S T O R YWHERE THE LATCHSTRING WAS OUT

(Copyright by D. J. Walsh.)

Lalia Dartmouth looked up from her packing to regard her neighbor with a questioning frown.

"I may be all the kinds of an idiot you say, Ida, but I've always figured that since God gave Harry and me a heavenly spot like Lakeside, we've no right to be stingy with it."

"I wouldn't call it being stingy to close my doors against people who merely make a summer convenience of me and scarcely think of me at any other season."

"It isn't as bad as that, dear."

"All right, but you wait and see what happens this summer, since you've already indicated that your latchstring is out."

In spite of what she was pleased to term her friend's annual croaking, Mrs. Dartmouth went blithely on with her work, singing happily with the knowledge that she would be in her beloved little home on the shore of beautiful Lake Penewee.

She loved every blade of grass, every tree, every wild flower that grew on the place. She reveled in her daily dips in the lake's limpid waters—two or three dips if the weather was especially warm; delighted in the morning rows along the seven hundred feet of frontage she and Harry owned. She even rather enjoyed those storms which sometimes swept over the lake from the north, sending the occupants of Lakeside cottage porchward to cover the furniture against the oncoming rain.

And then she adored the flivver and the motor boat, both kept purposely for the various necessary trips to the village which was two and one-tenth miles distant. She called the flivver Libbie and was sure Lindy couldn't possibly care more for his plane than she did for the little car which the Dartmouths kept stored in a farmer's barn all winter.

Lalia kept the little cottage looking like a glorified doll house, with bright, cheerful drapes and gay painted furniture which she gave a fresh coat the first thing every summer.

Taking it all in all, she was so proud of the place that she never could resist saying to each friend and acquaintance as the time drew near every summer for their exodus to Lakeside. "Oh, you must drive down. You've no idea how we've improved it since last season!"

Strange as it may seem it wasn't always the best friends nor the closest acquaintances who availed themselves of these wholesale invitations of Lalia's, and when she came home one fall telling of entertaining the Meachams, whom she barely knew, the Bordens, whom she never had seen before, but who were cousins of some people she had known in childhood and the Mattinglys, whom she scarcely ever saw any more, but who were passing through on their way West and were wishful of a night's rest in the country, not to mention the saving of a hotel bill, her neighbor and very best friend, Ida Sterns, took her to task about it.

"You're tired out instead of rested every fall when you come home. You aren't doing right by yourself and your family to accept so much responsibility, let alone reaching out for it the way you do."

Lalia had chuckled, replying with mock seriousness, "All right, dear old pal, next summer, the moment things get too much for me I'll send for you to straighten them out."

This morning, with the Dartmouths almost ready to leave, Mrs. Sterns reminded her friend of her promise of the fall before, and Lalia laughingly renewed it. "Not that I expect to need you, Ida, darling," she said laughingly, "but you know I am always as good as my word."

When she reached Lakeside Lalia was filled with renewed wonder at the beauty of the place. As she was hurrying the porch chairs and tables into their accustomed places, more joyed than ever to be there, the telephone smote her ear rather discordantly.

The Dracons were on the wire. They were passing that way and were perishing to see the much-talked-of Lakeside and fain would stop for a glimpse of it.

Lalia grumbled mentally, "I had lunch." Her mouth's course was obvious. She arrived and immediately used herself in the surgery, while Lalia hurried to the house she had brought from home for lunch, not yet having had opportunity to stock her larder at the stores or nearby farms. The first of it all the Meachams drove into the driveway in a car and announced that they were ravenous."

They were fortunately with only one car, the principal one being the Meacham's. Lalia's own little tummy was empty, and she was impatiently waiting for the combined effort to move on, intending to go into town for supplies at the first opportunity. The mention of going was made. Mrs. Meacham suggested that the Meachams would remain overnight and have a motor boat ride with her. She arrived the following noon. The Dracons indicated that the matter appealed to them immensely, as Lalia had pridefully shown over the house previously. The Dracons were tired of housing so many never before could take care of twelve children, with its big stack of beds and cots reposing in plain sight. They were prepared for supplies and dinner through with, the guests immediately thereafter taking to the rowing. Their hostess did the dishes. Disgusted, Lalia sat on the porch, planning herself when a siren another car drew up at the Mattinglys, with their new baby, who looked and acted up anything and everything. But Mattingly had learned from his motor boat the year before, and he beheld it riding the water. He parked his car and chased Mattingly gayly to his wife to see if she wished to ride with

That was the last straw for the long-suffering hostess of Lakeside cottage on Lake Penewee. She went straight to the telephone after the Mattinglys were out of earshot and long-distanced Ida Sterns, and the next day when that estimable lady appeared with host Dartmouth on the noon train Lalia took to her bed immediately with a severe headache.

The village doctor happened to have a summer cottage less than a quarter of a mile from Lakeside, and when he came downstairs after having been summoned to see Mrs. Dartmouth he told the assembled multitudes that their hostess must remain in bed for a day or two.

"So Mrs. Dracon can wash the dishes," Mrs. Sterns announced sweetly, nodding in that lady's direction, "and Mrs. Meacham can walk up the road a half-mile for milk, while Mrs. Mattingly and I shell peas and peel potatoes for dinner after we do up the beds. Mr. Dracon will have to drive to town for supplies, while Mr. Mattingly drives east a half-mile for chickens and eggs, and Mr. Meacham goes a mile the other way for cooking apples. Harry is taking care of Lalia."

"Oh! We were just about to leave," the Dracons and the Meacham chorused in one breath, while the Mattinglys disgustedly began an assembling of wraps and bags, not to mention the Airedale, who already had chewed up one of Lalia's bedroom slippers, a corner out of Harry's overcoat and Ida Stern's best handkerchief.

"Come on down, dear heart," Mrs. Sterns called out to Lalia as soon as the coast was clear. "I did my duty as I saw it and you're going to have at least one quiet week-end at this busy place."

WHEN LITTLE MARY HAD A STY

The following "fable" appeared in a recent issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association:

"One day little Mary came to her mother and showed her a sty on her eye. So the mother went to the family doctor and said: 'Doctor, doctor, come quick. Little Mary has a sty on her eye.' And the doctor said: 'I will, but first you must have the oculist examine it.'

"So the mother went to the oculist and said: 'Oculist, oculist, come quick. Little Mary has a sty on her eye.' And the oculist said: 'I will, but first you must get the nose man to examine her sinus.'

"So the mother went to the nose man and said: 'Nose man, nose man, come quick. Little Mary has a sty on her eye.' And the nose man said: 'I will, but first you must see the tonsilectomist.'

"So the mother went to the tonsilectomist and said: 'Tonsilectomist, tonsilectomian, come quick. Little Mary has a sty on her eye.' An the tonsilectomist said: 'I will, but first you must consult a diagnostician.'

"So the mother went to the diagnostician and said: 'Diagnostician, diagnostician, come quick. Little Mary has a sty on her eye.' And the diagnostician said: 'I will, but first you must get a blood count.'

"So the mother went to the blood-counter and said: 'Bloodcounter, blood-counter, come quick. Little Mary has a sty on her eye.' And the blood-counter said: 'I will, but first you must call in a dietitian.'

"So the mother went to the dietitian and said: 'Dietitian, dietitian, come quick. Little Mary has a sty on her eye.' And the dietitian said: 'I will, but first you must give me $25.' So the mother gave the dietitian $25 and this is what happened:

"The dietitian began to study the diet, the blood-counter began to count the blood, the diagnostician began to diagnose, the tonsilectomist began to take out the tonsils, the nose man began to work on the sinus, the oculist began to lance the sty and the family doctor began to make periodical calls to see how Mary was doing. So the sty disappeared and little Mary got well again."

Grading Winnsboro Granite

Vast as are the deposits of granite, only a very meagre percentage is available for monumental purposes. Even in the great Anderson quarries of the Winnsboro Granite Corporation, Rion, S. C., though the granite mass is wonderfully uniform, surpassing most noted granite quarries in this particular, only about 50 per cent of the granite is considered sufficiently perfect to grade as "Winnsboro Granite."

A very simple test is used at the quarries. A block of stone is thoroughly wet with water. This brings out clearly any and all defects, regarded as defects by the trade. Blocks showing defects are graded as second, and are known as "Smith stock."

A third grade, with larger defects, is used for paving blocks; while blocks carrying stains are used only for ballast. Winnsboro Granite must be free from stains, white or black streaks, white or black splotches of size, and must be also free from waves (variation in mixture of light and dark crystals) in the grain. The first grade product, known as "Winnsboro Granite," must be ever in texture, of straight grain, giving a uniformly beautiful, even-grained surface.

When buying a monument, be sure to impress your dealer that you do not wish Smith stock or seconds, but must have "Winnsboro Granite"—first grade granite of one of the very greatest granite quarries of the world.

Send for latest free booklet of designs to Winnsboro Granite Corporation, Rion, S. C., and insist on your dealer supplying you a quarry guarantee that the stone used in your monument is "Winnsboro Granite" — a guarantee signed by the management of the Winnsboro Granite Corporation. —Adv.

Life looks rosy for him

Health worth more than fortune

THE baby to be envied is the one who is born with an inheritance of perfect health, to begin with. And who's lucky enough to have a mother who knows how to build up this fortune.

"Perhaps I'm old-fashioned," she'll say to the doctor who pronounces her child physically 100% at a baby show, "but this health certificate means more to me than all the stock certificates in the world. If my baby grows up strong and well, I'm willing to leave it to him to make a career and fortune for himself.

"Already I'm teaching him the value of regular habits. Regular sleep, regular meals, regular functions. He's never once been off schedule, not even when he was cutting teeth or traveling to the country. I make sure of that by giving him Nujol regularly."

Nujol works so easily and naturally that it won't upset a baby under any conditions. It keeps everything functioning properly. It not only prevents any excess of body poisons (we all have them) from forming but aids in their removal. It is safe and sure. Nujol was perfected by the Nujol Laboratories, 2 Park Avenue, New York.

Heir to millions

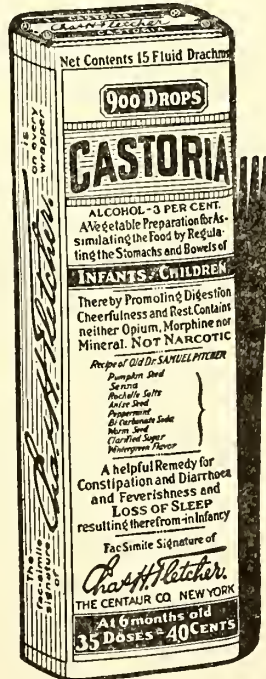

Just try Nujol for your baby. Give it to him regularly for the next three months. See if it doesn't make things much easier for both of you. Certainly it could do no harm — for Nujol contains no drugs or medicine. Your druggist carries it. Be sure you get the genuine. Sold only in sealed packages.

Restless Children

Children will fret, often for no apparent reason. But there's always one sure way to comfort a restless, fretful child. Castoria! Harmless as the recipe on the wrapper; mild and bland as it tastes. But its gentle action soothes a youngster more surely than some powerful medicine that is meant for the stronger systems of adults.

That's the beauty of this special children's remedy! It may be given the tiniest infant—as often as there is any need. In cases of colic, diarrhea, or similar disturbance, it is invaluable. But it has everyday uses all mothers should understand. A coated tongue calls for a few drops to ward off constipation; so does any suggestion of bad breath. Whenever children don't eat well, don't rest well, or have any little upset—this pure vegetable preparation is usually all that's needed to set everything to rights. Genuine Castoria has Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper. Doctors prescribe it.

Stubborn Coughs Ended by Recipe, Mixed at Home

Here is the famous old recipe which millions of housewives have found to be the most dependable means of breaking up a stubborn, lingering cough. It takes but a moment to prepare and costs little, but it gives real relief even for those dreaded coughs that follow severe cold epidemics.

From any druggist, get 2½ ounces of Pinex, pour it into a pint bottle and fill the bottle with plain granulated sugar syrup or strained honey. Thus you make a full pint of better remedy than you could buy ready-made for three times the cost. It never spoils and tastes so good that even children like it.

Not only does this simple mixture soothe and heal the inflamed throat membranes with surprising ease, but also it is absorbed into the blood, and acts directly upon the bronchial tubes, thus aiding the whole system in throwing off the cough. It loosens the germ-laden phlegm and eases chest soreness in a way that is really astonishing.

Pinex is a highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway Pine, containing the active agent of creosote, in a refined, palatable form. Nothing known in medicine is more helpful in cases of distressing coughs, chest colds, and bronchial troubles.

Do not accept a substitute for Pinex. It is guaranteed to give prompt relief or money refunded.

Synodical of North Carolina In Session at Durham, October 15-17

J. G. Garth, Publicity Director of Synod

The fifteenth annual meeting of the North Carolina Synodical was held in Durham, N. C., at the Presbyterian Church, Durham. The splendid entertainment of the gathering was fully adequate. The local auxiliary had completely their forces for the comfort and business of the Synodical. All were greatly impressed with the fitness of the buildings, and the great work being carried on by Dr. D. H. Scanlon and his helpers in the education and promotion of the church.

Dr. D. H. Scanlon, which kept appearing at the meetings. They fully expressed their gratitude to the Synodical. No pains were spared to promote the work and the guests. Delegates and visitors numbered 190 in all.

President of the Synodical, Mrs. J. G. Garth, of Gastonia, graced the meeting with her presence and showed great skill and tact in the administration of the meeting. The whole session was carried out without a hitch.

Distinguished Visitors at the Synodical

The Synodical had a number of distinguished guests who contributed their interest of the program. Miss McGaughey, of St. Louis, the new Women's Department, was present for the three days of the meeting, and her spiritual devotionals styled "Our Supreme Task," which she presented into sweet meditations for the members of the Synodical. Miss McGaughey, also presented "Our Supreme Task," which she presented into sweet meditations for the members of the Synodical. She presented a challenge to the women of the Synodical last year reported.

Dr. Cameron Morrison, of Charlotte, is chairman of this committee. She reported that the building alone cost $31,300. There is a deficit of about $16,000, and a special committee was appointed to raise this shortage. Mrs. Robert Wyatt reported that the furnishings of the four family apartment had been supplied by all the presbyteries, and cost around $5,000. One apartment was completely equipped by Wilmington as a memorial of the late Mrs. George C. Worth, the missionary to China. Mecklenburg presbyterial furnished all the silver for the whole building. The details will appear in the minutes of the Synodical to be published later. The building is heated by hot water and has an oil furnace. Heat and water are furnished the missionary families which occupy the four apartments. The Synodical will provide the upkeep of $1,000 per year.

The Synodical voted its thanks to Mrs. Morrison and her committee for their diligence, and also the Virginia ladies who are acting as hostesses. The building was presented to the General Assembly and received by Miss Carrie Campbell as official chairman of the committee of the Assembly, who was present, and later offered some suggestions on Auxiliary methods. Miss Campbell was one of the distinguished visitors at the Synodical.

High Lights in the Synodical Reports

We shall give a few of the outstanding matters in reports of the year's activities.

The colored conference at Greensboro last June was declared a great success, with 62 delegates. Plans for next year's conference were made with Winston-Salem as the place.

Mrs. J. H. Suttonfield reported 7197 church papers taken in the Synod, 4,605 Surveys, and 4015 calendars of prayer. She gave a unique presentation of her work by decorating herself and a parasol, with the leaflets offered for the study of the women.

The orphanage was declared in great need of help, with a deficit of $16,000 at the start of the year, which now amounts to $41,000. We publish by request a letter

S. C. Synodical Meets At Bishopville

Miss McGaughey, Secretary Visits the Gathering and Makes Address

The sixteenth annual meeting of the South Carolina Synodical, which convened with the Bishopville Presbyterian Church, October 9-10-11, with Mrs. Parker E. Connor, presiding, and Miss Elizabeth Stribling, secretary, stands out as a meeting of new spiritual life. Great zeal was shown in the advancement of the various phases of woman's work in the church. The theme, Personal Evangelism, permeated all the programs during the entire meeting. Wednesday evening the Executive Committee met. Devotional was conducted by Mrs. S. C. Hodges.

Thursday morning the Auxiliary proper met. About seventy-five delegates and as many more visitors registered.

Devotional was conducted by Mrs. T. B. Fraser, of Sumter, greetings were extended the Synodical by Mrs. M. W. Player, hostess auxiliary president; Mrs. J. L. Marshall, Clemson College, responded. Various reports from the different committees were given and the roll call and introductions made. Synodical officers' reports were called for. Mrs. Mason L. Carroll on History Publication, Mrs. J. H. McSween, White Cross Work; and Mrs. F. L. Martin, on Young People's Conferences. Mrs. D. W. A. Neville, of Newberry, Secretary of Literature, all made interesting reports.

Outstanding in the program for Thursday morning was the address, "Our Supreme Task," by Miss Janie McGaughey, Secretary of Woman's Work of the Presbyterian Church of U.S.A.

Thursday afternoon Mrs. Frank H. Wardlaw had charge of the devotional, "Publish the Glad Tidings. Why?" Presbyterian Presidents gave their reports. Mrs. Mason L. Carroll, of York, spoke on the subject of "Our Birthday Offering." An election of officers was held and the following were elected: Mrs. Parker E. Connor, Edisto Island, was elected president, and is serving her second term; Mrs. S. C. Hodges, Darlington, vice-president; recording secretary, Miss Elizabeth Stribling, Walhalla; treasurer, Mrs. M. L. Carroll, historian, Mrs. S. G. Stoney, Charleston. All other officers were hold-overs. Mrs. Hugh Cooper of Kingstree is the new Secretary of Christian Social Service. A special feature of Thursday afternoon's program was the address of Dr. H. Waddell Pratt, professor in Columbia Seminary, on the "Every Member Catechism." Dr. F. W. Gregg was to have delivered this address but was unable to be present. A conference for Secretaries of Christian Social Service was held after adjournment, Mrs. C. J. Milling, of Darlington, being chairman.

Thursday evening a large and attentive congregation gathered at the church to hear Dr. Henry H. Sweets, Executive Secretary of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief, Louisville, Ky. A review of his work and a plea for financial backing to carry on the work was the purport of his address. A special offering was made to

Endowment Campaign on in the Churches—Local Chairman Appointed—Dr. McPheeters Give Key to Success

The organization that will carry on the Presbyterian College $350,000 Program of Deliverance continues to develop steadily, with the naming of church chairmen, associate church chairmen, with the pastors as associate chairmen.

When the organization is completed through the formation of church committees there will be more than a thousand persons ready to conduct the campaign. The intensive effort formally opens on November 10, and will continue through November 19, but the special gifts work is already under way under the leadership of William P. Jacobs, general chairman, and Rev. John McSween, president of the College.

Church Chairmen include: Piedmont Presbytery—J. B. Ligon, Townville; Sam Glenn, Fair Play; Frank Axman, Anderson, R. D.; Dr. C. D. Evans, Iva; John B. Gray, Star, R. D.; M. M. Erwin, Honea Path; Dr. J. M. Hobson, Belton; Calhoun Harris, Anderson; P. T. Haynie, Anderson; M. M. Hunter, Pendleton; J. M. Craig, Pendleton, R. D.; W. P. Nesbit, Piedmont; J. Y. Jones, Pelzer; Mrs. W. H. Welborn, Williamston; H. Majeski, Anderson, R. D.; G. T. McGregor, Anderson; J. R. Falls, Catechee; Dr. J. N. Hall, Westminster; J. J. Ballinger, Seneca, R. D.; Jesse Neville, Walhalla; J. E. Kelly, Walhalla, R. D.; G. W. Ballinger, Seneca; J. C. Hunter, Liberty; J. H. Bruce, Pickens; Frank Brown, Carmel, R. D.; W. M. Scott, Easley; R. L. Perry, Mt. Pleasant, R. D.

Congaree—J. S. Wannamaker, St. Matthews; Dr. H. E. Wymann, Aiken; R. C. Heyward, Batesburg; W. C. Lynch, Edgefield; William Wise, Trenton; J. W. Marsh, Johnston; J. B. Howard, North Augusta.

Other chairmen will be named later. A call to all Presbyterians in South Carolina to face squarely the problem of what failure or success will mean to the Presbyterian College $350,000 Program of Deliverance is made in a statement prepared by Rev. Dr. W. M. McPheeters, professor of Old Testament literature and exegesis at Columbia Theological Seminary, Decatur, Georgia.

If this is done, points out Dr. McPheeters, "there is little reason to doubt that by the blessing of God the program will be brought to a successful conclusion."

Dr. McPheeters then continues: "Dr. DuBose has pointed out that our College is an important barrier against the tide of 'secularism and agnosticism' which threatens the interests of our youth.

"The failure of the Program, then, would mean the removal of one important barrier against this peril. Success will mean that this barrier will be strengthened and rendered increasingly more effective.

"Dr. Warren Brown in his Educational Survey has shown that the success of our Seminary at Atlanta is fundamental to all of the interests and on the work of the orphanage written to the secretary of that cause.

Misses Bessie Blakeney and Edmonia Martin pleaded for more interest and funds for foreign missions. Miss Martin asked for her help for her school at Recife, Brazil.

Miss Margaret McQueen gave the report of honor roll societies of young people, and said that Orange, Albemarle and Kings Mountain had all their societies to reach the grade of over 90 per cent. Miss Ruth Abbott, of Greensboro, secretary of the Davidson Conference of the Presbyterian Young People's League thanked the Synodical for their co-operation in making the annual conference a success. She said the Mamie McElwee Fund was now $2250, and it was hoped to complete it this next year.

Mrs. Coit Robinson and Mrs. A. A. Walker reported the Training School at Montreat last summer. Mrs. Walker had won distinction among five who had successfully completed the study in Missionary Education and was called on to explain the work done. We will publish the score card she exhibited.

The address of the president, Mrs. G. V. Patterson, was enthusiastically received and she was accorded a promise of full co-operation next year.

Mrs. W. B. Ramsay installed the new officers as follows: Recording Secretary, Mrs. Charles Rankin; Treasurer, Mrs. C. M. Norfleet; Historian Mrs. S. M. Rankin, Secretaries as follows: Assembly's Home Missions, Mrs. T. C. Turnage, Religious Education, Mrs. W. M. Baker, Orphanage Work, Mrs. R. D. Grier, Community Service, Mrs. J. R. Page.

Miss Myrtle Williamson, of Ashe county, spoke in the interest of her work.

The communion service was conducted by Rev. G. L. Cooper, of Durham. The cups used were of soapstone, the gift of Korean natives of Soonchun station in memory of the late G. W. Watts, of Durham, whose funds support the station. Each cup represented a day's wages.

The Synodical will meet next year in Belmont.

defray expenses of Synodical at this service.

Friday morning the meeting was called to order by the president and the devotional conducted by Mrs. J. M. Williams, Jr., on the subject, "Publish the Glad Tidings, Who?" The minutes of the preceding sessions were read, reports of cause secretaries were given. The report of Conferences for Colored Women was to have been given by Mrs. J. I. Copeland of Clinton, but on account of the recent death of her husband, she could not attend, and Mrs. Connor made the report. The report of Finance Committee was made by Mrs. Mason L. Carroll, the report of the Executive Committee by Mrs. Parker E. Connor, and the report of the Fort Hill Church Campaign, by Mrs. W. D. Barnett, who reported that there was only a small deficit left of the amount pledged by Synodical. This was promptly subscribed and Mrs. Barnett was given permission to disburse as she saw need. After a short recess, a hymn and prayer by Rev. F. M. Drennon, Miss Janie McGaughy led in the discussion, "Our Share in the Task." Reports of special committees followed. Resolutions of thanks for entertainment were read by Mrs. Hodges. Officers were installed by Miss McGaughy, and Greenville chosen as place of next meeting. Adjournment was next in order and the 16th Annual Synodical was dismissed with prayer by Dr. D. M. McIver. Splendid music consisting of pipe organ numbers, solos, duets, choruses, and congregational singing were special features of every session and contributed largely to the entertainment of the program. The music was under the direction of Mrs. Geo. M. Stuckey, organist for the Bishopville Church. A most bountiful and delicious dinner was served the delegates and committees in a vacant store room a short distance from the church both days.

activities of the Church in these Southeastern states. Dr. J. Spole Lyons has advanced a similar view. Dr. R. T. Gillespie has shown that the College is a most important feeder to the Seminary.

"Accordingly the failure of the campaign would mean the crippling of the Seminary and that in turn would mean the crippling of our home mission, foreign mission and evangelistic work, and all of our other work as a church in these Southeastern synods. On the other hand, the success of the campaign will mean not only that the Seminary will be provided with an efficient feeder, but that through it, every part of the Church's work, as our Synod stands specially related to it, will be advanced.

"The College needs not only to be relieved of the burden of debt, but to have its endowment materially increased. The failure of the campaign would mean not only that the College will continue to be burdened with debt, but that it will fail to receive a material increase in its endowment. Success will mean not only that the College will be redeemed from its debt, but that it will have $148,000 added to its endowment, and so will be placed at once upon a more solid and efficient basis.

"A part of our heritage, for which we ought to be and are thankful, is the prestige of the Presbyterian name especially in matters of education. What will happen to that prestige, however, if we permit our College to go to the block when the Methodists have put Wofford upon a solid financial basis, the Baptists Furman, the Lutherans Newberry, and our A. R. P. brethren, who have only half our numerical strength, have raised $390,000 to do the same for Erskine? The failure of our campaign, then, would mean a loss of prestige for the Presbyterian Church that would be mortifying to every member of that church in the Synod of South Carolina. The success of the campaign will mean that we can, unashamed, look our Christian brethren squarely in the face and take our place beside them in the furtherance of a great common cause.

"Such, then, are the alternatives. Each one of us will have to decide what he is going to do to avert failure, or to insure success. Love for our children, for the interests, honor and advancement of our Redeemer's Kingdom, and a proper Christian self-respect, all demand that each of us, according to his ability, lend a hand in bringing this Program to a successful issue."

Announcement was made at Davidson that the dedication exercises for the $20,000 Skinner organ in the auditorium of new Chambers building would be made on the night of November 1, at which time appropriate exercises have been arranged for the formal presentation and acceptance of this gift, as well as an organ recital with Charles Vardell, Jr., dean of the school of music at Salem College, Winston-Salem, in charge.

FOUR THINGS MONEY CANNOT BUY

Boy's Industrial School Journal

One day a group of successful men were discussing at the luncheon table the purchasing power of money. "There's nothing that money will not buy," declared one of the men. The others pondered this in silence, but one voiced an exception, "Money will not buy health," he asserted.

"You are wrong," replied the champion of wealth. "There are many invalids who could regain their health if they had the means of employing specialists, or taking treatments at expensive sanitoriums, or living in more sanitary surroundings. In many instances money will buy health."

"Money will not buy happiness," said the first speaker.

"You're wrong again. Ask the average person what he needs to make him happy. He will tell you that all he wants is to be wealthy enough to work or rest when he pleases, to enjoy all the amusements that give him pleasure, and perhaps to travel or study. Money will buy happiness for millions of men and women."

So elated was this man at the ease with which he had disposed of his opponent's exceptions that he leaned across the table and said triumphantly: "I'll tell you what I'll do. Write down four things really worth having that money cannot buy, and for each I'll give you my check for $1,000!"

The next day the same group met again at the luncheon table. The man who had been challenged handed the challenger a strip of paper. He read it in silence. Then he read it again slowly and thoughtfully, the rest of the party looking on with keen, but mute interest. When he finally laid it down,

Mrs. Morrison, of Charlotte, the latter the donor of the organ and piano, which constitutes the musical equipment of the auditorium, will be honored guests at this dedication, and the entire exercises will be in charge of Dr. Walter L. Lingle, president of the college. Dean Vardell will be assisted in his recital by Mrs. Emily Cullum, contralto, formerly of Chicago, but now a resident of Davidson.

It is planned to make these exercises one of the outstanding events of the college calendar, and the date has been specifically set on the night preceding the football game between Virginia Military Institute and Davidson so that Davidson alumni, returning for the contest, will have a chance to attend. Mu Beta Psi, musical fraternity, will be assisting Dr. Lingle and his associates with the program.

Rev. Samuel M. Glasgow, D.D., pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, of Knoxville, Tenn., has been obtained by Davidson College Y. M. C. A. officials to conduct the fall evangelistic services at Davidson College. These services begin on October 27 and will continue for four days, closing on October 30. The minister being brought to Davidson this fall is one of the most widely known divines of the Southern Presbyterian Church, and has achieved fame, not only as a minister of the gospel, but also as an author of note.

Other men who have been at Davidson to conduct evangelistic services at different times include Dr. W. T. Thompson, of Richmond, Va.; Dr. Vander Meulen, of Louisville, Ky.; Dr. Ben R. Lacy, president of Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, Va.; Dr. Chas. F. Myers, of Greensboro; Dr. Edgar A. Gammon, of Charlotte; Dr. Dunbar Ogden, of Mobile, Ala.; Dr. Walter L. Lingle, now president of Davidson, but at the time of Richmond, Va.; Dr. Robert King, of Pulaski, Va., and others.

he took out his check book, wrote a check for $4,000 and passed the table. This is what was written on the paper:

A Baby's Smile

You cannot purchase a baby with coin or currency, stocks or bonds. To the soul that has so recently come from paradise, the most coveted in this world have no appeal: a mother's kiss, a father's caress, a pretty trinket may win a baby, but you cannot bargain for gold.

Youth When It Has Come

The mill will never grind a water that has passed. All things in the world cannot buy back and joyousness of youth or free happiness of maidenhood. Maturity has blotted them out.

The Love of a Good Woman

Her love, like a baby's smile, cannot be bought with gold. Men may buy silver and gold and precious stones, but true love lasts eternally, is the most precious a woman can bestow. No man is rich enough to buy it; no man is wise enough to possess it.

Entrance Into Heaven

Money will buy every material thing there is to be found in this world, not a penny of it can be taken with you next and used to gain admission to the state of immortal bliss. The heavenly gate is not susceptible of bribes. There, at least, money will not buy.

The woman who lived on a side street, the factory where the young woman worked. "I always feel better after I have seen her," she explained to her inquiring friend. "Even a five-minute talk with a person like that does a world of good. You know how to work in the factory here and she knows just what it is like."

Christians should not forget to have a God who knows a world of good. He knoweth our frames, declares the psalmist. Why do we not see him often? Even five minutes spent in talking to him and in inquiring the heart of its problems would be helpful. That five-minute prayer is—talking to God, and all about our trials and sorrows, and asking him for sympathy. Most of us find time to consult human counselors and advisers, but do we not consult God, also?—For

AT CHURCH NEXT SUNDAY

If I knew you and you knew me, How little trouble there would be. We pass each other on the street, But just come out and let us see. At church next Sunday.

Each one intends to do what is right, And treat his neighbor as he ought. But he may not quite understand, Why you don't take him to church. At church next Sunday.

This world is sure a busy place, And we must hustle in the race. For social hours some are scarce, The six week days, but a Sunday. At church next Sunday.

We have an interest in our town, The dear old place must not be gone. We want to push good things around, And we can help some if you will. At church next Sunday.

Don't knock and kick an innocent, slap. At everybody on the map, But push and pull and boost and brag. And use up all the standing room. At church next Sunday.

I AM OPPOSED TO ORGANIC UNION

When I was asked me some time ago, why I am so strongly opposed to union with the other churches of this country, but also to the four large Presbyterian and Reformed churches with us in the Western Section. I was asking the question knew that I have been tremendously in favor of unity, and the lead in every community in which I lived, in drawing the churches closer together through the agency of an active Association. He knew my former interest in the Council of Reformed Churches, and my admiration for the other great churches of the Western Section. He knew that I have stood for our remaining in the Federal Union in the face of its many mistakes, and that most of the conservatives in our church with whom I am usually aligned in my opinion are opposed to our continuing in the light of these facts, he could not understand so strongly opposed to organic union. I were to try to give him, and any others who are interested, some of the reasons why. I am very strong in my conviction that organic union is neither wise nor best.

Should we change our status, when after many years, we are either giving more or less than the other churches involved in organic union?

Organic union meant a toning up of our spiritual life; a quickening of our evangelistic zeal; and a revival of the grace of giving; such a union is not divisible. But, candidly, without international prejudice in the judgment, we have no right to think, because of statistics and reports of information, that we would not be benefited by these things.

Should we change our status, when it is not apt to be for the better?

When every man recognizes the theological and doctrinal dangers to be faced. There is a doctrinal unrest that exists today. There are doctrinal dangers to be faced. In facing them we must keep the control of our church in our own hands. If we are swallowed up in an organic union, we lose entirely this control.

There is danger (?) in the craze for union which is sacrificing our Presbyterian System of government. Unite with the Northern Methodist Church and the Presbyterian Church North is convinced we shall be in such a minority that our Presbyterian System cannot be maintained. The South Indian Union shows what the result would be.

When I was almost laughed at in the Boston Convention when he protested against the reception of the South Indian Church, because in a few years we will inevitably accept the Historic Episcopalian governmental system. If we believe in the Presbyterianism as scriptural and the ideal system, we had best beware of entangling ourselves in a union, nearly all the churches are gravitating toward us in this. A too hasty union will stop this movement and lead us to sacrifice our great system.

4. Until the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., decides what it will do as to women preaching, we would better stay apart. The argument "thou also" does not carry great weight. We will settle that question if and when it arises for ourselves, if we stay apart. If we unite, the Northern Church will settle it for us.

5. With the memory of the Cumberland Union and Canadian Union fresh before us, we should be sure of practical unanimity before we move in this matter. The tragedy in Canada makes the heart of one who loves the church and longs for its unity, ache within him.

A distinguished leader who had recently visited Canada said to me: "There is far more bitterness in many Canadian towns today between two so-called Presbyterian Churches, than there ever was between the Methodist and Presbyterian Church there."

A very prominent pastor of one of our great churches, a man of middle age, said to me recently: "Our committee on union ought to be made to realize that if they force union, there will be a continuing Southern Presbyterian Church, and it will not be a small or weak one either." If he is correct, I do not see how any one who loves his church, can be in favor of union."

6. I feel deeply that Christ's prayer "that they all may be one," is more really and practically fulfilled when there is unity with love, than where there is forced union with hate.

7. There is a large section of our church that believes that our church is called upon to witness for the spirituality of the church. Our seeming failures to so witness, are no argument against our historic position of present duty.

And the idea that we can witness better and more effectively from within a huge consolidated church is absurd.

We would be swallowed up by what is said to be one of the most perfect ecclesiastical machines to be found anywhere outside the Papacy. And that machine would not permit us even the chance to protest.

8. In fact, many of us want ecclesiastical freedom for our church. We have as citizens practically no voice in the political affairs of our nation. And when it comes to something as dear to us as our church, we are not disposed to hand its control over to other sections to dictate and control our doctrinal, social and ecclesiastical views.

9. This feeling becomes all the stronger when we realize that such a union is not something that we can try out, and if it is not satisfactory change. We take our property, our rights, our very name into such a union.

But if we were ever forced to come out, we would come out stripped of all these. Let rationalistic Modernism secure control of the Consolidated Church, and let us be forced to come out and stand for vital truth, we would come out stripped of everything. Let some acute race question arise, that would force us in order to preserve our self-respect or even racial integrity, to come out; and we would come out stripped.

The time to consider these possibilities is before union and not after.

10. Why unsettle all our benevolent enterprises?

The great thing before us now is our Annuity Fund Plan.

Launch an organic union campaign, and you will kill that plan. People will not give to that campaign, no matter how they feel about organic union, if there is danger of our church's being disrupted on that issue.

Foreign Missions and Home Missions are in debt. They will be vastly deeper in debt if this divisive issue is injected into our church.

And not being convinced that our Lord calls for an organic union rather than loving unity and co-operation; not feeling that such a combine would really advance our overtaking the common Christian task; not feeling for a moment that increased efficiency, even if secured, would pay for the peril of power and the tyranny of bigness, I am decidedly against the movement toward organic union, that is now stirring and unsettling our churches.

J. M. W.

A WISE INVESTMENT

Every true Christian ought to seek to grow in grace, and the only way to make this growth is to seek to obey our Lord's commands.

There is no truth more clearly laid down than that we are not our own, but belong to Him with all we have, and that we not only do not own ourselves, but that what we imagine we own belongs to Him.

As stewards of the Lord's money we must not only give, but we must give wisely, and see that what we have is wisely invested.

The one talent man imagined that he had done his duty because he was able to return the one talent intact.

His lord, however, reminded him that he owed the natural increase of that talent.

Those of our readers who have means should keep this truth ever before them, that what they have should be invested where it will bring the best returns.

We do not know a better investment of the Lord's money than to put it where it will bless the destitute places of our land with Gospel preaching.

In the eastern part of the State there is the town of Williamston, with a population of 1,800, where the consolidated school numbers 323 pupils, but these children have no Sunday School privileges. The nearest church is a Primitive Baptist, with occasional preaching, as a rule by elders who do not believe in an educated ministry, or Sabbath Schools. This Baptist Church has only 65 members and no effort is made by them to provide religious training for the children of the community.

A recent census shows that there are 39 families or 171 persons not one of whom is a professed Christian.

Our devoted Synodical Superintendent, Dr. E. E. Gillespie, held a meeting there recently and organized a church of 24 members, and Rev. L. T. Piephoff, just from the Richmond Seminary, is now its pastor, and he is full of the zeal of youth and blessed with common sense.

They propose to erect a church building and they have a fine lot. The members aided by Presbytery and Synod have raised over $7,000 in cash and the brick needed for building, but they need $6,000 more to build as they ought.

They mailed to prominent Presbyterians of the Synod 10,000 letters, asking $1.00 from each, or more if possible.

Presbyterians are noted for their liberality; but it must have been an off-day with those addressed, as only 525 replied, and their contributions netted only $650.00.

Gentle reader, were you one of those who failed to reply? If so, let us beg you to reconsider, and help this most worthy cause, for by so doing, you will bless a deserving people and invest the Lord's money wisely.

Of all men the Home Missionary needs encouragement most. He faces in his work difficulties that would daunt most men, and there are times when a contribution not only meets a pressing need, but gives him encouragement when he is most depressed.

In our early ministry we covered a home-mission field that required 350 miles riding on a mustang each month.

We were building on no man's foundation and at times, like the Hebrews in Egypt, we had, in our building, to make bricks without straw.

We recall, on one occasion, that we apparently reached the end of our resources in building a church.

We were greatly depressed, and we asked ourselves the question, whether it was just for one man to bear all the loss, to undergo privations, to live far from congenial surroundings, while the Church at large seemed so indifferent?

At the darkest hour there came a liberal check from an old elder in Kentucky, and at once the sky grew bright, the hardships trifles, and success certain.

Think of the home missionary and his problems and his need of support, and send him what you can, and cheer him.

Send all you can spare to Rev. L. T. Piephoff, Williamston, N. C.

CONTRIBUTED

THE UNFINISHED TASK AT HOME

Rev. A. A. Walker

We are but following the conventional plan when we begin the study of the Unfinished Task at Home by an effort to determine what our task at home is. Indeed, it is necessary that we shall define that task; otherwise we cannot estimate with any special degree of accuracy the progress that has been made toward its accomplishment; or the work that yet lies before us. Further, it is entirely possible, and I believe, very probable, that our inability to interpret the meaning of our task at home is responsible, partly at least, for much of the aimlessness of our christian activities; for I have been impressed with the idea that many of our efforts and activities have neither objective nor purpose, save only that we shall be busy doing something. And, it would not be a surprise to me to find that many of our discouragements arise from the same source; we fail to accomplish the results we expect, and we immediately conclude that we are failing in our purpose.

What the Unfinished Task is Not

Our Task is more than "Evangelization." It is that, surely; but much more. By Evangelization, in the popular, modern use of the term, we mean the preaching of the Gospel. A nation is said to be Evangelized when the gospel has been preached to all its people. While it is true that there are actually millions of the people of the United States who have no definite relations with the church, and have made no profession of faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, it is not because the opportunity has not been afforded them, or because they do not know about Jesus Christ. Practically every person who has come to the age of understanding, has had the opportunity of knowing about, and of accepting Christ. That being so, if Evangelization is our task, it is practically completed. That which remains to be done is to see to it that the children, as they arrive at the age of understanding, are also given this opportunity.

Our task is more than to bring the people of the Home Land to a profession of faith in Christ Jesus. To save the Home Land, and to save the world, is the task of the church. This is a task that makes the church, with all her blunders and weaknesses, glorious; for in this we follow the example of our Lord who came into the world to save sinners. But the work of salvation has only begun when we lead men to a profession of faith; just as the development of a man has only begun when he is born into the world. If every person in our land had accepted Jesus Christ as his Saviour, and all the children made partakers of the covenant through baptism, we could say that the Home land had been saved; but we should find ourselves at the very beginning of another degree of our task.

Our task is more than to bring all our people into active church membership. It has been my observation, as I have held evangelistic meetings in a number of states that there is an impression prevailing that to bring people into the church is very largely our task. As I have talked with pastors, preparatory to their meetings, and have asked for a list of persons who might be reached at that time, almost invariably, when certain names have been mentioned, I have been told that they are already members of the church. To become a member of the church, in a measure, is to be a recruit in the army; but it is very far from being a trained soldier.

Our task is more than to have every member of the church at work, and engaged in some definite activity. If all our people were members of the church, and all definitely and closely adjusting themselves to the program of the church, in the increase of faith and knowledge, and in the adoption of the church's plan of stewardship, both as to life and possessions, would then the task be complete? Under those circumstances we might say that the "Millennium has been ushered in." Here also, while the church would be on the way toward the accomplishment of its task, the end might be far off in the future.

The True Object of the Task Misunderstood

I am convinced that a great many persons misunderstand the whole meaning of the objective of redemption. Again and again we have heard preachers say, as they have made their earnest appeals to men to accept Christ that "We should prepare for Death." I am of the opinion that that phrase "Prepare for Death" should be forever banished from the pulpit, and from our endeavors in personal evangelism. To regard salvation merely as a sort of life insurance, and from that standpoint to make our appeal to men, to say the least, is placing a very low estimate upon the purpose and the benefits of the atonement through Jesus Christ. To be sure, under the impulse of that appeal many persons do profess a faith in Christ; but because they have paid the premiums, as it were on their insurance policies, by their profession of faith, their development stops right there; and they lead the balance of their lives under the deadly delusion that they have done all that is required or expected of them; and, if they are actually born into the kingdom, they remain in a state of spiritual childhood with disastrous compacency.

Life, not death, is the end of all our preaching, training and labor. It is because we may and shall live beyond the present life that the great commission has been given to us. If nothing but death lies before us, there is no vital or moral reason why men should become christians; the only appeal that could be rightly made would be one of expediency; that is, merely a matter of adjusting ourselves to society.

We know very little of what God has in store for us in the future life, whether by way of condition or service; but we are sure of this, that God has a service for us in the life to come: "Therefore are they before the throne of God, and serve him day and night in his temple." Rev. 7:15; "His servants shall serve him." Rev. 22:3. In some manner, this world is a school room in which the people of God are to be prepared and trained for some great purpose in the mind of God, with reference to the eternity of the future. And, in my mind the conception of our task that does not include this is faulty; and the preaching that does not hold this before the people as a large part of our objective, is incomplete. The state, or condition, that shall be ours will be commensurate with the service; but it may be only incidental to the service.

Character Building the Real Task

As I have said, we know so very little about the plans of God for the future, and what our service shall be, we must concentrate our attentions upon the earthly objectives; for, naturally, our task is here. Here upon the earth we are to reach out to some development of character, some grasp of knowledge, some attainment of faith that is to be our preparation for the service beyond. Paul tells us that the organization of the church is given for the purpose of enabling us to attain that development: "And he gave some apostles, and some prophets, and some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers, for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ; "Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ." Eph. 4:11-13.

Without entering into any special exposition of this passage, we may notice that there are three lines of endeavor, through two attainments, into one great objective. To be sure, the three lines of endeavor are all one; they are closely connected; they are inseparable, and they react upon each other. The saints are to be perfected; to be trained; matured; developed; they are to receive this development, from the human side, partly at least, in the work of the ministry; thus striving for and winning the "Edifying of the church." The attainments are, the unity of the faith, and the knowledge of the Son of God. I understand that this unity of faith does not mean that our faith must be alike; that is, that we have a standard of faith upon which we shall all agree, and conform to it; but that we must have a faith that conforms to the faith of our Lord Jesus. His was the perfect faith; and ours must be at one with that. Our knowledge of him is not simply a theoretical, or technical knowledge of his plans and purposes; but a personal knowledge of him; a knowledge that has become a vital part of our being. But the great objective is that we shall become perfect men; fully matured, developed men.

In a word then, our task, generally speaking, is the development of character; character that has been formed under the crystallizing touch and guidance of the Holy Spirit, and our conformity unto the divine plan. The evangelization of the world, persuading men to accept Christ, bringing men into the church, and the active program of the church, are all agencies toward the accomplishment of this great end.

Just as the perfect body, with bones supporting the body, and articulating at the joints; with nerves, blood vessels, muscles, and all the organs of the body functioning perfectly, lends its aid to the purposes of the mind; so we of the church have not completed our task until the whole body of Christ, which is the church, as well as every member in it, is in complete harmony with the head, who is Christ. And this is our task; to attain unto this perfection, this developed maturity in the church, and through the church, for the glorious purpose of our Lord and Saviour.

I think I am not stressing this point unduly, or insisting too strongly that the development of character is the objective of the church's endeavor. Theoretically, we know it to be true; but actually, it is often lost sight of. In my contact with the students from the Seminaries who, in their pure zeal for the service of God, are looking for work after their graduation, I have discovered what I believe to be a failure to appreciate that fact. They have told me that they want work where there are opportunities for growth; that they want a church or a group of churches where they can get results. By this they seem to mean that they want a location where many persons out of Christ who may where there are young people and children reached. It occurs to me that if I were the a church in a community where every person was a professing christian, the development character would be an undertaking worth the best and most earnest efforts.

The kingdom of heaven, in its most intense and development, cometh not with observable processes most vital to, and in, our task, and secret as the development of the seed, or the ripening of the fruit on the tree, cannot always see the results; and he cannot see the processes. All he can do is to supply conditions, and let the processes take care of themselves. "I have planted, Apollos watered; God gave the increase." 1 Cor. 3:6.

Our unfinished task is the task itself. The hundred years that have passed since we received our great commission have but brought us to the old of that task. Under the guidance of the Spirit, through the preaching, the consecration, the suffering of the church, we have a church that is nominally christian; but so far as having accomplished our task, we are just beginning to really begin it.

My thought is that the largest part of the work, certainly in the stage of development we have attained, is to develop into the character of his people; this should be the to which he shall address himself. I do not mean he shall neglect evangelism, or the winning of souls; but I do mean that by the development of the people he will have the truest evangelism most effective. By this means, instead of one personal evangelist, the pastor, in time you will have many evangelists; instead of a evangelistic meeting each year, and that for you have a continuous meeting. It is an that need not depend upon the spoken word, but personal appeal; for the silent and forceful of the cross as reflected in the lives of the consecrated men will draw men to Christ.

The progress of the church from this time will depend upon how largely we devote ourselves to this work of development. The pastor himself of power and efficiency when he has all the work of evangelism in his congregation, he has deprived his people of their privilege, their heritage. The congregations are perfect for the pastor to do all the work. They frankly, when they are looking for a pastor want a man who can reach the young people, many other such things; just as if they were a congregation, or as parents had no responsibility, they should be developed to the point where they not only recognize and assume their responsibility, but win a power in that service, and as a privilege.

It speaks much for the power of the church has grown as it has; the impetus by the cross, the example of the loyal martyrs who have lived and died for it, has wonderfully used of the Spirit. The church has numbers and in power notwithstanding the conditions, the inconsistencies, and the weak membership. But whatever may be true in where the gospel appeal is new, we cannot see that here in the home land the motion of the church has become slower and slower kinds of organizations within the church; these will take the place of consecrated men. My heart has ached many times as I have seen the absolute dependence of the church as its organizations and plans, and the individual upon its devices to bring people to its aid. Of these things may be, and generally are, a sincere desire to accomplish something. The various committees of the church stand of the work entrusted to them; and the seasons of prayer to put life into it. It is nearly always something lacking; something not yet been able to locate.

Do not misunderstand me; I do not believe the church has failed. I think the tremendous work of the church must rejoice the heart of God. In the past we have been operating in the preliminary of our task, through evangelism and other things. Now we have reached a stage where we are turning ourselves to intensive development rather than to extensive. We are not to lay aside the former we have been doing. The unsaved must be reached; the children must be brought in to the edge of the Lord; and the programs of the church must be formulated and followed. But the church now is to give a new conception, is as old as the message itself, of personal power, and power, for the purpose of God. The other stages of development further on; now is the church itself.

Of necessity our task will be accomplished saving (although not as great) has taken e boys' clothes to effect a material saving in shoes and clothing. There are three distinct types of clothing which the boys use—Dressed up clothes, school clothes and work clothes—Blue shirts are to wear for work and for school, up to a certain age, when white shirts are allowed for school; and white shirts are always allowed for dressed up clothes. Now, the big saving is to move up the limit for the blue shirts school clothes, and you don't know how hard it was to make this change. However, the boys are taking it now good naturedly and this means quite a saving, although it means a sacrifice in looks. I have always heard that girls were the hardest to please in the matter of clothes, but it appears that boys are just as hard.

Now in doing these things here, we hope to help remedy the situation that we are in. If the Church in all its departments, responds with a liberal Thanksgiving offering, we believe that our deficit will be materially decreased. There was a reduction of Nine Thousand Dollars in this deficit, in the year ending, March the 31st, 1928. It dropped back $16,000.00 in the year ending 1929.

We don't believe it is possible to reduce the $107,000.00 revenue that we are supposed to get from the Synod in the long run. We are going to reduce it this one year by doing without things that we can do without for a while but which we could not adopt as a regular practice. For instance, we couldn't continue the use of made over clothes, altogether. Possibly once in every two years can this be done.

One means of cutting expenses has been suggested to us a number of times, and that is to cut down our population. That sounds so logical and reasonable that the wonder is that we don't adopt it. When we cut down our population we can certainly cut down our expenses. We have been trying for two years to do this thing. We got it down to three hundred and forty-four this fall, and we felt surely we would hold it at that. That was our firm determination the first of September, and in less than ten days, we took in eleven children that just had to come in. Three of them, by the way, were from your neighborhood. The children. One was from Wilmington. Four from Gastonia and three from Greensboro. Seven of these eleven were urgent cases. In fact, three were being held at the church offices in Greensboro with no place to go.

We tried our best to find a loophole to turn down these children, but there was just no way to do it. If the Orphanage is going to continue to operate and had room, it had to take in these children, or at least that is the way it looked to us, and I am sure that is the way it looked to the people who had the interest of the particular children in mind. As a general thing, when we are not dealing with individual cases, it is easy to say cut down population; but when the actual cases are presented to us, and we see the need we simply can't do that. Children have to come.

Connie Maxwell Orphanage in South Carolina closed one of its cottages. Simply sealed it up, and cut down their population in this way. I hope that the time will never come when Barium Springs will have to do this way, although we certainly did approach it twice.

We have October and November yet to live through, before the usual returns from Thanksgiving commence to come in. We need help now, and we need a Thanksgiving offering more than we ever needed it before, even at the time when we were advocating a big building program. We have the buildings. They are full of children. We have a good organization, splendid workers in charge, and all we need now to put the place absolutely in shape is money to operate and the blessings of Almighty God to guide us.

With best wishes,

Yours truly,

(Signed) Jos. B. Johnston, Manager.

COLUMBIA BIBLE COLLEGE

Dr. Thornton Whaling

To the Editor of The State:

South Carolina is coming into its own. Hydro-electric development, mills, factories, iodine vegetables and fruits are destined to place the state where it belongs, in a position of leadership amongst its sister states. The hour has arrived and no earthly power can delay much longer the universal prosperity and wealth, which with the state's other splendid gifts ensure power and priority.

Columbia is sharing already in the promise and fulfillment of this prosperity. New mills, factories, plants of various kinds, business developments foreign to a decade ago, are here or on the way, and its streets suggest industry, commerce and financial stability.

Back of all this growth must ever be the character of the citizens of the Capital City and state. This character is conditioned by the education and training which schools, colleges and universities, as well as pure religious homes, confer. There is one book which ought to have a supreme place in the culture given by homes and also by educational institutions. The nation as a whole believes in that book. We cannot quite call our land a Christian land, but the only way to make it so is to put the divine book in the center of the life and service both of home and school.

There is one institution in the city and state which exists solely to accomplish this result. Other institutions are not criticized, they are rendering valuable service, but the Columbia Bible college exists for the sole end of crowning the Bible as supreme, and construing history, science, art, philosophy and all learning from the biblical standpoint. The whole land is growing in the appreciation and recognition of the value of such schools. Great cities are hastening to found endow, and adequately support them. The Evangelical Theological college of Dallas, Texas, only five years old, but already with buildings and endowments approaching a million dollars, is a sample. The training school at Richmond, Va., with over a hundred students and over a million in plant, is another illustration. I lately visited Norfolk, Va., and found in the heart of its choicest people the conviction that this fair strategic city must speedily have its bible college.

New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, San Francisco, Richmond, Dallas, Norfolk have no right to surpass Columbia at this point, and so Columbia has its bible college, with gifted leadership in its trustees, its honored dean, Dr. R. C. McQuilkin, and his able faculty, and with an attractive attendance of over 60 students. Its buildings are adequate and fitting, but under a debt, however, which ought to be speedily lifted. The prayers, the contributions, the co-work of the Christian people of Columbia and South Carolina could not be better expanded than in the growth, enlargement and adequate endowment of this college, which ought to have a large place in the heart of true Carolinians. Golden benedictions of liberal subscriptions will amply prove that South Carolina and Columbia appreciate their rich and remunerative opportunity.

Real relievers in the Bible all over our land should rally to the support of Columbia Bible college as they already have generously done to many Bible institutions in other cities.

Columbia.

A BOOK ABOUT SHAKESPEARE

Thornwell Haynes

If you should write a book about the value of Shakespeare as a writer, what would you call it? Would you name it 'Why I Love Shakespeare' or 'Shakespeare, the Greatest of Them All' or—what?

From the pen, or perhaps typewriter, of Norman Hapgood has just come an intensely suggestive and satisfying book, published in an attractively red and blue binding by that old and staid firm of artistic book makers, the Century company, of New York.

In his first paragraph the author questions whether he has chosen the right name, and confesses there has been more trouble about it than about naming a baby. He seems to forget that, in fact, the volume is a baby—an offspring of his own mind. And a very sweet and adorable child, by the way. He says he couldn't call it "Shakespeare's Place in a Liberal Education," nor could he be quite so personal as to select "How Shakespeare Stands by Me."

Probably you are wondering, then, what he does call it.

It came to him by chance. Walking in the park with Janet, a sixteen-year old friend, the foremost track athlete of her school, discussing her plans for going to college, he expressed surprise that a young person of her tastes did not know more of Shakespeare. Janet laughed. "Why should I?" she demanded, in her merry way.

This book is an answer to Janet's query. So he calls it: "Why Janet Should Read Shakespeare."

Truth it is, Mr. Hapgood's smooth and incisive paragraphs, with their copious and wise quotations from such a multitude of authors, fully answers why every one should read Shakespeare. Answers, indeed, why every one should read and re-read him.

How long has it been since our forefathers' library consisted of the Bible, Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, and Shakespeare? Regarding them, the author remarks that "the tongue of Shakespeare, the Bible, lasting over to 'The Pilgrim's Progress,' is the most imaginative and fertile the world has produced, at any rate since the days of Homer and Aeschylus."

Ruskin declares that the greatness of any English writer since Shakespeare can be measured by the amount he has been influenced by Shakespeare. In a word, it is not likely one will be great without feeling the greatest. Wisely the author remarks: "Shakespeare and the Bible will be the foundation and the solace of the most inspired souls even after the Aladdin-like conquest of air and earth has gone beyond its present dreams."

It is probably all well and good, and probably it is not all well and good, to be an adept in the use of slang. Only yesterday I was hearing a minister of a 'First' church glibly using what years ago was considered 'cuss' words. Just why this should be so I could not understand, especially when there are so many beautiful words rich and resonant with color and perfume! Why should one speak the language of the alley when the language of a Shakespeare is accessible?

The challenge which some of the newer forces of education have made to the older forms is the challenge of usefulness in our modern life. There is something of value in such challenge. "But wisdom, beauty, deep appreciation of human fate and life-meanings," says Mr. Hapgood, "these can never be obsolete."

The book is stimulating from beginning to end. It suggests new points of interest, and every Janet and John who wonders why she or he should read Shakespeare, and every father and mother of Janet and John—these the volume answers fully.

CHURCH NEWS

REV. D. M. FULTON, D.D.

Resolution of the Congregation of the First Presbyterian Church of Darlington, S. C., on the Death of Former Pastor

On September 19, 1929, our former beloved pastor, Rev. Darby M. Fulton, D.D., who had served this church faithfully and continuously for a period of thirty-three years, his entire ministerial life, was removed from us after a lingering illness. This unusually long pastorate was greatly blessed of God and speaks for him the place of love and affection that he held in the hearts and lives of the people whom he served. His strong and earnest preaching of the gospel in its purity, his kindly and sympathetic ministrations to those in sickness and sorrow, his affable and friendly personality, his godly and exemplary life, his interest in every movement that looked to the moral and spiritual upbuilding of his community and its people, made his ministry and his influence effective and fruitful as probably no other citizen of this town has ever done. For this reason, it was said at his death that Darlington had lost its first citizen. His life was spent and dedicated to his Master's service.

In his passing, we, the members of this church, feel that we have suffered the loss of one who dearly loved the church and the people whom he served. Therefore be it resolved:

1. That in our sorrow and deep sense of loss, we humbly bow in submission to the will of God, who "doeth all things well" and who ordaineth "whatsoever comes to pass for his own glory."

2. That as members of this church, we here record our gratitude to God for his life, his labors, his love and his faithful ministry.

3. That we extend to the bereaved children and relatives our deepest sympathy in this great sorrow that has come to them and commend them to our loving Heavenly Father for His grace and strength to sustain them in this hour.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be given to the members of the bereaved family and also sent to the Christian Observer, Presbyterian Standard, and our local paper for publication.

Respectfully submitted,
T. Dudley Paulling.

Rev. H. F. Beaty, recently of Florida, has accepted the position of bible teacher at Crossnore, N. C., in the mission school there, and has changed his address to that point.

Salisbury First—Dr. W. J. Martin, president emeritus of Davidson College, and now connected with Doctor Sweets' Committee of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief, spoke for last Sunday in the absence of our pastor, Rev. Edgar A. Woods.

Doctor Martin is coming home when he comes to Salisbury. He conducted both the morning and evening services.

Charlotte—Thomasboro. — Rev. W. H. Matheson, who has served this church two years, coming from Union Seminary, has accepted charge in Nashville Presbytery of four churches, Woodbury, Cripple Creek, Stones River and Milton. His home will be at Woodbury.

Before Mr. Matheson and Mrs. Matheson left Thomasboro, the church auxiliary gave Mrs. Matheson a reception, and bestowed on her a parting gift of appreciation of a pair of blankets and other things. The men of the church made Mr. Matheson the recipient of a nice purse. The felicitations of all the village were extended to these faithful workers.

Charlotte, Tenth Avenue—This church has had a real revival of religion. Rev. Harry Clarke, of Chicago, preached for two weeks, and the crowds attended night and day with increasing numbers. Eight persons were received into the church on profession of faith, and many of the people of the congregation, old and young, rededicated their lives to the Master in holy living and devoted service.

The music of the meeting was an attractive feature, led by George Chenot, our choir director and pastor's assistant. Mr. Clarke sings well as does Mr. Chenot, who also plays several instruments. His trombone added much to the enjoyment of the service. The pastor and his members are very grateful to God and these workers in His kingdom.

Laurel Hill—The series of services at the Church in the Pines, Rev. Edgar Woods of Salisbury preaching, opened Monday night with an unusually large "Monday night" congregation. Tuesday night the congregation increased by about one hundred per cent, the church being filled almost to capacity. The enthusiastic reception accorded to Mr. Wood's messages indicates that there will be increasing attendance throughout the week.

Great interest has been shown in the musical feature of the services. Singing has been a decided attraction as a background and preparation for the splendid messages delivered by Mr. Woods. Tuesday night the large congregation was delighted with the splendid rendition of two beautiful sacred numbers by a choir of 20 voices from the Maxton Presbyterian Church, and one anthem by the Church in the Pines choir.—Laurinburg Exchange.

Presbyterian Orphans' Home, Barium Springs — Believing that many of our friends would be pleased to know something of the athletic phase of our school life here at Barium Springs, we are going to take this opportunity to speak of that.

Beginning with September 21, we had a line-up of ten games, four of which have been played. The first was with Winston-Salem High. While the Winston team was about 30 pounds above our boys, the game was hard fought, the score being 19 to 21 in favor of Winston. Lexington came next. They were given a warm and cordial welcome to the tune of 13 to 0 in Barium's favor. The next onslaught was at Concord, when Concord High sustained a defeat of 25 to 7. The last of games thus far was with Statesville High. This is always TH7 game of the season. Statesville carried off the trophy last year, the score being 7 to 0. This year our Barium boys waded through their line of defense to the tune of 19 to 0. Three games out four—not a bad record, don't you think? Six more games to play, and reports on these games will be given some time soon. Watch for them. Barium of the hardest fighting teams we have had years. They do team work, and it is showing school work. After all, the reaction on class is the ultimate goal to be attained in promoting. This, we have accomplished. Don't you think is worth while?

An interesting event of the past week was a que entertainment in the form of a "Treasure" given by the juniors in honor of the seniors. They joyed a picnic supper at the spring after the same afternoon, a number of Mitchell College, and teachers enjoyed a picnic on the grounds, delighted to have them.

The Presbytery of Albemarle met in session, October 15, 11:00 a. m. in the Goldsboro and in the absence of the Moderator was opened last Moderator present, Rev. J. T. Wildman. The service in compliance with the request of the Assembly, after which the roll call showed 1 and nine ruling elders present. Rev. Willard elected Moderator, Rev. H. M. Wilson, temporary. Presbytery heard Rev. J. S. Baird, D.D., on a unity plan, and voted unanimously to endorse a committee of seven, consisting of two elders and three deacons to help put into operation in the Presbytery.

Presbytery voted to delay action on the basis with the U. P. Church, since that Church is in action.

A committee was appointed to consider the of so increasing the annual amount to be sent to Barium Springs Orphanage, that it will not be necessary to depend upon the Thanksgiving offering, the actual running expenses of the Orphanage to report to the spring meeting.

The Chairmanship of Local Home Missions vacant by the death of Rev. H. B. Searight, filled by the election of Rev. E. C. Lynch.

Memorial of Rev. J. L. Yandell was read by Crane.

Presbyterial sermon was preached by R. Brown on "The Trinity." The time, place and the Doctrinal sermon was left to the Moderator. Stated Clerk for later action, since no invitation given for the spring meeting.

Charlotte — The Presbyterian Hospital met at the hospital on Wednesday afternoon, 9, with an attendance of seventy. The meeting presided over by the vice-president, Mrs. L. and was opened with prayer by Miss Annie

There was a generous response to the jell shower at this meeting and other miscellanea for the hospital were also brought in.

The chairman of the nurses' committee plans for providing more social life and for the nurses. A report of flowers sent was made by the flower committee chairman of the woman's ward committee. The kind, courteous interest that is displayed to the charity patients by all in the hospital, an especially interesting case, that of a child whose face has been transformed by operation, both doctor and hospital care being out of charge. The large amount of charity by this hospital is the answer to the question times asked as to why the hospital should in addition to the fees that are paid.

A note from the president, Miss Harriette read, expressing her regret at being forced up the presidency because of conflicting resignation was accepted, with a vote the auxiliary express to Miss Orr by letter and of her untiring and constructive work.

At the close of the meeting, the membership committees met with their respective chairs to make further plans.

CHURCH PAPER WEEK

The General Assembly Has Appointed the Week of Nov. 3 to Nov. 10

as CHURCH PAPER WEEK. At that time, the pastors, the Auxiliaries and all other church workers are requested to bring to the attention of all church members the duty and privilege of subscribing to the Church Papers.

No person can be as useful in church work who does not read the Church Papers. The minister has no time to inform the congregation of events, projects, purposes, needs, and all the thousand and one things each ought to know for effective work in the departments.

The discussion of the church's great projects, such as now is going on, as to the Ministers' Annuity Fund, will be found in the Church Papers. Other important matters are discussed, and we ought to know what they mean, and how they bear on our own work and people.

Good reading for the family is provided by the Church Papers, and solve many problems of restless children, and furnish a quiet hour for older people. The devotional articles are valuable in developing our knowledge and faith. The Sunday School articles and Young People's discussions are very helpful.

The Presbyterian Standard will give the Auxiliary, or any other organization ONE DOLLAR out of $3 collected for a new subscription.

We are depending on our auxiliaries to send us many new subscribers the week of November 3 to November 10.

VIRGINIA

Petersburg—On September 6 invitations were mailed by the Second Church to all her young people to attend a banquet given in honor of those leaving for college. A delightful evening was planned in every detail from the delicious menu which was interspersed with musical numbers and college reminiscences to the most enjoyable program which followed. Our pastor, Rev. D. T. Caldwell acted as toast-master in entertaining style. We were very fortunate in having as our guest speaker Dr. D. W. Richardson of Union Theological Seminary, who brought our young people an appropriate and inspiring message.

Hebron—The past half year of our church has seen its membership increased by twenty-one additions, thirteen by profession and eight by letter. During the summer the pastor, the Rev. W. C. Jamison, conducted a bible study class for the young people of the congregation at the manse every Thursday evening. He made these lessons, not only profitable, but very interesting. The interest shown was most gratifying. The average attendance was twenty-eight.

A course of congregational bible reading has been inaugurated by the pastor. Each Sunday he assigns a portion of scripture to be read during the week and a count is made the next Sunday of those completing the assignment. There has been an average of sixty-five reading each week the whole assignment. The new testament is almost finished.

In the latter part of August we had a revival service, preaching by the pastor for eight consecutive nights. The meeting was marked by the largest night attendance we have ever had. From this meeting we had not only additions to the church, but feel that the whole spiritual life of the church has been revived.

THE things we hold most dear depend upon Christian Character

MORE perhaps than most of us realize, those things which really matter in our lives depend to a great extent upon Christian education and Christian leadership. It has long been so in Presbyterian life.

Our religious life, our home life, our social life, even our business life — life from any angle, in fact—find their highest fulfillment through the power of Christian education.

For it is through Christian education that our Christian leaders develop. It is through Christian education that our boys and girls shall keep their faith.

All these things mean a great deal to us. And because they do, Presbyterian College means a great deal to us—to the Presbyterians. For Presbyterian College, because it is a stronghold of Christian education, is perhaps one of the greatest sustaining factors.

A survey reveals, as a matter of fact, that as a Church we have a tremendous need of Presbyterian College. From this institution have come many of the men who are our ministers and missionaries. We find Presbyterian College men in positions of lay leadership in church after church throughout the Synods. And we find Presbyterian College the source from which the stream of intellectual thought is kept true to evangelical Christianity.

Thus church, home, community, true Christian thought—the things we hold most dear—depend upon Christian education; and Presbyterian College plays a vital part in promoting Christian education.

WITH A VIEW to continuing and improving its service to the Church, Presbyterian College is now undertaking a Program of Deliverance.

A fund of $350,000 is needed to liquidate indebtedness incurred in service to the Church. The debt eliminated the College will be placed in a position to render service of increasing value to our people.

Your prayers, your interest, your liberality—the unanimous support of loyal Presbyterians—will make the “Deliverance” complete.

WHAT THE $350,000 FUND WILL DO

1. Deliver P. C. from the burden of debt.
 2. Eliminate life-sapping interest payments.
 3. Deliver the Church from burdensome emergency contributions for college operating expense.
 4. Assure receipt of three gifts totaling $148,000, offered upon condition that debt be liquidated by January 1, 1931.
 5. Bring the endowment (by receipt of the $148,000) almost up to the required half-million mark.
 6. Assure retention by P. C. of its “A Grade” standing and membership in Southern Association of Colleges.

PROGRAM OF DELIVERANCE

Most of the ministers in the Synod of South Carolina will exchange pulpits on Sunday, October 27, to stress the value of Presbyterian College to the Synod and the urgency of the need now confronting the institution. Ministers throughout the Synod have readily agreed to co-operate in every way to make the campaign a success.

SUNDAY SCHOOL RALLY DAY AT BANNER ELK, N. C.

The day itself was most beautiful, the perfect Indian summer day that makes our mountains into a paradise. And the church was beautiful, too. All those who haven't a lovely natural-stone church to decorate with mountain evergreens and autumn leaves and flowers have missed a great experience. We had the back of the pulpit platform hung with these, the front edged with them, and pots and baskets of marigolds, cosmos, larkspur and dahlias in every available place, with flags to add more color to the pattern. The neighborhood gardens furnished the flowers, and the school boys brought the evergreens.

Since our church is without a pastor now, we had our regular Sunday School period, and then assembled for the Rally Day service about eleven o'clock.

We entered by departments, and as the Lees-McRae School is in session, the church was full.

After the evening hymn and prayer by Mr. Richard Flynn, the Juniors took charge for their part of the program. They gave a Foreign Mission Show, with a whole Japanese village set forth on a table and a Korean wedding party on another. Miss Hall, one of the teachers in the department, told how the children had received these paper villages as prizes, and had cut out and colored them and set them up, with the help of their teacher. (They had also made flourishing banana trees, of red and green paper, each planted in its own potato, which lent an elegant air of the tropics, even if they are not indigenous to the Island Empire.) She explained that if we do our duty by American youth, America can convert the world, and if we do our full duty by God's commands we cannot neglect the children of other lands. This seems to us Juniors a very good way to put missions into the Sunday School.

The children then came to the platform, and holding up one little figure after another, explained what all these people were and their various occupations.

Next the little Juniors, a big class just removed from the Primary Department, marched up and recited the 100th Psalm, then sang most sweetly one of their Primary songs, "Away in a Manger." If Rally Day does not bring touchingly to our hearts the story of the Immortal Babe and all He may mean to our own children, those hearts must be hard indeed!

The Primaries then lifted their baby voices in two of their lovely songs, and recited scripture like little veterans. Their superintendent, Mrs. Tate, was with them, as ever faithful and enthusiastic. Mrs. Edgar Tufts, with her own dear little girl, was also there, and played all the hymns for us.

Then came the Rally Day Pageant, presented under the direction of Miss Turlington and Miss Faucette, presented by the college girls and one of the boys, in his Scout uniform. The parts of the Mother, the Church, the State, the Home, and the Voice of the Future, were all well taken, and the cradle in the foreground, though only a chip basket, was a very good cradle indeed. Some of the Primaries, proudly carrying christian or American flags, assisted as the representatives of the Children's Army. And all of us were moved to hope that, in this favored valley, our children will be brought up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.

The offering was then presented by departments and classes, and the offering prayer made by Mr. Stinson, the former superintendent. Mr. David Draughn, acting superintendent for Mr. VonCanon, then asked Mr. Stinson to count the collection during the singing of the closing hymns. Mr. B. F. Hall rose to make an earnest appeal to the young people to give their lives to Christ early in their pilgrimage, and closed it with prayer.

The offering was reported as something over $17.00. And after prayer by Mr. Pritchett, principal of Lees-McRae, the exercises closed.

In the afternoon Sunday School was held, as usual at our two chapels, Hanging Rock and Arbordale, with faithful workers from the Banner Elk Church in charge. "How beautiful on the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace; that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation; that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth."

APPALACHIA SYNOCDICAL

The fifteenth annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Synod of Appalachia was held at Montreat, September 24-26 with an excellent attendance.

Mrs. F. B. Kegley, who, for four years has so faithfully led Appalachia as her beloved president, conducted all the sessions.

The theme, "Teaching the Christian" was developed in four of the sessions of the Synodical as follows:

I. Teaching the Christian at Montreat was ably developed by Dr. R. C. Anderson and the Montreat Normal School girls. Dr. Anderson talked about the wonderful advantages of Montreat and the Normal School girls presented in a very appealing manner the pageant, "Flame Up, O Torch of Truth."

II. Teaching the Teachers was the subject developed on Wednesday morning in a conference period with Mrs. R. T. Faucette in charge of the Teaching of Auxiliary Leaders." Dr. R. F. Campbell then taught the women about Synod's work.

Most instructive and enjoyable "Echoes from the meeting of General Assembly" were given by Mrs. Walter McCoy, life president of Appalachia at this session of the meeting.

III. On Wednesday afternoon came the "Close of the Term," with reports from the faculty.

1. The Heart—Mrs. J. S. Poindexter, Secretary of Spiritual Life.

2. The Head—Mrs. W. J. Sheldon, Secretary of Literature.

3. The Eyes—

Near Vision—Mrs. Geo. St. Clair, Secretary Assembly's Home Missions.

Far Vision — Mrs. W. K. Armstrong, Secretary Foreign Missions.

4. The—Mrs. Geo. Miller, Secretary Synodical and Presbyterian Home Missions.

5. The Hands—Mrs. J. L. Calloway, Secretary Christian Social Service.

The baccalaureate address was delivered by Mrs. W. M. Ryburn, Secretary of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief.

Following the address the vice-presidents of the college gave their annual reports as follows:

Abingdon—Mrs. E. T. Howard.

Holston—Mrs. J. H. Von Cannon.

Asheville—Mrs. Jere Cocke.

Knoxville—Mrs. R. T. Faucette.

Commencement exercises closed with the address of our beloved retiring president, Mrs. F. B. Kegley.

IV. On Wednesday evening the "Teaching Missions" part of the theme was given by the veteran home missionary, Rev. R. P. Smith, of Asheville, and Dr. Robt. Bedinger, of Africa. Both these talks stirred us to renewed efforts, both at home and in foreign lands.

After a short business session on Thursday morning the Synodical adjourned to meet in Galax, Va., in October, 1930.

All members of the Synodical were entertained in beautiful Assembly Inn by the local Auxiliary and came away feeling that indeed it had been a blessed privilege to be there and enjoy the feast of good things for mind, body and soul.

HELPFUL LEAFLETS ON PERSONAL EVANGELISM

There have been many requests for leaflets which would help the personal worker for Christ. Every Christian has the bible, his greatest tool for the Master's work of soul winning, and yet each one of us needs direction and study that we may use the tool for the service of God. Here is a short list of helps.

"Fishers of Men" by Wade C. Smith, is a unique booklet, telling of the "fish," the "angling" and the "bait." Order from the Committee of Publication, Box 1176, Richmond, Va. (Price 5c, or $4.00 per 100.)

"Selected Texts for Personal Workers" is an invaluable list of Bible references of verses, which, stored in our hearts and minds, and used under the power and direction of the Holy Spirit, will bring their fruit. "My word shall not return unto me void." Order from the Bible Institute Colportage Association, 843 North Wells Streets, Chicago, Ill. (Price 4c, 40c per doz., $3.00 per 100.)

"What Can I Do to Win Others to Christ?" by Rev. Howard W. Pope. (Price 10 copies, 15c, 100 copies $1.00.)

"One Hundred Scripture Passages." (Price 5c each, 25c per doz., $1.00 for 250.)

These may be ordered in small quantities from the Department of Woman's Work, but any large orders should be sent in to the publishers. The last three given here may be ordered from The Bible Institute Colportage Association, 843 North Wells St. Chicago, Ill.

GEORGIA CRUSADES

By Miss Julia Parker, our Georgia Corre-

Georgia's first Union Officers' Conference, Indian Springs, September 14, 15, was quite successful in every way. A better place could not be chosen, as Indian Springs is centrally located in a beautiful place to stay, and very interesting from a historic standpoint. It was here that Creek Indians in 1825, ceded to the whites their last land. The conference was delightfully entertained at the New Hotel Elder, and we were served a fine meal, including plenty of friend chicken.

Although the attendance was not as large as we had hoped for, we were not at all discouraged. A group of thirty enthusiastic Endeavorers, from widely scattered parts of the state, gathered for this nature. Everyone showed interest and fine co-operation and we expect these conferences an annual feature of our state. We had a jolly good time of fellowship together as well as gave serious thought to plans for promoting more than ever before Christian endeavor in Georgia, that we may be of great "For Christ and the Church."

The conference sessions were held under the leadership of some of our state officers and our beloved Southern Secretary, Mr. W. Roy B. We were exceedingly glad to officially welcome him to Georgia. His office was moved to Atlanta on October 1. A great deal of time was given to district work—reorganization of weak districts and methods, and district conventions. We received a most interesting report of the International Convention at Kansas City and then discussed the motion of the Crusade program in our state. Georgia may march strongly forward under the leadership of the Crusade with Christ. Many of our workers were given attention, including the development of our departmental programs. Crusade emphasis, our state aims and goals for the new Christian Endeavor World Campaign. At the state convention next April a silver loving cup will be awarded to the society in each department, Intermediate and Young People's—who has done the best work done this year. Georgia will boost the Christian Endeavor World Campaign very vigorously and win honors this time. President, Lawton G. Hatcher of August presented the race for a free trip to the World Exhibition in Berlin next August and has been made a special state contestant.

Sunday morning a very impressive service was held down by the spring, a good beautiful Sabbath day. The conference closed at 4:30 Sunday afternoon with an inspiration by Mr. Breg, after which all joined hands. "God Be With You Till We Meet Again" repeated the Mizpah Benediction. We then returned to our home tasks with new inspiration and consecration to go forward for "the Church" in Georgia.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S TOPIC

Sunday, November 3: Making My Body a Temple for God.—(1 Cor. 3:16, 17; 1 Cor. 6:19)

C. G. A.

For the Leader

How interested we are in our bodies! How we make them attractive to the world! We study of dressing; we plaster our hair down this week, get it curled the next; we wear spring clothes now, snow is still on the ground, and fall clothes are in fashion. Girls, of course are supposed to conform to fashion dictates than boys are—but that depends on individual. Boys like being well-dressed just as much as girls do. There is nothing wrong in being well-dressed as long as we do not make clothes our chief aim. Clothes wear out, and fashions change, and we grow, but away in our hearts we remember that our bodies are immortal. This immortal part of us truly affects our faces and the way we walk. Our bodies are important! "Do you not know that your body is God's temple, and that God's Spirit dwells in you?"

The Body and Health

How many foods we see advertised that are supposed to keep our bodies strong? How many of exercise we should take to "keep fit?" A clean up week, and physical education to keep down the spread of disease. About the advertised as being for our health is cigarette advertisers have come just as close to making "healthful" as they dare. Indeed, people in enjoying health today as they have never enjoyed health is our right—our birthright. The child is led to suffer from some preventable disorder its birthright. Health is coupled with happiness when we are healthy our body-engines run smoothly and our worries cannot oppress us. A beautiful body. God has given each of us a house for the soul. He, too, dwells within. "Then glorify God with your body."

The Body—A Clean Temple

Some of the things that we must do to keep for the King? We have said that we must be healthy and strong. What things affect our health? There is good humor—the good humor that comes from love. Anger makes us sick, physically sick. Hatred makes us sick. Our bodies cannot function when we are "out" with the world. And each other as Christ taught us to love each other not be ill-natured. A Christian should be the happiest person in the world. Praise the Lord, the long-faced Christian are gone—he had no religion to keep him miserable! "Love" is the law of health.

Some of the things that will harm our bodies and make it an unfit temple. We all know that our bodies are in check with regard to eating and drinking. And we all know that smoking slows up our bodies. Perhaps the young people who study this will not have the temptation to smoke—but many people do have it. Merely having some one who is not good for us doesn't worry us a great deal, but should we deliberately add to the score? What must we have to keep us happy? One who finally depend on tobacco as a necessity for us and if there is no tobacco there is no happiness for the individual. But those of us who desire a beautiful body for the Great King need nothing to be told that a smoke-smudged temple is an unfit temple.

The Mind and Health

Health is a great achievement, but mental health is a greater one. "A clean mind in a sound body" is what we might all adopt. Others may see to it that their bodies are kept in condition, but you—and you only—must keep your mind clean. A clean mind shows on the face. Perhaps we have sound healthy bodies, but we can all have healthy minds. "Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report—if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things."

Ye Are Living Epistles

When John wrote the last word of the Revelation, God did not stop revealing Himself to us. The Spirit of Christ still is being revealed through us. We are living letters.

"You are writing a gospel, a chapter each day,

By the deeds that you do and the things that you say, Men read what you write, whether faithless or true, Say, what is the gospel according to you?"

We are temples for God's Spirit, and we are living letters from God to the rest of the world. He has honored us—let us also honor Him. "Do you not know that you are God's temple, and that God's Spirit dwells within you?"

DIXIE ENDEAVOR DAY

For a number of years it has been the custom for Christian Endeavor Societies in Dixie to set aside a day once each year for a special program to be presented in their churches. This is Dixie Endeavor Day and it falls this year on November 3.

A most attractive program has been prepared in the Southern Office and a copy will be sent to every society in each of our Southern States with the request that careful plans be made for its presentation, using if possible, the Church's evening service on November 3, or some other more convenient date.

Dixie Endeavor Day has always been a big day in Dixie—one that has meant much to the work because of the offering made for the maintenance of the Southern Office at that time. This year it is particularly important because of the large plans which have been made for the advancement of the work. The Southern Office of the International Society of Christian Endeavor, formerly located at Chattanooga, Tennessee, has been removed to Walton Bldg., Atlanta, Georgia, in order that it may serve the entire South in a larger way.

President Poling will soon announce the appointment of the Southern Advisory Committee, which is to help the progress of the work in a very material way. This committee will probably hold its first meeting within a short time.

OBITUARIES

DIED

Clark—Mrs. Wade H. Clark, born March 2, 1878, passed away October 5, 1929, at her home near Shiloh Church, Iredell County, N. C. She was an earnest faithful life-long Christian and is mourned by her husband, two daughters, five sons, two sisters, two brothers and a host of friends.

Beam—Mr. D. C. Beam, aged seventy-three years, died October 10, 1929, at his home in Rutherford County, Bostic, N. C., R. F. D. No. 1. He was a faithful member and elder of Brittain Presbyterian Church. He finished his work and God called him home. We thank God for his life.

Johnston— "Aunt" Nancy Johnson, thought to be ninety-seven years of age died October 5, 1929, at the home of her niece in Marion, N. C. She joined Union Mills Presbyterian Church at the age of ninety-four. Interment took place at Round Hill Baptist Church, Union Mills, N. C.

Barksdale—After an extended period of illness, Miss Annie Barksdale, of Saxe, Va., departed this life on July 20, 1929, to be with her heavenly Father whom she loved so much. She bore her afflictions with patience, and always had a cheerful smile for her friends as they visited her from time to time. She was a member of Hermon Presbyterian Church and will be greatly missed, but we humbly feel that our loss is heaven's gain.

washboard and ironing board. She had had neither good clothing nor good food nor a comfortable place to sleep. Rest, peace and pleasure knew her not. Nearly all of what she earned went to help somebody out of a tight corner. Her family were always in tight corners. Now she lay in her daughter's room, dependent, helpless and despairing, with a wornout body and flagging breath and a heart that thumped and wiggled and threatened to stop. The doctor had been stern in his command that little old Mom, who had always taken care of everybody, should now be taken care of.

There was a council outside the house that afternoon. The children gathered in—the boys, Bill and Ed and Grif, and the girls, Allie and Liz and Conny. What was to be done? The doctor had been there again. This time he said the house must be cleared out and Mom kept quiet—her life depended upon it.

Allie sat on the grass and wept. Liz clung to the clothes line and groaned. Connie sniffed. Ed smoked and Grif chewed gum. Only Bill seemed to be thinking constructively. Bill was a war cripple who drew a pension. He wasn't married. It was all he could do to take care of himself and even then he often had to call in Mom to help him.

"Well, sir, it's up to us," Bill said. "Mom's stuck by us folks through thick and thin. She's fed us and clothed us and got us up to be men and women. Now she's used up. We got to come across and help her to die comfortable, anyhow, if we can't do no more for her. It's no place for her here at Allie's with four kids sprawlin' over her the whole enduring time. It's no better where the rest of you live than it is here. As for me, I've only got a room, and I share that with another fellow. Folks, here's the long and short of it. Mom's got to go to Miss Clinton's."

Astonished looks, gasps, stirrings of objection. Miss Clinton kept a swell private hospital where they had trained nurses and things.

"Yes, sir!" said Bill, thumping the ground with his cane, "If Mom's got to go she's going right. We'll pool together every last cent we can rake and scrape and send her to Miss Clinton's."

Clearly it was the only thing to do under the circumstances. The six children and their partners in matrimony scared up every last cent they had and it was just enough to keep Mom one week at Miss Clinton's. After that—but they were too grieved to look ahead.

Toward night the doctor came and they moved Mom round the corner to the big house that had been a private residence before it was a hospital. The boys carried Mom on a cot tenderly, solemnly. The others followed in a tearful procession. But Mom scarcely knew anything that was going on now. She was too far gone.

Mom was put to bed in a sunny room with pink and gold fixings. Under her were fine coil wire springs, a spring mattress. She lay between sheets of the finest, smoothest texture. She was highly covered with a fleecy blanket. An alcohol rub made her feel rested. She had a new nightie with sprigs of pink flowers on it. There were roses on the stand beside her bed. And outside the open window in the swaying boughs of a green tree a bird sang.

The food was delicious. Mom could eat anything. Her stomach had never been crowded with rich viands. She enjoyed her asparagus, chicken, hot broth, eggs and tea which had real cream in it. She had ices, too, colorful things in tall thin glasses. Too sick to feel selfish or to worry about anything, she lay and took what was brought to her by the smiling, gentle-handed nurse. Peace, beauty, luxury unfolded her. She folded her thin hands and drew sighs of blissful comfort.

Nobody was allowed to see her. Her heart was much too weak. She did not speak, only she smiled faintly in apology or gratitude when anything was done for her.

The week passed. Again there was counsel. Where was more money coming from? Mom mustn't be moved. Mouths tightened, eyes grew stern with purpose.

Ed went out and sold his fiddle. It was a good fiddle and he loved it. But if he hadn't fiddled so much at local dances he might have had a good job this long while. The price of the violin went toward Mom's fund. And Ed took his job. Lizzie decided to do some of the washings Mom had been obliged to give up. Conny got back some regular cleaning jobs that she had turned down. Allie put her home in order and took a roomer. Grif and Ed settled down to the first real work of their lives.

Money came, Mom's expenses were met the second week. The third week there was a good bit left over. The fourth week there was no question that Mom could stay at Miss Clinton's all summer if she had to. Truth was, Mom was picking up. The folks noticed the change in her every time they went to see her—color, added flesh, a new hopefulness. Mom wasn't going to conclude her existence after all.

There came a day when Mom was declared fit to leave the hospital and go about her business. Then it was Miss Clinton spoke right to the girls who had come to conduct Mom away.

"Can't let her go, can't spare her," smiled Miss Clinton. She patted Mom's tight little hand. "She going to stay here with me and help round at easy jobs and earn good wages."

Mom nodded joyously. "Yes, I be," she said. "And just as soon as ever I kin, girls, I'm going to pay you all back for what I've cost you."

"Mom!" cried Liz and Conny and Allie in one indignant breath. "Don't you dare! After all you've done for us. No, sir! We are doing well enough, You keep every cent you earn for yourself."

Mom stayed at Miss Clinton's. It was fun to work there. She might in time almost get strong again, though she could not last a week at the washtub, as Miss Clinton knew.

It was pleasant to go visiting the children. Some of them were buying homes and paying for them. They were all fixing up to beat the band. Everybody seemed to be getting a lot out of living these days.

Mom wondered and wondered how it had all happened.

A ROUGH GHOST

"So you don't believe in ghosts, eh?" said Howard Merrick. "You-o-o better not let the spooks hear you say that this night, Rose Lee Arthurs!"

"Aw!" exclaimed the little girl, kicking at a pebble on the driveway. "You can't scare me! I don't believe in ghosts."

Howard came back from the gate and stooping low, for he was big and all of fifteen, he whispered in Rose Lee's ear:

"I dare you to say that in the cemetery tonight at midnight!"

"I'm not allowed to be out after dark," said Rose Lee cheerfully. "It's seven o'clock usually and eight when we have Daylight Savings."

Mildred, Rose Lee's big sister, had been listening to all this talk with one ear. She was thirteen and already in High School. And she was pretty, too.

"Howard," she called, "what are you trying to do? You let Rose Lee alone. She knows better than to believe in silly ghost, don't you Rose Lee?"

"I dare you to come to the cemetery and say that tonight at seven o'clock!" cried Howard, turning his bright black, bird-like eyes on Mildred.

"Well, we'll see," said Mildred, cocking up one eyebrow like her father.

Howard went off whispering and looking very pleased about something, and Mildred called Rose Lee over to her.

"Listen," she said, "you know what Howard plans to do. He wants us to go to the cemetery and then he'll scare us. Like as not he'll dress up like a ghost and come pouncing out at us."

"Oh, my!" exclaimed the little girl with a shudder. "I'm glad we won't be there."

"Oh, but I'm not so sure we won't be there," said Mildred.

Rose Lee looked quite startled and said: "But we're not allowed to be out after seven. It isn't Daylight Savings any more."

"Well, Hallowe'en is an exception I guess," said Mildred. "Now don't try to get out of it. We must teach Howard a lesson. It'll be fun. I'll get Dolly Davis to go with us, and we'll take sheets along and be ghosts ourselves. We have to have you along so you can scream for us."

Rose Lee began to look interested. She had the shrillest scream in the whole town. In fact, the vocal teacher at school said: "There's no doubt in my mind that Rose Lee will one day be singing soprano in the Operas." You see, Rose Lee could begin the scale where most people leave off and go right on up, loud and squeaky until she was up among the high notes that mice and mosquitoes use.

Dolly Davis was a scary person and that made Rose Lee want to seem brave, any way, she went with the big girls that night. Oh my! Will she ever forget that night? Well, not much!

The cemetery was an old one in a church yard and it happened that Hallowe'en fell on a Monday. Don't forget that! It was dim and spooky enough when the three girls arrived at the grave yard, and the church looked like a skinny face with a tall pointed hat on, and long staring eyes and open mouth.

Mildred ran right among the graves and began to shout: "I don't believe in ghosts. No-o-o! No-o-o! I don't believe in ghosts!"

Just then they heard a little noise behind one of the tomb stones and they knew that Howard and probably a few friends were hurriedly getting ready to "pull off" something.

The girls flapped their sheets around the tomb stones, and every once in awhile Rose Lee would let out an awful scream.

"Gee whiz!" whispered Dolly. "She doesn't sound human!"

Rose Lee was real pleased to see Dolly getting scared and she was beginning to "There're two of them under it," whispered Mildred. "Keep real quiet. They don't see us yet."

They crouched down and waited very quietly. The ghost waited, too, and pretty soon it sat down.

"They don't know we're here," whispered Mildred. "Wait and I'll creep up and scare them. When you see me pounce, be sure and scream, Rose Lee."

Mildred dropped her white sheet and crept along noiselessly, her khaki suit making her almost invisible. Suddenly she rushed and jumped on the "ghost." At the same time Rose Lee let out the worst shriek you ever heard.

Just at that very moment Mildred knew that she'd made a big mistake. Something heaved up under and began to run. She clung fast and felt something hairy and knew she was on an animal of some kind. Every time Rose Lee screamed, the animal would wheel and start tearing off in a different direction. My! That was some ride!

As it happened Howard and two pals heard Rose Lee's screams and, dressed in ghostly sheets, they were sneaking into the cemetery when a large creature rushed at them, snorting and billowing out white stuff. The boys were ashamed to run away,—maybe they were scared stiff and couldn't run. Anyhow, the thing ran into Howard and then stumbled on a tomb stone and fell down. The boys ran then, believe me! And the thing ran after them. They ran into the preacher's yard next door, and the thing ran right after them. They rushed for the barn, the thing on? I s'pose you've all the cowboys con-

Madge had been staring up at a bird's nest. She was back in the farmyard of her early home surrounded by a noisy flock of chickens to be fed. Her mind returned drearily to brother John's door-yard and these critical, scoffing relatives.

Madge forced a smile. "There were seventeen out last week," she answered evenly.

"Well, now! Pa, you better go over some time. Ray's wife can give you a class to teach."

None of the rest wanted him to be much at Ray's—not till he had made his will, anyhow; but this proposition was hailed by an acclaim of laughter. Grandfather Tybee wasn't known as a Sunday School man by any means. He was supposed to have scant patience with Ray's marrying this shy, domestic girl and settling down to regular farm life.

Madge herself knew better. Like many rough-barked pioneers, grandpa was secretly homesick for more things than chicken. "You're the most like my Lucy of any girl or woman I've seen out here.
Keep your house the most like her, too,"
he had once said approvingly.

The long-mourned Lucy had been the Sunday School sort, too. Ray's whole nature responded to being under such influences again. If only his father could stay with them without stirring up hateful jealousies!

Covetousness leads to sad ill will and plotting. Now Madge was a plotter, too.
Her scheme seemed a crazy one. If sensible, why had nobody thought of it before?
The idea seemed more natural to any other of the family—except her own baby boy!

The Sunday School pupils liked to linger as long as possible. All were used to their teacher's naive questions about what was so familiar to them. "Want I should bring you a young crow? They made good pets, only powerful bothersome," suggested one boy. "Greatest thieves and mischiefs ever you see."

Madge declared she had no yearning for crows nearer than the river timber, which was a crow city of notable population. The lad's disappointment was so clear that she felt tempted to enlist his aid for her wild project but secrecy seemed wiser.

"Anything you want at Joe's store?"
asked Ray at breakfast.

"Are you riding over or going in the little spring wagon?"

"Riding Black Ben. I'm in a hurry."

Her face clouded. "Just ask if he has plenty of eggs and when he expects to have more in. I mean to go myself for the next ones."

Ray grinned understandingly. "You want the job of scrambling them yourself.
All the boys are willing. It's no joke to pack such loads over our road."

"The next eggs aren't to be scrambled," she answered gaily, then rosily repented of the speech, but Ray took no notice.

Both he and the men seemed surprised and teased considerably when Madge claimed there were no eggs to fry only two days after she herself had watchfully brought home a sizeable basketful which Missouri Ike, who drove the light wagon, said she was lots more fussy over than the baby.

"After such solicitude about getting them here, did you accidentally smash the whole lot, or were they bad?" Ray questioned.

"I hope not. Really, Joe couldn't let me have but a few: and all you men had two apiece yesterday morning. Joe expects more next Friday. Send Ike in and buy the store out, if you want to."

"How many of them you going to pack away on us?"

"Not any—I guess," she said, with such an anxious look that he went off laughing but mildly perplexed.

This was not the last myterious disappearance of eggs that Madge shame-facedly acknowledged to have appropriated for a secret purpose. "I—I'll not use any more that way whatever comes of it.
Not this year, anyhow," she promised tearfully.

Ray was horrified to see how his repeated teasing seemed to unnerve her. He let the June morning's program wait till he apologetically comforted her and begged to know if that sore hand of hers wasn't worse than she let on.

"Truly it isn't. I undertook something it looks as if I can't put through; and the disappointment's just about made me sick. That's all," she maintained.

The young husband kept puzzling over it all. The trouble could not be wholly due to her injured hand. Madge had acted queer at least since the big storm soon after that dinner at John's. She came in drenched from one of her rambles but showed no sign of a cold. Then there was that mystery of the wasted eggs. She wasn't a cook that often spoiled food; and eggs cost high here. Ray gloomily supposed he had said too much and made

Madge morbid about that mammoth cake or whatever she kept trying to succeed at.

At noon Madge was her old self, or even more chipper. Ray could not tell whether or not this was wholly due to his father's presence. The two of them had evidently been bantering each other at a great rate. It was a merry mealtime. Yet Madge showed scarcely courteous warmth in urging his father to stay longer.

He must have meant to stay. Anybody could see he didn't half mean that about going on to Dick's before dark. That is, at first. After Madge's ready agreement there was no keeping him.

Ray was hotly indignant; but his wrath died at sight of the quick tears in those big blue eyes. "It was dreadful, I suppose," she whispered. "I'll explain on Sunday. If everything goes well we'll just make your father come back then. If not, I'll tell him as well as you what's made me so queer all these weeks."

This was more mystery; but Ray Tybee had begun to think that no man can fathom the whimsies of a woman. His father had told him that often enough. And it likely would not hurt the old man to ride on to Dick's, though he did look to have failed lately.

Ray had to be off after straying cattle till nearly dark on Saturday. As he rode up be the corral the young ranchman stopped Black Ben and sat as if paralyzed, staring at his father and Madge squatted together on the ground.

"Lan' a'livin'! They be, they do be baby chicks!" yelled Missouri Ike. "Where'd they rain from?"

It was purely an oratorical question. Nobody there yet visioned the day of airplanes. They had no knowledge of incubators and brooders, never dreamed of a time when live baby chicks would be shipped hundreds, even thousands of miles by parcel post.

"Yes, sir! These are real live chicks," affirmed Grandfather Tybee. "Madge here raised them by hand—so far's they've got. You'd never guess how they were hatched."

"I do guess!" yelled Missouri Ike. "'Twas in nests, proper as ever you please. I seed her a comin' way from one, but never suspicioned what for. Say, ma'am, was your hand pecked bad?"

"No. I lost my balance and fell into a patch of cactus just as I claimed. You're right about the crows hatching our chickens, though. I robbed their nests and put in hen's eggs; but all the first lot were chilled by that big storm. Lots of the nests were washed right out of the trees. My other eggs weren't so good, or I miscalculated; and the only way was to keep robbing you boys."

"Everything's justified. And seven's the perfect number. These are the start of great farm flocks," prophesied Grandpa Tybee.

He began to chuckle. "Won't we make those youngsters stare soon's the Sunday School's over tomorrow? You have a sure fire attraction for that hereafter. Maybe I'll even be needed, as Kate said. They don't know I did superintend a school back home. I'd ha' done full better to keep tied to such things; but mebbe 'tain't too late to hitch up again, so long's the Lord's hatching chickens where man looked for none."

The words might seem a jest but his tone told both young listeners of true yearning—and resolve. As he predicted, the little Sunday School thrived remarkably. The things for which a Sunday School stands were built staunchly into the growing young life of the whole sunny valley.

Madge had felt some compunction about cheating the crows even in behalf of Grandpa Tybee; but her act results in mercy to all their tribe. Exasperated as farmers sometimes get at corn field depredations, no one remains resentful long. "You're pests, that's true. Yet crows did us a good turn back in Madge Tybee's day. I guess I can spare you a few quarts of feed in memory of that," is the philosophical remark you hear on any valley farm.

At many a Sunday School feast the old story is retold over heaping platters of fried chicken and great dishes of stewed fowl prepared especially for the old folks and babies. Everybody partakes liberally of the gravy because the very first chicken of that precious seven supplied broth for Grand Tybee and baby Ray when they had whooping cough together in the fall!

"Folks joke about the number of chickens that enter the ministry. Our valley kind certainly are great for getting into the Sunday School," says the present Ray Tybee, another great good man like the honored ones before him. It is also his proud boast that the country Sunday Schools are still growing in good proportion to the flocks of chickens.—Mary S. Stover in Kind Words.

rushed after them. They climbed the rafters and sat there trembling.

After awhile somebody came with a lantern. It was the preacher and his wife. "Yes, those children have been annoying Molly," complained the preacher, going right up to the "ghost."

"Oh, dear!" mourned the preacher's wife. "Look, they've taken one of my best sheets off the line! Isn't that too bad!"

And, bless me, if she didn't lift the white stuff off the ghost, and there stood Molly, the preacher's cow, looking real excited and pepped up, for a cow!

Her master put her into her stall and soothed her kindly. When he had gone the boys slid down from their perch.

"Gee!" said Howard. "I'm shaking yet and besides that cow might have killed Unnecessary Pain!

Nowadays, people take Bayer Aspirin for many little aches and pains, and as often as they encounter any pain.

Why not? It is a proven antidote for pain. It works!

And Bayer Aspirin tablets are utterly harmless. You have the medical profession's word for that; they do not depress the heart.

So, don't let a cold "run its course." Don't wait for a headache to "wear off." Or regard neuralgia, neuritis, or even rheumatism as something you must endure. Only a physician can cope with the cause of such pain, but you can always turn to Bayer in for relief.

Bayer Aspirin is always able, and it always helps. Iarize yourself with its many and avoid a lot of needless suffering.

From the annual report of a Baptist association in Georgia: "Neither by experience, nor observation, nor hearsay does your committees know anything about christian liberality. We have never seen any nor heard of any nor seen any one who has seen any or heard of any. There is a record of a man, nicknamed Barnabas, who sold his land and gave all the money to the church, and of a nameless widow who gave two mites, all her living. But these died nearly two thousand years ago and left no descendants."

MINISTERS' ANNUITY FUND

The Best of Reasons for the Best Pension Plan

1. The Plan does what the Presbyterian Church has always wanted to do and what it has unsuccessfully tried to do since 1717, i. e., provide for the old age and disability of its ministers and missionaries whom the Church has called away from the sources of worldly gain and for whom it has been ordained of God that "they who preach the Gospel should live of the Gospel." The Plan is drawn so as to free the minister from the feeling that he must break his ministerial service in order to insure himself or his family against the uncertainty of provision for his old age or disability.

2. The Plan is economical and will prove effective. Payments by the church and by the minister provide only about forty-six per cent or forty-eight per cent of the cost of the benefits—compound interest on amounts paid by these supplies form fifty-two per cent to fifty-four per cent of the cost. The payment by the minister of two and one-half per cent of his salary in advance each month will bring more system into his personal finance. Many ministers prompted by generous hearts and a desire to set an example to the flock give to every good cause far above their ability. The Church will now encourage them to lay by in store for the days of inactivity by agreeing to pay into the fund $7.50 each time the minister pays $2.50. Prompt monthly payments by the church will bring more system into the church finances. Some churches today are months behind in the payment of salary due their ministers.

3. The Plan is actuarially safe and sound. The amount of research, study, conference and observed experience—extending over a quarter of a century—on which the Fund is built, is far more than appears on the surface. Leading actuaries of America have critically examined the calculations and tables on which the Fund is based and have declared it to be conservative and actuarially sound.

4. The Plan will provide reasonably adequate pensions and the payments by the minister and the church are not too heavy. The ideal pension is one that lets the pensioner down as easily as possible—providing a living as near as possible to that before retirement. Ultimately each minister and missionary will receive thirty-five seventieths or one-half of his average salary for thirty-five years under the Plan. The peak of earning power of our ministers is at age forty-nine. Should the minister retire at age sixty-five he would receive not one-half of his salary at that time—but one-half of the average salary of the thirty-five years including the higher salary period.

5. The Plan provides a just and reasonable pension. While in every case it is based on service, in every case it is also based on the average salary which the minister has received. The larger the salary received the more the minister is asked to contribute to the pension plan of his Church; the larger the salary paid the more the church is asked to contribute to his pension. Increasing the salary automatically increases the pension. Many of our ministers and missionaries are laboring on wholly insufficient salaries. The sin and folly of this will be brought to light in the educational processes now being set in motion to establish the Ministers' Annuity Fund. The pension system cannot correct the evil. The local church and the Presbytery must awake to a keener sense of responsibility and see that the solemn promise made at the installation of the pastor that he shall provide a living that shall keep him "free from worldly cares and avocations" is met.

6. The Plan will care for the whole group of ministers and missionaries and will help all the churches to meet a solemn, serious and binding obligation to provide material things for those who have been called to minister in spiritual things. If the needed accrued liability fund is raised now the plan will never involve the Church in a deficit. The plan will expand with an expanding Church, without placing any additional weight of responsibility upon the Church.

7. The Plan removes the whole pension system of the Church from the uncertain and inadequate ground of benevolent contributions and places it on a sound and firm contributory basis. The cause comes out of the "benevolent" side of the budget into the side of church expense where it belongs. Its purpose is not to minister to need, but to prevent need. Ministerial Relief—from which grants are now made on application of the Presbyteries to ministers or widows who are in need, without other sources of supply, and have not relatives who are able and willing to support them—will have a diminishing place in the budget. Ultimately the Endowment Fund of Ministerial Relief now almost $1,600,000, with the addition of the 1930 "Birthday Offering" of the Woman's Auxiliary will care for necessitous cases. Our Church, for a few years, has been giving larger grants from Relief funds than any other church in America, with one exception, and yet the average amount last year was only $415 a year per family. On account of ever increasing debt this amount is being scaled this year.

8. The Plan conserves all its assets for the servants of the Church.

It is impossible for either church or minister, or both together, to provide similar protection at anything like so low a cost. This is the testimony of leading life insurance men throughout the country. There is, however, no question here of pensions vs. life insurance—if at all possible all our ministers should have some life insurance in addition to participation in the Ministers' Annuity Fund. There is every reason to believe that the minimum benefits can be increased as the reserves accumulate.

9. The Plan will greatly lengthen the years of effective service for capable and able-bodied ministers. It removes from the minister's life the fear of want or dependency in old age and from the church the fear that it may have on its hands and its treasury a minister who, on account of age or disability, is not able to render the service needed for the growth and development of the church. It will also free the sons of the manse from the necessity of turning aside from the ministry to seek more remunerative work that will enable them to support their father and the family. Of the ministers who now serve our Church 13.7 per cent came out of the manse. Of our candidates for the ministry today only 7.2 per cent are the sons of ministers. No one who studies these figures can doubt the cause of this decline. Homes of farmers provide 36.2 per cent of our present ministry, and this has increased to 37.8 per cent of the candidates now in preparation for the ministry.

10. The Plan will develop and extend the confidence, love and cooperation between pastor and people. We hear much of the duty of pastor to people, of pulpit to pew, but we have regarded too lightly the duty of people to pastor, of pew to pulpit. The minister is human—God has not assigned angelic beings to this task. As far as possible he should be freed from material anxieties and worldly entanglements in order that his time, energy and all the powers of his soul may be given to spiritual ministries. In this material world and unspiritual age the demands on him are beyond the comprehension of those who have not shared his experiences. A united, energetic, persistent movement on the part of the people to meet sympathetically and lovingly their God-given responsibility along these lines will clothe the minister with confidence and love and faith and expectancy—so shall we all become more effective "laborers together with God."

Greensboro Dedicates New Edifice

Presbyterian Church in Hand- building Just Finished in New Location

The Presbyterian Church, of N. C., has entered the new building which is the culmination of the hopes and industry of its past. They have a new building a little further from the old location which is encroaching on the site. The new building is valued at $750,000, and presents a picture in architecture. The church was dedicated on Oct. 24, by Drs. E. W. Smith and J. A. Greter, former pastors, preached the services, morning and evening. The auditorium was massed with the exercises were deeply interesting. We expect to publish a cut of the new church. We give below the short history of the church as published in the Standard on the day it was dedicated.

History of First Church

The Presbyterian Church of Greensboro, N. C., was organized Oct. 24, 1853, with twelve members, and a church building.

The first church building was erected on the old site, the site of the cemetery grounds, and was a gift from Jesse H. Lindsay. The Sunday School was organized by William A. Cumming as the first pastor.

The minister of the church was Denny Paisley, who in 1853 moved to his native County of Guilford, where, four years later, he organized a church, and served it for nearly twenty years.

The first pastor installed was Rev. John A. Greter, whose tenure extended from early 1853 to his death, in January, 1853. At the death of his pastorate the membership was 72, and at its close, of whom seven were colored. In 1846 the second church building was erected on the site of the first, with the customary galleries for the colored people, and also a lecture room for the church. Both were of brick.

In 1853, Michael Greter, of Greensboro, Va., the father of the donor, presented the church for communion service. In 1854, Dr. Harper Lindsay gave to the lot north of the lecture room, which was used as a carriage and stable. In 1853, a call was extended to Rev. J. Henry Smith, then pastor of the Halifax Courthouse, Va., of the Samuel Davies Institute, Greensboro, the foremost, but felt constrained to decline. From September 1, 1854, the pulpit was supplied by Rev. L. M. McQueen, of the Presbyterian Church. For the next year, to January 1, 1859, Rev. J. S. Sythe, a native of Ireland, served the church.

On June 6, 1859, a second call was extended to Rev. J. Henry Smith, of the Presbyterian Church of Greensboro, Va. He began his work on April 20, 1859. At the close of his pastorate the resident membership was 120.

Florida Synod Stays With Davidson

President of Davidson Expressed Satisfaction—Has Nothing to Say Present About R. O. T. C.

The Publicity Department of Davidson College announces the decision of Florida Synod to continue its allegiance to Davidson instead of P. C. It also says Dr. W. L. Lingle is not ready to announce his views about military training at Davidson, and had no part in the discussion at Synod of North Carolina when that body appointed a committee to interview the trustees of Davidson and suggest to them the abolition of the R. O. T. C. The announcement follows:

Dr. Lingle had no public statement to make regarding the North Carolina Synod's action against the abolishment of R. O. T. C. at Davidson, saying that when the proper time came he would "express any opinions that I may now have, or may form, on this subject." He wanted it clearly understood that the action of the North Carolina body occurred after he had left Rocky Mount for Richmond, Va., for a committee meeting in the latter city.

The Davidson president was pleased with the Synod of Florida's decisive vote to continue its support and ownership of Davidson College, rather than accept the overtures of the South Carolina and Georgia Synods to support Presbyterian College in South Carolina.

He stated that strong overtures had been made to the Floridians, and that acceptance would have meant a severance of the happy relationship between Davidson and that synod. "After a full discussion," he stated, "the Synod of Florida, by a flattering vote, decided to continue its long-established relationship to Davidson, which," he added, "gives all the friends of the college great pleasure."

Local Committees Are Appointed

South Carolina Presbyterians Lining up for Great Campaign to Begin on November 10— Special Speakers in the Churches

With virtually all the Church Chairmen and associates named and with many of the Church Committees organized, the work of building up the organization for the Presbyterian College $350,000 Program of Deliverance has taken great forward strides during the last week.

The Program received impetus, too, through the exchange of pulpits in most of the Churches in the Synod of South Carolina on Sunday, October 27. Another feature will be the appearance of special speakers, as well as pastors and church chairmen, in many of the churches on November 10, the date of the formal opening of the extensive effort in the campaign.

The South Carolina Presbytery, at its recent meeting in historic Rocky Springs Church, passed a resolution endorsing the Program.

Church chairman named to date include:

South Carolina's Most Urgent Task

Delivering Presbyterian College from Debt the Great Duty of the Church, Says Dr. DuBose

There is no more urgent duty than the Presbyterian College $350,000 Program of Deliverance now confronting the Presbyterians of South Carolina, declares Rev. Dr. Henry Wade DuBose, pastor of First Church, Spartanburg, in a statement issued recently.

Dr. DuBose's statement was made in connection with the waging of this campaign to raise funds needed to clear away the P. C. debt, and thus to insure the receipt of conditional endowment gifts, as well as assuring the retention by the college of its "A Grade" standing and membership in the Southern Association of Colleges.

Says Dr. DuBose:

"The campaign to deliver Presbyterian College from debt will test the mettle and church loyalty of us all. I think it will do more than that. It will determine whether or not the Presbyterians of South Carolina are intelligently concerned about the future leadership of the Church.

"Our college at Clinton is the cornerstone of Presbyterian Education for an important group of Southeastern states. Without this college as a foundation, Columbia Seminary would be seriously handicapped. Without Columbia Seminary, Presbyterianism would be sorely handicapped from South Carolina to Louisiana.

"But this is not half of the matter. There are imperative reasons why strong Christian colleges should be maintained in our land today. Their influence may be the decisive factor in the battle against secularism and agnosticism.

"Presbyterian College rests on splendid foundations. It has a magnificent campus and group of buildings, an admirable faculty, a situation most favorable in a wonderfully loyal community. Once delivered from this burdensome debt, the college is assured of sufficient endowment to guarantee its future security and progress.

"As I see it, we have no duty more urgent, we have no opportunity more inviting than that afforded us by this campaign. It is a big undertaking, and its success depends upon sacrificial loyalty and Synod-wide co-operation."

Many Students at Moody Institute

The fall term at The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago has opened with the largest enrollment in both the day and evening schools that has been recorded for several years. For the day school all dormitory rooms are assigned, and the management has been obliged to secure more than thirty rooms outside. The evening school reports 114 more students than on the corresponding date of last year.

Additions to the faculty, the launching of the enlarged music course, and various other advances in curricula promise much for a highly successful term of study and training.

Opening Of New Seminary

Delayed Account of Westminster Sem- inary Which Began its Work in September in Philadelphia

The following account is from the New York Times of September 25:

Westminster Theological Seminary, organized as a protest against the administrative policy at Princeton Seminary, was opened with the assurance that a campaign would be started soon to raise $1,000,000 to buy a site and erect a permanent home for the institution.

The opening was heralded at the exercises in Witherspoon Hall as "the beginning of a great movement to resist and, if possible, overcome the tendency toward Modernism," and one which would be "a reformation like that of the sixteenth century, with a return to common honesty and common sense."

Announcement of the campaign for funds was made by Fred M. Paist of Philadelphia, chairman of the executive committee. He said the school would operate on a present budget of $65,000 in its temporary quarters, and that most of this sum had been obtained.

Of fifty students enrolled for the opening of classes, twenty are former students of Princeton Seminary. The organizers of the new seminary broke away from Princeton after the last Presbyterian General Assembly approved the plan for a single board of control there.

Dr. J. Gresham Machen, a member of the new seminary faculty and formerly of Princeton, declared that several members of the new board of control at Princeton had signed the Auburn affirmation "which makes essential Christian doctrines no longer necessary."

"Westminster Theological Seminary is intended to continue unimpaired that tradition of unswerving loyalty to the Bible and to the Reformed Faith which was destroyed at Princeton by the action of the last General Assembly in reorganizing Princeton Seminary," Dr. Machen said.

Three great convictions may be distinguished as the convictions upon which Westminster Seminary stands:

"First, the Christian religion, as it is set forth in its grand consistency in the Confession of Faith of the Presbyterian Church, is true.

"Second, the Christian religion welcomes, and is capable of, a scholarly defense.

"Third, the Christian religion must be proclaimed, without fear or favor, and in clear opposition to whatever opposes it, whether within or without the Church, as the only way of salvation for lost mankind.

"We are not devoted to the goddess of the world nor to the goddess of a worldly Church," Dr. Machen continued. "We are devoted to an unpopular cause, the cause of Jesus Christ, who is being increasingly deserted and belittled by the visible Church.

"Most seminaries regard not the Bible alone but the general phenomena of religion as their field for study in order to arrive at a type of religious experience best suited for the man of the day."

Arkansas College In Its 58th Year

Arkansas College, Batesville, Ark., began its fifty-eighth year on September 20, under most favorable auspices. The attendance of students is but slightly under that of the opening days of last year and more continue to come, indicating an attendance of about two hundred in college classes alone. The Senior Class numbers approximately thirty members, and is of excellent quality. There is a well-selected freshman class of seventy. Significant developments are an increase in the number of men attending, and the full attendance upon the special departments.

The faculty is completed with the return after a year's leave for graduate study of Professor J. B. Daffin, of the Science Department and Professor J. Q. Wolf, of the Chair of English, and with the addition of two new members, Miss Anne King Gregorie, Ph.D., in the Chair of History, and Miss Tabitha Cobb, M.A., in Biology.

The address at the opening was delivered by Rev. H. K. King, of Batesville, and the annual sermon was preached on September 22 by Rev. Julian S. Sleeper, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Texarkana.

The city of Batesville has completed subscriptions to the amount of $15,000, her share of the $75,000 emergency fund authorized by the Synod of Arkansas, and the special committee of Synod is now actively engaged in raising the balance from churches and individuals, with encouraging success.

The spirit of faculty, student body and community is very fine and the outlook for an excellent year was never more promising.

the present day. It is the Holy Scripture and not the human phenomena, however, with which we are concerned. Christianity flourishes not in the obscurantist dogma but in the full light of day."

Dr. Machen declared that the study of Hebrew and Greek would be stressed at the seminary because "to understand the Bible one must understand the language in which the Bible is written."

The Rev. Walter D. Buchanan, pastor of Broadway Presbyterian Church in New York City and a leader of the contest against Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick in the New York Presbytery, read a statement drawn up by a committee representing friends of Westminster, saying that the establishment of the seminary marked the beginning of a movement to resist and if possible overcome the tendency to modernism.

Signed by himself and the Rev. Walter F. MacMillan of Philadelphia, and the Rev. Alexander Allison of Bridgeport, Pa., the statement declared the seminary's belief in the Bible as the revelation of God, in the Virgin Birth, the death, resurrection, ascension and the second coming of Christ.

The Rev. Dr. Charles Schall, of the Wayne Presbyterian Church, presided and the Rev. Dr. Robert Dick Wilson, senior faculty member and also a Princeton dissenter, welcomed the students.

The seminary building provides an assembly room, recitation rooms, dining hall and library, but the students will have rooms elsewhere.

The faculty was announced as follows:

The Rev. Robert Dick Wilson, Professor of Semitic Philology and Old Testament Criticism; the Rev. J. Gresham Machen, Professor of New Testament; the Rev. Oswald T. Allis, Professor of Old Testament History and Exegesis; the Rev. Cornelius Van Til, Professor of Apologetics; the Rev. R. B. Kuiper, Professor of Systematic Theology; the Rev. Paul Woolley, Instructor in Church History, and the members numbered 102 white, and 15 colored.

In the summer of 1868 twenty-three colored members, of their own accord, withdrew to form the St. James Presbyterian Colored Church, of Greensboro, in connection with the Northern Presbyterian Assembly.

On December 15, 1875, at the pastor's initiative, the Evelyn Houston Missionary Society was organized, serving for a long period as a Missionary Aid Society, the name changing in the course of years to the Women's Home and Foreign Mission Society.

In 1886, Rev. Egbert W. Smith, son of the pastor, was elected Junior Pastor. On October 12, 1887, eighty members residing in South Greensboro, being granted letters of dismission, were organized into the Westminster Presbyterian Church, Rev. Egbert W. Smith being the first pastor.

In 1889 the congregation began the erection of a new church building. The church was completed three years later, at a cost of $23,000, and was first used for public worship on Sunday, June 26, 1892.

In the fall of 1893 the church called Rev. Egbert W. Smith to be co-pastor with his father.

In the summer of 1897 the church began its work in Western North Carolina, sending Rev. E. E. Gillespie to Ashe County as its first representative. On November 22, 1897, the beloved senior pastor was called to his reward, in the 78th year of his age, and the 39th of his pastorate.

On December 6, 1903, the J. Henry Smith Memorial building was dedicated.

On April 29, 1904, a new Presbyterian Church was organized in North Greensboro. Eleven members from the mother church joined at the organization. In August this church entered its new building at the corner of Carolina Street and Bessemer Avenue, where the First Church pastor held Sabbath afternoon services, till on April 1, 1904, Rev. J. W. Goodman became the first pastor of the Bessemer Avenue Presbyterian Church, (Church-by-the-Side-of-the-Road).

In September, 1905, the contract was given to erect in West Greensboro on the corner of Mendenhall and Walker Avenue, a fourth Presbyterian Church, (Church of the Covenant).

On November 12, 1905, Dr. Egbert W. Smith resigned the pastorate to accept a call to the Second Presbyterian Church of Louisville, Ky. From January, 1906, until December 15th of that year, the church was without a pastor, but was regularly supplied by visiting ministers.

On October 28, 1906 a call was extended to the Rev. Melton C. Clark, pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Florence, S. C. He began his ministry on December 15, 1906.

In July, 1914, in connection with the Westminster Church and the Church of the Covenant congregations, steps were taken to organize a mission work at Glenwood.

In January, 1916, a Sabbath School was organized among the colored people in East Greensboro, under the direction of Elder L. Richardson, and Deacon D. R. Aiken.

In March, 1916, Dr. Clark accepted a call to become the pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church of Charleston, S. C.

Rev. J. G. Walker was selected in April, 1916, as stated supply for the Bessemer Avenue Church, and superintendent of young people's work in the congregation of the First Church.

On June 11, 1916, a call was extended to Rev. Chas. F. Myers, of Charleston, W. Va. Dr. Myers entered upon his duties September 11, 1916.

DEVOTIONAL

MIDNIGHT AND MORNING

Out of my heart a stream of blood is oozing!

It is my Gethesmane.

Blood breaks ferociously, without my choosing,

Through furrowed brow of agitation—Turbulent, uncheckable contemplation.

It must be divinity.

Were it less potent I know a soul that's suffering

In the dark of olive trees

Who would like super-man be quick recovering,

Though the poniard be sharp as sword Damascus

And as depthless in reach as ray of solar-sheen,

And up-springing from his knees.

But prostrate, impotent, I lie awaiting
In my dark Gethsemane!

No earthly source of power is now awaiting

For quenching this killing flow incarnadine

Or e'en to cover up the appalling scene—

Takes heaven's divinity.

Out of my heart a flood of light is beaming.

It is my Mount Olivet.

Light breaks gloriously, without my dreaming,

Through placid brow of satisfaction—Quiescent, dissipated all distraction.

'Tis darkling man's last sunset.

On sorrow's height there was a great awaking

In the dawn of Calvary

Which plucked the thorns and quenched the flow abreaking

From my rigorously wrung and turbulent soul

And made me blaze fore'er in part and whole—

A darkless day of vict'ry.

And now, vibrantly winged with hope, awaiting

My moment of destiny

A myriad of miracle forces are creating

Some passionate insatiable desire

For Alpine Edelweiss which grows up higher.

'Tis heaven's divinity.

THE IMP OF DISCOURAGEMENT

This splendid little story, which is quoted from an old clipping of unknown origin, points its moral so plainly that there is nothing we need to say to simplify the lesson it teaches:

In the Street of Life, walking in the darkness of the shadows, hungry old Satan was out hunting with his dogs, the little imps of human weakness. A man came walking down the street. Satan said to the little imp, scowling with a bitter face: "Go, get him for me!"

Quickly the little imp crossed the street, silently and lightly hopped to the man's shoulder. In his ear he whispered, "You are discouraged."

"No," said the man, "I am not discouraged."

"You are discouraged!"

This time the man replied, "I do not think I am."

Louder and more decidedly the little imp repeated, "I tell you, you are discouraged."

The man dropped his head and murmured: "Well, I suppose I am."

The imp, darting back to Satan, said proudly: "I've got him; he is discouraged."

Another man passed. Again old Satan said: "Get him for me!"

The proud little demon of discouragement repeated the tactics. The first time he said: "You are discouraged," the man replied emphatically, "No!" The second time the man replied, "I tell you I am not discouraged!" The third time he said, "You lie! I am not discouraged." And he walked down the street, his going toward the light.

The imp of discouragement his master, crestfallen. "I got him," he retorted. "Three times he was discouraged. The first time he called me a liar, and that was all."—Exchange.

PRESBYTERY OF MECKLENBURG

At the meeting of this, the largest Presbyterian Southern Church met in the Brainin Church, near Rockingham, N. C.

To measure the size of a place, this is a fair measure, but when measured by the hearty response given us, this is a great place.

The pastor down to the humblest member were welcomed, and when the lunch hour there was proof in abundance that we were anxious to reach our heart, the route of the tradition says is the stomach; for rarely have we seen a more bountiful or better reception that which met our eyes when we entered in that upper hall.

It would fail us if we tried to give details of the fare. Suffice it to say that our preachers, whose names we shall not mention and who, on previous occasions of a similar nature, had come off with flying colors. Their actions, silently confessed that they would hold no more, though they left almost as much as they had destroyed.

At the same time, they ate, and were conquered.

Brother M. Stribling, of Rockingham, was elected Moderator by acclamation, and a fine report he made.

Brother played one quality that is said to be the mark of a good Moderator, he decided the matter and then stood his ground firmly.

Brother one said once that in moderating a meeting it is better to stand by a wrong decision than to waver, because the value of a moderator lies in his ability to keep order, and he will throw a meeting into disorder more quickly than to decide as if in doubt.

Brother H. Frazer preached a great sermon and says does. It was clear, evangelical and full of unction.

Brother all there was an absence of the "crescendo and diminuendo" in the delivery of the prayer so popular with some of our best preachers, who foolishly imagine that such a prayer adds to the solemnity of the occasion.

Brother S. J. Hood, of the A. R. P. Church came to Philadelphia Church.

Brother always glad to mix these stalwart preachers with our men, because they are true to the old faith, and their example will have a conservative effect upon our men who may be tempted to wander.

Brother Hood goes to the second largest of our Presbyterian churches, the membership being 727 in the Brainin Creek and 418 for Philadelphia. In accordance with the request of the Assembly's resolution of Forty-Four, a special hour was set for Evangelism, at which time Thomas Hood of Charlotte, gave one of the most interesting addresses on "Soul-Saving" it has ever been our fortune to hear.

Brother the presbyterial Sermon" was preached by Rev. C. H. Little, of Sharon Church, and the "Soul-Saving" was presented by Dr. Lynn Hood, assisted by W. D. Loy, of Steele Creek Church and J. E. McLaughlin, of Hamlet, N. C.

Rev. C. G. Long, in the absence of Dr. Gammon, chairman of Foreign Missions, presented the report on that work, and Dr. Lacy Moffett, of China, delivered an address on the work in that land.

We had to leave before this address, but we understand that it was one of the great addresses of the meeting.

We regret that we were forced to miss not only this address, but also the Presbyterial Sermon by Rev. C. H. Little.

POSTURE IN PRAYER

Whether it is one of the essentials of religion or not, posture in prayer has always occupied an important place in worship.

There was a time, in the past, when you could spot the religious leaning of a worshipper by the position he assumed in prayer.

Our Methodist brethren made a specialty of kneeling, while his blue-stocking brother could be spotted by the fact that he always stood in prayer.

A correspondent calls our attention to the growing disregard of this Presbyterian custom and the rapid drift to the Methodist custom of not standing.

It seems that he has been on a visit to one of our Seminaries, and to his surprise he found that the students during prayers at chapel exercises sat still with inclined heads, but that all stood reverently during the prayer service with which each recitation opened.

He wishes some expression of opinion from us, explaining why this difference of posture, not only in our Seminaries, whereby the old Presbyterian standing has given place to bowed heads but also in our churches.

Our first remark would be that these apprentice preachers are by no means sinners above all the Galileans because of the way they do things. They have their followers in all our Churches, to such an extent that any one standing during prayer is the exception rather than the rule, and whoever stands in some of our churches, makes himself to that extent conspicuous.

In considering then the question of posture in prayer there are two facts that stand out clearly.

In the first place, our Presbyterian forbears always stood in prayer, contending that such was the Scripture attitude.

The other fact is that in this age standing in prayer is one of the lost arts.

Presbyterians rarely stand in prayer, but bow over the back of the pew in front.

This wide departure from a custom hallowed by past memories and sweet associations must have some adequate cause to be so universally adopted and followed.

We believe that the answer can be found in the apparent lack of reverence for God, that is characteristic of this age.

We no longer approach Him, with godly awe, realizing that He is a great King in whose eyes the very heavens are unclean.

Just as no one would think of sitting in the presence of royalty, so the right conception of God's majesty should cause us to rise and stand humbly in His presence.

This is an irreverent age in which we live. We have lost the right conception of God's greatness. We rush heedlessly into his presence, as if He were a mere man like ourselves.

Then again, another reason is to be found in the fact that we are an ease-loving people. We love to move along the line of the least resistance. We cannot understand why in our prayer, we should be forced to assume an attitude that impresses us as a penance.

Thus far in our quest for a reason for departing from old ways, we have confined ourselves to the pew, but, as is generally the case, there are faults on either side.

The pulpit is also a sinner.

When a man, no matter how devout, is invited to join the preacher, as he leads in prayer, he is apt to recall past experience and remember that this leader rushes before God in prayer with little preparation and that he is going to wander over the universe, from alpha to omega, and that he is going to repeat the same thought in different words, and take ten minutes in which to do it, he is very apt to keep his seat.

We must confess that while we believe in Calvinism with all our heart and hold to the perseverance of the saints, but when faced by a long prayer, we fall from grace, into the very meshes of Arminianism.

If that be treason, then our readers may make the most of it.

RACE SUPREMACY

The white race dominates the world, and we are proud of the fact, and can see no sign of any other condition.

"Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall," says the Apostle to the Corinthians—and it will be wise for the white race to take heed, because in time it will become a serious problem for those of us who belong to the dominant race.

Let us keep in mind these facts, that the white race numbers 600,000,000; the black race 700,000,000; the brown race 400,000,000.

According to these figures the white race numbers less than one third of the human race, so that speaking numerically a combination of the yellow, brown and black races could easily wipe us from the face of the globe, matching man for man.

Off-setting this numerical superiority, the white race commands nine-tenths of the land and is supreme on the sea.

When you add to these advantages the fact that they stand first in intelligence, in inventive genius and in what is now known as "Superiority Complex," you can easily see that under ordinary circumstances, we can easily hold our dominant position, and therefore we need feel no concern about the future.

The points in our favor, just enumerated, however, are not necessarily conclusive of our supremacy.

The world is advancing along every line, and nations that we once regarded as semi-barbarous now are able to cope with the most advanced, notably Japan, as shown now in the League of Nations.

As the world advances in material development, especially in the art of war, it is conceivable that these rude people of the yellow, black and brown races may become the equals of the white races, especially in the art of war.

All that seems needed to bring this about is that there should be developed among them the same race consciousness that now possesses the white race.

Any student of the history of the present day knows that in China, Japan, Egypt and India there has been a remarkable revival of this same race consciousness, and every indication points to an assertion of their national rights, and a demand that their equality with other nations be recognized.

Suppose that this threat becomes an actuality, and the white race faces a combination of the yellow, brown and black races with their teeming millions, 1,300,000,000 against 600,000,000.

The mind is staggered when it contemplates the awful horrors of such a contingency.

The pressing question is, What are we to do to meet this possible situation?

No effort of man will avert the danger. Only the Almighty can save the human race, and the only salvation lies in the spread of the Gospel among this host of possible enemies, and the only weapon we have with which to meet them is the Bible and its message.

We must evangelize these races of varied colors, and let them know that we are followers of the Prince of Peace.

What greater incentive can we have to evangelize the world than the thought that by so doing, we not only carry out the plans of our Lord, but that we also are doing much to protect our homes and loved ones?

THE CHURCH AN ORGANISM

"Now There Are Diversities of Gifts, But the Same Spirit." I Cor. 12:4

Rev. William Hooper Adams

Sometime ago I had the privilege of visiting the General Electric Works, at Schenectady, N. Y., which was founded by Thomas Edison. As I passed from building to building, and saw its nine thousand operatives, producing electrical apparatus from giant motors and dynamos to pigmy fuses for arc-lights for export to every country in the world, the work of the different workmen varying in fineness and bringing different rewards, all working in perfect harmony because in obedience to one organizing and directing will, I could not help thinking of a God governing a world through law, assigning to each individual a mission to execute and, of His own choice, allowing the success of the whole to depend upon the performance by the individual of his full duty.

What I saw in Schenectady was but one revelation of the will of God seen everywhere. It reveals a law which is fundamental in the philosophical and scientific doctrines of the age. We have read an ancient statement of this law in our Bible lesson this morning and I want to call your attention to the working of the same law in other departments than Christianity.

Biology's Lesson on Organization

We derived the name for the law naturally from Biology, the science of life, the science which concerns itself with all things that live, or to use the scientific name, with organisms, and here the doctrine on law is termed the Organic Theory.

Biology begins with the lowest forms of life, with shell-fish, for instance. It discovers that each shell-fish has a few organs; that is, parts formed by use and for doing something. These organs increase their efficiency by work or become useless, if long disused. In the light of these facts, we arrive at a more complete definition of an organism. An organism is something endowed with life in which every organ is at once end and means to every other organ.

This definition becomes more intelligible when we pass from shell-fish to the consideration of organisms of a higher order; horses, for instance. A horse has a large number of clearly defined organs: legs, a heart, a nervous system, etc., each of which performs a distinct function and if this function is permanently neglected, the animal is either crippled or dies. One point more, before we leave Biology. On the lowest levels of life, the individuals of a species are almost identical. As we ascend, we find the individuals differing more among themselves, some developing in one direction, others in another, or to use another scientific term, their organs become differentiated, acquiring new powers according as new demands are made upon them. On the lowest plane even scientists are perplexed as to how organisms should be classified, whether they belong to this genus or that, to this species or to that, sometimes even whether they are animals or plants because of the indistinctiveness of their organs. But higher up this difficulty ceases, and you need not be a scientist to distinguish between a horse and a cow, because each has well-distinguished organs and functions.

Organisms in Sociology

Parallels to these facts may be discovered in Sociology, the science of human society. The organic theory is found to be the key to many difficulties here. With its aid Herbert Spencer clearly set forth the dependent relations sustained by the individual citizens to the state and the dependence of the state upon the citizens who comprise it. On the lowest planes here, as in Biology, the individuals are much alike. The ordinary negroes in our Southland are so much alike, mentally and physically, that highly educated Northerners frequently have the greatest difficulty to distinguish one from another. Among Anglo-Saxon peoples, on the contrary, there is no such difficulty, for every man appears quite distinct in mind and body from every other man; each has an individuality of his own; each his own personality. The higher each man's personality becomes, the more clear-cut his traits and opinions; and the more highly society is organized the more dependent we are upon each other. Our ancestors could produce and prepare their own food; make their own clothing and everything else that their simple wants demanded. Yet, who prepares the various articles of our own clothing? Who supplies us with fuel? We live by unanimous consent.

This organic principle of the dependence of the parts upon the whole, or of the whole upon the parts, is found working in political organisms, notably the great American Republic. The Theory of States Rights, at least the extreme view of this theory, asserted the opposite of this Organic Theory. It was in virtue of the States Rights Theory that Eleven States seceded in 1861. This theory held that the states were members merely of a business co-partnership which might be dissolved when sufficient cause should be shown. A majority of the formers of the Constitution, beyond doubt, held this view. Yet events proved that the states of the Union were woven together by bonds more exacting than those of a co-partnership, even by a law which makes every part necessary to the existence of the whole.

Economic Organisms

One more illustration. Economics, the science of wealth, has developed a Doctrine called the Division of Labor. This is what I saw applied with such wonderful success in Schenectady. To each operative is assigned a small but definite work. In some large shoe factories it takes sixty-four men to make a shoe, which one man made in former times. One operative now devotes his entire attention to the making of heels, another to shoe tacks, etc. If the heel-makers strike, the work of the entire factory comes to a standstill, as frequently occurs. No factory can exist unless some capitalist or group of capitalists work for the factory with the mind as the operatives do with their hands. Labor troubles arise whenever workers with hands fail to recognize the toil of workers with heads, or conversely. Each class is essential to the well-being of all.

The Church and the Law of Organisms

Let us now consider the organization of Christian Society in the light of these principles. We shall see that the Apostle was elaborating and applying to the case of the Corinthian church the same law of organisms which is the foundation of so much secular thought today. The conception of a Christian church which Paul gives is but the supreme expression of a law universally existing and which is becoming universally recognized.

The chapter which I have read to you is a part of the first epistle which Paul addressed to the church at Corinth. This city was at this time the commercial and political capital of Greece, even as Athens was its intellectual capital. Built on an isthmus which connects northern and southern Greece and which divides two seas, and with a capacious harbor upon either sea, Corinth was the natural meeting place of traders from all countries on the Mediterranean. With commerce came wealth and with wealth art and literature. With the insight of a general Paul had seized upon the city as a strategic point, for the advance westward of the Christian forces. A church had been gathered and like many another city church it was composed of people from all walks of life, as it should, inasmuch as the Spirit of Christ recognizes only one difference—a difference of attitude toward God. In the Corinthian church there were many poor artisans along with some wealthy and highly educated citizens. These social differences gave rise to jealousies and factions. The cause of rivalry arose from differences respecting teachers, one party acknowledged the leadership of Peter, another that of Paul, another that of Apollos. A more lingering cause of factions was found in a lack of appreciation of one member for the ability of another. Those endowed with rare gifts of mind despised those in inferior gifts and the latter in turn resented the contempt. Paul attempts to heal the wounds which Christian had inflicted upon Christian and harmonize once for all the discordant elements, by pleading for unity of spirit showing how necessary one member is to the whole.

The Church the Body of Christ

The illustration which Paul uses to exhibit the nature of Christian Society is the organic one which we have discovered already in Biology, Sociology, Political Science and Economics. The Christian church is the Body of Christ, Christ is the head. Just as life is necessary to the very existence of the body, and the usefulness of its parts, so the possession of the Spirit of Christ is vital to the Christian Church. Without it the church may have a highly educated ministry, a splendid ritual, wealth and art, and yet be dead and the world soon recognizes that fact. The ideal Christian Church is composed of a membership from every plane and occupation of life, united in spirit by love to Christ, and with each of its members honoring every other not for the possession of gifts, rich or poor, but for whole-hearted, ungrudging use of such talents in the service of Christ.

Service and Diversity

The serviceability of the Church to the world in every age depends upon the diversity of its membership. A poor church, like an organism on a low level, has few organs and poorly defined functions. A rich church, like an organism of a high order, has many organs, each of a distinct kind and with a definite work to do. The church of Christ has always been able to use an artist with his brush or a sculptor with his chisel to convey spiritual truth to artistic minds not yet Christian. The Christian farmer, merchant, or artisan, can so perform his work as unto the Lord that unbelievers may take notice of him that he has been with Jesus.

It is the Church's duty to utilize these talents. Macaulay has noted a contrast between the treatment accorded to sects arising within her by the Church of Rome from that accorded by the Church of England, and the comparison has been greatly to the advantage of the worldly wisdom of the Roman Catholics. Time after time a leader has arisen among the Roman Catholics, like Francis of Assisi, or Dominic, or Loyola, with an passionate affection for some disciple or doctrine underestimated by that Church. Rome has seldom lacked the worldly wisdom of the serpent however little she may have of the artlessness of the dove and she has actually formed the leader and his followers into a monastic order, as she formed the Franciscans when Francis preached poverty and benevolence. She cherished the sect and if it had any heresy lurking in it she gently purged it and utilized the new movement for her own ends. The Anglican Church, less wise in this particular, drove out the Wesleyan associates to form the Methodist Church.

One member of the church should never do another. Some of the most useful members are the consecrated toilers who spend and are spent in the master's cause, yet no herald trumpets their praise. To be compared to the heart in the body, without which the body cannot live, though the body can live without and even portions of the brain. So the Church can do so without the multitude of consecrated one-talented men and women.

This, then, is the most gloriously personal message world has heard. God has assigned to each man and woman a part in the perfecting of this universal fulfilling of God's plan of salvation. God will do this purpose without your aid. The most wretched into which a human being may fall is one of utter uselessness. But to feel one's self in tune with the master's purpose, to feel that I am working in my life toward that "far-off divine event to which the Creation moves" and for which it groans, this is the joy, this renews my energies.

Your every act, when you are in your daily work, catch something of the radiance which this message upon honest toil. A piston or a crank may be awkward, useless thing in itself. It takes on its value when it is put into position with the other members of the Household duties, the daily routine of business, drudgery when viewed alone, they become divinely viewed as part of a universal divine program. Use your gifts, then, through exercise, fully consecrated to God.

A renowned musical conductor was engaged to direct an orchestra of several hundred pieces in New York. A violinist became despondent and thinking that his help, ceased to play. But the master's ear noticed the lacking note in the otherwise complete harmony, stopped the others to let the one player begin a new part. An infinite Master of Harmony needs the music of every member to round out the harmony of this plan.

WHAT IS ASSEMBLY'S MISSION

Rev. B. C. Bell, D.D.

Superintendent Home Missions
Red River Presbytery

It is an indispensable, vital, force which gathers the people of the world and from there goes down through all the points of our Home Church to touch and stimulate the points and destitute parts of our beloved Southland. It is that power which completes and clinches the work of all subordinate Home Mission bodies. It is the first step in the journey, or as our Savior says, the first mile.

According to this figure it is the second mile which makes the first mile good. Otherwise it would be no good. So there are thousands of Home Missions tasks in this country, which abundantly illustrate the need of the second mile. What Home Mission worker has not experienced it! After doing all that he can, and using all the force he can possibly command, he still comes short of the victory. Then in his extremity all that he has done is in vain, he calls upon the Home Mission Committee and the work is completed. That is the second mile.

This second mile business may be illustrated by the department of our Home Mission history and the body but God can tell how it has worked. It can never fully be known on earth. There are now standing doing fine work, which but for the second mile, might be standing roofless. There are men standing on the farflung battle line, pointing the way which might have been pointless but for this second mile. There are missions lighting up dark places of the country, whose light would have gone out but for the second mile. There are whole Presbyteries vigorous working forces doing a powerful work which might have been shriveled up by now. There are lists carrying the glad tidings far and wide, not have made the trip, but for this second mile. No, the Assembly's Home Mission Committee made brick without straw, but she has made the same. She could have done far more, but she is thankful for what she has done. The influence of her hands are felt in every Synod and Presbytery in all the seventeen states in which our church is working. The fruits of her labors are felt today in the world. There are missionaries in heathen lands who have covered and turned thither by Home Missions.

After twenty-five years of association with the Home Mission task in all its relations as worker, evangelist, and superintendent, I have convicted myself that the Assembly's Home Missions lie at the very foundation of all our work both at home and abroad. It is to limit her resources. It is suicidal to let her resources diminish. Her history abundantly justifies her confidence, and her opportunity is now limited only by her resources. We have some wise and far-seeing men, and a great retinue of faithful men following in her train.

ASSEMBLY'S HOME MISSIONS?

Homer McMillan

Missionary agency seeking the gifts of Christian to be able to justify its appeal by the service to the individual, the community, the nation and

Each year is asked to give $840.00 to the Assembly's Home Missions. Many reasons can justify this contribution. Among them are the Decrease of the number of people to whom Assembly's Home Missions ministers.

At hand to show that Assembly's Home Missions the gospel to 1,020 communities, and that is aided by this Committee touch directly or approximately one million people each year. Reaching influence of Assembly's Home Missions be better understood when it is known that one-fourth of the churches on the Assembly's roll by the Assembly's Committee. There are 28 missions made possible by the Assembly's help. In all are 3,500 pupils, every one of whom means a family. Vast multitudes are reached by the workers who labor in the Home Mission areas of the world.

Decrease of the types and kinds of people to which Assembly's Home Missions ministers.

The committee serves all classes of people, regardless of race or condition. In order to do its work, it works in twelve different languages every day. The committee maintains churches or schools or missionary born Americans,—mountain people, Indians,—for Italians, French, Mexicans, Cubans, Slavians, Hungarians, Syrians, Jews and Chinese. It is said in truth that the work of Assembly's Home Missions is a Pentecostal service in which every man hears the gospel in his own tongue. The ministry of 663 Home Missionaries,—pastors, teachers, doctors, nurses and counselors,—the blind receive their sight, and the lepers are cleansed and the deaf hear; the lame are made alive, and the poor have the gospel preached to them.

The Assembly's Home Missions is the agency which uses the resources of the whole church and in which the need is greatest.

Presbyteries were equally strong this service was necessary. Every Presbytery would be able to carry on its own Home Mission need, but all Presbyteries are not equally strong and not equally awake to their responsibilities and obligations. In the weaker Presbyteries we found the largest number of underprivileged people needing missionary service.

These Presbyteries in the Home Mission areas of the world in addition to the work of the underprivileged, receive assistance in some form from the Assembly's Home Missions Committee. Without the supplement from the Assembly 528 churches and 245 outposts and preaching points which these pastors visit, would be deprived of the ministry of the Presbyterian Church.

4. Because Assembly's Home Missions is the chief agency of denominational growth and represents the advance line in every field of the Church.

The progress of God's Kingdom is in the number of churches that are organized and in the number of men, women and children that are won to faith in Jesus Christ. It is said that 90 per cent of the Presbyterian churches in the United States have been helped at some time in some way by Home Missions.

During the last church year, 25 churches and 58 Sunday Schools were organized by Assembly aid, and 5,188 persons were added to the church upon profession of faith; 12 churches were brought to self-support, and 13 churches were assisted by a small loan or a small donation in erecting houses of worship.

This is the work that measures the church's progress and multiplies its resources for advance in the Home and Foreign field.

5. Because Assembly's Home Missions promotes the institutions necessary to make and keep our nation Christian.

The primary objective of Home Missions is a saved man in a saved home, living in a saved community. The only effective method of saving a community is through the individual who has been saved by personal faith in Jesus Christ. Redeemed communities are possible only through redeemed persons.

Wherever the Home Missionary goes men are won to faith in Christ, the church is established, the home is protected, the school is encouraged, and the Sabbath is preserved. Eliminate from our nation's life these uplifting and conserving agencies, which the Home Missionary carries into the waste places and barbarism and degradation will engulf our land.

These are some of the reasons why Christian men and women are asked to contribute to Assembly's Home Missions, not only gifts of money, but gifts of prayer, of love, and of life itself.

HARVESTING, FOOTBALL, AND THE ORPHANAGE

This is Monday, October 21, 1929. It is a rainy day, but who cares! Because last week was as near a perfect one for Barium Springs as it could be possible to have, with a depleted treasury. The weather was pretty all week; dry and clear, so that the farm group made hay and sowed wheat until even Mr. Cavin smiled. We would hate to say just how many tons of hay this last lot adds up. Any how, this farm group has made enough hay to feed a hundred and twenty head of cattle and eleven mules through the winter.

The truck farm group dug eight hundred and sixty bushels of sweet potatoes—and the end is not yet! Just imagine what a thousand bushels of sweet potatoes will do after our kitchen group works on them a little bit.

From way down on the McDonald farm, comes notice of eighteen bales of cotton picked during the week. Scat! Mr. Boll Weevil!

Mr. Grier and the shop gang got in a good week's work and also received news that the boiler has been shipped that will insure our staying warm this winter.

Reports for the second month of school have been out, and checked up, and while there are still a few vacancies on the honor roll and merit roll, the number of failures have been materially decreased. Everybody seems to be in a good humor after checking over these reports. Even Mr. O'Kelly is wearing a smile.

We would have been just a little bit suspicious of these reports had they come out later than they did. Mr. O'Kelly, being an alumnus of the University of Georgia, the two victories for his football team may have affected his disposition to such an extent that he would have been unable to see a mistake on the examination papers. However, monthly tests were held before either of these games were played.

The Junior-Senior entertainment consisting of a Treasurer Hunt, and Weenie Roast which took place Saturday night, October 12, was very much enjoyed.

The Treasurer Hunt ended up in a meadow about a mile from Barium, where the most delightful things to eat possible, were served.

Those who like football (and that numbers about 99 per cent of Barium Springs population), enjoyed the news of the Barium-North Wilkesboro game which resulted in a victory for Barium. They enjoyed seeing our 100-pound team play Salisbury, and emerge victors; and then another game of the small boys, the 115-pounders, against Rock Hill, in which Barium was again victorious, and then to cap it all, about half of Barium Springs went to Davidson on Saturday to see Davidson win out over Citadel; and to see the part that the two old Barium boys had in this victory. Walter Fraley's pass led to Thad Brock's place kick and added the one point necessary for victory. This almost ended the perfect week. But when we came home for supper on Saturday night, we found something special on the table, and this was the most delicious fish we have ever tasted. Or maybe it was because we were all so hungry, and it was just good fish. Anyway, everybody walked out of the dining room, leaning backward and feeling supremely grateful to the S. S. P. Fish Company of Statesville for making that delightful meal possible. Everybody went to bed Saturday night wearing a smile, except the cashier. There was still a lot of bills that ought to have been paid that were not. Maybe there will be another perfect week before winter sets in, and by this we mean perfect in every particular.

"Burning Beauty," by Temple Baily; Penn Publishing Co., Philadelphia, Penn.

These are trying days for mothers seeking pure literature for their daughters, as there are books without number dealing with questions not allowed in godly homes.

Here is a story, full of movement and interest, yet free from the faults, so common to books of this day.

We commend it highly to those seeking literature for their daughters.

Rev. W. H. Workman was reelected stated Clerk of Harmony Presbytery, and Rev. R. L. Grier, recording clerk, each for a term of three years at the fall meeting.

NORTH CAROLINA

Wilson—During the pastorate of Rev. E. C. Lynch, who came to Wilson about three and a half years ago, the First Presbyterian Church has enjoyed a very steady and happy growth. The Sunday School is the largest in the history of the church and about double the attendance of three years ago; the Woman's Auxiliary continues to be one of the most active in the Presbytery; an active and enthusiastic organization of the Presbyterian Young People's League has been formed, and 131 members have been added to the church.

Charlotte, West Avenue—We greatly appreciate the splendid gospel messages Dr. W. B. McIlwaine and Rev. J. G. Garth brought us last week in our preparatory services.

Our attendance in Sunday School last Sunday was 304.

The attendance in our Junior Church last Sunday morning was 77. What a grand thing it is to know that such a crowd of Juniors is worshipping in the Junior Church room, while so many adults are worshipping in the main auditorium.

The Session has received into this church during this quarter 29 members, 3 on profession of faith in Christ and 26 by letter, making 64 in all received from the first Sunday in June and for sixteen Sundays in succession since June when the pastor was in the pulpit have we received additions to the church with the exception of one Sunday. God is richly blessing us and to Him be all the praise.

Wilmore, Charlotte—On the night of October 27, a two weeks' evangelistic meeting came to a close at this church. Rev. W. T. Smith, pastor of Cornelius and Bethel Church, preached throughout the meeting. For some time, he has been devoting a part of his time to evangelistic work, for which he has special talents, and the Lord has greatly blessed his efforts. The meeting proved a real season of spiritual refreshing for the church. The congregations were large, many from other churches attending, and the interest increased from day to day. Many of the members gave themselves to prayer and a spirit of deep earnestness was prevalent. Good music was made a feature of the services and the singing was pronounced by many as most excellent. Mr. Mack Cathey was director of music and the choir and congregation responded enthusiastically to his splendid leadership in a real worship of praise. Soloists and violinists from other churches very graciously took part and contributed much by their presence and musical talent.

Ten were added to this church by profession of faith, six by letter or re-affirmation, and other letters will come in; many pledged their allegiance to the Lord afresh and are going on their way rejoicing.

Two facts stand out from this concerted effort of the church in clear perspective, the one most pleasing, the other distressing:

1. That such a series of services, held after due preparation in prayer, and where the gospel is preached in its purity, may and does result in a real revival of love and devotion to Christ and His service in the hearts and lives of Christians and demonstrates the power of the gospel to bring light and joy into the lives of men as nothing else will or can.

2. That notwithstanding the fact that the saving of souls was emphasized as the chief aim and end of the meeting, the surface was hardly scratched in the large territory contiguous to this church and this sad fact seems largely attributable to the inability to induce the unsaved to even attend the services, although solicited by personal invitation, by cards delivered at the homes, by newspaper publicity and otherwise. It was noticeable that such of the unsaved as did attend seemed to come under the power of the Spirit and some were converted.

What can be done to get the attention of men today to their spiritual needs is a matter for most earnest consideration by Christian people.

Fayetteville Presbytery met in the Eureka Church, Moore County, on October 21. There were thirty-one ministers and forty-eight representatives present. Rev. J. F. Menius was elected moderator and Rev. W. J. Hunneycutt, temporary clerk. The opening sermon was preached by Rev. G. W. Hanna, the retiring moderator.

Action on the question of union with the United Presbyterian Church was docketed for consideration at the spring meeting. The Annuity Plan was discussed by Dr. F. H. Barron. The Home Mission Committee was directed to pay its proportional part of the annuity premiums for all workers receiving aid from home missions funds, when the plan is fully established.

Duncan Daniel McBryde was received under care of Presbytery as a candidate. He is a student at Davidson College. A memorial service for Rev. V. R. Gaston, who died June 20, 1929, was held.

Special emphasis was given to a number of causes. Among these should be mentioned the Orphans' Home at Barium Springs. A strong resolution was adopted calling on the churches to give more liberal support to this institution and a number of short talks were made. Evangelism was given a large place in the various reports and discussions. A deep sense of concern regarding this vital matter was manifest throughout the entire meeting. A number of resolutions looking to definite effort along this line were adopted and a season of prayer was engaged in for a deepening of the spiritual life of the members of the Presbytery and a great outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon the entire Church. Special attention was given to the question of Sabbath observance and Family Religion. A resolution putting the Presbytery on record as openly disapproving the operation of filling stations, swimming pools and other places of amusement on the Sabbath day, and calling upon members of the churches to refrain from using institutions on the Sabbath was adopted. The estates were considered, and representatives of the institutions located in the Presbytery were heard.

Histories of Benson, Aberdeen and Churches were read before the Presbytery. The men who prepared these papers were thanked for services, and it was ordered that copies of histories be filed in the archives of the Presbytery. Notice was given that two or three other churches had about completed their histories and would present copies to the Presbytery. A resolution was passed asking the second six in the alphabetical order of the churches to prepare historical sketches for the spring meeting and present them to the Presbytery.

The entertainment of the church was efficient and helpful to the members of the Presbytery. A committee of young women arranged to serve both at the church, thus making it possible to devote the entire time to the business of the Presbytery. It also saved the housekeepers the burden of providing for extra company in the evening except for the one breakfast. Brother Golden and good people are doing an excellent work at a beautiful brick church with all modern conveniences in which to work.

Presbytery adjourned to meet in adjourned session in the First Church, Fayetteville, N. C., on October 3, 1929, at 2:00 p. m.

Clover—Our Sunday School combined its regular exercises, Sunday, October 13, with its annual motion picture exercises. Drills and other details of work done during the year were presented before a large audience. About 40 certificates of appreciation were given to pupils who had done their work successfully. Eleven testaments were presented to many pupils for having recited the Child's Catechism and two Bibles were given to pupils who had fully recited the Shorter Catechism. An offering of $120.00 was taken for Sunday School extension.

Monday night, October 21, the Woman's Auxiliary held its annual rally day meeting, with a most interesting program. Miss Hudson, field representative of the Christian Education and Ministerial Relief Committee, was the speaker for the evening. Standing the rain, which made it difficult for those who live some distance from the church to attend this particular meeting, a large number of ladies were present.

Columbia—The Rev. John J. McSweeney, president of the Presbyterian College of South Carolina, in his Sunday morning spoke at the First Church in Columbia of the "deliverance" campaign of the college. The college is in debt in the amount approximately of $35,000.00. He spoke of the obligations which the college has incurred by its efforts and plans now being made to meet the obligations of the institution so that its affairs may be placed on a more satisfactory basis.

All money given to the fund, he said, will be that fund, with no deduction for campaign expenses. The expenses of the campaign, approximately $10,000.00, have been cared for by an individual.

Last night Dr. McSweeney preached before the congregation he had addressed in the morning at the State.

Anderson—Beautifully impressive were the services at the Central Presbyterian Church Sunday, October 27. Rev. J. H. Carter, was installed as pastor. A large congregation was present, the services of the First Presbyterian Church being united with the Central on the occasion.

Appointed by the Piedmont Presbytery a session composed of Dr. John McSweeney, Dr. R. Kirkpatrick and E. W. Brown had charge of the installation services. Dr. McSweeney, President of the Presbyterian College and formerly pastor of the Church himself, preached the inducting sermon, expounding obligations which the pastor and congregation assume. Dr. Kirkpatrick delivered the charge to the congregation and Dr. McSweeney to the new pastor. Mr. Brown led in prayer, as did Judge W. H. of Mt. Airy, N. C., a prominent North Carolinian and father of the incoming minister, who accompanied Anderson to attend the services.

A special musical program had been arranged and added much to the services, the choirs of both Presbyterian churches participating. Anderson was present.

Enoree Presbytery met in Union, S. C., October 21, 1929, and was opened with a sermon by Rev. Hudson, D.D., at the request of the retiring moderator, Rev. W. H. Hamilton, after which the services of the Lord's supper was celebrated, Rev. D. H. and Rev. P. S. McChesney, presiding. Rev. J. O. Wallace was elected moderator.

CHURCH PAPER WEEK

The General Assembly Has Appointed the Week of Nov. 3 to Nov. 10

as CHURCH PAPER WEEK. At that time, the pastors, the Auxiliaries and all other church workers are requested to bring to the attention of all church members the duty and privilege of subscribing to the Church Papers.

No person can be as useful in church work who does not read the Church Papers. The minister has no time to inform the congregation of events, projects, purposes, needs, and all the thousand and one things each ought to know for effective work in the departments.

The discussion of the church's great projects, such as now is going on, as to the Ministers' Annuity Fund, will be found in the Church Papers. Other important matters are discussed, and we ought to know what they mean, and how they bear on our own work and people.

Good reading for the family is provided by the Church Papers, and solve many problems of restless children, and furnish a quiet hour for older people. The devotional articles are valuable in developing our knowledge and faith. The Sunday School articles and Young People's discussions are very helpful.

The Presbyterian Standard will give the Auxiliary, or any other organization ONE DOLLAR out of $3 collected for a new subscription.

We are depending on our auxiliaries to send us many new subscribers the week of November 3 to November 10.

COUNCIL SUGGESTIONS FOR DECEMBER

To the President: This is a very happy month for a man who has it in his power to make others happy. Talk with the Chairman of Department VII and check all the people who should be remembered at the Christmas time. Make them happy. Watch carefully, too, the plans for the Christmas service. It can be made very beautiful and inspiring.

To the Council: This meeting should be held seven to ten days before the General Meeting. Open and close with prayer. The major part of the program this month is given to Department IV. He cares for the Educational Program. The Chairman should have clearly in mind just how he is going to use the men. He should give encouragement and active help in the presentation of the Christmas Worship Service sent out by the Department of Christian Education. Make every effort to secure a liberal offering for the old ministers, the widows and orphan children on the rolls of Ministerial Relief. The men might send cards of invitation to your Christmas Church Services to guests at hotels and boarding houses. Better still, send some of the men to bring these strangers with them to church and arrange some hour of fellowship for them. Offer not only the cars of the men, but get the men to offer themselves to go with the young people to sing Christmas carols and to carry an echo of the angel's song into every street and into every shadowed place.

Department I has a chance to speak a good word for the Family Altar and Religion in the Home. Some churches arrange a program on the Family Altar. Urge the men, if the old year has brought about misunderstandings and bitterness of spirit in any relation of life, to be the first one in the Spirit of the Little Child of Bethlehem, to make it right in love and good will. Get the men to speak that word of encouragement and appreciation which they have thought of doing for so long; write that letter for which some one is waiting, and let not the Christmas stars pale before you have spoken a good word for your Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ. Let him also suggest the Bible reading for the month.

Department III will arrange for the outpost work, and Department VII will arrange the supper meeting. Make a place at the family table for some stranger—in memory of that little Child of Bethlehem for whom there was no room when He came to earth.

To the Leader: No other meeting of the year will require the leader to be in such sympathy and harmony with his program as this one. It should be undertaken in the spirit of prayer. Pray with the speakers. Pray for your own part. The program is built around the little pamphlet by McConkey, "The God-Planned Life." Secure this. Give copies to speakers. Watch the Church Papers for other material. Work hard. It will be eminently worth while.

To the Speakers: Pray much over your talk. Study earnestly. Be prepared. Whatever you do, don't read it. More talks are ruined by poor presentation than any other cause. The theme is deeply spiritual and can only be presented in a prayerful atmosphere. Talk, feeling as Philip Brooks did, that Jesus is standing with His hand on your shoulder. If you feel it, men will feel it, too.

To the Group Leaders: The work for the men this month will be very interesting and appealing. Every group should make some person or family happy. In addition, encourage the men of your group to get behind the Christmas program and really make it a success. Men can be enlisted at Christmas time better than at any other time. Find your way into at least one heart, hitherto closed. Be sure that you know what the men are to do, and plan your work carefully. Use as many men as possible. Emphasize prayer at your group meetings.

A CALL TO MEN

(Written by J. C. Dougherty, Beeville, Texas, for the Sunday School Extension Program of the Men of the Church, October 4th, 1929.)

Men of the Church, why sit supinely by,
And see God's work transcendent and so high
Failing for lack of manly hearts and hands,
To follow faithfully the Master's plans.

Wake, rise, shake off that lethargy of old
It is the hour to strike, we now are told,
The hardest blows against Satanic wile,
We must not falter, faint, none of the while.

Then rally 'round our Sunday School, you men,
Until the angels shout a loud Amen,
And Heaven answers back in accents clear,
Rings out "Well done" and that's enough to hear.

The Sunday Schools, scatter them far and wide,
'Tis God's own surest way, we must decide.
The place wherein His Blessed Word is taught,
And where your sons and daughters should be brought.

And why stay 'way you, men who always do?
Do you not need the Bible taught to you?
Are you so sure the knowledge of His Book,
Can give to you no hope nor heav'nly look?

Why leave alone to mother, child of thine?
As thou in worldly ways forgetful shine,
Why not with church and loving mother true,
Combine your help, your prayers and counsel, too.

Lesson for November 10

WORLD PEACE THROUGH MUTUAL UNDERSTANDING

Is. 2:2-5; 11:6-10; 19:23-25; Acts 17:22-28; Eph. 4:4-6, 13-19; Jn. 4:20, 21

Our lesson this week has to do with World Peace through mutual understanding. We study it most appropriately on the 11th anniversary of the signing of the armistice, which marked the ending of the great world war. Since that time there has been a growing sentiment against all war on the part of the peoples, a growing realization on the part of responsible statesmen that another war will prove fatal to civilization. Within the last year the nations of the world have ratified a solemn treaty which reads as follows: Article 1. The High Contracting Parties solemnly declare in the name of their respective peoples that they condemn recourse to war for the solution of international controversies, and renounce it as an instrument of national policy in their relations with one another. Article 2. The High Contracting Parties agree that the settlement or solution of all disputes or conflicts of whatever nature or of whatever origin they may be, which may arise among them, shall never be sought except by pacific means." Hoover in the United States, Ramsay McDonald in England, Briand in France, Stressemann in Germany are eager to build on this treaty and organize the world for peace. Never in the history of the world has there been such an opportunity offered to the lovers of peace. It is most fitting, therefore, that Christians should consider what the Bible has to say on world peace through mutual understanding. Two questions come naturally to our minds: (1) What is the Bible ideal? (2) What is the Bible program for the realization of this ideal? Read the passages assigned with these two questions in mind.

I. The Bible Ideal

The Bible ideal is set before us most clearly perhaps by the prophet Isaiah. He is generally considered to have been the greatest of the Old Testament prophets. He lived in an age when war was considered to be one of the natural activities of men. Assyria the cruelest nation of antiquity, a nation which lived off the spoils of war, was the dominant world power. During the early years of Isaiah's ministry the northern tribes were carried captive, and a few years later Judah was threatened. Isaiah, however, did not lose faith in God, or in God's purpose for mankind.

In Is. 2:2-4, with the Assyrian menace still on the horizon, he predicted that the time would come when wars would cease, and peace would be established throughout the earth. Three things in particular strike us about this prophecy. (1) The legal settlement of disputes. Isaiah did not claim that differences would cease to arise between various peoples, but he did predict that such disputes would be settled in accordance with the divine law. "Many peoples shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of Jehovah, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of Jehovah from Jerusalem. And he will judge between the nations, and will decide concerning many peoples." (2) Universal Disarmament. The time will come says Isaiah when the nations will beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks. His idea is that law and justice will be so thoroughly accepted as the basis of international relationships that nations will no longer find it necessary to arm themselves, but will turn their energies instead, and their resources to the practices of peace. (3) Disappearance of the Military System. War will become such an utter impossibility that nations will cease even to teach their young men the art of war (neither shall they learn war any more). He could not have predicted in any plainer language the utter disappearance of war and all its concomitants from the face of the earth.

But when is this ideal to be realized? Isaiah says "in the latter days,"—that is, in the days to come. "It shall come to pass in the latter days," he writes,—sometime in the future, "that the mountain of Jehovah's house shall be established on the top of the mountains, etc." This passage does not mean that the temple shall actually be rebuilt on the top of the mountains, and raised physically above the hills, or that all nations will actually send their representatives to such a temple to learn God's will—it means rather that the day will come when the nations will accept God's will, and act in conformity with His laws. In that day the nations shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks. "It shall come to pass in the latter days." Isaiah is no more definite than that.

There are some Christians, however, who think that the Bible teaches that this ideal cannot be realized till after the second coming of Christ, and, therefore, that we should not strive to realize it in any other way than by the preaching of the Gospel. But this is not the teaching of Isaiah or of any other Bible writer. We cannot hope to consider here all the passages on which such a misconception is founded. One of the most familiar, however, is Mt. 24:6. Many Christians actually believe that Jesus predicts here that there shall always be wars and rumors of war. Even a casual reading of the whole passage will convince the reader that this is not the case. The disciples had asked Jesus to describe to them the signs of his coming. Jesus in reply pointed out first some of the misleading signs, false Messiahs, war, persecution, etc. These things would come to pass, Jesus warned his disciples, but they were not to be taken as the signs of His coming. Jesus said there would be wars and rumors of war, but he did not say that there would always be wars and rumors of war. As a matter of fact there have been enough wars to satisfy this prophecy a thousand times over.

Isaiah's ideal then is an ideal which is to be realized on earth, and it is an ideal which for all the Bible says can be realized now, in our own generation. We may differ as to whether any of us who now live may actually hope to see the realization of that ideal, but at least we can help to bring its realization several steps nearer. We can help to render war more improbable, if not impossible. This leads us to consider

II. The Bible Program

We realize, of course, that the Bible does not set forth any definite program which is to be rigidly followed. Rather we are left free to meet the needs of our own day in our own way. Nonetheless the Bible does offer us some valuable suggestions as to the way to peace.

1. We note first that world peace is bound up with the spread of the Gospel. Isaiah introduces his great prophecy in 2:2-4 with a picture of Jehovah's house exalted on the top of the mountains, and all nations flowing into it. We have already stated that this prophecy does not demand a literal fulfillment. It does look forward, however, to the time when the nations shall own their allegiance to the Lord God of Israel, and when they shall accept his word as their Law. Is. 11:9 is also significant in this connection. "They shall not hurt or destroy in all my Holy Mountain, for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of Jehovah as the waters cover the sea." This verse does not indicate any more than the others that world peace is impossible until every individual is committed to God's will, but it does say that world peace is bound up with the progress of the Gospel. The passage in John also has a slight bearing upon this point. In Jesus' time there was open hostility between the Jews and the Samaritans. Jesus pointed the Samaritan woman forward to the time when the ancient cleavage would be transcended, transcended because men worshipped a common Father. So also Paul in his famous speech on Mar's Hill. He pointed out that as a matter of fact we all do share a common humanity (17:26), but the realization of this fact with all of its significance for world peace is bound up with an acceptance of the God that made the world and all the things therein, a God whom we may seek and find, because He is not far from any one of us, for in Him we live and move and have our being.

Were the prophets right in linking the coming of world peace with the progress of the Gospel? We believe that they were. We know no international arrangements will guarantee universal peace unless the peoples as a whole, and the statesmen who guide our national and international destinies are committed to the Christian way of life. But if the Gospel is to insure world peace it must be such a Gospel as Isaiah and Jesus and Paul had in mind: a Gospel which makes God the judge and teacher of nations as well as individuals (Is. 2:2-4); a Gospel which transcends national differences (Jn. 4:20-21); a Gospel that insists that God made of one every nation of men to dwell on the face of the earth (Acts 17:26). Do we emphasize enough these international implications of the Gospel? How can we do so? Probably we will agree that the realization of world peace is bound up with the progress of the Gospel. Is the preaching of the Gospel, the broadcasting of the Gospel message of the Fatherhood of God, the brotherhood of man sufficient? We do not believe that it is. The Bible suggests, what our reason confirms, that there must also be

2. The Organization of the World for Peace.

We note here again that the Bible does not lay down the lines that such organization shall take, there is no Biblical model to which we must conform. It is interesting, however, to note how close the Biblical ideal does come to some of our modern endeavors:

(1) The Bible suggests that war must be outlawed among the nations. It does not use the word 'outlawry.' And we do not mean to suggest that Isaiah anticipated the Kellogg Pact. Yet Isaiah's whole prophecy suggests that some day the nations will turn away formally from the institution of war. They will no longer even think of it as a means of settling their disputes. The formal repudiation or outlawry of war as a legitimate means of settling international disputes is the first step in our modern peace program. That step has now been taken. All the nations of the world have ratified the Kellogg Pact quoted at the beginning of this article. We know, of course, that the mere signing of the pact does not guarantee that war will disappear. The pact must be written into the hearts of the people. We must hold our statesmen to its terms. Our last General Assembly recognized that this was a proper function of the church. And in a formal resolution they urged the responsibility of writing the pact upon the hearts of the people, on all who preach and all who teach in the Southern Presbyterian Church. Was the General Assembly right in assuming this to be a function of the church? How can it fulfill its responsibility?

(2) The Bible suggests that there must be machinery for the pacific settlement of disputes. We believe that Is. 2:2-3 is to be taken literally. The question is bound to arise—How is God to judge the nations? The judgment that Isaiah anticipated between nations that have matters at issue, a judgment that shall be publicly known and accepted. We do not see how such a judgment rendered in our modern world except through a tribunal applying God's eternal laws to the question.

Some such machinery for the pacific settlement of disputes is the second step in our modern program. The Kellogg Pact pledges the nations not to settle their disputes except through pacific methods, but disputes, to arise, and the pact will be put to unwarranted use unless some definite provision is made for the settlement of such disputes. At present two bits of machinery have been set up.

1st. The World Court. Here we have a judicial tribunal to which the nations may submit their disputes. The United States has refused to enter the court except with reservations that the other nations are unable to accept. At the present writing a new treaty has been formulated acceptable to the administration and approved by the League of Nations. This treaty removes the stumbling block that hitherto has prevented the world court from being set up. It provides that the world court shall submit an advisory opinion on any subject in which the United States claims an interest without the consent of the United States. Even with this reservation adherence to the World Court will be opposed by some Senators who oppose all American co-operation with European countries. Should we enter the court with reservations or not? Many peace advocates favor the world court will not be really effective until compulsory arbitration, until the nations pledge themselves to submit all their differences to the world court except those which have to do with domestic matters. England has agreed to sign a compulsory arbitration clause. Germany has already signed it, and France, is expected to follow suit. Should we sign such a clause?

2nd: The League of Nations. Just at the time when the question of American adherence to the League is a dead issue, America's decision to remain in the league was due in part at least to the fear that she might be called upon to fight in European wars. The time of the present writing a movement is afoot to revise the League constitution, and to bring it into harmony with the Kellogg Pact. A committee has been appointed which will report back to the next session of the League. If the Constitution should be revised there was no longer any question of America being legally or morally bound to act against any country because of its relation to the League of Nations. Should the United States enter the League?

(3) The Bible suggests that competitive armaments must cease. Is. 2:4. This is the third step in our modern peace program. Strong armaments do not guarantee peace. Impartial students agree that competitive armaments was one of the causes of the World War. America is rich enough to build a greater navy, to have a larger army than any single world power. But America can maintain a navy large enough to outmatch a combination of its foes, and future wars will be fought by single nations, but by groups of nations. The time of the present writing a movement is afoot to revise the League constitution, and to bring it into harmony with the Kellogg Pact. A committee has been appointed which will report back to the next session of the League. If the Constitution should be revised there was no longer any question of America being legally or morally bound to act against any country because of its relation to the League of Nations. Should the United States enter the League?

(4) The Bible suggests that the nations must learn war. It will probably be some time before the nations are able to do away with the war as a completely, but meanwhile we can begin to change the war psychology, and this is the fourth step in our modern peace program. By war psychology we mean that method of mind that looks upon war as the natural method of settling disputes between the nations. The state of mind many think is created by the old teaching history, of glorifying war, of investing war with romance and glamor instead of portraying it as it really is (read All Quiet on the Western Front). Compulsory military training in our schools and by the over development of the Citizens' Military Training Camps, etc. Do you agree? How can we change the war psychology?

As this lesson is written the papers indicate an outstanding lobbyist influencing the United States to vote against naval reduction and sowing suspicion at the Geneva Disarmament Conference. The pay secretly of three of the largest shareholders in this country. Big business is seen to have a financial interest in big navies is working against the whole peace program. If it is true, Christians must work openly for it. Do you agree? Can Christians do as individuals? What can they do?

These words of Praise give us the strongest reasons for supporting the . . .

Presbyterian College

PROGRAM OF DELIVERANCE

" . . . A part of our heritage . . . is the prestige of the Presbyterian name, especially in matters of education. What will happen to that prestige, however, if we permit our college (Presbyterian College) to go on the block when the Methodists have put Wofford upon a solid financial basis, the Baptists Furman, the Lutherans Newberry, and our A. R. P. brethren, with only half our numerical strength, have raised $390,000 to do the same for Erskine? . . . Love . . . for the interests, honor and advancement of our Redeemer's Kingdom . . . demand that each of us lend a hand in bringing this Program of Deliverance to a successful conclusion."

—W. M. McPHEETERS, D. D.

"Presbyterian College has won its way to a position of honor and service which challenges the support and sympathy of our people . . . It has triumphed over obstacles . . . until it has attained to the position it enjoys today of fellowship and friendship amongst the colleges of the highest grade. . . . The college is of the Church and for the Church, and in this regard is like the Church. The Church deserves the support and sympathy of all its members for what it is and what it does and what it is yet to do . . . the college seeks like sympathy and support and is worthy of it."

—ALEXANDER SPRUNT, D. D.

" . . . Especially through the students who enter the ministry Presbyterian College is rendering to the Church in South Carolina . . . and wherever the Church has projected its program, a service, the value of which cannot be estimated. . . . At present there are fifteen P. C. men at Columbia Theological Seminary, which is thirty-two per cent of the student body . . . I wish to say to the Presbyterians of South Carolina that the Church has no more valuable agency for producing trained leaders than her college at Clinton."

—RICHARD T. GILLESPIE, D. D.

" . . . Our State (South Carolina) is now beginning to . . . set her feet upon a foundation of solid prosperity. . . . This will only increase the importance of the right sort of education. Presbyterians will not be content to have no hand in that all-important matter. Good business sense would demand that we keep our hand in now, even though it strains a bit to do it. 'Where there is no vision the people perish.' Let us think today of the South Carolina of the future, and the Presbyterian Synod of that day also. . . . Now is the time, from every good business standpoint, to make adequate arrangements to pay the debt of Presbyterian College."

F. W. GREGG, D. D.

"The campaign to deliver Presbyterian College from debt will test the mettle and church loyalty of us all. I think it will do more than that. It will determine whether or not the Presbyterians of South Carolina are intelligently concerned about the future leadership of the Church. . . . As I see it, we have no duty more urgent, we have no opportunity more inviting than that afforded by this Program of Deliverance. It is an undertaking the success of which depends upon sacrificial loyalty and Synod-wide co-operation."

—HENRY WADE DuBOSE, D. D.

Spencer Hall

THESE EXCERPTS from statements and letters written by Presbyterian Church leaders reveal most clearly the value of Presbyterian College to the Synod of South Carolina, and stress the urgency and importance of the Program of Deliverance now under way to raise $350,000 to deliver the institution from the burden of debt. They are commended to the attention of the Presbyterians of South Carolina who have at heart the interests of the Church and the College. It is felt that they give the strongest possible reasons why all of us should support this Program designed (a) to deliver the College from the burden of debt; (b) to eliminate life-sapping interest payments; (c) to deliver the Church from burdensome emergency contributions for college operating expense; and (d) to assure receipt of $148,000 in endowment gifts conditioned upon liquidation of this burdensome debt.

MRS. WINSBOROUGH VISITS THE ST. LOUIS OFFICE

The recent visit of Mrs. Winsborough in Saint Louis brought several happy days to the office force and to her friends. The Woman's Work Committee was then meeting, and Mrs. Winsborough was able to join them in session for one day before she went on to her home in Shreveport, Louisiana. Mrs. Winsborough's many friends will be glad and rejoice that her health is so much improved and that she daily gains in strength.

MATERIAL FOR THE HOME MISSION SEASON

Our thoughts have been turning to Home Missions for the past week and are looking forward to November, the month especially designated by our Assembly for the time of prayer for Home Missions and for the culmination of Home Mission study.

It is hoped that every study class and School of Missions has been using and will use "Stewardship of the Crowded Ways, a series of fifteen minute devotionals for use with the study of the Home Mission book, "The Crowded Ways" by Charles Sears—a most inspiring book concerning the need of our teeming cities.

The Week of Prayer for Home Missions November 17-24

Subjects for united prayer will be found in the Woman's Department of the November Survey. The power of united prayer is very great, and so we are all urged to use these topics lest we forget some important cause through forgetfulness or ignorance.

Many Auxiliaries have their Auxiliary inspirational meeting during this special week of prayer, as a culmination of the Home Mission season. There is much fine material for this program. The material is listed here below.

"God's Harvest" is an inspiring program of prayer, praise and information which brings a "supplement" of fact and story to aid in carrying out the program. The whole is so clearly outlined that it can be used by any group, from five in number to five hundred.

"A Morning Call" may be an alternate program or may be used in conjunction with "God's Harvest." It is a sweet and gripping play of a mother, daughter and friend in their Home Mission thinking. The play may be presented with setting and action, or could even be read as a dramatic reading by one person.

Self-Denial Envelopes should be in the keeping of every woman that she may begin as soon as possible together her offering of love. Be sure to order these immediately and distribute these early.

All material may be ordered from Miss Sue Haley, 101 Marietta St., Atlanta, Georgia.

CONFERENCE OF COLORED WOMEN

Tennessee Synodical alternates the location of their conference for colored women: holding it in West Tennessee one year, with Memphis Presbyterial responsible for its support and the next year in Middle Tenn., with Columbia and Nashville Presbyterials responsible for the delegates.

The sixth conference was held at Bethlehem Center, Nashville, September 18-25, with fifty-six registered delegates; four from Memphis Presbyterial, forty from the city, Nashville, and the others from various points in Middle Tenn.

Mrs. Chas. S. Kinkead, Nashville, was leader of the conference, securing the speakers and teachers and arranging the splendid program.

The devotionals each morning were conducted by women, some of whom were of other denominations, who were in sympathy with the purpose of the conference. They were Mrs. Arch Trawick, Mrs. J. R. Wheeler, Mrs. E. P. Blair, Mrs. C. B. Wallace and Mrs. W. F. Powell.

Home, its needs, its influence and its ideal was presented by Miss Lucy Fletcher, Miss Sallie Jenkins, Miss Ware, Miss Abel and Mrs. B. W. Lipscomb. Health talks and demonstrations were given by Miss M. G. Nisbet and Dr. Mattie Coleman, efficient assistants of State Department of Health.

The Bible was taught by Miss Margaret Young, Supt.

of Bethlehem Center, who outlined the Gospel of Mark in a most interesting, helpful manner, stressing spirituality.

Sunday School methods were presented by Mrs. Shackelford and Daily Vacation Bible work by Mrs. Mattie Anderson, colored leaders, who are expert directors in their churches.

Woman's Work in churches in Schools and communities, its organization, development of leadership and parliamentary procedure was given by Mrs. Ross Woods.

The above work with a division for general discussion by delegates and the conference leader on community problems completed the daily morning schedule. The afternoon program consisted of a class in serving, with talks on thrift, conducted by Mrs. Vernon Blair and playground activities directed by Mrs. Shackelford.

The evening vespers and song service were conducted by the delegates followed by addresses by outstanding speakers of Nashville.

On Health, Dr. Sharp, State Board of Health, on Industrial conditions, Dr. Alva Taylor, of Vanderbilt, Moving pictures of his trip around the world by Dr. M. G. Buckner; Inter-racial co-operation, Dr. Lewis, negro minister and Dr. Jones, president of Fisk University.

On Sunday morning the delegates from out of the city worshiped at St. Andrews Presbyterian church, the sermon, being delivered by the pastor, Rev. Spencer Jackson.

On Sunday evening, Dr. John L. Hill, from the Baptist Educational Board brought to them a message of truth and inspiration.

The program of the last night was rendered by the delegates. They expressed in well chosen words their appreciation of the conference, the help it had been to them and their desire and aim to take home to others the lessons they had learned—such as organizing Bible study classes or some project for betterment of health among their people or some other plans that might be needed.

The evening and the conference closed with a pageant and song program.

FORT MILL AUXILIARY

The Women's Auxiliary of Unity Presbyterian Church, of Fort Mill, which since its organization is recognized as the most efficient and persevering aid to the church in its particular field, has just passed through an experience in the nature of a revival. Its monthly meeting was held in the church Monday afternoon, October 21, and was attended by Miss Irene Hudson, of Louisville, Ky., from the office of Dr. H. H. Sweets, Assembly's Secretary of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief, Mrs. J. M. Williams and Mrs. C. E. Porcher, of McConnells, S. C., and Mrs. John F. Gordon, of Tirzah, S. C., respectively president, corresponding secretary, and social service secretary of Bethel Presbyterial. The messages brought by these interested workers were informing and inspiring, and constituted an incentive to larger and more intensive effort. A social period was enjoyed following the conclusion of the one and one-half hour session, when the group adjourned to the manse where luncheon was served under the direction of Mrs. A. W. Shaw. The Auxiliary is composed of five circles, and meetings are held regularly, and are generally well attended.

EDITOR'S LOOKOUT

Rev. W. A. Gamble, Jr., Editor, Pinetops,

The special objective of the foreign mission of young people of our Church is the medical work. In this connection some extracts from Rev. J. W. letter concerning work in the Ellen Lavine Grapital at Haichow (pronounced Hi'jo), Kiang, will be of interest.

The workers in this hospital are Dr. and M. Morgan, both of whom are doctors, and M. Bracken, who is superintendent of the Chinese twenty nurses. Mr. Vinson is accountant for them and is brought into daily contact with the hospital. He mentions some of the cases not daily clinic. "Here is a man with a tubercular one there is infected with hook worm. This young man with blood streaming down his face has just had with his brother and his head had come into contact with the business edge of a butcher's cleaver old gray-beard, with the look of misery in his a carbuncle between his shoulders; none of the tiny carbuncles one sees at home, but a full-grown covering some twenty-five or thirty inches square a mite of a baby with his head on one side an abscess on the other. These two men by the badly infected hands. This man has leprosy; the to him, cancer of the face. Several have malaria, kala-azar. That middle-aged man has trachoma almost blind.

"There were seventy-two patients in the clinic. Several will go to the operating room tomorrow. Three or four operations in the afternoon busy morning in the clinic make rather a full day for our one doctor-surgeon. But his day's work is not finished until after he has inspected his average of five in-patients after supper. It's a lucky night too, when he is not called up in the middle of the night.

Our young people's societies and organizations are asked to have a part in such work through the purchase of "shares" at five dollars each. Shares can be purchased through a letter to the Executive Committee of the Department of Missions, P. O. Box 330, Nashville, Tenn. A list of synods, is soon to be published giving a record of the number of shares in Medical Missions in which have been purchased by the young people. Who will lead? Sunday, November 10—Uprooting the Causes of War
Isa. 2:4; 11:6-9; Jas. 3:13-18; Jas. 4:1-3; Rev. 19:11-16

The Leader

Tomorrow is November 11, known throughout the world as Armistice Day, because on that day, November 11, 1918, the Allies in the World War, of 1914-1918, and the Germans, ceased firing on the battlefields of France, and on other fronts. It was an armistice while a little later at Versailles, near Paris, the representatives of all the nations gathered and made a peace which were signed by the Allies and the Germans.

Ever since that time the nations of the world have been trying to find some basis of mutual agreement which they could give up war as a means of settling controversies between themselves. The last time that the nations agreed not to resort to war was the signing of the Kellogg-Briand Pact in which the nations agreed not to resort to war by all other means had been tried.

Our topic today is Uprooting the Causes of War as Christians we want to discover the meaning of Christ commands for destroying war.

The Causes of War

War has been the way nations have settled their differences between themselves from the dawn of history. Tribes and nations have fought each other and have killed, destroyed property, enslaved their enemies, and misery and degradation and havoc all over the world.

What causes war between nations? In olden times it was hunger, or the love of conquest, or revenge, or desire for possessions, and other reasons.

But what causes wars in this age of the world? The causes are fear of other nations, suspicion, racial hatred, and commercial ambition. A recent book gives as follows: (1) The system of alliances between nations, as Germany and Austria on one side, France and Russia on the other. (2) Militarism, keeping big armies and navies. (3) Nationalism, or national pride. (4) Economic imperialism, grasping after trade advantages. (5) Propaganda, or spreading suspicion of other nations.

Present Day Militarism

Militarism is the warlike spirit in nations which prompts them to keep large armies, build big navies, and munition plants and study chemical warfare, and all forms of military preparedness for war.

Therefore, he puffed away at his pipe and resumed his study of the fascinating travel folders. Two thousand dollars would give them a year abroad. "If I could only earn some money," thought the old captain restlessly, but the empty sleeve precluded such ambitions.

Ellen went on her way, but so perturbed was she from the thoughts aroused by Eric's speech that she completely forgot to telephone, according to her invariable custom, to Lucy announcing her arrival. Lucy lived at the other end of the town, and Ellen hated to go into a drug store and spend the necessary nickel. Long habits of thrift remained with her and a nickle dropped into an outside telephone seemed wasteful to her. She wanted to leave Dick as much as possible. "How they will enjoy our little cottage when we are through with it," she reflected tenderly. Every board and nail in the tiny place was surrounded by old memories of their happy youth. Eric had been the kindest of husbands and had worked and cherished her with all his strength. Most of the cottage had been built by his own hands—before the loss of the left arm. Here her sparkling blue eyes dimmed as she remembered his grief at having to give up active work to depend solely on his pension. This with the cottage sufficed, for they were accustomed to plain living, but now doubts assailed her as she recalled the longing in his face when he spoke of Scotland and his kinsmen. After all the money had been left to them to use and he wanted to travel. She remembered a time when she had craved a plush coat, although her dark cloth jacket was perfectly good. Eric had worked nights and earned enough to surprise her with the plush garment, and on her wedding anniversary she had worn the warm, silk-lined coat that enveloped her with fragrant warmth.

She was torn with doubts as she went up the steps of the rented house where Dick lived. The place looked shabby and uncared for, greatly in contrast with Ellen's neat cottage. "I would love to cross the ocean," she thought wistfully, Eric's wanderlust had seized her, but duty looked grimly ahead.

"I tell you I won't go and call on the Smith's baby. I don't care if they do get another doctor. The old woman can't last forever and that $2,000 will go a long way. Why should I wear myself out walking and working. The world owes me a living. I'm sorry I let her spend all that money to put me through medical college. I hate the work. When she drops off I'll buy a racing car and—"

Ellen's veined hand was pressed closely against her heart. Dick's voice, rough and shrill with anger, floated out from the open window and her breath came in little gasps. The pounding in her ears dulled his voice, but her extraordinarily sharp ears still heard clearly above the sound of her heartbeats.

"I wish," cried Lucy forlornly, "that you had no money coming to you; then you might brace up and make a living the same as other men do. Here we are in this run-down house with no prospects because you expect to step into the dear little cottage that your uncle built himself—"

There was an ugly snarl in Dick's laugh. "Dear little cottage," he mocked. "Do you think you're ever going to settle down in that? The inheritance will be absolutely mine and you'll never use that. I'll sell it the minute I get the place. Houses are at a premium now. I know a sure thing that I'll bet that—"

Ellen could not see the steps for the blinding tears that clouded her vision. Stumblingly she hurried down the street and into the drug store at the corner, where she went to the phone booth.

"Eric, come down here and get me," she said when his pleasant voice answered. "I—have had sort of a shock—take care of those travel folders because—" Here a tiny ripple of joy ran through her halting speech. After all it was not late. She could give Eric his heart's desire with no thought of duty to intervene. "We are going to Scotland very soon, and Eric"—unconsciously her hand was pressed against her heart—"I misjudged Lucy. Our little home shall be left to her instead of—that is"—a new hesitancy crept into her tone, she had discovered that her judgment was not infallible—"if you think best."

"Whatever you like," he returned, as he always did. "Ellen, I'll bring the folders with me. Think, I'll be able to show you the Scotch heather in bloom on the hillside."

THE HARD TASK OF THINKING

The Mentor has assembled a number of instances from the experiences of noted authors, and, for the greater encouragement of all who write, we give a number of them:

"Virgil devoted seven years to the building of one of his 'monuments,' his 'Georgics' comprising a little more than two thousand lines. Just words, yet destined to outlive the pyramids.

"Lucretius gave a whole lifetime to a single poem. Then there is Thucydides, father of historical criticism. His masterpiece was twenty years in the making—a work that easily fits between two octavo-size covers!

"Jean Jacques Rousseau wrote: 'My manuscripts, blotted, scratched, interlined, and scarcely legible, attest the trouble they cost me. Some of my periods I have turned and returned in my head for five or six nights before they were fit to be put on paper.'

"'You will read this treatise in a few hours,' Montesquieu, the celebrated jurist, told some friends on completing 'The Spirit of Law,' 'yet the labor expended on it has whitened my hair.' That his time and effort were not altogether ill spent is conjectured from the fact that many of the principles defined in the book had a powerful influence in the framing of the Constitution of the United States.

"Even Carlyle with all his experience found the task of putting together a manuscript extremely arduous. 'Certainly,' he once remarked, 'no one writes with the tremendous difficulty that I do. Shall I ever write with ease?'

"'He wrote with his heart's blood,' is the way his brother John expressed it. In time he sent his message forth in thirty-four volumes—a prodigious amount of work. Yet 'composition was a torture to him.'

"Rudyard Kipling rewrote his stories many times over, and then often made numerous corrections in the proof. Hall Caine made it a rule to revise every novel he wrote a dozen times. 'The Raven' lay in Edgar Allan Poe's desk for ten years before he considered it fit to be published. Locke's 'Essay on the Human Understanding' was eighteen years in the making. Plato spent weeks over a sentence, Charlotte Bronte hours over a word. Ruskin was never weary of polishing his jewel-like phrases. Izaak Walton's simple, homely diction cost him incredible toil.

"Men of the most brilliant and imposing talents have lived a life of intense and incessant labor. Yet if any work be marked (Continued on page 13) navies are manned as fully as before the war.

America is teaching her rising generation the arts of war. The young men are the main recruits. Isaiah says if the gospel shall prevail they will learn war no more.

Should we not as a Christian people cultivate the spirit of peace? Is not the youth of today the class to cultivate peace and brotherhood? Should our Christian colleges encourage warlike preparedness by training their students in the arts of war?

Christ as Judge Among Nations

Isaiah says the God of Jacob shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.

What a marvelous world it would be if the gentle Nazarene who loved all men should be the judge of nations, and all disputes were brought to him for settlement? He knows justice and equity, he loves brotherhood and charity, he would give the weak their rights and curb the overbearing and selfish. May not the spirit of Christ rule today if we will but declare his will and demonstrate his principles?

The writer of this article would suggest to our young readers that prizes are offered by the Brook-Bright Foundation, 342 Madison Ave., New York, to high school students who will write essays on some phase of world peace.

The prize essays of 1929 were used as a help in preparing the above article.

THE IMPORTANCE OF HOME MISSIONS

Essay Winning Second Prize, Suwannee Presbytery

We have a great many missions all over the United States, but for the size and wealth of our country we should have many more.

Many persons have said they would not give any help or money to foreign missions because we have people in our own country who need help. While others do not help our home missions and give no reason for their not doing so. But I can give them a reason. Foreign missionaries are more interesting than missionaries from our country.

Those coming from abroad have glamorous tales to tell. Things seem more strange and wonderful. This all helps to make some people more eager and enthusiastic over helping foreign missions.

It may seem more interesting, but here is a different side of it. Those who our foreign missionaries are trying to reach and help are so far along with their own customs they do not wish to give them up for new. They have their religion which has been theirs for scores of years and they are not always easily persuaded to give that up too. Furthermore they are mostly uneducated and they do not understand our teachings. They, therefore, take years to learn.

Now I will come back to our own people, taking the mountain people, for instance. They have come from "high stock" have keen minds, and are eager and quick to learn. Only because they have gone where they do not associate with modern ways, they have fallen back and need to be brought forward again.

In the backwoods of Kentucky, North Carolina, Virginia and etc., these people live. They need not only spiritual but medical help. Now there are quite a few missionaries scattered around but there is still plenty of room for more.

There are many people, a great many people all over our country who need help, especially from Christians. We, the United States, need more missions, not foreign missions, but for ourselves. We could set no example, for the heathen people, of True Christians. Yes, maybe some of us could, but as a whole we are worse than we think we are.

O course all people have not the same viewpoints, but my idea is this. We should first, as a nation, turn the courses of our own people, branding our country, "A Christian Nation," so all other countries can see for themselves the greatness of Christianity. We have the money, the people, everything but the courage to push it through. If only we could realize its great cause, put a shoulder against it and help push it on, our nation would be the foremost in Christianity. Then we could easily turn the heathens in their paths to the road leading to Everlasting Life.

CHILDREN

THE HAUNTED WOODS

"No, said Marge Meredith firmly, "I'm not a bit superstitious."

"I'm not either," her brother Dick replied stoutly.

Their cousin Jim Bradford smiled slyly.

"Well," he remarked, "I've heard some pretty queer tales about this mountain. By the way, have you ever seen Old Goodman's grave? Of course, there must be some way of explaining it, but they do say that Old Goodman was a hermit who lived up here for years by himself and one day some hunters came up here and stopped at his little cabin. It was growing dark and when they went into the cabin, by the dim light they saw something sneak across the floor. It was a porcupine. They made a light and found the bench stool and table all gnawed up. Then they knew nobody had lived there for some time. Well they looked around outside and pretty soon in the deepest part of the woods they found a tombstone, a neat marble slab—I'll show it to you. It marked the hermit's grave. Now, how did he manage to bury himself and put a tombstone on his grave? That's the question."

"Yes, I've heard that yarn," said Dick, "and about the ghost that prowls around here, too. But I don't believe it, no, sir!"

"Neither do I," said Marge glancing quickly around.

They were gathering nuts in a little clearing near some dense evergreen trees. There was a brisk breeze blowing the boughs and leaves, making a sighing noise and causing the lights and shadows to dance and quiver.

"Don't it look spooky in there?" remarked Jim, pointing into the trees. "The trees sort of hiss, don't they? And it looks as though something was moving around in the shadows."

"Aw, hush up!" warned Dick. "You make me tired."

"Dare me to go in there?" demanded Margie boldly. "I'll show you I don't believe in ghosts."

"Gather your nuts, Marge," said Dick, "what's the use wasting time."

"We've got the pail almost filled," said Marge. "Let's get Jim to show us the tombstone. He says he's been there and knows where it is."

"Sure I know where it is," said Jim, "but I'll tell you honestly I wouldn't care to go there after dark."

"Well, who wants to," Dick demanded. "We want to go there now."

Jim finally consented, but first he had to climb a tree to get his bearings and sight some landmark which he knew. Afterwards he led his friends confidently along trail saying:

"I hope we'll get back all right. Some very queer things have happened up here. Remember that Italian or some kind of foreigner who was found up here scared stiff and telling some story about meeting a ghost and being chased half the night?"

Marge took her brother's hand, but they kept on bravely until they saw a tumble-down log cabin before them. This had been the hermit's lodge, Jim told them, and of course, they went inside timidly and looked around.

After peeping in all the nooks and crannies of this gloomy shack, the young adventurers went to find the tombstone. They had not far to go. After skirting the cabin three times in widening circles they saw something white gleaming through the trees.

"That's it!" hissed Jim in an awed voice.

There in the dense growth of trees and underbrush stood the stone. Dick stooped down and read.

"Here lies Bill Goodman, a hermit. Let him rest in peace."

"Gee!" Dick exclaimed. "It's all spelled wrong. That's funny, isn't it?"

"Oh, look at the GRAY (use BLACK lightly) squirrel! He is burying a BROWN nut!" cried YELLOW-haired Susie May.

"Yes, he is saving for the winter months!" said BROWN-haired Teddy, "Just see how he digs in the GREEN lawn! He makes quite a neat hole to put his nut into."

Teddy wore a GREEN wind-breaker jacket and a beret of the same shade of GREEN. His scarf was ORANGE (use RED and YELLOW mixed) color

"I'll say," agreed Jim. "It's awful funny. Everybody around here was mystified. And believe me, everybody locked doors and windows for a long time at night after all this was known."

Dick looked very thoughtful and turned questioning eyes toward Marge. She was reading the inscription on the tombstone.

"Pe-e-c-c," she said. "Hum. That hermit couldn't have been very well educated."

"He wasn't," explained Jim. "He could hardly read or write, but he had been brought up in the back woods and loved nature and hated people. He kept going off by himself into the woods, they say he could pretty near talk to animals. Anyway he ended, you know, by staying up here and being a regular hermit."

"Now, let me ask you," said Dick. "How could a man bury himself? It can't be done, that's all."

"Well, he did it, didn't he?" demanded Jim. "Maybe, at least, the folks say, his ghost came and did it."

"Huh," snorted Marge, "I bet—say—listen—" she looked excitedly from one to the other of her companions, "I bet I know! He didn't bury himself."

"What?" from Jim.

"I know," cried Dick, "he isn't under that stone at all. He didn't like hunters and nut pickers to visit him, so he went away and left that tombstone here."

Jim's face broadened.

Susie May wore a RED wind-breaker jacket and a little leather hat of the same shade of RED as her jacket. Her skirt was dark BLUE.

There were two pointed GREEN trees behind a bush of RED leaves then there were two YELLOW fluffy trees with a RED tree between them and two more tall GREEN trees—all in a row the other side of the lawn. That was near the squirrel which was near the squirrel with RED and BROWN leaves falling to the branches. Three were falling.

"Say, why didn't anybody think of that before?"

"Jim," said Marge, "I noticed a spade in that cabin. Let's dig under the stone and see."

The boys ran and got the spade, it didn't seem necessary to disturb the tombstone, so they just dug around it. The earth was hard, and they stuck an immense root from a big tree nearby, which went down, down ever so far.

"This dirt hasn't been disturbed for ages," said Jim. "I'm sure now. The hermit isn't buried here at all."

"Well, after all," said Marge, "he had a right to go away and be in peace."

"I bet the ghost that chased the Italian was the hermit," said Jim, "Come on let's get away. I'd hate to have him catch me now digging in his grave."

"Sure," agreed Dick, "I don't mind ghosts, but a cranky hermit can stam-pede me any day."

Hastily the three put the spade back in the cabin and fearfully left the spot, expecting any moment to have the hermit dart out at them from behind most any tree.

"It's much scarrier to run than to walk along," panted Margie, doing her best to keep up with the boys.

When they reached the village and told their story, it caused quite a stir. Several of the men went up next day and dug up the grave. Sure enough, not a bone did they find under that white tombstone.

"It's a wonder we didn't think of it before," everybody said.

edly good, it is the public's habit to attribute the author's success mainly to 'genius.'

"One definition of genius has been attributed to a dozen wise men: 'Genius is the capacity for taking infinite pains.'"

ANCHORED

They had come from far up the river and had anchored at the little Chinese village late in the afternoon.

All at once she turned. She was young, slender and golden haired.

"Had you thought, Herbert," she began, "that tonight will be Christmas eve? At home in the old church they have decorated the Christmas tree and trimmed the altar. I can just see mother going across to the church, her grey hair shining under her hat. On her pantry shelves are the mince pies, already baked for tomorrow's dinner, and she has all her Christmas packages neatly wrapped in white tissue paper, waiting for delivery. And I— will not be there to see! Oh, Herbert, it makes me homesick at Christmas time to be so far away. It's the hardest time of all. Not that I regret being here with you—it isn't that—it's just that we are separated from those of our own kind. That, we are here in China, you and I, and about us only a sea of yellow faces."

The missionary laid a hand on the young shoulder.

"I know Alice Ann," he replied tenderly, "I know all about it. But after all—we wouldn't have it otherwise. We wouldn't you know."

She nodded, although the tears were running down her cheeks.

No, we wouldn't go back," she answered tremulously.

The boat safely anchored, they walked up to the little town lying before them with its narrow, crooked street. Suddenly she lifted her head.

"It's good to be out of the boat, any way. Isn't it?" she said. "Just think, the only light we have had on this trip has been an old kerosene lantern, and I had to dress sitting on the bed. There wasn't even a dresser drawer I could call my own. Do you think I might have a dressing table some time, Herbert? There is such a pretty of one in the last catalogue that came from home."

The missionary nodded.

"Of course, Alice Ann," he said still tenderly as he studied the beauty of the young face.

They walked on without speaking. Suddenly Alice Ann broke the silence—

"Look at that little house, dear," she said. "It is, it must be a mission, it is so still and quiet and different. Suppose we go in and tell them who we are, Herbert and Alice Ann Granger, missionaries to China."

The missionary smiled. He was young and broad shouldered, with frank eyes.

"Suppose we do," he agreed. The next moment they found themselves standing before the door of the little compound. They knocked.

Almost immediately it opened, and a tall blue eyed young woman stood in it, regarding them.

The missionary smiled.

"We are Herbert and Alice Ann Granger," he began, "and we have just landed in your little village from a long trip up in the interior. Our boat is safely anchored down below, and because it is Christmas eve we thought we would just come in and say, 'Merry Christmas!'"

"Yes, Merry Christmas," echoed Alice Ann Granger softly.

There was a silence.

"You're a missionary, of course," he added finally.

The tall blue eyed young woman nodded.

"Yes, I'm a missionary, and only Miss Kent is here with me now. We're keeping house together. Do come in. 'Merry Christmas' sounds well," she smiled, "like a million dollars."

The next moment the missionary, Herbert Granger, and Alice Ann his wife, were ushered into a little room with pictures on the walls and rugs on the floor. The furniture was of Chinese make, but comfortable and inviting.

Alice Ann Granger dimpled into smiles. "What a charming room," she cried. "We have lived so long on our little boat, where we have no room even for a chair, that I appreciate all this."

She paused. "You are not of our denomination?" she asked shyly. And then she told her what it was.

The tall blue-eyed young woman shook her head, "No. We are of a different faith, but over here creeds do not matter. The one thing that does is whether or not we are reaching souls. Whether we have an eye single to the needs of these poor creatures."

Just then a woman came into the room, sweet faced, and with hair threaded with

Best Remedy for Cough Is Easily Mixed at Home

You'll never know how quickly a stubborn cough or chest cold can be conquered, until you try this famous recipe. It is used in millions of homes, because it gives more prompt, positive relief than anything else. It's no trouble at all to mix and costs but a trifle.

Into a pint bottle, pour 2½ ounces of Pinex; then add plain granulated sugar syrup or strained honey to make a full pint. This saves two-thirds of the money usually spent for cough medicine, and gives you a purer, better remedy. It never spoils, and tastes good—children like it.

You can actually feel its penetrating, soothing action on the inflamed throat membranes. It is also absorbed into the blood, where it acts directly on the bronchial tubes. At the same time, it promptly loosens the germ-laden phlegm. This three-fold action explains why it brings such quick relief even in severe bronchial coughs which follow cold epidemics.

Pinex is a highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway Pine, containing the active agent of creosote, in a refined, palatable form, and known as one of the greatest healing agents for severe coughs, chest colds and bronchial troubles.

Do not accept a substitute for Pinex. It is guaranteed to give prompt relief or money refunded.

silver. The tall young woman introduced her new found friends in a few words.

"Herbert and Alice Ann Granger, missionaries, dear?" she said. And then she added with a bright smile, "I am Patricia Maitland, and my friend and fellow worker here is Margaret Kent. The best part of us."

In a moment or two, tongues were unloosed, and the four foreign missionaries in China were talking busily.

In one of the lull's Margaret Kent spoke, "It is Christmas eve," she said, "and you must not think of going to your boat. We want you to spend the holiday with us. And after supper we will make candy and trim the Christmas tree."

"Make candy!" cried Alice Ann Granger, clasping her hands, "and trim the tree! How Christmasy and delightful! We used to do that at home."

After the simple little meal of tea, bread and butter and cold meat, they all repaired to the kitchen, and were soon deep in the manufacture of Christmas candy.

Leaving it to cool they trooped back to admire the Christmas tree.

"Tomorrow night we'll light the candles," said Margaret Kent, "and perhaps on it will be a little gift for you. I would not be at all surprised to find one there."

Alice Ann Granger flushed.

"But I've nothing for you," she cried. "Not a thing! It does not seem right coming in as strangers as we have, and sharing all your lovely hospitality and then giving nothing in return."

Margaret Kent suddenly put her arms around her.

"Do not say that," she said, "for you have given us yourself, which is the greatest gift of all."

Then Alice Ann Granger knew that on that Christmas tree would surely be a gift for her.

It was the next day, and Alice Ann Granger was so happy. The table was spread with a white cloth. In the center stood a little basket of holly, and there were silver knives and forks and pretty China plates.

She helped with all the preparations and did her best to make herself of use. When dinner was finally served, what a festive occasion it was! Sitting by her husband she enjoyed to the fullest that Christmas dinner in the little mission.

There were baked chickens, with dressing and gravy, just like mother had at home, hot rolls, currant jelly, and for dessert plum pudding. What a dinner it was and what a Christmas Day!

Dusk was falling by the time the dishes were washed and put away. Then they lighted the candles on the Christmas tree. From the tree Alice Ann received two packages. One contained an exquisite little jade pin. Another proved to be a delectable box of Christmas candy. For the missionary himself there was a silk handkerchief and a little leather bound pocket Testament.

Alice Ann suddenly turned to her new friends.

"How kind you are! How good you have been," she faltered, "to two lonely missionaries in China—Herbert and me, What can I ever do to repay you? Oh, it is too large a debt for me even to try to cancel. But you have made me so happy. I—I was a stranger and ye took me in." Margaret Kent stroked the soft golden hair.

"Who could help being good to you, child," she said tenderly. "You have done more than we, for as I have said, you have brought us the gift of yourself."

Suddenly outside the window Alice Ann Granger heard the sound of singing.

"What is it?" she said with an excited little cry.

Margaret Kent smiled.

"Just my native boys singing a little Christmas song I taught them. Do they not sing beautifully?"

They listened until the voices died away, and there was silence again. In it Alice Ann was thinking of many things. She thought of the little boat anchored close by on the river. She thought of their kerosene lantern, and the bed upon which she had to sit to dress. She knew before her stretched miles and miles of weary traveling—traveling always among those not of her kind. But it was all right. God had given her a Christmas Day—among friends.—Susan Hubbard Martin.

Schoolgirl learns simple health measure

WITH all the talk there is nowadays about the independence of the sub-deb generation, your reporter got a great kick out of hearing a grandmother describe how her granddaughter was following a good old tried and true method of improving her general health.

"My granddaughter, Margaret," says Mrs. Zell of 6231 Catherine Street, Philadelphia, "read about Nujol, was interested in it, so sent for a sample." It seems she has been taking a tablespoon of Nujol once a day since and expects to continue this treatment. Already she has found an improvement in her general health, her system functioning normally where other remedies had failed.

That's one of the best things about Nujol. It is just as harmless for young girls, or babies even, as it is for adults. For Nujol contains no medicines or drugs. It can't upset you because it works so easily, regularly, in a normal fashion. Nujol was perfected by the Laboratories, 2 Park Avenue, York City. It can be bought where for about the price of a good movie. Get a bottle of Nujol today and try it, won't you. In sealed packages.

When BABIES are upset

Baby ills and ailments seem twice as serious at night. A sudden cry may mean colic. Or a sudden attack of diarrhea—a condition it is always important to check quickly. How would you meet this emergency—tonight? Have you a bottle of Castoria ready? There is nothing that can take the place of this harmless but effective remedy for children; nothing that acts quite the same, or has quite the same comforting effect on them.

For the protection of your wee one—for your own peace of mind—keep this old, reliable preparation always on hand. But keep it just for emergency—it is an everyday aid. Its influence will ease and soothe an infant who cannot sleep. Its regulation will help an older child whose tongue is coated because of sluggish bowels. All druggists have Castoria; the genuine one—Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper.

MINISTERS' ANNUITY FUND

The following statement is from the pen of one of our dear friends, the late Dr. Jos. B. Hingsley, who with rare wisdom and skill handled for many years the work for the superannuated ministers of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

1. The Ministers' Annuity Fund is scientific, actuarial, and economical, and costs approximately half as much as the present imperfect, unscientific endowment and apportionment plan. It will be perpetually solvent, will constantly balance its budget, cash its promises, and make each day bear a day's pension burden.

2. The Fund simplifies pension administration, solves difficulties, does away with petty, annoying, vexatious rules, regulations, restrictions and entanglements, and maintains ministerial morale at a high level.

3. The Fund requires certain fixed contributions from ministers, which will be applied exclusively to their own pension benefits, or returned, with interest, should they leave the Presbyterian ministry.

4. The Fund substitutes for endowments and apportionments certain fixed contributions from each church for the benefit of its pastor and for the entire ministerial group.

5. The Fund utilizes established actuarial and reserve principles and compound interest.

6. The Fund provides for three dire contingencies—disability, old age and death.

7. The Fund deals generously and equitably with widows and children.

8. The Fund is connectional or general, not local, and is adjusted to expanding denominational administrative problems.

9. The Fund immediately reduces and ultimately does away with apportionments, or "askings."

10. "Detached" ministers and the organizations served by them will carry their legitimate share of the pension cost, and will no longer "cast their pensions burdens" on the pastoral charges.

11. The Fund underwrites certain definite pensions.

12. Pension administration will become uniform and personal, and ultimately routine and almost automatic.

13. Pensions will be divorced from the Church's benevolent program.

14. The plan of the Ministers' Annuity Fund will itself answer all questions concerning it.

COMPARE THE OLD PLAN

- a. An uncertain gratuity paid by the Church.
- b. No accrual of interest.
- c. Constantly rising costs.
- d. Unmeasured promises.
- e. Expectations disappointed.
- f. Church's resources drained.
- g. Insolvent, deficits constantly increasing.
- h. Today's pension burden added to yesterday's and passed on to tomorrow.
- i. Ignores sound financial theory.
- j. Operates by "rule-of-thumb," "hand-to-mouth" methods.
- k. Doomed to financial disaster.
- l. Proffers an uncollectible claim.

—AND—

THE NEW FUND

- a. A reserve created by ministers and churches.
- b. Compound interest utilized.
- c. Contributions stabilized.
- d. Defined, computed pensions.
- e. Promises cashed.
- f. Church's resources conserved.
- g. Perpetually solvent. Assets constantly increasing.
- h. Each day lifts its own pension burden, leaving the scales in perpetual balance.
- i. Based on scientific computations.
- j. Employs established actuarial, reserve methods.
- k. Has a sound financial future.
- l. Guarantees definite pensions.

Finally. When the Minister's Annuity Fund shall be in operation, and the accrued liabilities provided for, the accruing obligations for future services will be provided for perpetually by annual contributions and compound interest, apportionments will cease, except in special cases, pension matters will be handled quietly and confidently, and the attention of laymen and the ministers will be given to other matters.

We urge the careful study of the plan, request your suggestions or approval, and solicit your help.

Poling Resigns Pastorate

Work for Youth Movement Continues as President of Christian Endeavor

A. Poling has resigned the pastorate of the Marble Collegiate Church on Fifth Street, New York, effective January 1, 1930, in order to give more of his time and energy to the young people's movement throughout the world.

His resignation was announced to the congregation on October 20th. Increased and heavy responsibilities have been placed upon him in the recent years. It has been clear to him for some time that he must be relieved of some of his duties. The question has been put down as to whether he should continue an arduous pastorate, even the greatest in America, or give his time to the wider fields of the Christian movement with which he has identified himself.

After endeavoring for five months to secure the withdrawal of his resignation, the continuance of his ministry in the Consistory of the Collegiate Church has finally acquiesced to the interest as president of the World's Christian Endeavor Union and associations, as successor to Dr. E. Clark, have laid increased responsibilities upon him with the consequent growth of the Christian Endeavor movement. He is also leader of the National Youth Radio Conference and has ministered to millions of young people throughout the coast-to-coast program of the National Broadcasting Company on the Blue Network. His relationships include Editor-in-Chief of the Christian Herald, President of the General Synod of the Presbyterian Church in America, and Director of the J. C. Penney Foundation, a religious topic institution.

Poling was a close personal friend of the former pastor of the Marble Collegiate Church, Dr. David Wells, and came to the church as a special preacher and in 1923 as minister. During the last six years regular congregations have increased. The evening services are perhaps the largest in New York. The church carries on a wide range of activities. Many young people and men have been attracted to its activities. As a result of the emphasis in the Sunday school service alone, more than 1000 have made a definite public profession of their desire to receive the sacraments of the church.

Poling has indicated that he will not accept any other preaching assignment, at least, not in the immediate future. Tentative plans already made for his schedule through the end of the year include a trip to England and a return in January in connection with the World's Christian Endeavor Convention to be held in London, England, in August, 1930. On his return he will occupy the pulpit of the Marble Collegiate Church in intermission next Easter. His resignation does not contemplate any

S. C. Synod's Work Committee For Program

Chairman F. W. Gregg Gives Reason for Supporting P. C.'s Plans for Deliverance

There are a number of important reasons why the Presbyterian College $350,000 Program of Deliverance should be made an unqualified success, in the opinion of the Rev. Dr. F. W. Gregg, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church at Rock Hill, S. C., and chairman of the S. C. Synod's Work Committee. Dr. Gregg outlines the following reasons:

"First. It will make secure an institution of which all of us are proud. A fine plant, a devoted and able faculty, an excellent location, a splendid body of Christian students—no finer school is to be found.

"But all this is threatened by the debt. Removing the debt removes the threat and puts the college permanently on its feet.

"Second. The Presbyterians of South Carolina want a hand in the education of our young people. We believe that we contribute a vital factor in good citizenship. Our sister churches are all doing their part. If we lose P. C. we are probably out of it for good. The Baptists have five colleges in the State, the Methodists have four, the Lutherans three. Episcopalians, Catholics and others are doing their bit. Shall we desert the field? The North Carolina Synod supports two high

Dr. Wilson Of Korea On Furlough

Noted Missionary Doctor Now at Richmond—Twenty-One Years as Physician to Lepers

Dr. R. M. Wilson, a medical missionary of the Southern Presbyterian Church and for the past twenty-one years chief physician of the large colony supported by the Mission of Lepers, New York City, is now on furlough in America and tells of great progress made in his field in restoring Koreans to health and usefulness. Dr. Wilson has seen 300 cures of leprosy in Korea.

Dr. Wilson, while in America, is at Mission Court, Union Theological Seminary, Richmond. He is to speak much during the coming year before church groups, medical societies and other gatherings.

Concerning his leper work in Korea, Dr. Wilson says:

"Our general hospital and leper hospital handle about 1,200 cases every year. I supervise a colony of 300 patients at Soonchun, and supervise the treatment of 500 cases at Funsan, Korea. We have sent several hundred cures from our colony, and only a small percentage of these have returned to the colony for further treatment. About one-half of our patients are able to do bodily work.

"Lepers built the entire colony with their own hands. Masons, carpenters, painters and others constructed the buildings and made them habitable. These lines of industry have proved

All Ready For P. C. Program

November 10 S. C. Synod Will Start its Campaign to Deliver Their College From Debt

Everything is in readiness for the formal opening on Sunday, November 10, of the Presbyterian College Program of Deliverance.

This campaign, the goal of which is $350,000, will be conducted throughout the Synod of South Carolina.

An organization of more than a thousand laymen and clergymen has been completed and is in readiness for the intensive effort of the appeal.

This intensive effort, beginning Sunday, will continue through Tuesday, November 19, among the members of all Presbyterian churches in the Synod.

Special speakers in some of the churches and pastors and church chairmen in others will set forth the details of the Program at the formal opening Sunday.

There will be no collections or offerings in the church services, it has been pointed out by leaders of the campaign. This is to be an organized, personal effort program with chairmen and committee members canvassing their prospects personally.

While the formal opening is not to begin until Sunday, there has been a great deal of special gift activity going on. The general special gift work has been under the direction of William P. Jacobs, of Clinton, the general chairman, and Rev. John McSween, president of the college and associate general chairman, in co-operation with members of the executive committee.

The group and church chairmen and Rev. John McSween, president of the college and associate general chairman, co-operating with the executive committee also have been conducting special gifts work in groups and churches in an effort to have a substantial part of the goal subscribed prior to the formal opening. All church chairmen have been urged to canvass their larger prospects early.

Controlling Synods And Southwestern

Three States Supporting the College at Memphis Have Acted—Louisiana Yet to Meet

Three of the four synods which co-operate in the control of Southwestern have met, and the fourth, the Synod of Louisiana, will meet on November 19.

The Synod of Mississippi met on September 17, and, with a heartiness and unanimity which is unequalled, decided to inaugurate a campaign for $400,000 for Southwestern, which is that synod's share of the $1,200,000 fund which was sought from the four synods.

The Synod of Tennessee met on October 1. That synod had practically subscribed its quota of $305,000. Many churches, however, did not reach their goal, and a committee of ten, including Dr. James I. Vance, chairman, was ap-

Among the subjects to be discussed at the Congress are the following: Youth and The New Internationalism; The Implications of the Kellogg-Briand Pact; Reduction of Armament; Education and World Peace; Present Status of The World Court with Reference to the United States; Russia Today—Not Yesterday; The New Internationalism and the Kellogg-Briand Pact; Armistice Day Memories and Responsibilities; Enduring Peace through Co-operation of the Races; Tenth Anniversary of the League of Nations; The Preacher and the New Internationalism; Community Service for International Goodwill; The New Internationalism in the Next Ten Years.

Austin Seminary Head In Charlotte

Dr. T. W. Currie, President of Theological Institution, Holding Meeting at Second Church

Rev. T. W. Currie, D.D., of Austin, Texas, president of the theological seminary of the southwest, is in Charlotte, holding a series of Bible studies at the Second Presbyterian Church, with his friend, Dr. J. F. Hardie, the pastor, who is an ex-Texan himself, coming from Houston.

Dr. Currie has won for himself a reputation of being unique as a Bible teacher, and many conferences of our own and other religious organizations, as well as churches of all sorts, seek him for studies of the kind he is now giving. He is arresting, entertaining, thought-provoking, with the emphasis on the last word.

The services will extend over the week, closing with next Sunday. There are services at 3:30 and 7:30 p. m. At the afternoon services the general theme is "Messages of John," and the different topics are as follows:

His subjects for each afternoon service are Monday, "God, Jesus, Man;" Tuesday, "The Universal Appeal of Our Savior;" Wednesday, "Jesus the Giver and Sustainer of Life;" Thursday, "Jesus the Source of Light and Truth," and Friday, "Jesus the Keeper of Men Here and Hereafter."

Dr. Currie's general topic for the evening services will be "Messages of Matthew." Monday his subject will be "The Meaning of Conversion According to John the Baptist;" Tuesday, "The Meaning of Conversion According to Jesus;" Wednesday, "The Meaning of the Kingdom of God According to Jesus;" Thursday, "Why Citizens of the Kingdom Carry on According to Jesus;" and Friday, "Favorable and Unfavorable Opinion of Jesus Constantly Current."

Dr. Glasgow Will Not Accept Presidency

Knoxville Pastor Decides Not to Accept Presidency of Training School—Holds Evangelistic Services at Davidson

Dr. Samuel M. Glasgow, who had been chosen as head of the Assembly's Training School at Richmond, has decided not to accept the position. This was after careful consideration. He prefers to stay in the regular pastoral work.

Dr. Glasgow was at Davidson last week, speaking to the students twice daily, at the regular chapel exercises in the morning and night. He came here under the auspices of the Davidson Y. M. C. A. Officials of that organization expressed gratification over the attendance and results of Dr. Glasgow's series of soul-stirring sermons.

Dr. Glasgow closed his four-day evangelistic services at Davidson College, by talking upon the subject, "Life Plus," making an earnest appeal to the students to devote their lives to the service of Christ, surrendering their talents completely to the Master."

Dr. Glasgow told his hearers that they could experience "life in the heights, the life abundant, and the life plus, with its precious and satisfying reactions to our conscious possessions," by giving away their lives, "freely, completely, courageously and gloriously." As a second essential to enjoying the "life plus," the speaker warned them not to forget life's humble service, maintaining that "the marks of greatness are out deep and low in life's humblest paths."

"Finally, if you want your life to be the finest, finished product, take your hands off the keyboard of your own life, and allow the Master Musician of the souls of men make music upon your life, which shall fill them with a glow and a peace and a joy, unknown apart from his touch."

schools, three junior colleges and three standard colleges with a membership only twice our own. The A. R. P. Church with little more than half our membership has definitely decided to remain in the field of education. Is it time for us to run up the white flag and quit?

"Third. Many of us believe that our State is now beginning to arise out of her many adversities to set her feet upon a solid prosperity from the commercial and industrial point of view. This will only increase the importance of the right kind of education. Presbyterians will not be content to have no hand in that all-important matter. Good business sense would demand that we keep our hand in now, even though it strains a bit to do it—Where there is no vision the people perish.

"Let us think today of the South Carolina of the future, and of the Presbyterian Synod of that day also! They will be such as we make them.

"Fourth. There is no satisfactory alternative. We would not be satisfied to lose, by lack of devotion and sacrifice, what has been accomplished by the labors of those who have gone before us. No other plan is favorable, for the point is that we would still have the debt—An obligation that must be paid.

A NOVEMBER PRAYER

Thornwell Haynes

O Bountiful Dispenser of Autumn's colors and companionship, Maker and One with the kindly light in broken clouds and in our neighbors' eyes, awaken us to a life-absorbing consciousness of Thine Indwelling and Royal Munificence.

Forbid that our sense of touch with Thee may be numbed by the sullen grind of toil. Forbid that our tongues should be hushed by dread, or that wandering wishes should beckon us astray. But may every living fiber of our being pulsate with the Presence of Thine Own Radiant Life, and as the birds and clouds and leaves and sunshine sing, so may we sing the song Thou hast given us.

O Wonderful Father, we hallow Thy name for this marvelous November weather, so full of Thine Infinite Sweetness and Power. Grant it may tide us into a purified and glorified Thanksgiving. Amen.

REVERENCE FOR A PASTOR

Extracts from an Address by Mr. F. C. McMillan, Pittsburgh, Pa., at Montreat, August 7, 1929

I was taught to reverence my pastor. My own pastor in Des Moines, Iowa, is the best friend I have. He loves me and I love him. There is no man that I had rather see come into my office than my pastor. We talk things over; we pray things over, and my pastor has helped me over many a hard problem.

I find folks all over the country wanting someone to tell them what Jesus has done, and it is only when we are able to tell what Jesus has done that we are able to interest men in Christ and the Church. When anyone tells me that they do not believe in Jesus Christ and do not believe in the Bible, I always ask them to explain to me a transformed life; to explain to pointed for the purpose of trying to have each church measure up to its apportionment.

The Synod of Alabama met on October 8. That synod fell short of its goal of $315,000 by more than $200,000. The members of that Synod, with heartiness and determination agreed to pay the interest at six per cent on the amount of their quota which was unsubscribed until such time as the full quota of $315,000 should be secured.

All three of the above synods evinced a deep interest in Southwestern, gave evidence of the fact that they recognized Southwestern as their own child, and that they desired and expected to meet the obligations of support which their privilege of control warrants. It is confidently expected that the Synod of Louisiana, when it meets November 19, will show a like attitude, and will evince a similar loyalty.

The 1929-30 session began with the largest freshman class in the history of Southwestern. On Friday, September 13, one hundred and eighty freshmen registered. Of this number approximately fifty were girls. According to the records in the Registrar's office the total enrollment in the four classes will be over four hundred and fifty for the first semester and will probably reach five hundred during the year.

ART OF GETTING ALONG PEOPLE

How to get along with people given by the late Mabel Crating quoted from her biography recently published by the Woman of the Y. W. C. A. The fine praise, use of gentle words, gentle manner and a gentle voice keeping a grip on our mo weaknesses are among the high the widely known leader of gave.

"Some of us make things awfully hard for others," said Miss Crating. "There are some very simple by which we can avoid doing the use of gentle words and voice. THE MINISTRY ON TRIAL was a time when the ministry was as a peculiar class, not to be criticised or despised.

Present generation of men have outgrown old-fashioned ideas, and have gone to an extreme, which, on the whole, is in the best interest of the Church.

The ministry has to stand on its own bottom by its life of service and consecration to its claims.

It is better that such should be the case. Ministers are, as Paul expressed it, "Men on trial" with their fellow men.

We are aware that there is a great difference between the minister as we see him now and as we saw him in childhood when we were young. The outer appearance and the claims are different.

For, it is evident that the minister has been on the dissecting table, and men are finding out why there should be this difference.

Here are the opinions advanced to explain the difference in quality.

The first explanation is that young men do not obtain a theological education without effort, with the result that "Many enter the ministry's office for a piece of bread."

A second reasonable explanation is that many enter the ministry without the old-time rigid discipline as to their piety and motives for entering the ministry.

A third explanation impresses us as being the most correct.

The first explanation is by no means correct, as any one who has been through a theological education will testify.

For, after you have the education, it is not the education that enters the ministry.

At the time a young man decides to enter the ministry and appears before the Church for the first time, when he faces Presbyterianism as an applicant for licensure, it is more of a form than anything else.

From our long experience of nearly 50 years we know of many to be turned back by reason of lack of scholarship, but never for a lack of piety. Piety is the all important requisite for the ministry, and by reason of its lack our numbers are languishing.

It is not to make this entrance more than a mere form, we are confronted by serious questions.

When a man comes before Presbytery and is examined upon experimental religion and upon entering the ministry.

He is a comparative stranger to his examiners and they can only judge him by his answers to their questions.

They require omniscience to avoid misstatements in the Seminary, there may be a better chance, but even before his teachers, he is too often "on dress parade," and however they may have misgivings they hesitate to send him back and thus injure him for life.

It is evident that it is in his examination before the session that his unfitness, if any should be shown.

When a boy has grown up under the eyes of a set of hard-headed business men, they ought to know whether he is moved by the right motives in entering the ministry, or is coming because it will give him a stand in respectable society or a support during his lifetime.

They should know whether he has shown any zeal in Christian work or spirituality in religious life.

Of course there are serious difficulties here. He has often relatives and friends in the church and they will resent his rejection and impute false motives to the session, which will eventually end in a church row.

Let us, however, remember that there are worse things than a divided Church when the peace and purity of Zion is at stake.

Let us remember the words of Israel, "Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord," and also that sessions should guard carefully the purity of the ministry and the good name of the Church.

"A GOOD MIXER"

Those of us who are called upon to recommend men to vacant pulpits find that among the most regular requirement is that he must be "a good mixer."

When we remember what the work of the ministry is, we wonder at this demand, yet when properly understood it should not occasion surprise. It is only another way of saying that he should be a man who can fit into the life of another man.

He should be a man who makes friends of all classes of men, not by card playing, not by making political speeches, not by telling questionable stories, but by being free and easy in his manner when thrown with the men of the world, yet always ready to sympathize with those in sorrow or with the innocent pastimes of the man on the street.

As we look back over a long ministry, we recall men who were strong preachers and popular, also. Yet they failed to win men.

They failed because their professions and practice did not tally. In the pulpit they were piously dignified, but in the smoking car they were of the earth's earthly. They preached better than they practiced, and when weighed in the scales of public opinion, they were found wanting. They forgot that because the smoking car crowd laughed at their shady stories, they respected them. In the eyes of the men of the streets, the preacher should be always approachable, with innocent points of contact with his fellowmen, but he should also be, like Cæsar's wife, above suspicion. If you lose a man's respect, you also lose your influence.

SOCIAL SERVICE IN ACTION

"Social Service" is one of those questions that has a double nature, depending largely upon the party behind it.

If the Church alone handles it for the good of the community, it is a part of legitimate work of the Church, and the more of that kind of work that is done, the better.

When, however it is a work done partly by the Church and partly by the state, it can be possibly criticized, and it is always safer for the Church to keep hands off, and never to dictate to the state what must be done.

We have always held that the Church should keep within the bounds of its commission, but at the same time to be on the alert to aid mankind whenever possible without interfering with the state.

We believe that her chief work is to save the souls of men, and also their bodies whenever possible, and often the salvation of the soul is made possible by the salvation of the body, as the care for the body gains a hearing for the care of the soul.

We see how our Lord did Social Service work when He fed the 5,000 men and women. The next day He preached about the bread of life, and He had a more sympathetic audience because He had fed them.

Workers among the poor of the cities follow this same plan.

After the feeding of the 5,000, Jesus was followed by a great multitude. He secured his audience and this is the explanation He gives: Ye seek me, not because ye saw the miracles, but because ye did eat of the loaves, and were filled.

He fed them in order to gain their favor and prepare them for hearing Him.

This is illustrated by the course of a pastor who wished to reach the many Greeks in the city where he preached.

He had his young people to hunt out the Greeks in the city, and to invite them to a fine supper prepared for them. They had the national air of Greece on the Victrola, stereoptican views of the Greek king and then the pastor addressed them, and invited them to the Sabbath School and thus secured 15 new pupils for the school.

The Church can in this way combine Social Service with the gospel preaching, and thus have the example of Christ.

THE FORCES OF EVIL

Dr. John R. Mott, who has recently returned from a world tour as the secretary of the International Missionary Union, in an address in which he appealed for a revival of evangelism in the Church spoke of the forces of evil which are at work in the world and which his extended travel gave him a chance to observe in their power and versatility in various places.

Dr. Mott was impressed with the number of the forces of evil that are at work in the world. These forces strike at the best that is in man and society, seeking to conquer all that is noble and useful. Opium, alcohol, industrial slavery, lust, gambling, and so the list could be lengthened, all inspired by greed, sapping manhood, corrupting womanhood, blighting childhood, till mankind seems wrapped in the coils of loathsome serpents from whose embrace no hope of escape is offered. And the magnitude of these evils is such that often there is no power to cope with them.

Another thing about world forces of evil that struck the traveler was the enterprise of these criminal agencies. They were active, ceaseless, ingenious, tireless, uncompromising and yet so seductive. Take for instance, the moving pictures which are so salacious, so false in teaching honor and reverence and true courage, are spreading throughout the world, entertaining probably 200,000,000 million young people per week with over-colored and vicious ideas. American producers mostly, but European, as well, are feeding the rising generation with the ungodly screens, undoing much the home can teach to the contrary. And these pictures are found in all the ports and many other cities and often villages all over the world.

The forces of evil are cruel, and shameless, caring naught for souls and morals. Like the terrible maw of a wild beast, they crush the life-blood of its victims and transmute it to silver and gold. It is nefarious and deceptive by nature, and absolutely without pity.

Dr. Mott in his address sought to arouse the Christian indignation against the enemies of youth and goodness. There can be here certainly a perfect hatred, an uncompromising war in the home, the church, the public forum, the religious press, and the various other factors of wholesomeness in society, business, and government. But as he said, the true weapons after all are prayer, preaching, home training, religious education, and even the ballot box. The forces of evil are fighting for the destruction of faith, goodness, love and hope. Let us join the battle with our Christian armor on, and girded with the sword of the Spirit let us fight for Christ and his Church.—J. G. G.

THE DEDICATION OF LIFE AND SERVICE

THE GOD-PLANNED LIFE

(Based on Leaflet by James H. McConkey)

God Has a Plan for Every Life in Christ Jesus

What a wondrous truth is this! And yet how reasonable a one. Shall the architect draw the plans for his stately palace? Shall the artist sketch the outlines of his masterpiece? Shall the shipbuilder lay down the lines for his colossal ship? And yet shall God have no plan for the immortal soul which He brings into being and puts "in Christ Jesus?" Surely He has. Yes, for every cloud that floats across the summer sky; for every blade of grass that points its tiny spear heavenward; for every dewdrop that gleams in the morning sun; for every beam of light that shoots across the limitless space from sun to earth, God has a purpose and a plan. How much more then for you who are His own in Christ Jesus, does God have a perfect before-prepared life plan. And not only so, but—

God has a Plan for Your Life Which no Other Man Can Fulfill

"In all the ages of the ages there never has been and never will be, a man just like me. I am unique, I have no double." That is true. No leaves, no two jewels, no two stars, no two lives—alike. Every life is a fresh thought from God to the world. There is no man in all the world who can do your work as well as you. And if you do not find and enter into God's purpose for your life there will be something missing from the glory that would otherwise have been there. Every jewel gleams with its own radiance. Every flower distills its own fragrance. Every Christian has his own particular bit of Christ's radiance and Christ's fragrance which God would pass through him to others. Has God given you a particular personality? He has also created a particular circle of individuals who can be reached and touched by that personality as by none other in the wide world. And then He shapes and orders your life so as to bring you into contact with that very circle. Just a hair's breadth of shift in the focus of the telescope and some man sees a vision of beauty which before had been all confused and befogged. So too, just that grain of individual and personal variation in your life from every other man's and someone sees Jesus Christ with a clearness and beauty he would discover nowhere else. What a privilege to have one's own Christ-in-dwelling personality, however humble! What a joy to know that God will use it, as He uses no other, for certain individuals susceptible to it as to no other! In you there is just a bit of change in the angle of the jewel—and lo, some man sees the light. In you there is just a trifle of variation in the mingling of the spices—and behold someone becomes conscious of the fragrance of Christ.

Every Child of God May Find and Enter Into God's Plan for His Life

You remember the story of the engineer of Brooklyn Bridge. During its building he was injured. For many long months he was shut up in his room. His gifted wife shared his toils and carried his plans to the workmen. At last the great bridge was completed. Then the invalid architect asked to see it. They put him upon a cot and carried him to the bridge. They placed him where he could see the magnificent structure in all its beauty. There he lay, in his helplessness, intently scanning the work of his genius. He marked the great cables, the massive piers, the mighty anchorages which fettered it to the earth. His critical eye ran over every beam, every girder, every chord, every rod. He noted every detail carried out precisely as he had dreamed it in his dreams and wrought it out in his plans and specifications. And then as the joy of achievement filled his soul, as he saw and realized that it was finished exactly as he had designed it, in an ecstasy of delight, he cried out, "It's just like the plan, it's just like the plan!"

Some day we shall stand in the glory and looking up into His face cry out, "O God, I thank Thee that Thou didst turn me aside from my willful and perverse way, to yield my humble life to Thee. I thank Thee that as I, day by day, walked the simple pathway of service, Thou didst let me gather up one by one, the golden threads of Thy great purpose for my life. I thank Thee, as a tiny trail creeping its way up some great mountain side, that pathway has gone on in darkness and light, Storm and shadow, weakness and tears, failures and falterings, Thou hast at last brought me to its destined end. And now that I see my finished life, no longer through a glass darkly, but in the face to face splendor of Thine own glory, I thank Thee, O God, I thank Thee, that it is just like the plan, it is just like the plan!"

Our "Too Late" is God's Opportunity

"Ah," says someone, "this is all very well for the young and the strong who have all of life before them but it is too late for me. My life has been full of blunders and failures. It is only after years of wandering that I have come to Christ. There is naught for me but the memory of mistakes and the fragments of a vanished and broken life."

In a certain old town was a great cathedral and in that cathedral a wonderful stained glass window. From miles around people pilgrimaged to gaze upon the splendor of this masterpiece of art. One day there came a great storm. The violence of the tempest forced in the window and it crashed to the marble floor, shattered into a hundred pieces. Great was the grief of the people at the catastrophe which had suddenly bereft the town of its proudest work of art. They gathered up the fragments, huddled them into a box and carried them to the cellar of the church. One day, there came along a stranger and craved to see the beautiful window. And they took him to the vault and showed him the broken morsels of glass. "Would you mind giving them to me?" said the stranger. "Take them along, they are no longer of any use to us," was the reply.

One day, there came an invitation to the custodians of the cathedral from a famous artist, noted for his skill in glass craft. Ushering them into his studio, he stood them before a great veil of canvas. At the touch of his hand, the canvas dropped. And there before their astonished gaze, shone a window, surpassing in beauty all that their eyes had ever beheld. As they stood entranced, the artist turned and said, "This window, I have wrought from the fragments of your shattered one and it is now ready to be replaced." But the splendor of the new far surpassed the glory of the old and the fame of its strange fashioning filled the land.

Do you say that your plans have been crushed? Thank God and take heart. Know this—Jesus Christ is a matchless life-mender. He will take that seemingly shattered life and fashion a far more beautiful one from its fragments than you yourself could ever have wrought from the whole. In Him your weary soul will find its longed-for rest. And the fragments that remain of God's heritage of life to you, will mean in gladsome days to come, more than all the vanished years that are crooning their sad lament in your inmost soul tonight.

Meditation

1. Believing that God has a plan for my life, I bring the gift of my will to Christ, surrendering it freely to Him, in order that in co-operation with Him, I may work out God's perfect plan for my life.

2. I bring the gift of my earliest and my latest waking moments for Bible reading and for prayer and a family altar in my home.

The architect consults his blue print; the navigator corrects his compass; the musician tunes his instrument, the artist keeps some object of perfect beauty before his eyes. And can I hope to work out God's plan for my life unless I live in communion with Him?

3. As a token that all I am and have are His, I bring the gift of at least one-tenth of my income and at least one-seventh of my time for Christ's service.

In the early days of our country, patents from the King conveying land to the early settlers, contained this pledge at the end—"In token of which, I agree to pay each year on St. Michael's day, the sum of one shilling, in fee of knight's service." In token you see, that he held himself in readiness for any service his King might ask. And we serve the Lord Christ!

4. I bring the gift of my business and profession for Christ.

And so dedicating it, I shall expect to find it transformed by His Spirit into the work which He has given me to do for Him on earth.

5. I bring the gift of my home, my social life, my recreations, my personal influence to Christ.

Paul said, "The life which I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me and gave Himself for me." Christ in me and with me now, always and everywhere? Life will indeed be a different thing for me, if I can say that, too.

6. I bring as my gift, a new standard of living, "the simplicity that is in Christ,"—in order that I may have more to give for the bringing in of His kingdom on earth.

Laying aside every weight, I go on pilgrimage with Christ, my ever-present Companion and Friend, not overburdened with luxuries, choosing the simple, sacrificial life of my Lord—following Him in all things, who came not to be ministered unto but to minister and to give His life a ransom for many.

7. I bring the gift of my friendships consecrated to Jesus Christ.

St. Teresa says somewhere, that if our love for Christ is only great enough our faith deep enough to claim it—that God will give us "for the travail of Christ's soul"—all them that sail with us. Life is a voyage. There are many who sail with me—wife, brother, child, friend.

Will they come at least into the desired haven—because of me?

LET JUSTICE BE DONE!

Warren H. Stewart, D.D.

The Ministers Annuity Fund plan of providing for retired and disabled ministers is a matter of justice. I would say this as a hard-boiled man of the world, with no interest save an academic one in it. If the matter were left to me, I would have anyone that desired to demit the ministry to, would compel such demission on the part of those inert and incompetent; and for those thorough while ones that are left, I would provide a income and a secure pension. That is simple justice. This principle is recognized by the United States Government in the treatment of its Army and Navy Officers and its War Veterans; in the teaching profession Institutions and the Carnegie Fund; in industry some of the more progressive factories and steadily increasing so; and now at last by the Church various Pension Funds that are being established.

For ministers are compensated upon a support not upon a basis of salary, commission, fees or income is rated not upon earning capacity, but estimate of current need. Too often, alas! the support is not sufficient for genuine daily needs. That many think this is evidenced by the statement that the New York Brokerage House counts more than one hundred clergymen among its clients. And yet social custom expects a minister to be a family man, and to have a worthy living standards while abstaining from costly occupations,—and this on a salary which the United States say about $1400 per year. "That is worthy of his hire"—and the hire should be the laborer.

If during his productive years a minister is from building up a competence, surely it is only a pension be provided to supplement what he saved or have put into endowments. The Ministers Annuity Fund rests its case upon the Churches, what is just and right. Too much in the past has been looked to the Church for old age help, as a mercy. But justice is a more fundamental principle than benevolence. The world's greatest wrong now, in the past, is the lack of economic justice. There is needed than charity; indeed, were justice more fully found, there would be little need for age-granting. If the Church holds up before the world the ideal of social and economic justice—she must do this by setting her own house in order first. Let her be a good employer of her own servants. Let justice be done.

COUNTING THE COST—THE STORY OF A MEXICAN BOY

O. C. Williamson

We often feel that the day of suffering for the sake of the Kingdom of God, here in our own country, is at an end. It is not true among our Mexican brethren in the west. Among the new students in the Mexican Seminary at Austin Seminary is a young man who entered the Seminary was forced to weigh his own life as a call to preach against the most sacred of relationships.

Through the efforts of friends this young man sent four years ago to Tex.-Mex. Institute at Austin. Later his sister went to the school for Mexican girls. Both were converted, and became members of the Presbyterian Church. The mother, a strong woman, persuaded herself that her children would be saved through her church.

Finally, the young man graduated last year from the Tex.-Mex. A classmate declared himself a candidate for the ministry. He felt the call, but knew his mother would be violently opposed. He decided he could tell her of his decision with her disapproval, and so could help younger brothers, as his father and step father had done.

He managed to go to Austin to take work at the State University and the Seminary. He explained his plan to his mother, asking her approval. She she had felt sure that he and his sister would be converted to their new religion, and come back to the Catholic Church and insisted that he do so. He replied, "I have a profession of faith, and I shall stick to it." She replied, "Then in that case, I never want to see you again. If you are determined to be a Protestant, you may do what you please. I will hear either of you call me 'Mother' again, or I will hear of you call me 'Mother' again, or I will hear of you call me 'Mother' again." The young man said, "Then if such is your mind, mine is made also; I am going into the Gospel." In a few hours he left for Austin. He is taking course in preparation for the ministry. One of his friends told him to think the matter over, praying that if after a week or two he was firmly convinced, he would be arranged to receive him as a candidate for the ministry. Within about a week he came and was ready for the meeting of Presbytery.

Such is the calibre of these Mexican youth, products of Home Missions in the South. It costs them heavily to follow Christ, but they

Day, but at Barium Springs, it usually amounts to a Hallowe'en week, as there are so many folks who want to have so many different entertainments that it will be impossible to crowd all of this into one night. Hallowe'en festivities commenced on Saturday, October 26th, when the Virginia Hall Mission Band had quite an enjoyable occasion at Mrs. J. B. Johnston's. There was just one member of the Band absent, and that was Edna McMillan who was playing sponsor to the Davidson football team at Greensboro, that afternoon, and did not get back in time for the party.

On Sunday we had an especially fine sermon by Mr.
Brown, and interesting meetings of the three Young Peoples' Leagues; and then again on Monday we commenced to think Hallowe'en again. Possibly one of the reasons for so much talk about Hallowe'en this year is the number of pumpkins the Truck Farm raised. They have been hauled in by the truck load and it seems that that is considered the sign of a big Hallowe'en season.

The Intermediate Young People's League is planning a rather ambitious party on Thursday night. The Seniors are putting theirs off, as so many of the Seniors are members of the football team, and this team will be in no mood for parties on the eve of the game with the Presbyterian Junior College of Maxton.

The High School Chapel period, this being the last period before dinner, each Wednesday, have been particularly interesting this fall. The various classes in the High School have planned to put on a special program once a month at this period, and the Seniors have already put on one program. This was most enjoyable, and if the other classes follow the lead of this class, we will have eight very enjoyable Chapel Periods. Then tenth grade is due to put on their program Wednesday, the 30th.

We compile a lot of statistics at Barium Springs, on a good many matters, but not everything. We sometimes wish that we had a regular Roger W. Babson for keeping tab of so many things that might not occur to us. For instance, we would like to have the numbers of questions on different subjects tabulated. Of course, at this time of year, we are commencing to have a good many questions as to what we are going to have for dinner on Thanksgiving Day. Also, inquiries about Santa Claus' health and what may be expected Christmas. It isn't necessary for the newspapers to put in "how many shopping days left till Christmas" because we can tell by the way the numbers of question about Christmas increase, that the time is approaching for this great season. Right at the present time, these questions are running about two hundred a day, which is really a very mild display of interest.

These questions come from the children. The grown-ups are all more interested in Thanksgiving and what it means for the Institution. We hope the people all over the state are giving as much thought to Thanksgiving as we are, because the very life of the Institution depends on what the Church does for it then.

Note—The orphanage beat the Maxton Junior College at football in Charlotte at the High School Stadium on November 1. We won't give the score, because it will look too bad, and we don't like to discourage a fledgling college.

BOOKS

When Janey May Was a Little Girl

A Story that teaches obedience, truthfulness, courage and kindness, by Julia Lestarjette Glover.

"In a series of events such as are likely to occur in the life of any child, the author presents the lovable sides of this little girl's character in the most natural way. Every one of the eighteen episodes of the story is told in a style charmingly simple and unaffected, and all of them teach some virtue, such as obedience, truthfulness, courage and kindness. Yet so well are these lessons woven into the fabric, that you do not feel that the writer is trying to point a moral or adorn a tale."

A splendid book for boys and girls from the ages of 10 to 15. Contains 128 pages. Five of the incidents in the story are illustrated with pen and ink drawings.

Price 40c each. In dozen lots, net, 32c.

Augustana Book Concern, Rock Island, Ill.

We are indebted to Miss Glover for several entertaining stories in this paper in recent years, and hope our young readers will secure this book from her pen.—J. G. G.

ALAMANCE RALLY DAY

The annual Rally Day program of the Woman's Auxiliary of Alamance Presbyterian Church, was given at the church, October 17, at 2:30.

Devotional was led by the pastor, of the church, Rev.
J. M. Millard. The program consisted of reading, dramatizations, special music, and a pageant.

The pageant "The Church and the Child" was presented by Misses Cora Allred and Ola Fogleman. The thought expressed in the title was impressively carried by these young ladies.

Other who took part in the program were Mesdames Nathan Smith, T. J. Pickard, W. A. Sharpe, J. M. Millard, Paul Coble and Miss Mary Ellen Millard. The program was under the direction of the Auxiliary Presiof the music.

ith—The fall has brought about a number at First Presbyterian Church. First the ol has been regraded by public school grad- of age. This required many months of scores of conferences with parents, pupils s. This system went into effect in the Sun- and the Christian Endeavor Societies on e and Promotion Day, September 22. The unday, September 29, was Rally Day. Cer- re delivered in the worship services in the artments of the Sunday School. The gen- Day program was held in the 11:00 o'clock rvice where attendance and catechism re made, teachers and officers dedicated, honor Bible Memory Work was recited eant "What Manner of Child Shall This presented. The church was beautifully and the service was very effective.

Christian Endeavor Societies had special services at their prayer meetings at 6:30. :30 the Annual Christian Endeavor Rally is held in the church auditorium. Lusk Robinson, vice-president of the Senior Society pre- sided. All of the societies had a part in the service. Dr. Frank P. Anderson, pastor, who is co-adviser for the Young People's Society installed the officers and advisers.

Mamie Gene Cole,
Director of Religious Education.

Fort Smith—October 6 marked the installation of a new record system at First Presbyterian Church. The system requires the first ten minutes of the Church School hour for marking record cards. Each pupil checks by an "X" whether or not he is on time, brought his Bible, notebook, attended Church, Christian Endeavor and Boy Scout meetings last week. After this, the cards are given to the department secretary whose desk is outside the department. Late comers mark their cards at the secretary's desk and remain outside until after the worship service.

During the class period the secretary makes out the department report for the general superintendent and returns the cards to the class pocket which hangs outside each classroom. At the close of the class period the teacher fills out class record sheet from individual cards, then returns cards to department secretary who sees that they are returned to the general secretary's office. At the end of each month report cards will be sent to the parents. Much interest is manifested in the new system and the leadership feels that it will lead to efficiency.

TENNESSEE

The Presbytery of Memphis met in stated fall session October 15, 1929, in Grace Covenant Church, Memphis, and was opened with a sermon by the retiring moderator, Rev. H. B. Wade. Rev. Geo. S. Frazer, Litt.D., was chosen moderator and Rev. J. V. Johnson, D.D., was chosen temporary clerk. Rev. J. V. Cobb was received from North Mississippi Presbytery, arrangements made for his installation as pastor of Parkview Church in Memphis. Rev. H. M. Jenkins was received from East Mississippi Presbytery, and arrangements made for his installation as pastor of Arlington and Rosemark churches. Rev. W. L. Smith was received from the Presbytery of Potomac. He is engaged in teaching in Purdy School. The pastoral relation between Rev. G. B. Harris and Ripley Church was dissolved and he was dismissed to Columbia Presbytery. He becomes the pastor of the First Church in Fayetteville, Tenn., the middle of November. The pastoral relation between Rev. T. S. Daniel and Trenton Church was dissolved. Rev. Albert Keller was dismissed to St. Louis Presbytery, U. S. A., Rev. D. R. Freeman to the Presbytery of Abingdon and Rev. J. H. Rosenberg to Memphis Conference, M. E. Church South. Presbytery approved the Plan of Union between our Church and the U. P. Church with only one dissenting vote. The following were elected commissioners to the 1930 General Assembly:

Ministers—Principals: W. E. Powell, G. S. Frazer, Litt.D., Samuel Stanworth, D.D., Alternates: E. M. Nesbitt, H. B. Wade, E. D. McDougall, D.D.

Ruling Elders—Principals: E. H. Livermore, John Keenan, W. A. Taylor. Alternates: A. M. Sanders, Eugene Early, J. W. Morrison.

VIRGINIA

Richmond, Ginter Park—Our Sunday School Rally Day this year was the best in the history of the church. The attendance passed our former record, and the offering amounted to $923.22.

On last Sunday, we had a thrilling address from Dr. R. D. Bedinger, our missionary to the Congo, supported by this church.

On the first Sunday after the opening of Union Seminary and the Assembly's Training School, we had our annual joint communion service, a blessed and inspiring occasion. There are not many places in the world where so many active Christian workers could be gathered together.

Winchester—This church has purchased the lot and building on the south side of the church at a cost of $11,000 to be used as an annex to the Sunday School. About $9,325 have been raised to pay for the property and it is thought the balance will be raised before the church year is over. The church is congratulating itself that the purchase and payment of this property have not interfered with the benevolent budget of the church. The church closes the first six months of the church year on the honor roll of the Presbytery and Church where it has been for some time. It makes monthly remittances and stands more than square at the end of the six months in the payment of its budget. There is a most commendable spirit of unity and co-operation among the people as well as a justifiable pride in doing its part for the whole work of the church.

Norfolk Presbytery met on October 14 at Virginia Beach, Va. Present, 28 ministers and 20 elders. Elder W. E. Nicholson, of the Calley Memorial Church was lected moderator and the Rev. J. W. McKnight, temporary clerk.

The Rev. T. B. Ruff was received from Roanoke Presbytery and arrangements were made for his installation as pastor of La Crosse Memorial Church at Phoebus, Va.

An inspiring conference on Evangelism was held under the leadership of the Home Mission Committee, with the Rev. S. J. Venable presiding, and the principal address made by Dr. J. L. MacMillan.

An interesting address in the Ministers' Annuity Fund was made by Dr. W. J. Martin, of Davidson, N. C.

An appealing address was made by Dr. L. Wilson Jarmon, president of Mary Baldwin College. He reported the institution as starting off well for this session, which is the first with only college students.

Candidate Erwin Hyde was dismissed to the Christian Church of Canada.

The Assembly overture on union with the United Presbyterian Church was not approved but our Assembly was urged to continue negotiations with that church looking forward to a general union of all Presbyterian bodies.

Presbytery adjourned to meet in Phoebus, January 13, 1930.

R. B. Grimman, Stated Clerk.

The Presbytery of Winchester met in Piedmont, W. Va., on September 24, 1929. Present, 25 ministers and 18 ruling elders.

Officers: Judge G. K. Kump, moderator; Rev. J. Beaty Smith, reading clerk.

As to the proposed basis of union with the United Presbyterian Church, the Presbytery voted "No" to its immediate adoption, but approved it as the foundation for further negotiations, and requested the General Assembly to recommit the said basis of union to its ad interim committee with instructions to collaborate with the similar committee of the United General Assembly in the extension of that basis to include a definite solution of the chief differences in administration, to safeguard the property rights involved in the proposed merger, and to provide for a true union without danger of substantial dissentiate minorities.

The Presbyterial sermon was preached by the Rev. G. G. Sydnor, D.D., on "The Security of the Believer." A memorial of the Rev. Geo. T. Chandler, D.D., was read.

An ad interim committee presented a thorough study of the Ministers' Annuity Fund, with a definite plan of procedure for the Presbytery and its churches. The general plan of the M. A. F. was approved, but the details of the report were postponed until the next stated meeting, or a called meeting, and the committee was enlarged and continued.

Country Church Work: A permanent committee was appointed on this department of work.

Next Stated Meeting: Charles Town, W. Va., April 15, 1930. J. A. McM., S. C.

ANNUITY FOR THE AGED OR DISABLED MINISTER

Dr. Thos. P. Harrison

Head of English Department of North Carolina State College

The plan proposed for retiring aged or disabled ministers is in accordance with the soundest principles of business. The provisions are that each church pay each year an amount equal to seven and one-half per cent of the minister's salary, and the minister paying two and one-half per cent as premium for the annuity. This method of providing for an inevitable emergency is orderly, safe, and sure, as against the present method which is emotional, unsystematic, and essentially uncertain, and which has proved utterly inadequate.

By the peace of mind resulting from the knowledge that his future and, dearer still, that of his wife and children, are assured in this manner, perfectly in keeping with his self-respect, a minister's efficiency, his physical, mental, and spiritual health, would be immeasurably enhanced. The minister sees old or disabled ministers thrown out of pastorates, dependent upon the charity of relatives or friends, their wives and children suffering actual privation: can he but be filled with apprehension with regard to his own future?—Faith? Yes; but "faith without works is vain."

The annuity plan is already in successful operation in the North Presbyterian Church and in the Episcopal Church. It is no experiment. Formulated by the most efficient insurance actuaries in the United States, and proved workable in practice, the annuity plan is as safe and sure as the best and strongest system of insurance.

It is unthinkable that the Presbyterian Church should fail to adopt the annuity plan. To provide the three million dollars required as preliminary to the complete institution of the annuities, will not require the Church to reduce its benevolent offerings to other causes.

The annuity plan for retiring aged or disabled ministers is by far the most important forward movement now before the Presbyterian Church.

Lesson for November 17

LIVING WITH PEOPLE OF OTHER RACES

Ruth 1:1-18; Jn. 4:5-10; Acts 10:1-11:18; Romans 1:14; Gal. 3:28, 29. Print Acts 10:9-15, 30:35; Gal. 3:28, 29

Our lesson this week is a most important one, and at the same time a most difficult one. It is important because we of the South have a real problem on our hands, the problem of living with the negroes as Christians. Difficult not only because of the complexity of the problem, but also because it is hard for those of us who were born in the South to face the problem squarely, without the prejudices which have been engrained in us from childhood. In this lesson we will try to put such prejudices aside, and face the questions that naturally arise when we think of the relationship of the two races purely from the Christian standpoint. But first we must examine some of the Bible passages that have to do with living with people of other races.

Read the passages assigned with these questions in mind. What does this passage teach about living with people of other races? What light if any does it throw on our proper attitude here in the South toward the negro?

I. The Bible Teaching

1. As given in the Book of Ruth. Most modern students think that Ruth was written specifically to teach the Israelites how to live with people of other races. Through most of their history the Jews were openly contemptuous of "Gentiles." In their latter history especially this was the case; and the Jews who returned to Palestine after the exile refused to have any dealings with the surrounding peoples, and passed rigid laws forbidding all intermarriage. This was the situation, many students think, when the little book of Ruth first made its appearance. The author reminded his compatriots that once upon a time a man of Judah left his own country with his wife and two sons because of a famine in the land and made his home in Moab. After awhile Elimelech the husband died. Later the two sons took themselves wives from among the daughters of Moab. Then the two sons died. In great bitterness of spirit Naomi the mother prepared to return to Bethlehem in Judah. One of her daughters-in-law, Ruth, insisted on accompanying her, though she realized that it would be difficult for her to make a new home in a foreign country. She gave her decision in those words which still have a strange power to move the heart: "Entreat me not to leave thee, and to return from following after thee; for whither thou goest, I will go; and where thou lodgest, I will lodge; they people shall be my people, and thy God my God; where thou diest will I die, and there will I be buried; Jehovah do so to me and more also, if aught but death part thee and me." In Bethlehem Ruth supported Naomi by the labor of her hands, fell in love with a well-to-do, but very timid Jew, named Boaz, married him under very romantic circumstances, and became the ancestress of David.

Your prejudices against the Moabites, and against all foreigners, says the author of Ruth in effect, are unfounded. They may be assimilated into the life and ideals and religion of Israel as certainly as Ruth. Many of them are as worthy as Ruth. Do we need the Book of Ruth today? Do we have prejudices against people of other races? Are these prejudices well founded? How much of our attitude toward the negroes is due to prejudice?

2. As given us in the teachings and example of Jesus. Jesus also came in contact with peoples of other races. In his day there was very bitter prejudice existing between the Jews and the Samaritans. The Samaritans we remember were the descendants of the foreign people who had been brought into Israel after the captivity of the ten tribes, and who had intermarried with the poorer people who had remained in the land. Ezra and Nehemiah had refused to allow them to aid in the construction of the temple, and so there was instigated the great feud between the two peoples which continues to the present day. This feeling was especially intense in the time of Jesus. The Jews despised the Samaritans, and if they could help it refused even to deal with them. In traveling from Judea into Galilee they preferred to take the longer and more difficult trip over the Jordan and back through Perea rather than travel through Samaria. Jesus, however, deliberately chose to travel through Samaria. There, seated by the well, he entered into conversation with a Samaritan woman. The woman the record tells us was greatly astonished. She said: "How is it that thou, being a Jew, askest a drink of me, who am a Samaritan woman. For Jews have no dealings with Samaritans?" And yet to this woman Jesus unfolded some of the greatest spiritual truths recorded for us in Scripture. Then when urged by the woman's neighbors he remained in Samaria for two additional days, accepting their hospitality, and opening to them the words of life.

Jesus had no prejudices against peoples of other races. He dealt with them all on the same basis. Would he make any difference today in his dealing with people of other races? Would he, if he came to visit us here in the South, adopt our attitude toward the negro?

3. As given us in the teaching and experiences of Peter. Acts 10:1-11:18. The disciples of Jesus found it difficult to overcome their prejudices against people of other races even with the example of their Master before them. We find as a matter of fact that even after Jesus' death and resurrection they continued to observe their Jewish customs, and to hold themselves altogether apart from Gentiles. In this connection the experience of Peter as recorded for us in Acts 10:1-11:18 is most significant. It seems that he was on the house top (used by the orientals somewhat as we use our porches) at dinner time, and very hungry. Suddenly he fell into a trance. In this state he saw a great sheet let down from heaven, filled with all kinds of animals. And there came a voice to him: Rise Peter, kill and eat. But Peter said, Not so Lord, for I have never eaten anything that is common and unclean. In other words he had always followed implicitly the dietary laws prescribed by Moses, according to which some meats were clean and could be eaten, while others were unclean and must be avoided. Then the voice came a second time: What God hath cleaned make not thou common. These words were repeated three times, and then the sheet was withdrawn. While Peter was still puzzling over the significance of this vision there came to him messengers from Cornelius, a Roman officer stationed at Caesarea, asking him to come and speak with him. Peter now began to understand the purport of the vision. He went the next day to Cornelius' house. He explained to his host very frankly that it was unlawful for him, being a Jew, to come into his house, and that he had come for one reason, and for one reason only, because God had just showed him that he should not call any man common or unclean. Then he asked Cornelius what he desired of him. Cornelius in his reply told him how God's providence had led him to send for Peter in order that he might hear the Gospel. Peter began his story with those memorable words: "Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons; but in every nation he that feareth him and worketh righteousness is acceptable to him."

Would Peter have gone to Cornelius' house, and partaken of his hospitality, actually eaten with him (11:3), if he had been a negro? Would we? God is no respecter of persons? Is that true? Do we act as though we really believed it to be true, in regard to the black man? God is no respecter of persons. Are we?

4. As given us in the words of Paul. Paul was the greatest of all the followers of Jesus. More than anyone else he recognized and developed the universal elements in the Gospel. He looked forward to the time when all mankind should be united in Christ, when all those barriers that separate us from our fellowman should be broken down, and we should be one in Jesus Christ. One of his characteristic teachings is found in Romans 1:14, "I am debtor both to Greeks and to Barbarians, both to the wise and to the foolish." He recognized in other words that he had an obligation to carry the Gospel to men of every race. And that Gospel he saw must ultimately do away with those prejudices that prevent our realization of the brotherhood of man. "There can be neither Jew nor Greek, there can be neither bond nor free, there can be no male and female; for ye are all one man in Christ Jesus." Gal. 3:28-29. Even clearer is his teaching in Col. 3:11, "There cannot be Greek and Jew, circumcision and uncircumcision, barbarian, Scythian, bondman, freeman; but Christ is all, and in all."

If Paul had been living in our day would he have added: In Christ there cannot be black or white? Would he have approved of the action of a New York rector who when he saw a few negroes quietly worshipping in his church publicly from the pulpit asked them to leave?

We wish to apply these teachings that we have studied especially to the relations of blacks and whites in our own day because our problem, so far as we of the South are concerned, centers here. Before we come to some of the concrete problems presented, it may be well to note a very common misconception which enables men theoretically to justify attitudes which otherwise it might be difficult to justify. There are many people who believe that the Bible teaches that the black race will always be a subject race. That is an utterly false notion. It is based on a patently incorrect interpretation of Gen. 9:25, and began to be used before the Civil War to justify slavery. As a matter of fact the curse there is pronounced by Noah (not God) against Canaan, not Ham. And the descendants of Canaan are not the negroes, but as Gen. 10:15ff indicates the white races that dwelt round about Israel. So far as the writer knows there is only one passage in the Bible which specifically mentions the negroes, and at the same time reveals how God regards them as compared with the white races. That passage is Amos 9:7. The prophet there tells Israel that they are no more precious in his sight than the Ethiopians. Having noted then the Bible teaching, let us come to

II. Its Application in Our Own Day

We wish to be practical here, and not theoretical.

1. Should the negro receive equal value for equal payments? The writer knows a family who drove through the country with their baby and colored nurse. They stopped over night at a hotel. The nurse went down to the kitchen for her evening meal. She received only a portion of the regular meal that was offered the white patrons, and part of that was collected from the plates that came back from the dining room. But the family paid the same price for her dinner as they had for their own? Was that treatment Christian? In traveling on trains, etc., in the South negroes pay the same for the white patrons of the road. Do they receive the same accommodations? They do not. The service which they receive on the train, in the waiting rooms, etc., is not equal to that received by white people. The same is true of steamships. Those, for example, that ply between Westport, Va., and Baltimore. Doctor Moton, president of Tuskegee Institute writes in his book, "What the Negro Thinks" (a book which every Southerner should read): "The obvious reason that he almost always gets the better of it. Save for the exceptions already mentioned, the accommodation for the negro in common carriers means neglect, inconveniences, and often ill treatment and abuse. For all of which he pays the same price that the white man pays for the same service. And this rankles deep in his bosom, and inevitably an ever increasing contempt for the white standards of honor and justice and simple honesty. When the negro pays what the white man pays should get as good service as the white man gets? What is the Christian answer?"

2. Should the negro receive equal justice with the white man in our courts? Doctor Moton writes: "The negro knows perhaps better than he knows anything else of his chances of securing justice in the courts in various sections of the country where discrimination is in things legal and common are so slim that in many instances he has nothing to gain by resorting to the courts, even for litigation with members of his own race. It is accepted by most as a foregone conclusion that a court anywhere will render a judgment against a man in favor of a negro plaintiff. It is a matter of common experience that the court will impose a heavy fine upon a negro when convicted of a crime that a white man convicted of the same crime. Now all phases of the government is the sentiment that the negro more unblushingly demonstrated than the officers of the law, those whose duty it is to see that the person of those who through guilt, accusation, or conviction come within the notice of the law. In prison the most palpable distinctions are made between white and negro prisoners in food, clothing, bedding, facilities for dress and personal hygiene, privileges and rules. Everywhere the principle is carefully maintained—no negro must not under any circumstances receive the same consideration as a white man." Are these charges true? Hardly think that they will be denied by any one who knows the facts. Is such discrimination just? Is it justifiable to lynch a negro? Note in this connection that most negroes who are lynched are not lynched because the law has failed to punish him, that an innocent negro is cruelly done to death.

3. Should the negro receive equal advantages with the white man. In Pullman accommodations say Dr. Moton says: "It is practically impossible for the average negro to go to the ticket window and secure Pullman accommodations of any sort. He may ask for them, but there is no law against that, but he is either told that they are all sold out, to come back again, or to go to the conductor at the train. In at least two states it is forbidden by law to sell Pullman accommodations to negroes and for a negro to travel in a Pullman. Should he have equal housing advantages? In the most southern cities the negroes live in the most unattractive, the most neglected, the most undesirable section of the city. "Civic authorities make no provisions for the improvement of the streets in this section; water and sewage do not extend to these parts; electric or gas lights are not available either for the homes or for the streets. The police visit here only when sent or called in; and of all it is frequently the location of the "red light district" operated and patronized by whites. All the negro section of these cities is a wholly unattractive section in which to rear children." This does not mean that negroes are content to live in such sections. If secure better accommodations they are forced to move into white districts. In Richmond, Va., for example, negroes forming about one-fourth of the city's population are crowded into one-eleventh of its area. Attempts to move out into better sections of the city they have met with a segregation law, which prevents such a move. After a few years the law will probably be found unconstitutional, but other means will be found probably to secure the same ends. Does the negro get a square deal in the matter of housing? And what about the schools? Are the negro schools equal to the white schools? Do they be? Doctor Eleazar writes: "Though a great deal is being done for negro education, public provision for this purpose are still far from adequate, and usually inferior to those for white children. There is a county, for example, which spends on its white schools an average of $57 per child and on its negro schools an average of $1.52 per child. There are other counties where like conditions prevail, and a number of states in which the average is five, six, or eight to one in favor of the white child? What conditions in your county and state? Should we be satisfied with such conditions?"

4. What about our social relations with the negro? Doctor Moton says that the terms "nigger," "coon," and "shine" are all expressions of contempt for the personality of these to whom they are applied. Are they offensive to members of the negro race. Should we continue to use them? Should we continue to

November 17—Who Is My Neighbor? Luke 10:25-37

Leader

When the Presbyterian Church sets aside the month for the study of Home Missions. The week of November 17-24 is a week of prayer for Home Missions in our territory in the south and west. The auxiliary is studying a book on the subject of missions, "The Crowded Ways," which describes work in the cities. As young people we should be interested in Home Missions, and our topic today is "Who is my neighbor?" which is intended to impress the importance of Home Missions. The church is advertising Home Missions. The new secretary of the Home Missions who is in charge of the department in Atlanta office of Home Missions is Rev. P. D. Miller, who is himself from a section in Georgia. His brother, Rev. Hoyt Miller, is a foreign missionary in Africa, while he is a home missionary. They were both from the Nacoochee Institute in Georgia, now the Rabun Gap-Nacoochee Institute, which has schools in the mountains of Georgia.

The Greatest Short Story

For today is the story of the Good Samaritan. Jesus answered the question of a Jewish man he asked, "Who is my neighbor?" Jesus told the story of a Jewish priest and a Levite who passed by a man who had been left robbed and wounded on the roadside. These men helped the unfortunate man, though they did go over and look at him as he lay unconscious when a Samaritan passed by he went and bound up his wounds, put the sufferer on his own beast, took him to an inn, and left money to pay for his care. This is the story which has often inspired deeds in all ages since Jesus told it.

Old Meaning of Neighbor

The word "neighbor" is an old Anglo-Saxon word, and means the next farmer, and the ancient meaning of it was someone that lived very near. We use this same meaning today, as we speak of our neighbors in the vicinity of our homes. In olden times the population was sparse our next neighbor was a mile, two miles, even ten miles away, but he was a neighbor, and people felt very kindly toward him and willing to do for them things they would do for others. In our days, especially in cities, the art of being a neighbor is not cultivated as it has been. Often people are poor, and never get acquainted with their neighbors. Sickness, misfortune, and even death come, and the next door pay no attention to the sorrows of their neighbors. As Christians, we should make friends with our neighbors, and do all we can to help them.

SUNDAY SCHOOL

In the south by their first names, or should we give them greater respect by calling them by the name of the poorest white, the title of Mr. or Mrs. of the richest men in North Carolina is a man who has a large and successful insurance company. Do you call him Mister? Ought you to? Last year negro men and women received degrees from the University of the South? Would you call them Mr. or Mrs.? Ought we to? Negro children are brought up by their parents, their teachers. In their presence should we address negro mothers, teachers? A few years ago the writer was in Edinburgh, carrying on his post graduate study. He and his wife were the home of one of the professors in the University of Edinburgh. They found when they arrived that the table was a negro student, educated, cultured—sitting at the table with them at the same table. What should we do? Mrs. Hoover is from the North. Her husband is the president of the United States. She set the example for the wives of the congressmen. One of them was a Negro. She was accordingly invited to the White House. Did Mrs. Hoover do the same? At the last meeting of our General Assembly was included about five colored commissioners of the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. They were together with their white brethren in the business of the Lord. But in the great auditorium at Montpelier they sat off to themselves, in a corner. And they were in the dining room with the other commissioners at a separate table. The writer understands, and may be wrong, that they ate in the kitchen. Have you approved of such treatment?

Jewish Idea of Neighbors

Jesus was rebuking this very thing in the parable of the Good Samaritan. He was showing just how the Jews felt about neighbors. The Jews were very exclusive in their notion of neighbors. They must be Jews, at least, and some sections looked down on even other sections of Jews. The citizens of Judea had a very poor opinion of Galileans, and the Pharisees thought all other parties of Jews much lower than themselves. They hated the publicans, and were glad when any misfortune came to them.

Christ's Idea of Neighbors

As Jesus told the story, and asked the lawyer, which of these three was neighbor to him that fell among thieves, the lawyer was forced to say, He that shewed mercy on him. And Jesus said, Go and do thou likewise.

If we should say what is Christ's idea of neighborliness, the answer would be that he would do just what the Samaritan did. Jews and Samaritans hated each other, and had done so for centuries. And so Jesus takes an extreme case. This Samaritan ignored all his prejudices against a Jew, and the man by the side of the road was doubtless a Jew. He saw he needed help and that at once, and without hesitation, he did all he could for the helpless man, and went the limit by offering to come back and do more if necessary. This was what Jesus did for us when he came to save us from sin. He is the world's greatest neighbor.

The Church and Its Neighbors

Our topic today is a home mission subject, and we can lay down the primary principle that everybody is our neighbor, and that we owe the gospel to all the world. But there seems a special duty that we owe to the people of our own land. A neighbor is one in need, whatever be his name and state.

We clip from the Program Builder the following practical suggestions as to how we can be neighbors in Home Missions:

Every place we have a mission school or an orphanage, medical care is given to people who could not otherwise afford it. One notable piece of medical work being done by our Church in the name of Jesus is that of Dr. W. C. Tate and Dr. Hardin in Grace Hospital at Banner Elk, N. C., where seven hundred hospital patients were cared for last year in addition to several thousand treatments given to out-patients. We have the medical work being done at Highland Institute in Kentucky, where Dr. E. J. Knopf has recently located. Stuart Robinson School at Blackey, Ky., has the service of a school and community nurse. Besides these, there is our new Nurses' Training School at Stillman Institute, Tuscaloosa, Ala., where colored nurses are to be trained for medical service to their own people. Home Mission money spent in being neighbors to the sick is an investment in the name of Jesus.

Our Church is neighbor to the colored people at Stillman Institute. We are failing to be neighbors to our colored friends as we might. It is a difficult task to which all too little thought and money is given.

Our Church is trying to be a neighbor to the foreign people who come to our country. These include Italians, Cubans, French, Chinese, Czecho-Slovaks, Jews, Syrians and Mexicans. If you feel this task is small, just remember there are 300,000 Jews and 1,000,000 Mexicans in our Southern States. We have not always been as kind as we might have been to these who come as strangers to us. If you are ever in Kansas City, Mo., go to see the Italian Missions. Dr. J. B. Bisceglia will be glad to show you a work of which you will be proud. Or if you should go to Baltimore, Md., look up Dr. A. J. Kligerman and ask to see the Christian work he is doing among the Jews. If you go to Key West, Fla., find Dr. de Barritt and see his Presbyterian Church for Cubans. And, if you chance to go to the Rio Grande country in Texas, visit Texas-Mexican Institute for boys at Kingsville, where Dr. J. W. Skinner lives. These are some of the places where we as a church are trying to be neighbor to our foreign speaking friends.

Our Church being neighbor to ambitious boys and girls desiring an education would take us through all our mission schools with their 3,000 students. Our purpose is to educate these in head and heart that they may become worthy citizens of the State and the Kingdom of God. As a Church we are trying to be neighbor to the Choctaw Indians in Oklahoma.

Our Church is being neighbor to hundreds of children in our orphanages. Through preaching the gospel of forgiving grace we are trying, as a Church, to be neighbor in the highest sense to the 25,000,000 non-Christians within the bounds of our Southern States.

May I Have a Personal Part in This?

I can take a new interest in the home work.
I can be kind to these classes of people who are my neighbors. My church cannot help them much in being Christian if I treat them in an unchristian way.
I can make this a definite object in my prayers.
I can listen to see if God may want me to give my life to be spent for these, my neighbors.
Always I can divide what I have with my neighbors through my gifts to the Church. This is the month we are asked to make an offering for Assembly's Home Mission work. I can do without at least one thing I had planned for this month and give the money to be used in His name among my neighbors.

NEW CHRISTIAN SOCIAL SERVICE LEAFLET

A new Christian Social Service leaflet is just off the press, whose title is, "The Cross, The Church, The Community." Service has been the motto of our endeavor, and how we need to serve! But in our service we have often forgotten that it is Christ whom we serve, not philanthropy, and that the bringing of Christ to the thirsty soul is the highest service possible. Read this leaflet, for it has a message for every soul as well as for the Social Service Chairman.

The cover bears a miniature poster which could easily be duplicated by the Social Service Chairman in large size. A poster such as this will prove to be an inspiration to every Auxiliary and Church.

This leaflet is free and may be ordered from the Department of Woman's Work, 270-277 Field Building, St. Louis, Mo.

PERSONAL EVANGELISM

The interest of the women of the Church in Prayer and Personal Work has always been deep. From the very beginning of the Woman's Auxiliary especial emphasis has been placed on the prayer life, while interest in Bible Study has yearly increased.

Ten years ago, at the call of Mrs. Winsborough, the "League of Intercessors" was launched, and thousands of women enrolled for special prayer for our Church and for our mission work. The logical outcome of prayer, is work and these praying women in 1920 adopted as their slogan, "Every Woman a Personal Worker," thus realizing the responsibility of every Christian to be a Soul-Winner.

Two New Leaflets Stressing Personal Evangelism

Two new leaflets are just off the press and are available for the use of everyone who desires a copy.

"Personal Evangelism—A Call for Witnesses," is a free leaflet which will be sent upon request.

"Witnessing" is a leaflet based upon the Acts of the Apostles which presents a series of Bible studies on the theme of Personal Evangelism. (Price 5c.) Both leaflets are written by Miss Sammy D. Hogue, the new Director of Spiritual Life in the Department of Woman's Work.

"Personal Evangelism Package" of leaflets and helps. (Price 15c.) This package includes the two above mentioned leaflets and a number of other practical and inspirational helps.

STORY

THE GUEST AT THE INN

David Lyall in The British Weekly

To the big, unruly household at Mains of Orde, one day early in a certain new year, which was never afterward forgotten by the Ordes, but was marked on the calendar of their hearts and minds as "Gerry's year," there happened a wonderful thing. A little child came all the way over the seas from "the Indies," as Ann Mackay, the old nurse, insisted on calling it, to Mains of Orde to be mothered and cared for. But in the end he mothered and guided them all, as the sons of heaven do to mortals when they have only a little while to spare for the task.

He was the only child of an old school friend and very distant relative of Ellen Orde, who had, much against her parents' wishes and will, married a medical missionary and gone away with him to a remote part of Northern India from which neither he nor she ever came back, even on a brief furlough. Gerry came instead, and though he was seven years of age, he had never been out of India. His journey in itself was an amazing thing, for he came all these thousands of miles entirely alone and unaccompanied, simply being passed on from one kind hand to another without meeting with anything but kindness. But that was because he did not know there was any other sort of thing in the world. He came to Mains of Orde because in Mrs. Hewitt's private papers had been found a letter addressed to Mrs. Orde, charging her to take care of the little orphan boy because his grandmother in Scotland, to whom he would naturally have gone, had died, and of all her relatives and friends she preferred that Gerry should go to Ellen. In her charging letter she gave some of her reasons, the chief of which were that she knew Ellen's big, motherly heart, and that as she had boys of her own she would make room for one more. Little Gerry, wholly unconcerned, arrived at Glenordy Station on a Saturday afternoon, by what happened to be the market train. He had a label tied around his neck, and the guard having read it, called "Mr. Orde" rather jocosely, thought there was more than a suspicion of softness in his voice.

"Here, Master Orde, is a parcel for you."

"A parcel, Alec?" repeated Robert Orde, a big dour-faced man, not much liked even in his own neighborhood. "And where is it? If it's a big parcel it must lie till one of the carts comes in. The gig will be full enough."

"Here it is," said the guard. "And I wouldn't mind taking it home myself if there isn't room at Mains of Orde. Jist drop a handy line to Melrum, and I'm on the job."

Robert Orde did not hear the last jibe, for he was staring down into a small round, childlike face, which had not much color except the glow of the big starry eyes.

"I'm Gerry," said a sweet, shrill voice, "and I'm going to Auntie Ellen." He gave a little shiver as he spoke, for it was a January day, and one of the snellest, and a few flakes of snow were already beginning to filter through the soundless air. Now Robert Orde had six children of his own, of whom he was only moderately fond, and they were a most unruly crew, in spite of the tight hand he held over them; they feared nothing under heaven.

But, among them all there was nothing so soft and so appealing as this; even the baby, with her lusty yell and her round, defiant eyes, made no such tug at his heart strings. He read the label, and tumbling to the truth at once, stooped down and lifted the little boy in his arms.

"If you're for Mains of Orde, my little man, come along then."

Instantly the little arms met tightly around the thick neck of Robert Orde, and the cheek, no harsher than thistle-down nestled against his. And such a thrill ran through the big farmer that he was surprised at himself. It was the utter trustfulness and absence of fear that did it, as well as the spontaneous expression of affection. Gerry, you see, had met with nothing but love in his short life. It was, therefore, the only environment he knew. It took Mains of Orde some time to arrange the unexpected passenger on the front seat of the gig, but presently concluding that the only safe and warm place was on his breast, and under his big ulster, he directed the groom to take the driver's place. Thus did Gerry, warm and snuggling, make his first ride through the nipping Highland air to the last inn on the road. But happily neither of them knew that it was to be the last inn, and if love and longing could have kept Gerry, he would never have gone away. He fell asleep nestled against Robert Orde's breast, and so fearful was he of awaking him that he took unheard-of pains, and even achieved quite a gymnastic feat in getting out of the gig at the front door. He was impatient of the racket that was going on within; it sounded as if the boys were hurling themselves or one another down the stairs, and there were cat calls and other unholy sounds which indicated that the young Ordes were enjoying themselves after their own particular fashion. Their father pushed open the door. Dod, the eldest son, was standing cheerfully on his head, his feet being steadied by his second sister, Tibbie, who had perhaps the tenderest heart among them.

At sight of her father carrying something in his arms, however, she forgot to steady the feet, with the result that Dod, off his guard, tumbled to the floor with a mighty thud which awoke the sleeping child.

"Can ye not hold your din, you imps of darkness?" their father said angrily; but the child sat up as if uneasy at the strident tones, and suddenly smiled on them all.

"What, lots and lots of them!" he piped shrilly. "Let me down to play, too."

But at that moment Ellen Orde, wife to Robert, and mother of the unruly, came out of the parlor with her knitting in her hand to welcome her husband. She was not yet forty, but looked older, for she lived a harassing life, especially of late years, keeping the peace between her husband and the elder boys. "Mercy me, father, whatever have you got?"

Robert Orde set down the little boy, and Ellen darted forward, while the unruly whole five of them clustered around, Dod scratching his head in a kind of consternation. "O Bob, it must be Nancy's bairn," she cried in a voice which thrilled. "Her very eyes are looking at me out of his head."

And she ran and gathered him to her heart likewise, and once more Gerry came to his own.

The expression on the faces of the young Ordes made an interesting study. "Is he biddin' or stoppin'?" inquired Dod, comically. "And what are we to do wi' him?"

"Keep your hands off him, you young cubs," his father retorted sternly. "He's not for the like of you to handle or torment, you can see that!" Dod, the unregenerate, whom his father's threatening words and mien never failed to incite to rebellion and mischance, made a gesture which might mean anything, but presently, Gerry being released, looked around the little circle, then of his own free will toddled up to Dod and inserted some warm, clinging fingers into that hopeful's hard and not over-clean hand.

Mains of Orde turned aside with a grunt, for the spectacle made him to think. Relations between Robert Orde and his eldest son, just turned fifteen, were at a critical stage, and kept Ellen awake at nights. The father had not the right way with the boys; he shouted at them too much, and thereby won neither their respect nor love. And just of late he had refused to concede to Dod even one redeeming feature.

Dod was rendered mightily uncomfortable by this mark of signal regard from the little stranger, but from his first-night attitude Gerry never afterward departed. He loved them all, but Dod was his principal chum.

.. THIS WAY LIES DELIVERANCE

Administration Building

THIS WAY lies deliverance . . . of the Church and College . . . through the Presbyterian College Program of Deliverance. For the raising of the $350,000 fund now being sought not only will free the College from the shackles of debt and life-sapping payments, but also will deliver the Presbyterian Synod of South Carolina from burdensome emergency contributions for college operating expense.

THE ORGANIZED campaign to obtain subscriptions to the Deliverance Fund will open formally Sunday, November 10, throughout the Synod. An organization of more than one thousand laymen and ministers will conduct the intensive appeal from that date until Tuesday, November 17. With everybody in the organization co-operating, with every individual church doing its share success is assured.

PRESBYTERIAN COLLEGE will be fifty years old next year, having been founded in 1880 by Dr. William Plumer Jacobs, also the founder of Thornwell Orphanage. As the College nears its Golden Jubilee, it comes before the Synod of South Carolina on its record of a half-century of service to the Church. Proud though it is of that record, Presbyterian College is not content to rest upon what it has done in the past. The College is looking ahead, planning for the future—a future in which it can render an increasing, unlimited measure of service . . . once it is delivered from its burden.

When the tornado passed, the family came out of the corner where they had sought refuge and surveyed the wreck. There were a few things left standing about the ranch, but not many; and the downstairs rooms were in hopeless disorder.

"The most serious thing is the loss of our kitchen," mourned Mrs. Dewey. "There isn't a thing to eat in the house and no way to cook it even if there was."

"I'll drive into town and get a stove and some supplies," said Mr. Dewey. "You can get along until I come back, I guess."

But when he came to look for the wagon it was gone!

"I can't walk in," he said. "It's too far."

"Never mind, dad," said John. "I'll rig up a small aerial out of what wire there is left and send a radio to the broadcasting station. The men there will see that we get help."

Half an hour later he was trying to get in touch with the broadcasting station. He called it over and over again, listening each time to the announcer and to the beginning of the musical number. Finally the music stopped suddenly and the announcer said:

"One of our listeners has just telephoned in to say that somebody is calling this station in the Morse code. If the person wishing to talk to us will send his message promptly we will do all we can to help him."

Then John sent his message. He told about the tornado and the wreck it had made of the house. He asked them if they would send out food and a few carpenters.

"We certainly will," came the announcer's voice. "Anything else?"

"That's all, thanks," was John's return message. Then he began to call Ernie, but no reply for two hours.

"Did it hit you?" he queried.

"Did it hit me?" was the reply. "I'll say it did. But thanks to your message of warning, we had all the livestock in the barns and everything else tied down with rope.

"Did your aerial stay up?" "Nope. I came down with the first strong gust of wind. But do you know those radio towers built of steel like the framework of a windmill?"

"Yes. What about them?"

"Well, my father is going to buy two of them for me."

"How can you use two?"

"I can't. One of them is for you!"

"For me?"

"Yes. You see, my father figures that your warning saved him over three thousand dollars in damages, so he feels he can afford to spend a little bit to repay his debt to radio."

"That's funny," was John's reply. "My father feels we ought to have radio telephone instead of this dot-and-dash business. He has offered to buy us the tubes if we'll make the sets."

"And will we?" asked Ernie. "Both together now—"

And anybody listening in at that wavelength would have been surprised to hear two stations at once saying: "I'll say we will!"

STORY AND EVENT

The evening meal was ready, as it had to be on the very stroke of the master's return, and at the head of the table, between Aunt Ellen and Dod, the little new chum sat perched on a high chair, his face shining with complete joy. Everybody looked at him and he looked at everybody, and it was a sort of mutual admiration society. And somehow, for the first time in the history of Mains of Orde since this family had possession, all wrangling was banished from the table. Usually it went on merrily from start to finish of the meal, this one contradicting the other, the father correcting and reproving, the mother trying to keep the peace. Wrangling undoubtedly is a habit, and when it gets a deep enough hold there is no incubus more difficult to shake off. But they felt somehow that the little stranger, who had come alone to them all the way from India, must not be chilled or hustled on the night of his arrival. He seemed both to bring peace and to claim it.

From the keynote set that night he never afterward departed, and in the nine months he sojourned at Mains of Orde he accomplished a work beside which even the harvest of his parents in India had to bow. Nothing troubled the child, nothing put him about or dimmed his sunny smile. All the Ordes were passionate tempered, and at times, when Gerry saw its aftermath a puzzled look would come on his face, and he would creep up to the angry one and lay a small, quiet hand on the lips or the arms that were ready to smite. And it was so sweetly done that, somehow, nobody could ever be angry, and lest Gerry's smile should be dimmed, anger was always stayed.

"It's a wonderful bairn, that, Bob," said Ellen Orde to her husband one day, as they watched him chasing a butterfly among the roses in the front garden. "Sometimes when I look at him I feel a kind of creep."

"Why, Ellen?" asked Orde harshly. "I'm sure he's a happy bairn. He laughs with the foremost and the best."

"Ah, yes! he laughs but he doesna belong here, Bob. He's only come for a wee while."

"I wouldna bletcher if I were you, my woman. Look at him. He's the perfect picture of health!" said Mains of Orde, though not angrily. Even he had modified his speech to suit the gentle listening ear of Gerry. "If we take the same care you have done since he came, what for would he not bide here forever?"

"I don't know, Bob, but it's what I think," she answered.

Never was a child more sweetly mothered than Gerry. Each of the young Ordes had some particular service to render him. He shared in all their games, and the roughest element died out of them because Gerry must not be hurt or tumbled too much. But to hear him rock and squeak with delicious laughter when they played hunt the slipper or pirates in the barn, was to hear the music of the spheres. It was a long, beautiful, golden summer, which was ever afterward cherished in memory by the Ordes, and, although all have grown to man's estate, none have forgotten "Gerry's year." In October Dod and Dugald went off to a boarding school, and the term was half over when they were summoned by telegram to come home to Mains of Orde. "Mother doesna say who is bad, Doogie, but I know it's Gerry," said Dod, with a face of gloom, as he proceeded to ram a few things into his week-end bag. "If it had been anybody else she would have said. Beside, it's only Gerry that would want us at home."

The BEAUTIFUL ROSE WINDOW of NOTRE DAME

THE Famous Rose Window of the Cathedral of Notre Dame in Paris is a work of infinite beauty and splendor. It is perhaps the masterpiece of all art glass windows. Built in the Thirteenth Century, it stands today unsurpassed in beauty and excellence of workmanship. The color of gorgeous gems and precious stones are wrought into this magnificent spectacle for the admiration of passing thousands through all the years. If a world-wide search were made for a monumental material approaching the beauty of the assembled colors of the famous Rose Window, such material would be found in

It is found, also, that the beautiful colors of Winnsboro Granite come from the various crystals it contains, which are identical in substance to many of the finest of precious stones and jewels of the order of the amethyst and moonstone. When the surface of this granite,—which is a composite of these actual precious stone crystals,—is highly polished, all the beauty and color of these jewels become visible. Could a more beautiful monumental stone be found anywhere than this?

Winnsboro Granite is most lasting because it is composed of the most durable mineral known. It is superbly beautiful because it is made up of the substance of precious stones and gems. Inscriptions on it are clearly legible because of the marked contrast between cut and polished surfaces.

Be sure that "Winnsboro Granite" is specified in your contract for monuments. Like other high quality materials, there are many inferior substitutes, which resemble this granite on first appearance, but do not possess its lasting qualities and permanent beauty, because they contain more deleterious elements, such as water, lime and iron. These elements tend to disintegration and discoloration.

Have your monument dealer furnish you with a personal guarantee from the quarries that the monument you purchase is cut in genuine Winnsboro Granite.

The certificate of the quarries is signed by B. H. Heyward, Treas., and General Manager, whose signature insures genuine Winnsboro Granite. A facsimile of this signature is reproduced below.

He said "us" but he meant "me" and among all his school treasures he kept must sacredly under lock and key odd little scraps of paper covered with weird hieraglyphics in which Gerry unburdened his childish heart to his best chum. It was about five o'clock in the evening, a cold, wet, drizzling November night, when they arrived at Glenordy Station, and were met on the platform by their father.

"Yes, it's Gerry. He's bad. Doctor Lungair says he can't live, and he cries everlastingly for you, Dod. Get up and let's get away."

Dod took off his boots outside the nursery door, and with his young face set in calmness which had no replica within, approached the bed where Gerry, with pink cheeks and eyes of unearthly brightness, was holding out two quivering, joyful hands.

"O, my Dod, my lovely Dod!"

Dod clambered on the bed, and gathered the little frail body in its white night gown in his arms. Nobody sought to stop or stay him—in fact, those who were there just stole away. But not Dod's anguished, loving arms, nor all the prayers of a household united for the first time in its existence in one common purpose, could stay the little pilgrim whom the light beckoned from afar. Dod lay on the nursery floor in his clothes that night, and he of all the household, at three of the morning, heard the little joyous cry of recognition, "Mummy! Mummy!" which fell from Gerry's parted lips at the moment when the angels came and took him away.

"I don't know what to do with Dod," said Ellen Orde to her husband three days later. "He has neither eaten nor slept since Gerry went away. I'm fair at my wit's end."

Robert Orde went out by the door without a word. He was shaken without and within, and his own grief was tinged with a strange remorse. He had called Dod a rough tyke times without number, and had even said in his hearing that he never expected him to come to any good. Yet it was to the tyke the little guest at the inn had clung so mightily, and from whom he was so loath to part. Hardly knowing how or why, Orde wandered to the churchyard, where the snow had blown already on the little new made grave. Something else was there beside the snow, the prostrate figure of the tyke, with his red head bared against the lilies the Orde bairns had tied together for their little comrade. Very silent he lay, but Orde could see his shoulders heave now and again.

Very lightly did the father step across the powdered grass to his boy's side. "Get up, Dod. It's no use lad. We—we canna bring him back." Dod's only answer was to kick out with his foot, as if he spurned the agonizing truth.

"Get up, my man, I—I'm vexed to see ye like that. Your mother aye said he didna belong here. He's—he's gone to his ain."

"Then what for, what for," bawled Dod, "did he come here at all? We was—we was better before he came. Naething mattered then, now everything does."

"Get up, my man, and let's go hame thegither," said Robert Orde, half kneeling, with a strange shyness, by his son's side.

The soul of a boy is a fearsome thing, that can scarce be handled save by the God that made it. And Robert Orde had stumbled blindly in his dealing with this one, and now had to start the alphabet afresh.

"Go away," said Dod, in a stifled voice. "I'll come when I'm ready." "No, my dear, you're coming now," said his father firmly. "We've been the better of Gerry, Dod, and your mother thinks this was what for he came."

Dod remained silent, and his shoulders ceased their tumultuous heaving. "I'm—I'm sorry I've been so hard on you, Dod. Get up, and we'll try again. I can't bring Gerry back, but I can be a kinder friend to you." Dod half turned, looked with startled eyes into his father's face, then

"I prefer American Bible Society bonds before many others, first and foremost because they are an investment for eternity."

"My wife and I are pleased that our gift will ultimately aid a great missionary agency. We like your promptness in remittance."

"The satisfaction that can help to aid the Gospel message and that the will continue perhaps after I have gone gives pleasure."

"One attractive feature of your annuity bond agreement is that it pays a substantial income to the annuitant as long as lives; and pays promptly."

"The thing most gratifying to me is the knowledge that after I am gone my money will still be working. That is, its permanency of God's Proclamation."

"I am now past seventy-one, and have money vested in other ways give me trouble and anxiety; but the income from your annuity bond agreement comes as regular as the seasons."

"To my mind your American Bible Society Bonds have many attractive features but especially pleased that your gift will aid in a great missionary work, and when I am gone there he no cost of administration, no inheritance no wrangling of heirs."

"Your Annuity Bonds seem to me eating the seed and having it too; present income, no tax as I am not in the come tax class now, the assurance that will go, the money is already in the hands of the Society that I have known loved so long, for the work in the world."

"Wills are so often contested, set aside and a portion or all of the estate diverted and consumed in litigation. But an annuity bond from the American Bible Society automatically releases the funds from one's estate, at the same time insuring him a permanent income for life. In short, one feels that he has turned his property over to one of God's big trust companies."

"I have known people of keen intellect and good judgment, who in their old age could not be restrained from making unfortunate investments. It is a satisfaction that I have something laid away where I cannot waste the principal, should I be so unfortunate as to live in body longer than in mind."

Ministers' Annuity Fund and Home Missionaries

November is the period designated by the General Assembly for the study of the pioneer and sustaining work of the Church which we call Home Missions.

This agency of our Church sends out and seeks to support the workers for whom Christ has commanded His people to pray. These men and women are sowing the seed from which the whole Church will reap the harvest. They are laying the foundations deep and strong on which the Church will erect the Temple of God.

The personality of these sent forth for this pioneer work is their real asset which opens the door of opportunity, and is the instrument through whom the Spirit works.

Surely the Church has overlooked this fact. The support of our Home Missionaries in many instances has been wholly inadequate and the prospects for their future have been meager and uncertain. This hinders the development of strong, cheerful, hopeful personalities. Man does not live by bread alone, but he lives by bread.

The Home Missionaries have not had "a living wage"; they have not been able to buy books and magazines needed as their tools; they cannot go to conferences where their minds may be quickened and their hearts inspired by blessed fellowship; they have not been able to provide the social and health and cultural advantages which every true man should seek for wife and children; it has been wholly impossible to lay by anything for days of coming inactivity. (Read carefully I Corinthians 9:1-14.)

This state of affairs has brought restlessness into the ranks of these self-sacrificing servants of the Church. It has rendered it increasingly difficult to secure needed effective workers, and has hindered the efficiency of the work.

When the Church knows these facts the needed funds will be made available. When they were presented to the General Assembly in 1928, one per cent additional was added to the "Askings" for the Assembly's Home Mission Committee. Let the Church consider this need and respond liberally to it!

The Assembly's Mission Committee is heartily behind the Ministers' Annuity Fund. They consider it a safe, sane and economical plan to meet a situation which is serious and becomes more critical each year. But the Ministers' Annuity Fund cannot correct the ill of the Church's with-holding from its workers that which is their due. Many salaries of missionaries must be increased. The increasing of the salary is not only an imperative necessity for the present, but it automatically increases the pension benefits for disability, age or death.

The Church must more adequately meet this pressing need and provide for those who are our own. Other facts on Home Missions can be secured from the offices of the Assembly's Home Mission Committee, 101 Marietta Street, Atlanta, Ga.

Federal Council Committee Meets

Gathering in Chicago, December 4-6—Dr. Lingle to Preside

Federal Council Bulletin makes following announcement:

The Executive Committee of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America will meet in Chicago, December 4-6, 1929. The meeting will be the St. Methodist Episcopal Church, which has generously offered its building for this gathering. The Executive Committee of the Council is made up of approximately twenty-five official representatives of the denominations of the Council. Each denomination, however small, has two representatives in this governing body with an equal representative for each of its communicants.

The annual meeting is the occasion for formulating major policies and for the work of the churches for their coming year. The chairman is Dr. Walter L. Rorer, Moderator of the General Assembly of the Southern Presbyterian Church, now President of Davidson College, Davidson, N. C. This is the first Executive Committee meeting which Dr. Lingle has presided over. The vice-chairmen are Dr. Wilbur N. Shart of the United Presbyterian Church, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Mrs. R. Judd, Baptist, of Brooklyn, N. Y.; and Bishop Charles H. Phillips of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Cleveland, Ohio.

The quadrennial body of the Council and also of its committees are invited to attend as co-workers, members, sharing in all the work, but without the right to vote. (Continued on Page Two)

The Story of an Annuity Bond

How the Lewis and Ingles Memorial at Union Seminary Has Proved a Benediction

Union Theological Seminary has had an interesting and happy experience with the first Annuity Bond it ever executed, covering the period from 1906 to 1929.

Col. Thomas Lewis and Mrs. Lewis, pioneers of Roanoke, Va., had given to Union Seminary in May, 1906 the sum of $1,000.00 to establish a joint memorial of Col. Lewis' mother, Jane Tosh Lewis, and of Mrs. Lewis' mother, Agnes McClanahan Ingles.

This evidently turned their thought to the permanent good that could be accomplished through gifts to Union Theological Seminary. So, later in the year, Col. Lewis wrote, saying they had $20,000.00 to give the Seminary to be added to this memorial, but they would need the income during their lives, and they wished to help care for three other persons should they survive.

Accordingly an Annuity Bond was given Col. Lewis, binding Union Theological to pay to him and to Mrs. Lewis $1,200.00 a year as long as either of them should survive, and then to divide this amount annually among the others should they survive.

During the twenty-three years that the bond yielded its maximum income, Col. and Mrs. Lewis received from Union Seminary the aggregate of $27,600.00, a sum greatly in excess of their original donation, while the principal remains intact ready to begin a new era of beneficence.

A happy feature of this transaction has been that Union Seminary, by careful management and segregation of this gift, has been enabled through nearly a quarter of a century to provide a reliable, care-free, tax-free income for this aged couple, one of whom attained the age of 91 years, and that it will continue to serve them in ministering comfort to a relative of theirs, blind and afflicted.

It is pleasant to think how, by a single wise step, these Christian friends were able to accomplish four most commendable objects.

The wise step was their placing this sum during their lifetime and under their own supervision exactly where they wanted it to remain for all time.

The four commendable objects were: A worthy tribute of loyalty and filial affection to their parents.

A thoroughly dependable support for their own declining years.

An extension of their accustomed benevolences long after their own departure, and under circumstances of peculiar distress and need.

A continuing and perpetual annual contribution towards supplying the world's greatest need, that is, of sound spiritual leadership.

How else could they have accomplished so much? And another thing they have done which seems to have been foreign to their thoughts—By establishing this splendid foundation in memory of their mothers, they have at the same time erected a worthy monument of their own piety, benevolence and wisdom.

P. C. Program Now Under Way

Over 1,300 Committeemen at Work to Raise $350,000 to Clear the Debt and Stabilize the College

The Program of Deliverance, designed to raise $350,000 for Presbyterian College, is now under way.

Thirteen hundred laymen and ministers throughout the Synod of South Carolina are at work on the campaign.

Church chairmen and committees are busy in 250 of the 270 churches in the Synod, while in some of the churches without regular pastors and where no chairmen have been named some special gifts work has been done.

Chairmen and pastors made short talks in a majority of the churches last Sunday, November 10, to mark official opening of the campaign.

William P. Jacobs, general chairman, and Rev. John McSween, president, brought their meetings to a close last week and are busy this week following up the special gifts work.

Other leading ministers in the Synod have issued statements urging united support of the Program.

Rev. Dr. Alexander Sprunt, pastor of First Church, Charleston, declared that the college is worthy of support.

"Presbyterian College," he said, "has won its way to a position of honor and service which challenges the support and sympathy of the Christian public. Like many other institutions it has had its days of discouragement and disappointment, but has triumphed over obstacles of the past until it has attained to the position it enjoys today of fellowship and friendship amongst the colleges of highest grade.

"It is an institution to which any parent may confidently entrust a son with an assurance of wholesome instruction and discipline and no uncertain sound as to whence we have come and whither we go.

"The faculty is composed of men of ripe scholarship and positive Christian experience—men who by diligent study are thoroughly prepared to teach in the various departments assigned them.

"The institution is located in the midst of a community removed from the common temptations to young men. The stamp of Godliness was so indelibly made on the little city by the late Rev. Dr. William Plumer Jacobs that to live in Clinton is, in a measure, to breathe the spiritual atmosphere in which he lived for so many years.

"There is an old saying, 'No excellence without great labor,' and the excellence to which Presbyterian College has come is the result of hard labor; not alone the labors of students and faculty, and even the self-sacrifice and toil of leadership, but of the citizenship of Clinton as well, and the members of the Synod.

"The Church for which our Lord suffered and died will never see the day when it will not require the sympathy and loyal support of its members. Our Lord has made it thus, and it is therefore wise that it should be so, however much some may speak of the constant needs of the Church.

"This College is of the Church and for the Church, and in this regard is like the Church. The Church deserves (Continued on Page Two)

Arkansas College's Progress in Financing

Encouraging progress in the financial affairs of Arkansas College, Batesville, was disclosed at the meeting of the Synod of Arkansas at Arkadelphia, October 29-31. The committee having charge of the raising of the emergency fund of $75,000 reported $43,000 already subscribed from scarcely one-fourth of the churches of Synod, with the larger churches yet to be heard from. Completion of this fund within the next few weeks is assured. Additional gifts totalling $100,000 toward the expansion program were announced.

Synod elected the following Trustees for three year terms: Mrs. Fred Allsopp, Little Rock, Rev. H. L. Paisley, Fayetteville, Rev. S. R. Oglesby, D.D., Hot Springs, A. B. Banks, Little Rock, and John P. Morrow, Batesville, J. F. Grammer, Batesville, Duncan L. McRae, Prescott. Others elected for shorter terms to fill vacancies caused by resignation were Rev. S. J. Patterson, D.D., Morrilton, and Rev. W. F. Rogers, D.D., Warren.

A special meeting of the Trustees will be held in November. Home-Coming Day for the College is set for November 22. The situation is distinctly encouraging for the development of this historic institution.

Flora Macdonald Celebrates Homecoming

Founder's Day Also Recognized—Prominent Speakers Make Addresses

The week-end of November 1-3 was Home-Coming at Flora Macdonald College, at Red Springs, N. C. The alumnae came from far and near in goodly numbers, and spent a few days renewing old friendships and happy memories.

Friday evening at six o'clock they gathered for dinner in the dining hall. Miss Louise Mandeville, alumnae president, in an informal manner welcomed every one. The student body gave cheers for Founder's Day, the alumnae, and Dr. Vardell. Mrs. Eugene Morgan of Laurel Hill, one of Flora Macdonald's daughters, delighted her audience with two songs. One of these was composed by Charles G. Vardell, Jr., son of Flora Macdonald's honored president.

Mrs. Dan McCormick of McDonald, also an alumna told of the varied activities of F. M. C. graduates.

The only speaker of the evening was Dr. Ashley Chappel of Monroe. He said that he had decided to say nothing that had any sense so every one would enjoy him. However, running through his side-splitting nonsense, was a serious thread which might be summed up in "Girls, do not be content with the ordinary; look for thrills, but those of the right kind, as only the best in life can satisfy."

On Saturday morning, Founder's Day, a program was given in the college auditorium. It consisted of musical selections, a welcome from the alumnae president, greeting to the old girls from Dr. Vardell, and an address by Dr. E. V. Babb of Laurinburg.

Home Missions Meeting In Iowa

Town and County Sections Confer at Ames—Dr. McLaughlin Elected to Religious Education Council

At Ames, Iowa, October 16 and 17, there was held a meeting of the town and country committee of the Home Missions Council. There were present M a l c o l m Dana, Congregational Church, Edwin De S. Brunner, Moravian Church and Society of Social and Religious Research, S. Van Der Wert, Dutch Reformed Church, Ralph S. Adams, Reformed Church, U. S., Henry W. McLaughlin, Presbyterian Church, U. S., Henry Israel, Y. M. C. A., W. R. King, Home Mission Council and Miss Anna Clark, Y. W. C. A.

Warren H. Wilson, Presbyterian Church, H. W. Foreman, Episcopal Church and others were prevented from attending. Dr. Dana is the chairman of the committee and Dr. Adams, secretary.

Reports were made of seven Rural Pastors' Schools, held last year, with a total enrollment of 636 rural ministers, ranging from nine at the University of Michigan to three hundred and sixty at the Vanderbilt University. Plans were made for the promotion of these schools in 1930.

Rural Life Sunday in May, is now being generally observed by many of the denominations. A committee was appointed to prepare literature and plans for observance of the day in 1930. Dr. H. W. Foreman, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York, is chairman.

Ministry of Healing in Rural Areas

The following is an extract from the minutes:

Dr. McLaughlin read a very interesting report on the situation and possible methods of approach. This paper will appear as a chapter in a book, "Round-Table on the Country Church," soon to be published. Drs. McLaughlin, Brunner and King constitute a special committee to project this important matter.

(a) That a summary of the paper, read by Dr. McLaughlin, be prepared and submitted for publication to Hygeia and the Journal of the American Medical Association.

(b) That each State Council of Churches and each State Home Missions Council be urged to appoint a special committee on Rural Medical Service, to study the state situation and to urge upon the state legislature the creation of scholarships for students for the ministry of healing in rural areas.

(c) That the Home Missions Council be requested to secure reprint edition of the paper through the publishers of the book which will contain it, and to distribute it widely.

Attention was called to the fact that the Journal of Religious Education proposed to make the May issue a "Country Church" number.

On motion, Dr. McLaughlin was elected to represent the committee at the annual meeting of the International Council of Religious Education, February 12-15, 1930, and champion the cause of the Rural Church. It was also suggested that if possible, Ralph S. Adams, Secretary of the Committee, also attend. Attention was called to the fact that a very thorough survey is being projected in the Ozarks. The date secured by the survey should prove very valuable in helping to formulate the Home Mission program of the Churches.

The members of the Committee attended the Country Life Association which was held at Ames, October 17 to 20. There were about 1,000 delegates registered, which indicates a growing interest in the whole matter of Country Life, as well as the Country Church.

Two Synods To Meet Together

South Carolina and Georgia Will Assemble at Clinton, S. C., to Consider Interests of Presbyterian College

The Associated Press reports the plan for a joint meeting of the Synods of South Carolina and Georgia at Clinton, S. C., the home of Presbyterian College which is under the joint control of these two bodies. Clinton is also the home of Thornwell Orphanage, which is likewise the protegee of the two synods.

The item of news follows:

Next year for the first time ever known the Presbyterian Synod of Georgia will have its annual meeting on South Carolina soil. Announcement was made here today that the Synod of Georgia and the Synod of South Carolina will meet jointly on October 7, 1930, at Clinton, S. C. The two state-wide church bodies will be guests of the Presbyterian College of South Carolina, and of Thornwell Orphanage, two institutions supported jointly by the two synods.

The Georgia Synod will have its individual business sessions in the Thornwell Memorial Church on the campus of Thornwell Orphanage. The South Carolina Synod will have its sessions in the First Presbyterian Church of Clinton. The delegates to the Georgia Synod will be entertained in homes and dormitories on the Orphanage campus and the delegates to the South Carolina Synod meeting will be entertained on the campus of the Presbyterian College. There will also be joint sessions of a popular nature, it is announced, in the First Presbyterian Church.

Rev. John McSween, president of Presbyterian College, as moderator of the South Carolina Synod, will preside over the sessions of his body, and Rev. D. P. McGeachy, D.D., of Decatur, Ga., moderator of the Georgia Synod, will preside over the sessions of that organization. Rev. H. Waddell Pratt, of Columbia, is stated clerk of the South Carolina Synod and Rev. A. L. Patterson, D.D., of Savannah, is stated clerk of the Georgia Synod.

First Church To Go Over The Top

Great Falls Raised Quota and Leads Carolina Presbyterians in P. C. Campaign

Great Falls Presbyterian Church, in the Bethel Presbytery, Synod of South Carolina, is the first church "over the top" in the Presbyterian College $350,000 Program of Deliverance.

This church, a small congregation in Chester County, sent in a report of $540—$40 above its goal.

The report was sent by Col. A. L. Gaston, chairman for Zone No. 2, to William P. Jacobs, general chairman. L. M. Pittman is campaign chairman for the Great Falls Church, while Rev. J. M. Forbis is pastor. Great Falls is in Group No. 4 of the Bethel Presbytery. Dr. W. R. Wallace, of Chester, is the group chairman, and A. M. Aiken, of Chester, is the Presbytery chairman.

The speaker brought out that the important thing is not "Who am I, but what am I and what am I for?" He ended with a tribute to the Flora Macdonald graduates, saying that she is touching the lives of many with her personality which had been largely formed and fashioned by the Christian training at Flora Macdonald College.

The business meeting of the alumnae was well attended and new subjects for further work were planned. A reception closed the day's festivities.

Summer Courses For Ministers a Success

Winona Lake School of Theology Has Fine Season at the Northern Presbyterian Assembly Grounds

The 1929 session of Winona Lake, Ind., School of Theology, was the best in its history. A satisfactory increase in the student body was registered, and both faculty and students were enthusiastic in their work.

Eighteen denominations were included in the student body. Eighteen states and Canada were represented. This school is rapidly coming to be known as "America's Summer Seminary."

The faculty was "all star" made up, as usual, from outstanding professors who are recognized as authorities in their particular fields, and are known to be evangelically orthodox in their faith. They are Dr. Melvin Grove Kyle, Dr. John E. Kuizenga, Dr. Leander S. Keyser, Dr. Geo. L. Robinson, Dr. Robert H. Glover, and the Dean, Dr. J. A. Huffman.

The officers of Winona Lake School of Theology are: Dr. W. E. Biedewolf, director; Mr. C. E. Sawtelle, president; Dr. J. A. Huffman, dean.

A high percentage of the student body was made up of teachers from Theological Schools, Colleges, Bible Schools, Mission Schools and Pastors.

Elaborate plans are being made for next summer's session. Already an unusual amount of interest is manifested. The dates will be: First Semester, July 9-July 26; Second Semester, July 28-August 14.

The first class of Winona Lake School of Theology, composed of seven men and one woman, will be graduated next summer. Six of these will receive the Master of Arts (in Theology) degree, while two of them will receive the Bachelor of Theology degree. The graduates will represent almost as many states as the number in the class and several of the denominations. Winona Lake School of Theology is interdenominational.

A prospectus of the 1930 session will be ready about the first of the year, and copies will be mailed to those requesting. Requests for copies of the prospectus will be carefully filed, and filled as soon as they are ready.

FEDERAL COUNCIL COMMITTEE TO MEET

vote. Representatives of other interdenominational bodies carrying on important phases of specialized Christian service are also invited to be present for conference and counsel.

The decision to meet in Chicago was made by the Administrative Committee of the Council following a cordial invitation from the Council's Midwest Committee.

The meeting of the Executive Committee this year will be of unique significance as celebrating the Federal Council's "coming of age." This gathering will mark the completion of 21 years since the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America came into being. It is expected that much thought will be given to planning how the steady development of these 21 years may be made to minister to a still larger measure of co-operation and unity among the Christian forces.

DEVOTION

THE FABLE OF THE POOR

Emma Gary Wallace, in Pitts Christian Advocate

Once upon a time a child was in a tumble-down hut on a piece of land near a tidy and prosperous town. As the lad grew up he was subjected to many harsh criticisms from his neighbors and townfolk, so that the time he was a youth he was convinced that every one who was comfortable and neat was an enemy to be feared, if not hated.

The youth liked to throw stones to break windows. He felt a thrill in trampling down fields of gardens and beds of flowers. His mental attitude toward those who were better than he, and who would have been his friends—was one of defiance. So little as he approached material things he built a wall about himself which shut him out and shut him in.

He did not realize, poor fellow, that the wall was of his own construction and that the stones of which it was reared were the ugly, jagged stones of envy, malice, ignorance and pride. He did not know that many people whom he looked upon as contemptuous to him were for him and would have helped him had he let them. He did not know that many of these people would have been as poor and wretched as he, had he not opened their hearts to his life.

One day the Poor Man, now grown to manhood's years, was walking by the roadside in the spring. The sky was overcast and a cold wind was blowing.

"Blow," he muttered bitterly, "my cupboard is bare, my woodpile is empty, and I have not seed to plant. Luck should come out. Luck it is. It always has been!"

There was a groaning noise followed by a creaking and a crash, and a great branch came falling down from the tree-top and felled the Poor Man to the earth. He lay like one dead. When he came up he was in a clean, white room as down. The room was more fully furnished than any he had ever seen, and in the window chattered a beautiful bird in a golden cage. The man frowned darkly at the little bird.

"Oh, little bird," he muttered, "all very well for you to sing, but you are fed and given a golden cage. But I am only a Poor Man and life isn't worth living."

The little bird hopped excitedly to perch, then shook its yellow head, and as plainly as possible the Magic Princess spoke from the warbled forth these words:

"O Poor Man, the kind of life you have lived is not worth while. Your very wretchedness makes you something better. A man who is poor is poor all the way through. Wealth is not of gold or silver, but of the heart. Happiness and success lie with the warming fire which keeps hearts aglow. Determine to do it and to help others to be happy. You will be rich as a king!"

The man in the soft white robe sat up on one elbow, his eyes a heart warmed at the sound of music somewhere near.

"O little bird," he muttered, "again."

The little bird was trilling in a burst of golden song. The man in the soft white robe had thought, for he had set his face in that direction. He had turned his back on poverty of life and spirit which had been his. He was no longer filled with bitterness and envy. He was shut in by a cold stone wall, but the sun was shining, and happiness lay ahead.

AND DO THOU LIKEWISE"

years ago the Synod of North Carolina adopted the Standard as its official organ. The exact value of this adoption has always been doubtful, because it was an agreement reached only one way.

According to this agreement the Synod had the right of way in our columns for whatever it needed, and we received in return expressions of good will.

At the last meeting of the Synod this paper was granted a subsidy, despite the opposition of the brethren who conscientiously voted against it.

The value of the publicity thus bought upon the number of readers reached by the Synod, one would expect a special effort to be made during "Church Paper Week" by the editors to urge their people to subscribe. As we have heard, only one pastor has made a special appeal in behalf of the Standard, though there may be others.

Editorial matter of the Caldwell Memorial Church was included in his Bulletin of November 3: "The Synod of North Carolina has adopted the Presbyterian Standard as its official organ, and appropriated a sum of money to defray the cost of advertising throughout the whole of the great causes of the Synod, and the efforts that are on foot to advance the Standard at home and abroad. There is also a provision throughout the Assembly to have each paper taken by every family, and the week of November 3-10 has been designated by the Assembly as "Church Paper Week." There are several reasons why you should subscribe to this paper:

1. It is the official organ of your own Synod, and it will carry throughout the year information relative to your own work which is essential to the carrying out of Synod's plans.

2. It is of interest in the work of the church because of its humanly speaking upon your being interested. No man or woman can be a well informed worker in the church who does not read the paper connected with that church. Ask it is to furnish information. You can get this information in the Standard, instead of in the papers about the work in North Carolina.

3. The Presbyterian Standard's soundness is attested by the men who furnish the material. It is not only this material sound, but the men who are covered will include all the great names before our Church, and the religious literature of these days of Modernistic thought and propaganda it is of greatest importance that properly edited material be placed in the hands of the people, especially in the hands of the

There are 7,197 church papers taken in the State of North Carolina, and these subscriptions are divided among three papers. The Standard has about 3,500 of this number. This is a total of 10,000. The price is $3.00, and $1.00 is retained by the Auxiliary taking the subscription. Are you supporting the organized work of your Church?"

DISORDERS IN MILL SECTIONS

We do not propose to discuss the disorders in the mill sections of our State, beyond reminding the critics that the present is the time when calm judgment is needed.

Judgment of any kind should be based upon facts, and these facts should be furnished by disinterested parties.

The papers, North and South, even of this State, have passed judgment, without knowing the full facts in the cases.

We are not defending the judge nor the juries, except to say that we carefully read the evidence and are convinced that the verdict was a just one.

We have never known a case where the judge, in order to avoid the charge of being biassed to one side rather than the other, really stood so straight that he seemed to lean backward, though he really held the scales of justice fairly balanced.

Some of the charges made and published by reputable papers in other sections, have commented on the strikes, not only the section about Gastonia and Charlotte, but have included in their picture also the case of Winston-Salem.

As an example of the sensational reports they gave their readers, we give the following, taken from "Religious Notes and News," a column edited by Prof. James D. Rankin, D.D., LL., in the "United Presbyterian," the organ of the U. P. Church, so attractive to some of our brethren.

We quote the following: "The Dayton Review recently quoted the president of the Tobacco Workers International Union as stating that in the Camel tobacco factory at Winston-Salem, North Carolina, the minimum wage is 10 cents an hour and that thousands of women and girls are working at this starvation wage, while the president of the company has recently built a 374 room mansion, costing $5,000,000. This palace contains plumbing fixtures of solid gold."

How far true the wage story is, we know not, but upon the face of it, we doubt whether women and girls would work for that pittance.

The mansion of 374 rooms and the plumbing fixtures of solid gold, make the story sicklied over with doubt.

Even in this city which is larger than Winston-Salem, according to Charlotte figures, we do not have such luxurious appointments, though at times our plumbing bills make us think that the repairs must have been made of solid gold.

It will be better if, instead of trying to place the blame, we agree that both sides are at fault, and then address ourselves to the more important work of relieving the innocent women and children.

We are glad to learn that the Federal Council is going to help to relieve the innocent parties in this strike—the women and children.

The Council, after seeking an avenue for their surplus energy seems at last to have found it.

The welfare of women and children furnishes a legitimate field for their efforts, and if they can relieve the poor, they will prove that they have pure and undefiled religion.

"THE SPLENDOR OF GOD"

I have no doubt many of our readers have been reading this excellent narrative in the Christian Herald. Some perhaps have wished that they had the story in the form of a book, and I am writing to suggest that they get it from our Committee of Publication for $2.50.

"The Splendor of God" is a fascinating tale of the life of Adoniram Judson, one of the first missionaries to India, who followed William Carey into that land in the early 19th century. Judson took his bride Ann Hasletine, on a weary journey by sea to India to be missionaries to the benighted Hindoos, but changed his belief in the mode of baptism while enroute, and being honest, released the Congregationalists from his support, and told the American Baptists what had happened and what he wished to do.

It will be impossible to trace the marvelous story of this tragic, yet luminous career, as he and his faithful wife served among the Burmans, seeing the modern miracles of grace in the conversion of some of them. Our purpose is to say that Mrs. Honore Willis Morrow, one of the editors of Christian Herald, has given the world one of the most delightful books of the past decade. By her deft hand and powerful capacity for realistic portrayal of incident and character she makes these missionaries live before us, and fascinates the reader by her sympathetic understanding and stirring fancy.

Auxiliaries, Christian Endeavorers, Sunday Schools, and even social circles will do themselves a great favor by obtaining this book. It would serve as an appropriate Christmas present for friends and among families. The book is published by William Morrow and Co., New York, 386 Fourth Avenue.

J. G. G.

ARE FOREIGN MISSIONS WORTH WHILE?

We are intensely conservative, according to our critics, yet we have no apologies to make. Now and then we examine our views, but find them more in accord with the beliefs of our Church and of the Bible, as we understand it, and therefore we find that we cling to the past.

When we compare the old truths with the new ones, held by many at the present time, we are the more convinced that the old are the best and the safest.

The Bible has stood the test of ages, and under its teachings, the Church has advanced in the establishment of the Kingdom of God, and therefore, unless the new truths can show better fruits than those of the past, it would seem to be the part of safety to hold to the old till something better is found.

Never saw yourself from the tree unless you know where you are going to land.

There are many who love the new, and nothing appeals to them unless it is new.

Then there is the temptation to test the truth by one's feelings rather than by the Word of God, and this leads men to teach the possible salvation of the heathen, notwithstanding the plain teaching of the Word of God.

Those who hold this view claim that they are more tender-hearted, forgetting that years ago Samuel said to Saul, "Behold, to obey is better than sacrifices, and to hearken than the fat of rams."

We have been in the ministry nearly 50 years, but never before this summer have we heard a Presbyterian preacher openly declaring that, while in his early ministry he preached that the heathen dying without Christ were lost, he no longer did so, because he did not believe it.

We understand that he afterwards explained this statement by qualifying it, that no heathen living up to his light would be lost.

He evidently forgot Paul's assertion that the Gentiles not having the law are a law unto themselves, which show the work of the law written in their hearts, their conscience also bearing witness, and their thoughts the meanwhile accusing or else excusing one another.

Thus the inspired Word says that no heathen ever lives up to his light.

His conscience accuses him and because he does not heed that conscience, he needs salvation.

We were not surprised that missionaries who heard him, asked why they were called upon to leave home and loved ones and carry the Gospel to the heathen?

They might also have asked why God sent His Son to save men from sin when the did not need salvation?

Well may men ask, Whither are we drifting?

THE CROSS—THE CHURCH—THE COMMUNITY

"A Cup of Water—In My Name" Mark 9:41

Miss Sammy Hogue

There is a sympathy deeply implanted in the human heart for fellow-creatures who are in sorrow or distress of any kind—for those who have tasted the joys of life, later to drink the dregs of despair and bitterness; for those who are the victims of circumstance, poor and neglected, ignorant and untaught, suffering and unrelieved. To meet the urge of this need today, men and women everywhere are responding, often generously enough; but far too few are seeking, as the ultimate end of their labors, the change of heart wrought by the Spirit of God in those who put their faith in the Christ of Calvary. "A cup of water . . . in my name"—not the condition "in my name"—thus spoke the Lord to His disciples nearly two thousand years ago; and thus His word echoes far down the centuries. "In my name"—that Name that is "called Jesus," the only Saviour of the people from their sins, "for there is none other name under heaven given among men," whereby the lost must be saved; that Name which is a "Strong Tower," where the oppressed may find shelter; that Name which is "Wonderful," even to the working of mighty changes in the human heart and life; that Name "which is above every name," and to which every knee shall bow! Eternal, majestic, omnipotent Name, giving light for darkness, joy for sorrow, hope for despair! Would that the multitudes might hear it spoken in reverence and love!

The story is told of a Chinese woman who, in her old age, hearing for the first time the message of the gospel, put her faith in the Name of the Lord Jesus. Eagerly she listened to the strange and wonderful words of the itinerating missionary; eagerly she begged her guest to stay longer, that she might tell more of the beautiful story. The missionary, however, had to go on to others who had never heard her message, and left with a promise to return if possible, or if not, to send another in her place. With the passing days, there came into the mind and heart of the new convert a growing anxiety and sense of loss; for, to her great distress, she had forgotten the Name of her Saviour! How she watched the road day after day, hobbling to the door with her cane for support, peering long into the distance, only to turn away disappointed that the missionary did not return to tell her again the Name of the One she had come to love! But that One knew her heart; He heard and answered her prayer; for one day another missionary, unknown to the first, passed that way, and satisfied the yearning soul by proclaiming the Name she longed to hear. And this Chinese woman is just one of millions who have forgotten the Name of Jesus, yea, who have never even heard it spoken in love—millions far and millions near!

"The Wondrous Cross"

"Other foundations can no man lay," I Cor. 3:11.

To share with the unsatisfied soul the peace of eternal redemption, and to give glory and honor unto the Name of the crucified and risen Lord, must be the motive of the benefactor of humanity, or the fruit of his labor shall abide but for a day. To build upon any other structure is but to see hopes shattered and labor spent in vain; "for other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." There are those who would do Social Service; there are others who would do Christian Social Service; and the difference between the two classes is as eternal and as mighty as the Cross of Calvary! Human effort alone, even human love and compassion, can give but temporary relief to the suffering body, mind, and heart; Christ alone can cleanse from sin, and put within the heart a song of hope and faith and love. The Christ of the Bible; the eternal Son of God; the "Lamb slain from the foundation of the world"; the One Who healed the sick and cleansed the leper, raised the dead and bound up the broken hearted—He is the One in Whose name a cup of water given will cause the despairing soul to look up and say, with the Psalmist of old, "I will take the cup of salvation, and call upon the name of the Lord." (Psalm 116:13). He is the One Who alone can satisfy the thirsty soul, as He satisfied the woman of Samaria, saying unto her, "Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life." (John 4:14).

"His Only Plan"

"Ye shall be witnesses unto me," Acts 1:8.

Between this compassionate Saviour and the thirsting multitudes today there stands His Church, only His Church; for He has no other plan for ministering "the cup of salvation." To the Church He has loved and cherished—His body, of which He is the Head; His bride, clothed in the beauty of His righteousness—He has spoken throughout the years, "Go . . . tell; go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature; ye shall be witnesses unto me."

Many are familiar with the story of a conversation which might have been carried on between the angel Gabriel and the Lord. Mindful of the failure of many of God's people to pass on to others the gospel message, mindful of the masses still unreached, the angel Gabriel is saying to the Lord, "What if these who have heard that Thou hast died for them fail to tell the lost of Thy love?" And the answer comes back with words unflinching, "I am counting on them; I have no other plan." He is depending on His own to respond to His unfathomable love with a love which is so eager, so faithful, so consecrated to Him that His words shall be told to the millions who are waiting to hear.

"The Crowded Ways"

"When he saw the multitudes, he was moved with compassion," Matthew 9:36.

And what shall be the response of His Church as she faces the responsibility of making known the love of her Master to these near at hand, even in "the crowded ways" of the city? Jails are filled with youth, as well as with men and women of mature years, who can be reached with the story of redeeming love. Hospitals are crowded to overflowing with distressed ones, whose hearts are open to receive the truth as it is in Christ, waiting only to respond to the sympathetic touch of some Christian's ministry. The poor, groping in ignorance and indifference; the shut-ins, often lonely and discouraged; the children, crowded our industrial school; the negro, awakening to his need; the stranger, alone in the large city; the unsaved on every hand—are these not enough to challenge each Christian to renewed devotion and consecration to his Lord in making known His matchless Name in the dark places of "the crowded ways?" When the human heart responds unreservedly to the love of God, it overflows in love to others. "Love to God" expressing itself in "love for others," the "try-square of human action," the practical test of the Christian's profession of faith in the Lord Jesus—these are the tokens by which the world may know that there is a reality, a sincerity, finality to the believer's claim of an undying love for an ever living Saviour.

Dr. Walter Lingle, in his recent book, "The Bible and Social Problems," emphasizes the importance of this vital truth, when he writes: "I have a deep and abiding conviction that one of the greatest needs of the present time is that Christians should translate into life the social and ethical teachings of our Lord." Again, in the first chapter of his book, he pictures the true Christian ideal of those who would be actively engaged in Christian Social Service; for of such he says: "They believe that the cross, the atoning death of Christ, is the great central theme of the Bible. They believe, with the Apostle Peter, that Christ bore our sins in His own body upon the tree, and that by His stripes we are healed. At the same time, they believe that centered about the cross is a great body of social and ethical teachings, which define our duties to others in all the relationships of life. If the first commandment is to love the Lord our God with all our hearts and minds and souls, the second is like unto it; namely, to love our neighbor as ourselves."

When the Church of Christ really catches the vision of the thirsting multitudes, waiting for "a cup of cold water" in the Name of her crucified and risen Lord, she always responds with a devotion and consecration prompted by the One Whose Name she bears. What will be her response today? Her response will be determined by the response of the individuals who are members of the one body. What a challenge, what a responsibility, what a fruitful ministry, what a "crown of rejoicing" awaits the Christian who gives even "a cup of cold water" in the Name of the King of Glory!

"Where cross the crowded ways of life,
Where sound the cries of race and clan,
Above the noise of selfish strife,
We hear Thy voice, O Son of Man!

"The cup of water given for Thee
Still holds the freshness of Thy grace;
Yet long the multitudes to see
The sweet compassion of Thy face."

A YOUNG GIRL LEADS A COMMUNITY TO CHURCH

Myrtle Williamson

"Sunday School" was over on Saturday afternoon; as the people passed out of the little school house door, the young minister (whose Sundays are so full that one Sunday School must be held on Saturday) asked if anyone wanted to help mark off the ground for the new church. In a few moments the group had moved to the foot of the peak, and, under the minister's direction, were busy with feet and yards and angles. While the children played in the sand which had been hauled for the cement, while the women watched and commented, the outline for the basement was staked off and a great feeling of thankfulness filled all hearts; the Low Gap church building had begun!

Less than a year ago there was in this community neither organized church nor Sunday School. Across the hills, too far for the children to attend regularly, are two churches, one of the Primitive Baptist faith, the other the old mother church of Presbyterianism in Ashe County (North Carolina's most north-western portion). There was and long had been a need for a church here, but the need was undiscovered; when the church is built it will stand as a monument to personal work, for it was through personal work that the need was found and met.

The church grew from an exceedingly small seed; at a funeral, Rev. John W. Luke spoke to a young girl about becoming a Christian; she was interested and came at his invitation to the preaching services at the Ebenezer Church; there she surrendered her life to Christ.

So complete was that surrender that at once others of her family and friends to share her joy; at her invitation and by her arrangements conducted a series of evangelistic services in Gap School House. Because of her great intelligence and the large number of children who had the privilege of religious training, a "Sunday School" started on Saturday—the only day that the minister's helper could be present to teach in the school. It was the interest in these Saturday sessions, occasional Sunday Sermon that Christian Church members asked for; the summer schedule was full, but she decided that in view of the need, one might as well begin before the opening of the regular season. The fact that May is a cold month in the mountains, the Bible School and the Evangelistic services were attended in the tent; and at the close of the season a petition was sent to Presbytery for the organization of a church. On June 22, the commission appointed by Presbytery met and the church was organized with members. At the next meeting of Presbytery, the call to Mr. Luke was approved and accepted.

From one man's interest in an individual has resulted a splendid group of people bound together as a church, with a loyal session and board of members who under the consecrated leadership of the pastor, are working and praying for a building of worship. Who can estimate the final results to the community of the sowing of seeds like these in fields so long desired a harvest? It is the ground that has yielded a hundred-fold, but the sowers are few.

BARIUM SPRINGS AND THE SYNOD

From the Last Report to Synod of North Carolina

We wish to call your attention to the following contributions from the nine Presbyteries fell off from that of the previous year. The total of the Support Fund increased to $45,797.13. The deficit of 480.00 in the Capital Account and $29,956.92 in the Reserve Fund we are glad to report have been retired, since covered by this report.

Eleven Thousand, Two Hundred Eighty Eight and Eighty-nine cents ($11,208.89) has been added to the fund by special gifts.

In spite of our efforts to call to the attention of churches our most desperate plight as regards the Support Fund, there has been received in the six months of the new church year, only $17,000.00 in regular contributions, less than one-third of the amount needed.

This lack of adequate revenue has brought a condition that must be met, either by reducing expenditures or by the increasing of money needed here, or by the increasing of supply.

We have made extraordinary efforts to improve the condition by plans now in operation, effective and food.

We have also most seriously attempted to reduce the number of children under our care. In the past year, not been successful. Several times we have made reduction in our number only to have an immediate increase of such urgent nature that we felt we could not do otherwise than to accept.

These calls have come from practically every Presbytery. The most recent being from Concord, Kinston, Orange, Albemarle, and Winston-Salem Presbyteries.

In view of these facts, there seems only one way to do, and that is to bring up the contributions to the point where full capacity can be taken care of without running behind.

This does not seem to be an impossible task. The right plan can be brought into play to get the church on the job.

To this end the following resolutions have been adopted and are submitted to you for your consideration:

1. Synod. That Synod place in its Benevolent Fund seven and one-half per cent of its total benevolent contributions about one-half the amount needed for the Home. That the other half be raised by special giving; and that all Church, Sunday Schools, and Presbyteries be urged to put forth their best efforts for the most worthy cause.

2. Presbyteries. It is urged that all Presbyteries this cause in their budget recommended to the Synod and appoint one or more representatives to keep the cause and its support before their churches, Societies and members.

3. Churches. That each church have an Agent, put the cause on its budget and specify the special offering at Thanksgiving, and that the special offering be sent in as promptly as possible.

4. Auxiliaries. That each Auxiliary put the cause on its budget and appoint one or more active members to urge liberal giving to special offerings.

5. Sunday Schools. That each Sunday School classes set aside its offering on one Sunday in the year for this cause. No cause will so appeal to the children as to cultivate in them the habit of giving as a part of their religious education.

6. Individuals. That individual members be urged to make a regular contribution to the Home and to use it as a thank offering for the Home.

7. That as far as possible, the various organizations contributing be urged to send amounts in ap-

PIONEER PRESBYTERIAN MOTHERS IN THE SOUTHWEST

Rev. J. V. McCall, D.D.

Home Missions in the Southwest presents its peculiar difficulties. The Presbyterian Church has been slow to enter new territory and many of its pioneers have grown disheartened over the prospects of the Church of their fathers and have joined other communions to their enrichment and advance. Yet not a few have held steadfastly to their conceptions and laid the foundation for the future growth of this part of Zion.

Fifty years ago a little band of seven in a Texas village had no pastor, no building, no Sunday School, no church lot, and after two or three years of hoping and waiting, five of them came together casually and decided to give up the struggle and ask Presbytery for dissolution. There was one courageous heart absent. When Mrs.
 G— learned of the decision of her fellows, she promptly called them together and told them if they wished to give up, all right, but she would not surrender and that she would not be dissolved. Ashamed of themselves, the others took courage and made further effort. In five more years they had a neat little house of worship and their first pastor. A year or two later Mrs. G—'s husband passed away and it became necessary for the widow to return to the old home state. Twenty years after this, feeling that the hand of death was upon her, this consecrated woman came back to visit an adopted daughter and to worship one more time in a church building toward which she had given generously of care and toil and means. One time she was able to go to the house of God and join in the worship of her beloved Zion and then she was compelled to take to her bed, and after a few more weeks of suffering, she passed from the scenes of her early trails to the triumphs of the New Jerusalem. A brick building replaced the original structure and this is now one of the strongest churches in the Synod of Texas.

Seventy-five years ago a godly mother with her large family came to another Texas village. There was no Presbyterian preacher, no Presbyterian church building, no Presbyterian Sunday School, no Presbyterian organization. Two years later a small organization was effected.
 It made little or no progress. A few years later the two older boys in this family made a profession of faith at a Methodist camp-meeting and wished to join the Methodist church. This was a sore trial to the faith of that godly mother. Tenderly and kindly she protested, telling them she did not know whether they understood what they were doing; she did not want them to be separated from her. The boys grew up indifferent wild reckless men of the West, as were the most of the men about them, and the poor mother's heart often fainted within her, lest she had made a mistake. Yet a covenant-keeping God brought those boys back in his own time and they passed away among the most useful and decided Christian men in the community. That little church is now one of the larger communions in our beloved Zion of Texas.

Twenty years later in life that godly mother had to make another move to a small village and here the same determined zeal encountered like difficulties. In a year there was a little organization of ten members, four of these coming from her own family, and a little later a pastor and a church home. For years that church has been a real force in the life of that community. This good woman has long since passed into the presence of her Lord. One son became a minister, one son an elder, one son and two sons-in-law deacons. Children's children show a like devotion to the faith of their grandparents.

The lives of these two pioneers show markedly the grace of a covenant-keeping God. The human factors are these two godly women, fostered by the help of the Assembly's Home Mission Committee, which help has been given steadfastly, generously and faithfully all these years.

How many more fainting hearts would have been lighted up and how much larger harvests, if only lovers of Zion had given the Assembly's Committee more generous backing. Friends of the kingdom everywhere, will you not enable your agency, the Assembly's Committee of Home
 Misions, to do a larger work for our Master?

THE BEST PLAN DEvised

Rev. Walter L. Lingle, D.D.
 President of Davidson College

Very few ministers receive salaries that are large enough to enable them to save any considerable sum for old age or sickness. The great majority of them find it difficult to make ends meet. The moment a minister begins to think about making money or investing money he deflects that much thought and energy from his ministry. The proposed Ministers' Annuity Fund is the best plan that has yet been devised to provide for the minister in his old age and for his family in case of his death or sickness. It thus enables him to give himself unreservedly to the ministry of the Word and to prayer in his best years. It also makes it possible for him to retire as old age comes on, and thus leave the Church free to select a younger man.
 I am heart and soul for the Annuity Plan.

"They do me wrong who say I come no more
 When once I knock and fail to find you in;
 For every day I stand outside your door,
 And bid you wake, and rise to fight and win."
 —Walter Malone.

PRAYER ASKED FOR R. T. COIT

It is with a heavy heart I write you this time, for it is to tell you that we are sailing for America, October 29 on the President Cleveland S. S., because of Mr. Coit's ill health. We had hoped to stay out here an extra year after our regular furlough which is the spring of 1930, this being in accord with the request of our Executive Committee that furloughs be deferred if possible on account of the present financial condition. The mission granted this request and we hoped that after our summer vacation Mr. Coit might be able to go on with his work. But when Mr. Coit failed to improve during the summer they are speeding us on our way to America ahead of time instead of permitting the deferred furlough. Mr. Coit is simply about broken down from overwork and the doctors are insistent that he have a complete rest.

And now comes the request for your earnest and increasing prayers that our Heavenly Father will speedily restore by beloved husband to health and strength and make us both better fitted than ever before for the work to which He has called us. You have encouraged and upheld us with your prayers for many years and I know you will not fail us now. Since we are forced to go to America, we are looking forward with much pleasure to seeing you, but of course can't make any plans, for our first business is to give Mr. Coit the rest and care that he needs so sorely. If you should drop me a line just send it care Miss Laura Coit, North Carolina Woman's College, Greensboro, North Carolina.

Yours sincerely,
Cecile Woods Coit.

Soonchun, Korea.

DR. BITZER'S FORTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY

Evening services in the other churches were suspended at Holly Springs, Miss, Sept. 15, so their congregations might join with that of the Presbyterian Church in celebrating Dr. George L. Bitzer's completion of forty-five years in the ministry.

Doctor Bitzer was admitted to the ministry September 11, 1884, in the old Winchester Church, Virginia, and has faithfully served charges in Virginia, Texas, Georgia, and Mississippi.

A large congregation was present and special music was furnished by the combined choirs of the city under the direction of Mrs. D. M. Featherston. Miss Mattie Hopson, of Tiptonville, Tenn., former student at Mississippi Synodical College, came to take part and gave a solo.

Felicitous messages came from the other churches. L. G. Fant brought greetings from the Methodist Church, and also gave a resume of the history of the local Presbyterian Church during its ninety-three years of usefulness.

Mr. Fant recalled some of the able and consecrated pastors who have filled its pulpit, and cited as one of its greatest activities the founding of M. S. College.

L. A. Smith, Jr., brought an earnest message from the Episcopal Church, and Rev. R. A. Morris from the Baptist Church preached a short sermon on "What It Means to be a Minister of Christ."

All of the speakers congratulated Doctor Bitzer on his long, useful service, and the Church on its history.

Doctor Bitzer spoke feelingly in response and dwelt on the joy of serving.

NORTH CAROLINA

Jonesboro—Our pastor assisted by Rev. Mr. Turner will begin a series of revival services on November 17, at Salem Church, near Lillington.

Mooreville—At our fall communion in October we had very interesting services. Rev. C. R. Nisbet, of Charlotte, N. C., assisted in preparatory services and gave us all much pleasure and help. Since our last communion we have received four new members. At this season four infants were received for baptism. The fall work is progressing in a satisfactory manner.

Back Creek—On Sunday, October 27, Mr. W. F. Cowan was installed elder of this church, having formerly served as elder in Harmony Church. Mr. T. A. Graham and Mr. J. B. Douglas were ordained and installed as deacons. This gives the church an official force of seven elders and seven deacons.

New Bern—Rev. R. E. McClure, the new pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of New Bern has entered upon his new pastorate with much zeal and enthusiasm. He has the loyal support of a united body of officers and a congregation tried and true. The outlook for growth is encouraging.

Mebane—At a congregational meeting moderated by Rev. E. E. Gillespie, Executive Secretary of Synod's Work Committee, Sunday morning, November 3, Rev. W. M. Baker of Mount Olive, was unanimously called to the pastorate of the First Presbyterian Church, of Mebane. The committee recommending Mr. Baker was very enthusiastic over their selection and express good hopes of his acceptance.

Asheboro—The pastor, Rev. C. G. Smith, and about fifty members of the Presbyterian Church, attended the services of the First Presbyterian Church of Greensboro last Sunday evening, having been specially invited by Dr. C. H. Myers. Mr. Smith assisted Dr. Myers in the services. The sermon was preached by Dr. Myers to a large congregation almost filling the spacious auditorium of the handsome new church.

Unionville—Rev. H. C. Carmichael who formerly served the Unionville, Bethlehem and Midland group of churches has recently accepted a call to this group and will enter at once upon the duties of his new pastorate. For nearly three years Mr. Carmichael has been serving an important group of churches in the Methodist Protestant Church and it is with a great deal of pleasure that we welcome back to the Presbyterian Church this well trained and efficient minister.

Thomasville—This congregation of which Rev. J. K. Fleming is pastor, has recently suffered a great loss in the death of Mrs. McIntyre, affectionately known as "Mother Mc." While not a member of this church, yet she was a loyal supporter and when able a faithful attendant. She was one of God's choicest spirits and will ever be lovingly remembered. This congregation has taken steps toward building a manse and hope to commence work at an early date.

Greensboro, First Church—There were more people present last Sunday evening at our evening service than were present at any morning service in the old church, and there were six hundred more people at the morning service than were ever present at any service in the history of the old church. It is a great source of delight to the pastor and to the officers of the church the way our people are inviting their friends and neighbors to share with them our Sunday evening service.

Rutherfordton—Rev. I. S. McElroy, Jr., formerly pastor of the West Nashville, Tenn., Presbyterian Church, who was recently called to the pastorate of the Rutherfordton Presbyterian Church, has accepted the call, and began work in the new field, delivering the first sermon on Sunday, October 27 at 11 a. m.

Mr. McElroy is a son of Rev. and Mrs. I. S. McElroy, Sr., of Kings Mountain, while Mrs. McElroy is a niece of the late Woodrow Wilson.

It might be interesting to know that during the pastorate vacancy of nearly two months, one young man was received into the membership of the church by certificate.—R. G. H.

Rutherfordton—Rev. George T. Stephens, the evangelist, of High Point, began a series of four weeks revival services at the Tabernacle, at Spindale, near Rutherfordton, on Sunday evening, November 3, at 7:30 p. m.

The Tabernacle is 150 feet long and 100 feet wide, and will seat approximately 3,000 people. It was practically built in one day by 100 or more men, in eight hours work, and consists of more than two car loads of lumber.

A choir platform for 250 singers has been constructed in the south end of the building. Mr. Powell Lee, of Atlanta, Ga., is choir director and is assisted by Mrs. Lee, as pianist. Large crowds are attending the services which are being held each night at 7:30 o'clock. It is hoped that many souls may be won to Jesus Christ our Savior during the revival.—R. G. H.

New Bern—Rev. R. E. McClure was formally installed as pastor of the First Church Sunday night, October 27, in an impressive installation service of the Albemarle Presbytery led by Rev. A. S. Venable, D.D., of Farmville, with the assistance of Rev. W. S. Harden, of Greenville, and Ruling Elder B. W. Moseley, also of Greenville, members of the Presbytery commission.

Rev. George W. Mauze, pastor of the Kinston Presbyterian Church, preached the first installation sermon heard at the church in over two decades. For Mr. McClure succeeds Dr. J. N. H. Summerell, the beloved pastor here for over 20 years, who resigned some months ago because of ill health and moved to Greenville, N. C., to make his home near relatives.

The charge to the congregation was delivered by Mr. J. B. Sparrow, of Washington, N. C.

Mr. McClure is the son of the late Rev. A. D. McClure, D.D., pastor of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, of Wilmington, and moderator of the Synod of North Carolina that convened in the New Bern church in 1896.

Pink Hill—There are four churches in this field and since the present supply pastor, Rev. W. B. Knox, came in July there have been a number of events of more than average interest. First at Pleasant View Church with Rev. D. M. McGeachy, of Whiteville, as visiting evangelist a week's meeting was held. There were services twice daily and on the 11th day three with a communion service at 11 a. m. at Smith's Church the pastor together with Freeman, of the Methodist Church, South, and their two congregations in a week of happy ship in preaching and praise and prayer. Sunday with Rev. Frank Goodman, of Kenansville, and R. C. Clontz, of Wilmington as preachers a meeting was held in the Pink Hill Church. Mr. Burr, an associate of the lamented Dr. Black, leading at Pink Hill and Mr. Malcom Grady layman, was in charge of the music in the Pleasant View meeting. A meeting is being planned near future at Hebron Church. It was on October 29, Tuesday, that the good women of churches together with many friends from churches met at Pink Hill in the Presbyterian Day of Prayer. A bountiful dinner was served noon hour and a splendid spiritual program of interest on the part of many marked the day long to be remembered. It would be difficult to name the leading spirits, but Mrs. Lee, the president of the Pink Hill Auxiliary, and Mrs. W. T. Banner, Presbyterial President, were both present and participated. Sunday Schools are functioning in the four churches and a Young People's Society at Smiths and Pleasant View. The aforementioned meetings have greatly benefited the several pastors and people and the future present promise of numerous possibilities. Several new members were added to the church rolls and the entire membership spiritually blessed. This is temporarily supplying the Seven Springs and reports the possibilities there as being promising. These churches are planning to have Thanksgiving Day in an all-day meeting with and afternoon services and dinner on the 29th. The meeting to be either at Smith's or Pleasant

Wilmington Presbytery—The meeting of the presbytery held October 22 and 23 was of unusual interest. It was held in the old Grove Presbyterian Church, in anville, N. C., the date of whose beginning is its baptismal font as 1755. It is, therefore, the oldest Presbyterian church in North Carolina. For the third successive time a ruling elder was elected Moderator, which is quite unusual. Geo. R. Ward, Esq., of Wallace, was elected to the office.

Addresses were delivered by Dr. Charles L. of the Commission on Evangelism of the Federal Council of Churches of America, Dr. H. H. Sweet, executive committee of Christian Education and Material Relief, Dr. George C. Worth, of the mission at Kiangyin, China, Dr. B. F. Bedinger, of Macdonald College, and others. Doctor Good leading part in the conference on evangelism. At the request of the Assembly's Work committee

Rev. C. H. Storey, D.D., of Western Texas Presbytery and Rev. R. H. Poole, of Fayetteville were received. The former succeeds Dr. J. L. pastor of St. Andrews Church, Wilmington. The latter takes charge of the Elizabethtown group of churches. Presbytery passed a resolution expressing its regret that the time is not yet ripe to conclude the proposed union with the U. P. church. The Annuity Fund received hearty endorsement.

Wilmington Presbytery now consists of 68 churches and 37 ministers, including four foreign missions. Two executive secretaries of the General Assembly average salary paid active pastors is $2,166.

Presbyterian Orphans' Home, Barium Springs—The past week (the last week in October) was a cold, rainy one. I believe we did have one day of shine during the week. We are feeling the pinch of cold days and nights on account of the torn-up of our heating plant. A new boiler is being installed. We hope to see it in operation with the next week. In the meantime, we are making the best of the situation. It is right interesting to the children to watch the big piece of machinery into place.

Many visitors have called at the Home since our last letter. A delegation from West Ave. Church, Charlotte, N. C., was here for one afternoon. We are lighted to have them. For the week-end, we had a number of relatives of Miss Elizabeth Doggett, of High School teachers, to visit us from Kingsport. Then on last Sunday, several of our old girls drove all the way from Winston-Salem, Durham, and Durham, in the rain to see the old Home. A splendid way to express their love for Barium Springs.

We have two additions to our working force. Portia Mengert, Toledo, Ohio, who is to be in Frances Steele's work as Field representative this winter. Then we have Mrs. J. K. McGirt, Maxton, who comes as assistant matron. We extend to these a most cordial welcome to the Home.

On the first Sunday in November our pastor, C. Brown and Rev. J. L. Hood, pastor of Church at Troutman, exchanged pulpits. Mr. Hood, a stranger here at Barium, and we are always glad to have him preach for us. He always brings a message. Especially was this true on the last Presbytery of Piedmont met in Honea Path on the 14, 1929. There were present during the fourteen ministers and fourteen ruling elders. S. Crowley was elected moderator and Mr. Smith, of Easley, temporary clerk.

Printed minutes of meetings held since the last meeting were read for information. They were read to the attention of Presbytery that Revs. Wright and A. G. Harris had been dismissed to the Georgia Presbyteries respectively, and J. H. Carter had been received from Consbytery and arrangements made for his installation as pastor of the Central Church, Anderson, S. C., S. C.

On the proposed union with the U. P. Church postponed until the spring meeting. In the meantime the matter was referred to a special committee for study and report its findings. There was considerable discussion and difference of opinion on the Ministers' Annuity Fund. However, it was approved by a small majority.

A presbyterial sermon was preached by Rev. Phillips, his subject "The Future Life."

A resolution was ordered sent to the Assembly asking that the standard of excellence of the Woman's Society be so amended as to drop the item regarding enrolling in the Auxiliary of every woman member of the local church.

The next stated meeting will be at Liberty on April 15, at 8:00 p. m. H. A. Knox, S. C.

APPALACHIA

Hammondville—Six of the churches of Henderson County were just engaged in a series of simultaneous revival meetings, each local pastor doing his own part, excepting the Lutheran Church which was visited by a visiting pastor. Each day there was an afternoon service for men at noon, the pastors were busy in conducting these services; and each afternoon there was a union prayer service of women, conducted by them, rotating from church to church; and then at night services in all of the churches. An important feature of the preparation for these meetings was a religious census of the community, which gave us desired information as to those whom each church should endeavor to reach and which served also to awaken a community interest in the revival effort. This effort was planned and directed by the local ministers' association. We would most heartily recommend this plan to other communities. The ministers have had the joy of doing their own reaping; they have gained a new spiritual hold on their own people and on the community at large; inter-church fellowship has been promoted as never before; and fifty dollars will cover the entire cost of the endeavor. Our Presbyterian Church will receive twenty new members, twelve of them on profession of faith in Jesus Christ.

VIRGINIA

Hampden-Sydney—College Church and the students of the college have just experienced a gracious revival. Rev. Dr. R. G. McLees, pastor of the church at Chatham, Va., and one of the most effective evangelists in our whole Church, conducted a meeting in this church throughout the week, October 13-20.

From the first there was manifested the deepest interest, and the services were the most largely attended of any series of evangelistic services that the church has had within the last ten years. Dr. McLees' godly walk, gentle spirit, and eloquent presentation of the good news of salvation won the hearts of the people.

Hearers of his messages frequently remarked, "Dr. McLees is the most eloquent preacher I have ever heard." This community is deeply grateful to Dr. McLees for his ministry, and he and his consecrated wife will always have a warm place in our hearts.

The attendance at the college is very much beyond all previous records. A goodly number of the students have been placed in private homes. The Freshman Class is of a very superior type.

The Alumni Record makes the following statement: "Of the Freshmen who were in College at the close of last session about 90 per cent have returned. There has probably been nothing comparable to this in the history of the College.

"Another outstanding feature of the enrollment is the way in which the Junior Class of last season returned. Every one returned except two that were excluded, and they were students who had been to another institution.

The increasing number of students from without the state is evidence of the growing reputation of the College."

Buchanan Group—This group looks forward with keen anticipation to the fall activities. A campaign to observe November as "Loyalty Month" has just been completed. Vacation weeks which have meant so much to each of us in health and refreshment are now fading into the past. The summer weeks have been devastating to regular services of worship. Church school work has been disrupted to some extent. But the new season is here. Freshened and strengthened, we are ready for work. We believe and have reasons for our faith, that it is going to be the greatest year in the history of the church.

The pastor, Rev. G. C. Crowell, with the officers and co-workers, through the church bulletin and pastoral letters plan for rallying all resources for a great winter's work beginning with the observance of "Loyalty Month." The entire membership being asked to pledge themselves to do three things: Rebuilding the Altar of the Lord; Attendance on every church service during the month; Join the "Win-One-Club," which means that each member will make a definite attempt to win someone for Christ during the month. Many have signed pledge cards which are to be paid in personal service.

Two prayer meetings are now in full swing each week, one each in two churches of this group, the pastor's wife conducting one with a record of 100 per cent attendance and twenty-six walking two miles or more to attend the last service.

During the year fourteen members have been added, five Vacation Bible Schools conducted, two Church Schools of Missions, and one Standard Teacher Training School held, two Boys' Clubs organized, seven revivals, and young people's work organized. We are hoping to make this year's work prominent in evangelism.

SNEDECOR MEMORIAL

Central Alabama Presbytery met in Fulton Chapel, Hamnier, Ala., October 3, 1929. Opened with a sermon by Rev. J. R. Mallard. Present, five ministers and two elders. Rev. J. R. Mallard was elected moderator and Rev. W. J. Bishop temporary clerk.

Presbytery deferred action on the overtures until the spring meeting.

We had a conference with Dr. R. A. Brown Thursday afternoon. All of these causes were fully considered.

DAY BY DAY

Charge not thyself with the weight of a year,
Child of the Master, faithful and dear;
Choose not a cross for the coming week,
For that is more than He bids thee seek;
Bend not thine arms for tomorrow's load,
Thou mayest leave that to thy Saviour God;
"Daily," only, He saith to thee,
"Take up thy cross and follow Me."

Lesson for November 24

THE HIGHER PATRIOTISM

The Book of Jonah. Print Jonah 1:13; 3:1-5; 4:5-11

Our lesson this week has to do with the higher patriotism. Patriotism is defined by Webster as love of country; devotion to the welfare of one's country; the virtues and actions of a patriot; the passion inspiring one to serve one's country. The higher patriotism we take it is that love for mankind which transcends national boundaries, or that love of country which leads one to serve it by serving all mankind, or that passion inspiring one to serve one's country only so far as is compatible with the interests of justice and truth. Which sort of patriotism is the greater virtue, patriotism as ordinarily understood, or the higher patriotism? Can one be a patriot of both sorts? Suppose there comes a conflict, what then? With these questions in mind read first II Kings 14:25 and then the little book of Jonah. Was Jonah a true patriot? Why do you think so?

Who was Jonah? We need to consider this question before we take up the further consideration of the book. In Jonah 1:1 and II Kings 14:25 we learn (1) that he was the son of Amittai,—a man otherwise unknown; (2) that he was a prophet of the northern kingdom of Israel; (3) that his birthplace was Gath-Hepher, a town of lower Galilee, not far from Nazareth (three miles), in the tribe of Zebulun; (4) that he exercised his prophetic office in the early part of the reign of Jeroboam II. He was then an early contemporary of Amos and Hosea. Some scholars think that he succeeded Elisha as the head of the schools of the prophets; (5) He was not only the hero of the book that bears his name, but also the foreteller and inspirer of the remarkable conquests of Jeroboam II. Jeroboam II we need to remember was the greatest ruler that Israel ever had after the division of the Kingdom. Before his accession to the throne the nation had been humbled almost to the dust before Syria, her great enemy and rival to the northeast. Inspired by Jonah Jeroboam regained Israel's lost prestige; the boundaries of the nation were extended on every side—even Syria was forced to pay her tribute; never had the people been so prosperous since the days of David and Solomon. We cannot be far wrong when we infer from this and Jonah's character as portrayed in the book that bears his name that he was a nationalistic prophet, a patriot of the narrower type, a man who believed with all his heart that Israel first was a religious as well as a patriotic duty.

Who wrote the book of Jonah? We have no way of knowing. It is not very likely, however, that Jonah himself was the author. Scholars are inclined to think that it was written long after his day, by some unknown writer about the time of Ezra and Nehemiah. The author whoever he was was a different sort of patriot from Jonah. We come then to the story itself. It is divided into two parts:

I. Jonah's First Commission—Rejected 1-2

1. Jonah's Disobedience 1:1-3. "The word of Jehovah came unto Jonah the son of Amittai, saying Arise, go to Nineveh, that great city, and cry against it; for their wickedness is come up before me." Nineveh was the capital of Assyria, the cruellest nation in antiquity. At this time it was the mightiest nation in the world; it was beginning to extend its power westward; indeed a generation earlier Israel had been forced to pay it tribute; clear sighted men like Amos saw that if nothing happened to change the course of events Israel would have to bow ultimately to its yoke; a generation later the doom came, Israel was carried into captivity by the Assyrians. Jonah to be sure did not see that this was to be Israel's fate; he exulted as did Jeroboam and his contemporaries in Israel's bounding prosperity, and had faith in the nation's future. Nevertheless he was bound to recognize the fact that Assyria was the mightiest nation in the world; Israel's rival, and her most dangerous competitor for the markets of the world. He tells us himself that he longed for Assyria's destruction (4:2). Realizing that if the people repented at his preaching God would avert the threatening judgment 'he rose up to flee unto Tarshish from the presence of Jehovah.' Tarshish we should note was in far away Spain, at the other end of the Mediterranean Sea, the end of the world so far as the people of Jonah's day were concerned. Jonah was really anxious to escape unwelcome duty that was pressing upon his conscience, for the Jews were notoriously averse to the water,—in fact so far as we know Jonah was the only Old Testament Jew who ever ventured upon such a journey. He really thought, just as some people think today, that he could run away from God.

2. Jonah's Punishment, 1:4-17. "But Jehovah sent out a great wind upon the sea and there was a mighty tempest on the sea, so that the ship was like to be broken." The sailors were greatly alarmed—they cried unto their gods—and lighted the ship of its cargo, and finally when all other experiments failed, cast lots to discover who it was that was responsible for the terrific storm. The lot indicated that it was Jonah. When he was pressed for an explanation he told them that the God from whom he had previously told them he was fleeing was not merely a local God as they had thought, but Jehovah, the God of heaven, who hath made the sea and the dry land. "Then were the men exceedingly afraid, and said unto him, What is this that thou hast done?" But they were not anxious to make Jonah the scape-goat. It was Jonah himself who suggested that they throw him into the sea. The sailors were at first unwilling to adopt this expedient, but when their efforts to reach shore continued fruitless, and it began to appear that the whole boat would be lost they took the prophet and flung him into the waters. Immediately we are told the sea ceased from its raging. And Jehovah prepared a great fish to swallow up Jonah; and Jonah was in the belly of the fish three days and three nights."

3. Jonah's Repentance, 3:1-9. In the fish's belly we are told Jonah prayed unto his God. The prayer contains thanksgiving, rather than petition. The prophet is thankful that he has been delivered from the sea and that he is still alive in the belly of the fish. Because he has been saved thus far he is confident of his ultimate salvation. The psalm is divided into three stanzas, each one of which begins with the danger from which he has been delivered, and ends with an expression of absolute trust. We call it a psalm because as the Revised Version shows it is poetical in form as well as in expression.

4. Jonah's deliverance, 2:10. "Then Jehovah spake unto the fish and it vomited out Jonah upon the dry land."

II. Jonah's Second Commission—Accepted 3-4

1. Jonah's obedience 3:1-4. "And the word of Jehovah came unto Jonah the second time, saying, Arise, go unto Nineveh, that great city and preach unto it the preaching that I bid thee." We are not told what feeling Jonah had when this commission came to him a second time, but he obeyed it, for reasons that we can well understand. He arose, we are told, and went unto Nineveh, an exceeding great city of about three days' journey. The three days' journey probably refers to the circumference of the city, which as a day's journey went in those days would make it about 60 miles. We note here that the circumference of the actual city as shown by its ruins was about nine miles, but Nineveh like London and New York had a great many suburbs closely united. To the Jews the great city included the whole area, and the circumference of this total metropolitan area is shown by ruins to be just about 60 miles. Jonah began to enter the city a day's journey, that is he began to perambulate the city, going hither and thither as was as possible in the first day. As he went he preached: Yet forty days, and Nineveh shall be overthrown.

2. Nineveh's Repentance, 3:5-10. Jonah's preaching produced quick results. The people of Nineveh believed God. Three things we take it their faith certainly embraced: (1) they believed in the God of the Hebrews as a true God; (2) they believed in His power to execute the threat; (3) they believed or at least hoped in His mercy and willingness to forgive the penitent. Therefore, we read they proclaimed a fast, and put on sackcloth (the regular sign of mourning) from the greatest of them even to the least of them. Even the animals were covered with sackcloth. The king led the people in their humiliation, for said he, "Who knoweth whether God will not turn, and repent, and turn away from his fierce anger, that we perish not?" That the whole capital should have been so easily affected seems to us very remarkable, but as Dean Farrar says: "There is nothing inherently impossible in the effect attributed to Jonah's preaching." "It was not necessary to the effect of Jonah's preaching," says Mr. Layard, "that he should be of the religion of the people of Nineveh. I have known a Christian priest frighten a whole Mussulman town to tears and repentance by publicly proclaiming that he had received a divine mission to announce a coming earthquake or plague." This repentance seems to have been a genuine one (not necessarily a lasting one), for the king exhorted his people not only to cry unto God, but to turn away from their evil ways, and from the violence that was in their hands. And it was effective. "God saw their works that they turned from their evil way; and God repented of the evil which he said he would do unto them, and he did it not."

3. Jonah's Anger, 4:1-5. God's mercy we are told displeased Jonah exceedingly, and he was angry. Why was he angry? Some think because he was jealous of his honor as prophet, and wished his predictions to be always fulfilled, but there is no hint of that in the story. Some say he was jealous of God's honor, but there is no hint of that. The real cause of his displeasure as he himself indicates is that he was unwilling for the enemies of Israel to be saved. To show his displeasure he requests God to let him die. God's only answer was: Doest thou well to be angry? Jonah did not deign to reply. He went out of the city, made a booth to protect himself from the burning eastern sun, and watched to see if God would after all destroy the city.

4. God's question, 4:6-11. First of all we are told God prepared a gourd and made it come up over Jonah that it might be a shade over his head. And Jonah was exceedingly glad because of the gourd. He wanted God to let him die (?), but evidently did not wish it to be from sunstroke. Then the gourd died, and a hot wind blew in from the desert, and the sun beat down on Jonah's head, and he fainted; when he came to he asked God once more to let him die. "God said to Jonah, Doest thou be angry for the gourd? And he said, I do well angry unto death. And Jehovah said, Thou hast regard for the gourd, for which thou hast not neither madest it grow, which came up in a night, should not I have regard for Nineveh, that great city wherein are more than sixscore thousand persons cannot discern between their right hand and their left hand; and also much cattle?" What was Jonah's answer? We do not know. The book ends very significantly with a question.

Questions About the Book

Before we take up the message of the book let us ask two questions that we are bound to face:

1. Can we believe that Jonah was actually swallowed by a whale? The Bible itself says a big fish, per whale, perhaps some other fish. The word is translated whale in the New Testament, but the Greek word does not necessarily mean a whale any more than the Old Testament word. Those of us who read the Bible believe that all things are possible with God, and it would be very presumptuous for us to say the miracle could not have been performed. It may have happened on naturalistic grounds. Doctor Horton, who does not believe that the story is intended to be actual, says: "Mr. Frank Bullen's account of the cachalot shows conclusively that the sea contains a fish which could swallow a man without injuring him." And "The cachalot whale which has been seen in the Mediterranean can easily swallow a man or even a small shark. Sharks have swallowed men and vomited them out. But this raises the larger question.

2. Was Jonah intended by its writer to be taken as fact or fiction? Does it describe an actual occurrence, or give us on the other hand a great truth in the form of a parable, something on the order of the parables which Jesus used? Students of the Bible, both Conservative scholars tend to say the former, and Liberal scholars the latter; but many conservative scholars have no desire to explain away the supernatural elements of the book of Jonah as a parable rather than an actual bit of history. We haven't the space here to go into the various arguments that have been presented on these two views. Students who hold that it is actually a history refer to Jesus' references to Jonah in the New Testament. But their opponents reply that the fact that Jesus referred to Jonah by way of illustration does not necessarily mean that he believed in his existence, any more than a minister's reference to let means that he believes that Shakespeare's characters actually lived in the flesh. Those who believe that the book was intended from the first to be a parable argue that other things from the fact it was included among prophetic books rather than the historical books from the literary character of the book itself. Adam Smith says for example: "Nor does the book's written claim to be real history. On the contrary it is to us all the marks of the parable or allegory." Both arguments do not convince those who hold the traditional view. To us the whole question seems unimportant. The lesson of the book is the same in either case. The fortunate part of the whole business is that to most of us the whale looms so large that they fail to see the point to get his message from the book. Cornhill, one of the greatest of the Old Testament critics says that he has read this book without the tears coming to his eyes. Most men today because of the whale incident interpret it only a smile. We think it would be a gain if the church would agree to consider the book as a parable whether it is or not in order that we might truly appreciate its magnificent message. What is that message?

The Message of Jonah

1. The Missionary Message. This is the great message of the book. God loves all peoples (even the Assyrians who when the book was written were Israel's enemies), and desires them to come to a knowledge of the truth and be saved. All nations will respond to the Gospel if it is preached to them (even the Assyrians who it seemed at the time were the last people who had not been reached for the Kingdom of God). There was on the Old Testament who saw more compelling evidence of God's love for all mankind, the power of the Gospel to reach the hearts of all mankind than Jonah; no man in the history of the world till Jesus came. The book ends with a question because the writer was not interested in an answer, so much as he was in Israel's answer. Israelites had believed for many generations that they would ultimately reign over all the nations. But in Israel till the author of Jonah came believed that they had the responsibility of carrying the message to the rest of the world. Did the Israelites believe that Jonah was right or God? If they believed that it was right for God to care for Nineveh they would show it by the same. Who do we think was right? If we believe that God loves all mankind, and that there are men in every nation who will respond to the Gospel if it is proclaimed to them, what then? If we answer the question with our lips, have we really answered it?

2. The message concerning patriotism. Jonah's patriotism meant love only for Israel. The author of the book had a higher sort of patriotism. How does the message of patriotism work today?

Walter Lippmann says: "Our problem is to broaden the basis of loyalty. Within 125 years we have watched patriotism expand from the local unit to the larger unit. We have seen Massachusetts patriots converted into American patriots, Bavarians into Germans, Venetians into Christian Endeavor World brings the interesting Dr. Daniel A. Poling, president of the International Society of C. E. and of the World's C. E. Union, named as pastor of the Marble Collegiate Church in New York City, where he has been for ten years. The resignation was that he might be enabled to use of his valuable assistance to the promotion of people's work and some of the other activities with is connected.

Poling has been described as "a humble, New Christian." Those who know him know that and along with it a speaker and leader of great and power. Endeavor hosts, and young people, may well rejoice that their interests pulled by at his heartstrings. Doctor Poling will conduct National Youth Radio Conferences, his work in-Chief of the Christian Herald, his work with Penney Foundation, and his word with some organizations.

November 24: Thanksgiving Through Thanks-Living— Psalm 116:12-14; 17-19

For the Leader

The first things we teach a little child to say "thank you," and if the child refuses to say "thank feel somewhat hurt. As children of the Great One, too, must learn to say "thank you." We enjoy to be thanked, and he too must appreciate thanksgiving. Remember that when Jesus healed the ten lepers and few years we have been witnessing the growth of imperial patriotism within the British Empire? so far as I can see not the least ground for that the broadening of loyalty must stop at the frontiers."

Page says, "The task before us, therefore, is to create an area of goodwill so that law and order may transcend national boundaries and inhumanity. Some call this a dream, as men in the past called national unity a dream. But as men achieve." How can we widen the area of goodwill? What are the practical steps that our nation take to advance worldwide peace? To what measures should men who believe in the higher things bend their efforts? The fortunes of nations are the welfare of one nation is closely linked with the welfare of others. But sometimes the conflict does arise. In where does our allegiance lie? A recent edition of the Christian Century says: "A majority of the people of the United States believe that young Americans should be taught to accept and admire things as they are rather than to cultivate independent and critical thought the results of an inquiry addressed by Prof. E. C. Harper to 3000 teachers are a true index of public opinion. That radical criticism of acts of the government on the ground of injustice should be prohibited in the interest of patriotism was the opinion of one per cent. (Do you agree?) Slightly more than half the histories written for elementary and high school students should omit any facts likely to cause students to question or doubt the justice of our government and government. (Do you agree?) Still more than half the comfortable belief that if all other nations were as the United States there would be no more war. (Do you agree?) More than four-fifths believe that the duty of a good citizen to support the flag "for the sake of a good citizen to support the flag "for the sake of it may be unfurled?" (Do you agree?)

one of them turned and thanked him, he felt differently toward that one. But God has no favorites—"he is kind toward the unthankful and the evil," and "maketh his sun to rise on the evil and the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust." But though God is good to all whether they are thankful or not, it is a good thing for us to give thanks—it helps the individual to realize the greatness of his Maker though it cannot make God greater. Let us, therefore, say "thank you" with our lips and with our hearts.

The Source of All Good

"Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, coming down from the Father of lights, with whom can be found no variation, neither shadow that is cast by turning." The good things of this life are so numerous that we cannot count them—we depend on them so much that we cease to recognize them as blessings. But let us not grow fat and dull because of our blessings. Let us look to the Giver and thank Him for the good things.

For the beauty of the earth,
For the beauty of the skies,
For the love, which from our birth,
Over and around us lies,
Christ, our God, to Thee we raise
This our song of grateful praise.

"What Shall I Render Unto Jehovah?"

What shall I render unto Jehovah for all his benefits toward me?

I will take the cup of salvation, and call upon the name of Jehovah.

I will offer to thee the sacrifice of Thanksgiving, and will call upon the name of Jehovah.

I will pay my vows unto Jehovah, yea, in the presence of all his people,

In the courts of Jehovah's house, in the midst of thee, O Jerusalem.

Praise ye Jehovah.

A whole life of thanksgiving is not long enough for praising Jehovah. One whose life is filled to the brim with thankfulness, ceases to "give" his thanks and "lives" his thanks. Indeed, we can say "thank you" with our lips and not mean it. But if we say "thank you" with our lives we cannot be insincere—though we may say nothing with our lips. "I was eyes to the blind, and feet was I to the lame. I was father to the needy: and the cause of him I knew not I searched out." (Job 29:15, 16.)

What shall I render unto Jehovah? A life of thanksgiving. I shall give my thanks to him.

How Can We Live Our Thanks?

In the epistle of James, we are told that we must show our faith by our works. We cannot say our thanks without living our thanks. We may say to the poor, "Be thou clothed, warmed and fed," but our saying it does not clothe nor feed them. We must see to it that they are warmed and clothed and fed—we must do the work, thereby answering our own prayer that they be cared for. God blesses us and makes us reservoirs of blessing. We must be just as ready to pass these blessings on as we are to receive them. A lake without an outlet becomes sluggish. The Dead Sea has no outlet and as a result is so salty that nothing can live in it. Even so it is with us. If we do not share we become sluggish and mean and unloved.

"Saved to Serve"

The Motto of the Christian Endeavor is Saved to Serve. But we must go deeper than that—the root of it all is love, of course. Christ's love for us calls forth our love for Christ. The motto sounds a little unloving and commercial on the surface; we have to think down into the why of it to get the meaning. Saved? Yes, but why? Because of love. To Serve? Yes, but why? because of love also. While we are counting our blessings we should put "saved" at the top of the list, because no other gift compares with the love of Christ. And our sharing that love with others is serving him through others. "I was hungry and ye gave me to eat; I was thirsty and ye gave me drink; I was a stranger and yet took me in; naked, and ye clothed me; I was sick, and ye visited me; I was in prison and ye came unto me." And may our generosity become so much a part of us that we forget the little things we do, just as those in the parable that Jesus told forgot them. Loving and serving and sharing grow with use. "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye did it unto me."

Be Ye Thankful

Being thankful is a pleasant feeling. We cannot mope and be thankful at the same time. Thanksgiving calls forth a cheerful countenance and a song and praise. People around us are affected by our cheerfulness, and they too feel more cheerful because of us—that is living our thanks. Sharing our knowledge, our talents, going about our daily life with a cheerful energy—and by many other means we can live our thanks.

"Ten thousand thousand precious gifts
My daily thanks employ
Nor is the least a cheerful heart
That tastes those gifts with joy."

GROUP CONFERENCES IN CHARLESTON (S. C.) PRESBYTERIAL

Two Group Conferences were recently held in Charleston, S. C., Presbyterial Auxiliary. The first, that of District No. 3, comprising the churches of McClellanville, Mt. Pleasant, Summerville, Westminster and the Second Presbyterian Church of Charleston, was held in the New Wappetaw Church, McClellanville, S. C., on September 26. The meeting was called to order by Mrs. D. E. Friar, Chairman, at 10:00 a. m. After the hymn "Jesus Calls Us" the Devotional was conducted by Mrs. G. T. Pace. The welcome was extended by Mrs. J. D. Mackintosh, and responded to by Mrs. Friar. The Roll Call of Auxiliaries was followed by introductions and greetings from Presbyterial officers.

Mrs. J. B. Morrison, Jr., gave her message on "Loyalty." The report of the Registration Committee, given by Miss Clara Seabrook, showed an attendance of 71. The offertory solo was sung by Mrs. H. B. Hill, Corresponding Secretary of the Presbyterial. Mrs. H. L. Davis then gave a talk on the Summer School of Missions, and after the hymn, "Take Time to Be Holy," had been sung, Mrs. J. M. Leland reviewed the Home and Foreign Mission Study books. The Standard was explained by Mrs. Alex. Sprunt, Jr.; and after the report on Young People's Work, the meeting adjourned for lunch.

The afternoon session opened at 2:00 o'clock, with a hymn and prayer. Mrs. Arthur Johnston spoke on Bible Study, and Mrs. J. B. Morrison, Jr., on the "Responsibilities and Opportunities of Auxiliary Presidents." Following this came the Budget of Combined Report Blanks, by Mrs. Clark Seabrook, Presbyterial Treasurer and Mrs. A. W. Blount, Presbyterial Secretary.

The Literature Table was given a period for attention and examination, after which came Three-Minute Messages from Presbyterial Officers, introducing Duties and Methods to Auxiliary officers. The reports of delegates to the Colored Conference, and Echo Conference for colored women, were delivered by Mrs. G. L. Mikell, Chairman of Local Home Missions. The Question Box was conducted by Mrs. H. B. Hill, "Things to Remember" by Mrs. J. B. Morrison, Jr., and "What this Conference has meant to me" by Mrs. D. E. Friar. The Conference was closed appropriately with the hymn, "Lord Dismiss Us With Thy Blessing."

II. On October 19th the Conference of District No. 4, which includes the churches of John's Island, James Island, Edisto Island and the First Presbyterian Church, Charleston, met in the John's Island Church, under the leadership of the Chairman, Mrs. Fuller King. The devotional was conducted by Rev. T. A. Beckett. Mrs. Manigault Jenkins welcomed the delegates, and Mrs. Ed. Grice, Jr., responded. After the Roll Call, introductions and Greetings, came a song by Mrs. Edmonds Welch, followed by the Presbyterial Presbyterial President's Message, "Loyalty." Mrs. W. H. Davis spoke on Personal Evangelism; Mrs. Ellen Pope on "Auxiliary Methods," and Mrs. Alexander Sprunt, Jr., on The Standard, and on Orphanage Work. Mrs. Inez Grimball called attention to the Literature Table. At one o'clock the meeting adjourned for lunch.

Work was resumed at two o'clock. Mrs. Harry Walker spoke on the Bible Hour, and Mrs. G. L. Mikell on Synodical and Presbyterial Home Missions. Mrs. J. M. Leland reported the Colored Women's Conference, and gave a talk on Missions.

Mrs. P. E. Connor, Synodical President, gave a talk on "Glimpses into the Church of China." Mrs. Brockinton spoke on Montreat. Miss Marianne Paul, Secretary of Young People's Work, told of the Young People's Conference. The "Question Box" was conducted by Mrs. Connor. The report of the Registration Committee, by Mrs. Elias Rivers, showed an attendance of 67. The meeting was concluded with a hymn and prayer. All those who attended these two Group Conferences spoke of them as most helpful and instructive, and delightful both socially and spiritually.

Men-of-the-Church

Presbyterian Church in the United States

REV. J. E. PURCELL, D.D., Executive Secretary
HENRY GRADY BUILDING
ATLANTA, GEORGIA

THE DEPARTMENT CHAIRMAN AND HIS WORK IN THE MEN-OF-THE-CHURCH

The Presbyterian Progressive Program

The official program of our church is known as the Presbyterian Progressive Program. This program provides for instruction in and promotion of every phase of the life and work of the church. The General Assembly has approved the plan and has ordered every organization in the church to build its work around it and to use it vigorously. This program is the official program of the Men-of-the-Church.

Departments

In order more easily to promote this program in the various organizations of the Church it has been divided into seven departments. Each covers one phase of the work and the whole work is covered comprehensively in the seven. Needless to say, each part of the program is of vital importance and none can be slighted or ignored without loss to the whole.

These Departments and the months of emphasis are as follows:

- Spiritual Life and Evangelism—September.
- Foreign Missions—January, February, May.
- Home Missions—June, October, November.
- Christian Education and Ministerial Relief—April, December.
- Religious Education—July, October.
- Stewardship—February, March, November.
- Christian Social Service—August.

Departmental Chairmen

The Departmental Chairmen are the men in each local organization who are responsible for the mastery of and for the promotion of the work of one of these departments. By mastery is meant the possession of a comprehensive, intimate and detailed knowledge of every phase of his department; by promotion is meant the giving of this knowledge to the men and the leading of the men to do the work which the local church needs to have done in that department.

Appointment

The chairmen are appointed by the three elected officers—President, Secretary and Treasurer—together with the pastor. The Chairmen are not elected by the organization. The three officers named above have the full responsibility for the local Men-of-the-Church organization, and it is their duty to select such men as will carry out their ideas, aims and policies.

Character and Qualifications

There are certain general traits of character which every chairman should possess. He should have a deep and sincere spirituality—we might go further and say that he should have an aggressive spirituality. He should not only be possessed with a flaming zeal for the work of the Kingdom himself, but he should also have an intense desire to enlist the men in the same work. Needless to say, too, he should be a man of irreproachable character—men in the last analysis follow character. Lastly, each chairman should have a willingness to give his very best to the Master regardless of the sacrifice.

The foregoing qualifications are desirable in every chairman of every department. There is, however, room for individual gifts and talents and each department requires different types of men. Department I, Spiritual Life and Evangelism, requires one who knows himself by experience the joy of fellowship with Christ, and has found the personal joy of soul winning. Department II, Foreign Missions, and Department III, Home Missions, will be advanced by men whose hearts are aflame with the promotion of the gospel at home and to the uttermost parts of the earth. Department IV needs a man who has a vision of the possibilities in Christian Education, and whose heart is touched to care for those who have grown old in the service. Department V, Religious Education, requires one who is interested in the church as an educational institution. Department VI, Stewardship, will be best promoted by a man who has the financial interests of the church on his heart. Department VII, Christian Social Service, is the department for the man who longs to serve his fellow men in need.

This is but a hurried character sketch, but the possibility of using different types of men and the need of fitting the right man to the right place is illustrated. Perhaps not many local churches can furnish an ideal man for each department—perhaps none of them can—but there is no reason why they can't be developed. The making of such men is one of the objects of the organization—any man with a willingness to give his best to the Master can develop into the leader which this department demands. And perhaps in no other place in the work of the local church will his work count for more.

PROMOTION

The Council is the group to which the various Chairmen will come for help in promoting this program. After the Chairmen have studied their fields of activities, no doubt there will be certain things which they will feel should be done in the local church. They will jot down these things, plan how they are to be carried out successfully, and then will come before the Council with these concrete plans. The Council will decide just how many of the plans can be carried out, will adopt them and will assign them to the groups for execution. It is well for the Chairmen to check up on the groups and see just how much of this program was actually executed. The major part of the plans for each department will be carried out in the months assigned to them. However, there are certain tasks which should be emphasized every month in the year. See pamphlets on the Executive Committee and Council, and on the Group for further information. The whole success of the departmental work depends on the knowledge and promotional energy of the Departmental Chairmen.

Each chairman should feel a distinct responsibility for his part of the work. If he fails, then part of the church's work fails with him. And, be sure that great things through you if you will only give unreservedly to this task.

SERVICE SUGGESTIONS FOR DECEMBER PROGRAM

President:

is a very happy month for a man who has it in his power to make others happy. Talk with the Chairman of the Department VII and check all the people who should be remembered at the Christmas time. Make them happy. Carefully, too, the plans for the Christmas service. Make them made very beautiful and inspiring.

Council:

The meeting should be held seven to ten days before the general Meeting. Open and close with prayer. The part of the program this month is given to Department VII. He cares for the Educational Program. The Council should have clearly in mind just how he is to use the men. He should give encouragement and help in the presentation of the Christmas Worship sent out by the Department of Christian Education. Make every effort to secure a liberal offering for ministers, the widows and orphan children on the part of Ministerial Relief. The men might send cards to your Christmas Church Services to guests at homes and boarding houses. Better still, send some men to bring these strangers with them to church and arrange some hour of fellowship for them. Offer to use the cars of the men, but get the men to offer to go with the young people to sing Christmas carols and to carry an echo of the angels' song into the street and into every shadowed place.

Department I has a chance to speak a good word for the Family Altar and Religion in the Home. Some men should arrange a program on the Family Altar. Urge the men if the old year has brought about misunderstanding and bitterness of spirit in any relationship of life, to first one in the Spirit of the Little Child of Bethlehem to make it right in love and good will. Get the men to speak that word of encouragement and appreciation which they have thought of doing for so long; write a letter for which some one is waiting, and let not the stars pale before you have spoken a good word for your Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ. Let him suggest the Bible reading for the month.

Department III will arrange for the outpost work, and Department VII will arrange the supper meeting. Make it the family table for some stranger—in memory of the Little Child of Bethlehem for whom there was no room when He came to earth.

Leader:

Each meeting of the year will require the leader to have such sympathy and harmony with his program as to make it should be undertaken in the spirit of prayer with the speakers. Pray for your own program is built around the little pamphlet "The God-Planned Life." Secure this pamphlet for the speakers. Watch the Church Papers for material. Work hard. It will be eminently worth the effort.

Speakers:

Choose much over your talk. Study earnestly. Be prepared whatever you do, don't read it. More talks are given by poor presentation than any other cause. The talk should be deeply spiritual and can only be presented in a quiet atmosphere. Talk, feeling as Phillips Brooks said, "Jesus is standing with His hand on your shoulder—feel it, men will feel it too."

Group Leaders:

Work for the men this month will be very interesting and appealing. Every group should make some plan for family happy. In addition, encourage the men to get behind the Christmas program and make it a success. Men can be enlisted at Christmas better than at any other time. Find your way into the hearts of men, hitherto closed. Be sure that you know what the men are to do, and plan your work carefully. Encourage many men as possible. Emphasize prayer at your meetings.

WHAT MEN ARE DOING IN THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, U. S. A.

It is refreshing to find that men in our sister denomination are doing such fine things. Leading us by ten years of time since the beginning of their organized work, it gives us encouragement to see the fine results of their efforts. It is a joy to present this list of activities, compiled from some of their publications.

What Their Men Attend Their Conventions

There was a total of 2,953 men at the day service and night from 942 churches at thirteen District Men's Conventions. Approximately two-thirds of the men in attendance were laymen and a large percentage of these were the men. Of the 121 names on the 13 programs, only 44 were unable to keep their appointments. Of the 77 who appeared on these programs, 73 were ministers and 4 were laymen. The proportion of ministers is high because all of the representatives of the Council and the Boards are ministers.

What Men Do for Men

A Men's Church in Wisconsin organized a two-year evangelistic campaign among men, setting as their goal of bringing forty men into the membership of the church on the fortieth anniversary of the organization of the church. Forty adult men, most of whom were heads of families, and fifteen young men and boys were received into the church on the anniversary day. "The Men of an Oklahoma Church called on every man in the community who was not in some church. On guest night every man brought a man to the meeting." In one New Jersey Church the men "Joined with the men of seventeen other churches in 'Witness Week' and together made a campaign of personal work among men."

What Their Men Do for Boys

In an Illinois Church they "Furnish seven teachers for the Boy's Classes in the Sunday School." They "Sponsored several open-house nights for boys" at one Minnesota church; and they "Purchased and remodeled a cottage for Boy's Work and built a volley ball court" at one California Church; and "Pledged last year $500.00 for the Boy's Work Department" of another.

What Their Men Do to Promote Bible Study

In Churches of Iowa, Ohio, Colorado, Indiana and California they "Challenged the men of a city to a city-wide campaign for Men's Bible Classes, thereby seeking to raise the spiritual level of the city and organize the men for the work of the church"; "Helped finance a Community Bible School"; "Conducted mid-week meetings for Bible Study"; Organized a community Bible Class which meets every Monday with an average attendance of one hundred men"; "Promoted from January to Easter a Wednesday-Noon-Bible-Study-Club."

What Their Men Do for the Local Church and Its Services

The men of eight widely separated churches "Attend church in a body twice a year"; Assist the Elders, Deacons, and Trustees in visiting every member of the church preceding communion services. This results in large attendance at the communion services"; "Provide autos regularly to bring the aged and infirm to the church services Sunday morning"; "Conduct the Sunday evening service once each month"; "Maintain a large men's choir for the Sunday evening service"; "Have charge of the ushering at all Sunday Services"; "Conduct a 'Know-Your-Own-Church' campaign each night for one week"; and "Conduct Sunday evening services in the Park during July and August." Please note each of these things was done in a different church, and by a different body of men.

What Their Men Have Done for Pastors

The pastor of a Chicago Church was given a trip to Palestine, financed by his men. A number of pastors have been given cars by their men. A beautiful study was equipped for a San Francisco pastor. At Hollywood "The men have pledged to support the pastor's Program completely."

What Their Men Have Done for Vacant Churches, and Out-Post Points

The Prayer Meetings and Sunday School of a vacant church in Arkansas were maintained for more than a year while the church was without a pastor and the membership increased under this service. The men of another Arkansas Church "Organized a Sunday School in a village twenty miles distant and promoted the organization of a church of twenty-five members."

From one Illinois Church men were provided "For conducting church services in two Mission churches and for maintaining services in one vacant church." "A House-to-House Visitation for the organization of a Sunday School in an outlying community, securing an enrollment of 150 which soon grew to 400" was an activity of the men of a California church.

What Their Men Do for Their Local Communities

In a Tennessee Church they "Support a destitute family, paying the rent and providing food and clothing." They "Purchased and remodeled a building as a community center in an outlying Kentucky district." They "Helped finance a Week-day Religious School of Education, in which a full time teacher is employed" at Sidney, Ohio; "Co-operated with the Farm Bureau and other Farmer's Organizations for improving agricultural conditions" at Neponset, Ill.; and at Olivet Church, Chicago, they "Distribute hundreds of Testaments and conduct street meetings, and provide relief for needy families."

HIS LAMP

Annie Johnson Flint

His lamp am I,
To shine where He shall say;
And lamps are not for sunny rooms,
Nor for the light of day,
But for dark places on earth,
Where shame and wrong and crime have birth,
Or for the murky twilight gray
Where wandering sheep have gone astray,
Or where the light grows dim
And souls are groping after Him,
And as sometimes a flame we find,
Clear—shining through the night
So bright we do not see the lamp,
But only see the light;
So may I shine—His life the flame—
That men may glorify His name!

ED TRAPS THE TIGER

Ed Friar and I were on the good ship Hercules, plunging through a gale somewhere between Cuba and the Panama Canal. The ship would bury her nose down under a wave every once in a while, and then lift a couple of tons of green sea water high into the air and tumble it down over the fo'c'sle into the forward deck below. It was good fun watching the sea breaking over the bow that way, but I noticed that Ed didn't seem to be enjoying it.

"What's the matter, Ed?" I asked.

"Oh, nothing," he replied.

"Don't you like this?" I queried.

"Sure I do."

For a minute he kept quiet; then he went on to say: "But honestly, George, I wish I could get off this ship at the Panama Canal and go into the jungle with Mr. Buck. The sea is all right, but I'd have a better time hunting big game."

"What would your father says?"

Ed's father was Captain of the Hercules, and it was because of him that we were taking this trip.

"He wouldn't mind," was Ed's answer. "If I could only get Mr. Buck to say it was all right."

"Why don't you ask him?"

"I did. He said he was sorry, but he always liked to have men with him who would be useful in a tight place."

"Well, wouldn't you be?"

"How do I know?" replied Ed, sadly. "I've never been in one to find out."

At this point in our talk the ship lifted herself on a high wave and stood for a half-second or more on the crest; then it plunged deeply into the next roller and buried its nose into the ocean.

"Watch out!" warned Ed's father. "This is the worst wave we've hit and it may do some damage."

The force of the impact was so great that for a moment the Hercules stood still in her tracks. Then she struggled ahead, trying to lift her bow at the same time; and when she did rise again, she poured tons and tons of green water down into the forward deck.

The spray had no sooner cleared away when Mr. Buck ran up the ladder to the bridge.

"Captain Friar!" he shouted, very much excited. "The tiger's loose."

We looked over the front of the bridge to a spot on the deck where a moment before there had been a large cage occupied by a prize tiger that Mr. Buck was shipping to a zoo in San Francisco. The cage had been torn from its lashings by the heavy sea and smashed against the bulkhead of the deck-house, and Bengal Jo, the tiger, was roaming savagely between the hatches, letting out angry roars that made everybody shudder.

"Quick, Ed," cried Captain Friar. "Go down below and get my rifle."

"Don't shoot him!" pleaded Mr. Buck. "Give me a chance to recapture him."

"I can't risk anybody's life," replied Ed's father. "And if that tiger ever gets up on the promenade deck, the passengers will be in danger."

"He won't ever get up there," promised Mr. Buck. "We'll get him in a corner and then rope him down."

"All right," agreed Ed's father. "I'll give you ten minutes to make the try."

"Come with me, Ed," said Mr. Buck. "I may need your help. Have you got a revolver?"

"No, but I can get one."

"It would be safer if you did. If Bengal Jo should happen to spring, you'd have some way of defending yourself."

When Ed came back with the revolver, he started down the ladder with Mr. Buck. But just as they got on the second rung down, the ship took another dip and tumbled some more water over the deck. The tiger turned to run away from it, and as he did so, he caught sight of Ed on the ladder.

With a wild roar, he bounded along the deck and leaped up on the ladder, springing so high that I thought sure he would land right on top of Ed. But he misjudged his spring, or perhaps the lurch of the ship threw him off, for he fell back to the deck, clawing at the ladder rungs as he went down. By the time he had regained his feet and made a successful leap, both Ed and Mr. Buck were safely inside one of the staterooms.

"I hate to do this," said Mr. Buck, drawing his revolver. "But I guess I have to."

He went to the porthole and leveled his gun at the tiger, who had caught the scent and was now prowling up and down before the door.

"Wait a minute!" cried Ed. "Why can't we trap him in this cabin?"

"Is there an inside door?" asked Mr. Buck, catching the idea quickly.

"Yes," said Ed. "We could escape by that and then I could creep around and close the outside door on the tiger after he had entered the cabin."

"It's a good idea, but dangerous," said Mr. Buck. "I'm willing to try it if you are. It's our only chance to recapture the tiger alive."

They opened the inside door and saw that the passageway was clear. Then, while Mr. Buck held one door open so that Ed could escape easily, Ed turned the knob of the other door and kicked it wide open.

The tiger was so surprised for the moment that he did not move. Then he bounded into the cabin with a single leap, but not before Ed had skipped out into the corridor and Mr. Buck had closed the inside door.

"Now," said Ed. "If I can only run around to the outside fast enough to close that door before the tiger comes out again!"

He started down the passageway, but changed his mind and decided to take a short cut through one of the other staterooms. Soon he was on the promenade deck again, and without hesitating even a second, he ran to the open door and shut it tight. The tiger was now trapped in the stateroom.

"But what are we going to do with him now?" queried Mr. Buck. "We can't let him stay in a first-class cabin all the rest of the trip, and even if we did, we'd have to find some way of getting him out when the ship arrived at the Panama Canal."

Ed, puzzled for a while, and then he asked Mr. Buck if the tiger was hungry.

"He ought to be," was the answer. "He hasn't had his day's supply of raw meat yet."

"Then getting him out of the cabin will be easy," returned Ed. "All we have to do is build a new cage and place it and the cabin door to door. Put some meat into the cage and the tiger will walk from one to the other without any coaxing at all."

"Ed," said the animal trainer in admiration. "You certainly do have some of the most brilliant ideas I ever heard of. They work, too."

The one about the cage worked all right, because I was there when the buried beneath the sands of New Mexico until along about 1880 came a man, Adolf Bandelier by name, who found bits of ancient pottery and a few other relics which aroused his curiosity and caused him to dig about in the sand and stubble that he might learn from whence they came. Thus it was that Tyuonyi, America's first apartment house, came to be known to the modern world. Now thousands of tourists annually visit the Bandelier National Monument and pay their respects not only to the man who discovered the treasure but to the Queres who lived in it so many years ago.

The violet-crowned mountain of the Sangre de Cristo Range, which may be seen from Sante Fe, conceal and shelter in their deep gorges many clusters of cave dwellers of a long-forgotten age. Only one of these canyons, El Rito de los Frijoles, has anything as interesting as a prehistoric apartment house. The Rito is a beautiful spot. It is a narrow valley, nowhere broader than half a mile; its length is only six miles, but its cliffs are all more than two hundred feet high and its history the most fascinating of all time.

The walls of the canyon are of yellowish tufa, so soft that in many places it can be scooped out with the bare hands. All up and down the face of this cliff are artificial caves once occupied by aborigines and now known transfer was made, and Bengal Jo came for the meat as though he were a kitten coming for a saucer of milk. Mr. Buck shook hands with Ed and said:

"How would you like to come into the jungle with me? I need somebody who can be handy with wild animals without hurting them."

"I'd like to, if George could come too."

"Of course he can. It would be a fine experience for you both. If you want me to, I'll ask your father."

Ed's father didn't mind, and so while the Hercules went on to San Francisco, Ed and I stayed in the jungle with Mr. Buck, and lots of times now, we can go to the big zoo at home and see some animals that we helped to catch. Some of them know us and some of them don't, but Ed says none of them mean as much to him as Bengal Jo does.

"That's natural," I always tell him. "Bengal Jo is the only tiger you ever captured single-handed."

An Ailing CHILD

Are you prepared to render first aid and quick comfort the moment your youngster has an upset of any sort? Could you do the right thing—immediately—though the emergency came without warning—perhaps tonight? Castoria is a mother's standby at such times. There is nothing like it in emergencies, and nothing better for everyday use. For a sudden attack of colic, or the gentle relief of constipation; to allay a feverish condition, or to soothe a fretful baby that can't sleep. This pure vegetable preparation is always ready to ease an ailing youngster. It is just as harmless as the recipe on the wrapper reads. If you see Chas. H. Fletcher's signature, it is genuine Castoria. It is harmless to the smallest infant; doctors will tell you so.

You can tell from the recipe on the wrapper how mild it is, and how good for little systems. But continue with Castoria until a child is grown.

to the world as Cliff Dwellers. These are alluring, but it is a spot down by the brook that attracts most attention. In the opening on the floor of the valley is the great circular community or apartment house. While scientists have proved that the original structure was three stories high, only the first of these remains. Built of blocks of soft volcanic tufa, the structure could not withstand the onslaught of the elements through the centuries. It is certain that Tyuonyi was built, not only as a habitation, but for defense. The living rooms were entered from the inner court by means of ladders ascending to the roof and then descending through hatchways to the interior. It seems that the courtway was entered by only one passage, and that was well guarded. The entrance way had a post planted irregularly in it in such a way that it could be entirely closed at a moment's notice. The location, so near the life-giving water and the remains of an underground waterway, shows preparation for a siege. Not far from the ruins is a paved circular platform. Whether this was the floor of a built-up Kiva, as the Ceremonial Caves are called, or whether it was a dance floor upon which men and maidens danced before the Pyramids were built, we will never know. From the shards, as the broken pieces of pottery are called, the grain and other bits of ancient life found in and about Tyuonyi, it has been gathered that the early occupants were Queres or Keres, that corn was their staff of life, and that they understood the art of irrigation. The remains of water supplies found, and the flow of the creek today are so small that these early people must have enjoyed considerable rainfall or they could not have existed. Nothing has ever been found at Tyuonyi which proves or even suggests that it has been occupied since the Stone Age, which was two thousand years before the birth of Christ.

Not one legend or story exists today in any literature or any pueblo lore to tell us the fate of those early people. If we begin to study it, one question follows another. Did some great cataclysm, flood, or earthquake destroy the settlement? Did warring, scalping tribes come down out of the north and drive them farther south? A general migration to some distant region should have left a traditional trail. There is none. All we can do is conjecture, and as we gaze in awe at that first apartment house, imagine who will look, four thousand years from now, at the homes we are building. Will they know all about us? We wonder.

WHO DRIVES THE SCHOOL BUS?

With the opening of schools thousands of children start their daily trips to and from the consolidated schools by motor bus. In order that these children may meet with no mishap, and above all, that they shall not be subjected to danger at railroad crossings, should be the first duty of their parents and of those in authority, to see that the drivers of the school busses are reliable men of mature years, long experience and good judgment.

Investigation of an accident which occurred last winter, brought out the fact that the driver of the bus was an eighteen-year-old boy who had not taken ordinary precautions to make sure no train was coming before crossing the railroad track. In some cases the driver is one of the older school children; in others, the helper at the garage of the person to whom the contract is let.

A tremendous responsibility rests upon these drivers. They are entrusted with the safety of as many as 20 or 30 children. The trip to and from the school must be made in all kinds of weather. When it is raining there is a temptation to put up storm curtains which prevent the driver from having a clear view on either side. The desire to be on time for school, or to hurry home afterwards, leads to a tendency to take chances that are little short of criminal.

Unless the driver of the school bus is fully aware of his responsibility and fully capable of meeting any emergency which may arise, accidents are likely to happen which will strike at the heart of every family with children of school age.

To guard against the possibility of such a catastrophe every known safety measure should be enforced. The greatest care should be taken to see that the busses are in good mechanical condition and frequent inspections for this purpose should be made by the proper authorities.

The selection of the driver should not be left to the person to whom the contract for providing transportation is let, if this method is used. While he should be required to demonstrate his ability to handle the bus that is used, this is only one qualification to be taken into account, and his reputation for steadiness and good judgment should be the determining factor. No school boy, garage helper or village loafer should be chosen for the job merely because he can operate the bus and will do so at little cost. The person chosen should be placed under bond for compliance with all state laws and with such regulations as the local commissioners shall put into effect regarding the transportation of school children.

Above all things drivers of school busses should be required to stop before crossing a railroad track.

No matter how much time may be lost, no matter how stormy the weather, no matter whether no train is due, the school bus should be stopped at every crossing and the driver should be required to make sure that no train is coming. The observance of this simple rule will do away with disastrous accidents at railroad crossings.

Every time this precaution is omitted there is a chance that every child in the bus may be killed or maimed. It is too late after such an accident, to say, "I didn't think a train was com-

When Your Cough Hangs On, Mix
This at Home

The best cough remedy that money could buy, can easily be mixed at home. It saves money and gives you the most reliable, quick-acting medicine you ever used. The way it takes hold of stubborn coughs and chest colds, giving immediate relief, is astonishing.

Any druggist can supply you with 2½ ounces of Pinex. Pour this into a pint bottle, and fill up with plain granulated sugar syrup or strained honey. It's no trouble at all to mix, and when you once use it, you will never be without it. Keeps perfectly and tastes good—children really like it.

It is surprising how quickly this loosens the germ-laden phlegm, and soothes and heals the inflamed membranes. At the same time, part of the medicine is absorbed into the blood, where it acts directly on the bronchial tubes, and helps the system throw off the whole trouble. Even those severe coughs which follow cold epidemics, are promptly ended.

Pinex is a highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway Pine, containing the active agent of creosote, in a refined, palatable form. Nothing known in medicine is more helpful in cases of severe coughs, chest colds and bronchial troubles.

Do not accept a substitute for Pinex. It is guaranteed to give prompt relief or money refunded.

A Three Days' Cough Is Your Danger Signal

Coughs from colds may lead to serious trouble. You can stop them now with Creomulsion, an emulsified creosote that is pleasant to take. Creomulsion is a medical discovery with two-fold action; it soothes and heals the inflamed membranes and inhibits germ growth.

Of all known drugs, creosote is recognized by high medical authorities as one of the greatest healing agencies for coughs from colds and bronchial irritations. Creomulsion contains, in addition to creosote, other healing elements which soothe and heal the inflamed membranes and stop the irritation, while the creosote goes on to the stomach, is absorbed into the blood, attacks the seat of the trouble and checks the growth of the germs.

Creomulsion is guaranteed effective in the treatment of coughs, colds, bronchitis and minor forms of bronchial irritations, and is especially good for building up the system after a cold or flu. Money refunded if not satisfied after taking according to directions. Ask your druggist. Send coupon for free sample.

Doctor Gives Hint to Lucky Salesman

IT'S a wise man that knows when he is slipping. Mr. R. F. Myers of 711 Rosedale Street, Baltimore, had the good fortune to get his tip straight from one of his doctor customers (he was selling for a pharmaceutical house) and since that lucky visit he has increased his business 50 per cent.

For two years he had been driving from town to town, and naturally this threw his elimination out of shape. He felt himself slipping. Cathartics only made him worse. Then one day he was calling on a wise old physician, and asked his advice. "What you need, my boy," said the doctor, "is a simple, easy, normal way to clean the poisons out of your system—we all have them—and with your kind of work they certainly cut down efficiency. Why don't you try Nujol?"

"Well, believe it or not," says Mr. Myers, "in a few days I felt like a new man. 'What's got into you?'

asked the home office, 'your business has increased 50 per cent!'

That's the great thing about Nujol. As soon as it begins to clean the poisons out of your system it makes you feel so well that you almost always do a much better job.

Nujol is not a medicine and contains no drugs. It is perfectly harmless, forms no habit. It is simply bodily lubrication, which everybody needs. You, like everybody else,

Why put off good health any longer? Go into any good drug store and get a bottle of Nujol in a sealed package. Costs so little and does so much! Maybe you can increase your efficiency 50 per cent too!

MINISTERS' ANNUITY FUND

The Purpose of the Movement:

To promote the larger interests of the Kingdom of God throughout the whole world.
To make the Presbyterian Church in the United States a more aggressive and effective division of the Christian forces.

To render this Church stronger, more efficient and better able to cope with the subtle and powerful influences that oppose the ideals and purposes of the Christian religion.

To enable the ministers to avoid as far as possible the avocations and worldly entanglements that draw them away from the spiritual ministries to which they have been called by the Spirit of God and the Church and to release their energies for spiritual objectives.

To make it possible for the ministers and missionaries of the Church to preach and teach with greater serenity and force—to become and remain “able ministers of the New Testament.”

To enable the Church to heed the solemn injunction, “Take heed to thyself that thou forsake not the Levite as long as thou livest on the land” (which belongs alone to God), which is so forcibly brought over into the Christian program by the Apostle Paul in the ninth chapter of First Corinthians where the climax of his irresistible argument is, “Even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the Gospel should live of the Gospel.”

To render it possible for the Church to do that just and honest thing which it has always wanted to do, and since 1717 has tried unsuccessfully to do, that is, make adequate provision for disability or old age and for widow and orphan left dependent at death, of those whom the Church has called away from the sources of worldly gain and to whom it has made the solemn promise of a living” that will keep them “free from worldly cares and avocations.”

To enable the Church to “keep face” before the social conscience of the world where social, educational, fraternal, national, civil, municipal and industrial organizations are effectively putting into practice the Gospel preached by the Church and which it has not adequately practiced among its own servants. The conscience of men and women who have led in these fields is suggesting, “Why shouldn't we practice this in our Church?”

To focus the attention of the Church on spiritual, rather than material things—in making investments not in brick or mortar, but in personalities with faith, hope, cheer and expectancy, increasing their spiritual vitality and the opportunity for devotion and leadership—thus transmuting money into spiritual force.

To remove “the one inglorious mark of our Church's history,” to unite “pastor” and “people” more effectively in sympathetic thought and action, to answer the call of conscience, to honor the brotherhood, to obey God, to follow the example of Christ.

Second report was scheduled for November 15, and the third for Tuesday, November 19.

19 of the 272 churches in the State 44 per cent, were represented in the report.

Some of the churches, however, are not reaching their goals on the first report.

York Presbytery, $5,881; Harbison Presbytery, $1,996; Charleston Presbytery, $3,440. Total for Zone No. 3, $9,317.

World's Christian Endeavorers in August, 1930

Call is issued for Meeting in Berlin in August, 1930

Below the official call for the World's Christian Endeavorers Convention of 1930, which is to meet in Berlin, Germany, the call is issued by the Rev. Dr. Daniel A. Poling, who resigned his pastoral charge at the Collegiate Church, New York City, in order to give himself over to the work for the Christian Endeavorers in every part of the world.

The call follows: "We appeal to the American people to give famine relief funds because every preventative undertaking completed ends the famine threat in that particular section.

"Experience has shown that it is possible to make an effective start toward famine prevention and in the process save the lives of hundreds of thousands who would otherwise die because of a lack of food."

China Famine Relief U. S. A. at 205 E. 42nd St., New York City, is receiving funds to be remitted to China.

The Associated Press reports from Little Rock, Ark., indicate that the Presbytery of Arkansas on November 13 began an investigation of the doctrinal soundness of Rev. Hay Watson Smith, D.D., pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church of Little Rock. The item taken from the State, of Columbia, S. C., follows:

Starvation Still Stalking in China

Famine Relief Committee Begs for Funds for Sufferers in Wide Area

Famine, stark and severe, still prevails in a considerable part of North China, as shown by press dispatches and cables being sent to the United States.

"In Central and South China, where there has been a full measure of military and banditry, there has been no serious rain shortage and consequently no famine," says Dr. David A. Brown, Chairman of the Board, China Famine Relief, U. S. A.

A cablegram from China International Famine Relief Commission, Peking, just received in New York, among other things, makes the following statements:

"The drought and the floods have continued famine conditions until at least next June in the Northwest over an area of four hundred and fifty miles square, with a population of thirty million people, the severity of which is increased by protraction and winter.

"Even what remains of the present famine is a much more serious catastrophe than the famine of 1920-21, for the relieving of which the American people gave so generously.

"The total losses due to disturbed conditions during this famine are less than four hundred dollars gold in a total of relief supplies and money handled by our organization of over a million dollars gold. The experience shows that relief is possible in spite of disturbed conditions.

"We believe that need and practicality of relief should determine a relief program and not political conditions, especially when the destitute people themselves are not responsible for the political disturbances. This was the attitude of the American people in relieving the Near East and Russia.

"We appeal to the American people to give famine relief funds because every preventative undertaking completed ends the famine threat in that particular section.

"Experience has shown that it is possible to make an effective start toward famine prevention and in the process save the lives of hundreds of thousands who would otherwise die because of a lack of food."

Davidson Church Committee Meets

Plans for the Movement Placed in Hands of Special Committee

The committee which was appointed by the Presbyterian Synod of North Carolina for the erection of a church at Davidson College held its first meeting at Davidson November 14, and elected Rev. Charles E. Raynal, D.D., pastor of the First Presbyterian church at Statesville, as its permanent chairman, and authorized Doctor Raynal to appoint a committee of five to make a survey of the situation and offer recommendations at a later meeting of the larger group.

This committee of five, which has not yet been announced, was charged with the duty of "studying the needs of the college church, to suggest possible plans for a new church building, to estimate the cost, to recommend a suitable time for the undertaking of a financial campaign to secure funds for the erection of this building, and to do all those things which may be necessary in a preliminary survey for the undertaking of a campaign for funds and for the erection of a new church."

As chairman of the committee, Doctor Raynal gave out a public statement on behalf of the individual members, in which it was stated that the committee "deplored the fact that a statement was printed some weeks ago giving erroneous and exaggerated figures as to the estimated cost of the new church." The statement went on to say that "no such authorized estimate has been given out; in fact, it is not yet possible for the committee itself to make any estimate. It is the purpose of the committee to recommend that an adequate and attractive church be built at the lowest possible cost."

Opinion was expressed here following the deliberations that the next meeting would be held in January. The time of this conference, however, will be determined by the work of the committee of five. No meeting will be held until it is ready to make a report.

Union Announces Annual Event

The James Sprunt Foundation Lecturer for 1930 is Rev. R. F. Campbell, D.D., of Asheville, Former Moderator of Assembly

The James Sprunt Foundation lectures, the annual big event of Union Seminary, will be given in January.

The dates will be January 15 to 22, inclusive.

The place will be, as usual, Schaufler Hall on the campus of Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, Virginia.

The subject chosen for this course is "Freedom and Restraint."

The titles of the eight lectures in the series are:

- I. Freedom and the Scriptures.
- II. The Letter and the Spirit.
- III. The Individual and the Institution.
- IV. Liberty and the Law of the Land.
- V. Sunday Laws and Liberty.
- VI. The Law of Liberty and Self-Restraint.
- VII. The Ideal and the Practical.
- VIII. Whose Man?

Dr. R. F. Campbell, Pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, of Asheville, N. C., and former moderator of the General Assembly needs no introduction in the Southern Presbyterian Church.

Doctor Campbell has often spoken on special occasions at Union Theological Seminary and has always brought to his subject unusual clarity, distinction and charm. His lectures are anticipated with pleasure by those who will be so fortunate as to hear them, and those who can not attend may look forward to reading the book in which they will subsequently appear.

The large body of students this session will occupy all available space in the dormitories, but it is hoped accommodations can be found for perhaps a dozen of our ministers during the month of January. Further announcement will be made on this point.

Woman's Auxiliary Representative Attends 60th Anniversary of the Woman's Society of M. E. Church

Mrs. H. P. Cooper

Those of us who were privileged to represent our denominations at the 60th Anniversary of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Columbus, Ohio, October 24-30, were overwhelmed by the magnitude of the work of this organization and find words inadequate to express our impressions and emotions.

It was truly a notable gathering—officers of the great organization, Bishops, distinguished guests, Deans of Women of Methodist Universities, five women who had shared this fellowship for sixty years; then the young recruits, the Nationals, the missionaries and the long, long line of the faithful whose prayers had made this work possible. From Maine to California, from the Dakotas to Florida and all the way between in our own land; from every section of the globe and the islands of the sea women had made the pilgrimage to Columbus to be present at this meeting. Truly,

"The ends of the earth looked down on us,

The ends of the earth were there."

History was made during those days—when the Chamber of Commerce of Columbus was asked for the use of Memorial Hall for this gathering, one of the members said "there are not enough people in the entire United States interested in Foreign Missions to fill Memorial Hall." Behold the wonder—not only was Memorial Hall taxed to its 5,000 seating capacity but two of the largest churches in Columbus were crowded with the overflow meetings. It may never happen again but for once there was not standing room at a meeting of a Foreign Missionary Society. On all sides the question was asked "Is this the beginning of Pentecost?" In any event a strange, unlooked for interest was manifest.

No thought impressed your representative more forcibly than the responsibility of being an American woman in this day when our country is recognized as a World Power. The women of other nations are watching to see if we live our religion, how we stand on great moral questions, what are the first things in our lives, are we big enough for the opportunities that have come to us.

Mrs. Ella A. Boole, National President of the W. T. C. U., made a strong appeal to Christian women to make our country dry and keep it dry, for the success or failure of prohibition in the United States will determine the question for the rest of the world.

No speaker delighted us more than Mrs. Henry W. Peabody—matchless woman, with her brilliant brain, indomitable courage and winsome womanliness—she presented in a most appealing way "A World Fellowship of Christian Women." At the conclusion of her address she called to the front of the platform women of many nations, joining hands with them she asked that the audience rise and rededicate ourselves by singing together as our pledge, "Where He leads me I will follow."

The "Decades of History," given by various leaders was fascinating. Truly the Lord has done great things for and through these women. In her report the President stated that during the past sixty years of achievement, 37,661 years of service had been given by their missionaries, $45,179,533 had been raised and 136,761 girls and women students are now under their care.

As missionary after missionary brought reports from the foreign fields we noted not a cry for pity, not an appeal for money, but the ringing charge "Lift up your eyes and look on the fields; for they are white already to harvest." "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest that He will send forth laborers into His harvest."

The "Noontide Prayer" was conducted by S. D. Gordon. Nothing can be added to that statement, Dr. Gordon is too well known and loved to need any comment on his part of a program.

The Sufficient Christ; "The Christ Sufficient for Present Needs;" "The Christ Sufficient for the Problems of Nations" as presented by Dr. Rollin H. Walker was one of the outstanding features of the program. He stressed the handicap of prejudice and prayed that visions might be granted, that more might see "sheets let down," that we might be fit for the great advance.

While all the services were devoutly religious, there were many scenes more thrilling than any we had ever witnessed before. On the evening of the 29th, the closing part of the program was "Tis Christmas in our Hearts." The needs of their work in foreign lands had been ascertained and gifts (largely checks) to meet those needs were given to the missionaries. When the gifts from the Mother Society had been distributed to her far away children then, with true Christmas spirit, the children brought their gifts to this organization that had nurtured them through all the years of their existence.

The dominant note in presenting their offerings was "This is our gift for the King, it must be a royal one." Rare indeed were these offerings, four gorgeous brass candlesticks five feet tall, each with three branches from India; hand carved communion table from Japan; individual communion cups from China; exquisite linens from Mexico and the Philippines; communion plates of brass from Korea; silver pitcher for the communion table from Burma; royal leopard skin rug from Africa; on and on we could go if our space would allow.

Cablegrams were received from every country on the globe where this great Methodist Church has work. Few scenes were more moving than the raising of the flags of the nations where the Methodist missionaries are in service. When all the foreign flags were in position then to the stirring strains of The Star Spangled Banner our own Old Glory was brought to a position in the center of the others and, as the last notes of our national anthem died away, the vast throng burst in to that joyous song "Tell it out among the nations that the Lord is King."

During these crowded, thrilling days the most sacred period was the Sunrise Communion Service on the morning of the 30th; all over the world, where this Church has carried the gospel, their workers were holding similar services. Six-thirty a. m. was the hour set for the meeting, as of old "the women came while it was yet dark" for at 4:30 a. m. there were standing in the pouring rain outside Memorial Hall waiting for the doors to be opened one thousand women, and during the hours of the service more than five thousand women were served at the communion.

When we look back over this magnificent program, the illustrious speakers who contributed their talent, the vast throngs attending, we know we have not touched even the high points, we have just let you have a glimpse of the splendors that we, who were there, enjoyed.

A vested choir, accompanied by the Philharmonic Orchestra, organ and harp brought this eventful meeting to a close with the Hallelujah Chorus after which the benediction was pronounced.

ARKANSAS PRESBYTERY OBEYS ASSEMBLY

The Arkansas Presbytery of the Southern Presbyterian Church, meeting here in its fall session, today turned to an investigation into "the soundness of the faith" of the Rev. Hay Watson Smith, pastor of one of the wealthiest churches in Little Rock and one of the largest in the state.

The investigation was ordered by the General Assembly of the Church at Montreat, N. C., last summer after a resolution seeking an investigation of Dr. Smith's beliefs had been introduced by Dr. William McPheeters of Columbia Theological Seminary, Decatur, Ga.

Dr. McPheeters introduced the resolution as he had received a pamphlet some time previously from Dr. Smith, discussing the subject of evolution. These pamphlets were sent to all Presbyterian ministers in the South.

world's youth a Crusade with Christ for evangelism, Christian citizenship, and brotherhood.

We are confronted by the need for Christian education, the call to world evangelism, and the challenge to Christianize the social order. These questions are of vital importance to the youth of today.

The convention motto will be: "The Challenge of Christ to Modern Youth."

The convention program will include many phases of Christian Endeavor testimony and service.

German Christian Endeavorers cordially invite us in the name of our common Lord and open to us their hearts and homes.

Further particulars may be had from Mr. Edward P. Gates, the Secretary of the World's Christian Endeavor Union, 41 Mount Vernon St., Boston, Mass., U. S. A.

Finally we call upon our four million fellow Endeavorers of all lands, all tongues, all colors, and all evangelical churches to unite with us in prayer for the highest success of this world's convention.

Founder's Day at Highland Institute

On the afternoon before the Pres. of Guerrant convened at the Highland Church in September, Highland Institute celebrated Founder's Day. A beautiful sight it was on this autumn day to see the long line of more than a dozen and young people of the Highland Shoulder Blade and Turkey schools, together with visitors, across the lovely campus to the auditorium. After a program of scripture reading and prayer, the throng sang, "How Firm a Foundation," the favorite hymn of Doctor Guerrant founder of Highland. The scripture read by Mr. Robert Crowe, principal of Highland school, and prayer was by Rev. S. M. Logan, of Winona. Three delightful addresses were given from Messrs. H. L. Cockerham, Guerrant and E. V. Tadlock, dear Dr. E. O. Guerrant and his devoted followers to the mountain people; the Days and Development of Highland Institute; and the work of the Highland Winner's Society. Rev. W. B. G. a nephew of Doctor Guerrant, ten years superintendent of the institution.

On the rostrum sat Mrs. E. O. Guerrant and her daughter Mrs. Ann Grant Green who were warmly greeted by the large crowd. Songs were rendered by the school children. The impressive silence, a portrait of Doctor Guerrant was unveiled by Mrs. Green and the audience remained standing, gazing upon the familiar features of the beloved "Apostle to the Mountains" one minute. Prayer was offered by C. A. Leonard, the former principal of Lees' Collegiate Institution of Highland, and a brief appreciation of Doctor Guerrant was given by Mr. Hiram Mullins who hewed the stones for the first Church built by Doctor Guerrant in this section.

From the auditorium the line of people went out on the campus where before the old school building a large Fountain recently erected was solemnly dedicated with prayer by Mabel C. Hall, the only one now living of the Highland force who worked under Doctor Guerrant. This Fountain is built of stones taken from the foundation of the old Irving Memorial Church at Jetts Creek, built by Doctor Guerrant in 1884. The exercises were closed with benediction and the singing of the hymn.

Those of us who knew Doctor Guerrant feel that the memory of his official life, should be enshrined in the hearts of the younger generation as a source of gratitude and inspiration. No man can it be more truly said of Doctor Guerrant, that "he being dead speaketh." Here in the mountains ever we go we find that the memory of his name stirs the hearts of the people as nothing else does.

EDITORIAL

THE MINISTERS' ANNUITY FUND

There has never been any difference of opinion as to the need of a Fund for aged ministers because all have seen the need, and that there have been near-tragedies in some when the preacher grows old and out of work.

There have been the plans in the past to relieve this sad condition, but they have broken because they failed to allow for the variations of human feelings.

What has been needed has been a fund not by contributions dependent upon fluctuations, but one secured by the steady flow of interest, a fund that grows while it lives.

Dr. Sweets has worked out a plan that would secure this desired end, and he and his assistants are urging it upon the churches. And there it has been opposed by men whose motives cannot be questioned.

It is well to examine any plan, and we are glad that Dr. Sweets is anxious for it to be tried; but let it be with an open mind remembering that the best test of any new plan is whether it has worked elsewhere.

Those who tried it are its most enthusiastic supporters.

Those who have studied the plan in a disinterested way find there is no provision in it for an editor, though he be a preacher.

For our brethren's sake we recommend it.

A WORD OF EXPLANATION

In our issue of October 9th we had an appeal for the church building at Williamston, N. C., in which we unintentionally did injustice to the local Churches.

We have the impression that there were no churches at that place, which was an error.

These are the usual churches there, Presbyterian, Methodist, Baptist, Episcopal, Christian.

The plan is to build a church in Williamston as a county seat, and from it do the needed mission work in the county.

We regret that through our misunderstanding we have conveyed the impression that the churches are destitute of churches.

We learn that not only are there other churches, but that they are much alive and doing fine work.

Those were appealing for the work in the county of which work Williamston is the center.

We hope that our readers will help this cause.

MINISTERIAL HONESTY

It is all apt to imagine that our days are the best days in the history of the world; but a careful study of the past to show that human nature has been the same in all ages, though it finds different expressions. The sins of this age are no doubt bad, and they check our ideas of propriety—yet, if we were Fielding and Smollet, they were as nothing we can picture now, though the prevalence of the evil always magnifies it in our eyes.

The prevalence of the evils in the Church will show that of the present have no monopoly of errors, however great ours appear in a careful study of Church views of the past will show that we are not sinners any more than the Galileans.

It is said that in Spurgeon's day Church of England ministers preached "Baptismal Regeneration," but did not believe the doctrine. On thus comments on this condition, Dr. Sweets:

It is told that many in the church preach their own teaching. I know they do, and I rejoice in their enlightenment, but I do not gravely question, their morality. To say that I sincerely assent and consent to a doctrine which I do not believe, would do me no honor, appear little short of perjury, if not a bludge, downright perjury; but those who do so must be judged by their Lord. For me to take money for defending what I do not believe—for me to take money of a church, and then to preach against what are most evidently its doctrines—I say for me to do this (I shall not judge the peculiar views of other men), for me or for any other simple, honest man to do so, were an atrocity so great that, if I had perpetrated the deed, I should consider myself out of the pale of truthfulness, honesty and common morality. . . . For clergymen to swear or say that they give their solemn assent and consent to what they do not believe, is one of the greatest pieces of immorality perpetrated in England, and is most pestilential in its influence since it directly teaches men to lie whenever it seems necessary to do so in order to get a living or increase their supposed usefulness: it is in fact an open testimony from priestly lips that, at least in ecclesiastical matters, falsehood may express truth, and truth itself is a mere unimportant nonentity."

Spurgeon Memorial Library, Vol. VIII.

If we can believe the claims of an ecclesiastical recalcitrant in our own Church there are many who belong to the category mentioned by Spurgeon.

It may be wise for them to reflect upon what he says.

Let them come out openly and join our doctrinal rebel who, notwithstanding his claims of scientific wisdom, at least has the courage to confess openly his unbeliefs in doctrine.

SPIRITUAL UNITY OF THE CHURCH

Our Lord's prayer for the world, under the most solemn circumstances, was that all might be one as He and the Father were one.

This prayer has never been answered, except when Christians drew together.

As a man is filled with love for God he is also filled with love for his fellowman.

As we draw near the Cross we draw near the Christ and necessarily to each other.

All believers feel this desire for fellowship, and while they prefer union with those holding similar views with themselves, they long to have fellowship with those that love the Lord, though they may differ otherwise.

While the past history of the Church is stained by strifes between denominations, there have always been some who longed to enjoy this spiritual unity.

Our Episcopal brethren have always been active in the effort to unite the various branches of Protestantism, though it must be confessed that they wished to swallow all the others. The lion was willing to lie down with the lamb provided that the lamb was inside of him.

The Lambeth Quadrilateral in 1897 set forth a platform upon which they claimed that all could unite.

These conditions were the acceptance of the Holy Scriptures as God's word; the Apostles and Nicene Creed; the two sacraments ordained by Christ Himself; and the historic episcopate.

Though it has been over 40 years since these conditions were discussed, the union of all Churches is still in the future.

It must be confessed though that the Churches have grown together more closely, and there has been a lessening of denominational bitterness.

Now and then some ill-advised act stirs up the bitterness of the past, and thus undoes all that has been gained in Church comity.

Recently Bishop Manning in New York forbade one of the Episcopal clergymen to have a Presbyterian minister to officiate at a union sacramental service, on the ground that it was a violation of the canons of the Church.

This was true, it may be, but if so, then so much the worse for the canons.

With what sincerity can a Church urge union between denominations, when that Church has on its books such a canon?

Some of the clergy afterwards protested, but to no effect.

Later dispatches state that Rev. Carl Reiland, rector, and the wardens and vestry are contemplating a protest to the bishop on behalf of the Church, and that it is also possible that the Church as a corporation may take the matter to the law courts.

DEBT-HARDENED CHRISTIANS

The Scriptures say "Owe no man anything."

This is a most needed injunction in these days of moral delinquency.

While it does not refer primarily to money, the principle is applicable to all debts.

It is a general weakness not peculiar to any age of the world.

All men, more or less, suffer from this weakness of mankind, but the minister seems to be the special victim.

To begin with, his salary is small in the generality of cases, and then it is so often behind, with the result that his reputation suffers, and in common with his reputation, the cause of religion also suffers.

He is not to be blamed in every instance. When he sees a widening gulf between his receipts and his expenditures, and knows that his credit is still good, he is a rare man who does not take advantage of his chance to make a bill.

When paying time comes, and his salary is still behind, he loses heart as well as standing in the community.

We have known some debt-hardened preachers with whom Presbytery had to deal, but we rejoice to say that in a ministry of nearly 50 years, we can recall less than six cases.

When such cases are known, it is the duty of Presbytery to handle them, not only for the good of the cause, but of the man himself.

In these thoughts upon debt-paying we are not referring to men who have been unfortunate in business, but rather to men who go into debt without knowing how they would pay.

A man once remarked, "I always try to give something to the Church, but I wish that they would send some one else to pass the collection plate than the man who owes me money and makes no effort to pay."

We heard a man say, during a protracted meeting, "I was at one time concerned about my soul, but when they sent a professing Christian to talk with me, every serious thought disappeared, because I could only think of the coal bill he had been owing me for years, with no apparent effort to pay."

Several years ago, a minister who always met his own obligations defended a fellow minister who did not, and who defended himself upon the ground that the Presbytery owed him, and that if Presbytery did not pay him, he was under no obligation to pay others.

Of course, such reasoning is foolish, and we do not believe that any minister, with an enlightened conscience, would plead this excuse for himself, however much, in the kindness of his heart, he might do so for others.

We see from these examples, that the fault lies behind the man who makes the last bill.

He is to be blamed it is true, but he can blame the Presbytery, and the Presbytery can blame the churches, and the churches in turn shoulder the blame, and each member resolves to do his or her part.

In some communities they have a "Church-Going Day," when all attend Church.

It would be an excellent idea to have a "Debt-Paying Day," when every one would make a special effort to "clear the debt slate."

Of course, there would be some who would be unable to pay.

If such there be, let them at least write and assure their creditor that their intentions are good, however weak their ability, because no act is more provoking than silence.

Church papers are great sufferers from this inability to pay. Yet no creditors are more lenient.

This may be due to the fact that they themselves are sinners along the same line, not from choice, but from the failure of others.

PRAYING FOR A REVIVAL

Homer McMillan

It is stated that at least one-fourth of the organized Protestant churches in the United States received no additions upon profession last year, and that an increasing number of churches report a decreasing number of additions. If the same proportion of barrenness holds in the Southern Presbyterian Church it means that about nine hundred churches in our Assembly are non-productive. Not only is the church failing to win new members from the unchurched millions, but every year thousands of members are being lost by removal and through indifference to their Christian vows.

When these facts were presented to the Committee on Assembly's Work, meeting in Montreat, July 2, 1929, it was the united conviction of those present that the most urgent need of the church is a spiritual revival. The condition does not come from any lack of organization or lack of activity on the part of ministers and officers. The church is busy with many things, but is failing in its primary mission of pressing the claims of Jesus Christ upon the unsaved multitudes all about us. There has been too little prayer and too little reliance upon God, who giveth the increase.

God has never failed to give His Holy Spirit to those who ask Him in sincerity and in truth, or to send a revival when His people earnestly pray for it. Believing that winning men and women to faith in Christ is the primary and inescapable task of the church, the Committee on Assembly's Work addressed a message to our pastors and officers, to our aged and infirm ministers, and ministers without pastorates, to professors in our colleges and theological seminaries and to missionaries at home and in the foreign field asking them one and all to give themselves this year to more earnest prayer and greater personal effort in reaching the unsaved.

The Executive Committee of Home Missions was directed to address from time to time a letter to all of our ministers and mission workers concerning this important matter. The first of these letters was sent August 27 concerning the vital need for more earnest prayer if the longed-for revival in the church is to come. It was suggested among other things that the mid-week service be made a season of definite prayer for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon the church, and the deepening of our concern for the unsaved in the community. This letter brought a most encouraging response. In every reply that came there was an expression of dissatisfaction with conditions as they are, and of genuine gratitude that the Assembly was calling the church anew to the greatest of all service given to man, the ministry of intercession and evangelism.

The second letter sent by the Executive Committee was mailed October 14. In it was enclosed a leaflet entitled "If Millions Prayed" together with a Prayer Covenant card for the use of pastors in enlisting those willing to unite with them in definite, daily prayer for the outpouring of God's spirit upon the church and for the salvation of the lost. This letter brought an even greater response than the first letter. Replies came from all sections of the Assembly. Pastors of Home Mission churches and pastors of large city churches wrote heartily commending the suggestion of prayer covenant groups in the local churches. In one week more than ten thousand prayer covenant cards were ordered and thousands of leaflets on prayer were sent out. Ministers without charges, professors in colleges and theological seminaries, and teachers in mission schools returned their cards signed, agreeing to unite with the Executive Committee of Home Missions in daily prayer for a revival in our church.

A very touching letter came from one of our honored and aged ministers, a part of which is given here, as it is typical of many others that have been received.

"Enclosed you will find my Prayer Covenant card. Permit me to say that for twenty years I have been praying that God would pour out on our church, especially its leaders a spirit of supplication and of prayer. As I am well on my eighty-sixth year of age I began to be fearful that the answer would not come until after I was gone. You cannot imagine how deeply your letter sank into my heart and tears of joy filled my eyes. God grant that I may live to see my church on its knees, and a day of Heaven upon earth. My noble Christian wife supported me in prayers and hopes until God took her. If the saints in Heaven are permitted to make their requests known to God, she has spoken to the King about this matter. Never was the need greater and I think never was the church slower, but it seems to be God's way first to force His people to their knees and to compel them to mingle their prayers and their tears. My full strength shall be given to this wise, loyal and intelligent Christian effort to glorify our Lord and save our lost brethren."

As far as the Committee has had reports every Synod at the fall meeting had a period set apart for special prayer and conference on evangelism, and many have made plans for an enlarged evangelistic program with a special meeting in every church.

For several years it has been a common saying of speakers and writers that the church is on the eve of a great revival of religion. It has become to many, because of its frequent use, a mere figure of speech. It is doubtful in this generation in our church if there has ever been so much earnest prayer by so many earnest people as during the past few months. More of our pastors and leaders than ever before within the knowledge of our oldest ministers and members are deeply concerned over the spiritual conditions in our country and the lack of conversions in our churches. Lawlessness and crime and religious indifference are everywhere manifest. Many in the church have been caught in the sweep of worldliness and pleasure and are becoming increasingly indifferent to all spiritual interests and spiritual appeals. Many young people in nominal Christian homes are drifting with the current and are being lost to the church and the Christian life. No man-made plans can meet the needs of a time like this when wealth and luxury and pleasure are the chief end of life. Only a nation-wide revival of spiritual religion can bring a real conviction of sin and a national turning to God.

A former Moderator of our General Assembly writes: "This is a great movement, if we put our souls into it and continue our prayers until the blessing comes."

God has never failed His church when His people come to Him in believing prayer. It is certain that the church is praying today as never before in this generation. Christian people are being stirred by the coming of Christ's spirit into hearts and lives. In due season we shall reap if we faint not. If the longed for revival does not come it will only be because the church becomes weary and ceases its prayer and supplication and thanksgiving.

GOODLAND INDIAN ORPHANAGE

The 1929-1930 term of this institution opened September 2 with a full attendance of both teachers and pupils. The dormitories were crowded, the beds all occupied. The enrollment has reached 180, all that we possibly can allow to enter under existing condition, on account of lack of room and maintenance.

The religious work of the church and school has all been reorganized, is moving along nicely. The Sabbath School has an excellent corps of teachers in all its departments, the Woman's Auxiliary is supervising seven Home Mission Study Classes, one Circle and one Ad Class, five C. E. Societies are meeting regular Sabbath evening and each pupil attending school to one of these societies. Two Volunteer Bands, J. Senior, meet regularly, have good programs and are active in their societies. A regular four year Bible class is being given in the high school department by M. Firebaugh, wife of our pastor, who is making study of the Bible very interesting to our older girls in the orphanage.

The literary work goes hand in hand with the one does not detract from the other, both are for the mental and moral development of a strong character.

More small children are in the lower grades than usual. They require more care, especially in inclement weather, still when they come to school their little minds undeveloped they are much misled in the right direction, more easily controlled, make, in the later years, the most promising students have in school. Quite a number of those who have been in the course given here are in our church and state and we expect them to take their places later in business and religious world where they will rely upon themselves, upon the Indian Orphanage where of them have been reared and educated and many friends all over our country who have invested in this work of their love, faith and will as of the material things needed for the support of the school, all given in order that tuition might live and "go forward" for the benefit of Oklahoma Indian orphans.

EVERYBODY DOING HIS BIT

In this day and time we hear quite a bit of "pulling together"; "team work"; "co-operation"; etc. All meaning the same thing. We have made somewhat of a checkup on our great work here to see how that business of co-operation is working here at Barium Springs.

We had always thought that the bulk of the work was done by a few for the benefit of the many. When we come to analyze the situation here that everybody here—even to the littlest child—Baby Cottage is doing his bit. Of course the grownups are doing theirs, not only in the things they are paid to do, but the many voluntary things that they render, and we sometimes wonder if the voluntary part isn't the more valuable contribution. We feel sure that it is in some instances. Our teachers are also Sunday School teachers and are active in the Young People's Societies and in the recreational activities. Our matrons do the same. It is not a man connected with the Institution doesn't also render some valuable service in his work. As for the children, our dining room shows the results of the work of the larger children. A conservative estimate would put 25 percent, at least, of our food as being raised on the farms through our own efforts, and all of the preparation is done by ourselves.

The clothes are, for the most part, made here. Of course are laundered and such as that. As for things have been mentioned before, and we are mentioning here to show the part the larger children have in doing their bit for Barium.

When we get down to the smaller ones, the Dairy for the boys, Dining Room work for the girls and then we might think that the list has become exhausted; but when we get down to the Synod of boys and Annie Louise Cottage for the girls still find that there is a service rendered by the Synod boys are rabbit cowboys, and the girls do their own mending, and in hundreds of ways do their own mending, and in hundreds of ways do their bit and do it most cheerfully for the good of our Home here.

This mentions everybody but the babies. Of course, we might think that they do no work, but we know that they do. They are taken on a visit to Barium, the chances are that they have been here long they want to go home to their babies; and after they get to the Baby Cottage it is usually the extent of their journeyings and somehow can't get away to look over the after they once get to the Baby Cottage, visitors invariably go away with a feeling of Barium Springs of even greater loyalty and than they had when they came. The result of contact with these lovable little tots.

When some of the baby cottagers visit nearby they give them a picture of Barium Springs. They are so happy and are so happy in the doing of their duty that they believe that they are the greatest assets in the world toward our Institution of any group. The two little Mabels who are our babies, the little ones who sometimes goes by the name of "Mabel" being two and a half years old; and the little brown-eyed two-year-old, the little brown-eyed two-year-old, just make you feel better from seeing them.

Efficiently is a description of some of the ways in which the body at Barium Springs does his bit. Now Barium Springs is just a part of the Presbyterian Church. We don't know whether it is the heart or the brain, but it is just one of the members of the Church of the Presbyterians in the Synod of North Carolina. However much we might do and however much of us here might do his bit, unless the help of the large does its bit, our efforts are in a large measure in vain.

There has to work at their jobs twelve months of the year, three hundred and sixty-five days. It is expected of the Church at large is concentrated in one week, possibly in one week of Thanksgiving. We know there is no doubt about the willingness of the Church to do its bit. The thing that the press of other matters, it may be forgotten.

Everyone who reads these few lines resolve to spend some time no member of the Church shall do his or her bit toward this great work here. There was a time in the history of this great work that a generous contribution was more than where failure to receive a generous contribution would be more fatal to its continued efficiency. Jos. B. "If you could stand, where I have often stood, on the platforms in that great dining hall when three hundred and more orphans are gathered, and study their faces and observe their demeanor, I am sure you would agree with me that we have as fine a type of children as will be found gathered in any public school in any city of this broad country of ours.

"This unique and invaluable institution of our great church is in distress, financial distress, owing to circumstances over which we have no control.

"The appeal for relief is irresistible. It is the appeal of helpless orphan children; the appeal of widowed mothers; the appeal of Jesus Who took the little children in His arms and blessed them; the appeal of Him who is the Father of the fatherless, and the Defender of the widows.

I wish to place myself most heartily and sympathetically on the side of the Ministers' Annuity Fund. It seems to me that this Fund should appeal to every minister and church throughout our entire Assembly. To my mind it is one of the most sensible plans that has been put on foot by your Committee for assisting aged ministers. I shall be glad to give my services at any time toward the advancement of this cause. I hope you may be able to carry the campaign to a successful issue and that you may have the support of every agency of our Church. Sherman, Texas.

A MEXICAN RALLY DAY IN SAN ANTONIO

O. C. Williamson

The leading center of the Mexican work in Texas is San Antonio. Under the efficient leadership of Rev. Elias Trevino, the veteran pastor, the work has made splendid progress. The central church on Durango Street is our largest church in Texas. It has two branch Sunday Schools in other sections of the city, where regular preaching services are held also. These churches celebrate Rally Day each year. This year the program was carefully prepared and a special effort was made to secure a large attendance and collection. The Montezuma School under Rev. R. D.

Campbell and the Rivas School under a layworker, Sr. Pedro Reiva set their goals at 60 each, and an offering of $15.00. The Main Church sought to have 150 present, with $80.00 offering. When final reports were in, it was found that each of the branch schools had 75 present, one with an offering of $19.58 and the other of $30.05. The Central Church instead of simply reaching its goal of 150 had 267 present and an offering of $104.25. This gave a total attendance of 417 and total offering of $153.88.

This church last year gave to all causes over $2,500. The Mexican work in Texas was never more promising, nor more greatly in need of funds. The upheavals in Mexico during the last few years have broken the people loose from their old ties and prejudices, and they are now more easily reached. But for the same reasons the need to reach them is all the more urgent. Help us strike while the iron is hot.

Austin, Texas.

INTRODUCING MR. B. G. ALEXANDER

Henry H. Sweets, Secretary

The executive Committee, in whose hands the General Assembly has placed Ministerial Relief and the Ministers' Annuity Fund, have been most fortunate in securing Mr. B. G. Alexander as Director of the campaign to inaugurate the fund. Mr. Alexander is a modest, refined, genuine Christian gentleman known to hundreds of men of the South where he was for several years General Secretary of the Y. M. C. A. for the Southeastern section of the United States. He assisted in the erection of the pension system of the Y and of him Mr. F. W. Ramsey, General Secretary of the National Council of the Y. M. C. A. says, "He is an untiring worker of highest integrity and of unusual capacity as an organizer." Dr. Thos. W. Currie, President of the Austin Presbyterian Seminary says, "He is exceptionally fine—will be an asset to any cause or community." Rev. Wm. Crowe, D.D., of St. Louis, wrote, "I was very much pleased when I discovered you had added Mr. B. G. Alexander to your staff. I have known Mr. Alexander since the spring of 1911 as a Christian gentleman of the finest type. He is a man of unusual ability. I am sure his experience is a contributing factor as a representative of the "cause." Mr. A. A. Hyde, the manufacturer of Mentholatum said, "From many contacts and much association with Mr. B. G. Alexander it is quite evident that he is a well-educated man, a Christian gentleman of the highest type, unusually fine presence and appearance and capable of filling almost any position which he would accept. He is a strong character, and his general culture and manner are those of a Southern Christian gentleman."

Rev. Samuel M. Glasgow, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Knoxville, Tenn., of which Mr. Alexander is a member, wrote: "It was with a sense of deep joy that I learned of the connection formed between our Executive Committee of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief and Mr. B. G. Alexander, former Secretary in our National Y. M. C. A. Work.

"Mr. Alexander brings to the work accumulated experience of years of eminent success in Christian service in the Young Men's Christian Association. His quiet, Christian poise and charming personality and thoroughly dedicated spirit combine to make him a man of rare gifts for the Christian leadership which he is undertaking.

"In Mr. Alexander our Church has secured another God-trained and spiritually equipped life to enrich and enlarge our future for Christ."

All the staff engaged in this work are receiving modest salary, are sincerely trying to use the strictest economy and are at the service of the entire Church. They are members of our own family. We want you to know them. We ask for them your prayers and sympathetic co-operation in a great task.

A FAMILY SECRET

Can a mother be too proud of her favorite child? Yet it looks as if North Carolina Synod has become too proud of her precocious child, Barium Springs Orphanage. We have become complacent over her achievements and expect her to walk alone forgetting that she still needs our help. Last Thanksgiving we forgot or neglected to send $16,000.00 that was needed badly for the support fund, and each month since we have kept on forgetting until now they have $50,000.00 on the wrong side of their slate.

You know it hurts a child's feelings terribly to be neglected. We must do something about this. So, at this coming Thanksgiving won't you reassure Barium of your continued love and loyalty? Won't you not only see to it that we all send to this needy child of ours enough to wipe out this deficit in support fund which we have neglected this year, but as an encouragement to go on to even more splendid achievements in the future, could we not send in a little more than the amount to wipe out the debt but give them a little to run on so as to keep out of debt a while? And then to further assure them of our love and interest let's send promptly each month our contributions. You know children have a way of needing to be fed each day instead of once or twice a year.

We all love Barium Springs Orphanage. Let's show them our love this year specially.

Wadesboro—On last Sunday, November 10, we had with us Dr. Lacy L. Little, now home on furlough from China. At both morning and evening services, he was greeted by a large and attentive congregation. There is something peculiarly interesting and inspiring about Dr. Little's method of presenting the work in China. He made it clear to all that the difficulties, though at times challenging, have resulted in marked advantages in the work.

Bethesda (Near Yanceyville)—Sunday October 27 was observed as Home Coming Day. The morning sermon was delivered by Rev. Carl B. Craig, of Laurinburg, N. C., son of Dr. D. I. Craig, deceased, who was formerly pastor of the church.

Just prior to the sermon, Mr. T. S. Neal, representing the session of church, spoke in behalf of the church, a word of welcome and of thanks to the friends who have aided so materially in the recent improvements.

Following Mr. Neal's talk, Rev. Hill Williamson, of Yanceyville, a former pastor, made the dedicatory prayer.

Rev. W. W. McMorries, pastor of the church, was in charge of the services. Mrs. Hurley Stanley and Mrs. T. S. Neal had charge of the musical program. At the morning service Mrs. R. B. Chance and Mr. R. L. Winchester sang a duet. During the afternoon service, Mrs. Hurley Stanley and Mr. Woody Lillard sang a duet. Rev. S. M. Rankin, of Greensboro, delivered the afternoon sermon.

A very large crowd was present, among them many former members and friends from the surrounding country, and nearby cities and towns.

Taylorsville—On November 10, 1929, Licentiate A. N. Moffett was ordained and installed pastor of the Taylorsville Church by a commission of Concord Presbytery. Rev. Dr. C. M. Richards presided and charged the pastor, Rev. Dr. C. E. Raynal preached the sermon, and Rev. Dr. J. E. Flow charged the congregation. In the afternoon of the same day he was installed pastor of the New Salem Church. Dr. Richards presided, Dr. Flow preached the sermon, Dr. Raynal charged the pastor, and Mr. J. H. Hill, elder in the First Church, Statesville, charged the people. An unusual and interesting event occurred at the close of each of these services when the members of the church came forward to welcome their pastor. The bride of the pastor was introduced to the people and stood with him before the pulpit. A beautiful appropriate letter from the former pastor, Rev. Carter, was also read to the people. The churches as well as the church of Stony Point delighted with their pastor and his bride and them of their hearty co-operation in the Lord's work.

J. E. Flow, Clerk of Commission

Granville Presbytery met in the Blacknall Memorial Presbyterian Church, Durham, N. C., 22, 23, 1929.

The opening sermon was preached by Rev. Lacy, D.D., the retiring Moderator. Sixteen ruling and sixteen ruling elders were present.

The pastoral relation between Rev. R. S. and the Fuller Memorial Church was dissolved. Mr. Carson was dismissed to Concord Presbytery.

Presbytery overtured the General Assembly to structure our Committee of Publication and School Work to devote all net profits, derive the publishing department, exclusively to Horston and Sabbath School Extension Work destitute regions."

Action was postponed on the Assembly's touching Organic Union with the United Presbyterian Church.

The Presbyterian sermon was preached by W. McC. White. His subject was, "The Signs of the Times."

Dr. J. S. Baird, of Louisville, Ky., addressed Presbytery in the interest of the Ministers' Fund.

Dr. John H. Powell, Student Secretary of Education, addressed the Presbytery, revealing of his discoveries in the fields of education.

Presbytery accepted an invitation to meet in field, N. C., on the third Tuesday in April next stated meeting.

Presbytery was closed with a sermon by Dr. Lacy, on "The Home," and the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper.

Pittsboro—On the night of November 10 successful union meeting came to a close here. McK. R. Long, at the request of the pastor, has appointed by Presbytery to assist in our evangelistic services. We turned it into a union for all denominations. Mr. Geddie Fields, proprietor of the large and convenient new Pilot Hotel, allowed us on Sunday to begin the service. After the night services he came to us, and very kindly offered to do away with all pictures, and allow us to use the building for the duration of the meeting. In the week preceding the meeting the parlor was decorated in both of the county papers, and distributed placards and dodgers over town and county thoroughly. Court being in session, the meeting was announced in the court house, and the pastor preached three days at the noon hour in the court house.

On Sunday, October 27, Rev. McK. R. Long, singer, Mr. Frank Harbin, began, continuing for three days. Large congregations from town and county listened with rapt attention to the powerful preaching of this consecrated man of God. Gifted with a clear and compelling personality, a resonant and remarkable vocabulary, a machine gun delivery, Rev. Long used the Scriptures to throw light upon the subject in a way to remind one of the late R. G. of precious memory. Toward the last of the meeting it was found necessary to dispense with the placards that we might give more of our time to work in town and county. Pleading with many streets or roads or in their home confirm leggers were reached, and wonderful conversions resulted. It is too soon to know how many to the various churches will result. There were between two and three hundred cards signify conversion or dedication, representing about 150 different churches. There were perhaps eight hundred signed tither's pledge cards. The hearty cooperation of the different churches illustrated most clearly the real oneness of all God's people. Mr. Harbin only sang the Gospel with beauty and effect, but also proved himself a workman that need never be ashamed in dealing with inquirers. Our hearts have been mightily stirred by the Holy Spirit. We praise God and bless his holy name.

Presbyterian Church in the United States

MAJOR AND MINOR PROBLEMS IN MEN'S WORK

The following list of major and minor problems in Men's Work have been received by me from the members of the Interdenominational Council on Men's Work. This is an organization of the leaders of Men's Work in about eighteen of the larger denominations in America. The statement of these problems is influenced in a large measure by the status of Men's Work in the denomination which the writer represents. My personal opinion that Dr. Wm. F. Weir of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., has probably come as near the correct statement as any of the writers. Doctor Weir states as his first major problem the establishment and equipment of an agency within the denomination for the promotion of Men's Work. This is absolutely fundamental. Any discussion of Men's Work without this as the major premise will never lead us to any satisfactory conclusion.

I am to discuss the subject—Major and Minor Problems in Men's Work—at the meeting of this Council at the Henry Grady Hotel in Atlanta, Friday and Saturday, December 13 and 14, 1929. Any man or pastor who cares to help me by writing and giving me his ideas, will be my friend.—J. E. Purcell.

Presbyterian Church, U. S. A.—Wm. F. Weir, Secretary, Chicago, Ill.

Major problems: (1) The denomination must establish and equip adequately an agency for the promotion of Men's Work.

(2) The agency must have a program of work through which the men of the church will be reached for the development of leaders and enlisting the rank and file of men in the work of the church.

Minor problems: (1) The development of a suitable literature.

(2) The co-operation of pastors.

(3) The development of lay leaders.

(4) Laying on the heart and conscience of the church the cause of Men's Work.

(5) Enlisting the idle 60 per cent of men in the churches.

(6) Bringing to Men's Meetings appropriate, constructive messages on Men's Work.

Evangelical Synod of North America—H. L. Streich, Secretary of Men's Work, St. Louis, Mo.

Major problems: (1) Lack of lay leadership, especially spiritual leadership.

(2) The many outside interests of church men.

Minor problems: (1) In many cases, indifference of pastor.

(2) Unwillingness of pastor to assume added burden of Men's Work.

(3) Difficulty to get men officers to properly plan their programs.

(4) Unwillingness of some to have more than a monthly supper and speech-making program.

Southern Baptist Church—J. T. Henderson, Secretary of Baptist Brotherhood, Knoxville, Tenn.

Major Problems: (1) Inducing men to give the Kingdom the first place in their life program.

(2) Leading them to make the proper mental and spiritual preparation.

Minor problems: (1) Inducing men to attend religious meetings, designed especially for men.

(2) Timidity in religious work.

Methodist Church North—Bert E. Smith, Secretary of Men's Work, Chicago, Ill.

"Two major problems: a. Preoccupation of men and all sorts of organizations outside of the range of church life.

b. The wide-spread absence of an assuming conviction of the essential worth of the thing which the church is doing.

Some of the other problems that we face are:

1. The relationship of the movement to organize men to the adult educational program of the church.

2. The difference of opinion men possess regarding the form and name of organization that should be developed.

3. The conviction on the part of many men that much of the thing that we aim to do through this type of organization is already being done by extra-church societies."

Episcopal Church—Leon C. Palmer, Secretary Brotherhood of St. Andrew, Philadelphia, Pa.

"I would suggest the following: (1) The relationship between the Men's Work organization (such as Brotherhoods, etc.) and the Men's Bible class of the local church, i. e., is the Men's Bible class to be considered as an educational activity of the Men's Brotherhood, or are evangelistic and social service activities to be considered as a part of the program of the organized Men's Bible class?

(2) What should be the attitude of the men's organizations of the local church, and of the federated churches of the community, toward current political or semi-political issues? Should such organizations express themselves regarding current issues such as, for example immigration exclusion laws, disarmament conferences, military training in schools, instances of supposed industrial injustice or proposed reform legislation, etc.?"

Methodist Church South—Bishop W. B. Beauchamp, Atlanta, Ga.

The real major problem concerning Men's Work lies back of any organization, namely, the strong men of the church, officially and financially speaking, are too deeply immersed in material matters to respond to the spiritual appeal which is basic to any church organization. There is a need of a deep revival that will give to such men of the church a consciousness of their responsibility. Until we can effect this creation of the primary place of the Kingdom of God in the mind of the men of the church our men's organization will remain more or less ineffective and unrepresentative.

The second item that needs to be considered is the process by which this new mind will be created in the man power of our church membership. This needs most careful consideration and perhaps, even more than consideration, a deepening of the prayer life of the church. I confess the present situation as it affects commending the resources of the men of the church is not encouraging.

Presbyterian Church, U. S. A.—C. H. McDonald, Associate Director of Men's Work, New York City.

Major problems: (1) How to make men denominationally minded (to think in terms of the denomination rather than of the local church only.)

(2) How to develop in men class consciousness of responsibility for the church and educational program, (similar to the development which has taken place among the women of the church.)

Minor problems: (1) How to get men to put the Church first among institutions.

(2) How to get men to inform themselves concerning the Church and its program.

The above is an arbitrary division as it seems to me all four are major.

Baptist Church, North—W. G. Boyle, New York City. "First major problem—involved in the fact that the Christian churches are not emphasizing sacrificial living as taught by Jesus.

Second problem—Pessimism and cynical attitude of the majority of the denominational secretaries and ministers toward the possibility of setting men of the local church at work.

Among the minor practical problem, (1) Pastors generally have had little training as executives and regard their church as a field rather than as a force to be projected into the community.

(2) The habit of mind which has grown up for 20 or 25 years which seems to regard it as necessary to employ paid evangelists when a church desired to put on an evangelistic program.

(3) The timidity of official boards and ministers when facing the missionary budget of the church, to ask for sufficiently large sums of money with which to support the missionary enterprise.

Disciples of Christ—Chas. Darsie, Indianapolis.

"Major problems: (1) I believe the major problems in Men's Work have to do with the actual changing of their lives as respects attitudes, information, skill in doing Christian work, etc. This means the setting up of certain definite aims and objectives to be accomplished. These aims and objectives may be stated in the form of ideals, but these ideals cannot be successfully transmitted to men aside from appropriate acts. In other words, habits can be imparted by definite educational procedure. We are not able to be very clear cut with regard to ideals. I would suggest, however, the following two major problems in the promotion of Men's Work:

3. In what respects would it be most desirable to modify the lives of our church men?

a. The act or habit desired rather than the general ideal is the immediate object of our quest.

b. How can we apply the law of exercise and the law of satisfaction to the practical workings of men's brotherhoods in the accomplishment of the ends desired under (a.)

I think if Doctor Purcell faces these two problems he will not need to consider any minor difficulties in Men's Work."

OBITUARY

DR. ANNIE L. ALEXANDER

Resolutions adopted by Mecklenburg County Medical Society, October 22, 1929:

Dr. Annie L. Alexander died at her home in Charlotte, N. C., October 15, 1929, after a brief illness with pneumonia.

Resolved, 1st: That the Society has lost one of its most enthusiastic and loyal members, the profession one of its highly honored and respected physicians.

Resolved, 2nd: That the passing of this unusual woman, removes from the community one of its most important influences; and from the sick and suffering, a sympathetic friend and capable physician. Her presence in the sickroom radiated love, kindness and inspired confidence. Having lived a life of usefulness and piety, in her last hours she could look back on the good she had done with satisfaction and forward with assurance and equanimity.

Resolved, 3rd: That a copy of these resolutions be spread on the minutes of the society, and given to each of the Charlotte daily papers, Southern Medicine and Surgery, the Presbyterian Standard, and a copy be sent the family.

THE CHRISTIAN HOME IN A MODERN WORLD

Dt. 6:3-9; Mt. 19:3-9; Lk. 2:40-52; 24:28-32; Eph 6:1-9; II Tim. 1:3-5; 3:14, 15. Print Lk. 2:40-52

We are studying this quarter "Some Social Teachings of the Bible." The home is our fundamental social institution, an institution on which both the welfare of the church and the state depend. Yet the home today as an institution is being increasingly attacked. Many popular writers point out its shortcomings. Other leaders of thought propose new substitutes for the home as we have known it, companionate marriage for example. Conditions of the new world, the growth of cities, the building of apartments, the increasing participation of women in industry, the breaking down of the old moral standards, changing ideals concerning marriage and divorce, these and a multitude of other influences threaten to destroy the stability of the home. It is fitting, therefore, that one of our lessons should deal with the Christian Home in the modern world.

Our scriptures take us back to some of its basic ideals.

I. Marriage and Divorce

Read Matthew 19:3-9. Jesus deals here with one of our most important modern problems. We have, first, the Pharisee's question. They came unto him trying him and saying, "Is it right to divorce one's wife for any reason?" David Smith reminds us that this was a burning question in those days. "The Mosaic Law permitted divorce when a wife proved faithless; but the Rabbinical interpreters after their wont disputed over the enactment. The School of Shammai, adhering to the letter of the Law, held that a wife should not be divorced except for unfaithfulness; whereas the school of Hillel, with a laxity very agreeable to the general inclination allowed to put away his wife 'for every cause,' if he disliked her, if he fancied another woman more, if her cookery were not to his taste. The doctrine of Hillel was the common practice in our Lord's Day, and it operated disastrously. It violated the sanctity of domestic life, and played havoc with the obligations of morality. It was an inhuman system and inflicted cruel wrong upon womankind. It put the wife at her husband's mercy. She could not divorce him, but for any whim he might divorce her and cast her upon the world." The Pharisees who brought the question to Jesus knew no doubt that he would oppose such an interpretation. They knew too that if he condemned the system he would estrange the populace, and perhaps embroil himself with Herod Antipas, who had divorced his own wife to marry the wife of another, and who had slain John the Baptist for his criticism of that action.

Jesus in his answer took them back to the Scripture. "Have you never read that He who created them male and female from the beginning said, 'Hence a man shall leave his father and mother, and cleave to his wife, and the pair shall be one flesh? So they are no longer two, but one flesh? What God has joined, then, man must not separate.'" "Such was marriage according to the Creator's design—not the subjection of the woman to the man's caprice, but their union on equal terms as mutual helpers. There was no need for argument. The simple setting forth of the Scriptural ideal was a sufficient condemnation of the prevailing practice."

The Pharisees, however, had an objection. "Then why did Moses lay it down that we were to divorce by giving a separation notice?" He said unto them, "Moses permitted you to divorce your wives, on account of the hardness of your hearts, but it was not so from the beginning. (This statement helps us greatly in our understanding of the Old Testament. It appears that there are many practices and teachings there which are not in accordance with God's ideal, but which God allowed them on account of the hardness of their hearts. God revealed Himself in ever increasing measure to the Chosen People as they were able to understand and to appreciate that revelation. It was Christ who brought us the full revelation of the Father.) I tell you, whoever divorces his wife except for unchastity and marries another woman, commits adultery, and he who marries a divorced woman commits adultery."

This then is the Christian ideal—no divorce, except on the ground of infidelity. A number of practical questions raise themselves immediately in our minds. (1) Should a Christian state transfer this ideal to the statute books. We ourselves do not believe that it should. It is a Christian ideal, but not an ideal that it would be wise to enforce by legislation. Just as it would not be wise we all agree to force men to go to church. For one thing there are too many non-Christians in the world. (2) Does it follow from Jesus' words that Christians should never seek to be released from the marriage bond except on the one ground of infidelity? Many think that this is the only possible course for a Christian to follow. There are others who feel, however, that Jesus sets before us an ideal, rather than a rule which permits of no exception. Divorce in Jesus' day as practised by the Jews was an injustice to the woman. There are cases today when it seems an injustice to compel her to remain with her husband. It would seem to be in accordance with the whole genius of the Christian religion which sets ideals before us rather than rules, to be blindly and slavishly followed that in such cases Christian people are entitled to seek and to follow the guidance of the Holy Spirit. But whether or not this is so, the ideal remains. Marriage is to be a life-long union between one man and one woman. Every effort is to be made to keep that home intact. Separation is to be sought only when worse evils would result. (3) Would Jesus approve of Companionate Marriage? The scheme as originally proposed by Judge Lindsey would allow young people to marry, practice birth control, the husband not assuming the support of his wife, or the wife the duty of making a home for her husband, and then if time proved mutual incompatibility to separate without further ado. The hope was that such marriages would ripen into permanent unions; otherwise a tragedy would be prevented. The idea which originally aroused a great deal of excitement seems to be losing in favor. It seems to be generally agreed that the scheme would create worse evils than those which it proposed to cure. It does not seem to be in accordance with the Christian ideal. (4) The divorce rate in America is growing at an alarming rate. It goes beyond that of any other civilized nation. We should note, however, that the divorce rate among church members is far, far below that of non-church members. What is the cause of the situation? What remedies can you propose? Is it due to maladjustments after marriage, or to lack of forethought before marriage? Would it be wise for the church, your church, to give its young people a course on the problems involved in making a home, in sex relations?

II. The Child in the Christian Home

The home generally centers in the child, and it is from the standpoint of the child that most of the other problems of the home should be discussed. Read here Luke 2:40-52 and Eph. 6:1-4 for some of the Biblical ideals in this regard.

One ideal is growth on the part of the child. We take the growth of Jesus as our norm. We read in Luke 2:40 that as a child he grew and waxed strong, filled with wisdom, and the grace of God was upon him. And in 2:52 that Jesus advanced in wisdom and stature and in favor with God and man. We note here the fourfold advance, physically, mentally, socially, spiritually. That is the ideal for every child. Are our children, our young people really advancing along all these lines? Are we or they putting disproportionate emphasis on any or two or three? Have we any responsibility for the children of other parents, the neglected children of our community, children whose schooling is neglected in order that they may help on the farm, or in the mill, children who lack facilities for play, or for spiritual development, negro children?

A second ideal is obedience on the part of the child. Jesus we read was subject unto his parents. Paul said, Children obey your parents in the Lord. Is obedience still a virtue? Of course, there are always conditions, and exceptions. But we take it that obedience of some sort on the part of children will always be a social necessity. How can we secure the sort of obedience that we desire? Not the sort of obedience that breaks the child's will power, but the sort of obedience that flowers into a character that is able to make its own moral decisions?

A third ideal is honor on the part of the child for the parent? "Honor thy father and mother, that it may be well with thee, and that thou mayest live long on the earth." We realize, of course, that the parents must so conduct themselves that the children are able to honor them, but nonetheless if we are to preserve the highest values of our civilization youth must honor age, children must honor their parents.

The fourth ideal is the proper nurture of the children on the part of the parents. Moffat translates the verse: "As for you fathers, do not exasperate your children, but bring them up in the discipline and on the admonitions of the Lord." In other words "after insisting on obedience the Apostle enforces the right exercise of authority, which does not irritate and dishearten the child (Col. 3:21, 'lest they be discouraged'): but it is also positive. For parents are as much bound to insist on obedience as children are to render it. There is a discipline of the Lord which is the responsibility of the parent just as obedience 'in the Lord' is the duty of the child." It is the responsibility of the parents to bring up the child on the admonitions of the Lord. It is not a responsibility which they can put on the church. Are parents today shirking their duty? How may they best fulfill it?

III. The Bible in the Christian Home

Read Dt. 6:3-9 and II Tim. 3:14-15.

In the first passage we have Moses' summary of the Law which God had given to the people, and his suggestions as to the use they should make of it in their homes. We are interested in these suggestions because Israel's Laws mark the beginning of God's revelation to his people, and certainly we are not to make any less use of that fuller revelation of God which we possess in the Bible as completed.

First of all then Moses says the Law must be upon their hearts. With the Hebrews the heart was the psychological center of memory as well as love. He meant then as G. Adam Smith says that they must commit it to memory (its leading principles) with a conscience to do it. Second, they must teach it diligently to their children. The word here for teach is a very strong one. It means 'make these words incisive, and impress them upon thy children; rub them in.' Moses wishes the Hebrew parents to their own responsibility. They cannot delegate that to other hands. Third, they must talk of it in their and along the way, when they lie down, and when they rise up. In other words God's fundamental law is a theme of living interest at home and abroad, beginning and end of every day. Fourth, they must put them for a sign upon their hands and for frontlets their eyes. The Jews thought that Moses was giving here a rule to be literally observed. He probably intended, however, that the Law which he had summarized control the thought and the acts of the people, the sights of their eyes, the work of their hands; they must write it upon the door-posts of their homes, upon their gates. This injunction also the Jews observed literally. The law upon their door-post reminding of its claims as they left the house for shop or market in the morning, and as they entered the house at the close of the day. It was another indication that the whole life must be influenced by the thought of God of His love.

Moses' suggestions so far as they concern us are reduced to three. (1) We should know the Bible, its truth in our hearts and mind. (2) We should teach it to our children. The home can not leave the responsibility altogether to the Sunday School. (3) We should live in accordance with the Bible principles in the home and out of it. Paul's advice to Timothy, who had brought up in a home where the Bible was honored and taught, was that he abide in the truth that he had learned, knowing that it was able to make him wise unto salvation. Do we need that admonition?

Does the Bible have the proper place in our homes? What place should it have? Are we willing to give the necessary thought to seeing that it have the proper place? How can parents teach the Bible to their children?

IV. Prayer in the Christian Home

Read Luke 24:28-32 and II Tim. 1:3-5.

The incident in Luke at first reading may not bear upon our theme, but the more we consider it the more significant it appears. The incident took place on the day of the resurrection. Two disciples were on the way to Emmaus. They were talking of the disappointment and death of Jesus had occasioned them. "We hoped that he would redeem Israel; but he has died." A stranger joined them in their conversation, and they did not know him. He talked with them of the Scriptures, and how the sufferings and subsequent glory of the Messiah was predicted in the Scriptures. So in the evening they were the two travelers, that they invited him to join them in their evening meal. "And it came to pass as they sat down with them to eat, he took the bread, blessed it; and breaking it he gave to them. And their eyes were opened, and they knew him; and he vanished from their sight."

It was the custom among the Jews to have a table set for the meals which they ate, and this is a custom among Christians at the present time. Inevitably it tends to become a form with us, probably with them. But with Jesus, this simple table prayer that can be said in the home, was so simple, so real that immediately the two disciples knew he was.

Does this prayer have the meaning in our homes? If not, why not? Is this the only prayer which the whole family should join? It is the ideal that there should also be family prayers in the home. This is especially the case where there are children in the home. It teaches them to pray. It passes on the spirit of devotion from one generation to another, unifies the family, and puts the whole family in petition for the family as a whole, and for each member of the family. Many grown men and women will forget the influence for good that those petitionary family circle have had for them. It is difficult to find family prayers in the modern home. Are these things insuperable? Really? Many of the problems of the modern home would be solved if this practice were common.

The importance of family prayers for the sake of the child brings up the broader question of the parent's influence in general. The parents' example depends much more than formal instruction, and formal prayer. The unfeigned faith that dwelt first in Lois, the mother of Eunice, then in her son Timothy is an indication of the way that vital faith is passed down from generation to generation. Religion is contagious, and if it is caught at all it is caught in the home. The best religion in the home best be passed down from generation to the next?

V. Servants in the Christian Home.—Eph.

Many of those who read Paul's letter were slaves in the civilization of the Roman empire was a slave system. To them Paul wrote as Moffat translates: "Servants be obedient to those who are your masters as to the Lord, with reverence and trembling, with singleness of heart as to Christ himself; instead of merely obeying when their eye is on you, like those who court favor, do God's will from the heart like servants of Christ, by rendering service with good will as to the Lord and Master, not to men."

Most of us, however, who read these words are not concerned with the words addressed to masters, though there are no longer slaves in the home. The words of Paul's still apply: "And as masters, act by your servants in the same way as Christ acted by the church, to purify it, to stop threatening them; be sure that they and Newman, Chairman of Woman's Work, led the devotional and sounded the keynote of the "Soul-Winning." Miss Janie McGaughey, of Woman's Work, addressed the audience in an impressive manner having as her subject, "Our Trust." This was followed by an address of the work in China by Mrs. T. B.

Wednesday morning the meeting was called to order by Mrs. Myrtle G. Hicks, president. Mrs. D. D. Newman, Secretary of Spiritual Life, led the devotional. And gracious words of welcome were spoken by Margaret Carraway of Gulfport and Mrs. Margaret Foster of Meridian Presbyterian to which Mrs. Foster responded.

From the Synodical officers, cause secretaries of the Synodical Presidents were approved as seemed encouraging.

Messages from the Synod were brought by Dr. Newman and Mr. R. W. Hardy. There were two Bible studies in which Miss Sammie Hogue gave helpful suggestions for study in the Book of Acts. Miss McGaughey explained C. A. W., W. W. W. A. C. Miss Ruth Clarke told in her own words of "The Sad and the Glad of Home Missions in Mississippi." East Mississippi Presbyterian "A Heart Operation" as the closing number of the day's program.

A fellowship was one of the features of the day. A dainty luncheon was served in the Club Building at noon and in the afternoon a lightful drive along the beautiful Mississippi River was enjoyed by all.

Following officers were installed by Miss Janie McGaughey:

On account of inclement weather, the meeting was postponed.

FAYETTEVILLE AUXILIARY HOLDS DISTRICT DISTRICT CONFERENCES

La Nilta Wimberley, Secretary

The District Conference, Fayetteville Auxiliary, was held on October 6 met at Eureka in the Presbyterian Church, with Mrs. J. D. Wimberley, District Chairman, presiding.

The District showed representatives from nine of the auxiliaries, ten Presbyterian officers and one lay officer present. Total representatives numbered one hundred.

Rev. S. Golden, of Carthage, conducted the opening devotional.

Mrs. Walter McCaskill told the ladies how glad they were to have them and Mrs. J. H. Sutfenfield responded for the visitors.

N. C. Unit of Mission Court, Winsborough Fund, a good local president and treasurer were the main points discussed by Mrs. W. M. Fairley, President of the Fayetteville Presbyterian Auxiliary.

Elise was the keynote of the conference and Mr. Stuart Evans, Superintendent of the School and Miss Sara Williams, Secretary of Elise told the ladies of the work this year and of the beautiful $30,000 Administration Building which can be in use as soon as the remaining $7,000 is raised. The ladies gave very generously to the "Pantry Shower" for Elise.

Special music that was rendered throughout the program were vocal solos by Miss La Nilta Wimberley, Aberdeen and Miss Vivian Roberts, Pinehurst.

Each secretary of the different causes presented her work in a clear, concise and interesting way.

Mrs. Lacy Little, the Foreign Mission speaker for the afternoon, who has been in China for a number of years gave a most interesting talk about her work. Mrs. Little has a wonderful personality and was very entertaining.

Mrs. Wimberley stressed the Mission Study book, "The Crowded Ways," and asked the ladies to start their study classes immediately.

The Eureka Auxiliary did everything to make the meeting a success and the delegates comfortable. The lunch was delicious and the addresses fine. Altogether it was a most pleasant and profitable day.

The conference will meet with the Vass-Lakeview Auxiliaries next year.

TRACT WORK

Alberta Dudley Brand

On the Mission field there are various opportunities for distributing religious tracts to the Nationals. The hospital is a great place to meet new people of every class and station in life, are constantly coming and going. This does not mean just the patients. It is an oriental custom for a person entering the hospital for treatment, to take with them any number of relatives. The largest number I believe I have seen, was seven with a well-to-do woman patient.

Are the Nationals, responsive to Christian literature? Yes, they gladly receive tracts of all kinds, only a very few refuse or scoff. While the patients are waiting in the dispensary, the evangelist comes along distributing the pretty tracts. Some have Bible pictures in colors, really an attractive souvenir, while others are printed on colored paper, which is a vivid green or cerise. These are the most popular Korean colors and very noticeable to any passing eye.

It is the Korean custom to have a market day, every fifth day—even on Sunday. Certain cities and villages have market places where people from everywhere, apparently, gather together with their crops, produce and what-not for exchange as much as buying. I am convinced anything may be purchased, even to a girl's wedding ring.

A new road has recently been built through this section of rice plains and just a short distance from the Mission hospital, two roads come together. Let us call it "The Pointing of the Way"—even a small hut is there and it is a good stand for the tract distributor. Great streams of people, mostly men, all day long pass here, to and from market, sometimes in such numbers and so fast, it is impossible for one person to hand each one tracts.

The majority of the crowds are heathen, very often never having heard of Christ. Occasionally a believer is handed a tract, who smiles and says "we have already heard of the wonderful life" and now believe.

My! My! Now entirely different the believers are, compared with their heathen brothers, in their manner, bearing and whole appearance. It is evident they have had the great opportunity of hearing and have answered the Master's call.

a Lord and Master in heaven, and there is no partiality about him." Willing and thorough service must be met by a kindly and considerate rule on the part of the master. They must exercise their authority as unto Christ.

Just what does this mean applied to the modern home? Is our attitude toward our servants altogether a Christian one? Do we pay a fair wage? Are we considerate of their feelings? Do we take advantage of our position as masters, our positions as members of a dominant race, to impose our will unfairly upon those who find themselves in an inferior and dependent position? Do we rebuke them in language or in a language or in a tone that would not be tolerated in other relations of life. Just how can we fulfill our full obligation as Christians toward our servants?

Suggestions for the Leader

(Our topic today calls for Current Events. Have different members to report on recent happenings that have been for the advancement of Christianity and for the uplift of mankind. Articles of this nature may be found in the Literary Digest, the World's Work, the Living Age, and various progressive magazines, as well as in the daily newspapers. Of course, there are many forces that are not for the good of men, but there are many things that happen every day that show progress in religion and in politics. If possible, have discussion of the news items.)

Making Christ's Kingdom Come

Our theme for this year has been "Making Christ's kingdom come." Today we are going to study things that seem to be making our theme come to pass. We pray so often, "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven," that we fail to get the significance of the prayer. Today we are going to see what the world at large is doing toward answering that petition, and also what we as young people can do toward having our prayer answered. There is no point to praying a prayer we don't mean, and one that we are not willing to help answer. Forces that are making the world better must surely be making Christ's kingdom come, for "Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, coming down from the Father of lights, in whom is no variability, neither shadow that is cast by turning."

Making the World Better Socially

There are those who think that the world is gradually growing worse, and there are those who think that the world is gradually growing better. We might argue until we were blue in the face and not convince either side. But betterment does not come by argument. That method has been tried too often and failed. Argument builds up barriers socially rather than tears them down. The forces that are making the world better socially go on quietly and call as little attention to themselves as possible. Each one of us has a part in this gradual betterment by making our relation to each, other more unselfish and sympathetic. Of those forces which we can see working and which are for the upbuilding of social understanding first comes work that is sponsored by Christians—work among the immigrants, work among the negroes, and all social service. Those who are not Christians at heart say, "Let them alone. We did not ask them to come over here to America. Let them take care of themselves now that they have come—we do not ask them to help us, so why should we help them?" But those of us who see a soul behind that black or yellow face, and believing that our religion has been entrusted to us as a gift that we must share, accept them as a part of our world, and try to make them feel that it is their world too. Perhaps some day we shall realize the meaning of true brotherhood!

Forces Working for Peace

Recently we celebrated Armistice Day, and all over the country people paid their respects to those men who suffered because of war. And we wondered about war—what has been gained because of it? Is war the only method for bringing nations into agreement? Must we think of peace in terms of war? But there are forces working for peace—the Kellogg Peace Pact is one of the results of those forces. But the best force for peace, is that one which shows war off for what it is. We must take all the glory away from it, strip it of its romance, and look at it then. We see it as licensed murder, as famine, and as the worst of plagues. But is that the best way to get peace? By looking at the horror of war?

God, what a world! if men in street and mart
Felt that same kinship of the human heart
Which makes them, in the face of fire and flood,
Rise to the meaning of True Brotherhood!
True brotherhood is the answer to World Peace.
And that is possible only with Christ as the bond to hold us together.

Making the World Better Spiritually

When we speak of making the world better spiritually, and the force that is accomplishing that, we speak of the source of all these other betterments. Christ said that the kingdom of heaven was like leaven which a woman put into three measures of meal, and the whole of it was leavened. All these forces work from the inside out. Brotherhood cannot be imposed upon us. We have to want it first. And peace cannot be thrust on us if we do not want

THANKSGIVING DINNER

"Gee," exclaimed Herb Bunton, "I'm getting tired of this waiting."

He looked at his watch for the seventieth time and then anxiously up and down the street. It was a broad pleasant avenue, with dry-leaved trees arching overhead and pleasant, roomy homes set in broad lawns waiting comfortably for dinner, as it were. Herb could smell the dinners, Thanksgiving dinners of turkeys and goodies, and his impatience grew.

"If that kid doesn't show up in fifteen minutes I'm going," he told himself.

But Herb was a conscientious lad and somehow when fifteen minutes were up he did not leave. Anything might account for the delay,—a motor accident, other people's tardiness.

"This is what comes of trying to be nice to people," grumbled Herb.

He sat down on the step to wait, thinking of Casabianca. Perhaps there isn't much difference between a burning deck and a cooling dinner after all. It was pure sense of duty that kept Herb to his post. He did not even know the boy he was waiting for. Somebody named Sam Something-or-other, the son of one of Herb's mother's school friends who had just moved to town. The rest of Sam's family was down with the grippe, so the Buntons were taking Sam along with them to Grandma Bunton's for Thanksgiving dinner. Sam was to have the Buntons in their front yard at one o'clock and now it was after two. Herb himself had volunteered to mount guard and wait for the late guest.

There was nothing else to do. The town was rather small in the number of its inhabitants, but it covered a lot of ground and its limits spread out into the country. Sam's people had taken the last house on the town line, the Bunton's car was out of order, Sam's telephone had not yet been installed. What could a fellow do except wait under such circumstances?

Just as Herb was tightening his belt another notch, he heard the rattle of an old car at the corner. He sprang to his feet and looked up the road where an ancient car was stopping. The door of the car opened and a small boy came out. Then the car drove rapidly away.

Herb hurried joyfully toward the small figure standing uncertainly on the pavement.

"Hello," he greeted. "Come on and get some turkey if there's any left."

He had felt rather grouchy during the last few minutes of his wait, but he forgot it at sight of the small, ragged stranger.

"You like turkey, don't you, kid?" he inquired jovially.

"Sh-oor I like toikey," replied the small boy giving a great snuffle and passing the sleeve of his ragged sweater across his nose.

Herb noticed that his hands were about as black as a white person's hands could get.

"Maybe you'd like to come in the house and wash up," he suggested.

"Naw. Where's de eats at?" replied the small boy.

"Come along," said Herb and when he saw that the boy wanted to take his hand, he thrust both of his into his pockets.

While they walked the five blocks to Grandma Bunton's Herb was glancing curiously at his small companion from the corner of his eye and decided that his family must have been pretty sick to have let him go out in such a condition, dirt, rags, touseled hair, toes sticking out of broken shoes, no hat.

"Probably just his play clothes," thought Herb uncomfortably thinking about his grandmother who insisted so upon neatness.

They soon reached the trim and stately home of Grandma Bunton and the maid in a starched apron opened the door. In marched the boys, in their hurry brushing past the girl, to the dining-room from whence came the clash of silver and the smell of food.

"Well, here we are!" announced Herb. "Just about starved, aren't we, Sam, old man?"

"Sho-oor," said the small boy. "Gimme some toikey."

They took their seats and a silence fell as five pairs of astonished eyes fastened upon the guest. He was not a bit dismayed but pounced on his dinner with both hands, scorning knife or fork.

"H-m," said Grandma Bunton, "how is your mother, Sam?"

"Not so good," replied the boy between bites. "Pa just tooken her to the horse-pittle. Yum, yum! I ain't never had sich eats."

Mrs. Bunton leaned over and whispered to Grandma.

"Can it be possible that Carrie is really in the hospital? Will you lend me your car after dinner. I must run out and see her."

"What's the matter with your mother?" asked Phoebe, Herb's sister.

"Aw, she jist had a fight wid Miss Murphy wot lives next doors and got her eye scratched," explained the stranger.

Mrs. Bunton sprang to her feet, her face very red.

"You—you don't mean that," she exclaimed, thinking of her gentle school friend. "No, that's not true, Sam."

Just then the doorbell rang, there was a short conversation and then in walked a young man of about sixteen, a handsome, pleasant-faced lad with shiny face and hair, glossy shoes, snowy collar, well scrubbed hands.

"I am Sam Scott," explained the newcomer, "I'm sorry I'm late, but I had some trouble finding my way."

After the greetings were over, naturally everyone turned to the grubby little boy who sat munching away unconcernedly.

"And who are you?" they asked.

"My name's Sam Reilley," he answered with his mouth full. "Dis is a swell feed."

They tried not to laugh, and then Mrs. Bunton put her arm around the grubby little stranger.

"We're so glad you came," she said. "When we get through I want to take you over to my house. I think I have some clothes Herb has outgrown that would just fit you, and then we'll take you home. Won't that be nice?"

"Sh-oor," agreed little Sam, "but foist maybe I better go home and toin off de oven. Pa he putted on a chickum for dinner and the baby too."

"What! put on the baby?" cried Grandma.

"Naw," said Sam, "de baby's in his carriage on de porch. De chickum's in de oven. Pa tooken me off of our vacant lot where I was playin' wif de fellers and tol' me to go to watch the chickum and de baby while he carried Ma to the horse-pittle."

Of course, they all sprang up. The baby might have fallen out of its carriage and the chicken was probably all burned. Grandma got a huge basket and put the remains of their turkey and all the trimmings into it, and how they did rush for little Sam's home.

The baby was howling itself blue, the chicken was charred, but soon everything was all right, the house tidied, the baby fed and Sam washed by his new friend Herb.

"Gee, this has been some Thanksgiving!" exclaimed Herb.

"It really is more blessed to give than to receive," Grandma smiled. "We must thank God for sending us the chance."

"Did you have a good Thanksgiving?" Phoebe asked Sam, who was now surveying himself proudly in a broken mirror.

"Sh-oor," replied the little fellow, "God needn't have been so good to a bad little boy like me."

"You're all right, Sam," protested Herb. "You and I are going to be pals."

Sam turned his Irish blue eyes on Herb with a look of admiring affection.

"I ain't good enough for you, Herb," he said sadly, and Herb felt his heart tighten and a great resolve from within him to be worthy of such an opinion, but boy-like he couldn't speak all that he felt. He only put his hands over his stomach and groaned: "Gee—o—gee, I am full! Some Thanksgiving!"

TWO-IN-ONE STORIES FOR THE CHILDREN

LITTLE MICHEL AND THE SHIPWRECKED CAT

Here is a true story which has been a favorite with French children. It is about a sailor and two cats.

Away back in the year 1867 there was a sailor lad whose name was Michel. He was from Saint Servan to fortune as a sailor boy. He became an apprentice on a merchant ship. The captain was kind and good. A was kind and good himself, and ready to do his duty cheerfully. The crew became his friends. They would have risked their own lives to save the boy from any danger.

All went well until the last voyage. Michel's first ship. That time he sailed away from a port in France to Lisbon, in Portugal. We don't know what cargo she carried, except that it was a heavy one.

The very first night at sea a dense fog came, and in the middle of the night the ship was struck by another. It was badly damaged there was no chance of saving it. A passing English ship rescued the captain and his crew. When they were lifted, the shipwrecked captain and his crew, still afloat, far off on the sea. Suddenly he exclaimed:

"Where is Michel, the apprentice? No one had seen Michel. The his crew. Every man was there the boy. By this time the ship appeared from sight. The men were that she had gone down and Michel was dead. The captain was sad and heavy as he looked over the wide ocean where he had seen his ship. He was deeply grieved by the loss of his ship, and he now wondered how he would face Michel's mother with the news that her boy was drowned.

Michel was not dead. As the old man said: "At the moment of the rescue the little apprentice, Michel, was busy with the rigging at the fore of the ship. When his task was done he went aft, and saw that the ship was carrying away the boy. The boy called, shouted, but his voice was lost in the rush and swirl of the waves. Michel was alone in the water when the water was before and aft. At first he wept, but when he recovered himself, ran to the fore, lighted a lantern, rang the bell, and all night long strove and fought against destruction. Day dawned and the little fellow descried a sail, far off. He hoisted a flag of distress and the sail carried out of sight. Michel returned to the pump. Then upon a second ship became visible on the horizon. But, like the other, it was a wreck and the wreck was not far off."

no wonder that poor little Michel lost hope. No wonder he beat the pump further work at the pump was useless, and that his time had passed.

When, when all seemed lost, and Michel decided to give up pumping and when his miseries sooner, the ship's crew came to Michel and began to struggle themselves against his legs. He was so glad to find him, they purred, and purred. And so glad to see them that he had enough words to tell them. So Michel talked to the cats and the cats talked to Michel, and the cats no longer a place of utter loneliness. The cats petted Michel and Michel petted the cats, and then it was as if they must be saved. Michel worked at the pump and never stopped so long as the cats stood by him on. He shared his food with them, pork and biscuit, and the cats enjoyed their dinner.

Michel once more shut out the sky, the cats cuddled close to the wrecked sailor boy, and he was grateful for their company. Michel again turned to his work at the pump and the signals.

Days Michel and the two cats and kept watch for sails. Until Michel was gone, Michel shared with at time the ship was so nearly full of water that any minute might have been the last. When Michel could no longer work at the pump, he gathered up the cats, furry, comforting cats in his arms and sought the only high and dry place in the fast-sinking ship.

The old story now takes a cheerful turn, in these happy words: "At the moment the American brig came in sight Michel was 'made out,' upon the deck of the vessel, and now on the point of going down. He was taken on board the brig, but he would not quit the merchantman without his cats."

Now it may be that Michel and his cats visited our own Salem, or Bristol, or New London, because it was such a long time before he saw his home or mother again. Anyway, whether he visited our side of the Atlantic or not, Michel's story ends with these words:

"Three months afterwards he landed at the port of Saint Servan, carrying his two cats in his arms in triumph, amid the acclamations of the crowd."

A VOICE FROM A FAR COUNTRY

Rev. J. H. Longenecker, of Luebo, Congo Belge, Africa, tells of a young Christian convert, of the famous tribe of the Bakuba, who was among strangers and the most demoralizing temptations of every kind, yet he maintained his faith and his fellowship with the Saviour. Mr. Longenecker translates a letter from him:

"Misayela Haneka is a young man of the Bakuba tribe, who was trained at the Mission at Luebo. About five years ago he went away to work. His employer has taken him to the town of Bandundu, far away on another tributary of the Kasai River, where he is a clerk in a mercantile establishment. So he is far from home and from his own tribe. Some time ago he sent the money for a Bible, a catechism, a hymn bok, and subscription for our monthly paper, the Lumu Lua Bena Kasai. I translate from his letter in reply:

'Missionary and father chief Kabemba,—

I was happy with many thanks, on account of all the books which arrived to me, the book of God, and hymn book and catechism and Luma Lua Bena Kasai. I thank you a plenty with great happiness also.

But I did not reply quickly because I was sick, I got these books myself on bed in the hospital . . . I was near with death, and they had already made the coffin to put me in, and I am with life also until today, which is a very strong marvel to all the people here.

I thank our father God today until forever because the owner of the field is not forgetting to look after the things. in his field even to the edge of his field, the things which one who is not the owner of the field would say they are worthless, but the owner of the field knows all of them, because he planted all with one love.

I thank you again for your words of love. . . .

Muoyo to you from your child,
Mishayela Haneka.'

peace. And to want all these things we must first have God. Our God must be more than a Social Force—he has to be some one that we can trust, some one we can believe. And if we have him to that extent, others will want him too. We cannot impose our God on other people any more than we can impose peace on them—they must want Him. And the only way they can want Him is by seeing what He has done for us. Making Christ's kingdom come is indeed a glorious task.

EVERY buttressed salient speaks of mighty strength . . . protection. But conquerers swarm through the broken gate—the one vulnerable point.

In a grave vault there is one consideration that outweighs all others . . . protection from water.

The Clark Vault has attained its nationwide leadership by providing dependable protection. Built of special 12 gauge Armco Ingot Iron or Keystone Copper Steel, it is impervious to water. Designed like a diving bell, water cannot get into the Clark Vault. Each Clark carries a 50-year guaranty.

Solid copper, 10 gauge in thickness, is used in making the beautiful Clark de luxe model. It is guaranteed perpetually.

Clark Vaults can be obtained through better funeral directors everywhere, in the following models: Gray and White Lacquer Finish—Silver Tone and Copper Finish, Cadmium Plated by Udylyte Process—De Luxe, 10 Gauge Solid Copper.

chased the smile from her face and brought to it the sullen look it had borne for the past two weeks. Evidently Madge was not to be turned easily aside and must have been very urgent in her demands. She had insisted that Ruby go Thanksgiving shopping with her. Proudly had she boasted that she was to make the selection of the turkey and had Ruby's mother bought their turkey? Ruby had replied in a low voice, "No," and had been forced to repeat herself. When Madge understood, she at once insisted she would be right over to ask Ruby's mother to permit Ruby to choose their turkey, too, adding, "We will have loads of fun."

Ruby had declared somewhat shortly that she had no interest in such an expedition, and had hung up the receiver, ejaculating as he did so, "I wish Thanksgiving Day had fallen on February 29th, then it would come once in four years instead of every year. How, I hate the day!" Lost in her meditation she was brought out of her reverie by the voice of her little brother, David, who had tried to gain her attention. Failing to do so he had taken hold of her dress and was tugging at her with dirty hands, leaving a dark spot on her light-colored smock. "Go away, David," she urged. "Nope! I want to hear about our bid Franksgivin' turkey, and tan I'se have both drum sticks?"

"Thanksgiving turkey! Can't I get away from that combination of words?" said Ruby to herself, and gently pushed the determined David from her. David wasn't used to being denied and immediately set up a terrific yell, which brought to the scene of action the entire Bowman clan. Father from the study where he was preparing his annual Thanksgiving sermon; Mother from the kitchen where she had been busily engaged in baking and cooking, for the feastday to come in three days; the two boys from their play. They all were surprised to find two very red faced objects before them. David in a fit of temper and Ruby much embarrassed, "for had she not been unkind to David?" "For had she not promised him a big turkey?"

Mother and Ruby were soon left to themselves. This was Mother's chance. Ruby had, weeks ago expressed the purpose of expending a certain sum of money, which she had earned and had had in her possession up to two weeks ago. The money was gone, Ruby had disposed of it and in what manner. Mrs. Bowman had not been informed.

"Come Ruby, 'an honest confession is good for the soul,' what have you been about?"

Thus openly questioned Ruby relieved her mind by speaking.

"To begin Mother, you know how very much I have wanted to keep Thanksgiving like others keep it, and how it could not be done, you too, have tried but failed, and—"

"Yes, child, there is not much left for luxuries, in a minister's home. Father has such a time providing for all the calls coming to him from needy ones, he impoverishes his own family and himself in responding generously to these calls. Of course I would not have him turn a deaf ear to their petitions, but I have wished many times he was a little less generous, for he certainly has been deceived any number of times by tales of woe from undeserving people."

"I'm afraid Mother, I'm a chip off the block; it's hard for me to turn down a good cause and—"

"And what?" queried Mrs. Bowman gently.

"Well, you know Mother, how very much I have wanted all these years to have a Thanksgiving dinner just like everyone else has, and how last year I determined this year to have it and you know how hard it was to earn money in a small town like this. I weeded gardens, picked berries, wheeled crying babies, and ran on errands for the parish, and paid but little was I for many a long trip in the heat and cold. I earned my Guild dues, my Christmas money, my subscription to the building fund, then this extra special fund to cover my Thanksgiving project. Seven dollars it would take. I had it, up to two weeks ago, and then I parted with it. I knew you would be depending on me to fulfill my promise of providing—"

"Yes, but then you came to me about that. I know it's gone, but what did you do with it?"

"You remember the Sabbath you were taking care of Mrs. Hastings' mother, and could not go to church?" Mrs. Bowman nodded in the affirmative. "I was there and father took up a special collection, answering an S. O. S. call out from the Board of National Missions, for Porto Rico and Florida. I thought of the despairing people, thousands homeless, little children crying for bread. Then I put my savings on the plate, and said to myself, 'That saves the head of one turkey.'"

"So that's the story, well then, I believe I have a grand surprise for you too, perhaps we are going to have even a better dinner than you had planned. I've been reading about a new dish and I am ever so anxious to try my hand at it. It sounds wonderfully good to me. It is called veal birds. You take—"

"Another substitute for turkey, I declare, Mother, you did not miss your calling, for if ever a woman was called to be a minister's wife that one is you. You dote on sacrificing, you can make much out of nothing. I'm fifteen, I can remember ten Thanksgivings, and I can remember ten substitutes to fill up the bill."

The smell of burning cake interrupted the conversation. Soon Davie appeared and in a strange whisper announced. "Take very burned, Muvver frosting it so it will look like one, and it's secret from Gee Zack. You mussen tell!"

"Must not tell," repeated scornfully. Those were the words she had heard all her life. "Must not tell" was the slogan of the manse she had been younger she had counted the "must not tells" were innumerable. Must not tell rug had a hole in it, (covered couch,) must not tell, father's kerosene lamp at night so a down the expense of electric they had sometimes to sit around kitchen range to keep warm, (to save coal,) that Mother wore hand clothes, bought in a neat that sometimes Mother, could to the missionary meeting there was no money with which her dues, (father's check for church being late in arriving they used substitutes for but canned milk for coffee. Some must not tells seemed foolish but she had obeyed and had repeated anything since her lesson. The Ladies' Aid Society bought a gas range from the Clarkwood, president of the organization, at the time, and had placed the manse. Mrs. Clarkwood bought a new one for herself, she "hated to see her old one really had no place to keep sold it to the Aid. Ruby had asked by the worthy woman presence of the other Aid member. "How does your mother like the stove?" To which the community child replied, glibly, "She thinks be lovely when she gets it. She's been working on it since day and she told father it was beginning to look respectable." The effects of that, Ruby never forgot.

Yet one thing she "must not tell" had almost become tragedy, so Needless Pain!

The man who wouldn't drive his motorcar half a mile when it's out of order, will often drive his brain all day with a head that's throbbing.

Such punishment isn't very good for one's nerves! It's unwise, and it's unnecessary. A tablet or two of Bayer Aspirin will relieve a headache every time. So, remember this accepted antidote for pain, and spare yourself a lot of needless suffering. Read the proven directions and you'll discover many valuable uses for these tablets. For headaches; to check colds. To ease a sore throat and reduce the infection. For relieving neuralgic, neuritic, rheumatic pain.

People used to wonder if Bayer Aspirin was harmful. The doctors answered that question years ago. It is not. Some folks still wonder if it really does relieve pain. That's settled! For millions of men and women have found it does. To cure the cause of any pain you must consult your doctor; but you may always turn to Bayer Aspirin for immediate relief.

brooded over it. That was that the manse folk, her own family, had never had a turkey for Thanksgiving. She was so sensitive about it that the very season was disliked by her.

To her a Thanksgiving dinner was not a dinner without a turkey! That disappointment of not having one this year was great for she had so set her heart on it. She had given her money impulsively! She would do it again if the same call came. How could she have done otherwise? It was going to be a poor Thanksgiving for the others for she had talked to her brothers, all younger than herself about the coming dinner and they had come to her many times, shouting with glee when she had told them she had the amount necessary for a turkey. Ruby had the impression that all self-respecting families were provided with a turkey on Thanksgiving. For them to be without one was an actual disgrace. She had never even as much as tasted turkey. No one ever invited the Bowmans out for meals, that is the entire family, six in all. It was entirely too large.

Ruby's task of putting the room in order was nearly done. Folding last night's edition of the "Courier," Ruby's attention was drawn to an article on the page before her. Springing to her feet, madly dancing around the room, stopping at mother's writing desk, she made a quick inventory of the writing materials before her. Not a very choice selection. However—

Considering a calendar, Ruby found that the task she had undertaken must be in the hands of the Courier by midnight of this day. It was now five o'clock. She could get a good start. Sheet after sheet of paper was scribbled on and then thrown aside.

But now at last she was making headway. Then the supper call came. Carefully she closed the desk and answered the third call to supper. A glance at her mother plainly portrayed her to be fatigued and unless relieved of the supper dishes, Ruby feared she would be down with one of her severe headaches so she insisted that mother go off to bed and she could do the dishes alone. It was seven o'clock before she had finished. But alas! When she returned to her writing, it was only to find that Davie had cut up every sheet in his zeal to "make something." Poor Ruby. By the time she had recovered herself, Davie must be put to bed. Then—She almost felt like giving up. But again she was spurred to resume her writings.

Resolutely she set about her task. With compressed lips and thoughtful brow she bent over her work, writing last she was through. Folding her paper sheet after sheet, now consulting a dictionary, now watching the clock. At and placing it in an envelope, she put on her coat and hat and quietly opened the outside door.

It was very dark, and as she walked the three blocks to the Courier's office she wished she had taken one of her brothers into her confidence and had him accompany her. However, she was in time. It lacked half an hour until midnight. "What a long day it had been! How thankful that none of the family had known she had been gone from the house. How nice her bed looked. No time to read the magazine . . . tomorrow she would help mother . . . if only she might win . . . these were her thoughts as sleep closed her eyes.

Good resolutions made at night are not always carried out the next day. Ruby just could not work. Restlessly she would run from one thing to another. She intercepted all who attempted to answer the telephone, then she even turned dejectedly away. No one called her, not even Madge—no doubt mystified by Ruby's lack of interest in the things she had tried to share with with Madge, who had a host of relatives and a great home gathering made it a remarkable day.

The Bowmans were having an early supper so mother could go out after it was over and buy the few things she would need for Thanksgiving, including the veal at the Leader's meat-market. Ruby asked to be excused from the shopping tour. She had not the courage to tell mother how the very sight of the dangling turkeys made her sick with longings and to make the confession that for weeks, she had not taken Main Street, so as to avoid the window displays of fowls.

There was a loud knock which Zach answered. The caller proved to be a delivery boy. He was carrying a large bulky package which he deposited on the serving table near the door, and hurried away, to deliver his many packages, for this was a busy time for the Leader's meat market.

From out the wrappings of paper two turkey feet hung limply. Zach had the rest of the paper off in a jiffy and there before the eyes of all was an immense fowl.

The most correct way perhaps to explain its arrival would be to read a letter appearing in the Courier that evening. That, however, would take too long a time. Perhaps the title of the theme of the letter and the signer's name, would be sufficient.

Thanksgiving Day was a cold snappy day. The ground was covered with snow, the first of the season. The Bowmans had a late dinner and remained a long time at the table. Mother's remarks of the turkey being the best she had ever roasted or prepared, created much laughter, for all knew it had been her very first to make ready. Father's awkward attempt to carve the fowl had created still greater mirth.

If this were a fairy tale we might expect to hear of the magic turkey providing the family with food for a week to come and that Ruby never cared for turkey afterward, but it is an actual happening and can truthfully be said, that after all had done ample justice to the meal, having been served repeatedly with turkey and more turkey, there wasn't enough left of that center of attraction to furnish even a small dish of hash for the next day's dinner.

Into Mother Bowman's treasure box, a few days later (after all had read and re-read it many times) was placed another treasure to bear company with pictures of little children, curly baby locks laid in tissue paper, bits of jewelry, little booties, etc. It was a clipping from the Courier. It was an extremely good letter, giving in convincing expression, the answer to the question, put out by the Leader Meat Market by way of advertising: "Twelve reasons why a turkey is the proper thing to serve on Thanksgiving." The best letter-writer was to receive a prize turkey. Ruby had ably recited them. All of them were old to mother. She had heard them given many a time by one whose name was signed to the letter, "Ruby Bowman."

Ruby unexpectedly came on Mrs. Bowman as she stood with tear dimmed eyes as she placed the article in its place among her most cherished of worldly possessions. Throwing an arm about her, Ruby declared, "I'm so glad I gave my money to the hurricane sufferers. Look what came to me by doing it."

"So am I, child, I was thinking now

Beware the Cough From Colds That Hang On

Coughs from colds may lead to serious trouble. You can stop them now with Creomulsion, an emulsified creosote that is pleasant to take. Creomulsion is a medical discovery with two-fold action; it soothes and heals the inflamed membranes and inhibits germ growth.

Of all known drugs, creosote is recognized by high medical authorities as one of the greatest healing agencies for coughs from colds and bronchial irritations. Creomulsion contains, in addition to creosote, other healing elements which soothe and heal the inflamed membranes and stop the irritation, while the creosote goes on to the stomach, is absorbed into the blood, attacks the seat of the trouble and checks the growth of the germs.

Creomulsion is guaranteed success-tory in the treatment of coughs colds, bronchitis and minor bronchial irritations, and is effective for building up the system after

CREOMULSION FOR THE COUGH FROM COLDS THAT HANG ON Wins Wife as First Prize!

If you don't think your whole life can be changed by chance, read this. It is the story of a young man who was pretty well down and out, but he figured he might win a prize if he took some advice.

"As far back as I can remember I had been a weakling," says Mr. Calvin L. Floyd of Orlando, Florida. "A headache, it seemed, was to be my life companion. I was always dizzy in the mornings. Nothing I ate seemed good for me. Then I attended a health lecture in a sanatorium and the physician talked of 'faulty elimination.' That was certainly my trouble. One of the patients asked him about Nujol. He recommended it highly. I decided to try one bottle to see if there was anything in what he said about natural lubrication for the human body.

"Long before I had finished the first bottle my 'companion-headache' was gone. No more tired out feeling. I get a real kick out of life now. By the way, I almost forgot to tell you I found a new life companion, too!

Perfectly simple, wasn't it? Mr. Floyd just learned the normal natural way to get rid of bodily poison (we all have them) and nature did the rest. Why shouldn't you be well?

Nujol is not a medicine. It contains no drugs. It is effective, and you will be "regular as clock-work." You can buy it at all good drug stores in sealed packages for less than the price of a couple of good cigars.

Begin today. Millions have found that Nujol makes all the difference in the world. Nujol will make you feel fine and you can prove it.

Many a life changed by a message like this one.

MINISTERS' ANNUITY FUND

What Next!

The General Assembly, after having continually received overtures from Presbyteries, and after much discussion of the inadequacy of Ministerial Relief, approved in 1924, a Ministers' Annuity Fund to cover the entire ministry of the Church, and all the churches. Each year since it has approved the plan.

In 1929 it directed its agencies to co-operate in its establishment and urged all the ministers and missionaries and all the churches to enter into the Plan.

Accomplishments

All of the Synods which have met this year have approved the Plan, and at least eighty-six of the ninety-two Presbyteries have endorsed it. Several have not yet reported their action.

The General Assembly's agencies and almost all the Home Mission Committees of the Presbyteries have already taken action looking to full participation.

Between seventy-five and eighty per cent of the ministers and missionaries eligible for membership have signified their intention to become members of the Fund provided it is established and their churches decide to enter.

Already a surprising number of churches have taken formal action declaring their intention to participate. Few church-wide movements have ever received such universal endorsement.

Tasks Ahead

There are still large tasks ahead. The General Assembly, Synods and Presbyteries have commended the Plan to the local churches and ministers — now the officials of the local church and congregations must act.

1. All the churches should be enlisted. Committees appointed by the Presbyteries and Synods, assisted by the Louisville office, will try to meet with the Elders and Deacons of each church, where further information is needed.

2. All the churches and each member of the Presbyterian family must be interested in the $3,000,000 to care, in part, for the accrued liability of the Church for the prior service of its ministers. This means that each church should raise in cash or pledges, to be paid in six installments over a period of three years, an amount equal to the salary paid the minister for one year, plus ten per cent.

3. Three years ago the General Assembly set aside the year 1930 as the time for raising this $3,000,000. It is to have the right of way. There are always many calls—we believe this will appeal to the elemental sense of justice and will meet with a joyful and liberal response as it has in the Protestant Episcopal, the Congregationalist, the U. S. A. Presbyterian and other Churches.

This accrued liability fund is not to go into the Benevolent Budget. It is an opportunity for special liberality on the part of loyal Presbyterians. It is to meet the neglect of the past and never again will we need to raise such a fund. The Ministers' Annuity Fund will, for the future, carry the entire load.

4. The churches will henceforth begin to bring the work done by Ministerial Relief out of the Benevolent Budget into the Budget of Church Expenses, where it belongs. As the Church begins to use up the energy of the minister then it begins to lay by in store to meet the days of coming need. Amounts, paid in the future in advance, will be increased by compound interest from 52 per cent to 54 per cent. This will enable the Church to do what it has unsuccessfully tried to do since 1717.

B. G. Alexander, a man of large experience, of proved ability and Christian character, a member of the First Presbyterian Church of Knoxville, Tenn., is the Director of the Campaign. He has associated with him: L. A. Coulter, Wm. J. Martin, F. H. Barron, J. S. Baird, David Park, Wilbur Huffer and F. W. A. Bosch. Every item of expense is being carefully watched. Hundreds of the men of the Church will be enlisted and every effort made to arouse the Church to a sense of its opportunity in following the will of God in meeting a serious situation which grows more critical each year.

Frazer Resigns Memphis Charge

Idlewild Church Asks for Release After Four Years Pastorate

George Stanley Frazer, pastor of Idlewild Presbyterian Church, Memphis, Tenn., has tendered his resignation as pastor to the congregation.

Frazer will ask the Presbytery to dissolve his pastoral relationship at its next meeting, to be held at the Second Presbyterian Church, Memphis, on November 26.

Frazer came to the Memphis charge nearly four years ago, following the death of the Rev. W. P. Neiland, who had been pastor of the First Presbyterian Church at Macon, Ga.

Frazer, carrying out the plans of the late Rev. Mr. Neilson, had completed the new $750,000 edifice.

Dr. Frazer had announced to the congregation his desire to be relieved of his duties as pastor of the Presbyterian Church, after a period of nearly four years. During the period of his ministry the congregation has completed and occupied magnificent new buildings; membership has increased from 1,500; and last year's total contributions to all causes amounted to $10,000. Dr. Frazer stated to the congregation that he had had the matter under consideration for more than in part:

"I would be governed by the number and sincerity of the protests to which I would have no other recourse than to continue in this field, until a conclusion have frankly entered my mind to disregard the personal feelings and reach a decision which, with God's help, can make. I am sure that I would like to be released as soon as plans mutually acceptable to both the pastor and the congregation can be worked out."

Frazer stated that having had no part in the completion of the edifice and in its financial problems, the existing burden of indebtedness of the church he would find himself occupied with these problems at the necessary time to the discharge of his pastoral responsibilities.

The congregation reluctantly voted to release Dr. Frazer in his request to the Presbytery to dissolve the relationship. Unanimously adopted resolutions commending touching his services as preacher, pastor and leader, and recognizing that it was largely through his efforts that the great building providing an expenditure of three million dollars, was a successful completion.

Frazer has taken an active part in the work of the Memphis Presbytery, in which he is Moderator, and in church activities in the city. On Thanksgiving Day he preached the sermon at the union service to be held in the Auditorium under the auspices of all churches in the city.

Frazer came to the Idlewild Church from the pastorate of the Presbyterian Church of Macon, Ga.

P. C. Campaign Makes Progress

Program of Deliverance Almost at $140,000 and Reports Still Coming

The Associated Press reports from Clinton, S. C., indicate that the Program of Deliverance for Presbyterian College is making rapid strides toward attaining the goal of $350,000. The item follows:

With the Presbyterian College deliverance fund nearing the $140,000 mark, the program of deliverance is to the $350,000 goal, it was announced November 24 by Rev. John McSween, president of the college.

Reports from churches which have just begun their campaign work and have not yet compiled their totals are expected materially to swell the fund.

So far some 79 of the 272 churches have not as yet sent in any reports. And most of the 193 churches which have reported have not yet completed their canvassing.

Thus all churches will continue their activity in the campaign to deliver the college from the burden of debt, and to assure the receipt of $148,000 in endowment gifts. President McSween points out again the fact that the debt must be paid by January 1, 1931, to assure receipt of the gifts and to assure also the continued membership of the college in the Southern Association of Colleges.

Two new churches have exceeded their goals. These new "over the top" churches are Mullins in the Pee Dee Presbytery, and Mountville in the South Carolina Presbytery. This brings the number of "over the top" churches to 30.

"And the work will continue until all churches have reached their goals," said President McSween, in announcing progress on the campaign today. "The same organization that has been functioning during the last several weeks—zone, Presbytery, group and church chairmen and committees—will push forward the deliverance program."

On Nov. 12, the board of trustees of Princeton Seminary met and passed unanimously the amendments to the charter of the seminary, which create the new board of control authorized by the General Assembly last May. These amendments call for a board of 11 members from the old directors, 11 from the old trustees, and 11 from the church-at-large, making a total of 33 members, who are charged with complete control of the affairs of the seminary under the Assembly. The amendments are being submitted to the Secretary of State of New Jersey; and, following his approval, the re-organization of Princeton Seminary will be completed.

Queens Board Meets In Charlotte

The College Nearing its Goal—Renewed Efforts to Complete Endowment

The Board of Trustees of Queens College met in its semi-annual session on Tuesday, November 19, at 12 o'clock noon. There was a very large attendance of the Board at this meeting, and some matters of very great importance were transacted.

A thorough and exhaustive report of the College was made by President Wm. H. Frazer, and also a detailed statement was submitted by Mr. E. E. Jones, Treasurer of the Endowment Fund. The contents of both these reports were exceedingly encouraging, and gave the Board of Trustees a clearer view of the present status of the Institution than they have had heretofore. There were a great many matters of importance brought to their attention.

Perhaps the most significant fact was that the Endowment Fund now hovers around the $400,000 mark, with $180,000 in actual cash and rent bearing property in hand, and that enough subscriptions to approach the $400,000 mark are in possession of the Institution. The Board of Trustees voted unanimously to put a man in the field whose special duty shall be the securing of endowment funds. They went on record as favoring a rapidly developing institution. A brief contrast of the past 8 years shows a remarkable progress which is almost unbelievable.

The financial condition of the College is very satisfactory, and encouraging. The student body was reported to be one of the finest in the history of the Institution, and the internal workings are smooth, harmonious, and effective. The President reported the addition of three Doctors of Philosophy to the teaching staff for the year, and the analysis of the faculty revealed a very high record in scholastic attainments, Christian character, and adaptability to the special task undertaken by members of the faculty.

Goodwill Congress Meets At Nashville

Three-Day Conference Including Armistice Day on the Subject of World Peace

We clip from an exchange, Zion's Herald, the following account of the Goodwill Congress in Nashville the 9th, 10th, and 11th of the present month.

Opening with a mass meeting of college students which number nearly 3,000, the Goodwill Congress of the World Alliance for International Friendship Through the Churches held a three days' conference in Nashville, Tenn., with Armistice Day as the center of this annual event. An address by Dr. Fred B. Smith, moderator of the National Council of Congregational Churches of the United States and chairman of the Executive Committee of the World Alliance, on "Youth and the New Internationalism," and a message by Major-General John F. O'Ryan constituted the high lights of the program. "The New Internationalism" was the key-note of the entire congress, to which nearly fifty speakers addressed themselves. The college students' meeting itself took on the atmosphere of an old-fashioned evangelistic campaign, and Dr. Smith made one of the most masterly appeals of his career to the thousands of college men and women in the great auditorium of the War Memorial Building, which is dedicated to the young people of the future. Dr. Henry A. Atkinson, general secretary, pointed out that the World Alliance for International Friendship is organized in 39 countries throughout the world, in each of which there is a council made up of representative men and women drawn from the churches, schools, and allied bodies. The worldwide work of the Alliance is carried on through these national councils under the direction of an International Committee with a membership of some 150. Dr. Atkinson reported that a mass meeting was held recently in Westminster Hall, London, under the chairmanship of the Bishop of Chichester, and addresses were delivered by a half-dozen men among the most distinguished in the British Empire. At this meeting the following resolution was adopted: "We earnestly appeal to the respective authorities of all the Christian communities to declare in unmistakable terms that they will not countenance nor give aid in any way in any war with regard to which the government of their country has refused a bona-fide offer to submit the dispute to arbitration." This resolution was unanimously agreed to and was made the basis of a campaign among the churches of Great Britain. The councils in the other countries proposed to take action no less vigorous, Dr. Atkinson stated. While the more technical questions dealing with the Briand-Kellogg Pact, the reduction of armament, the World Court, and the League of Nations were discussed by experts in their various fields, one of the most interesting of the sessions was that devoted to "Enduring Peace Through the Co-operation of the Races," when addresses were made by Abdullah Yusuf Ali, of India, Paul C. Meng of the Chinese Christian Association of the United States, and Dr. Willis J. King,

Universal Bible Sunday, December 8

Attention of World Focussed on God's Word on the Second Sunday of Next Month

George William Brown
General Secretary of the American Bible Society

Universal Bible Sunday which occurs this year on December 8 will have as its theme "For Such an Age as This."

The question often arises whether the Bible written so many centuries ago is adapted to an age so problematic and eventful as the twentieth century. The American Bible Society is convinced that the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments have a message appropriate to this age of speed, of bigness, and baffling changes. Amid all the movements of this complex day there are abiding and constant life factors to which the Bible ministers effectively.

UNIVERSAL BIBLE SUNDAY

December 8, 1929

AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY

The observance of Universal Bible aims to bring annually to the attention of church-going America the important place the Bible occupies in the life and heart of Christians. Through its challenging passages social and political leaders are impelled to consider altruistic and beneficent policies. The governor of one of our great commonwealths in referring to Universal Bible Sunday declared: "The Bible is the only book that lies at all times upon my desk in the Executive offices and it is my light and guide as I try to do the difficult work that confronts me as Governor of this great State." Shortly after assuming office President Hoover said of the Bible: "As a nation we are indebted to the Book of Books for our national ideals and representative institutions. Their preservation rests in adhering to its principles."

The comforting chapters of the Bible have been and will continue to be to hundreds of thousands of spiritually-minded people a source of strength in times of perplexity. Ian Maclaren in his ministerial visits always read from the fourteenth chapter of St. John's Gospel. "They need to be reminded of the many mansions in the Father's house," was his reason. Mr. Ford in a recent interview stated that a number of years ago he took a pledge to read a chapter of the Bible every day. He further stated that in order to keep that pledge he has a Bible in every room in his house so that when he sits down he will have the Book of Books handy to his reach and his heart.

Universal Bible Sunday was conceived and is promoted yearly by the Sometimes in the hurry and confusion of present-day living the old Book is neglected. Magazines and periodicals cover our tables until the Bible is buried beneath them. Universal Bible Sunday aims through directing attention to its notable passages, its majestic literature, and its sacred message to develop a greater dependence upon it permitting it to give its gracious assistance in facing the duties of "Such an Age as This."

These Bibles are used in the English Department and are studied under the direction of Lieut. Col. Wheat, formerly Chaplain of the Academy. For fifty-five years the Society has presented Bibles to the Graduating Class; but during the last three years, it has made a double presentation of Bibles to Freshman and Sophomore Class for study of the Bible as English, and also to the Graduating Class. AN OPEN LETTER TO MINISTERS

Dear Brother:

We, your associates of the Golden Rule Foundation, desire to call your attention to the educational and spiritual value of the Golden Rule Sunday as financial values inherent in the observance of International Golden Rule Sunday.

The Golden Rule Foundation organization, has no request to make of you. We do not ask for a Sunday. We do not ask for use of your pulpit. We do not ask that you preach a sermon. We make announcements concerning International Golden Rule Sunday as you may recognize in the face of the day a contribution to spiritual life and ministry of your congregation.

As you doubtless know, International Golden Rule Sunday, heretofore served in the interest of the Near East, is, in the future to be observed on behalf of the privileged of the world, with reference to the needs of children. It is in a very real sense of our religion; a practical application of the Golden Rule. The spiritual and educational influence of our own congregations, we feel the observance of the day will be while regardless of financial conditions. It is primarily a home observance of plain living, high thinking and self-examination to which nearly we have attained to an old friend, Sancho Panza, whom we loved in our boyhood, more intimately than any other, prayed that the man who first in-structed him in sleep might be blessed, and each succeeding year has shown the wisdom of that prayer.

We venture to enclose herewith suggestions concerning the observance of the day.

THE PASSING OF SLEEP

"It knits up the ravelled sleeve of care," and it is "tired Nature's sweet restorer, balmy sleep," it also throws the mantle of forgetfulness over the cares of the day, when night comes to us.

This, however, is the age when idols of every kind are thrown down, and our most cherished hopes are shattered.

Under the rulings of the twentieth century investigations, sleep has to go the way of all cherished possessions.

New England, that pioneer of all things new and extreme, in the person of an Harvard professor, has declared that man, after he has reached middle age, really does not need sleep, that the habit of sleeping like that of eating and drinking is carried too far, and that instead of being a necessity, it is merely a luxury, whose tendency, like that of all luxuries, is to enervate rather than build up man.

Thus the work of destruction goes on, the horse yields to the auto, and the poetic milkmaid to the electric milker, and the old-fashioned man, sleeping one-third of his life, yields place to the human machine with a variety of occupations.

Of course this new view should affect the cost of living, for not only does the man become a more effective laborer in having more hours in which to work, but the saving in beds and blankets ought to enable him to get a beefsteak now and then.

Then to us who write and preach it may be a blessing in disguise. We can henceforth do our own work without being face to face with a nodding reader or a snoring hearer.

We have always been prejudiced against Harvard theology and find it hard to believe that any good can come out of this modern Nazareth. We are inclined to believe that Harvard is safer when dealing with science than with theology.

"THAT THE MINISTRY BE NOT BLAMED"

Paul was always solicitous about the purity of the ministry, as shown in his letter to Timothy and Titus.

This anxiety was due to his knowledge that the purity of the Church was closely connected with the purity of the ministry.

The time was when the purity of the ministry constituted a strong argument for the Christian religion.

Men respected religion and seldom did we hear a word against the "Cloth."

In recent years a great change has come over men everywhere, and the Church and her ministers have become the target for the world, and it seems that the time will soon come when there will be none so poor as do they reverence.

Among the many charges we hear constantly that young men are entering the ministry after the manner described by the prophet, when men ask to be put into the priest's office in order to get bread.

They point to the effort to persuade young men to enter the ministry and the encouragement given in the way of free education.

We mention these charges, not that we do not fully sympathize with them, but to emphasize the use made of them and the effect upon men in general.

We recently discussed the duty of the session to be careful in endorsing men for the ministry, with no deep-seated conviction that "woe is unto me if I preach not the gospel," whereby they send young men to our Presbyteries who become "dead weights" in time.

The Presbyteries are also at fault, because too often sentiment plays a part and young men are overpersuaded.

A Committee on Religious Education reported that there were several candidates under its care from whom they had not been able to hear for two years, though repeated letters had been sent, and that, according to a rule of Presbytery, their names had been dropped—and also that some of the candidates, after being taken under the care of Presbytery and having aid granted them, had taken unto themselves wives.

Strange to say, there was a division of opinion as to the dropping of these young men, there being not only a respectable minority against such action, but some of the best men in that Presbytery pleaded for patience to be shown the young men.

We have great respect for the motive of such a plea, but it seems to us to do more credit to their heart than their heads.

In nearly every Presbytery we can find good men who are dead weights in the Presbytery. They lack the qualifications of a good workman.

In these cases mentioned these young men were evidently not in earnest in their desire to preach, else they would have answered the several letters, and then again they were lacking that spirit of independence that should characterize every preacher depending upon Church for aid, when they accepted aid and by marrying during their days of preparation, then increased the expense of their support.

During our Seminary days a member of the Junior Class, who received aid from the Committee, eloped with the pretty daughter of a poor widow in the neighborhood.

Upon his return Dr. Peck met him with this remark, "If I had been guilty of such an act, I would seriously doubt my call to preach, because the Lord never calls a fool to preach."

So say we all.

"DOCTORS OF DIVINITY"

There is a certain charm in these cabalistic symbols, especially to non-possessors, while to those who have experienced their emptiness, they are like "Dead Sea fruits that tempt the eye, but turn to ashes on the lips."

They have become so prevalent that the distinction lies in not possessing them, and they are like skill in spelling, no great credit that you can spell, but rather conspicuous when you cannot.

The strength of this attraction was shown a few years ago, when in response to an offer to confer the degree of "D. D." upon any minister sending $25.00 in cash, in one week the school received more than $1,200.

This is a remarkable showing when you remember how scarce is cash with the average preacher as a class.

It speaks volumes for the charm of this title.

Not only are we surprised that such an amount of cash could be raised at call, but we are the more surprised that this craving for an honorary title should be able to over-ride the voice of conscience and persuade men to flaunt a lie in the face of the Church.

It is evident then that there is a strong temptation to strut in borrowed plumes and to imagine that the possession of a degree will add to their mental ability, or advance them in the eyes of the Church, however limited their ability may be.

If it were possible, it would be better to abolish all such artificial honors, which in too many cases are undeserved, and do away with this invidious distinction between brethren, especially in the Presbyterian Church which believes in the parity of the ministry.

As one who has staggered under this fictitious honor for many years, the writer can testify that it is a liability rather than an asset, and that too often the wearer of it feels as if he were an ass strutting about in a lion's skin.

When we meet one bearing "this blushing honor thick upon him," we are reminded of the remark of Cicero, in describing the decay of religion in old Rome, that one soothsayer could not look another in the face without laughter.

But whatever be our personal views, with which many will probably not agree, it is safe to say that $25.00 is a high price for what is too often an empty honor, not to say a false one.

THE END OF AN ERA IN SCOTTISH CHURCH HISTORY

Emmet W. McCorkle, D.D.

The reunion in Scotland is most significant and helpful to us, and especially now that the eyes of our church and church courts are turning more and more to Prayer.

Born in Prayer

On the great north road in Scotland, there is a little wayside inn. There, three weeks after their act of secession in 1733 met three men, Ebenezer Erskine, Alexander Moncrief, and James Fisher. They had "trysted" to meet there the previous day, and all three of them had kept the "tryst." But on that first day, no "business," even as good Presbyters speak of "business," was done.

These men were engaged in the loftiest labor of all, for they gave themselves, throughout the day, to prayer, transforming the small hostelry into the presence chamber of the king. The next morning they continued in united prayer, and then for a space, separated for private prayer and meditation. Coming together again, they found that they were of one mind, and one heart. And that afternoon they formally constituted themselves in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ into a Presbytery.

Baptised in prayer, their church, though she passed through the flame, like the burning bush, "no man yet saw the ashes of that fire."

Not a stone of that tiny tavern can be seen today, but there stands the graceful granite obelisk with the inscription, "For the maintenance of scriptural truth, and the rights of Christian people."

Matchless Preaching and Preachers

A challenge to the English speaking world. An English merchant was describing to his friends in London some of his experiences during a business visit to Scotland. In St. Andrews he had heard the great Robert Blair preach. "That man," said he, "showed me the majesty of God." This was the Church of Scotland's task. At the time when Darwinism was breaking on the religious world, and threatening to sweep away the barriers, it was Robert Flint who restated the faith and steadied the wavering line. His "Baird Lectures on Theism and Anti-Theistic Theories" reasserted the transcendence and immanence of God, and turned the edge, if they did not break the blade of the materialistic argument. Flint's own definition of theism represents the central religious conviction of this church. And it is the doctrine that "nature has a Creator and Preserver, the nations, a Governor, and men a Heavenly Father and Judge." These were the voices that came like trumpet blasts from their pulpits. Norman MacLeod, that prince of preachers, echoed them in his last speech, when he said, "Let them call me broad. I desire to be broad as the charity of Almighty God, who maketh his sun to shine on the evil and the good. But while I long for that breadth of charity, I desire to be narrow—narrow as God's righteousness which as a sharp sword can separate between eternal right and eternal wrong."

Afterwards, this good Londoner heard "a little fair man preach." This was Samuel Rutherford. That man showed me "the loveliness of Christ." That was the service of United Presbyterians. The love that died to make atonement for our sins, and the beauty of that Saviour's death. This was the burning heart of the message that kept the spirit of those stormy, stirring days, alive. Of one of their chapels, Carlyle wrote, "That poor temple of my childhood is more sacred to me than the biggest cathedral then extant could have been. Rude, rustic, bare, no temple in the world was more so, but there were sacred lambencies, tongues of authentic flame, which kindled what was best in me—what has not yet gone out. It was the emphasis placed on the death of Christ and the power of the atonement." This good elder, that he was, wherever he went, went to church. Again at Irvine, he heard a well favored, proper, old man preach. This was David Dickson, and "that man showed me all my heart," the high calling of the Free Church of Scotland. Side by side with the critical movement initiated by Robertson Smith, another movement of a very different character was sweeping Scotland—the amazing work of D. L. Moody. One of the brightest stars in Moody's crown was Henry Drummond. Was there ever a man who showed the students of a whole generation, all their heart as surely and savingly as Henry Drummond? Were there ever sermons that probed the hidden depths, searched the secrets of the soul, and gave the sense of being almost uncanny in their knowledge of the human heart, like the sermons of Alexander Whyte? Did anyone do more to quicken the social conscience, to stab the slumbering souls of men wide awake, and to lay the needs of the poor and unfortunate upon their hearts, than Thomas Chalmers? He showed the human heart to itself and then led it from itself to Christ.

The Issues

The Reformation Sunday reminds us that the issues of the Reformation are the issues of Europe today, as they are the issues of our own country. Our preaching needs to be toned by the tonic of grace as presented by the great truths of the Reformed Divines. We do not hear many sermons on Justification by Faith, yet that great topic Martin Luther declared, is the doctrine of a standing or a falling church.

The Spirit of Conceration

In the great disruption in 1843, the ministers and men of Scotland went out, not knowing whither they went. They deliberately turned their backs on every church building, Manse, Glebe, and Stipend, to maintain their spiritual independence and the allegiance of their church to her divine head. That act shook Scotland to her center. The influence of it was felt throughout the civilized world. No wonder that Jeffreys, that cruel, unjust, and insolent, browbeater, when he heard of it should have thrown up his hat, as he exclaimed, "Such a thing could not have happened anywhere in the world outside of Scotland." The issue is joined today between truth and error. Our church was born in a day of fiery trials. Shall we fear the flame, or shall we contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints? It is said we are too narrow for the new age, for these broad church days and liberal times. But the righteousness of God is narrow, Moses' ten words are narrow, Christ's path is not only straight, but narrow.

The State

In the days of Erastianism, the state was encroaching on the church. Today the church is entering the domain of the state. Do we stand for the spirituality of Christ's kingdom? And for the truth, my kingdom is not of this world. With faithful preaching, with devoted consecration, our testimony will never be stifled. Baptized with the same spirit of prayer, we will be worthy of our Scottish forefathers who went to battle with the praises of God on their lips, and with prayer to God in their hearts. Therefore as Samuel Rutherford said "The bush was in the flame. No man ever saw the ashes of that fire."

P.S.—The writer is duly indebted for these suggestions and thoughts to that magnificent Paper, "The British Weekly."

EVANGELISM IN MECKLENBURG

Report of the Presbytery's Committee on Evangelism

The keynote of the great commission given by our Lord to the church was "Evangelism." The apostles were instructed to preach "that Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures; And that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day according to the scriptures." They were to bear witness to the fact that Christ "is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them." And this sacred trust has come through the years to the church, which is his representative upon the earth. The glory and the power of the church, in any period of the world, is in the faithful preaching of the gospel of the Son of God. For this the church lives; "and the highest himself shall establish her."

The world's greatest need is the salvation that comes through our Lord Jesus Christ, and which can be given by no other means than the preaching of his word. If men are "Saved to the uttermost" all the other human problems that confront us will find their solution. The church must recognize the imperative in the command of our Lord to preach the gospel. It is not a matter of personal convenience or inclination; nor should it depend upon times and seasons; it is the obligation and responsibility to the command itself. Yet, it is an obedience that is to be quickened by a personal love for men, and a passion for souls.

The Assembly's work committee, in a recent meeting, recognizing the need of a greater evangelistic fervor in the church, took action to call the attention of the utterance of the General Assembly at its last meeting relative to evangelism. In substance the Assembly urges that conferences on the subject of evangelism be held in Presbytery at its Fall meeting; that the whole be called upon for special prayer on behalf of our evangelistic endeavors; and that an evangelistic program be adopted by the Presbytery that will reach every within its bounds. It is evident that evangelistic first of all be kindled in the hearts of the minister then upon the altars of the church.

Your committee on evangelism has been endeavoring for the past few years to bring these three things before the Assembly to the attention of the church, through the Presbytery. And it is with humble gratitude to the Lord that we report to you some measure of our efforts. For the first six months of the year, there have been 50 meetings held, over a period of 100 days, with 324 professions of faith, 227 additions to the church by profession of faith, and 76 additions by making a total of 303 additions to the church. So other churches have reported no meetings held, but most of these are planning meetings for late year.

In view of the tides of worldliness sweeping over our land, and which has even entered into the churches of the Presbytery to be diligent in their evangelistic services, whether public or personal. We would presume to suggest to you the plan that you follow; but so long as the promise stands, "That if you shall agree upon the earth as touching the Father which is in Heaven" just so long do we believe that the Church as a congregation should meet in seasons of prayer and definite appeal to men.

We recommend:

1. That each pastor be urged to hold one or more conferences with the Lord and the officers of his church to formulate an evangelistic program.

2. That if practicable that a series of evangelistic meetings be held in every church, at least once a year.

3. That we call upon all our people to give their hearts to earnest prayer that God may arouse the evangelistic passion in our souls; and on behalf of the meetings that are being held, at the time they are being held, that God may give them the victory.

THANKSGIVING AND THE ORPHANAGES

It is indeed a beneficent influence that for a moment however brief, deflects or withdraws the mind from the mad rush of commerce and industry and directs the ways of pleasantness and peace. And it is a blessing to have the turmoil and hurry of life laid down a bit annually for the sake of humanities.

Our calendar year is marked by days, weeks, and months. We live not by months or weeks, but by days. It is, therefore important that we take account of our contribution each day makes to our lives. We look upon "special days" as more attractive, enlivening and conducive to increasing our happiness and enriching our domestic and social relations than other days.

Thanksgiving is one of the "special days" which in recent years, comes to North Carolinians freighted with the spirit of goodwill, of cheerfulness, of happy and fragrant with friendship that means service wherever may be needed. If we would enter into and enjoy the spirit of Thanksgiving we must keep our minds fixed upon the Star of Bethlehem's manger which emanated a spirit of meekness, love and peace unsurpassed in the history of mankind.

To rightly appreciate the spirit of Thanksgiving we must have the spirit of the Christ who called upon us to follow Him and said: "Suffer little children to come unto Me and forbid them not, for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven." It is when we have the sweetness of the spirit of the Master in our lives that we bring cheer to the lives of those around us. Each of us has an individual part to perform in life's drama; each duty incumbent upon him, each has a responsibility to meet. Our future success will depend on individual effort. Our allotted share of the service to be rendered in the world a better place in which to live.

Few situations in life are more distressing than that of children without homes. No loss seems so great as that of parental love. Bereavement inflicts its strongest anguish when it cuts all the tender ties that bind the loving lives of father and mother to our hearts. Other sorrows, other losses we may bear with fortitude. Other bereavements, even, seem not to

COLORED PEOPLE AND MONTREAT

Brotherly Treatment of the Colored Commissioners at the Meeting of General Assembly Last May, at Montreat, N. C.

As a friend of Rev. Ernest Trice Thompson, D.D., as a teacher of the Bible Class in Sunday School for more than twenty years, as a minister of the Presbyterian Church, and as host of the General Assembly at Mon-treat, I am constrained to write a word of protest against Doctor Thompson's article on the Sunday School lesson for November 17 as published in the Presbyterian Standard of November 6.

In a spirit of love I protest against "Its Application in Our Own Day." First, on account of its misleading and inaccurate statements. In the closing paragraph Doctor Thompson writes: "At the last meeting of our General Assembly there were included about five colored commissioners, ministers of the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. They met together with their white brethren in the business of the Lord, but in the great Auditorium at Montreat they sat off to themselves, in a corner. And they did not eat in the dining room with the other commissioners, even at a separate table. The writer understands, though he may be wrong, that they ate in the kitchen. Would Jesus have approved of such treatment?"
Anyone who knows anything of the Anderson Auditorium at Montreat, knows it has no corners and one seat is as good as another. There were no assignments of any seats to the colored brethren alluded to. They sat together in a place of their own choice near the pulpit.
They had as good seats as any in the Auditorium and doubtless sat together because they liked their own company. They were assigned by the Management of Mon-treat to one of the main dining rooms in the Alba Hotel and were served the same meals as were served the white commissioners.

Montreat has been conspicuous, not only for its fair, but also brotherly treatment of the colored people. They are charged no admission fees at the gate and they are welcome at all times to all of the conferences in the main Auditorium, and they frequently speak from our platform during the conference period. Preaching and Sunday School are provided for them every Sunday in the main Auditorium, and receptions are given to them in the Winsborough Building where the white people have their receptions. Doctor Thompson was present at the meeting of the Assembly and if he saw any unchristian treatment of the colored brethren, or suspected such a thing, why was he not kind enough to call this fact to the attention of the Management of Montreat or to the General Assembly itself. Surely, Doctor Thompson is hard pressed in citing Montreat and the General Assembly as illustrations of non-christian treatment of our colored brethren, and why he should make a misleading statement touching this matter in expounding the Scriptures to be taught in our Sabbath Schools, is beyond my comprehension.

Second, I protest because of the manifest inconsistency of the article. It is inconsistent to condemn others for things in which we ourselves indulge. Would Doctor Thompson have these same colored brethren, were they in Richmond on church business, to sit at his table or even at a separate table in his dining room at the meal hour? Would he invite colored people to dine with his family in his own home? If it is un-christian for others not to do such things, why is it not un-christian for him not to do such things?

Third, I protest against this article because of its indiscretion. The object of our Sunday School lesson is to secure better feeling between the races, but the citation of injustices and harsh arraignment of one race and the apparent complete justification of the other race in its actions and prejudices, tends to stir up strife. In discussing the educational advantages and disadvantages that white people are giving the colored race, why was no mention made of the millions of dollars given by white people to establish great universities and colleges throughout the South for our colored friends, and why was no mention made of the millions paid out of the taxes of white people for colored public schools in excess of the taxes paid by colored people for these schools? Why was no mention made of what is being done by the churches in their benevolences to assist the colored people, such as the gift of the Woman's last Birthday Offering to Stillman Institute at Tuscaloosa?

Fourth, I protest against this article because it logically advocates social intermingling and marriage between the races. Doctor Thompson surely does not mean to say that the Bible encouraged the Children of Israel to intermarry with other races, nor does he deny the fact that intermarriage was a menace to their existence and usefulness. Neither race desires social intermingling and marriage, because both alike believe it best to keep the races separate and distinct.

Rev. B. M. Palmer, D.D., in an address at the Commencement Exercises of Washington & Lee University in 1872, made the statement: "If I were a black man I would plead for a pure black race as I am now pleading for a pure white race." Christian love expresses itself in the highest service in keeping the races separate.

By all means justice should characterize both races in their dealing with one another and there are no apologies made for injustice wherever found. Christian love should express itself in every possible way of service in mutual helpfulness and we believe the heart of the Christian, whether white or black, is seeking to attain this end to the mutual benefit of each other.

A DUTY AND A PRIVILEGE

W. F. Carter, Attorney-at-Law

I consider it a privilege and an opportunity to serve on the Committee of the Ministers' Annuity Fund of the Mount Airy Presbyterian Church.

I am in thorough sympathy with the plan proposed and have been reading, with great interest, the articles that have appeared in the church papers in reference to it. This is a cause that has been sadly neglected for all these years and I sincerely trust that the members of the Southern Presbyterian Church will not only rise to their duty but joyfully claim their privilege in this movement.

son — On November 17 the first service was held in the new church. The sermon text was "When the days are passed, behold all things are become old many friends from other churches, as well as from out of town, were present to rejoice with the congregation in entering the new building. The pastor called attention to the fact that the church had been built in the year 1881, so that it was the first time in 48 years that the congregation had worshipped in a new church building of its own. Two persons were present who had been present at the first service in the old church 48 years ago. They were Mrs. Redding Perry, of Roanoke city, and Mrs. Thad Manning, of Roanoke N. C.

Six months and five days had elapsed from the time that the last service was held in the old building to the time that the first service was held in the new building.

The session declared its appreciation of the faithfulness and effective work of the Church Building Commission which consists of Mr. I. B. Watkins, Chairman; J. C. Cooper, Mr. J. W. Beck, Mr. G. W. Goode, Mrs. Goode Cheatham, Mrs. R. G. Kittrell and T. S. Royster.

Appreciation was also expressed for the work of Mr. L. Linthicum, the architect, and for Mr. John Heuay, the contractor, and for Mr. I. W. Heuay, the foreman. The Committee and the congregation are especially grateful to the contractor and foreman for the quality of their work, for the rapidity with which they carried it through to completion as well as for the accommodating spirit that they showed throughout.

The new building is of a colonial design, constructed of quality of red brick with white columns and with white wood-work. It is surmounted by a well-designed and truly beautiful steeple and the part of the structure harmonizes in a marked manner. Besides having three front doors there are two rear entrances.

From the front, approach is gained up a gradual wide steps that are bordered by a balustrade of wrought iron rail. After crossing the porch enters a vestibule that stretches across the front of the church underneath the balcony. The auditorium is intended to seat about 285 people and connects by a door on either side of the building with the Sunday School building which is an integral part of the structure.

The first floor contains the church auditorium the main room, the pastor's study, the Woman's Auxiliary room, the primary department and a class room, and entered from either the front, the side, or the rear of the building.

The second floor contains the main Sunday School room or social hall, with a platform so that plays or pageants can be easily given. In it are located the beginners' department, the roll room, three classrooms and three rest rooms, besides a well arranged kitchen. Entrance to this floor may be gained from either the Young Street side or the Young Street side of the building.

The third floor contains the junior and intermediate assembly rooms and classrooms as well as the rest room.

The basement contains the furnace, which is equipped with a Petro Oil Burner that has been found to be very efficient in heating the building.

On the first moving into the new church building it was decided to use the old church furniture in the Sunday School assembly room on the ground floor as a temporary measure. A preliminary order for new Sunday School furniture has been placed and will be known as the Edward Hines Memorial. It is expected that the church auditorium will be furnished by the gift of memorial pews. Several new pews have already been spoken for and a handsome pulpit with mahogany chairs and a table are being given by the Cooper family in memory of Mr. Jimmie Cooper, who was a member of years a deacon and a most faithful member of the Presbyterian Church.

FOREIGN MISSIONS

Business of the Executive Committee

There is a demand every once in a while for some detailed information as to how the Southern Presbyterian Church is organized to handle its great Foreign Mission enterprise, and how through this organization the work is administered. A concise statement about the organization, program and personnel of the agencies of our Church is given for information. The names of workers at home and abroad are published on fixed dates when the whole Church is asked to remember them in prayer. The new feature is a brief devotional service for each week which will greatly help individuals and families who use the PRAYER CALENDAR in their daily devotions. The tent owned by the Synod was used in two meetings, and the way paved for an organization in one of these places. In the other place the membership of the church was doubled.

Through the use of the cotton-acre-plan several of the churches are planning to improve their church plants this fall.

The Woman's Auxiliary of Harmony Presbytery has established a Church and Manse Fund. The men of this Presbytery have approved the establishment of a Church and Manse Erection League. These two factors we believe will mean much for the advancement of the Church.

The two Presbyteries, Harmony and Pee Dee, by stressing Home Missions and Evangelism and every church having a pastor, are steadily increasing in membership.

responsibilities imposed upon it. A mere glimpse into this organization and some of its major problems frequently answers questions which arise in people's minds, and helps the Church in general to appreciate some of the difficulties facing the management of an enterprise so widely varied in its work as a Foreign Board.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. has entrusted its benevolent and promotional work to what has been called the Assembly's Work Committee. Twelve of the forty-four members of the Assembly's Work Committee have been designated as the Executive Committee of Foreign Missions and to these twelve has been delegated full responsibility for the successful conduct of the Church's Foreign Mission work. These twelve members are: Rev. Jas. I. Vance, Chairman, Nashville, Tenn.; Revs. W. L. Caldwell, Nashville, Tenn.; William Crowe, St. Louis, Mo.; M. E. Melvin, Fulton, Mo.; Jasper K. Smith, Shreveport, La.; Messrs. H. F. Kimmons, Water Valley, Miss.; J. P. McCallie, Chattanooga, Tenn.; A. D. Mason, Memphis, Tenn.; H. E. Ravenel, Sparanburg, S. C.; George M. White, Nashville, Tenn.; Mrs. M. C. Buckner, Nashville, Tenn.; Mrs. W. A. Turner, Jr., Newnan, Ga.

Handling the work directly under these twelve committeemen are four Secretaries and a Treasurer as follows: Rev. E. W. Smith, Executive Secretary; Rev. J. O. Reavis, Field and Candidate Secretary; Mr. E. D. Grant, Educational Secretary; Rev. C. D. Fulton, Field Secretary; Mr. E. F. Willis, Treasurer.

Purpose

This Committee administers the Church offerings in money and life for the purpose of evangelizing the 36,000,000 people in definite sections of Africa, Brazil, China, Japan, Korea, and Mexico, for whose evangelization the Church has officially assumed responsibility. While the other Church agencies deal mainly with those who have known the gospel from childhood the Church through this agency lifts its eyes from its own territory where on the average every third person is a Protestant church member, and looks on the white harvest fields beyond, where, in our section of Brazil for example, the evangelical church members are but one in every 800 and in our section of China less than one in every 1,000. It is through this agency that the Church shares with its Master that mighty task which lay ever closest and heaviest on His heart, the carrying of the gospel to the millions yet unreached.

Method

The Committee meets bi-monthly in two-day sessions, is opened with Scripture reading and a circle of prayer, each member and officer in turn supplicating God's guidance and blessing, under the solemn realization that the actions they take and the decisions they reach will be felt not only in the home Church but unto the ends of the earth.

The business requiring Committee action that has been accumulating since the previous meetings from the nine Missions abroad, from the missionaries at home, and from various other sources, is distributed among the four Sub-Committees, the Executive Committee taking long recess to give the Sub-Committees time to thoroughly digest and prepare their written reports and recommendations. One or more of the Committee officers sit with each Sub-Committee as advisory, but non-voting, members. These Sub-Committees are in session for many hours during the two day sessions and often far into the night. Their names and duties are as follows:

1. Committee on Candidates and Recruits. This Sub-Committee examines, and makes recommendations upon, all applicants who desire to enter the Foreign Mission service, has oversight of all examinations therefor, and of the training of all appointees.

2. Committee on Education. This Sub-Committee oversees and makes recommendations upon the organic and progressive cultivation along missionary lines of the home constituency in its various organizations, Sunday School, young people, and the like, including textbook study, conference work, leadership training schools, and all deputational work by missionaries on furlough.

3. Committee on Business and Finance. This Sub-Committee reports and makes recommendations concerning the annual budget and all expenditures, and has oversight, under the guidance of the chief medical examiner, of the health of the missionaries.

4. Committee on Fields. The Sub-Committee oversees and makes recommendations upon the conduct of the work on all the foreign fields, its policies, problems, institutions, personnel, medical, educational, industrial, evangelistic. In a few matters that are both administrative and financial Sub-Committees "3" and "4" act jointly.

The four-Sub-Committee reports are presented in writing to the whole Committee and each item and recommendation, as read, is considered and acted upon by the Committee.

Temporary and Special Committees are appointed as needed to transact special business or to study and report upon special phases of the work.

The four Nashville members of the Committee, with Doctor McCallie of Chattanooga constitute an Ad Interim Committee to act on such business as cannot wait until the next regular meeting of the Executive Committee.

Lesson for December 8th

HELPING NEIGHBORS IN NEED

Mt. 25:31-46; Lk. 10:25-7; James 1:27;
James 2:14-17. Print Mt. 25:31-46.

We are studying this quarter some of the social teachings of the Bible. It was almost inevitable that one of these lessons should have to do with helping neighbors in need. For there is hardly any single duty that is impressed upon us more often in both the Old Testament and New Testament. We will confine our attention, however, to the four passages that are assigned us for our study. Read them in order Mt. 25:31-46; Lk. 10:25-37; James 1:27; 2:14-17.

Perhaps we can best develop our topic by considering three questions: (1) Who are our neighbors? (2) Why should we help them? (3) How can we help them?

I. Who Are Our Neighbors?

That was the question that a young lawyer asked of Jesus. The Master was making for Jerusalem. In one of the villages on the way a certain lawyer stood up and made trial of him, saying, Teacher, what shall I do to inherit eternal life? And he said unto him, What is written in the Law? How readest thou? And he answering said, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thyself. And he said unto him, Thou hast answered right: this do, and thou shalt live. But he, desiring to justify himself, or as Moffat translates the passage, anxious to make an excuse for himself, said to Jesus: And who is my neighbor?

This, of course, is the crucial question. We are all of us willing to help our neighbor if we can choose our neighbor. We do as a matter of fact love our family, our friends, but Jesus says Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. The all-important question then as the young lawyer was quick to see is, "And who is my neighbor?"

Jesus in reply told the story of the good Samaritan. "A certain man was going down from Jerusalem to Jericho; and he fell among robbers, who both stripped him and beat him, and departed, leaving him half dead." A priest passed by on the other side; then a Levite. Finally there came along a certain Samaritan. We miss the point of the story, of course, unless we remember that the Jews despised the Samaritans, and had no dealings with them, in large part because they were heretics, their theology was badly twisted. The Samaritan, however, was moved with compassion when he saw the wounded man. He came to him, and bound up his wounds, and set him on his own beast, and took him to an inn, and there provided for his care. "And Jesus said, which of these three, thinkest thou, proved neighbor unto him that fell among the robbers? And he said, He that showed mercy on him. And Jesus said unto him, Go and do thou likewise."

Jesus said in effect: It is not a question of kinship or friendship. The definition of a neighbor is a definition of need. Wherever there is a need which in anyway we can help to relieve there in God's sight is our neighbor. He seems to say in addition, The proper question is not "And who is my neighbor?" but rather, "And to whom can I be a neighbor?" If this is true we find our neighbors in many quarters: It may be among the rich or the poor, the black or the white; it may be in the house across the street, or a house in the slums; it may be in a factory town, or out in the open country among the tenants; it may be back in the mountains; or across the sea. The world has shrunk in recent years. Communications come so quickly, there are so many ways that we can translate a good will into helpful action, that the opportunities are almost without limit. The Samaritan saw the robbed man as he walked along the road to Jericho. Countless needs are brought to our attention as we read our morning mail, as we scan the newspaper.

And there are a great variety of needs. Jesus in Mt. 25 mentions some of the elemental human needs of his day, the need of food, of clothing, of shelter, of human sympathy and help, of those who are sick, or in prison. Do we find such needy folk today? Where? Are there any such in your community?

An Associated Press despatch of the date on which this lesson is written (November 16) says: "Reports depicting new industrial and old agricultural conditions of the Piedmont District of the Southeast have been made public by government bureaus. One portrays the destitution of 100,000 white families living on average incomes of $310 per year for each family of five . . . (This report) by the Department of Agriculture is a story of indigence of a people who have clung to cotton production on land overrun by the boll weevil, badly eroded, and in need of a fertilizer. Only a third of them the report sets out, 'grow as much as ten acres of cotton and only a third of those who grow cotton get as much as half a bale to the acre.' The Piedmont section includes parts of North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia and Alabama. Continuing, the Department of Agriculture said that the farmers 'not knowing whether they might improve their condition by farming elsewhere or by going into occupations other than their farming, have continued to farm in the neighborhoods where they are acquainted and in the way their parents farmed and they have adjusted their standards of living to an income which in many cases is less than that of the cheapest industrial labor.' A fourth of them it is added, 'have so little capital that they must contract to pay half of what they produce to landlords who furnish the mule and tools to work with, the land to farm, and the houses to live in.' 'One fifth of all the families surveyed lived in two or three rooms.' Are these people our neighbors in the sense defined by Jesus?

"There is no experience more poignant and heartbreaking," declared James Addams recently, "than those connected with old age when it is surrounded by poverty and indifference and given over to neglect and loneliness."

The following story taken from the report of the California Commission on Old Age, illustrates the difficulties which aged workers encounter: "Thomas Harkins has passed his 69th birthday. He lived all his life in California. He worked for 25 years for a well established lumber company. As he grew older the former superintendent took him off the heavy work and gave him responsibility for the care of tools, janitor in office, etc. About nine years ago a new management took over the mill and arbitrarily placed a deadline at 55 years, discharging everyone over that age. Hawkins was stunned, the mill had been his life for 25 years; so he hung on, lying about his age, as he frankly admits. His old friends at the mill did not betray him, because they knew he needed the work, and could do it. One day a new man noticed him at work and reported an old man in the place. He was called into the office and dismissed. For years now the old man has depended upon the $10 from the county and such odd jobs as he can find. Every old resident of the town knows his willingness to work, and sympathizes with him, but there is nothing to be done."

The Information Service of the Federal Council continues: "The difficulties confronting the aged today are largely a result of the modern mechanization of industry with its concomitants of specialization, speed and strain. The introduction of each new machine involves the discharge of men. Since the older workers find it harder to adjust themselves to new processes of work they are the first to be 'let out.' It is now an established fact that modern American industry does not want men and women past middle age. Many of our large industrial concerns have a frank and above board rule against the employment of new workers who have passed the age of 40 or 55; in some instances the age is set as low as 35 and even 25. The problems of the aged is especially acute in the United States. The first study of aged dependency in the United States was made in 1908-9 by the Massachusetts Commission on Old Pensions, Annuities and Insurance. Basing his calculations upon this report L. W. Squier in his book, "Old Age Dependency in the United States," published in 1912, estimated that approximately 1,250,000 persons 65 years of age and over in the United States depend upon public and private charity. Until a few years ago methods of provision for our aged consisted of the almshouse, outdoor relief, private and church philanthropy, and individual assistance from friends, relatives, or total strangers. Except in a few states these still remain the prevailing methods. The poorhouse has long been recognized as a social disgrace and a symbol of the deepest humiliation. The poor laws of most of our states are modeled after the Elizabethan poor law system of 1601, and in many instances have remained unchanged for more than a century. At this writing old age pension laws are on the statute book of California, Colorado, Kentucky, Maryland, Minnesota, Montana, Nevada, Utah, Wisconsin, Wyoming, and the Territory of Alaska (only). While the movement for adequate old age security in the United States is still in its infancy, 38 other countries and states have adopted some form of old age protection for all, or certain classes of their wage-earners. Considerably more than one-third the entire population of the world and more than half the civilized world, are now covered by various forms of governmental system of old age protection. China, India, and the United States are the only large countries, still remaining without modern national forms of provision for old age. Of the industrial countries the United States stands alone in applying early 17th century remedies to 20th century ills." And the increasing number of aged for whose future no just or adequate provision is made, and who under our present system cannot possibly provide for their own future, are these our neighbors as Jesus used the word?

"Teach the ten commandments and provide playgrounds!"—so one might summarize the counsel of Frank L. Loesch, veteran crime fighter, as given in reply to a question as to how the increase of crime among the young might be curbed. Mr. Loesch, 76-year old president of the crime commission, member of President Hoover's Crime Commission, first assistant state's attorney of Illinois, and a devoted public servant, was speaking before the first session of a course on "The Technique of Citizenship" course being conducted by the City Club of Chicago. "Nine-tenths of our crime in Chicago is due primarily to poverty and poor environment," said Mr. Loesch. "If we had playgrounds every four blocks in the city's congested areas it would practically wipe out potential gangs and crime." Are the myriad of young people growing up in the slums of our cities, in some of our southern mill villages, on the farms of poor tenants, without adequate time or provision for education and recreation, are these young people our neighbor in Jesus' sense of the term?

II. Why Should We Help Our Neighbor?

This is a question that some will be inclined to ask.

There is so much in life to interest us, to amuse us so much that demands our time and attention, and is so much need, why should we take the time to bother to fool with such people,—there are so many more than we can possibly help, and some of them are themselves responsible for their troubles, in part, a Our Scripture passage suggest four reasons at least.

1. Love of man requires it. Jesus said the second commandment is, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." And the word 'love' used here does not mean affection for, it means 'to seek the welfare of' as defined in the parable of the good Samaritan that James the Lord's brother says: If a brother or sister is naked and in lack of daily food, and one of you sees them, Go in peace, be ye warmed and filled; and give them not the things heedful to the body; will it profit?" James 2:15-16. In other words love, like mercy, must prove itself in works. It doesn't mean merely to wish our brother well if we are not actually ministering to his needs. We need to put our words of James. We go to picture shows. We read newspapers. Our sympathies are aroused for human suffering. We feel somehow that we have manifested our interest, our concern for, the needy. The words of James are like a tonic.

2. Love of God requires it. John the beloved says: "He that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, cannot love God whom he hath not seen." 1 John 4:20. No doubt he learned this truth from Jesus who taught us in effect that love for God and love for man cannot be separated.

3. Love for Christ requires it. In Mt. 25 Jesus says that at the last judgment all men shall be divided into two groups. One group shall enter the kingdom. "I was hungry, and ye gave me to eat. I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink. I was naked, and ye clothed me. I was sick, and ye visited me. I was in prison, and ye came unto me." The other group shall be cast into everlasting punishment. "Inasmuch as ye did not do these things unto me, ye shall not enter into the kingdom." Here Jesus identifies himself here with all needy men and women. The neglect of their needs is in effect a neglect of the Master that merits eternal condemnation.

4. Love of self requires it. As just pointed out, Jesus says that our eternal destiny is decided by our attitude toward our neighbor in need. This is not an arbitrary judgment. Men who fail to develop altruistic impulses do not deserve to live through the ages. God is interested in the preservation of human life. The man who shuts his ears to appeals of need, who neglects the moral and spiritual values which the gift of eternal life.

We come then to the third question

III. How Can We Help Our Neighbor?

There are many ways, of course. More than a dozen are listed here.

1. First of all we may help by personal service. The exact form that such service will take depends upon the nature of the need. Sometimes it will be a visit to the sick, the shut ins. Sometimes it will be help given to a needy family, food, or personal attention of one sort or another. It may be the practise of hospitality in our homes. It may be a gift to a beggar on the road, though this is not often wise. It may be a word of sympathy, or of appreciation, 'a hand upon the shoulder in a friendly sort of way.' Perhaps a thoughtful courtesy.

Some of us are in professions or business where opportunities come frequently in the course of our work. That is true of the minister, the doctor, the social worker, and other professions as well. There are few of us who do not meet such opportunities, occasionally in connection with our regular job, or ever that may be. At such times much of the value of service depends upon the spirit in which it is done. But there are many needs which we cannot meet by such personal service.

2. So we note secondly that many needs we can meet only through gifts of charity. What a wonderful thing money is. By it we can multiply our personalities a hundred fold: we can minister to the needy in the slums of our great cities, and in the recesses of the Allegheny and in the famine stricken regions of China. In Riverside, there are 39 different charities participating in the Community Chest rendering professional service to those who need such service, preventing need as well as relieving it. And those of us who give to the drive for progress help in the activities of all these organizations. Organized Charity, Near East Relief, China Famine Relief, the benevolent work of our own church, what opportunities these afford for those who have the heart. What charitable organizations are there in your community? What social organizations whose work is constructive and preventive rather than palliative? Have the funds that they need?

3. There are other needs, however, and some of the greatest, that can be helped only by organized action. Most of us cannot help men, women and children living in poverty in our southland, without a real life, either by our personal services, or by the

These were the first words I rd Georgia McIlwaine speak, and they showed some of the finest traits in her character. She ageous, full of humor, indomitable. For it was 1920, six months after her arrival in Japan, and ys before she had bravely survived a most critical . A cold, miserable, sea-sick voyage across the nd a fourteen-hour trip on a tiny coast-boat in hat penetrated to the marrow, brought her to home down in an out of the way corner of Japan Year's Day. The heavy cold contracted on the became pneumonia in less than a week, and from the ten years of her missionary life were a gal- ggle against disease. Our loving thought of her was at of the brown-eyed three-year-old who said ving face, "I've come to see Georgia. She is one orite people!" She could think of so many things others. One of her letters to her mother speaks spent from nine-thirty until one that morning 'The Rise of the Dutch Republic' to a lonely, erican neighbor. Of her cooking-class e wrote, "I'm praying every day for the indi- vation of every lady by name. of them made his daughter give up her job in the cotton mill and go home, so that he could get her away from her Christian friends. Georgia wrote of her, "She has the most naive and childlike faith I've ever encountered in a Japanese, and has brought at least twenty of her friends to the chapel. She has almost never missed a night meeting. At the communion service the other night I sat and wept salt ears, partly of joy and happiness for the three girls who were baptized, and partly of grief for Kawamura San who had looked forward so eagerly to being baptized, too." She was much concerned for her servant's salvation, and when taken to the hospital the last time she said, "I hope that Father can reach her at morning prayers this summer. If so, I shall not mind this pain which takes me away from all of you."

Georgia Elizabeth McIlwaine was born while her Vermont parents, Charles and Elizabeth Hulett Gifford, were visiting Marietta, Georgia, in 1891. She was graduated with honor from the University of Vermont in 1914. She was brilliantly intellectual, the only woman of our Mission who has held a Phi Beta Kappa key. For five years she taught English at Mount Hermon, Massachusetts, and while there she met her future husband, William A. McIlwaine, of Japan, who was a fellow teacher. I have spoken naturally of her parents in this article, but her father and mother and the two brothers went before her many years ago. She was a true and loving daughter in her husband's family. The first years of her missionary life were spent in Kochi, the town where the elder McIlwaines have lived for nearly forty years. Later she went to Nagoya, the third city in the Japanese Empire. Early in the past summer she became ill, rapidly declining until she was ordered to return to America for an operation as the only hope of saving her life. The ocean voyage was passed safely, but after one night on the train the brave, patient, unselfish spirit was set free, and she entered the land where there is no suffering.

As we think of our two young friends on that last sad journey it comforts us to repeat in our hearts verses from the Scripture passages they read together then: He that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty. . . . He shall give His angels charge over thee to keep thee in all thy ways. . . . I will be with him in trouble. . . . My soul waiteth for the Lord more than they that watch for the morning, that watch for the morning!

Twice in a few brief months our Mission has been sorely stricken. Of all the sweet, devoted women among us no two were more beloved than Patty Logan and Georgia McIlwaine. When we think of our decreasing numbers, of the inroads that age and death are making in our little band, we are tempted to falter, to feel that the task is too great for the few who remain. But the answer comes in a bit of Georgia's handwriting found on the back of a used envelope after her death,—"Though this has come upon us, let not our hearts be turned back, or our steps go out of the way!"

Shall we and our Church be faithful to this high charge?

DISTRICT CONFERENCE

Fayetteville Presbytery

The third district conference of the Fayetteville Presbyterial met with the Philadelphia Presbyterian Church on Wednesday, November 13. Mrs. J. P. Wiggins, of Maxton, presided over the meeting, to which all of the auxiliaries in the district, except one, had sent delegates. Mrs. Wiggins responded to the welcome given by the president of the local auxiliary. Rev. Neil McInnis, pastor of the Philadelphia Church led the devotional, after which the reports from the Presbyterial Secretaries were given.

The conference was very glad to have as guests Mrs. Lacy Little, who brought an inspiring message from the mission field in China, and Mr. Watts, a ministerial student at Maxton Presbyterian College, who presented the needs of the mountain people with whom he has worked.

Mrs. Fairly, president of the Presbyterial spoke on the duties of the president, and conducted a very helpful open forum.

Mrs. C. C. Adams, Mr. Wilton Barnes, and the Presbyterial College quartette, composed of Messrs. Carl Adams, Wilton Barnes, Barney McLean, and Dexter Garrison furnished special music at both morning and afternoon sessions.

WHITE CROSS WORK IN RED RIVER PRESBYTERIAL

An Open Letter

My Dear —:

I am giving you my experience with White Cross Work in Red River Presbyterial.

As Presbyterial President I have had a fine chance to work out my own method of procedure and so have been able to present White Cross Work as forcefully as I wished to do in the Presbyterial. First, at the Presbyterial meeting I had the Foreign Missions Secretary present the cause and explain that White Cross work is a love offering, over and above the regular offering to the cause of Foreign Missions, and so has no place in the Auxiliary budget. Then I follow up her talk and appeal, with one (Continued on Page 11)

YOUNG PEOPLE'S TOPIC

Sunday, December 8—What Christ Has to Give Youth Today.—References: Hebrews 4:14-16; Matthew 4:1-11.

C. G. A.

For the Leader

There are people in the world who think that when they are old they will start being good Christians. Youth, they say, is the time when one should enjoy life without having to be "religious." When they have gotten so old that they cannot enjoy being "wild," they will be good Christians—and go to church. Old heads cannot be put on young shoulders we know, and we are glad of that. But does being a Christian mean that we must be old and stodgy? Does Christianity only say to us "Thou shalt not?" What a negative philosophy of life such a religion would result in. Buddhism will satisfy such people a great deal more than Christianity, because in Buddhism the highest one can go is to cease to desire. But in Christianity—never! Let us think of some of the reasons Christianity should appeal to young people.

Jesus and Youth

How did Jesus look upon youth? Did he say to them, "Some day when you are old, you may be of great service to me?" No. Over and over again he said, "Follow me," or "Arise." And when he spoke to youth, he spoke to his own generation, for Jesus himself was a young man. We do not ordinarily think of him as being young because of his great wisdom and because "he was a man of sorrows" and because he had so much to contend with during his stay on earth. But he was young and we as young people can study the life of this Jesus and know that he is as old and as young as we are. Our lack of age does not crowd us out of the world's work, but rather increases our responsibility.

Jesus and Temptation

"For we have not a high priest that cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but one that hath been in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin." Jesus, a young man, was tempted like we are. And, no doubt, some of us have been thinking that he doesn't understand our peculiar case. We feel that no one ever had the same kind of temptations that we have—that they are peculiar to us. But there aren't many temptations that we haven't all experienced—though the temptation may have had on a different uniform for each of us. Being tempted is no sin. We cannot help wanting to do things that are shady, or worse, but we most assuredly can help doing them. No one can make us do wrong. That is up to each of us and we cannot push the responsibility over to some one else. There is a way to victory over each temptation, because God knows just how much we can stand, and will not let us be tempted beyond our strength, and will with each temptation show us the way to victory. Jesus taught us to pray, "Lead us not into temptation" because he was young and knew the force of temptation. He knows that the flesh is weak—he, himself, was tempted like as we are, yet without sin.

Jesus and Friendliness

What has Jesus to give young people today in the way of friendship? Friendship is always sought after, and today international friendship is stressed in every paper we pick up. Jesus was himself a very friendly person—a winning personality. What did he do toward making friendship international? Did he just tell us to love all men without doing it himself? Of course, he didn't. The Jews hated the Samaritans and had no dealings with the Samaritans—what did Jesus do about it? You remember how he won the Samaritan woman there at the well, and the Canaanitish woman, whose daughter he healed, loved him, and he chose as the hero of one of his best known parables a Samaritan. He was friendly toward rich and poor, toward children and grown people. "He had compassion on the multitude because they wandered as sheep having no shepherd." This Jesus will be our friend today, and as we listen to him, he will show us how to be friendly with all the many colors and races and nationalities.

What Christ Has to Give Youth Today

What has Christ to give us as young people today? First, understanding—sympathetic understanding. Second, ability to conquer temptations; and third, a friendly, winning personality like his own. And over all and through all—love. We count our blessings usually as coming from God the Father—our blessings in material things. Christ is more personal to us. He is an individual who does more than love us—he teaches us how to love each other and makes us like himself. "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another as I have loved you."

THE SHOW IN THE OLD BARN

I walked through the rain to Bill's house and was just going to climb up over the kitchen roof to his room when I saw his mother looking at me. So I did the right thing and knocked on the door.

"Is Bill home?" I asked.

"He's in the barn," was the answer.

When I got to the barn, I didn't know it. The old wagon had been moved from the middle of the floor to one end, and the wheels hung with curtains so that you couldn't see under it. There were boxes and barrels in front of it fixed like seats. I looked around for Bill, but I couldn't find him. So I hollered.

"What do you want?" came Bill's voice.

"Where are you?"

"Under the stage."

"What stage?"

"The wagon, dummy. Can't you see it's fixed up like a stage?"

I looked at it again but all I could see different from an ordinary wagon were the curtains on the wheels. But I've learned not to argue with Bill, so I lifted up the curtains and looked underneath. Bill had a saw in his hands.

"What are you doing, Bill?" I asked.

"Cutting a trap door in the wagon," he said. I must have looked puzzled, I guess, because he went on to explain: "It's for a trick that I'm going to do this afternoon."

"What's this afternoon?" I asked.

"A show," he answered, "I got tired watching the rain this morning so I decided to have one at two o'clock."

"Who's going to be the actors?"

"We are."

"We are?" I repeated, in surprise. "What are we going to do?"

"Well, I'm going to be a magician. I know some tricks with handkerchiefs and flags so I can act by myself for a little while. But when I come to the Princess trick, I'll need your help."

I had never heard of the Princess trick before, so I listened carefully while he told me what it was. I was supposed to get in a big box placed directly over the trap door, and when Bill said "Hocus Pocus" and hit the lid of a boiler with a piece of kindling wood, I had to pull the rope and drop down between the wheels of the wagon.

"Will you do it?" asked Bill.

"Sure," I told him. "I'll do anything on a rainy afternoon like this. Do I have to dress up like a girl?"

"No, I don't think so."

"It'll be a funny Princess trick if I don't," I said. "Everybody will laugh when I first come on the stage."

"All right," he said. "Maybe my mother can let you take some of her old clothes."

"Who's coming to this show, anyway?" I asked, "Skinny Martley?"

"No, not that fellow," said Bill. "If he comes, he'll spoil everything. So I sent invitations to everybody we know but him. Remember what he did last time?"

I remembered and shivered. I could still feel the cold water running down my back. Skinny was all right in lots of ways, but at shows he wouldn't keep quiet and lots of times he would break it up just out of spite.

At one o'clock the people started to arrive, and Bill was kept busy trying to keep them from looking under the wagon. He gave me the signal that maybe we'd have to start the performance a little early, so I went in the house and asked his mother for some clothes that would make me look like a Princess.

"Nothing would make you look that way, Toby," she laughed. "But I'll give you a dress and a hat that will make you look like the Princess' grandmother. How will that be?"

I said I'd put on what she gave me, regardless of how I looked. She fixed me up pretty good and sent me back to the barn, and when I got there, maybe I wasn't surprised to see Skinny Bartley sitting on one of the front boxes.

Bill was behind the wagon getting ready.

"Who let Skinny in?" I asked.

"I did," answered Bill, "I couldn't help it."

"But I thought you didn't send him an invitation?"

"I didn't. But he got hold of one belonging to somebody else. I wouldn't have let him in even at that if he hadn't promised to keep still."

"That's what he always promises."

Well, we couldn't help it, and Bill said so. A few minutes later he climbed up on the wagon and said:

"Ladies and gentlemen, my first trick will be with two handkerchiefs."

He took two large white handkerchiefs and tied a corner of each of them together. Then he passed them around so that everybody could see that the knot was a good one. After everybody was satisfied, he took the handkerchiefs, pulled them apart and showed that they weren't tied to each other at all, but to a large American flag between them.

That got a good round of applause from everybody but Skinny. He put his hand to his mouth and made a noise like a mule.

"Haw, haw!"

Bill didn't pay any attention to him but went on with his next trick, which was a good one about making smoke come out of a glass of water. Even this did not impress Skinny. From where I was behind the stage I could hear him haw-haw again, and I heard him do it after every trick that Bill did, whether it worked or not.

"All right, Skinny," Bill said finally.

"The next one is going to be a special."

"What do I care?" said Skinny, "if it's as bad as the ones you've already done, it will be terrible."

"If you don't want to watch it, you can go home," said Bill.

"I'll watch it. Go ahead."

"Well, ladies and gentlemen, this is the famous Princess trick, where I make a lady disappear in full view of the audience."

He stopped to let that sink in. Then he said:

"First I want you to examine this large box. You will see that it has a bottom, three sides and a top. The fourth side is open and facing the audience."

As he talked he rapped the sides of the box with a stick he was using for a wand, but he didn't rap the bottom, because the box didn't have any. It was resting on the trap door.

"Next, ladies and gentlemen, I want to introduce the Princess!"

Up walked I on the stage, and maybe everybody didn't laugh!

"Ah there, Toby," called Skinny.

I didn't pay any attention to him, because I was acting.

"The Princess will crawl in the box and I will draw a curtain over the front. Then I will wave my wand, beat three times on this lid with a piece of wood, draw aside the curtain, and the Princess will be gone. This is our last trick, ladies and gentlemen. After it is over, we bid you one and all, good afternoon."

I stooped down and got in the box, knocking off my hat as I did so. Bill drew the curtain and I was all set to pull the trap on myself when I heard Skinny say something about waiting a minute.

"Even if you do this trick,"

"Nobody will believe it."

"Why not?" asked Bill.

"Because Toby is an actor."

"What do you mean, an actor?"

"I mean you and Toby have all made up between you."

"Sure we have," replied Bill. "I don't think the trick wouldn't anyway. It would."

"Could you make me disappear instead of Toby?"

For a moment Bill was stuck. He said: "If you let me tie your hands and legs so you can't hold on to the sides of the box, yes."

That made Skinny stop and think. Finally, realizing that he couldn't out now, he agreed, and Bill came out of the box to help tie me up.

"Go under the wagon and the trap door when I give the signal," he whispered to me. "When I give the signal, jump on him and stuff the handkerchief into his mouth. Hold him there until the crowd gets out."

So while Bill was helping Skinny get into the box, I went under the wagon. When he gave the signal, I pulled the rope, and I'll never forget the surprised look on Skinny's face as he hit the ground with a bang. As I jumped on him, I heard the noise of the scuffle; then everybody gasped as he pulled the curtain and showed that Skinny was in the box any longer.

The first thing he said when I pulled him up and took the gag out of his mouth was:

"Gosh—that was a fine trick."

of our money. There come times, however, when we can throw our influence, our votes, on the side of social action. America is the only great industrial nation that does not provide for its workers worn out in toil because Christian people are not yet sufficiently interested in the matter. Bills to meet such needs, or to survey the field, die in legislatures and in Congress because they receive no support from Christian men and women. Great cities are developing in our Southland with no adequate provision being made for recreation for future generations because pressure is not brought upon the city fathers to provide proper facilities while they can be provided. We have inadequate child labor laws in the South, inadequate protection for women in industry because we have not realized that religion has anything to do with such matters. What needs are there that can be relieved only by organized social action in your own community, your own state? What should we do about it?

Fresh and crisp in his new green attire, the dollar lay folded in the Churchman's billfold. Jangling about with the pennies and nickles, a little dime played.

"You'd better have a good time," the dollar spoke through the partition, hearing the noise. "You won't be here long."
 "How do you know?" The little dime stopped its frolicking, frightened at the idea.

"Because you're going to Sunday School."

"Do you go to Sunday School?" asked the dime of the dollar.

"I?" exclaimed the haughty dollar in surprise. "Of course not! I go to shows and gasoline stations and parks. Sunday is my big day, but I don't spend it in Sunday School. That's a place for small fry like you."—Oakdale Messenger.

for?" Billy Gates had protested. "Les Hickey's a 'fraid cat!"

"I'll say Les Hickey's a 'fraid cat," echoed Tommy Coons, giving Lester a dark look, and adding tauntingly, "Better run home, 'Fraidy. It's clouding up and is going to thunder and lighten like anything!"

"'Fraid Cat, 'Fraid Cat!" yelled the boys, and Lester had gone away furious.

And yet, what they had said was true. He was afraid of thunder storms. In the locality from whence he had lately come such storms were practically unknown, and Lester had not yet become accustomed to them. The boys had seen him turn white and shiver at a vivid flash of lightning and an ominous peal of thunder.

Mr. Williams had seen him cringe, also, and yet Mr. Williams had made him guardian of the flag, saying, "I trust you, Lester." The boy determined to be worthy of his teacher's trust.

Fearful that he might fail in his duty, he had tried to stay awake the night before the picnic. But he dozed off just before sunrise, waking in a panic from a dream that he had failed after all. He had, however, been promptly on time, and Mr. Williams had seen him raise the flag. The glow of happiness, which had subsided at the thought of his recent humiliation, returned, and Lester felt glad, very glad as he went back over the hill to his home.

The day was likely to prove somewhat of an ordeal, for since that fateful thunder storm the boys had not asked Lester to join in their games.

It turned out as he expected. He was left to himself and felt lonely and awkward, until Mr. Williams, dropping down beside him under a tree, engaged him in talk of the boyish sports he had enjoyed in the West. Lester forgot the attitude of the boys toward him as he talked with his teacher upon a subject dear to his heart. But presently, Mr. Williams being called away, Lester strolled over to the ball field.

"Got the flag up, I see," began Billy Gates, eyeing the emblem on the hill. Then, turning a mocking face toward Lester,

"Good thing it didn't storm this morning at sunrise. Hi, Lester?"

Lester turned his back upon Billy and walked over to an excited group of boys who were trying to find a substitute for one of their number on the nine.

"Here's Les," sang out Tim Robbins, "let's put him on, fellows." Then, looking up into the sky, "No storm in sight. Want to go on, Les?"

For a moment Lester believed Tim meant it. His eyes shone, as he replied eagerly,

"I'll say I do!"
 Then his heart sank as a perfect babel of mocking laughter arose.

"Aw-w—that a good one!" yelled Tommy Coons. "Les on a ball nine! Think of that fellows! 'Fraidy wants to play ball! Haw, haw!"

Lester turned on him furiously, "I know a sight more about the game than you or your old bunch ever dreamed of!" he retorted hotly, and then dashed away amid shouts of derision, blinking back the angry tears that would come in spite of himself. He'd get away from all this. He'd go home.

Then he saw the flag floating high above then on the hill where he had raised it that morning. His country's flag! He was the guardian of that flag. He would not go away. He would stay by until sunset.

Going slowly back to camp, he offered his services to the teachers, who were preparing the picnic lunch. His help was thankfully accepted, and he sturdily set to work collecting wood for the fire, sharpening sticks for the marshmallow roast, lugging heavy pails of water and big baskets of food and putting up swings. He tried to shut out all thought of the boys, combatting his loneliness by filling in every moment with hard work.

After lunch came the races and contests. Lester was stealing off to watch them from a distance when Mr. Williams detained him.

"Boy," he urged earnestly, "here's your chance to show those fellows the stuff you're made of. Get into the races and win! You can do it, boy, you can do it, I know!"

The words, the look of certainty in Mr. Williams' eager eyes, gave Lester a feeling of strength and confidence he had not known before. The scorn of the boys was nothing to him now. He didn't care much about "showing those fellows" what he could do. All that mattered to him was that he should prove to the man who had faith in him that he was worthy of his trust.

Lester entered every race and contest to which he was eligible, and won them all.

The grove rang with shouts of applause as he won race after race, contest after contest. But Lester noticed, although sneering faces had taken on looks of reluctant admiration, the boys did not applaud him. And somehow, he didn't care at all. The honest pleasure upon the face of his teacher counted far more with Lester than anything else.

But a test yet awaited him.

It had been a hot, close day and late in the afternoon a storm came up; a sudden, terrifying hurricane of wind and rain, accompanied by thunder and lightning. The merry-makers fled to the school house. Lester, in a frenzy of fright, had started with the rest for shelter, but a sudden thought made him stop. The flag! He must haul it down.

He glanced up the steep hill where it flapped madly in the wind, and then dashed toward it, facing the terrific gale. The lightning flashed sharply about him; the thunder crashed violently. His heart beat wildly, and he shook with fear, but he kept on, his one purpose being to reach and haul down the flag.

Half way up the incline he fell, and lay a moment before he could catch his breath. Then he struggled on once more, and at length gained the crest of the hill. Putting forth every ounce of strength which he possessed, he pulled wildly at the rope attached to the flag. The heavy silken emblem was hard to manage, for as it began to descend the wind caught and wound it about the flag-staff.

Lester heard an ominous cracking of wood. The violent wind had broken the pole. The flag was falling!

Leaping forward, he caught and held it as high as he could, one hand grasping the base of the broken, the other forcing the flag away from the ground. He could not hold on much longer; his arms were growing numb and he was conscious of a pain shooting through his shoulder. The pole must have hit him, he thought dimly.

He believed—he was—falling and—the flag—would touch—ground after all. Too—bad—when Mr. Williams was—trusting him—

"O God," he prayed frantically, "don't let her touch ground—please don't!"

He had forgotten the storm; the pain in his shoulder didn't matter; nothing mattered—if only—he could keep—his country's flag—from touching—

"Hold on, boy," called a reassuring voice, "I'm right here! Hold on, like a brick!"

Lester rallied and clutched the pole desperately. He would hold on. Mr. Williams was trusting him.

And then a strong arm came about him and someone raised the heavy banner from his numb body and he looked up into a pair of eyes that were full of a strange light.

"Mr.—Mr. Williams," he gasped swaying back against the strong arm, "did she touch? I—I tried awful hard—"

"No, boy," answered his teacher in a voice with a proud, glad tone in it. "No, scout, she didn't!"

Then, lifting the lad, he carried him and the flag down the hill and into the school house.

Everybody crowded about them and all looked very kind.

"Now, then," shouted Mr. Williams in ringing tones, "three cheers for the boy who remembered his duty while the rest of us only thought of ourselves! Three cheers for the boy who braved this violent storm to protect his country's flag! Three cheers for the boy of whom we are all proud! Hurrah for Lester Hickey!"

And then everybody—Billy Gates, Tommy Coons and Tim Robbins included—yelled at the tops of their voices, HURRAH! HURRAH! HURRAH!

"YOU HAVE TO WORK"

Bob Burdette as a humorist and practical philosopher fit into the "gay nineties" even as Will Rogers does into this present generation. He overflowed with good nature and clean, high grade humor, and at the same time never failed to utter fitly spoken words of wisdom, which the Jewish proverb says are "like apples of gold in pictures of silver."

The following is a fair sample of Bob Burdette:

"My son, remember you have to work. Whether you handle a pick or shovel or a set of books, digging ditches or editing a newspaper, ringing an auction bell or writing funny things, you must work. Don't be afraid of killing yourself by over working on the sunny side of thirty. Men die sometimes, but it is because they quit at 9 p. m., and don't go to bed until 2 a. m. It is the interval that kills, my son. The work gives you an appetite for your meals: it lends sincerity to your slumber; it gives you a perfect appreciation of a holiday. There are many young men who do not work, but the country does not even know their names; it only speaks of them as Old So-and-So's boys. Nobody likes them, the great, busy world does not know they are here, so find out what you want to be and do it. Take off your coat and make dust in the world. The busier you are the less you are liable to get into, the more you will be your sleep, the brighter the holidays and the better satisfied you will be with you."—N. C. Advo

COLDS MAY DEVELOP INTO PNEUMONIA

Coughs from colds may lead to serious trouble. You can stop them now with Creomulsion, an emulsified creosote that is pleasant to take. Creomulsion is a medical discovery with two-fold action; it soothes and heals the inflamed membranes and inhibits germ growth.

Creomulsion contains, in addition to creosote, other healing elements which soothe and heal the inflamed membranes and stop the irritation, while the creosote goes on to the stomach, is absorbed into the blood, attacks the seat of the trouble and checks the growth of the germs.

Creomulsion is guaranteed satisfactory in the treatment of coughs, colds, bronchitis and minor forms of bronchial irritations, and is especially valuable for building up the system after influenza or flu. Money refunded if not cured after taking according to directions. Ask your druggist. Send coupon for free sample.

Courage Wins Happiness in Tough Battle

YOU would think a very old lady laid up with a broken thigh in a plaster cast would be a hard person to keep happy. Yet, according to Nurse Helen V. Griffin, 64 Prospect Avenue, Hackensack, New Jersey, it can be done—if you know how.

"My patient," says Miss Griffin, "being unable to move about by herself became very constipated. Many medicines in pill form were used with little or no results. Finally when we came home from the hospital I began the use of Nujol.

"Soon my patient became regular and comfortable, without any pain or discomfort. Now she is happy and cheerful, since regularity has begun and continued with such little trouble."

If Nujol will make an old lady feel well, who cannot move around in her bed, what will it do for you?

Nurse Griffin knew how harmless Nujol is, containing no drugs or medicine, but acting only as a natural lubricant. She knew how it keeps excess of body poisons from forming (we all have them) and helps carry them away.

Women need a natural aid like Nujol just as much, if not more than men. There are so many physical conditions they have to go through that upset their normal schedule.

Just remember that all your bowels need to be regular as clock-work—a simple natural lubricant. Be sure, however, that you get the right one—the one tested and approved by millions of people.

See what Nujol will do for you. You can get it at any drug store for the price of a ticket to a good movie. You will find that Nujol works easily, normally. Try it today!

You'll wonder how you ever lived without this natural, pleasant, easy way to health and happiness!

MINISTERS' ANNUITY FUND

Need For Study and Conference

There has been no effort to rush the Church into a new plan to meet an old obligation.

For several years the Executive Committee of Ministerial Relief sought diligently for all the facts concerning the salaries, disability, old age and dependents of all our ministers and missionaries.

Without bias or prejudice we endeavored to determine the nature and extent of our Church's obligation and to discover a sure, economical, equitable way in which the debt might be discharged.

We had correspondence and conferences with the men who carried the responsibility for this work in all the other large Churches of America. We employed an actuary of outstanding ability and training. We had others check all the data and evaluate all our conclusions. For twenty years this careful, prayerful study was continued.

In 1924 we presented a contributory, reserve pension plan to the General Assembly. This was approved in principle and the ministers were urged to supply the data needed for an actuarial forecast of costs. Each General Assembly has put its stamp of approval on the Ministers' Annuity Fund, and since 1927 has set aside January 1, 1930, as the date for beginning to raise funds necessary for inaugurating the plan.

We are deeply grateful for the evidences of God's favor on the Plan. Synods, Presbyteries, Ministers and now Elders, Deacons and Churches have responded with amazing promptness and unanimity.

We want to counsel the churches to make haste slowly. We are not apprehensive about the results of careful, unprejudiced study of all facts. There are many questions that should be answered. There is no doubt of the final outcome when our people understand the purpose and spirit and method of this Plan, which has already proved its worth and usefulness in other Churches.

We hope each Pastor, Board of Deacons and Congregation will give good heed to the following suggestions:

1. The Ministers' Annuity Fund should be carefully studied by both elders and deacons.

We suggest reading together the short statement, "Our Responsibility," and asking and answering questions and consulting the other publications which are available.

2. The joint meeting of elders and deacons should recommend to the congregation their full participation in the Plan which is now the adopted policy of the entire Church.

3. The resolution should provide for the entrance of the Church into the Fund with regular payments of an amount equal to seven and one-half per cent of the amount paid the pastor.

These payments will not be made until after the Fund is put into operation which will probably be January 1, 1931. The whole plan should be carefully explained to the members of the church. There will be a Committee in each Presbytery and Synod to help in the presentation. They will be assisted by representatives of the General Assembly.

Ultimately Ministerial Relief will be transferred from the Benevolent side of the budget to the side of "Church Expenses" where it belongs.

4. An agreement should be made that the year 1930 will be set aside for the securing of a fund of $3,000,000 to pay, in part, the accrued liability of the Church for the prior service of its ministers and its missionaries—both home and foreign laborers.

To raise this sum there should be given each church ordinarily an amount equal to the salary paid the pastor for one year plus ten per cent—payable in cash or in six equal installments over a period of three years. Some churches should give more to help the weaker ones.

This is not to go into the budget of the Church. It is to be given and pledged by individual members.

5. Let it be known that your Church expects to raise this amount in 1930.

Already some large campaigns, both national and sectional, are planning drives for that period. Appeals loud, insistent, continuous and numerous—many of which are very remotely, if at all, related to the Kingdom of God—will come to our people. Let's put our own Church first in 1930, and for the first time in its history—and for the only time it will be necessary—make up for the neglect of past years and place our own Church on a basis where it can meet its solemn obligation and pay this debt.

Every dictate of justice, of honor, of gratitude, of self-respect, of love and obedience to the command of God urges us to meet this sacred obligation.

A few years ago when Mr. J. B. Duke made a gift to the Superannuated Ministers' Fund of the Methodist Church, he said, "Other institutions change. The Church abides. The good that I do in the future I intend to do through the Church." Some time after this he contributed what will ultimately be one hundred and twenty million dollars to various causes, all of which were controlled by some branch of the Church.

6. Begin to arrange to fall in line with the plans for the entire Church. Expenses can be greatly lightened if the staff of the Executive Committee can begin in the northeastern section of the Church and move south and west—co-operating with each Presbytery in order. Plans will be announced soon and every effort made to give the largest co-operation in every section.

7. Literature is being sent to elders and deacons as their names and addresses are received at the Louisville office.

Now is the period for study and conference. With open minds, with a desire to do God's will, with a consciousness of the futility of all our efforts without His guidance and help, with faith in the members of the Presbyterian family and expectancy of their whole-hearted loyalty to their Church and its servants we are sure that our Church will do the right thing now!

Moody Institute Offers Extension Courses

Eminent Evangelists and Bible Teach- ers Secured Through Chicago Office

History affords few names that rep- resent more potency for good, and more joy in adventure for God than the name of D. L. Moody. While he lived he was tireless, creative, far-seeing. Now at rest, the many agencies of his forming are still carrying on — the Northfield Schools, the Moody Bible Institute, the Bible Institute Colpor- tage Association, the Bible Conference movement.

The last had become so momentous while Moody lived that it could be deemed a betrayal of trust, should the Bible Conference movement languish and die. Under the auspices of The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago, an Extension Department was established for the express purpose of promoting the Moody conference program, and carrying the evangelistic message to every part of the nation, and beyond.

Metropolitan conferences are held during winter months in a number of large cities, and the voices of great evangelical leaders are heard, their vital messages building faith in the Bible and the redemption in Christ. Other conferences and evangelistic movements are held throughout the year.

The Extension Department, exer- cising much care and prayerful search- ing, has assembled a staff of field men — Bible scholars, eminent teachers, and evangelists, who are available for a service of utmost value—and these men may bring their life-giving message on (Continued on Page Two)

Princeton and Lane May Unite

Movement on Foot to Combine Two Seminaries of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A.

Conferences are being held between Princeton Theological Seminary and Lane Theological Seminary in Cin- cinnati, looking towards the union of the two institutions. Final decision rests with the Board of Trustees of Lane, who will meet in December to discuss the proposed merger.

President Stevenson, of Princeton, recently went to Cincinnati to confer with the Lane officials, and a commit- tee from Princeton has also been meet- ing with a similar committee from Lane. The Princeton committee is headed by the Rev. Dr. William L. Mc- Ewan, of Pittsburgh, Pa., of the Board of Control, and includes President William P. Stevenson, Esq., of Roselle, N. J., Thomas W. Synnott, Esq., We- nonah, N. J., the Rev. J. Harry Cotton of Columbus, Ohio, and Paul C. Martin, Esq., Springfield, Ohio.

Lane is one of the oldest divinity schools of the Church. It has recently celebrated its 100th anniversary. Prin- ceton is the oldest Presbyterian Theo- logical Seminary and the union of the two will thus bring together institu- tions which have for over a century represented the conservative theology of the church.

Arkansas Presbytery Appoints Commission

Five Ministers and Two Elders Chosen to Sit on Case of Dr. Hay Watson Smith

The Presbytery of Arkansas met in the First Presbyterian Church, at Lit- tle Rock, on November 12, and elected Rev. M. A. Boggs, D.D., as moderator. The chief item of interest before the Presbytery was the instruction of the General Assembly at Montreat in May to investigate the rumors that are abroad as to the soundness in the faith of Rev. Hay Watson Smith, D.D., pas- tor of the Second Church, of Little Rock.

In response to the Assembly, Pres- bytery appointed a commission of seven, five ministers and two elders, according to the following resolution:

"Resolved: In obedience to the in- junction of the General Assembly, that Rev. M. A. Boggs, D.D., chairman, Blytheville, Rev. C. M. Campbell, Con- way; Rev. S. J. Patterson, D.D., Morr- ilton, Rev. J. E. McJunkin, Forrest City, Rev. A. Killough, Marianna; Dr. E. R. Long, Batesville, and Mr. John R. Hampton, Little Rock, be and they are hereby appointed a commission of seven, five of whom shall constitute a quorum, with the authority and duty "to investigate the rumors that are abroad as to the soundness in the faith of Dr. Hay Watson Smith."

The commission is to report its find- ings to the regular spring meeting to be held in Osceola on the second Tues- day of April, 1930."

Pastoral relations were dissolved be- tween Rev. W. D. Denham and Wynne; and Rev. P. S. Herron and Des Arc, (Continued on Page Two)

Golden Rule Dinner Next Sunday

Headquarters in New York Ask Everybody to Help Orphans of the World

Sunday, December 8, is the seventh annual observance of Golden Rule Sunday. This year it will be observed in behalf of under-privileged children throughout the world. The aid we give out of our abundance to those less for- tunately situated than we, will prove of great value in bringing about the application of the Golden Rule to the settlement of misunderstanding among nations as well as among individuals. It is our privilege to share in this world wide movement as follows:

1. Plan a very simple dinner on that day.
2. Think of those less fortunate than ourselves, realize their condition, spend a minute in silent prayer for them and in thankfulness for our own blessings.
3. Make a thank offering in their behalf.

Every cent of your Golden Rule Sun- day gift will go to help children—noth- ing for expenses.

Put your gift in a plain envelope, marking it with your name, address and name of your Church, and give it to the treasurer of your church, who will forward it to The Golden Rule Foundation, 1 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y.

The Miracles at Malden, Mass.

Writer in the Nation, of New York City Blames Newspapers for Commercialism of the So-called Cures at a Priest's 60 Year Old Grave

A clippingsheet has been sent us by the Nation, of New York, which describes the recent furore over the supposed cures at the grave of Rev. Patrick Power, who died 60 years ago. The writer ascribes the fanaticism to the newspapers which published the "cures," and thus brought over one million people from all over the land as seekers after healing and for curi- osity to visit the cemetery. Believing it will interest our readers, we publish the clipping in full.

"The yearning faith that dominates the afflicted thousands kneeling day and night at the grave of Father Pat- rick J. Power, at Malden at the faith shown and horror at the suffering and at the apparent violation of the human intellect in some of the actions com- prising the demonstration of faith.

"The commercialism involved is ghastly: the slab over the grave cov- ered with money dropped by the kneel- ers; the two wastebaskets filled with money and emptied two or three times a day; the mountainous pile of scarcely-burnt vigil candles in the rear of the cemetery chapel which are re- moved to make room for other candles by three shifts of boys working day and night just as soon as the people praying by them (and making a con- tribution of anything from 10 cents up for each candle) have left the chapel (a flat violation of the religious theory of the vigil light); the hordes and hordes of crippled children howling at the treatment forced upon them; the tragically ignorant and faithful moth- ers with typically Mongolian idiot children whom they place upon the muddy, foul slab (to cure idiocy); the newspaper men rushing from one crowd collected around a reported cure to another crowd, taking names, and rushing off to the telephone across the street; the sergeant and patrolman at the grave trying to keep the kneel- ers moving, yanking them up from kissing the stone and (in the case of the sergeant) treating them just like a football crowd, even to telling this woman "to get the — out of here! You've been in here nineteen times already!"

"Since the newspapers published re- ports of cures," continues Mr. Jack- son, "more than a million and a quar- ter people in all stages of affliction, dis- ease, and deformity have prayed at this Malden grave. . .

"Tracing the origin of the present appalling flocking of pilgrims, one in- stantly realized that it would not and could not have happened except for the newspapers. St. Joseph's Parish adjoins the cemetery and Father Pat- rick Walsh of that parish is intrusted with the spiritual demands of the bur- ial ground. At a morning mass on Sun- day, October 27, Father Walsh an- nounced that cures at Father Power's grave had been reported to him. He asked members of his congregation to inform him of any they heard about. An Urgent Watch Night Appeal

National Observance Urged by Great Commission Prayer League of Chicago

Since the tenth Watch Night Appeal was sent forth by the Great Commission Prayer League, there has been another year of watching and waiting, of working and wrestling, on the part of spiritual Christians. Of watching unto prayer, because they realized the need of daily strength from above; of waiting for the Bridegroom, because the signs are multiplying which show that His Coming draweth nigh; of working with God, because lost souls everywhere are perishing and many of God's children are fainting; of wrestling against the powers of darkness, because they have come in like a flood and are seeking to deceive the very elect.

On account of this constant watching and waiting, working and wrestling, many of God's servants have grown weary under the pressure and strife, and like Gideon's band of old they are "faint, yet pursuing." The God of battles is with them and they are assured of ultimate victory: however, they need reinforcements; they need to have their hands stayed by the Aarons and Hurs until the going down of the sun. Will you be a prayer warrior?

As we consider the activity of Bolshevism in Russia, the increasing strength of Roman Catholicism in Europe, the bitter conflict between Jews and Arabs in Palestine, the menace of civil war and mutiny in China, the spread of Hinduism in India, the hold of Buddhism on Japan, the power of Mohammedanism in Africa, the growth of Modernism in America, and the prevalence of Atheism throughout Christendom, the human outlook is not at all encouraging. But the eye of faith looks through the divine telescope of God's promises and sees a brighter day coming. The man of faith also realizes that "the end of all things is at hand" and that we must be "sober and watch unto prayer." (I Peter 4:7).

We therefore urge that Christians everywhere gather in their churches or homes, and spend the closing hours of the old year in earnest prayer and supplication, with humility and confession of sins and short-comings, together with praise and thanksgiving, and confident expectation in our faithful Creator and Redeemer. "The Lord is nigh unto them that are of a broken heart, and unto all them that call upon Him." (Psalm 34:18; 145:18).

We would earnestly make these suggestions:

1. A three day "Prayer Conference," beginning Sunday morning, December 29, with a Bible message on "How to Pray," continuing on Monday evening, and throughout the entire day Tuesday, with sessions at 10 a. m., 2:30 p. m., and 7:30 p. m., on until midnight. Or,

2. An all day meeting for prayer on Tuesday, December 31, as above indicated. Or,

3. A Watch Night service during the last four or five hours of the old year. The time might be divided into three periods, viz: from 7:30 to 9:00, prayer for the Jews, the peace of Jerusalem and Jewish evangelization; 9:00 to 10:30, prayer for all men, all nations, and the world-wide preaching of the gospel; 10:30 to 12:00, prayer for all true Christians, and for a mighty revival in the entire Body of Christ in preparation for the coming of Christ, the Head. Different leaders might be provided for each period to direct the thought and quote appropriate promises to stimulate faith, but the time should be spent mainly in praise, testimony and prayer, opportunity being given for special requests.

In closing, we quote from the last Watch Night Letter prepared by the late Thomas E. Stephens, the founder and director of the Great Commission Prayer League: "The hour has come to cease doubting God! For God answers, not the despairing cry of unbelief, but the triumphant shout of faith. And that triumphant shout is going up today from multitudes of intercessors who know Christ, not alone as crucified, but in the power of His resurrection; and who know that if God was able to raise the Head of the Body from the dead 1900 years ago he is able to raise to newness of life his paralyzed Body today."

Therefore, beloved brethren, let us "Continue steadfastly in prayer, watching therein with thanksgiving." (Col. 4:2, R. V.).

GOLDEN RULE DINNER NEXT SUNDAY

Origin of Golden Rule Sunday

At an international conference at Geneva, Switzerland, in September, 1923, representatives of twenty philanthropic organizations from fourteen countries were faced with perplexing post-war problems of orphans, refugees, and innocent sufferers in the Near East. The failures of armies and navies and of world wars in solving world problems were glaringly apparent. Could practical religion as expressed through the Golden Rule solve the problem that had baffled diplomats? It seemed worth trying.

DECLARATION OF GENEVA

The English translation of the official text of the Geneva Declaration, as adopted by the League of Nations, concerning the rights of children:

I. The child should be given the means requisite for its normal development, both materially and spiritually.

II. The child that is hungry should be fed; the child that is sick should be nursed; the child that is backward should be helped; the delinquent child should be reclaimed; and the orphan and the waif should be sheltered and succored.

III. The child should be the first to receive relief in times of distress.

IV. The child should be put in a position to earn a livelihood and should be protected against every form of exploitation.

V. The child should be brought up in the consciousness that its talents should be devoted to the service of its fellow men.

The proposal went forth that a Sunday in early December, midway between the harvest-Thanksgiving period and Christmas season, be observed as International Golden Rule Sunday for the strengthening of international friendship and of practical application of the Golden Rule to at least some of the world's problems.

The suggestion at once met with the approval of leaders in Europe and later of President Coolidge, Secretary Hughes, and other prominent officials throughout the United States. Governors in most of the states have appointed state and local Golden Rule committees, with the result that during the past five years about 16,000 such committees have been co-operating with Near East Relief in the observance of International Golden Rule Sunday.

Outstanding Needs of the World

Measured by the Declaration of Geneva, the child welfare problems of some parts of the world are practically limitless. Over 500 out of every 1,000 children born in China and Central Africa die before they are one year old. In India there are over 50,000,000 children of school age with schools for only 6,000,000. According to the best estimates there are 87,000,000 of school age in China with schools for only 8,000,000. In Central Africa, only 280, 000 children out of 14,000,000 have school privileges. In the three areas there are at least 136,720,000 children of school age who have no prospects of ever going to school. Such facts mean illiteracy, ignorance and superstition.

THE MIRACLES AT MALDEN, MASS.

The Boston Globe. The tabloid city editor and the boy's relative heard Father Walsh's announcement and also heard an altar boy report after the service the cure of his mother's deafness. The city editor sent a man to interview the altar boy's mother.

The tabloid city editor went ahead with the material in hand. He played it on the front page with streamer headline and pictures. The Globe hesitated a day or two and then printed the story. The cemetery officials were incensed with the tabloid reporter for publishing the story ahead of their intended time. They tried to keep him from the cemetery. But he won out. More cures were reported.

The outstanding case among all those yet reported is that of Laura J. Moody, 18, of 15 Hamilton Street, Dorchester. Miss Moody was carried to the cemetery on Armistice Day in what she, the newspapers and her doctors described as a plaster cast from neck to hips. She was said to be suffering from an incurable spinal deformity. She had been in the City Hospital for eleven months and had not walked for more than a year. She was doomed, so her family doctor, she and her family said, to a bed-ridden life. She fainted on the cement slab over Father Power's remains (the marble marker resting on this cement slab on six pedestals of a foot in height had been jarred from its base and somewhat damaged by the crowd of 150,000 the day before and had, therefore, been removed by the cemetery officials). She was taken outside the cemetery in an automobile, there revived, declared she could walk, and did so, back into the cemetery to the grave, where she prayed. She then arose and went to the chapel some 200 yards distant where she left her plaster cast on the altar.

"The house officers at the hospital who saw Miss Moody day in and day out," says Mr. Jackson, "were blunt. 'Most of her trouble was hysteria. When we wanted her to walk she wouldn't try.'" The X-ray pictures of her spine are the crucial test. One taken soon after her admission to the hospital showed a slight cloudiness which gave basis to the suspicion of spinal arthritis. Another, taken soon thereafter, was negative, showing the spine to be normal. Others, taken at rather frequent intervals throughout her eleven months' stay, were negative. Several X-rays were taken just before her discharge from the hospital. They were all negative.

"I had an interview with Dr. Dana, the visiting staff physician. 'No,' he agreed, 'there was nothing physically wrong with her when she was discharged from the hospital, so far as we could determine. But she had acquired the habit of invalidism and might never have got onto her feet. Her experience at the cemetery broke the habit of invalidism.'" I asked him if any one of a number of other experiences, including treatment by a psychiatrist, might not have been "the precipitating factor" in breaking her habit of invalidism. "Yes," he admitted.

"Another Zola is needed to describe the scene at the cemetery," concluded Mr. Jackson. "What he wrote in description of Lourdes applies here. Whether the Church intends to gather proof of the reported cures and set up a permanent shrine—the first in the United States—is not known. In any event the Church moves slowly and cautiously in such matters. It will probably be years before anything official is announced, though the first cure at the grave was reported thirty years

REAL LIFE

Have you learned the meaning of life?

Are you revelling in the privilege of Christian civilization with eyes closed to the cries and dole of the lost world? Or are you living in the joyful uplift and salvation of others? "The supreme romance is to walk in God's way," Jesus said. "Whosoever will save his life shall lose it; but whosoever will save his life for my sake and the gospel's, the Father shall save it." "We have redeemed through his blood," "What then shall I do with Jesus?" as Pilate said, "what will Jesus do with me?"

We shall not remain here long, and the others will remain here very long. W. E. S.

CREED AND DEED

What care I for caste or creed?
It is the deed, it is the deed;
What for class or what for clan?
It is the man, it is the man;
Heirs of love, and joy, and woe
Who is high, and who is low?
Mountain, valley, sky, and sea,
Are all for humanity.

What care I for robe or stole?
It is the soul, it is the soul;
What for crown, and what for scepter?
It is the heart within the breast;
It is the faith, it is the hope,
It is the struggle up the slope,
It is the brain and eye to see,
One God and one humanity.

EDITORIAL

THE FUTURE OF THE NEGRO

The law of association plays a large part in our life and adds much to our pleasure. The people of the South, by reason of this law, have always had a peculiar love for the negro, because he is associated with the pleasures of a carefree childhood, and brings to mind the days when the old civilization of the South flourished. Because the negro is so deeply associated with our past, we have always regretted that the word has held out so little hope for the future, and we have always protested against discrimination that he has to meet, often in the courts, when his case is decided by a white man. We have watched his progress in the acquisition of property; and in the transaction of business, here and there, we find one showing business talents of a high order. In our cities we find a large number of the negroes detected are committed by negroes, so the impression obtains that they constitute the criminal element in our national life. We read the daily papers, we must conclude that we have been under such an impression long ago concluded that the negro was not as a citizen, and that in competition with the white race his future was dark. Our thought, however, has caused us to reach our conclusions. It is true that he is in many respects a child who leads a grasshopper life, living for the moment, with little or no thought of the future that must come with its demands. We have been studying statistics bearing on the negro race, and have found that his progress has been one of an up and down movement. Arriving at any conclusion it is never safe to be guided by our impressions, because they are not only transient, but are subject to so many causes. For example, if I draw my conclusions from newspaper reports of crime, given daily, I am apt to conclude that the negro breaks the law far oftener than the white man, and that reason he is not a desirable citizen. When we studied the carefully gathered statistics of crime, we have had to revise our conclusions. The statistics, gathered in our own State, show that the negro is by no means as black as he is painted in our imagination. In 1921, the negro criminals constituted 15 per cent of the entire number convicted in the State, yet in 1927, six years after, the percentage of negro criminals had fallen from 15 per cent to 38 per cent, and in 1928, one year after it had reached 33 per cent. The study not only the statistics of this State but those of the United States, the outlook brighter.

A disinterested traveller states that during this year he had occasion to visit Atlanta, where the prison is located for crimes against the Government.

On one trip he was on a train to which was attached a coach filled with United States prisoners, and in that number there were only three or four negroes.

We may not be able to determine the exact cause of this condition. It is very easy to dogmatize.

We can only suggest some possible cause, but whatever the cause, this improvement should give us ground for encouragement, and make us believe that this race, so associated with a happy and carefree childhood, is on the up-grade, and their future is not so hopeless as we sometimes imagine.

While education cannot take the place of religion in building up man's moral nature, it helps.

In recent years, this state has spent millions of dollars on improving the teaching force and school houses for the negroes, so it may be that indirectly this has had something to do with the outlook.

If so, then it has been money well-spent.

Those zealous friends of the colored man who criticize the Southern States because they give the whites better schools and teachers than they do the colored man, should remember that the colored man, measured by the taxes he pays gets far more for his money than his white neighbor does.

Our forefathers went to war because they had taxation without representation. This seems to be a case of representation without taxation.

IMPORTANCE OF LITTLE THINGS

We of this country measure everything more by size, than by its importance.

Bigness is one standard in nearly everything. Even the churches imagine that they can do the Lord's work more efficiently if they are larger, forgetting that when the Lord wanted anything done He always used insignificant means, in order that the power might be of Him, and not of man.

It is an interesting study to trace important results back to their beginning, to find that some of the great outstanding events in the history of man had their origin in some trifling event, out of all proportion to the importance of the result.

Some one once traced the declaration of war with Mexico to a quarrel over a hog breaking through a line fence.

It seems that one of the men concerned was afterward sent to the Legislature, and that Legislature elected a certain man to the Senate of the United States by one vote, whose vote decided whether war should be declared against Mexico.

Starting then with the declaration of war we go back to the line fence quarrel till we reach an unruly animal. Thus great events hinged upon a fence-breaking hog.

Of course all of our readers have heard the famous remark of Pascal that if Cleopatra's nose had been a shade longer or shorter, the whole history of the world would have been changed, because Mark Anthony would never have been captivated by Cleopatra's beauty, and thus he would not have lost his kingdom.

Even in the story of Solomon we are told that the little foxes play havoc with the grapes.

We are led to these reflections by a statement in a medical journal that the cause of Martin Luther's defying the papacy was an attack of ear-ache.

Church history teaches that it was his study of the Scriptures that forced him to break with the Church, but it seems that this journal has found a cause that was unknown to the writers of Church History.

According to this medical discoverer it was it was deafness that resulted in a nervous state of mind, that produced a lack of coordination of movement.

Again add to the list of importance results from causes apparently insignificant.

When we picture the glorious and blessed results of Protestantism, what it has done for man, we can easily see that there can be nothing small or insignificant, but that in every cause there may be wrapped up results of tremendous consequences to man, both here and hereafter.

DR. CADMAN, THE MAN—THE PREACHER

In 1925 our General Assembly met in Lexington, Kentucky, that charming city of the "Blue Grass State," and our host was Rev. Bunyan McLeod, now a pastor in Canada.

The Federal Council sent as their representative Dr. S. Parks Cadman, not as well known then as now.

In a speech of remarkable power, live with charming diction and Welsh imagery, he swept the Assembly off of their feet, as, in defense of the Council, he "made the worse appear the better reason."

Though we had been opposed to our Church being connected with the Council, we found ourselves, under the witchery of his tongue, gradually softening in our opposition.

After the reception given in the manse by Dr. McLeod and his charming wife, we had the pleasure of walking to the railway station with Dr. Cadman, whom we found as charming in conversation as in his address before the Assembly.

Discovering that we had spent our boyhood in Richmond, Va., throughout the war period, he plied us with questions about the personal appearance of Lee, Jackson and Davis, for whom he expressed great admiration.

Since we have followed his course with a mingled feeling of admiration for his mental gifts and regret for his rejection of sacred truths, so dear to those trained in them from early childhood.

It is sad to see such wonderful gifts of speech and imagination used for the support of those who seek to destroy our faith in the blessed Book, and to reduce man in his origin to a creature by natural forces, making him by development a mere brute.

When we realize what these gifts would mean if used for the glory of God, we lose heart and wonder if indeed the last days are upon us.

Dr. S. Parks Cadman, as a man stands head and shoulders above many of his contemporaries.

Dr. Cadman as a preacher in the good done in his work cannot compare with many an humble missionary in the slums or in the mountain coves, because he does not exalt God's Word, without the truth of which Word salvation has no meaning.

THE MIDDLE AGES—REDIVIVUS

Over 70 years ago a girl of 13 years of age upon going to a spring in the town of Lourdes in France, had a vision of the Virgin Mary. The fame of this spring spread and the sick, lame and blind crowded there and were healed, so it was claimed.

In 1889 a Church was erected for the accommodation of pilgrims, of whom 500,000 gathered there annually.

These strange cures, if cures they were, appealed to the sick and suffering.

According to the Associated Press, in Malden, Massachusetts, there has been a repetition of the Lourdes experience in the Holy Cross cemetery, where priests and nuns today kneel beside members of the laity at the grave of Rev. Patrick J. Power, in Holy Cross cemetery as a crowd estimated at more than 50,000 persons assembled to ask for divine intercession in the relief of their bodily ailments since reports of the curative qualities of the 60-year-old grave became widespread.

ON THE ROAD TO EMMAUS

G. F. Nicolassen

The crucifixion of Jesus was a great surprise to his friends. They had seen him do many wonderful things—still the tempest, raise the dead, feed a great multitude with a boy's lunch. And when he allowed himself to be arrested without making any resistance, they could not understand it. Had his power given out? Had they misjudged him? Was he mistaken about himself? After the capture the other events followed in rapid succession—the trial before the Jews, the sentence by Pilate, and the crucifixion. The triumph of his enemies was complete. The man they hated was dead. It only remained to open the tomb on the third day and show the lifeless body.

His friends were panic stricken. In the Garden all the disciples forsook him and fled, as Jesus had predicted. At the trial only Peter and John were present, and it was disastrous to Peter. John was the only one of the Twelve that witnessed the crucifixion. When John the Baptist was put to death his body was buried by his own disciples; it is a pathetic thought that the body of Jesus was not buried by his disciples; this service was rendered by Nicodemus and Joseph of Armathea. That night must have been a sleepless one for Peter and for Mary. Peter had denied the Lord whom he loved, and he felt as if he might never had a chance to ask his forgiveness. Mary was thinking of the many strange things in the life of her son—as a boy of twelve he had reminded her that God was his father, not Joseph; at the beginning of his public career he had told her, kindly, but distinctly, that his mission on earth was more important than any human relationship; and now the execution as a criminal had brought to her mind the words spoken by Simeon thirty years before, "A sword shall pierce through thy own soul also." The next day was the Jewish Sabbath and a "high day" in the passover celebration; but the friends of Jesus were too sad to enter heartily into the services; and not one of them realized that the thing signified by all their sacrifices had now taken place.

Then came the first day of the week. In the morning a rumor began to circulate that Jesus had been seen by several persons. But this seemed so improbable that no attention was paid to it. In the afternoon two friends of Jesus set out from Jerusalem to go to Emmaus, a village about seven miles away. As they walked they were discussing very earnestly the whole situation, when they were joined by a stranger. He said to them, "What makes you look so sad?" One of them replied, "Are you a stranger in Jerusalem? You are surely the only one here that does not know about these things." He asked, "What things?" They answered, "About Jesus, the prophet of Nazareth, who did so many wonderful things. We were expecting him to take the leadership of the nation and break off the Roman yoke. But a few days ago the rulers caught him, put him through a hasty trial, and had him crucified. There is a report that he was seen this morning by several persons, but that seems very unlikely." The stranger replied, "My friends, do you not remember what the Scripture says about the sufferings of the Messiah? In Genesis we have the statement, 'The seed of the woman shall bruise the head of the serpent; but it shall bruise his heel.' And Isaiah speaks still more plainly, 'He is brought as a lamb to the slaughter. It pleased the Lord to bruise him. The Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all. He was wounded for our transgressions. With his stripes we are healed.'"

As he continued to quote one passage after another from their Bible the two men thought within themselves, "It certainly is interesting to hear him talk." At last they reached their journey's end; and the stranger said good-bye and was moving on; but they said, "Oh, do not go; it is getting late; come in and stay with us." He accepted the invitation and went in with them. And when they sat down at the table for the evening meal he was invited to ask the blessing. And there was something about manner or the tone of his voice that made them look up—and he was gone. One of them said, "Cleopas, I believe that was Jesus." Cleopas said, "I think so, too. Let us go back to Jerusalem and tell them about it." So they retraced their steps to the city and found the disciples and friends gathered together. They told their story and heard the additional news that Jesus had appeared to Peter.

While they were talking together a human form suddenly appeared in the room. They knew that the door was locked. How did he get in? They thought it must be a ghost. Then Jesus, seeing their alarm, said, "It is I. Be not afraid. Look at the marks of the nails in my hands and feet." And they saw the scars; but the wounds were healed, and he was able to stand without difficulty and to walk without limping. Then he gave them another test by eating a piece of a broiled fish and of a honeycomb which they had there. As he ate the food he said, "You see it is I; a spirit has not flesh and bones as you see me have." Then he continued, "Now you will begin to understand the things that I told you so often about my sufferings. They were a necessary part of my work in the redemption of the world. All that is over now, and the work is complete. You will see it more clearly when the Holy Spirit comes in full measure. Wait in Jerusalem a few days until that takes place. It will be unmistakable when it does occur. Then I want you to be my messengers to all the nations. Tell them what you have seen and heard. And you may count on my help all the time."

Atlanta, Ga.

A STATESMAN-LIKE REPORT

The following report on the Ministers' Annuity Fund of the Presbyterian Church in the United States was made to the Presbytery of Potomac, September 18, 1929, by the ad interim committee appointed by Presbytery at its meeting at Baltimore, April 17, 1929. The report was written by Hon. W. W. Warwick, a ruling elder in the Central Presbyterian Church, of Washington, D. C., and chief counsel of the U. S. Employees' Compensation Commission.

The undersigned, appointed April 17, 1929, as your committee to study the Ministers' Annuity Fund of the Presbyterian Church in the United States and to report to the fall meeting of Presbytery, respectfully submit the following:

1. The subject of the inadequacy of salaries paid to ministers is an old one. It needs no discussion now. The inadequacy is admitted. And thus the subject is frequently laid aside. The average salaries paid fifteen years ago were a reflection upon all the churches of our country. In business life due to the decrease in the purchasing power of money the advance in incomes in fifteen years probably has ranged from 50 to 150 per cent. Even the minimum increase has not been given to many ministers. The view still prevails that they do not have as much need for money as others do, or even that they should not make demands for an adequate salary. Some may believe that their patience indicates contentment and comfort. Thus while in most cases their ability to make provision for old age has been decreased, although in many cases there is no room for a decrease, they can not but feel concerned as old age comes on.

2. The obligation upon the membership of the churches to make adequate provision for the disability on account of the age or otherwise of those devoting their lives to the service of the Church is one that takes the highest rank in the list of obligations. When we speak of adequate provision it is rather with the hope that soon a substantially better provision than the present will be made and with no expectation that really adequate provision can be secured for many years.

The obligation upon the officers of our churches to lead their congregations to provide fair compensation for their pastors has been discussed from time immemorial. The results with few exceptions must be considered as falling far short of what is fair and right. When we see that churches have been compelled to increase, by 50 per cent or more since 1914, most of their current expense items, and yet some have not increased the minister's salary one dollar, or only a trifle, the injustice does not need the victim's complaint to make it apparent to all.

Let us remember now and always that the ministers of our Church and other Churches have borne the burden while our nation has become materially prosperous. They are the leaders who have put first things first and, without a fair share of the material blessings, have kept our people as a whole under the saving restraint of the Gospel and made possible the material prosperity. It is their task by the preaching of the Word to save the nation from lawlessness and moral and spiritual decay. Their part in the future must be that of teaching, leading, and warning young and old of what the Lord requires of them. Shall we not as laymen see that to do justly by those who minister to us is our duty and privilege?

3. If we say that those called to the ministry expect hardship and a small living while they point the way to the better life and serve the people in all times of difficulty and trial, there yet remains the sacred and solemn obligation upon our members to care for their pastors when disabled from any cause. In many cases churches have met this obligation lovingly and joyfully and have made pleasant the declining years of a beloved pastor. But all our people cannot always do this. The privilege becomes that of the whole Church and the obligation is to all our ministers and missionaries. This requires that all our people join hands to do the task as a matter of justice and of privilege, done for those of our own household.

4. What has been done for many years by our Ministerial Relief funds has been a great help, but not a solution of the problem. Our people as a rule have given cheerfully to this cause. Many gave liberally, but most did not understand the urgency of the need and the number among whom the fund contributed must be divided. That we have done better than some Churches in our country is not a cause for satisfaction when we know that we have not done half what we should. Now our General Assembly has proposed that "relief" or charity be not our goal, but that a system of modest retirement allowance as a matter of justice and right be established. Others have done it and we can. In the business world the justice of a retirement allowance for faithful employees is recognized, and such plans are in effect in many corporations.

5. Our Executive Committee of Ministerial Relief has a record of good management and success in its work. It has a substantial endowment fund to continue its meager care for those now needing help and for those for whom it must provide for many years in the future. These funds can not be used as a basis for a retirement or annuity system. Such a plan must be built up as a separate and distinct matter. Our General Assembly for five years approved what is known as the "Ministers' Annuity Fund" proposed by the Committee after long study of similar plans in other Churches and in the business world. They have had the advice and assistance of competent actuaries and financial men. The plan has been published with an admirable explanation of the details. It is certainly worthy of a careful reading by all officers of churches.

6. Your committee does not propose in this report for Presbytery to argue as to the details or attempt to answer the well-considered or ill-advised criticisms of those who may disapprove the plan so carefully worked out by competent men. We consider the plan adequately conceived and sound in principle. Experience may call for small changes but as to its purpose and effect can be no difference of opinion now. Nor do we believe that the method of meeting the urgent need can be improved materially at this time. What we really need is acquiescence in the splendid effort of the Committee. The General Assembly has given the plan final approval and has approved of the important work of securing a three million dollar fund that is needed to care for the accrued liability. This fund is an essential element of success.

7. Briefly, the Annuity Fund contemplates a provision by which one entitled to belong to two and one-half per cent of his salary. This money belongs to him and his interest, all to be returned to him or his family if he does not live to be a beneficiary. Each church is to contribute into the Fund an amount equal to seven and one-half per cent of the pastor's salary. This total of ten per cent with interest accruing will care for the annuity (minimum of $600 and maximum of $2,000 per year) if the minister is in the ministry thirty-five years after the plan is adopted. A minister will not feel called on to serve a church that does not contribute to the Fund, nor will a church that does not contribute feel any hesitancy in calling a minister who contributes and who may be beyond any immediate age dead line.

8. The three million dollar fund will be used to care for the accrued liability on account of those who have less than say thirty-five years to serve, and will give each minister $600 as a minimum retirement allowance. The plan provides one-seventieth of the annual salary for each year of service rendered after it takes effect, thus giving a total of ten per cent for thirty-five years. It is plain that one serving ten years after the plan goes into effect, at a salary of $1,000 would receive but five-seventieths, or $150 a year. The balance of the minimum of $600 is paid from the three million dollar fund. This large amount is to make up in part the failure to have started such a retirement allowance thirty-five years ago.

9. The success of the plan so far as it concerns those excepting the men thirty years of age or under, the most liable retirement being at sixty-five years except in the case of those whose ability is readily seen to be dependent upon the success of the three million dollar fund. When success in this particular is reasonably assured the plan can be put into effect. This is a problem for the Executive Committee of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church. Our people will meet this call to do a large and noble thing and to make possible a reasonable provision for faithful pastors and missionaries.

10. Believing as we do that the time has come for the plan by the officers of our churches, and with confidence that the plan is well-considered and sound, we submit the following recommendations:

(a) The Presbytery of Potomac commends the plan to the churches for consideration and acceptance the Ministers' Annuity Fund as submitted by the Executive Committee of Ministerial Relief and approved by the General Assembly.

(b) Presbytery recommends that the elders and lay members in our churches examine the plan for providing for the retirement of ministers and explain the same to the membership to the end that their congregations may be ready to take action in accepting the plan as recommended by the General Assembly has fixed the date for the plan to become operative.

(c) The ad interim committee on the Ministers' Annuity Fund is continued until the spring meeting of the Presbytery to make such further report at that time as they may deem advisable.

Respectfully,

W. W. Warwick,
Samuel H. Boyd,
G. Howard Carl

CHARGE TO THE CONGREGATION

Rev. Elder J. B. Sparrow, Washington, N. C.

The following is a copy of the Charge delivered to the congregation of the New Bern Presbyterian Church at the installation of their pastor, Rev. R. E. McClure. It was published in The Presbyterian Standard by special request of the pastor who heard it delivered.)

Relationships: The relations between pastor and people are intimate and close. It is a beautiful engagement and essentially mutual.

Listening: I listened to the solemn and comprehensive covenant which you have just entered, as expressed in the words which I have propounded and your response, I asked myself in my heart, I say by way of a charge, in emphasis of your position, further than just to charge you to live up to your contract? Do that faithfully and conscientiously, and will meet the requirements, and discharge your obligations.

And I promise you in the name of my Master, in every season of successful service, that will redound to the growth of your church, your own peace and happiness to the glory of God.

The covenant is not a cast-iron stereotyped arrangement, but a specific catalogue of duties is to be followed and a distinct and definite course of action to be followed. I cannot charge you as to these things. I will draw a line and tell you to toe the mark. Your contract is as flexible as your hearts and lives, as elastic as your capacity to do good, to serve God, and to aid in the building of His Kingdom. It is to be worked out in a spirit of loyalty to Christ, evidenced by your daily conversation, prompted by the indwelling of the Holy Spirit.

Just living the life. Edgar Guest's lines on The Charge are apropos:

Find a place that gold can buy, or get up in a minute;

It's a home, there's got to be, a heap o' livin' in it." If this is to be a real, true successful pastorate, you've got to be a heap o' livin' in it. You will live your life to which will come joy and sorrow, pain and sunshine and shadow, spiritual depression and depression, and at every point your pastor's life will be yours, in heart to heart contact. Pastor, Shepherd, a beautiful relationship!

Will you put his life into it, will you? Without your cooperation the work will fail. The walls of Jerusalem were rebuilt after the Babylonian captivity in spite of the sneers and opposition of the enemies of the Jews because we are told, "The people had a mind to do it." Nehemiah could never have accomplished it otherwise.

Whatever how courageous and capable a leader may be, he cannot alone go over the top, and successfully storm the ranks of the enemy. Every man must be at his post. Every man must perform his individual duty, if success is to be achieved. Admiral Nelson signalled his fleet, "Engage every man to do his duty," and if men had done their duty that day, the battle of Trafalgar would have been lost. Our great Leader is not placing the responsibility of the success of this work in New Bern on your Pastor alone. His eyes are on you and he is requiring that every member of this congregation do his duty.

Are you looking to the pulpit to attract the masses and are you expecting that your pastor must be learned, eloquent, diligent, possessing personality and qualities that will draw for him a way into the hearts of the people.

Charge you that a preacher of whatever qualifications will draw men into the Church of Christ, through a dead and indifferent congregation. The people in the Church must do their part, they must exercise the personal qualities of cordial Christian courtesy, and sympathy and fellowship, in order to draw men into the Church of the Lord Whom they love. An attractive work-gathering is just as essential as an attractive pastor.

Have you solemnly promised to receive the Word of God from his mouth, with meekness and love. Does it come to you on a Sabbath morning? or Sabbath evening? or at a church meeting? sometimes? I charge you that it means much to you, and all the time. How can you receive the Word of God, if you are not present when it is delivered? The Word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than a two edged sword," and yet (I say it reverently) it has never heard of its having much effect on empty hearts. It must operate on living souls, and throbbing hearts to prove effective. You will expect his presence at every service. Has he not an equal right to expect the same fidelity from you in compliance with your covenant?

Friends, do not look for perfection in your pastor. It is not found in human nature. You would not want him if he was perfect. He would not fit into human relationships. He would have too little in common with his environment. Max Muller said, "A man without faults, was like a picture deficient in shadows; the shadows bring out the bright parts of the picture." Your pastor is a mere man, subject to the frailties of humanity.

"There's a fleck of rust on the flawless blade,
One the armor of prince there is one,
There's a mole on the cheek of the lovely maid;
There are spots upon the sun.

"But the Sword of Damascus has sheltered the weak;
The shield saved a knight from a fall,
The mole is a grace on my lady's cheek,
The sun, it shines for all."

And so shines a character, illumined by the grace of God.

You have promised to encourage him in his labors, and assist him in his endeavors. Let me tell you, he will need your encouragement and assistance and sympathy and prayers. His is a man's job, calling for all the strength and courage of his manhood, and it is only by your cooperation, and the help of the Holy Spirit, that he can successfully carry the burden, and accomplish the work.

You have promised him that competent support necessary to free him from worldly cares, and enable him to maintain his integrity, and the honor of religion. I feel that it would be altogether superfluous for me to charge this congregation to live up to their contract in this respect. It is a matter of common honesty. You and your pastor are to be yoke fellows, working together in sympathy and love and hearty co-operation, for the Glory of God, the salvation of immortal souls, and the upbuilding of this branch of His Zion.

And may the blessing of Almighty God crown your mutual endeavors with abundant fruit, and bring you that peace that passeth all understanding. In His Name, Amen.

THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF HOME MISSIONS AND THE MINISTERS' ANNUITY FUND

Rev. Homer McMillan, D.D., General Secretary
Home Missions of the Presbyterian Church, United States

The Executive Committee of Home Missions is in a position to understand what the Minister's Annuity Fund will mean to Home Missionaries, who spend their lives in difficult and discouraging fields. The salary of the Home Missionary has never been adequate to his needs. One of the tragedies of Home Missions is the number of faithful men and women who give their best years to the church with a wholly insufficient support, and have no assured income when the days of their weakness come.

Many strong men have turned aside from Home Mission work not because they were unwilling to endure hardships, but because they feel that have given their strength to this service they will be left destitute in their old age. The Ministers' Annuity Fund will give the Home Missionaries of the church the assurance of a modest support when they need it most, and the satisfaction of knowing that it has been provided by their own efforts.

The Executive Committee is in completest accord with the noble purpose of the Ministers' Annuity Fund and has pledged its cooperation in securing its full benefits for every Home Mission worker of the church.

OBITUARY

ROBERT WALTER SCOTT

Robert Walter Scott was born July 24, 1861, the son of Henderson Scott and Margaret Garham Kerr, and departed this life May 16, 1929.

May proved the great month of his Spiritual life for he united with Hawfields Presbyterian Church by professing faith in Jesus Christ, May 8, 1883, it was in the month of May, the exact date is May 8, 1887, that he was ordained and installed deacon in this church, and on May 10, 1897 that he was installed elder in the same church, and on May 16, 1929, he "entered into the joy of his Lord."

Mr. Scott was twice married. His first wife was Miss Lizzie J. Hughes and of this union ten children survive; Mrs. C. R. Hudson and Mrs. L. M. Smith both of Raleigh, R. W. Scott, Jr., of Bolton, Dr. Floyd Scott of Union Ridge, Kerr, Henry, Ralph, and Hughes Scott, of Hawfields, Miss Elizabeth Scott of Burlington, and Miss Agnes Scott, of Philadelphia, Pa.

His second wife who was Miss Ella B. Anderson who with his sister, Miss Mamie Scott, of Hawfields, also survive him.

It is not the purpose of this paper to tell of Mr. Scott's worth as a statesman, of his value to the community as a leader in his chosen profession, or shall we say "Calling" for he truly believed that God had "Called" him, as a farmer. Others have written more eloquently of that part of his work, we are thinking more of what he meant to God's Kingdom and especially to that part of the kingdom here, Hawfields Church. We feel that we might use that text, "Know ye not that there is a prince and a great man fallen this day in Israel."

We shall never know in this life what his help and words of sound advice meant to the young men of this community while he was here. We do know that for thirty-two years as a member of our session his wise counsel, and ever-ready willingness to help meant success where otherwise we would probably have failed.

In this short sketch it will be impossible to tell of all that Mr. Scott did for the church, the well endowed Cemetery at Hawfields is a monument to his efforts, the Sunday School Building is largely the result of his work which made the people willing to measure up to the challenge of the magnificent gift in memory of the late Stephen White.

Time and again he represented his church at Presbytery and Synod, always keeping in the background until last year when he was commissioned by Orange Presbytery to present to the General Assembly the gavel made from wood from the site of the old Hawfields Church where the Presbytery was organized. His thought to the last was for the Kingdom, and Hawfields Church's part in it.

He was a man of great vision, he saw things before they became a reality, we have heard him tell how he used to see the waste land covered with green grass long before it became a reality.

He knew that life was a trust, stewardship meant to him even the accounting to God of the way he used the soil. He believed in prayer. Just after the operation from which he never recovered, he asked his pastor to pray "that if it is God's will I'll get well, if not it's all right."

He loved the green fields, he said he had always wanted to die in the Spring when everything was green.

He loved his family, he loved his church, he loved his God, he was satisfied that he was going to be with Him and it was well.

And we the Session of Hawfields Church would offer our sympathy to the members of his family, and would bear this testimony to his worth to us. We shall miss his wise counsel and help, we shall miss him for he was our friend, yet since it was God's will to take him we too would say "it's all right."

The Session of Hawfields Church.

A man sitting by the bank of a river noticed some fish which from time to time came up to the surface and opened their mouths wide. On inquiry he discovered that these fish could only breathe to a certain extent under water, and had to rise to the surface occasionally for air. In the same way Christians need to rise above the things of earth and breathe the air of heaven, in prayer and worship and meditation.

NORTH CAROLINA

Maxton—Last Sunday, November 24, our congregation was privileged to have Mr. and Mrs. Crosby Adams of Montreat with us to take charge of the music at both services. Mr. Adams directed the choir and Mrs. Adams presided at the organ. The music was uplifting and inspiring and the main auditorium was about full both morning and night. At night our Methodist brethren worshipped with us, and a good many from surrounding towns took advantage of the opportunity to hear these gifted musicians.

Many expressed the wish that they might return, in the not too distant future, to help us again in our worship. The evening was given over almost exclusively to sacred music—the pastor leading a brief devotional service and making a few remarks on the importance of good music as a part of worship.

Union Thanksgiving service was held in the Presbyterian Church, Thursday, November 28, at which time the sermon was preached by Rev. J. B. Hurley, pastor of the Methodist Church, and the offerings were for the various denominational Orphanages.

E. L. Siler.

Robinson Church, Mecklenburg County—A great throng gathered at this Church on November 17, to celebrate the 43rd anniversary of the Church and to greet the founder of the Church, and its first pastor, Rev. C. W. Robinson, who has for the last 35 years been pastor of North Wilkesboro Presbyterian Church.

The treasured feature of the occasion was the presence of the old former pastor. Mr. Robinson is now 81 years old, and has lived a long and useful life. His 35 years in North Wilkesboro form the longest period of his life. The Mecklenburg Times, of Charlotte, has this to say about this honored minister:

"Measured by the yardstick of time, thirty-five years is not a long service, but measured by the span of human life thirty-five years means right considerable. In that time Mr. Robinson has seen many changes. Progress has stamped its impress in many ways on the community but progress has always found this man of God singing in tune and keeping step with the rhythm of its march song, so long as progress did not choose to follow roads uncharted by the Master.

"In those thirty-five years, men and women as tiny tots have been taken in his arms and baptized, and then later joined in holy wedlock; sorrow and death have come in an unending stream, and always was there the hand of sympathy and a finger pointed to God. Discouragements have not been unknown, hatreds and strife have been rampant, contentions and things to irritate have been rampant, neighbors have been unneighborly, and sometimes the storm brought rain, but always through the clouds was the great white light of Him who worketh all things well, and so this lieutenant of God marched on—with a smile. And he has grown old gracefully.

"No sermon or series of sermons he ever preached can compare to the sermon he has lived—for thirty-five years; and his philosophy of life, as exemplified in the living, is just as important as the theology he preached, and men may imitate that life with profit—if they would grow old gracefully."

Some of the original members of the Church were present at the gathering on November 17, and the following list gives the names of the pastors who have served the Church:

Revs. Charles W. Robinson, G. W. Belk, J. J. Harrell, J. A. McMurry, A. J. Crane, K. A. Campbell, George W. Cheek, J. C. Hardin and the present pastor, J. C. McGehee.

Lumberton—Rev. R. G. McLees, D.D., of Chatham, Va., conducted evangelistic services in this Church November 4-14. From the first service Doctor McLees won the hearts of the people. His preaching was with persuasiveness and spiritual power to increasing congregations. Members of other churches were deeply impressed and expressed the desire to have Doctor McLees return at some time for a union meeting.

Our church has experienced a gracious revival. There were nineteen professors of faith and two were received by letter.

ALBEMARLE CONFERENCES

Greenville, N. C.

The women of the Greenville Presbyterian held an all-day Mission Study Class Monday, November 4 at the home of Mrs. I. H. Stampley, Circle. The class was in charge of Mrs. P. G. Home Mission Secretary in the Auxiliary. The study was "The Crowded Ways," by Dr. Hatch Sears and presented an interesting study of reaching the un-churched of the South. The meeting was opened with a devotional hour conducted by Mrs. J. F. Brinkley, using as a basis of study, "Stewardship." The six chapters of the study were given by the following ladies: Mrs. E. W. Vey, Mrs. S. M. Crisp, Mrs. Guy Smith, Mrs. Harden, Mrs. N. S. Beard, Mrs. Chas. Horne. chapters were studied in the morning and three afternoon. At one o'clock a luncheon was served by the hostess. The afternoon devotional was conducted by Mrs. Wade Holmes, who used "Prayer" as her subject. About twenty-five members of the Auxiliary were present and the study proved helpful and interesting.

Pinetops, N. C.

Group number two of the Albemarle Presbyterian Auxiliary was held in Pinetops, N. C., on October 18, with Mrs. Plato Monk, of Farmville leader, presiding. The opening devotional was by Mrs. W. S. Harden, of Greenville, who used "separation" as the key word of her talk. Mrs. Gamble cordially welcomed the members of group and Mrs. D. B. Faison of Rocky Mount responded.

The feature of the morning service was the address of Mrs. W. T. Clarke, who, in her usual happy practical manner called attention to the following objectives for the coming year. That all Auxiliary members pay ten cents per capita, annually, for the upkeep of the Mission Court in Richmond. That White Cross quinine be paid on time. That all members subscribe to a copy of the church papers. That the Church School sessions be held. Personal consecration and loyalty to our Church. Mrs. Anna B. Fenner gave a stirring talk on Christian Education, emphasizing the important part which the home and the mother play in this vital matter.

The following secretaries presented their reports: Mrs. Ed Vick, Secretary of Home Mission; Jeannette Grainger, Young People's Work; Mr. Harden, Spiritual Life; Mrs. McPherson (read); Mrs. H. L. Hicks, Secretary of Orphanage; and Fountain, Secretary of Literature.

The collection was taken and turned over to the local Auxiliary for expenses. At the invitation of Mrs. J. J. Dunford, the conference adjourned to take of a bountiful luncheon.

The afternoon session was opened with prayer by Mrs. T. C. Turnage. A vocal solo was beautifully rendered by Mrs. M. V. Jones, of Farmville. The People's devotional worship was conducted by Mrs. W. W. Lyerly whose study text was "Thy Word is hid in my heart." Mrs. Grainger then gave an enthusiastic talk on the work of the young people, closing with a clever and appropriate poem. An interesting round table discussion was led by Mrs. Hart. The Courtesy Committee composed of Mrs. Hart, Mrs. Tobe Connor and Mrs. T. C. Younited its report which was received by a rising ovation of thanks.

The conference was closed with prayer by Mrs. Plato Monk, the entire group joining at the last in repeating the words of the theme for the year: "We are in Love as Christ Also Hath Loved Us."

Farmville, N. C.

The Farmville Auxiliary held a bazaar and dinner on Thursday, November 7th from which the members realized the nice sum of two hundred dollars, clear of expense. This money was used on a note which the Auxiliary owes for the purchase of a manse lot. The lot was bought in June,

Since that time, through the efforts of the of the church, over half the amount, with in- has been paid, the balance due being $632. The ry has only forty members, about half of which e said to be truly on the job.

A MESSAGE FROM THE MODERATOR

Rev. William Ray Dobyns, D.D.

All who have examined the proposed "Ministers' Unity Fund" plan, must surely have been impressed with its sanity, and with its practicability. The very best of insurance actuaries have approved it thoroughly, and commend it for adoption as a measure that will accomplish the very best for our men and women. It may be laid aside or whose families may be dependent. Let us adopt it by unanimous action put it at once into operation. We are all too busy devising the measure, but now let us waste no time in making it effective. Did you ever commend the good sense of business corporations with manifested by the Church?

Should the Church allow such a contrast? Let us redeem ourselves, by making adequate recognition of self-denying service—and it can be done by putting our proposed plan into action. It is fair both to the minister and church, and it just to all grades of members.

A CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR PARTY

Organized by the Recreation Department of the National Society of Christian Endeavor, Carroll Street, 41 Mt. Vernon St., Boston, Mass. The material was arranged by Miss Eleanor C. and provided for Playtime by the Recreation Department of the Michigan Christian Endeavor Society, Miss Alta G. Griffin, Supt. The party, two weeks previous to the "birthday party" have been held who is a general favorite in the society and that he "has wind" of a ship to "come in." rather than this he cannot say, but he requests each to reserve Friday evening, January 31 (or some other suitable date.) Hang posters around the Christian Endeavor room and the church, with silhouettes of ships. Under each ship put a question mark; nothing more. On the following Sunday, have the same party and announce that he was too hasty in his earlier decision, for he has learned that—"If a mariner's wise

He looks to the skies
To see what he is about.
And he never expects
Any ships to come in,
If he hasn't sent any ships out."

On this same night, suspended from the ceiling or picture molding, have ships of a good size cut from black poster paper, each labelled across the back with the name "Christian Endeavor." Have the members then pass out little silhouette ships made on card paper, asking each member to "bring in" his ship on Friday evening, with as many pennies in the pocket as he has acquired years of living (a penny for each year); for on that night there is to be a Party for Christian Endeavor, when gifts brought in by the many ships will be given to the Union.

When the evening of the party arrives, have the guests met at the door by a pirate dressed with all the trimmings—bright girde, large ear rings (bracelets, fastened to his ears), tatoos on his forearms, etc. The pirate confiscates the gifts (pennies) that the guests bring and puts them all in a sack suspended from his neck which is labelled "GOLD."

As the guests enter the room in which the social evening is held, label each with a small ship on which is written the name of the month in which he was born. As those born within the same month come, the Captain designates the members of his crew. In addition to the Captain, there will be a First Mate, Fireman, Deck hands, Engineer, First Mate, Second Mate, Helmsman, Watchman, etc. From this point on, through the whole evening, each guest must

DIRECTION OF FOREIGN MISSION WORK IN GENERAL

SECURING OF MISSIONARIES

In recent years nearly 500 young young men and women have applied to the Executive Committee of Foreign Missions for appointment as foreign missionaries. About 265 of these have been appointed and 225 have already been sent to the foreign field.

Enrolled in the Candidate Department are the names of 201 young men and women who purpose to become foreign missionaries as soon as they complete their preparation. For instance, at a recent meeting of the Committee 22 young people applied for appointment.

It is the policy of the Executive Committee to consider carefully the applications of any who wish to apply for missionary appointment. If, in the judgment of the Committee, the applicant possesses the necessary qualifications, the appointment is made and the appointee is requested to take work in the home field for at least a year, and a longer period if age permits, testing gifts of leadership, executive ability, personal influence, and laying special stress on evangelistic work and heart to heart dealing with individuals as a necessary part of preparation for work abroad. Nearly all the missionary recruits who have been sent out in recent years have spent, after their appointment, from one to three years in service in the home field.

On an average, about 15 of our foreign missionaries annually are lost to the work by broken health, resignation, or death. However, within the church year ending March 31, 1929, sixty-five of our missionaries were lost from our active force. At present there are 434 missionaries on the roll. The number steadily is declining. The Executive Committee for want of sufficient income has not been able in the past two years to send recruits for all necessary replacements to fill the broken missionary ranks. The missions are urging the Executive Committee to send out about 50 new missionaries this year. The present income of the Committee is not sufficient to provide for the support of the missionaries now actively at work on the field, so that it will not be possible for the Executive Committee to send out the new missionaries for when the Missions are calling until there is a substantial increase in the Committee's annual income. If the Church does not support the missionaries now under appointment, it does not seem wise to send out the new missionary recruits.

Qualification of Candidates

The following statement by the Executive Committee of Foreign Missions outlines in general the qualifications required for appointment to foreign missionary service:

"The work needs the best the Church can give. We seek quality rather than quantity. We require men of more than ordinary capacity, energy, tact, administrative ability, common sense, and devotion to Christian work; men possessed of a sweet and strong spiritual life and experience, acting from the highest and most disinterested motives, and themselves affording in their lives a bright example of the gospel of Christ which they go to teach and to preach. At the same time, the Executive Committee would not be misunderstood as requiring an unreasonable standard, and so discourage many young men and women of excellent qualifications whose estimate of themselves is too modest to allow them to think highly of their fitness for the work.

"The general qualifications for missionary service do not differ materially from those which render a minister or other Christian worker useful and acceptable at home. They are such as sound health and an unimpaired constitution, good intellectual ability developed and disciplined by education; strong common sense; freedom from eccentricity; a reasonable facility in acquiring languages; aptness to teach; a consistent and healthful piety; prayerful habits; a familiarity with and love for the Bible; a large degree of sympathy; good temper; cheerfulness, tact and courtesy; a loving sense of humor; adaptability to men and circumstances; ability to work in harmony with others; and persistent energy in the execution of plans once formed and adopted.

"It is important and desirable that candidates seeking appointment should have had experience in active Christian work at home. Experience as a successful pastor or Christian worker in the homeland is regarded as an excellent evidence of qualification for the work abroad.

"Any gift, talent, or acquirement which is likely to add to one's usefulness at home will add at least as much abroad. Nowhere are special gifts and aptitude more needed, and nowhere will they bring larger rewards to the servant or greater glory to the Master. The work is so great, so difficult, so exacting, so far-reaching in its purpose and consequences, as to demand the very best men and women, and all that is best in these. It is quite as important that the missionary be a person of refinement and personal culture, and that he or she be endowed with social gifts and graces, as it is for the worker at home to be thus constituted and endowed."

SECURING OF FUNDS

The Executive Committee of Foreign Missions depends for its support upon two principle sources, (1) the income from benevolent budgets of local churches raised usually by the Every Member Canvass, and (2) the income from individuals, groups, or congregations who have assumed special support in whole or in part of a person or institution on the foreign field. The Foreign Mission Committee endorses most heartily the idea of a benevolent budget for every church, this having been proved the wisest method of raising money for all Causes in any congregation. Any local church which is carrying out the Assembly's recommendation appropriates --- per cent of this budget to Foreign Missions. Unfortunately, many churches have changed the Assembly's apportionments, thus reducing the Foreign Mission income and the amount of work the Foreign Mission Committee is able to carry on. The Every Member Canvass and the budget are the Foreign Mission Committee's principal source of income.

There are always individuals, however, who desire a special piece of work which they may claim as their own. To such as especially desire it a Foreign Mission connection is afforded by assigning to that person, in whole or in part, the annual per capita cost of a foreign missionary. This per capita cost is $2,700.00 per annum, but for those who cannot assume such a large share in the work this may be divided up into any multiple of $300.00. In addition to this, on several fields the annual cost of native helpers are assigned to individuals for personal support, or one may take a share in support of a particular institution on the foreign field. Young People's Societies and Sunday Schools annually are asked to undertake a particular portion of the Foreign Mission Committee's work, thus allowing full opportunity to all to personalize their gift Foreign Mission gifts.

ADMINISTRATION OF FOREIGN MISSION FUNDS

Home Treasurer

According to the Manual under which the Foreign Mission Committee operates, "The Treasurer of the Committee is the custodian of the funds, and through him they shall be paid out." Incident to this is the keeping of all accounts in connection with the conduct of the business through the home office and supervision of all the accounts on the various mission fields. The Treasurer in Nashville is responsible for the handling of over a million and a half dollars including endowments and other special funds entrusted to the Committee.

Field Treasurers

In order to facilitate the handling of funds, each Mission has a Treasurer of its own through whom the Nashville Treasurer works in disbursing money to the fields. These Mission Treasurers are elected by their respective Missions and keep all field accounts and conduct all correspondence relative to reporting to the home office. In Africa and Korea this work is so heavy that the Treasurers have to devote their entire time to office business. The two China Missions use the same Treasurer, he being a member of the Associated Mission Treasurers of Shanghai, a group conducting the business of several of the large Mission Boards in China. In the other Missions the Treasurers are regular missionaries who handle the business part of the work in connection with other missionary duties.

New Budgets Are Made

Much is heard about the Foreign Mission budget of our Church. Where does this budget come from and how is it arrived at?

Each Mission of our Church requires each mission station at the annual meeting of the Mission to submit to it the station estimates for the work for the coming year. These separate station budgets are gone over most carefully by the Mission in session, and the combined budgets of these stations become the budget of that Mission. In recent years the arrival at the final figure which the station asks for the conduct of its work comes only after serious contemplation and much squeezing. Every effort is made in the part of the Mission to see that each dollar is well spent and only absolutely necessary items are included in the Mission asking. These askings are then submitted to the Foreign Missions Committee in Nashville, are gone over carefully by the Business sub-Committee of the Executive Committee, and after being duly scrutinized and adjusted are made the basis for all Foreign Mission Committee estimates for its work the following year. All appropriations against these budgets are made by the Executive Committee on the basis of average receipts for the two preceding calendar years as ordered by the General Assembly.

Note, however, that these station and Mission budgets have made no provision during recent years for any new buildings or new mission equipment. Only money sent in by individuals and designated especially as "gifts for equipment" are appropriated for this purpose.

THE CHRISTIAN SPIRIT IN INDUSTRY

Exodus 1:8-14; 20:17; Dt. 24:14, 15; Amos 5:6-15;
Zech. 8:16, 17; Mt. 20:1-16; Mk. 12:1-9; Lk 3:14;
Eph. 6:5-9; I Tim. 6:17-19.

We have dealt by now with a number of different social problems in which the Bible is especially interested, but with none more difficult, more crucial than that now before us—the Christian spirit in industry. It is a problem which just now has particular importance for us here in the South. We have started on a great era of industrial expansion. Industry is moving South, in part because of our natural resources, in part because of our favorable climate, in part at least because there is an abundant supply of cheap and unorganized labor, and less restrictions on industries than in some other states with a longer industrial history. In a sense then the South is standing at the cross roads. If an industry is fastened upon us lacking the Christian spirit it will prove a curse rather than a blessing, not only to those who labor but also to the entire South. It will blight the physical, moral and spiritual development of our people, it will lead to a series of industrial disputes with consequences perhaps even more disastrous than some of those which have already occurred. Now is the time then above all other times when we need to consider what it means to have the Christian spirit in industry. Let us then consider that spirit.

I. As Exhibited in Moses

Read Ex. 1:8-14, and in connection therewith 3:7-8.

If Moses had lived in our day he would have been considered as a labor agitator, possibly a Bolshevik. C. F. Kent says, "Political and economic conditions in the land of Egypt during the thirteenth century before Christ were the result of a long process of development. The land of the Nile is naturally isolated. Originally it was divided into a large number of small independent states. Only gradually were they united. The invasion of the Hyksos conquerors about the twentieth century before Christ led them in desperation to acknowledge the absolute authority of the king of the eighteenth (Theban) Dynasty. After a long struggle these rulers succeeded in expelling the invaders (under whom Joseph had advanced to the highest place in the Kingdom) and in extending the boundaries of Egypt until they included Syria and Palestine. The deliverance, however, was purchased at great cost to the common people. All political power and most of the wealth of the empire were gathered into the hands of a small ruling class. Under the succeeding nineteenth Dynasty social conditions grew even more intolerable. The local nobility disappeared and the kings became absolute despots, holding in their irresponsible hands all the vast resources of the empire and the lives of their subjects. A huge bureaucracy of minor officials who were the paid tools of the tyrant in his name controlled all commerce and collected as high as 20 per cent tax on all products of the soil. For the individual citizen there was no redress nor escape from this economic as well as political thralldom. Upon the thousands of captives and foreigners then found in the land of Egypt this intolerable burden rested most heavily. Ramses II the fourth king of the nineteenth dynasty who reigned 67 years (1292-1225 B. C.) was one of the greatest masters of industry that has ever appeared in human history. He was a man of unbounded energy and gifted with a remarkable organizing ability. All Egypt was put to work to satisfy his inordinate ambition. In every respect he was a perfect type of the unprincipled captain of industry. The unorganized Hebrew clans were helplessly caught in the meshes of Pharaoh's industrial system. Their lives were made bitter with hard service in mortar and brick. As their numbers continued to increase and their resentment became more evident, their burden was made more crushing. With absolutely no prospect of escape, sullen, sodden and hungry, these hopeless serfs were compelled under the lash to toil at the vast enterprises which completed their bondage."

This was the situation when Moses first appeared upon the scene. Born of Hebrew parents he was found down on the river bank by the daughter of Pharaoh, and brought up by her as one of the princes of Egypt. "The supreme crisis in his life came to him in his young manhood—the period when most prophets awaken to their mission. A cruel act of oppression suddenly aroused his loyalty to his kinsmen and so stirred his social consciousness that he awoke to a vivid realization of the injustice of Pharaoh's policy. Hot-headed and red-handed he attacked it by slaying a cruel Egyptian taskmaster (Ex. 2:11-12). Painful experience soon taught him that violence never helps but always hurts a just cause. His act probably brought only added woe to his kinsmen. Even they misunderstood and openly resented his interference. The trouble was that his zeal was misdirected and his method was not constructive."

Because of his rash act Moses was forced to flee from the land of Egypt, and the next forty years of his life he spent as a shepherd wandering over the Arabian wilderness. "In the calm, free atmosphere of the desert he saw more clearly by contrast the colossal injustice of the Egyptian industrial system. The great wrong which he had in a pitifully inadequate and unwise way attempted to right, still remained, and he could not forget it. Doubtless he listened eagerly to the stray bits of information regarding conditions in Egypt that sifted out into the wilderness. At last news came that the great taskmaster who for more than six decades had held the people of Egypt under his pitiless lash, was dead." It was something more, however, than the knowledge of the changed political conditions in Egypt that transformed the Hebrew fugitive into the intrepid and tactful champion of a seemingly impossible cause. More important was that great spiritual experience, that new conception of God that came to him as he fed his sheep on the side of Mount Horeb. The outstanding fact in the narrative is Moses' "vivid consciousness of Jehovah's presence and power. For the first time in human history Moses clearly realized that the God back of the universe is a God of justice and mercy who sympathizes with the socially oppressed. Simply and directly the early Judean prophetic narrative states the truth which is the corner stone of Israel's faith (Ex. 3:7-8): Jehovah said, I have surely seen the affliction of my people that are in Egypt, and have heard their cry of anguish because of their taskmasters, for I know their sorrows; and I am come down to deliver them out of the power of the Egyptians."

Fortified by this conviction, unable to escape the sense of his own divine mission, Moses went to Egypt, championed the cause of the industrially oppressed Hebrews, and finally led them out of their bondage into the freedom of the promised land.

Read Exodus 20:17.

The Ten Commandments as set before us as in Exodus 20 formed the basis of the Covenant which God made with Israel through Moses at Mount Sinai. The fourth Commandment repeated, later by Moses in Dt. 5:12 harks back for its sanction to Israel's experience in Egypt. "Thou shalt remember that thou wast a servant in the land of Egypt and Jehovah thy God brought thee out thence by a mighty hand and by an outstretched arm: therefore Jehovah thy God commanded thee to keep the Sabbath day." Our attention, however, is directed by our lesson committee to the tenth commandment: Thou shalt not covet, Moses knew beyond doubt of the evils to which covetousness led. He had seen human rights subordinated to the greed for gold, for power, for fame. In the simple agricultural civilization which was then being developed in Israel he wished to avoid this danger. Therefore, "Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's house, thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's wife, nor his man servant, nor his maid servant, nor his ox, nor his ass, nor anything that is thy neighbor's."

Read Dt. 24:14-15. Israel's fundamental laws were given them at Mount Sinai. Moses repeated them and enforced them to the second generation before they crossed the Jordan, as recorded for us in Deuteronomy. These laws breathe a noble spirit of consideration for the poor and the needy, and show plainly enough where the sympathies of Moses, and the God for whom he spoke were placed. As our single example of the spirit of these laws we have the passage in 24:14-15. Thou shalt not oppress a hired servant that is poor and needy, . . . in his day thou shalt give him his hire, neither shall the sun go down upon it (for he is poor, and setteth his heart upon it); lest he cry against thee unto Jehovah, and it be sin unto thee. Of course, Moses was speaking to a people who had none of the problems of our modern industry. If he were speaking to our own day he would have undoubtedly added further specifications. He would have said perhaps: Pay a living wage; do not work men over hours, or women at night, or children at an age when they should be in school.

II. As Exhibited in the Prophet Amos

Read Amos 5:6-15. Moses was the founder of Israel's religion. The greatest single advance that was brought about in Israel's understanding of God after Moses was that accomplished by the great literary prophets of the eighth century and afterwards. The first of this new line of prophets and one of the greatest, because he was the pioneer, was Amos. He prophesied in Israel at a time when the nation was at its height of prosperity. He pointed out that it was a prosperity founded on injustice to the poor, and that such a civilization could not endure.

A sample of his preaching is found in Amos 5:6-15. It is an exceedingly rich passage, but we cannot mention anything else than that which bears directly on our theme, the Christian spirit in industry. If we begin to read at verse 6 we may conclude that the men whom Amos was addressing were not religious men. Why otherwise should he urge them to seek the Lord? If we begin to read back at verse 4, however we see that he is talking to habitual church goers, men who throng the religious shrines of Israel, Bethel, Gilgal and Beersheba. These were not heathen shrines, they were shrines where Jehovah the God of Israel was outwardly honored and ostensibly worshipped. What Amos quite evidently means to say was that no man who treats his fellowman unfairly has yet found God. The man who turns justice to wormwood and who casts down righteousness to the earth may go to church, but that is not enough, he needs really to seek God. These business men, these industrial leaders that Amos has in mind do not take kindly to reproof. "They hate him that reproveth at the gate, and they abhor him that speaketh uprightly. Forasmuch therefore," continues Amos, "as ye trample upon the poor, ye take exaction from him of wheat; ye have built of hewn stone, but ye shall not dwell in them. . . . did these men trample upon the poor? We do not know. Amos does not say that they broke any human law, nevertheless they did not consider the poor, they put no gain above human good, perhaps they paid inadequate wages, worked their men at long hours, under unfavorable conditions, perhaps they charged too much for goods, or exploited natural resources which should have enriched all the people,—we do not know. Men do not upon the poor in different ways in different ages. Amos that allowed such injustice, said Amos, was headed for destruction. "Seek good, and not evil that ye may live, and so Jehovah the God of hosts will be with you. Hate the evil and love the good, and establish justice in the gate: it may be that Jehovah the God of Israel will be gracious unto the remnant of Joseph."

III. As Exhibited in John the Baptist

Read Luke 3:14. John the Baptist, the last of the prophets, and the forerunner of the Gospel, was in the industrial situation like his predecessors, his sympathies like theirs were on the side of the poor. He came calling the people to repentance. "And the multitude asked him saying, What then must we do? He answered and said unto them, He that hath two tunics let him impart to him that hath none; and he that hath food let him do likewise. And there came also unto him to be baptized, and they say unto him, Teacher must we do? And he said unto them, Extort from no man that which is appointed you. And soldiers also asked saying, and we, what must we do? And he said unto them, Extort from no man by violence, neither accuse a wrongfully." We gather that he would disapprove violence in modern labor disputes. He also urged that men should be content with their wages. Does this injunction to workmen today? We doubt it. Because John the Baptist said that soldiers in his day should be content with their wages is certainly no reason why all workmen should be content with their wages till the end of time. Standards are being raised; fortunes are being made by leaders of industry as well as by investors; many laborers are underpaid. We cannot gather that it is wrong to desire a raise in wages, we can gather that it is wrong to extort money, by robbery, or by fraud, from employees, or the public.

IV. As Exhibited in Jesus

Read Mt. 20:1-16 and Mark 12:1-9. They are not most characteristic teachings on the subject, but the passages assigned by our lesson committee are doubtless the first parable has any bearing upon the Christian spirit in industry. The parable Jesus did not tell it with that purpose in view. His disciples were asking Jesus about their rewards in future life. Then Jesus told them the parable. He told them that those who heard the Gospel message later responded to that message when it came would be rewarded equally with the twelve in the rewards of the Kingdom. If it does have anything to do with the Christian spirit in industry it does not mean that it is lawful for an employer to do what he pleases with his own. It suggests that employers should pay a just wage to all, and a fair wage to all.

The second parable too was not intended to throw light on the proper conduct of industry. Rather was revealing by means of a parable the rulers' attitude toward himself. And yet there may be a proper application of the parable to the matter with which we are concerned. Jesus certainly does not approve of the attitude of the husbandmen. We cannot conceive that he would approve of violence in labor disputes now.

V. As Exhibited in Paul

In Paul's day civilization was organized very differently from what it is today. It was predominantly a slave civilization. Almost all manual labor was done by slaves. In Eph. 6:5-9 Paul lays down certain principles which should govern the relations of slaves and masters. Slaves were to be obedient to their masters. This injunction of course cannot apply to present day labor. Slaves are free, and though in a modern factory there is some sort of order Paul's injunction would apply in a very modified sense. (2) Slaves were to do their work as unto God. Surely this injunction applies to workmen today, whether he work by brain or by muscle. (3) Masters were to conduct themselves toward slaves in a way that they could answer for unto God. Paul is particularly concerned that they should not abuse their authority. We would certainly agree that this injunction is still in force.

In I Tim. 6:17-19 Paul adds another word of warning to the rich: "Charge them that are rich in this world that they be not high minded, nor have the set on the uncertainty of riches. . . ." The danger is that men setting their minds on wealth shall come to live lives dominated by wealth. One remedy for such a condition is charity. Charge them to "do good, that they be rich in good works, that they be ready to distribute. But not even charity can take the place of justice."

VI. As Applied to Our Modern Situation

1. The Prophets both of the Old and the New Testaments condemned industrial oppression. Would it be any test against any conditions in our national industry, any conditions in our southern industry? Several years before the recent industrial disturbances in the South the Bishop Cannon associated with 41 other prominent ministers called attention to certain backward in-in our southern states, e. i. the 11-hour day four night and the 60-hour week for all workers in North Carolina and Georgia; the 55-hour week in South Carolina, and the absence of all limits as in Alabama. The possible 11-hour day in North Carolina and the possible 10-hour day in South Carolina between 14 and 16. The all night, 12 hours day for men and men, and night work for women in any such conditions," Bishop Cannon says truly, "are breeding, cruel and inhuman, and except in such cases preclude all opportunity for self-culture and development, and cannot be justified by any plea of economic necessity." The final evil denounced is the acceptance of children in the mills without certificates from their physicians. Since he wrote startling developments have focused the attention of America on conditions in Southern industrial communities. Impartial inquirers, Southern editors and other agree that in many places tolerable conditions exist.

Prophets of the Old and New Testament condemn covetousness. Does covetousness play any part in our modern industrial civilization? Do men really gain above human welfare? Have men a right to make what they can out of industry? What should guide an employer in paying wages: the needs of the wage scale of the community; what the employer can afford to accept; a living wage as a basis; or a proportion to earnings?

There was a labor agitator. He organized the children and led them out of Egypt. The rights of labor were secured largely through organization. Just a group of union labor officials gathered to form a union or unionizing the south. President Thos. F. Green of the United Textile Workers of America (a Christian) said he believed there had never been a better opportunity than the present for unionization in the South. Hundreds of thousands of textile workers are clamoring for organization, he said, and the Southern sentiment is antagonistic to the movement. He recommended enlisting the co-operation of open business men, newspaper editors, churches, colleges and the professions. President Green of the American Federation of Labor (a Baptist) said: "We will be as agitators come South to disturb the peaceful relations now existing between employers and employees. Opposition will come to us from leaders in the business and in the professions, as well as from the owners. But they are not all against us. There are mill owners I am sure that would gladly join in remedying inhuman conditions that now exist." How do we as Christians encourage or oppose such unionizing in the South? Recollect that there is not a trace of socialism connected with the American Federation of Labor or with the United Textile Workers of America?

Prophets of the Old and New Testaments condemn violence in industrial disputes. Is violence as reprehensible when used by employers as by employees? Swift action has been meted out in North Carolina to labor agitators (communists) who resorted to violence. Should determined efforts be made to mete justice out of the hands of representatives of the employing class who resorted to violence? Is it proper to turn sentiment against men on the basis of appealing to their communistic tenets? Should the people be content to leave a law on the statute books of a great state that strikes out the testimony of a man who does not believe in future punishment and thus hinders the securing of justice?

Prophets of the Old and New Testament tell us that God was interested in industrial conditions. Is He interested? Should organized Christianity be interested? The Industrial Commission of the Georgia Baptist Convention has just declared that "an undernourished mother of poverty, disease, immorality, and long hours, low wages, docile labor, is an economic mistake. A man's wage should be enough to support himself and his family in reasonable-comfort." Right to organize and bargain collectively was recognized by the commission as inalienable, and it declared that wages that obtain in nearly all lines of industry are due to the work and influence of American labor. The religious forces of the South and the North are standing for a shorter work day for women, for better wages, a fair day's wage for men, for the elimination of the stretch out, for the protection of the older children, and for the elimination of night work for women and children. Do you or do you not approve of such a statement? What can the church do to extend the Christian influence in industry?

for this part of our Church work, advises that several plans for promoting these causes have been prepared for our people.

A Christmas service for the whole congregation and community, for twilight of the Sunday before Christmas, is being sent to pastors and Sunday School superintendents. This service offers opportunity for life dedication and for a contribution to aid fatherless children in the homes of our ministers and missionaries.

The book of Christmas Carols formerly published by the Committee, has been revised and is one of the choicest books of carols that can be secured anywhere. A copy of this book, or several copies, will be valuable to choir and congregation, young people or older ones.

In line with the Evangelism emphasis throughout the church, several booklets have been issued which will help Christian students and others to develop as personal workers. The booklets are: "Personal Work: How Organized and Accomplished," by John R. Mott and C. K. Ober; "Christ as a Personal Worker," by L. W. Messer; and "Christ Among Men," by James McConaughy." Secure these and try to promote a personal workers' training class to labor with our Southern students.

Address Rev. H. H. Sweets, D.D., 410 Urban Bldg., Louisville, Ky., for these various pieces of literature. Dr. Sweets and his committee are deeply interested in the young people.

On the second day of February next year the Christian Endeavor movement will be forty-nine years old. The Travel and Recreation Department of the International Society of C. E., Boston, Mass., has issued, through the little monthly publication, Playtime, an interesting plan for a Christian Endeavor Birthday Party. We are going to give our readers this plan in the Standard as space permits. Many will doubtless wish to use it and take an offering for C. E. work, but the plan is suited to a birthday party for any number of organizations or purposes.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S TOPIC

Sunday, December 15: What Have Young People to Give?—References: Matt. 25:14-30; II Cor. 8:1-15.

C. G. A.

For the Leader

Last Sunday we discussed what Christ has to give youth, and today we are going to look at the question from the other side and see what you have to give Christ. We mentioned last Sunday that Christ has a sympathetic understanding of youth, because he was himself young in years when he was crucified; that Christ will give us power over temptations, because he was tempted even as we are; and that Christ will mold our personality into a lovable personality like his own. And over all and through all there is love. What can youth give in return for all these graces?

Accept What Christ Has to Give

First of all, we must accept what Christ has to give us, before we can give anything to him. We tie our own hands if we try to give first. He is Master—we are bondservants. At least we will be bondservants if we accept what Christ has to give—and the bond is Love. Accepting what Christ has to give is just another way of saying that we must first give ourselves. He gave himself, and we in return must give him no less than ourselves. Paul says that the churches of Macedonia gave themselves to the Lord to begin with and then gave generously of their means, though they were themselves poor. "Love lies in this, not in our love for him, but in his love for us." "We love because he first loved us."

Giving Our Youth

"Let no man despise thy youth, but be thou an example to them that believe," wrote Paul to Timothy, and also to Titus. "Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth—Remember also thy Creator in the days of thy youth, before the evil days come and the years draw nigh, when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them."

One of the most precious things that we can give Christ is our Youth. If we do not give him our youth, we cannot expect to be of much service to him in our mature years. During youth our ideals are formed and if those ideals are low and mean, we cannot expect them to jump suddenly upward when we have finished with our youth. We may be ashamed of having such low ideals, but shame is a poor substitute for purity. If we live very close to the Master, we shall not have to be ashamed of our ideals because constant association with him will hold our ideals and our lives. In youth, we must be about our Father's business.

Giving Our Intelligence

When we get into the sphere of religion, we leave those things that can be touched and handled. We get into the realm of the supernatural. Consequently it is easy to put aside intelligence and reason in dealing with religion. It is very easy to moralize and say sweet nothings about the realm of the soul. Christianity demands thought and real intelligence. You think—perhaps—that if you think too hard that you will get into difficulty with questions that you can't answer. But if you keep on thinking and searching for an answer, you will find it. Don't stop using your intelligence. A great many people stop thinking when they have thought of a question and are blinded by doubt so that they do not look for an answer. Young people today are the leaders of tomorrow, and Christ calls on you to use your intelligence for him to lead the world into a better understanding of God. "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he."

Giving Our Time

How about gifts of time for the Master? And our money—which is coined time? Giving our time in helping out at Sunday School, in teaching or helping with the singing or playing the piano, is more valuable than sending our money and staying at home. Our presence at Sunday School and Church not only helps us, but helps those with whom we come in contact. Social Service calls for time and money, and in helping those who have not as many blessings as we have we show the Master that we are willing stewards. Let us not take the talent which the Master has left in our keeping and hide it in a napkin or squander it on ourselves. Let us use it—not abuse it. And when the Lord of the Stewards comes, may he approve of our gains. May we not have to explain with shame why we have not more to offer him!

Attainment

Use all your hidden forces. Do not miss The purpose of this life, and do not wait For circumstance to mold or change your fate. In your own self lies destiny. Let this Vast truth cast out all fear, all prejudice, All hesitation. Know that you are great, Great with divinity. So dominate Environment, and enter into bliss— Love largely and hate nothing. Hold no aim That does not chord with universal good. Hear what the voices of the silence say, All joys are yours if you put forth your claim, Once let the spiritual laws be understood, Material things must answer and obey.

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

be addressed or spoken of only as Captain, First Mate, etc. Those who forget are to be penalized a penny for each violation of the rule.

When the entire company is assembled, it will be necessary to equalize the numbers in each group. When the groups are organized and equal, announce that the speed of the various ships is to be tested before sending them out to sea. Have the various crews (groups) form circles, each one in the circle taking hold of his neighbor's hand. The Captain then drops out of the circle to serve as "starter." At a given signal, the Captain of each crew starts going going around the circle in under one pair of arms and out under the next, weaving in and out, until he reaches his own place where he touches off the next racer, or crew member to his right. This member does the same thing, and touches the third and so on. The crew finishing first has the fastest ship.

Having tested the worthiness and speed of the ships, the crews must be tested, for there is hardship and privation to be encountered at sea. Each crew stands in a row, with the Captain at one end; near him is placed a small wooden box containing some plain soda crackers, and labelled "Hard Tack." At the signal, the Captain takes a cracker from the box and begins to eat it. As soon as he can whistle after eating the cracker, the next member begins, and so on down the line. (Members of the Social Committee will have to serve as judges to listen for the "whistle" of each member.) The crew finishing first wins.

But further, the ability of the crew to manage a ship must be tested. For this, have half walnut shells, with a half of a birthday candle in each. There should be as many little ships as there are crew members, and if possible a tub of water for each crew. If this is impossible, have as many tubs as you can and let the members of the various crews take turn about, blowing the walnut shells, one at a time, across the "sea" (tub), without blowing out the candle. The crew sailing the greatest number of ships across the "sea" successfully wins. Penalty of a penny fine can be added for capsizing the ship or blowing the ship's light out.

And Now to Sea!

A revised form of "Going to Jerusalem" may be as follows: Place chairs around the room, one less than the total number of crew members. About three feet inside these chairs and toward the center of the room, draw a chalk line, or use a white cotton cord pinned to the carpet. The space laid off in the center by this line represents the "Sea" and the chairs the "Ports." Penalize any who march on the line or in the "sea." The pianist may play sailor songs for the marching, such as, "Nancy Lee," "Sailing," "Blow, Boys, Blow," and "Out on the Deep."

A letter for you, Jim," said Bernie, his sister, handing him the envelope and standing expectantly by, "I thought we ought to open it in case it was something very important, but Mother said "No, it's Jim's letter."

"You better not open my mail," remarked Jim sternly.

Jim did not often get any mail and it was a real thrill that he read his letter. It was from Gramp, an old gentleman who lived with two unmarried granddaughters who taught school.

"Dear James," so ran the letter written in a neat, flourishing hand; "I have a bad stiffness in my right shoulder which has laid me up several days. Please come and see me as soon as possible. There is something special I wish to talk over with you.

"Yours truly,
Thomas D. Flynn."

"Say, when do we have supper?" Jim inquired.

"Right now," said his mother, so Jim had to postpone his visit until after the meal.

When he reached Gramp's home, he found the old gentleman nursing his shoulder before an open fire in his room, which he always called his "apartment."

"Well," was his greeting, "I thought you would never come."

Jim, of course, made his excuses and then sat back to hear the reason for his summons.

"James," began Gramp, "you are thirteen years old, I understand. Do you believe in Santa Claus?"

"Yes," smiled, "I believe in Santa Claus, and his helpers, too."

"Very good," twinkled the old gentleman. "How would you like to become a helper?"

"Just fine!"

"Can you keep a secret?" was the next question.

"My Dad's a Scotchman and I take after him," grinned the boy. "Yes, sir, I guess I can keep a secret all right."

"Well then, you'll do," said Mr. Flynn. "Come up to attic with me."

Very mystified and amused, Jim followed the old gentleman up the narrow attic stairs. A strong smell of paint greeted them and then they were confronted by a rare sight. The whole attic was full of old broken toys from automobiles to jumping jacks.

"You see all this," explained Mr. Flynn, waving his hand. "These are practically all of them old Christmas toys. I am a Santa Claus helper. There isn't much I can do now and I like to putter, so for years I've been renewing old toys for this town and being paid rather well for my services. Take for instance this toy auto. It's lost its tires and the axle is bent and the paint rubbed off, and it looks as if somebody's hammered it with something. Well, I'll put on new tires, pound out the dents in the hood, straighten the axle and give her a fresh coat of paint, maybe put a new horn on, or a fancy radiator cap. It'll be like new.

"Then take this doll," said Gramp. "Wig all matted, arm off, face cracked. I mend all that and then fit it out in new clothes from that box which my daughters keep filled with dolls' clothes, shoes and hats."

"Gee!" exclaimed Jim. "How much do you get for all that?"

"Well, I'll charge four dollars for fixing up that old car and a dollar for the doll, and charge for the extras I have to buy for 'em," was the reply.

"That's pretty soft for the parents," said Jim. "A car like that new must cost about twelve dollars and that doll looks as if it was a good one."

"A doll like this would run into money," said Gramp. "Now, Jim, how would you like to take over some of this while my shoulder's so bad?"

"Of course, I'd like to earn some money," was Jim's reply.

So it was arranged on the spot and Jim became Gramp's partner. Horns, toy pianos, kiddie cars, tricycles, doll houses and all sort of things came out all shiny and new. They even mended some pistols and guns. Toy furniture and sleds were

INTERESTING WINDOWS

(To be colored with paints or crayons. Whenever you come to a word spelled in CAPITAL letters use that color.)

When YELLOW-haired Susie May and BROWN-haired Teddy were downtown in a big store they saw some very interesting windows indeed.

Susie May was dressed in a dark-BLUE velvet coat and a RED tam and she wore her YELLOW dress and BROWN kid gloves.

Teddy wore a GREEN sweater with bands of ORANGE (use RED and YELLOW) about the chest, waist, neck and cuffs. His cap was ORANGE color with a Black band about it forming a bow at the side. His trousers were BROWN.

"See, the GRAY (use Black lightly) elephant, with his YELLOW and RED blanket. The blanket is strapped on with a BROWN strap and he goes along on YELLOW wheels! cried Susie May.

"Oh, but look at that old YELLOW camel coming along! He has RED wheels and a RED harness," said Teddy.

"Oh, look at the dear little boy doll!" cried Susie May. "He has a BLUE suit on and has BROWN hair like yours Teddy!"

The little Boy Doll had a BLUE suit, too, and YELLOW slippers and a BROWN hat.

Susie May had her Baby Doll dressed in its PINK (use RED) bonneted cape. It had YELLOW cheeks and RED cheeks and RED cheeks.

The floor of the window was covered with PURPLE crepe paper and had an ORANGE color border with points. There were GREEN wreaths with Red berries from the ceiling of the store.

the easiest. And Jim was making a lot of money for a little fellow.

One day when he came to work, he found a change in the attic. A large screen had been placed at one end and a card—

PLEASE KEEP OUT

—hung on it. Gramp was working on a secret. Of course, Jim felt curious, but he did not peep around the screen. A great hammering, sawing and planing went on at intervals when Gramp's shoulder would let him work behind the screen.

Jim got rather suspicious and when he went home he carefully looked over all his toys and belongings. Perhaps, thought he, the family had sent some of his things to Gramp to be spruced up for Christmas.

It was worse the next day. Gramp's shoulder had pained him all night and when Jim arrived at the Flynn's, the old gentleman sat in front of his fire, but the hammering and sawing was going on just the same behind the screen.

Of course, it was a terrible strain on Jim's bump of curiosity, but he managed to keep it from bursting all of that day, which was Saturday, but in the late afternoon, the left end of the screen bulged a bit and he could not help seeing a red head.

There was only one person in the town known to Jim with a head as red as this head—Joe Moore—Jim's favorite playmate. Joe was older than Jim, a strong, overgrown boy with big capable hands and a reputation for being tight-lipped.

"It's Joe, all right," thought Jim, "but might as well ask questions of the lamp-post as ask Joe anything."

Naturally, figuring it all out, Jim came to the conclusion that the thing behind the screen was a present for him, otherwise why all the secrecy?

Christmas was only a few days off when Gramp's shoulder was so much better that he said he was quite well. It was a cold day and a gas heater was going in the attic. Gramp came stumping up the narrow stairs, said "Hello, Jim," and walked over to the screen. He put his hand on one end of it as he tried to step around behind, when the screen suddenly fell over. Jim saw it fall out of the corner of his eye, but he kept his face turned away.

First he heard a scuffle as Gramp and the mysterious help tried to catch the screen, then there was a bang as it went over and in a moment cries of help.

Jim wheeled quickly around and saw that the screen had fallen on the gas stove and was beginning to burn. Joe was tearing the burning burlap and wood from the first. Jim rushed down and drew a pail of water from the bathroom tap and came dashing up again in time to throw the water on the blaze and put it out.

It all happened in a few minutes, but he could not help seeing everything. A boat, bottom-side up, painted a lovely gray. No toy boat, a real one, capable of holding a jolly crew, the kind of boat every boy that lives near a river longs to own.

After the excitement was over, Jim sat down to work. He was painting an old doll's china closet. Gramp came over and laid a hand on his shoulder.

"Say, Jim," he asked, "have you a good memory?"

Jim had to admit that he had. "Well, that's too bad," said the old gentleman, "but that won't stop believing in Santa Claus, will it?"

LITTLE BOY

Little Boy was playing in the kitchen. Mother was busy in the kitchen was so much to be done. "I'll have Little Boy to help dry the dishes," she said. She went to the window and found Little Boy didn't want to stop. He didn't want to help.

He came slowly to his mother. She was frowning. His mother looked at him. She was pouting lips. She saw the frown on his face. She was sorry. She shook her head and said sadly: "Mother could have had a little boy like that. Run back and play."

Little Boy went out when the pigeons were. They were coming to pick up one of the pigeons looked at him and said: "Then all the other pigeons found Little Boy was left alone. 'I want to play with me here,' he said. He whistled for his dog.

running. But when he saw the frowning face, he ran back. "Don't want to play with me," he said. "kitty, kitty," said Little Boy. "I'm tired but she thought Little Boy sounded cross, so she hid under the bed."

Little Boy felt lonesome. He thought of his pets wanted to play with him. "I'll go and stay with my

Then he remembered how he cut the dishes. He was sorry he crossed. He would go and help her now. He ran as fast as he could. "Mother, Mother," he said, "I'm sorry. My face was bright and happy. His mother smiled and she smiled back at her. "Yes," she said, "I have left the dishes for us to wash. Mother knew her little boy was sorry and come back to help." The dishes were all dried and put away and Little Boy went out to play under the cool trees. Doggie and Kitty were laughing and came running. The pigeons listened and came down on the shoulders of the little boy.—Selected.

THE HAPPIEST THING

ET. Vernon, in British Weekly

It was difficult to keep solemn. The little sprite of fun and mischief named Tomboy all evening, and he would go away, even when it was time for saying prayers. Perhaps it knew some things sound funnier than when you say them in your prayers. It must have been the sprite, wouldn't it be nice to think that Tomboy was trying to be funny when speaking; but, then, with Tomboy you never just be quite, quite sure.

"People don't laugh when they're praying to God," said Daddy.

"Don't they?" said Rosemary. "Poor

God, do you say 'poor God?'" asked Daddy.

"It must be awful for God if no one laughs with Him, and helps Him to be happy, too, and forget His name. It would make me sad if people talked sadly to me."

"But you don't really mean what you're saying if you are laughing."

"Sometimes I'm so happy I can't help laughing a little when I say my prayers. Does God not like that? I think I don't mean what I say?"

"I'm very sure that God is glad when you're happy as all that," said Daddy. "I know, a serious and solemn face always shows that you mean what you say. I think we should just be very quiet when we can talk to God at all, and He will listen to us, but we should be solemn, too, because it is such a wonderful thing to talk to Him. We are both glad and solemn at once."

"Tomboy joined in the talk. There was no way of praying with Tomboy in it? Daddies like little people with them, don't they?"

"It's certainly not easy to be solemn at once, but it can be done," said Daddy. "God made your mother a fighter, and I'm sure He would let anybody to crush it in His name. I believe we are all too bad and sinful to be happy with God. Perhaps we'll be able to do it better in heaven. Now, there's a way of praying that is far happier, laughing, and far nicer. A way in which you can be ever so glad and yet solemn both at once. It is called 'reverent.'"

"Does being reverent mean?" asked Rosemary.

"Reverent is the biggest thing anybody can do or feel, little girl," said Daddy. "Whenever you feel great wonder at anything which is very great, very good, or very beautiful, then you are reverent. When we think how great and wonderful God is, and who He is, and who we are speaking to when we pray, we are very glad, but very solemn, and we want to do something bigger and better than laughing, something even happier than laughing, something even happier than laughing."

"Isn't being reverent really happier than laughing?" asked Daddy.

"I think it is." "Why do you like to go to church?" asked Rosemary. "I like it," Daddy replied. "And I like you this, too, that people's faces are most beautiful when they are reverent. It makes people beautiful as the angels must be who see God. Not even the angels makes people look beautiful as the angels does. Your little face is lovely when you're laughing makes it all bright and happy, but it's far lovelier when you're praying from your heart to God, or singing beautiful things about Jesus. There are lots of things in the world to wonder at and to love—things that are beautiful and people that are good; and the happiest thing to do is not to look only for things to make us laugh, but to see all the good and wonderful things where God is and to be reverent and quiet and glad."

Rosemary thought for a little, and then she said, "I think I like reverence, Daddy. Laughing is for ordinary things, but reverence is like a queen."

"Moses once saw a bush all covered with glorious flaming flowers, and he felt he couldn't come tramping beside it with heavy, noisy boots. He wanted to be hushed and quiet and see God in the bush. That was reverence. All world is full of things like that if we can learn to wonder and to love them."

'Earth's crammed with heaven
And every common bush a flame with God;
But only he who sees takes off his shoes:
The rest sit round and eat black-berries.'

"Oh! Daddy, how could they eat black-berries when God was there?"
"Just as some people do it in their prayers."

Good Ad for Esperanto

If one is a tooth and a whole set are teeth,

Then why shouldn't booth in the plural be beeth?

If the plural of man is always called men,

Why shouldn't the plural of pan be called pen?

You may find a lone mouse or a whole nest of mice.

But more than one house is most surely not hie.

A cow in the plural is properly kine, But a bow if repeated is never called bine.

Then one may be that and two would be those,

Yet hat in the plural would never be hose.

We speak of a brother and also of brethren.

But though we say mother we never say methren.

The masculine pronouns are he, his and him,

But imagine a feminine she, shis and and shim!

So the English, I fancy you all will agree,

Is the funniest language you ever did see.

STORY

A MOTHER SOWS THE WIND

Wm. Jas. Robinson, D.D.

Some years ago a widow and her only son Charles lived in a very prosperous town. She regarded herself as cultured and was ambitious for her son to excel in school, win a position in a local bank and shine in society.

He proved himself equal to her fondest expectations in school and soon secured the coveted place in a bank. She spared no pains and lost no opportunity to teach him how to dance, play cards and the most minute details of etiquette. He was a veritable Chesterfield. His personality was unusually winsome and impressive. He quickly gained the confidence of the bank officials and its patrons.

He was the unquestioned leader of the younger set socially, the best card player and most graceful dancer in the community. His mother was the proudest and happiest mother in the county. She idolized her son and believed he would achieve success as a banker and in due time become a monied prince. His success as a card player, both at parties and in private games, became notorious and occasioned so much gossip that some of the bank officials remonstrated with him and urged him to leave card games alone.

When his mother learned of this remonstrance, she regarded it as an unwarranted attack on his integrity. She expressed her resentment in the strongest possible terms to the official who urged him to leave card games alone. He sat stoically while she denounced him and his fellows for their slanderous insinuations on her son's integrity. When she ceased talking the official calmly said: "Madam, they that sow the wind shall reap the whirlwind."

"Another slanderous insinuation!" she shrieked. Fairly leaping to her feet and shaking with anger, she said: "You are viciously jealous of my son! If he is sowing the wind I shall gladly reap the whirlwind of his sowing if such as you will only quit hounding him."

She rushed from the banker's office and to her pastor's study to consult with him. The minister heard her story patiently. Realizing she was in no frame of mind to talk, he tried to get her interested in other subjects, but all in vain. She insisted on discussing the matter, but would not listen to her minister when he tried to reason with her, but persisted in claiming that her son not only had done no wrong, but was incapable of wrong doing.

"My sister, your son had better take the banker's advice, for 'There is a way that seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death,'" said the wise minister tenderly.

"So, pastor, you are against my boy!" she exclaimed and abruptly went out.

These two interviews were soon the common property of all the gossips in town. But Charles persisted in playing cards as usual.

Two well dressed strangers of pleasing personality came into the town. They had no difficulty in winning a cordial invitation to all the card parties, but proved to be only mediocre players, sometimes disgustingly so, but always good losers and enthusiastic for other games. They became very fond of Charles and patronized the bank where he worked.

Knowing his custom of working late at night on the last day or two of each month, they pretended to have very important business with him and arranged to meet him in the bank at 9:30 P. M. Their business was only a pretense. He could do nothing for them. A card game was proposed for small wagers. Charles won nearly every time to the disgust of his guests. Their discomfort elated him.

"Let us make this interesting!" one of them exclaimed, "throwing ten thousand dollars down upon the table."

"You are a fool!" cried the other grasping the money. They had some hot words but finally agreed to wager it.

Charles was eager to win so much and opened the bank vault (it was before the day of time locks) and got ten thousand dollars. He lost immediately. He was stunned. He became pale and staggered.

"It was only an accident," pleaded the gamblers, "play again and you will certainly win it back."

Again Charles got ten thousand dollars from the vault and quickly lost it. The gamblers stuffed the money into their pockets, and having executed their carefully laid plans, departed for parts still unknown.

It was hour before Charles was sufficiently composed to go home. Near daylight, he entered his mother's room. She asked why he was so late getting home. He told her. At first she could not believe him. When she was convinced, she collapsed and shrieked, "I sowed the wind!" Events transpired rapidly.

The bankers were apprised of the episode.

Charles pleaded guilty and received a long sentence to the penitentiary.

The day he went to the prison, the sun flooded the earth with glory, but it was the darkest day Charles and his mother had ever known. The once princely young man was crushed and dispirited. His mother who only recently moved with queenly grace, noted for her beauty, was

LEISURE—A PRECIOUS POSSESSION

Elizabeth Cole

Why is it that in so many of the foreign countries the peasant women can carry a bundle of clothes, a pitcher of water or a basket of fruit on their heads? Why can they perform manual tasks, raise large families, cook all the meals and fill their days to overflowing with tasks that we American women would groan with fatigue at the thought of? Whether or not we envy or pity them, they can teach us one big lesson and that is the way to live calmly, conserving nervous energy.

Here in this country, regardless of whether one's pocket book is slim or fat, women are dashing about from morning until night using up precious vitality and wasting mental as well as physical energy. Just look about at the majority of your friends. If they are in business, whether married or single, there are the million and one outside duties to crowd in with the office or professional work. If they are keeping a home on a husband's small, medium size, or large income, they have far too many daily tasks to permit time for sufficient leisure.

People abroad have learned that secret of leisure. To us it is a luxury we can indulge in for perhaps two weeks of the year when we take a vacation. And even then many of us do not know how to benefit from the holiday respites. We are to eager to keep busy—we play too hard and too strenuously, crowding in too much tennis, golf, swimming, and physical entertainment when we are not used to sudden change. All exercise should be gradual to be beneficial just as every thing in life is a gradual change. That is Nature's law for us. The result is that in this country we find far too many nervous wrecks in later life—our women collapse under the strain and break down mentally and physically.

It lies within each individual's power to make or break her life and here are some of the ways whereby our young women can derive more from life and in so doing give more to their families and friends.

Rest comes first. Everyone requires sufficient sleep at night—go to bed early two or three nights a week and when there is a lull during the day stretch out flat on your back and get a thorough relaxation. Even if you haven't time for a real nap the whole body will feel refreshed if it is given that bit of rest. Take time before dinner to calm yourself and think of nothing for a few minutes. A good facial treatment will relax the tired muscles and smooth out worry wrinkles—probably a warm bath will help many to feel renewed to meet dinner guests or the husband at his home coming. No one is too busy to find time for that even if dinner must be prepared and the baby put to bed. All the hurly burly associated with the end of the day will be met with a fresh viewpoint if the body has been stimulated and the mental state made ready to meet it. Sitting out-of-doors in the sun will often relax many women or taking a walk even if only to the grocer's for butter. Instead of riding everywhere try walking for a change. English women are great walkers and their complexions as well as their calm manners show it. Take longer over your meals—visit with the family and let good nature aid digestion. The French have always been leisurely eaters. Get more vegetables and green stuff into your diet. Drink plenty of water and especially between meals. Cut out heavy meats and rich desserts. The Italians love salads and green vegetable and they are a healthy race.

Men are constituted differently from women. From earliest times they have been used to coping with hardships, defending the weaker ones, and meeting problems sanely. Necessity made them that way from the time of Adam. Only during this last quarter century have women come forth in great numbers into realms where men have been. Why should it be expected that they can jump in and work, play, or think as men? It is a ser-is a prescription for colds, aches and pain by a noted medical missionary and founder of a great American hospital at Soochow, China. FLOCO is a scientific preparation containing therapeutic agents of undisputed merit. It has proven its real worth during two great epidemics.

During the winter of 1928-29 the demand for FLOCO was so great that the manufacturers were unable to fill all orders.

FLOCO gives quick relief. Stops pain and neuralgia, breaks up colds, preventing many complications which result from neglected colds.

ious problem and especially so because their health is more involved than anything else. There are exceptions to be sure, but the average woman simply has to pause, take stock of herself, and ask where she is getting with all this frenzied life. Our daughters must be trained to conserve their energy, to maintain a high bodily resistance that will protect against sickness. They must be taught the meaning of leisure and have an example set them by the older, supposedly more sensible women.

One disease especially that makes its presence felt among those who are in a run-down condition is tuberculosis. In the past decade, although the death-rate has been steadily declining it has been decreased only 32 per cent among women, 15 to 45 years of age, as compared with the decrease among men in the same age period of 44 per cent. And among young women flocking into industry the comparison is even worse. Between 15 and 20 the figures show a decline of 13 per cent for girls and women as contrasted with 28 per cent for boys and men.

It is to help cut down the death-rate from this disease that the National Tuberculosis Association and its affiliated associations carry on their educational campaign. Their work is supported by the penny Christmas seals sold annually in December.

MRS. COOLIDGE'S POEM

Both former President and Mrs. Coolidge are writing auto-biographical articles that are informing and illuminating, as they let us see behind the scenes in the lives of these two persons who rose from humble New England origins to such heights of publicity and responsibility. They both write in good taste and the public approves of their adventure upon the sea of literature, which is turning out to be very profitable to them as well as acceptable to the American people. Mrs. Coolidge has surprised the public if not herself by writing a poem on the fifth anniversary of the death of her son Calvin Coolidge, Jr., which was such a heavy stroke to her and to the president. He himself said it took the joy out of the presidency and after that tragic loss he simply carried on. Mrs. Coolidge's poem, entitled "The Open Door," appears in the October issue of Good Housekeeping and its acceptance and publication were preceded by an interesting and beautiful correspondence between her and the editor. She offered it very modestly, hardly daring to think it would be published, but the publisher, well aware of what a literary treasure and find it was, promptly accepted it and sent her a check for $250, which she, with motherly thoughtfulness, turned over to her son John, who was married recently, "to use for something in the new home which I hope he may soon establish, in some way that his brother might have chosen were he here." The poem, which all readers will agree, is an achievement in poetic conception and expression, is as follows:

THE OPEN DOOR

You, my son,
Have shown me God.
Your kiss upon my cheek

Has made me feel the gentle touch
Of Him who leads us on.
The memory of your smile, when young,
Reveals His face,
As mellowing years come on apace.
And when you went before,
You left the gates of heaven ajar
That I might glimpse,
Approaching from afar,
The glories of His grace.
Hold, son, my hand,
Guide me along the path,
That, coming
I may stumble not
Nor roam,
Nor fail to know the way
Which leads us—home.

A Three Days' Cough Is Your Danger Sign

Coughs from colds may lead to serious trouble. You can stop them now with Creomulsion, an emulsified creosote that is pleasant to take. Creomulsion is a medical discovery with two-fold action; it soothes and heals the inflamed membranes and inhibits germ growth.

Of all known drugs, creosote is recognized by high medical authorities as one of the greatest healing agencies for coughs from colds and bronchial irritations. Creomulsion contains, in addition to creosote, other healing elements which soothe and heal the inflamed membranes and stop the irritation, while the creosote goes on to the stomach, is absorbed into the blood, attacks the seat of the trouble and checks the growth of the germs.

Creomulsion is guaranteed satisfactory in the treatment of coughs, colds, bronchitis and minor forms of bronchial irritations, and is especially for building up the system after a cold or flu. Money refunded if not cured after taking according to directions. Ask your druggist. Send coupon for free sample.

MINISTERS' ANNUITY FUND

And Christian Education and Ministerial Relief

December is the month set aside for the study of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief which comprises the following work:

1. Facing the students of the Church with the Christian Program.
2. Enlisting the workers for every department of the Church's work.
3. Assisting by loans from the Student Loan Fund, worthy, poor students to attend our Presbyterian colleges.
4. Securing financial aid for candidates for the ministry and mission service who must have help in preparing for the service of our own Church.
5. Helping to keep student pastors or secretaries at the state and independent institutions of higher education.
6. Helping through the Westminster Service Bureau to secure positions for those who wish to serve and to find workers for churches and institutions which need helpers.
7. Providing for the aged and disabled ministers and missionaries who can serve no longer, and for the needy widows and orphans of those who have died.

The Committee has had to scale the amounts of appropriations to the homes of retired ministers and of those who have died, to candidates for the ministry, to work among the students, and all other departments of the work. We are in great need of funds. We hope at the happy Christmas time the little, fatherless children in the homes of our deceased ministers and missionaries, and the aged servants of God who have borne the burden of the day and the scorching heat, will be remembered with liberal offerings to this work.

The Christmas Service, "The Light of the World," to be used at twilight on the Sunday before Christmas, makes a forceful appeal for the dedication of life and service to Jesus and His cause. We trust the outward expression will be in an offering for Ministerial Relief.

All of the departments of this work are dealing with personalities, with life. All are vitally interested in the Ministers' Annuity Fund. When this is established the cause of Ministerial Relief will gradually come out of the budget of the Church.

The General Assembly in 1926 and again in 1927 requested that the year 1930 be set aside as a time for the completion of a fund that will take care of the prior service of its ministers and missionaries and thus establish the Ministers' Annuity Fund—which is a safe, sane, economical and Christian method to meet a serious situation which grows more critical each year.

Copies of the Annual Report have gone to all the ministers. The "Blue Book" which also gives full information about all these departments and "A Friendly Guide" have gone to the Secretaries of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief of the Woman's Auxiliary, the Men of the Church and the Christian Endeavor and Young People's Societies. Consult these Secretaries for further information.

N. C. SYNOD'S MEN'S COMMITTEE MEETS

creased interest in Men's Work in Mecklenburg. There are twelve active organizations.

Orange: Rev. A. P. Dickson reported four organizations in his Presbytery. He gave a very interesting account of how he educated his men on the subject of Men's Work and "sold" it to them before he organized. He followed the suggestions of the Atlanta office as expressed in leaflet.

Wilmington: No representative was present but it was reported that there were twelve active organizations in the Presbytery.

Winston-Salem: Rev. J. W. McFall said he was just taking hold of the work but did not know of any active organizations within the bounds of the Presbytery.

The conference adjourned until seven o'clock.

The second session was called to order at the hour appointed and an interesting discussion was had as to methods for arousing interest among the men in the Presbyteries and the following suggestions were made: 1. Call a meeting of Presbytery's committee. 2. Use stimulating literature which will be distributed from the Atlanta office. 3. Hold conference of pastors and men of Presbytery. 4. Training School. 5. Invite men from neighboring churches to a meeting of your men's organization.

Findings of the Conference

1. That the program for the Conference presented by the chairman be adopted as the findings of the Conference.

2. That a Synod's Inspirational Conference on Men's Work be planned as early in the future as feasible.

3. That we approve the appropriation up to fifteen dollars to the Presbyterian Chairmen of Men's Work respectively from the Synod's appropriation of $300 to Men's Work.

4. That a suitable letter head be prepared by the chairman for the Synod's and Presbyterian Committees on Men's Work.

5. That the Presbyterian Chairmen of Men's Work send a report twice each year to the chairman of the Subcommittee on Men's Work.

The Conference and Committee meeting adjourned with prayer.

H. N. McDiarmid, Chairman.

H. B. Arbuckle, Secretary.

The following program for the Conference was followed:

Purpose of Conference

1. General Assembly has recognized Men's Work as a distinct department of its program, and placed on Synod responsibility of promoting it.

2. Synod of North Carolina has recognized Men's Work and appointed a committee to promote it.

3. Each Presbytery has recognized Men's Work and appointed a committee to promote it.

4. Recognizing its responsibility Synod's Committee is here to assist through its chairman, each Presbytery's Committee on Men's Work.

5. A mutual conference is best way to plan to discharge mutual responsibility.

A Look at Men's Work in General Assembly

1. What has Assembly in mind in setting up Department of Men's Work?

2. What progress has been made in carrying out mind of Assembly?

3. What form of organization has been successful?

4. Where have failures been in Synods, Presbyteries, and Local Churches?

5. Encouraging features about Men's Work in Assembly.

Survey of Men's Work in Synod of North Carolina

1. Synod's Committee has made one real effort to promote work.

2. The effort was unsuccessful because of uninterested Chairmen in Presbyteries, and divided interest in other matters.

3. Where effort was made new organizations began.

4. Successful organizations are following Assembly's Plan.

5. A diagnosis from Presbyteries.

How Can Mind of Assembly be Carried Out in Synod of North Carolina?

1. Through Synod's Committee being vitally and sacrificially interested.

2. Through co-operation of Synod's Committee with a vitally and sacrificially interested committee in each Presbytery.

3. For promotional reasons, Synod has recommended that a minister who is vitally and sacrificially interested be made chairman of Presbytery's Committee.

4. Promote the uniform Assembly's plan that has proven successful.

5. Nurture the organization through experimental stage as we have had to do with other organizations.

Authority and Obligation of Each Presbytery's Committee

1. To arouse interest in Men's Work.

a. Call Presbytery's Committee together to formulate plans.

b. Distribute stimulating literature, such as "In the Balances."

c. Conference of Men of Presbytery and Pastors.

d. Educational Training Schools.

e. Approach individual church.

f. Churches with organizations invite men of churches without organization.

g. Men of Church with organization visit churches without organization.

h. Have fields with more than one church form one organization with one or more groups in each church.

i. Make strong presentation of Men's Work at every meeting of Presbytery.

j. Overcome difficulties by having Field Worker visit individual churches.

2. To show interested churches how to set up organization.

a. Have Pastor and select group pray for and study plan of organization, with help of proper material, for two or three weeks.

b. Have Session to approve organization meeting.

d. Make strong presentation of work and organize according to Assembly's Plan as shown in Constitution.

e. Look at needs of local church and adopt Service Program which will meet those needs.

How to Keep Organization Going

1. Insist that churches be not discouraged if 100 per cent efficiency is not soon reached.

2. Insist that Council meet regularly and plan adequate single service program, making it grow naturally out of educational program.

3. Insist that general meeting be regularly held each month.

4. Insist that organization show worth while tasks accomplished and men will support it.

5. Pray constantly for men's organization in Sunday services.

6. Have Men of Church assist Home Mission and Stewardship Committees of Presbyteries and Synod in their program.

7. Throw out the special challenge of Ministers' Annuity Fund as a worthy objective for men to support and establish in church.

UNION SEMINARY REVIEW

The first issue of the Union Seminary Review for the year which has recently come from the press contains a number of intensely interesting articles from the pens of prominent ministers of the South. Dr. Ernest Trice Thompson is acting as editor of the Review until Dr. E. C. Caldwell returns to his work.

Rev. Dr. H. S. Turner, pastor of Bethel Presbyterian Church, Staunton, Va., treats of "Old Testament Criticism," discussing most interestingly, present day emphasis in criticism. "Christ Reinterpreted to the Modern Mind" is a review of "The Place of Jesus Christ in Modern Christianity," a book by John Maillie. It is reviewed by the Rev. LeRoy Gresham, D.D., pastor Salem Presbyterian Church, Salem, Va. "Better Worship for Better Living" is the title of a practical and attractive article by the Rev. Kenneth J. Foreman, Davidson College professor. Dr. J. B. Green, of Columbia Theological Seminary, contributes the first of a series of articles on "The Gospel Which Paul Preached." Dr. Wm. F. Weir, General Director of the Department of Men's Work in the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A., writes concerning "Religious Movements Among Men." The Rev. A. J. McKelway, of Laurel Hill, N. C., discusses the very present labor-religion crisis in an article entitled "Labor's Judgment on the Church." Dr. Edgar G. Gammon's contribution on "The Independence of Christ" strikes at "the slaves of fashion and bond-servants of custom—social, political and religious," holding that the influence of men so enslaved is limited. Dr. Gammon is pastor of the Myers Park Presbyterian Church, Charlotte, N. C.

An outstanding feature of the Review is the host of book reviews coming from its distinguished staff of reviewers.

EDITORIALSPECIAL NEEDS

It is the season when special appeals are made to the good people of each community. The time will never come when such appeals will be needed, because each year the needs of the men increase.

Each year, owing to sickness, failure of crops among the tenant farmer, the shutting of industries and the increased cost of living for business, there seems to be more special needs than usual.

We are glad to see that all the charitable organizations are alert to these needs, and that they are responding.

We would urge those who have undertaken the work, to extend the limits of their Christ-ianity to include not only the town's needs but also the adjacent farm territory where tenant farmers may be in great need.

COLLEGE STUDENTS AND THE CHURCH

One who has lived in a college town knows that one of the most difficult problems of the local church is, how to get the college boy to attend services.

We have known many pastors who went to college with full of enthusiasm, only to meet with disappointment.

We found that it was one thing to open a church and prepare a sermon for the col-lege student, but quite another thing to get the student to be present when the sermon was de-livered.

And women have studied this problem, and a successful solution has been found.

The church and the college boy do not mix like oil and water.

It is a general truth, with many notable exceptions. There are colleges where the stu-dents attend services, but they are few and far between.

In the South, where custom rules in many instances, such is not always the case.

In the majority of Southern homes, the chil-dren are trained in Church attendance, so they are apt to keep up the habit when they end college, and then in many church congregations attendance upon public worship is very low.

One speaking of the schools and colleges often asks such rule obtains.

One of the difficult problems is why do col-lege students so often rebel against church at-tendance?

It is a question over which the college student ponders, as well as the college pas-tor, while some times they work out a possible answer, on the whole it is still beset with difficulties, and the seats in the church are empty, unless attendance is com-pulsory.

Of course there are many possible reasons for the lack of interest on the part of the students, and many have been the reasons

The main reason in our estimation is that the ordinary pulpit deliverance has little or no interest for him.

Things that interest older people do not appeal to him. He craves the novel, what is unusual, while the preacher deals with subjects that he has heard all his life, and unless the speaker has special gifts, his sermon is not interesting.

Youth and age lay stress upon different subjects. Youth is concerned with the present, while age is concerned with the future, and nothing interests youth less than what is to be with him hereafter.

Nothing irritates him more than long sermons and long prayers, both of which he generally finds in the church.

Again, youth does not enjoy having his peculiar sins pointed out. He delights in thinking much of himself. The pastor has a way of holding up a picture of youth at his worst with the result that you will find that youth becomes prejudiced against the pastor and refuses to hear him.

The student, especially one just entering college, is full of self—he is a hero in his own eyes and places a higher estimation upon himself than he will ever do again, and therefore he does not enjoy any picture of himself that differs from the one he has painted in his own mind.

When he knows from former attendance that his ideal self will be revealed as he appears in the mind of the preacher, he will not expose himself to the shock of an awakening again.

Then he finds that his companions place a far higher value upon sports than upon religion, so that religion becomes of less importance in his eyes.

Another reason can be found in the subjects discussed in the pulpit.

We who are ministers are faced by theo-logical problems that have no interest to the student.

To us they are of great importance, as we believe that they are the real foundation of a religious life.

To the student they are dry and unimportant.

The question of the true doctrine of the atonement is of transcendent importance to the Church and the ministry, but to the student it has little meanings.

Again, college life in the mind of the young man is the beginning of his freedom.

Since childhood he has been under rules, and he looks to college life as a time when he will be free from restrictions, and when he can enjoy his new-found freedom.

He shows his independence in many ways, especially in doing what heretofore he has never done.

From boyhood he has been required to go with the family to church.

At last he is his own man, and he resolves to enjoy his freedom.

These are some of the possible causes for non-attendance at church.

But, what is the remedy? It is easier to find the causes than their cure, because you have to deal, not with the intellect of man, but with unregenerate human nature, and that is, according to Scripture, desperately wicked.

There must be a change of heart, a new taste for good implanted.

There are human aids, however, whereby the young can be brought under the influence of the truth, and it depends largely upon the col-lege pastor whether he can find those aids.

IN THE HANDS OF THE CRITIC

All of us are by nature critics, believing that man's chief duty in this life is regulate others.

Few men really enjoy being a victim of it, yet nearly all will confess that when they are its victim, the exercise is very salutary.

From early manhood we have trained our-selves to receive criticism as a means of grace, taking the sensible position that man can only know himself fully through the eyes of others, and sustaining ourselves that we can also play the part of a critic with our critics.

Recently we have had the full benefit of a critic's pen, and that, too a critic of keen analysis and who, acting upon Burn's advice,

"Peeks through every other man's eye with sharpened sledge inspection."

We have read these criticisms with an open mind, ready to profit by them, and with the conviction that our critic was fair and reason-able.

Let us say, however, we have never been satisfied with our output, and fall far below our aim.

One dear brother of long and cherished in-tercourse stopped the paper, which he said, he took in the beginning because the editorials were so racy, but as they raced no longer, he wished to stop.

We wrote him that we had already discovered that lack and did not blame him.

In reading these recent criticisms we find a naivete that is refreshing in these days of pretentious learning.

We would like to be able to put our dear brother in charge so as to enable him to issue this ideal paper, where he would have to play the role of the Hebrews in Egypt, and make his quota of bricks without straw.

In our school-teaching days we often sat in a country store and learned from the country statesmen how the government should be run.

Our Church Paper critic begins by stating what in his opinion is the chief mission of the Church Paper, which he evidently thinks we have missed.

This mission, according to him, is principally to nourish the faith of the Church, by fore-warning and forearming the Church against error.

We fully agree with him, however much we may have failed in our conduct of the paper—and we realize as he says, that "the Church Papers have ceased to be the medium for the exchange of views, and have become publicity organs for the Secretaries and Woman's Aux-iliaries."

This criticism, let us say is no new charge. We have heard it before, and we have given it due consideration, but experience has shown that papers filled with discussions of polity and organizations are read by only a few, and these few are not paying subscribers, to any great extent.

Then in the opinion of our Critic, who is more of a student than the average pastor, woman's work in the Church is like woman's work in the home; but he forgets that the com-fort of the home depends upon the home-maker.

In like manner the women of our day have added to their genius for home-making success in church-making, far beyond what we, men, have done.

He has evidently studied the make-up of this paper, for he says that it has less than four pages of matter of current thought, while the balance is given to various agencies and church news.

He claims that in so doing the emphasis has been changed from evangelical truth to church activities.

He also charges that, in comparison with some other church papers we have been play-ing into the hands of the Modernists.

This makes us wince, because we have flattered ourselves that we have been active in this controversy, and we imagined that there would be conferred upon us the title given to the Henry the Eighth by the Pope, "The Defender of the Faith."

But now, alas! We have been too mild in our opposition, and have done almost nothing to help the cause that lies nearest to our hearts. Our trumpet has had an uncertain sound.

Our critic, however, does not stay his hand but smotes us hip and thigh.

He next indulges in day-dreams, and pic-tures what he would do, if he were an editor.

One of the most popular parts of our paper is the Sunday School Exposition by Dr. Thompson, of Union Seminary, Richmond, Va.

We have teachers, not only of our own, but of other denominations subscribing for these lessons, yet our old friend would cut them out and give the space to men who could fight Modernism.

BIBLE ATONEMENT

Rev. L. T. Wilds, D.D.

(Leviticus 17:11)

The meaning of the word, "atonement," which we find here and there in our English Bible, is obtained by pronouncing it, "at-one-ment"—the making at-one or reconciling two who have been estranged by the offense of one or the other. It is generally used of God and man who have been estranged by man's offense or sin.

We have been interested recently in studying the word in the original Hebrew and Greek of the Bible, in order to get back of man's translations, interpretations, theories to the words originally given by the Holy Ghost. Not that our English translations are not trustworthy, but to have the satisfaction of uncovering or discovering this heart truth of the Gospel at its fountain source. We can do but little more here than give a kind of summary of our findings.

The Old Testament

Here the Hebrew word for atonement is kaphar, the root meaning of which is cover, the idea being that the offense is so covered, hidden, removed that it no longer separates the parties—and so they are brought together, reconciled, made at-one.

There are two striking illustrations of the use of the word as between man and man. Take the case of Jacob and Esau. Jacob had offended his brother and had to flee for his life. Years later he was returning home and his heart was filled with fear of his brother. His method of seeking reconciliation with his brother was to send ahead to him munificent gifts. And we hear him saying, "I will appease him (and the word is kaphar, to cover or make atonement) with the present that goeth before me, and afterwards I will see his face; peradventure he will accept me." And so Jacob and Esau were made at-one by Jacob's present which covered his offense. And there was the case of David and the Gibeonites. David's predecessor, Saul, had offended the Gibeonites and incurred their hostility. David wished to regain their friendship and addressed them in these words, "What shall I do for you," and wherewith shall I make atonement, that ye may bless the inheritance of Jehovah?" And they required that seven sons of Saul's household be delivered up to them to be crucified. It was done; and thus the estranged parties were reconciled or made at-one.

What did God require of His ancient people in order that He and they might be made at-one? The shedding of blood. "For the life of the flesh is in the blood; and I have given it to you upon the altar to make atonement for your souls: for it is the blood that maketh atonement by reason of the life." The blood of an animal was taken into the holiest place and sprinkled before and upon the mercyseat. The mercyseat itself is a most interesting study. The Hebrew word is kapporeth, a derivative of kaphar, and means a covering. It was a gold slab covering the altar and beneath it was the law which man had broken. Sprinkled with blood, it covered, hid, removed man's transgressions that stood between or separated him and God, thus making it possible for him and God to be reconciled or made at-one. And so the mercyseat is declared here and there in the Word to be the place of meeting between God and man, the place where God would receive and forgive and be at-one with the sinner.

Did the blood of an animal have such power? By no means. "For it is impossible that the blood of bulls and goats should take away sins." It was only a type, picture, object-lesson to pointing the only blood that has such power, the blood of Jesus Christ. And may not those ancient worshippers have so understood it. They perhaps knew more about Christ crucified than we may suppose. The Savior was promised in Genesis 3:16, the suffering Savior at that. "Thou shalt bruise His heel." And Isaiah tells us, "He was bruised for our iniquities." Paul tells us that the seed of which God spoke to Abraham rejoiced to see My day; and he saw it, and was glad." And the book of Hebrews tells us that everything about the tabernacle or temple was but a figure or picture of the true: the building, of heaven or the presence of God; the high priest, of Christ; and the blood, of the precious blood of Christ.

"Not all the blood of beasts
On Jewish altars slain,
Could give the guilty conscience peace,
Or wash away the stain.
But Christ, the heavenly Lamb,
Takes all our sins away,
A sacrifice of nobler name,
And richer blood than they."

The New Testament

Here we find three very interesting Greek words bearing the idea of atonement.

One of these is lutroo, translated redeem or give as a ransom, the idea being the regaining of something that has been forfeited by one's offense by the paying of a required ransom price. We find the Hebrew, kaphar, make atonement, thus translated, Ex. 21:30. If a man's vicious ox killed a person, we read, "If there be laid on him a ransom, then he shall give for the redemption of his life whatsoever is laid upon him." In the case of the sinner, it is eternal life that he has forfeited by sin ("The soul that sinneth, it shall die"). But he regains it by the death of Christ, which is the ransom price in lieu of the sinner's eternal death. Paul speaks of Jesus Christ, "in whom we have our redemption through His blood." "Knowing that ye were redeemed," says Peter, "not with corruptible things—but with precious blood, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot, even the blood of Christ." And we need ask no other but the Saviour Himself why He died; He says it was "to give His life a ransom for many."

Another of these words is katallasso. The A. V. translates it, Romans 5:11, atonement; but the R. V. reconciliation—which is the usual translation of the A. V. also. It does not matter, for the two words bear the same idea. The point we wish to note is that this reconciliation or atonement is accomplished by the death of Christ. "For if, while we were enemies, we were reconciled to God through the death of His Son, much more, being reconciled, shall we be saved by His life; and not only so, but we also rejoice in God through our Lord Jesus Christ, through whom we have now received the reconciliation."

Our third word is hilaskomai. And this is the word generally used by the Septuagint in translating the Hebrew kaphar or make atonement into the Greek. The Septuagint version is the translation of the Old Testament from the Hebrew into the Greek some two centuries B. C., and getting its title from the fact that some seventy translators were engaged in the work. The Greek had become more and more the language in common use, which fact was part of God's wonderful preparation for the rapid propagation of the Gospel. We say, hilaskomai is the Greek word used generally by the Septuagint to translate the Hebrew word kaphar or make atonement. How is hilaskomai rendered in our English version? It is rendered propitiation or make propitiation, which means to appease, gain the favor of one who has been offended and so to become reconciled to or at-one with him. Who is the sinner's propitiation or who has made propitiation for him? Jesus Christ. "Wherefore it behooved Him in all things to be made like unto His brethren, that He might become a merciful and faithful high priest in things pertaining to God, to make propitiation for the sins of the people." Paul speaks of Christ Jesus, "whom God set forth to be a propitiation, through faith, in His blood." And, says John, "He is the propitiation for our sins; and not for ours only, but also for the whole world."

It is at least beautifully suggestive that in Hebrews 9:5 a derivative of the Greek word for propitiation is translated mercyseat. Christ is our propitiation; Christ is our mercyseat. He is the covering of our sins, removing them from between us and God and thus reconciling us to Him or making us at-one with Him. Christ is the place of meeting between God and the sinner, where God will receive and forgive and be at-one with. "I am the way," said the Savior Himself; no one cometh unto the Father, but My Me."

"Having therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holy place by the blood of Jesus—let us draw near with a true heart in fulness of faith."

A WISE MOVEMENT

H. J. Spencer, General Agent The Union
Central Life Insurance Company

The more earnestly I have studied this matter, the more strongly it appeals to me. It is a very great advance over the old method.

Heretofore the Ministerial Relief Committee has not been able to grant pensions to anyone, needy or otherwise. The most that could be done was to relieve individual cases of need and then only so far as the money would go. Applications have had to be renewed each year.

It is a reproach to our Church that we have not made definite provision to pension our veteran ministers, grown old in the service, as well as those younger ones who have become disabled. Many large corporations and some smaller business concerns make such provision for their faithful employees. Moreover they do not consider such pensions as mere gratuities that add to their overhead expense. Thoughtful economists believe that such consideration pays good dividends in the increased loyalty and enthusiasm of the employee. And it enables the employer to attract an increasing number of ambitious young men.

I thoroughly believe the same principle will apply in our church work. The minister who knows that his old age will not be dependent can and will throw himself more wholeheartedly into his work. The specter of humiliating dependence being removed, more young men will be attracted to the ministry. This has already been proved by the experience of other churches.

In the long run the Annuity Fund will cost our Church nothing but will prove a sound investment.

"THE PRINCETON SITUATION AS LOOKS TO US"

Wm. P. McCorkle

The above is the caption of an article in The Champion, organ of the Bible League of North America. It is by Dr. Leander S. Keyser, of the Hamma School, Wittenberg, Ohio, than whom there is no more wide-awake and stalwart defender of evangelical Christianity. The Standard sometime ago published an article from the Presbyterian Advance, making sundry statements prejudicial to the new Seminary just launched in Philadelphia, by Doctors Wilson, Machen, Allis, Til and others, who felt that the recent decision of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. had sounded the death-knell of evangelicalism at Princeton. But let us see what Doctor Keyser says:

"At this writing the report comes that the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church has accepted the Thompson report on the situation at Princeton Seminary. This is generally regarded as a victory for the conservatives; and no doubt it is, for every Modernist, as we can learn, was in favor of the proposed change. The change has now been adopted." (That change, let me say, was from a two-board plan to a one-board plan. The old plan, the trustees managed the property, the professors, etc. Under the new plan, one board manages the functions of both the old bodies. Thus it is to pass that wealthy laymen who would have votes in the election of professors, will be able to pass under the new plan. Doctor Craig, of The Presbyterian Church, Philadelphia, estimates that the re-organization of the Seminary by the Modernists and the pacifists, who are named on the new board, a substantial majority, e. g., Dr. Alexander, under whose auspices Doctor Fosdick permitted to attack evangelical doctrines from a Presbyterian pulpit, stands first on the list.—W. P. M. advocates of the change have greatly clouded the issue. Whenever the conservatives have expressed opinion that a change on the control of the Seminary meant a change in its theological position, Dr. Stevenson and his adherents have stoutly protested that no such theological change is contemplated. Then why was a change in the administration necessary? The majority of the faculty of the Board of Directors really wanted no change of line theology and desired its continuance unchanged. If Doctor Stevenson favored the historic position of the school, why was he not satisfied with matters as they were? Why did he appeal from the majority of the Faculty and of the Board and go to the General Assembly where he felt morally certain that he could command a majority, because that body is so largely liberal and pacifistic in its make-up?

"Again, why is Doctor Stevenson in a quarrel with very men in his Faculty who stand unequivocally for Princeton's well-known historic position—Wilson, Allis, Hodge and others? It is significant, too, that a minority of the Faculty who are in accord with him have never been known to come clearly out into the open to hold the orthodox Presbyterian position, they have been very quiet and apathetic about it. And, to our ears, it is a marvel—yes, a miracle of inconsistency—that a theologian who is really in earnest in his conviction sits quietly by and let them be assaulted without uttering a word in their defense. We want to ask where are Doctor Stevenson's sympathizers have ever come out unequivocally in favor of the plenary inspiration of the Bible, and the true deity, virgin birth, substitutionary atonement, and the physical resurrection of Jesus Christ. If they have said anything, it has been in whisper or sub rosa, lest the Modernists overhear their declarations. Will a policy of silence in accord with the well-known historic position of Princeton Seminary?

"No! The change in the method of controlling the school points logically to a theological somersault in the administration of the seminary. Otherwise the conservatives had no good reason for its rise and existence. It is only a personal jangle, as its administration should and could have been settled long ago. The conservatives in the Faculty well enough to know that they would not have permitted a mere personal quarrel to continue. They are contending for the doctrine on which their great school was founded.

To this, permit me to add three considerations. First, no doctrinal change was contemplated, what was understood from Doctor Stevenson's oft-repeated assurance that the seminary must be made "inclusive" can it be made "inclusive" if its faculty does not include some men who will represent the Auburn affirm and others who are either skeptical or indifferent to the virgin birth and physical resurrection of Jesus Christ? Had the question been a mere personal quarrel, were not the positive, plain and undeniable directions of Our Lord followed and the personal squabble settled ago? It would have been time enough to appeal to the General Assembly when Doctors Wilson and Machen, whoever was charged with being ugly in temperament, admonished by their brethren for unchristian treatment, refused to "hear the church." Second, sometimes the men fail to agree, and a separation is advisable. R.

we have a question that needs to be answered in straightforward and utterly frank way. The preacher the man to answer it, because he is too modest in that seems to involve self-interest. The average who sits in the pew, seldom hears it mentioned the pulpit, and only occasionally sees anything in ers and magazines that bears on it. Nevertheless, very important question, and the future of the depends in no small degree upon the answer.

der for a moment these points: preacher must go through a long period of ex- training and must make many sacrifices in order care for his work. In most trades and kinds of on this is unnecessary. In his case, it is simply able, because, even a tradesman despises a poor although he may not be able always to tell what makes it poor.

It is extremely significant y preachers do not, and perhaps cannot, provide insurance to bury them decently. Of those who ge 65, 85 per cent face not only the growing ment of old age, but the pinch of acute poverty. he last decade of active ministerial service is l by the prospect ahead. The half has never been he layman about this matter, because the veteran has suffered in dignified silence, and his advo- ve been few and seldom aggressive.

Thousands of well-trained young men who have ed this noble calling as a life matter, have felt to turn aside, discouraged by the thought of the ion to which they have seen some aged minister as a result of the Church's neglect. Can you em?

Every substantial citizen, whether he goes to frequently or not, must feel concern as to what urban and the rural life of America will be in re. Subtle, disintegrating, athetistic forces are at roughout the land. The Church and its minis- aders furnish the chief counteractive to such American life cannot be kept wholesomely clean et without moral and spiritual forces that are the alert. We need preachers and we need them, ob all the time. We cannot afford to have their ived between their true work and any side- ney-making proposition.

t is plain then, that the men and women of the interested in community, state and national wel- st provide not only a decent support for the now, but must remove from his mind the fear y as an accompaniment of either disability or old us not say, in such case, after the manner of "The Lord will provide," but rather say, "The ll provide by using me as an instrument." speaking humanly, the effective preacher is the cious asset of the Church—much more precious than its architecture, its furnishings, its music and its religious art.

To use the preacher while he retains youthful vigor and ability and then cast him aside thoughtlessly when he is helpless and worn out, is not Christian, it is utilitarian and pagan. Herein is a wrong that cries loudly for redress. It is almost unbelievable that such a situation has continued so long without adequate remedy, and that the Church has ignored the principles of justice laid down in its own "social creed."

(9) Think of more than four hundred and sixty veter- an nobleman in the Presbyterian ministry and widows of self-denying ministers and missionaries receiving under $415 a year per family for sustenance. Add to that the feebleness that goes with advancing age, and all manner of disease incident thereto, and you have a picture which, when fixed in the mind, moves one to tears and prayers for an awakening of the conscience of the Church. If only the layfolk knew what the distributing agents of the Church know, about this heartbreaking condition the resources would be instant and generous.

(10) It cannot be urged too strongly that the support of the aged and disabled preacher is the foremost claim upon the Church. It outranks every other claim and bene- volence of whatever kind, because the protection of the ministry has a basic relationship to the life of the Church. In the last few years this fact of priority is coming to be recognized more clearly, and the new movement to care soundly and adequately for this great interest of the Church is sweeping across America like a revival fire in the old days. First, the Protestant Episcopal Church, then the Congregationalists, Northern Baptists, U. S. A., Presbyterians, and now come Disciples of Christ, Method- ists, United Presbyterian, Methodist and Presbyterian U. S., and other denominations.

Friend, think of these things! They are vital and significant!

We thank most heartily the Churches, Auxiliaries, Sun- day School and friends for their liberal gifts, as listed above, for the liquidation of the indebtedness on Assem- bly Inn. These gifts are in response, in the main, to the Assembly's appeal for the cause of Montreat to be presented on October and for collection to be taken at that time. This list constitutes an honor roll and illustrates how the aggregation of comparatively small amounts from many amounts up. If all the churches of our Assembly would present the cause on a day of their own choosing and allow the loose collection to come to this cause, in accordance with the request of our Assembly, the entire indebtedness of Montreat would be liquidated without embarrassment or harm to any, but the great joy and satisfaction of many. The Assembly is not asking for large gifts, but for many small ones.

Shall we be forced to put a bonded or mortgage debt ou our Church Home for the lack of the slightest effort on the part of many to avoid this embarrassment? We are still hoping and believing that the great mass of our churches will respond in some measure at least to our Assembly appeal.

Please send all checks to The Mountain Retreat Asso- ciation, Montreat, N. C., marked for Assembly Inn.

THE CRISIS IN OKLAHOMA

Rev. C. Fred Hancock

The Synod of Oklahoma (Presbyterian Church, U. S.) is working on a "diminishing returns" basis, instead of increasing in membership we are decreasing. We have gone during the last few years from 5,000 plus to 4,00 plus. The membership of our church in the Synod is just a little more than one of the large city churches, and the financial strength of the Synod does not equal any one of our large city churches, yet the Synod is called on through the churches to bear the traveling expense and many other items of expenditure in connection with the meetings of the church courts, committees, etc.

The Synod is called on to contribute $3,000 annually to Oklahoma Presbyterian College in order to secure an equal amount for a Synodical Evangelist from the Assem- bly's Home Mission Committee. The salaries of the Home Missionaries are paid in part by the Assembly's Home Mission Committee but this is withheld to the amount of

In my judgment, it will help to solve some of the most delicate and press- ing problems connected with our church. Although I have a considerable amount of Life Insurance. I have entered heartily into the plan. I think it is just as fair to all Ministers as it is possible for any plan to be. It deserves the undivided support of all the members of our Church. NORTH CAROLINA

Trinity Avenue, Durham—The men of the church of Granville Presbytery held a popular meeting at the First Vanguard Church, Raleigh, November 17 from 2 to 4:30 p. m. The program consisted of speeches by Dr. T. P. Harrison, of State College, and

Mr. J. A. Naff, of the Assembly's Committee on Men's Work, and testimonies of the men. Eighty men attended this meeting, including six pastors. Rev. C. J. Hollandsworth, pastor of the church, spoke a few words of welcome. Rev. Geo. L. Cooper, chairman of Presbytery's Committee on Men's Work, presided at the meeting.

Raleigh, The First Vanguard—A mission point has been established some three miles south of Raleigh by the First Vanguard Church. Sunday School is conducted each Sunday afternoon at 2:30 by members of the First Vanguard Church. Preaching services twice each month by the pastor, Rev. C. J. Hollandsworth. The Sunday School attendance has been ranging from 65 to 95. The school was organized Aug. 4, 1929. Splendid progress has been made thus far.

The pastor recently closed a very successful and helpful evangelistic meeting at this point. Many were led to make an open decision for Christ. Sunday, Nov. 10th, thirteen united with the First Vanguard Church, nine on profession of faith and four by letter. It is to be hoped that in a short time enough members will be received to justify the organization of a church. Plans are being worked out for the erection of a church.

Raleigh—The "History of the American Legion, Department of North Carolina," from organization up to date, now in process of compilation, will contain the names of all North Carolinians who took part in the original conference held in Paris, France, in the spring of 1919, if these names can be secured. The Department Historian, Mr. A. L. Fletcher, of Raleigh, has already secured a partial list but is hopeful that a full list may be obtained. Mr. Fletcher asks that every Tar Heel who took part in this important organization meeting, write him full details of the meeting, giving the unit which he represented and his recollections of what took place in the various sessions.

For this chapter on the beginnings of the Legion, Mr. Fletcher desires also the names of those who attended the first conference in the United States, which was promoted by Col. Theodore Roosevelt and his associates. Those North Carolinians who took part in these two conferences are in position to perform a very real service in the writing of the history of North Carolina's part in the formation of the American Legion.

Lillington—Dr. Lacy Little and his wife visited Lillington Group of Churches on November 24. In the morning he spoke in the Lillington Church. It was the first service in the building since it has been remodeled. A large congregation heard him. In the afternoon he spoke to the convicts. In the evening he preached at Raven Rock, a small mission church eight miles west of Lillington, on the banks of the Cape Fear River. It was a cold, rainy night, but a large congregation of young people had come on foot to hear Doctor Little. In all of the services he was heard with deep appreciation.

Some of the people had never heard, nor seen a worker from any of our Foreign Mission fields. We feel that his messages strengthened the cause of Foreign Missions here. Mrs. Little spoke to the ladies in the afternoon. She is indeed a companion in every sense of the word to her consecrated husband. Any church would do well in having the Littles come and bring their practical and inspiring as well as challenging messages.

Presbyterian Orphans' Home, Barium Springs

Before I became a member of the large Barium family, I often wondered how they spent Thanksgiving, and how in the world they lived through Christmas day. I could understand how a man with a small family, say fifteen or twenty children, might squeeze through an experience of that kind, but how in the world "Daddy Joe Johnson" with a slightly larger family than the average man could manage to survive, was beyond me. Well, he comes through with flying colors, and strange to say, he does not look a day older.

Thanksgiving is a great day at Barium; it is one of the "red letter" days. All work is suspended, except work that is absolutely necessary, and the family enjoys a real day of (well, I started to say rest but perhaps I had better not make that statement) pleasure. The day was a very beautiful one here. We enjoyed the usual round of events: Football game in the forenoon with the deaf mutes of Morganton, who sustained a defeat at the hands of our smaller boys. These boys were then our guest at a later chicken dinner. Then at six o'clock sharp we had no supper because there was no room to receive it, and picture show at night. In the afternoon, many of our workers and young people journeyed down to Davidson to witness the Davidson-Duke football game and to see Thad Brock, a son of Barium, make a run for a touchdown. The day was rounded out eleven o'clock with a tired but happy family.

A few friends paid their respects to the inst during the day and former boys and girls return see the old home. We were delighted to have A number of our workers spent the day with and relatives.

Our Thanksgiving service was held on Wed evening at eight o'clock, with Rev. W. C. Br charge, at which time the usual offering f Home was taken. We are not informed as amount of the offering, since reports from the departments of the church are not available, understand the amount was unusually good.

We have had real winter weather here for few days. The thermometer hovering around 20. It is somewhat warmer as we write, b ground is covered with ice and it is raining.

Barium Springs—Everybody but the Weath knows this is Thanksgiving time. One of the reas know it is because several days ago, a great big with a smiling driver and a big load of flour an meal, drove up and asked the way to the kitchen truck was from the Mooresville Flour Mills, and b us about a ton of flour and meal. By the way, this Mill sent us the first ton of flour made on their mil didn't let it go at that, but every Thanksgiving, t the same thing over again.

Then we read in the paper about a panic amon chickens at Old Steele Creek Church. We know w look for, and that is a truck load of chicken; graced our table Thanksgiving and at other mea then, we received a letter from the North Carolin Cream Association, tell us to look out for enou cream for our Thanksgiving dinner. Doesn't all that you smack your lips!

Then we sent out one hundred thousand innocen ing special Thanksgiving envelopes. If they woul bring back to us One Hundred Thousand Dollars pleasant everything would be. The Weatherman keep the rain turned on all winter, if he wanted t we would still be smiling when spring came.

Of course, along about Thanksgiving time ever thinks about football too, and our football teams not been idle. They played in the rain so much tha may be growing web-footed, but they seem to enj and while it is a little hard on the spectators we sh complain. Our little team has been victorious ov Morganton Mutes, the Middlesized team over Moore and the Davidson Scouts; and our big team, ov Winston-Methodists, the Davidson High School, ov but not least, Belmont Abbey College; and now, v all set for the final game of the season which will b another Presbyterian Junior College—that from McRae. This final wind-up will be at Davidson C and after it is over Richardson Field will take a rest.

Among our activities at Barium, we like to not the pecans and walnuts have all been gathered in. potatoes stored away. The new boiler installed, and thing set for the winter, except that it has rained so that the farm work is considerably behind. Our is all in the ground, but a good deal of barley rema be put in yet. Hog killing time has commenced, an nice porkers have already made a little trip throu sausage mill, and have found their way to the room. From now on, you will see the reason wh 125-pound football team will be the heavy team next All in all, we are happy and hopeful.

THE CHILD IN A CHRISTIAN WORLD (Christmas Lesson)

Mt. 18:1-6; Mark 9:36, 37, 42; 10:13-16; Lk. 2:1-20
(Print Lk. 2:8-20)

We are coming to the end now of a series of lessons on the social teachings of the Bible. It is certainly fitting that on the Sunday before Christmas we should be concerned with the Child, the Child in a Christian World. We shall consider the rights and privileges of the child, first as revealed in Jesus' birth, second, as revealed in Jesus' teachings.

I. As Revealed in Jesus' Birth

No story has given childhood so sacred a place in our hearts as the story of the birth of Jesus. It is certainly one of the most familiar stories in the Bible, and yet one which comes to us always with new meaning, especially as we approach the Christmas season. We suggest that you read the passage Luke 2:1-20 again as though it were new to you, as though you were one to whom the story was first told. Read it again a second and a third time, dwelling upon the familiar phrases, seeing the whole scene in your imagination.

We have (1) the birth of Jesus. Three things Luke tells us about His entrance into the world. He was born to Mary; he was born in Bethlehem; he was born in a stable.

He was the first born son of Mary. Mary was a young woman who lived in Nazareth, one of the numerous small villages scattered about Galilee. She was engaged to a carpenter in the town named Joseph. Both Joseph and Mary were descendants of David, but there were many other descendants of David in Palestine, and both were very poor. Luke tells us that one day an angel appeared to Mary and informed her that she would give birth to a Son. "This Son," he said, "shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Most High; and the Lord God shall give to him the throne of His Father David." Mary inquired how this could be, whereupon the angel replied, "The Holy Spirit shall come upon thee, and the power of the Most High shall overshadow thee: wherefore also the holy thing which is begotten shall be called the Son of God."

Matthew tells us that when Joseph learned that Mary was with child, he was very much disturbed. He was minded to break the engagement and to put her away privately. This was a more serious affair than to break an engagement would be now in America. Betrothal among the Jews was a legal affair, and included certain financial arrangements, part payment of the dowry, etc. In fact after the public announcement of the betrothal was made the two could live together if they so elected as man and wife; and children that were born from a union thus effected were regarded by society as legitimate. Usually, however, the betrothal was followed after some time by an elaborate wedding celebration. To break a betrothal arrangement then was almost equivalent to securing a divorce. Matthew tells us that Joseph was dissuaded from taking this step only by an angel who spoke to him in a dream. It would seem from the story in Matthew and Luke that he then took Mary to his home as his wife (probably without the wedding ceremony, which was not required), though he did not live with her as a husband till after the birth of her first born Son.

He was born in Bethlehem. Luke tells us very carefully how all this same about. There was a decree from Caesar Augustus that all the world should be enrolled. Joseph was forced to register in Bethlehem because it was his ancestral home. This was the Jewish method as distinct from the Roman method of taking a census. Why Mary went with him is not certain. Perhaps she too was compelled to go, for the purpose of being registered. Perhaps she wished to go, that she might be with Joseph, and away from Nazareth, when her child came into the world.

Objections used to be raised to this part of Luke's account of various counts, but recent discoveries of ancient historical data serve to confirm the story as recounted by Luke. We mention this because it is a fact worth noting that the various attacks on the historicity of Luke, in the Gospel and in the Acts, break down one after the other.

One other question we may raise about this part of the narrative. Why does Luke wish us to know that Christ was born in Bethlehem? He does not tell us, but Matthew reminds us of the prophecy of Micah: "And thou Bethlehem land of Judah, art in no wise least of the princes of Judah, for out of thee shall come forth a governor, who shall be a shepherd, of my people Israel."

He was born in a stable. Luke explains this by saying very simply that there was no room for them in the inn. Many writers hasten to add that no disrespect was intended to the Son of God. Of course, that is true. No one in the town suspected that Mary's child was to be the Savior of the world. But surely there were people in Bethlehem who knew that Mary's Son would soon be born. Yet no one offered their homes to her, no one offered to give her their place in the inn. If she had been a woman of rank, if she had possessed wealth, who can doubt but that it would have been different. As it was, however, the people of Bethlehem saw in Mary only a peasant woman with child; and she brought forth her child in a stable.

Why does Luke tell us of Jesus' humble entry into the world? We could never learn from Matthew's account that he was cradled in a manger; Mark does not mention it; neither does John. Luke mentions it perhaps because he has great sympathy for the poor. He goes out of his way to show us how Jesus was bound to all classes of people. We agree with Doctor Patterson-Smyth: "Somehow it would spoil the picture if He had been born in a palace with princesses to wait on Him and high priests in attendance. That poor little babe, whom nobody noticed, comes to us in His helplessness with such clinging appeal, as if trusting himself utterly to us, as if bidding for our affection, wanting us to be fond of Him. So touchingly, appealing did the Christ Child come."

We come (2) to the announcement of Jesus' birth. We note four things: to whom the announcement was made; how it came; of what it consisted; what its consequences were.

To whom the announcement was made. We might have thought that the announcement would have been made to the high priests, the scribes, or the Pharisees; instead it was made to shepherds, sleeping in the fields with their flocks. Godet reminds us that among the Jews the occupation of keepers of sheep was held in contempt. They were despised by the Rabbis on account of their necessary isolation from religious observances and their manner of life, which rendered strict religious observance unlikely if not absolutely impossible. It is significant, therefore, that the announcement was made to shepherds, to religious outcasts, men unshepherded by the spiritual leaders of Israel, that the announcement read: I bring YOU good tidings of great joy—for there is born to YOU—a Savior.

How the announcement came. Luke tells us that an angel of the Lord stood by them, and the glory of the Lord shone round about them. This last phrase refers to the heavenly brightness which in the Bible is a sign of the presence of God or of heavenly beings. After he had announced the Savior's birth to the startled shepherds, a chorus of angels appeared by his side, praising God and singing the heavenly anthem.

Of what the announcement consisted. The angel said: 'I bring you good tidings.' It is from this phrase that we get our word Gospel. The word Gospel means many things to us, but it meant originally good tidings, or good news. It was good tidings of great joy. Furthermore it was good tidings of great joy which shall be to all the people: not to one nation, but to all nations; not to one class in society, but to all classes; not to one generation, but to all generations. I bring you good tidings of great joy, said the angel, which shall be to all the people, FOR there is born to you this day in the city of David a Savior, who is Christ the Lord. The fact that He is the Christ, and that Bethlehem is spoken of as the city of David, meant that he is the anointed one, the Messiah, the King of Israel promised in the prophets. The angel further declared that the sign which would prove to them that the announcement was true was that they should find a babe wrapped in swaddling clothes and lying in a manger. And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God and saying: Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace among men in whom He is well pleased. This is the translation of the Revised Version and is probably more correct than that of the King James version, which renders the angel song: Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will to men. It will be noted that the two clauses balance one another. Heaven on the one hand, earth on the other. God on the one hand, men to whom God has shown his good will on the other. Glory on the one hand, peace on the other. Because of the birth of the Savior glory or praise shall ascend to God who is in the highest heaven; peace will descend upon men who live on the earth, men who through the gift of His Son are the objects of His good pleasure. The peace of which the angels sing is probably first of all peace between God and man, the peace of reconciliation, but it includes the peace of which Jesus speaks in John 14:27, that peace which gives a man the victory over the world and all its ills, and finally that peace between man and man for which the heart of the world is now hungry. The birth of Jesus calls for man's praise to God; in Him we and all the world shall find our peace.

The consequences of the announcement. The shepherds were moved to instant action by the announcement of the angels. They went in haste and found Mary and Joseph and the babe lying in the manger. They made known, not only to Mary and Joseph, but also to all the inhabitants of Bethlehem with whom they came in contact, what they had heard and seen of the angels. The people of Bethlehem naturally wondered at the things which were spoken unto them by the Shepherds. But Mary could have had no such astonishment; neither did she publish her impressions. The revelation to Joseph and herself precluded both. She kept all these sayings, pondering them in her heart. The shepherds returned as morning came to their humble task, as we must all return from our places of vision to the commonplace duties of life, but they returned glorifying and praising God.

And so Jesus came into the world, as a helpless babe

"They all were looking for a king
To slay their foes and lift them high;
Thou cam'est, a little baby thing
That made a woman cry."

Why did he come as a baby? Perhaps to point about childhood. New born babes possessed no Jesus' day. If they were unwanted they could often were exposed, left to die, or saved by ghouls for a life of shame. Since Jesus' days of little children have been recognized in increase. He too was once a little babe, like those in the slums. It is the right child to grow as he grew in wisdom and in stature in favor with God and with man.

"There was no room for them in the inn." This strikes us with new significance as we think of the place of the child in a Christian world. No doubt was intended, say our scholars. But Mary was bringing a child into the world, and some better action should have been found than a stable. Perhaps we should not criticize the inhabitants of Bethlehem ever. We are rather thoughtless ourselves. Today many mothers, poor mothers, mothers like those who bring their children into the world, and in places which are contaminated by moral as well as physical filth. How do you imagine Jesus when He sees us touched by the story of His birth into the world, no room for Him in the inn, but discerned for the mothers who today bring their children into the world, with inadequate care, in squalid surroundings?

II. As Revealed in Jesus' Teachings

A new value has been set upon the rights and privileges of children not only because Jesus himself entered into the world as a child, but also because of his prophetic teaching on the place of the child in society in the Kingdom of God.

Thus when Jesus' earthly ministry was nearly close, when he was on his way to Jerusalem, and his death, his disciples came asking him, Who is the greatest in the Kingdom of God. There was Peter's perhaps, in the room, and Jesus called one to his side, and said, Whosoever shall humble himself as this little child, the same is the greatest in the Kingdom of heaven. And then, whoso shall receive one such child in my name receiveth me; but whoso shall receive one of these little ones that believe on me to me, it is profitable for him that a great millstone shall be hanged about his neck, and that he should be sunk in the depth of the sea." (Mt. 18:1-6.) We have the incident also recorded in Mark 9:36-37, 42. However, we are told that the disciples had been on the way as to who was the greatest. And Jesus told them that if any man would be first, he shall be last, and servant of all. And then to illustrate the service that he had in mind he took a little child and said, Whosoever shall receive one of such little ones in my name receiveth me; and whosoever receiveth not me, but him that sent me. Greatness in the kingdom is won through service, and one of the types of service is service rendered to a little child.

Mark tells us also (10:13-16) that a little later he brought their children to Jesus that he might touch them, or as Matthew puts it, that he might put his hands on them and pray. Perhaps Jesus' extraordinary affectionate treatment of the little child in 9:37 had somehow reached the ears of the mothers in question, and they were to have the prophet, whose attitude to childhood was different from the superior one usual among the religious leaders of that day to bless their little children. The disciples in mistaken concern for their own dignity or ease rebuked them. Jesus was not moved with indignation. "It was a disappointment, kindled strong feeling so see his spirit so misused, and his gracious work hindered, and that by the very he had been instructing so patiently." He said to the little children to come unto me; forbid them not to come to such belongeth the kingdom of God. And he took them in his arms (an emotional gesture noticed in Mark) and blessed them. Doctor Salmond says: "Nothing is more characteristic of Jesus than his attitude toward children. It is unparalleled in ancient literature."

In these verses Jesus not only reveals his own interest in, his fondness for little children, but also the premium upon the proper care of children.

1. Care for their physical and mental and social needs. No one can win a place of greatness in the kingdom of God, except through service, and the one type of that he uses by way of illustration is service rendered to children. Service for all their needs is certainly important.

2. Care for their moral and spiritual needs. On the negative side he pronounces a heavy woe upon those who put stumbling blocks in the way of the young, who hinder their moral and spiritual growth, who cast stumbling blocks in their way. What are some of the stumbling blocks that are cast in their way in this modern world of ours? On the positive side he says Suffer the little children to come unto me.

We value the little children in our own homes are never more precious than at the Christmas season, but they are always precious. We care for them as best we know how. If we do not give them the care it is generally due to our ignorance. But our ignorance could be removed. There has been a study of childhood lately, so much put out that it helps us to understand our children better, to pro-

DEVELOPING MISSIONARY INTEREST OF THE CHURCH

any business as large as that of the Executive Committee of Foreign Missions it is necessary that some cultivation of the home Church be constantly carried on in that there might be an uninterrupted flow of gifts to the Foreign Missions Treasury. It was necessary, therefore, that the Foreign Mission Committee, when organized, should set up special departments whose primary function should be the generating of missionary interest in the home Church.

Work of Field Secretaries

Secretaries of the Foreign Mission Committee do more or less field work, two being especially designated as Field Secretaries, their primary duty being that of coming about from church to church, speaking to individuals, groups, and congregations in the general interest of Foreign Missions and securing, when the way is clear, gifts for this work.

Work of Educational Department

The whole Department of the Foreign Mission Committee is given over to educational work, this being the traditional Department. To this particular Department has been entrusted the cultivation of missionary interest through missionary gifts in Sunday Schools, Young People's Societies, Women's Auxiliaries, Men's organizations, conferences in general, summer conferences, conventions, ship training schools, and every other possible group existing in the Church. It even reaches into the Seminaries of our Church, assisting these in developing missionary minded pastors. In this Department special missionary programs are prepared for all groups, a large Educational Department is maintained for the benefit of churches who desire to use missionary slides, and a full missionary itineration service is maintained for those who desire the service of foreign missionaries from time to time while they are home on furlough. No literature is sent out from the Educational Department except on order, but during recent years a million and a quarter of pieces of literature have been sent out annually from this department on this basis.

VI. DIFFICULTIES FACING COMMITTEE

It would be hard to enumerate all the difficulties facing the Executive Committee conducting a work so extensive as that of Foreign Missions. There are one or two problems, however, which should be of special interest to every Presbyterian.

Local Treasurers Holding Funds Too Long

Organization depending for support upon voluntary contributions necessarily must have both "lean and fat" months. Many reasons have been advanced for this variation in income from month to month, one of the principal being that of local church Treasurers holding indefinitely benevolent funds instead of sending them on to the Treasurers of the Causes to which the funds are dedicated. The fault cannot always lie with the Treasurers, however, since he can only forward money as fast as Church membership turns it over to him. An ideal way foreign mission money comes from church physical and mental and social and spiritual needs, if we refuse to avail ourselves of it, we ourselves are responsible. Have we really sought with the aid of modern helps that are so abundant to understand our children, to plan wisely for their total welfare?

What about the children of other mothers? Have we the responsibility for them? Crippled children, defective children, the children of the poor, the children of negroes? Years ago there appeared in Collier's a little poem called "A Mother's Heart." Those of us who have children of our own can understand.

"I never touch the wonders of her hair,
Her golden nimbus like a sunlit mist,
That curls of other children are not there,
Wee hands unkept, unkiss't."

"I never feel her small confiding hand,
Slipped softly like a flower into my own,
That other little ones beside her stand,
Unloved, untaught, unknown."

"I never bend above her rosy sleep,
Or kneel in gratitude beside her bed,
That other babes in outer darkness weep,
Unwatched, uncaught, uncomf'orted."

"O little babes whom no mother tends,
O wee lost lambs that stray in stony ways,
How shall we find you, and how make amends,
For our child's happy days."

Treasurers to the Treasurer of the Executive Committee of Foreign Missions may be gotten from the figures for year 1929. Money from regular sources for that year were sent in to the Nashville office as follows:

April	$ 59,295.41
May	43,571.02
June	46,630.58
July	64,308.50
August	49,246.70
September	33,976.35
October	74,645.28
November	74,908.69
December	55,587.72
January	90,495.85
February	105,869.63
March	412,709.89

Note that over one-third of the year's income was sent to the Nashville office the last month of the year. It might be safely stated that the major part of that was received by the Nashville office the latter part of that last month and some of it on the last day of the month.

Problem of Interest on Borrowed Money

With expenses going on regularly on the foreign mission fields, and with income so irregular, it is essential that the Foreign Mission Committee borrow money to keep the work going at a regular pace. Missionaries must have their salaries when due; native teachers in our schools must be paid regularly; mission expenses must be handled as they accrue. No one would think of asking a missionary during the lean months of the year to wait until the last month for his salary. Yet, if money were to be paid out only as it came to the Nashville office, that is what would happen. The Foreign Mission Committee, therefore, not only borrows from the banks, but borrows from individuals who will lend money at low rates of interest. It borrows also money given for equipment items which cannot at that time be spent in the way the donor has indicated. This last can only be done, however, where the donor gives full permission for such borrowing. For instance, let us suppose that some individual gave $5,000.00 to build a hospital in Africa. It might take two years for the hospital to be completed, for in Africa the missionary must go to the forest to make his lumber, must go to the clay pits to make his brick, making building necessarily a slow process. The Committee in Nashville, therefore, might ask the donor of this $5,000 to permit this money to be borrowed for use in carrying on the current work until such time as the missionaries in Africa needed that money to begin work on the hospital, at which time the Foreign Mission Committee would promptly send the money on to the Mission.

Such borrowing entails a good deal of interest annually, but it seems there is no other way to carry on this work. Interest charges for the year 1929, including interest paid on Annuities, amounted to $21,733.35.

Increase in Cost With Static Income

It is a well known fact that no business can stand still and live. Success increases volume, and volume increases cost of doing business. The more successful a Mission is, the more churches it starts, the more pupils it gets into its schools, and the more expensive its work becomes. Yet, these are the things the missionary is sent out to and his very success means increased cost. The success of the Foreign Missionary enterprise is the romance of the age and the natural result is more workers to employ, more work to do, and in recent years with increased cost of living, the necessity of a greater income to maintain the work. Whether we wish it or not, the Foreign Mission expenses increase from year to year in the natural process of growth. In most Foreign Mission Boards in North America, however, the income has not been increasing materially from year to year, the 1929 income of our own Foreign Mission Committee in Nashville being the smallest since 1921. To maintain a growing work on a constantly varying and frequently shrinking income in perhaps the greatest problem facing the Foreign Mission work today.

V. ECONOMY OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

No Executive Committee of the Southern Presbyterian Church is more eager to exercise strictest economy in all of its operations than the Foreign Mission Committee in Nashville. Every phase of its work is carefully scrutinized by the Executive Committee and only such expenses as are absolutely warranted are incurred.

A better idea as to how the money was spent during the year 1928-29 may be gotten from the following, using the dollar as the unit:

1. The foreign missionary himself, his salary allowance both on field and while on furlough, child allowance;

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR PARTY

And Now for Buried Treasure!

Announce that some shipwrecked sailors have been picked up, that they have been roving the seas, stopping at this land and that in search of treasure, that a typhoon in the South Seas has gone hard with them and that their good ship lies at the bottom of the sea. They have offered, in return for their passage, to share the "booty" which they seek. Have prepared previously a sailing chart for each ship, on the general plan of the compass, having the various ports at which the ship is to touch bear some significance as to name. The following suggestions will help to work out your voyage: N by E— (Which is to say North by East)—to Singapore (Would the piano not serve as a good "Singapore"?) Other suggestions are: Port Said—the front door; Capetown—the cloak room; Gibraltar—the stone steps; Panama—the pantry; Brussels—the carpet; Liberia—the library; Sofia—davenport or sofa; Hagerstown—the furnace room, etc. The several crews go on this hunt from place to place. It is most appropriate to end the search with finding the treasure at the Sandwich Islands and Java—refreshment tables.

Sardines or tuna fish sandwiches and coffee are suggested as refreshments. At each place or for each guest, there may be a small unbleached cotton bag containing small candies, labelled with India ink, "Gold."

If there is musical talent in the group, use the "Pirate's Song," to the tune of "The Yellow and the Blue," University of Michigan song. The words follow:

"Ever be happy and light as thou art,
Pride of the Pirate's heart!
Ever be happy and light as thou art,
Pride of the Pirate's heart!
Long be thy reign, o'er land and main,
By the glaive, by the chart,
Queen of the Pirate's heart!
Queen!

Pride, pride of the Pirate's heart!

Pride of the Pirate's heart!

This would serve as an effective entertainment during the refreshment period, or the entire group could sing some of the old sailor songs to be found in every collection of old songs.

Toward the end of the refreshment period, the President of the society, dressed in a sailor suit, if possible, may appear dragging in the disheveled pirate, from whom he has taken the bag of Christian Endeavor Birthday Money. He may address the guests as follows:

"Ho, mates, behold yon villainous person whom I have this moment caught making away over the gunwale with the gold of the state, $----- in the good coin of the realm! (The money has been counted, and in this way the whole company know what the total gift to the state work is). I decree that the gold be sent at once to the treasurer of the state, and that this culprit be put forthwith in irons and confined to the lower hold of the ship." (Several who have been previously instructed, come in with flat irons, put the pirate on the floor and place the irons on top of him.)

Postscript added by the International Society, Recreation Department. What better opportunity could there be to explain the program of the International Society, the State Union and your own society than in connection with the "capture of the pirate?" After announcing the amount of the "booty" and before announcing the "decree," tell for what purpose the "gold" is needed and used. Write to Mr. E. P. Gates, General Secretary of the International Society of Christian Endeavor, 41 Mt. Vernon Street,

3. Promotion, which includes the general promotional work of the Foreign Mission Committee, together with the Foreign Mission Committee's proportion of the expense of the Assembly's Stewardship Committee, the Assembly's Woman's Work Committee, and the Assembly's Men's Work Committee, taking care also of interest paid by the Foreign Mission Committee, and all Union work on the field,

Cost 9 43-100 Cents Out of Every Dollar.

4. For the actual administration of the Foreign Mission work, Secretaries' salaries, the salaries of the office staff, postage, Secretaries' travel, rent, heat, light, janitor service, and every thing else incident to operating the business, last year

Cost 5 92-100 Cents Out of Every Dollar

The Department of Commerce in Washington estimates that the average business in the United States costs 17 1-2 per cent operating expenses. There is no business doing so varied a business as the Foreign Mission Committee over so large an area managing its work on any such low overhead cost as our Executive Committee of Foreign Missions in Nashville.

Write to your own state office and secure information concerning the state program. Then, not too much at length, tell what Christian Endeavor has accomplished during the 49 years of its existence; tell, in your own words, about the Crusade; explain the fine work your state union is doing and tell how much the evening's captured "booty" will help; then tell of your own programs and purposes. Do not lose this opportunity. Finish with the decree' as given above. Then see that your birth-day gift goes immediately to your state Treasurer.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S TOPIC

Sunday, December 22—How Christmas Sets the World Singing—Reference: Luke 2:1-14.

C. G. A.

For the Leader

Christmas time is here! How we are all thrilled with the spirit of merry-making! And how sacred a time it is, too. Santa Claus and the Christ Child seem at times to be the same—and more children are saying their prayers to Santa Claus at this season than are addressing them to the Master. Perhaps you would like to know why the two are linked. In very early times, before men knew about the seasons and the return of them, the cold short days of winter frightened them. They saw the days getting shorter and shorter and the wind getting colder all the time, and they thought the sun would finally cease to shine and they would have perpetual cold and night. And so they made fires and offered sacrifices to the sun-god to persuade him to return. And sure enough the sun did start to come back. They thought their sacrifices had bought results. Their fires were the first Christmas candles. Each year the time became a little more festive and the people felt surer of results. In Rome this time was known as the Saturnalia and was dedicated to the god Saturn. Gifts were given and feasting was in order. Thus we see that this time of the year has always been a time for merry-making.

The Celebration of Christmas

When Christianity became known in Rome, the old idea of merry-making could not be shifted so easily to a solemn religious festival. The Epiphany, or the celebration of the day when the wise men came to see the Christ Child, was supposed to be a time for solemn meditation. But the religious leaders found that they could not call the people from merry-making to prayer. And they fell in with the idea of the festivities by urging the people to worship—not the sun of the solar system—but the Sun of Righteousness. Saint Nicholas was a bishop of Myra, in Asia Minor, about 300 A. D. He was the patron saint of Russia, but I suppose Russia has no patron saint now, he gave gifts to children on Christmas Eve. And he has become the old Santa Claus that now resides at the North Pole, and makes excursions to our houses on Christmas Eve night.

A Carol from Germany

The pagan superstitions were turned into a Christian festival without much difficulty. It is not nearly so hard to get people to feast as it is to get them to fast. Songs of the nativity sprang up in all countries. From Germany comes a folk song that we all know and love. It is

"Holy night, silent night,
All is dark, save the Light,
Yonder where they sweet vigil keep,
O'er the babe, who in silent sleep,
Rests in heavenly peace."

The first carols were Latin canticles in praise of the infant Christ and the Virgin Mother.

Old French Carols

The French term for Christmas is Noël. We find the term in many Old English Carols, too. And Latin choruses were used generally.

The oldest known carol is in Norman French. It is a song of festivity urging the lords of the castle to drink in honor of Christmas. The services of the early church were in Latin and, as the unlettered or common people could not understand Latin, the clergy composed and played simple dramas illustrating events in our Lord's life. In these plays simple songs were sung and from these simple songs have grown our most beautiful carols.

Merry England

How many of our carols come from Old England! No country has entered more heartily into Yuletide festivities. The yule log, emblematic of heat and light, was brought in to the feast and each person present sat on the log for good luck. And the carols were many. "God rest ye, Merry Gentlemen," and "The First Noel," and "Oh Come All Ye Faithful" are among the most popular.

During the Reformation, Christmas observance was prohibited by Parliament because it had a Roman Catholic flavor. But this has been removed after a time, and it was that choirs went around to different houses and sang carols out in the street on Christmas Eve night. This custom has prevailed unto the present time.

"God rest ye, Merry Gentlemen,
Let nothing you dismay.
Remember, Christ our Savior,
Was born on Christmas Day,
To save the world from Satan's power
When they had gone astray.
Oh, tidings of comfort and joy!"

"MY FIRST IMPRESSIONS OF BANNER ELK"

An Open Letter

My dear Catharine:

You asked me to write and tell you where I was going and what I was going to do when I got there. Well, here I am at Banner Elk, North Carolina, "up 4000 feet in the air" and, until recently, about as far away from "folks" as could be imagined. Now, however, there is a wonderful highway, connecting with the new Appalachian Scenic Highway at Elk Park, only six miles away. There is a new map of the A. S. H. showing its progress from Quebec to New Orleans,—get one if you can. We have one up in the library and we feel as if we had wings when we look at it and almost every day there will be some student in front of it, with the point of his pencil on Banner Elk, but his imagination winging its way over these mountains and along the road to North and South. In the last Pinnacles we asked for books to feed this imagination, books of description and travel. For I am librarian at Lees-McRae, in the new library for the new Junior College, both in their first year and I am writing this in our lovely new library room—cream colored walls, oak (stained) tables and green chairs. It sounds, as it is, very lovely, but you may well understand that paint and stain and varnish cover many a deficiency, when you know that we have not spent a great deal over $50.00 on this new venture. Of course we need things. I have no desk and the book list cards are in a paper box, but some day we will have a file and all the library "fixin's." In the meantime, we are building up our collection from the 600 volumes we started with to reach, if possible, the 2500 which is the North Carolina standard for Junior Colleges. Our friends have been so kind about send us such worth while books, but we need so many more. Better than all this, there is a genuine love for the library and all that it represents, growing up in the hearts of the students.

But this is putting the cart before the horse, so let us make another start. I made my debut by rail to Elk Park. From Elizabethton, there is a tiny railroad that rejoices in the large name of the Eastern Tennessee and Western North Carolina R. R., but known more familiarly as the Stem Winder, so full of curves it is. The tiny train with its toy engine, bumped and creaked and groaned up the valley until the mountains seemed to bar our way, but they unfolded and took us to their heart. We began to

Norway, Iceland, Sweden, Denmark

In the Scandinavian countries Christmas is a more solemn feast than it is in the Southern countries. The Christmas is begun by house-cleaning—all rubbish is burned, for dirt, like sinful thoughts, cannot be tolerated during the Holy Season. A divine service follows; and then comes the Christmas tree with St. Nicholas presenting gifts to all the children. In Iceland, where the shortest day is four hour long, and where at Christmas-time the sun does not rise above the horizon for a week, the Yuletide is celebrated very enthusiastically. One of the songs the children sing is

"When I do good and think aright,
At peace with man, resigned to God,
Thou look'st on me with eyes of light,
Trusting new joys in joys abode."

And in Denmark the following carol is sung:

"That fields of kindness bear gold grain
Is a proverb true and tried;
Then scatter thine alms with lavish hand,
To the wailing poor outside;
And remember the birds, and the song they sang,
When the year rolls round again:
The Christ child came on earth to bless
The birds as well as man."

O, Come, All Ye Faithful

May we come to this Christ child and present our gifts to him. He it is that loves us and we are his. The world sings because it is his birthday. May the wonder of that first Christmas morning never cease to thrill us with joy. "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish but have everlasting life."

BOOKS—

Not since we read with our children The Adventures of King Arthur and the Round Table have we come across a story more interesting than The Trumpeter of Krakow by Eric Kelly.

Much of it is taken from the old folk lore of Poland with which the author seems to have a far-reaching knowledge.

It is a book especially adapted to boys in their early teens—full of adventure and mystery and deeds of daring—but older readers will find it highly entertaining and after one begins the story he will find it hard to lay it aside till he reaches the very last page. The illustrations by a Polish artist add to the fascination of the book.

climb with the little river Doe, singing along day beneath us and the mountains, green with spruce beautiful with rhododendron, towering high above. Higher and higher, around points of rocks through tunnels, we rocked and swayed, dropping our pass (workers from the Rayon Mills at Elizabethton) a stations, where tiny paths led across the fields to homes, with the cattle winding down from upland pastures or where a cottage stood beside the track, with its little tow-heads crowding the door.

The school is beautifully situated. From the room windows we see Grandfather Mountain. For the lazy old gentlemen, lying on his back and covering self with fleecy blankets of cloud or the gray mountain rain. When he does show himself, he is a handsome fellow indeed; with heavy eye-brows, a prominent very long beard, as befits a patriarch. Along at the top of the mountain hurries the Elk River, which is dammed back, giving two hundred foot fall at the power house furnishing both water and electricity in great abundance. In front of the school rises Beech Mountain, crowned with the Pinnacle, a high bare rock, not unlike A. S. H. Seat at Edinburgh. This is the view I get from the library with a big pine in the foreground.

While you and I were not brought up in the Presbyterian Church South, still we could not help being familiar with the name Lees-McRae. But one knows nothing of the wonderful work being done here unless one gets it and views it from the inside. Of the Mr. Tufts dreamed and lived this institution into being, it is necessary to speak for "the name is one to conjure in the mountains I was told before I came down." Dr. Jason L. MacMillan, our pastor at Norfolk once a trustee of Lees-McRae, in one of his first sermons told of Mr. Tufts' funeral; of the silent mountain crowding down from the hills bearing their offering of pine and galax to make beautiful his last resting place and of the great loss experienced by his passing, not to the school and community, but to the church at Lees-McRae. The year he died, his son was graduated from Day and from the dying hand he took the torch and is holding it high today and "Mr. Edgar" commands the loyal support of all who know him.

The three activities here have been combined in the Edgar Tufts Memorial Association. Grace Hospital, a wonderful place, with Doctor Tate at the head, sometimes "the Mayo of the South," associated with Doctor Hardin and splendid corps of nurses and a fine school; the school and College under Mr. Le Pritchett as principal; and Grandfather Orphanage, Mr. Painter and his consecrated helpers are lovingly leading children into ways of right thinking and living. Faculty and workers here are a constant wonder of delight to me. Such lovely young people with rich endowment of mind and person, who could command almost any position, "out in the world" yet happy and jubilant in their work here; older teachers with their experience and high college degrees, serving as the humblest—I cannot express my feelings. I have come new to so much devotion and it is a revelation. Just the faculty praying the morning where very definite things are asked for as an inspiration.

Now you know where I am. Perhaps some other day I may have more to tell you about the library for we are later to do some extension work, but now we are to lead the students to the love and use of books so with Mrs. Browning they can say, "No man can be so friendly who has God and the love of good books."

Ever yours,

Alison B. Stirling

Farmville, N. C.

On Wednesday, November 20, the Woman's Auxiliary of the Presbyterian Church met at the home of Mrs. J. M. Hobgood, president, for an all-day conference of the Home Mission textbook, "The Crowded World" by Dr. Chas. Hatch Sears. An outline of the book has been carefully prepared by Mrs. T. C. Turnage, Home Mission Secretary of the Auxiliary and, she, assisted by Mesdames W. G. Shepherd, A. S. Venable, Miss Monk, Wave Holson and Miss Josie Hearne, presented to the women a most interesting and comprehensive resume of the book which had previously been read by the majority of the women. At 1 o'clock the meeting was opened with an inspiring devotional period led by Mrs. Turnage who used the universally beloved passage, "Come unto Me all that labor and are heavy laden" as the basis of her remarks. At the noon recess a delightful buffet luncheon was served and a profitable and pleasant afternoon was spent in social intercourse. After having tried the usual methods of procedure in Mission Study the Farmville Auxiliary voted this to be the best suited to its needs and convenience.

Williamston, N. C.

Group number one and three of the Albemarle Presbyterian held their Group Conference joint at the First Baptist Church of Williamston. After singing of a hymn, the morning devotional was led by Mrs. Piephoff. She chose for her subject "Stand up for Jesus," reading Ephesians sixth chapter and told in a beautiful way the story which inspired of the hymn "Stand Up For Jesus" and urged each woman present take her place in the line of prayer against sin. Mrs. Ann Harrison graciously welcomed the visitors and Mrs. C. M. Brown as charmingly responded. Mrs. W. T. Clarke, of Wilson, Presbyterian President, gave a well planned outline of the work to be done during the coming year. A lovely service was sung by Mrs. Wheeler Martin, Jr., and Mrs. Biggs with Mrs. Eloise Bennett at the organ. During the duet, Mrs. W. S. Harden gave a splendor on the importance of deepening the life of the church. The collection was taken and used for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the conference. The Secretaries of all Causes of the conference made short talks on their respective causes. The Hillhouse conducted the afternoon devotion beginning from the fifteenth chapter of John and our theme verse for the year, "And Walk in the Light as Christ Hath Also Loved Us." A very helpful table discussion of Auxiliary problems was presented in which the report of the Courtesy Committee was read and the meeting adjourned.

 quarter's payments until the pro rata of the Synod being one dollar to four received. We have no Presbyterian evangelist and no way to get them unless the assembly puts men into the field. There is not a place anywhere that promises more for able and aggressive work, or less for one that is half-hearted, mismanaged and manned with weak men. There are approximately two and a half million people in the state and less than one-half million people in all churches combined. Oklahoma is one of the most thoroughly American states in the Union, a virile, thrifty people, who have to their credit, an individual yearly, $500 in new wealth. Oklahoma ranks among the states of the Union, as follows: "First in oil and its allied products. First in zinc, second in value of mineral wealth. Third in total yearly value of crops and minerals, being exceeded in this regard by Texas and Pennsylvania. In round numbers the wealth is as follows: Manufactured articles, $400,000,000; minerals, $500,000,000; and products from the land, $50,000,000. In little more than two decades by which the bounds Oklahoma has passed the other states he has attained her present high rank." Quoted from Chas. N. Gould, Director of Oklahoma Geological above statements show that too much is expected of church membership in this mission field of Oklahoma. The richness of the state with its high standards of living makes the life of the Home Missionary more some than even the foreign field. The opportunities in this field are great, but under our present plan of work there is not much hope for final success, and workers are called on to bear burdens out of proportion to their duties in holding the fort. Something must be done if this work is to be carried on in a sane and sensible way. There must be reinforcements. There must be at least three strong Presbyterian Evangelists, Sunday School and Religious Educational workers to the present force at once. There should be prior to the whole force of workers sufficient transportation facilities to enable the men to travel extensively in border towns and country districts. This should be done at once, and then later work out a much more progressive and a fuller program. If we can not take such a program, suggested, then we had better make an effort to the church that will take over the work and release us from any further obligations in this state. It should be mentioned that our Church in Oklahoma is composed of the poor and yet the sum of over $80,000 in benevolences and current expenses shows that the members have taken a real part in the work. It would be glad to hear of some reactions to this and snarled, showing their fangs in a fury.

 "Whole pack of them!" he gasped, turning to the engineer.
 "Somehow that doesn't seem to be me," replied Jed, smiling. "And I'm mainly am glad to know that your power isn't loaded," he went on, turning to the thief who still held the gun in his hand, "because mine maybe I can convince you to let me say without taking part in a thing that might hurt the both of us. I'll take that money."
 The robber did as he was ordered. "That's better," said Jed. "Now I'm going to tie you up because I know you won't try to escape while those fellows are howling around outside. If you're wise, you won't try anything rough inside the cab. I'm going to have George hold the gun, and let me tell you fellows, he isn't afraid to shoot if he has to."

Concord Church, Bethel Presbytery — The Rev. W. S. Hamiter, of Chester was with us here for services preparatory to the fall communion service on October 20. Mr. Hamiter has many friends in this community. He was pastor of this church for ten years. He was greeted with good congregation and brought us good gospel sermons. Brother Hamiter gave up his work at Pineville a year or more ago on account of his health. His friends will be glad to know that his health is good again and he is available for supply work. Any church wanting services would do well to get in touch with Mr. Hamiter.

APPALACHIA

Morrison, Tenn.—At the mid-week prayer meeting service December 4th this church enjoyed an interesting and inspiring talk by Miss Josephine Woods who is visiting Morristown friends. Miss Woods labors in the North China Mission with our own missionary Miss Lillian Wells.

Knoxville, Tenn. — An evangelistic campaign has just closed at John Sevier Chapel, in which Rev. B. M. Larsen, Superintendent of Home Missions of Knoxville Presbytery preached. Splendid interest was maintained during the sixteen nights of the series of services and many hearts were stirred by the inspiring messages of Mr. Larsen. The closing night of the meeting, November 19, there were seven who professed their faith in the Lord Jesus, four joining our church—while a number of others were stirred to re-consecration and more loyalty to their Saviour.

John Sevier Chapel is situated about seven miles out from Knoxville at the railroad shops of the Southern Railway—and is an off-spring of the Little Brick Church in this city in which Rev. Cecil H. Lang is pastor. The work at John Sevier is conducted jointly by the Little Brick and First Presbyterian Churches, of Knoxville, Rev. Wm. H. McCorkle, assistant pastor of the First Church doing the weekly preaching there, while visiting and much personal work is done by workers from Little Brick Church.

FLORIDA

The Synod of Florida held one of its most profitable sessions recently with the First Presbyterian Church of Ocala. Ocala is the county seat of Marion County, and is in the midst of a fine trucking and stock raising section. It is near the central part of the State, and the attendance, 105, was probably the largest in the history of the Synod. The congregation has just completed its beautiful and commodious house of worship. The auditorium is a remarkably handsome room with good acoustic properties.

The pastor, Rev. J. A. McMurray, is building up a strong church and the Presbyterians are doing nobly their part for the religious interests of the community. There were 63 additions to the church last year, and the contributions amounted to $16,000.

The opening sermon by Dr. R. H. McCaslin, retiring moderator, was full of inspiration, calling the Synod most earnestly and practically to its tasks of evangelism and missions. Seldom has the body heard a more helpful sermon.

Rev. Dr. A. R. Larrick, of Plant City, was chosen

Moderator without opposition, and justified the choice of the Synod by the impartial and expedient way in which he conducted the business of the body. As one who has been attending church courts for half a century, we are struck with the fact that our church courts have much more the character of business bodies than formerly. Lengthy discussions are out of date—"What thou doest do quickly." Devotional and dialectic gifts and graces must find development and exercise in other assemblages. The inspirational and educational and practical are given the right of way in our church courts today. This was manifest in the recent meetings of the Synod of Florida. The speeches of our secretaries and representatives of our educational institutions were exceptionally fine, in good taste and in good measure.

An interesting episode occurred in connection with Dr. Morris's talk. Dr. Anderson recalled the election of Dr. Morris as Secretary of Home Missions by the Assembly of which he happened to be a member. Quite a number had been nominated for the office. One by one they had been eliminated until only two remained. The vote between them revealed a tie. The clerk was reminded that he omitted the name of a colored member. The interest of the Assembly was centered immediately and intently on how he would vote. This colored brother was standing near Dr. Anderson, and had served with him on some committees, and somewhat leaned upon him for advice. When his name was called, Dr. Anderson in a low voice said "Morris," and Morris it was. The Moderator rather unkindly remarked that if the thing had turned out a failure, Dr. Anderson would have laid it on the negro.

Some members of the Synod offered a motion that the Synod overture the General Assembly to waive the rules of the Assembly as they bore upon the retiring of the secretaries at a certain age. Dr. Morris, it is understood, is now nearing that age and it seemed to many in the Synod that the usefulness of so efficient a servant should not be sacrificed at this juncture. However, at the earnest request of Dr. Morris, the motion was withdrawn.

The Synod adjourned to meet next October with the church at DeFuniak Springs.

EDITORIAL

He has evidently never read them, else he would have recognized their value, not only to the Sunday School teacher, but also to the preacher in the pulpit and the critics in the Easy Chair.

He would condense Church News, which he thinks merely glorifies the pastors, and he would boil down the reports of the Men's Work and the Young People's Work, to one column each.

The views of our brother are good, but not workable. It would take an endowment to publish such a paper, with no other support than readers interested in discussion of doctrines.

This paper would be a Review, such as the Richmond Seminary issues every quarter.

It would no doubt serve a purpose, but whether it would find any real demand is another question.

We sympathize with this and other critics, but we can do no more.

The remainder of the trip was made in silence, with Jed glancing at the hold-up men every once in a while. Just before the tractor arrived at the edge of the town, he said:

"Put up the gun, George. I don't think we're going to need it."

Turning to the men, he went on: "This is the first time you two have ever tried anything like this, isn't it?"

The men hung their heads and one of them said: "Yes."

"I thought so. You don't look like bad men." Then the engineer turned away as though he was trying to decide a difficult question.

At the outskirts of the town, a crowd of men met the supply train and drove the wolves off with rifles.

"Hullo, Jed," called one of the miners. "We were getting worried about you. Thought maybe you'd been held up."

"Nobody would dare hold up this train," answered another. "We'd lynch anybody who even tried it. This is the Christmas Special. By the way," he went on, "who are your friends?"

"Well, this is George Yates, son of the agent. You all know him. And these two fellows here . . . well, they're trappers, I think. We brought them in out of the blizzard because we figured you people could give them a right Merry Christmas."

"We certainly can. Everybody's welcome when the Christmas Special comes in . . . especially when it carries the payroll."

"Treat them right," said Jed. "We might not have reached here if it hadn't been for them. They helped to dig us through a snowdrift!"

He put his fingers to his lips as he turned to the surprised men.

"I want you to have a Merry Christmas," he said, quietly. "And when the New Year comes, maybe you'll make some good resolutions."

"I will," promised one man. "I won't wait for the New Year," said the other. "I'll make them right now."

After they had gone, George went to his friend, the engineer, and shook him by the hand.

"Mr. Brown," he said, "that's what I call great!"

"Thanks, George," smiled Jed. "It's Christmas time, you know"—and for the first time in his life, George realized what was meant by "Peace on earth, goodwill towards men."

THE MAN THEY OWED

Bess Herrick glanced at her husband in dismay as he pushed aside the plate she had just placed before him.

"What! Not going to eat your apple pie?" she questioned.

"I'm in too big a hurry. I've got to go to town." Steve rose from the table. As he passed Bess he rumbled her hair with his brown hand, then stooping, kissed her

TWO WAYS TO BE SURE

Discriminating buyers of monuments, desirous of securing the most permanent, beautiful and perfect stone, specify Winnsboro Granite in their purchase contracts, which affords a granite of greatest crushing strength; freest from water, lime and iron, which are deleterious, and in time tend to disfigure the monument; and which affords a stone of an even and beautiful crystalline structure.

The buyer may be absolutely sure of getting the real Winnsboro Granite if he insists upon the dealer delivering a certificate from the management of Winnsboro Granite Corporation, to the stock used being Winnsboro Granite; but to make assurance double sure the purchaser may test the monument by throwing water upon it. If there are then apparent any black or white splotches of size, or if there is any wave in the grain, some mistake has been made, and the monument is not of Winnsboro Granite.

Mistakes are always possible, as there is quarried from the Winnsboro quarries a second grade stone, known as "Smith stock"; also as there is quarried from many other quarries stones not so good, but resembling Winnsboro Granite.

The water test made three times at the plant before shipment assures first grade stone being shipped on orders for Winnsboro Granite; and such stone is certificated as Winnsboro Granite. Errors, however, might occur unintentionally, and all dealers should make the test above suggested before cutting a piece of stone. Buyers can be assured by the same test.

Winnsboro Granite is of flawless, even, straight grain—the ideal monumental material.

glowing cheek. But he didn't tell her why he had to go to town when there was lots of work waiting to be done at home. And Bess didn't ask him. Their union was of that kind. Each trusted the other perfectly, each forebore intruding upon the other's privacy of thought or action.

But after Steve had gone off down the road in the old car Bess got to thinking. Steve was worried about something—something that he did not feel like sharing with her lest it make her worry, too. Goodness knew they had troubles enough the way things had gone this last year. They'd had just about every kind of setback except a fire. "I hope we don't have that," sighed Bess.

When she had washed the dinner dishes and put the shabby kitchen in its usual spotless order she sat down at the window to darn Steve's socks. It was amazing the way Steven's big feet wore out socks. She drew a sock over her hand and studied it with puckered brows. It was hopeless.

Gobble, gobble, gobble! Bess glanced out the window. With a leap she was out of her chair, scattering balls of darning cotton and socks in every direction. Out doors she flew, bareheaded, though the wind was blowing an icy autumn gale.

"The old simp!" she raged. "Thinking he can spend the night in that apple tree! He'd freeze to death."

The great bronze-colored turkey saw her coming in pursuit. He fled before her. She sprinted after him, her slim legs gaining in the race. At last she was near enough to grab him. He struggled furiously. But she hung on valiantly. An eighteen-pound gobbler was no easy thing to handle, especially when he was flapping his wings, striking at her with his feet, pecking at her with his sharp bill. One blow on that cheek made the blood run. It also made Bess mad.

"Old fellow, you're going back into your coop, and I don't care now if I do pull out all you tail feathers," she muttered. "Hello, there!" A big car had whirled into the yard and stopped close beside Bess. From the window a stern old face looked out, the face of Henry Homer, rich and shrewd, some said too shrewd for exact honesty—in his dealing with folks. At that very moment he was squeezing Steve who owed him. But a young couple, just starting out in life, had to owe somebody. The trouble lay in the fact that they owed Henry Homer.

The man got out of his car, coming over to where Bess was trying to thrust the turkey into his coop, he eyed the big bird critically.

"How much will you take for him?" he asked.

"Whatever he's worth," Bess replied promptly.

"He's worth four dollars to me." Henry took out his thick pocketbook, opened it and extracted a pair of two-dollar bills.

"He's worth just fifty cents a pound to me. That's nine dollars," Bess returned flushing.

He shook his head. "Too much—too much. Here's four dollars for the bird. Take it or leave it."

"I'll leave it."

Henry wanted the big turkey, and whatever he wanted he usually got, for money will buy everything except love, often add to the measure of these. He was being crossed by this slim young thing in faded blue gingham, and he didn't like it, especially as he felt the Herricks were under obligation to him. Hadn't he let them have the money to buy every last thing they had?

"Come, come!" he said. "No fooling. Where's a gunny sack to throw over the turkey's head?"

Bess realized what she was up against. She dared not offend this man and yet—right was right, and she'd worked too hard and long over that gobbler to sell him for four dollars.

"You may have the turkey for nine dollars, not a cent less," she said. "You'll find that he weighs up beyond the eighteen-pound notch. I know for I weighed him myself just this morning."

"Look here, young woman," Henry was red with exasperation. "I'm going to tell you something for your own good. Steve has passed up his payment and interest. First thing you know you'll be set out of here. And I won't help you to another cent."

Bess was white now. So that was what Steve hadn't dared tell her—that he'd passed up his payment on the place? Suppose they were forced to leave, where should they go? Steve loved the old place. It had belonged in his family once. He had set his heart on getting it back in the Herrick name.

Henry had turned and was getting back into his car when out of a tight throat she spoke. "Wait! The turkey's yours."

The man went right on. Again she spoke more loudly. He turned and looked at her. What he said made her clap her hands over her ears and run into the house.

She stood in the center of the kitchen, her hands knotted under her chin, staring at the uneven floor. Mr. Homer had gone away mad. She had bungled. Better to have let him have the turkey if that was the only way to keep him good-humored.

Gobble, gobble, gobble! She looked out.
 The turkey had got out of the coop again.
 More chasing round in the cold, and she was tired enough already. This time she snatched her thick red sweater and put it on as she dashed to the pursuit.

But she lost sight of the turkey in seeing something else far down the road.
 There stood the big car, stuck in a mud-hole. It wouldn't, it couldn't pull out.
 Cars had been stuck there before that fall since the heavy rains. Bess thought an instant. Then she dashed to the barn and began to hitch up the big bay horse, which Steve called his right-hand man.

Henry Homer had got out and was tinkering helplessly under the hood when Bess rode up on old Mike.

"Nothing wrong with your car, Mr.
 Homer," she said cheerfully. "They all do it at this point. Steve pulled out two this morning."

He glowered at her as she slipped to the ground beside him.

"I suppose Steve keeps his mudhole here on purpose so he can get paid for pulling folks out," he said.

"He did it for nothing. So will I."

She was offering him a favor and he hated to take it. But he saw he must or wait until somebody came along with a team. And on a road of this kind he might have to wait hours.

"Go ahead," he said gruffly.

He did help her hitch the horse to the car. She stood at Mike's head. Mike understood. He pressed against the collar with his big shoulders, his muscular flanks strained. Out came the car onto a dry spot.

Bess jumped onto Mike's back and before the man could thank her she was riding home.

She was baking gingerbread for supper when Steve came home. He leaped from the old car and entered the house whistling.

"Pretty near got stuck in that old mud-hole myself," he said. "I'm going to fix it tomorrow. I'll throw in a few loads of stones. Bess, I've got good news for you!
 I met Henry Homer, on my way home and he says he'll fix up that payment for me. He thinks we've done pretty well for a pair of kids, keeping as far ahead of the game as we have this first year. I did get that money that's been held back so long, though I didn't expect to when I went after it today. I've been awfully bothered lately. But all we want is time, Bess.
 We'll clear ourselves if we have a little time. But I don't see," Steve pushed back his dark hair, "what makes Henry Homer so kind of—of human all of a sudden."

Bess stooped down and took the pan of gingerbread from the oven. She held it under Steve's nose, laughing. But she said not a word.

A RAINY DAY LESSON

Jennie Standifer

A shabbily dressed, awkward girl of thirteen came into Miss Warner's Sunday School class one summer morning, and gave her name as Sara Jane Jones. After entering she was always present, and on time, although she lived a mile from the church. She never spoke except to answer in monosyllables when asked a question.
 When the young teacher visited her pupil she found the family was almost destitute and the father out of employment.
 Sara Jane was the oldest of nine children.

"Sara Jane is a powerful help to me with the babies," the tired looking mother told Miss Warner, "but she's mighty slow to learn in her books. She stays two years in all her grades."

Neighbors could have told that Sara Jane was overworked at home, nursing babies, washing and cooking, but there seemed to be no way to relieve the girl's burdens.

When Miss Warner offered to teach her class of girls basket making, knitting and embroidery on Saturday afternoons, Sara Jane was the only one who could not learn to do the work. The instructions of one week were forgotten by the next.
 The teacher was discouraged, and believed that her efforts to help the girl had failed.

One stormy, rainy morning in September, Miss Warner arrived late at the church. When she entered her Sunday School room Sara Jane Jones, somewhat drabbed, but smiling, was the only pupil

Beware the Cough From Colds That Hang On

Coughs from colds may lead to serious trouble. You can stop them now with Creomulsion, an emulsified creosote that is pleasant to take. Creomulsion is a medical discovery with two-fold action; it soothes and heals the inflamed membranes and inhibits germ growth.

Of all known drugs, creosote is recognized by high medical authorities as one of the greatest healing agencies for coughs from colds and bronchial irritations. Creomulsion contains, in addition to creosote, other healing elements which soothe and heal the inflamed membranes and stop the irritation, while the creosote goes on to the stomach, is absorbed into the blood, attacks the seat of the trouble and checks the growth of the germs.

Creomulsion is guaranteed satisfactory in the treatment of coughs from colds, bronchitis and minor forms of bronchial irritations, and is excellent for building up the system after colds or flu. Money refunded if not relieved after taking according to directions.

Where There's a WILL There's a WAY!

You Make the WILL:

The Presbyterian Foundation Will Make the WAY

One big difficulty we face in the Southern Presbyterian Church is this fact that our people are not making Wills. Wherever there is a Will there should be a way made possible for the continuation of your ideals after you have completed your mortal existence. There is such a thing as immortal money! It ought to be a disgrace for a Presbyterian to die without having made in his last Will and Testament some provision for the institutions of the Church.

The following institutions ask you to use the Presbyterian Foundation as medium for helping them by direct gifts, life insurance, annuity bonds or through the provision of your last Will and Testament:

MILLER'S ANTI-PAIN OIL
Formerly known as

Snake Oil

STOPS PAIN

From coast to coast men and women are singing the praise of "Anti-Pain Oil"—a most powerful, penetrating, pain-relieving liniment. It will penetrate the thickest sole leather in a few minutes. Mrs. B. Werner, New Orleans, La., writes, "Thanks to your wonderful penetrating oil, it relieved me of Rheumatism and deep-seated cold after other remedies failed."

"I had rheumatism so bad I had to walk on crutches for nine years," says H. C. Hendrix, old soldier of Minneapolis, Minn. "After three months' treatment with 'Anti-Pain Oil' I laid off my crutches and now can walk like a boy."

J. B. Moore, Pittsburg, Pa., railroad man says, "Anti-Pain Oil" is the only liniment that ever gave me relief from rheumatism. I use it regularly after being exposed to bad weather." For rheumatism, neuralgia, lumbago, stiff joints, pain in back and limbs, corns, bunions, chest colds, sore throat "Anti-Pain Oil" is said to be without an equal.

Refuse imitations. Nothing like the original. Sold in 35 cent bottles. Get it from your druggist.

Mothers, Mix This at Home for a Bad Cough

You'll be pleasantly surprised when you make up this simple home mixture and try it for a distressing cough or chest cold. It takes but a moment to mix and costs little, but it can be depended upon to give quick and lasting relief.

Get 2½ ounces of Pinex from any druggist. Pour this into a pint bottle; then fill it with plain granulated sugar syrup or strained honey. The full pint thus made costs no more than a small bottle of ready-made medicine, yet it is much more effective. It is pure, keeps perfectly and children love its pleasant taste.

This simple remedy has a remarkable three-fold action. It goes right to the seat of the trouble, loosens the germ-laden phlegm, and soothes away the inflammation. Part of the medicine is absorbed into the blood, where it acts directly upon the bronchial tubes and thus helps inwardly to throw off the whole trouble with surprising ease.

Pinex is a highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway Pine, containing the active agent of creosote, in a refined, palatable form, and known as one of the greatest healing agents for severe coughs, chest colds and bronchial troubles. Do not accept a substitute for Pinex. It is guaranteed to give prompt relief or money refunded.

in attendance. The thought came: 'Why waste the lesson period trying to teach this stupid girl, when I could enjoy the lecture of the Bible Class teacher?'

"Would you like to go into a class with other girls, Sara Jane?" Miss Warner asked persuasively.

"No'm. I don't want no teacher but you," the girl replied decidedly.

"Very well, I will teach you."

There came the resolve to give this dull, overworked child her very best efforts in making the lesson simple and easy to understand. Jesus had preached a sermon to the Samaritan woman. She would follow His example. The subject of the lesson was "God's Great Gift to the World." She began by telling of the creation and fall of man, and the need of a Savior; then of how God "so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son" to save the lost. She made plain the necessity of conviction, or realization of sin, the need of repentance, and how the blood of Jesus could cleanse from all sin.

Did Sara Jane want to be saved? There was eager, unhesitating assent. Was she sorry for her sins, willing to turn from them, and trust in Jesus to save her? Would she give her life to Him? The dull face, working with emotion, lighted with joy as she responded:

"Yes'm, I'm sorry for my sins—so sorry I don't want to sin no more. There ain't nothin' else I can do but trust Jesus to save me."

"Then you must confess Him and be baptized. Talk to your parents, though, before you join the church."

"Yes'm, I will."

A few days later Miss Warner went to a neighboring city to visit a friend. Upon her return home she found the family of Jones had moved to a farm in the Mississippi delta. She was unable to learn Sara Jane's address, and as time passed the memory of the quiet, timid girl to whom she had made plain the gospel message that rainy September morning, passed from her mind.

Years passed. Miss Warner married a well-known lay preacher who did great work in Sunday School Institutes all over the state. She accompanied him to an institute held with a small-town delta church in the county Agricultural High School buildings. Soon after her arrival the President of the Woman's Missionary Society, whose guest she was, told her of a visit they anticipated from a young woman the members of that Associational District were educating to be a missionary.

"She joined our church when a slip of a girl, and from the first her heart seemed on fire to carry the gospel to the heathen. She was slow to learn in school, and not until she begged the Junior Superintendent into letting her teach a class of children in Sunday School did we realize she really and truly called to the work. It wasn't long until every child in her class was converted, and as eager to do the Lord's work as their teacher. The women of our different associations made up money and sent her to one of our demonional school where she did not have so many hindrances from her family. They were very poor, but there were other girls in the home who could help. She did well in that school, and spent her vacations here. She has made over both the town and the county. She visits the worldly, the lawbreakers, the down-and-outs, and talks to them individually. Every word that she says sticks. She knows the Bible and makes it so plain that the simplest can understand. We are going to send her to the Training School in Louisville this fall, and when she has finished the course we will support her to China. She will be a blessing to the heathen as she has been to this once godless community."

"Here she comes now! I am so glad for you to meet her."

A tall young woman with a face aglow with a light that comes only from a Spirit-filled life, entered the room and warmly greeted by the President of the Missionary Society. And then—

Sara Jane Jones clasped her former teacher in a loving embrace.

"At last, I can thank you for that blessed lesson!" Sara Jane cried joyfully.

"What do mean dear?"

"I mean the morning years ago when you took time to make me, a stupid, ignorant child, see the need of a Savior and repentance for sin, and the power of Jesus to save. That lesson was a turning point in my life, and with the Master's help I have made your plan of teaching the means of bringing blessings and salvation to many. Thank you over and over again for that lesson."

"It was a privilege to teach you, Sara Jane. I feel honored to have been the one to lead you to Christ."—The Leader.

A CALL TO THE ELDERS AND DEACONS

To each elder and deacon in all the churches of the General Assembly (whose name and address we have) there is going from the Louisville Office full information concerning the Ministers' Annuity Fund.

We urge every officer of every church to study carefully this plan which has the endorsement of the General Assembly, the Synods, almost all the Presbyteries, and which is commended by hundreds of the leaders of our Church. Remember please—

1. This is a sure, economical, Christian business method to meet a serious situation which grows more critical every year.

2. It is the only way our Church, or any other Church, has yet discovered to solve a problem we have been trying to solve since 1717.

3. It is a plan worked out by eminent actuaries, checked by the best experts of the country and tried and proved by the Protestant Episcopal, the Baptist, the Congregational, the Northern Presbyterian, and other Churches.

4. It really means gradually taking out of the "Benevolent Budget" the cause of Ministerial Relief and putting it into the "Church Expense Budget" where it belongs.

5. The Ministers' Annuity Fund will solve the problem for all the years—expanding with the growth of the Church.

6. Had our fathers adopted such a plan it would now be entirely sufficient. To make up for past neglect a fund of $3,000,000 to meet the accrued liability of the Church for the prior service of its ministers must be secured in 1930.

7. This is not a large amount for the entire Church to contribute in six payments over a period of three years. Presbyterians contribute most liberally to all forms of benevolence—they will raise this fund to meet a solemn and binding obligation.

The officers and other men of the Church should lead in this work. The pastor has pled for every other good cause, but has been modestly reticent about anything that seemed to touch his own welfare.

The Ministers' Annuity Fund is primarily for the Church, helping it to keep its pledge and making it more efficient because of releasing its ministers from worldly entanglements for spiritual ministries.

Single Presides at Chicago Meeting

Executive Committee Federal Council of Churches Discusses Problems Facing the Life and Progress of the Church

Hundred and fifty religious leaders in Chicago, December 4 to 6, constituted the Executive Committee of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America. The sessions of the Committee were held in the St. James Methodist Episcopal Church, President Walter Davidson of Davidson College, Davidson, North Carolina, presiding. Dr. Herbert Hoover, Chairman of the Midwest Division of the Federal Council, having just returned from Chicago, and Dean Shailer Mathews, President of the Chicago Federation, greeted the delegates. The possibilities of bringing together representatives of the world on the basis of religious work; how to appropriate the nineteenth anniversary of the inauguration of Christianity; a program for home mission throughout the United States; the program of education which the situation with reference to pro- and cons for; how to promote a better understanding between Jews and Christians—were some of the questions discussed.

During the meeting of the Executive Committee on the occasion of a public celebration of the twenty-first anniversary of the organization of the Federal Council, Francis J. McConnell, presiding, made the principal address, said

The Federal Council is not now content with formulating direct schemes for the union. Among the constituent churches of the Council are many whose church government and policy are not themselves readily adaptable to the Federal Council. The Council is, however, endeavoring to bring the churches on such a basis of church cooperation that a deeper and finer spirit of unity may be consequently developed. We all recognize that it would be useless to try to bring about union by any ecclesiastical effort on the part of the denominations from the outside, when it comes, must be of free consent of all organizations. The aim of the Council is to create an atmosphere of mutual respect and understanding.

The Executive Committee approved the formation of a new Commission on Missions—"for the purpose of coordinating the interests and activities of the various organizations in their relation to missions; to further or provide for the study of the relations of the churches to the public welfare; to study the relations of the churches at home and abroad to the motion picture industry; to maintain a general service, and to a representative of various peoples through missions at home and abroad; to seek to correct misrepresentations and to secure cooperation of the best of the various countries, and to further the use of films to strengthen understanding and good will."

The Commission on International Justice and Peace presented a message to be sent to the churches concerning the Paris Peace Pact, the London Conference on Reduction of Armaments, and the entry into the Permanent League of Nations.

A National Christmas Sing

National Broadcasting Company To Arrange Nationwide Hookup, 10,000 Singers and Four Bands to Join in Music

On Christmas Eve, Tuesday, December 24, between the hours of 7:30 and 8:30 p. m., there will be a nation-wide effort to get the entire country to join in a Christmas Carol Singing Festival, through a gigantic radio broadcasting hook-up.

The Advertising Club of New York, in co-operation with the Municipal Authorities, Churches, Philanthropic Societies, etc., have just perfected arrangements with the National Broadcasting Company to broadcast this event. About 10,000 singers will assemble in Madison Square Park, 23rd Street and Fifth Avenue at 7:30, including Soloists, Choir Members, Glee Clubs and others, who will be accompanied in their International Carol Sing by four complete bands already engaged.

Several noted singers will sing appropriate selections, and Albert Stoessel, the famous conductor, will lead the Carol Sing. Mayor James J. Walker will open the ceremony, the Police Department will provide the necessary stands, and Police Commissioner Grover A. Whalen, and many other distinguished men and women will be present.

The National Broadcasting Company will erect the broadcasting equipment and Graham McNamee will be the announcer in this national hook-up. Every home in the land will be asked to join in the singing. The six leading motion picture companies have promised to provide for the sound and picture photographing of the crowd, so the event will be repeated afterward in thousands of moving picture houses, to many millions of people.

Southwestern Receives Large Gift

Memphis College is the Recipient of a Gift in the Amount of $50,000

It gives us pleasure to announce a recent gift of $50,000 to Southwestern from Mr. J. T. Lupton, of Chattanooga, Tennessee. In addition to the money already subscribed in recent campaigns, it was estimated that it would require $400,000 to stabilize Southwestern. That amount of money will not provide fully for the needs of Southwestern, but it will finish paying off the mortgage indebtedness and will add sufficient money to the endowment to meet the minimum financial requirements of the standardizing agencies. This must be done before Southwestern is eligible to receive gifts from corporations and foundations. Mr. Lupton's gift is one of several which is conditioned upon this total amount being raised, and it services as a tremendous lever in raising this sum.

Mr. J. T. Lupton is unique among the well-to-do members of the Southern Presbyterian Church. He is, so far as I know, the only well-to-do member of that Church, certainly throughout this section, who has caught the vision of Christian education as the solution for the world's ills to the extent of investing heavily in that enterprise. There are many members of other denominations, whose names are familiar in the educational world, who have given largely to the college of their denomination. Mr. Asa Candler is credited with giving to Emory University some seven millions of dollars. In making his first gift of one million in 1914, he wrote as follows: "I am profoundly impressed that what our country needs is not more secular education, but more of the education that is fundamentally and intentionally religious. I see no way by which such religious education can be supplied without—"

One Hundred North Carolina Young People's Leaders Meet in Conference at High Point

The North Carolina State Christian Endeavor Union held an Officers Institute in High Point, Saturday, November 30, and Sunday, December 1, with approximately one hundred registered delegates from districts and societies throughout the state.

Dr. Chas. M. Sheldon, formerly Editor of the Christian Herald, and Author of "In His Steps," delivered the principal address of the Institute. He used as his theme, "The Value of a Human Being," pointing out that a human being has four values, namely, a personal value, an unknown value, a known value, and a divine value. He emphasized the fact that no one is unimportant, and that God individualized every one. W. Roy Breg, Southern Secretary of Christian Endeavor, led the group in discussion of the best methods of young peoples' work, and stressed the Three-fold Crusade Program.

Arnold J. Koonce, president of the North Carolina C. E. Union, presided over the meeting, and the various superintendents explained their departmental work.

Other speakers heard by the delegates were, Rev. Tom Sykes, speaking on "World Peace," Rev. Roy I. Farmer, pas-

Fleeing From Russia

Refugees Seeking Escape From Persecution—Dr. Vance Again Appeals for Protestant Relief in Europe

News has come of the flight of thousands of families from Russia to escape the persecutions of atheistic communism. These people are seeking to find somewhere the kind of refuge the Pilgrims found in the Western World when they landed at Plymouth Rock. Here is the cable letter from Dr. Adolf Keller, Executive Secretary of the Central Relief Bureau of Evangelical Churches at Geneva:

"Thousands of farmers leaving Russia because of insupportable conditions imposed by Soviet government. Hope to migrate to Canada, but Canadian government hesitates to consent because of economic conditions in the dominion. Thousands of families, therefore, stopped on their flight from Russia. All their possessions sold or lost. No money, food, or winter clothing. Living in terrible squalor in concentration camps near Moscow, in Bigossowo, Sebesch: Schneidemuhl (Germany), Hamburg, and Bremen. In Moscow camp alone are 10,000 families. Bitterest need for immediate help. This concerns all Protestant people as most of these refugees are Lutheran or Mennonite. Our office working with leaders of refuge migration movement, and with Dr. Fritzjof Nansen. Urge again necessity for immediate help as sickness already breaking out."

We had come to the conclusion that no crisis in the field of European Protestantism would call for extraordinary relief this year, when suddenly we are face to face with this conditions in Russia which calls for speedy and large-hearted help.

These Russian pilgrims are among the finest people of that country. They are Protestant. They are descendants of thrifty, once prosperous farmers, and of German and Scandinavian colonists who were brought into Russia by Peter the Great. They are on the march for a home somewhere in the world where they may enjoy religious freedom and worship God according to the dictates of their own conscience.

Surely Southern Presbyterians will not be slow to show their sympathy by substantial contributions to Protestant Relief in Europe.

Confronting this crisis, we are dismayed by the fact that thus far the offerings to this cause are the smallest in its history. So far this year we have received only about $2,000. The churches that have given have done so with decreased amounts, and many churches have sent so far nothing.

Can we let these victims of a godless despotism fight their battle alone? They are greatly troubled. They are in dire distress. They have lost nearly everything they had. Many of them have been killed. Without money, food, or winter clothing, in bitter need, these Protestant people must be helped by their Protestant brethren in America or perish.

I appeal to the Presbyterians of the South to do something, and to do it speedily.

All contributions sent to our treasurer of Protestant Relief in Europe at 154 Fifth Avenue, North, Nashville, Tenn., will be promptly forwarded.

Older Boys Conference In Charlotte

Y. M. C. A. Holds Gathering at First Methodist Church for Three Days

The State Committee of the Young Men's Christian Association held a three day conference for the older boys of the state of North Carolina at the First Methodist Church, Charlotte, lasting from Friday through Sunday. There was an attendance of 400 boys from all parts of the state, who were entertained in the homes of the citizens of Charlotte. James Poole, of Wilmington, a boy himself, was president of the convention.

The theme for the meeting was "The Challenge of Life," and addresses were delivered by several speakers, among them being Albert E. Roberts, general secretary of the YMCA whose home is New York City, and Dr. Howard E. Ronthaler of Winston-Salem, president of Salem College.

During the Charlotte conference problems of school life, of relations with parents, of relations with girls and other problems of boys were discussed by Y. M. C. A. leaders.

Following the last session the boys gathered to the auditorium of the First Methodist Church to hear the pastor, Dr. W. W. Peele, deliver a special sermon to the young men on ways of achieving the highest and best things of life.

J. Wilson Smith, state secretary of the association, said Sunday night that 200 of the boys made decisions for Christian lives during the conference. Forty of these said they had never made decisions of this kind before.

The next state conference will not be held for three years, but eastern and western divisional conferences are planned for next year. A special committee will select the time and places for the meetings.

out institutions of learning owned and controlled by the churches."

There are many men and women of small means or of moderate means in the Southern Presbyterian Church who have caught the vision of the importance of supporting the church colleges, even to the point of sacrifice, but there are few well-to-do individuals among us who seem to realize that the church which does not maintain a few strong colleges will soon be a decadent church. It is of the utmost importance to keep the church abreast of modern thought and life, and to assert the compatibility of Christianity and enlightenment.

A number of years ago, as the result of careful thought, with the background of a wide and successful experience in life, Mr. Lupton came to the same conclusion that was reached by Mr. Asa Candler as expressed in the quotation above, and he determined to make his philanthropic investments in the realm of Christian education. He has given large sums to that cause, and in this philanthropy he is making the most enduring and far-reaching investments that can be made. When the cause of Southwestern was presented to him, he saw at a glance the importance of stabilizing this great Presbyterian college in the strategic location which Memphis offers. He saw that the future of the Southern Presbyterian Church in the Mississippi Valley is dependent upon the adequate establishment of Southwestern at Memphis, and, in spite of the fact that he was already heavily burdened with previous commitments, he gladly gave $50,000 towards the stabilizing of this institution.

Mr. Lupton is a native of Winchester, Virginia, is a graduate of Roanoke College, and he resides in the Synod of Ap-alachia. He is, therefore, not an alumnus of Southwestern, nor even a resident in one of the four co-operating Synods, and yet his clear vision of the future and his generous heart prompted him to make this investment. It is earnestly hoped that Mr. Lupton's example will be followed by those upon whose generosity we have a more natural claim, and that the needs of Southwestern will be fully met in the future.

DR. LINGLE PRESIDES AT CHICAGO MEETING

Court of International Justice, and other current issues. Discussing the meeting of the Pact, the report said: "The Peace Pact of Paris, proclaimed by President Hoover on July 24, 1929, binding on all participating nations, is in truth a World Covenant of World Peace. If the people take it in earnest and require their statesmen to shape national policies in the light and spirit of the Pact, it will usher in a new era. War will be no more, and all preparations for war should soon cease.

"Hitherto, nations have depended largely on their fighting power for existence, for rights, for prestige, and for influence. Armaments have been fundamental in international relations and in national policies. Hereafter, the rights of nations will be based on mutual treaties and agreements and on international law, and a nation's prestige will depend on its achievements in social justice and progress, on its practice of the essentials of civilization, on the attainment by its citizens of noble living.

"Because the benefits to come from the Pact depend on the degree to which the people give it their intelligent and earnest support, we appeal to the churches of our land to do their part in creating an informed and loyal public opinion in support of the principles and policies of the Pact.

"The Pact presents the ideal in broad and general outlines. Its effectiveness will depend on the application of the ideal to specific issues and concrete problems."

President Southwestern.

CHRISTMAS PROGRAM IN CHURCH

of-the-Church, Women's Auxiliary, Christian Endeavor and other Young People's organizations.

The program will be accompanied by an offering for the support of retired ministers and missionaries. The Southern Presbyterian Church has on its rolls 1,483 widows and 248 widowers; 48 from 34 homes, 6 unordained workers and 52 children under 18 years of age. The average assistance to homes last year was $415. Dr. H. S. Sweets, Secretary, recently stated that on account of the accumulation of this meager amount must be reduced to the total amount asked by the Assembly for Christian Education and Ministerial Relief is $405,000 for the current year ending March 31, 1930. The preceding Christmas day is Life Imitation Day and Presbyterians everywhere are urged to make their gifts of assistance and service on the white gift

GYPSY SMITH, JR., IN CHURCH

Noted Evangelist Holds Week's Work Which Aroused Wide Interest

Rev. "Gypsy" Smith, the celebrated evangelist of Noank, Conn., last night closed a remarkable revival in the city of Charlotte, N. C., which lasted for only six days.

High tribute was paid the evangelist for the excellent work he accomplished here. Rev. J. Oscar Mann of Purity Presbyterian Church, under whose auspices was brought here, thanked him in behalf of that Church, and Rev. W. E. V. of Bethel Methodist Episcopal Church, on behalf of all of the other churches of the city. Although the revival continued for six days, it was one of the most stirring ever held in the city. Hundreds were unable to get within the doors of the Purity Presbyterian Church. The Standing room only could be found in the large auditorium, the crowd was immense.

What a Man's Hand is to a Man

MILDRED WELCH

The two had been college mates and friends and now after many years they were having dinner together at the Club.

"Come," said Phillips, after the waiter had brought in the coffee and cigars, "we'll go down to the house and finish our talk there." "Your house?" asked Richardson, "I thought you lived at the Club." "No," said the other, "I entertain here, because while I have a house and a housekeeper—well, it isn't a home now. But I'll tell you about that later." A fifteen minutes' drive brought them to a large and handsome house set among shrubberies and trees. Phillips took his friend back to a small room at the end of the wide hall. "This is my den, my retreat, my house of dreams," he said. "We shall not be disturbed here. Make yourself comfortable while I give some orders to the housekeeper."

Richardson settled himself in a big chair and stretched out his feet to the warmth of the crackling logs on the hearth. "Home or not," he said, "there's a woman about or there wouldn't be such a cozy, welcoming place for two tired men on a sleety, stormy November night." He looked around. "Strange, isn't it," his thoughts ran on, "how even a room takes on the individuality of the person who lives in it? Now this den is just like Phillips." He saw the low book cases filled with volumes, worn, read, beloved; the few engravings on the walls. "For all he is so rich, the room is just himself, simple, sincere, solid. But he has added another quality since I saw him last that I can't make out." His gaze came back to a group of pictures above the mantel. "I shouldn't wonder if the miniatures are of his wife and children—but who are the others?" He got up to look more closely. In the center were three miniatures, beautifully painted, framed in gold. One was of a woman, the others a boy and girl, and in all three the artist had caught some common likeness of ethereal loveliness beyond the beauty of blue eyes, fair skin, and shining hair. "His children," said Richardson. "He wrote me there were twins—about fourteen years old, I should say. They have her beauty, but they are like their father, too. Now these others—" The contrast challenged his eyes. The ten or twelve pictures clustered around the miniatures were mostly small and cheap photographs of boys and girls of sixteen or seventeen. But there was nothing cheap about the faces. Some had beauty; all had the high look of youth at its best—wistful, eager, yearning after some adventure of the spirit. He was still studying them when Phillips came in. He turned. "I've been wondering ever since I saw you again, Howard, what your secret is. You carry along with you some kind of an inner talisman that I, who, like you, have made good in business, haven't I believe these pictures have something to do with it. Tell me—as man to man—will you?"

Phillips smiled. "Sit down, old pal." He drew up another chair. "To be frank, that's just why I brought you here. I have got something and—as a friend to friend—I'll tell you about it." But for some moments he did not speak and the two sat quiet, gazing into the flames. Then with a look up at the miniatures, which to Richardson seemed the sudden opening of a window in his friend's soul, he began:

"I have heard it said that there is no perfect thing in life, that the trail of the serpent taints it all. But I, at least, can say that life gave me more than I could have asked. You can see what they were like, my wife and the boy and girl—but pictures tell only half. Of course, I had my dreams for them, and she and I had begun to think of the colleges to which we would send them. We already dreaded the separation and we were wondering how the boy and girl would ever stand the parting from each other, for they seemed indeed knit together as one soul. And then," he found his words with difficulty, "the great epidemic of November, 1918, came on—" "Not all of them?" asked his friend. "Yes, I buried them side by side. They were lovely and pleasant in their lives and in their death they were not divided," he finished softly. Richardson did not speak, but laid his hand on the other's knee and, strong man that he was, was not ashamed of his tears.

"But you, what about you?" he asked at last. "Of course, at first it seemed I had come to the end of everything and there could be nothing left. And then one day in a flash of vision the 'why' of it came to me. God had taken only for a time this perfect gift to make room in my heart for Himself. He had dreams and visions, too, for boys and girls; He needed my money, my time, and my love to make them come true. And one day standing by my three graves I vowed like the old mystic of the fourteenth century, that I would be to Jesus Christ what a man's hand is to a man. Every year I am putting into The Student Loan Fund of my Church all I can spare from the business—in the names of my 'loved and lost awhile.' The boys and girls who borrow from it to go to college are my boys and girls. I write to them and they to me and in their pictures, hanging up there, I think I see those other angel faces smile. I am alone and yet I can truly say that I am never lonely. The consciousness that I am working for Him, that I am as a hand to Him in carrying out His plans for the lives of these boys and girls, gives me a warm, comforted feeling as of being folded around with an unseen shining Presence."

And after a pause, his friend answered: "I have a home, wife, children, love, wealth, and success—and have missed the dream. But from now on I, too, vow, like the old mystic, and like you, that I will be to Jesus Christ what a man's hand is to a man."

EDITORIALSTABILITY OF THE PRESBYTERIAN PASTORATE

Presbyterian Church presents a striking illustration of the difference between theory and practice. In fact all of us do this, and it is a weakness of our race.

Presbyterian Church, however, makes a profession of the stability of its membership and quotes Scripture glibly in support of it, and embodies this assurance in the words of "The Perseverance of the Saints." This doctrine is all right as it is strictly logical, the only difficulty lies in the fact that many who profess to be saints are self-deceived.

When we compare our ministry with that of the Methodist Church, and we thank God for our ministers are not here to-day and tomorrow, but they entered upon their life-work, forgetting that the average Presbyterian preacher moves far oftener than the Methodist brother does.

When we boast of the parity of the ministry between the two churches, we call no man master, yet we see that the churches are a tyranny that tramples upon the rights of the preacher more relentlessly than the Methodist bishop.

The bishop at least sees that the offending preacher has a support of some kind, while the Presbyterian preacher often is forced from his pulpit by some unregenerate elder who by his wealth can turn the people as he will, and he can force upon the offending preacher the decision to stay and divide the church, or to depart forth like Abraham of old, not knowing where to go.

The condition of affairs presents one of the serious problems facing the Church. How can we remove a pastor who is no longer accepted by the Church and at the same time provide for the welfare of his family.

The present make-shift no longer answers the purpose. The men who ought to move are not doing so. They realize the necessity, and when they do realize it and are among the applicants there seems to be a certain stigma attached to the application.

In how many cases where dissatisfaction begins in the church, but the pastor, though he sees the necessity of leaving, has no opening, and there he hangs on with a deep sense of humiliation, when he is not wanted.

It is possibly the session, under the influence of a rich elder, requests that he leave as soon as an opening comes.

Can a man do his best under such circumstances? God pity the man thus placed. Though friends he seeks another field, but they follow him, and opening after opening closes, and the poor man is unfit for work, but he faces the future and realizes that his children will be without a home soon as he ceases of living. This is the tragedy of the situation, and this is the reason why thoughtful men, sons of our preachers, hesitate to profess where such a condition is likely to occur, if all professing Christians were genuine, there would be only Christian Sessions, and no man would "touch the Lord's anointed," remembering the injunction of Holy Writ, "Touch not mine anointed, and do my prophets no harm."

But church members and church officers are not always consecrated men and they are liable to human prejudices and passions, and in order to have their own way, they are sometimes guilty of acts that bring pain and desperation to the pastor's family.

A RARE COMBINATION

"Some are born great, some achieve greatness, and some have greatness thrust upon 'em."

Our old friend, Dr. Walter Lingle, head of Davidson College combines in his mental make-up more rare gifts than any man we know. He has run the gamut of greatness, from being a graduate of Davidson College through the ascending scale, till he reached the presidency of the College and the chairmanship of the Executive Committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ, where he represents the orthodoxy of the Southern Presbyterian Church, thus giving an air of soundness to that potpourri of the denominations.

"Excelsior" has been his battle cry, till he finally landed in the president's chair at Davidson College, where his many-sided abilities will find full scope.

We have followed his career with mingled admiration and awe, wondering that "one small head could carry all he knew."

It seems, however, that even in the wisest of men there are some depths of knowledge that are not sounded.

This wise man, on his way to the meeting of the aforesaid Executive Committee, finding Chicago larger than Davidson, entrusted himself to a stranger, who took him in and also took in his pocketbook, containing $85.00 and a railroad ticket.

This affair is a strain upon our credulity—an editor possessing $85.00 and also a railroad ticket.

We envy him the pleasure he derived from the unusual experience of having that much cash in his pocket.

Though the pleasure seems to have been shortlived, "like the rainbow's lovely form vanishing amid the storm"—it was certainly pleasant to look back upon.

"One crowded hour of glorious life Is worth an age without a name."

Our friend has been a reader of the Standard for many years, but, notwithstanding our advice that the Southern Presbyterian Church and its ministry should avoid entangling alliances, especially the Federal Council of Churches, he has become the chairman of the Executive Committee of that body, and was on his way to that gathering.

He should have remained amid the classic shades of Davidson, "where thieves do not break through and steal."

Let us hope that hereafter he will either stay at home in the South, or else leave his money behind him when he ventures among the Philistines.

THE WORLD-WIDE REVIVAL PRAYER MOVEMENT

Dr. Henry Woods, who is spending his vacation at Atlantic City, together with Mrs. Woods, is again inaugurating a movement to have an outpouring of prayer, extending around the world, in behalf of an outpouring of God's spirit upon the churches of the world.

Man's extremity is God's opportunity. Surely this is man's extremity.

The churches are chilled by worldliness; the pulpits are substituting man's reason for God's word, while sin is growing bolder every day.

Whatever is done is not by might, nor by power, but by the Spirit of God, and from thousands of hearts, with the opening year, there will go up a volume of prayer that must bring down a blessing.

Let us all join in that great movement.

A BOY OF THE OLD DOMINION

Our old friend, Rev. M. B. Lambdin, has in the "Confederate Veteran" a series of articles, entitled, "A Boy of the Old Dominion During the War Between the States."

Mr. Lambdin spent his boyhood in Alexandria, Va., and thus witnessed the opening of the War, and from his experience his ready pen has prepared a most readable account of "The late unpleasantness," as the war has been described.

The present generation needs to have their pure minds stirred up by way of remembrance, for few of them know what that struggle was.

Some are well-read in history and can describe the battles, but few know what went on behind the scenes.

There in Alexandria, under the shadow of the Capitol, he lived, and saw as only a boy can see, all the minor incidents of the opening days.

We are glad that he is committing these recollections to writing, as it is something we had been hoping to do, when our work is done, and we can enjoy the "Otium cum dignitate."

As a boy in Richmond, we too saw the beginning and the end, being a keen observer of the camps, and a witness of the end, there was little that we did not see. Such happenings do not find their way into history.

INFANT BAPTISM

A few days ago, we found on our desk, a tract on Infant Baptism by our old friend, Dr. I. S. McElroy, of Kings Mountain.

We have read and studied such tracts for many years, and we had concluded that the subject had been worn threadbare by frequent treatments.

This tract while not original, because at this period of the discussion of that subject, it would be difficult to be original, is clear and convincing, and worthy of study by those who have been doubtful on this subject.

It is short, less than forty pages, but it is informing and logical and leaves doubters on this subject no room upon which to stand.

We do not claim that it will settle this mooted question and remove it from the field of controversy, for that is an impossibility; but it will settle the views of those who are not so encased in prejudice as to be removed from any appeal to their sense of right.

At any rate its cost is so small that no one can plead financial inability.

Order it from Presbyterian Committee of Publication, Box 1176, Richmond, Va.

A CRISIS IN PROTESTANT EUROPE

In another column will be found a searching appeal from Dr. Vance in behalf of the Protestant Russians who fleeing from the insupportable conditions of the Soviet government are in a most deplorable condition.

They are at the opening of winter in concentration camps, without money, winter clothing, and food.

The offerings for this cause are less than ever before, yet the need is greater.

Whatever aid is rendered must be sent speedily.

Dr. James I. Vance, 154 Fifth Ave., Nashville, Tenn., will forward whatever is sent.

"THE CHRISTOPHER ROBIN STORY BOOK"

This is a choice collection of stories and verse from the four books of prose and poetry for children from the pen of A. A. Milne.

Mr. Milne possesses that rare gift of being able to write in a way to please children and hold the attention of older men and women.

The illustrations by E. H. Shepard are almost as entertaining as the stories.

When we recall the story books of fifty years ago, we can see what privileges the children of this day enjoy in the character of the books furnished them.

This book is for sale by E. P. Dutton & Co., New York.

CONTRIBUTED

DOES GOD CARE FOR THE INDIVIDUAL?

J. Kerr Fraser, D.D.

Hebrews 11:8

"By faith Abraham, when he was called, went out, not knowing whither he went."

I understand that naval and military officers are accustomed to receive sealed instructions from the authorities by whom they are sent forth, which are not to be opened until they reach a given spot or after a given lapse of time. They leave their native land and go forth in blind obedience, patiently anticipating their orders.

It was thus in the case of Abraham.

Dwelling in Mesopotamia he received a call to go to some unknown country that God would show him. The call must have sounded strange. In many ways it must have been unwelcome. But he obeyed. "He went forth, not knowing whither he went." He hadn't the faintest notion whither God was leading him. Yet he followed the gleam, assured that the Divine purpose would, in time, be made manifest and justify itself.

The Call of Abraham Comes to Each One

What, then, is the lesson of all this for us?

Simply this: We, too, are called to go forth, quite unconscious of our destination, and we have strong reasons to do so in hope and confidence. God has a plan for which He does not all at once reveal.

Life demands momentous adventures. It is a series of leaps in the dark. Born into this world we enter upon an untried life. Millions have preceded us. Yet we are as solitary as though we were the first to venture upon the mysterious sea.

And surely life is a mysterious sea. When one of the Cunard Liners today sets forth on a voyage, it carries with it a chart of almost perfect completeness and accuracy. It tells you the various soundings, while all along the coast are light-houses with their distinctive signals, so that seamanship today is reduced to something like a science. The fact is, life is safer today on the sea than it is on the land.

But human life is not a voyage of this sort. Rather it is like the setting forth of Christopher Columbus and the old navigators who, without chart or compass, dared unknown seas. From the very beginning we are called to places and duties entirely strange to us. Yet we have profound reasons to believe that life is wisely ordered and that it is under the government of some supernatural power.

Will you let me mention three reasons for thinking this. And I am not talking cant here. Because, while I am an optimist, I am not by any means a blind optimist.

Well, why do I believe that life is not a blind leap in the dark, but that it is under a divine government?

Inner Consciousness of Divine Guidance

Well, first of all, the testimony of consciousness—or perhaps I had better say of experience—assures us of this. The other day I was reading Goethe's conversations with a friend, and it contains this remarkable passage: Referring to the translation of one of his books, he says:

"We have, as you know, been busy with this translation for more than a year. A thousand hindrances have come in our way. The enterprise has often come to an absolute standstill, and I have often cursed it in silence. But now I can do reverence to these kindnesses, for during these delays things have ripened abroad among other excellent men, so that now they bring the best grist to my mill, and will bring my work to a conclusion that I could not have imagined a year ago. The like has often happened to me in life, and in such cases one is led to believe in a higher influence which we adore without trying to explain."

Now, I would not have quoted this, had it not been that Goethe was a confirmed rationalist—I do not say atheist or even agnostic, but rationalist. So here is a rationalist confessing to the existence of a higher influence dominating life and directing it to higher issues.

Let me ask you: Do we not all share in this consciousness? Are we not often surprised, perplexed, perhaps saddened, it may be annoyed by the strange happenings of life when all at once a sudden gleam shoots across the soul, lights up the darkness, and we realize that somehow all is right and for the best.

Modern Science Confirms Faith

I have said that our own inner consciousness confirms the belief that the individual is governed by divine law to some worthy end, and that nothing happens by chance.

I want to say now—and this may carry greater weight with some of you—I want to say that modern science confirms it.

The greatest scientist of the last century, and of the early years of this century, a few years ago wrote a book in which he states his final conclusion that the universe is beyond all doubt the creation of supreme intelligence and that we and all things bear marks of superintending reason and purpose.

Now, if this view is correct concerning the universe as a whole, the same science teaches us that it is not less true of the smaller portions of the universe.

The law that shapes the planet moulds the dew-drop. The omniscience that governs the heavens is revealed in the molecule, the atom. The same purpose that dominates the movements of great empires determines the fortunes of the humblest citizen. Indeed, so far is science from extolling magnitudes that it teaches rather that the importance of a thing increases with its littleness.

When we read history we are dazzled by the spectacle of empires, races, kings, conquerors, and statesmen; and we begin to wonder where the ordinary individual comes in. He is completely overshadowed.

But when we turn to science and note its tremendous emphasis on the particle, we recover our respect for the individual and our sense of wonder at the part he plays—all unseen it may be—in the mighty drama of universal history. If amid billions of movements, each atom has its place, it is not difficult to believe in the high place and calling of the humblest individual who seeks to serve humanity. If such is the carefulness of nature that she never loses sight of a grain of dust, can we believe that the father of our spirits will allow one of His children to become the sport of chance? Can we?

Bible Teaches God's Control of Human Destiny

Once more, the teaching of the Bible is clear on this point—that over every life is a superintending control. Listen to the words of Jesus on this question:

CHRISTMAS WISHES

My friend, I do not often woo the muses,
Nor seek to wake the silent harp again,
Unless some grief or joy my mind enthuses
To seek expression in poetic strain.

Your friendship, sweet as summer's fragrant roses,
Anew has blossomed at this Christmas tide,
May Peace that in the trustful heart reposes,
Dwell in your home, within your heart abide.

May Hope, whose peerless bow of radiant beauty
Oft spans the heavens with most varied hue,
Nerve you for trial and for steadfast duty,
And keep you waiting for the promise true.

May Love, the chiefest of the royal graces,
Not merely human but much more divine,
Leave on your spirit its delightful traces
And render it Jehovah's holy shrine.
—Halbert G. Hill in "Blue Bird Songs," published in 1916.

[Our readers will read with affectionate interest this little poem by Doctor Hill of cherished memory.]

"Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing? And not one of them falls without the father's notice. Are not ye of more value than many sparrows?"

That a star does not fall without the notice of the Creator might seem to have very little bearing on a particular providence over man, for in the opinion of most people a star is more important than a soul. But when our Lord speaks of the significance of a single sparrow we may conclude with absolute certainty that a single soul will not be overlooked. And the whole of the Bible assures us of the sacredness of personal life. It maintains that He whose government comprehends worlds and ages yearns over His frailest child and never ceases to consider his welfare.

We might have supposed that a book which appeals to the race, and which is to last through all time, would have been chiefly occupied with setting forth views concerning nations and empires. If we turn to the history of Egypt or Chaldea or Assyria they supply a few particulars of Kings, but they seldom mention a name of the millions of people who lived at the time. But the Bible fairly teems with names. It is really a book of biographies. Everywhere it is pervaded with the sense of personality. Nature may seem careless of the single life, but this is not the characteristic of the Bible. The whole book is designed to show God's care over, and solicitude for each and every soul that He has made.

So, let us never waver in our confidence, even though life sometimes seems to contradict our faith in Providence. What may be the Divine Purpose concerning any one of us in the vast future that awaits us we can not even guess. It is all a mystery. But we may be sure that in the ripened and completed life of immortality the enigmas of our present training will find a perfect solution.

JONAH A TYPE OF OUR LORD'S RESURRECTION

What is the great central truth that the Holy Spirit meant to teach in the prophecy of Jonah?

The book undoubtedly conveys an important message, that God's salvation was meant for other nations beside Israel—even for hostile nations, like cruel and bearing Assyria.

But most important, was it not meant to teach the truth of the resurrection from the dead by the power of God? Jonah, swallowed up by the great fish which God had provided, and brought back to life again, was intended to be a type of our Lord's Resurrection from the dead.

Was this event in Jonah's life a historical fact, an occurrence, or was it merely a myth or legend, a story which critics would have us believe? On the surface it appears to be merely an improbable story, which lacks authenticity. But when we carefully consider all the circumstances, the direct statements of the Old and New Testaments, the bearing which the event has upon the death and resurrection of Christ, and the use which our Lord made of it in answering the Pharisees, we but believe that it was a real fact of history. The Old Testament states this experience of Jonah, just as it states his visit to Nineveh, his preaching, and the repentance of that great city as real occurrences. We ought not to allow the ridicule of doubters to lead us to disbelieve this fact any more than the others. The direct, positive statements of our Lord, recorded in Matthew and Luke, and the immensely important bearing which He had in view in making those statements, show that He was dealing with a real event and not with a myth. Some day, perhaps, our Lord alluded to Jonah, and any speaker might refer to one of Shakespeare's plays. But this remark fails to take into consideration the great purpose our Savior had in view. We believe His statement went far deeper than that.

Our Lord was foretelling the most important event in the world—His own resurrection from the dead. The great event on which faith in His Deity and the salvation of the world depended. If He rose from the dead, He thereby proved to be God, and the Saviour of the world. (1 Rom. 1:4). If He did not rise from the dead, He was not God, and sinners have no hope of salvation—"we are all of men most miserable" (1 Cor. 15:17). It was supremely important that this great event be clearly proved beyond all doubt. So that when the Pharisees, rejecting His claim to be the Saviour, referred them to the Scriptures whose authority they acknowledged, and the facts of which they would dare to deny; as much as to say, "My divine power shall be proved by my rising from the dead, which you have proof in the prophecy of Jonah. The great event of Jonah's life is at once a type and shadowing my death and resurrection." "There is no sign given, but the sign of the prophet Jonah as Jonah was three days and three nights in the belly, so shall the Son of Man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth" (Matt. 12:38-41). Carefully that God had given several types of the resurrection in the Old Testament, as expounded by the Spirit through the Apostles in the New. The offering of Isaac (Gen. 22:1-19) and others. But our Lord among all these, chose Jonah's experience as the type of His own rising from the dead; showing that Jonah's experience was an actual fact of history, not a myth. The Ark, and the offering of Isaac, acknowledged facts of history. Would our Lord refer to these facts by, and select as a type and proof of resurrection something which never existed, which the Jews knew was only an empty fable? No, then, we know that the prophets were trustworthy and that being swallowed by the great fish and his resurrection was an actual occurrence, a historical fact. God therein worked a mighty miracle to foreshadow the death and resurrection of His only begotten Son, and our Lord referred to the event as such.

A distinguished lawyer, who all his life had been accustomed to sift evidence and who is an intelligent student of God's word, says: "Seeing that the Old Testament contains numerous and striking types of the Resurrection, it is a fact of the utmost significance that the Son of God when He came to select a type of His Resurrection, made deliberate choice of the experience of the prophet Jonah, choosing that and that alone. In His choice, the Lord raised the Book of Jonah, and the event of his being cast into the sea, swallowed up by the great fish, and brought back to life again by the power of God on the third day—to a place of special prominence and importance. We have in Jonah and Christ's Resurrection a Sign and Countersign. Our Lord in His experience of Jonah, in being swallowed by the great fish and thrown up again, with the fact of His own death and resurrection. In one saying He asserts the truth of both events. Nay more, He makes the one fact upon the other; for He said AS Jonah was three days and three nights in the belly of the great fish, so shall the Son of Man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth. He cited that Scripture, and that as proof from Holy Writ that He should die and be buried again. Furthermore, He testified that the Gentile Nineveh had repented at the preaching of one who had been swallowed up in the great deep for three days and three nights; thus figuring that He himself from the dead, would be preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world" (I Tim. 3:16). Thus "any one of the one event raises a question as to the other also. To deny the sign is to throw doubt on the message." Much is at stake, therefore, in the estimates of the great fact of Jonah's life, especially when we see the constant attacks made by unbelief on this fact of God's Word. The Scripture makes these statements regarding Jonah as facts: let us accept them as facts without doubting. Paul before Agrippa goes to the heart of the matter when he asks: "Why should it be thought a thing incredible that God should raise the dead? And we may well ask, why should it be thought incredible that God should work a wonderful miracle in the case of Jonah to give His people proof that He intends to raise the dead? We respectfully submit that the reasonable view, it is reverent and honoring of God's Word, it shows more clearly the consistency of the Old and New Testaments, it adds a deeper significance to our Lord's words, and throws additional light upon His glorious resurrection.

MOVEMENT WITHOUT MONEY

William T. Ellis

Something must be done, and done quickly and with authority, to meet the reported condition that less than half of the children of the land are in Sunday Schools.

An article proposing a five-year campaign for the increase of Sunday School enrollment has been widely published in the religious press. In some quarters, active efforts have been taken to put the plan into immediate effect. There is no division of opinion anywhere upon the fundamental importance of giving every child a fair chance to receive the clear teachings of Scripture upon character and conduct. Any nation, community or Church that neglects the spiritual culture of its boys and girls is manifestly neglecting its primary responsibility.

It is a new zest to "do something about it," the old slogan of organization at once arises. In one case, a society has been proposed and a financial budget drawn up, to carry on an intensive activity for the purpose of an increase of attendance upon the Sunday

It is not to be said, bluntly and even indiscreetly, that the movement which should march without the burden of over-organization or the load of money. Not a man or woman anywhere should get a job out of this effort to do with increased efficiency the Church's basic work. There is no necessity for literature, or any other expense, except as legitimized by the local Sunday School, Church or denomination. If the task of recruiting the Sunday School to full strength cannot be done by the voluntary efforts of concerned Christians, it cannot be done at all. This is a situation that makes its appeal to every Christian, and to every normal parent. It must be met by local action. In every neighborhood there are children who receive no religious instruction; in the nation as a whole, their number exceeds the total of those already in Sunday School. Obviously, the indicated process for the absentees to be found and brought in, by other girls and boys, incited by their teachers, parents and pastor. The methods may be varied as the needs of concerned Christians can suggest, but the objective is to get the boys and girls into the Sunday course, the effect upon every Church will be vital—en to the point of raising acute problems, such as the need of additional teachers and accommodations. These problems should not be allowed to obscure the primary objective which is to bring young people into the Sunday School and within the influence of the teaching of the Word. The end of Sunday School, staffed by Christians who love the Bible and love God, is able to do this. It may be a one room school at a rural crossroads, or a modern religious education building in a city; it may use the Uniform Lessons or one of the many other courses; it may meet in the morning or it may meet in the afternoon. It may utilize promotional prizes, banners, individual badges, or what-not. All of these matters are incidental. The one immediate aim is to get the hundred per cent of possible attendance. The result is that boys and girls will stimulate vitality and increase in knowledge. It will quicken the adult classes and the cradle class. It will re-act upon family life and intensify parental responsibility.

MARSHALL AND MOBILE PRESBYTERY

Plea for Presbyterian Home Missions

Rev. Dunbar H. Ogden, D.D.

This is not an obituary. Rev. James W. Marshall is still alive. Mobile Presbytery has experienced a on my desk lie two volumes of the minutes of the General Assembly; one issued in 1920, the other in 1929. The first contains the statistics of Mobile Presbytery just as they were. Marshall came to us as Superintendent of the Home Missions; the other records the present condition of Mobile Presbytery (so far as statistics can record life).

It was in the autumn of 1920 that I came to know Mobile Presbytery experimentally. Dr. R. E. Fry was then in Central Church; Rev. R. G. McClelland was at Citronelle; Rev. P. S. Van Dike was pastor at Bay Minette and Stockton; dear old Doctor Planck, pastor emeritus of Central, was preaching here and there throughout the Presbytery, as his strength permitted. I was just then taking up the work in Government Street. We five constituted the ministerial working force in a Presbytery of twenty-three churches. Nearly all of our congregations were unshepherded.

Then it was that Doctor Fry became chairman of the Home Mission Committee; he and I put our heads together and determined that we must have a Superintendent of Home Missions. The difficult question was that of money. How could we support a Superintendent? The Assembly's Home Mission Committee agreed to help, and the Richmond Committee of Sunday School Work also lent a hand. Thus re-enforced, we called Rev. James W. Marshall.

During eight years and more Mr. Marshall has worked tirelessly. Through his efforts a group of wide awake young men have been brought to the Presbytery. Today every field is manned. Eleven ministers are carrying forward the work in our now twenty-seven churches. The Presbytery is small, but aggressive, united, and happy. Our membership has increased; there has been no boom, but steady growth. This section of the country is advancing and the Presbyterian Churches are located in strategic positions.

Believing that he had finished, in this Presbytery, the work for which he is especially qualified, Mr. Marshall has gone to another field where just this type of ministry is needed.

This true story constitutes not merely a tribute to Mr. Marshall, but an unanswerable argument in behalf of aggressive Presbyterian Home Mission work.

A LONG FELT NEED

Rev. S. L. Morris, D.D., Executive Secretary of Home Missions, Presbyterian Church in the United States

The Ministers' Annuity Fund gives substantial guarantee of meeting a long felt need in our Church. The thought of the Church has been turning in that direction for many years, as is witnessed by "overtures" following each other regularly at successive meetings of the Assembly. The proposed plan is the answer now wrought out with extreme care by the Executive Committee of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief of Louisville, Ky., under the competent leadership of Dr. Henry H. Sweets, Executive Secretary.

The Annuity Plan in no way interferes with the present Ministerial Relief policy of the Church. The latter is based exclusively on need, entirely too inadequate, but available in any emergency, whether of illness or permanent physical disability. The Annuity is based properly upon a sense of justice by way of compensation for service rendered by faithful servants. This will at least place the Church upon the same platform—if no higher—of secular institutions which recognize in this way their indebtedness to their employees.

The Annuity Plan is no hap-hazard experiment. It is the mature thought in all its complicated details of the ablest actuaries of America, who have wrought out the principles upon which great life insurance companies

HOW FAR TO BETHLEHEM?

Madeleine Sweeney Miller

"How far is it to Bethlehem Town?"
Just over Jerusalem hill adown,
Past lovely Rachel's white-domed tomb—
Sweet shrine of motherhood's young doom.

"It isn't far to Bethlehem Town—
Just over the dusty roads adown,
Past Wise Men's well, still offering
Cool draughts from welcome wayside spring;
Past shepherds with their flutes of reed
That charm the woolly sheep they lead;
Past boys with kites on hilltops flying,
And soon you're there where Bethlehem's lying,
Sunned white and sweet on olived slopes,
Gold-lighted still with Judah's hopes."

And so, we find the Shepherd's field
And plain that gave rich Boaz yield;
And look where Herod's villa stood.
We thrill that earthly parenthood
Could foster Christ who was all-good;
And thrill that Bethlehem Town today
Looks down on Christian homes that pray.

It isn't far to Bethlehem Town!
It's anywhere that Christ comes down
And finds in people's friendly face
A welcome and abiding place.
The road to Bethlehem runs right through
The homes of folks like me and you.

BOOK REVIEW

Personality Prevails. Personality Prevails, or the Human equation in a Machine Age; by Cecil V. Crabb, M.A., author of Psychology's Challenge to Christianity. Published for the author by the Presbyterian Committee of Publication, Richmond, Va. $1.50. Pp. 158.

The book is meant by the author to be a guide for the general reader and for teachers of psychology in Christian schools as an introduction in psychological theory. It is well fitted to be so used. There is given a study outline with a useful list of books for each phase of the theme; and in two appendices, an outline of various psychological theories in their attitude towards personality, and an epitome of sane Biblical teachings on psychology.

A foreword by Prof. Taliaferro Thompson of Union Seminary, Virginia, expresses amazement that Mr. Crabb, who is pastor of an important church at Clarkesdale, Miss., has found time for the wide and discriminating reading that has given him mastery in this subject, with apt illustrations and a keen sense of humor. His style is easy. He is free from dogmatism, free from rancor and bitterness and personalities; yet sure of the truth and ever displaying an evangelical faith that is heartening, tonic. He is sound in his faith and right in his science.

There are five chapters in this book and they are broken into convenient paragraphs that invite reading. Indeed, the mechanics of the book are excellent, print, paper, margins, binding, size, etc., are pleasing.

The purpose of the volume is to restate the arguments for the soul in modern terms. The problem of personality—Is man a living soul?—is the vital issue. The real battle today is over the very existence of any spiritual realities at all. As President W. W. White once put it: "Can we keep God in His Universe? Can we keep a soul in man? Can we keep Christ in the Christian Church?" The central battle of all is over the question of personality, as Mr. Crabb shows. He meets the objections that the doctrine of personality is supernatural, is not scientific, by the fact and deductions and declares that modern physics as expounded by such men as Michael Pupin, Sir Oliver Lodge, Millikin and others, has become, not an opponent, but an ally of the believer in a real personality functioning in experience.

In accepting all valid and scientific discoveries he insists that there is a "More," a "Plus," about experience, and that this "More" is personality. The implications of this "Plus" in all lines of scientific investigation point to personality. Purposive psychology is the only psychology that is scientific. Man has a body, he is not a body. Man has a spirit, he is not a spirit. Man has a soul, and man is a soul. "Personality Prevails" secures for Rev. C. V. Crabb rank among the present day psychological writers of first importance.

The Apocalypse of Jesus Christ, A Re-Appearance, I John to the Seven Churches. By William J. McKnight, D.D. Published by Hamilton Bros., Publisher, Boston. Price $3.00.

This book from the pen of Doctor McKnight is one book in a thousand.

The message of this book strangely searches my spirit. I must pause as I read and let the majestic sweep of the Revelation seek out my own soul, cleanse it and seal its message there. The noblest things are ever uppermost. The highest and purest standards are constantly demanding acceptance and the infinite resources are ever at hand with issues transcendent when availed of.

Scholarship, clear, gripping and expressing, and limpid thought are the superb vehicles for the profound surging truths that mark this premier discussion of that marvelous but difficult book, The Revelation.

The fascinating setting of these seven Churches, and the suggested imagery of their history are ably presented with strong illumination thereby for the messages themselves. While Doctor McKnight's book is at times profound, it is unfailingly stimulating. It constantly stirs the heart and challenges every area marked by any spiritual lethargy.

One is constantly lifted into the heights as he moves through this message. He breathes the rarified tonic air and is exalted in soul. One forms a new fellowship with Christ and senses with poignant shame the tawdry garments that have hitherto kept his soul on life's lower levels. Christ is "unveiled" indeed in this inspiring message and His exaltation is transcendent, majestic, glorious before the eyes of the reader.

Steadfastly refusing any cheap or partisan view of this matchless book, The Revelation, in quiet majesty he lets unfold before the reader's eye the immaculate glory, the transcendent uniqueness, and the alluring beauty and fascination of Jesus.

Surely this book will contribute to the "unveiling" of Jesus Christ to every thoughtful reader.

FELLOWSHIP THROUGH WORSHIP

Neh. 8:1-12; Micah 4:1-2; Psalms 122:1-9; Matt. 28:18-20; Hebrews 10:19-25. Print Ps. 122:1-9; Heb. 10:22-25

For the past three months we have been studying some of the great social teachings of the Bible. This week we come to the final teaching, which as Doctor Wells has said, is the climax of the whole. For the social teachings of the Bible have to do with nothing else in the last analysis but the practical outworkings of Christian fellowship. And Christian fellowship, the sort that we have been studying about, comes or should come in part at least through worship. Or put the other way about worship of the right sort produces fellowship, fellowship in the congregation, fellowship in the nation, fellowship throughout the world.

I. Fellowship in the Congregation

Read Heb. 10:22-25. What are the three fundamental exhortations in this paragraph? Does fellowship have any place in worship according to the writer of this book? How is this fellowship to manifest itself?

The average reader of the Bible assumes that Paul was the author of this most valuable epistle. He does this because of the title printed over it in the King James' version of the Bible: "The Epistle of Paul the Apostle to the Hebrews." As a matter of fact this title is not a part of the epistle, but added at a very late date. It gives us no information of any value. Who the author was we do not know, but it certainly was not the apostle Paul. The letter was written to a community of Jewish Christians, some say in Palestine, some think in Rome. They were facing a serious persecution on account of their faith, and for various reasons, among others, an imperfect apprehension of Christian truth, they were in danger of apostasy. The writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews exhorts these Christians to hold on to Christ and Christianity by bringing out as lucidly and persuasively as possible the full meaning of the revelation of God in Christ. Christianity he claims is the perfect and final religion, perfect because it accomplishes the end of religion, which is to bring men into complete and intimate fellowship with God; because it does this it can never be superseded.

In the first portion of his argument he points out that Christ has brought us the perfect and final revelation of the Father (Chapters 1-2). In the latter portion of his argument he claims that Christ has brought us on complete and final redemption from sin (3:1-10:18). Then in 10:19 he comes to his practical application. "Brothers," he writes (as translated by Moffat) "since we have confidence to enter the holy Presence in virtue of the blood of Jesus, by the fresh, living way, which he has inaugurated for us through the veil (that is, through his flesh), and since we have a great priest over the house of God, let us draw near with a true heart, in absolute assurance of faith, our hearts sprinkled clean from a bad conscience, and our bodies washed in pure water; let us hold the hope we avow without wavering (for we can rely on him who gave us the promise); and let us consider how to stir up one another to love and good deeds—not ceasing to meet together, as is the habit of some, but admonishing one another, all the more so, as you see the Day coming near."

There are three distinct exhortations in this passage. The first, in verse 22, has to do with our approach to God. Let us draw near (to God) with a true heart in fullness of faith. Salvation for the writer of this epistle is fellowship with God. The great privilege that Christ has brought us through his perfect and final revelation of the Father, his complete and final redemption from sin, is the privilege of drawing near to God. After expounding his Gospel therefore his first exhortation is that his readers make use of this great privilege. But what does he mean by drawing near to God? If we read through the epistle carefully (cf. 4:16; 7:25; 11:6) it becomes plain that we draw near to God, in the author's conception, when we go to Him in prayer confident that He will give us grace for every need, that He will save us to the uttermost, realizing that this privilege is ours through Christ. We draw near to God, therefore, when we go to Him in prayer, seeking grace for every need.

But the writer of this epistle not only tells us that we should avail ourselves of this privilege; he also gives us some suggestions about the manner of our approach. First, we must draw near with a true heart. This is generally taken to mean a sincere heart. A heart which expresses completely the devotion of the whole person to God. Sometimes our prayers are not sincere. Sometimes it is our own will that we desire. Our hearts are not fixed sincerely on God. Second, we must draw near in fullness of faith, that is with the full assurance of faith. Assurance that God will hear us and answer us according to His infinite wisdom and love, if we will let Him have His way in our lives. In other words the sense of perfect surrender (a true heart) must be completed by a sure reliance on One who is ready to help. Third, we must have our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience. The sense of sin is to be removed by the offering of Christ. We are to realize that he has removed the barriers between God and man. Fourth, we must have our bodies washed with pure water. Most all commentators take this as referring to baptism, but baptism as symbolizing the cleansing of the life. Such then is the manner of approach to God possible and real to the Christian who understands and appreciates his position. He can and does come into the Divine presence with gladness and sincerity, having no doubt at all of his welcome, and untroubled by the thought of his sin, being assured of forgiveness and conscious of Christ's renovating power.

The second exhortation has to do with our attitude toward the truth (verse 23). The Hebrews to whom this epistle was written were tempted to apostasy. But Christ has brought us the perfect and final revelation of the Father, he has brought us final and complete redemption from sin: Let us, therefore, hold fast the confession of our hope that it waver not; for he is faithful that promised. There are new temptations to infidelity today, and the exhortation is still in order.

The third exhortation is in verses 24 and 25 and has to do with our attitude toward our fellow Christians. It seems that the Hebrews were forsaking their church meeting, and as a consequence were gradually drifting apart. The Apostle recognized that this was one step toward apostasy. Therefore, the exhortation: Let us consider another to provoke unto love and good works; not forsaking our own assembling together, as the custom of some is. We are to consider one another, not primarily that we may be helped by our fellow Christians, but that we may be a help to them. The end of this consideration is that we may provoke (or stir up) one another, i. e. that they may provoke us, and that we may provoke them, to love and good works. This is a duty that we owe to our fellow Christians. At the same time through the verse there is the intimation that we need the stimulus also that comes from them. This mutual stimulation the apostle argues is to come through the assembling of ourselves together. The apostle has the idea, and he is right, of course, that every Christian needs the stimulation that comes from common worship, common labor for common ends. The day of which he speaks in verse 25 is probably the destruction of Jerusalem, which Christ had foretold, and which he seems to use as a type of the final judgment.

The argument of this epistle then is that since we have in Christ the perfect and final revelation of the Father, and complete and final redemption from sin we should draw near to God, seeking for grace in every time of need, we should hold fast the confession of our hope, we should stimulate one another to love and good works through the assembling of ourselves together for work and worship.

It is the last of these exhortations that we are especially interested in. Worship does help us more than we realize in living the Christian life; we are stimulated by our fellow Christians, and we help to stimulate them. But this Christian fellowship is not as helpful as it ought to be. We do not consider one another as we should. We do not provoke unto love and good works as we might. How can our fellowship within the church be made more real, more helpful? How can the assembly of ourselves together be made more stimulating?

II. Fellowship in the Nation

Worship, however, is not only supposed to promote fellowship in the local church, but also fellowship through the nation. We are not only supposed to provoke our fellow Christians in the local church to love and good works, but through our worship there should come growing devotion throughout the nation to the ends of God's kingdom, or growing devotion on the part of the worshipper to the national weal.

We have one illustration of this use of religion in Nehemiah. Read the passage Neh. 8:1-12, also 10:28-31. We recall that this scene took place after the exile. Two groups had returned to the promised land, but had become disheartened because of the many hardship that they had met. The colony which held in its hand the future of God's Kingdom was about to disintegrate. Then came Ezra and Nehemiah. These two men together brought about a revival of religion. The whole community was brought together to hear the Word of God, which was utterly unfamiliar to them. Day after day Ezra and his assistants read the law of God distinctly, and gave the sense, so that the people understood the reading. The result as described in 10:28-31 was that the nation was united as never before, and as one man they pledged themselves to carry out the divine will.

It is, of course, impossible in a nation as large as ours to gather all the people together as a single group to study the Word of God. But all over this nation of ours there are little groups of men and women, and young people, and boys and girls studying the Bible, and studying, it is to be hoped, its practical application to our own times. It should result in a fellowship of believers, transcending the local congregation, a larger group committed to the implications of Christian brotherhood, and to the carrying out of God's will in the nation. How can our Bible study be made to serve this end most efficiently?

A second illustration of this use of religion is found in the 122nd Psalm. Read it, trying to understand in every phrase just what the writer had in mind.

This Psalm was probably written in the time of Nehemiah (the title as given in the A. V., and also the R. V. is not a part of the inspired word of God), when the walls had been rebuilt, and means taken to provide the city with an adequate population.

Originally the expression of a single worshipper's mood it was taken up into the national hymn book of the Jewish nation, and became the expression of the feelings of generation after generation; especially was it a favorite among the pilgrims who age after age flocked to the city. It divides itself naturally into two parts:

In part one (verses 1-5) we have the Joy of the shipper. "The poet is living in the country. As the Feast draws near, his friends and neighbors to him, inviting him to join them in their visit to salem. It is with this picture that he begins his poem tells us how his heart welled with joy as they came with them 'to the house of Jehovah.' We see the procession starting; we see beaming eyes and happy faces, and hear the music of gladness with which the poet beguile the tediousness of the journey. The verse transports us at once to the Holy City itself. 'Our feet are standing within thy gates, O salem' (the rendering of the AV 'our feet shall not do not represent the Hebrew). The few words are enough. They have reached their journey's end; they are in the city which they love. Then the poet tells us the impression made upon his mind by her stately beauty (verse 3); and next how there comes flooding upon his memory the scenes of her earlier greatness the thought of all she had been as the gathering place of the tribes of Jehovah, the royal seat of David and house." In those days Jerusalem was the religious political center of the nation, the dwelling place of Jehovah, to whose Temple all the tribes were gathered for the three great feasts, and the seat of government of the house of David.

In part two (6-9) we have the Prayer of the worshipper. He has come to Jerusalem to worship. His presence in the Holy City leads him to pray and bid others to do the same for her future welfare. As Doctor Perowne points out "The last four verses of the Psalm breathe a spirit of noblest, most unselfish patriotism. Not for his own sake but for the sake of his brethren, the people at large for the sake of His God, His Temple, and His City." (The R. V. bring out the parallelism: For my brethren—sake—for the sake of the House of Jehovah our God he wishes peace to Jerusalem, and calls upon others to wish her peace. With love to Israel, and love to Jerusalem there is naturally united a warm affection for Jerusalem a heart interest in her welfare.")

Worship should lead the worshipper to dedicate himself to the national welfare. Does it? Love of God should promote love for men. Does it? How can our worship be made more effective in this regard. Would it be a good example for it to be more directly concerned with the sort of problems that we have been concerned with in this quarter? Should Christian people merely pray for peace and prosperity of America, or should they be organized groups study and take action about the conditions that menace the peace and prosperity of our country? Can our worship promote brotherhood in the nation in the sense when our churches are themselves divided and divided not merely along theological lines, but as studies prove, and as we can easily see for ourselves along social and economic and sectional lines?

III. Fellowship Throughout the World

Worship is supposed to promote fellowship not only in the congregation, not only in the nation, but also throughout the world.

There is a beautiful indication of that in Micah 4:1-2. We have but recently studied these verses in some detail so will not do more here than note again again that the world wide peace, for which we all so ardently pray, is based in the last analysis upon world wide fellowship which comes through worship. All nations shall come to God's house, and out of that house shall evolve an obedience to God that will be a consideration of one's fellowmen that shall manifest itself in enduring brotherhood.

We have something of the same idea in the words of Jesus as recorded in Mt. 28:18-20, the last commandment. After his resurrection and before he ascended to the Father, Jesus directed his disciples to make disciples of all the nations. This task involved two obligations: first, to baptize the nations into the Kingdom of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit; the obligation second, to teach them to observe all that he had commanded them to do. The Gospel of the Kingdom, its very nature involves a world wide fellowship in worship, a fellowship in practice—practically leads to the other.

Does our worship as commonly conducted promote fellowship? In one of the most important recent books, "The Social Sources of Denominationalism" by H. Richard Niebuhr we read that "in contrast to the universal culture which the medieval Catholic Church fostered, the national churches have been the product of a divided, localized culture and so have accentuated differences between nations. So the church becomes a victim as well as the source of national civilization. Instead of representing a common Christian identity, fostering mutual understanding of the disciples of the world, it becomes responsible for their misunderstanding of each other and support of their mutual suspicions and fears." It is only in times of stress the churches have put divisions behind national aspirations that often times have been contrary to world wide brotherhood. How can worship be more conducive toward the understanding of other peoples, other Christians? How can it better promote the ideal that Micah and Jesus had in mind? It help if Christians in organized groups as they worship and seek God's will sought His will in regard to actual problems of world wide brotherhood which confront us?

ALABAMA COLORED CONFERENCE

The Thirteenth Annual Conference for Colored Women met in Stillman Institute, Tuscaloosa, Alabama, June 5-11, 1929, with a good attendance and as fine a spirit as any conference ever had.

Stillman Institute has such a fine Christian influence behind it that it makes a very fitting place to hold a Christian Colored Conference. Mrs. Emily Snecedor, the dean, is very much beloved by the Negro race for her many years of devotion and untiring labors in her effort to carry on the work of her late husband.

The credit of the success of the conference was due to the Director, Mrs. B. H. Cooper of Birmingham. She was ably assisted by Mrs. Snecedor and Mrs. W. T. Ford. Miss Abie Washington was the song leader.

The devotionals each morning that were given by the delegates showed real preparation and deep spirituality. Miss Alice Daly of Birmingham has given the Bible lessons at these conferences for several years and the interest, and enthusiasm that greeted her each morning was a real testimony to the great message that she had for the delegates.

Mrs. W. K. Seago, of New Orleans, La., and the Editor of the Woman's Department in the Christian Observer, gave talks each morning on "Building the Home" which proved original, unique, and most practical. Before the week was over the home had been built; first, with the foundation—the sacredness of marriage; then the bedroom and yard—care, discipline and recreation for the children; the kitchen—proper feeding, budgeting, teaching children to help; the living room—hospitality, the young people; and lastly, the roof—prayer.

Mrs. W. L. North of Birmingham lectured each morning on the Sunday School and Miss Grace Wisner from the Department of Woman's Work, St. Louis, Mo., conducted a mission study class.

Eunice Rivers, a colored nurse from the State Bureau of Child Hygiene, had demonstrations on sanitation, care of the sick, care of the baby, proper diet, etc.

In the afternoon Mrs. I. E. Jernagin had a class in handicrafts and many lovely things were made by the delegates to take home. The playground activities were most popular and the pageants, games and exercises were directed by Miss Rosemary Bruce.

The night meetings were full of interest with music, moving pictures, educational and inspirational talks. Prof. T. M. Campbell, Field Agent at Tuskegee, gave an address on "Helping Rural People to Help Themselves." Mrs. Alethia Edmiston, missionary from Africa, gave an address and displayed many interesting curios from her station at Mutoto. Mrs. Edmiston is the first person to reduce the language of the Bukuba Tribe to writing, making a regular grammar and dictionary. Oscar W. Adams, editor of the Birmingham Reporter, delivered an address on the history of the Negro, in which he emphasized the growth and possibilities of the race. There were several films of moving pictures showing health and sanitation pictures. Dr. R. A. Brown talked about "The Emily Estes Snecedor Nurses' Training School" which was almost completed. This building is a gift from the Woman's Auxiliary through the Birthday Gifts of 1928. It was put up at a low cost on account of most of the labor being provided by the boys at Stillman Institute. The contractor was heard to say in a private conversation that it was his first experience in contracting where the laborers never used a profane word nor smoked a cigarette.

The delegates suggested sending a telegram of love and good wishes to Mrs. Winsborough who has for years been a leader in inter-racial problems.

The testimony of these delegates as to what the conference had meant to them would convince anyone of the worth while task of our Christian leaders in the Southern Presbyterian Church in these great Conferences for Colored Women of which we held fourteen this year.

Grace Wisner.

THE NEW PRAYER CALENDAR

The size of the Calendar is changed from eighty to one hundred and twenty pages in order to make room for some very desirable material which it is felt will add very greatly to the value of the publication for those who use it in their daily devotions. A brief devotional paragraph is provided for each week, in addition to the usual listing of names of workers on special dates. All the agencies pronounce the Calendar a very great improvement on any yet issued. While cost for production is increased about fifty per cent, it was decided to hold to the present price of 15 cents where the calendars are mailed in quantities to one address. If it is necessary to mail them to separate addresses friends should send the extra postage cost which will be three cents per calendar.

A new card has been issued in connection with the promotion of the department of Family Religion and Sabbath Observance. There are unlimited possibilities if our church will make a wide use of these Accredited Christian Home Cards. A recent article in The Survey shows how the movement originated. This is not a new organization or a piece of machinery. It is merely a covenant between the individual member and the pastor of his church. Dr. Wm. T. Ellis, a widely known correspondent of the religious press has mentioned this movement in his list of papers which cover North America. His statement is that it is the most significant movement in this century and that he hopes the other churches will make use of this very promising enterprise.

We are giving the cards without cost to our own churches. We are not even asking the pastors to report to us the number enrolled as we feel this should be a per-

BRIGHT BOY NINE YEARS OLD SEEKS HOME FOR CHRISTMAS

Does any one know of a nice home that is looking for a bright nine-year-old boy? It doesn't matter whether the home is in the country or in the city; what matters is that it is neat and clean, and holds within its walls thoughts that are wholesome and honest, and folks who live with happiness and understand.

The Alexander Home has a boy nine years old who has bright prospects as the boy has an unusual mind and gives promise of making a fine man.

Is there not some kind woman and generous man who would like to invest their time and energy in a boy's life, where they could see the fruits of their labors while here on earth? Is there anything that can return greater pleasure than that derived from our labors of love and sacrifice?

If there is anyone who wishes information about this boy they can call Mrs. H. M. Wade, 601 Hermitage Road, Charlotte, N. C.

Whereas, Mr. McGeachy has during the past eight years given efficient service to this church; and

Whereas, he now feels called to another charge; therefore be it resolved:

NORTH CAROLINA

Thyatira—The Fall Communion Service was observed on Sunday November 17. The congregation was delighted to have a son of this old church, Dr. Walter L. Lingle, as the preacher on this occasion. Preparatory services were held on Friday evening with preaching by our neighbor Rev. W. H. Goodman, and Saturday morning the pastor preached. Ten members were received into the church at these services.

Fayetteville First—On two Wednesday evenings a play known as "The Book Review" was given in the Sunday School Auditorium to audiences so large that some were required to stand. Seventy-five persons took part portraying in costume and speech the roles of the outstanding characters of a great library. The free will offering of over sixty dollars is to be used to buy additional books for our church library.

Virginia Smith, Secretary.

Back Creek—For the preparatory services for communion at Back Creek on Sunday, November 24, Rev. F. A. Barnes preached on Friday, at 7:00 p. m. and Saturday at 10:00 a. m. Mr. Barnes has many friends in this Church and the attendance was good in spite of the very inclement weather. Dr. R. S. Burwell, another beloved friend of this church, preached on Sunday and assisted with the communion. Seven members were received into this Church recently.

A committee composed of A. K. Goodman, S. E. Sloop, H. L. McLaughlin and C. J. Wilkerson has been appointed by the session to investigate the possibilities of securing additional Sunday School Equipment for this Church.

J. E. Guthrie.

Gastonia—There was a large crowd at the meeting of the men of Kings Mountain Presbytery, Thursday night, December 12, about 170 men being present. Dr. Wm. F. Weir of Chicago made the address. Doctor Weir is a strong speaker and made a deep impression. The men were delighted with the singing of our Men's Quartette, Messrs. Overmyer, Sudduth, Freeman and Kendrick. Although there were more men present than had been reported as expecting to come, Circles No. 2 and No. 5 were equal to the occasion and served a bountiful and much enjoyed dinner.

Instead of the usual service last Sunday evening, there was a special musical service. The beautiful cantata, "The Prince of Peace;" was given by the church choir. In addition to this, a large chorus of boys and girls sang some of the Christmas songs and carols.

Steele Creek—The Men of Steele Creek held a Father and Son Banquet in the Community House of the church Friday night, December 6. One hundred and seventy-five fathers and sons sat down together around the tables, and had a happy evening in the fellowship of each other. The special feature of the evening was the address of Dr. W. A. Harper, president of Elon College. Solos were sung by Mrs. W. A. Harper, wife of the president, and Miss Campbell of the Berryhill High School faculty. The Woodlawn Band, and the Berryhill Harmonica Club rounded out the evening, and everyone went away feeling it has been a great night.

Dr. William F. Weir, senior secretary of Men's Work in the Northern Presbyterian Church with headquarters in Chicago, addressed the Men of Steel Creek Sunday night, December 8, on "Facing Four Foremost Facts." It was a great address, and the men heard him with delight.

Presbytery adjourned to meet in the First Presbyterian Church, Maxton, on January 7, 1929, at 2:00 p. m.

Washington—On Tuesday, October 8, 1929, Rev. H. B. Searight, for twenty-one years pastor of the Washington church passed from this life. The following memorial services were held:

On Wednesday evening, October 9, a service was held in the Presbyterian Church, Rev. H. I. Glass of the Methodist Church officiating. Although Mr. Glass had known Mr. Searight less than two years, he was one of his sincere friends and admirers. He spoke especially of Mr. Searight's character, of his Christian Citizenship, of his gentlemanly bearing and of his being a man "without fear, without reproach."

On Sunday evening, October 20, the Minister's Association held a memorial service in the Presbyterian Church, conducted by Rev. Richard Bagby, pastor of the Christian Church. As the basis of his remarks, Doctor Bagby chose Paul's words, "I knew a man in Christ." A close friendship of years qualified him to so speak. Following Doctor Bagby, each minister of the city made

"AND THEY SAY—"

"I am enclosing check for renewal of subscription. I am a native North Carolinian and I always find matters of great interest as well as much benefit in the Standard."

a short talk of appreciation of the life and influence of Doctor Searight in the community.

Another beautiful tribute was paid the memory of beloved Pastor during the American Legion Service Armistic Day when resolutions were read expressing loss which the entire city feels in the death of Doctor right, sympathy for his family and also for the sorrow of friends who feel his loss so deeply.

Mrs. J. M. Hobgood, Presbyterial Correspondent.

Salisbury, First—The congregation is called to meet after the morning service. At that time the Pulpit Committee expects to make a report and, if the way be, the congregation will be asked to take action.

The Pulpit Committee has been working hard in investigating the names of prospective ministers. The members of this Committee are away today visiting students in his home church and hearing him preach.

Rev. Edgar A. Wood's last Sunday in Salisbury was December 22. He expects to leave Monday 23, singing Christmas with relatives and entering upon his new home in Richmond, January 1.

Laurinburg—This Church has recently had the pleasure of hearing a number of distinguished visitors. By an exchange of pulpits with the pastor, the C. P. Coble, High Point, N. C.; Rev. R. A. McPherson, President of Presbyterian Junior College, Maxton, N. C. and Rev. F. C. Symonds, Fayetteville, N. C., who gave a special address on Success and Leadership at the December meeting of the Men of the Church. Our distinguished visitor recently was Dr. Chas. J. Symonds, President of Roanoke College, Va., who is one of our leading ministers and educators of the Lutheran Church in America. Doctor Smith delighted his hearers by his wonderful sermon on Faith and Doubt. The pastor, Dr. E. V. Ball, conducted a most inspiring service of music worship at the recent evening service. A union Thanksgiving service was held in Laurinburg Church at which Dr. E. V. Ball of the Baptist church preached and a substantial offering was made for the various orphanages.

Presbyterian Orphans' Home, Barium Spring—It has been my privilege from time to time to speak through the columns of this paper, of the contribution made by various members of the large Barium family to the work of the Home. There is one member (though not on the payroll) who means more to the Institution than the way of Christian influence and inspiration than any one else, save perhaps the manager himself: I am speaking now of none other than the manager's wife, Jos. B. Johnston, beloved and admired by us all as the youngest baby in the Baby Cottage to the credit of a worker on the place.

I realize that I am introducing no stranger, but many of the thousands of friends of the Institution I know Mrs. Johnston personally and appreciate her beautiful Christian character, her attractive personality, and many motherly attributes. It is a case of "Render therefore, to all their dues: tribute to whom tribute is due, honor to whom honor."

The outside world knows very little of the love that carries or of the essence of her life's blood she is constantly pouring into this ocean of work. She is indeed, in truth, the helpmeet of her husband. In his darkest hour, when everything goes wrong and the light of life grows dim; when the battle seems lost and friends get their obligations to the Home. Yes, when weariness, the day's grind, discouraged and disappointed, he turns to her with full assurance of sympathy and understanding. She never loses faith in his dream for the future, but like Deborah of old she says: "I will surely go with thee." And she does, sharing his disappointments along with his successes; his sorrows with his joys.

It is a strenuous life Mrs. Johnston lives. She does her own house work, caring for her immediate family of children in addition to mothering 360 others in the orphanage. She is a regular and faithful attendant at Church services, teaches a Sunday School class of 100 girls, and sponsors a Mission Band composed of the 100 girls. Her sphere of service does not end here—she spends time somehow to make daily visits up on the camp to speak to the workers and love the children. We love and Barium owes her a debt that can never be paid.

Hendersonville—If mothers and fathers in Eastern North Carolina could see the improvement in one girl from their section has shown since coming to Fassifern School in September, every one of them would want to send their daughters to this delightful school at Hendersonville. This young lady was thin and underweight. She could take little exercise, and had the least interest in her lessons. Soon after going to the bracing atmosphere of the mountains she began to revive and take interest. Now at the end of the first quarter she has gained many pounds in weight, taken on new strength, and recently took up basketball, making one of the best teams in the school. She is only a sample of what a change of climate often does for a girl or boy who lacks pep.

There are many kinds and types of girls at I

FLORIDA

Pensacola—The fall program of First Church goes forward splendidly. The pastor, Dr. Charles Haddon Nabers, has just concluded a series of eight Sunday morning sermons on The Beatitudes. The evening sermons for the next ten weeks will be on Supreme Sanctities, a study in the Ten Commandments.

Attendance in all departments of the church activities is most gratifying. About a hundred young people are gathering for the Inspirational Young People's meeting each Sunday evening under the direction of Miss Kathlyn Monroe.

The pastor has just returned home from Jacksonville where he taught a course in Personal Evangelism in the Standard Training School of the Presbyterian Churches in that city.

The Presbytery of Tampa met in Lakeland, Fla., on October 29, 1929. Present, 28 ministers and 21 elders. Rev. C. B. Tombs, D.D., pastor of the Sebring Church, was elected Moderator. The retiring Moderator, Rev. T. W. Raymond, D. D., preached an excellent sermon on the subject of Evangelism. This seemed the key note of the meeting.

The Ministers' Annuity Fund plan was heartily approved and the ministers and churches were urged to enter into it. A committee of three laymen was appointed to present the plan to the churches of Presbytery, in an effort to get them to adopt it and put it into effect. This Committee consists of Messrs. George Lenfesty of Hyde Park Church, E. M. Patterson of Lakeland Church and A. F. Wyman of Bradenton Church.

Presbytery approved the basis of union with the United Presbyterian Church of North America.

The pastoral relation between Rev. W. T. Mann and the Bartow Church was dissolved at the request of both parties.

The Presbyterial sermon on the subject of Evangelism was preached by Rev. F. W. Haverkamp, pastor of Palma Ceia Church.

The next stated meeting will be held at Sarasota on April 15, 1930, at ten a. m. T. P. Walton, Stated Clerk.

The Presbytery of Florida met in Marianna, Fla., on November 5, 1929, at 7:30 p. m. The opening sermon was preached by the retiring Moderator, Rev. D. J. Blackwell.

There were eighteen ministers and eight ruling elders present.

Rev. J. T. Young was chosen Moderator; Dr. G. T. Bourne was elected Recording Clerk; and Rev. J. D. Simpson acted as Permanent Clerk.

Rev. J. W. Marshall was received from Mobile Presbytery and Rev. A. M. Moore was received from Meridian Presbytery.

Rev. J. D. Simpson was reported as ordained and installed as pastor of the Crestview and Laurel Hill churches since the spring meeting.

A memorial of the late Rev. J. P. Word was read by Rev. J. C. Leckemby.

Two overtures to the General Assembly were adopted: First, that secretaries and other church workers, on retiring, be treated as other ministers are treated. Second, that our Executive Committee on Foreign Missions be asked to increase the amount given to evangelistic work and to decrease the amount given to institutional work in the foreign field.

The Presbyterial Discourse was preached by Rev. C. B. Ratchford on "The Immutability of the Master," and Rev. J. W. Marshall was chosen to speak at the spring meeting on "Leading Lost Ones to Christ."

The vote on the basis of union with the United Presbyterian Church was deferred till the spring meeting.

Commissioners to the General Assembly—Rev. J. T. Young and Elder C. A. Weiss with Rev. E. N. Caldwell and Elder W. B. Ferris as Alternates.

The report on Presbytery's Home Missions showed all of the fields supplied, one large new field opened up, but an empty treasury. The chairman was requested to ask the Assembly's Home Missions Committee for at least $2500 toward this work.

An interesting Conference on Evangelism was held. Four speakers gave instructive addresses of different subjects. And Presbytery ordered another such conference at the spring meeting.

The next meeting will be held at Laurel Hill on Tuesday night after the second Sunday in April, 1930, at 7:30. Daniel J. Currie, Stated Clerk.

Miami—The Woman's Auxiliary celebrated its Annual Rally on Friday, October 18. The program was led by Mrs. Pierre DuBose. Mrs. Philip Jones, Miami Presbyterian President, gave an appropriate devotional on the "Responsibilities of the Christian Mother." A delightful address was given by one of Miami's most popular school superintendents, Miss Nell Avery. From her wide experience she gave in her charming way, "The influence of the Christian home and its responsibility." Ava Maria delightful solo sung by Mrs. R. W. Wilkinson, carried on the theme of our program which concluded with the demonstration "The Church and the Child," fittingly and artistically given by Mrs. Theron Nisbet and Miss Lois Ewell. A liberal offering was given for Thornwell Orphanage, and about 80 women enjoyed the meeting at this Rally season.

It is an annual custom of the Woman's circles of the Auxiliary to entertain the Business Woman's Circle each year. This year the rally season was chosen as the appropriate time for this social affair and it took the form of a progressive dinner. The first course was served at the home of the Chairman, Mrs. P. W. DuBose. There they were greeted by the Hostess circle. Fancy caps were donned by the 25 circle members after which each found their partners for supper.

The program included—the year hymn, Bible chapter, and motto of the Circle, a welcome from the Hostesses, responded to by a business woman. Mrs. Theron Nisbet, President of the Auxiliary, spoke on "What the Business Woman's Circle means to the Woman's Auxiliary," this met with a response from the Auxiliary meant to the Business Woman's Circle.

Cars carried the circle from home to home. At Mrs. Carl R. Yaegar's, amid music and games, another course was served. The final course of sweets was served at the home of Mrs. Neil Sinclair. Here the circle divided into groups and put on skits, amusing the onlookers. The evening was closed with a short devotional talk, by the Chairman, concluding in a prayer.

A most charming setting was the long banquet hall, which was laid for the Men of the Church at their rally supper. Orange and black, Hallowe'en colors, were carried out in all the decorations. Tall orange tapers with grinning pumpkins were the only lights as the half a hundred me ntook their places at the banquet table. The orange baskets filled with fruit cocktail was the beginning of a delicious menu, which ended with pumpkin pie topped with whipped cream. After dinner speeches full of spiritual food were made on the general theme: "What My Church Means to Me and What I Mean to My Church."

1. Being an Elder, by Mr. M. R. Frierson.
2. The Fun of being a Deacon, by Mr. S. Oliver O'Bryan.
3. The Importance of the Church Usher's Job, by Mr. Geo. D. Webster.
4. What a Church Treasurer has to do, by Mr. W. C. Myers.
5. How would you like to be Sunday School Superintendent? Mr. Leroy S. Edwards.
6. You ought to be in the Men's Bible Class, Mr. Frank Worrall.
7. Why a Sunday night service, Mr. O. M. Nisbet.
8. Is Prayer meeting worth while? Mr. R. S. Wickham.
9. Special Music, Mr. W. N. Massengale.
10. Do you read the Church Papers? Mr. Theron G. Nisbet.

This evening was the beginning of many to be held throughout the Winter.

Because of gale winds followed by unprecedented rains, which resulted in flood conditions, rally month began in Westminster Presbyterian Church rather late in October.

The winds and rains couldn't dampen the spirits of the superintendents and teachers, and a very impressive Rally Service was presented by the Church School to a large and appreciative audience.

The service opened with an appropriate service of worship, followed by an address by the General Superintendent, Mr. Leroy S. Edwards, setting forth the goals reached during the previous year and the aim to be secured in the coming year.

Under the auspices of the Cradle Roll babies, with their mothers came forward as their names were called, each receiving a rose while a sweet lullaby was sung by Mrs. Ralph Buckner. One of the graduates, Helene Wilson, dressed in her pink surplice and cap, sang sweetly two little songs, after which the Cradle Roll graduates received their diplomas.

Each Department—Beginners with Mrs. K. C. Crossland, Supt., Primary, Mrs. J. W. DuBose, Supt., Juniors with Mrs. Theron Nisbet, Supt., Intermediates with Miss Loise Ewell, Supt., and Seniors superintended by Mr. Theoron Nisbet, successively with classes of graduates in colored surplus and cap, gave most fittingly Scripture and song pertaining to the work required for graduation from each Department. The program showed concentrated and systematic training and was of great interest to the parents present.

Edwin McIntyre was presented with a Testament for the perfect recitation of the Child's Catechism.

Mr. S. Oliver O'Bryan, representing the Adult Department, spoke on "What the Church means to us and what we should mean to the Church School." The offering, larger than previous years, was given to Sunday School Extension. Prayer, offered by the Pastor, Rev. P. W. DuBose, concluded this splendid Rally Service.

REPORTS FROM THE FIELD

Occasionally we want to give to the readers of this Department some extracts from the letters which we are receiving. These are given exactly as they came in to us with no attempt at change. We believe they will be of great interest to the readers of this column.

Steele Creek Presbyterian Church, Charlotte, N. C.

You may be interested to know that my own men here at Steele Creek have been meeting each Sunday night in September, the officers and group leaders, the first two nights, and the whole body last Sunday night. At this meeting they tell me they had about a hundred men present (I was away in a meeting) and they say it was the finest thing we have ever had. W. D. Loy, our President, got much from the Montreat conference, and he is getting it across to the fellows in a fine way. Write him sometime. His address is Rt. 4, Charlotte, N. C.

I wrote you some time ago that the Men-of-the-Steele-Creek-Presbyterian-Church at their September meeting decided that their special service program for October would be Sunday School Extension in the local church, and especially that of promoting Rally Day. Well, they put it across in fine shape, and the attendance for the day was the best in the history of the church, 700 in all, 560 in the main school, 140 in the two chapels, with an offering of about $200.00. It would have interested you to have heard the reports from the different groups on last Sunday night at our regular monthly meeting. They were of such a character, and so interesting, and the fellows had so much to report that we simply had to suspend the inspirational program and give the whole hour over to them.

We have a week's preaching beginning next week, and this month they are going to follow up with another visitation along the same lines. I look for some excellent things to come out of it.—J. M. Walker.

Davis Memorial Presbyterian Church, Elkins, W. Va.

I had a supper last Tuesday at which time Doctor Turner of Staunton presented the matter for their consideration. The supper was very successful. There was a large attendance and the men were interested but did not seem ready to do anything at the supper. I wanted the movement to come from them rather than from me and so waited until yesterday when I put it up to the Bible Class whether they should invite you to come and set up the organization. We did not take a casual vote but discussed the matter carefully and made it clear that to vote to ask you was to be a personal pledge to take the matter of setting up the organization as serious and personal. With that understanding they voted almost unanimously to have you. So I will ask you for a date as soon as you can.—J. McD. Lacy, D.D.

Barbee Memorial Presbyterian Church, Excelsior Springs, Missouri

I want to thank you for the assistance you have given us in getting the Men's Work of our church functioning on the Assembly's plan.

We had our first model program at the church last night. Every man took his place on the program with enthusiasm and it went off fine. About thirty or thirty-five men were present. As luck would have it, Doctor McLaughlin called me Monday evening and said that he would be with us at the meeting. After the regular program which was on Christian Training, he spoke to us showing the bearing of the subject upon the country church work. The men were stirred and greatly pleased.—W. L. Brown, Jr.

Westminster Presbyterian Church, Lynchburg, Va.

Just a word or two about our Men's Organization. I feel that we are developing steadily and thoroughly as the months go by although there is nothing spectacular in our efforts. The reason I have this particularly in mind today is that our October meeting was held last night, a meeting that was enjoyed thoroughly by every man present. The subject was Christian Education and four splendid talks were made by members of the organization.

Our men have bought hymnals for the Sunday School and have started one little thing that they are greatly interested in. Our ushers handle the seating of the congregation in splendid style but the men are now taking over welcoming people at the doors so that no visitor can attend church without being greeted.

I am more and more convinced that the Men's Organization has untold possibilities in it.

All success to you in this great work.—Robert W. Miles.

First Presbyterian Church, Marianna, Fla.

Last week I called the first meeting for the organization of the men of my Church. Twelve men, including one visitor and myself, comprised the initial opening meeting. That was more than thirty per cent of the entire roll of men. Splendid enthusiasm for the first effort. We meet again in four weeks. Before that time I want in hand five copies of the Monthly Programs. That will be sufficient to see us started the right way. Hope to need more in March. Inclosed you will find four bits in stamps, to pay for the programs. I have a raft of literature that I got from you last early spring. I have been through it all a number of times. Worked hard to get this thing started. If you know anything new that I ought to know about this business, either in teaching the baby to toddle or in administering artificial respiration if it shows signs soon of giving up the ghost, you had better send that along too. There is no clinic close by. Most of the neighboring churches are in worse shape than mine, not even having tried this thing. Include us in your prayers.—A. C. Windham.

First Presbyterian Church, Dallas, Texas

The Council had a dinner meeting last night and there were forty-two present. This is the first meeting that has been held since we discontinued our meetings on account of the summer months.

We had a very enthusiastic meeting and feel that no small amount of benefit will result from the meeting.

The Council voted to follow the monthly programs as outlined in the booklet prepared for that purpose.—D. D. Fox.

First Presbyterian Church, Marietta, Ga.

About fifty men of the First Presbyterian Church in Marietta met last week and agreed to organize under the name of "The Men of the First Presbyterian Church." Rev. Harry Bryan, our associate pastor, is the "wheel horse" in the organization, and the undersigned was elected president, Campbell Wallace, secretary, and Milton E. McLain, treasurer, and our first meeting will be held on the 24th of October.

Mr. Bryan has had a good deal of the literature in connection with this work, but I am anxious to have six or eight copies of the program pamphlet and any other literature that you might think suitable for distribution among the vice-presidents and group leaders just named by our executive committee. I am particularly anxious to get any literature that you might have setting out the duties of the vice-presidents, in addition to the pamphlets giving the yearly program above mentioned.—Charles M. Brown.

Central Presbyterian Church, Mobile, Ala.

On last Thursday evening Mr. R. E. Gordon, our president, made a most impressive address to our Men-of-the-Church at their monthly supper meeting giving his impressions of this year's Montreat conference.

We had about 70 present and I think he put his message across in fine style. I wish you could have heard him. He and I will prepare the article that you recently requested giving the story of Central's Men-of-the-Church Organization.—J. B. Carpenter.

First Presbyterian Church, Corpus Christi, Texas

It would have done your heart good to have been with our men on Thursday night before I left Corpus Christi. We had a splendid outdoor meeting at which they presented me with a beautiful watch with the following inscription: "To Dr. C. H. Storey. Sincere affection Men-of-the-Church, Corpus Christi, Texas, 1923-1929." Somewhere in my papers I have a newspaper report and will be glad to send you a copy.—Charlton H. Storey.

Central Presbyterian Church, Pine Bluff, Ark.

At our first meeting of the Men's Club after the summer vacation the men voted to adopt the Men-of-the-Church plan of organization and we re-organized as far as possible. The elective officers are:

President, C. H. Boozer; Secretary, C. J. Alexander; Treasurer, G. C. Roberts. The Executive Committee will perfect the organization within the next few days.

Our men are pleased with the plan of organization of the Men-of-the-Church. They believe it will help them a very great deal in meeting the problems of the Men's Work in our local church. I appreciate the value of the literature you sent me dealing with the setting up of the organization and found it very helpful in "Selling" the program to our men.—John D. Spragins, Jr.

by the love of the Christ Child, Whose Birthday we celebrate. He so loved that He gave His own life for us we are endeavoring to "walk in love even as Christ loved us and hath given himself for us."

The special cause for which our gifts are being this month as designated by our Assembly, is that of Ministerial Relief. There are 466 homes in which the aged and infirm ministers or needy widows and orphans. What we give at this Christmas season will be to lessen the strain and lighten the burden of those who served but now are laid aside from the active service. "The Road of the Loving Heart" leads to the goal shall be worthy of the Cause.

Again, next May, there will come to every woman of our Church another opportunity to give to the Cause of Ministerial Relief. During that month, which is the day month of the Auxiliary, we have for the last years had the happy privilege of expressing our love to thanksgiving for what the Auxiliary has meant to womanhood of our Church. We have brought our day pennies, dimes or dollars, laying them at the feet as our tribute of praise. These gifts, amounting eight years to over $325,000, have been used for the good and womanhood of many lands: Japan, Brazil, Mexico, as well as our own America. The has been given sometimes through the Foreign Mission Committee, sometimes through the Home Mission Committee.

In 1930, that Committee which is to be the recipient of our offering, is the Executive Committee of C. I. M. R., the entire fund to be given as an Endowment Fund for Ministerial Relief. Doctor Sweets, the Secretary of this Committee for many years, will be the administering of the interest from this fund. The plan of our Birthday offering is that it will be for women, the interest will minister to the needs of widows of ministers, to orphan children and to commissioned women workers.

Of special interest is the fact that by approval of the General Assembly, the Committee on Assembly's and the Woman's Advisory Committee, it was voted to name the Birthday Fund in honor of our Secretary Emeritus, Mrs. W. C. Winsborough, and to designate part of the interest to be used each year as her retirement salary. It is especially fitting that interest from the fund bearing the name of one who was a child and grandchild of the manse should minister throughout the years to the children of the manse and to those who have sacrificed of their service to the Master. It is also that a part of the interest shall be used during her lifetime for this one who has meant so much to the Work as its unparalleled leader throughout the past seventeen years since the organization of the Auxiliary.

Early in the year we shall publish some articles which will present the special needs of the Cause to which our Birthday gifts will go, that of Ministerial Relief. By this need is such a worthy one and because through our Birthday offering we have an opportunity of expressing our love to Christ and thanksgiving to Him for a work our Auxiliary has meant and will mean to us, let us give our giving commensurate with His loving.

MRS. ANNA R. JAMIESON

An Appreciation

On Friday, September 13, 1929, the spirit of Anna R. Jamieson passed quietly through the portals to be forever with her Saviour, in whose presence there is fulness of joy.

In the passing of Mrs. Jamieson the Woman's Missionary Society of the Ginter Park Presbyterian Church, Richmond, Va., has sustained an irreparable loss.

For five years she was president, and under her leadership the society developed into a strong organization, and the manifest interest in the activities during succeeding years has been largely due to her constant efforts and constant prayers in its behalf.

Mrs. Jamieson was a woman of most unusual intellectual attainments, deep piety and strong conviction in constant prayer and study she laid hold of the once delivered to the saints.

Combined with these traits was great humility, spirit, rare sweetness and gentleness, and an unswerving loyalty to those upon whom she bestowed her friendship.

In her declining years when she was deprived of the privilege of active service, she felt that she could be used of God through intercessory prayer and that willing task she set herself with her characteristic and devotion, and only eternity will reveal what her prayers of this consecrated servant of God have done to the advancement of Christ's kingdom as done through the agencies of the Southern Presbyterian Church in our own and other lands. Her life was at once an inspiration and a challenge, and we could honor her in no more fitting way than by consecrating our lives to the service of Him whom she served so long and so fully.

GATES AND DOORS

There was a gentle hostler
(And blessed be his name!)
He opened up the stable
The night Our Lady came.
Our Lady and Saint Joseph,
He gave them food and bed,
And Jesus Christ has given him
A glory round his head.

So let the gate swing open
However poor the yard,
Lest weary people visit you
And find their passage barred;
Unlatch the door at midnight
And let your lantern's glow
Shine out to guide the traveller's feet
To you across the snow.

There was a courteous hostler
(He is in Heaven to-night)
He held Our Lady's bridle
And helped her to alight;
He spread clean straw before her
Whereon she might lie down,
And Jesus Christ has given him
An everlasting crown.

Unlock the door this evening
And yet your gate swing wide,
Let all who ask for shelter
Come speedily inside.
What if your yard be narrow?
What if your house be small?
There is a Guest whose coming
Will glorify it all.

For the Leader

Just two more days and 1929 will join the ranks of the years that have been. We shall ring the old year out and the new year in with as much joy as we rang in this present year. We aren't especially sorry to see the old year go; we enjoy a new year too much to grieve over the going of the old one. Always we look forward rather than backward—there is always a chance that the future holds something better. Let us take an inventory of ourselves, however, before we enter the New Year. There may be some virtues that we will want to use more, and some vices that have been liabilities and need to be discarded, and from the shelves of Time we may choose quite a stock of new standards. Let us not throw the old year aside too hastily because it has taught us a lot that we needed to know. Has the old year brought Christ's kingdom closer to each of us? Remember that his kingdom comes not "by observation" but the kingdom is within each of us. How has that kingdom flourished? We must each answer that question for ourselves.

Backward and Forward

Sometimes when people start looking backward, they see the past through rose-colored glasses and get pessimistic about the present. They say that the Golden Age has already past, and that young people today are not what they used to be in their time. Times do change—that is quite true. It would be a poor world that didn't keep going around. The Golden Age of Greece and Rome have past and those countries have gone with it. But the Golden Age for America—has that past? It is up to each of us to make this the Golden Age for America—and for Christ. Each of us has a golden age to live—when is it? Right now! It is neither past nor future—it is the present. Let us then be strong and of good courage for we are the heirs of the ages, and with our Master the future looks bright. But today is ours. Let us use it.

Upward and Outward

We have looked backward. We realize that we have responsibility, and with responsibility comes opportunity.
We must look upward before we can go on. Strength for the responsibility and wisdom for the opportunity comes from above. We cannot lift it in our own power. Whom are we to lift? Look outward and see those who need encouragement, those who need sympathy, and those who have a heavy burden that we can share. Upward first for strength and wisdom—and then outward for the chance to share with others. Christ's kingdom comes in just such a way. It does not come suddenly and without effort on our part. But each of us has a share in making that kingdom come, and our reward will be in proportion to our service.

Everyday Religion

Before the Reformation, religion was something for the monks in monasteries to practice. It was for the select few who gave themselves over to fasting and meditation.
Soldiers and plowmen and shopboys and serving girls had no part in religion. When Luther came, he showed the world that religion is for plain men and women who serve in cottages and fields and factories.

"When our Lord offered himself to men as the way, the truth and the life, he did not mean for them to wait until philosophy and art had done their work. He was speaking to unlettered men and women in terms they could understand and calling them to immediate fellowship with him in the life they were destined to live. What he meant was that those who were prepared simply and without reservation to accept him as their Master and Guide in life would find in him and his teaching the answer to their problems and the means of living the kind of life which at their best moments most men are moved to live." (Rev. Scudamore Forbes, in Christian Advocate.) Everyday religion practised by everyday folks will make the Golden Age of America.

Foward, March!

Industry calls us to help straighten out its problems;
politics calls us to help keep it clean; the Golden Age begs that the "Gold" be less emphasized. So many worlds to conquer—so many mountains to climb.

Christian, dost thou see them on the holy ground,
How the powers of darkness compass thee around?
Christian, up and smite them, counting gain but loss,
By the strength that cometh by the Holy Cross!

Christian, dost thou feel them, how they work within,
Striving, tempting, luring, goading into sin?
Christian, never tremble, never be downcast;
Gird thee for the battle,
Watch and pray and fast!

"Well, I know they trouble, O my servant true;
Thou art very weary—I was weary, too.
But that toil shall make thee someday all mine own,
And the end of sorrow shall be near my throne."

GRANDFATHER'S CLOCK

Adapted from "Handy Kit" and supplied by Miss Eva Mann, Recreation Superintendent of the New York Christian Endeavor Union. For New Year's Eve from Ten to Twelve.

Invitation:
Ring out the old, ring in the new,
Ring happy bells across the snow.
The year is going, let him go;
Ring out the false, ring in the true.

—Tennyson.

Come to-----from Ten 'till Midnight.

1. While the guests are coming in, Review the Year.
Around the wall have a large number of cartoons illustrating events the past year taken from magazines and newspapers. Remove titles and supply numbers to the cartoons. (Old copies of the Literary Digest will provide a wealth of material.) Players identify and make a list of the year's happenings illustrated in the cartoons.

2. Conversation by the Clock. Each man makes dates with 12 girls, with each of whom a two minute conversation is to be carried on. Subjects may be announced by the leader.

3. In circles of not more than 12 or 24, play Jolly Miller, in the simple form of having the right step forward to a new partner each time.

4. Settling Old Grudges may easily be done by playing a few rounds of Swat Tag giving the swatter only to the ladies. Flying Dutchman will restore good feeling.

5. Seated in circles, each player is assigned an Hour of the Day, (a. m. and p. m. if the circle is large) and a new variety of Stage Coach is played in which "it" tells of his busy day's work, naming various hours, which change seats.

6. By dividing each circle in two sides, a fast game of "Animated Alphabet" will be interesting.

7. Then arrange a surprise Alarm Clock Rally, having provided an old alarm clock for each team, with one rule that the alarm must be kept ringing until the race is finished.

8. Killing Time can be pleasantly accomplished by two teams throwing darts at a large clock face, and scoring the number of points which the dart until the race is finished.

9. How Many Years Ahead? Stretch seven strings, representing three scores and ten across the room about a foot from the floor. These may be attached to chair legs. At a given signal, the contestants, each with a peanut in the shell balanced on the blade of a table knife, start to race over the strings to the goal. If he is successful in reaching it without dropping the peanut he will live to be seventy years old, but if he drops it before that, his life will be shortened as indicated by his position when the peanut fell off the knife.

10. What Time Is It? This is a trick for two players, the leader and his assistant. The assistant leaves the room and some even hour is decided on by the crowd, for example, four o'clock. The assistant returns and asks "What time is it?" to which the leader responds with a sentence, which contains the answer; for example, "Well I doubt if anyone knows exactly." "Four o'clock was chosen," says the assistant. Key—each of the first twelve letters of the alphabet represent an hour:

A B C D E F G H I J K L
1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 and the letter beginning the third word of the leader's answer is to represent the hour decided upon, "D" in the above example. The leader must speak very slowly.

11. Dramatic Half-Hour. Have some stunts, short skits, etc. This can lend some real fun to the party.

12. Refreshments should be served about 11 o'clock and a more substantial menu than usual would be suitable.

See The New Year In was for generations observed as a stirring religious service. Following the above social program and refreshments should come a carefully planned Watch-Night Service.

"LORD OF THE POTS AND PANS"

"Lord of all pots and pans and things, since I've no time to be
A saint by doing lovely things in watching late with Thee,
Or dreaming in the twilight, or storming heaven's gates,
Make me a saint by getting meals or washing up the plates.

"Although I must have Martha's hands, I have a Mary mind;
And when I black the boots and shoes, thy sandals,
Lord, I find.
I think of how they trod the earth each time I scrub the floor;
Accept this meditation, Lord, I haven't time for more.

"Warm all the kitchen with thy love and warm it with thy peace,
Forgive me all my worrying and make all grumbling cease.
Thou who didst love to give men food, in room or by the sea,
Accept this service that I do—I do it unto Thee."

have operated for many years. It brings also to its support the experience of great denominations which are already using it, and who testify to its efficiency and pre-eminent success.

It gives reasonable promise of wiping out the deadly "dead line in the ministry which has now practically fallen to the age of forty. No Church should hereafter hesitate to employ our ablest men by reason of the haunting thought of their pastor being left on their hands as an embarrassing charge, constituting a financial strain upon the congregation.

It will enable the Executive Committee of Home Missions to meet an obligation to its worthy missionaries, which has been for years a perplexing problem. It has endorsed the plan and pledged its financial support as soon as the complicated details are solved to the mutual satisfaction of the co-operating parties. It will give great comfort to this Committee to know it will hereafter have a substantial part in relieving the anxieties of its missionaries as to the dreaded future, when age and infirmities may threaten the support of themselves and their loved ones.

The Annuity Plan provides an easy and practical method of "laying up in store for themselves" a part of their savings in an institution as strong as the government of the U. S., thereby giving them blessed comfort in view of "the evil days" which may come by reason of the infirmities common to the lot of man and the uncertainty of human investments.

May God abundantly bless the efforts of the Church to provide adequately for its "noble army of martyrs" to a great Cause.

THE MEN OF THE CHURCH MOVEMENT

J. G. Garth

Looking at our front page last week, one might suppose we were issuing a Men's Edition, but it just happened that several groups of men were meeting at that time, and the news came bunched together.

We have been watching this movement to organize our men with great interest, and most of us might say, If the men succeed half as well as the women, and form a unit doing half as much as the Auxiliary, the church ought to be gratified. It has always appeared to us that the absorption of men in business which saps their mental and physical vigor makes it extremely unlikely that our men will ever put as much enthusiasm as the women are doing in the church work. Of course we have our official boards which are expected to invest time and money and thought in religious work. Then we have sporadic cases of zeal on the part of men not officials, but will the ordinary layman respond to the appeal for an outlay of interest such as is given by the women?

The answer to that question is the growth of the Men-of-the-Church under the leadership of Dr. J. E. Purcell and his worthy helpers, the outstanding ones being J. A. Naff, F. L. Temple and L. A. Coulter. Mr. Naff is in North Carolina just now, and his faith, enthusiasm, and conviction are stimulating. He believes the Men-of-the-Church organization is coming now with accumulating momentum.

Charlotte and vicinity is being favored by a visit of Dr. W. F. Weir, General Director of the Men's Work in the Northern Presbyterian, and he and Mr. Naff are meeting groups for discussion of men's problems.

We have at hand a small folder which explains the key to the men's activity. That key is the group plan. This was prepared by Mr. Naff and issued by the office of Doctor Purcell in Atlanta. The folder explains the nature and importance of the group and gives valuable suggestions as to how it may be worked. The little preface we give below as an explanation of the group idea which is to answer for the men as the circle plan does for the women.

Says the folder:

"Two principles underlie the Men-of-the-Church, an inclusive principle and an exclusive principle. By inclusive is meant that every man in the church is included in the organization, and, theoretically at least, is used to promote the purpose for which the organization was originated; by exclusive is meant the division of the large unit into a number of small units for more efficient use. These principles underlie every efficient organization. The whole body of men come together monthly for inspiration, education and worship. The group meets for the execution of its part of the program which has been planned for the whole organization.

"The group method of organization is no panacea for all the ills of Men's Work, but it comes nearer reaching the entire body of men and developing individual leaders than anything we have had so far in our church. Thoughtful men and pastors readily admit that the methods we have used in the past have not done this effectively. Enough local churches of every size and kind have used that group to demonstrate its value. No one need expect that 100 per cent of the men in a church will function simply because they are formed into groups. It is true, however, that the group plan will give a better opportunity for developing the men."

Many churches fail in men's work, but chiefly because they lack leadership which adopts a plan and sticks to it. The testimony from all over the church is that those churches which make a faithful intelligent effort to apply the group plan and the other features of the Assembly's adopted form for men's work are succeeding and that admirably.

REPLYING TO DR. ANDERSON

Ernest Trice Thompson, D.D.

In the Presbyterian Standard of November 27, 1929, Dr. R. C. Anderson protested against my exposition of the Sunday School lesson of November 17 regarding race relationships.

He protested in the first place "because of its misleading and inaccurate statements." May I say in reply to this very serious charge that I had no intention of throwing any blame on the Montreat management in anything that I said. In so far as I felt that injustice had been done, I put the blame upon the Assembly itself, of which I was a member, and for which, therefore, I was partly responsible. In particular, I did not mean to suggest, and I do not think that I did suggest, that seats were assigned the negro commissioners in an inconspicuous part of the auditorium. I did write, and I am prepared to defend the statement that "they met together with their white brethren in the business of the Lord, but in the great auditorium at Montreat they sat off to themselves in a corner." I thought at the time, and I still do think, that the attitude of the commissioners, of which I was one, was not as brotherly as it ought to have been. It is beside the question for Doctor Anderson to write "that anyone who knows anything of the Anderson Auditorium at Montreat knows that it has no corners." He might just as well accuse Isaiah or Ezekiel of making misleading and inaccurate statements because they speak of the four corners of the earth. The only additional statement of mine that Doctor Anderson quoted to prove the misleading nature of my article was the following: "They (the colored commissioners) did not eat in the dining-room with the other commissioners, even at a separate table. The writer understands though he may be wrong, that they ate in the kitchen."

Since writing this statement, I have been reliably informed by people who were in a position to know the facts, and who are prepared to prove their statements, I have the words of one of the colored commissioners himself, that the first meals of the colored commissioners were served to them in the kitchen of the Alba Hotel, and that to reach their meals they were forced to go through the furnace room. Later after white friends had protested they ate in the pantry between the kitchen and the main dining room, and toward the end of the Assembly in one of the main dining rooms of the Alba, but not with the white commissioners. Other facts concerning their treatment I prefer not to discuss at this time, and in this place.

In my previous article, I raised the question for discussion pro and con, "Would Jesus have approved of such treatment?" I am prepared to say now for myself, that I do not believe that He would. Since writing the original article, my attention has also been called to the fact that at the Assembly of 1919, which met at Doctor Palmer's church in New Orleans, the colored commissioners took their lunch each day in the same dining room with the commissioners, but at a separate table. The white ladies of the church waited on that table just as they did upon the others. I am reliably informed that that has been the custom at most subsequent Assemblies.

Doctor Anderson protested in the second place because of the manifest inconsistency of my article. I do not believe that I am altogether as inconsistent as he assumes. But even if I were, I do not see how that destroys the force of the article. I acknowledge that I have racial prejudices that it is almost impossible for me to eradicate. Nonetheless I am trying to face the implications of the Gospel of Jesus Christ in regard to our relations to the negroes. Some conclusions I have reached; about the wisdom of some courses of action, I am still uncertain. There are many problems, I think, that we need to face frankly, many questions that we will have to discuss freely before we are able to enter fully into the mind of Christ. Realizing that Christians do differ about these questions I did not argue dogmatically in my article. I raised some of the questions that I thought needed to be raised, and in the hope that we might begin to think our way through to a Christian solution. In my mind, that is one of the great functions of a Bible class, the sort of Bible class to which I hoped I was writing.

Doctor Anderson protested against my article in the third place because of its indiscretion. I will confess that it was indiscrete, if I wished to save the Presbyterian Standard (though it, of course, is in no wise responsible for the views expressed) and myself from all possible criticism. But I doubt if it will stir up any strife between the races, not so much strife certainly as the perpetuation of abuses. If the article had been intended for negroes, I would have mentioned the many evidences of the kindly feeling of the white race toward them. Great advances have been made, and are being made, especially in the realm of education, in the great state of North Carolina. But I do not see why we should allow these advances to hide from us the fact that certain injustices still remain and that some problems are, as yet, unsolved. I hope Doctor Anderson read my article in the wrong spirit. There is no "harsh arraignment" of the white race; there is "no complete justification" of the black race; there is simply the background of facts, and the question as to our Christian attitude.

Doctor Anderson protested against my article in the last place because it "logically advocates social mingling and marriage between the races." This, I believe as firmly as Doctor Anderson does that the races should be kept pure. In my article, I advocate treatment and Christian courtesy, and I sought to have readers apply such principles to definite concrete situations. Nothing that I said looked forward to intermarriage. The danger is that we shall allow such a failure to maintain ancient prejudices that have no justification in the light of our Christian attitude.

I appreciate Doctor Anderson's avowal of friendship. I value that friendship very highly. I am sorry that I do not see quite alike on this particular question. However, that this discussion will cause the readers of the Presbyterian Standard to think more definitely whether or not our attitude toward the negroes is Christian.

MISS SUE B. HALEY

An Appreciation

The following minute was adopted by the Assembly Executive Committee of Home Missions, November 1929, concerning the life and work of Miss Sue B. Haley, Secretary of Literature:

The Executive Committee of Home Missions, in its profound sorrow in the death of Miss Sue B. Haley, November 24, 1929, after seventeen years of devoted and efficient service to the church.

Miss Haley came to the Executive Committee, September 1, 1912. In the very beginning of her service she took a larger interest in the work of the Committee than her immediate task. By constant study she became an authority on Home Missions and acquainted with the Assembly's work in all its details, knowing both the workers and the workers. By earnest application to her work she was prepared for every promotion that came to her.

When the position of Secretary of Literature was created in 1923 Miss Haley was asked to accept this as her particular responsibility. For six years she rendered a conspicuous service in this department. There were many calls upon her time and strength for the preparation of literature and programs, for addresses to churches and presbyteries and for teaching in Young People's Conferences and Mission Training Schools. She was too busy or too tired to respond to any call if the Mission work of the church was to be advanced.

Miss Haley's correspondence with the Home Mission leaders and her visits to auxiliaries and conferences were an unusually wide acquaintance in the church. All knew her loved her for her beautiful Christian character and admired her for her loyal and devoted service to the Home Mission cause. Not only was she held in the highest esteem by everyone with whom she came in contact, but those who knew her only through reports were impressed with her unflinching courtesy and kindness and her ability as a Home Mission leader.

The Executive Committee places on record its benefit of those who will serve the Home Mission in future generations its sincere appreciation of Miss Haley's years of faithful service, her noble character and the love and admiration of those who were privileged to serve with her.

In further recognition of her distinguished service as a token of the church's high appreciation of her life and work, a page in the Minutes of the Executive Committee is set aside as a permanent memorial.

"I have studied the annuity plan and it is a most admirable one. You will have rendered a great service to the church when you have gotten it fully installed, as I believe you will. How any minister could afford not to become a member, if he is eligible, I cannot see.

"For the sake of my brethren I hope and pray for the success of the Ministers' Annuity Fund and a rich blessing upon you as its sponsor."

Clio, S. C. Rev. A. G. Buckner, D.D.

Rev. John J. Fix, D.D., Secretary of Religious Education and Synod's Work, Synod of Appalachia:

"It seems to me that this is a great forward step for our denomination and I think all of us should be grateful to you for the splendid work you have done in making it possible."

SYSTEMATIC AND BUSINESS-LIKE WAY

R. F. Cooper, M.A., Ph.D., President
Mississippi Synodical College

From my observation as a layman, a minister's and services belong, in a large measure, to congregation. His salary is usually small, and his opportunities for providing for a "day" are limited. The Ministers' Annuity Fund will assist him in making this provision in a thoroughly systematic business-like way, and that, too, without working any great hardship on himself or on his congregation. I heartily endorse the plan. Holly Springs, Miss.

WINNERS OF PRESBYTERIAL BANNERS FOR THE YEAR 1929

R. E. Magill, Executive Secretary

The usual spirit of sacrificial giving marked the day for Sunday School Extension on Rally Day in 1929. The disturbed business conditions reduce the ability of the schools to give, but where-cause was fully presented the response was gratifying. A school in a mountain cove of East Tennessee where pinching poverty is a chronic condition won the Presbyterian Banner for the district. A school in Texas contributed $138.50 out of their earnings. A men's class of forty in the same town gave $500.00. These gifts represented sacrificing of the highest type.

In the name of the thousands who are helped by the fund, and for our Committee, we express gratitude to all who contributed to this great work. Presbyterian Banners are awarded to schools making the largest offering per member and the winning school appears below.

CHRIST'S DAY

O bright day,
Light day,
Most glorious day of all
When Christ came down to live on earth
And heavenly choirs announced His birth
Our hearts have heard you call.
And once again in Bethlehem's town
Our feet would seek the glow
Of heavenly music floating down,
And candles burning low.

O bright day,
Light day,
Thy fire is in the heart.
Its flames in crimson splendor burn,
And from it our warm memories turn
To loved ones far apart.
And once again our thoughts o'erflow
For those beyond our reach,
And kneeling in the firelight's glow
We breath a prayer for each.

O bright day,
Light day,
O Christ sent from above,
The melodies of thy coming beat
Triumphal marches low and sweet
In hearts which know Thy love.

DESERVES CORDIAL SUPPORT

Rev. William H. Frazer, D.D.
President Queens College

The Ministers' Annuity Fund plan which has been proposed by the Committee on Christian Education and Ministerial Relief, of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, has my unqualified endorsement, and it deserves the cordial support of all those who realize how meagre the salary of a minister must be; how little he will be able to lay aside for old age and how necessary it is to have something with which to live when he is no longer in active service.

I believe that this plan is the best yet devised for such a help to the aged or infirm minister. Charlotte, N. C.

THERE ARE NO TRAFFIC JAMS IN CHURCH AISLES

The safest thoroughfare in the world is a church aisle. No red or any other kind of lights to halt traffic, and no white lines or detours. You can make a right or left-hand turn at any pew. It is a one-way street before the service starts and again when it is over.

In the quiet meditative worship, there are no horns or other annoying noises. Instead there is sweet music much more comforting than jazz jumbles.

The short address, appropriate to the season, giving spiritual comfort, is by a man who understands what he is talking about.

These are some of the attractions along the safest street in the world. If we are not using it as often as we should, now is the time to commence. Remember, there is every kind of safety there. All we must do is to go and get it. The supply is so large that it is never exhausted. We must have it and there is no use denying the fact.

This quiet, safe thoroughfare is a paradise for travelers. In automobiling through life we should always drive toward the other fellow the way we want him to drive towards us. Another application of the Golden Rule.

The church aisle is a one-way street going in the right direction. It is paved with duty and the destination is happiness.

What highway will we use next Sunday? The straight and narrow made comfortable with carpet, or the crowded cement that goes everywhere.

Thank you.

NORTH CAROLINA SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES

The Synod proposes to raise $76,995 for our Eight Schools and Colleges during the coming year. They need every cent of it to measure up to the standards they are required to meet in order to keep in good standing in the Association of Colleges. The Churches of North Carolina fell short of their obligations to our Schools and Colleges last year. They raised only $33,560 which was distributed among the following institutions:

Glade Valley, Elise High School, Peace Institute, Mitchell College, Davidson College, Queens College, Flora Macdonald College.

Next year the money received will be divided among the schools as follows:

Glade Valley, 6 per cent; Elise High School, 6 per cent; Peace Institute, 11 per cent; Junior College for Men at Maxton, 11 per cent; Mitchell College, 11 per cent; Davidson College, 18 1-3 per cent; Queens College, 18 1-3 per cent; Flora Macdonald 18 1-3 per cent.

The Christmas That Ran Away

FRANCES HARMER

Fred and Polly were twins. They usually had very good times, but it seemed to them just now that they were having more fun than ever before. It was the day before Christmas day. And the Christmas day, when it came, would be the eighth one they had seen—so you can guess very close to their ages, you see.

"Sister says we may go with her and brother to take the Christmas trees to the stay-in-beds," said Polly to Fred. "If we wrap up warm."

"It isn't very cold," answered Fred. He did not like to wrap up. Still, he put on all he thought they wanted him to, because he liked going out with sister and brother.

The automobile was waiting for them. In the front were two Christmas trees and in the back there were two more. Sister belonged to a Band that took care of the stay-in-beds, and they had all of them been very busy dressing these little firs which brother and his Band had cut in a wood five miles away.

Oh, they were pretty now, those tiny trees! They had tinsel, silver and gold, on some of the branches, and a little doll with a star on her head, at the very top of each. There were balls and tops, colored pencils, red candles in tin sticks. There were apples and oranges, bags of nuts and bags of candies, and strings of pink popcorn.

"In with you," said brother, and in they climbed.

"Each of you nurse a tree. I'm nursing two," sister called back to them. And they did.

They went to one poor house where lived a little boy who could not walk with a crutch yet. Some day, the doctor said, he would. The Band saw to it that he had a Christmas tree, and gave it to his mother to hide till that evening. Then they made the auto say "Honk! Honk!" and went on to where a girl of fifteen was getting better from a long illness. She was to have a tree, and Polly told Fred that she had seen sister put a little box of handkerchiefs on her tree!

"The next is for the cobbler," said Fred, who knew some things himself, and liked to say them before Polly could tell him. "He's not a little boy. He's an old man, but he likes a tree."

They gave the tree to the cobbler's wife.

"Sister put a packet of tea on that one," Polly whispered. "It is for Mrs. Cobbler!"

The biggest tree of all was for the stay-in-beds's in the Children's Hospital.

The last one of all, a very little one, was for two little children who had no father. They were not stay-in-beds, but they had to be stay-in-the-yards, for their mother went out to work.

Brother jumped out and took the tree from Polly's lap. Then he heard a dreadful growling the other side of the car. He put the tree down and ran around to see. Two dogs were fighting over one bone. Brother caught hold of one and sister of the other. Two or three children came up and looked on. But the minute sister and brother let go the dogs began to fight again.

"If you could get another bone for the dog that hasn't any," called out Fred, and a boy did that, and the dogs left off fighting.

"Now for home," said brother, jumping to his wheel.

"But we didn't take the tree to the stay-in-the-yards," cried sister.

"Yes, we did," argued brother, "there isn't any tree here."

That was true. But Fred, glad of the chance, jumped out.

"It stood just here," he cried. "See. It must have run away along the street. You can see the trail."

Polly got out, too. "Some one dragged it," said sister.

"And little someone's toes," she added. "You can their footmarks."

"Oh, poor little things," sister went down on one knee in the snow. "Look!

These are toemarks! Some one has been walking in the snow without any shoes;"

They all followed the tracks—the one long trail made by the tub that had been dragged. The shoeless footmarks on one side and the bootprints on the other.

"It's like being an Indian," whispered Fred to Polly.

The "trail" ended round a corner, up a lane. It was lost in a tiny yard, in front of a tiny, two-room shack. A boy—with shoes—and another, without, and a little girl whose feet they couldn't see because she sat up on a chair, were all staring at—the tree!

"It looks as if had run away," Fred said to Polly. "And stopped here, because it wanted to."

Fred thought this, perhaps, because of the great gladness on the face of the children who were looking at the tree. They were all thin, and their clothes were thin, too.

"An angel brought it," she said, "and it's our t'ee now."

"She can't talk plain," whispered Polly to Fred.

"When we didn't 'ook," went on the little girl, "it tame!"

It was evident that she quite believed what she said. Her large blue eyes shone with joy. But the boys knew better. They looked from side to side as if they wanted to run away.

"Don't you talk about angels," brother spoke very sternly. "Where did you find that tree?"

On the sidewalk," said the boy huskily, "the kids didn't have no tree, and—I took it."

"You help me take it back where it belongs," brother commanded. "Quick!"

The boys obeyed at once, both of them. But the little girl set up a pitiful wail.

"Don't take away my C'istmas t'ee," she cried. "An angel dave it to me."

Polly pulled sister's sleeve.

"I'm so sorry for her," she said. "I want her to have it."

"Yes, sister," pleaded Fred. "I'll give the money in my box to buy another for the stay-in-the-yards."

"Not a bit of it. These boys must learn to be honest, and give back what isn't theirs," brother told them.

So a sad little party went back by way of the trail. The two boys dragging the tree, and Polly and Fred and sister, all unhappy, because the cries of the little girl came after them.

"I wish it had run away, and not left any trail," said Fred to Polly.

"It couldn't, with no wings," said Polly, sadly.

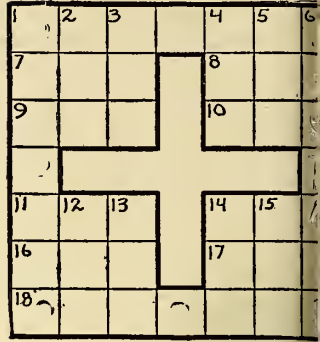

They put the tree back in the automobile and drove on to the home of the stay-in-the-yards, and left it there. The mother was at home today.

"I'll call the Band together," said sister, "if you can get us another tree."

YELLOW - haired Susie May was talking about Santa Claus to BROWN-haired Teddy.

"I do wish he would come and sit down on the couch by the Christmas tree and let us climb on his knees and tell him how very much we do enjoy all the pretty things he brings. He would be dressed all in RED with White ermine fur trimmings on his cap and suit. And he would have a big YELLOW buckle on his belt and big YELLOW buttons on his coat. I would sit on one knee with my dolly. The new dolly with the pale-BLUE bonnet and coat to match. Her hair is YELLOW like mine and her shoes are YELLOW, too."

"Well," said Teddy, "Then I would climb up on his other knee and play him a tune of my fine YELLOW trumpet, and Santa would like that I am sure.

"I will wear my PINK (use RED lightly) silk dress and socks and slippers to match, so Santa will see me all pretty and neat," said Susie May.

"I shall wear my light-YELLOW suit with a white collar and a big RED tie and I shall wear my new BROWN shoes and light-YELLOW socks. Oh, Christmas is Dear!

BY ANNIE HAMILTON DONNELL

Of course it all started from the Christmas wreath. Queer, too, when it was such a cheap, little affair, and the ribbon tied round it was so cottony, if you looked closely. But there, why deride a thing that made such a splendid doorway a Christmas at the House of Codgers? But I've gone and begun in the wrong place, anyway; I'll start with Basil Whitcomb; I will begin with the House of Lodgers. He sat in his small room tonight, and pitied himself. Didn't, you see, seen the wreath on the front-door pane of glass. Not yet. Couldn't be so bad if all the rest of the world wasn't feeling so Christmas-gloomy thoughts ran. This year, if a fellow went out on the street, he'd run smack into Christmas! It wouldn't get out of its way. Parents bringing great bundles of Christmas-tidings looking important over their holiday shoppings—babies full of it! No place—no place at all, the world was for loneliness tonight; and Basil Whitcomb was lonely.

For that matter Mrs. Cutter's room of Lodgers was no place, either. A quaint three stories of lodging-house, its gaunt basement into which the rooms emptied twice, three times a day. Santa Claus himself would close the door on the tubercular good cheer in any one of the rooms. Surely in this little hall of the House of Codgers. Basil called it the House of Codgers. Eccentric, they were, and old.

"Maybe I'm eccentric myself—and goodness knows I feel old enough tonight!" At twenty-one. A big husky, strong as an ox—but no one to care that he was husky and strong. What he needed tonight was some one to care. He had a sudden wild notion of going down the hall and knocking at the door of the one little old female—"codger." What if he did?

"Scare her stiff!" sighed Basil. "And what would I say to her after I got in? 'Good evening, madam, I am lonesome; couldn't you comfort me?'" He laughed at the silliness of it, and the laugh worked a small wonder—he felt better! Oh, well! he'd go outside and try it again. Better luck this time. What say he got Mrs. Cutter a Christmas present? A plump chicken—or flowers? Feed her soul (had Mrs. Cutter a soul?) or feed her—codgers!

"I'd come in on the chicken!" laughed he. He tossed up, Flowers won. He'd have got 'em, anyhow.

At the front door he saw it. They saw it together, he and the girl. She was coming in as he was going out.

"Oh!" She stopped short, and put up a little shabby glove to touch the bit of Christmas. "Oh! doesn't it make you want to—kiss it?" There was no one else; she must be talking to him, concluded the outgoer.

"Er—kiss it, did you say?"

"Yes, right on its poor darling ribbon bow—for being there. Doing its darling best to chirp us up."

"Oh!" Now it was his turn to say it. "Do—do you feel the need of being—er—chirped, too?"

"Of course. Who wouldn't in a boarding-house at Christmas time? And a spandy strange boarding-house, too; I only moved in this morning. I suppose you are one of the old inhabitants."

"One of the old ones. Very old, all of us."

She laughed a little absently, as though she saw the joke of his being very old, but could not spend too much time over it. She was still fingering gently the absurd little wreath—suddenly she kissed it. "There, I feel better!" She laughed softly. "It needed kissing, and I needed to kiss it; we both feel better! I'm thankful I'm moving into a house that knows it's Christmas week. But I am blocking the door—you want to go out."

"Oh, no! I don't. I don't want to do a living thing. Codgers should not have holidays; it's a mistake. They should keep right on going—teaching, if they had to teach empty seats. I'm a teacher and—"

"Oh, wait! I've got to interrupt. Codgers, you said? I don't think I ever—ever met a codger."

He swept her a low bow. "Allow me," he said politely. Then he sobered. "Beg your pardon—and Mrs. Cutter's pardon. Lodgers, of course, I meant. They should never take holidays."

"Well, I should, and I'm one! Catch me skipping Christmas!" and with a distinct frown of displeasure the young person swept past him and up Mrs. Cutter's shabby stairs. Well, it was good to see somebody alive enough to frown. Basil plunged his hands into his coat pockets, and stepped out into the nipping Christmas world. With nowhere to go he went there remarkably fast, insomuch that he came near to running the child down. Enter: The Child. There has—hasn't there?—to be a child in a Christmas story.

"Look out, here's me!" piped a thin voice down low.

Basil brought up hastily, peering below.

"I'm doin' my Chris'mus shoppin'. I mean I was till you most scrunched me—you're bad as an automobile, ain't you?" The Child, peering up to the top of six feet three, giggled friendly.

A CHRISTMAS THAT RAN AWAY

 "and we'll help," cried Polly and together.
 "He was too busy to go five miles to another tree, but he and his Band one. Everybody helped to dress it. Father and mother gave a pair of not-very-old shoes for the boy who any, and some sugar and rice and oat!
 "As getting dusk when they started in with their one tree. The little was quite dark, and very quiet! "perhaps they've gone away!" cried "And they wont have their tree!" when brother knocked at the door and the two boys and the little girl inside. Only they had no light and no fire. The biggest boy said he had been trying to get work all the afternoon but no one wanted him because of the holes in his coat. While they were talking the mother came in, very tired, from a hard day at scrubbing. The little girl began to tell her about a tree that had come and then gone.

"I'm sorry, boys, you did that. You know that no one would have lost a tree," she said, when brother and sister had explained.

"Now," Polly told the little girl, "shut your eyes."

While she held them tight shut brother brought in the tree. Polly could have laughed and cried both to see her joy. She almost danced round it. Then brother sent the elder boy for a bag of coal and the younger one for a bag of wood. And sister and he left Fred and Polly to enjoy the little girl's delight while they went to the grocer's for milk and potatoes and bacon and eggs and flour.

When at last they had given all their gifts and the fire was going cheerily, and the little boy was wearing the shoes, and the kettle was boiling for tea, the young people came away. But Fred and Polly stood up in the automobile and leaned out for the last sight of the little girl, starting with clasped hands at the Christmas tree.

"I'm glad that tree was lost this morning," said Fred.

"Yes," agreed Polly, "or we would never have seen the little girl and given her a tree for her very own."—Presbyterian Banner.

A CHRISTMAS MISTAKE

Dimple and Teddy Bear looked out of the playroom window upon the roof of the porch. "I don't see any reindeer tracks anywhere," said Dimple to Teddy Bear. "And I was 'most sure I would. 'Cause Santa Claus was here. He brought my snowshoes and sled and dollie and books and dishes and you, Teddy Bear. It was funny that you should be marked, 'Merry Christmas to Elsie.' 'Cause, Elsie is my real-true name. But Santa Claus has always said, 'Dimple,' like every one else. Why, Teddy Bear, what's that?"

Teddy Bear looked 'way, 'way down to the ground. There were some queer-rounded tracks with little lines running criss-cross over them.

"Snowshoe tracks," cried Dimple. "Could Santa Claus have come on snowshoes? Let's go see, Teddy Bear."

Dimple and Teddy Bear put in their sweaters and caps and Dimple strapped on her new little snowshoes, and away they went toward town, following as well as they could the big tracks in the snow. The tracks turned off into the fields and kept just back of the house.

By and by Dimple and Teddy Bear came to the tiniest house with the tiniest box of a porch. It was all painted red. It had green shutters. Over the porch trailed a bittersweet vine. There were red and yellow berries still on it.

"Teddy Bear," said Dimple, slowly. "I'm 'most sure this is Santa Claus' own house. It's all red and green like a Christmas house and it's trimmed with real berries."

The snowshoe tracks didn't stop at the house. But Dimple and Teddy Bear did. Dimple took off her snowshoes. Then she and Teddy Bear climbed the steps to the little porch, went under the bright berries, and knocked softly.

Clump, clump, clump, sounded from within. Then a little girl on two crutches opened the door. She had the sweetest little face, with fluffy yellow hair and great gray eyes. As soon as Dimple saw her, all her dimples came out.

"Oh," she cried, "are you Santa's little girl?"

"No," said the little lame girl. She looked wonderingly at Dimple in her red cap and sweater and at Teddy Bear in his red cap and sweater.

"Doesn't he live here?"

"He didn't even stop here," cried the little lame girl, sadly. Then Dimple saw that in spite of the shine in her eyes there had been tears in them not so very long ago.

"Oh, dear," she said, and stopped short —it seemed such a dreadful thing that Santa had forgotten.

"I'm Elsie Lane," said the little girl. "I live all alone with my grandmother. Won't you come in, please?"

For a long, long minute Dimple didn't answer. She was thinking—thinking—thinking. At last she held out Teddy Bear.

"Santa Claus just made a mistake," she said. "He meant Teddy Bear for you—he was marked 'for Elsie' just as plain. Elsie's my name, too. But there were so many other things for me. I know Santa meant him for you. He couldn't forget anybody."

If you could have seen the little lame girl's eyes as she held Teddy Bear in her arms. And if you could have seen Dimple's dimples when she told mother all about it.

"I don't wonder Santa Claus makes mistakes sometimes, do you, mother?" she said. "He has so much to do and there are so many little girls who have the same names. But I am so glad I found out about it in time.—Alice E. Allen in Sunday School Times.

The giggle merged into a peal of laughter. "Well, now you can help carry my shoppin's!"

There were no visible bundles. Merely a tiny creature beside whose shabbiness Mrs. Cutter's was elegance. Basil had never at close range beheld shabbier shabbiness. Yet the Child's laugh was warmly and richly clothed.

"You look cold—frozen!" Basil exclaimed.

"Me? Course. I am. But I've had a splendorous time shoppin'! Come, an' I'll show you the thin's I got; the store's right close to." And Basil Whitcomb, six feet three, found himself being urged, actually propelled, along the walk, by this tiny creature of inches, mere inches. He was twitched to a stop before the gay Christmas window of a great toy-shop.

"I got that—an' that—an' that," pointing eagerly with a scrap of blue finger. "An', my gracious, all o' them! The doll's for me, but the rest's for the chil'ren. Except Gran-mother—the play tea-sets' for her, 'cause she says she never played in her life, an' she ain't got much time left. I guess you don't wonder I'm tired out shoppin'! An' luggin'; my arms are terrible wore out with such a many bundles!" The effect of the small empty arms was astonishingly of an overload! Basil blinked downward, scarcely knowing whether to laugh or cry. The Child decided him.

"Not my flesh'n'bloody arms of course. I mean the arms o' my soul; they ache, luggin'. It's my soul has been shoppin', you see. You can buy an' thing with your soul!" Again the peel of mirth. Was not a man to cry in the face of that? Surely, if he was a man. The uncanny agedness of this mite took his breath away—a mere mite talking of souls!

The shrill voice went steadily on; "I guess that's the kin' o' shoppin' you're a-doin' for Chris'mus, too!" uncanny mirth. "I don't see any feel pack'ges in your arms, neither; we're funny persons, ain't we, me an' you? But prob'ly you are all out o' money to your house, same as us to ours. ain't it fierce?"

"All out of money?" He found his voice in foolish repetition.

THE WATER TEST

At the Anderson Quarries, owned by the Winnsboro Granite Corporation in Fairfield County, South Carolina, and at the office at Rion, S. C., three water tests are made to grade stone. If the stone is flawless, of straight grain, no white or black streaks or splotches, no wave in the grain, it is graded as Winnsboro Granite, and sells at a higher price than ordinary granite. If any of these defects appear when water is thrown over the stone, it is not Winnsboro Granite, but it graded "Smith stock," and sold at a lower price.

Buyers of Winnsboro Granite should specify Winnsboro Granite in their purchase contracts, ask for quarry certificate, and also made the water test. Defects show up plainly when the stone is wet with water if there are any defects in the block. Dry stone does not show up defects so readily. Therefore, when buying Winnsboro Granite, wet the stone and see for yourself that you get certificate from the quarry through your dealer, to the effect that the stone used in your monument is Winnsboro Granite. With that certificate and with the water test, you can be sure that you have the best monumental material known to the world.

It costs a little more, but only 20 per cent of monument cost is for material, so that the higher price of Winnsboro Granite means very little in the increase of the price of the monument; but it means a great deal in the satisfaction of knowing that it is the best monument possible—the most permanent, the most beautiful, flawless.

Write for free booklet showing attractive monumental designs. Winnsboro Granite Corporation, Rion, S. C.

"Every bit spang out," cheerfully. "My gran'mother says if we have any Chris'mus tree this year, it'll have to come to the front door an' knock to be let in—a miracle tree, she said. Well," gurgled the impossible mite, "I bet we'll let it in! 'Come in!' we'll yell!"

The odd pair—mite and mighty—had turned away now from the toy-shop window, and were drifting with the Christmas stream. Basil Whitcomb found it ridiculously embarrassing to get rid of the Child. And the Child was evidently not ready to be dismissed. Presently she capped her uncanniness by a fresh demand, wheedling it in her little thin, starved voice. "Mister, say, play me home with all o' these pack'ges—please! Make be'lieve I'm pilin' your arms up an' my arms are piled! Make b'lieve we can hardly carry so many of 'em! (Don't drop that tea-set box an' smash it!) Please, mister, it will be fun."

Actually he found himself a few minutes later pretending to puff with the exertion of "lugging"—the Child told him to puff! She was puffing, too. They were deep in the uncanny play. He—Basil Whitcomb! Basil Whitcomb puffing, laughing—making believe!

Before a rather terrible little shack of a house the Child paused. "This is it. Pile 'em all up on the door-step, mister. Two piles, yours an' mine! No, we never dropped a thing, did we? I guess we're pretty good luggers!"

"Then what?" asked Basil curiously. He discovered now that the Child was no longer a militant little creature whose amazing gift for pretence made one forget her plainness and utter shabbiness. She was plain and shabby enough now.

"Oh—oh, it's over," blankly. "They ain't any pack'ges piled up. I jus' looked in that shop-winder, an' never shopped a mite. I guess me an' you was sillies, pretendin'—I—I guess so. But," with amazing resilience of spirits, "didn't we have a dandy time?" And then she was gone, and Basil Whitcomb might have been dreaming that a mite had crossed his path and made a fool of him. He turned and strode back to the Home of Codgers and Mrs. Cutter. Queer how the taste in his mind—the uncanny Child would have called it his "soul"—was so blanded of unappetizing and delightful ingredients. Call it an adventure, if you like; he was not certain whether he had enjoyed it, or hadn't.

He would go forth no more into the Christmas streets; no place for lonelies. Here he would sit and wait drearily for Mrs. Cutter's dinner-bell. He had forgotten the girl who had kissed the Christmas wreath; he had forgotten the wreath. The Child persisted in his mind, but chiefly as the agent of his foolishness; hence he felt inclined to resent the Child. A man hated to be made a fool of.

At dinner in the drab little dining-room he rediscovered the Girl. She sat opposite him, the one bright spot in the room. She nodded across the ancient caster to him, and went on chattering and smiling to the old creatures on either side of her. Seemed to like the old creatures! Basil shrugged his shoulders.

Later the Girl waylaid him going up to his room for the usual lonely evening with his books. The Girl was pleasantly excited over something, and any one that can get excited, pleasantly or otherwise, in Mrs. Cutter's House of Codgers deserves a moment of a man's time! Basil laughed and listened.

"Aren't they dears?" meaning the—er—codgers? No, certainly not meaning the codgers—hold on, though. "I loved the one on my right and the one on my left! Both of 'em are dears, and no reason why all the rest aren't dears, too."

"Er—no reason," echoed Basil lamely enough. Queer things to get excited about.

"And do you know what?"

"N-no, what?"

"I decided right there, eating my dinner, to hang their nice old stockings up! Isn't that exciting? And I said to myself, 'That young "codger" across the table can help me.' That is, unless he's an old codger inside, and I'm not so sure—"

"How can I help you?" hurried the young codger precipitately. At which the Girl laughed delightedly up to the top of him, so many inches above her.

"I thought that would bring you! On their door-knobs outside, you know; we'll hang 'em there after they've gone to bed. And I need you to tell me which door-knobs—I mustn't hang a poor Lady Codger a new pipe or a poor old man a lace pocket-handkerchief, must I?" She rippled into soft mirth. "Though, of course, the pipe mightn't be so bad. No, you are not to help any way except door-knobs. I shall go out right away and buy the things myself. My blessed little nuisances at school clubbed together, and gave me a ten-dollar gold piece for Christmas; so you see I'm in funds—listen, please; why not those 'lace' stockings at the Five-and-dime store, full of sillies, but with one truly est present in each, sticking out top?"

"Er—fine, fine," returned Basil absently, for a thought had been that minute. He was getting excited himself! He revolved it hurriedly, then took his turn at play.

"Look! If I help you, will you help me? I've thought of something going to 'hang up' a—a tree. Christmas tree—no, not here, not with stockings. Say, can't I go shopping with you, and I'll explain on the way run up for my overcoat."

On the way they chattered excitedly the Girl's cheeks pink and lovely Young Codger's—Lodger's—eyes mated and good to look at. Basil Whitcomb was no longer a lonely.

"Isn't Christmas lovely?" chattered the Girl.

THE very idea of consecration implies unsullied purity, -- freedom from all uncleanness and defilement. "Bet your li— oh, I beg your pardon!"

"Don't beg it. Keep right on betting your life! I bet mine!" It was growing easier and easier to laugh, for them both. At the Five-and-Ten they shopped gayly, selecting funny "lace" stockings full of sillies, and laughing over the sillies.

"It's going to be a miracle tree." Basil explained his plan between shoppings. "Going right up to the front door and knock! And it will be your tree, too, because if you hadn't taken me into your plan, I—I'm afraid so."

The Girl stood still in the bumping, hilarious Christmas crowd.

"May I see it walk up to the door?" she demanded breathlessly. "Will you help hang my stockings? Let's have it a—a community Christmas!"

"Let's go!"

From then on the shopping grew intenser, crowded into shorter and shorter space of time. The Girl, it seemed, knew all about what miracle trees should hold.

"A 'gran'mother' too, you say? Oh, I'm glad there is a grandmother! I had one once—" She began again presently. "Not grandmotherly things—please. Something grandmothers always wanted, but never had; that they think there isn't any time left now to have—"

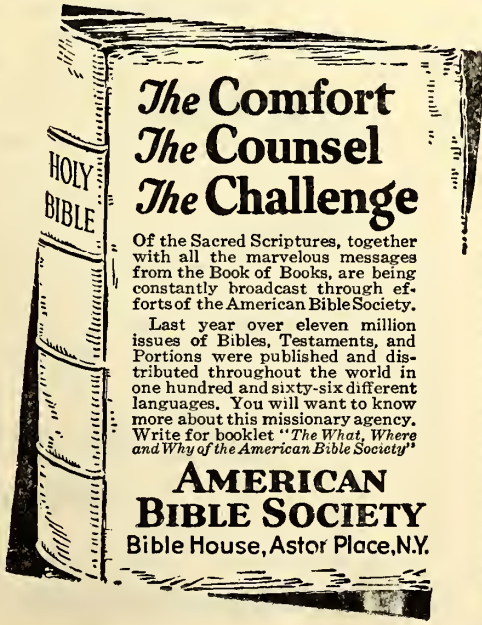

"Tea-sets?" Basil asked, remembering the Child. "To play with—if she never had a chance to play? I don't think this one ever did." He was smiling to himself whimsically; the shabby, uncanny Child was beside him again, shopping to feed her soul.

"Preserved ginger!" startled the Girl. She nodded her head as if she had said something worth while. "I don't believe she ever had any, and mine loved it! Let me—let me preserve ginger, yours—please! It 'belongs,' somehow, back when she was young; you get her something else. Oh, we sha'n't have any trouble getting that Child things! I wish I could have soul-shopped with her."

It was decided to tie a box of tree-candles to the tree in plain sight, all ready to distribute indoors, where candles belong. But back in Mrs. Cutter's "reception-room" they distributed the gay-colored ornaments and tinsel themselves. Mrs. Cutter helped, her hairied face smoothed into lines of delight. "Meet the Child!" Basil had introduced her, embellishing with the tale of window-shopping. "This is to be a miracle tree, Mrs. Cutter, and walk up to the door to be let in!"

LIGHT THE OLD MINISTER'S CHRISTMAS CANDLE

"At Evening Time It Shall Be Light"

The world seems cold and dark tonight
Where should be warmth and light for all,
So near comes winging the hallowed time

Of Christmas eve.
And he is old;
Is old and laid aside.
"At evening time" — O little Christ Child,
"It shall be light!"—Be near him now,
Nor let him be afraid,
He who is old.

Christmas eve—he too, feeble, sick and old,
Would light a candle, as little children do,
And set it in his wondow here
To welcome Thee
On Thy birth night,
If passing Thou should'st see.
O little Christ Child, look Thou tonight
Within his heart,
And find Thou there the candle flame
He lights for Thee.

Would you light the Old Ministers' Christmas Candle for him and cheer his saddened heart? Then send a Christmas gift at once to John Stites, Treasurer.

Where There's a WILL There's a WAY!

You Make the WILL:

The Presbyterian Foundation Will Make the WAY

One big difficulty we face in the Southern Presbyterian Church is this fact that our people are not making Wills. Wherever there is a Will there should be a way made possible for the continuation of your ideals after you have completed your mortal existence. There is such a thing as immortal money! It ought to be a disgrace for a Presbyterian to die without having made in his last Will and Testament some provision for the institutions of the Church.

The following institutions ask you to use the Presbyterian Foundation as medium for helping them by direct gifts, life insurance, annuity bonds or through the provision of your last Will and Testament:

Who would have thought she had ever been anything else? Basil was suddenly a little ashamed of himself for his thoughts up to now concerning Mrs. Cutter. And, by the same token, concerning the poor old codgers. If this clear-eyed Girl had never crossed his path, would he have gone right on being a—a self-centered idiot? He was conscious of a wave of tenderness when next he looked at the busy little figure working side by side with the drab landlady. How short a time he had known the Girl! yet—he broke the thought in two hastily. "But I shall finish thinking it sometime," Basil Whitcomb said to himself with quiet firmness. It gave life a new and happy twist to tuck away in his heart a beautiful thought like that, even unfinished as it was. His eyes lightened suddenly, and the whimsical lines around his lips that made Basil Whitcomb's face a pleasant sight appeared now. The beautiful thought might have to wait for completion until he knew the name of the Girl! Which suggested—

"Basil Whitcomb," he pronounced without preface.

And that blessed Girl understood. She swept a little courtesy.

"Mary Louise Emerson—alias Molly Lou," she smiled. "Now that's done; we're introduced. Mrs. Cutter is our witness. Are you sure you can carry this tree—Basil Whitcomb? Everything's tied on very firmly—"

"See me do it," promptly. "Are we to leave the —er—hosiery till we get back, then?" eyebrows lifted toward their landlady; she was not to know of the—hosiery. Wasn't she part of the plan of the Girl?

"We are"; and, as Mrs. Cutter conveniently left the room at this juncture, she continued in decided terms: "I shall get the stockings all ready in my room; then we'll meet in the hall and creep to all the door-knobs, sh! Won't it be fun?"

So was the little miracle tree fun. Everything worked beautifully. There was a belated light in the scrap of a house which ensured some one's coming to the dor when the little tree went up and "knocked." They arranged it carefully, and stood back to get the effect.

"It's darling!" breathed the Girl. "Now knock—I'm holding my breath!"

Basil found himself holding his. No, he was not to wait—just linger at a little distance long enough to see the door opened.

But his heart jumped happily when he heard the cry of the child. Thin and high and joyous; he had never known a child's voice could hold such joy.

"Oh! Gran'mother!"

"Come—come! Don't look at me, Basil Whitcomb; I'm a sight when I cry." But he looked, and put the tender little vision away with the tender thought, to wait.

It was fun making the round of the door-knobs. It was odd how much noise their excited whispers didn't make, the Girl said! No one heard. They had the drab, narrow lodging-halls quite to themselves.

"Listen," whispered Mary Louise. "Promise you will never call them codgers again."

"I stopped hours ago."

"And you will think they are dears."

"I will think they are dears." His eyes were on her vivid little face.

"Then I'm happy. Oh, yes; and tired, too; but it's nice to be tired Christmas eve. Say just one more thing, Basil Whitcomb,—if you believe it, not unless. Say, 'Christmas is dear.'"

"Christmas is dear," he said, and there was no doubt of his "believing." No doubt of the earnestness in his voice and in his gentled face.

"Oh, it is!" cried Molly Lou. "It began, dear, hundreds of years ago! It began," breathed she softly, "with a little baby Christ."

In the House of Lodgers silence settled like a quiet benediction. The world was silent now as if to hold its breath in awe of that first Christmas eve when the Child of the world was born. — C. E. World.

MINISTERS' ANNUITY FUND

HISTORY

Each General Assembly since 1924 has endorsed the Ministers' Annuity Fund.

For three years the Assembly has called upon the Church to set aside the year 1930 as a time to raise the $3,000,000 accrued liability fund.

1. In 1929 the Assembly directed all of its agencies to co-operate in the establishment of the Fund and urged every minister and missionary and church to enter into it.
2. All the Synods of the Church have approved the Fund.
3. Almost all of the Home Mission Agencies of Presbyteries and Synods have already taken action to put their missionaries into the Fund.
4. Eighty-eight of ninety-two Presbyteries have already approved the Fund and urged ministers and churches to enter in.
5. More than eighty per cent of the ministers and missionaries have declared their intention to join if their churches decide to come in.
6. Already a large number of joint boards of elders and deacons have taken favorable action and in many instances the same has been approved by a congregational meeting.
7. Committees are now being established in every Synod, Presbytery and local church to direct the campaign in 1930.

The Present Situation

Joint meetings of Elders and Deacons are being held.

Resolutions are being adopted for ratification by the congregation agreeing to enter the plan and to present the $3,000,000 fund to the individual members.

During the year 1930 the members of the Presbyterian family will be successfully approached by scores of agencies—some of which are very remotely related to the Kingdom of God—why should we not let them have a chance to do this needed thing for their own?

Committees are being appointed to inform the men and women of the plan and to assist in conducting the campaign.

The Immediate Future

The task just ahead is one of education. Every Presbyterian should understand something of the purpose, method and spirit of the Ministers' Annuity Fund, which will enable the Church to do what it has unsuccessfully tried to do since 1717. We will gladly send literature to any member.

In each church, where action has not yet been taken, a joint meeting of elders and deacons should be held. If not yet ready to act, a committee to study the Plan should be appointed and their names sent to the Louisville office.

The whole Church will be divided into several districts, the first including the Northeastern section of the Church. Representatives of the General Assembly's Committee will assist the representatives of Synods and Presbyteries in putting on the campaign.

Every effort should be made to have each section ready for these workers at the time set for the active campaign. In this way enormous amounts of time and energy and money can be saved to the Church.

We invite suggestions and offer every assistance within our power.
