Dr. Dobyns To Be In Gastonia

Birmingham Pastor Will Conduct Meetings This Month in North Carolina

Dr. W. R. Dobyns, the pastor of South Highlands Church, Birmingham, Ala., is scheduled to lead a series of meetings in the First Church, Gastonia, N. C., of which Dr. J. H. Henderlite is the pastor. Preparations are being made for the meetings which begin January 21 and continue for ten days.

Dr. Dobyns will deliver a Bible lecture each day and preach an evangelistic sermon at night.

Dr. Dobyns has won for himself a fine reputation as both preacher and Bible teacher. He is popular at Montreal and other summer conferences. Not only Gastonia, but surrounding towns and the vicinity in general will welcome this man of God, and will rejoice in his work as well as in the preacher personally.

Dr. Henderlite, who will act as commander in chief of the meetings, has a great church, well organized and functioning in all its departments. With the co-operation of his people and officers, a great meeting is hoped for.

University Church Calls Pastor

Dr. Petrie Resigns at Charlottesville, Va., and Church Calls Rev. D. M. Chalmers of Greensboro, N. C.

Dr. George L. Petrie, the veteran pastor of the University Church at Charlottesville, Va., has resigned his charge on account of age and infirmities incident thereto, and the Church has called Rev. Dwight M. Chalmers, of Greensboro, N. C. We give the account of the call as reported in the Greensboro News:

The Rev. Dwight Chalmers, for the past two years pastor of the Presbyterian Church by the Side of the Road, who has resigned to accept a call to the Presbyterian Church at Charlottesville, Va., will not leave Greensboro until about March or April, according to announcement today.

Mr. Chalmers' resignation was announced from the pulpit yesterday. Several months ago he rejected a call from the Charlottesville Church, but later, after long deliberation, he decided to accept. In arriving at a decision Mr. Chalmers discussed the matter at a conference of the 16 elders and members of his church here. "The call to Charlottesville is the call of God," he said, on deciding to go to the Virginia city.

At Charlottesville, Mr. Chalmers will succeed Dr. George L. Petrie as pastor of the only Presbyterian Church in that city. Dr. Petrie who is leaving the active ministry has served for 50 years as pastor of the Charlottesville church. The Charlottesville Church has a large membership including many students of the University of Virginia.

The Church by the Side of the Road the first congregation served by Mr. Chalmers. He assumed the pastorate immediately after leaving the Union Theological Seminary in Richmond, Va., in 1926. He is one of the most popular of the young ministers in the city.

Mr. Chalmers is a native of Charlotte and a graduate of Davidson College.

His father, the late Dr. John T. Chalmers, was one of the state's most scholarly ministers.

A Heathen Chief Indites England

Potentate of the Gold Coast Charges Great Britain With Evil of the Drink Trade in Africa

For reasons of state, Great Britain has recently been entertaining with considerable ceremony the Paramount Chief of the Akim Abuakwa in the Gold Coast, Sir Ofori Atta. It may require a good geography to show the territory over which this chieftain reigns, but the administrators of England's African empire know full well where it is, and they have seen to it that Sir Ofori Atta's progress about the British isles has been attended with all the pomp and publicity that would be accorded any important potentate. The less prepared, therefore, were they for the speech which the African chief made before the Liverpool chamber of commerce just before he sailed for home. For the chief, finding himself in such a place, seemed to feel it natural to speak of the form of commerce that was most on his mind. And that turned out to be the white man's importation of liquor into the Gold Coast. No less than 1,300,000 gallons of spirits were sent from Great Britain to the Gold Coast last year! The chief minced no words in his description of the traffic. He told what it was doing to the people of the Gold Coast—of the physical and social misery that followed in its train. He told of the way in which it militated against the success of legitimate trade, since the people who had been infected with a craving for drink soon had no money left wherewith to buy useful articles. He appealed for help from the west—the Christian west!—in protecting his people against the west's own greed. —Christian Century.

A Happy Occasion on 50th Anniversary

Celebration of the Semi-Centennial of the Organization of the Maxton Presbyterian Church Was Observed Dec. 16

Sunday, December 16, being the nearest Sunday to the 50th anniversary of the organization of this Church, was chosen by the session as the time for the special anniversary exercises. All members and former members of the Church, now living elsewhere, were invited to make this a Home Coming Day, and quite a good many took advantage of the opportunity. Four of the living charter members were present and occupied a front seat during the morning exercises, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Currie, Mrs. Dougald Leach and Mrs. McLeod. Only one of the original signers of the petition for organization was present, Mr. J. A. McLean. Two of the sons of the church, who are now preachers of the Gospel, were present and took part in the service, Rev. S. B. McLean, of Charlotte, and Rev. John Allen McLean, of Richmond, Virginia.

Rev. Alexander Martin, D.D., pastor the Oakland Avenue Presbyterian Church, Rock Hill, S. C., son of Rev. Roger Martin, first pastor of the Church, preached the sermon at the morning hour. His subject, as shown by the program, was "The Year of Jubilee." He spoke of the ancient law which required the children of Israel to observe and hallow the 50th year, letting the land rest, cancelling all debts and restoring all property to the original owners, liberating all slaves and beginning life over again. He applied these ancient principles to the Gospel of Christ and to modern life.

Plans For Merging Two Churches

Joint Committee Recommends Union of Congregational and Christian Denominations

Complete merger of the Congregational and Christian denominations was forecast in the recommendations of a joint committee representing the two churches, announced last month in New York, in a joint statement by the Rev. Dr. Frank Knight Sanders, of Rockport, Mass., and the Rev. Dr. Frank G. Coffin, of Columbus, Ohio, chairmen, respectively, of the Congregational and Christian commissions.

"A new united national denominational organization, the general council of the Congregational - Christian churches, will be formed, it is proposed, in October, 1929," the announcement said. "The merger if consummated, will be the largest union of distinct denominations in the United States. The Congregational churches number 5,548 with 928,558 members. The Christian churches number 950 with 114,136 members."

Dr. Sanders and Dr. Coffin believe that the plan of union "points the way to genuine Christian unity among the Protestant churches of America."—Associated Press.

Goodwill Congress In New York

Gathering Under Auspices of World Alliance for International Friendship

On November 11, 12, and 13 an International Goodwill Congress was held in the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, under the auspices of The World Alliance for International Friendship through the Churches. The following account is disseminated by the publicity manager, Rev. Charles Stelzle:

The Congress began on Sunday afternoon, November 11, at the Metropolitan Opera House. It presented a beautiful spectacle. The golden horseshoe with its accompanying tiers and the main floor was crowded with an eager audience. Two hundred representative leaders in civic and national life supported Major General Henry T. Allen on the platform. An exquisite setting, a mighty audience. It was a fine beginning.

Following an invocation by Bishop William T. Manning of New York and an address by Rabbi Louis Wolsey, of Philadelphia, the Hon. Frank B. Kellogg, Secretary of State, spoke on "The Pact of Paris," with which his name is indelibly associated. It was a dramatic moment when the white-haired statesman entered and waited for the ovation to subside. All felt they were listening to one who had made peace history. He traced the history and outlined the implications of the treaty. It was natural that right through the Congress interest should be focused on the Pact. Mr. Kellogg's lucid explanation of its function and hope was a great help in subsequent discussions. Never will one forget the closing sentences of the address: "France and the United States pointed out to other nations a hopeful pathway to world peace. The other nations have gladly joined France and the United States and have agreed to follow that path with us. Whether or not we reach our common goal depends not so much upon governments as upon the peoples from whom their power flows. I believe in the people. I have confidence in mankind and I am happy that I have been privileged to participate in the conclusion of a treaty which should make it easier for men and women to realize their long cherished idea of peace on earth."

Dr. Lapsley Remains At Columbia

Pastor of First Church at South Carolina Capital Declines Call to Chattanooga

We clip the following from the Columbia, S. C., State, and congratulate both the church and the city on Dr. Lapsley's decision.

"The Rev. R. A. Lapsley, Jr., D.D., announced to his congregation at the First Presbyterian Church on Sunday morning, December 23, that he had declined a call to the First Presbyterian Church of Chattanooga.

Dr. Lapsley's statement delighted his congregation and the entire city will be pleased to hear that he is going to continue his work in Columbia. He came here almost seven years ago from Tarboro, N. C. Prior to that he had served two smaller pastorates in North Carolina. He has been a minister about 20 years. He was graduated at Washington and Lee with his A. B., and from Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, with his B. D. He was given a D. D. by Washington and Lee a few years ago. While he was brought up in the Valley of Virginia, Dr. Lapsley is really a South Carolinian, having been born at Charleston.

When Dr. Lapsley completed his announcement saying that he had declined the Chattanooga call, T. Hal Dick, a ruling elder, arose from his seat and suggested that the choir lead the congregation in singing "Praise God From Whom All Blessings Flow." The congregation arose without further word and joined heartily in the singing. After the service hundreds shook hands with Dr. Lapsley and expressed pleasure that he had decided to stay in Columbia.

The church to which Dr. Lapsley was called is an inviting field, being like the church here, large and influential. It has a very strong home missionary program, a part of the church work Dr. Lapsley stresses. Incidentally, the pastorate at Chattanooga would have paid about 50 per cent more than Dr. Lapsley receives now, and will receive, at the Columbia Church.

Dr. Frederick W. Norwood of the City Temple, of London, the special guest of the Alliance in America, immediately followed the Secretary of State. This distinguished minister whose fervor on this subject was born of experience in France, alternately thrilled and solemnized his hearers with burning passionate words. "The war system," he declared, "is already defeated because it can never again recapture the faith of intelligent people in its efficacy." Turning to Mr. Kellogg, he said in his last words. "Mr. Secretary, I have no right to voice it, I voice it in the name of the dead, I thank you for what you have done and pray God that your name may go down to the farthest confines of time, bound up with the only really noble thing left for humanity—the triumph over a blatant evil by intelligence, morality and the fear of God."

The next two evenings were given to a banquet and a public gathering in Carnegie Hall. Mr. Owen D. Young presided over an attendance of nine hundred in the grand ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria. His address was notable for particular charm of thought and language.

Rev. Father John A. Ryan, Dr. F. W. Norwood and Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, introduced by the chairman as the advisor of mankind, made a strong program. A charming episode was introduced by Mr. Harry Edmonds of International House. The representatives of sixty-five nations in national costume.

speaking eloquently and forcefully of the forgiveness of sin, the restoration of sonship in the family of God and the deliverance from bondage—the grievous bondage of sin secured to God's children by the sacrifice of Jesus Christ. Then, in conclusion he showed how this law of the Jubilee typifies the rest that remains for the people of God, and the abundant provision for all their spiritual needs made by their Savior for all who love and trust Him.

Dr. W. B. McIlwaine, the only living ex-pastor of the Church preached most acceptably at the evening hour, choosing as his subject: "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, today and forever." Referring to the many changes in this community since he lived and labored here, he drew a striking contrast between the things that change and the eternal things which do not change, and exhorted his hearers to live more for these eternal things and deserve the unchanging Christ, as being the only life worth living.

The music, furnished by the choir, was exceptionally good and much enjoyed by the large congregations which assembled both morning and night. In the morning the Centre congregation—the mother church—worshipped with us, and in the evening the members of the other churches in town were with us in a union service. Both services were uplifting and inspiring and the Church enters upon the last half of the century with bright prospects and high hopes for future usefulness in the community. We hope that many who were present and enjoyed the services of the Jubilee celebration may be permitted to celebrate the centennial exercises after the lapse of another half century, although we are quite sure that many of us will not. But if we continue faithful in the Master's service until he calls us from the scene of our present duties, there will be given to us a crown of life, and we shall rejoice in a higher and more blessed service throughout eternity.

tume lighted in succession a candle from their nearest neighbor's light and repeated, in their own language, "As light begets light, so love begets love."

The gatherings of the day were at the Waldorf-Astoria. On Monday morning the secretaries of the Alliance made their reports on work definitely done during the year. Dr. Atkinson outlined the achievements of the Alliance in Europe and Asia. Then came the always keenly anticipated presidential address of Dr. William P. Merrill. "The World Alliance," he said, "is based on a single and simple conviction; that the religious forces of the world, just as they are, with all their divisions and varieties, ought to be among the chief agencies, in all nations, for promoting goodwill and peaceful relations among the nations."

The clergymen's luncheon at the Mc-Alpin Hotel was attended by three hundred and sixty-three clergymen. Mr. Miles H. Krumbine introduced the speakers, Dr. Norwood and his immediate predecessor in London, Dr. J. Fort Newton of Philadelphia. It was an interesting combination delivering its soul on the inescapable opportunity of the Christian Church.

The luncheon for business and professional men and women at the Bankers Club, presided over by Mr. Robert Fulton Cutting, was addressed by Mr. Roger Babson, of Boston, on "The Economic Implications of War." The progress in a ten years' crusade for a warless world was discussed with telling effect by Chaplain Gill Robb Wilson, National Chaplain of the American Legion, Rabbi Stephen S. Wise and Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt. Professor Shotwell read a memorial message written by Colonel Edward M. House, entitled, "Armistice Day—Then—November 11, 1918—Now, November 11, 1928."

For six months a commission, under Dr. Ralph C. McAfee, of Detroit, has been considering community service. Its report was debated and discussed and finally adopted. It aims to help a community in developing an International Goodwill program and after printing will be circulated. "The Unfinished Tasks of the Crusade" were developed and emphasized by the Hon. Chester H. Roswell, of San Francisco, Dr. Paul Sherer, of New York and President Robert R. Moton, of Tuskegee.

The value of the Round Table discussion at St. Louis led to similar groups being arranged this year. Mrs. Edgerton Parsons and her committee provided a splendid choice in the following topics, and each room was filled and the thought guided by expert leadership:

"The Paris Peace Pact," Mr. Charles P. Howland.

"Reduction and Limitation of Armament," Maj. Gen. John F. O'Ryan, Mr. Linley V. Gordon.

"The Universal Religious Peace Conference," Dr. Henry A. Atkinson.

"The Monroe Doctrine," Prof. Philip C. Jessup, Prof. Clyde Eagleton.

The presentation of the report of the Committee on Message and Recommendation, by the chairman, Dr. D. J. Cowling, of Carleton College, Minnesota, led to an animated debate. The point at issue was the projected Naval Bill of fifteen ships and the fact that to oppose it might jeopardize the passing of the Paris Pact. Many points of view were voiced and finally the following addition to the report was inserted: "Any considerable increase in armaments at this time, on the part of any nation, will be interpreted by all the other nations as a denial of the Pact of Paris."

Great credit is due Dr. Cowling for the committee report to the preparation of which he gave much time; careful study of this report is made possible by its inclusion in this pamphlet.

The breadth of the Alliance platform was indicated by the speakers invited to participate in the sessions. Practically all groups were represented. The Rev. Reinhold Niebuhr, of Detroit, Bishop W. F. McDowell, of Washington, D. C., and Dr. Frederick W. Norwood on "Europe Looks to America," brought the Tuesday's day program to a conclusion.

The Hon. Chester H. Roswell presided at the Carnegie Hall mass meeting. It was a fitting climax. The hall was filled from the orchestra to the last seat in the top gallery. Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick was at his best. There is never any doubt about the position occupied by this fearless champion of all noble causes. War is antagonistic to the spirit and teaching of Christ and the Naval Bill now coming before the Senate cuts across the avowed objective of the Paris Pact.

Senator Borah spoke with the obvious responsibility of piloting the Pact through the Senate. Emphatically he declared he would do his utmost for speedy ratification. He regarded the Pact as more than a step. It marked an epoch in the cause of peace.

The Congress closed with this ringing sentence from the Senator. It surely summed up the overwhelming sentiment of those present. "Let those of us who believe in this treaty and who are anxious to see it become a law among the nations of the world and thereby 'initiate a new era,' as the Premier of Britain has said, direct our attention to one practical fact and that is, to seeing that it is ratified in the Senate of the United States."

Through the courtesy of Stations WJZ and WOR the addresses reached an immense audience and many messages of appreciation have reached the office from all parts of the country.

The New York Congress challenged attention, uncovered facts, stimulated thought and laid out a policy for the Alliance which it faces with new courage, made possible by this inspiring event in our peace crusading.

DEVOTIONAL

A PASTORAL LETTER

My Dear People:

Again I am sending to you a pastoral letter with the request that you read it carefully and consider very seriously some matters of great importance that relate to your spiritual life and growth.

Our age is tremendously vital and so full of complex and absorbing interests that we often do not realize how we are being swept along by the current and carried away from our spiritual reflections and practices. It is important that we shall pause and reflect seriously upon the responsibilities and obligations of our religious life.

We need especially to take a deeper interest in our own spiritual life. We need to give more time to the cultivation of spiritual things and to remember that "to be spiritually minded is life and peace."

It is absolutely necessary to our spiritual life that we devote certain portions of each week to worship and prayer. We cannot survive spiritually without worship. Therefore we should attend regularly the services of the Church. Here is where we shall find strength and courage for our daily lives. Make it a firm resolve to attend faithfully the worship in the house of God during the coming year.

We owe a very great obligation to the young people. The Sunday School is doing excellent work in religious instruction but the Sunday School cannot possibly do all that is necessary. The home should be the place of religious instruction. No influence is more potent in the life of a boy or girl than the Christian instruction and example of the home. In every home there should be a family altar around which the family may gather every day for worship and prayer. You cannot afford to neglect this custom of family worship.

Your support and presence in the work of the Sunday School will contribute much toward the success of the school. Come to the Sunday School and bring some one with you. Let your example stimulate others.

Parents are urged to attend the Church services with their children. Families should be present with their children in order that the children may be taught the regularity of Church attendance. Do not go home after the Sunday School exercises are over.

Read your Bible constantly. Let your reading be regular and careful. Your meditation on the Word of God will strengthen your faith and increase your loyalty.

Let prayer be a daily spiritual exercise. Do not neglect the habit of prayer. Your spiritual life will become insipid and dull if you fail to find time for your daily private devotions.

Remember to observe the Lord's Day with due respect and reverence. It is the day of worship. Do not use the day for merely selfish purposes.

Be present at the Communion of the Lord's Supper regularly. Our Communion is observed on the first Sunday in February, April, June, August, October and December. Let nothing interfere with your attendance upon the Communion. The observance of the Lord's Supper is a blessed occasion.

Remember also to reverence the Lord's house. "The Lord is in his holy temple." Let us strive always to keep it as a house of prayer.

In the support of the work of the Church in every department let your gifts be prompt and liberal. Often our giving is very irregular and subject to personal convenience and we allow the work of the Kingdom of God to suffer. We should always be willing to make sacrifices for Christ. Let the tithe be the minimum basis of giving. Contribute through the regular channels of the Church you: "Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him," I Corinthians 16:2. Let your giving be individual, proportionate and regular.

Take some active part in the work of the Church. "Be ye doers of the word and not hearers only." Do not be content to be a spectator. Your part is your own responsibility.

Be loyal to Christ, to the Church and to the Bible. Stand firm and do not compromise. Christianity has always been assailed and always will be, but the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.

Do not be present in places where Christ and the Church are made fun of or sneered at. Do not read books or papers that seek to destroy faith or goodness. Have nothing to do with those who endeavor to make light of truth and honor and righteousness. Today Christ is the most dominant personality in the world; His teachings are the most powerful to combat every form of sin and His Cross is the most radiant and penetrating light to dispel the darkness and to make plain to every man the way of eternal life.

May God give you grace and power to be a true and loyal witness and a devoted follower of Jesus Christ.

Faithfully yours,

JAMES H. TAYLOR,

Pastor of Central Presbyterian Church.

Washington, D. C.

THE BIRTH OF CHRIST

Long before the birth of Christ, the Egyptians had had a festival celebrating the birth of Horus, the son of Isis, the queen of heaven. He was supposed to have been born about the 22nd of December, at the winter solstice, when the longest night of the year has passed, and the sun begins to rise a little earlier each day. The festival had been associated with much rejoicing and with the giving of gifts. So when Constantine was converted and made Christianity popular with the masses, it was an easy thing to change the heathen celebration into a Christian feast, and this was done. Much of our celebration at this time is inherited from that heathen festival from ancient Egypt and Babylon.

But this is not the real reason why we celebrate December 25th as the birthday of our Lord and Saviour. It lies deeper than that; but is not well understood.

Jesus was not born on December 25th. Shepherds do not feed their flocks in the open at that time of the year nor do they watch them out in the open fields in a climate that is cold and on fields that are often snow-covered at that time, in a hill country where the altitude is like it is at Asheville, N. C. Nor do men travel at that time of the year if they can avoid it. The Roman Emperor would not have ordered travel at that time, but would have chosen a time when men are traveling any way, thus adopting the course of least resistance in obeying an order that would have been naturally very irritating to a subject people.

Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judaea on September 29th, B. C. 4. At that time all of the circumstances connected with His birth would have been possible and probable. But there is a deeper reason than this. The 29th of September B. C. 4 was the fifteenth day of Tisri, the seventh month of the Jewish year and the first day of the Feast of Tabernacles! Everybody who could travel was on the march at that time, going to Jerusalem to celebrate that feast, which recalled the fact that God had not only delivered His people from Egypt but had kept them safely all through the wilderness period and had brought them into the land of Promise.

Now the remarkable thing about this is that this date is exactly 280 days after December 25th B. C. 5, and that is exactly the period of gestation! December 25th was the day the Angel appeared to the Virgin Mary in her home and announced to her that in her womb was conceived that Holy child who was the Son of the Highest. On December 25th B. C. 5 Jesus was begotten in the womb of the Virgin by the Holy Ghost; and 280 days later, on September 29th B. C. 4, He was brought forth in a stable in Bethlehem of Judaea, according to prophecy—brought forth to tabernacle among us, full of grace and truth, on the first day of the feast of Tabernacles. And then He was circumcised on the last day of that feast, the eighth day of the seventh month.

John, the beloved apostle, under the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, tells us the fact, but we have long overlooked it. In Jno. 1:14 we read, "And the Word became flesh;"—(that was on December 25th)—"and tabernacle among us"—(that was on September 29th, 280 days later on the first day of the feast of Tabernacles). Yes, the unborn child was just as truly alive from the first day He was conceived until He was brought forth and began His independent existence nine months later. He became God's gift to the world from the moment that the Angel announced His coming—that was on December 25th. Let us therefore think of Him today, as He lived, even before He was brought forth, in His weakness and helplessness, and yet full of grace and truth. And December 25th will have a new meaning to us entirely.—North Avenue Calendar, Atlanta.

THE OLD AND NEW

We should respect the old, but we can never rave over their physical beauty.

There is in fact nothing to appeal to the esthetic sense. It is true that frequently attempts are made to disguise the ravages of time, but generally it is in vain.

Under the glamour there is decay and death. There is no beauty in an old tree with its decayed limbs, gnarled branches and twisted trunks.

The old house may appeal to the imagination with silent voices and abandoned hopes; but the peeling paint with faded colors, sagging floors, falling hearth and general air of desolation, rub off the appeal of sentiment and present it in all of its crude ugliness. We may picture the playing children and the parents building aircastles in the future when their ear ones will be grown; but when we turn from fancy to fact, we see only the native ugliness.

The hoary head may be a crown of glory, according to Scripture, but we who are in the here and yellow leaf know too well that an old man's body is not a thing of beauty nor a joy to be seen.

We regret that it is so and we who are peering the bottom of the hill may long to renew our youth and beauty, if we ever had any; but time has left its mark that we can never rub out.

Old men, old trees and old houses all belong together, and all point to decay and death.

By all the laws of analogy, the same should be true of the old year, but it is not.

There is something in the old year that appeals to our sense of the beautiful.

It is the only thing that age does not mar. It is the only thing to which death adds beauty.

The year is really a series of four moving pictures, each more beautiful than the preceding, till finally the scene closes in a climax of beauty.

It seems only yesterday when 1928 stepped on the scene, all aglow with life and youthful beauty. Now it is about to depart, to join the stars that have "become portions and parcels of the dreadful past"; yet its taking off is invested with a dignity and grandeur that its children never knew.

It has been a great year for State and Church. In the State great things have been done. The people have risen and asserted their rights, and proclaimed that there is a force more powerful than partisanship.

As His children trying to establish His kingdom, we have passed another mile-stone and advanced that much nearer the end.

In the glowing East we see another year rising over the horizon. 1929 is yet young.

We know not what manner of child he is to be. Our times are in His hands before Whose eyes the past, present and future are all one. He will work out His plans and send into the life what is best.

Let us pray that before 1929 grows old and is ready to leave us, not only shall we be holier and more meet for our inheritance, but that our Church may be more fit to be His Bride, our Home work more extended and our Foreign work crowned with success. To the fathers and mothers in Israel, to the young men and maidens, and above all, to our hundreds of little readers, the Standard wishes a "Happy New Year" and Tiny Tim's benison, "God bless us every one."

THE FEDERAL COUNCIL AND ORGANIC UNION

As our readers may know, we have never been very much in favor of the Federal Council. The basic idea is no doubt a good one, the unity of the visible body of Christ—but unfortunately it is an idea that is not workable, owing to human nature that persists in manifesting itself in a variety of methods and beliefs.

The chief objection to the Council has been the danger of trying to justify its existence by attempting to do something to rectify apparent wrongs.

When representatives of 28 denominations get together in council, they feel that they must do something to justify their appointment, and on the principle that "Satan finds some mischief still for idle hands to do," they are apt to do something that is really not demanded.

Such has been the history of this organization, and this has been the cause of much of the persistent opposition to the Council on the part of so many Presbyteries of the Southern Presbyterian Church.

At every meeting of the General Assembly there are always overtures asking for the withdrawal of our Church from the Council, yet these overtures are generally refused, though whenever they are granted and we withdraw, we always return, like erring children, as the feeling that we should co-operate with other Churches outweighs the strong conviction that we should not fellowship with a body that constantly violates the principal reason for the existence of our Church—that the State and the Church should be kept distinct, and that one should not encroach upon the other. This inclination to meddle with the affairs of the State the Council seems unable to resist, and each year we have examples of this propensity.

The Organic Union fever is another disease that breaks out now and then among the Churches of the land, especially our brethren of the North. Whether this is due to the promptings of Christian fellowship, or a desire for bigness, no one can tell. At any rate it has found expression in the Northern Church in the appointment of a committee, to advance Union with all Churches.

Of course this proposal for a General Union of Churches found its way to the Federal Council.

As it was in harmony with the idea from which the Council sprung, we expected that it would have clear sailing there.

To our surprise the Council adopted the report of the committee as follows:

"Union of all churches, into one body with a central organization and control, is not considered practicable at present."

This report is the sanest thing that as yet has come from the Council. Of all the wild dreams that of a Union of all Churches is the wildest, as long as human nature is what it is.

Our minds differ in our view of any question. You can never secure uniformity of thought till all men are made in the same mould.

Though men may differ in their view of doctrinal truth, they can nevertheless be one in their love of the Lord.

We are glad that the Federal Council took the action they did, because we have been forced often to differ from them.

While they were pleasing us we wish that they had gone further, and put in the office of President one whose reputation for soundness of doctrine was more generally believed.

Dr. Cadman whose term as President has just expired is one of the most attractive preachers and speakers we have ever heard. When we examine his doctrinal views, we are shocked, though we are aware that he is fully abreast of the advanced thinkers of his age.

We could fill a column with his utterances which he sends forth weekly by radio. When he was asked whether Genesis' account of Creation gives the only account which can be accepted by a Christian, among other things he said the account of Creation in Genesis is "no more historic or scientific than Milton's 'Paradise Lost,' or Shakespeare's 'Hamlet.' What a Christian thinks about Genesis has no more to do with his Christianity than the color of his hair."

Bishop McConnell, who succeeds him as President, according to The Southern Methodist, is a liberal of the same order. Yet the Southern Presbyterian Church, despite all its boast of orthodoxy, is contributing to this Council.

They seem to fear the charge of narrowness more than that of unsoundness.

A PLEA FOR THE OLD PREACHER

Our secretaries can only reach the attention of the people by the use of the printed page. They run counter, however, to that psychological truth that repeated appeals lose their force, and familiarity breeds contempt.

If the waste baskets of our pastors could be examined, we fear that they would reveal that much of this literature of the Executive Committees finds its way into these receptacles. The result is that every cause has suffered, and yet no one seems concerned.

The Church press is their great hope, because now and then the needs mentioned may catch the eye of an interested reader and the cause may receive help.

Among the causes, all of which appeal to us, the cause of the infirm preacher appeals to us most strongly.

There is something pathetic about these old soldiers of the cross who, worn out in their Church's service, are now laid aside, with little or no visible means of support, waiting with patience their final summons. They remind one of a faithful old horse turned out on the commons to die.

This apparent indifference to the welfare of the old minister does not mean that the Church has no gratitude, but that it does not realize their condition.

Here are some of the facts to face:

There are 165 ministers, 251 needy widows, 51 infirm orphans from 38 ministers' homes, whose fathers and mothers both are dead. In 458 homes are more than 70 little fatherless children under the age of 14 years. To whom must these needy ones look, unless to the Church?

The Committee of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief has, as its work, the care of these helpless ones, and they depend upon the contributions of the Church for means with which to relieve their wants. They are forbidden by the Assembly to spend beyond their financial means, so they are in a quandary.

Their hearts ache for the needy, yet what to do they know not.

Let our prayers go up in their behalf—that the Lord will place this burden upon the hearts of our people, so that they may realize the pressing needs and by their increased giving bring into the treasury of the Church greater offerings.

If we could see what their lives are, we would no longer think of luxuries for ourselves and show so little concern for them.

Let us beware lest there come a time, when we, like Dives, call upon Father Abraham, his reply may be, "Remember that thou in thy lifetime receivedst thy good things, and likewise Lazarus evil things; but now he is comforted, and thou art tormented."

CONTRIBUTED

THE POWER OF THE PREACHER'S MESSAGE

S. B. Lyerly

Whether the preacher's message has power with God to uplift and save man depends upon what we mean by his message. If by that term we mean politics, economics, science, ethics, sociology, and many other such topics that are discussed in many pulpits today, we can safely say that it has not such power. But if by his message we mean the fall and ruin of man by sin, God's infinite love for lost man, His remedy for sin which is redemption thru the shed blood of Christ on the cross, made available to man thru faith in Him; if by his message we mean the gospel of Jesus Christ, then it should have such power.

The gospel was intended to have that power and was divinely endowed with power to save. It is said to be "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth". God claims for His Word that it is "able to make us wise unto salvation." It is said again that "the Word of God is quick and powerful." James writes, "Receive with meekness the engrafted Word which is able to save your souls." The gospel was given for the purpose of saving lost men.

And it has had such power in the past. Paul writes of the gospel which he had preached to the Corinthians, "By which ye are saved." He writes to the Ephesians of "the gospel of your salvation." Philip went to the city of Samaria and preached Christ to the people there, "and the people with one accord gave heed unto those things which Philip spake . . . and there was great joy in that city." The preachings of Jesus in Sychar had such power that "many believed on Him because of His word."

We have a notable example of power of the preached gospel on the day of Pentecost when three thousand men were converted, and again a little later when it seems that five thousand were converted at once thru the influence of the gospel preached by Peter. And on down thru the history of the Christian church the gospel has had the power to save as we know from the vast army of Christ's followers today.

There may be a difference of opinion among us as to whether the gospel is holding its own today or whether its power is waning. Some people see a decided loss in its power within the last few decades. They see a weakening of the preacher's authority due to certain modern movements in scientific and critical thought. Much of the so-called modern scholarship is discarding the "thus saith the Lord" thereby discrediting the Bible with many people who are willing to follow them. They degrade the Scriptures to the product of mere men who were misled and deceived in many instances, with the result that the Bible is no longer considered by them the infallible Word of God and the only rule of faith and practice. Many people in positions of leadership and influence do not hesitate to throw aside the Bible in favor of unsupported theories of scientists. The time once was when the preacher's appeal to Scripture was final. The world was all but unanimous in agreeing that the last court of appeal had been reached. The question was settled. But that is not so much true of the world today.

Another Gospel

In the case of many preachers there seems to be a consciousness of decline in the power of their message—at least in their hold on the people. This is evinced by their almost frantic efforts to get a hearing. We have all observed their schemes to get people to church. They are preaching or rather lecturing, on the various topics which they think will interest the public. Instead of preaching the simple gospel they are catering to the itching ears of the world for entertainment and for discussions of scientific, political, and ethical questions. Some preachers are doing almost everything conceivable except preach the gospel to get a hold on the public and win popularity.

In an article longer than this paper which was published in a religious magazine a few months ago the popular pastor of a large church in a big city gave his reasons for staying in the ministry. He gave as one of these reasons the fact that the ministry offers the broadest field of service that he knows anything about. Said he, "My regular work as a pastor includes Boy Scout activities, Camp Fire Girls' Work, business administration and organization, finance, advertising, job-hunting, social service, public service on commissions and committees, court visitation, vocational guidance, political reform, athletics, editorial work, public addresses, and platform work entirely outside my pulpit, besides radio broadcasting, music, art, dramatics and pageantry, educational work, research, travel, conference organization and supervision, etc. . . . I have saved homes from the divorce courts, helped fathers find work, assisted boys and girls through college, counselled with mothers about their difficulties, acted as an amateur detective to find lost girls, served on state and municipal commissions, organized campaigns to defeat undesirable political candidates, acted on committees and boards for the Chamber of Commerce, worked on crime commissions, unemployment commissions, moving picture censor boards, and then did all the regular work of an ordinary pastor . . . I write a daily editorial for a syndicate of newspapers which circulate at the rate of nearly three million per day . . . The minister deals with the most real things of life. Bankers handle the people's money. Mechanics repair their cars. Druggists and doctors patch up their bodies, but I am dealing with their hopes, dreams, ambitions, ideals, purposes, convictions." We all have to deal with some of the problems which this minister mentions, but the thing that struck me in reading the article is that not once does he mention the gospel, nor does the word "God" occur in it. The name of Jesus is found only twice when he speaks of "Jesus' ideal" and "the teachings of Jesus." Such words as "sin", "salvation", "Savior" are not found in the articles. Practically all the service he mentions could be rendered by almost any intelligent and able layman even tho he is not professing Christian or member of the church. His hold on the public is maintained not by the gospel which he preaches. No one, in fact, would suppose that he preaches the gospel at all.

A writer in the Homiletic Review of a couple months ago gives the substance of his preaching in an article entitled "What I Preach." He says "The heart of my message, so far as I am able to look into my own ministry and my own soul is to preach 'The Abundant Life.'" He then shows what he means by the term. "It means," he says "the abundant life which comes thru health. I try to keep informed on the scientific theories about health, and to practice what I preach . . . I want my people to know about vitalic breathing, to learn thru my message what it means to breathe well, to get fresh air by day and by night. I want them also to learn thru me the value of exercise. . . I would have them know that it is good to walk, to swim, to hunt, to play golf and baseball and tennis. . . I want my people to know about eugenics, insulin, the violet ray, the harm of an exclusive meat diet; the general laws of health in so far as they have been scientifically established. I want them to know about such books as 'Eat Your Way to Health', 'Diet and Health'.

"I teach 'abundant life' which will come through an understanding of the powers of the subconscious mind. I try to bring my people to 'the abundant life' of the arts. To that end I carry on my book ministry. Side by side with this book ministry goes a ministry of music, art and general culture.

"I want my people to know what is going on in the world of chemistry, physics, astronomy, invention; therefore I try to bring to them the new discoveries in all these fields and in others.

"I want my people to love and to understand the revelations of God in nature. I want them to have a new understanding of the beauties of sunsets, clouds, stars, and green grass.

"I want to inspire my people to travel, for that also brings to them 'the abundant life' which Jesus came to bring.

"Thru the laws of psychology, which is the science of human conduct, human relationships, and human happiness, I have tried to teach people the scientific basis for happiness in personal and domestic life, and in social intercourse.

"I believe that it is a part of the abundant life to see to it that your people have as good an economic status as possible.

"The heart of 'abundant life' to my way of thinking is the awakening power of a personal experience with Jesus Christ."

If he had said that the heart of the abundant life is a personal experience with Jesus Christ, or better still, a personal knowledge of Jesus Christ, I think he would have it right. This man evidently doesn't have much time left, after preaching all this other stuff for the gospel.

Sensational Preachers

That other ministers who really preach the gospel seem to realize that their hold on the people is slipping is evident from the new measures adopted to get a hearing for the gospel. There is the new use of humor, sensationalism as to topics and treatment, the various kinds of bait to lure and catch an uninterested public. They are preaching "automobile sermons", "baseball sermons", and so on. They find it necessary to interweave with the gospel matters that have little or no connection with it. I am not criticizing their method of reaching the people with the gospel but mention this to show that many preachers seem to feel that the pure gospel is losing its attraction for the world generally, and believe that it is necessary for them to add spice of their own to make it palatable.

The Power of the Old Gospel

If it be true that the gospel has not the power that it should have where is the trouble? Certainly not with the gospel itself. There is but one gospel, and when we preach it we are preaching what God wants proclaimed and what He has commanded us to preach. Nor do I believe the trouble is altogether in the presentation of the gospel or the way it is preached today. The trouble cannot be laid at God's door, for He is as anxious to bless the truth now to the salvation of man as He ever was. We must look elsewhere for the trouble.

I have found a study of the situation at Pentecost an interesting one. Let us see what took place there in Jerusalem on that occasion when the gospel was so signally blessed of God in the salvation of men. The precious gift of the Holy Spirit is the secret of the marvellous effects of the gospel at that time; and whenever the gospel is attended with success today it is due to the same power. The Savior knew that without His Spirit these disciples could accomplish nothing worth while. Tho there were millions of His and their own people living in sin and dying without God, without Christ, aliens from the commonwealth of Israel and strangers from the covenants promise and having no hope of salvation in the life to come, yet when He last talked with these disciples on Olivet just before His ascension, He commanded them that they should not depart from Jerusalem until they had received the gift of the Holy Spirit. He said unto them, "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Spirit is come upon you." These men were already Christians. They had native ability such as intelligence, eloquence, and this natural ability had been vastly supplemented and augmented by excellent training under the world's Master Teacher. Yet Jesus said to them in substance. You are not yet prepared for the work that I have for you to do, and you need not attempt it yet. A very necessary part of your preparation is yet to come, and that is the presence in you and the power thru you of the Spirit of God.

There were two things the Holy Spirit accomplished on this occasion. He gave boldness to the witnesses and conviction to the hearers.

When Jesus was arrested in Gethsemane the disciples forsook Him and fled. Peter and John, when they saw that it was Jesus whom the mob wanted and when they were convinced that they were in no particular danger, did command courage enough to follow Him to the palace of the high priest. Peter stopped at the door on the outside, and when approached by a servant girl and accused of being one of Jesus' disciples he denied with an oath that he even knew the Master. Seven weeks later, however, when filled with the Holy Spirit, this same man, faced a crowd of thousands of Jews and preached to them this Christ whom he had denied. He declared to them that this Jesus whom they had crucified was the Christ, the Son of God; and remember that it was for making this claim for Himself that the Jews had condemned Jesus to death. Peter accused them to their face of being murderers guilty of the death of the Son of God. He preached salvation from sin thru this crucified and risen Christ. No doubt many of these Jews were of them who had cried out to Pilate. "Crucify Him, crucify Him." So bold has Peter become thru the Holy Spirit that he is willing to risk his life for the sake of Christ. The Spirit took cowards and made brave men of them.

The Spirit also gave power to the gospel preached on that day so that it carried conviction to the hearts of three thousand men. They came forward with tears of penitence trickling down their cheeks, and in an agony of conviction cried out, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" They repented of sin, were baptized and received into the church.

We preach the same gospel from Sunday to Sunday to people who are unsaved, and we preach it with all the earnestness of our souls. Occasionally one is converted, and as a proof of his conversion makes a profession of faith in Christ and unites with the church. Usually, however, they appear to be untouched by any appeal we make and go away with dry eyes, no nearer the Savior than they were when they came. Many of these have been listening to this gospel for years. I suppose the gospel has never had the power it should have. Why does it not carry conviction to the lost? It is not due to the absence of the Spirit in us who preach it and in the Christian people who constitute the church and make up a very large part of our congregations? Remember that at Pentecost the Spirit was given not only to the disciples but to each of the one hundred and twenty Christians who were present. We may deplore this lack of power in the gospel today. We may attempt to account for it in any way we please. I for one am convinced that the trouble is that we, preachers and laity, have not yielded ourselves completely to God's Spirit and have not given Him complete control of our lives. The Spirit is no dwelling in all His fullness and power to us.

Wouldn't it be a fine thing, and wouldn't it cause great rejoicing in heaven, if at the close of our services numbers of people would come forward to confess Christ? Wouldn't it make our hearts rejoice to see many people meet the sessions of our churches, every time we meet to unite with the church? Why does this not happen? Because we haven't God's Spirit dwelling in all His power in us.

I am not drawing upon my imagination when I say that should be the normal condition in all our churches. Referring again to Pentecost and its marvels, we are told that following this outpouring of the Spirit, "the Lord added to the church daily such as were being saved. Every day people were confessing Christ and knocking at the door of the church to be received into its fold. These Christians admitted the Spirit into their hearts; they opened the doors of the church to the Savior, and the people came too. If we preachers and other Christians were filled with God's Spirit the gospel would have the power God intends that it should have, and we would not have to beg people to accept Christ and come into the Church as we do today. No power on earth or hell could keep them away. If the gospel has lost a part of the power it once had, or if it has never had the power it should have, the fault is ours, not God's. If Christian people would all yield themselves completely to God so that He could fill them with His Spirit, then could claim His promise that His Word shall not return unto Him void, and we would see the fulfillment of that promise in our ministry. Charlotte, N. C.

MY PURPOSE FOR THE NEW YEAR

- To be a little kinder with the passing of each day,
- To leave but happy memories as I go along the way
- To use possessions that are mine in service full and free,
- To sacrifice trivial things for larger good to be;
- To give of love in lavish way that friendship true may live,
- To be less quick to criticise, more ready to forgive
- To use such talents as I have that happiness may grow,
- To take the bitter with the sweet, assured 'tis best so;
- To be quite free from self-intent whate'er the result I do,
- To help the world's faith stronger grow in all that good and true;
- To keep my faith in God and right no matter what things run,
- To work and play and pray and trust until my journey's done;
- God grant to me the strength of heart, of mind and of will,
- To do my part, and falter not, this purpose to fulfil.

Department of Synod's Work SYNOD OF NORTH CAROLINA

CONDUCTED UNDER THE AUSPICES OF THE COMMITTEE OF 27 APPOINTED BY SYNOD TO PROMOTE ITS ACTIVITIES.

REV. A. D. P. GILMOUR, D.D. General Chairman
Wilmington, N. C.
REV. E. E. GILLESPIE, D.D. Executive Secretary
P. O. Box 1124. Greensboro, N. C.

COMMITTEE ON MEN'S WORK IN CONFERENCE

The sub-committee on Men's Work met at Greensboro, December 17, and made plans for aggressive steps in connection with the local and presbyterial organizations of men in the churches of the Synod.

Besides plans for the general work among the men, a recommendation looking to a sweeping program of consolidation to be effected among the small churches throughout the bounds of the synod was adopted as one of the outstanding developments of the conference.

The committee on men's work is proceeding under the general direction of the synod's committee on work. Present as members of the sub-committee were Rev. John L. Fairley, D.D., of Wilmington, chairman; Dr. H. B. Arbuckle of Davidson college; Rev. H. N. McDairmid of Shelby, and F. B. Johnson of Clinton. Dr. E. E. Gillespie of Greensboro, attended the conference as executive secretary of the North Carolina Synod's work committee and a member of the sub-committee.

The following were present:

Dr. H. B. Arbuckle, Sub-Committee on Men's Work of Synod's Work Committee; Mr. F. B. Johnson, Sub-Committee on Men's Work of Synod's Work Committee; Mr. F. L. Jackson, Chairman of Committee on Men's Work in Concord Presbytery; Rev. H. N. McDairmid, Sub-Committee on Men's Work of Synod's Work Committee, and Chairman of Committee on Men's Work in Kings Mountain Presbytery; Dr. L. R. Walker, Chairman of Committee on Men's Work in Mecklenburg Presbytery; Rev. W. E. Harrop, Chairman of Committee on Men's Work in Orange Presbytery; Rev. R. L. Berry, Chairman of Committee on Men's Work in Winston-Salem Presbytery; Dr. J. L. Fairley, Chairman of Sub-Committee on Men's Work of Synod's Work Committee, and Chairman of Committee on Men's Work in Wilmington Presbytery; Dr. E. E. Gillespie, Executive Secretary of Synod's Work Committee.

In addition to the members present from the Synod of North Carolina, there were also present:

Mr. J. A. Naff, Field Man of Department of Men's Work of the General Assembly; Mr. F. L. Temple, Chairman of Committee on Men's Work in Synod of Virginia; Dr. G. A. Wilson, Chairman of Committee on Men's Work in Synod of Appalachia; Rev. H. G. Bedinger, Chairman of Committee on Men's Work in Synod of South Carolina.

The meeting was called to order by the Chairman, Dr. J. L. Fairly, and prayer was offered by Rev. H. N. McDairmid.

The minutes of the meeting of the Sub-Committee on Men's Work on November 19th was read.

The chairman of the meeting read the recommendations which were outlined by the Sub-Committee on Men's Work, and explained the object of the joint meeting. The following recommendations were adopted:

First: We recommend that for promotional reasons we request each Presbytery to elect for Chairman of Committee on Men's Work a minister who is vitally and sacrificially interested in promoting the work. This does not mean that a layman cannot be appointed if one can be found who will attend Presbytery and will keep constantly before that body. We suggest one other minister and three laymen to work with the chairman as the committee.

Second: We recommend that the Committee on Men's Work in each Presbytery meet jointly with the Council of the Men-of-the-Presbytery in that Presbytery as soon as possible to plan the year's work and the promotion of organizations in each Presbytery. We feel the difficulty of this task. A real and vital interest must be created among the men for an organization; a great deal of educational work must be done to prepare for the organization; and then the organization must be effected and nurtured until it is self-sustaining. To do this we make the following suggestions:

1. For the creation of interest—
a. A survey of the field by this joint committee. This should be done by writing letters to each church asking if they did not wish the organization, and if they would be glad to have the help of the committee in effecting Work could be done then on those churches which fully desire it.

b. Men from churches without organizations could be invited to churches having organizations. In this way they would not only see the possibilities of organization, but also see an organization in action.

c. Delegations could be sent from churches with organizations into churches without organizations and put one of the monthly programs. After the program, a conference could be held in which questions could be asked and answered.

d. A key or field man could be secured to go into those churches desiring organizations and talk the situation over. In this way difficulties could be overcome and problems solved.

e. Live district meetings could be held in every Presbytery. It might be that these could be held in connection with the District Stewardship Conferences this year. This method has been used very effectively in Virginia. If you will write to Dr. J. L. Fairly, Chairman of the Sub-Committee on Men's Work, he will be glad to help secure a field man for these conferences.

f. A live meeting on Men's Work could be held at Presbytery, either Spring or Fall.

g. A live meeting on Men's Work could be held at Synod. This, of course, will be under the direction of the Sub-Committee on Men's Work of Synod's Work Committee.

h. A live annual meeting of the Men-of-the-Presbytery could and should be held in each Presbytery. The dates for these meetings are to be arranged by the Sub-Committee on Men's Work of Synod's Work Committee. If possible, a field man is to be secured as one of the speakers, but the rest of the program is to be arranged by the Committee on Men's Work in the Presbytery, jointly with the Council of the Men-of-the-Presbytery.

2. For educational preparation:
a. Select a group for study. Secure material from Rev. J. E. Purcell, Executive Secretary of Men's Work, Henry Grady Building, Atlanta, Georgia, and study carefully this literature. It will be sufficient.

3. For organization:
a. Secure the approval of the Session.
b. Appoint a time for meeting.
c. Organize according to the Constitution.

Third: We recommend that a definite effort be made to organize the small churches, by the Committee on Men's Work in each Presbytery and the Council of the Men-of-the-Presbytery acting jointly, feeling that the work will never progress as it should until we enlist these churches. Realizing the difficulty of organizing the men of these churches into effective organizations, we make the following suggestions:

1. That small churches having one pastor be organized in one organization with one group in each church, and hold monthly or quarterly meetings.

2. That where this plan is not feasible, that the churches be organized on the basis of county lines or other geographical divisions.

3. The time of these group meetings would have to be worked out by the group itself, but Sunday afternoon seems to be most widely used.

4. Each group should work out a monthly service objective if a quarterly meeting is held. This service task should appeal to the whole group, and should enlist the service of as many men as possible of the churches co-operating.

Fourth: We recommend that we pledge our support to the Stewardship Committee in making the Every Member Canvass a success, and assure them of our willingness to endeavor to carry out the plans which they submit to us.

Fifth: We recommend that we ask Dr. J. E. Purcell, Executive Secretary of Men's Work, to aid us in putting on at least one training class in each Presbytery. This may be held in connection with the Standard Schools of Methods of Sunday School teachers, or separately. The selection of time and place is left to the Committee on Men's Work in the Presbytery, and the Council of the Men-of-the-Presbytery.

Sixth: We recommend that for a time at least, the organization of the Men-of-the-Presbytery be simplified by having only three officers and no departmental chairmen.

Seventh: We pledge our support to the Men's Conference at Montreat which is to be held during the summer of 1929, and we urge that the Committee on Men's Work in the Presbytery, and the Council of the Men-of-the-Presbytery secure as many delegates as possible to this Conference.

Eighth: We request that Rev. J. E. Purcell, Executive Secretary of Men's Work, publish the chart or diagram of Men's Work which was devised by Mr. F. L. Temple of Roanoke, Virginia, and which is used by him in his addresses on Men's Work.

This joint committee held two sessions. The first was from three to six o'clock, and the second from seven-thirty to nine o'clock. The afternoon session was closed with prayer by Dr. H. B. Arbuckle. The minutes of the meeting were read by the Secretary and approved. Permission was given to the Chairman and the Secretary to write up the minutes, clarifying all doubtful points. Dr. Gillespie consented to mimeograph the action of the Committee, and to send copies to each man present.

F. B. Johnson, Secretary.
J. L. Fairly, Chairman.

STEWARDSHIP SECRETARIES HOLD MEETING

Plans Are Laid for the Every Member Canvass
March 10

A conference of stewardship secretaries from the nine presbyteries in the North Carolina synod Presbyterian church was held at Greensboro, December 18, to devise ways and means by which the synod's benevolence fund of $900,000 for the year may be raised.

By approval of the General Assembly, of the Synod meeting at Maxton and of the nine presbyteries, the date for the every-member canvass is set for March 10. At this time the Synod's goal of $900,000 will be met and the individual churches will also ask for $1,000,000 or more which they require for the year.

Measures to aid in the ready subscription of the fund were planned. To this end the conference urged the meeting of the presbyteries at some date between January 7 to 21 for a day of prayer for the cause. Stewardship conferences are to be held between January 22 and February 28. Wide distribution of literature from the Atlanta office was urged by Dr. R. C. Long, the assembly's secretary of Stewardship. A thorough program of publicity by advertisements in church papers and in daily and weekly newspapers was approved.

Co-operation of every organization in the church is to be sought in special meetings at which every such man's and woman's organization will be represented. A week of prayer is to be observed in each church from March 4 through March 8, with prayer for foreign mission support on Monday, home missions on Tuesday, the budget on Wednesday, ministerial relief, colleges, seminaries and orphanages on Thursday and personal consecration to the task of raising the fund, on Friday. The final step will be the every-member canvass on Sunday, March 10.

A recent survey has shown the Presbyterians the most liberal denomination in North America as far as per capita giving is concerned. For the fiscal year 1927-28 the synod of North Carolina raised $800,000 and a $100,000 increase is expected to be met by the church on March 10.

Dr. W. M. Fairley, Raeford, presided. Rev. A. S. Venable, of the Albermarle presbytery was the only stewardship secretary absent. Those present were: Rev. Eugene Alexander, of the Concord presbytery; Rev. D. L. Jones, Fayetteville presbytery; Rev. J. H. Gruver, Granville, Secretary; Rev. W. J. Roach, Kings Mountain presbytery; Rev. S. B. McLean, Mecklenburg; Rev. R. C. Clontz, Wilmington and Rev. J. R. McGregor, Winston-Salem presbytery.

BANNER WINNING SCHOOLS FOR 1928

A keen interest and a friendly spirit of rivalry marked the Rally Day Contest for the Presbyterian Banners for 1928. The award is made to the schools making the largest per capita gift for the cause of Sunday School Extension, and all contributors have the joy which comes from helping the under-privileged children of the South.

For these children we express grateful thanks for every gift received and we congratulate the winners of banners whose names appear below:

R. E. MAGILL, Secretary.

THE STEWARDSHIP OF THE GOSPEL

Egbert W. Smith

An article on this subject is requested of me by the Plans and Programs Committee. A steward, as we all know, is a person who is entrusted with something for a definite purpose. The conviction that thrilled Paul and inspired his tireless activity was the sense of his "stewardship of the gospel." God's commitment to him of the good news for proclamation to the nations. The same solemn trust was what the Saviour had committed to His disciples in the Great Commission.

In the discharge of this trust our Southern Presbyterian Church deliberately and by formal action accepted responsibility for certain sections of Africa, Brazil, China, Japan, Korea, and Mexico. By agreement among the denominations, to prevent overlapping of effort and expenditure, these territories are set aside to us. In the sight of God and our sister Churches they have become our peculiar province and responsibility. A more heart-reaching, conscience-stirring stewardship it is impossible to conceive.

The awakening of our Church as a whole, and every individual member in it, to the awful responsibility involved in the possession of the knowledge of God, should engage the thoughts, the prayers, the efforts of every true lover of the Kingdom. There is one history and one teacher in which and by whom this responsibility is supremely taught. The history is that of the Jews. The teacher is God Himself.

What was it that exalted the Jews above all the other nations of the earth? It was the fact that to them was given the knowledge of God. The long effort of God with that people was to train and fit them for certain offices which they were to render to mankind: as God said to Abraham: "In thee and thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed."

Scripture speaks of "election," but that does not mean God's taking one nation to his heart to be petted and pampered and made a favorite of to the exclusion of all others, but rather God's choosing one of his nations and training it that it might be capable of transmitting Him and His blessing to all the rest. That is what divine privilege means. If God elected you to spiritual life and light, be sure He was thinking of you not as a terminal but as a channel, not as an absorbent but as a radiator, not as a favorite but as a steward.

The tragedy of Jewish history is this, that the distinguishing privilege granted this favored race bred in them such a spirit of selfishness that when Jonas found that God was about to have mercy on people who were not Jews, he was grieved to the heart; when Christ at Nazareth preached God's love to foreigners, His hearers sought to kill Him; when the Jews at Jerusalem heard

Paul say that God had commanded him to go unto the Gentiles, they cast dust into the air and cried: "Away with such a fellow from the earth!" The most sacred trust ever committed to human keeping, the knowledge of God, they held as a piece of private property, they converted into a personal luxury. And the history of the Jews ever since, the most tragic history of blood and tears of which the race holds record, reads like the judgment of God, writ large for all the world to see, on the sin of the unfaithful steward. Ancient history, you say? Nay. All about us at this moment are Judaismisms of intellectual culture, Judaism of social privilege, and, worst and commonest of all, Judaism of religious light.

Here is a church member, excellent in many respects and highly privileged. His lot is cast in a land of Bibles and churches. His home is bright with Christian faith and love and purity. His future is glorified with an immortal hope. The graves of his loved ones are rainbowed with the prospect of reunion in the Father's House. Thrice happy man! But when you tell him of the nations that still sit in darkness, waiting, dumbly waiting, while the slow centuries pass, for "that light whose dawning maketh all things new," he listens with a deadly apathy. Poor little Jew. The most sacred trust on earth, the trust of religious light, he has turned into a personal luxury. "Provided I have the light," he says, "and my little circle, I care not who is in the dark."

What that little Jew needs above all else is what that other Jew, of Tarsus, needed—a vision of Christ. When Paul caught a view of Him who loved and who died for all men, in the blaze of that ineffable, all-embracing love the old Jewish selfishness withered and vanished, and in its place was born a new sense which became the motive power of Paul's life, the sense of a trust. "I am put in trust with the gospel." Because God gave him the precious knowledge of Christ, he owes that knowledge to the whole world. "I am debtor," he cries, "both to the Greeks and to the barbarians, both to the wise and to the unwise."

Not till we have learned the spirit of stewardship; not till we can say with Paul, "I am debtor," have we passed from Judaismism into Christianity.

In the terrible Irish famine of 1845 men and women were lying dead on their cabin floors. Babies were starving on the withered breasts of their dead mothers. Many lay dead in the fields, often with blades of grass between their white teeth. When the cry of famishing Ireland reached America, instantly a great ship was filled with provisions and sent speeding across the Atlantic. Suppose the crew of that ship, instead of going to Ireland, had gone off on a pleasure cruise, visiting distant and delightful countries, feasting for weeks and months on the provisions stored in the ship, while the poor Irish were stretching out their fast-thinning fingers and were praying and pining and starving for the bread that never came,—what would have been the sin of that crew?

Is The Measure Of Its Love

Week of Prayer and Self Denial for Foreign Missions - January 27 - February 3

Simply this, the turning of a sacred trust into a personal luxury, the sin for which many a reputable church member will find a fearful indictment awaiting him at the bar of God. For which is the greater sin, to spend on self what is entrusted us for men's bodies, or to absorb on ourselves what is entrusted us for the infinitely deeper needs of men's souls?

HISTORY OF MAXTON PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

The First Presbyterian Church of Maxton, N. C., was organized Dec. 19th, 1878, with the following 26 charter members, who were dismissed from Centre Church to enter the new organization at "Shoe Heel", as this town was then called: Angus M. McLean, O. J. Jackson, W. D. Baldwin, J. D. Croom, Jno. C. McCaskill, Celestia Patterson, Miss Charlotte L. Patterson, Mrs. Anstress Burns, Mrs. Mary A. McLean, Miss Lizzie N. McNair, Miss Mary A. McNair, D. M. Currie, H. W. McArn, W. J. Currie, Mrs. Kate E. Currie, Mrs. Margaret McLean, Miss Carrie McLean, J. C. McLean, Mrs. S. H. Morrison, Miss Katie Morrison, A. McL Morrison, Mrs. Catherine A. Currie, R. McCaskill, R. M. McNair, D. S. Morrison and C. E. McQueen. Of these charter members, the following are still living: Miss Lizzie N. McNair (now Mrs. Dougald Leach), Miss Mary A. McNair (now Mrs. Truss Currie), Mr. W. J. Currie, Mrs. Kate E. Currie (Mrs. W. J.) and Miss Katie Morrison (now Mrs. Kate McLeod). The others have joined the General Assembly and Church of the first born, whose names are written in heaven.

Three of our members, now living, who signed the petition for the organization of the church are: Miss Minnie McQueen, Mr. John Allen McLean and Mrs. Jno. C. McCaskill.

The organization was completed by the election and installation of the following Ruling Elders and Deacons: Ruling Elders: R. McCaskill, W. J. Currie and D. S. Morrison. Deacons: J. C. McCaskill, J. C. McLean and J. D. Croom. One of the first Ruling Elders, Mr. W. J. Currie, is still an active Elder and a regular attendant at Sunday School and Church. In point of service he is one of the oldest Ruling Elders in the Southern Presbyterian Church. When quite a young man he was ordained as a Ruling Elder in old Sandy Grove church, and has been an active Elder for over 60 years. He represented Fayetteville Presbytery in the General Assembly at San Antonio, Texas, in May 1924.

As an evidence that the new organization was alive and working, the Session received on profession of faith Mrs. Hallie E. McCormac and Miss Minnie McQueen, May 10th, 1879.

The first statistical report we find made by the church was in the Spring of 1881, when it was less than three years old. Thinking the statistics will be of interest to many, we give them a place in this brief history, as follows. Members 34. Contributions as follows:

Soon after the organization of the Church, about April 1879, the Church called as its pastor, jointly with Centre, the Rev. Roger Martin. For several years he labored faithfully and well, and was largely instrumental in driving the saloons out of Shoe Heel and Robeson county—the first county in the State to vote "dry." The first pastor of this Church will long be remembered for his sterling integrity and his fearlessness in preaching the truth.

In October 1886 these two Churches called as pastor Rev. H. G. Hill, D.D., who served them for 37 years, until his death, Jan. 15, 1924, in the 93rd year of his age. He came to this field after an 18 year's pastorate in the First Presbyterian Church of Fayetteville, and if ever a minister left his impression on a community, Dr. Hill did on this one.

During this long and fruitful pastorate the present Church building was erected, about 1907. A few years later the commodious and comfortable manse was built. His influence in the community still lives, and many rise up and call him blessed. He was one of the greatest men of this or any other State. As an educator, minister and Presbyterian he was faithful and efficient. He was the only man we have ever known who maintained his physical and mental vitality to such a marked degree of old age. Like Moses, his natural force seemed almost unabated, and while old in years he kept young in spirit and always abreast of the times. Dr. Hill was born in Raleigh, Nov. 20, 1851. He graduated from Hampden-Sidney College in 1857, taking the full course in three years. Entering Union Seminary about the beginning of the civil war, in 1861 his course of preparation for the ministry was interrupted by the war, and in 1862 he was licensed to preach by Orange Presbytery and became chaplain of the 13th N. C. regiment. He filled many official positions within the gift of the Church. He was a member of the Board of Trustees of Union Seminary for more than 50 years, a member of the Board of Regents of the Orphan's Home at Barium Springs, a member of Synod's Home Mission Committee, and Chairman of the Home Mission Committee of Fayetteville Presbytery from 1869 until his death. Seven times he represented this Presbytery in the General Assembly, and was Moderator of the Assembly at Chattanooga in 1889. Besides moderating the meetings of Fayetteville Presbytery several times, he was Moderator of the Synod of N. C., at Salisbury in 1881.

Rev. W. B. McIlwaine, D. D., the only living ex-pastor of this church—became Co-Pastor with Dr. Hill in February 1912, serving in this capacity for about four years. In 1916 Bro. McIlwaine was called to a church in Richmond, Va., and left for this wider field of usefulness. Dr. McIlwaine made hosts of warm friends and did faithful work both in this and Centre congregations. He is now the popular and efficient pastor of the Westminster Presbyterian Church in Charlotte, N. C.

In May 1917, Rev. E. L. Siler began his work as Co-Pastor with Dr. Hill, and was installed in both churches (Maxton and Centre) June 10, 1917. For seven years he did all he could to feed both flocks and lighten the burdens of his friend and Co-Pastor, and the relationship between them was like that of father and son. They labored together without a single thing to mar their friendship and brotherly love.

After the death of Dr. Hill, the two churches mutually agreed to dissolve the long and pleasant relationship which had existed between them. Maxton calling Rev. E. L. Siler for all his time, and Centre calling a pastor of their own.

The membership of the Maxton Church is now 350, and the Sunday School, Woman's Auxiliary, Men of the Church and two Christian Endeavor Societies (Senior and Junior) are all alive and doing a fine work. Since the organization of the Church, fifty years ago, there have been 879 additions to the Church, and the following sons of the Church have gone out from her to preach the glorious Gospel of the blessed God: Wm. Black, S. B. McLean, John Allen McLean, R. L. McLeod, Jr., and Murdock McLeod. One member is a Missionary in Korea, and she has recently written the pastor that she is having the time of her life and is delighted to be back in her chosen field of labor. We feel that we have a splendid and consecrated representative on the foreign field in the person of Miss Lillian Austin.

The first Trustees of the Church were as follows: Dr. J. D. Croom, W. D. Baldwin, E. L. McCormac, R. M. McNair and D. M. McCormac. Of this number, Mr. E. L. McCormac is still living.

This historical sketch would not be complete without giving the roll of splendid men who have served the Church as officers since its organization. The Elders follow: Roderick McCaskill, W. J. Currie, Daniel S. Morrison, (first Clerk of Session), Dr. David McBryde, Elijah Fuller McRae, John C. McCaskill, Wm. Black, Archibald A. McLean, John D. Austin, Gilbert B. Patterson, L. L. McGirt, John B. McCallum, Sylvester B. McLean, J. Plummer Wiggins, J. Lacy McLean, R. D. Croom, J. S. McRae, A. H. Currie, McKay McKinnon, J. E. Morrison, D. A. Patterson and Rory McNair.

The Deacons—John C. McCaskill, James C. McLean, Dr. J. D. Croom, (elected Elder in 1913, but never installed on account of illness), W. D. Baldwin, J. A. Patterson, A. McL Morrison, R. M. McNair, J. S. McRae, M. McNair, A. H. Currie, D. A. Patterson, H. C. Alford, H. C. McNair, R. D. Croom, A. C. McKinnon, McKay McKinnon, R. M. Williams, J. D. Medlin, J. E. Morrison, M. A. McQueen, D. C. McIver, B. W. Gentry, E. E. Chandler, R. F. Morris and Daniel Martin.

Good music is one of the greatest helps and blessings to a Church and adds very much to the worship, helping to prepare the minds and hearts of both minister and congregation for the preaching and hearing of the Word of God. The following organists and musicians have had charge of the music during these fifty years, and have done a large service for the Church: Mrs. M. E. McNair was organist from organization until her death in 1892, Mrs. J. B. McNatt, Miss Mary Patterson, Miss Cammie McCaskill, Miss Hallie Austin, Mrs. R. M. Williams, Mrs. D. C. McIver, Mrs. E. L. Siler, Director of the Choir and Mr. J. S. McRae, Assistant Director.

This Church has always laid great stress on the Sunday School, and none of our members ever seem to consider themselves too old to attend and study the Word of God. The success and value of the Sunday School during this half century has been largely promoted by the faithful and efficient Superintendents, and we wish to record in this history of the Church the names of these men who have done so much to promote the work of the Sunday School. Their names, in the order of their service, are as follows: W. J. Currie, Wm. Black, G. B. Patterson, Col. E. F. McRae, J. D. Austin, J. S. McRae, H. C. McNair, Dr. A. B. Croom, L. L. McGirt, R. D. Croom, J. P. Wiggins, McKay McKinnon, John B. McCallum, Jr., and Henry Cottingham.

We bring this history to a close by making honorable mention, last but not least, of the work of our noble and consecrated women in the Missionary Societies and, of late years, in the Woman's Auxiliary. The Woman's Missionary Society was organized in January 1886, and met at first under the gallery of the old church, on Sunday mornings. Afterwards it met in Miss Hattie McBryde's school house, and frequently in the homes of different members. The first President of this Society was Mrs. Anstress Burns, she was succeeded by Mrs. J. A. McLean, and she in turn by Mrs. Emma McRae. Later on the name of the Society was changed to the H. G. Hill Missionary Society, and the Presidents, in the order of their service, were: Mrs. M. B. Alford, Mrs. L. R. Kirkpatrick, Miss Lizzie Patterson and Mrs. J. O.

MATERIAL FOR JANUARY PROGRAM

Is Our Church Getting a Profitable Return on its Foreign Mission Investment?

As in the case of the first question, if we are to judge fairly, we must remember that the missionary's task concerns itself with the most immovable elements of life. His work is not merely the pruning or trimming of the leaves and twigs, but the transplanting bodily of a tree that has set its roots deep, having entwined them around the deep laid rocks of conservatism and being completely overgrown with the moss of centuries of tradition. We must bear in mind that the Foreign Mission work of the Southern Presbyterian Church is just sixty-one years old, and that for the greater part of the time we have had in the field a bare fraction of the force that only within the past decade has reached its present strength. Our first missionaries went to China in 1867, and two years later we began work in Brazil. In all our fields the work is less than fifty years old. In your men's group studying this program there are probably some who have outlived the entire period of our church's participation in Foreign Missions.

A—What Has Been Accomplished?

Our records for the past year show that in the churches and chapels under our missionaries there are 44,278 living communicants. Other thousands have passed on. This constitutes a Christian community larger than any of our Synods of the Southern Presbyterian Church except Virginian and North Carolina. Moreover, the above figure does not include other thousands, the direct fruit of our work, who are now in churches that no longer have any dependence on the missions, and the statistics for which appear in the records of their own church organizations. We have a Christian constituency including baptized infants, inquirers and probationers, of 95,050, and there are 70,104 pupils in our Sunday Schools. Here are a few examples from our fields of work has been accomplished.

1—Africa

Our missionaries are the only Christian workers in a large area of the Belgian Congo embracing almost a million people. Forty years ago not a man, woman, or child in this whole area could read or write his own language—there was no written language.

Since that time our missionaries, pioneered by Dr. Morrison, have reduced their language to writing; schools to the number of 450 have been built there; the natives taught to read and write; thousands of pages of printed literature have been broadcast; and between 55,000 and 60,000 have been given rudimentary education. For forty years we have controlled the entire literature of a people and they have had nothing to read except what is in line and in keeping with the principles and teachings of Christ.

Luebo is the largest town in our African Field. Eleven thousand of its 20,000 inhabitants are today professing Christians, and according to a recent statement of one of our missionaries, Christianity is already the dominant spiritual influence of the district. The largest congregation meeting under the banner of the Southern Presbyterian Church anywhere in all the world is in Luebo.

During the last year the translation of the entire Bible into the Baluba-Lulua language has been completed by Dr. T. C. Vinson, one of our missionaries, and it has been published by the American Bible Society.

When Bishop W. H. Lambuth of the Methodist Church, South, visited Luebo in 1912 he wrote home "A mere handful of white and colored Southern Presbyterian missionaries have gathered about them 8,000 earnest Christians, and out of this number 300 teachers and evangelists, who, while they themselves are under training, have daily under instruction thousands of children and grown people. Do you wonder that my soul is stirred when I think of this being carried on for a nine days' journey on foot in almost every direction from Luebo as the base or center, and by LAYMEN? Not one ordained preacher as yet, and 200 of the force of 300 self-supporting."

When our missionaries began the work at Oliveira, Brazil, a few years ago, they were met by intense opposition and persecution. Bibles distributed by them were confiscated by the priests of Romanism and were burned in a great demonstration on the public square. Today this prejudice and opposition have largely disappeared and places of meeting have been established in the city and on nearby farms. The meetings are well attended and a strong apostolic Church is in the making.

Our West Brazil Mission, our six ordained missionaries, during last year received 264 new converts on profession, or an average of forty-four to each missionary; and the contribution of the Brazilian Christians for the year was $14,924, or an average of $10.00 per member—a remarkable record for people who "have lately come out of idolatry and are mostly poor."

The work at Barroto was begun three years ago. There are already fourteen preaching points, eight Sunday Schools with 266 pupils, and last year fifty-six persons made profession of faith.

3—China

Despite banditry, revolutions, and war, and the withdrawal of many of our missionaries, the work in China has gone on, proving in countless instances the zeal of the Chinese Christians and their faith in God in the face of persecution and ridicule.

In spite of interrupted communications, eighty-seven commissioners, some from the farthest bounds of the Republic, gathered in Shanghai on October 1, 1927 and organized the United Church of China with 120,000 communicants representing the fruitage of our own and several other missionary societies.

4—Japan

Our work in the great city of Kobe, Japan, was begun less than forty years ago. Today there are seven Presbyterian churches in the city that are completely self-supporting, and six of these are the direct result of our Southern Presbyterian work. Besides paying pastors' salaries and current expenses in full, these churches are contributing to the benevolent program of the Japanese Presbyterian Church with a growing home and foreign mission work.

The Golden Castle College, in Nagoya, Japan, is next to Davidson College, the largest institution conducted anywhere by the Southern Presbyterian Church. This school with more than 600 pupils has a budget of about $35,000 a year, of which, exclusive of the salaries of the missionaries connected with the school, the Southern Presbyterian Church pays only about $3,000 per year, the remainder being supplied through tuition fees. It is notable that Japanese friends have actually contributed more toward the material equipment of this school than the Southern Presbyterian Church.

During the past year ten of our mission churches in Japan have been turned over to the native Presbyterian with a declining subsidy from the mission which in seven years will cease altogether, thus showing the progress being made toward native self-support.

5—Korea

The work in Kwangju, Korea, was begun less than 30 years ago. Today there are four churches (Presbyterian) in this city with a combined membership of about twelve hundred, and an average aggregate attendance of more than 2,000 a Sunday. Each church is completely self-supporting, with a building of its own, paying its pastor's salary in full, meeting all of its current expense, and contributing in addition to the benevolent program of the native Korean Church. There is no subsidy from the Mission for any one of these four churches.

The educational work of our missionaries in Mexico has received the cordial approval and endorsement of the Mexican State Department of Education. The young men and women trained in our mission schools have a wonderful field for Christian service in the repeated offers they receive to take charge of government schools in town and country.

In addition to the above definite results of our work there have been notable by-products. Conspicuous among these are some of the reform movements that have been initiated largely through our missionaries and their associates. Dr. Morrison of Africa exposed the Belgian atrocities in the Congo; Dubose of China was one of the leading spirits in ridding China of opium; and Kagawa of Japan is the outstanding figure in social and industrial reform in his country.

The Following Summary of a Year's Work Will Be of Interest

The regular cost of the foreign mission work of the Southern Presbyterian Church for a year is about $1,300,000. With this money last year you supported 484 missionaries, paid their salaries, furnished them homes in which to live, helped to educate their children, and provided for all the expenses of our work.

You supported 3,099 native workers, doctors, teachers, evangelists, and helpers, furnished them homes in which to live, helped to educate their children and provided for all the expenses of their work.

You maintained 966 schools in which 33,000 pupils were trained at an average cost to our church of $161 per school per year.

You maintained 19 hospitals in which 272,000 patients received treatment and 8,000 operations were performed at an average cost to our Church of sixteen cents per patient per year.

Last year there were 3,619 added on profession of faith to our mission churches by our Southern Presbyterian missionaries.

B—How Much Have We Paid for These Results?

The average per capita gift of the Southern Presbyterian Church membership last year, the biggest year of our history, was $3.87.

A little more than a year ago, 150,000 people gathered in the city of Chicago and paid more in one night to see a prize fight than the entire Southern Presbyterian Church gave in that whole year for the salvation of the world outside our own country.

The athletic budget of Yale University for the past year lacks just 10 per cent of being as much as the Foreign Mission Budget of the entire Southern Presbyterian Church for the current year.

In view of the above facts, can we resist the conclusion that our foreign mission investment, whether we consider it from purely a business standpoint, or as a great humanitarian work, or a spiritual venture in the name of Christ, has proven itself the most profitable of all enterprises?

--Is Money all that the Foreign Mission enterprise demands of Men?

No—Here are some other means of assisting in this world-wide enterprise:

1—Give More!

We need a far higher conception of giving. We have too often given to foreign missions as one would contribute to a passing charity. Missions is not one of the charities, it is the very life and work of the church. It isn't a branch of the tree of benevolences, it is the trunk itself.

A "Subscriber" is one who contributes regularly and perhaps liberally to a cause without actually identifying himself with it. A "stockholder" is one who casts in his lot with a cause and expects to stand or fall with it. We need more stockholders.

2—Pray!

Prayer is the very life of foreign missions. The enterprise was inaugurated in prayer; it must be continued in prayer. Neesima, the great Christian educator of Japan, said, "We must advance on our knees."

Prayer puts the infinite powers of the eternal God-head at the command of believers. Prayer is a sight draft on the resources of infinity. You can name your own figure. Your credit is already established if you have the endorsement of Christ. "Whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do." Why not draw a big draft today against these spiritual resources and make it payable to some far-off missionary, harassed and discouraged by the overwhelming odds against which he toils.

3—Be Intelligent!

Study missions. Don't be content merely to pay your way. A good citizen is not one who merely pays his taxes, and stays out of jail, but one who is intelligently informed on all civic matters and who can contribute advice, information, and guidance in matters of public concern. Citizens of Christ's kingdom must meet the same test.

Study missions and it will open up to you an immense field of knowledge and interest—trade, discovery, education, geography, adventure, history, international and inter-racial relations, world peace, social and economic and political reform as well as the moral and spiritual salvation of the world. You can't be an intelligent critic of history or of world events without a comprehensive knowledge of missions.

4—Boost!

Talk foreign missions. The most effective promotion that you can do for any cause is to show that you are wholeheartedly in sympathy with its aims. Why not gather a group of like-minded men about you and make it your business to keep foreign missions, her needs, opportunities, and conquests before the attention of your church.

5—Promote!

See that foreign missions has a place in the life and thought of your church organizations. Put missions into the Sunday School, Young People's Societies, Men's Organizations, and into your homes.

6—Co-operate!

Stand by your pastor or visiting speaker when he holds up before the church this great Christ-authorized task.

7—Initiate!

One outstanding need of the foreign mission enterprise today is for a man in each church, self-delegated, who will take the initiative in putting into motion the things that need to be done. Congregations, surcharged to the point of explosion with missionary enthusiasm, have settled back into complacency because there was no one to touch off the cap at the proper moment. One stammering voice raised at such a time would send its echoes around the world. Start something! Obey that impulse! Don't wait for the other fellow. He may be waiting for you.

8—Keep in Touch with the Field!

If your church is supporting a missionary, write to him once in a while. If not, write to Edward D. Grant, Box 330, Nashville, Tennessee, and get him to send you the names of several foreign missionaries. This personal direct touch with your missionary will greatly increase your interest and hearten him in his work. Share your intimate touch with the field with your friends and members of the congregation. Make your missionary an intimate acquaintance of the church.

9—Give Yourself!

During the war, when billions of dollars were being subscribed in this country to the various Liberty Loan word came from France, "We can't fight the enemy with money. Send us men." This is the cry of our mission fields. We want men, the finest men, with statesmanship to meet the complicated problems of the work; big-hearted, broad-minded men, who can see above and beyond the barriers of race and color, and who, above all, have a genuine experience of the grace of God in Christ. Give your sons and your daughters. Give yourself.

MATERIAL FOR FEBRUARY PROGRAM

First Speaker

I. How many indifferent men are there in our church? The most tremendous handicap to the progress of the Kingdom of God is the indifferent membership of the church. A nationally known speaker said some years ago that no church was ten percent efficient, and very few were over five. This indifferent group is like dead weight around the church—a veritable old man of the sea—and prevents any forward work. One of the sure evidences of the power of God is the fact that I can accomplish as much as He has accomplished through the church with such poor loyalty and careless support.

Very few church members realize what a large proportion of the church membership is standing with folded hands. If they did it would bring a blush of shame and new resolutions. The object of this meeting of Men-of-the-Church is to drive home this truth and start some honest heart searching on the subject. Should bring the men face to face with the problem. It is not an easy problem to solve and it should not be made easy, but should be presented in such a way that it would send men to their knees imploring forgiveness and mercy for past negligence.

GET FACTS

Facts alone will get the message across. Go to your pastor and get a roll of the church members. Check all the men. Divide the men into three sections—indifferent; semi-active and active. The indifferent are those who do not attend church at all, or very infrequently, who are not interested in any of the organizations of the church; the semi-active attend church with some regularity and make small contributions, but no more; active are those who carry the burdens of the church attendance, service and gifts. This work should be carefully done. Only as the speaker is sure of his facts and sold on the proposition himself, will he be able to sell to others.

The Indifferent List

Having secured the facts they should be given to the men in a striking way. Take for instance, the men who are utterly indifferent—How many are there? What percentage of the church roll is it? If those men were enlisted what would it mean to church attendance? to the finances of the church? to the spiritual work of the church? Picture the church with all the indifferent members registering 100.

The Semi-Active List

Analyze then the semi-active list. What do they add to the church attendance? What do they add to the gifts of the church? What do they add to the spiritual work of the church? These can only be estimated. What would the church be if these could be changed from seat warmers to active members?

The Burden

The burden falls on a faithful few. This burden grows heavy at times. Would it not be a wise thing for the active men to make a real effort to enlist the indifferent and careless—wise both for the Kingdom and for themselves?

Your talk might be outlined as follows: (1) The number of indifferent and what their enlistment would mean to the church; (2) the number of semi-active and what their enlistment would mean to the church; (3) the burden of the indifferent; (4) the need to enlist both for the sake of the active members and for the Kingdom's sake.

Second Speaker

II. Why are they Indifferent?

The material for this talk should be secured by analyzing the indifferent members of your church roll. Be sure to hunt for the deeper things and not the surface things. We suspect that you will find that the following things enter:

1. United with church without change of heart and life.

There are many reasons for joining the church which are not spiritual. Men sometimes join because it is the correct thing to do,—if the name is on the church roll when the man is satisfied. Business reasons sometimes induce a man to join—it helps business to belong to certain churches and to be seen there occasionally. Social reasons are a very important factor. Some churches are to blame, for they use so much persuasion that the man is literally forced into the church—little wonder he shows no interest. Competition in certain cities is so keen between churches that men are received without much examination. These evils should not only be mentioned, but a way should be mentioned by which they can be stamped out.

2. Missed the church love and care.

The church treats a great many of its new members as if they were already grown in grace. The apostle calls them babes in Christ. A babe is not supposed to stand alone without support, nor to live even without constant care and nourishment from others. Nor should we expect more from new church members. Yet, if the truth be known, they were not visited in their homes, they were not looked up when first they missed, they were not sought after when they first went astray. The church let them shift for themselves. Consequently they drifted away completely and lost all interest. A little love and a little care might have saved them.

3. They neglected the means of God's grace. Inquire diligently from these indifferent folk as to their spiritual life and you will find every time that they have given up all the exercises of religion. How can a man expect to live close to God and never pray at all, yet has been the experience of one man that man after man will crawl in bed at night with never a prayer to his Maker. It would be impossible to explain the appalling ignorance of the Bible on any other grounds than that it is not read.

There is something in attendance at the services of the sanctuary which strengthens and builds the inner spiritual life. When these are missed, the Christian grows careless and indifferent. Yet, church going is a kind of bit. If a church service is missed one time, it is easier to miss the second time. This is true, too, of the Lord's Supper. Something vital is killed or weakened in a Christian's heart when he deliberately misses the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper. These are but a few of the things which cause the widespread indifference of the members of the church. It may be that you, the speaker, can do a worthwhile service to the church to study this problem at first hand by asking questions of indifferent people and find the actual causes which underlie the present day problem. There are many others which you will find. Sometime it is the fault of the church, and the members are not fed on the Bread of Life, and are not given the Water of Life to drink when they come. But there are reasons which the church should discover, and the church should find a remedy for the conditions. Your outline would be the list of causes as you find and check them off. Get the cause and think through until you get the results, and perhaps the remedy—although this comes in the talk of the last man.

What can we do to help the indifferent man?

Offer Christian Fellowship, Love and Care. Love is the greatest force in the world to overcome indifference. More men have been redeemed by love in this world than by any other. Jesus was supremely wise when he determined that love should be the weapon with which his disciples should go out to conquer and win the world. The love of the Master, shed abroad in the hearts of his followers, will do more than any other thing to call men back. Once convince any man that you love him and the victory is yours. From the rudest African to the most cultured American it always proves true. This love, however, is won by sacrifice. Men have a way of looking askance at any love which does not give and give and give. If you talk to the most hard hearted sinner in the world and make him feel that you love him enough to do anything for him then you have the entree into his heart.

We have lost a great many men by making them feel that the church does not care a snap of the fingers about them, and the only way to win them back is by proving by sacrificial service that you love them as the Lord loved. This love is shown by such simple things as visiting, letters, simple gifts, trips together, a cordial welcome, a handshake and so on.

2. Help them to develop the Christian graces.

Men should be encouraged in prayer, yet we never talk to a man about how he is enjoying his prayer life. We never tell him how much we get out of ours and some of the joys which we find. Those things are taboo in our conversation, and we never help each other in any way. Is it right? Heart to heart talks about reading God's Word and the Sacraments and other things of the Spirit are what men need. Yet they are not what we give to those who are young in Christ.

3. Live Simple, Earnest Christian Lives.

The most influential men in every community are the men whose character is unquestioned. Men in the last analysis follow character. We need not try to work for the Master if our lives are not in accord with His life. The scandal of the lives of some who profess to be leaders in the church has driven away many. This is no reason, for the church is not proud of such men, but men like that will never bring the wayfarer back. The men of the church must come clean before they can ever have the slightest influence on the indifferent man. But is it not worth it? Shouldn't we live that kind of life anyway?

The outline for the talk is contained in the book of programs. If the speaker has anything to add, and we feel sure that he will have many other things to add, he can add them to the ones suggested.

All of the talks should be prepared with the local church in mind. Why are these things in our church? What shall we do about it? If the program is made practical in this way it will be wonderfully helpful and wonderfully interesting.

SOME HAVE STOPPED DRINKING

Condensed from The Saturday Evening Post
(January 28, 1928)

Evangeline Booth

My father, General William Booth, started the Salvation Army standing on a soap box outside one of the blackest, most degraded saloons in the East End of London. His followers, in carrying on warfare against sin and poverty, always have found their frontier most clearly defined at the doors of saloons. What do they say of prohibition?

The New York Bowery is a good place to take surroundings. As the bony carcasses of dead creatures of the deep sink to the ocean floor, so the thwarted and spiritless men of New York finally sink to the Bowery. Before prohibition there were eight licensed saloons to be counted in every block of the Bowery, besides many unlicensed speak-easies, brothels, frightful dance halls, murderous dives of every variety. Shuffling along the pavements one encountered thousands of men who were a perpetual challenge to that slogan of the Salvation Army which insists that a man may be down, but he's never out.

Recently the Salvationist in command of that district, a man who had been familiar with it in the old days, made a count of the speak-easies and discovered that there were 15 within a mile, dingy places the customers of which pass into a stupor within half an hour after they begin to drink the chemical fluid that is poured into their glasses from white china pitchers kept under the bar. Practically all the customers, he reported, were old men who attempt to satisfy old cravings with these synthetic poisons.

"We seldom see a young drunkard among the homeless men on the Bowery. We do what we can for the old rummies, for the ones whose appetites took possession of their decent instincts before prohibition."

In 1913 this same officer was stationed in Jersey City, where there were 1,200 saloons, across the bars of which on a Saturday night 85,000 men would be squandering their week's wages. In doorways, on the sidewalks, in gutters, as the night wore on, were to be seen helpless men and women. These were not homeless people. They were American workers and the money they had squandered, we of the Salvation Army knew, was money needed for food, clothing and shelter of their poor families.

That officer conceived a plan for shielding the collapsed drunkards from the thieves who hunted them as mercilessly as wolves. He made stretchers and sent out men in pairs to pick up the drunkards. Some nights 25 or 30 such men and women were brought in. Hot coffee was given to them until they were sobered. For those who could not be sobered there were cots. How short are the memories people have! In what industrial center of America does anything of that sort occur today?

Let me ask you to step back in memory to those days when the doors of saloons swung wide. There were Boweries then in every city in the land. There was Whiskey Row in Packingtown, behind the Chicago stockyards. About 15 saloons of the old Whiskey Row have given place to the splendid Packingtown Day Nursery. Drug stores, barber shops and automobile salesrooms have entered into other vacated saloon quarters. Vice has not disappeared, I know; but it is not so bold as it was before prohibition.

It is sometimes argued on country-club porches and in drawing-rooms that women are drinking more than they did in former days. I do not think so. The Salvation Army in its Eastern division operates ten rescue homes for women—chiefly unmarried mothers—with a total capacity of 500. Before prohibition in each of those homes we were always trying to straighten out half a dozen or more drink cases, and if you can imagine anything more tragic than a newly born baby lying in the arms of a drink-soaked mother your imagination outstrips mine. Today, in all our rescue homes, there are no more than half a dozen inmates addicted to beer or whiskey.

I do not believe there is in all America today a hotel enterprise low enough to be called a flop house for women; yet I can remember when there were some in every large city. There was one in Cherry Street in New York. It was an unroofed yard in the rear of a frightful tenement. Nearly all the grocers in that region maintained drinking rooms in the rear of their stores. Women who entered to buy groceries, and then had a few drinks in the back room, often forgot that there were children at home who needed that food. Many of the customers of grocery drinking places were homeless women and when they were sleepy with beer they would go into that tenement to which I have referred and pay for the privilege of sleeping in one of the bunks that were built in tiers of three. If they had only five or ten cents they were permitted to go into the yard and sleep on the ground. In the summer, from one of the tenement flats overlooking that yard, you might look down and see 20 or more American women snoring there in hideous concert.

Most of those women were too old to get into worse places the proprietors of which were all too willing to welcome younger women stupefied by drink. Our workers in the tenement field today believe that most of the patrons of the flop houses for women are dead, and they know the type is not being recruited.

I wish all those who question whether any change for the better has been worked in America might observe the conditions in the slums abroad. One of our London homes shelters about 200 women, three-quarters of whom are so absolutely degraded by drink as to appear beyond the hope of redemption. They are in rags and tatters, bleary-eyed and indecent. Drinking is responsible for their condition and there is no use ascribing the cause to anything else. In Dundee, Edinburgh, Glasgow and other industrial cities the Salvation Army homes are trying to work some sort of regeneration in a type of womanhood so degraded that one shudders to think of their condition. You could not recruit such a lot of women in this land of prohibition if you tried. They are not here, although we used to have some bad ones.

There is some drinking among the poor in the United States, beyond question, and bootleg alcohol makes poverty quite as much potency as alcohol that is bottled in bond. But there is far less drinking than when liquor was to be had at every corner. The volume of drinking is amazingly, gloriously lessened.

There has been such a revolutionary change in the lower strata of American society during the past eight years that the Salvation Army has been required to make almost equally revolutionary changes in its machinery for relieving distress. We scrapped our ten and fifteen cent lodgings some time ago because there were no longer men to sleep in them. The men uncharitably called bums are disappearing. We have room and jobs for more worthy men in our industrial homes, because they are no longer besieged by a clamorous swarm of drunken wrecks.

Because we do not have to devote so much costly effort to parents, we have much more time to devote to helpless children. We have been able to expand our prison work. With all emphasis, I declare that there is less misery in the homes of the poor in America today because of the disappearance of saloons. Tens of thousands of homes have been re-established because—through prohibition—some Americans have stopped drinking.—The Reader's Digest.

THE GRAHAM BUILDING

Through the month of December, which is set apart for the study of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief, the needs of this Department of the Church were made known through the Presbyterian Survey and the Church papers. We have been amazed to receive a number of letters in which a statement like this is made: "We thought the Graham Building would forever take care of the aged and infirm ministers and needy widows and orphans of deceased ministers of our church."

We are glad that questions have been asked us about this matter. It was never thought for one moment that the Graham Building and the other endowment could possibly care of the growing class of annuitants. No statement of this kind ever went out from the Louisville office and we were wholly unaware that there was anyone in the church that had such an idea.

During the War the Heard National Bank in Jacksonville, Fla., failed. All of its property went into the hands of the United States Controller. The building was purchased in 1919 by the late Mr. C. E. Graham who paid $700,000 for it. He agreed to turn it over to the Endowment Fund of Ministerial Relief if the church would contribute $400,000 and the Executive Committee would invest $100,000 of its funds in the building. This was done and Mr. Graham made his munificent gift of $200,000 and transferred the investment to the Endowment Fund in January, 1921. The name of the building was changed to "The Graham Building." It is a fourteen story modern bank and office building, located in the heart of the financial district of Jacksonville, Fla., was erected in 1912 at a cost of $900,000 and could not be replaced today for less than $1,500,000, according to the testimony of competent architects and constructors.

Since the original investment we have been able to purchase the air and light rights on the south of the building, which frees the building of such encumbrances. This makes a total investment in the Graham Building of $714,424. However, we have set aside a sinking fund of $140,000 which reduces the investment to $674,424. After meeting all of the cost of repairs, insurance, taxes and operating expenses and setting aside $20,000 a year for the sinking fund, we have had from this investment an average of $52,975 each year to go to these homes in need.

No one who has not given the matter serious thought can begin to understand how rapidly the cost of pensioning any growing group of annuitants becomes. Hundreds of pension schemes have been started in the United States which have either been modified or have been forced to cease operations. We are now working on a plan whereby the church and the minister will begin at once to lay by a sufficient amount of money to provide for the minister and his family at the time of disability, on account of accident, sickness, old age or death.

The full benefits of this plan would not be apparent until the end of thirty-five years, but the Ministers Annuity Fund will prove to be a sane, sensible, Christian solution to one of the biggest problems now facing the churches and boards of missions throughout the world. Our plan is, in its essence, very much like that adopted by a large number of other denominations in the United States. Because we have a pension plan that must be modified or adapted to meet needs that were not recognized when other pension systems were formed, we will have a great advantage over many of the other churches.

Let no one think that the Endowment Fund has or can meet the needs of our ministers. Until the Minister's Annuity Fund is well established, there will always be a need for large contributions for the work of Ministerial Relief.

The General Assembly, in session in Atlanta, increased the amounts asked for Christian Education and Ministerial Relief, from 12 1-2 to 13 1-2 per cent. of the amounts requested for Assembly causes.

CHURCH NEWS

REV. P. W. WILSON CALLED TO MEMPHIS

The Charlotte Observer of January 1, announces: Rev. Parks W. Wilson, pastor of the West Avenue Presbyterian Church here, yesterday was advised by wire of a unanimous call to the Second Presbyterian Church of Memphis, as associate pastor.

Mr. Wilson confirmed receipt of the telegram after announcement in Memphis by the church's pastor, Rev. A. B. Curry, that a call would be extended.

The invitation follows a visit made to Memphis by Mr. Wilson on December 16 at the request of the congregation there when he conducted both morning and evening services and was introduced to the membership.

Rev. P. W. Wilson is a native of Georgia and pursued his studies for the bachelor of divinity degree at Columbia Seminary, Columbia, S. C., during his last two years there conducted services in York county. Upon graduation he studied for a year at Princeton Seminary in New Jersey to obtain his master of theology degree and acted as pastor also at the Presbyterian Church in Ashland, N. J.

He came to the West Avenue Presbyterian Church in Charlotte in November, 1926, and has served continuously since that time.

July 20-28—United Presbyterian Missionary Conference, Tarkio, Mo.

August 2-9—United Presbyterian Missionary Conference, New Wilmington, Penn.

DEATH OF REV. J. B. HILLHOUSE

Rev. J. B. Hillhouse, of Bethune, S. C., died on Wednesday, December 26 at the Ellen Fitzgerald Hospital, Monroe, N. C. The death was due to kidney trouble. The body was taken to Calhoun, Ga., for interment.

Brother Hillhouse was pastor of a group of churches, including Bethune, Pinetree, and Turkey Creek, all in Congaree Presbytery.

ALBEMARLE PRESBYTERY—ADJOURNED MEETING

An adjourned meeting of Albemarle Presbytery is called to meet at First Presbyterian Church, Greenville, January 8, 1929, at 10 a. m.

J. T. Wildman, Moderator.

NORTH CAROLINA

Hopewell—The congregation gave their minister a pounding at Christmas.

Dr. E. W. Smith's "Desire of All Nations," Dr. Geo. F. Robertson's "King John and Only Nancy," and a life of "John G. Paton," are being circulated by the minister and recognition given for reading them.

More than a score readers of the "Pilgrim's Progress" were given wall texts for reading the classic, and an offering was taken for the American Tract Society for the John Bunyan 300th anniversary.

Charlotte—The North Charlotte Presbyterian Church, Thirty-first and Alexander streets, which was totally destroyed by fire Sunday morning, the blaze breaking out while the morning worship was in progress, was entirely protected by insurance, Rev. A. F. Doty, pastor, reports.

Insurance on the structure was carried by the Home Mission Board of the Mecklenburg Presbytery.

A meeting of the church's officers will be held shortly to work out plans for rebuilding. All services in the meantime will likely be held in the community house in North Charlotte.

The piano and the pulpit are all that were saved from the flames.

Maxton—Last Sunday afternoon at 5 o'clock a very impressive White Gift Service was held at the Presbyterian Church. Besides the usual Christmas carols, the choir of 19 voices rendered most beautifully a Christmas cantata, "The Manger King," with Mrs. R. M. Williams at the organ and Mr. F. H. Ponish supporting with lovely violin obligato. Dr. Siler made a short talk on God's Great Gift to Us, and "The True Significance of Christmas." The offering for Christian Education and Ministerial Relief amounted to $40.00. The cantata was under the direction of Mrs. E. L. Siler, and the whole service was directed by Mrs. Siler and Miss Louise McCallum. Eleven girls recited beautiful and appropriate verses foretelling the coming of Christ, while the decorations were arranged by Miss Gladys McEachin, Mrs. Baxter Morris and Mr. Henry Cottingham, Superintendent of the Sunday School. Mr. Cottingham led in the Scripture reading and prayer. The whole service was inspiring and uplifting and has been pronounced by many the best and most beautiful service of the kind we have ever had.

Red Springs—At Flora Macdonald College, Sunday night, December 16th, the annual White Gift Service was held in the college auditorium. An appropriate program prepared by the Flora Macdonald Christian Association, and the college chorus of eighty voices in a Christmas cantata, "The Hope of the World," by Schaecker, directed by Miss Elizabeth Caldwell, made up the impressive service.

The spirit of the legend, "White Gifts for the King," was symbolized by the gifts, promises and pledges written on rolls of white paper and tied on the Christmas tree. These were read and consisted of pledges of service and also of substance, various amounts given by Sunday School classes and different groups to the following causes: Mountain missions, foreign missions, and poor in the community. The sum was close to $200.

Stanley—On December 16, 1928, the retiring pastor, Rev. Jos. T. Dendy, dedicated our new church building which is a splendid one of brick veneer, seven Sabbath school rooms and an auditorium that will seat about three hundred people. The building cost nearly $7,000 and is all paid for except a few hundred dollars on the pews and this amount is covered in a note at the bank.

This congregation of seventy members deserves a great deal of credit for what it has accomplished during the past year. It has a live Sabbath School, a good Woman's Auxiliary and a bright future lies before this church.

Mr. Dendy will give all his time to Grover, beginning January 1, 1929, but the congregation is fortunate in securing Dr. Geo. F. Robertson, of Mt. Holly, to preach on the first Sabbath of the New Year and hopes to retain him as stated supply until the spring meeting of Presbytery, or until Stanley Creek is needed to form another grouping. Cor.

Sugaw Creek—Dr. H. W. McLaughlin, director of Country Church Work of the General Assembly, preached at this church, December 16. The congregation was greatly pleased with his sermon on the Strategic Importance of the Country Church. He also preached at Caldwell Memorial, Charlotte, at night.

Dr. McLaughlin was the guest of Mr. F. S. Neal, of Sugaw Creek, formerly a member of the Assembly's Committee on the Country Church Work.

Wilmore, Charlotte—On Sunday night, December 23rd, the sacred pageant, "Prisoners of Hope," was presented in this church under the leadership of Mrs. Durant Dean, one of its members who is especially qualified for work of this kind. Careful preparation had been made, beautiful scenery was arranged by another member of the church, Mr. B. H. Barefoot, a professional interior decorator, all the characters contemplated were represented and the effort was made to carry out fully the spirit and purpose of the program as sent out from the Department of Christian Education. There were two choirs, which sung antiphonally, both being concealed and one of them being stationed on the second floor. Several members of other churches very kindly assisted in the singing. The whole atmosphere was one of reverence and worship and the large congregation seemed deeply moved, and many expressions of approval and delight were afterwards heard. An offering was taken for the cause of Ministerial Relief.

SOUTH CAROLINA

Greenville—On the last Sabbath in November, Rev. E. P. Davis preached in the Third Church, and moderated a congregational meeting to call a pastor. The call was extended to Rev. J. H. Viser, D.D., of Norfolk, Va.

Enoree Presbytery met in the First Church, Spartanburg, S. C., in adjourned session on December 11, 1928, and adopted the budget for the year beginning April 1, 1929, recommended by the Stewardship Committee. The budget calls for $66,000 for Assembly and Synod causes, and $9,600 for its own work.

A call for the pastoral services of Rev. J. H. Viser, D.D., of Norfolk Presbytery was presented to Presbytery by the Greenville Third Church, and being found in order, the church was authorized to prosecute it before the Presbytery of which he is a member.

Being overtured by the Synod of South Carolina in regard to the matter, the following action was taken:

"That the Presbytery express its readiness to transfer its rights in the Presbyterian College and in Chincora College to the Synod of South Carolina as soon as the matter is presented to the Presbytery in proper form for the formal and legal transfer of said rights." Stated Clerk.

APPALACHIA

Fassifern School, at Hendersonville, N. C., is meeting a real need in furnishing parents a safe and delightful place for their daughters to take their preparatory work. It is an accredited High School, doing work that admits its graduates to the best colleges of the north and south. While not under the care of Presbytery, it is strongly Christian in its influence. Removed from the distractions of the modern social life so often found in cities and small towns, a girl has every advantage in such a school as Fassifern. Many of those who have come from such conditions have their first experience of really studying and applying themselves. For the girl from the country where the high schools are not up to the standard, Fassifern offers a fine place to prepare for college or for life.

During the influenza epidemic which has swept over the country causing the closing of many schools, Fassifern by careful nursing succeeded in getting through without any serious results and without closing a single day of school. The girls who were compelled to be in the infirmary are being helped by their teachers to make up the work they lost.

The new brick gymnasium is nearing completion and when dedicated will add greatly to the pleasure and health of the girls. It is to be a modern gymnasium in every respect, with full sized basketball court as well as a large and well appointed stage.

Dr. Sevier, the President, reports that there are already several enrollments for after the holidays, with the prospects that the school will be full for the second semester which begins February 1st.

ALABAMA

Mobile—Under the leadership of Messrs. W. W. Middleton and Robert E. Gordon, superintendent and assistant superintendent of the Sabbath School of Central Church, Mobile, a special contribution was made for the home mission work of Mobile Presbytery. The goal set by the school authorities was $250, but the people gave about $370.

Foley—Rev. A. R. Cates of Acworth, Ga., has been called to be pastor of the Foley group of churches in Baldwin county the southernmost churches in Alabama.

Cuba—This church has just closed a series of evangelistic services in which the pastor, Rev. Perry H. Biddle, had the assistance of Rev. Daniel J. Currie, pastor of the Presbyterian Church of DeFuniak Springs, Fla. The preaching was thoroughly Scriptural, practical and forceful. Though a Presbyterian meeting, it early took the character of a union meeting, pastors and members of other churches soon becoming actively interested. It was pronounced the best evangelistic meeting ever held here. We feel that we have been greatly blessed by Mr. Currie's coming. We hope and believe that the spiritual life of our church has been quickened and enriched. Our newly organized Christian Endeavor Society is doing much to bring out the splendid talent of our fine young people.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Central Church of Washington—The annual Christmas Giving Service was held Friday night, December 14, in the lecture room, and in spite of a heavy rain the room was full. The money gifts have come to $605; and the ladies who came the next morning to pack the presents given the night before, reported very generous giving, one gift being 15 pounds of coffee. These boxes have been sent to five different places. Sunday night at 7 a large congregation gathered to hear the pastor, Rev. Dr. Jas. H. Taylor, tell the young folks the Christmas story. A. H.

FLORIDA

DeFuniak Spring—During the last few weeks the session of this church has had the pleasure of receiving 19 new members, most of them by letter.

In the absence of the pastor, Rev. H. A. Love, president of Palmer College, favored the congregation with a splendid sermon on the second Sunday in December. Daniel J. Currie, Pastor.

KENTUCKY

The Presbytery of Muhlenburg held a called meeting at Henderson, Ky., December 17, 1928, and received the Rev. I. J. Heizer from the Presbytery of Memphis, and arranged for his installation on January 13 as pastor of the Central Church of Henderson, Kentucky.

The Presbytery also dissolved the pastoral relation of Rev. J. Tyler Davis and the Morganfield Church and dismissed him to the Presbytery of Transylvania that he may accept a call to the church at Lawrenceburg, Ky.

Guerrant—Scholarship Offers at Highland—Two good friends of Highland Institution have recently sent us $25.00 to be used as might seem best. We have concluded to offer this money as prizes to the high school students who make the first and second highest grades in their studies. It is the conviction of our faculty that attainments in scholarship should ... given conspicuous recognition and our students made to feel that those who surpass in their studies in the approbation of the school. We are most anxious to stimulate the children in the grades by offering the same rewards. In addition to these cash prizes, we are offering a half-scholarship, worth $50, for next session to the best all-round student in the first three years of high school, and another half-scholarship to the best all-round student in the eighth grade. This offer has been made on faith, as we have of the means in sight with which to make it good. We believe, however, that an effort to improve the all-round work of our students is sufficiently worthwhile for us to risk something on faith. Perhaps some friends of our mountain work would like to give these scholarships for the present session. Such generous donations would, we believe, be good investments. Guerrant, Ky.

Cary R. Blain, Superintendent.

Fulton—Mrs. Wade and I have practically completed the church canvass in this town of 8,000 inhabitants in western Kentucky. We have found many out of church and Sunday school. We have found frequently whole families having no sort of relation with the church.

We have found several Presbyterians, some whom we have already begun to worship with us, and are quite active. We have recently organized Sunday schools at Fulton, and Mt. Joy, a very needy community about thirty miles distant from Fulton, but near Columbus, Ky., another one of our preaching points. In Fulton specially, largely the result of the canvass, there has been an awakening that is genuinely encouraging. We entertained the Sunday school and church in our home the afternoon and evening of December 16.

MISSISSIPPI

Starkville—The First Presbyterian Church, observed the Annual Church School of Home Missions, November 11-18. This school came to a close last Sunday evening—the final class period being held at 7:30 o'clock. The opening address was made on Sunday night, Nov. 11th by Miss Routh Clarke, synodical worker with Dr. O. G. Jones' committee.

Beginning Monday evening, November 12th, and continuing through each evening of the week, except Saturday, classes were held for men, women, young people and juniors, with the following teachers: Mr. M. H. Moore, teacher of the men, Leaders of the Circles for the Women, Miss Lutie Trent, teacher of the young people and Mrs. Paul Castles teacher of the Juniors. The first three named classes studied "Christ and the Country People" by Dr. H. W. McLaughlin. The Juniors studied "Our Next-Door Neighbors" by Margaret Applegarth.

A good school was held. The total enrollment was 158 with an average attendance of 72. Certificates were awarded 24 persons for perfect attendance. The class period lasted 45 minutes, followed by an inspirational and devotional period of 30 minutes by the pastor, Rev. R. S. Woodson. The first two nights the inspirational was centered around the theme, "Stewardship of Personality and Substance." Rev. Kelly Jinger gave an address on the leper work in Korea on Wednesday night. Thursday night a great deal of interest was created when Prof. F. D. Mellen and the pastor, Rev. R. S. Woodson met in a debate, "Resolved, That the prime emphasis of the Church should be on the country work." Friday night addresses were given on several phases of the country work: the country doctor, the country teacher and the country preacher.

An interesting feature of the school was the program on Sunday evening in the Young People's class when they had a radio program. The leader tuned in and they got the First Presbyterian Church of Richmond, Va. Rev. R. S. Woodson took the part of Dr. H. W. McLaughlin, author of the book studied, and challenged the young people to join the New Crusade to the rural districts. Several college students assisted in the program as noted speakers of the Southern Presbyterian Church. The announced then hooked up with local stations and the leader continued the discussion of the book.

The final class period on Sunday evening was followed by an inspirational address, in the Church auditorium, by Rev. R. W. Hardy, Superintendent of Home Missions of East Mississippi Presbytery. He illustrated his address with stereopticon slides. The total offering taken at this time amounted to $120.00, which will go to Assembly's Home Missions.

TENNESSEE

McLemore Avenue Church, Memphis—This church as part of the simultaneous campaign that was put on in the city of Memphis through the month of October and the first part of November, 1928. October was Loyalty Month and during this month this church put on three special meetings, the first by the men of the Church, the second by the Women of the Church and the last by the Young People of the Church. These services were all preparatory to the special evangelistic services that began on the fourth of November and continued through the eighteenth of November.

Dr. S. H. Hay, of Morristown, Tenn., was with us at this meeting and preached twelve days for us. Dr. Hay's preaching was of a high order and was gladly received by the large congregations that were present.

We know of no man that is more satisfactory than Dr. Hay to have in a meeting like the one that we had. We love him very much. As a result of the special meetings there were from 100 to last, 40 additions to this church. The large part by profession of faith and baptism.

The meeting on the whole was a great success. There was nothing to mar or turn aside the minds of the people and many of the members showed the greatest loyalty to the meetings, especially the Young People and the leaders in the congregation.

All parts of the church are putting on new life and we confidently look for fruits in many days to come. John W. Orr, Pastor.

LOUISIANA

The Synod of Louisiana met in the First Church of Shreveport, November 20, 22—with 37 ministers and 27 elders present. Rev. Dr. B. C. Bell was elected moderator.

The Synod urged its members and educational institutions to face earnestly and prayerfully the facts contained in the Educational Survey of the Assembly's Committee. Rev. Dr. W. S. Lacy, of Southwestern, and Dr. T. E. Heinmuller of Silliman College addressed the Synod.

Synod accepted an invitation from the Theological Seminary of Austin, Texas, to affiliate with it in the control of said institution. A similar invitation had been presented by the Theological Seminary of Louisville, Ky., through its president, Rev. Dr. J. M. Vander Meulen. The vote of the Synod, after a long debate, resulted in a tie, the moderator casting the deciding vote in favor of Austin Seminary.

The trustees of the Louisiana Orphanage to be established at Minden, it the way be clear, were directed to negotiate with Palmer Orphanage at Columbus, Miss., and report at the next meeting.

Rev. Dr. H. W. McLaughlin addressed the Synod on The Country Church. A solemn memorial service was held for the three ministers who died during the year, Rev. Dr. Charles H. Maury on January 13, Rev. Dr. Geo. H. Cornelson on March 5, and Rev. Dr. B. L. Price on May 7.

The next meeting will be held in Baton Rouge. Louis Voss, S. C.

OKLAHOMA

Weatherford—Our church enjoyed a rare privilege November 18th in having with us Dr. Henry W. McLaughlin, director of Country Church Work. He spoke four times and succeeded in giving our people a very definite view of the possibilities for our church locally and as a whole by working the country districts. Oklahoma is a great farming state and the opportunities are unusual. Dr. McLaughlin will soon give the church some facts concerning this great state that will be a revelation to many people.

Our son Frederick has remarked that "If Dr. McLaughlin had stayed around here a few more days he would have made a country preacher out of me."

This is our first time since the organization of this church, four years ago on Armistice Day, to have a representative of any department of the Assembly's work, and we wish to express our sincere appreciation.

While Dr. McLaughlin is from the F. F. V. (First Family of Virginia) territory he knows the language of the West. He is no "old fogey," but a progressive, he is not a "high color Easterner," but a Cosmopolitan—a man with a message that can be understood in the four corners of our land.

The Doctor well told us that we will never build our church to good advantage till we invade the country districts. That fact is forcefully brought to our attention here in the local college by the fact that those churches which have done most in the country have the greatest number of students on the roll.

If there should be someone who would like to help in this country work send to our church treasurer, Mr. J. S. Dobyne, Weatherford, Okla. $25.00 per month for the country work in this field. I will be glad to place in Mr. Dobyne's hands an itemized account of the expenditures, distance traveled, places visited, sermons preached, visits in homes made possible by the giver thus co-operating. Mr. Dobyne will send a copy of this itemized account to the donor. We should have "out-stations" in several directions. We should have exactly the same system here that is used in China, and there is no territory that lends to this plan better than this part of Oklahoma. We have roads on all section lines. When you receive directions to any place you are told to go so many miles this way and that way. For example—5 miles east, 7 miles south and 1 mile east.

During the summer I have preached eight days 15 miles southeast of Weatherford and will soon have a regular appointment at this place; and we are trying to arrange a meeting place and appointment 15 miles northwest. Strange that points should open up so far away when there are so many places nearer home, but we have had that experience many times in China.

We could increase the usefulness of the home missionaries several times over by furnishing them traveling expenses and other minor equipment. No business man would think of putting a force in the field with scarcely enough to pay monthly bills and nothing for operating expenses. We hope the Church at large will be on the "look out" and get the vision Dr. McLaughlin would like to have us all realize. We have recently received 12 people into the church and nine new families are represented.

VIRGINIA

Lynchburg — The young people of Westminster, numbering about 100, met December 27 in auditorium of the church school annex for a holiday re-union and a banquet, the first of the sort ever held by them as a group. It was so happy that plans are being considered to make it an annual affair, specially as 18 of the group were college students. The feast part of the occasion was a turkey dinner with all the other usual things, and served under the direction of Mrs. John A. Anderson, assisted by a group of the women of the auxiliary of the church.

As a part of the social period talks were made by four of the group on separate phases of the theme. "Our Westminster." Miss Wortley Crowe, spoke on "Training at Massanetta Springs Assembly;" E. B. Hickson, on "Training in Christian Endeavor Society;" Miss Elizabeth Palmer on "Training in the Church School;" and Randolph Church on "Its Influence on College Life." Each developed the need for the training, its value to those affected and what should be given back.

The pastor, Rev. Robert Whitfield Miles, who presided, concluded with the expressions of satisfaction that so large a number had attended as many had been prevented by the flu though having sent in acceptances; that the speakers had voiced the high ideals and that the Jesus will fill all their lives and plans.

WEST VIRGINIA

Kanawha Presbytery convened in the First Presbyterian Church, Charleston, W. Va., Monday, December 24, 1928, at 2:30 p. m., to transact the following business, if the way be clear, viz.:

1. To receive candidates for the ministry under its care.

2. To amend recommendation (2) of Presbytery's Home Mission report (Page 23, 1928 Fall Minutes) so as to make it binding until the church building at Belle, W. Va., is paid for in full.

3. To transact any business growing out of either of the above items, or closely connected with same.

F. J. Brooke, Jr., Moderator.
J. B. M., Stated Clerk.
Charleston, W. Va.

Kanawha Presbytery—On the second Sunday in October, the 11th, a commission ordained and installed licentiate Frank S. Jones as pastor of the Clothier Church. Rev. J. E. Cousar, Jr., presided, preached the sermon and propounded the constitutional questions. Rev. C. R. Garrison, Superintendent of Home Missions, delivered the charge to the pastor, and Dr. J. B. Morton delivered the charge to the congregation. Ruling Elder A. T. McDonald, of the Clothier Church, was present as a member of the commission.

Mr. Jones is a graduate of Louisville Theological Seminary, class of 1928. He has been laboring at Clothier since early in the last summer. Since coming to this field he has been licensed and ordained.

The Church is located in the heart of the southern West Virginia coal field, and has a fine prospect before it. Since the time that Rev. E. L. Wilson was superintendent of Home Missions the Presbytery has had its heart set on having a Church with a pastor at Clothier. This desire was attained under the direction of Superintendent Garrison.

Montgomery—Rev. Edward S. Currie, who has for the past few months been serving this church will leave soon to return to his work in China. Mr. and Mrs. Currie will be greatly missed by their many friends in this church.

Rev. Locke White has accepted the call to become permanent pastor of the church. Mr. and Mrs. White, with their children, will arrive about January first.

A NEW STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS PROPOSED

Wm. P. McCorkle

Replying to Dr. Robertson's explanation of the proposed amendment to our Church Constitution which provides for the erection of a permanent judicial commission by the Assembly, which will practically make that commission and not the Assembly the Supreme Court of the Church, permit me to say:

I see no valid objection to the reduction of the number who are to be appointed on the permanent commission. The present rule requiring a quorum of the court to be appointed is without sanctity other than that of usage. Obviously, much more depends on the character of the judges than on their number. The proposed amendment, so far as that matter, and so far as the permanency of the commission is concerned, is merely an effort to "evolve" our system of church courts into something more like our system of civil courts. Heretofore in ecclesiastical matters, every Presbytery has exercised functions analogous to those of both county commissioners and county court in civil matters; every Synod functions resembling those of both the State Legislature and the State Supreme Court, every General Assembly functions combining those of both Congress and the Supreme Court of the United States. Confusion and dissatisfaction have resulted from this combination of diverse functions in the same bodies. Further "evolution" was sadly needed. Let it come.

But the proposed amendment does not go far enough, and looks very much like an attempt to enact into law the revolutionary dictum of the Assembly's Judicial Committee in 1911. That opinion was adopted by the Assembly despite the significant warning of Dr. Cecil, and was to the effect that it was not competent for any General Assembly to review, revise or reverse the judicial decision of a private Assembly. That view, if it be considered law, which it is not, makes the Assembly a quasi infallible and utterly irresponsible body. Every Southern Presbyterian Church paper protested against this remarkable opinion at the time, and yet it was reaffirmed by two subsequent Assemblies, despite protests from every quarter.

SUNDAY SCHOOL

REV. ERNEST TRICE THOMPSON, D.D.

Lesson for January 6

OUR HEAVENLY FATHER

Ex. 34:4-7; Ps. 103:1-5; 10-14; Is. 40:27-31; Mt. 6:24-34;
John 3:3-6; 4:20-24; 8:40-47; Rom. 2:2-11;
8:14-17; I Jno. 4:7-16.

During the first quarter of the new year we are to be concerned with some of the great Christian teachings. We are to deal with such important subjects as our heavenly Father, Sin, Christ the Savior, the Holy Spirit, the Holy Scriptures, Repentance and Faith, Prayer, Christian Growth, the Christian Church, Baptism and the Lord's Supper, the Christian Sabbath, Stewardship and Missions, and the Future Life. The aim of the course as stated by the selecting committee is "to lead the pupil to an understanding of the essential teachings of the Christian faith." If faithfully followed it should prove to be one of the most valuable of all the courses of study that we have followed. It certainly deals with many of the vital and essential doctrines of the Christian faith, doctrines on which our young people certainly need to be instructed and over which we all need to ponder carefully and prayerfully. Naturally and inevitably such a course begins with a lesson on "Our Heavenly Father." It is impossible to bring together all the passages that deal with this tremendous theme, or even those that are essential for a complete and exhaustive study. Our lesson committee therefore has simply selected some of the outstanding passages that come to us from some of the great teachers of the Old and New Testament. And we must content ourselves with noting the aspects of the divine character that are emphasized in these passages. But let us not underrate the importance of even such a fragmentary study. We have in these selected passages the inspired insight of such men as Moses, and David, and Isaiah under the Old Covenant, and of Jesus, and Paul and John under the New.

We begin with

The Study of the Lesson

Read carefully the passages assigned with these two questions in mind: (1) What aspects, or characteristics of the divine nature are emphasized in this passage? (2) What are the practical consequences that follow for the Christian's life? Write your answers down, and then combine your results.

Make a special study of the printed text, Mt. 6:24-34. What is the theme of this passage? What reasons does Jesus give as to why we are not to be anxious?

I. God Is a Righteous God

One of the first truths that stands out in our study, and also in the Scriptures as a whole, is that God is a righteous God. What do we mean by the righteousness of God, or to put it in other words, how does the righteousness of God manifest itself? In two ways at least.

1. God demands righteousness on the part of all those who have fellowship with Him.

That truth appears clearly and unmistakably in the opening chapters of Genesis. God creates man in His own image, and enters into a Covenant of life with him, on condition of perfect obedience (Gen. 2:16-17). Man sins and is driven out of the garden, away from the presence of God.

The same truth is emphasized again in the passages culminating in our first Scripture text, Ex. 34:4-7. After Moses brought the children of Israel out from the land of bondage he led them to Sinai, and there he sought to bring them as a nation into covenant relationship with God. Speaking through Moses, God said unto the Children of Israel: "If ye will obey my voice indeed and keep my Covenant, then ye shall be mine own possession from among all peoples." (Ex. 19:5). The people agreed to accept the covenant on these conditions. God then laid down as the essential requirements of His will, and as the basis of His fellowship with them, the ten commandments (Ex. 20:1-17).

As time went on, and God continued to reveal Himself through the prophets, His requirements were deepened and broadened, the people saw more clearly what was involved in the righteousness of God. We haven't the space to follow this expanding revelation; we note however that the process of revelation reached its culmination in the words, and above all in the life of Jesus. He said that the first and great commandment is Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart and with all thy soul and with all thy mind. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments the whole law hangeth and the prophets.

The first and fundamental lesson that the Bible teaches us about the nature of God then is that He is a righteous God, and that He demands righteousness on our part if we would hold fellowship with Him. That was at the root of Jesus' own fellowship with the Father. Cf. John 4:34; 5:30; 6:38; Mt. 26:42; Heb. 10:4-7. And he told his disciples, in words that should be scared on our hearts, "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father who is in heaven." Mt. 7:21.

2. But the righteousness of God manifests itself in another way. This manifestation is only the converse, however, of the first. If righteousness is essential for any real fellowship with God then inevitably sin brings separation from God. No lesson is written more plainly through the Scriptures from the first page to the last than this, that God will punish sin. It stands out in that opening scene in the Garden; it is emphasized in God's revelation to Moses: "Jehovah, Jehovah, a God merciful and gracious, slow to anger, and abundant in loving kindness and truth; keeping loving kindness for thousands, forgiving iniquity and transgression and sin; and that will by no means clear the guilty, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, and upon the children's children, upon the third and fourth generation." It is illustrated in all of God's dealing with the children of Israel under the Old Covenant. Even Jesus the great revealer of the love of God pointed out that sin, unrepented of, had eternal consequences. And Paul in Romans 2:2-11 paints a tremendous picture of God seated on the judgment throne of the universe, dealing out to all men, with perfect justice, the fate that each deserves. He has 'no respect for persons,' and He renders 'to every man according to his works.'

If this were all the picture would be a hopeless one, for the words of Paul are confirmed by our own consciences: "all have sinned, and fall short of the glory of God." Rom. 3:23. We turn then to a second aspect of God revealed in the Scriptures.

II. God Is a Merciful God

This aspect of God's character stands out as clearly in the Bible as the first. It was a bit of inspired insight that came not only to Jesus and the Apostles; but also to the prophets and teachers before the coming of Jesus.

We think of Moses as the Lawgiver of Israel. It was he who at the beginning of Israel's history was himself impressed, and who impressed Israel, with the righteousness of God. After Israel had broken the Ten Commandments which lay at the basis of the Covenant by building a golden calf Moses dashed the tables of stone against the ground (Ex. 32:19). It was after that experience that there came to him his supreme vision of the Lord: "A God merciful and gracious, slow to anger, and abundant in lovingkindness and truth; keeping lovingkindness for thousands, forgiving iniquity and transgression and sin."

The Psalmist (Ps. 103) expands the theme. He gives us a leaf out of his own experience, and it meets the experience of thousands of God's children, for he tells us how God in His mercy has satisfied all of his needs. "Bless the Lord O my soul, and forget not all his benefits: who forgiveth all thine iniquities (not some, but all, of whatever character they may be); who healeth all thy diseases (the word need not be limited to bodily sickness, but may include all suffering); who redeemeth thy life from destruction (i. e. from the destruction of the grave); who crowneth thee with loving kindness and tender mercies; who satisfieth thy desire with good things (not rich things, says an ancient commentator, not many things, not everything I ask for, but good things), so that thy youth (i. e. thy strength, thy activity) is renewed like the eagle.

The great prophet dwells on the same subject in Is. 40:27-31. The nation is groaning under the Babylonian captivity. One generation has passed away, and the second generation has no longer any faith in God. They say in their utter dismay: Our way (that is our fate) is hid from Jehovah, i. e. escapes his notice, and the justice due us is passing away from our God. Isaiah points out that their human insight fails to comprehend the inscrutable wisdom with which Jehovah guides the destinies of His people (there is no searching of His understanding). He points out that God is eternal and unchangeable, of infinite power and discernment (v. 28), and an inexhaustible source of strength to those who have none in themselves (v. 29), if only they will wait on him in faith (v. 31).

But though this idea of the mercy of God runs through the whole Bible it comes to its complete and final expression only in the words and works of Jesus. He taught us that God is our Father, more ready to give good gifts to His children than any earthly father is to give good gifts to his children, a God who loves each one of us as though there were only one of us to love. He did not minimize the effects of sin; he pointed out that it alienated us from God and destroyed our fellowship with Him. Nonetheless he told us in perhaps the most touching of all his parables that God longs over the sinner as a Father longs after his prodigal son, and that as the highest type of father welcomes back his wandering boy so our heavenly Father welcomes the returning sinner.

If God is indeed our heavenly Father what follows? Two things at least. (1) We will not be anxious about the material things of life. That is a conclusion that Jesus himself draws in Mt. 6:24-34. Of course we do not need to point out that the 'take no thought' of the King James' version means 'be not anxious' as it is translated properly in the Revised Version. 'Take no thought' meant in the time that the King James version was translated 'take no anxious thought'; it is so used in Shakespeare. We would say today, Do not worry about your life, what ye shall eat, etc. Of course we must take intelligent forethought for the morrow, but there is no occasion to worry about it. Jesus gives five reasons why this is so: 1st: Undue anxiety about the physical necessities of life betrays the same worldliness as is seen in one who is a slave to Mammon 24-25. 2nd: It is unnecessary, God has provided, and will provide abundance for our real needs 25-30. 3rd: It is unavailing, worry never gets us anywhere, 27. 4th: It is unbecoming in one who is a Christian and knows that God is his Father to act as the Gentiles, 31-32. 5th: It adds tomorrow's ills to those of today, 34. Jesus' idea seems to be that we are to do our best day by day, and take intelligent forethought for the future, but that having done our best we are not to be unduly apprehensive about the outcome. It does not become one who trusts God as His Father.

(3) If God is our Father we will look to Him confidently for the spiritual goods of life. John says, e. g. "If we confess our sins he is faithful and righteous to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." I John 1:9. James says, "If any of you lacketh wisdom let him ask of God, who giveth to all liberally and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him." Paul says: "In nothing be anxious: but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God. And the peace of God which passeth all understanding shall guard your hearts and your thoughts in Christ Jesus. . . I have learned in whatsoever state I am therein to be content. . . I can do all things in him that strengtheneth me. . . And my God shall supply every need of yours according to his riches in glory in Christ Jesus." Phil. 4:6-7, 11, 13, 19. Jesus says; "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you. . . / If ye then being evil know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him." (Lk. 11:9, 13). And Paul tells us that the fruits which we may expect the Holy Spirit to bear in our lives are joy, peace, longsuffering, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, meekness, self control (Gal. 5:22).

III. God Is a Spirit

We need to know more than that God is a God of righteousness, and a God of mercy. We want to know how we can come into contact with Him, how we can appropriate all of his benefits. We said above that if we really believe that God is our Father we will look to Him confidently for the spiritual goods of life. But how? The greatest lesson that Jesus ever gave on the true manner of worship he gave to the Samaritan woman by the well. He had offered to give her of the water of life which would satisfy all of her desires, and then to point the way had referred to her sin which first must be gotten out of the way. To change the subject which had begun to grow embarrassing she asked him a question which was bitterly disputed between the Jews and the Samaritans, as to whether God should be worshipped on Mt. Gerizim or in Jerusalem. Jesus replied that those who worship the Father must rise above distinctions of place, for a time is coming, is now at hand, when limitations of worship will disappear. God is a Spirit, said Jesus; it follows that they who worship Him must worship in spirit and in truth (John 4:24).

What does it mean to worship God in spirit? It means that we must approach him in that part of us which is spirit. The churches in which we worship, the postures which we assume, the hymns which we sing, the words which we utter, or to which we listen, the prayers which we offer do not of themselves bring us into touch with God. They are or should be means to an end. We worship God only when our spirits come in contact with His Spirit, or with Him who is Spirit, that is when our minds are set upon His truth, when our affections are stirred by His love, when our wills are subject to His will.

What does it mean to worship God in truth? In sincerity, in reality perhaps. Is our worship always genuine? But more, in harmony with the nature and will of God. In the sphere of intellect this means recognition of His presence, recognition of His righteousness and recognition of His mercy. In the sphere of action it means conformity with His absolute holiness. Dr. Plummer says "Worship in spirit and truth" implies prostration of the inmost soul before the Divine Perfection, submission of every thought and feeling to the Divine Will. The two words express two aspects of one truth."

But if we are to worship God in spirit and truth there is one further lesson that we must learn. That is

IV. God Is Love

The first epistle of John was written by that disciple who leaned on Jesus' bosom, and who by common consent entered more fully into His Master's thoughts than any other. It was written in his old age, when he had pondered long on the significance of Jesus' life and death, and when the other apostles had long since gone to their reward. It represents therefore the Apostles' last words to the Christian church, their deepest and maturest thought regarding the God who had revealed Himself in Jesus Christ. John sums it all up in a sentence: God is love. And the supreme manifestation of that love he finds in the life and death of Jesus (I John 4:10). This thought of John's really sums up everything else that we have learned about the nature of God. Because God is righteous He demands righteousness of us, and that righteousness is summed up in obedience to the law of love. We learn in the Scriptures and in experience that God is a God of mercy, but God's mercy is only an expression of His love. Jesus tells us that we must worship God in spirit and in truth, and surely this includes our recognition of, and our response to the Divine love.

But if God is love what follows? John (I John 4:7-16) insists on just one thing: We must love our fellowmen. He gives five reasons why this is true.

1. Because it is necessary for any real knowledge of God, 7-8. If love is God's most peculiar characteristic we certainly cannot hope to know God unless love is characteristic of our own lives.

2. Because of God's example, 9-11. "In the spiritual family also noblesse oblige. As children of God we must exhibit his nature, and we must follow His example, and we must love those whom He loves."

3. Because it is necessary for any real fellowship with God, 12-16. "I say we must love one another for by so doing we have proof of the presence of the invisible God. No amount of contemplation ever enabled anyone to detect God's presence. Let us love one another, and then we may be sure that He not only with us, but in us, and not merely is, but abides."

4. Because it is necessary for the expression of our love to God, 17-20. "If a man say, I love God, and hate his brother, he is a liar: for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, cannot love God whom he hath not seen."

5. Because it is the command of God Himself. This command have we from Him, that he who loveth God loves his brother also."

LESSON FOR JANUARY 13

SIN

Gen. 3:1-24; 6:5-8; Mk. 7:14-23; Rom. 1:18-32, 3:10-18
1 John 1:5-2:6. Print 1 John 1:5-2:6

We continue this week our study of some of the great Christian teachings. We began by looking at the Christian idea of God, our heavenly Father. We come this week to consider the Christian view of sin. Do you see any reason why a lesson on sin should follow a lesson on God? If not the reason will probably become plain as we proceed. Do you see any other reason why we should have a lesson on this topic? Is it a matter of practical importance? Having considered these introductory questions let us pass on to

The Study of the Lesson

Dr. Amos R. Wells in "A Daily Digest of the Sunday Schools Lessons" makes these suggestions: Read the six passages assigned for the lesson, noting what each adds to our conception of the nature and effects of sin. Add their light from the Bible on the question of sin. Answer honestly the question, "What need have I for a lesson of this sort?"

Some may prefer to base their study on the printed lesson. If so, read 1 John 1:1-4. What is John's great purpose in writing this epistle?

Now read 1 John 1:5-7. Be sure that you understand the meaning of every phrase. For example what does John mean when he says that God is light? "In Him is no darkness at all?" "If we walk in the darkness?" "If we walk in the light?" Put John's message here in your own words. We are especially interested in this lesson in what John has to say regarding sin. What does he have to say here regarding the consequences of sin?

Read 1:8-10. What difference is there in the statement in verse 8 and that in verse 10? What does John have to say in these two verses in regard to the extent of sin?

Read again 1:9, and then 2:1-6. What is John's purpose in writing this part of his letter? Is there any contradiction between 1:8, 10 and 2:1-6? What cure for sin does John here offer? What does the cure include?

Now read the supplementary passages included in this lesson. Make a mental note, better a written note, of any additional information regarding (1) the consequences of sin; (2) the universality of sin; (3) the cure for sin; or regarding any other point of special interest or importance.

The discussion that follows is based in general on this part of study.

I. The Consequences of Sin—1J. 1:5-7

We recall that the first epistle of John was written by a disciple whom Jesus loved, who by common consent entered more fully into his heart and mind than any other. It was written in his old age, when he had pondered long on the significance of Jesus' life and death, written after all the other apostles had passed on to their heavenly reward. It represents then the mature thoughts of the Apostle John, the last words directed by any of the apostles to the Church.

The purpose of the letter was two-fold: first, said John, that 'ye also may have fellowship with us.' And second that the readers might have fellowship with God, 'our fellowship,' said John, 'is with the Father, and with His Son Jesus Christ.'

It is in the light of this two-fold purpose that John considers the matter of sin. As he views it sin has two fundamental consequences: first, it destroys our fellowship with God; and second, it destroys our fellowship with man.

It destroys our fellowship with God. This follows inevitably because of the very nature of God. "This," says John, "is the message which we have heard from the Father, and announce unto you," i. e., this is the sum and substance of it, this is what it consists of, the message which we heard from the Lord Jesus Christ, "that God is light, and in Him is no darkness at all." No figure, says Dr. Plummer, borrowed from the material world would give the idea of perfection so clearly and fully as light. It suggests ubiquity, brightness, happiness, intelligence, truth, purity, holiness. It suggests excellence without limit and without taint; an excellence whose nature is to communicate itself and to pervade everything in which it is not of set purpose shut out." It is moral excellence however that John has chiefly in mind in this particular connection. There is in God no darkness of error, for He is perfectly holy. No darkness of error, for He is perfect wisdom. No darkness of deceit, for He is truth. No darkness of hatred, for He is all love. Verse 6 John draws the only possible inference. Light is light, utterly removed from all darkness; and therefore to be in darkness is to be cut off from Him. 'Walk,' is a figurative expression used to describe the ordinary course of life. It expresses not merely action, but habitual action. A life lived in moral darkness cannot have communion with God, than a life in a coal mine have communion with the sun. This is the deliberate conclusion of John, the aged, who had leaned on the bosom during the days of his flesh, and who had continued and deepened his fellowship with the Father and with the Son after the crucifixion. We must attempt to see not only the logic of his words, but even more his ever deepening experience which enabled him to speak the words which the Spirit would have him utter. But sin has another consequence which John would remind us of.

2. It destroys our fellowship with our fellowman. Verse 7 John puts the thought the other way around, but this is the purport of what he has to say. If we walk in the light, that is, as explained by Dr. Wells, if we live all our lives, inner and outer, seen by men, and seen only by God, in the daylight of divine purity, truth, and love, as God Himself is in the light, then we have fellowship one with another. If we walk in the darkness, if we ignore the light that comes to us, it follows that that fellowship is more or less seriously marred.

These truths coming to us at the very end of the revelation recorded for us in the Holy Scriptures are illustrated by the experiences of the human race pictured for us in the opening chapters of Genesis. It makes no difference whether the story here is to be regarded as literal history or as a parable or as a mixture of the two, in any case it gives a complete and true account of the origin of sin (in the race, and also in the individual human heart), the nature of sin, and more important for our present purpose, the consequences of sin. God created man in His own image, He placed him in pleasing surroundings, well adapted to his needs, He created a helper most suitable to give him companionship and joy. He entered into a Covenant of life with him on the one condition that he be responsive to the Divine will. But man did not live up to his privileges, he disobeyed the Divine command. As a result there came into his life shame, humiliation, (Gen. 3:7) alienation from God. The story is naively told, but its purport is unmistakable: "They heard the voice of Jehovah God walking in the garden in the cool of the day; and the man and his wife hid themselves from the presence of Jehovah God amongst the trees of the Garden." The point is that their sin had come between them and God. They no longer found delight in His presence. And their experience is the race's experience. Then came the curse (Gen. 3:14-15). God said there would continue to be conflict between the serpent and the woman, between his seed and her seed, that is between Satan and all his evil brood, and the human race descending from the woman. Those words have been only too amply confirmed. In one sense the history of each one of us is the history of our struggle with sin; in a very true sense the history of mankind is the history of that inevitable conflict. God said moreover that man the seed of the woman, would suffer in that conflict (thou shalt bruise his heel), and he has, God knows, most of man's sufferings have come from that source. But there was also a word of hope, in the end man should triumph over sin (he, i. e. man, shall bruise thy head). And then man was driven from the Garden, away from the presence of God, away from his perfect environment. And then the subsequent chapters of Genesis tell us how sin grew in the human race, alienating him even further from God, setting his hand also against his brother's (Cain, 4:8, Lamech, 4:23-24), till the whole race of man became corrupt (6:5), and mankind was hopelessly divided (11:1-9).

We see then in the opening chapters of Genesis that sin brings suffering into the individual life, into the social life, that it destroys man's fellowship with God.

What the Bible has to say regarding the consequences of sin is abundantly confirmed in human experience. Dr. Fosdick says: "If a man, forgetting churches and sermons, seriously ponders human life as he knows it actually to be, if he gathers up in his imagination the deepest heartaches of the race, its worst diseases, its most hopeless miseries, its ruined childhood, its dissevered families, its fallen states, its devastated continents, he will soon see that the major cause for this can be spelled with three letters s-i-n. To make vivid this peril as the very crux of humanity's problem on the earth, one needs at times to leave behind the customary thoughts and phrases of religion and to seek testimony from sources that the church frequently forgets. When Governments try to build social states where equity and happiness shall reign, their prison systems, their criminal codes, their courts of law loudly advertise that their problem lies in sin. When jurists plan leagues of nations and sign covenants to make the world a more fraternal place, only to find greed, hate and cruelty demolishing their well laid schemes, their failure uncovers the crucial problem of man's sin. When philanthropists try to lift from man's bent back the burdens that oppress him, it becomes plain how infinitely their task would be lightened if it were not for sin. As for literature—where the seers, regardless of religious prejudices have tried to see into the human heart and truly report their insights—its witness is overwhelming as to what man's problem is. No great book of creative literature was ever written without sin at its center. Always the insight of the creative seers reports one inner peril of the race. Sin is no bogey erected by the theologians, no ghost imagined by minds grown morbid with the fear of God. Sin to ever seeing eye is the one most real and practical problem of mankind."

Think of how this is true, of how sin has brought shame, and humiliation and suffering into the lives of individuals who have sinned, your life and the lives of those you have known, of whom you have read. Think of how it destroys man's fellowship with his fellowman. of how it has brought and is now bringing in your community, in our country, and in the world, in the political sphere, the industrial sphere, the sphere of international relations, a burden of suffering upon the race including those who are innocent and helpless. Think finally of how it destroys one's fellowship with God, and recall that Jesus, John, Paul, suggests that this separation may be an eternal one. Thus the eternal punishment of which Paul writes in II Thes. 1:8 is "eternal destruction from the face of the Lord."

The consequences of sin are serious enough, from whatever angle we may approach the subject, but the matter becomes more serious when we consider the second point made by John.

II. The Universality of Sin

Some may say all that we have said and more is true. But it doesn't concern me. I am honest, clean, a good citizen, and do to others as I would be done by. But John says: If we say we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us. Another man may say, I admit that I am a sinner, and that my nature is sinful, but after all I have done nothing that is really wrong. John says: If we say that we have not sinned we make Him a liar, and his word is not in us.

This is a strong indictment of the human race, but John does not stand alone. Paul says in Rom. 3:10-18-23: "All have sinned, and fall short of the glory of God." He does not assert that there are not degrees of wickedness, and lower depths of guilt; he only declares with uncompromising assurance that all have come short of the divine standard.

Many of us do not like to admit that this is true. As Fosdick says again. "The hardest thing that any man can ever say is, I have sinned. We make mistakes, we have foibles of character and conduct, we even fall into error—but we do not often sin. By such devices we avoid the painful consciousness of our inward malady, and even the name of our disease is banished from decorous speech. But sin does not go into exile with its name. Sin has many aliases and can swiftly shift its guise to gain a welcome into any company. Sin in the slums is gross and terrible. It staggers down the streets, blasphemes with oaths that can be heard, wallows in vice unmentionable by modest lips. Then some day prosperity may visit it. It moves to a finer residence, seeks the suburbs, or finds domicile on a college campus. It changes all of its clothes. No longer is it indecent and obscene. Its speech is mild, its civility is irreproachable. It gathers a company of friends who minister to pleasure and respectability and the cry of the world's need dies unheard at its peaceful door. It presses its face continually through the pickets of social allowance, like a bad boy who wishes to trespass on forbidden ground but fears the consequences; its goodness is superficial seeming; at heart it is as bad as it dares to be. It has completely changed its garments, but it is the same sin-indulgent, selfish, and unclean." Some of us do not realize sufficiently our sinfulness because our standard of conduct is too low, we compare ourselves with our neighbors rather than the absolute standards of God. Or we underestimate the area of our accountability. We do not take into account for example sins of omission. We forget that Jesus condemned the man with the one talent because he did not use that one talent in the service of his Lord, that he condemned Dives because he took no thought of Lazarus who suffered before his door, that he said that men would perish eternally because they had not fed the hungry, clothed the naked, ministered to the helpless.

As we compare ourselves with God's standards our own hearts convict us. We know that we have sinned and come short of the divine story. But if that is true it follows that the sufferings which come upon the innocent because of men's sins are sufferings for which we all in greater or less degree are responsible; that the consequences to which the sinner renders himself liable are consequences which all of us must face. This thought leads us to consider

After what has been said this topic should be treated the most extensively of all. We deal with it summarily because our space is limited, and because we discuss the whole matter more fully next week, when we consider Christ the Savior. We note here very briefly that John agrees with the other New Testament writers in teaching that the cure for sin is three fold.

1. Repentance. Repentance for John takes the form of confession. "If we confess our sins," says John, "God is faithful and righteous to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." The Greek word suggests that John has in mind the confession of our particular sins more difficult that the confession of a sinful nature in general. If we confess our sins God is faithful and righteous (1) to forgive us our sins, that is to absolve us from sin's punishment; (2) to cleanse us from all unrighteousness, that is to free us from sin's bondage. If we confess our sins God is willing to forgive us, and to admit us again into his fellowship which sin has obscured; He also enables us by His grace to overcome our sins.

2. Faith. Repentance leads to faith. "If any man sin we have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ, the righteous, and He is the propitiation for our sins, and not for ours only, but also for the whole world." As a matter of actual fact it is faith in Jesus which more than anything else has brought us again into fellowship with God, and led us into fellowship with man, and given us a power which enables us to progress toward our highest ideals of life. Faith in Jesus means that we have faith in the Father's love, and the Father's purpose as they are supremely revealed in Jesus. And without such faith we cannot rise to the heights of moral achievement.

3. Obedience. Repentance and faith flower out into obedience. And obedience and obedience alone can prove the reality of our repentance, the reality of our faith. We overcome our sins then as we turn from them in sorrow and in shame, and as we have faith in Jesus, who bore our sins in his body upon the tree, and who is the supreme revelation of the Father's love and purpose, and as we submit ourselves to His will. As John says, "Hereby we know that we know Him, if we keep His commandments . . . He that saith he abideth in Him ought himself also to walk even as He walked."

CHILDREN

WEENTY'S NEW-YEAR IDEA

"Heigh-ho! Weenty!" With a thump Mr. Rabbit landed upon Weenty's bed as she lay quietly sleeping New Year's Eve night.

"Why it's you!" Weenty exclaimed, rubbing her eyes, "I'm so glad to see you, dear Mr. Rabbit!" And she put her arms about his white furry neck. "How cold your fur is!"

"Yes—it's a fine night out, however, and you've promised me a ride on your new Christmas sled!"

"That's so!" cried Weenty, clapping her hands—"and there's still enough snow. Just wait, I'll be ready in a jiffy!"

Soon she was dressed warmly in her fur wrap and ready to set out with her friend, Mr. Rabbit.

Outdoors the air was clear and cold and a bright moon lit up the snowy ground. Weenty got her sled from the back porch and in some magical way found it wasn't a bit too big for Mr. Rabbit to pull over the snow, while she rode in state! Away he scampered, until they came to the meadow, where there was quite a nice slope. The children had been sliding there all day, so it was fine and slippery.

"Let me help to pull it up," said Weenty, jumping off the sled.

"Oh, see!" Mr. Rabbit cried suddenly. "There are some of my nephews sliding and I see some of the Winter Elves! They have made sleds for the bunnies!"

Sure enough—Whiz! came the little sleds and toboggans, loaded with the excited little bunnies, and odd green Elves in front of each, steering!

When all had reached the bottom where Weenty and Mr. Rabbit stood and watched, they clustered about her and were introduced. She knew the bunnies very well, but hadn't met the Elves before, as they are very shy and only come out in the winter.

"How very nice of you to make these fine sleds for the children!" Mr. Rabbit exclaimed as he and Weenty examined the sleds, made of bark curiously curled up in front.

"Oh, it's such fun!" cried the little rabbits, "but do let us try your sled, Weenty!"

"And I must ride on-yours!" Weenty said, laughing gaily.

"We will be glad to have you!" replied one of the Elves. "We are having a New Year's Party and decided to take everyone out sledding—it's such a bright night!"

"So they started the climb up again to the top of the hill, the littlest bunnies riding on Weenty's sled, in great style. Then after all had piled on again, away they went, flying down the hill and far across the meadow. Over and over they climbed the hill and flew down again, until all were tired and hungry.

"Will you come with us to have a little supper?" the Elves asked Weenty and Mr. Rabbit. "It's just a little Party for the Bunnies but we want you so much!"

"We will be delighted," Weenty said, speaking for them both and Mr. Rabbit nodded his approval.

"Come on then everyone!" called one of the Elves. "Weenty, you ride with the babies and we will pull you!"

Weenty was glad to have another ride and so she climbed on her own sled and three little Bunnies nestled in her lap, then with everyone else pulling, the sled went rapidly over the snow!

The Elves' house was a crystal hung cave in the woods, that one could never find in the day time on account of the thick evergreen bushes that grew before it. Tonight it was all lighted up with torches that were reflected brightly by the icicles about the door.

"Come in, come in!" came a cheery hail and there at the door was a plump Mother Elf with some of the Bunnie Mothers and Fathers. Such a scrambling as all tumbled in. Weenty with the rest, where there was a great feast on a big low table. Apples and nuts and ices, besides Fairy delicacies that Weenty found very good.

Weenty sat between two Elves who helped her to all the goodies and told her about themselves and their work.

"We have a lot to do during the winter keeping things looking winter-ish!" one explained. "You know I think we ought to do something to-night as it is New Year's Day tomorrow, but with all the old snow left

A NEW-YEARS TALE

(To be colored with paints or crayons. Whenever you come to a word spelled in CAPITAL letters use that color.)

Susie May told the tale about this picture. She told it to her little brother Billy, when Mother went to a New Year's party and left Susie May and Billy alone.

The New Year had YELLOW hair, of course, and the light BLUE scarf about his neck. The scarf had big figures 1929 in RED on the end of it and was wrapped about the New Year to keep him warm. The tree was GRAY (use BLACK lightly) and the owl—he was the hero in Susie May's tale, for he gave the lost New Year a lantern to find his way—the owl was BROWN on his wings and head and a light TAN (use BROWN and YELLOW mixed) color on his vest, cheeks and the underside of his wing. His eyes were bright YELLOW, so was his beak and his toes. The wonderful lantern was made all of GOLD (use YELLOW if your gold is gone) and it burned a bright RED inside.

The New Year's cheeks were PINK (use RED lightly) so were his fingers and toes for he didn't wear gloves and shoes like most of us. His lips were

RED and his eyes BLUE and Susie May said he did look like Billy quite a bit. But who ever heard of Billy sitting way up on a branch with miles and miles of dark BLUE sky all about and the RED chimneys and BROWN roofs of houses and towers looking up. There were GREEN trees too, looking up at the pair sitting up so high—anyway that is what Susie May said in her Tale of the New Year to Billy on New Year's Eve.

The border of this picture can be colored RED and the lettering GREEN.

from Christmas it looks pretty fair. Have you any ideas, Weenty?"

"I think the old snow is wearing pretty thin on the trees," said the other Elf. "Don't you Weenty? And several places are almost bare on the meadow!"

"Oh! I have an idea!" Weenty cried! after a moment's thought. "Why not touch it up a little—and make all those crystal trimmings on the trees you have sometimes!"

The Elves started up in delight. "What a fine plan!" they said. "We forgot about that! Just a pinch of snow and then a little rain and then a big hard freeze! Let's do it!"

They explained Weenty's idea for a New Year's Decoration and all the Elves were delighted, but the bunnies began to talk about going home before the rain!"

"Now, don't hurry anyone!" cried the Chief Elf. "We won't start things till after the party, because we want it all fresh when the sun rises! Now it's midnight! All drink a toast to the New Year!"

"Happy New Year!" cried Bunnies and all raising their acorn cups of honey dew—while faintly from the town, across the woods and fields came the sound of whistles and bells, proclaiming the beginning of the New Year. After the toasts were finished the guests began to depart and finally only Weenty and Mr. Rabbit were left with the Elves.

"Climb aboard, Weenty. We've got to run for it!" Mr. Rabbit said, when the Elves had bade them god-bye and began to take down their tools for decorating the world.

"A Happy New Year to you, Weenty!" they called as she and Mr. Rabbit sped away. "We'll have a beautiful New Year's Day for you!"

"Ah! ha! and who's been wishing you a Happy New Year before me!" said a familiar voice. Weenty looked up and there was her Mother smiling in the bright wintry sunlight.

"Oh, let me see out the window!" Weenty cried, leaping out of bed. "Oh, it is beautiful, Mother!"

"Wonderful!" agreed her Mother, as they looked at the Fairy splendor of the ice-laden trees.

"The poorest twig on the elm tree 'Is ridged inch-deep with pearl!" quoted Mother.

And tho' some old, dull folk grumbled at the slippery steps and pavements, Weenty enjoyed every moment of the beautiful New Year Day her Elf friends had made for her!

JANUARY

It's frosty and cold and the rivers are ice—

They're some of the things that make January nice—

The ball's up for skating and the children flock thick

To the pond where you hear the skates' merry click.

And then there are snowmen to build by the fort,

Oh, this is the month for gay winter sport,

The first of the year, and so full of fun

We always are glad a new year has begun.

SANTA CAME

I am a little girl seven years old I am in the second grade. My teacher's name is Miss Pearl Gallant. I love to go to Sunday School and Church every Sunday, and I am almost ready to recite my catchism. I am expecting Santa Claus to come to see me. I hope he will come to see you a our children. Wishing you a merry Christmas. Your little friend, Sara K. Philhower. (This was received in December, but as we could not get it in the paper before Christmas, we want to tell Sara that he did come.—Ed.)

THE CEREMONY OF THE EGG

When the Pioneer Club of the Junior High School took in a new member, there was always the ceremony of the egg. Something mysterious hovered over this ceremony—like a heavy mist hangs over a vessel at sea—and every often when a candidate for admission was turned away right on the very night of the initiation, it would be rumored about that he had failed to go through with the egg initiation.

It was a character test—this business of the egg; and Bill Dennis—although he wasn't a member of the Pioneers—had heard from some source that if the candidate presented himself with the egg in a certain hard-boiled state, he would be disgraced and turned away.

One day his best friend, Ernie Collins, called him aside in the corridors of the Junior High School. Ernie was acting rather secretive and Bill wondered what was the matter. From out of his coat pocket, Ernie pulled a small pasteboard box with an elastic around it to keep the lid on.

"Guess what it is!" he whispered. "A birthday present or something?" hazarded Bill.

"No," answered his friend; then taking off the cover, he displayed a smooth oval object packed in with absorbent cotton.

"An egg!" cried Bill.

"I'm not supposed to show it," warned Ernie. "But I knew you wouldn't tell. Know what it's for?"

Bill knew what it was for all right. Swallowing a lump which kept trying to rise in his throat, he answered, quietly: "Yes, I know. It's a Pioneer egg."

"Right," confirmed Ernie. "They voted me in last week, and I'm going to be initiated next Wednesday. Gee, I wish you were coming in too."

"So do I," was the quiet reply.

"Here's the letter I got from the club—continued Ernie, handing over a type-written sheet. Bill read as follows:

"Dear Candidate:
"On Wednesday night at seven o'clock you are requested to report at the Pioneer Club for 1st degree initiation.

"Beginning at eight o'clock Monday morning, you will carry with you about your person at all times an egg, upon which must be drawn, in your best style pencil sketch of a Covered Wagon, the symbol of the Pioneer Club. This egg must be shown upon demand to any pioneer. It must be brought to the 1st degree initiation unbroken, and, as far as you are able to keep it so, in the same condition as when laid by the hen.

"Yours truly,
"WALTER MISHNER,
"Secretary."

Bill re-read the last few phrases—"as far as you are able to keep it so, in the same condition as when laid by the hen." He thought he understood to what they referred.

"I've got to bring it unbroken to the initiation," Ernie said. "And that's some job, even if I have got it in a padded box. All the Pioneers are doing their best to make me break it, but—" here Ernie looked around cautiously—"I'll fool them. I've got my egg hard-boiled!"

Bill gasped in surprise and astonishment.

"You shouldn't have done that!" he cried.

"Why not? It's an egg, just the same, isn't it? There goes the bell—I'll have to hop to my math class. See you later!"

Ernie left Bill standing almost transfixed in the corridor, undecided whether to chase after him and tell him all he knew, but the egg ceremony or to let him go in the way that he had chosen. Bill wasn't jealous of Ernie—they knew each other too well for that—but he was hurt because Ernie was being honored with attention from a Club which had never before looked in his direction. A difficult time went on in his mind. Days passed, and finally the Wednesday of the Pioneer initiation arrived.

That afternoon, Bill met Ernie after school.

"Say Ernie, let's see your egg again, will you? I want to look at the covered one."

"Sure," agreed Ernie. "I'm not proud of the drawing, but I guess it will pass right."

Taking the egg out of its packing, Bill held his back to his friend, presumably showing the pencil drawing into better light. Then he suddenly packed the egg back again into the box, put on the lid, snapped the elastic, and said:

"I guess that'll be all right, Ernie. Good luck at the initiation tonight!"

"Thanks, Bill. See you tomorrow—I'll be a Pioneer then."

And with these assurances, the two friends parted—Bill to walk up and down nervously outside the Pioneer Club, and Ernie to go inside for the initiation.

The entire ceremony was centered about the egg. Holding it in his left hand, Ernie was led to the door. He was blindfolded—a guide directed his movements.

"You are now entering the 1st degree chamber of the Pioneer Club," intoned the guide. "You have nothing to fear. Within the chamber is no one who is not your friend. You are to do everything you are told—all will be well. Raise your right hand, and knock three times on the door."

Ernie did as he was told. A voice from inside called out:

"Who is there?"

"Ernest Collins," answered the guide, "who desires to become a member of the Pioneer Club."

"Has he the egg?"

"He has."

"Is it, in so far as he was able to keep it, in the same condition as when laid by the hen?"

"Is it?" asked the guide.

"I—I think so!" faltered Ernie.

"Is it?" demanded his questioner. "Yes or no?"

"Yes," answered Ernie, with a secret hope that he had given the right answer. But there was a sinking feeling in his heart, because he was realizing for the first time what the sentence about the hen meant. His egg was hard-boiled! He wondered whether it made any difference—Gosh! He wished he hadn't done it!

With uncertain steps, he entered into the first degree chamber of the Pioneer Club. They made such a fuss over the egg! Every episode of the initiation was built around it—they would surely find out that he had disobeyed instructions. Finally the test he had been dreading came. He was kneeling before a chair—his hood wink had been removed. Only the light of two candles illuminated the room. Before him was a cup.

"Break the egg into the cup," directed the Master of Ceremonies.

"Ernie's heart sank. There was a heavy feeling on his chest. Nevertheless, he picked up the egg, cracked it against the edge of the cup, and then looked up despairingly at the leader of the initiation. No surprise—no anger. Ernie felt something wet at his finger tips, looking down at the egg, saw, to his astonishment, that it was soft! Then he heard the yolk fall into the cup with a flop!

"Congratulations!" cried Walter Mishner, the secretary. "If the egg had been hard-boiled, you would not have been allowed to come into the club."

All the Pioneers crowded around, but Ernie refused to shake their hands.

"I'm not worth it," he said—and then in their astonished ears, he poured the story of his duplicity, and said that he was sorry, but he guessed he'd better go out like the other poor sports went out.

"But how do you account for your egg NOT being boiled?" demanded Mishner, surprised.

"Bill Dennis," sated Ernie—"friend of mine. Didn't want to see me thrown out in disgrace, I guess. He must have exchanged the eggs this afternoon."

So Ernie left the club, and next morning when he met Bill, he shook his head sadly and broke the news that he wasn't a Pioneer. He couldn't explain why, he said, because the initiation was confidential, and he didn't feel free to disclose it.

"Thank, just the same, Bill," he said. "For what you tried to do."

Two days later, both he and Bill got a letter signed by Secretary Walter Mishner. Both letters read:

"At a special meeting of the Pioneer Club held last night, William Dennis was elected and Ernest Collins was re-elected as a candidate for membership.

"Beginning at 8 o'clock Monday morning, you will carry with you at all times—"

"I know," said Billy, with a smile. "An egg!"

GRANNY'S GIFTS

Aunt Nell looked up from her sewing to see what it was that made her two little nieces and her nephew so quiet.

They were standing in a row by the window, watching the flurrying snowflakes as they came tumbling one after another down from the sky.

Then Aunt Nell got up and started to look around, as though she were hunting for something.

"Have you lost something?" inquired Donald. "Tell us what it is and we will help you hunt it."

"You may all help me," answered Aunt Nell. "I can't find your smiles. They seem to have been misplaced."

"Our smiles!" echoed Janet. "How could we have lost them?"

Then they began to laugh.

"Why there they are. You have found them for me. Now let's see who can keep them the longest," said Aunt Nell.

"Well, it's pretty hard to smile today," replied Donald. "We wanted to go coasting this New Year's morning, and now we can't go."

"But just think how much better the coasting will be when it stops snowing. I don't think it will last much longer, so let's think of something nice to do indoors," comforted Aunt Nell. "Bring your chairs over here by me, while I put on my thinking-cap."

Pretty soon she exclaimed, "Oh, I know! We will give Granny Martin a birthday surprise. She told me last week that New Year's Day is her birthday. She never receives any presents, although she climbs the hill to her mail-box every birthday."

"Oh, goody! goody!" cried the children, clapping their hands. "But what shall the presents be?" asked Edith.

"Oh, I'm sure we can find something," answered Aunt Nell. "Donald, you bring me those boxes out of the top of my trunk. Janet, get me a pair of scissors, and Edith bring that tissue-paper and ribbon from my room while I see what I can find."

In a few minutes they were all back again.

"Now," said Aunt Nell, as she started cutting some gay paper, "let me show you how to wrap these oranges to make them pretty. Donald, you pack these pieces of candy neatly in a box while Edith wraps these handkerchiefs in pretty red paper. I will put this shawl in a box, and then you may wrap it, too."

"There!" exclaimed Edith, as they finished tying the ribbons, "aren't they lovely?"

"See! it has stopped snowing. Shall we take the packages out now and put them in Granny Martin's mail-box?" asked Donald. "We will let Janet sit on the sled and hold the packages, while Edith and I pull."

Soon they were trudging through the snow.

"Here we are," said Donald. "I guess I shall have to stand on the sled, for the box is pretty high. You girls can hand me the packages."

"Be careful of that loaf cake," warned Edith.

"Now let's run home and watch from our window," said Janet.

They had no sooner reached home than they saw Granny start slowly up the hill. Her eyes grew wide with surprise when she saw something in the box.

"Look!" said Aunt Nell. "She has found something else in the mail-box."

"What is it?" asked Janet. "I don't see anything."

"She has found the smiles that you put in the box for her," answered Aunt Nell.

"Oh, I never thought of that!" exclaimed Edith. "I'm going to see if I can't find some smiles for everyone I see all through this whole year." — Mary Ruth Clemens, in Exchange.

PHIL WEARS A HOBBLE-SKIRT

John Scott Douglas

Let's go on a picnic in the woods," suggested Phil. "Dick and I will carry the baskets if you and Anna will make some sandwiches and boil some eggs."

"That's nice of you," laughed Phillis. "We do all the work of making the lunch; and all you do is to carry it." "We don't care," said Anna; "we'll make the lunch, anyway."

The four of them started about an hour later. Dick, before long, was panting from the speed with which the others traveled.

"Not so fast," he said; "I'm not as tall as Phil and Phillis. Besides, none of you have so much weight to carry as I have."

Presently they reached a woody spot by the river. After eating their lunch, Phil cried:

"Let's play hide-and-go-seek."

"I'll be 'it,'" Anna said generously.

The other three scattered like rabbits before a fox. Phillis and Dick hid in the woods near where Anna was counting. But Phil climbed the hill instead. He was a long way from Anna.

Suddenly a hollow log under a maple tree caught his eye.

"Here's just the spot to hide," he exclaimed. "They'll never find me here."

He started to crawl into the hollow, half-rotted log, feet-first. He was almost as big as the hole. It was hard work pushing himself into the small opening of the log. When he got as far into the log as his waist, he could go no farther. He was stuck!

"Och!" he cried to himself. "This is no fun! I'm going to get out of here before I get pinched to death."

He tried to pull himself out, but he was unable to move! In vain he tugged and wiggled and panted—but he was stuck tightly. A cold sweat broke over his forehead. This was serious. He was so far away from the others that they might not find him if he couldn't get out.

"Help! Help! Help!" he called.

His voice echoed and re-echoed throughout the valley.

"Somebody's yelling for help," shouted Dick.

"Maybe it's Phil," said Anna. Her voice was very faint in Phil's ears.

Again he shouted. But again his voice echoed and re-echoed. They would never be able to tell where the voice came from with that echo. For a time he heard them talking. Then their voices died away in the distance. They had gone looking for him in the wrong direction!

He struggled and struggled until his body was sore. But he could not get rid of that beastly log.

Finally he became desperate. He decided that his only chance was to roll the log down the hill. It was so rotten at the base that it might break open if it hit something. He pushed the ground on his left side, and the log started to roll over. He pushed it over several times.

Then it started down the hill. Phil's senses began to reel. His head was swimming with dizziness. Over and over rolled the log. And it finally hit a tree and broke into two pieces. It knocked all the breath out of Phil when it hit the tree. It was some time before he recovered.

Then he tried to wiggle out of the log once more. But he couldn't do it. However, he found that the log had broke about two feet from the top. He was able to stand up and walk with difficulty. But he had a wooden hoop-skirt hobbling his progress. It was slow work, but he managed to walk to town with the two feet of log still around his waist.

"I never saw you in a hobble-skirt before," laughed Dick.

Phil became so angry that he started home. Then Dick sobered up, and by dint of much effort he finally got Phil out of his wooden hoop-skirt. Phil was certainly glad to be rid of it!

TOMMY'S ARITHMETIC

Hippity-hop, hippity-hop,
Down the street to the candy shop;
Striped sticks in a big glass jar,
Tommy Taylor's favorites are.
"Six for five," said the candy man.
Tommy to subtract began:
"Six for five and five for four,
Four for three," he counted o'er.
"Three for two, and two for one,
One for nothing"—the sum was done.
"Please, Mr. Candy Man," said he,
"You may give the 'one for nothing' to me!"

And so surprised was the candy man,
He gave it to Tommy, who turned and ran.

But should you try this trick, my dear,
It wouldn't work out that, I fear.

MRS. RUSSELL'S ENGAGEMENTS

The women of the Auxiliary will be glad to know that Mrs. E. L. Russell is once more in the field, and will rejoice with her that the sickness which visited her family has been overcome and she is eager to be about her "Father's business" again.

Already much of Mrs. Russell's time has been booked, but the period from March 24th to April 17th is open. If you are interested in securing Mrs. Russell for the whole or part of this time, write immediately to her at 166 South Ann St., Mobile, Ala. Act quickly if you desire her invaluable presence with you.

Department of Woman's Work.

QUARTERLY PRAYER PACKAGE

The prayer package which is issued quarterly by the office of the Department of Woman's Work is now ready.

The Secretary of Spiritual Life in the Auxiliary will be vitally interested in this package as it contains much material for her information and inspiration. At this season of the year her department of the work is especially active.

February has three seasons of prayer for the Auxiliary. The Foreign Mission season calls for the co-operation of the Secretary of Spiritual Life since "prayer changes things." The World Day of Prayer, at which time all the Christian women of the world are girdling the earth in a circle of prayer, claims her co-operation. The Season of Prayer for Youth in our Schools and Colleges, which occurs the latter part of February, is promoted by this officer in co-operation with the President and Secretary of Christian Education.

Leaflets regarding these three seasons are among those contained in the package. Send ten cents to the Department of Woman's Work, 270-77 Field Bldg., St. Louis, Mo., for these helpful suggestions on prayer.

OUR FOREIGN MISSION SEASON, JANUARY 1- FEBRUARY 3

The Foreign Mission season has come again with its call to study, prayer and self-denial. What new steps will we take in the Master's work? Last year saw the prevention of the cut—a great achievement, but it left our work at a standstill: it did not provide for growth, and that which is alive must grow, either weaker or stronger. Which, depends on us. Shall we not accept the challenge of our slogan, "Forward."

We will be planning first for the study of "The Desire of All Nations," a challenging book from Dr. Egbert Smith, which has provoked approval from the leaders of many denominations. It is a book of remarkable timeliness, brilliant diction, convincing reason and charming presentation. Everyone, whether man or woman, young or old, will miss much if they fail to study its pages.

Among the material available is "The Burden of the Unreached," a splendid inspirational leaflet by Dr. Egbert Smith. Then there are the self-denial envelopes for our sacrificial giving.

The climax of the season comes with the Week of Prayer and Self-Denial, January 29-February 3. Prayer topics in leaflet form for your use, are to serve for either guiding united prayer or individual devotion. Order what is needed from The Department of Woman's Work.

OUR FOREIGN MISSION STUDY CLASS

The textbook is "The Desire of All Nations," by Dr. Egbert W. Smith. Order books from Publication Committee, Box 1176, Richmond, Va.

Helps for Teaching the Textbook

"Suggestions to Leaders," by Mr. Edward D. Grant, a most valuable booklet, indispensable to leaders of classes. These "Suggestions" include vital facts concerning Mission Study class leadership, together with specific suggestions and definite program materials for teaching "The Desire of All Nations." It also contains material for Stewardship studies to be presented in connection with our Mission Study classes, according to the Assembly's plan of studying Stewardship this year. Order immediately from Educational Department, Box 330, Nashville, Tenn. Price 15c.

Further suggestions for studying and teaching "The Desire of All Nations" may be found in the Survey.

The Auxiliary department of the December, January and February numbers of the Survey contain pageant and demonstrations suggested for every chapter.

Requirements for Mission Study Class

"Five per cent is given for a Foreign Mission study class of not less than five periods of one hour each. A reading circle cannot be counted, neither the hurried review of a text book given in an hour or two at an all-day meeting of the Auxiliary. However, a one-day class of at least five periods of one hour each can be counted."—Standard for the Woman's Auxiliary.

Church School of Missions—The ideal Foreign Mission study plan today for every Southern Presbyterian Church is a School of Missions. Under this plan the whole Church studies Foreign Missions at the same time, the men having a class to themselves, the women having a class to themselves, the young people having their own class, and so on down even to the Beginners' Department. Copy of the leaflet outlining this plan can be obtained by writing the Educational Department, Box 330, Nashville, Tenn.

Mission Study Class—Where the Church School of Missions is not practical at this time, a Mission Study class of at least five periods, meeting once a week for five weeks or one hour daily for five days, should be organized. The Auxiliary may meet for this study as a whole or in smaller groups by Circles.

One-Day Class—Groups which find it impossible for geographic or other reasons to arrange for the series of study classes may plan a one-day class of at least five periods of one hour each. That this class may be most helpful, all members should be urged to read the textbook before the one-day study class.

Let Us Remember

Our Foreign Mission Study class is not being planned just for the purpose of meeting a requirement of "five hours of study" but with the Standard as our gauge, we should plan for that which will promote the study of the textbook for this year by the largest number of people in the most earnest way possible. None of us can truly study "The Desire of All Nations" without being led into new and richer consecration of life and so be ready to accept God's challenge to us.

BOOKS

E. P. Dutton & Co., New York

"Count Billy"—By Greenville MacDonald.

This is a story for larger boys. A child is thrown ashore in a shipwreck, and reared by a Cornwall fish wife.

After adventure many and thrilling he is restored to own land of Spain, and finds that he is a count.

"LIFE'S EVENTIDE"

is a beautiful, poetic phrase. Sight of the hoary head or thought of the aged who walk in the way of righteousness touches the heart.

God does not forget the aged. His great promise through the Prophet Zechariah is, "At evening time it shall be light."

We all want to remember the servants of Christ and our Church who left the sources of worldly gain, have borne the burden of the day and the scorching heat and whose salaries were too meagre to lay by in store for the rainy day.

Every dictate of justice, of honor, of gratitude, of self-respect, of expediency, of religion and of obedience to the will of God urges the Church to help fulfill this promise and to brighten the hours they remain with us.

For twenty-five years we have held constantly before the Church these impelling tasks: (1) Increase in the meagre salaries of the active ministers; (2) larger provision for the present needs of aged and disabled ministers and needy widows and orphans of deceased ministers; and (3) larger Endowment Funds to supplement the annual offerings of the churches. We are now ready for (4) adequate provision, through contributory pension scheme for a Ministers' Annuity Fund.

Great progress has been made. We still need your sympathy and prayers and financial help. Help raise the budget in your Church. Remember this work in your will. Ask about "Life Annuity Bonds" and "Memorials."

At the New Year Season and all through the year think of these and their rich spiritual service.

Sunday, January 6—Making Christ's Kingdom Come —Matt. 21:1-17; Luke 17:20, 21; Rev. 19:16

The Leader

We are beginning the New Year's work in our young people's society, and we should all be anxious to make this year a fine period for our society. We should each one determine to do his best to be regular in attendance, prompt and on time, and prepared to do the part assigned. We should resolve to give to Christ the service He desires from each one of his servants.

Our general subject for the year as chosen by our Council at Richmond is "Making Christ's Kingdom Come." By this we mean that as an organization and as individuals we are to bestow our efforts toward making Christ known in our community and in all the earth, and trying to persuade men everywhere to make Him king over their lives, and let His work and ways be the chief desire of every heart.

Let us study together today the passages of scripture chosen to present Christ as king and the way His kingdom is to be made to come. This is what we pray for in the Lord's prayer—Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done in earth, as it is done in heaven.

Christ's Triumphant Entry

The lesson in Matthew 21 tells about the triumphal entry of Jesus into Jerusalem on the Sunday before His death on the cross. He rode a small donkey on which no man had ever ridden, and the people spread their garments before Him, and threw palm branches along His path, and cried out, Hosanna to the Son of David. Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord.

The people did not understand all this, but this entrance of Jesus was foretold in prophecy, and was symbolic of His entrance into His spiritual kingdom. Jerusalem was His holy city, and the Jews were His people. They rejected Him, and so when He rose from the dead, He became the Savior and king of all men. He is waiting now to come into our hearts, and begin His blessed rule over our lives.

Casting Out Sin

As soon as Jesus had entered Jerusalem, He went into the temple, and there He saw how the holy house of God was being desecrated by its use as a market place for making money. This made Him indignant with a holy wrath. He began at once to cleanse the temple by driving out the cattle and overturning the tables of the money-changers, as He cried, This house shall be called a house of prayer for all people, but ye have made it a den of thieves.

Before Christ can be king of any people or any man, sin and evil must be driven out of the heart and soul. As we let Jesus in, He will at once cast out sins that easily beset us, and that we have harbored in the precious dwelling place of God, even our hearts. The coming of Jesus into the world has driven out many evils from the world, such as slavery, oppression of the poor, neglect of children, injustice to womanhood, and so on.

Rebuking the Fruitless

In the passage suggested for our study, the story of Christ cursing the barren fig tree is told. This seemed a peculiar thing, but we must remember that this act of Christ was a parable. The fig tree was a figure of the Jews. As a nation they had been fruitless, although God had bestowed the greatest care on them. If a nation, or a person will not use the gifts of God, especially the blessings of His grace and truth, He will not only rebuke them for sin, but will cut them off.

Let us pray that we may be fruitful, and that the truth of the gospel may work in us a holy life and a useful service.

The Kingdom's Place in Our Hearts

In the passage in Luke 17, the Jews asked Jesus when the kingdom of God should come. He replied that the kingdom of God does not come so that it always has an outward show such that it can be observed. It comes into the hearts and changes the life. The kingdom of God is within you, said He.

We must remember that when Jesus comes into our lives, He changes our minds and thoughts, our attitudes toward duties and pleasures, He drives out envy, discontent, and selfishness, and works in us a wish to be true and kind, faithful and helpful, pure in heart and loving in soul. When we make Jesus King, he overrules our evil wills and makes them bend to His gentle sway of love and righteousness.

The King of Kings

We have a scripture passage in Revelation 19, which describes One who comes on a white horse whose name is Faithful and True. His eyes are like flames of fire, and many crowns are on his head. His garment was dipped in blood. Out of his mouth went a sharp sword, and his name is written on his clothing, King of Kings and Lord of Lords.

Of course we recognize in this picture Jesus our own King. He is the King of Kings, and some day He shall sit upon the throne, and all nations shall bow before Him and acknowledge Him Lord of all. Let us haste now to crown Him king of our own lives, and do our best to make Him king over all the earth.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S TOPIC

Sunday, January 13—Loving As Jesus Loved—(Stewardship)—Mt. 25:31-40; Phil. 2:1-11; IICor. 5:14.

This article was prepared by Dr. Raymond W. Adams, of Chapel Hill, N. C.

The Leader

This lesson is a lesson in Stewardship, showing how Jesus loved by his use of time, money, and life. He has set us an example to follow in his view of life. By copying his life we may advance his kingdom in the world.

The King of Love my Shepherd is Whose goodness faileth never;
I nothing lack if I am his,
And he is mine forever.

Christ's Ideas of Wealth

Christ said various things about money. To one person whose money was a fetish he said, "Go, sell what thou hast and give to the poor." At another time he commended the making of much money, in fact commended most the man who doubled his ten talents, a strange sentiment to set alongside, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures on earth."

Fitting Giving to the Man

Christ simply seems to have had no financial program. He let the occasion determine his attitude and had a different ideal for each man because money to one man was a curse; to another, blessing.

Giving Life, Not Money

Christ himself did not go about putting pennies into poor men's hands. He never said, "I am come that you might have pennies," but "I am come that ye might have life." It was life that Christ gave. Men have his kind of life because he gave his life unstintedly. He was not concerned about a tithe; a widow's mite, because it was her all, looked bigger in his eyes than one-tenth of the millionaire's gold.

Christ's Stewardship

The difference between Christ's stewardship and the Christian's stewardship is that Christ measured his giving in terms of love and life and counted not his life his own, but "gave himself a ransom for all," whereas the Christian ordinarily measures his Christianity by the total he's credited with on the books of the church treasurer. He is apt to measure the Christianity of his civilization by the millions of dollars given to religion and charity, forgetting that a truly Christian civilization would need no charity. In a civilization in which men love as Jesus loved and exercise stewardship over life as he did instead of over money, in a civilization in which men give life they will find no need to give money.

Giving Means More Than Things

We are too concerned about things. The cross and the dollar sign have got tangled together. Christ lived above the level of things. He held his life to be not his, but fit only to be given for others. His was a stewardship of life, an outpouring of love. He did not see both a dollar sign and a cross. He saw only a cross upon which to give his life that all men might have life.

Manifesting Christ by Stewardship

Until we begin to exercise a little stewardship of life and give ourselves, it will profit the world nothing for us to give our dollar. Christ used a cross to show himself to the world. We cannot show him to our world with a dollar sign.

A NEW STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS

and in both instances as in the first, on the recommendation of a committee. The Committee on Judicial Business is merely a clerical body, appointed to "digest and arrange all the papers and to prescribe, under the direction of the court, the whole order of the proceedings" in a trial. (F. G., pa. 203). Through an unconscious usurpation of functions, these committees have for many years been in the habit of bringing in legal opinions for our church courts to adopt. It would be regarded as a very careless and reprehensible habit for a civil judge to allow his clerk to prepare legal opinions and bring them in for his adoption in open court. Yet this is exactly what our church courts are in the habit of doing.

Now, if I understand this new proposal, it is that our church law be amended so that the opinion adopted by the General Assembly of 1911 shall be indirectly enacted into law. The decision of the Judicial Commission shall be regarded as final unless it is set aside by the whole Assembly after retrial before adjournment or "dissolution" of the Assembly. Should any decision of a Judicial Commission be attacked at any time subsequent to the sessions of the General Assembly at which it was rendered, this new law will be pleaded in bar of retrial. Dr. Lumpkin had objected that the proposed law provided for a retrial by the same court. Dr. Robertson replies, No, not unless the court decides to give a new trial before it adjourns. The difference between these two wise men is, that one thinks it a thing inconceivable that the supreme court of the church should give a case two trials, and the other is willing to give a litigant another chance, provided he can bring forward sufficient reasons for a new trial before the court adjourned.

What is the General Assembly of a Presbyterian Church? Is it not the church itself, assembled as it were in committee of the whole, in the persons of representative commissioners? Is it not a permanent tribunal, having a continuous existence in its moderator, clerks, executive committees, and in the church of which it is the organ? Are not its decisions the decisions of the church? And shall we enact a law which will make it impossible for the church to correct its own errors in a judicial case? The United States in the persons of the judges of its Supreme Court has reserved the right to correct any errors of the nation committed by the nation as represented in that court. The State of North Carolina has reserved the same right in its supreme court. We have witnessed the assertion of the utter irresponsibility of a Presbyterian General Assembly, and now we are asked to sanction a new step in the direction of ecclesiastical tyranny by adopting a law which is a mere statute of limitations. It allows the General Assembly to retry a case just decided by a commission, but implicitly denies the right of any subsequent Assembly to redress any wrong that may have been committed through haste, lack of information, or any other disqualification.

A singularly short-sighted notion has prevailed as to the duty of a General Assembly toward appellants or complainants. "If a decision of the highest court is not final," it is said, "what could be?" The reply is that in civilized countries even the highest courts do not regard their decisions as sacred or final if at any time they are advised and convinced that an error of law or fact has been committed that has defeated the ends of justice. Dreyfus, the despised Jew, whose military associates combined against him and procured his degradation from his office in the army and his banishment from France, was able to procure a new trial before the French "Court of Cassation," the supreme court of the republic, many years after his first appeal was denied. When the novelist, Zola, espoused his cause, the friends of Dreyfus were able to bring forward sufficient proofs of the perjuries committed to procure his degradation and banishment. Thereupon the court granted a new trial, and before it was concluded the chief conspirator committed suicide rather than face the certain disgrace which awaited him.

In its final decision in the famous Robinson case, our Assembly, without granting formally a new trial, acted on the time-honored legal assumption that for every wrong there is a remedy. Under the circumstances, the letter which called attention to the fact—viz., the anomalous position in which the Assembly's decision had left an appellant whose appeal it had granted, the position of an excommunicated church member who had not been restored to the communion, while yet, under the Assembly's judgment, he was a minister entitled to all his rights—on which the Judicial Committee based its recommendation, ought to have been considered a clear case of "memorial and error shown," and either the Assembly itself or a commission appointed for the purpose should have tried the issue thus presented. The trial would have occupied not more than ten minutes, and the whole proceeding would have been regular.

Our law, instead of being amended so as to provide for immortalizing the errors of our church supreme court, should be broadened with a view to guarding the rights of litigants. Every ground on which a new trial should be granted in an inferior court should, as with our civil courts, be considered a sufficient ground for a rehearing by the supreme court, as also every ground on which a litigant may appeal to a higher tribunal. Our law as it stands provides that a new trial may be had before "any court" (F. G., Par. 239), if "new testimony be discovered which the accused believes is important. "Any court" means "any, even the highest," else the highest would certainly have been excepted. Since the principle that an Assembly may grant a new trial in such a case is expressly laid down in our law, why not extend it so as to cover all other reasonable grounds, as is done by every State Supreme Court in our Union and by the Supreme Court of the United States?

HISTORY OF MAXTON CHURCH

McClelland. About 1917, the Woman's Auxiliary took the place of the Missionary Society and the Presidents who have served so faithfully and acceptably have been as follows: Miss Elizabeth McNair, Mrs. J. S. McRae, Mrs. R. M. Williams, Mrs. J. P. Wiggins, Miss Flora McKinnon, Mrs. Lacy McLean, Mrs. Lacy Williams, and Mrs. D. C. McIver, the present incumbent. During all these years our women have been active and exceedingly useful, and to them is largely due the degree of success which this Church has reached, and we look to them for even greater things in the future. Working alongside the Woman's Society, there was, for many years a Young Woman's Missionary Society, called first the Emma J. McRae Society, and later changed to the Lillian Austin Missionary Society. The young women wrought well and did much to stimulate Missionary interest in the congregation. The H. G. Hill Society and the Lillian Austin Society were merged in the Woman's Auxiliary, and all our women are now working together harmoniously and enthusiastically for all the great causes of the Church, and are accomplishing much for the glory of God.

It may be of interest to many to know that the first couple married in the old Church were Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Austin, and the first couple to wed in the new Church were Mr. and Mrs. Sylvester B. McLean.

Between the pastorate of Rev. Roger Martin and that of Rev. H. G. Hill, D.D., Rev. Mr. McIntyre, of Canada, supplied the Church, with great acceptance, for several months.

We could not if we would, we would not if we could, draw any distinctions between the noble men and women connected with this Church in the past; but pointing, with pride, to the arduous labors of those who worked so faithfully in the Master's vineyard, and have been called to higher service above, we pray that a double portion of their spirit may rest upon the younger generation, now bearing the burden and heat of the day, and that they, forgetting those things which are behind and reaching forth unto those things which are before, may "press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

DR. S. L. MORRIS' BOOK The Drama of Christianity

"Timely, thorough-going, sound, s a f i c , uplifting and convincing," certainly these are not too many adjectives to apply to this book. Dr. Morris is certainly not "stalking the latest theory" in his interpretation of Revelation; for it is a clear, cogent, consistent argument from beginning to end. It is wonderful how each book of the Bible, just as the Bible itself, holds together in an organic, historical unity when we accept and interpret it at its face value. And this Dr. Morris has done for us.

"MY OLD MAN"

By Fred E. Weatherly
Author of "Nancy Lee"

He tells me that he's eighty,
This dear old man of mine,
But how can I believe it,
When I see his bright eyes shine;
Maybe his hair is whiter,
And the wrinkles deper grow,
But I don't believe he's eighty,
I can't believe he's eighty,
When he talks to me and tells me
What he told me long ago!

Still he vows that he is eighty,
But I say it cannot be,
When I see him striding gaily
Along the strets with me;
When I hear him talk and argue,
Telling stories by the score,
Oh, I don't believe he's eighty,
I can't believe he's eighty,
When he makes us laugh and chuckle,
Though we've heard them all before!

But when at eve we wander
In our garden on the hill,
When the noises of the busy world
Are growing hushed and still;
When he puts his arm around me,
And we watch the setting sun,
Oh, I can't believe he's eighty,
I won't believe he's eighty,
When he kisses me and loves me
Like a boy of twenty-one!

A child of the Covenant and long a member of Hopewell Church, Mecklenburg County, she witnessed a good confession through years of suffering and blindness. Two sons and four daughters survive. Six grandsons were her pallbearers.

Christ rose and she shall surely rise.

MRS. ALICE VANCE TADLOCK

Mrs. Alice Vance Tadlock, wife of the Rev. Alexander Doak Tadlock, D.D., died at the Guerrant Clinic Friday morning, December 7th. The funeral service was held at the residence of the Rev. E. V. Tadlock, on Maple Avenue, Winchester, Ky., on Saturday afternoon, December 8th, at two o'clock. The service was conducted by Rev. S. B. Lander, D.D., with Rev. J. W. Clotfelter assisting. Burial was in the Paris, Ky., cemetery.

Mrs. Tadlock was born at Kingsport, Tenn., the daughter of Dr. William Nicholas Vance and Sarah Netherland Vance. Her ancestors were among the earliest settlers of that state. A maternal ancestor purchased Long Island in Holston River from the Cherokee Indians. It was upon this island, according to Theodore Roosevelt, in his "Winning of the West," that the first two treaties between the settlers and the Cherokee Indians were effected. The family removed to Bristol, Tenn., immediately after the Civil War.

Surviving her are a brother, Dr. W. K. Vance, Sr.; three sisters, Mrs. Ida Caldwell, Mrs. F. A. Groseclose and Mrs. Charlotte Powers, all of Bristol, Tenn.; and two sons, Rev. E. V. Tadlock, of Winchester, Ky., and J. T. Tadlock, of Paris, Ky.

Mrs. Tadlock was a devoted member of the First Presbyterian Church, a woman of highest Christian character. Her loss will be mourned by many friends in the various communities in the state in which Dr. Tadlock has held pastorates.

The passing of Mrs. Tadlock occurred while her husband, Dr. Tadlock, lay at the point of death.

REV. ALEXANDER DOAK TADLOCK, D.D.

The Rev. Alexander Doak Tadlock, oldest member of the Synod of Kentucky, died at 11:25 o'clock Wednesday morning, December 19, 1928, after an illness of ten weeks.

Dr. Tadlock was born at Washington College, Tenn., May 27, 1951, the son of James Doak Tadlock, D.D., LL.D., and Susan McLin Tadlock. He was a graduate of King College and the Union Theological Seminary of Virginia, and was licensed to the Gospel ministry by Holston Presbytery in April, 1876. In September of the same year he married Miss Alice Vance, of Bristol, Tenn. A month later he was ordained by Ebenezer Presbytery in the old Hopewell Church in Bourbon County, Ky.; and was installed pastor of the Bayless Memorial and Greenup Union churches, in Carter County, Ky., February, 1877.

Dr. Tadlock's active ministry consisted of five pastorates, covering a period of forty-two years. His first pastorate at Grayson, Ky., continued five years, during which the church was organized and a building erected. This was one of the first Presbyterian churches in the mountains of Kentucky. The funds were secured by

WHAT DR. CALDWELL LEARNED IN 47 YEARS PRACTICE

A physician watched the results of constipation for 47 years, and believed that no matter how careful people are of their health, diet and exercise, constipation will occur from time to time. Of next importance, then, is how to treat it when it comes. Dr. Caldwell always was in favor of getting as close to nature as possible, hence his remedy for constipation, known as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a mild vegetable compound. It can not harm the system and is not habit forming. Syrup Pepsin is pleasant-tasting, and youngsters love it.

Dr. Caldwell did not approve of drastic physics and purges. He did not believe they were good for anybody's system. In a practice of 47 years he never saw any reason for their use when Syrup Pepsin will empty the bowels just as promptly.

Do not let a day go by without a bowel movement. Do not sit and hope, but go to the nearest druggist and get one of the generous bottles of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, or write "Syrup Pepsin," Dept. BB, Monticello, Illinois, for free trial bottle.

Stubborn Cough Quickly Ended by Famous Recipe

Here is the famous old recipe which millions of housewives have found to be the most dependable means of breaking up a stubborn, lingering cough. It takes but a moment to prepare and costs little, but it gives real relief even for those dreaded coughs that usually follow the "flu."

From any druggist, get 2½ ounces of Pinex, pour it into a pint bottle and fill the bottle with plain granulated sugar syrup or strained honey. Thus you make a full pint of better remedy than you could buy ready-made for three times the cost. It never spoils and tastes so good that even children like it.

Not only does this simple mixture soothe and heal the inflamed throat membranes with surprising ease, but also it is absorbed into the blood, and acts directly upon the bronchial tubes, thus aiding the whole system in throwing off the cough. It loosens the germ-laden phlegm and eases chest soreness in a way that is really astonishing.

Pinex is a highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway Pine, containing the active agent of creosote, in a refined, palatable form. Nothing known in medicine is more helpful in cases of severe coughs, chest colds and bronchial troubles. Do not accept a substitute for Pinex. It is guaranteed to give prompt relief or money refunded.

personal canvas throughout the state, and much of the work was done with his own hands. The floor was made of lumber from the hull of a steam boat that had burned to the water level, and each piece of it he hand ripped. In nailing on the roof at a time when the Ohio river was frozen over Dr. Tadlock incurred frost bites that gave him inconvenience the rest of his life.

At a meeting held in Nicholasville in 1881, the Synod of Kentucky decided upon an intensive forward movement, and Dr. Tadlock was one of the several including the late E. O. Guerant, who were called to be evangelists. He was assigned to a group of churches in western Kentucky, including Franklin, New Ro, Old Salem, Auburn and Russellville. In a pastorate of eight years this field developed sufficiently to be divided and the church at Franklin was organized and a handsome building erected. Four years were spent as pastor of Richwood and Union churches in Boone county. The years 1893-1906 were ministered to the Clintonville and Hopewell churches in Bourbon county, during which the latter church erected a new building. His last pastorate was at the Sharon Church in Bracken county, which he relinquished in 1918, due to throat trouble. For the past twelve years he has made his home with his son, Rev. E. V. Tadlock, at 325 South Maple Street, Winchester.

On September 19th Dr. and Mrs. Tadlock celebrated their fifty-second anniversary. She preceded him in death by only twelve days.

Dr. Tadlock exemplified the highest ideals and graces of the ministry. His passing will be mourned by the many to whom he was a spiritual father.

Dr. Tadlock is survived by a brother, Robert McLin Tadlock, of Fort Worth, Texas, a sister, Mrs. Susan Tadlock Wallace, of Bristol, Tenn., and two sons, the Rev. E. V. Tadlock, of Winchester, and J. T. Tadlock, of Paris, Ky.

The funeral services were held in the First Presbyterian Church Thursday afternoon at two o'clock. Interment was in the Paris cemetery.

MISS FLORA McCORMAC

Whereas, God, in His all-wise providence has called his faithful servant Miss Flora McCormac from labor here to reward above, and be it resolved;

1. That we, members of Circle 5, of Ashpole Presbyterian Church feel that we have suffered a loss in the death of Miss Flora, a woman of culture and high ideals.

2. That we extend to the family our heartfelt sympathy.

3. That these resolutions be written in the minutes of the Ashpole Auxiliary and printed in the Standard, and a copy be sent to the family.

NEWTON D. TODD

Newton D. Todd was born June 19, 1863. He was seriously injured in an automobile accident October 25, 1928, and died about two hours later. He joined Paw Creek Presbyterian Church in 1881, and was a deacon in this church for about 29 years. He was a member of the men's Bible class from the time of its organization till his death.

Therefore be it resolved:

1. That the men's Bible class of Paw Creek Church record its appreciation of his sterling character, pleasant disposition, and interest in the class and Church.

2. That we humbly submit to God's will.

3. That we express to the family our sympathy in this sorrow.

4. That copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, and also to the Presbyterian Standard for publication.

MRS. N. P. CONOLY

It is with deep sorrow that we record the passing on October 19, 1928, of one of our most faithful members, Mrs. N. P. Conoly.

Her whole life was that of devotion to her home and family. She was of a quiet and modest disposition.

Faithfulness and devotion to duty were outstanding qualities both of her nature and life work.

We, the members of the Woman's Auxiliary of Antioch Church desire to pay this tribute of love to her memory.

1. That we feel deeply the loss of this faithful member who gave herself so freely to her home and Church.

2. That we thank God for her life among us, her gentle, loving service in this cause, and pray that He will enable us to be as faithful.

3. That we extend to her family our heartfelt sympathy in their loss.

4. We ask that a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, and one to the Presbyterian Standard for publication.

MRS. FLORENCE WILLIAMS FAISON

It is with deep sorrow that we record the passing on August 30, 1928, of one of our most faithful members, Mrs. Florence Williams Faison. She gave gladly of her means and as much of her time and strength as her feeble health would allow, to the Master's cause.

Resolved:

1. That we feel deeply the loss of this faithful member who gave herself so freely to her home and Church.

2. That we thank God for her life among us, her gentle, loving service in this cause, and pray that He will enable us to be as faithful.

3. That we extend to her family our heartfelt sympathy in their loss.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy written into our minutes and a copy sent to the Presbyterian Standard for publication.

A JAPANESE STORY

As Told to Hana Abe, of Tokyo, When She Was a Little Girl

There was once, many years ago, a man by the name of Zengora, who kept a sake shop in Tokyo. He kept a great many servants to attend to the work, but he had one servant who came from a far-away country, whom he was very fond of. His name was Tomekichi. He was honest, faithful, and conscientious, and also economical. In two years' time, he was able to save fifty yen, equal to about forty dollars. This was a very large sum for a young man to save out of a servant's wages.

His mother was a widow and lived alone, in a province many miles away. She was dependent on her son for her support. One day he asked his master if he might go home and take her his earnings. His master gave his consent, and as he was about to set out on his perilous journey alone, he made him a present of a new sword. In those days it was always necessary to have a strong weapon when any one traveled, to defend themselves from the attacks of wild animals and robbers. To save the expense of a Kago, or traveling chair, Tomekichi set out to walk. For two days all went well, but at the end of the third day he lost his way, and it was growing dark when he found himself on a large plain, and could see no living thing in any direction. But as darkness settled down about him he saw far off in the distance a faint light. He hastened toward it, and came to a small house. His knock brought a beautiful girl, about seventeen, to the door. She seemed very busily engaged in getting supper ready. He told her he had lost his way and was footsore and weary, and would pay her price if he might have food and lodging. The young girl, with a look of great pity, said, "This house is occupied by a band of robbers. They will soon be coming. If you stay here they will rob you of all you have, and perhaps take your life also." Tomekichi looked out into the black night. There seemed untold dangers there also. "Could you not hide me in some dark corner of the shed where you keep the rubbish? I will be off before the day breaks, but I can go no farther tonight."

The tender-hearted girl could not resist this appeal, and hid him as safely as she could, and gave him food, but when the robbers came home the very first thing they said were the dreadful words, "We have a bird in our cage," and demanded she tell them where he was, and told her she could not deny it, the zori, or sandals, which in their haste they had forgotten to hide, stood by the door.

The chief began to beat her and threaten her life. Tomekichi, hearing, could not bear to have her suffer the unjust punishment, and came out, saying, "She is not to blame. I could go no farther, and insisted on staying." Without mercy or pity they stripped him of his clothes. Seeing the girdle in which he carried his money, they asked him what it was. He told them it was his wages he was carrying to his widowed mother. He begged them to let him keep at least a part, but they took it to the last yen, in spite of his pleading. Then they saw the sword. He told them it was a present from his master; would they not allow him to keep that? But no, it was their business to rob and kill, and he should be thankful if they spared his life. So they took the sword also. They then gave him some old clothes, and told him they would decide in the morning about sparing his life.

In the morning they asked him what he would do if they let him go. He had not been able to sleep all the long night thinking about his situation and his poor mother, so he told them he must go back to Tokyo and earn more money for the support of his mother. They then said he might go, but they had a horrible design in their hearts. They had planned it the night before. They said, "We will let him go, but if he reaches Tokyo he will tell his master about us, and we will be arrested. We will see that he takes the road that leads around by the eagles' resort. They will eat him up, and he can make us no further trouble. So they told him there were two ways to return to Tokyo, a long and a short one, but the short way was the safer. He said he was anxious to return as quickly as possible, and would take the shorter way. As he was leaving the house he asked for a stick, or anything they would be willing to give him, to use in defending himself if he were attacked. One of the men brought out a bundle of old rusty swords, and told him he might have his choice of them. He took the largest, and sadly started back to Tokyo. When he came to the eagles' nest, for some reason, perhaps because he looked so poor and distressed, they did not even come down from their resort to molest him, and he went safely by.

When he finally reached Tokyo, and his master's house, no one recognized him, and thought him a miserable beggar. When he said, "I am Tomekichi," they laughed at him. But his master came to the door, and under all the rags and grime and bruises he recognized his faithful servant. He ordered the servants to prepare a hot bath, and to get good clothing and food for him, after which he asked him to tell all that had befallen him. And Tomekichi told all his sad adventure. His master told him he was very thankful his life had been spared, for, said he, "You can earn money again, but life can never come back."

Now Zengora was very fond of old swords. One day he noticed Tomekichi's old rusty sword standing in a corner. When he was told it was given to Tomekichi by the robbers, he examined it very carefully, and soon saw it was no ordinary sword. He had it polished, and the sword polisher recognized it was a Masamane blade, the finest ever made. Zengora told Tomekichi he would give him one hundred yen for it, and Tomekichi said, "I will be very glad to sell the sword for 100 yen, but only 50 of that sum is mine, as the robbers took only 50 from me. I will return them the 50 yen that does not belong to me."

His master was astonished. "The sword was given to you. The money is yours," he insisted. But Tomekichi made preparation to return the 50 yen to the robbers. When he reached the little house the robbers, thinking him dead, thought him a spirit, and were dreadfully afraid, but when he entered and told them about the sword, and offered them the money, they were amazed at his honesty. The chief recovered himself first, and shame and remorse took possession of him. He declared he would give up the evil life he was living and become an honest man also. He confessed he had kidnapped the young girl from a very wealthy family. He begged Tomekichi to return her to her parents. He addressed his followers, and advised them to choose the ways of honesty and integrity. The whole band were so impressed by their chief's actions and Tomekichi's singular honesty that they all left their lives of wickedness, and from that day led sober lives and worked for their living.

All this, from the influence of the life of Tomekichi, a poor Japanese servant, who had become a Christian in his youth and tried faithfully to live up to the teaching of Christ.—"Everyland."

Winnsboro Granite Monuments Maintain Memories

*"Thou turnest man to destruction * * * They are like grass which groweth up. In the morning it flourisheth and groweth up; in the evening it is cut down and withereth."*

How these words have been impressed upon us. There are some losses we will never forget; some memories we will always cherish.

Visits to the cemeteries where graves are marked reveal that many of the markers and monuments are also of few days, some discolored, others cracking and crumbling, as the ravages of time take their toll.

What a consolation to know that Mother's monument has been cut from a more lasting stone—genuine Winnsboro Granite. How the very rock itself brings back the tender memories of her. One can almost see a vision of childhood days in the stone itself.

OF ALL THE GRAY GRANITES, Winnsboro Granite "The Silk of the Trade" stands preeminently the most lasting, the most beautiful and inscriptions on it most legible.

Be sure that "Winnsboro Granite" is specified in your contract for monuments. Like other high quality materials, there are many inferior substitutes, which resemble this granite on first appearance, but do not possess its lasting qualities and permanent beauty, because they contain more deleterious elements, such as water, lime and iron. These elements tend to disintegration and discoloration.

Have your monument dealer furnish you with a personal guarantee from the quarries that the monument you purchase is cut in genuine Winnsboro Granite.

THE DADDY OF LOCOMOTIVES

The first locomotive built in the United States for actual railway service, the "Best Friend of Charleston," has been reproduced by the Southern Railway Company and will be displayed in the concourse of the Union Station at Washington, D. C., during the Christmas holidays, following a tour under its own steam over the Southern's lines in South Carolina.

Built at the West Point Foundry in New York City in 1830 for the South Carolina Canal and Railroad Company, now the Charleston division of the Southern, and brought to Charleston by ship, the original "Best Friend" made its first schedule trip on December 25, 1830. It rendered good service in regular passenger and freight service until June 17, 1831, when it came to an untimely end as the result of a negro fireman's annoyance at the sound of escaping steam from the safety valve. This interfered with his dozing in the warm Carolina sun, so he screwed down the valve and an explosion which wrecked the boiler resulted.

Like its prototype, the "Best Friend" of 1928 weighs only approximately four tons and has an upright boiler resembling a bottle. It has four driving wheels, 56 inches in diameter but its two clinders are only six-inch bore and 16-inch stroke. The pistons work down inside the frame. The locomotive is only 13 feet 10 1-2 inches long but the tip of its smokestack is 14 feet 10 1-2 inches above the surface of the rail. Two toy-like coaches, 14 feet long, and the service car, forerunner of the modern engine tender, have also been reproduced, the entire train being only 54 feet 2 1-2 inches in length.

THE RADIO PROMISE AND PERIL

The National Broadcasting Company has recently made public an estimate to the effect that by the beginning of next year there will be 11,032,855 radio sets receiving in the United States and that four-fifths of them will be in operation any night when the static permits. It is further estimated that 41,453,496 people are embraced in the families that own such sets and that more than 30,000,000 listen in every day. On a special occasion all of the sets will likely be in use. When to those immediately embraced in the radio circle is added those who enjoy the privilege with them the always immense audience increases.

The blessings this arrangement makes possible it is not necessary to enumerate. All of us are aware of the fine programs that add to the enjoyment and culture of the home. The recent presidential campaign makes it concrete. Millions of people heard the candidates and their friends who would have been denied this privilege and the general public were better informed on the issues than any previous race. Great speeches, great musical programs, great religious services are delivered in our sitting rooms. It would be difficult to exaggerate the benefactions that the radio offers.

But on the contrary, it makes possible the broadcasting of much that will be hurtful; not merely not helpful but positively hurtful. It is doubtful if this danger can be entirely averted, but it ought to be reduced to the minimum. As far as possible the public ought to be protected from programs that coarsen, and certainly that defile.—Christian Advocate, Atlanta.

THE FAULTFINDING HABIT

The chronic faultfinder is but a step from the growler and the growler is headed toward cynicism. And the cynic is of no value to himself or any one else. The world has no place for him because his mind has become twisted and his heart has become sour. No greater tragedy can overtake a man than for his heart to become a vinegar jug.

It is the part of wisdom and safety to avoid the very beginning of all these by refusing to become a faultfinder. On the contrary, learn to think beautiful thoughts and to speak pleasant words. Carry sunshine in your soul and a smile upon your face. The end of such a man is happiness and peace.—N. C. Advocate.

SUBSTITUTE N. T. D. FOR T. N. T.

Let's make that T. N. T. a "Dud" and substitute for it—N. T. D. which stands for New Testament Decalogue.

1. Love is patient and kind.
2. Love is not envious.
3. Love is not boastful.
4. Is not concited.
5. Does not offend.
6. Is not self-seeking.
7. Is never enraged.
8. Does not resent wrong.
9. Does not delight in evil, but delights in the truth.
10. Love forgives all things, believes all things, hopes for all things, endures all things. (Kent's translation.)

We know of one person who has said that he often visualizes each of the above "Ten Words" upon an individual card, with a string attached, so that whenever he has the first or faintest inclination to transgress in the slightest degree, up comes that particular card right before his eyes as a warning. He has said that he has adopted as his daily slogan—"Love is patient and kind."

Truly, "Faith, hope, and love—these three are eternal, but the greatest of these is love."—Horace N. Pond, in Exchange.

TO HIM

Some day I hope that there will be
A house for you—including me:

With windows every kind and size,
And doors that move with mild surprise.

In unexpected places—nooks
With room enough for two—and books.

And rafters in the living-room
To lower it with friendly gloom.

And fireplaces large and wide
That kindly keep smoke inside.

A dining-room made modestly
And bright with informality.

And stairs where I can pause and sit Whenever I just think of it.

A den for you—and you won't know—
I'll use it when I wish to sew.

And always in your fav'rite chairs
A haze of dog and kitten hairs.

A gate that hollyhocks will hide,
And only let our friends inside.

Some day I hope that there will be
A house for you—including me.

THE CRISIS

There comes a time in the life of practically every man and woman when their digestive or eliminative organs, or both, fail to respond to drugs prepared by human skill. In fact drugs seem to do them about as much harm as good for their systems rebel against all drugs. These are the cases which physicians call “stubborn” and “chronic” for the reason that they persist in spite of drug treatment. We do not refer to incurable diseases such as cancer and consumption, but to that larger class of functional disorders which we meet every day, where the organs of digestion and elimination are impaired.

INDIGESTION

I was suffering with indigestion, stomach and liver disorders and all its train of horrifying phenomena for several months. I had lived on milk, soft eggs, shredded wheat, a very insufficient diet for an active working man, and, of course, from disease and starvation was in a very low state of nervous vitality and general debility. I ordered ten gallons of your Mineral Water which I used continuously, reordering when necessary, and in four months gained twenty-nine pounds, was strong and perfectly well, and have worked practically every day since. It acts as a general renovator of the system. I prescribe it in my practice, and it has in every instance had the desired effects. It is essential to use this water in as large quantities as possible, for its properties are so happily blended and in such proportion that they will not disturb the most delicate system. It is purely Nature’s remedy.

I have tested your Spring Water in several cases of rheumatism, chronic indigestion, kidney and bladder troubles, and in nervous and sick headaches, and find that it has acted nicely in each case, and I believe that if used continuously for a reasonable time will produce a permanent cure. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, stimulate the action of the liver, kidneys and bladder, aiding them in throwing off all poisonous matter.

For this class of cases our best physicians and our big city specialists send their wealthy patients to the mineral springs where, in the great majority of cases they are permanently restored or decidedly benefited. But what about the poor man who has not the money or the busy man or woman who cannot spare the time to spend several weeks or possibly months at a health resort? Shall circumstances deny them the restoration of health which Nature has provided? Read our answer in the coupon at the bottom of this page.

I feel it my duty to suffering humanity to make public announcements of the benefits I have derived from Shivar Spring Water. I have been a sufferer for the past twenty-five years from indigestion and dyspepsia. After one week’s trial of Shivar Water I commenced to improve, and after drinking it for four weeks I gained fifteen pounds. I feel better and stronger than I have in twenty-five years. I strongly recommend this Water to any one with stomach trouble of any character, and truly believe it will cure ulcer of the stomach. I am writing this voluntarily and trust it will fall in the hands of many who are so unfortunate as to be afflicted with indigestion and nervous dyspepsia.

I suffered with indigestion and kidney trouble, and a year ago was stricken with acute articular rheumatism; was helpless for months, and since using your Spring Water I am walking without any crutch and improving daily. Indigestion much relieved. I wish I could write Shivar Spring Water in the sky so that the world could become acquainted with it.

We have the utmost confidence in Shivar Mineral Spring Water for we have received tens of thousands of letters from our patrons reporting their great benefit or complete restoration to health. It has made us tens of thousands of friends in all parts of America whose faces we have never seen. Yet we count them our friends for the Shivar Spring Water has bound them to us by lasting gratitude.

DYSPEPSIA

For many years I suffered with stomach trouble as a direct result of asthma. I consulted the very best specialist in this country, and spent quite a large sum of money in my endeavor to get relief. However, I had about come to the conclusion that my case was hopeless, but by accident I happened to get hold of one of your booklets, and decided to try Shivar Spring Water. After drinking the water for about three weeks I was entirely relieved, and since that time have suffered but little inconvenience from my trouble. I cheerfully recommend the use of your Water to any one that may be suffering from stomach trouble.

BILIOUSNESS

For over two years, following a nervous breakdown, I have suffered with a liver so torpid that ordinary remedies were absolutely powerless. Under such circumstances, I came to Shivar Spring, and began drinking the Water. Upon advice however, the first night I took a laxative; the second night a milder one. Since then I have taken none at all. The effect of the water has been remarkable—its action on my liver most marked, and my health and spirits greatly improved. I am satisfied that the laxative, followed by the Water, was the proper treatment in my case. My condition is now perfect.

We ask you to read their letters, a few samples of which we publish below for your benefit, and if you find among them any encouragement as to your own health do not hesitate to accept our offer which has no limits or conditions except those shown on the coupon. If you would read the letters that come to us daily, numbering about ten thousand a day, and the vast majority of them similar to those printed below, you would not wonder that we make this offer displaying our absolute confidence in the restorative powers of Shivar Mineral Water.

It is a great pleasure to tell you that your Water has been a great benefit. I may say a great blessing, to me. My wife says it has helped me more than anything else I ever tried. I have been, for thirty years, a sufferer from stomach trouble

RENAL AND CYSTIC

I suffered for eight years with kidney trouble and inflammation of the bladder to the extent that I would have to get up during the night some five or six times. After using this water only a few days, I am entirely relieved and suffer no more effect of the trouble whatever.
My wife has had a bad kidney trouble for several years. She has been using the water only about three weeks and it has already made her a new woman. Her color is much improved, her appetite is all that she could wish for, her digestion seems to be perfect. We give Shivar Spring Water credit for it all.

In Ur, the antiquarians say,
The only books were made of clay,

And, baked in fires of reeds and sticks,
In course of time were turned to bricks;

And of these square and shiny tomes
The Urians built their happy homes.

And when he stayed at home at night
An Urian took a taper light

And with a ladder close at hand
Against the lettered wall to stand

Would, caterpillarlike, advance
And read his favorite romance.

And when at last he'd gone through all
The books composing every wall,

His mind more fully to improve,
His only recourse was to move

Around and 'round and 'round and 'round
Where other volumes might be found.

If I had lived in Ur, I'm sure
That when I'd read the literature

Upon the wall of house or flat
I should have let it go at that;

Of education I approve.
But, golly! How I hate to move!

Presbyterian College Postpones Opening

South Carolina Institution at Clinton Defers Classes Till January 8 on Account of Flu

Acting upon the advice of the state health authorities, the officials of Presbyterian College of South Carolina at Clinton have postponed the opening of the college following the Christmas holidays until Tuesday morning, January 8. The influenza situation at the college has never been serious but the postponement was made on account of the desire of the college to cooperate with the state health authorities in curbing the influenza epidemic. It is confidently expected that full work will be resumed with the first class on Tuesday morning.—Columbia State.

Home Missions In Canada

The Bureau of Information of the United Church Makes a Report of Activities

Rev. R. J. Wilson, D.D., Secretary of the United Church of Canada, Bureau of Literature and Information in Toronto, issues the following statement as to Home Mission activities in that organization, which combined free denominations. This does not include the Presbyterian body which remains intact after the other Presbyterians withdrew and united with the movement; and is known as the Presbyterian Church in Canada. The statement of Dr. Wilson follows: In the United Church of Canada there are 1,571 fields on the Home Mission list—with 4,368 preaching places in them. This constitutes about 50 per cent of the preaching points in the whole Church.

Since the last General Council meeting in June, 1926, 375 fields have been taken off the list of aid receiving churches, having reached the status of self support.

New Radio Bible Courses

Moody Bible Institute of Chicago Announces New Plan for Students Who Wish to Take the Instruction From the Air

The Radio School of the Bible of the Moody Bible Institute is putting on new courses on the air, beginning January 11. The new allocation WMBI—277.6 meters, 1080 kilocycles and a cleared channel—is putting enthusiasm into the radio ministry of the Institute. Many commendations of the clear reception and extended range are being received.

The new courses are practical and carry much interest for Bible students. Dr. H. Framer Smith, whose "Bible Studies" course was keenly appreciated, will speak on the theme, "Through the Bible Book by Book," which may be heard each Friday afternoon at three o'clock. "Outlines of Testament History" will be given by Mrs. Ikelor McCord each Friday at 7 a. m. A new course in missions, especially suited to the needs of missionary study groups interested in the field will be presented by Rev. R. Riebe, who was for six years (Continued on Page Two)

Co-Operation in China of The Bible Basis

Plans to Affiliate Conservative Church Bodies of Presbyterians in China

The following has been received from Rev. Hugh W. White, D.D.:

The North China Synod of the Presbyterian Church met at Tsingtao, China, October 15, 1929. Two of the important actions taken are thus recorded on the minutes:

"It was moved and, after discussion, carried unanimously that the Synod appoint an organizing committee with instructions to issue a call for a meeting of the Presbyterian General Assembly; and to request the co-operation of Presbyteries not now enrolled in this Synod. The date of the meeting to be called was set for the last Wednesday of November, 1929, the 27th of the month, and the place was left to the discretion of the organizing committee.

"The Synod elected as chairman of this committee Dr. Chia Yu Ming and as members approved the following nominations from the nominating committee: Revs. Wu Hsin 'Chuen, Liu Fu 'Tien, Hwang Loa Tei, H. G. Romig, and Hugh W. White.

"It was moved and carried that a committee be appointed to take steps, looking to co-operation between the conservative elements of the several denominations.

"The following committee were elected, viz., Revs. White, Dodd, Wu Hsin 'Chuen, Liu Fu 'Tien, Chia Yu Ming, Ma Ching 'Tang, and the following were requested to co-operate on this committee, Revs. J. W. Lowrie, Jonathan Goforth, J. McCammon, W. C. McLaughlin, and Wang Heng Hsin."

It will thus be seen that in proposing co-operation, the disbanding of the denominations is not under consideration. The Synod believed that loyalty to denominational truth makes for loyalty to God, and that denominations or (Continued on Page Two)

Dr. Vance Has Fine Series

Nashville Pastor Holds Week's Services at Plaza Church in Charlotte

Dr. James I Vance, of the First Presbyterian Church, Nashville, Tenn., conducted a week's meeting at the Plaza Church in Charlotte, beginning on Sunday, December 30 and continuing through the following Friday night. Dr. Vance was with Dr. I. E. Wallace, the pastor at Plaza, in token of old friendship, the two families, the Vances and the Wallaces being associated in the career of King College, Bristol, Tenn., for many years.

The meeting at the Plaza was under the auspices of the Builders' Bible Class, the men's organization which meets with the Sunday School each Sabbath, and which has grown from a dozen to 150 in membership in the last few months. Paul Jackson is president, and is pushing the interests of the class. He is heartily supported by the men.

While the flu epidemic hindered the attendance in a stubborn fashion, yet the crowds were fine, the church usually being comfortably filled. Dr. Vance expressed himself as greatly pleased with the co-operation of the congregation, and felt justified in taking this portion of his holiday season (Continued on Page Two)

New Year's Opening of Queens

Girls' College Begins Work After Holidays, Not Fearing the Flu Epidemic

On January 3 Queens College opened her doors for the continuation of work in the session of 1928-29. There were only a few students who were not present at the first class, these limited few being detained because of illness either of themselves or of members of their family.

Everything started off well, and the classes are being met regularly without any interference on account of sickness. There has not been a single case of flu in the institution so far, and the authorities are taking every precaution to prevent the spread of the disease. In case there should be any outbreak, it will be dealt with in a very scientific way, and no pains or means will be spared to stamp it out. The President of the College is in daily conference with the College physician who watches carefully every student with the slightest indisposition and makes a full report on her case. A trained nurse is in charge of the Infirmary, and other quarters have been provided for the isolation of contagious (Continued on Page Two)

Statesville Forms Evangelistic Club

The Stephens Campaign Results in a Follow-up Movement Among the Men

In order to carry on the evangelistic work which was started in the recent six weeks' campaign of the George T. Stephens evangelistic party, 200 men of Statesville, N. C., including business and professional men, mechanics and laborers, met at the First A. R. P. Church, and organized an evangelistic club on January 3.

J. B. Roach, mayor of Statesville, was the unanimous choice for president of the organization, which is interdenominational and is to be known as the George T. Stephens Evangelistic Club.

The other officers elected were: F. H. Wall, vice-president; Albert Cooper, secretary; H. L. Newbold, treasurer; C. H. Turner, chairman boys' and young men's work; A. J. Salley, chairman music committee; R. C. Bunch, chairman pocket Testament league; J. O. Lee, chairman shop work; Dallas Pitts, chairman business men's prayer meeting; J. G. Shelton, chairman spiritual growth department, and W. M. Moore, publicity.

Calling attention to the need for laymen organizing for evangelistic service, Mr. Stephens, who was present, asserted that 75 per cent of the manhood of America—over 20,000,000 men (Continued on Page Two)

Dr. Fosdick's New Church Burned

Riverside Baptist Church Ravaged by Flames December 21

The Riverside Baptist Church of New York was subjected to a disastrous fire on the night of December 22. The building is under construction, and was filled with scaffolding preparatory to the decoration of the interior of this magnificent building. The church with its lofty tower is built of stone and steel, but the scaffolding erected for the construction was ignited in some way, and the heat greatly marred the beautiful building, so that many of the costly arches, built of limestone will have to be replaced. The insurance will probably cover the loss. Eye witnesses were awed by the beautiful sight of the conflagration.

Los Angeles Bible Institute in Crisis

California School Asks Resignation of Dean.—Dr. Morgan Also Resigns

The Los Angeles papers and the Associated Press report that the majority of the Board of the Los Angeles Bible Institute have requested the resignation as dean of Dr. J. M. MacInnis, and the report also states that Dr. Campbell Morgan, Dr. Ralph Atkinson and Keith Brooks and four members of the board of the Institute follow this request with their resignations.

Dr. MacInnis last year published a book entitled, "Peter the Fisherman-Philosopher," which was immediately attacked by the extreme fundamentalists who charged that it leaned to modernism. Some went so far as to charge that it was infidel in its teachings. The book was submitted to a committee ap- (Continued on Page Two) plans of the Foundation may be secured. All matters relating to the making of wills and negotiating matters of finance should be taken up with the President at Charlotte, N. C. Those who are interested in remembering the causes of our Church in their wills should investigate the Presbyterian Foundation.

There is not a cause in the Church that is not suffering for want of funds, and yet our people have what they want when they want it. The lack of support is disloyalty to Him. Last year we were short over a million dollars of the total minimum needs of our Causes. As the same time our people have the money and are spending it on themselves. Christ said: "Put the interests of the Kingdom first and all these things shall be added unto you."—Matt. 6:35. The wrong attitude towards property creates a spiritual vacuum and our age is suffering from it. What will be your answer to this appeal to heed the voice of your Lord?

LOS ANGELES BIBLE INSTITUTE IN CRISIS

pointed by the board of management which reported that there was no trace of anything of the kind charged and put on record their convictions that Dr. MacInnis was absolutely loyal to the fundamentals of the Christian faith. But because of the orthodoxy of Dr. MacInnis had been attacked, the board asked for his resignation in order to guard the school. This led Dr. Campbell Morgan to immediately offer his resignation. He will return to his former work of Bible addresses throughout the country.

The following statement has been issued for publication by Dr. Morgan. "I have handed in my resignation from the Faculty of the Bible Institute of Los Angeles, to take effect on December 31 of this year.

"My action has been caused by the fact that my friend, the Rev. John Murdock MacInnis, D.D., Dean of the Institute, has placed his resignation in the hands of the Board.

"The reason for his doing so is briefly as follows: Last year he published a book entitled 'Peter, the Fisherman Philosopher.' This book has been charged with infidelity to the evangelical doctrines of our Faith, and a tendency to what is called 'Modernism.' Those appointed to investigate this matter have declared that there is no trace of anything of the kind in the book, and have put on record their conviction that Dr. MacInnis is absolutely loyal to the fundamental things of the Faith.

"Notwithstanding this fact, by a majority vote they have taken the position that because the attack has cast suspicion upon the Institute it would be in the interest thereof that Dr. MacInnis' resignation should be accepted.

"Thus the Board virtually says: This man is not guilty, but because some people think he is, he must be sacrificed, in the supposed interest of an institution.

"Those who know me will know that I could not continue to work in relation with a Board capable of such an unjust and cruel practice of expediency.

"I return, therefore, to my work on independent lines, as I did it before coming to Los Angeles.

"G. Campbell Morgan."

Glendale, Calif.

Dr. Campbell Morgan will be taking the pulpit of Calvary Presbyterian Church, San Francisco, from February 1 to May 31, 1929, while the minister, Dr. Van Nuys, is taking an extended tour in the Far East.

—are clean outside any church. There are 33,000 pastorless churches in the United States. "What are you going to do about it? The ministers can't do it. God has called you laymen to do it," said the evangelist, adding that the purpose and object of the proposed organization is to win men to the Lord Jesus Christ, and then enlist them in Christianity. Mr. Stephens mentioned Mr. Marshall Mott, of Winston-Salem, now engaged in evangelistic work exclusively, who was led to embrace Christianity through the agency of a laymen's evangelistic organization.

Mr. Stephens explained that there are different departments of an evangelistic club, including (1) Gospel teams; (2) Spiritual growth—family prayer, tithing and Bible study; (3) Pocket Testament League department; and (4) Shop meeting department.

Following the evangelist's remarks, the meeting was thrown open for comments on the proposed organization, and there was unanimous opinion expressed that the club should be organized.

a Union of the churches are responsible for 65 charges reaching self support during the past year alone, while 32 additional charges have by normal growth and the prosperity of the country also gone off the Home Mission Fund.

Within the last two years 285 new fields have been opened by the Home Mission Board with an average of between three and four preaching points in each. It will be seen, therefore, that The United Church of Canada has occupied new Home Mission territory within two years at more than 1,000 points in Canada.

The Board of Home Missions expends more than one and one-quarter millions of dollars annually.

groupings which have borne testimony in the past, even with blood, will find the truest unity by strengthening the ties which have bound them together in the Lord, and bringing these loyal elements of believers into a federated movement on the basis of truths common to all who accept the whole Word.

A heart-felt longing for such unity has long been evident, and the harmony, enthusiasm, faith, of the delegates to this Synod, especially the Chinese, indicate that it is of the Lord.

But the Committee feel that we tread on holy ground, and would not go forward until the Lord shows us how to accomplish the first three days of the journey. "In studying the lines of co-operative work to be undertaken, the doctrinal basis for unity, the principles which should underlie the movement, the organizations, groups, or individuals, who should take part, the forming of an interdenominational committee, or committees, we feel that no steps should be taken until the mind of the Spirit is clearly recognized.

It is requested that all who are interested will lay this matter before the Lord in prayer meetings, in mission conferences, and in the closet. As a volume of united prayer goes up, we may expect the Divine to take the lead.

Yours in the Lord,
North China Synod Committee on Co-operation.

DR. FOSDICK'S NEW CHURCH BURNED

the noted Baptist pastor and professor of Union Seminary, New York. The building has been in process of erection for over a year, and it was hoped that it would be occupied in about six months. It cost about $4,000,000, much of which sum was contributed by John D. Rockefeller, Jr., who is a member of the congregation, and a great admirer of Dr. Fosdick.

While the church is a tremendous structure, it is strictly a church, and not an institutional building such as the great Methodist Church being built by Dr. Christian Reisner in another section of New York.

DEVOTIONAL

MAKING PERMANENT INVESTMENTS

Our Church has more than a thousand of its choice men and women on the firing line in the home and foreign fields; people who have considered that the wisest investment they could make, that would be safe and enduring, was the investment of life. Consider Edgar Tufts, who invested his life at Banner Elk, N. C., and who, though dead, yet speaks through the permanent ministry established there of teaching, preaching and healing. Consider the Lapsleys, Morrison and Sheppard, and others who went out, not knowing whither they went, but believing that God needed their lives.

Consider George W. Watts, C. E. Graham, James Sprunt, John J. Eagan, and hundreds of others, who, believing that Kingdom promotion was a worthy investment during this life, have now gone to be in His presence and join the investment that they have laid up in heaven by leaving their money at work after death.

Queens College is very grateful to God for the kind providence which has been over it during the past few weeks of anxiety and interruption. She hopes to end this session which so far has been marked with success, as the most successful one in her history.

Founders Day will be observed on January 19, and a most interesting program has been prepared. The school will recess from work for the entire day, and both faculty and students will take part in the celebration of the founding of this Institution.

for this meeting. He declared his strong impression with the possibilities of the Plaza field, and was particularly pleased with the interest of the children who could go to church thus in the school holidays.

Nearly all the Presbyterian ministers of the city and community came to the services at least once, some often and those of other denominations also were often present. Also the people of all sections of the city of all the churches availed themselves of the privilege of hearing this distinguished and powerful preacher. All were profoundly interested in the pure gospel sermons, presented in the strong, yet appealing style. The Newells Church was represented by a large group one evening, and by request sang a special chorus number.

The music was under the charge of Mack Cathey, assisted by Miss Ruby Worrell, both workers in the Second Church of this city. There were also several solos and quartets by some of Charlotte's outstanding choir singers.

Dr. Vance not only preached the simple gospel, with no modernistic variations, just the plain New Testament truth, but made his appeal for decisions with weight and success. In presenting opportunities for decision, he used a card with the following questions on it, which were to be signed by the members of the audience as they felt led to do so:

1. Accepting Christ as my Savior, it is my purpose to strive to follow Him.
2. I was once a church member, but have lapsed. I want to renew my membership on reaffirmation.
3. As a member of the church, it is my earnest purpose henceforth to be more faithful to my Savior.
4. I want my Church Letter gotten from _____ Church, at _____ and placed in _____ Church.
5. I am concerned about my soul and ask for the prayers of Christ's people.

About 154 of these cards were signed. It is hoped that at least a dozen will unite with the church, as a result of the meeting, though the impetus given to the work, and the quickening of Christians in their faith and life will be an enduring feature. The pastor and his session feel grateful to God, and hereby express their appreciation to Dr. Vance for his services, and to all who made the meeting a success by their co-operation and prayers.

Look carefully into your own investment, remembering that you can set your treasure on ahead. Study the Presbyterian Foundation as a most constructive method of leaving behind a working capital that will continue to produce results for Kingdom promotion.

SETTING A GOAL

It is well that at the beginning of the period of renewed activity we set ourselves a definite aim, and that all of us strive to attain this aim.

"He who aims at nothing is apt to fail." The ship that has no definite port will waste and lose its energy. The same is true of the church. Let us set ourselves the following aim:

Our Aim: 100 per cent attendance the services and meetings of our church and its various organizations and 10 per cent. increase in the membership the church and all its societies.

If the individual church member would know and realize how much depends upon the individual member; what an important part each member has in the church that the success of the church and its societies rests entirely upon the regularity and promptness, loyalty and enthusiasm of the individual member, greater effort and sacrifices would be made for the church, by the individual member.

A body cannot function properly if each of the members of the body does not fulfill its entire duty and work in harmony with the other members of the body. The church cannot grow, outwardly in number and inwardly in the grace and spirit of God, if not all the members are conscious of their full duty and their obligations and are working in harmony with united efforts, ardor and enthusiasm.

God has placed open doors before us, is giving us wonderful opportunities. Are we grasping the same? Are we bringing in the sheaves? Let each and every member ask himself the question: Am I fulfilling my duties and obligations towards my Father in heaven and towards the church? We pray: Our Father work in heaven. Do we realize that calling God our Father, that we call ourselves His children? Are we children of God? Are we doing His will? If we are children of our Father in heaven we must do His will. His business must be our business. We must say as Jesus did: "Wist ye not, that I must be about my Father's business?"

HOLDING THE ROPES

The year 1929 is to be known as "Stewardship Year." Stewardship provides the basis for the operation of our great mission task here at home and beyond local bounds, enlisting life, time, money behind this great objective.

The responsibility of each one to carry his part of the work of this undertaking must never be forgotten. Whenever becomes necessary for any organized group of society to send any of its number on a difficult, strenuous or hazardous mission, the group takes the precaution to insure a sound rope, and to hold it steadily. Extra precaution is thrown around the miner, the air pilot and the deep sea diver. The Church of Christ in carrying out His World Program, finds it necessary to send out many of its number into the "dark spots" of the world. These missionaries of the Church are the Agents of the Church. They are under conditions that demand the best. This is true of our HOME as well as FOREIGN representatives.

It is hardly short of criminal neglect for any member of the group responsible for holding the rope, to treat lightly responsibility, or fail to do his full part. What would be said of the seamen who ignore the signals of the divers they are down? Suppose half the crew should quit work and refuse the call for help? Unthinkable! But the Church is guilty of this neglect towards its mission force at home and abroad. They are for help; they plead for better hospitals and working equipment. YOU a member of the Church! You are agents of yours, and you can ignore their signals, or leave it all to others. Last year there were distress for more than $500,000 more than the Church gave for their support. What are you going to do about it?

SYNOD'S PUBLICITY COMMITTEE

As our readers doubtless know, the Synod of North Carolina at its recent meeting last fall, not only repeated its endorsement of the Presbyterian Standard as its official organ, but took steps to compensate the paper for the publicity it has given the work of Synod for many years.

The Synod's Work Committee appointed a sub-committee to consider the interests of the Standard in a practical way. That Committee consisted of Rev. R. A. White, D.D., Rev. C. R. Nisbet, D.D., Rev. E. E. Gillespie, D.D., ex officio; and elder W. H. Belk. They met in Charlotte, January 4 and devoted the morning to the interests of the paper. All were present, except Mr. Belk, who was absent from the city, but who is deeply interested in the Standard.

In November the Synod's Work Committee met in Greensboro and voted to underwrite an appropriation of $3,600 to the paper.

This sub-committee took steps at this time to have in each issue a Synod's page and to send to each minister of the Synod a free copy.

This practical proof of its endorsement we greatly appreciate, and it will be our aim to give value for value received. That the paper has been of practical value to the Synod's work we have the testimony of workers in the home fields.

Rev. A. W. Crawford, when Superintendent of Home Missions, more than once on the floor of Synod said that whatever success he had had in his work was largely due to the support of the Standard, as he always had the right of way in its columns.

This Synod is the only Synod in the South that has its own Synodical organ, and this Synod has for years led the other Synods in its home Work.

This sub-committee calls upon the pastors to show their loyalty by sustaining them in their efforts to place this paper upon a sound basis in order that it may do even more effective work for the Synod.

In order to make this organ of more practical value to the Synod, it is necessary for pastors to seek to place it in every home, so that the workers in the field may reach every member of the churches of the Synod.

THE STATE PRISON AN ASSET

The word "penitentiary" carries with it the idea of repentance, though it seldom by its roots justifies its name.

No matter what the results may be, this should always be kept in mind, even if the present age seems not to run true to the idea of reform. Whatever be the cause we know of, but it is evident that the young of this day, by the opinion of optimists to the contrary notwithstanding, are worse than any preceding period, or else they are more open in their sins.

Experience has shown that whatever reformation the State is to expect, must be among the youthful criminals, taken before they become confirmed in crime. The chief obstacle heretofore has been that the association in a prison with older men has neutralized any improvement begun.

Mr. George Pou, the present Superintendent of the State prison, seems to be working along formation of character. Instead of herding the young men with the hardened criminals, so that in time they may graduate in crime, he has improved upon the old methods. He has changed this practice, and now he is seeking to use the Polk farm near Raleigh, and has named it the Juvenile prison farm.

All white prisoners under 20 years of age will be sent to this farm, where every effort will be made to reshape their lives and make them an asset to the State instead of a liability. We have seen in the papers that Governor-elect Gardner is thinking of appointing a new man for this work.

We sincerely hope that he will reappoint Mr. Pou on the ground of merit. A man who can run the prison farm and show a profit, when other states are suffering a loss, deserves to be retained. Add to this record his efforts to salvage young criminals, then his reappointment would seem to be inevitable.

The Uplift, the able magazine of the Jackson Training School, in urging the reappointment of Mr. Pou, and discussing this plan of segregating the young criminals has this to say:

"With the youthful prisoners segregated and and these deteriorating influences removed some definite attempt at salvaging the human wreckage before it is entirely gone is possible. We are told that special class work and instruction will be given the young prisoners during hours which will not conflict with their work and that every effort will be made to straighten their lives and to fit them for earning an honest living after they are dismissed."

OUR PUBLICATION WORK—HOW FAR RESPONSIBLE?

The Church does not deal in cotton nor food stuffs, but every Church does have a publication work, because books are great aids to develop men and build up character, yet only such books are suitable as will help men.

This is the reason why Presbyteries watch so closely the character of the books sold by our Publication Committee. There is no more subtle way by which poison can be diffused through the Church than by means of its literature.

A few years ago, there were protests made by some of our Presbyteries against our Committee advertising the writings of Dr. Fosdick.

Many of his books are fine, written in an attractive style, but here and there are to be found sentences opposed to the Bible or subversive of the faith of our fathers.

There were two reasons for this protest, one being that we should not recognize him as the teacher of religious truth, thus placing our imprimatur on him as a teacher; and the other was that we could never know when he would spread his poison.

At that time there were some of our men who delight in getting as near the line of danger as possible protested against such narrowness, claiming that it presented the Presbyterian Church in the wrong light.

The Methodist Church is charged by some of its own members as being more tolerant of doctrinal error than any other denomination. Yet even they are becoming aroused to this danger from this charming writer.

Recently there was published in the Epworth Herald, the official organ of the Young People's organization, an article by Dr. Fosdick. The Methodist ministers of Philadelphia and vicinity passed a resolution protesting against the degree of approval of Dr. Fosdick as a writer for young people implied in the appearance of this articles. "Upon the article named," the resolution read:

"We have no personal animosity to Dr. Fosdick, but we are not only aware of our right, but are impressed with our solemn duty to protect the youth of our Church from the loss of their precious faith in Christ."

"We have no special criticism, but upon his admission to the paper under any caption we have definite criticism."

This is good doctrine. Those who sell books in the name of our Church should exercise the same care that each Presbytery does on admitting men to the ministry. They are to teach our people and they must be teachers of sound views, else, notwithstanding the care of Presbyteries, our people may ignorantly imbibe the most dangerous doctrine, thus neutralizing the teaching of the soundest pulpits.

NEW BOOKS FROM OUR OWN MEN

Recently our ministers have come to the front in the writing of books.

Dr. Sam Glasgow who has been lecturing on the General Epistles at the various Young People's Conferences, has issued these lectures in the shape of a real volume.

Then Dr. Morris has published a new book on Revelation that we noticed in a recent issue of the Standard.

Dr. James I. Vance, a most prolific writer, if we may judge from the many volumes from his pen, has published another book, "This Dreamer."

We all know the charming style of which he is master. In this book he is at his best, and charms his readers by his brilliant fancies, musical sentences, and telling statements.

Dr. Wm. Dobyns also joins these "high brow" authors with his contribution, under the title, "The Book in the Light of its Books."

Dr. Henry Sweets has a charming introduction, which seems a work of supererogation, because Dr. Dobyns needs no introduction to a Presbyterian audience.

In reviewing anything from the pen of Dr. Dobyns we are always at a conscious disadvantage, being tempted to let our affection run away with our judgment.

We were together once co-editors of the St. Louis Presbyterian, when it was published in Columbia, Missouri. Since then we have loved each other, though he claims that we have more than once "skinned" him.

In view of our past relations, we fear to judge any of his writings, and we shall therefore not review this book, according to the regular custom of reviewers.

Probably it would be safer to follow the example of Sidney Smith, who said that he never read a book before reviewing it, lest his judgment might be biased.

On our general knowledge of the man, we would endorse and recommend anything from his pen, because there is no man we know who has a wider or more devout knowledge of the Bible than he, or who can expound it with more simplicity and unction.

Dr. Glasgow is a younger man, but he is a natural teacher of the Old Book, sound to the core, and "able to teach others also."

As "good wine needs no bush," so does Dr. Vance need no praise.

He is a past-master of the epigrammatic style, both in speaking and writing, and in this book he teaches great lessons in a most attractive manner.

We are proud to claim these three men as our own, and commend these books to our readers.

"RIVERSIDE"—A HISTORICAL SKETCH OF KIANGYIN STATION CHINA

This is the title of a very attractive booklet prepared by Rev. Dr. Lacy L. Little.

Ordinarily such sketches are read from a sense of duty to the cause. They are dry enough to cause spontaneous combustion, and consist of events in chronological order, after the style of a school girl's diary.

Our readers will find this sketch an exception—Dr. Little has arranged his material in a most attractive way.

We know from experience that few can begin the reading without finishing. It gives a picture of the beginning of the work and proves that true heroism is to be found in an obscure mission field as well as amid the booming of cannon or the shrieking of shells.

Dr. Egbert Smith has written a model introduction. We hope that this booklet may have many readers. Dr. Little may be addressed, 92 South Bay, Charleston, S. C.

BROKEN THINGS

A Sacramental Sermon

Rev. W. C. Alexander, D.D.

This is my body which is broken for you.—1 Cor. 11:24. These are touching words. They are a part of the Apostles' story of the institution of the Lord's Supper. They bring before us all the tragedy of the Cross, and we see the pierced hands and feet and the riven side of our Lord, and we think of the devoted young life thus broken and brought to an end. Of course, the broken bread in the Savior's hand as He utters these words, only represents the Lord's broken body. But apart from the great central truth of redemption embodied in these words, their pathos for us is in the fact that they are the symbol of the broken things of human life. For human life is so full of broken things.

One of childhood's first experiences is that of the broken toy. James Whitcomb Riley said all the tragedy of human life is a little girl's broken doll.

Then, as we grow older, here comes the breaking of our plans. It was the patriarch Job who cried in bitter disappointment, "My purposes are broken off!" How bitter our pain when our plans are shattered and our whole future seems dark!

Then often health is broken and weakness and suffering are our portion. Then comes bereavement, sad and unexpected and the home is darkened and the tenderest ties of life are broken. And then there come to us even deeper sorrows, unseen to other eyes, and beyond our telling, when the heart is broken.

Oh, how easily things are broken! And when once broken how hard it is to mend them! Broken things mended never seem quite the same again.

Then let us think for a little while about these broken things of life.

God Uses Broken Things

1. Let us notice first of all that, though broken things seem ruined and useless, God has a way of using broken things. We think at once of the broken pieces of food twice gathered by our Lord's command after the feeding of the multitudes. He Himself created all that food for those famishing folk, and yet He was careful that His disciples should gather and save the fragments. It makes us think of how the Lord in the economy of the universe is constantly using the broken things. The scientists tell us that in the vast work of Providence not a fractured fragment, not an atom of anything has ever been lost and that God with the utmost care uses every thing and so with the broken things of our lives; shall we be surprised to know that God uses them? He uses perfect gifts and perfect services no doubt, but it is a cheering thought that God puts a value on our broken things and that God uses our poor broken things. And that is what we should insure after all—to please Him, to glorify Him. And so when we are distressed because our things are broken, let us comfort ourselves with the thought that God uses broken things and that possibly He will use ours.

Some Things Never Used Until Broken

2. And then let us reflect that some things are never of real use until they are broken. "Bread corn is bruised"—that is, broken and ground in the mill—was an ancient proverb. It is not available for bread until it is crushed. This is true of the seed corn as well. For when the seed is sown in the earth the body of the grain is broken by the living germ within. And that is just what our Lord meant when He said "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone, but if it die it bringeth forth much fruit." It is the grain thus broken that yields fruit. It is thus of no use as seed until it is broken.

Or take the bread which came fresh, fragrant and perfect from our Lord's hands on Galilee; it could not be used for food by the multitude until it was broken and distributed. And so some of the most precious lives that have been like bread for the life of the world, had to be broken before they could fulfill the purpose of their Lord. There was Elizabeth Wallbridge. The world would never have had "The Dairyman's Daughter" if Elizabeth Wallbridge had not suffered and coughed her brief life away. And there was the Bedford Tinker whose three hundredth anniversary we this year celebrate. Think of his broken plans and broken family and broken life. With 12 years in Bedford jail, oh what a broken life was his! And yet it was the broken prison life of Bunyan which sent forth his immortal Pilgrim whose continual progress around the globe has been such a blessing.

And there was Elizabeth Payson Prentiss. What a ministry of comfort and cheer was hers; and yet it was her broken plans and broken family ties and broken health that followed her to tell perplexed and burdensome men and women about "Stepping Heavenward." And there was the broken life of David Brainerd, dying at 87 and that of Henry Martyn who was inspired to become a missionary by Brainerd's Invitation whose brief life ended on the lonely and unfriendly Euxine Sea—these broken lives inspired the great missionary movement of the Nineteenth Century, the mightiest enterprise of the Church of God. Thus, the bread corn must be broken if it is ever to satisfy the life of the world. Here then is a reason for so many broken things. They must be broken in order that they might become of use to the Lord.

The Sweetness is Often Revealed by Breaking

3. Then it is the breaking of some lives that reveals their sweetness. Some lives "like bruised herbs the sweetest are." As you walk through the meadows, and as you crush the unseen flowers underfoot, you are all at once aware of the fragrance that ascends like incense to refresh and to delight.

You never perceive the fragrance of the Citronalis until you crush it, or, it is like Mary's Alabaster Vase. The sweetness of its contents was never perceived until the box was broken. When it was broken, its fragrance filled the whole house; yes, it has filled the whole world. And so, by the breaking of the plans and fortunes and lives of God's people, the aroma of their characters has been revtaled. There is Samuel Rutherford. His very name is a synonym of saintliness, and is like precious ointment poured forth. But we would never have learned of the tenderness and Christ likeness and passionate devotion of "this little fair man of God" as he was affectionately called, from his controversial writings.

His "Lex-Rex" for example in defence of the scriptural character of the Scottish Kirk, was very far from being an exhibition of sanctified character. He was the proud pastor of Saint Andrews then. But political aspects in Scotland suddenly changed and Rutherford is dispossessed of his great pastorate. Like the great apostle in bonds, he is thrown into a black prison in the north of Scotland and which he calls "Christ's Palace in Aberdeen." As he lay there broken in fortune and health, all the true sweetness of the man's piety, all his passionate love for Christ are revealed, and "Rutherford's Letters" sent forth from that prison, is one of the most precious books of devotion in all the world. We hear him saying, when we shall come home to our Brother's fair Kingdom and when we shall first feel the weight of the eternal crown of glory, then shall all our pains and tears seem but as a step from a dungeon to a throne, and our little span of time-suffering not worthy of our first night's welcome home to heaven." The language he uses in expressing his burning love for the Lord Jesus Christ would seem strange and unnatural if we did not know that it was the effort of a loving heart to express a devotion that could not be rendered in words. It was the breaking of the life that shed forth the fragrance of his piety.

Broken Things Can Express Devotion

4. Then, broken things can at least serve to express devotion. "Why was this waste of the ointment made?" said the captious critics of our Lord. But it was not wasted if it was the expression of true devotion, and that breaking of the Alabaster box was a sacrifice of a sweet savor unto the Lord. That broken box was the measure of Mary's heart's devotion and there is nothing more precious in the Lord's sight than this.

Human devotion often finds its finest expression in broken things. They tell us that a Highland Chieftain was once in great danger of his life, and that a devoted clansman thrust his arm into a door and allowed it to be crushed until the pursuers of his master were baffled and his master was thus enabled to escape. That mangled arm was the true measure of that servant's devotion.

When imprisoned Covenanters suffered their feet to be broken and crushed in the persecutor's cruel, iron boot and were thus maimed for life, their broken limbs were the measure of their devotion to the gospel and its Lord.

We come near home. We look at the memorial tablet to the right of the pulpit in our Glen Leven church and we see three names there of those gallant young men who made the supreme sacrifice in the line of their duty in the World War. I think of them again and again, and I have not ceased to grieve that in the splendor of youth, and health and hope, they went away from us forever. But their broken lives are but the true measure of their devotion to their country and the civilization of the world, and well have we inscribed upon that tablet: "GREATER LOVE HATH NO MAN THAN THIS"

Such heroism indeed may not be ours it is true, but in a less striking but still a very real way our broken things may express our devotion to our Lord. When we yield our broken purposes to the Lord, for His sake, our submission is the proof of our devotion. A grand friend and classmate of mine, a brilliant speaker and scholar, had devoted all his talents to the work of the Lord in the Foreign Field. But just at the close of his senior year in the Seminary, when he was ready with high hopes and noble resolve to go forth for the world's evangelization then suddenly appeared symptoms of a dread disease which effectually prevented him from carrying out his cherished purpose. Yielding to the will of the Lord, for a number of years as his strength permitted, he devoted himself to work of the Lord in a narrower sphere in America, but not for long. Soon he heard his Master's call. But that broken purpose which he accepted so submissively, and that broken life truly measured his devotion to his Lord. If we live "as near the Lord," as we endure these broken things for His sake, then our broken plans and hopes, our "broken things" of whatever kind, will be the true measure of our devotion to Him "whose we are and whom we serve."

We have thus been thinking of our broken things, but how small, how insignificant they seem in the presence of Him who says, "This is my body broken for you. Well has Bishop Howe sung,

"And every cross seems light beneath
The shadow, Lord, of Thine."

He shows us how broken things are used of God. He shows that the breaking of our treasures is essential to their being used—that unless the bread be broken it cannot be for the life of the world. He reveals the sweetness and the preciousness of His love by His broken life for us, and the measure of His devotion to His work for us in His Cross and if by a living faith in Him we appreciate His broken body for our very life, we do not at all forget His propitiation because we also regard Him as our pattern as we think of "the broken things" of our lives. May we receive hope and courage under the shadow of His Cross today and as we receive His broken body by faith for the life of our souls, may He accept our broken things as an expression of our submission to His will and of our love for Him. And may we have the comfort of one who has written:

"But broken pitchers hearing light
Yet Gideon's host triumphant sang,
And through the stillness of the camp
Their shout of victory rang."
"A shpwrecks and but broken spars
All tossed upon an angry main,
Yet one of these enabled Paul Melita's coast to gain."

Presbyterian Church in the United States

The Work Goes Forward

Men's Hour, West Hanover Presbytery
Roanoke, Virginia

West Hanover Presbytery met in Stonewall Presbyterian Church, five miles north of Concord in Appomattox County, Virginia, the 9th of October. This Presbytery is composed very largely of rural churches and, owing to the busy harvesting season, few besides ministers were present and the attendance was below normal.

On Wednesday the 10th, the first hour of the afternoon service was given to Men's Work under direction of Mr. F. L. Temple, the Synod's Chairman, and a program presented which was received with marked interest by those present. Following the close of the hour the Rev. Dr. Stribling, pastor of Orange Presbyterian Church moved to extend to Mr. Temple the sincere appreciation of the entire Presbytery for his most interesting presentation of Men's Work. Other members of the Presbytery also declared their interest, and there was an expression of more than usual eagerness to see something definite and aggressive done to present this work to the local churches throughout the Presbytery.

We had a full hour from two to three o'clock. The first five minutes were used for devotional service, after which Mr. Temple took thirty minutes to present Men's Work, first mentioning the demand and necessity for organization, then gave general outline of the Assembly Plan. Mr. Naff followed him for twenty-five minutes giving his observations of the progress of the work over the territory in which he worked, and several concrete examples of definite work and achievements by men. Mr. Naff's part went a long way towards putting the program across in splendid manner.

Several pastors expressed their desire to have Mr. Temple come to their help in setting up the organization in their own congregations. Up to the present time very little has been done in this Presbytery through organized effort on the part of the men. Indications apparent, following Mr. Temple's program, would certainly lead to the conclusion that new impetus will be given this great department of our church's work in the very near future. Two organizations have existed in the Presbytery for some time, and several other churches are seriously contemplating Men's Work. There is a very fine lot of men in this Presbytery and great things are expected when they have definitely considered the Assembly's Plan and Programs.

The day at Stonewall was a most happy one and will long be remembered.

A Going Re-Organization

For more than ten years a Men's Club has existed, with varied efficiency and interest in the First Presbyterian Church at Pine Bluff, Ark. Its aim has been largely social. About four years ago an attempt was made to initiate a group plan, but this failed, partially because the leadership was chosen on the wrong basis, and partially because no adequate program was presented to the organization.

During the past summer, the pastor, in consultation with Dr. Purcell and Mr. L. A. Coulter, of Dallas, determined upon another attempt to reorganize, using the Assembly Plan in full. To this end a week in October was set, which time Mr. Coulter came to assist in the re-organization. Every step was planned with the utmost care and with earnest prayer. A supper for all the men, which Mr. Coulter spoke and three general officers were elected was the beginning. Immediately after this three officers, with Mr. Coulter and the Pastor, met and selected the five department heads, or vice-presidents. At a noon luncheon the next day this group of ten selected the fifteen group leaders. At a special supper the following evening these leaders met with the other officials and divided the men of the church between the groups, receiving final and careful instructions at all points of the work.

The Re-organization is a success, showing that a former organization grown stale and ineffective, can be made over according to Assembly's Plan. We believe that the secret of success, humanly speaking, lay in the basis of the choice of leadership. We sought out new material from the President on through. Of the twenty-three men comprising the Council, only four or five had previously been in positions of special leadership in the Church. Twelve of the men have been received in the church during the present pastorate of six and one-half years. In view of the fact that every one of these entered heartily upon his duties, the freshness of the leadership means much to the church.

"A broken Body on a cross,
A wound whence blood and water flow,
And every fettered child of sin Might full deliverance know."

"And in that feast of memory,
The broken bread, the poured out wine
In silent manner speak to us About the love Divine."

"How dear to God are broken things,
What power in His hand they gain!
Then trust Him with your broken hopes,
And bodies racked with pain."

DEPARTMENT OF SYNOD'S WORK

WHAT THE COMMITTEE ON PUBLICITY IS DOING

This committee was appointed by the Synod's Work Committee to take charge of all matters of publicity through the Presbyterian Standard and to carry out all instructions of Synod relating to this organ of that body. It will be of interest to our church people to know something about what this committee is doing. The thing has especially on its hands just now is the effort to get the churches to do their part in meeting the expenses of publicity carried on through the Standard. The Synod must have a medium through which it can reach the people and keep before them plans for the great work they are doing from time to time projecting. The Standard has for a long time been doing this at a loss and now we turn to the churches for help. Not for a private enterprise but for the paper which is published in their interests. The Work Committee directed that $3600.00 should be used to meet this expense for one year. We hope by that time to present some plan which will make unnecessary any further appeals for this kind of help. The appeals were first made to the churches through the pastors at a meeting of the committee last week a further appeal was planned by which the individual might be reached.

The committee also took up the question of consolidation of the Standard with the Presbyterian of the South. A committee from the Virginia Synod was appointed last fall for this purpose. Conference will be held with that committee at once to find out what proposals they may have to make. It may be deemed wise later on to bring out such a consolidation for the sake of economy and extension of the Lord's work.

At this time the committee completed arrangements for sending the Standard to every minister in the Synod under the charge. Each minister who is a subscriber will receive the paper free after the expiration of his subscription, there being of course no rebates. If the paper is to be the publicity organ of the Synod it is necessary for it to go to every minister of that body. The Standard in granting this in consideration of the financial help offered. Further, it has already opened a special column to be used by the Work Committee and that committee to have partial advisory control of the paper. Thus mutually helpful scheme is being worked out by which the usefulness both of the Synod and the paper may be greatly increased. In all of which we earnestly desire the co-operation of all our churches and people.

REPORT OF THE STEWARDSHIP COMMITTEE AT MAXTON, N. C.

The seventh annual report of the Stewardship Committee is hereby submitted to the Synod. Mr. J. B. Spillman, re-elected by Synod in Concord in 1928, tendered his resignation December 13, 1927, to take effect January 1, 1928. His resignation was accepted and Rev. E. E. Gillespie was elected by your Committee to fill out Mr. Spillman's unexpired term, when the action of Synod in appointing the office of Synodical Secretary of Stewardship with the office of Superintendent of Synodical Home Missions would automatically become effective April 1, 1928. The Chairman, by action of the Committee, sent a letter to Mr. Spillman expressing the Synod's deep appreciation of his faithful and efficient services as Stewardship Secretary. Endorsing the action of the Committee, God does hereby assure Mr. Spillman of its grateful recognition of his valuable work and of its recognition of his efficiency and fidelity in promoting the cause of Christian Stewardship during his term of office.

Assembly's Benevolences

It is gratifying to note that the sum of $2,732,530 was contributed to the Assembly's causes by the church at large during the last church year, an increase of $346,821 over the contributions of the previous year; but of this increase, $329,288 was for Foreign Missions. There was an increase to Assembly's Home Missions of $26,406 and to Training School of $1,686. There were decreases of $74 to Christian Education and Ministerial Relief, $49 to Publication and S. S. Work and $1,436 to the Bible Cause.

Synodical Benevolences

Of all Benevolent Causes our Synod contributed last year $896,040. An increase over the previous year of $91,091.

Our contributions to Assembly's causes, however show a decrease of $12,498, and an increase to Synodical Causes of $92,589.

The Synod contributed to local church support exclusive of miscellaneous gifts the sum of $1,734,656, an increase of $199,614 over the previous year. The grand total contributed for Benevolences and all other objects was $2,715,514, an increase over the previous year of $560,000. The per capita is $37.57, as against a per capita of previous year of 35.07.

The Every Member Canvass

The efficient service rendered the Every Member Canvass by the Presbyterian Secretaries, Rev. W. A. Gamble, Albermarle, Rev. Eugent Alexander of Concord, Rev. A. McLaurin of Fayetteville, Rev. J. H. Gruver of Fayetteville, Rev. W. J. Roach of Kings Mountain, Rev. J. McLean of Mecklenburg, Rev. R. E. McClure of Kings Mountain, Rev. J. R. McGregor of Winston-Salem and Rev. R. C. Clontz of Wilmington, cannot be too highly commended. They did fine team work in cooperation with regional secretaries, and pastors and officers of the several churches. Conferences for prayer and consecration were held in all Presbyteries prior to the Every Member Canvass. They were well attended. They were educational, inspirational, but most of all devotional and spiritual. The endeavor has been to place the whole task of raising the Budget upon a plane of worship.

The returns show the sum of $725,280 pledged for benevolences on our Budget of $824,219—an increase over the pledges of the previous year of $8,258. A detail comparative statement over a period of five years accompanies this report, showing contributions to Assembly's Synodical and Presbyterian causes and gifts to all other objects; statistics of the Synod and of the Every Member Canvass.

The Budget for 1929-1930

In determining the Synodical Budget for the Church year beginning April 1, 1929, your Committee has been guided: (1) By the recommendations of the Assembly relative to making up the Budget, (2) By the repeated action of Synod endorsing the ratio of sixty—forty relative to Assembly's and Local causes respectively, and (3) By the increased apportionment handed down by the General Assembly to our Synod and the need of all Local causes for additional funds.

The relative strength of the Presbyteries was most carefully considered in the distribution of the Synod's Budget among the Presbyteries.

Recommendations

1. That we acknowledge with grateful appreciation God's most gracious blessing upon the work of our church during the past year.

2. That the Synod and Presbyteries heartily endorse and loyally support the Budget as the best method of financing the Church, and that they faithfully maintain the integrity of the Budget and seek to raise it in full.

3. That the Benevolent Askings of the Synod, including Presbyterian Home Missions, for the Church Year 1929-1930 be $900,000, and that this amount be divided between the Assembly's and Local causes on the basis of sixty and forty percent. or $540,000 and $360,000 respectively.

4. That the Budget of $900,000 be distributed among the causes as follows:

I. ASSEMBLY:
Foreign Missions.....	31.8%	$286,200
Assembly's H. Missions.....	16.8%	151,200
Ch. Ed. & Min. Relief.....	8.1%	72,900
Pub. and S. S. Work.....	2.1%	18,900
Ass. Training School.....	.6%	5,400
Bible Cause.....	.6%	5,400
Total Assembly.....	60. %	$540,000
II. SYNODICAL
Synod's H. Missions.....	10. %	90,000
Orphan's Home.....	7.5%	67,500
Schools and Colleges.....	8.7%	78,300
Union Theo. Seminary.....	1.3%	11,700

Presbytery's H. Missions.....	12.5%	112,500
Total Synodical.....	40. %	$360,000

5. That in the future each Presbytery assume the responsibility of putting on the Every Member Canvass within its bounds and that we may have uniformity throughout the Synod, the following plan is suggested:

(a) That each Presbytery urge its churches to accept in full the benevolent askings sent down. (b) That each Presbytery secure the hearty co-operation of all church officers, Men-of-the-Church, Woman's Auxiliary, Young Peoples' Societies and Sunday Schools in making preparation for and putting on the E. M. C. MARCH 10, 1929. (c) That the week preceding the E. M. C. be devoted to prayer for God's blessing upon the campaign. That every church hold special services each night from Monday to Friday during this week. That a special program covering some particular part of our benevolent work be presented each night by some organization of the church and that every church make a special effort to accomplish three definite things:

1. A Subscription from EVERY MEMBER.
2. The Budget fully subscribed and paid.
3. Prompt Report to Presbyterian and Synodical Secretaries.

6. Since it is not by might nor by power nor by organization but by God's Holy Spirit that His work is accomplished, we would request the Moderator of each Presbytery to call a meeting of his Presbytery for the purpose of prayer for a deeper consecration of our selves and our possessions, and for God's guidance and blessing upon the E. M. C.

Respectfully submitted,
W. M. FAIRLY, Chairman.

NEWS FROM KOREA

Early in September we came back from our summer cabin on the Mt. Chidi, and got the children, Robert, Judith and Laura off to Pyengyang to the Foreign School, where 100 missionary children from Korea and China are studying. That left only young Mildred with us in the home at Soonchun. We have missed the children very much but are thankful they have such a good school to attend. We will enjoy having them home at the Christmas holidays. Ten children of our station are in this school at Pyengyang; and five on furlough; and two, the Preston's children, in college in America.

The Wilsons moved from Kwangju, where they lived for 20 years, to Soonchun to care for the new and enlarged Soonchun Leper Colony with 800 lepers, now one of the greatest and most helpful missionary institutions in the world. It is in a beautiful location on the Korean inland set near the main-road leading to Soonchun and can be reached by auto in 30 minutes from Soonchun. Dr. Wilson and Mr. Unger have charge of this, though Mr. Unger is on furlough.

My wife and I went by our car to Seoul by way of Taiku and Kyengju. At Taiku, where the North Presbyterians have a station, we attended the Presbyterian General Assembly, where 300 Korean preachers and elders were gathered together and some 25 foreign missionaries. All of the business was transacted by the Koreans, who held all the offices; and missionaries worked only in committees and did not speak on the floor. Kyengju is the ancient capital of Scylla Kingdom of 3000 years ago. The ancient ruins of great stone buildings and some stone monuments still standing tell of a great civilization in the past. Some of their monuments are massive. A beautifully laid road has been constructed connecting Taiku and Kyengju 60 miles away.

This year we have been very busy getting Korean helpers moved to new fields, opening up villages before un-reached, starting new groups of Christians, and installing new Korean pastors. We are calling for two more ordained Korean pastors. This will make ten in our Soonchun Presbytery. We are holding now our first month's Bible class for women with 20 in attendance. This is very encouraging, when we remember the ignorance of Korean women in the past, and how they are kept to their homes by work and custom. Our month's class for men will be held in January at which we hope to have 100 men to study in our large new Bible school building.

We have just built our first Bible school dormitory, where the men can sleep and after the men have gone the women can use it in their class. We are much in-

CHURCH NEWS

THE FORGOTTEN MAN

Of late years much has been written and said under the title that is at the beginning of this little tale. And, it is possible that much of what has been written is quite in line with the facts, and many a pathetic story has been sent forth, and many more might have been sent forth, and many more might have been sent forth of the man who having given his life to the ministering of the church, has been left in his old age and infirmity to struggle with pinching poverty, it not indeed with actual want.

But we know one retired minister whose people, DID NOT FORGET. A few days before Christmas this retired minister and his wife sat talking of other times, particularly of the past twelve Christmases, spent in Lumberton, how each Christmas the members of the congregation had brought good cheer, and loving words to the manse.

But now another minister and his family occupy the manse, and have a claim on their care and consideration. Will the minister of the past twelve and a half years be forgotten or neglected this year? NOT SO. For many were the good words, and good things which came to the house of the retired minister during the Christmas season.

And then, in the evening of New Year's Day, a number of the congregation thought of the old minister and drove over the 30 miles of good paved roads to his little home, to wish him and his devoted wife a Happy New Year, and so that their good wishes might in some measure come true, they carried with them, loving hearts, cheering words of affection, for the retired manse people, and also many tangible proofs of their love and affection, so that the old minister and his wife will not be likely to hear the growling of the wolf at the door for some time to come. For these good people brought their arms and baskets well filled with generous offerings of affection and good will, and stocked the pantry with hams, fruits, canned goods, groceries and a profusion of good things. It means much to the retired minister and his wife, and rejoices their hearts to know their people still love them and care for their comfort.

The fellowship of these good people warmed and cheered the hearts of the minister and his wife. It is good to know that the affection and care of the people for their retired minister is so great. We want to assure our good friends, those who came and those who were hindered, that their fellowship and good will, and their abundant kindness has done us much good.

Dr. and Mrs. G. E. Moorehouse.

Laurinburg, N. C.

PERSONAL

Dr. George E. Moorehouse, former pastor at Lumberton, N. C., is now located at Laurinburg, N. C., having given up regular pastoral work on account of his age and health. He is still preaching as occasion opens the way and will be glad to supply churches in the proximity of his home, even going some distance for a Sabbath or a number of Sabbaths. Dr. Moorehouse is a fine preacher and vacant churches will do well to communicate with him.—Ed.

Dr. and Mrs. T. W. Lingle, of Davidson, N. C., will sail from New York at the end of January for Alexandria, to spend the rest of the winter and the spring in Egypt, Palestine, Syria, Mesopotamia, Turkey, and Greece. Mrs. Lingle may then return to this country, while Dr. Lingle will spend a month or two in Italy and Sicily. He is expecting to be back about the end of August.

The many friends of Dr. C. C. Carson will be sorry to hear that he was taken sick during his meeting in Asheville, N. C., and has been advised by his physician to take a complete rest until the beginning of the new year. It is the hope of all his friends that by that time his health will be restored and he will be ready to continue his work as general evangelist of our denomination.

The tragic death of Mason E. Moore took place in an automobile accident on Dec. 21. Mr. Moore was the son of our missionaries, Rev. Dr. and Mrs. J. Wallace Moore, of Japan.

Mason as a young man of fine character and great promise and we know that our whole Church will remember the bereaved parents and the other members of the family in their prayers. At the time of his death Mason was a student in the Greenbrier Military School, Lewisburg, West Virginia.

NEW CHURCH AT SANFORD, N. C.

We clip the following from the Sanford Express: The members of the Sanford Presbyterian Church, together with many friends worshipped Sunday in their beautiful new church auditorium for the first time, although services had been held for several Sundays in the basement of the building. Rev. Robert Campbell Gilmore, D.D., pastor of the church, conducted the services, which included the administration of the Lord's supper. No formal opening services were held, but Dr. Gilmore spoke of the pleasure he and the congregation had in being able to use the pretty new edifice. The dedication with appropriate services will be held later. The new building is located on Hawkins Avenue on the site of the old one, which was destroyed by fire, December 23, 1927. The total cost including the organ, is approximately $55,000. L. M. Thompson, of this city, was the architect, and J. W. Stout and Company, of Sanford, were the contractors.

The church auditorium, which seats, including a rear gallery, 500 is most pleasing in appearance. The wood work, together with the pastor's desk and seats is of fumed oak. The walls are of English type art plaster, autumn color, and the side windows, stained English cathedral glass. Over the rear gallery is a large attractive rose window. In the rear of the rostrum, and elevated is the choir gallery with a panneling of solid fumed oak. Behind the church auditorium are the rooms for use of the Sunday School, which together with those in the basement number 22. This includes one large assembly room, and two smaller ones, and a kitchen thoroughly equipped.

The entire building is heated by steam and the lights are of the indirect type, which is pleasing in its effect. The pastor and congregation are receiving congratulations in being able to use the new building which is a handsome one and complete in every detail. The building committee was composed of W. H. Fitts, chairman; E. M. Underwood, J. R. Ingram, T. G. Gunn, R. E. Corbitt, and the finance committee was originally the late L. P. Wilkins, chairman; J. R. Jones, and Dr. L. M. McIver. Mr. Wilkins, who died October 9, did active and effective work in raising funds for the new building, and was deeply interested in the project. He was succeeded on the committee by his son, A. B. Wilkins.

A CORRECTION

Egbert W. Smith

In a recent leaflet on the Native Presbyterian Church in China, the statement was made that the United Church of Christ in China included all the 53 genuinely Chinese Presbyteries in China. Since this statement was printed I have learned that while there are 53 Presbyteries or District Associations in the United Church, there are four Presbyteries that still remain outside.

NORTH CAROLINA

Presbyterian Orphans' Home, Barium Springs

The pulpit of Little Joe's Church on Sunday morning, January 6, was filled by Rev. J. E. Flow, D.D., Superintendent of Home Missions in Concord Presbytery. Dr. Flow based his sermon on the 15th chapter of Luke, with special emphasis on the second verse. This was Dr. Flow's first visit to Barium and made a splendid impression upon both the old and the young. We are very fortunate during the sickness of our pastor, Rev. W. C. Brown, in having a number of our friends fill his pulpit, and we wish to take this opportunity to thank those who have served in this capacity, for their services. Mr. Brown continues to improve.

Maxton—Rev. B. F. Bedinger, D.D., assisted the pastor in the quarterly communion service, preaching for him Friday night and Sunday morning, January 4 and 6. Our people were delighted with Dr. Bedinger's preaching.

The contributions of the Maxton Church for Barium Springs, at Thanksgiving amounted to $129.09, and the contribution for Christian Education and Ministerial Relief at the Christmas White Gift Service was $40.00.

We are putting on a School of Missions beginning next Wednesday night, and hope to have the whole Church, in all its organizations, studying Dr. Smith's book, "The Desire of All Nations."

Presbyterian Orphans' Home, Barium Springs

The pulpit at Little Joe's Church was filled by Rev. R. A. White, D.D., of Mooresville, the last Sunday in the old year. Dr. White took as his subject, "Life's Problems," using as a text James 1:5. It was pointed out that we all have our problems. In many ways these problems are same in each life, each one thinking his problems the hardest. But in all cases God gives the solution for our special problems. Dr. White is much loved by the Barium family and we are always glad to have him with us.

We are glad to report that Rev. W. C. Brown, who has been confined to his bed for some time, is now better and we hope will be out in a few days.

Sharon—Rev. W. T. Smith, of Cornelius, N. C., preached at Sharon from November 18 to 25. Mr. Smith's preaching was of a high order, winning the hearts of the people, resulting in many reconsecrations and seven uniting with the church on profession of faith and two by letter. The pastor, Rev. C. H. Little, began his sixteenth year of service to these people on December 2. The last week in November the congregation gave pastor and family a very liberal pounding. On January 19 the pastor will sail on the S. S. Laurentic for the Holy Land.

Charlotte—The Mecklenburg Presbyterian Ministers elected new officers last week. Rev. C. H. Rowan was chosen as president, and Rev. P. W. Wilson, vice-president. Rev. S. B. Lyerly was re-elected secretary. Revs. C. W. Sommerville, S. B. McLean and E. A. Dillard were appointed a program committee. The program will be announced for the year.

At the meeting on January 6, the ministers were addressed by Rev. J. Kelly Unger, missionary to Korea on the work among the lepers. Mr. Unger again spoke to the ladies at the Second Church, in the afternoon. Dr. W. B. McIlwaine gave the ministers an interesting account of a recent visit to New York in which he preached at the Bronxville Church.

The union communion service was conducted at the Second Church on Sunday afternoon, and Rev. S. B. Lyerly preached a very helpful sermon. A good collection was taken for Ministerial Relief. An audience which comfortably filled the main auditorium attended this service representing the churches of the county.

Durham—Trinity Avenue Church raised $9,000 as a Thanksgiving offering to pay on the church debt. The balance of the debt will be carried in the building and loan. On December 16, Mr. Edward Rondthaler, Jr., of Winston-Salem arranged and presented before a large congregation a musical program in keeping with the spirit of Christmas.

Henderson—The First Church of this city has made its plans to begin at once the erection of a new Sunday school building at a cost of about $40,000. As soon as this structure is completed, so that it can be used for church purposes, it is planned to build at once a new church auditorium. The building committee consists of Mayor Irvine R. Watkins, J. C. Cooper, A. T. McNeny, R. C. Gary, Dr. T. S. Royster, Mrs. Goode Cheatham, Mrs. R. G. Kittrell and J. W. Back.

GEORGIA

Decatur—Columbia Theological Seminary—The students of Columbia Seminary returned to begin the work of the new year on the regular schedule, Wednesday, January 2. During the Holidays the Seminary suffered a great loss in the death of Mr. Seay Wildsmith, of the middle class, and of Mr. Hermon O. Marlowe, who would have been a member of the senior class, had he returned this year.

On Christmas Eve, while on the way to hold services in one of the schools of Birmingham, his home town, Mr. Wildsmith was struck by an automobile. His skull was fractured and he lay in an unconscious state until the following Thursday morning, when he passed away. Mr. Wildsmith was one of our choicest students. He won the esteem and love of every one on the campus at Columbia Seminary. Mr. Marlowe has been ill since the close of the session in the spring of 1928. He visited hospitals and specialists, seeking relief, and, after a lingering illness, his condition became serious and the family was notified some time ago that recovery was impossible. Mr. Marlowe passed away December 31st, and his remains were buried at his home, Conway, S. C., on the following day. Mr. Marlowe was a man of winning personality and was a popular favorite for two years on the campus. His loss is keenly felt by the members of his class who bear testimony to his many fine qualities as a man and as a friend.

The faculty set apart Tuesday, January 8th, for a special memorial service in the chapel. At this service, memorials of Miss Elizabeth A. Sweets, who passed away November 1st, and of these two young men, were read and appropriate memorial services held under direction of the faculty and student body.

Richard T. Gillespie, President.

KENTUCKY

Guerrant—We have enjoyed an unusually bountiful and happy Christmas at Highland Institution, in the mountains of Kentucky. Many churches, Auxiliaries, Christian Endeavor Societies, Sunday School classes and individual friends remembered us with donations of money, fruit, candy, nuts, toys and presents for the children and young people in our school and Home, and for our staff workers. On December 16, the pageant, "Prisoners of Hope," was presented in the school auditorium, and was both beautiful and effective. A Christmas tree with a treat, presents, and program of real merit, was given for the school just before the holidays, while on Christmas morning well filled stockings and a tree for the Home children and staff made the day a happy one for all. The only regret is that all who remembered us so generously could not have seen the radiant faces of our large family.

Our school opened on January 3, with a full attendance. New students applied for admission, but only two or three could be taken.

Cary R. Blain.

Guerrant, Ky.

TENNESSEE

Columbia—The First Church had a beautiful Christmas service on Sunday night, December 23. The pastor, Rev. J. Frank Ligon presided and the young people had entire charge of the program.

"The Old Minister's Christmas Candle" was impressively given by one young man acting the part of an old preacher and a young girl symbolizing his voice. The plea for the cause of "Ministerial Relief" was made by another young man, and four other took the collection which totaled $330.

The spirit of Christmas was emphasized by the addresses, music, and artistic decorations.

Farner—The students and children of the Lynn Bachman Memorial School and the Jonathan Waverly Bachman Memorial Home enjoyed a most pleasurable Christmas. Through the liberality of friends, Sunday Schools, Woman's Auxiliaries and Church, a sufficient supply of fruits, candies and nuts and a beautifully wrapped gift was made possible for each child. The children and workers are most grateful to God for every blessing and gift bestowed, and gratefully acknowledge same to Him and their friends.

Due to influenza in a rather severe form among the children, students and workers the beginning of the school session following the Christmas holidays has been delayed a few days.

WEST VIRGINIA

Charleston, First Church—After a few days of illness Miss Annie Campbell, the Church's officiating secretary, departed this life early Sunday morning December 9, 1928.

This news item is to call her death to the attention of her many friends throughout the bounds of the Southern Presbyterian Church. For she will be remembered by those who attended the 1922 Assembly at Charleston, W. Va., for the way she helped enter into that Assembly. And also she will be remembered by many ministers that have visited this Church on one errand and another, during her eight or more years as its secretary. This item would also express sympathy for Dr. Ernest Thompson and the members of the First Church by whom she was loved and to whom she was more than a mere secretary. For it will be a long time before her cheery welcome to those entering her office will be forgotten.

J. Blair Morton.

KENTUCKY

Bousseau—Mr. and Mrs. Wm. S. Smythe are now in charge of all work in connection with the Presbyterian Mission located here. All packages or communications should be addressed to them at this office.

VIRGINIA

East Hanover Presbytery, at a called meeting dissolved the pastoral relation between Rev. J. W. Lacy and the Emporia and Aberdour churches, and dismissed him to Granville Presbytery. It also dissolved the pastoral relation between Rev. W. S. Goltz and the Westminster Church of Richmond, and dismissed him to Fayetteville Presbytery. He takes charge of the church at Carthage, N. C. Presbytery gave Rev. Philip Nathans permission to accept a call from the Porter Street Church, Richmond, and arrangements were made for his installation as pastor.

Lucketts—On December 23, one member was received into Faith Chapel, as a part of the results of a meeting held here from December 9 to 19, in which Rev. J. A. Trostle, of Herndon did the preaching. His preaching was interesting and spiritual, and the congregations were good.

Mr. Trostle is now supplying the church at Charlottesville, and will continue doing so, until the coming of Rev. D. M. Chalmers, of Greensboro, N. C. The Sunday School at Faith Chapel held its Christmas entertainment on December 24, and it was large-attended. An excellent program was presented, and a collection of $13 was taken for Ministerial Relief. The committee which arranged the program consists of Mrs. F. W. Osborn, wife of the pastor, and Mrs. W. Luckett.

Norfolk Presbytery will meet in adjourned session at Hampton, 10 a. m., January 14.

Cleveland—Dr. Tilden Sherer, President of King College, preached a week for this congregation. While there were no professions of faith the people enjoyed his message greatly and much good was accomplished.

APPALACHIA

Asheville (N. C.) First Church—In connection with the Leadership Training School one diploma was given and several other teachers have only one or more units to take and they too will be prepared to do this important work. It is interesting to know that the adult department of his Sunday School is now about as large as the whole school was eight years ago.

Ristol (Va.) First Church—Enlarging the church it has begun and not before it was needed. The young People's department of the Sunday School has been meeting in the Y. M. C. A. building and girls have to be brought in for the church service almost every Sunday at the morning hour.

Hendersonville, N. C.—This church has recently experienced a real revival under the preaching of Rev. McKendree R. Long, of Statesville, N. C. Hundreds reconverted themselves, about fifty were converted and 23 have joined the Presbyterian church.

Wytheville, Va.—Dr. John Lee Allison is doing fine work as supply pastor of this church. He is now working in the manse and the people are receiving his sermons gladly.

Ristol (Va.) Central Church—The ladies of the auxiliary gave their pastor and his wife a delightful dinner on their 25th wedding anniversary. Dr. and Mrs. McIver are greatly loved by their people.

Hanson City, Tenn.—The Woman's Auxiliary members have finished their study in the Home Mission book, "Christ and the Country People." An all-meeting with a delicious lunch and with special music between every three chapters gave rest and a needed refreshment.

Waynesville, N. C.—A Leadership Training class has an advanced step in the forward movement of this church. Rev. S. R. Crockett is the pastor and is doing a fine work among this loyal people.

Franklin, N. C.—The Rev. Vernon A. Crawford, efficient minister of the Brevard Church, recently held a splendid meeting in the Franklin Church. Mr. Crawford's scriptural searching sermons made a strong appeal to the church members and his spiritual and religious invitations moved four to accept Christ and unite with the church. There was an increasing attendance and interest and the love and zeal of the membership were greatly increased.

Asheville (N. C.)—Ora Street—A well attended and inspiring meeting was conducted by Dr. Joseph R. Sevier, President of Fessenden College, Hendersonville, N. C. Mr. and Mrs. Roy Young led the music and the interest increased from day to day. Mr. Wilson, the new minister, has taken a splendid hold on the people and the work, and the friends of the church and the pastor are expecting a splendid growth.

Little Brick, Knoxville, Tenn.—This church, of which Rev. C. H. Lang is the successful pastor has given a splendid demonstration of brotherly co-operation. Rev. Carl Thomas, evangelist for the Holston M. E. South Conference did the preaching, Mr. Kenneth Dore, a member of a local Baptist Church led the singing and Miss Elma Abel was pianist and Miss Betty Pressly directed the junior choir. These last two were Presbyterians. It is not strange that a gracious revival followed and nineteen have already united with the church with more to follow.

Banner Elk, N. C.—Rev. John H. Grey, Jr., of Marion, Va., conducted a Life Work Conference for the students of Lees-McRae Institute the first of November. At the chapel service he spoke on the words, "I believe in Jesus Christ our Lord." At the evening hour the service was held in the church and the theme was, "For we are His workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them." Mr. Grey's visit was a delightful time of spiritual refreshing.

Leesburg and Providence, Tenn.—The Synod's representative had the pleasure of visiting these churches on the fourth Sunday in November. The Providence Church is one of the very old organizations and has had its ups and downs but it now seems to be steadily advancing under the efficient leadership of their esteemed pastor, Rev. W. C. Young. It was rather an unusual experience to be entertained in a home which has a bar in the sitting room. This house is an old tavern and was built in 1821, the bar was a part of the lobby and has been stone dry for many years.

FLORIDA

Sarasota—Rev. B. L. Bowman, after spending a year in Dr. White's Bible School, New York City, is now the pastor of the First Presbyterian Church here. This is a fine field for work and the many friends of Mr. Bowman trust that he is going to be greatly blessed in his efforts there.

WILLIAM BUTLER HARRISON

In the home-going of Rev. W. B. Harrison the Korean Mission has lost one of its most beloved pioneer members and our Church one of the most faithful and devoted of her foreign missionaries.

To Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Linton, the latter of whom as Charlotte Bell had known and loved Mr. Harrison in Korea from her childhood, we are indebted for the following sketch of his character and work:

"Rev. William Butler Harrison was born near Lebanon, Kentucky, September 13, 1866, of pious parents who dedicated him in his infancy to the Christian ministry.

"He was graduated from Central University in 1888. After teaching for two years he began his seminary work at Richmond, Kentucky, with a class that was at that time the beginning of Louisville Theological Seminary. The next two years he studied in Union Seminary at Hampden-Sidney, Virginia, and was graduated in 1894. He immediately applied and was appointed a missionary to China but was sent to Korea in 1896.

"He was married in 1898 to Miss Minnie Davis who died in 1903 of typhus fever contracted from a Korean woman whom she visited. In their home, under Mrs. Harrison's teaching, a young Korean servant was influenced to study for the ministry. This man is now one of the leading ministers in the Korean Church.

"In 1908 he was married to Miss Margaret Edmunds. They had two children, a daughter, Selina, who is a student at Flora MacDonald College and a son, Charles, who is at Davidson.

"Mr. Harrison's work was largely that of a pioneer. He had a part in buying property and putting up the first buildings in Chunju, Kunsan, and Mokpo. Before going as a missionary he took some medical training which he found useful in the early days when there were so few doctors.

"He was always interested in educational work. While they lived in Chunju he and Mrs. Harrison started a small school for boys. This school grew and is now the Consolidated High School for Boys in our Mission. At different times he had charge of the Boys' Schools in Mokpo and Kunsan.

"During 32 years Mr. Harrison served his Lord faithfully in Korea. To him his work was never arduous but a joy. Always he gave the best he had to the service of the Koreans. He saw the Korean Church in the territory allotted to our Mission grow from the actual opening of our work, when there was not a single church or church member, until today when twenty-two thousand Koreans gather each Sunday to worship God in over 500 meeting places. In this great work he had a full share.

"Some of Mr. Harrison's outstanding traits of character had a marked influence on the Korean Church. In a country where justice was never practiced or known, his high sense of justice had a telling effect. In his dealings with the Korean people and with new believers in the churches, he was always fair and just. Men whom he taught when they were young often spoke of the lessons in justice they learned from him.

"Another characteristic that left a lasting impression on missionaries and Koreans alike was his conscientiousness. When he gave himself to the Lord, he gave all. There was never an appointment that was too hard. The country churches, even the very small ones in most out-of-the-way places, could be certain that he would visit them according to schedule. When serving as Chairman of the Mission, or Chairman of the Federal Council of Missions in Korea, he fulfilled every obligation to the minutest detail.

"Very careful and deliberate in forming his opinions, he changed only when he had overwhelming evidence that he was wrong. When convinced of the correctness of an opposite view, he always gave in with good grace and entered wholeheartedly into the new plan. Surely this was a trait that not only the Koreans but we, his fellow missionaries, might profitably emulate.

"His last hours were happy and serene. A very close friend who saw him wrote, 'I never saw a man more radiant with joy than he was when we talked so intimately together. He told me he believed that he was as happy a man as there was in all the world, that he had never experienced a more precious nearness to Christ than had come to him in the past few weeks.'

"Mr. Harrison left a host of very dear friends in Korea. When he started home this last summer many Koreans went some distance with him on the train feeling that they would never see him again in this life. The Korean Presbytery sent a representative a whole day's journey across Korea to where he took boat to Japan to express the love and appreciation of the Korean Church for his long years of faithful and painstaking ministry to the Korean people."

On September 22, 1928, in Louisville, Kentucky, at the age of 62, he heard his beloved Master's call to "Come up higher."

"Servant of God, well done!
Rest from thy loved employ:
The battle fought, the victory won,
Enter thy Master's joy."

CHARLES ARCHIBALD LEWIS

Resolutions adopted by the Session of the First Presbyterian Church, Henderson, N. C.:

Whereas, Ruling Elder C. A. Lewis, having finished the work God called him to do in this life, passed on to his eternal reward, October 25, 1928, in the 67th year of his life, we, the Session of the First Presbyterian Church, Henderson, N. C., desire to record our tribute of love and respect.

Therefore be it resolved:

That while we feel our deep sense of loss in his service and fellowship, we bow in reverence to this Providence of God and humbly submit to this ruling of His will in taking from us our honored brother and fellow elder.

That we bear witness to his sterling qualities as an esteemed and leading citizen, faithful elder, and loyal member of our church which he loved and served so long and faithfully as deacon, then elder, and also as Bible class teacher and Sabbath School Superintendent.

That we express to his bereaved family and loved ones our deep sympathy, sharing with them our mutual loss and praying the God of all comfort to comfort and sustain them in their hour of sorrow.

That a copy of these resolutions be incorporated in the minutes of the Session, a copy be given to the family, and a copy be published in the Henderson Daily Dispatch and the Church papers.

Adopted by the Session, November 11, 1928.
A. T. McNeny, J. T. Marrow, Committee.

Serene I fold my hands and wait
Nor care for wind, nor tide nor sea.
I rave no more 'gainst time or fate,
For lo, my own shall come to me.

I stay my haste, I make delays,
For what avails this eager pace?
I stand amid the eternal ways,
And what is mine shall know my face.

Asleep, awake, by night or day
The friends I seek are seeking me;
No wind can drive my bark astray,
Nor change the tide of destiny.

What matter if I stand alone?
I wait with joy the coming years;
My heart shall reap when it has sown,
And gather up its fruit of tears.

The stars come nightly to the sky,
The tidal wave comes to the sea;
Nor time, nor space, nor deep, nor high,
Can keep my own away from me.

The waters know their own and draw
The brooks and springs in yonder heights;
So flows the good with equal law
Into the soul of pure delights.

John Burroughs.

Lack of knowledge is a spur to a great mind, but a ball and chain to a small mind.

Religion is not a Sunday suit that we put on, but daily food that becomes a part of us.

The star of hope never sets for the man who sits in heavenly places with Christ Jesus.

We cannot get away from our sinful selves, but we can draw nearer to a sinless Christ.

Lesson for January 20

CHRIST THE SAVIOR

Luke 2:11, 30-32; 15:3-7; John 3:14-17; 10:9-11, 14-16, 27-28; Acts 3:1-18; Romans 5:1-11; Phil. 2:5-11; 2 Tim. 1:9-10

We continue this week our study of some of the great Christian teachings. We began by considering God who is presented in the Scriptures as our Heavenly Father. Then last week we took up the matter of sin, which reigns in the hearts of us all, separates us from God, and brings sorrow and suffering into the world. It is proper therefore that we should consider this week the Bible teaching about Jesus, who saves us from our sins and restores us to fellowship with the Father.

Before we begin our discussion read over the passages assigned by our lesson committee. Make a note of anything that interests you about Christ the Savior. There are three questions in particular that raise themselves in our minds, which we expect to discuss below, and which you can appreciate more fully if you will seek first to answer them for yourselves. (1) What reason have we to believe that Jesus is a Savior? Who are our witnesses? Make a list of those who appear in our Scripture lesson and add others that come to your mind. (2) What does He save us from? (3) How does He save us? Answer each of these questions as above.

I. Who Are Our Witnesses?

Perhaps this is the first questions that we ought to consider. What reason have we for thinking that Jesus was a Savior, that He is a Savior? Why should we put confidence in Him? It is manifestly impossible to cite all the witnesses, but we note that they fall into three classes:

1. We have the witness of the prophets. These prophecies begin in the opening pages of Scripture. After Adam and Eve sinned by eating the forbidden fruit, God told them of the consequences of their act. There would be a continual warfare between Satan and the human race, man would suffer, but finally triumph (Gen. 3:15). And as the Prophets entered ever more fully into the mind of God they portrayed for their contemporaries more and more clearly the figure of Him through whom the expected salvation was to come. See for example Micah 5:4; Isaiah 9:6-7; 11:1-5; 53:5; Zachariah 9:9; 13:1.

And when at last the time drew near that the promised Savior was to come, the angel said to Joseph: "Thou shalt call his name Jesus; for it is he that shall save his people from their sins." Mt. 1:21. The angels that appeared to the Shepherds on that first Christmas eve said "there is born to you this day in the city of David a Savior who is Christ the Lord." Lk. 2:11. And Simeon who had waited long for the consolation of Israel when he saw the babe said, "Now lettest thou thy servant depart Lord, according to thy word in peace, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation, which thou hast prepared before the face of all peoples." Lk. 2:29-31. These prophecies are significant not only in that they predict Jesus' saving work, but in that they are reported by the generation that knew rescue as having been fulfilled in him.

2. We have the witness of Jesus Himself. Over and over again He stated that this was the real purpose of His mission. When for example the Pharisees complained because he sought out "publicans and sinners" and welcomed those that came unto him Jesus told them those three familiar little parables, the parable of the lost sheep the parable of the lost coin, the parable of the lost son. Lk. 15. On his way to Jerusalem He said plainly, I am come to seek and to save them that are lost. Lk. 19:10. And John tells us that he said: "I am the good shepherd . . . my sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me; and I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish and no one shall snatch them out of my hand. (Jn. 10:11, 27-28). Then on the night before He was crucified He said, "This is my blood . . . which is poured out for many unto remission of sins." Mt. 26:28 and also 20:28.

3. We have the witnesses of Jesus' contemporaries. Even His enemies were forced to bear witness to His power. As He hung on the cross they said: "He saved others; himself He cannot save." Mt. 27; 42. But the best witnesses are those men who walked with Him and talked with Him in Galilee, and who later risked their lives to spread His message. They had found salvation for themselves, and urged men to believe the Gospel and to share in good news and their experience. "Save yourselves from this crooked generation," that was the burden of the great sermon of Peter which started the church on its triumphal career (Acts 2:40). Paul after a time of service for the Master wrote to Timothy about God "who saved us and called us with a holy calling, not according to our works, but according to His own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before times eternal." 2 Tim. 1:8-9. And John after the first generation of Christians had gone on to their reward commented on His Master's words and drew on his own wide observation and experience when he said "For God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish but have eternal life."

4. We have the witness of all subsequent Christian generations. The number of Christians has grown from age to age. In every age there have been nominal Christians, who have no significant testimony to bear. But in every age too there have been Christians able to sing out of their own experience: "Amazing grace! How sweet the sound, That saved a wretch like me! I once was lost, but now am found,—was blind, but now I see." We have then abundant witnesses ready to testify that Jesus is indeed a Savior, but that raises the further question:

II. From What Does Jesus Save Us?

In other words what does it mean to be saved? What would you say if a little child, your own boy or girl, would ask you to explain what Jesus meant when He said, "I am come to seek and to save them that are lost," or what Paul meant when he said, "By grace are ye saved through faith?" Does salvation take place in this life or in the next life? If it includes both, as I suppose most of us would agree, which did Jesus and the Apostles emphasize most, the salvation which is available now, or the salvation which will be enjoyed later. Just what do we mean by salvation which is available now? Salvation from what? Does it include salvation from sin? If so, salvation from what sins? Does it include salvation from the grosser sins of life, drunkenness, immorality, theft, murder? Can the man who yields to these sins habitually be said to be saved? Can the man who gives way to them occasionally be said to be saved? Does the salvation which is available now include salvation from the more subtle sins of life? Can the man who gives way habitually, or even occasionally to his temper be said to be saved? What about the woman who nags constantly at her husband or her children? Is a man saved if he puts his own interests above the interests of his neighbors, if he lives chiefly for money, or pleasure, or power? Dr. Garrison in his recent book "Affirmative Religion" says "A young preacher of limited training who was telling of his experiences in a church in a little Western town and particularly of a certain cantankerous deacon who was harsh to his family, niggardly with his money, tricky in a bargain, quarrelsome in the church and without public spirit in the community, ended by saying, 'Still I think he is a saved man.'" Was the young preacher right? Dr. Garrison concludes, It is that sort of shallow talk about salvation that brings the very word into disrepute as though it were a mere vice of cant. Do you agree with Dr. Garrison? Does the salvation which is available now mean only salvation from sin? Does it include salvation from sorrow and anxiety and fear? If a man is weighed down by grief, disturbed by constant anxieties, dominated by his fears, can that man be said to be saved? What does it mean to be saved?

We shall try to answer at least some of the questions that we have raised. To put it briefly it seems to us that Jesus and His immediate disciples put their chief emphasis on the salvation which is now available, though of course it is to receive its final consummation in the future life, that salvation as they conceived it was a very comprehensive blessing, including salvation from ignorance, fear, sorrow, sin, and death.

1. From ignorance. Simeon said: Mine eyes have seen thy salvation, which thou hast prepared before the face of all peoples; a light for revelation to the Gentiles. Lk. 2:30. Jesus said, If ye abide in my word, then are ye truly my disciples; and ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free. Jn. 8:31. Of course Jesus does not free us from our ignorance about material things, or about all matters of intellectual concern. We shall always be dependent upon our scientists and our philosophers for many and varied regions of the truth. But he does bring us the spiritual truth that we need to know. Many can sympathize with that disciple who said to Jesus, Show us the Father and it sufficeth us. And Jesus' reply has met the deepest needs of our nature: He that hath seen me hath seen the Father. John 14:9.

2. From fear. Many lives are scourged by corroding anxieties and constant fears. But Jesus came to set us free. "Why are ye fearful?" He said to His disciples and to us, "O ye of little faith?" Mt. 8:26. Again, "Be not anxious for the morrow." Mt. 6:34. And on that night when He took final leave of them in the flesh: "Let not your heart be troubled: believe in God, believe also in me . . . Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth, give I unto you; let not your heart be troubled; neither let it be afraid." Jn. 14:1, 27. And the disciples did find the peace of which Jesus spoke. "Being justified by faith we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ, through whom also we have had our access by faith into this grace wherein we stand, and we rejoice in hope of the glory of God (Rom. 5:1) . . . In nothing be anxious; but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God. And the peace of God which passeth all understanding shall guard your hearts and your thoughts in Christ Jesus." Phil. 4:6-7. Paul wrote those words out of his own experience, and so did John when he wrote: "There is no fear in love, but perfect love casteth out fear . . . and he that feareth is not made perfect in love." 1 Jn. 4:18.

3. From sorrow. Jesus spent much of His time in saving the bodies of men from their physical ailments. A recent writer points out that Jesus was most generous in the use of this divine power, and rejoiced at the waves of healing virtue that went out from Him, and relieved the suffering bodies and souls of men. He does not say that we may work the same works that Jesus did, for He was a unique personality. Yet He thinks that the healing ministry of the church may be revived. Not that means will be dispensed with; but that a larger use of prayer and psychical means will be employed. Whether or not Dr. Cairns is correct it is certain that we cannot expect Jesus today to relieve us of all of our physical suffering. He Himself went to the cross, and many of His followers from the very beginning have been notable sufferers. But they found in their suffering a power which raised them above their sufferings. "Blessed are they that mourn," said Jesus, "for they shall be comforted." Mt. 5: Cf. also Jn. 16:33 "We rejoice in our tribulations," said Paul (Rom. 5:3), and followers of Jesus who had entered into their full heritage understand what he means. Says Stanley Jones: "In the midst of writing these pages I was talking to an aged saint. She had spent her life in the service of Christ. She was going blind. But in referring to it she said with a smile: I am willing to bear it and rejoice in it, if it is God's will, though it would be a little inconvenient! A little inconvenient . . . Again I ask what can you do with a religion like that? It overcomes life? Life belongs to it. But some of us belong to life. We knuckle under it, we echo it, we descend to its level, we belong to it. But those who belong to Christ, who is Life, find that life belongs to them. They conquer life, for they have been conquered by Christ."

4. From Sin. The church has been right in connecting the salvation which Jesus offers chiefly and predominantly with sin. For sin is the great enemy of the human race, and Jesus' chief mission was to seek and to save men and women lost in sin. But He used those words in connection with Zaccheus, referring not to some future life of blessedness that Zaccheus would enjoy, but to the fact that Zaccheus had turned away from his evil practices in this life and had promised to make amends, Lk. 19:1-10. Jesus saves us from our low ideals, from the dominance of worldly passions. The saved man, says Dr. Merrill, "is the man who is definitely enlisted in Christ's service, who has caught Christ's vision of the future of humanity, and has given his soul and his all to the realization of it, trusting in God for strength to make good . . . The meaning of 'being saved' is not the possession of a mystic experience, or a title deed to a mansion in the skies. Those are great possessions; they come most surely and fully to the Christian; indeed the Christian alone is sure of them; but the richest and deepest meaning of Christian salvation is fellowship with Christ in His mission, and the man who, whatever he believes about the doctrines of the Church, and whatever he expects when life is over, gives his life for Christ's sake to the organized enterprise of making the world over on Christ's plan is a saved man and a Christian in the best and truest sense." It is doubtful whether a man who is not saved in this sense here and now will ever be saved in a world still to come.

5. Finally Jesus saves us from death, physical death following the dissolution of the body, also spiritual death, the death of the soul, which is eternal separation from the presence of God. John 10:10, 28; Rom. 5:8-9 2 Tim. 1:10. There

All we have willed or hoped or dreamed of good shall exist;

Not its semblance but itself
The high that proved too high; the heroic for earth too hard,

The passion that left the ground to lose itself in the sky,

Are music sent up to God by the love and the bard;
Enough that He heard it once: we shall hear it by-and-by.

Salvation then as Jesus and His disciples conceived it is a salvation which begins now and which is consummated in heaven, it is deliverance from ignorance, anxiety, fear, suffering, sin and death. That raises the further question

III. How Does Jesus Save Us?

Jesus and the apostles agree that we are saved by faith. It is faith in God, faith in Jesus, faith in God through Jesus, that brings us a satisfactory knowledge of the Father, that delivers us from anxiety and fear that enables us to endure our sufferings and overcome our temptations, that enables us to live more and more in accordance with our ideals, that lifts us up out of petty and selfish vices of life, that brings us into that enduring fellowship with God which is the best guarantee of eternal life. Cf. J. 3:16; Rom. 5:1; 11 Tim. 1:8.

But what is faith? Suppose your little boy or girl, or your best friend, or a stranger on the streets would ask you what it means to believe on Jesus, or to have faith in Him? Does it mean that we must believe on Jesus or to have faith in Him? Does it mean that we must believe everything that the Bible says about Jesus in order to be saved, the virgin birth, the miracles, the atonement, the resurrection? Does it mean that we must believe in the inspiration of the Bible, its inerrancy? Is the man who has right ideas about Jesus saved, and the man who has wrong ideas about Jesus lost? Is the man who believes that Jesus is the Son of God and died for him on the cross, saved, if he persistently and deliberately lives an unchristian life? What did Jesus mean by faith?

One thing is certain, He did not demand that men have absolutely correct notions about His person. We do not minimize the importance of correct ideas about Jesus, and no doubt some of these ideas are essential. Nonetheless the faith which Jesus demanded during the days of His flesh, the faith which His apostles demanded, included a great deal more than belief in intellectual propositions, and many individuals came to share in His saving power who had false and inadequate notions about His person and work.

1. The Faith which Jesus demands includes trust in the love and mercy and grace of God, trust in His own willingness and power to save. It was this confidence in, this reliance upon God that He had in mind when he said, "Why are ye fearful? Have ye not yet faith?" Mk. 4:40. According to thy faith be it done unto thee. "If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed ye shall say unto this mountain, Remove hence to yonder place, and it shall remove, and nothing shall be impossible unto you. Matt. 17:20. Let not your hearts be troubled. Believe in God, believe also in me. Jn. 14:1. Above all it means trust in God's redeeming love as revealed on the cross. And that is a good deal more than a mere intellectual assent to the fact that Jesus did bear our sins in his body upon the tree. We may believe in God's promise intellectually and yet not lay hold of it, nor trust ourselves to His grace.

2. The faith which Jesus demands includes obedience to His will or acceptance of his way of life. The first lesson which He gave His disciples on the cross was this: If any man would come after me let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me. Mt. 16:2. And His apostles give us the same view of the matter. Compare for example Jn. 3:16 with 3:19; 2 Cor. 5:1, 17, 20; Heb. 11; 1 Peter 2:24; James 2:14. None of them knew anything of a faith that did not include acceptance of Jesus' way of living, a moral union with him, a dedication to His ideals, a consecration to the Father's will, a determination to seek first His Kingdom and His righteousness.

Jesus offers then to save us from the fears, the sorrows, the sins of life, to bring us into a satisfying and enduring relationship with the father. But if we are to have any share in this salvation we must have faith, i. e. we must trust God as our Father and Jesus as our Savior, we must accept His will for our lives.

MEN-OF-THE-CHURCH

An Encouraging Organization

Men-of-the-Waxahachie Presbyterian Church, Texas. Do you have Regular Meetings? When?

The third Thursday night of every other month, and the third Wednesday night of the other month. (We are trying this out). For supper, fellowship and carrying out program, we meet on the third Wednesday night at prayer meeting hour. Men-of-the-Church have charge and put on their regular program with the whole church invited.

Do you use working Groups? Yes. What are your methods of using them?

We try to stay as closely, as we understand it, to the plans outlined in the literature on Men's Work. We believe it gives a tried method and if we give it a faithful trial, we will stand the test. We shall make changes later if necessary. We are young, having had only one meeting. The second is to be on third Wednesday night, December 19th.

Do you use Monthly Programs? Yes. When? At each regular meeting.

Give two or three outstanding things men have done.

1. For December under Department I, Group No. 1 is helping to increase prayer meeting attendance. New faces of men and women appeared the first Wednesday night.
2. Under Department III, Group No. 3 is helping to increase number of church paper subscriptions, believing it is vital to our Men's Work.
3. Under Department V, Group No. 3 is helping in looking after sick and "shut-ins" in congregation, visiting them and seeing that none are overlooked at Christmas season.

What is your frank opinion of the organization?

Our first meeting was hurriedly planned but well executed. There were 35 men present. Ten men besides the pastor took part. Some parts were minor, but we got them on their feet before the "bunch" to address them in some form. No one was allowed to have the other fellow do what he was supposed to do. For instance, when goals for month, under service program, were announced, instead of having the Secretary or President announce them, the Chairman of the Department involved announced his goal asking for the hearty cooperation of the Men-of-the-Church. For the first time since I, the Pastor have been here, an Elder in Session meeting asked the other Elders to come to prayer meeting. Why? Because he was Chairman of Department I, and it was his "job" to increase attendance. I believe in the Men-of-the-Church movement. For two years I have prayed over it, seeing if it were forced upon the men, it would start out a failure. But now after two years, the Session and Deacons voted unanimously to organize and they are behind it. It is their movement. But we are not out of the woods yet. The good thing about it is, others are praying about it, besides the pastor.

An Attractive Meeting, Second Church

Joining with the Woman's Auxiliary the Men-of-the-Church on Monday evening, November 19th, held one of the most successful of the series of fellowship supper meetings on this year's calendar of the Second Presbyterian Church of Roanoke, Va.

S. M. Cornett, President of the Men-of-the-Church, presided and introduced Carey Barker, lay evangelist, of Lynchburg, as the principal speaker on the program. Mr. Barker, basing his discourse on the words of Paul in the ninth, tenth and eleventh verses of the first chapter of Philippians, spoke of love as the most effective and efficient weapon of the church in making conquests. Men, he said, can be loved out of their sins when argument and force have failed. He stressed the obligation of Christians to be "actively good", to approve of things that are excellent, and to avoid the pitfall of becoming drifters.

With Dr. M. R. Faville as leader, the assemblage of 250 people joined in singing a number of hymns as a part of the inspirational program. Mrs. E. Lee Trinkle, violinist, and Mrs. Claude L. Guerrant, pianist, served as accompanists and also contributed two duets to the entertainment. Two vocal duets were also sung by Mr. and Mrs. Herman Larson. Mrs. M. W. Seawright, President of the Woman's Auxiliary, gave a scripture selection, reading the sixty-seventh Psalm. Dr. L. G. Pedigo offered the invocation and the benediction was pronounced by Dr. H. Spencer Edmunds, pastor of the church.

Attractive features of the entertainment were the clever and beautiful decorative schemes used on the tables. The ladies took special interest in arranging the tables. They represented the four seasons of the year with lovely decorations, and the guests were seated at the tables according to the season in which they were born. The table for the celebrities was lovely. It was decorated with cut flowers and had twelve people seated at it and twelve candles were burning on the table.

The "spring" table's centerpiece was a gay May pole with dainty dolls serving as dancers. The "summer" guests were seated at a table with decorations which represented an outdoor scene. The "autumn" table depicted a fruit harvest, and the "winter" guests gathered about a table resplendent with a Christmas tree. The table for "celebrities", persons having birthdays coincident with those of famous persons, was in the center of the church house auditorium, where the affair was held.

The members of the Christian Endeavor Society were the guests of the Men-of-the-Church and were seated at a table near the center of the room, which has been specially provided for them. At the opening of the meeting the Christian Endeavor marched in to the strains of Onward, Christian Soldiers.

ZIONISTS AND NON-ZIONISTS UNITE THEIR EFFORTS

The conflict of purposes between Zionists and non-Zionists is at an end, if one may judge from the temper of a recent Jewish conference held in New York, and the comment which it has elicited from both parties. Between the two ideals of the future of Judaism there is a well defined though not necessarily irreconcilable contrast. The Zionist, with his plans for colonization of Palestine, its agricultural rehabilitation, and the upbuilding of a Jewish state which shall give to Jewry a local habitation as well as a name, tends to think in terms of nationalistic aggrandizement. The non-Zionist, stressing the contribution which Jewish culture can make to the world regardless of country and locality, insists that it is more important for Judaism to be an influence than for it to be a nation. The conference which has been mentioned was held under the auspices of non-Zionists, but it gave generous recognition to the value of the work of the Zionists and expressed approval for every effort to restore Palestine to fertility and prosperity. "If we can make (Palestine) a pride of the Jewish people and a help to humanity, if we can make it a spiritual treasure house of Jewish thought and culture and spirituality, nobody has any right to refrain from participating to that end." The Jewish Agency, which will be the co-ordinating organization through which the activities of both groups may be focused upon such purposes as they have in common, will promote both the economic development of Palestine and the preservation and extension of the cultural life of the race. Whatever political or nationalistic possibilities there may be for a truly Jewish state will be left for the Palestine Jews to develop, with such assistance as they can enlist from Zionists or others. It will be clear gain for all concerned if the forces of conflict between the two groups of earnest Jews can be turned in the direction of a unified effort to accomplish the ends in which they are alike interested, leaving the purely nationalistic and political ideal to be cultivated by those who think it is important.—Christian Century.

THE DIAMOND SMUGGLER

It was Jimmy Turner, who discovered the secret panel and found the vase, not me. But it was me who saw the detectives in the Captain's cabin and heard the Captain say that he knew nothing about the famous diamonds that were being smuggled into the country.

"Listen here," said one of the detectives: "Those diamonds are on board this ship and we're going to find them. You're the Captain and so we're going to hold you as our prisoner until we find them."

At the mention of prisoners, I shuddered and moved away from the suit of armor near which I was standing. It wasn't really a suit of armor. It was an instrument of torture, with spikes inside that could be screwed into the convict who was condemned to the "Iron Maiden" for punishment. It dated away back to the day of the English prison trade. So did the ship for that matter; but just at present she was a floating museum with everything fixed up horrible just as it was in the old days.

"Let's go down to the dock and watch her come in," Jimmy had said, never dreaming what would happen.

"All right," I agreed. "Maybe we'll get a chance to see something for nothing."

I was only joking at the time, but what I said came true. We saw the ex-convict ship sail up the harbor looking like Old Ironsides going into battle, and when she got close to the dock we helped the men throw the ropes over the bollards. Bollards are like hitching posts, only they are for ships and not for horses.

The Captain must have liked how we helped around, because he leaned over the side of the ship and called us on board.

"You look like two willing boys," he said: "How would you like a job for about three hours or so?"

We jumped at the chance, and it was down in what they call the "Rat's Hole" that Jimmy discovered the vase.

The Captain said: "This is where the old prison traders used to keep the men who were condemned to death. If these four walls could weep, they would run rivers of tears for the suffering they have seen. I want you to shine the brass name plates on the instruments of torture."

I took the rag and began rubbing the sign which told about the whipping post and how many lashes a prisoner used to get every day, while Jimmy started in on a salt water "bath tub." We hadn't been working more than ten minutes when I heard a sound like a folding door going easily into its place followed by a cry from Jimmie.

"Ral!"
"What's the matter?"
"A hole in the wall! A secret passage or something."

"How'd you do it?"
"I don't know. I must have pressed a hidden button by accident."

"Where did you have your hand?"
"Near the top of this chain."

I put my hand where he pointed and began feeling around. Soon one of my fingers hit a soft spot so I held it there and pressed. The panel slid back into place.

"It's a secret passage all right!" gasped Jimmie. "I wonder where it leads?"

"We'll find out," I said, pressing the wall again at the right spot. But we didn't find out after all, because when Jimmie stooped down to go in, he found out that it wasn't a passage at all, but just a cupboard. He put in his hand and pulled out this vase.

"Funnest vase I ever saw," he said. "Wonder what's inside?"

While Jimmy tried to get the lid off, I pressed the button again and closed up the hole in the wall; which was lucky, for a half-second later, a dark man whom I wouldn't trust with a nickel, came into the "Rat's Hole" and snatched the vase out of Jimmie's hand.

He spoke to us angrily.
"You two boys shine the brass like the Captain told you to do, and don't touch things that belong to somebody else."

Jimmie felt badly and so did I. We apologized and started to work again. The man frowned at us for a minute or so, and then left the room, taking the vase with him.

In about twenty minutes, we had finished all the brass plates in the "Rat's Hole," and so Jimmy sent me to look for the Captain and find out what else we had to do. That was how I happened to be in the cabin while he was being cross-questioned by the two detectives.

"There is a secret closet on this ship somewhere," said the first detective, "and we have a tip that it is full of contraband

MAKING A SNOWMAN

(To be colored with paints or crayons. Whenever you come to a word spelled in CAPITAL letters use that color.)

COME BILLY!" cried YELLOW-haired Susie May to BROWN-haired Billy. "Put on your RED toboggan cap and your heavy dark BLUE coat and your high RED boots with the YELLOW tassels in front and your RED mittens, too, for let us make a snowman!"

Susie May put on her GREEN coat and long YELLOW leggings and RED mittens and cap. Her rubbers were BLACK. Susie May took a long REDish YELLOW (mix the colors) carrot for the nose of the snowman. And Billy brought two BLACK coals for the snowman's eyes.

They made the snowman right near the tall BROWN fence with snow on the top. And they took their sleds with them. Susie May had a GREEN and YELLOW sled and Billy had a RED and YELLOW sled.

Paint the sky above the fence BLUE and the shaded places on the snowman a very light BLUE. Both children have PINK cheeks (use RED lightly) and RED lips. Billy is making another arm for the snowman.

The lettering of this picture can be YELLOW and the border can be GREEN.

jewels from India. Do you know of any such closet?"

"No," replied the Captain. "I don't." Then I spoke up and told them what I knew. I told them about the button and the sliding panel and about the man who had taken the vase, and I had no sooner finished when the chief of the detectives began to give orders:

"Jack, I want you to stay here and guard the Captain. Don't let him move from this room. We've got two men at the gangway, so the smuggler can't escape that way. I'll go with this boy to the "Rat's Hole" and examine this secret panel."

But when we got to the door of the room where we had been working, it was locked!

I yelled for Jimmie but got no answer. We shook the door, pounded on it, demanded to be let in. Then the chief found an ax and broke it down.

There was Jimmie strapped against the whipping post, with irons wrapped around his feet, and a gag in his mouth! As soon as he was freed, he told us what had happened.

"The man who took the vase came back, slammed the door, locked it and put the key into his pocket. Then he gagged me and tied me to this post. If you tell them where I've gone, I'll kill you," he said. Then he pressed the button, opened the secret panel and disappeared.

"But he couldn't disappear," said Chief Rowllins, looking into the hole. "This is only a cupboard. A man could scarcely get his body in here."

He stooped down and stepped over the ledge of the low closet. Then he gave a cry of surprise and alarm. He clutched at the ledge in an effort to save himself, but he was too late. We saw him go down through the floor of the cupboard, and a moment later heard an ominous splash as he fell into the water.

"It's a shute!" cried Jimmie. "It dropped him over the side!"

"Come on!" I yelled. "He's a detective and he's looking for the man who tied you up!"

We ran out on deck and threw over a lifebuoy to the Chief. Then I went to get the two men who were guarding the gangway. They helped us to rescue the Chief and then we all got in a small motor boat and began to search the bay for the smuggler, whom we were sure was in the water somewhere.

We were right. After looking for about half an hour, we found him underneath the dock about a mile away from the ex-convict ship. In the pockets of his pants, the detectives found handfuls of rough, unpolished diamonds, which he was trying to bring into the United States without paying duty on them.

"Worth about half a million dollars, I guess," commented Chief Rowllins. "It is the biggest haul that we've ever made. And I guess we've got these two young boys to thank for helping us to get our man."

Both Jimmie and I laughed and said we were proud to help Uncle Sam catch anybody who was breaking the laws.

"That's the right spirit. Now anytime you two boys want any advice or anything done in the detective line, come over to headquarters and I'll do what I can for you."

"Thanks, Mr. Rowllins," answered Jimmie. "Someday I'll be around looking for a job. I've always wanted to be a detective."

And so that is what Jimmie and I have to look forward to. In the meantime, though, we're working on the ex-convict ship showing people around. We've got blue uniforms and everything, and every time we take people down into the "Rat Hole" we tell them the story of the diamonds, and when they don't believe it, we press the button and show them the shute leading down into the water. That proves everything and we got along fine until one day a man with thick glasses who didn't hear very well asked us why we needed such a big hole for so small an animal like a rat!

sion at Rolling Fork. There were 53 women present, representing the Auxiliaries of Shaw, Greenville, Leland, Glenn Allen, Hollandale and Rolling Fork.

The meeting was opened by the chairman, Mrs. G. B. Walker of Leland Auxiliary. She used a gavel brought from the Holy Land by Mrs. Robert Lumly and presented, by her, to Rolling Fork Auxiliary. Mrs. Walker read the latter part of the second chapter of Luke, emphasizing the words of Jesus in the 49th verse, "I must be about my Father's business," and urging that we too make that thought the controlling force in our work. This was followed by prayer by Mrs. Gilbert, of Shaw.

Mrs. Gibbon, of Rolling Fork, in a gracious manner welcomed the members of the conference and to this welcome Mrs. Henry Starting, of Greenville, responded with her usual sincerity and poise.

Mrs. Walker then called upon the presidents of the Auxiliaries represented to say a word as to responsibilities of a president. Mrs. Lake, of Greenville, led, being followed by Mrs. Stephens, of Shaw, and Mrs. Gibbons, of Rolling Fork. These women showed by their remarks a deep sense of responsibility as well as a real joy in their work.

The Bible hour was then turned over to Mrs. Iry G. Hill, of Cleveland, whose subject was Palestine. Mrs. Hill has spent many months in Palestine and always brings to her talks an earnestness as well as a knowledge of her subject, which is inspiring. By Scripture quotation she showed in a most interesting way that the customs of Palestine differ little from what they were in the time of Abraham. Mrs. Hill is giving much information by her unselfish effort in making these delightful talks.

Mrs. E. D. Davis, of Greenville, who is vice-president of the Presbyterial, talked on the year's work and the new standard. She had attended the conference at Montreat and had gathered quite a bit of information concerning all phases of the year's work. Her challenge was to win souls and make disciples.

Then followed reports of last year's presidents recounting the work accomplished, the report of each Auxiliary was most interesting, showing earnest and faithful service.

The conference was complimented upon having three Synodical officers present. Mrs. Gilbert, of Shaw, vice-president, Mrs. Gamble, of Greenville, treasurer and Mrs. Hopkins, of Greenville, secretary of Foreign Missions. Mrs. Hopkins was called upon for a talk, which she made in her usual able manner. The meeting was then turned over to Mrs. Turpin, secretary of Foreign Missions in the Presbyterial.

"THE DESIRE OF ALL NATIONS"

An Appreciation

"The Desire of All Nations" is the challenging title of the book written for our study by Dr. Egbert W. Smith, our beloved Secretary of Foreign Missions. Any volume from the pen of Dr. Smith would be welcomed by the Church because of the remarkable grasp of Foreign Mission work which Dr. Smith possesses from his long and brilliant direction of that branch of the Church's work. But in "The Desire of All Nations" we have a book of remarkable timeliness, brilliant diction, convincing reason and charming presentation. Already it has become a "best seller" among the books of the year and a great chorus of appreciation and approval has been voiced from leaders of the other denominations, from missionaries around the world and from others attracted by its every qualities of good English and facile expression. No one who studies this delightful and timely book will ever again wonder if "the non-christian religions are best suited for their adherents."

St. Louis, Mo. Mrs. W. C. Winsborough.

THE FOREIGN MISSION STUDY CLASS

Our Foreign Mission Study Book is, "The Desire of All Nations," by Dr. Egbert Smith, a charming book. Begin planning for your class now. Get your books, select your leader and round up your pupils. "The Desire of All Nations" is well worth a place on the shelf in your library. It is an intellectual treat, it will spur a class to action. Be sure and teach the book in connection with the pamphlet, "Suggestions to Leaders Using the Desire of All Nations," by Mr. E. D. Grant, may be ordered from the Executive Committee of Foreign Missions, Box 330, Nashville, Tenn., price 15c. If possible have an up to date School of Missions. For full instruction see the leaflet, "The Church School of Missions," by Mr. E. D. Grant.

May we try to make mission study a reality, not only for ourselves, but also for those whose lives touch ours by the providence of God.

SAILING ON OUR FIRST RAILROAD

Some time ago this newspaper noted that before the arrival in South Carolina of "The Best Friend," the first locomotive ever operated regularly in the United States, the coaches were completed and delivered in Charleston in 1830, and that William Schirmer, one of the directors of the South Carolina Railroad and Canay Company, according to his unpublished journal, attached sails to the coaches and sailed with a party of friends from Charleston to Summerville before the breeze, returning that night when the wind shifted in the opposite direction.

A similar incident was described in the Charleston Courier, March 20, 1830:

"A sail was set on a car on our railroad yesterday afternoon in the presence of a large concourse of spectators. Fifteen gentlemen got on board and flew off at the rate of 12 to 15 miles an hour. Thirteen persons and three tons of iron were hastily gotten up, and of course, were not the best kind, but owing to this circumstance the experiment afforded high sport. The wind blew fresh from the northeast, which as a sailor would say, was 'abeam' and would drive the car either way with equal speed. When going at the rate of about 12 miles an hour, and loaded with 15 passengers, the mast went by the board with the sail and rigging attached, carrying with them several of the crew. The wreck was described by several friendly shipmasters who kindly rendered assistance in rigging a jury mast, and the car was again soon put under way. During the afternoon the wind changed, so as to bring it nearly ahead when going in one direction, but this did not stop the sport, as it was ascertained that the car would sail within four points of the wind. We understand that it was intended by some of our seamen to rig a car properly, and shortly to exhibit their skill in managing a vessel on land."

The slight casualty described must have been one of the first railroad accidents in the history of the United States.—Columbia, S. C., State.

THE JUNIOR COOK

Brussels Sprouts

Wash carefully one quart of brussels sprouts.

Cut off the stem end and remove defective leaves.

Let stand for 20 minutes in cold water to loosen grit and wash thoroughly again.

Bring a quart of water to a boil.

Drop in the sprouts a few at a time so that the water continues boiling.

Cover very tightly and boil for 18 minutes. Count the time from the minute that the boiling becomes brisk, after all sprouts have been put in the water.

At the end of 15 minutes add 3-4 teaspoonful salt to the water.

Drain the sprouts and place in a hot dish.

Pour over them 1-4 cupful melted butter and serve at once.

Next Sunday Is Presbyterian Foundation Day

The last General Assembly, meeting in Atlanta, Georgia, designated January 13th as "Presbyterian Foundation Day." It is the day upon which all churches, through their leaders, are expected to present information concerning the Foundation.

The Presbyterian Foundation is the perpetuation of the former Board of Trustees of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S., with an enlargement of the scope, vision and representation of the Board. The legal title of the Board is, "The Trustees of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, and the Presbyterian Foundation, Incorporated." The Board requests that its full name should be used just as written. All services of the members and officers of the Foundation are voluntary. Mr. R. A. Dunn, President of the Commercial National Bank, Charlotte, N. C., is President of the Foundation, and Mr. George M. Rose, Charlotte, N. C., is Secretary-Treasurer. The Stewardship Department, 305 Henry Grady Building, Atlanta, Georgia, is the designated promotional headquarters for the Foundation.

All matters relating to the making of will and negotiating matters of finance should be taken up with President Dunn at Charlotte, N. C. Leaflet literature setting forth the history and purpose of the Foundation may be secured by writing the Stewardship Department at the above named address.

STORY

THE GOLDEN SCARF

Jane Trumbull

Jacintha Winston looked down at the armful of books that she was carrying and sighed. How relieved she would be when this week was over! She was so tired of tests. Geometry and history bothered her most. She glanced again at the heavy, dull-looking volumes. Both contained subjects that she disliked.

This was her second year at high school, and she was beginning to tire of it; at least, she told herself that that was the cause of her discontent that afternoon.

She would not own even to herself that the cause had nothing at all to do with her studies, because she had said to Phyllis, "I certainly shan't let it bother me," and she was doing her best to live up to her remark.

Phyllis Deane was Jacintha's cousin. They had lived in the same house for six years. Jacintha recalled how pleased she had been when Phyllis had come to live with them. She had always longed for a sister her own age, and this ten-year-old cousin had filled the place.

Together they had enjoyed every girlish pleasure, attended school and Sunday School, read books, and shared the same friends. But lately the friendship had changed somehow. Although they still lived together their interests were not exactly the same. Jacintha had a hard time with her school work. To Phyllis studies had always been accomplished very easily. She had taken up music, also and had made many new friends in high school. Often Jacintha felt that Phyllis was neglecting her for other girls, but this was their first real quarrel, and it seemed as if it would also be their last, for Jacintha and her cousin had hardly spoken to each other for five days.

Once Jacintha had tried to begin a conversation, but Phyllis had given no encouragement; so when Phyllis spoke to Jacintha that morning, Jacintha acted as if she were quite deaf.

"I shall never apologize. That's final," said Jacintha, as she mounted the flight of stone steps that led up the high terrace on which their pretty green-and-white cottage stood. "If only mother were at home!"

She had spoken aloud just exactly as if there were some one there to hear her. Prince, the brown-and-white collie, had danced out from the back of the house to welcome her, but she hardly noticed him.

"It was entirely her fault. She admits that it was her evening to go to Aunt Jane's, and why should"— Jacintha had stopped talking very suddenly. Prince felt that he was expected to say something in reply; so he gave a joyous bark, which went unnoticed.

A package between the screen door and the front door had caused Jacintha to break off in the middle of her sentence. Jacintha stooped to pick it up, and as she straightened again there was a different expression upon her face.

"Miss J. Winston," she read. "Hm! For me? I wonder what it is." Her curiosity was aroused and she shook the package by the side of her ear, but it made no sound. However, Jacintha smiled broadly, and there was a gleam in her eyes as she opened the front door and hurried to her room.

The heavy, uninteresting books were dropped on to the bed without another thought, and her fingers untied the knotted string that held the wrappings in place.

"Oh, how interesting it looks; I wonder what it can be," she said, as she took off the first layer of brown paper and found a box carefully wrapped in tissue paper and tied with pink ribbon. This she loosened, and found a pretty, rainbow-tinted box.

"It must be something nice," she murmured to herself. Her fingers were pulling off the lid and her eyes were wide with anticipation.

When the lid was off at last, more tissue concealed the contents, and then she saw the gleam of gold and yellow. In the paper lay the prettiest scarf that Jacintha had ever seen.

Her first thought was that it was just what she wanted to wear with the pretty dress her mother had made for her before she had gone away. Then she wondered who had sent the box, and a search among the crumpled papers revealed a pretty card:

I've come to brighten up your day.
I hope I'll make you smile,
For if I do this thing for you
I'll know that I'm worth while.

Jacintha read the verse twice, and then looked again at the package wrapping to be sure that it had been addressed to her. She threw the pretty scarf over her shoulders and stood before the mirror in admiration.

"It is beautiful, and so is Phyllis. Of course she bought it for me as a peace offering, but I shan't keep it. It wouldn't be fair. Phyl has spent entirely to much of her savings for this. She always does such extravagant things. No, I can't take it from her, but I love her for sending it, and I'll show her that I do."

Quickly she wrapped the package in its white tissue and ribbon, and then put on her gingham dress.

"I'm going to cook everything that Phyllis likes best for supper, and have it all ready, so that she won't have to help," Jacintha told her image in the mirror, and before she went toward the kitchen she carried the package into her cousin's room.

Everything was bright again. Jacintha sang as she beat eggs for the raisin gingerbread that was her cousin's favorite cake. Her feet danced from stove to refrigerator, to sink, to table.

What a pretty scarf that was! How she wished she could keep it, and could afford to buy Phyl one just like it in crimson! Phyl looked so pretty in that color.

But Jacintha knew that she should not spend her savings on such extravagances any more than Phyl should. Mother had told them before she went away for her long visit to grandmother that they must not only take care of themselves and of dad, but also that they must be sure to keep up their savings accounts.

Jacintha gave a little sigh as she thought of her mother. She had been away almost six weeks. She knew this quarrel would never have occurred if mother had been there. Dad was not with them enough to know that they were speaking to each other only when they must, but mother would have known on the very first day.

Well, it was over now, and the gingerbread was in the oven with the scalloped potatoes. What else was it that Phyl liked best? Oh, yes; mayonnaise. Jacintha consulted the cook-book quickly and collected the ingredients. Swish, swish went the egg beater, and so it was no wonder that Jacintha did not hear the front door open and close very quietly.

When Phyllis entered she smelled gingerbread, and she liked the spicy odor. She knew that her cousin was enjoying herself in the kitchen. She did not go toward the kitchen, however. She knew that Jac enjoyed cooking, and was glad that her cousin had chosen to make her favorite dessert, but she did not intend to speak to her again. She had done her part, and anyway the quarrel was not her fault. She supposed that it would last forever and ever. She had been telling herself such things as she walked home from her music lesson.

The trouble as she saw it was all with Jacintha. Lately Jac had been difficult to understand. "She's so slow with her school work, and seems to think that I should be slow with mine. She doesn't like to have me go with other girls. I suppose that she feels

Purify The System

With the old stand-by
Glenn Springs Mineral Water

Most intestinal and digestive disorders respond to treatment if the organs are cleansed. Perhaps you are troubled with chronic sluggishness of the organs of elimination that so frequently saps the energy, destroys appetite, weakens the body and makes recuperation and health so difficult.

Glenn Springs Water first became popular in early years when thousands from malarial sections found it so effective in ridding the system of the germ and renewing strength and health. It is now generally regarded not only as a pleasant and mild corrective, but as a very effective treatment for chronic constipation, biliousness, indigestion, dyspepsia, auto-intoxication, rheumatism, and kindred ills. It purifies mildly, and restores the organs to normal functioning. You don't have to visit the Springs now. Use it in your home. Shipped by express to your door. Use this coupon:

left out." Such thoughts had been running through Phyl's mind.

Phyllis acknowledged that it had been her night to stay with Aunt Jane. She and Jacintha had promised to take turns staying with her whenever she asked them, for Aunt Jane had not been well. She had telephoned for one of the girls to come over that evening, and it was Phyl's time, but she had accepted an invitation to play the piano and attend a party. The guests were of a crowd that she had met recently at school, and she was eager to cultivate their acquaintance.

Jacintha had not been invited and could not have gone if she had been, for she had studying to do. Tests were coming thick and fast, and although she could study just as well at Aunt Jane's house, she did not want to go. It was not her turn, she said. But in the end she had gone, and Aunt Jane had not known that she did it unwillingly.

Phyllis had promised to make it up to Jac, but she never had. They had quarreled. Phyl had not enjoyed the party, Jacintha had been cross because she had not been invited, and no one had been the least pleased except Aunt Jane. She believed that she had the two dearest girls for nieces that any aunt could wish to have.

As soon as Phyllis reached her room she shut the door.

"I suppose she is making gingerbread to taunt me. I like it, but I can't eat what she makes when we don't even speak."

As she finished her sentence she spied the pretty pink-and-white package on the table.

"That must be for me. I wonder what it is." She soon had the box open and the beautiful scarf spread out wide before her.

"What a gorgeous color!" She wound it about her shoulders, making a striking contrast over her green dress. Her black eyes shone and the coloring of her skin seemed more vivid.

"I believe I like it as well as red" she read the little verse and her smile roadened.

"Indeed you are worth while, you pretty thing," she said, as she ran her fingers down the gleaming folds and her eyes danced with pleasure.

Of course, she supposed that Jac had given it to her. "A peace offering. What a dear she is! I shouldn't take it, though, for I was in the wrong. But I do want it."

At that moment the doorbell rang. Quickly Phyllis placed the golden scarf in the box and hurried to answer the ring. As she opened the bedroom door she almost ran into Jacintha. Both girls smiled as they walked into each other's arms. Then without a word they went together toward the insistent ringing of the bell.

The boy who stood outside was dressed in a gray uniform and held a bill in his hand.

"Is this where Miss Winston lives?" he asked. They nodded.

"I left a package here by mistake this morning. Had to come and get it. Did you find it?" he asked.

Jacintha Winston managed to choke out a reply as she hurried toward her cousin's room.

A moment later she was putting the pretty scarf into the wrappings, and then she took it to her own room, where she added the brown paper and string.

She read again the address. How could the boy have made such a foolish mistake? But was it so foolish after all? If Phyl had not bought the scarf for her, then why had she taken her into her arms in that understanding way?

The boy had taken the package and was hurrying away on his bicycle. Jacintha stood watching him and wondering. It was all such a puzzle. But there was a smell of scorching gingerbread and she ran toward the kitchen.

"Just in time," she said as she took the pan from the oven. Only one corner was scorched. "I hope Phyl won't mind."

But Phyllis didn't smell the burning cake at all. She was preoccupied with her own thoughts.

"Of all things! Of course I shouldn't have taken it, but if she didn't get it for me then why was it here on my table, and why did she put her arms about me? I can't understand her actions."

And just then the doorbell rang again. This time both girls ran toward it. Surely the boy had come to bring the scarf back again.

But no. Instead, Aunt Jane entered. A visit from her was so unexpected that no one spoke at first. Seldom a day passed without either one or both of the girls going to their aunt's house, but she rarely came to see them.

"This is my first day out," Aunt Jane hurried to explain, "and I wanted to see my willing nurses." She had been holding her gray-silk sewing bag in her hand, and as she sat down she opened it carefully.

"I came to bring two packages to the two best girls I know. I intended to come earlier, but the shop made a mistake in delivering my packages. First they sent me only one, although I had telephoned that I wanted two. It seems that they made some mistake on the address of the second package, and I had to wait until both came. I hope I have chosen something you both like."

Jacintha knew exactly what she would find in her package, for it was the same that she had given back to the gray-uniformed errand boy ten minutes before, but she did not spoil Aunt Jane's pleasure by telling her that. Phyllis was quite evidently delighted when she opened her package and took a crimson scarf from its tissue folds.

"I'm sure that we don't deserve them, Aunt Jane, but they add the final touch to a day that has turned out to be very happy," said Phyl. "We were so disagreeable to each other in the beginning that we really oughtn't to accept any presents even for good behavior in the past."

But Aunt Jane did not agree. She said they both deserved even more.

"We couldn't wish for more," said Jacintha, and the look that passed between the two girls said volumes. — Queens Gardens.

EDITOR'S LOOKOUT

Rev. W. A. Gamble, Pinetops, N. C.

We had the privilege last week of attending the Seventh All-South Christian Endeavor Convention at Chattanooga. Though the influenza epidemic cut heavily into the registration of nearly twelve hundred, a large amount of real fine work was done.

From time to time we will try to tell of some of the features of the convention. The addresses were excellent, practically without exception. The mid-winter meeting of the officers and executive committee members of the International Society of Christian Endeavor was called for Chattanooga, and those present for this meeting helped to make the program an outstanding one.

Leaders from our own Church included Dr. Henry H. Sweets, Dr. Egbert W. Smith, Dr. R. C. Long, Miss Anne Woodrow Van deVanter, Mr. Edward D. Grant, with a good number of our ministers.

Plans put into effect in executive sessions of convention leaders give promise of making the coming days the best that Christian Endeavor has ever known in the Southern states. Of outstanding importance was the setting up of an advisory committee composed of ministers and laymen in the half dozen or more denominations of the Southern states which have C. E. Societies. This committee will serve as a promotional committee and will help to develop the Endeavorers in carrying on the work of their respective denominations.

Representatives from our own Church took steps to advance the C. E. movement in the Southern Presbyterian Church, where Christian Endeavor makes up some eighty to eighty-five percent of the young people's society work. At a denominational luncheon our young people adopted a resolution stating that "it is the sense of this denominational meeting that all Southern Presbyterian rallies at our state and other C. E. conventions give careful consideration to the distinctively Christian Endeavor objectives of our various Executive Committees."

In the convention resolution, thanks were extended and then two positions recorded:

1. We would record our conviction that upon returning home the delegates and the local organizations they represent, should endeavor to promote the Crusade with Christ and the other causes presented by the speakers; and in particular, take such steps as approved by their church authorities to urge governmental support of practical peace measures such as the Treaty of Paris.

2. We would express to the leadership of our respective denominations our desire to be used more and more largely in carrying forward our denominational programs, and earnestly request their fullest co-operation in helping us to do our proper share of the work and reap our proper share of the benefits of the God-inspired and God-directed international and interdenominational Christian Endeavor Movement which lies so near our hearts.

Picture Meeting—"The Child Christ"—Hofmann.

This is Hofmann's famous picture of Jesus as a boy. Notice how natural He is. He looked just like other boys—brighter, perhaps, more earnest, and happier.

Fairest Lord Jesus

So sweetly through that humble home
The rippling laughter went
That Mary felt the world's blue dome
Too small for her content.

At Work Beside His Father's Bench

At work beside His father's bench,
At play when work was done;
In quiet Galilee He lived—
The friend of everyone.

And in the little flat-roofed house,
He served with willing hands;
His mother's daily burdens bore,
Her joys and pleasures planned.

And as He grew to be a man

He wandered far and wide,
To be a Friend to everyone
Throughout the country-side.

Through hardships and through dangers too,
Undaunted, tireless, brave,
For troubled, sick and weary friends,
His daily life He gave.

And when He left His faithful friends,
To do His work and will
He promised then, He'd be unseen,
Their faithful comrade still.

And careful Joseph, while he held
The boy in grave caress,
Wist not what tender thrill dispelled
His workday weariness.

The crown set softly, only rings
Of baby hair agleam
With lustrous dropt from Angels' wings
And starlight down a dream.

The thorn-tree was a seedling still,
And with laughter's frolic chime
The Christ-child did his father's will,
As when, of elder time.

A ruddy lad in Bethlehem
Was keeping sheep and played
Blithe music on His harp to them
Before the psalms were made.

The Holy Family

Murillo

Did you ever wonder what the Baby Jesus did all the time He was growing up? Here is a picture painted by a man who thought He played about the house just as boys and girls do everyday—See, here He is at the knee of Joseph, the carpenter, who was such a kind father to Him. On the other side is His mother, Mary, looking up from the little spinning wheel to watch the baby.

Baby Jesus has a bird in His hand held safe above the reach of the little dog. The little dog thinks the Boy Jesus is just playing with him, puppies, of course, do not know any better than to hurt birds; so little Jesus is trying to say, No, you cannot have the bird."

Of course you know how kind and helpful Jesus was to everyone in trouble when He grew up, and as it is not strange that He should help the poor little bird, tho He was only a small boy. Little folk can be kind just as well as grown-ups.

Little Lord Jesus, who used to play
With the children of Nazareth every day,
You used to be laughing and cheerful too;
So make me a happy child, Lord, like you.

TALK I.

Lord Jesus was fairest of all in His birth.
A—Birth foretold by Angels—Matt. 1:21.
B—Birth announced by Angels—Luke 2:9-14.
C—Worshipped by Shepherds—Luke 2:20.
D—Worshipped by Wise men who brought gifts—Matt. 2:11.

TALK II.

Lord Jesus was fairest of all in His life.
A—Was the Son of God.
1. Proclaimed so by Holy Spirit at Baptism—Mark 1:10-11.
2. John Baptist testified to it—John 1:34.
3. Words and works proved it.
(a) Teaching and Parables.
(b) Miracles.

TALK III.

A—Gave His life to save us—Mark 10:45.
B—All who believe in Him are saved—John 3:16.
C—Because He arose we shall live—John 14:19.

QUESTIONS:

1. Did Jesus love the children?
2. Where in the Bible does it show that Jesus loved the children? Mark 10:13-16.
3. Was Jesus obedient to His parents? When?
4. How may we be like Jesus?

PICTURE—"Jesus in The Temple"—Hofmann.

Jesus was Fairest in His death.
Here we find the Boy Jesus, who was just twelve years old, straight and fine and tall, standing among the teachers of the people, "both hearing them and asking them questions."

Look at the faces of the teachers and tell what you think each one might say to the boy.

Why do you think Jesus liked to be here rather than out in the noisy street with the crowds of people? Perhaps He said to Himself, "Here is the place where I can learn the things my Father wants Me to know. This is my Father's house, and I must be about my Father's business."

SUGGESTED HYMNS:

"O, Worship the King." "In the Garden."
"Fairest Lord Jesus." "My Jesus, I Love Thee."

YOUNG PEOPLES' TOPIC

Article Prepared by Mrs. R. W. Adams

Sunday, January 20—Seeking the Good of Men Everywhere—Isa. 55:1-5; Acts 10:24, 25.

A Selfish World

Suppose that you were in a world where every one was for himself; where one's whole concern was in getting things for one's self and in trying to satisfy that self; where the strongest always was victorious; where might was right. You say that such a world would be no better than a world of beasts and that civilization could not exist with such creatures to hold it together. Civilization needs more than brute force to enforce law. Laws do not make civilization. In ancient times empire after empire tried to stand with only laws to hold it together—and failed. Just at the time when the world was held together with laws and force, Christ came to show us the better way.

What Christ Taught

He told us to love our neighbors as we love ourselves. He taught us to pray "Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors"—He taught us that God is our Father and that we are His children. He showed us by His example of patience with us how to be patient with others. And He told us that our souls were much more important than our bodies, much more important than worldly possessions and power. But above all He taught us to love one another. He said "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another, as I have loved you."

Christ Rebukes Pride

If we love people we are glad when we can help them. It is our joy to do things for them. We forgive them readily when they hurt us. We want others to love them as we do. Since Christ loves all of us we can understand how He would want us to love each other. Christ made no difference in his love for different races. The Jews hated the Samaritans and looked on them as a race much below themselves. But Christ preached one of His most noted sermons to a Samaritan woman, and in one of His parables He made a Samaritan the hero. When the Syro-Phenician woman came to Him and asked Him to heal her daughter, he just tested her faith, but he healed her daughter.

America's Gift

We Americans are inclined to feel that we are God's chosen people. We forget that we have been given a great trust, and that we are to share with others the gifts that God has given to us. We forget that all men are brothers. The God that made the world and all things therein . . . made of one blood every nation of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth," said Paul in his sermon to the Athenians. It is not because we are so much better than other people that we know about Christ and enjoy the benefits of Christian civilization. It is a gift. Let us thank God for the gift and seek to share it with all men.

How We Can Share Our Gift

How can we share the gift that God has given us? How can we be friends and brothers to all nations? Perhaps we shall never see representatives of all the nations, but how do we treat those representatives that we do know? How do you treat the Italian that keeps a fruit stand? Or the Chinese that runs the laundry? How do you treat the negro that is always in our midst? Do you try to cheat him? Do you short-change him? Are you rude to him? Does he know that you are a Christian? Have you ever tried to tell him about Christ?

In social relations too, we can seek the good of other by not being snobbish, by not being in a social set that excludes others, by giving the stranger a welcome smile "A new Commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another as I have loved you."

YOUNG PEOPLES' SOCIETIES AND OUR OWN CHURCH

We have mentioned the topics prepared by our Richmond committee for the prayermeetings in our young people's societies for 1929. These topics have been prepared so that the list contains both Christian Endeavor topics and those referring to our own denominational objectives. The trend of sentiment in our church now is toward a complete denominational organization of Young People's work, and leaders are looking for light.

The problem is, Shall we do as the Methodists and Baptists have done and cut loose entirely from interdenominational affiliations, or keep the Christian Endeavor as it has been in the church for 45 years? Is it possible to do our denominational work among the young in the Sunday School, or shall we have a distinct organization? And can we guide the distinct organization into the denominational program?

There can be no question that the annual Synodical Conferences are very popular with the young folks, and that a denominational loyalty is being generated among them that never existed before even with all the emphasis the Christian Endeavor sought to lay on loyalty to one's own church. And yet the benefits and training derived from Christian Endeavor, in the local churches, and the wide fellowship it affords with other young people outside our own denomination, together with the splendid help it provides for meetings, have produced an attachment to the old organization many young people feel with great force.

There is no desire at this time to suggest a solution to the problems which have been here named. What we would like to say is this: That we wish our young people would use our own topics, and stress our own denominational program. If they would do this, they would probably soon solve the problem for the leaders, as to whether their church had a Young People's program that is worth while or whether it would be best to cling to the old organization. —J. G. G.

We are preparing to erect our new boys' school industrial building, and one for the girls likewise in January. We have 35 boys working their way in the self-help department of the boys school making brass articles and 50 girls in the girls' school self-help department making good silk and cotton cloth on hand-made looms.

We hope many of our friends at home will encourage them by supplementing with aid their well-directed efforts. I am hurrying off this letter and hope it will reach you in time for Christmas. ON FIRST SEEING ONE'S STUFF IN PRINT

There is not an author who does not remember with pleasure the astonishing thrill of seeing himself for the first time in print. It is an experience like none other in the world. He will stare at the thing, in secret of course, and wonder how a bit of himself has come to be there on the page. He will read and reread it until the words mean nothing at all, and then will be suddenly afraid lest somebody should discover what he is doing and laugh at him for his enormous conceit. Dickens, as a reporter, was well accustomed to find in the newspaper printed work for which he had been responsible, but when he learned that the Monthly Magazine for December was to contain something of his which had nothing to do with his professional duties, something, it is true, unheralded and unsigned, but wholly his own, he experienced an entirely novel sensation, and behaved, I am glad to say, in the usual way. He bought a copy of this magazine, casually, at a bookshop in the Strand, and no doubt wondered what the man who sold it to him would have said had he divulged the authorship of the only contributor of any importance. — From "Charles Dickens, A Biography from New Sources," by Ralph Straus.

LAUGH RATHER THAN GROAN

Selection of jokes by one who believes in the following creed: "Take a smile and go on your way with less of care." Henry Ward Beecher said, "Laughing is as divine as crying." It requires sixty-four muscles of the face to make a frown, and only thirteen to make a smile. Many of us work overtime. "One laugh is worth a hundred groans in any market."—Ex.

Health can be earned

Says one of the healthiest men in the world

EVEN a perfect physical specimen like Gene Tunney doesn't just take health for granted. He has worked hard, unceasingly, to build himself up and keep in condition. Realizing the importance of regular habits, he takes no chances.

"I started taking Nujol internally seven years ago. The first month Nujol brought remarkable changes in my physical condition. My elimination became active and normal. My appetite increased and a desire for intensive training was created. Since that time I have taken Nujol about five nights a week. I have regulated myself to the amount necessary to keep my elimination normal. If I discover that I have taken an excess I stop its use for a couple of days, when I renew my daily practice of taking a swallow from the bottle before retiring

"I have found during my seven years' experience with Nujol that it is not habit-forming, or in any way unpleasant or harmful."

OLD FOLKS SAY DR. CALDWELL WAS RIGHT

The basis of treating sickness has not changed since Dr. Caldwell left Medical College in 1875, nor since he placed on the market the laxative prescription he had used in his practice.

He treated constipation, biliousness, headaches, mental depression, indigestion, sour stomach and other indispositions entirely by means of simple vegetable laxatives, herbs and roots. These are still the basis of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, a combination of senna and other mild herbs, with pepsin.

The simpler the remedy for constipation, the safer for the child and for you. And as you can get results in a mild and safe way by using Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, why take chances with strong drugs?

A bottle will last several months, and all can use it. It is pleasant to the taste, gentle in action, and free from narcotics. Elderly people find it ideal. All drug stores have the generous bottles, or write "Syrup Pepsin," Dept. BB, Monticello, Illinois, for free trial bottle.

Nujol contains no medicine or drugs. It is simply a pure natural substance perfected by the Nujol Laboratories (26 Broadway, New York). It not only keeps an excess of body poisons from forming (we all have them) but aids in their removal.

You, too can earn better health with Nujol. Buy a bottle from your druggist on your way home today. Sold only in sealed packages.

Dr. Landrith To Visit Charlotte

Prominent Officials of Christian Endeavor Will Make Addresses at County Union Meeting Feb. 7

Plans for the monthly meeting of the Mecklenburg County Christian Endeavor Union are announced for Thursday evening, February 7. The main meeting is to be held at the Second Presbyterian Church at 8 o'clock, when the business of the organization will be conducted and two addresses will be delivered, one by Rev. A. P. Landrith, D.D., of Chicago, and the other by Roy Breg, Southern Secretary of C. E. with headquarters at Chattanooga, Tenn.

Dr. Landrith is Citizenship Superintendent of the International Christian Endeavor Union and is a noted preacher of the Northern Presbyterian Church, well known for his platform ability. He was a speaker on the program of the National Convention at Chattanooga, December 28-30.

There will be a banquet at 6 o'clock the same evening, which all are so wish may attend. The plates will cost 75 cents each. There will be an entertaining program of music and refreshments at the banquet.

After the banquet the crowd will return to the church for the evening program and to hear the addresses of Dr. Landrith and Mr. Breg. Societies giving the leading attendance at the meeting at the church will be given awards in the shape of a banner and subscription to the Christian Endeavor World.

Dr. Landrith and Mr. Breg are making a tour of the Southern States in interest of Christian Endeavor, following the convention at Chattanooga. The following has been their itinerary: Cleveland, Miss.; Shreveport, Baton Rouge, La.

Junior College Makes Progress at Maxton

Board of Directors of Synod's New School for Boys Met January 10 and Made Plans for Opening Next Fall

The Board of Directors for the North Carolina Synod's Junior College Men met in Maxton, N. C., last week, on January 10, and made several decisions which will be of widespread interest throughout the Synod. The minutes of the Board, E. H. Evans, of Winburg, presided.

The Board decided to postpone for the present a campaign for the permanent endowment of the school so as to give the right of way to our present schools and colleges and their financial conditions that are now in progress. A maintenance fund for the Junior College will be created at once so that the school may open at the designated time next fall. This fund will place the Junior College in easy financial circumstances for three years. During the period the endowment will be accumulated, which will adequately sustain the college.

General plans for the opening of the college were made, and it is expected that a president and faculty will soon be selected. The Board is very desirous of receiving nominations for the faculty of the Junior College, and a member of Synod is requested to write to J. P. Wiggins, secretary of the Synod, for nominations for this office.

The Board expects to meet again in February and elect the president, and with their help they will choose a faculty. Complete announcements will be made at the next meeting.

Columbia Preparing For Dr. Ellis

The Seminary Will Entertain Visitors Who Attend Smyth Lectures

Dr. Wm. T. Ellis, of Swathmore, Pa., will deliver the annual lectures on the Thomas Smyth Foundation, at Columbia Theological Seminary, Decatur, Ga., January 21-26, inclusive. The faculty and students are looking forward to this visit by Dr. Ellis as one of the conspicuous events of the year. Dr. Ellis is known throughout the whole country as an instructive and interesting speaker and a man of unusual personal charm.

The Seminary is prepared to take care of twenty to twenty-five guests during this period and is looking forward to having on our campus a number of our former students and friends who will come to hear this distinguished lecturer.

The Smyth Foundation was established by the Rev. Thomas Smyth, D.D., of Charleston, S. C. The first lectures were delivered by Dr. Francis Landley Patton, D.D., LL.D., of Princeton, in 1911. During the nineteen years since Dr. Patton's visit, many distinguished educators and ministers have visited the Seminary to deliver the Smyth lectures. This Foundation has, through two decades, proven to be a source of instruction to the Seminary and her friends.

Richard T. Gillespie, President.

Board of Bible Society In Annual Meeting

Budget of $1,295,849 Was Adopted—Memorial to Robert Lansing, LL.D., Placed in Minutes

The eighth stated meeting of the Board of Managers in its one hundred and thirteenth year was held at the Bible House, Astor Place, New York, on Thursday, December 6, 1928, at 3:30 o'clock p. m., President E. Francis Hyde in the chair.

Devotional exercises were conducted by the Rev. George William Brown.

The minutes of the seventh stated meeting of the Board of Managers were presented and approved.

A memorial minute on Robert Lansing, LL.D., a former Vice-President, was adopted by rising vote.

The minutes of the various standing committees were presented and approved.

The minutes of the Budget Committee were presented, together with the recommended appropriations which had the unanimous support of the Advisory Council. Adjustments had been made by the General Reference Committee at the request of the Budget Committee.

The budget for 1929 was adopted, totaling $1,295,849.

The minutes of the Advisory Council were presented and their actions recorded.

On the recommendation of the General Reference Committee the Board reduced its special price on embossed Bibles for the blind to 50 cents a volume.

The Treasurer reported the following consignments to the Society's Foreign Agencies during the month of October, 1928; Brazil, 3,721 volumes, valued at $451.76; Caribbean, 2,042 volumes, valued at $1,064.70; Japan 150 volumes, valued at $175.56; La Plata, 2,525 volumes, valued at $704.75; Mexico, 2,135 volumes, valued at $289.29; Siam, 62 volumes, valued at $15.90; Upper Andes, 12 volumes, valued at $15.90.

Christian Endeavorers Meet in Chattanooga

Seventh Annual Convention Gathered in Tennessee December 28-30

Attended by over 1,200 delegates, the seventh annual all-south Christian Endeavor convention met December 28-30 in Memorial Auditorium, Chattanooga, Tenn. The convention incorporated throughout the session the three main phases of "The Crusade With Christ," evangelism, Christian citizenship and world peace. Delegates came from 11 southern states, Tennessee, Virginia, Arkansas, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, Kentucky, North Carolina, South Carolina, Texas and Florida.

A specially invited group of pastors and Endeavor leaders had luncheon with the officers of the International Christian Endeavor Society in the grill room of the Hotel Patten on Friday. Besides the officers and executive committee members of the international society, those present were Dr. J. P. McCallie, of the McCallie School; the Rev. R. C. Long, D.D., of Atlanta, stewardship secretary of the Southern Presbyterian Church; the Rev. D. W. McIver, pastor of the Missionary Ridge Presbyterian Church; the Rev. A. Ray Howland, of Atlanta, pastor of the Ormond Park Presbyterian Church and president of the Atlanta Christian Endeavor Union; Stokes S. Rawlings, of Greensboro, N. C., president of the North Carolina State Christian Endeavor Union; the R. C. Wilson, of Cartersville, Ga., pastor of the Cartersville Presbyterian Church; Miss Mamie Gene Cole, former Dixie Junior field secretary and now director of religious education in the First Presbyterian Church of Fort Smith, Ark., and the Rev. W. Arnett Gamble, pastor of the Pinetops, N. C., Presbyterian Church, and editor of the young people's department of the Presbyterian Standard, of Charlotte, N. C.

Several brief testimonies were given with regard to the value of the Christian Endeavor Society work in the lives of those who were present and in the work of which they are interested in various parts of the South. All who spoke were enthusiastic in their expressions of the value of the work in developing Christian character and leading the way to definite Christian service on the part of the church worker and the Christian Endeavor worker.

Executive Committee Meets

The executive committee of the international society met at the Hotel Patten on Friday, discussing a great many matters of importance to the internal workings of the organization. The committeemen voted to suggest to the young people of all churches that they sponsor a vigorous campaign of evangelism in the months immediately preceding Easter Sunday. No program was brought forth for this campaign, but the young people were urged to place themselves at the service of their pastors, who would decide upon the best method for promoting the movement in each separate community.

A campaign to augment church attendance throughout the south was proposed to the young people, who were asked to lend their efforts to securing church attendance upon the part of their friends. It was decided that a campaign of education in world friendship and peace will be promoted among the various Christian Endeavor unions during April and May. This will include correspondence between the young people of America and the young people of foreign lands.

An increased support of the missionaries, churches' missionaries and benevolent enterprises by the young folk

Bible Society Council Meets

The Annual Meeting of the Advisory Council Takes Place Dec. 4,

As the meeting of the Advisory Council on Tuesday, December 4, was its tenth annual gathering, in New York, our readers will be glad to be informed of the status enjoyed by this body, which for a decade has been demonstrating increasingly its value to the Society.

The Advisory Council meets annually in accordance with Article XIX of the By-laws of the Board of Managers, which states:

There shall be an Advisory Council formed of representatives appointed by the evangelical Christian bodies in the United States whose general organizations endorse the work of the American Bible Society and request or require their churches to contribute to the work of the Society. This Council shall cooperate with the Board of Managers in interesting the churches which they represent, in the work of the Society, and shall advise the Board as to its purposes and plans. It shall be invited to the Annual Meeting of the Society, and shall be called together at the expense of the Society to meet with the Board and its Budget Committee at that period of the year when the budget of the Society shall be under consideration.

At the first meeting of the Advisory Council, held in 1919, there were nine denominations which appointed representatives. This year 27 denominations named members to represent them.

This year's session was solemnized by the absence of General Secretary Haven, who in previous years had contributed so happily and constructively to the discharge of business, and of whose death suitable and affectionate remembrance was made.

January In Our Church Schedule

The Cause of Foreign Missions Has the Right of Way for the First Month of the Year

The month of January holds a strong place in the program of our Southern Presbyterian Church. On January 13, which was last Sunday, the attention of the church was called to the Presbyterian Foundation, which has its headquarters in Charlotte, with Dr. R. A. Dunn as the president of the Foundation and the Assembly's Trustees.

This Foundation is growing as a vital unit of the church, in calling attention to the opportunity of all who wish to make the church in some form of its work, a beneficiary of their wills. Suitable literature on this matter may be secured from Dr. R. C. Long, 305 Henry Grady Building, Atlanta, Ga.

The whole month of January is assigned to the consideration of our Foreign Mission program. All three of our church papers are issuing a special edition this week in which articles are offered containing facts from the field, illustrated with pictures of the fields and their operations. Other articles present reasons and exhortations about our Foreign Mission work from our central office in Nashville.

On January 27 our Sunday Schools are asked to have a special program so that the members of the schools may study and give to this cause of Foreign Missions. Suitable programs and suggestions may be obtained by writing Mr. E. D. Grant, Box 330, Nashville, Tenn. Mr. Grant is Educational Secretary for our Executive Committee.

The week of January 27 to February 2, 1929, is the week of the Great satisfaction was mutually expressed by the members of the Board of the Junior College, and the manifest interest in the prospective school by the people of the Maxton section greatly pleased all the Board. The project seems in a fair way to reach a successful fruition, and it is hoped that full announcements can be made in the near future.

JANUARY IN OUR CHURCH SCHEDULE

3 is Self-Denial Week for Foreign Missions. At this time, the churches, the women's and men's organizations, and the young people are asked to give themselves to meditation and prayer for the cause of Foreign Missions, and to set aside gifts outside the budget for this cause.

recognition was taken.

The devotional service, beginning at ten o'clock, included a participation in it by General Secretaries North and Brown, both of whom assumed their present positions on May 1. Before taking up the agenda, a stimulating brief address on the contribution to the Christian religion by the Society through its promotion of transactions was made by the Rev. Francis J. McConnell, D.D., resident Methodist Episcopal bishop in New York, and recently elected a ministerial member of the Board of Managers. Bishop McConnell is the new president of the Federal Council.

The forenoon was devoted to a consideration of items, an outline of which each representative had received several days in advance. The question of local churches becoming effective centers for the distribution of the Scriptures elicited numerous suggestions, the sense of the Council being that individual churches would co-operate to widen Scripture distribution if workable methods were more available. It was recommended by the Council "that during the coming year an experiment be made among a limited number of churches, placing with them Scriptures for sale, the plan to be worked out by officers in consultation with the Committee on Home Agencies."

Three matters of major importance were then introduced and thoughtfully considered. The item of a "pension plan" receiving the sympathetic attention of the Council, endorsement was given to the working out of a pension program. The special need for Scripture distribution existing in Latin America was amplified, as was also the desirability of the erection of a Bible House at Rio de Janeiro.

Considerable discussion centered in the consideration of ways whereby the Society may ensure more intelligent and better support of its work on the part of local churches and denominations. The Council endorsed with gratifying approval the methods now in use and urged their continuance. The idea was advanced that attention might well be given to the students of theological seminaries with a view to enlisting the interest of prospective ministers. Action was taken urging approach be made to the denominations through state organizations, where that method would be convenient.

The discussions of the above subjects were carried on with the sort of freedom desired by the officers, and resulted in bringing to the home office the type of idea and suggestion necessary for an intelligent co-operation between the supporting denominations and the Society.

Following the lunch hour, the Council met with the Budget Committee, and considered the budget for 1929. Prior to the meeting of the Council, the officers, having made a diligent study of the financial needs of their departments, had presented them to the various committees in charge, which had approved them. It was found that the estimated expenditures which seemed imperative for the ensuing twelve months, exceeded the anticipated income. Accordingly the budget of estimated expense was reduced by approximately $80,000, in order that the estimated income and the anticipated expenditures might balance.

The Council, after considering patiently and in detail every item of the reduced budget, totaling $1,295,849, approved it, reaffirming the resolutions of the Council of a year ago, which, among other significant items, included this statement:

The budget of the American Bible Society for 1929 unanimously approved by the Advisory Council does not begin to cover the opportunity open to the Society.

With this feeling of responsibility toward a need inadequately met, but determined to render every possible assistance individually and denominationally, the Council adjourned, concluding in prayer the discussions and actions of a day certain to be productive.

The denominations officially represented are as follows:

of each denomination was discussed at the committee meeting. It was agreed that only through their own service and contribution to the expenses and work of this movement could success be attained.

I. A. Martin, of Knoxville, chairman of the all-south extension committee, presided at the evening session of the convention, which was held at the Memorial auditorium, and marked the official opening of the convention. Percy S. Foster, of Washington, internationally-famous musical director, led the opening song service.

While the president of the World's Christian Endeavor Union, Dr. Daniel Poling, was not able to be at the convention, many others of the international and national officers were there. Among them were E. P. Gates, General Secretary, A. J. Shartle, treasurer, C. C. Hamilton, manager of C. E. World, H. N. Holmes, secretary for World Peace, Ira Landrith, superintendent of Citizenship, Stanley B. Vandersall, vocational superintendent.

Among the prominent visitors invited to speak on the program were Dr. E. W. Smith, Dr. H. H. Sweets, Dr. R. C. Long, E. D. Grant, Miss Anne Vandevanter.

Denominational luncheons were put on on Saturday, and these representatives of our own church spoke also at the gathering of the Southern Presbyterians.

It was decided at a meeting of the all-south extension committee Saturday afternoon that the committee virtually will be replaced by a new and larger group, which probably will be known as the all-south advisory committee.

Dr. Edward P. Gates, of Boston, general secretary of the international society, stated that the action was taken because the business of the society has grown so greatly in the past year that larger and better facilities for promoting the work are required. He pointed out that there are five times as many Christian Endeavor societies in the south today as there were ten years ago, and affirmed that this number is increasing rapidly and steadily.

"Our problem," Dr. Gates continued, "has arisen because our business has been augmented by the great increase in numbers, societies and unions during the immediate past. This increase is nation wide, yes, even world wide, in scope, but it is especially noticeable in Dixie, where the southern denominations are swinging behind the Christian Endeavor movement with a marvelous support that never before has been accorded our enterprise."

The present extension committee comprises the presidents of the various state unions in Tennessee, Kentucky, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Florida, Arkansas, Texas, Mississippi, Alabama and Georgia, several departmental secretaries and one or two workers who do not hold other official capacities. I. A. Martin, of Knoxville, has been chairman of the committee for the past several years.

The work of the enlarged committee will be in securing more hearty co-operation of the Endeavorers throughout the south in lending their support to their pastors, societies and unions. It is the aim of the committee to form an organization where every member of each individual society will arrange his time and services as will benefit his own local society the most.

Dr. Gates introduced the executive committee members who were present at the auditorium and gave interesting statistics regarding Christian Endeavor work throughout the world. He stated that there are 4,000,000 Christian Endeavor workers as well as 15,000 officials in the United States alone, giving their time and service to the promotion of the principles of the society. He also presented the regrets of Dr. Daniel R. Poling, of New York, president of the international society, who was to be a speaker at the convention, but was unable to be present.

Besides Dr. Gates, addresses were delivered by Drs. E. W. Smith, H. H. Sweets, Ira P. Landrith, E. B. Quick, William Hiram Foulks, C. M. Sherwood, S. B. Vandersall, E. D. Grant, and W. Roy Breg. Space does not permit any account of their speeches.

Besides the numerous banquets, the young people were given a sightseeing tour, and visited Lookout Mountain, Chicamauga Park, Missionary Ridge, Fort Oglethorpe and other historic places.

The convention adjourned on Sunday night.

DEVOTIONAL

A QUESTION

By Theodore E. Simmang

A few years ago, when the Oberamergau Players were in New York City Anton Lang passed along Broadway Rector, Wall and other streets unheeded and unnoticed. His face was lit up with the pleasant smile and he showed kindly countenance which Christians are taught was worn by their Savior. The flowing locks of hair and the light beard have been too often pictured not to have attracted immediate attention. But he mingled with crowds, crossed the busy highways of traffic, looked into the show windows, and none noticed him.

Somewhat later, and illustrative of the same point, there appeared in the same great metropolis other players who came from Europe to film the Life of Christ. Among them was one who, we are told, resembled the Savior, and was cast in that role. When this actor was read to have the scene of the Crucifixion begin, it was found that someone had stolen the cross upon which that immortal event was to have been represented. Not only that, but the donkey that was to be used had also been taken. It was seemingly a small affair, but delayed the making of the picture very greatly, and cost considerable trouble. Eventually the missing articles were replaced; and the picture proceeded.

One hears much about the heralded Second Coming; and (in that event) Christians might well contemplate, whether the Savior would receive at their hands the same consideration that Anton Lang and his prototype were shown.

We speak of this as being a "Commercial Age," when each looks out for Self. The speed of motor cars, and the desire to reach a destination, often make people forget the widow and the cripple trying to cross the highway. The age must jump with their crutches when the youth, often inflamed by alcohol, honk the horn.

Is it not a fair question to ask: will Jesus receive the tribute to which the Christian world claim Him entitled, He should come again?—Masonic Bulletin.

EVIL INSTINCTS CONQUERED

In Jack London's "Call of the Wild" he tells us of the magnificent St. Bernard dog, the pet of a wealthy family in California, that was stolen and sold to the Klondike freighter. In this new life the dog became a monster. The old instincts that long had laid dormant were aroused by the conditions. He fought and survived as wolves fight, and life "to the strongest." He learned to cut the bull loose from the herd and bring him down. When his owner died he went to the wolf pack and fought his way to mastery.

The splendid St. Bernard had gone bad and become the beast of prey. It was because there was something in the dog that responded to the howl of the wolf. The old nature was simply veneered over, and under certain conditions the veneer was scraped off.

That is what we have most to fear in our fight for character, in our endeavor to build Christian manhood and womanhood. The old wolf instincts are in the response to evil, the reply to temptation.

But, thank God, the Saving One within us is mightier than all evil instincts. He can quell them. "Greater is He than in you than he that is in the world." The Lord who mastered us can master the uprising sins for us.—Exchange.

MORNING PRAYER

Edgar G. Gammon

As I start anew the day
With its oft uncertain way,
May I seek Thy hand to guide,
Lest I wander from Thy side.

Burdens that I need not bear
Help me lay aside in prayer,
That to others I may be Full of strength and sympathy.

May I in this day of strife
Of the war that we call Life,
Sacrifice all selfish aims
In the aid of others' gains.

LAW-MAKERS—LAW-BREAKERS

We have all heard the old saying, "Shoemakers' children go barefooted."

We see a similar condition of affairs when we look into the civil life at Washington City. Here our laws are made with which this country is to be governed, and yet we see the strange contradiction, because nowhere in the United States is law more flagrantly violated. On the first day of the week, all over our land, stores are closed, houses of amusement are closed, yet in the capital city of the nation they are opened, and business goes on as on any week-day.

The inhabitants can do any business on the Sabbath that can be done on any week-day.

Of the 48 states of the Union all have laws to protect the Sabbath, but the District of Columbia has no such law.

Hon. William C. Hamner, of North Carolina, was shocked to find that such was the case. He said, "I have always lived under Sabbath observance, and never saw a Continental Sabbath till I came to Washington."

Real estate dealers ply their trade, and one contractor gave evidence before a Congressional Committee that he represented men to build 4,000 houses and 4,300 apartment houses each year." He further said that a Sabbath law would be disastrous to their trade, because more people went out to see houses on Sunday than would go for two months on week-days.

The operator of Earl Theater of Washington, whose name ends in "Sky," testified that 1000 visitors from without come to Washington on Sunday to attend the shows.

A Sabbath law is more necessary in Washington than any other city because in the first place, that city represents to people from other parts of America is, and then 60,000 government employees from every section of our land live there, and when they return home they take with them the idea of broken laws which nothing done; an impression that must be felt in the remotest hamlet of the land.

What a strange picture we must present to representatives of heathen lands who come to this so-called Christian land!

They find that Congress enacts strict laws to the observance of the Sabbath, laws that close all stores and places of amusement in every State of the Union, and fixes strict penalties for their violation, yet these same lawmakers allow this one city where they meet, to exempt from these laws and its citizens ply their trades, buy and sell, and cater to the amusement of the people.

There is a bill before Congress dealing with this matter.

Write to your representative and let him know that you are interested in its passage.

PRESBYTERIAN FOUNDATION DAY

Sometimes complaint is made that our lower courts are becoming independent of the higher ones, and fail to recognize the obligation to obey its orders.

This of course has its effect upon the membership of the Church, with the result that they obey the orders of higher courts, or not, as it suits them.

The result of this course of action is that we are drifting away from Presbyterianism into Congregationalism. Each Church becomes an entity, and does what seems best in its own eyes, as the Israelites did in the time of the Judges.

Pastors and elders should remember that it is their duty to carry out the order of the lower courts. The General Assembly, meeting in Atlanta, last May, designated January 13, 1929, as "Presbyterian Foundation Day."

It will be the duty of pastors to instruct their people in the nature of this Foundation, showing them that it is not a new cause in our Church, but it is a perpetuation of the Old Board of Trustees of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, with an enlargement of its scope. It carries with its duties, as members, no expense, but all service is voluntary.

R. A. Dunn, of Charlotte, is president and George M. Rose, Charlotte, is secretary treasurer. It has the same functions as a Trust Company among banking institutions.

"It will act as Executor or Trustee for any one desiring to make a direct gift while living, or by will, to the Institutions, Executive Committees, Board or other agencies of the Presbyterian Church. The purpose of the Foundation is: To keep before the people of the Presbyterian Church the need for remembering their Church in their wills; to accept any reasonable trust and execute it according to the terms of the donor; to write annuity bonds where a sum is intended for division among several causes; to encourage members to take out insurance for the Causes of the Church; to protect the smaller institutions of the Church, such as Mission Schools and Orphanages by making the Presbyterian Foundation the Trustee for any sum left to them by will. It affords the easiest, least expensive and surest way of dividing a gift or bequest, either small or large, among a number of causes."

NORTH CAROLINA SYNOD'S OPPORTUNITY IN PUBLICITY

The Synod of North Carolina has come to a new valuation of its publicity opportunity in the official organ of the Synod, the Presbyterian Standard. Through its Committee of Synod's Work it has definitely accepted the paper as its main instrument for getting the information as to its work over to the churches.

The Synod's Committee has now a page all its own in each issue of the Standard. It is named, "The Department of Synod's Work", headed with a streamer which runs across the page. Reports of committees, not only those which find a place in Synod's Minutes, but news stories of ad interim meetings, the appeals of chairmen of Synod and of each Presbytery, and stories of the work of any of Synod's agencies and schools will be given the right of way on this page.

This ought to be of great service to any Presbyterian chairman who wishes his appeal to reach his own pastors, for the paper now goes to every preacher in the Synod, because all have been put on the complimentary list, and it comes free to them just as the Presbyterian Survey goes to every minister in the Southern Church. And of course, it goes to several thousand members of the churches.

The Synod's Committee of Publicity is anxious that our ministers shall avail themselves of this opportunity to publish the news of the churches. They ask that every pastor shall cooperate with them in sending the items of news from their fields. Such items will find an early publication on the news pages of the Standard.

Every Presbytery ought to appoint one of its members as publicity agent, so that items may be sent which might be overlooked. General movements take place which no special person will feel responsible for, and yet these things are interesting and stimulating to other parts of the church. A Presbyterial agent will send in such news. It is hoped that the Presbyteries will appoint these men at an early date.

Brethren, let's work together, and use the printing press for the glory of God and the progress of Christ's Kingdom among us.

THE WEEK OF SELF-DENIAL FOR FOREIGN MISSIONS

The General Assembly has set aside January 27 to February 3 as a Week of Prayer and Self-Denial for Foreign Missions. All the pastors and sessions are asked to urge their congregations and all the factors and units of the church to observe this week as a period of prayer for all our missionaries and all their operations, for the members of our churches in foreign lands, and for the growth of Christianity among the heathen.

A season spent thus in prayer and thought for the advancement of Christ's work in the nations of the world which are not yet evangelized will have large benefits to all who join in this movement. Some time ought to be used to study the word of God in its exhortations to the Church to carry the message of eternal life to the ends of the earth. The Bible is a missionary book, and Jesus and his apostles make it plain that the Good News is meant for all men, and is not to be kept for our own exclusive use. The enlargement of our own souls is bound to accrue to us when we scatter the gospel blessings.

Again, we ought to obtain some useful and informing books and papers which will give us the facts about the achievements of the church in foreign lands. The timely appearance of "The Desire of All Nations," the current Foreign Mission Study book written by the facile hand and in the vivid style of Dr. Egbert W. Smith, our Executive Secretary of Foreign Missions, gives us the very book we need for this time. A copy may be obtained for fifty cents from E. D. Grant, Box 330, Nashville, Tenn. It will stir your heart as well as inform your mind.

A week thus spent in prayer and study ought to be concluded with as large an offering as we can give to this cause. We may give through the church treasurer, or through the Woman's Auxiliary, or the Men's Organization, or the Young People. Last year our Foreign Mission Committee was in great distress, for a tremendous deficit faced them as they neared the end of the year. All will remember the ringing cry of distress that went out over the church, when the General Assembly called for a cut of $120,000 on our Foreign Mission Budget. Not only our own church, but the whole of American Christendom was aroused by the situation, and many friends outside the church lifted up their voices in protest, and opened their purses to prevent the cut. The Southern Presbyterians sprang into the breach, and by the time the Presbyteries were meeting, not only was the cut avoided, but the old deficit of $290,000 was reduced by one half. We fear some of the other causes suffered by this special appeal, but it shows what can be done, when a church is aroused.

With this recent history still throbbing in our memories, let us make this Week of Self-Denial which we are approaching so effective that no such appeal will be necessary this year.

PRACTICAL CHURCH PROBLEMS

There are always Church problems to be solved, and to their credit we can place many sleepless nights, when the minister tries to solve them.

The above title is that of a book of 46 pages issued by Massanetta Springs Management. We opened this book to obtain an idea of its scope but, though other matters were pressing, we found our interest deepening, and we enjoyed the hard-sense solution of these problems by men who were not simply thinking, but who worked successfully their theories.

The topics discussed were:

How to secure an attendance at the Sunday night service.

The Church reaching the masses.

How to secure an attendance at the Prayer meeting.

Soul Winning—Type of Evangelism needed.

How to enlist and train the young people.

Country church problems and how to solve them.

This little pamphlet is just what many a pastor needs to get him out of the rut into which he has fallen.

This pamphlet can be obtained from Rev W. E. Hudson, Staunton, Va., at the price of 35 cents.

We advise our pastors to secure it.

CONTRIBUTED

TWO COMMON OBJECTIONS TO FOREIGN MISSIONS

C. Darby Fulton

During a journey from Cincinnati to Nashville on the train about a year ago I had the pleasure of talking to two men, men of the world we would call them, who looked at foreign missions from a somewhat different angle from my own. I was much interested in their viewpoints.

In the course of my conversation with the first of these two men, who proved to be a doctor, some casual mention was made of the fact that I had for several years been a missionary in Japan, whereupon my companion turned to me and said, "You know, there has always been one question that I have wanted to ask about this foreign mission business. I wonder if you would mind if I asked you with perfect frankness something that has been on my mind and heart for a long time?" "Why, no," I replied, "go ahead and I will do the best I can to answer it."

Why Should Christianity Compete With Old Religions?

"Well," he said, "it has always seemed to me to be highly presumptuous for a people of a young civilization like our own to go over there to China, and Korea, and India, and Japan, nations whose civilizations were thousands of years old before our was even born, and presume to tell them what they are to believe concerning God and religion; especially when we all concede the fact these people have a genius for religion, and that every great religious system under the sun of which we have any knowledge, has come to us from the East. I have a nurse working for me in my hospital in Louisville, who has traveled somewhat extensively in the Orient, and she shares with me the views that I have just expressed. What do you think about it?"

"Well," I said, "before I make definite reply, may I beg the privilege of asking you a question?"

"Certainly," he replied, "what is it?"

"Doctor," I said, "it has been a common custom until very recently in many oriental countries, and one that still persists in some, whenever a person was suffering from certain diseases, to take a long needle, perhaps eight or ten inches in length, and plunge it into the body at various places, with the idea that the whole cause of the trouble was demon-possession, and that the only way to get rid of it was to make it so uncomfortable for the evil spirit that he would have to get out!" "Now, Doctor," I said, "they have been practicing these methods of cure for thousands of years—long before what we call scientific medicine was ever known in this country. Now, the question I want to task you is this, 'Would you count it presumptuous in you yourself to leave your home and your friends and every traditional tie and go across the ocean to these far away lands, at your own expense, at no cost whatever to the people whom you go to serve; to spend your life in exile, so to speak, among a strange people, binding up their wounds, comforting their hearts, and suggesting to them that there are more effective, less painful, ways of treating simple human maladies than by means of these drastic methods that they employ? Would you count that presumption, or would you consider it a kindness?'"

The Doctor replied, "I believe I see your point."

Let's Convert Our Heathen at Home First

A little later I was talking to the second of the two men to whom reference has been made. In the course of our conversation he turned to me rather suddenly, and said, "What's your line?"

"I travel for the Presbyterian Church in the U. S.," I said. "My business is to go from church to church and see if I can keep our people interested and informed about foreign missions."

"Foreign missions, did you say?" the man inquired with an incredulous inflection.

"Yes," I said, "foreign missions."

He turned to me and said, "You know I have never been exactly sold on this foreign mission business."

"Well," I asked, "what's the matter with it?"

"It has always seemed to me," he replied, "to be an inexcusable waste of the church's money to send missionaries all the way across the Pacific or the Atlantic ocean to Africa or China or Japan, as the case may be; to set them up in housekeeping over there, and give them schools, hospitals and chapels, and all the other equipment they need for their work at an enormous cost to the church, when we still have hundreds of thousands and millions of heathen right here at our own door. Why don't we finish the job here first and make every man in this country a Christian; then there will be time enough for us to consider those nations across the sea. Frankly, I would like to know what you think of that."

"That's a fair question," I answered, "and I am going to do the best I can to answer it, but first let me ask, 'What's your line?'"

"I sell cigarettes," he said. "My business is to go from town to town and introduce our brand of cigarettes into the market."

"That's very interesting to me," I replied. "Have you sold your brand of cigarettes to every living American?" "By no means," he said. "There are millions in our country who don't smoke at all, and millions more who don't smoke our brand."

"Why is it then," I asked, "that when on your own admission there are still millions here at your own door who do not smoke your brand, your firm insists on sending her salesmen all the way across the Pacific ocean to China putting up expensive posters all over that enormous country, sending her representatives to the most far off places, where even missionaries have seldom gone, and giving away hundreds of thousands of free packages of cigarettes each year in an effort to induce the Chinese people to smoke? Why don't you put a cigarette between the lips of every living American first, then there will be time enough for you to consider those nations beyond the sea?"

"You don't understand business," he replied.

"Well, I will admit that," I agreed. "But, what's the matter with my argument?"

"Well, you see, we are looking for business expansion," he explained. "The markets in this country have been well worked over. Every man who walks the streets finds advertisements of a dozen different brands of cigarettes flaunted in his face every day of his life. But over there in China is the biggest undeveloped market in all the world, four hundred millions of people as yet scarcely touched, and we want to get in on the ground floor before the competition becomes too keen."

"Friend," I said, "in my opinion, that is an unanswerable argument; and by reason of that same argument, we who are interested in the expansion of the Kingdom of Christ can never rest so long as there are whole areas of human life where not even one hint has ever gone that a Savior came and bled and died that man might be saved."

"I believe I see your point," he said.

WHAT IS THE CHURCH WAITING FOR?

Egbert W. Smith

Last year's great effort was to prevent a cut, to avoid a retreat, to simply hold our own. For several years this has been all our Church has had the faith and courage to attempt. When the army of the Lord is thus content to dig itself in, to cease advancing, to disregard its Great Commander's "Go," it is already in retreat. Four years ago our Church's missionary force was 516. Today it is 464. If receipts continue to decline as they have done since April 1, the figure will drop lower still. What is our Church waiting for?

For More Missionary Recruits?

We have a list of waiting and eager candidates that for lack of funds we cannot send. Scores of others would offer but for their awareness that our Church is not increasing, but is reducing, its missionary force.

For More Native Evangelists?

We could train and send forth double and treble the number we now have, to carry Christ into tens of thousands of unreached villages, but for lack of funds.

For the Native Churches to do Their Part?

They are doing their part nobly, but as yet and for a long time to come, they are but tiny oases amid vast Saharas of destitution. In China, for example, the evangelical church members are but one in 1,000 of the population, in Brazil one in 800 while in our Southern states they are one in three. Should not the strong help the weak and so fulfill the law of Christ?

For the Doors to Open Wider?

The doors of opportunity in all our six foreign fields are already wide open. Our missionaries are rapidly returning to China. In that country and in Mexico they see in the clearing political situation the dawning of the brightest day of opportunity they have ever known.

For the Appeal of a Greater Need?

What need can be greater than that of the 34,000,000 for whose evangelization our Church has solemnly and definitely assumed responsibility and of whom a large part are in total darkness? For example, Rev. J. W. Vinson recently wrote me that in his Haichow field with its population of 1,750,000, "nine-tenths of the people have never even heard the gospel or read a religious tract." Substantially the same is true of the seven other Stations in our North Kiangsu field of 14,000,000. Mr. Vinson mentioned several towns of from 1,500 to 6,000 population "From all of these the call, 'Come over and help us,' has come time and again but is still unanswered. Many in these towns have died since the call first came, but, alas, because of our neglect none of these has 'died in faith.'"

For More Money?

We are the richest nation that is or ever has been on the earth. Of this unparalleled wealth our Southern Presbyterian Church has its full share. Shall our material comforts and luxuries be swift witnesses against us at the bar of God in proof of what we might have done for our poor brothers and sisters groping out yonder in the dark?

What the Week of Prayer and Self-Denial is For

The week of Prayer and Self-Denial is for confession, in our pulpits and prayer closets, that we have no valid reason for waiting, not one reason that we can honestly present either to God or to our own consciences. As a Church we have spent on ourselves, on our own comforts and luxuries, our own ease and self-indulgence, those funds that God gave us in trust for carrying the gospel to the unreached. Every pastor knows this is true and should summon His people to repentance and to bring forth fruits meet for repentance. Every auxiliary president knows this is true. Every church officer knows it is true. Let this be our prayer, voiced in every pulpit and prayer closet in our Church, "Search us, O God; show us our failure; show us our duty to Thee and to the unreached; and baptize us, pastors and people, with the sacrificial spirit of Him who 'came not to be ministered unto but to minister and to give His life a ransom for many.'"

MACEDONIAN CRIES

J. W. Vinson, China

I was in the city of Fangshan, a town of 7,500 inhabitants, twenty-five miles south west of Haichow, one day some years ago. Two of the city elders called on me in the inn where I was stopping.

"We have heard something of the religion which you Americans are preaching," said they. "Can't you open a chapel and a day school here in our city? We shall be glad to let you have the use of one of our old temples for a preaching place. We know that you have no superstitious fear of the idol that is in this temple, so when you wish to conduct your service you may just move the god out of your way until you finish."

Wreck of Primary Class Room, James Sprunt Academy, Kyangyin, China. See desks and furniture taken out and destroyed by soldiers. Doors and windows burned as fuel.

They seemed thoroughly interested and in earnest, but just at that time we had expanded the work in other places to the limit of our resources so our sorrowful answer had to be, "We are sorry but we cannot do so NOW." As with Felix the "convenient season" for the church to heed this CALL has NEVER come. Fangshan is as destitute today as it was twelve years ago when this golden opportunity first presented itself.

At the close of a warm sultry day near the end of May, 1916, an old Chinese gentleman—68 years of age with gray hair and an unusually long, white, patriarchal beard, was ushered by the gate keeper into my study at Haichow. He was dusty and travel-stained—he had walked 30 miles purposely to see me, but he had one of the kindest, noblest faces I have ever looked upon.

"My name is Chang," he said as he sipped his cup of tea. "Ten years ago while in Harbin I heard the gospel. I bought a Bible and have been reading it ever since. My home is in Haitou, 30 miles away. I do not know a great deal about the WAY and would like to know more and learn it more perfectly. There are more than 3,000 people in the village where I live, all more ignorant than I. Our children are growing up without there are no schools in our town. I have come to beg you to open a chapel and a school in Haitou and send a man to teach us the "Way to Life."

I visited him several times in his home. Gave him a number of books and gospel tracts. He had the hunger of those who "hunger after righteousness" as my friendship with this old man is one of the sweetest memories of my life in China. The following September he visited us again in Haichow bringing two of his grandsons to put them in our school. He never got the school nor the chapel he came 30 miles seeking for. THE FUNDS were insufficient. I always add his name to the list of those in Hebrews who "all died in the faith not having received the promises."

What shall I say more? Time would fail me to tell of Kan-yu, Dabudzi, Anchuen, Chihlushu—one a city of 6,000 the other, large market towns of 1,500 to 2,500 inhabitants. From all of these the CALL "Come over and help us," has come time and time again but is UNANSWERED. Many in these towns have died since the Call first came, but alas, because of OUR NEGLECT none of these have "died in faith."

The Inarticulate Cry

There are 1,750,000 people in the Haichow field. Over ten percent have ever heard the gospel or read a religious tract. The other NINE-TENTHS like those Nineveh—in THINGS SPIRITUAL—"cannot discern between their right hand and their left." They are starving, searching, seeking, longing, but FOR WHAT they know not. Oh, the appeal of this inarticulate cry their SPIRITUAL IGNORANCE.

Letters have just come from the field relating how a band of young men had recently entered the temple of the "city god", tied ropes around this tutelary deity the city and pulled him from his pedestal. After dragging him through the streets of the city, they pounded him with pieces, throwing the pieces in the refuse heap outside the gates.

Their own gods are insufficient. What a challenge give to them the LIVING CHRIST to take the place of these dumb, lifeless idols—the work of their own hands.

CHURCH PAPER PUBLICITY

An Appreciation

Dear Dr. Bridges:

I have just read that wonderfully fine editorial page 3 of the Presbyterian Standard. There are one or two little indications to my mind that this came from your pen. I am writing to tell you how much I enjoyed reading it and how greatly I appreciate the help you have given us in our work.

There was just a little doubt in my mind as to whether this came from your pen, because the dig at the Secretary was so exceedingly mild. I am sure you would have enjoyed writing a little bit more if you might have flayed us just a little, but I know this message from your pen is going to be of great help to us.

With all your faults I love you still!

I know you are right in what you say about the publicity we can receive through the church papers. We profess to believe that these papers are essential to growth and development of the church and I am surprised to see how little material proof we have given to men of our appreciation. I think all of our Communion ought to be spending, three or four times as much in advertisements as they are, in order that papers may have a fuller life.

With kindest regards, I am,

Your grateful friend,
Louisville, Ky. Henry H. Sweets.

DEPARTMENT OF SYNOD'S WORK

CONDUCTED UNDER THE AUSPICES OF THE COMMITTEE OF TWENTY-SEVEN APPOINTED BY SYNOD TO PROMOTE ITS ACTIVITIES

SUNDAY SCHOOL FOREIGN MISSION PROGRAM FOR JANUARY 27

Edward D. Grant

In accordance with its policy for improvement of all Foreign Mission educational materials, the Educational Department of the Foreign Mission Committee in Nashville has prepared three very fine Sunday School programs are comparatively short and need not displace any to all those who call for them. These special programs are comparatively short and need not displace at all the regular Sunday School lesson for that Sunday.

The Program entitled "Christ the Hope of the World" is a general program to be used in Sunday Schools which are in the habit of having all the Sunday School together in one room on special occasions. This provided for special participation in the program of the various ages in the Sunday School. Where the whole Sunday School cannot come together for this program, with very slight modifications it can be used very profitably by Intermediate, Senior, Young People and Adult Departments or any combination of these.

For Junior Departments a special program under the title "Going to School in Africa" has been prepared. This is a very brief but interesting presentation of mission school work and the results of this work in Africa. By this program Juniors will be brought very much closer to the missionaries in Africa through the eyes of the African boy and girl of Junior age.

The special program for Beginner and Primary Departments is entitled "Let the Little Ones Come." It is so arranged as to appeal very definitely to the imagination and the hearts of the little children in the Sunday School.

All of the special Sunday School programs named here are free and will be sent to any Sunday School that sends to the Educational Department, Box 330, Nashville, Tennessee, for them. Order what you need, and make January 27 not only a Foreign Mission day in your Sunday School but also a good beginning for the Week of Prayer and Self-Denial for Foreign Missions in your church.

THE CHURCH SCHOOL OF MISSIONS

Edward D. Grant

For several years Schools of Missions have been held in our Southern Presbyterian churches with increasingly greater success and interest. In January and early in February this year indications are that more Schools of Missions studying the approved Foreign Mission Study books will be held than any year thus far.

Four years ago nearly every School of Missions was held under the auspices of the Women's Auxiliary of the local church. Today, however, quite a change is coming about. The women are even more interested than they were previously, this being due largely to the fact that Mrs. Winsborough and the Woman's Auxiliary have so heartily endorsed the whole School of Missions movement. Yet, remarkably enough, the ministers of our church seem to be taking the lead more and more in conducting these Schools of Missions, and these Schools are for the most part being held with the full endorsement of the Church Session. This in itself indicates that the School of Missions is a going enterprise, and that these Schools are accomplishing things worth while in the churches that try them.

Although the Foreign Mission Season did not open until last January 1 of this year, a School of Missions studying Foreign Missions was held last fall in the Old Stone Church of Lexington Presbytery, Virginia, under the direction of the pastor and session. Of this School, one of the leading women of that church makes the following report:

"Our pastor, Mr. McBryde, will send you the facts and figures about our School of Missions, but I want to send 'hallelujah' letter privately. We just had the best school ever—more interest—more people studying and praying, more people praying, for Foreign Missions. My class of young people—five received credits for missing a meeting."

The Educational Department of the Foreign Mission Committee in Nashville is ready and willing to help any church to get started in a School of Missions. All of the printed instructions, enrollment blanks, attendance certificates, and other helps are free. All that a church has to do is just to write for them. Special "teaching aids" have been prepared for the teachers of classes that no school may drag through uninterestingly due to lack of sufficient teacher's material. All ages from Beginners through the Adults are taken care of in the School of Missions.

If your church has made no announcement yet as to whether you will have a Church School of Missions this winter ask about it. Perhaps your pastor and session are merely waiting a word from you to find out whether you really want a Church School of Missions before they take the lead.

APPEAL FOR FOREIGN MISSIONS

All Pastors in Mecklenburg Presbytery, Dear Friends:—As chairman of the Presbytery's Committee on Foreign Missions, I have received a letter from Dr. Egbert Smith asking me to get the entire presbytery active for this cause during this month. In view of the fact that with this week's issue the "Standard" goes to every minister in the Synod of North Carolina. I am taking advantage of the editor's kind offer to remind you of Dr. Smith's work.

Last year by the hardest sort of effort the proposed cut in the money for missions was avoided. However, this accomplishment did not allow even the thought of any advance step toward reaching the millions yet untouched. It is for this unhappy throng that Dr. Smith is appealing especially.

Every pastor knows the position he occupies with his people. Your attitude to any cause largely determines what your people will do. Will you not make a most earnest effort to see that the self-denial envelopes are placed into the hands of your people and encourage them to go the second mile for this great cause?

Cordially yours,
Edgar G. Gammon,

Presbytery's Chairman of Foreign Missions.

FIELDS WHITE TO THE HARVEST

Lucy Hall Morton

The town of Fructal is included in the large Barretos field but is difficult to reach because it is off the railroad and the journey is an expensive one for the great Rio Grande river must be crossed by ferry, thus entering another state (Minas Geraes). So it rarely got a visit from the overworked pastor or one of his helpers. The "Macedonian cry" reached me, however, and I kept thinking about the place until I decided, or was "led" to go there and spend a while. I knew few people there as I had never been to the place but I took with me a little necessary furniture and went in November of last year. I stored my furniture and stayed in the home of a government school teacher for ten days while looking for a suitable place to live and do my work.

I arrived in Fructal on a Wednesday and the teacher permitted me to begin the Scripture and prayer services and the Sabbath school in her house at once. A young man of twenty years, Senor Alexandre Mello dos Santos, who belongs to one of the best families of the place, and had recently married a niece of the teacher in whose house I was staying, called on me the day I arrived. I told him what I had come to do and he who was a Roman Catholic, volunteered to help in any way and every way. He remarked "God has, at last, remembered our city." He not only attended all the meetings and the Sabbath school himself, but brought his friends, and being very highly thought of and respected in the place, that meant a great deal to me and to the Cause for which I was there. He paid strict attention to all the reading and explaining of the Word of God, studied it himself and told the leading men of the town what we were doing and the message the Lord was sending them through us. I often told him that he must prepare himself to direct these meetings for I was doing a man's job and there was no man to do it but himself.

Soon after that I left Fructal for my health was shaken and I had decided to come to the United States to see my daughter who was ill. I had spent only three months in Fructal and during that time through the Daily Vacation Bible School, Sabbath school, Wednesday and Sunday night services, visiting from house to house, and especially through this young man, Senor Alexandre Mello dos Santos, the message had been given all over the town. In September, Senor Alexandre made the public profession of his faith in Christ and was received into the church by Mr. Daffin and is now preaching, directing the Sunday School and scattering the Bible high and low. I will quote from a very recent letter from Mrs. Daffin: "The progress of the Gospel in Fructal is wonderful! Fifteen persons are asking to profess their faith. Senor Alexandre preaches, visits the sick, sells Bible, and evangelizes all the time and writes to Mr. Daffin every week.

There are hundreds of towns in the big states of Sao Paulo, Minas, Goyaz, and Matto Grosso that are sending forth the "Macedonian Cry," if only there were enough servants of the Lord with ears attuned to catch it, with lives to give and means to spend in the great and blessed work of "reaching the unreached."

CHURCH NEWS

A PASTOR GOES TO JAPAN Brevard, N. C., Adopts Resolutions

WHEREAS:—

The Reverend V. A. Crawford, who has been the beloved pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Brevard, North Carolina, since the 8th day of May, 1925, and his wife, Mrs. Martha Susan Wofford Crawford, whom he married soon after becoming pastor of the church, have been appointed Missionaries to the Empire of Japan by the Executive Committee of Foreign Missions, and,

WHEREAS:—
The Reverend Mr. Crawford has tendered his resignation to the Brevard Church, Be It Resolved:

FIRST:
That the congregation of the Brevard Church accept the resignation of Mr. Crawford with deep regret at the severance of relations which have been of such great mutual pleasure, benefit and blessing, but also with sincere felicitations to him and Mrs. Crawford, and to those to whom they are going to minister in the Kingdom of God, that such a noble privilege and high honor should be conferred upon them.

SECOND:
That the congregation of the Church wishes to express to Mr. Crawford their sincere appreciation of his consecrated efforts in his ministry; of his high character, his rare spiritual gifts, of his power in the pulpit, and of his devoted and energetic attention to the duties and responsibilities of his charge.

THIRD:
That the Congregation equally wishes to record their gratitude to Mrs. Crawford for her labors as a teacher in the Sunday School, a leader in the young people's work, a member of the Choir, and a member and President of the Ladies Auxiliary, and an active and zealous promoter of every good work in which it was possible for her to engage in the Church and in the Community.

FOURTH:
That the Congregation in wishing for both of them a pleasant and successful voyage to their destination, desires to invoke on their behalf the protection and guidance of our heavenly Father, the continued accompaniment of His Spirit, and the sustaining power of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ: that they may be blessed in their labor among the people of Japan, and that they may be made the instrumentality of the redemption of many souls and the enlargement of God's Kingdom.

That these resolutions shall be made in five copies, one each for Mr. and Mrs. Crawford, one for the Church papers, one for the Committee of Foreign Missions, and one for the Session of this Church with the recommendation that they be spread upon the minutes of Session.

PROCLAMATION OF RED RIVER PRESBYTERY

The Presbytery of Red River in session Monday, adopted the following proclamation to all the Presbyterians and their friends located throughout North Louisiana. There are 28 ministers and 42 churches in this Presbytery, and her members are found in every part of our territory, many of them in places where we have no local organization. This proclamation will also be of interest to all who are concerned with the general growth of the Church of whatsoever denomination or faith they may be called. Following is the proclamation as adopted by the Presbytery and ordered read in all the churches on the first Sunday of the New Year.

1929—THE YEAR OF JUBILEE

"Then Shalt Thou Cause the Trumpet of the Jubilee to Sound."—Lev. 25:9.

To the Presbyterians of Red River Presbytery, Their Friends and Neighbors:

Greetings:
The Presbytery of Red River was organized at Minden, La., February 10th, 1854. Through these seventy-five years of our life we have come with the good hand of our God upon us. It is eminently fitting now that we make mention of His goodness, recount His many blessings, review the history, and take stock of our resources. It is a time to consider again our stand and mission in the world; and then turning our faces to the future, it is a time to dedicate ourselves anew to our mission and gird ourselves again to our task.

Therefore, the Presbytery of Red River in called session at Shreveport, La., December 31st, 1928, hereby takes the following action, viz:

- That we proclaim the year of our Lord 1929 as our Diamond Jubilee.

2. That we resolve as a Presbytery and call upon all our subordinate organizations, constituent churches, and all our people, to observe this whole year as a year of special consecration and endeavor, especially that they shall observe it with appropriate celebrations in every church and convention.

3. That we call the attention of our churches to the essential spirit of Jubilee—It is freedom from restraints and liberty for action. The Presbytery, therefore, calls upon all our churches to make an earnest and determined effort to set this spirit free in their midst.

(1) If there is debt binding down any of our churches, rise and break these shackles.

(2) If there is lack of equipment hindering any of our work, rise and provide it.

(3) If there is indifference and lack of consecration impeding our work, rise and catch the heavenly Gleam.

(4) And if there is lack of cooperation any where, rise and follow our Divine Leader.

4. That the direction and carrying out of these resolutions, so far as they relate to the general organization and work of Presbytery has been committed to a special committee composed of Rev. U. B. Currie, Rev. Jasper K. Smith, Rev. B. C. Bell, Rev. W. F. O'Kelley, Rev. R. M. McGehee, Mr. W. E. Glassell, and Mr. F. P. Stubbs.

So far as these resolutions relate to the individual churches, the proper observance and practical use of them are commended to our Pastors and sessions, assisted by all the local church organizations.

"The Spirit of the Lord is upon me,
To proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord."—Isaiah 61:2.

Signed:

C. L. Power, Moderator.
R. M. Power, Stated Clerk.
B. C. Bell, Special Agent.

Please announce:

The Jubilee Convention of the Laymen of Red River Presbytery will meet in Minden, La., on Tuesday, February 19th, 1929. This is the Eleventh Annual Convention and plans are made for a great convention.

HOME MISSIONS IN BIRMINGHAM

One year and a half ago about fifteen men, women and children gathered on Sunday morning under the trees at Fairfield Highlands and organized a Sunday School. No building of any kind could be secured for its home. About two months later a cottage was rented. In November a church was organized with ten members. In July of this year a small church was erected by the congregation and entered August 1. The church now has 43 members, a Sunday School of 80, a Woman's Auxiliary and a Christian Endeavor Society. Dr. W. H. Hopper preaches there each Sunday afternoon. You ask of the fruitage of Presbytery's Home Missions? Here is one sample.

A Sunday School was organized December 1, in Jonesboro, looking towards the organization of a church in the near future in that growing section of the City of Bessemer.

Forty years ago on the corner of 6th Avenue and 19th Street, Bessemer, a little church was organized with 18 members. A frame church was built for its work on a lot donated by the Bessemer Land Co. Twenty-one years later the present brick church, which is now the home of the First Presbyterian Church of Bessemer was erected at the corner of 3rd Avenue and 18th Street. When organized it was assisted and nourished by the Home Mission Committee of North Alabama Presbytery until it became strong enough to support its own work. Bessemer First is now the second largest church in Birmingham Presbytery in membership and gives $1,000 each year to the Home Missions Committee to help sustain our smaller churches and organize new work in communities without gospel privileges and $3,000 more for other benevolences.

Was the Home Mission Committee's work worth while forty years ago?

Mrs. R. C. Anderson, Montreat, N. C.	350.00
Mrs. W. S. Morton, Richmond, Virginia	350.00

Some receipts in part payment for furnishing room have not been listed but will be listed when the full amount of $350.00 is paid.

In behalf of the Mountain Retreat Association and the church at large we thank most heartily the donors of the above listed gifts.

Every effort is being put forth to have Assembly Inn ready for the meeting of the General Assembly at Montreat in May, but at no time has the progress of the work been more hampered for the lack of funds as at present. It is evident that one of three things must happen in the very near future.

Larger and more contributions must be made promptly for the completion and furnishing of Assembly Inn or about $50,000 will have to be borrowed or the Assembly will find the building unfinished and unfurnished.

In light of the service this institution is rendering the church, the many appeals that the Assembly has made for funds for the completion of Assembly Inn and the great values we are getting for so low a cost, at least a dollar's worth for every fifty cents spent, it seems strange that it should be necessary to make further appeal for this building.

If the building should remain unfinished or if money has to be borrowed and the building mortgaged for its completion the church will have only itself to blame and still have to bear the loss of the consequences.

The kitchen has to be finished and furnished at a cost of about $4,000.00. Furnishings for the dining room should cost nearly as much. There are about eighty bedrooms yet to be furnished at a cost of about $350.00 per room. Our churches, auxiliaries and individuals might promptly furnish these, having the rooms to bear the names selected by the donors. Furnishings for five rooms has already been provided for.

A liberal cooperation on the part of the churches at Montreat friends would easily finish the task begun and would be of immense value to the whole church.

Please send all checks and subscriptions to the Mountain Retreat Association, Montreat, N. C., marked for "Assembly Inn."

R. C. Anderson, President.

NORTH CAROLINA

Charlotte—Two Charlotte, N. C., boys, Esley Anderson and Robert Ferguson have won the scholastic honor of being placed on the honor roll this winter the McCallie School for boys at Chattanooga, Tenn.

The McCallie honor roll contains the names of students who have made an average of 90 percent or above. It is compiled at the end of each school month, all subjects being taken into consideration in determining a student's average for the month. Esley Anderson's average of 92.2 percent and Robert Ferguson's average of 90 percent are significant when it is considered that on 20 percent of the student body wins the honor roll distinction.

The McCallie school observes a strict moral and religious discipline as well as gives a fine physical and mental training.

CALLED MEETING OF MECKLENBURG PRESBYTERY

The Constitutional requirements having been met, I hereby call Mecklenburg Presbytery to meet in called session for the following business:

- To act on the request of Rev. Parks W. Wilson for the dissolution of the pastorate at West Avenue Church, Charlotte, N. C.
- To dismiss Mr. Wilson to the Presbytery of Memphis if the way is clear.
- To take action on any business arising out of the above.

Time and place of called meeting, First Presbyterian Church, Charlotte, N. C., Friday, January 25, at 11:30 a. m.

ADJOURNED MEETING

Mecklenburg Presbytery will meet in adjourned session on Monday, February 4, at 10:00 a. m., for the purpose of engaging in a season of intercession for the divine blessing on the Church at large, and on this Presbytery, for its work, and especially with regard to the Every Member Canvass on March 10.

S. B. LYERLY, Moderator.

J. G. GARTH, Stated Clerk.
Charlotte, January 15, 1929.

Presbyterian Orphans' Home, Barium Springs—In a recent Sunday morning, services were conducted at Little Joe's Church by a deputation from Davidson College Y. M. C. A., composed of R. E. Kell and E. B. Peterson. Mr. Peterson brought a message in song and Mr. Kell preached, using as his subject "Love, the fundamental Principle of the Christian Religion," the most helpful message. The young men made a splendid impression, and we hope they will be frequent visitors to Barium. Our pastor, Rev. W. C. Brown, is still confined to his bed, though at this writing we think there is slight improvement.

SOUTH CAROLINA

Rock Hill—The First and Oakland Churches have had a two weeks' Bible study conducted by Arthur Smith, of Long Island, N. Y. Mr. Smith specializes in talks on the subject of prayer. The meetings here were well attended and great interest was taken in the study and messages. Mr. Smith is open for other engagements of this kind, and may be addressed 153 Onslow Place, Kew Gardens, L. I. His campaigns are styled, Turn-Top Campaigns.

Ebenezer—Ruling Elder J. B. Neely and his wife, Susan Matthews-Neely celebrated their golden wedding on December 26, at their home in Ebenezer, Rock Hill, S. C. The anniversary was on December 17, but the celebration was held on the 26th in order that all of the children might be present. They have nine children and eighteen grandchildren. There has not occurred a death in all these years, and all of them were present except one grandson who was ill in bed. Two other couples in the Ebenezer community and church have already passed their golden anniversary, viz.: Rev. and Mrs. J. B. Mann, and Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Matthews.

VIRGINIA

Newport News—Fourteen new members were welcomed by the First Church, Dr. Wellford, pastor, at January communion service. They came from various families, over half of which were new to the congregation.

Winter Park Presbyterian Church, Richmond—Features of the Christmas program of this church included a Christmas tree for small children; banquet in honor of college boys and girls; and a "Christmas party" for all adults. At the "White Gift" service on Sunday preceding Christmas, there was an offering of $360.74, for the Lynchburg Orphanage. On the same Sunday, nine persons were received into the membership of the church. Shortly before their departure for the holidays, the Glee Club of the Training School gave a Christmas cantata, in Schauffler hall.

Vestminster Church, Richmond—On December 31 Rev. W. S. Golden ended his pastorate of more than ten years in this church, and moved to take up his pastorate of the church at Carthage, N. C. The congregational meeting held on December 9 concurred with a regret in the pastor's request to Presbytery for dissolutions of the pastoral relation, and adopted resolutions expressing its appreciation and affection for him and his family. On the night of December 10 the ladies' Bible class in a body, about thirty in number, came to give Mrs. Golden a surprise party. This was a very beautiful expression of their regard for her. A member of the business women's circle, of which Mrs. Golden has been chairman, on behalf of the circle, presented her with a handsome pocket-knife. The Woman's Auxiliary, which has always remembered the Pastor's family at Christmas time, presented a handsome occasional chair and mahogany table.

The closing services on December 30 were such as to leave a deep impression upon all present. The pastor preached on "The Things Which Abide," the text being "Now abideth faith, hope and love." Immediately after the sermon, Col. John W. Williams, member of the Session, stepped forward and asked the privilege of making a few remarks. In a most timely and beautiful speech he thanked Mr. Golden for his labors and for his influence in the city and church, and presented him, on behalf of the members of the church with a bag containing $125.00 in cash. Before the pastor could begin to speak his remarks, the choir was softly singing "God Be With Us 'Til We Meet Again." The best wishes of the Vestminster attend the Golden's in their new home.

Portsmouth First—A Christmas shop, conducted by the Auxiliary for two days in early December, was a lightful social occasion and netted the organization a neat sum. The Home Mission study in the fall, sponsored by the Auxiliary, was conducted by the pastor at the Wednesday evening prayer services for several evenings. They study of Stewardship, sponsored by the Auxiliary and the men's club, was conducted in the same way later. The meeting of the Elizabeth City district of Young People's work in Norfolk Presbytery met in our new Sunday School building in December, and was largely attended. The men's club furnished a team to put on a typical program at the fall meeting of Presbytery, and also at the conference for the men of the Presbytery in December. The Sunday school had a White Gift service during Christmas week. The new building is proving a great convenience to the school in its departmental work. At the Christmas season the pastor and his family were kindly remembered by numerous gifts from individuals, groups and organizations in the congregation including good things for the table, per-

THE CHALLENGE OF THE FOREIGN MISSION SEASON

"Every onward purpose was generated in prayer and carried forward by prayer." To our Church now there comes the challenge to "go forward" to reach the unreached populations who know not Christ. We must advance on our knees. We must be about our Father's business, and in earnest prayer laying hold on Him who is our all-sufficient Resource. "Let us besiege the Throne of Grace for an outpouring upon our Church of the Spirit of prayer and sacrifice that shall mean a forward movement along our whole firing line."

"Pray with ceasing."
"Continue steadfastly in prayer."

The following topics for prayer are suggested especially for use during the Week of Prayer for Foreign Missions, January 27-February 3, but they may be used in personal or united prayer during the entire Foreign Mission season. They may be adopted by some as suggestions for their continual intercession for this great cause of advancing Christ's Kingdom in foreign lands. As prayer sonal gifts, and a purse of gold. During the year 1928 twenty-seven were added to the membership of the church, 12 of these on profession.

APPALACHIA

Asheville, N. C.—Rev. P. N. Gresham, pastor of West Asheville Church, has accepted a call to the First Church, Savannah, Ga. The church, the community and the Presbytery deeply regret to see him leave. He has served this church well and acceptably for ten years. It has grown rapidly and is in good condition for making even greater progress.

ARKANSAS

Fort Smith—The Sulphur Springs Church is a mission of the First Church of this city, and the pastor of this church is Rev. R. B. Cotton. The State Evangelist, Rev. E. L. Wilson, and the Evangelistic Singer, Rev. J. B. Green, held a meeting in this church recently and more than 125 persons reconsecrated their lives to the Lord Jesus Christ. The Booster Band was most interesting and successful. There were three or four additions to the church during the meeting and the prospects were that several others would join by letter and by profession of faith. Being a mission church, the financial obligations were assumed in most part by the Synod's Committee, but the church gave at least $65 to meet the expenses of the meeting. This church is located in a rapidly growing section of Fort Smith, and has a very bright future.

Heber Spring—This church was destroyed by the great cyclone that passed over Arkansas over a year ago and the membership were left in bad plight. Not only was their church completely demolished, but many of them had their homes and stores blown away, and they decided that they would disband and not attempt to rebuild. But the Superintendent of Synodical Home Missions, Rev. W. M. Scott, went to them and assured them that they would get help from the home mission funds and that the Southern Presbyterians would stand by them. They then determined to rebuild and, by getting aid from Synodical Church Erection Fund and the Assembly Home Mission Fund and what they could do themselves, a very substantial building was erected and, during the closing of the old year, Dr. Scott held protracted services, assisted by Mrs. Scott, who entertained the children with her beautiful stories. The people had a new heart and the crowds came out and the building was filled to overflowing several times. Seven valuable members were received and the church and town face the future with hope and cheer.

MISSISSIPPI

Clarksdale—The First Church of this city put on an interesting Christmas program on Sunday, December 23, in the Sunday school under the leadership of Mrs. H. P. Mobley and Mr. J. F. Brown, at the regular Sunday school hour. An offering of around $70 was taken for Palmer Orphanage. Around Christmas time the women's and men's organizations of the church gave the sum of $175 to Ministerial Relief as a free-will offering. All of the departments of this church are in a flourishing condition. Rev. C. V. Crabb is pastor.

is offered up to each of the six mission fields, make your petitions definite, according to the work and problems of that field as you know them. Make special mention of the missionaries supported by your church or Auxiliary. "The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much."

"Pray Ye Therefore"

1. Spiritual awakening in our own hearts. That God will open our eyes to see the need as He sees it and touch our hearts to feel for the world the compassion He felt.

That we may submit our wills to God to be used in the ministry of special intercession and sacrificial giving at this time, that through us all nations may be blest.

2. Blessings upon all our missionaries. That God will grant wisdom and guidance to these noble servants of His.

That they may be given physical strength, material provision for needs and ever-increasing trust in Him whom they serve.

Pray for our mission work in the Orient (China, Japan, Korea).

3. A renewed sense of Christian Stewardship within our Church.

That all Christians might be faithful stewards of the information received in the mission study book, and be true to their trust of the Gospel message.

That the Church might present a united front in accepting the challenge to "go forward" in the task of reaching the unreached.

4. Continued faithfulness and increased courage in the native Christians.

That those who are won to Christ in the foreign lands might faithfully and boldly witness for Him.

That God will richly bless and enlarge the great work of training the native evangelists, doctors and teachers. Pray for the work in Africa.

5. Divine guidance and wisdom to be given to all Christian leaders.

For all those appointed to direct the work of the Church, especially all Secretaries and Assembly's Work Committee.

For Pastors and all officers in the local churches.

For all Auxiliary officers.

For every member, whether leader or follower.

6. God's rich blessing and use of every missionary agency in the foreign fields.

That souls might be brought to Christ, trained up in Christ and set to work for Christ through—

- The Evangelistic work.
- The Educational work.
- The Medical work.

Pray for the work in Latin America (Mexico and Brazil).

7. A definite forward movement in the work of extending Christ's Kingdom to "the uttermost part of the earth."

That Christians may realize that efforts of last year meant only averting the cut, thus leaving the work stationary.

That every Christian might accept God's call to advance and with a world loving heart go forward to new missionary obedience.

OUR CHURCH CALENDAR OF PRAYER FOR 1929

The 1929 Church Calendar of Prayer is a most attractive little volume, full of inspiration, information and guidance for our intercession. You cannot afford to be without a copy, and after purchasing this little book, you cannot afford to miss the blessing of using it daily.

This booklet represents the beneficent work of the Presbyterian Church, U. S., and by following the suggestions for prayer given within its pages, you will become more and more familiar, not only with the Causes of our Church and its program of work, but also with the workers in the Homeland and on the Foreign Field who are heroically carrying forward the Master's Work and who are counting on us for our prayers. The Prayer Calendar is unique, presenting as it does, the work of all four Executive Committees and the two promotional Agencies. It is published by the Presbyterian Committee of Publication, Richmond, Virginia, and may be ordered from them, price 15c. If we have allowed these first two weeks of January to slip by without getting the book, let us not fail to order copies of these immediately.

ENGAGEMENTS FOR MRS. MARGARET T. RUSSELL

Mrs. Margaret T. Russell, as you know, is a member of the staff of Extension Bible Teachers of the Assembly's Training School. She is so well-known and so much beloved throughout the church, that the following list of her engagements will be of interest to many people, auxiliaries and churches.

- Jan. 6-18—Macogdoches, Texas.
- Jan. 20-Feb. 1—Wharton and Mackay, Texas.
- Feb. 3-15—San Antonio, Texas.
- Feb. 17-22—Ennis, Texas.
- Feb. 24-Mar 1—Fort Worth, Texas.
- Mar. 3-8—Texarkana, Texas.
- Mar. 11-16—Mobile, Ala.
- Mar. 18-22—Norfolk, Va.
- Mar. 24-Apr. 16—Open.
- Apr. 17-May 12—Virginia Presbyterians.

Mrs. Russell has not made engagements for the period Mar. 24-April 16. If you are interested in securing her for a week of Bible study during the open period, write to Rev. O. E. Buchholz, D.D., Director of the Extension Dept., Assembly's Training School, 3400 Brook Road, Richmond, Va.

Lesson for January 27

THE HOLY SPIRIT

Joel 2:28-29; Lk. 11:9-13; John 3:5-8; 14:16, 17, 26; 15:26-27; 16:7-15; Acts 2:1-21, 32-33; Rom. 8:1-17, 26-27; 1 Cor. 12:1-13; Eph. 1:13-14; 3:14-21; 4:1-6, 30.

We have studied so far this quarter some of the Bible teachings about God who is our Father in heaven; some of the Bible teachings about sin, which dogs the steps of us all, and destroys our fellowship with the Father; some of the Bible teachings about Jesus, who saves us from our sins, and renews our fellowship with God. We continue our course this week by studying some of the Bible teachings about the Holy Spirit, through whom Jesus carries on his work in our hearts. If we have not thought about the matter before we will be surprised to discover how large a part the Holy Spirit plays in the pages of the Bible. Before he was crucified Jesus said: "It is expedient for you that I go away; for if I go not away, the Comforter (i. e. the Holy Spirit) will not come unto you; but if I go I will send him unto you." Jn. 16:7. The life which the disciples lived according to their own deepest convictions was a life in the Spirit. "Hereby we know that we abide in him," wrote John "because He hath given us of His Spirit;" (1 Jn. 4:13) "If any man hath not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his," agreed Paul. And the experience of the Church has endorsed these statements of the apostles. We have all of us been baptized into the name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit. In the Apostles' Creed, the most revered creed of the Western church, we declare, "I believe in God the Father Almighty, and in Jesus Christ his only begotten Son our Lord . . . and in the Holy Ghost." We are all familiar with the catechism statement: "There are three persons in the Godhead: the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost; and these three are one God, the same in substance, equal in power and glory." There are a multitude of familiar hymns that we sing, the one for example that begins: "Holy Spirit, Faithful guide, ever near the Christian's side." But who is the Holy Spirit? What does the Holy Spirit do? How may we make sure that we have the Holy Spirit for our own lives? These are the questions that come naturally to our minds as we think about the matter. Think these questions through for yourself (or if you are teaching a class let the class discuss them before you begin your explanation). Then read the assigned passages with these questions in mind. Jot down any information that comes to you on any of these three questions, or any other point that has special interest for you. Then think through the whole question again for yourself, and consider particularly the message for your own life. We shall consider the questions in order:

I. Who Is the Holy Spirit?

The expression Spirit, or Spirit of God, or Holy Spirit (translated Holy Ghost in the A. V.) is found in the great majority of the books of the Bible. In the O. T. the Hebrew word uniformly employed for the Spirit as referring to God's Spirit means breath, or 'wind,' or 'breeze.' An analogous word is used in the N. T.

1. As originally used the word signified the energy or power of God, and this continues to be an essential element in its meaning throughout. As Dr. Davidson says: "Spirit is power, or has power. This seems everywhere in the O. T. the idea attached to spirit." Very plainly also that is the meaning many times in the N. T. In Lk. 1:35 for example the angel says to Mary: "The Holy Spirit shall come upon thee and the power of the Most High shall overshadow thee. Here the Holy Spirit is equivalent to the power of the Most High. Later Jesus is baptized and the Holy Spirit descends upon Him in the form of a dove. As we continue the story we see that the Spirit is the divine energy which enables him to accomplish His work. The Holy Spirit then is the divine power, the divine energy which is available for man.

2. But this idea does not exhaust the meaning of Spirit. As we continue our study we see that Spirit is used of God Himself, but always of God in action, God exerting power, sometimes God exerting power in nature (Gen. 1:2), but more often God exerting power in man. As Dr. Mullins says: "The Spirit was God in action, particularly when the action was specific, with a view to accomplishing some particular end or purpose of God. The Spirit came upon individuals for special purposes. The Spirit was thus God immanent in man and in the world." We may say then that the Holy Spirit is God Himself as He works out His purposes in nature and above all in man.

3. But we have not ended our study yet. Even in the O. T. God as Spirit seems to be distinguished at times from God as the Sovereign of the universe. As Dr. Mullins says: "As the angel of the Lord, or angel of the Covenant in certain passages, represents both Jehovah Himself and one sent by Jehovah, so in like manner the Spirit of Jehovah was both Jehovah within or upon man, and at the same time one sent by Jehovah to man." In the N. T. what is indicated in the O. T. becomes more plain. The Holy Spirit has a distinct personality of His own. This becomes most manifest in Jn. 14-16. There are several notes here suggesting the distinct personality of the Holy Spirit. The designation another Comforter, taken in connection with the description of His work is one. The fact that He was sent or given is another. And another is seen in the specific work which the Spirit is to do. Another is the masculine pronoun employed to describe the Spirit; the pronoun is 'He' instead of 'It.' The personality of the Spirit appears also in Paul. The benediction in 2 Cor. 13:14 distinguishes clearly Father, Son, and Spirit (cf also Eph. 4:4). In many connections the Spirit is distinguished from the Son and Father, and the work of the Spirit is set forth in personal terms.

It is these facts which have led the Church in its creeds and in its hymns to speak of the Holy Spirit as one of the three persons in the Trinity: "There are three persons in the Godhead: the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost." But this does not mean that we believe in three Gods, or in one God who is at the same time three. We believe in one God, the Father over all, who is also incarnate in our Lord Jesus Christ, and who is at the same time immanent in nature and above all in the hearts and lives of believers as the Spirit of Holiness. The significant thing for our moral and spiritual lives is this, that not only the Scripture, but also the total experience of the Church compels us to believe in God who is the Sovereign ruler of the universe, a God who has revealed Himself in Jesus Christ, a God who is now at work in nature and in our own lives. In the voice of conscience, in our loftiest aspirations after Holiness we have to do not with a divine influence merely, but with God Himself.

This brings us to our second question.

II. What Does the Holy Spirit Do?

As we have already indicated the Spirit is at work both in nature and in man.

A. In Nature. "And the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters" (Gen. 1:2). The figure is that of a brooding or hovering bird. Here the Spirit brings order and beauty out of the primeval chaos and conducts the cosmic forces toward the goal of an ordered universe. Again in Ps. 104:28-30 God sends forth His Spirit, and visible things are called into being: "Thou sendest forth thy Spirit, they are created; and thou renewest the face of the ground." In Job 26:13 the beauty of the heavens is ascribed to the Spirit: "By His Spirit the heavens are garnished." In Is. 32:15 the wilderness becomes a fruitful field as the result of the outpourings of the Spirit. The Biblical writers scarcely took into their thinking the idea of second causes, certainly not in the modern scientific sense. They regarded the phenomena of Nature as the result of God's direct action through His Spirit." Our modern scientists make a great deal of secondary causes, the so-called laws of nature, as is right, but if it should be ascertained that the universe has come into being through a process of gradual evolution we should still be assured that in and through the process the Divine Spirit was and is still at work.

B. In man. We are more concerned in this particular lesson with the work of the Holy Spirit in man. Leaving out much that is of interest we note that in general the Bible indicates that the work of the Spirit is threefold:

1. The Spirit imparts powers always for service. These powers may be of many kinds, but almost always they have to do with gifts and powers conferred for service in the ongoing of the kingdom of God. In the O. T. this is the most prominent function of the Spirit.

(1) The Spirit conferred powers upon judges and warriors. Thus the children of Israel cried unto Jehovah and He raised up a Savior for them, Othniel, the son of Kenaz: "And the Spirit of Jehovah came upon him and he judged Israel." So with Gideon, Jephthah, Samson, and a host of others.

(2) The Spirit bestowed wisdom and skill of craftsmanship. Bezaleel is filled with the Spirit of God in wisdom and in understanding to work in gold and silver and brass, etc., in the building of the tabernacle (Ex. 31:2-4; 35:31). So also one of the builders of Solomon's temple (1K7:14). In these cases there seems to be a combination of the thought of natural talents and skill to which is superadded a special endowment of the Spirit.

(3) The most distinctive and important manifestation of the Spirit's activity in the O. T. however was in the sphere of prophecy. As Peter writes in the N. T. "No prophecy ever came by the will of man; but men spake from God being moved by the Holy Spirit." 2 Pet. 1:21.

(4) Coming to the N. T. we note that the Spirit endowed Jesus with power for the endurance of temptation, for teaching, for casting out demons, and healing the sick, for His sufferings and death, for His resurrection and ascension. He did His work in the power of the Spirit. He Himself said in Nazareth, "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me," and followed that announcement with His Messianic programme (Lk. 4:18). Peter summed up His life after the crucifixion by saying: "God anointed Him with the Holy Spirit and with power: who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed with the devil; for God was with Him." Acts 10:38.

(5) After Jesus' death the disciples carried on the work of the Kingdom, and the Book of the Acts leaves us no doubt about the fact that it was the Spirit which gave them power and wisdom for their work.

(6) Paul in particular enumerates a long list of spiritual gifts which the Spirit bestows upon believers in order that they may carry on the work of the Kingdom, eg. prophecy (Thes. 5:19f) tongues (1 Cor. 12-14); wisdom (2:6f); knowledge (12:8); power to work miracles, (12:9f); boldness in Christian testimony (2 Cor. 3:17f) etc. But he sums it all up when he says that the Spirit bestows a great diversity of gifts, all of which can be used for the extension of God's kingdom here on earth, that all of us possess these gifts in greater or less measure, and that we are to use them for the good of the whole body of Christ. Cf especially 1 Cor. 12:4-11; Eph. 4:7-13.

Consider before passing what some of these gifts are? In the light of our discussion can we say that skill in craftsmanship, professional talent, business ability, gifts of personality are gifts of the Spirit? Can we say that such gifts are given to men for the extension of the Kingdom? What happens if a man fails to use such gifts for such an end?

2. The Spirit imparts moral and spiritual character. It is for this reason that the Spirit is called the Holy Spirit. He is a Spirit of Holiness. The O. T. recognizes the Holy Spirit in numerous ways as the source of inward moral purity, but the thought is more fully developed in the N. T. The writer of Hebrews says of Jesus that it was through the eternal Spirit that he offered himself without blemish to God. 9:14. Paul in particular regarded the Christian life from beginning to end as under the power of the Holy Spirit. The Holy Spirit in the beginnings of the Christian life is set forth in many forms of statement (Eg Rom. 5:2; 8:2, 9, 15-16 Gal. 3:2; 3:3, 14; 1 Cor. 16:11; Eph. 2:18). But in fact he holds that the religious and moral life of the Christian is at every point under the guidance and sustaining energy of the Holy Spirit. If we live after the flesh we die; if after the Spirit we live (Rom. 8:6). The Spirit helps the Christian to pray (Rom. 8:26f). The Kingdom of God is Righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Spirit (Rom. 14:17). "The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, meekness, self-control." Gal. 5:22. The Corinthian preferred the showy gifts, gifts which won them the applause of their fellowmen. But Paul reminded them that the greatest gift of the Spirit was love (1 Cor. 13). John agrees with Paul. He says (1 Jn. 4:12-13): "No man hath beheld God at any time; if we love one another God abideth in us, and His love is perfected in us; hereby we know that we abide in him and He in us because He hath given us of His Spirit."

The Holy Spirit then is the unseen friend, the spiritual presence that calls us in ideals, warns us in remorse, comforts us with His pardon, renews us with His power. He is the Spirit of righteousness within the human heart allied with whom we have solid hopes of moral gain. He is the One who holds indeed the far stars in His hands, and yet in fellowship with whom each humble son of man may find strength to do and to endure with constancy, and fortitude, and deathless hope. God is on our side as we struggle to live up to our highest ideals; we cannot hope to make our greatest moral and spiritual progress without His help; if we give Him full sway in our lives the fruits of the Spirit shall appear.

What difference does it make, this view of the Spirit?

3. The Spirit reveals to us moral and spiritual truth. Jesus emphasizes this point over and over again in his farewell discourse (Jn. 14-16). He says "I will pray the Father and He shall give you another Comforter that he may be with you forever, even the Spirit of Truth . . . I have yet many things to say unto you, but yet cannot bear them now. Howbeit when He the Spirit of Truth is come he shall guide you into all the truth." Cf. 14:16-17-26; 16:7-15. Paul tells us that without the Holy Spirit we cannot indeed discern the things of God. 1 Cor. 2:10-16. He prays that we may be strengthened with power through the Spirit that we may know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge. Eph. 3:14-19. It is the Spirit then which enables us to understand the moral and spiritual truth. What practical difference does this make to us? How does the Spirit lead us into a fuller knowledge of the truth? What is necessary on our part? All of this leads us to our third and final question:

III. How Can We Obtain the Holy Spirit for Our Lives?

In the O. T. it seems that certain men were endowed with the Holy Spirit to accomplish certain specific ends. Toward the end of the O. T. dispensation, however, the need began to be felt for a universal diffusion of the Spirit, and predictions began to be made to that effect. Cf. Is. 44:3; 59:20-21. The most notable of these predictions however was that of Joel (2:28,29), who prophesied that the time would come when God would pour out His Spirit on all flesh: "your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions." John the Baptist said that the time had come. "I indeed baptize you in water . . . but he that cometh after me shall baptize you in the Holy Spirit and in fire." Jesus before He was crucified said: "It is expedient for you that I go away; for if I go not away the Comforter (i. e. the Spirit) will not come unto you, but if I go I will send him unto you. His last words to his disciples before his ascension (Acts 1:8) were "Ye shall receive power when the Holy Spirit is come upon you." Ten days later the Holy Spirit came upon the awaiting disciples. From that forth the apostles proclaimed that the gift of the Spirit was the privilege of every believer. Peter for example said: "Repent ye and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ unto the remission of your sins; and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." Acts 2:38. Paul said, No man can say, Jesus is Lord, but in the Holy Spirit. It follows then that everyone who acknowledges Jesus as Lord has the Spirit already in his life.

"Speak to Him thou, for He hears, and Spirit will spirit can meet — Closer is He than breathing, and nearer than hands and feet."

And Jesus said that God was always ready to give the Spirit to them who asked (Lk. 11:13). The real question then is what shall we do with the Spirit, rather what shall we allow the Spirit to do unto us. We may grieve the Spirit (Eph. 4:30), we may quench the Spirit (1 Thes. 5:19), we may allow Him to have free sway in our lives. Remember that the Spirit speaks us in the voice of conscience, He reveals Himself in our aspirations, our yearnings after the good, the beautiful, the true, our longing after God. And then consider how we may grieve the Holy Spirit, how we may quench the Spirit in ourselves and others, how we do grieve the Spirit, how we do quench the Spirit, how we may allow Him to have His way in our lives.

ELIZABETH'S BLUE HAT

Minerva Hunter

"W-o-o, W-o-o," came the boat whistle far down the river. "Mother is coming!" Elizabeth called to her two small brothers and the three raced down to the wharf to see the boat.

"How I wish I could go some where," Elizabeth mused. "I have been so lonesome here all winter and spring without my sister Sophia. I wish I had been old enough to go away to school. I wonder what Sophia's school is like.

The big boat drew nearer and nearer and they could see the people on board. Elizabeth was first to spy her mother and waved to her. Elizabeth's father came from his store and a number of other people gathered on the wharf, for the weekly coming of the boat was a great event in the neighborhood.

"George," Elizabeth's mother said as soon as the boat landed, "I met Cousin Blanche Green in Johnsonville and she is going to Daleville to see her sister graduate. She offered to take Elizabeth if we could get her ready by the time this boat comes back. I asked the captain and he says he will be up the river about an hour and a half and will stop for Elizabeth if we decide to let her go. Don't you think the trip will be fine for both girls," the father said.

"I do not mind rushing," Elizabeth's mother laughed.

The next hour and a half were the busiest Elizabeth had ever known. Bathing, shampooing, sewing on buttons, packing, kept the whole family moving.

"I bought you a beautiful hat," her mother told her. "It is still down at the wharf. Do not forget to get it when you are ready to get on the boat. It matches your new blue dress exactly."

Just then, as the last strap on the suit case was being fastened, the boat's whistle blew and all ran down to the wharf to see Elizabeth off.

As Elizabeth stepped upon the gang-plank she remembered the new hat. "Where is my hat, mother," she asked and her mother took a striped band box from a heap of parcels on the wharf and handed it to her.

When the boat rounded the bend in the river and Elizabeth could no longer wave to those left behind, she decided to look at the new hat, but just then the captain called her to come to lunch.

She had barely finished eating her ice cream when the boat stopped to load calves. Elizabeth knew a good deal about calves, for she had two of her own at home. At the next stop hogs were loaded and still farther down the river great barrels called hogsheads, filled with tobacco were brought on board.

How glad Sophia and Elizabeth were to see each other! They talked and talked as Sophia showed her the wonderful buildings and the great green campus of the school.

At last Sophia said, "Mother sent me the dearest pink hat last week! She wrote me in her letter that she had bought you one very much like it, except yours is blue."

"Oh," exclaimed Elizabeth, "I have not looked at my hat. Let's go to your room now and see both of them."

Away they went to Sophia's room, and while Elizabeth struggled with the string on the band box, Sophia brought out the most adorable pink hat that Elizabeth had ever seen.

"It is beautiful!" exclaimed Elizabeth. "That hat in blue is just the thing I should like to have. Blue is my color."

She began lifting the tissue paper from the band box and the dark spot in the box became darker and darker. "Sophia, come here and look!" Elizabeth said, with tragedy in her voice.

She and Sophia lifted the last piece of tissue paper together.

There in the box a quaint little bonnet of black straw trimmed in curling tips and black jet!

Sophia grabbed the band box top. "Mrs. George Dunn," she read. "That is mother's name all right."

"What else does it say?" Elizabeth asked.

"Wallaceville," Sophia read.

"This is great-aunt Harriet's bonnet," Elizabeth announced. "Maybe the boxes were alike and as mother and great-aunt Harriet have the same name the boxes were put off the boat at the wrong landings."

"How do you suppose she will look

"Oh let's play 'follow my leader'!" cried BROWN-haired Teddy to YELLOW-haired Susie May. "The snow is deep and new and you be 'my leader' first."

Susie May wore her warm RED coat and cap and her new long RED tasseled BLACK boots. She took a long BROWN pole to help her balance as she took big strides in the snow.

Teddy wore his light PURPLE sweater and his ORANGE (use RED and YELLOW mixed) color cap and mittens. His cap was banded with PURPLE and had a ball of PURPLE at the top. Teddy wore BROWN trousers and high shiney BLACK boots.

Susie May led Teddy by the YELLOW cottage with the GREEN shutters and BROWN roof almost covered with White snow. And then down by the long GREEN hedge—it was snow capped, too—but it had BROWN branches sticking above the snow.

Both children had PINK (use RED lightly) faces and RED cheeks and lips for it was a cold day. The sky was BLUE and cloudless and Susie May and Teddy had lots of fun.

in that light blue hat of yours?" Sophia giggled.

"Every bit as well as I shall look in this old timey black bonnet," said Elizabeth, trying hard not to show how disappointed she felt.

Just then a maid knocked on the door. "A lady to see you," she announced, "and she wants to know if you have seen anything of her bonnet."

"That sounds just like great-aunt Harriet," Sophia laughed. "We shall go right down," she added, and helped Elizabeth put the bonnet back into the box.

"I ordered that bonnet by mail," great-aunt Harriet told the girls after greetings were said, "for I wanted to come here to see two of my great-nieces get their diplomas. When the box came and I found the hat addressed to your mother I called her up right away. She said Elizabeth must have my bonnet, so I brought Elizabeth's blue hat along. Here it is," she added, and got the other band box from the corner of the room. "The exchange makes everything right."

Great-aunt Harriet tied her beloved bonnet up in its box and left. Sophia and Elizabeth hastened back to Sophia's room to try on their new hats and to rejoice that the blue one arrived in time for the graduation exercises.—The Presbyterian.

THE DAY OF OPPORTUNITY IN KOREA

Margaret H. Hopper

Now is our day of opportunity in Korea. Several months ago as I was going out my front gate, two well-dressed young men came up, introduced themselves and asked if I were a Jesus-believing person.

In going to and from our country churches I have passed village after village absolutely untouched by the Gospel. Recently a woman from the country came to our school for a sight see. After showing her over the building and trying to answer some of her questions I asked if she were a Christian.

An urgent need just now is for the opening up of a "water street" mission in Mokpo, that growing seaport city. On that water front boats of all kinds come and go constantly, carrying great numbers of people, and along that street are hundreds of merchants selling their wares.

The Methodist Church established such a mission in Mokpo under the direction of Mr. Stokes. I attended one of his services about a year after the work was begun and I learned that about eight hundred had accepted Christ up to that time.

I cannot keep from mentioning the need for expansion in our educational work. The girls' school at Mokpo, the largest in our Korea Mission having now the largest high school in its history is greatly handicapped by lack of equipment.

In addition to the call from the unevangelized territory, there is always the appeal from the native Christian for more teaching and more help in many ways.

THE MOCCASINS OF EAGLE FEATHER

Rev. John Rogers was putting on his shoes slowly by the kitchen stove in a two-room shack. He was thinking of his problems, and discouragement came from every line of his earnest face.

He paused to inspect the worn boots. The soles were thin, too thin for the forty miles of travel between him and the Indian settlement of Tecumseh, for which he was about to start on foot.

"I must go barefoot or in moccasins, like my congregation," he sighed sadly.

The "barrel" would bring a pair of shoes for him from the kind women of the Eastern Church, and after they came some time must be allowed for the shoemaker at Mason City, forty miles to the westward, to alter one of them, for Rev. John Rogers had a peculiar distinction—one of his feet was larger than the other.

His young wife Ellen looked up from her work at the bent figure of her husband as he tied the last lacing.

"I wonder what the winter is like out here?"

"They say it is a hard one, but I don't believe we will have snow so early. That's why I am going to Tecumseh once more before the roads get bad."

"They are a hardened lot of Indians out there, aren't they?" sighed his wife. "I can't seem to reach them, though I am praying for them every time I think of them."

"You've been faithful, John." "Yes, but I fear I am not the right man for the place. I am hoping for a sign—yes, I am praying for a sign—from the Lord, and if it comes I'll stay and fight for their souls. It it doesn't, I'll go back to Chicago and tell them

I am not the one to teach these people." "Oh, John, that sounds rather superstitious. I wish you wouldn't put your faith in signs."

"Better men than I have done it, and when I am praying so earnestly to the Lord to show me the way, he will."

He took up the package of food Ellen had prepared and buttoned up his coat. He had no horse to take him the long twenty miles. Unless a wagon going his way would take him in, he would not arrive before sundown.

After he got there he could not expect white men's hospitality, for the Crees were not genial to young missionaries who were strange to their ways and language.

He kissed his wife and warned her to lock the shack and keep a lookout for him the following evening, for, though the roof of the roof of the nearest neighbor's house was just over the rise of the road, they both of them were timid of prairie life and the vast distances that spread out on every side.

That night found him in the school house of Tecumseh with a gathering of twenty Indians and their squaws and children.

He talked with them simply and earnestly, looking into each face for a response to the Bible message he had been telling them for six months, but stolid and grim sat the braves, and a squaw giggled nervously once in awhile from the back seats.

The last song was sung—they did not like to sing—and Rev. John Rogers went among them seeking to find some one Indian who would be willing to be taught the good Word, so he could teach his own people in their language. But it was evident to the minister that his half-year's work was as seed thrown away on rocky soil. However, John kept up his winning smile and kindly word in spite of his inward disappointment.

Where was the sign he had prayed so earnestly for? Not here, unless the apathy of the people was the answer of the Lord that another man would be a better shepherd in his place.

He went to the frame house of Chief Eagle Feather and tossed uneasily all night on his bed of straw as the trials of his stay among the Indian settlements pressed down on his slumbers.

In the morning, when he started for home, Eagle Feather pointed at the clouds, red clouds that whirled up in battalions from the level horizon of the prairie.

Eagle Feather shook his head and spoke for the first time voluntarily to the minister.

"Winter come soon—snow—big snow—soon."

"I can get home before the blizzard, can't I?"

Eagle Feather considered the rushing clouds with a small, keen eye. He wrinkled up his withered cheeks doubtfully.

"Good man have warm clothes?" He felt of the minister's coat.

"Good man have strong shoes?" He looked at the minister's feet sharply.

"Good man get home—no freeze before snow."

John Rogers felt warm in his heart. It was the first time he had ever had a personal attention from this cold, suspicious chief.

Yet, when he went down the long, straight, level road, his heart again grew cold within him, for no hand waved to him from the shacks nor even a head nodded to him from the windows to bid him farewell on his long trip back to his shack.

It was useless for him to try any more. Some other man with different gifts must come to these heathen. He had been so happy and buoyant when he had started out for the work among the Indians six months ago. He had made a circuit of the settlement and tried to secure interest for a Sunday school among the Indian children, but they were simply dull and apathetic.

With his thoughts to keep him dark company, he trudged on the endless road, and not until the wind began to whip his face with sharp particles of ice did he realize that the first snow of the winter was upon him. He had been walking two hours and still had four to go. He stumbled over something under his feet, and, upon stooping down to discover what it might be, he found that the soles of both boots had given way, and his feet were dust-stained already where his socks had worn through.

"O Lord! what do boots amount to if I could have found one man who would have listened to the Word?"

His task began to hurt him and the snow chilled his feet, but there was nothing to do but keep on. The snow filled the air with a fine, stinging powder and the wind found the weak spots of the great coat. He had to bend his whole body against the storm, and the four hours lengthened out as he battled to keep his footing in the increasing drifts. Finally to even keep to the road was a task.

Once he lost it, but managed to struggle back, for a figure of a tall man appeared in front of him and never seemed to lose the direction. Where the man came from puzzled Rogers' benumbed brain. He shouted to the stranger through the swirls of snow, but got no answer. Always fifty feet in front of him, the person kept on until, as darkness settled down, the slabs of his own shack, not ten feet away, hid the stranger from view.

That journey in the blizzard was too much for the slight physique of John Rogers, and he succumbed to exhaustion and fever.

After a week he opened his eyes and sought for his wife, who was watching by his bedside.

"I guess I have had my sign, Ellen," he whispered feebly. "I am a failure. I must try some new place where there are no Indians."

Ellen smiled cheerfully, though there was a quiver around her lips.

"You're better, John. Let's be thankful for that, and we have good neighbors. Some have come miles on horseback to help me nights. I am not a bit discouraged."

Just at that moment there was a knock at the door of the next room that served as a kitchen and living room. She went out to answer it, expecting a neighbor, but there stood before her a tall old Indian in a plaid, woolen coat and leather moccasins. His beady eyes peered inquiringly behind her into the kitchen.

Glenn Springs Mineral Water

Popular Since Early History

For nearly two hundred years our fathers and forefathers, particularly those along the coast, were accustomed to visit Glenn Springs for a few days' treatment each year to flush the system of its pent up impurities (particularly malaria) and to regulate and recondition their systems for greater activity and renewed health and vigor. Glenn Springs was ever popular even when early in the nineteenth century the Indians frequently camped at the Spring for convalescence or recuperation.

Recommended By Physicians

In more recent years, after scientific analysis of the water, the public has become convinced more than ever that the pure sparkling water of Glenn Springs has medicinal qualities of unquestioned value. Many men and women today look to its curative powers to restore health and regular daily habits. Physicians generally know its value and frequently send their patients to Glenn Springs for convalescence or treatment.

Particularly Effective

The refreshing effect of the liberal use of mineral water is generally regarded as beneficial, with none of the drastic, possibly damaging effects of concentrated medicines.

Glenn Springs Water, however, offers benefits far more specific and definite. Originally known as an excellent water for malarial debility, and successfully used to restore appetite, strength, and energy, it is now accepted as a very thorough, though mild treatment for chronic constipation, biliousness, indigestion, dyspepsia, auto-intoxication, rheumatism and kindred ills.

Exceptional Therapeutic Value

Though endowed with valuable medicinal agents; it bubbles spontaneously from the heart of mother earth; is nature's own dilution of curative agents, with distinct therapeutic potency and untouched by mankind. Its principal medicinal agents are:

- SODIUM SULPHATE (Glaubers Salts)—Cathartic, Aperient and Diuretic.
- CALCIUM SULPHATE—Hygroscopic.
- CALCIUM CARBONATE—Sedative, Antacid.
- MAGNESIUM CARBONATE—Mildly Laxative and Antacid.
- POTASSIUM SULPHATE—Purgative.

Ask your physician about Glenn Springs Water for your case. If he desires, we will gladly mail copy of the analysis, together with literature.

Physicians generally agree that its content is of exceptional value in many chronic troubles which need system cleansing, regulation, and a rejuvenation of the organs of digestion and elimination.

Revives Regular Habits

The principal value of Glenn Springs Water as a laxative, however, lies in the fact that though potent and capable of thoroughness when used in proper quantities, it tends to so regulate the system as to restore normal functioning and a permanent return to regular habits. This in itself is one of the principal requisites of good health.

Drink It At Home

With Glenn Springs Water you may now restore your health in your own home. For busy men and women, we have arranged to ship the water by express in ten gallon quantities. You need not necessarily visit the Spring as hundreds of thousands of others have done, though of course you may do so if you desire. You can now restore your health at home just as though you were actually recuperating at the Spring, without the loss of time, the trouble or expense.

For your health's sake, use the coupon below and start right by daily flushing your system with goodly quantities of this sparkling restorative water, and you will soon be on the road to health.

GALION CRYPTORIUM

THE UNDER-GROUND MAUSOLEUM

"Good man here? Me—old Chief Eagle Feather."

Ellen had seen plenty of Indians at the reservation chapels, but her husband's work had not brought one to her door before.

She stood aside and beckoned him in. "The minister has been very sick."

Eagle Feather nodded understandingly.

"Going to heaven?" he asked. "We hope not, but is very weak."

Eagle Feather's eyes roved around until he spied the half-open door of the chamber.

"Eagle Feather got something for Good Man," he said, looking at the door eagerly and pointing to it.

Ellen went before the Indian and said to her husband: "Here is the Indian, Eagle Feather."

The old Indian stood looking down at John Rogers a minute in silence, and then, thrusting his brown hand inside his plaid coat, he drew out two handsome moccasins made of heavy moose-skin and laid them on the bedside of John.

"For you—Good Man. One little—one big one."

John picked them in in surprise.

"Why, Eagle Feather, what a fine pair! I never had any before, and how did you know I had one little foot and one big one?"

"Eagle Feather make him like the one in the snow."

"Like the one in the snow?" asked John Rogers, puzzled by the Indian's guttural speech.

"Good man come to preach to bad Indian—go home in first snow. I go too. See he get home. Bad for Good Man not to know snow. Good man get lost. Eagle Feather go ahead. Good Man follow me here."

Eagle Feather turned to Ellen, who had been listening intently.

"You see?" he asked eagerly.

The tears stood in her eyes.

"Yes, I understand, Eagle Feather. He said some one led him home the night of the blizzard, but I thought it was the fever in his head."

John Rogers turned to his wife.

"But how could Eagle Feather get the moccasins to fit me?"

The Indian bent down to the floor and gesticulated.

"Eagle Feather go down in the snow to see how big foot of Good Man is, and find some blood. Poor Good Man—no good shoes—foot in snow. Then Eagle Feather go to next foot in the snow. She blood, too, but it is little foot. Eagle Feather try again, and say make moccasins like two feet, one little—one big. My squaw—she make 'em pretty."

John Rogers turned away his head to the wall. It would never do for Eagle Feather to see him with tears in his eyes.

"Good Man no like my gift?" asked Eagle Feather, anxiously.

"Oh, very, very much," said Ellen to the Indian, drawing him out of the room. "The minister is very weak and he cries with joy over your gift. He will wear them often, Eagle Feather."

Best Remedy for Obstinate Cough Made at Home

You'll never know how quickly a stubborn cough or chest cold can be conquered, until you try this famous recipe. It is used in millions of homes, because it gives more prompt, positive relief than anything else. It's no trouble at all to mix and costs but a trifle.

Into a pint bottle, pour 2½ ounces of Pinex; then add plain granulated sugar syrup or strained honey to make a full pint. This saves two-thirds of the money usually spent for cough medicines, and gives you a purer, better remedy. It never spoils, and tastes good—children like it.

You can actually feel its penetrating, soothing action on the inflamed throat membranes. It also promptly loosens the germ-laden phlegm, and at the same time, it is absorbed into the blood, where it acts directly on the bronchial tubes. This three-fold action explains why it brings such quick relief even in severe bronchial coughs and those dreaded coughs that usually follow the "flu".

Pinex is a highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine, containing the active agent of creosote, in a refined, palatable form, and known as one of the greatest healing agents for severe coughs, chest colds and bronchial troubles.

Do not accept a substitute for Pinex. It is guaranteed to give prompt relief or money refunded.

Eagle Feather threw back his head vigorously.

"We be friends. Good Man bleed for him."

Whereupon the Indian went out into the snow to march his twenty miles to Tecumseh, and Ellen turned back into the bed-chamber.

John had the moccasins under his arm and his radiant face shone out from the pillow.

"You remember I asked for a sign, Ellen?"

His wife felt intuitively what was coming, but gazed at him inquiringly.

"I was too impatient. I've got the sign at last. I am going to stay," said Rev. John Rogers.—The Congregationalist.

There's peace in the household guarded by Castoria. Peaceful sleep for Baby. Uninterrupted rest for Mother. For a few drops of pure Castoria will quiet any fretful infant. Or put the little one back to sleep when there's an upset during the night.

Parents, don't try to do without good old Castoria! It isn't fair to the baby, and it makes things hard for you. You can't give Baby medicine meant for grown-ups—or shouldn't! Castoria is the solution. It is always safe. It always does the work. And although it acts as swiftly as an opiate or a narcotic, it contains neither. Castoria is purely vegetable. Give it whenever there's constipation, colic, diarrhea.

No less than five million modern mothers have come to depend on Castoria, for twenty-five million bottles were bought last year! Get yours today; don't wait for some night when it's needed, and the drugstore is closed!

SEVENTH ALL-SOUTH CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR CONVENTION

Rev. W. Arnett Gamble, Jr., Pinetops, N. C.

"Not the notes taken, nor the songs sung, but the spark of inspiration generated by leaders and delegates, is what I'm taking home from the convention." Thus did one of the state presidents express in the closing session the spirit of the Seventh All-South C. E. Convention which was held in Chattanooga, Tenn., December 28-31, 1928.

Though the influenza epidemic, which made any sort of meeting difficult at this time, cut seriously into the attendance, those who were able to attend contributed the elements that will make any convention a success. Seldom has such a program been offered a sectional meeting, seldom has a local committee worked with such determination and success against great odds, and seldom have delegates been so earnest and faithful in getting the most out of a meeting.

The convention was formally opened Friday afternoon with a prayer service conducted by Dr. William Hiram Foulkes of Old First Presbyterian Church, Newark, N. J., on "Putting on the whole armor of God." Dr. Foulkes justified his title as one of the leading devotional leaders of America.

At the evening session "welcomes" were expressed by Mayor Ed Bass, President Frank C. Lewis, of the Chattanooga C. E. Union, and Rev. R. M. Stinson, of the Second Presbyterian Church, U. S. A. The response was by Dr. A. E. Cory, of the Disciples Church, Kinston, N. C. Dr. J. P. McCallie, of McCallie's School for Boys, Chattanooga, in what he appropriately styled "a bald-headed statement from a clear-headed man," extended greeted greetings to officers and executive committee members of the International Society of C. E.; after which General Secretary E. P. Gates, the "indefatigable dynamo" as someone described him, introduced his colleagues.

Supplying for Dr. Daniel A. Poling, whose plans were broken into just before the convention opened, Dr. Foulkes spoke on the Crusade With Christ, for Evangelism, Christian Citizenship, and World Peace, reminding those present that "Christ is waiting for a generation of young people who will take Him at His word and help Him make His dreams come true."

Hon. Frederick A. Wallis, former Commissioner of the Port of New York, sent as personal representative of Dr. Poling, recited some of his experiences and observations on crime and its correction. Significant among his statements were these: "The high chair in the home is worth a thousand electric chairs in Sing Sing prison;" "If we don't give boys and girls our best today, they will give us their worst tomorrow."

Saturday morning and afternoon were given to group discussions, the sessions being divided by denominational lunches in various Chattanooga churches. The group conferences covered: Winning and holding members, led by A. J. Shartle, Treasurer International Society of C. E.; Better prayer meetings, led by Rev. Lawrence Little, Secretary of Board of Christian Education, Methodist Protestant Church; The recreation program, led by Carroll M. Wright, Travel and Recreation Superintendent, International Society; Intermediate leaders, led by Herman A. Klahr, Executive Secretary, Ohio C. E. Union; Junior leaders, Miss Mamie Gene Cole, former Dixie Junior field secretary and now in religious education work at Ft. Smith, Ark.; C. E. in the Rural or Village Church, Mr. Little; C. E. in the Town or Small City Church, Mr. Shartle; Christian vocations, Stanley B. Vandersall, who handles this department of the International Society.

Two fine addresses marked the Saturday night session. Harry N. Holmes, Field Secretary of the World Alliance for International Friendship through the Churches, told how young people can help to promote world peace. Mr. Holmes represents what might be termed the conservative wing of the forces moving for world peace, but was none the less in earnest. Simply, but with evidence of clear vision and high thinking, he reminded the young people that "it takes a big man (or woman) to do a big job; it takes a good man (or woman) to do a good work in God's world; the Christian Church was made to do the thing the world says is impossible," and urged them to say, "Oh God, make me fine enough and good enough for the big work that lies ahead."

Dr. Henry H. Sweets, Executive Secretary of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief of the Presbyterian Church, U. S., closed with a heart-searching message on service as the price of greatness, humble service in imitation of Christ.

Miss Martha Moore, Griffin, Ga., won the Intermediate oratorical prize with a fine oration on "Christian Endeavor and World Peace."

Sunday opened with a prayer service at seven o'clock, led by Dr. Sweets. Sunday schools in Chattanooga churches were attended by delegates, then church worship services, at a number of which the convention leaders were the speakers.

In the afternoon Carlton M. Sherwood, Executive Secretary of the Citizens Committee of One Thousand for Law Enforcement, spoke on his work and the young people's relation to it. Dr. Ira Landrith spoke on "The Youth Movement for a Young Age," presenting Christian Endeavor as the movement to meet the needs of this age. He gave it as his observation that "When you say 'young people's movement' anywhere on earth, the first thing you think of is Christian Endeavor."

Miss Cole conducted a meeting for parents, with addresses by Mr. Little; Dr. R. C. Long, Stewardship Secretary of the Presbyterian Church, U. S.; Rev. Clark Williamson, Cumberland Presbyterian Church; and C. C. Hamilton, Publication Manager of the International Society.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S TOPIC

Sunday, January 27—Serving the World Through Our Church—Acts 1:8; Acts 13:1-3; James 1:27.

Remarks of the Leader

Our topic today is very much in line with our general theme for the year, Making Christ's Kingdom Come. We are to study how to serve the world through our church. In thinking of our church we may consider our own church locally, and what it has done to serve the world. Then we may think of our denomination, and what it is doing for the world. We may also think of how to get ready to serve the world through the church. We should be prepared to serve by the blessing of the Holy Spirit and by our high Christian character. We should organize the church for its work. We should train future leaders. Our church may serve by giving money to the causes of the church. We must have world vision of the needs of men, and we should evangelize, or give the gospel to our own neighbors and send it to the nations who do not know Jesus Christ.

How Our Local Church Has Served

Appoint someone, perhaps an older person to give the history of your own local church. They might answer these questions:

1. How did it come to pass that a church was organized here?
2. Under what circumstances, and who took part in organizing this church?
3. Who was its first pastor, who were the first officers, elders and deacons?
4. When was the building erected and how?
5. What people have had a leading part in the work of this church?
6. Have any of our people gone to other places and helped in the work there?
7. Have any of our boys and girls become church workers, as preachers, missionaries, leaders in church work?

Some other questions may also be appropriate.

Prepared to Serve

When Jesus was about to leave his disciples and go back to his Father in heaven, where he was to sit on God's right hand and rule the world and guide the affairs of his church as its head, he promised them he was going to send them a helper who would prepare them for their work, and enable them to do the work of bringing the world to Christ. This helper was the Holy Spirit, the Third Person of the Trinity. The Spirit came on the day of Pentecost, and endued each disciple with divine power, and taught them the word of God.

If we would work, and if our church would serve the world, we must each one be filled with the Holy Spirit, who comes into every heart which asks for his presence. Only with his power can we carry on our church work.

To be servants of God through the Spirit, we must also live good lives and have good characters. God cannot use evil men and women who do not try to tell the truth, be honest, and pure, faithful and industrious, unselfish and kind. With good character and the endowment of the Holy Spirit we are prepared to serve the world through our church.

Organized for Service

For a church to serve the world aright, there must be organization. A Presbyterian Church must have a session and a board of deacons, the session to have oversight of the spiritual affairs of the church, while the deacons have charge of the financial and secular matters. Then there should be a Sunday School, fitted with proper equipment, and taught by faithful men and women. Then to do the best work, the three sections of the church, the men, the women, and the young people, ought to be organized each as a unit, so they can work with those they are most fitted to work with.

A church should have a pastor as the head of the church, and with all these units or organization thoroughly organized and fully understanding what they are to do, and trying to carry out each its part, the church will be ready to carry on its program, and do the work it is best fitted to do.

Training Future Workers

One of the most important things a church can do is to train the young people to be the future leaders and workers in the church. It is just as easy to guide the children and young men and women to become strong leaders as to let them drift into worldliness and sin.

Our homes give us a start, and the Sunday School helps along this great work of training the leaders. At Sunday School as little children, we get our first lessons in the worship of God, and learn the wonderful stories from the Bible. And as we pass through all the grades of the Sunday School, we develop active Christian workers. The young people's society also offers a fine opportunity for boys and girls to become self-reliant leaders. When thrown with each other there, they grow stronger in service, because of the friendly rivalry, the constant example of others, and the social impulses which are always pressing on the young people's hearts.

Young people's conferences help us to get ready to serve, as we come in contact with church leaders and with young people from other sections. The conferences being held by our own synods and presbyteries are a great aid to develop our Christian powers and activities.

Serving by the Budget

There are many ways our Church can serve the world. It can give the world a place to worship God. It can make a school to train leaders. It can send its money to places a person may not be able to go himself. Let us think of this last way of service.

In this day and time, a well organized church gives special attention to the way it raises money, and spends it for the Lord. The Church officers meet and decide what they think this church can raise for its work at home and abroad. They set down each item and sum them all up. They call this the budget. They present this budget to the church members, and get them to agree to raise the amount suggested.

The church then starts in for its year's work, determined to raise so much for missions, home and foreign, so much for educational work at home and outside, so much for helping the needy, the orphaned, the old ministers, so much to send the word of God in the printed page. They try to raise these sums regularly, and then help in special calls. Besides this they support the work of their own pastor and church with its local demands.

One of the finest ways a church can serve the world is by keeping its budget paid up steadily and fully, so that there is no deficit at the end of the year.

Serving By Evangelism

Church work is very interesting, and we are all glad to see the work well organized and prospering. We love to think of the many connections our Church may have by its leaders it has sent out to home and foreign fields, by the money it has raised and disbursed to the Church causes, and the many people it has helped with that money. But we must not forget that Christ demands that each one of us shall be a personal evangelist to lead individual souls to Christ.

If a Church fails to lead souls to Christ, if its children do not confess Him as their Savior, if sinners cannot find a Savior in that Church, it has failed in great measure to do its duty. Jesus said, Ye are my witnesses, and He calls each of us to do our part in bringing people into the knowledge of Jesus as personal savior. This is our greatest work and the finest way we may serve the world.

Questions for Discussion

1. Why do people go to church?
2. Why do we sing hymns?
3. What is the offering used for?
4. Why does the minister pray?
5. What is the sermon for?
6. What missionary work does our church do?
7. What can Juniors do for the Church?

A HOME MISSIONARY GOES HOME

Rev. Calvin J. Ralston, aged Missionary to the Indians died very suddenly on Monday morning of the 7th inst. at the home of his daughter in Oklahoma City, and was buried at Caney where he has lived for a number of years.

Mr. Ralston was about 80 years of age, a native Virginia and had been Missionary to the Indians for forty-three years. For the past few years, owing to failing health, he had not been in active service but continued to the very last to respond to any call of the Church for his services. He has been Trustee of O. C., for a quarter of a century and was always a prominent figure in Presbyteries and Synods and in the work of the Master.

He will be greatly missed by the Indians whom he loved as they relied upon him largely in all their church courts for advice and assistance. Doubtless he has gone to a blessed reward and we trust that his mantle will fall upon the shoulders of some worthy successor, will endure hardships and render faithful service to the Church which he loved.

TWO NEW INVENTIONS

There are two new inventions, that present an interesting contrast.

One is a poisonous gas, cacodyl isocyanide, so deadly that armies may be destroyed in an hour by its lethal fumes.

The second is a metal, beryllium, with the tensile strength of steel and half the weight of aluminum.

It is so hard that a sharp file cannot scratch it.

Beryllium may revolutionize the automobile and airplane and other industries. A man could pick up a 400-horse power motor made of beryllium and walk away with it.

Cacodyl isocyanide has been much more discussed than beryllium. There has probably been twice as much publicity given to the deadly gas as to the new metal.

Which means more to the world? One was invented for war, one invented for peace.

It shouldn't take you long to decide for yourself which one will mean the most to mankind in the generations to come.

OLD FOLKS SAY DR. CALDWELL WAS RIGHT

The basis of treating sickness has not changed since Dr. Caldwell left Medical College in 1875, nor since he placed on the market the laxative prescription he had used in his practice.

He treated constipation, biliousness, headaches, mental depression, indigestion, sour stomach and other indispositions entirely by means of simple vegetable laxatives, herbs and roots. These are still the basis of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, a combination of senna and other mild herbs, with pepsin.

The simpler the remedy for constipation, the safer for the child and for you. And as you can get results in a mild and safe way by using Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, why take chances with strong drugs?

A bottle will last several months, and all can use it. It is pleasant to the taste, gentle in action, and free from narcotics. Elderly people find it ideal. All drug stores have the generous bottles, or write "Syrup Pepsin," Dept. BB, Monticello, Illinois, for free trial bottle.

Gen. Booth Demoted By Salvation Army

Council in England Votes Head of Movement Unfit to Lead Council
Blocked by Injunction

At Sunbury-on-Thames, England, on January 16 General Bramwell Booth, commander in chief of the Salvation Army, was adjudicated unfit to continue in that office by the high council of the army. The vote was 55 to 8. One commissioner was absent and not voting because of illness. General Booth needed only 16 votes, twice the number he received, to defeat the motion. A general can only be removed because of unfitness by a three-quarters majority of the council. The council had sat 14 hours debating the momentous question, with adjournments only for meals. No official reports came from the strictly guarded premises of Sunbury Court as it was rumored that the argument times was heated.

It was midnight before the result was announced.

An official statement was issued saying: "The result is a complete vindication of the seven commissioners who requested the calling of the high council. Their action was absolutely unprecedented but under the circumstances with which they were confronted they felt that there was no alternative."

"Nevertheless they have been subjected to considerable abuse from unformed quarters where their action has been very unfairly criticized and misrepresented, although they are old tried officers with an average length of 44 years service in the army." After saying that the seven commissioners had taken a leading part in

Widely Appointed Administrative Committee is Announced

Rev. Walter L. Lingle, D.D., of Richmond, Va., has accepted the Chairmanship of the Executive Committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, to which he was elected at its recent meeting held in New York City. Dr. Lingle has been prominently identified with the South-Presbyterian Church as pastor, professor in Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, Moderator of the General Assembly, and leader in general educational work. The Rev. W. I. Shart, of Pittsburgh, Mrs. Orrin R. Lord, of New York, and Bishop C. H. Mills, of Cleveland, were elected Co-Chairmen; and the Rev. Rivington D. Lord, Recording Secretary.

Members at large to serve on the Administrative Committee of the Federal Council were appointed, as follows: E. M. Bowman of New York; Rev. Homer McMillan of Atlanta; Hon. Carl E. Milliken and Rev. Daniel A. Poling, of New York City, representing the Association of Executive Secretaries of local Church organizations on the Administrative Committee, the following were elected: B. F. Lamb of Columbus, Rev. J. Price of Rochester, Rev. F. M. Don of Brooklyn, and Rev. C. R. Nisbet of Pittsburgh. And representing the Home Missions Council, Charles L. White, and Rev. John Dowell, of New York City, with W. R. King, and Rev. Ernest M. Day, of New York City, as alternates, were elected. The Ex-officio

Revised Presbyterian Progressive Program

Special Committee Edits and Publishes
New Arrangement for Church
Schedule

The 1928 Assembly, in accepting the report of the Assembly's Work Committee, revised the Presbyterian Progressive Program and ordered that it be issued after being edited by the Plans and Programs Committee. This Committee met at Louisville, Ky., on December 12th, and at that time asked the Stewardship Department to proceed with the publishing of the revised program.

As it now stands, the Presbyterian Progressive Program as outlined by departments and months of emphasis is as follows: Spiritual Life and Evangelism—September, Foreign Missions—January, February, May, Home Missions—June, October, November, Christian Education and Ministerial Relief—April, December, Religious Education and Publication—July, October, Stewardship of Possessions—February, March, November, Christian Social Service—August.

A leaflet setting forth the manner of operation, and the various departments and the objective before each of these departments, has been issued by the Stewardship Department and may be secured free of charge by request, from the Stewardship Department, 305 Henry Grady Building, Atlanta, Ga.

Kellogg Peace Pact Passed by Senate

Paris Treaty Becomes Law of Land at Signature of President Coolidge

On January 15, after a hard battle for the treaty signed by 15 nations in Paris last August, the United States Senate passed the Kellogg Peace Pact by a vote of 85 to one. The vote was taken amid a great throng of spectators in the galleries, mostly filled with women.

The measure was chiefly sponsored by Senator Borah. It was fought by several senators on the ground that it was virtually useless, and did not prevent war. It passed only after reservations were made that the treaty in no wise interfered with the freedom of the United States to defend herself and her colonies, and her rights recognized by the Monroe doctrine as touching the western hemisphere.

President Coolidge signed the treaty on the next day, amid great ceremony in the Blue Room of the White House, while moving pictures of the event were taken.

We give below the text of the Treaty.

Text of Kellogg Treaty

"Article 1.—The high contracting parties solemnly declare in the names of their respective peoples that they condemn recourse to war for the solution of international controversies, and renounce it as an instrument of national policy in their relations with one another.

"Article 2.—The high contracting parties agree that the settlement or solution of all disputes or conflicts of whatever nature or of whatever origin they may be, which may arise among them, shall never be sought except by pacific means.

"Article 3.—The present treaty shall be ratified by the high contracting parties named in the preamble in accordance with their respective constitutional requirements, and shall take effect as between them as soon as all their several instruments of ratification shall have been deposited at Washington.

Founders' Day At Queens

Charlotte Girls' College observes 158th Anniversary of Queens Museum

Another chapter in the history of Queens College, Charlotte, was completed January 19, when special exercises commemorating the 158th anniversary of the institution were held in the college auditorium in the presence of the student body and a large number of alumnae and friends.

Dr. James F. Hardie, pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church, and Dr. William H. Frazer, president of the college, delivered the principal addresses.

After a musical number by Dr. J. R. Ninniss, director of music at Queens, and a prayer by Dr. Gilbert R. Combs, of the Myers Park Methodist Church, greetings were brought by Rev. W. W. Akers, Lincolnton, vice-president of the board. Miss Lilly Long the aged honorary president of the Alumnae Association, and for many years dean of the college gave echoes of the old regime of the college. Messages were brought from Charlotte by Mayor F. M. Redd, and the Secretary of the Chamber of Commerce, Clarence O. Kuester, and from the Alumnae Association of today by Mrs. Onilee Brown, the present president of the association.

Mrs. C. C. Hook, one of the women members of the Board of Directors of the college, representing Mecklenburg Presbytery, spoke on the proposed endowment project which begins in April, a move to raise $200,000.

Dr. J. R. Bridges, a former president of the college, introduced President W. H. Frazer, who recounted the history of Queens, tracing the school from Queens Museum, established by the Colonial Legislature in 1771. The North Carolina Legislature, in 1777, changed the name to Liberty Hall. The college in the meanwhile had been transferred to Winnsboro, S. C. Later it was brought from that place back to Charlotte. Robert and Margaret Anne Burwell came to Charlotte in 1857 and took charge of the school as the Charlotte Female Institution. In 1901 the institution came definitely under Presbyterian Church control, and was denominated the Presbyterian College for Women. In 1912 the present beautiful site was chosen and the handsome buildings erected, and the name was again changed to Queens College.

Dr. C. R. Nisbet, of Caldwell Memorial Church introduced Dr. Jas. F. Hardie, pastor of Second Church, Charlotte, who made the principal address of the morning, pleading for Christian Education and for the local support and loyalty of the community for this splendid college, with its prospects of becoming a great and outstanding institution for the training of Christian women for all the walks of life.

After the program, all the participants and alumnae enjoyed the fellowship of a lunch together in the beautiful Sarah Morrison dining hall, Queens' latest acquisition to her already splendid equipment.

"This treaty shall, when it has come into effect as prescribed in the preceding paragraph, remain open as long as may be necessary for adherence by the other powers of the world. Every instrument evidencing the adherence of a power shall be deposited at Washington and the treaty shall immediately upon such deposit become effective as prescribed in the preceding paragraph, remain open as long as may be necessary."

South Carolina Colleges Resume Work

Presbyterian Schools in South Carolina
Open With Encouraging
Prospects After Holidays

Presbyterian College, at Clinton, began classes Tuesday, January 8, after an extended vacation on advice of the state health officer. Most of the students are back and are now preparing for examinations, which will begin Monday, January 21, and extend through the remainder of the week. The varsity basketball squad and the boxing team were called in several days before the opening of college for training.

The men were grieved on their return to learn of the serious illness of Prof. A. T. Fant professor of physics. Although his condition is now better than it was, it is expected that it will be some time before he can return to his work. His classes have been divided between Professors Grafton and Martin pending his recovery.

Tuesday, January 8, the students had the privilege of hearing Dr. S. S. McClure, editor of McClure's Magazine and at present engaged in the development of projects around Calhoun Falls. Doctor McClure, who is eminent as a scholar, publicist and author gave a most interesting lecture. He discussed the influence of England and America in the modern world and concluded with a brief sketch of his plans for the Calhoun Falls development.

The student body met Thursday, January 17, to elect a new staff for The Blue Stocking, weekly publication. As is the custom the staff changes in the middle of each year. The student body accepted the nominations of the

Peace Reopens With Full School

Girls' Junior College at Raleigh enters Spring Session With High Hopes—
Dr. Glasgow to Lead Series of Meetings

Peace Institute, Raleigh, N. C., reopened after the holidays with but two students failing to return, though a few were late because of the flu epidemic.

Four new boarding students have entered school, and we shall probably have other registrations for the spring term, which will begin January 22nd.

Any alumna or any friend of Peace who failed to receive the booklet that was prepared for distribution at the time of the dedication of the New Buildings may obtain the booklet by writing to the Secretary of Peace for it.

Our catalogue for 1929-1930 will soon be ready for distribution and we should like to take this opportunity to remind our alumnae and friends that they can help us to get in touch with girls who would make desirable students for the coming year. We shall be glad to send catalogues and other literature to any girls that are recommended by our readers. Our goal for next year is the registration of a hundred new girls. With the help of our alumnae we can overreach this mark.

Our annual evangelistic services, which will be held from February 11-15, inclusively, will be conducted this year by Dr. Samuel McPheeters Glasgow, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Knoxville, Tenn. The fact that Dr. Glasgow's mother, Grace Woodson McPheeters, was a Peace alumna, and his wife, formerly Miss Mary Finley McIlwaine, is a Peace alumna, lends an added interest to the pleasure with which we are looking forward to Dr. Glasgow's visit.

Dendy was elected business manager but due to outside work was forced to resign. R. S. Crawford was elected in his place and will choose his assistants later. This is an efficient staff and it is expected that it will hold the publication up to its usual high level.

Chicora College at Columbia resumed work Monday, January 7, after the Christmas holidays. Practically all students and the entire faculty were present at the chapel exercises Tuesday morning. Many of the faculty spent the Christmas season in their homes, while others visited friends in Georgia, Tennessee, North Carolina and other states.

Converse College, at Spartanburg, resumed its activities Friday, January 4. Students rapidly adjusted themselves to the old routine, in preparation for the examinations now in progress. An atmosphere of unusual calm and quiet pervades the college, and studying holds full sway. The examination period will last about ten days.

Students of Converse have been under a partial quarantine since their return, to avoid a "flu" epidemic, such as so many colleges have undergone. There has been very little "flu" at the college, and every precaution is being taken to keep up this state of affairs. Students are not allowed to have visitors, to go out of town or to go to the movies, and they are required to go to bed at 11 o'clock every night.

Dr. A. D. P. Gilmour, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Wilmington, N. C., formerly pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Spartanburg, made an inspirational talk to the members of the Y. W. C. A. at their vesper service Sunday evening.

The January meeting of the Spartanburg Alumnae club was held at the home of Mrs. Walter S. Montgomery on Pine Street, with Mrs. Montgomery and her daughter, Mrs. John Cart, Jr., as hostesses. Mrs. C. C. Kirby, president of the club, presided.

GEN. BOOTH DEMOTED BY SALVATION ARMY

the work of the council at Sunbury, the statement went on:

"Numerous legal and technical details to be dealt with both before and after calling the council and in these matters the seven commissioners have been guided by independent legal advice so as to insure that their actions were entirely in accord with the deeds of constitution signed by the founder and upon the terms of which the present general accepted office.

"These seven men also were foremost in the efforts to persuade the general to retire from office as nothing was further from their thoughts than anything in the nature of an act of personal hostility toward the general with whom they had been associated for so many years and for whom they had constantly shown the most sympathetic concern.

"It is thought that examination of the names of those voting for the adjudication will reveal the fact that the requisitioning commissioners have been justified in their action by the support of every territorial commander, except the general's daughter, Colonel Mary Booth."

The eight opponents of the resolution were Mrs. Bramwell Booth, Catherine Booth, Mary Booth, Mrs. Booth-Helberg, and Commissioners Laurie, Kitchen, Cunningham and Smith.

Every member of the council was weeping, especially the aged members who had worked long years with the general. Commander Evangeline Booth broke into deep sobs as she signed the adjudication resolution. As each member's name was called by the president of the council he or she stepped to the desk and signed the document which voted the general unfit to continue office. It was not made known what the word unfit was intended to denote. The council adjourned.

Following this vote General Booth's adherents secured an injunction against the council's action. When the injunction was reported to the council, the shock caused the sudden death of one member, William Haines.

General William Bramwell Booth succeeded his father, General William Booth, the founder of the army, on his death in 1912. He had become an officer in 1874, and from 1900 until he was made general he was chief of staff.

TO RECOGNIZE BAD BILLS

A young clerk entering upon his duties in a certain bank was anxious to know how he could distinguish any counterfeit bills which came his way. The president of the bank gave him the following good advice: "Get familiar with the good bills and you will recognize the bad bills at sight."

The banker's advice has a wider application. The best way to detect counterfeit character and conduct is to be thoroughly familiar with the good and genuine. There will then be an instinctive revulsion of feeling in the presence of that which is defective or worthless.—Kind words.

DEVOTIONAL

EVANGELISM IN THE CHURCH SCHOOL

Evangelism is our prime duty both in the pulpit and the parish, but most of all through the church school policy of educational evangelism, we should be able to teach and win every one who comes to us for Christian fellowship and instruction in God's Holy Word—men and women, and boys and girls.

"By educational evangelism we mean the bringing to bear upon the life of every pupil the early nurture and training of consecrated Christian parents, then the more systematic religious education in the home, also the continuation of religious education in the church school and the church, and the environing of the life with Christ-controlled experiences, so that as the child comes to the place of sufficient knowledge, of his own volition, having had his will trained, he may definitely personally, intelligently choose Jesus Christ as his Saviour and Lord.

"It is then for the church school to help this saved one to grow in grace and the knowledge of Jesus Christ, and be trained for cooperative service with and for Christ, to help Him to get His gracious will be done in the world. Is it not the shame of our Kingdom service to win children, youth and adults to Christ and the church and then let them drift away from active participation in Christian work? Saved, but lost to the church and Kingdom enterprises."

Let us be much in prayer that we may be used of the Holy Spirit to win many souls to follow Jesus in this year 1929.—Calendar Central Church, Atlanta.

HEAVENLY SALVAGING

We give from the Christian Advocate the account of a memorial service held in honor of a judge who through eighteen years had inspired defeated men and women to turn defeat into victory. The speaker was an old lawyer who could talk out of experience: "There came one day a girl with dark blue eyes and flaxen hair, and she looked impudently at the judge, who asked her if she were guilty or not guilty."

"Guilty," she replied and laughed with no blush of shame upon her girlish face.

"You know what that means?" asked the judge, pained to the heart.

"You tell it."

"The State's prison—a convict." "The girl with the blue eyes laughed again, a laugh without mirth. I felt the shivers creep up and down my spine, as at times when in the face of some great danger.

"You—a girl—don't want to go there?" His voice trembled with a shock.

"Why not? It's all in a life time."

"Won't you promise me to be good if I let you off?"

"I never saw the like of it. The judge pleading with the sinner. Yet she couldn't understand.

"No use judge," she gibed. "I'm bad—that's all there is to it. Send me over the road."

"She said that, this girl with a face as innocent as a child's. Not more than seventeen and yet headed down and didn't care. I thought of the man who had brought her to that pass and that if I could only—

"But never mind. The judge told the bailiff to take her back to jail. He hurried through the docket for the day and then walked the floor of his private office. Suddenly he picked up the telephone and called to one of the best women of that town—one of those women that God has made to do his work when all else has failed.

"She came and listened to what the judge had to say with glistening eyes. It was whispered around the court room next day that they—the judge and this good woman—knelt in prayer. Then she left and went over to the jail.

"The case was called in the morning—the State against Agnes—never mind the other name.

"They entered the room, the woman and the girl who didn't care, their arms entwined.

"The girl was weeping softly, her head on the woman's shoulder.

"This is Agnes, Judge," said the woman, "and she has come to tell you she will give you her promise to be a good girl from this time on as God, may help her. Is it not so daughter?"

"Yes," sobbed the girl, "and tell him how I thank him for being so good to me."

"She would have knelt and kissed his hand, but the woman held her up. "Five years later she—the girl who didn't care—wrote to the judge and sent him the picture of her baby girl. She said she had gone West, found a good honest man and married him, and this was their child. 'And, Judge, we want you to know that we kneel at the bedside every night, my husband and me, and pray to the good God to bless you and love you and yours.'

"I saw the letter and the picture of the little girl."—Christain Advocate.

THE CHURCH

The Church is the noblest and best organization in the world. It furnishes the best examples of righteous living. It produces the finest specimens of character of which this world has any knowledge. It exercises the largest influence in the work of reform. It is one sure and steadfast promoter and supporter of reform. Whatever good is in the world has come through the avenues of the Church. Both directly and indirectly it promotes and safeguards public morals. It started the stir that there has been in China; It was the awakening power in India and Japan. It conserves the peace and happiness of the community. It promotes honest, progressive and beneficent government. It does the most to promote the sentiments of love, brotherly kindness and good neighborhood. It does the most to promote clean, strong, brave, self-sacrificing and efficient citizens and public servants.

It does the most to make and maintain the home as a place of virtue, love, righteousness, comfort and happiness. It sympathizes with the weak, the wronged and oppressed and pleads for social justice more than any other institution. It stands almost universally and uncompromisingly for the right and against the wrong. It brings to the classes and conditions of people the best and most comforting and hope-inspiring messages regarding their sorrows, their sufferings and what all may face—death. The aim of the Church is to proclaim the gospel throughout the whole world. Give the Church your best service. Christ loved the church and gave Himself for it. Live by the Church, stand by the Church and die by the Church.—Selected.

"A RESOLUTION"

To choose the best; to do my best; live;
Determined that I grow and do as I give;
Never to look behind me for an hour
To kneel in weakness and to walk in power;
And always facing forward to the light;
Now and forever standing for the right;
Though struck, defeated, fallen for the day,
Yet on, with the strength God gives
On in the way.

Often precious stones are put in the fire. The Oriental cornelian a Brazilian topaz change color in the burning, and the black spots of the amethyst and hyacinth can only be removed by heat. Thus God's jewels are purified; all that can stand the fire must pass through it, and in the fiercest heat of trial many a commonplace Christian begins to glow with hues of grace, at which men greatly wonder.—W. Y. Fullerton.

THE RACE

Edgar G. Gammon

Jesus, Saviour, Son of God,
Thou knowest well the way I trod,
Thou knowest what I daily face,
While toiling in the Christian race.

Jesus, Saviour, Son of Light,
Urge me onward into right;
Let my wavering eyes behold,
Thy crown of life, the Christian goal.

Jesus, Saviour, Son of Love,
Look down in pity from above;
Assure me of Thy strength to run
The Christian race that I've begun.

EDITORIAL

THE BROWN-EYED LADY WITH THE ALABASTER SKIN

Recently we noticed three books written by our ministers. They dealt with Scripture subjects, and will be of great use to the preachers who are at work.

This book, by Rev. J. B. Ficklin, is of an entirely different character, yet it will also develop the spiritual side of a man.

The young preachers especially will learn how to play the game. "Sans peur et sans reproche."

We began to read the little book, intending to read long enough to form an idea of the story, but we became so engrossed in it that we not only read it through, but found ourselves in love with "the brown-eyed lady with the alabaster skin."

Mr. Ficklin has written well and should be proud of his story. Someday we hope to meet his heroine.

We heartily commend this book as a charm-story, simply told.

GORDON L. ELLIS

On Tuesday, January 15, at 6:00 p. m., this faithful worker left us for a better world.

For 23 years he has been steadily at the notype machine preparing copy for the press.

A short time ago he was affected by a lesion in the brain, and notwithstanding the skill of his physicians, he passed away, after an operation.

He was fully conscious of the risk, attending the operation, but having made his peace with God, he willingly underwent it.

He leaves a devoted wife and four daughters to mourn his untimely death, and he leaves a vacancy in our working force that will be difficult to fill.

HE THAT HUMBLETH HIMSELF

Our Lord in His discourses abounded in parables. "He that findeth his life shall lose it," He said. Then again, "He that shall humble himself shall be exalted." "He that loveth his life shall lose it."

The truth of this saying was manifested in his life and death.

He died and was buried, and as far as men knew that was the end of Him

The corn of wheat fell into the ground and died, but it arose again, and has been bearing fruit ever since.

The corn of wheat can only grow by death, and what is true in nature is also true in the kingdom of God.

Men live in proportion as they die to the world and to self.

As the corn of wheat when thrown into the ground does not abide alone, but increases a hundredfold, so when Christ died, and the tomb was sealed and a guard placed at the door of the sepulchre, He was alone. His dying agony was increased by the feeling of being alone, hence His cry upon the Cross, "My God, My God, why hast thou forsaken Me?"

He was not alone, but He has been increasing ever since.

Looking down from heaven, on Sabbath day, He can see vast myriads of every tribe and nation assembling to worship Him, and He sees the fulfillment of that promise, "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me."

The working of this same law is seen in human life, in proportion as man effaces self, in the same proportion he is exalted.

This is notably true in the lives of many missionaries.

When Dr. Wilfred Greenfell went to Labrador as a medical missionary, his friends thought that he had buried himself where the world would never again hear of him.

To-day he is known everywhere, and men of all faiths recognize him as a great man whose deeds prove that the Gospel of Christ is for the healing of the nations.

He did bury himself in the wilds of Labrador, as his friends predicted, but as a result he has become one of the great men of the world. He was recently elected to the Lord Rectorship of the St. Andrews University.

The same fate was predicted for Henry Martyn, when he went to India, after a brilliant record at Oxford.

His example has inspired hundreds of men to give themselves to the same cause

So it is in the Christian's life. We live only as we die to the world and are buried in the death of the flesh.

THE FELLOWSHIP OF PRAYER FOR THE LENTEN SEASON

This booklet was prepared under the auspices of the Federal Council.

It provides a Bible reading, a text, a meditation, and a prayer for each day.

As a devotional book it can be used with real spiritual benefit at any season. Any pastor who will send his name and address to this Commission, 105 East 22nd Street, New York, will receive by return mail, postpaid, a copy free.

REPUTABLE THEOLOGICAL SCHOOLS

Our Seminaries, at least those of our own Church, pride themselves upon their orthodoxy, as well as keeping up with the progress of knowledge in general. From hints, gathered here and there, we are afraid that among the "Intellectuals" they are regarded as behind the times.

It seems that the New York Times recently had a special dispatch from London, sent as "News," in which dispatch the reading public was informed that "Some Bible stories are called 'Myths' by English Churchmen in a New Commentary on the Bible."

The Churchman, a periodical of the Episcopal Church in this country, takes The Times to task for labeling such an item as news.

The Churchman thinks that when such a journal as The Times labels this fact as "News," it is a sad commentary on the American pulpit in that it proves that the pulpit has failed in its duty of teaching such facts to the people.

It intimates that the pulpit should keep abreast of the discoveries of science and Biblical criticism. It says:

"Every theological seminary of any standing in this country has been teaching for a quarter of a century almost everything which, according to this Times story, is contained in the new commentary published under the editorship of Bishop Gore. Nearly twenty-five years ago, a popular magazine carried a series of articles called: "Blasting at the Rock of Ages." The author threw his readers into several varieties of spasms by his assertions that the Christian faith was being undermined in colleges and seminaries. The devastation was being wrought by precisely the same conclusions of scholarship, with certain minor variations, which are incorporated in this apparently highly exciting commentary.

According to this English correspondent of The Times, "No reputable scholar now holds that Moses wrote the Pentateuch," and this New Commentary dismisses the Scriptural stories of Jonah and the whale, Noah's Ark, Belshazzar's feast and the Tower of Babel as "myths."

The Churchman further adds, "No modern-minded clergyman trained in any reputable theological school during the past quarter of a century will view such statements as news."

The writer does not claim to be "modern-minded," for which he thanks the Lord, but he does claim to have been "trained in a reputable theological school," under the ablest theological teacher of this country, and he regards such statements, not only as news, but very bad news—and he can not understand how such preachers can preach with any authority or confidence.

They have nothing to stand upon; no authority behind them, so that their message is only man's word that carries no weight beyond a mere surmise. It may be as our contemporary claims, that such beliefs are common in all churches—but, if such be the fact in the Southern Presbyterian Church, it is because such views are held in secret by men too cowardly to confess their views.

If any of them have changed their view since their ordination, they are in honor bound to make known that change.

TWO-FOLD DUTY OF THE MISSIONARY

In Paul's Epistles to Timothy the ministry finds its orders of life-work.

He writes: "Take heed unto thyself, and unto the doctrine."

This advice applies to the ministers everywhere, but especially to the ministers working in a foreign field.

He is a living exponent of the gospel he preaches, and his hearers form their conception of the truth by its effect upon his life. Then his life must be backed by the preaching of a pure truth. He must therefore take heed to his own life lest by his life he deny what he preaches.

As we follow Paul in his tours across the then known world, we find that he, not only preached salvation from sin, but lived a life that proved that he had been saved from sin.

Then in his letters to Timothy and Titus, he stresses the importance of pure doctrine. Notwithstanding the care he took, we find that error did creep into the churches he founded.

To-day we find that one of the duties devolving upon the missionary is the preaching of a pure gospel. He has to take heed to himself and live an earnest, consecrated life, but he also has to be careful that the doctrine he preaches is what he was commissioned to preach.

To us who are at a distance it is a sad sight to see divisions among these missionaries, when they ought to present a solid front to the foe, and impress the heathen world with the fact that they are strong to carry out the terms of their great commission. It may be that we draw wrong conclusions and side with the wrong parties; but it is evident that the divisions between different schools of thought in this country have not only been extended to heathen lands, but are pressed with more bitterness. It may be that they live in such a way that their nerves are on an edge, and they magnify their differences; but however, that may be, the effect upon the home Church is seen in decreasing interest and decreasing contributions.

It is evident that the great need at present, both at home and abroad, is a great baptism of the Spirit.

Our prayer is that the editors too may share that blessing when it comes.

CONTRIBUTED

THE MESSAGE FROM JERUSALEM

By Rev. D. W. Richardson, D.D., Professor of Christian Missions, Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, Virginia

One of the most significant meetings in the history of the modern missionary movement was that of the International Missionary Council which was held on the Mount of Olives, March 24 to April 8, 1928; and the full report of which has just been published. In former conferences of missionary leaders the representatives were practically all from the sending countries, only occasionally have a few delegates from the receiving countries been present. In the Jerusalem meeting Christians who were natives of Asia, Africa, and other mission fields met and deliberated on equal terms and in approximately equal numbers with those from Europe and America. There are isolated missionaries and missionary agencies which do not recognize the leadership of the International Missionary Council. A recent writer from China speaks of a meeting at one of the summer resorts where reports from the Jerusalem meeting were made, and she says: "We simply stayed away." But even though there are a few who conscientiously stay away, and are unwilling to admit that the International Missionary Council can speak and act for them, there can be no denial of the fact that this body constitutes the most powerful and influential group in the world today in determining the message and the methods of the Christian missionary movement. They make no effort to force their findings upon any of the missionary agents or agencies. They express, however, the consensus of present-day thinking on the problems which they consider; and their conclusions embody the results of prayerful, patient and painstaking study of all the mission fields, their present conditions and needs, their religions, and the methods of approach and points of contact which may guide the Christian forces of the world in their expansive movement.

Personnel of the Conference

The personnel of the Jerusalem Conference was made up of over two hundred men and women, coming from more than fifty countries; and represented more fully than any other meeting in the history of the Church the great world field which Christ had in view when He gave to His followers the Great Commission. These representatives of different races and communions, and schools of thought within the Protestant Church, met on a parity. In this meeting those from the younger churches on mission fields and those from the older churches in the West came to understand each other, to realize our mutual interdependence in the extension of the Kingdom of Christ, and to recognize the essential spiritual solidarity of the Christian world. These delegates, blending the different races of mankind, faced together the world program of the Christian Church with all of the problems and issues involved. Facing that program, they expressed anew the great Christian conviction of the absolute uniqueness and adequacy of the gospel of Jesus Christ. Certain great subjects had been selected for consideration; and on different phases of these subjects preliminary papers had been prepared to guide the thinking and discussion within the meeting. Some of these papers were disappointing in views expressed and in individual opinions advanced; and there was fear in the minds of many that the conclusions of the Council would be too deeply influenced by them. As we shall indicate below however, such fears were shown to be without substantial foundation.

Published Reports of Conference

The complete report of the Council's discussions, conclusions, and recommendations has just been issued from the press. It comprises light volumes—a volume being devoted to each of the subjects considered, and one containing addresses on general subjects. The limitation of space will not allow for more than the listing of these separate volumes. Their titles are indicative of their general contents but not of the wealth of material which they contain: Vol. I, The Christian Message; Vol. II, Religious Education; Vol. III, Younger and Older Churches; Vol. IV, Missions and Race Conflict; Vol. V, Missions and Industrialism; Vol. VI, Missions and Rural Problems; Vol. VII, International Missionary Cooperation; Vol. VIII, Addresses on General Subjects.

The Council and the Christian Message

Volume I on The Christian-life and Message in its relation to non-Christian systems of life and thought is of compelling interest. Many throughout the Christian world were deeply concerned in the days preceding the Jerusalem Council lest that meeting should sanction a weakening of faith in the uniqueness, the sufficiency, and the necessity for the Christian message. This volume of the Council's report makes it clear that in the minds of the vast majority there was no wavering of faith as to the validity and authority of the Gospel of Christ as the sufficient, final, and absolute Saviour of mankind. The Council's statement of the Christian message, which was unanimously adopted, is written not only against the background of the non-Christian religions; but also against the even darker background of the naturalistic and materialistic views of life which have captivated so large a part of the modern world. Their statement of the message of Christianity centers in the person and work of the Lord Jesus Christ. They agreed that the Christian religion is based upon a great body of facts which find rootage in history, facts which faith did not create and which unbelief cannot overthrow. The values and virtues of other religions were recognized, but at the same time the conviction was expressed that the followers of other faiths must come to God; and that they could come to Him "only if He come to them by the way of the atonement and resurrection of His Son." In the face of the movement for syncretism in religion which is so potent in the minds of many today the Council affirmed that "evangelical missions are based upon the great and absolutely unique acts of God for the redemption of mankind, particularly the sending of His Son, His death on the cross for the atonement of the world, His resurrection as the beginning of a new God-given life for the redeemed race." Some of the views expressed in the preliminary papers which were distributed before the conference convened had given rise to fear as to the attitude which the Council might adopt with reference to the non-Christian religions. It has been reported, that a few of the delegates to the meeting went there with the purpose of advocating the surrender of Christianity's high exclusive claim, and the turning of the missionary enterprise into a movement for the sharing of cultures and the mutual quest for truth. The Director of the Finnish Missionary Society, M. Tarkkanen, felt it necessary to warn against speaking in any uncertain tone about the exclusiveness of Christianity. "We must not forget", he said, "that there is no salvation in Hinduism or Buddhism, but only in Christ. Christianity is not one of many religions, the highest and best, perhaps: it is something quite different from them all." The warnings against syncretism are very necessary these days. Under the influence of the Holy Spirit and the wise counsel of clear-thinking Christian leaders, under the spell of the sacred environment and associations, some of those who went to Jerusalem with doubts testified to a revival of faith in their own souls and to a clarification of their own confused thinking. The conception of Christianity as unique, universal and absolute was clearly set over against any syncretistic tendency to combine all religions into a composite system.

In the atmosphere of prayer and personal devotion which characterized the Jerusalem Meeting it was not possible to be ashamed of the Gospel of Christ—"as in the past, so also in the present", the Council declared. "The Gospel is the only way of salvation." "The Gospel is the answer to the world's greatest need,—not our discovery or achievements; it rests on an act of God. It announces glorious truth . . . Christ is our motive and Christ is our end. We must give nothing less and we can give nothing more." The whole message must be read to be fully appreciated. It is a twentieth century statement of the redemptive message of the Christian Church as accepted by the Jerusalem Council; and in the great essentials it holds fast to the faith once for all delivered unto the saints. It includes the incarnation, life, death, and resurrection of Christ; regeneration, forgiveness of sin and a new life following repentance and faith; the indwelling presence and power of the Holy Spirit, and the glorious hope for the establishment of the Kingdom of God. It declares that the gospel of Christ alone offers the supreme goal of life as well as the only way of escape from class animosities and race prejudices into "national well-being and international fellowship and peace."

Reports of Conference Source of Inspiration

Every volume of the report is full of material that is interesting, informative and inspiring, and ought to be in the library of every minister and moulder of Christian thought and activity. The volume on missions and race conflict will be found exceedingly well worth careful study by those who are interested in interracial relations here in America, especially in the South and on the Pacific Coast. Volume V reveals in a striking way the ever-widening apprehension of the implications of the Christian message which characterizes the missionary movement today; and points out the possibilities in fields of service to which the Christian Church cannot afford to be indifferent. The significance of the Council's discussions and conclusions on missions and rural problems (Vol. VI) is obvious when we reflect that two-thirds of the population of the world live and make their living on the land. All the great mission fields are from 75 percent to 85 percent rural; and the gospel is to be carried to people of whom approximately four out of every five are farmers. The large place which agricultural missions is coming to occupy in the missionary movement was a clear call for the special consideration of the problems involved, as well as the methods and objectives of this phase of the Christian enterprise. In this volume the papers on "Christianity and Rural Civilization," by K. L. Butterfield, President of Michigan State College; on "Examples of the Work of Christian Missions in Rural Areas", by W. J. McKee; and "Rural Korea", by Dr. E. S. Brunner are especially noteworthy. The latter is one of the most complete surveys on economic, social, and religious conditions among the rural population of Korea that we have seen. Dr. Brunner is Director of the Town and Country Studies of the Institute of Social and Religious Research; and in addition to his paper on Korea this volume also contains similar studies by him regarding the Christian church in rural China and rural India. One can appreciate the value of the information which he gives while not always agreeing with him in his religious interpretations and emphases.

Individual Regeneration and Social Reconstruction

In so large a group of Christian leaders, representing all the principal races and schools of thought, naturally some views were expressed with which many of us will not find ourselves in accord. The erroneous conceptions and unsatisfying convictions which were occasionally expressed by individuals do not vitiate the interest and value of the final conclusions of the Council. To some it may seem that too much emphasis was placed on the social implications and applications of the Christian Gospel. In its conclusions the Jerusalem Council finds place for both individual regeneration and social reconstruction. We are living in an age which places emphasis upon the wider application of the Christian mission; and the Jerusalem meeting faced the fact that the Christian Church cannot afford to ignore her responsibility for seeking to readjust social and national and international relationships. There is no separate social gospel. The one gospel of Jesus Christ makes it clear that society cannot be regenerated except by the birth of individual souls into the Kingdom of God, and also that the individual cannot exist apart from society and that his salvation involves

WHAT MEN ARE DOING In Abingdon Presbytery

One hundred and thirty-six men gathered in Abingdon, Virginia on the sixth of December at the call of Dr. G. A. Wilson, Jr., for a Conference on Men's Work. Dr. Wilson is Chairman of Men's Work in Abingdon Presbytery, and also in the Synod of Appalachia. The men present at this meeting represented 19 churches, four of them being churches in Holston Presbytery.

The meeting was called to order at 4:30 p. m., and after a brief devotional they entered into an "Interesting and Spirited" round-table discussion of the problems of organization. Among other fine things on the program the men heard a thirty minutes address on "The Man and His Church" from Mr. George Sells of Johnson City, Tennessee. This was followed by short talks from Mr. R. M. Richardson of Marion, Va., in a personal testimony on "His Own Development in Christian Work" a brought about through the organization of the men of his own church. The Big Stone Gap Church gave its testimony to the "Value of Organization in their church" the past year by two men, Messrs. Gordon and Miller. A description of Men's Work in their congregation was given by one or two of the men from the Kingsport, Tenn., church. Mr. Lacy Wilson of the First Presbyterian Church of Bristol, Tennessee, gave an address on "What the Organization has Meant to My Church and to Myself."

Other interesting features of the program embrace supper in the dining-hall at Stonewall Jackson College at seven o'clock, and an address by Dr. G. A. Wilson, Jr. on "Men-of-the-Church, what it is." Songs were led by Rev. C. L. Nisbet, pastor of the church at Norton, Virginia.

This is the second annual conference on Men's Work held in Abingdon Presbytery. The first was held in the Royal Oak Presbyterian Church at Marion, Va. in September of 1927. Many of these men drove more than 100 miles in the afternoon and back home after the close of the conference that night. This annual conference is looked upon as one of the outstanding features of Men's Work in this great old Presbytery. A large number of churches in the Presbytery have realized the value to be found in the Men-of-the-Church. Some have already set up the organization, and others are planning to do so as soon as they can be prepared for it.

In Rutherfordton, N. C.

The men of the Presbyterian Church at Rutherfordton, N. C., were organized last June. At the time of the organization they chose for two of their goals, first, enlarging church attendance, and second, enlarging the Sunday School enrollment.

A recent visit to this church reveals some very encouraging things. The pastor states that the effort of church attendance was blessed. Only one group of the entire six into which the men were divided made a special effort toward building Sunday School enrollment. This one group succeeded remarkably. The attendance at the Sunday School was just about doubled by one month's effort.

There have been several handicaps to the work of the organization. Just now they are getting a new grip on things, and doubtless other fine reports of work done by the men of this church will follow this very brief statement.

In Mooresville, N. C.

The First Church, Mooresville, N. C., was one of the first of our churches to organize. Things moved very slowly for a good while. We over-organized at the beginning. Then we cut out some things and started fresh. The simpler plan worked much better. We do not have a monthly meeting for all the men and group meetings in between. The group reports to the monthly meeting what they have done, and keep the whole body posted as to the needs of the church. The work of the group is mainly to look after the sick, needy, indifferent and unsaved. Interest is growing gradually though there is great enthusiasm.

The men are willing at any time to conduct prayer meetings for the pastor, and a large majority lead prayer. The night services are turned over to them occasionally, and they also do the singing at night when called upon. Vacant churches in the country and town about often call for help, and our men always respond and render good service. The organization is a great success.

his social relationships. The missionary who rebelled against the placing of emphasis upon the social applications of the Christian message is not only out of harmony with the clearest and most consecrated thinking of our age, he is also setting himself against the orderly advancement of the Kingdom of God. The reading of the book under review reassures us as to present tendencies in missionary thoughts, purpose, and program; and will emphasize in our own thinking the conviction of the world's need for the unique and effective message which the Church is commissioned to carry. The complete set of eight volumes may be obtained from the International Missionary Council, 419 Fourth Avenue, New York, at a cost of eight dollars plus twenty-five cents for postage.

THE CHALLENGE OF THE WEEK OF PRAYER

An Appeal for Foreign Missions

invite the attention of every Minister in the Synod North Carolina to the following facts which to my mind challenges attention especially as we approach the Week of Prayer for Foreign Missions.

First: The Southern Presbyterian Church is responsible for as many or more souls in 1929 as in 1925, but from April 1st, 1925 to January 1st, 1929 the number of Foreign Missionaries on the Foreign Fields decreased from 464 or 53—with an increased responsibility we have a greatly decreased working force for her assumed. During the period from August 1st, 1925 to April 1928 there was a net increase of 147 Ministers in Home Field. We are constantly told that the Minister is the key to the situation in our Foreign Work. Other Ministers, does this statement together with the fact that we have increased 147 at home and decreased abroad cause you any heart searching?

Second. America is now according to good authority, the richest Nation on earth, and we are staggered at the rate of progress of material development for the future, and yet the gifts to our Foreign Missions in 1927-28 was only $302,952 over that in 1923-24, and this takes consideration the unprecedented gift in 1927-28 which was $252,010 larger than any annual gift during the history of our Work. In the Synod of North Carolina the gifts to Foreign Missions in 1927-28 was only $6044 over of 1923-24. For the same years the increase last year to Synod's Presbytery's Causes" alone was $92,604. The "Pastor's Salaries" $63,504. Fellow Ministers, our efficiency increasing with our increase in salary?

Third: The third fact that should drive us to our hearts is the alarming falling off in the contributions of the entire Church, to Foreign Missions. For the nine months, April 1st, 1928 to December 31st, 1928, the decrease amounted to $47,645.03, leaving us the impossible task of raising in three months the sum of $859,648.00 for one cause. Did I say impossible? Yes, impossible except by Faith. Fellow Ministers, have we the Faith?

Fourth: The fourth fact that challenges is that we have the necessity for curtailment in face of unprecedented and opportunity on the Foreign Field. As to the matter—Of the thirty-four millions for whose evangelization our Church has accepted responsibility, a large part is in total darkness. Rev. J. W. Vinson in a recent letter Dr. Egbert W. Smith wrote that in his Haichow with a population of 1,750,000, "nine-tenths of the people have never even heard the Gospel or read a religious tract." Substantially the same is true of the seven stations of this great North Kiangsu field of 14,000,000. The opportunity is voiced by all our missionaries write that the fields are white unto the harvest. A chief of an African tribe came one hundred miles for thirty native evangelists for his villages. Miseries are returning to China, and we may look for the best development here.

Fifth: The fifth fact that challenges is the bigness of Foreign Mission enterprise. Dr. Charles Erdman in his story; A Presbyterian Missionary on a voyage to a mission station met a wealthy business man from Francisco who asked him of his line of work. He said; "I represent a firm doing business around the world, as does your shipping firm. We have about $225,000 invested in the Orient, we employ nearly 30,000 men, and our income last year was over $30,000,000." "You must be with the Standard Oil Company," exclaimed the business man. "Oh, no, our company is older and larger than the Standard Oil." It is a fact for lighting the whole world." "I am a representative of the Christian Church going out to see the world, to give that light to the whole world. That is the biggest contract that ever was let." The business man looked puzzled for a moment and then said, "Are the figures true?" "Yes," was the reply. "You will find an article recently published by a business man in a popular monthly which summarizes the foreign missionary enterprise of the whole Christian Church at the figures which I have given you for the Protestant foreign missions."

Sixth: The sixth and last fact that challenges is our Command to Go—And never forget that His Command is to be with us "always even unto the end of the world." It is conditional upon our going: Are we obeying? Now Ministers, what a challenge comes to us in this Week of Prayer for Foreign Missions!

help, too, when the Every Member Canvass is to be put on. In all this work we find that the men get real joy out of it, and it proves a means of developing them spiritually. Our men have developed wonderfully since the Stephen's evangelistic meeting last summer. This gave us a real spiritual stimulus all along the line.

My judgment about this men's work is that it is well worth all the time and energy we put into it, and is going to result in larger good as time goes on. But we must not expect it to spring up like a mushroom. Patience and perseverance are necessary to accomplish what we wish. Above all we must pray without ceasing.

In Pensacola, Florida

At our monthly officers' meeting last week with all of the elders and deacons gathered together, the committee on Evangelism recommended that the members of the Council each resolve to do definite personal work for individuals. After a discussion, it was unanimously carried, The chairman of the Committee was ready. He read out the names of 47 men who were prospects for membership in the First Church. He gave two names to each officer present, the officers picking out the ones they wanted when the names were read. Each man is to make definite plans in his own way to win these men to Christ, and bring them into the church. The Committee has provided a questionnaire to be filled in by each worker, and a report has to be made on each individual on or before the next meeting.

The next morning after the meeting I went down through the business section before eleven o'clock. Three of the officers present the night before met me and told me they had already seen one of the men assigned to them.

"THE LAYMAN AND HIS LIBRARY"

By Edward Burns Martin
Pastor First Methodist Episcopal Church,
Kenosha, Wis.

All successful preachers read a good deal. Indeed, I do not know of a man of first-rate success in the craft who is not a book-man. To help the less competent or the financially embarrassed, there is now a movement on foot to add to the church budget a book fund of $50.00 for the minister; and this is not a charity but a well-reasoned bit of business. The theory is, that every sermon should have at least a dollar's worth of new homiletic material in it! Methodist men generally will approve this ideal for the minister and will want to help it forward. But what will be their reaction to my proposition herewith, viz., that a similar fund be established for lay leaders. Or if not a fund, that such churchmen agree to read at least one good book a month of informative or inspirational value. What is acknowledged as a necessity for the one ought to be of specific helpfulness for the other.

Reading may be considered a luxury by many. To the churchman it will be accounted a necessity. Let me give you three out of my many reasons.

Three Good Reasons

1. The Church's business is to help establish the Kingdom of God in the minds and hearts and methods of men. It is a going, growing concern and only a going, growing man can hope to understand it. Books greatly help to that end.

2. Reading universalizes experience and delivers one from the narrowness and provincialism of common life. The Church of Jesus Christ needs big men—men who have a big way of looking at life and that kindliness of approach which characterizes such men.

3. The reading of good books makes one contemporary with the good and great of all ages. Against the historical background it enables one to judge of life's real values. In Browning's phrase, "The future I may face now, I have proved the past." This is no plea to resort constantly to the precedents of the fathers, but it is an assumption that such understanding will deliver any sensible man from resort to methods or beliefs however popular, which have shallow rootage in the past. Books are tests in this educational process. One is unwise to get on without them.

The grave danger of our day and of every day is that minister and layman shall use the perfect tense instead of the present one. They think of themselves as having been prepared for their work, whereas their preparation, their education, should be like life itself, a continuous and developing thing. When a man ceases to grow, he dies, and I take it the difficulty in many of our churches in both pulpit and pew is that there are too many dead ones! I am not asking for burial! I am pleading that this good agency that "wakes the dead" may have right of way with all.—Methodist Men.

"FORWARD"

Speak unto the children of Israel that they go forward" was the command given by God through His servant Moses, at a time when it hardly seemed possible to Israel to go forward. With their enemy in the rear and the barrier of the Red Sea ahead, how could such a command be obeyed? Only through faith in God and willingness to accept His challenge and "go forward" as He commanded:

Nor can we go forward in the great Foreign Mission enterprise except as we go with Him, submitting our wills to Him, our faith in Him and our substance for Him. The Week of Prayer and Self-Denial for Foreign Missions which is now before us (January 27—February 3) calls us to just this confession, submission and consecration.

Here are some echoes from the Foreign Mission Week of Prayer and Self Denial of last year, when God heard our prayers and honored our gifts, using them to prevent the cut which would have been so disastrous to His work. These testimonies received by the Auxiliary Office bear evidence of deep heart-searching and whole souled consecration and so challenged us to hear God's call today.

"I am praying for an outpouring of the spirit and that the urgent need of funds may be met."

"Our Auxiliary is very small but feel sure we will raise more than $1.00 per member."

"I am sure if each of us will earnestly work and pray we may do a great work for this cause during the month."

"Our Auxiliary will do our utmost to aid Foreign Missions this month. We are putting into practice the material sent out by your office."

"To me it would seem fatal to the salvation of America for all the Foreign work to fall so far below what it should be."

"I trust our circle will feel their responsibility and in deep love for the blessed cause, heartily respond to the call at this crucial hour. Earnest, believing prayer will bring the victory. God grant in each a deeper consecration of life and self in His service."

"I am making every effort to make Self-Denial Week real in our Auxiliary."

"Our women are most heartily in favor of observing the Week of Self-Denial and Prayer. Although we are few—about six—we thought perhaps we might interest others in this worthy cause. God helping us we shall do all we can to prevent the catastrophe."

"I am arranging for special prayer meetings in my home during the Week of Prayer as I am crippled with an injured ankle and will be on crutches for weeks yet. I am going to pray very definitely that God will touch the hearts of our women."

"We want to do our part to the very best of our ability. Nothing is too hard for the Lord. His precious promises to us are so great and waiting for us to prove Him. 'If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you.'"

Having read these let us resolve anew to do our share in making the week, January 27 to February 3, count definitely toward an extension of our Master's work in the Foreign Field. Everybody can pray. We can all give something. Let us pray earnestly and give sacrificially that His Work might Go Forward.

STATESVILLE AUXILIARY MEETING

The Woman's Auxiliary of the First Presbyterian Church at its January meeting Monday afternoon voted to extend an invitation to Concord Presbytery to hold its regular spring meeting with the First Presbyterian Church. This meeting will be on April 16th. Other matters coming to the attention of the Auxiliary were announcements in regard to the week of prayer and self-

"BEHIND THE SCENES"

Dr. S. H. Chester

This new book from the pen of Dr. S. H. Chester comes as a welcome addition to our missionary literature. It pictures for us phases of our great Foreign Mission enterprise which only one who has been in close and intimate touch with administrative work, would be able to understand. The writer has not only rendered to our Master and our Church many years of consecrated service, but now through this new volume he has given to us and to succeeding generations an invaluable record of the administrative history of the Foreign Mission work of our Presbyterian Church, U. S. Reading this record, we catch the brave spirit and earnest trust of those who served so nobly, and we are inspired to carry on more faithfully that which they have begun.

"Behind the Scene" is published in a most attractive manner and may be secured from the Presbyterian Committee Publication, Richmond, Virginia, or the Educational Dept. of Foreign Missions Committee, Box 330, Nashville, Tenn. (Price $1.50 in full cloth). It is heartily recommended to our Auxiliary women, especially as parallel reading during his Foreign Mission Season.

denial for foreign missions, January 27 to February 3, plans for which are in the hands of the spiritual life secretary of the Auxiliary, Mrs. J. A. Scott, Sr.; and announcements in regard to the school of missions being organized in the church, under the auspices of the Woman's Auxiliary. Classes for the study of the foreign mission book, The Desire of All Nations, will be organized at the prayer meeting service Wednesday night, these classes to include all the men and women of the church. Arrangements for these classes are in charge of Mrs. B. L. Dellinger.

The Auxiliary will elect two new officers, a vice-president and a treasurer at the February meeting and a nominating committee composed of Mrs. D. M. Brown, Mrs. B. F. Long and Mrs. James Brady, was appointed to report at the next meeting.

A new gas stove for the church kitchen has been purchased by the Auxiliary as a cost of $45.

Mrs. Z. V. Long, president, presided during the business session and the minutes of the December meeting were read by Mrs. C. M. Steele. Mrs. J. A. Scott, Sr., had charge of the Bible lesson, a study of the 18th chapter of Luke. Portions of the chapter were read by Mrs. James Brady, Mrs. Lathan Mills, Mrs. Gordon Scott, Mrs. O. W. Elam and Mrs. Gordon Scott, Mrs. O. W. Elam and Mrs. J. B. Roach, and discussed by the Auxiliary members under the leadership of Mrs. Scott.

The program on World Wide Brotherhood summed up the responsibilities of Christians toward those who have had little or no opportunity to embrace Christianity. Mrs. Z. V. Long was in charge of the program and was assisted by Mesdames W. A. Eliason, S. L. Cushing, C. E. Raynal, W. H. Morrison, J. A. Smith, C. E. Mills, O. L. Turner, E. W. Jones, D. S. Conway and Miss Ora Sharpe. Statesville, N. C.

TEACHING CHILDREN TO PLAY CARDS

We quote the following from the Wesleyan Methodist:

"In the recent issue of The Post-Standard of this city (Syracuse, New York), the following news is to be found on the editorial page:

"The board of public education in Cleveland is inaugurating community classes in the game of bridge.

"We hasten to add that we don't see why any board of public education should add bridge to the curriculum of subjects properly to be taught. Bridge is a game in which skill may be acquired through teaching and experience. But we should hesitate to say that through expertness in bridge one is any better qualified for work in science or language. Bridge does not add to the faculty of any student in geometry, in calculus, in French, or in the history of nations.

"Cleveland has gone to it. Twelve instructors have been hired, tables and cards will be provided, and 10,000 prospective bridge hounds are expected to attend the classes."

The Wesleyan Methodist adds: "What Christian parent could read this item without great concern and an increasing fear for the future. Think of it! In public school buildings, school teachers, and school children all engaging in getting the rudiments of gambling. As we understand it, bridge is a game of cards, including elements both of chance and skill, and offering all that belongs to the lure of gambling. It is a short road from cards for amusement to cards for gambling. We have long protested against the teaching of dancing in public schools, but who really cares? The tide is rising, and the youth of the land are being submerged. And now we hear that cards have arrived in the public schools of a great and progressive city. Every year the way grows more difficult for God-fearing parents to rear their children in Christian living and the Christian faith."

SCHOOL OF MISSIONS AT HOLLY SPRINGS

Instead of the all day Home Mission study class of several years previous, the Martha Davis Auxiliary, Holly Springs, Miss., in connection with the men of the church, and a few of the younger boys, observed the School of Missions during Home Mission and Self Denial Week.

CHURCH NEWS

SOME SIMPLE PLANS

Rev. W. W. Sprouse, Staunton, Va.

The Third church began this year on second Sabbath of January a custom that it expects to make permanent. The morning service on that day was given over to a special service for the baptized children, non-communicating members, of the church and their parents. Of course it was a service for everybody who would come, but especially for those who had been dedicated to the Lord in their infancy and their parents who had given their children to the Lord in this way. The pastor, in addition to the pulpit announcements previously, also sent out personal letter to each family concerned. This being a young church, we have just eighteen baptized children on our non-communicating membership roll. There were 16 of them present for the service, and one of the two absent ones is away in an orphanage. Considering the prevalence of so much flu and other sickness, and this being the dead of winter time, we felt highly gratified over the attendance. All but two parents were also there.

We made the service very informal. The message chiefly consisted in taking the Book of church order and expounding the meaning of the sacrament, and the importance and blessing of the vows taken by the parents. We had much more time for that than we generally have when children are presented for baptism. Then during the exercises we had all the parents and children to come and stand before the pulpit while the pastor led in prayer for God's blessing upon them all. The pastor and his entire family being concerned, it was very touching for him. Some of the members spoke of how impressive and beautiful that scene before the pulpit was. We expect to make this our annual custom.

For several years the Third Church has been holding on each second Sunday in January, an "Evening Family Canvass," for family altars. So this morning service is good preparation for the family altar canvass in the afternoon, when the men of the church, every one having an altar in his home, visit all the homes of the congregation in the interest of family prayers. Something like half of our families sign up for the family altar.

A little plan our Sunday school has been using for some time is proving a great blessing, and we are glad to pass it on.

The teachers of each class take a count each Sabbath of how many Bible chapters were read by the pupils during the week preceding. These reports are given by the class secretaries along with the attendance and offering reports when the school assembles for its closing exercises. Then the school secretary reports the total number of chapters along with his other totals. It has become a regular and expected part of our work now, and we believe doing a great deal to send the people to the Bible regularly. Our school is not large. For the quarter preceding 1929, a total of 7,139 chapters were reported as having been read. For last Sunday, January 13, 1917 were reported for the preceding week. One week when the school was asked to make a special effort at reading the Bible, the following Sabbath 1,500 chapters were reported.

At the first of this year the pastor called for volunteers who would join him in reading the Bible through this year, after a plan recently published in the Christian Observer by Rev. Perry Wayland Sinks, S. T. D. The plan is to read in both Testaments each day, an average of three chapters a day for the week days, and five on Sunday. Eighty people volunteered. Not so many, but a good start for the first attempt. We typed copies of the reading schedule each day for each of the volunteers, with "Christ and the Country Church" and the "New Call" were circulated and read by many. The beginning of the School of Missions was the inspirational and helpful message heard by Dr. Rolle Oklahoma Sunday evening, November the eleven followed by the organization of classes.

Mrs. Bitzer had charge of the auxiliary, which was well attended and all showing much interest. Dr. Bitzer leading the men and Miss Ruth Bitzer and Miss Majorie McCrosky the young boys. There were four evenings of study after the Sunday opening.

An hour was spent in each class room, all coming together then for half an hour of prayer and so on and a helpful talk on stewardship by our pastor Dr. Bitzer, except Wednesday evening when all were together in a round table discussion. Just before the close last evening, Vadah Cochran, Jr., oldest son of our auxiliary president, showed and explained an interesting way a Home Mission Poster, prepared by the young class and their teacher.

All who attended felt the School of Missions had been helpful, interesting and worthwhile. Hearing and meeting Dr. McLaughlin a few days later when he was visiting Mississippi Synodical College, was a source of much pleasure to Martha Davis Auxiliary. The Monday following the School of Missions the inspirational Home Mission meeting was held at the church consisting of an attractive Pageant, interesting Program interspersed with music and offering which amounted to eighty-two dollars and fifteen cents.

A prayer that should be on all our lips is that Home Mission fields may be liberally helped.

Secretary Literature,

Martha Davis Auxiliary

did not have the Observer. We plan to make this a permanent Bible Readers' League, and believe we will be able to increase the number of readers each year.

Any thing we can do to get our people to read the Bible regularly will bring blessing, and the two above mentioned plans give promise of much good to our people.

Beginning with the first of this year we have set about finding out and recording the birth days of all our members, and their children, and of all Sunday school members who are not members of our church, and we plan to begin the custom of sending a birthday card to each one as their birthday comes during the year.

For our record we have fitted up a desk filing drawer with a month-index and a separate card for each day of each month and type on the proper cards the names of the ones whose birth days fall on that day. This will make it easy to keep up with the list day by day; to remove or add cards from time to time as members leave or come.

From the reaction we have thus far gotten from this little plan of showing the pastor's interest in his people, we believe it is going to bind pastor and people closer together, and help to get people out to the services.

DR. C. C. CARSON IS ILL

Dr. Charles C. Carson, General Assembly's Evangelist, has been at St. Joseph's infirmary, Atlanta, since about December 1st, undergoing an operation on January 11th. Seemingly the operation was successful and he is getting along very well at the present time, and all sincerely hope that in the very near future he will be out of danger and on the road to recovery.

Cordially yours, S. M. Carson.

THE DEATH OF MRS. W. C. CUMMING

The death of Mrs. Cumming, wife of Rev. W. C. Cumming, pastor of our church, at Henderson, N. C., and former missionary to China, brought sorrow to many friends throughout the state.

As Maud Carson, she grew up in this city, and as student at Queens College, she was under the instruction of the writer. In his long experience as a teacher, he never had a pupil with a finer mind or sweeter disposition.

He in common with her many friends mourn her loss, and extend to her husband, mother, brothers and sisters deep sympathy. She spent several years in China, and only returned to this country till China could be again open for the work.

The writer feels a personal loss, and will long remember her as one of the choice spirits of this sin-world.

Davidson—Officials of the Davidson College Y. M. C. A. announces that eight speakers had already been secured to appear before that body at the regular Sunday afternoon vesper services during the spring session. They added that invitations had been extended to other leading men for the few remaining vacant dates.

Included in the list are Dr. Albert S. Johnson, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Charlotte; Prof. Ernest A. Beaty, of the Davidson College faculty; Thomas P. Glasgow, of Charlotte; Dr. John S. Foster, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Winston-Salem; Bishop Edwin A. Penick, of the Episcopal Church, Charlotte; Dr. A. D. P. Gilmour, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Wilmington; Dr. Luth Little, pastor of the First Baptist Church, Charlotte, and Dr. Donald W. Richardson, of the Union Theological Seminary faculty, Richmond, Va.

The Y. M. C. A. has also arranged for special music programs on two occasions, one of which is at Easter time; mother's day will be observed with appropriate exercises, and the three upper classes at Davidson have been assigned Sundays on which they will be in charge of the program. Only four dates remain filled.

Statesville—A called meeting of Concord Presbytery was held in the First Presbyterian Church Monday afternoon, with 24 ministers and 11 elders in attendance.

Concord Presbytery ordered the dismissal of Rev. H. W. H. pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church, Statesville, to Cherokee Presbytery in Georgia, also dismissal of Rev. W. L. Baker, pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Harmony, to West Hanover Presbytery in Virginia. Mr. Baker becomes pastor of a church near Farmville, Va.

The Presbytery examined Mr. Roger Enloe, of Georgia, student at Davidson College who is a candidate for the ministry, and transferred him to the Presbytery of Atlanta, that he may be under the care of that Presbytery.

Rev. E. C. Coleman was received from the Presbytery of Keokuk, U. P. Church. A season of prayer and conference on Christian Stewardship followed the business session.

The spring meeting of Presbytery will be held in the First Presbyterian Church, Statesville, beginning on p. m., April 16.

E. D. Brown, Stated Clerk.

Lee Creek—The Band of Earnest Workers had their Annual Ingathering of missionary cotton Friday, November 30, 1928.

Rev. J. M. Walker, our pastor, led the devotional. The children had a splendid missionary program, prepared by Mrs. J. B. Watts, Jr. These programs are very impressive, as they represent the needs of the different mission fields.

Dr. C. R. Nisbet, of Caldwell Memorial Church, Charlotte, was with us and made a splendid address. The subject was "Thanksgiving." He told the boys and girls what they should be thankful for. Our conditions and advantages are so much greater than children in other parts of the world.

We only had one bale of cotton, as the crop was cut short. We feel a little discouraged when we get so little, but we should not be. We can not always have what we would like. We just hope for more next year. We don't want to give up our plan. Our cash collection was $142.25. We gave cute mite boxes for the children to use in the winter, to be opened in March. So we try to keep their interest all the year. We believe that keeping children interested in the great work of missions is the best work we do.

We were glad to have Miss Rena Brown, one of our leaders with us again. She has been doing some good work in the mountains. We had a fine day, a good dinner and plenty of it. We would be glad to see more of our people attend these meetings. We look on it as one of our best meetings because it takes in the children.

Misses Maggie Whiteside and Rena Brown.

Davidson—Over $750.00 has been pledged by Davidson College students toward the financial support of Dr. Frank W. Price, an alumnus of Davidson, in his work as medical missionary to China, according to an announcement made by M. C. O'Neal, general Y. M. C. secretary. The goal set by the "Y" organization was $1,000.00, and the secretary optimistically expressed the belief that at the conclusion of the campaign this sum would be over-subscribed.

Each year the Davidson students contribute this amount to a cause of Christian education, or to the support of a foreign worker. For three years they were largely responsible in maintaining Warren M. Cox, a graduate of Davidson, in Hangchow College, in China, as a teacher of chemistry. Last year the student body gave this sum in the form of 50 scholarships which were given to maintain mountain boys and girls who attended Lees-McRae Institute, at Banner Elk, in western North Carolina. The "Y" cabinet decided upon the partial support of Dr. Price this year, and the students immediately accepted their decision.

Lumberton, First Church—At a beautiful, interesting and sweetly solemn ceremony in the First Church here Sunday afternoon, December 16, 1928, at 3 o'clock, Rev. Carl S. Matthews, D.D., was installed pastor.

Rev. W. M. Fairley, D.D., of Raeford, a classmate at Davidson College, of Dr. Matthews, was moderator and delivered the charge to the pastor and people. Rev. W. L. Foley, pastor of the St. Pauls Church, preached the sermon from the text, Hebrews, 13:8, "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, today and forever." Mr. Foley brought us a beautiful message containing in very truth "the bread of life." Said the preacher, that while society, nature and everything we come in contact with undergoes change, and that life would be unbearable without this, the unchangeableness of Jesus Christ, always in His place, always ready to hear any who come to him, is the thing that makes him most attractive, all in all and above all.

Dr. Fairley spoke from the text from Ephesians: "And he gave gifts to men," etc., expressing three great purposes of the church and as being a definite plan whereby the pastor and the people could work in unity. The church has a distinct service to render in the community and, while pastors may come and go and the church membership changes, the important duty of this generation of worshippers is perpetuating the church as an institution so it, like its great originator, may be "the same, yesterday and forever."

Dr. Matthews comes to Lumberton from Shelbyville, Ky., where he has served in a most acceptable manner for the past seven years.

He has been honored by unusually large congregations since he began this pastorate November 18, 1928.

Special music for the installation occasion rendered by the choral club of the Woman's Club, with Miss Allie Byrd McKinnon at the organ, was especially fine.

Thyatira, and Back Creek, Concord Presbytery—

The past quarter has been one of encouraging activity in this pastorate. Beginning in October with Rally Day in the Sunday Schools when special offerings were made for Sunday School Extension, the program of the church has included special gifts to Assembly's Home Missions, Barium Springs Orphanage, Presbyterian Standard, and Christian Education and Ministerial Relief. The Back Creek congregation has very materially improved the appearance of their church by refinishing the interior of the building for which much credit is due to the Woman's Auxiliary. The Thyatira congregation has completed payments on the new manse which has been occupied only a year and is now turning its attention to doing some very necessary improvements on the church building.

During the Christmas holidays the Young People's League of Thyatira Church entertained at the manse and invited the young people of Back Creek. A very interesting fact in connection with these churches is that there are twenty-six young people in college or training schools. We wonder if another country pastorate of this size in the Assembly can beat this record.

Several new members have been added to those church rolls, during the quarter, and others are expected to join soon.

A comprehensive reading program is being tried out in this field during the winter months. The pastor has distributed about 75 religious books to the various homes and each month he makes a round exchanging the books, so that each family will have access to five or six good books during the year. Very fortunately we have had no deaths in our congregations during the influenza epidemic and have not suspended our regular services.

The occupants of the manse have survived two genuine, old time poundings, the evidence of which will be with us yet many days. At Thanksgiving the Thyatira congregation loaded the pantry to capacity with substantial gifts and Back Creek came with a similar shower of good things at Christmas time. It is a constant joy to serve in so favored a bit of the Master's vineyard.

J. E. Guthrie, Pastor.

SOUTH CAROLINA

Conway—On December 31, 1928, Herman Oliver Marlow, a member of this year's senior class at the Columbia Theological Seminary, and a son of the Kingston Church, died at the hospital in Florence, S. C. This young man came from a home where the name of Christ is honored and in early life he became greatly interested in Christian work. Although facing a bright future in the business world, he was not satisfied because he felt that God was calling him into the ministry. After taking his preparatory work at the Presbyterian College of South Carolina, he entered Columbia Seminary and would have graduated in the class of 1929.

Herman Marlowe was a young man of fine Christian character. To know him was to love him. He had given himself unreservedly in the service of his Savior. After the close of his second year in the Seminary, he was stricken with a fatal disease. During his long illness, it was a benediction to see his great faith and courage. In all of his suffering, his Bible was his comfort and many times, when in pain, he was heard to say, "Though He slay me, yet will I trust Him."

There are many who mourn his going, but we are thankful that it was our privilege to know him and be a witness to his great faith. May his friends and his family take comfort in knowing that God doeth all things well.

Anderson First—The annual White Christmas service of this church was held Sunday evening, December 23, at five o'clock and proved to be a great success. The church was beautifully decorated in white and was filled to the utmost capacity, many being turned away. Members of the Sabbath School presented very effectively the pageant, "Prisoners of Hope." There was a generous offering for the Old Ministers' Fund and in addition to the offering of money, there was also a splendid offering of fruits and groceries for the poor. Two of the little girls of the Sunday School gave their hearts to Jesus. Following the pageant, the choir assisted by a ten piece orchestra presented a delightful program of Christmas music.

The work of the church has proceeded very satisfactorily during the fall. The Woman's Auxiliary gave a charming banquet, according to their annual custom, to the young people who were going away to college, and the following Sabbath the pastor preached an appropriate sermon.

One gratifying feature of Promotion Day in October, was the announcement that twenty-six of the school had perfect attendance and that two had recited the child's catechism. Later in October, a four unit Standard Training School was held in the church under the auspices of the Anderson County Presbyterian churches and quite a number of credits were awarded.

APPALACHIA

Knoxville Presbytery, Lafollette Church—The Rev. B. M. Larson, Superintendent of Home Missions, of Knoxville Presbytery supplied the pulpit of our church here on Sunday, January 13th. He conducted the sacrament of the Lord's Supper at the morning service and moderated a meeting of the Session which received one member on confession of faith.

During the interim the pulpit here is vacant, the Home Mission Committee is arranging to have our pulpit filled every Sunday with supply preachers.

Lesson for February 3rd

THE HOLY SCRIPTURES

Deut. 6:4-9; Joshua 1:8-9; 2 Kings 22:8-20; Neh. 8:1-8; Ps. 19:7-14; Lk. 24:25-32; Acts 17:10-12; 2 Tim. 3:14-17; Print Ps. 19:7-14; 2 Tim. 3:14-17.

We are thinking this quarter about some of the great Christian teachings. We thought first of God, who is our Father in heaven; then about sin, which reigns in our hearts, and separates us from God and also from our fellowmen; then about Jesus, who saves us from our sins; then about the Holy Spirit, who dwells in our hearts by faith, and continues and completes the work of Jesus Christ. We are to think this week of the Holy Scriptures, which more than other agency brings us into contact with the Holy Spirit.

Three questions come into our minds as we think of this topic and we shall consider them in order: (1) What is the Bible? (2) What does the Bible do? (3) What use should we make of the Bible? Think these questions through for yourselves—discuss them in your classes. They raise subordinate questions of course. Thus as we think of what the Bible is we may want to consider the origin of the Bible. How did we come to have a Bible? or we may want to consider the question of inspiration. What do we mean by inspiration? Does inspiration necessarily include inerrancy? Under number two, we want to consider what the Bible may legitimately be expected to accomplish. What will it do for our lives? Can it guarantee worldly success for example? Just why should we read the Bible? Then in the end we must consider the use we should make of the Bible. The Bible does not work magically, we understand that. What are we to do with the Bible then if it is to do its full work in our lives, in the life of the world? What is the best way to study the Bible? We cannot answer all of these questions adequately of course in the little space we have at our disposal, but we shall try to deal with them suggestively. It will help greatly, if you the reader, will first read the assigned passages through for yourself, with these and other questions that interest you in your mind, and then with Bible closed think the whole matter through again for yourself.

What Is the Bible?

This is the first question that we want to consider. We note at the outset that it is not one book, but a collection of books, sixty-six in all. These sixty-six books are grouped together in two subordinate collections, one called the Old Testament, the other the New Testament. What do we mean by the word "Testament?" It is a Latin word and really means Covenant. The Revised Version of the Scriptures seeks to bring this out by putting on the title page: "The New Covenant commonly called the New Testament of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." The first 39 books of the Bible then have to do with the Old Covenant; the last 27 are concerned with the New Covenant. The Old Covenant was made first with Abraham. God promised that He would bless him and his seed and that through them the whole world would be blessed. Gen. 12:1-3, 15:18, 17:9. Later it was renewed to Abraham's descendants, the children of Israel. God declared through Moses that the Israelites would be His own possession from among all the peoples if they would obey His voice and keep His covenant. Ex. 19:5-6; 24:1-8. This agreement which God made with His people, and which they made with Him, lies at the very heart of the first 39 books of the Bible; hence the name, the Old Testament or better the Old Covenant. But as time went on the Israelites did not fulfill their part of the agreement; as a result first the northern tribes, and then the Southern tribes were carried into captivity, and the nation was destroyed. But Jeremiah one of the greatest of the prophets said the time would come when God would make a New Covenant with His people, He would forgive their sins, and write the law this time on their hearts. Jer. 31:31-34. Jesus referred to this prediction when he said during the course of the Last Supper: "This cup is the New Covenant in my blood." Lk. 22:20. The last 27 books of the Bible are concerned with this New Covenant which God made with His people, through their faith in Jesus Christ. Hence the name New Testament, or the New Covenant.

The 39 books which deal with the Old Covenant we see very quickly were written by different men, at different periods in Israel's history. The first five books claim to be the words of Moses, who was the real founder of the nation, and who lived about 1500 years before Christ. Plainly Moses did not write every word in the Pentateuch (the story of his own death for example); but the nucleus at least goes back to him. Other books were written from time to time by priest and prophet. Some dealt with Israel's history as determined by the Covenant; others represent the distillation of Israel's piety (the Psalms eg, which were the hymn books of Israel) or of other Israel's wisdom (Proverbs for example). Perhaps the most valuable group of all summarizes the sermons or messages of the prophets. The last writing now represented in the O. T. was done probably in the Maccabean Period, several hundred years after the close of the history recorded in the O. T., and only 165 years before Christ.

These various writings were recognized as prophetic, i. e., ultimately from God, probably from the beginning, not indeed by the entire nation, but at least by the spiritually minded, whose minds were attuned to that of God Cf. Dt. 6:4f; Josh. 1:8-9; Ps. 1, 19 etc. But it was only gradually that they were collected together into anything like a Bible. The first group to be accepted by the nation as an authoritative expression of God's will was that group of five books, now known as the Pentateuch or the Law. Most scholars think this was done in Ezra's day (Neh. 10:29) about 450 B. C. About 50 years later the historical books and the prophetic books were brought together (known collectively as the Prophets) and accepted by the nation as being also authoritative Scripture. About 160 B. C. the remaining books of the O. T. (known as the Writings) were added.

The New Testament books were all written shortly after the death of Jesus; first the letters of Paul, missionary letters written to missionary churches; then the Gospels, written to preserve the facts of Jesus' life; and in and between the other books and letters preserved for us in the N. T. These Gospels, Acts, and letters were all written for specific purposes, and were not at first regarded as Scripture to be placed alongside the O. T. It was felt, however, from the very beginning that the apostles were guided in what they said and wrote by the Spirit as Jesus had promised (Jn. 16:13). The Gospels and Epistles therefore were gradually circulated through the churches, and were everywhere accepted as authoritative, as soon as it was recognized that they came from the Apostles or from their representatives. About 130 A. D. various heresies began to creep into the church, claiming that they represented the true Christian doctrine. To protect themselves the churches began to collect together the apostolic writings, and to set them as authoritative alongside the O. T., and over against the spurious teachings of the Gnostics, as they were called. There was general agreement on the Gospels, Acts, and Pauline Epistles from the very beginning. The other writings—Hebrews on—were not so well known throughout the entire church, and it was several hundred years before all the churches were satisfied that they were all truly apostolic. But from 400 on there was no disagreement, and the Church had its N. T. together with its O. T.

The O. T. of course was written in Hebrew, the N. T. in Greek. They have now been translated into every language on the face of the globe. We have many English translations. The most popular is known as the King James version, translated in 1611. Most scholars however prefer the American Revised Version, translated in 1901. In recent years there have been a number of translations which attempt to reproduce the colloquial force of the original in our modern speech. The best known of these is that by Moffat.

The Church looks upon this Bible which has come down to us as being inspired. It speaks of it as the "Word of God." This confidence goes back to the first place to the writers themselves. The O. T. prophets for example felt that God was speaking through them; when they spoke they said, Thus saith the Lord. Their words were not always accepted by their contemporaries, but they approved themselves in the religious consciousness of the spiritually minded, and confirmed themselves in history. Jesus accepted the O. T. as the word of God, (also 2 Tim. 3:16; 2; P 1:21) and promised that the Holy Spirit would guide his disciples into all the truth. Jn. 16:13. The Apostles felt that they were inspired by the Spirit, and as we have seen their words were accepted by the Church as authoritative from the beginning. Our Confession of Faith says: "We may be moved and induced by the testimony of the Church to an high and reverent esteem of the Holy Scripture; and the heavenliness of the matter, the efficacy of the doctrine, the majesty of the style, the consent of all the parts, the scope of the whole (which is to give all glory to God), the full discovery it makes of the only way of man's salvation, the many other incomparable excellencies, and the entire perfection thereof, are arguments whereby it doth abundantly evidence itself to be the Word of God; yet notwithstanding our full persuasion and assurance of the infallible truth, and divine authority thereof, is the inward work of the Holy Spirit, bearing witness by and with the Word in our hearts." This is a good statement of the matter. We believe in the last analysis that the Bible is inspired because it commends itself as the Word of God to our moral and spiritual consciousness.

This does not mean that we must accept any particular theory of inspiration. The Bible claiming to be inspired does not give us any definition of inspiration. We certainly do not think that the writers were mere mechanical instruments played on by the Holy Spirit. We recognize that the human factor plays a part in the style, the language, the thought. Just how the human and the divine cooperated we cannot say with certainty. We do know that in the Holy Scriptures the Holy Spirit spoke, and still speaks to our hearts.

II. What Does the Bible Do?

Perhaps the best thing that we can do in the limited space that we have at our disposal is to consider what the Bible claims to do. Note.

1. Joshua 1:8-9. God promises Joshua that if he meditates on His word and obeys it, his way shall be prosperous and he shall have good success. This was a specific promise to Joshua. Is it a general promise to us all? If it means success in men's eyes, worldly success, we will have to say no. If a young man develops a Christian character we think he is more likely to win an honorable success in the eyes of the world than if he wastes his energies in dissipation. But one cannot win success of that sort simply by obeying the Bible precepts. In fact to do so may insure failure. For the Bible puts principle above popularity, and service to man above material gain. If our version means success in God's sight that is another thing. The Bible can assure that, and that we shall make the most part of what God has given us.

2. Ps. 1:3. The Psalmist says that the man who meditates on God's Law day and night shall be like a tree planted by the streams of water. That is a very suggestive figure. "As a tree is nourished by constant supplies of water, without which under the burning eastern sun it would wither and die, so the life of the godly men is maintained by the supplies of grace drawn from constant communion with God through His revelation. That is true to all the experience of the saints of God.

3. Ps. 19:7-11. The law of the Lord is perfect, i. e. complete, flawless, without defect or error, a guide which can neither mislead nor fail,—not converting, but rather with the R. V. restoring the soul, i. e., refreshing an invigorating man's true self, like food to the hungry, like comfort to the sorrowful and afflicted. The testimony of the Lord is sure, not variable or uncertain, making wise the simple, that is, the man whose mind is open to the entrance of both good and evil. The statutes of the Lord are right, rejoicing the heart with the joy of more satisfaction. The commandment of the Lord is pure, enlightening the eyes. The fear of the Lord is clean, a contrasted with the immoralities of heathenism, enduring forever. The judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether. Such is the law in all its parts a treasure, like gold, to be coveted; the sweetest of enjoyments, like honey, when received into the heart. More over by them is thy servant warned; and in keeping of them there is great reward. (an eternal reward).

4. Lk. 24:25-32. Jesus tells the disciples on the road to Emmaus that the O. T. speaks of Him. It does indeed, and in him its teachings are fulfilled. The N. T. tells us of Jesus, his words, his works, his influence. Only in Jesus do we learn to know God satisfactorily, and only in the Bible do we learn to know Jesus.

5. 2 Tim. 3:15. Pauls tells Timothy that the Holy Scriptures are able to make him wise unto salvation through faith in Jesus Christ. Salvation means deliverance from fear, anxiety, sorrow, sin, and death. But the faith in Jesus which secures such salvation needs to be nourished on the Bible. Every portion of the Scripture is also profitable for teaching disciples in the Christian way, for convicting transgressors, for correcting false notions or evil habits, for guiding one in the paths of right conduct toward God and man. The divine purpose in providing such a means of grace in the Scriptures is very distinctly stated. It is that every disciple may become a man of full stature in Christ Jesus, a man of God, lacking in no gift or grace of the Spirit, but in every aspect of spiritual life, may be furnished completely for every form and his department of Christian service.

To sum it all up the Bible does not claim to give instruction in science or in philosophy; it does not claim to give us the secret of material success; it does offer us the food that we must have if we are to develop our moral and spiritual natures, if we are to have a character that is to triumph over the ills of life, the evil imponder in our inmost living, if we are to find salvation, deliverance full and free, if we are to know the joy of cooperating with God for the great purposes that He has at heart, if we are to enjoy the sort of fellowship with Him that shall endure through all eternity.

III. What Should We Do With the Bible?

If what we have said is true this is the question that we must inevitably face. The best answer that we can give in brief is the resolution of Ezra 7:10, which should be the resolution of us all, and which puts in another form the idea in Dt. 6:4-9.

1. First we must know the Bible. And that means we must read the Bible regularly, systematically. There are many methods of Bible study, some of which we have hoped to discuss. But we must refrain from lack of space. The simplest method is to read the Bible devotionally—not to rush through it as a matter of duty but to read and meditate—some suggest reading until there comes a verse or thought which takes hold of our hearts. Some prefer to study a character, a doctrine, a book. This can be done with or without help. Most young people, most older people, unless they have been trained, need help. These helps are abundant, and of a kind. One may take for example a book on meditation like that by Amos R. Wells, entitled "Think on the Things." For each day of the year there is a short Scripture passage, a meditation, a prayer. Or one may take a book like "Studies in O. T. Characters," by V. W. White, or "The Life of Christ," by Burton and Matthews. These books give suggestions for study and such explanations as is needed. Or one may take D. Turnbull's fine book studies published by our own Committee in Richmond. Or if one wishes a more thorough study still there are fine commentaries on every book of the Bible. Your pastor, any of our Seminary professors, the writer of these articles, our Publication Committee will be glad to suggest books on these and other lines.

2. We must act on our knowledge. Moses had the same idea in mind when he said the law should be fastened "a sign upon thine hand, and . . . for frontlets between thine eyes" etc. It must guide our personal conduct, and be taken into our business, our politics. We must seek to make its principles regnant in our nation, and in the world. There is no value in knowing the words of the Bible unless they are translated into life.

3. We must teach its precepts, its doctrines to our fellowmen. Not all of us like Ezra are called to be teachers in the technical sense. But we are all obliged to teach them diligently unto our children, we can inculcate the by our lives. We can aid the church in material ways as seeks to spread a knowledge of the Word throughout the world, and to win everywhere men's allegiance to its ideals.

Let us not close this study without thinking of our own personal program in regard to these three essential ends.

LIGHTS AND SHADOWS OF THE WORK IN KWANGJU, KOREA

One of the "necessary evils" of our work is the monthly station meeting. Every three months a report of each worker is supposed to be given, but this had gotten to be pretty much a dead letter, but we decided recently that we would "enforce the law" and so set apart our December meeting for an "All day" station meeting with reports to be given by the workers, either orally or written. We didn't have dinner on the ground but we had a supper which could well be called a dinner in any other than a southern mission, and this was a welcome to Miss Graham, a veteran missionary, who had returned the night before from furlough in America. When she left she was broken in health, now she seems well and strong, at least comparatively speaking. At this meeting some of the reports were read and some were "talked." They were not entirely optimistic nor extraordinarily sad.

True optimism is not that that ignores the difficulties, but that that expects to succeed in spite of difficulties, some of these difficulties were frankly stated, such as the change that has come over the national life of Korea. Women, men and children are discourteous "Korea is rushing to moral ruin," "Tremendous increase of drinking, gambling and impurity." It is twice as hard for Koreans to be Christians as it was ten years ago. There is a lethargy of helpers and Christians in the work, too much self pity and too little generosity, the tithe is not generally practiced, helpers are scarce, church members have moved away and left churches stranded, Seventh day Adventists have opposed and torn us, a disgruntled teacher and helper have almost broken up a church, but there has never been a greater opportunity than now to preach the gospel, the door is open, crowds attend and give attention, individuals here and there are sacrificing for Christ, churches are working, at least in certain places, and the Gospel is being spread.

One of the busy missionaries finds time to teach English in the government school in the city and a weekly class at her home, where The Gospel of John is studied, the girls in the school are happy and busy, in the industrial department, they are turning out first class work that they can sell and incidentally are helping themselves through school, prayer meeting is held every night in the dormitory for those who don't believe, I mean prayer made for them. Children are gotten into the Sunday schools where, in the village, children, many of them from unbelieving homes are gathered together and taught to pray and sing and to know something of the Bible. Special meetings have been held in various places, some in a tent and crowds have heard the Gospel, from the church and that church have come one and two to the Bible Institute for women for a month's intensive study of the Bible and the work has gone on.

Our station is fortunate in having as one of our families a missionary Y. M. C. A. family, I say this adedly, for Mr. Avison is the son of Dr. Avison known and loved throughout all Korea for his long and useful ministry in Severance Hospital and Mrs. Avison, a daughter of a missionary in India, both of them reared in the tent, which is much in their favor. The main purpose of the "Y" is to bring men into the Kingdom of God that was stated by the representative of that organization. Mr. Avison spends much time in the country and he likes to go out with one of the evangelists and combine his work in connection with better farming, and better poultry and hog raising and better living with the all important matter of preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ which appeals to those, who accept it, everlasting life.

The matter of great thanksgiving is the presence of Jesus Christ, fulfilling to us His promise, "Lo I am with you always even to the end of the world." May He be with us as He was with Moses and as He was with Joshua for, "Without Him we can do nothing," but in His presence "The people will fear us even as they feared Moses."

A TORONTO DEBATE

(The Moody Bible Institute Monthly)

Dr. Oswald J. Smith, of Toronto, writes us that a leading professor from London announced as "England's rising evolutionist" and "the world's most learned" made his appearance in that city and challenged a fundamentalist minister to debate evolution. The minister declined, whereupon the Toronto Daily Star used a very head-line to gloat over the fact that no one could debate the professor.

Dr. Smith telegraphed Dr. W. B. Riley, of Minneapolis, so, who consented, and wired the challenge:—"Resolved that evolution is a fake and should no longer be taught in schools." The professor accepted the challenge, but the Star remained silent.

The debate was held in Massey Hall, seating 3,400 Mr. Smith acting as chairman. The hall was filled to the top gallery. The professor took the ground that evolution was an inference and tried to demonstrate that inference was sufficient. Dr. Riley proved that there had been a single incident of "the transmutation of species, but that the Bible pronouncement "after its kind" stood, and that evolution was nothing but a theory, a supposition, not "knowledge gained and verified" and therefore anything but a science.

When the vote was taken more than three-quarters of the people supported Dr. Riley, the audience spontaneously sang the Doxology and the professor walked away as has not been seen since.

Thus we see that the low temperature of the Dominion is more favorable to pseudo-science than the warmer climate of our Tennessee and Arkansas.

WHO SAYS WITHDRAW?

D. A. Swicord

There is an outspoken plea and a mental undercurrent today in the church at large, Mission Boards and Committees, among Ministers and Missionaries to gradually withdraw from the Foreign Mission enterprise!

You can hear everywhere such statements, as, "We have about accomplished our task of evangelizing so we must concentrate on the home base." "Our Foreign Mission task must be lightened." "Our church has too great a burden in its Foreign Mission endeavors." "Let the native churches have their own forms of Christianity and system of church government." "Let's work among our own where we are so much needed," etc.

Almost all Foreign Mission Boards and Committees hold up before the churches that their object is to turn over to the native churches all foreign work as soon as possible. This is nothing more than fair but when is it possible? Some feel that it is possible when the gospel has been preached or heralded. But this question is hard to answer with first hand information and a life experience.

It was once my duty to serve on a Committee for my stations to answer such question. The other two members of the Committee had given more than twenty years of their life for Christ in Korea. Our Committee after careful study of local conditions reported that we were turning over now as fast as the native church could assume the responsibility. This report was adopted by our Station and later became the report of our Mission in Korea to the Committee in Nashville.

Are We Losing Our Challenge to Youth?

Listen please, our young people have little or no encouragement to launch into the Foreign Mission endeavor in obedience to the Great Command. This command must have as much dynamic today as the first day it was spoken or else it never had any. So why don't our youth follow this living vital command? In the first place it has not much appeal because of the lessened chances of being sent. Every Committee has from one to five hundred and more that are not sent, many of them fully prepared. In the case of our own Committee we are using less than twenty per year and reducing our forces every year. We have reduced fifty full time workers within the past four years and seventeen of those from Korea.

In the second place, the idea that the task is about finished and it is only a short time until we will entirely withdraw is no challenge to any one, I believe this costing our churches in America their great zeal to "Go." In the third place, we hear a great deal about the shortcomings and methods of the Foreign Missions and Missionaries today, but little about the command "Go." Instead of holding this goal up before the volunteers, for instance, last year at Detroit the question was raised on every hand, "How long are we to send missionaries?" So we find ourselves as Christians not backing a going and growing concern with a vitalized Christian zeal. Yes, we give to missions, but with an idea that each year we must lighten up expecting that just around the corner we are to get out of Foreign Missions business. This leaves our church feeling that our work is nearing the end in Foreign Missions and we will just let some one else do what should be my task. And we go along developing ourselves in a splendid way. Our church does give more than ever but to what is it giving? The Foreign missionary forces have not been increased for ten years, and today fifty less than we had four years ago.

Yet all work of the home field is going forward in everything but church attendance and additions. This makes me ask who says withdraw? Does the great Captain of our salvation and head of the church say so? I see His "Go Ye" just as prominent today in my Bible as ever. Yes, and has the plan of God changed? Look at the world field that is white unto harvest. As long as there is an unsaved soul in the world the command holds good, "Go."

We know that work in the home land that is blessed of God by His bringing into His fold souls is not a signal to withdraw but encourages us to go to the unreached. So in the name of Jesus I say let's go. Who says stop? The command is Go!

Experience on the Field

On the mission field, I have had experience in withdrawing or retrenching, and in my opinion that is just saying to the enemy, Carry on!

With every missionary that I have discussed the question all agreed that it is better not to go into a section than to go and later have to withdraw. It has also been my bitter experience to try to revive about fifteen groups that were started some twenty-five years ago. I wish some of those who think it is time to withdraw could have had that job for a few weeks. Here is a fair question, should we withdraw from this field? I had in my charge in Korea (and now the absent treatment method is being tried) the fields of Dr. W. D. Reynolds and Rev. L. B. Tate. The field as now defined by our station has a population of 280 thousand souls. Missionary endeavor has been active there for more than thirty years. Today there are fifteen organized churches with ruling elders and ordained deacons. There are twenty unorganized churches with temporary officers, and some four or five other places of worship. Among these churches we operate ten schools. The church at home spends $1,000 per year for a missionary and furnishes a house that is not furnished. They give fifty dollars a month for the support of the ten schools. (Only one-half of the teacher's salary is allowed from the mission). Then it costs sixty dollars a month for native helpers who have groups of churches under the Missionaries' charge. Also two hundred and twenty-five dollars a year for itinerating among these churches. The yearly expense for this field which has a population larger than the city of Atlanta, is $2600.00. Our endeavor, with the exception of the Salvation Army being out there about one month a year, is the only effort to capture this multitude for Him who said, "Go Ye."

Nineteen hundred are on roll, baptized and catechumen- ed members. You see that leaves in the field 268,000 souls out of Christ. Who could say this field has been taken for Christ? Why not say, let's go in and possess the land? When we have a fine work started or a good business established, do we leave it? Is our own nation christianized after about three hundred years and starting with almost entirely a Christian constituency? Today 54 per cent, of America is out of any church! How about stopping in a field after thirty five years and no Christian background with less than one percent. Christian? It has been pointed out that forty-six people in Korea live off 2.32 acres of rented land, paying more than fifty percent. for rent. This condition prevails generally today. So then let's be sane, if there is not work to do there and does not the Bible say the poor shall have the gospel preached to them. Now how can this be done when our force there has been reduced twenty-two full time workers within the past five years and only five replacements. How can the heathen have the gospel preached to them when there is no preacher?

Pray it over see what answer the Lord gives you. McDonough, Ga.

BOOK REVIEW Have You Read It?

Dr. Darby Fulton's timely array of information that proves beyond a peradventure that missionary work is "A Paying Investment." If you haven't seen it, write the Educational Department of our Foreign Mission Committee at Nashville and get it.

The little pamphlet contains a mass of information in a minimum space, and every bit of it is thrillingly interesting. The actual figures showing the almost unimaginable advance of the church in the century of missions; the testimony of unbiased witnesses to the marvelous efficiency of the missionary enterprise; the effects of missionary work on exploration and discovery, trade and commerce, and upon language and literature; the by-products on government, and civilization, on medicine and agriculture, or education and industrial reform; more wonderful than all, the spiritual results of foreign missions in demonstrating power of the name of Jesus over all classes and conditions of man of every color, and of every stage of spiritual destruction whether they be worldly wise or ignorant.

Then the immeasurable blessing upon the work of our own church in every field. Do you know the extent of your own investment among the 36,000,000 souls for whom we are solely responsible.

If these facts can be brought to the hearts of our people the money will come, and it is an infinitely surer way of getting it than by an annual spasm of crying, Debt Debt, Debt!

Good for Dr. Fulton, and you will say so when you read his masterful summing up of these things.

DR. J. M. VANDER MEULEN ADDRESSES

First Presbyterian Church Club, Louisville, Ky.

Religion was termed the supreme adventure for man by Dr. John M. Vander Meulen, President of the Southern Presbyterian Theological Seminary at Louisville in an address before the Men's Club of the First Presbyterian Church Monday night.

Dr. Vander Meulen's subject was "The Adventure of Religion", but he touched incidentally on the question of "The Home God Intended." The love of adventure has been deeply implanted in the heart, Dr. Vander Meulen said, asserting that "God put it there and without it Life would be dull and colorless." Adventure actuates every human endeavor, he said, while contending that the adventure of the religion of Christ should have the primary place.

He spoke of the adventure of the religion of Christ first as an adventure of friendship, saying that to enter into the Christian religion is primarily entering into an intimate relationship with Christ. He also characterized the adventure of religion as an adventure of high service.

Commenting on the adventure of friendship with Christ, Dr. Vander Meulen emphasized the responsibility a father has in bringing his son to Christ. "It is your responsibility, if you know anything of the adventure of friendship with Christ, to let the world know it, and above all to let your children know it", said the speaker. Referring to the latter part of his assertion, he said: "This is the sort of home God intended."

Dr. Vander Meulen spoke touchingly of the relations and responsibilities of the home. "The adventure of parenthood is a great one", said he. "It requires self-denial and courage, more than some men have. God's solemn responsibility rests upon you that you introduce your sons and your daughters to Christ. There is no greater service you can render your children."

No matter how much success a man attains in his business or his profession, he is not a success unless he is a Christian, and he is not a success then, if he be a father, unless he has brought his child to Christ, or unless he has brought some one else to know of the intimate friendship with Christ, Dr. Vander Meulen said.

Charles C. Gilbert, President of the Club, presided. Dinner, served by a committee of women of the church, preceded the program. The dinner music was rendered by the Dickerson trio, and following Dr. Vander Meulen's address, Mrs. R. B. Bennett sang a group of songs, with Miss Lillian Watts as accompanist.

George Moulder gave a report of the activities of the Men's Club at the Martha O'Bryan Settlement. Mr. Gilbert announced that the January meeting would take the form of a father-and-son event.

CHILDREN

THE GOSPEL DOLL
Grace McElhannon

There was a new addition to the doll family, it came to Hilda printed and draped in flags which represented the nations of the world. Hilda thought this was the nicest doll in the family, Auntie thought he was the most interesting doll, at least, and she told Hilda what she could about his flags and the countries for which they stood. At her suggestion Hilda named him Patriot (and he was called the Patriot doll).

One day, while talking about Patriot's flags, they noticed the Chinese flag. "Oh, Jili, come here," cried Hilda, "and make your salute. This is your flag, makes you homesick, Bias Eyes, don't it?"

"He seems to be very well satisfied," smiled Auntie, "and I think he should be; he is much better off than many of the boys and girls in China." Then Auntie went on to tell how the missionaries were trying to teach the boys and girls in China the gospel of the Lord, Jesus Christ.

"Auntie, where is China?"

"On the other side of the world."

"How do you get there?"

"By ocean steamer—across the Pacific."

"Does the world turn around?"

"Yes, dear, it turns over."

"Well, if the world turns over, why couldn't anybody go up in an aeroplane wait 'till the earth turns and come down in China, like that man that visited our teacher said?"

"Now, my dear, we had better get our gourds for we are getting in deep water."

A few days later, Auntie had forgotten, but Hilda had not. "Auntie where does our creek go to?"

"It flows into the Mississippi River and the Mississippi goes to the gulf and the ocean."

"Oh, goody," cried Hilda and danced from the room.

Later in the day—"Oh, Auntie, won't you please do something 'portant for me?"

"Gladly, what may the important thing be?"

"I wish you to write the gospel on Jili. He is going to be a missionary and preach to the heathen. Write all the things our preacher says, like 'God is love,' you know." Auntie did not reply, but she took the Chinese doll and began printing verses of scripture on his yellow body.

"Just write the c'vertin' things, Auntie."

"Yes, dear, just the things most needful," and she did. She printed all verses such as "God so loved the world that he gave his only Son, that whosoever believes on Him shall have everlasting life," "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and you shall be saved," "Repent, believe and be baptized and you shall be saved," "All things are possible to him that believes," "He that comes to Christ will in no wise be cast out," "Come unto Christ, all you ends of the earth and be saved," "Love one another," "Pray without ceasing," "Whatsoever you ask in prayer, believing, you shall receive," "He that overcometh shall inherit all things and I will be his God and he shall be my son," "Thou shalt have no other Gods before me," "Thou shalt not kill," "Thou shalt not steal," and all the other "shall nots."

"Blessed are the pure in heart," and all the other Beautitudes. "The Lord is my shepherd," and the rest of the 23rd Psalm; and so on until the doll's body was covered with the verses.

"Now bless him, Auntie."

"Bless you, Jilidoll," smiled Auntie, patting him on the head, "may you carry the message of salvation to the little girls and boys who play with you."

"Thank you with a kiss, Auntie, and bless you too," and again Hilda danced out of the room.

Next day the Gospel doll was missing. Auntie noticed it but she was too busy searching for her wash tub to hunt him up.

Several days later two men in a canoe were out in the Mississippi River. "Look how that little stream yonder comes pouring in," said one, "Just as muddy as it can be. It must have a swift current."

"Yes," said the other, "but look yonder, Bill! What is that odd-looking thing bobbing along among the drifts?"

"Appears to be a flag, Jim. 'Queer ain't it, let's see what it can be," and rowing over to the drift he drew the queer looking thing, which was a tub with hoisted flag. Inside the tub they found a wooden box, and on the lid of the box was written in a childish hand:

"Don't nobody bother Jillie, he is a gospel doll, goin' to be a missionary and

"Well, I'll be blowed, Bill," said Jim, taking off the lid and lifting the Rev. Jili out. "Oh, har, har, har!" Jili did look funny with his tilted eyes and yellow complexion but Bill did not laugh, he was trying to read a letter which he found tied around the doll's neck: "Say, Jim, listen here—"

Dear Littell Heethen in Chiny: I luv you so muche I am sendin' my doll, Jillie, to teach you about our God. Tak gud kare ov Jillie and kiss him som-tims for Yure friend, Hilda Alden.

A week or more after Jili's disappearance, Auntie came down to the playhouse with a letter, "For you, Hilda," she said, "shall I read it?"

"Oh Auntie, it's from Jili! Wait! Oh, Mattie, bring Bella! Here, Mademoiselle! Irmine! Lady Beth! Patriot! Booker! Mammy. All you dolls—I want you to hear Jili's letter." And Auntie (entirely forgetful of her lost tub) read the letter Dear Hilda:

Your gospel doll, Jili, arrived safely here today. A gentleman who was out on the river found him in his tub boat among the drifts and brought him to me. I am president of the missionary society here and as we are sending a missionary barrel to China tomorrow, your doll will go with it. Trusting that Jili will help to Christianize the children who play with him, I am

Sincerely, your friend,
S. Mary Smythe.

But that was not all, two months later a letter came from a missionary in China. It read in part as follows: "Dear Hilda:

Arлу, a little girl who attends mission school, received your doll and wishes to thank you. She brings Jili to school and all the children play with him. They never tire of having me tell them what he says—what he has written on and over, and they write them down in the Chinese language. I think Arлу knows the verses by heart. This is what she has written to you—

"Dear little American Girl: Arлу sends much thanks for Jili. We all love him and learn what he says about your God. He looks happy. Here are kisses—xxxxxxxX. The small ones are from Jili, the big one from me. Arлу much love American girl. Arлу."

As the letter ended, Hilda said happily, "Well, Jili is a real gospel doll, isn't he?" And her aunt readily agreed. —Advance.

A FINE RECORD

Dear Standard:

I am a little boy seven years old go to school every day. I have not missed a day from school since I started. I am in the second grade. Miss Leach is my teacher. I like her fine. I go to Sunday School when I can. My mother is my teacher. I love to color the picture in the Standard.

I also have two pet calves and a dog. Hope Mr. Waste Basket is at dinner when you will publish my letter.

Your little friend,
A. T. Lassiter

EDITOR'S LOOKOUT

One of the most interesting of the "practical talks" at the recent All-South C. E. convention in Chattanooga, was that by Miss Anne Woodrow Van Devanter of our Church's Foreign Mission Committee, who presented plans for poster making. The strong and weak points of sample posters were pointed out. Miss Van Devanter's hobby, cut-paper posters, were shown, and suggestions given on how to make such posters.

One of the convention leaders said after the demonstration, "I thought I knew something about poster-making before you made your talk this morning, but I find I didn't know a thing."

Miss Van Devanter's new book on "Poster Making for Amateurs" is just off the press. The cost is one dollar, and it will be a dollar well spent for any who will get this book.

The Educational Department of our Foreign Mission Committee is sponsoring a poster contest in connection with the mission study of "The Desire of All Nations." The class may be held in January or February. The poster may be the work of one person or the joint work of several persons. There is a set of awards for members of young people's societies and a set for members of Women's Auxiliaries. Prizes of $50.00, $30.00, and $15.00 are offered. Any number of posters may be submitted provided each poster has been exhibited before the mission study class in January or February 1929.

For information concerning the contest, and for help in poster making, including the new book on this subject, write to the Educational Department, P. O. Box 60, Nashville, Tenn.

Leader

In the heart of every man there is a feeling that there is a God somewhere. This feeling has been called the religious instinct in man. No other animal has this so-called instinct. The highest order of apes does not feel that a sacrifice must be made to a Supreme Being when terms harass or when its children die. But in the lowest order of man there is this religious instinct, that acknowledges a Power beyond the ken of man. Religion takes different forms in different localities and among different nationalities. It will be well for us to look into a few of these religions and see how our Christian religion compares with them.

The African's Religion

Superstitions and fears best describe the religion of the African. He has no knowledge of a Creator, and there is no word for "sin" in his language, except in a few of the dialects; there is no mention of forgiveness or transgressions; the word for "love" does not occur in many dialects. One "loves" his breakfast with the same word with which he "loves" his wife. The witch-doctor is the connecting link between the known and the unknown to the African. The word of the witch-doctor is supreme, and he has power over all the lower orders of evil spirits. These spirits are responsible for disease, death, rain, drought, and all the common ills of life.

The African may arrange with the witch-doctor that his enemy's crops will be eaten by locusts or rains will fall everywhere save on his garden. The African fears his god enough to satisfy the sternest Calvinist, his god is no more lovable than death and no more desired than an earth-quake. The African has a religious nature that is in a state of active starvation, and is forced to subsist on superstition instead of upon the religion of the Cross of Christ, which he was intended to receive upon.

Buddhism

The importance of the study of Buddhism is evident from the fact that for over two thousand years it has swayed the destiny of millions of people. Buddhism started in India and from there has spread thru China, Japan, and other countries in Southern Asia. The founder of this religion was a man named Gautama. Gautama grew up in the midst of wealth and the pleasures of a palace, for he was a prince. He pondered, however, upon the ills and suffering of mankind for a long time, and finally decided to renounce the world and enter into a life of poverty, loneliness, and wandering. For a time he tried extreme physical severities, and mortified himself, until, as the story runs, he ate only one kernel of rice a day. But this, he decided, did not bring him relief, so he gave it up and sought a place of undisturbed solitude. He seated himself under a banyan tree and gave himself up to meditation for forty-nine days. He passed thru stages of temptation in which the temptress Mara sought to call him back to his old home and his former life. He withstood all these temptations and finally "blinding illusions of ignorance and error disappeared and the brilliant illumination of the Great Enlightenment filled his mind." He had become a Buddha, an Enlightened One. (Budh, means to know.) At this time he had a vision of Great Brahma which told him to rise up, go forth, and proclaim the doctrine, and to open the gates of Nirvana.

Buddha refused to discuss the eternity of the existence. There is no Creator, and man is soulless. Only hope Buddha offers is for the annihilation of soul as the result of successive re-births. To the Buddhist, sin is a thought or an act which brings suffering to himself. Salvation means an escape from existence. The whole system is negative rather than positive in its results. It is a religion of the intellect only.

Mohammedanism

If you remember your Shorter Catechism, you will call to mind the answer to the question, "Are all sins equally heinous in the sight of God?" Answer: "Some sins in themselves, and by reason of several aggravations, are more heinous in the sight of God than others." Mohammedanism must be very near the bottom in the scale of religions. Mohammed himself gathered stories from the Jews of Medina and palmed them off as a new revelation from God. The creed is "There is no God but God, and Mohammed is the apostle of God." This creed is repeated more than any other creed in the world. It is related that the prophet said "whosoever recites this creed shall receive rewards equal to the emancipation of ten slaves and shall have 100 good deeds put to his account and 100 of his sins shall be blotted out, and the words shall be a protection from the devil." The defects of the teaching of this religion are many: it is full of historical errors; it contains monstrous fables; it is full of superstitions; it perpetuates slavery, polygamy, divorce, religious intolerance, the seclusion and degradation of women and it petrifies social life. Moslems (Mohammedans) believe in an everlasting life of physical joys for a heaven, or physical tortures for a hell. "To be carnally minded is death." The cross of Christ is the missing link in the Moslem's creed.

Judaism

Judaism today consists of two great sections, the Orthodox and the Reformed. The Reformed Jews are very similar to Unitarians in their beliefs, and are more and more conforming to the services of the Christian Church, having their services on the Christian's Sabbath and the organization is similar to that of the Christian Church. The Orthodox Jews are those who still hold to the teachings of Moses. All believers in Judaism agree on the following articles: that there is one God, who created heaven and earth and rules the world with perfect wisdom, with infinite justice, and everlasting love; that all men are children of God, endowed with an immortal spirit destined to share in the eternal happiness by following his ways of righteousness; that Israel is his Chosen Nation; and that God rules and judges all men and all nations in righteousness and love. The orthodox Jews believe that Moses received two revelations on Mt. Sinai—one which was handed down on the two tables of stone, and the other handed down by word of mouth from generation to generation. These legends were finally written down with comments and criticisms and are called the Talmud. The Talmud is considered divine as well as the law which was written on stone. Jesus said, "Well did Isaiah prophesy of you saying, 'This people honoreth me with their lips but their heart is far from me, but in vain do they worship me, teaching as their doctrine the precepts of men.'" The Bible is crowded out by the Talmud. Few Jews know anything about the Old Testament. Judaism omits teaching about sin and atonement. Isaac M. Wise says in his book "Judaism and Its Doctrines" "God being all-just and most merciful, provided a remedy for the sinner in bestowing on man the ability to stop sinning and return to the path of righteousness." The doctrine of human merit has been enthroned. Judaism is utterly selfish, salvation is for the Jews only. No helping hand should be given to idolaters, which term includes Christians. It degrades womanhood and makes women no better than slaves. Such conditions exist however only where the people are under the influence of the rabbis, and the influence of the traditions of the fathers, the Talmud.

The Needs of All Nations

Christ—love—sympathy. When we stop to think of our own religion after reading these samples of the religions of the people who do not know Him, our emotions are mixed. Pity sweeps over us, but how much more should we feel a love that compels us to try to win them! Think what Christ means to you and what Christianity has done for your community! God grant that we may go out and be Christians in the truest and finest sense of the word.

SEVENTH ALL-SOUTH C. E. CONVENTION

Preceding the Sunday night session a series of C. E. prayer-meetings for the various grades of Endeavorers were held. Those in charge of these meetings reported good attendance and interest.

With Duncan B. Curry, first chairman of the All-South Missions, now a resident of Chattanooga, presiding, three interesting addresses were heard at the night meeting. Rev. Stanley B. Vandersall of the International Society spoke on "How C. E. Serves the Church." He presented five avenues of service. Christian Endeavor provides for the church a 'voice', of testimony, prayer, the leadership of meetings; 'hands', to do deeds of service; 'feet', these indicating that the young people are in motion, going somewhere; 'eyes', that see a vision of a world living in righteousness; and a 'heart', emphasizing the standards of the pledge, promoting the C. E. prayer-meeting and private devotions, and stressing evangelism.

Dr. Egbert W. Smith, Executive Secretary of Foreign Missions of the Southern Presbyterian Church, told of some things he has seen in four foreign-mission fields. He presented the Brazilians as warm-hearted, high-spirited and lovable, but restless without Christianity, one woman having lived in 10 towns in as many years. Japan is advanced in civilization, 96 per cent. of the school age children attending school; but education doesn't give moral control or ethical guidance. The voice of Japan is saying, "We are seeking God; can you show him to us?" In China the speaker saw the face of a woman longing for more of Christian truth, her face a prophecy of the coming church in China. As in many other countries, so is it true in Africa that "the idea that God loves them has never entered the heathen mind." The heathen are waiting for Christians to send them the good news.

Dr. Ira Landrith followed his afternoon address with another of the same general type. This time he spoke on "Save the Leaders First."

Monday morning was given to further conferences on various subjects, the morning session following a union officers' breakfast at headquarters hotel, when methods of financing the work were discussed.

At the auditorium Mr. Vandersall led the quiet hour and also threw further light on the subject of Christian Vocations. Miss Cole spoke on methods of work for the Juniors. Mr. Klahr, on Intermediate work, spoke of the "contagious enthusiasm of a triumphant personality" and its vital importance in work for those in this age group. Mr. Breg reminded the delegates that provision is made for grading C. E. Societies in the way approved by religious education experts, just as Sunday school departments are graded, and urged a promotion service once a year—the last Sunday of September.

Mr. E. D. Grant, Educational Secretary of the Committee of Foreign Missions, Presbyterian Church U. S. made suggestions for the conduct of study classes. Miss Anne Van Devanter of the same Committee, gave an illustrated talk on poster making, particularly by the "cut-paper method." Mr. Percy Foster, song leader of the convention, gave instructions in song leadership. Dr. R. C. Long, Stewardship Secretary Presbyterian Church, U. S., spoke on the work he promotes. He pointed out that "the tithe is a principle to be instilled and not a plan to be installed."

Mr. Shartle spoke on the importance of supporting one's own local church and denomination. He said: "If you can attend only one service a Sunday, go to the preaching service not to C. E." "Every member of your church governing body is ex officio a member of your C. E. Society." "Our first duty is to our own church, not to the C. E. society as a separate organization. At intervals you ought to have meetings to discuss 'fundamentals of my denominational organization that I ought to know.'"

Rev. E. B. Quick of the Disciples Church spoke on the importance of the Quiet Hour observance each day of one's life. Some half dozen illustrations of the practices of prayer by prominent persons of history, and of the value of prayer, were given.

The Chattanooga Endeavors were hosts for sight-seeing tours Monday afternoon. Lookout Mountain, Signal Mountain, Missionary Ridge, Ft. Oglethorpe, and Chickamauga battlefield, were visited by the automobile parties.

Miss Cole and Mr. Klahr, supplying for Mr. Wright who had an attack of influenza, conducted a recreational hour to open the Monday night session. Mr. Foster had charge of a sixty-minute period of song instruction and demonstration. With Rev. Thos. C. Bryan, president of the South Carolina Union, in the chair, there were messages from leaders and state representatives, and resolutions contained two important provisions:

1. We would record our conviction that upon returning home the delegates and the local organizations they represent, should endeavor to promote the Crusade with Christ and the other causes presented by the speakers, and in particular, take such steps as approved by their church authorities to urge governmental support of practical peace measures such as the Treaty of Paris.

2. We would express to the leadership of our respective denominations our desire to be used more and more largely in carrying forward our denominational programs, and earnestly request their fullest co-operation in helping us to do our proper share of the work and reap our proper share of the benefits of the God-inspired and God-directed international and interdenominational Christian Endeavor Movement which lies so near our hearts.

Mr. Shartle conducted the Victory Hour, closing with the close of year, after which a great circle was made around the walls of the hall, the human circle joining in "Blest be the tie" and the Mizpah benediction and "Happy New Year."

The convention was rich in expressions of the value of Christian Endeavor in individual and church life.

Dr. Foulkes said, "The most helpful thing about the Old First Church of Newark is its organized young people's work. I have organized three additional societies in the past three years, and don't know what I would do without my Endeavor societies."

Mr. Wallis: "If I have attained anything in church or state or business, it is due to Christian Endeavor, where I began my religious work in Kentucky in C. E. As far as I am personally concerned, I put more value upon C. E., in the individual life and in the organization of young people in the church today than in all my 38 years of connection with the Endeavor work."

Dr. J. P. McCallie: "C. E. meant much to me in my youth. My religious work started in C. E. in the church where I am still a member and am now an elder. I believe with all my heart in what it is doing for the young people of our Church. (Presbyterian U. S.) Three boys from our school went into the ministry largely through the C. E. society."

Rev. Chas. Cureton, Presbyterian Church, U. S., Converse, S. C. "As a word of testimony, I will say that it was largely due to the Christian influence at McCallie's school that I am in the ministry today."

Rev. R. C. Wilson, Presbyterian Church, U. S., Cartersville, Ga.: "I feel C. E. has done most for me in the days of my 'old age.' I have seen what it can mean and what it can do, as a pastor. I do not feel that there is any organization for young people anywhere that is as fine as Christian Endeavor. I don't believe any denominational society can take the place of C. E."

Mr. Grant: "Christian Endeavor has had letters patent on all the vim, vigor, and vitality that any organization could want."

Mr. Holmes: "Christian Endeavor in Australia saved me when I went to the city as an inexperienced country boy."

Mother!

Baby's Best Laxative is "California Fig Syrup"

When baby is constipated, has wind-colic, feverish breath, coated-tongue, or diarrhea, a half-teaspoonful of genuine "California Fig Syrup" promptly moves the poisons, gases, bile, souring food and waste right out. Never cramps or overacts. Babies love its delicious taste.

Ask your druggist for genuine "California Fig Syrup" which has full directions for infants in arms, and children of all ages, plainly printed on bottle. Mother! You must say "California" or you may get an imitation fig syrup.

THE RELIGION OF KING GEORGE

When bulletins on the fight with death of the King of England grew in seriousness and the world watched the physician's reports with growing anxiety, there must have arisen in the minds of thousands of Christians the question, Is King George V a Christian? Such a fight, whether won or lost, means that sooner or later even the most magnificent of monarchs must be summoned to render homage at a throne compared with which an earthly throne is no more than a footstool, writes P. W. Wilson in the December 15th number of the Christian Herald.

At such a moment it is not by the standards of time alone that even the most illustrious of monarchs has to be tested. Immortality itself must be the measure of his greatness. King George is a Christian; but in what sense is he a Christian? Is he merely a formal "Protestant" as defined by Parliament, or is his religion a living, personal faith? "Can it be true," queries Mr. Wilson, "that amid the bewildering distractions and persistent routine of a glittering court this man of modest demeanor and average attainments has been able to sustain that inner flame of a personal piety which, as we say to ourselves, is impossible for us? If it be so, then it may be that this king will influence more lives by his example than he rules by his prerogative.

"That King George was well brought up goes without saying. Archbishops baptized him, confirmed him, married him, anointed him. Of course, he goes to church. Of course he risks his life by standing bareheaded before the cenotaph in Whitehall. As a mark of consideration for the many millions of his Roman Catholic subjects he has been received in audience by the Pope. With Queen Mary he is not less attentive to the Salvation Army.

"How can a king be sincere when his faith is imposed upon him? By his accession oath, King George has solemnly to swear that he is a 'faithful Protestant,' and until he swears he does not receive the crown. Indeed, the law does not end there. Separated by the River Tweed, England and Scotland have each an established Church. The law requires that north of the Tweed the King be officially a Presbyterian, while south of the Tweed he is officially an Episcopalian. His belief in bishops thus depends upon whether he happens to be residing at Windsor or Balmoral.

"For some years this quiet monarch was overshadowed, first by his father and then by his son. In their resistance to jazz, to bobbed hair, and to absurdities of dress, and in their rigid boycott of divorce and scandal, the King and Queen were unpopular with the smart set and a subject of smiles among others. It is said that Queen Mary had no conversation and that King George was under her tutelage. The Court was humdrum. It was the Prince of Wales and later the Duchess of York in whom the world was interested.

"But gradually a somewhat different estimate of the sovereigns began to pervade the nation and the world. The King was confronted by an extraordinary series of crises. Yet through all these difficulties and dangers, the King and Queen continued their reign, sympathetic, assiduous, tactful, and imperturbable. They began to be trusted and confidence developed into affection.

"Of the millions of words published about King George, I cannot pretend to have seen everything. Nor has anybody else. But I have a fairly full record of his career and I seem to find one positive hint alone, at any rate in print, of the clue of his immense personal influence. Some years ago he allowed it to be stated that, as a boy, he had promised his mother to read the Bible every day, and that he had kept the promise. That is the source of wisdom which has never failed him.

"If King George V had been a Bourbon, living at Versailles, every courtier would have witnessed these devotions. But in London there is a home within the palace which is as private as any other Englishman's castle. It is in that home where the King and Queen breakfast alone that the Bible is read. It is He who sees in secret that rewards openly.

"If King George V has retained his joy in service, his smile, his tenderness to children, and, in a word, his character, it is because day by day the world around him was excluded from a realm within him over which there has reigned Another than he."

What's become of the "Superfluous Woman?"

THESE were the women that the census taker used to put down as "Females without Occupation." You know. Women with grown-up families. And the familiar ailing relatives that had to be supported by some other member of the family.

What's become of these so-called "superfluous women?" Health has everything to do with it. Just talk to women who've been successful along their own particular lines. They'll all tell you they take Nujol regularly.

"I learned that good habit from our school doctor," you'll be told. "She advised all the girls to take it, especially whenever we had to cut down on our regular exercise. You know how headachy and dull you're apt to feel. Well, you'd be surprised to see what a difference it makes if you take some Nujol for a few days beforehand."

No harm trying. For Nujol can't possibly upset you, even when you're below par. It contains absolutely no medicine or drugs. Perfected by the Nujol

Jars of Vicks daily

Compared with 1918, this epidemic, so far, is mild; and yet, in spite of vastly increased capacity, the Vicks Laboratories are once more operating night and day to meet the emergency demand for more and more Vicks VapoRub. Over 375,000 jars are now being produced daily.

approved method of using Vicks for FLU

1. AS A PREVENTIVE

Several times a day, insert Vicks up the nostrils. Also melt a little night and morning in a bowl of boiling water and inhale the steaming medicated vapors. This helps to ward off germ-infection.

2. IF A COLD STARTS

If possible, go home and go to bed. Take a laxative and a hot lemonade. Apply hot, wet towels over throat and chest until the skin is thoroughly reddened. Then rub vigorously with Vicks. Spread on thickly and cover with warm flannel. Leave the bed-covering loose, so that the vapors, released by the body-warmth, may be freely inhaled. At the same time, Vicks acts through the skin like a poultice.

Repeat this treatment every four hours, eat lightly, and stay in bed until the cold is broken. Complete rest helps the body throw off the cold more quickly.

3. AFTER A FLU ATTACK

Physicians advise that the chief danger in this epidemic is after influenza. Then, more than ever, colds, attacking the weakened system, may lead to bronchitis, sinus-trouble or pneumonia. This is especially true of children or old folks.

Heed even the slightest cold as a danger signal. Vicks is especially valuable here, because it is applied externally, and so can be used freely, as often as needed, without upsetting delicate digestions, as too much "dosing" is so apt to do.

When your Children Cry for It

Mothers, who take one simple precaution, are seldom worried. With a bottle of Fletcher's Castoria in the house they can do what their doctor would tell them to do, when baby is retful, feverish, colicky, constipated or stuffed-up with cold—give a few drops of this pure vegetable, pleasant-tasting preparation. It comforts Baby and soothes him to sleep in a jiffy. It's perfectly safe for the youngest infant. Use it freely—and as often as needed, specialists advise. A more liberal dose is all it takes to comfort and relieve older children when feverishness, bad breath, no appetite, colds, to show they need a good purging. The mark of genuine Castoria is the Fletcher signature on the wrapper. Look for it to avoid imitations.

THE GLORY OF THE KITCHEN

What tasks in life are menial and servile? Even in the holiday season we have heard complaints from folks who called their work a sort of degrading drudgery and apparently apologized for spending their hours in doing things essentially mean and petty—when as a matter of fact they were giving themselves to important ministries on which the health and happiness of others depended. One of the great hymns of the Church which we do well to study at the beginning of a New Year is that beautiful prayer of Geo. Herbert, "Teach Me, My God and King" (No. 501 in our Hymnal). Surely we need the lesson that no task can be so small that it does not draw greatness and worthy from our Lord, when it is done for His dear sake. It is eternally true that:

"If done to obey Thy laws,
E'en servile labors shine;
Hallowed is toil, if this the cause,
The meanest work, divine."

Isn't it queer, too that it is service in the home itself which is so often regarded as most "menial?" Working in store or factory has no stigma in the eyes of some who view "house-work" as beneath the notice of all but "hired domestics." We mark among the rarer souls those who glimpse the glory of the kitchen and sense the possibility of making house-work a fine art.

At one of his services last summer in Westminster Chapel, London, Dr. G. Campbell Morgan read the following beautiful lines, written by "M. K. H.," in The Westminster Record. This lovely "prayer hymn" is said to have been written by a 19-year-old servant girl, and we earnestly commend its message to all our readers. Maybe it will not only hearten many who render such service; we hope also, that it may cause others to value and dignify more highly both the gracious ministries of the home circle and the loving hearts which render them for love's sake.

"Lord of all pots and pans and things;
since I've not time to be
A saint by doing lovely things, or watching late with Thee,
Or dreaming in the dawnlight, or storming heaven's gates,
Make me a saint by getting meals and washing up the plates.

Although I must have Martha's hands, I have a Mary mind;
And when I black the boots and shoes,
Thy sandals, Lord, I find.
I think of how they trod the earth, what time I scrub the floor;
Accept this meditation, Lord, I haven't time for more.

Warm all the kitchen with Thy love, and light it with Thy peace;
Forgive me all my worrying, and make my grumbling cease.
Thou who didst love to give men food, in room or by the sea, Accept this service that I do—I do it unto Thee."

The James Sprunt Lectures for 1929. Plain, common sense application of Christianity to the problems of life today. This master teacher and preacher has produced a volume that will prove to be invaluable to every pastor and leader. Price $1.75.

An Interpretation of the Apocalypse. Rev. J. F. Lawson, D.D., says of this book: "Timely, thorough going, sound, safe, uplifting and convincing. . . . It is a clear, cogent, consistent argument from beginning to end." Price, paper, 75c; cloth, $1.25.

STUDIES IN HYMNOLOGY—By Mrs. Crosby Adams
Any pastor will add tremendously to the effectiveness of his general church work and worship services by introducing this splendid book to groups of individuals in his congregation with the purpose of having them make a study of it. Also fine as a basis for a series of talks on better church music. Price, art paper, 60c; De Luxe cloth, gilt top, $1.50.

THE GENERAL EPISTLES—By S. M. Glasgow, D.D.
Rev. Egbert W. Smith, D.D., says: "I can most heartily commend this volume of brief book studies of the General Epistles. . . . It is written with Dr. Glasgow's accustomed force, insight and zeal for the truth as it is in Christ. There are many purposes it should serve; it is a commentary; it is a desk book for the minister; it is a basis for prayer meeting series; a Bible textbook for young people's or congregational groups." etc. Price, $1.50.

THIS DREAMER—By James I. Vance, D.D.
Nationally recognized as a preacher of tremendous power, a thinker of unexcelled keenness, and a writer who has made his place with the American public, a book by Dr. Vance always meets with an eager welcome. This new volume is Dr. Vance's message for an age of realism. He shows how the world still needs dreamers to lead the way, to stir the world, to give color to life, to summon the heroic and to prophesy a better day. Price $1.50.

THINGS WORTH WHILE—By R. H. McCaslin, D.D.
Dr. McCaslin is well known as one of the outstandingly keen and brilliant preachers and writers of the South. This is a volume of short essays on many practical subjects of general every-day interest, shot through and through with strong devotion to our Christ and the better things of life. A fine source for material for brief talks and illustrations. Price $1.00.

THE LAND OF HAPPINESS—By P. H. Pleune
Bright, short, gripping talks to children. Exactly suited for use just before the regular sermon, or for the children's meetings, or for use in Sunday School, or for reading to groups or the children at home. Price, $1.00.

BEHIND THE SCENES—By S. H. Chester, D.D.
An administrative history of the Foreign Mission Work of the Southern Presbyterian Church, prepared by the man who was its director for over thirty years. This inside story of a great development in dynamic Christian service in evangelizing non-Christian people. Price, $1.50.

WITH WINGS—By Neal L. Anderson
When you get hold of this little book and once start to read, it will be a difficult task to lay it aside until it is finished. Flying is a most interesting subject anyway, but when it is treated with the skill and charm shown in Dr. Anderson's little book, it becomes doubly so. Price, paper, 50c.

THE PRECIOUS FAITH—By Judge J. P. Hobson
Contains the carefully prepared statements of a devout, educated, well-balanced, deeply consecrated Christian layman, on subjects of vital interest to the Christian church and to society at large. Price, paper, 50c; cloth, $1.00.

STORY

ACCIDENTS WILL HAPPEN

Be careful, Tom,' warned his father. "Ice-boating is hazardous enough in the open lake, but when six boats are lined up for a race, it becomes a really dangerous sport."

"I'll be cautious, Dad," promised Tom. "Although I can't say I won't take any chances at all. I'd like to win first prize if I could."

Tom was one of the young sailors who were to drive their boats over the ice that day in the annual race for the Windham trophy. He was seated in the stern of his boat a great rugged craft that looked like a spider sprawled over the ice, with a sail that was already pulling at the lines, as if anxious to be on its way.

Lined up with him were five other boats, four of which were different from his. The fifth one, however, was exactly the same in every respect, and the boy who sat in the helmsman's seat was Bob Thatcher, a very good friend.

Tom turned and waved his hand. "Good luck, Bob, I hope if anyone beats me in, it'll be you."

"Thanks, Tom. People expect us to come in at the same time, I guess, seeing our boats are so much alike."

"They're good old boats," replied Tom, proudly. "Well, be careful, Bob."

"Be careful yourself," was the laughing retort.

A moment later and the race was on. "Fall off into the wind!" shouted Tom's father. "They're getting a start on you!"

It was true. At the last second or two, a slight confusion in the rigging had made it impossible for Tom to clear away, and while the others were gaining speed and distance, Tom was still anchored to the starting line, trying to straighten out the ropes that were causing the trouble. At length they ran through the blocks as they should, and the trim ice boat was away—but fifty yards or more behind the leaders.

Something had also happened to Bob Thatcher. Instead of leading as Tom expected, the boat that was the twin of his own was well behind the field.

"This is a bad start for the both of us," he thought. "I wonder if there is still a chance?"

By this time the Elsig was swimming over the ice like a low-flying airplane, and although Tom could not notice it, she had already decreased the distance between herself and the boats in front. The Lulu, which was Bob's boat, did not seem to be so eager, and it was evident that while the Elsig gained on the others only one foot in a hundred, she gained fifty feet on the Lulu.

"There's a line caught in your rudder!" Tom shouted across the ice as he came abreast of the Lulu. "Don't try to pull it in. Cut it with a knife."

Bob saw the trouble at once, and he took care of it in the way Tom suggested. At the same time, the Lulu, freed from the drag that was holding her back, leapt ahead like a race horse at the sound of the starter's gun.

"I'm going to pass 'em!" shouted Bob, greatly encouraged by this burst of speed. "So am I!" was his chum's determined reply.

The Lulu, therefore, and the Elsig, twin boats in every respect, sped confidently ahead. In order that they might pass the other boats at the same time, Bob sheered off to the right and Tom to the left, so that in a short time they were on the wings of the line of racers, ready to cut ahead and take the lead for themselves. But as they began to walk away from the slower boats, a sudden change in the width of the course brought them face to face with danger.

There were two red flags to mark the narrow pass, and on each side of the pass there were excited men, who had stopped cutting ice to watch what would happen when two boats tried to get through the pass at the same time as these two leading boats were doing. Some of the men shouted. Other turned and ran. Tom swung the nose of the Elsig toward the very center of the course, and calmly calculated that he could beat Bob to the spot by the necessary inches to avoid a collision.

Bob, at the same time, did exactly the same thing, made exactly the same calculation in exactly the same manner; the only difference being that he thought the Lulu would get through first instead of the Elsig.

As a matter of fact, both boats arrived there at the same time.

The boy racers each saw their danger just in time. Tom threw his rudder hard down. The Elsig rose high in the air like a frightened steed and turned away from the impending collision. Bob gave his tiller a powerful sweep in the opposite direction, which took the Lulu off the ice like a bird scared by the shot from a gun. When both boats crashed down again on the ice, in response to a movement of their tillers, the danger was avoided, the narrow pass was behind them, and the lake a clear field of ice ahead of them.

"Whew!" gasped Bob. "Be careful!" "Be careful yourself!" replied Tom, good-naturedly.

"I'll beat you to the turn," offered Bob. "You mean you'd like to."

Tom got there first, and began the turn cautiously, as one must in an iceboat, Bob cut in closer, tried to make a sharper turn, lifted up on one runner, skidded, and would have crashed into the Elsig sideways if Tom hadn't cleverly given her helm so that she turned up and skidded too.

"Easy, Bob, cautioned Tom, "You almost wrecked us that time!"

"Sorry Tom. Thought I could make it."

By this time, the two boats were away again on the home stretch, tacking against the wind. Tom missed a dead tree by a matter of inches, and Bob almost overturned while changing his tack, but in spite of the close accidents they had with each other and with the natural dangers of the course, both sped over the finish line safely and unhurt, one just a few yards behind the other.

Tom came in first. People said afterwards that he showed the better seamanship, but between him and Bob, who got the second prize, there was so little difference that it couldn't be measured.

The two boys put away their boats and started across a narrow neck of ice for home. They were talking so earnestly and laughing so loudly over the events of the race that they did not hear the warning shouts that followed them across the ice. Suddenly they heard a sound of thin ice breaking under too much weight, and just as suddenly they realized that it was the ice directly under the own feet.

"Be careful!" shouted Tom, instinctively.

"Be careful yourself," retorted Bob as they both went in the water together. They sank to their knees and then touched bottom. For a moment they stood a grinned at each other. They both looked at the sign "DANGER—HOT WATER" and grinned some more.

"We're just lucky," commented Tom as they waded through the thin ice shore. "Accidents will happen, I know but imagine falling through ice in hot water!"

Bob laughed.

"Accidents will happen," he said jokingly. "And from what I've observed, believe there is one waiting to happen us. I'm going right home and go to bed."

Brings You This Full Size Fairy Damask Cleanable Table Cloth

Look at the photograph of the beautiful Fairy Damask Table Cloth shown above. It seems to be of the finest linen. You can't tell it from fine linen, yet if you should spill something on it, all you would have to do would be to take a damp cloth to clean it perfectly.

Fairy Damask is a new fabric just perfected by one of the largest and most famous companies in the world—DU PONT.

There has never been anything like it before. Just think—a table cloth that looks like the most expensive Irish Linen—that is beautifully hemstitched all around—that has a flannel back to protect the fine finish of your table—and that never needs to be laundered.

When we saw this table cloth we made up our minds that we were going to do our utmost to make it possible for our friends and customers to obtain these beautiful table cloths at the manufacturers price.

We have accomplished what we set out to do. We were able to buy 11 thousand of these table cloths direct from Du Pont. We are offering them to our customers at our cost. When these table cloths are sold in the department stores we understand the price is to be $4.50 but even at that price they are hard to get as they are just being put on the market.

Wm. B. Reily & Co., Inc., Roasters of Luzianne Coffee, believe in doing everything they can for their customers. Through our big buying power we are able to save you more than half of what you would otherwise pay for this Fairy Damask Table Cloth. We are glad to be able to do it. We want users of Luzianne Coffee to be our friends as well as our customers and you can depend upon it we will always do everything we can to warrant your friendship.

BE ON TIME

Edward loved to take his ease. Most of us do. Slothful habits have a way of growing, and so Edward got up later and later in the morning and often he was late to school, and when the time came he was frequently late to business.

His family joked with him and nicknamed him "The late Mr. Edward." But Edward merely shrugged his shoulders and paid little heed even when his father and mother remonstrated with him on his disregard of time.

"Don't worry," Edward usually returned easily. "Remember the mayor of New York city for whom the President of the United States waited."

"But you are not the mayor of New York City," returned his father a bit sharply, "and, in my opinion, it would have been more to his credit to have been on time. I am afraid you will get a sharp lesson on this score some day."

That very night Edward came home and under his arm was a package and in his pocket was an envelope. It was not easy to reveal the contents of either. One was his discharge from a very promising position because of his persistent tardiness in meeting his appointments and not doing what he promised to do. The package contained an alarm clock, the parting gift of his office associates.

To Edward it was no joke, and telling the family about it was the hardest thing he had ever done.

His father and mother listened without a word until he had finished. Neither said: "I told you so," but his father did say: "Now comes the real test, Edward, as to what this experience will mean to you!"

And Edward, who knows he has a fight ahead, is gritting his teeth in preparation for a battle, and, if possible, victory over his pet weakness.—Boy Life.

SAME PRESCRIPTION HE WROTE IN 1892

When Dr. Caldwell started to practice medicine, back in 1875, the needs for a laxative were not as great as today. People lived normal lives, ate plain, wholesome food, and got plenty of fresh air. But even that early there were drastic physics and purges for the relief of constipation which Dr. Caldwell did not believe were good for human beings.

The prescription for constipation that he used early in his practice, and which he put in drug stores in 1892 under the name of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a liquid vegetable remedy, intended for women, children and elderly people, and they need just such a mild, safe bowel stimulant.

This prescription has proven its worth and is now the largest selling liquid laxative. It has won the confidence of people who needed it to get relief from headaches, biliousness, flatulence, indigestion, loss of appetite and sleep, sour breath, dyspepsia, colds, fevers. At your druggist, or write "Syrup Pepsin," Dept. BB, Monticello, Illinois, for free trial bottle.

Columbia to Hear Dr. Weir

Head of Men's Work of Northern Church to Address Students—The Seminary Invites Others to Enjoy the Opportunity With Them

The students of Columbia Theological Seminary, at Decatur, Ga., have a rare treat in store in the promise of Dr. William F. Weir, General Secretary of the Men's Work, Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., since 1916, to spend a week on the campus and to deliver a series of lectures on Men's Work in the Church.

These lectures will be delivered immediately following the examinations of the winter term. Dr. Weir will come to us March 11th, and will speak twice each day throughout the week. Dr. J. E. Purcell, Secretary of Men's Work, says of Dr. Weir, "I will say that I have met no man in America with so practical and spiritual a grasp." Dr. William C. Covert, General Secretary of Christian Education of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., says, "He has been a leading figure in that realm of service with growing influence ever since. (1906). As a student of the principles and technique of Christian work of modern church men, he has been recognized beyond his own denomination. I can commend the message of Dr. Weir to the students of Columbia Theological Seminary as the product of experience and wide accurate observation."

Columbia Seminary is in position to entertain twenty-four men who are especially interested in Men's Work, and would be glad to extend this privilege to Synodical and Presbyterial secretaries who would like to study for a week under Dr. Weir.

King College Campaign Advances

Church School of Bristol, Tenn., Reports Encouraging Progress in Their Financial Plans

An alumnus of King College made a conditional gift two years ago of $100,000.00, to establish a total fund of $750,000.00, and gave the college five years in which to meet his proposition. The home town of King College, Bristol, immediately responded by subscribing over $100,000.00. Since that time a quiet canvass has been made under the leadership of Dr. Robert Yost, of the King College faculty, and of Mr. Sam R. Wells, of Johnson City, Tenn., chairman of the Synodical Campaign Committee.

Within the last few weeks an unconditional subscription of $50,000.00 has been received from Mr. Clifford D. Caldwell, president of the By-Products Lumber Company, with headquarters in Chicago. Mr. Caldwell is the son of the late Rev. George A. Caldwell, one of the founders of King College and for a long time pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Bristol. Mr. Caldwell's subscription will be added to the original "Caldwell Endowment Fund," established by the trustees of King College in 1875 as a memorial to Rev. George A. Caldwell.

Another most encouraging incident was the receipt of a check just after the first of the year for $10,000.00, from an alumnus of the college who has been living for many years in California. These gifts bring the total of the subscriptions to date to approximately $200,000.00.

By the conditions under which the campaign is being made, the first $50,000.00 collected is to be placed in a per-

Dr. Lingle Gives Sprunt Lectures

President of Training School Delivers Series at Union

We print below the account of the Sprunt lectures as delivered by Dr. W. L. Lingle, the president of the Assembly's Training School. The lectures were given at Union Seminary, Richmond, Va., during the week of January 11-20.

We are indebted to the Presbyterian of the South for the story:

Sprunt lectures, an annual occurrence at Union Seminary, are always looked forward to with pleasure, and never more so than this year. Among those who have delivered the lectures have been some of the ablest ministers and laymen of our own and other churches of this country, and from England and Scotland. But never, until this year, has one of these speakers been connected with one of the educational institutions of our Church.

The lecturer this year was Rev. Dr. Walter L. Lingle, the President of the Assembly's Training School, and who, before assuming that office was a professor in Union Theological Seminary.

Former speakers have discussed many interesting and important subjects, but none have been of more practical value than this last series of lectures. They showed much study and research and dealt with some of the great problems of the Church, but they were treated in such a sensible and practical way that there was in them very little that was technical.

They will be of great value to all who heard them, but especially to the students of the Seminary and the Training School. They will be helpful not only in the information given, but especially in showing the proper methods of dealing with such subjects.

Dr. Lingle took as his general subject, "The Bible and Social Problems." His first lecture was taken up with defining the principal terms to be discussed, such as sociology, socialism, individualism, communism and social service. In his second lecture he showed in a most forceful way from the Scriptures what is "God's Ideal for the World." This was followed by a discussion of "Jesus' Sermon on the Kingdom," or as more commonly called, "The Sermon on the Mount." He showed in a striking way the manner in which Jesus presented the great fundamental principles of the Kingdom.

His treatment of "The Bible and Money," "The Bible and Poverty," two difficult subjects to handle, was strong, suggestive and practical. In his lecture on "The Bible and the Family," he showed what a high place the Bible gives to the family in God's Kingdom and in its work. Parental responsibility and opportunity were shown to be the very greatest which God has given to man.

"The Bible and War" was the subject of discussion of a very difficult problem which is facing the world today. Dr. Lingle showed that God's ideal is a wireless world. But, he said, that it could not be maintained from Scripture that God condemns all war; for He has not only permitted many wars, as shown in the Old Testament. He urged all Christians to strive after God's ideal, a warless world.

The concluding lecture of the series was on "The Church and Social Reforms." He showed that the Church should teach the great principles involved in social reforms of the right kinds and should exert her influence to bring them about through the efforts of her members, and at times through the action and influence of her courts.

Founder's Week at Chicago

Moody Bible Institute Will Hold a Week's Conference in February

A program of commanding strength is assured for the twenty-fourth annual Founder's Week Conference, to be held under the auspices of The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago, February 5 to 8, in its auditorium, corner of N. LaSalle Street and Chicago Avenue.

Among speakers already named are: Dr. Howard Agnew Johnston, author of "Scientific Faith" and "We Can Surely Believe;" Dr. P. W. Philpott, pastor, Moody Memorial Church and well-known evangelist; Dr. W. B. Riley, valiant protagonist for the Bible; Dr. W. L. Pettingill, Bible teacher and interpreter of Prophecy; and Dr. Leander S. Keyser, keen and challenging theologian, author of many books on Christian evidences. Dr. James M. Gray, president of the Institute, will preside, and speak on devotional themes at one period each day.

A group of qualified speakers insure interest for the Torrey Memorial service of Tuesday evening when the life and work of the late Dr. R. A. Torrey will be reviewed.

World Missions will command full attention on Friday, the last day of the conference. A group of missionaries whose lives have been interwoven with the evangelization of the distant continents and islands of the earth will recount the leadings and providences of God in other lands.

The Institute's trained choir and a number of special soloists, together with the usual measure of congregational praise, will give distinction to the musical program which has been an outstanding feature of former conferences.

Action of Kiangpei Presbytery

Chinese Presbytery Votes Against Union With United Church of China

In a recent letter sent through the Foreign Mission Committee at Nashville, Rev. Martin A. Hopkins gives us this interesting information:

"On October 4th the Kiangpei Presbytery, which embraces a large part of the organized work of our mission, met in Hsuehchowfu. This was the first meeting after an interval of two years, conditions last year being too unsettled to attempt a meeting. It was a fully attended meeting both by Chinese and missionary delegates. It was good to see each other again, especially after the long separation, made longer by the trying experiences through which we have passed. Here we were meeting in perfect peace in the city that had been one of the storm centers during the recent wars, and in a church that had been occupied by soldiers! On the first morning the clear balmy air and the song of birds outside the windows was typical of the spirit of radiant triumph that filled our Chinese brethren. They had weathered the storm and come through more than conquerors through Him that loved us. There was also manifested a most cordial feeling of fraternity that completely obliterated racial distinctions among the delegates. "Ah Lord Jehovah! behold . . . there is nothing too hard for Thee."

"One of the momentous issues that came before the Presbytery was whether to join the Church of Christ in China a union church movement which was organized a year ago or to remain with

Memphis Church Calls Charlotte Pastor

Rev. Parks W. Wilson, is Dismissed by Mecklenburg Presbytery to Tennessee—Mr. Wilson Honor Guest at Ministers' Lunch

The Presbytery of Mecklenburg met in called session on Friday, January 25 and dissolved the pastorate of Rev. Parks W. Wilson at West Avenue Church, Charlotte, N. C., that he might accept a call as co-pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church, Memphis, Tenn., although under the strenuous protest of the congregation over which Mr. Wilson has presided for the past two years. The church declined to concur with him in the request for the dissolution of the pastorate, feeling the work of the minister had been so signally successful in that church and that section of the city, and was not completed. The testimonies of the representatives of the church were very warmly expressed as to Mr. Wilson's work as preacher, pastor, organizer and friend.

The minister, however, told the Presbytery that he had definite convictions of duty that he should accept the call to the co-pastorate of the Second Presbyterian Church, Memphis, Tenn., where the veteran minister, Dr. A. B. Curry, has been located for so many years, and on this representation of the sense of a call of God, the Presbytery voted to dissolve the relation and dismissed Mr. Wilson to Memphis Presbytery.

After the meeting of Presbytery, the ministers of the city of all denominations gathered at Ivey's and had a farewell lunch together, with Mr. Wilson and Rev. Joseph A. Gaines, of St. Johns Baptist Church, as honored guests. After the meal was served, Dr. C. R. Nisbet, president of the Charlotte Ministers' Association presided at the farewell toasts, when many addresses, complimentary and valedictory were delivered by the brethren of the different pastorates of the city. Resolutions were adopted expressing the feelings of the body toward these ministers who are leaving their old charges about the first of the month.

The Home Missions Council Meets

Inter-Church Body in Annual Session at Atlantic City

On January 9 and 10, 1920, in the Presbyterian Church at Atlantic City, the Home Missions Council and Council of Women for Home Missions held their annual meeting. This is the 20th anniversary, and the theme was: "The Strategy of Home Missions."

There were present from the Southern Presbyterian Church: Dr. S. L. Morris and Dr. Homer McMillan, Secretaries of Home Missions; Mr. R. E. Magill, Secretary of Religious Education; Dr. Henry W. McLaughlin, Country Church Director; Mrs. H. J. Williams, Editor of "The Presbyterian Survey," and Mrs. R. M. Pegram, of Louisville, Kentucky, representing the Committee on Woman's Work.

The Committee on Rural Work met all day Monday, and Tuesday morning. Dr. McLaughlin is a member of this Committee. The council adopted a resolution of the Rural Church Committee calling upon all the denominations to appoint a Country Church Day either on the fifth Sunday after Easter or some other Sunday convenient.

The Committee on Church Building met on Tuesday and Wednesday. Thirteen denominations have architectural departments. Mr. Magill represented manent endowment fund. This will give the college an endowment of about $650,000.00 which does not include about $8,500.00 a year contributed regularly through the budget of churches of the Synod of Appalachia. Capitalized at 5 per cent this represents additional endowment of $170,000.00, which will give King College the equivalent of an endowment fund of over $800,000.00.

The remainder of the $750,000.00 fund will be invested in buildings and equipment. The erection of the "E. W. King Administration Building" is the first building unit contemplated in this expansion program. This will be in honor of Mr. E. W. King, of Bristol, who has been, for about fifty years, the greatest benefactor of King College.

The student enrollment is the largest in the history of the college and taxes the capacity of the class rooms and the faculty under present conditions.

It is the policy of the Board of Trustees and of the Campaign Committee to proceed steadily with the financial campaign among the alumni and friends of the college and in the churches of the Synod of Appalachia. It is confidently believed that the final goal of $750,000.00 can be reached well within the time limit established.

When this is done, it will place the college in a position to apply for membership in the Southern Association of Colleges with every expectation of being approved and accepted by that organization.

the North China Synod of the Presbyterian Church. The Presbytery decided not to join at this time, largely because the union church is composed of many diverse elements of various doctrinal shades, loosely strung together by a few missionaries on a very slender creedal thread, and so is not a vital organism which has developed naturally out of the indigenous church, but only another organization with headquarters in Shanghai. They also appointed delegates to visit the North China Synod at its recent meeting. The Hwaitung Presbytery, which is another section of our field, has decided definitely not to join the union church. With the North China Synod and these Presbyteries there is a good prospect for forming a strong, sound, evangelical church in this section of China, which will be the nucleus for a larger federation of churches in the future, based on a maximum instead of a minimum statement of Christian truth."

our Church in this matter. The architectural bureau of the committee of Religious Education, Box 1176, Richmond, Va., is prepared to render valuable service, and through co-operation with the Bureaus of other churches pamphlets are furnished without cost showing plans for building ranging in price from $5,000 to $750,000.

Home Missions Congress

The last annual meeting of the Council authorized the holding of a National Home Missions Congress, and invited the co-operation of the Federal Council and the Council of Women. Both these Councils heartily accepted the invitation. A Joint Committee of Arrangements was quickly appointed, consisting of five from each of the Councils. That Committee began at once to plan for the Congress. Four large Commissions have been appointed and are at work. They are as follows:

Commission I — The Task of Home Missions Today.

Commission II — Administration of Home Missions.

Commission III — Promotion of Home Missions.

Commission IV — Co-operation in Home Missions.

The Congress is to be held in Washington, D. C., November, 1930. The above Commissions all held meetings and did some constructive work looking forward to the Congress.

A number of able addresses were made at Atlantic City, notable among which were those by Dr. Charles L.

DEVOTIONAL

HOW TO FIND HIDDEN TREASURE.

A Sure Way; No Cheat.

H. H. Leach.

Through the good kindly offices of the editors of our church papers, I wish to offer to my fellow Christians, the readers, my discovery of a certain, sure and effective method of "searching" the Scriptures and finding the "hid treasure," (Prov. 2:45) God has so richly "hid" therein. As covering the whole Bible it far, far surpasses any and all books I am acquainted with at all. My first knowledge of it came from seeing it so strongly recommended by R. A. Torrey in his able little hand-book, "How To Study The Bible." I obtained a copy and tested it out some two years with most profitable results. My personal profit from its help is so great I feel constrained to tell of it to as many of my fellow-Christians as possible.

White, President of the Congress and Executive Secretary of Home Missions of the Northern Baptist Convention, and one by Dr. W. R. King, Secretary of the Council. Dr. King said that during the sixteen months that he has been Secretary he has been specially impressed with three things: First, the magnitude of the Home Missionary enterprise; Second, the growing interest in inter-denominational co-operation, particularly in the field of Home Missions; and Third, the possibilities of the Home Missions Council. He called attention to the fact that there are three great outstanding needs which this Council can do much to meet: (1) The need of better knowledge and understanding of each other. The workers of the different denominations represented in this Council do not know each other. Even those who live and work in the same Home Mission fields are only casually acquainted and in very many cases are total strangers. Two superintendents representing two leading denominations in the Council, who had been living in the same city ten years and supervising the work of their respective denominations in exactly the same territory, met for the first time in a conference Dr. King held in their city a few months ago. This accounts for much of our inter-denominational maladjustments. How can we expect to avoid competition, duplication, overlapping, and unwise administration of Home Missions when those who are responsible leaders do not know each other and are ignorant of each others' programs?

(2) The need of a better knowledge of the Home Mission task on the part of the leaders as well as the Church at large. This is no reflection upon the work or the workers of the past. They had their task in their day and generation and performed it with courage, consecration and ability. We are in a new day and generation. Everything has changed. Home Missions is a new thing. We need a better knowledge of the task today.

(3) The need of a better co-ordination of our forces in the performance of the task.

A good deal has been accomplished along this line, but it has been elementary and preparatory. We have not yet attained. Co-operation is yet in the first stages. A fuller co-ordination of denominational forces and resources in Home Missions is imperative.

We must develop an interdenominational knowledge of our common Protestant task in Home Missions. We must work out a finer co-ordination of our denominational forces and resources. We must cultivate the "we feeling" through a closer and more consistent fellowship.

DR. LINGLE GIVES SPRUNT LECTURES

No brief report can give any idea of the value of these lectures, but fortunately they will soon appear in book form, announcement of which will be made later. Every minister, every student of the Bible and every student of social problems ought to add this book to his library for constant reference.

The name is: "The Treasury of Scripture Knowledge."

In plan "The Treasury of Scripture Knowledge" is a book of references and parallel passages—one half a million!

These references are compiled from "Canne, Browne, Blaney, Scott and others." As to who compiled these references and put them in this handy form, the book nowhere tells. This does not detract the least particle from the value of the book; for the reader is given a reference to read, and to interpret for himself, which is for the reader infinitely better than to give him some man's interpretation—for after all, what he desires most is God's true meaning.

These references are indicated by book, chapter and verse; the text of the Bible is not given.

"The Treasury" conforms throughout to the Authorized (King James) Version, but is perfectly fitted to all editions of the Holy Scriptures.

1. Its method has to do with the Bible itself, not comments on the Bible, not anything outside the Bible. Probably eight Christians out of ten study about or concerning the Bible more than they study the Bible proper.

2. The reader is his own interpreter of what God says. These are many notes sprinkled over the pages, but as a rule, do not give interpretations, or if they do so, give the reader more references so that he may prove it out for himself. This frees the reader from "the doctrines of men." It is the best form of self-help; and self-help is the best help.

3. It is wonderfully helpful in explaining passages that is, it shows how God elsewhere explains Himself. As Dr. Torrey says in the introduction: "There is not a difficult passage in the Bible that is not made clear by other passages." But exceedingly few of us can find those "other passages" without help—and this book is just such a help.

4. As Dr. Torrey points out: "It also emphasizes the truth by bringing in a multitude of witnesses." For example: should you think God does not seriously take a Christian's conformity to the world (which Jesus says hates God), take up the "Treasury," and read very carefully and prayerfully, yea, "search" (as for hid treasure) the twenty-six references, and you will see how God emphasizes His own testimony against worldly conformity. And "to rightly divide the word of truth," guarding against a mere negative form of religion, "search" the thirty-one references on the positive side of the subject godly living, under "be ye transformed."

5. Use of the "Treasury" strengthens faith: (a) by leading the reader to see the unity of Scripture; without any effort of his, the reader is more and more deeply impressed with the fact one mind, and but one mind is speaking in the Scriptures. (b) by leading the reader to see that all the (42) writers in the Bible agree perfectly and all are working on the same one theme: John 3:16. (c) By enabling the reader really and truly to feed on the heavenly manna of the Word, in that he is led into a better understanding of it.

6. "The Treasury" utilizes strictly the rock-bottom principle that Scripture must be interpreted by Scripture. As said above, the student is not taken out of the Bible, but taught to look into it.

This book is the greatest help for detailed study. I judge it is far less help in outline work, plenty of other works for that. But if the Bible student will first do his outline work of book by book, then wishes to take up the passages more particularly and "bit by bit," as Dr. S. D. Gordon would say, "The Treasury of Scripture Knowledge," is, so far as I know unequalled, unsurpassed. Detail study of the World is an exceedingly profitable method. It is very similar to "feeding on the manna." No one can sit down to a large table and eat all that is on it. No one can "eat" all the truth in the Bible at once; God does not intend it so. We first select our portion; second, we appropriate our present need; third, we assimilate it. So with feeding on the Word. This detailed method followed by "The Treasury" enables the reader really and truly to feed on the Word.

If I were forced for the rest of my life to keep only two books of my choosing, one would be an A. V. copy of the Scriptures, and the other "The Treasury of Scripture Knowledge."

THE POTTER'S WHEEL

Let us make no mistake about it. God's purpose for us is more beautiful and more wonderful than any dream we have ever dreamed for ourselves. "Eye hath not seen, ear hath not heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive the things which God hath prepared for those who love him."

The wheel that shapes us is life itself. The circumstances upon which our characters are fashioned. The wheel is hard and merciless. It is no respecter of persons. Under its cruel tyranny men are beaten and broken. Under its pressure men are fashioned and made. It is morally neutral. It sends one to college and another to prison. It bestows upon one an intolerable handicap and upon another a priceless inheritance; and upon the wheel the vessel that the potter held in his hand was marred and broken; and yet it was upon that same wheel that the vessel was re-fashioned and formed into a vessel of honor.

We cannot escape the swift-turning process of the inexorable wheel, but upon this same wheel one life is fashioned into success and another into failure. I have just read Senator Beveridge's revealing life of Lincoln. The wheel upon which Abraham Lincoln was fashioned was more cruel and heartless and hard than I had even thought. The life out of which he came was narrow and restricted. He was handicapped by circumstances in which poverty and ignorance and vulgarity abounded and yet upon that wheel he was fashioned into the noblest character which America immortalizes in her hall of fame.

Side by side with this life of Lincoln, I would like to put John Morley's life of William E. Gladstone, who ranks among the immortals of British history. Gladstone's life was formed in kindlier circumstances. He administered wealth from youth to age. He possessed everything that the colleges and schools of England could contribute. And yet upon that wheel of fortune the character of Gladstone was fashioned into a vessel of honor, an example of integrity and sincerity which has been an ideal to multitudes of men who never met him. Circumstances are only plastic clay in the hands of character; and rich and poor, learned and unlearned, those born into handicaps and those born into an inheritance, may have their characters moulded and fashioned after the mode of the Master himself—Banner.

Did it never occur to you that if you do not hear God's answer to prayer, it may be not because he is dumb, but because you are deaf, not because he has no answer to give, but because you have not been listening for it that you might hear what that answer was? We are so busy with our service, so busy with our praying, that it does not occur to us to stop our own talking and listen if God has some answer to give us with "the still, small voice."—Lyman Abbott.

In the dim hours of sorrow and bereavement; in the hour of painful lassitude, when we hear "Time flowing through the middle of the night;" in the hour when, like an uncertain echo in the lonely corridors of some haunted house, we hear far off the monotonous footfall of approaching death; what is it that calms, and comforts, and soothes us then? Is it any discovery of science? Is it any scheme of philosophy? Is it even the sublime vision of Dante, or the lordly eloquence of Milton? Is it anything that orator has uttered and poet sung? Nay, when the melody of lyric songs has lost its charms, and the music of memory and her siren daughters has been brought low, we still listen—when we can listen to the beautitudes which Christ spake to the multitudes as they sat listening among the mountain lilies, or to those last words, more precious than archangels' utterance, which on the same night that he was betrayed he spake to his beloved ones, when the traitor had gone out and it was night.—Canon Farrar.

THE SALVATION ARMY CRISIS

It may be premature to express opinions on the crisis which has appeared in that noble Army of men and women who are believed by the world to exhibit the most outstanding example of self-sacrifice for the service of Christ and humanity that can be found on the globe. But it may be well to speak of some things now, and wait for developments. We refer to the Salvation Army.

About two months ago Gen. Bramwell Booth, recognized head of the Salvation Army in England, became desperately ill, so that his life was despaired of. While the general lay unconscious at Suffolk, seven members of the high commission which governs the body of the Army, in operation a move to unseat the head of the Army, and at their insistence, the Council met, and voted Gen. Booth unfit to remain the head of the Salvation Army, not making any interpretation of the term, "unfit." All but eight of the twenty-seven members voted for the resolution. Of these eight, four are members of General Booth's family.

As soon as the decision of the Council was reached, the Booth family obtained a legal injunction against putting the resolution into effect. The Council is now seeking to dissolve the injunction in the courts. In the meanwhile, Gen. Booth rallied from his desperate illness, and bids fair to recover. He is an old man, having been in active service since 1874. He was made General to succeed his father Gen. William Booth in 1912.

The Salvation Army is an autocracy, and is led by the iron will of Bramwell Booth. It is his desire that the Booth family shall continue to lead it. It is this autocracy which has fired the other commissioners with a determination to break the situation. The question arises: Is it desirable to continue this autocracy, and let the Booth ideals still reign in the Army?

The world has grown to admire and love the Salvationists for their self-sacrificing work in every corner of the world, where human derelicts float in the tide of affairs. The Army came forth in the World War unscathed by criticism for its altruism, which could not be said of some other beneficent agencies. Men believe in the Army, and gladly support it because they think they are doing by proxy a work of charity and rescue of souls from sin and perdition. America annually responds to the annual campaigns for the Army's support. And of course Great Britain does also. Shall we witness a great movement break up and disappear because of inward factors?

There are two sides to this controversy. The one side believes in the creation of the Booth family, and they believe it will need the inspiration of the Booths as long as that soul force is possible. The other side believes in the dedication of men and women to this work can be traced to the example and magnetic power of William Booth, in the first place, and latterly, Bramwell Booth. On the other hand, an autocracy is impossible in our present times, either in business or religion. The Council sees this, and wants to end the Booth autocracy. Is this the way to end the Booth dynasty?

We are adding to this article some paragraphs taken from the British Weekly of January 3, which may throw some light on the problem. The article is captioned, "The Crisis in the Salvation Army," by One who knows. The clippings follow:

"Many people, perhaps, do not realize that this impressive organization, world-wide in its ramifications, is the creation of the man who lies so tragically stricken in a cottage on the Suffolk coast. William Booth, his father, was the creator of all that boundless enthusiasm which led to the formation of the Army, but Bramwell, working silently and ceaselessly in the shadow of that picturesque personality, was the organizer of victory. He it was who built up and consolidated the extraordinary structure which startled people from the first by its solidity, and he it was who quietly and persistently controlled the statesmanship of the organization when it was powerfully attacked by public men of great eminence and sensationally deserted by members of the General's own family. Bramwell Booth, it should be clearly known, is not merely the second General of the Salvation Army, but its original organizer, its only statesman, and in truth its first autocrat.

"But we are confronted by one definite danger to the organization of the Army which must, I think, have a far-reaching effect on the whole body. For many years the rich and powerful branch of the Army in America, with millions of capital, has been restive under the tutelage of England. Only the perfect tact and occasional submissiveness of Bramwell Booth have prevented that great body of the Army from declaring its independence and going its own way under the leadership of his sister Evangeline. For example, if Bramwell had ordered his sister to take command in India or Australia it is safe to say that the whole Army in America might have risen to defy his order and to break the link with England. That is to say, his autocracy never ventured to cross the Atlantic.

"The Army became a mighty thing because the English nation and then the whole world fell under the spell of William Booth's magnificent appearance and his obvious sincerity; it grew in wealth, power, and prestige because Bramwell Booth mastered and guided its enthusiasm, established a business-like intimacy with the rich and charitable, and maintained the Booth tradition. Let him go, let quarrelsomeness and fractiousness appear at headquarters, let America break away, and half the Army in England declare for the Booths and half for a new form of leadership, and the public, shocked and scandalized, will regretfully conclude that the Army is no longer that great body of devoted men and women who up to this moment have given their lives so single-mindedly to save the lost and to befriend the homeless.

"The only person who could save the Army from this calamitous end, if such a man may be found in its ranks, is one who by a real love of the old General and a real faith in the Booth tradition could stamp out the smouldering embers of mutiny and persuade the Army to continue its original autocracy until a more peaceful hour has arrived for reconsidering the whole question of leadership.

In the meantime I feel that the sympathy of the whole world will go out to the stricken General in his Suffolk cottage."

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION IN CHURCHES

We do not refer to religious education in our Seminaries, because over these the Church is supposed to have full control, though at times it is a rash supposition, as in the case of the Northern Assembly and the Union Theological Seminary of New York. We refer to what is now known as "Church Schools," an innovation in Church work that is a recent invention.

Both in the North and South the idea of religious instruction for the young people of the Church seems to be spreading.

We have in our congregations, at times, a new worker who is known as the "Director of Religious Education," who is supposed to train our young in doctrinal truths.

It is a new work that has taken hold upon the present generation, that is full of promise, yet it is full of latent danger unless directed by wisdom. Wise direction is especially needed now, when doctrinal error is abroad everywhere.

We carefully guard our pulpits by every precaution less error should be taught, yet we pay little attention to the views of those who teach the young in our Summer Conferences.

No man can teach our people from the pulpit unless he comes up to certain requirements of our Book of Church Order. He must be examined by Presbytery and subscribe to the doctrine of our Church, yet any Summer Conference can put anyone in charge and no questions are asked.

Our brethren of the Northern Church seem to be awakening to the danger we have mentioned. Their General Council, the governing body of their Church, has voted to recommend to the next General Assembly as a proposed constitutional rule to be transmitted to the Presbyteries for adoption as follows:

"Each person desiring to serve as a director of religious education or in any position the equivalent thereof in a particular church, shall first obtain a license to serve as such from the presbytery having jurisdiction over the particular church. The presbytery shall require of each applicant satisfactory evidence of being a communicant member of some evangelical church and a willingness, if not already such, to become, prior to such licensure, a communicant member of the particular church. The presbytery shall examine each applicant as to piety, knowledge of the Scriptures, the doctrine and polity of the Presbyterian Church, and ability to teach. Each applicant shall also be required (1) to produce a certificate of graduation from a theological seminary, with specialization in religious education; or (2) a diploma from some college or university, with specialization in religious education and in addition at least one year's specialization in religious education in a recognized institution or two years' experience in general education or religious education; or (3) the equivalent of either of the above. Said license shall be valid only within the presbytery and for one year, unless renewed, and may be withdrawn at any time at the pleasure of the presbytery to which each licensed director of religious education shall report at least once a year. Nothing in this rule is to be interpreted as applicable to ministers who are members of, or to men who have been licensed to preach by, a presbytery of this church."

EDUCATION IN MEXICO

We have just received and read a most interesting letter from Dr. W. A. Ross, one of the professors in the Evangelical Theological Seminary in the City of Mexico. It is mainly concerning progress in education in the Republic of Mexico.

With almost 80 per cent of illiteracy the task facing the authorities is a tremendous one. First President Calles and now President Gil have been nobly seeking to improve educational conditions in the Republic. They have established six great Agricultural schools in different parts of the Republic to train men to develop scientifically the great natural resources of the country. They have also founded a number of Regional Normal Schools to train the teachers for the host of primary and other schools that are necessary to overrun the curse of illiteracy.

Institutes for the teachers are being held everywhere, "Open Air Schools" being established, "Cultural Missions" are going from one end of the country to the other. The country is alive to education as it has never been in all its history.

The Evangelical Churches are not lagging behind in the movement. The Birthday Gift of the Woman's Auxiliary that is used to build two schools for Christian Education of Mexican young women, is coming at just the right time to enable them to meet the pressing need of present conditions.

They are also planning for a Secretary of Religious Education. When this letter was written they were facing the New Year with a feeling of confidence and expectation.

A vastly better day is dawning for Mexico.

"THE GRACE OF GRATITUDE"

Rev. T. K. Mowbray

Luke 17:11-19

Our Lord was en route to Jerusalem to attend the last passover of his earthly life. Instead of taking the direct route through Samaria to Judea, he went by the route on the east side of the Jordan. While he was moving eastward along the boundary line between Galilee and Samaria, he was met just outside of a village by ten lepers.

As we know, leprosy was regarded and treated under the law of Moses as an emblem of evil. This scourge was quite prevalent in Palestine. Because of its ghastly nature and revolting accompaniments it served the purpose of teaching the horror of sin and its terrible effects.

This loathsome disease is minutely described in the book of Leviticus, and seems to have had its origin among the Israelites, while they were laboring among the dust and heat of the brick kilns of Egypt. At that time, so far as we know, no medicine was available with power to stay the ravages of this terrible disease, nor even to mitigate sensibly its tortures. The leper might recover, but he was not cured, for, as Dr. Thomson has said, "Leprosy has ever been regarded as a direct infliction from God, and absolutely incurable, except by the same divine power that sent it." Hence, the King of Israel, when the King of Syria sent Naaman to him, that he might be recovered of his leprosy, said, "Am I God to kill and to make alive, that this man doth send unto me to recover a man of his leprosy?"

Due to discoveries of modern science, victims of this terrible malady, if treated in time, have some chance of recovery in our enlightened age, for which we might well thank God.

Now, let us notice the Appeal of These Lepers

"Jesus, Master, have mercy on us." There were ten of them. Misery had drawn them together in a common cause and had given them an interest in each other; furthermore, they had need of mutual assistance.

They all stood afar off, in accordance with Mosaic custom, and there was a unison of spirit in their common cry.

Our Lord saw them. He didn't say, "Come here, and I will heal you;" or "Come to see me tomorrow and I will try to help you," but, he said, "Go show yourselves unto the priests." This was a direct command. It was the custom, when a cure was thought to have been effected, to present one's self to a priest to receive a ticket of cleanliness. Lepers all over Palestine had heard of the power of the Saviour in curing this disease. The record now indicates that these men turned their faces toward home and started off to visit the priest in implicit obedience to this order. The result was that as they went they were cleansed. Obedience, as it usually does, brought the blessing.

They all realized that they were cleansed. But the thought of cure had now obscured everything else. Each leper thought immediately of his past associations and loved ones, no doubt, and hastened off eager to be restored once more to the society he had long craved, perhaps during months or years, but which had been denied him because of this terrible affliction. One can imagine these Jews, finding themselves cured, immediately separating themselves from their fellow of another race. Their old hate and aversion would manifest itself, all the more vividly because of their previous association as outcasts. They probably turned and said, "What have we to do with thee, thou Samaritan!" The man was too much overcome, we can surmise, to make retort. He is thinking of his past, but also of his future. He is grateful. "When he saw that he was healed, he turned back, and with a loud voice glorified God and fell down on his face at the feet of Jesus, giving him thanks." We assume that the other nine were Jews from a remark of our Lord. Perhaps the leprosy had eaten into the vocal organs of the man so that he could hardly speak above a whisper. But now, he expands his lungs, opens his mouth, and Praise God! his voice has returned. So he praises God. Not only does he show his gratitude in praise, but he fell on his face in adoration at the feet of the Saviour, giving him thanks.

But where are the thankless nine? In response to his gratitude, Jesus answering said, "Were not the ten cleansed? But the nine, where? Only one had returned, and he a Samaritan.

This Gentile probably did not anticipate much help from our Lord, when he first appeared, although he joined in the cry of his companions. He may have been reared in the niceties of the Mosaic institutions. But, as often occurs, we get most where least is expected. And when he did receive the same cure, as as that of his erstwhile companions, the reaction was so great that he was impelled to voice his gratitude for the redemption of his body. On the other hand, the nine Jews, probably expected more from the Saviour, as he was a member of their own race. They had the oracles of God. They were privileged. They probably felt that if the Master had power to heal them he owed it to them to effect a cure. But when they had been relieved, they departed each one to the priest, to secure a clean bill of health, as soon as possible, forgetting—in base ingratitude the One who had effected their physical transformation.

Our Lord says, "There are not found that returned to give glory to God save this stranger." Yes, a stranger to the house of Israel and to God but not to remain a stranger long to God. Christ would emphasize in the presence of his disciples and the villagers, no doubt—many of whom probably knew the lepers, personally—that it was a singular thing indeed, that the Samaritan, alone, thanks God for his recovery. There is however, a than that of mere physical restoration. Jesus said to this Samaritan, "Arise, go thy way"—you may go on now to your home, but you will go a different man inside and out—"Thy faith hath made thee whole."

His gratitude for one blessing had secured for him the reception of another and greater—the salvation of his soul. "Thy faith hath saved thee" is the way the revised version puts it. "Thy faith hath saved thee," cannot refer to the cure of his leprosy. That was effected before his return to give thanks, for it called out this new blessing, from the lips of Christ. Moreover, the nine were healed as well as the Samaritan, and it is clear that the Lord designed to give to him something more than they had received. He had shown a faith which they had not manifested, and he was to get a salvation nobler than the cure which they had obtained. They were healed of their leprosy; he was saved, not from that only, but also from his sin." (Taylor)

What lessons might be drawn from this incident? The first that occurs to us is the

in the world. Many persons assume that they are entitled to what they possess because of their superior knowledge, greater capacity for accumulation, or because they have inherited family names of distinction and cherish traditions of the past. Should they not inquire, "what have I that I did not receive?" Yet, they go on for days and months at a time and never take thought of God; never ask a blessing as they partake of the food which enables them to sustain life; never invoke the protection of God nor offer thanksgiving for countless dangers avoided. Coming from the crisis of a narrow escape, they exclaim, "Oh, that was just my good fortune!" They refuse to enter the house of God on the Sabbath day, although the Lord of all things has given them six days for themselves, and only asks for one day in which they might worship Him. How many people, recovering from dangerous operations or a long siege of illness, give God the thanks, rather than give it to the physician or nurse, who, no matter how skillful they may be, could do nothing without Divine guidance? Here we have a signal example of ingratitude in the nine lepers who went away and thought no more about it until it was too late to thank the Giver of every good and perfect gift.

Again, we have the

Baseness of Ingratitude

Quite often we read in the papers where persons driving cars on the highway, out of the kindness of their hearts, give rides to strangers. When secluded spots are reached, the ingrates blackjack their drivers, take watches, money, and often the cars, and leave their benefactors lying by the roadside, dead or badly injured. This is a sample of modern ingratitude, not infrequently heard of.

Or, we have a mother who toils, sacrifices and suffers to bear and rear her children, who, upon arriving at maturity, desert and malign her. "How sharper than a serpent's tooth to her a thankless child!"

How much more base, then, it is to be ungrateful to God, to take his name in vain, to cast aspersions upon his prophets and his people. A pertinent example of this is seen in some of our modern writers, whom God has endowed with talent to write, but who have debased their endowment by seeking to destroy the higher realities of life; the spiritual values, which they, "having eyes, see not."

What are some of the causes of this ingratitude? Pride might well head the list. It is more than fallen human nature wishes to concede to admit that the talents we possess are God-given. We should like to think that we inherited them through a long line of notable ancestry. Or we accumulate wealth by our craft, rather than through being gifted and blessed by Divine providence.

Again, we can't find anything in our philosophy to lead us to think that there is a personal God, and of course, one cannot be thankful to a "mere force!" Then, too, blessings are often in such indirect ways that we are not sure that God works in such a fashion. It was merely a fortuitous chain of circumstances which effected this happy state of affairs. However, the greatest cause of ingratitude is lack of

Faith in Christ

It was the Samaritan who had the glimmering faith in Christ who returned and was led into the noon day light by the Son of righteousness with healing in His beams. The nine Jews, who had no faith except a desire for physical restoration, went away and missed the pearl of great price, the inestimable blessing of spiritual life.

During the World War, when a company of French soldiers reoccupied a town they had been compelled to evacuate sometime before, they were received with great joy, and an officer said, "I am glad to help to save these people, but I don't see why they are so joyous." An old woman standing nearby replied, "You don't know what you have saved us from; that is why you don't rejoice with us." The Samaritan rejoiced because he knew.

My brethren, let us learn from the grateful leper to glorify God for deliverance from affliction, to thank Him for mercies to us, but above all, to realize and be grateful that "without faith it is impossible to please him; for he that cometh to God must believe that he is and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek Him."—(Heb. 11:6).

THE FAIR DEAL

Of Christian Stewardship

A fair deal for yourself is what you want and what everyone needs most—and the best way to get it is always to give it.

A millionaire is seated in an easy chair. By him stands a poor man in supplicating attitude. "Very sorry, my young friend, that I can do nothing for you. But I can give you a word of good advice—economize!"

"But," says the poor man, "When a man has nothing to—"

"Nonsense!" interrupts the millionaire, "Under certain circumstances a man must know how to save."

A little later they chanced to meet again, this time under different circumstances. The millionaire was drowning in a lake; the poor man calmly regarding him from the shore. "Sorry, my friend," says the poor man, "I can do nothing for you. But I can give you a word of good advice—swim!"

Millionaire (choking)—"Bub-b-ub, but w-when a man can't swim—"

"Nonsense!" says the poor man, "Under certain circumstances a man must know how to swim."

Most men deep down in their soul of souls believe that it is more blessed to receive than to give. Yet I must say that, by some strange quirk of human nature, you are really inclined to feel more kindly toward the man from whom you do something than you do toward the fellow who has helped you.

Just pause here a moment and reflect upon some of the times in your life when you rendered service to someone and was it not true that you felt kinder toward him than he did toward you?

Remember the man who lost his way and stopped your home to inquire the right road? And after giving him the desired information, that satisfaction of feeling an interest in him that you had because of the service you rendered him?

"It is more blessed to give than to receive," is not impractical religious sentiment—it is the highest form of present-day efficiency teaching.

God gave to us long before we were able to give Him.

Men have been trying through all the ages, and in walks of life, to avoid giving an equivalent for what they receive, but they have always ended by paying the price with accrued interest and collection charges added.

The world may not see all the equivalents you get for what you give, but you will know every one of them.

You may pay out a thousand cents in the way of service and substance and apparently never receive any return. But suddenly one of those cents, which has been drawing compound interest, will come back as a two-dollar gold piece.

Your reward may not always come as soon as you expect, but keep on giving more service. This I know sometimes very discouraging. But nevertheless remember this, when payment is delayed interest accrues to your credit.

A business man of note makes this statement: "Give the fair deal liberally, unfailingly and without a shadow of doubt as to the outcome, and you will be given the deal, 'good measure, pressed down, shaken together, running over.'"

If you don't give the fair deal, this universal principle of equivalency will exact it from you, and it will charge a ruinously high fee for its services.

Have you given Christ a "fair deal?"

Are you giving the Church a "fair deal?"

The fair deal becomes effective in proportion to the real sacrifices we make, and is not a question of how much time or money we have to spare.

The things that we can ill spare carry part of ourselves and are alive.

Read God's Word earnestly and prayerfully and let Him show you what you should give as a fair deal. Then give it, and give it cheerfully, and you will be happy in so doing and will realize that you, also, are getting a fair deal.—H. J. Jepson, in United Presbyterian.

INDEBTEDNESS ON AUTOMOBILES

It seems that many are driving cars which they do not own. According to figures recently published 500,000,000.00 are owed on cars bought by the people of this country. That is a huge sum of money. Someone has figured it out that if this stupendous sum should be equally divided among the people for payment—figuring on a population of 118,000,000—each man, woman and child in the United States would be under obligation to pay a little over $12.72. There are at present a total of 23,125,000 automobiles in use in this country. That makes one car for almost every five persons, which means that there are more cars than there are occupant-owned homes.

But there is a larger debt than this resting upon us which is to give the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ to the world, and the deplorable thing about it is that we are making very little effort to pay it. You have paid, or will pay for your car, but what are you doing about this other debt?

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCHES, UNITED AND UNITED STATES

Rev. G. A. Wilson, D.D.

Through its 1926 Assembly the Southern Presbyterian Church invited the United Presbyterian Church to confer organic union. The invitation was accepted. In 1928 a proposed basis of union was submitted to the assemblies of the two denominations. Both deferred action, notifying their Presbyteries that suggestions would be welcome and calling upon their membership to pray for guidance. Certain data on these two denominations is herewith submitted in the hope that it may be helpful information and with no intent of arguing either for or against union. The information is derived from 1928 minutes of the two Assemblies.

are in Southern territory. The Southern Church occupies a solid block of states; the U. P. Church in its main strength occupies an immediately adjoining solid block of states, the combined church would occupy in force an extended solid block, New York to Texas, Florida to the Lakes, Virginia to Kansas, with respectable strength in New England and on the Pacific Coast and scattering forces in other states.

The seven states of largest membership in the Combined Church would be: Pennsylvania, 85,411; North Carolina, 73,389; Virginia, 62,417; Texas, 47,593; South Carolina, 30,583; Georgia, 29,217; and Ohio, 27,635. New York, next largest of northern states would have 12,451 and Louisiana, smallest of Southern states, 13,419.

The matter of overlapping warrants special analysis of nine states and District of Columbia where both denominations now have churches. Fortunately there is Oklahoma is home mission territory for both churches. The U. P. churches are: Tulsa, 400 members; Guthrie, 92; Oklahoma City, 51; Roosevelt (2), 82 and 52. One Southern church, 294 members, is in Oklahoma City and one, 59 members, is in Tulsa. There are none in Guthrie or Roosevelt.

The four Texas U. P. churches are all small and are in Corsicana, Eureka and San Antonio.

The Missouri U. P. strength clusters about three centers: St. Louis in the east, Kansas City in the west and Tarkio in the northwest. St. Louis has four U. P. churches, 362,340,303, and 249 members; and five U. S. churches, 300,639, 64, 50, and 48 members. Kansas City, two U. P. churches, 301 and 48 members; five U. S. churches, 763, 506, 494, 300, and 150 members. Two U. P. churches are in Tarkio and one in St. Joseph; no U. S. church in Tarkio and four in St. Joseph. Across the lines in Illinois, Iowa and Kansas, are U. P. churches and U. S. churches are in Missouri adjacent to these centers. Satisfactory union would probably show more immediate benefits in Missouri than in any other state.

White Educational Institutions.

The United Church has two Theological Seminaries, Xenia, in St. Louis, and Pittsburgh, in Pittsburgh. Xenia with 134 years continuous service is the oldest seminary in America. The Southern Church has four Theological Seminaries, Union, in Virginia, Columbia, in Georgia, Austin, in Texas, and Louisville in Kentucky. Xenia reports 60 students, in Pittsburgh 86, Union 134, Columbia 73, Austin 44, Louisville 83.

The United Church has five colleges: Westminster in Pennsylvania, Muskingum in Ohio, Monmouth in Illinois, Tarkio in Missouri, and Sterling in Kansas. The Southern Church has 19 colleges, 12 junior colleges, 12 Secondary schools, and 13 Mountain schools. Missouri is the only state with institutions of both churches, Tarkio college U. P. and Westminster College U. S., being in that state. Davis and Elkins in northern West Virginia is close to U. P. territory and in the event of union might draw increased support from the Pittsburgh and Wheeling areas. The other Southern institutions would benefit but little from union—perhaps a strengthened appeal to some individual philanthropists and possibly some additional students. The Mountain School has a national appeal, tying these institutions up with the U. P. Church would very materially enlarge their field of support. The U. P. institutions would gain little or nothing in support from the South.

Negro American Work.

There is striking similarity in the Negro Work of the two denominations. Both are essentially altruistic, emphasizing the aim of ministering rather than of recruiting; both stress education; both conduct the work as a department under Home Missions; both segregate the negro churches into courts of their own, the U. P. in the Presbytery of Tennessee and the U. S. in the Synod of Snedecor Memorial. In the event of union the U. P. churches would probably be put into the Synod of Snedecor Memorial. The U. P. Negro Presbytery reports 14 churches and 1138 members; the U. S. Negro Synod reports 54 churches and 1,582 members.

The U. P. churches are located: In Virginia 3, Chase City, Jeffries, and Norfolk; North Carolina 2, Henderson and Townsville; Tennessee 3, Knoxville, Athens, Riceville; Alabama 5, all in Wilcox County. The U. S. churches are scattered over North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Texas.

All of the U. P. churches have grown out of schools maintained by the church. In some instances, notably Norfolk and Athens, the school work has been turned over to the state. In others elementary school work is still conducted by the Church, but with the intention of turning it over to the state as soon as practicable. Three church High schools will be permanently maintained at Chase City, Va., Henderson, N. C., and Camden, Ala. At Knoxville, Tenn., is a standard college, well equipped, endowed, manned by a strong faculty, and doing a splendid work.

The Southern Church at Tuscaloosa, Ala., a Theological or Religious Training School for Men, with industrial features, and a Religious Training School for Women.

The Combined Church would thus have a Negro Educational System consisting of a Theological and Religious Training School, a Standard College, three Standard High Schools. Union, if satisfactory, would very materially increase the strength of the Southern Church among the Negroes.

Foreign Work.

Both denominations have vigorous Foreign Missions in entirely distinct fields, the U. P. in India, Egypt, the Sudan, and Abyssinia; the U. S. in China, Japan, Korea, Congo, Mexico and Brazil. The U. P. Church reports 583 foreign workers, 2,240 native workers, 63,165 communicants. Total disbursements, U. P. $1,357,367; U. S., $1,529,729. The United Church organizes foreign Synods and Presbyteries affiliated with the American Church; the Southern Church encourages the development of native courts distinct from the American organization. This difference in policy may account in part for the smaller number of communicants reported by the Southern Church.

th denominations now have churches in nine states and the District of Columbia. The United Church has churches in 33 states and the Southern in 17 states. The United denomination would have churches in 40 states and the District of Columbia. Neither church is represented in eight states: Arizona, Maine, Minnesota, Montana, Nevada, New Hampshire, North Dakota and Utah. Where the representation is small, four having but one church each, Connecticut at Thompsonville, Delaware at Wilmington, South Dakota at Brooklines, and Wyoming at Worthington.

The New England churches are in two Presbyteries, and of New York: Boston having the congregations Massachusetts, Connecticut and Rhode Island, and Vermont having the congregations of Vermont. Total New England strength: 24 congregations, 4,717 members. In New Jersey's 11 churches, 1,764 members, are in the New York metropolitan area. New York City, proper, has churches, 303 members; Brooklyn 7, 1081; Philadelphia 21, 7,219; Pittsburgh, 32, 15,767.

The Pacific States have two Synods, California and Oregon, 63 churches, 10,050 members.

The bulk of the U. P. strength is in the solid tier of the north of and immediately adjoining Southern territory. Three states, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and New York, have 65 of the 173,937 members and 367 of the 885 churches. Four states on the border, Indiana, Illinois, Kansas, and Missouri, have more than half of the remaining churches and members, while 36 churches, 6,137 members little if any competitive overlapping at present; probable future development of competition is worth thinking about. The present question is not so much competition as united front.

This phase is strikingly illustrated in the Washington, D. C. situation. That city has one U. P. church of 726 members, and two U. S. churches of 691 and 379 members. The U. P. church belongs to the Presbytery of Philadelphia, Synod of New York, and the U. S. churches to the Presbytery of Potomac, Synod of Virginia. Would it be better to have the three churches in one Presbytery, one Synod, and one Assembly?

Maryland has two U. P. churches in the city of Baltimore, 301 and 136 members, Presbytery of Philadelphia; and four U. S. churches in Baltimore, ranging from 725 to 116 members, and nine churches, U. S. outside the city, all in Potomac Presbytery. Combined the denomination would have six churches and 1657 members in Baltimore. Pennsylvania has one U. S. church, at Warfordsburg.

West Virginia has six U. P. churches, 1236 members, in the Wheeling Panhandle, a section of the state not reached by the Southern Church.

In Kentucky, Tennessee and North Carolina are U. P. Mountain Mission churches, located in the heart of Southern Mountain Mission territory. Combining these mission churches with those in Southern presbyteries, support coming from North and South, had obvious advantages.

CHURCH NEWS

PRESBYTERIAN ORPHANS' HOME. Weekly News Letter

Herewith is our weekly news letter from the Presbyterian Orphans' Home, Barium Springs. Our pulpit in Little Joe's Church has been supplied by our neighbors during the illness of our pastor, Rev. W. C. Brown. On Sunday morning of the 20th, Rev. J. H. Carter, of Taylorsville, preached a sermon on Samson. Mr. Carter's methods of handling his subject were most unique and interesting. So much so that instead of the congregation becoming sleepy, everybody seemed to be on tip toes to catch all that he said.

From the time the young lion made the mistake of roaring at Samson, to the final destruction of the Philistines' temple by the blind giant, we lived back in the time of the Judges.

Mr. Carter has promised to give us a series of lectures on the geography of the Old Testament and we are looking forward with much pleasure to the time of hearing him again.

Mr. C. T. Carr will conduct a teachers' training class in our Sunday School commencing the 27th. We know from past experience that this will be a very entertaining and profitable week.

January has been a very busy month in all the departments of the Orphanage. It is a time when we usually have our yearly check-up of the physical welfare of the children, but no account of the present multitude of flu patients this has been postponed to February.

Flu has stopped almost every activity except basketball. We still have enough well players to hold up our reputation. There has been an average of about forty sick with influenza since early in December. Right at the present time there is a larger proportion of grown folks sick than children. Four school teachers are at present off the job. This may be the reason why the children got well so quick.

With kindest regards,

Joseph B. Johnston.

SEASON OF PRAYER FOR MECKLENBURG PRESBYTERY

Mecklenburg Presbytery will meet in adjourned session at 10 o'clock A. M. on Monday, February 4th, 1929, at First Presbyterian Church, Charlotte, N. C., "for the purpose of prayer to God for His guidance and blessing upon the work of His Church at large and upon that committed to this Presbytery, and that He may lead us into a larger and more faithful service in every department of His work, including the preparation for and carrying out of the Every Member Canvass."

Rev. S. B. McLean, Presbyterial Secretary of Stewardship, was appointed by the Moderator to conduct the service and he has arranged for several short inspirational addresses on this occasion, which will be delivered between periods of intercession.

It is hoped that ministers of the Presbytery and representatives of Churches will attend this meeting. All others who may wish to attend will be welcome, ladies as well as men.

FIRE AT BLUE RIDGE ACADEMY

We, at Blue Ridge Academy, at The Hollow, Patrick County Va., are mourning the loss of the principal's cottage by fire, on January 23, 1929. Just as the morning periods were closing, some one came in and announced that "Mr. Fultz's home is burning." Everyone went in a hurry. But, when the only hope of water is one poor little well with a not very strong pump, you can surely realize how helpless we felt. Luckily there was not much wind. At first the wind was blowing towards the dormitory and every one centered their attention on it; but, the wind changed and the dormitory was not harmed. Thanks to the heroic work of our neighbors, our girls and our school boys, much of Mr. Fultz's stuff was saved. The school records, among the other things were carried into a room in the new building. The Fultz family are divided up among the neighbors, and we are all thankful that not one single person was hurt in any way. Now, the Fultz family lost practically all of their clothes, and a great many small things that they prize. Russel Inscore, the only boy in the boarding department, lost everything except the clothes he wore. He fought fire like a good fellow. Last night he said, "If I had a comb I could fix my hair." He was promptly furnished a comb, a brush and some other personal things, but just then his mother telephoned for him to come home for a few days. Oh! Friends, if you could know the helpless feeling that comes when a house that could have been saved, if we had had any way to get water to it, maybe you'd understand the situation. Our well furnishes water for at least six families. Yesterday afternoon we were compelled to send to the spring, which is at least 300 yards down hill, for water. Carrying water up hill for three hundred yards soon gets "old" as these people say.

Truly, somewhere there is some one who will help furnish some help toward getting some other means of supplying our school with water. Who will be the first to help; first: rebuild the principal's home? and then, to help get a water supply for the school?

It is raining this morning, another blessing, for fire left on the site of the "Manse," as we all called the building, was a menace to the other buildings.

Help is needed at B. R. A. We are more than grateful for all that has been done, but this is another call. A new need which arose only yesterday. May God open your hearts and your pocket books.

The Hollow, Va. Margaret Ewing.

MEMORIAL OF DR. CRAIG

At Reidsville, N. C., on January 6th, before communion service was entered upon, a beautiful oil painting portrait of the late Rev. D. I. Craig, D. D., was presented to the congregation of this church by the children of Dr. Craig. Rev. M. S. Huske, in behalf of the children, made the presentation, and Ruling Elder, Francis Womack, in well chosen words, accepted the gift.

It was particularly appropriate that this painting should be placed in the session room of the church, which is a visible representation of Dr. Craig's spiritual ministry in this town. For 43 years he was active pastor and for four years pastor-emeritus, spending his whole ministerial lifetime in this community. It was his only pastorate.

HONORING REV. P. W. WILSON

Resolutions of Respect were adopted by the general association of Charlotte ministers, at the departure of Rev. Parks W. Wilson, who has given up his charge at West Avenue Church, Charlotte, N. C., and has gone to Memphis, Tenn., to be co-pastor with Dr. A. B. Curry, at the Second Presbyterian Church of Memphis.

Resolved by the Christian Ministers' Association of Charlotte and Mecklenburg County, on January 25, 1929, as follows:

1st. That this association feels deeply the departure from Charlotte, N. C., to Memphis, Tenn., of our friend and brother, Rev. Parks W. Wilson, who has been for a little more than two years the faithful and much beloved pastor of the West Avenue Presbyterian Church, of Charlotte, and who, in his short stay here, has made a lasting impress upon this congregation which he served so ably and well that they were unwilling to accept his resignation, making kind but earnest protest against it before the Presbytery, and not only were his influence and impress felt in this congregation but also by many others here with whom he came in contact, including members of this association who had come to know and appreciate him.

2nd. We regard Mr. Wilson as a young man of splendid natural gifts, which he delights to use in the service of his Master; clear in his thinking, happy and forceful in expression, of good presence, attractive in personality, with a wide vision of service, he is a preacher of much power, well qualified, in our opinion, to do a large work, and we believe that, in the providence of God, there lies ahead of him a future of great promise and usefulness.

3rd. His presence and companionship among us will be sorely missed but as he feels, and we believe, that God is leading him into a new field of endeavor, we bid him God-speed, the while cherishing memories of him both pleasant and inspiring, and we commend him to the full confidence and esteem of the congregation of the Second Presbyterian Church, of Memphis, Tenn., which he goes to serve, with every good wish for the highest and best success in the service of his Lord, and for the health and happiness of himself and his good wife.

4th. Copies of these resolutions will be furnished to Rev. Parks W. Wilson, the secretary of the association, the daily papers of Charlotte and the Presbyterian Standard and to the session of the Second Presbyterian Church of Memphis, Tenn.

S. B. McLean, Chairman.
D. G. Phillips, Committee.

NORTH CAROLINA.

King's Mountain.—When our pastor, Dr. McElroy, preached our Christmas sermon he was assisted in the service by his two sons, Rev. W. P. McElroy and Rev. H. S. McElroy, Jr. One son also spoke to the men's Bible class that morning and the other son preached for his father at the evening service. We were glad to have the three McElroy preachers from the same family in our pulpit at the same time.

Last Sabbath a congregational meeting was held for the election of additional deacons. The following were elected: Carl Davidson, Joseph Neisler, John Ramseur and Charles Stowe.

Grover.—On December 23, 1928, the pageant, "The Prisoners of Hope," was presented at the evening service under the direction of Mrs. Frank Hambricht with Miss Elizabeth Dendy presiding at the piano. The program was well rendered and highly enjoyed by an appreciative audience. A liberal offering was received for ministerial relief. Friday night previous, the Woman's Auxiliary, served a supper for Mr. C. F. Harry, given for his employees and friends. There were more than 150 present to enjoy the feast of good things and the Auxiliary cleared more than $125. After the banquet an enjoyable feature was the distribution of gifts to the employees. Each of the pastors present, Revs. J. T. Dendy and W. E. Firchorn and Dr. J. H. Henderlite (not present) received gifts also. The pastor of the church was presented with a handsome sum of money by the congregation. The following Sabbath the ladies of the Bible Class presented their teacher, Mrs. J. T. Dendy, with a large gold piece "as a small token of their appreciation of service rendered in classroom, C. E. and Auxiliary." On Monday afternoon, Santa Claus paid his usual visit to the Sabbath school and left all feeling good. On the following Thursday night, the Christian Endeavorers had a very enjoyable "old-time pound party."

VIRGINIA.

Hampden Sydney College—Among the recent privileges enjoyed by the members of our congregation have been messages by the Rev. Graham Gilmer of Lynchburg, Virginia, and the Rev. Dr. E. E. Lar of our mission work in Brazil. Both of these brethren brought interesting and helpful messages, and they are always warmly received on their visits to our people.

The work at Worsham Chapel has been greatly quickened by a series of services in which the pastor Dr. W. T. Williams, was assisted by the Rev. T. V. DeVane, pastor of Bethlehem and Douglas churches. Mr. DeVane preached most helpful sermons at there were a number of professions.

College church has installed a pipe organ. It was used in our worship for the first time on the third Sunday in January. The placing of the organ has been made possible largely by the generosity of a warm friend of College church. The students, as well as the congregation, are very enthusiastic over the help which the organ will afford to our service.

Our pastor, Dr. W. Twyman Williams, is scheduled for an address before the students of Princeton Theological Seminary the latter part of the month.

Owing to the indisposition of our pastor the pulpit was occupied on the third Sunday of January by the Rev. Dr. Asa D. Watkins, of the English department of Hampden Sydney College. Dr. Watkins is one of the strong, thoughtful, and interesting preachers of our assembly, and we are always grateful for his finished and stimulating messages.

Due to the generosity of one of the most esteemed trustees of the college, our church has been supplied with an ample number of copies of the new Hymn Book. This is greatly appreciated by all who attend College Church.

ALABAMA.

Perdue Hill—Information recently brought light through the Presbyterian Historical Society, Montreat, N. C., shows that the Perdue Hill church is nearing its 102nd birthday, March 8, 1929, as it was enrolled by Alabama Presbytery on that date, 1827. A historical sketch was prepared and a resurvey of it given at the morning hour of worship at Perdue Hill, January 20. This church is older than 4 churches in either Montgomery or Mobile and probably one of the half dozen in the state of Alabama first to be recognized as regularly organized. It began as "Claiborne" on the bluffs of the Alabama river, the location being changed to Perdue Hill about 1881 and the name changed in 1887.

Bell's Landing—Ruling elders elected in Bell's Landing church, December 16 were Mr. H. R. Schurt and Dr. Edmund R. Cannon. Deacons chosen at the same time were Messrs. Thomas Kennedy, Hunter McDuffie and Albert S. McCants.

Scotland.—On the fifth Sabbath in December, Charles H. McMillan and Mr. P. C. Fountain were elected elders of Scotland church, with Mr. Davids Smith as deacon. Rev. T. C. Delaney is pastor of both Bell's Landing and Scotland churches.

MISSOURI

Lee's Summit—The First Presbyterian Church of this place was much benefited by a special revival effort made recently. It was conducted by the pastor, Rev. H. L. Saunders, who sought the toning of the faith of the Church. It proved to be a meeting of deep spiritual import. There were ten confessions to the church. Three came on restatement of faith, one by letter, and six on confession and baptism. A fine spirit of fellowship and co-operation with other churches of the city gave impetus to the meeting.

OKLAHOMA

Idabel—This church, of which Rev. S. Addison McElroy is pastor, has just received a father and two sons on confession of their faith, the sons receiving the ordinance of baptism. A special meeting, to be held by Rev. Dr. T. A. M. Thomas, beginning on the sixth of this month, had to be called off on account of the prevalence of influenza in the town. Dr. McElroy was confined to the house for several weeks but has recovered.

WEST VIRGINIA

Lewisburg—Davis and Stuart Home and School announces another gift of one thousand dollars. It was made by Mr. S. A. Scott, of Macdonald, W. Va., and duplicating the gift of Mrs. Scott as announced last month. This will be applied to furnishing the cottage, and affords us a very great pleasure to know that this has been made possible by the gift of Mr. Scott. We have been greatly pleased in the attitude of our many friends, some of whom, living not away, repeated their former gifts at Thanksgiving sending in liberal donations of canned goods and other food supplies. One special feature which we appreciate and enjoyed was a "Drive-In" by the Auxiliary from Sinks Grove, Mt. Pleasant Church; Auxiliary of Clifton Church, at Maxwelton, and Hillsdale Church, at Pickaway. The Mt. Pleasant friends spent some hours here and served dinner all present in the Home, besides the ladies made a number of comforts for the children's cots, picked up reclaimed material for the purpose. The other friends came during the "flu" epidemic, and we were not able to entertain them, very much to our regret. Aside from these, we received a number of shipments and other donations sent in, which are of much importance and value in maintaining the Home. We only hope these kind friends may know how very much we appreciate these things, and especially the thoughtfulness prompting this kindness.

THIS IS OUR TASK THE LORD HAS GIVEN US THROUGH HIS CHURCH—HE CHALLENGES OUR NOBLEST ENDEAVOR IN THIS SERVICE

GEORGIA

Commerce—Rev. and Mrs. H. R. Foster arrived in Commerce Wednesday, January 9. They were delightfully surprised to find all of their furniture arranged in the manse and the pantry shelves full.

Our church has been vacant for several months and we are delighted to have someone to lead the work of our church again. The prospects for our church are very good and we are trusting for God's blessings in the coming years.

On Sunday morning we had our first service of the year. In spite of the cold day we had a good attendance. Special music was rendered by the choir. The pastor preached an interesting sermon, using as his text, "We are the Lord's," after which communion service was held.

In the evening the other churches in the city met with us in a welcome service. Special music was rendered by Mrs. W. B. Price and Mrs. Shankle and the quartet from the Baptist Church. Short talks of welcome were given by Dr. Wrighton, pastor of the Baptist Church and Mr. Marvin Shankle in behalf of the Methodist pastor and congregation, after which the pastor delivered an appropriate New Year's sermon.

Mr. and Mrs. Foster came to us from Birmingham, Ala. Mr. Foster is a graduate of the University of North Carolina and of Columbia Seminary, graduating from the seminary in the class of 1923. His first work was at Carrollton, Ala., for one year and a half. He is then pastor of the Marianna, Fla., Presbyterian church, serving that church two and one-half years, or early two years he acted as stated supply for airview and North Birmingham, before coming to the present field.

TEXAS

Waco—Trinity Presbyterian Church—A congregational meeting was held in this church on Sunday morning, January 13, of which Rev. D. B. Gregory, the present supply, was moderator. Twelve additional members were elected and arrangements made for their ordination and installation at an early date. This gives the church a diaconate of twenty splendid men and a session of ten solid and conservative men. Several new members have been received recently and others are expected to join at an early date.

Austin—Meeting of Synod of Texas—The Synod of Texas will meet in Austin First Church on adjourned session, Tues. Feb. 5th, at 9 a. m. Two matters of vital importance will come before this body at this meeting. One is the Educational policy of the Synod, on reports of the committee on survey, Dr. W. A. McLeod, Chairman. The other will be the evangelistic plans, upon report of the committee, headed by Rev. A. M. Mousol. These two committees will meet in Austin on the afternoon of Monday, February 11. The survey committee will meet in Annex, evangelistic committee at the seminary.

This meeting of the Synod will probably be brief, but from indications will be largely attended.

The University Presbyterian Church, through its pastor, Dr. L. H. Wharton, has invited the members of Synod to lunch at that church at noon on February 5th. We are very grateful for this splendid cooperation volunteered by this church.

Austin, First Church—Rev. Dr. S. M. Tenney, curator of the Historical Foundation of our Assembly, and located at Montreat, writing Mr. L. K. Smoot, in acknowledgement of a copy of Volume 10, Bulletin of this Church, among other things says: "We are grateful to you and the session of the First Presbyterian Church, South, of Austin, Texas, for copy of 'Bulletin of the First Presbyterian Church, Vol. 10, 1926-1928,' which has just been received. The volume has been listed, and will be duly catalogued. We now have all volumes of the Bulletin, and are very proud of them. In accepting this last volume, I beg through you to say to the First Presbyterian Church, they can hardly realize that they have done a splendid service not only in preserving these Bulletins but in putting them into this permanent form and filing them with us. So far as I have been able to ascertain your church took the initiative in this service. I have been unable to find one single church North or South that has been so thoughtful as to think that in these bulletins we are preserving the 'diary' of the church, as a church, and keeping for future students of the church a picture of the everyday life of the Church. We have led many organizations to follow the course of your church, among them that of Dr. R. F. Campbell, Asheville. Thank the Brethren."

Despite prevalent sickness, the Presbytery's Training School, this month, was successful. There were 114 enrolled; 33 of these being from the church.

TENNESSEE

Nashville, First Church—Dr. Vance welcomed 39 new members into the fellowship of the church at the communion service on Sunday morning, January 13th.

A school of missions is being held this month under the leadership of Rev. Lewis H. Lancaster, assistant pastor, with a splendid attendance. A number of missionaries at home on furlough have been secured as speakers at these meetings. The series will climax on February 3rd, when a special offering will be taken for the cause.

G. Pearcy, Secretary.

A Word to Those Who Use Our Radio Programs.

You have noticed the similarity of these programs. In view of this fact we shall publish two programs, interchangeably. Please preserve the copies of each so that you may have a complete list. We shall publish any changes as they occur, but for the sake of space may omit the programs so as to save space for other things. Just save your copies of the programs.

GROUP MEETING IN CENTERVILLE

A very interesting and helpful Auxiliary Group Conference was held in Centerville, Miss., November 20, with all the churches in the district represented except two.

The meeting was opened by singing of hymn, followed by prayer.

Mrs. C. L. Dewey, of Centerville, gave a very cordial welcome to those present. This was responded to by the chairman.

We were very fortunate in having Miss Marie Gilbert of Stanton, one of our Synodical workers for the Bible hour.

The study was from the book of Judges, and very splendid indeed. This was followed by "Why Should a Church Paper Be in Every Home?" by Mrs. Tait of Natchez. Mrs. A. J. Foster, our Presbyterial president, spoke on "The Country Church and the Auxiliary," and following that explained the auxiliary's new standard. We then adjourned with prayer by Mrs. Lea.

During the noon hour a delightful lunch was served by the hostess church, at the manse. The afternoon session was opened by the singing of a hymn, followed by prayer, by Mrs. C. G. Bruce, of Liberty. Mrs. T. G. Lea gave a very splendid talk on "Our White Cross Work."

Mrs. Foster continued the subject, with definite instructions, as to what to send and how, explaining also the duties of the Foreign Mission secretaries in the absence of Mrs. Fields who was ill.

The Presbyterial budget was discussed and news was gladly received that the girls' dormitory at French Camp was now completely paid for and that our Presbyterial quota would therefore be slightly reduced. A plea was made for rags for Rev. Kelly Unger for use in the leper hospital, where he is laboring.

The Auxiliary Birthday Party discussed and explained.

The Chairman gave information as to where the literature, for carrying out the programs on the various phases of our churches work, may be obtained. Meeting was closed by the singing of "Blest Be the Tie" and prayer by Mrs. Woodson of Centerville.

Bess H. Turnipseed, District Chairman.

THROUGH OUR EFFORTS OF LAST YEAR—

We are indeed thankful that God heard our prayers, honored our special efforts and used our gifts to avert "the cut," thus keeping the work from going backward.

But let us remember that this secured no enlargement of the work on the foreign field. There are still unreached multitudes. The call for re-enforcements is urgent. Yet our gifts this year have decreased. What is your answer to God's command?

Forward!

Why? Christ's command: "Go ye", Our promise: "We will." At the Birmingham Assembly we promised God and man to assume the responsibility for the mission fields that are now ours.

Where? In six countries; China, Japan, Korea, Africa, Brazil, Mexico. We have not kept up with the increase of population. The number of people in our six fields is much larger than when we assumed the burden and it is increasing every year.

How? Going in person, a few can. Going through money, nearly everyone can. Going through prayer, everyone can.

When? Now! Why not now? What is our excuse? Why falter? We have expensive churches at home—not even chapels abroad.

What are we waiting for? Many young lives are waiting to be sent. There is no lack of recruits. We are the richest nation in the world, living in luxury—probably never will have more money.

Are we not putting ourselves first?

The Reward.

It is only to the "going" person or church that this promise is made.

"Go ye—and lo, I am with you always."

Lesson for February 10th.

REPENTANCE AND FAITH

Is. 1:10-20; Ezek. 18:20-23, 27-32; Mk. 2:1-12; Lk. 3:1-14; 15:11-24; Act 2:32-39; Heb. 11:1-10.
Print Lk. 15:11-24; Acts 2:32-39.

We have so far dealt in our present course with God, who is our heavenly Father; sin, which separates us from God; Jesus who offered to save men from their sins; the Holy Spirit which continues His work in our hearts; the Holy Scriptures which brings us into contact with the Spirit.

We begin now to deal with the Christian life itself, man's part in the salvation which God has offered through Jesus Christ, that salvation which is revealed in the Scriptures, and applied through the Holy Spirit. We have to do this week with the first two steps which man must take if he is to enjoy that salvation, repentance and faith.

Following the same general plan which we have followed in the other lessons of this course we will discuss four questions which come naturally, almost inevitably to our minds: (1) What is repentance? (2) Why should we repent? (3) What is faith? (4) Why is faith necessary? We urge you again to follow out the study first for yourselves, reading all the passages assigned and seeking to answers these and similar questions that come to your mind, before you read the exposition that follows. This may seem a waste of time to some of you, but what one reads is never as valuable as what one discovers himself, and to read some one else's discoveries first dries up one's own power of discovery.

I.—What Is Repentance?

What does the word mean to you? What did John the Baptist mean when he came preaching in the wilderness of Judea: Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand (Mt. 3:1), and what did Jesus mean when He began His ministry with the same words (4:17)? If a man commits a crime and is punished for that crime and regrets the crime because of the punishment which it has brought is that repentance? If a boy off at school allows an evil habit to take hold of him, and feels the pangs of conscience every time he succumbs, but does not amend his life, is that repentance? What sort of repentance is it that the Bible has in mind?

If we turn to the O. T. we find that there are two words used to describe the experience. One word meant originally to pant, to sigh, to groan. Naturally it came to lament or to grieve. Job used this word when he said after God's great address to him: I abhor myself and repent in dust and ashes (Job. 42:6) We conclude then that in genuine repentance there will be sorrow for sin. We note however that this word is used very, very rarely to describe God's repentance, as in Gen. 6:6; Jonah 3:10.

The more common word in the O. T. is generally translated 'turn' or 'return'. "It is used extensively by the prophets, and makes prominent the idea of a radical change in one's attitude toward sin and God. It implies a conscious moral separation, and a personal decision to forsake sin and to enter into fellowship with God. It is employed extensively with reference to man's turning away from sin to righteousness (Dt. 4:30; Neh. 1:9; Ps. 7:12; Jer. 3:14). To repent then according to the O. T. means much more than to have even a genuine sorrow for sin. It means to turn from sin unto God. That was the sort of repentance which the O. T. prophets demanded of Israel.

Now we come to the N. T. we find that there are also two words there which describe the experience of repentance. The first word corresponds to the first word described above. It expresses the emotional aspect of repentance. It means literally to have a feeling of care, to have concern or regret. The feeling indicated by the word however may issue in genuine repentance or it may degenerate into mere remorse (Mt. 21: 29-32; 27:3) Judas we note repented only in the sense of regret, remorse, and not in the sense of the abandonment of sin. If this feeling of regret is all there is no genuine repentance in the N. T. sense.

The word commonly used in the N. T. for repentance signifies 'to have another mind,' to change the opinion or purpose with regard to sin. It is equivalent to the O. T. word—'turn.' This was the word employed by John the Baptist and by Jesus when they came with the cry: Repent ye, for the Kingdom of God is at hand. It was also the word used by the Apostles (Mt. 3:2; Mk. 1:15; Acts 2:38).

To sum it all we may say that repentance in the Bible sense includes three elements. 1st, an intellectual element. We must recognize the perfection of God's requirements, the awfulness of sin, the fact that we ourselves have fallen below God's standards. 2nd, an emotional element, there is a genuine sorrow for sin, not merely for the consequences of sin. 3rd, a volitional element, an actual turning from sin unto God. All three elements are present in any genuine repentance, but it is the last which is the most important.

Isaiah for example calls upon the people to repent, and explains what he means: "Wash you, make you clean, put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes; cease to do evil; learn to do well; seek justice; relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, plead for the widow." (1:16-17). We do well to note that Isaiah understands by turning away from sin unto God. He doesn't mean regular church attendance, or the practice of daily devotions—as a matter of fact, he says that God is weary with the peoples' religious observance, he will not hear their prayers (1:11-15) because there has been no genuine reformation of life. He doesn't demand simply an improvement in one's personal moral life, the forsaking of vice, though of course that is included. He demands that men shall cease to be indifferent and selfish, that they shall seek justice (in the business realm, the social realm, the political realm), that they shall relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, plead for the widow.

John the Baptist also, insists that men bring forth the fruits of repentance (Mt. 3:8). The people asked him: What then must we do? John said, share your goods with those who are in need. The business men asked Him, Teacher what must we do? John said, Extort no more than that which is appointed you. And he gave similar appropriate directions to the soldiers.

What does it mean to repent? It means to turn away from sin, evil habits, impure living, ugliness of temper, selfishness of every form, indifference to the needs of others. It means it may be more consideration for our servants, more faithfulness in our work, more honesty in our business more fairness to our employees, more help for the needy, more effort to establish justice in all the relations between man and man. It means to turn away from sin unto God. This aspect of repentance has never been illustrated more beautifully than in Jesus' parable of the Prodigal Son. We repent when we turn away from our sin and say "I will arise and go unto my Father."

If Isaiah, or John the Baptist, or Jesus were to come again and call on men to repent; and students and housewives, and lawyers and doctors, and ministers, and business men, and politicians were to say: What then must I do, what would the answer be? What repentance do we need to make?

II.—Why is Repentance Necessary?

We have been thinking so far of the meaning of repentance. But some one may ask why we need to bother about repentance? Why should we turn away from our sins. We do not need to deal with this question at any great length.

1. There is the testimony of the great spiritual leaders of the race. The men of God who move through the pages of the Holy Scriptures, all the saints who have followed them through the ages agree on the importance of this step, that there can be no real peace of conscience, no enduring fellowship with God, no final salvation or deliverance from the eternal consequences of sin, unless there is repentance. Isaiah (1:10-20) said formal worship was of no avail, even prayer was of no avail, unless there was a genuine repentance. Ezekiel (18:20-23, 27-32) declared, the soul that sinneth it shall die. There is no possible escape from the consequences of sin, unless there is repentance. John came proclaiming the necessity of repentance for the enjoyment of the kingdom (Lk. 3:1-14) and Jesus took up the message (Mt. 4:17). Peter said, "Repent ye and be baptised in the name of Jesus Christ unto the remission of your sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit (Acts 2:38).

2. There is the logic of life. It is grounded in our very nature as free human beings that we can have no fellowship with God until we have turned from our sins unto Him. Hosea learned that lesson in his own bitter experience. He had a wife whom he loved, but she was unfaithful to him, Hosea found her at last in the slave market, he bought her back, and took her into his home, but he found that there could be no fellowship till his wife had a change of mind. And that was the case he pointed out between God and His people, the barrier was on the side of the people, and could be removed only by repentance. We see it illustrated again in the story of the Prodigal Son. The Father yearned over his son, but could do nothing till the son said, I will arise and go unto my father. So the Father yearns over us, but cannot receive us into His fellowship until we turn to Him. We must not think that God is angry and needs to be appeased. Paul tells us plainly that God is reconciled already, the barrier is on our part, we need to be reconciled unto Him (2 Cor. 5:14-21). Repentance is turning away from our sins unto God.

3. There are the results in experience. John tells us that if we confess our sins He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins (John 1:19). We cannot know all at once the eternal consequences of this forgiveness—but there is a peace, a joy that comes to all those who are willing to make this experiment now.

III.—Why Is Faith Necessary?

We have been dealing so far with repentance. We have spoken of its necessity and tried to understand its nature. Why must repentance be followed by faith?

1. We have the testimony of the great spiritual leaders of the race. Men of God in the Bible and out of the Bible agree that it is the second step, or rather that repentance and faith are the two sides of a single act. Repentance is a turning away from sin unto God, but faith is the new attitude that we have toward God. We hardly need to dwell upon this point. When Jesus first came into Gallilee, he said, Repent ye and believe in the Gospel (Mk. 1:15). The constant demand that he made of man was Faith. According to thy faith be it done unto thee, He said over and over again. Almost his last words were "Believe in God, believe also in Me." (John 14:1 R. V.). Paul's whole Gospel may almost be summed up in a phrase: "By grace are ye saved through Faith." Eph. 2:8-9.

2. There is the logic of life. Faith is necessary in almost all the processes of life. One cannot be successful as a business man, as a scientist, unless one has faith. In personal relationships it is even more necessary. There can be no real friendship, no deep and abiding and satisfying love unless there is faith. And religion is essentially a personal relationship between God and man. We cannot reap its satisfactions, we cannot know its power unless we have faith.

3. There are the results in experience. Men have found joy, satisfaction, peace, and strength through faith in God, faith in Jesus. It is an experiment which has never failed. That brings us to our final question:

IV.—What Is Faith?

Does a man have to have faith if he believes certain things about Jesus? If so what things? Does a man have faith if he believes that Jesus was the Son of God and bore his sins on the cross if he is constantly fearful and apprehensive, if he is selfish or impure? We discussed this question in a previous lesson, and therefore can deal with it briefly here.

1. Faith includes belief. Belief in certain things about God. And it is important too that we should believe the right things about them both. Otherwise our faith is inadequate and we cannot reap its full benefits. In His farewell discourse Jesus said: "Believe in God, believe also in Me." And then He asked them to believe certain things about God and Himself. Believe—that I go to prepare a place for you. Believe me that I am in the Father, and the Father in Me, etc. And yet this is not the sole element, or the most important element in faith. Jesus nowhere insists that men must have correct notions about Him before they can have faith. Nor do the apostles. It is dangerous and unwise for men to insist that other men have absolutely correct notions about God—Jesus—the Scriptures—evolution, etc., before they can call themselves Christians. We may wish them to have correct notions. We may see the danger, the inadequacy of their false notions, and point it out to them in love, but we dare not make faith purely an intellectual matter, or identify it with particular propositions. We are bound to realize also that a man may have right notions, and yet have no faith at all in the spiritual sense. James said that even the demons had faith of a sort, intellectual belief, but it didn't save them. He said, Faith without works is dead, and that sort of faith cannot save any man. James 2:14-26.

2. Faith requires trust. In the O. T. it means trust in God. In the N. T. it means most often trust in the Lord Jesus Christ. In the O. T. it is chiefly belief in the power and willingness of God, as revealed in the pre-Christian period to bless, help, and save, and a corresponding trust and obedience. This for example was the faith of Abraham. Of Rom. 4:9, 11, 13, 19, 20. Heb. 11:8, 9, 17, and of other O. T. characters Heb. 4:2, 11:4, 5, 7, 11, 13, 20-29. This is the kind of faith which Jesus also enjoined upon his disciples. When for example they were frightened by the tempest on the lake. Mk. 4:40. Of also Mk 11:22; Mt. 17:20, 21:21; Lk. 17:5, 6; 18:1. During the days of his flesh the faith which Jesus demanded of men was a belief in His power and willingness to do a certain thing, heal the sick, deliver from peril, forgive sins, accompanied by a committal of one's self to him in reference to the matter in question. Of Mt. 9:28-29; 8:10, 9:2, 22; 15:28; Mk. 2:5; 4:40; 10:52. Lk. 5:20, 7:9, 50; 8:25, 48, 17:19, 18:42. After his death on the cross faith came to mean the acceptance of the Gospel message concerning Jesus Christ, and the committal of one's self for salvation to him or to God as revealed in Him. To the great leaders of the church faith has not meant simply believing that Jesus is the son of God and that He died for us on the cross. It has meant trusting Him for our salvation. Luther for example says that when a man has faith "His whole life is a trusting, depending, waiting, hoping in God." Faith is the apprehending of God in Christ and trust in God. So Calvin says that faith "is a firm and solid confidence of the heart by which we securely acquiesce in the mercy of God promised to us through the Gospel." When we say that faith is trusting God for our salvation through Jesus Christ we do not mean that it is trusting that God will save us at some future date, or in some future life, it is rather a trust, or a reliance upon God to save us now.

3. Faith also means union with Christ, i. e., moral union with him. Jesus expected his disciples to believe in him, to trust Him, but he also said, If any man would come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow Me. Paul uniformly conceived of faith in Christ as issuing in a vital fellowship of the believer with Christ, which Christ becomes the compelling and controlling force in the believer's moral life. Gal. 2:20; 5:6; Rom. 6:4-5. A recent writer on John Wesley, and Wesley was one of the greatest of all followers of Jesus, says: "The common understanding of salvation is that it is a prize to be awarded in a future life to those who have believed in certain unproved miracles (Is this true?) That was not at all Wesley's idea. Faith is his conception is salvation. The moment a man has faith he is freed from doubt and fear, from sin and vicious desires. The love of God fills his heart. Faith as Wesley meant it, is not belief in this or that fact—that Jesus rose from the dead; that He walked on the water; that he turned water into wine; but love of Jesus. It is in short that profound emotional activity which psychologists have designated by the word 'identification.'—'Identification' includes many of the phenomena generally grouped under the name of sympathy. The parent identifies himself with the child, lives its life, suffers and rejoices with it. The reader of a romance identifies himself with the hero, lives with him through a series of astonishing adventures, falls in love with the heroine, and is himself the hero who wins her. When Wesley spoke of faith he meant an identification of this sort. With

INTERDENOMINATIONAL COUNCIL

The minutes of the annual meeting of the Interdenominational Council of Men's Work, together with the Membership Roll and condensed reports of some of the addresses, have just been issued by the Secretary, Dr. John W. Elliott, Philadelphia, Pa.

The Council met in the Chicago Temple, Chicago, Ill., Tuesday, December 18th, 1928 at 10 a. m. The officers of the Council for the past year were Rev. J. E. Purcell D. D., Executive Secretary of Men's Work of the Presbyterian Church, U. S., President, and Dr. John W. Elliott, Director of Social Education of the Baptist Church, North, Secretary. Dr. Purcell presided over the meetings.

A number of men of national prominence spoke on various topics related to Men's Work. Rev. G. L. Morelock, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Mr. Leon C. Palmer, General Secretary, Brotherhood of St. Andrews, Northwestern University, Rev. Fred T. Barnett, Methodist, Dr. John Timothy Stone, Prof. Norman E. Richardson, dist. Episcopal Church, South, and Dr. W. F. Weir, Presbyterian Church U. S. A., were the speakers. Each paper read was followed by a long period of discussion.

The address by Prof. Norman E. Richardson, Northwestern University, was very interesting and it was followed by a prolonged discussion. He pointed out three fallacies. First—that man uses up his educability as he be from sea to sea, and from the river to the ends of the earth," (Zech. 9:10). "All the ends of the earth shall remember and turn unto Jehovah; and all the kindreds of the nations shall worship before Thee: for the kingdom is Jehovah's, and He is the ruler over the nations." (Ps. 22:27-28). "Ask of Me, and I will give thee the nations for thine inheritance and the uttermost parts of the earth for Thy possession." Ps. 2:8). "Fear not; for behold I bring you good tidings of great joy which shall be to all people." (Lk. 2:10). "God so loved the world that He gave his only begotten son, that whosoever." (Jno. 3:16). "Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world." (Jno. 1:29). "I am the Light of the world. (Jno. 8:12). "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth will draw all men unto Myself." (Jno. 12:32). "And if any man hear My words, and believe not, I judge him not; for I came not to judge the world, but to save it." (Jno. 12:47). "For the bread of God is He which cometh down from Heaven, and giveth life unto the world." Jno. 6:33). "This is indeed the Christ, the Savior of the world." (Jno. 4:42). "That the world may believe that Thou hast sent Me." (Jno. 17:21). "As Thou hast sent Me into the world, even so have I sent them into the world." (Jno. 17:18). "God was in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself." 2 Cor. 5:19). "And he is the propitiation for our sins and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world." (1 John 2:2). "And we have seen and do testify that the Father sent the Son to be the Savior of the world." (1 Jno. 4:14). "Ye are the light of the world." (Mt. 5:14). "And the gospel of the Kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness to all the nations." (Mt. 24:14). "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." (Mk. 16:15. see Mt. 28:18-20 and Lk. 24:47). "And ye shall receive power after that the Holy Spirit is come upon you; and ye shall be witnesses unto Me both in Jerusalem and in all Judea and in Samaria and unto the uttermost part of the earth." (Acts 1:8).

Dr. John Holt Rice and World Missions

It was because the Presbyterian Church believed these passages and the two great truths in them that the General Assembly of 1831 approved the overture of Dr. Rice (Founder of Union Theological Seminary), declaring: "The Church is a Missionary Society, the object of which is the conversion of the world."

Our First Assembly.

It was this same conviction that caused the first General Assembly of the Southern Presbyterian Church to declare in 1861 to the world: "The General Assembly desires distinctly and deliberately to inscribe on our Church's banner, as she now first unfurls it to the world, in the immediate connection with the Headship of our Lord, His last command, 'Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature.'"

We Sing World Missions.

It has been this same world vision which has inspired the hymn writers of every generation to give us so many universally loved mission hymns. The compilers of our new "Presbyterian Hymnal" have given "Missions" next to the largest number given to any subject, from 389-411, twenty-three in all. The Church shows its continuing adherence to its world mission by singing so frequently and wholeheartedly the following and many other beautiful hymns:

"Ye Christian heralds go proclaim Salvation through Emmanuel's name;
To distant climes the tidings bear,
And plant the Rose of Sharon there.

"O Zion, haste, thy mission high fulfilling,
To tell to all the world that God is light;
That He who made all nations is not willing
One soul should perish, lost in shades of night."

"Jesus shall reign where'er the sun
Does his successive journey's run;
His Kingdom spread from shore to shore,
Till moons shall wax and wane no more."

reaches adulthood. Second—that the learning process in Childhood and youth is the same as in adult life. Third—that deductive logic ought to be used in teaching religion a high degree of educability at any period in life provided there is a keen interest. Second—that all teachers ought to take into account the law of individual differences. Chiefly the three types known as the motor-minded, the mystic and the traditionalists. Third—that there should be a comprehensive and balanced program.

Some of the other addresses in condensed form we plan to print on this page from time to time.

A great Laymen's Convention is to be held in connection with the Chicago Exposition in 1933 was proposed by Dr. Bert E. Smith, Methodist Episcopal Church, North. A special committee, the President, Dr. Smith, Dr. Weir and Dr. Streich, were appointed on this committee.

The Committee on Findings submitted the following report:

"The Findings Committee desires to express its conviction that these days of discussion and fellowship have contributed in a large way to the solution of the problems relating to manhood and the church. The spirit of cooperation among Christian denominations seems to be increasing, and this Council seeks to encourage the illustration of practical Brotherhood among men who claim membership in different denominational groups. The interest of laymen in this closer relationship between churches is indicated in the occasional movement to mass Protestant manhood through some independent agencies, self-created and self-perpetuated, and officially unrelated to the denominations involved. The judgment of this Council is that greater results may be secured in the interest of inter-denominational understanding and teamwork through the type of cooperation expressed in this Council. We consider the exchange of ideas and experiences to be most valuable training for leaders in men's work.

We recognize the significance of the movement for adult education and express the hope that the essential movement to organize manhood in support of the total program of the church be associated in the closest possible way with the training program of the church school.

We consider the Bible Class an essential in the training program for laymen, but inadequate as an agency through which to accomplish the service activities of the whole bunch."

Dr. Purcell extended an invitation from Atlanta, Georgia, for the 1929 Session of the Council. This was accepted and the tentative date for the meeting was set for December 13-15, 1929.

Men's Work In The Various Synods.

Some very interesting programs have been outlined recently in a number of the Synods of the Assembly for the Men-of-the-Church. The Men's Committee in the Synod of Texas met in Dallas on December 11th. Dr. W. M. Anderson, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Dallas, is Chairman of this Committee. The Committee on Men's Work of the Synod of Virginia met in Roanoke on December 14th. Mr. F. L. Temple, Roanoke, Virginia, is Chairman of this committee. The sub-committee on men's work of the Synod of North Carolina met in Greensboro, December 17th. Other Synodical committees are planning meetings in the near future. We hope from time to time to have interesting reports of the work of these committees.

Plans In Texas.

The following actions were taken by the committee: men's work in the Synod of Texas:

First meeting of Synod's committee, Men-of-the-Church.

The committee met December 11th at the First Church Dallas, at twelve o'clock, noon. Members present were: Messrs. Anderson, McCall, Coulter and Harris. By invitation of the committee, Messrs McCluskey, Tenney, Miller and H. J. Hoper were present.

The following actions were taken by the committee:

1. The committee voted to petition the Synod at its meeting in Austin in February to change the organization of this committee so as to make it consist of the Presbyterian Chairman, together with the following four members at large: W. M. Anderson, Pat Hooks, W. T. Harris, David Shepperson. W. M. Anderson to be the chairman of the committee.

2. The committee took action instructing the chairman to write a request to each Presbytery's committee on Men's Work, who would be interested especially in promoting the work, and other things being equal, who would be within easy reach of the center of the state.

3. The committee recommends that the new committee. (if constituted by the Synod) shall meet at Kerrville during the men's conference.

4. The present committee will meet only at the call of the chairman.

5. The committee voted to request Synod to set a special order from 3 to 4 o'clock on the afternoon of Wednesday of its session for a consideration of the work of the Men-of-the-Church.

6. A sub-committee consisting of Messrs. Coulter and Anderson was appointed to undertake to set up popular meetings in each Presbytery in the interest of men's work.

7. The committee voted to send letters to pastors of the larger churches which do not have the organization, expressing the committee's hope that the organization would be undertaken during the year 1929.

8. The committee requested the chairman to write a word of encouragement of the pastors of churches recently visited by Mr. Coulter.

9. The committee gave its hearty approval of Mr. Coulter's work and commends him to all the churches.

10. The committee expressed its approval of efforts to have conferences of the men in Fort Worth, Dallas, and Paris Presbyteries.

11. Plans for the Kerrville date and conference were referred to a sub-committee consisting of Messrs. Coulter, Harris, Anderson, but it was suggested that Purcell should be asked to arrange the program.

12. The Committee voted to request a definite appropriation for its work from the General Assembly's Committee on Men's Work, and instructed Messrs Coulter and Anderson to work out a budget.

OUR BIBLE IS A WORLD MISSIONS BOOK.

O. V. Armstrong.

To prove this may I first give a few testimonies from the widely known Bible students and leaders, and then show what the Bible says. I use "Missions" in its broad meaning to include both "Home" and "Foreign."

Dr. Smith Believes This.

The first chapter of Dr. Egbert W. Smith's book, "The Fire of All Nations" is: "The Bible and Missions." It begins with, "In thee all the families of the earth shall be blessed" (Gen. 12:3), he then gives fifteen proofs from the eight main divisions of the Bible and ends with, "A great multitude which no man can number of all nations and kindreds and peoples and tongues" (Rev. 7:9). If space had permitted, Dr. Smith could have given an hundred and more other Scripture passages to prove his conclusion, which is: "Thus the Bible starts to finish is inspired with a world vision, is organized with a world purpose, and marches to a world end." (By all means every one should get and read fully this incomparably splendid book by Dr. Smith. It can be had for 50c, the price of one movie ticket or gallons of gasoline!)

A Methodist Leader Affirms This.

Edmund F. Cook, a Secretary of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has written a book, "The Mystery message of the Bible." The entire 12 chapters of this fine book combine to show that the Bible is mystery from cover to cover. Here are two of Dr. Cook's comments: "We can fully appreciate the modern missionary movement only as we realize how missions runs through the whole Book, and through the thought of God's dealings with men in all ages." Again: "The Bible reveals love and Fatherhood in action. We see in this book on almost every page the outreach, the on-sweep of the redeeming love in the Father's heart."

A Baptist Writer Asserts This.

Wm. O. Carver of the Southern Baptist Seminary has written three very charming books upon this subject, "Missions in the plan of the Ages," "All the world in All the Word," and "The Bible a Missionary Message." All these three books show that the Bible is missionary from Genesis to Revelation. The following quotations are from the last of the three books: "The whole Bible just various forms of saying: 'So loved the world that He gave His only begotten son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish but have eternal life.'" Again: "Does not God love the world? Behold, My Servant, whom I uphold; My Chosen, in whom My soul delighteth; I have put My Spirit upon Him; He will bring forth justice to the nations?" (Isa. 42:1, 4). Again: "The stages of His revelation, God has been asserting His claim upon the whole human race; proclaiming His love to all mankind; urging His worshippers to declare His glory among the nations'" (Ps. 96:3).

A Student Leader Confirms This.

Hugh Martin of the "Student Christian Movement" has a book called, "The Kingdom Without Frontiers." His publishers state the purpose of this book as, "Witness of the Bible to the Missionary Purpose of the Church." Lack of space will allow only one quotation from this suggestive book: "The Bible is a missionary book not because it contains isolated texts with a missionary flavor, but because the main lines of argument run through all its volumes is the exposition, the teaching, and the gradual execution of a missionary purpose. The Bible is the Book of the world."

Great-Great Grandfather Defended This.

Certain Dr. Thos. Smyth of the Synod of South Carolina wrote and published a very unique book in 1856. It was written before the larger denominations had undertaken the work of missions on any wide scale. The title of the book is very striking both because of its content and its length. The title is: "By Whom the World to be Converted; or Christians are Christ's Agents and Agents for the Conversion of the World." The first two chapters are: "The Kingdom of God is Destined to Become Universal" and "This Unity of the Kingdom of Christ is to be brought about through the Instrumentality of Man." These two chapters, Dr. Smyth abundantly proved by many passages of Scripture. I give two of his characterizations: "Salvation for the world—has been the mission of God, from the very beginning of the world." "How can a man receive Christ, and not desire all men unto Him?"

The Bible Proves That

this paragraph out and paste it in your Bible for reference).

through the Bible, but more prominent in the Old Testament and New Testament, there runs an unbroken chain of passages plainly teaching that our world is a world missions book. I give below only a few of the many which are in the Bible. In the passage, notice how many that emphasize the two great truths responsible for all missions in all ages. First: Christianity is for the whole world and getting the whole world is the task of the Church. Second: "For from the rising of the sun even unto the going down of the same My name shall be great among the Gentiles." (Mal. 1:11). "His dominion shall

LETT LINCOLN'S RIDE WITH THE AIR MAIL

"Airplane Lett!" called Mrs. Lincoln from the kitchen door. "Right over the barn."

Lett dropped his axe and came quickly to the barn door. Looking straight up into the air, he saw a large monoplane circling slowly over the fields.

"Why, mother!" cried Lett. "I believe it's going to land!"

It certainly appeared that way, and as the astonished boy watched the machine, it straightened out for a ground run and dropped neatly to the earth. By the time it had come to a standstill and its pilot had climbed out of the cockpit, Lett was on the spot to meet him.

"Young man," said the aviator. "I want you to take me as quickly as possible to Dr. Lincoln's house. It's around here somewhere, isn't it?"

"Dr. Lincoln?" repeated Lett, in surprise. "Why—he's my father, There is his house right there."

"Good," said Captain Lee, with great relief. "Then perhaps I can get the medicine back to Bancroft Field in time to save Jim's life."

He started off for the house, Lett half-running to keep up with his lengthy strides.

"Anything wrong?" asked Lett.

"Not with me," was the reply. "But last week an airmail plane was lost in the hills two hundred miles south of here. Yesterday the plane was discovered, and Jim Barnes, the pilot, is dying in a loney log cabin three miles from the Bancroft Airport. That is, he will die unless I can bring back to his bedside a certain medicine which they say was discovered by your father."

"I know," said Lett. "But my father isn't at home."

"He isn't at home?"

Captain Lee stopped short in dismay. "No. He's away to a doctor's meeting and we don't expect him back until tomorrow. But I can get you what you want."

"But they need the doctor too!" objected the aviator.

"Maybe I can go. I know how to give the medicine."

Captain Lee looked at the boy sharply.

"You're not afraid to fly?"

"I never have flown," Lett admitted. "But I'm not afraid."

"Another question," continued the aviator. "Can you ride horseback?"

"Ever since I was two feet high."

"Then I don't see why you can't do it. Let me talk with your mother."

While Captain Lee was explaining the situation to Mrs. Lincoln, Lett was putting on a sheepskin jacket and buttoning the collar way up over his ears. He jammed an old football helmet over his head and tied the strings under his chin. In his father's office he found the medicine that was needed, and wrapping it with absorbent cotton, stuffed it carefully into his pocket.

The telephone bell rang just as he was leaving the room.

"Long distance," was what he heard as he pushed his helmet aside to get the receiver to his ear. This is Bancroft Field calling Dr. Lincoln. Is Captain Lee there?"

"Yes," answered Lett. "What is the matter please."

He listened with amazement as the voice on the other end of the line gave its stirring message. Then he dropped the receiver and ran out into the yard.

"Captan Lee," he cried, excitedly. "Jim Barnes has two hours to live! Can we make it?"

"We've got to," replied Captain Lee. "Good-bye, Mrs. Lincoln, and don't worry."

It was the work of but a moment for Lett to kiss his mother and then strap himself in the airplane. Captain Lee started the motor, then he too clambered into the cockpit and took his place at the controls.

"Now, hold on," directed the aviator, grimly. "We're going to ride like the wind!"

They did.

Lett's first airplane ride was a record-breaking race with death. The roar of the engine almost deafened him. He heard the wind howl through the rigging. He felt the plane collide with solid cushions of air, buffeted by them like a ship at sea is buffeted by YELLOW-haired Susie May and BROWN-haired Teddy have lots of fun playing indoors when the weather is too severe to play outside. Susie may play with her BROWN-haired Dolly and Teddy has his puppy Rags. Rags has light TAN (use BROWN and YELLOW lightly) hair and his tongue is PINK (use RED lightly). Teddy has a BROWN collar and leash for Rags.

Susie May wears a light GREEN dress with a BLACK velvet bow at her white lace collar. Her socks are GREEN, too, but her slippers are BLACK.

Dolly wears a BLUE frock and shoes to match. Her cap is BLUE with white lace about her face and BLUE ribbon to tie under her chin.

Teddy wears a GRAY (use BLACK lightly) sweater trimmed with bands of BLACK and RED about the collar, waist and sleeves. His trousers are BLUE and his shoes are BROWN.

The wall is YELLOW and the floor is BROWN with a GREEN rug with a RED border on it.

waves. He sank with the plane into sickening pockets where there was no air—but through all the hazards of the sky, Captain Lee drove the machine at top speed.

Without speaking, Captain Lee pointed to a group of white-roofed buildings just ahead. Lett understood without being told that was the air port.

"We're going to make a drop landing," shouted the pilot. "It may jolt you a little, but it won't hurt."

The drop landing, however, was too hurried—was too much of a drop for the wheels and their rigging to stand the strain. The plane hit the ground heavily, bounced high into the air, then crashed down against the earth with a terrific thud.

"Get out of the wreckage," shouted Captain Lee. "Before it catches fire!"

Both the pilot and the passenger unbuckled their belts and crawled out of the smashed plane. Lett was badly shaken but not hurt. His first thought was for the serum, but by the same lucky chance that had kept the plane upright the bottle of precious fluid had not been broken.

"I think my leg is broken," moaned Captain Lee, as he tried to stand upright. "Don't lose a minute, Lett. Save Jim's life!"

Lett started off on a run toward the main buildings of the air port. At the door of the executive offices he found two horses and an anxious aviator.

"Have you got the serum?" was the demand.

"Yes," panted Lett. "And I'm here in the doctor's place."

"Then jump on the white horse and follow me. Barnes is three miles away on the side of Bleak Hill and there are no automobile roads leading to the cabin."

Lett jumped on the horse and away he went at a gallop. The path was rough and the riding hard, but up there among the trees and the rocks a human life hung in the balance.

"Are we too late?"

Anxiously, Lett peered into the face of the man who had met them at the door of the log cabin.

"He still lives," was the answer. But I believe you are too late to save him."

"It is never too late to try," said Lett. "Now will you get me some hot water, and a clean rag. Bare his arm. I am going to stick a needle into his veins so that I can inject some of this serum."

Quickly, almost as expertly as his own father, the young boy pumped the life-giving fluid into the veins of Jim Barnes, air mail hero.

A change came over the patient almost at once. He seemed to breathe easier, to relax his taut muscles. The pain went out of his features and shortly afterwards he opened his eyes. "It is a miracle!" whispered the mountaineer, awe stricken.

"He will get well," said Lett, calmly. "His reaction has been all that it should be."

And Jim Barnes did get well. In two months' time he was again flying mail for the United States government. But he never passed Bancroft Field without going two hundred miles out of his way to wave at the boy who had saved his life and to drop from the sky a message of friendship!

EDITOR'S LOOKOUT

W. A. Gamble, Pinetops, N. C.

Just a few days after this paper reaches you, Saturday the 2nd of February, comes the 48th birthday of Christian Endeavor. On February 2, 1881, in the Williston Congregational Church, Portland, Me., Rev. Francis E. Clark organized the first C. E. society. The movement, inspired and prospered by the Holy Spirit, has girdled the globe and has helped to train some twenty million young people "For Christ and the Church."

More than four score denominations, with nearly as many thousand societies, now have part in the mightiest movement of young people of all time. Some denominations have withdrawn to try to walk alone, but still there are more Endeavorers than members of all other similar societies. The organization is more alive today than ever before, and still brighter days are ahead.

How shall Endeavorers celebrate the anniversary? Perhaps the best way is to determine upon a more vigorous promotion of the present Crusade with Christ, for evangelism, Christian Citizenship, and World Peace. If you have not undertaken to participate in the Crusade of your society, decide on February 2nd (or on the following day, Sunday the 3rd). If you have decided to participate, lay out for your society and yourself a wider and a more vigorous effort to carry out some of the suggestions made under the three divisions of the Crusade. The four fundamentals of Endeavor are: 1. Confession of Christ. 2. Service for Christ. 3. Loyalty to Christ's Church. 4. Fellowship with Christ's people. Rev. Clark built these into the organization at the beginning. They are still of paramount importance. Let us keep them in mind as we celebrate the 48th birthday, and try to remember them through the year as we go forth to promote the work of the local society, local church, denominational program, and world-wide evangelistic forces.

Sunday, February 10—Youth Facing the Need. — 1:9; Mt. 10:16-42; Acts 16:1-5.

The Call to Follow

When Christ was here in the world, he called certain ones to follow him—to be his disciples. He did not plead with them to follow him, he said, "Follow me," and they followed. He must have put so much love and daring into those two words that it was impossible not to follow him. He was, and still is, a most handsome person. Only a few instances are given of one following when he called. The rich young ruler was one who, when Jesus called, went away sorrowful. The others left their respective businesses and homes and followed him. He did not call them to an easy life—they walked from village to village with him, often they were tired and hungry—so hungry that they ate the grain when they passed through a field. Often a village would not let them come in and they had to go to another village even though it was late and they had been walking all day. A hard, wandering life was theirs. But still they followed.

Today Jesus says, "Follow Me," to each one of us. He does not call us to an easy life today any more than he called those first disciples to an effortless existence. It is a call to the best that is in us. Into those words he has love—and a challenge. It is a challenge to do great things.

The Call to Missions

Last week we studied a few of the religions of the world who do not know the Christ. In none of these religions is there any joy or peace or hope. There is only superstition, and fear, and a searching for peace. We who are young may receive the call to service for the Master in one of those fields. From the ranks of youth in places now occupied by others will be filled. "And I heard the voice of the Lord, saying, 'Whom shall I send and who will go for us?' Then I said, 'Here am I; send me.'"

Youth Needs Christ

The call to missions is very important, but we must give quite a while before we can answer that call, for it takes years of preparation to be a missionary. And of us cannot go to foreign fields. The most of us stay here in this country. Never think that it takes to be a Christian here than it does out where ignorance and heathen customs prevail. It may be a harder to serve here because we do not feel the necessity of keeping in touch with our Leader, we do not feel as dependent on Him, as those do who have gone out to foreign service. They know that they must stay close to Him because He is their source of inspiration and strength. They are trying to let Him speak through them. Here at home we go with people who go to the same church or school that we go to, and that do the same kind of work as we do. We feel that we do not have to live so close to the Master. Our temptations are more subtle and insidious. The crowd which we go does certain things that down in our heart of hearts we do not approve of doing. But they "get away with it." We think we should like to offer an objection, but we say to ourselves, "Wouldn't the crowd think I am a spoil-sport if I say anything about it? They might make me a prude—or a hypocrite." All of us like the approval of the crowd—all of us want to be good sports. Above all else, let us have the courage of our convictions—and if we do not approve of what the crowd does we can at least let it be known. If we are worth anything to the crowd, it will soon learn to respect our opinions. And being a Christian does not mean being a prude or hypocrite—a real Christian is red-blooded and bold. Christ needs Youth, and Youth needs Christ.

Youth Facing the Need

Youth with us—Life before us—Christ in us! What a glorious combination. "For this cause I bow my knees to the Father, from whom every family in heaven and on earth is named: that he would grant you, according to the riches of his glory, that ye may be strengthened with power through His Spirit in the inward man; that Christ may dwell in your hearts through faith; to the end that ye, being rooted and grounded in love, may be strong to learn with all the saints what is the breadth and length and height and depth, and to know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge, that ye may be filled unto all the fulness of God."

JUNIOR C. E. TOPIC HELPS

Miss Hattie Mae Covington

Topic for February 3, 1929: "Juniors Around the World."—Gal. 3:26-29.

(Christian Endeavor Day)

For this meeting have an imaginary hook-up of radio circuits throughout the world, having each continent in turn broadcast from some central station the facts about juniors in their nations. Divide the room with screens so that each continent can be somewhat secluded, placing the names of the different screens, behind each of which the particular broadcaster for that continent are seated.

Announcer for North American Station: Station NACE speaking on the round-the-world hookup for Endeavor. The United States of America being the birthplace of Endeavor, the station at Boston, our national headquarters, will have the privilege of broadcasting first. Secretary Gates has requested the Junior society of — to broadcast on this occasion.

Dr. Poling, president of the International Society, cannot put into words how deeply he appreciates this opportunity for North America Endeavor and hereby sends most cordial greetings to all Juniors throughout the world. In opening this great program, let us first have our devotional service.

Hymn: "Light Up the World for Jesus."

Scripture reading: Gal 3:26-29. Other references: Matt. 28:19, 24:14. Mark 13:10, 16:15. Luke 24:27, 24:48.

Sentence prayers, stressing world work.

Announcer for North American Station: The first speaker on the NACE broadcast will be — who will give us a bit of the history of Christian Endeavor in America.

First Speaker: Gives short history of C. E. Established February 2, 1881, Williston Congregational Church, Portland, Maine, by Rev. Francis E. Clark. Tells about Endeavor groups in the South among the negroes. Also from the Western States work done by the Indian boys and girls. Then too about about the Juniors in the Philippine Islands.

Announcer for North American Station: Station NACE again. We have a boy from Canada here with us and we will now hear from him.

Second Speaker: (Boy from Canada): Canada sends greetings to the Juniors listening in around the world. We have 700 Junior Societies and are using very fine courses of Bible study, etc. I have been asked to bring greetings also from our little sister Christian Endeavor Union of Alaska. They are young in the work but have good leaders now and are anxious to be heard from on this great Junior broadcast.

Announcer for North American Station: We were very glad to hear from our sister unions in the north, and now it is our privilege to hear from our neighbor on the South, through our friend — from Mexico.

Third Speaker: (From Mexico): Tells about the Mexican Juniors. Also brings greetings from the Central American and Canal Zone countries.

Announcer for North American Station: This concludes the broadcast from NACE, the first station in the round-the-world hookup. You will now be transferred to the station SACE in Brazil and hear from the Juniors of South America.

Announcer for South American Station: SACE station SACE of Brazil. From here we send our greetings to all the Juniors throughout the world. South America is not as largely Protestant as North America, and Endeavor work has not progressed as far here as in its homeland; but we have a Christian Endeavor Union of about 200 societies, etc. We will now hear from our northern countries through — of Colombia.

Fourth Speaker: (From Colombia): Colombia sends greetings, as also does the Endeavor Union of Venezuela and the Island of Trinidad. (Tells something of the work of each).

Announcer for South American Station: SACE speaking again. We have with us a boy from the Argentine, whom you will now hear.

Fifth Speaker, (From Argentine): (Tells about the work). The people are largely Spanish and, of course, Roman Catholic—but those of us who are in the Endeavor work love it very much and are just as interested as where the members are more numerous.

Announcer for European Station: This is station EUCE cludes the broadcast from South America, except a song by (insert names of singers), after which you will be transferred to station EUCE at London.

Announcer for European Station: This is station EUCE broadcasting from London. The European Endeavor Unions greet the other unions of the world. Our first speaker will represent Dr. James E. Kelly, president of the British Endeavor Union. This message will be brought by — of London.

Sixth Speaker, (Of London): Dr. Kelly wishes me to greet all Juniors from him and for British Endeavor. He was a Junior himself some years ago and attributes much of his success in leadership to that period of training in Scotland. (Tells about British Endeavor and tells about the work in Australia).

Announcer for European Station: Station EUCE again. You will now hear from Germany, and since they are a musical people, we will ask them to first give us a song.

Song: "Loyal Juniors."

Seventh Speaker, (Of Germany): Germany greets the Juniors round the world and would say that, especially since our present conditions of reconstruction, we appreciate the work with the youth and recognize the value of Junior training for Christian citizenship. Turkey and the Near East asked me to report also for them. (Gives report).

Announcer for European Station: You will now listen to — who will tell us about the Scandinavian countries.

Eighth Speaker, (Of Norway): It is the thrifty nations known as Scandinavia, that we find great religious zeal, etc.

Announcer for European Station: I have a telegram from a Russian society, asking for our prayers and for any help we can send them, as they are but lately started in this work. Also from Spain and Portugal. We have also had messages from Holland and France. Belgium is included in the Netherlands, etc. This concludes the European period, and you will now be transferred to station ASCE of Canton, China.

Announcer for Asiatic Station: This is station ASCE, broadcasting from Canton, China. The Christian Endeavorers of Asia greet you. In addition to Bible drills we must learn many things taught in the homes and schools of Western countries. Health habits, sanitary practices, etc. You will first hear from Miss — a Chinese girl of Peking.

Ninth Speaker, (From Peking, China): The Endeavorers of the United States have sent us great teachers, one of whom, Miss Francis Bement, has done much to make Endeavor in China what it is, etc. Our announcer has asked me to say something about our sister nations to the north. Siberia is too disorganized to give a report. But we know there are workers there, and where there are workers there will be Christian development.

In Korea our Junior work is progressing slowly. We are in need of money to carry it on. One dollar will start a society. If any Juniors in America are listening in, maybe they will help us.

Announcer for Asiatic Station: You will now hear from Japan in the person of —, a boy from Tokio.

Tenth Speaker, (Boy from Tokio): I am another of the yellow race, and will say that Christianity has grown amazingly in Japan, etc. We would like to organize more Junior societies and we are anxious to serve.

Announcer from Asiatic Station: We will now call on a brown brother of India, Mr. —.

Eleventh Speaker, (Brother from India): (Tells about work). Here is one of the things our Juniors did; each Junior saved a handful of rice from each meal, grew and sold vegetables, raised hens and ducks, cleaned our own churches, and sent the money to the needy ones. May some of you more fortunate brothers and sisters continue to assist us in our tremendous undertaking.

Announcer for Asiatic Station: This concludes our broadcast for Asia. We have failed to get reports from some countries, but hope at the next opportunity to have their greetings with the rest. You will next hear from station AFCE in Africa.

Announcer for African Station: Now we will add the voice of the black brother to that of the yellow, brown and white. White men and women have risked, and often lost their lives to bring the teaching of Jesus to us, etc. South Africa reports many fine societies, but has no representative here, while Egypt has a report to give at this time. You will now hear —, from Cairo.

Twelfth Speaker, (From Cairo): Endeavor spreads more easily in Egypt than in less civilized countries, and it is said that we have more Endeavor societies than any other African country.

Announcer for African Station: We have one more reporter from Africa and he belongs to the largest Endeavor society in the world. I will introduce Mr. —, of the Congo Mission.

Thirteenth Speaker, (Of the Congo Mission): We black youth from the heart of Africa greet you Endeavorers of the big world and thank you more than we can say for the great leaders you have sent us to teach us of Christ and heal us of our ills. I belong to a great Endeavor of over a thousand members in the Congo, where Dr. Dye and others have been working, etc.

Announcer from African Station: This is the last report from Africa available at this time. I believe the Juniors around the world would like to have our Africans Juniors sing us one song, after which we will repeat the pledge as though closing our meeting, and close with the Mizpah benediction. You will hear the song — after which, without announcing, the pledge and benediction will be repeated.

STORY

THE DADE MASSACRE

Rev. E. B. McGill,

There have been three events in American history, when a detachment of United States soldiers were wiped out by the enemy. The first of these was Dade's Massacre, December 28, 1835. Of the 108 men in the command 106 were killed on the spot. The fall of the Alamo came second; Mar., 1836, less than three months after Dade's destruction, and of the 180 men in the command all were killed, by four thousand Mexicans. The third massacre occurred June 25, 1876 on the Little Big Horn river: General Custer and 264 men were slain by the Indians. Every school child in America is acquainted with the last two incidents. But of the former and the first in our history, few have any knowledge, except in army circles, and the state of Florida. Indeed it was not until the writer became a citizen of this community, that I had any acquaintance with these facts whatever. However the people of this section are giving attention to the publication of the facts. And in 1921 the story was printed by the order of the sixty-seventh congress.

Early in the nineteenth century, trouble arose between the whites and the Seminole Indians in Florida. A treaty was signed at Paynes Landing that obligated the Indians to leave the state and settle west of the Mississippi River. Some of the chiefs wanted to abide by the treaty, but they became divided, and a disturbed feeling arose in 1835. General Wiley Thompson represented the government, and was stationed at Fort King, near the present city of Ocala. He held several conferences with the Indians; and reported to the Washington officials that the Indians were unwilling to remove. He no doubt saw the danger threatened. Although the treaty in question had been made with the federal government, the Indians wanted to abide by a former treaty made at Camp Moultrie, near St. Augustine. It is said that many of the Indians who were transported to the Indian territory made their way back to Florida, and when asked why they returned, they replied that there were no pine knots in the west. The Indians used light-wood to hunt and roam about at night, and for ceremonial activities. And they could not get along without them.

The President's Message.

President Jackson in the meantime, insisted that the Indians live up to the treaty, leave Florida and go to the new country; and many of the chiefs were equally determined to stay. Hundreds of the Seminoles remain in Florida today. And it was not until May 1927 that the last one of them swore allegiance to the United States. So it is evident that a treaty was not sufficient to move them. February 16, 1835, President Jackson addressed a message to the Indians in these words: "You know me, and you know I would not deceive you nor advise you to do anything that was unjust or injurious. I tell you that you must go and that you will go. You have sold all your country. You have not a place as large as a blanket to sit down upon." The Indians held councils at Fort King in March and April 1835. The message was given to them and the situation explained by Generals Thompson, Clinch and other officers. But little was accomplished, the Indians were just as determined to stay as the government was to move them west.

During the summer of 1835 few of the Indians came to Fort King. They became sulky, and no agreement could be reached. And it was decided to move them by force during the winter. And General Thompson asked that the small force at Fort King be reinforced. For even combining it with Fort Brook would not make it strong enough to carry out the government's orders. The general on numerous occasions had recommended the reinforcement of these posts especially Fort King. Orders were given for the First and Second Artillery and Fourth Infantry to move by boat from Key West to Fort Brook; a few miles west of the present city of Tampa, and then march on to Fort King. Major Francis L. Dade was commander of the army. The troops landed in Tampa Bay without trouble and late in December left Fort Brook and began the march to Fort King. These two posts were 101 miles apart and connected by an old Spanish and Indian trail commonly called the Fort King road. It crossed numerous small streams, but most of them were spanned by rude bridges. The trail led through hills, swamps, forests and tall grass. All of which added to the peril of the journey.

It was unfortunate that the army was ordered on a mission like this. And notwithstanding the local generals had warned the Washington authorities of impending danger, little heed was given, and the fate of Braddock was forgotten. The war department did not seem to think the Indians were of any considerable force. Whereas there were 1,400 trained warriors, many of them expert shots, most of them equipped with good rifles, and other arms, many of them mounted on good horses; were dextrous in riding and were led by bold and skillful chiefs. They also were large numbers of negro slaves. And they were well acquainted with the country. Furthermore they had warned the whites that they would not allow the troops to pass through their country without resistance. Dade and his men were apprehensive but obeyed like the charge of the Light Brigade. Dade was a brave and experienced veteran of the War of 1812, and being acquainted with conditions, took every precaution. Oxen were used as a means of transport, and the troop necessarily moved slowly. One cannon, a six-pounder, was the only piece of artillery and it was also drawn by oxen. A doubtful tradition is that a runaway slave betrayed the whites and told the Indians of their departure from Fort Brook.

First News of the Battle.

Dade and his command began the march December 23, 1835. A certain officer accompanied them the first day, and returned the next morning. Two of his friends gave him instructions about their wills in case they were lost; it seems that the command was in doubt about surviving. Nothing was

Splendid Recipe
To Stop A Cough That "Hangs On"

The best cough remedy that money could buy, can easily be made at home. It saves money and gives you the most reliable, quick-acting medicine you ever had. The way it takes hold of stubborn coughs and chest colds, giving immediate relief, is astonishing. Any druggist can supply you with 2 1/2 ounces of Pinex. Pour this into a pint bottle, and fill up with plain granulated sugar syrup or strained honey. It's no trouble at all to mix, and when you once use it, you will never be without it. Keeps perfectly and tastes good—children really love it. It is surprising how quickly this home-made remedy loosens the germ-laden mucus, and soothes and heals the inflamed membranes. At the same time, it is absorbed into the blood, where it acts directly on the bronchial tubes, and helps the system throw off the whole trouble. When those severe coughs which usually follow the "flu," are promptly ended. Pinex is a highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway Pine, containing the active agent of creosote, in a refined, palatable form. Nothing known in medicine is more helpful in cases of severe coughs, chest colds and bronchial troubles. Do not accept a substitute for Pinex. It is guaranteed to give prompt relief or money refunded.

heard from the army for about ten days. Then a private soldier, Daniel F. Clarke, crawled into Fort Brook. He had been wounded seven times, and was nearly dead from loss of blood and lack of food. He had crawled nearly all the way from the scene of battle; but recovered after proper treatment. He reported that the entire command had been wiped out. Later two other survivors arrived and corroborated his story. This was the first time in American history that an army of trained and hardened soldiers, had been wiped out by Indians, in a daylight attack.

Clarke, the survivor, said that Major Dade moved slowly and with caution. Scouts were sent ahead, flankers were sent out on each side, at night trees were cut for breast works, and every precaution taken until he crossed the Withlacoochee river. On the morning of the fifth day the Major assembled his men and addressed them, telling them that the danger zone was passed and that they would reach their destination before night. The night before they had pitched their camp near a small lake now known as Dade's Breakfast Lake. Here they ate their last breakfast. Indeed the commander's words, "This is the last day of our march," were well spoken. The journey was resumed and the command had gone four miles, when the attack was made. The flankers had been called in, and the advance guard reduced. The weather was cold and the soldiers were wearing their overcoats. Their ammunition boxes were under the buttoned overcoats, an unfortunate condition for an emergency. Major Dade and Captain Fraser were at the head of the column. The men followed in double file, it was about eight o'clock when the march ended. The road through the tall grass and many clumps of saw palmetto on the west, on the east was a small lake.

The Indians and a large number of negro slaves were concealed in the vegetation. The whites moved slowly, having little fear of an attack in the day time. For such was contrary to all Indian modes of warfare. Suddenly Chief Jumper gave a great war whoop, the shrillness of which disturbed the quiet, cool morn of Christmas week. This was followed by a single shot by Chief Micanopy; and which is thought to have killed Major Dade. Immediately a sheet of fire poured into the ranks of the soldiers ere they had unshouldered their rifles, and more than half of the command went down at the first volley. The Indian's aim was nearly perfect, the attack had been well planned, and no doubt Micanopy, commander of the Indians, and his assistant chiefs had planned every detail of the attack, and discussed it with the men.

Indian Chief Makes Report

A prominent chief with the Indians was Hallpater-Tustenuggee, commonly called Alligator. He was present and later told the story of the battle. It is generally accepted as being as near correct as an Indian could tell it. He said the few remaining officers rallied the soldiers after the first volley. The little cannon was brought into action and fired several times. But the Indians shot down the artillerymen and the gun was silenced. Alligator said one little officer was very brave and fought to the last. He drew his sword and swore at the Indians and tried to rally his men. This officer must have been Captain Fraser, second in command, as Major Dade had fallen in the first volley. He said the soldiers took refuge behind trees and fought to the last, exchanging shot for shot. After some considerable time the Indians retired to get a fresh supply of ammunition. And the whites immediately fell to work to erect a fort of logs. A warrior reported to the chiefs that a few whites were still alive and throwing up a fort of logs. The Indians returned with a troop of cavalry which had been kept in reserve; and with their new supply of ammunition, and fought until the soldiers' ammunition was exhausted and they were left to the mercy of those who had no mercy. After the whites became silent the Indians and their negro slaves came into the incomplete fort and found three men alive. After a conversation in English they were clubbed to death. According to Alligator, one soldier was very brave, he seized an Indian wrestled his gun away from him and dashed his brains out with one blow of his own gun. This gallant soldier then ran down the road—the only avenue of escape—but was pursued by several

THE BIBLE AND SOCIAL PROBLEMS—By W. L. Lingle, D.D.

The James Sprunt Lectures for 1929. Plain, common sense application of Christianity to the problems of life today. This master teacher and preacher has produced a volume that will prove to be invaluable to every pastor and leader. Price $1.75.

An Interpretation of the Apocalypse. Rev. J. F. Lawson, D.D., says of this book: "Timely, thorough going, sound, safe, uplifting and convincing. . . . It is a clear, cogent, consistent argument from beginning to end." Price, paper, 75c; cloth, $1.25.

STUDIES IN HYMNOLOGY—By Mrs. Crosby Adams

Any pastor will add tremendously to the effectiveness of his general church work and worship services by introducing this splendid book to groups of individuals in his congregation with the purpose of having them make a study of it. Also fine as a basis for a series of talks on better church music. Price, art paper, 60c; De Luxe cloth, gilt top, $1.50.

THE GENERAL EPISTLES—By S. M. Glasgow, D.D.

Rev. Egbert W. Smith, D.D., says: "I can most heartily commend this volume of brief book studies of the General Epistles. . . . It is written with Dr. Glasgow's accustomed force, insight and zeal for the truth as it is in Christ. There are many purposes it should serve; it is a commentary; it is a desk book for the minister; it is a basis for prayer meeting series; a Bible textbook for young people's or congregational groups," etc. Price, $1.50.

THIS DREAMER—By James I. Vance, D.D.

Nationally recognized as a preacher of tremendous power, a thinker of unexcelled keenness, and a writer who has made his place with the American public, a book by Dr. Vance always meets with an eager welcome. This new volume is Dr. Vance's message for an age of realism. He shows how the world still needs dreamers to lead the way, to stir the world, to give color to life, to summon the heroic and to prophesy a better day. Price $1.50.

THINGS WORTH WHILE—By R. H. McCaslin, D.D.

Dr. McCaslin is well known as one of the outstandingly keen and brilliant preachers and writers of the South. This is a volume of short essays on many practical subjects of general every-day interest, shot through and through with strong devotion to our Christ and the better things of life. A fine source for material for brief talks and illustrations. Price $1.00.

THE LAND OF HAPPINESS—By P. H. Pleune

Bright, short, gripping talks to children. Exactly suited for use just before the regular sermon, or for the children's meetings, or for use in Sunday School, or for reading to groups or the children at home. Price, $1.00.

BEHIND THE SCENES—By S. H. Chester, D.D.

An administrative history of the Foreign Mission Work of the Southern Presbyterian Church, prepared by the man who was its director for over thirty years. This is the inside story of a great development in dynamic Christian service in evangelizing non-Christian people. Price, $1.50.

WITH WINGS—By Neal L. Anderson

When you get hold of this little book and once start to read, it will be a difficult task to lay it aside until it is finished. Flying is a most interesting subject anyway, but when it is treated with the skill and charm shown in Dr. Anderson's little book, it becomes doubly so. Price, paper, 50c.

THE PRECIOUS FAITH—By Judge J. P. Hobson

Contains the carefully prepared statements of a devout, educated, well-balanced, deeply consecrated Christian layman, on subjects of vital interest to the Christian church and to society at large. Price, paper, 50c; cloth, $1.00.

Here's Health

Bubbling, Sparkling,
From the Heart of Mother Earth at Glenn Springs

At the old reliable springs, one of the stand-bys of the Southeast, our fathers and grandfathers for generations back, even to the time when the Indian tribes recognized its medicinal value, have found in Glenn Springs Mineral Water restored health.

The refreshing effect of the liberal use of mineral water is generally regarded as beneficial, with none of the drastic, possibly damaging effects of concentrated medicines.

Glenn Springs Water, however, offers benefits far more specific and definite. It has always been rather generally regarded as an excellent alternative tonic for malarial debility, loss of appetite and energy. With Sodium Sulphate, Calcium Sulphate, Calcium Carbonate, Magnesium Carbonate and Potassium Sulphate as its principal medicinal agents, it flushes and rids the system of its pent up impurities; neutralizes hyper-acidity; stimulates the flow of secretions; has a sedative effect upon the digestive organs, and in a very thorough manner serves as a decidedly satisfactory treatment for chronic constipation, indigestion, dyspepsia, auto-intoxication, rheumatism, and kindred ills.

It not only flushes the system, and is helpful to organs of digestion and elimination, but through its mildly active qualities it restores organs to normal functioning and regular habits. It is pleasant, palatable and pure.

You need not necessarily visit the spring as hundreds of thousands have done. For the busy man or woman we will ship the water by express. Thus you can restore health and strength at home, just as though you were actually recuperating at the spring without the loss of time, the trouble and expense.

Your own doctor probably knows and recommends Glenn Springs Water. If he does not, we will gladly mail analysis and literature on request. Use this coupon:

Indians on horse-back and quickly shot down. The Indians' victory was now complete.

Three Whites Escape.

This story was corroborated by Clarke, the first survivor to return. He had been badly wounded, and pretended to be dead, while the Indians and negroes were in the fort. A slave kicked him and said, "he is dead enough." He remained still all day among his dead comrades, and at nightfall crawled out of the bloody pen and started for Fort Brook, eighty miles away. The Indians had taken all the fire arms, and Clarke had to make the venture with out any means of defence. He met another soldier who had escaped, and they journeyed together hiding during the day and traveling at night. Soon they were shocked to learn that savage trackers were in pursuit of them. They divided and shortly afterwards Clarke heard a volley of shots, which snuffed out the life of his companion. Two other soldiers escaped the first volley and made their way back to Tampa.

The Indians seemed to realize the seriousness of the slaughter. They did not scalp the dead, or take their clothing; nor did they even take the money and jewelry of the dead officers. But all arms and ammunition were carried away. Alligator said the Indians left the Massacre hastily and returned to their abode in the swamp. Late that night they were joined by Osceola, and his band, who that morning had assassinated General Thompson and Lieutenant Smith at Fort King. These officers were ambushed as they strolled about the agency buildings. Chief Osceola then robbed the stores of the fort and carried off a quantity of liquor. He and his men were loaded down with loot when they reached Micanopy's troop. The two bands spent the night celebrating the victory, and most of the Indians were drunk on the stolen liquor. Osceola placed the scalp of General Thompson on a pole and the Indians made speeches to the spirit of the departed general.

Country Is Alarmed and Relief Sent

The bodies of the victims lay exposed to the elements and vultures for nearly two months. But we may be sure that Private Clarke's report caused alarm over the country. A sailing vessel was about to depart for Mobile; and cities along the coast were warned. The legislature of the territory of Florida was in session when the news reached Tallahassee; flags were lowered to half mast, and suitable resolutions adopted. This disaster awakened the war department in Washington, and the seriousness of the situation was realized.

In February, General Edmund P. Gaines, landed in Tampa Bay with a large force, and advanced along the Fort King trail, to the scene of the Massacre. He arrived at the above place February 20, 1836. Captain Ethan Allen Hitchcock, serving as inspector general of General Gaines' command, made a report to the War Department. He said it was a gruesome sight that awaited the relief army. The bodies of the dead soldiers were scattered along the way where each had fallen. The dead oxen still in their yokes, were lying where they had been shot down by the Indians, who did not care for them. The dead horses of the officers were lying among the men. The ground was literally covered with boxes and packages that had contained ammunition and supplies. So far as is known, the scene had not been visited by either whites or Indians, during these weeks. Why the latter did not revisit it may never be known. The small log inclosure, which was about 25x35x40 feet, and four feet high; contained the remains of about thirty soldiers. They were all lying parallel to each other, with arms extended and heads towards breast-works, which indicated that they died fighting.

The Dead Honored.

Other bodies were found along the way, showing the position of the men as they marched with the officers in front. Many of General Gaines' men were personally acquainted with the fallen heroes, and all of the bodies of the officers were identified. The relief command buried the officers in one trench, and the men in another, using the unfinished fort as a huge grave. The usual military honors were paid to the dead. In 1842 the bodies were removed to the National cemetery at St. Augustine. General Gaines and his men rescued the little six-pound cannon from a swamp, whither it had been hurled by the enemy, and placed it at the head of the trench as a monument. It still remains there. And an eighty-acre park, owned by the state of Florida, is a third monument to Dade's command. The others are at St. Augustine, being erected by the officers of the Florida Indian Wars, and at West Point Military Academy. A history of the battle was sealed and deposited in the monument at West Point. The history is also found on page 289 in the "History of West Point" published 1864.

Dade Park.

Lieutenant Joseph E. Johnson, later a general of Confederate fame, made a map of the battle field some years after the incident. And in 1848 the United States Geological survey made a map of the Fort King trail. With these sketches as a guide, the exact spot of the massacre has been definitely located and the park established. One may walk through the open pine woods, mid the giant live oaks and by the clumps of palmettos and picture the Indians hiding there awaiting their enemy. The little lake on the east still covers about two acres. The entrance to the park is under a beautiful arch. Within the park small monuments mark the spot where the officers fell and a larger one commemorates the memory of all involved, and a bronze tablet on the side gives a complete roster of the dead and wounded. The rude fort has been reconstructed of concrete imitation logs and various poems and epitaphs adorn the place. Several buildings accommodate tourists, and campers frequent the park. But it is the forest primeval, the little squirrel darts out and in the long gray moss, and myriads of birds with their melody, tell the story of the heroic dead.

Time has passed and civilization has swept on. The community is now dotted with farms and villages. Nearby is Bushnell, the county seat of Sumter County, with one of the most beautiful court houses in the state, just a mile and a half northeast of Dade Park. A few hundred yards east is a rail and highway. Great trains plow by at the rate of sixty miles an hour, while every day thousands of motor cars glide along, and the daily aviator, from Tampa to Jacksonville, peers down from his position; while lines of telegraph and telephone combined with the wireless itself, form wings for words to all parts of the world, and tell the story of what happened nearly a century ago. Yet none of these things were ever dreamed of by the red man when he celebrated his victory over the race that has produced them.

Bushnell, Fla.

"LOST AND FOUND"

The Spectator has been conducting a true "Lost and Found Stories" contest. Some curious tales were told. One correspondent told the following: "Some twenty years ago, on an Atlantic liner, two days out from New York, eight gentlemen lingered over their coffee while one of their number, Sir Arthur P—, told the history of the latest addition to his famous coin collection. A brilliant speaker and an authority on coins, he made much of the tale, while the priceless bit of metal itself passed from hand to hand for examination. The story done, the coin was nowhere to be found. In vain the table and floor were searched; in vain napkins were shaken, cups examined, questions asked; in vain it was suggested that each man present should be searched: seven assented, but one, a Mr. S—, refused, politely, but firmly.

"Of course, after that, for the rest of the trip they cut him dead; the other passengers, too, except Sir Arthur, who generously acted as if nothing untoward had happened. The night after land was sighted, a steward, stooping to pick up a spoon, found the coin on end, between the carpet and wall. He laid it at once on the table in front of Sir Arthur, and, as the news flashed through the room, apologies were made to Mr. S— for unjust suspicions entertained toward him. 'I will tell you, now, why I refused to be searched,' he said, when the excitement died down. 'Like Sir Arthur, I have made a hobby of coin collecting for some years, and I should have confessed as much, the other night, if Sir Arthur's fascinating story had not ended so abruptly with the unfortunate disappearance of his coin. After that I was reluctant to speak because,' he paused, smiling, then reached across the table and laid beside Sir Arthur's coin its exact duplicate,' 'because this was in my pocket at the time. 'Eve Sir Arthur,' he added, 'would have found it hard to believe that, with only two coins of the kind in existence, should have had the other, that evening, in my possession.'

And here is a story which Lady Caerew told: "From Chelsea I took a taxi at 9:30 p. m. to a nursing home at Fitzroy square to await result of operation to a relative, and I left my bag in the taxi. At 12:30 p. m. I left the home with a friend and walked into Euston road and we stood talking for quite a little time letting several cabs pass before I hailed one to return home to Chelsea. To my surprise I found it was the same I had come in. The driver said 'Yes, and a good thing, to-morrow, for you left your bag in my cab.' I asked where he had been. He said, 'Oh! half 'round London since put you down.'"

Another wrote this: "A young seaman who had sent home no word of his existence for some years, in a moment of idleness had cut his name on a piece of wood which dropped into the sea off Tampico. It was washed ashore the other side of the Atlantic and found by his mother below her cottage in the Hebrides, and some time after the lost one returned himself.

A nine year old girl was recently shipped by express to this country from Ecuador. She was tagged to go via steamer to New York, where she was received by an agent of the express company, who sent her on to the office of the company in Indianapolis. At that city she was delivered in turn to her mother.—Living Church.

Children's Colds Doubly Dangerous While Flu Lasts

Get Them Promptly But Be Careful Not to Upset Stomach With Too Much Dosing

PNEUMONIA CHIEF DANGER

Although the type of flu this year is so serious as in 1918, health authorities are urging everybody to treat the slightest cold at the start, to keep the resistance and to keep the body an easy prey to bronchitis or pneumonia.

Too much "dosing" especially in the case of children still further disturbs digestion, and should be avoided except on advice of a physician.

Vicks VapoRub is especially valuable because it is applied externally and so can be used freely at the first sign of a cold, with no risk of disturbing a delicate stomach.

Applied to the throat and chest at the same time, Vicks acts two ways at once to break the cold and avoid serious complications: (1) through the skin in a poultice (2) by means of its medicated vapors, released by body-heat and inhaled direct to the intended air-passages.

THE CATS OF ST. IVES

In no other town of its size in the world are there so many cats as in St. Ives, Cornwall. As soon as the visitor arrives at the station he is surrounded by friendly cats who rub up against his legs or mew and purr to attract attention.

Hundreds of cats are walking through the streets, sitting on the doorsteps cleaning their faces, or lying curled up in sunny corners of the picturesque old buildings; in fact, cats are everywhere.

The explanation of this enormous feline population is to be found in the fact that the inhabitants of St. Ives make their living by fishing, and the most valuable possessions of every family are the nets with which fishes are hauled from the sea. St. Ives is a very old town and there are many houses that have seen five hundred years or even more. In the rambling dwelling places of the fishermen there are very large numbers of rats. Local tradition says that the rats of St. Ives are the most wily in all the world, and that it is of no use setting traps to catch them. The cats must do it.

During the winter the precious nets are stored in the cellars of the houses. If it were not for the vigilance of the cats, there would be very little left of the nets when fishing-time came round again, for nothing seems to please a rat more than gnawing on a net. No wonder that St. Ives is a veritable paradise for pussies. The fisherfolk can not have too many.—Band of Mercy.

Business is Business

A priest offered twenty-five cents to the boy who could tell him who was the greatest man in history.

"Christopher Columbus," answered the Italian boy.

"George Washington," answered the American boy.

"St. Patrick," shouted the Jewish boy.

"The quarter is yours," said the priest. "but why did you say St. Patrick?"

"Right down in my heart I knew it was Moses," said the Jewish boy, "but business is business."

RECITED THE CATECHISM

Dear Standard:
I am ten years of age and am in the fifth grade at school, my teacher's name is Miss Mary Taylor. I like her fine. I go to Sunday School every Sunday I can. I have recited the Shorter Catechism and have secured my Bible. My pastor's name is Rev. J. E. Guthrie. I like him fine.

I have a brother who is a senior at Davidson College, one at Columbia Bible School, and a sister at Montreat Normal School. I have a pet kitten which I call Malta, because she is part Maltese.

I enjoy reading your stories, reading the letters, and painting your pictures.

Your friend,

AFTERWARDS

'Twas a month after Christmas, and Santa Claus said:

'I am wakeful to-night and can't sleep in my bed,

So I'll take a short trip, as the moon's shining bright,

And see what the children are doing to-night.

I'm sure they're enjoying the presents I brought

Just a short month ago." And so quicker than thought

The reindeer were harnessed, and in the big sleigh,

All wrapped in his furs, Santa glided away.

So swiftly they flew through the still, frosty air,

And he looked into houses, now here and now there,

And saw how the children were treating their toys

And gifts he had brought for the girls and the boys.

Alas! I am sorry to tell what he found. A beautiful dolly lay flat on the ground;

All tangled and rough was her soft golden hair

And her rosy face broken that once was so fair.

The fine rocking horse for which Tommy had pled

Now lay on its side like a noble steed dead.

The train and the engine had broken the neck

Of the engineer, lying amidst a sad wreck.

And wherever he went was the same sort of sight—

Toys broken and cast aside; sad was their plight.

So Santa resolved as he took his way back:

"Next Christmas they won't get a thing from my pack."

But in one little home as he peeped thru the blind

He saw a bright picture that cheered up his mind;

For one little girl in the firelight's warm glow

Sat rocking her doll as she sang soft and low.

'Twas the very same dolly, as Santa Claus knew,

He had brought her at Christmas and still good as new.

"Who'd have thought it!" said Santa well pleased, and he smiled.

"I'll remember next Christmas the name of that child."

Men Past 40

MAKE THIS AMAZING TEST

Medical science claims that 65 per cent of all men past middle age are victims of prostate trouble, either in a mild or severe form. Loss of vitality, sciatica, bladder weakness, nervousness, aches in back, legs and feet, frequent urination and chronic constipation are a few of the more common symptoms oftentimes mistaken as attributes of old age. A new drugless gland stimulant, perfected by a well-known American scientist, now offers victims of this de-vitalizing ailment a wholly advanced method that has shown startling results in many of the 50,000 cases where it has been used. Test it on our Gilt Edge Agreement, that UNLESS YOU FEEL TEN YEARS YOUNGER IN ONE WEEK, YOU PAY NOTHING. This bonafide guaranty accompanies each treatment. Send today for the interesting booklet, "Why Many Men Are Old At Forty," written by the scientist who discovered this method. It contains information that every man should know and explains in a pleasantly, frank manner all about this common ailment which oftentimes makes a man old before his time. It is absolutely FREE. Send for it today. Simply address: The Electro Thermol Company, 2314 Morris Ave., Steubenville, Ohio.

SAME PRESCRIPTION

HE WROTE IN 1892

When Dr. Caldwell started to practice medicine, back in 1875, the needs for a laxative were not as great as today. People lived normal lives, ate plain, wholesome food, and got plenty of fresh air. But even that early there were drastic physics and purges for the relief of constipation which Dr. Caldwell did not believe were good for human beings.

The prescription for constipation that he used early in his practice, and which he put in drug stores in 1892 under the name of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a liquid vegetable remedy, intended for women, children and elderly people, and they need just such a mild, safe bowel stimulant.

This prescription has proven its worth and is now the largest selling liquid laxative. It has won the confidence of people who needed it to get relief from headaches, biliousness, flatulence, indigestion, loss of appetite and sleep, bad breath, dyspepsia, colds, fevers. Gen. Booth Still At Head of Army

Court Nullifies Adjudication of General on Technicality

The Associated Press reports that Gen. Bramwell Booth is still head of the Salvation Army, as a result of a summary court injunction decision January 30. Factions are back in the positions that they had held January 1 before the high council adjudicated Bramwell Booth unfit to continue in his office as general.

The high council was called to convene the next day at the international headquarters of the army in London. The councillors must start the adjudication proceedings all over again as their previous action was nullified by the court because General Booth's legal representatives were not allowed to plead his cause before the council voted against him.

While Bramwell Booth is again head of the Salvation Army, his nomination for a successor, contained in a sealed envelope, is invalid so long as the council is in existence.

Mexico Missionaries In Annual Session

Reports of Progress from all Stations Meeting of Northern Presbyterian Mission Held at same time

The annual meeting of 1928 took place at Cuernavaca, the capital of the state of Morelos, December 4-11, 1928. Cuernavaca lies immediately south of Mexico City, and by the railroad is but five hours from the city. But by automobile with the highway and air service it only takes half that time.

It is not a hard surface highway, but there are many compensations for such lack. From the Valley of Mexico the road climbs the mountains and the summit of the climb is a wind-swept plateau with pine trees on all sides. It is far from a tropic atmosphere as it crosses that divide. The views of the volcanoes are wonderful. Rarely have I seen them so free from mist or clouds as on the day I went from Mexico City to Cuernavaca. From the two sides rose the great snow-covered peaks against a sky that was surely as blue as that of Italy.

Cuernavaca is in another valley not nearly as high as that of Mexico City and consequently much warmer. It has been for many years a favorite resort easily reached from the City, and attractive to those who loved the picturesque beauty of the little city, its flowers and sunny skies, its warmth and cheer. It suffered greatly at the hands of Zapata as the many ruins can testify.

We held our meeting in the mission house. As we have no missionary now at this station the rooms could be hired, and all needed preparations were made by Mr. Shelby and Miss Wise, who came from Chilpancingo with all necessary things. So we were very comfortable.

Some of our number were on furlough and we missed them. But we know that they were remembering us as we remembered them. And one of our number, with us last year, Mrs. E. C. Murray, Jr., had been called to a higher service. And sadly as we missed her girlish presence and enthusiastic interest we could rejoice as we thought of that higher service in the Father's house.

From all stations came reports of opportunities and progress. The law requires that all services be held in a building used only for that purpose. (Continued on Page Two)

New Student Secretary of Christian Education

Dr. Sweets Announces Dr. John H. Powell, Jr., is Added to Staff at Louisville

The Department of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief take great pleasure in announcing the fact that Rev. John H. Powell, Jr., has been added to the staff as Student Secretary.

Dr. Powell brings fine training and experience to this work. He was raised in the Central Presbyterian Church of Kansas City, Mo. He secured his Bachelor of Arts Degree from the University of Illinois, his Bachelor of Divinity at Union Theological Seminary, his M.A. at Yale and his Ph.D. at the University of Edinburgh.

Dr. Powell has recently visited the colleges of Missouri and Kentucky. He will soon go into the other Synods, laying great stress for a while upon the work of our own churches at the seats of our colleges and the state and independent institutions of higher education.

We most cordially commend him to these churches and to the Church at large. He will be available for sermons and addresses, for conferences with individuals, sessions and educational authorities and will labor constantly to try to bring the influence of the church and of our religion on the lives of the students of the church. His address is 410 Urban Building, Louisville, Ky.

Duke Endowment Makes Large Gifts

Annual Report Shows 73 Hospitals and 42 Orphanages in the Carolinas Received Benefits of Fund

The Duke endowment reports for the orphan and hospital sections for 1927 were announced last week at Charlotte, N. C., by George G. Allen, chairman of the board of trustees in the third annual report. The report for the orphanage section was printed by the Presbyterian Standard Publishing Co.

Seventy-three hospitals and tuberculosis sanatoria in the two Carolinas were assisted by the hospital section on the basis of one dollar per free bed per day for 1927, an increase of 21 hospitals over the number aided in 1925. The report shows, forty-four of the institutions were in North Carolina and 29 in South Carolina.

The orphan section shows that at the end of 1927 there were 42 institutions in the Carolinas devoted to the care of dependent and neglected children, the same number as at the end of 1924. Twenty-nine of the institutions were in North Carolina and 13 in South Carolina.

Attention is called in the orphan section that the percentage of children in orphan homes in the Carolinas with both parents living is much smaller than in the United States as a whole, according to figures of the federal children's bureau.

The orphan institutions in the two states, though they did not increase in capacity from 5,774 to 6,185, a gain of 411. The capacity of South Carolina institutions decreased 50 but a gain of 461 in Tar Heel plants was recorded. During the three years the average number of children per day in the institutions increased 214. During the three years South Carolina lost two institutions and North Carolina gained two.

North Carolina's gains in orphan plants were greatest under the auspices of religious organizations. The Catholic (Continued on Page Two)

Annual Services At Southwestern

Baptist Preacher of St. Louis Holds Series for College Boys in Memphis

It is the custom at Southwestern, at Memphis, Tenn., to hold each year, shortly after the Christmas holidays, a week of evangelistic services, the preaching being done by some visiting minister.

This year the minister was Dr. Ryland Knight, who is an old friend of Southwestern, having been pastor of the Baptist Church at Clarksville, Tenn., before Southwestern's removal to Memphis. He was greatly beloved by both faculty and students in those days. He is now pastor of the Delmar Avenue Baptist Church of St. Louis. Dr. Knight had made careful preparation for the meetings. His discourses dealt with fundamental things, and they were scholarly, finished, vital messages. Both the faculty and students were genuinely interested. There was no emotionalism shown, but the meetings were thoroughly evangelical in spirit, and a lasting good has been accomplished.

Second Campaign For Queens College

Plans for Raising the Endowment to $500,000 Laid Before Pastors of Mecklenburg and Kings Mountain Presbyteries

Queens College was host to a group of ministers January 31 at lunch when the Second Campaign for Endowment was broached to the pastors assembled. This campaign is being especially sponsored by the women interested in the college, under the approval of the Presbyteries. The Alumnae Association was represented by Mrs. Onilee Brown, the president of the association, and Mrs. Frank Flowers, vice-president, while Mrs. C. C. Hook, a trustee of the college and the director of this campaign presided at the after dinner speeches. About 20 ministers were present, representing the two Presbyteries of Mecklenburg and Kings Mountain.

The slogan adopted by the women for this campaign is "A Campaign for a fully endowed A grade college for women by women."

This gathering of ministers of Mecklenburg and Kings Mountain Presbyteries was held at the college on invitation of the Steering Committee of Queen's College Second Endowment campaign.

After the meal had been served the Director of the Campaign, Mrs. C. C. Hook, of Charlotte, stated the object of the meeting. The three Presbyteries of Mecklenburg, Kings Mountain and Granville have approved a campaign to increase the endowment of Queens College so that it may reach the figure which is required by the regional accredited agency in order that the institution may have the standard rating which is required of "A" grade colleges.

In accordance with the resolutions of the parent presbyteries, a steering committee has been formed which consists of Ivey W. Stewart, Frank Hovis, Mrs. Onilee Brown, Hunter Marshall, Dr. Charles R. Nisbet, all of Charlotte, and Dr. D. H. Scanlon, of Durham, and Mrs. Coit. M. Robinson, of Lowell. This committee has laid the following plans:

The object is to raise an additional $200,000 to add to the present working $132,000, which with what will be collected from the $140,000 yet due on the first endowment campaign and the (Continued on Page Two)

Presbyterian College Has Prospective Gifts

South Carolina Synod's School is to Receive Large Donations

Col. Leroy Springs, of Charlotte, N. C., and formerly of Lancaster, S. C., well known textile manufacturer, has confirmed a report that he would make a gift of $50,000 to Presbyterian College of South Carolina in the event that institution met certain unannounced conditions.

This benefaction follows a donation of $100,000 made by Col. Springs several years ago to the college to aid in financing the erection of a gymnasium. When interviewed as to his gift, Mr. Springs is reported to have said:

"I had rather not outline the conditions I have proposed, but I understand that Presbyterian College already has fulfilled these provisions. In that case my donation is at their disposal.

"I also understand that John I. Woodside, of Greenville, S. C., has offered to give the college a similar gift of $50,000 under the same conditions, although, of course I am speaking only for myself."

Presbyterian College is at Clinton, S. C.

Dr. Ellis Delivers Smyth Lectures

World Traveler Gives Series at Columbia Seminary

The annual lectures on the Thomas Smyth Foundation at Columbia Theological Seminary, Decatur, Ga., which were delivered during the week of January 20, by Dr. William T. Ellis, traveler, lecturer and dwriter of international reputation, have set a new high mark for popularity among the long list of subjects presented on this Foundation. Attendance by the students and by friends of the Seminary, from Decatur, Atlanta and other points, crowded the chapel to its capacity at every service. The general topic, "Explorations and Adventures in Bible Lands," was presented in six lectures, as follows:

- I. Bible Backgrounds, a New Apologetic for the Scriptures.
- II. The Bible, a Place Book.
- III. Over the World's Oldest Highways.
- IV. Where Israel Became a Nation.
- V. Where Christianity Became an Empire.
- VI. The Land of the Lord and the Lord of the Land.

The material embodied in these lectures has been published by D. Appleton & Co., in an attractive, beautifully illustrated volume, under the title "Bible Lands Today." The price is $3.00 per volume. This book should be found in the library of every minister who is interested in an accurate first-hand description of the places mentioned in the Bible. The material is fresh and interesting. Most of the pictures are made from photographs taken by Dr. Ellis himself. The pictures alone are well worth the price of the volume. Dr. Ellis is the only person who has visited every place named in the Bible.

At the close of the lectures, Dr. Ellis left for Florida, where he will rest for six weeks before taking up his work again.

MEXICO MISSIONARIES IN ANNUAL SESSION

pose and that is the property of the government, has of course prevented the use of rented halls or the holding of services in private homes. But it has forced us to put chapels in as many places as we could. Not by any means have we been able to build as many as are needed. The gifts from friends have enabled us to build many. Dr. Kelly, the well-known and beloved surgeon, was one of these donors and Mrs. C. E. Graham, our friend of many years, is another.

An annual meeting means reports of all kinds, all work done during the year. It means the consideration of all departments of our work, evangelistic, educational and medical, the theological seminary in Mexico City, the boarding-schools, with all questions of students and teachers and the necessary curriculum, the keeping in line with the progress of the state schools, the evangelistic work in co-operation with the Presbytery and Synod, the opportunities and needs at the hospital, all these mean much consideration and conference. And the meeting means all plans for the new year, the adjustment of all funds to the needed causes.

There was much cause for thankfulness. We rejoice that the diploma of Dr. Coppedge of the Morelia hospital is at last officially recognized, which recognition means, as we hope and pray, years of usefulness for him in Mexico.

We rejoice over the outlook for our schools, and over the prospect of the birthday gift from the Woman's Auxiliary that will come to us, to the two girls' schools, next May. Only one who has seen those schools can realize what that gift will mean to them, and we are praying that our home workers may give generously.

Each day's devotional brought the same thought, the "all things" that we could do in Christ's strength.

The Northern Presbyterian Mission met also in Cuernavaca two days later. We had united devotionals and some hours of special conference. The counsel of some of these workers, known to some of us for many years, was very helpful.

We had the privilege of hearing of the proposed work among the Indians. Dr. Moffett, the Secretary of Indian work of the Northern Presbyterian Board.

Our joint communion service was a beautiful one, conducted by Dr. Wallace, one of the veterans of our sister mission. As a foreigner he had a special permit from the government for a period of time, I think, which enabled him to conduct this service. And Dr. Moffett gave us such a revelation of the love of Christ, its length and breadth, height and depth that some of us will never forget.

We had some very serious problems. And we gave much time to prayer. As a united mission, in groups and singly, we sought the Master's guidance. And all feel that those prayers were richly answered.

With thanksgiving for this guidance and a committal of all that had been done into our Lord's hands, our desire to bring into the Light the many in Mexico who, in this land of sunshine, are in spiritual darkness, we stood that last morning, an unbroken circle, hand in hand, and sang as always, "Blest be the tie that binds," and parted to meet again, God willing, in 1929.

Mrs. E. V. Lee.

Laredo, Texas.

SECOND CAMPAIGN FOR QUEENS COLLEGE STARTED

guaranteed annual gift of the Synod of North Carolina, will make an endowment adequate to meet the requirement of the accrediting agency.

Sunday, April 14, has been selected as the date on which the campaign will formally begin in all three of the presbyteries of Mecklenburg, Kings Mountain and Granville, at which time it is hoped that full organization will have been effected in all the churches of the presbyteries.

The campaign is to be especially sponsored by the women of the churches which will put on this simultaneous campaign. On that date, April 14, every pastor in these churches are asked to preach on religious education, especially emphasizing Queens College as the present opportunity.

The campaign will be made a community affair in the city of Charlotte, while only the churches of the territory supporting the college outside of this city will be expected to make the canvass.

After Mrs. Hook's speech outlining the campaign, Dr. W. H. Frazer addressed the gathering appealing for the support of the ministers in the work being done at this church college. He was followed by others, among them Dr. I. S. McElroy of Kings Mountain Church, and Rev. W. J. Roach, of Lowell. All the ministers assured the leaders of the campaign of their cordial support and of their confidence that the churches would respond to this appeal which is expected to place Queens on the plane she has sought, and for which she is so well fitted as a church school.

It was announced that similar gatherings of ministers would be called in the territory of Kings Mountain Presbytery and Granville, the latter to take place at Durham in the near future.

DUKE ENDOWMENT MAKES LARGE GIFT

olic orphanage at Nazareth, the Alexander schools at Union Mills, The Children's home at Winston-Salem, the Appalachian school at Penland, the Christian orphanage at Elon College and the Thomasville Baptist orphanage accounted for practically the entire gain.

Cost for caring for each child averaged almost $300 per year, an average per day of 82 cents. During 1927 children discharged from the institutions of the two states numbered 1,229, and they stayed at the homes an average of approximately four years each, costing an average of $1,170 each or a total of approximately $1,450,000. There were 785 persons constantly employed to take care of the children.

Churches or other religious organizations operate 24 of the 41 institutions which applied to the Duke endowment for aid and these institutions cared for two-thirds of the children. Ten institutions operated by community non-profit organizations cared for 15 per cent; three orphan homes operated by fraternal orders cared for 10 per cent, and four state, county or municipal homes cared for the remaining eight per cent. The 41 institutions represented an investment of almost $10,000,000 and endowment or invested funds amounting to almost $3,000,000 were reported by 24 of them. Total cost of operation was approximately $1,650,000 in 1927.

The third annual hospital section report shows that the 73 hospitals aided received one dollar per day for 434,361 days. Of these free days of care, 240,203 were given by North Carolina hospitals and 194,158 days by South Carolina hospitals. This was almost 50 per cent of the total days of care in the institutions and the hospitals assisted had approximately 45 per cent of the beds in general hospitals and tuberculosis sanatoria in the two states.

2,500 Per Day

The hospitals applying for assistance averaged approximately 2,500 patients per day in 1927 and had about 4,300 beds for patients, 27 per cent of these being for negroes. In patients cared for during the year numbered 66,724 and of this number a fraction less than 50 per cent paid the full cost of their treatment. Approximately 25 per cent paid something, but less than the cost and the other 25 per cent paid the hospital nothing. In addition to the in-patients cared for, 52 of the institutions reported out-patients who used clinics, dispensaries or diagnostic facilities of the hospitals.

The institutions represented an investment of $11,475,000 and 20 of them reported endowment or invested funds of $1,700,000. Incomes amounted to $4,864,000 with patients paying $2,275,000 of this and donations or subsidiaries amounting to $2,257,000. The average cost of caring for one patient one day was $3.50 and the average patient paid only approximately $2.50 per day.

The report shows that in the United States there is an average of one hospital bed for every 250 persons with North Carolina standing 41st in the list of states with only one bed to every 382 persons while South Carolina is at the bottom of the list with only

THE CHURCH AND A HEALING PROGRAM

By Dr. J. C. Rowan

(As Reported by Radio King)

In the twenty-third verse of the fourth chapter of "The Gospel According to St. Matthew" we find the following words, which I am going to use today as a text: "And Jesus went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing all manner of sickness and all manner of disease among the people."

There words—and they are God's words and not mine—reveal to a remarkable degree Jesus' Galilean program, which, to a remarkable degree, was the program of His whole public career. That program was a program of teaching, and preaching, and healing.

I want to ask you today to do just two things. I want to ask you to look in the first place at the program of Jesus with the program of the Church. Our subject, then, for today, is, "The Program of Jesus Compared With the Program of the Church."

Program of Jesus

Let us look, then, in the first place at the program of Jesus.

The program of Jesus, in the first place, was a program of teaching. "And Jesus went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues." And what, let us ask, did Jesus really teach?"

Among other things, Jesus taught that there is something more important than hearing the word of God. You don't believe that? Jesus did not teach, let us mark, that hearing the word of God is not important; in fact, He taught just the opposite. He did teach, however, that there is something more important than hearing the word of God. Listen! "Therefore whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock: And the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not: for it was founded upon a rock. And every one that heareth these one bed to every 652. The report says that North Carolina needs about twice as many beds as at present and South Carolina three times as many to bring them up to the national average. At the end of 1927 there were 44 out of the 100 counties in North Carolina without general hospital facilities and 20 of the 46 South Carolina counties.

General Assembly's Training School

The Assembly's Training School, at Richmond, Va., has been having some interesting visitors recently. First of all, Mr. Wade C. Smith, our own Extension Bible Teacher, paid us a flying visit. His address on personal work was soul-stirring and exceedingly suggestive. His "Little Jetts" charmed and edified students and faculty. From here Mr. Smith went to Texas to begin a long line of engagements with churches.

Our next visitor was Mr. E. D. Grant, Educational Secretary of Foreign Missions. He came on a real educational mission and for a week taught classes of Seminary students and of training School students in foreign missions. His teaching was of a very practical nature.

Last of all came Rev. Ira Landrith who spoke on Christian Endeavor and its work. This is a subject which always interests our students as the majority of them were brought up in churches where they had Christian Endeavor.

Home Mission superintendents are also beginning to pay their annual visits to the Training School, to secure members of the graduating class for their home mission fields. Presbyteries are also beginning to make inquiries of the Training School for summer Vacation Bible School teachers. Over thirty of our students were engaged in that kind of work last summer.

Registration of new students for next year has already begun. With our enlarged department of Religious Education the Training School will offer more advantages next year than ever.

sayings of mine and doeth them I shall be likened unto a foolish man which built his house upon the sand. And the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell, and great was the fall of it." Jesus taught, then, that doing the word of God is more important than hearing the word of God. Hearing the word of God is only order to the doing of that word.

Brotherly Love

Again, Jesus taught among other things, that there is something more important than public worship. Jesus did not teach, let us mark, that public worship is not important; in fact, He did teach, however, that there is something more important than public worship. Listen! "Therefore if thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath anything against thee; Leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way; first reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift." Jesus taught, then, that being on right and friendly terms with your brethren is more important than public worship. Put worship is only in order to bring you on right and friendly terms with your brethren: for to be on right and friendly terms with your brethren to be at the same time on right and friendly terms with God.

Again, Jesus taught, among other things, that there is something more important than institutions or organizations. Jesus did not teach, let us mark, that institutions or organizations are not important; in fact, He did teach just the opposite. He did teach, however, that there is something more important than institutions, or organizations. Listen! "Moses said, Hear ye the voice of the Lord thy father and thy mother; and whoso curseth father or mother, let him die the death: But ye say, if a man shall say to his father or mother, I Corban, that is to say, a gift, by whichsoever thou mightest be profited me; he shall be free. And ye suffer him no more to do ought for his father or his mother; making the word of God of none effect through your tradition." Jesus taught, then, that practical helpfulness to humanity is more important than institutions, or organizations. Institutions, or organizations are only in order to practical and practicable helpfulness to humanity—at least ought to be only for that purpose.

Preaching Program

The program of Jesus, in the second place, was a program of preaching. "And Jesus went about all Galilee, preaching the gospel of the kingdom." What, let us ask, did Jesus really preach?

Among other things Jesus preached the immediateness of the kingdom of heaven. Listen! "From that time Jesus began to preach, and to say, Repent: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." Change your minds: for the kingdom of heaven, which is "righteousness, and peace and joy," is not far off and distant hope and dream but a blessed and present reality.

Again, Jesus preached among other things, the gospel, or good news of the kingdom. Listen! "And Jesus went of the kingdom." The word "gospel" means "good news"; and news has reference to that which has already taken place, and not to that which may happen in the future. Jesus preached the good news of the kingdom; and He had good news to preach, as we shall see as we consider our next sub-heading.

The program of Jesus, in the third place, was a program of healing. "And Jesus went about all Galilee, healing all manner of disease among the people." Whom, let us ask, did Jesus really heal?

Jesus healed all that came to Him to be healed. Listen! "And great multitudes followed Him, and He healed them all." There is no record in the New Testament of a single soul that ever came to Jesus to be healed and went away not healed for the lack of faith. There is a record of one who was not healed by Jesus' disciples for the lack of faith; but that lack of faith was a lack of faith on the part of the healers and not a lack of faith on the part of the sufferer. This I have said not because I want to strike at those who believe in healing by belief and petition alone, but to affirm that shall not be using the word "healing" in that sense when I use it in the remaining part of this sermon.

Let us, in the second place, today con-

MOFFATT'S TRANSLATION

The writer has recently been doing a good deal of work using James Moffatt's "New Translation of the Holy Bible" as the text, and has just completed a fresh study of the Book of Acts. The more I use his translation, with all its faults, the more I admire it. His aim, he tells us, "has been to present the books in a fresh, effective, intelligible English." It is "a fresh translation of the original, not a revision of any previous version." "To the best of my ability I have tried to be exact and idiomatic." It is an attempt to represent the gains of recent scholarship and at the same time to be readable. I have honestly tried to make the New Testament, especially St. Paul's Epistles, as lucid and intelligible to a modern English reader as a translation that is not a paraphrase can well be made. After quoting from the neglected preface of King James' version, he says: "These words put nobly the end of reading the Bible, and the object of my version; it is to stir and sustain present in a living God who spoke and speaks." In my discussion of the translation I shall discuss some things, let the reader remember I bear admiring testimony to the ripe scholarship, marvelous erudition and painstaking care of Dr. Moffatt. His is not mere laborer's work. It is no mere revision of any of the great versions. It is a fine piece of creative and independent scholarship. In a close study of the Book of Acts, using Moffatt's translation and the texts of Westcott and Alford (I did not have that of von Tischendorf available) I have found the following defects which I shall mention before telling of the improvements and beauties that I found. The first defect is his willingness to base his translation on a mere conjecture as to what the text ought to be. In Acts 5:17, he follows, "Bless's brilliant conjecture" which has practically no manuscript authority. And in 27:17 he follows, "Bless's conjecture" in changing the text. His conjecture, so far as I can find, has no scriptural evidence to sustain it. He is guilty of the sin of transposing clauses and even verses, when it seems to give better sense, in many cases at a particle of textual authority. He has his own critical acumen, against all the best versions. In Acts 10:24 he transposes the latter part of verse 24 and places it between verses 27 and 28. In chapter 14 he transposes verse 3 from its original position between verses 1 and 2. He repeatedly disregards the best textual authority. Of what use is "research in textual criticism" if it is thrown aside at the critical whim of the translator. This he does in 7:3; 15:27; 16:30; 20:15 and many other places. He adds to the text where it suits him, without sufficient authority. When in 19:9 he says "and continued his argument every day from eleven to four" he does so on inadequate —very inadequate textual authority. It is one of the cases where he gives undue weight to Codex Beza. In 16:30 his addition ("after securing the other prisoners") has insufficient textual support.

5. Certain of his translations seem to the writer very faulty. In 18:3, when he says, "They were workers in leather," we have such a case.

And in 18:2 his words do not translate the Greek text.

6. Many of his translations, while not perhaps faulty are certainly poor. In 11:18 he says: "So God has actually allowed the Gentiles to repent and live."

His version of 21:26 is quite awkward. In 25:4 his translation, while perhaps literal, does not make good sense.

In 26:20, "Acting up to their repentance," is poor.

7. He has made some translations that, to say the least, are lacking in dignity.

For instance, 12:18, "And off he went to another place."

14:10, "Up he jumped"; and 24:1, "Down came the high priest."

8. His rendering of other passages is decidedly lacking in beauty. In 8:23 he says: "For I see you are a bitter poison and a pack of evil."

In 10:40, "Hanging on a gibbet," take away the beauty without making any clearer to the reader, certainly in this country.

In 17:11, "More amenable," is less attractive and no more accurate.

IS THE BATTLE OVER?

According to Dr. Fosdick, the battle between Fundamentalism and Liberalism is over, and Liberalism has conquered, and all that remains is the shouting.

In a recent article in discussing the gains in American civilization, he refers to the controversy between the Fundamentalists and the Modernists, and claims that fundamentalism has received its death blow. He writes:

"One indication of this is the collapse of the late controversy between Fundamentalists and Modernists. It was obviously a rear-guard action. It largely concerned matters which were not even interesting to modern intelligence and which had really been settled long ago. Its immediate occasion was the correct apprehension on the part of the Conservatives that Liberalism was gaining and must be ejected from the Churches if the status quo was to be maintained. As a matter of fact, Liberalism has not been ejected from the Churches. It never was more sure of its standing-ground within them than it is now."

We must confess that, as we read our exchanges and thus get an insight into the affairs of our sister churches, we can see some grounds for his claim. We try not to be an alarmist, but we can see everywhere a toleration of loose doctrinal views and a boldness in expressing them, such as we have never seen before.

We have often wondered what John the Apostle would do if he were to come among us. He refused to remain in the same room with a heretic, and Paul urged the Corinthians to have no fellowship with the unfruitful words of darkness, but rather reprove them. Dr. Fosdick in the above quotation puts his finger on the remedy when he said that it was the correct apprehension on the part of Conservatives that the Churches must eject Liberalism if they were to be saved.

It is not often that we can agree with our liberal friend; but in this instance we do.

His plan is not only the one way, but it is the way evidently adopted by his followers. They evidently have found out that they can bore to a greater effect from within than from without, so they are gradually entrenching themselves within our churches and schools of instruction, knowing that they can thus spread their false views without causing undue alarm.

The sad part of the scheme is the apparent unconsciousness of danger on the part of the faithful.

It is a practical question though, who is to move in this matter? That the danger is everywhere, in all churches, and that its presence is realized is evident, but no one is willing to make the first move.

Peace in our borders is always a blessing; but we must remember that peace at any price is sometimes costly.

There are worse evils in God's Church than temporary strife. He came not to send peace on earth, but a sword—which should not be used till necessary; but when such necessity arises, it must be used without fear or favor.

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY, WHAT IT IS

During the recent presidential election this was a much discussed question, and in the discussion some able lawyer and others displayed a great ignorance of its nature.

In the Open Forum, conducted by many daily papers, there were many letters on this subject, but they abounded in what the logicians call "non sequitur." At that time, no matter how one's logical sense might be shocked, it could not be discussed in a Church paper, else the Church would be meddling with questions of State.

Now that the smoke of the battle has cleared away, perhaps it would be well to consider the question dispassionately.

The question is, How does religious liberty affect a man's vote?

Does it mean that a man running for office is the only one who has any liberty? Must voters be compelled to vote for a man who holds views on religion opposed to his against his own convictions?

Is this so-called liberty one-sided, affecting only the nominee?

The Constitution guarantees only that no man can be prevented from taking an office to which he has been duly elected because he is of a different religious faith from that of the majority of his fellow citizens.

My religious liberty permits me to vote for an atheist, and his religious liberty assures him the right to take any office to which he has been elected.

Because a Roman Catholic was defeated for office, and a majority of the citizens of this country refused to vote for him, it does not follow that the Constitution of the United States was violated as some have contended.

When the Professor of Church History of the Catholic University at Washington, D. C., made such a statement it was rather a reflection upon him as a teacher of Church History than a reflection upon the voters.

Listen to this teacher in a great university:

"The fact that the United States would not elect a Catholic as President is a denial in itself of the fundamental provisions of religious freedom and equality, guaranteed in the Constitution."

This statement was made in a public meeting in Washington, D. C., on November 20, two weeks after the defeat of Governor Smith.

Much of the same kind of stuff was found in other papers, of the State written by men of education and reputation. If this claim be true, then religious liberty, guaranteed in the Constitution can kill my political liberty. I must vote for the candidate of my party if by any means the question of his religious belief can be brought in.

In these press discussions we were impressed by the lamentable ignorance of Church History on the part, not only of the politician, but also of the learned and able men of the bar.

They may know law, but their knowledge of the history of the Church is deplorable.

All of us, no doubt, are liable to be swayed by our prejudices, but in nothing more than in the discussion of religious questions. It is easy to arouse such prejudices, even upon fallacious grounds.

In the last election this was repeatedly done. For example according to many newspapers, the whole South was in arms against the Catholics, because one was a candidate. Yet during the summer we met hundreds of voters who voiced freely their views either for or against the Democratic candidate, yet we can recall only one who confessed that he was opposed to him on account of his church connection, while hundreds based their opposition to his position on the 18th Amendment.

Our schools and colleges need to have a chair to teach Church History and the principles of logic.

We need also to remember that because we have personal liberty, it does not follow that we can encroach upon the liberty of our neighbor.

"HE HATH NOT DEALT SO WITH ANY NATION"—PSALM 147:20.

A THANKSGIVING SERMON.

W. McC. White.

Israel as a nation enjoyed the distinguished favor of God, being honored and exalted above other nations. God deals with nations as nations. He rewards nations, or punishes them. He exalts nations, or abases them. He blots out Amalek from under heaven. He casts out the seven nations of Canaan and plants Israel in their place. "For the kingdom is the Lord's, and He is governor among the nations.

This is a day for thanksgiving for our national blessings; Peace; this has been a year of profound peace, with no alarm of war in the land. To appreciate this, we have but to recall the dark days of ten years ago, when our boys were torn away from us and hurried overseas, while we waited with our hearts atremble for news from the front.

Plenty for the fields have yielded a supply of food sufficient. There has been hardship in some lines of business. Our farmers have suffered. There is unemployment. And bank failures have been followed by distress. Such things come every year. "The poor ye have with you always." But the country has not been visited by famine, as has been the case elsewhere, with thousands and even millions perishing for lack of bread. And we may well pause and give thanks, as we consider this.

Health has been ours. There is some sickness all the time. But the nation has not been visited by any general, universal pestilence. And to see how great a mercy this is, we have only to remember the influenza epidemic of 1918-1919; how doctors and nurses were worked beyond strength, and could not be had; how our school buildings were converted into hospitals and crowded with the sick and dying; how the long funeral processions went silently winding along our streets at all hours; how our railroad stations were piled high with caskets, and our trains loaded down with corpses; how crepe was to be seen everywhere, and tear-stained faces, and we spoke in whispers; "The mourners go about the streets."

We might enumerate other national blessings, as our material development, inventions and discoveries, the beneficent influence of education and religion, and so on.

Thanks For Our National Constitution.

The American Bar Association makes the suggestion that this year we give thanks especially for our National Constitution, remembering how, and by whom, it was formed and written out. In his proclamation of the first thanksgiving day in 1789, our first president reminded the nation to be thankful not only for mercies such as those we have mentioned above, but also "for the peaceable and rational manner in which we have been enabled to establish constitutions of government for our safety and happiness, and particularly for the national one now lately instituted; for the civil and religious liberty with which we are blessed, and the means we have for acquiring and diffusing knowledge."

They gave us a Constitution strong enough to stand the stress and strain of the years, yet elastic and flexible enough for frequent changes. While the whole British Empire stands with bated breath in apprehension of a possible change in the head of their government, the head of our government is changed every four years—and the nation goes right on. We have just passed through a heated presidential election, stirring the nation to its depths, but there was no violence on election day, and nothing like secession or rebellion following.

The Fathers Of Our Government.

The Bar Association reminds us of the men who made this constitution, and how they were providentially raised up for this very work. For in the kindly providence of God, there was given to this country at that time a generation of men peculiarly and singularly well qualified for the creation of a new constitution, a constitution different from anything hitherto known on earth. The minds of the men of that time ran on such subjects. They were exercised upon such problems. They seemed to have a bent and a taste for this task, and minds of a cast and calibre fitted for it. They were deeply versed in statecraft. They were well schooled in the lessons of history. They were political philosophers of the first rank. It is doubtful if there are among us today many, or any, minds of like mould, unless it be a Wilson, or a Bryan now gone. But that generation furnished a goodly number of men providentially well prepared to draw up a Constitution that would hold the nascent nation, and that would wear well through the years to come.

The Bar Association notes this particularly in its pamphlet, "First, came Washington, without whom the Revolution would have been a pitiful failure, an abortive rebellion, with defeat and bloody reprisals at the end—and without him 'as our first president, undoubtedly the new government would have failed; it required his strong, steady hand, his wise, sane judgment, his clear conception of the balance of power between the national and state governments.'" Then Benjamin Franklin, who "in the crisis of the Convention in 1787, when the Convention was about to split—saved the day by that compromise basing representation in the House of Representatives on population, and in the Senate, on individual states, two senators for each. This compromise saved the Constitution. Next came 'James Madison called the Father of the Constitution. He brought to the constitutional convention the most profound and extensive knowledge of human government of any man alive. Thoroughly practical, yet ideally constructive, he presented the frame-work upon which the Constitution was modeled." (And Presbyterians will not forget that James Madison, as a student at Princeton, sat under Dr. Witherspoon and learned of him.)

With rare insight and knowledge of human character Washington selected as Secretary of the Treasury a 32 year-old lawyer. And Alexander Hamilton proved to be "one of the greatest finance ministers of any time. By wise fiscal measures he restored our credit, redeemed all the debts, both national and state, established a sound banking and currency system, and installed that fiscal policy, which the treasury has pursued ever since." But Hamilton's theory was the rule of a few over the many.

So, in a happy providence, Thomas Jefferson came after him. Jefferson was "so profound a believer in democracy that he feared any strong government. His influence at the outset would have been deadly; but his election in 1801 was a Godsend. The Federalist party, which had been in power for twelve years, was tending toward an oligarchy—but Jefferson brought the rule back to the people. But under his influence the pendulum would have swung too far toward states' rights, toward the degradation and belittling of the national government. His influence might have been dangerous to the last degree, except for—John Marshall. "Again Providence raised up the man for the hour, the third Chief Justice, who, believing in a strong national government, determined to establish it. During most of his 35 years as Chief Justice, the government was in the hands of a political party opposed to his ideas, but steadily, relentlessly pursuing his way in a series of judicial decisions unsurpassed in history, he furnished the firm and lasting cement for the weak and tottering new edifice of government."

"Looking back we perceive that lacking any one of these men, our government would have been a doubtful experiment, and in all probability a failure." So says the Bar Association, as in the quotations above.

Religious Liberty and Patrick Henry.

Now no feature in our country's Constitution is more unique and noteworthy than its provision for Religious Liberty, in the separation of church and state. That was something brand new under the sun, Solomon to the contrary notwithstanding. It had never before been tried on earth in any nation. It was an experiment for the first time in human history.

And strangely enough from that list of men, who influenced the formation of the Constitution, there is omitted the name of the one man, who, more than any other, had to do with the insertion of that principle in our Constitution; one man, who in that generation of giants, stood head and shoulders above most of them—"facile princeps principium." That man was Patrick Henry. Thomas Jefferson is usually lauded as the author of the provision of the Constitution guaranteeing religious freedom and tolerance. And he himself had this engraved on his tomb-stone as one of three things entitling him to everlasting remembrance. And he did indeed have much to do with it. But the careful student of those times will find, I think, that more credit is due to Patrick Henry than to Thomas Jefferson for the introduction of that precious principle into our organic law.

And along with Patrick Henry stands another man, whose name is almost unknown outside the annals of the Presbyterian Church, who had as much, or even more, to do with it than either Patrick Henry or Thomas Jefferson. And that was the Rev. Samuel Davies. He was the head and front of dissent in Virginia. He was a man of no mean ability. He met the attorney general in argument, and proved that the Act of Toleration, enacted in England, applied also to the colonies, allowing dissenters the right to worship in their own way. Patrick Henry said of him, "He was the greatest orator he ever heard."

It is hard for us to appreciate conditions then existing and the uphill fight the dissenters had to make. The Episcopal Church was the established church, and everybody had to support and attend it, or be dealt with by law. It would take too long to tell of the struggle that went on before the Revolution, when the Presbyterians led, being reinforced by the Baptists and Quakers, contending for the right to preach and worship in their own way.

Now Patrick Henry was a devout communicant of the Episcopal Church all his life long. But in his youth he sat under the ministry of Samuel Davies, and imbibed his ideas and views concerning religious liberty. Moreover, Patrick Henry's father, and his uncle, were Scotchmen; they taught the only school he ever went to, and they also taught him the Shorter Catechism. Mr. Jefferson used to marvel at his command of the English language, in view of his limited educational advantages. Had he known of the mastery of that Catechism, the finest piece of English pure and undefiled in literature, he need not have marveled. That accounted for some of the great orator's lucid eloquence.

It was Patrick Henry who espoused the cause of the people against the clergy of the established church in the famous trial known as the "Parson's Case." The clergymen were seeking to collect their salaries by law. The matter had been in court for a long time, and several times brought to an issue, with the "Parsons" victorious each time. The leading counsel for the people, advising their clients that theirs was a hopeless case, withdrew from the case. The people then turned to a young, unknown lawyer named Patrick Henry, and put their rather desperate case, already abandoned by eminent counsel, into his hands. And Patrick Henry's management of that case is one of the most amazing things in all court procedure. It beggars description and almost staggers belief. After his speech, the case was given to the jury, who in less than five minutes returned a "verdict for the plaintiffs one penny damages!"

When the convention met in Virginia in 1776, the first thing done was to declare in favor of independence. The next thing was to prepare a government for themselves. And a committee was appointed to "prepare a Declaration of Rights, and such a plan of government as will be most likely to maintain peace and order in this colony, and secure substantial and equal liberty to the people." Patrick Henry was a member of that Committee; so were many others, Archibald Cary, Henry Lee, Edmund Randolph, Bland, Page, Carrington, Mason, Madison and others. Thomas Jefferson was a member of the committee and perhaps of the committee. It worked for nearly a month, from May 15th. to June 12th., then brought in a report. That was the famous Bill of Rights, and contains this immortal passage: "That religion, or the duty which we owe to the Creator, and the manner of discharging it, can be directed only by reason and conviction, and not by force or violence; and, therefore, that all men should enjoy the fullest toleration in the exercise of religion, according to the dictates of conscience, unpunished and unrestrained by the magistrate, unless, under color of religion, any may disturb the peace, the happiness, or the safety of society; and that it is the mutual duty of all to practice forbearance, love and charity towards each other." And for the first time on earth the entire separation of church and state was recommended for a place in the fundamental law of a nation. The principle afterward incorporated into the National Constitution, also inserted, substantially, or in the same words, into the various state constitutions.

The famous Declaration of Rights contained sixteen articles. "And it is not known," says Tyler in his Life of Patrick Henry, "that in the original draft fourteen of those articles were written by George Mason, and the last two by Patrick Henry." The last one, the sixteenth is the famous resolution as given above. And Patrick Henry was the author of it in the original draft of the Bill of Rights. Mr. Jefferson is commonly counted the author of the Bill of Rights, and so or rather the lineage of ancestry—of that resolution seems to have been this wise.

The language in which it is couched was first employed by the Independents in the Westminster Assembly of 1646, which framed the symbols and standards of the Presbyterian Church. (See Tyler again). On November 11th., 1774, two years before the Virginia convention in Williamsburg, the Presbytery of Hanover, the mother of all the Presbyteries in the South and West of the U. S., adopted and forwarded a memorial to the House of Burgesses, asking relief, and the sixteenth article of the bill or rights seems to be taken almost "verbatim" from that memorial. This venerable document lay concealed in the archives of the state until May 7th., 1888, when for the first time, it seems, it was printed by Mr. William Wirt Henry in the columns of the Central Presbyterian, in Richmond, Va. From that document it appears that the first formal movement for religious liberty in these U. S., which is now the glory of our land, was made by the members of the Presbytery of Hanover. (See Wm. S. White and His Times.)

So the original draft of that 16th article in the Bill of Rights was written by Patrick Henry—the man who was reared on the Shorter Catechism, who sat under the ministry of Samuel Davies, who spoke for the people in the "Parson's Case," and who either had access to the memorial from Hanover Presbytery, or else learned the sentiments from Samuel Davies, "the greatest orator ever heard."

It seems that somehow Mr. Jefferson put that bill in its final form, whether as a member and perhaps secretary of the committee or convention, perhaps introducing and reporting the action of the committee; but after punctuating and polishing and casting it into its present form, the Bill bears his name and to him is given the glory of it. But Patrick Henry was the real author of the provision, securing religious toleration and liberty to this country, the provision which has been incorporated in the National Constitution and embodied in every State Constitution in the land.

So much for the insertion of that principle into the Constitution, and the influences, so strongly Presbyterian, that had it done. Presbyterians can well afford to give thanks for our Constitution.

Southern Presbyterian History

Later on in the history of our country, the Southern Presbyterian Church is found pressing the principle of separation of church and state to an even greater extreme. The General Assembly of the undivided church met in an even greater extreme. The General Assembly met in Philadelphia in 1861. The atmosphere was charged with the war spirit. Certain resolutions were adopted, which resulted indirectly in outlawing some of our ministers and expelling some of our members, cause they did not vote the ticket of a particular political party. Dr. Hodge and fifty-seven other protested vigorously. Our southern men withdrew, and in December of the same year, in Augusta, Ga., organized the Southern Presbyterian Church, the same year, Augusta, Georgia, the Southern Presbyterian, declaring for "the non-secular character of the Church" (See Johnson's History of the Southern Presbyterian Church.) as its distinctive principle. And strictly spiritual mission of the church is the cornerstone on which our church is built. That is the reason for its political existence, and for its continued separation from the Northern Church. Political matters are to be introduced into our pulpits, or brought into church courts, even though great moral issues be involved. Slavery was a great moral issue. So is prohibition. Whenever a communication from the Anti-Saloon League comes addressed to one of the Presbyteries—how strongly we sympathize with the efforts of the league, the matter is usually dismissed—"side-stepped"—under a familiar formula of words. Our church hesitates about contributing to the Lord's Day Alliance—deeply sincerely as we sympathize with it—because it has its object Sunday legislation. The Seventh Day Adventists always have their representatives on hand at the capitol, whenever any Sunday legislation is under consideration. (Continued on Page Nine)

Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it."—Mal. 3:8.

SIX STEPS IN THE EVERY MEMBER CANVASS

"MONEY TALKS"
Hear what it says.

Use me on your selfish pleasures—and

I will make a slave of you. I will wither your soul like a blasting heat. I will create in you soul-thirsts which nothing can slake. I will rend your house with discords. In the end I will leave you utterly forsaken and desolate!

Use me wisely for God and your fellows—and

I will be your willing slave. I will transmute your love into multiplied blessing. I will feed the hungry, clothe the naked, relieve the sick, and publish abroad the saving grace of God. Then I will come back again to bless you with interest compounded. You are the Lord's creditor!

Prov. 19:17

1. PREPARE THE BUDGET. Make a careful survey of financial conditions in the Church. Consult organization leaders, study the needs, unify the appeals and prepare a well-balanced budget.
2. PRESENT THE FACTS. Inform the people of the great work of our Church in the local congregation, presbytery, synod, and General Assembly, and propose the askings to the people for their ratification.
3. PRODUCE THE CANVASSERS. Whether the volunteer or house-to-house method is used, enlist sufficient canvassers to inform the people of the object of the canvass; train the canvassers, organize them into teams and inspire them to action.
4. PRAY WITHOUT CEASING. Ask the canvassers to pray in the homes; insist on private and family prayer, public prayer, and pray in the organizations of the Church.
5. PROCEED TO THE TASK. Let no member of the Church, however young, be overlooked. Fix the time limit for final reports. Insist on each member personally subscribing, rather than by families.
6. PERSEVERE TO SUCCESS. It isn't fair to let anyone think that the Church is not dependent upon every member of the Church financially.

A TIME SCHEDULE

The following schedule has been suggested by our Stewardship Department as a method of procedure in the carrying through of the Canvass. Let us study it carefully that we may adapt it to our own local needs.

WEEK BEGINNING FEBRUARY 10. Full announcements of plans for Every Member Canvass and distribution of leaflet, "The Story of N. J."

WEEK BEGINNING FEBRUARY 17. Four-minute talks in organizations or before whole Church, and distribution of leaflet, "Every Member Can."

WEEK BEGINNING FEBRUARY 24. Public presentation of purpose of canvass and distribution of leaflet, "A Log Church Wedding and Three Resolutions."

WEEK BEGINNING MARCH 3. Sermon by the pastor on the subject, "Every Member Growing," and distribution of the leaflet by the same name to all church members.

MARCH 10. ANNUAL EVERY MEMBER CANVASS, with canvassers publicly set apart to their task, and sermon by pastor on the spiritual objective of the canvass.

WEEK BEGINNING MARCH 18. Full report of the canvass mailed to Presbytery's Secretary of Stewardship.

From now until March the tenth no more vital question can claim the attention of the Presbyterians North Carolina than the campaign for the raising of

for the Benevolent causes of our beloved Church.

EDITOR'S LOOKOUT

W. A. Gamble, Pinetops, N. C.

The seventeenth annual convention of the Georgia Christian Endeavor Union will be held in the First Christian Church of Savannah, Friday, April 18th, through Sunday April 21st.

Invitations to hold the convention in the "City by the Sea" were received from Mayor Thomas M. Hoynes; George W. Tiedeman, Chairman of Chatham County Commissioners; Savannah Kiwanis Club; Exchange Club; Rotary Club; Junior Chamber of Commerce; Dr. Neal Anderson, pastor of Independent Presbyterian Church; Savannah Board of Trade; and various other organizations and individuals.

Rev. J. Randall Farris is pastor of the First Christian Church, where the convention will be held. He and his Endeavorers are issuing an urgent invitation to the Endeavorers of Georgia to attend the April meeting in large numbers, and the Savannah Endeavorers are making great preparations. The Savannah City Union has five Senior Societies, three Intermediate societies, and four Junior societies. The convention was held in this city nine years ago.

The convention registrar is Miss Helen Wyly, 808 East Henry Street, Savannah. The registration fee for Seniors is one dollar and for Intermediates fifty cents.

The officers of the Georgia Union are W. Edgar Raines, Augusta, President; Lawton G. Hatcher, Augusta, Vice-president; Miss Helen Stephens, Decatur, Secretary; Mrs. R. B. Acuff, Atlanta, Treasurer. Under these leaders and their assistants the work in Georgia seems to be increasing in vigor, and it is expected that the annual gathering will be an enthusiastic and worthwhile meeting.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S TOPIC

Charlotte Garth Adams

Sunday, Feb. 17—The Right Use of God's Gifts—

Luke 12:13-31; 2 Cor. 8:1-10; 2 Cor. 9:8-12.

Leader

This is a lesson on Stewardship, and as we are approaching the season of the Every-Member-Canvass which takes place March 10, we may think of God's Gifts to us as the measure of our stewardship. God holds us responsible for all we possess, our rights and privileges, our money, our personal powers, our opportunities, our health and strength, our place in society, and anything that we may dispose of ourselves, and for which we have an obligation. Let us consider some of these things, and all the time, let us remember we are stewards, and that we must render an account to God for what we do, and say.

Rights

Have you ever been to a zoo when it was feeding time for the animals? If so, you know how much animals need cages. How each one growls and snaps and snarls—even though there is no other animal in the cage with it and not a chance for its food to be taken from it. It seems to feel that some unseen hand is going to snatch its food away, and so it glowers and growls at the passersby. This experiment was tried with monkeys: two monkeys were placed in cages next to each other. The bars of the cages were far enough apart and the cages were close enough so that objects could be passed from one cage to the other. The monkeys were given no food at the regular feeding time so that they were both very hungry. Then one monkey was given a large quantity of bananas and the other monkey was given nothing. The monkey that had nothing screamed and begged its neighbor for bananas, but that monkey sat quietly in a corner and ate bananas until it could eat no more. Then it passed the other monkey a few. We feel contempt for such utter selfishness—and we say "What a beast!"

Of course we can't say that man is such a selfish creature as a caged animal. Society would not tolerate him. He would be an outcast. Man is selfish, but he cannot afford to be crudely selfish. Man says he has rights, and he must assert those rights in order to get a square deal. He would take his fellow-man by the throat and say, "Pay me what thou owest!" It is the "eye for an eye and tooth for a tooth" doctrine. You hit me and I hit you. We smile at the childishness of it. But just the same we want what is ours—our full share. Stop and think for this selfish attitude. And think of this: For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that though He was rich yet for your sakes He became poor, that ye through his poverty might become rich.

Riches

"Teacher, bid my brother divide the inheritance with me!" How did Jesus answer this demand? Did he call the brother and upbraid him for being so selfish? No. Here were two selfish men and selfishness in the one was just as bad as selfishness in the other. He said, "Take heed and keep yourselves from all covetousness: for a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the food and drink—a gluttonous creature who was rich in things that he possesseth." Then He told the parable of the rich fool—the man who gave himself up to enjoying nothing but earthly things, the man who said, "Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years; take thine ease, eat, drink, be merry." But God said, "Thou foolish one, this night is thy soul required of thee; and the things which thou hast prepared, whose shall they be?" Being rich in things blinds us to our real poverty. We try to drug ourselves with food and drink so that we will not think of our real need. We think that everything can be bought; we see only the price tag. "How hardly shall they that trust in riches enter into the kingdom of God."

The Gift of Living

It has been said that civilized man spends two-thirds of his waking life in obtaining the means to make life possible, and that it is no wonder he makes a bungle of the third part that is left. But, we ask, what is living? We must work—is that not living? And there are a great many things that are called drudgeries. Do we not live when we drudge? Or is it then that we become a part of a machine? Living, if we will stop to think, is not so much in doing as in being. How do we look at a thing to be done? There is nothing virtuous about washing dishes or about chopping wood, it is all in the way we go about it. But work well done is the theme for many a poem. Living is more than eating and drinking, and being clothed and sheltered. These are necessities, to be sure, but we must make such things our servants and not become servants to them. "Be not anxious for your life what ye shall eat; nor yet for your body what ye shall put on. For the life is more than the food, and the body than the raiment—your Father knoweth that ye have need of these things. Yet seek ye first His Kingdom and these things shall be added unto you."

Blessings of Stewardship

The Bible teaches us that the faithful steward is sure to be blessed. Paul in Second Corinthians pointed out to the Christians that God did not expect more of anyone than each was able to give or do. What God wants is a willing mind, a mind that is ready to give what it can. While we cannot help comparing ourselves with others and what they do, yet each one must answer for himself to God.

God promises rich rewards to those who do the best they can. One reward is a clear conscience. We feel better when we do our duty. Another reward is a consciousness that our little help added to what others give will make a larger gift, and do what we alone could not do. After we have done our best, we often learn of the good which has been done, and we are made glad because somebody has been helped by our faithfulness.

Heavenly Rewards

We have just heard of the earthly rewards of faithful stewardship. The Bible tells us there are rewards awaiting us in heaven. Our deeds and gifts accumulate as time goes on, and the blessings we started are handed over to others, and finally, in heaven we meet many who have been made happy by our faithfulness in life. And then we hear Christ's approving words, Well done, good and faithful servant, thou hast been faithful in a few things.

I will make thee ruler over many things. Enter thou into the joy of Thy Lord.

3. Matthew is called by Jesus—Matt. 9:9.

POEMS

Come!

Come to the Saviour early,
Make Him your choice today,
Yield while the spirit calls you,
Hasten without delay.

Come in the gladsome springtime,
Quickly the seasons go,
Now is the time to trust Him,
Now is the time to sow.

Harvest will follow springtime,
Sheaves must be gathered in;
Then shall we reap God's harvest,
Or reap the fruits of sin.

Tender the love that woos you,
Hark to the Spirit's call;
Jesus once died to save you,
Make Him your all in all.

Come, come gladly to Jesus,
Turn not from Him away;
Come, come, gladly to Jesus,
Yield Him your heart today.

What God Hath Promised

God hath not promised
Skies always blue,
Flower-strewn pathways
All our lives through.

God hath not promised
Sun without rain,
Joy without sorrow
Peace without pain.

But God hath promised
Strength for the day,
Rest for the labor,
Light for the way.

Grace for the trials,
Help from above,
Unfailing sympathy,
Undying love.

Topic for February 10, 1929—"Our Bible Friend the Boy Who Gave His Lunch to Jesus."—John 6:1-13.

The Service of Worship

He that dwelleth in the secret place of the most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty.

I will say of the Lord, He is my refuge and my fortress, my God; in Him will I trust.

Hymn: "More about Jesus."

Scripture Lesson: John 6:1-13 (Dramatize.)

Prayer: Sentence prayers.

Offertory Service:

What shall I render unto the Lord for all His benefits toward me?

I will take the cup of salvation and call upon the name of the Lord.

I will pay my vows unto the Lord, in the presence of all the people.

Offertory—Music.

Response:

We give Thee but Thine own,
Whate'er the gift may be;
All that we have is Thine alone,
A trust, O Lord, from Thee—Amen.
Hymn: "Give of Your Best to the Master."
Leader's Talk:

Just as the little boy in our scripture lesson helped Jesus by giving up his lunch, Jesus wants us all to help Him. Every Junior is able to do something for Jesus. Whenever we do a good deed, we are helping Christ.

It does not matter how small the act. Maybe, it is great in the sight of God. The little boy in the lesson only had five barley loaves and two fishes, and yet Jesus was able to feed five thousand people with it, and after all the people were filled, twelve baskets of broken pieces remained over. This lesson teaches us that Jesus can accomplish great things from willing workers.

Object Lesson: (See below.)

Question: (See below.)

Poem: "Service" by Edgar A. Guest.

Bible Game: (See below.)

Hymn: "Jesus Is All the World to Me."

Questions

1. Does Jesus use boys and girls today as He did when He was upon the earth?
2. Where did the boy get his lunch?
3. Do you think his mother was anxious to have her son follow Jesus?
4. Do you think the boy was happy to give his lunch to Jesus?
5. What can we do for Jesus?
6. Have we all some talent? How does God expect us to use it?

Bible Game

A Junior describes a character in the Bible and another Junior to tell who it is. If he names the right character, he becomes the leader and describes some other person. If he gives the wrong name, another Junior is called upon. The games is to see which Junior guesses the most right names.

INTERDENOMINATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS

The Home Missions Council, with the cooperation of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America and the Council of Women or Home Missions is planning for an International, Interdenominational Home Missions Congress to be held in Washington, D. C., December 1930. Twenty-eight of the leading Protestant denominations of the United States and Canada are constituent members of the groups promoting this great Congress. The purpose of the Congress is to make a cooperative, interdenominational study of home missions and adopt a follow-up program of interdenominational cooperation in the great task of evangelizing America.

Three Commissions at Work

There are three large Commissions at work consisting of thirty to thirty-five men and women who are outstanding leaders of their denominations. These three Commissions are to give two years to a careful study of every phase of the home missionary enterprise. The findings will be brought to the Congress at Washington.

Our Contribution

Mrs. W. C. Winsborough is a member of Commission III, which deals with the subject, "Promotion of Home Missions." This Commission is divided into six-sub-committees. Mrs. Winsborough is a member of the sub-committee on "Missionary Education." We readily see how our beloved Secretary is prepared to bring to this study important contributions out of her years of rich experience and from the results of the splendid program of missionary education which has been promoted by the Woman's Work Department of our Church. It was the writer's privilege to be proxy for Mrs. Winsborough at the meetings of the Commissions and the Council of Women for Home Missions, held in Atlantic City, January 8-11, 1929, and she was impressed with the progress we have made as a denomination in Missionary Education. Although our Woman's Work Department chose for her subject "Friendship." All the talks were original and practically everybody in the conference took part.

When the tribe points were compiled it was found that the Benjaminites were a few points in the lead, so they were presented with a "loving cup" made by two funnels filled with candy kisses. Individual awards were presented to sixteen young people who had perfect records. These awards were scissors given by the All-Steel Scissors Company of Fort Smith.

The consecration service was led by Dr. Charles Anderson of Dardanelles. This was a fitting climax for such a wonderful fellowship. The resolves that were made in this service will influence lives through eternity. The conference closed at 3:30 with a "Mizpah Circle."

In reviewing that day and night of information and inspiration several things were considered as outstanding:

1. No disciplining was necessary. As far as the leaders know, not a rule was broken. (Those who are criticising youth, are asked to note this).
2. Thirty-one young people and leaders stayed through the conference without leaving the building.. Four others left at 10:30 P. M., and returned at 8:30 A. M. And this happened while influenza was still raging.
3. Sixteen out of the thirty-one full-time delegates made perfect records; that is, attended all sessions on time; participated in all activities and kept the rules.
4. With but two exceptions, both of which were excusable, every adult leader connected with the Senior and Young People's departments (Sunday School and Christian Endeavor) of First Presbyterian Church, Fort Smith, attended at least a part of the Conference. (There are nine adult teachers and counsellors.)
5. The entire cost of the conference, including three meals and a cot, was seventy-five cents per delegate.
6. All ministers but one in the Presbytery came to the conference. All but one of those who came stayed through and participated in the conference.
7. All Churches but three in the Presbytery sent young people to the Conference.
8. The Secretary of Young People's Work for the Woman's Auxiliary of the entertaining church, Mrs. S. D. Graham, planned and directed the preparation of the meals, at a total charge of but fifty-cents ($.50) per delegate. And there was no deficit!
9. The Counselors were among the finest in the Synod. They were Mr. Hurd Miller, Dr. Charles Anderson, Rev. and Mrs. R. B. Cotton, Mrs. R. M. Johnston.
10. The young people were so impressed by the Conference that they have asked that a similar one be held each year.

Mamie Gene Cole,
 Director of Religious Education, First Presbyterian Church, Fort Smith, Ark.

is a young organization, comparatively speaking, we are leading some which are more than twice our age. One of the leaders of another Church said, "The strength of the Women's Work of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. lay in her well trained volunteer workers." (Surely, the Auxiliary Circle Plan is responsible for this attainment.)

Our Presbyterian Church, U. S., is represented on the other Commissions by: Rev. S. L. Morris, D.D., Rev. Homer McMillan, D.D., Rev. James I. Vance, D.D.; Rev. H. W. McLaughlin, D.D.

Council of Women for Home Missions

Immediately following the close of the meeting of the Commissions, the Council of Women for Home Missions held its annual meeting. An informal "Get-Acquainted" for all delegates was held at Hotel Morton, January 9, at 5 p. m. This was followed by an informal dinner at which Mrs. May Leonard Woodruff, representing the Methodist Episcopal Church, gave some delightful reminiscences relating to the history of the Council. Miss Laura H. Parker, Secretary for Migrant Work, spoke of the work which the Council is doing for multitudes of migrant workers who are harvesting the crops of our land. There is a very real appeal in the story of these people—whole families who move from one section to another—working in the fields, canning factories and cranberry bogs. Perhaps, we as a denomination may some day have a share in ministering to the needs of our "Nomad Neighbors."

The first business session was held Thursday, January 10th at 9:00 a. m. The entire morning was given over to reports, and as one listened she became informed as to the many and varied activities of the Council: There is the Annual Home Missions Institute held at Chautauqua, N. Y., the Conference and Schools of Missions held each summer in different sections of our country; the ever-increasing Migrant work; the Student Work which strives to interest the students in our Colleges and Universities in the united home mission work carried on through the Council. The Committee on Study Courses gave an interesting report on the interdenominational mission study text-books for 1929-30. The Council of women for Home Missions works jointly with the Federation of Woman's Board of Foreign Missions in the promotion of the Annual World Day of Prayer. Nor do the Council activities end here, but there is a Committee on International Relations and one on Legislative Matters. Such questions as World Peace, Indian Welfare, Child Labor and Law Observance are considered by these Committees and recommendations brought to the Annual meeting.

Several joint sessions were held with the Home Missions Council at which time reports on joint work were given.

The Strategy of Home Missions

The theme for these annual meetings was "The Strategy of Home Missions." And with the opening note of the meeting of the Commissions, on through to the closing address on "The Present Situation in the American City," ever and anon we heard the challenge of the changing conditions. Again and again we were reminded of the seriousness of the task before the home mission forces.

A tremendous task challenges the Church of Christ in America. There are multitudes of neglected people living in the rural sections of our land; the cities present many complex problems, as some one has aptly said: "The banner mission field of the world today is the American city." Then we lift our eyes to the mountains we hear the cry, "Come over and help us." Then we must not be unmindful of those of other races who live among us and who know not our Saviour, millions in this fair land without a saving knowledge of Jesus Christ: Surely, such a task calls for the combined strength of all the Christian forces in America.

DAY OF PRAYER FOR COLLEGES

To the Secretaries of Spiritual Life:
 Dear Friends:—

To us has been committed the sacred task of leading our Auxiliary out into "new discoveries in the experience of prayer and intercession by which means alone can be released the power which we need for the task and which God is waiting to give us." The month of February presents three definite opportunities for guided intercession for definite causes. Through our symphonizing in prayer, not only will the spiritual life of our women be deepened but the work of Christ's Kingdom will be advanced. The three special seasons are:

Week of Prayer for Foreign Missions

As February opens we shall be in the midst of this week. The zeal and earnestness of our intercession during this week will determine our share in the Forward movement for the extension of the Gospel among the yet unreached population of our mission fields. "Pray ye therefore." Recently you received from this office the leaflet "Topics for Prayer" which is for special use during this week.

The World Day, February 15

This is a call for Christian women and girls of every race and language, living in many lands, to unite in a great fellowship of intercession. The enclosed leaflet gives further information. The program and other material may be secured from the Federation of Women's Boards for Foreign Missions, 419 Fourth Ave., New York City. Plan to observe this day together with your friends of other denominations.

Week of Prayer for Schools, February 18-25

There is urgent need for this special call to prayer for our youth of today in whom lies the hope of our Church of tomorrow. Plan with your Secretary of C. E. and M. R. for a fitting observance of this important season. Enclosed you will find a suggestive program together with some valuable facts about Schools and Colleges. See also the February Survey.

Not only are we responsible for these seasons of united prayer but it is also our duty to emphasize constantly the

PRAYER

Gen. 18:23-33; Ex. 32:31-32; Neh. 1:4-11; Dan. 6:10; Mt. 6:5-15; Lk. 18:1-14; Jn. 17:1-26; I Thes. 5:17; I Jn. 5:14-15. Print Mt. 6:5-13; Lk. 18:9-14; I Jn. 5:14-15.

We began to consider last week some of the great Bible teachings about the Christian life. The first step we saw was repentance, a radical change of mind, a turning away from sin unto God. The second step we saw was faith, not only belief, but trust in God as our Father, in Jesus Christ as our Lord and Savior. But repentance and faith are not sufficient. There can be no real religious life unless there is also prayer. As Dr. Snowden says: "Prayer is a universal instinct and in every age and under every sky man has lifted his voice in prayer to God. It is a simple exercise in which the humblest soul can engage, and yet it is a high art, calling for the best teaching and example, study and effort." We all realize that this is true. We pray instinctively, and yet in our inmost soul we know that prayer does not mean to us what it should, what it has meant to some individuals in every age since men first began to call upon God. Let us stop here and think about the matter for a moment. Is our prayer life satisfactory? Are we getting everything out of prayer that we might? Have we given it the best chance? If not, how can we learn more about the secret of successful praying? Do we really know how to pray? Perhaps we will all agree that one of the best ways is to study the habits of successful prayers. Evidently our lesson committee thought so, for the passages which they have assigned for study give us an insight into the prayer life of Moses and Nehemiah and Daniel and Paul and John and Jesus. We are embarrassed by such a wealth of material. We can not deal with all these great prayers in the small space that we have at our disposal. Perhaps it will be best for us to confine our attention to the words of Jesus. Even here we must limit ourselves. We cannot begin to consider the passages in the Gospel that deal with Jesus and prayer. We shall consider in the main therefore only those passages assigned by the lesson committee.

Read first the following passages with the purpose of discovering what you can about Jesus' way of praying for yourself. Put down any hints that come to you regarding (1) the method; (2) the objects; (3) the results. The passages are Mt. 6:5-15; Lk. 11:1-13; 18:1-14; 22:39-46.

I. The Method. How Ought We to Pray?

1. Enter into thy inner chamber, and having shut thy door, pray to Thy Father who is in secret. What did Jesus mean by this admonition? Did he mean that we were never to pray in public? That we were never to pray unless we were alone in our bedchambers, say, with our door shut? We know that He did not mean that. For He Himself prayed on the mountain top and in the Garden of Gethsemane; He prayed when He healed the blind man and when He raised Lazarus from the dead, and when He was hanging on the Cross; He went habitually to the synagogue on the Sabbath day and joined in the prayers of the worshippers. What then did he mean? He meant first of all that we were not to pray simply to be seen of men. Some of the prayers that we offer in public may be beautiful and eloquent but if they be not sincerely offered to God they have no value. We may bow our heads every reverently in Sunday School, prayer-meeting, or church, but if we do not join in the prayer, making it our own, it has no value in the sight of God, more than that it has no value for our own spiritual life. He meant more positively that we must try to enter into real communion with God, who is our Father. Perhaps this is the first lesson that we need to learn about prayer. Prayer did not mean to Jesus that God would give Him everything for which he asked. When He prayed, he met Someone. He came in contact with God. As Dr. Fosdick has written: "Let any of the spiritual seers describe the innermost meaning of prayer to them, and always this habitual attitude of secret communication lies at the heart of the matter; they are seeking God, rather than His outward gifts. As Horace Bushnell says: "I fell into the habit of talking with God on every occasion. I talk myself asleep at night, and open the morning talking with Him;" and Jeremy Taylor describes his praying as 'making frequent colloquies and short discourses between God and his own soul.' And Sir Thomas Browne, the famous physician says: "I have resolved to pray more and to pray always, to pray in all places where quietness inviteth, in the house and on the highway, and on the street; and to know no street or passage in this city that may not witness that I have not forgotten God." Ask a monk like Brother Lawrence what praying means to him, and he answers: "That we should establish ourselves in a sense of God's presence, by continually conversing with Him;" and ask the question of so different a man as Carlyle, and the reply springs from the same idea, "Prayer is the aspiration of our poor, struggling, heavy-laden soul toward its eternal Father," And so with us. Prayer is not chiefly asking God for things. It is the loftiest experience within the reach of any soul, communion with God. What about our own prayers? Do we have time and place to seek God? Do we hastily breathe forth our petitions, as though prayer is a sort of charm? Or do we really try to enter into communion with the Father.

2. Use not vain repetitions. What does Jesus mean? Does he mean that we are not to repeat our prayers, that we are not to pray for the same thing over and over again? We know that he does not mean this, for he tells us over and over again that we are to be persistent in our prayers. He tells us in this connection two stories that illustrate the persistence with which men and women seek material goods—one the story of the man who late at night goes to his neighbor's house and asks for bread. Lk. 11:5-8) the other story of a woman who hounded an unscrupulous judge till at last he gave her justice, (Lk. 18:1-7). We should have the same persistence he tells us in our search for the spiritual goods of life. "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek and ye shall find; knock and it shall be opened unto you." "And he spake a parable unto them to the end that they ought always to pray, and not to faint." Lk. 18:1. Perhaps the trouble with our prayers is just here. Perhaps we are not persistent enough in our prayers. Do we pray always? Or do we faint and grow weary? Do we ask and seek and knock with that same persistence with which that man went and called on his neighbor for bread?

But we must come back to the main question. Jesus said, Use not vain repetitions. If He did not mean that we were not to ask for the same thing over and over again, what did he mean? He meant that we were not to use vain repetitions. Or as Dr. Goodspeed renders it in his American translation of the New Testament, seeking to bring out the force of the original Greek, "Do not repeat empty phrases." Or as Moffat translates it, "Do not pray by idle rote like pagans, for they suppose they will be heard the more they say." Heathen think that prayer acts like magic. Roman Catholics think that there is some value in counting their beads, and in repeating so many Ave Marias. Protestants too, sometimes use meaningless forms, meaningless words, grace before meat, 'for Christ's sake,' we repeat certain phrases, certain petitions like a parrot, perhaps the usual prayer before retiring, and we think we are really praying.

Dr. Fosdick says in this connection: "Our prayers are often unreal because they do not represent what in our inward hearts we sincerely crave. We ask God for the 'greater gifts' which we do not 'desire earnestly.' For example we pray against some evil habit in our lives, while at the same time we refuse to give up the practices that make the habit easy, or the companionship in which the habit thrives. We go through the form of entreating God to save us from the sin, but we do not want the answer enough to burn the bridges across which the sin continually comes. Our petition is a lame and ineffective whim without driving power." (or again) "We go through the form of praying for our friends. It seems the right thing to do and it gives us at least a momentary glow of unselfishness. But the prayer does not so rise from a controlling desire for our friends' good, that we can be counted on all that day to be thoughtful about their needs, sensitive to their feelings, generous to their faults, glad of their success, and helpful to our utmost in their service. We often do not really care enough about our friends, so that our supplication for them has vital meaning for us and therefore for God." And so with regard to our prayers say for missions. "The plain fact often is that while we are offering prayers we are offering nothing else. We make supplication a substitute for devotion. We do not give to missions with any deep sense of stewardship, but rather treat the cause of the kingdom as a charity, to which an occasional dolc from our surplus is sufficient. In our inmost desires we are not devotedly set on the triumph of Christ's cause so that we seek information about missions, make as generous gifts as we can, and put personal service into strengthening the church as the 'home base.' In our petitions for the missionaries how often as Friar Lawrence phrases it, we are 'fooling ourselves with trivial devotions.'"

And so we might continue. But let us stop and consider our own prayers. Let us be perfectly honest with ourselves. Do our prayers really express the dominant desires of our lives and are they intelligently offered, or do they consist in large measure of 'empty phrases?' But there is a question that rises here. Jesus says, God knows what we have need of before we ask. Some people say then, why then should we pray at all? We reply that if anyone thinks that we pray simply to inform God of our needs, he has not learned the first lesson in prayer. God knows that we have need of food, but He expects us to work to obtain it, for physical labor is essential to man's perfect development. He knows that we have need of knowledge, but He expects us to study to obtain it, for mental exertion is necessary for man's perfect development. He knows that we have need of spiritual good which we cannot obtain by the labor of our hands, or by the effort of our minds, but He expects us to pray that we may receive it, for fellowship with God and conscious dependence upon Him is necessary for our perfect development along spiritual lines. There are some things which God cannot afford to give us until we have prepared our hearts to receive them by persistent prayer. As Plummer says: We are not moving God toward us; for of that there is no need; we are raising ourselves to Him. Or as Augustine said long ago: "Prayer cleans and purifies the heart, and makes it more capable of receiving the divine gifts. God is always ready to give us His light, but we are not always ready to receive it. By prayer we open channels through which blessings which are always ready may flow." And when we keep this in mind we understand more clearly why we must really enter into the presence of God, and why our prayers must be sincere expressions of our dominant desires, if they are to be effective. There are other lessons of Jesus that we might consider if we had the space, but perhaps these two are fundamental: "When you pray, go into your own room, and shut the door and pray to your Father who is unseen. . . And when you pray do not repeat empty phrases as the heathen do." We consider next.

II. The Objects. What May We Pray For?

When the disciples asked Jesus to teach them how to pray he taught them that familiar prayer which we call the Lord's Prayer. He repeated it also in the Sermon on the Mount, and told them to pray after this manner. We do not mean to suggest in the slightest degree that it was Jesus' idea that his disciples should pray only for those objects mentioned in His model prayer. Himself went easily and naturally to the Father with everything that was on His heart, and so should we. And yet there is much that we can learn about the legitimate objects of prayer from a careful study of the petitions of the Lord's prayer.

We note to begin with that three of the six petitions the first three, refer to the things of God. We gather from this that we should pray for God's interests well as our own. Many of us pray only for our own needs, the needs of our family. Do we also pray for the needs of the Kingdom? We gather in the second place that we should put the interests of God first, our own interests second. This does not mean that we always mention the Divine interests first, though it may help to put us in the proper mood if we did so more often. But even when the petitions with which we voice are altogether for our own needs, the interests of God should be in mind. Even in the presence of life's tragedies we should pray as Jesus did in the Garden of Gethsemane, 'Nevertheless not my will, Thine be done.' Is it at all possible that our prayers have not meant to us what we would like because selfishly we have sought our own interests to the neglect of God's interest, because sublimely perhaps we have sought our own interests at the expense of the Divine interests? But what are the Divine interests?

1. Hallowed by Thy name. The name of God in the Bible always represents the character of God. To hallow means to make known as holy on the part of God to regard as holy on the part of man. Jesus taught us to pray that God would reveal to us more and more the holiness of His character, and that He would enable us and other men to recognize and reverence His character. As we offer this petition we pledge ourselves reverence and to lead men to reverence the name of God.

2. Thy Kingdom come. The Kingdom is God's in the heart of man, man as an individual, men as organized into society. When we offer this petition we pray that God's rule may be established in our hearts and the hearts of other men, and in the social, industrial, political life of our times, and we pledge ourselves work toward the accomplishment of that end. We pray for that glorious consummation of the Kingdom when Jesus shall come again in the glory of the Father.

3. Thy will be done. If the Kingdom is to come men must submit their wills to the will of God. We pray that men may carry out His will into all the details of life. We pledge ourselves that we will submit our own wills to His, and seek to bring about the acceptance of His will by other men.

The reverencing of God's character, the coming of God's Kingdom, the doing of God's will these are great ends toward which our prayers should be directed. Are they the burden of our prayers? But we have other needs, needs of a more personal character, that we should present unto God. So Jesus taught us to pray:

4. Give us this day our daily bread. We gather from this petition that it is proper for us to ask God for the material blessings that we need. Daily bread probably means the bread that is necessary for the support of our lives. Jesus does not encourage us to ask for superfluous things. The petition covers what is needed for culture and refinement, but it will not cover luxury and extravagance. Moreover it is a social prayer. Jesus teaches us to pray not only for ourselves, but for our fellowmen, 'our daily bread.' No man who sincerely prays this petition can take advantage of his fellowmen, or refuse to minister to his need. Do we pray for the necessities or the extravagances of life, for ourselves alone, or also for our fellowmen?

5. Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors. Jesus taught us in the previous petition to pray for our material needs (not our material wants), He comes to our spiritual needs. The first petition looks to the past, the second to the future. As we think of the past we realize that we have sinned against God. We pray that He may forgive us as we have forgiven our fellowmen. "The 'as' must not be pressed to mean that the forgiveness of the Father's forgiveness is to be measured by the forgiveness which we forgive our fellowmen. No such bargaining is to be understood. What is meant is that we ourselves must cultivate the spirit of forgiveness toward those who seem to have wronged us before we can venture to claim forgiveness for ourselves." And how often we pray, with hard feelings in our hearts toward our fellowmen, 'Forgive us our debts as we give our debtors.'

6. And bring us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. This petition looks to the future. The man who prays realizes his weakness and his dependence on God. He prays that he may not be too often severely tried, and that when he is tried God will deliver him.

The words which usually follow were not a part of the original prayer, and are not contained in the Bible. They were added by the early church. They are, however, the reason why it is proper for us to pray. 'For thine is the Kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.'

In looking back over this prayer we note that it puts the most emphasis first on the interests of God, next on man's spiritual needs, last on man's material needs. Some of us reverse the order of Jesus: We most earnestly for material blessings; less earnestly for spiritual blessings, least earnestly for the things of God.

III. The Results. What Does Prayer Accomplish?

We had hoped to discuss the results that Jesus taught, and that He expected us to obtain from prayer but we have already exceeded our space limits after all it is not so important. If we pray as Jesus taught us to pray, and for the things that He taught us to pray, we shall know in our own experience what He meant when he said, Ask and ye shall receive, seek ye shall find, knock and it shall be opened unto you. We shall know what Paul meant when he said, nothing be anxious; but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be known unto God. And the peace of God which is above all understanding shall guard your hearts and minds in Christ Jesus. Phil. 4:6-7.

Many of us would like to withdraw from Federal Council of Churches in America, because it maintains a lobby in Washington, claiming to speak for many millions of Protestants, and undertaking to instruct Congress and the President about everything national and international, and tell them what they shall do. And some of us don't think it is the duty of the church to control and instruct the government. One of our ablest church historians and theologians would not attend the Thanksgiving Day service, he said, the state had no right to suggest to the church how, or when, or for what purpose, it should worship. It was a violation of the complete separation of church and state, an invasion of the church's peculiar province by the state.

Abuse Of a Great Principle.

Whether our position is true and right, and our principle tenable, time will tell. Our forefathers did not adhere to that principle. Dr. Witherspoon, who did so much to do with the adoption of the Declaration of Independence, would today be called a "political paragon."

Before the Revolution, probably not a Presbyterian preacher in the land but preached on independence. As called, as you know, a "Presbyterian rebellion." Walpole said, "Cousin America has run away with Presbyterian parson." In Woodstock, Va., Muhlenburg preached his famous sermon on Ecc. 11:1-8; "To every man there is a season, and a time for every purpose under heaven; a time of war, and a time of peace." In his sermon, he threw off his clerical garb, revealing himself in the uniform of a Continental colonel, with a commission in his hand. And he led the men of his congregation to war. Just before the civil war, when the burning issue, my own grandfather in Woodstock, Va., so preached that men rose up and left church in anger.

Our fingers once well-burned by the action of the Philadelphia Assembly, we have ever since been exceedingly zealous for the entire separation of church and state. "A Burnt Child Dreads the Fire."

This great principle, obtained at so great a price, is abused. And it will be abused, if our educational system is taken over by any one party for the inculcation of peculiar religious doctrines, and utilized as a channel to convey its sectarian teachings to the multitude.

It lifts its voice in loud protest against special instruction in our schools as a propaganda for teaching false to them. The point seems to be well taken. And this, a law is even now proposed, in this very session of Congress, to circumscribe, in an indirect way, the freedom of the press and limit the freedom of speech.

What shall be said, when one religious denomination is utilizing the whole educational machinery of the state for the dissemination of its peculiar religious and sectarian teaching, its tenets, and doctrines? Today our entire educational system appears to be controlled from top to bottom, and saturated with the teaching of one particular church. And it is not the Presbyterian Church, nor the Methodist Church, nor the Baptist Church, nor the Episcopal Church, nor the Lutheran Church, nor the Roman Catholic Church, nor any one of the evangelical bodies. It is a church whose teachings at points with any and all of the great Christian churches of our country. Its main doctrine consists in a belief in God's existence—some God, somewhere—any of the doctrines distinctive of the gospel; and to which any Jew, or Mohammedan, or heathen, or average infidel might easily subscribe. Doctrines of an infallible Bible, the deity of Christ, or of Saviour's faith in a crucified Redeemer, are scoffed at in schoolrooms. And the doctrines of this sect, for which is, and a comparatively small sect at that—are inculcated in our schools from the university to the poorest country school house. They are leavening the minds of our children, and preparing the way for our apostasy from the faith of our fathers, under which has grown great. This objectionable doctrine, largely from one or two great universities, that most of our teachers and text-books, is slowly infiltrating the minds of the masses, through schools, and will in time swing our people away to a gospel, which is not another.

Among our people in their love and zeal for the principle embodied in its Constitution—by their own will stand for this, remains to be seen. When used to the situation and they see what is going on, they will speak.

It is that the state will have to pass some laws—reluctant we are to regulate such matters by compelling school teachers in their teaching, if they will not observe the proprieties of their position as teacher's chair. If they themselves will not respect the spirit of the Constitution, without any law they may have to be compelled by law. Or shall we go back to the position of the Catholic church—let it, and say it is for the church to supervise the instruction of the government, and tell it what shall not, be taught in our schools?

Or yet, the state school is about to crowd the school off the earth, unintentionally, of course. And with this pernicious sectarian doctrine, it is the same into the schools the church has founded for children. It is saying to the church, "You can't run schools of your own to teach what you want if you don't teach what we want taught, your school can't teach in the public school." And so a school, indeed, is wielded over their heads.

precisely the tyranny our forefathers revolted against. The state church once taxed dissenters for and compelled people to attend, and forbade them the privilege of having churches of their own to attend, even after paying tithes to the support of the church. And it may come to pass again, that the church and state, will have to press for the school and the state—if the school is

MEN OF THE SPRUCE PINE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

The Men-of-the-Church at Spruce Pine, N. C., were organized about nine months ago. The Assembly's plan of organization was thoroughly studied and adapted to local conditions. A recent report from this church shows that splendid results have come to them through the organization; the largest result, perhaps, being a fine growth of the men. The pastor says this has been wonderful. I am repeating below what he has to say about conditions.

"When the men of the Spruce Pine Church were organized, there were only 31 male members over 18 years of age in our church. Out of this number 15 were on the retired list. They are still there and will, in all probability, remain. Only five of them are possible and a miracle only will reach these. We had, therefore, 16 workable men, nine of whom were active and semi-active. Five were interested and ready to make it go. We went to work with the five and now have 19 active men, one of them being a new convert, God having used the Men-of-the-Church to win him."

"We are organized according to the Assembly's Plan, abbreviated, so that we might use four Department Chairmen only. These Department Chairmen were assigned one of each of the four groups formed at the time of organization, and each Chairman made responsible for the Leader of the Group until he could realize his own responsibility as a Group Leader. This, they are beginning to do by degrees. The Groups, however, have not functioned just as we had hoped, but we have found the reason and are beginning to remedy it."

"We have our Council Meetings regularly. This has really been the thing that has held us together. Each Council Meeting giving us new inspiration, ideals and plans which bring us nearer our goal. The last Council Meeting was wonderful."

"We have no regular monthly meetings for men alone. The Council Meetings serve both as spiritual and business meetings and all the leaders are usually present for them. At the beginning of next month, we are planning an extra meeting for the men alone. This will be devoted to worship, inspiration and social service."

"The Men-of-the-Church have had charge of the evening service on each first Sunday in the month, (the Monthly Programs have been put on at these services), and our fondest dreams have been exceeded at each of these services. Nine months ago, most of the men could hardly get on their feet; now practically all of them make talks on given subjects. Some still hesitate. Even these have been used. A quartet has been developed in the organization which sings not only for men's meetings, but for regular church services as well. The quartet composed partly of the men who have so far been unwilling to talk, and we are hoping soon to get them talking as well as singing, but will not rush them."

"We take only one objective at a time and concentrate on that. Our first one was the evening service. The congregations have been doubled, perhaps more than doubled, as a result. The next objective was the Men's Bible Class. We are working on it now and, if last Sunday's record can be made permanent, it has already doubled attendance. When we get this to going good, we will start something else. "One thing at a time," is our slogan."

"During my vacation last August I tried an interesting experiment with my men. I went away leaving no directions, no arrangements or plans whatever for the services. I did not even tell them that I expected them to carry on during my absence. Well, this worked. They not only took care of the services at the church at Spruce Pine, but at our outpost at Grassy Creek, also."

"One can almost stand off and see the spiritual growth and development of these men. They think about the church, talk about the church, pray about the church and work for the church and the beauty of it all is that they love it. Some of them are developing into soul winners."

"We hold out no inducement to the men except the spiritual benefit which they will derive from this work. The organization has had no outside speakers, no "feeds." Two suppers have been given since we organized. We are going to try suppers as an experiment, but will watch it closely. The men were asked recently if they would rather quit or go on. They answered, "Go on."

This is what the pastor says about the organization in his church:

1. "I love my men, I trust my men, I back my men, we work together in perfect harmony."

2. "The results of our organization have come from Him through prayer. My men are all praying men, practically everyone has learned to pray in public and I believe they all pray in private. Herein lies the secret of the success we have had."

3. "The organization will work with a few men as well as with many."

to be used as a propaganda for a particular form of religion, and that not a good form of religion, as a majority of our people think.

4. "Men have been enlisted, interested, and put to work, and they love it."
5. "Souls have been won to Christ."
6. "Church services have been greatly helped."
7. "The Church School has improved, especially the Men's Bible Class."
8. "Finances have not been mentioned in the organization except in Stewardship Program, and yet the finances of the church have been strengthened."
9. "The influence of our men is being felt throughout the whole community."

This is what the men themselves think of the organization. When asked recently for expressions, one man said, "It makes us all feel like brothers."

Another said, "It makes us all feel that we have a real part in the work of the church."

A third said, "It must be a good thing because man from the other churches of the community have expressed themselves to me as wishing they might have the same thing."

A fourth one said, "It helps to live better lives through the week since we feel more like practicing what we preach."

The fifth one said, "It gives us a broader outlook into the things of the Church and the Kingdom."

PRESBYTERIAN MEN DECIDE ON PROGRAM

Will Assume Responsibility for Entertainment of Annual Conference

In the meeting of the Men's Work Committee of the Virginia Presbyterian Synod, which was held here Saturday, the committee decided to assume the responsibility of the program and attendance for the annual Men's Conference which will be held at Massanetta Springs next August.

The committee, which is made up of the chairman of the eight Presbyteries of the Virginia Synod, held a round table discussion in their meeting yesterday, in which the various problems facing the workers in the different presbyteries were discussed, and methods of solving them.

The several chairmen agreed to begin a series of regional conferences, which will be held in each Presbytery early in 1929. The regional conferences will be held with representatives from each church in the Presbytery.

F. L. Temple of this city, who is chairman of the Men's Work Committee, called the conferences for the purpose of a general discussion of the problems of the Synod.

The morning session opened at ten o'clock with F. L. Temple presiding, and adjournment for luncheon was made at 12:45 o'clock. Officers of the local Y. M. C. A. took the visiting churchmen on a tour of the new Y. W. building just before luncheon was served them in the club room of the building.

Following the luncheon, the visitors made an automobile tour of the city, visiting the most of the outstanding points of interest. The afternoon session followed the drive over the city, and the conference was adjourned at 4 p. m.

F. L. Temple, accompanied by G. A. Wilson, chairman of the Appalachia Synod, will leave Roanoke Monday for Greensboro, where they will attend a similar conference of the North Carolina Synod.

The members of the committee in attendance at the meeting were: Dr. C. H. Cartledge, Baltimore; Rev. G. H. Rector of Berkeley Springs, West Va.; Prof. M. M. Edgar, of Staunton; Rev. Charles W. Reed, of Martinsville, Va.; Rev. F. M. Hawley, of Portsmouth; Rev. William Kyle Smith, of Charlottesville, and Dr. T. K. Young, of Roanoke. Among the visitors were Dr. H. S. Turner and Dr. W. E. Hudson of Staunton, and Dr. A. C. Bridgman, of Charlottesville.

"WORKING FOR THE MASTER"

Dixon Memorial, Birmingham, Ala.

We have a membership, resident and non-resident, of seventy-nine souls, twenty-nine having joined in the last ten months, nine of whom on confession of faith, and of that number seven have been mature men. "The Men-of-the-Church have been responsible."

1. "From high-ways" means just what it says. Our men as a whole are trying to do the Master's will, and are seeking the lost, telling the story of "sorrow for sin—prayer for forgiveness—renunciation. And then witnessing for Christ. Shop, street-car, neighbors and strangers within the gate are our "prospects." A follow-up system is being used by us all, and the story is told by more than one when necessary.

2. In the trips the men make here and there they use their eyes and can see empty coal-bins, bare cupboards, children without shoes, etc, etc, and AS CHRISTIANS, and in the name of Christ, supply the want. At our last meeting funds were raised to put in a closet for cleaned and mended clothing, hats, shoes, etc., and in conjunction with the ladies of the church, those of the household of faith first cared for, and others as they need.

3. We have learned from the blue-print, each as he has been questioned, HOW MAN MAY BE SAVED, and knowing can tell it to another. The one man who did such splendid work referred to, in one of our early meetings made the remark that he "had been a church member many years, but a Christian only a few weeks."

We have two meetings a month, one with the program, the other given over to debate and round-table discussion. Thirty minutes is given over to companionable fellowship, thirty minutes to music and readings, and the balance of the time for the subject of the evening.

We are "good fellows", the evenings are most enjoyable, but it is ALL in the name of, and for the sake of Christ. A few of the "tares" known in the day of our Saviour on earth, WILL SPROUT, but we seek to sift the seed at planting time.

CHURCH NEWS

We should like for our friends to observe that this issue contains more pages than usual, and that we shall usually publish such an edition in the first issue of each month. We do this to take care of matters which are crowded out of the regular weekly issues. We shall put obituaries in the first edition of each month. Also the Radio program. Extra copies will be sent to families of persons whose obituaries are printed. There is also other material we shall reserve for the first issue of the month.

We mention this so our friends may understand delays and be patient.—J. G. G.

CONCERNING THE OPTIONAL BOOKS OF FORMS

As is probably known to all the people of our Church, the General Assembly sometime ago appointed an Ad Interim Committee to prepare an Optional Book of Forms for the use of our ministers in the conduct of weddings and funerals and such other services.

The Committee has been working on this matter for sometime, but we feel that we would be greatly benefitted by concrete suggestions from the ministry and others in our Church.

Hence, we are hereby requesting our ministers kindly to send us a copy of the Forms which they are using themselves or to state to us in writing what particular Book of Forms they are now making use of. We should also like to have suggestions from any of the members of our Church who are interested in this important undertaking.

We hope that we shall have a speedy and ample response to this appeal of ours, as it is our sincere desire to produce just such a Book as will meet the needs of our constituency.

JUDGE HOBSON'S ADDRESS ON STEWARDSHIP

Free Copies on Application for Them

The address which Judge J. P. Hobson delivered last summer at Montreat on "The Worship of God With That Which He Gives Us" has in substance been printed as a tract by our committee of publication with this notice on the cover:

"Twenty copies of this tract will be sent free of charge, postage paid, to any Pastor or Woman's Auxiliary for distribution. Address Rev. R. C. Long, 305 Henry Grady Building, Atlanta, Ga."

It is earnestly hoped that all our pastors and auxiliaries will accept this generous offer and give the tract a wide circulation, for we are assured that a better understanding of the subject by our people would be of great benefit at this time when all of our committees are faced with deficits. If additional copies are needed, they may be had from the committee at ten cents each.

Ph.D., New Student Secretary of Christian Education, who visits our colleges, both Church and State schools, presenting the claims of Christ and the Church to the students, especially our Presbyterian boys and girls.

REV. W. S. HAMITER ILL

Rev. W. S. Hamiter, of Chester, S. C., formerly pastor of Pincville and Banks churches, Mecklenburg Presbytery, is at the Charlotte Ear, Eye and Throat Hospital. He has passed through an operation on one eye, and is getting on well, and seems to be generally improving. His friends will be glad to hear of his improvement. He will be glad to see any of them in his room at the hospital.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVORERS, TAKE NOTICE!

Inasmuch as the topics for discussion among the young people's societies of Christian Endeavor during the month of April deal exclusively with the Bible, the American Bible Society is happy to announce that interesting and usable material related to the April topics may be secured free of charge from the society.

The topics, together with the available material, are as follows:

April 7—Using the Bible as a Daily Guide. Write for: "How to Use the Bible."

April 14—Bible Messages Needed Today. Write for: "Woodrow Wilson on the Bible;" "Wm. J. Bryan on the Bible;" "Theodore Roosevelt on the Bible."

April 21—The Wonder of the Bible. Write for: "Facts and Figures;" "Great Men on the Greatest Book;" "The Most Important Thing in My Life;" "The Arizona Cowboy."

April 28—The Triumphs of the Bible on the Mission Field. Write for: "Setting the Bible Loose in Africa;" "The What, Where and Why of the American Bible Society;" "If the Work Should Stop Tomorrow;" "An American Indian on a New Trail;" "Bread on the Waters;" "The Bible in the World."

Officers and members of Christian Endeavor Societies desiring any of the above material are asked to address: General Secretary George Wm. Brown, American Bible Society, Bible House, Astor Place, New York City.

THOMASVILLE ORPHANAGE CHANGES ITS NAME

"Charity and Children" gave the following statement concerning the new name for the Thomasville Baptist Orphanage at Thomasville, N. C.:

The General Manager in a brief but practical and pungent discussion of the Orphanage report before the convention on Wednesday of last week, suggested a change of name of the Orphanage from its present rather cumbersome name to "The Mills Home," as a fitting memorial to the late John H. Mills, the first General Manager of the Orphanage. Dr. Kesler said the word Orphanage ought to be left out. He referred to several State Institutions that had changed their names to those more appropriate and the new name proposed for the orphanage would hold in everlasting remembrance the name of the man who had done so much for the children of the State. A motion was made by Rev. M. A. Adams, of Rutherfordton, to change the name in accordance with the suggestion of Dr. Kesler, and the motion was passed without a dissenting vote. There will no doubt be some difference of opinion on the part of some of the brethren in the State but there was not a word of dissent at High Point on the motion to change the name. Several efforts have been made to erect a memorial to John H. Mills and one building was erected to honor his memory, but it was an inadequate and unsuitable memorial, and will soon be torn down and removed. But this action of the convention to call the whole institution by his honored name will put his stamp upon it and suitably memorialize the name of the great man who was one of the outstanding figures in the public life of North Carolina.

ANOTHER GOSPEL TRIUMPH

Egbert W. Smith

No doubt our home people know of the excellent work being done by Rev. W. F. Bull, our Korean missionary, with his revival tent and his band of workers and musicians. To his remarkable command of language Mr. Bull adds extraordinary evangelistic gifts. When I was with him in Korea several years ago I urged him to concentrate on this eminently fruitful form of Christian work. The blessing of God has richly attended his evangelistic services. In the following paragraphs taken from a recent letter he gives a thrilling account of the competition his revival tent and musicians had to suffer from a traveling show, and the victorious outcome.

"One of the churches in which we held meetings is located in a large town. We had our tent pitched in a lovely pine grove up on a hillside just on the edge of the town, and were having fine crowds and much interest every night. We had been running for several days when a traveling show came into the town and pitched their tent down in the market place. The local Christians and even our own band of workers were greatly distressed, fearing that this counter-attraction would prove so great that it would just about empty our tent and break up our meetings.

"Our band went out as usual to advertise our meetings in the town and surrounding villages. The traveling shows were even more vigorous in their advertising. After supper that evening, as the time came around for our meeting to begin, our band, as is their custom, went out to the tent and began playing, to attract the crowd. Ordinarily they play inside the tent while the crowds are assembling, but on this particular evening they went outside the tent, and such lusty playing I do not think I have ever heard. The show's band was holding forth down in the market place, beating gongs and raising a perfect din to draw the crowds to their tent. Early in the evening the crowd began coming up the hill and pouring into our tent, until soon it was filled with the largest crowd that we had at that place. I never saw a happier group of people than the local Christians and our band of workers as they saw our tent rapidly filling up and the fear of our meeting being broken up relieved.

"After our tent was full and I was ready to begin preaching one of my helpers whispered to me that the show had only been able to sell three tickets that night so they had called off their performance and that the whole troupe had come up to our meeting. He then pointed them out to me around on the outskirts of the crowd. There were quite a large number in their company so this gave me a fine opportunity to preach to a group that do not often come within range of the Gospel message. Korean shows are always very immoral affairs, so the Christians were radiantly happy that night that our meetings were not broken up as they had feared, but that the Gospel had triumphed over the powers of darkness."

NORTH CAROLINA

Greensboro, First—Woman's Auxiliary: The Woman's Auxiliary met Monday afternoon at 3:30. "The Critic and Missions," the last of the studies in our mission book was given by Mrs. J. E. Hardin and Mrs. J. Ralston Cargill.

Meeting of the Committee of Elders and Deacons:

A meeting of the elders and deacons who have been working on the pledges for the new church held in the Smith Memorial Building January 27th.

Prayer meeting: Those who heard Mr. Coons' on "Holiness" last Wednesday evening at our Prayer Service went away feeling that we were indeed fortunate in having Mr. Coons in our church family. We hope a large number of our people will hear Mr. Coons next Wednesday evening.

Our speaker January 27 was Dr. Fletcher L. Brockman who for years has been closely identified with Foreign Mission work. Dr. Brockman began his M. C. A. work in 1891 as a student secretary, went to Nanking, China, in 1898 and since that time has been connected with the foreign mission work of the Y. M. C. A. Dr. Brockman was secretary of the National Council for the Far East for nine years and since 1924 has been Associate General Secretary of the National Council of the Y. M. C. A. He has written a number of books on China and the Far East and is recognized as one of the leading authorities on missions. We feel very fortunate in having Dr. Brockman with us. Mrs. Brockman is the sister of our former pastor, Dr. Melton Clark.

A Prayer Band has been organized in our church with twelve charter members. The band has pledged itself to pray especially this month for Foreign Mission Causes, leaders of our Mission Study Book, Dr. Myers and the work of our Church. If there are others who would like to join this fine group, please call Mrs. J. E. Hardin or Mrs. E. E. Gillespie.

A mid-winter Y. W. C. A. Conference was held January 29-30 in the Y. W. C. A. Hut. The chief speaker was Mrs. John Hanna, National President of the Y. W. C. A.

Charlotte—Rev. McKendree Long is holding a series of meetings in the A. R. P. Church at Glenwood, a suburb of the city.

Mecklenburg Presbytery held an adjourned meeting on Monday, at the First Church, Charlotte. The meeting was devoted to a prayer service in the interest of Stewardship. The program was in charge of Rev. S. B. McLean, Presbytery's Secretary of Stewardship, and short addresses were made by Dr. Gillespie, Dr. Lacy L. Little, Rev. J. M. Walker and Rev. E. A. Dillard.

The Presbytery spent the morning in intercession at the McGee Church was granted the privilege of continuing Rev. A. H. Frazer as supply pastor, and it was well as given the same with reference to Dr. C. Sommerville.

The Sugaw Creek Church has called Mr. Leroy Burney, a senior at Columbia Seminary, Durham, N. C., who it is hoped will take up the work of a church on completion of his course this spring about June 1. Rev. J. G. Garth, news editor of the Presbyterian Standard has supplied this congregation since September, 1927, taking up the work after the resignation of Rev. M. E. Peabody.

The new church at Mulberry, Rev. J. C. Griener, is nearing completion, as is the church in Park, Dr. E. G. Gammon, pastor. North Carolina congregation is worshipping in the community building of the Highland Park mill section. Plans are being laid for a new structure. The pastor, Rev. Doty, feels optimistic about the work of this church and he is being strongly supported by his faithful people. The old church was burned Christmas Gastonia—Rev. Wm. Ray Dobyns, D.D., of Birmingham, Ala., is holding services in the First Church this week.

Presbyterian Orphans' Home, Barium Springs—The last Sunday in January was a very full one for Barium. In fact all the days are full, but no more than the unusual happens. On this particular Sunday we had Sunday School as usual. At the eleven o'clock hour Dr. Mercer Blain, who has been a missionary in China for over thirty years, brought us an uninteresting message on the material, political and religious development of China. Sunday afternoon at three o'clock, Mr. C. T. Carr, director of Young People's Work in the Synod will continue through the week. Then again Sunday evening at seven o'clock Dr. Blain spoke in the church on the subject of "Faith and Self-Denial." This week is being observed by the Auxiliary.

We think there is a gradual improvement in the pastor, Rev. W. C. Brown, who has been confined to his bed for the past seven weeks. We feel sure his many friends throughout the Synod are rejoicing in their prayers.

Greensboro—On May 21, 1922, Mr. Charles Cox, our choir director, came to Greensboro to take of our music. In these seven years he has done a great deal for our music but he and his family have endeared themselves to the members of the church. In the moving of Mr. Troxell to Durham, N. C., we are not only losing a fine choir leader and a good tenor, but we will also miss his Miss Helena Troxell has been the pianist of the Men's Bible Class for several years, and is a church pianist, and both of the boys, Willie and Mark, have been singing in our choir or playing our orchestra. We will also miss Mrs. Troxell is a member of our Auxiliary and the power of the throne. Mr. Troxell leaves with the friendship and affection of all our people, and we wish him Godspeed as he takes up his duties and makes his home in Durham. We are glad to say that Mr. Cox will continue to direct our choir on Thursday until a new director is secured.—First Church stitution. Several names were presented and discussed. The committee hopes to be able to place before the trustees, at a special meeting of that body, the name of an acceptable man to lead off and serve as the first head of this new college.

Maxton—The executive committee of the Presbyterian Junior College met January 24, in Maxton, further plan to nominate a man for president

The committee dealt with various matters pertaining to the opening of college next fall and it was announced that a nice start has been made toward the equipment and maintenance fund being raised to supplement the money which will be provided by the Synod of North Carolina. No attempt will be made at present to raise an endowment, but it is expected that special friends of the institution will contribute to this maintenance fund which will be used in lieu of the income from an endowment. Of course, an endowment will be raised later as soon as other schools of the church have completed their endowment drives. Ten men in this state who would subscribe $1,000 a year each or five men $1,000 each and ten men $500 each would give this new institution the equivalent of a two hundred thousand dollar endowment.

The members of the executive committee which met here in the office of J. P. Wiggins, secretary of the board, were: E. H. Evans, chairman, Laurinburg; Rev. W. M. Fairley, D.D., Raeford; Rev. E. L. Miller, D.D., R. L. McLeod and J. P. Wiggins of Maxton.

Bluff Church, Fayetteville Presbytery—The daughter church of the "Old Bluff," which was organized in 1858 by the Rev. James Campbell, was destroyed by fire on December 9, 1928. The loss of this historic old church is deeply felt by the whole church. Plans are now being advanced, whereby funds may be secured to rebuild. Presbyterianism is growing rapidly in this section of the state. We cannot let the work fall behind in this immediately section. We would like to see the foundation for our new church laid by the first of June. In order to do this we will have to have help.

At present we are worshipping in an old store house, which one of our beloved elders was kind and generous enough to let us have.

Any one wishing to help replace our church will please send all contributions to Mr. R. S. Price, the treasurer. We assure you that anything sent will be gratefully appreciated.

Post office, Wade, N. C.

Harmony-Tabor-Shiloh—Dr. J. M. Clark, formerly superintendent of Home Missions in Concord Presbytery, has taken this group of churches to supply. Thus Dr. Clark keeps active in the Lord's service though he has laid aside the heavier duties of the superintendency.

Presbyterian Orphans' Home, Barium Springs—Little Joe's Church was fortunate on a recent Sunday morning to have as supply Mr. W. E. Hill, son of Mr. W. E. Hill, D.D., Richmond, Va. Young Mr. Hill is a senior at Davidson College. His subject was "Prayer." A very helpful message.

Very interesting exercises are being conducted every Sunday morning in the dining room by our pastor, Mr. Jos. B. Johnston. Sometime ago he asked different cottages to take charge of the program, suggest a subject for the morning exercise. These subjects were to be a phase of the home life here in which we are especially interested. There has been a hearty response on the part of the children, and the result has been very gratifying.

It might be interesting to our readers and friends to know that our large family here boasts of six pairs of twins. The latest arrivals are the Billings twins from Stony Point. Mr. Johnston says that he can only tell some of these youngsters apart by the shape of the eye, turn of the toe, or twist of the nose.

SOUTH CAROLINA

Person First—At the suggestion of the vice-president of the Auxiliary, Mrs. Frank Todd, this church adopted a unique plan for its School of Missions this year and it proved most satisfactory. Members of the Auxiliary gathered in the afternoon at three o'clock, and the first four chapters of the mission book, "The Desire of All Nations" were presented by appointed leaders.

A delicious supper was served at which, in addition to the ladies, a fine group of young people, juniors and some of our men were present, and as a season of fine fellowship. Then from seven o'clock the remaining chapters were presented by the adults, while the Young People and Juniors ministered in two other departments for their study. The entire program for the day was planned by Mrs. Bennett Townsend, and was most helpful. The attendance was 157, and generous offering was received.

Thornwell Orphanage—On Christmas day Dr. Wiggins received a telegram from the Central Presbyterian Church of Atlanta, stating that their Christmas offering for Thornwell was $2,322.17 and that a check for that amount was being forwarded with the pastor's greetings to the big orphan family.

This large gift was made possible through the efforts of the Brotherhood Bible Class. They wrote some time ago saying that the class wanted to provide for the coming year of twelve children at $100 each, or a total of $1,200. The twelve children were selected and their picture made and sent over to Atlanta friends and some individual members of the class, or members jointly, selected a child to adopt. But the class did not stop at this set goal but gave a total of $1,700. Gifts from other members of the school brought the total offering up to $2,322.17. The Central Church has the record of making the largest Christmas offering to the orphanage of any church in the three Synods. The Greenwood (S. C.) First Church comes second.

Twenty pupils of the Thornwell Orphanage presented "The Quest of the Holy Grail," a Christmas pageant in Greenwood, Sunday morning, December 3rd, at the First Presbyterian Church. For many years under the leadership of the school's Superintendent, Dr. S. C. Hodges, a special program has been arranged at the Christmas season and a special offering taken for the orphanage. The young people were guests for dinner in the homes of the congregation and each was presented with a lovely Christmas remembrance by the Greenwood friends.

A letter received from Dr. Hodges stated that the pageant was one of the most beautiful and enjoyable ever witnessed in Greenwood. He further stated that the collection taken by the school for orphanage totaled $736.00.

There were many joys which came to us at the Christmas season. The reader had many of these in common with us. But there was one that was rather our very own. That was receiving cards of greetings from so many of the sons and daughters of Thornwell. And they came from near and far—as far as China and Japan.

In checking over we found 103 from the old boys and girls whose minds and hearts turned back to their childhood home at the Christmas season. Our best wishes go out to them and our prayers go up to the loving Father for them.

Enoree Presbytery met in Greenville, S. C., on January 22, 1929, and received Rev. J. H. Viser, D.D., from Norfolk Presbytery and appointed a commission to install him pastor of the Greenville Third Church on the first Sabbath night in February. It dismissed candidate Thomas C. Barr, at his own request, to the Presbytery of New York.

It received Mr. F. G. McHugh, Jr., a member of Union Church, under its care as a candidate for the ministry. He is in the Senior Class in the Presbyterian College of South Carolina. S. C.

APPALACHIA

Morristown, Tenn.—Our Church held a School of Mission Study the three last days of January, using Dr. Egbert Smith's book, "The Desire of All Nations." The school had three large classes divided into two periods each and a recess between the two periods with light refreshments furnished by different circles of the ladies auxiliary.

Our pastor, Dr. S. H. Hay, was promoter of the school and taught the adult class, assisted each evening by one of the men of the church. Mrs. George S. Hale taught the class of ages in the early teens and Miss Edith Scott had charge of the children under twelve. The book was enjoyed and the school a success.

We started a revival on Sunday, February 3rd which fittingly followed the interest in the mission school and plan to hold the meeting for two weeks. Our pastor doing the preaching, assisted in the singing by Prof. Colbert, music director of the Morristown High School.

ARKANSAS

Little Rock, Second—During the month of January 14 new members were received. A reception was given to the congregation by the pastor and his wife.

GEORGIA

Atlanta, Gordon Street—Rev. Harold Shields, pastor. At the mid-week service the pastor recently concluded a series of studies from Maj. James W. McClung's book on Stewardship, entitled, "Man's Obligation to His Maker." During the period of the studies, a Stewardship Reading Contest was put on by the Woman's Auxiliary. After the circles had made their reports it was found that 301 pieces of literature on the subject of Stewardship had been read by the people of the church. At a congregational meeting held on January 13th, the following men were elected to the bench of elders: F. W. Beacham, E. C. Latta, J. M. Ruff, E. H. Mitchell, Dr. T. F. Guffin, and J. E. Woodruff. And on January 20, the following men were elected to the board of deacons: J. N. Parker, C. B. Barber, T. G. Pendley, Duncan Peek, Alton A. Dobson, S. D. Snyder, L. S. Schillinger and W. G. Combe. The people of this congregation deeply sympathize with our pastor and his family in the home-going of Harold McQueen Shields, Jr., the five-year-old-son of the manse, which occurred on December the 12th.

Atlanta—Dr. Richard Orme Flinn, pastor of North Avenue Church, is conducting meetings in Miami, Fla., in the church of which Dr. P. W. Dubose is pastor, the Westminster Church.

Synod of Georgia and Presbyterian College—At the stated fall meeting of the Synod of Georgia in Brunswick, on October 17, Rev. G. G. Mayes, D.D., vice-president of the board of trustees of Presbyterian College, and President John McSween presented to the Synod the overture of the board of trustees to participate in the ownership, control and support of the college. These representatives were given a most cordial reception and the Synod of Georgia adopted the report of its Educational Committee, heartily accepted the proposition, conditioned upon the clear understanding that the Synod of Georgia assumes no obligation for past and present financial obligations of the college. It provided, however, for joint efforts in providing current support and aid in any other material developments which may be found necessary.

The Synod called upon the Presbyteries to adopt the Synodical unit plan for the support and control of educational institutions. The Synod's Work Committee was directed and authorized to carry out the proposed joint control and support and directed that the Presbyterian College be made the recipient of one half of one per cent of all benevolent funds.

Since the meeting of the Synod of Georgia, five Presbyteries adopted the resolution without reservation; two others acted favorably but postponed final action until the spring meeting. This action means that Presbyterian College is now the official Synodical college for men for South Carolina and Georgia which will necessitate a change of name. It also adds 25,000 Presbyterians to the constituency of the college.

In the student body of 220 there are this year 18 young men from the Synod of Georgia at Presbyterian College.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Washington Central—Rev. Dr. C. Darby Fulton, Field Secretary of Foreign Missions, preached for us Sunday morning, February 3, and assisted the pastor, Rev. Dr. Jas. H. Taylor, in the communion. From the Sunday School three children were received on profession, and two of them were baptized. One person was received on re-statement of his faith; and two by letter. At night Dr. Fulton made the address at the annual praise service. For those who have heard him it is needless to tell of the consecrated earnestness with which he pressed upon our hearts the mighty appeal this great cause should make to every Christian. The offering amounted to $381.85, with more money likely to come.

KENTUCKY

Blackey—A meeting of the Committee on Young People's Work in Guerrant Presbytery was held in Blackey on January 7, those present being Rev. W. Norman Cook, of Hazard, chairman, Miss Alma Harris, a Synodical worker laboring in this end of the territory, Rev. O. V. Caudill, of Whitesburg, Mrs. H. L. Cockerham, of Blackey and Mr. W. L. Cooper, Jr., of Stuart Robinson School. Among the different types of work discussed was Leadership Training Classes and it was decided to hold one of these in the near future at Whitesburg, Highland, Blackey and Stuart Robinson. These classes will be under the direction of Miss Harris, who is a graduate of the Assembly's Training School and well fitted to put on this work. Another type of work discussed was the Daily Vacation Bible School. It was definitely decided that three of these will be held in this end of the field, at Whitesburg, Blackey and Stuart Robinson. It is possible that there may be one at Dudley also. Arrangements were made and speakers and leaders chosen for the Young People's Conference to be held at Stuart Robinson July 9-17. A wonderful program is to be expected and it is hoped that many boys and girls in this section will take advantage of the opportunity of attending. An important move along progressive lines was the appointing of Mr. Cooper to take up with Mrs. E. V. Tadlock the matter of a Workers' Conference to be held at Stuart Robinson July 18-19, immediately following the Young People's Conference. Programs and notices of these conferences will be seen in the church papers from time to time.

FLORIDA

St. Petersburg—The 24 churches of this city hold an annual School of Missions. This year Bishop Oldham, of the Methodist Church, Dr. Ida Schudder of India, Mrs. Raymond Robbins, Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery, Dr. and Mrs. Howard Taylor of China, and Dr. C. F. Myers, of Greensboro, N. C., were the speakers. These services were held Sunday, January 27, with all the churches in St. Petersburg uniting. Dr. Myers preached twice a day for a week.

MISSISSIPPI

Learned—Rev. J. F. Naylor has accepted the call to this group of churches. Mr. Naylor was pastor of this group a number of years ago. He began his work with these churches on January 1st.

LOUISIANA

The Synod of Louisiana accepted an invitation at its recent meeting from the Theological Seminary of Austin, Texas, to affiliate in the control of that institution. A similar invitation had been presented by the Theological Seminary of Louisville, Ky., and after protracted debate the vote of the Synod resulted in a tie, the moderator casting the deciding vote in favor of Austin Seminary.

TENNESSEE

Memphis—The City Union of Christian Endeavor Societies had a prosperous year of 1928. Meetings were held the second Monday night in each month with interesting inspirational addresses, novelty meetings and music. More than 200 young people attended each meeting. Bill Satterfield of Highland Heights was president for his second year and carried the union along nicely with good officers to help him. Since he was elected president of the State C. E. Societies, succeeding Bill Miller of McLemore Church, his name was not presented for a third term.

The Union elected Hugh Allen of Grace Covenant as president and an able corps of officers who should carry the work on to even greater success.

THE AD INTERIM COMMITTEE ON SURVEY OF TERRITORY

Charles Haddon Nabers, D.D.

During January several articles have appeared in the newspapers of the South under a Philadelphia date line purporting to give the scope and work of the committee appointed last May by the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States to survey the field occupied by the two branches of the Presbyterian church. These articles have linked the committee of the Southern Church to a committee appointed by the Northern Methodist church seeking organized union with the Northern Presbyterian Church in such a way as to indicate that such was the intent of our committee.

In view of the danger of possible misunderstanding the function of our Ad Interim Committee, it is well to go back to the records of the Atlanta Assembly to discover exactly what was done by our church.

Two overtures before the Atlanta Assembly were referred to the Standing Committee on Bills and Overtures as follows:

"(13) From the Presbytery of El Paso, asking the Assembly to open again the question of Closer Relations with the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A.

"(15) From the Presbytery of Western Texas, asking for the appointment of an Ad-Interim Committee to make a survey of the field occupied by the two branches of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., to appoint a similar committee."

The report of the Standing Committee on Bills and Overtures adopted by the Assembly contained this recommendation:

"We recommend that Overture No. 15 from the Presbytery of Western Texas, asking for the appointment of an Ad-Interim Committee to make a survey of the field occupied by the two branches of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., to appoint a similar committee, be answered in the affirmative. We consider that the action as to overture No. 15 fully covers the subject matter of Overture No. 13."

Later on the Moderator Dr. Harris E. Kirk, announced the appointment of the following ad-interim Committee on Survey of the fields occupied by the Presbyterian Church, U. S. and the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., Rev. C. H. Nabers, D.D., Rev. H. M. Pitzer, D.D., Rev. A. A. Wallace, D.D., Rev. P. B. Hill, D. D., Rev. Homer McMillan, D.D., Ruling Elders: W. E. McRae, N. T. Gentry, P. M. McRoberts, D. A. Penick, Dr. Nabers, as convener, will call the committee together for organization."

Such is the complete record of the action of the Atlanta Assembly. One of the members of the Ad-Interim Committee, Dr. P. B. Hill, pastor of First Church, San Antonio, was the author of Overture No. 15 which led to this action on the part of our assembly.

Full details of this action were wired to the Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of the U. S. A., by our Stated Clerk, Dr. J. D. Leslie. The action of that assembly, as recorded in the Minutes of that body is as follows:

"Gratefully acknowledging the fraternal greetings of the Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, we have instructed our department of Church Co-operation and Union to join your committee of nine in making a survey of the field occupied by the two branches of the Presbyterian Church."

Immediately upon receipt of this information, the convener of the Ad Interim Committee began correspondence with the proper parties to locate a suitable date for a joint meeting.

The department of Church Co-operation and Union of the Office of the General Assembly to which this matter was referred is composed of the following men:

Chairman, Rev. J. Ross Stevenson, D.D., Princeton Seminary; Rev. Lewis S. Mudge, D.D.; Philadelphia; Rev. William H. Black, Marshall, Mo.; Rev. John A. Marquis, D. D., New York City; Rev. Joseph A. Vance, D.D.; Detroit; Rev. William P. Merrill, D.D., New York; Rev. Harlan G. Mendenhall, D. D., New York; Rev. William O. Thompson, D.D., Columbus, Ohio; Rev. Hugh K. Walker, Los Angeles; Dr. Robert E. Speer, New York; Dr. John M. T. Finney, Baltimore; Mr. Holmes Forsyth, Chicago; Mr. Thomas D. McCloskey, Pittsburgh, and Judge John D. DeWitt, Nashville.

After many attempts to secure a suitable time and place for a meeting, it has been arranged for a meeting in Richmond, Virginia, Friday, March 10th, 10 a. m., at which time practically every member of each committee has signified his intention of being present.

The Ad Interim Committee of the Presbyterian Church in the United States is called to meet a day earlier, Thursday, March 9th, 2 p. m., in the Ladies Parlor of Schaeffler Hall, Union Theological Seminary. Meeting at this time there will be an opportunity afforded for an afternoon and an evening session, should the members deem two sessions necessary, before meeting with the committee from the Presbyterian Church of the U. S. A.

As a member of the committee, I shall be glad to receive any information or suggestions which interested ministers and members of our church care to offer in behalf of this work. Should any be sent, I should like to receive them well in advance of the Richmond meeting so that copies can be forwarded to other members of the committee. Every member of the committee to which is entrusted this very important survey feels the need not only of the interest but also the earnest prayers of the whole church.

ONE RESPONSIBILITY OF THE CHRISTIANS OF THE UNITED STATES

Raymond M. Hudson

In a recent delightful article Dr. Walter L. Lingle, President of the General Assembly Training School in Richmond, told of a letter from Rev. C. R. Stegall, a missionary in Africa in which Dr. Stegall described listening in on his radio to a World Series Baseball game broadcasted last fall from New York.

We assume it was not on the Sabbath, but it is possible that such a game will be broadcasted from Washington, our National Capitol of the world, on a Sabbath of next October. Who will be responsible for the divine services being held in the afternoon by Dr. Stegall and other Missionaries in Africa, China, Japan, Mexico and the Isles of the Sea being disturbed by the broadcasting of a game of baseball from Washington on the Sabbath?

The Christians in Washington cannot pass a law to prevent it, nor can they elect some one to pass such a law, as they have no vote. Such a law-forbidding Sabbath desecration can only be enacted by the Congress elected by the voters in the various states, or by the District Commissioners appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate.

When our Missionaries undertake to teach respect for the Sabbath and its observance as taught by Christ, and they are met by the statement, as well as concrete voices through the "loud speakers," that by law we permit commercialized sports to dominate and destroy the sanctity of our Sabbaths in our National Capitol and many other cities, who is responsible? The lawmakers who fail to pass Sabbath observance laws, or the Christian voters who elect men who refuse to enact such statutes?

The radio can be made a greater force for good under our Christian civilization, than it will ever be for evil, but Christians must seize the opportunity and protect and help the missionaries with the radio.

Commercialized Sports on the Sabbath should be stopped in Washington and elsewhere, not only for our local and National good but as an aid to the Mission fields.

Should not all Christians in the United States organize to have the gospel broadcasted each Sabbath or oftener to the entire world—then it would reach millions of homes and institutions where the Missionaries are not admitted?

THE STEWARDSHIP OF MONEY

Rev. B. K. Tenney

The year 1929 is "Stewardship Year" for the Presbyterian Church, U. S., and the month of February is designated as the time for emphasis on the "Stewardship of Money." I have been requested by the Stewardship Department to submit an article on this subject, and it is a real pleasure to comply with this request.

This phase of stewardship is one of the most important of the many relationships. Many who have given deep study to this matter hold that the right attitude toward money and the things represented in it is the key to the whole question.

Overlapping in Stewardship Divisions

In the division of the thought concerning stewardship, there is often overlapping. This does not necessarily mean that the thought concerning it is not clear, but usually that the division is made, not to exclude all else, but to focus attention on a particular phase. We speak of the stewardship of time, of talent and of life, when in reality the stewardship of time and talent is a part of the stewardship of life. The full use of every faculty or ability over a period of time is the stewardship of life. In a somewhat similar manner, the stewardship of money is a stewardship of life that has already been lived. Our plans for the stewardship of money yet to be earned must include converting of our ability and time into money. One may receive in return for his strength, skill, or thought, an amount of money which is an effort to represent all or a part of the value of his contribution to humanity. He may use this, which represents a part of his life, to give in exchange for a part of the life of another. This other person may teach his child in the school room, act as his representative in the courts of the land, serve as his agent in having in store ready for his use the product of factory or mill. Money is of value only as it can command the things desired by its possessor. The stewardship of money is a sacred thing, because it is the stewardship of stored up life, whether it be our own earnings or that which has come into our hands through the earnings of others.

Earning

The stewardship of money must necessarily include the earning of money. If money is stored up life, then the Father who looketh down from above, discerning the thoughts and intents of the heart, is able also to see the character of life that is stored up in the money. There seems to be a feeling on the part of many that our chosen work, our way of serving the world, is something apart from our service of God. We must remember that the world of material things of God's that we belong to God, and there must be a relationship between us and the world. That man should exercise dominion over the things of the earth was one of God's first commands, or rules for the direction of life, to the man He had created. That a man make diligent use of a fairly balanced portion of his time in earnestly applying himself to his chosen work, which is usually recognized in money values, is an essential part of stewardship. We are told of one of old who honored her Master by devoting to Him a box of costly precious ointment. Money is in a sense the box containing the life out of which we make our offering to our Saviour. May we not, then, be constant in guarding that the life offered to him through money should be well pleasing to Him. Money is life. As a stewardship, we must be diligent, in earning it, and the methods by which we earn it must in accordance with His will.

Use of Remainder

Stewardship of money includes the careful use of the money which remains to us after God's ownership has been recognized and after we have expressed our love for Him in our gifts. If a man should give to his neighbor a gift of money, it would be very poor taste for the man receiving the gift to use it in erecting between his own home and that of his neighbor a fence so high as to make the continuation of their pleasant fellowship difficult, if not impossible. It is possible for us to bring to God our tithe or more and then use the remainder in such a way as to shut ourselves away from the sight of His face. As stewards under a most high God, it is our privilege and responsibility to build constructively, using every resource which He, the Owner, places at our disposal. If we waste thoughtlessly and carelessly as much of that which comes into our hands as we have given to our Lord, we are thereby placing just that value on our gift to Him.

Spiritual Values

Tremendous spiritual values grow out of a faithful discharge of our stewardship of money. Strength is a by-product of effort. Spiritual strength and power is a by-product of right relations to God. Nowhere is this more definitely apparent than in our faithfulness in our administering of material possessions. At many points throughout our nation, the railroads are replacing the rails which they have been using with heavier steel, that they may carry more, faster and heavier trains. God challenges us to strengthen the undergirding supports of our lives by a faithful stewardship, that we may be prepared to receive more of his blessings, that these benefits might flow more rapidly into our lives, and that we might receive them in larger volume than ever before. Thus may we lengthen our cords and strengthen our stakes, growing into a larger comprehensive stewardship.

A MESSAGE TO MEN FOR THE MONTH OF MARCH

Roswell C. Long

I appreciate this opportunity to express to the Men of-the-Church the sincere appreciation of the Stewardship Department for the splendid way that the men everywhere have responded in the matter of helping prepare for and put on the Annual Every Member Canvass.

I want to take this opportunity to send to every man of our church this personal, itemized message which takes the form of a catalogued request. Here are some of the things we would like to have the men do in the month of March.

1. Pray without ceasing for the success of the 1929 Every Member Canvass. We expect to have the best Canvass ever held in the Church; but the measure of our success will depend upon the closeness of our contact with God.

2. Become informed about the significance of the deeper spiritual meaning of the 1929 Canvass by reading four short leaflets, issued free, by the Stewardship Department: "The Story of N. J.," "Every Member Canvass," "Every Member Growing," "A Log Church Wedding."

3. Volunteer your services to the pastor to assist in preparing for and putting on the Canvass.

4. Volunteer your services to help put on the Canvass in a small church nearby. Our Assembly has 664 churches with less than 25 members. Help put on the Canvass in one of these churches.

5. Be sure your own subscription in the Canvass presents your ability to give,—and that throughout the year you shall give as the Lord has prospered you.

6. Help keep the 1929 Every-Member-Canvass idea in your heart and before your fellow-church member. This ideal is EVERY MEMBER GROWING IN THE GRACE OF THE REGULAR WORSHIP OF GIVING.

7. Be sure that the Every Member Canvass on March 10th, by reason of a close follow-up, shall result in the enlistment of every member in your church.

8. Practice stewardship as a principle to be instilled as a motive for sustained living and regular, systematic and proportionate giving not only in the month of March but throughout life.

9. Help keep before your church the fact that 1929 is Stewardship Year. The topic for March is "The Stewardship of the Collection Plate." Stewardship leaflets, acknowledgement cards, certificates, and practical and helpful leaflets on the promotion of stewardship and church finance are available, free of charge, by request from the Stewardship Department, 305 Hen Grady Building, Atlanta, Ga. Keep in touch with us. We want to help you, and we are sure you can be of great help to us.

THE NEW LEAF

"The most practical, beautiful and quotable New Year poem I know—and one which I use every year of my life in some manner." Dr. W. L. Stidger in "The Homiletic Review." The author is unknown.

He came to my desk with quivering lip.

The lesson was done.

"Have you a new leaf for me, dear Teacher?"

I have spoiled this one!"

I took his leaf, all soiled and blotted,

And gave him a new one, all unspotted,

Then into his tired heart I smiled:

"Do better now, my child!"

I went to the throne, with trembling heart.

The year was done.

"Have you a New Year for me, dear Master?"

I have spoiled this one!"

He took my year, all soiled and blotted,

And gave me a new one, all unspotted,

Then into my tired heart He smiled:

"Do better now, my child!"

CHILDREN

THE TWINS GO INTO BUSINESS

I guess it wasn't such a good idea, after all," mourned Dick, looking around the boathouse that he and his twin sister had fitted up as a locker room for the boys and girls who used Long River for skating.

"The idea is all right," replied Dorothy. "But I think the boathouse is too far away from where the people want to skate."

"It is on the wrong side of the river, I'll admit," agreed Dick. "But the ice is just as good over here. I'll bet if they knew what we had ready for them in this old place, they'd come all right."

"Well, we advertised," reminded Dorothy. "But I guess people won't get out of the habit of skating where they want to skate just because we have opened up a boathouse."

"If they would only come near enough to see the sign!"

There were plenty of skaters on Long River that afternoon, but as Dorothy had pointed out and as both of the twins could see, they were all skating close to the opposite side. So far, only one man had seen the new sign "SKATER'S CLUB AND PAVILION," that had been put up over the door, and he was a man who had watched them move everything in the week before. So as far as business was concerned, he didn't count.

The twins stood in the doorway watching the great crowd of skaters as it moved up and down the river. Suddenly they noticed a small group dart away from the others and race toward the creek that led to the sawmill. Somebody had fallen in! There was a moment of excitement. The twins could see that they were pulling somebody out of the water; then they saw two men coming across the ice to where they were standing. These men were dragging a sled behind them, while on the sled was a bundle, wrapped in an overcoat.

"Whoever it is," cried Dick. "They're bringing him here. Quick, Dorothy, put a couple more pieces of wood on the fire, while I fix the cot and get out the blankets."

The twins hustled to get the boathouse ready for its first customer, and by the time the men had reached the spot, the cot was ready and the blankets were being warmed by the fire.

"It is a little girl," explained one of the rescuers. "She fell through the thin ice into the sawmill creek. We saw smoke coming out of your chimney and thought that this would be the best place to bring her."

They brought her in, dried her with one blanket and wrapped the other around her. She hadn't swallowed much water, but she was so cold that she was shivering. They dried her clothes by the fire, and while they were drying, Dick opened the faucet on the coffee percolator and filled up a cup for the girl, who by this time was feeling very much better.

Then one of the men said that he would see that she got home safely.

"I guess she should have died if you hadn't everything right here the way you did," he said. "By the way, what is this place, anyway?"

"It's a club room for skaters," replied Dick. "We've just opened it up, and we're trying to get people to skate on this side of the river. The ice is as good."

"It's better. Over on the other side there are bad spots that don't freeze over properly, and people are always falling in. I'm coming back here after I take this little girl home and I have some friends who would like to come too."

"Bring them along" invited Dorothy. "The more the merrier."

"By the way," spoke up the second man. "Do you sell that coffee?"

"Yes sir."

"I'll take a cup, What else have you got?"

"Hot dogs, sandwiches and pie."

"Give me a hot dog. Wait a minute."

He opened the door and shouted to some other people who were gathered in a group talking about the accident.

"It's not private," he called. "Come on in. It's a rest room. Hot coffee, sandwiches and everything."

"Oh, boy!" said one, as they all entered the boathouse. "And they've got a stove, too. This is great!"

"And are these lockers?" asked another.

"Yes, sir," answered Dick, looking

Yellow-haired Susie May and BROWN-haired Teddy are playing in the snow.

"Want your face washed?" cries Teddy, chasing Susie May with a big piece of snow. Teddy wears a dark GREEN suit with ORANGE (use RED and YELLOW mixed) color, collar, cuffs and belt band. His cap is ORANGE color, too, with a GREEN tassel at the point.

"Ho, ho!! You can't catch me!"

The house is YELLOW with GREEN shutters and a RED chimney. The roof is covered with snow there is a thin whisp of GRAY snow. The sky is BLUE and the snow white.

Both children have PINK (use lightly) cheeks.

Teddy has GREEN gloves and Susie May wears RED mittens.

up from the counter where he was tending to the "hot dogs." "You can leave your shoes here while you are skating and leave your skates here when you go home. We keep them clean for you and sharpen them once a week or whenever they need it."

"How much does a fellow have to pay for all this?"

"Fifty cents a season."

"It's worth it. Do you know," he continued, warmly, "Whoever thought of this had a mighty good idea!"

Dick looked at Dorothy and Dorothy looked back at Dick. Neither of the two said anything; but as Dick dropped the first dime into the box they were using as a till, he figured that maybe the fellow who made the last remark was right.

RICHARD'S NOVEL VALENTINE

The weather-man had sent a rough snow-storm as his beautiful valentine to the world, and Richard awoke February morning to see all outdoors sparkling and glistening in the sun. Richard's first two thoughts were very jolly; not at all suited to a made for loving messages and greetings.

"If I only had a new sled!" he sighed, as he looked out toward the hill where the children coasted winter. "And I haven't a single valentine to give!" This was indeed a painful thought, for Richard was an selfish lad, and never once thought how many valentines he was going to receive. "If I only hadn't broken Grove's window with my football, sighed, regretfully, as he laced up stout, new boots.

Suddenly into his mind popped a little verse his teacher had written the board the day before:

I mean to be so good and gay
So kind and helpful every way
That folks will know it is a sign
I want to BE a Valentine.

But how under the sun and moon could anybody be a valentine? puzzling

Richard as he stumped into the cozy kitchen. Valentines meant beautiful messages made of paper lace, gilt arrows, ruby hearts, and pretty pictures, with loving lines to top them off.

"Why, of course, you can't go out looking like a poster," laughed his mother, when Richard confided his question. "But if you do something kind and thoughtful, that says as plain as could be that you're fond of people, doesn't it? That's being a real live valentine."

Richard stood looking out of the window toward Aunt Betty's brown cottage with the old picket fence around it. The snow was deeply drifted, and unbroken by even a dog's track. "Aunt Betty has been gone a long time," he said in a tone that showed how fond he was of his neighbor.

"She's coming home this morning," his mother assured him happily. "I know she is tired, for she has been nursing a sick sister."

Richard pondered this thoughtfully. How bad Aunt Betty had to come home red and wade through snow, for her walks and lilac bushes were covered deep. Why! Richard gave a little start. "Lucky it's Saturday!" he chuckled, as he went whistling outside with his shoveling shovel and began to be Aunt Betty's Valentine.

That little snow-shovel acted as if were alive and enjoying Richard's secret. It kicked and pranced about in the snow like a one-legged colt, and at no time at all Richard had cleared his own walks. He crawled through the gap in the old fence where he and Aunt Betty visited back and forth. Such a big mound of nice clean snow suggested first a taste, next a snowball, and last snowman.

"I'll stand him at her back door to say 'Hello!'" decided Richard, as he worked and piled and puffed busily. He had a surprise when he was shoveling the big mound of snow. Something hard and shiny dropped from its snowflake nest into Richard's shovel. "Oh, won't Aunt Betty be glad!" exclaimed Richard when he saw what it was. Then he did a little jig when it occurred to him how he might surprise his kind neighbor.

So when Aunt Betty came home, the walks were clean and dry; and as she turned the corner of the house, there stood a plump little snowman smiling good-day. "Dear me!" said Aunt Betty, forgetting how tired she was. "It must be a snow postman, for there's a letter sticking up in his straw hat." In a glance, then a delighted "And if it isn't for me! Sealed with a fine red heart, too."

Richard, hiding behind the old cotton-wood, laughed inside so hard it hurt. There was something hard and mysterious in the envelope, and when Aunt Betty opened it she exclaimed aloud, "Why, it's my gold thimble I lost last week!" To herself she added: "Richard must have found it, bless his heart! Couldn't have a nicer valentine, for this was mother's treasured thimble, and I could never replace it." Then she went inside, and she felt so much better she couldn't think of resting until she made a batch of valentines for her small neighbor. Richard found them waiting for him at lunch—heart-shaped cookies, edged with pink.—Ex.

THE ST. VALENTINE WIND

Ruth had quarreled with Rosalie for the first time since they had been playmates. And now St. Valentine's Day was coming, and she could not send her the valentine that she had bought joyfully a few days before.

"I don't care," Ruth said, as she put her other valentines into envelopes. But she knew that she did care a great deal. She sat and gazed at the valentine that had been intended for Rosalie. What should she do with it?

"I know what I'll do," she decided. "I'll just take it with me when I go out to carry the other valentines, and perhaps I shall think of some one to give it to."

She and Rosalie had always carried valentines round together, and she felt queer and lonesome now as she started off alone. It would not be nearly so much fun, she knew, to ring bells day by herself and then run and hide. She gave a deep sigh.

As she passed Rosalie's house she looked toward it out of the corner of her eye. Was Rosalie there, or was she, too, going forlornly round alone, carrying valentines?

By the time Ruth had finished running up and down the village streets, slipping her valentines under doors and ringing bells, she was quite out of breath. There was only one valentine left—the one that had been intended for Rosalie.

"I suppose I might just as well take it home," Ruth said sorrowfully.

The second time she passed Rosalie's house she tried to go by, but somehow her feet lagged. What would happen if she ran up the walk and rang the bell? Would the door fly open, she wondered, and some one shout, "Valentine, I caught you!"

Ruth hesitated a moment, then, as she started to walk on again, something unexpected happened. The wind, which as night fell had been blowing harder and harder, came swirling suddenly round the corner of the house and snatched the envelope from her hand. Away it went, high into the air, whirling and circling. It flew straight over the fence and into the yard of Rosalie's house. Up into the air it went, then down again it fluttered and landed right at Rosalie's door!

Ruth was so astonished that she stood stock-still in surprise. Then she pushed the gates open quickly. She must get back that envelope, and in a hurry, too!

There it lay right on the doorstep. Somehow it seemed to be in just the right place, but it must not stay there.

As she stooped to snatch it up the door flew open. "Valentine!" a voice cried joyfully. "I caught you!" some one seized her and drew her into the hall. It was Rosalie.

"I saw you pass," Rosalie said, "and I hid behind the curtain and watched. How I hoped you had brought a valentine for me! Then when you came into the yard I knew you had."

"But I hadn't," Ruth said, though she did not want to say it. "That is, I had a valentine for you, but I wasn't going to give it to you. The wind snatched it out of my hand."

"There!" said Rosalie, laughing. "I had a valentine for you, too, and I couldn't make up my mind what to do with it. I'm glad the wind was blowing tonight."

The next minute Ruth was running home to ask if she might stay to supper at Rosalie's house. When she came back the wind was roaring down the chimney and rattling the windows.

"Blow, wind," said Ruth; "we don't mind."

"Yes, blow," echoed Rosalie. "You are just a St. Valentine wind—full of fun."—Ex.

THE ASSISTANT LIFESAVER

Blanche Elizabeth Wade

Once upon a time Robert was coming home from an errand late in the afternoon when he saw a large, black, curly-haired dog. The dog was so beautiful that Robert wanted to pat him, but his mother had told him never to pat a strange dog; so the boy remembered and obeyed her, though he wanted to hug the great fellow. Anyone could see the dog was an honest, friendly animal, not at all snappy. He looked as though he were smiling at Robert, and his eyes were so soft and joyful that it was all Robert could do to keep from hugging the noble fellow, then and there.

The dog must have felt that Robert loved him, or without any coaxing he followed the boy all the way home.

"Oh, Robert," said his mother when she saw the dog trotting up to the door, "haven't I told you never to pay any attention to dogs? What made you bring this one home with you?"

"I didn't try to, mother—honestly, I didn't!" cried he. "I didn't speak to him, nor pat him, nor anything! He just came anyway!"

"Well, he mustn't come in," mother replied firmly. "He's a beauty, but it won't do to let him in. He is someone's pet, and will find his way home. Come in quickly, and let us close the door. He'll go home as soon as he is alone."

But long after supper, when Robert opened the side door to put out the milk bottle, up trotted the dog, and before Robert could get inside the house, a great shaggy head squeezed in close to the boy, and it was impossible then to close the door.

"Oh, mother!" called Robert. "Come in a hurry! He's getting in! I did not know he was there at all!"

It was so funny a sight to see the dog's delight at finding himself partly inside that Robert's mother said, "Well, let him in! He has a collar on and I'll see if it has his owner's name."

But she had to tell him to "Lie down, sir!" many times before she could examine the collar, he pranced so with joy at being inside with friends—at least he felt they were friends. And she even had to give him a bit of sponge cake—he refused plain bread—before he would quiet down. But when finally he threw himself upon the rug close to Robert's chair, she found not only the name of the owner of the dog, but his address and telephone number, as well, and also the dog's name.

"Why!" she exclaimed. "We have for a visitor Rover himself! Rover is a good old-fashioned name. And he belongs to Mr. Harvey Dale, who bought the Avery house on the Green two years ago. I'll call him right up." And she did so.

Mr. Dale laughed and thanked her. He said Rover would come home by himself if she would put him out-of-doors. The dog made many friendly calls, but never failed to come back at bedtime.

It was hard to have to put the fine fellow out, for Rover was so contented; but the night was not cold, and Robert's mother coaxed him to the veranda by putting another bit of sponge cake there for him. And next morning when she called up the Dales to find out if Rover was safe, Mr. Dale said yes, and that Rover joined him in many thanks for the pleasure of the evening before. Rover hoped to meet his kind hosts again sometime, and Mr. Dale wished to thank them once more and hoped, himself, to meet those who had been so good to his wonderful dog.

Then a happy thing happened the next summer. Robert's family bought a summer home on the Sound, and one day Robert dashed into the living room exclaiming: "What do you think! Here's Rover Dale! I'm sure of it! He knows me, and mayn't I let him in?"

There was no doubt that it was Rover—they did not have to read his collar this time. He bounded up to Robert's mother as she opened the door. Of course he knew them!

The Dale's summer home was but a short distance down the beach; and as the new little summer colony became established and the members met often at tennis and other sports, Robert's family soon met the Dales, and had happy times at the families became better acquainted.

Dogs were not encouraged among the colonists but everyone, so loved Rover that he never was banished. Bathing for children was considered safer for them when Rover was there. The Life Guard had little to do, himself; for if Rover saw any child in danger, he reached the child as soon as the Life Guard—and, sometimes sooner.

Now it happened one day that Rover cut his foot badly. No one seemed to know how the accident had happened, and the beach was searched for any possible broken glass that might be dangerous. Nothing could be found on the shore or even out beyond the lowest tide mark, and as far as one could wade to carry on the search. The only thing they could think of was that perhaps Rover might have stepped upon something in the street when he accompanied the family back to town one day on errands. At any rate, he limped badly, and yet nothing could keep him from swimming out to the float when the children were there. The paddling was not easy for him, but Mr. Dale said the dog would be unhappy if chained up, and perhaps the salt water was the best thing for the sore foot, after all.

It was while the foot was still making Rover limp that the dog made a rescue when one of the children who could not swim waded so far out that an in-rolling wave made her lose her poise, and the undertow drew her out where she could not touch bottom. The Life Guard was out upon the raft. The wind was blowing the wrong way for him to hear her cry out at first, as she was not opposite the float, but further down.

But Rover knew in a moment. Limp or no limp, he made a dash from the spot where he was stretched out near her sand toys on the beach, and before the Life Guard reached her, the dog dragged up upon the dry sand, where her big brother soon had her in his arms, none the worse for her bad few minutes.

A visitor came upon the scene just after the rescue, and heard the details from one of the children on the float. The visitor wanted to see Rover.

"There he is!" cried Robert. "He's still down the beach, 'cause they forgot to take in her toys. He's guarding them. He probably thinks she will be out soon, and he knows she will be safer if he is there. That's the only reason he isn't here with us. He knows we have the Life Guard, and she hasn't. When we're all out here he paddles out to keep his eye on us. But if any one of us is alone along the beach, Rover sticks to the lone one. Just you pretend to fall in and call out, and see what happens!"

The visitor did so. He even sank out of sight once, and acted as though unable to swim. And tired as he was from the rescue of the child, Rover never hesitated. He made a rush, and, as fast as his injured foot would let him, paddled out to where the Life Guard was pretending to have trouble getting to the shore.

"Good fellow!" exclaimed the supposedly drowning man, as he felt the dog's firm grip on one leg of his bathing suit.

The visitor was more than sorry when he learned about Rover's hurt foot, and said if he'd known of it nothing would have made him put the dog to that test.

But the newcomer examined the cut. He knew exactly what to do for it; so he was able to pay his debt to Rover by taking that injured foot in charge until the cut was properly healed.

If ever you should visit that place, you might notice the sign:

"The only dog allowed on this beach is Rover Dale, assistant life-saver."—Congregationist.

QUEER BABIES

Little cricket in the grass,
As I pass,
Loud you chirp your cheerful cry
Tell me why?
Have you babies hiding there,
Shivering in the autumn air?
Do you sing to them at night?
Tell me, cricket, am I right?

Little katydid so green,
Do you mean
Winter time will soon be here
That frost is near?
Are your babies cradled high,
On a leaf beneath the sky,
Listening to your endless song.
"Katy-katy," all night long?

Little frog down in the brook,
May I look?
At your babies fat and round?
Will they drown?
Yours are water babies true;
They can swim as well as you.
Do you sing them all to sleep,
With your croaking loud and deep?

ALFRED MONROE SMYRE

"The path of the just man is as a shining light that shineth more and more unto the perfect day."

The passing of Alfred Monroe Smyre is a notable loss to his town and church. His place in the confidence and esteem of the town is indicated by the title bestowed upon him—"The Grand Old Man." Indeed, his life story is almost the history of Gastonia. He came to it when it was but a small village, and he has been vitally connected with all its subsequent growth and development in commercial, civic, industrial and religious life. In all these things he has been a prime mover and a vital factor for good.

Mr. Smyre was born in Catawba County, July 24, 1845. On November 30, 1870 he was happily married to Miss Sarah Ann Lewis, of Dallas, N. C. This marriage was a real union of hearts, and these two have lived together in unbroken happiness and peace for more than fifty-eight years. Their union was blessed by three children: Mrs. J. Lee Robinson, Mrs. D. M. Jones and Mr. F. L. Smyre, all now living in Gastonia and with their beloved Mother mourning the going of this honored and venerated father.

Mr. Smyre held a unique place in the First Presbyterian Church. At the time of his death he was one of its four surviving charter members; and was the last of the original ruling elders, having served in that capacity from the organization of the church.

He loved the Church, and throughout his long life he labored ceaselessly for its welfare. He was faithful in his attendance upon the services of the sanctuary and the Sabbath School. He was generous in the support of the Church and all the causes. As a ruling elder he was wise in counsel. And as a Christian he loved the brethren. Friendly and genial in spirit, sympathetic in heart, genuinely interested in the welfare of others, he held the confidence and esteem of all and was a real power for good.

This good man and servant of God died, like Abraham, in a good old age, an old man and full of years. The end came quietly and peacefully, as he lay in his own bed in the house of his daughter, and with his beloved wife, herself in frail health, just at hand. He had made all his preparations, and was ready to go whenever his Master might call for him. So quite peacefully he fell on sleep. His life was fruitful in good works, and his name will be held in remembrance.

It is not death to die,
To leave this weary road,
And midst the brotherhood on high
To be at home with God.

Jesus, Thou Prince of Life,
Thy chosen cannot die;
Like Thee, they conquer in the strife,
To reign with Thee on high.
Gastonia, N. C.

CHARLES NORMAN McDONALD

Charles Norman McDonald, of Carthage, N. C., was instantly killed, in the early evening of October, 30, 1928, when the automobile which he was driving left the highway and crashed into a telephone pole as he was returning from Star to his home.

He was born July 14, 1892, and joined the Carthage Presbyterian Church early in life and was a member of this church at the time of his death. He began work for the Norfolk Southern Railway in 1912 and was an engineer of the road at the time of his death. In May, 1918, he enlisted as a private locomotive engineer in the transportation corps of the United States army and sailed for France with his company soon after. His record was an excellent one and he was honorably discharged from the service in July, 1919. He had not been able to work for the past several months because of ill health but he hoped that his health would improve sufficiently to be able to return to his work.

Charlie, as he was affectionately known by all who knew him, made loyal friends wherever he went. He was normally of a very happy disposition and always generous to any who needed his help.

He is survived by his father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. McDonald, three brothers, D. McL. McDonald, P. H. McDonald and his twin brother, A. K. McDonald and one sister Miss Flora McDonald.

MAUD CARSON CUMMING

On Saturday, January 19th, Mrs. Maud Carson Cumming, wife of Rev. William C. Cumming, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Henderson, N. C., died at the Maria Parham Hospital in Henderson, leaving an infant son. Her strength had been considerably impaired by an attack of influenza a short time previously, but the sad announcement of her passing came as a great shock to all her loved ones and numerous friends.

Mrs. Cumming was a native of Charlotte, N. C., a daughter of the late J. Edward Carson and Sallie McAlister Carson. After her years of elementary education in Charlotte, she attended Queens College, and graduated with the class of 1917, a leader in every branch of collegiate work. She also graduated at the University of North Carolina, receiving the degree of A.B., with first honor, and was elected permanent vice-president of the class of 1918. After two years of high school teaching in Winston-Salem, Miss Carson decided to devote her life to service on the Foreign Mission field of our church. In preparation for this she studied for two years in White's Biblical Seminary in New York City.

Miss Maud Carson's missionary service began in January, 1923, when she was sent out by the Foreign Mission Committee to Soochow, China, supported by her home church, the First Church, of Charlotte. After studying the language for two years she was appointed principal of the George C. Smith School for Girls at Soochow. Although this was a responsibility suited to maturer years, she was eminently fitted for the position, and carried on the work in a most admirable way. She was the youngest member of the board of education of our China Missions, but she fulfilled all the arduous duties connected with her work in a way that did much to advance the cause of Christ in Soochow and the Mid-China Mission. Forced from her school by the disturbances of the Chinese revolution, she refueged in Shanghai, and continued working there as much as was possible until she was sent back to this country of furlough in July, 1927.

On November 22, 1927, in the First Presbyterian Church of Charlotte, Miss Carson was married to Rev. Wm. C. Cumming, formerly of Wilmington, N. C., who had himself been serving as an educational missionary of the church at Kiangyin, China, until the evacuation of the mission forces there. Mr. and Mrs. Cumming made their home in Henderson, N. C., where the former was serving as pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, in view of the uncertainty of the Chinese situation. She immediately threw herself into the work in Henderson, and speedily became beloved of the whole community. She was in constant demand as a speaker in churches, auxiliaries and presbyterials. She spoke on China during the course of her year in Henderson in every white church of the town, and one colored church. Fluent and pleasing as a speaker, winsome and attractive as an acquaintance, warm-hearted and loving as a friend, soon won the love and admiration of all denominations. To the women of her own church, she was an inestimable benefit. At the time of her death she was President of the Woman's Auxiliary and a leader and inspiration in every enterprise. Her passing is a tremendous loss to her local church and to our whole denomination.

As a friend has well expressed it, her's was "A gentle spirit, a brilliant mind, and an unselfish life." In her home of sublime happiness and joy; in a place of abiding inspiration and service; in the heyday of earthly usefulness; "God's finger touched her, and she slept."

The funeral service, conducted by Rev. Albert Sidney Johnson, D. D., pastor, Rev. W. B. McIlwaine, D.D., pastor of the Westminster Presbyterian Church, was held in the First Presbyterian Church of Charlotte, January 21, 1929. The interment took place in the family plot in Elmwood Cemetery.

MRS. W. C. CUMMING

The following resolutions were adopted by the session of the First Presbyterian Church, Henderson, N. C.

Whereas it has pleased Almighty God to call to her reward our esteemed friend and co-worker, Mrs. W. C. Cumming, a woman whose exceptional ability, unselfish energy, and beautiful Christian character endeared her to all; therefore be it resolved:

That we humbly bow to the will of God, whose we are, and whom we serve.

That we herewith express our appreciation of her labors in our midst.

That we record our deep sense of loss, both to the church and community.

That a copy of these resolutions be incorporated in the minutes of the session, and that copies be sent to members of the bereaved family, Henderson Daily Dispatch, and church papers.

Dr. Lacy Little, Moderator.

MRS. W. C. CUMMING

Resolutions adopted by the Sabbath School of the First Presbyterian Church, Henderson, N. C., January 27, 1929:

Whereas God, in His infinite wisdom, has called Mrs. Maude Carson Cumming from this life to the glory of His presence; and

Whereas we feel deeply the loss of so faithful a leader and guide in our Sabbath School work—one whose sweet, helpful spirit will keep her memory alive in the hearts of all;

Therefore, be it resolved:

That we bow in submission to the will of God, and pray that he will bless the work she had begun.

That we believe that all things work together for good to them that love God, and that He will establish the work of her hands among us.

That we are thankful to God for the few months she was with us; for the inspiration of her happy devotion to duty, the example of her readiness to do any needful task, and the influence of her gracious personality upon the young people of our Sabbath School.

That we extend our sincere sympathy to the loved ones whom she has left behind, and pray that God will encircle them in the arms of his love and comfort them.

That copies of these resolutions be mailed to Rev. Wm. C. Cumming and Mrs. J. Edward Carson, published in the Daily Dispatch, the Christian Observer and the Presbyterian Standard, and that a copy be filed with the minutes of the Teachers' Council.

MRS. F. H. MAY

Mrs. F. H. May, a beloved member of the Woman's Auxiliary, Lenoir, N. C., Presbyterian Church, fell asleep in Jesus December 11, 1928. Gentle, refined and winsome, Mrs. May endeared herself to all who knew her. She was loyal to her Master and always ready to undertake willingly and gladly His work. She will be greatly missed as a friend, a faithful Sunday School teacher and Secretary of Literature for the Auxiliary. The blessed thought comes:

"God is love"—A thought like this
Can every gloomy thought remove,
And turn all tears, all woes to bliss,
For God is love!

JOSEPH BROWN McCALLUM

On June 5, 1928, by a seemingly tragic and cruel accident, Joseph Brown McCallum, beloved deacon in the McColl Presbyterian Church and highly respected young business man, was suddenly removed from earthly associations. He was nearing the full prime of manhood, having been born July 28, 1885.

Nothing so deeply emphasizes the worth of an honest and forthright life, perhaps, as the unexpected shock of bereavement. Worth and piety were characteristic of Mr. McCallum's ancestry as son of Mrs. Mary McIntyre McCallum and the late Joseph B. McCallum, of the Ashpole Church community near Rowland, N. C. With that church our friend united in early youth and in that hallowed ground he now rests. Through life he claimed the esteem of many friends by a personality both true and modest, by undoubted goodness of heart, and by devotion to family duties, benevolence and church work.

His eldest brother, Gustavus Adolphus McCallum, died December 7, 1922.

Those who survive him, besides his saintly mother are: his wife, who was Miss Mary Bundy, of McColl, S. C., and three children, Mary Elizabeth aged seven, Joseph Brown, Jr., and James William; two sisters, Misses Mary Edna and Blanche McCallum, of Rowland; and four brothers, Messrs. John Dougald and Lamar McCallum of High Point, Rufus B., of Laurinburg and W. Duncan, of Rowland. Providence, while subjecting these to such a crushing discipline of sorrow, has mercifully given them the solace of memories of an honorable life of service and of unquestioning faith in Christ.

Resolutions

The session and board of deacons of McColl Presbyterian Church, in joint session in the church on September 16 adopted the following resolution:

Since it hath pleased Almighty God in his infinite wisdom, to take from our midst a fellow officer, J. Brown McCallum, of the First Presbyterian Church of McColl, be it hereby resolved:

1. That we bow in humble submission to the will of our Heavenly Father who doeth all things well.

2. That we record our tribute of respect and love to the memory of our beloved co-worker, and return thanks for his life of service and loyalty among us.

3. That we express our deep sorrow, and extend our heartfelt sympathies to the bereaved family.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be spread on the minute book of the session; and a copy be sent the family of the deceased, and to Presbyterian Standard.

By order of the session,
L. M. Morrison, Clerk.

MISS CORDELIA TATE

On the morning of January 16, 1929, the soul of Miss Cordelia Tate was called to the eternal home. In early life she became a member of the Presbyterian Church of Chadbourne, N. C. When life's work opened before her, she joined the First Presbyterian Church of Raleigh. In the many relationships of life she was always found faithful, and by the merits of the life she lived her memory will forever linger in the hearts of those who knew and loved her.

When, in the stillness of the night, her spirit was gently borne away by the angels, Chadbourne felt herself bereft of one of her most lovable characters. We feel she left us in the morning of her usefulness, with unsatisfied desires and opportunities for service—in the roseate hours of hope and promise. But death has no season and no time.

"Leaves have their time to fall,
And flowers to wither at the north wind's breath,
And stars to set; but all,
Thou hast all seasons for thine own
O Death."

Our bereavement is indeed great, yet in our sorrow, we find our comfort in the character of her beautiful life, in the noble spirit of her soul, in her sympathy, in her deeds. To enumerate her virtues is but to accentuate our loss. Yet those of us who knew her best love to dwell upon her noble characteristics. We had implicit confidence in her every action.

When the World War called her brothers to the service of their country, she forfeited her schooling at Peace Institute, Raleigh, to relieve them of the responsibility of her education, and secured a position with the State Board of Health. She filled this position with credit, fidelity, and distinction. She commanded the admiration and love of all her girl associates in the work; and, when they came to see her placed away under a mantle of flowers expressing the combined love of myriads of friends, they declared that the affectionate memory of their departed friend would live as "an alabaster box of precious ointment."

"So lives she still, in soul and heart, Heroic and sublime."

She died in the triumph and faith of her religion, and left a name without blemish and without reproach—a heritage of honor to all who loved her. She was a member of the "Four Square" Sunday School Class of the First Presbyterian Church of Raleigh. Most fortunate indeed is this class that in furnish such a "Four Square" model for emulation portrayed in the life and character of Cordelia Tate. Friend.

MISS MOORE ORR

Miss Moore Orr, fourth daughter of the late R. B. Orr and Mrs. Orr, passed to the great beyond December 29, 1928, at the age of 31 years. Moore left home at early maturity and came to Charlotte for a business career, and was succeeding admirably in her work and the endearing of herself to all who came in contact with her. Before she was aware of danger, the great destroyer tuberculosis had fastened its fangs into her body, and while she fought bravely three long years, there was steady decline in spite of the doing of everything that could be done until the end came as peacefully as one laying herself down to rest. A great throng of friends and relatives assembled to pay the last tribute, when the body was placed in the old cemetery at Sugaw Creek Church. She is survived by her mother, Mrs. R. B. Orr; three sisters, Mrs. Olin P. Hutchison, Mrs. Reece Hunter, Richmond, Va., Miss Mary Orr at home, and one brother, Mr. J. Latta Orr.

"Goodbye till morning come again."
We part, if part we must, with pain,
But night is short, and hope is sweet,
Faith fills our hearts, and wings our feet:
And we sing the old refrain,
'Goodbye till morning come again.'

"Goodbye till morning come again,"
The thought of death brings weight of pain,
But, could we know how short the night
That falls, and hides them from our sight,
Our hearts would sing the old refrain,
'Goodbye till morning come again.'

MISS ANNA OCTAVIA IRWIN

On Saturday morning, November 17, 1928, Miss Anna Octavia Irwin quietly fell asleep in Jesus and passed to her heavenly reward. Miss Irwin was born in Charlotte, N. C., June 19, 1860. The daughter of Mr. James Patton Irwin and Mrs. Harriett Morrison Irwin, she lived the most of her life in this city. She was actively engaged in the service of her beloved Master until she became physically unable to lead an active life. As a child she united with the First Presbyterian Church of Charlotte and was a faithful and devoted member until she was led by the Spirit to take an active part in the establishment of a church in West Charlotte.

For years she worked in the Community Sunday School in the Victor Mill Village and so faithfully and well did she teach that she had the privilege of seeing every member of her young ladies' Bible class accept Jesus Christ and unite with the First Presbyterian Church. She was one of the moving spirits in the establishment of what is now West Avenue Presbyterian Church and was one of its charter members.

So long as she was physically able she was untiring in her work in the interest of the new church, and when her health failed she remained an earnest and faithful member, though her only contact with its work and worship was through her continued earnest intercession at the Throne of Grace.

After nearly twenty years of physical infirmity, which she passed with such measure of patience and Christian fortitude as to make those who knew her best marvel, she heard the Blessed Lord whom she knew and loved so well, call, and laying down her frail body she was carried to Him in whose service she had lived and in whose faith and love she died.

She is survived by one brother, Mr. H. M. Irwin, and Mrs. A. T. Graham, faithful members of this church, and their children. Charlotte, N. C.

MRS. ANNIE RICKS CAVANAUGH

Whereas, God in His allwise providence has called from our midst our beloved friend and member, Mrs. Annie Ricks Cavanaugh, be it resolved by the Woman's Auxiliary of Wallace Presbyterian Church.

1. That we bow in humble submission to God's will in all things.
2. That although we feel deeply the loss of our co-worker yet we realize that "our loss is her gain."
3. That we extend our deepest sympathy to her family especially to the husband and three small children.
4. That a copy of these resolutions be placed on the minutes of our Auxiliary, a copy sent to the family and a copy published in the Presbyterian Standard.

Mrs. J. H. Scott, Chairman.
Mrs. O. A. Teachey.
Mrs. W. B. Jones.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT
R. Q. HOWE

Whereas an Almighty and All-Gracious Heavenly Father has seen fit in his wise providence to transfer from the Church Militant to the Church Triumphant our esteemed friend, elder, clerk of session for over twenty years and Christian co-worker, R. Q. Howe, and,

Whereas for many years he has been a consecrated, devoted, and faithful laborer in this vineyard—in the church, in the Sunday school, in the prayer meeting, in the choir, and by his life exemplified the teachings of the Lord Jesus;

Whereas our loss is heavy and his place hard to fill, but his influence will live among us;

Therefore be it resolved that we, the Session and Board of Deacons of Olney Presbyterian Church humbly bow in submission to the will of Him who doth all things well;

That a page in the Minutes of the Session, which as clerk he kept so faithfully for many years be dedicated to his memory, and contain a copy of these resolutions, and a copy sent to the family and the Presbyterian Standard and the Gastonia Daily Gazette be furnished with copies for publication.

RESOLUTIONS ON THE PASSING
MR. A. H. SHEPARD

Whereas, it has pleased Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, in His all-wise providence, to remove from our midst, our beloved friend and brother, Ruling Elder Alexander H. Shepard, whom we all loved for his sterling character, unwavering loyalty to the Master and wise and helpful counsel in matters of the Kingdom; and recognizing that in his passing, his family has lost a loving and devoted husband, a wise and affectionate father; the church a faithful friend and the community a Christian gentleman:

- Therefore, be it resolved:
1. That the session of St. Andrews Presbyterian Church feels very keenly the loss it has sustained in the passing of our beloved brother; but realizing that our loss is his gain, we humbly submit to the will of our Heavenly Father, whom he loved and whom he served so devoutly while here in the flesh as church member, ruling elder, teacher of the McClure Men's Bible Class and Christian citizen.
 2. That we thank God for his life

The BEAUTIFUL ROSE WINDOW of NOTRE DAME

A Masterpiece of Permanent Beauty and Color

THE Famous Rose Window of the Cathedral of Notre Dame in Paris is a work of infinite beauty and splendor. It is perhaps the masterpiece of all art glass windows. Built in the Thirteenth Century, it stands today unsurpassed in beauty and excellence of workmanship. The color of gorgeous gems and precious stones are wrought into this magnificent spectacle for the admiration of passing thousands through all the years. If a world-wide search were made for a monumental material approaching the beauty of the assembled colors of the famous Rose Window, such material would be found in

It is found, also, that the beautiful colors of Winnsboro Granite come from the various crystals it contains, which are identical in substance to many of the finest of precious stones and jewels of the order of the amethyst and moonstone. When the surface of this granite,—which is a composite of these actual precious stone crystals,—is highly polished, all the beauty and color of these jewels become visible. Could a more beautiful monumental stone be found anywhere than this?

Winnsboro Granite is most lasting because it is composed of the most durable mineral known. It is superbly beautiful because it is made up of the substance of precious stones and gems. Inscriptions on it are clearly legible because of the marked contrast between cut and polished surfaces.

Be sure that "Winnsboro Granite" is specified in your contract for monuments. Like other high quality materials, there are many inferior substitutes, which resemble this granite on first appearance, but do not possess its lasting qualities and permanent beauty, because they contain more deleterious elements, such as water, lime and iron. These elements tend to disintegration and discoloration.

Have your monument dealer furnish you with a personal guarantee from the quarries that the monument you purchase is cut in genuine Winnsboro Granite.

The certificate of the quarries is signed by B. H. Heyward, Treas., and General Manager, whose signature insures genuine Winnsboro Granite. A facsimile of this signature is reproduced below.

TWO SCHOOLS OF MISSIONS IN MEMPHIS

Under the auspices of the Woman's Auxiliary, the Highland Heights Church conducted a school for Home Missions in November and December. There were three classes, adult, young people and Juniors who used as text-books "Christ and the Country People," "The Unfinished Task and Next Door Neighbors," and "Better finished Task and Next Door Neighbors," and "Better Americans." A similar school for Foreign Missions will be held as soon as practicable.

Work has been resumed on the second floor of the Sunday School building and the second floor will soon be completed. This space has been very badly needed.

The Young People's C. E. Society sent Marvin Satterfield as their representative to the All-South C. E. Convention at Chatannoga December 27-January 1. Owing to so many being sick, he was the only representative from Memphis, but reported "a fine time and a wonderful convention."

The Christmas service program was effectively rendered December 23.

Members of the Sunday School and church gave their pastor and his wife a nice Christmas present, a box full of "greenbacks" together with words of great appreciation.

The Ladies Auxiliary of Grace Covenant had a most successful school of Home Missions the last week of October. Mrs. J. F. Forsythe from Bethel Springs came and taught the lesson each afternoon for five days. The classes were well attended and much good was derived from these lessons.

On the Sunday night before Christmas the young people of the church under the direction of Mrs. J. W. Withers, the Vice-President of the Auxiliary, put on the pageant sent out by the Committee of Ministerial Relief, "Pilgrims of the Night." The pageant was splendidly given and quite a large crowd was present to enjoy it.

On Christmas eve night the Sunday School had a Christmas tree. There were gifts for all of the children and Santa Claus himself came to see the children and distributed the gifts. There was a fine program preceding the appearance of Santa Claus. On account of the flu epidemic there was not a very large crowd present, but those who were present enjoyed a good time.

Our church is planning to have a school of Foreign Missions beginning the week of February 11th. Each night at 6:15 supper will be served and following supper will be a brief devotional period and then there will be classes for Juniors and Intermediates, young people, and adults. This school will last five nights. There was a large attendance last year and we had a fine school, and we are hoping for an even better school this year.

The Leader's Bible Class, which is our Men's Class, has just closed a contest which lasted over a period of several weeks. On the night of Jan. 18th the losing side is to furnish the others with a banquet at the church. This contest proved very interesting and helped to build up the attendance of this class.

giving the attendance banner. Germantown and Highland St. Christian entered the December meeting tied for honors and Germantown came through with flying colors for a touchdown. Norris Avenue Intermediates won second place.

The Union also conducted a very helpful one-day Training School which was very profitable. Mr. Roy Breg, Field Secretary for the All-South, was one of the speakers.

More of the young people should attend these meetings. They are always interesting, profitable, and inspiring. You can also help make your society more efficient. A number of societies bring their pastor, too.

Dr. Ira Landrith of Chicago was the principal speaker at the January meeting.

Memphis Presbytery—At a special meeting of the Presbytery held in the Second Church, Memphis, November 20th, the pastoral relations between Rev. I. J. Heizer and the Brownsville church was dissolved. The church through their elder said they reluctantly concurred in the request and spoke of the good work he had done. He was termed by many of the citizens of Brownsville "the community pastor." Words of appreciation of his work among us were expressed by different ministers. A letter of dismission was granted to the Muhlenberg Presbytery, Synod of Kentucky and his pastorate will be at the Central Church, Henderson, Ky.

Memphis, Idlewild—Since Dr. Frazer's illness and enforced absence from his pastoral duties, the Idlewild officers have been carrying on the work according to schedule. In the pulpit at the various services, we have been privileged to be served by Dr. Charles E. Diehl, Dr. W. O. Shewmaker, Dr. J. J. Hill, Dr. Samuel Stanworth of Jackson, Tenn., Rev. Mr. A. H. Ziemer of New Orleans, and Dr. Felix R. Hill, presiding Elder of this conference of the Methodist Church. Dr. Frazer's condition is improving, but his physicians decline to set an exact date for his return to his duties. It is his plan to visit in Alabama for a short time.

A step, from which we look for much, was taken on Thursday evening, November 14th, when our men of the church group organized following a dinner served in the social hall. Mr. Thomas J. White was elected president; Mr. E. B. LeMaster, first vice-president; Mr. E. A. Wreiden, second vice-president; and Mr. David Hepburn, secretary-treasurer. Great enthusiasm was shown at this meeting for a definite program which would enlist the man-power of the church in organized service for Christ. The new year will see this organization functioning and we believe that a new period in Idlewild's spiritual development is opening in this opportunity for further service.

COUNTRY CHURCHES OF DISTINCTION.

Henry W. McLaughlin, D.D., Country Church Director

The chief business of the Church is evangelism. The best achievements in evangelism are usually found in churches that have a well balanced program of worship, preaching, teaching and social service.

It is interesting to note in a study of the Minutes of the General Assembly that there is a vital relationship between the Sunday School enrollment and the number of persons received on profession of faith.

In one Synod where the church membership is 35,533 and the Sunday school enrollment only 29,960, the number received in profession of faith is only 1,154—or a spiritual birthrate of only 3.2 per cent. Another Synod with only 22,984 members has a Sunday school enrollment of 24,352. This Synod received on profession 1,279, which is a spiritual birth rate of 5.5 per cent. This relationship, to a greater or less degree, is noticed in the Synods throughout the Church.

The number of persons received on profession of faith is a very good index of the other activities of the church in its whole program.

Those listed among the country churches of distinction are not necessarily the largest. Some of them are groups of very small country churches under one pastor. Note the number of the fields served by students, or recent graduates, of the theological seminaries. No church or group is listed that has received less than seventeen members on profession of faith during the year. There are a number of country churches that are receiving more than that, which are not listed but are located in Synods where there are other churches that stand ahead of them. This data is derived from the Minutes of the General Assembly for 1928. "A" indicates that the man is a student, or is a recent graduate, of Austin Seminary, "C" of Columbia, "K" of Kentucky and "U" of Union.

Most of the persons received into the city churches are by certificate, while nearly all of the additions to the country churches are by profession.

These country ministers in the above fields averaged over thirty-two persons on profession of faith. A large proportion of these persons will ultimately become members of city churches—some of them leaders. Our country churches are the source of supply, they must not be neglected.

CAN THIS BE TRUE?

The following extracts are from an editorial by Thomas M. Chalmers, 2654 Marion Avenue, New York Editor and Publisher of the Jewish Missionary Magazine, January 1929, Page 1 and 2:

Dr. E. L. Hunt, former pastor of the Washington Memorial Church, a member of the Committee on Friendship Between Jews and Christians of the Federal Council of Churches, has an article in The Jewish Tribune of January 4, which was quoted in the New York Times. The article is entitled, "Let Us End Missionary Work Among Jews."

In this article Dr. Hunt says: "I indict missionary work among Jews on the score of its futility. One must search far and wide to find a bona fide convert. Those that we have are usually mere social climbers—religious burglars trying to break into the second stories of houses whose doors are not opened to welcome them."

Dr. Hunt says again: "I indict missionary work among the Jews on the score of its costliness and waste."

Dr. Hunt says again: "I indict it because it is un-Christian."

The entire editorial of Dr. Thomas M. Chalmers, well worth reading and reproducing.

Wife—"George, I want to see that letter."

Husband—"What letter, dear?"

Wife—"That one you just opened. I know by the handwriting it is from a woman, and you turned pale when you read it. Hand it here, sir!"

Husband—"Here it is, dear. It is from your dressmaker."—Ex.

TODAY

Sure, this world is full of trouble—I ain't said it ain't.

Lord! I've had enough an' double Reason for complaint.

Rain an' storm have come to fret me Skies were often gray;

Thorns an' brambles have beset me On the road—but, say,

Ain't it fine today!

What's the use of always weepin' Makin' trouble last?

What's the use of always keepin' Thinkin' of the past?

Each must have his tribulation, Water with his wine,

Life it ain't no celebration. Trouble? I've had mine—

But today is fine.

It's today that I am livin', Not a month ago,

Havin', losin' takin', givin', As time wills it so.

Yesterday a cloud of sorrow • Fell across the way;

It may rain again tomorrow, It may rain—but, say,

Ain't it fine today!

foregoing sermon was preached by C. Rowan of Concord, N. C., to congregation Jan. 13. On the fol- Sunday his suggested program nanimously adopted by his session tire congregation assembled at rning service.

Rowan wishes it to be distinctly ood that he was not presuming to "run" any other church of the terian faith and order or any c of any other faith and order. He ish it to be understood however, hopes and prays that all churches might unite and co-operate in a great healing program on Sunday afternoons. Many churches, says Dr. Rowan, might want to continue their second preaching service; and it might be wise and right for them to do so. Other churches, however, continues Dr. Rowan might be equally wise and right to abolish the second preaching service.

Dr. Rowan has been asked by the President of the Ministerial association of Concord to come before that body and to offer any suggestions that he may care to make towards perfecting and executing a healing program on a city-wide scale.

It might be of public interest to know that there are only six adults in all the families connected with Dr. Rowan's church who are not communicants, or members of his church. Again, there are only three persons of "teen age" in all the families connected with Dr. Rowan's church who are not communicants, or members of his church. The membership of his church is 618.

GEORGE ANDERSON JOHNSON

At a little more than 46 years of age George Anderson Johnston, died, January 13, 1929.

On the Holy Sabbath Day, his Heavenly Father called him from earthly Sabbaths, to join "The saints in light," where "Sabbaths have no end."

He was a man of fine intelligence, true moral ideals, and character.

Graduated from University of North Carolina, he specialized in chemistry, and followed that profession for several years with commendable efficiency, holding positions in Cuba, Alabama and Ohio.

His health was being impaired by confinement indoors, and for that reason he gave up his profession, and returned to the farm, where he was born, and the home of the Johnstons for many generations.

He showed himself quite proficient and a good measure of success attended his efforts.

That was his occupation till a little more than a year ago, in a period of illness it was found that he was seized by a fatal malady, to which he succumbed as stated above.

He was a wise and useful citizen, and served as county commissioner with approved judgment and zeal.

In token of the esteem in which he was held in his public service, he was honored with the chairmanship of the Board, which he occupied till a short while before his death, when he resigned.

He was of a cheerful disposition, and of a hopeful temperament, an entertaining companion, and a loyal friend, a dutiful and affectionate son, a devoted husband, and a loving father.

Many years a faithful member of New Hope Presbyterian Church, Orange County, N. C., he led a quiet, Christian life, of humble attractiveness, and exemplary piety.

A few years ago he was ordained a ruling elder, and filled that office with the same quiet goodness which had characterized him in all his relations.

He has left an heritage of a good name, had a life of useful, kindly ministry. "He rests from his labors, and his works do follow him." He is survived by his wife, who was Miss Louise Thomas, of Louisburg, and Hillsboro, N. C., his mother, Mrs. Agnes Johnston, three children, two daughters, and one son, three sisters and three brothers.

May they all be sustained by the assuring word of our Saviour, "I will not leave you comfortless." Chapel Hill, N. C.

MISS MAMIE WITHERS

After months of illness culminating in a surgical operation which depleted strength could not sustain, Miss Mamie Withers "fell on sleep" January 3, 1929. Her life was spent at Davidson and besides the citizens of this community there will be, among the graduates of Davidson College scattered over the world, acquaintances by the hundred and friends by the score that will grieve to hear of her going away.

The most of her mature life was unselfishly spent in making a home for relatives who needed that ministry, but with home-making she combined the responsibilities of teaching. From an attractive teaching position in Peace Institute, Raleigh, N. C., she returned to Davidson when loved ones needed her, and from that time for almost twenty years practically all the children of Davidson had their first year in school under her control and instruction. During much of this time she was also superintendent and teacher in the Primary Department of the Presbyterian Sunday School where she rendered outstanding service. In all of her work—in the home, in the school room, in society, in the church—faithfulness and efficiency were most notable qualities. The community learned to know that any task that was hers would be performed and that it would be performed well.

This was because she wrought for the eye of Him whom she loved and whose approval she sought. What doubt is there that she has heard Him say: "Well done—faithful servant—enter into the joy of thy Lord." Davidson, N. C.

MISS ALICE SHAW

Resolutions In the passing of Miss Alice Shaw, a member of a godly and prominent family of St. Pauls, N. C., a sweet and gentle presence was removed from the community, the Presbyterian Church, and the Woman's Auxiliary.

She was a devoted, consistent, Christian and from her youth, as her sister remarked, "Alice was always good." Unfailingly cheerful throughout the vicissitudes of life, and especially so during the weary months of her last illness.

"She being dead yet speaketh." We, the members of the Woman's Auxiliary, wishing to record our appreciation of her beautiful life and character, hereby express our deep sense of loss and our desire to honor her memory, by sending this tribute to the Presbyterian Standard and the St. Paul's Review for publication, and by transcribing it on a page of our minute book.

Our Stewardship of Money

The year 1929 is "Stewardship Year" in the Presbyterian Church in the United States. The topic for Church-wide study and public emphasis during the month of February is "Our Stewardship of Money."

Money is ours not to hoard, but to share; not to swell the purse, but to enlarge the heart; not to buy position, but to build character. God puts no prohibition on acquisition that is honest, but requires a careful accounting of the use we make of money. The Book teaches that God loves a cheerful giver, and life teaches that in giving there is found permanent happiness and contentment. More of our Presbyterian people should be careful in consulting the will of God as they make their wills for the disposition of their money after death. Read the excellent article in this paper by the Rev. B. K. Tenney of Dallas, Texas, on this important subject. Write us for literature and information about the observance of Stewardship Year!

STORY

THE LIFE OF THE PARTY

"Did you have a good time at the party, Eunice?"

A sigh was her reply.

"But why didn't you, my dear?"

"Well, you see, Mother, I can never think of a good joke nor an appropriate story; I can't remember the games and have to learn them all over again, and you know I never could originate one to save my life, and there's Hazel Harkness—why, you should hear her; she just says one funny thing after another, Mother. She's the life of the party."

"But did you laugh at the amusing things Hazel told and did?"

"I never laughed so much in my life. Yes, I guess I had a good time, but I do wish I were more entertaining. All I can do is to laugh when I should laugh; and goodness knows when there is a joke with a catch in it, I am always the one who bites."

"What a dreary party it would be if girls like you were not there!"

"Why, Mother, we never do a thing but just laugh and show that we are highly entertained."

"You are one of the audience, Eunice, and an appreciative audience is three-fourths of the entertainer's capital. Now, if you look bored—"

"O Mother, I forgot to tell you, Annice wasn't invited, and some of the girls say they never intend to invite her again. She just looks so bored, just as if she were accustomed to some so much finer that she is wasting her time with us; and Hazel is never amusing when Annice is present—says she feels as if someone were holding a wet blanket over her mouth. Too bad, isn't it? But perhaps our fun does bore Annice; she is accustomed to such big things in the city, you know, that we must seem terribly amateurish. But since she has to spend her summer at home, I'd think she'd try to be one of us."

There was a succession of parties and teas in the following two weeks in honor of a visiting girl; and Eunice went to all of them, repeating the same experience: She was highly entertained by the others and appreciative of their attention to her, their wit, their initiative in starting games, their bits of fancywork, their clothes, and the refreshments they served, always admiring, always joining in, no difference if the game was to her liking or not, and always regretting to her mother that she couldn't be more entertaining herself, forgetting that as an audience she excelled.

At the last party Hazel proposed a secret vote of the most popular girl in their crowd, the ballots to be collected by Alice's little sister and counted by her, much to the delight of the ten-year-old child. Eunice voted for Hazel, regretting that she couldn't cast ten votes for the girl whom she so much admired. But when the little girl, with a proud air of secrecy, had counted the ballots she stepped forward and put a crown made of early spring flowers on Eunice's head!

"Me—me," stammered Eunice, "me, my head! My—say, girls, there is some mistake here. This crown belongs to Hazel, for what would we do without the life of the party?"

"It belongs to you!" the girls cried, the voice of Hazel sounding the loudest. "Whatever would we do without our Eunice, who is always so sympathetic and so nice and who just fits in?"

THE END OF MISS EDNA'S SUNDAY SCHOOL

Hilda Richmond

Lying on her bed in the city hospital after her numerous bruises, and broken bones, and cuts had been attended to following the automobile accident, Miss Edna Kuhlman had time to worry about a number of things, not the least of which was the Sunday School in Pittsville. She had been on her way to Sunday School when the reckless driver injured her. Her mother, a semi-invalid, as Miss Edna told everyone, had been removed from the family home to the care of a relative in the country to enjoy quiet after the shock of the dire news, the business affairs were safe in the lawyer's hands, the house had been closed—but the Sunday School! "My poor little Sunday School!" said the tired, suffering woman. "I'll be here for weeks and weeks and there will be no Sunday School when I get back."

Those of the village people who attended the one service weekly in the shabby church shared the opinion of Miss Kuhlman. "Poor soul! If we could only manage to keep the Sunday School going till she gets around! But there, that's out of the question. Miss Edna's been the life and soul of the school for years past." That was old Mrs. Ruhl's opinion, and others of the Ladies' Bible class of which Miss Edna was the teacher were of the same mind. Miss Edna played the piano, she taught, she provided most of the funds for the school, for the Kuhlman family had always been the most prosperous in the small place, and she also opened their home and the fine old grounds about it to all sorts of meetings from picnics to committee gatherings. Old Mr. Piser was superintendent of the school in name, but Miss Edna's influence was felt everywhere.

So it was something of a shock when on the very next Sunday the faithful gathered to try to "hold the school together," there to find that the college young folk home from the summer vacation, and the high school pupils, assembled with a first class orchestra gleaned from the ranks of the school and college players. An inspiring sacred number opened the exercises, and the superintendent rubbing his wrinkled hands together said, "Boys and girls, that was just fine. Miss Edna will be more than pleased to know that you did this for her."

"But we didn't do it for her, Mr. Piser, "We don't mean any disrespect to Miss Edna, but she's too much of an autocrat for us. If anyone tells her we're playing we'll quit," said the youthful leader of the orchestra.

"Why, James Henry Freeman!" said his mother. "Where is your bringing up? Miss Edna is pure gold and she's been the leading spirit in this school for years."

"Leading spirit is the word, Mother," said the youth unabashed. "She's tried to lead us long enough. Besides," he added wickedly, "I accidentally overheard some of the members of your missionary society wishing that Miss Edna had married that beau she turned down a century or so back."

"Why, James!" Mrs. Freeman turning crimson.

"It's a fact, Mrs. Freeman," put in a sweet young thing to help out James, "You ladies are of the same mind as the young people, but you are not so brutally frank. We recognize the fact that Miss Edna means well, but her ideas of Sunday Schools were out of date when the United States became an independent nation." Mrs. Freeman made haste to leave the church, fear other startling revelations in public. "Just awful the way the young folks disturbed the meeting," quavered Mrs. Ruhl linking her arm in that the disturbed Mrs. Freeman. "I wonder what Miss Edna will think her school when she gets back."

Mrs. Freeman glanced over her shoulder cautiously before saying "Well, perhaps it's just as well as some of the rest of us take a little responsibility, Mrs. Ruhl. The morning was beautiful this morning, don't you think so?"

"Yes, good enough, but we've always done without an orchestra before. It looks as if we didn't appreciate Edna. That's all."

Miss Kuhlman was convalescing when the chief surgeon of the hospital was making the rounds showing off new and clean institution to a visiting friend. She had written reams of instruction to her sister about her mother's diet, and how she was to be cared for, she had urged and exhorted and implored her Bible class to do the best until she could return, she sent substantial checks for the summer picnic and the new song book and had left no stone unturned to "keep things going" against her return. She received very unsatisfactory reports from every object of her energy, efficiency, but soon she would be able to put new life and energy into this.

"Why, Edna!" said the visiting friend in amazement. "You here?"

"Why, David!" said the patient by the window. "You here?"

The visitor soon lost all interest in the rest of the hospital so the chief surgeon courteously withdrew leaving Dr. Hunter to converse with his old school mate. During the hour the visitor learned a great deal about his old home and the people who lived there, and he also discovered that his former sweetheart had not changed.

 your children happy and well. A few drops is all it takes to quiet fretful, irritable, colicky babies; relieve their fussiness, gas on stomach, constipation, etc.; soothe them to sleep instantly. For like disorders in older children, you simply use a little extra dose of the same reliable medicine, Fletcher's Castoria. Don't use grown-much during the passing years. Her conversation was filled with references to her mother's condition, the state of the Sunday School they had attended together as children and later until Dr.

 Hunter went to college, the lack of enthusiasm in all kinds of religious activity on the part of youth and the general run down condition of things in the village.

"Have you changed your mind about the—the thing we talked of when last we met?" said the doctor wistfully as he rose to go.

"Now, David," she said reproachfully,
 "how could I desert Mother? It would be the death of her. You should marry and have a home, every man needs a home, I told you that ten years ago.
 I'm sorry," she said gently, "but if you could see Mother, and know how I wait on her you'd know that—well, there is no use talking about impos-sibilities," she added trying to hide her emotion. "It is my duty," she added simply. "You'll see when you get to Pittsville. A dozen or more old people lean on me as well as Mother. 'Not what we will, but what we must', you know 'makes up the sum of living.'"

Two weeks later Dr. Hunter, having finished his much-needed vacation among relatives and old friends in Pittsville, begged the privilege of taking Miss Kuhlman home. He seemed full of suppressed excitement of some sort, and could hardly converse in connected fashion during the trip. As they neared the Kuhlman homestead Miss Edna saw that some sort of celebration was going on, but it was not in her honor because she had not announced her coming. The annual Sunday School picnic, of course! But what would it mean to her mother if she had returned home for the occasion.

Miss Edna was received with open arms. Mrs. Kuhlman in a print dress and white apron was helping make sandwiches. "I'm entirely well, Edna," she said simply. "And I'm going to stay well. No more coddling for me."

"You should see what they've done to your Sunday School, Miss Edna," said old Mrs. Ruhl with sorrowful countenance. "The young folks and the young married people simply took the thing out of our hands! You won't know the church when you see it. Of course we have the crowds and we've got a preacher and everything is alive, but I miss the nice quiet little sessions you used to have. I don't suppose you'll be able to get it back where it was under a year."

Miss Kuhlman looked helplessly from her vigorous mother to the smiling man at her side. "Just what I told you eleven years back, Edna," he whispered. "Your mother never had a chance to be anything but an invalid under your tender care."

"The whole town is on the upgrade, Miss Edna," said the village banker strolling up to congratulate her on her recovery. "I don't pretend to say what did it, but Pittsville is wide awake and growing."

"There'll be time to get to the preacher's and back before they serve supper," said Dr. Hunter, glancing at his watch.

"Well, I'm glad somebody wants and needs me, or thinks he does," said Miss Kuhlman as they drove off unnoticed.
 "My departure permanently will leave no gap in the village. And to think of my Sunday School! But there, I'm glad they did it. Now it's everybody's Sunday School."—Advance.

ROBERT UNVEILS THE GLEAM
 Lillion Trowbridge Harp

Robert Green came up the walk, whistling absent-mindedly. The store was all right, but it stifled him. He was not satisfied just to sell electric appliances. He wanted to work with them—find out all about them and what electricity could do.

The new semester was soon to begin at Polytechnic. No, he could not quite manage it this time—next fall maybe.

He shook off his thoughts as he entered the home, which, half paid for, was all his father had been able to leave when he had suddenly lost his life ten years ago.

"Hello, mother! Behind with your rocking?" he greeted cheerily as he tossed a generous share of his pay check into her rapidly rocking lap.

"How I hate to have you do it, son—no! no!—not all that!" remonstrated his mother.

CHILDREN'S COLDS

are doubly dangerous after Flu

Physicians advise that the chief danger in this epidemic is AFTER influenza.
 Then, more than ever, colds attacking a child's weakened system may lead to bronchitis, pneumonia, sinus trouble, abscess of the ear, mastoiditis, or even the dread meningitis.

Check Colds Without "Dosing"

A peculiarity of influenza is that its toxins leave the digestive system upset. Too much "dosing" further disturbs the digestion and lessens the appetite, just when the child needs nourishment more than ever. Internal medication should therefore be avoided, except on the advice of a physician.

As Vicks VapoRub is applied externally, it can be used freely at the first sign of a cold with no fear of upsetting even the most delicate stomach. Just rub it on the throat and chest at bedtime.

Vicks Acts 2 Ways at Once

(1) Its medicated vapors, released by the body-warmth, are inhaled direct to the inflamed air-passages, loosening the phlegm and easing the difficult breathing.

(2) At the same time, Vicks acts through the skin like a poultice, "drawing out" tightness and sore-ness, and thus helping the vapors to break up the congestion.

Of course, Vicks 2-way action is just as effective for adults' cold-troubles as it is for those of children.

Purify The System

With the old stand-by
Glenn Springs Mineral Water

Most intestinal and digestive disorders respond to treatment if the organs are cleansed. Perhaps you are troubled with chronic sluggishness of the organs of elimination that so frequently saps the energy, destroys appetite, weakens the body and makes recuperation and health so difficult.

Glenn Springs Water first became popular in early years when thousands from malarial sections found it so effective in ridding the system of the germ and renewing strength and health. It is now generally regarded not only as a pleasant and mild corrective, but as a very effective treatment for chronic constipation, biliousness, indigestion, dyspepsia, auto-intoxication, rheumatism, and kindred ills. It purifies mildly, and restores the organs to normal functioning. You don't have to visit the Springs now. Use it in your home. Shipped by express to your door. Use this coupon:

DR. CALDWELL'S THREE RULES

Dr. Caldwell watched the results of constipation for 47 years, and believed that no matter how careful people are of their health, diet and exercise, constipation will occur from time to time. Of next importance, then, is how to treat it when it comes. Dr. Caldwell always was in favor of getting as close to nature as possible, hence his remedy for constipation is a mild vegetable compound. It can not harm the most delicate system and is not habit forming.

The Doctor never did approve of drastic physics and purges. He did not believe they were good for human beings to put into their system. Use Syrup Pepsin for yourself and members of the family in constipation, biliousness, sour and crampy stomach, bad breath, no appetite, headaches, and to break up fevers and colds. Get a bottle today, at any drugstore and observe these three rules of health: Keep the head cool, the feet warm, the bowels open. For a free trial bottle, just write "Syrup Pepsin," Dept. BB, Monticello, Illinois.

"Aw, shucks, mom, all I have ever given you won't pay for the holes you darned in my clothes. The holes that helped to put your eyes where they are now. Why, mother, if you aren't mending my coat!" stormed Robert. "Straining your eyes when the tailor will do it for a few cents!"

"But you should be putting that money away for your tuition, Robert," answered Mrs. Greene, drawing her chair as close to the light as the position of the fixture would permit, as in gentle defiance of her scolding son she took up her work. "If I could only rent those two rooms—" she continued half to herself.

Robert had argued before and always fruitlessly, so he went thoughtfully upstairs without even hearing her last remark. The sight of his little mother straining her eyes and nerves to mend his clothes under the small, awkwardly placed gas light, troubled him.

"Hello Smithie, old scout!" he said absently-mindedly as his buddy smiled at him from a kodak print stuck in his mirror.

Suddenly he was afire with a big thought.

"That's the solution! Smithie, I crave your advice!" he gleefully announced to the speaking likeness in the mirror. "Maybe mother's eyes wouldn't be—if—" came his sober afterthought.

Soon he had broken all records made since his banister-sliding days in getting downstairs. Indeed, if he had not been so out of habit, he probably would have resorted to his former method.

"Good-bye, mummie," he called in his teasing, affectionate way and the door banged.

"Always like a happy little boy around the house," said Mrs. Greene fondly to the neighbor who had just run in. "You would never guess by his jubilant spirits the sacrifice he is making."

"But he is quite grown up for all his boyishness with you," returned her friend.

"Yes," agreed Mrs. Greene, "and I know that life is beginning to be serious. Since my eyes will not permit me to sew steadily, I have no income. He had counted on entering night classes at Polytechnic this semester, but the eye specialist has changed all that. Oh, it is terrible!" ended the unhappy mother, as tears came to her eyes.

"I know just how you feel," consoled the neighbor. "You are naturally an independent soul. But don't worry, there will be a way. Robert is deserving. There is always a way for those who want a thing bad enough."

"If I couldn't rent those two rooms—" continued Mrs. Greene sadly, ignoring her neighbor's philosophy. "But students are the only possibility and they demand good lights."

"Well, don't worry. You own your home. Robert is a strong boy and he will realize his ideals some day, you may be sure. A little responsibility now will keep them more vividly in his mind," admonished her friend as she bade her good night.

Robert brought Smithie to supper the next evening. They went poking mysteriously about the house, so that Mrs. Greene's curiosity was aroused, Robert talking excitedly all the while.

Something was in the air she was sure—a radio maybe. Well, she could not object, but he really shouldn't spend his money for that when he wanted school so badly. Queer that he did not take her into his confidence. But shortly came a telephone call saying her sister was slightly ill and would like to have her for a few days for company, mainly, as she would be alone all day. She forgot to wonder what Robert was up to as she prepared to go to her sister early next morning.

Quite happily, Robert met her at the station when she came home a few evenings later.

"Well, mother, you did get back on your birthday, didn't you? I was afraid you wouldn't," he greeted her affectionately.

"Why, I had forgotten all about my birthday! Robert never forgets, though," she said patting his arm fondly.

Bless the boy! She would find a large bouquet of flowers at home. He just would buy flowers for her birthday.

"Have you a match to light the gas?" she asked when they reached the gloomy house.

"Nope!" chuckled Robert, as a click flooded the hall with mellow light. "A bright and happy birthday, mother!"

"Why, Robert! Electricity! What—how—?"

"Smithie is in the business now, you know, mother. He got discounts for me and helped me plan it. And Aunt Lou very obligingly got sick—" ended Robert with a grin.

"Robert! Did you—? I didn't think Aunt Lou was very much under the weather," laughed his mother, good naturedly. "You dear, dear boy, to think of it and get everything in order before my return." And Robert found himself being hugged and kissed.

"We thought a wall outlet would be nice there, as that is where you sit most," said he, indicating a rosy-shaded lamp beside her favorite chair.

"And I accused you, in my mind, of having a radio up your sleeve," confessed his mother, overwhelmed with his unselfishness. "But Robert, you should not have done it. It has taken all you have saved for your tuition."

"Oh, that doesn't matter. I'll have enough by next fall. And maybe if we had had it before, my mother's eyes—" but he couldn't finish.

Mrs. Greene knew that it did matter and desperation wrung the mother's heart.

"No, Robert," said his mother, a few days later, refusing the regularly offered money. "I rented those rooms today—and the parlor we don't use, too! Those students were so enthusiastic about the lighting arrangement!"

"Why, mother! That is too much work for you. I won't have it," he said almost in anger.

"Nonsense, boy!" she answered excitedly. "I am strong, it is only my eyes that need rest. And anyway, Mrs. Blair and I have bought a vacuum cleaner together. I am going to serve breakfast, too. It will be so simple with the electric percolator and electric waffle iron which Uncle Ben so blindly sent me last Christmas."

"Why, son, your unselfish gift has given me a means to independence and made me far happier than you can imagine. So don't scold, Robbie," she pleaded at Robert's uncertain look.

Robert saw the old sadness which he had been unable to jolly her out of for weeks was gone. She looked the age she was instead of ten years more than she could lay claim to. He was glad of anything that brightened his mother's face, so he only said—what do you suppose?

"Well, mother, when do we eat?"

GENE TUNNEY may have put off the gloves for good. But he's too wise a man to give up the price-less habits of physical training that stood him in such good stead in his profession.

Just before his last fight, Tunney said:

"I started taking Nujol internally seven years ago. The first month Nujol brought remarkable changes in my physical condition. My elimination became active and normal. My appetite increased and a desire for intensive training was created. Since that time I have taken Nujol about five nights a week. I have regulated myself to the amount necessary to keep my elimination normal. I have found during my seven years' experience with Nujol that it is not habit-forming, or in any way unpleasant or harmful."

Nujol is not a medicine. It contains absolutely no medicine or drugs. It is simply a pure substance—perfected by the Nujol Laboratories, 26 Broadway, New York. It not only prevents an excess of body poisons from forming (we all have them) but aids in their removal. In sealed packages only. Buy a bottle of Nujol today.

Louisville Seminary Enjoys Dr. Cunningham

Missouri Pastor Brings Stirring Messages to Theological Students

The Louisville Theological Seminary, recently, the Rev. J. R. Cunningham, D.D., pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Bristol, Tenn., delivered addresses in chapel. His theme was "The Ideal Minister of Today." From his experience as a pastor in various centers and elsewhere he brought to the students and the professors an inspiring vision of the possibilities of the ministry today. He impressed every hearer by his personality, his spirituality, his love for the Lord and for the Bible, his knowledge of men and affairs, his love for human beings, one by one, and his zeal for the work of the ministry as the noblest thing on earth.

On the first day on the spirit of the minister, Dr. Cunningham said every life has a climate, or atmosphere, which determines the influence of all that he says or does, and many a minister fails to reveal the spirit of the Lord Jesus—the spirit of pity and generosity in dealing with men—because he is not in close fellowship with God. "The depth to which man stoop in service will depend on the height to which you attain character."

The next day he spoke on "A Man out of a Message." This address was based on the words of Joab to King David. The work of the ministry is not zeal, but zeal is no substitute for preparation. The Church today is struggling with stronger, keener competitors than ever before and her leaders must be prepared. No schooling, however, can take the place of spiritual preparation—the preparation of the heart and life by the Holy Spirit.

His last address was on "The Human Side of the Ministry," holding up the Lord Jesus as the one great lover of men and stressing the need of many today for the comfort of religion through a sympathetic pastor. One of the great neglected sectors of the Christian ministry today is comfort. "Help men not merely to endure burdens but to grow strong by bearing them bravely." "I am saved by Christ; I am sanctified by the Holy Spirit." (Phoebe Cary). The pastor must know and love his people as individuals; he ought to become a good father; he ought to know how to comfort people close to the Redeemer and how to help them there.

Our Seminary had richer spiritual food prepared by a hand and served in attractive form. We are grateful to Dr. Cunningham for setting before us such high standards for the work of the Church. A. W. B.

London Preacher Gives Series of Addresses at Dr. W. W. White's School in New York

Stuart Holden, Vicar of St. Andrew's Church, London, England gave a series of addresses February 8-12 in the audience of the Biblical Seminary in New York.

The general subject was "The Evangelical Abundant Life." His specific subjects were: 1. The Walk that Pleases God; 2. Christ the Fulfiller; 3. The Old Testament; 4. Taking Sin Seriously; 5. The Guide, a Comforter Bequeathed.

Baptist Treasurer Returned to Prison

Carnes is Given a Penitentiary Term of Five Years on Recommendation of Home Mission Board in Atlanta

The Associated Press reports that Clinton S. Carnes, ex-treasurer of the Southern Baptist Home Mission Board, pleaded guilty of embezzlement at Atlanta February 5, and was given an indeterminate sentence of five to seven years imprisonment.

His plea was accepted on recommendation of board officials, who said Carnes had turned over all his resources for restitution, that it would save a long, expensive trial and that justice would be served by the sentence due to his age. It was added that Carnes had agreed to aid in untangling the board's accounts, on which auditors have been working since he disappeared last summer.

Only one of the 20 indictments returned against him—that charging misappropriation of $80,000—figured in the proceedings. The state announced that the others would be dismissed if the 51-year-old former layman did not seek a pardon or parole before the expiration of his minimum sentence.

Carnes, who has been confined to the county jail since his arrest last September in Winnipeg, Manitoba, appeared in court in custody of deputy sheriff, accompanied by his attorneys and younger son, Robert. He made no statement and his only participation in the brief formalities was to sign the indictment.

Pope No Longer Prisoner of Vatican

The Head of the Roman Catholic Church Will Issue From His "Captivity" About Easter

Negotiations between Mussolini, the dictator of Italy and the Pope at Rome have brought about an understanding between the civil government and the authorities of the Church.

The Associated Press reports that the conclusion of an agreement between the Holy See and Italy, settling the question raised by the fall of the papal states and provides in detail for the future relations between church and state, was formally announced by Cardinal Gasparri, papal secretary of state, to the vatican diplomatic body.

The cardinal and Premier Mussolini were to sign the agreement and concordat on Sunday afternoon at the Lateran Palace. Simultaneously the pope will distribute to the cardinals the printed text of the documents. These will be published on Monday, February 11 in the Italian press, which has not even alluded to the negotiations over the Roman question.

Some persons believe that Pope Pius XI will leave the vatican under the freedom of the new order for the first time at Easter. There is speculation as to whether he will choose to celebrate mass at Church of St. John in the Lateran, in keeping with old papal traditions, or at the Church of St. Charles where, as a newly-ordained priest, he said his first mass 50 years ago.

The solution of the Roman question was rendered possible, according to both vatican and fascist circles, by the exceptional coincidence of the presence of strong men on the chair of St. Peter and at the helm of the Italian government.

The application of canon law to the kingdom of Italy is one of the most important and sweeping measures incorporated in the concordat which acc-

Dr. Landrith Speaks in Charlotte

Noted Christian Endeavor Speaker and Chautauqua Lecturer Addresses Large Gathering of Young People

Dr. Ira P. Landrith, of Chicago, citizenship superintendent of the International Society of Christian Endeavor, delivered a stirring address to members of the Mecklenburg county union at its meeting February 7 at the Second Presbyterian Church, in Charlotte.

The speaker was introduced by Roy Breg, of Chattanooga, all-south secretary of the society, who preceded him with a short talk. Dr. Landrith has for 30 years been a member of the board of directors of the International Society of Christian Endeavor, is president of the National Temperance council, a federation of all the leading church temperance, prohibition enforcement and moral reform organizations of America, and is nationally known as a lecturer, editor and traveler. He is originally a Texan and was for 29 years a resident of Nashville, Tenn., where he was editor of The Cumberland Presbyterian and president of Ward Belmont School for Girls.

Dr. Landrith declared that world evangelism, good citizenship and world peace are three objectives that members of the Christian Endeavor Society must keep before them as cardinal objectives of their organization.

"Christian Endeavor has not stood for anything that has not either been accomplished or is now on the way to accomplishment," declared Dr. Landrith, whose address was replete with humor and anecdote. "I believe it was born of God for a time like this and that it is the youth movement for this young age because this is essentially a young age, an age of self-expression and co-operation."

Young people of the present day were vigorously defended. "I believe the young folks of today are as good or better than their parents," said Dr. Landrith. "We didn't have in our day flivvers made for two and carrying seven, but we had buggies made for one in which two rode. I do not sympathize with this general criticism of you. Much of this gloomy theology you hear nowadays is more in need of an M. D. than it is of a D. D. Some folks are merely bilious when they think they are devout."

But though the present generation knows more than its predecessors, it

Independent Church Lays Cornerstone

The Independent Presbyterian Church, Savannah, Ga., laid the corner stone of the new Sunday School building, designed by Dr. Ralph Adams Cram, of Boston, on Sunday afternoon, January 13th. This ceremony had been delayed in order that it might be held on the 112th anniversary of the laying of the corner stone of the first building on the present church site.

The building occupies the former manse lot, in the rear of the church, and is so designed as to secure a beautiful courtyard in the rear of the church, the open court being enclosed on the east by the church, and on the west and south sides by the new building, which will take rank among the most modern and beautiful buildings of this character in America. The congregation plans to dedicate the new building on the 125th anniversary of the founding of the Sunday School, May 5th.

Dr. Stevenson to be at Davidson

President of Princeton Seminary Will Deliver the Baccalaureate Sermon in June

Dr. J. Ross Stevenson, president of Princeton Theological Seminary, Princeton, N. J., will deliver the baccalaureate sermon before the 1929 graduating class of Davidson College on June 2nd, according to an announcement made Feb. 5 by Dr. W. J. Martin, president of the college. The Davidson president expressed gratification that Dr. Stevenson had accepted the invitation. Dr. Stevenson will come to Davidson direct from St. Paul, Minn., where he will attend a meeting of the U. S. A. Presbyterian Assembly.

Dr. Stevenson has been president of the Princeton Seminary since 1914. He is a graduate of Washington and Jefferson College, where he obtained an A.B. and M.A. degree. His theological work was done at McCormick Theological Seminary in Chicago, and special study has been done at the University of Berlin. Honorary degrees have been conferred upon him by several institutions, among which was his own Alma Mater and the University of Edinburgh.

Before assuming the presidency of Princeton Seminary, Dr. Stevenson had served as a pastor in Missouri, as professor at McCormick Theological Seminary, and as pastor of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church in New York and Brown Memorial Presbyterian Church in Baltimore. He was at one time moderator of the Northern Presbyterian Church, served in the Y. M. C. A. during the World War and has been on international religious committees.

The selection of other speakers for the commencement program at Davidson is being delayed until it is definitely known whether the new $600,000 Chambers building will be completed and ready for dedication by June. An announcement will be forthcoming within a few days.

Third Rural School At Vanderbilt

University at Nashville Promoting Courses for Pastors of Country Churches—Applications for Scholarships Now in Order

Our plans are now forming for the Rural Church School which will be held April 1-12, 1929, at Nashville, Tenn., in Vanderbilt University, School of Religion. This will be the third school for rural pastors conducted by the Vanderbilt School of Religion. Those who have an honor record in former schools will be given first consideration. The management desires to get into communication with all those who are forging ahead in the service of the rural field. Within the limits of their facilities, scholarships will be awarded to these men which will cover all expenses, including board, room, fees, and railroad fare both ways at clergy rates.

Stated Clerks of Presbytery will nominate from their pastors, two persons to whom may be sent application blanks for the 1929 school. Many applications have already been received from men who are eager to attend, but it is desired to select those who would profit most through the aid of this school.

Through an intensive effort, the School of Religion was enabled, in April, 1927, to hold a short term Rural Church School, with a student enrollment of 168, representing 14 different

ALLIANCE OF REFORMED CHURCH TO MEET

The Western Section Will Meet at Atlantic City in February and the General Council in Boston in June

Dr. J. D. Leslie, stated clerk of the General Assembly makes the following announcement:

In May, 1926, the General Council of Presbyterian and Reformed Churches in America was merged with the Western Section of the Alliance of Reformed Churches throughout the world holding the Presbyterian system.

The number of members in the western section allotted to the Presbyterian Church, U. S. is 16, the same number of members that we had in the General Council of Presbyterian and Reformed Churches in America. They are elected according to Rule 111 of the By-Laws of the western section. Those names appearing on page 76 of the 1928 Minutes of the General Assembly were elected last year and will hold membership in the western section for the terms designated. Alternates should have been elected for these 16 but the Assembly overlooked this. The western section meets annually, this year in Atlantic City, February 26 and 27.

The Alliance of Reformed Churches throughout the world is composed of the eastern (European) and the western (American) sections. This body meets as the General Council every four years. 1929 is the year for the next meeting and this will be held in Boston, June 19-27. The members of the western section are members of this General Council. The 1928 Assembly elected 16 additional delegates to attend this Quadrennial Council (see page 80 of minutes) which gives a total of 32 elected by your Assembly. According to the rules of the General Council our Church is entitled to 36 representatives, so that the next Assembly will have to elect four additional delegates to the council with alternates for all 36.

The expenses of our delegates to the western section are paid by the treasurer of the western section. Our General Assembly contributes $945.00 annually to the support of the western section and expenses of our delegates are paid from this money. At the quadrennial meeting of the council, however, every member who attends must bear his own expenses as neither the General Assembly nor the Council made provision for expenses.

I am giving this information to the press that the Church as a whole may know the exact relation we sustain to the western section which meets every year and the General Council of the Alliance which meets every four years. This information has been secured not only from the minutes of our Assembly but from considerable correspondence, extending over a period of several months, with Rev. Henry B. Master, D.D., American Secretary of the Alliance, and with several of our ministers who have attended numerous meetings of the western section and the General Council, and from the Manuals of Rules of these bodies which I have on file.

J. D. Leslic, Stated Clerk.

Dallas, Texas.

The following have been chosen to attend these meetings:

Atlantic City: W. McF. Alexander, Thornton Whaling, A. A. Wallace, A. A. Little, J. M. Wells, I. S. McElroy, E. W. McCorkle, S. H. Chester, J. M. McClesney, D. M. Sweets, John Van Lear, W. E. Davis, C. H. H. Branch, T. S. Clyce, H. E. Kirk, W. L. Lingle.

Boston: All the above named are appointed to the Boston meeting, in addition, the following are also named: R. L. Jetton, C. V. Crabb, D. Clay Lilly, J. H. Taylor, D. H. Ogden, F. R. Dudley, J. L. Fowle, T. E. Gowens, all the foregoing are ministers. The following elders are appointed: W. F. Smith and W. M. Everett, of Atlanta, W. L. Frieron, of Chattanooga, T. H. Hooper, Huntington, D. A. Penick, Austin, W. B. Morrison, Durant, E. T. George, New Orleans, A. M. Scales, Greensboro.

BAPTIST EX-TREASURER SENTENCED TO PRISON

After a hastily empanelled jury had returned a formal-consent verdict of guilty, Judge Virlyn B. Moore passed sentence with the statement that the sentence seemed "inadequate," but that he assented in the solicitor-general's recommendation "in view of the circumstances and the recommendations of the home mission board, which is most directly involved financially."

Thus was written a closing chapter in a meteoric career

It was as an obscure auditor that Carnes first became affiliated with the home mission board. A year later, in 1919, his ability as an accountant, and a business acumen described as inherent in him since early youth, won for him the post of treasurer.

Then he joined the Capitol Avenue Baptist Church, became chairman of its finance and building committees, was invited to membership in several clubs, and established a home in the fashionable Druid Hills section. He became the head of several private business enterprises and generally was regarded as a shrewd business man and successful financier.

On August 15, last, he mysteriously disappeared, and 10 days later a search was instituted for him by his church colleagues and family in the belief he had met with foul play. When days passed without a trace of him, auditors were set to work on his books.

Coincident with the discovery of the shortage placed by the examiners at $953,000, it developed that Carnes had a record of two prison sentences, one of which he served in a Missouri prison and the other in the federal penitentiary in Atlanta for using the mails to defraud, some five years before he became connected with the mission board.

Delving into a private file kept by Carnes in one of his private business offices, the auditors reported that a great part of the defalcations were carried out by a systematic pyramiding of loans Carnes was said to have negotiated with various southern banks, ostensibly in behalf of the mission board. He had carte blanche authority by virtue of his office to make such loans, and his speculations were said to have extended over a period of several years.

Receivers who were appointed for Carnes' personal properties later reported that Carnes had been the financial benefactor of two girls seeking careers in the motion pictures. He was shown by this record to have sent several thousand dollars to maintain them and a companion in Hollywood.

A nation-wide search of more than a month ended in the arrest of Carnes on September 28 in Winnipeg, where he had assumed a fictitious name and launched plans for an ambitious business enterprise. With the exception of a small amount of cash and securities the authorities found none of the supposed embezzled funds in his possession.

Before his return here, Carnes' wife and two sons had turned over to receivers all of his personal and real property out of which mission board officials told the court today the board would realize approximately $250,000.

The board was represented at the arraignment by A. G. Powell, attorney, and Dr. L. R. Christie, president of the mission board.

In a written statement submitted to Judge Moore, Dr. Christie said the board "does not palliate nor condone in any degree Mr. Carnes' offense, but we are persuaded that swift, certain and prompt sentence and punishment is the vital thing rather than carrying on the trial of a number of criminal cases against Mr. Carnes.

Carnes was led back to jail to await a decision from the state prison commission whether he will be assigned to a county chaingang or serve his term in the prison farm at Milledgeville.

On Baptist Honor Day, November 11, the Southern Baptists raised nearly $400,000 to cover Carnes' arrearages.

POPE NO LONGER PRISONER OF THE VATICAN companies the agreement for solution of the Roman question.

Acceptance of the law of Italy is in direct opposition to the principle proclaimed by the famous Italian statesman, Count di Cavour: "A free church in a free state." This led to what was called here the liberal democratic policy which altogether separated religion from the state. Indeed, the state opposed religion, which in Italy means the Catholic religion.

Mussolini, from the very beginning of his power, reversed this state of things by adopting the diametrically opposite pro-religious policy which now receives most solemn sanction in the concordat.

The situation which has existed in Italy since 1871, arose when Victor Emmanuel III and Garibaldi at the fall of the French Empire, set up an Italian state. Victor Emmanuel invaded the papal states, and captured Rome, taking away the temporal authority of the pope in the state as well as the church.

The pope of that time, Leo XIII, refused to acknowledge the Roman government, and retired into the Vatican, and has since been a voluntary "prisoner."

Effects of the New Agreement Effect on Marriages

Only civil marriages were legal under the Italian law, but now a religious marriage is also legal. Non-Catholics, naturally, still can have a civil marriage.

Bishops appointed by the Holy See have needed heretofore an exequator from the Italian government before they were allowed to exercise their ministry. Now the Holy See simply will ascertain that the Italian government has no political objection against the candidates whom it wishes to appoint. In exchange, the newly-appointed bishops will take an oath of allegiance on the Holy Gospels to the Italian ruler, government and laws, pledging themselves and their clergy not to participate in any attempt against the state.

The new Italy has suppressed completely all religious teaching in the schools. Hereafter such teaching will be compulsory and the appointment of teachers of religion will be approved by the bishops, as well as by professors of Roman Catholic theology.

After 1870, several religious congregations were suppressed and were forbidden to own property. Now all religious orders can establish themselves and, together with diocesan chapters, congregations, seminaries and parishes, will be allowed the same privileges as incorporated companies.

Ecclesiastical Angle

In the past ecclesiastics were treated like laymen when accused of any crime. Now the civil authorities must report any misdemeanors committed by an ecclesiastic and submit the charges to his bishop. In case of arrest, an ecclesiastic would be detained in a separate jail from that used for other criminals. If convicted, the ecclesiastic would not serve his sentence in an ordinary prison but in monastery or convent.

Heretofore ecclesiastical authorities have had no means to enforce their decisions against recalcitrant clergy. In accordance with the canon law, the civil authorities now must support the ecclesiastical decisions, especially in cases where a priest is dismissed or deprived of benefice or forbidden to wear the ecclesiastical robe.

Ordinary priests and monks, having pronounced their vows and seminary students are exempt from military service except in case of war, when priests will be employed as army chaplains and other ecclesiastics in the Red Cross service.

Other measures of canon law now imposed upon Italy include severe rules against heresy, simony, blasphemy, sacrilege and adultery.

DR. LANDRITH SPEAKS IN CHARLOTTE

does not think as much, and youth that goes wrong, the young folks who are drifting away from the church, are doing so because they haven't taken time to think. Dr. Landrith cautioned older folks against their tendency of criticizing young folks, for if "you abuse 'em, you will probably lose 'em."

Preceding Dr. Landrith's address, members of the union were guests at a dinner at Efrid's dining room at which Dr. Landrith was an honor guest. At the union meeting all but a half dozen or so societies of the 31 in the Mecklenburg union were represented. Attendance banners were presented to the Steel Creek, Cornelius and St. Paul societies. Everett Bierman, union president, presided. The devotional service was in charge of Dr. W. H. Frazer, president of Queens College.

After the address Dr. Landrith presented an appeal for a subscription to the work of the United Society of Christian Endeavor. A part of the funds raised will be used also for the local work.

DEVOTIONAL

ONE STEP AT A TIME

In accomplishing your day's work you have simply to take one step at a time. To take that step wisely is all that you need to think about. If I am climbing a mountain, to look down may make me dizzy; to look too far up may make me tired and discouraged. Take no anxious thought for the morrow. Sufficient for the day—yes, and for each hour in the day—is the toil or the trial thereof. There is not a child of God in this world who is strong enough to stand the strain of today's duties and all the load of tomorrow's anxieties piled upon the top of them. Paul himself would have broken down if he had attempted the experiment. We have a perfect right to ask our heavenly Father for strength equal to the day; but we have no right to ask him for one extra ounce of strength for anything beyond it. When the morrow comes, grace will come with sufficient for its tasks or for its troubles.—Theodore L. Cuyler.

denominations. In 1927-28, campaign similar to that held in Nashville were held at Chattanooga and Knoxville in Tennessee, Louisville in Kentucky, and Birmingham in Alabama, and other smaller cities. These campaigns have brought subscriptions to the five-year program of the School of Religion to sum of more than $168,000.00. With income from these funds and from the pledge of a New York friend, the School of Religion has projected a very marked expansion of its work. There was held a second session of the Rural Church School, April 9 to 20, 1928. The enrollment of the school reached the number of 377 students, representing 20 different denominations. The school was served by a teaching and lecturing staff of over 75 of the best qualified leaders of America in Rural Life and Religion.

In its annual session, June, 1928, the Board of Trust of the University elected four new men to the regular faculty of the School of Religion, besides making provision for a marked expansion and enlargement of the regular service of the School of Religion.

Special Events at Union Seminary

Two things have attracted a good number of ministers to Union Seminary during January. The first of these was the exceedingly well attended Sprunt Lectures. Dr. Walter Lingle was the lecturer and his subject "The Bible and Social Problems." Fe series have drawn such large audiences or have been heard with such eagerness and attention. We are glad to announce that the lectures are now available in book form, the publisher Fleming Revel Co., promising delivery after February 1st.

The other feature which drew many preachers to the seminary at this session was the January short term Courses of study were so organized that each subject was completed within the month. To do this five subjects were completed within the month. To do this five hours a week were allotted to each course. A very attractive group of electives was offered and there were likewise many courses in the curriculum which have been added during the past few years. For next January term we are preparing to offer special graduate courses with perhaps a few seminars. It is hoped that before a great while we will be able to enlarge our dormitory space so as to provide for a larger number of ministers during this term.

Some of the ministers in attendance doing graduate work were:

Revs. Cary Adams, O. V. Armstrong, John Grèy, G. F. Kirkpatrick, J. R. McGregor, A. J. McKelway, W. P. Nickerson, J. C. B. McLaughlin, D. L. O'Neal, A. ner Robertson, T. A. Spooner and P. Taylor.

In addition to the above the following preachers from out of town attended the Sprunt lectures:

Revs. A. J. Crane, A. K. Davenport, J. Lee McLean, Henry Patterson, A. Shaw, W. C. Smith, H. Wilson and J. L. Yandell.

EDITORIAL

PRAYING WITHOUT CEASING

Some of our readers who have been regular readers of these editorials know that one of the subjects upon which we love to dwell is religion in public prayers of reasonable length. There is no doubt that we have found a parallel in Don Quixote's tilt with the windmill. They should at least confess that the success has been the same in both instances. It is true that Paul writing to the Thessalonians urges them to pray without ceasing; but we do not believe, however, that he means that they must take it literally.

He believes that he means "Without Ceasing" to be applied to private prayers, but in public prayers we must have compassion upon the preachers.

The preacher, too often the spirit is willing, but the flesh is weak.

Even in our day there has been a gradual shortening of the "Long Prayer," and as far as we know, the spiritual life of the worshippers has not suffered.

Some have known the influence of many a fine moving sermon ruined by a long prayer at the close, working up the hearer into a state of exaltation, that did away with all the good impressions made.

We read that Brainerd and other men of mighty spiritual power often spent the night in praying, and we are not surprised that great blessings followed.

We are sure, however, that if their congregations had to listen, the blessings would not be followed.

The Westminster Assembly famous for preparing the Confession of Faith and our catechisms were men mighty in prayer and were not long.

Once referred to one of their meetings; to repeat the account, may do to point a moral or adorn a tale.

In the Westminster Assembly of Divines, 1643, were preparing our Standards, they frequent meetings for prayer, seeking the Lord's guidance.

It has come down to us the record of a meeting that may give encouragement to some of our brethren who have an inclination to neglect their public prayers.

A meeting lasted from 8 a. m. to 5 p. m. Mr. Hesse, who presided, offered a brief prayer which was followed by Mr. Marshall, who prayed for two hours, confessing the sins of the assembly in a pathetic way. Then Mr. Arthurs preached an hour and read a psalm. After this they then prayed for two hours, being led by Mr. Palmer with a sermon of one hour.

A Seaman prayed two hours and then read a psalm. Mr. Henderson offered a long prayer in which he confessed the sins of the assembly in a very pathetic manner. He then laid upon the heat shown in debate, and exhorted them to repent of all seen faults. Mr. Twisse closed with a short prayer and a benediction.

When we analyze this meeting we are impressed with the fact that all the prayers were long.

It should not be assumed that we are to follow this example in our public praying, however much we may admire these old worthies.

Remember that the audience upon whom these long prayers were inflicted was composed of preachers, and that in such instances they were merely taking their own medicine. Remember also that in the ordinary audience the hearers have to suffer like dumb cattle. They cannot repay in kind. The ideal prayer meeting, especially for the mid-week, is one that lingers in our memory.

It lasted only forty minutes; but in that time they had three or four hymns, two or three prayers, definite in their aim and concise in expression, scripture reading and a short lecture, rich in thought, but condensed in words.

Such a meeting was a rest for a busy man who wished to separate himself from the world for a brief session, and to have something to think over.

It never requires an effort to attend such a meeting. Let our pastors try it, then perhaps they will not be discouraged by the presence of only a handful of faithful members.

LAURELS GATHERING AROUND DR. LINGLE

The news reports concerning the important functions which are being pressed upon Dr. Walter L. Lingle, the president of the Assembly's Training School, at Richmond, Va., compel the attention of the whole church. We published in a recent issue a report of his lectures on the Sprunt Foundation at Union Seminary. "The Bible and Social Problems," which is now on sale in book form, published by the funds of the Foundation. Recent press statements told us of Dr. Lingle's being appointed chairman of the Executive Committee of the Federal Council of the Churches, which gives our Southern Church a strategic position in that much discussed organization.

Positions and offices filled by our distinguished minister are almost too numerous to mention, some of them being his present incumbency of the presidency of the Training School, his co-editorship of the Presbyterian of the South, his former chair of history at Union Seminary, his moderatorship of the Assembly in 1920, and his chairmanship of too many ad interim committees to enumerate. Suffice it to say, honors are coming thick as snow flakes, and appear to fall as lightly on his unassuming shoulders.

Our church is honored in Dr. Lingle's signal situation, and rejoices in the service he is so ready to render with his personal effort and his pen, as leader, teacher, editor and author. We his brethren accord him due recognition and gratitude, assuring him of the love and esteem he well deserves, and praying that God's Spirit may rest on him in abundance, and that he may long be spared to the life of usefulness he has been thus providentially led to undertake.

We would especially pray that Dr. Lingle's important position as chairman of the Federal Council's Executive Committee may result in binding that body to a more faithful testimony to the great revealed doctrines of scripture, with Jesus Christ, infinite Son of God and only Savior of mankind, as the central truth of that testimony. The Council sees fit to elect men whose public addresses either squint or are openly unchristian. We are gratified at the recognition given our church in electing Dr. Lingle as chairman, but some may feel as Homer said to the Trojans, "We fear the Greeks even bearing gifts."

MOFFATT'S TRANSLATION

(Dr. Well's valuable discussion of Moffatt's "New Translation of the Holy Bible, which was begun in last week's issue is concluded in editorial found below.)

9. He shows a fondness for certain words that are, to say the least, grating. His use of shriek, as in 7:57, 8:7 and 16:17, is a case in point.

10. We also find him using, what seems to the writer, most questionable English.

For instance in 8:1 he says: "And everyone, with the exception of the apostles, was scattered over Judaea and Samaria."

And again in 9:7 he says: "Empowering him to put any man or woman in chains whom he could find belonging to the Way, and bring them to Jerusalem."

"But his crowning fault is his failure to translate a word that is without doubt in the Greek text, when such translation would present a view or support a position that he does not accept or hold.

In 9:5, 22:8 and 26:15 there is no question or doubt that the word Kurii is in the text. I do not find a single text or version that omits it. And yet he boldly says in a foot note: "I have deliberately left Kurii untranslated here * * Any English rendering would imply either too much or too little." And still he calls his work "A New Translation."

12. He changes many familiar words and phrases to which we have grown accustomed. Sometimes these changes are an advantage and sometimes they are a distinct loss.

Where he replaces Kingdom with Realm there are advantages, but we feel that the exact word has not yet been used.

As a Presbyterian I ought not to object where he changes elders to presbyters, but I do not see the necessity for such a change. One would not recognize the "town clerk" of Ephesus when he blossoms forth as a "Secretary of State." We doubt if he would recognize himself.

"Centurion" has become so imbedded in our language that we feel officer to be a loss. If he must change it, why not make it captain?

Surely Messiah in 17:3 and elsewhere, should begin with a capital letter.

13. But there are many very fine translations here. Many of them equal if they do not excel the clearness and beauty of the great old Authorized Version. The writer was especially impressed with the translation of 8:40, 11:17, 12:11-12, 17:5, 20:9, 20:35, 21:1, 21:14, 21:40, 22:16, and 24:16, and 24:5.

In 11:17 his words "Who was I—how could I try to thwart God," brings out the double idea of the original as no other version I have read does.

In 17:5 his "Got hold of some idle rascals to form a mob" is excellent.

In 20:9 he translates "as Paul's address went on and on" admirably.

In 20:35 his rendering "To give is happier than to get" almost catches the force of the original.

In 21:1 "When we had torn ourselves away from them" is good.

So in 21:14 "We acquiesced" is a distinct improvement.

And in 24:5 "The fact is, we have found this man is a perfect poet" is graphic and striking.

After all is said, the great use of this and similar versions is to make the reader think. We are so used to the wonderful phrases of the King James Version that they pass by too smoothly. The changed phrase grips us and we ask ourselves, "What does he mean?" And to think in reading or studying the Bible is always a blessing.

In my opinion when one is studying the English text he should use the American Standard or this translation. But when one is reading as a personal means of grace, or publicly in the sanctuary, he should by all means read the Established Version, for it is vastly sweeter and richer. In the pulpit, one can with a word or phrase thrown in now and then, explain the archaisms, show textual changes, and make such correction as the modern versions have shown needful. But these, after all, are very few. What a pity it is, that the Revisers of 1881 did not do this very thing. If they had changed all obsolete words, corrected the passages where there are needful textual changes; and made the few changes required by modern study of the diction and syntax; instead of trying to give an absolutely new version, what a glorious work they would have done.

For no modern version has taken or can take the place of the great old version of 1611.

In an editorial from a secular paper the other day I read this:

"The sinewy and exquisite English of the King James version is not dead nor in any danger of dying. It will serve for more centuries to inspire writers and speakers and continue to instill in our descendants a love and power over the simple, forceful and vivifying phrase."

CONTRIBUTED

OUR DELINQUENCY IN BENEVOLENCES

Its Cause and Cure

Rev. J. M. Walker

(Paper read before Mecklenburg Presbytery February 4th, at their day of prayer for Stewardship, and published by request).

Were I the doctor for such a disease, then I would ask that you at once elect me to the head place in the Fellows of the Royal Society of Medicine, or whatever name the elite of that profession go by. Moreover, I think I would be worthy of being exalted to the high position of a Pope in our church. And so you may know, I was not surprised when the chairman of the program committee stated, on asking me to discuss this subject, that he had already asked a number of the brethren to discuss it, but that they had each straightway declined. And my effort is a case of "fools rushing in where angels fear to tread."

However, it is a subject that we are all more or less interested in. Every week our church papers bring us one or more articles on the financial conditions in our church, together with the remedies therefor. In addition we are all the while faced with our own local problems, and the responsibility for the part our individual church is to play in the whole benevolent scheme. And while it is not likely that any two of us will agree either as to the cause or the cure of our delinquency, still a free discussion of the matter, unprejudiced, is bound to do good, and the more often we discuss it the better it will be in my judgment.

The Delinquency

The subject assigned me suggests that our church on the whole is delinquent in the matter of benevolences. I take it that this is a self-evident fact; and one that needs no argument. While it is true that per member, in comparison with other Protestant churches, we stand right up near the top, always first or second, never lower than second place, yet it is an acknowledged fact among ourselves, that we are far behind what we should do, or what we are able to do. All our committees are hampered either with a debt, or lack of funds with which to reach out and meet the needs, and answer the many calls coming to them. On all sides we are hearing the word, 'retrench,' and the General Assembly has laid down the hard and fast rule that no committee of hers can plan to spend more money this year than it received last year, it matters not how many urgent appeals may come to it. For the chances are, they say, you will not receive more, and you may receive less. All of which can mean but one thing—we are not doing our duty when it comes to carrying out the Master's Great Commission.

The Cause

Now when it comes to stating the cause for such a situation we are by no means agreed among ourselves. In fact, there are so many contributing factors to the one underlying cause—and one man may emphasize one thing and another man altogether another—that it is but natural that we should differ. It would be quite unnatural if we did not do so.

Among the many contributing factors that have been advanced in recent years for the big slump in our benevolences are these: too much overhead expenses; lack of co-operation among the respective committees; too many secretaries; too many promotional agencies; and general hard times throughout the country. All these, no doubt, have played their part, and too great a part, if we may judge from what men are saying all over the Church. But when you have granted all this, it does not seem to me that you have actually laid your finger upon the great underlying cause yet. Certainly these things, just mentioned, have had a good deal to do with it, and the success of the new Assembly Work Committee of Forty-four, and the many new Work Committees being set up by the various synods, is going to be judged largely by their ability to bring about remedies for these situations. But, in my judgment you will have to look elsewhere for the real cause for our delinquency.

My own opinion, the failure of our people to give more, is simply this: they do not feel the urge to do so. The causes are not urgent. Witness how we do things that we want to do. We build our comfortable homes, we buy our fine automobiles, we install our modern conveniences, we enjoy our radios, we demand our amusements, and we are all the time willing to bargain for a trade. Our people have the money. They have more money than ever before, or at least, they have access to more money than ever before. And they are spending a great deal more than they have ever spent before. But they are spending it on the things that they are interested in, and feel that they just must have—so great is the urge of this modern life. Mark you, they are not spending it on missions. Oh, a few of them are. In almost every church there are some consecrated souls who have learned the joy of giving to the Lord's work; and we rejoice in it and long to see the number increase. But speaking generally, men are not giving to the causes of the Kingdom with that abandon that marks their everyday life in the business and social world. And the reason for it, I believe, is the lack of the proper urge; that divine urge which characterized the Master Himself, and which kept Him straightened in His course until it had been accomplished; that which constrained the apostle Paul in his ministry all the while; and which has marked the lives of all the great saints from that day until this.

Men are just naturally selfish. And the tendency, in this marvelous scientific new day in which we are living, is to exalt this perverted characteristic in man. So much so that we have lost sight of, or are fast losing sight of the still bigger things of the Kingdom; and as a result, are giving to it but the barest fringe of our substance. Taking the country over, it is less than one cent out of every dollar we spent.

The blame for such a situation may be traced in the main to two sources, as I see it.

1. First, to the lack of missionary zeal on the part of the ministers. "Like priest, like people," is certainly true here. Turn to the minutes of the Assembly, and notice the churches that are really giving to the causes of the Kingdom in some proportion to their ability, and you can mark it down, they have a missionary pastor. He is informing his people; and he is inspiring them to give; and he is determined to see to it that they have an up-to-date financial system. He is making full use of the Every Member Canvass to lead his people out in the blessed work of giving, and there is system and forethought in all he does. Under such a leadership his people become consecrated to the Lord, the one indispensable condition for a rich liberality. Of course there are exceptions here, as in all things, but generally speaking the pastor holds the key to the situation in the local congregation. The cure is largely in his hands. The trouble is, so many congregations, in regard to benevolences, are "like sheep without a shepherd." When that is the case then the best laid plans of the stewardship committee count for naught. And the constant appeals to the executive committees fall upon deaf ears. Of all the sins that a minister may be guilty of this seems to me to be about the most unpardonable.

The average man does not know about the needs of the church and he needs to be informed. And when he is informed, then it becomes a joy to him to give. Why do the women make such a fine showing with their gifts? You know. They have taken the lead and have informed themselves about the work, and the needs of the church at home and abroad. They have had their mission study classes, and they have become intelligent givers. The manhood of the church, with all of its great wealth, still waits upon the leadership of the pastor, and in so many cases it is waiting in vain.

2. The other contributing factor to this lack of interest on the part of our people in benevolences—this lack of urge to give to missions—has reference to the policy of our church in promulgating its work.

I am thinking in particular just now of the church's attitude toward its task. It seems to me that we have lost the joyous note and the ring of victory that should characterize our church's activities. Our every undertaking seems to be marked with the fear that we will fail or go in debt. Mark you, how the Assembly has hedged about its committees, so that they cannot plan to spend more this year than they received the previous year. It is true, we ought to receive more each year, and so every committee could advance its work; but as it is, there is little left for the venture of faith with God that would really thrill our people in the undertaking. "There is nothing tamer, or more uninteresting," as Dr. Egbert Smith says, "than simply to held the fort, dig in, and stay put." The army that ceases to advance is defeated. I, for one, am longing for an appeal that will come from some one of our committees, I care not which, that will call upon us to venture a little way with God without having the cash in sight. Or, in other words, that we would measure our activities not so much by dollars and cents, but by the crying need of a lost world in sin and misery. Were that done, I believe we would soon see a new day in the work of our church.

A Thrilling Challenge

Men will respond to a challenge that has a thrill about it. It has ever been so in the history of the church. They love a faith venture. For instance, a few years ago when our foreign mission offerings were mounting up with leaps and bounds every year, we were sending out a great many new missionaries; new stations were being opened up; the pictures of our out-going missionaries were upon the pages of our church papers, and often appeared in the daily press. At the close of our foreign mission conferences volunteers were called for, and young people by the score came forward to the rostrum and there solemnly dedicated their lives to the foreign field. It was always the most impressive sight during those great days together. Men and women returned to their homes and to their churches with a new enthusiasm, and with a burning zeal to see the "World Evangelized in This Generation,"—a slogan adopted at the very first of these great conferences. We were in a state of expectancy; and so eager to hear of new lands taken for Christ. Then came the great day when thirty-two young people came forward in a body and said to our Foreign Mission committee, "Here we are, send us out." To our Executive Secretary of foreign missions it was like a new Pentecostal blessing upon the church. Their pictures were broadcast up and down the land; and we said, a new day had dawned in Foreign Missions. Men gave of their means gladly, and women sacrificed their most precious jewelry in the hope of a new day.

But, alas, alas, something happened, something snapped, and it must have caused the angels in heaven to weep. Somebody said, "We can't support that many new missionaries all at once." Others took up the minor refrain, and still others, and on it went until it was not long before the General Assembly was saying, in substance the same thing. The hands of our secretary were tied, and we were defeated. True our defeat was gradual, and it may not have come about just as I have delineated, but it was none the less real. We were defeated at the point where we were strongest; and the 'inferiority complex' which followed, swiftly spread, over the whole church, so that in a year or two all the causes began to suffer. And we are still retreating before the foe. When have we heard anything but defeat in the great mission work of our church either at home or abroad? Instead of lengthening our cords and strengthening our stakes all we hear about is drawing in and debt.

But you say, what else is there to do when each year we are running behind? Of course, that is one way of going about reducing the debt. It does not take any forethought to arrive at that conclusion. But is that the way we should go about it? Would Jesus have gone about it in that way, especially in face of the Great Commission? Would Paul, the great missionary, have got about it in that way? Would he have taken that course? He was in the habit of claiming the whole world for his little handful of followers which he had gathered about him in his day. When they turned their faces toward the East there was no turning back, no moving away from the hope of the gospel. It mattered not with the what were the obstacles in the way. They had about them such a genuine optimism, that they could not fail and they knew it—and they did not fail. They went ahead and turned the world upside down with a force, at first so small as to be almost unnoticed in the busy throng of life. It was a case of "attempting great things for God and expecting great things from God." And they were not deceived.

The Cure

Now then, I believe the cure for our delinquency lies in the way of this optimism. By courageously facing our task in the name of the Great Captain of Hosts, without fear we shall literally blast open new streams of liberality, and shall discover forces that we did not know we had. Let us send out reinforcements to the home and the foreign fields; and let them know, at the church here at home also, that others are to follow as soon as we can prepare them. Once more call upon the pastors, the church officers, the Sunday school teachers, to seek out choice young men and women for the home and the foreign fields, a thing they have not had the heart to do in a long time, and then we shall see a new day in the life of our church, and in the life of our people. Nothing succeeds like success even in the work of the Kingdom.

By all odds let us hold fast to the principle of expansion—just as long as we can. Have we already reached the point where our work seems to be beyond us? My candid judgment is, we will increase our resources only by enlarging our work, and thus making it all the more certain that it is beyond us. Such, however, is the paradox of the Kingdom. In the world we say the logical and prudent thing for an army hard-pressed is to draw in its lines; but not so in the Kingdom. The logic of spiritual experience is to expand under pressure. And so, has the church ever gone forward? Let us venture out with God enthusiastically. Let us undertake something that we will be proud of, something that will actually make our ears tingle with light.

The apostle Paul constantly boasted about the work and the missionary spirit of the churches of Corinth and Philippi. When have we boasted about anything our beloved church has done? The papers, from one side of the nation to the other, are telling daily about marvelous progress going on down in our fair southern land. But when have you seen an article telling of God's work in these parts?

With all the thrill that comes from doing a real great piece of work, certainly there remains yet the greatest thrill of all—the thrill that will come to the church when she undertakes without fear or reservation, in a wholehearted way, the evangelization of the world committed to our trust. It is the task that will challenge the best there is within the manhood and womanhood of our church. It will challenge also means, yea, our very life. Going forward, "we shall be more than conquerors through Him that loved us and gave Himself for us." To sit still, or retreat, can mean but one thing, as I see it, to continue to make more delinquent our delinquency.

BOOK REVIEW

"Behind the Scenes"

This is a new book by Dr. S. H. Chester, Secretary Emeritus of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church in the United States. It is an administrative history of the foreign mission work of the Southern Presbyterian Church during Dr. Chester's long term of office as Secretary.

There is a Hebrew legend which says that Elijah visited heaven once before his final translation. He saw thirty days and thirty nights he received instruction and wrote down in many books all that he learned. Then the angel sent him back to earth with this instruction: "Give them the works written out by thee, and they shall read them and shall distribute thy works to their children, and from generation to generation."

Before Elijah was caught up into heaven, he asked Elisha what he could do for him. Elisha replied: "I will give you a double portion of my spirit."

The greatest thing that one generation can do for another is to transmit any knowledge or wisdom which it has acquired, and at the same time transmit the spirit. That is what Dr. Chester has done in this book. His life is rich in memories and experience, and in a beautiful spirit. All of these are a part of the priceless possession of the church, as the greatest part of his has been spent in a high official position in the church. His knowledge and his spirit ought to be transmitted from generation to generation.

Dr. Chester knows what is interesting, and knows how to tell it in an interesting way. His experiences and observation as Secretary of Foreign Missions form a very important part of the history of our church. He has put the church under a lasting obligation by writing these down. The book makes interesting and instructive reading. Not only so, but his experiences constitute a valuable guide for those who are to follow him in the foreign mission office. Patrick Henry said: "I know of no light to guide my pathway except the lamp of experience."

I trust that this book will have the wide circulation which it richly deserves. It can be ordered from the Foreign Mission Committee, Box 330, Nashville, Tenn. or from the Presbyterian Committee of Publication, 1176, Richmond Va.

Presbyterian Standard,
Charlotte, N. C.

Dear Sirs:

This issue of the Standard is a most excellent issue of a church paper, and I am happy that the sermon was carried in this particular issue. Frankly, I do not think I ever saw a finer issue of a religious paper. I read everything in it:

Most cordially yours,

MISS HARBESON AVAILABLE FOR SERVICE

The people of our entire Church will be delighted to know that Miss Mary Dan Harbeson, who was associated with Rev. Frank Hall Wright, D.D., in his Evangelistic work, and whose wonderful Gospel singing was such an inspiration in connection with the meetings he held over our Church, is open for engagements to assist either pastors, or evangelists in special services, and may be addressed at Flemingsburg, Ky.

CHARLOTTE TOWNSHIP S. S. CONVENTION

At Hawthorn Lane M. E. Church, on Feb. 17, 18, there will be a Township Sunday School Convention for Charlotte Township.

Miss Flora Davis of Raleigh, newly-elected general superintendent of the North Carolina Sunday school association; Carey M. Young of Columbus, O., young people's division superintendent, Ohio council of religious education, and Miss Daisy Magee of Raleigh, children's division superintendent of the North Carolina association will be among the visiting speakers.

The program will be arranged with the view of giving practical help to the workers in all departments of the Sunday school.

PERSONAL

Rev. I. Cochran Hunt, D.D., changes his address from Memphis, Missouri, to 50 Arlington Avenue, Fairmount Station, Kansas City, Missouri.

NORTH CAROLINA

Gastonia, First—There was a great gathering of men at the Bible Class Dinner Wednesday night, January 30, about 225 being present, and Dr. C. R. Nisbet made a very profound impression on all by his eloquent and soul-stirring address. Every man who heard him must have been moved to a new realization of his duty and his opportunity in this meeting.

Dr. Nisbet, who knows Dr. Dobyns well, congratulated the church on being able to have this fine Christian man and preacher for such a meeting. He said that he was an uncommonly worthwhile speaker and a keen interpreter of the Bible messages. Dr. Nisbet is pastor of Caldwell Memorial, Charlotte.

Flora Macdonald College, Red Springs—Miss Cornelia Engle, Secretary Young People's Department of Christian Education under Dr. Henry Sweets of the Southern Presbyterian Church, Louisville, Ky., visited the college last week. She talked to the student body on Sunday evening at the regular Y. W. C. A. meeting. Miss Engle is an interesting speaker and has her cause greatly at heart, and she brought a message to the student body of the various fields of service. She also had private interviews with any who wished to talk to her and made her visit a great help and inspiration.

The College Choral Association gave a sacred recital at the First Presbyterian Church, Lumberton, N. C., Sunday evening, January 27. In spite of the inclement weather a large and appreciative audience was present. The next sacred recital will be given in Fayetteville, N. C., Sunday evening, February 24, at the Hay Street Methodist Church.

Daisy Jean, Belgian 'cellist, harpist and singer appeared in concert at the college last Monday night. Her versatility was shown in the different manifestations of her art and in each she rose to great heights. The recital was of a very high order.

The next attraction at the college will be the appearance of Sidney Thompson, the dramatist, in monologues, original plays and old folk lore in costume, Monday, February 18. Miss Thompson has met with remarkable success in this country, England and the Orient. She is a former pupil of the famous French actress, Yvette Guilbert, and is said to be a dramatic interpreter of skill and power.

The college is also looking forward with pleasure to the visit of Mrs. John Boyd, who will give a lecture to the Flora Macdonald Christian Association on "The Romance of the Bible" Sunday evening, March 3. Mrs. Boyd is the mother of James Boyd, well-known author.

The second quarterly recital, in which the more advanced students appear, is scheduled for Monday, February 25.

Recent visitors to the college from the mission fields have been Mr. and Mrs. John Morrison from Luebo, Africa, and their two children. Mrs. Morrison (nee Mary Porter) was a former Flora Macdonald girl.

Dr. C. G. Vardell, President of Flora Macdonald College, will attend the banquet to be given by the Clan McNeil Association of America in New York City, February 16. Dr. Vardell will at this time acknowledge the honorary membership in the clan, which was conferred upon him by MacNeil of Barra, Chief of the Clan, at their meeting last May. This distinction has been conferred but rarely and can be conferred only by the chief of the clan.

Salisbury, First—A Father and Son Banquet was given on Tuesday evening, February 12. A fine program was enjoyed with an address by Dr. Ben Lacy, of Richmond, Va.

The supper was served by the Kings Daughters. The Boy Scouts sold tickets. Men who do not have sons adopted a boy for the evening. There are some 25 boys in our Sunday School and Scout Troop who do not have fathers to bring them.

A school for the training of prospective Scout Masters and the Troop Committeemen opened Thursday, February 2, with a supper in the hut. A group of men, particularly interested in scouting, is being selected from each church in town to take this course. Mr. Ross Garrison is Scout Master.

Beginning Wednesday evening, February 6, and running for five consecutive Wednesdays, our annual Foreign Mission Study Class will be conducted for the congregation, men, women, and young people. The book studied will be "The Desire of All Nations," by Dr. Egbert W. Smith.

Raleigh, N. C.—Some triumphs of the Gospel in China, and some lessons she has learned more fully since going to China as the wife of the Rev. E. S. Currie, missionary from the First Presbyterian Church, were discussed by Mrs. Currie in a talk, given in Chinese costume, to the Woman's Auxiliary of the First Presbyterian Church, February 4.

Leaving Raleigh almost exactly nine years ago, Mr. Currie, who during the World War gained the affectionate title of "the wrestling chaplain," and Mrs. Currie went to China, representing the First Presbyterian Church here. They were recalled, along with other missionaries, some months ago on account of fighting in China, and will sail again from San Francisco February 22, for China.

Mr. Currie will go Haichow to resume his work, while Mrs. Currie, with her three children, will remain in Tsing Tao until conditions become more settled, and it is safe to take women and children to Haichow. Bandits now constitute a menace in the district where Mr. Currie will be located.

Before going to China, Mr. and Mrs. Currie will spend a week in Fayetteville, Mr. Currie's former home. Mr. and Mrs. Currie came to Raleigh several days ago to be the guests of honor at a dinner given by the Vanguard Class, and Sunday morning Mr. Currie preached at the First Presbyterian Church.

Sugaw Creek—Sunday, February 3, the Davidson College Christian Endeavor Training Class sent a deputation to Sugaw Creek Church. The Christian Endeavor Society of Sugaw Creek was host to several visiting Christian Endeavor Societies, its own numbering more than one hundred. The total number present was over two hundred. The meeting took the place of the evening service and was preparatory to the mass meeting and banquet to be held in Charlotte Thursday, February 7.

The Davidson delegation received invitations to visit several other churches, and will do so in the course of the next month.

The program at Sugaw Creek was as follows. Song. Prayer by Rev. W. H. Johnston, of Amity Church. Scripture reading. Song by Charlotte quartet. Four Davidson men gave talks on the Four-fold life, physical, mental, social and spiritual: Tom Hill, J. A. Jones, F. R. Brown, Reid Graham. Song by the quartet. Talk by Mr. Bierman of Charlotte, who is president of the Mecklenburg County Christian Endeavor Union.

Charlotte, Second—The Woman's Auxiliary met in the church auditorium Monday afternoon, Mrs. H. N. Pharr, Secretary of Foreign Missions, secured as the speaker at this meeting, Dr. C. Darby Fulton, Field Secretary with the Executive Committee of Foreign Missions, formerly a missionary to Japan. Dr. Fulton taught the Foreign Mission Book by Dr. Egbert Smith, "The Desire of all Nations," in the light of his own experiences. Dr. Fulton was with us for a week several years ago, giving talks each day to the Woman's Auxiliary in its Foreign Mission study on Japan.

Mr. Frank Matthews and Mr. J. B. Spillman have been appointed Committee on Stewardship to direct the work of securing pledges to cover the budget for the next church year. They will meet with all the Deacons who are ex-officio chairmen of the Department of Stewardship for each of the Groups. With the present Men's Groups as a nucleus, the whole membership will be divided into twenty groups headed by a team with a deacon in charge.

The attendance is steadily growing each Wednesday evening. Last week there were 100 present.

Young people of the Intermediate, Senior and young People's Departments met in the Club Room Monday evening to hear Dr. Darby Fulton speak on Foreign Missions. Dr. Fulton has always been particularly attractive to young people and is eagerly sought by young people all over the Assembly for summer conferences. Supper for which there was no charge was served at 6:15. All young people of the church between the ages of twelve and twenty-four were invited to this meeting.

SOUTH CAROLINA

Myrtle Beach—On Sunday, January 20, the First Presbyterian Church of Myrtle Beach was dedicated to the service and glory of God. The service was simple yet very impressive. Rev. J. M. Holladay, D. D., moderator of the Synod of South Carolina, preached the sermon. Rev. P. D. Patrick, superintendent of Home Missions in Pee Dee Presbytery, also made a short talk. The growth of this little church has been remarkable. Less than one year ago no Presbyterian services were conducted here. Today we have a church with 32 members, well organized and working, and a building paid for, and dedicated to the interests of the Master's Kingdom. Rev. D. Brearley of Conway has served as pastor of church.

Fort Hill Church, Clemson College—Regular celebration of the Lord's Supper was held at Fort Hill Presbyterian Church on February 3rd. service had been postponed for two weeks on account of the illness of the pastor, Rev. S. J. L. Crouch. Mr. Crouch was confined to bed for two weeks suffering an attack of influenza and bronchitis. His friends are glad that he has recovered and is able to be his people again.

The Week-Day Church School of the Fort Hill Church is proving a great success. The School was organized in October, 1928, with a faculty of ten ladies and a rollment of 57 children. There are three departments, commencing children from kindergarten age through sixteen years. The departments are led by Mrs. M. Burley, Mrs. J. E. Hunter and Mrs. S. J. L. Crouch, each with special helpers. Mrs. Cook is pianist for the School.

A full and interesting schedule is planned for the next months. The children express regret that only one hour a week is available for the work. Regular books on Bible are used. Also, courses are given in Missions with appropriate hand work, this appealing to the smaller children.

In addition to the regular courses part of the time is devoted to special courses. At present the interested are enjoying a course in Religious Art, this conducted by Mrs. B. E. Fernow, an artist from York, whose husband is a member of the college faculty. Perry picture reproductions of the masterpieces of the ages are studied. Each child is making an album of the pictures and notes taken as the course progresses. Our next special course will be "Music in Religion." Mrs. R. K. Eaton, the church organist, will conduct the course and will trace the place of music in our religious life from the time of David to the present day. Great hymns of the ages will be studied in their proper setting.

In the Memory Work Department a medal was presented at the last meeting to Lucile Cook for the most links in her memory chain. Each link represented a Bible verse memorized. Note books are given by the children of each school session.

There is a movement to secure public school for work done in Church School. This is being done in several states, and we hope that it will be done in our local school at Clemson.

Twenty-five new copies of "Psalms and Hymns" have been added to the pews of our church. This gives a sufficient number for all the cadets to have at least one book for two cadets. It is hoped that congregational singing may improve.

The Student Christian Endeavor meets as usual Wednesday evening in the Manse. Two teams have been organized and a competition is conducted for better attendance.

The young people's societies of the four local churches have planned to have a union meeting once each month. This union meeting is planned to promote fellowship and to inspire greater interest.

Both the student work and the children's work are carried on under great difficulties owing to lack of equipment. The Manse continues to be used as a community house for student work of all kinds.

The Foreign Mission Study Class was conducted during the last week in January and the first week in February, the text used being Dr. Egbert's Smith's "The Desire of all Nations." The book was divided into parts, the first part being conducted by Miss Mary Doggett, the second part by Mrs. J. L. Marshall, the third part by Mrs. R. K. Eaton. The first was held at the home of Mrs. Eaton, the second at the home of Mrs. A. G. Shanklin, and the third at the home of Mrs. P. B. Holtzendorff, Jr. Splendid program carried out, and good attendance was maintained throughout the week.

The February meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary was held on the afternoon of February 4th at the residence of Mrs. J. H. McHugh. At this meeting new officers were nominated for the new year beginning in March. These officers will be announced a little later.

At this meeting Mrs. A. G. Shanklin, Secretary of Foreign Missions, distributed material for making bandages for the White Cross Work under the supervision of Mrs. A. L. Blake of Anderson. Garments will be sent in the very near future to Mrs. Blake to be sent to China.

M.L.S Church Correspondent

Chester, Purity—The church will be opened for evening services for those members of the Young People's Department who desire to come on Friday evening. Interesting games have been provided.

The Services last week in connection with the celebration of the Lord's Supper were characterized by a deep spirit of enthusiasm. There was a splendid attendance at each of the prayer services in the afternoons. The all day meeting on Tuesday which time "The Desire of All Nations" was read in a most interesting way, was a particularly noteworthy feature. This mission-study was attended by several ladies. There was a good representation from the neighboring Churches.

APPALACHIA

Camp Greystone—From all sections applications for girls are coming in for the early start of the year. Dr. Sevier the director anticipates that the probabilities are the camp will reach its limit early in the spring. The popularity of the old and well established camp, together with the reasonable price, makes most girls want to

THE AUXILIARY BIBLE STUDY FOR 1929-30 THE ACTS

Beginning with the new Church year in April, The Acts will be used by Auxiliaries in their Bible study classes. Hundreds of women have been studying Luke with great profit during this present Church year. And now The Acts, which is "Luke's Other Book," and a sequel to his Gospel, offers a rich study, not only because of its same authorship, but because of the large emphasis which is placed on the power of the Holy Spirit as He was manifested through the first century witnesses in their service of establishing and expanding the Church. In the Gospel by Luke we had the story of what "Jesus began to do and to teach." In Acts, we study of what Jesus the Risen Christ, continued to do and teach through His living witnesses.

The new text book "Life Challenges from the Risen Christ" by Jane W. McGaughey includes two plans for studying Acts, either of which may be used by Bible classes. These two plans are:

"Pivotal Events", a series of twelve historical studies presenting pivotal events in the establishing of the Church by the apostles as directed by the Risen Christ. In connection with these studies there is given a general survey of Acts in chart form, showing the theme and movement of the book.

"Character Studies," also a series of twelve studies of some men and women of Acts. "One page from real life is worth all the arguments in the world." And so through the lives of some of those who obeyed the command of Christ to witness for Him, there is presented to us "Life Challenges from the Risen Christ." Miss Margaret's Engle's chart plan for character studies as given at conferences last summer is included here.

This new text book: "Life Challenges from the Risen Christ," will be off the press about the middle of March. Orders received now will be kept on file until the book is ready. Price 25c.

"Studies in Acts," by Miss Grace Saxe, published sometime ago, is also available, and will prove helpful to those who desire to use the chapter summary method as given by Miss Saxe. Mrs. Poindexter's acrostic on Acts is included in this book. Price 25c.

ATLANTA CENTRAL'S AUXILIARY

The Auxiliary met Monday afternoon with an unusually large attendance. The opening prayer was offered by one of our Missionaries to China.

Dr. Egbert W. Smith, secretary of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian church was the speaker of the afternoon. In his address Dr. Smith touched upon every foreign country in which the Presbyterian missions are stationed, presenting a vivid picture of the individuals and communities who had come in contact with the Christian workers. Mexico, Brazil, Japan, China, Korea, and Africa were included. Dr. Smith is an interesting speaker and in addition to the great fund of information which he imparts to his hearers, his speech abounds in both humor and pathos.

Vocal music appropriate for the occasion was rendered by Miss Bertha Simms.

Mrs. W. E. Davis announced that a committee of ladies from the Auxiliary will sew at the Eggleston Hospital on the 2nd and 4th Wednesday of each Month the first meeting to be held February 13 at which time the work will be organized.

The Executive Board will visit the Alms house February 14th and Mrs. W. B. Armstrong's will have charge of preparing supper for the Business Circle, February 15th.

The blue ribbon for attendance was won by Mrs. W. E. Floding's Circle.

Greystone. Besides having the very best in equipment, and the finest type of girls from a large section of this country, Greystone has water facilities surpassed by none. Its lake is over four miles long, with a shore line that is followed by trails for horseback riding and hiking. The dozen canoes and fleet of row boats make frequent excursions out over the lake pending the whole day, and sometimes the night. Every water and land sport is enjoyed by the girls at Greystone.

Dr. Sevier announces that all Councillor positions for the coming summer have been filled. Girls who are interested in seeing a catalogue may write Dr. Joseph R. Sevier, Hendersonville, N. C.

GEORGIA

Atlanta—The period February 18 through March 1, has been agreed upon among the church of our city, during which they will engage in special efforts along evangelistic lines.

Preparatory prayer meetings in the homes of the people. Evangelistic services in the churches, meetings in the colleges and in industrial plants, and during the whole period each week day (Saturday excepted) union evangelistic meetings 12:15 to 12:45 in the Baptist Tabernacle.

Men, recognized leaders in each of the denominations, will speak at these noon meetings.

Augusta—The four Presbyterian churches of Augusta have just concluded a very successful school of sessions which was a joint enterprise. The teacher and speaker was the Rev. S. M. Erickson, D.D., our missionary whose station is Takamatsu, Japan. There was a definite enlistment of attendants before the school began, a large proportion of which were present at least five of the six evenings and receiving certificates.

On Sunday morning of January 27 Dr. Erickson spoke at the Reid Memorial Church and in the afternoon at the Sibley Church. The school sessions were held as follows, Sunday and Monday evenings at the Greene Street Church, Tuesday and Wednesday and Friday evenings at the First Church. The study book was "The Desire of All Nations." Each church took its offering for Foreign Missions separately.

Dr. Erickson is one of the most effective missionaries of the Church. His method of presenting the missionary message delights and inspires his hearers. He and Mrs. Erickson are supported in part by the Greene Street Church. They are making their headquarters at Red Springs, N. C., where their two daughters, are in school at Flora Macdonald College from which they will be graduated this spring. They are scheduled to return to Japan in September.

Lowest in 10 Years!

Regular receipts from Apr. 1 to Feb. 1 for the following church years:

Feb. 1, 1920	- -	$644,244
Feb. 1, 1921	- -	676,790
Feb. 1, 1922	- -	679,321
Feb. 1, 1923	- -	630,792
Feb. 1, 1924	- -	690,197
Feb. 1, 1925	- -	644,483
Feb. 1, 1926	- -	677,877
Feb. 1, 1927	- -	693,885
Feb. 1, 1928	- -	654,587
Feb. 1, 1929	-	592,666

The figure for this February 1, FAR THE LOWEST IN TEN YEARS, is our Saviour's urgent call to all lovers of that cause which lies nearest His heart to give themselves to Prayer and effort.

Lesson for February 24

CHRISTIAN GROWTH

John 1:40-42; Mt. 16:15-18; John 21:15-19; Luke 2:40, 52; Eph. 4:11-16; Phil. 1:6, 9-11; 3:12-16; Col. 1:9-11; Heb. 6:1-3; 2Pet. 3:18.

Two weeks ago we considered the initial steps in the Christian life, repentance and faith. Last week we discussed the practice of prayer, that great means of grace which God has provided whereby the Christian life might be nourished and maintained. This week we consider the matter of Christian growth. Repentance and faith are only the first steps in the Christian life; prayer is simply a means to an end. There must be continual progress in the religious life. Physical growth ceases at a comparatively early date; mental and spiritual growth stop only at the cost of mental and spiritual decay. Jesus and the Apostles alike recognized this fundamental truth. "So is the Kingdom of God; if a man should cast seed upon the earth . . .," said Jesus, "the earth beareth fruit of itself; first the blade, then the ear, then the full grain in the ear." Mk. 4:27-28. "Brethren, I count not myself yet to have laid hold," declared Paul, "but one thing I do, forgetting the things which are behind, and stretching forward to the things which are before, I press on toward the goal . . . Let us therefore as many as are perfect be thus minded." Phil 3:17-18. Peter warns his readers to "beware lest, being carried away with the error of the wicked, ye fall from your own steadfastness." The remedy as he sees it, is to "grow in the grace and knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." 2Pet. 3:17-18.

Our printed lesson sets before us several chapters exhibiting the spiritual growth of Simon Peter. It may be best for us to approach the matter in a different way. Certainly we can all agree that growth is the Christian ideal. But that raises two further questions which we must discuss at greater length. 1st, what is the goal toward which we should grow? 2nd, what are the means of growth, on which we should rely? Think those two questions through for yourself. Then read through the passages assigned for our study with these questions in mind. Then and only then read the discussion that follows.

I. The Goal

1. Symmetry. In all things we look to Jesus as our model. In Lk. 2:40 we read, "And the Child (Jesus) grew and waxed strong, filled with wisdom, and the grace of God was upon Him." In Lk. 2:52 we read, "And Jesus advanced in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man." It is a commonplace that Jesus' development as recorded here was four-fold, physical and mental, social and spiritual. That is the ideal for us all. Our growth should be symmetrical. The beauty of holiness is enhanced when it is accompanied by physical and mental and social gifts. If any such of the four-fold development has been neglected it is apt to produce extravagances, oddities in one direction or another. Many people in particular, need to beware of one-sidedness. But do we ever outgrow the danger? Which of the four aspects of a complete and perfect life are we most inclined to neglect? to emphasize? Why? What difference does it make if we do neglect or over-emphasize any of the four? Consider especially in relation to our religious life.

Having considered the importance of a well rounded development we will now note more particularly some of the spiritual goals toward which we should strive.

2. Knowledge. The writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews complains that his readers have not grown in their knowledge of Christian truth. "When by reason of the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need again that some one teach you the rudiments . . . Wherefore leaving the doctrines of the first principles of Christ, let us press on to perfection." Heb. 5:12, 6:1. He proceeds to point out that this failure to grow in knowledge imperils their spiritual life. There is danger that they shall fall away. See also 2Pet. 3:17-18. It is true with us too, that the failure to increase in knowledge renders a peril for our spiritual life. We believe that it is. Our knowledge is constantly expanding in other directions; if our knowledge of divine things does not increase proportionately it will not prove adequate for our needs, and ultimately we shall lose the little knowledge that we have. If there is a danger, let us face the matter frankly. Are we growing in our knowledge of the truth, say the Bible or not? Are we growing in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ? If we are not or if we are not growing as we should, what is the reason?

The Apostles however, were anxious not only that we should grow in our knowledge of the divine truth, but even more perhaps in our knowledge of the divine will. Paul writes to the Colossians: "For this cause we also, since the day heard it, do not cease to pray and make request for you that ye may be filled more and more with the knowledge of His will in all spiritual wisdom and understanding." Col. 1:9 Knowledge of the truth can of course never be an end in itself; it must lead ultimately to a knowledge of His will for our own lives, a knowledge which expresses itself in action, as Paul proceeds to point out in Col. 1:10-12. Do we feel that we are growing in this sort of knowledge? As we glance back over the past few years have we learned better how to please God in our daily occupation? Have we learned anything more about the secret of strength and joy and peace? If, not, or if our progress hasn't been satisfactory what is the reason?

3. Love. Jesus and Paul both summed up man's ethical obligations in terms of love. In Mt. 22:34-40. Love by the way, we should note, for them was not primarily a sentiment, as it tends to become with us, but rather a disposition of the will to seek the good of the one who was loved. Naturally then if a Christian grows he must grow in love. We generally find Paul's highest ideals for his converts in his prayers. In his letter to the Philippians he writes "And this I pray that your love may abound yet more and more, so that ye may approve the things that are excellent, etc." 1:9-10. See also 1Thes. 4:9-10. There are several ways in which growth in love may manifest itself. 1st, extensively. Most of us tend to limit our love to the members of our family, or to the circle of our friends, to a few needy cases that are pressed on our attention. But Jesus taught us that love (remember He had in mind not a sentiment, such as affection, but rather a disposition of the will) should extend to any man in need, whom we in any way can help. Does our love need to grow in this direction? 2nd, intensively. Love with most of us is fluctuating, and feeble. It shrinks from any severe effort, any great sacrifice, and so quickly grows discouraged. Is that true of our love? 3rd, as Paul suggests, "in knowledge and all discernment, so that ye may approve the things that are excellent" as the words are translated in the margin "distinguish the things that differ." We all know people whom we say are so thoughtful. We long to be of help. We ask sometimes, "Is there anything that I can do?" But these people don't ask. They seem to know almost instinctively the kindest, most helpful thing to do. In so many things the choice is not between the good and the best. And some people have a love so discerning that it enables them to distinguish between these things that differ in value, it leads them to approve not merely the good, but the most excellent. That's the ideal that Paul holds before the Philippians and before us. In which of these three ways does our love need most to be developed? Are we making any progress toward the goal?

4. Service. In his great letter to the Ephesians Paul says that the great work of the leaders of the Church is to perfect "the saints unto the work of ministering unto the building up of the body of Christ." Eph. 4:12. Paul says 'saints' where we would say 'members of the Church.' If he were writing today he would say that the great task of the Church is to perfect all of its members in the service of Christ that at last all mankind might attain unto the unity of the faith and of the knowledge of the Son of God. On putting it the other way around he would say that we must grow more and more in our willingness and in our ability to serve Him. The particular service that we are called upon to render may be through the church (the use of our talents or the use of our money) or it may be in the home, or it may be in our business, or it may be in the political life—but in any case we are called on to play our full part in the building up of Christ's Kingdom here on earth. Have we perfected our service in this regard? Wherein do we fail?

5. The measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ. If we want one sufficient ideal to cover all that we have tried to say and more, Paul supplies it for us in Eph. 4:13 and 15. The final ideal which he holds before us is the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ. Our great desire for ourselves and for all other men is that we and they may grow up in all things unto Him, who is the head, even Christ. There can be no greater ideal. If He is our goal all else will follow. But is He our goal? Are we growing toward the manhood of the Master? Or have we become satisfied with our moral and spiritual attainments? Satisfied with our attainments as we range them along side the life of the Master, and His ideal for our lives? None of us are really satisfied when we set ourselves against that standard. But that brings us to the second part of our question—as to the means of growth.

II. The Means

1. The Place of Ideals. One condition of spiritual growth is the presence of ideals. We certainly cannot make much progress unless there is an ideal to beckon us forward! So Paul writing to the Philippians of the ideal Christian life says in conclusion: "Finally brethren whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honorable, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise think on these things." Phil. 4:8. But the highest ideal as we all acknowledge is Jesus. So Paul describing the normal process of Christian growth writes in 2Cor. 3:18: "We all, with unveiled face beholding as in a mirror the glory of the Lord, are transformed into the same image from glory to glory." We can all see surely that there can be no Christian growth unless there are ideals in the Christian's life. But do we give any place for the contemplation of these ideals in our own life, the contemplation of the great ideal? What place should we give to such contemplation?

2. The Exercise of the Will. Of course we recognize that it is not enough simply to contemplate the ideal. The ideal must be there, but we must struggle to attain it. The danger is that we shall grow satisfied with failure, that we shall be satisfied to measure up simply to the moral standards of our own set. To grow in the Christian life we must follow the example of Paul. "Brethren, I count not myself yet to have laid hold, but one thing I do, forgetting the things which are behind, and stretching forward to the things which are before, I press on toward the goal unto the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. Let us therefore as many as are perfect be thus minded." Phil 3:13-15. Can we use of ourselves the words that Paul used of himself?

3. Use of the Means of Grace. Most Christians find that if the ideal is to be kept fresh in their minds, if their will is not to falter, they must make use of the means of grace which God has provided. What are these means of grace? First, the Bible. Paul says: "Every Scripture inspired of God is also profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction which is in righteousness: that the man of God may be complete, furnished completely unto every good work." 1Tim. 3:16-17. 2nd. Prayer. Jesus said, "If ye the bring evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him?" Lk. 11:13, also Gal. 5:22. 3. The Church. Most Christians find the use of their Bible, the practice of prayer in the private devotions is not sufficient. They need the additional inspiration and strength that comes to them through common worship and association with their fellow Christians, as well as the public teaching and exposition of the Word. Knowing this the writer of the letters to the Hebrews exhorts us not to forsake our own assemblies together: Heb. 10:25. But note that these means of grace are 'means,' means to an end, means to Christian growth. Do we use them intelligently to this end? Do we use them to the best advantage? If not how can we do so?

4. Surrender to the Christ within us. In the last analysis our Christian growth depends on the Divine Spirit within us. Every aspiration that comes to us, every effort that is part faith, is the result of God's work within us. As Paul puts it: "It is God who worketh in you both to will and to work for His good pleasure: Phil. 2:13. The important thing is that can count absolutely surely on God's help in our struggle upward, "being confident of this very thing that he who began a good work in you will perfect it until the day of Jesus Christ." Phil. 1:6. God's will is made known to us in the ideal that beckon us, in the aspirations that at times stir from our sluggishness—from whatever source they come our prayers, our reading of the scriptures, our worship, our business or social or cultural contacts. If we set our minds on Christ as the ideal, and use the means of grace and yield ourselves to the God who calls us, to God who stirs us, allow Him to have His way in our lives, we may be assured, we will "grow up in all things unto Him, who is the head, even Christ."

THE PRESIDENT OF THE FEDERAL COUNCIL

A Letter to J. P. Hobson, Frankfort, Ky.

Judge J. P. Hobson, Frankfort, Kentucky,

My Dear Sir:

Though I have not had the pleasure of meeting you personally I share with others the satisfaction of heart of your new book "The Precious Faith," regarding which you are to be congratulated. Certainly God's Precious Truth was never more constantly and insidiously assailed than at the present time; not only from avowed unbelievers outside of the Church, but also from men inside the Church,—who instead of defending and proclaiming the Gospel as they are in duty bound to do, betray it.

A recent copy of "The Presbyterian" of Philadelphia a staunch supporter of the old Gospel, quotes a recent book by Bishop F. J. McConnell, elected the new President of the Federal Council of Protestant Churches in America. This book "The Christlike God" is reported to say, page 15: "Is not this tendency to deify Jesus more heathen than Christian? Are we not more true Christians when we cut loose from a heathen propensity and take Jesus simply for the character that He was and for the ideal that He is?" In other words, it is "a heathen propensity" to acknowledge our Saviour, "God manifest in the flesh!" It is heathen to believe that the "Word was God," that our Redeemer was Deity! This strikes at the very heart of the Gospel, a blunt denial of the Lord who bought us with His precious blood.

Of course Bishop McConnell has a perfect right to believe what he pleases, but what grieves many of us is that he is head of the Federal Council to which the Southern Presbyterian Church belongs, and if our church keeps silent when he publishes such destructive views to the world, we are sharing responsibility for his utterances, for he and the council claim to speak for the whole Protestant Church in America. How can our church but protest vigorously and refuse to share in the guilt of such disloyalty to our Lord Jesus Christ? It seems to me our leaders and presbyteries ought to rise up as one man and sever all connection with the radical body; for if we do not we are really helping to spread the poisonous error which he disseminates, which if not checked will surely destroy the spiritual life of our Church. Paul's words in the Spirit are just as true today as when he spoke them, "Their word is as doth a canker (a gangrene)." Gangrene destroys the body; and the denial of our Lord's deity will surely destroy the soul, and paralyze the Church which allows such false teachings to pass unchallenged.

Union of churches is fine if we are true to the Precious Faith; but if we sacrifice the Truth to a false notion of charity or because we fear to speak out, it comes a curse, a powerful weapon of Satan. How do we feel about this important matter? I should be glad to hear from you. We all dislike to criticize, but we must speak if we are true to our Lord, must we not?

I have been a missionary of our Church in China since January 1883, and am now on the retired list. May your good book meet with a wide circulation. May God rich blessings rest on it and on you.

Faithfully yours,

Henry M. Woods.

Every Member Growing in the Grace of the Regular Worship of Giving

'SEE THAT YE ABOUND IN THIS GRACE ALSO'

II Corinthians 8:7

The Church is Not a One Man's Job—Every Member Should Remember:

1. That the Every Member Canvass offers a real opportunity for the participation of every member.
2. That personal growth in knowledge, work, worship, witnessing and giving is a Christian Duty.
3. That March tenth is the day for advance in Foreign Missions, Home Missions, Christian Education, Religious Education, Synod's Work, Presbytery's Work, and Local Church Work.
4. That the whole world waits at your own door on March 10, and the growing needs of the world can only be met by a growing Church, and that means by growing Christians.
5. That the budget of your Church is a wall against retreat and not a barrier to prevent advance.
6. That the grace of Christian liberality is a state of the heart and not a condition of the pocket book.
7. That Christian Stewardship is "causal" rather than "casual" and that the Every Member Canvass offers a great spiritual opportunity to grow and to abound in the grace of giving.

WEENTY'S VALENTINE

Is there such a place as Valentine Land?" Weenty asked Mr. Rabbit. She jumped up from her little crib so she could have a better view of Mr. Rabbit.

Mr. Rabbit was sitting in the window looking at a very charming heart of gilt paper that Weenty had cut out and left for him on the window sill.

"I'm not sure about there being a Valentine Land," Mr. Rabbit replied seriously, "but there are such things as Valentines. This is one, you know, this lovely gilt paper heart with 'To My Valentine' written on it. One couldn't mistake that, you know."

"Oh, yes, I know it is, you darling silly," Weenty laughed. "You're not supposed to know who sent it to you but I'll whisper it, shall I?"

Mr. Rabbit put down his long ear and little Weenty whispered into the very point of it,—"I did. Don't tell that you know!"

"It's lovely of you!" Mr. Rabbit exclaimed, pink to his whiskers with delight. "I've never had a Valentine before and this one is be-oo-tiful."

"I have three Valentines," Weenty confided, "do you want to see them? One Valentine is all lacey with the dearest little boy in blue and a little girl in a white frock on it."

"It must be lovely," Mr. Rabbit agreed. "Then I have one with Saint Valentine himself on it. He's a monk, you know, and wears a long brown frock. My third one, oh well! she seems a cross little thing, she has red hair and makes awful faces. I really don't like her much."

"That doesn't sound much like the other Valentines," Mr. Rabbit interrupted.

"No, it doesn't. It's what they call a 'comic Valentine.' But do you want to see them. Let's see where did I put them?"

"Here we are!" said a very musical voice and a dear little girl jumped up from Weenty's own little chair. She was the prettiest thing with long golden hair and a fluffy, old-fashioned frock. "We thought you would never wake up," she went on. "And here we've been waiting and waiting—all of us!" The little girl waved her hand and Weenty was astonished to see the rest of her Valentines standing around.

The little boy in blue bowed, the kind monk nodded his bald head and poor little comic Valentine shrugged up her shoulders and shook her red head.

"This is Jack," the little Valentine girl went on, "and I am Jill." Both the children bowed and Weenty made her best courtesy. "This" went on Jill, "is good Saint Valentine, himself. And here is Meg."

Saint Valentine bowed, but Meg turned quite crossly away.

"I am so glad to see you all," Weenty said. "Why, this is like a Valentine party isn't it?"

"Yes, and you must look like a Valentine yourself. Shall we pin red paper hearts on your gown?" Jill asked.

"That's a lovely idea," Weenty cried. "I'll cut out the hearts right away."

"I'm all ready for the party," said Mr. Rabbit. He had pinned Weenty's gilt Valentine on his chest. It made him into quite an attractive Valentine.

"Good enough to be kissed!" Weenty declared.

Jill pinned the red hearts on Weenty's gown. It made her look quite like the Queen of Hearts.

"Saint Valentine," Mr. Rabbit said, "Weenty was asking me if there was a Valentine Land? Now, perhaps you can answer that question?"

"So I can," replied Saint Valentine, "you see, the Day is named after me. Long, long ago in a little town of Italy, I used to send little letters to all my young friends to let them know how I loved them. Sometimes the letters had pictures on them—"

"Not pictures like her," said Jack, pointing at Meg. Meg stuck out her tongue in a very rude fashion. Jill was quite shocked.

"Oh Jack, you shouldn't say such things. Valentines are supposed to always be messages of love and good wishes."

"I'm not," said Meg. "If you'd seen Weenty cry, when she saw me, I crossed my eyes—just like this—and looked as awful as I could. Ha, ha, ha! He, he, he! I scared her!"

"Oh!" said Weenty, ready to cry again. But good Saint Valentine slapped his knees and laughed with Meg.

"He, ho," he chuckled, "that is a funny face, Meg. You are an artist at making faces!"

"Oh, I can make a better one than that!" cried Meg, very much pleased at being noticed. "How is this?" She made a perfectly dreadful face which made Saint Valentine laugh harder.

"That would make even a boy cry," Meg said, triumphantly, "now wouldn't it?"

"Not me," said Jack. "I think it's funny. Gee, Meg, you're really lots of fun, after all. Make some more faces. Don't you think she's good, Weenty?" he asked, turning to the little girl.

"Oh, yes," Weenty answered, "now that I see that she does it just for fun. When I cried this morning, you see, I just didn't know that she was a joke. It was very silly of me. Of course," she added in a whisper to Jill, "I like your kind of Valentine a great deal more. But I see now, the funny ones can only hurt you if you don't laugh at them."

"Quite right," agreed Jill, "and after all Meg is a good natured little girl. She just hasn't had any proper bringing up. I wouldn't like to look that that, would you?"

Just then Mr. Rabbit remarked to St. Valentine, "you haven't told us where Valentine Land is yet. You were saying something about Italy."

"Oh, to be sure," replied Saint Valentine. "But of course, Italy isn't Valentine Land. I should say that that land lay in the loving heart of everyone. What do you think?"

"I've never been in a heart," said Mr. Rabbit. "I shouldn't think that that would be much fun!"

"I was speaking figuratively," the good Saint explained himself.

"Oh-er-yes, I see," Mr. Rabbit agreed, doubtfully. He wasn't sure what kind of speaking "figuratively" might be. Do you know?

Jill spoke up at that moment, "You can come into our heart," she said. "Follow me."

Everybody jumped up and followed Jill, who led them to a huge lace paper frame. It was cut in heart shape. There were two little flower beds on each side of the heart where Jack and Jill usually stood. Behind that was a charming path that led to a cottage, a most inviting spot, all overgrown with roses in which blue birds fluttered.

"What a lovely place!" cried Weenty. "May we really go in? What beautiful flowers!"

"Let me pick you a bouquet!" Jack said—

"Roses are red,
Violets are blue,
Sugar is sweet,
And so are you!" he quoted, handing her the flowers he had picked.

Saint Valentine gathered some flowers, too, and with a very graceful bow, presented them to Jill.

"If I am yours and you are mine,
"We'll be each other's Valentine!" said he.

Mischievous Meg felt it was her turn so she sang to Mr. Rabbit in a very comical manner—

"I love you little, I love you big,
"I love you like a little Pig!"

Mr. Rabbit was not a bit offended. He laughed heartily. So did all the rest.

Just then the clock in the hall began to strike—one, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, ten, eleven, twelve—and like the magic people of fairy books, Jack and Jill, Saint Valentine, Meg and Mr. Rabbit were gone.

"Dear me!" said Weenty the next morning. "I never got into Valentine Land. But at any rate I'm not frightened at Meg any more!"

VALENTINE

There's a knock at the door
And the patter of feet,
And sounds of gay laughter
Now far down the street.

And here in my hall,
Most under the mat,
A white card is resting—
Now, just fancy that!

It's a picture of cupid,
The fat little elf.
Why he can't keep from laughing
In spite of himself.

To carry the message of Loving good cheer
That was printed for me
By fingers so dear.

Now I wonder whoever
Those blossoms entwine
Round the heart that entreats:
"Be my sweet Valentine."

Today the Postman's whistle
Made all the child run,

For he brought lots of Valentines
A bunch for everyone!

There were jolly ones for Daddy,
And Mother's were of lace—

And comic ones for Jimmy,
And pretty ones for Grace.

But oh, I had the prettiest,
Who sent it, no one guess'd,

For the envelope was funny
The way it was address'd—

But when I read the verses "Bout roses red and violets blue

I knew away down in my heart
It surely came from you!

EDITOR'S LOOKOUT

The Howard Memorial Presbyterian Church, Tarboro, N. C., of which Rev. T. L. Harnsberger is Pastor, arranged for Dr. W. T. Thompson of Union Seminary to visit the church and give suggestions for the building up of the Sunday school and Young People's work.

On February 10th Dr. Thompson spoke at the morning service, held a conference in the afternoon, and conducted a devotional service at night. The young people and their older friends invited the young people and their leaders in each church of Albemarle Presbytery, and provided dinner and supper for all who came.

Dr. Thompson is known throughout the bounds of the Southern Church, and beyond, as a specialist in Religious Education and an attractive and helpful speaker and the Tarboro Church feels fortunate to have had this visit.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S TOPIC

Charlotte Garth Adams

Sunday, February 24—Training For Service—Matt. 20:20-28; Acts 22:3; 2Tim. 1:5, 6.

Leader

Our subject today is Training For Service. The scripture passages suggest three places where we may learn to serve, at our mother's knee, under a good teacher, and in the service of Christ. As children of course our first school is our home. Then, our teachers in the daily school are our guide. Our church also offers us training for service. We all have these advantages around us from our earliest years.

When we have finished high school, the college invites us to further train ourselves for service. Our great denomination has provided church colleges so the young people of Presbyterian homes may receive an education under teachers who have a reverent faith in the Bible and in God.

Let us think of all these places and advantages where we may be trained for service. First, we shall think of our homes as the school for character and service.

Learn to Show Piety First at Home

Ever since we were very small, we've been told stories of good little boys and girls who always obeyed and were neat and longed to do something "to help somebody." We pictured them always in white clothes with "rim and "goody-goody" expressions. They weren't in our idea of a good time. Often a story of a bad little boy or girl would inspire good deeds in us much more quickly. But always, whether the story was about good children or bad children, there was a moral—a moral as evident as the nose on your face. And the sum and substance of all the morals was this "Learn to show piety first at home." Perhaps our parents begin with us at tender age because it is such a hard lesson to learn and such a continuous job. There is very little glory in doing the small tasks about the home—they seem to be such thankless jobs. And being sweet is not ways the easiest thing. But if we can learn to work with others in the home, we can learn to co-operate with others in bigger things. If we cultivate pleasantness and courtesy in the home they will come naturally when we are away from home. The world judges our homes as we are samples. Every day we are in training for service and nothing is too small for being done well. Whosoever would be great among you shall be your servant, and whosoever would be first among you shall be your bondservant."

Education and Training

"Training for service" invariably makes us think of schools—training sounds more like school than home. It sounds systematic and well ordered. But "education" does not always mean schools and colleges. "Education" takes in all that we learn from the beginning to the end of our lives; it includes not only systematic schooling but also the enlightenment and understanding that we receive thru experience. Therefore one who has never been to school at all can be educated—no doubt better educated than those of us who have our thinking done for us at school. Going to school is a short-cut experience. Others have experiences with this or that subject. They write them down. We read them. Then when a similar experience comes to us, we call to mind what we have read and use the experience of that other person either as a guide or as a warning. Going to school arouses in us a desire for new experiences—we want to know more.

Little learning is a dangerous thing, sink deep, or touch not the Pierian spring. There shallow draughts intoxicate the brain, and drinking largely sobers us again." Pope)
"Learning undigested by thought is labor lost, and thought unaided by learning is perilous." (Confucius)

Christian Education

When we say Christian education, we do not limit education—we rather broaden it. For Christian education means knowing more about Christ, which finally leads to knowing Christ better. Education will never save the world—Christ is the only one who can do that. Education without Christ can make men hard and cruel. Education with Christ makes men broader, more sympathetic, gentler, and more courteous. If education robs man of Christ, he has lost more than he has gained—his learning can never satisfy our souls. Dr. Woolf in the "Christian World" says: "Men of science look wistfully to see if the God we believe in is big enough for the world they know of. Science today joins the prophets of yesterday and asks us to lift up our eyes to the hills, or to consider the heavens, or to plumb the abyss of the seas, whence will come our help and to think more grandly of Him who weighed them out. We cannot conceive Him truly except with minds exalted to the grandeur of His ways. And so science throws us back magnificently upon religion's own way of knowing God. As we follow that way sooner or later we have to do with Him personally, and He Himself deals with us one by one. That is where science merges into religion, and lets the soul see deeper than the atoms and beyond the farthest stars."

You may hear a great deal about science conflicting with religion, but if you think of science as "thinking God's thoughts after Him" you cannot go far wrong. "Training for service" will take your best efforts, but remember also that you can serve while in training.

Our Church Schools

The Southern Presbyterian Church has always believed in providing church schools for her young people for boys and girls. There are high schools which prepare for college. There are colleges for boys and colleges for girls, some being junior colleges, where a young person may receive the first two years of a college course. Then there are the full colleges, where one may obtain a degree.

Then we have the Assembly's Training School at Richmond, Va., Here young women and young men too may prepare to do special work in churches, such as directing religious education in churches, or helping pastors of churches in visiting and other kinds of work such as type-writing and correspondence.

Then we have the seminaries where our young men are trained to be preachers, missionaries. If anyone wants to serve he or she can be trained for that service.

JUNIOR C. E. TOPIC HELPS

Miss Hattie Mae Covington

Topic for February 24, 1929 — "A 'Stay-at-Home Journey' to an African Village."—Acts 8:5-8.

The Service of Worship

Piano Prelude.
Call to Worship.
O sing unto the Lord a new song; sing unto the Lord all the earth.
Declare His glory among the heathen, His wonders Response:
among all people.

Response

From all that dwell below the skies,
Let the Creator's praise arise.
Let the Redeemer's name be sung
Through every land, by every tongue.
Matt. 2:19, 20 repeated by all.
Hymn: "Jesus Calls Us."
Scripture Lesson: Acts 8:5-8.
Prayer—Sentence prayers.
Hymn—"Jesus Saviour Pilot Me."

Offertory Service

Whatever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so unto them.
Offertory—Music.
Prayer—By the leader.
Special Music: "How Long Must We Wait?"
The Leader's Talk.
Picture Study: David Livingstone.
Talks by the Juniors.
The Superintendent's Message.
Hymn: "We've a Story to Tell to the Nations."
Benediction.

Suggestions for Talks

1. Location of Africa.
2. Conditions of the country.
3. Characteristics of the people.
4. Missionary Work in Africa.
5. Each member of the society find out the name and residence of one missionary in Africa, and learn all he can about him and the work he is trying to do.
6. Impress the Juniors with the importance of Christian missions, and show that the Juniors as friends of Jesus should help to carry on His work.
7. Medical Work in Africa.
The witch doctor is fast losing his hold on the people. The fame of the mission doctor is spreading over the country to such an extent that at one of the stations there are over two hundred on the waiting list for specific operations.
8. Village Schools.
There were no schools in Cameroun before the coming of the missionary. From their fathers the boys learned games to strengthen their memory. At night they listened while their elders told folk tales and cracked riddles, and as soon as they were old enough they themselves joined in the telling. There are now in the Cameroun bush village schools from three to five miles apart. The school house is built by the villagers and the school children.
9. Bible Translations.
In the village schools and in the first year of the station schools the New Testament is used as a text book. Versions of the Scriptures have been printed in two hundred and forty-four languages and dialects of Africa. Many tribes are almost totally without the uplifting influence of Christian literature
10. David Livingstone and his courage.
It requires courage to leave our homes and friends to take up any new work, but it needs more than courage to go into a strange land among savages and wild beasts and all sorts of unknown dangers. It needs faith and trust in God's care and boundless love for Jesus Christ and His cause. David Livingstone had both courage and faith. He loved Christ enough to obey His command to go into all the world and preach the gospel. Many others today are showing the same courage.

Obituaries

MRS. CHARLES A. LOGAN

Our whole Church mourns today the home-going of one of the loveliest and best-beloved of all her missionaries, though sure we are that what means lamentation to us means coronation to her, and that yet a little while and we shall see her again.

"Lovelier in Heaven's sweet climate, yet the same."
For the following sketch of her beautiful life and character we are indebted to Miss Bess M. Blakeney, her devoted friend and fellow missionary.

"Martha Blain Myers, daughter of Henry H. and Mary Nelson Myers, was born December the thirteenth, 1871, in the historic old university town of Lexington, Virginia. Lovely both in face and character, reared in a home of rare culture and godliness, 'Patty', as she was called, was unusually beloved by a wide circle of friends as well as by a family destined to render, in mature years, outstanding service to the Church. Speaking of her in those earlier days, one of the foremost ministers of our church once said to me: 'Miss Patty was always my boyhood ideal of sweetness and graciousness.'

"She was educated at Mary Baldwin Seminary, Staunton, Virginia, where she specialized in music. On November 22, 1899, she was married to Rev. Charles Alexander Logan of Kentucky, and for three years engaged in Home Mission work with her husband in the mountains of eastern Kentucky.

"In December, 1902, Dr. and Mrs. Logan came as missionaries to Japan, and for the last twenty-six years have lived and worked in Tokushima, where both won for themselves a unique place in the hearts and affections of multitudes of people. In April, on the eve of their return on furlough, Dr. and Mrs. Logan were given a great ovation, in honor of their twenty-five years of service, by hundreds of the leading officials and people of the city and province.

"In a hospitable Mission, Mrs. Logan's hospitality was proverbial. Energetic and capable to a remarkable degree, her home was always 'a goodly place where it was good to be.' But comforting as was this material ministrations, it did not end there, for from her dear loving heart she gave prompt sympathy and sound advice to any who sought her aid. That 'she was never known to lose her temper, to make a spiteful remark, or to do an unkind deed' is the remarkable testimony of one particularly close to her; and to that I wish to add that she was one whom I have never heard criticised. One comfort in our sorrow is that we did love her and appreciate her, and we believe she knew it.

"And yet she was so modest and unassuming that I doubt if she even faintly realized the wonderful influence she exerted on the lives of all she touched. I never heard her speak at our Mission meetings, except to lead in prayer; comparatively few articles came from her pen; yet through her husband and children she has preached the most eloquent of sermons, and her courage and charity and splendid faith are written so deeply on hundreds of hearts that neither time nor space can ever obliterate the impression.

"Hers was a smiling, radiant, optimistic faith. Not only did the unusual love and harmony existing between the members of her household make it a wonderfully pleasant place, but it was always a center of good cheer, and she entered with almost as great a zest into little Philip Hassell's enthusiasm over a new toy as she brought to bear upon a woman's meeting she was conducting, or a long, country evangelistic trip with Dr. Logan.

"Grown people loved her because she was so unfailingly kind and genuine and sincere; little children adored her because she had the loving, guileless, pure heart of a little child. I never left her presence unrefreshed both physically and spiritually, and if I were a raw, rank heathen, one afternoon spent with Mrs. Logan would be sufficient to convince me that it was her Lord and Master whom I wished to serve. Henceforth we shall all strive to be more like her. For she was like her Lord.

"To our pitifully small Mission, and to the whole of the evangelistic force of Japan, her loss is irreparable, and yet we know that she was peculiarly prepared for her richer, fuller service. Even in little things, with her usual foresight, she was ready. She was taken ill on November 16th, having conducted her last meeting the previous day. From that time she never left her bed, but her numerous Christmas gifts were all ready, and those intended for America were on the way across the ocean at that time.

"For over twenty-five years she had been a wonderful witness in the same great city. She had just returned from a happy furlough where she had enjoyed the reunion with relatives and friends and had seen her three beloved daughters matured into fine, fair womanhood. And she was permitted to come back to her chosen field that her triumphant death and the beautiful faith of her family and friends might be a further sublime witness for Him whose she was and whom she served.

"Her last hour, as described by Rev. Dr. A. P. Hassell, associate, neighbor, and close friend thru many years, reminds one of the leave-taking of one of the early saints or crusaders. In the conclusion of his address to the Mission friends gathered at her home for the final English services Dr. Hassell said:

"All had been done from the beginning of her illness that human love and ingenuity could do, and she was going to Him for a glorious welcome home.

"There was no 'moaning of the bar' when she 'put out to sea.' And though it may be too much to say there was 'no sadness of farewell', we can say with confidence that that sadness was not hers. She went forth not as one who had been vanquished but as a glorious victor from the well-fought field. And I can think of no more appropriate words to apply to her in closing than those of the Apostle Paul, as he contemplates his own victory, 'I have fought the good fight, I have finished the course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me the crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge shall give to me at that day; and not to me only, but also to all them that have loved his appearing.'"

STORY

SOME "PROHIBITION" THOUGHTS.

The Michigan Advocate reproduces this story from a recent writer:

A young married man whose home, business, and health were destroyed by his drinking excesses took me to his house, shut the door, and pulled a revolver out of his pocket with the announcement:

"I'm going to give myself just one more chance, just one!"

Then he called a couple of bright-eyed, though frightened and neglected children into the cheerless room.

"They're the ones I'm hurting most, them and my wife. She's in bed. I hit her last night, and then I got sober. It had come to that! And look!"

He took from a drawer a bouquet of withered and charred flowers.

"My wife cherished them because she carried them when we were married, but I stamped on them last night and threw them into the fire, and when she tried to rescue them I knocked her down. I give myself only one more chance."

He took the revolver off the table and shoved it back into his pocket, grabbed me by the arm and led me a little roughly across the room to where the photo of a group of young men hung upon the wall. His own face looked out from the group, sparkling, care-free. From it I glanced at him as he now stood stricken. Then I experienced a shivering "mental moment" as he directed an unsteady finger at one in the group's center whose hat was tilted merrily and whose arms were extended fraternally across the shoulders of his neighbors as they all laughed.

"That is the man who taught me to drink."

Suppose that careless young tempter could have seen that wreck of a man, a home; that anguish of a husband, a wife, children. Perhaps he would have hesitated long before he led his friend in that dismal way.

Another story: A young girl looked out of a window. A funeral cortege was winding its way by her home. In the hearse was a young student who had taken his own life. Some months before he came to college an earnest youth out of a Christian home. He was studious and did not pay tribute to the pretty young bell who coveted attention. She set her plans to entangle him with her charms. Too well she succeeded. She then prompted him to form associations with some wild men of the college. From bad to worse he went and then this disaster. Had she seen the termination, light, flippant, selfish though she was, perhaps she might have restrained her craving for adoration.

Tragedies, tragedies that might have been spared if the possible outcome of influence had been foreseen!

The Other Side

A writer was seeking information concerning Frederick Robertson. He interviewed a common tradesman. The man said to him, "Come this way." Taking him into a rear room he said, "Do you see that picture?" pointing to a likeness of the great preacher. "If I ever feel like doing a mean thing I come back here and look at that picture and then the desire leaves be." Cheered along the way would this preacher have been had he been able to foresee that after his death he would be a refuge from temptation to a humble man.

The editor and owner of a great daily was approached by some business men of his city. The prohibition issue was in the balance. They said to him: "Prohibition is hurting our city. The other papers are working against it. We wish your help." And with those words there was the implied threat that if he refused the consequences would not be pleasant. "I will answer you tomorrow in an editorial," he replied. That night he was pondering his answer. As he walked to and fro in his study he chanced to look toward a picture of his mother. There he saw the white bow. In an instant his decision was taken. In a strong editorial he called upon his fellow citizens to arise in their might and have done forever with the liquor curse. Some dark days had no doubt come into that Mother's life. If she might have looked down the years and if she might have seen that in an hour of testing her boy would have been guided by her fidelity, the way would have been made smoother for her.

Inspiration, inspiration that would have been felt if the outcome of fidelity had been foreseen!

BUSINESS IS BUSINESS

Clara Boyle Bracken

"Old Mac isn't very keen about the new system, is he?"

"Oh, I don't know." Rodger Bowman had no intention of discussing his chief with the most talkative man in the office.

"Looks to me like he's afraid he'll go out with the old ledgers he's been using for the last thirty years," Bob Creason went on without encouragement. "He's so absent-minded lately. Mr. Fairchild's been looking for him this morning. If he goes, I've got a hunch that Rodger M. Bowman will take his place."

"Chuck the applesauce, Bob," Rodger answered shortly. "Here's old Mac now."

"Everybody knows you're the best man in the office anyhow."

"The best man in the office," Rodger Bowman repeated the phrase as he sat down quietly at his own desk. "The best man in the office"—and why not? Hadn't he been working steadily toward that goal for three long years? Books at the library, a correspondence course in business methods, modern office equipment—he had studied them all in preparation for this very day. Too bad for an old man to lose his place, but business was business.

Perhaps the head bookkeeper in the office of Fairchild and Company, was absent-minded that morning, for how could he see the pages of his ledger when a gentle, wistful face kept coming before his eyes?

A little white-haired lady was standing on the top step of a shady porch, pinning a bunch of violets on her husband's coat.

"You haven't acted like yourself for a week," she was saying. "Are you working too hard, dear?"

"I'm all right. Likely a little touch of spring fever," the head bookkeeper had answered.

"I'll make some sassafras tea tonight. You know Sunday is Mothers' Day." She drew a deep breath before she went on. "I thought maybe I could fix up a nice dinner with just the things Ted liked, and maybe you could invite one of the young men down at the office, somebody that's lonesome and would like a little home cooking, and— and—mothering—"

WYGHON'S BUSINESS COLLEGE
 100 SUMTER ST. COLUMBIA, S. C.

Davitt replied. "So many of them go out of town for the week end or are all dated up with their girls." He looked down soberly at her disappointed face. "But I'll find somebody, so the boy will know we haven't forgotten."
 How could he tell her that not one of those self-sufficient, up-to-the-minute young men had need of anything that he or she could give?

Just before noon Mr. Fairchild came into the office, a sprightly individual beside him carrying a glossy new calculating machine which he placed on
 Mr. McDavitt's desk.

Lifting the lid, he began to put it through its paces with bewildering rapidity, reciting his stereotyped sales talk with a speed that matched the machine.

"It's all plain as A B C," he finished,
 "so simple that any eighth grade pupil can operate it."

Why was Rodger Bowman looking at the head bookkeeper just then? No one else seemed to notice the look of swift apprehension that crossed his face—least of all Mr. Fairchild.

"We'll start in with the new system on the first, Mac," he said. "The rest of the equipment will be delivered next week." And went out talking and laughing, without hearing the old man's mechanical assent, or seeing the stricken look in his eyes.

But Podger Bowman saw it, and it haunted him all that day. "What's the matter with me," he muttered, "trying to mix sentiment with business?" All great men were lifted to success on the shoulders of their fellows, and if those shoulders were stooped and old and frail, how could he help that? Business was business.

Work was finished early that afternoon, and one by one the fellows hurriedly left the office.

"Boy, this is great weather for tennis."

"See you at Elm Grove Courts in the morning."

"I'm going out to Sunset Park for the day."

As Rodger Bowman buttoned on his coat he gave one swift glance of sympathy at the bent shoulders of the head bookkeeper, then resolutely turned toward the door. "All great men are ruthless," he argued. "Business is business."

Andrew McDavitt looked up from his work. "Oh, just a minute, Mr. Bowman." Knowing that the boy had no home of his own, he had intended to invite him to Sunday dinner, but the words stuck in his throat. "I—er—ah—a pleasant Sunday to you, Mr. Bowman."

In answer the ruthless young man did a most surprising thing. He turned and walked swiftly across the room.

"Mr. McDavitt, I thought—I er—I wondered if you'd have time to go over this new machine with me. That poll-parrot talked so fast this morning that nobody could follow him."

Was it gratitude that flashed in those faded blue eyes before the curtain dropped?

"We'll work it out right now if you don't mind staying for an hour or two,"
 the head bookkeeper answered eagerly.
 "And by the way, how about coming out to dinner with us tomorrow?
 Mother would be so pleased. She's always been lonely since Ted, our boy, didn't come back—from France."

As Andrew McDavitt beamed across the dinner table next day at his wife's radiant face, he wondered if the young man realized how much his coming had meant to them. But Rodger was too busy revising his code in the fine fellowship of that little home to be conscious of anything except the gifts he had received. Life was something more than a battle, with a victory always to the strong.

"Mrs. McDavitt," he said haltingly in farewell, "I can't tell you how—how how wonderful it has been to be here."

"You must come often, Mr. Bowman. It's been a happy day for us, too.
 Mr. McDavitt is very fond of you," she confided. "He has a big, hard motto, 'Business is Business,' but he doesn't mean a word of it. He's the kindest man in the world."

"I know that, Mrs. McDavitt," the ruthless young man replied. "I think he's just the finest boss a fellow ever had."—Presbyterian.

TOO DRASTIC?

Newspaper readers were somewhat startled recently to note that a woman, residing in Lansing, Mich., had been sentenced to life imprisonment in the Detroit House of Correction for repeated violation of the prohibition law.

Some newspapers published only part of the story—paragraphers commented bitterly on the fact that, for selling a pint of liquor, this woman would have to end her days in jail.

Sentimentalists were aroused, especially when it was learned that the the offender was a woman and a mother. There were some who blamed the Eighteenth Amendment for her crime.
 Others were, no doubt, amazed at the drastic action of the jury (composed of eight men and four women), which deliberated but thirteen minutes on the afternoon of December 31 and found the defendant guilty of being a "habit-ual criminal." Thus, under the new criminal code of the state of Michigan, a life sentence was found mandatory and Judge Charles B. Collingwood immediately pronounced it.

We'll begin with box; the plural is boxes,
But the plural of ox should be oxen, not oxes.
One fowl is a goose, but two are called geese,
Yet the plural of mouse should never be meese,
You may find a lone mouse, or a whole nest of mice,
But the plural of house is houses, not hice.
If the plural of man is always called men,
Why shouldn't the plural of pan be called pen?
The cow in the plural may be called cows or kine;
But a bow, if repeated, is never called bine;
And the plural of vow is vows, never vine.
If I speak of a foot and you show me two feet
And I gave you a boot, would a pair be called beet?
If one is a tooth and the whole set are teeth,
Why shouldn't the plural of booth be beeth?
If the singular's this, and the plural is these,
Should the plural of kiss ever be written keese?
Then one may be that, and the two would be those,
Yet hat in the plural would never be hose.
And the plural of cat is cats, and not cose,
We speak of a brother, and also of brethren,
But though we say mother, we never say methren.
Then the masculine pronouns are he, his and him,
But imagine the feminine she, shis and shim!
So the English, I think you all will agree,
Is the funnest language you ever did see.

Dr. Glasgow Will Speak At P. C. Services

Knoxville Pastor will Deliver Evangelistic Addresses at Clinton, S. C.

President John McSween announced chapel recently that the annual evangelistic services of Presbyterian College of South Carolina, at Clinton, S. C., will be held during the week of February 20. The speaker will be Dr. Samuel M. Glasgow, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Knoxville, Tenn. Doctor Glasgow is one of the leading men in the Church, and McSween said that the college was very fortunate in securing his services.

Announcement has been made of the resignation of Dr. W. E. Hoy, for the past eight years head of the department of biology here, to accept the position as head of the department at the University of South Carolina. This will be a distinct loss to Presbyterian College as Dr. Hoy has been recognized as one of the best teachers in the college and has always held the appreciation and respect of his students. No definite arrangements have been announced for next year thus far.

The catalog, to be issued next week, will also announce that Prof. G. W. Hilliard for the past three years professor of English and literature, will be on a leave of absence next year in order to complete some research work at that line. His place for that time will be filled by H. T. Swedenburg, a graduate in the class of '28 and at present engaged in postgraduate work at the University of Chicago.

Two Churches May Be Merged in Greensboro

Presbyterian and a Methodist Union May Take Place If Two Congregations Near Each Other Agree to Unite

Reports have been published in the press of Greensboro, N. C., of the possible union of two churches in that city, the Presbyterian Church-by-the-Side-of-the-Road and the Park Place Methodist Church. The union is merely in the air, and nothing had been positively reported in the reports received in this city. It may be several weeks before complete understanding will be reached. We print herewith the report published in the Greensboro Daily News:

It is expected that suggestions looking toward acquisition by Park Place Methodist Church of the property at the intersection of Wendover Avenue and Carolina Street now serving as the home of the Presbyterian Church-by-the-Side-of-the-Road, also with a view to inclusion of members of the latter in Park Place, will receive consideration at a meeting of officers of Park Place Church Tuesday evening, February 12.

Representatives of the Church-by-the-Side-of-the-Road are reported to have suggested to representatives of Park Place Church that, in the event of approval by the two congregations, such a union might be developed. The matter has been the subject of considerable discussion, and it appears that definite developments, either favorable or unfavorable to the idea, may soon ensue.

The large lot used by the Church-by-the-Side-of-the-Road as the site for its place of worship and also for extensive outdoor activities is said to have been purchased from the Cone interests under contract stipulating that within a certain period of time the property would revert to the Cones in case of failure to construct thereon a church of the minimum value of $25,000. It is understood that about a year for construction of such a church is required.

Dr. Christie Explains Carnes' Sentence

Baptist Home Mission Board Intercepts Criticism of the Baptists

Some criticisms, taking the forms of association action, personal and editorial opinion have arisen concerning the recommendation of the ex-treasurer Carnes to the mercy of the court for only a five year sentence, and we print the explanation of the president of the Baptist Home Mission Board, of Atlanta, Ga.

Dr. Luther Rice Christie, president of the Baptist Home Mission Board explains the action of that body in accepting a consent verdict whereby Carnes entered a plea of guilty to one of the 20 indictments pending against him and was sentenced to from five to seven years imprisonment.

In his statement addressed to Baptists throughout the South, Dr. Christie stated that sentence as imposed by the court "will not seem to our people in keeping with the enormity of the crime," and that to many it would seem the board should not have consented to such a short sentence.

Termining the case one of the "most difficult and embarrassing in the history of the denomination," Dr. Christie said, "it is not possible for one not intimately connected with the inside of the situation even to guess at the mass of complexities involved in it."

Dr. Christie called attention to the board's move to "lay hold of all the defendant's visible assets" when the shortage was discovered and the legal difficulties necessary to show "just how our money got into all these different properties," which he said were valued at $250,000, "before we could recover these stolen goods."

Criminal action against Carnes and civil action to seize his assets would have involved heavy expense and long delays.

The statement said that "one or two convictions would satisfy the state and the general public; and for the board to have forced the contest, after this, in a long series of criminal cases, would have exposed the board and the denomination to a charge of unreasonable vindictiveness and might have had a backfire both disconcerting and dangerous."

When defense attorney approached the board counsel with overtures for a settlement, Dr. Christie said he deferred to the judgment of the board's lawyers and agreed, "as to the wisest disposition of the matter."

"Indeed, I have not the slightest hesitancy in saying that I felt immensely relieved at the overture from the defendant's counsel," the statement said, "I had hoped and prayed that the accused might eventually enter such a plea and spare the Baptists the necessity of having to be hawked about the streets through another painful period of noise and notoriety and nastiness."

Dr. Christie said the defense attorneys were willing to have their client "make good."

New Head of Salvation Army

Edward J. Higgins Elected by Council to Succeed Gen. Bramwell Booth—Booth Family Will Contest

At Sudbury on Thames, England, February 13, Edward J. Higgins, of England was elected commanding general of the Salvation Army's world-wide organization succeeding General Bramwell Booth. The high council's choice of a new general was 52 to 5.

The election of General Higgins, heretofore a commissioner of the army and chief of staff, marks a new phase in the long struggle to release the organization, with its property assets, from control by members of the Booth family. Four members of the Booth family were included in the five minority votes today against the act depriving General Booth of office. They were Mrs. Bramwell Booth, her two daughters Catherine and Mary, and Mrs. Luch Booth-Hellberg. Commissioner Allister Smith made the fifth.

The high council numbered 61 during the vote on deposition. Four refrained from voting. One was known to be Commissioner Albin Peyron, the father-in-law of General Booth's son, Wycliffe. Other members who are thought to have abstained from voting are Commissioners Cunningham, Laurie, and Kitching.

The council's action puts the next move up to General Booth. He has already filed proceedings questioning the legality of the 1904 deed pool under which the council functions.

The Turks Have a New Alphabet

American Bible Society Plans to Meet Requirements By Printing Bi-Lingual Testaments With Old Language Beside the New

On November 1, 1928, the Grand National Assembly of Turkey passed a law abolishing the use of the Arabic letters, with which Turks have always written their language, and substituting practically the alphabet which we employ. According to this law, all newspapers were to appear only in the new (Latin) characters after December 1, 1928, and one month later all books had also to conform. Books printed previous to that date in the Arabic letters might continue to be circulated, however.

The Turkish President, Mustapha Kemal Pasha, inaugurated and is leading the reform. He is especially anxious that the peasants and laborers, classes which are almost totally illiterate, should be helped to learn. His initiative has aroused a remarkable response throughout the whole country. Popular courses in the new letters have been opened in all towns and most villages. Government employees of all grades have to pass examinations in the "Turkish alphabet" or lose their jobs. The army laid aside its rifles and drill manuals and took up spellers and readers instead. Every prison has its classes in the new script. If the present eagerness for literacy can be maintained for a few years, some millions will be reading who would otherwise never have mastered the art. The need for this reform is suggested by the fact that hardly two out of five Turks can read.

This literary revolution affects the Turkish work of the American Bible Society very closely indeed. It is a unique event in the world-wide experience of this Society. Happily, the Society gains much more than it loses by the change. The most obvious loss is that of the plates of Turkish Scriptures, all of which have been rendered obsolete and will

Tablet Unveiled to President Wilson

First Church, Wilmington, Locates Memorial of War President in the New Church

Some time ago the Stamp Defiance Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution requested of the members of the session of the First Church of Wilmington, N. C., the privilege of placing a memorial tablet to President Woodrow Wilson in the church. This request the session very gladly granted with much appreciation. Accordingly, the tablet was designed by Mr. Hubbard Upjohn, and was made in England by the Birmingham Guild, the same firm which is making the War Memorials for Westminster Abbey.

This tablet is a beautiful work of art. It is 24x40. It is made out of heavy bronze, with a lovely inlaid mosaic bronze border in blue. At the top is a striking medallion of Woodrow Wilson, and on either side of this is the coat of arms of North Carolina and Virginia in colors. At the bottom of the tablet is the insignia of the D. A. R.

The tablet is so placed that it is flooded with a beautiful light from a nearby window.

The following is the inscription which it bears:

Sacred to the Memory of WOODROW WILSON
1856-1924
World War President of the United States
1913-1921
Son of
Rev. Joseph R. Wilson, D.D.
Pastor of this Church
1874-1885
The Father of the League of Nations. A Scholar, Statesman and Christian, a Lover of Righteousness. Once a Citizen of Wilmington and Member of this Church. A Ruling Elder in the Presbyterian Church Erected by
The Stamp Defiance Chapter
The Daughters of the American Revolution
D. A. R.—1928

This tablet was formally presented and unveiled in the vestibule of the church on Woodrow Wilson's birthday, December 28. Miss Willena Beery, the Regent, presided and unveiled the tablet, and President H. W. Chase, of the University of North Carolina, made the presentation, and Dr. Gilmour accepted it for the church. The exercises were very impressive and well attended.

Chicago Seminary Plans New Buildings

Old McCormick With Changed Name Will Build $3,000,000 Plant

We clip the following announcement from the Northwestern Advocate, of Chicago:

A $3,000,000 building development by the Presbyterian Theological Seminary, Chicago, has just been made known by President John Timothy Stone. The project covers the substitution of an entirely new building equipment, leaving only the Virginia Library with its admirable Greek architecture.

In view of the fact that in recent years a number of theological seminaries have relocated in or adjacent to university campuses, it is significant that the Presbyterian Seminary (long known as McCormick Seminary) will remain on its present site, in the midst

NEW HEAD OF SALVATION ARMY

Commissioner Evangeline Booth, although prominently mentioned as a possible successor to her brother, General Bramwell Booth, received only 17 votes, against 43 for Commissioner Higgins.

The election ballots were cast in secret whereas the earlier vote removing General Booth from command was public. The Council made a special point of emphasizing that the former action was entirely due to General Booth's ill health.

The high council, having concluded the business for which it was called, was automatically dissolved.

Members of the Booth household at Hadley Wood refused to comment on the swift events of the day which have brought the affairs of the Salvation Army to a new climax. It is considered significant that none would admit defeat.

One report was circulated to the effect that Mrs. Bramwell Booth and her daughter, Catherine, who left the council meeting before the vote was counted, had not returned home. They are said to have hastened from snow-clad Sunbury to London seeking further legal aid.

General Higgins, who will retain his title if no further restraining orders are issued by the courts, has engaged in Salvation Army activities in the far east, the United States and the West Indies. He has paid two visits to China and Korea, and as assistant foreign secretary has had several years of training with the inner cabinet of the international headquarters in London.

THE TURKS HAVE A NEW ALPHABET

probably never be used again. But this fact makes way for the urgently needed revision of the Turkish Bible. Since new plates have to be made in any case, this affords an ideal opportunity for simplifying and improving the text. The Society's stock of printed Scriptures may still be circulated and will gradually be worked off.

On every hand our colporteurs are met by the demand or rebuke, "Bring us books in the new characters." As yet our agents have nothing to offer, although within three days of the passage of the new law, typesetters were at work on the Proverbs. The right-hand page of this edition will be in the old characters, while the opposite page will show the same passage in the new letters. This portion was in circulation by the end of 1928 and will be followed as rapidly as possible by very thoroughly revised and improved versions of the Psalms and Gospels.

If within the next few years the number of Turkish citizens able to read is increased from five million to nine, the Bible Society will have nearly doubled its possible constituency in this land. This striking increase in literacy is very possible in view of the simplicity which the new alphabet and phonetic spelling have introduced. This means a corresponding increase in the number of those who are able to study and appreciate the Word of God for themselves. From this point of view the year just closing is one of the most fortunate which the Bible Society has ever experienced in Turkey. It is a time to press on with thanksgiving and hope.—Bible Society Record.

as full restitution as possible" by turning over his assets without litigation or cost.

The statement called attention to the agreement on the verdict whereby Carnes must not apply for parole before serving the minimum sentence of five years, the other indictments being held in abeyance pending completion of sentence.

"Carnes is now well past 50," the statement said, "and five years is not an inconsiderable part of the expectancy which may be reasonably allotted to him."

In conclusion Dr. Christie said he felt the opportunity and obligation to show the spirit of Christ, "temper justice with mercy. * * * I, for one, shall not cease to pray that even inside those iron gates this prisoner may find the freedom that can transform a prison into a palace."

Clinton S. Carnes, erstwhile treasurer of the Home Mission Board of the Southern Baptist Convention, has been sent to the state prison farm at Milledgeville.

It was stated that the board made known that the services of its former treasurer would not be needed in straightening out the books.

TWO CHURCHES MAY BE MERGED IN GREENSBORO

a church remains under the provisions of the contract.

Leaders of Park Place in recent weeks have been perfecting plans for construction of a modern church at 823 North Elm Street on the property owned by the church and upon which the present house of worship is located. This project was expected to entail expenditure of $100,000 or more for the first unit, with the understanding that other units might later be added.

In the event of fruition of the merger idea it appears that Park Place, with its membership strength substantially augmented from the Church-by-the-Side-of-the-Road, would erect a modern church building on the lot which now serves as the location of the latter. This idea would presuppose the dissolution of the Church-by-the-Side-of-the-Road and inclusion of its membership in the Park Place fold, according to reports current in the city. It is said that the new Park Place thus would have more than 1,000 members.

Rev. J. H. Armbrust is pastor of Park Place, which has one of the most aggressive congregations in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. The Church-by-the-Side-of-the-Road also recognized as a progressive church, has as its pastor Rev. Dwight M. Chalmers, who, however, recently resigned in order to accept a call from the Presbyterian Church at Charlottesville, Va., seat of the University of Virginia.

The idea appears to find favor with some members in both congregations, although at this time it is impossible to forecast definitely the official attitude of the two churches.

When questioned regarding reports concerning possible sale of the Church-by-the-Side-of-the-Road property to Park Place and inclusion of members of the former in the Park Place congregation leaders of the two churches declined to discuss the situation.

CHICAGO SEMINARY PLANS NEW BUILDINGS

of a modest residence section on the north side of Chicago.

Fourteen new fireproof buildings, beside a central heating plant, will be erected. The general architectural effect will be English Gothic, an especially effective chapel with a hundred-foot tower being the key structure. It will have a seating capacity of 325, with twenty faculty stalls and a choir for thirty.

At the main entrance to the campus will be an arched design, with a covered bridge above connecting the general offices with the president's and dean's apartments. At the western edge of the athletic field is now under way the recreation building.

The largest structure is to be the classroom building, which will include eight classrooms for seventy men each; two lecture rooms for 125 each and an assembly hall to hold 400. Each classroom has two suites of offices attached so that two professors can use the same classroom in alternating recitation periods.

The main feature of the commons is a dining hall with a heavily timbered ceiling thirty feet high. The high-paneled wainscoting is to include in its carved details the escutcheons of the fifty-six Presbyterian colleges in the United States and of other colleges and universities.

Living quarters for students and faculty will be ample and arranged with fullest regard to comfort and convenience. Three dormitories will each house seventy to seventy-five students.

Members of the faculty will be provided with high-grade apartments of five to eight rooms, all of large size and arranged to meet the special conditions of their work. A unique feature will be the residential quarters provided for missionaries in this country on furlough, with their families. This building will consist of twenty-four apartments of four and five rooms each, embodying all modern conveniences.

Recognizing the changed conditions which require greater specialization in the training of ministers, the seminary will add new departments and enlarge its faculty as the general program is progressively made effective. Em-

DEVOTIONAL

MY LOAD—HIS GIFT

Ernest Bournell Allen

My load—His gift! How strange I did not see it so!

If I had known His hand had placed the burden here.

Then it had been to me no anxious cross and care,

But just another way for Him His grace to show!

My load—His gift! How glad I am He knows my frame!

What I can do and bear He weighs and watches well;

Some thorn in flesh, some brunt of fight, some danger fell—

These be the way designed through Him to praise His name!

phasis will be laid on training in parish administration, relations with finance and local financial management. Other departments to be created will give preparation for economic and social problems, religious education, church music, public speaking, missions and missions administration, while the present courses in the English Bible will be broadened and strengthened.

In making this announcement President Stone declared that there is no radical aspect to the program. "It is simply," he said, "a logical development in our work. Our central purposes are unchanged. We are under obligation to prepare men to deal with humanity and environment as they exist, so that the message of Christianity shall be heard, understood, accepted, and applied. We are not seeking great numbers, but to prepare the best men for all sorts of fields—for the little rural church, the missionary field, specialized religious professions, and the churches small or large that fall to the problem of the cities."

Established in 1829, the seminary will next October celebrate its centennial. It has proven to be the second largest Presbyterian theological seminary in the country, with alumni throughout the country and in all the foreign lands in which work is conducted by the Presbyterian Church.

DR. GLASGOW WILL SPEAK AT P. C. SERVICES

Columbia university.

Another loss will be sustained in that Prof. T. H. Grafton, for the last two years assistant professor of Bible and mathematics, has decided to go to Biblical Seminary in New York to pursue postgraduate work. His place will also have to be filled next year.

This will result in a marked change of personnel of the faculty, probably the greatest of recent years. While in one sense these changes will be a loss to the college, yet President McSweeney expects to find men who can carry on with the same efficiency as those who have left.

Sigma Upsilon, the honorary literary fraternity of the college, held its bimonthly meeting February 7. R. T. Gillespie offered a paper on "The Reading Public"; B. R. Young gave a paper on the life of Amy Lowell; C. W. Grafton read two original sketches.

The Y. M. C. A. is now conducting a series of open forum meetings under the leadership of Dr. Brimm, professor of Bible and religion. The topic under discussion for last week was "How May We Increase Our Faith in the Bible" and the one announced for next week is "What Should Be a Boy's Relation to His Girl Friend?" The latter one especially is expected to arouse much interest.

PROGRESS IN BIBLE DISTRIBUTION

The year 1928 was one of marked progress in the work of the New York Bible Society. Nearly a million copies of the Scriptures in seventy-one languages were circulated by the Society more than in any one year of its history.

A considerable part of this distribution was free. We were able to make this record achievement because of a larger income and we are grateful to the many friends who have helped us.

In view of our past accomplishment and our present facilities for service in our Bible House we must continue to go forward and meet the larger opportunities for Bible distribution in the year upon which we have entered. There is a famine in our city and land "not a famine of bread nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the word of the Lord."

There are tens of thousands of people of many nationalities right about us who have never seen a Bible. They have come to us in the providence of God from many lands. For their sake and for the sake of our country and its future welfare we must give them the Bible. There are multitudes of sea men who know not the Bible and its message of Divine love, there are tens of thousands of sick on hospital beds, thousands in prison cells, and those blind whose eyes shall never see the light of day—to all of these we must give the Book that carries light and life and peace.

No other organization has a greater responsibility for the moral welfare and political safety of America than the New York Bible Society, located as it is in this Metropolitan and world center. With the help of God and the cooperation of our friends we will go forward. May we count on you?

"FROM GREENLAND'S ICY MOUNTAINS"

Rev. John Watson, D.D.

In 1733 Moravian missionaries went to Greenland to reach the gospel to Jesus Christ, and although they worked with much devotion, up to the year 1738 they had made no converts. One reason, as they believed afterward was this, that they thought it necessary before declaring Jesus Christ to instruct the people in the doctrines of natural religion.

One day a man, called Kajarnak, the most evil character, entered a missionary's hut, and by accident, as were, heard him read the story of Jesus' sufferings. How far removed one would say, was the mystery of the Divine Sacrifice from the ideas of the Greenlander, infamous for his cruelty. But just because he was so great a sinner, and this was so great a salvation, there was a pre-established harmony between Christ and Kajarnak.

"How was that?" he asked. "Tell me that again, for I too wish to be saved." He too! Quite, Kajarnak; thy privilege, for thy salvation is in the nature of things, and for Kajarnak Christ had died. "These words the missionary said, "penetrated through my very marrow and bone. Less than a year afterwards, Kajarnak, his wife, and two little children were baptized, and became the first fruits of Greenland unto Christ. As was the first of the Greenlanders to be baptized in Christ, he was the first also to be glorified, for two years after his baptism he died in great peace, comforting his wife and his family. So Christ satisfied a savage Greenlander.—Southern Methodist.

WHO IS STILL THE CREATOR OF MAN

For sometime the Iconoclasts have held the field. They have shattered our idols and taken from us our most cherished beliefs.

The first lesson we learned was that God made man out of nothing by the word of His power, and that was very good. Then we were taught that the earth was inspired and therefore we believed what the Bible said, even if our weak understanding could not grasp it.

During these recent years, however, we have learned these lessons contradicted. Our idols of gold have turned to brass, and our Almighty God, instead of being of infinite power, Who created all things by the Word of His power, became a blind man, working up from mud to man. For some time this new view has a fascination for our otherwise sensible men, so that they have been ready to glory in their shame. This belief in the mud origin of man has for some time been popular, not only among the high-brow scientists, but even some of our own ministers embraced it.

At last one scientist has risen up to question the dogmatic conclusions of science.

Austin H. Clark of the National Museum, who is known as a biologist, propounded a new theory of the appearance of man upon this earth. In the course of his work Dr. Clark will be discredited and held up as one who knows nothing.

According to "Who's Who:"

Dr. Clark is a graduate of Harvard, organizer of the Venezuelan Zoological Research Expedition in 1903; acting chief of the Scientific Staff United States Fisheries 1906; member Staff Smithsonian Institution since 1908; member Royal Geographical Society, and author of about a dozen scientific books on Biology and Geology, as well as over three hundred published scientific articles.

He takes from the Southern Methodist the following summary of his theory:

It differs on vital points with the Darwinian theory of the descent of man from a lower animal life and explains evolution as a series of changes from one major form of life to another rather than to a process of gradual development. As far as concerns the major groups of animals the creationists seem to have the better argument." Dr. Clark said, in announcing his theory. "There is not the slightest evidence that any one of the major groups arose from any other."

Each is a special animal—complex, related more or less closely to all the rest, and appearing, therefore, as a special and distinct creation." Dr. Clark's conception is that man appeared on earth substantially as he is today.

When the ancient fragmentary bones which have been dug up by anthropologists, Dr. Clark sees evidence of a "missing link" between man and the monkey. They are the bones either of men or of monkeys, he says.

When the animal and plant groups, Dr. Clark's theory allows for the working of the Darwinian theory of changes brought about by natural and artificial selection, but remains silent on the possibility of inheritance of acquired characteristics. His new theory also modifies the mutation theory, which accounts for the origin of new species and families as the result of accidental abnormalities.

Dr. Clark holds there are no abnormalities, but that all life is obeying a constant urge to produce certain forms and that when these forms happen to be born into a favorable environment they survive as new types of animals or plants. The whole picture, he says, was present from the beginning.

The key to the theory lies in Dr. Clark's conception of animal complexes, present throughout creation. The same tendencies to the same variations are present in butterflies and men, such as the tendency toward a big brain. But, he affirms, there will never be a superintelligent butterfly because the physical structure of a butterfly will not permit it.

Dr. Clark takes the time element entirely out of evolution and restores the concept of an original plan in nature which has been and is still being expressed in life."

We, who hold to the antiquated theory of a Creator of all things may rest secure in our belief that "His Kingdom ruleth over all."

HAS IT COME TO THIS?

The writer received the other day, from a concern in Pennsylvania, a circular letter.

Naturally it is somewhat humiliating to have some things sent to a man. The name of a bootlegger, for instance, suggests that some one thought that you would patronize the scoundrel, and so to receive this was quite a shock to my self esteem. But for the sake of pointing a moral I am going to copy a part of the circular.

Dear Sir and Brother:

Knowing intimately the needs of the busy pastor in these days of extensive administrative service and realizing, too, that magazines and other sermon materials, because of their inadequacy and wide range, cannot be adapted to one's needs, we offer this exclusive service, limited to only one minister in each county.

1. These are complete and comprehensive OUTLINES—not sermons—supplying abundant food for a practical sermon, yet providing ample opportunity for elaboration and for the expression of the minister's own thoughts and ideas.

2. Each outline is in suggestive and illustrative material and is carefully thought out to stimulate and inspire a practical application to every day life of the fundamental teachings of Jesus Christ.

3. This service is exclusive because it is sold to only one minister in each County.

4. It covers the 53 Sundays (also Good Friday) from Sept. 1, 1929, to August. 31, 1930, inclusive. Each outline consists of from 600 to 800 words, covering two pages, sizes 5 1-2 by 8 1-2, printed with 10 point type on white bond paper.

5. The suggested scripture reading is given for each outline.

6. These outlines are so constructed and arranged by date that they can be used, if so desired, at the discretion of the minister, for the special occasions of the church year.

7. We guarantee that this service will meet your requirements. If for any reason you are not satisfied, just return the outlines to us and we will refund your money cheerfully. That's a fair enough offer, isn't it?

The total cost for this entire service is only $10.00, payable as follows: $2.00 with the signing and mailing of the attached acceptance, and $2.00 June 1st, $2.00 August 1st, $2.00 October 1st and $2.00 December 1st. If you desire to pay in full for this service at once, a 25 per cent. discount will be allowed, making the total cost in such cases only $7.50. We are sure you will agree with us that we have kept the price extremely moderate, considering the positively exclusive nature of this unique service.

If you want to make sure that this exclusive service in your County will be reserved for you, please fill out the attached acceptance and mail it to us at once. These Outlines will be off the press about April 1st.

The reading of the circular set me to thinking. Is it possible that there is a minister anywhere, so lost to self-respect and so dishonest and contemptible as to buy and use this stuff.

Dr. Holmes Ralston told me once of a young preacher of another denomination who said to him "Were you not proud when you were able for the first time to preach a sermon that you wrote yourself." But this was way back in a lumber camp, and the young man was talking to him who was very poorly educated. Have any decent preachers become so busy "in these days of extensive administrative service" as to lose their integrity and foist off as their own, this pitiful stuff prepared by some wretched penny-a-liner?

I would think, that it was a new venture and that it would fail but that the circular says: "Third Annual Exclusive Outline Service." Somebody must be buying the stuff. But I would be humiliated to the dust if I thought that a single minister of our church was guilty of such dishonesty and untruthfulness.

A DAY OF PRAYER FOR THEOLOGICAL SEMINARIES

Dr. Sweets has suggested that our churches in observing the day of Prayer for Schools and Colleges, make special mention of the Theological Seminaries.

Dr. Lacy has addressed a personal letter to the pastors in which he reminded them of their own experiences as students. Perhaps it would be wise to print his letter; but, on the other hand, we are tempted to give our own endorsement of the points he made, because each point stands out clearly in the memory of our Seminary days.

In common with others we found that in the Seminary, instead of being helped and built up by a religious atmosphere we were constantly fighting a temptation to deal with sacred things as if they were secular.

There was no difficulty in keeping up our devotion to service, but there was something deadening, in its effect, on the devotional life.

One's worship was too public—and you realized the wisdom of our Lord's directions as to prayer, "When thou prayest, enter into thy closet." There you and the Lord will be alone, and your attention will not be divided.

What is needed, according to Dr. Lacy is godly ministers.

The leader to God must be one who knows God, and who by his life will lead men to God. In the spiritual warfare, as in actual warfare, the result of the battle depends largely upon the man behind the gun.

Unless his standard of life be high, his people will not rise high in spiritual life.

It is therefore of the greatest importance, if our theological Seminaries supply our pulpits, that they send out men who are not in the "priest's office for a piece of bread,—but to serve God and bring souls into touch with Him. Let us therefore pray that these men in training, be men of consecration—fully equipped intellectually and also spiritually, who can say from the heart, "Woe is me if I preach not the Gospel."

As we look back over our fifty years in the ministry and recall our Seminary contemporaries, we wonder why the brilliant men sometimes fell short of our expectations.

They were mentally head and shoulders above their fellows, and great things were predicted for them, yet they have never done anything in the way of service, at all equal to what they could have done.

They lacked "the single eye," that spirit of devotion to their Lord that makes a man give all his heart to his work.

The Church must pray that they may be filled with the spirit of Paul when he said, "This one thing I do." Pray that they may dedicate themselves and the brilliant gifts with which they have been endowed to the service of Him whose they are and whom they ought to serve.

Again, we recall the dullards of the class, and we remember with shame, how we pitied their natural dullness, their inability to see or make clear cut distinctions—yet these men have surpassed us all in soul-winning, being endowed with power from on high.

They have been the successful men of the class.

If the Church will pray for the classes in our Seminaries that the same wonderful power be bestowed upon them, so that they in turn may transmit this power to their people, then the Church of God will look "forth as the morning, fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners."

CONTRIBUTED

IN THE PRESENCE OF THE KING

T. J. Knight

John the Baptist said: "Repent for the Kingdom of Heaven is at Hand."

Jesus spoke of the "Kingdom being at hand" and "within you." Also he acknowledged to Pilate that He was a King. There are other expressions which lead us to conclude that he intended us to get the idea that his Kingdom was started when he was here on the earth in bodily form. But just before his ascension, he spoke in no uncertain terms when He said: "All power is given unto me in heaven and earth." So if we have surrendered to Him, He is our King. The Kingdom of Heaven is now functioning here on the earth, as a real, living, active force.

We are apt to think of "the Kingdom of Heaven" as a theory, and of King Jesus as a mere influence; a power in an abstract form, as money and government are powers. Still we know that the Kingdom is made up of real, living people, and that Jesus is a real living person, in the same sense that Washington and Napoleon were persons. That being the case, Jesus is present as a conscious, living individual, not only at our meetings of worship and in our hours of devotion; but also in our business and work and pleasure.

Jesus prefaced many of the parables by the expression: "The Kingdom of Heaven is like." So that we may safely assume that there are experiences in the world at the present time, in connection with the Kingdom, which are counterparts of those pictured in the parables. And we may be sure that the sower is out sowing the seed. The Father is watching for his prodigal son. The shepherd is hunting for the stray sheep. The servants are using the talents or hiding them in the earth. The other servants are occupying the pounds or laying them away in a napkin. The virgins are waiting for the bridegroom. Some of them are keeping up the connection by the Spirit and the Word and are ready for him. The others are left out in the darkness. The laborers are at work in the field, all are faithful. And all receive the same wage; though they work different lengths of time. The great supper is being prepared and the servants are out bringing in the guests. Many are making light of the feast and slighting the Master by giving excuses for not going; but some are joyfully responding to the call and crowding the great hall to celebrate the marriage supper of the Lamb.

Jesus Is Working For the World

In all this activity Jesus is ever present and deeply concerned.

He not only said: "Lo I am with you even unto the end," but His Spirit directed Paul and Silas to go and preach the gospel in Europe. Then He said to John, "Behold I stand at the door and knock, if any man will open the door I will come to him and sup with him and he with me." Rev. 3:20. He is sowing the seed. He is watching for the prodigal. He is hunting for the lost sheep. He gives out the talents and the pounds and engages the laborers to work in the vineyard. It is for Him the virgins wait, and he has prepared the great supper.

He is present in a very real sense. His eye is upon the multitude. In tender compassion He sees them scattered abroad as sheep having no shepherd. The enemy is leading them astray. He has conquered that enemy. At terrible cost He has freed mankind from the bondage of Satan. He has obtained a glorious Kingdom and offers to share it with His people. Those who will accept His tender rule and throw off the dominion of Satan can have a part in the benefits of the victory.

In tender love and at great cost He is preparing a feast to commemorate the victory that releases mankind from the terrible bondage of sin. At the same time He is preparing a permanent abode for them in his Father's dwelling place. All this time He is present in the world, in the person of the Spirit, watching our every movement, comprehending all our trials, pleasures and temptations.

How We Treat Him

If we could see Him with our natural eyes and hear His voice, we would feel and act very different from the way we do. Yet there is no doubt of His living, conscious presence and knowledge of how we treat His Word, His Spirit and His messengers. When we neglect a duty or slight a command He knows it and feels the hurt, just as a father, brother or a neighbor would feel it. He is present with us constantly as the sunshine in the day and darkness at night are present.

We are frightened at His presence if we are not treating Him right; but how glorious to be invited to His banquet. To be right in the presence of the King of kings. To sit by His side as a honored guest. Always "to be with Him where He is." And yet it is a fact that "God Himself shall dwell with them and be their God."

All this depends on the response we make to His call. The Spirit, the Word and the servants are inviting. If we reject them we reject Him.

In Conclusion

Anxiety pervades us because the King's eye is upon us. Or joy fills our being, because the Great King is our friend.

"SEEING THE CHURCH AFTER SEVEN YEARS"

I am just a "poor" missionary at home after seven years of work in a foreign field. My reading of American newspapers had given me certain impressions of the conditions in the homeland. It seemed that nearly everybody was drinking boot-leg whisky and the churches were about to close their doors for good. Now what do I see on my return?

I have traveled for six months from coast to coast, I have been in large cities and in small towns. While in the Southwest, near the Mexican border, I made it a point to keep my eyes wide open. One night while in a border town there was a large dance in the hotel where I was staying and I peeped in for I was looking for evidence. I was in San Antonio on Halloween night when the streets were crowded with masked people. I have seen just one person drink—a woman on the train in Colorado, and two drunks in Memphis. The men in the smoking cars have talked a lot about boot-leg and, no doubt, there is some about, but not where most people can see it or get it. Prohibition is prohibiting to a larger degree than most people think that it is.

What do I find as to the Church? I have found that the attendance is good. While in Texas, during week nights, even, the churches were crowded for missionary addresses. Everywhere I find more men in the churches. There are wonderful men's Bible classes doing a splendid work.

The women of the Church are doing great things, but seem to be losing their freedom of action because of over standardization and too much organization. Standardization does not allow much room for the work of the Holy Spirit.

I could write a book on the faithful ministers in our Church. Our home missionaries are due much of the credit for the healthy condition of the Church. Still, many of the workers are restless and change about as often as do the Methodists. There are able ministers seeking a change but cannot find suitable locations. There are some very good men who have been in their pastorates too long and need a change for their own good and for the good of the whole Church. It takes a lot of courage for an aged minister to step out of a large church into a smaller one so as to make his life count for longer service in the Kingdom. Some of the larger churches are killing their ministers by over-work. My observation leads me to think that our Church needs some agency, with authority, to safe-guard the interests of the ministry, so as to prevent injustice being done and provide locations for men who need change. It is too easy now to throw a minister out of his work and very difficult for a good man to get a new charge. Most of the ministers of our Church are faithful to the Word. Of course, I do not shut my eyes to the fact that there are a few modernists about but they do not seem to count for very much.

It has given me so much happiness to see and learn of the real conditions of our Church and country. That is why I am sharing the joy with you. I think that we all can rejoice in the progress of good and truth in America.

THOSE PAMPERED MISSIONARIES

For a long time I imagined that the once frequent critic of our missionaries as pampered and petted and spoiled was dead. But lately I have seen him stalking around again. He was saying in effect, "Your constant appeal for money for missionaries doesn't reach me. They are more comfortably located, have more servants and generally better time, than we do at home." Of course argument with such an animal is useless, but I want to offer to such, a good antidote to their poison.

I have just read, and much of it over and over, a brochure called "Rivershade," by Dr. Lacy L. Little, China. It is a historical sketch of the Kangyin station of our Mid-China mission. I commend it to all, especially to any who may be tottering under the impression that missionaries are unduly pampered.

When the work was attempted, a small house outside the city was rented but "such strong opposition was manifested by the local population that the house had to be given up." However, the project was not abandoned. A later place was secured. The building was of "rooms without partitions or floors." In this two-story building would make their homes and headquarters! Later the missionaries were pampered into a partition and a fire in one room. Opposition was such that they were told that in their renting of the house, the windows and doors were not included and demand was made for more money. This was finally settled, however, by the payment of another year's rent in advance. Because the agent of the property was thus foiled, he undertook to run foreigners out, and did, by secretly burying a body of child on the lot, and then accusing the foreign devils of having children's bodies buried there. Innocently siring to be cleared of such charge, they invited a search. The result, "the two missionaries barely escaped with their lives, their personal effects being entirely destroyed or appropriated." My, how those missionaries were pampered! The work was reopened a year or so later, and has been marvelously blessed to the saving of many precious souls.

When war clouds of 1925 settled down in the city prominent persons in the city advised the sending of a man-of-war to remove the missionaries—but these pampered people said, "No, we prefer to stand by our Christian friends in their peril." They stayed and when the war was captured, these missionaries were implored to act as peace makers between the warring hosts. They undertook and successfully accomplished this task, bringing opposing commanders face to face in a missionary house, after repeated exposures going and coming between the fighting lines. Many bullets penetrated the houses and fell thick on every side, and this continued almost uninterruptedly for five days and nights!

My! How those missionaries are pampered! What would the aforesaid critic would have done? He would doubtless be running yet—if his breath lasted.

These are the folks for whom we, as a church, are responsible, and to whose support we have been contributing at the pitiful rate of $3.87 per capita, for the year. A little more than one cent a day!

This is the sort of heroism that is met by carping criticism, for both the workers and for the men who are giving their time and hearts to the supervision of the work. No more earnest, faithful, voted, or wise ones can be found than the members of our Executive Committee of Foreign Missions! I know what I am talking about. For the sake of 36,000,000 perishing souls, to whom no one else is ministering, for His sake who "gave His life a ransom for many," let's trust our workers and managers, and place in their hands abundant means for this heaven-commissioned work, out of the plethora of gifts of a never failing providence.

CHURCH NEWS

GREENBRIER COLLEGE FOR WOMEN BEFORE SYNOD

The Synod of West Virginia met in the First Presbyterian Church, Charleston, West Virginia, January 15, called on account of the serious financial situation in connection with the affairs of Greenbrier College for Women. There were 28 ministers and 17 laymen representing various churches in the Synod. There were also a number of invited elders and deacons and representatives of the Executive Committee of the Synodical who were given the privileges of the Synod. It was found that the debt on Greenbrier College totalled $214,321.96. The current running expenses of the school, excepting the interest on the bonds and some insurance, are being met out of current income.

Before entering upon the discussion of ways and means of meeting this situation, Synod engaged in a season of prayer. A resolution was offered recommending the sale of the institution. After considerable discussion this was tabled. Mr. John L. Dickerson then proposed that Synod ask the churches of the Synod to raise a special fund equal to one dollar per member a year for this debt until it is paid. This was adopted and ordered sent down to the churches. The debt is the debt of Synod and if the school is liquidated Synod would still have the debt. The special committee appointed at the last meeting of Synod continued and instructed to push the matter of Greenbrier College. A special Greenbrier College is to be set for some Sunday. Four thousand and five hundred dollars was raised in this meeting to pay the interest due on the bonds and the problem of the immediate financial crisis left in the hands of the committee. The school will be maintained under the present management.

SOUTH CAROLINA YOUNG PEOPLE'S CONFERENCES

by R. A. Lapsley, Jr., Synodical Chairman

The Synod of South Carolina will put on this summer two conferences for young people. Both of these will be held at the Presbyterian College of South Carolina at Clinton. The spacious buildings, lovely campus, Mrs. Hunter's wonderful table, the splendid Springs Gymnasium, all combine to make an ideal place for such a gathering. In addition to the Young People's Conference, which is ending this summer on its 8th year, there will be a conference for Intermediates.

The Intermediate Conference

The Intermediate Conference will begin on Wednesday, June 12th, and run through Tuesday, June 18th. It will be in charge of Col. and Mrs. Joseph H. Cudlipp. Col. Cudlipp is the Director of Young People's Division of the Maryland-Delaware Council of Religious Education. Col. and Mrs. Cudlipp are experts in work with young people. Each year since its beginning, they have directed the Intermediate Conference of the Synod of Virginia at Massanetta Springs. South Carolina is most fortunate in having secured Col. and Mrs. Cudlipp for this first conference of the intermediate age.

The ages will be from 12-15 years. The registration fee will be $1.50, and the board for the six days $8.50, making a total cost of $10.00 for the conference.

Col. and Mrs. Cudlipp will be assisted by Rev. Marshall Denby, of Newberry, Song Leader; Rev. and Mrs. T. C. Bryan, of Whitmire; Rev. S. J. L. Crouch, of Clemson College; and Mrs. George W. Sheffer, Field Worker for Religious Education for this Synod. There will be a full corps of councillors.

The Young People's Conference

The Young People's Conference, will begin the evening of the day that the Intermediate Conference closes, which is June 18th. It will last through Tuesday, June 25th, seven full days. The registration fee will be $3.00 and board $10.00 for the week.

Among the outstanding teachers and leaders will be Dr. B. R. Lacy, Jr., President of Union Theological Seminary; Rev. John McSween, President of Presbyterian College of South Carolina; Mrs. George W. Sheffer, Synodical Field Worker for Religious Education; Mrs. H. L. Cockerham, Blackey, Ky.; Dr. Donald Richardson, of Richmond, Va.; and Rev. Homer Hammontree, of Chicago, Ill. Assisting these there will be also a large group of our own South Carolina ministers and trained young people's workers.

The Registrar and Treasurer of both conferences is Mr. J. H. Hunter, of Clinton, S. C. Registrations for both conferences will be received in order until 300 are registered for each. This will be our absolute limit this year. Last year twenty-five registrations were returned and scores of others were disappointed to find out at the last that they could not get in. Young people are urged to register early.

NORTH CAROLINA

Centre — On Sunday, February 10, we ordained and installed two additional elders and three additional deacons in this church. The elders were R. L. Morrison and J. R. Pope and the deacons Dr. J. Y. Templeton, T. B. Williams, and R. E. Houston. The work is very encouraging, especially that of the Woman's Auxiliary and the Christian Endeavor Societies. We are having our Mission study class every Sunday night until we finish the book and are finding the study very helpful. Our young people have again taken the district banner and recently entertained the district officers at a banquet. It is indeed a blessing to have such loyal support in all branches of the church work.

Mebane—The banner offered by Orange Presbytery to the Sunday School that makes the largest contribution on Rally Day for Sunday School Extension was won again this year by our Sunday School, which makes eleven straight years we have kept the banner in our church.

How good it is to know that you are not forgotten by those whom you love and can't forget. At Christmas time the men of the church presented the pastor with a handsome purse, while the ladies of the church came in with their share of love and remembrance by presenting to the pastor's wife many beautiful and very useful gifts. These are the things which draw pastor and people closer together and bring happiness and sunshine into the life of a minister and his family.

During the month of January, while the pastor of one of the neighboring churches was forced to spend several weeks in the hospital, the men from this church went out and conducted the entire 11 o'clock religious services, thus showing what they can do, using their God given talents and helping their fellow man.

During the latter part of January the ladies of our church observed the week of prayer, using as their text book, "The Desire of All Nations," by Dr. Egbert Smith. At the close of the week on Sunday evening the Business Women's Circle gave a very beautiful and impressive pageant. During this week of prayer the ladies alone raised $259.35 for foreign missions.

Though the financial depression in our church has been great, as elsewhere, yet the contributions both for benevolences and current expenses have been remarkably good, and we feel that our church will contribute as much this year if not more than last.

We are now praying, planning and looking forward to the Every Member Canvass in March.

Daniel B. Green, Pastor.

First Church, Charlotte—The Week of Prayer and Self Denial for Foreign Missions closed Sunday, February 3rd, in the First Presbyterian Church, Charlotte, by a sermon by the pastor. The offering amounted to $2,500, and will probably reach between three and four thousand dollars as other contributions come in.

Lowest in 10 Years!

Regular receipts from Apr. 1 to Feb. 1 for the following church years:

Feb. 1, 1920	- -	$644,244
Feb. 1, 1921	- -	676,790
Feb. 1, 1922	- -	679,321
Feb. 1, 1923	- -	630,792
Feb. 1, 1924	- -	690,197
Feb. 1, 1925	- -	644,483
Feb. 1, 1926	- -	677,877
Feb. 1, 1927	- -	693,885
Feb. 1, 1928	- -	654,587
Feb. 1, 1929	-	592,666

The figure for this February 1, FAR THE LOWEST IN TEN YEARS, is our Saviour's urgent call to all lovers of that cause which lies nearest His heart to give themselves to Prayer and effort.

THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF FOREIGN MISSIONS
BOX 330, NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE

Laurel Hill—On Thursday afternoon, January 21st, the Flora Macdonald College Alumnae of the Laurel Hill Section were entertained at the home of Miss Elizabeth Flythe, who proved a most charming hostess to her Flora Macdonald friends. The "College Party" as it was called was for the purpose of bringing before the alumnae the importance of the endowment campaign now in progress at Flora Macdonald College.

Rev. Herman A. Jones, Secretary of the Financial Standardization Movement was present and spoke concerning the campaign, emphasizing the importance of the Alumnae Association and its relation to the endowment.

Rev. John R. Clarke, Jr., who is also working on the campaign, then took charge of the program and presented Miss Mary Janet McNeill, Alumnae Campaign Chairman, who gave a splendid and practical talk on how the girls could help their Alma Mater at this time through the campaign.

One of the greatest delights was to hear from Dr. C. G. Vardell, President Flora Macdonald College. He strikingly showed how the future of Flora Macdonald College depended upon the quality of its fruitage and the character of the girls who were her alumnae.

Musical selections were given by Miss Louise Mandeville and Mrs. Bartram Robeson, teachers in the School of Music, Flora Macdonald College and two of the students, Misses Marian Burgess and Lucille Morton.

Delicious refreshments were served.

Presbyterian Orphans' Home, Barium Springs—We are glad to say at this writing, February 11, that we have good reports coming from Davis' Hospital, of Statesville, relative to Rev. W. C. Brown's condition. So encouraging are these reports that we hope he will soon be able to return to his home here. In the meantime our good friends at Davidson and elsewhere are kind enough to furnish supplies for our pulpit. On last Sabbath we had Prof. Kenneth J. Foreman, of Davidson, to preach for us. Prof. Foreman's message was based on the story of Abimelech's scheme to make himself king, using as the basis of the text Judges 9:11. It was pointed out that every one has a special and peculiar work and no one else can perform that work. It was just the message for our young people. Prof. Foreman is no stranger at Barium. We are always glad to have him. He always leaves us better than he found us and we always look forward to his next visit with much pleasure.

Albemarle, First—During January we had our annual School of Foreign Missions, closing on February 3rd, with a sermon on Foreign Missions by the pastor, Rev. C. G. Long. There were classes for the Juniors, Intermediate-Seniors, and the Adults. It was one of the best schools we have had in the past four years. For the month of February we are continuing the Intermediate-Senior and Adult classes and meeting on Wednesday evenings to study Stewardship. This church has recently installed the Acousticon, and several of the members are now enjoying the entire service, who for years have been missing part of it because of impaired hearing.

Peace Institute, Raleigh, N. C.—Dr. Samuel McPheeters Glasgow, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Knoxville, Tennessee, conducted a series of evangelistic services at Peace Institute from February 11 through February 16 under the auspices of the Peace Students Christian Association with the co-operation of the administration. Two services were held each day in the James Dinwiddie Chapel and were attended by the entire student body and visitors from the city.

The theme running through the series of eight sermons was "The Radiant Christ," a theme beautifully illustrated in discussions of well chosen subjects. An atmosphere of hopefulness and encouragement pervaded each message, but especially inspiring was the talk on God's Fathomless Love. The beautiful interpretation of the Parable of the Good Samaritan also made a strong appeal to those who heard it. In the latter sermon, which was perhaps the best of the series, the speaker found men divided into three classes. The first of these, the robber, says: "What's yours is mine; I'll take it." This policy, practiced by men and nations, the minister termed brutal. The second class, represented by the Levite priest, who passed by on the other side, says in effect, "What's mine is my own; I'll keep it." This attitude Dr. Glasgow described as human but selfish. But the third man, the speaker pointed out, believes that "What's mine is God's; I'll share it." The Good Samaritan's, he said, is the Christ-like way. Bringing the three threads of the story together, the minister drew in a subtle but powerful way the conclusion that true worship of God is never separate from true service to man. The application of the truth, he declared, originated with God when He made manifest his love through the gift of Jesus.

In addition to the two services each day, Dr. Glasgow held personal conferences in the afternoon and evening during his stay here. His genial, social disposition and complete understanding of young people enabled him to come in close touch with the students in a fine spiritual and social relation. In every way he upheld the standard established in former meetings by such outstanding men as Rev. R. A. Lapsley, Jr., of Columbia, S. C., Rev. John McSween, President of Presbyterian College, Dr. D. Clay Lilly, pastor of Reynolds Presbyterian Church, and Rev. Wade Smith, of Greensboro.

Dr. Glasgow himself is one of the outstanding leaders in the Southern Presbyterian Church and is recognized by educators generally for his eminent success in young people's work. He is the author of Border Trails and The General Epistles, the co-author of Needed Counsel for New Christians, and a weekly contributor to the Christian Observer. He is also a writer of gospel hymns, and was a member of the "Committee of Eight" that revised the Presbyterian Hymnal in 1927.

The fact that his mother, Grace Woodson McPheeters, was a Peace alumna, and his wife, formerly Mary McIlwaine, is a Peace alumna added interest to the coming of Dr. Glasgow to the college to conduct these services.

Concord—Dr. Ben R. Lacy of Union Theological Seminary delighted two large congregations last Sunday, February 10.

He preached at the morning hour at the First Church. At 7:30 he spoke to the congregation of McKinnon Church, preaching from the shortest Greek verse in the New Testament, I Thes. 5:16. The mother of a high school boy was heard to say after the sermon, "I hope he is still there when my boy goes to Union."

McKinnon Sunday School has just awarded pins for perfect attendance for year, 1928. We awarded 35 this year. Four of these were from one family. It made the third consecutive year of perfect attendance for these four. R. S. Arrowood.

SOUTH CAROLINA

First Church, Columbia—Beginning on Sunday, January 6th, the First Presbyterian Church of Columbia changed the hour of its evening service from 8:00 to 5:30 in the afternoon. This change was brought about by changing conditions in our modern life. It was not due to a falling off in attendance at the evening hour, for the evening congregations had been unusually good all through the fall months. But the session felt that the automobile and the radio had brought about changes in our manner of life and that it would be easier for those who wish a second church service to attend at the vesper hour.

The response on the part of the congregation has been fine. The congregations are even larger than customary at the second service. Especially pleasing has been the fact that numbers of children are attending. Fathers and mothers are bringing their children with them. The service itself is being made as attractive as possible. The musical program begins at 5:10. Professor Fred H. Parker, the gifted organist of the church, gives a twenty minute organ recital. Familiar hymns are sung, and a short sermon preached. The change was made for two months as an experiment, but indications are that it will be continued during the winter months, and possibly longer.

Clover—A great meeting has just come to an end at this church. Beginning on the first Sunday in January, our church began a season of personal consecration and evangelism. Every Sunday sermon, morning and evening, and each mid-week prayer-meeting service stressed these points. The season closed with a series of special sermons by the pastor, Rev. W. S. Patterson, who preached each night from February 3 to February 10. Two sermons, morning and evening, were preached on Sundays, with no service on the Saturday evening before the second Sunday. Professor R. G. Prince, of the Clover High School faculty, was director of the song service for the meeting, and during the latter part of the week Mr. W. Clay Dendy, of the Presbyterian College of South Carolina, came with his marimbaphone and assisted with the musical part of the services. Pastors of the other local churches, together with their members, gave loyal support to the meeting. Gatherings were larger each night, until at the last chairs in the aisles and all available space in main floor and balcony were crowded. As a result of the meeting 165 reconsecration cards were signed and 24 new members added to the church on profession of faith. Five additional members were also taken in by letter.

It was a meeting which has accomplished great and lasting good in this community and Christian people of all denominations feel a "joy unseizable and full of glory" to know that so many of the lost have been found again and saved.

Stanhope Love.

VIRGINIA

Lynchburg—Westminster Church has just completed a very successful School of Missions. Classes were held for five successive nights, commencing Wednesday, February 6, and running through Sunday night, the 10th. There were four classes in all, the three oldest studying Dr. Smith's "The Desire of All Nations," while the Junior young people followed an African study book, called "Black Treasure." One hundred and sixty people were enrolled in the school and the attendance was excellent throughout. After the class period the assembly was held when a missionary address was given. The pastor, the Rev. Robert Whitfield Miles, spoke the first night, followed on successive evenings by Dr. J. McL. Rogers, of our Korean Mission, the Rev. Z. E. Lewis, formerly of Mexican Mission, Dr. O. J. Grainger who was with the Christian Church in India for many years and the closing address by the Rev. Armistead McMurray, of the Belgian Congo. The teachers were as follows: Junior young people by Miss Elizabeth Sydnor, Pastor's assistant. Older young people by Miss Mary Spotswood Payne, one of our high school teachers. Ladies class by Dr. R. C. Somerville, of Lynchburg College faculty. Men's class by Dr. Gillie LaRue, of Randolph Macon Womans College.

With the exception of Miss LaRue all the teachers were from Westminster. One attractive feature of the school was the splendid display of posters used in publicity campaign preceding the opening.

PUBLICITY APPRECIATED

The Executive Committee of Foreign Missions its meeting on February 12 and 13 took formal action instructing the Executive Secretary to express to the church papers, in the name of the Executive Committee, their appreciation of the service rendered the Foreign Mission month of January. This act was most cordial and unanimous, and it gives sincere pleasure herewith to transmit it.

Cordially yours,

E. W. Smith.

THE PHONOGRAPH GETS THE AFRICANS

Dr. Robert D. Bedinger, of Mutoto, Africa, gives his first experience of the use of a phonograph on evangelistic itineraries:

"It was the first time I have itinerated with phonograph. It draws the crowd like a magnet. I shall never forget my enjoyment in watching the people of changing expressions which chased each other across the faces of the natives as they listened to, first instrumental music, then voices, then laughter, and finally three hymns in their own language. Invariably they joined in with 'Praise God from Whom All Blessings Flow,' 'At the Cross,' and 'I was a Wanderer Sheep,' sung in Baluba by Rev. G. T. McKee. With these last songs we closed the performance and began the preaching. The church sheds were crowded, people even hanging to the fences surrounding the many Roman Catholics came. Never before have I seen the latter at Protestant services."

PRESBYTERIAN HOSPITAL

Dinner was served by Presbyterian Hospital to Presbyterian ministers of Mecklenburg County February 12, 1928.

A report of charity work was made by A. T. Smeay, vice-president of Board of Directors.

Charity during 1928 cost the hospital $26,868.12, 25 per cent of all work done. Gifts for charity for churches and others, $14,564.26, leaving $12,303.86 contributed by the hospital above gifts. In addition to this the hospital paid during the year $5,000.00 capital indebtedness.

DR. SUMMERELL CRITICALLY ILL

Dr. J. N. H. Summerell, for 20 years pastor of First Presbyterian Church, New Bern, N. C., and for years one of the most beloved ministers in the South has been elected pastor emeritus of the New Bern Church, following the acceptance of his resignation account of continued ill health.

Dr. Summerell has been ill for the last year. With the exception of a few times during the fall, he has been unable to hold services during that period. Several months he has been confined to his room, following a second stroke of paralysis.

His resignation was offered several weeks ago, the elders failed to take action on it until this week when they recommended its acceptance to the congregation, at the insistence of the pastor. It will be submitted to the Presbytery.

A new pastor will be called for the church within the new few months. In the meantime, Dr. Summerell will continue to live at the local parsonage. His wife died during the fall. An adopted daughter, Annie Elms, has been making her home with him during his illness.

Dr. Summerell is the dean of New Bern ministers and one of the most popular men in the section. He was ordained a Presbyterian minister in June, 1898.

REV. JOHN B. HUDSON, D.D.

Rev. John Black Hudson, D.D., for twenty-two years pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Victoria, Texas, died Monday, January 28, 1929. Such a statement of fact leaves the whole story untold.

Three and twenty years of modest, self-effacing service to a church whose every home was a mission; to a community whose every citizen and every interest had an acknowledged claim upon such a man was the life record of "Parson" Hudson. The story will never be told in words. He has been one of the multitude that gathered in the voiceless city on the hill among the men who closed the doors of business and stayed the wheels of traffic that they might stand in reverent silence by the bier was to hear an entire city say, "We bid thee man of God."

Doctor Hudson has rendered large and self-sacrificing service in the development of Tex.-Mex. Pres.-Mex. He has served on the Board of Trustees for Tex.-Mex. from the beginning of the school. With patience, wisdom and courage he has sold and planned and guided each step in the sometimes tedious years of development. In the final stage of the Mexican Girls' School, Dr. Hudson made President of the Board of Trustees for the institution, and for the past five years he has freely of his time and energy to the problems incident to a new work.

These two institutions are grateful to God for the life of Dr. Hudson, and for the unfailing sympathy and wise counsel with which he undertook and helped to solve many difficult situations. His friendships have been both tender and strong.

The school year, 1928-1929, has brought shadows to both Tex.-Mex. and Pres.-Mex. Dr. Bliem, and now Dr. Hudson, will counsel with no more. Three great lives have closed. Three men have fallen. The will of the Lord be done and mote it be. The workers fall, but the work goes on. Tex.-Mex. Reflector.

Attention Church Treasurers!

During the ten months of the present church year practically all of the causes have received LESS than during same period last year. Please urge your churches to pay their pledges. Kindly remit promptly.

DIVISION OF FUNDS

The following is the percentage distribution of the Benevolent Funds for the year beginning April 1, 1928, as approved by Synod, with the names of the Treasurers to whom the funds are to be sent. The percentage is to be calculated on the basis of the total receipts for the Benevolent Budget and should be distributed at least once each quarter. The churches are urged by Synod to carefully observe this schedule of apportionments and thereby equalize the Benevolent Funds among the Causes.

Lesson for March 3

THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH

Mt. 16:13-20; Mk. 4:26-32; Rom. 12:4-8; Eph. 1:15-23; 2:13-22; 4:4-6, 11-16, 5:22-27; 1 Tim. 3:15; Print. Mk. 4:26-32; Eph. 1:22-23; 4:4-6, 11-16.

Our study this week has to do with the Christian Church. It follows logically the lessons that we have studied the past few weeks. These lessons have had to do with the individual Christian. Our present lesson has to do with the Church which gathers these Christians together for work and worship, to know Christ and to make Him known. We shall base our study primarily on the words of Jesus recorded in Mt. 16:13-20, though we shall gather up also some of the truths set forth in the other Scripture suggested for our study. We suggest that you begin your study by reading carefully the assigned passages, then putting down and gathering together and thinking through every significant fact you find regarding the Church.

To us it seems that Jesus in laying down the charter of the church (Mt. 16:13-20) spoke of its foundation, its future, its function. We shall speak of each of these in turn.

I. The Foundation of the Church

Jesus said (Mt. 16:18): "Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church." To understand these words we need to consider the circumstances under which they were spoken. One year earlier Jesus had begun his ministry in Galilee. He had come proclaiming: The Kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye, and believe in the Gospel. At first His popularity with the people was phenomenal. It was not long however before opposition arose on the part of the religious leaders. It became apparent that sooner or later they would accomplish his death. Under these circumstances Jesus "appointed twelve that they might be with him, and that he might send them forth to preach." This was the real beginning of the Christian society. Twelve apostles were chosen to represent the twelve tribes which together had constituted Israel, the Chosen People of God. In this symbolic way Jesus suggested that the new society which he was gathering about him was the new Israel, inheriting both the privileges and the obligations of the Covenant Nation. Jesus, however, said nothing about any permanent organization then or later until several months later in the face of increasing opposition he retired from Galilee into the regions round about Caesarea-Philippi. There it was that he turned unto his disciples and said: Who do men say that the Son of Man is? He did not ask the question for information. He was preparing the way for that second question which after all the passage of the years is still the most important question that every man who comes into the world must answer.

The reply of the disciples shows how profound an impression the personality of Jesus had made on the popular mind. They realized that He was no ordinary man. They were convinced that he was the incarnation of some of the great heroic figures of the past. At the same time it becomes apparent that Jesus fell below the popular expectation of the Messiah: His conduct being in striking contrast to the Messianic ideal, the people seem to have regarded him rather as the forerunner of the Messiah than as the Messiah Himself.

Jesus Himself was not satisfied with the answer. He had no word of censure for the multitude but he turned to his disciples who had had the opportunity to form a clearer estimate of His person, and said: "But you (there is a strong emphasis on the 'you,' as meaning those who had been His intimate disciples and knew Him so much better than the outside crowd), but you, whom say you that I am?"

Peter answered: "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the Living God" As usual Peter spoke for the group. It was their deepest conviction that Jesus was not the forerunner of the Messiah—as the people thought—but the Messiah Himself. This was not the first time that Peter had expressed his conviction that Jesus was the Christ (See J. 1:41, 45, 6:69). But this persistent conviction that Jesus was the Messiah, retained in spite of the fact that the nation did not so regard Him, and in spite of the tremendous departure from the Messianic ideal of the disciples themselves, for the first time deliberately expressed was such a significant thing, and so welcome to the heart of Jesus that He cried out in great joy: "Blessed art thou, Simon, son of John, for by no human agency has the revelation come to you, but by my Father who is in heaven."

Then follow those significant words which give to us the charter of the church: "I also say unto thee, thou art Peter (in Greek 'Petros') and upon this rock (in Greek 'Petra') I will build my church. This is the first time that Jesus had spoken of a 'Church.' It is a word used in the Old Testament for the congregation of the Lord. It is as though Jesus had said, 'Thou art Peter and upon this rock I will build 'my' church, the new congregation of the Lord, which shall take the place of the old, which as rejected the revelation of God that I have brought.'"

But what is the foundation of the church, the rock on which it is to be built? Roman Catholic scholars says that Peter is the rock, and that to Peter and his successors, the bishops of Rome all power has been given over the church as Christ's own representatives here upon earth. Granting for the moment that Peter is the rock to which Jesus refers there is still no basis of course for the Catholic claim. There is still no evidence that he was given absolute authority over the church, no indication that such power as he possessed was transferable, no suggestion that he actually endeavored to transmit any power to his successors, no proof indeed that he was ever bishop of Rome or even in Rome. Some Protestant scholars also believe that Peter was the rock. At first sight that seems to be the natural meaning of the words. And as a matter of plain historical fact Peter was the rock on which the early church was built. He was the natural leader of the early apostolic band. But even granted that the rock is Peter we must not lose the larger significance of Jesus' statement. It is Peter as confessing that Jesus is Christ. The structure can only be strong therefore as it is composed of men accepting this truth.

Most Protestant scholars, however, are convinced that Jesus' reference is to the truth which the apostle had proclaimed. The fact that Jesus is the Son of God was to be the immovable bed rock on which His church would stand secure. If Jesus had really intended to say that Peter was the rock, he would, naturally, have said, "Thou art Peter and upon You I will build my church." The change for the second person to the third indicates that it is Peter's confession which he had in mind. In either case, however, the truth is much the same. According to the one interpretation the church is founded upon, and built up by, men who accept Jesus as the Son of God. According to the second interpretation the church is founded upon the truth, the fact that Jesus is the Son of God. And the two things are equal to the same thing. Paul changed the figure but expressed the same truth when he wrote: (God) raised him (Christ) from the dead * * * and put all things in subjection under His feet, and gave Him to be head over all things to the church, which is His body, the fullness of Him that filleth all in all. Eph. 1:20-23.

II. The Future of the Church

"And the gates of Hades shall not prevail against it." Hades was the realm of death. Jesus meant by this statement that the enemies of the Church should never be able to overcome it. The new congregation of the Lord would never perish.

We do well to consider these words of Jesus in our present day. The church faces many difficulties. Many seek to destroy it, many hold themselves aloof—indifference which is more deadly than opposition increases, and the enemies of the church begin already to gloat over what seems to them its growing impotence. But the church has met similar difficulties in the past, and gone on from strength to strength. As we think of its history the song comes inevitably to our lips:

O where are kings and empires now
Of old that went and came?
But Lord, Thy Church is praying yet,
A thousand years the same.

We mark her goodly battlements,
And her foundations strong;
We hear within the solemn voice
Of her unending song.

For not like kingdoms of the world
Thy holy church, O God,
Though earthquake shocks are threatening her,
And tempests are abroad.

Unshaken as eternal hills,
Immovable she stands,
A mountain that shall fill the earth,
A house not made with hands.

We might also consider in this connection Jesus' parables recorded in Mk. 4:26-32. These parables have to do with the growth of the Kingdom rather than with the growth of the church. The Kingdom is the redeemed society in which God's will is done on earth as it is in heaven. The church is not identical with the Kingdom, but is the means by which the Kingdom is to be advanced. The two, therefore, are closely intertwined. And if the Kingdom is to grow gradually and extend its influence in the world it must be because the church also increases both in numbers and in influence. It would be easy to show that as a matter of actual fact this growth in both directions has continued and is continuing today. There is no call for pessimism. The Church never had a greater opportunity than it has today. That leads us to consider

III. The Function of the Church

1. "I will give unto thee the keys of the Kingdom of Heaven." Keys were sometimes used as a symbol of authority. Roman Catholic scholars say that Jesus here gave Peter (and his successors the bishops of Rome) supreme authority in the Church. But as a matter of fact Peter had no special authority in the church—other than that wielded by him as the natural leader of the group. That much is plain from the history of the Acts and also from the story of the Gospels (cf Mt. 20:20-28). Most probably, therefore, the keys are to be taken as the symbol of a great privilege and a great obligation. The function of a key is to open doors that are shut. Jesus meant to say: In giving you a knowledge of my divine Sonship God has put into your hands a key by means of which you can open the doors of the Kingdom to other men. It is certainly true that not only Peter, but all others, who have come into possession of this truth have the key which allows others to enter. For example the men of China cannot enter into the Kingdom unless we, who have the key, make known to them the good news about Jesus the Christ. Jesus is speaking here then of the function of the Church, addressing Peter because he is the first to enter, and that function is to open the doors of the Kingdom by making known to all men the facts about Jesus. Jesus expands this function in the last commission (Mt. 28:20). The Church is to preach the Gospel unto all nations, (1) baptizing them into the name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Ghost, and (2) teaching them to do all things whatsoever He has commanded us to do. In other words the church is to bring men to know Christ, and also to train them in the Christian life.

The Church seeks to accomplish this task by the Christian nurture which it promotes in the home, through its Bible school, through its programs of worship, through its various organizations, through its home and foreign missions, through all its widely developed benevolent work. And it is the only organization which does have this end in view. The Gospel has come down to us, it now being transmitted to the next generation, and to other nations only through the Church. If this is true can a Christian who has his Master's interests at heart withhold his support from the church? How can he help the church in carrying forward this part of its task?

2. "And whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven." To bind and to loose were technical expressions among the rabbis. To bind was to forbid an act as morally improper; to loose was to allow an act as morally proper. Jesus meant to say that Peter through his belief in the Sonship of Jesus would have the power and the duty of expressing the moral judgments of God in regard to specific questions that would arise from time to time. In 18:18 this power this duty is given to the whole company of disciples, and therefore to the whole Church. If that is true Jesus meant to say that the Church as a whole would have the privilege and the responsibility and the ability to express God's judgment in regard to human conduct. This does not mean, of course, that any particular delinquent of the Church is infallible, for there is no one man, or group of men, who can speak authoritatively for the Church of Jesus Christ. It does mean that the church as a whole if it seeks the mind of its Master may know and express His will in regard to the moral questions that confront us in the present day. The Church has spoken out nobly in the past, and will continue to do so in the future, regarding many grave personal questions. It is beginning to speak out boldly and will speak more boldly in the future concerning some of the difficult moral questions that are imbedded in our social life, eg. matter connected with prohibition and war and industry and race. Our task as individual members of the church is to see that the moral judgments of God are clearly and adequately expressed through us. What are the great moral questions that should most concern the church at the present time? What is the duty which rests upon us as individual Christians in regard to these particular questions?

3. To realize in the world God's eternal purpose for the universe. Jesus did not speak exhaustively, of course, at the very beginning of the Church's function in the world. The apostles added to his words, and history has enriched them. Paul in Ephesians, for example, many of whose passages are included in our lesson, tells us that God's great purpose for the universe is that all things in heaven and all things on earth might be summed up ultimately in Christ (1:9-10), and that this plan is to be progressively realized in and manifested to the world by the Church (cf. Eph. 1:9-10, 22-23; 3:10-11; 4:13-16). In the light of this purpose, which includes the two mentioned by Jesus, Paul in Eph. 4:6 speaks of the present duty of the church. Three suggestions come to us in the part included in our printed lesson, with which we may well close our study.

First: We must give diligence to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. (cf. Eph. 4:1-6). Of course, if it is in and through the Church that all things are to be summed up in Christ, in the Church that the brotherhood of man and the Fatherhood of God are to be realized, the Church itself must be one in Christ. In the present situation in your own local church, the Church universal, satisfactory to the mind of Christ in this respect? What can we do to help the Church carry out this part of its program?

Second: We must attend the ministrations of the Church. Paul says God has given apostles, evangelists, pastors and teachers to the Church for the perfecting of the saints, i. e. the members of the Church. The point here is that these ministrations are necessary if the members of the Church are to be perfected in their Christian lives. The best Christian life cannot be developed in isolation. It is difficult for the Christian to maintain the joy, the fervor of his Christian life if he remains away from the Church. Does the Church service build up our Christian life as it should? If not, why not? The minister may be partly to blame. He is probably not the best preacher of the world, and he would be the first to admit it. But are you sure, isn't partly your own fault? In what mood do you come to the church? Do you make any spiritual preparation before you come? Do you join in the prayers? Do you sing the hymns and understand what you sing? How do you listen to the sermon? Do you really seek for God's blessing? Do you worship in spirit and truth? What is necessary on the worshipper's part that the service is to mean to him what it should?

Third: We must serve the Church. Eph. 4:12. Paul says the saints are to be perfected unto the work of ministering (i. e. service), unto the building up of the body of Christ. Of course different members are called upon to render different services. Some are called to preach, some to teach, some to sing, some to give large of their means, some to work with boys, some to do personal work. But such suggestions do not exhaust the various services that men are called upon to render. Some are called to realize Christian principles in the industrial life, the political life. Some to maintain a Christian home. Some to minister to the sick, the needy. The possibilities are infinite. But all are expected to do their part in carrying forward the work of the church in helping it to sum up all things in Christ. What part of the work should we do? Are we doing it in a way that we need not be ashamed of when we come into the presence of our Lord?

JUNGLE FEVER

Dick Sanger's father, the explorer, gave us the quinine and told us to paddle down the river as fast as we could.

"Jack is dying of fever," he added, "and this is the only medicine that will cure him. Give him ten grains three times a day, and by the time the rest of the expedition reaches Palca, he ought to be well enough to go on with us to Iquitos and civilization."

We were in the heart of the Amazon Jungle, with tigers and big boa constrictors all around us. But the greatest danger of the jungle to a white man is the malarial fever that lurks in the swamps.

Because of it, our party had been forced to return to the base of supplies on the bank of the Amazon River. When we got there, after four days of wearisome marches, we found our little camp deserted, with nothing to tell us of what had happened excepting a note, pinned against a tree by an arrow.

"Am dying of fever. Send quinine at once."

"JACK."

Jack was one of our party who had stayed down the river twenty miles to see that supplies came through safely from Iquitos. That is why Dick and I were being sent ahead in the small canoe.

"Get started at once," directed Mr. Sanger. "Make as much speed as you can without taking too many risks. Remember it's a case of life or death for Jack."

So with the precious quinine packed away in a water-tight bag, we shoved off from our camp and started down the river.

"I wonder why our Indians deserted?" queried Dick.

"Maybe they're afraid of the fever," I suggested.

"Perhaps," admitted Dick. "But how did Jack's note get pinned to the tree?"

That was a puzzling question. I thought about it as I paddled along, but couldn't answer it except by saying that the Indian who brought it got scared like the rest of them and went wherever they went. Anyway there we were, on the Amazon River in a small dugout canoe, with twenty miles of fast, dangerous water between us and the white man who needed quinine.

"The river is rising, I believe," Dick observed, as we sped along with the current. "I don't ever remember seeing it running as fast as this now."

"Think you can handle the canoe all right?" I called back.

"I think so. Let me know when we are coming to any bad rapids."

I said I would, and I did; but none of the bad passes were too bad for us to shoot until we reached the Vuelta, which even the Indians say is a trap set by the evil spirit of the water for unlucky men.

I saw it boiling and bubbling some distance away.

"Big rapids ahead!" I warned.

"Think we can run them?"

I stopped paddling and looked ahead to where white foamy water tumbled down a drop in the river.

"We might if we're lucky."

"Then we'll try it."

A moment later we were caught in the current and carried with the running waters like a cork swept down before a flood. I paddled furiously, as you always must paddle when shooting fast water; while Dick steered from the stern of the canoe.

It was great fun, and if we hadn't been on so serious a mission, we would have enjoyed it. And maybe we would have seen the snag and avoided it in time to save ourselves. But as it was, we ran into it head on, and tore a hole in the bottom of our canoe big enough to fall through.

We sank instantly up to our waists. The water rushed against me and knocked me over, so I had all I could do to make the shore fifty yards down the river. But somehow Dick had been quick enough to save the quinine and a machete, which is a broad bladed knife used in the jungle to chop away the underbrush.

"Now what'll we do?" I asked.

For a moment both of us were silent. Then Dick said:

"We'll strike out through the jungle. If this is the part of the river I think it is, Palca is across this neck of jungle due west from where we are now. Are you willing to try it?"

THE CHERRY TREE

(To be colored with paints or crayons. Whenever you come to a word spelled in CAPITAL letters use that color.)

Here is a picture to paint, today," said Susie May to her friend Teddy. "It is of George Washington cutting down the cherry tree!"

"Oh, yes, so it is! Let's color his coat BLUE and have his trousers and coat sleeves and cuffs light YELLOW," said Teddy.

"His shoes and hair bow can be BLACK and his shoes can have YELLOW buckles!" Susie May suggested.

"His hat on the GREEN grass should match his BLUE coat and the decoration on it can be YELLOW!" said Teddy, taking up the necessary crayons.

"The hatchet should have a GRAY (use BLACK lightly) blade with a RED band about it and the handle should be YELLOW, Teddy."

"The trunk and branches of the cherry tree are GRAY, but the leaves are bright GREEN and the cherries bright RED," said Susie May's friend Teddy.

"And the sky can be light BLUE with a big White cloud in it!"

"His hair, Teddy, must be RED (use YELLOW with just a touch of black) and his cheeks PINK (use RED lightly) and lips RED. Oh, his father very angry to see the lovely cherry tree cut down!"

"But George didn't do it for chief!" defended Teddy, who Washington.

"No he didn't and what's better told his father all about it truthfully," said Susie May.

"Let's paint the border of the picture RED and have the letters B White and RED," said Teddy.

With Jack dying of fever only four or five miles away, who wouldn't? So Dick faced the afternoon sun and entered the jungle, swinging the machete where it was needed. I followed him carrying the medicine.

The jungle, for a little while, was mostly very large trees with only a small growth of underbrush, but after two miles or so, the ground under our feet began to get swampy, and after that we were troubled by the density of the low growing trees and vines. We began to see less and less of the sun and finally we lost it altogether. Night, like it always does in the tropical forest, fell like an angry man's hand on the table, and we were still in the thick of the jungle, many miles, for all we knew to the contrary, from either the river or the little hut in which we expected to find Jack.

"Lost!" I gasped. "Not lost," replied Dick, calmly. "But in a very serious situation. I think we had better keep on going in hopes of striking the river. We can't be very far away."

So we stumbled onward in the darkness, scarcely knowing in which direction we were going, but Dick's words were true for after twenty minutes of anxious traveling, we broke through the last line of trees and saw the river.

About a mile down stream there was a light—a single light. But it looked as good to us as a thousand of them.

"Cheer up!" cried Dick. "There's Palca!"

We made our way along the bank of the river. We found the hut where Jack was lying sick. We gave him ten grains of quinine. We kept watch over him all night and next day we had the pleasure of seeing his fever go down, and him in a condition to talk with us.

"Where is the rest of the expedition?" he asked, faintly.

"At the camp," we replied. "They'll be along just as soon as they can build rafts to float the equipment down the river."

"I'm glad," said Jack. "While you were away from the camp, the Indians rose in rebellion, and it is wise for all white men to get out of the country. All the Indians are at Massaca, war dancing and getting ready. We'll escape the conflict just in time."

At this news, Dick and I looked at each other. We didn't say anything, but I know we were both thinking that life in the Amazon Jungle was just one adventure after another.

PLAYTIME

Edited by the Travel and Recreation Department of the International Society of Christian Endeavor
Carroll M. Wright, Supt., 41 Mt. Vernon St.
Boston, Mass.

"A Musical Fellowship Hour"

Adapted from the "Recreation-Culture Bulletin of the Department of Recreation and Culture of the Epworth League."

Each guest arrives, he is shown to a seat in a group which he will find others whose birthdays fall in the month as his. (For a large crowd, use 12 groups, for each month. For smaller crowds, use four groups, one for each season of the year, and make the necessary changes in the suggestions.)

Songs of the Season—Each group is requested to display the song which best represents the month (or season) in which its members were born. As soon as a discovery is made, the group should prepare to sing. By the time the late comers have arrived, each group will have chosen its song and the program may proceed. Each month is called to sing its song for the approval (we trust) of the assembled guests. A small group may be awarded the best group. After all the groups sing, the entire company will want to sing the winning song.

When Grandma Dreams—Paper and pencils will be necessary for this game. It would be better if the paper were prepared in advance with 18 numbers in a column double spaced. The leader should announce that the guests are to hear a story entitled, "When Grandma Dreams," which is to be told on the piano. Grandma, a mental old lady, is seated in a comfortable armchair before an open fire, dreaming of the days gone by. Dreams of her youth, courtship, marriage, motherhood and ripening old age.

As the story unfolds, the guests are to write on their sheets of paper the titles of the songs, portions of which are played on the piano. After the entire series has been played, the various birthday groups are to compare their stories as suggested by the titles they have written. Five or ten minutes should be allowed for this writing. Have the stories read and either judged or voted on to determine which is best. A prize should be awarded the group having the best story. Another prize may be awarded the person who had the greatest number of titles correctly listed.

The various songs to be used are listed below with portions to be played. Try to secure a pianist who can transpose.

Long, Long Ago—9th through 14th bars. Key of F.
When You and I Were Young, Maggie—9 through 14, Key, F.

School Days—17 through 28. Key, B. flat.
Comin' Thru the Rye—first 5 bars. Key-B. Flat.
Good Old Summer Time—17 through 32. Key, B. flat.

Jingle Bells—last 4 bars. Key, G.
Good Night, Ladies—entire chorus. Key, G.
Seeing Nellie Home—first 6 bars. Key, G.
Goodbye, My Lover, Goodbye—first 12 bars. Key, G.
Sailing—first 8 bars of chorus. Key, C.
My Bonnie—entire verse. Key, C.
When Johnnie Comes Marching Home—last 8 bars. Key, C.
Wedding March—first 4 bars. Key, C.
Little Gray Home in the West—last 4 1-2 bars. Key, C.

Sweet and Low—last 6 bars. Key, C.
Silver Threads Among the Gold—5 through 12. Key, A. flat.

Put On Your Old Gray Bonnet—5th bar of chorus. Key, A. flat.

Love's Old Sweet Song—last 6 bars. A. flat.

Masterpieces—Many times we miss the best of things because we do not understand them. Especially is this true of our enjoyment of the great masterpieces of music. Let us try, then, to discover something something different, something unusual in four such masterpieces. If you cannot find the necessary records for your members, a music dealer will be glad to lend you because it helps to advertise good music and his business. Have the story read, then play Number One. The story of the next, then play the record. For the first one, it is so very familiar that, perhaps, your members will want to sing it with the record. We are assuming that your society has access to a talking machine, or your own property, or belonging to one of your members.

Danse Macabre (Dance of Death.) By the Philharmonic Symphony, Victor Record No. 6513.

The Dance of Death is by Charles Camille Saint-Saens, 1835, died 1921. Usually music attempts a little more than to express or suggest a mood. Occasionally, however, a composer tries to make music either tell a story or illustrate one already told. The Dance of Death is one of four symphonic poems written by the renowned French composer, Saint-Saens.

According to tradition, once a year—on Halloween—the skeletons, under the leadership of Death himself, are forced to emerge from their tombs and engage in ghostly dances until the break of day. The opening tones of this piece are of a true companion, based on a poem by Cazalis, and the tolling of the midnight bells, the signal for the appearance of the ghosts. Death summons them by playing his fiddle which has been neglected sadly for years. With his bony heel, he clicks out the time on a drum as he starts his weird tune. With rattling and rattle, represented by the hollow sound of the xylophone, the skeletons scamper forth and begin their weird dance. They romp through the grave yard, now near and now far, as the curiously distorted waltz tune is played by their leader. Eventually the sound of the clock is heard and all hurry back to their tombs. Death lingers for a moment to play a plaintive strain before he, too, abandons music for another year.

Give your imagination free rein. Notice carefully the ingenious means used by Saint-Saens to obtain his strange effects—the curious combination of harp, oboe, tuba, English horn, xylophone, etc., and the various ways in which each is used. Now listen while this Danse Macabre is played.

2. Liebstraum (Dream of Love) Piano Solo. Victor Record No. 6582.

Liebstraum is by Franz List, born near Odenburg, Hungary, in 1811; died in Baireuth in 1886. We hear the piano so frequently we forget the wonders of the instrument. What a band or orchestra needs many instruments to do can be done on the piano many times by a single performer. Much of the extraordinary development of piano music is due Franz List.

List was a Hungarian and to his ancestry owed his emotional life. He was the most capable pianist of his century and a worthy composer in many branches of music. His piano pieces appear on every artist's program for they display both piano and performer at their best.

Liebstraum (Dream of Love) is the third of several compositions of the same type which List wrote. It is a song without words which leaves much to the imagination of the listener. Beginning with a simple, warm, tender melody, List tries to reveal the joy of a lover who is dreaming of his beloved. Fancy is allowed free flight, because as the composition proceeds and enthusiasm rises many ornamentations, thrills and runs appear to suggest the wonderful rosy pictures which come to all of us in our most comfortable dreams. Now let your own fancy roam at will as we play this selection.

3. A Song of India. Played by Fritz Kreisler. Victor Record No. 706.

A Song of India, from "Sadko," is by the Russian composer Nicholas Rimsky-Korsakov, born 1844, died 1908. One of the great names in modern Russian music is that of this composer. Born of a wealthy family and destined for an official post in the navy or the learned profession of medicine or law, he soon discovered that his greatest satisfaction in life must come from music. While still a young naval officer, he wrote his first opera, and soon after gave himself entirely to music.

While, like that of most Russian composers, his music is especially effective when played by orchestra in which the tone colors of the various instruments can be used, Rimsky-Korsakov is always interesting. He seems to be particularly capable of suggesting, by means of tone, different conditions of landscape and atmosphere. He is particularly happy in music intended to make the listener seem in some strange far-away land as China or India.

All these characteristics are well expressed in the Song of India. The dreamy, swaying melody, with its combination of many notes of the same length at the beginning, then later, notes of decidedly different lengths; the use of many close, intermediate tones, and the simple, swinging accompaniment, even without the text, suggest the languor and magical qualities of distant India. Kreisler interprets this most beautifully on the violin.

4. Carry Me Back to Old Virginny. Sung by Alma Gluck. Victor Record No. 6141.

Words and music by James Bland, a negro counterpart of Stephen C. Foster. By a curious contradiction many persons think that Old Folks At Home, Old Black Joe, Massa's in the Cold, Cold Ground and many other favorite songs by Stephen Foster were of negro origin and that Carry Me Back to Old Virginny was written by a white man. Exactly the reverse is true. Although one of the early copyrighted negro songs, only in the last few years has this one become a favorite.

The following is taken from "Stories of American Songs" by Kenneth Clark. This ballad of a colored lad who loved Old Virginia had fallen almost entirely into the realm of forgotten things before Alma Gluck came to its rescue. The popular soprano dug it out and made a talking-machine record of it a few years ago. Although the name of James Bland has not come down into fame as securely as Stephen C. Foster's, he wrote a great many of the popular successes of the 70's and 80's. For instance, he is the author and composer of "O Dem Golden Slippers." One reason for the enduring appeal of "Carry Me Back to Old Virginny" is because that State serves therein as a symbol for home, no matter where one's home may be. For example, one observer told of being in a group which sang old songs one evening in the moonlight. Some of the songs were rollicking, others carefree, but "Carry Me Back" was reverent. All were touched by the song from a wizened old fellow in his seventies to a tall bronzed Viking. When the last notes had died away, there was a stillness like that of prayer. In conversation, it developed that those in the group had come from the ends of the earth, but to each, home was home and "Old Virginny" to them stood for that home.

Close with C. E. Songs—Many times we overlook the best in our C. E. song books because we are not familiar with them. Let us use the rest of our evening and close by singing together as many new songs from our own song books as time will allow.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S TOPIC
Charlotte Garth Adams

Sunday, Mar. 3—Recruiting for Christ.—Mt. 35-38; I Tim. 4:12-16; II Tim. 1:8, 9. (Young People's Day).

The Month of March

March is the month named by the Romans for Mars, the god of war. Perhaps they named it so because of the fierce winds that blow and whip the trees—because the winds seem to be at war with growing things. The winds seem to be at war with growing things.

But though the winds howl savagely, they whip the sap up into the trees so that they bud and grow. And the winds blow new life into our bodies so that we feel vigorous and tingle with health. Let us pray that we may also feel the breath of God's spirit blowing new life into our souls that we may grow upward, stronger each day and more alive spiritually.

Recruiting for Christ

To recruit means to gain new supplies for an army. It means growth, refreshment. To recruit for Christ is to gain new supplies for His army—to show Him to others that they may follow him too. Recruiting for Christ is the same as Christ winning followers. If we show Christ in our lives, Christ will win others to Himself through us. We cannot force others to follow him; we must win them. Therefore a Christian army or a Christian force is not like a national army or force, for often men are conscripted into a national army that are not wholeheartedly for the cause for which they are fighting, but one cannot be a part of a Christian force until one is a whole-hearted Christian. "Christ's purpose is to do more than win men; it is to deepen their experience so that they will want to win others."

Personal Work

In order that we may know how to go about recruiting for Christ, let us see how Christ himself went about winning others to the bigger life. First of all, does Christ mean enough to us for us to want to serve Him? If we are only half-hearted about it He cannot use us. We shut Him out by our lack of enthusiasm. Christ won men because He loved them and they felt his love for them. He won Zacchaeus by staying at his house and being his guest. The Jews looked down on Zacchaeus and hated him because he was a tax collector for the Roman government, but Jesus knew that the soul of the tax collector was as valuable as the soul of a high priest. He won Nicodemus—a ruler of the Jews—by showing him that life is bigger than mere living. He won the Samaritan woman by telling her of living water that satisfies forever—He gave her a desire for better things. "God is a spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth, for the Father seeketh such to worship Him."

Recruiting for Christ is being a fisher of men. "Come ye after me, and I will make you to become fishers of men."

Preparation

Just as we need preparation for any work that is worthwhile, so we must prepare for our task of recruiting for new soldiers for Christ. The best preparation is to have a personal friendship with Christ ourselves. This friendship should be of a sort that is used every day—not just on Sundays. To gain this we must pray. Prayer does not always mean that we must say something to God. Often trying to express our desires or thanks breaks into our spirit of prayer so that we think about our words rather than what we really desire. Words are often too feeble to express real longing. Prayer for guidance in soul-winning does not have to be spoken but God understands and will lead us. Bible study, too, will help us to know Christ. Then reading about him we learn that he is the same yesterday, today, and forever, and that he is just as interested in the people that are living today as he was in those that he talked with when He was here in the body. Dwight Moody said that once he gave ten minutes in the morning to Bible study and an hour to reading the newspaper, but it was not until he reversed this rule that he became a world power.

Soldiers

"Thou, therefore, endure hardness, as a good soldier of Jesus Christ." "Put on the whole armor of God that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. . . . Stand, having your loins girded about with truth and having on the breastplate of righteousness; and your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace; above all taking the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked. And take the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God. Praying always . . . and watching."

"FEED MY SHEEP"

Send them away! Cut down the overhead!
How in the world may all the world be fed
From this collection-basket? Can't be done, you say?
You are not up on methods of today.

This is a desert place we're living in;
Scarce can we saints escape the searing sin.
Let these outsiders seek their proper god—
Buddha or Shiva, reptile, beast or clod.

We, from our rightful places in the sun,
Calculate comfortably just what can be done—
So much per cap, no pleas to wring the heart!
And you stand saying, "They need not depart."

Budgets, know you, are inelastic at the best;
We've just raised ours, and won a little rest,
When in you lead this woe on human feet,
Demand of the budgeters, "Give ye them to eat."

Spiritual food has shrunk regrettably.
Strange, what a morsel modern prayers will buy.
There is a lad here, offering his all.
Rather amusing! Says he heard you call!

"Blind leaders! Hypocrites! Bring the lad to me.
Of such as this shall my salvation be.
Make them sit down—My flock, in pastures green;
Bearing the Bread of Life, go ye in between.
Father, I thank Thee for the stores of heaven,
Thow who all power unto Me hast given.
Thy Word is life, now cleanse them by Thy Word!"

O Lord, how long? How long, how long, O Lord!

Child's Best Laxative is "California Fig Syrup"

Hurry Mother! A teaspoonful of "California Fig Syrup" now will thoroughly clean the little bowels and in a few hours you have a well, playful child again. Even if cross, feverish, bilious, constipated or full of cold, children love its pleasant taste.

Tell your druggist you want only the genuine "California Fig Syrup" which has directions for babies and children of all ages printed on bottle. Mother, you must say "California." Refuse any imitation.

STORY

BETTY'S PARTNERSHIP

Little Betty, her face pressed hard against the window-pane, stood watching with wondering, wet eyes a motor-car now almost out of sight. It was carrying her mother—her precious mother—away, and leaving her to "be a good girl" with Aunt Myra. That would be easy for she loved Aunt Myra and Uncle Arthur and Cousin Marjorie—but mother had never left her before!

Uncle Arthur called. "A dime for you, Betty. Another for Marjorie and that spells ice cream."

Quickly Marjorie wriggled into her coat and stood poised for a dart to the store around the corner. But her little cousin twirled the dime in her fingers and hesitated.

"Hurry, Betty, we'll have a double-header."

"But where's God's pocketbook?" demanded the little girl. "I have to fix that first."

Marjorie stared. "I don't know what you mean. Come on," she urged.

"I can't," persisted Betty. "I always pay God first."

"What is God's pocketbook?" Uncle Arthur questioned.

"It's with my things. I know it is. Mother never leaves it out."

Aunt Myra led the child to her room, the others followed curiously. "Here it is—see," cried Betty eagerly as she pulled a purse from her suitcase. "I've got two dollars in this part. There's the rest," and she emptied a collection of rolling coins upon a chair.

"So you give all your money to God—is that it?" Uncle Arthur appeared interested.

"All? Course not. We're partners. He gives me things and I give Him things."

"Where's your share?"

"I'll find it," and Betty searched again until she found another purse. "Here's mine. Isn't much in it, though, 'cause I spend mine."

"What good is it to keep God's in a pocketbook?" teased Aunt Myra.

Betty looked at her puzzled. "I don't. Wait, I'll show you." This time she drew forth a scrap-book containing many pages of pictures, clippings, and figures. The child chatted on rapidly, full of eagerness.

"See! There's my hospital and up in that corner, mother thinks, is the bed where my little baby got well. She was awful sick."

"Your baby? How come?" It was Cousin Marjorie who asked.

"I just call her, mine, you know 'cause—let me see how much," and small figures in the corner of the page were studied intently for a moment. "Six dollars and fifty cents—that's what I sent. The mishnary said she 'most knew 'twas 'nough to make the baby well. An' here's my schoolhouse. Isn't it funny-looking? A dollar—that's what went there. 'Tisn't much, is it? Here's a orphanage—two dollars. An' see the letter I got from China. Look at the funny postage stamp."

The child went excitedly on with her story until Marjorie again urged ice cream. When the two finally ran out, Aunt Myra, who had listened thoughtfully, went slowly to her own room. God's pocketbook? She had none belonging to Him in her house. Of course she contributed to the church—or rather, her husband's check went to the treasurer regularly.

Betty's missionary scrap-book! Years ago she had attended missionary meetings. Later she had dropped them from her list of engagements. There were so many things to do.

Little Betty sharing all she had with the world's needy ones—and rejoicing in it! Aunt Myra loved her small niece—and the child's mother, her own brother's wife. Sister Madge had always been "different," and it appeared that little Betty was receiving unique training.

Aunt Myra recalled with a sudden sense of shame her own excuse for not making a World Service pledge in the recent "every member canvass" of the church. Well, she would send them a check at once—then she could forget the matter.

But there was no forgetting with Betty in the house. Every day furnished some new evidence of the child's partnership with the Father who was so real to her. Each piece of spending money was carefully shared with Him. Once she put her entire allowance into His purse with the gleeful remark, "I have to give my African boy a lot today, 'cause I 'most know he hasn't had much to eat—and think what I had for dinner!"

On Sunday she ran joyously to the fund to count out the collection plate amount. A special appeal at the church school in behalf of mountain children brought a plea for Aunt Myra to help her decide what could be spared.

Then one afternoon Marjorie, upon whom every luxury had been lavished, suddenly buried her head in her mother's lap and sobbed. "I don't have any money for God! I only had five cents for the poor old lady selling pencils and things this morning—and that was yours. She was 'most blind, too! Mama," and Marjorie turned a terrified gaze upon her mother, "s'pose you had to sell pencils!"

Mother, her face serious, comforted the child with the promise that hereafter she should have a pocketbook for God. After that, she took up the more difficult task of having it out with herself. Were Sister Madge and little Betty right? Could it be possible to enjoy more thoroughly what one gives than what one keeps? Had she herself forgotten the Father except as she conceived Him watchful of her own interests? How little she had concerned herself with the details of His business!

To welcome cries of distress as choice opportunities for service instead of cringing and shrinking away from them! A fund always ready to be drawn upon—it began to look alluring. Finally Aunt Myra bowed her head in decision as the voice of a little child whispered to her, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." — Susan Potter Hesse, in Zion's Herald.

Are You Ready

When your Children Cry for It

Baby has little upsets at times. All your care cannot prevent them. But you can be prepared. Then you can do what any experienced nurse would do—what most physicians would tell you to do—give a few drops of plain Castoria. No soon done than Baby is soothed; relief just a matter of moments. Yet you have eased your child without use of a single doubtful drug; Castor is vegetable. So it's safe to use often as an infant has any little pain you cannot pat away. And it's always ready for the crueler pangs of colic or constipation, or diarrhea; effective, too, for older children. Twenty-five million bottles were bought last year.

SIXTY YEARS A COLLEGE STUDENT

William Cullen Bryant Kemp, who died recently, spent 60 years as a student in Columbia university and was graduated 14 times. To generations of seekers of learning there he was known as "the perpetual student." They called him "Doc" and conferred on him a degree not listed in the catalogue—D. P. M., Doctor of Perpetual Motion.

When he entered the institution at 18, he had no liking for study, so a wealthy relative, in order to urge him onward, left him $2,500 a year as long as he remained at Columbia.

His principal concern was that there would not be enough new subjects to study, but, with the advance of modern education, the number increased in such volume that he never succeeded in taking all the courses in the university. He acquired the following degrees: M. D., A. B., A. M., LL. M., LL. B., Ph.D., C. E., E. E., Mech E., E. M., Phar. Chem., and three kinds of B. S. degrees. He was educated for seven professions.

Although at first he disliked study, he learned to like it and remained at Columbia to indulge this desire, his friends said. Despite his scholastic inclinations, he was an enthusiastic undergraduate and attended all student events. None knew the songs and cheers better than he. Few knew so well the lore and history of Columbia.

For decades a tradition about Columbia's "perpetual student" has existed in the college and university world, yet few really have believed it true.

How many examinations did he stand? No mention of this is made in the stories about his death. If he took five courses a year, the average load, and stood examinations twice a year, he underwent 600 such tests and trials, undoubtedly a world's record. If he took full notes on all the lectures given him, he wrote in volume many times more than the largest encyclopedia.

Sixty years a college student! Even the most ardent undergraduate and the most enthusiastic alumnus, yearning to return to alma mater, must be appalled at the very thought. Most of them, if they had to make a choice, would prefer to follow the example of Judge R. W. Winston of North Carolina, author of a recent notable biography of Andrew Johnson, who returned to his alma mater, the state university, after he was past 60 and took part of his college course over.—The State, Columbia, S. C.

ROUTINE

Like the disappointed little boy who looked out of the window on January 1, and said to his mother, "Why, mamma, the New Year is exactly like the old one, we housekeepers find that 1929 has brought the same round of dish washing, baking, cleaning and household chores. It is exactly like 1928 in all the things pertaining to home making, and we rise to the same routine day by day. Even New Year's dinner was similar to every other dinner on the first day of the year, and we called the old time greetings to friends as they passed us. But yet there is always a newness about every day that is well worth noticing. Each day we rise ready for hard work and hoping to make greater strides in every way than we did the day before.

Perhaps women feel the sameness of life more than men, but it may be that this longing to get away from home that comes over the most devoted wives and mothers accounts for the rush into business on the part of married women with families. They say they are "dead tired" of the dull routine, so they hire a housekeeper and sally forth to earn money. Very soon they find that the office and the store are as full of dead-ly routine and little rules to be obeyed as ever the home was, but the fact of having money of their own keeps them to the tasks in many cases. It really requires more courage and patience now to be a "home body" than ever before. Every woman wants to get her name on the front page, or make a big salary, or do something out of the ordinary. And many of them are doing just that thing. They are boasting that their homes are run better than when they were managing the thing completely, their children are just as well off and their husbands are satisfied—but often the onlookers doubt all these statements. God made wives and mothers to do their duty at home and not out in the world. And every married woman who neglects her home to enter the business world makes it that much harder for unmarried women and widows who must work, to get employment. It is not a pleasant thought to lie down at night thinking that you have earned that day the money that should go to some widow trying to be both father and mother to her fatherless children.

In spite of the routine and the dullness that women complain about, particularly at this season, the fact remains that women in the home have a greater chance to get favorable attention than those in the public eye. There are the children to get ready for life, and through them the mother gets more of real satisfaction than out of her own attainments, that is, real mothers do. The divorce courts are filled with women who long to shirk home duties, women who desire to let their own mothers assume a second family while they go back to paying positions. Marriage has not proved a bed of roses, so they lightly break the ties and hasten back to the office or school room.

LETTERS OF SYMPATHY

To congratulate a friend on a happy event is comparatively easy. Words of cheer fall trippingly from the pen as from the tongue. A letter of sympathy requires more care, more delicacy, greater comprehension and fuller recognition of the friend's character and environment. Many people hesitate to write a letter of sympathy. The impulse is strong to reach out a hand in the dark and give the warm clasp which means, "I am sorry," "I would help you if I could." There is a hesitation about writing. Perhaps we think we are not well enough acquainted. We do not feel like thrusting ourselves forward when there is danger of reopening a wound. Our tender impulses are crushed. We pray for our friends, but do not speak to them.

In most cases silence is a mistake. Sometimes it is better than speech, but such cases are rare. A letter of sympathy, if short, earnest and sincere, is an olive branch of promise coming as a messenger dove of peace. The simpler it is the better. There are great possibilities along this line. In times of sorrow you want to be helped. Help others who are in sorrow. A peace will steal into your heart and glorify your life.—Christian Union Herald.

THE STORY OF GRUMBLE-TONE

There was a boy named Grumble-Tone, who ran away to sea. "I'm sick of things on land," he said, "as sick as I can be! A life upon the bounding wave will suit a lad like me!"

The seething ocean billows failed to stimulate his mirth, For he did not like the vessel, or the dizzy, rolling berth. And he thought the sea was almost as unpleasant as the earth.

He wandered into foreign lands; he saw each wondrous sight, But nothing that he heard or saw seemed just exactly right,

WHAT DR. CALDWELL LEARNED IN 47 YEARS PRACTICE

A physician watched the results of constipation for 47 years, and believed that no matter how careful people are of their health, diet and exercise, constipation will occur from time to time. Of next importance, then, is how to treat it when it comes. Dr. Caldwell always was in favor of getting as close to nature as possible, hence his remedy for constipation, known as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a mild vegetable compound. It can not harm the system and is not habit forming. Syrup Pepsin is pleasant-tasting, and youngsters love it.

Dr. Caldwell did not approve of drastic physics and purges. He did not believe they were good for anybody's system. In a practice of 47 years he never saw any reason for their use when Syrup Pepsin will empty the bowels just as promptly.

Do not let a day go by without a bowel movement. Do not sit and hope, but go to the nearest druggist and get one of the generous bottles of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, or write "Syrup Pepsin," Dept. BB, Monticello, Illinois, for free trial bottle.

And so he journeyed on and on, still seeking for delight.

He talked with kings and ladies fair; he dined in courts, they say; But always found the people dull, and longed to get away, To search for the mysterious land where he should like to stay.

He wondered over all the world, his hair grew white as snow. He reached that final bourne at last, where all of us must go; But never found the land he sought. The reason would you know?

The reason was that North or South, where'er his steps were bent, On land or sea, in court or hall, he found but discontent; For he took his disposition with him everywhere he went.

—St. Nicholas.

COMPANIONATE MARRIAGE

Companionate marriage in any form is not among Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick's alleged unorthodoxies. He has produced in one of those single remarkable sentences which make his written and spoken discourse so fascinatingly clear this admirable description of the matrimonial relation:

"The complete sex experience means falling in love, learning the secret of staying in love, mastering the art of growing up in love, enlarging the love-life into a family of children, until within the green cups of a physical relation grow the flower and fruit of a spiritual union."—N. Y. Advocate.

Glenn Springs Mineral Water

Popular Since Early History

For nearly two hundred years our fathers and forefathers, particularly those along the coast, were accustomed to visit Glenn Springs for a few days' treatment each year to flush the system of its pent up impurities (particularly malaria) and to regulate and recondition their systems for greater activity and renewed health and vigor. Glenn Springs was ever popular even when early in the nineteenth century the Indians frequently camped at the Spring for convalescence or recuperation.

Recommended By Physicians

In more recent years, after scientific analysis of the water, the public has become convinced more than ever that the pure sparkling water of Glenn Springs has medicinal qualities of unquestioned value. Many men and women today look to its curative powers to restore health and regular daily habits. Physicians generally know its value and frequently send their patients to Glenn Springs for convalescence or treatment.

Particularly Effective

The refreshing effect of the liberal use of mineral water is generally regarded as beneficial, with none of the drastic, possibly damaging effects of concentrated medicines.

Glenn Springs Water, however, offers benefits far more specific and definite. Originally known as an excellent water for malarial debility, and successfully used to restore appetite, strength, and energy, it is now accepted as a very thorough, though mild treatment for chronic constipation, biliousness, indigestion, dyspepsia, auto-intoxication, rheumatism and kindred ills.

Exceptional Therapeutic Value

Though endowed with valuable medicinal agents; it bubbles spontaneously from the heart of mother earth; is nature's own dilution of curative agents, with distinct therapeutic potency and untouched by mankind. Its principal medicinal agents are:

- SODIUM SULPHATE (Glaubers Salts)—Cathartic, Aperient and Diuretic.
- CALCIUM SULPHATE—Hygroscopic.
- CALCIUM CARBONATE—Sedative, Antacid.
- MAGNESIUM CARBONATE—Mildly Laxative and Antacid.
- POTASSIUM SULPHATE—Purgative.

Ask your physician about Glenn Springs Water for your case. If he desires, we will gladly mail copy of the analysis, together with literature.

Physicians generally agree that its content is of exceptional value in many chronic troubles which need system cleansing, regulation, and a rejuvenation of the organs of digestion and elimination.

Revives Regular Habits

The principal value of Glenn Springs Water as a laxative, however, lies in the fact that though potent and capable of thoroughness when used in proper quantities, it tends to so regulate the system as to restore normal functioning and a permanent return to regular habits. This in itself is one of the principal requisites of good health.

Drink It At Home

With Glenn Springs Water you may now restore your health in your own home. For busy men and women, we have arranged to ship the water by express in ten gallon quantities. You need not necessarily visit the Spring as hundreds of thousands of others have done, though of course you may do so if you desire. You can now restore your health at home just as though you were actually recuperating at the Spring, without the loss of time, the trouble or expense.

For your health's sake, use the coupon below and start right by daily flushing your system with goodly quantities of this sparkling restorative water, and you will soon be on the road to health.

TAKE YOUR CHILD TO CHURCH

Extracts from an article by Hon. Thomas C. T. Crain, Justice Supreme Court, State of New York:

"The Church is the pillar and ground of truth. Worship is the feeling of admiration and homage towards God which expresses itself in religious reverence, praise, prayer, thanksgiving and the offering of what we have and what we are. On Sundays we meet together in God's house to hear His holy Word, to ask those things necessary for soul and body and to lift our hearts to Him in praise and to seek a blessing at His hands. We should not forsake such assembling and such an assemblage ought in large part to be composed of family units. Children at the hour of prayer should not be kept from the house of God. Fathers should say with Joshua of old, 'As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord.'

"Give your child a chance to praise God with you in His temple, for out of the mouth of babes and sucklings God has perfected praise. * * * The open Bible, the bent knee, the uplifted heart, the prayer-answering God—this is religion and religion is life-power.

"There are six concurring reasons why you should see to it that your child shall worship with you at the Sunday service: 1. For the sake of your own soul. 2. For the sake of the child. 3. For the sake of the Church. 4. For the sake of the State. 5. For the sake of civilization and 6. To speed God's Kingdom.

"Do not send your child to Church—take him."

John Ruskin said: "If I have accomplished anything in the world I owe it to the verses of Scripture my mother instilled into me when I was at her knee. There were twenty-four chapters by which my mother established my soul in life. That property of chapters I count confidently the most precious and upon the whole the one essential part of all my education."

A DAY AT A TIME

"I can't understand why you always send my allowance in such small amounts," wrote a college youth to his father. "I don't like to have to ask so often for money. I am sure you could send all I need for a month or two just as easily."

"What you say is quite true," wrote the father in reply, "but I am thinking of you rather than myself. I want you to keep me in your mind and thoughts these busy college days. When you write often, as you do under this plan, you tell us about your pleasures and experiences, your plans and purposes, and that's a good thing for a boy to do. Perhaps if you didn't need me so often, I shouldn't know as much about you as I do."

Possibly a question that troubles many Christians will find its answer in the father's letter. Our heavenly Father might give us all we need at one time; but he does not want us to forget Him. He wants us to talk to Him often. Prayer is a great privilege which we as His children enjoy; but the consciousness of a daily need is often a strong reminder of that privilege.—Forward.

SOME CURIOSITIES OF THE BIBLE

In the Bible the word "Jehovah" occurs 6,855 times. The word "reverend" occurs but once, Psalm III:9. The longest verse is Esther 8:9. The shortest verse is St. John 11:35. In the 107th Psalm four verses are alike, the 8th, 15th, 21st and 31st. Ezra 7:21 contains all the letters of the alphabet excepting J. Every verse of the 136 Psalm ends alike. No names or words of more than six syllables are in the Bible. The 37th chapter of Isaiah and 19th chapter of II Kings are alike. The word "girl" occurs but twice in the Bible, Joel 3:3 and Zechariah 8:5. There are in the Bible 3,538,483 letters, 773,693 words, 31,373 verses, 1,189 chapters and 66 Books.

President Martin To Retire

Davidson College Head Goes Out of Office at Commencement. After Year's Leave, He Will Take a Chair in the College

W. J. Martin will retire as president of Davidson College at the end of the present session of the institution according to action taken at the last mid-winter meeting of the board of trustees, February 20. The board has had under consideration President Martin's request for retirement presented to that body since last commencement.

The Davidson trustees were not going to sever completely the relationship of Doctor Martin to the college, however, and accordingly elected to a professorship at Davidson, at the same time granting him a year's leave of absence. He will therefore continue his duties as a professor in March, 1930.

A nominating committee headed by Walter L. Lingle, of Richmond, chairman of the board, was designated to make recommendations at a future meeting for the next president of Davidson. Associated with Lingle in these deliberations will be Smith Richardson, of Greensboro, Byron Clark, of Salisbury; Dr. J. W. McKay, of Charlotte; Dr. H. McCaslin, of Jacksonville, Dr. Neal L. Anderson, of Savannah, Ga., and S. Clay Williams, of (Continued on Page Two)

Appeals For Financial Relief

Millions in China Now Number Twenty Million, With Other Areas Affected

In reiterating its endorsement of the plan to secure funds in the United States for the millions of famine victims in North China, and specifically in reiterating its approval of the organization of the China Famine Relief, Inc., with national headquarters at 42nd Street, New York, the Administrative Committee of the Federal Council of the Churches in America has just adopted a resolution supplementing that voted at the annual conference held at New York, in December, 1929.

The Council's latest resolution was adopted yesterday by National Director O. Lively of the American organization, and reads as follows:

Resolved: That this Committee places on record its cordial endorsement of the appeal for funds for relief of the famine sufferers in China and earnestly hopes that, under the able management of the new board of Directors and the National Council, contributions may be abundantly secured in large amounts, and that a response at this time would help to meet the terrible situation in China but would again demonstrate to the world, just struggling to its feet, the generous friendship of the people of the United States.

In expressing the appreciation of the Federal Council for this added endorsement, Major Lively stated that the lives of millions of the sufferers could be saved if it is imperative that relief be sent to the famine areas at once, inasmuch as all food supplies are exhausted in many districts and the total of victims is rapidly increasing toward the 20,000,000 figure.

In addition to the application of the funds, he added, has been made (Continued on Page Two)

Vocational Guidance At Davidson

College Y. M. C. A. Announces Annual Plans to aid Students in Selecting Life Work

The Vocational Guidance series of lectures and interviews will begin on February 26, under the auspices of Davidson College Y. M. C. A. On this date Paul Whitlock, attorney of Charlotte, will have interviews in the afternoon with those interested in law and that night will talk in Shearer on Law as a Life's Calling.

On February 28, at 7 p. m. in Shearer, Dr. Addison Brenizer will speak on Medicine as a Life's Calling. All the next day he will be here for interviews with those interested in medicine.

Lectures and interviews on Business have been arranged for March 3-9. On March 5 D. H. McCullough, of Todd-McCullough & Co., C. P. A. of Charlotte will speak on Accounting.

On March 6th or 8th David Ovens of Ivey's Department Store will present Business as a Life's Calling. Due to a conflict with a debate a definite date has not yet been decided upon.

On March 7th J. H. Carson, of Charlotte, will speak on Real Estate. Mr. J. P. Quarles, of the Equitable Life Insurance Society, will speak on Insurance as a Life's Work.

Interviews will be arranged on March 12th for those interested in Education with T. W. Andrews, Superintendent City Schools, High Point, N. C. That night in Shearer he will talk on Education as a Life's Calling.

From March 19-21 the following vocations will be presented: Textile Manufacturing, Engineering and Chemistry. Men prominent in these fields have been invited for discussions and talks but nothing definite has been accomplished as yet.

It is very probable that Dr. Charles Myers, of the First Presbyterian Church of Greensboro, will present Ministry as a Life's Work on March 26 and 27. He will remain over one day for interviews with those interested.

Catalogues from various Graduate schools covering the vocations named above have been ordered and will be placed on display at the "Y" room on the days of the vocation they cover.

Some of the leading men in various vocations have been asked for articles on their respective work and these will be published in the Davidsonian.

It is the plan of the Vocational Guidance Committee to have every man on the campus visited personally (Continued on Page Two)

Rev. R. A. McLeod Heads Junior College

Stated Clerk of North Carolina Synod Elected Acting President of New School at Maxton

Rev. R. A. McLeod, stated clerk of the North Carolina Presbyterian Synod and for several years connected with the Elise High School at Hemp, N. C., has been elected acting president of the Presbyterian Junior College for Men at Maxton, N. C.

The action was taken by the board of trustees of the college, which met February 19, at Maxton. Mr. McLeod in co-operation with the executive committee will select his faculty, including an athletic coach, and make all plans necessary to open the college next September.

In addition to acting as president Rev. Mr. McLeod will serve as head of the department of religious education.

Hampden Sydney Opens Campaign

One Million Dollars Sought for Expansion and Endowment of Virginia Synod's Historic College for Men

The campaign for One Million Dollars for Hampden Sydney College, at Hampden, Sydney, Va., is on. The amount is to be used for expanding the equipment of the college and for adequate endowment to sustain the institution in its great task of preparing men for church and state.

The Executive Committee of the campaign consists of:

Dr. Roswell Page, Chairman Publicity Committee; John Hobart Reed, Chairman Lists Committee; Hon. Robt. K. Brock, Chairman Organization Committee; Prof. David C. Wilson, Chairman Faculty and Undergraduate Committee; Tazewell M. Carrington, Chairman Special Gifts Committee; Walker Scott, Treasurer; Hon. Louis S. Epes, Chairman Speakers Committee; Alexander W. Weddell, Member at Large; Dr. J. D. Eggleston, Member at Large.

At a meeting of the Board of Trustees of Hampden Sydney College at the Westmoreland Club, Richmond, on February 15, a statement of Governor Byrd was read, in which he called the college a "historic asset of the state."

Governor Byrd quoted Jefferson's phrase: "Nothing more than education advances the power, the prosperity and the happiness of a nation," (Continued on Page Two)

Bainbridge Has Great Meeting

Dr. Trigg Thomas, Assembly's Evangelist, Has Wide Interest in Services in Georgia Town

The great revival which has been in progress in Bainbridge, Ga., at the Presbyterian Church since Sunday morning, February 3rd, conducted by Rev. Trigg A. M. Thomas, D.D., General Assembly Evangelist from Winona, Miss., closed February 17.

Large congregations have attended the services from the beginning and at many of the services overflow crowds took all the available space.

Crowds of men attended the brief morning services held downtown.

Dr. Thomas delivered addresses to the men at the Seaboard Railway shops and to the Masonic bodies of Bainbridge and these men attended the evening services in the church. All the ministers and churches of the city and community have manifested great interest in the revival and have been regular in their attendance upon the services.

Dr. Thomas is considered one of the outstanding preachers of the Presbyterian Church at large and also one of the most successful evangelists in the south and west.

Dr. Thomas is his own song leader and has a marvelous way with the children and young people and the whole congregation, because they all sing when he leads and all enjoy it.

The timely, fresh, strong and powerful sermons of Dr. Thomas have drawn and held the crowds from the very first. At the close of the services on Tuesday night results showed 41 conversions, who have promised to unite with the different churches of the city; at least 150 definite reconsecrations and some promises to move church letters to the Bainbridge churches. All of these have gone forward at the invitation of the evangelist and taken him by the hand as (Continued on Page Two)

E. M. C. Plans to Be Broadcast

Synod of North Carolina Will Inform the People in the Interest of Budget Canvass

Arrangements have been completed for a state-wide broadcast on Sunday afternoon, March 3, from 6 to 7 o'clock in the interest of the Every Member Canvass which is to be made in all of our churches the following Sunday, March 10. The goal is $900,000.00 for benevolences.

Strong speakers have been secured. Dr. A. D. P. Gilmour of the First Presbyterian Church of Wilmington, will speak from the studio of WBT Charlotte, at 6:30 to 7 p. m.

Rev. D. Clay Lilly, D.D., pastor of Reynolda Presbyterian Church, will be heard over WNRC Greensboro, from 6 to 7 p. m. from the studio at the O. Henry Hotel. From 8 to 9 p. m. Dr. Lilly will be broadcast from the Church of the Covenant, Greensboro, over WNRC. Dr. B. R. Lacy, President of Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, Va., will be heard over BPTF Raleigh from 6 to 7 p. m.

The best of music will give a fit setting for each address. Some of the finest talent of the Synod has been secured. A rare musical treat is in store for all who tune in on these stations Sunday afternoon from 6 to 7 o'clock.

Every Presbyterian in North Carolina should hear one of these speakers. This is possible. Have a Radio placed in your church with loud speaker or other amplifying arrangements, and invite your congregation to be present, join in the singing of the hymns and hear a good message. The people would be glad to come and would be greatly profited by the hour of good music and fine thought. If this cannot be done, urge those who have radios to invite their friends to share this program with them in their homes. Remember the date, Sunday, March 3, 6 to 7 p. m.

Announcement of this program from the pulpit will be made next Sunday. Give as much publicity to it through your church Bulletin and otherwise as you possibly can. Pray for God's Blessing upon all our endeavors that we may greatly honor Him with our substance.

On behalf of Synod's Stewardship Committee, E. E. Gillespie, Executive Secretary.

Interdenominational Conferences

Federation of Woman Boards of Foreign Missions and Foreign Missions Conference of North America in Session Last Month at Detroit

The sessions of the Interdenominational meetings of Foreign Mission Boards were held at Detroit, Mich., January 14-18. Because the Jerusalem Council, held last year on the Mount of Olives, was the basis of the program for both men and women, joint sessions were held, although separate Executive Committee meetings took place. The days held a rich experience and a feast of good things.

As proxy for Mrs. Winsborough, whose name proved a "sesame" at all times, Miss Janie McGaughey, the assistant secretary for the Woman's Auxiliary, attended the executive session of the Federation of Woman's Boards of Foreign Missions. The multiplicity of business matters, covering many phases of Foreign Mission work, served to impress on the hearer the large scope of the functions of (Continued on Page Two) adding that when these words were uttered America sorely needed men trained for leadership.

"Patrick Henry, James Madison, and six members of the first Virginia Conventions of '74-'76, founded the remarkable little College of Hampden-Sydney. For one hundred and fifty-three years, without once closing its doors, this College has continued to make its distinguished contribution to American life, steadily pursuing the ideal of producing leaders. Indeed, there were times when almost every important position in the State of Virginia, from Governor down, was filled by Hampden-Sydney men.

"The men it has educated have made an enviable record of honor in State and National service, in the creation of other great colleges and universities, in business, and in the professions.

"I am confident that there must be a great number of men and women today who have the clear vision to see what our forefathers saw—that the South must rise from amongst its own people, men capable of such leadership as Hampden-Sydney has produced."

BAINBRIDGE HAS GREAT MEETING

Dr. J. E. Ward, Presbyterian pastor and his people express delight and satisfaction with the meeting and the work of Dr. Thomas.

Dr. Thomas went from Bainbridge to conduct a meeting at Dade City, Florida. After the Dade City meeting, he goes to conduct another meeting at Plant City, Fla. The prayers and best wishes of the Bainbridge people go with him—The Post Searchlight.

NEW APPEALS FOR FAMINE RELIEF

with the promise of complete co-operation on the part of the Chinese Government, which has remitted all taxes, national and local, upon supplies and has guaranteed protection to the workers and supplies in the field. Direct administration of relief is under direction of the China International Famine Relief Commission of Peking (Peking) which, in the last eight years, has successfully administered application of more than $25,000,000. The funds are also expended under the supervision of a strong advisory committee composed of prominent American residents of China.

Contributions to the fund are being received by James A. Thomas, treasurer, China Famine Relief, U. S. A., 205 East 42nd Street, New York City.

PRESIDENT MARTIN TO RETIRE

Winston-Salem.
The board recommended that as early as possible an adequate and suitable infirmary should be erected at Davidson, that adequate endowments for the library be secured, that the number of student scholarships be increased, that the R. O. T. C. department be transferred to a temporary building in the rear of dormitory row, that the present building it now occupies be removed from the campus, and other minor matters pertaining to the campus grounds.

Professors E. A. Beaty, J. H. Davis, Jr., and W. P. Cumming, who have been acting as assistant professors, were elevated by the board to associate professorships. This election also carried with it an increase in salary, and the salaries of a number of the other professors were increased.

A year's leave of absence was granted Professors Fred L. Blythe and A. C. Gore for advanced study, Dr. M. E. Sentelle, dean, was also granted leave of absence in order to sail on May 13th for Palestine and other points.

Dr. C. R. Harding and Dr. W. R. Grey, who have been automatically retired under the annuity plan at Davidson, were both re-elected for another year.

VOCATIONAL GUIDANCE

and asked to seek interviews with the various speakers. Special emphasis is to be placed on those men who have not as yet decided on their life's work. It is hoped by the committee that if there is any vocation not listed which some one wants presented, he will see Bob Covington, Chairman.

The following is the number of those interested in various fields:

Law, 58; Medicine, 90; Business, 108; Education, 47; Journalism, 7; Engineering, 35; Ministry, 81.

INTERDENOMINATIONAL CONFERENCES

this body of women in interdenominational activity.

A luncheon, under the auspices of the Women's Interdenominational Missionary Council of Detroit, and the Federation, was given for women at noon of January 14th and was attended by more than one thousand women. An impressive message was brought by Mrs. E. H. Silverthorn who spoke of her experiences at Jerusalem where fifty-one nations were represented and where forty women from East and West lived together in one hut for two weeks. She stressed the unity in diversity, the realization of the common task for Christians in making the Lord known and the power of the Christian message as demonstrated by daily living the Christ life. Mrs. Silverthorn emphasized the fact that we are working together with the Oriental women as equals—not patrons but partners.

The principal speaker at this luncheon meeting was Dr. Stanley Jones who brought a challenging message of changing conditions in the Far East, of the complexity of problems to be faced and made a special appeal to women to remember what woman owes to Jesus. Dr. Jones will be remembered as the author of "Christ of the Indian Road," and "Christ at the Round Table."

The first joint session of the Federation and the Foreign Missions Conference was held on the afternoon of January 15, speakers from many lands bringing topics of world-wide concern. Outstanding among those who addressed the Conference during its sessions were Dr. Robert E. Speer, Dr. Diffendorfer, Dr. James Endicott, Dr. Soper, and Mrs. Thomas Nicholson. The address of Miss Lucy Wang, President of the Woman's College in Foochow, China, in which she told with exquisite simplicity of how she became a Christian, brought from Rev. James I. Vance, D.D., the Chairman of the Foreign Missions Conference, the statement that it was worth the expense of coming to Detroit to see and hear such a Christian leader.

Dr. Vance, as retiring chairman, made a stirring address on the last morning of the Conference, taking as his subject: "I am debtor." He pictured Paul as one who was not only conscious of his debt to the world, but who gave his life in payment of this debt. In closing he left with us this ringing challenge: "The great thing is not receipts but payment."

The following extract from the Findings will be of interest:

"We recommend that the Findings of the Jerusalem Conference be given a unique and vital place in the study and thinking of the Boards and of individual Board members during the coming weeks and months. These Findings and reports interpret the Challenge of the Gospel message for us here and now in the world as we actually face it. Far more important to the Foreign Missionary enterprise than methods of education or plans for promotion of interest; far more important than appeals to others for money, for service or for life enlistment would be the influence of a great host of missionary administrators and Board members whose lives in thought and action constantly and increasingly reveal the transforming power of Jesus Christ and of His own passion for the redemption of the world. We believe that the tender and compelling force of such a witness as this, together with the new earnestness of individual and united prayer which would result, could not fail to carry the missionary conviction deep into the hearts of many who have not been touched in any other way."

The newly elected Chairman of the Foreign Missions Conference is Miss Helen Calder, who has the distinction of being the first woman to hold that office. Dr. Egbert Smith was elected vice-chairman.

The results of these sessions of the Conference at Detroit cannot be estimated. The whole Foreign Mission task as it was presented through this Interdenominational Conference served to emphasize the importance of our own responsibility in the Foreign field. In addition, the Jerusalem Council became more real and vital, with its deep significance of extending the Kingdom and of carrying out the convictions as expressed in the Findings of the Council. They were days of rich inspiration and opportunity.

Janie W. McGaughey.

MERGER OF CHURCHES ABANDONED

Two Churches in Greensboro Which Rumor Said Would Unite Are to Continue Separate as Before

From clippings of January 28, dailies, sent to us last week from Greensboro, N. C., we published the item that the Presbyterian Church-by-the-Side-of-the-Road and Park Place Methodist were considering a union of the two congregations. It appears that this was an unfounded rumor, published without the authorization of the officers of the two churches, but regarded as a scoop by daily papers. It has been denied by the authorities of the churches, and in a letter from Rev. Dwight M. Chalmers, pastor of the Presbyterian congregation concerned, he says:

"The Church by the Side of the Road has just secured a title in fee simple to its four acre lot and has requested its pulpit committee to give all diligence in the prosecution of their work. It will observe Volunteer Day on March 10th and will continue the work to which it has committed itself and in which it has found such a fruitful and unreached field."

We publish the following clipping, sent us by Mr. Chalmers. Had we seen the last item in time, we would have killed the other story:

That negotiations between the Presbyterian Church-by-the-Side-of-the-Road and the Park Place Methodist church with a view to merging the two churches have fallen through was learned officially following a joint meeting of officials from the two churches. While a majority of officials of both churches were enthusiastic over this opportunity for interdenominational co-operation, it was felt that in a matter of so much importance there should be a fair degree of unanimity. Since this was lacking in both churches, the plan has been entirely abandoned.

Park Place church officials state they will go ahead with their plans of building a modern church building upon the lot which they now occupy. Their construction plans, in fact, had already been prepared and completed by the architect before the merger negotiations began, and this in itself created a difficulty in the way of merger, as it would have been necessary for the Park Place church in a measure to start over again with building plans.

At the time Rev. Dwight M. Chalmers accepted the call to the Charlottesville pastorate the Church-by-the-Side-of-the-Road appointed a committee to locate a pastor. This committee according to officials, will continue to seek a suitable pastor to succeed Mr. Chalmers.

That the Church-by-the-Side-of-the-Road has done an unique work in the past, officials believe is widely acknowledged and they point out that there is yet useful work for it in the future.

When about nine years ago, the old Bessemer Avenue Presbyterian church was reorganized into the Church-by-the-Side-of-the-Road, there was only one other church in the northern end of Greensboro, but in those nine years several churches have been established in the northern part of the city and all of them within a few blocks of the Church-by-the-Side-of-the-Road. Since the date of reorganization, this church has increased its membership from 16 active members to a present membership of 275 and in its nine years of existence has transformed a community, the church heads feel.

SCHOOL

"Scated on the front row almost every Sunday morning when the class is open by the teacher, Dr. S. H. Edmunds, three venerable members, W. J. Jenn, N. G. Osteen and S. D. Pierson, combined ages of these three totals years," notes the Sumter Item in an article about the Fraser Bible Class of First Presbyterian church of that city.

Mr. Jennings is 79, Mr. Osteen and Mr. Pierson 87.

"Very rarely is one of these faces missing when Doctor Edmunds begins his lecture every Sunday morning," The adds.

The class is named in honor of the Associate Justice T. B. Fraser of Supreme Court of South Carolina, for many years was its faithful teacher.

One of the Sunday schools in Lexington, Virginia, soon after the War Southern Independence offered a scholarship to the child who brought in most scholars, young or old. A five-year boy went to his friend, Gen. Robert Lee, then president of Washington College, and begged him, "Go with me our Sunday-school and be my new scholar." The little lad was sorely disappointed when the general told him he belonged to another church, but with his benevolence "Marse Robert," who was voted to children, said to him in a loud enough to be heard, as he interposed by a group of college students near by:

"Ah! we must all try to be good Christians—that is the important thing. I'm very glad that you asked me. It is that you are zealous in a good cause and I hope you will continue to be when you grow up. And I do not want you to think that I consider myself old to be a Sunday-school scholar. I have never become too old to study the cious truths of the Bible."

Can any other Sunday-school in South Carolina equal the record of Sumter three gray-haired Bible-class members?

HIS UNFAILING PROMISE

Many years ago Spurgeon said in one of his sermons, "If you take a Bank of England note to the counter of the bank in an instant that bit of paper turns into gold. If we take a promise of God to the mercy seat, it turns to what is better than gold—to our own good and the glory of the Father," he concluded.

Thus a beautiful truth is expressed in a beautiful way. There are many Christians to-day who can testify to its verity out of their experience. The truth with some of us is that we are not worthy to test these promises. They seem wonderful and too impossible of fulfillment for us even to put them to the test. Nevertheless is not God continually viting us to do this very thing? One else has said: "There never was a man who ran on heaven's bank which was promptly met. No creature in a world shall ever say that he drafted upon heaven, and that God honored it."

TO INSURE HAPPINESS

Today will be a happy day
If, first you find some time to pray
If, first, alone, you go apart
From worldly things, and, in your heart,
You make resolve to do your best
And then to God you leave the rest
For God will take the hate and fear
Of yesterday and yesteryear
And, in their place, He'll make you
The light and love He would reveal
Yes, this will be a happy day
If, friend, right now, you'll stop pray.

UNION WITH THE UNITED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

This matter will come before our Assembly for action at its meeting in May, at Montreat, it will be well for our Presbyteries to study it. Thus far there seems to be no insistent demand for it on the part of our ministers, barring two, Morris and Crowe.

Neither does there seem to be any enthusiasm in the U. P. Church.

It is true that their representatives at the Atlanta Assembly wooed us with honeyed words, and pictured a waiting church ready to receive us. Recently we read an article in the Presbyterian in which the writer gives strong reasons why such an union at this time would be unwise.

We reproduce his reasons why any union with the Southern Presbyterian Church would be a mistake. He was asked to reply to the questions for union advanced in the United Presbyterian Assembly.

The argument for spiritual unity is strong. The argument for organic union with a particular denomination is only by inference. Where there is spiritual unity, there will be the utmost harmony and co-operation in organic union. Separate denominations do not necessarily imply lack of spiritual unity. There may be the utmost unity and co-operation between the cotton growers of the south and the corn growers of the middle west, and each have their own organization.

Union with the Southern Presbyterians will hinder, retard or prevent, further union with other denominations, such as the Presbyterian Church, North. If there is to be no union, it might be better to begin where it would cause the least friction and where it would promote and not hinder further union. The writer generally conceded that there are greater reasons for union with the Northern Presbyterians where our work overlaps, and where of the same nature.

Entirely aside from the war-time sectional feeling and prejudices, it is a fact that there are radical differences in climate, races, mental temperament and manner of living which do not make for thorough understanding of each other. In some respects it is like a foreign country. We sometimes look at each other foolish and unreasonable, and do not wonder why things are done as they are. But later we learn that their methods are best adapted to their local conditions. This does not mean that they would be better adapted to our conditions. Previous to the election the Pathfinder said, "The race question in the south outweighs prohibition, union, and all other issues." Well, it does in the north. And how, pray, could there be a common understanding and harmony in regard to church matters, missions, institutions, and obligations to various races where such feelings obtain?

The method of union proposed at the last General Assembly would not be a real union. Here it is: "We recommend that all separate agencies shall continue as at present and that congregations shall continue to send their contributions through the customary channels. Amalgamation of the various boards and agencies shall not take place until recommended to the united Assembly by the boards and agencies concerned." When, think you, would these agencies themselves recommend union? The only real union would be in the General Assembly. And that would be very like two Assemblies, with reports and recommendations from two sets of boards and agencies. To say the least, the results would be confusing. These things "must give us pause."

5. The work, missions and institutions of the United Presbyterian Church of the north would be jeopardized. Be it remembered that our congregations, presbyteries, synods, missions and institutions, would remain intact, practically as they are. Then our agencies would function about as at present until they came up to the united General Assembly. And what then? Two things are apparent: There could not be complete knowledge or understanding, being so separated. The southern body is much the larger. The result? The majority rules. We could make ever so many recommendations, but what would they amount to if the majority did not understand them or recognize their value or necessity? Our budgets and programs adopted by our northern agencies to fit the northern needs would be in the hands of the southern Church.

THE BREAK-DOWN OF AN OLD FRIEND

The daily papers bring us sad news. Our old friend and former classmate, Rev. J. N. H. Summerell, has been paralyzed and is critically ill at his home in New Bern, N. C.

Fifty years ago we were classmates in the Union Seminary where he endeared himself to us all. Since we have been in this Synod we have renewed our old connection, so that the news of his breakdown brings sorrow to us.

Out of a class of twenty odd, only three men are in active work.

The question presses itself upon us, "Who will be the next one?"

POSTER MAKING

This is a book for the amateurs who wish to make posters for the church or other causes.

Miss Vandevanter, whose father was the beloved pastor of the Old Stone Church, near Staunton, Va., and passed to glory many years ago, is well known to all the frequenters of Montreat as she is a valuable worker under the direction of the Foreign Mission Committee. She has prepared some striking posters.

This little book has 53 pages with illustrations and simple directions as to the mode of working, with nine extra blank pages for sketches and suggestive memoranda relative to poster making.

OUR CHURCH AND THE FEDERAL COUNCIL

It is a saying much worn that nothing is settled, unless settled right, yet it is full of truth. Many questions in our Church relations are settled on the surface. Yet they persist in bobbing up, because they are not settled according to truth and justice.

Among these questions, that of our relation to the Federal Council is prominent. An examination of the Minutes of the General Assembly will show that, for years past, the question comes up whether we shall remain in the Council or withdraw. It is evident that throughout our Church there is a feeling that by reason of our connection with it, we are "Particeps criminis" in all that it does, no matter how far it has drifted from our historic position.

The chief argument in favor of remaining is the plea that we have representatives in it who by their presence exercise a restraining influence upon their acts, and thus keep them from more radical measures.

It is true that we have excellent men in the Council, but as Andrew said, when the Lord suggested that they feed the multitudes, "There is a lad here which hath five barley loaves and two small fishes; but what are they among so many?" We have evidently expected too much from these brethren.

At home they loom much larger than amid that crowd of dignitaries, representing other great bodies, so that as a scotch to the wheels of modernism they have not been a howling success. Dr. Cadman, the late president of the Council, was an extreme liberal in some of his views, yet he was so brilliant and lovable that all were tempted to bear with him, especially when they knew that his days at the head were numbered. The new president, Bishop McConnell, of the Northern Methodist Church, is reported to be tarred with the same stick if we may judge from the criticisms reaching us.

His latest book, "The Christ-like God," has been sharply attacked. In it he seems to emphasize the humanity of Christ at the expense of his divinity.

The following quotation from page 15, has been the special object of attack: "Is not this tendency to deify Jesus more heathen than Christian? Are we not most truly Christian when we cut loose from a heathen propensity and take Jesus simply for the character that he was and for the ideal that he is?"

We realize how unfair it is to take from any book isolated sentences and judge a writer by them, and though we find many such ambiguous sentences, we have tried to judge him by the general tone of the book.

The most charitable judgment is that he is trying to present a Christ that will appeal to the young men of today, who demand, as he thinks, a more human Christ than the theologians present. This is a task that demands a discriminating use of words on the part of the writer and a discriminating judgment on the part of his readers. It seems very unfortunate that one occupying such an important position as the head of the Federal Council should so express himself upon such an important doctrine as to leave his readers in doubt where he stands, especially when he is generally listed among the liberals of the day. Of course we have to make the best of a bad bargain.

We are in the Council, and we have representatives in it whose moral influence we have counted on to keep in the straight path those that are out of the way.

The Bishop emphatically denies the construction put upon his book, and we must accept his claims. If language is used, as the witty Frenchman claimed, to conceal thought, then the good Bishop must be a past master in the use of language.

Since the above was written we have seen a statement from Bishop McConnell in which he states that quotation does not represent his own views, but was what the critics he was trying to answer believed. He quoted those their views in order to answer them. We regret that he did not make that clear in the beginning. He would have saved much criticism if he had.

HAMPDEN-SYDNEY COLLEGE AND A NEW ORGAN

The old students of Hampden-Sydney College who remember the quaint old Church, designed by Dr. R. L. Dabney, will learn with surprise that "modernism," in the shape of a pipe organ, has crept into the old church.

It is the "Morton Memorial Organ" erected 1929, by Carrie Gilliam Morton, in loving memory of her husband, William Smith Morton, 1856-1928.

Christian and scholar, worshipper in this church of his fathers:

James William Morton 1821-1863, Dr. William Smith Morton 1787-1865, Major James Morton 1756-1847.

The cost of this organ was $5,000, one-half of which was paid by Mrs. Morton.

We recall the time when Cannon, Chester, Keff Smith and others led the singing by "word of mouth." Compared with those days and those "sweet singers," what an anachronism is a pipe organ! As the Latins had it, "Times Change and We Change With Them."

On February 17, 1929, there was held a service of dedication. Dr. J. D. Eggleston delivered an address on "The Mortons and their Connection with College Church."

THE BEST DISH

Luke 10:38-42

Rev. James Wyly Jackson

This visit of Jesus to the home of Martha and Mary is beautiful. He who had no place to lay his head found here in Bethany the nearest approach to a home which he knew during his ministry. A number of fine views of the life of Christ come to us from the walls of this home.

In Dr. Moffat's translation Jesus is made to say: "Martha, Martha, Mary has chosen the best dish, and she is not to be dragged away from it." In the footnote of the translation the author says that he gives us the word dish to bring out the point and play of the saying. "Jesus means that Mary has chosen well in selecting the nourishment of his teaching."

Worshipping at Jesus Feet

We see here a picture of Mary in her adoration of Jesus. It is a question of debate as to how many Marys there are in the New Testament, but if this Mary were the one whom Jesus redeemed from a life of shame we can readily see why she was sitting at his feet while the household duties were being done by Martha. Had it been another guest she might have been as busy as Martha, but Jesus was different. This beautiful spiritual character must let Jesus know over and over again that she appreciated his mission of coming to seek and to save that which is lost. She had that fine spiritual appreciation which was so rare in those who waited upon his ministry.

Martha has numerous admirers, and a host of sympathizers. Some people almost rebuke Jesus for rebuking her in their tributes to Martha. Kipling has a poem in which he says, "the sons of Mary cast all their burdens on the Lord, and the Lord lays the burdens on Martha's sons." But was Jesus finding fault with Martha's work? He was courteous, always a gentleman. Somebody has to get the cobwebs out of the corners, sweep the floors, dust the furniture, cook the meals and wash the dishes. He was not despising these careful efforts of Martha to please.

But there was a rebuke. Martha lost her patience, and her tongue became unbridled. Martha was distracted by many things. As Jesus saw the preparations and the many dishes he said, "but one thing is needful." Professor David Smith says, "It was a gentle rendering of the ancient proverb: 'Better a portion of herbs where love is, than a stalled ox and hatred therewith.'" Mary chose the best dish. She knew that quietness, peace and love in a home are worth more than many things. Martha was throwing a wet blanket over the home atmosphere. Nobody could enjoy a banquet if there were such a spirit as hers to dominate. There must be good cheer if good digestion is to wait on appetite. Martha's worry over the meal and her sharp tongue would take all the joy away from the occasion, and give everybody indigestion.

Sitting at Christ's Banquet Table

This is a picture for the banquet of life. Time and again we become flustered because there is too much of everything. Writers today are alarmed over the large production of articles which our manufacturers are turning out each year. They wonder if we are not rapidly reaching the saturation point. On the other hand there are students who worry over the over-population of the world. We do not know what to do with crowds. We have no more remedy than did the old woman who lived in a shoe. Almost everywhere you turn there is the complaint of too much. Bankers say there are too many banks; for the merchants there are too many stores; for the preachers there are too many sinners; for the doctors there are too many germs; and for the farmer there are too many bugs. We become distracted over the many things of life.

There are so many things to do in this interesting world. Life reminds you of your radio when you turn it on and there are three or four stations trying to 'come in' at the same time. There is a lecture by a professor, a jazz band, a political speech, and a good night story all bidding for your attention. Life is a library and there a thousand and one books on a thousand and one subjects making a clamorous appeal for your attention. In the midst of our busy life we become worried and wonder if the Master does not care that we are cumbered with many things.

Jesus does want to help all of the sons of Martha, as he wanted to help her. He has something to offer as a cure for the feverishness caused by anxiety. He does enjoin us not to worry. But the sons of Martha say, How can we keep from it? The total view of his teaching here is that we are not to worry over the things we can help. We are to help them. "It is not work that kills men; it is worry. Work is healthy, you can hardly put more on a man than he can bear. But worry is rust upon the blade. It is not movement that destroys the machinery, but friction." The things which we can help we must not worry about, because we can help them.

We are not to worry over the things we cannot help. "Which of you by being anxious can add one cubit unto his stature?" You are not to worry because you are not tall enough to see over your neighbor's fence. He may be worrying because he can see into your back yard. "Will worrying do any good?" If not, then stop it.

We can stop it by doing this, "Cast all thy burdens upon the Lord." In the command there is a promise. If this world were run by chance we would need to worry. But it is our Father's world and He is in control. God requests us time and again to put our affairs into His hands. Those who do it are not anxious over many things.

The Apostle Paul tried the remedy and found it workable. He commends the taking of our cares and anxieties to God in prayer. Instead of whining over your worries sing about them. "There are no wings like the wings of songs to bear away life's burdens." If we are to think of ourselves as birds in a cage let us choose to be singing canaries, and not dumb starlings.

Jesus wanted to help Martha. He wanted to show her the greatest necessity of all life's work, the spirit of adoration and praise. In the midst of the crowding, bustling life we have to live in our complex civilization we can find a calm. It has been found in those few minutes of prayer at the beginning of the day, in a few lines of poetry, in a devotional reading of the Scriptures, in a song, in worship. We are to keep in touch with Him and He promises to abide in us.

Choosing the Best Dish

Mary chose the best dish. What is the best dish for you? Dr. Halford E. Luccock gives a quaint story from the life of the English poet, Coventry Patmore. "He always refused to marry any one (he was three times wed) until he had lent the lady a clean copy of his favorite book. He would then ask her to mark the passages which seemed to her important. If they were what he considered the right bits the matter went forward." A question comes to us as to what we are marking as significant in the book of life. In the going to and fro to the many club meetings and attending various gatherings have you marked the hours of worship in the church as being important? In the multitude of books coming from the press have you marked the Bible as not only, "the book-of-the-month" but also the "book-of-the-day?" In the flood of newspapers and magazines have you marked your church paper as being first in importance? What is it you are marking?

In the realm of personal attributes what do you find as being the best dish? Sir William Osler in his lecture "Aequanimitas" marks two characteristics as being of the first rank. Imperturbability is one and equanimity is the other. Says he, "No quality takes rank with imperturbability. It means coolness and presence of mind under all circumstances, calmness amid storm, clearness of judgment in moments of grave peril, immobility, impassiveness, or, to use an old and expressive word, phlegm. The first essential is to have your nerves well in hand."

"There is a mental equivalent to this bodily endowment which is as important in our pilgrimage as imperturbability. A calm equanimity is the desirable attitude. How difficult to attain, yet how necessary, in success as in failure!"

Mr. Kipling in his poem "If" shows us what a really big word this little word is. In that poem he underscores some of the best dishes of the personal qualities.

"If you can keep your head." Mental stampeding is a common occurrence. Mr. Frank Kent in his book, "Political Behaviour" proves how few people there are in our country who really can keep their heads. Unfounded prejudices, mass movements, slogans, stamped their thousands every year.

"If you can wait." It is easy to be busy about many things but it is hard to wait. It is easy to offer many prayers, but it is hard to pray. The great dreams for ourselves and for the world do not come as mushrooms. When you know what you are after, "if you can wait and not grow tired of waiting."

"Or being hated, don't give way to hating." When we are hated we want to hate back. But "love is never irritated."

Have you ever tried the best dishes according to the poet?

Jesus presents us with "the best dish." He authoritatively proclaims, "I am the bread of life: he that cometh to me shall never hunger, and he that believeth on me shall never thirst."

We taste Thee, O Thou living Bread,
And long to feast upon Thee still;
We drink of Thee, the Fountain-head,
And thirst our souls from Thee to fill.

A STATEMENT

The Presbyterian Standard of February 13, printed an editorial in which very generous reference was made to me. Indeed it was all too generous. In the editorial mention was made of the fact that I had recently been elected chairman of the Executive Committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

The same edition of the Standard published a letter which was written by Dr. Henry M. Woods to Judge J. P. Hobson. In the letter Dr. Woods takes the ground that Bishop Francis J. McConnell, President of the Federal Council, denies the doctrine of the deity of Christ in the baldest terms, and that, therefore, our Church ought to withdraw from the Federal Council at once. Dr. Woods bases his accusation on five lines which a recent edition of the Presbyterian of Philadelphia printed from page 15 of Bishop McConnell's book, "The Christlike God." The quotation from the book reads as follows: "Is not this tendency to deify Jesus more heathen than Christian? Are we not most truly Christian when we cut loose from a heathen propensity and take Jesus simply for the character that he was and for the ideal that he is?"

If this quotation represents Bishop McConnell's views, then the situation is serious enough. I may say frankly that I would not be willing to serve on the Executive Committee of the Federal Council, or to have any connection with it whatever if the president of the Council denies the deity of Christ. To me that is an absolutely fundamental doctrine of Christianity. Let us turn to Bishop McConnell's book see if that represents his view. We turn to page and the above quotation is right there in plain language. But we must remember that the context everything to do with the meaning of a passage. The fourteenth Psalm and again in the fifty-th Psalm we find this statement: "There is no God." But when we turn to these Psalms for the context we find that the passage reads: "The fool hath said in his heart: There is no God." The context absolutely reverses the meaning of the passage.

A few days after it was announced that I had been elected chairman of the Executive Committee I received through the mail an unsigned, typewritten sheet calling my attention to the fact that Bishop McConnell is the new president of the Federal Council and giving the quotation from Bishop McConnell's book which is given in Dr. Wood's letter. I confess that I do not as a rule pay much attention to unsigned letters and statements, but this one struck me as dealing with a matter of vital importance had never seen or heard Bishop McConnell had never read any of his books. I at once went in search of his book, "The Christlike God." I found it in the library of a minister who is loved and trusted by our Church, and whose deep spiritual life I confess for myself. He told me that he had read the book through in connection with his morning devotion and had found it very helpful and had not noticed anything wrong with it. He was reading it devotionally and not critically. When he and I turned to page 15 there were the identical words which were quoted on the typewritten sheet and in Dr. Wood's letter. But when we read the context, we saw that it clearly did not represent Bishop McConnell's own view. He is dealing with doubters and critics and the questions about the deity of Christ are questions which he puts into the mouths of the critics in order that he might answer them.

As this matter was so vital I wanted to be sure that our interpretation was correct. I, therefore, wrote to Bishop McConnell and told him how serious the matter was to me. I also gave him my interpretation of this paragraph of his book. I wrote as follows: "As I understand page 15 of your book the questions which I have quoted from your book do not express your own convictions, but they are the questions which you put in the mouth of critics whom you mention in the tenth line from the top of the page."

I received this reply from Bishop McConnell: "Your understanding of the quotation from my book is entirely correct. I cannot see how anybody could have taken the point of view of your correspondent. I stated the position about the 'tendency to deify Jesus as more heathen than Christian' simply in order to oppose it."

I am not undertaking to defend all of Bishop McConnell's views. I do not know all of them. It does seem to me that the context in which the sage stands and Bishop McConnell's own statements are sufficient evidence that this particular passage in his book has been misunderstood and misinterpreted. I have gone through the book with some care, but have not found anything in it which would indicate that Bishop McConnell doubts the doctrine of the deity of Christ. The very title of his book, "The Christlike God," indicates that he believes in the deity of Christ. The main thought running through the book is that if you want to know what God is like, look at Jesus.

When Jesus was on earth, he said: "He that has seen me hath seen the Father." That is the thought in his book. Bishop McConnell states the purpose of his book as follows: "Assuming Christlikeness (on the part of God), I am sitting trying to see whither it will lead us in our thought of God." His chapter headings indicate some of the things which he learns about God when he looks at Jesus. There are thirteen chapters besides the introduction. In each one of the thirteen chapters the word "Divine" occurs. Some of them are as follows: "The Divine Personality," "The Divine Unity," "The Divine Unchangeableness," "The Divine Power," "The Divine Omnipresence," and so on for thirteen chapters. How could he learn all these "Divine" things about God by looking at Jesus, yet deny the deity of Jesus?

Here is one characteristic sentence from the book: "In short, the Christlikeness of God has been central to Christianity, and the church will not likely render a theology which seems to defend this Christlikeness except for a theology which defends it better." The book is written for doubters and critics. It is meant especially for college and university students who doubt the supernatural. It is not written in technical theological language. It tries to meet the critics and doubters on their own grounds. Southern Presbyterian ministers may not agree with all that is in the book, but they might find it suggestive of methods of approach to the minds of our own young people, why by their studies in various and sundry universities are losing their faith in the supernatural.

Perhaps it may be proper for me to say a few words before closing. I have never attended a meeting of the Federal Council or any of its committees. I am not familiar with all of its work. I have up with it in a general way. I have not approved of everything that it has done. However, I am myself in sympathy with the general purpose of the Council. The charter under which it is incorporated states its purposes in the following paragraph:

"The objects of said corporation shall be, to promote the spirit of fellowship, service and co-operation among the Churches of Christ in America, to secure larger efficiency in their work, to endeavor to pre-

NORTH CAROLINA

Laurel Hill—Dr. Wm. J. Martin, president of Dana College, who was to speak at the Church of Pines, Laurel Hill, in the interest of Flora Macdonald College, was unable to fill his engagement Sunday, February 17. Dr. A. M. Fairley, pastor of First Presbyterian Church, Raeford, very kindly stepped in on very short notice to speak in his place. Fairley's address commanded the attention of every present. Never has the cause of Christian Education and the service of Flora Macdonald College enjoyed so forceful presentation. Under the direction of Mrs. A. J. McKelway and with Eugene Morgan, Assisting soloist, the Presbyterian completed the leadership which made possible a blessed and long to be remembered service.

Red Springs — Flora Macdonald College—Dr. C. Vardell, President Flora Macdonald College, baptized his grandson, Baby Alexander Sprunt, III, Sunday afternoon, February 10th, 1929, in Charleston, S. C. He was assisted by Dr. Alexander Sprunt of Red Springs, who is also a grandfather of the baby. Baby Sprunt is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Sprunt, Jr., of Charleston, S. C. Mrs. Sprunt was formerly Miss Margaret Vardell, of Red Springs, N. C. Her father's (baby's) grandfather's are Presbyterian ministers. Three of his great grandfather's Presbyterian ministers, and his great, great grandfather—a Presbyterian minister—is buried in the old Scotch churchyard in Red Springs, S. C. The church in which the baby was baptized is the fourth Alexander Sprunt.

The following officers have been chosen to head the new class of Flora Macdonald College for the year 1929-30: Josephine Walker, Milboro, Va., President; Miss McConnell, Derita, N. C., Vice President; Miss Ruth McNeill, Archer, Fla., Secretary; Miss Sallie Kirby, South Boston, Va., Treasurer.

Le Creek—The Woman's Auxiliary of the Steele church hit upon a most happy plan to secure the interest of the Foreign Mission Study Book, "The Deeds of All Nations," by Dr. Egbert W. Smith. The plan was the nature of a contest among the Circles to see which Circle could get the most men and women, boys and girls, in the church, to read the book by the end of the Lenten Week. The contest became a healthy rivalry before the end of the week more than a hundred persons had read the book; many of these were men and young people. In some cases whole circles gathered together and had the book read aloud, and the topics discussed among them.

Wednesday of Self-Denial week a hundred men and women came together in the Community House and the day in the study of the book. Chapters one, two, and four were presented in pageant form, the subjects were discussed by men and women who had been to lead the discussion. It was a great day with the fact that practically all those present that day had read the book added much to the interest of the occasion. Everyone went away with a new enthusiasm for Missions. The reading contest created an interest in the book that the good work is still on, and it is the hope of the women to get a great many more to read the book before the year closes. A simple plan, but the most effective we have yet had, getting not only the women to read the mission book, but the men and the young people also. Now it is going to tell in the life of our church for years.

J. M. Walker, Pastor.

Presbytery of Granville will meet in the 11th session in the Presbyterian Church in Kenly, North Carolina, April 9th, 1929, at 11 o'clock, a. m.

J. S. Kennison, S. C.

Wetmoreville First—The entire group of young people of the Intermediate and Senior Young People Societies of this church were given a Valentine Social on Valentine's Day by Misses Kate Sutton and Virginia Smith, of the Intermediate work. The next evening Mrs. Charles G. Rose, Superintendent of the Junior Church gave a similar entertainment for the seventy-five children that compose her group. Church Secretary.

Wetmoreville, First Church—This church has recently experienced a most gracious revival. On January 21st, G. McLees of Chatham, Va., came and remained for several days. Dr. McLees is one of the best known pastors of our church. He is a preacher of great ability, of style in language and at the same time a sound, logical expounder of God's Word. Large crowds gathered each night and fine congregations every week. Much good was done, many lives reconsecrated and thirty added to the membership of the church. The Sunday preceding the meeting the Session of the church ordained and installed to the eldership Messrs. J. K. Nicholson, J. K. Sinclair and J. Murphy McDonough to the Diaconate, Messrs. C. G. McCreight, E. Norris and Thad S. Page, Mr. T. A. Norris having previously served as a deacon, was installed. These men increased the eldership to thirteen and the diaconate to fourteen, constituting a splendid body of men in character and in having the work of the church on their hearts.

Lynn R. Walker, Pastor.

Wetmoreville—The importance of stressing the Sunday morning church service from the point of view of the people should attend it to worship rather than out of curiosity or to be entertained, was stressed by Rev. H. Halley, talking to a group of ministers at a luncheon at the Presbyterian Church of the Covenant February 5th.

Mr. Halley gave his Bible recitals at this church. A large crowd heard him recite on the theme, "Life of Christ." He used as his subject the book of Revelation. Mr. Halley was introduced to the ministers by Rev. R. Murphy Williams.

Mr. Halley thought that church going ought to be put on a conscience basis rather than a convenience basis. He declared that everywhere he went he saw a pitiful lack of interest in the church service.

"In only three church have I seen full congregations recently and one of them is the Presbyterian Church of the Covenant. The average Sunday morning congregation has less than one-fifth of the church membership present.

Mr. Halley was in favor of all the church organizations being made subordinate to the Sunday morning congregation, which should be made the grand central meeting place for the whole congregation. Preaching is the important thing.

Salisbury—Dr. A. Y. Beatie, of Union Seminary, preached at the First church February 17, presenting the cause of the Seminary.

The attendance at Prayer Meeting for the Mission Study last Wednesday evening jumped from eighty-three, the week before, to ninety-eight. This time the women far out numbered the men. There were approximately twenty young people. Last Sunday afternoon twenty-five Juniors engaged in Mission Study at Children Endeavor making the total attendance for the School of Missions for the week 123.

Dr. J. E. Flow, Superintendent of Home Missions for Concord Presbytery, held a meeting in the Second Church continuing through last week.

Smithfield—Progress Presbyterian Church, which is the first brick church built in Boon Hill township, was dedicated Sunday, February 17. There was an all day session at the church with three preaching services. Rev. J. H. Gruver preached at eleven o'clock in the morning; Rev. Chester Alexander at 2:30 in the afternoon; and at the evening service. Rev. C. Logan Landrum preached.

After the morning service dinner was served on the ground by the people of the community.

The new church is built on a lot given by Dr. C. C. Massey, of Smithfield. Rev. J. H. Gruver, home mission superintendent of Granville Presbytery, and Rev. Chester Alexander, who is pastor of the church, say that the church could not have been built except for the fine co-operation of the community. A picture was taken of the church and all who helped build it on Sunday after the morning services.

Beginning Monday night and continuing for ten days or two weeks, a revival will be held in the church. Rev. J. Alston Boyd, of Townsville, and Rev. C. J. Hollandsworth, of Raleigh, were the preachers in this meeting. The music is under the leadership of Rev. Chester Alexander who rendered some special numbers from visiting musicians during the evening service.

Red Springs—Plans have been perfected for the making of a religious survey of the town, to begin Sunday afternoon, February 17. For the convenience of those making the survey the town has been divided into four sections. Each team of workers will be composed of four persons—a Baptist, an Episcopalian, a Methodist, and a Presbyterian; and each team will survey one section of the town.

This spirit of co-operation and good will is to be evidenced further when, during the week of April 7 to 14, the four churches of Red Springs will hold a series of union evangelistic services in the Presbyterian Church. Dr. Ashley Chappell, pastor of Central Methodist Church, Monroe, one of the great preachers of the South, has been secured as special preacher for these services. The Baptist Church will furnish a song leader.

Parkton—A delightful occasion was the four-course dinner given by Rev. and Mrs. Charles E. Clarke at their home honoring the officers of the Presbyterian Church of Parkton, of which Mr. Clarke is pastor.

In the living and dining rooms first breath of spring and ferns were used in abundance and green tapers carrying out the color scheme afforded a soft illumination for the beautifully appointed table. Covers were laid for fifteen.

Following the dinner a business meeting was held for the purpose of determining the budget for next year and discussing ways and means of raising it.

No man who has held the pastorate of this church has endeared himself to the hearts of the people more than Mr. Clarke and his family. Although he has been here only a short time already he is known and loved by everybody. The church is doing a wonderful work under his direction and the fact that he always has a large congregation proves that he is just as good a preacher as he is pastor.

TEXAS

Kingsville—Tex.-Mex. was delighted to be host on Thursday night, January 24th, for the district meeting of the Men-of-the-Church. This district comprises the churches of Corpus Christi, Kingsville, Alice, Robstown, Sinton, Taft, Aransas Pass, and Rockport. These churches are scattered over considerable territory, making more than 140 miles for some of the men to drive in order to attend this meeting. In view of this, we were gratified to welcome 68 men at our supper table, these representing all of the churches except Rockport. Miss Noell and her helpers served supper. Senior students, welcomed the men with a few remarks upon the school's meaning as a home mission enterprise. After two songs by Tex.-Mex. boys and the report of the president, Mr. Ward Terrell of Corpus Christi, Dr. Skinner spoke upon "Home Missions and Evangelism in Texas." Mr. H. N. Scott, of Kingsville, the secretary, then had "Something on My Mind," which he proceeded to get off his mind onto the minds of the rest of us. Dr. Storey of Corpus Christi made a good speech on "What has the Men's Movement done for my men?" by letting several of the men of his church make his speech for him. In the election of officers for the district organization, Mr. S. M. Purcell, of Robstown, was chosen as the new president, Mr. G. H. Harries of Taft vice-president, and Mr. H. N. Scott, of Kingsville, secretary-treasurer.

These quarterly meetings have meant much toward increasing the fellowship among the Presbyterian men of the different towns and the knowledge and understanding of the problems facing the individual groups and the church as a whole.

Austin—Austin Seminary has, in a very quiet and modest way, taken its place in the literary field. The recently published book, "Behind the Scenes; an Administrative History of Southern Presbyterian Foreign Missions," by Dr. Samuel H. Chester, is made up, except in its last four chapters, of lectures delivered by Dr. Chester in Austin Seminary in April, 1928, and is given to the public under the auspices and largely at the expense of the Seminary. Its handsome printing and binding are from those admirable printers of our General Assembly's Minutes, the great house of Von Boeckmann & Jones Company, Austin. It is singular that in all the notices we have read no allusion whatever has been made to the words printed on the title-page, "Lectures delivered at Austin Presbyterian Theological Seminary, April, 1928."

The Mexican Church has recently received twelve new members, most of them on profession of faith, and there are yet others expected soon to be received. The church has for several months been under the pastoral care of Rev. C. C. Williamson, instructor in the Spanish Speaking Department of the Seminary. A fine property has lately been bought in the eastern part of the city, for future and early development of this most promising church. At present the large residence on it is used as a dormitory for the Mexican students.

TENNESSEE

First Presbyterian Church, Columbia—The Woman's Auxiliary has concluded daily services scheduled for the Week of Prayer. On Monday and Friday afternoons prayer meetings were held and prayers offered up for each mission field by name, after an account of their especial needs had been read.

On Tuesday afternoon, Wednesday night, and Thursday afternoon our foreign mission study book, "The Desire of All Nations," was given intensive study. The different circles presented assigned chapters in any manner they chose, and the pastor, Rev. J. Frank Ligon, was given a chapter at the night service, and also preached a strong sermon on the preceding Sunday. The combined offering for the missions of the Auxiliary and the Church totalled over $300.00.

WEST VIRGINIA

Kanawha City—The Kanawha City Presbyterian Church closed a two weeks' revival meeting Sunday evening, January 27. The pastor, Rev. B. F. Sperow, did the preaching and the music was furnished by the regular choir and male quartette.

The middle section of pews was assigned to a different group each night. The Woman's Auxiliary had the largest number with 58 present, the men next with 40 present, and the young people with 35, each night assigned them. Three letters, one each week, were sent to all the members before the meeting began enlisting their co-operation. In spite of the bad weather that prevailed most of the time splendid audiences came out each night.

The last four nights of the meeting illustrated invitation hymns were thrown upon the screen, when the invitation was given. The visible results of this series of meetings were about 75 reconsecrations, and several professions. Five were received into the church Sunday evening, January 27, by letter and 12 upon profession, and still others were helped by the meeting and will probably come later.

SOUTH CAROLINA

Whitmire—A Foreign Mission School of Missions was conducted in this church recently under the direction of the pastor, Rev. Thos. C. Bryan. Sessions of the school were held three nights in succession. The ladies' class, with an average attendance of fifteen, was taught by Miss Julia Irby. The men were led in their study by the Pastor. The young people had a different teacher each session. A story hour was conducted for the children and they attended well. The approved mission study books were used as a basis for these classes. Following a forty-five minutes class period the whole school assembled in the main auditorium of the church to hear a foreign missions sermon. These were brought by visiting ministers. On the first night Rev. J. F. Matheson, of Union, spoke on the theme, "The Witnessing Gadarene;" the second night Rev. J. O. Mann, of Chester, preached on "Paul the Debtor;" on the final night Rev. J. W. Jackson, of Greenwood, spoke on "Why the Church?" All of these messages were inspiring and rang true to the great missionary theme.

Our pastor came to us from Mullins on November 1st. Previous to his arrival the church had been without a leader for several months. The work is going forward in a satisfactory manner and steady progress is noted. Then persons have been received into the fellowship of the church, four on confession of faith and six by statement.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S DEPT.

EDITOR'S SLOOKOUT

Rev. W. A. Gamble, Pinetops, N. C.

We were glad to be able to show in our columns last week, the current issue of Playtime suggestions, sent out by the Travel and Recreation Department of the International Society of Christian Endeavor.

The International Society of C. E. is probably the most completely equipped agency in the world for promoting young people's work. The Travel and Recreation Department, under Mr. Carroll Wright, is one of the newer units of the organization, but has already shown its practical usefulness.

Thinking that the monthly play suggestions would be helpful to our readers, we have arranged to run them each month so far as our space will permit. The suggestions may be re-distributed as much as possible, provided credit is given the department issuing them. Mr. Wright would like to have you send to him any good plans you have used. Address him at 41 Mt. Vernon St., Boston, Mass.

Do you read the Junior Society helps in our Young People's Department of the Standard? Of course you do. The writer is Miss Hattie Mae Covington, of Wadesboro, and we think she does the job well. Besides being a busy school teacher in Hamlet, N. C., and serving as superintendent of the North Carolina Junior C. E. work, Miss Covington manages to squeeze in some worthwhile moments in preparing our Junior helps.

We want to say this word of thanks to our Junior writer for the interest in boys and girls that prompts her to give her efforts to preparing the topic helps. Miss Covington would like to know how you like her suggestions, and what you would like to have her furnish that you are not getting at present.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S TOPIC

Sunday, March 10—Putting God In the Budget

1 Cor. 16:2, 2 Cor. 9:6-8.

Leader

This is the day the Southern Presbyterian Church has set for taking the Every Member Canvass. Many churches have taken the canvass today. Some have appointed teams to go around to visit each member of the church and secure from each one a subscription to the church budget, so that the officers of the churches may know whether the finances of the church will be adequately met by the collections for another year.

It is important that every member shall know what is being done, and therefore our young people's society ought to study this subject as well as the older members of the church. Let us consider some of the things connected with the financial side of our church work.

We are to think of this subject from the standpoint of God's interest in this matter, or as our topic puts it, Putting God in the Budget.

What Is a Budget?

A budget is a list of various items which stand for money to be raised and expended. It is important for all organizations to have a budget, and know as nearly as possible what will be spent during the year. Business concerns usually make a budget, and put down carefully what they must spend, and of course they must plan to raise the money to pay the expenses placed on the budget. Many families keep a budget, and assign certain amounts for such and such things, as rent, clothes, fuel, food, travel, recreation, schools, literature, the church, and so on. It is a good plan for everybody to make such a budget, so they will not go beyond what they expect as an income.

The budget is made on the hope of a certain income. A man with a large income can make a bigger budget than one with a small income. A church with a large subscription list can plan a bigger budget than a church with a small subscription.

What Is a Church Budget?

A church budget has two main parts, the current expenses and the benevolent causes. The current expense budget includes all items necessary for the work of the local church, such as the pastor's salary, the sexton, the fuel, lights, music, upkeep of the grounds and buildings, and many other things that make expense on carrying on the work of the church.

The benevolent budget comprises the amounts assigned to the causes of the church, Foreign Missions, Home Missions, Christian Education, Ministerial Relief, Bible publication, and many special causes that come up in an unexpected way.

Our elders and deacons get together and figure out what each church will need for its running expenses, adding a little more for some things that will come in which are not looked for. The benevolent budget is fixed by the Presbytery. The Presbytery makes out a list of what it hopes each church will try to raise for the causes on certain percentages. They ask the churches to give one-third they raise to Foreign Missions, one-sixth to Assembly's Home Missions, one-twelfth to the orphans, and so on.

Our Southern Presbyterian Church must raise $15,000,000 for its local church support, and $4,500,000 for the benevolent causes. This seems a large sum, but 450,000 people ought to be able to raise this much.

Young People and the Budget

It is important for our young people to know all about the budget and each one of them ought to do his and her share in raising the money for the budget. Some of us do not have much money to give. Many of us are in school, are having to work at home, and there is little chance to make money. But it is better for a child to have a share in giving to the church than for all the money to be put in by the parents.

Many young people are out of school and have jobs where they make some money. These young people ought to remember to share with God who gives them health, strength and opportunity to make money. Money represents our life. Our strength, our intelligence, our skill, our time are used in making money. Jesus has saved us, and given us our privileges, and he expects that we shall render to him an account of these things. We are stewards of the Lord, and must be faithful to our charge.

Studying the Budget

It should be a part of a young people's program to study our church budget, especially benevolent side of it. We should learn what we can about our Foreign Mission work, and become familiar with the countries we are sending missionaries to. We ought to study Home Missions, and see how great a part the church is doing in building up our great land. We should try to do our part as young people's societies to raise the sum asked by the General Assembly. They want the young people to raise $10,000 for China, especially for the medical work there. Then they are asking them to help support the Home Mission school, called Blue Ridge, at the Hollow, Va.

There are local causes, and causes in our own synods which the young people are asked to contribute to. We ought to find out about all these subjects, and our gifts will be the more intelligent.

Praying for the Budget

Let us not forget that giving is not all we should do about the budget, nor are we through when we merely study about them. Both our giving and our study ought to stimulate us to pray for these causes. By keeping these causes in our prayers, and asking for God's blessing on each of them, we will be very definitely putting God in the budget. We will recognize these different things as God's own causes, and will unite with Him in His great work of building up the Kingdom of Heaven among men.

The Calendar of Prayer published by our church contains the names of the workers and the places they work at in our church, and if we will use that as our guide in praying we will have a definite name and place to pray for every day of the year. These Calendars may be obtained from Box 1176, Richmond, Va., for 15 cents apiece.

POEMS

The Fellow Who Thinks He Can

If you think you are beaten, you are;
If you think that you dare not, you don't;
If you think you'd like to win, but can't,
It's almost a cinch you won't.
If you think you'll lose, you've lost,
For out in the world you find Success begins with a fellow's will;
It's all in the state of mind.

Full many a race is lost
Ere even a step is run,
And many a coward fails
Ere even his work's begun—
Think big, and you deeds will grow.
Think small, and you'll fall behind;
Think that you can, and you will;
It's all in the state of mind.

If you think you're outclassed, you are;
You've got to think high to rise
You've got to be sure of yourself before
You ever can win a prize—
Life's battles don't always go
To the stronger or faster man;
But soon or late, the man who wins
Is the fellow who thinks he can.

French and Camp.

Pluck wins! It always wins! The days be slow
And nights be dark 'twixt days that come and go—
Still pluck will win; its average is sure;
He gains the prize who will the most endure;
Who faces issues; he who never shirks;
Who waits and watches, and who always works.

Have incidents told in lives of men who never gave up. The following characters might be used: Christ, Daniel, Paul, David Livingstone, Patrick Henry, Washington, Lincoln, Nathan Hale, Lawrence.

Talk: "Keep On; Don't Give Up"

Keep a stiff upper lip
Endeavor to keep going.
Earn a reputation for sticking to a thing.
Persevere until you attain success.

Onward, ever onward,
Never falter.

Do not turn aside from your purpose
Only pay heed to good advisers,
Never to evil advisers.
Take Jesus for your example.

Get in touch with Him through prayer
Intend to make good.
Vow that you will—
Even through hardships.

Uphold the banner of Christ.
Put on the armor of faith.

CHURCH NEWS

DEATH OF JOHN S. MUNCE

John S. Muncie, president of the Board of Theological Seminary, died in Rich Va., February 24, 1929. His loss will be keenly felt by the seminary to whose interests he was devoted as a fine specimen of the intelligent Presbyterian eldership.

NORTH CAROLINA

Charlotte—Tenth Avenue—A successful Bible conference was held in this church last week. The services were indeed gratifying, although we were somewhat hampered by the weather of the winter. The speaker was Dr. R. A. Belsham, of Augusta, Ga., who taught the Book of Daniel at the afternoon sessions with blackboard outlines, and at night preached themes connected with the Premillennial view of the Second Coming. Our people were greatly interested and a deeper study of the word of God was followed. Dr. Belsham's instructive and entertaining sermons.

The meeting was strictly a Bible conference and we are expecting to have some evangelistic meetings at a later date.

Dr. Belsham is pastor of Druid Park Avenue Independent Church, of Augusta, Ga., and has developed a large and enthusiastic body of members who are especially interested in the deeper life studies. Dr. Belsham is from England originally. He is the son-in-law of our pastor, Rev. E. A. Dillard. While a pastor in Augusta, Dr. Belsham holds Bible conferences of the type just closed. He held one recently at Florence, S. C., and will soon hold one at Macon, Ga.

Tenth Avenue is to have a pastor's assistant, George M. Chenot, of Tiffin, Ohio. Mr. Chenot is director of music, and will have charge of the people's work in this church. Choirs will be organized among different groups, also an orchestra. Aggressive plans will be put into operation to attract the interest of the people in the community surrounding the church.

Mr. Chenot is an accomplished musician, and prepared to perform on the organ, the piano, and band instruments. He also is a song leader and soloist. He will begin his work about March 10.

Laurinburg—Dr. Lacy Little, missionary of the Presbyterian Church to China, and moderator of the Synod of North Carolina, made an address on Tuesday evening at the Presbyterian church. Dr. Little came here in the interest of the Church's cooperative program and in advance of the every member canvass which is to be made March 10.

His talk Tuesday evening was a graphic and intensely interesting recital of his experiences and observations as an active missionary in China. Dr. Little was stationed at Kiangyin, China, one of our missionary outposts.

Flora Macdonald College, Red Springs—In spite of the inclement weather 12 students and two teachers from Flora Macdonald College journeyed to I. Hill Friday night, February 15th and presented a program in the high school building under the auspices of the Flora Macdonald College Alumnae Association of Laurel Hill.

Those who went said the night could scarcely be called a success, viewed from the standpoint of weather, but many were present in spite of it, and the program was much enjoyed by all present.

Rev. A. R. McQueen, Dunn, N. C., a trustee of the college and one of the directors of the Endowment Campaign was the principal speaker and was introduced by the Hon. E. H. Gibson. Mr. McQueen made a thoughtful and practical appeal based on the "Future of Flora Macdonald College."

Winston-Salem Presbytery met at the call of the moderator in the Presbyterian Church of Winston-Salem, N. C., on Monday, February 15, 1929.

There was a full attendance of the members of the Presbytery. A number of ladies representing the Woman's Auxiliary together with other visitors were present.

An interesting round table discussion of the program of our church was held with Rev. J. R. Gregor, chairman of the Stewardship Committee, presiding. Dr. D. C. Lilly made an address on Benedictions. General Assembly's Home Mission Committee was requested to appropriate to Winston-Salem Presbytery $1,950.

The need of an administration building for the Valley High School was presented. The Presbytery requested the trustees of the school to meet at an early date and take some action in regard to the matter.

The ladies of the Mt. Airy Church served luncheon at the hospitable home of Mr. and Mrs. D. E. Man.

who tune in on these stations Sunday afternoon from 6 to 7 o'clock.

LOUD SPEAKERS IN CHURCHES INVITE YOUR FRIENDS

We would like for every Presbyterian in North Carolina to hear one of these speakers. This is possible. If you not have a Radio placed in your church with a speaker or other amplifying arrangements, and invite your congregation to be present, join in the singing of the hymns and hear a good message? The people would be glad to come and would be greatly profited by the hour of good music and fine thought. If this cannot be done, urge those who have Radios to invite their friends to share this program with them in their homes. Remember the date, Sunday, MARCH the THIRD, 6 to 7 p. m.

GIVE PUBLICITY—PRAY

Please make announcement of this program from the pulpit next Sunday and give as much publicity as possible through your church Bulletin and otherwise as possibly can. Thank you. PRAY FOR GOD'S

MEMORIAL TO MRS. HALL

Wilmington Presbyterial Auxiliary has recently placed on the wall of the Ladies Parlor in the Church House of the First Presbyterian Church a handsome bronze tablet, in memory of its first President, Mrs. Margaret Sprunt Hall. The unveiling of this tablet occurred on December 3, in the auditorium on the second floor of the Church House, with a remarkably large attendance of members of the Presbyterial, of Mrs. Hall's family connection, and of other friends.

In the absence of the President of Wilmington Presbyterial, Mrs. W. T. Bannerman, detained by sickness, the Vice President, Mrs. Andrew J. Howell, presided, and the following program was rendered:

Hymn—"O God of Bethel."

Prayer—Rev. A. D. P. Gilmour, D.D.

Sketch of Mrs. Hall—Mrs. Andrew J. Howell.

Scripture Readings—Past Presidents of Wilmington Presbyterial.

Address—Rev. Peyton H. Hoge, D.D.

Unveiling of Tablet—Miss Jean Hall.

Prayer—Rev. Andrew J. Howell.

Benediction—Rev. A. D. P. Gilmour, D.D.

Peculiar interest attaches to the fact that the address upon this occasion was made by the Rev. Peyton H. Hoge, D.D., who was pastor of the First Church at the time of the organization of the Presbyterial, and it was due to his interest and encouragement that Mrs. Hall and a few other women were able to do the pioneer work of that day. Dr. Hoge's address was heard with the keenest interest and appreciation by the audience assembled.

Following Dr. Hoge's message, the program was concluded in the Ladies' Parlor, where the tablet was placed After the unveiling by Miss Jean Hall, the youngest granddaughter, Miss Sue Hall read aloud the inscription upon the tablet, which was as follows:

"To the Memory of
MARGARET SPRUNT HALL
1844—1914

Who organized here on May 30, 1888, and became the first President of Wilmington Presbyterial Auxiliary, the first Presbyterial Auxiliary in North Carolina and the second in the Southern Presbyterial Church.

In thanksgiving to God for her blessed life of service this tablet was erected in 1928 by Wilmington Presbyterial Auxiliary."

The following sketch of Mrs. Hall was read at the meeting:

"In the year 1844, on the 20th day of October, there was born on the West Indian Island of Trinidad a little girl named Margaret Tannahill Sprunt. Her early life was full of interesting adventures, for her parents soon sailed with her across the wide ocean, back to their native Scotland, and then when she was eight years old, they sailed back across the Atlantic to make their home in Wilmington, North Carolina, where they and she, with their other children, were to live long lives of usefulness and integrity.

Years passed, and the little Margaret Sprunt grew into fair young womanhood, married, and, with her husband, B. F. Hall, who is still living, established a Christian home, which has ever been a model of hospitality, and from which has flowed streams of blessing, even to the other side of the world.

She was a woman of vision, and, early seeing the latent power for good struggling for expression in the few small missionary societies of Wilmington and nearby towns, she, with the wise advice and indispensable help of her pastor, Rev. P. H. Hoge, D.D., began the task of interesting the societies in banding themselves together for mutual helpfulness and inspiration. None of us today can realize the discouragements experienced by Mrs. Hall, the indifference of the women sometimes, the occasional strong disapproval of the men, and only the strength that came from her life of prayer, enabled her to bear the burden of her twelve years of pioneer work.

After twelve years of service as President of the Missionary Union of Wilmington Presbyterial, now the Presbyterial Auxiliary, Mrs. Hall retired in favor of Mrs. Jackson Johnson. But as long as she lived she was deeply interested in the growth of the woman's work, actively for years, and then when pain and weariness became her portion, she constantly carried her Presbyterial on the wings of prayer to the Throne of Grace, until on April 26, 1914, she was called home to receive her starry crown."

OUTFITTING MISSIONARY CHILDREN

A Paying Investment

The many Auxiliaries who are interested in helping to provide outfits for missionary children returning on furlough will be interested in the following quotation from a letter just received from a missionary mother whose little family are receiving this help:

"This good news lifted a burden from my shoulders and it made my heart very grateful that God has raised up such kind helpers. I know He will richly bless them for it is a labor of love to Himself—this caring for these little ones of His. This thought of helping missionary mothers to prepare for their long journey home and their stay in the homeland was Christ-inspired, and I am sure it has caused many busy mothers to bless those who carry it out. I am most grateful for this help, as I can give myself more fully to the work in the few months that are left."

The Missionary mothers do not have all the pleasure, however, for a letter from an Auxiliary outfitting another family contains the following:

"I am sure their joy will not compare with the joy we have had doing this work. Thank you for giving us our part in it."

Nearly forty children are accepted for outfitting this year, but a few still remain. Who will volunteer to help?

Mothers with grown sons and daughters already in college will surely be interested in helping those of missionary families who are coming to the homeland to enter college this fall. There are also two or three children of earlier age not yet accepted.

The names will be assigned in the order that requests are received. Write to the Department of Woman's Work, 270-77 Field Bldg., St. Louis, Missouri.

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY, AND POLITICS

The Standard, of February 6, had three excellent editorials, one, I imagine, by each of the three editors. The one I wish to speak of now is the one entitled, "Religious Liberty, What It Is." Speaking of the press discussion last fall it says:

"In these press discussions we were impressed by the lamentable ignorance of Church History on the part, not only of the politician, but also of the able and learned men of the bar. They may know law, but their knowledge (wouldn't ignorance be a better word?) of the history of the church is deplorable."

To all of which I say, Amen and Amen.

And as for the logic of the professor of Church History in the Catholic University here in Washington, it amounts to this:

1. The Constitution guarantees religious freedom and equality.

2. Protestants, Romanists, Mormons, Atheists, Buddhists, etc., are therefore equally entitled to hold any office for which they get votes enough.

3. Therefore, a voter must vote for a candidate of whom he disapproves in order to be liberal, and to show how free and equal we all are!

This leads me to say that my pastor, Rev. Dr. James H. Taylor, pastor of the Central Presbyterian Church here, conducts each week for his young people a class in Church History. It adds a great deal to manifold labors; but these young folks, in so far as they remember his teachings, will be well informed on the salient facts of Church History. From 60 to 75 meet with him each Friday night.

Another matter, in that same article the editor came mighty close to discussing politics—a thing the Standard rigidly eschewed last fall, its principle being that a religious paper must steer entirely clear of politics. To my way of thinking that is an unfortunate position to take. The religious press can rightly discuss a great variety of matters not suitable to the pulpit; and even the pulpit has a perfect right within reasonable and Christian limits, to discuss politics; because it has not only the right but the duty to "declare the whole counsel of God," which will, of course, include our duties to Him and to fellowmen. What is (or are, if you choose) politics? Our duties as citizens; because the word comes from the Greek word for citizen. Who will pretend that our guide book, the Bible, failed to give us full directions as to these duties, as well as regards all other duties? Do we not find a great deal of practical politics in the Old Testament? If a minister wants to enforce the sacred obligation of treating Ezekiel, chapter 17, will give him all he needs, order to show how God views making "a scrap paper" out of a solemn treaty. And did not the blessed Lord once take part even in partisan politics? The Herodians and the Pharisees usually hated another bitterly. But their hate of Him was greater still; and so, as "politics makes strange bed-fellows" they united in an effort to entrap Him. Did He not say "I am a preacher of righteousness, and cannot go to politics"? No. He called for the penny and gave an answer showing their duty to the Roman Emperor. Is the pulpit to be barred from discussing any of our duties, bringing them all to the touchstone, being primarily duties to our Maker?

Suppose it were proposed by one candidate for Mayor in Charlotte to legalize gambling halls as a "red light district," while another candidate was fighting it as hard as he could; must a religious paper keep silent, instead of throwing itself into the campaign with all the force and earnestness possible? Why, every pulpit in the city should ring with denunciation of the proposal to corrupt the citizens.

I know very well the excuse commonly given. They quote Paul's statement that he was determined to know nothing among the Corinthians "save Jesus Christ and Him crucified." Even the advocates of the vilest measures can usually quote that much Scripture—and Satan could quote a great deal more. Oh, the law-breakers love to shut the mouths of Christian heralds and to close the columns of religious papers by pleading for "The Simple Gospel." "Simple Gospel" indeed! As Mr. Wm. T. Ellis well said, our Lord did not preach a "Simple Gospel." His gospel was one that, if obeyed and lived up to, would create visions and dissensions. "I came not to send peace but a sword;" and the sword of the Spirit, if used faithfully, should be sharp in the hearts of our enemies.

One great reason for the disrepute of politics is just this very idea that the Christian pulpit and the Christian press must keep quiet; and in so far as this is done, just in so far will the enemies of a righteousness rejoice at throttling the two most powerful forces that should oppose them.

Read Paul's letters to the Corinthians. Did he limit himself to writing about "Christ and Him crucified"? Not by a good deal. "The whole counsel of God" covers far more ground than that. Witness bearing for truth and righteousness involves more than mere neutrality when an issue is made between obedience to law and violation of law; between obeying earnestly for a pure church, and showing the encroachments of a corrupt and apostate church.

To do all this "with meekness and fear" requires great grace; but yet, Paul enjoined sharp reproof (Titus 1:13), and told Titus not to let any one despise him (2:15).

"The church folk are a negligible quantity" said a prominent publicist in this city to Mr. Ellis; and that feeling removes a great deal of restraint to those who neither fear God nor regard man.

A STATEMENT

their duplication of effort and expenditure and increase their influence by united action in every department of their operations, at home and abroad.

The Constitution of the Council states its purpose as follows:

"The object of this Federal Council shall be:

1. To express the fellowship and Catholic unity of the Christian Church.

2. To bring the Christian bodies of America into united service for Christ and the world.

3. To encourage devotional fellowship and mutual counsel concerning the spiritual life and religious activities of the churches.

4. To secure a larger combined influence for churches of Christ in all matters affecting the moral and social condition of the people, so as to promote the application of the law of Christ in every relation of human life."

I have, no doubt, that it was these purposes, which are so finely stated in the charter and constitution that caused our General Assembly, a number of years ago, to vote to enter the Federal Council; that it is these purposes which have caused our General Assembly, year after year, to vote to re-appoint to the Council. It is the one organization through which the Protestant Churches of America express their unity, and the one way they have of cooperating along the many lines of Christian activities which they are all engaged in.

Why I Believe in the Every Member Canvass

And Observe March Third as a Day of Prayer for its Success

- I. BECAUSE the Every Member Canvass plan offers me the privilege of regular, weekly participation in Christ's three-fold ministry of preaching, teaching and healing. My weekly gifts on the E. M. C. plan to pastor's salary, current expense and benevolences let's me minister to the bodies, minds and souls of men through orphanages, schools, colleges, seminaries, relief, missions, evangelism, and extension.
- II. BECAUSE by contributing regularly, systematically and proportionately, along with the other 444,656 members of my Church, though I cannot personally build a college or support a missionary, I can share in the whole Church task.
- III. BECAUSE the E. M. C. plan of giving enables me to take some part in the whole work of Christ every week instead of at infrequent "special collection" times.
- IV. BECAUSE the E. M. C. plan enables me to minister to the needs of all ages, classes, creeds and nationalities at home and abroad, and participate in the widest, richest, biggest, fullest program to be found on earth.
- V. BECAUSE it offers me the opportunity to help carry out God's plan of financing His Kingdom, by which God's people bring God's money to God's House on God's Day for God's work on the basis of one-tenth as a beginning and gifts according to ability and willingness.
- VI. BECAUSE the E. M. C. plan insists on "Every Member Growing in the Grace of the Regular Worship of Giving" which places the support of Christ's work on a permanent principle rather than a temporary appeal.
- VII. BECAUSE the E. M. C. plan is the soundest, safest, surest and most spiritual and Scriptural way we have found to enlist every member in the perpetual effort to consistently obey Christ's command that we go into all the world.

CHILDREN

THE CHANGE IN SETSUKO

Pale little Setsuko sat very still in her new chair and timidly listened to what her teacher was saying, her eyes growing wider and wider every minute. She had never heard anything at all like it before.

"And so, because Christmas is Jesus' birthday, we celebrate it by trying to help other people," the pleasant voice went on. "Do any of you know Jesus?"

At that all around the circle black eyes twinkled and little hands were eagerly lifted. "I know him! I know him!" answered a chorus of voices.

Setsuko didn't join them, because she knew nothing at all of the Man about whom the teacher spoke. She began to wonder who he could be.

"And now what shall we sing?" the teacher asked.

"Jesus was a little child, please," said a funny little boy in the seat next to Setsuko.

Everybody seemed glad at that. The helper sat down at a queer black box with white things on it, and made some music come out. The funny boy didn't seem to know the words very well—perhaps he was rather new, too—but he sang lustily, keeping a safe distance behind the others, so as to catch the words from them.

"Let's sing 'Jesus loves me' now," said the teacher. "You know the words of this, Taro Chan, so see if you can keep right with the rest of us. It sounds better that way."

But even then Setsuko could understand only a little of what the song was about; for her funny neighbor, anxious lest he be left behind, rushed a line ahead of everybody else. Still she caught some of the words, and they were very strange and very interesting.

Gradually the hours wore by. Setsuko watched everything that happened and did what the teacher told her, but she never said a word. She wondered how Taro Chan could dare to cry as he did. Of course it was very strange that the teacher wouldn't let him have his nurse right with him all the time if he wanted her, and queer, too, that he had to do what she said even when he didn't want to. But still Setsuko would not have dared to cry in such a place as kindergarten.

Later on, when Taro Chan had stopped wailing, he was allowed to come back into the circle beside her.

"I am not going to cry any more," he confided. "It isn't nice to cry; teacher says it doesn't please Jesus."

But shy, frightened little Setsuko said never a word and only wondered again who Jesus was.

At home, when bedtime came that night, she told her mother; but mother did not know about Him either.

"Now that you have begun to go to kindergarten, and have grown to be such a big girl, you will not mind if I carry the light away, will you?" she said, after the story of the day's happenings was ended.

"O no, no! Don't do it!" screamed Setsuko. "Don't do that; I am so afraid in the dark!"

"There, there, never mind," said her mother quickly; "I'll leave the light."

"Poor child!" sighed her mother when, after a long, long time, the sobs had quieted down into deep-drawn breaths and Setsuko slept. "Do you suppose she ever will be strong and rosy-cheeked and unafraid, like other children?"

"Perhaps the kindergarten will help her," said the grandmother, but secretly she shook her head. "Setsuko was born on an evil day," she muttered. "Nothing can make her like other girls."

But the grandmother was mistaken. From the very beginning Setsuko told wonderful tales of what was done in the kindergarten—of the songs about birds and soldiers and sunshine and harvest and the Man named Jesus; of the Mother Goose rhymes and the dances and the games that were played. After a little while she brought home a folded boat and the colored pictures she had made, and showed them shyly. One day mother heard her humming the music of "London Bridge" under her breath, and a month or so later she joined a group of children next door and played "Oats, peas, beans and barley grow" as if she had been playing!

IN AND OUT

(To be colored with paints or crayons.

"Oh! See this picture, Teddy!" cried Susie May.

"Yes, let's paint it!" answered Teddy. "You see it is the March Lion and Lamb!"

"The lion should have a BLACK mane and have RED mouth!" decided Susie May.

"His coat can be tawney YELLOW (mix a bit of BROWN with it) and his eyes YELLOW!" said Teddy. "I think his ear should be YELLOW (tawney color) too!"

"Oh, now what shall we color the dear little Lamb?" cried Susie May.

His eyes can be BLUE and his mouth RED, and his nose and toes BLACK!" answered Teddy.

"His coat must be left White, but we can use very, very light BLUE for shadows, to make him look softer—we can paint near the black lines and his legs can be shaded on either side."

"The sky must be BLUE-GRAY

(use the colors mixed), and the GREEN with a lot of BROWN each in the foreground!" said Teddy.

"Shall we paint the border GREEN and the lettering RED!" asked Susie May. "Those are my favorite colors."

"Yes," replied Teddy. "As you are a March lady!" Of course he meant Susie May had a birthday in March.

"I wonder which will come first the Lion or the Lamb!" said Susie May. "I love them both anyway!"

games all her life. When spring came she begged to join the special party from the kindergarten which was going to the zoo in a special trolley car.

Grandmother looked surprised enough. "Why, she is not afraid of the animals any more, is she? And I do believe her cheeks are as rosy as even Taro Chan's when she gets excited," she said to mother after Setsuko had bowed low and gone out of the room on dancing feet which would not quite walk soberly.

But the biggest proof that Setsuko was exactly like other children, after all, came in the fall, when she had been in kindergarten a whole year. By this time she was going to Sunday school, too, and even father and mother had begun to go to the kindergarten teacher's church.

Mother had seen her all comfortably rolled up in her quilt, on the floor, and was just starting out of the room when a sleepy little voice said: "I don't want the light any more, mother. Please take it away."

Mother could hardly believe her ears.

But Setsuko added simply: "You see, Jesus does not sleep, and he keeps watch all night long; so I don't need a light any longer."

"Well, well! Well, well!" said grandmother when she learned about it. "I would not know that she was the same child. I wish I had some more grandchildren to send to the Imadegawa Kindergarten."—Selected.

HAS FOUR DOLLS

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl nine years old. I go to Sunday school every Sunday I can. I haven't missed a Sunday this year. My Sunday School teacher is Miss A. B. Stalvey. I like her very much. I have four dolls. For pets I have a dog, name Jip.

Hope Mr. W. B. is on a visit as I want to surprise my mother and daddy.

Your friend,

BAPTISM AND THE LORD'S SUPPER

13:17; 28:19-20; Acts 2:38-41; Romans 6:1-14; 11:23-29. Print 28:19-20; 1Cor. 11:23-29.

Each week we centered our thoughts on the Christian sacraments. It is right this week that we should study the great sacraments of the church, baptism and the Lord's Supper. The worship of the church has varied from age to age, but these two ordinances have been observed from the very beginning. We are thoroughly familiar with both as they are practised by our own branch of the church, but after all what do we know about their significance? Take baptism for example. Where and how did it originate? Why do all Christian churches continue to baptize? Why do the baptists baptize by immersion, the Presbyterians and others by sprinkling? Does the form make any real difference? What is the meaning of baptism—for adults? For children? Or take the Lord's Supper. Why do we observe the Lord's Supper? Just what does it mean, and what value does it possess? What difference is there between the Protestant Communion and the Roman Mass? Why do the passages assigned and put down the answer to these and any similar questions that are in your mind.

I. BAPTISM

What is the origin. Where did the sacrament of baptism originate? The earliest recorded baptism that we have is that of John the Baptist. We read in Mk. 1:4 that "John who baptized in the wilderness and preached the message of repentance unto remission of sins." Did John baptize by the rite? We do not know. We know that the Jews baptized their proselytes by the end of the second century, and perhaps they baptized as early as the time of John, but we cannot be certain. In any case the baptism that John practised was probably an outgrowth of the various washings prescribed in the book of Leviticus. We read there that various utensils were washed and they became ceremonially unclean, and that individuals were purified in the same way, after leprosy for example (Levit. 14:7-8). Toward the end of Israel's history, Ezekiel prophesied that the time would come when God would purify the nation. He delivered God's message to him: "I will sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean; from all your filthiness I will cleanse you. A new heart will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you; and I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh, and I will give you a heart of flesh." Ezekiel 36. John was convinced that he was sent by God to baptize in the new order, and words like those of Ezekiel would lead him naturally to institute the rite of baptism. Jesus carried on the work of John, and continued the rite, though we read that Jesus himself did not baptize, but his disciples (Jn. 4:2). Then when his earthly mission with them was over he laid it upon them as a solemn duty to make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit. Mt. 28:19. The Church then continued its converts from the very beginning, and has continued to do so to this day, in obedience to what it perceives to be the command of its Lord.

What is the method. What about the method? How did it originate? It is an interesting fact that the Bible doesn't seem to take much interest in the method. It doesn't tell us definitely, in just so many words as to how John baptized, or just how Jesus had his disciples baptized, or just how they were to baptize in all ages to come. We have to go back and draw deductions from all sorts of facts, the influence for example of the Bible's words, and the primary meaning of the word baptism, and the possibility or impossibility of immersion. One thousand converts in one day in the city of Jerusalem, and the significance of the rite itself. When we begin to argue about these facts they come to us in conclusions. Baptist scholars say that there is doubt about it at all, baptism in Bible times was by immersion. Scholars from other churches are likely to draw exactly the opposite conclusion that in the Bible baptism was by pouring or by sprinkling. The reference that we have in the Church, after New Testament times indicates that both methods were used, immersion was the common form, but pouring or sprinkling was also allowed. This reference is found in the Bible, a manual of instructions written about 150 A. D. says: "But concerning baptism, thus shall ye baptize. Having first recited all these things, baptize in the name of the Father, and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, in living (i. e. running) water. But if thou hast not running water, then baptize in any other water; and if thou art not able in cold, in warm. But if thou hast not water, pour water upon the head thrice in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit." This method continued to be the common form of baptism for several centuries, but at last sprinkling or affusion was more convenient came to be the sole form of baptism in the western church was concerned. When the Reformation Churches set out to reform the church in the sixteenth century they continued the Catholic practice of baptism by immersion. All the leading Reformers however, thought that the method in itself was unimportant. Calvin for example said: "Whether the person who is baptized be immersed, and whether thrice or once, or whether he be only poured or sprinkled upon him is of no consequence: but this should be left free to the churches according to the difference of countries. Yet the very word baptize signifies to immerse, and it is certain that immersion was the practice of the ancient church." The Baptist leaders however argued that immersion was the Scriptural form of baptism and therefore was the only valid form. Baptism was not baptism unless it was by immersion. And no one was a true member of the church unless he had been immersed. As a whole they still hold to this position, though there is a growing tendency especially in the North to accept the baptism of other churches as also valid. To meet the Baptist attack Presbyterian scholars and the scholars of other denominations have tried to prove that sprinkling or pouring was the Biblical mode. We have studiously refrained from presenting these arguments, in part because our space is limited, but more because we believe with Calvin that the mode is in itself indifferent, that to assert that baptism must be applied in exactly the same way that the first disciples applied it to confuse the letter that killeth with the spirit that giveth life, that if the Bible had thought that the method was all important it would have given us definite instructions on the matter, and not left the scholars of the world in confusion as at present.

3. The subjects. To whom was baptism applied in the beginning? To adult believers only, or also to the children of believers? Here again there is a difference of opinion between Baptist scholars and those of other denominations. The Baptists say that there is no evidence that children were ever baptized in the New Testament. We have to admit that there is no direct statement to this effect. We believe however that it is natural to infer that children were baptized from the beginning. We know for example that children were circumcised under the Old Testament dispensation and that circumcision was a sign of their membership in the Old Testament church. It is natural to think that they should also be baptized as an indication of their participation in the New Testament church. As if to confirm this conjecture we find in the New Testament time and time again that whole households were baptized into the faith (Acts 10:48; 16:15, 33; 1Cor. 1:16; 16:15)—these households must have contained children. We also find children were baptized from an early time in the church after the New Testament period, and there is absolutely no indication that this ever came in as an innovation. The Presbyterian church holds therefore that "the infant seed of believers are, through the covenant and by right of birth, members of the Church. Hence they are entitled to baptism and to the pastoral oversight, instruction and government of the Church, with a view to their embracing Christ and thus possessing personally all the benefits of the covenant."

4. Its significance. (1) For adults. All Christians look upon baptism as a sacrament. A sacrament is defined in our catechism as being a holy ordinance instituted by Christ, wherein, by sensible signs, Christ and the benefits of the new covenant are represented, sealed, and applied to believers. We do not believe of course that the sacrament in itself produces any changes in the believer's life, or any change in the believer's condition. Our catechism says again: The sacraments become effectual means of salvation, not from any virtue in them, or in him that doth administer them; but only by the blessing of Christ, and the working of his Spirit in them that by faith receive them. A sacrament then is a visible sign of an invisible grace, and whether or not the believer receives that grace, the benefits of the new covenant promised in the sacrament, depends absolutely upon whether or not he has the requisite faith. We might say in a sense that the sacrament is merely a pictured promise, just as Jesus' original words were spoken promises, and as the words of the Scripture are now written promises. This promise on God's part follows a pledge on our own part. What pledge on our part, what promise on God's part is contained in the sacrament of baptism? First, we pledge ourselves to turn away from our sins unto God, and He promises on His part to send His Holy Spirit into our lives. The Holy Spirit as we have seen is God Himself working in our hearts, and the fruits of the Spirit Paul told us are love, joy, peace, long-suffering, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, meekness, self-control (Gal. 5:22-23). Cf. Mt. 3:11; Jn. 3:5; 1Cor. 6:11; Acts 2:38. But note that Baptism itself does not bring the Spirit. It is simply the pledge on our part, the answering promise on God's part. Second, we pledge ourselves in baptism to unite ourselves morally with Christ, and God promises in return that we shall die with Him unto sin, that we shall rise with Him in newness of life. Cf. Mt. 28:19; Rom. 6:4; Col. 2:12. But note that baptism itself does not bring the newness of life. It simply brings to us God's promise, a promise that is fulfilled as we fulfill our part of the agreement.

(2) For children. Necessarily baptism has a slightly different significance in the case of the children of believers. Here the parents pledge themselves that they will bring up their children in the 'nurture and admonition of the Lord,' and God promises that if they are faithful in carrying out this promise then His Spirit will come to dominate more and more the life of the child, and that the child also in due time will die unto sin, and rise with Jesus in newness of life. We need to note here in particular that baptism does not effectuate any change in the child, it does not increase his chances of heaven one iota in itself, it is simply God's promise that He will bless the child if the parents are faithful to their trust.

Has God's promise made at our baptism, the baptism of our children been fulfilled? Face the question honestly, is its partial fulfillment my fault or God's? How can parents fulfill their baptismal vows? How can we?

II. The Lord's Supper

1. Its Origin. The Lord's Supper goes back as we all know to our Master's own expressed wish. He ate the last supper with His disciples, brake the bread, and passed the wine, and said, This do in remembrance of me. The Church began to carry out this request from the very beginning (Acts 2:42), and has continued to do so to the present day. At first this supper in remembrance of the Lord was not a part of the church service. It came at the end of the common meals, the first church suppers that were held regularly at daily or weekly intervals (Read 1Cor. 11:17-34 with this fact in mind). After a while however, the church suppers, love feasts they were called, were discontinued, and the Lord's Supper, the Communion, became a part of the regular Sabbath service. It was not long until it became the central part of the service, the ritual grew more and more elaborate until the simple communion service had become the present Roman Catholic Mass. The Reformers in the 16th century went back to the simple Biblical form, but left it as a part of the regular church worship. At the present time there are some denominations, like the Disciples, who observe the supper every week, most others observe it less often, the Presbyterians generally about once a quarter. But whenever observed it is the most sacred feature of our worship. That brings us to note:

2. Its Significance. (1) Commemoration. Jesus said, This do in remembrance of me. He looked upon His death as the most significant act of his life. He did not wish the fact of his death, and especially its significance to be forgotten. He instituted this feast that its memory might be kept alive in the hearts of his followers, and not only that it might be kept alive, but also that it might be proclaimed to the world as the heart and center of the Gospel. As we partake of the Lord's Supper then we remind ourselves of the significance of our Lord and Savior's death, and moreover we do proclaim His death until he come. 1Cor. 11:26.

(2) Communion. We Presbyterians generally speak of the Lord's Supper as the Communion. Paul spoke of it in the same way. In 1Cor. 10:16 he says that in the cup we have communion with the blood of Christ, and that in the bread we have communion with the body of Christ. We may say then that communion means first of all communion with Christ. But in what sense do we have communion with Christ? The Greek word means, as the margin of RV indicates participation in, participation in the body and blood of Christ. But in what sense do we participate in the body and blood of Christ? The Catholic Church says that when the priest speaks the words of institution the bread ceases to be bread, and it becomes the actual physical body of Jesus, the wine ceases in like manner to be wine and becomes the actual physical blood of Jesus. Protestants on the other hand believe that we commune with Christ spiritually, and that we participate in the benefits of His broken body and poured out blood. It is important to remember however that we do not partake of the benefits of His body and blood simply because we eat of the bread and drink of the wine. The sacrament nourishes our soul because it awakens faith, and once more sets our hearts and minds on the Christ, who died for our sins, and who wishes to live again in our lives. But in the Lord's Supper we not only have communion with Christ, but also with one another, "seeing that we, who are many, are one bread, one body: for we all partake of the one bread." 1Cor. 10:17. The Supper levels all human distinctions, and reminds us of our oneness in Christ.

(3) Consecration. The Lord's Supper not only commemorates the Lord's death, and proclaims it to the world, and brings us into communion with our crucified and risen Lord and with one another; it also expresses again our consecration to the cause from which Jesus died, our personal loyalty to Him as our Lord and Savior. Jesus said "This cup is the new covenant in my blood." Lk. 22:20. A covenant in the Bible always includes not only a promise given by God, but also an obligation assumed by man. Unless we do reconsecrate ourselves to the service of Christ the supper has for us little value.

3. Its observance. In 1 Cor. 11:17-34 Paul gives us some directions for the observance of the Supper. These directions applied directly to the situation in Corinth at the time, and only indirectly to us. When Paul wrote, the Communion came at the end of the common meal. The common meal was supposed to be a love feast, and to promote fellowship in the Church. But it was failing in its purpose. The rich were not sharing their food with the poor. The result was that some had too much to eat, and others too little. Some were making gormands of themselves, and others were drinking too freely of their wine. Because of these divisions that had grown up among the diners, and because of the over indulgence on the part of some in the food and wine the group as a whole was not prepared to commemorate the Communion which came at the end. Under these circumstances Paul reminded the Corinthians of the solemn institution of the Supper, and of its underlying significance. He warned them that they were not to eat the bread, or drink the cup of the Lord in an unworthy manner (A.V. unworthily). That if they did they ate and drank condemnation (not damnation as in R.V.) to themselves. Paul did not mean that it is dangerous to come to the Table if we ourselves are unworthy. As a matter of fact we are not worthy to come unless we do feel our own unworthiness. He meant that we must partake of the elements in a worthy manner, that is a reverent and thoughtful manner, with our minds set on Christ. If we do not, it has no value for our spiritual life, it has a danger rather.

Then more positively he tells them that they must first prove themselves. He explains what he means in the next clause, prove or test themselves regarding their ability to discern the Lord's body. To put it in other words no one should partake of the Lord's Supper until he has set his mind on Christ, until he can go back of the bread and the wine to the Savior who bore his sins in his body upon the tree.

What does the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper mean to us? Does it mean commemoration? Does it mean Communion with Christ—with our fellow Christians? Does it mean Consecration? What value does it have for our spiritual lives? Why does it not have more? Is it our fault or God's? Do we come unworthily? Do we discern the Lord's body as we should?

STORY

THE CABIN IN THE WOODS

It is said Abraham Lincoln once wrote out a story about a little girl who, years ago, was stranded near his Indiana home.
With her mother and sister, she was traveling through the woods in a prairie wagon, the axle of which broke near the Lincoln cabin. They cooked their dinner over Abraham's fire, and after luncheon the mother read the children wonderful tales from a strange book. The little girl won Lincoln's heart. Possibly, in after years, that little girl may have told her children a story something like this:

Grr-grr, groaned the wheels of the prairie wagon. The little girl under the canvas hood wrinkled her nose and sniffed. The ill smell of the purple papaw tree drowned the sassafras, but a new odor drowned the papaw.

"I smell bacon frying, mammy," she cried.

"We are coming to a clearing," replied the mother. "See the pigs and the hens hunting under those brown leaves? Look out for that stump, Dannie!"

She was too late. The great wagon gave a sudden lurch. There was a crash; and mother, two little girls, and Dannie tumbled out in every direction. The little girl who is the center of this story found herself sitting up in a bed of ferns just uncurled in the spring sunshine. Rubbing her eyes, she saw Handy and Dandy, the two mules, in a confused mass of struggling legs which Dannie was trying to untangle. Little Sister clung to her mother's skirts, as she sat in a blackberry bush.

"O Dannie, the axle of the wheel is broken," exclaimed mother. "Can we mend it? Look out for Handy's legs!
Wait until I get to their heads. Look out, children, keep out of the way! We must cut the harness so the poor things can get up. Oh, what is the matter with Rover?"

Rover, the shepherd dog, gave a yelp of anguish.

"Dandy kicked him. See his poor leg!"
cried the little girl.

"Oh, it's broken," exclaimed the mother.
"The poor dog! What next?"

The dog yelped and howled, and his leg hung limp. Tears ran down the children's faces, and the mother looked as if she had broken her own leg.

To the sound of crashing and thrashing, last year's hickory nuts, moss, sticks, and stones fell in showers. Dannie was trying to help the mules to their feet.
At last he succeeded, but their harness dangled from their backs and they trembled from their struggles.

"The axle to the rear left wheel is broken, marm," said Dannie. "I'll go and find out whether there is a cabin where that bacon is frying."

"What are we going to do for Rover?"
cried the little girl, wringing her hands.
"Hear him cry!"

Her mother looked at the broken harness, the wheel on the ground, and the moaning dog.

"Children," she said, "the poor dog is suffering. We can't allow that."

"O mammy, he mustn't die, he mustn't.
He's taken care of us all the way from Ohio, and he's going to drive our sheep when we have our new home in Missouri, and he will frighten away the bears and the wolves and the Indians. O Rover, dear, please don't hurt so!"

"What is the matter? Can I help you?"

At the sound of a voice coming from behind the walnut tree, the little girl looked up, and there stood a tall, thin boy. The wind blew his blue jean shirt like a balloon from his straight back. His lank black hair hung limp over his ears. Soft, deerskin breeches covered his long, thin legs. His bare toes dug into the muddy moss. A man who came slowly behind the boy, asked:

"What is the matter, strangers?"

"Have you anything which we can use to make a new axle for this wheel?"
asked Dannie.

"And can you help Rover?" pleaded the little girls.

"Yes," answered the boy briefly.

"Abe," said the man, "take the women folks to the house. They are hungry."

The mother looked into the wreck of the wagon.

"We have our own provisions," she said. "While we are gone, will you end the misery of our poor dog?"

The little girl laid her head gently on the dog's and poor Rover feebly tried to lick her cheek.

"When you have taken the strangers to the house, son," said the man, come back, and help the man and me to mend
the wagon."

"My name is Lincoln," he added, turning toward the mother. "Thomas Lincoln. And this boy is my son Abraham."

Abe took the little girl's hand, saying, "Come with me. This is the path between the trees and the briars. Look out for the thorns, marm. Little girl, the berries are good to eat. Try one. They taste like baked apples. And hear the bees buzz! I know a honey tree where we can find all the honey we can eat."

The little girl looked into Abraham's kind gray eyes. Meeting a fellow child in the spring woods was a wonderful adventure. How happy she would be, if it were not for poor Rover! Abe saw a tear rolling down her cheek. He squeezed her hand, and said, "Hurry, and we shall see our cabin in a moment. Don't you worry about that dog. He's all right.
There's my mother, and there's my sister Sally, and cousin Dennis, and those are mother's children, Jack and Tilda.
When my mother came to us, she brought with her a bureau. And now I have a true bed. Have you one?"

Before the little girl could answer, Mrs.
Lincoln caught sight of them. Her broad face shone with pleasure.

"Who comes here? You are welcome, strangers."

"Marm," said Abe, "their wagon is broken down, and they are to cook their dinner over our fire while we men mend the axle wheel."

"You needn't have brought anything to eat," exclaimed Mrs. Lincoln. "Dennis hulled and ground the corn this morning, and Abe brought in honey from the woods. Very likely Tom may shoot a partridge, and there are plenty of potatoes. Sit right down. Where did you come from, and where are you going?"

"From Ohio," answered the little girl's mother, "and we are bound for Missouri, where my brother has a clearing. I don't know how we could have mended our wheel without your help. My husband is dead, and we travel alone with our faithful boy, Dannie, to help us."

"Our dog, Rover, broke his leg, and he is to be our sheep dog," added the little girl.

"Yes," continued the mother, "but we must forget poor Rover now. I have brought a book, the Arabian Nights, to read aloud after our dinner. Perhaps your children would like to hear the stories too."

Abe's eyes shone. What joy to hear new stories! Occasionally a wandering parson visited them, and read from the Bible. It the teacher had time, after drilling the pupils in the three R's, he read Cowper's poems. No one else ever read aloud. What were the Arabian Nights? He had never heard the name.

"I must go back to the wagon," he said. "I'll not be away long, and I will bring some water from the spring, mother. Don't you get it!"

The little girl followed him to the door of the smoky cabin. She was timid with the other lively children, but she liked Abe. The bacon was sizzling over the hot ashes. The corn cake was browning. The sunshine brightened the narrow panes of oiled paper. Mrs. Lincoln blew a horn, and the men and boys came trooping in. Abraham had a pail of water.

"What are you doing now, Abe? Giving a drink to the cats before the humans have a chance to look at the water?" asked his father.

"Marm," exclaimed Dannie, "that boy has contrapted a hickory axle for the wheel, and now the old wagon is better than when it left Ohio. And the stories he has told us!"

"We have tied up the harness," said Thomas Lincoln.

The mother's face lightened. "We can go on once more," she cried, "thanks to you all. We are in a hurry, for we must clear the trees before we can do our spring planting."

"Why doesn't someone ask for Rover?" thought the little girl.

After they had eaten the bacon and the corn dodgers, the mother brought out twelve precious russet apples. "Yet here is something still better," said she, opening the Arabian Nights. A strange world came to life as the mother read. The little girl almost forgot Rover. Abraham's brown cheeks grew red with excitement. At last the mother shut the magic book.

"We must be on our way, or we will not reach the forks tonight," she said.

"That is a good book," said Abraham.

"And you are a good boy," replied the little girl's mother.

The little girl, walking slowly behind the others, thought of Rover. No kind dog friend would greet her with a cheerful bark! She would always be afraid of bears and wildcats now.

Abraham was not as kind as she had thought. He was whistling as he skipped from rock to rock. How could he have forgotten Rover? Presently, they came to the familiar wagon, with Handy and Dandy ready to carry them on their way.

"Want to get in the back of the wagon?" Abe asked the little girl. As he drew back the curtain, she scrambled inside.

"Oh-h-h-h!" she cried rapturously.

"What is it?" asked the mother.

"It's dear Rover," called the little girl, "with his leg tied to a stick."

"I set it," explained Abraham, "as father did the cow's. It will grow together all right. I reckon a live dog can bark off bears better than a dead dog, even if he has a leg tied to a board."

"Oh," cried the little girl joyfully, "I'll give you my coral beads, my pink dress, Arabian Nights, or anything you wish."

"No," said Abraham, gray eyes twinkling. "I'd take a book away from nobody who is lucky enough to have one. And coral beads and a pink dress? Pretty, but not just the right for my kind of work."

"We'll never forget you, Rover and I," said the little girl earnestly.

"That's a better payment than all the beads and dresses in the world," the tall boy told her. "Good luck to you all in your new home!"

Gr-grrr, ground the wheels of the prairie wagon, as it again creaked on its way.

—Sarah E. Mulliken in United Presbyterian.

SLEEPING IN THE CHURCH

Is it ever right to sleep while attending church services?

In certain cases it may be, according to the Rev. F. E. Schlueter of Wisconsin who says in the course of his eulogy of a noted country doctor who lately died:

"Many were the times that he enjoyed a good sleep while I was preaching. He did not have to apologize, for in the afternoon when I tried to make my country appointment with two tired-out horses that could hardly draw the bob sleigh over the roads I did not use the whip on them, I knew that Doc. Tarter had used them the night before on one of his all-night adventures bringing comfort and relief to the sick."

Dr. George Petrie, eminent and venerable Presbyterian pastor of Charlottesville, Va., and a native South Carolinian, not long ago told a friend that on the previous Sunday night he had motioned to an usher to raise a window in the gallery. The usher misunderstood what was wanted, but proceeded to the gallery where he found a man sound asleep and waked him, much to the latter's embarrassment and to the good doctor's amusement.

Sleeping in church was not tolerated in Puritan days in New England. Each church had a tithingman, a sort of Sunday constable, whose special duty, according to Dr. Herbert B. Adams, was "to quiet the restlessness of youth and to disturb the slumbers of old age." This ancient watchman of the congregation patrolled the aisles to arouse sleeping saints by means of his black pole, tipped at one end with brass. This pole was the old English tipstaff, an emblem of the constabulary office and representing the person of the King. It is said that in some of the early New England parishes the tithingman's rod was tipped at one end with a squirrel's tail. This end was used in awakening women. On the other end was a deer's hoof, which "carried sharp conviction to men and boys." In some churches were two or three of these grim, vigilant officers who sat under the shadow of the pulpit facing the congregation or at doors to keep out dogs, or in the gallery to keep boys from leaving. Another of their duties was to see to it that everybody went to church.

Was napping in church similarly prohibited in South Carolina? An act "for better observation of the Lord's Day," passed by the provincial assembly in 1712, required all persons to attend church and to there to 'abide orderly and soberly during the time of prayer and preaching.' Although the churchwardens and constables were directed under this act to go about Charles Town and compel absentees to attend church, nothing is said in the law about compelling sleepy parishioners to stay awake.—The State, Columbia, S. C.

Glenn Springs

At the old reliable springs, one of the stand-bys of the Southeast, our fathers and grandfathers for generations back, even to the time when the Indian tribes recognized its medicinal value, have found in Glenn Springs Mineral Water restored health.

The refreshing effect of the liberal use of mineral water is generally regarded as beneficial, with none of the drastic, possibly damaging effects of concentrated medicines.

Glenn Springs Water, however, offers benefits far more specific and definite. It has always been rather generally regarded as an excellent alterative tonic for malarial debility, loss of appetite and energy. With Sodium Sulphate, Calcium Sulphate, Calcium Carbonate, Magnesium Carbonate and Potassium Sulphate as its principal medicinal agents, it flushes and rids the system of its pent up impurities; neutralizes hyper-acidity; stimulates the flow of secretions; has a sedative effect upon the digestive organs, and in a very thorough manner serves as a decidedly satisfactory treatment for chronic constipation, indigestion, dyspepsia, auto-intoxication, rheumatism, and kindred ills.

It not only flushes the system, and is helpful to organs of digestion and elimination, but through its mildly active qualities it restores organs to normal functioning and regular habits. It is pleasant, palatable and pure.

LOST IN THE FOREST

Rev. E. B. McGill

With rare exceptions I have not hunted since I was a boy, but have been on various outings and am a fairly good woodsman. Recently I was out hunting several times and enjoyed it. One morning I arose early and drove to a point six or eight miles away for a squirrel hunt. Several rabbits crossed the road. And once I stopped the car, focused the lights on one, and shot it from the car window. Arriving at the woods I parked the car, left my dog in it, and entered the forest ere it was day. Several evenings before I had been in the same forest, and had left two squirrels sitting up in a tree, barking at me, after my ammunition was exhausted. However they were not there this morning. At another point I had seen a man shoot six or eight from one position. I never was very fortunate in finding game, but got several shots, and brought in four head of game out of five shots fired. I came in at 9:00, intending to go out later.

About 3:00 in the afternoon I started for another forest, some twelve or fifteen miles away. I was delayed and it was 4:00 when I arrived. I parked the car on the highway and entered the wood, taking the dog with me. He is good around the yard or car, but is young, and untrained in the forest. However he knows some things and is good to gather up game that fall in thickets. No sooner had I entered the woodland that I found the palmettos unusually thick. You are likely to find them anywhere in Florida. There are many varieties and sizes, but here the two kinds, are the smaller size from which fans are made, and a larger size.—Some of the leaves are large as an umbrella, with stems eight feet long, the edge of which has saw teeth. And when they are dense are almost impenetrable. But in day light one may pick a way between them. The dog soon began to have difficulty; he did not like to follow where they jagged him, and tried to go around the large clumps and jump over the smaller ones. We were separated. I called but the wind was blowing enough to make it difficult to be heard, and when he did hear trying to go around a thicket only got deeper into trouble. He seldom barks and I realized it would be easy to lose him, though the plate on his harness bore my name and address. I finally rescued him after running 100 yards. His tongue was hanging out, it was a hot afternoon, and he was panting and exhausted from violent leaping among the palmettos. Men who hunt such animals as foxes and deer, know the danger of losing a dog in the forest. It will trail some animal far back from civilization; until exhausted, and many splendid dogs have been lost, victims of hunger, thieves, etc.

I should have given up my hunt, but was determined to find some squirrels. Suddenly I came to a road that led back to a field in the wood. I recognized it as a place where we were last summer gathering large palmetto leaves for an arbor. On one side was a fence with cattle and hogs on both sides. Since there was lots of large timber, and the wind having abated, I pushed on, though it was nearly sunset and cloudy. I was still hopeful of finding game. I strained my neck and eyes looking among the tree tops, but every movement was either a bird or a gentle breeze shaking the long gray moss. And it is almost impossible to see a squirrel in moss. The sun had set and darkness was approaching, but here squirrels often stay out till dark. Still hopeful, I pushed far back into the forest, palmettos were not thick here, and I had the advantage of an old road. I had not even thought of getting lost. Most of the time I had gone in a southern direction, evading a large river swamp some miles west. It was now dark and I was forced to give up the chase. Had I tried to retrace myself the result might have been different, but instead I merely turned and started in the direction I thought the car was. I soon began to encounter palmettos and dense undergrowth. I came to several ponds but the two month's drought since the storms had dried them up. Otherwise my difficulties would have been very great. I had gone several hundred yards northward, and still had no fear of losing my way, since the red sunset was on my left. But palmettos increased in density, and I failed to come to the road or fence.—Suddenly I noticed that the red streak in the west had disappeared. I later learned that a dark cloud had come over it. I could find nothing to steer myself by. The moon would not be up for several hours.

However it was not pitch dark, and I could see trees and logs, but not one thing looked familiar. And while I felt sure I was traveling in the right direction, I began to wonder if I had been turned in trying to miss dense thickets of palmetto, which fortunately were nowhere higher than my head. I came to two uprooted trees evidently blown down in the last storm; they were pointing to what I thought was the west. And since the wind had blown that way I felt encouraged, but realized that I must hasten on before pitch dark. But the palmettos were a difficult obstacle to overcome, being large, rough and thick. However I fared much better than the dog. He made great leaps but could not clear them. He would stop and get lost, and being coal black I could not see him in the darkness. He could not, and would not keep up, except when at my heels. When he followed in my wake he had the advantage of the brier-like palmettos being parted by my body. But as I increased the retreat it became so difficult for the dog that I had to call him nearly every step to make him keep up. I would have carried him but his weight of fifty pounds made it impracticable. Suddenly I came to two trees blown down but at right angles to the first two, and pointing to what I took to be the north. This confused me a little at first, then I remembered that the cyclone had shifted to the north.

When one is lost in a desert or forest in darkness, the tendency is to walk in a circle, caused by the ligaments on one side being stronger than the other. And nearly every time the lost person will come back to the place of departure. I still didn't think I was lost, but could find nothing to steer by! I had failed to note the direction of the wind on entering the forest, and if I had, had little assurance that it had not changed. Darkness was so great I could see only tree tops, and they all looked alike. I was disappointed that I had not come to the road, fence, or field. I climbed up on a high log for deliberation. If I were going in the direction of the car I should have reached it. If I were going in the opposite direction I was somewhere in the middle of the forest. It contained about one hundred square miles.

I could hear nothing except the usual nocturnal noises. I shouted aloud but no response. I fired three shots which has always been considered a signal at odd hours or places. Later I fired two other shots.—The heavy twelve gauge gun (most hunters now use 16 and 20) rang clearly, but no reply. I shouted again, and thought I heard a reply. Then I thought it was my echo, and didn't know which it was. Later I was sure I heard a shout, I responded and thought it was answered. But could never hear it again. Evidently the shout was for some other purpose and I was not heard. Then near by I heard footfalls, very much like that of a man; I called but no reply. I later decided that it was a cow or horse. Had I gone there I might have found the fence, but since stock run out in this county I thought nothing about it.

I now began to think of spending the night in the forest. It was not cold; I had matches and there was plenty of dry fuel. But the afternoon weather report had predicted rain during the night and a cold wave. However, I might have made a shelter from palmetto leaves. There was no danger to fear, and I had plenty of shells. I was not tired, had eaten late luncheon, and taken a good drink of water before leaving. I was perfectly comfortable. And there were no mosquitoes. I had taken the keys out of the car, otherwise I would have been uneasy about it. I believed I could get out when the moon arose, or at least the next morning. But if I should fall and become injured it would be difficult for a rescue party to find me. Only one man had an idea of where I was, and I would not be missed until the church hour the next morning. For this was Saturday night and I was to preach the next day on "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith." I decided that if I kept the faith, and continued to fight the forest I might finish the course. Once more I plodded forth. I could hardly see anything except the tree tops above; the live oak is an evergreen, and the tops were heavy, whereas the cypress, which grows only in swamps, was almost naked.—Thus I was able to keep on higher ground. But I frequently encountered dense undergrowth, and sometimes was tangled in brambles and grape vines, and more than once was thrown but never hurt. I thought of unloading my double barrel hammerless gun but did not, but was careful to keep the safety on. For contrary to popular opinion I consider the hammerless a danger. I am not especially strong, but this was one time my strength never failed me, nor did I grow tired. As I ploughed on, trying to keep

Famous Recipe For Stopping a Severe Cough

You will be pleasantly surprised when you make up this simple home mixture for it for a distressing cough or chest. It takes but a moment to mix and a little, but it can be depended upon for quick and lasting relief.

2 1/2 ounces of Pinex from any drug-store. Pour this into a pint bottle; then with plain granulated sugar syrup and strained honey. The full pint thus costs no more than a small bottle of made medicine, yet it is much more effective. It is pure, keeps perfectly and you love its pleasant taste.

This simple remedy has a remarkable bold action. It goes right to the seat of trouble, soothes away the inflammation, loosens the germ-laden phlegm. At the same time, it is absorbed into the blood where it acts directly upon the internal tubes and thus helps inwardly to throw off the whole trouble with surprising ease.

Pinex is a highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway Pine, containing an active agent of creosote, in a palatable form, and known as one of the greatest healing agents for "flu" and other severe coughs, chest and bronchial troubles. Do not accept a substitute for Pinex. Guaranteed to give prompt relief or refunded.

SOME PRESCRIPTION HE WROTE IN 1892

Dr. Caldwell started to practice medicine back in 1875, the needs for a doctor were not as great as today. He lived normal lives, ate plain, simple food, and got plenty of fresh air even that early there were no physics and purges for the relief of constipation which Dr. Caldwell did believe were good for human beings. His prescription for constipation that he wrote early in his practice, and which is now in drug stores in 1892 under the name of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, a liquid vegetable remedy, intended for men, children and elderly people. They need just such a mild, safe and stimulant.

His prescription has proven its worth and is now the largest selling liquid medicine. It has won the confidence of those who needed it to get relief from indigestion, biliousness, flatulence, indigestion, loss of appetite and sleep, bad dyspepsia, colds, fevers. At your next doctor, or write "Syrup Pepsin," Dr. B. Monticello, Illinois, for free little up with the dog, glancing upward to guide myself, struggling through the rough palmettos, which were nearly as jaggy as blackberry briars, and so heavy and strong to push to one side, I again began to wonder was I discreet or foolish in going on. I stopped several times, but only the panting of an exhausted dog could I hear. I was not confused nor alarmed. But to some extent, experienced that peculiar psychological effect, known only to one who is lost in darkness, and for which there is little prevention.

Suddenly I heard a noise. Listening I recognized a car, it was traveling at a high rate of speed. It came nearer, and then passed out of sight. I had seen its lights plainly. Within a minute another one sped by. They were not more than 100 yards away. I made a careful note of the direction so that I might not miss the road by any curve, or angle. I plunged on through the thicket which was ever dense and thorny, even to the very last rod. Suddenly I saw a gray stripe in front, it was the concrete road, I stepped upon it and wondered if it were my road. I had gone only a few steps when I perceived the car. As I sped homeward I had a close call to another accident: While meeting a car, and blinded by the lights, I failed to see two dark colored cows, on my side of the road, until within a few yards, I applied the brakes, which made a loud squeaking noise, and the animals moved out of the way at the last minute. Within thirty minutes I was home safe and sound.

My clothing had suffered, and my leggings were worn to frazzles on the side, and I had a few bruises, but no injuries to speak of, and not a scratch on my hands or face.—Neither was the dog injured. But I picked some small thorns out of his front legs, and his face, and he was scratched in places. He might have suffered more, but for his heavy leather harness which bore many scratches from contact with the rough edges of palmetto stems. The dog was stiff for a day or two. And I was hardly normal for about a day. Fortunately the dog's harness had not been removed, neither had I gone out in street clothing as I frequently do. It was also fortunate that I did not know at that time that two well known colored men were lost for a day and night in the same forest last year while on fishing trip. They were found by a rescue party organized by their employer. The victims were in an exhausted state.

It seems that I was walking in a straight line all the time, which carried me through the thickest undergrowth, whereas in daylight I would have gone around. However I have had no desire to return, to investigate. But am reminded of an Indian who was found wandering in a forest, and when asked if he were lost replied, "No, wigwam lost, me here."—Associate Reformed Presbyterian.

THE FIRST TELEGRAM

If someone were to ask you who invented the telegraph, what would you say: "Why, Morse, of course." But, and this will surprise you, you would be wrong. Morse did invent the electric telegraph, but while Morse was still a little child a French scientist named Claude Chappe had perfected and named the first long distance telegraph in the world. Chappe had been working on his invention for a long time, but had met nothing but discouragement along the way. In the year 1792 the national convention granted him 6,000 francs and appointed him "telegraph engineer" with a salary. This gave the young man sufficient encouragement and impetus that it was not long before the finished invention took shape. Carnot, the great Frenchman, ordered the building of two lines and Chappe got his first real chance.

The telegraph, itself was extremely simple. It was made of three pieces. The first called the regulator was fourteen feet long by thirteen inches wide, fixed in the center on an axis that enabled it to move easily. At each end of the regulator the inventor attached an indicator six feet long weighted at one end with lead and able to revolve in a circle. The whole machine was raised above the roof of the station. It was set in motion by brass wires fastened to a crank. The operator relayed the messages from one station to another; and he constantly had to watch two stations between which he was situated and reproduce the signals they sent.

The first message sent by the new telegraph from Lille to Paris told of a glorious victory over the Austrians. It read: "Conde is restored to the republic. The surrender took place this morning at 6 o'clock.

State Colleges Announce Speakers

University at Chapel Hill, N. C., and College for Women at Greensboro Have Selected Commencement Orators

Esme Howard, British ambassador to the United States, has accepted an invitation to deliver the commencement address at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, on June 10.

It will be the 134th commencement of the oldest state university in America. Saturday will be alumni day. The laureate sermon will be preached by the ambassador's aide and awarding of degrees.

Feature of the class reunions will be the return of living members of the class of 1879, the first class to graduate from the Civil War.

Julius I. Foust, president of Carolina College for Women, at Greensboro, stated that Dr. Benjamin C. Foy, president of Union Theological Seminary, at Richmond, had accepted the invitation of the college to deliver the baccalaureate sermon on Monday morning, June 9, a major event of the commencement exercises.

Change in Northfield Schools

Moody Resigns as Chairman of the Board of Trustees

Clip the following from the Philadelphia Presbyterian, omitting the name referred to:

New York newspapers for February contained the surprising announcement that William R. Moody, who had been head of the Northfield Schools since the death of his distinguished father in 1899, had resigned as chairman of the Board of Trustees and that his resignation had been accepted. Moody's letter of resignation, which was printed in full, at least by the New York Times, made clear that the occasion and cause of his resignation was the policy of Rev. Elliot Speer, president of the board. It appears that when Mr. Moody resigned the presidency in 1926, because of ill health and Rev. Elliot Speer was appointed to that position, it was with the understanding on Mr. Moody's part that this action was taken to promote (Mr. Moody) with a capable man in the performance of his executive duties. It appears, however, that soon after he was discovered that what had happened was that Mr. Speer had made the chief executive position and that his own position was that of a solicitor of funds and assistant to the president. This position of his power was naturally passing to Mr. Moody, but the use of his resignation from his position is given as dissatisfied with the policies being pursued by president Speer. Mr. Moody is in this connection.

There is nothing in Mr. Moody's letter to indicate that he differed from the Rev. Mr. Speer in matters of doctrine as well as policy, it is probable that the rumors to that effect have a basis in fact, in view of Mr. Speer's well-known liberal views, in view of the fact that Mr. William C. Kingley, president of the Board of Directors of Union Theological Seminary, for instance, is one of the trustees of the Northfield Schools. It will await further developments in connection with these schools with interest. Northfield's rather radical departures from orthodoxy have been a source of grief to many. We

Noted Minister Is Dead

Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, Pastor Emeritus of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, Died February 25—He Was Successor to Beecher and Abbott

The Rev. Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, pastor emeritus of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, died February 25 at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Robert S. Kellogg, in Bronxville. He was 71 years old.

Dr. Hillis had been seriously ill for months. He resigned as pastor of Plymouth Church after he suffered a cerebral hemorrhage in January, 1924. He went to Battle Creek, Mich., for treatment and in April, 1924, he sent from there his resignation to the board of the Plymouth Congregational Church. He was made pastor emeritus.

Assuming the pastorate of the Plymouth Congregational Church, Brooklyn, before he was 40 years old, Dr. Hillis devoted his life much the same as did his two predecessors, Dr. Henry Ward Beecher and Dr. Lyman Abbott, dividing his time between his church duties and literature.

Dr. Hillis took an active interest in patriotic work especially after America entered the World War. When the late President Theodore Roosevelt was endeavoring to get permission to take a division to France he selected Dr. Hillis as chaplain.

Some of the works published by Dr. Hillis include "Foretokens of Immortality;" "Influence of Christ in Modern Life;" "The Fortunes of the Republic;" "Misfortunes of a World Without Pain;" "Lectures and Orations of Henry Ward Beecher;" "Rebuilding the Ruined Lands of Europe," and "The Better American Lectures."

Dr. Hillis was born at Magnolia, Ia., September 2, 1858, the son of Samuel Ewing and Margaret Hester Hillis. He was graduated from Lake Forest University in 1884 and pursued his theological course at the McCormick Theological Seminary, Chicago, from which he was graduated in 1887. The same year he was ordained in the Presbyterian ministry.

Dr. Davis Resigns At Atlanta

Central Church Reluctantly Accepts Pastor's Resignation, Presented on Account of Health

The Atlanta Constitution of February 26 makes the following announcement:

Members of the Central Presbyterian Church voted Sunday to accept the resignation of Dr. W. E. Davis, who several weeks ago asked the church to release him from the pastorate on account of ill health. A total of 165 members Sunday voted to accept the resignation, while 125 voted not to accept the resignation.

It was proposed several weeks ago by members that Dr. Davis withdraw his resignation and take a several months' leave of absence, in which he could go to some health resort.

A committee composed of George Winship, C. D. Montgomery and John Murray will report the action of the church to the presbytery. This committee asked the church to make the decision unanimous Sunday, but, after several ballots, this was found impossible.

Dr. DuBose to Hold Revival

Widely Known Spartanburg Minister Coming to Caldwell Memorial, Charlotte

Dr. Henry Wade DuBose, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Spartanburg, S. C., recognized as one of the outstanding preachers in the Southern Presbyterian Church, will come to Charlotte to hold a revival meeting for Dr. Charles R. Nisbet, pastor of Caldwell Memorial Church, beginning March 11.

The revival will be the climax of the campaign on personal work that has been in progress at the Caldwell Memorial Church for some time, and it will continue through Sunday, March 24. Dr. Nisbet will begin the revival with a sermon on Sunday, March 10, and Dr. DuBose will begin his series of sermons the following evening. He will close his part of the campaign on Friday, March 22, and Dr. Nisbet will preach the following evening and close Sunday night.

The personal work campaign has as its goal the securing of a total membership for the church of 1,000 members. It now has 859.

Great Program For Near East Colleges

Mission Schools in Greece and Asia Minor to be Endowed by Dodge Fund

The Near East College Association which has offices at 18 East 41st St., New York, N. Y., and of which Albert W. Staub is American Director, is planning a campaign to complete the $15,000,000 endowment for the Near East colleges under American control at Beirut, Constantinople, Athens, Sofia, and Smyrna.

Mr. Staub issues the following statement:

The late Cleveland H. Dodge undertook an experiment in reconstruction work in the Near East following the world war.

During the period of the war he had personally financed the American colleges in the Near East. Changed conditions after the war caused him to conceive a plan of co-ordinating the work to avoid overlapping, to give the institutions a sound business management, to secure funds to cover the deficits incident to war and to work out a financial program which would enable the colleges to become self-supporting.

One of the results was his plan for a $15,000,000 campaign to endow Robert College, the American University of Beirut, Constantinople Woman's College, International College of Smyrna, Sofia American Schools and Athens College, Greece. The effort to raise the money began shortly after Mr. Dodge's death in June, 1926, and at the beginning of this year $11,000,000 had been raised.

On January 26, the 68th anniversary of his birth, a group of friends who had been associated with him in his many philanthropies began raising a $4,000,000 "Dodge Memorial Fund" to realize Mr. Dodge's ambition of permanently financing the colleges.

The memorial appeal is a strong one to the men and women who have been connected with Mr. Dodge in one or another of his humanitarian and educational undertakings. The possibilities for training leadership through these institutions, in a field still barely touched by the force of organized modern education, has a strong appeal to believers in international peace

Mission Property Again Seized in China

Rev. T. B. Grafton Tells of Military Oppression Renewed in Tsingkiangpu

Rev. T. B. Grafton, our missionary at Haichow relates an incident revealing the unsettled state of China. We print clippings he sent taken from the North China Daily News, and then his comments:

Tsingkiangpu, Ku., Jan 13.

After a season of respite from the vagaries of war, Tsingkiangpu has been greatly disturbed by the arrival of the army of General Yoh Weichuin from Shantung. The General himself is reported to be at Hsuehfu but is on his way to this city. It is stated that 18,000 men are on their way here and many of them have already arrived.

Every available quarter is being occupied by the soldiers including mission residences, and schools. The men have entered the missionaries' homes and called on them to move into one room, giving the other portions of the house to the troops. It was only after the greatest efforts that this was prevented. It proved futile to prevent their taking over a residence, which was under repair for occupation, and an adjoining property containing a boys' school.

During our respite from the soldiers, the opportunity had been grasped to repair the house for occupation. It was being scrubbed and disinfected and made safe and comfortable for residence again. Now after the workmen had been, for days, fixing and cleaning, some of the officers of the newly arrived army forcibly occupied the place and the school, and all appeals were useless. The workmen were stopped and all the work and expense went for nothing. It is quite evident that these men, having become accustomed to living in foreign residences, are dissatisfied with the temples and other places where they have always barracked.

Nanking, Jan. 19.

The following official statement was issued by the Minister for Foreign Affairs, Dr. C. T. Wang, this afternoon:

"The National Government has consistently maintained a policy of protection."

Head of Mitchell Resigns Presidency

Rev. G. H. Ellmore Will Leave the Statesville School for Girls in May

The resignation of Rev. G. H. Ellmore as president of Mitchell College, Statesville, N. C. which had been in the hands of the trustees of the college since May, 1928, was accepted by the board at a meeting held Tuesday, February 26. President Ellmore's resignation will take effect May 31, 1929, or at the close of the present college year. Mr. Ellmore is now rounding out his fifth year as head of the college. President Ellmore stated today that he has as yet no definite plans for the future.

A committee from the board of trustees to secure a president for the institution has already been named and it was stated that the institution will continue under efficient management and will be open as usual for the term of 1929-30.

Seventeen of the twenty-one trustees of the institution were present at the meeting, including the six women members of the board, as follows: Mrs. H. A. Rouzer, Salisbury; Mrs. Z.

A CHANGE IN NORTHFIELD SCHOOLS and co-operation. Mr. Dodge himself was firmly convinced that American wealth could be put to no more useful purpose than to offer modern, scientific training and an understanding of western ideals to the youth of backward countries.

Substantial gifts have already been received toward this Dodge Memorial Fund on condition that the entire amount be subscribed before July 1, 1929. Among them was a personal gift of $500,000 from Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr. Friends and admirers of Mr. Dodge throughout the United States are being urged to help perpetuate his name and his work by sending contributions to the office of the Near East College Association, 18 E. 41st St., New York.

If the fund is completed, America will have endowed an investment in international goodwill begun by William Earl Dodge, Sr., grandfather of the late Cleveland H. Dodge, and a group of forward looking Americans in the Sixties. The colleges have won the confidence and the regard of the rulers and the people of the Near East. Their graduates are looked upon as leaders. They stand as symbols of Christian idealism interpreting western ideals and Christian ethics to 3,200 students of 29 nationalities and as many religious faiths. Can America fail to accept financial responsibility for continuing this work?

MISSION PROPERTY AGAIN SEIZED IN CHINA

tection of foreign lives and property in China. In carrying out its policy the Government has spared no effort in seeing to it that adequate and effective protection is given to all foreign lives and property, without discrimination, anywhere in China."

Mr. Grafton says:
The appended clippings from the North China Daily News of Shanghai, only six days apart make a fine illustration of the wide gap between Chinese promises and fulfillment, between official statements and facts. The Chinese statement is issued by Dr. C. T. Wang, widely heralded as one of China's greatest Christians and now Minister of Foreign Affairs in the Nanking Government. The other is from one of our own missionaries at Tsingkiangpu.

Another example was furnished only this morning at this place when the caretaker of our girls' school property (what there is left of it) reported that there was a shift of companies and the soldiers leaving the property were taking away doors and other movable parts of the building, at which Dr. Morgan and I went down and entered a mild protest. The departing captain grew indignant and challenged me to produce one of his men who was guilty of such an offense — but his second-in-command spilled the beans by saying that he knew just where the things had been taken and would guarantee to have them brought back. The Captain then proved his virtue then by declaring that it was evident to all that he knew nothing of such actions!

Life in China today is anything but one glad sweet song but we are still carrying on the best way we can.

DR. DOBYNS IN GASTONIA

The First Presbyterian Church at Gastonia has just passed through a season of real privilege in a series of services in which the pastor, Rev. J. H. Henderlite, D.D., was assisted by the Dr. William Ray Dobyns, of Birmingham, Ala.

For ten days Dr. Dobyns preached twice a day. In spite of very bad weather the congregations were large from the beginning, and the meeting closed with the church filled to capacity. At the morning hour Dr. Dobyns took the people through the whole Bible. These morning addresses gave the substance of his new volume which is just from the press, "The Book In the Light of Its Books," and he was followed with the closest attention. The interest of the people in these addresses was evidenced by the fact that nearly a hundred orders were placed for this book at the close of the meeting.

Our church has been greatly refreshed and helped by the visit of this fine man of God and teacher of the Bible.

Our Christmas Cantata this year, "The Carpenter of Nazareth," was enjoyed by a congregation that packed the church, and was accounted the best that has yet been put on here.

The Standard Training School for Sunday School Workers for the Presbyterian churches of Gaston County will be held in this church March 17-22. It will be under the Synodical Director of Religious Education, Mr. Claude T. Carr, of Mooresville, N. C., who has secured a strong faculty to assist him. This school was a great success last year, and we are hoping to do even better this year.

The Woman's Auxiliary held its annual day of study and prayer for Foreign Missions with much interest and success. Dr. Smith's excellent book, "The Desire of All Nations," was studied chapter by chapter during the day, different speakers treating each chapter, and a very impressive pageant was given at the close. A good offering was made for the cause.

CHATTANOOGA CHURCH CALLS PASTOR

First Church Will Have New Minister April 1

Rev. James Fowle, D.D., pastor of the Central Presbyterian Church of St. Louis, Mo., has been called to the pastorate of the First Presbyterian Church of Chattanooga, Tenn., which has been vacant since the death of the lamented and beloved pastor, Rev. J. G. Venable, D.D. Dr. Venable died suddenly in the fall, after a pastorate of about four years.

Dr. Fowle is a native North Carolinian, being brought up in Washington, N. C., and is a scion of a distinguished family of the old North State, which furnished a noted governor to the State. Dr. Fowle has had a successful work in St. Louis. He will take up his new station on April 1.

Hall and Karl Sherrill, of Statesville.

PREPARING FOR THE ANNUAL BUDGET

With a total budget approximating $15,500,000, Southern Presbyterians are making intensive plans for their annual Every Member Canvass, which is set for March 10. The budget includes four and one-half million dollars for benevolences and eleven and one-half million dollars for the local expenses of 3,596 churches, including pastor's salaries, local campaigns and other current expenses. The amount apportioned to benevolences is intended to take care of the projected work in 92 Presbyteries and the Home Mission and Educational objectives of 17 Syn-

DEVOTIONAL

SAVED BY RADIO

That there is a power which makes for righteousness needs no added demonstration for those who have observed miracles already performed by the Spirit of God. If one has come to believe that Christianity is but a refining influence that operates where heredity, environment and favoring conditions combine, let him account for the transformed lives of men who seemed opposed by everything and everybody, Ishmaels whose hands were against every man and against whom every man's hand was lifted.

Recent newspaper accounts tell in brief the story of two men who in God's providence were brought into contact with redeeming grace. That the Moody Bible Institute was an agency in bringing about the transformations is but an added chapter to its long story of contact with the lost and hopeless. The Practical Work plans reach out into every part of Chicago and make it possible for Spirit-filled students to carry their testimony and lead many to the Lord. Chicago offers the clinic, and its multiplied opportunities for training are utilized to equip Moody students for lifework elsewhere—in Allahabad, Calcutta, Peking, Canton, in South America, Alaska; in fact, wherever the providence of God shall direct them to tell the "Wonderful Story of Love." Hence, the following stories are but typical.

The story of Samuel Strutz is reprinted from The Chicago Daily News.

From bootlegger to church deacon—all within a year—is the record of a Chicago radio "convert," it has been revealed. He is Samuel Strutz, 1648 West 21st Place, a cabinetmaker by trade.

Strutz was born in Russian Poland and migrated to America in 1913.

"I have been in Chicago many years," he relates. "It has always been hard sledding, especially during the last few years; and with a family to support I usually took to the easy way of going the coin.

ods; Foreign Mission work in six foreign countries; Assembly's Home Mission work in 17 states; Christian Education and Ministerial Relief; Sunday School Extension and Publication; Bible Cause and the Assembly's Training School.

The total budget for the entire church is apportioned among the various synods, which in turn apportion askings to Presbyteries, and Presbyteries to local churches. Each local church, when it makes up its budget, therefore, takes part in the whole work of the whole church, at home and abroad.

The canvass is being promoted by the Presbyterian Stewardship Department of Atlanta, Ga., of which Dr. J. R. McCain, of Agnes Scott College, is chairman, and Rev. R. C. Long, secretary. Preparation includes programs in churches, Sunday Schools and other organizations, distribution of literature, the selection of canvassers and the presentation of the spiritual background of the canvass. Each synod, each Presbytery, and each local congregation has its secretary of Stewardship, who co-operates in turn with the Assembly's Stewardship Headquarters in the promotion of the canvass.

PRESBYTERY OF ST. JOHN'S DIVIDED

At its last meeting on October 16, 1928, the Synod of Florida ordered that the Presbytery of St. Johns be divided into three Presbyteries, to be called Miami Presbytery, St. Johns Presbytery and Tampa Presbytery. Each of these new Presbyteries is to be organized on the same day, namely the Second Tuesday of April, 1929, as follows:

Miami Presbytery is to be convened by the Rev. P. W. DuBose in Westminster Church, Miami, on April 9, 1929.

St. Johns Presbytery is to be convened by the Rev. J. E. Abbott in the First Church of Orlando on April 9, 1929.

Tampa Presbytery is to be convened by the Rev. T. W. Raymond in the First Church of Tampa on April 9, 1929.

years; and with a family to support I usually took to the easy way of going the coin.

"Over where I was born wine drinking and beer drinking are as common as the consumption of tea and coffee. While I always tried to be a good citizen, it didn't seem to me that there was any harm in having a little still alcohol and making some money on the side. I was only a small fry, making joy for my friends here and over in Indiana towns.

"Then one morning I happened to be in the morning devotions of the First Altar league, put on by station W. I got interested and decided to look into the Moody Bible Institute, which was the station. As I was going over one night I saw a band of street workers holding a revival meeting. I got into the street car to listen and, strange to say, they were from Moody.

"I knelt down in the street and was converted, and have been going to church since."

Strutz's fidelity was soon noticed by the Moody church, where he regularly attends, and he has been made one of the regular ushers there. He was recently elected a deacon at a westside meeting where he goes regularly Saturday and Sunday afternoons he is one of a group of religious workers holding meetings at the county hospital.

The reporter's story of the conversion and subsequent service of a "sinner by grace," as published in the Kansas City (Mo.) Times, illustrates the power to "save unto the uttermost."

Since the Rev. Jonathan Perkins, Evangelist "Bill" Sharpe are former students, as stated in the printed account, the story is passed on as illustrative of certain phases of the Institute mission.

Fourteen years ago a young student at the famous Moody Bible Institute in Chicago, after a three-year course, decided to test his soul-saving ability.

He went to a rescue mission deep in the slums of the city.

A light meal and a bed on the floor were furnished for the student and-outers there, provided they would stay awake through the student preacher's sermon. A "bouncer" circled among them to enforce the rule of staying awake.

The sermon done, the student, a slender young man, walked back to the sleeping giant. He grasped the student's shoulders and shook him sharply.

"Your body rests, but what of your soul?" he asked, peering into the student's reddened eyes.

"Beat it or I'll break you in two," the student threatened.

"Come, I'll buy you a real steak if you will listen to what I have to say," the student offered.

"A steak!" The drunkard shook his head to dispel the dream. "A steak for listening to you? Boy, I'm your better!"

They walked out on the street. The student released all his pent-up pleading with the man. With careful selection pungent quotations from Scriptures he penetrated the liquor-enamed mind.

The student won out. And the drunkard of that night is now "Bill" Sharpe, Baptist evangelist. He is conducting a revival at an undenominational tabernacle at Thirteenth Street and Arge Avenue, newly founded by the Rev. Jonathan Perkins, the student who converted Sharpe fourteen years ago.

Sharpe recalled that night as he had for his car to be repaired in a town garage yesterday afternoon.

"I fully intended to roll Perkins got that steak from him," Sharpe said. "I thought as we left the restaurant would jerk him to a dark alley, and take what money he had."

"We never reached the restaurant. I listened to him two hours on the swaying in indecision. Then I went to the Moody mission house with him hours after I met him I knelt and prayed for him."

After his conversion he worked in a Chicago factory a year and then the Moody school as a student.

The inevitable failure of justice in this life is an assurance of a better life to come. It is abhorrent to our conceptions of the infinite being that should endow us with a knowledge of the law covering material things, investing the highest produced intelligence, the human mind with a mysterious environment no man can ever fathom and yet at the end of his existence will reward that soul from receiving the reward which is essential to justice.—David I. Brewer.

THE DOCTRINAL MOULDING POT

We have always had a poor opinion of external uniformity, and have always been out of that group, in all churches, who clamor for uniformity.

In our mind there are worse conditions in the Christian Church than denominational differences. Internal strife is worse in its effects on the outside world than two differing denominations occupying the same territory.

An Arminian brother and I may be as far apart as pole from pole, where free-agency and God's sovereignty are concerned. Yet we love and respect each other and agree to disagree; but in our individual churches, where we are of the same mind where the doctrines are involved, we may not be on the same terms, and we may impart to each other the meanest of motives, and our internal strife may have a worse effect upon the non-Christian world than the presence in the same territory of several different denominations.

It is the direct work of the devil, who seeks to lead us astray, while the other result of differently constructed minds, earlier training, or the effect of environment.

We have always been sympathetic to the differences of denominations, and have always been ready to co-operate in the Lord's work.

As long as men's minds are as different as the leaves of the forest, they will never be alike, and it is necessary that each man's religious views, shall have some church in its creed embodies his peculiar views. We believe, as we do, in God's sovereignty and would never be at ease in a Methodist Church, while our Methodist brother believing in the free-agency of man as he does, could be happy within the Presbyterian fold, where he may be ready to bear witness to his zeal in Christian work.

America is said to be the moulding pot of the world, whereby they are gradually outgrowing their racial differences.

From the present indications it bids fair to be a doctrinal moulding pot, whereby the differences of the various denominations that are working separately such a wonderful work, we may have one American Church, that in time, the Lord prevent, will rival the Church of Rome in the middle ages. The temptation in a union is to minimize differences to the glory of a man's conscience. We must remember that truth is a sacred thing that we must not trifle with. It may not be the real truth, but if we believe it to be real, then it must be sacred in our eyes. The motive behind such attempts is the craving for big churches, the belief that a big church will increase respect.

In the west and north this movement of union seems to be making some headway.

Up to this far it has not reached us of the south. We hope that it will not. The various denominations among us are working together harmoniously.

Members of the Presbyterian faith admire the zeal of our Methodist brethren, the orthodoxy of the Southern Baptists, and the dignity and reverence of the Episcopal Church. With the Psalmist we are ready to say, "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity."

THE AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY

Our Church in 1928, gave to the Bible Society $3,112.59 less than in 1927.

There may have been some reason for this falling off, but we believe that if the Church had been acquainted with the great work done by this Society, there would have been an increase in the giving.

In the 112 years of its life this Society has published and circulated 190,000,000 copies of the Bible or complete portions of the Bible, and it has published the Bible in 169 different languages. Its work during the past year, has especially placed the South under obligations to it to such an extent that one would have expected an increase in contributions rather than a decrease.

When the terrible floods in the Mississippi Valley drove thousands of people from their homes with the subsequent loss of family possessions, this Society distributed 60,000 copies of the Gospel among the refugees. Then in order to enable these refugees to preserve their family records of family names and dates in the Bible, this Society published a special edition with family record pages.

It was this Society that helped to issue the first complete Bible in the Luba Lulua language, spoken by the African people among whom our missionaries are working in the Belgian Congo.

Our missionaries, Morrison and Vinson, did the translating, but this Society financed the typesetting and plate making for this large undertaking at an enormous cost.

Let us remember these facts when Bible Society Sunday comes again.

"S. O. S."

Every March this cry can be heard, sent out by the Church Committees of Home and Foreign Missions.

There come to our desk copies of the papers of the various denominations, and with but only a few exceptions, they are all in deep need.

When the need is uniform among the various churches it is evident that there must be the same cause at work among them all.

It is evidently a case of illness around which many doctors have gathered and many opinions expressed as to the remedy needed. Some think that the church treasurers are to be blamed, that they do not send to the head officials the funds contributed, with the result that money has to be borrowed and interest paid, which makes the amount contributed that much less.

No doubt that may explain a small part of the decrease; but when that decrease runs up into thousands, the explanation fails to explain.

Another reason given is that the people are spending more upon themselves than in years past, the luxury of one age becoming the necessity of the next. No one will question the charge that this is an age of luxury and that our people are living in a degree of luxury never dreamed of by their ancestors.

Those who have studied the downfall of great nations of the past, view with real alarm the rapid rate at which we are living. No doubt the falling off in giving is largely due to the increasing scale of luxury in which this present age is living.

This explanation only suggests another question—Why are we living at this rapid rate, when our confession of Christ, according to the terms laid down by Him, calls for self-denial and cross-bearing? Can we claim to be His followers when we have failed to accept the terms of discipleship laid down by Him?

If we seek the real cause of the falling off we must go back to our own hearts. We once loved the Lord above all else, and in his service we found our highest pleasure.

Now our chief pleasure is the indulgence of self, with the result that His work suffers.

We need a new heart, a revival of love for Him. Until the church is revived and set on fire with love for Him, our causes will languish and some die. Nothing can take the place of the Spirit appeal. The religious press and the appeals of the secretaries will, no doubt, prepare the way for His work—but the grace of giving will come "not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts."

THE POPE A TEMPORAL RULER

Every student of Church history knows what a turbulent life the successor of Peter has had. At one time he ruled the kings of Europe with an iron rod—and then followed the time when "none is so poor as to do him reverence." He finally retired to a section of Rome, and complained that he was a prisoner in the Vatican.

Recently Mussolini, the Italian dictator, has offered to give the Pope more territory, but he has declined the offer.

This new Vatican, in area, will be only one-quarter of a square, something like 160 acres. Only about two and a half times the size of the Capital grounds in Washington.

The Pope holds that temporal sovereignty is consistent with spiritual sovereignty. If his reverence can find any pleasure in this new condition, we would not oppose the attempt to satisfy the Holy Father with at least, a half loaf. We hope that he may reign in peace over his dominion and that his subjects may be loyal to whatever ruler they are under.

THE UNION SEMINARY REVIEW

This quarterly Review, published by our own Union Seminary, has come to our desk. It has a tempting table of contents.

Dr. Walter Lingle who always writes in an interesting style, discusses the "Bible and War."

Rev. R. B. Woodworth, M.A., D.Sc., of Burlington, W. Va., has a study of "Salaries and Livelihood of Ministers."

This is a subject near to the heart of every preacher, as it should be to the consecrated membership of the Christian Church. It is the developed result of a committee of Winchester Presbytery, and it is worth a careful study.

Dr. David S. Clark, of Philadelphia, has a well-considered study of Ritehlianism.

Our friend, Dr. C. W. Sommerville, professor of Bible at Queens College, Charlotte, has a sympathetic study of the life of the pioneer of Presbyterianism in Tennessee, Samuel Doak.

Dr. Wm. T. Riviere, of Cleburne, Texas, proves to his own satisfaction, as well as ours, that the Westminster definition of the Church remains true and that the Church did exist before Pentecost.

Dr. A. A. Little, of Meridian, Miss., has a clear and striking discussion of the sermon and its objective.

"The Master's Behest," by Rev. Charles D. Holland, of Fallston, Md., is an earnest discussion of the last command of our Lord.

"New Theological Quarterly" is discussed by the editor.

This Quarterly is described in the prospectus as "A Theological Review, international in scope and outlook in defence of the historic Christian Faith." It will be issued in Edinburgh, and will supply, we feel sure, a much needed publication. We are glad that someone is aroused to the danger to the Church of God by the present tendencies of the theological schools.

There are 25 pages devoted to book reviews by means of which the reading preacher can guide his feet in study.

As we glance over these reviews we are impressed by the fact that all the books are fine and sound. Of those that come to us, the sound ones are few and far between.

THE UNIQUENESS OF JESUS

A Christmas Message

Rev. W. D. Moss, D.D., Pastor of the Presbyterian Church, Chapel Hill, N. C.

Philippians 2:9, "God hath given Him a name that is above every name."

As the holy festival draws near that commemorates the advent of the Man of Nazareth we are stirred once more to special reverence for this great spirit who has drawn to Himself the sustained devotion of the centuries. Other men have emerged as bright particular stars in the firmament of history to whom the world continually repairs for support. But in the foreground of this galaxy of spirits stands, always, the person of Jesus.

"Through Him the first fond prayers are said
Our lips of childhood frame,
The last low whispers of our dead
Are burdened with His name."

History never makes a mistake in the names it places in its gallery of distinction. The cloud of criticism perennially rising in their sky never successfully dims their splendor. Having lived they remain enthroned in the human heart forever. And, having lived, they commit to succeeding ages the task of interpreting them. It is a serious task for the precious gains of civilization have their source, always, in the great man; and men interpret him in order that the civilizing process may, through him, be purified of its obsessions and be thus further encouraged on its way.

As we seek to wrest his secret from the man of historic splendor our problem is to search for the unique element in his career that gave him his distinction. And such is our task as we apply ourselves to a study of Him whom God has given the name that is above every name.

Was It In His Origin?

It has been affirmed that the superiority of Jesus lies in the Supernatural origin claimed for Him by his biographers. But similar origins have been claimed for other men. Besides, it is not how a man was born but what kind of a man he is that determines his status. He would be a courageous individual who repudiated the Supernatural. When a man denies the Supernatural what he means is that he doesn't accept the Supernatural in the form in which it has been presented to him. He is willing to grant, however, that all natural processes go back to that which is higher and other than themselves. Hence the validity of the Supernatural in the world. The difference, therefore, between objects, is not the presence in one and the absence in the other of the Supernatural but the way in which they translate and illustrate their original endowment of reality. And Jesus Christ is to be tested not by His original endowment of reality but by his illustration of the same in His daily life. To base His uniqueness on His origin is to set Him forth in terms of that which is other than Himself, not in terms of His achievement. And it is significant that He never refers to His origin as set forth by his biographers. He asks us to believe in Him as divine but does so because He lived divinely, not because He had a divine origin. And two of his biographers, fascinated by the manner of His presence, make no reference what ever to his origin.

Was It In His Environment?

It is the fashion to say that the environment produces the man and this has been a favorite explanation of the great man. But nothing is entirely made by its environment. The seed grows into a tree, relying on sun and air and soil but there is something in the seed that assimilates the sun and air and soil and makes it possible, therefore, for its environment to work upon it. A dead seed never grows. Two men live in the same community at the same time. Why is it that one of them becomes a celebrity and the other remains in obscurity? The age in which Jesus was born was propitious. Civilization there and then was at the cross roads and in need of the great man to interpret and carry it forward. But why did He and not some other become the Saviour of the world? Why not John the Baptist or Pontius Pilate or the Caesar on the throne? But apart from this, to test a man by his environment is to interpret him in terms of that which is other than himself and not in terms of himself. And here we have a variation of the attempt to refer the uniqueness of Jesus to his origin.

Was Jesus a Myth?

One of the favorite explanations of the great man is to say that he is the creation of his biographer. The human mind, it is affirmed, reads into the life it seeks to interpret much that is not there. A book has recently come from the press whose author seeks to show that the Man of Nazareth was wholly a creation of his biographers. This is the mythical theory of great men. They either haven't lived and are therefore wholly fictitious or, having lived, are largely the product of the imagination.

But there is always a man back of the story of a man and there is always something in the man himself that stirs the imagination to accentuate his story. Else why has the biographer not seized on the name of Socrates or Plato or Philo or St. Paul and wrought it into the human consciousness as the name that is above every name?

The atmosphere of myth gathers about the great man but the man is there first. The myth grows out of the man, never the man out of the myth. And the myth puts in its appearance as a compliment to the man. The human mind, viz, is so enthralled by its subject that it feels it cannot treat it adequately without the aid of the shaping spirit of the imagination. And the myth has virtue as well as the bare statement of fact. The story of the Cherry Tree is a touch of real biography. There is balm in tradition as well as in fact.

But to say that the great man is the product of his biographer and therefore only or largely a mythical being is to center the interest in the biographer, not in the man. And that is another phase of the attempt to base the claims of Jesus on His origin or environment. It is to interpret Him in terms of something foreign to Him and not in terms of Himself.

Was Christ's Uniqueness Due to Miracles?

Reverent folk have always referred the superiority of Jesus to His miracles. But He makes no such claim. They flocked around Him with the passion for the miraculous and He told them that their motive was a form of wickedness. "An evil and an adulterous generation seeketh after a sign." And, recurrently in his ministry, He not only refused to work miracles but expressed the wish that His followers would not base His claim on the miraculous.

Moreover, other men in other times have been associated with the miraculous. One was said to turn a rod into a snake and another to make an axe float in the water. In India today the miracle worker is on every street corner and in every avenue and lane. And to claim for the uniqueness of Jesus his ability to work miracles is to place Him in rivalry with others instead of stressing His originality.

The man who was wrought miracles in the ancient world has emerged among us as the superman. But the world, applauding the superman, finds in Him something to be feared rather than emulated. And if Jesus had based His claims on His exercise of superlative human power He might have been another Alexander or Caesar but not the superior being of the world.

Was Christ Merely a Genius?

The popular language applied to the great man identifies him as a genius and Jesus has been heralded as such. Our Emerson delights to mention Him along with Plato or Socrates or Savonarola or some other whom humanity has honored as genius. The word genius, however, is like the surd in mathematics. And to speak of a man as a genius is to take refuge in a thought instrument, not in thought. But be this as it may, the impression formed from the word is that the man so labelled is of such marked ability that he stands apart from his fellows who can never hope even to emulate him. Genius is, therefore, another name for Superman. But Jesus made no such claim for Himself. "I am the light of the World," He declares of His own person. And "Ye are the light of the world," He tells his followers, implying that they were potentially what He actually was. And His judgment, passed on the miraculous power attributed to Him, is significant: "Greater works than these shall ye do."

In our study, therefore, of this great figure of history we find that there have been two attempts to set forth His uniqueness, the one centering in the Supernatural, the other in the Superman, the former presenting us with a divine but not a human being, the latter with only a human being, even if he is an enlarged illustration of the same. Papini, for example, stresses the divine nature of Jesus, while Mr. Bruce Barton stresses the human. The latter's "Man whom nobody knows" is a superior administrator or a business expert like Mr. Barton. The biographies of Jesus, appearing from time to time, continue to interpret their subject in terms either of the divine or the human. In every instance we have a type of man presented to us but not the man in his totality, not the man in terms of himself.

Jesus the Complete Human

Turning to the Gospel story we find the divine Jesus in St. Matthew and St. Luke, the man of action and power in St. Mark while in St. John the biographical interest moves on another plane. According to the latter's statement Jesus Christ stands in history as the first man who saw the essential unity of God's world and man's world, who saw the world as the living presence of Reality, of which the human being was the finished expression, and who lived for the real and divine and enduring things because it was His nature to do so. He was, therefore, the first man to believe in Himself and express Himself and live and grow and find His freedom. Which means that the individual emerged for the first time in Jesus of Nazareth. He believed in and expressed Himself because He found in His experience those permanent values on which He could rely. And in all the relations in which He stood He released the values that were seeking expression in his experience, thus giving to the details of his life a touch of splendor and to His fellows the spectacle of a man in all the full, rich beauty of manhood.

Here we come on the spectacle of a man in his totality, what Jesus calls the perfect man and St. Paul the Saint—a man, viz, not with a halo about his brow, but with all his capacities of thought and will and feeling in bloom. The reason why Raphael painted a picture that has a name above every name in pictorial art is that he left nothing out of his enterprise and achievement. There was a perfect blending of the artistic elements in that sublime creation. Mr. Ty Cobb has enjoyed a name above every name in the realm of athletics because the perfect man, athletically speaking—the man in the happy co-ordination of brain and hand and heart—was realized in him. Enlarge the thought from art and athletics to living, and in the Man of Nazareth we have the perfect man on the street, in the home, in the presence of all manner of people and relations. He was a man, here among men, associated with the problems, and cares and perplexities of the common day. But he never sounded a retreat from life nor ever by a mere masterful exercise of His compelled His environment to do His bidding. He stood, patiently and gently but surely He brot to every detail of his experience the serene w light of Reality. He knew the thing to be said done and did it with the unerring touch of fine fee that gives enlargement to knowledge and tem action with justice and beauty.

Christ Relates God With Man

And this perfect man saw the capacity for per tion in his fellow beings and encouraged them believe in themselves and express themselves and and grow and find their freedom. "Be ye perf He said to them." And He meant that. He en aged them because He saw the possibility that throbbing within them and that only needed courage to express itself. Jesus and His disc present us with the spectacle of a group of men "gave a welcome to all those things both higher lower than have a right to enter a man's life dominate it." This is the story of what has technically called the Incarnation—the divine permanent in man, and man seeking and finding divine and permanent within him.

The whole biography of man centers in the atte to effect a unity between him and the divine. E in his career he became aware of the finite changing nature of his human world. He found every thing he touched eluded his grasp. The rose and also set. He made his plans that miscar The spectacle of finiteness and change confro and appalled the early man as it confronts and ap the modern man.

He found, viz, that there was something in world that was interfering with and interrupting apparent order, something that was higher than superior to man. That higher and superior po he called God. And his problem, henceforth, la the attempt to relate himself to God, to find the di and thus find his security and peace in a chan world. But the ancient man failed to effect relation. He found the divine but lost the hur He discovered God but located Him in another w And his only hope lay in turning his face from human world in which, despite its transitory nat he continued to be interested. Yes, and failing length to appropriate the divine, he turned agai the world to be unhappy there.

Motif of Greek Culture

Greek culture came in as one of the grand futile efforts to relate the human and divine. was a brave venture of the human spirit that value still. Great men figured there whose na have become household words, none of which, h ever, has become the name that is above every na

The Greek started with a vivid sense of his envi ment. He was a child of the material order. Bu was a thinking spirit who in his analysis of th seen and temporal discovered the things unseen eternal, the things of God, the things, viz, that enduring and divine. His discovery he called Ideal country. God, for him, became identified the ideal. But in his pursuit of this ideal, perman divine world he lost touch with the world of hu affairs. The finished contribution of that an chapter of culture was Plato's Republic and it an ideal state, not a state on the map. The Plato could do was to suggest the creation of a tured and leisure class who found release from world of human affairs by despising it. The G failed to see that culture was not only of the A polis and the Apollo Belvedere but of the ma place, the home, the street and all the commonp relations in which men stand. There was no l for man as such in that program of civilization. men faced their cares and performed their task if Plato and his Academy had never existed, pr much as they do today surrounded by the educati institutions they pay taxes to support. In o words, the Greek caught sight of the divine but n realized the divine in life. Supermen emerged t like Plato and Aristotle and Demosthenes, but men clothed in the splendor of daily living after manner of the Man of Nazareth.

Motif of Roman Culture

The Roman Empire was another grand but lated attempt to relate the human and divine. founders of the Empire claimed for it a divine or The great man emerged there who, receiving commission from God, built the Empire and bec its Sovran. His Sovran power was delegated to from God and carried with it divine honors. In days of Jesus the Empire prevailed everywhere men declared with pride that they were Ro citizens. But Rome with all her social cohesion languishing when Jesus lived. It failed to be tree whose leaves were for the healing of the between man's world and God's world. And it fa because it, too, sounded a retreat from life. It roned, viz, without the individual. Private inter were absorbed and lost in the Social System. saw no connection between their private cone and the public interest and many of them, b slaves, were supposed to have no private cone The Roman people had their Forum but not thought of the personal righteousness that exal a nation. Glorious monuments were raised in m ory of heroic men but the heroes in the daily b of life had no significance. Vast wealth was s on public buildings and places of amusement nothing in the attempt to create better opportu for the individual man.

The Roman discovered the world of God but the world of man. Suprmen emerged there impressed thir power on citizens and slaves but gap remained between men and their personal itage in the things that count and abide.

Failure of the Jew

The Jew worshiped Jehovah, an infinite being righteousness who had selected the Prophet to v commit His laws to the people for their observance. But the program failed to effect the unity of man and the divine because it also sounded death from life. It pointed to the Temple but attempted to bring the Temple to the home meadows and sheepfolds. The story of the talk of Jesus and the woman of Samaria who asked about the correct place in which to worship is tant here. Judaism was entirely removed from private life of the Jew. Supermen emerged there persons of the Scribes and Priest and Prophet rank and file of the people, while reverence-se supermen, were as the hungry sheep that p and are not fed.

all the failure, however, of the ancient people to be repeated that they made a grand contribution to civilization. They discovered God, which that they discovered their inheritance in the present and divine and ideal. Their failure lay in inability to translate the permanent and divine ideal into daily living. Discovering God they never able to put Him to work in their daily and relations. Ancient civilizations never led the lives of men as men.

A Bankrupt World

and when Jesus made His advent He came to a state of bankruptcy. The human being knew how to live truly and blessedly he should live divinely. In order to attain the divine, he found himself in a state of despair and utterly weary with his life in the world. Greek civilization had been abandoned by Rome and culture had ended in cynicism. The Roman Empire was writing its own epitaph and the citizens, to say nothing of the slaves, were in a state of despair. Judea was not only under the dominion of Rome but the younger generation there had turned its back on the law and prophets.

all had sighted the Ideal Country as Columbus had sighted America. The development of America, passed to other hands. And the development of the Ideal Country passed into the hands of a man who, in his own language, came to establish the Kingdom of God upon earth.

Our Times Compared With Christ's

The situation that prevailed at the time of Jesus was similar to that with which we are confronted today. The school—the sequel to Plato's Academy—with its program of culture which makes for a life but not necessarily for the wise life. The sequel to the Roman Empire—is making and thus filling social prescriptions for the individual but not necessarily diagnosing his disease. The church—the sequel to the ancient Temple—is teaching ecclesiastical but not necessarily periling. Jesus met that situation in the person of a Savior of the world we mean that by His insight for which He forfeited His life He founded a civilization to go forward. He founded a School and was thus a friend of culture but the men He taught went into the world with the life made alive in their experience. "I am the light," He said. And again: "If the Truth shall make you free you shall be free indeed." Mere knowledge was but the veneer of culture. He taught the truth of religion and in teaching it He aroused the passion to put it to work in the world. And he would say that the teaching of any world was futile if it had not a similar result. For truth's sake and not for humanity's sake would consider a pleasant pastime but not the end of culture.

The Achievements of Jesus

He founded and administered a state but it was a state which all were for each as well as each for the state. He founded and administered a Church but religion was first a personal experience. He was, viz, that God was Spirit and that men first found Him in their hearts, then built their Church. He gave to the divine and ideal a local habitation and a name. He made God a force in life. Before with men he opened wide to them the gates of possibility and faith and hope. He proclaimed the ideal to men by presenting them with the spectacle of the man with ideals. He proclaimed men by the spectacle of the God-man. In heralding the divine and claiming divine He stood before men as the divine man and for every man the power to express the divine where he was and in what he was doing and suffering. The human and divine, He were a unit. "I and my Father are one." "I am come that ye may find your life on its and therefore abundant side." "The Son of God called Himself. But by a Son of Man he was the Son of God. Look long enough at a Son and in him you are obliged to find God. The place, preeminently, to find God, is in Man. The Kingdom of God is within you." The human is, is the de luxe edition of life and as such a finished illustration of the great creative whom all things live and move and have their being. He, thrilled by His teaching and person, men gathered around Him from all the various walks of life. The reverent Jew, dissatisfied with his ecclesiastical, turned to Him. Roman citizens and slaves, with their social system became His converts. Greek Culture sought Him out and finally in His language for the writing of His biography. It was a tremendous stirring of lives everywhere, the result of which was the formation of the society within the Empire in which men lived in unity with the divine and their unity, with each other. It was a divine-human unity in which the Greek and Roman and Jewish at civilization were fused in what has blossomed as our modern Democracy with its School and State and Church.

Jesus and the Modern School

But the modern school is very different in its aim from the school as administered by Plato—thanks to the advent of Jesus Christ. It is very different in aim although not always in practice, for still the old Platonic idea of culture prevails that is away from life. Matthew Arnold took the Cornell Institution to task for its attempt to relate culture to Commerce. He was a British Plato who failed to see that Culture is the harmonious development of the individual. The apostles of this ancient culture are still in evidence but they are belated heralds of education. For on the soil of America we are committed to the program of culture that is a coming to know that we may be better able to live. Here on this soil, committed to the cause of the individual, we are coming to see that the culture of the hand is as glorious as the culture of the brain. We believe that every form of work—work in the mill and mine and home and market place and on the street—is a medium through which the spirit of man may attain its perfection and freedom. And the latest cultural movement among us is adult education—the bringing of the program of the school to men where they are amidst the grime and smoke and wear and tear of toil and business.

Jesus and the Modern State

The modern State is very different in aim from that of the Roman Empire—thanks to the advent of Jesus. Centralized government prevailed in that ancient system and the individual was a cog in the machine. But once when Jesus was asked to solve the problem of taxes He replied: "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's and unto God the things that are God's," the implication of His reply being that a man stands in the image of God as well as a member of the social order; yes, and being in the image of God he is first a man and afterwards a social being and the social order that reckons without the consent of the human beings that constitute it is like the body that would reckon without limbs or arms. We are committed to a government that is in the interests of men. Citizenship was purchased under the ancient rule. A man is born a citizen among us and, coming of age, is expected to take a personal interest in the civic welfare and make a contribution, however small, to the civic venture. American civilization is every American's privilege and responsibility.

There are apostles of civilization among us who, harking back to the ancient method, stand as champions not of the rights of men but of the rights of a special class. Industry has its champions. Business has its champions. The farmer has his champions. As if any man or class of men constituted the state! It is significant, however, that every various interest is being championed even if the champions are sectarian in their devotion. And, gradually, in our crude and dull manner we are working out on this soil a social order in which every claimant shall have his dues, banker, merchant, capitalist, toiler, farmer, the man on salary and the man of money and privilege.

Jesus and Modern Religion

Religion today is very different in its aim from that of the Pharisaic system—thanks to the advent of Jesus. In the hands of the Pharisee religion was mathematicized and the people were supposed to bow reverently to the religious formula. But we are gradually absorbing the teaching of Jesus that religion is a personal experience and therefore the light of the world and not merely a formula. There are apostles of Jesus, today, who, reverting to the Pharisaic method, would deny to men their ancient right to think and would saddle upon them a form of belief; who are saying that the world is a wicked place and are setting up a gap between secular and sacred. But the thought of Jesus is quietly making its way among us that the world is good in the making, that men are essentially religious and that engaged in their secular pursuits with clean hands and pure hearts they are spreading the Kingdom of God on the earth.

Ancient civilization was founded on the principle that a man couldn't do anything right and was therefore in need of a guardian. The guardian emerged as the man of culture who arrogated to himself the responsibility of warding off catastrophe. The guardian emerged as the head of the social system who worked out the formula for social cohesion. The guardian emerged as the Priest or Scribe or Prophet who also sought to whip the fumbling and stumbling human being into line.

According to Jesus men are born to go right as the sparks to fly upward, and, given encouragement, they will, God helping them, work out their own salvation. And the story of our Christmas Day is a parable of life. It is a parable of every child born into the world—every infant in the mother's arms a young messiah to be nurtured as a precious unit of life that is eventually to radiate life and light in the world! The story of Christmas is a parable of the rebirth of civilization out of its ignorance, out of its vice and slums and squalor, out of its poverty and crime, its weariness and fever and fret; into the light that is never extinguished and the beauty that is uncreated—into the Kingdom of God upon earth.

The spirit of reverence in man, making many a mistake, has been forever toiling upward in its search. And on this holy occasion when men lift their voices in prayer and praise to the Man of Nazareth their reverence touches hands with one who turned the tides of history and therefore merits the name that is above every name.

OUR STEWARDSHIP OF THE COLLECTION PLATE

James H. Henderlite, D.D.

In the observance of Stewardship Year in 1929 our Church considers during the month of March the interesting topic—"Our Stewardship of the Collection Plate." On March 10th we take our annual Church-wide Every Member Canvass, promoted this year under the challenging goal, "Every Member Growing In The Grace Of The Regular Worship Of Giving." Every member of every church will be asked to make a pledge to support of our whole work at home and abroad, for pastor's salary, current expense and benevolences. These pledges are redeemable on the weekly collection basis as set forth in I Cor. 16:2 and payable weekly for one year, beginning April 1st, 1929. Every member is a steward of the collection plate. As it passes him in the pew of his church, the collection plate becomes a spiritual opportunity to the pew-holder, bringing the whole world to his own door. The pew-holder accepts the challenge of the collection plate, becomes a partner with God, grows in grace and helps to answer the call of a waiting world.

Interest in Collections Not Confined to the Church

We hear much these days of the collection. The collection is a very familiar part of our life and a part of our every day experience. Almost everywhere we go and whatever we do, someone is taking up a collection. Remarks concerning the collection are heard on every hand. The statement of Paul in I Cor. 16:1, "Now concerning the collection" does not therefore sound old. It is hard to find a place where someone is not taking up a collection. If we ride on the street car or take a taxi someone is on hand to take a collection. If we visit the butcher, the baker, the grocer, or if we call on the haberdasher or the milliner, they ask for a collection. It is the same at the movie, the theater, the ball park or the golf course. If we read a magazine or a newspaper, the collection plate is shoved at us. The gas and light and water companies take up their collections with unfailing regularity. If we join a fraternal order or a civic club, these do not forget the collection. The garage calls for frequent and liberal offerings. The government charges us for living, the doctor for being sick, the undertaker for dying and the marble-cutter for being remembered after we are gone. So, the collection in the church is no novelty.

We may also note, that compared with others, the Church collection is modest and its collectors most considerate. Other collectors use preemptory terms. Their language is pointed and insistent. The very signs are eloquent and persuasive: "Cash and Carry," "C. O. D.," "Pay as you enter." At the door of the Church hangs the sign, "Welcome. This Church is supported entirely by free-will offerings." Compared with others the Church's demands, or rather "askings" are certainly very modest. Examine the annual bill for automobiles, candy, jewelry, flowers, moving pictures, tobacco and countless other things. The United Stewardship Council reports gifts by protestants for 1928 of $532,368,714,000 which was a splendid increase over the preceding year. But the last report available indicates a total expenditure in the United States of more than twenty-two billions for luxuries. When a country can spend as our does for luxuries and still put hundreds of millions in the savings banks annually, there must be plenty of money. An Englishman, after a recent trip to our country wrote, "The thing that impressed me most was the prodigal way they spend money. They have always been the world's champion spenders but the gait at which they are going now makes all previous efforts silly."

It is a good sign that there are those who think that the Church collection is too small. The Literary Digest understands why the Church house is poor. Too much of our money goes to other things, too little to the causes of Religion. Out of the average American Dollar 24 1-2 cents goes to living costs, 22 cents to luxuries, 14 cents to waste, 13 1-2 cents to miscellaneous, 11 cents to investment, 8 1-2 cents to crime, 4 1-2 cents to government, 1 1-2 cents to schools and three-fourths of one cent to the Church. We waste 18 times as much as we give to organized religion, crime takes more than ten times as much as the Church and luxury nearly 30 times as much. No wonder Roger Babson rebukes the American people for spending too little on religion. He says that three-fourths of the annual business turn-over of this country passes through the hands of Church people, and that if they would give a tithe, which he thinks they ought to do, the Church collection would be about five billion dollars a year. The United States government thinks that we do not give enough, for it allows, not a tithe, but an exemption of 15 per cent for benevolences.

The Church Collection in Comparison With Other Collections

We have no reason to shirk or be ashamed of our stewardship of the collection plate when we compare its objectives with that of other collections. The Church collection is not embarrassed by the purpose for which it is taken nor the results obtained in its expenditures. This cannot be said of all collections or of many of them. Yes, of course many of our own expenditures are absolutely necessary. "Your Father in heaven knoweth that ye have need of these things." Others are in themselves legitimate within proper limits. Yet even of the class of things that we are in the habit of calling the necessities of life Christ said, "Be not careful about them, but seek ye rather the kingdom of God and His righteousness." Picture in your mind's eye two charts,—one showing the Church collection, its amount and its destination; the other the collections for all else, their amount and their destination, and then take time to think through this matter of your own stewardship of the Church Collection Plate.

For what purpose do we take the Church collection? Answer; for the work of the local church, pastor's salary, current expenses, Foreign Missions in six foreign countries, Assembly's Home Missions in seventeen states, Christian Education, Ministerial Relief, Sunday School Extension, Bible Cause, Training School, Presbytery's

Work and Synod's Work. Surely there is nothing to be embarrassed about here. If Babson is correct in saying that the best asset of the community is the Church and the Sunday School; if Ruskin is right in saying that we can judge a people by what they like and are interested in; if Wilson is right in his statement, "Our civilization cannot survive materially unless it is redeemed spiritually",—then surely we must examine our stewardship in the matter of money and make greater use of the collection plate in a regular, systematic and proportionate way.

Statesmen, publicists and leaders in all walks of life are telling us that the only remedy for present ills and the only solution of our problems is to be found within the doors of the Church. Just before he died Henry Waterson said, "The sky is black, the future is dark. I can see only one hope for mankind, and that is the Gospel of Christ."

Shall the New Church Year Bring Advance or Retrenchment?

Surely with its great ministry of taking the Gospel to the uttermost parts of the earth, the Collection Plate offers a great challenge to every member of every church in our Assembly. Surely there is not a member out of the 444,657 in our great Church that would be willing to say on the day of the Every Member Canvass, Let us retreat from our former position. Shall we refuse the challenge of our Foreign Missions work carried on for us by our Executive Committee of Foreign Missions in so excellent manner and with so great results in Africa, Brazil, China, Japan, Korea and Mexico? Shall we say to our Assembly's Home Mission Committee that we have not the spiritual vision to see the great frontiers still unoccupied in our cities, valleys, mountains and difficult places in our great southland? Shall we fail to meet the call of our Executive Committee of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief to educate and protect the youth or care for the aged? Shall we forget the ground we have won and that yet to be possessed, as shown us by our Committee on Religious Education? Shall we neglect our Schools, Colleges, Seminaries, Training Schools, the Bible Cause? What shall we do with the challenge in Synod's Home Missions and Presbytery's Home Missions and the accepted tasks that confront us in the Country Church problem and the City Church Problem? We dare not neglect "These Little Ones" in our orphanages, crowded for room, and hundreds waiting for places to enter.

I am persuaded that March Tenth will be a day of great advance all over our Church, a day when Every Member will witness a personal growth in the grace of the regular worship of giving, in order that the Gospel may be preached through all of the agencies of our Church, and the individual member may rejoice "upon the first day of the week",—every week, in his faithful stewardship of the collection plate, God's constant challenge to each member to "Abound in this grace also." A NOTABLE STUDY OF THE BIBLE

"The Book in the Light of its Books" by William Ray Dobyns. Fleming H. Revell, New York City. Pp. 188. Price, $1.75.

Were the first two words of the above title printed in black face type, the story of the volume would be told in its title—The Book is the Bible—The Books its many inspired parts that make up the whole.

The author says "The purpose of this study is to give the student a comprehensive knowledge of the Book. This to be done by a view of the Books according to their classification, yet in such a way as to show the unity of the whole. Once a good, general view is obtained, exhibiting the Book as a whole, like the landscape, the after examination of particular features becomes both easy and attractive."

A glance through the clearly printed pages, with a careful reading of the first two chapters, will surely result in enlisting the reader in a careful and enjoyable study of the entire contents of this unusual and timely volume. It clearly reveals the essential unity of the Bible as one Book, yet skilfully fits together

YOUNG PEOPLE'S DEPT.

EDITOR'S LOOKOUT

W. A. Gamble, Pinetops, N. C.

At this time, when churches are making up budgets and conducting the Every Member Canvass for the support of the coming year's work, attention should be given to the matter of aiding the young people. Denominational conferences and Christian Endeavor conventions offer helpful programs. Often the young people individually cannot afford to attend. Sending them to these gatherings is a good investment for any church, and the expense—or part of it—should be cared for along with other annual obligations of the local church.

The Senior Christian Endeavor Society of the Presbyterian Church, Pinetops, N. C., arranged to have one of their Sunday evening meetings in the room of a young man of the town who is confined to his bed in an effort to check the progress of tuberculosis. The regular program for the week was carried out just as though the meeting was being held at the church. The attendance was even better than when holding the meeting in the regular place. The shut-in expressed great pleasure in having the meeting, and another will be held there soon.

This society holds a combination business meeting and social each month. The business comes before pleasure. Beginning the society's first social the custom was adopted of closing the evening's activities by gathering around the musical instrument, singing a verse or two of a hymn, then having a short prayer of thanksgiving to God for the good time enjoyed.

The President of the society has gone away to college and the Vice-president, Miss Mary Louise Fuller, is acting as president until school closes. The Superintendent of the society is Miss Elsie Weaver. The society membership includes during the winter Mr. John H. Wildman, teacher in the high school, who is President of the Northeast District of the state endeavor work.

A Boy Who Worked For God

(I Sam. 2:18, 26)

Have a small Christmas candle to represent Samuel. Make clear to the Junior that Samuel was only a little boy at this time. He had been cared for by a God-fearing mother. He was getting ready to do a great service for God. Samuel knew nothing about this; yet, advised by Eli the priest, when God called, he answered and said, "Speak, for thy servant heareth."

Light the little candle, and tell the pupils that it represents Samuel, for he was the only light in a dark place. This little boy was the only spark of good among a sinful people.

the various books comprising it like carefully hewn stones growing into a beautiful building.

The studies which compose this book were delivered first in lecture form, largely extempore and while Dr. Dobyns expresses in the preface a fear that this may detract from their force when presented in printed form, the reader will be attracted by the lack of formality, the mild vein of humor and the simplicity of its form and will rejoice in the lack of involved statement or profound theological discussion which makes many valuable Bible studies hard reading for the laity.

The writer, Dr. Dobyns, has long been known as one of the great Bible teachers of our Church nor has his teaching been confined to any one denomination, for he is in constant demand as a Bible lecturer at conferences, conventions and assemblies throughout the land. His style is purely expository and his thorough knowledge of his subject apparent.

In Dr. Dobyns' impressionable college days he was privileged to sit under the preaching of that Master exponent of the Word, Wm. Hoge Marquess, whose influence to a degree has probably been responsible for Dr. Dobyns' many years of close study and fruitful exposition of the Bible. He has been pre-eminently a teacher of one book although a prolific reader of books concerning his chosen subject.

It is especially fortunate that The Book In the Light of Its Books should be available to teachers and pupils of the Bible classes of the Woman's Auxiliary at this time. For four years the auxiliaries have been unitedly studying the Bible by books, taking a new book each year. They are just finishing Luke and in April begin the study of Acts. There is danger that by continued, detached study of its separate books we may fail to grasp the realization of the essential unity of the Bible.

Every leader of a Bible class should secure this valuable book and no one interested in following a clear, simple and practical plan of Bible study can afford to be without it.

Mrs. W. C. Winsborough.

Illustrate this by the missionaries. They leave and go to a heathen country. Sometimes they even speak the language of the people with whom they live. They are the only spark of God in a dark, gloomy, among people uneducated and often cruel. Rev. John G. Paton, who went many years ago as a missionary to the New Hebrides. He was a tiny, frail, but the light grew and grew till now there are many lights there.

Leave the Juniors to review the story of Samuel.

Eli. Ask the questions "What can we do for God?" "What can we do in His home?" As the Juniors give their answers, let these be discussed thoroughly. They will then learn the lessons of worship, reverence, faithfulness, and sacredness.

Picture Lesson: "The Infant Samuel, by Sir John Reynolds.

Give each Junior a small copy of the picture. Show that God desires boys in His service.

Juniors Take Part

Let the Juniors tell about the services of their parents, the acts of worship, and what Juniors can do in their church. Then have a picture or model of the tabernacle showing its structure and various apartments; and explain the meaning of the tent, the ark, the altars, the sacrifices, the priests and servants.

Let several Juniors, one after another tell the story of Samuel's life. Make real the life of Samuel, an obedient and courageous boy, who listened for the voice of God and obeyed promptly. Take one day to tell the life of the boy Samuel; then let a Junior give a day in the life of an obedient and courageous boy.

The Church and Denominations

Since the days of the Apostle Paul men have been divided about whose teachings they should accept and follow. Paul in his first letter to the Corinthians says, "It hath been signified unto me concerning you, brethren, by them that are of the household of God, that there are contentions among you. Now this I say, and each of you saith, I am of Paul, and of Apollos, and of Cephas, and I of Christ. Is Christ divided? Paul crucified for you, or were ye baptized in the name of Paul? And later he says "I planted, Apollos watered, but God gave the increase. So then neither I planteth anything, neither he that watereth but God giveth the increase."

Today we are no better than the early Christians. We respect, for we say, "I am of John Wesley," and of John Calvin," or "I am of Martin Luther." We are ourselves Baptists, or Methodists, or Presbyterians, or Lutherans—and we have our particular church and sing the praises of the founders of our particular belief. But more than being a Baptist, or a Methodist, or a Lutheran, or a Presbyterian, is this—being a Christian. As long as men are free there will be different denominations. But we are all working for the same cause and worship the same Lord. The most of us are long to the denomination that our parents have chosen; and taught us to accept, but far be it from us to none but Presbyterians will be saved! Christ is divided—but men are divided in their beliefs concerning Him and His teachings. Just as we differ in our form and metal equipment, so we differ in our religious attitude. One may feel that he can worship better in form and ritual—while another feels that he must simply and shout the praises of God aloud. "Bible feather flock together." We should each one of us find a denomination that suits our particular need for the sake of worshipping with people that think as we do.

Why We Need Churches

If there were no grocery stores, the most of us would fare a great deal worse than we do, for we depend on them for food for our bodies. If there were no churches, how poorly our souls would fare! For the church is our souls what the grocery store is to our bodies. There is no need for money here because spirit cannot be bought—it is a gift. "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that is without money, come ye, buy and eat; yea, come, buy and eat with money and without price. Where ye spend money for that which is not bread? and where ye get labour for that which satisfieth not? Hearken diligently unto me and eat ye that which is good, and your soul shall delight itself in fatness. Incline your ear, and hear unto me, and your soul shall live." The church is ready to give us all these spiritual blessings if we will receive them.

Attending Church Services

What good is a church to us if we do not attend its services? We may admire the architecture of the church—but that does not feed our souls nor does it give us our ideals high. We can best receive the blessing of the church by regularly attending its services, and there is nothing that will inspire a minister so much as a attentive audience, and there is nothing that will hearten him as much as preaching to empty pews. The minister is one set apart for explaining and teaching the Word. We pay him a salary so that he will have more time for studying the Bible—so that he can explain it to us more perfectly. When we stay away from church we rob ourselves. Remember Thomas was not the only other disciple when Jesus appeared to the disciples who had risen from the dead. As the result Thomas believed that the Christ had risen. If we stay away from church we will doubt that the church does any good, and we will wonder if God honors such an organization.

THE CHRISTIAN SABBATH

Gen. 2:2-3; Ex. 20:8-11; Mt. 12:1-14; 28:1-10; John 20:19; Acts 20:7; Rom. 14:4-6; Rev. 1:10 Print.
Ex. 20:8-11; Mt. 12:1-8; Jn. 20:19; Rev. 1:10.

We set out this quarter to consider some of the great Christian doctrines. Many of our lessons have had to do with the means of grace, i. e. those helps on which the Christian relies to secure for himself the Divine guidance and strength, and to keep his own spiritual life aglow. Thus in recent weeks we have dealt with prayer, the Holy Scriptures, the Church, Baptism and the Lord's Supper. We are to consider this week one of the greatest and most important of all the means of grace, the Christian Sabbath. We want to think first about its basis, second about its purpose, third about its observance. First, its basis. Why do we regard one day out of the seven as particularly sacred? Why is it the first day of the week instead of the seventh as originally? Second, its purpose. What end do we seek to accomplish in holding one day sacred to God? We can never hope to solve the multitudinous questions that arise as to the proper observance of the Sabbath unless we understand the real purpose of the day. Are we commanded to keep it as a Holy Day for the sake of God or for our own sake? Third, its observance. How are we to observe the Sabbath? What are the principles which should guide us? How far should we seek to protect the Sabbath by law? With these and other questions in mind read carefully the passages assigned for our study. Try to think your way through to some positive and definite conclusions.

I. The Basis of the Christian Sabbath

1. Why do Christians observe one day out of the seven as a holy day? We take it for granted that every Christian knows that the Bible traces the Sabbath back to the Creation. We read in Gen 1:1-2:3 that in six days God created the heavens and the earth, the seas and all that in them is; that on the seventh day "God finished His work which He had made; and He rested on the seventh day, and hallowed it; because that in it He rested from all His work which God had created and made." Almost all Bible students recognize now that the creative days were not days of exactly 24 hours each, but rather periods of indefinite length. The duration of the days however, does not affect the reasoning. In some sense God's creative week included six working days or periods followed by rest. The Hebrews felt then that the need of a weekly rest was grounded in the very nature of the universe. When we read (Gen. 2:3) that God hallowed (R.V.) or sanctified (A.V.) the seventh day we understand that God separated it from common and profane usage. It was to be a holy day.

God's people however were not commanded so far as we know, to keep this day any differently from other days till the time of Moses. Moses, Israel's great emancipator, led the Children of Israel out of Egypt, the land of Bondage, on the Seventh Day. Shortly thereafter the people were encamped before Mount Sinai. There Moses revealed to them the fact that God wished to enter into a solemn covenant or compact with the nation. God promised that He would be their God, and that they would be His people, if they on their part would promise to obey His commandments. Ex. 19:5-6. The Israelites agreed to this condition. As the basis of His requirement God then delivered to them those laws, which we speak of as the Ten Commandments. The fourth had to do with the Sabbath. "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work; but the seventh day is a Sabbath unto Jehovah thy God; in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy manservant, nor thy maid servant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates." Ex. 20:8-10. The reason that is assigned for the choice of the seventh day is the fact that on the seventh day God rested from the labor of creation. In Dt. where Moses repeats and expounds the Ten Commandments to the next generation an additional reason for the selection of the seventh day is given. It was on the seventh day that God had delivered them out of the hands of the Egyptians. It is to be noted especially that this commandment regarding the observance of the Sabbath was not contained in the Civil Law, (Ex. 20:22-23:33), which fitted Israel's needs at that particular time and are no longer binding on the people of God, but in the moral law, the Ten Commandments, which continued to be the basis of God's dealing with the Chosen people, and which the Christian Church has always felt to be of binding and permanent significance.

2. But this brings us to our second question. Why does the Christian Church now regard the first day of the week as sacred, instead of the seventh, and when did the change from the seventh day of the week occur? We have to admit that the Bible nowhere specifically states that the change was to be made. We do find however, that Jesus Christ rose from the dead on the first day of the week, and that from that time on the Church observed the first day of the week as their holy day instead of the seventh. Jesus Himself seems to have sanctioned this change. After his resurrection he is recorded to have appeared to his disciples on ten different occasions. Seven of the appearances were on the first day of the week. He appeared to five different groups on the first day. His next appearance came one week later when the disciples were gathered together in the upper room (Jn. 20:19), and his next appearance exactly one week later under similar circumstances. The time of the other appearance is not recorded. That the first day of the week was the day of special religious observance from the beginning is made plain from an incidental reference in Acts 20:7. Paul anxious to be in Jerusalem tarried in Troas seven days in order that he might break bread with the Christians there on the first day of the week. Again he writes the Corinthians to give systematically to the Church on the first day of the week I Cor. 16:2. John in Rev. 1:10 speaks of being in the Spirit on the Lord's Day. Our earliest historical sources after the Bible times support this contention. The Christian Church habitually from the first sanctified the first day of the week instead of the seventh. In recent years a few minor sects, e. g. the Seventh Day Adventists, have begun to observe the seventh day instead of the first. They declare that this is the Biblical injunction, which has never been repealed. The overwhelming majority of Christians however, feel that the Biblical principle is one day in seven. The seventh day was observed by the Jews because it was on this day that God rested from His work of creation, and because it was on this day that the Israelites were delivered from the bondage of Egypt. The first day is observed by Christians because it was on this day that Christ rose from the dead. To us the day to be sanctified is truly the Lord's Day.

II. The Purpose of the Christian Sabbath

Christians we have seen observe one day in seven as a Holy Day because the commandment so to do is contained in that moral code which from the very beginning has laid at the foundation of God's covenant relations with His people. But why did God require His people to observe one day in seven? It is easy for us to understand why He commanded them not to worship any other God, not to make of Him any graven image, not to take His name in vain. It is easy to understand why we are commanded to honor our parents, to refrain from theft, adultery, murder, falsehood and covetousness. But why are we commanded to hallow the Sabbath day? If we had only the Old Testament to go on we might conclude that God commanded Sabbath observance for His own sake, that He wished His people to give Him one seventh of their time that they might honor Him and acknowledge His claims on their lives. Jesus however, tells us that this is not the case. The Pharisees in his day were very jealous of God's rights on the Sabbath-day, and more than once they came into conflict with Jesus because He did not observe the day as they thought was proper. On one of these occasions Jesus had allowed his disciples to rub out some grain in their hands as they passed through a wheat field (Mt. 12:1-8). They accused Jesus of breaking the Sabbath rest required by God's word. Jesus pointed out by way of reply that even in the Old Testament labor was allowed on the Seventh day when it was required for the satisfaction of either human needs or divine. Mark (2:23-28), who gives us the earlier account, tells us that he said: "The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath: so that the Son of Man is lord even of the Sabbath." This is a statement of the utmost importance. Jesus tells us that God established the Sabbath not for His sake, not because He needs our time, or requires our homage, but for Man's sake, because man needs the worship and the rest which the Sabbath allows. All of our experience confirms the truth of this statement. Man does need periods of rest, regular stated periods of rest,—his physical constitution demands it. One of the great contributions which Christianity has made to the world is the well nigh universal seventh day of rest. For the sake of humanity we must not allow this boon to be withdrawn from any portion of our citizens. Man also needs periods of worship, regular stated periods of worship,—his spiritual nature requires it—and this too is a boon that we must safeguard for the people, for the people's sake. An important corollary of this truth is the fact that if our customary observance of the Sabbath proves detrimental to human interests then the observance must be changed. That was the situation which Jesus faced, and which led to the enunciation of this principle. It is just as true in our day as it was in His: "The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath;" therefore "the Son of Man is Lord even of the Sabbath."

But if the Sabbath was made for man, the further question comes, and it is a very important question, what interests of man is it supposed to promote. As we ponder over the 4th commandment:—"Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy. In it thou shalt not do any work;" as we ponder over Jesus' precepts and practice, it becomes plain that the Sabbath is meant first to promote man's spiritual welfare, and second to promote man's physical welfare. Note that it is to promote both man's physical and spiritual welfare, and that his spiritual welfare is always counted the most important. It is true that man lives by bread, but Jesus insists that he does not live by bread alone, Mt. 4:4. It is true as Paul admits that bodily exercise is profitable, but he claims that godliness is more profitable, "having promise of the life which now is and of that which is to come." I Tim. 4:8. It simply will not do for a man to argue on Scriptural grounds that since the Sabbath is made for man therefore he is free to devote the whole day to recreation, say. The Sabbath was made for man, but primarily for his spiritual needs, which the Bible always considers the most important, and secondarily for his physical needs, which we admit are also important. These then are the great principles which must guide us as we seek to observe the Sabbath. That leads us to consider

III. The Observance of the Sabbath

We could easily fritter away our time and space by discussing whether it is right to do this or that, whether this is more wrong than that. Perhaps it will be best for us to discuss the underlying principles of Sabbath observance. We cannot hope to do more than discover the principles. We may suggest applications, but after all one must be guided there by his own individual conscience. The rules which the Bible lays down for Sabbath observance are two.

1. "In it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy manservant, nor thy maid servant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger within thy gate." This rule may easily be pushed to unendurable extremes. It was in Jesus' day. The Scribes and Pharisees said for example that a woman could not trim a lamp on the Sabbath, nor look in a mirror, for in the latter case she would be tempted to pluck out any gray hairs that came to her notice, and either of these undertakings would be breaking the Sabbath rest. It was because Jesus would not observe minute regulations that were con- sacred in His day that he earned the deadly hatred religious leaders. In justifying the action of his disciples in rubbing out the wheat in their hands to satisfy their hunger Jesus said in effect that works of mercy were not forbidden in the Fourth Commandment. In healing the man with the withered hand Jesus plainly that works of mercy were strictly in accordance with the purpose of the day. (Cf. Mt. 12:1-14). On the basis of these two incidents taken as interpreted in the Fourth Commandment that the framers of our religion said: "The Sabbath is to be sanctified by resting all that day, even from such worldly employments and recreations as are lawful on other days, and using the whole time in the public and private exercises of God's worship, except so much as is to be taken in the works of necessity and mercy." But it goes beyond the Bible requirements, and can be justified neither by its language nor its spirit. There is no suggestion in the Bible that we are to spend the whole time in the public and private exercises of God's worship except as much as is to be taken up in the works of necessity and mercy. We are to rest, but just how we spend our leisure is left to the Christian conscience in so far as we are guided by the second commandment. We might stop here for a moment to consider a few pertinent questions. Can we really secure any rest on the Sabbath? Do we spend our leisure in the most helpful manner? Do we spend our work on Monday morning with new energy with new zest because of the way that we have spent the Sabbath? Do we use our leisure in such a way as to interfere with the rest of others? What about company dinners for example? Can we bring our leisure under the works of necessity and mercy when we are of the cook? What about our recreations? Do we cause unnecessary labor on the part of others? Can we not consider this rule apart from the other. "Thou shalt do no labor" is a negative principle. It is a suggestion as to how we are to use our leisure. It can be considered only in connection with the other or positive rule laid down in the Bible.

2. Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy. The Sabbath is a day which must be consecrated to God. Not for God's sake as we have seen, but for our own sake. This obligation carries with it definite and positive consequences. (1) Negative consequences. A Christian cannot employ his leisure in ways that destroy the spiritual value of the day, ways that are inconsistent with the holiness of the day. Our Puritan forbears interpreted this to mean we must spend all the time not required for our necessary or mercy in the public and private exercises of God's worship. This it seems to us goes beyond the purport of God's Word. But the words certainly mean that we are to do nothing that is contrary to the sacrament of the day. Now just what are forbidden by this plain and self-evident principle will be understood differently by different people, and will be different for different people. Each one must follow his own conscience. The best way to go about it is to consider whether or not this practice, this custom does destroy the spiritual value of the day, or does it preserve it. Perhaps we should also consider whether or not it destroys the spiritual value of the day for others. But (2) there are also positive consequences. We cannot keep the day holy unto God, we cannot advance our spiritual interests unless we make time and effort to spiritual matters. What are the ways in which the Christian can thank God for the day unto God? Many ways suggest themselves to our mind: the study of God's Word in Sunday School; the worship of God in His sanctuary; the reading of and meditation on the Bible at home; the reading of the church papers. One cannot be a good citizen unless he keeps informed of the public interest. One cannot be a very good Christian unless he keeps informed on the affairs of the Kingdom. The reading of other kinds of Christian literature, devotional works, missionary tracts, great Christian biographies, books on religious science, etc. Religious books of the greatest value are pouring from the press. The Education Committee in Richmond, your pastor, are glad to recommend such books to you—what you may happen to be. And then there are other forms of Christian service, mission Sunday schools, the sick, the shut ins. How do we spend the Sabbath? Do we keep it holy? Do we refrain from those practices which conflict with the divine purposes for the day? Do we use it so as to minister to our spiritual needs? It is not a question of breaking the Sabbath. It is a question of using it most wisely, most helpfully in accordance with its Divine purpose. How do we spend it better?

One last question that we must raise and that we must not lightly dismiss. How far should we seek to protect the Sabbath, or to put it in other words, to enforce Sabbath observance by legislation? In many countries this is a live question. Probably we can best serve the Sabbath as we think men ought to observe it. Certainly we would not require them to observe it. In the opinion of the writer we should go no further than to guarantee as far as possible the right of every man to one day's leisure, or worship out of seven. Probably we should not forbid by legislation all forms of recreation, only commercialized forms, which require labor if they are to earn their daily bread. The writer does not think he would favor a law forbidding golf, but he would be inclined to favor forbidding the employment of caddies on the Sabbath. The caddies may wish to earn their money, and men may be ready to open the golf course on Sunday, but young boys cannot judge wisely for their own needs, and adults are forced to keep their jobs. Is this the right principle to use in matters of Sabbath legislation or not?

March Tenth Is A Day Of Destiny For Our Great Church!

Of course every day is a destiny day for the Christian, but because on Next Sunday a challenging opportunity will be given to every member to register the beginning of a definite growth in the grace of giving, it is peculiarly a "Day of Destiny" for our great Church. It should be a day of advance for every church and every member. Here is the ballot form upon which you may vote your convictions. Let your hand register your heart's desire:

Is there not some Men's Bible Class, some Auxiliary, some individual or some church that will quickly embrace the opportunity to have a memorial room in Assembly Inn by furnishing a room at a cost of $350.00. Assembly Inn will be the one outstanding building and historical center of the Assembly. It should stand for a thousand years and the leaders of the church, missionaries, elders, deacons, preachers, our noble women and thousands of others for generations to come will abide awhile within its walls.

The furniture is now being bought, there are eighty rooms yet to be provided for. If it is not convenient to pay the whole amount in cash, payments can be made later if you so desire. Please be prompt and send in your subscriptions as soon as possible.

The question is will there be room at the Inn when the Assembly convenes next May?

Please send all checks and subscriptions to the Mountain Retreat Association, Montreat, N. C., marked for "Assembly Inn."

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION IN SOUTH CAROLINA

To the Churches of the Synod of South Carolina:

The Synod's Permanent Committee on Education desires to remind all of the churches of this resolution adopted by the Synod last October:

"That we call the people of our Synod to their knees to pray for God's work in this crisis; and urge them to more heroic faith in their struggle to save their schools, and to more generous giving toward their support and deliverance from debt."

The Committee would urge upon pastors, sessions, deacons and church treasurers the necessity of seeing that the amounts asked for all four of the Synod's educational institutions, as well as the special pledges made to meet a critical emergency at Presbyterian College, be fully paid before the end of the church year; and that the full amounts asked for these institutions be put into the church budgets for the new church year.

THE DEATH OF REV. L. B. TATE, MISSIONARY TO KOREA

I am sending you a brief notice of the death of the Rev. L. B. Tate, February 19. It was my privilege to assist in the funeral service, and to be with Mrs. and Miss Tate, at that time.

Mr. Tate had gone to Miami for Sunday, where he had spoken four times, on our work in Korea. Thence he went to Key West, where he spoke on Monday night, to a very enthusiastic audience. On Tuesday morning he went, as he had written Mrs. Tate he would, with a group of professional fishermen for some deep sea fishing. He hooked a large fish, and exhausted himself, in the struggle to land it. Soon afterward he complained of feeling bad, and soon passed away, saying to those about him, "I shall soon be home."

Mr. Tate was born in Calloway County, Mo., September 28, 1862; educated at Westminster College, Fulton, Mo., and McCormick Seminary, Chicago, Ill. He volunteered in 1891, designating Korea, as the field of his choice to which field he went with six others in 1892. With these he opened our mission there, and served 33 years, returning by reason of impaired health in 1925. He made his home at Frostproof, Fla., where he gathered around him a host of friends, who remain to mourn his going. "Know ye not that there is a prince and a great man fallen this day in Israel."

Bartow, Fla.

NORTH CAROLINA

Union Church, Lowell, Route No. 1—Beginning on Thursday evening before the first Sabbath in February our quarterly communion day, the pastor of this church, Rev. J. E. Berryhill, preached each evening the remainder of the week. Three were added on profession of faith, and two by letter during the past quarter. On February 22nd from 7:00 to 9:30 in the evening, the ladies of the church entertained the men of the church at a two-course dinner in the school auditorium. There was a large attendance and a season of fine fellowship.

Members of the Woman's Auxiliary gathered in the morning at 10 o'clock on February 13th to study Dr. Egbert W. Smith's book, "The Desire of All Nations." Each chapter was presented by an appointed leader.

At 1 o'clock a delicious luncheon was served and a pleasant social hour was enjoyed.

A generous offering for foreign missions was made at the conclusion of the book.

At the Gaston County Christian Endeavor Rally held in West Avenue Church, Gastonia, on February 18, the Senior Christian Endeavor of this church was awarded the loving cup for making the highest percentage on the efficiency chart for the past three months.

Greensboro, First Church—Beginning Monday morning, February 25, Mrs. Henry Roan, of Winston-Salem, conducted a Bible study course for the women of the church. Mrs. Roan is a brilliant Bible student and has just returned from the Holy Land, where she made a study of the Bible with the Travel Institute of Bible Research of New York. Aside from the fact that Mrs. Roan is a very interesting speaker and the lectures will be a real treat for our women, this course is one of the requirements for the Standard of Excellence and our ladies made a special effort to attend these five meetings.

The Woman's Auxiliary meeting Monday, February 18. The speaker for the afternoon was Dr. W. H. Frazer, president of Queens College, whose subject was "The Vital Need of Christian Education at This Time."

Mt. Gilead—The membership of this church having doubled and a beautiful house of worship built since the last election of officers eight years ago the session called the congregation to elect additional officers. At the meeting January 27 a nominating committee consisting of an elder, deacon, member and two women was appointed. February 10 their report nominating Deacon R. L. Martin, R. A. McRae and Dr. N. G. Nicholson Elders and J. D. Misenheimer, F. M. Nash, W. J. Batten, T. R. Upchurch and W. C. Robinson Deacons was adopted.

February 27th the ordination and installation service was held. Messrs. Misenheimer and Nash came to us as Deacons and were installed, the others were ordained and installed. This gives us a splendid official body of six elders and eight deacons.

Sugaw Creek—The Woman's Auxiliary held an all-day meeting on the study of the Foreign Mission book, "The Desire of All Nations," on Thursday, February 28. A chapter each was presented by different ladies, followed by discussion. Our supply pastor, Rev. J. G. Garth, discussed the chapter on "The Preacher and Missions." The meeting paused at noon for lunch, when the fellowship of neighbors was greatly enjoyed. An offering was taken for foreign missions.

Mr. Leroy P. Burney, student of Columbia Seminary, who has been called to this charge, was with us Sunday. The congregation is in great hopes of his accepting this call.

A meeting is in progress at this church this week. Rev. J. G. Garth is being assisted by Rev. A. A. Walker, superintendent of Home Missions in Mecklenburg Presbytery, who is doing the preaching.

Bessemer and Long Creek—These two churches recently had periods of mission study in the book, "The Desire of All Nations," the one following the other in the two weeks. Mrs. Coyte Hunter, the pastor's wife, had charge of the study. She is a graduate of the Assembly's Training School. A young people's society has been organized at Long Creek, which is being enthusiastically attended. There are 24 members.

Flora Macdonald College—The second quarterly recital was given by the School of Music in the college auditorium on Monday evening, February 25, to a most appreciative audience. As in former recitals the students displayed much talent and careful preparation in their respective numbers and showed full credit to the different teachers with whom they are studying. Each number on the program fully merited the liberal applause accorded. Especial mention should be made of the chorus and orchestra and the solo "Concert Etude" by McDowell, played by Miss Mary Eunice Wells, from Wallace, N. C.

The Flora Macdonald Choral Club, under the direction of Dean Alfred H. Strick, will broadcast a program from Station WBT, Charlotte, N. C., March 14th, from 8:00 until 8:30 p. m. Fifteen members selected from the chorus will sing two numbers, and there will be vocal solos, piano solos and a string quartette.

Laurinburg—Announcement was made this week by the pastor, Rev. Carl B. Craig, that beginning March 11 and continuing through Sunday, March 17, and possibly longer, Rev. A. R. McQueen, of Dunn, will preach in a series of special meetings at the Presbyterian Church here. Mr. McQueen has been speaking in the county recently in behalf of the Flora Macdonald College endowment and is well known to the people. He is one of the leading preachers of Fayetteville Presbytery and active in the work of the church.—Laurinburg Exchange Charlotte, Second Church—Dr. Hardie will open the Communicants' Class this year and he invites all boys and girls who are considering church membership, together with those who have recently been baptized. The first session of the class will be held March 1st. Succeeding sessions will be held each Friday afternoon in March.

A Kindergarten for children of pre-school age will be opened in the Beginner Room of Second Church on March 4. Sessions will be held daily from 10:00 to 12:00 for the months of March, April, and May. Mrs. Guy Bingham will be the teacher. A fee will be charged.

Charlotte, First Church—The opening session of the Young People's School of Missions, February 28, was splendidly attended, 55 being present. A most interesting supper was prepared and served by Miss Orr's Department of the Sunday School. After the supper, a very interesting study of Africa and of the work of the Christian Endeavor was taken up. Dr. Johnson presented the stereopticon slides with his lecture.

The course will be continued next Friday, being served at 6 o'clock. Members of the Intermediate and Young People's Departments of the Boy Scouts are cordially invited to come.

Presbyterian Orphans' Home, Barium Springs—The pulpit at Little Joe's Church was filled by Dr. McConnell, of Davidson College, the last Sunday of February. Dr. McConnell is a favorite among the boys and his message was directed especially to the boys, using as his subject "The Boy Samuel."

At this writing our pastor, Rev. W. C. B. much improved and we sincerely hope that he will be able to leave his bed soon.

Indian Trail—Siler—During the first week of February, Rev. Lacy L. Little, D.D., Moderator of the Synod of North Carolina, made missionary a very vivid resume of the history of the Kiangyin, China, in which he has participated since its beginning. In this address he showed graphically how God "makes the wrath of praise him;" how in our own day the machinations of evil are marvelously turned about to the "ance of the gospel."

At Indian Trail Dr. Little showed how God's blessing as enjoined in the New Testament is being carried on by Chinese Christians. How Christian factors have entered with momentum into the reshaping of Chinese institutions.

From these discourses of Dr. Little on missions and Chinese Christianity, one carries a strong impression of the higher, divine reality that characterizes Christian Missions. The people of two churches have expressed very high appreciation of the interesting and quickening messages by Dr. Little.

Prospect—Elder T. C. Beaty passed away at home at Mooresville on Friday afternoon, February 22nd of February. For many years he was unable to attend church services, but up to his interest never wavered. He is the father of Rev. Frank Beaty, of Hammock Gulf, and Letty Beaty, our splendid missionary in Mexico. He was a dear, and well-loved saint of God, whose Word was continually upon his lips. For many years he was an elder in Prospect Church, united with the church in his youth. The services were held from the home, and at Prospect Church, Mooresville on the 23rd of February. Rev. J. D. Deans, assisted by Drs. I. N. Kennerly and R. A. White. A large concourse of neighbors were in attendance and all the children present but the minister son, and the minister's daughter. The sympathy and love of the church goes out to the widow and the family thus another dear saint of the Lord has gone.

On the 19th of February Elder and Mrs. Lowrance, of Prospect Church, were fifty years married. This was a great day in their lives, when they gathered from near and far away to do the honors. Not less happy than they were their many children and grandchildren, by whom they are greatly loved. Mr. and Mrs. Lowrance was born, reared, and have lived all their years in Prospect Church.

Mr. and Mrs. Lowrance have been subscribers of the Presbyterian Standard for the 50 years of their married life.

were married by the Rev. Mr. Penick, in 1879, at Prospect Church. While Mr. and Mrs. Lowrance were the recipients of many valuable presents Church did not forget them, when they were ignored by the church people at the manse on day night the 21st. Addresses were made at me by the Rev. R. A. White, of Mooresville, and by the pastor, Rev. J. D. Deans.

APPALACHIA

Waynesville Presbytery will meet in the Presbyterian Church of Waynesville, N. C., Tuesday, April 16, 1929, 10 o'clock a. m. Wm. S. Wilson, S. C.

Dr. Joseph R. Sevier, President of Fossil School at Hendersonville, delighted one of the February congregations that ever assembled at Brevard Church, with a sermon on "Life" at morning service on the 17th. This correspondent heard a discourse as apt in diction, splendid in description, pertinent in illustration, replete with spiritual power, and effective in moving the hearts of the audience. Dr. Sevier also gave the congregation good advice about the early choice of a pastor, and stated that his co-operation in supplying a pulpit for a while would not be a success if it resulted in delay in that matter. The Brevard Presbytery are most fortunate in having him to fill the pulpit for alternate Sundays until they get a permanent pastor to Mr. Crawford. An elder says of Dr. Sevier that he is old Colonel "Nollichucky Jack, of the old King's Mountain" come back and in his old position.
