PREFACE.

THE manuscript Journal of the old Western Conference is the property of the Ohio Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and has, for the past number of years, been deposited in the Library of Ohio Wesleyan University. The Journal of the Western Conference covers ninety-seven pages of the manuscript volume, while the latter part of the volume is given over to the Journals of the Ohio Conference from 1812 to 1826, inclusive. None of these Journals have before been published. Unfortunately Methodism has not been careful of her historical documents, and it is hoped that the appearance of this document may encourage the publication of others.

In many respects the Journal of the Western Conference is the most important historical document relating to the establishment of Methodism in the Mississippi Valley. The heart of Methodism lies in the Mississippi Valley; there live the bulk of her membership, there she has performed her greatest achievements, and there perhaps lies her most brilliant future. For these reasons, if for no others, the materials in this volume deserve publication.

Outside of the Editor, two others have shown particular interest in this book, and to them especial thanks are due. The first is Rev. Dr. W. E. Arnold, of Fort Thomas, Ky.; the second is Mr. George H. Maxwell, of Boston, whose interest in Methodist history is quite largely responsible for this publication.

CHAPTER I.

THE COMING OF THE CIRCUIT RIDER OVER THE MOUNTAINS.

1782-1800.

THE Methodist Episcopal Church dates from the Christmas Conference which met in Baltimore on December 27, 1784.¹ The American Revolution had closed and the Treaty of Paris had just been signed. John Wesley, although a consistent supporter of the British during the American war and an opponent of the rebelling colonists,² yet when the war was over was wise enough to see that it would be best for all concerned to separate the American societies from the English Conference, and accordingly sent over to America, toward the end of 1784, Dr. Thomas Coke and two other English preachers to supervise the organization of the new American Church. The events of the Christmas Conference are familiar to all Methodists. Francis Asbury, the only English Methodist preacher who had remained in America throughout the Revolution, was named by Mr. Wesley as General Superintendent for the American Church. Asbury, however, refused to accept the place solely on Mr. Wesley's appointment, but only after election by the preachers.

At the time of the organization of the Methodist Episcopal Church there were not more than 14,000 Methodists in America. The largest proportion of the membership was in the Southern States. Between 1777 and 1783 there was but one appointment north of some parts of New Jersey, while during the Revolution practically every preacher received into the ministry by the Methodists was from the South.³ Methodism as yet had made no progress in New England, though in New York, Pennsylvania, and New Jersey it had gained a foothold and there were flourishing societies especially in Philadelphia and New York.

After the close of the French and Indian War, in 1763, a few backwoodsmen, especially from Virginia and the Carolinas, began to find their way over the mountains into what is now Kentucky and Tennessee. First came the hunters, Daniel Boone and his kind, to be followed by Sevier and Robertson and their kind. By the outbreak of the Revolution a number of English settlements had sprung up on the Tennessee and the Cumberland, as well as in Western Virginia and the Carolinas. These frontiersmen took part in the War for Independence under George Rogers Clark, while their settlements, under the stress of Indian wars and dangers from frontier conditions, were largely self-governing and self-sustaining. Altogether it was a rude and shifting population, made up largely of game hunters and Indian fighters who had settled this Western region. Many of them never took permanent root in the region, but moved on westward, farther into the wilderness, and the descendants of those who fought under Clark at Vincennes or at King's Mountain "are as likely to be found in the Rockies as in the Alleghenies."

With the close of the Revolution the tide of westward

³DeVinne, "The Methodist Episcopal Church and Slavery," pages 11-13; also "Minutes of Conferences," Vol. I., for the years indicated.

immigration greatly increased. At first they came mostly into Kentucky, and those who now came were of a different character from the pre-Revolutionary pioneers. These came to find homes, and were often representative of the gentry of the seaboard. The long war had left them in straitened circumstances, and now they were looking toward this new and fertile country as a means of more easily staying their impending ruin. Such was the composition of the immigrants who within a dozen years following the close of the Revolution completely swamped the original settlers.⁴ The pre-Revolutionary pioneers had been slow to establish cultural institutions, such as schools and churches; but the new settlers brought with them their institutions, their educational and religious ideals, and it was not long after their coming until churches and schools began to spring up in the wilderness.

Both the organization and doctrine of the Methodists were well suited to the frontier. The circuit system which John Wesley devised and put into operation in England was brought to America by Asbury. When Asbury came to America he was urged to settle down in the centers of population; but he was so thoroughly saturated with Wesley's plan of organization that he would listen to no other.⁵ So Asbury himself became an itinerant preacher, as all the Methodist preachers in America in that early day. The circuit system meant that a preacher served not one community, but a whole group of communities. These circuits varied in size. In the newer countries, where settlements were much scattered and far between, they covered many square miles of territory, and the preacher occupied from four to six weeks in making the rounds of the circuit. Nor was he particular where he conducted his services; a log cabin, or the barroom of a tavern, or out under the trees—all were alike to him. He preached whenever and wherever he found any one to listen, with little regard to either time or place. Moreover, the system of lay or local preachers was one which lent itself easily to the spread of Methodism in a new country. A young man who showed any ability in public speaking was urged by the class leader and the circuit preacher to exercise his gift on every possible occasion, and when the presiding elder came around to hold the “quarterly meeting conference” the young man was recommended for an “exhorter’s” or “local preacher’s” license.⁶ He did not often travel a circuit, but he preached in his own and neighboring communities, and in many instances was instrumental in organizing new classes in frontier settlements before the regular circuit rider or presiding elder arrived upon the scene. Indeed, the first Methodist classes organized west of the mountains represented the work of these lay preachers. They were generally men of little learning, but full of earnestness and enthusiasm, and their preaching was marvelously effective.

The Methodist itinerant also preached a doctrine which made a great appeal to the frontiersman. He preached a gospel of free grace, free will, and individual responsibility. He brought home to the pioneers that they were the masters of their own destiny, as opposed to the Presbyterian and Baptist doctrine of predestination and foreordination. Methodist theology thus fitted in exactly with the new democracy rising in the West, for both emphasized actual equality among all men. On one occasion when Peter Cartwright was attending a Conference in Nashville he was chosen to preach a sermon in one of the local churches. While he was preaching General Jackson came in, whereupon one of the preachers seated behind him pulled Cartwright's coat and whispered, "General Jackson has come in." Cartwright states that he felt a wave of indignation sweep over him, then he replied in an audible voice: "Who is General Jackson? If he don't get his soul converted, God will damn him as quick as he would a Guinea negro!"⁷ This was certainly Jacksonian democracy, and typifies the attitude of the average Methodist itinerant on the frontier.

Included among the immigrants coming out from Virginia, North Carolina, and the other seaboard States were numerous local preachers of the Methodist Church. No sooner were they settled and their log cabins built than they began to gather the Methodist families together and organize them into classes.⁸ Two such local preachers were Francis Clark and John Durham, both from Virginia, who settled in Mercer County, Kentucky, in 1783. By the next year numbers of other local preachers had come into the State and were at work organizing Methodist classes.

The General Minutes for 1782 record the sending of a regular circuit preacher to the Yadkin country, and the next year both Yadkin and Holston are listed among the circuits, while in 1784 the Redstone Circuit, in the southwest corner of Pennsylvania, is added to the number. Two years later (1786) the Yadkin Circuit reported 426 white members and 11 colored, the Holston 250 white members, and the Redstone 523.⁹ In this same year the Kentucky Circuit appears, with James Haw as elder and Benjamin Ogden as circuit preacher. Methodist families had evidently come into Kentucky in considerable numbers, especially from Maryland and Virginia, for at the end of the first year 90 members are reported from this new circuit.¹⁰

As population in Kentucky, Tennessee, and along the Ohio increased, the number of circuits and circuit preachers likewise grew. The year 1786 was one of revival in these far western circuits, and among the converts was Peter Massie, the first convert in Kentucky to become a circuit rider. The Minutes for 1789 record the following circuits for this new country:¹¹ In Tennessee were the Holston, West New River, Greenbrier, and Botetourt; in Kentucky were Lexington, Danville, and Cumberland; while along the Upper Ohio were the Redstone, Pittsburgh, and Ohio Circuits. The Yadkin Circuit lay in Western North Carolina and the Holston in Western Virginia. In 1797 the membership in the Kentucky circuits was 1,740 whites and 57 colored, and in Tennessee 534 whites and 42 colored.¹²

With the close of the Indian wars and the signing of the treaty of Greenville in 1794, the southern half of Ohio and a narrow strip in what is now Southeastern Indiana were opened up to settlement. Settlers from Kentucky and Tennessee, as well as from the older States, began to move into these new grants. Many of them were members of Methodist classes in the States from which they had come, and so numerous did they come into the new country that there was an actual decrease of membership in the Kentucky and Tennessee circuits from 1797 to 1801. Of these years one of the pioneer preachers writes: "The Indian war having terminated, the people began to scatter in every direction. New settlements were formed, Ohio and Indiana began to settle rapidly; and the societies, many of them, were broken up, and we had not preachers sufficient to follow the tide of emigration to their new settlements."¹³

The first circuit to be formed in Ohio was organized in 1798 by John Kobler, who had been appointed presiding elder of the Kentucky District. He crossed the Ohio and preached in the home of one of these Kentucky Methodists who had migrated to the north side of the river. The Miami Circuit, as the new circuit was called, ran from the Ohio up the Little Miami and Mad Rivers to where Dayton now stands, thence down the Big Miami to Cincinnati. The second Ohio Circuit was the Scioto, organized in 1800 and included settlements on both sides of that river.¹⁴ The first Governor of Ohio, Edward Tiffin, was a Methodist local preacher, ordained by Bishop Asbury in 1792. He had come from Virginia to Chillicothe in 1796, and in 1799 was elected territorial representative; and when Ohio became a State, in 1803, he was chosen the first Governor. His home was always open to Methodist preaching, and likewise served as the stopping place of many a weary itinerant.¹⁵

While the Methodist circuit riders were finding their way into the Ohio Valley and founding circuits along the banks of its tributaries, other preachers, equally zealous, were penetrating into the great Southwest. Tobias Gib-

In 1797 there were 1,740 white and 57 colored members reported for Kentucky, while in 1799 the membership had decreased to 1,672 white, though there was a gain of eight colored members. The Tennessee membership for these years showed little change, though it was less in 1799 than in 1797 by nearly a hundred. ("Minutes of Conferences," Vol. I., pages 74, 86.)

son was appointed Missionary to the Southwest in 1798. Starting from the Cumberland settlements, he traveled on horseback some four or five hundred miles; then, trading his horse for a canoe, he paddled to all the Southwest settlements, preaching wherever he found hearers, finally making his way back to the Conferences in Northern Tennessee in 1802.¹⁶ This vast circuit received the name of Natchez and in 1799 reported 60 members.

The administration of the Church in this vast new territory was under the management of Bishop Francis Asbury and the presiding elders whom he appointed. Nor was he an absentee supervisor, directing the work from a comfortable seat east of the mountains. Between 1788 and 1800 at least eighteen Conferences were held west of the mountains.¹⁷ The first of these was in May, 1788, at a place in East Tennessee called Half-Acres. Master-son's Station, in North-Central Kentucky, was a favorite place to hold Conference during these early years, for here the preachers met in 1790, 1791, 1792, 1793, 1795, and 1796; in 1794 a Conference met at Lewis's Chapel, near Master-son's Station, while at Bethel Academy, in Kentucky, Conferences were held in 1797, 1799, and 1800.

Bishop Asbury was in attendance upon a number of these far Western Conferences, and as the earlier ones were held during the progress of the Indian wars, several times the bishop was escorted over the mountains by a guard of the Western preachers armed for the purpose. The first Conference to be held west of the mountains was conducted by Bishop Asbury in East Tennessee, at a place called Half-Acres.¹⁸ Asbury states in his Journal that the Conference sat three days and he preached each day. The Bishop came into Tennessee by way of Virginia, and followed the valley of the Holston to the seat of the Conference. He found the people in disorder over "the new and old State." At this time the people of Eastern Tennessee were in rebellion against North Carolina. North Carolina had ceded her western lands to the United States in 1784, but to the manner of this cession the Watauga settlements objected. Previous to this North Carolina had neglected the western settlements within her territory, and had left them without government; and now, when she proceeded to cede them to the United States, the people of the western settlements objected, and proceeded to organize a State of their own, calling it the State of Franklin. On this action by the people of the new settlements, North Carolina rescinded her cession and proceeded to subdue the rebellious westerners. The State of Franklin ceased to exist in February, 1788, though conflicts between the old and new State parties continued until the autumn of that year, when Sevier, the Governor of the new State, was arrested and imprisoned on the charge of treason.

In 1790 Bishop Asbury was once more in Tennessee, having crossed over from North Carolina. He speaks in his Journal of swimming the horses across the Watauga and of dangers from the Indians. He found the "poor preachers indifferently clad, with emaciated bodies." In May of this same year, after returning to the East, he crossed again from Virginia to Kentucky, accompanied to the foot of the mountains by two Kentucky preachers, Peter Massie and John Clark. Later their company was joined by eight others, and their number finally reached sixteen men and thirteen guns. Passing into Kentucky, they crossed the Kentucky River, going "over mountains, steep hills, deep rivers, and muddy creeks, and thick growth of reeds for miles together." He saw the graves of the slain, twenty-four in one camp. He held conference at Masterson's, "a very comfortable house and kind people." Here plans were laid for the establishment of Bethel Academy, which was the first Methodist institution of learning West of the mountains, and $300 was obtained in subscriptions. On his trip to Kentucky in 1792 the Bishop heard "so much about Indians, Convention, Treaty, killing, and scalping,"¹⁹ that his attention was drawn away from the affairs of the infant Church in the wilderness; and after much alarm concerning depredations committed by the Indians, he finally returned to Virginia with a company of "thirty-six good travelers, and a few warriors." Eighteen such trips over the mountains were made by Bishop Asbury between 1788 and the time of his death, 1816.

In 1792 the first serious schism in the Methodist Episcopal Church took place, headed by James O'Kelly, a prominent preacher East of the mountains, who objected to Asbury's supreme appointing power.²⁰ Those who withdrew with O'Kelly called themselves Republican Methodists, and a number of adherents were won in Kentucky and Tennessee. Most of them, however, finally united with the sect known as the New Lights; and the Republican Methodists, as a separate organization, went out of existence, in spite of the fact that the name Republican was popular in the West. Most of the Methodists in the Western country were Jeffersonian Democrats in their politics, as were also many of the Methodists in other States.²¹

Beginning in 1797, a great revival swept over the Western country, which profoundly stirred whole communities and affected every Protestant sect. It began in Kentucky, on the Cumberland, under the influence of a Presbyterian minister, James McGready. It was under the influence of these meetings that the camp meeting originated, which became thereafter a Methodist institution that was employed with great effectiveness on the frontier, though the Methodists did not themselves originate it. The revival continued for eight years, and through its influence the membership in the Western circuits was more than doubled and the number of local and traveling preachers was greatly increased.²² Indeed, it was largely through the influence of this revival that preaching was begun north of the Ohio in what is now Ohio and Indiana.

During these early years the Western circuits and districts were more or less indefinite in their boundaries and their organization loose. From year to year they underwent considerable change, both as to boundaries and names, and the Conferences were irregularly held. The Conference held in the West in 1788 was called the Holston, while the two Conferences held in 1790 were known as the Holston and the Kentucky. In 1791, besides the two Conferences already noted, a third, called the Greenbrier, was held. The Western Conferences of 1793 are the Nashville, Kentucky, Greenbrier, and New Territory; while in 1794, besides the New Territory and Kentucky Conferences, one is held at Mitchell's. After 1795 the Western Conference is generally called either the Holston or the Kentucky Conference.²³

By 1800, the year of the organization of the Western Conference, there were 2,307 white members in Kentucky and Tennessee and 177 colored. Of this number, 1,626 white members were in Kentucky and 681 were in Tennessee, while of the colored members 115 were in Kentucky and 62 in Tennessee. In the Northwest Territory there were three circuits, the Miami, the Scioto, and the Muskingum and Hockhocking, with a white membership of 364 and 2 colored; while along the Mississippi to the south of Tennessee was the Natchez Circuit, which reported in that year 81 white members.

In the years following the Revolutionary War, 1783 to 1800, the Methodist Church had successfully followed the immigrants across the mountains to their new homes in the West. Indeed, no other Church was so well suited to minister to the wants of these immigrants. "It alone was so organized as to be able to follow step by step this movable population, and to carry the gospel even to the most distant cabin. It alone could be present whenever a grave was opened, or an infant was found in its cradle."²⁴ The other sects moved westward toward the Mississippi as fast as any number of their adherents formed part of the emigration thither, but Methodism alone exercised a weighty influence upon the mixed crowd. And it is from this class, the great unchurched crowd, that the Methodist Church in the West was to draw the largest proportion of its membership.

CHAPTER II.

THE WESTERN CONFERENCE.

1800-1811.

THIS chapter is to deal with the progress of the Methodist Church in the West during the first twelve years of the nineteenth century, which is the period covered by the life of the Western Conference. The name "Western Conference" did not come into use until toward the close of the eighteenth century, and the General Minutes continue to designate the Western circuits as the Kentucky District as late as 1800. By the beginning of the new century Methodist circuits had been established in Kentucky, Tennessee, Ohio, and along the Mississippi in what is now the State of Mississippi. These circuits were included in one district, presided over by William McKendree. McKendree was a Virginian and had begun to preach in his native State in 1788. For twelve years he traveled circuits east of the mountains; but in 1800 Bishops Asbury and Whatcoat, passing through Virginia on their way to the West, took McKendree along with them, and at the Conference of 1800 he was made presiding elder of all the Western circuits.¹ No better choice could have been made for a frontier presiding elder, and for eight successive years he is the major general of the frontier Church.

By the next year, 1801, the number of Western circuits had increased from 9 to 13 and a new district, the Holston, was formed, with John Watson as presiding elder. In 1802 there are seventeen circuits and three districts, the third district being the Cumberland. In 1804 a fourth district was added, which was formed of the Ohio circuits, now grown to five.² It was in this year also that Benjamin Young was sent as a missionary to Illinois. It may have been that Benjamin Young was sent upon this mission as a matter of discipline, for he is charged in the Conference of that year, "of having said that he composed a certain song, when in truth he did not; that he had the misfortain to fet his horse's thye broke, when it was not so; and that he baptized contrary to the order of the M. E. Church." He was admitted into the Conference and ordained elder only "after a plain talke, and hopeful promises."³ Whatever may have been the reason for sending Benjamin Young as a missionary to Illinois, the fact remains that, in spite of many difficulties, he succeeded in forming five classes among the Illinois settlements and at the end of the year reported sixty-seven members. He was received very coldly, however, among the Kaskaskia settlements, and at Kaskaskia was compelled to pay high rent for the hall in which he preached; and to increase his difficulties, the Kickapoo Indians made away with his horse.⁴

Previous, however, to the coming of Benjamin Young to Illinois, Methodism had been introduced into the country by Methodist laymen. Capt. Joseph Ogle seems to have been the first Methodist in the State, having come to the Illinois country in 1785. In 1793 Joseph Lillard, a local preacher, visited Illinois and gathered a few scattered Methodists into a class and appointed Ogle class

³MS. Journal of the Western Annual Conference, 1803. At the Conference of 1804 Benjamin Young was expelled from the Church. William McKendree, who presided at that Conference in the absence of Bishop Asbury, was responsible for the expulsion. It is probable that Young's misconduct was more in the nature of imprudences rather than immoral conduct. (Leaton, "Methodism in Illinois," page 35.)

leader. Five years later John Clarke, who had been a traveling preacher in South Carolina, visited Illinois and crossed over into Missouri and was very probably the first Protestant minister to preach West of the Mississippi. The same year that Clarke visited Illinois, a local preacher, named Hosea Rigg, from Western Pennsylvania, settled in St. Clair County, Illinois, reorganized the class formerly led by Ogle, and also established a second class in what is now Madison County.⁵

While Benjamin Young was at work in the Illinois country among the scattered settlements along the Mississippi, circuit riders from Kentucky and Ohio were finding their way into Indiana. By the year 1800 the white population in what is now Indiana was nearly 3,000. Vincennes, the old French settlement, and vicinity had 1,538, while Clark's Grant, a tract of land granted to George Rogers Clark by Congress, and situated on the north bank of the Ohio, contained 919.⁶ Most of the English settlers had come from Kentucky, Tennessee, Virginia, and North Carolina. Some of them had been Methodists in the older States, though there were Baptists, Presbyterians, and Quakers among them.⁷ The first reliable record of Methodist preaching in Indiana was in 1801, at a settlement located in Clark's Grant. Two local preachers, Samuel Parker and Edward Talbott, crossed the Ohio and conducted a two days' meeting in the new territory.⁸ It was William McKendree, the presiding elder, however, who established the first official Methodist class in Indiana. In the summer of 1802 he was taken across the Ohio in a canoe and two classes were formed, one at Charlestown, the present county seat of Clark County, and the other near by at a place then called New Chapple.⁹

Following these earliest classes came Benjamin Lakin in 1803, then traveling the Salt River Circuit in Kentucky, and he added the two new Indiana classes to his Kentucky circuit. At the session of the Western Conference in 1805 Peter Cartwright, who had been admitted into the Conference in 1804, was appointed junior preacher on the Salt River and Shelby Circuit. In his autobiography he states: "Brother Benjamin Lakin and myself crossed the Ohio River and preached at Brother Robertson's and Prather's. In this grant we had two classes and splendid revivals of religion."¹⁰

Into the narrow strip of territory, in the southeast corner of the present State of Indiana, which had been opened up to settlement by the treaty of Greenville (1794) following General Wayne's campaign against the Indians, had come by 1805 a considerable population. The valley of the Whitewater River was particularly well settled. Here in 1805 were two settlements, one a little south of the present city of Richmond, called the Kentucky settlement, because most of the families had come from Kentucky; the other, above the present town of Brookville, was called the Carolina settlement, because most of the families had come from South Carolina. In the latter settlement were several Methodist families, and these drew up a petition to John Sale, then the presiding elder of the Ohio District, asking that a regular traveling preacher be sent them. In response to this petition, in March, 1806, John Sale sent Joseph Oglesby to form a new circuit west of the Great Miami.

Fortunately we have from Oglesby himself a description of the formation of this new circuit,¹¹ which became known as the Whitewater. The circuit began at the present town of Hamilton, Ohio, and at the cabin of Moses Crume the first sermon was preached. The next stop was the cabin of a family by the name of Gray. After opening several preaching places in Western Ohio, the young circuit rider struck General Wayne's old road from Hamilton to Fort Wayne, which, he says, "seemed still fresh and plain." From this road he came upon an Indian trail which led him into Indiana, and finally to the Kentucky settlement on the Whitewater. Here he preached at the cabin of a Mr. Cox and formed a class. The society was small, because most of the people of this settlement were Baptists. Turning southward and following the Whitewater, he established other preaching places along that stream, finally arriving at Lawrenceburg, the county town of Dearborn County, which had been founded in 1802. From Lawrenceburg he started up the Miami, preaching at cabins on both sides of the river until he arrived at the place of beginning. This route was traveled by Oglesby every four weeks until the next meeting of the Western Conference, in September, 1806.

Following Oglesby on the Whitewater Circuit came Thomas Hellums and Sela Paine as circuit preachers. Hellums has been described as "a grave, zealous, affectionate, and weeping preacher," his countenance always most solemn and his subjects of discourse usually of a grave and pathetic cast, while the intonations of his voice were as solemn as death, and usually large tears dropped from his face most of the time while he was preaching.¹² By the close of the year 1808 the number of preaching places on the new circuit had grown to twenty and the membership had reached 166.

In 1808 a second Indiana circuit, the Silver Creek, was organized, which included the territory of Clark's Grant, formerly in the Salt River Circuit, of the Kentucky District. The circuit preacher was Moses Ashworth, a young man of twenty-four. This was the first complete circuit in Indiana. The next year a new district was formed which included the two Indiana circuits, the Illinois and Missouri circuits, besides two Kentucky circuits, and received the name Indiana District. By the next year the Indiana circuits had grown to three, with the addition of the Vincennes Circuit.¹³ One of the first services conducted by the circuit preacher, William Winans, in the old French town was held in the fort, on the Wabash. The congregation was made up of a few government officials, a few English-speaking settlers, two or three Indians, and the Governor of the Territory, William Henry Harrison. There were only a few tallow candles to furnish light for the service, and one of these was held by the Governor to enable the young preacher to read his text and line out the hymn.¹⁴ General Harrison was always a firm friend of the Methodist circuit rider, although he was a communicant of the Presbyterian Church. By 1811 there were five circuits in Indiana, a fourth having been added in 1810, made up of the southern half of the Whitewater Circuit. At first this circuit was known as the Enon, a scriptural name meaning abundance of waters, for the circuit preacher in making the rounds of the circuit was compelled to cross many creeks.¹⁵ Later the circuit became the Lawrenceburg. In 1811 the fifth Indiana circuit appeared, called the Patoka, which included the settlements along the Patoka River.¹⁶

The year 1811 was an important date in the history of early Indiana. It was in the fall of this year that General Harrison won the battle of Tippecanoe, which opened up much new territory to settlement, and it was also the year of the great earthquake. Quakes of the most alarming character continued through the winter of 1811 and 1812. The effects of these shocks upon Indiana Methodism and religion in general is thus described by an eyewitness:¹⁷

As a result of the continued quakes the whole country became alarmed and the most vile and hardened sinners began to tremble and quake, and to go to meeting, and weep and pray. Now every preacher, traveling and local, with the exhorters, began to hold meetings with more earnestness than ever in almost all directions, and Baptist ministers did the same, and it seemed as if almost everybody would become religious that winter and spring.

The result of the earthquake is clearly indicated by the minutes. The Whitewater Circuit increased from 567 to 843; the Lawrenceburg from 306 to 480; the Silver Creek from 375 to 555; while the Vincennes Circuit was divided, probably as a result of the great ingathering. This large growth, however, was not lasting, and the next year there was a reaction, resulting in the loss of zeal and members.

We have already noted in the previous chapter the organization of the first Ohio circuit, along the banks of the Miami and the Scioto. So rapidly did population increase in the new territory in the early years of the nineteenth century that by 1803 Ohio was admitted as a State into the American union, and the same year the Ohio District was organized, made up of five circuits, two of which were in Western Virginia. The presiding elder of the new district was the Secretary of the Western Conference, William Burke. It took the presiding elder about eleven weeks of travel to make the rounds of his vast district; and because the population was so scattered he was often compelled to stay at the rude frontier taverns, which he describes as filled with "the disorder and abuse of the unprincipled and half-civilized inmates." Often he slept on the floor of open cabins, sometimes without bed or covering.¹⁸

It was in 1804 that Methodist preaching was introduced into Cincinnati, then a thriving town of some fifteen hundred houses. John Collins,¹⁹ a local preacher from New York State, settled on the banks of the Little Miami in 1803. During the year 1804 he went to Cincinnati to purchase salt, and while making his purchase he asked the storekeeper if there were any Methodists in the town. To this question the storekeeper replied that he himself was a Methodist, whereupon Collins threw his arms about him and wept for joy. On further inquiry Collins learned that there were several other Methodist families in the place and arrangements were soon made for preaching at the house of the storekeeper. Here a class was organized, which became the nucleus of the Cincinnati Church. In 1807 Collins became a traveling preacher in the Western Conference, and was instrumental in forming the first societies in Dayton, Hillsboro, and other places.²⁰

In 1805-06 Peter Cartwright was the preacher on the Scioto and Hocking Circuits, being moved from the former to the latter circuit in the middle of the year. The last Quarterly Conference of the year was a camp meeting conducted near the town of Marietta. To this meeting came a great crowd of "rabble and rowdies" on Sunday morning, "armed with dirks, clubs, knives, and horsewhips, and swore they would break up the meeting." While Cartwright was preaching one of the rowdies stood up on one of the seats on the women's side of the camp and began to talk and laugh. The preacher ordered him down, but with oaths he refused. The magistrates present were afraid to arrest the young rowdy, so Cartwright took a hand in the matter. After a general scuffle, in which the friends of law and order took the side of the preachers, order was finally restored, but only after thirty of the ruffians had been captured, and on Monday nearly three hundred dollars was collected in fines and costs.²¹

On one occasion during this year Cartwright and his friend Axley, a preacher on the Hockhocking Circuit, were invited to dine at the house of the Governor, Edward Tiffin.²² Axley was very crude and knew little of polite society. At the table, when he had finished eating the meat from the unjointed leg of a chicken, he whistled to the family dog and threw the bone on the floor. This caused the Governor no little merriment, and it was only with difficulty that he controlled his laughter. All the preachers, however, were not so crude as Axley, and he had many sterling qualities which made him one of the most useful and effective of the frontier preachers.

By 1808 the increase of members and circuits in Ohio made necessary the formation of two districts in the State, the Miami and the Muskingum. The Miami contained the circuits in Southwest Ohio, while the Muskingum included the territory in Southeastern Ohio as well as several circuits in Western Virginia.

We have already noted the sending of Tobias Gibson, in 1798, into the Southwest. He rode through all the settlements to the Florida line and was the father of Methodism in all that vast territory. In 1802 he returned to the session of the Western Conference, in Northern Tennessee, to plead for helpers; and even though deadly consumption had fastened itself upon him, he returned to the Southwest, where he gave nearly two more years to his vast circuit, its farthest limits being 1,500 miles from his home.²³ He preached his last sermon on New Year's day, 1804, and died at Natchez in April.²⁴ In 1802 Moses Floyd was appointed with Tobias Gibson to the Natchez Circuit, while the next year two other helpers came to the Southwest. In 1805 the Mississippi District was formed, with four circuits, and Learner Blackman was appointed as presiding elder.

To the Appalouzas Circuit—one of the circuits belonging to the new Mississippi District—Elisha W. Bowman was appointed in 1805. Soon after the purchase of Louisiana, in 1803, Bishop Asbury called for volunteers to carry the gospel into the new territory. Elisha W. Bowman offered to go. His trip to his new circuit was long and arduous. He rode on horseback to New Orleans, which, he states, he found as dirty as a pigsty and in almost as bad condition morally. He went to the Governor, who promised him the city hall as a preaching place; but when Sunday came the hall was locked against him. There were few Americans in the city and most of them represented the dregs of society. He learned, however, of an American settlement some two hundred miles west and northwest, which he reached traveling mostly by boat, taking his horse on a platform supported by two canoes. This was in the Appalouzas country, where he found settlements of Americans who knew "very little more about the nature of salvation than the untaught Indians," and he states "that some of them, after I had preached, asked me what I meant by the fall of man, and when it was that he fell."²⁵

By 1811 the Mississippi District included nine circuits. In the early years of the work in the Southwest the preachers often were so far away that they were unable to attend the annual meeting of the Western Conference, which held its sessions either in Kentucky, Tennessee, or Ohio. In the Conference of 1807 Bishop Asbury had several letters read to the Conference which had been received from the preachers on the Mississippi District who were unable to attend, and the same year Caleb W. Cloud and Thomas Lasley, who had been elected and ordained to the office of deacon the previous year, were admitted into full connection without being present, "in consequence of their mission to Natchez."²⁶

Meanwhile the work in Illinois, begun in 1803, had been continued with moderate success. The Illinois Circuit in 1806 reported 110 members; in 1807 there were 218 white and 2 colored. In the fall of 1806 a missionary was sent to Missouri. This task was placed upon the shoulders of a young preacher, John Travis, who had just been admitted on trial into the Conference, having come recommended from the "Ellenoiies" Quarterly Conference. His success may be seen from the 109 members which he reported for the circuit at the end of the first Conference year. In 1808 the new Indiana District included both the Illinois and the Missouri Circuits, but in 1811 an Illinois District was formed, with five circuits, all of which, however, were not in Illinois. The Illinois and Missouri Circuits in 1811 had near 700 members. At this time the Missouri territory contained not less than 16,000 inhabitants, about one-fifth of whom were slaves.

State lines — — — — — District boundaries - - - - -

As settlers moved in increasing numbers into Kentucky and Tennessee the number of circuits and districts in these older States had also materially increased. In 1804 there were three districts and nineteen circuits in these two States; by 1811 there were four districts and thirty-four circuits. The membership had increased accordingly. The Holston District in 1804 reported 3,122 white members and 182 colored; the Cumberland had 2,597 white and 296 colored; while the Kentucky gave the largest returns, 3,718 white and 243 colored. The total membership in these three districts, which included the circuits in Kentucky and Tennessee, was 9,437 whites and 721 colored. The membership in 1811 by districts was as follows: Holston, 4,068 white, 291 colored; Cumberland, 6,033 white, 562 colored; Kentucky, 3,335 white, 283 colored; Green River, 4,075 white and 279 colored—a total membership for the States of Kentucky and Tennessee of 17,511 white and 1,415 colored.

In the twelve years of the life of the Western Conference, from 1800 to 1811, Methodism had made a remarkable growth on the frontier. At the beginning of the new century there were not more than 2,622 white members and 179 colored in the whole Western country; twelve years later the membership had increased to 29,093 whites and 1,648 colored. The number of circuits had grown from 9 to 69, with a corresponding increase in the number of traveling preachers. At the session of the Western Conference in 1800 Bishop Asbury had sent out fourteen preachers to preach the gospel in the cabins of the frontiersmen; in 1811 Bishop McKendree stationed one hundred preachers within the bounds of the Western Conference.

To the first delegated General Conference, which convened in Baltimore in May, 1808, the Western Conference elected the following men to represent them: William McKendree, William Burke, James Ward, Benjamin Lakin, Learner Blackman, Thomas Milligan, and John Sale.²⁷ McKendree had now spent eight years in the West, and was very probably little known among the Eastern brethren. There were few newspapers, and no religious paper in any denomination in the country, so there was little chance of a man in one section of the denomination becoming known to another. On the first Sunday of the General Conference McKendree was assigned to preach at the Light Street Church. There were present that morning a large congregation, made up of General Conference delegates as well as members of the Church. McKendree's appearance was not prepossessing. He was tall and of commanding appearance, but his clothes were coarse and homely and his movements were awkward and his manners rustic. Nor did the first part of his sermon strike fire. A change came when the sermon was half finished. The lion of the West made the walls of Light Street Church, as he had often made the forests of Kentucky, ring with his powerful voice, and the congregation seemed overwhelmed. "Multitudes fell helpless from their seats as if shot with a rifle."²⁸ Then the tone of the preacher changed again and soon shouts of triumph were heard among the congregation. When he came down from the pulpit, the people gazed at him "as they might at some messenger from another world," while the preachers with one accord said, "That is the man for a bishop." Accordingly the same week he was elected. And the choice was a most fortunate one, for there was not another man in the Church better fitted to carry on the work of Asbury than this rugged pioneer who had learned the ways of the wilderness on the frontier.

Beginning with the year 1800, the Western Conference generally held its annual sessions either during the last of September or the early part of October. Bishop Asbury attended eleven of the twelve sessions, though McKendree presided at the last four sessions. At the session of 1804 Asbury was sick and unable to attend, and McKendree presided, though at that time he was only a presiding elder. At the session of 1805 both Bishops Asbury and Whatcoat were present. Five of the twelve sessions of the Western Conference were held in Kentucky, four in Tennessee, and three in Ohio. The first session in Ohio was held at Chillicothe, the first State capital, in 1807, while the sessions of 1809 and 1811 met at Cincinnati, then grown to be the metropolis of the State.

The Secretary of the Western Conference for all its sessions except the last was William Burke.²⁹ Burke was one of the sturdy characters of the Conference, and, though not an educated man, was evidently clear-headed and a capable officer. His penmanship is excellent, and to this day the Journal of the Conference is easily read. His spelling followed no rule, sometimes the same word being spelled different ways on the same page. Nor did he follow any rule for capitalization or punctuation. Some years he is lavish with his commas and semicolons, while other years the minutes lack punctuation almost entirely. In the early years he speaks of the "Mitionaries," and it is "destrict" to the last. Learner Blackman he invariably spells "Lawner," and there are many other peculiarities which can only be appreciated by reading the Journal. Altogether, however, the document is very creditable to the backwoods preachers, and as time went on the Journal gives evidence that both the Secretary and the members of the Western Conference are becoming more versed in the orderly management of their business and of the conduct of the affairs of the Church in general.

CHAPTER III.

THE FRONTIER CIRCUIT AND THE CIRCUIT RIDER.

THE earliest circuits west of the Allegheny Mountains had no fixed boundaries, but were as broad and long as the settlements. In most instances settlement did not long precede the coming of the circuit rider. Occasionally a new settlement would send out a petition to the nearest presiding elder requesting that a minister be sent them,¹ but in most cases it was the preacher who hunted up the congregation rather than the congregation which hunted up the preacher. The proportion of Church members in the Western settlements was very small. At the close of the American Revolution the proportion of Church members in the whole population of the United States has been estimated as one to every twenty-three, but in the frontier communities it was very probably considerably less than that. "The West was not settled by religious colonies, coming intact, with all their appliances of Church and school, with the same teacher and ferrule, the same chorister and tuning fork, the same deacon and the dominie they had in staid New England."² Among the earliest settlers were adventurers and not a few desperate characters fleeing from the penalties of the law in some older community east of the mountains. More numerous than these were those who came in search of cheaper homes and larger farms, though few of these were from the first families, but rather from the second and third.

¹An example of a community petitioning a presiding elder for a preacher is the Whitewater Circuit, Indiana. (See Western Christian Advocate, October 15, 1845.)

²*Methodist Review*, 1857, pages 280-296; article by T. M. Eddy on "Influence of Methodism on Civilization and Education in the West."

Once settled in the West, the people lived in the rudest fashion. The early cabins were built of round logs, "notched down at the corners and rendered tight by 'chinking' them over with mortar or clay. The first cabins had no floors but the earth; but later 'puncheons,' or thick slabs split out of logs, hewed smooth on one side, and secured to the joists by great wooden pins, served as a floor."³ Many a settler's family spent their first winter in a three-sided camp, and most of the early cabins had no windows, but oiled paper tacked across the opening made in the logs served instead of glass. One needs but read the meager accounts of the cabins in which Bishop Asbury stopped on his various trips across the mountains to get a vivid description of their crowded condition, the filth, the discomfort, of even the best among these early homes of the settlers in the West. On his way to the Western Conference in 1803 Bishop Asbury caught the itch, and he observes: "Considering the filthy houses and filthy beds I have met with, in coming from the Kentucky Conference, it is perhaps strange that I have not caught it twenty times."⁴ The rude and heavy doors, made of split logs, were hung on clumsy wooden hinges, and secured by a wooden latch drawn by a string or leather thong. One room was all the earliest cabins possessed, though often there was a loft, reached by a rude ladder, in which the children slept. The huge fireplace was of the roughest construction, often made of sticks, plastered over with mud so as not to catch fire.

The dress of the people was as rude as their homes. It was made of homespun cotton or "linsey-woolsey." The ministers were likewise clad in this same material, though even on the frontier there was a recognized ministerial garb. The preachers generally wore straight-breasted coats, high standing collars, long waistcoats, and the plainest of neckties. Suspenders were a luxury which were little known on the frontier. The preachers likewise affected a peculiar mode of hairdressing; from about midway between the forehead and the crown of the head the hair was turned back and permitted to grow down to the shoulders.⁵

The frontier cabins were furnished mostly with home-made chairs, tables, and beds. The chairs were hickory split-bottomed, while the bedsteads were stationary, fastened to the sides of the cabin. The mattress of straw rested upon slats, for there were no springs on the frontier. A well made, clean bed, with tastefully made quilts and high bolsters, snowy white sheets and blankets was the greatest pride of the frontier housewife. Such were the cabins in which the first Methodist preaching in the West was conducted.

The first settlements in a new country were always located along the banks of creeks or rivers, generally near some good spring. The reason for so locating the settlements was in order that a supply of water might never run low and also because the valleys contained the most fertile soil. The circuit rider, making his way for the first time into a new country, followed the path or trace from settlement to settlement, stopping at each cabin as he came to it, to make inquiries as to the neighborhood, whether there were any of Methodist leanings about, and as to the best place to hold service. But the circuit rider did not wait for Methodist families before he began his activities; he announced preaching whether there were any Methodists or not.

As we glance over the names of the early circuits in the West, we notice that many of them were named after streams.⁶ Of the nine circuits in the Western Conference in 1800, eight of them were thus named. Every circuit in the Holston District in 1802 bore the name of a creek or river. The two earliest circuits in Ohio, the Miami and the Scioto, were located along the banks of those two rivers; and finally, when districts were laid out in Ohio, they were called the Miami and Muskingum. The same is true of Indiana. The two earliest Indiana circuits were the Whitewater and the Silver Creek, both named after streams; and later there were the Patoka and the Blue River Circuits, both located along the banks of the streams from which they received their names. The Holston District in 1811 had four circuits named after rivers and three with names of valleys. The Cumberland the same year contained four circuits named after streams; the Nashville District had four similarly named, the Wabash District had two, the Kentucky District four, Salt River District two, the Mississippi District four, the Illinois District two, the Miami six, and the Muskingum District three. Of the nine districts of the Western Conference in 1811, every one had the name of a river except the Nashville.

The earliest circuits in the West were either four-, five-, or six-weeks circuits—that is, it took the circuit rider that length of time to make the rounds of the circuit. In the year 1800 Henry Smith's circuit covered all Southern Ohio between the Ohio and the Scioto Rivers. Benjamin Lakin the same year traveled a circuit in Northern Kentucky extending from Maysville to the Licking River, while the Secretary of the Conference, William Burke, traveled a circuit in Central Kentucky extending a hundred miles each way. James B. Finley's first circuit, the Wills Creek, was four hundred and seventy-five miles around.⁷ In 1804 a preacher was simply assigned to Illinois, while three years later another indefatigable circuit rider was sent to

Missouri as his circuit. Tobias Gibson traveled up and down the Lower Mississippi for several hundred miles, and Elisha Bowman covered a territory, after the Louisiana purchase, equally as large. Neither hardship nor distance deterred the preachers from carrying on the work to which they were assigned.

Preaching appointments were generally for 12 o'clock, noon, on all days except the Sabbath.⁸ The reason for this perhaps was that on a clear day everybody could tell by the sun when it was noon, for there were few clocks and fewer watches in a frontier community. The circuit rider, as a rule, preached at least once every day, and his advent into a community was the signal for a general turn-out of all Methodist families.⁹ Many others also attended the meeting, even on week days, for all were always welcome. It was not an uncommon thing for men and women to walk five or six miles to attend class meeting, and at night the same distance to attend prayer meeting, lighting their way through the woods with blazing hickory bark. In summer men and boys attended the meetings in their bare feet, while the women and girls, if they possessed shoes and stockings, carried them in their hands until they came in sight of the place of meeting, then, washing off the dust in the nearest brook or spring, finished their toilets, that they might appear more decent in the company.¹⁰

The number attending the daily ministry of the circuit rider varied with the community and the time of year. Generally the service was held in a cabin, with a chair for a pulpit, while the congregation gathered about the preacher; and if it were summer time, half of the congregation would be on the outside. Sometimes the minister would stand in the doorway, while the people would be gathered in the yard of the cabin. The great occasions were the quarterly meetings, when the sacraments were administered and love feasts held. These meetings began on Friday evening or Saturday morning and lasted through until Monday morning. People came from twenty to thirty miles around. The neighborhood where the meeting was to be held made simple but ample provision for the entertainment. The larder was well filled with all the frontier staples, while pies and cakes were also prepared in abundance. On the Little Miami, in the early frontier days, it was customary to hold a certain quarterly meeting; and here three wealthy families did all the entertaining, often each providing for as many as from fifty to a hundred people. At night the women were accommodated on the floor of the cabins, while men and boys repaired to the barns, which had been swept and otherwise prepared for their entertainment.

The preaching at a quarterly meeting occasion began on a Saturday morning, two sermons in succession being the order of the service. At night another preaching service was held, at which the junior preacher on the circuit usually held forth. But Sunday was the great day. First came the love feast conducted by one of the preachers, and following it at eleven o'clock came the sermon by the presiding elder, followed by a sermon from one of the circuit preachers. Following this the sacraments were administered, the Lord's Supper and Baptism, while the meeting closed with a preaching and prayer service at night, sometimes lasting, if the results warranted it, until near Monday morning. At this meeting the converts were gathered in, sometimes numbered by the score. The attendance at these meetings reached into the hundreds, and not infrequently into the thousands.

One of the typical presiding elders on the frontier in the early years of the nineteenth century was Samuel Parker.¹¹ A native of New Jersey, he began to preach in 1800. He came West and joined the Western Conference in 1805, his first circuit being the Hinkstone, in Kentucky. As presiding elder he served the Indiana, Kentucky, Miami, and Mississippi Districts. His career was cut short by death in 1819, while engaged on his district along the Mississippi. Parker was a tall, slim, awkward man, with large blue eyes and an enormous Roman nose. He had a long chin which he used in the winter to hold up the blanket which served him in lieu of a greatcoat. A hole was cut in the center of the blanket large enough to let his small head through, and when it was bitter cold he would hang the fore part of the hole on his chin and bid defiance to wind and cold. And when his bed covering proved insufficient, his blanket was made to serve that purpose; and it was frequently brought into use, for bed covering was scant, especially at quarterly meetings.

Let us picture this homely, awkward frontier preacher, clad in ill-fitting, homespun preacher garb, as he conducts the preaching on a quarterly meeting occasion. He places his chair before him as his pulpit, and begins to read a hymn in a soft, charming voice. After the singing comes the prayer, which is uttered with such eloquence and pathos "that heaven and earth seem in juxtaposition." And then follows the sermon on the text, "The upright shall love thee." One who was present and heard this very sermon says: "I have since heard the most able divines in the country, but his description of the good man's love to God and God's love to man, I have not been privileged to hear equaled since, and indeed I never expect to hear anything this side of the throne of God which will surpass it."¹²

Most of the early preachers in the West were unmarried men; and according to William Burke, the Secretary of the Western Conference, he was the first preacher to travel as a married man west of the mountains. Not only were the circuit preachers unmarried, but Bishop Asbury as well as all of the bishops until Robert R. Roberts was elected in 1816 were likewise bachelors. When a preacher married he was usually advised to locate, for it was considered impossible for a Western circuit to support a married preacher. Concerning the hardships which attended the first married circuit rider west of the mountains, we will let Burke speak:¹³ "From the 9th of January, 1796, I traveled as a married man, no allowance being made for the wife. Part of this time sixty-four dollars was allowed a traveling preacher, and he must find his own horse and fixins, his own wardrobe and that of his wife, together with her board; and the other part of the time it was eighty dollars, still nothing for wife. I was the first married preacher in the West who traveled after marrying. I met with every discouragement that could be thrown in my way. Preachers and people said, 'You had better locate.' I shared equally with the single men when they were on the circuit with me, in order to keep the peace. . . . One winter I had to use a borrowed blanket instead of a cloak or overcoat."

In the Journal of the Western Conference for 1803 is this entry:

Benjamin Lakin's account [of deficiency in his salary], $28.95. But it appears that the circuit maintained Brother Lakin's wife and her beast gratis. It is therefore our opinion that it is ungenerous in him to bring a demand on Conference; and seeing there are others more needy, it is our judgment that he ought not have anything.

Jesse Walker's account, $165.37. And it appears to us that $76 are for children. It is our judgment that the demand for children be deducted, and then he is deficient $89.37.¹⁴

¹⁴MS. Journal of the Western Conference for 1803.

These two entries illustrate something of the discouragements which attended the path of the married circuit rider on the frontier. In 1809, the year James B. Finley began to preach, he was unable to find any place for his family to live on the circuit, and he was compelled to build a log cabin, 12x14, for their accommodation; but he states that it was "sufficiently capacious, as we had nothing but a bed and some wearing apparel. My funds being all exhausted, I sold the boots off my feet to purchase provisions with."¹⁵

The amount of salary allowed each preacher from 1784 to 1800 was $64, according to the provision of the Discipline. In 1792 traveling expenses were added to this sum. From 1800 to 1816 the salary allowed the traveling preachers was raised to $80 and traveling expenses; the same allowance was also made the wives of traveling preachers, while children up to seven years were allowed $16 each, and $24 from the age of seven to fourteen. In 1816 the salary was raised to $100.¹⁶ This salary was uniform for bishops, presiding elders, and circuit riders. In 1808 Bishop McKendree's receipts and expenditures were as follows: From seven Conferences, $175; salary, $80; traveling and other expenses, $61.63; leaving $33.37, which the Bishop was particular in noting to be yet due the Conferences.¹⁷

While this salary seems pitifully small, yet the preachers on the frontier had difficulty in collecting even this small amount. The Journals of the Western Conference for every year of its twelve years of history show long lists of deficiencies, and a considerable part of the business of each session consisted in dividing up the small amounts received from the Chartered Fund¹⁸ and the Book Concern among the preachers who reported deficiencies. Thus in 1805 the deficiencies amounted to $985; to meet this $591 was obtained from the following sources:

Certainly it was not a financial consideration which drew men into the traveling ministry of the Methodist Church in the frontier stage of its history. The poverty of the average frontier preacher is almost beyond our comprehension. Bishop Asbury states that at the session of the Western Conference in 1806 "the brethren were in want, and could not suit themselves; so I parted with my watch, my coat, and my shirt."²⁰ Although the Discipline called for traveling expenses and provision for the wife and children of a traveling preacher, yet, as Cartwright observes, "the Discipline was a dead letter on the subject of house rent, table expenses, and a dividend for children," and it was not until 1813 that any provision was made for the care of the children of the preachers in the West; and ¹⁸The Chartered Fund originated at the General Conference of 1798. Previous to this there had been a Preacher's Fund, created by the payment of every traveling preacher, on admission into full connection in the Conference, a sum of $5, and year after year an additional sum of $2. The Chartered Fund was contributed by friends, was funded under the direction of trustees, and the interest applied to meet the deficiencies and needs of preachers, their wives and children. then it was through the effort of Bishop Asbury, who, as Cartwright expressed it, "begged from door to door in the older Conferences and came on and distributed ten dollars to each child of a traveling preacher under fourteen years of age."²¹ Peter Cartwright joined the Western Conference in 1804, and in 1807 he was compelled to return to the home of his father because he had no money nor clothes and he also lacked a horse, saddle, and bridle. On receiving a new outfit as a gift from his father he again set out for his circuit, "for another three years' absence."²²

Although the salary of a traveling preacher was meager in the extreme, yet even the amount which he received was not always paid in cash. A typical steward's record for a circuit in Indiana in the early twenties shows that a good part of the "salary" was paid in cloth, corn, leather, socks, etc.:

Among the common occurrences on a frontier circuit were the religious controversies. The salient points of Methodist theology were always emphasized in the preaching and prayers of the circuit rider. Nor were the Baptists, the Presbyterians, the Shakers, the New Lights any the less emphatic in emphasizing their peculiarities. In fact, the differences in doctrine had far greater emphasis laid upon them than in these days.

The greatest opponents of Methodist theology were the Calvinists, as represented particularly by the Presbyterians. Some of the controversies with the Presbyterians were extremely bitter, rendered more so by the fact that the Presbyterian ministry were far better educated than were the Methodist preachers, and in consequence they assumed an arrogance in their discussions which the Methodists greatly resented. There are numerous instances, however, where Presbyterians and Methodists got on well together. Bishop Asbury was particularly friendly toward them, had numerous friends among the Presbyterian clergy, and frequently requested them to preach at Methodist meetings where he presided. Particularly was this true after the great revival in the West at the beginning of the nineteenth century, in which the Presbyterians and Methodists had drawn closer together.²⁴

²³*Western Christian Advocate*, November 21, 1860; article by F. C. Holliday.

²⁴"I dined with Mr. Ramsey, a Presbyterian minister, at his own house on Friday; and he with me to-day at my lodgings; we had quite a Christian interview." (Asbury's Journal, Vol. III., page 80.) At the Conference in Tennessee in 1802 Bishop

Perhaps the most notorious controversy between Methodists and Presbyterians during the life of the Western Conference was one which occurred in Cincinnati following the session of the Conference in that city in 1811. While the Conference was in session three of the younger members, Peter Cartwright, Thomas Stilwell, and Samuel Griffin, took advantage of their stay in the city to have some pamphlets printed against Calvinism.²⁵ One of the pamphlets was in poetical form, or rather doggerel, and was entitled "The Dagon of Calvinism; or, The Molock of Decrees: A Poem in Three Cantos." It had been written in New England by a man who had never been a Methodist, and was reprinted in Cincinnati without the knowledge or approval of the Conference. Cartwright states that his reason for printing the pamphlets was to answer pamphlets which had been circulated in Kentucky ridiculing and caricaturing Methodist doctrine. One such Presbyterian pamphlet was entitled "A Dialogue between Calvinists and Arminians." Another Presbyterian had written against Lorenzo Dow's "Chain," in which strong predestination sentiments were presented. In answer to these there had already appeared anonymously a pamphlet entitled "A Useful Discovery; or, I Never Saw the Like Before," which was a complete satire on Calvinist doctrine. This last pamphlet Cartwright and his associates had reprinted at Cincinnati at the same time as "The Dagon of Calvinism."

Asbury was too sick to preach, and he asked two Presbyterian ministers to "supply my lack of public service, which they did with great fervency and fidelity." (Journal, Vol. III., page 81.) Frequently Presbyterians offered their churches for Methodist meetings and not infrequently for Bishop Asbury to preach.

²⁵An account of this controversy will be found in Williams's "Pictures of Early Methodism in Ohio," Chap. VIII., pages 156-186. Also in Cartwright's "Fifty Years a Presiding Elder," Chap. IV., pages 92-193.

This sorry controversial matter was soon thrown broadcast over Southern Kentucky and created considerable stir in Presbyterian circles. The pastor of the First Presbyterian Church in Cincinnati took the matter up and held the Western Conference as responsible. Letters were exchanged between him and the Methodist pastors of Cincinnati, which tended to increase the bitterness, while Cartwright received a long letter anonymously written—supposedly by two Presbyterian ministers—which purports to be written by the devil. In this pamphlet Cartwright is considered the devil's faithful servant, because of his activity against Calvinist doctrine. To this pamphlet Cartwright replied, addressing his letter "To the Right Honorable, The Devil," and beginning, "If I am to answer a fool according to his folly, permit me to answer a devil according to his malice; therefore expect plain language."

The chief differences between Methodists and Baptists arose over the question of immersion as necessary to salvation and the Baptist practice of close communion. Cartwright complains that the Baptists were great proselyters, and that after Methodists had begun a meeting in a wicked community the Baptists would then come and preach "Water!" "Water!" "Water!" and during the absence of the preachers at other points on the circuit they would attempt to rush the recent converts into the water. "They made so much ado about baptism by immersion," he says, "that the uninformed would suppose that heaven was an island, and there was no way to get there but by diving or swimming." But even Cartwright has a good word for some of the Baptist preachers and people on the frontier.²⁶

Other sects with which the frontier Methodists came into contact and often conflict were the "Campbellites," ²⁶Cartwright, "Autobiography," pages 133-138. For a good example of the type of controversy carried on between Methodists and Baptists see Cartwright's "Autobiography," pages 150, 151, Universalists, and Shakers. All the Protestant denominations joined in opposing the Universalists; in fact, opposition to Universalist doctrine was about the only common theological ground on which the several sects could stand. Debates on religious and theological subjects were commonly held, continuing night after night while the people gathered in great crowds to support their particular theological champion. A certain debate in Indiana between a Methodist and Universalist in the early day lasted three days. In the course of the debate the Universalist painted a hell for the Methodist champion and his brethren to look at, and then flung into it all the human race that orthodoxy excluded from heaven. The Methodist replied by sending Judas to heaven before his Lord and carried all liars, lechers, seducers, and murderers to Abraham's bosom, "all bedeviled and unrepentent as they were."

The Shakers were a communistic sect very active in Kentucky, Ohio, and Indiana in the early years of the nineteenth century. They did not recognize marriage as a Christian institution and held to other strange notions. The Methodist circuit rider was a deadly enemy of this delusion and took every opportunity of openly opposing them. From the Methodist standpoint they seemed the very outcast among the sects. There was a settlement of Shakers on the Lower Wabash, in Indiana, at a place called Busroe.²⁷ To this settlement had come Kentucky immigrants, among whom were Methodists, Baptists, and Cumberland Presbyterians. Some of them had joined the Shakers, while others remained steadfast to their former faith. Cartwright came over from Kentucky to this settlement for the purpose of saving the remaining Methodists from falling into "the muddy pools of Shakerism." On arriving in the settlement he challenged the Shaker

²⁷The Shakers were officially known as "The United Society of Believers in Christ's Second Coming."

“priests” to a debate, but no one answered the challenge. The meeting, however, was held, nevertheless, and for three hours Cartwright held forth, “until the very foundations of every Shaker present were shaken from under him.” As a result of this meeting forty-seven former Shakers gave their names to the Methodist Church and a class was immediately organized.²⁸

Such contests developed a remarkable quickness of wit among the frontier preachers. At New Harmony, on the Lower Wabash in Indiana, there had been established a communistic community by the Rappites, a German sect. Later the Rappites sold out their interest to Robert Owen, a Scotch mill owner, who was interested in founding a socialistic community. On one occasion a Methodist circuit rider was preaching in the hall at New Harmony, which was open to all denominations or to any one who had any message to give. It was the custom of a certain member of the community to rise in the meeting and question the speakers. He accordingly arose while James Armstrong, a Methodist preacher, was preaching and propounded the question, “How do you know you have a soul?” To this Armstrong replied, “I feel it.” “Did you ever smell, taste, see, or hear your soul?” said the questioner. “No,” said Armstrong. “Then you have four senses against you,” replied the skeptic. Armstrong then propounded this question to his questioner: “Mr. Jennings, did you ever have the toothache?” “Yes,” said Jennings. “Did you ever smell, taste, see, or hear the toothache?” asked the preacher. “No,” replied Jennings. “Then,” said Armstrong, “you have four senses against you.”²⁹

It is generally supposed that the early Methodist preachers, particularly in the West, were very ignorant men, and it is true that many of them lacked school education; but to say that they were ignorant men is far from the truth. They were uneducated in the sense in which Abraham Lincoln was an uneducated man; but, like Lincoln, they became trained men in the truest sense of the word. Bishop Asbury was not a college-bred man, but he was far from being an uneducated or unlearned preacher. He was constantly occupied with some book.³⁰ He always carried books in his saddlebags, as did all the circuit riders. The list of books which he found time to read as he rode from place to place is a long one, and contains not only books on religious subjects, but also history, biography, literature, and even books on medicine. While the education of the average circuit rider was extremely limited, yet somehow they became efficient interpreters of a larger life, and as a class developed a keenness of mind and a readiness of wit that finds few equals. They were men of few books, but they absorbed the few they possessed. The books with which they became most familiar were the Bible, the Discipline, Wesley's Sermons, and Fletcher's "Appeal."

The eloquence of these pioneers was not the kind learned in schools or from the study of books. There is no better way to account for it than to let John Strange, a prince among Western preachers, tell of the school in which he learned it. His Alma Mater, said he, was "Brush College, more ancient, though less pretentious, than Yale, Harvard, or Princeton. Here I graduated, and I love her memory still. Her academic groves are the boundless forests and prairies of these Western wilds; her Pierian springs are the gushing fountains from the rocks and mountain fastnesses; her Arcadian groves and Orphic songs are the wildwoods, and the birds of every color and every song, relieved now and then with the bass hootings of the night owl and the weird treble of the whippoorwill; her curriculum is the philosophy of nature and the mysteries of redemption; her library is the word of God, the Discipline, the hymn book, supplemented with trees and brooks and stones, all of which are full of wisdom and sermons and speeches; and her parchments of literary honors are the horse and the saddlebags."³¹

The type of preaching practiced by the early circuit riders in the West is hard to define. The general conception of Methodist preaching of the time seems to be that it was wild and incoherent, with little that appealed to thinking people. This may have been true of the preaching of a few, but it could hardly be considered characteristic. The preachers were often vigorous and noisy, but most of them had regard for the decencies of public worship and did not countenance the extravagant. As a rule preaching was of a doctrinal character. They believed and preached the doctrine of the fall of man; all men were conceived and born in sin, and Jesus Christ died for all, with the emphasis upon the "all." This was by way of contrast with the Calvinists, who preached a limited salvation. They also emphasized the doctrine of personal responsibility. They proclaimed the "free will" of the individual, that every person had the power of choice. "So then every one of us must give an account of himself to God," was a favorite text of the circuit preacher, and many a reckless frontiersman has quailed under the burning sermons preached from that text. Then they bore down upon the doctrine of regeneration also, that the soul can be newly created and transformed; and this was not simply a change of purpose, but a change of character. This was conversion, the "new birth" of which Methodists had much to say, and taught it on all occasions, as necessary for entrance into the kingdom. They preached also that conversion must be manifested and become a matter of one's own personal consciousness. "Being faithful" was the term which summed up for the Methodists correct living; and the opposite, "backsliding," was a term which described the state of a Methodist who, having once been "converted," had failed "to be faithful." The preaching of these rude preachers was abundantly practical and touched the life of the community at every point.

Frontier Methodists were extremely fond of hymn-singing; they sang hymns in their homes, about their work, at their family altars, as well as in their meetings. The Methodists had an official Hymn Book dating from the organization of the Church, in 1784; but there were few of these books on the frontier, except with the preachers. Frequently no one in a congregation possessed a hymn book except the preacher, who gave out the verses to be sung, two lines at a time. Many of the hymns, however, were well known, and except in the public congregation were sung without the process of being lined out. Aside from the hymns found in the Church hymnal there grew up on the frontier a great number of improvised hymns. At the beginning of a camp meeting the regular hymns would be sung; but as the meeting warmed up hymns, or "spiritual songs," as they were termed, many times improvised by the preachers on the spot, were used. These songs were very imperfect in rhyme, rude in expression, and to us to-day seem totally impossible; but they were learned by the people and often used in place of the older and more worthy hymns. Many of these frontier hymns have been lost, for some of them never appeared in print, but a few have come down to us, preserved in an old song book, first printed in 1810. Two of the frontier preachers who obtained a reputation as song writers were John A. Grenade and Caleb J. Taylor, both of whom wrote a number of hymns found in this little volume.

The theme of these crude frontier hymns varied. Sometimes they described a camp meeting scene, as does this song written by Taylor:

Sinners through the camp are falling,
Deep distress their souls pervade,
Wondering why they are not rolling
In the dark Infernal shade.
Grace and mercy, long neglected,
Now they ardently implore;
In an hour when least expected
Jesus bids them weep no more.

Hear them then their God extolling,
Tell the wonders he has done;
While they rise, see others falling!
Light into their hearts hath shone.
Prayer and praise, and exhortation,
Blend in one perpetual sound;
Music sweet beyond expression,
To rejoicing saints around.³²

More often, however, the theme of these camp meeting songs was "divine mercy" or "saving grace," of which the following by John A. Grenade is a sample:

Think of what your Saviour bore
In the gloomy garden,
Sweating blood at every pore,
To procure thy pardon;
See Him stretched upon the wood,
Bleeding, grieving, crying;
Suffering all the wrath of God,
Groaning, gasping, dying.

CHAPTER IV.

THE CIRCUIT RIDER AS A FACTOR IN FRONTIER SOCIETY.

ALL historians recognize the importance of the activities of the Jesuits in the early history of Canada, and the Great Lakes region of the United States particularly. Their story has been admirably told by one of America's greatest historians, Francis Parkman; while the documents relating to their activities have been gathered together by another American historian, Reuben Gold Thwaites, in that remarkable series of volumes known as the "Jesuit Relations." The equally important activities of the early circuit riders in the West, however, have as yet received little recognition from historians; while the documents relating to their labors have been scattered to the four winds and the complete story of their lives and work remains yet to be written.¹ A distinguished jurist, a Judge of the Supreme Court in one of the Central Western States, was accustomed to say years ago, "But for the Methodist Church and the Methodist ministry, this country would have sunk into barbarism." While this assertion may be somewhat too sweeping in all its implications, yet an examination of the activities and influences which emanated from the Methodist Church on the frontier in the latter years of the eighteenth and the early years of the nineteenth centuries will go far toward substantiating the declaration. It has only been in recent years, however, that the historian has even begun to give credit to the rude preachers of righteousness on the frontier. Recently American history textbooks have been published in which Cartwright's "Autobiography" and Brunson's "Western Pioneer" have been cited as reading references.

As has already been pointed out, the Methodist plan of organization was exactly suited to a new country and a scattered population. Frontier society was in a state of flux, but the ministers of the Methodist Church were equally mobile and were just as much at home whether society were on the move or stationary. It seems probable that no other system could have met the conditions; at least no other did. The circuit rider was equally at home in the saddle, in the rude cabin of the settler, in the Indian lodge, or out under the wide-spreading branches of the beeches and maples. He worked at his never-ending task not for personal glory or for "salary," but for the glory of God and the spread of the gospel. Often he reached the emigrant before the roof was on his cabin or the clay in the stick chimney dry. The whole Western country was laid out into circuits and districts, and into each obscure settlement came at stated times the circuit rider, at longer intervals came the presiding elder, and once each year, into the Western country, came the bishop, preaching, ordaining, and holding the sacraments. And to the camp meetings, the quarterly meetings, and the Conferences flocked the people of the frontier. They often came long distances, on foot, in their rude wagons, on horseback, men, women, and children.

What was the influence upon Western society exerted by these devoted men, organized as they were into an effective machine for spreading the gospel? It goes almost without saying that they exerted a powerful influence for religion and righteousness. They preached a theology greatly needed in a new country, infested, as all new countries are, with rough and many times criminal characters. The great doctrine, urged on all occasions, was that of "conversion," a change of life and heart. They proclaimed all men to be sinners and that salvation lay only through Jesus Christ. It was an extremely practical gospel they proclaimed; a gospel which manifested itself in the daily life of the convert. It was "by their fruits" they were known, and thus in a rough and rude community they brought the softening influences of Christianity.

The circuit rider was also a powerful influence in maintaining law and order. He always had the greatest respect for law, both of the Church, of the State, and of the nation. The Methodist system of Church government, devised by John Wesley and brought to America by Francis Asbury, was a most thorough and efficient system. Asbury was not so great a preacher as he was an organizer; and he stood always for obedience to the laws of the Church.² Order was his passion, and the introduction of such an orderly system into more or less disorderly communities must have had far-reaching influence. The circuit rider stood for decency and order in public worship, and many times took the leading part in preserving it. Of one of the presiding elders on the frontier it has been said by one who knew him that "he would not suffer anything which was manifestly enthusiastic or extravagant in religious assemblies to pass without rebuke. . . . His nice sense of propriety induced him to keep the very best order at the meetings superintended by him.

At many a camp meeting the preachers were compelled to resort to force to preserve order. The following account of such a scene is typical. At a camp meeting near Marietta, Ohio, in the fall of 1806 a crowd of "rabble and rowdies," as Cartwright describes them, came on a Sunday morning, "armed with dirks, clubs, knives, and horsewhips, and swore they would break up the meeting." While Cartwright was preaching, one of the rowdies stood up on a seat and began to talk and laugh. The preacher ordered him down, but with oaths he refused. The magistrates were afraid to arrest the roughs, so the preachers were compelled to interfere. After a general scuffle, in which the friends of law and order stood by the preachers, the roughs were put to flight, though not until some thirty had been captured, and on Monday nearly three hundred dollars was collected in fines and costs.³

Nor is this an unusual circumstance. Finley describes a similar scene where "about twenty lewd fellows of the baser sort" came to a camp meeting intoxicated, with the avowed purpose of breaking up the meeting, but only to find that the preachers and the Methodist brethren were more than their match.⁴

Not only did the circuit rider stand for law and order, but he also stood for moderation in religious practices. It has been the general conception that the early frontier preachers desired to work the people up to a state of religious frenzy at every meeting, and that they took special delight in such strange exercises as the "jerks," the "holy laugh," the "barking exercise," and that they encouraged trances and visions; but this is an entire misconception. None of the preachers objected to hearty shouts during their preaching, but there were few fanatics among them, and what few of that sort did creep into the ministry were soon weeded out by the watchful presiding elders. At a certain camp meeting conducted in the West "there were many . . . strange and wild exercises into which the subjects of this revival fell; such, for instance, as . . . the running, jumping, and barking exercise. The Methodist preachers generally preached against this extravagant wildness." Cartwright states: "I did it uniformly in my ministrations, and sometimes gave great offense."⁵

Western morality was extremely loose, and in many communities little attempt was made to preserve order or uphold decent morality by the civil authorities. "Travelers from the East were shocked at the balls, the drinking, the fighting, and the utter disregard paid to the Sabbath day. Good people were terrified at the drunkenness, the vice, the gambling, the brutal fights, the gouging, the needless duels they beheld on every hand."⁶ In the face of this looseness the Methodist Church maintained and proclaimed an unbending morality. The circuit rider waged war with vice of every sort. Not content with renouncing sin in general, he often came to particulars, called out names in meeting, denounced sinners to their very face, and called upon them to repent. The Methodist Church was the original Temperance Society in the West, if not in the nation. The General Rules formulated by John Wesley were adopted by the American Church at its organization in 1784. Among them was one forbidding "drunkenness, buying or selling of spirituous liquors, or drinking them, unless in cases of necessity."⁷ In addition to this rule the American Church adopted another, forbidding members from distilling grain into liquor and advised the preachers strongly to persuade their members from drinking drams.

⁵Cartwright, "Autobiography," pages 51, 52.

⁶McMaster, Vol. II., pages 152, 578.

⁷Emory, "History of the Discipline," pages 181, 192.

Temperance was a theme unheard and unthought of outside the pale of the Methodist Church. No other Church had legislation covering the subject, but it was left to the individual to use his discretion regarding the matter. As a result of the attitude toward liquor taken by the Methodist Church, and the fact that the other Churches had nothing to say upon the subject, it followed "as a necessary consequence that all persons who refused to drink were called, by way of reproach, Methodist fanatics."⁸ The strange doctrine of antinomianism⁹ had early gained foothold in the West and had been fostered by Church organizations and defended from the pulpit. This doctrine was preached particularly by certain branches of the Baptists. Moral reform they proclaimed as a presumptuous intermeddling with the Divine plans. Alcohol was termed a "good creature of God to be received with thanksgiving."¹⁰ A certain prominent preacher of the anti-means doctrine destroyed the confidence of his flock in his sincerity by erecting lightning rods on his buildings. He saw no need of "means" to save his soul, but did to save his oats and buckwheat. At one time on the frontier at a certain Church meeting of an antinomian congregation one member was expelled for habitual drunkenness and another for being a member of a temperance society, which led a too curious member to ask, "How much liquor must he drink to retain his standing in the Church, since drinking too much and drinking none at all were both capital crimes?"

At the time the Methodist Church was established in the West practically every one drank liquor. "Ardent ⁹An "antinomian" is one who maintains that under the gospel dispensation the moral law is of no use or obligation, on the ground that faith alone is necessary to salvation.

spirits were used as a preventive of disease. It was also regarded as a necessary beverage. A house could not be raised, a field of wheat could not be cut down, nor could there be a log-rolling, a husking, a quilting, a wedding, or a funeral without the aid of alcohol."¹¹ Cartwright adds his testimony to the prevalence of liquor-drinking on the frontier: "From my earliest recollection drinking drams, in family and social circles, was considered harmless and allowable socialities. It was almost universally the custom for preachers, in common with all others, to take drams; and if a man would not have it in his family, his harvest, his house-raising, log-rollings, weddings, and so on, he was considered parsimonious and unsociable; and many, even professors of Christianity, would not help a man if he did not have spirits and treat the company."¹²

The difficulty of transporting grain to market over the rough frontier roads led the farmers to distill it into whisky. Whisky-making was very common in the West in the early days. In 1810 there were twenty-eight distilleries in Indiana territory, turning out 35,950 gallons¹³ of whisky a year, to say nothing of the domestic distilleries where whisky was made for home consumption. It was the prevailing opinion on the frontier that whisky was a preventive of the diseases common to the frontier,¹⁴ such as ague and fever, and great quantities were consumed, avowedly for that purpose. Distilled liquors were continually in use as tonics, even among those who were otherwise strictly temperate and abstemious.

A certain local preacher in Tennessee was accused of drinking too much at weddings. After much difficulty the circuit preacher succeeded in getting a committee of local preachers, who themselves were not dram drinkers, to try the accused brother. Testimony was given proving that he drank often and had been drunk on several occasions, and accordingly he was suspended until the next Quarterly Conference, when he was expelled from the Church.¹⁵ Finley states that "I suffered no opportunity to pass that I did not improve in portraying the physical, social, and moral evils resulting from intemperance. . . . Frequently I would pledge whole congregations, standing upon their feet, to the temperance cause."¹⁶

Among the frontier preachers none were more famous for opposition to intemperance than James Axley. Axley and Peter Cartwright were close friends, they having been admitted into the Western Conference the same year, and were alike in their fearless denunciation of whatever they believed to be wrong. At one time he was located in Eastern Tennessee, a country known for its production of peach brandy and for the free use of it. In opposition to this practice he preached what became known as Axley's temperance sermon, which was famous in all that region for a third of a century. A passage from this sermon will serve to illustrate a type of frontier preaching, as well as the strong opposition of the Methodist Church toward intemperance:

Text: "Alexander the coppersmith did me much evil; the Lord reward him according to his works." (2 Tim. iv. 14.)

Paul was a traveling preacher, and a bishop, or a presiding elder at least; for he traveled extensively, and had much to do, not only in regulating the societies, but also in sending the preachers here, there, and yonder. He was zealous, laborious, would not build on another man's foundation, but formed new circuits,

"where Christ was not named," so that from Jerusalem, and round unto Illyricum, he had fully preached the gospel of Christ. One new place that he visited was very wicked. . . . Sabbath-breaking, dancing, drinking, quarreling, fighting, swearing, etc., abounded; but the word of the Lord took effect; there was a powerful stir among the people, and many precious souls were converted. Among the subjects of that work there was a certain noted character, Alexander by name and a still-maker by trade; also Hymenæus, who was his partner in the business. Paul formed a new society, and appointed Brother Alexander class leader. There was a great change in the place; the people left off their drinking, swearing, fighting, horse-racing, dancing, and all their wicked practices. The stills were worked up into bells and stew-kettles, and thus applied to useful purposes. The settlement was orderly, the meetings were prosperous, and things went well among them for some time. But one year they had a pleasant spring; there was no late frost, and the peach crop hit exactly. I do suppose, my brethren, that such a crop of peaches was never known before. The old folks ate all they could eat; the children ate all they could eat; the pigs ate all they could eat; the sisters preserved all they could preserve; and still the limbs of the trees were bending and breaking. One Sunday when the brethren met for worship they gathered around outside the meetinghouse, and got to talking about their worldly business—as you know people sometimes do, and it is a mighty bad practice—and one said to another, "Brother, how is the peach crop with you this year?" "Oh," said he, "you never saw the like; they are rotting on the ground under the trees; I don't know what to do with them." "How would it do," said one, "to still them? The peaches will go to waste, but the brandy will keep; and it is very good in certain cases, if not used to excess." "I should like to know," said a cute brother, "how you could make brandy without stills?" "That's nothing," replied another, "for our class leader, Brother Alexander, is as good a still-maker as need be, and Brother Hymenæus is another, and, rather than see the fruit wasted, no doubt they will make us a few." The next thing heard on the subject was a hammering in the class leader's shop; and soon the stills in every brother's orchard were smoking and the liquid poison streaming. When one called on another, the bottle was brought out, with the remark, "I want you to taste my new brandy; I think it is pretty good." The guest after tasting once was urged to repeat, when, smacking his lips, he would reply: "Well, it's tolerable; but I wish you would come over and taste mine; I think mine is a little better." So they tasted and tasted till many of them got about half drunk, and I don't know but three-quarters. Then the very devil was raised among them; the society was all in an uproar, and Paul was sent for to come and settle the difficulty. At first it was difficult to find sober, disinterested ones enough to try the guilty; but finally he got his committee formed; and the first one he brought to account was Alexander, who pleaded not guilty. He declared he had not tasted, bought, sold, or distilled a drop of brandy. "But," said Paul, "you made the stills, otherwise there would have been no liquor made; and if no liquor, no one would have been intoxicated." So they expelled him first, then Hymenæus next, and went on for compliment, till the society was relieved of all still-makers, distillers, dramsellers, and dram-drinkers, and peace was once more restored. Paul says: "Holding faith, and a good conscience; which some having put away concerning faith have made shipwreck: of whom is Hymenæus and Alexander; whom I have delivered unto Satan, that they may learn not to blaspheme."¹⁷

Frontier Methodism had a very large social influence. Once a week the class leaders called their classes together, and there the New Englander and the Southerner, "the Yorker" and the Eastern Shore man, the Teuton and the Celt mingled on a platform of exact equality. The class leader was a neighbor and friend, and freely and frankly they discussed their religious convictions, their fears and hopes together. They spoke and sang and prayed, and thus sectional prejudices passed and there was born a distinct Western spirit and feeling. These class meetings were the smallest of the Methodist gatherings. Then there were the preaching services when the circuit preacher reached the neighborhood and greater numbers gathered together; and the quarterly meetings, when sometimes as many as two thousand people gathered to spend two days in religious and social intercourse. Still more extensive was the mingling, when in the autumn the camp meetings began. Nearly every circuit planned such a gathering, when people from far and near came, lived in booths and tents, and spent their time in delightful mingling together. Methodism on the frontier proved a wonderful "social chemistry." Indeed, no other influence on the frontier had larger social possibilities.¹⁸

Another aspect of the social influence of frontier Methodism deserves mention. The preacher lived in the homes of the people. He passed the night in the home where he preached, or in the neighborhood. Entirely aside from the religious influences which emanated from such visits were his example as a studious man and a gentleman. The casual conversations carried on at the table with the elder members of the household; the reading and praying about the open fireplace just before retiring and just after rising; the books he brought into the log cabins—all these were fruitful sources of influencing especially the younger members of the household.

The early Methodist circuit riders were not only preachers, but they were likewise book agents. The General Conference of 1800 passed this rule: "It shall be the duty of every presiding elder, where no book steward is appointed, to see that his district be fully supplied with books. He is to order such books as are wanted, and to give directions to whose care the same are to be sent; and he is to take the oversight of all our books sent into his district, and to account to the superintendent for the same." It stated further: "It shall be the duty of every preacher who has the charge of a circuit to see that his circuit be duly supplied with books, and to take charge of all the books which are sent to him, from time to time, or which may be in his circuit; and he is to account with the presiding elder for the same."¹⁹ These books, of course, were mainly publications of the Methodist Book Concern, but they were books on a variety of subjects, such as biography, history, travel, philosophy, and ethics, as well as the Methodist "stand-bys," the works of Wesley, Fletcher, Clarke, Bangs, and Lee. At this early date there were no Methodist journals. The Western Christian Advocate began publication in 1834, while the Methodist Magazine did not begin operation until 1818.

There were few cabins on the frontier where reading matter was abundant. The cares of pioneer life and its hardships had largely destroyed the opportunity for cultural pursuits and there was very little demand for books. But the Methodist preachers resolutely carried books to the people and in most cases actually crowded them upon the settler. Many a frontier cabin would have been without a single book if some circuit rider had not insisted that books be purchased. This was a part of the preacher's duty, and most of the preachers were faithful in its performance. Among old collections of books, volumes may still be found bearing upon the flyleaf "Bought of Rev. _____, May _____, 18____, Price $_____." The books were read in the household, then were loaned to the neighbors until they made the circuit of the settlement.

The Western preachers were deeply interested in education, even though they themselves were generally unschooled men. As a testimony to this interest was Bethel Academy, erected in Jessamine County, Kentucky, in the latter years of the eighteenth century. It was the second institution of learning founded by Methodists in the United States. The Academy, built entirely by subscriptions obtained from the Western circuits, originated with Bishop Asbury and Francis Poythress and certain leading laymen of the region. The building erected was eighty by forty, and three stories high. It was designed to serve as a dormitory as well as for recitations and chapel. The Kentucky legislature thought well enough of the project to grant the institution six thousand acres of land. The people were generous to the limit of their ability, and for a time the school attracted numbers of students; but it proved poorly located, and there were few to patronize the school. The frontier was extremely poor, and finally it was deemed best to abandon it. It was not long, however, until Bethel Academy was followed by numerous successors, and in the first half of the nineteenth century many colleges and academies sprang up, founded by Methodist Conferences, in the States which once composed the Western Conference.²⁰

Another achievement of Methodism on the frontier was that it trained laymen in the art of public speaking and public leadership as perhaps nothing else was able to do. The local preachers and class leaders were chosen from among the more talented and better prepared of the members of the Church, and thus they received training for general political and social leadership. It was no mere accident that a local preacher, Edward Tiffin, became the first governor of the State of Ohio, and it is not strange that Peter Cartwright developed political ambitions.

WILLIAM BURK, Secretary.

F. ASBURY.

NOTE 1.—Bishop Asbury crossed over the mountains from Virginia to attend this session of the Western Conference. He left his horse and carriage east of the mountains and borrowed a horse to ride to Kentucky. On September 27 he speaks of climbing the steeps of Clinch and sleeping that night on the Cumberland. On October 2 they crossed the Kentucky River, and on October 3 reached Bethel, where the Conference was to be held. The minutes are dated the 6th, but Asbury speaks of Bishop Whatcoat and William McKendree preaching at Bethel on the 3d. Of Bethel Academy he has the following to say: "Here is Bethel—Cokesbury in miniature, eighty by thirty feet, three stories, with a high roof, and finished below. Now we want a fund and an income of 300 per year to carry it on—without which it will be useless. But it is too distant from public places, its being surrounded by the river Kentucky in part, we now find to be no benefit; thus all our excellencies are turned to defects. Perhaps Brother Poythress and myself were as much overseen with this place as Dr. Coke was with the seat of Cokesbury. But all is right that works right, and all is wrong that works wrong, and we must be blamed by men of slender sense for consequences impossible to foresee—for other people's misconduct. Sabbath day, Monday, and Tuesday we were shut up in Bethel with the traveling and local ministry and the trustees that could be called together. We ordained fourteen or fifteen local and traveling deacons. It was thought expedient to carry the first design of education into execution, and that we should employ a man of sterling qualifications, to be chosen by and under the direction of a select number of trustees, and others who should obligate themselves to see him paid, and take the profits, if any, arising from the establishment. Dr. Jennings was thought of, talked of, and written to." (Asbury's Journal, Vol. II., page 394.)

The appointments to the Western circuits for this year, as given in the General Minutes, are as follows:

KENTUCKY DISTRICT. William McKendree, P. Elder.

John A. Granade came recommended for admition on Trial. It is the Judgement of the Conference, that he has a certain hardness and stubbornness in his temper, which has produced, some improper Conclusions; but as he has given some hopeful assurance, that in future, he will be more teachable, and as his piety, and zeale, is not doubted, the Conference, is of opinion that he may be admitted, after receiving a Special Council from the Bishop.

Whereas Francis Poythress, appears to be incapable of taking a Station, it is agreed too by the Conference, that his name shall stand on the Minutes among the Elders; and that he shall have a porpotionable clame on the Conference, for his support.

William McKendree, Thomas Wilkerson, John Page, and John Watson are appointed a committee, to adjust the preachers' finances.

Quest: What Local preachers are ordained to the office of Deacons? Ansr. James Landrum, Jesse Thomas, and William Duzan.

It is the desire of this Conference, that the Presiding Elders, take it upon themselves to insist on the preachers in the Western Districts, to attend the next Yearly Conference.

Where shall the next Conference be held? Ansr. Cumberland. The arguments in favor of Cumberland, and which carried the Conference, these were advanced by John Page, and are as follows, 1st. The union, and friendly State of affairs, between the Methodist and Presbeterians, 2ly. There never was A Conference held there. Conference was voted to Cumberland, by a majority of two thirds. It is the opinion of this Conference, that there should be three permanent places for holding Conference, in the western district, (viz) Bethel in Kentucky, Bethel in Cumberland, and Ebenezer on Nolchucky.

WILLIAM BURK, Secretary.

F. ASBURY.

NOTE 2.—The Ebenezer referred to in the Minutes as the seat of the Conference of 1801 was in East Tennessee, on the Nollichucky River, in Greene County. (Hoss, "Life of McKendree.").

Bishop Asbury came to the Conference complaining "My bowels, and my poor horse's back are in bad order." John Watson, one of the Western preachers, was with him when he crossed the Holston and Watanga on September 28.

Of the Conference the bishop says: "Our brethren in Kentucky did not attend: they pleaded the greatness of the work of God. Twelve of us sat in conference three days; and we had not an unpleasant countenance, nor did we hear an angry word. . . . N. Snethen gave us two sermons. We ordained on Friday, Saturday, and Sabbath day, and upon each day I improved a little on the duties of ministers. On the Lord's day we assembled in the woods, and made a large congregation. . . . On Friday and Saturday evenings, and on Sabbath morning there was the noise of praise and shouting in the meetinghouse: it is thought there are twenty-five souls who have found the Lord; they are chiefly the children of Methodists—the children of faith and of many prayers." (Asbury's Journal, Vol. III., page 38.)

The appointments for the Western Conference for this year (1801) are given in the General Minutes as follows:

KENTUCKY DISTRICT. William McKendree, P. Elder.

Quest. When and where shall our next Conference be held? Ansr. At Mount Gerizim, in Kentucky, October 2nd, 1803.

WILLIAM BURK, Secretary.

FRANCIS ASBURY.

NOTE 3.—Bishop Asbury attended the session of the Western Conference in 1802, coming directly from Virginia. He came into Tennessee on September 13, and on the 16th attended a camp meeting which continued four days. He states that there were about 1,500 souls present. Here, he continues, "the heat, the restless nights, the water, or, it may be, all these combined made me sick indeed." On Sunday, the 19th, he is at Ebenezer, where the house was unable to hold the people and so he preaches from a stand in the woods. The next day he is sick and unwell. On the 22d we find him on the banks of the French Broad and preaching as he goes. On October 2 he finally reached the seat of the Conference, which he found in session. The Bishop, however, was too sick to preach, so two Presbyterian ministers supply the lack, "which they did with great fervency and fidelity." William McKendree was also called upon to assist in examining and stationing the preachers, though the Bishop was able to ordain. (Asbury's Journal, Vol. III., pages 78-81.)

The appointments for the Western Conference, 1802, were as follows:

JOURNAL OF THE WESTERN ANNUAL CONFERENCE, HELD AT MOUNT GERRIZIM, STATE OF KEN-TUCKY, OCTOBER 2, 1803.⁴

MEMBERS OF THE CONFERENCE.

Francis Asbury, Bishop.	John Sale,
William McKendree,	Hezekiah Harriman,
John Watson,	Samuel Douthit,
William Burk,	Louther Taylor,
Lewis Garrett,	Lawner Blackman,
Thomas Wilkerson,	Thomas Milligan,*
Moses Floyed,*	Moses Black,*
Benjamin Young,	Elisha Bowman,
	John A. Granite,

Those marked thus * were not present.

On motion resolved that William McKendree, John Watson, Thomas Wilkerson, Lewis Garrett, and John Sale be appointed a Committee of Claims.

Quest. 1. Who are admitted on Trial? Ansr. 1. Adjet McGuire, who travelled the Limestone Circuit nearly 12 months past, was well received, and useful; and came recommended according to rule.

2. William Pattison, who has travelled 3 months on the Miami Circuit. A man of but little education and small abilities, but is said to be pious, zealous, and useful, and came well recommended.

3. Anthony Houston, a man of tolerable gifts, has been about 13 months in the profession of religion, and travelled 3 months in Salt-river and Shelby Circuits, was well received and properly recommended.

4. Joseph Oglesby, who has been in profession of religion about two years, and has preached as a local preacher, about one year. A man of tolerable gifts, and came well recommended.

5. Abraham Amos, who has been in profession of religion two and a half years, of small gifts, and illiterate; but was useful and much esteemed in his neighbourhood. He was admitted, as a local Speaker, at the last Quarterly Meeting in Lexington Circuit, but at that time was not proposed to them as having any intention to travel, after which he attended several Quarterly Meetings, with the Elder, and was thought to be useful, the Conference admitted him into the Travelling Connection upon the Judgment of some of the Travelling preachers, who think he would have been recommended, if an application had been made.

6. John McClure, has been in the profession of religion about two years, and is judged to be a pious man, he has travelled about nine months in the Cumberland District. But brought no recommendation, from the Quarterly Meeting. It was thought to be the fault of the Presiding Elder, and therefore he was received upon the persuasion, that he could have obtained a recommendation, if application had been made.

7. Fletcher Sullivan, who came under the same circumstances, of John McClure, and is received upon the same principles.

8. John Johnson, from the Holston District, not present, but was recommended and received.

Quest. 2nd. Who remain on Trial? Ansr. 1st. Jacob Young, who is spoken well of as a man of piety, and improvable gifts. 2nd. William Crutchfield, is recommended as a pious and gifted man. 3rd. Ralph Lotspiech, a man some what peculiar, but is thought to improve, and amend. 4th. Jesse Walker, not present, but is spoken well of as a preacher, and Christian. 5. Leaven Edney, not present, but is said to possess grace and gifts, and has been useful.

Quest. 3rd. Who are received into full Connection? Ansr. 1. Elisha Bowman, who is well reported of, as having been indefatigable in his labours and useful. He has been three years in deacon's orders, and now admitted to the Eldership. 2nd. John A. Granade, it was suspected that his temporal business in Cumberland was not satisfactorily adjusted. Bro. Granade proposes to arbitrate the business, and thereupon he was received and admitted to the office of a Deacon. 3rd. Benjamin Young, according to the report of John Sale, and others, Stands Charged of having said, that he composed a certain song, when in truth he did not;—that he had the misfortune to get his horses thye broke, when it was not so; and that he has baptized, contrary to the order of the M. E. Church; after B. Young's reply, it was the opinion of the Conference, that the reports might mistake what said Young did say respecting the two first charges, and that his acknowledgement, was sufficient for the last. After a plain talke, and Hopeful promises, he was admitted into Connection, and ordained to the office of Deacon;—and in consideration of his being appointed a Missionary to the Illinois, he was ordained to the office of an Elder.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CLAIMS.

We the Committee, judge it proper under the present circumstances; to take the whole of our brethren's, deficiencies into consideration, and considering them as suffering Brethren, we judge it proper to make them equal in their loosing; in order to which, we have examined their accounts, and now present you with the following statement; expecting, at the same time that the Conference, will inspect, correct, or ratify, as they may judge proper. William Burk's account stands thus:

Family expenses,	$44 12
Travelling expenses,	24 63
Deficient in salary,	24 50

$93 25

We Judge that it is right for Bro. Burk to pay board for his wife, and that the people, if they please, may pay the board for him, but that he has no Just demand on the Conference for it. His deficiencies is therefore only, $49.13.

Benjamin Lakin's account, $28.95.

But it appears that the Circuit maintained Bro. Lakin's wife and her Beast; gratis. It is therefore our opinion, that it is ungenerous in him to bring a demand on Conference; and seeing there are others more needy, it is our judgement that he ought not to have anything.

Jesse Walker's account, $165.37.

And it appears to us, that $76 are for children. It is our judgement that the demand for children be deducted, and then he is deficient $89.37.

Benjamin Young's is $28.89, but $4.75 is for Doctor's bills, which we judge to be an improper charge therefore allow him but $24.14.

Francis Poythress stands on our Journal as a claimant for $80.00. But it appears that he is able to support himself, and does not expect or wish his support from us. We therefore judge, he should not be considered as dependant on us.

Moneys on hand to make up deficiencies,—

This Conference voluntarily relinquish their demand on the next Conference for their deficiencies, and resolve that what money's they may have shall be applied to the most needy preachers, at the discretion of the next Conference.

Ezekiel Burdine made application by letter to this Conference for a location, but the circumstances of his Marriage, and removal from this, to the South Carolina Conference, make it necessary, in our judgement, to refer his case to that Conference, where all the parts may be fully considered; and Bishop Asbury is therefore requested to take the papers, which respect the case of Ezekiel Burdine.

At our last Conference, Stephen Timmons was appointed Supernumerary to Scioto Circuit. This year he asks for a partial Station, but by his letter, and Elisha Bowman's testimony it appears he will take no Station but in Scioto Circuit, and it's judged improper to give him that Station. The Conference is of opinion that it would be most advisable to give him a location, Resolved accordingly. Lawner Blackman and Louthur Taylor, in consequence of being removed from the Philadelphia Conference to the Western Conference, lack some few months of a legal probation for the Elder's office. The Conference is of opinion, that as their names have Stood among the Deacons on the Minutes for two years; and as their Stations required the office of Elders; that they should stand their election; they are accordingly elected.

Conference, Adjourned; to meet again on the 2nd day of October, 1803.* At Mount Garrizim State of Kentucky.

Signed in and by order of the Conference.

WILLIAM BURK, Secretary.

FRANCIS ASBURY.

*The date here intended is evidently 1804.

NOTE 4.—The seat of the Western Conference in 1803 was Mount Gerizim, Harrison County, Ky. Bishop Asbury came from Ohio, having reached that State on September 8, at Steubenville. Here he was to have preached in the courthouse; but as it would not hold the people, they went to “a Presbyterian tent.” At Charlestown he preached in the courthouse, and on the 12th reached Zanesville. Passing through New Lancaster and Pickaway Plains, he finally reached Chillicothe, where he was entertained at the home of Governor Tiffin. Marietta at that time contained 1,000 houses and Cincinnati as many, while Hamilton contained 500. Coming into Kentucky, he crossed Bourbon County, and on Thursday, the 30th of September, he reached the seat of the Conference. (Journal, Vol. III., pages 114-117; McFerrin, “Methodism in Tennessee,” Vol. I., page 419.)

Speaking of the Conference, Asbury in his Journal says: “We entered fully upon our conference work; but I had to preach nevertheless. We had preaching every day; and the people continued singing and praying, night and day, with little intermission. On Wednesday the meeting closed. We hope there were twenty souls converted to God, besides five who are reported to have been converted at a family meeting. Our conference ended on Thursday the sixth. I had taken cold, but rode twelve miles to Smith’s, and was driven by illness to bed.” (Journal, Vol. III., page 117.)

Accompanied by four of the preachers, Asbury proceeds southward into Tennessee. Of his journey into the West this year, Bishop Asbury says, in the entry for October 14: “What a road we have passed! Certainly the worst on the whole continent, even in the best weather; yet, bad as it was, there were four or five hundred crossing the rude hills whilst we were: I was powerfully struck with the consideration, that there were at least as many thousand emigrants annually from east to west: we must take care to send preachers after these people. We have made one thousand and eighty miles from Philadelphia; and now, what a detail of sufferings might I give, fatiguing to me to write, and perhaps to my friends to read! A man who is well mounted, will scorn to complain of the roads, when he sees men, women, and children, almost naked, paddling bare-foot and bare-legged along, or laboring up the rocky hills, whilst those who are best off have only a horse for two or three children to ride at once. If these adventurers have little or nothing to eat, it is no extraordinary circumstance; and not uncommon, to encamp in the wet woods after night—in the mountains it does not rain, but pours. I too have my sufferings, perhaps peculiar to myself; pain, and temptation; the one of the body, and the other of the spirit; no room to retire to—that in which you sit common to all, crowded with women and children, the fire occupied by cooking, much and long loved solitude not to be found, unless you choose to run out into the rain, in the woods: six months in the year I have had, for thirty-two years, occasionally, to submit to what will never be agreeable to me; but the people, it must be confessed, are amongst the kindest souls in the world. But kindness will not make a crowded log cabin, twelve feet by ten, agreeable; without are cold and rain; and within, six adults, and as many children, one of which is all motion; the dogs, too, must sometimes be admitted. On Saturday, at Felix Ernest's, I found that amongst my other trials, I had taken the itch; and, considering the filthy houses and filthy beds I have met with, in coming from the Kentucky Conference, it is perhaps strange that I have not caught it twenty times: I do not see that there is any security against it, but by sleeping in a brimstone shirt: poor bishop! But we must bear it for the elect's sake. I have written some letters to our local brethren, and read the book of Daniel since I have been in this house." (Journal, Vol. III., pages 118, 119.)

illed about six months, and came recommended by the Quarterly Meeting Conference of Red-river Circuit. 4th, Miles Harper, a native of Virginia, born November 4th, 1784, professes to have been converted to God about 4 years, has travelled 9 months, was pretty well received, and came recommend(ed) by the Quarterly Conference of Levingston Circuit. 5th, Edmond Wilcox, a native of Virginia, is now about twenty-seven years of age; has been in the profession of religion about 2 years, is altogether untried as a speaker, but came recommended by the Quarterly Meeting Conference of Red-river Circuit. 6th, Joshua Barnes, a married man, four or five years in the profession of religion, has travelled about 6 months, of slender gifts, but undoubted piety, came recommended by the Quarterly Conference of Levingston Circuit. 7th, James Axley, has been converted about two years, has travelled some months, was received as a man of undoubted piety, but small gifts, and came recommended by the Quarterly Conference in Levingston Circuit. 8th, Joshua Riggins, who has been a professor of religion about 4 or 5 years, has exhorted in his neighbourhood for some time, and came recommended by the Quarterly Meeting Conference of Barrin Circuit, but his gifts are altogether unknown to us at present. 9th, Thomas Lasley, a native of Virginia, born March 31st, 1782, for about 2 years he has professed the knowledge of sin forgiven, has travelled three months, he came recommended by the Quarterly Meeting Conference of Wayne Circuit, where his grace and gifts are thought favourable of.

Ohio District: 1st, Caleb Wesley Cloud, born February 11th day, 1782, in the state of Delaware, Newcastle County, converted January 8th day, 1801, his piety and gifts were spoken well of where he was known; he therefore obtained a recommendation from the Quarterly Conference of Hockhocking Circuit.

2nd, Benjamin Edge, born February 27th, 1774, made application to the last Conference but was not received, but was afterwards received by the presiding elder, and Quarterly Meeting Conference, of the Miami Circuit, and travelled nine months, he has been in the profession of religion about 3 years, is esteemed for his undoubted piety, but of contracted abilities, accompanied with some peculiarities, and came recommended by the Quarterly Conference of Muskingum Circuit.

3rd, Obed Noland, a native of Virginia, was born March 6th, 1777, who has professed religion 3 years, was recommended by the Quarterly Conference of Danville Circuit, to the presiding elder of the Kentucky District, and was put on a Circuit, continued about three months, and went home of his own accord, but came forward to the annual Conference, and desired to be tried again, it was the opinion of his acquaintances, that he professed gifts and graces to be useful, and as he is much addicted to the nerve complaint, the Conference are of opinion that his failure should be looked over, and that he should be admitted upon his former recommendation.

Quest. Who are admitted into full Connection?

Ansr. 1st. Jacob Young, a man of considerable abilities, who has travelled in Kentucky and Holston Districts, and has been in some measure useful, his character stands fair. 2nd. William Crutchfield, a man of good abilities, and has travelled in Kentucky and Cumberland Districts; has been in some degree useful, his character stands fair. 3rd. Ralph Lotspiech, who has travelled in Kentucky and Cumberland Districts, a man in the beginning of his publick labours but of small abilities, but has improved considerably, and the last year tolerable useful, his character stands fair. 4th. Jesse Walker, who entered the travelling Connection in the capassity of a married man, he has travelled in the Cumberland Destrict, a man of considerable gifts and usefulness, who still feels willing to give himself to the worke, his charecter examined and stands fair.

Quest. Who are located? Ans. 1st. Samuel Douthit, who applied by letter for a location and a majority of the Conference were of opinion that he should obtain said location. 2nd. Moses Black, applied to the Conference by letter for a location, or a dispensation to go to South Carolina, to see after some of his sister's children, the Conference has accordingly granted him a dispensation for three months. 3rd. John A. Granade, applied to the Conference by letter for a location, and obtained the same. 4th. Moses Floyd, who applied to Conference by letter for a location. Some deficulties existed which may be known by reference to some letters addressed to the preachers and Conference, which are filed; the Conference are of opinion that their is no just ground, for crimination, and therefore have granted him a location. 5th. Benjamin Young, who applied to Conference by letter for a location, but in the same letter states that he has conducted himself in such a way that he laid himself open to the judgement of the Conference, who after metureing the subject, judged proper to exclude him; the grounds on which the Conference excluded him may be seen by reference to the letters, which are filed.

The Conference proceeded to elect William Crutchfield, Jacob Young, and Ralph Lotspiech to the office of Deacons, but Bishops not being present, they were not ordained but returned on the minutes as elected.

The Conference proceeded to elect Jesse Walker, Joab Watson, Asa Shinn, and George Askin to the office of Elders; but the Bishops not being present, they were not ordained, but returned on the minutes as elected; Joab Watson, Asa Shinn and George Askin had not travelled out their probation, but being in the same situation of Lawner Blackman and Louthier Taylor, the Conference are of opinion that they may be elected on the same principals, whose case may be seen be referring to the Journal of the last Annual Conference.

It is the joint opinion of Thomas Wilkerson and the Conference, that at present he does not possess strength of body sufficient for the toils of a station; the Conference therefore grant him a dispensation, until he and the presiding Elder of the Kentucky District shall judge it proper for him to take a station.

Conference adjourned to meet again at Anthony Houston's, October 2nd, 1805.

WILLIAM BURK, Secretary. WILLIAM MCKENDREE.

NOTE 5.—Neither Bishop Asbury nor Bishop Whatcoat was present at the Conference of 1804. Bishop Asbury lay sick in Western Pennsylvania, and there are no entries in his Journal from September 5 to October 9. (Asbury's Journal, Vol. III., pages 146, 147.)

Peter Cartwright, who entered the Western Conference this year, however, states in his Autobiography that Bishop Asbury presided at the Conference. (Autobiography, 72.) This is evidently a mistake, as Asbury states in his Journal under date of October 9, "After thirty-four days of afflictive illness, I recommence my journal. I have been, during my illness, at Harry Stevens's; kinder souls than this family I could not wish; but there were many of them and others continually coming and going," etc. (Journal III., 146.)

Another proof of the mistake of Cartwright is contained in the Journal of the Western Conference, which states that "Neither of the Bishops were present, being prevented by affliction," nor does the signature of Bishop Asbury appear at the end of the Conference Journal for this year.

The appointments for the Western Conference for 1804 are given in the General Minutes as follows:

On the Sabbath day I preached to about three thousand souls. On Tuesday, after the rise of conference, I rode to Lexington; and on Wednesday to J. S. Hoard's, Jessamine County. NOTE 7.—Of this Conference, Bishop Asbury states: "Saturday 19, the Western Conference commenced its sitting, and ended on Monday." This date does not agree with that of the Journal of the Conference, which is September 15. Further Bishop Asbury says: "The Mississippi missionary preachers could not be spared, they thought, from their work, and therefore did not come. We had great peace. There are fourteen hundred added within the bounds of this conference. Of the fifty-five preachers stationed, all were pleased. In unison with the preceding conferences, an answer was given to Dr. Coke's letter. We had preaching at noon and night, and good was done. The brethren were in want, and could not suit themselves; so I parted with my watch, my coat, and my shirt. By order of the conference, I preached a funeral discourse on the death of our dear friend Whatcoat, from John i. 47-50; there were not far from two thousand people present. If good were done, which I trust and hope, it is some compensation for my sufferings—thirteen hundred miles in heat and sickness on the road; and in the house, restless hours, the noise of barking dogs, impatient children, and people trotting about, and opening and shutting doors at all hours." LIBERTY HILL, TENNESSEE, October 7th, 1808.

The Western Conference Assembled to all under Her Patronage
Sendeth Greeting.

Dear Brethren: We feel ourselves as much as ever interested in the happiness of our fellow creatures and are conscious that a large field is opening in almost every direction for the spread of the Gospel. Hundreds and thousands are inviteing us to come to their help, many valuable men are willing to take up their Cross and brook all the difficulties of an itinerant life in order to spread the gospel of the Redeemer's Kingdom, but we lack means for their supply, for after all the exertions that have been made in the several Circuits and the conscientious application of $470, which is all we receive from the Book Concern and Chartered Fund, we still find ourselves insolvent $2,016.34½. We have therefore thought proper to address you on the occasion and solicit your assistance to inable us to spread useful knowledge and do all the good we possbly can.

We hope, dear Brethren, you will not be backward in setting your hands to paper and giving us your word that you will pay us whatever sums you may think proper to affix to your names. We wish you to understand us, we do not mean that these collections are to be applied to the preachers as their Quarterage. We hope you will do all you can to make up their preachers their allowance in their several Circuits, and that this extra collection be transmitted to the Annual Conference to meet the destresses of the more indigent. We assure you dear Brethern that we shall be particular in the distrebution of whatever sum or sums you may please to forward to us.

We conclude by praying that God may prosper you in your souls and bodies, in your baskett and store, and when our toils and sufferings are at an end we hope to meet you in the land of Rest.

We are, dear Brethern, yours in the bonds of a peacable Gospel.

NOTE 9.—To the Conference of 1808 Bishop Asbury came, in an "afflicted state," by way of Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Kentucky, preaching, ordaining, and counselling as he came. Traveling with him is Martin Boehm, who occasionally preaches in German. Among the places where the Bishop preached are Bush Creek, Chillicothe, Deer Creek Camp Meeting, Xenia, Little Miami, Lawrenceburg, in Indiana, and at many of the cabins along the way. He spent from September 8 to October 1 passing through Kentucky. In his Journal for October 1 is this entry: "I began conference. I preached twice on the Sabbath day; and again on Tuesday. Our conference was a camp-meeting, where the preachers ate and slept in tents. We sat six hours a day, stationed eighty-three preachers, and all was peace. On Friday the sacrament was administered, and we hope there were souls converted, and strengthened, and sanctified. We made a regulation respecting slavery; it was, that no member of society, or preacher, should sell or buy a slave unjustly, inhumanly, or covetously; the case, on complaint, to be examined for a member by the quarterly meeting; and for a preacher an appeal to an annual conference. Where the guilt was proved the offender to be expelled. The families of the Hills, Sewalls, and Cannon, were greatly and affectionately attentive to us."

Returning east, the Bishop and his party crossed the mountains into North Carolina. Of the month of October this year (1808), the Bishop says: "It has been a serious October to me; I have laboured and suffered; but I have lived near to God." (Asbury's Journal, Vol. III., pages 247-252.)

The Conference Proceeded to receive the report of the Special Committee who were appointed to write a letter to the Quarterly Meeting Conference of Deer Creek Circuit the letter reported as follows:

Cincinnati, October 6th, A.D., 1809.

The Western Annual Conference Assembled to the Quarterly Conference of Deer Creek Circuit Sendeth Greeting.

Dearly Beloved Brethren: We feel ourselves as ever united to you interested in your happiness & while we are engaged in promoting the Salvation of mankind in general permit us hereby to Signify our unfeigned Love to you & our religious desire to Assist you in every case (where our aid is thought necessary) in adjusting any differences or otherwise. Dear Brethren You are (no doubt) aware that Brothers Scott and Martin came from you to us for the adjustment of certain differences. We in due respect to you & them have considered their cases & have done the best we could with them; but finding insurmountable difficulties in the way of Setting them in the Annual Conference & from conversing with them do find them disposed to adjust the existing difficulties on amicable terms; & hoping that You will meet them in the Spirit of the Gospel, each imprest with the propriety of doing to others as you would they should do unto you of forgiving even as you by your heavenly Father have been forgiven; & we humbly advise them to return to you, hoping that you in your wisdom will devise & execute such conciliatory & effectual Measures as shall Ultimately terminate in the great, the Glorious & desirable blessing of peace among yourselves.

Beloved Brethren we hope you are sufficiently imprest with an idea of the Necessity of an union in the Church of God; We do earnestly hope that while we your faithful suffering Itinerant Servants are engaged in spreading the good news of Salvation to the end of the earth that you as pillars in the house of our God and Coworkers together with us will do all you can to feed the flock of Christ & keep them together in the bonds of Christian love.

And while we desire that you may amicably & Satisfactorily adjust the existing difficulties to the Salvation of the Church & the glory of God. Still praying for your present & future happiness we subscribe ourselves dear brethren your most affectionate friends & willing servants for Christ's sake.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON BISHOP MCKENDREE IN THE CHAIR.

Bro. Robt. Cloud's case before the Conference which was brought in by a Committee consisting of Ralph Lotspiech, Thos. Lasley, & William Mitchell, James Quinn Presiding Elder. The whole of the Proceedings of the Committee may be seen by referring to the papers, now in the hands of the Secretary. The Conference are of Opinion that the charge is not supported by the evidence produced.

William Burke proceeded to read the report of the Special Committee Appointed to examine into doctrines—no amendment was offered neither was there any opposition the question was called for & it passed with only few exceptions & is as followeth:

It is the opinion of your Committee.

I. That Original Sin is corruption of the nature whereby man is far gone from Original righteousness & of his own nature inclined to evil & that continually.

II. That the Savior of the World tasted death for every man that all (infants not excepted) are benefitted by Attonement, that as they were not lost in Adam by a voluntary act of theirs, so neither is a voluntary act of theirs necessary to their Salvation.

III. As to the manner of Qualifying infants for Heaven, we pretend not to know, nor are we able to say, how nearly, or, remotely the justification of an infant & that of an adult are connected or how to get out of one into the other, with, or without Sin, to us these knotty Questions do not appear to be revealed, & your Committee humbly confesseth we have no intuitive knowledge of these things, for we have forgotten if we ever knew where or how our moral Agency or accountability took place nor do we know how it was with ourselves (much less every child that cometh into the world) a minute or an hour before or after this accountability took place, therefore to attempt an explanation is in our opinion to undertake what cannot be performed. It is an attempt to be wise above what is written.

Hence we conclude that the proper way to preach the Gospel is

I. To preach the fall of man as it is held forth in the Scriptures & illustrated in Mr. Fletcher's Unequaled Appeal.

II. To Set forth the Attonement in its full Scriptural extent as we believe Messrs. Wesley & Fletcher have done.

And when circumstances make it necessary to Apply these Grand doctrines to the case of infants, proceed to Shew that men are to be judged by revelation of a righteous judgement & will Stand acquitted or condemned according to their words works & deeds done in the body & that the Law does not take cognisance of the words works or deeds of infants & so lay the foundation of their acquittal & leave them & their qualifications for heaven in the hands of a merciful Redcemer & where Scripture leave them & so keep out of the field of conjecture which frequently leads to dissention disputation & Schism.

But when we apply these grand truths to men as we are taught by the Gospel to do, we Should Authoritatively demand repentance Faith & Holiness in all their relative branches, in connection with their inseparable & proper fruits. The Gospel being our Standard.

A rising vote being taken on Several particular Neighborhoods requesting the next Annual Conference the vote being taken Shelby obtained it with the number of 33 votes to begin Nov. 5th, 1809 to be held at New Chapel.

MONDAY MORNING BISHOP MCKENDREE IN THE CHAIR.

William Houston applied to the Conference for Revocation of his Location the Conference are of Opinion that Said Location be Revoked.

Caleb W. Cloud proceeded to Read a Letter addressed To the Inhabetants of Cincinnatti in Answer to a Letter Addresssed by them to the Conference.

The Conference are of Opinion that said Letter be Sent to them. Lawner Blackman proceeded to Read Some Statements giving an account of Moses Black Decs'd. The Conference are of Opinion that the Said Account be Received by Striking Out the Part Respecting Temporals. It is the Opinion of the Conference that Moses Black's Widow be Considered a Necessitous Case.

James King brought forward an appeal from Ann Norwood of Fleming Circuit Respecting a Negro she had bought. It is the Opinion of the Chair that the appeal does not come before the Conference the Vote being taken the Conference Concur'd in Opinion.

Joseph Benett Requested that a Recommendation be given him, as he expects to go to N' Jersey next Spring the Conference agree that such a Recommendation be given him.

Resolved that Bishop McKendree be Allowed to take with him a Preacher to the S. Carolina Conference.

Signed in and by order of the Conference.

WILLIAM BURK, Secretary.

W. MCKENDREE.

NOTE 10.—In the late summer of 1809 Bishop Asbury, traveling with Martin Boehm, passed through Pennsylvania, Western Virginia, into Ohio to meet with the Western Conference, which was to convene at Cincinnati on September 30. This year he is riding in a carriage, but the roads were “disagreeable,” and “While tugging forward” in the Wills Creek bottom, “crack went the breastband and crack went the shaft.” At Springfield he preaches to four hundred people. At Zanesville, “named after Colonel Zane, who so kindly entertained us at Wheeling,” Boehm preached. The Bishop on September 3 preaches at the “elegant new court-house in New-Lancaster” and on Saturday they are entertained at the home of Doctor Tiffin. Asbury is charmed at the view from Mr. Tiffin’s house, “but these long talks about land and politics suit me not; I take little interest in either subject: O Lord, give me souls, and keep me holy!” He travels down the Valley of the Little and Great Miami “occupied by New Lights, Shakers, Methodists—and sinners to be sure.” On Sunday, the 23rd of September, he speaks at the “new chapel in Millford.” Monday is filled with reading and writing. Thursday “Fair Cincinnati brought us up.” Here he finds the Church enlarged and the society increased. Many of the preachers, he states, will be absent, evidently because of sickness. The Bishop is particularly impressed with the number of camp meetings being held in the West. “Muskingum district will have four camp-meetings,” the attendance ranging from one to three thousand. “In Miami district seventeen camp-meetings in the year; in Scioto circuit four; Hockhocking two; Deer Creek two; Mad River three; Whitewater two; Cincinnati two; and White two; . . . seventeen camp-meetings for the Indiana district. . . . More of camp-meetings—I hear and see the great effects produced by them, and this year there will be more than ever.” On the Sabbath, at the Conference, Learner Blackman preaches at nine o’clock, Bishop McKendree at twelve, and William Burke at three. There are three thousand people on the ground. On Sabbath, October 8, the Conference closed its labors and the “members separated on Monday.” Bishop Asbury and his party depart, going by way of Kentucky, Tennessee, and over the mountains into South Carolina. (Asbury's Journal, Vol. III., pages 273-278.)

DECISIONS OF THE CONFERENCE AGAINST BLAIR.

Charge the 3rd. the Conference confirm the report of the committee.

Charge 4, Guilty of imprudent conduct.

Charge 6th. Conference voted his conduct improper.

Charges 13th. Conference voted him guilty.

PALLIATING CONSIDERATIONS.

1. The irregularity of the Process at the beginning—having been in public.

2. Want of Specification. Consequently the charges could not be ascertained till Testimony was examined & thus it appeared that some of the charges were supported by a single witness & that witness was the accuser.

3rd. Some Charges originated in Private conversation some from his exercise in congregations in open day—when the work of God was going powerfully among the People.

4. The time when the testimony was taken was at a Crisis when there was considerable agitation & much irritation among the People witnesses & Parties this was plainly manifested.

The Conference after duly & deliberately weighing all those charges & circumstances taken together voted his Suspension from all official services in our Church.

The case of Edward Tiffin a local Preacher came before the Conference—who appealed from the Judgement of the Quarterly Meeting Conference of Deer Creek Circuit. Joseph S. Collins from Chillicothe made some statements proving the illegality of the Proceedings in the Process of the trial of Edward Tiffin. The Conference left it with the Episcopacy to decide whether the proceedings were consistant with the Methodist Discipline or not. It was decided by the Episcopacy that the Q Comitée was not conformable to the laws of religion that the case of Edward Tiffin ought not to have been submitted to the Q Committe therefore its improper for it to come before this Conference.

The case of W. Winans considered. Charges preferred against him, but as he was not present his case was laid over till he can return from the Mississippi District.

NOTE 12.—The annual tour of the circuits and Conferences brought Bishop Asbury early in September, 1811, into Ohio, bound for the Western Conference to convene in Cincinnati. He finds camp meetings going on in many of the circuits and he preaches frequently in the camps. At Springfield he preaches, but his service is interrupted by a general muster of militia. At Dayton he preaches in the courthouse, where about a thousand hearers assembled. He mentions finding many old acquaintances in Ohio whom he had known in the older States. At Lebanon he helps the people plan for a new church of brick, to be forty by sixty feet. He arrives in Cincinnati on September 27, and on the Sunday following ordains twenty preachers, among them James B. Finley. Great crowds attended the Conference, for he tells us, "We occupied the market-house as well as the chapel." He states, "I had little trouble about the stations—I heard of no complaints. There were one hundred and two preachers: one hundred of whom are stationed: we lack twenty-two." (Asbury's Journal, Vol. III., pages 316-318.)
