FOREWORD

Clarence Victor Cannon is president of the Jesse Rountree Association. In his home at Ayden, N. C., on February 2, 1947, he led me to the discovery of the manuscript records of the Rountree church clerk, Allen Blount, dated 1827 to 1840. These had been passed along to Mr. Cannon in a small tin box, from his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Robert C. Cannon, and from his grandparents, the Caleb Cannons. The document is a priceless historical treasure. It gives insight into the congregational administration at the beginning of what evidently is the oldest church now functioning among North Carolina Disciples of Christ. I mean by "oldest", that she was the first in North Carolina to start and maintain without break the primal evolutionary trend to the Disciples. These clerical minutes, with other key documents, make valid that point. They substantiate the above characterization of Rountree.

As printed, this is a true, unexpurgated version of the Rountree minutes; that is, as true as our human frailties permit. I am indebted to Mrs. Ware, and magnifying glass, for the deciphering of the faded, antique chirography. Her skill growing out of her experience, as well as her intuition, was used word by word on the original. The result is of special value for accuracy and thoroughness.

Moreover, I am especially indebted to the Wake Forest College Library, and particularly to Mrs. E. T. Crittenden of the staff there, for use of their precious file of Neuse Association Minutes dated 1794 to 1842. This file was of prime value to this study. It is of great rarity, and was unknown to me prior to 1933.

This little book is merely a documentary story of primitive Tar Heel Disciples, particularly as their life unfolded at Rountree. Certainly for comprehensive reading about North Carolina Disciples, one must turn to other books. And their many-sided story in perfect fullness has "never yet been told." For instance, I have yet to find two gorgeously rare pamphlets; the Little Sister pamphlet of 1832 jointly issued by Canfield, Dunn, and Congleton, and the General Clark pamphlet of 1833. Maybe I shall never see them. Very well. It is good for me to reach even when I cannot grasp. Albeit, one cannot make the press wait until the last pin-point of light breaks upon any given subject. If he does there will be no printed line.

It is our fortune to have a great brotherhood. Like a mansion it is filled with treasure, new and old. From this saga of old Rountree may the indulgent reader find some access of joy and light.

CHARLES CROSSFIELD WARE.

THE DAWN

Rountree is definitely the mother church of North Carolina Disciples of Christ. It may appear that Tar Heel Disciples arose simultaneously at several sources. However, the emerging faith appeared first in its concreteness at this Pitt county church, four miles west of the present Ayden. There it was stabilized and crystallized; this pioneer church remaining as the sole survivor of the earliest crusading group after a hundred and twenty years of unbroken activity. When Rountree began in April 1827, their Covenant specified no denominational commitment; albeit it was implicitly Baptist. Four months after organization they seriously considered uniting with the Neuse Association which enrolled most of their nearest Baptist neighbors. Not until September 25th, 1830, more than three years after organization did they officially join the Neuse, according to the Rountree records.

Allen Blount, Rountree clerk, throughout his records, said "Lords Day"—never the "Sabbath". The only Rountree pastor he calls "beloved" is General William Clark (1832-'33), who, associated with John Patrick Dunn and Abraham Congleton, decisively turned this congregation to the Christian Church, (Disciples of Christ), which was then originating spontaneously on a wide front in America. Naming a few instances: under Chester Bullard in Virginia; John Smith and the Creaths in Kentucky; Walter Scott in Ohio; Benjamin Franklin Hall in Alabama and Arkansas; and John Wright, native Tar Heel, in southern Indiana. Earlier leaders of the "Christians" were Barton Stone, Abner Jones, and James O'Kelly.

It is contended by not a few that Alexander Campbell was the head and front of it all. It is, however, historically accurate to say that without the spontaneous promotion of the men named above and a host of others reaching like original conclusions, the Campbell effort would have failed. Campbell was indeed a glamorous person, an indefatigible leader. Thus he was a shining mark for many hostile critics. So the Disciples were profanely called "Campbellites", or, more profanely, "Campbellite Baptists." Thomas Meredith, through his Baptist journal at Edenton, first gave general currency to the name "Campbellites" in North Carolina. In October, 1833, he led in expelling Clark, the "Campbellite" pastor at Rountree, from the Neuse Association. At the next Association meeting, October, 1834, his influence was again felt in expelling Rountree church itself from that Association. As the Neuse clerk reported it: "The churches at Grindall Creek, Rountrees, and Little Sister having united with a convention of another order, we therefore agreed to withdraw from those churches."

Here are the first steps of Disciple history in North Carolina. Some Rountree members went out in August, 1828, to found a branch of Rountree, named Little Sister. It was in Lenoir county, about seven miles north of Kinston, known to-day as the Airy Grove community. John Patrick Dunn, his brother, Walter, and Arthur Tull were the leaders at Little Sister. These and William Clark soon found that the reform principles of the Disciples had so spread as to necessitate some formal, systematic fellowship for maintenance and growth. Thus the first of all such meetings was called at Little Sister in February, 1831, resulting in an association of kindred minds later to be called the Union Meeting of Disciples of Christ. At the first, there were enlisted only the five churches: Rountree, Little Sister, and Grindle Creek from the Neuse, and Old Ford and Tranter's Creek from the Kehukee Association. For this action Old Ford and Tranter's Creek were dropped from the Kehukee in 1833, and the first three were put out of the Neuse the following year.

In the summer of 1832, Clark had turned against Calvinistic tenets of the Kehukee faith and had come to a firm conviction, holding it throughout the remainder of his life, that the article in the Baptist Creed affirming that the Bible is the only rule of faith and practice for the Christian, should be interpreted simply and with dynamic sincerity, to be put into all-out practice. Accordingly he flamed with this in his pulpit at Grindle Creek, his home church. It stood on the western fringe of the village of Pactolus. Being a true and beloved shepherd, his flock immediately followed. Clark was soon to write of the “proscription and persecution” heaped upon him by conservative religionists in their repercussion to this epic reform. He saw formulated creeds as divisive, inadequate, temporizing, unnecessary. Passion for Christian Union had flowered in his soul. He yearned for the coming of the ecumenical church.

As the next obvious step, Clark carried his reformatory resolution, thus auspiciously approved by his home church, to such sister churches as were amenable to his approach. It came to Rountree, August 25, 1832. The church went into deliberate consultation. This was an issue to be wisely met, and peacefully, if such could be their fortune. It was opposed by Noah Tyson. He was intransigent. He lived at Red Banks, but was a Rountree member, preaching there often. He withstood Clark and Dunn and Congleton, threatening to go from Rountree if this “Campbellism” was put over on him. He dallied, but finally carried out his threat in June 1833. He saw then that Rountree was unshakenly identified with the Reformers. Rountree adopted the proposed reform principles on October 5, 1832. Technically and officially from that date it should be listed with the new ecumenical movement known as the Disciples of Christ. Tyson had been chagrinned at the origin of the Disciples' Union Meeting at Little Sister in February, 1831. In the following June he had so embarrassed Abraham Congleton by this opposition, as to induce Congleton to resign his Rountree pastorate. However, his stated ministry was soon resumed, at the insistence of the local church. This was inevitable, as Rountree had given generous support to the Little Sister Conference, sending there the largest delegation toward insuring its initial success.

In the fall of 1832 came the annual meeting of the Neuse, at Southwest church in Lenoir county, a few miles south from Kinston, across the river. Clark attended and preached from Rom. 1:16. There the issue with the Disciples was controverted. It was a critical time for the Association. The Calvinistic doctrine of election to which conservative leaders clung was a bone of contention. Clark's group was revolting at the hidebound predestinarian system. And Little Sister was the heart of the revolt. She was a problem for conventional rigidity. The Meredith group hoping to resolve the intensifying threat, for a season, deferred the issue for a year. Yet for sake of consistency, as they conceived it, they threw down the gauntlet to Disciples, adopting a redrafted creed of fifteen articles. The ninth article was "gall and wormwood" to the Little Sister group. It began: "That the doctrine of election is contained in the Scriptures and that it is our duty to believe it upon the authority of Him who has revealed it." As interpreted, this was the Calvinism of the "salvation by grace alone," "special provision" Baptists. Clark had forsaken this doctrine in the Kehukee, and had openly repudiated it. He, and Dunn, and Congleton had joined, heart and soul, with the "free salvation" principles of the "general provision" Baptists. The Neuse leaders at Southwest seeking reconciliation had "labored" with Little Sister. Presuming that all was well, the Neuse minutes of 1832 stated that Little Sister had "acceded" to this redrafted creed, as published. The three delegates from Little Sister, Dunn, Congleton, and Orlando Canfield, categorically denied this in a pamphlet jointly issued by them. This foreordained their exclusion at the next Neuse Meeting.

In due course Rountree's pastor, Clark, along with Dunn and Congleton, were branded as heretics at the Fort Barnwell meeting of the Neuse, October 20, 1833. Thus their Neuse fellowship was at a determined end. The decree was autocratic, spirited, and final, allowing for no representation of the minority group. A high light was the heresy—hunting sermon of Meredith from Mt. 12:30 —"He that is not with me is against me; and he that gath-ereth not with me, scattereth". And the thesis of their circular letter, was "the final pereseverance of the saints".

Moreover, at old Hancocks, ten miles south of Greenville, in the Neuse meeting of 1834, the axe fell on the three anti-Calvinist churches. Rountree, Grindle Creek, and Little Sister by the familiar decree went off the roll. Henceforth they were to go their lonely, persecuted way. This loneliness and persecution is revealed between the lines in the original Rountree church records as published herewith. Rountree's naive clerk must have never dreamed that the twentieth century would look at the printing of his "short and simple" annals. Even so, paradoxically, he is urbane. Not a line of resentment or vindictiveness is expressed for all the storm-tossed years. Nevertheless, a painstaking reader, sympathetic and informed, sees at once the poignancy of the pioneers' "straight and narrow way". Groping for light, their deep convictions had come to them. Rountree was ahead of her day. For this she must pay the price—"The blood of martyrs is the seed of the church." One reflects that but for this sacrifice and struggle against heavy odds, their cause must have perished—just for the want of inspiration which comes only with heroic bearing of the cross.

Times depressed. Rountree's candle burned very low. Indeed it was all but snuffed out in 1838, as the little old yellowed manuscript plainly shows. Little Sister fared worse. In May, 1839, she gave up and came back to original ground at Rountree. There the fellowship remained until January 21, 1843. Then from this "seed-bed of the Reformation", the Little Sister growth was transplanted to Kinston. There the roots struck very deeply into the soil. Like the "mustard" of Luke 13:19, it became a great tree. Verily the Kinston Disciples, building one of the skyline churches of their world fellowship, trace their Nineteenth Century genesis to this primal Rountree on the Little Contentnea.

And there is the story of the Bethel Conference. North Carolina was typically American as she climaxd the Disciple pioneer development. Throughout the States where the movement was securely established there was spontaneous union of like-minded groups. These were first fruits of their plea for Christian Union. The Bethel Conference was an old and relatively large group in eastern North Carolina. It was the cumulative function of those who believed in "general provision," and resisted absorption by the Calvanistic, or Regular Baptists, who had imported their strongest available leaders to preempt the field into which the "general" preachers had been the first to enter. The Philadelphia creed triumphed mightily in North Carolina, but the Bethel Conference was one significant escaping segment, which gravitated to union with Disciples on May 2, 1845 at Hookerton. The area name retained, 1845-1853, for this union, was "The Bethel Conference and Union Meeting of Disciples of Christ." A mass movement toward Disciples openly began in the Bethel Conference in 1841. But this was nine years later than the creed-crushing crusade of the Rountree group.

Now since several of these Bethel Conference Churches were older than Rountree, how can it be said that Rountree has historical primacy? It is a fact that Wheat Swamp can trace her life back through great shadows to 1752. Her tributary Free Will Baptist connection is very long. In the same bracket, Concord, in Pamlico county started in 1802. Among the Kehukee Baptists, Tranters Creek began in 1804, and Old Ford, 1828. Within the Neuse, Mill Creek church, Johnston county, was on the charter roll in 1794, with delegates Nathaniel Thornton and William Farmer. Surely this is a very old church. But she left the Neuse in 1806, for the Raleigh Association, and by the 1840's she was in the Bethel Conference.

Once again, where is Rountree's primacy? The answer is that in none of the other churches named was the concrete trend toward Disciples agitated as early as 1832. Grindle Creek is unknown to Disciples after Clark's removal to Jackson, Mississippi in 1835, and Little Sister was early received back into the bosom of Rountree.
Other churches, however, were in time to receive favorably the movement which gathered strength with the years. Rountree distinctly took a consistent course from the incipiency. Bethel Conference churches had their own established fellowship and suffered no persecution as of record. The opposition seems to have spent its main strength against the aggressive Rountree pioneers who spear-headed the Christian Union movement. Beyond doubt these very pioneers had cumulative decisive influence in the Bethel Conference. There they reaped a marvelous harvest among a homogeneous people who for the most part, were docile and amiable, and marked by open minds and pure hearts.

When the union with Bethel Conference was effected in 1845, the Disciples could bring immediately into it, only three churches: Rountree, Chinquapin Chapel, and Kinston, with a combined membership of 131, while the Bethel group aggregated 1728 members in 27 churches. But soon thereafter the Disciples contributed to the union: Oak Grove, Greene County, (1846); Old Ford, (1846); Oak Grove, Pitt county, (1848); Tranters Creek, (1851); and Tyson’s (1851). These last five churches brought gain of 363 members, which added to the original 131, made approximately 500 members, or a fifth of the united church in this area, as of 1851. Rountree gave the most successful evangelist in John Patrick Dunn. Leading an early revival at Oak Grove, Greene County, Dunn reported 90 baptisms, and at Tysons Meeting House, 123 baptisms.

The day-star had arisen for the Disciples in Carolina. Blessed by increasing light they could go forward unto the perfect day.

NEUSE REGISTER

The following tables give official information on the churches of the Neuse Association, for the years 1832 and 1834. The compiler for both tables, I. M. Allen, was an agent of the Baptist General Tract Society. For 1832, it appears in "The United States Baptist Annual Register", published at Philadelphia, Pa., 1833. The table for 1834, is given in "The Triennial Baptist Register", No. 2, 1836, published also at Philadelphia. As contemporaneous Baptist compilations they give authentic details on Rountree and associated churches of this formative period, quite relevant to other documents published here-with.

MISSIONARY TREASURE

Posterity of the Tar Heels' Union Meeting of Disciples of Christ should be conscious of a worthy heritage from the Neuse Association. They ought to be deeply grateful. It has enriched their development. It breathed vitality into their body. It supplied Christian objectives essential to the losing of their life in order to the spiritual saving of it.

This heritage is the Neuse attitude to Christian missions, as forthrightly opposed to the anit-missionism of the Kehukee. General William Clark was Clerk of Kehukee Association, October 6-8, 1827, when they went on record to "discard all Missionary Societies, Bible Societies, and Theological Seminaries, and the practices heretofore resorted to for their support, in begging money from the public." Clark was of the minority that had to go along for a time with this backward-looking block. Clark was assistant clerk in 1828, when he brought his home church, Grindle Creek, "newly constituted" into the Kehukee. But on October 3-5, 1829, when the Kehukee next gathered, it was too much for Clark. He preached on the Great Commission, Mk. 16:15; and then served on a committee to restate their anti-missions declaration of two years before, in the light of the great opposition stirred up by it in sister associations. It profoundly disturbed his soul. He was overborne by Joshua Lawrence and William Hyman, the two others serving on the committee.

This report of 1829 which clearly and irrevocably divided the Baptists was as follows:

First. We will not hold in our churches any member who is in the practice of visiting the Masonic Lodges, or who on any occasion conforms to their custom of parades; nor will we countenance any such individual who may reside or come among us in the character of a preacher.

Secondly. We will not countenance any preacher who travels within the bounds of this Association, establishing societies for the collection of money, or who may himself be collecting money to support any institution whatever. We do not attempt to circumscribe the liberty of conscience: every person has a right to think and draw their own conclusions. We do not attempt to restrain the liberty of any man: he may give his money when and to whom he pleases. We do not object to the spread of the Bible by all fair and honorable means; but pray for its extension by means which God may bless and own. We do not object to the support of the ministry on the gospel plan, but earnestly recommend it to the direct and immediate attention of all the deacons in this Association; whose business God has made it to see to this matter as well as all the monied concerns of the Christian community. We do not object to the general diffusion of intelligence and literature in the Baptist community, but wish its extension. But we do object to the education of men to the ministry by establishing seminaries for that purpose; believing that preaching would thereby become a lucrative employment like the law physic, etc. If any minister, although he may be a missionary without the bounds of our Association, comes among us to preach the gospel and not to make collections, we do not reject him."

Clark was through with the Kehukee. He disappeared from their records. In 1849, by virtue of his prominence as a Disciple, he was elected a vice-president in the American Christian Missionary Society, at its organization in Cincinnati, O. Clark's congregation, Grindle Creek, was officially dropped from the Kehukee in 1833, but she had, with her preacher, already joined the Neuse the year before. The Kehukee anti-missionism had been embodied in the fourteenth article of their creed. Another reason for Clark's final attitude against creeds. He explained this in his pamphlet: "Clark's Defense and Justification to the Kehuky Association", appearing in 1833. Cushing Biggs Hassell, answering for the Kehukee, in another pamphlet said that Clark had written "desultory remarks." Hassell therefore offered Clark a "Primer in which" it was hoped he might "learn the first principles of the Christian religion."

Meeting two weeks after the Kehukee, in 1829, the Neuse went to bat and scored for missions. They said:

"Whereas the Kehukee Association hath declared a non-fellowship with Bible Societies, Tract Societies, Missionary Societies, and Theological Seminaries, and those who encourage them: we feel it necessary to hesitate, to question, to examine;—and are constrained to think it our duty to God, to ourselves, and to posterity to suspend our correspondence with that body; praying that God may overrule and influence us in all truth and restore us to a happy correspondence on Christian and Bible principles."

Two years later the Neuse reaffirmed their stand, elucidating it through their Committee on Grievances, declaring: "That the hostility arrayed against these institutions originates not from the meek and humble spirit of the Christian, solicitous for the salvation of men, but from ignorance and prejudice. The Association deems it the privilege of each of its members to aid and assist such institutions, and of this privilege no one can be denied."

Meanwhile, to implement this cooperative missionary spirit, and eventually to expand it vastly, the Baptist State Convention had been organized at Greenville, (March 26, 1830), in a church in good standing on the Neuse roll.

In 1849, John Patrick dunn, early Rountree pastor, and now an outstanding Carolina Disciple leader, proposed at their annual meeting: "Resolved, that the time has arrived in the providence of God, when it becomes the duty of Christians in connection with this Conference to arouse themselves to the blessed work of extending the knowledge of the Gospel of the Son of God among the heathen Nations."

Thus Tar Heel Disciples have a precious birthright in cooperative missions. They will not dissipate it for a mess of pottage. Historically considered, they are normally a cooperative missionary people. Reaction among them against this principle is not only a perversion of their best tradition, but it is surely a fighting against God—His eternal, outreaching love for all mankind.

LETTERS OF THOMAS CAMPBELL

The following letters were first published in “Memoirs of Elder Thomas Campbell”, by his son Alexander Campbell in 1861. This book is now rare. Most collections of Discipliana have it, but it is found in very few general libraries. It appears to be unknown to the average reader of Disciple lore. Therefore we present these letters herewith, abridged, but retaining all that is pertinent to Thomas Campbell’s visit to North Carolina. The text of any other correspondence he may have had during his North Carolina visit is unknown to us.

Illustrious Alexander Campbell never came to North Carolina except to pass through by the best available means of transportation. However, Thomas Campbell, his father, came for a six month’s visit, remaining from November 1833, to May 1834. He was introduced first at Edenton, by B. F. Hall, later travelling to Tarboro, Greenville, Hookerton and Pantego. He was at Edenton, on November 13th, 1833, when the “stars fell”—the greatest meteoric display in Nineteenth Century America. The “Campbell Record” published herewith showing that he preached at Rountree on February 22, 1834, is the only documentary proof, so far brought to light, of his preaching in any particular church in North Carolina, now in the Disciple connection. We have only some well-founded guesses as to his preaching elsewhere. Certainly we know that he preached in the Edenton Baptist Church, but his friends there, whom Thomas Meredith called “Campbellite Reformers” were quite frustrated eventually by circumstances beyond their control.

He reveals that he attended a quarterly meeting of that earliest of all Tar Heel Disciple organizations, the Union Meeting, at Little Sister on March 28-30, 1834. His fellowship there must have reached its climax within the state. There he was indeed among his own people.

It must be remembered that in 1834, Thomas Campbell was 71 years of age. His melancholy in these letters must not be taken too seriously. He had been in America twenty-seven years. However at best, here in the far south, he sorely missed his beloved family. In his loneliness he lost sight of the great fundamental good he was doing, among a long-settled people, whose reactions were not so fluid as those on the frontier.

The letters follow.

LETTER I

Greenville, N. C., Feb. 17th, 1834

Dorothea Bryant:

My Beloved Daughter: I at length address you a few lines from North Carolina, in which State I have sojourned one hundred days, preaching occasionally, as I had opportunity, to small audiences, till I arrived here on last Friday. In the mean time, and ever since I left home, I have been highly favored with good health, and, blessed be God, with much spiritual comfort. I think and hope I have learned some deep practical lessons, since I have been so far separated from my own dear family and all my intimate friends and brethren.

Yes, thanks be to God; like John, I have had my Patmos recesses, by which I am exempted from the attachments of a known world. I have been thrown back upon myself, having no conscious friend to look to, in whose ears or bosom I might repose my cares, but that ever-present, ever-conscious Guardian, Proctector, Friend, of whom it is written: "Cast all your cares on Him, for He careth for you". Sweet necessity! that shuts us out, and shuts us up, to Him alone. I walk out alone and solitary to the fields and groves to indulge meditation, and continue in holy aspirations, in looks, sighs, and tears, with my everywhere and ever-present Father.

Thus conversing with my heavenly Father, about any part or portion of his mighty works of creation, legislation, or reconciliation, according to the above arrangement of the triple class of attributes, especially appertaining to and manifested in creation, providence, and redemption, I feel consoled, refreshed and delighted, and only at a loss for the presence of some kindred mind to whom I could communicate and with whom I could reciprocate my feelings; and being deprived of this privilege, I return again to my chamber or the fireside whence I set out.

Thus you have, in brief, the history of my course since my arrival in this State; except that I have occasionally been reading and writing in defense of the reformation as opportunity offered.

I am at present stopping in the family of a worthy brother, as I understand, General William Clark; who is from home at present. He is a preacher of the ancient Gospel. There are also two others, Messrs. Congleton and Dunn, with whom I expect to co-operate, in the great cause of primitive Christianity, on the return of Brother Clark, who is expected shortly.

I think ere long to hear from all my dear children. May the Lord bless them. I wish, my dear Dora, you would be as efficient as possible, not only in thus cultivating the minds of your own children but also in exciting your sisters and your nieces to the due performance of this all-important duty. Duty did I say? Nay, privilege of the highest order—heaven upon earth.

Farewell, beloved daughter. Comfort your dear mother. May the Lord bless your family. Yours,—Thomas Campbell

LETTER II

March 7th, 1834

Mrs. Jane Campbell:

Dearly Beloved Wife—I would address you with gratitude and thanksgiving to our heavenly Father, our gracious Creator, who gave us to each other, and under whose benign and gracious auspices we have so long co-existed, the highly-favored subjects of great and manifold favors.

I have great reason to bless God for good general health, and the enjoyment of the personal and social comforts of life among kind, benevolent people. Surely, “The lot has fallen to us in pleasant places. The Lord has given us a goodly heritage.” He has called us to labor for the promotion of pure heaven-born Christianity, and has graciously blessed us with the enjoyment of the fruit of our labors; the society of those who professedly receive, love and esteem it; so that we are constantly in the center and society of Christian friends, of kind and sympathizing brethren; you, my dear, among your kind, affectionate, believing children, and I among brethren and sisters, of a nearer and dearer affinity than flesh and blood. How great our privileges! Blessed be the Lord God! And there are greater still before us, where you and I and they shall meet to part no more; and even now separate in body, not in mind.

This, my beloved, is the true state of the case, both with respect to present privilege and future prospect. Therefore, let us bless God and take courage. A few more months, I humbly hope, will bring us again together in health, that we may once more console ourselves with the rehearsals of the Divine goodness, and rejoice together with our dear children. I may almost say that I commenced by labors in this State about the beginning of February, three months after my arrival. This may appear strange; but so it has happened through uncontrollable circumstances. I have been very much engaged since my arrival in this part of the State, and have the prospect of being so during my continuance here; but how long this may be, will depend upon my prospect of utility.

Religion here appears to be at a very low ebb, both with regard to its exhibition and effects. We anticipate a meeting of the few friends of reform—I mean the preachers—on the last Lord’s day of this month, and the two preceding days, not far from this place, for the purpose of concert concerning our future proceedings; after which, if spared, I shall shortly write you our conclusions. In the mean time, my dear, let us indulge hope in the Divine goodness, and pray continually for one another, and for the success of the blessed cause in which we are engaged. I mean both you and I, for without your consent I had not been here; wherefore, you are share and share alike with me in the fruit and reward of my labors, as the Lord may please to accept and prosper.

Farewell, my dearly beloved wife and sister. With much love to all our beloved children and to all theirs. In the bessed hope of the Gospel,

Your ever affectionate husband,
Thomas Campbell

LETTER III

Pantego, April 9th, 1834

Mrs. Jane Campbell:

My Dear Wife—I am sorry to learn, through Son Ewing, that you had not received my last when he wrote. It was dated March 11th, Hookerton. I expect my next to you will be from Richmond, if spared, about the first of May. How long I shall continue my labors there, before I leave for home, I cannot now say. It will be just as the Lord pleases; for, as Christians, whether we live, we live to the Lord, or whether we die, we die to the Lord.

This entire complacency and submission, however, does not prevent our ardent desire for each other's society and presence, but only reconciles us to the privation for the present—hoping that our gracious Lord will make it a blessing to many, and will yet bless us together more abundantly. I never had my mind so much disciplined, in any given period of my life, as since I came to this place. It has been to me a kind of exile, as was Patmos to the beloved apostle. It seems to me as though I have been among a kind of people different from any with whom I have been formerly acquainted. My circumstances have also been very peculiar. I am now about to leave the State, without having found a strong attachment but to a very few. I was most hospitably entertained by some friends in Edenton. I spent near three months in the family of Elder Thomas Whaff.

Feeling refreshed with the rest of the past night, and the renewed mercies of the morning, I resume the pleasing task of writing to you. Though so far distant, (say nine hundred miles,) yet you have been the ideal companion of my morning walk. Yea, morning, noon and night, you are present to me, or rather I am with you. In the frequented spots in which we were used to walk and talk together in P. Hill, in Bethany, etc., etc., I am looking at you, and communing with you of precious things to come. . . . . .

I wish you, my dear, to inculcate on all our children, as you have opportunity, that the great business of time is to prepare for eternity, by abounding in the work of faith, the labor of love, and the patience or perseverance of hope in our Lord Jesus Christ; that they may be enabled to teach their children according to Deut., 5th and 11th chapters; for, Alas! this important duty is greatly neglected in our day, by the great majority of professed Christians, of all denominations, in our highly-favored country.

Farewell, beloved wife. May the good Lord bless and keep us, and grant us a happy meeting ere long.

I remain, most sincerely and affectionately, your husband till death, —Thomas Campbell
CHAPTER 6

FOUNDER’S FOUR GENERATIONS

Jesse Rountree, son of Jesse and Rachel Spivey Rountree, was born in Ireland, June 27, 1765, and died at his home near Rountree Crossroads, Pitt County, N. C., April 12, 1831. In January, 1782, he married Winnifred Jenkins of Bertie County, N. C. She was born April 11, 1765, and died December 14, 1840.

Jesse Rountree was a soldier of the American Revolution, serving as a private in the company of Captain Evans of the Tenth N. C. Continentals. Settling in Pitt County, he served as Sheriff 1818-1820. He led in establishing the Rountree Church in April, 1827, and his name is given as her first representative that year in the Neuse records.

As appears in our compilation below, Jesse and Winnifred Rountree were blessed with eight children, fifty-two grand-children, and one-hundred and fifty-six great-grand children. Mrs. Sarah Penelope Brown Short Moore, (Mrs. James L. Moore) who lived near Greenville, N. C. was a granddaughter of Jesse Rountree, being the daughter of his youngest child. About thirty five years ago Mrs. Moore published a pamphlet of thirty two pages entitled: “Family Record: Brown Family, Rountree Family.” Students of Rountree lore are greatly indebted to her for her labor of love. She gives many detailed facts which in time might have fallen into oblivion.

The abstract given below is based entirely upon the work of Mrs. Moore, except for a few dates added from authentic sources. It is a summary of but four generations. However, it is offered as a guide. The Jesse Rountree line is traced far enough, so that additional basic family lore, generally known, or accessible, may be used to complete the tracing for any Rountree descendant of to-day.

ROUNTREE PASTORS

The Archives of North Carolina Disciples of Christ, 1841 to 1947, are perhaps the most complete in their American brotherhood for comparable area and date. However there is no published identification, for long periods, of detailed personnel in their respective pastorates. This data, it appears, was for such periods, not considered of enough importance for publication. Hence our research has these blanks to show for our pains.

Notwithstanding this practical indifference to what might well be regarded as vital information, we are able to present the following as to Rountree pastorates for 120 years.

1827,1831—Abraham Congleton
1828-1830—Thomas D. Mason
1832-1833—General William Clark
1834-1840—John Patrick Dunn
