

more are the things that make life most joyous, most worth living, most profitable in the best sense of the word. Such are the results of the choice of Christian faith.

Conclusion:

1. Summary of points:

(1) The Scripture Book of Ezekiel makes a strong contribution of truth to mankind by pointing up that each individual is important in the sight of God and responsible to God for his own chosen acts.

(2) We have reasoned that the premise is correct that each individual can choose for himself the majority of his acts; and that even when to choose what one will do is impossible one can choose his attitude toward his life and his surroundings.

(3) We have said that in the long run each individual is the one that suffers of profits the most as a result of his choices.

2. All this adds up to the statement that each individual is so important to God that he is allowed to choose for himself his pattern of life, but he alone in the long run suffers or profits ^{most} according to his choices.
