a cost of $57,500, and raised $96,000 for Daniel Baker College, at Talledega, and Monroe Hardy Orphanage. Under his influence 27 men have entered the ministry, and through his preaching, humanly speaking, 3,700 souls have confessed Christ.

When reading such a record, it will be easy for any of us to say from the heart, "We are unprofitable servants."

WHY WANNAMAKER WENT TO CHURCH

This business prince and Sabbath School workers left an answer, printed after his death, to the question, "Why I go to church?"—

"You might just as pertinently inquire, 'Why do I eat?' or 'Why do I sleep?'—because I find one is just as necessary to my well-being as the others. I could eat well and sleep well, and yet be a very miserable man without the spiritual uplift that only comes from attendance upon the divine ordinances.

"Then again, it is a great privilege to touch shoulders with the earnest Christian men who are also interested in promoting Christ's kingdom upon earth.

"I have made it the rule of my life to be in my regular place each Lord's Day when in health and in the community, believing that Paul was inspired to write that we should not forsake the assembling of ourselves together.

"I also believe that the temptations of every man are great, and unless he has more than the ordinary groundwork of honesty and faithfulness, he may be caught by the sudden wind of plausible opportunity and tumble over the precipice and be ruined."—Ex.

GRACE SUFFICIENT

An aged disciple quoted the promise, "My grace is sufficient," and the light that shone on his strong and kindly face showed that he had received the blessing in the present tense. He was not of the timid, dull-sighted, and dilatory kind who locate all the victories of the Gospel and the joys of the great salvation in an indefinite future. Whatever be your straits now, remember that the promise is for present needs. That promise is applicable to all cases and for all time.—Ex.

A MESSAGE

Yes:

Do not cease

In humble faith and love

To pray for help, and greater health and strength!

But think not in thy vision short that thou

Cans't scan unto its end, the path by which

The succor may arrive, nor cans't thou plan

The manner of approach. Dare not to say

"Help cannot come this way or that, because

Of laws inflexible which hold between

Their parallels our bodies and their ways;"

Nor think, forsooth, "This morbid trick of mind

Can ne'er forget itself, because so long

It has been haunting me!"

Thou

Cans't not tell!

For some glad day may bring

Unto thy frame,—sent by the Hand that holds

Within its grasp the laws it made for us,—

(Laws larger in their scope and touch than we Can understand),—a rush and glow of health,

Renewing all thy body, making naught

Th' unrest that fills thy mind. Or it may be

That through the mind, the wondrous light

may shine,

Making the heart so strong with courage, and

The spirit so alive with energy,

That will unheeded be thy pain, and all

The body's heaviness!

Or:

(Do not fear!

Perhaps,—and soon for thee,—

A greater thing than these shall come to pass.

A Hand may loose the silver binding-cord

And quitting then this suffering body with

Its troubled mind, thy strong untrammelled soul

In swiftest flight shall pass from earth's low plane

Through gates of death, to altitude of Heaven,

And seeking, find a freer, larger life.

—Hannah Allen Ives.

(On another page of this issue is the life story of this gifted woman whose death occurred August 22d. The fact that for her a "Hand has loosed the silver binding cord" will make her "Message" all the more appealing.—Ed.)

THE FOUNDATION— AND OUR DUTY
Psalm 11:3-4

By Rev. E. D. Brown, D.D.

(This was the opening sermon at the recent meeting of the Synod of North Carolina. It is published by request.)

Here we have a question and its answer. This Psalm is supposed to refer to a time when David was in great danger and was surrounded by timid and cowardly counsellors who urge him to give up and "flee." "Why wage a hopeless warfare? No use to keep on striving—the foundations are being destroyed—what can the righteous do?"

Foundation is defined as "That on which anything stands and by which it is supported." Also as "applying to all the institutions and principles on which public order and safety rest."

When we speak of the foundation of our religion, we mean that on which it rests. Some 20 years ago a noted writer and educator began the preface to a little book on some of the fundamental things with these words: "The whole Christian world is in a state of unrest. New and strange questions are asked everywhere. The ancient foundations seem to be unstable. If the foundations be destroyed, what shall the righteous do?" Sounds like it might have been written yesterday, doesn't it? Certainly the Christian world is in a state of unrest today. So-called "Modernism" is rampant in our own land, and the faith of many is being unsettled. I was asked this summer by a member of this Synod to define a Modernist. My reply was that one thing about him that had impressed me is that he is a man who seems to have no definite or settled religious convictions. He seems to be described for us in II Tim. 3:7, as one who is "ever learning, never able to come to the knowledge of the truth." Not my purpose, however, to discuss Modernism. But it does seem to me that we need to get our bearings and stand fast! We all need the lesson of this Psalm. Certainly the foundations are being attacked—by Modernism, and by other things. Let us, then, in a very brief way, consider some of these foundations and then try to apply the lesson of our text.

I. What Are Some of the Foundations on Which Our Religion Rests?

1. The Word of God—I feel sure that everyone here will admit that this is one of the foundations—has been called "The Citadel of our religion." If you take away God's Word, Christianity falls, and we are left without chart or guide. Yet it is being discredited on every side today. There is an insidious campaign against its integrity and authority. . . . It is said that the ancient Greeks succeeded in capturing Troy by means of an immense wooden horse—supposedly sent as a gift to the goddess, but really filled with a band of Greek warriors, who when night fell, came forth and opened the gates to the enemy. So today the attack on God's Word comes mainly from within—from those who are supposed to be its friends: . . .

The attack in its present form began perhaps in Germany, but the war has long since reached our own land and is waged vigorously. It is led very largely by men of scholarly attainments—in our schools, colleges, and theological seminaries—so that tens of thousands of our young people, who are to be our future leaders, are being overcome, and their faith unsettled.

Officials and trustees of church institutions here present know how difficult it is sometimes to find teachers who are sound in the faith, or text-books for certain departments which do not deny the inspiration of the Scriptures.

Brethren, the Word of God is being attacked, insidiously, but vigorously, and I feel sure you will agree with me that if God's Word is banished, not only our Church, but our Nation is doomed.

2. The Christian Home—Dr. Chapman has said that "when God started a nation, He began with a home." And the same is true of the church. The family is an institution that comes down to us from Eden, and is fundamental. It was divinely instituted for the propagation and training of a godly seed. But we have "progressed" so much that in many cases this fundamental idea is entirely overlooked.

Modern fiction, the comic supplement and the movies seem to be subsidized to carry on a propaganda against the sacredness of the marriage relation. And when a couple are found who live along quietly together and try to train their children as they should, they are looked upon as entirely out of date.

Dr. McMillan in his excellent book on Home Missions, says: "The homes which make the nation great are the homes in which Christ is honored." But from all over our Church comes the complaint, "Religion is sadly neglected in the home."

Another complaint is "Lack of discipline in the home," and it is stated that you "can't make good citizens out of children who have been trained to be lawless in the home." Why this lack of discipline? May not one reason be that there is no longer a legal head to a home? That we have gotten entirely beyond God's Word and denied the headship of the man, and made the woman a mere partner and competitor, instead of a help-meet for him? We have by law degraded marriage, as one has said, to "a mere partnership which may be dissolved at the interest or caprice of either party."

Contributed

Years ago Dr. Shearer gave this warning and prophecy to his classes at Davidson: "The two enemies which now threaten the integrity of the family are twin sisters—Woman's Rights and Easy Divorce." We have both. And that the Doctor seems to have been correct in his statement that they are twins—for the divorce evil is increasing by leaps and bounds, having more than doubled in our state within the last five years.

3. The Sabbath—Another institution that comes to us from creation—and is fundamental. . . . So important is it that "if there is no Sabbath, there's no religion; no religion, no God; no God, no conscience; no conscience, no respect for the rights of men; no respect for the rights of men, no security for either life or property." Take these away, and what have we left that is worth having? But men are diligently trying to destroy this foundation. There is an organized effort with millions of money to do away with the Sabbath. More than four million are every week making merchandise on the Sabbath.

4. The Christ. One other foundation, "The Christ of the Scriptures." Surely if there be any foundation for Christianity, Christ is. . . .

The attack on Him is a twofold one—on His Person and on His Work. (1) Even the most modern of the Modernists will admit, I suppose, that there was such a person as Jesus of Nazareth. But what sort of person? A mere man—the natural son of Joseph and Mary? But He said over and over that He was the Son of God, and God Himself so testified in audible tones. If He was merely a man—then He was a fraud! And if that be true there can be no hope for you and me. . . . (2) But what did He do? What was His mission? Was it merely to be a perfect Model? Was it to be a great Teacher? He was both of these. . . . But if that is all then there can be no salvation for us. . . .

He says that He "came to seek and to save that which was lost," "To give His life a ransom," to take our place, to "bear our sins in His own body on the tree." . . .

But we are glibly informed that He was not what He claimed to be. . . . That it is utter folly to hold to the idea that His sacrifice made satisfaction for our sins.

My brethren, if these four things I have mentioned are not some of the real foundations, then what are they? And they are being vigorously attacked. What then?

II. What Are We to Do About It? "What Shall the Righteous Do?"

The answer of our Scripture is a twofold one:

1. First of all, Trust in God! David's answer to his adversaries was: "In Jehovah put I my trust." "You say, If the foundations be destroyed, what shall the righteous do? and my answer is: Jehovah is in His temple, and His throne is in the heaven." And after all, my hearers, He is the determining factor in the case. The enemy may "take counsel together against the Lord, and against His Anointed, saying let us break their bands asunder," but they "imagine a vain thing," and "He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh." Therefore trust Him!

As a matter of fact the real foundations are not destroyed, nor can they be! Men in all ages have tried to destroy them and have failed and will continue to fail. You may find this illustrated in the case of either or all of these I have mentioned, e. g., the Scriptures, the Family, the Sabbath, the Christ. They haven't destroyed them and never will, because they are God's foundations and cannot be destroyed.

Then let us make sure that we are building on God's foundation. True His foundations cannot be destroyed, but it is also certain that unless we build on them our house will fall.

"On what foundation are you building?" . . .

2. But what can we do? The answer is plain: Have the courage, the manliness, to stand up for God and the right! Have convictions, and stand by them! "The righteous God loveth righteous acts," and we are plainly told here that we are being tested! "The Lord trieth the righteous." "His eyelids try the children of men." Shall we stand the test? or shall we fail Him? Shall we say as David's counsellors did, "Why wage a hopeless warfare?" Shall we help the enemy by saying, as men do today, "I don't believe in it, but it's coming, and we might as well get on the band wagon!" . . .

Some who call themselves men, seem to live with their ears to the ground trying to detect, as soon as possible, the direction the crowd is taking, that they may put themselves in the front ranks!

Let us not be afraid to fight against the crowd. "If God be for us, who can be against us?" If you stand up for God's foundations, some will call you an "old fogy." This will not harm you! Some people cannot pay me a higher compliment than to call me a "mossback!"

Let us remember we are being tested, and "the upright shall behold His countenance . . . but the wicked his soul hateth." Shall we sit idly by and suffer our fellow men—yea, our children—to be led into sure and awful destruction because we are too lazy or too cowardly to fight for "the Lord who bought us?" He is counting on us. Shall we fail Him? Our enemy is mighty, but we can be "conquerors and more than conquerors through Him that loveth us."

Then let us Stand Fast! and say with the Psalmist: "In Jehovah put I my trust." Or with Luther: "Here I stand; I can not do otherwise, God help me. Amen."

"Be strong!
Say not the days are evil—who's to blame?
And fold the hands and acquiesce—O shame!
Stand up, speak out, and bravely in God's name.
Be strong!
It matters not how deep entrenched the wrong,
How hard the battle goes, the day, how long,
Faint not, fight on. Tomorrow comes the song."
* * * * *

"Stand up! Stand up for Jesus!
The trumpet call obey;
Forth to the mighty conflict,
In this His glorious day.
Ye that are men now serve Him
Against unnumbered foes;
Let courage rise with danger
And strength to strength oppose."

SOME SUNDAYS IN THE OLD-WORLD

By Barbara E. Lambdin

I.
Madeira—Algiers—Syracuse—Cairo

To the trans-Atlantic tourist destined to Mediterranean ports the vivid Island of Madeira is of itself a rarely welcome sight, and as promising further wonders, for it is less than four hundred miles from the African coast.

Maderia—We reached the shores of the island, now a Portuguese possession, on a Saturday afternoon in late January. The sea was calm after a storm that the ship's log called a "dangerous gale," and the sun surely never shone on a more brilliant scene—a green mountain rising up right out of the ocean.

There is much bare rock at the top, extending the 30 miles of its length, and culminating in Pico Ruivo, 6,055 feet high. The miniature farms and gardens and the country residences of the rich are terraced above the sandy beach, as high up as anything will grow; and the houses: white, pink, blue and green, in delicate pastel shades, gleam out like gems spangled over a checkered scarf. High up above Funchal, the capital, is the small chapel of Terriero da Lucte. The lure of this little chapel, and the anticipated sledge-ride down over the steep cobble-paved mountain road, attract many American tourists on Sunday. It must be an enchanting trip, with luncheon at the lovely hotel, near the place where the exiled Emperor Charles of Austria died last year.

With the swift trophic night coming on, there was little time for sight-seeing or shopping Saturday afternoon, but the itinerary planned a full day for Sunday. The Christian Sabbath is not on the calendar of the tourist companies, so it is either follow their leading or your own conscience.

There is a handsome cathedral in Funchal and a number of Roman Catholic churches; also an Anglican and a Presbyterian church, which, however, we were unable to locate when we came over for worship Sunday morning. But we were fortunate in finding the Mission of the American Methodist Church, in the heart of the town, opposite the beautiful plaza.

For 45 years the devoted missionary and his wife, English people, have been working here, and the results of their labors are apparent. The population is a mixture of Portuguese, Moors and Negroes, and the natives who meet you to beg, or to sell, or to drive you up to town in their quaint bullock or mule-drawn sledges, have most forbidding countenances. They are quite distinct from the dominant classes, pleasure-loving and haughty, who are probably educated on the Continent. What has the Roman Catholic Church done with its 500 years of religious domination in Madeira?

We were given a most cordial welcome at the Mission, where one of our party, a Congregational minister who came with a message from some friends in America, made a brief address, translated by the missionary.

The intelligent, devout faces of the congregation impressed us greatly; so different from those seen on the street, though most of them evidently are from the same class. It was a wonderful experience to us, to worship and sing with them our Evangelical hymns—they in Portuguese, we in English—"Holy, Holy, Holy;" "Stand Up for Jesus," and others. At the close of the service hands were held out in greeting and Christian fellowship, where outside extended palms itched for the tourists' gold.

Afterward we were shown over the Mission, and carried away with us lovely lilies, poinsettias and other flowers from the garden in the rear with its tropical luxuriance and clear-gushing fountain. Our faith was much strengthened by this first glimpse of foreign missions on foreign soil, and we felt amply repaid for all that we had missed in the Sunday's sight-seeing.

Algiers—The sea approach to Algiers is somewhat similar to that of Funchal, Cadiz and Gibraltar, a high mountain frowning down upon a curved natural bay and harbor. But Algiers resembles a great cliff-dwellers' mound. The tall five and six story buildings follow the Boulevard de la Republique for several miles in a straight level stretch; above, the cream-tinted houses pressed against the side of the hill like a huge clay honeycomb.

Algiers has at least three "holy days"—the Mohammedan on Friday, the Jewish on Saturday, and the Christian; so most of the shops were open that Sunday, and the Mohammedan market doing a lively trade.

We started with the intention of attending the Scotch Presbyterian Church, but no one could help us find it. However, we entered several Catholic churches, where the people seemed to be constantly going and coming, remaining for a while to worship, all in silence, and then leaving.

In the Cathedral of St. Pierre, built from an old Moorish mosque, high above the altar is a large figure of Christ "of the Bleeding Heart" in the place that is generally, in the old world, Mary's throne. Before this, with no audible word, two priests wearing red caps were seated praying, one kneeling. The reverence everywhere was a lesson to us.

The Moorish people look very poor, many ragged and dirty; the women in the shrouded garb that Islam gives them, only their eyes and feet visible, for numbers were barefooted. France has a compulsory education law, from which the Moors are exempt, and they show it! They seemed sullen, even hostile, but they are not beggars!

Syracuse—Quarantine conditions prevented spending our next Sunday, as anticipated in Athens, perhaps quietly with Paul on Mars Hill; and gave us another Sunday on "The Homeric" at sea—on the Mediterranean, his highway to the Gentile world. Previously, instead, we had visited Syracuse, and seen in the ancient Church of St. Marcianus the pulpit of stone from which it is claimed that Paul preached during the three days that he spent there.

Cairo—A Sabbath in Egypt! The land of the Pharaohs, the land visited by Abraham, Jacob and Joseph, the land of the "oppression," the land that gave hospice to our Lord, the land where 50 centuries look down upon the world of today!

Our objective, that first Sabbath morning, was the Scotch Presbyterian Church of St. Andrew. The sermon was good, and the congregation worshipful, though small. Many wore red fezzes, which we discovered afterward is merely a sign that the wearer is a native Egyptian. It must be discouraging to be the pastor of a church on the fringe of such a world pleasure-ground as is Cairo.

On our way back to our hotel, the "Continental," where afterward Lord Carnarvon died, we stepped into the Anglican "All Saints Church," but the service, which seemed to us very "high," was about over. Tablets at both churches held the "Honor Roll" of the congregation, and it was noticeable that more of these boys had died of disease than from wounds or in battle.

In the evening we attended service at the American Mission, carried on jointly by the United Presbyterian and Reformed Churches. It was the English-speaking service and the attendance was excellent. Dr. Chas. R. Watson, president of the American University of Cairo, preached a splendid but very long sermon, and afterward communion was celebrated. It was heart-warming to see so many of the native people partake of the sacred elements.

Our second Sunday morning in Cairo saw us again at the American Mission; this time for the 9:00 o'clock native service. We learned later that at the same time a meeting for Armenians was being conducted in the Mission building. The service was entirely in Arabic, the native pastor reading the Scripture lesson, and Dr. Watson preached on "Character Building," Prov. 14:34.

The hall, located in the heart of the city, has above the pulpit in Arabic and English, "Holiness Becometh Thy House, O Lord." It was comfortably full that morning—the men, all wearing red fezzes, on one side; the women and children on the other, and though some of the children were quite small, the attention and conduct were perfect. Again, there was such a marked difference between the men and women here and those we met on the outside—in general appearance, in face, in apparel! The difference between light and darkness!

The American Mission is doing a notable work, religious, educational and medical. We regretted that an earlier leaving than anticipated prevented our accepting an invitation to "tea" at the Girls' School. It is a joy to the soul to see with one's own eyes such evidence of the power of Christ in this citadel of the "False Prophet;" and we became willing helpers in giving out Arabic tracts as we came in contact with guides, hotel employees and other natives.

QUIET TALKS ON THE SIMPLE ESSENTIALS

By Mr. S. D. Gordon, Bijou Theatre, Boardwalk, Atlantic City, N. J., July-August, 1923, Auspices Atlantic City Council of Churches

No. 18—A Second Chance

Will God play fair? Is there a second chance after death?

The commonest answer everywhere is this: We'll pull through somehow. And lately a word has been added, "easily."

There are those, called Universalists, who say that there is a disciplinary value in punishment after death, and then all are included in the universal salvation.

There is a sort of first-cousin group to these who would include Satan and all his hosts. These call themselves Restorationists.

Others say that you won't have a second chance after death because there is no "you" left then. These say that if you believe in Christ you are saved, and if you don't, when you die that's the end of you. They call this Conditional Immortality. Others called them Annihilationists.

The common orthodox answer says if you believe in Christ you are saved, otherwise damned, unqualifiedly. This is the answer of a diminishing minority.

Now turn to the Book. It is the one dependable source of information. Its answer in effect is this: so far as the character of God's love is concerned, man's chance never runs out; but—underscore that but—but, so far as man's decision is concerned there is not another chance. And man's decision is the final thing. He casts the decisive ballot.

The old Book is chock full of statements that death is the dividing line of opportunity. But it also makes it unmistakably clear that everyone shall have the fullest, fairest opportunity. And on his use of that opportunity hinges his future.

It is striking to find that God is controlled here by a principle of strong, tender love. It is this: every man shall be utterly free to choose, and always will be, so far as God is concerned.

At the beginning of the Book there are two, standing in a garden, by a tree. It is distinctively the Tree of Choice. God is saying in effect: "Please don't eat of this tree, simply because I ask you not to."

"This is your opportunity to choose to keep in intimate touch with me, with all that involves. But you're free to do as you please."

Now on the last page of the Book is this: He that is set in his choice to be unrighteous, still let him be utterly free to follow the bent of his choice, even though it be to choose the wrong. And the threefold variation following gives the peculiar emphasis of repetition.

Now, slowly turn the leaves from first page to last. And you find a ceaseless repetition of this: Choose; choose right; don't choose the wrong; but you choose, with countless illustrations of bad and good choice.

With that principle goes a process. It is the process by which man goes—the pen sticks in the paper with sheer pain—by which man goes to hell. No one is sent there, nor put there by superior physical force overcoming his own choice.

Every man there goes on his own feet, in his own shoes, by his own free choice, against the will of a broken-hearted God. In the Cain story He said, "Thou hast driven me out." But a few lines lower down it says that "Cain went out."

The Eden story on the previous page uses the same words "drove out." Clearly the driving power was moral. Utterly abashed and humiliated before that pure Face the guilty pair shrank away. The Book is full of just this.

Now, what are the chances that a man who chooses not to choose what he thinks the right now, will chance his choice across the dividing line of death?

You know there is a science of chances. The life insurance companies do a business in billions, based on the findings of certain experts in the sciences of chances as applied to length of life. The Britannica has 28 pages of close print on the science of chances.

This is a question of chances. What are the chances here? Let me put it this way. The man who thinks in his inner heart he ought to accept Christ as his Saviour now, with whatever change of habit that implies, but he doesn't, simply doesn't, he is a—listen softly, please, it's hard to tell the story lest it sound only harsh.

He is a fool. He isn't even a bright fool. I'm talking just now solely from the standpoint of the science of chances.

Why? Because he has made a choice. And the choosing power in him is like the concrete mixture, it has become set. A hardening has begun. Not much, but some. And that goes on. It gets harder and more set, like the concrete. Until by and by it loses the power of changing.

For, mark keenly, the thing that softens a hardened will here back to normal freedom of action, is not pain, not suffering, not judgment. It is the thing commonly called the grace of God. This man shuts out the one normalizing factor.

And so I repeat again the sentence put down at the start. So far as the character of God's love is concerned man's chance never runs out; but—but, so far as man's decision is concerned there is not another chance. And man casts the decisive ballot. He has the last say.

The science of chances and the old Book of God tally. God may be broken-hearted by the way man uses His freedom of choice, but He never takes that freedom away. God plays fair.

A BROKEN SOUL

By W. H. Morse, M.D.

"A fracture case."

The office girl had written it on the slate, and I found it there on my return to the office.

"Were there any particulars, Sevenska?" I asked her. "None," she replied, "except that they said it was a bad break."

I took down the name and address, with anticipations of a compound or comminuted fracture, deserving of the name "bad." "Describe no other fracture as serious, and—see to it that this description does not fit the case very long," was the way that my old preceptor, Dr. John Swinburne, was accustomed to put it.

It was a woman's name—Mary Wise, and the address was on Market Street. The locality is not the worst in the city, but its old tenements, saloons, and foreign population do go together, to give it the characterization of "the east side," and to make the accent opprobrious.

"That is apparently an American name," the girl said, "but I did not suppose any one lived there but Hungarians, Jews and Italians!"

I had the same impression, and retained it when a half-hour later I knocked at the door of the tenement which bore the number which I sought. The impression was given approval when in response two or three Italians came to the door.

"I am the doctor," I said, "I came to see Mary Wise."

"Chi?" one of the men demanded with a scowl.

"Mary Wise," I replied, "the woman who has a broken bone. Where is she?"

The answer was in Italian, and I called a boy from the swarm on the sidewalk to act as interpreter.

"He says," the boy explained, "that there is no one here with a broken bone, and no Mary Wise."

That was perplexing. I replied that a messenger had left word at my office that Mary Wise, at that number, had a fractured bone, and that it was a serious fracture. I insisted that there must be some foundation to it, and that I should see the case; but the men shook their heads, and protested that there had been no accident.

I began to despair, and was about to turn away from the door, when a boy said something in Italian to the men. He had hardly got the words out of his mouth when one of the men seized him and administered several blows on his ears, and then threw him off the steps into the mud.

"See here, Friend! what is that for?" I asked.

The little interpreter answered.

"Tony says he was the one who went for you, and that Maria sent him!"

"Maria? Who is she?" I asked.

"Maria Saggio," was the reply. "She is Pietro Saggio's girl."

He indicated Pietro as the man who had punished the boy.

"I would like to see Maria," I said. "She has hurt herself, has she not?"

"No!" Pietro answered. Then, with an oath, he ordered me to leave the place.

"Saggio is wise," the interpreter said in a low tone.

"Go down to the corner," I said to him quietly, "and ask the policeman to come up."

I stepped back to the curbstone, and the officer came. He had my explanation in a few words.

"Saggio," he said to the man, "your girl got hurt? Sent for a doctor? Why can't he see her?"

Saggio replied in his own language, and the officer understood.

"Huh!" he said. "I see." Then, turning to me, he said, "Better not interfere, Doctor! Family trouble. No broken bones. It is this way: His girl, Maria, has got in the habit of running to the Mission meetings, and he has her shut up upstairs, to punish her. He'll stop that foolishness!"

The officer was an Irishman, and his own prejudices evidently tallied with that of the man. I was more anxious to see the girl than before.

"That is it, is it?" I said. "But that man is ugly. He has just boxed a boy's ears unmercifully. He may have broken the girl's arm or leg in his fury. I must see her."

The policeman agreed with me, and informed Saggio that as I had been called to reduce a fracture, I should see the girl. The man vehemently protested, but the officer prevailed, and accompanied me to the girl's room on the third floor. Saggio, with several other Italians following him, unlocked the door and I went in. The officer, putting his hand on the key, kept the men back.

I found a girl of fifteen, sitting at the window, sewing. As I entered she left her chair, and came forward, smiling.

"I am glad you came, doctor," she said.

"What about the broken bone?" I asked.

"O, not that!" she said. "Not a broken bone! A broken soul, sir!"

She took from her bed an Italian New Testament, and opening it, pointed out these words in Psalms 119:20: "L'Anima mia si stritolata."

In English this is "My soul breaketh."

"Doctor," she said, "I have got a broken soul. That is it."

"Well?" I said.

"Father cares nothing for the Catholic Church," she said. "He never goes to mass. He hates priests. He is like all the men around here. But when he found that I was going to the mission he was mad. He forbade me going. But I had made up my mind to give my heart to Christ, and I have kept going. He only cares because he says that I'll be married sometime, and unless a priest performs the ceremony it will not be legal. I want to go to prayer meeting tonight, and he locked me in. I threw the note out of the window to Tony, to have you come, for if I had sent for the minister, he would not let him in." She wanted to get out, as she was to give her testimony at the meeting that night. Would I not aid her?

At my request she removed her left arm from its shirt-waist sleeve, and I put it in splints and bandages. This done, I rapped for the officer, who opened the door.

"This patient," I said, "must have proper care. Call the hospital ambulance."

Saggio pressed forward, and began to cry, declaring he did not know that Maria had been hurt. Was it bad? Would she have to stay in the hospital long? I declined to discuss the matter. When the ambulance came, he kissed the girl, and promised to see her at the hospital next day.

At the hospital the bandages were removed, and she went to a friend's house. That evening, at the prayer meeting, she related her experience, and two days later, on Sunday morning, was baptized.

Her father heard of it after the meeting. Instead of being angry, he went to the minister in charge of the mission, with a burning question.

"Would it be legal for a Protestant clergyman to perform her marriage ceremony?"

Assured that it would be, he was satisfied. He not only took Maria home, but he began to attend the mission services, and a few months later was baptized.

In the mission there is no more zealous worker than the girl, "Mary Wise," as she is known. The pastor tells me that he cannot begin to tell how many of her people she has been the means of leading to Christ. Full of energy, she works untriflingly, bringing others to the mission, and sending Italian Scriptures to friends in Italy who heretofore have been deprived of them. Her father is proud of her.

Meeting her but yesterday, I said to her, "Not married yet, heigh! Still Miss Wise?"

"The dear Lord is my marito (husband)," she replied. "He healeth the broken in soul."

KINDLY CONSIDERATE

For years it has been the custom of engineers on the Santa Fe Railroad to sound their shrill whistle when passing a little red cottage on a hill near Delmar, Cal. Recently the engineers noticed that daily two little cribs were moved out on the porch and that the shrill whistle frightened the twins and brought the little mother in her blue dress from her work to comfort them. The word was passed along and now the engineers pull the whistle cord a mile after they have passed the cottage. A letter of thanks was received at the Santa Fe office from the little red house on the hill. We would all be happier if the daily press recorded more of these kind ministries instead of so many crimes and sins.—Ex.

CHURCHLESS CHURCHES AND MANSELESS MINISTERS

Synod of North Carolina

Report of the special committee on Church and Manse Erection to the Synod of North Carolina, Graham, October 10, 1923. Rev. John S. Foster, D.D., Chairman.

The ad-interim committee on Church and Manse Erection appointed at the last meeting of Synod submits the following report:

The interest of the Synod in an adequate Church and Manse Erection Fund is not of recent origin. Your committee therefore has had opportunity to carefully consider the policies of former years and the results which have attended their prosecution. These programs cover a period of 23 years and afford a sufficient basis for wise deductions. They may be classified under two heads as evidencing two general methods of procedure.

The first was the policy of seeking subscriptions and making calls upon individuals throughout Synodical bounds. Whether followed under the names of "The Chandler Building Fund," "The Twentieth Century Building Fund," or "The Church and Manse Erection League of the Synod of North Carolina," there was unity in the underlying principle. From 1900 down to the present time slightly over $20,000 have been secured through this method. It is true they were not functioning each year of the period mentioned, which is only added emphasis to the inability of the policy to yield adequate returns as the results both in expenditure and income did not justify further labors on the part of those who gave their best talents with unabated zeal to have these policies bear rich fruitage. Each recurring Synodical year was faced with a call for Church and Manse Erection funds far in excess of receipts. It is the unanimous judgment of your committee that this policy should never again be invoked by the Synod as offering a wise solution of its problems of Church and Manse Erection.

The second policy of meeting the needs with which this report is concerned is that now being followed by the Synod through its Home Mission Committee. It is the policy of employing a portion of the salary fund of the committee for the cause of Church and Manse Erection. In 1921 the Home Mission Committee set apart $5,000 of its general fund for this purpose. It has pursued this policy for three successive years, the amount thus expended totalling approximately $10,000. As this Synodical year draws to a close an additional $10,000 stands on the books of the Synod's Committee as appropriations to 17 churches and manses to be paid as receipts will justify, which amount must be carried over into another year with no provision to meet the obligation. In the meanwhile a most careful and painstaking inventory discloses 51 organized churches needing houses of worship and 50 Home Mission fields without manses. And side by side with these imperative appeals for funds to equip the work already inaugurated lie the needs of an ever-expanding work calling for every dollar of Synodical Home Mission contributions. At its session in Lincoln last fall, with deep spiritual earnestness, the Synod went on record as endorsing the forward movement policy of "a man in every field in the bounds of the Synod where there is an evident need of the work of the Presbyterian Church. "In obedience to these instructions the Home Mission Committee is going steadily forward in its great program of opening new fields, organizing new churches, and placing additional men.

As the blessing of God crowns this work two facts are beyond dispute: First, that the number of churchless churches and manseless ministers will be yearly increasing; second, that adequate means for assisting in the equipment of these fields cannot be provided. Our present policy must result in the serious crippling of one or the other, or the retarding of the work of both of these fundamentally essential factors in our denominational obligations to our Master and our State—sufficient funds for advancement in fields beckoning us onward and sufficient funds to equip fields already opened or which may be opened.

It is the judgment of your committee that the general funds of the Synod's Home Mission Committee can be made to care for the regular expansion work of the Synod but that a new and constructive policy should be formulated and pressed to meet the needs of Church and Manse Erection. This is the logic of the experience of the Synod with its tested policies.

The necessity for a Church and Manse Erection Fund is unquestioned. Without it our dollars expended in opening new work and in the labors of our consecrated and self-sacrificing mission workers cannot yield their maximum possibilities. Its realization would mean multiplied efficiency. It would more than double our usefulness and power. Your committee is decidedly of the opinion that the raising of sufficient funds to care for this factor in our work is worthy of the best energies of the Synod. It deserves to take rank with any other enterprise which challenges Synodical attention. It is worthy of being singled out and made the object of a united, prayerful and forceful appeal. In this connection we would quote the findings of "The Assembly's Advisory Council of Home Missions," which meets yearly. It is composed of the superintendents of the several Synods, or other officially appointed representative, together with the Assembly's Secretaries of Home Missions. The council meeting this year in August adopted the following in regard to Church Erection:

"It is the judgment of this council that the time has come in the providence of God when it is imperatively necessary that we make some large and adequate provision for Church and Manse Erection beyond anything the Church has previously known.

"We face this as the very result of the blessing of God in the advance already made, and in view of the large developments immediately facing us.

"It is our judgment that, unless such large and adequate provision can be made, we will be balked in every advance.

"We heartily endorse and commend to the whole Church the movement now on in the General Assembly for an adequate Equipment Fund, and any similar movements which are in progress or may be undertaken by the Synods or Presbyteries to meet their own individual needs.

"It is the judgment of this council that each Synod should at once determine its specific need for Church and Manse Erection, and undertake a special Synodical campaign for the raising of a fund adequate to that end."

Facing the unquestioned need and firm in the belief that failure to meet the need is retarding our denominational progress and preventing the full discharge of our denominational obligations, we make the following recommendations:

1. That the Synod approve and authorize the raising of $200,000 to be known as the Synod's Permanent Church and Manse Erection Fund.

2. That this fund be administered by the Synod's Home Mission Committee in the promotion of the tasks committed to its care along the lines of loans and donations in conformity with the following principles:

(1) The interest on the principal to be used as donations to weak and needy Home Mission Churches as the judgment of the committee may determine.

(2) The principal to be loaned to weak churches and churches of moderate ability unable to finance their needed building operations for Church and Manse Erection at an agreed rate of interest, the loan in the main not to exceed 50 per cent of the value of the property, said loan to be repaid the committee within a specified number of years.

3. That the Home Mission Committee be instructed to prepare and submit to the Synod for its approval the legal forms to be used in the handling of these trust funds.

4. That the Home Mission Committee be instructed to conduct the campaign, availing itself of the assistance of the ministers and officers of all the churches.

5. That the third Sunday in January, 1924, be designated "Synodical Church and Manse Erection Day;" that all churches be requested to take an offering for this cause, each church to determine for itself the period over which subscriptions shall be made; that a supreme effort be made on this day to secure this fund; that this be done under the direction of the organized forces of the individual church and that every department of the Church, including the Auxiliaries, the Sunday Schools and Young People's Societies, be urged to take their part in this campaign.

6. That Synod commend the cause of Synodical Church and Manse Erection to men of means as worthy of large gifts.

Respectfully submitted,

D. T. Caldwell, E. B. Crow,
A. S. Johnson, Letcher Smith,
A. W. Crawford, John S. Foster, Chm.,

NEW FRIENDS AND OLD

Make new friends, but keep the old;
New-made friends, like new-made wine,
Age will mellow and refine.
Friendships that have stood the test,
Time and change are always best.
Brow may wrinkle, hair turn gray,
Friendship never owns decay;
For 'mid old friends kind and true,
We once more our youth renew.
But, alas! old friends must die,
New friends must their place supply.
Then cherish friendship in your breast;
New is good, but old is best.
Make new friends, but keep the old;
Those are silver, these are gold.

Henry Van Dyke.

Woman's Auxiliary

Conducted by Mrs. J. M. McIver, Gulf, N. C.

Attention, Women Who Tithe!—The General Assembly's Stewardship Committee is preparing a pamphlet for women on tithing, called a " Fireside Talk With Women About Tithing," with the idea in mind of helping both the women who tithe and those who do not tithe. This committee is exceedingly anxious to include in this pamphlet a number of personal testimonials from the women of the church who have found it possible to tithe under difficulties, such as farmers wives, housewives without personal income except from their husbands, teachers, nurses and working women.

Women who read this, will you not sit down immediately and send your brief testimony to the General Assembly's Stewardship Committee, 410 Times Building, Chattanooga, Tenn. Do it now! You have found tithing not only possible, but profitable both financially and spiritually. Now you have the opportunity to help others with your testimony.

Charlotte, N. C., Westminster Church—The Woman's Auxiliary has made this year quite elaborate plans for their annual Home Mission study. They are uniting with the ladies of Chalmers Memorial A. R. P. Church, holding their meetings in Westminster Church. For each of the six chapters they have secured a different teacher or lecturer, some men and some women, all from outside our congregation. The time of meeting has been set as the next six Tuesday evenings at 8:00 o'clock. All the men and women of our congregation are invited to attend. The text-book is "The Child and America's Future," by Stowell. The leader for this week is Mrs. W. B. Lindsay.—Church Bulletin.

Group Conferences—The group conferences, held by the Abingdon Presbyterial, at Walnut Grove, Va., Presbyterial Church recently was a decided success. More than one hundred women and girls gathered at that ideal place to exchange ideas and to discuss the Woman's Work in the Southern Presbyterial Church.

The church was beautifully decorated in fall flowers, and true Virginia hospitality was extended by the hostess Auxiliary. A most delicious lunch was served at the noon hour.

Mrs. White Ryburn, president of the Presbyterial, presided. She spoke of the splendid co-operation given her by the organization, and extended to each one a most cordial welcome.

Discussions on the work were led by Mesdames: S. W. Edmundson, and Batemore, from Glade Spring, Va., Hassinger Stephenson and Campbell, from Abingdon, Va., H. E. Graves, Robt. Gray and Donald McIver from Bristol, Va.

The principal address was made by Miss Elizabeth McChesney, Home Mission worker, in our Presbyterial. She spoke of the loyalty of the people she labored among; of their desire for education, and religion; of the success of the work, and asked the members of the church by their prayers and funds to make a school possible for these unfortunate ones. An interesting feature was a typical circle meeting, presented by the Abingdon Auxiliary. It was the opinion of all, that this might well be used for a model circle meeting. The Foreign Mission study book, "The White Fields of Japan," was presented in a very pleasing way, by Mrs. V. G. Copenhaver, and her girls circle, from the Central Presbyterial Church, Bristol, Va.

As the conference closed each one felt as if the day had been spent in the Master's service.

CHURCH PAPER WEEK—NOVEMBER 4-11
Its success depends upon YOU! Begin now to get ready for it. You will soon receive a letter telling you how to conduct the Canvass to place a Church Paper in every home in your congregation. Be thinking about—Remember: ONE WEEK ONLY for the Canvass, but MAKE THAT WEEK COUNT!

Station AUX signing off 9:30 a. m., October 15th.

Savannah, Ga., Independent Presbyterian Church—The Women's Auxiliary was organized last Tuesday afternoon at a meeting which, for attendance and inspiration, was equal to the best traditions of this church. Monday was selected by the Auxiliary as "Church Day," and every woman in the congregation is urged to attend their great Inspirational Meeting tomorrow, Monday afternoon, at 4 o'clock.

Trinity Presbyterian Church, Montgomery, Ala.—Mrs. Margaret T. Russell—Mrs. Russell, who comes to us January 15th for a series of Bible lectures is a wonderfully gifted teacher having been for some time Bible teacher and field secretary of the Assembly's Training School. She is an Alabama woman, her husband having been general manager of the Mobile and Ohio railroad before his death, and Mrs. Russell still claims Mobile as home.

Each day at 10:00 in the morning and 7:30 in the evening Mrs. Russell will speak to us and all Bible students should avail themselves of this rare opportunity. Plan to come yourself, invite your friends and bring them with you.

Maxwell Presbyterian Church, Lexington, Ky—The co-workers' class of the Sunday School, comprising 50 of the women of the church who attend regularly, are a class that any church might well be proud of. This class raises nearly $1,000 a year by various ways and means, outside of their regular gifts to the Church and Auxiliary. At a great sale a few months ago, they served refreshments to those who attended and made several hundred dollars, and last week they held a lecture and musical at the senior high school, the lecture being given by Dr. J. Archer Gray, minister of the church, who spends his summers on the chautauqua platform. After expenses were paid they netted more than $150 clear. This goes into a fund called the Margaret Hopper fund. Miss Hopper is a member of this church and left for Mopko, Korea, a few months ago, to take charge of a girls school there.

PLAN OF THE CANVASS FOR "CHURCH PAPER WEEK"

November 4-11 is the time appointed by our General Assembly to persuade every family, which is not now reading a church paper, to subscribe for a church paper.

The Woman's Auxiliary in each congregation is requested to make an every family canvass for this purpose. The following plan is suggested which can be varied in each congregation as seems best.

Preliminary Work for the President and the Secretary of Literature of Each Auxiliary

1. Read the following carefully. Then study how to adapt each step of this plan to your congregation. You two must supply the "enthusiasm" to make it a success.

2. Arrange a conference with your pastor at which carefully talk over all the plans for the canvass. Call his attention to the action of the last Assembly which designated the week November 4-11 as "Church Paper Week," and also requested every pastor, on November 4th, to focus the morning service on the vital importance of religious literature in the reading and thinking of his congregation. Ask him to announce the canvass at both the morning and evening service on November 4th, and also at prayer meeting, November 7th, and to urge all those not now subscribers to one of the church papers to subscribe. The success of the canvass is determined to a large extent by his co-operation.

3. Secure from your pastor a complete list of the heads of families in your church. (The whole church roll is not needed. One name from each household is all that is necessary.)

Put a check mark opposite the name of every elder and deacon, every officer in the Auxiliary, and every active worker in the Church and Sunday School. Make your plans to persuade all these to subscribe for a church paper. Plan for the canvassers to see them first. Get 100 percent here and the rest of the congregation will follow more readily.

4. As soon as possible call a preliminary meeting of all the chairmen of the circles to make definite plans for the canvass. Each circle should be canvassed for subscriptions to the church papers by its own chairman. Each chairman is to select a woman from her circle to assist her in this. There is nothing better that a chairman can do to make her own circle reach the highest degree of efficiency than to persuade each woman in it to read a church paper regularly.

Make plans to give great publicity to the canvass. Announce it at all meetings; also in Sunday School, in the weekly bulletin, on the bulletin board, and any other way you can think of.

Work for the Entire Auxiliary

At the regular monthly meeting of the Auxiliary, or if necessary at a called meeting (before November 4)—

First, tell "The Reasons Why Every Family Should Read a Church Paper."

Then explain the plan for the canvass as outlined here.

Next, pair off the workers. Two persons working together can secure far greater results than two persons working separately.

To each pair of workers give part of the list of the heads of families. (The list of names and addresses given to each pair should be carefully written.)

These pairs of workers are to call on every family in the church, tell them why they should read a church paper, and persuade them to become regular subscribers.

When a call is made and there is no one at home, this should be noted and plans made to call again the next day.

Each pair of workers should give a full day, or at least a half day, at a time to the work. In this way the whole congregation can be quickly and completely canvassed.

The pairs should carry copies of the church papers with them and point out to prospective subscribers the interesting articles, departments, stories, etc.

Work only for new subscribers, that is, the introduction of a church paper into a home where it is not now taken.

The church papers will give $1.00 of the amount collected from each new subscriber to be used for any church cause you may select.

Do not collect renewals of subscriptions. No commission is allowed for the collection of renewals.

Send the names and addresses of the new subscribers that are secured, together with the money collected from them (after deducting $1.00 commission for each new subscriber), direct to the church papers.

The workers going in pairs, are to begin on Monday morning, November 5th. Each worker should read "The Reasons Why Every Family Should Read a Church Paper," and use the reasons to persuade every family to subscribe.

The Assembly's Stewardship Committee.

The Synodical Auxiliary of the Synod of West Virginia opened Wednesday, September 26th, Mrs. R. F. Dunlap, of Hinton, the president presiding.

The educational opportunities and needs of West Virginia were presented by Mr. Robinson for Davis Stuart and Dr. Moore, of Greenbrier College for Women. "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few; pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that He will send forth laborers into his harvest."

Dr. James O. Reavis, in a brief but graphic manner, presented Christ's appeal for Foreign Missions, "To look, to send, to go."

Mrs. Cockerham, Synodical president from Kentucky, added much to our meetings, through her inspirational talks, and the kindly council she was able to give us.

Mrs. William Echols, of Alderson, president of Greenbrier Synodical, conducted the mission study, "The White Fields of Japan." She brought to us many helpful suggestions of her own, as well as many which she had gleaned from the classes conducted by Miss Milligan, at Montreat.

The people of Richmond were most hospitable; an unusual feature being the tea given at the home of the pastor, Rev. H. L. Cathey, in September. At that time we were greeted by various city officials and were presented with souvenirs by the Cherry River Broom and Lumber Company, the Cherry River Paper Company, the Steele Wallace Corporation (manufacturers of clothes pins), and the William F. Moser Company, manufacturers of sole leather.

We thank the people of Richwood for their gracious hospitality and pray God's richest blessing upon them, and we pray that the good seed sown while among them, may spring up to bear abundant fruit throughout our Synod.

Presbyterial Auxiliaries of Lee (N. C.) Have Rally Saturday morning, October 13th, representatives from four societies, Sanford, Buffalo, White Hill and Jonesboro Churches met at the "old Mother Church," Buffalo, at 10 o'clock, for a get-together rally of their Auxiliaries. The day was beautiful and quite a number of ladies were present.

Miss Mary Weatherspoon, visitor of societies for Lee county, arranged the meeting, and worked faithfully for its success.

Mrs. R. E. Bobbitt conducted the devotional, which was followed by a splendid address by Mrs. J. R. Page, of Aberdeen, president of the Presbyterial, on "What Do We See?" Mrs. W. L. Wilson, of Elise, talked on "Bible Study," emphasizing the use of the Bible as a text book in Auxiliaries and the establishment of family altars.

Dinner of a most bountiful and pleasing variety was then served on the grounds, with hot coffee. In the afternoon Mr. W. L. Wilson, of Elise High School presented the needs of the school and told of its progress. He hoped that each county would furnish a room in the new dormitory and Lee would be called on for her quota of furnishings. Mr. Wilson said there were 21 candidates for the ministry now in school at Elise.

Mrs. Page presented Barium Springs Orphanage and spoke encouragingly of the progress being made there.

After Mrs. Wilson presented the four great causes of the Presbyterial Church, a round table discussion took place and reports were heard from the societies.

A SONG OF GREETING!

On this sweet day of happy memories!

'Twas Thine! 'Twas Thine!

And—Glory Be—'tis mine!

Mine, for the gladsome ending of my cares!

Mine for the joy of loving! Being loved!

Thine, that at Thy sweet feet, my heart

I laid, an Offering Eternal!

Thine! Thine! Yes, only Thine! And Thine alone

From that brave moment when we first did meet,

On, through all time! Past Time's last Portal! On!

Filling Eternity! Be it ne'er so vast!

For it is Thine! Thine! And Thou art mine!

A Song of Greeting

That choirs eternal heavenward shall swell

In poems of sheer happiness and joy!

That thou didst come to me, one sweet, fair day,

Give me Thine hand! Exchanging pledges true!

So, Thou art mine! Dear heart! And, I am Thine!

Knit in fetters of Eternal Love!

Heart bound to heart!

Life linked to life, for aye!

For come what may, of good or ill report,

Still must Love live! A never-dying flame!

Encompassing our way, uniting each

With th' other; till one life combined

Reveals itself! And thus, our perfect day

Of Love and Joy and Gladness, reign supreme!

My Song of Greeting,

Which this glad day first called to being fair,

Grows to sweet anthem strains—

(A host seraphic might with gladness raise;—)

Poems of gladness! Thanks to Heaven above

For the sweet gift of Thine Eternal Love!

I greet Thee! Lady!

Queen of heart and home!

And at Thy feet, my heart, I gladly lay!

Thy willing self! Thy wish, my chief desire!

Thy joy my aim! Thy happiness my goal!

May Heaven's Eternal King Spare each to each

These many years, in holy, peaceful love.

I greet Thee!

Sweetheart!

Queen!

YOUNG PEOPLE'S DEPARTMENT

W. ARNETT GAMBLE, JR., Editor

ADDRESS ALL COMMUNICATIONS TO THE DEPARTMENT EDITOR, COLUMBIA SEMINARY, COLUMBIA, S. C.

IDIOTR'S LOOKOUT

The report we give in our department of some Junior C. E. officers, states that they are "doing their full duty." We do not know with what real accuracy or from what point of view this statement was made, but it expresses a desirable condition. How many of us are doing our full duty? How many of us are working, and how many passing the burden to someone else? Doing one's full duty is a high and worthy standard.

The Sunday School class and the young people's society are fine places in which to develop the habit of doing well whatever work we have accepted. The Sunday School as the study school of the church and the young people's society as the training school of the church, are fields of opportunity for developing worthwhile standards and habits. Don't miss the opportunity.

A growing organization is always a thing of interest. The editor recently visited the C. E. Training Class of Davidson College. This class has begun the year's work with a membership that shows a great increase over the highest previous number enrolled. Students who are preparing for the ministry and those who expect to be Christian laymen are studying young people's work.

The class of work done by this group has been told in our columns before. We hope to have soon an account of their recent activities. These college men are anxious to make themselves useful to the churches. They have done a good service in the past and desire to be used more largely in the days ahead. They have a committee on deputations, which will send a team of two men over the week-end to any society or church desiring them. Only the actual expenses are asked, any surplus going into the treasury of the class to help in extending its opportunities for service. A letter or card to the class at Davidson will bring a prompt answer and two young men who are interested in and informed about young people's work.

SCRIPTURE LESSON

Ps. 101:5. Whoso privily slandereth his neighbor, him will I cut off; him that hath an high look and a proud heart will not I suffer.

6. Mine eyes shall be upon the faithful of the land, that they may dwell with me; he that walketh in a perfect way, he shall serve me.

7. He that worketh deceit shall not dwell within my house; he that telleth lies shall not tarry in my sight.

8. I will early destroy all the wicked of the land, that I may cut off all wicked doers from the city of the Lord.

Prov. 23:29. Who hath woe? who hath sorrow? who hath contentions? who hath babbling? who hath wounds without cause? who hath redness of eyes?

30. They that tarry long at the wine; they that go to seek mixed wine.

31. Look not thou upon the wine when it is red, when it giveth his color in the cup, when it moveth itself aright.

32. At the last it biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder.

33. Thine eyes shall behold strange women, and thine heart shall utter perverse things.

34. Yea, thou shalt be as he that lieth down in the midst of the sea, or as he that lieth upon the top of a mast.

35. They have stricken me, and shalt thou say, and I was not sick; they have beaten me, and I felt it not; when shall I awake? I will seek it yet again.

SHORTER CATECHISM

Q. 61. What is forbidden in the fourth commandment?
A. The fourth commandment forbiddeth the omission or careless performance of the duties required, and the profaning the day by idleness, or doing that which is in itself sinful, or by unnecessary thoughts, words or works, about our worldly employments or recreations.

The Bible opposes all forms of vice, sin and wickedness. It warns against all acts, agencies and habits that inflict pains and penalties upon mankind. It encourages all virtues and excellencies in heart and life that minister to human welfare and happiness. It counsels temperance and sobriety in thought, feeling and conduct. If a man would only take the scriptures as the guide of his life he would avoid much evil and secure the loftier development and the most useful career. Attending to the passages that constitute our present lesson we will consider The Evils to Be Shunned; The Virtues to Be Escaped; The Safeguard—Abstinence.

I. Some Evils to be Shunned

In the Psalm 101 we have mentioned "The slander of our neighbor" or fellowman. Bringing against him false charges that may injure his character, reputation or influence, happiness or usefulness. Jehovah says, "Him who privily slandereth his neighbor will I cut off." Pride is also presented as a sin. It may be kindled by an excessive estimate of our endowments, possessions or achievements. It prevents men from seeking God. The Lord declares "Him that hath an high look and a proud heart will I not suffer." Deceit too is condemned. The king affirms "He that worketh deceit shall not dwell in my house." A man may purposely deceive his fellow about temporal matters or spiritual affairs. The telling of lies is also forbidden. It is written, "He that telleth lies shall not tarry in my house," and "All liars shall have their part in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone." There is much wickedness in the world among men. But wickedness is doomed. The Almighty asserts, "I will early destroy all the wicked of the land, that I may cut off all wicked doers from the city of the Lord."

II. Certain Virtues to be Cherished

Faithfulness should be practiced. One should be faithful to truth, to duty, to God, and man. Many human ills result from want of fidelity to truth, to duty, to assumed obligations to man, and to the obvious claims of God. The Lord says, "Mine eyes shall be upon the faithful of the land that they may dwell with me." If fidelity is approved and commended, so is walking in a perfect way. A perfect way or course of life is one sanctioned by God and pleasing to Him. Jehovah declares, "He that walketh in a perfect way he shall serve me." If we do not walk in the path of life prescribed by God we can not serve God nor answer the purpose for which we were made.

III. Ills to be Escaped

The drinking of wine and strong drink inflicts many evils that should be avoided. In Prov. 23:29-35 numerous ills are mentioned. One of these is woe or sorrow. Drinkers have many sorrows caused by a vicious habit. They have weakened faculties, decaying organs, family griefs and social losses. They get into contentions with their fellows that might be avoided by sobriety. They are betrayed into "babbling" or complaints and foolish talkings or even profanity. They have "wounds without cause" to body or soul that produce distress. They experience "redness of the eyes" that indicates an injured brain, a disordered body and sometimes presages insanity. They often seek base women and put themselves in peril like one "lying on the top of a mast or lying in the midst of the sea." They sometimes fall into delirium and see strange sights and hear terrifying sounds. They are often insensible to injuries inflicted on them, when they awake are so enslaved that they seek the drink again. However enticing at first, wine drinking at last "biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder." Such is the testimony of human experience and Holy Writ.

IV. The Safeguard—Total Abstinence

If a man does not drink wine nor strong drink as a beverage he is safe from the ills that the confirmed habit may inflict. If such drinks are not made nor used youth will be protected and society shielded from drunkenness and multiplied evils. The Inspired Scriptures say, "Look not upon the wine when it is red, when it giveth its color in the cup, when it moveth itself aright." Wine has its attractions, but don't look or taste or yield to its seductions if you would avoid its ills.

Sun., Nov. 11—Topic: Courage Needed Today: For What? Joshua. 1:1-9.

What is moral courage?
Why do we need courage to tell the truth?
In what ways did Jesus show courage?

Joshua had been appointed to act as leader of God's people after the death of the great leader, Moses, and as he was about to assume his place, he realized what a big task he had undertaken. The first thing he did was to pray and ask God to help him. He needed guidance, strength, courage, vision, hope, and influence. God answered his prayer, just as He always does the prayers of His children who really want His help. God told him he need not fear his enemies, and that He would be with him just as He was with Moses. The Lord told Joshua he must be careful to observe God's commandments; for God will not bless any one who is disobedient and sinful.

We who are trying to follow Jesus today as Joshua did, need the same blessings Joshua needed, and one of our greatest needs is moral, or Christian courage.

Reasons Courage is Needed

There is much evil in the world today just as in Joshua's time, and this evil is opposing all that are good and Christ-like. The world, the flesh and the devil are the great forces of evil at work to destroy good things and good thoughts, and to set up sinful things instead. Then our own hearts are prone to evil just as the sparks fly upward. Evil imaginations and wrong desires dwell in our hearts like a fire ready to blaze up at a moment's notice. But Christ is calling us as he did Joshua, bidding us to go and conquer the evil things of the world and our hearts, as he told him to conquer the Canaanites in the promised land.

The Source of Courage

Joshua went at his work with a great purpose to do his best, and meet his duty bravely. His heart was filled with a desire to please God and a resolution to carry out His holy purpose. He felt his own weakness, and he found his greatest help in prayer to God, not in his opinion of his own strength and judgment. We shall find our courage coming from the same sources Joshua found his to come from, which are prayer, purpose and resolution.

In What We Need Courage—To Acknowledge Christ As Our Saviour

It takes courage to let people know we are Christians. This is especially true of young people; because boys and girls are not as polite as they expect to be when they are grown. They subject each other to criticism, scorn, and other kinds of persecution. It takes courage to let your friends know you are a Christian. This is especially true when it comes to living a Christian life, and taking a stand for right and against wrong. But Jesus says we must confess Him before men, or He will not confess us before His Father in heaven.

Courage to Resist Evil

Evil men would have their own way if they could. If Christians didn't resist wrong-doing, evil men would make this world a perfect hell on earth. Murder, drunkenness, adultery, profanity, evil-speaking, hatred, war, all kinds of evil would prevail. How the Church ever gained the influence it has is due to the courage of men and women of God who have cried out against evil and prayed and worked for the cause of the right and truth. Young Christians should take their stand against wrong today.

Courage to Do Personal Work

About the hardest thing a Christian has to do is to speak to others about Christ, and try to persuade them to accept Him as a Saviour. But this is the greatest work of the Christian. Jesus says, Ye are my witnesses. Again, He tells His disciples, Go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature. It takes courage to speak to your friends and try to get them to become Christians. And yet no one can influence young people so much as their young Christian friends. If we will do this, our courage will grow stronger every time, and we shall have the greatest joy a Christian can have, the joy of winning souls for Christ.

WORTHWHILE NEWS ITEMS

In the month of September, when Miss Mamie Gene Cole, Dixie Junior C. E. Field Secretary, was touring South Carolina, Mrs. W. M. Todd, of Anderson, State Junior Superintendent, arranged an interesting service. Four Junior societies of the county were gathered together for a union meeting. Miss Cole gave them a talk that held the attention of the boys and girls. Mrs. Todd is doing a good work with the Juniors. She reported ten boys and girls as having memorized the "String of Pearls" during the month.

A report from Mr. J. M. Henderson, at Little Rock, S. C., says that the Junior Endeavorers are busy with memory work. The older members are learning the "String of Pearls" and the younger ones the graded memory work. When the officers of the society graduated into the Senior society, another good set were chosen for the Juniors and they are said to be "doing their full duty."

DR. LAW ILL

The entire Church will learn with sincere sorrow that Dr. Thomas H. Law, for years the stated clerk of our General Assembly, is critically ill at his home in Spartanburg, S. C.

He has developed pneumonia. His children are at his bedside. His age is about 85 years, which means that his course is nearly run. His life has been a blessing to the Church and the world.

ANNUAL HOME MISSION DAY IN THE SUNDAY SCHOOLS

Hitherto the last Sunday in March has been devoted to consideration of Home Missions by the Sunday Schools. The last Assembly ordered a change to be made from the last Sunday in March to the third Sunday in November. Let the superintendent of our schools note this change and prepare to observe it.

EUROPEAN RELIEF

The Committee of the Western Section of the Reformed and Presbyterian Alliance, that has been sending clothing, shoes, food and money to the suffering people of the Calvinistic Churches of Europe will again resume work this fall. They earnestly ask for donations (marked "Presbyterian Relief") to be sent to the American European Transportation Co., 40 North Water Street, Philadelphia, the charge being ten cents per pound for freight from Philadelphia to Europe.

The committee thanks all who have previously aided them and hopes that many more will do so this year. There is still a great deal of suffering in the churches of our faith in Europe.

Committee: James I. Good, W. P. Fulton, C. S. Cleland, J. I. Vancc, E. F. Romig.

A CORRECTION

Dear Dr. Bridges:

In your editorial report of the debate in the Synod of South Carolina on Columbia Seminary, that appeared in your last issue, you unintentionally seriously misrepresented my position. You say: "Dr. Wm. McPheeters . . . opposed any removal whatever." On the contrary what I did was to support a report that distinctly authorized the board to seek out within the bounds of the four Synods owning Columbia Seminary a site where it could be provided with a more adequate plant and financial support.

You say further, referring kindly to my speech, "This was a strong speech . . . yet not entirely convincing." At any rate the vote showed that more than two-thirds of the Synod who heard my speech were convinced of the soundness of my position.

I am, yours in the Gospel,
W. M. McPHEETERS.

Charlotte, Second Church—At the morning service on October 28th Rev. M. F. Daniels, superintendent of Home Missions in Mecklenburg Presbytery, presented in a fine address the urgent need of church buildings and manses in certain sections of the Presbytery. The congregation responded to this emergency call for funds by subscribing $1,237.

The Presbytery, in recent session, urged all our churches to make special appeals for this cause. A sum of not less than $5,000 is needed immediately.

Charlotte, Westminster Church—On Wednesday evening, at 8:00 o'clock, Dr. A. A. McGeachy, of the Second Presbyterian Church, will speak before our Bible class on "The Inspiration of the Scriptures." Dr. McGeachy delivered this address at the opening of the recent meeting of Mecklenburg Presbytery. It is so fine in its presentation, and the subject is so timely, being today before all thinking people the world over, that the pastor immediately requested Dr. McGeachy to repeat it for the people of Westminster. He consented and will be here.—Church Bulletin, October 28th.

Charlotte—The Co-operative Standard Training School for Sunday School Workers of the Methodist and Presbyterian Churches of Charlotte and vicinity, will begin next Sunday, November 4th, at 3:30 p. m., in the Second Presbyterian Church. Class work will begin Monday evening at 7:30, and continue through Friday. The leaders are hoping for an enrollment of 600. Quite a number of the teachers in our own school have completed already one or more of the units required for a teacher's certificate. We hope these can continue their work this year, and others make their start. We are after a greater efficiency in the work of the Kingdom.

Church News

Belmont—This church has just engaged in a series of revival services, embracing October 14-21. The pastor, Rev. J. T. Dendy, was ably assisted in this meeting by Dr. J. H. Henderlite, of Gastonia. The congregations were large, Dr. Henderlite delighted the people with his strong Gospel sermons and the meeting is considered one of the best ever held at this church. On the last day of the meeting the Lord's supper was celebrated. Four young persons united with the church, making seven who have joined recently upon profession of faith. All departments of church work seem to be in a growing condition and we have entered upon the fall campaign with renewed zeal and determination. Cor.

Orange Presbytery met in the Little River Presbyterian Church, Orange County, N. C., October 23, 1923. Rev. E. N. Caldwell was elected moderator and elder E. J. Davis, temporary clerk. The Presbytery, for two days and a half, was delightfully entertained by brother Henderlite and his good people, and transacted a lot of important business, but owing to the changes in the boundary lines enacted by the Synod, much important business is left incomplete. Therefore, the Presbytery adjourned to meet in the First Presbyterian Church, Greensboro, N. C., on Tuesday, November 6, 1923 at 2 o'clock, p. m., to continue its deliberations and its work. This is an important meeting, and the members of Presbytery are urged to attend.

Among the items of business to be transacted will be the election of a chairman and other officers for the ensuing year. The present chairman now being in the bounds of Orange Presbytery will necessitate the election of someone to succeed him.

A. C. Ray, Chairman.

Gastonia—Sunday, September 30th, the pulpit of West Avenue Church, recently made vacant by the removal of Mr. Long to Chattanooga, was filled both morning and evening by Rev. J. T. Pharr, of Renick, W. Va. Mr. Pharr preached two excellent sermons which made a deep impression on the congregations assembled to hear him. He is a native of Charlotte and an alumnus of Davidson College and Union Seminary. Some years ago when a seminary student he spent the summer vacation, working in this Presbytery at Kings Mountain and Bessemer City, and he made many friends in the Presbytery. Davidson College recently tried to draw him from his pastorate in West Virginia to serve the student body in the very important capacity of secretary of the Y. M. C. A., but such vigorous protest was made against his leaving that his Presbytery refused to dissolve the relation between him and his church at Renick.

Mr. Pharr is a strong preacher and a man of very attractive personality, and the people of West Avenue greatly enjoyed his visit.

Concord Presbytery met in regular fall session in Centre Church, October 16, 1923. Present, 31 ministers and 34 ruling elders. Officers: Rev. T. H. Spence, moderator and Rev. S. L. Cathey, temporary clerk. Dismissed: Rev. H. H. Cassidy, to the Presbytery of Mecklenburg. Ordained: Licentiate N. E. Oplinger was ordained as an evangelist. Candidate Glenn O. Younts was transferred to the Presbytery of Tygart's Valley. Rev. J. M. Grier, D.D., resigned as pastor of the Newton Church and the pastoral relation was dissolved.

Overtures: 1. To the Synod of North Carolina asking that Cabarrus County be transferred back to the Presbytery of Concord.

2. To the Assembly, as follows: "Believing that there is a growing tendency in our beloved Southern Presbyterian Church toward an unwise and an unsafe position in regard to women speaking in mixed public assemblies, we, therefore, overture our next Assembly . . . to send down to the churches a distinct and clear deliverance on this whole question, touching especially on the matter of women speaking on the floor of our church courts."

The next regular meeting will be held in Hickory on Tuesday after the second Sunday in April, at 7:30 p. m.

Rose Hill—The people of this town and of the surrounding country have recently enjoyed a series of union revival services, lasting for four weeks. The four churches in the town united in these meetings and for the first two weeks the services were conducted in some one of the local churches by some one of the pastors of these churches. At the end of that time, a large tent having been secured and located in a convenient part of the town, Rev. Leonard Gill, evangelist of the Synod of North Carolina, came and took charge of the meeting, preaching from October 7th through the 21st. Rev. A. L. Brown, pastor of the local Baptist church had charge of the singing. All things seemed to be favorable for the meeting, the weather was all that we could ask, the attendance was excellent from the very beginning. It is safe to say that at a number of the services, more people heard the Gospel preached than ever heard it in the town on any previous occasion at a single service. The people seemed to hear gladly and there was a fine spirit of co-operation by them. The music under the direction of Mr. Brown was splendid, both by the senior and junior choirs, which added much to the services. The preaching of brother Gill was clear and forceful. He denounced sin in all its forms in no uncertain terms. He declared Christ and His atonement the sinner's only hope of salvation. He did "earnestly contend for the faith once delivered unto the saints."

We have no way of adequately measuring the results of such a meeting. A great number of men and women, boys and girls, expressed their purpose to live a better life in the future. About sixty gave their names for membership in the several churches. A free-will offering of $234 was given the evangelist for his services.

The universal opinion as expressed by the people, is that we have had an excellent meeting, that the life of the Christian people has been quickened, that some sinners have been led to confess Christ and others to serious thought. For these things, we are thankful.

SOUTH CAROLINA

Fort Hill Church—On October 21st, Rev. John MeSween was installed pastor of the Fort Hill Church, at Clemson College, S. C., by a commission consisting of Rev. Drs. R. F. Kirkpatrick and Robert Adams and elder J. W. Todd.

Robert Adams.

Clinton—Dr. D. J. Woods, pastor First Presbyterian Church, Clinton, S. C., writes: "I wish you could see our church since the interior has been altered and repainted. The old system of 'burnt out bulb lighting' has been replaced by a very effective indirect lighting system with light reflected from a white system. The church is now as pleasing within as its great stone walls make it massive without."

Greenwood—The Rally Day program of the Sunday School of this church was an inspiring success. On a beautiful day, a large crowd filled the Sunday School and overflowed into the church auditorium. Perhaps the most striking feature of the program was a dramatic monologue, the "Sunday School House-Cleaning," rendered by Mrs. B. F. McKellar, and composed by Mrs. S. C. Hodges, wife of our superintendent. The offering was $376, considerably less than heretofore, but coming just after pledges of $30,000 for a new Sunday School building, the superintendent and school are not disappointed.

At our quarterly communion service, on last Sunday, our pastor welcomed six new members into our fellowship. The attendance was unusually large, and the communicants seemed conscious of the presence of God's Spirit.

Our Christian Endeavor Societies have undertaken the partial support of a foreign missionary, and are delighted with the assignment to them of Miss Jessie Woods Hill, now of Dugspur, Va., who will soon leave for Brazil.

Piedmont Presbytery—At an adjourned meeting of Piedmont Presbytery, held at Spartanburg during the sessions of Synod, the following Permanent Committee on Men's Work was appointed:

Rev. Messrs. John McSween, S. H. Fulton, and H. A. Knox and Messrs. J. E. Boggs, Pickens; J. M. Cathcart, Anderson; W. M. Scott, Easley; B. M. Aull, Autun; W. C. Hughs, Walhalla; and J. W. Todd, Seneca.

Ebenezer Church was dissolved, and the only member was dismissed to Bethel Church.

Another adjourned meeting is to be held at Seneca, Friday, November 16th, at 4 p. m., for the spe al purpose of receiving Rev. A. G. Harris, and arranging for his installation as pastor of the Seneca church. Robert Adams, S. C.

Pee Dee Presbytery met in the Kentyre Church, October 23d, with 12 ministers and 12 elders present. Rev. W. H. Johnston was elected moderator and Rev. J. S. Garner was elected temporary clerk. The assembly was overtured to change the time for the Every Member Canvass to some time in the fall. A committee was appointed to make suggestions to the Assembly's Ad-Interim appointed to amend the Book of Church Order. Rev. D. McIntyre preached the Presbyterial sermon on Regeneration. Rev. G. L. Wilcox will preach the Presbyterial sermon next spring on Sanctification. An adjourned meeting will be held in Dillon, S. C., November 4th, at 7:30 p. m., at which Rev. Fred J. Hay will be received from Kings Mountain Presbytery and installed pastor of the Dillon Church. The spring meeting will be held in Lamar, S. C. A. H. McArn, S. C.

Pee Dee, Kentyre and Hamer Churches, Pee Dee Presbytery—Dr. A. H. Atkins, pastor of these churches, held a meeting at Pee Dee Church preceding the celebration of the Lord's supper on the second Sabbath of October, at that church. The congregations especially on the Sabbath were large and attentive. Much good was done. There were three additions to the membership by profession. Rally Day was observed on October 7th at Kentyre Church. A liberal collection was taken for Sabbath School Extension. Pee Dee Presbytery met at this church on October 23d. The attendance was unusually large for the fall meeting we were sorry that Presbytery remained in session such a short time. This could not have been because the brethren were not well treated; our people have the reputation of treating Presbytery royally. It seems to the writer that at every meeting of Presbytery the representatives are in a hurry to get back to their homes. Cor.

Purity Church, Chester—Mr. Lex Klutz, one of Purity's sons, who recently returned from Persia, and Japan, and who very narrowly escaped death three times in the awful earthquake in Japan, gave a lecture, illustrated with lantern slides and pictures which he took while in Japan, before the Christian Endeavor Society on Sunday evening, October 14th. This lecture was immensely enjoyed by the large crowd present.

Our beloved pastor, Dr. Flournoy Shepperson, who has been away for the past two weeks at his old home in Arkansas, where he went to perform the marriage ceremony of his brother, and also to visit his mother, is expected home this week and will fill his pulpit the coming Sunday.

During the absence of Dr. Shepperson, for the past two Sundays, the pulpit was filled by two distinguished ministers, Dr. J. B. Green and Dr. J. M. Wells, both of Columbia Theological Seminary.

Rally day was fittingly observed in the Sunday School on October 7th. A large crowd was in attendance, the collection amounting to $500, the largest collection we have ever had on Rally Day.

VIRGINIA

Richmond, Hoge Memorial Church—A memorial service was held in this church recently in memory of Albert Casson Bruce, who was for 14 years the faithful teacher of the men's Bible class.

Winchester—Dr. McFaden and family have gotten comfortably settled in the manse. Between some $5,000 and $6,000 have been spent on the manse in repairs and improvements. New papering, painting, new bath room, concrete walks, garage, new hot water heat, new electric light fixtures and everything necessary to make a most comfortable and desirable home for the pastor. The pastor and family have been most cordially received not only by the Presbyterians but by all of the good people of Winchester. A reception was recently tendered the pastor and family by the Woman's Auxiliary attended by about 400 of the church members and friends. At the recent communion service held on the 7th of October there were 22 additions to the church, 16 by letter and six by profession.

Charlottesville—At the October communion 50 persons were received into the membership of the church, including representatives of 16 families not hitherto connected with this church. The church has recently purchased a lot and residence adjoining the present lot. This gives an extended frontage on Lee Park which is becoming the center about which public buildings of the city are grouped. This newly acquired property is for present use by our growing church activities and for prospective permanent improvement. The church is also planning to secure special workers for university religious interests both for regular session and for summer school. Rev. R. S. Woodson, assistant pastor, is winning the good opinion of everybody in the church and out of it. Dr. Petrie, the pastor, is about to take a vacation, which he will spend mostly in Alabama and South Carolina.

Bethesda Church—Sunday, October 20, 1923, was a red letter day in the history of Bethesda Church, Maryland Presbytery. On this day Rev. Stanley White, formerly of Roanoke Rapids, N. C., was installed as pastor; a large congregation greeted the speakers and entered heartily into the services. Rev. P. P. Flournoy, D.D., for 47 years its beloved pastor, and now pastor emeritus, presided and propounded the constitutional questions. Rev. James H. Taylor, D. D., preached the sermon, Rev. Robert L. Riddle charged the pastor and Rev. E. M. Delaney charged the people; these with Prof. Addison Hoge, an elder, composed the Presbytery's commission. Seldom has a pastorate begun under more auspicious circumstances; the people are united and enthusiastic and our new Pastor well equipped for the work. H. B. D.

The Presbyterian League of Richmond—This seems to be a live institution—from their annual report we learn that they have a membership of 380 (39 of whom are life members). They have an endowment fund of $2,532.05.

The following property is owned or held by the league free of incumbrance:

- A 30-foot lot in Duntreath, valued at $300.
 - A 75-foot lot at the southeast corner of Clay Street and High Point Avenue, with improvements used by the Roseneath Church, valued at $6,000, with $4,000 insurance.
 - Eighty-eight feet on North 17th Street, with improvements, used by the Colored Mission, valued at $22,000, with $15,500 insurance.
 - Two hundred feet on Hermitage Road, near Hillard Road, used by the Lakeside Sunday School, valued at $7,000, with $5,000 insurance.
 - One hundred and seventy-five feet near the corner of Seminary and Lombardy Street, to be used by the Read Memorial Sunday School for the erection of a new building, valued at $4,100.
- Not many years ago, there was a Presbyterian League of Charlotte; but it died from malnutrition. J. R. B.

Warm Springs Church—October 17th and 18th marked a very important event in the life of the Warm Springs Presbyterian Church, combining as it did the centennial of the organization of the church and the dedication of the new Sunday School building. The date seemed Providential, the days were perfect and the hillsides with their multi-colored foliage were never more beautiful.

There are only three living ex-pastors of this church: Rev. W. C. White, D.D., pastor 1887 to 1909; Rev. J. A. Trostle, pastor 1912 to 1914; and Rev. C. W. Reed, pastor 1915 to March 1923. The present pastor, Rev. J. T. McCutchan, came in May last. All three ex-pastors were present and had part in the program, the present pastor presiding. Mr. Trostle spoke Wednesday evening, using as his theme the Word of God Fundamental in the Life of a Church. Dr. White gave the historical address Thursday morning, intensely interesting and containing a mass of information touching the early history of Presbyterianism in this part of the State and in this particular valley, and bringing the history of this church down to date. His address will be published in pamphlet form. Dr. E. W. McCorkle, our neighbor for many years, made an interesting address on Scotch-Irish character and their part in the religious development of our State. Then Mr. Reed made the dedicatory address, laying special emphasis on the importance of Biblical instruction and the necessity for modern equipment for the Sunday School.

Our new Sunday School building, just completed at a cost of $11,000, will meet our needs for years to come, having commodious rooms for all classes, (Continued on page 10)

Clover's (S. C.) Beautiful New Church Edifice

Clover Presbyterian Church—This church had its beginning in Center Church, which was once a preaching point connected with Bethel Church. Its place of worship was first a log house which was afterwards extended.

In 1876, when the town of Clover was begun, Mr. J. A. Wilson, a teacher, began a Sabbath School in his school house, and soon Rev. W. G. White, principal of the Woman's College at Yorkville, was engaged to preach twice a month in the school house, and soon the Center congregation merged into that of Clover.

Mr. White continued to preach at this church up to the time of the organization of the church which was July 29, 1881.

Bethel Presbytery in response to a petition organized the Clover Church with 84 charter members, nearly all from Bethel Church. Rev. S. L. Watson supplied the church a short time. The first pastor was Rev. M. R. Kirkpatrick, who did excellent work in the development of the congregation. He was succeeded by Rev. S. H. Hay, and he, in turn by Rev. H. J. Mills. Rev. A. A. McLean succeeded Mr. Mills in 1913, and he was succeeded by Rev. J. E. Berryhill, under whose pastorate the new church was built.

It was completed in 1923, and is regarded as one of the finest church edifices in that section. It cost approximately $50,000 or $60,000.

Rev. J. Blanton Belk is its present pastor. He is one of the two sons of Rev. G. W. Belk, who are in the ministry, and both of them are chips of the old block.

APPALACHIA

Mills River Church—We have just closed an eight days' meeting of exceptional power for good. The entire countryside was stirred, the church being crowded to capacity many times. Rev. Wm. Black, D.D., of Charlotte, did the preaching and Mr. Andrew Burr, who accompanies Dr. Black in his evangelistic tours led the singing. There were 38 professions of faith in Christ, 23 of whom joined the Presbyterian Church. Seventeen heads of families pledged themselves to establish the family altar, and 300 people promised to read the Bible and pray daily.

The offerings taken during the meeting were $42 for Mr. Burr's expenses and $106 for Synod's Home Missions, North Carolina, of which Synod Dr. Black is an evangelist. We borrowed him and Mr. Burr for this meeting. They were here in a meeting 19 years ago. And with one voice the people of the Mills River community — all denominations — had risen up to urge their coming again. When they appeared the whole neighborhood, though in the middle of the busiest season of the year, laid aside farm work and business to attend the services. Denominational lines were obliterated, and as one people we rallied to the banner of the Cross.

Dr. Black preaches with a powerful simplicity that goes straight home to the heart. And Mr. Burr's Gospel messages given in beautiful song are just as effective to reach the unsaved. These two noble emissaries of our Lord have travelled over North Carolina together for nearly thirty years, bringing untold blessings to many communities. And so under the providence of God, they came to Mills River "in the fullness of the blessing of the Gospel of Christ." We thank God and take courage.

GEORGIA

TENNESSEE

The Presbytery of Nashville met at Decherd, Tenn., at 8 p. m., October 9th. Opening sermon preached by Rev. E. W. Williams, D.D., by appointment. Present, 9 ministers and 17 ruling elders.

Organization: Rev. E. W. Williams, D.D., moderator, and ruling elder G. H. Baskette, temporary clerk.

Reports from the churches were so encouraging that following the free conversation members united in singing the doxology.

Reports from some important committees were lacking but these will be presented at an adjourned meeting.

Excursion: Members of Presbytery enjoyed an excursion to Lewanee, 13 miles distant on the Cumberland plateau.

The preaching during the meeting was of a high order.

The weather was beautiful and the hospitality most delightful.

Place of next stated meeting placed on docket for an adjourned meeting.

Presbytery adjourned to meet in the First Presbyterian Church of Nashville at 11 a. m. Monday, October 29, 1923. W. C. Alexander, S. C.

Queens College—The Queens College bulletin for October, to be issued this week, will contain a feature article by Miss Charlotte Moore, Ph.D., head of the department of English; the subject being "The Christian College—the Conservator of Civilization." Dean H. A. Shirley, head of the music department of Salem College, Winston-Salem, will contribute for the November issue a special article on "Musical Appreciation."

The Missionary Survey, for October, contains an interesting group picture of the family of Dr. and Mrs. R. H. Wilson (Bessie Knox), missionary in Korea, and also a farewell message written by Mrs. Wilson before sailing for the foreign field.

The annual report of the board of trustees and the financial statement submitted by them to the Mecklenburg Presbytery, made a fine impression, and they, by a unanimous vote acceded to the request of the board that Synod's plan for putting ten percent of the benevolences in the fund for educational institutions be adopted. The bulletin in commending on this action says: "The above action is the most hopeful sign that has been on the horizon of Queens in many years and with the proper effort there should be no trouble in securing the A-grade rating before the State Department of Education."

Davidson College—Dr. Richards filled his pulpit on Sunday morning, speaking to a large audience, and at night before the Y. M. C. A. Mr. Thomas Glasgow, of Charlotte, made an address, his subject being, "Watch Your Step."

Monday evening a large audience greeted the Carolina Concert Club, of Charlotte, with Mrs. Carol H. Baker, director. The program consisted of popular airs, grand opera, choruses and violin numbers by Miss Nan Gordon.

Tuesday evening The La Salle Bell-Ringing Quartette appeared in Shearer Hall—this being the first in the series of Lyceum numbers put on by the "Y."

Plumtree—Things are "booming" in our school at Plumtree, with the dormitory full of boys and classes going well. A finer lot of boys it would be difficult to gather under one roof, ranging in ages, as they do, from ten to 25 years. Several groups, who are paying their own expenses, are particularly interesting, these being boys who have not had the opportunity of attending good schools when they were younger. First, in the time of rising, are our cooks, Chief of the Culinary Department being a splendid, reliable fellow, from Virginia; his first lieutenant is about 6 feet 2 inches and two assistants, somewhat shorter. These do splendid work and a most important one it is. Next come our waiters, three younger boys, orphans, who set the tables; one of these came to us from Grandfather's Orphanage last summer. This is an obliging, quiet capable group. Our dish-washers, plus the pot washer, who is also "milk-maid," are much interested in their work and it would do your heart good to hear them "kick" when things are delayed and they miss a class. The last to be mentioned are our carpenters (our chief-cook came from among them). These sturdy fellows are at work on a temporary building, to be used as school rooms and office, the dormitory being now inadequate to house the students in school.

There are enough boys in the school this year to warrant the formation of a Junior Christian Endeavor Society and we expect to have fine times at our Sunday afternoon meetings and at our social gatherings. In the Senior Christian Endeavor we are also at work, striving to develop leadership among the members, who will soon be taking their places in church activities. We ask your prayers for these wonderful "opportunities." Cor.

Peace Institute—The girls attended the North Carolina State Fair Wednesday, October 17th and also the football game between North Carolina State and Carolina on Thursday, the 18th.

Two former Peace Institute students, Misses Mabel Pugh and Isabel Bowen, had exhibits on display in the art department of the State fair. These exhibits consisted of commercial drayings, designs for clothing, and portraits. Each won valuable prizes.

Miss Edmonia Martin, an alumna of Peace Institute, who has been in charge of one of our Presbyterian schools in Garanhuns, Brazil, is spending the week at Peace Institute. She is sent to Peace by the Home Mission Board.

Mitchell College—Much interest is being taken in the work of the literary societies at Mitchell College. Each society is striving to develop its members in a literary way, but is not forgetful of the social life of new members who have come to Mitchell for the first time.

Saturday evening, October 6th the Phi Mu Society gave an informal reception to new members. Delightful refreshments were served and an evening of fun was enjoyed.

The officers of this society are as follows: President, Miss Thelma Fraley; vice-president, Miss Ruby Goode; secretary, Miss Annie McGill; treasurer, Miss Inez Gribble.

On the evening of October 13th the Phi Kappa Society entertained for the new members. The guests were welcomed by the president, Miss Martha Davis and the old members of the society. A number of amusements added to the pleasure of the occasion. The evening closed with a toast given to the new girls by Miss Garnette Bowles.

A great deal of interest is also being taken in the work of the Y. W. C. A. Definite plans have been made for the social, physical, mental, and spiritual development of the students. These plans will be worked out through the social affairs which will be given from time to time, and through the instructive and spiritual programs on Sunday evenings, and the twilight services held every evening.

Flora Macdonald College—The Mecklenburg branch association met Friday evening, October 26th, in the club rooms of the Second Presbyterian Church, Charlotte, with Mrs. Lyda Reid Cochran, of Matthews, presiding. The meeting opened with the singing of the college song: "Far away from noisy tumult." Mrs. Ola Irvin Albright a guest of the association was heard in a negro spiritual and Mrs. Gertrude McFadyen Wallace, a former voice teacher also contributed a solo to the program of the evening. Mr. Rice, of the publicity department presented numerous facts about the college giving the alumnae first-hand information and answering many questions concerning the college beautiful plan—the endowment—the "A-grade situation," etc. Miss Eleanor Gurney, superintendent of the Charlotte Sanatorium was heard in a selected reading and after a committee had been appointed to plan for the meeting in the spring ice cream and cake were served to the members and guests. The officers of the association are Mrs. Lida Reid Cochran, president; Mrs. Pearl McArtan Henderson, vice-president; Mrs. Hattie Coffee Bayles, secretary-treasurer.

Founders Day was celebrated on Tuesday, October 23d, with alumnae present from Red Springs, Charlotte, St. Paul, Laurinburg, Maxton, Dillon, S. C., and Fayetteville. Miss Della P. McGoogan, president of the General Alumnae Association was in charge of the morning exercises which took place in the auditorium at eleven. The program opened with the singing of the college hymn "O Alma Mater Cara," invocation; and a vocal solo by Ruth McKinnon Morgan, '20, of Laurinburg. Dr. C. G. Vardell introduced Mrs. W. N. Reynolds, of Winston-Salem, a former state regent of the D. A. R. and a warm friend of the college. Mrs. Reynolds spoke briefly on the subject of the education of women. Mrs. Pearl Johnston Poole, '04, of Lumberton presented the needs of the college and the program closed with the singing of "Far Away from Noisy Tumult." Luncheon was served to the visiting alumnae in the college dining hall followed by the business meeting attended by delegates from the branches and the senior class. Many important matters were discussed—the report of the College Beautiful Committee was presented by Mrs. Mable Croom Sikes, and it was definitely decided to continue this important work. Mr. Rice, of the publicity department presented a report and spoke briefly of the work now being undertaken. Greetings in the form of telegrams and letters were read from the branches in Hickory, Charlotte, Goldsboro, Laurinburg, Raleigh, Charleston, Albemarle and the president of the senior class extended greeting to the association and pledged the hearty co-operation of 1924. An informal reception followed and at night a large audience saw Jacky Coogan in, "Circus Days."

Miss Margaret Orton, director of piano, at Flora Macdonald College, made her first public appearance in concert in the auditorium on Monday evening, October 22d, giving an entire program which included both classic and modern compositions. Miss Orton displayed brilliant technic and warmth of tone and a very pleasing interpretation of every number.

NEWS AND APPEAL FROM CHINA

A recent letter from Dr. B. C. Patterson, of Tenghsien, China, brings the splendid news that the North China Theological Seminary has a new class of 47 men this fall and that the Mateer Memorial Institute has over 50 new men. He says, "We are simply bursting."

In both of these institutions located at Tenghsien in the southern part of the famous province of Shantung, we are united with the northern Presbyterians. The seminary is in its second year and has 77 students!

The institute has been running five years. It has already prepared many evangelists and teachers who are now at work and from the above you see that many more are in training.

Surely this is one of the most important arms of our Church in China. We rejoice much in the evident blessing of God under the work at Tenghsien.

Now a word as to our need for your help. Dr. and Mrs. Patterson who are doing this splendid work have lived over 30 years in China, most of the time at Sutsien where they lived in Chinese houses. During the past two years they have been living in a residence provided by Northern Presbyterian money. On our return to Tenghsien in November either the Pattersons or the Stevenses will be without a home except as we live in the homes of other missionaries.

A residence is urgently needed for them. In a recent letter to me Dr. Egbert Smith says, "I know that that residence is a real need. Indeed, the necessity for that object is so great that, if I were you, I would delay my return to China a little while if such delay would enable you to raise the money needed."

Surely it will not be necessary for me to tarry longer at home on this account. Will not some individual or church contribute the $4,000 needed for this residence?

We are hoping to leave Montreat for China on November 1st. G. P. Stevens

News of the Week

Food rioting, the pillaging of shops and potato fields, and the inevitable sanguinary clashes between the hungry mobs and police, continue to be the outstanding features of the news published in Germany. Reports from more than 50 points throughout Germany yield an impressive cross-sectional view of the almost cataclysmic social situation in which all classes of the population apparently are being engulfed.

State Auditor Baxter Durham and Treasurer Ben Lacy have been subpoenaed to place before the Sampson county grand jury certified records of the list of pensioners and pension funds paid out for that county, it was learned. The Sampson grand jury is investigating alleged irregularities in the administration of the pension fund, following up reports to State Auditor Durham several weeks ago that pension checks for Confederate veterans dead for three years had been endorsed and cashed.

David Lloyd George came to Washington to find a friendly handclasp awaiting him at the official thresholds he crossed. There was almost no ceremony about this first visit of the sturdy little Welshman to the American capital. He spent the day making new acquaintances among the men who now guide American destinies and in an hour's fireside chat with an old friend and colleague of the trying months at Versailles.

With a battery of speakers, including both federal and state officials, a pageant of progress depicting the high spots in the history of North Carolina and this section, and with a widely varied entertainment program, High Point on October 25th entertained 25,000 visitors from the two Carolinas and Virginia at a celebration marking the completion of the Boone-Wilmington highway.

Germany's formal application for a hearing before the reparation commission on the subject of her capacity to pay is considered in authoritative circles as having brought the whole reparation problem to a new crisis. The German request was contained in a note presented to the commission by Dr. Mayer, head of the German reparation delegation in Paris. It is anticipated that it will bring up an issue between the French delegation on one side, and the British, Belgian and Italian representatives.

Lieut.-Gov. M. E. Trapp was declared acting governor of Oklahoma in a decision of the state supreme court, making permanent a writ of prohibition against Gov. J. C. Walton and District Judge Tom G. Chambers, Sr., which restrains them from interfering with the lieutenant governor's assumption of the office.

President Coolidge called on the governors of the several states to assume their full share of responsibility for enforcement of the prohibition laws. Meeting with more than 30 executives who had responded to his invitation to attend a White House conference on law enforcement, Mr. Coolidge flatly declared that "no provision of the eighteenth amendment or the national prohibition act contemplates any surrender of state responsibility."

Concerted action, to convince Congress and the country that the cotton boll weevil menace is a national and not a sectional problem, was the keynote of discussion at preliminary session of delegates from every cotton growing state for the national boll weevil menace conference.

A three-inch snow covering Asheville and section, putting out of commission over 100 local telephone lines and halting street car service for half an hour, breaks all records for early season snows here, the local United States Weather bureau reports. Asheville has experienced no such snow during the month of October for the last 21 years and possibly earlier than that.

Leo Caldwell, one of the most popular athletes ever to wear the monogram of the Winston-Salem High School, was fatally injured in the football game between Winston-Salem and Charlotte High Schools, in Winston, N. C., October 10th, death coming a few minutes later, just after he was taken to a local hospital.

THE BOY WHO WORE SKIRTS FOR ONE DAY

In fairy tales it is always a wicked witch who casts some unpleasant spell, lasting a day or a week or a year; but you must not suppose that any such thing had happened to Ted. It began at breakfast one Saturday morning when he was grumbling about all he had to do before supper—snow to shovel, ashes to take out of the furnace, wood to chop, "and everything," he added with a much overworked air. "Girls certainly have an easy life."

"But you get paid for it," his uncle said; "and as a matter of fact, I consider that Trixie has a far harder set of tasks than yours."

"Trixie?" Ted asked. Then he threw his head back and laughed. "Why, all Trixie has to do is to make the beds and—"

"Look here," said his uncle, "I dare you to change places with Trixie for one day. Wear skirts and be a dutiful daughter. How about it?"

"Skirts?" groaned Ted. "Will Trixie do my work?"

"Oh, it will be fun to change jobs!" Trixie cried. For snow is really rather interesting to shovel (just once), and ashes aren't really so hard to remove from furnaces (just once). She thought that it was going to be quite a lark to be the son of the house for one day, although it must be confessed that when it came to chopping wood she began to have her doubts. "But I will only cross one bridge at a time," she said to herself very sensibly as she started to shovel the walks.

Meanwhile you will be interested in Ted. He put on a short, old blue skirt and an apron.

"What first," he inquired.

"Beds," said his mother.

Now, nothing looks quite so simple as bed making. There lie the covers hanging over the foot of the bed and all that needs to be done is to spread them smoothly over the mattress, tucking in the ends. With a vigorous switch the boy who wore skirts tossed sheets, blankets and counterpane over the bed and smoothed the top layer. But there seemed to be ridges underneath. He pulled the covers toward him gently, one at a time; ah! yes, now they were smoother. He tucked them in, thinking: "This is easy when you once get the knack of it." But would you believe it. When he reached the other side of the bed there were no left-over ends to be tucked in. He had pulled them all over too far in that gentle but foolish shifting of his. He had to do everything from the beginning.

"This is a perfectly hateful old job," he growled as he patted the sheet in place, then blanket number one, blanket number two and so forth. At last the first bed was made but even Ted had to admit that it looked like a relief map of the Alps, for there were curious ridges and peaks and valleys which never were noticeable when Trixie made the beds. With an exasperated sigh he began on the second bed. He knew enough to do it slowly this time, but even with care there were ridges and valleys. By the time the fourth bed was made Ted was wishing that he had kept on shoveling snow.

"What next?" he inquired solemnly.

"Carpet sweeper on the rugs," his mother answered.

You should have seen him. And you should have heard him. Crash! bang! he went against the chair legs and the table legs.

"You must be more careful than that," his mother warned him. "You are scarring the furniture, Ted."

He had the sweeper move very slowly that, of course; but when he reached his own room he began wishing that he had been a little less careless in sharpening his pencils all over the carpet and in dropping everything from paper to twine all over the floor.

"The sweeping's done," he called. "What now?"

"Dusting," his mother smiled, and gave him a piece of cheesecloth. "I hope you will not knock anything over," she could not resist adding.

There never was a job so provoking. Every knob of the dark bureaus had its little layer of dust. Chairs seemed made especially for the purpose of having arms to catch dust, crosspieces to catch the dust, and spindles to catch the dust.

"I'll have a rush of blood to the head," Ted groaned after chair number eight was dusted. Houses seemed made of chairs and tables and bookcases and mantelpieces with dozens of breakable vases. "I would rather take the ashes out of the furnace any day," he grumbled. "And now what?"

"The silver needs cleaning," his mother replied, handing him knives, forks, spoons and a jar of white paste.

"It looks clean enough to me," Ted answered, but he was amazed to discover how much blank came off on the cloth when he rubbed it. Then: "Forks have too many tines, mother. Do I have to clean between them?"

"Indeed you do!"

"Oh, I would rather chop wood!" sighed this boy who wore skirts.

Indeed, I think that you probably have guessed the end of this little story; for by the time Ted had set the table for luncheon, made a cake (?), and washed the luncheon dishes, he was really a tired, discouraged boy.

"Trixie," he said with brotherly generosity, "you are a wonder. You do all these things in one Saturday and think nothing of it. I guess it would do all men good to wear skirts for one day."

His uncle laughed heartily. "Ted," he said, "when I was your age my mother made me wear skirts for one day, too; ever since then I have appreciated what mothers and sisters do for us."

"Oh, I should say so!" gasped Ted. "I'm glad I was born a boy."

But Trixie smiled. "Isn't it funny but I like my jobs."—The Baptist.

THE RED LEAF'S MESSAGE

"Now we are all through; we are of no more use," rustled the autumn leaves. They had dressed themselves in gold and scarlet and russet brown because the fall days had come. They liked the October sunshine and the crisp air, but they heard the wind.

And as son as the leaves had put on their autumn colors, puff, whirl, along came the wind and pulled them free from the branches where they had fluttered and grown all summer.

"We are of no use to anyone now," they said to each other through the air.

"Oh, yes, we are," sighed the new leaf buds, hard little brown knobs on the twigs where the leaves had grown. "If you hadn't gone we should have been uncomfortable all winter with your stems pushing so hard on our heads. Now we shall be able to sleep comfortably until spring."

But still the autumn leaves rustled to each other. "No one wants us down here in the road," they said.

"What beautiful red and yellow leaves; we have been waiting for you!" the children said, as they reached out their hands and caught as many of the leaves as they could. "We will make them into wreaths to wear when we play, and carry some of you to school for the teacher to put on the wall over the blackboard," they said.

But the autumn leaves that were left blew to and fro as they went down the road and across the field, still mourning, "We are not needed here in the field."

"Here are the leaves," said the farmer, "just what my seeds and roots need to keep them warm until spring comes!"

Then he gathered as many leaves as he could and spread them over the bare ground to keep the frost from going deep down into the earth.

"These leaves will help my field to grow another year," the farmer said.

Now there were only a few of the autumn leaves and they flew through the October air in the woods. They were the last leaves of all, left from the others, and they wanted to hide themselves in the woods where no one could see them.

"We are of no use. No one needs us," they rustled sadly to one another.

But as soon as the bright leaves covered the ground in the woods they found that they had been expected. The wild violet wanted a covering of leaves to keep her warm until winter was over. The hare needed some leaves with which to line her shelter in the hollow oak tree. The squirrel gathered as many leaves as he could to carpet his nest high up in the oak's branches.

Listen! You can hear this autumn message of the little red leaf today, and every other fall day.—Carolyn Sherwin Bailey, in The Outdoor Story Book.

MISSIONARY MOTHER GOOSE

Little Jack Horner
Sat in a corner
Eating a very queer pie;
He saw in a trice
It held everything nice
From the lands where the mission fields lie.

From Ceylon came the spice,
And from China the rice.
And bananas from African highlands;
There were nutmegs and cloves
Send from Borneo's groves,
And yams from the South Sea Islands.

There were nuts from Brazil
All the corners to fill,
And sugar and sago from Siam;
And from Turkey a fig
That was really so big,
Jack's mouth thought, "It's larger than I am."

There were pomegranates fair
Grown in Persia's soft air,
And tortillas from Mexico found
there;
And there did appear
Grapes and grains from Korea.
And all of the things that abound
there.

A Syrian date
Did not turn up too late.
He need not for tea to Japan go;
Tamarinds were not few,
There were oranges too
And from India many a mango.

"Now," thought little Jack,
"What shall I send back
To these lands for their presents to me?
The Bible indeed.
Is what they all need,
So that shall go over the sea."
