The W.F.M.S. also sent Mary C. Elliott, who arrived in India in 1885, to give her assistance but after a year she married William H. Stephens. In 1887 Minnie F. Abrams joined the group as assistant missionary. A Christian girls' school was opened this year supervised by Miss Abrams and soon expanded into an orphanage and a boarding school. By 1891 there were three day schools, in addition to the Christian girls' school, open-air evangelistic meetings, and house-to-house visitation. Mary E. Carroll came to the field in 1888 and at once took a leading part in the program. Mary Kennedy, who had been a successful teacher in the Des Moines, Iowa, public schools, joined the staff of the Christian Girls' School in 1892 and the next year established a kindergarten. Miss Christina H. Lawson this same year came to the aid of Miss DeLine in zenana work. Illness and death seriously handicapped the women's program. Miss DeLine, because of ill health, left India in 1895 and in 1897 Mary Carroll died. A year later Miss Abrams became superintendent of an undenominational institution, the Ramabai Home for Indian widows. In 1894 Mary Kennedy married the Rev. L. A. Core of the parent Board.³¹⁰

On her arrival in Madras with her husband in 1884, Mrs. A. W. Rudisill immediately noticed the lack of educational facilities for girls. Government schools and colleges had been provided for boys and young men only. An appeal was sent to the W.F.M.S. for funds and an appropriation was made by the Baltimore Branch to supply the need. To assist her Mrs. Rudisill enlisted Miss Grace Stephens,* who in 1886 established a zenana mission. Within a short time some thirty-five zenanas were being regularly visited. Mrs. Rudisill wrote of her: "Her work is a marvel to many who have been long in the mission field. She is gentle and winning in her manner, loves and respects those for whom she labors, and has strong faith in God." In 1887 Mary A. Hughes arrived from America and was given charge of the Madras women's work. With eight children as a nucleus she established an orphanage. A high-caste girls' school with an enrollment of twenty-five pupils was conducted in a zenana, and a day school for children of the depressed classes in Pudupet. In 1890 the responsibility was divided, Miss Hughes taking the orphanage and schools and Miss Stephens the zenana program. The next year Miss Hughes' marriage to D. O. Ernsberger left the entire program in Miss Stephens' capable hands. By 1894 the work under Miss Stephens encompassed the orphanage school, now with sixty pupils, three city day schools, five village schools, eight Sunday schools, and zenana visiting in six different districts. She had as helpers a matron and six young women assistants, three Bible women, four village schoolteachers, nine city schoolteachers, an evangelist, and two others. In addition she edited the Tamil Woman's Friend, a monthly periodical which had been begun by Mrs. Rudisill, and she also became superintendent of the Madras Deaconess Home.³¹¹

In 1886 an urgent request came to the W.F.M.S. for missionary assistance for women and children in Singapore. When the appeal came up for consideration in the General Executive meeting, the committee felt that the Society should not assume any additional responsibilities. But Mrs. Mary C. Nind, corresponding secretary of the Minneapolis Branch, saw in it a challenge to their organization and declared, "Frozen Minnesota will send help to perishing souls on the Equator," and promised to raise $6,000. At the South India

* Grace Stephens was an Anglo-Indian woman who had been converted in the Taylor meetings. She responded wholeheartedly to Mrs. Rudisill's appeal for assistance and for many years was the center of Methodist women's work in Madras. Her sister and three brothers also became active missionary workers. She became a deaconess and was influential in the development and management of the Deaconess Home in Madras. She was adopted as a missionary by the Baltimore Branch and supported by it for many years.—L. M. Hodgkins, op. cit., pp. 43 f.

Conference (February, 1887) Sophia Blackmore,* who had just arrived in Madras from Australia in company with the American Methodist evangelist, Isabella Leonard, was present, hoping for an appointment. The W.F.M.S. was approached on the matter of sending Miss Blackmore to Singapore, and gave approval.³¹²

Miss Blackmore arrived in Singapore on July 18, 1887, and on August 15 opened a Tamil † girls' school. Nine little girls, "dressed in their gayest and bedecked with much jewellery, gazed with solemn brown eyes" at the foreign people. Mr. Rama Krishna Row, a member of a Tamil "mutual improvement" society which had been formed earlier, supplied free of rent "a small shop house in Short Street" as a schoolroom, and other members contributed money for the teacher's pay and for desks, benches, and blackboard. When the shop was outgrown the sole trustee of the Christian Institute, Middle Road, placed the building at the disposal of the missionary. Later the Minneapolis Branch paid off the mortgage of $1,700. and it became mission property, used first as a school and later as a church. In August, 1888, a Chinese girls' school was opened in Telok Ayer, the Chinese suburb of Singapore. In some Chinese families the girls were taught in the homes, daily or two days a week. Other than the schools and the home teaching, Miss Blackmore's time was taken up by language study, and with visiting in Indian, Chinese, and Eurasian homes. In 1888 the missionary had three assistants and two teachers. For one year the work was included within the Bengal Conference and in 1889 became a part of the newly organized Malaysia Mission.³¹³

In Baroda, once again, women's work was inaugurated by a missionary wife. When E. F. Frease was sent out in 1889 to take over the newly opened Gujarati work, his wife and her sister, Anna M. Thompson, accompanied him. Together the women started teaching, and the next year Miss Thompson became a W.F.M.S. appointee. Before long a school and orphanage were in operation. The W.F.M.S. also appointed Dr. Izillah Ernsberger—sister of the missionary—to open medical work. During her first year she treated 3,800 patients in the dispensary and made over three hundred and fifty calls on patients in their homes. During the second year over 4,300 persons were treated, and a second dispensary opened. Patients in 1893 numbered 6,800. With two native assistants Christian teaching was maintained in twelve villages in the vicinity of the city. Visits were made during 1894 in nearly four hundred villages. By the next year a Girls' Boarding School was making such a good record in examinations that the government grant-in-aid was increased.³¹⁴

* Sophia Blackmore (1857-1945), of Scotch Congregational lineage, was born in New South Wales. She early became interested in missions and decided that God had called her to be a missionary. On an evangelistic tour in Australia Isabella Leonard collected money to pay the outgoing expense of a missionary and persuaded Miss Blackmore to accompany her to India. Under the auspices of the Minneapolis Branch she gave thirty-six years of fruitful service to the Malaysia Mission.—Ibid., pp. 48 f.; Sophia Blackmore, "A Record of Forty Years of Woman's Work in Malaya," ms., ch. I, 8.

† There was a considerable Tamil population in Singapore, some of whom had been educated in the American Board School in Ceylon. They thoroughly believed in education for girls as well as boys.

In July, 1890, Louisa Blackmar was transferred from North India by Bishop Thoburn to undertake women's work in Hyderabad. She succeeded in opening a school under W.F.M.S. auspices within the walled city with nine Marathi girls. In September a school entirely for Mohammedan girls, also within the city, was started with forty pupils. Two other schools were opened, a school for Mohammedan girls outside the city gates in a neighborhood where there were no other educational facilities for children, and earlier than any of the others (1889) a school in Chadarghat for European, Eurasian, and Indian Christian children. These schools met with little opposition and, educationally speaking, were highly successful. Sunday schools were maintained in connection with the day schools as interest grew.

In 1894 Bishop Thoburn appointed Miss Blackmar as one member of an exploring party to investigate the opportunities for Christian schools in Bastar state. The trip involved a journey of three hundred miles through wilderness and jungle, across wide rivers and through dense forests, but led at last into a valley of promise, three hundred by one hundred and fifty miles, populated by millions of people who had never heard the Gospel. She was so impressed by the Godavari Valley and its people that she resolved to return at the earliest opportunity. In 1895 she went back, under the double appointment to Hyderabad and Sironcha, negotiated for property, and put two Bible women to work at her own expense. In 1897 she was appointed to Sironcha where a many-sided mission was established under W.F.M.S. auspices.³¹⁵

The W.F.M.S. sent to South India Conference in fourteen years (1878-92) fifteen missionaries, as well as a number to the Bengal Conference,* and in addition took under its auspices one (Grace Stephens) born in India. Eight of the American missionaries were married within a few years after their arrival. Of those who remained unmarried, one served for nine years; two for eleven years; two for twelve years; one for thirty-two years; and two for thirty-three years. Three died in India. As the foregoing account has shown, most of the educational work for women and girls in the South India Conference during these years was begun and maintained by the missionaries of the Society.

MISSIONARY DEACONESS MOVEMENT

The Methodist Deaconess Movement, officially recognized by the 1888

* The missionaries, other than those mentioned in biographical notes in preceding pages, and the branches which sent them were: 1878, Margaret E. Layton, Baltimore; 1881, Ellen H. Warner, Cincinnati (m. 1887, D. O. Fox); 1880, Mattie B. Spence, Northwestern (m. 1882, Perrie); 1883, Mary McKesson, Northwestern (m. 1886, Charles G. Conklin); 1884, Sarah M. DeLine, Northwestern; Margaret Hedrick, New York (m. 1894, John D. Miles); 1885, Mary C. Elliott, New York (m. 1886, William H. Stephens); Julia E. Wisner, Cincinnati; 1887, Minnie F. Abrams, Minneapolis; Mary A. Hughes, New York (m. 1891, D. O. Ernsberger); 1888, Mary E. Carroll, Northwestern; Izillah Ernsberger, M.D., Cincinnati; Anna M. Thompson, Philadelphia (m. 1895, W. H. Stephens); 1891, Mary Kennedy, Des Moines (m. 1894, L. A. Core); Catherine Wood, Des Moines; Alice A. Evans, Des Moines.

W.F.M.S. missionaries to the Bengal Conference were: 1888, Estella M. Files, New York; Martha Day, Des Moines (m. 1895, David G. Abbot); Elizabeth Maxey, New York; 1889, Frances Scott, Cincinnati; 1890, Fannie A. Perkins, Des Moines; Rebecca B. Daily, Northwestern; 1892, Josephine Stahl, New York; Anna C. Keeler, Cincinnati; Frances Craig, Northwestern. One missionary was sent to the Bombay Conference in 1892: Christina H. Lawson, New York.

General Conference, had several roots.* No one was more influential in its recognition by the Church than J. M. Thoburn. When he arrived in the United States in 1886 for recuperation, he began systematically to advocate in his addresses before Church gatherings, particularly Annual Conferences, the establishment of a deaconess order in the Church. He introduced in General Conference one of the two memorials presented on the subject (viz.: that of the Bengal Conference: "We . . . memorialize the General Conference . . . to provide for a formal recognition of the office of deaconess in the Methodist Episcopal Church"). He was chairman of the Committee on Missions which formulated and presented to the Conference a complete plan of organization that was adopted and inserted in the Discipline.³¹⁶

The idea of a deaconess order had first taken form in Thoburn's mind early in his missionary career when he had "baptized frightened village women" under conditions which made him wish that "some Phoebe" might have been at hand to perform the rite in his stead:

as for the inmates of the zenanas, it is simply impossible for a man to gain access to them, and, even if he could be admitted to them, his services would be very unsatisfactory. A woman who has been carefully secluded all her days, and who has never seen the face of men who were not members of her family, is not merely embarrassed in the presence of a foreign missionary; she is absolutely frightened. There are those who believe that these timid, untaught creatures will be induced to come out to the big churches built for them, and stand up . . . face to face with a missionary, and give intelligible answers to his questions, and then receive baptism at his hands. All this may happen, but I do not expect to see it. . . . but rather that, as in ancient times, we shall see the church in the house revived, and Christian women sent to minister to those who are inaccessible to the ordinary minister of the public congregation.³¹⁷

The Bengal memorial carried a second paragraph asking that "provision be made for the administration of the Sacraments in Zenanas," but fearing that opposition to this request, which involved the ordination of women so that they could administer the sacraments, might defeat the entire memorial, this part was omitted.

When he returned to India, shortly after the adjournment of General Conference, Thoburn took with him three deaconesses, Elizabeth Maxey, Kate A. Blair, and Lillian Black. Mrs. Thoburn was instrumental in opening a Deaconess Home in Calcutta and to it in January, 1889, the Bishop appointed the three deaconesses who had accompanied him from the United States.

* In Germany Methodist "parish deaconesses" were engaged in missionary service as early as 1868 and in 1874 organized a Bethany Association. German Methodists in the United States became interested in the deaconess work in progress in Germany and advocated the establishment of a Methodist deaconess sisterhood in America, but without success. In the summer of 1887 in Chicago Mrs. Lucy Rider Meyer, assisted by eight Christian women, began systematic visitation of the poor, the sick, and the needy of the city and in the fall opened, in a few hired rooms, what came later to be known as a "deaconess home." In 1886 Miss Jane M. Bancroft (later Mrs. George O. Robinson) went to Europe for study. While there she became acquainted with deaconess work and when she returned strongly advocated the development of the work in Methodism by the Woman's Home Missionary Society.—For further information on the founding of the Chicago Home see Lucy Rider Meyer, Deaconesses, Biblical, Early Church, European, American, with The Story of the Chicago Training School, For City, Home and Foreign Missions, and The Chicago Deaconess Home.

Within a comparatively short time homes were established also in Muttra, Lucknow, Madras, Pithoragarh, Bangalore, Kolar, and Singapore. A building was erected in Muttra in 1889, for which W. E. Blackstone of Chicago contributed $5,000., to house the Muttra Training School and Deaconess Home. To it Fannie J. Sparkes and Kate McDowell, M.D., were appointed. Phoebe Rowe and Lucy Sullivan were named as appointees to the Lucknow Home; Annie M. Budden to Pithoragarh; Elizabeth E. Ferris to Singapore; Grace Stephens to Madras; and Henrietta Matson to Bangalore.

Like other women missionaries of the W.F.M.S. deaconesses received their support from the Society. Deaconess regulations determined the uniform to be worn, a gray dress—in summer, white—and a black bonnet trimmed with gray ribbon. Support for India was estimated at nine hundred rupees (approximately $350.) per year. Experience proved that the plan of identical support for all was not practicable and in 1895 the Society decided that variation should be made “according to the locality, the provision or not of a Deaconesses’ Home, or the necessity on the part of the missionary to live by herself.”³¹⁸

The program of the Deaconess Homes varied in the different centers. At Calcutta it consisted principally of visiting, seven hundred visits to homes being reported in 1892, where the deaconesses “read and prayed with those who could not or would not come to the public service of the church.” Visits were also made to the grog shops where the men and women invited to the church services had tracts in different languages given to them. The entire time of one deaconess was taken up with work among the poor Bengali Christian women, who needed “instruction in nearly everything.” Two day schools were maintained in the city and two in villages south of Calcutta. By way of contrast, the Bangalore home—as some others—was both a residence for the deaconesses and a school for the training of girls in preparation for deaconess work. Within a few weeks of opening, in March, 1890, thirteen girls were in residence, “all except three were motherless, having had no training or care.” Only one was a professing Christian when she came but in September “eleven others professed to give their hearts to Jesus.” “It is not just the ‘Training school for Christian workers’ that we had hoped for,” the superintendent wrote to the Society, “but perhaps God sees that better workers can be raised up from these whose training is to extend through a long series of years, than from older ones whom we might have chosen.”³¹⁹

The Deaconess Movement, so far as its relation to India and other mission fields was concerned, apparently began to wane before 1895. The General Executive Committee agreed to the plan of providing support on the deaconess basis for the women who volunteered to go to the field as such but the Society seems never to have put itself back of the Movement.* Bishop and Mrs.

* Sophia Blackmore: “For quite a number of years the plan was adhered to in Malaya, but the Woman’s Foreign Missionary Society as a whole was not behind the movement. Other workers coming Thoburn were the chief sponsors of the idea of Methodist missionary deaconesses. India and Malaysia, as also other fields, never had as many missionaries as were needed and the plan appealed to Thoburn as a practical means of increasing the missionary personnel. The fact that years earlier he had himself relinquished salary from the Board doubtless was a factor in his thinking. Some of the W.F.M.S. missionaries in India, but by no means all, agreed to fall in line with the Bishop's plan and relinquished half of their previous salary. It may easily be seen why such a wide discrepancy in income of the women, all of whom were working under the same auspices, would inevitably promote dissatisfaction and undermine morale. As a result the Movement was ultimately abandoned in both India and Malaysia.

NORTH INDIA CONFERENCE, 1877-95

The organization of the South India Conference did not in any way affect the administrative structure or the ongoing program of the former India Conference, now North India. The Bombay, Bengal, and Madras Mission, erected by General Conference into the South India Conference, had always been outside the bounds of the India Conference. The Conference had three Districts,* Rohilkhand, Kumaon, and Oudh.

At the first session of the North India Conference, convened by Bishop E. G. Andrews on January 3, 1877, thirty-two ministers received appointments—twenty-four missionaries and eight Indian preachers. This, however, by no means represented the entire working force of the Church. In his report of the Rohilkhand District, T. J. Scott listed a personnel of seventy workers: six missionaries, four native members of Conference, four ordained and thirty-two unordained Local Preachers, and twenty-four Exhorters and teachers. In 1880 E. W. Parker gave a more complete listing for the District, including eight missionaries and their wives, two women missionaries of the W.F.M.S., nine native female zenana assistants, seventy-four native Bible women and native Christian teachers in girls' schools, fifty-four full-time native preachers, seventeen native teachers in boys' schools, and six full-time native colporteurs engaged in selling books, Bibles, and Scripture portions, a total of 178 paid workers. In addition, Parker said, "we have many exhorters and leaders, who support themselves by their own work, and yet are efficient helpers." This personnel, large as it was, was not sufficient to maintain the institutional work to the field objected to the costume, and when Bishop Oldham returned to us [1904], Mrs. Oldham wrote to the Society explaining that Malaya was not a cheap place in which to live and that their workers should have the same support as on other Mission Fields. Thus the Deaconess plan was abandoned."—Op. cit., ch. III, 3 f.

* The Districts remained the same until 1882 when a fourth District, Amroha, made up of "the sixteen sub-circuits" of the Sambhal and Amroha charges, was formed. The Committee on the State of the Church of the 1891 Conference announced that over 6,000 persons living in widely separated villages had been received into membership and that this increase would necessarily cause considerable readjustment. The Rohilkhand District was discontinued, and five new Districts were established: Agra, Aligarh, Bareilly, Moradabad, and Pilibhit. In 1893 Circuits and Stations of Agra and Aligarh Districts were made the nucleus of the Northwest India Conference, and in 1894 two more new Districts—Gonda and Budaun—were organized and the Amroha was renamed Sambhal. In 1895 two additional Districts—Sitapur and Garhwal—were formed, making ten in all.

of the Church in the District and because of this a considerable force of non-Christian men and women teachers were employed in the day schools. While Rohilkhand was the most extensive District, the other two Districts were comparable.

The extent of the women's program in the Conference also was amazing. On one Circuit, for example, Mrs. Robert Hoskins reported thirteen day schools, seventeen Sunday schools, two Class meetings for girls, two for women, a weekly prayer meeting, a weekly mothers' meeting, a weekly meeting for the study of the Sunday-school lesson, and visitation in eighty-three zenanas. Christian truths, she felt certain, were "finding an entrance into hundreds of hearts." By 1878 six girls' boarding schools were supported by the W.F.M.S.: Lucknow, Kanpur, Budaun, Moradabad, Bijnor, and Pauri.³²⁰

On his visit to India in 1883 Missionary Secretary J. M. Reid was very favorably impressed with the personnel, missionary and native, of the North India Conference. The missionaries were forward-looking, he said, "continually pressing on . . . to new and holy enterprises," not bound by custom or routine, and "truly consecrated to God" and their work. The Indian preachers also seemed to him to be men of independence of thought and action, of "considerable education and ability," some understanding English and even able to speak it well. They likewise were men of consecration and sincere devotion.³²¹

The Conference maintained a rigid discipline. The examination of character at the Annual Conference for members and at the District Conference for Local Preachers and native assistants was searching.*

The famine of 1876-78 which was of such extreme severity in parts of South India also caused great suffering in the north. The Presiding Elder of the Rohilkhand District reported that he had inquired in all parts of the District and had not heard of as many as six native Christians who had perished from famine. This was because pastors and missionaries had been active in relief work. Efforts had been made to show people how to aid themselves. Livestock and food had been given to weavers and cloth taken in return. The blind, the destitute widows, and those unable to work had been fed. As a result fatalities among Christians were few in comparison with the general death rate. Following the famine the enrollment of mission schools tended to increase sharply with the number of orphans taken in. The girls' school at Budaun, which at the beginning of 1877 had only four pupils, at the close had thirty-five. The girls' boarding schools at Moradabad and Bijnor also expanded, and the orphanages at Shahjahanpur and Bareilly were filled.³²²

* At the Rohilkhand District Conference in 1877 a report was made that a native helper had attended a dinner given to the dead, an idolatrous rite. His conduct was condemned but after discussion of the case he was continued with the stipulation that should the offense be repeated he would suffer as a penalty the loss of his license. Another helper who had broken a marriage engagement was obliged to confess publicly his fault and ask pardon of the Conference before receiving renewal of his license. At the 1879 District Conference two brethren between whom there had been ill feeling were pronounced worthy of reproof but their characters were passed and, with one exception, the licenses of all were renewed.—Mrs. T. S. Johnson, "Diary," ms., unpagged, Oct. 21, 1889; E. Cunningham, rep., Sixty-first Ann. Rep., M.S. (1879), p. 112.

Visual aids as a means of evangelization came into general use in the North India Conference in 1879-80. Robert Hoskins told of using the "magic lantern" with "great profit" on the Budaun Circuit in 1879:

By hanging the white sheet under some large tree, even when the moon was shining brightly, the people could see the pictures clearly, and would sit on the ground and listen for two or three hours to the gospel story. The pictures most utilized are, The Wise Men following the Star, . . . Christ blessing Little Children, the Transfiguration, the Raising of Lazarus, the Sower, the Samaritan Woman at the Well, the Ascension Invitations have been received from many villages to make them a visit, and although we use the lantern to convey Scripture truth, still the people seem anxious to be present, often coming miles from the villages around.

P. M. Buck, Presiding Elder of the Kumaon District in 1880, listed the exhibition of Scripture views by means of a magic lantern along with preaching, conversation, and bookselling as a method of evangelization on District itineraries. The exhibitions drew large crowds, not only of "common people . . . but all classes." B. H. Badley of Lucknow exhibited pictures in all the school-houses "to hundreds of schoolboys and their friends, as well as at private houses upon special invitation." By explaining the pictures and accompanying them with preaching and group singing, he felt he was able "to bring the truth very close to the people."³²³

During these years and later an increased demand for books and tracts was observed. The schools by teaching both men and women to read had created a market for Christian literature. The people had learned to put confidence in Christian publications. It was becoming common practice for colporteurs to be invited into the inner apartments of houses.

During the early eighties the personnel of the North India Conference was reinforced by thirteen new members.* Of these people, five gave more than thirty years to missionary service: Charles L. Bare, thirty-seven years; Dr. Stephen S. Dease, forty; Frank L. Neeld, thirty-two; William Rockwell Clancy, forty-six; Noble L. Rockey, forty.

The middle eighties brought marked increase in the rate of growth of the Church. Never before had so many baptisms been recorded as in 1886. Reports from the churches showed 469 new full members over the previous year. There was an increase in the number of children in the Sunday schools and a corresponding increase of Christian children in the day schools. Equally encouraging evidence of a growing moral and spiritual earnestness among the Indian preachers and the village Christians was apparent. The process of Indianization of the Church was this year set forward by Conference action confirming an 1885 decision to conduct all proceedings in Hindustani.³²⁴

* Missionaries who entered the North India Conference between 1880 and 1885, and their wives, were: 1880, Charles L. and Susan Winchell Bare, Des Moines; Peachy T. Wilson, South India; 1881, Henry F. Kastendieck, South India (m. 1884, Louisa Cotsell); Stephen S. Dease, M.D., Philadelphia (m. 1886, Margaret Fleming); 1882, James L. and Emily J. Trussell Humphrey, returned to India from Northern New York Conference (Mrs. Humphrey died in 1894; he later married Nancy B. Green); James C. Lawson, West Wisconsin (m. 1883, Ellen Hoy); Frank L. and Emma Avery Neeld, Pittsburgh; 1884, Frank W. Foote, layman (m. Laura Hyde, M.D., 1886; ordained in 1888); William R. and Charlotte Force Clancy, Michigan (Mrs. Clancy died in 1891; in 1892 he married Charlotte Fleming. During the years 1890-92 he was in the Bengal and Southern California Conferences; returned to North India in 1892); Allen J. and Ellen Blackmar Maxwell, Michigan; 1885, John W. McGregor, resident of India; Noble L. and Mary Hadsell Rockey, Colorado; David C. Monroe, Central New York (m. 1891, Hester Mansell).

At the 1887 session the Conference came into possession of Rs. 817-3-11 to aid native Christians in building village chapels. The money had been invested and the Conference determined to use only the income for the designated purpose. The 1889 Conference established a "Village Chapel Aid Fund" and stipulated that contributions should be made only to villages where the people agreed to provide a half of the amount required. Evangelization had by this time reached a point where it had become necessary for the Christians of many villages to have a fixed, suitable place of worship. As village Societies were in most cases too poor to build meeting houses of their own without financial assistance such a fund met a real need. William Butler had become interested in raising money for the fund and by 1890 had secured $2,180. in cash and pledges. By 1891 aid had been given toward building twenty-seven chapels.³²⁵

In 1888 E. W. Parker, Presiding Elder and preacher-in-charge of the Moradabad Circuit, formed a Young People's Christian League. The pupils of the boarding schools and the young people of the church, together with their teachers, were members. The object, he stated, was "to secure systematic study of the Scriptures, to discuss subjects connected with departments of Christian work and of needed reform in India." Monthly public lectures were attended by large audiences. When the Epworth League became the official young people's organization of the Church the Moradabad Young People's Christian League was changed into an Epworth League—"the first chapter . . . organized on the continent of Asia." Within a few years many chapters were organized in India, and in October, 1893, an all-India Epworth League Convention was held in Lucknow.³²⁶

By 1889 the Christian "mela"—an adaptation of the Camp Meeting—had become a fixed institution in North India. It was held at the beginning of the Conference year in conjunction with the District Conference and continued for a full week. It was attended by all of the Christian workers of the District, numbering many more than attended the Annual Conference. Everyone's work passed under review and all waited "upon God for blessing and strength for further service." T. S. Johnson reported concerning the mela held in 1889 on the Oudh District:

Our last meeting was the most profitable we have ever had. A number of preachers entered into a fuller personal experience of Spiritual life and power than they had ever before known, which has been manifested in their work during the year, while all in the camp were greatly blessed and encouraged.

The melas had both spiritual and social values. They provided an opportunity for Christians from different places to become acquainted and to form friendships. They also contributed to esprit de corps among the workers, many of whom laboring alone in isolated places in the midst of unfriendly Hindus and Mohammedans tended to become dispirited.³²⁷

The 1890 Conference adopted a resolution requesting Bishop Thoburn to appoint a member of Conference as evangelist-at-large on a full-time schedule and to provide him with a staff of assistants. Parker was appointed.* Later he wrote to the Missionary Society:

new efforts are being made to turn preaching and school work more effectually to the saving of the people, and to gathering them into little churches under pastoral watch-care. . . . Including the places opened through the extra aid secured by Dr. Peck and Bishop Thoburn . . . more than 200 new centers will be opened by the end of October, and more than 200 places are still calling. These centers are scattered all over India. Of course, most of this work is done by the regular laborers in the various circuits, and thus our object is being secured of turning attention to this kind of work, working up an interest in it, and securing the means needed for it. . . . All converts are placed under the watch-care of Christian pastor-teachers, and schools are opened for their children. We open no new center when we cannot supply the pastor-teacher, who teaches the children to read and write, and the inquirers and Christians the way of life more fully.³²⁸

The years 1889-90 witnessed remarkable growth in North India. The time of harvest had at last come. Baptisms in 1889 numbered 3,791; in 1890, 6,098. The latter year also recorded an increase of full members of 980 and probationers, 2,935. The total native Christian community in 1889 numbered 13,529, in 1890, 19,429—an increase of 5,859. The majority of the converts in 1889 were in the Budaun, Bijnor, and Bareilly Districts. Twelve charges had a hundred or more baptisms. The majority of the twelve charges were entirely under native leadership. Two-thirds of the converts were adults and “nearly all . . . [were] from the lower castes.” “Christianity,” said C. L. Bare, Presiding Elder of the Rohilkhand District in 1890, had become “self-propagating, spreading from member to member of the same family, and . . . from family to family in the same caste, and from village to village, along caste lines,” and occasionally leaping over caste boundaries. On January 13, 1891, Bishop Thoburn wrote to Missionary Secretary Peck:

The outward expansion of the work seems really to be beyond our control. . . . I cannot tell you how deeply I have felt over this whole question during these five days of the Conference session. We cannot retreat; we seem to advance in spite of ourselves; and yet, we are not equal to the responsibility which is upon us. . . . We are sure you will lift your voice like a trumpet to tell the church of the great door which God has set before us, and of our utter inability to carry the burden which is thrust upon us. . . . Our force of American missionaries has not been so weak in North India for twelve or fifteen years past, while the work is ten fold heavier than it was even five years ago.³²⁹

* The next year Parker was given a double appointment, evangelist-at-large and Presiding Elder of the Oudh District. He wrote on Jan. 14, 1891, to Missionary Secretary J. O. Peck: “. . . the Bishop and brethren thought I ought to take . . . [Oudh] District and also continue . . . [as general evangelist]. We felt very badly about this as there seemed no one to take Mrs. Parker's large school. . . . So it was finally arranged for Mrs. Parker to remain here in her school until she could be removed without harm to the work. . . . Still it is not a usual arrangement for a man and wife to have appointments 200 miles apart. When any one asks if missionary wives are missionaries you . . . have an illustration.”—Correspondence Files, Division of World Missions.

Missionary support failed to keep pace with expansion of the field program. The India Committee in 1891 recommended an appropriation of $83,226.—an amount which would make provision for developing the work in the newly occupied areas—but estimates for all mission fields except one (Korea) were cut, and only $77,000. was appropriated for North India. To the missionaries this was disheartening, particularly to Bishop Thoburn :

I can see that most of the brethren thought they had done something in their appropriations to North India, but North India had all its work to provide for aside from this new movement. I try to command my feelings, but must say that I speak the sentiments of every missionary we have in India when I say that we feel utterly humiliated by the action of the Committee.³³⁰

In 1892 baptisms continued at an accelerated rate, the total equaling the entire enrolled membership at the close of 1891. This, the Committee on the State of the Church said, “[causes us] to rejoice with trembling.”

Our duty to these . . . thousands has only begun when they are baptized. . . . The danger of the hour—a danger which we shall ignore at the risk of our work and the peril of souls,—is that the spiritual needs of these babes in Christ may be neglected for the easier and more sensational work of baptizing other waiting thousands. We must not, we dare not, shut our eyes to the vital importance . . . [of teaching them].

The report continued with a long list of suggestions and recommendations on ways and means of instruction, house-to-house visitation, use of Bible classes, and plans for short-term preparation of the more capable converts to teach the candidates and new members.³³¹

In a letter to Missionary Secretary Peck on December 30, 1892, Bishop Thoburn appealed to him to get fifty people each to give $100. a year for three years to meet the extra expense of training five hundred boys for special educational service. It was estimated that $100. would pay the expenses of ten boys for a year in a boarding school. The India Woman's Missionary Society had agreed to support five hundred girls on the same basis. The testimony of one and all, the Bishop said, is that the permanence of the work among the low-caste masses depends absolutely upon their education. Without waiting for assurance from New York that the funds would be forthcoming it was enthusiastically agreed by those whom the Bishop consulted “to gather in five hundred boys . . . and begin at once to train them.” A measure of encouragement was found in the fact that at the January, 1893, North India Conference forty-eight young men were ordained, of whom nineteen received elder's ordination.³³²

By January, 1894, the Conference found itself in serious financial difficulty, facing a deficit of Rs. 13,000 after eliminating all building construction and reducing all other expenses that could possibly be cut. Two suggestions for meeting the emergency were proposed, one to raise Rs. 3,000 in India and reduce salaries of all missionaries, ministers, and teachers by Rs. 20 per month; the other to dismiss, without recourse, at least two hundred teachers and pastor-teachers. The second alternative, it was realized, would certainly be accompanied by a degree of dissatisfaction and a sense of injustice in the native community that would result in irreparable injury to the Christian cause. When the motion was made in the Finance Committee to adopt the first alternative Bishop Thoburn refused to put it to a vote and said he would assume responsibility for raising the Rs. 10,000 in addition to all that he was already obligated to give. "Hence," wrote Parker to Secretary Peck, "our work goes forward on the same plan as of last year"

The year 1894 was declared by the January, 1895, Conference to have been the best year in its history, "the best year spiritually . . . and the best temporally."

Little note is taken by us of the fact that fewer accessions, fewer baptisms may have been recorded than in previous years. The work has gone forward just as fast as it could go safely and there has been little ambition on the part of missionaries and older preachers-in-charge to report thousands baptized unless proper arrangements were feasible for the further instruction and spiritual guidance and oversight of those thousands.³³³

North India Conference at its first session had thirty-two members—twenty-four missionaries and eight Hindustani; in 1895, eighty-seven members—twenty-five missionaries and sixty-two Hindustani. While the missionary membership was approximately the same at the close as at the beginning of the period, thirty-two missionaries had entered the Conference*; several had retired or returned to America for various causes, mostly because of ill health; several had withdrawn; and three had died. Most significant was the eightfold increase in the native membership of the Conference, which was even more noteworthy if the increase in number of Local Preachers from fifty-one in 1877 to 231 in 1895 is considered.

The three Districts of 1877 had twenty-three Circuits and Stations. In 1895 the Circuits and Stations of nine Districts numbered ninety-nine. This phenomenal growth makes it impossible within the limits of a single volume to give a detailed account of the work in the local Stations. To name and locate them must suffice.

* Missionaries received into the North India Conference, 1886-95, and the wives of those who were married, were: 1886, Dr. John C. Butcher, Rock River (m. 1888, Ada Procter); De Loss M. and Ida Foote Tompkins, South India; 1887, John H. and Carrie D. Schively, Baltimore; T. A. Clifton, layman; 1888, George F. and Kate D. Hopkins, Wilmington; 1889, Charles W. and Ella B. Simmons, Bengal; 1890, William A. Mansell, Ohio (m. 1894, Florence Perrine); James B. and Elizabeth W. Thomas, Bengal; Frederick H. Northrup, Central Illinois; John Blackstock, returned to India from North Indiana; Joseph H. Gill, returned to India from the Rock River Conference. In 1891, John E. and Emma Day Newsom, Iowa; 1892, George C. Hewes, Illinois (m. 1896, Annie Butcher); Matthew Tindale, Bengal; Homer C. Stuntz, Bengal; 1893, John W. and Elizabeth F. Robinson, Des Moines; Harvey L. Roscoe, layman (m. 1895, Alice Scott); 1894, David Lyle Thoburn, Central Ohio (m. 1899, Ruth Collins); 1895, William W. Ashe, M.D., Georgia (m. 1896, Christine Christensen).

ROHILKHAND DISTRICT, 1877-91

In 1877 the Rohilkhand District had nine appointments: Bareilly, Shahjahanpur, Moradabad and Chandausi, Bijnor, Amroha, Panahpur, Budaun, Khera Bajhera, and Sambhal. In 1890, the last year of the District, appointments were made to twenty-four Stations and Circuits.* Space limitations permit accounts of only the more important centers of the District.

The number of listed places by no means indicated the total number of centers of missionary activity. Parker's 1881 report as Presiding Elder made this clear.

Our Mission work in the province has been during the past year divided into thirteen separate circuits or appointments, for the work of each of which one man is made responsible. Four of these circuits have been in charge of missionaries, eight in charge of Native Ministers, and one in charge of a Eurasian lay-preacher. These appointments are most of them again divided into sub-circuits over which a Native preacher of less experience is placed, so that there are fifty-eight places occupied as centres in Rohilkund where Native preachers reside and where work is carried on. There are connected with the work of these circuits and sub-circuits ninety-four regularly appointed Native preachers and male Christian teachers of various grades, from the ordained minister to the primary school teacher, giving their entire time to this work. . . . There are Native Christians living in 312 villages or towns, making a Christian community of about 4,500 souls, 2,630 of whom are communicants.³³¹

Five years later (1886) the Christian community in the District had increased to 5,396. Teachers' meetings were held in all of the large centers and all teachers were grouped in classes which pursued regular courses of study and passed examinations. A large proportion of the baptisms this year—439 adults and 301 children—were brought about, directly or indirectly, by the schools. By 1888 the fifty-eight occupied centers of 1881 had increased to 144; the number of villages in which Christians were living had grown to 463.³³⁵ The rapid growth created an unparalleled opportunity for primary education.†

Bareilly, with a new, commodious church edifice, reported at the 1878 Conference 177 full members and fifty probationers. Considering that the Society was one of the first to be organized in India this represented very slow growth. Of the number reported more than one half were non-resident

* The year-by-year additions of Circuits and Stations were as follows: 1878, 1879, none; 1880, Fataganj; 1881, Kakrala, Bils; 1882, Bisauli; 1883, Mandawar, Najibabad; 1884, Aonia; 1885, Pilibhit, Jalalabad; 1886, none; 1887, East Shahjahanpur, East Shahjahanpur native church; 1888, Agra, Muttra, Kasganj; 1889, none; 1890, Bisulpur, Muhamdi. Not all of the added Circuits were permanently retained.

† The people themselves were asking for schools for their children. Parker estimated that schools could be maintained at an annual cost of fifty-six dollars each. In 1882 Dr. and Mrs. J. F. Goucher provided for the establishment of fifty village schools and their maintenance for five years. The period was later extended to twenty years. They were established in many communities widely scattered over North India. The next year Mr. Frey of Baltimore followed Dr. Goucher's example and made provision for eighty additional schools. In his will he also endowed seventeen scholarships in the Bareilly Theological Seminary. In 1886 Dr. Goucher authorized the opening of forty-eight village schools for girls. "Goucher Schools" and "Frey Schools" are frequently mentioned in Annual Reports, 1883-93.—J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, Missions and Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, III, 89; W. A. Mansell in Frederick B. Price, Ed., India Mission Jubilee of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Southern Asia, 1907, p 165; Sevanteenth Ann. Rep., W.F.M.S. (1886), p. 14.

students of the theological and normal schools and residents of the orphanage. Half of the remainder lived in villages outside of Bareilly. In the city itself few converts had been made in the twenty years since starting. There had been no lack of bazaar preaching but it had not produced many converts. Little or no headway had been gained among the middle and upper classes. Sweepers, shoemakers, cooks, and a few teachers made up a majority of the baptisms. In 1883 Dr. S. S. Dease, who was appointed to Bareilly in 1881, reported the baptism of a number of promising young men who had been placed under instruction with the hope of later enlisting them as workers among their own caste. The training of a "medical class" of young women—the plan begun by Dr. Swain in 1870 but soon abandoned—was revived by Dr. Dease. A class of six, graduates of the orphanage school, was formed and in 1883 three began to practice. A new class was then organized, four of the members being wives of Bareilly Theological Seminary students. Mrs. T. J. Scott in 1880 conducted in her house a day school for women with two classes, one for wives of new converts and one for Bible women. This developed into a woman's school which in 1895 enrolled fifty-two students. More and more, Bareilly became a chief center of training for Christian work. By 1890 no less than 870 young people, of whom 473 were Christians, were under instruction in the several mission schools of the city.

From year to year new centers were listed as sub-Circuits of Bareilly, thirteen or more. Some of these within a year or two became separate Circuits, some were combined with other sub-Circuits; and some were given up as barren fields. Preaching was maintained for part or all of the time at several other places.³³⁶

The Shahjahanpur Society in 1877 completed a new building, a combined preaching hall and schoolhouse. At two outposts, Tilhar and Pawayan, missionary F. M. Wheeler reported an increase of opposition and little apparent result of missionary effort. In 1882 native preachers were at work at these places and at Jalalabad; they also preached once a week at Rampur. Appointments were made in 1885 to four sub-Circuits. The village of Lodhipur, site of the boys' orphanage, was separated from Shahjahanpur by the river Khanaut. The mission property included the orphanage, school, missionary bungalow, industrial establishment, and the Women's Home, besides a garden and a farm. An industrial school, part of the orphanage, which in 1890 enrolled thirty-seven boys, taught shoemaking, carpentry, ropemaking, tailoring, and farming. Articles made in the school helped meet the expenses of maintaining the orphanage.

Shahjahanpur by 1895 had become an important center of W.F.M.S. work. The Bidwell Memorial School—opened in 1887 by Mrs. Robert Hoskins—enrolled eighty girls; in East Shahjahanpur a Home for Homeless Women was a haven for numerous broken women. Two Bible readers regularly visited twenty outlying villages; and in the adjoining region thirty-one other Bible women were employed on five large Circuits.³³⁷

Budaun in 1877 reported 153 full members and 163 probationers. Most of the converts, T. S. Johnson, veteran missionary, stated, were from "the Mehtar caste," one of the lowest. While child marriage continued to be one of the most difficult problems the attitudes of the women were gradually being changed. In 1880 Robert Hoskins commented that in Budaun they were being influenced much more by the Bible women than the men were by the native preachers and the missionaries. "They get nearer the people," he said, than do the preachers.

By 1885 Budaun Circuit had expanded to a point where it had six sub-Circuits. Budaun had a large boys' school, a boarding school for girls, and "one Mohalla and 2 village schools." Kakrala, twelve miles from Budaun, had two boys' and one girls' school, with schools also in two outlying villages. Dataganj, the third center, embraced nine villages; and Kasganj, the fourth, four villages, in all of which Christian converts had been made. On the entire charge there were fifteen boys' schools and thirty-nine Sunday schools.

At the 1888 Conference P. T. Wilson was appointed to Budaun. He and Mrs. Wilson were medical missionaries engaged primarily in evangelistic work. However, they also maintained a dispensary in which during the year they treated thousands of cases. In 1891 not less than two thousand persons were baptized of whom at least one half were women and children. Thousands of others were waiting for instruction. Women's work was strengthened this year by the addition of Mary Wilson,* the missionaries' daughter, who in 1895 became superintendent of the girls' school—the Sigler Boarding School—began 1881. The school, with an assistant, a matron, and six teachers, had eighty pupils.³³⁸

The Moradabad Society—the church of the Moradabad Circuit—at the end of the first year (1878) of the North India Conference had 118 full members and ninety-eight probationers. E. W. Parker gives a cross-section picture of the membership. Thirteen, he says, were employed as mission preachers or teachers at Moradabad, Chandausi, Kundarki, and Byrampur; fifteen were in government or railway service; seventeen were servants of missionaries or working under them in connection with the mission; others were shoemakers, farmers, weavers, masons, and coolies; and forty-three were the older boys and girls of the mission schools. The church, he was certain, was growing spiritually and its general influence on the several communities was very good. In 1880 four Moradabad sub-Circuits were listed.† However, the fact that the mission furnished employment for a growing number of converts led some to apply for baptism out of mercenary motives.

* Mary Wilson evidently served at first as a voluntary assistant. In 1894 she was taken on as a regular missionary, the first W.F.M.S. missionary appointed to Budaun. In 1910 she married J. H. Gill.

† The 1890 Annual Report says that "sixteen preachers and 37 Christian teachers are occupying 12 centers of work."

A headquarters building costing $15,000., erected in 1875, was the center of a comprehensive mission program. It provided a chapel for Sunday worship services and weeknight and Sunday evening lectures on religious subjects; and housed the central high school. In 1886 the school had an enrollment of 250 boys, of whom 130 were Christians. It was intended to serve as a training academy to provide students for the Conference normal school and theological school; its pupils were selected from all over Rohilkhand. The Sunday school had an attendance in 1888 of four hundred, principally students. A Young People's Christian League was formed that year with an active program of Bible study, Sunday evening prayer meetings, and monthly public lectures attended by large audiences of older students, teachers, and laymen. Fifty-nine young people were received into full membership in the church at the close of the year.

By 1876 Moradabad had become a chief center of W.F.M.S. activities, with a new missionary home costing $3,500. and a school building valued at $2,000. There were twelve girls' day schools—ten for Mohammedan girls and two for Hindus—with about three hundred pupils. The Christian Girls' Boarding School in 1878 enrolled sixty-eight girls. A branch school was located in Amroha. By 1886 enrollment had increased to 118. In 1895, 131 girls were in attendance. Of the eleven teachers the majority were graduates of the school. Moradabad was also the center of outstanding medical work under W.F.M.S. auspices, begun by Mrs. E. W. Parker. In earlier days she had visited the sick, distributed medicines in the city and surrounding villages, and personally attended women and children stricken with fever and cholera. She was aided by two Indian Bible women, one trained in the original medical class at Naini Tal, and the other, Jane V. Plumer, trained by Dr. Swain. In January, 1875, Dr. Julia Lore arrived and a dispensary was opened. The next year she married George H. McGrew. Later Dr. Mary Christiancy took charge. In a single year 14,083 patients were treated—5,764 Hindus, 4,866 Mohammedans, and 3,453 Christians. For several years (1886-91) Dr. Kate McDowell rendered highly efficient service.³⁸⁹

Chandausi continued until 1881 as a sub-Circuit of Moradabad. That year it was supplied by George Bailey, a Eurasian Local Preacher. The charge had an Anglo-vernacular boys' school in the city and two schools for boys among the Chamars. There were also two Sunday schools for girls, one for Mohammedan girls and one for the Hindus. The minister was handicapped, with no church building or schoolhouse, but the program steadily expanded. In 1886 three new outstations were opened. This year a combined Camp Meeting of Rohilkhand and Kumaon Districts was held at Chandausi. In making advance plans for the large number expected to attend, the Indian preacher reported that little grass huts were "being prepared for the people . . . , and we are looking for God's special presence." In 1890 with twenty Christian workers employed eight new villages were opened and sixty-six persons baptized. In 1892 there were six hundred Christians living in thirty villages and twelve mohallas.³⁴⁰

Bijnor Circuit at the 1878 Conference registered 147 full members, eighty-three probationers, six Local Preachers, and ten Sunday schools. The Circuit had three church buildings and four parsonages.* The missionary, A. D. McHenry, reported twenty-three baptisms—eight adults and fifteen children. Two Anglo-vernacular boys' schools each had an attendance of fifty boys. In July, 1877, a girls' boarding school was begun with four daughters of native preachers. Famine soon increased the enrollment to twenty-three. Ten years later the school numbered forty-five girls. In 1892 women's work was being carried on from sixteen centers.

The area embraced by the central Circuit and its sub-Circuits had 1,680 villages and cities with a population of 730,000 people. In 1885 work was carried on in Bijnor and four sub-Circuits by the missionary, Noble Rockey, † and his wife, his Indian assistant, eight other native preachers, five "Goucher teachers," two W.F.M.S. assistants, and nineteen Bible women and teachers. The Anglo-vernacular boys' schools in Bijnor city had been combined into one but this school was unable to compete with the more generously supported government school and in 1886 was transferred to Nagina. In 1888 a Christian boys' primary boarding school was opened in Bijnor as a feeder for the Moradabad High School. In 1889 Bijnor Circuit reported eight village schools and 304 baptisms on five sub-Circuits.³⁴¹

Rockey considered Bashta, twenty-four miles from Bijnor, a sub-Circuit where Thoburn had preached in 1868, his most fruitful field. It had a large farmer population "under friendly landholders." Soon after he began his work on the District he baptized thirty persons who had been under thorough training. In 1888 J. C. Butcher stated that the Bashta people were to be found in all parts of the North India Conference as servants, teachers, and preachers.

Amroha, a city of some 45,000 people and a place of strong Mohammedan influence, in 1877 had both a boys' and a girls' school, though they were housed in one building. Amroha Circuit ‡ this year [1877] had seven sub-Circuits, including Babukhera, most of which embraced from fourteen to twenty villages.

* In the rapid extension of the work during 1889-93 most of the sub-Circuits became separate Circuits so that by 1894 the Bijnor Circuit was made up of the city and three outstations. Even with this delimiting of area the Circuit in 1895 had 1,068 Christians.

† Noble Lee Rockey (1857-1924) was born in Columbus, Ohio, June 9, 1857. Inflammatory rheumatism kept him crippled from his tenth to his twentieth year, but he finished the local school, and then taught a country school for three years. He worked his way through Ohio Wesleyan University and graduated in 1884. He was admitted on trial to the Colorado Conference (Gen'l Minutes, Fall, 1884, p. 221) and at once transferred to North India. He arrived in Bombay Dec. 24, 1884, with his bride of three months, Mary Hadsell (1858-1935) who had taught for a year in Xenia College, and who became his constant co-worker. He was stationed first at Bijnor (1885-88), then at Cawnpore Memorial School (1888-90) and then for five years in Shahjahanpur, supervising the Bareilly District, and the furlough came five years in Dwarahat and three years in Gonda, one on the Tirhut District, and the remaining years of his life in Naini Tal and Bareilly, where he died June 19, 1924. He edited the Children's Friend, a weekly Sunday-school paper, for twenty-eight years. He sent out a constant stream of tracts in Hindustani and English. His Life of Wesley in Hindustani and English was widely used. He was a much loved friend, especially by children.—Biographical File, Board of Missions Library.

‡ Sub-Circuits in 1878 numbered seven; in 1879, nine. In 1880 there were six, and in 1881, the last year in the Rohilkhand District, eight. In 1882 Amroha became a District.

In 1881 the church reported 204 full members and 212 probationers. Reports of the Presiding Elder (1882-92) were routine and brief, giving little information concerning the life and growth of the churches. He said in 1891 that the work was spreading so rapidly it was repetition to give an account of developments on each Circuit.³⁴²

Sambhal at the 1877 Conference was reported to be still a stronghold of Hinduism and a hard field for Christianity. It had been separated from Moradabad in 1873 and in 1877 had only twenty-one full members. There were five Sunday schools, an Anglo-vernacular boys' day school of eighty pupils, four small girls' day schools, and two church buildings. In his report for 1879 Zahur ul Haqq mentioned five places where there were Christian families.* In 1891 the Indian minister reported daily teaching kept up in twelve mohallas in Sambhal, and twelve day schools, eleven "vernacular Lower Primary and one Anglo-Vernacular." There were ten Sunday schools on the Circuit and a Christian community of 301 persons.³⁴³

Pilibhit in 1878 was an outstation of Bareilly. Concerning the work of that year G. H. McGrew, the missionary-in-charge, said there had been "no visible result." In 1884, at long last, rapid growth began and at the January, 1885, Conference Pilibhit was made a separate Circuit, with two sub-Circuits.† In 1888 the Gospel was preached in some two hundred villages. There were eight mission schools—seven for boys and one for girls—and five Goucher schools. In all, school instruction was given to 256 children and women. In 1891 Pilibhit was made the center of a District of the same name and in 1895 the Pilibhit Circuit—one of eleven in the new District—had eighty-eight full members and 207 probationers; eleven Sunday schools; and a Christian community of 533. The preceding year the Indian Presiding Elder expressed gratitude that there were in the District hundreds of people who were "ready to glorify God and spread the faith of Christ . . . by their personal efforts and private means."³⁴⁴

In 1891 C. L. Bare, Presiding Elder of Rohilkhand District, in his annual report said:

This has been a year of marvelous growth in this District. Four thousand nine hundred and sixteen persons this year received baptism in the name of Christ. Three hundred and fifty-eight new places were opened. Eight hundred and nine Christian workers, all but twenty-nine of whom are natives, worked the field from 229 centers; and Christians live in 1,039 cities, towns and villages. The church now numbers 9,508 members and probationers, and the Christian community more than 16,000. This is an increase of nearly 3,000. Four hundred and five day-schools enroll an attendance of 8,818 pupils, while 14,933 persons have been gathered into 468 Sunday-schools.³⁴⁵

* In the report for 1881 three additional centers were named, one of which was the old center of Babukhera.

† In 1889 a third sub-Circuit was added.

KUMAON DISTRICT, 1877-95

The Kumaon District in 1877 was widely extended.* To go from Pauri, the northwest point, to Pithoragarh on the eastern border by horseback—the usual mode of travel—required fourteen days. The English portion of the population were employed at the civil and military stations. The largest proportion of the population were Hindus, with a few Mohammedans in government and domestic employ. Some Chinese, also, were to be found on many of the tea plantations. Over most of the District exceedingly primitive conditions existed among the people. J. T. McMahon tells of the baptism of a convert who owned about fifteen acres of land.

He is better to do than any other man that has been baptized for three years past. When baptized he was dressed with a new coat, but was without pants. His wife came in her holiday attire, with a ring in her nose. His three children came naked . . . The ceremony was performed in a cow-shed.

In 1876 N. G. Cheney had been appointed pastor of the Naini Tal English church, and was reappointed yearly until 1882. In October, 1881, a new chapel was dedicated, located at the lower end of the lake, to take the place of the church destroyed by the terrible landslide of September 18, 1880, in which half a hundred Europeans and more than a hundred natives perished. For five years, 1883-88, James Baume, veteran missionary, served as pastor of the church. In 1881 an English boarding school was opened by Cheney in his home, Boys' High School, later named Oak Openings, renamed Philander Smith Institute destined to render notable educational service to missionaries' children and European and Anglo-Indian youths. In 1882 an English school for girls was opened by Emma L. Knowles, the Naini Tal Girls' School, later the Wellesley Girls' High School, which was to have no less noteworthy development than the boys' school. The English church ministered to many soldiers, English residents, and visitors but was never able to enlist more than a limited membership. In 1895 it reported twenty-four members.³⁴⁶

The Naini Tal native church after nineteen years of missionary effort reported in 1878 thirty-four full members and forty-one probationers. Most of the work during the cold season was in the Bhabar, at the foot of the hills; in the hot weather in and around Naini Tal and higher in the mountains. Most of the converts were from the lowest caste, the Doms. Eleven day schools for boys were maintained in the Bhabar villages. There were also two schools for girls, a lower-caste school opened in the bazaar in 1881, and a school attended chiefly by Christian women and girls, later known as the Hindustani Girls' School. At the 1881 Conference a Bhabar Circuit was formed, apart from Naini Tal charge, and placed in the care of an Indian preacher. By 1884 three sub-Circuits had been formed but at the 1887 Conference all of the

* The District in 1877 had five charges: Naini Tal English church; Naini Tal Indian church; Eastern Kumaon (Pithoragarh); Palee (after 1880, the Circuit was changed to Dwarahat), and Pauri (Garhwal Circuit).

Bhabar work was combined with Naini Tal. In 1892 twelve Indian preachers were employed on the Circuit. While they were reported to have worked faithfully there was little to show for their efforts. Writing in 1894 Waugh emphasized the difficulty growing out of "the migratory character of the majority of the people, spending [each year] . . . a few months in the mountains and the rest of the year in the plains . . ." The ninety-one baptisms was the largest number ever reported in any one year.³⁴⁷

At the Conference of 1874 Richardson Gray, M.D., as previously stated, was appointed to Eastern Kumaon. Two schools organized by the London Mission were turned over to the Methodist mission. An Indian Methodist Society was organized with a few members who had embraced Christianity. At the end of 1877 Gray reported that the work had gone on "without many visible results." Schools had been increased to five—all vernacular. The next year's report told of ten boys' schools with an average attendance of 434, besides one girls' school of thirty pupils. In four years (1874-78), more than seventy thousand cases were treated in the mission dispensaries of Garhwal and Kumaon. By 1880 there were four: Pithoragarh, Lohoochat, Dwarahat, and Bhimpal. In 1883 Dr. Gray withdrew, under charges, from the Conference. After a year without a male missionary (1883) J. L. Humphrey was appointed to Eastern Kumaon, to be followed in 1885 by Dr. S. S. Dease. The year saw the establishment of a Leper Asylum by the Scotch Mission to Lepers with the Methodist missionary assuming oversight.

The W.F.M.S. work in Pithoragarh was begun in May, 1874, when the Society took over one of the schools tendered by the London Mission. In January, 1880, a Home for Homeless Women was established for the purpose of aiding "young women of a caste in which men never married daughters of their own tribe, . . . leaving all girls born to them to follow lives of shame"—a profession lucrative to their families. The Home was financed by the W.F.M.S., and Miss Annie N. Budden, formerly of the London Mission, was placed in charge, and accepted as a W.F.M.S. missionary.

During 1890-95 Harkua Wilson, Indian minister and doctor, labored in the Eastern Kumaon region. In April, 1892, he established headquarters at Bhot, "eight days' marches north of Pithoragarh," opened a dispensary, and began a day school. The people, Bhotiyas, traded with Tibet and it was hoped that through them an entrance might be gained to that country but this proved to be a vain hope. In 1892 his dispensary was visited by 3,200 patients. He made at various times several trips into Nepal, and also one trip into Tibet. In addition to the dispensary, missionary institutions in 1892 included the Woman's Home, which housed sixty; and Christian Boarding Houses, with ninety girls and forty boys.³⁴⁸

The W.F.M.S. staff in 1892 consisted of two missionaries, Annie N. Budden and Mary Reed, four women assistants, four Bible readers, and six teachers.

In the early fall of 1891 Mary Reed * had arrived at Pithoragarh after a brief furlough in America during which she received the dread intelligence that she was a victim of leprosy. Her first assignment in India had been zenana work in Kanpur (1885-89). After four years she was transferred to Gonda where for a few years she was busy with zenana work. She returned to India from America with a conviction that she had a God-given mission to the lepers of Eastern Kumaon. In September, 1891, Bishop Thoburn wrote to the Scotch society, Mission to Lepers in India, in her behalf and she was appointed superintendent of their Leper Asylum at Chandag. In 1898 her official connection with the W.F.M.S. was severed in order that her undivided attention might be given to the leper mission.

From Bombay in 1891 she had written a letter to her family which is a classic of missionary literature. In part it read :

After prayerful consideration, I find it wisest and kindest to tell you, or allow dear, brave-hearted sister, Rena, with whom I entrusted this mystery of God's providence, to reveal what she pledged to keep from you. She will explain how our loving Heavenly Father, who is too wise to err has, in his infinite love and wisdom, chosen, called, and prepared your daughter to teach lessons of patience, endurance, and submission, while I shall have the joy of ministering to a class of people who, but for the preparation which has been mine for this special work, would have no helper at all He, who has called and prepared me, promised that he himself will be to me as a little sanctuary where I am to abide, and abiding in him I shall have supply for all my need. . . . He has enabled me to say, not with a sigh but with a song, 'Thy Will be done.'

She established a residence in a bungalow located on the crest of a ridge some 6,400 feet above sea level, which commanded a charming view of the valley in which Pithoragarh was located. For fifty years she ministered with love and skill to the members of the leper colony. Under her management the buildings which housed the group were transformed into beautiful homes. Before her work ended the colony had a hundred acres of land and homes for almost a hundred men and women patients, a dispensary, a hospital, and a chapel.³⁴⁹

Dwarahat (Palee), in Eastern Kumaon forty miles from Naini Tal, first appeared among the appointments for 1877 to be supplied. It was a central place in the mountain area, with forty villages within a radius of four miles. Not until 1881 when P. M. Buck† was given the double appointment of

* Mary Reed (1854-1943) was born at Lowell, Ohio, the second of a family of eight children. At sixteen she consecrated her life to the service of Christ. After ten years of successful teaching in southeastern Ohio she volunteered for foreign mission service, was accepted by the Cincinnati Branch, W.F.M.S. and on Sept. 7, 1884, sailed for India. When her affliction became known innumerable prayers were offered year after year in her behalf and the disease was so kept in abeyance that she was able to carry on her work without interruption. In 1904-1906 her disease was so arrested that she was given two years' furlough, during which she visited Palestine and her parents' home in America. Her spiritual ministrations were so owned of God that the morale of all the inmates of the asylum was greatly increased and many became Christian converts.—L. M. Hodgkins, op. cit., p. 33; John Jackson, Mary Reed, Missionary to the Lepers, p. 9, et passim.

† Philo Melvin Buck (1846-1924) was born in Corning, N. Y. His family moved to Kansas and he began preaching there at the age of seventeen. He was admitted to the Kansas Conference in 1865, where he served five years in the pastorate. He married Angie Tibbott in 1868, who died in 1869. The following year he asked for a transfer to China, but instead was sent to India, where he arrived in Presiding Elder and minister at Dwarahat did the Circuit have the service of a missionary. A school for women and girls, another for boys, and four primary day schools were established.

A number of applications were received for girls to be taken in as boarders, all from distant villages. There was no suitable building, but Mrs. Buck could not refuse them. Thus was begun a girls' boarding school which in 1895 had twenty-nine pupils. In 1884 a dispensary and hospital building was erected, the local government making a grant of Rs. 500. Later a new schoolhouse was built, toward which the government of India made a contribution of Rs. 1,300. A native doctor was in charge of the dispensary, which provided medical treatment for a great many patients, in 1892 for more than six thousand. The Presiding Elder concluded in 1893 that religiously Dwarahat was "a hard, barren field," offering small opportunity for results.³⁵⁰

Pauri (the Garhwal Circuit) to which in 1877 Gill was appointed for the fourth year had eight outposts.* The boys' school, the only one in the town in 1878, had been maintained for ten years. The W.F.M.S. girls' orphanage housed some thirty orphans, and the girls' school cared for about forty pupils. Famine brought to the mission the nucleus for a boys' orphanage. Of the Christian community in 1879 thirteen families owned or had permanent possession of the land on which they lived and owned an aggregate of forty-one head of cattle. Ten of the adult Christians were domestic servants; nine were tradesmen; seven, petty farmers; two, shopkeepers, eight employed helpers of the mission; and one, a doctor. In 1879 P. T. Wilson entered government employ "as Superintendent of Pilgrim Hospitals in Kumaon and Gurhwal." At the January, 1880, Conference he was appointed superintendent of medical work in Garhwal. During a period of three months in 1881 he treated all the cases of cholera in the Christian community and all his patients recovered. Messmore, sent to Garhwal in 1884, reported in 1885 "seven stations, sixteen day schools, and seven Sunday schools on the circuit." He was convinced that increase of the Christian community depended on converts being helped "to the possession or occupation of land." His successor, J. T. McMahon, did not agree. "I am not sanguine," he wrote, "of helping these people by . . . grants of land and money. Property not earned by hard labor will not remain to bless the owner." In 1889 the Conference divided the Garhwal Circuit into two, Pauri

November, 1870, and was appointed to Shahjahanpur. On furlough in America, 1876-78, he graduated at Drew Theological Seminary and returned to India where he was successively Presiding Elder on Kumaon District (1879-84); pastor at Kanpur (1885); principal of the Philander Smith Institute, at Mussooree (1889-92); and Presiding Elder of the Meerut District (1893-1914). During the entire time he was engaged also in evangelistic work throughout the whole Indian field. He retired in 1922, but continued to teach at Bareilly Theological Seminary. In 1872 he married Caroline Louisa McMillan, a W.F.M.S. missionary. He was a delegate to the General Conferences of 1896, 1908, and 1916. He wrote numerous books and pamphlets and translated many into Hindustani. Bishop J. W. Robinson said of him: "He established the work, he acquired the property, he inspired his Indian co-laborers with his own spirit, and in doing so he launched a movement of which we can see no end."—Biographical File, Board of Missions Library.

* The outposts changed considerably from year to year. In 1884 six Stations were named to which Local Preachers had been appointed. To this list another Station was added in 1885. The 1894 report in addition to the Pauri Circuit listed four other Circuits which were an outgrowth of the Pauri work: Srinagar, Bhot, Kainur, and Lansdowne.

and Kainur. By 1894 the Pauri staff had expanded to include, besides J. H. Gill, the missionary, and Mrs. Gill, two W.F.M.S. women assistants, twenty-one Bible readers and teachers, and fourteen Indian preachers. Gill was so encouraged that he declared there was "no more hopeful or important field than Garhwal" within the entire extent of Methodist mission work in India. Converts were principally from the Doms, who were aborigines.³⁵¹

ODUH DISTRICT, 1877-95

At the 1877 Conference appointments were made to nine charges of the Oudh District.* Twenty years had passed since Methodist missionary work had been opened in the province yet only 311 members and probationers were reported the next year. "Take from these all who have come from other places, and all who are of Christian parentage," said J. H. Messmore, Presiding Elder, "and the very few remaining will give melancholy proof of the fact that Oudh is virtually untouched by our twenty years of work." His report for 1879 was of like tenor. "We have no class movements to record; no indication of special progress in any direction. Hindus, Mohammedans, and educated young India . . . remain intact, so far as our efforts to move them are concerned." When another five years had passed the outlook had become more encouraging. The workers were more hopeful, inquirers had increased in number, and in several instances men listening to preaching on the streets and at melas had come forward to confess their faith in Christ and receive baptism. In 1891 E. W. Parker was still of much the same opinion as Messmore—that Oudh had been a very hard field to work—yet the substantial number of two thousand converts had been made. The group of workers had largely increased, this year consisting of eleven missionaries, fourteen Indian members of Conference, seventy-three employed Local Preachers, seventy-seven women Bible readers, and 108 Christian teachers. In January, 1894, Oudh was divided to form the Gonda District. This left, other than Lucknow, six Circuits† in the Oudh District. All of the Circuits except Sitapur and Lucknow were manned by Hindustani ministers, who, Parker declared, were "tried, trained, consecrated men." These Circuits were all large with sub-Circuits, schools, Sunday schools, Epworth Leagues, and "all kinds of services."³⁵²

In March, 1877, the Lucknow English church, J. H. Messmore, pastor, dedicated a new building which cost, including the lot and furnishings, Rs. 20,000. The church was fortunate in having a succession of able pastors. Messmore was pronounced by Brenton T. Badley to be one of the best preachers who ever filled a pulpit in India. He was characterized by "originality,

* The nine charges of the Oudh District (1887) were Lucknow English church; Lucknow Indian church; Sitapur; Hardoi; Gonda and Bahraich; Bara Banki; Rae Bareli, Kanpur English church; and Kanpur Indian church. For several years, at intervals, Lakhimpur was combined with Sitapur.

† These six Circuits were Bara Banki, Hardoi, Lakhimpur, Rae Bareli, Sitapur, and Unao. Kallu Das was this year (1894) transferred to the Northwest India Conference.

clarity of expression, aptness of illustration, [and] choice diction." He served the church at intervals for thirteen years, a longer period of time than any other minister. Among his successors were J. C. Lawson (1882), Rockwell Clancy (1884-87), and John W. Robinson (1892-99). From the early days special emphasis was given to Sunday-school work. In 1881 the charge reported twenty Sunday schools with 1,370 pupils. While the membership of the church was not large (in 1877 thirty full members, 1885, forty-four, 1895, ninety-five) the congregations were of good size, made up of professional men, government officials, railway employees, Indians conversant with English, Eurasians from the native city, and pupils of the two Methodist boarding schools. There were also many British soldiers. There were many conversions, some of nominal members of other churches who preferred not to change their church affiliation. In 1894 the church reported twelve hundred adherents and an average congregation of three hundred and fifty.

The Lucknow Indian church, the largest native church in the Oudh District, reported in 1877 fifty-five full members and thirty-one probationers. Preaching was maintained at seven points and there were twenty-one day schools with an enrollment of 1,316 pupils. Growth of the church was slow but J. W. Waugh found encouragement in the fact that what was accomplished was more by the efforts of native Christians than by missionary agency.

Some among these brethren begin to understand that the ultimate establishment of Christianity in India is to be accomplished mainly through themselves, and not through the foreign missionary; . . . the churches must be gathered and taught by our native brethren.

This year (1877) special work among the educated classes was begun with weekly lectures on the Christian religion by Ram Chander Bose. The addresses attracted an audience of about a hundred cultured Hindus and Mohammedans. Later the lecture series was given in several other cities where large audiences attended.³⁵³

In 1878 Brenton H. Badley* was appointed to the Lucknow Indian church beginning a missionary pastorate that was to continue for almost nineteen years, with a furlough interim of two years. During most of the period he served also as principal of the Centennial High School, a boarding school for Christian Indian boys, and was chiefly instrumental in developing it into one of the outstanding English high schools of India. For four years Isaac Fieldbrave was associated with him as Indian pastor. In 1882 Matthew

* Brenton H. Badley (1849-91) was born at Monmouth, Ind. He was a graduate of Simpson College (1870) and of Garrett Biblical Institute (1872). On Aug. 8, 1872, he married Mary A. Scott, a college mate. He was received on trial in the Des Moines Conference in September, 1872, and transferred to the North India Conference. With Mrs. Badley he sailed from New York on Oct. 23 and arrived in India on Dec. 19. He began at once to study Hindustani and within six months preached his first vernacular sermon in a Lucknow bazaar. For four years he was missionary-in-charge at both Gonda and Bahraich. His crowning work was the development of Reid Christian College. He was tireless in labor and wrote several books and numerous articles on Indian missions for American periodicals. Of him Bishop Thoburn wrote: "Blameless in life, . . . gentle in spirit, . . . immovable in purpose, he wielded a blessed influence among his Hindustani brethren . . ."—Obituary, Gospel in All Lands, June, 1901, pp. 273 f.

Stephens was admitted to the Conference on trial and appointed Indian pastor in association with Badley. He was continued as pastor until 1895. In 1894 the church reported 176 members, with an attendance at the Sunday services of four hundred to five hundred. The church was self-supporting, including pastor's salary and all incidental expenses. The evangelistic work this year was in the charge of W. A. Mansell, aided by twelve Indian assistants.

The North India Conference of the W.F.M.S. in 1882 decided to establish in Lucknow a Home for Homeless Women on the same plan and with the same purpose as the Home opened two years before at Pithoragarh. It was proposed, if possible, to raise the necessary funds for buildings and maintenance in India. The institution was opened in 1882, and in the course of years sheltered hundreds of women, many of whom were rehabilitated within a few months to go out to live "useful lives as ayahs, nurses, matrons, and zenana workers."³⁵⁴

Sitapur in ten years had seen missionaries come and go five times. It was no wonder, J. E. Scott commented when reporting from the Station for the first time in 1876, that growth had been slow "when no one has remained long enough to become acquainted with the people or understand the needs of the place." During 1878, with the help of a graduate of the Bareilly Theological School and five Local Preachers, Scott held preaching services at intervals in three centers: Sitapur, Khairabad, and Misrikh. Gradual progress was made year by year so that by 1892 there were nine centers, six Indian preachers, two W.F.M.S. missionaries, an Anglo-vernacular boys' school, a boarding school for Christian girls, and a number of small day schools. The boarding school had seventy-three girls in attendance in 1895, with Epworth and Junior Leagues, a missionary society, and active bands of Ready Workers who visited villages and mohallas. In 1893 the Sitapur charge, with fifty-eight Sunday schools, reported fifty-three full members and ninety-three probationers.

Accounts, similar save for details, may be given of Hardoi, Lakhimpur, Rae Bareli, and Bara Banki. At none of these Circuits did marked success attend missionary effort.³⁵⁵

Gonda as regards growth was, for the Oudh District, exceptional. In 1876, in combination with Bahraich, the Station reported only twenty members. In 1893, apart from Bahraich, Gonda had 650 full members and 560 probationers. The workers in 1876, in addition to the missionary, included four Local Preachers, two Exhorters, and two colporteurs. There were twenty-one day schools with twenty-nine teachers and 826 pupils. Outstations numbered three: Colonelganj, Nawabganj, and Ellenpur. Samuel Knowles, in charge again in 1880, remarked on the entire absence of opposition. Crowds, both Hindu and Mohammedan, listened attentively and respectfully during the services held in the bazaars. In his report for 1881 Knowles told of four remarkable conversions: a young Brahmin, listening in the Bahraich bazaar struck by the comparison between the tenth Hindu avatar who would come to destroy and the incarnate Christ who came not to destroy but to save; a young Madras servant who upon hearing a sermon in the Gonda bazaar became convinced that only Christ could save him from his sins; a middle-aged Brahmin fakir whose mind was opened to Christian truth in a bazaar service in Colonelganj; and a Brahmin compounder in the Nawabganj hospital who came to the bazaar one evening to break up the meeting and went away an earnest inquirer and shortly afterward became baptized. In 1884 the Gospel was preached by Knowles and his assistants in three hundred villages of the Gonda District, at seven melas, and in sixty-two bazaars of as many cities. The previous year, for the first time, Bahraich was made a separate charge with an Indian minister, a Local Preacher, and two W.F.M.S. Bible women. Gonda by 1888 had an aggressive program under way in seven outstations. In 1892, with ten centers of work, baptisms numbered 640. Knowles attributed success solely to "experimental preaching attended by the power of the Holy Spirit."

The deepest and most effectual kind of preaching is that which comes from a man's own experience. So before we go out on an itinerating tour it is our custom in Gonda to gather all our native preachers in from our out-stations, and spend a week or ten days in earnest heart-searchings and fervent prayers before God.³⁵⁶

It is noteworthy that Samuel Knowles served Gonda as pastor for a second lengthy period, 1880-93, an unusually long missionary pastorate. For much of that time Mrs. Knowles had direction of women's work. In 1884 she reported five Bible women engaged in zenana visiting; by 1886 the number of zenanas visited had increased to 141, and in 1887 to more than three hundred. This year a female devotee who with her husband had sat under a tree in sackcloth and ashes in all kinds of weather became a convert and joined in preaching and teaching in the villages. In 1888 Phoebe Rowe who, with Esther J. DeVine, for two years had been in charge of the Lucknow Girls' Boarding School, was transferred to Gonda for "the Boarding School and evangelistic work." A school and home was built during the year, which soon was overcrowded. By 1894-95 more than fifty villages were regularly visited by the W.F.M.S. workers.³⁵⁷

The work of the Kanpur English church in 1877 was stated by the pastor to be in a prosperous and very hopeful condition with "a greater spirit of active evangelism among the members" than before. The church had forty full members. This, however, did not accurately represent the strength of the church since many of the strongest moral and financial supporters maintained their membership elsewhere. In 1884 some twenty owners and managers of mills and factories were affiliated with the church as members of the congregation, many of whom gave a regular portion of their time to missionary work. At least three hundred Hindus and Mohammedans were this year receiving religious instruction. One layman maintained an English Sunday school for children of railway employees and four native Sunday schools and supported three native preachers. In 1892, with forty-six members, the church in addition to its work among English residents and soldiers and among Indians maintained an Anglo-vernacular day school for boys, and a boarding school for native Christian girls.

The Cawnpore Memorial School, the English boarding school, in 1877 was divided into two separate departments, a boys' school; and a school for girls, the Cawnpore Girls' School. Though under the handicap of a floating debt of $11,800, the Memorial School gained in influence until within a few years it was drawing pupils from all parts of India.³⁵⁸

In 1877 the Indian Society had some thirty members and probationers, mostly employees of business houses or the mission, and their families. These included a Local Preacher and an Exhorter who gave their entire time to bazaar preaching. There were three boys' day schools with an attendance of 140 pupils. Kanpur was one of the most promising fields for Christian mission work in North India, its native population characterized by greater independence of thought and action than that of most other India cities. The Kanpur native who became a Christian was less likely than those elsewhere to lose his caste standing and his livelihood. By 1885, with a new building the church had a congregation of 1,200 and 177 members and probationers. A plan to develop self-support in converts by training them in factory work in Kanpur mills and factories did not work out as well as was hoped. In 1882 some 116 boys, men, and women—the largest proportion being boys from the Shahjahanpur Orphanage—were employed part-time in factory work and part-time in school. Five years later there were only sixty, and in 1890 not one of the men who had been trained remained in the mills as an employee. Many who were enrolled as trainees were unwilling to submit to the discipline involved in training; some preferred other forms of employment; and others rightly objected, as Christians, to the Sunday work required by some of the factories. Robert Hoskins' judgment was that the scheme was too paternalistic; the men, he said, "become better Christians when they are left more to their own exertions."³⁵⁹

AMROHA* 1882-93 (SAMBHAL, 1894-95) DISTRICT

The Amroha District was formed in 1882 with thirteen Circuits.† It contained an approximate population of 500,000 in 1,200 towns and villages with Christians in 152 of them. All of the preachers—including Zahur ul Haqq, the Presiding Elder—were Indians. All of the pastors, with one exception,

* At the January, 1894, Conference the name of the District was changed to Sambhal.

† The thirteen original Circuits were Amroha, Sambhal, Rasulpur, Sharifpur, Gangeshri, Hasanpur, Narainiya, Raepur, Dhanpur, Daurala, Shahpur, Babukhera, and Joa. From time to time work was begun in new centers so that in 1889 there were twenty-two Circuits, including in addition to most of those on the original list, Bajoi, Anupshahr, Bulandshahr, Khurja, Meerut, Garhmukhtesar, Hapur, Mowana, Parichhatgarh, and Muradnagar.

were Local Preachers. Christian converts were widely scattered, only a few in a village, frequently not more than one family, and from fifteen to twenty villages on a Circuit. At the close of the first year Zahur ul Haqq reported that in most of the Circuits the churches had been strengthened and inquirers had increased. Schools multiplied. In 1884 in addition to "a school for the higher classes" there was one exclusively for Chamar children, one for children of the Sweepers, and a girls' school. In five Circuits—Babukhera, Joa, Narainiya, Daurala, and Raepur—the work was almost wholly among Sikhs. The Church of Christ, the Presiding Elder felt, was "being slowly, but surely built up in these villages." Women's work in the District was under the supervision of Mrs. Zahur ul Haqq, "carried on by twenty-two Bible women and teachers." She visited all of the charges in the District and "examined every girls' school." On the Sambhal Circuit there were in 1885 three girls' schools at Sambhal, a mohalla girls' school at Hatam Sarae; and in 1886 preaching places were established on the Hasanpur Circuit, at one of which openings were found among "three classes of people." In 1891 Zahur ul Haqq reported 1,101 persons baptized during the year. In 1892, after five hundred had been baptized, there were still "thousands of inquirers in the surrounding parts." This year there were twenty zenana schools with 572 girls in attendance; thirty-four boys' schools with 706 students, and a Christian community of 2,590 persons. The Bible women—of whom thirty-one were employed in 1894-95—in addition to Scripture teaching and the singing of hymns and bhajans taught needlework.

In 1894, under its changed name, the District had fourteen Circuits. Seven of the pastors were Conference members, and six were Local Preachers, of whom five were ordained and one unordained. The Presiding Elder, H. A. Cutting, a Hindustani minister, reported improvement "in every department of . . . [the] work." The temporal as well as the spiritual condition of the Christians, he stated the next year, is steadily getting better. "They keep their houses clean," he said, "wear clean clothes, and are becoming more industrious." Many promised to do their utmost to banish the evil practice of child marriage.³⁶⁰

AGRA DISTRICT, 1891-93

The Agra District was formed in 1891, in an area formerly included within the Rohilkhand District, with six Circuits.* The three central stations from which the work was carried on were Agra, Ajmer, and Muttra—each the capital of a civil district of 800,000 to a million people—and each with a missionary in charge. When formed the District had about 1,300 Christians in some fifty towns and villages. In 1892 the District had a working force of some hundred and fifty persons, including three missionaries with their wives;

* The six Circuits of the Agra District in 1891 were: Agra, Ajmer, Fatehpur Sikri, Hathras, Jalesar, and Muttra. Ajmer Circuit, in accordance with an action of the Boundary Commission of the Central Conference, was transferred in 1891 from the Bengal Conference to North India.—Minutes, North India Conference, 1891, pp. 71, 73.

two Indian Conference members; twenty-four Local Preachers, twenty Exhorters; twenty-five pastor-teachers; a W.F.M.S. missionary; Bible readers, and various unpaid workers. Bishop Thoburn wrote to the Gospel in All Lands that the thousands of children flocking into the churches greatly increased the need for schools. "We must not only have village schools, but central boarding schools in which the more promising boys and girls can be trained for usefulness." J. E. Scott, Presiding Elder at this time, stated that so many inquirers were presenting themselves for baptism that many had "to be held back," not because they were not worthy but because there was no practicable way of caring for them. This year there were about two thousand baptisms on the District. A thousand pupils were in the day schools and about five thousand in the Sunday schools.

Agra had three Societies, an English and a Hindustani Society in the city and a third among the villages about Jalesar. The Ajmer Circuit with two hundred communicants and a Christian community of four hundred and fifty in a population of two million also had both English and Hindustani work, and two sub-Circuits.³⁶¹

Muttra, thirty miles above Agra, on the left bank of the river Junna, had in the eighties a population of about 55,700. It was one of the most famous religious centers in India with many sacred sites of nationwide reputation. It first appeared as a separate Conference appointment in 1888, with J. E. Scott as missionary. Two private schools were taken over by the missionary and before the end of the first year eighty boys were enrolled and several branch schools opened. This year W. E. Blackstone contributed $3,000. for the beginning of deaconess work in the city, including the training of native workers, and for a missionary home. By 1890 the home was completed, with Miss Fannie J. Sparkes in charge, and more than five thousand visits already made. A girls' training school had been organized and eleven pupils were in attendance. There was also a Christian Boys' Boarding School and a Central Anglo-Vernacular School. A soldiers' chapel was built with an auditorium, a prayer and reading room, and a coffee shop. A general-purpose building, Flora Hall, had a preaching hall, schoolrooms, bookstore, and mission office. Almost "every form of Christian work . . . [was] carried on" by 1893, and five large Circuits were superintended from the city by Scott. Work was also in progress at Brindaban, six miles from Muttra, a city of a thousand temples, with eight thousand Bengali widows living as "the brides of Krishna."³⁶²

ALIGARH DISTRICT, 1891-93

When the Aligarh District was formed in 1891 Hasan Raza Khan, a Mohammedan convert, was appointed Presiding Elder. He had been baptized in 1880 and immediately begun to preach. In his youth he hated the Christians but one day was struck by the statement of a colporteur: "God so loved the world that He gave His only Son to die for our sins." Days later he sought the man and asked whether the words were "perfectly true."

My conscience burst on me like a volcano, . . . I was . . . at a loss what to do. . . . I then purchased from the colporteur fifteen books of this religion, read them over carefully, and when I had studied the Bible from beginning to end I became completely dissatisfied with the . . . religion of my forefathers, and became impressed that Christ was the only redeemer of the world.

* * * *

At last, against my inclination, I was obliged to admit the truth of Christianity. Its evidence was so strong that I could not resist it, and the fear of being hated and killed troubled me no more.

In 1887 he was appointed to the Kasganj Circuit where there were but fifteen Christians, all in one town. In 1885 Kasganj had a primary school, and schools also in three villages. By 1891 there were eight Circuits and a Christian community of 3,090, living in 125 villages. This year the Kasganj Circuit was made the nucleus of the new Aligarh District, with the following Circuits: Kasganj, Soron, Patiala, Aliganj, Sikandra Rao, Aligarh, Atrauli, and Etah. During the year 1,500 persons were baptized. The District had fifty primary schools with 1,222 pupils, and seventy-six Sunday schools with an enrollment of 2,085 pupils. In 1892 Christians increased in number to 5,751, the converts coming from almost all castes. The "rush of the people toward Christianity," the Presiding Elder said, "could not be arrested."³⁶³

BAREILLY DISTRICT, 1891-95

The Bareilly District as re-established in 1891, in the heart of the Methodist area where missionary work had been in progress since 1859, had sixteen appointments.* The Presiding Elder was P. T. Wilson. "We have," he reported at the close of 1891, "some 7,000 Christians in this District." Baptisms during the year had been 2,600 and from every side the call came, "Give us pastor-teachers, and come and baptize us." Christian work was being carried on among all classes. A few from "the so-called good castes" had become Christians, and many converts had been made from Mohammedans. There had been many recent conversions also among the thakurs and Wilson's hope was that as a group they might become Christians. The largest number of converts were Sweepers, some five thousand of whom out of 35,000 in the District had become Christians. There had been evangelistic work for many years among the 260,000 Chamars in the District but persecution among the few converts had been so severe that a Christian could not remain among his people. Indications now were that conditions were changing and a door was opening.

* The sixteen Circuits of 1891 were: Bareilly, Budaun, Shahjahanpur, East Shahjahanpur, Khera Bajhera, Aonla, Bilsa, Bisauli, Dataganj, Jalalabad, Muhamdi, Kakrala, Pawayan, Panahpur, Tilhar, and Ujhani. During the four years 1891-95 several Circuits were transferred to other Districts and some new Circuits were added. At the 1895 Conference, appointments were made to twelve Circuits.

There were so many Christian children and youth that schoolwork had to be confined almost exclusively to them. Goucher schools and pastor-teacher schools were numerous, awakening in the pupils a desire for more Christian education. We need more schools for our Christian boys, the Presiding Elder said, than we dare ask the Missionary Society for. Good boarding schools for girls were maintained by the W.F.M.S. at three central stations in the District: Bareilly, Budaun, and Shahjahanpur, with 380 Christian girls in attendance.

At the January, 1893, Conference ten Circuits were transferred from the Bareilly District to the Moradabad District. Even with this reduction in area there were 652 baptisms during the year. At some points strong opposition continued. On the Shahjahanpur Circuit a new Station, Khutar, was opened in 1891 under extreme difficulties. N. L. Rockey, missionary-in-charge, wrote: "None of my seven years has been as full of persecution and worry, and none so plentifully fruitful and interesting." The wide distribution of converts in the District is shown in the fact that in 1894, 3,954 Christians were living in 456 different villages.³⁶⁴

MORADABAD DISTRICT, 1891-95

The new Moradabad District in 1891 under J. C. Butcher had nine appointments.* Butcher defined the area as including the whole of the Bijnor administrative division, the eastern part of the Moradabad district, and a portion of the Tehri and of the native state of Rampur. Each of the Circuits was placed under an ordained preacher, and each had "been blessed with many conversions." In 1892 as then constituted the area had about 1,800,000 inhabitants, of whom 7,665 were native Christians. Of these 2,323 had been baptized during the preceding twelve months. The largest proportion of converts were Sweepers, Chamars, and Nats. Moradabad was the center of the District and was well organized for missionary work. The Methodist schools, as previously stated, were outstanding. Bijnor, and its seventeen villages, had 399 Christians on the rolls. It had good schools, a Boys' Elementary Boarding School and a Girls' Boarding School which had seventy in attendance. Since the majority of the Sweeper caste had been baptized on the Bijnor Circuit, the missionaries turned to the Chamars, a very numerous group. In the past, converts among them had not been steadfast, the larger proportion after a time having turned back to their former way of life. Schools were again opened among them and the workers were hopeful that lasting results might be accomplished.³⁶⁵

PILIBHIT DISTRICT, 1891-95

The Pilibhit District, in 1891 carved out of an area in which Janvier had

* The nine appointments of the Moradabad District in 1891 were: Moradabad; Moradabad Dang (Hindustani); Dhanpur, Nagina; Najibabad; Mandawar; Bashta; Bijnor; Chandausi; and Kundarki. No sooner had the District begun operations when readjustments were made. Appointments in 1892 were thirteen in number.—Minutes, North India Conference, 1892, pp. 74 f.

begun preaching in 1864, had six Circuits.* No missionary was included among the appointees. The Presiding Elder, Abraham Solomon, was a Hindustani Jew. The District had 3,458 Christians living in 315 villages. There were fifty-nine boys' schools with 1,316 pupils; and twenty-one girls' schools with an enrollment of 436. In 1892, 1,036 persons were baptized on the District. The Mohammedans of the area were aggressive in their efforts to win converts and disposed to oppress Christian workers.

The Mohammedans kept in custody for a whole day one of our teachers, and a new convert, to ascertain why they had embraced Christianity; but when they came to know that they had become Christians to save their souls, they let them go, with a request to give them a copy of the Bible and teach them the way to salvation; and a rich Mohammedan—one of their companions—became so much pleased with these two brethren that he gave us a small piece of land to build a chapel for Christian worship.

By 1894 Christians had increased in number to 6,622, besides thousands of inquirers, living in 423 towns and villages. The next year the W.F.M.S. reported twenty-two girls' schools and at one point a school of 120 women in preparation for Christian work and handiwork. The churches of the District provided entire support for thirteen preachers. On all of the Circuits the churches were growing, and practically everyone reported many inquirers.³⁶⁶

GONDA AND BUDAUN DISTRICTS, 1894-95

At the 1894 Annual Conference two new Districts were formed, Gonda and Budaun. The Gonda District, cut off from the Oudh District, had the first year ten Circuits.† In his report at the end of the year William Peters, the Hindustani Presiding Elder, commenting on his "very large field," said:

I had to travel nearly sixty miles on foot to visit a station . . . and during a tour of one and a half months, I travelled two hundred and seventy-three miles in this manner, to see the work in different villages, and also to open new work. Though converts have been few this year, yet some three hundred and seventy-four persons, young and old, were baptized . . .

The work was carried on among people from the highest caste to the lowest and inquirers came from all classes.³⁶⁷

The Budaun District, J. B. Thomas, Presiding Elder, "was formed . . . by cutting off a part of the Moradabad" District. It contained a territory of nearly 2,000 square miles—most of the Budaun administrative area and a large section of the Bareilly area—with a population of more than 900,000 people, of whom 8,000 were Christians living in some three hundred towns and villages. It was divided into nine Circuits.‡ There were 115 village schools in which 2,500

* The six appointments of 1891 were Pilibhit, Bisulpur, Baheri, Fataganj West, Shahi, Nawabganj.

† The appointments of the Gonda District in 1894 were: Colonelganj, Balrampur, Nawabganj, Bankapur, Utraula, Bahaich, Bhingra, Kaisarganj, Nanpara, and Ikauna. In 1895 appointments were made only to eight Circuits.

‡ The Budaun District Circuits were: Budaun, Aonla, Binawar, Bilsa, Bisauli, Dataganj, Kakrala, Ujhani, and Sahiswan.

boys and girls were enrolled and in Budaun two boarding schools with 110 boys and ninety girls who were being trained for Christian service. Efforts were made to provide regular preaching in every village where there were Christians.

NORTHWEST INDIA CONFERENCE, 1893-95

The 1892 General Conference made provision for a new Annual Conference in northwest India.* On January 18, 1893, the members of the Agra and Aligarh Districts and the pastors of Kanpur, Allahabad, and Bulandshahr of the North India Conference, and also of the Mussooree District of the Bengal Conference, met in the Methodist Church at Agra for organization. Twenty-three ministers in full connection and seven probationers were present, in addition to Bishop Thoburn. The group included a number of the most able and experienced of the India missionaries and Indian ministers.† The Conference was organized with seven Districts: Agra, Ajmer, Allahabad, Bulandshahr, Kasganj, Meerut, and Mussooree.

The largely increased debt of the Missionary Society in 1893 ‡ which led to a decrease of the appropriation dealt a heavy blow to Northwest India. The Conference adopted a resolution declaring that our more than 25,000 converts who have been brought in during the past three years are left with insufficient pastors and teachers, and the hundreds of men, women and children who are joining us every month cannot have that attention which is necessary to build them up in the faith of the Gospel³⁶⁸

Bishop Thoburn made a special trip to the United States in an endeavor to raise Rs. 35,000 in special gifts to supplement the year's appropriation.

The Conference took note of the tendency in most of the Circuits of baptizing only the men, without their families, and adopted a resolution disapproving the practice except "under extraordinary circumstances." At the 1894 Conference 9,810 baptisms were reported, making a Christian community of more than twenty-eight thousand. The very rapid increase necessitated a change in the educational program. This was indicated by the Board of Education in 1893: "Our school work must be largely limited to our own people." There was no desire to exclude non-Christians, but the Christians and inquirers taxed the capacity of the schools and it was felt that the education of the Christian constituency was the first obligation. Changes were necessary also in W.F.M.S. methods. "Zenana work and schools for heathen girls have been closed all over the conference," the 1894 Annual Report stated, "so that the Bible-readers

* G. C. Journal, 1892: "Northwest India Conference shall consist of that portion of the Northwest Provinces which lies south and west of the Ganges, the Punjab, and such parts of Rajputana and Central India as lie north of the twenty-fifth parallel of latitude."—P. 412.

† The charter members of the Conference were: Frank J. Blewitt, Edward S. Busby, Philo M. Buck, William R. Clancy, Isa Das, C. W. R. De Souza, Edwin T. Farnon, Robert Hoskins, H. R. Khan, Mahrub Khan, Chimman Lal, Chunni Lal, James C. Lawson, A. T. Leonard, Hasan Luke, James Lyon, H. Mansell, John E. Newsom, Dennis Osborne, Claudius H. Plomer, Jefferson E. Scott, Matthew Tindale, John D. Webb. Probationers, Daniel Buck, Y. Cornelius, Edwin W. Gay, Taffzul Haqq, J. S. Joseph, Mohan Lal, Joshi Sumer. Those received on trial were: Taj Khan, Fazi Haqq, Fazi Mash, Ishwari Pershad, John D. Ranson, Ram Sahai.

‡ See pp. 130, 132.

and teachers may teach the Christian women and children." In 1895 the Society had girls' boarding schools in operation at Muttra, Meerut, Kanpur, Aligarh, and Ajmer for Indian Christian girls, and the high school at Kanpur for English and Eurasians.³⁶⁹

AGRA DISTRICT, 1893-95

When transferred from North India to the Northwest India Conference in 1893 the Agra District had eight large Circuits.* J. E. Scott was continued as Presiding Elder. In his report to the January, 1894, Conference he recalled the time when the missionaries visited the non-Christian melas preaching to indifferent listeners and contrasted it with 1893 when "most profitable melas were held at Aligarh, Hathras, and Brindaban" with instruction given through lectures, sermons, and exhortations to hundreds; and hymns, prayers, and the sacrament of the Lord's Supper brought spiritual inspiration and solace. Some thirty village pastor-students were this year receiving training in special schools at Agra, Aligarh, and Muttra. Reading, writing, simple arithmetic, the Bible, Catechism, and practical evangelistic work were taught. Three or four rupees per month for an unmarried man sufficed for support. Scott felt that a marvelous change, wrought by grace in the hearts of hundreds of converts, was taking place.

As is well known, many of the people are very, very poor. They live from hand to mouth, with but little in the hand. They are exceedingly illiterate. With the exception of about one hundred and fifty mission employees and several hundred students, the great mass are unable to read or write. It cannot be expected that a people oppressed and depressed for centuries will burst out into brilliancy all at once.³⁷⁰

Scott held a six-week District Summer School attended by teachers, Exhorters, and lower-grade workers and their wives in which the elementary subjects were taught, together with the parables, the Catechism, and Ten Commandments. Experienced missionaries gave daily lectures, and led devotional meetings. At the close there was a District Convention attended by many of the members of the local churches.

The second round of Quarterly Conferences of 1895, Scott felt, were especially helpful. Two questions: What can be done to stimulate self-support of the churches? and, What can be done to reach the women—particularly the Christian women—in the District? were discussed in all the Conferences.

The meetings were held for the most part, on account of the great heat, at night. There is nothing more primitive or more interesting than these little meetings of humble people under some wide-spreading tree at night, with the people seated on the ground, around a dimly burning native lamp, literally the 'smoking flax,' singing their weird songs and offering their simple heart prayers. It is such meetings as these which must be held in every village and hamlet wherever there are Christians, if we are to get these people properly taught and indoctrinated.³⁷¹

* The Agra District appointments in 1893 were: Agra, Aligarh, Brindaban, Bharatpur, Fatehpur Sikri, Gobardhan, Hathras, and Muttra.

KASGANJ DISTRICT, 1893-95

The Kasganj District constituted at the first session of the Northwest India Conference included all but one Circuit of the Aligarh District of the 1892 North India Conference. In all it had thirteen Circuits.* The Presiding Elder was Hasan Raza Khan, who served also as pastor of the Kasganj Circuit. The District had eighty-seven small schools attended by 1,548 boys and girls. During the year 1,400 "accepted Christ and received baptism" and entreated the Presiding Elder to provide more schools for the education of their children. He opened fifteen small schools but could do nothing for some Stations. Funds were needed for forty additional pastor-teachers for forty congregations which were without pastors. In 1894 inquirers continued to increase. The Presiding Elder called the preachers together and urged them to give themselves to the instruction of converts and not to baptize others until proper arrangement for training them could be made. In a short time the plea for baptism became so urgent that he felt compelled to consent "with the result that two thousand and seventy-eight embraced Christianity." His call for funds for more pastor-teachers remained unanswered. Self-support was encouraged but the collections were too small to admit appointment of additional pastors. Eight workers were supported by local collections and this despite the fact that many of the people were so poor that they had but one scant meal a day.

They cannot secure warm clothing for the cold weather, and have to huddle around a fire made of leaves and refuse most of the night to keep warm. . . . At the Hathras mela [1885] the self-support meeting was a pronounced success. The Christians of the Kasganj District placed their gifts on the table. There were rupees, pice, handkerchiefs, coats, sheets, chickens, eggs and various articles which were sold by auction and realized one hundred & thirteen rupees; this with the collections of the year makes a total of eleven hundred and sixty-seven rupees for the Pastor's Fund.³⁷²

AJMER DISTRICT, 1893-95

The Ajmer District as constituted in 1893 with Charles W. R. De Souza as Presiding Elder had eight Circuits.† It was an offshoot of Agra. It was a difficult field because of the remoteness of the villages, their inaccessibility, and the fact that different dialects were spoken in the various areas. Ajmer as the principal town of the province of Rajasthan was surrounded by twenty-four native states, including some of the wealthiest and most influential of India. There were about 1,200 baptisms in 1893, and De Souza believed the number might have been doubled had helpers been available to oversee the work and build up the new converts in faith. Two of the principal Circuits were served by missionaries, Pisangan by James Lyon and Phalera by C. H. Plomer. The two boarding schools in Ajmer—one for boys and one for girls—were growing rapidly. A training class for students was maintained to prepare them for mission work in the District.

* The thirteen appointments of Kasganj District in 1893 were: Kasganj, Aliganj, Atrauli, Etah, Firozabad, Gangiri, Jalesar, Kaimganj, Mustafabad, Patiala, Sikandra Rao, Soron, and Suket.

† The eight Circuits of the Ajmer District in 1893 were: Ajmer, Kishangarh, Nawa, Phalera, Pisangan, Pushkar, Srinagar (in Rajasthan), and Rupnagar. In 1894 Bir, Beawar, and Kuchawan were added.

The Ajmer District embraced an area in which the Rajputana Presbyterian Mission had been represented for more than thirty years and the coming in of the Methodists caused some protest.* A strict observance of comity would doubtless have dictated the choice of an unoccupied area, of which there was no lack.³⁷³

ALLAHABAD DISTRICT, 1893-95

The new Allahabad District as constituted in 1893 with Dennis Osborne as Presiding Elder had only two chief centers, Allahabad and Kanpur. The city of Allahabad was at the extreme southern point of the Conference, 120 miles south of Kanpur. The intervening area afforded a vast field for Christian work with many communities of accessible people among whom very little missionary work was being done.

Although Allahabad had an English-speaking population of six thousand the Methodist English church reported in 1893 only forty-four full members. Rockwell Clancy was continued as pastor. Missionary work was being carried on in four villages and several mohallas. The Indian members were divided into three Classes. There were six day schools and eight Sunday schools. A weekly prayer meeting was held and a noonday preaching service in the English church on Sunday. Eighty persons were baptized during the year. By 1895 there were thirty-two boys in the school, of whom eighteen were orphans. This year the employed staff included three ordained preachers, four Local Preachers, and eight Exhorters and teachers.³⁷⁴

The Kanpur English church at this time had forty-seven full members and seventeen probationers. John E. Newsom was pastor. The wife of the proprietor of a shoe and harness factory conducted a day school and Sunday school for the children of the factory employees. In addition to the regular church services attended by a congregation of four hundred, the pastor held English services at a railway station, a railway institute, and railway barracks. In 1895 a Mrs. Bond took upon herself the entire support of the mission in Bithur.

The Hindustani work in the District during these years was cared for by

* The Rev. F. Ashcroft in an address at the Third Decennial Missionary Conference, at Bombay, 1892, based his objection on the ground that Methodist methods of evangelization differed from Presbyterian. "We," he said, "believe a man should not be baptized until . . . he understands what he is doing and is sincere in his action. Our Methodist brethren do not seem to think that necessary. They baptize in hope of future real conversions . . . So they have baptized in the villages, round about Ajmere, hundreds whom we would never dream of baptizing . . . This must result in evil . . ." (Report of the Third Decennial Missionary Conference, Bombay, 1892-93, II, 617.) Methodists made various answers. One was that some missions, with limited personnel, were in fields which they had no prospect of fully occupying for decades, if ever. The Ajmer work, more fully developed, much later was turned over by the Methodists to the Scotch Presbyterians.

Robert Hoskins, carried on at thirteen different locations in Kanpur and at eleven outside centers. A training school for boys in the city laid special stress on Indian music in addition to instruction in the Bible and a general education. Under Mrs. Hoskins' supervision fifteen Christian women were employed in teaching the Gospel to the women of the District. In 1893 forty preachers were in charge of ten sub-Circuits. Four hundred baptisms included converts from more than fourteen different castes. Over 1,500 candidates for baptism were under instruction. Attendance at the native girls' school had reached in 1895 eighty-five and was beginning to supply qualified Christian women workers. The Date Bible School for Christian boys was opened this year, supported by Henry Date of Chicago. In Kanpur Rs. 1,123 was contributed for self-support; Rs. 246 by native mission workers; and Rs. 657 by native converts, most of whom were exceedingly poor. Much of their contribution was in kind—eggs, flour, hens, deerskins, and so forth.³⁷⁵

BULANDSHAHR DISTRICT, 1893-95

Bulandshahr in 1893 was a district of British India in the Meerut division of the United Provinces. It was a level plain with an area of 1,899 square miles, highly cultivated and thickly populated. The Methodist work had been begun in 1888 as a part of the Amroha District, North India Conference. As constituted in 1893 the Bulandshahr District had ten appointments.* Christian workers, in addition to Charles Luke, Presiding Elder, included "eight deacons, five local preachers, thirty-one exhorters and twenty-five pastor-teachers," all Indians. Christians in the District were estimated to number 5,251. The Presiding Elder said at the January, 1894, Conference:

Last year there were 2,295 baptisms in the district, and about 5,000 more inquirers are found ready who are eagerly desirous for baptism, but on account of paucity of funds we are unable to provide pastor-teachers for their spiritual training, and hence their baptisms are being delayed. These people voluntarily come from long distances and beg of us and press us to make some early arrangements for saving their souls. The reason . . . is that their relations and neighbors have made great progress in religious advancement, and they find themselves more backward.

Prayer meetings were held in eighty-six different places in the District. There were forty-five day schools in 1894 with 780 pupils in attendance. Urgent need was felt for a boarding school as a training institution for boys whose parents pleaded earnestly for their instruction. Bible classes for converts were held in each Circuit. Adults and children to the number of 1,298 were baptized.³⁷⁶

MUSSOOREE DISTRICT, 1893-95

The Mussooree District when included within the Northwest India Con-

* The Bulandshahr appointments, 1893, were: Bulandshahr, Anupshahr, Aurangabad, Dadri, Dabhai, Jahangirabad, Khurja, Pahasu, Siyana, and Shikarpur.

ference (1893) had six charges,* which was less than half the size it was in 1892. Henry Mansell, who was principal of the Philander Smith Institute, was appointed Presiding Elder. Despite his double appointment he visited in 1894 all of the Stations in the District, some of them three times. In 1894 the six charges had three English churches with a total of ninety-seven full members; and six Hindustani churches with a membership of 205 besides 1,047 probationers. The Indian Christian community numbered 1,465 adults and 579 children. There were sixteen Local Preachers, eighteen Exhorters, nineteen teachers (other than pastor-teachers), and three Bible readers. There were in the District twenty-two vernacular boys' schools with 389 pupils, and seven girls' schools with an enrollment of 147; and three Anglo-vernacular boys' and two girls' schools with a total enrollment of 241. Sunday schools numbered sixty-nine, with 1,770 pupils. While there were fewer baptisms in the Mussooree than in most other Districts in the Conference Mansell felt assured that "marked and steady progress" was being made in all the Circuits.³⁷⁷

MEERUT DISTRICT, 1893-95

The Meerut District, about sixty miles in width and 125 in length, in the United Provinces, lay principally between the Ganges and Jumna Rivers. When constituted at the 1893 Conference it had nine appointments.† Philo M. Buck was designated as Presiding Elder. He considered the District to be in advance of all other Districts in the Conference in the numbers of accessible classes. Socially they were at the foot of the ladder but as regards food and raiment they were as well off "as the average of their neighbors of higher social distinction." The Christians among them were comparatively independent and seldom asked for material help. Converts from the lowest castes who became educated were not discriminated against by the so-called better classes. Often the preacher of the Gospel who had become educated and cultured ranked among the most influential men of a town. In contrast to these favorable aspects in some of the newer areas of the work antagonism to missionary work was manifested.³⁷⁸

In the region where the greatest number of baptisms have occurred, the leading men . . . assembled in council, where it is said several hundred were present, and . . . bound themselves under a curse to suppress Christianity and to prevent its further spread. Petitions were made to secure the assistance of native government officials. . . . One of our workers was asked to name a sum for which he would be willing to give up his work of evangelization. Our people have been beaten, were deprived for a time of pasturage for their cattle and of fuel for cooking their food, and from one village a company of Christians recently baptized has been expelled.

* The Mussooree District in 1893 included Mussooree, Lahore, Deoband, Patiala, Rajpura, and Roorkee. Account of all these charges has been given on earlier pages. During 1888-92 the District had been a part of the Bengal Conference. Five of its 1892 Circuits—Delhi, Baghpat, Bilochpur, Meerut, and Muzaffarnagar, were placed in the new Meerut District.

† The nine appointments of the Meerut District were: Meerut, Baghpat, Bilochpur, Delhi, Hapur, Minranpur, Mawana, Muzaffarnagar, and Rubbapura.

The Presiding Elder reported that he knew of but one lapse from Christianity resulting from persecution.³⁷⁹

While for most of the converts the schools furnished only elementary instruction their capacity to understand the Gospel and to embrace the new life which it offered was not dependent on the extent of their literacy. Buck was often surprised by the "clear views of sin, repentance, faith, conversion and good works" found among "simple village Christians who could not count one hundred if salvation depended upon it." Their singing was full of enthusiasm and inspiration. They learned by heart many hymns that were "full of gospel truth and power" and in this way came to possess "a considerable body of the best theology." In 1894 P. M. Buck was the only missionary in the District. His policy as Presiding Elder was not to baptize converts more rapidly than they could be shepherded and trained. He said that he knew of no instance in which proper care was exercised where the convert renounced the faith. Eight of the nine Circuits were served by Hindustani members of Conference and associated with them were thirteen Local Preachers, twenty-seven Exhorters, and forty pastor-teachers. In 1893 there were 1,726 baptisms; in 1894, 1,728.³⁸⁰

BOUNDARIES OF THE FIVE INDIA CONFERENCES, 1895

FORTY YEARS OF INDIA MISSIONS

By 1895 the Methodist Episcopal Church had been thoroughly established in India, not merely in one section of the country but in all the major regions. Its five Conferences embraced the entire geographical extent of India and Burma. The North India Conference had ninety-nine charges; South India twenty-seven; Bengal-Burma, twenty-five; Bombay, twenty-five; and Northwest India, seventy-six; a total of 252 for all India and Burma.* Church buildings and chapels numbered 227. There were 26,611 full members and 43,899 probationers. The Christian community, which included adherents who were not church members, numbered 65,263 adults and 31,617 children. There were 1,286 vernacular and Anglo-vernacular schools with 29,363 pupils, and 2,252 Sunday schools with an enrollment of 77,376.

Within four decades the Church sent to India—counting missionary wives—no less than 423 missionaries. Of these 337 were sent out by the Missionary Society and eighty-six by the W.F.M.S.

That the Methodist mission within the brief space of four decades was able to accomplish such impressive results was in part accounted for by the generally prevailing friendliness of the Indian people. The missionaries encountered little of the extreme prejudice against foreigners, with the resultant persecution, which made the beginnings of Methodist work in China so difficult. The greatest resistance was met on religious grounds. Mohammedans, because of thorough indoctrination in childhood and youth, were inclined to be hostile. Among the Hindus the Brahmmins as the priestly class, characterized by exclusiveness, were naturally opposed to any movement which threatened their hereditary rights and privileges. Of overt oppression there was very little and such as occurred was short-lived.† Persecution of converts, however, was more common. P. M. Buck, when Presiding Elder of the Meerut District, Northwest India, in 1894 reported that converts were "being persecuted bitterly in various villages." The victims were low-caste people and the persecution, in most cases by the landholders and other leading men, was motivated

* This total includes English language, Indian, and combined English language and Indian charges. In some instances a charge did not have an organized Society—and in other cases included more than one. The Minutes did not indicate the number of Societies in a District or in a Conference as a whole.

† For example, in 1885 J. H. Gill, then in charge of the Bareilly Circuit in North India, reported that a mob of some seventy-five people threatened a small band of Methodist women who were visiting and teaching at Bisulpur, but there was no violence.—Minutes, North India Conference, 1886, p. 28.

not by an inherent opposition to Christianity but for economic reasons and a fear of the breaking down of caste customs. Sometimes the treatment was persistent and extremely cruel. However, the recognized right of the mission to take such cases to the courts for adjudication and enforcement of penalties served as a deterrent.

The British rule, after the taking over of administration from the East India Company by the Crown, was friendly to Christian missions. Even-handed justice in law enforcement, the policy of toleration, and the grants-in-aid * to schools made a direct contribution to the Christian cause. In numerous cases, also, British officials and merchants contributed generously to local support of missions and to English language churches. The investment of British capital in railroads, in irrigation projects, in the development of unproductive land facilitated missionary activities. Association with the British contributed to the prestige of the missionaries and their work, particularly with the underprivileged classes.

In the beginning the mission possessed the appearance and character of a foreign enterprise and this continued to be the case for years. The missionaries considered themselves "agents" of the Missionary Society. The term was first used by Butler and after him was in common use by other missionaries during most of the period. This tended to cause them to hold control in their own hands in the administration of funds, even in the case of money raised on the field. It led them also to think of the Annual Conference as an organization whose membership was limited to missionaries, a tendency which restricted the development of an indigenous Indian Christian Church. At the first meeting of the India Mission Annual Conference, in 1864, a recommendation from the Bareilly Quarterly Conference was presented for the admission of Joel T. Janvier, William Butler's first Indian assistant, to the Conference. This prompted questioning among the missionaries whether it was expedient to admit native ministers to the Conference. It was finally decided that Janvier and four other Indians should be admitted but this action did not establish a policy. Eleven years later (1875) comparatively few Indians had been received into Conference membership. Parker characterized the District Conference as the "native brethren's" Conference.

A long step was taken in the direction of placing Indians in a position of equality with missionaries when in 1882 Parker introduced a resolution calling for the appointment of an Indian minister as Presiding Elder. Parker's proposal, Messmore declared, "startled many of his colleagues by its bold liberality." But the mover of the resolution was the most prominent missionary in the Conference and the resolution was passed. When the list of appointments was read Zahur ul Haqq was named as Presiding Elder of the Amroha District. Native Presiding Elders had been appointed in China some years earlier but in their cases in each District a foreign missionary had charge of all matters relating to the finances of the mission. Zahur ul Haqq was endowed with as much authority as any missionary Presiding Elder in the Conference.

* The government's grant-in-aid system was not an unalloyed good. It placed the schools under certain limitations affecting the teaching of religion and made the schools subject to prescribed examinations and reports by inspectors who often were Englishmen indifferent to religion and to Brahmins who were critically antagonistic. Some schools preferred not to receive aid in order to be free to teach religion under more favorable conditions as regards time of day scheduled, and selection of textbooks and other subject matter.—See J. Richter, op. cit., pp. 307 ff.

This native minister . . . now became the peer of the [other] presiding elders in matters financial as well as ecclesiastical. He had a vote in arranging the finances of the Mission, all the Mission agents in his district received their pay from his hands, and—more than all this—this Indian presiding elder sat with other presiding elders in the bishop's council or cabinet.³⁸¹

This case at the time was exceptional but later in the eighties, beginning about 1886, Indians were more and more appointed as the ministers of important Stations and Circuits. An Indian Christian leadership was emerging whose character and ability compelled recognition. Parker, as a discerning and fair-minded missionary leader, was one of the first to acknowledge this. Every year, he said, able tried men come from the ranks of Local Preachers who have "a clear, definite experience, sincere devotion, pure character, and real efficiency in the work."³⁸² It was not necessary for such men to wait indefinitely for the recognition that Annual Conference membership gave. They achieved recognition by virtue of their personality and strength of character, and responsibility was thrust upon them by missionaries and Indian fellow Christians who needed the assistance they were able to give.

Between 1888, when Thoburn was elected to the episcopacy, and the beginning of 1895 he ordained more than two hundred men as ministers. During these same years, according to the Bishop's statement, hundreds of other men who had not yet become eligible for ordination had been added to the list of Methodist preachers.³⁸³

A practice which tended toward cutting Christians off from their own people was the anglicizing of names * of young converts, both boys and girls. For those who had the native capacity and received sufficient training to become Christian leaders and teachers this was not a disadvantage, but the practice gave substance to the later charge that Christianity was essentially a foreign religion. In 1885 the first session of the India National Congress was held and from then on as nationalism became more and more a dominant influence in India the charge acted as a deterrent to the spread of Christianity, especially among the intelligentsia.

The recruiting of personnel for India by the Missionary Society based largely on the willingness of a candidate to go to the Orient and the few requirements to be met, contributed in no small degree to the weaknesses evidenced on the field and the slowness of establishing churches. No special preparation of candidates for the difficult and highly specialized task was required in advance of their outgoing. Consequently from one to three years of a missionary's time had to be given to language and history study. Inquiry into the motive and purpose of candidates was not as thorough as it should have been. Durbin's insistence upon a life dedication was not adhered to. No vigorous health examination was required. As a result there were many health breakdowns. Within two or three years more than a few men or their wives became unable or unwilling to remain on the field. As early as 1868 this was stated bluntly in an article on the missionary program as a whole, which appeared in the Methodist Quarterly Review:

* This practice could be justified by the fact that many given names were identified with the Hindu religion and the missionaries were convinced that every such bond must be broken.

A very large proportion of those sent abroad return within a few years, without having accomplished much in the missionary field; while a rigorous inquiry might possibly disclose the fact that not a few of those who remain are less efficient than the importance of the work demands. In some cases fifty per cent of a reinforcement prove failures; while, taking all societies together, it would perhaps be safe to say that twenty-five per cent of those sent abroad fail to spend their lives in efficient service on the mission field.

"No Church," it was added, "has greater cause of solicitude in this respect than our own."³⁸⁴

The expense involved in sending out men and their wives and bringing them back within one, two, three, or five years made a heavy draft on funds sorely needed on the field. The problem was not insoluble. Yet little improvement was made and even in the later years of the period the tenure of service of many was brief. In August, 1888, Parker wrote to the Missionary Secretary a strong letter of protest against the wastefulness of sending out ill-prepared and unfit men. "If you were to look up the record you would be astonished at the amount of money paid out for passages during the past five years." He cited cases of three men who came to the field to see whether they liked it and to stay only if they did. He specially stressed the importance of "sending out healthy men," and "strong men who will take India as their life work."³⁸⁵

The record of the W.F.M.S. in these respects was better than that of the Board, particularly as regards training in advance for the work. Their representatives were practically all teachers or physicians. Almost without exception no teacher without college or normal-school training was sent to the field. No doctor was sent without graduation from a reputable medical school.

It must be said that of those who remained in India for a considerable period of time—and in the aggregate there were many of these—the majority were able missionaries, an honor to the Church, and worthy of the tribute paid to India's Christian missionaries by James B. Pratt, of Williams College, in testimony to their astuteness and devotion.*

* James Bissett Pratt: "I made a point in India . . . to get acquainted with the missionaries and see their work at close quarters; and I do not hesitate to say not only that they are the most devoted group of men and women I have ever known, but also that a large portion of them impressed me as liberal-minded, far-seeing, and surprisingly wise. . . . Moreover, the endless variety of work and responsibility that falls to the lot of most missionaries in a land like India develops in many of them, after ten or twenty years' training, a practical wisdom, a soundness of judgment, and an ability to

While many of the men thought of schools as a necessary adjunct to their preaching ministry, for most of the women they were the primary objective. Probably the ecclesiastical denial of ordination to women made for the progress of the Gospel, for the intimate, person-to-person contact of teacher with pupil, repeated day after day, was more conducive to the understanding and acceptance of the Christian message than any other method of evangelization.

Success in organizing schools was amazing. Within the first two decades of the India Mission, Methodist women had fully controverted Alexander Duff's contention that it was impossible to establish and maintain girls' schools in India. Their determination and their persistence were astonishing. They insisted that the need of education was as great for girls as for boys. They scoffed at the contention that Indian fathers could not be made to realize the need and to approve the enrollment of their daughters in schools. Everywhere they encountered difficulties—lack of facilities, indifference of many of the parents, lack of interest and irregular attendance on the part of pupils—but they refused to despair. Among all the many missionaries sent to India by the W.F.M.S. only one became so discouraged that she returned home. By no means all of the schools that were begun became permanent but in 1895 numerous schools for girls were being maintained which developed into outstanding institutions.

The great majority of the day schools were primary schools. They outnumbered by far all other schools for the obvious reason that they were the necessary foundation of an educational system. They were the easiest to establish and the cheapest to maintain. Wherever missionary work was begun, in city, town, or village, whether or not interest was shown a primary day school was begun. But there were certain factors which limited the effectiveness of the primary schools. Bishop Thoburn went so far as to say at the fifth India Central Conference (1894) that the primary schools were not only the weakest link in the educational system of India missions but probably the weakest point in all the work. The cause was not far to seek. Experience demonstrated that unless a child completed a primary course of at least four years he did not become permanently literate. A very small proportion of the children enrolled in the first-year classes continued in school for that length of time. No effective system of supervision of the primary day schools was established in any of the Conferences. Many schools lapsed by reason of the limited tenure of the missionary, the missionary's wife, or the Indian helper in charge. Regular and continued attendance for more than a year or so was difficult to secure. Without much persuasion parents could be led to assent to their children's initial enrollment. But to convince them of the importance of continuous schooling for three or four years was a much more difficult matter. Besides all of this the unavoidable diminution in number from class to class because of prolonged understand and deal with men, and to influence and direct whole communities, rarely met with at home."—India and Its Faiths, A Traveller's Record, pp. 430 t.

malaria or other illness, and because of death, was an important factor. Years later than the end of the present period a government report showed that for British India as a whole, of every hundred pupils enrolled in the first primary in a given year only eighteen were in school three years later. For the years 1860-95 the proportion was without doubt considerably larger.

Another element of serious weakness in schools of all kinds was the shortage of Christian teachers. The prevailing policy dictated hiring any teachers obtainable on the grounds that it was better to have some or, if necessary, all pagan teachers, than to have no school. Bishop Edward Thomson called attention to this practice on the occasion of his visit to India:

After breakfast we visited our school at [Najibabad]. . . . It is taught by Mohammedans and Pagans, the head master being a Brahmin. I proposed prayer, but was told it was not admissible; called for a class in the Bible, but there was none prepared; asked a large class if any one could recite the ten commandments, but found none Since my visit the missionary assures me that the school is on more Christian foundations.³⁸⁶

The Bishop described a number of other schools where similar conditions prevailed.* In 1872 T. J. Scott in his report of the Bareilly District lamented "the want of Christian teachers" for the schools and declared that a "Christless education . . . [was] making a nation of skeptics of India."³⁸⁷ His feeling of regret was shared by other missionaries but in many areas if the maximum number of schools were to be maintained there was little that could be done to change the situation.

In 1889, with the number of baptisms increasing with great rapidity, Thornburn raised a question whether day schools might not better be established only on a Christian basis. The Church was bound, he said, "to provide a simple, inexpensive school . . . within reach of every village in which Christians live." In the face of the emergency he questioned whether the Church was justified in continuing to spend large sums of money for the education of non-Christian children who could be as well provided for in government schools.³⁸⁸ A practical difficulty lay in the fact that on many of the Circuits the Christians were scattered in small groups over wide areas and to provide a school for every such group was impossible. Boarding schools were few in number as compared with the number of Christian groups and were too expensive to provide for more than a mere fraction of the children. For the most part Sunday schools existed only where there were day schools. The Indian preachers on their rounds of the Circuits endeavored to gather the children into classes, tell them Bible stories, and teach them to read. Some teaching of children was also done by the Bible women who in their rounds in the villages, in addition to their teaching of adults, frequently gathered groups of children with whom they sang and told Bible stories. Such teaching was for the most part desultory but all such efforts had some effect. As years passed a gradually increasing number of Christian graduates of the secondary schools were available, some as pastor-teachers and others as full-time teachers, but in 1895 the religious effectiveness of primary schools still suffered from the deficient supply of Christian teachers.

* C. L. Bare, missionary-in-charge of the Shahjahanpur Circuit, North India Conference, in 1881 had twenty-six day schools on the Circuit, eighteen for girls and eight for boys, with 930 pupils, taught by forty-six teachers of whom only eleven were Christians and thirty-five were Hindus or Mohammedans.—Sixty-third Ann. Rep., M.S. (1881), p. 145.

Instruction in religion in the primary schools was necessarily limited in scope and content. Major attention had to be given to teaching the pupils to read and write. The schools as a rule were opened daily with a Bible reading and prayer, and Christian reading books were used. The method of religious teaching was chiefly memorization of selected verses, of parts of the Psalms, and of Christian hymns and bhajans. This process was varied by telling Bible stories which often were also memorized by the pupils.

Zenana teaching carried on by women missionaries and Indian converts trained by them did not conform to any set pattern since continued admission to the homes depended upon maintaining the interest of the women, and this required tact, ingenuity, and adaptation of methods and materials.

The instruction of inquirers was chiefly doctrinal in content and of limited compass. The core of the teaching consisted of the Apostles' Creed, the Ten Commandments, the Lord's Prayer, and the Shorter Catechism. P. M. Buck wrote in 1893: these "are being drilled into the people with great persistency."³⁸⁹

The Methodist tradition of itinerancy influenced appointments, although it was not as tenaciously adhered to as in the American Conferences, and less rigidly in the case of Presiding Elders than of pastors. This operated to the disadvantage of the work. The influence of the missionary—a foreigner—increased in proportion to the extent that the people of his Circuit made his acquaintance and became convinced of his integrity, his selflessness and purity of motive. Yet not infrequently he had only fairly begun to win respect and affection when he was picked up and sent to some distant area where he was unknown.

Missionaries organized churches on the model of American Methodism. They can scarcely be criticized for this since it was what the Missionary Society expected them to do. In the churches the religious services were patterned after those familiar in America. An unnecessary amount of organization was developed, practically all on the home model. The Methodist periodical, the Lucknow Witness, protested against this tendency as early as 1874. The machinery of the Church, it said, "must be very greatly simplified, its expenses reduced, and it must be trusted to develop itself freely, in the conditions in which it is being tried." Yet the tendency continued.³⁹⁰

Before the advent of William Taylor there were few English language churches in India. When he left after four years many English Societies had been established. Before his coming the Methodist work was confined to three provinces: Rohilkhand, Oudh, and Garhwal. When he left Societies had been established over the whole of India. Before his arrival the mission of Methodism was thought of almost wholly in terms of Indian evangelization. As a result of his campaign evangelism among the English-speaking people was considered to be one of the chief objectives of the missions, in some centers on a par with evangelism among the Indian population. Work with the English was so much emphasized and absorbed so much of the time of some missionaries in the South India Conference that others felt it was standing in the way of the Indian missionary work.

Although many of the British regiments had Anglican chaplains who were government appointees, and the Wesleyan Missionary Society considered work among the troops to be one of its responsibilities, some of the Methodist missionaries felt themselves called to undertake a ministry to the soldiers. This conviction led to the holding of special services for them in a number of centers where English churches were maintained.*

Many of the English Societies were very small, never having more than ten, twenty, or thirty members, although most congregations, made up in large part of people of Anglican antecedents, were considerably larger. A few Societies, notably the Calcutta Dharamtala Church; Bombay; Lucknow; Madras; Vepery; and Kanpur became strong and influential churches. The English work brought into the Church a number of eminently successful ministers and enlisted the cooperation of many laymen who made large contributions, by their influence and financial support, to the missionary program. It was largely instrumental in widening the geographical boundaries of Methodism to embrace the whole of India.

A great proportion of converts came from the depressed classes and aboriginal tribes.† A few Brahmins and other high-caste people were won to discipleship but these were the exceptions. Most of the high-caste converts became Christians through the influence of the schools. Upper-class people were quicker to recognize the values of education for their children than the depressed classes and in many local areas the only schools available, particularly for girls, were mission institutions. At Aligarh, Northwest India, in 1893, for example, when the W.F.M.S. missionary proposed to open a boarding school for girls of the lower castes several high-caste people asked that their daughters might be admitted. In a number of the girls' boarding schools high-caste girls mingled with depressed-class pupils.

Christianity appealed especially to the depressed classes because it opened to them doors of opportunity that for a hundred generations had been closed. It alone offered them education, a self-respecting status, and improved conditions.

* The activity of Methodist missionaries among the British troops resulted in antipathy of some Anglican chaplains who felt that their prerogatives were infringed upon, and also some hostile feeling on the part of Wesleyan missionaries.

† It is to be noted that in the early days of Islam in India most of its converts also were drawn from the same social strata.

While caste was considered intolerable by the missionaries the Church did not completely eradicate caste distinctions. In the schools and churches all were treated alike and all were given to understand that no privilege on account of caste would be allowed to anyone. In the school dining rooms the same food was served to all and plates and drinking cups were used interchangeably. In classroom, church, and public place the declaration that in the sight of God rich and poor, high caste and low caste, all were one was constantly reiterated. But no requirement of an absolute break with caste was laid upon converts. This was left to the individual conscience. Among those who became helpers, Exhorters, Local Preachers, Bible women, and members of Conference, caste was not recognized. But some who acknowledged their faith in Christ, attended Christian services, joined in the hymns and prayers, and maintained family prayer in their houses were unwilling to break their caste. They declared that in their hearts they were Christians. But they said should they break their caste they could not continue to live in their houses, their customers would leave them, the village wells would be closed to them, and they would be in constant trouble.

To Hindus baptism was a symbol of breaking caste. J. L. Humphrey wrote in his Twenty-One Years in India that baptism has a significance not attached to it anywhere else.

[People] may think as they will, and call themselves by whatever name they please: so long as they are not baptized their relation to their own people remains unchanged; but as soon as baptized, they are cut off . . . and known as Christians.³⁹¹

As the mass movement began to get under way groups of the depressed classes, scores and hundreds in number, as we have seen, came to the missionaries begging to be baptized. Some who strenuously adhered to the Methodist tradition of individual conversion resisted the demand. Others, believing that group committal was evidence of the moving of God's Spirit in the hearts of the multitude and holding that it offered the best possible opportunity of breaking the hold of caste, granted requests and on some occasions baptized as many as several hundred in a single day. Pastors were adamant against receiving baptized candidates into full church membership until they had gone through a course of instruction and had attained an understanding of the fundamentals of the Christian faith. As a result in numerous places there was wide discrepancy between statistics of baptism and reports of increase in church membership. On the Phalera Circuit, Ajmer District, for example, there were in 1893 almost 1,200 baptisms, but the increase for the year in number of probationers was only 109. The Meerut District reported 1,726 baptisms during 1893, and a probationary membership of 3,225. A year later probationers numbered 4,221, an increase of 996. The increase of members for the year in full connection was 503.

The motives which led increasingly large numbers of depressed people to seek baptism and thus identify themselves with the Christian community were varied. In famine years many outcastes undoubtedly turned to Christianity primarily as a means to save themselves from starvation. Many others in less desperate circumstances were obviously motivated chiefly by a hope to improve their economic condition. They wanted for themselves and for their children something more than the barest necessities of living. They saw others of their class after becoming Christians more nearly satisfy their hunger, acquire a little property, provide themselves with living quarters more decent and better furnished, and in other ways make themselves more comfortable and secure. But this is not the whole picture. For many, baptism meant ostracism from those nearest and dearest, in some cases even from wife and parents. While the convert stood to gain economically, at the same time he was paying a price. Again, what might be interpreted as an economic motive may have been, and often was, accompanied by a realization of the powerlessness of his former religious faith, of the helplessness of the idols to which he paid obeisance, and a disgust for practices associated with their worship. As he had listened—indifferently at first but later with increasing interest—to the Christian preachers and the Bible women who had visited his village, new conceptions had been formed of a God of power and love, of a Christ who could save from sin, and of an indwelling Spirit who was an ever-present Comforter and Friend. These conceptions, dim at first, became clearer and more definitely defined as the people, who tended always to act by groups, talked together in the evenings and at their places of labor.

A secret of Christianity's power in gaining adherents in great numbers among the Chamars, the Sweepers, and other depressed people was the simplicity of Jesus' teaching. Hinduism has a finer side, a spiritual element, which is a closed book to all except those who are sufficiently learned to comprehend its philosophy. Mohammedanism and Zoroastrianism, as also Buddhism, are in a way simple, but they lack the definite and all-pervading moral emphasis and the spiritual content which characterize the Christian religion. Christianity, too, historically viewed, has had associated with it numerous theologies and philosophies, and the Christian message as preached in India had profound theological and philosophical content. But the heart of the Gospel as presented to the illiterate masses could be readily understood by a child.

Many elements of the Christian religion dealing with human behavior and moral purpose, the poorest and most ignorant of India's masses could understand. Of the converts great numbers became stable, devoted disciples. By their prayers, their testimonies, and their daily living, they exemplified in their lives the beauty and strength of the Gospel. It could not be expected, considering the pit from which they had been dug, that all would measure up to the highest standards of Christian experience and life. Even as in New Testament days many of the early converts from heathenism failed to come up to the ideals set for them by the Apostles, so also in India in the nineteenth century there were those who were unable entirely to cast off unchristian customs, beliefs, and superstitions inherited from an agelong Hindu environment. Some of the most resistant customs were associated with birth, marriage, death, and a belief in spirits. Other converts continued to exhibit in greater or less degree mercenary and servile attitudes.*

Christianity lifted men out of a hopeless and endless round of servility to a new order of life in which freedom of the human spirit could be realized. Thoburn lived to see the second generation of Christians rise to a level of which their ancestors never dreamed.

In regions where two or three generations ago it would have been considered an outrage for a man belonging to any one of these depressed classes to presume to learn to read or to seek an education in any form whatever, I have seen the Christian convert not only acquiring knowledge, but imparting it without exciting either indignation or surprise. . . . [In] . . . a high-school in North India, my attention was called to a young man who was pronounced the most successful teacher in the institution. . . . he passed more boys at the annual examinations than any other teacher; and . . . I noticed among his pupils, not only Brahmans and other Hindus of high rank, but also Mohammedans of the better class. This successful teacher was the son of a sweeper, . . . yet I saw him in the very act of preparing Brahman boys for admission to the university. . . . We have probably now more than a hundred teachers at work in North India, all of whom belonged by birth to the depressed classes.

Before 1895 sons of Sweepers were also employed in government offices, had important positions on the railways, and were in law and engineering as well as theology and medicine.³⁹²

Along with the schools and Sunday schools the orphanages for boys and for girls were important means of benefiting the young. In times of famine hundreds of children were rescued from starvation, placed in a Christian environment, and educated. In a single year (1889) seventeen boys went from the Shahjahanpur orphanage: three to the Moradabad Central High School; one to the Lucknow High School; one to the Agra Medical College; two to positions as teachers; two to the Lucknow mission press; three to engage in farming at Panahpur; one to Lodiana as a shoemaker; two to Bareilly Theological School; and two to be orphanage employees. This record was fairly typical of the types of service rendered to orphans.

True to Methodist tradition India missionaries were active in many lines of social service. The 1887 North India Conference, aroused by a government Excise Report which indicated an alarming increase in the consumption of intoxicating liquors "among Mohammendans and Hindus," warned that the nation was in great peril because of "the measures adopted by Government for the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors and other destructive drugs." The sanction of the state authorities for the use of strong drink, the cheapness of the locally distilled liquors, the influence of social custom, and the desire for stimulants intensified by the hot climate and the undernourishment of the populace, the Conference declared, called for increased vigilance and applied effort on the part of the Church to counteract the threatening evils.³⁹³

* Strangely, William Taylor apparently did not believe that it was possible for members of the lowest castes to rise above an attitude of mercenary servility. In an article in the Christian Advocate in 1873 he argued against "the regular plan of mission appropriation and disbursement of funds" on the ground that it attracted "many of these obstructives, as certainly as that a carcass attracts the eagles," and that they would be "a great hindrance to the spread of the Gospel among the better classes."—Christian Advocate, XLVIII (1873), 20 (May 15), 153.

Persistent efforts were made to combat the opium traffic despite the attempts of government to justify it. Among other instances, A. W. Prautch of the Bombay Conference in 1894 suffered a prison sentence for exposing illegal sales of opium, and in 1895 other missionaries in India were imprisoned for informing on some opium agents.

Missionaries also contributed to reforms in sanitation and to measures for improving public health. They discouraged polygamy and by every means in their power endeavored to do away with child marriage. They strenuously opposed prostitution in its various forms, and vigorously condemned the infamy of its association with the Vishnu temple worship. Among their converts they permitted the remarriage of widows and provided homes for widows to whom Hinduism made remarriage impossible. The suffering of Indian women because of the lack of skilled medical care strongly appealed to the Christian womanhood of America, and the W.F.M.S. made a remarkable record sending to the field women doctors who were permitted free entrance to the zenanas. These and various other forms of social service were not thought of as something separate from the missionary program but rather as an integral part of it. The missionaries conceived of religion as having to do with man in his entirety and in all his relationships. There were some, it is true, who had a narrower conception, but taken as a whole this represented the viewpoint of Methodist missions.

Slow but steady progress had been made over the years in self-support. While William Taylor's plan of a self-supporting Annual Conference had not succeeded there were a number of self-supporting English language churches and some Indian Societies which—other than for the missionaries' salaries—likewise were self-supporting. In 1892 C. B. Ward summed up the goal for the future: "The end of all missions in India," he wrote, "is an indigenous self-supporting Christian Church able to propagate itself."³⁹⁴

MALAYSIA MISSION*

At the session of the South India Conference on November 25, 1884, William F. Oldham was appointed as missionary to Singapore. Several weeks were required for preliminary arrangements but late in January, the plans completed, Oldham embarked for Singapore, accompanied by Thoburn. Mrs. Oldham, for the time being, was left behind with her mother. Thoburn's account read:

* The General Missionary Committee on Nov. 15, 1888, voted to "constitute a Mission to be known as the Malaysia Mission" and made an appropriation of $6,500. for the first year's support.—"Minutes of the General Missionary Committee, M.S.," Nov. 15, 1888, Vol. C, p. 335.

It was decided . . . [to go to Singapore], begin to preach to the English-speaking people, [and] organize a self-supporting church As we expected to hold continuous services for several weeks, and needed help, especially in conducting singing, we took with us . . . [Mrs. Thoburn] and Miss [Julia] Battie, who was at that time chorister of our Calcutta congregation.³⁰⁵

The party arrived at Singapore on Saturday morning, February 7, 1885. By a happy coincidence Charles Phillips, in charge of a Seamen's Institute, who months before had sent an appeal for a missionary, was at the pier when the boat came in and invited the little group to make his house their headquarters. The next day a meeting, described by Oldham, was held in the Town Hall:

A little Estey organ—the gift to Mrs. Oldham of her fellow-students at Mt. Holyoke—was unpacked and pressed into service. Miss Battie sat at the organ; Dr. Thoburn sat on a small improvised platform at a table; Mrs. Thoburn led the singing; while I played usher, and handed round the hymn-books. After singing and prayer, the text was announced: 'Not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord'; and Dr. Thoburn proceeded to preach the first Methodist sermon ever preached in Malaysia.³⁰⁶

Thoburn related that the following day the series of meetings planned in advance was begun in the Town Hall. On the following Sunday the first Class meeting was held, and on the third Sunday a Methodist Society of twenty-six members and probationers* was organized. The organization of the Quarterly Conference followed on Monday evening, and a Sunday school planned for. The membership included three Englishmen, John Polglase, assistant municipal secretary, F. J. Benjafield, and Maurice Drummond; several "Eurasians, a few Tamils, and one Chinese." Mrs. Oldham soon arrived from Calcutta; the municipality made a grant of land for a church site and by the end of the year the first Methodist church was erected on Coleman Street. Thoburn wrote to the Missionary Society late in 1885 expressing his gratification over the cooperation Oldham had received:

He has secured a valuable site for a mission house, church, and school building, and has met with extraordinary success in collecting funds for his enterprise. The Chinese alone have given him $3,750, and will probably increase the amount to $4,500 in a short time. I have never heard of an instance of equal liberality towards missionary work on the part of non-Christian natives, either in India or China.³⁹⁷

* This was not the first Protestant mission established in Malaya. About 1815 Robert Morrison and Robert Milne under the auspices of the London Missionary Society established at Malacca an Anglo-Chinese College and from it as a center sent missionaries to Penang and Singapore. At Singapore an extensive printing plant was set up with fonts of type of Malay and several other languages. Within a few years this institution collapsed. In 1834 a Singapore Mission was founded by the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. The missionaries purchased the fonts and foundry and in 1836 had twelve printers in their employ. Two schools—one for Canton Chinese boys—a dispensary, and a seminary were established but in 1841 the Board discontinued the mission. In the meantime the London Missionary Society had resumed operations and the American Presbyterian Board had begun a mission.—C. Silvester Horne, The Story of the L.M.S., 1795-1895, pp. 132 ff., 137 ff.; Joseph Tracy, History of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, pp. 293 f., 323, 363 f., 434 f.

Oldham was quick to see that the largest educational opportunity in Singapore, as in all of the Straits Settlements, was with the Chinese. He was successful in winning the friendship of some of the most influential men, whom he persuaded to underwrite a boys' school. Within a week the school had enrolled thirty-six pupils and soon it had outgrown the rented quarters. One of the patrons suggested that a building be erected on the site already provided by the municipality. The enterprise was at once begun, the cost "paid by the Chinese, one . . . heading the subscription with five hundred dollars." Demand soon arose for a boarding school and one was opened, the Oldhams making place in their home for the young Chinese boarders.

This, too, increased so rapidly that it became necessary to buy a new property, and the proposal was made that the Chinese should contribute one-half of the amount [required] if the Missionary Society in America would contribute the other half. The . . . enterprise was intrusted to an influential Chinese banker, Mr. Tan Jiak Kim, and the missionary had simply nothing to do except state the amount necessary to be collected. . . . in the course of six weeks Mr. Jiak Kim reported that the amount of six thousand two hundred dollars—four hundred more than had been asked for—had been collected among the Chinese, Mr. Jiak Kim himself heading the subscription list with a splendid donation of fifteen hundred dollars.

Oldham wrote to Secretary McCabe of the Missionary Society, asking for the needed appropriation. McCabe replied, "I have just put through the Board a donation of $6,000 for the Singapore School, but please tell your Chinese that we cannot keep up the pace they are setting." The purchase was made and the boarding school was moved to "Bellevue," Orchard Road.³⁹⁸

There were many Tamils, immigrants from India, in Singapore and vicinity. Oldham, who had previously acquired some knowledge of the language, began work among them by holding regular Sunday services with prisoners in the jail. A catechist was sent from Rangoon who established (1885) a Tamil boys' day school. Within a year forty-five pupils were enrolled. Early in 1887 a Tamil preacher, C. W. Underwood, came to Singapore from the American Board Mission at Jaffna who soon was abundant in labors among the Tamil population. A Methodist Tamil Society was organized which after a few months gave promise of permanence.

While encouraging progress was made in the Chinese schoolwork, all was not easy-going. J. E. Robinson, Presiding Elder, in his report in January, 1886, had said that at Singapore he had found "Oldham immersed in work . . . of an amount almost sufficient to give two ordinary men as much as they could be expected to do well and survive many years." He urged that he be "reinforced without delay, so that he may not break down from overwork, as is by no means unlikely." Despite the timely warning Bishop Ninde at the February, 1887, Conference appointed Oldham to Singapore and the Burma District. George A. Bond, sent out by the Board to reinforce the lone missionary, became seriously ill within two weeks after his arrival and returned at once to America. At the close of the year Oldham wrote, almost in despair:

This left me alone with church, Chinese school, and district correspondence on my hands. I hope never to have such another year of fatigue and anxiety. Cut off from all Methodist missionaries, with much to oppose and none, or but few, to counsel with; teaching from five to eight hours a day; preaching five times a week, etc., etc., and all this in a spiritually malarious atmosphere, makes it hard work to keep enthusiastic and spiritual.³⁹⁹

A year later Oldham's double appointment was repeated. In the meantime, however, additional reinforcement had come. In January, 1888, Ralph W. Munson* was appointed to the Singapore Anglo-Chinese School.

At the 1887 South India Conference Oldham strongly advocated separation of Singapore from India and the organization of a separate, independent Malaysia Mission.† On his motion the Conference so voted.‡ The 1887 Central Conference concurred with South India. It recommended that the work in Singapore and vicinity be organized into a mission to be "administered directly by the Board of Managers of the Missionary Society, according to the rules for Missions." When the matter came before the 1888 General Conference the body took no decisive action but referred the question back to the General Missionary Committee with the recommendation that "the Peninsula of Malacca, with the adjacent territory and islands in which the Malay language is spoken, be constituted the Malays; a Mission under the administration of the Missionary Society." In November, 1888, the General Committee took this action.⁴⁰⁰

Dr. Benjamin F. and Mrs. Letty G. West of the Upper Iowa Conference arrived in 1888. Dr. West had learned to read and speak Malay and during the year preached regularly "on the streets of the . . . 'Kampongs,'" the Malay quarters. Early in 1889 the mission was further reinforced by the coming of Charles A. Gray§ of the Ohio Conference, and William N. Brewster, Cincinnati Conference.

* The transfer of Ralph W. Munson and his wife, Carrie G. Munson, from the Central Ohio Conference, was announced at the February, 1887, South India Conference.

† Oldham advanced three reasons for setting off Malaysia as a separate mission: (1) the unusual opportunities and peculiar difficulties attending missionary work at Singapore; (2) the majority of the population, made up of Malays and Chinese, have little in common with the people of India because of differences in race, language, and religion; (3) the distance between India and Singapore creates insuperable difficulties of administration.—Minutes, South India Conference, February, 1887, p. 11.

‡ The South India Conference resolution read: "that the delegates to the Central Conference be instructed to request that Conference to recommend to the General Committee that they take over the management of our Malaysian field, and that they speedily occupy the needy territory around Singapore in strong force."—Ibid.

§ Charles A. Gray suffered an attack of acute typhoidal dysentery less than two months following his arrival in Singapore and died after six weeks' illness.—Seventy-first Ann. Rep., M.S. (1889), p. 233.

On April 29, 1889, Bishop Thoburn convened the first annual meeting of the mission. In addition to the four men, three missionary wives, and one W.F.M.S. missionary,* four Local Preachers were present: John Polglase; Alexander Fox to work among the Malays; C. W. Underwood whose work was with the Tamils; and Oh Ai-toh, a Chinese preacher. Brewster was appointed to the English church; Munson to the Anglo-Chinese school; and Dr. West to medical and evangelistic ministry among the Chinese. West opened a dispensary where within a few months hundreds of cases were treated. The Anglo-Chinese School had an average enrollment of three hundred and fifty boys. By 1890 two additional recruits reached Singapore: William T. Kensett, a layman, from the United States, and Dr. H. L. Emil Leuring from Kiel, Germany. The first of December Leuring began services for the German residents of Singapore which soon were well attended.

In the fall of 1889, Oldham was obliged to leave Singapore for the United States for recuperation. Five years of overwork in a tropical climate (Singapore is only slightly above sea level, less than two degrees north of the Equator) had caused a serious breakdown in health. W. N. Brewster transferred to the Foochow Conference.† C. W. Underwood, the Tamil-speaking preacher, died of pneumonia on February 3, 1890. Despite these disconcerting losses in personnel encouraging progress was registered during the year. Three lines of work were carried on simultaneously by Dr. West. Two experienced Chinese catechists were employed and preaching services maintained in a rented house and by open-air meetings. A literary society, a Sunday school, and an evening Bible class were attended by English-speaking Chinese. In the dispensary not less than 1,500 patients were treated. By April, twelve men were waiting to be baptized.

At the second annual meeting of the mission, April 3-5, 1890, the Anglo-Chinese School reported an average attendance for the year of 285 boys. The school building was outgrown and a second large building rented for the five lower "standards" (grades). A small strip of property adjacent to the boarding school and a $3,000. building grant were given by the government to make extension of the school possible. Miss Blackmore had had the help of four assistants as teachers in the Chinese Girls' School, the Tamil Girls' School, in zenana work, and in visiting and teaching in the homes. In all, including missionaries' wives, thirteen persons were appointed to women's work. Alexander Fox continued his Malay work but was handicapped by ill health.⁴⁰¹

For two years the commanding officer of the Royal Engineers in Singapore had been attending Methodist services and assisting in the missionary work among the Malays. On July 29, 1890, Bishop Thoburn wrote to Missionary

* The W.F.M.S. missionary was Sophia Blackmore. For account of the beginning of Miss Blackmore's work in Singapore see p. 601.

† See p. 392.

Secretary J. O. Peck asking special action of the Board approving Captain William G. Shellabear* as a missionary:

He is a rare linguist, a rare Christian, and is giving up everything, in a worldly sense, to join us. He comes from the Church of England to become a Methodist He has lived in the East and is 'seasoned,' so that there is no experiment in his case. He has passed much more rigid examinations than you ever exact from your candidates. He knows the Malay language, and can begin work the day he arrives. . . . We will receive him . . . and admit him on trial in January next.⁴⁰²

In a circular, "Mission to the Millions of Malaysia," issued in England, August 28, 1890, Shellabear explained that in Singapore he had become acquainted with the Methodist missionaries and when he saw the spirit by which they were animated he felt that God would have him join them.

. . . I have already spent two years and a half among the Malays, with whom I was brought into the closest contact through being in command of a company consisting partly of European soldiers and partly of Malays. This made it necessary for me to learn the Malay language, and I worked very hard at it in the hope that I should be able to tell the people in their own tongue of the great love of God. My spare time was thus spent for fifteen months, and then the way opened for me to begin street-preaching, which I was able to continue till I returned home last summer. The desire of my heart, that I should resign my commission and become a missionary to the Malays, God has now fulfilled, and on September 20 I am going to start for Singapore with my wife, who from her childhood has longed to be a missionary.⁴⁰³

Oldham had suggested to Shellabear that he acquaint himself with the mechanics of printing, and purchase equipment in England for the publication of Christian literature in the Malay language, preparatory to establishing a mission press in Singapore. He arrived in Singapore at the end of October, 1890, and spent most of the next six months in installing the machinery and getting the press in operation. In 1891 a monthly publication in English, The Malaysia Message, was begun.

* William Girdlestone Shellabear (1862-1947) was born in Wells, Norfolk, England, Aug. 27, 1862, the son of the agent of the estates of the Earl of Leicester. He decided early on a military career, and attended Hailsbury College (1876-79) and the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich (1880-82). Commissioned a lieutenant in the Royal Engineers, he transferred to the School of Military Engineering at Chatham. In 1885 he was appointed to the 23rd Company of Royal Engineers. Here, through the influence of a group of young nonconformists, he experienced a religious awakening which gave him a "consciousness that he was a new man facing life with a new purpose." In the fall of 1886 he was transferred to Singapore, where he met the Oldhams, began to attend the Methodist church, and to cooperate in its work among the Malays. He returned to England, resigned his commission in the army, and prepared to return to Malaya as a missionary. On July 30, 1890, he married Fanny Kealey and on Sept. 20 they sailed for Singapore. For the next twelve years his chief work was the mission press, writing, translating, and publishing Malay Christian literature. From 1903 to 1909 he was in charge at Malacca, an important Malay center, and from 1909 to 1912 Superintendent of the Federated Malay States District and during 1913-14 Superintendent of the Malacca District. Returning then to Singapore he was District Superintendent, teacher in the Jean Hamilton Training School, and editor of the Malaysia Message and of Malay publications. Fanny Kealey Shellabear lived for only five years after her arrival in Singapore. In 1897 Dr. Shellabear married Elizabeth E. Ferris (1861-1923), and after her death he married E. Naomi Ruth, W.F.M.S. missionary in Java, who survived him. In 1919 a health breakdown compelled Dr. Shellabear's departure for America. In 1921 he was appointed to the chair of oriental languages in Drew Theological Seminary, and in 1925 to the Kennedy School of Missions, Hartford Theological Seminary, Hartford, Conn., where he continued to teach until his death on Jan. 16, 1947. He was a distinguished linguist and author, an authority on the Malays and the Malay language, a wise and devoted missionary, and a sincere Christian.—Raymond L. Archer, Memorial Address, ms., in the Board of Missions Library.

Bishop Thoburn presided at the third annual meeting of the Malaysia Mission, April 6-10, 1891. Strong reinforcements had arrived during the year. J. C. and Myrtle H. Floyd* had come from the Michigan Conference; D. Davies Moore and Mrs. Moore in the middle of the year from the Methodist Church of Canada, also Benjamin H. Balderston, a young layman. The teaching staff of the Anglo-Chinese School had been strengthened by the addition of A. J. Watson from India, and three teachers from the United States.† Henry L. Hoisington, a Local Preacher, had come from Ceylon and had been in charge of the Tamil boys' school and had also preached weekly to the Tamil people. An especially noteworthy addition was George F. Pykett‡ from England. Although he had been on the field only about a month Floyd, who had been sent out under appointment as Superintendent, made a comprehensive report of mission affairs. Dr. West had been in China for several months engaged in study of the language and had returned able to preach to the Chinese in their own tongue.

Singapore appointments were made to the English church, the Chinese mission—which by this year had attained the status of a Methodist Society—the Malay mission, the Tamil mission, and the Anglo-Chinese School.§ H. L. E. Leuring was appointed to open a mission in Borneo, and Malacca was listed as a mission but left to be supplied. Moore and Balderston were appointed to establish a mission at Penang, the oldest British settlement in Malaysia, founded in 1786, approximately four hundred miles north of Singapore.

The Penang mission was immediately launched. The city at this time had a population of approximately 100,000. Europeans numbered only five hundred, and Eurasians 1,500, mostly Roman Catholics. Of Malays and Tamils there were about 20,000. Some 50,000 were Straits-born (or Baba) Chinese, the elite of the Chinese community. The remainder, some 8,000, were a mixture of many races. On May 28 (1891) the Anglo-Chinese Boys' School was opened by Balderston with one boy present. Before the end of the Conference year sixty boys were enrolled, but as a missionary institution it was regarded with considerable suspicion by the Mohammedan

* J. C. Floyd's missionary tenure in Malaysia was very brief. During the Conference year 1891-92 he became ill and returned to the U.S.

† The three teachers were: C. E. Copeland, R. C. Ford (who remained but one year), and A. E. Breece.

‡ George Frederick Pykett (1864-1932) was born in Brandon, Grantham, England, on Dec. 20, 1864. After attending a local school he studied for a year in St. John's Training College, York, and then became assistant headmaster of All Saints' School, London. From here he went to Singapore (1891). After two years' teaching in the Anglo-Chinese School he was transferred to Penang. To this city and the surrounding region his entire missionary career was devoted, except for four years (1915-19) in Kuala Lumpur, always having charge of a school and of a District. He came to be regarded as a leading educational authority, not only by the Methodist Church but also by other Churches. In 1894 he married Mrs. Amelia Towers Young (1864-1932), a widow with six children, who had founded the Penang Girls' School. They retired in 1932 and died within a few weeks of each other.—Official Biographical Files, Division of World Missions.

§ The Singapore appointments were: English church, J. C. Floyd; Chinese mission, B. F. West, Lam Hoai To (Local Preacher); Malay mission, W. G. Shellabear, A. Fox (Local Preacher), H. Norris (Exhorter); Tamil mission, H. L. Hoisington (Local Preacher); Anglo-Chinese School, principal, R. W. Munson, assistants, C. E. Copeland, A. J. Watson, R. C. Ford, A. E. Breece, G. F. Pykett.

element of the population. Immediately on his arrival (in July) Moore began to visit in wealthy Chinese homes and had made the acquaintance of a prominent Chinese citizen, Mr. Cheah Teck Soon. His sister was persuaded to allow her little girls to be taught. A school was begun in the missionaries' home, No. 1 Penang Road, the beginning of the Anglo-Chinese Girls' School. English Sunday evening services had also been begun—at first held in the Town Hall and later in the Armenian church—and a Society organized with three members.⁴⁰⁴

In May, 1890, a W.F.M.S. home for the Singapore women workers had been opened, a small bungalow in Sophia Road. By 1891 this had become too small and a more commodious house was secured. At the mission meeting that year, in addition to Miss Blackmore—the one W.F.M.S. missionary—and four missionary wives, appointments were given ten teachers and zenana visitors. The women's home served not only as a hostel for the women's staff but also as a meeting place for the Epworth League, and for school pupils. The Tamil girls' school in 1891 had fifty pupils. Maintaining the Chinese Girls' School in Telok Ayer, the Chinese section of Singapore, was proving to be an uphill task but Miss Blackmore was determined to persevere. At Shellabear's suggestion an effort was made to hold a Sunday afternoon Malay service in the girls' dining room of the W.F.M.S. home. Workmen from the mission press, some of the servants in the home, and a few boarders constituted a nucleus. "Blessed services they were," Miss Blackmore recorded in her book of recollections.⁴⁰⁵

E. W. Parker of North India presided at the fourth annual meeting of the Malaysia Mission (February, 1892). Leuring had found it impracticable working as a lone missionary to establish a mission in British North Borneo. He was assigned to work with West in the Singapore Chinese mission. Copeland was appointed principal of the Anglo-Chinese School and Munson was associated with Shellabear in Malay mission work. Sixteen women—three missionary wives and twelve unmarried women—were given appointments. Later in the year the mission staff was increased by the arrival of William H. B. Urch of the Michigan Conference, who was assigned to the English church; and Elizabeth E. Ferris, Columbia River Branch, and Josephine M. Hebing, Northwestern Branch, both deaconesses—Miss Ferris to be superintendent of the W.F.M.S. home, and Miss Hebing to engage in deaconess work among the Chinese women and children in Singapore.⁴⁰⁶

The 1892 General Conference gave approval for the organization of a Mission Conference.* With this authorization Bishop Thoburn convened the mission on April 1, 1893, and organized the Malaysia Mission Conference,

* G. C. Journal, 1892: "The Malaysia Mission may, at any time during the next four years, if the Bishop presiding concurs, be organized into a Mission Conference." Boundaries were defined as including "the Malay Peninsula and all the adjacent islands inhabited by the Malay race."—Pp. 415, 417.

with five full members and five probationers.* After eight years of earnest effort as a mission the Malaysia Mission Conference at its organization was able to report at Singapore sixty-six full members and nineteen probationers in the English church and thirty-four full members and twenty-nine probationers in the Chinese church. In Singapore six Sunday schools had 181 pupils. The four day schools reported a total enrollment of 552 pupils. Penang had six full members and eight probationers; one Sunday school with twenty-seven pupils; and three day schools with 252 scholars.

The Anglo-Chinese School in Singapore had steadily advanced in enrollment, prestige, and influence. By virtue of government grants-in-aid it had become entirely independent of missionary support. The number of Christian students was increasing. On June 2, 1893, Munson opened an orphanage and training school in his home and within a short time was caring for twelve boys. The Chinese church was now increasing rapidly in membership, with a weekly addition of from one to a score of persons. The year witnessed more than a hundred accessions to the membership, "mostly from the Hok-chiang and Hinghwa community."

Because of the many different races represented by the pupils the name of the Tamil Girls' School had been changed in 1892 to Methodist Girls' School, with most of the instruction in English. The school was continuing to grow.⁴⁰⁷

The Methodist Girls' School this year enrolled ninety-five pupils. As it had outgrown its quarters the W.F.M.S. purchased a building in a central location. Eva M. Foster had opened in the Deaconess Home a school for English-speaking girls. Since enrollment had risen to thirty-three pupils within a year other facilities became necessary. A very desirable property adjoining the mission location became available and was purchased by the Society.†

The Anglo-Chinese School at Penang reported remarkable progress, with an increase in 1893 of eighty-seven pupils. How to provide sufficient buildings to accommodate the rapid rise in enrollment had become an acute problem. At the 1894 Conference George F. Pykett was appointed principal.⁴⁰⁸

In 1893 Dr. West made an exploratory trip to Sumatra. Entering at Siboga he traveled on foot sixty-seven miles to Padang Sedempuan, visiting the Rhenish missions. He found an extensive tract of country south of the missions, inhabited by Bataks, where no missionary work was being done. On the entire coast there was but one missionary. An Englishwoman of

* The members were: Ralph W. Munson, Benjamin F. West, Daniel D. Moore, Henry L. E. Luering, and William H. B. Urch; probationers, Benjamin H. Balderston, William G. Shellabear, William T. Kensett, John F. Deatker, and Charles C. Kelso. At this first session George F. Pykett and William J. Wager were received on trial. Two months later John F. Deatker, an Anglo-Indian, was transferred to the Northwest India Conference.

† This enterprise was short-lived. Miss Foster, Columbia River Branch, arrived in 1893, became ill and returned to the United States in 1895. The school failed to receive the support which had been expected and in 1897 the pupils were transferred to the Methodist Girls' School and the school closed.—Twenty-ninth Ann. Rep., W.F.M.S. (1897-98), p. 38.

means desired the establishment of a Methodist mission, but no action ensued. In 1894 Miss Blackmore and Miss Ferris entered Sumatra at Palembang and received permission from the Dutch authorities for the sale of Christian literature. They carried a stock of seven hundred books and tracts, most of which were soon sold, and a hundred and fifty Gospels, which were more difficult to dispose of. Later, evangelization of Sumatra was made a definite project.

At Penang Tamil evangelistic work was increasingly successful in 1894. A Tamil Methodist Society was organized, growing in twelve months from a membership of twenty-three to fifty-two. A chaplaincy to the British troops was maintained, of whom twenty-five were Wesleyans. There were girls' schools in both Chinese and Tamil, as well as in English, Tamil, and Baba for the boys. Four missionaries received appointments there.⁴⁰⁹

At its second session, February 2-5, 1894, the Conference personnel was reinforced by the reception on trial of William T. Stagg, Edward T. Snuggs (who in 1895 married Josephine M. Hebinger), Arthur J. Watson, and William E. Horley, all of Malaya. Miss Foster was also welcomed at this time. Stagg, Watson, and Horley were assigned to the teaching staff of the Singapore Anglo-Chinese School. The Conference had taken over the management of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Home and to it E. T. Snuggs was appointed as manager.

Shellabear reported that on January 25 the Christian members of the Malay congregation had been organized into a Methodist Society of twenty-two members and probationers. While it was a Malay-speaking church the members were almost all Chinese, with Malay as their mother tongue. The congregation, largely made up of boys from the orphanage and girls from the Deaconess Home, numbered between fifty and sixty. The mission press had this year twenty employees, and had printed Scripture portions, tracts, and other literature in English, Malay, Arabic, Javanese, Chinese, German, and Dutch. A salesroom had been opened in connection with the press.

The Woman's Malaysia Mission Conference—organized 1893—also met on February 4-5, 1894, attended by six members of Conference and six others. Nine schools were reported under women's auspices: one boarding school, two day schools, and six home schools. The establishment of Sunday schools was recommended in connection with the day schools, in the homes of Christian women, and in "the homes of Malay-speaking people in general." Reports of progress were made on numerous phases of the work of missionary wives and deaconesses.⁴¹⁰

Encouraged by the progress and growth that had taken place, the 1895 Mission Conference (February 14-20) undertook further expansion. Penang was organized as a separate District and Dr. West appointed Presiding Elder with instructions to press evangelistic work among the Chinese. Three new appointments were listed: Teluk Anson, Batu Gajoh, and Ipoh, the administrative capital of Perak in the Federated Malay States, some hundred miles southeast of Penang, but missionaries to supply them were lacking. W. T. Stagg was appointed to Ipoh but within a few months left for England.

Several personnel changes were reported at the Conference session.* Fred H. and Gusta W. Morgan of the New Hampshire Conference had arrived on the field, as also J. E. Banks, a layman. Morgan was assigned to the pastorate of the Singapore English church. Miss Blackmore reported that there had never been a time in the history of the mission when the women had been so aggressive. Nineteen Sunday schools, under Miss Ferris' general supervision, enrolled some two hundred and seventy pupils. There were eleven day schools, staffed with fourteen teachers, of which the Methodist Girls' School was one, and still another girls' school for younger pupils. The Chinese Girls' School in Telok Ayer enrolled fifty-three pupils. Thirty-three girls were in training in the Deaconess Home and all but two had been baptized. Josephine Hebinger (now Mrs. Snuggs), who was the only woman missionary in Singapore able to converse in Cantonese, was engaged in rescue work and had made some hundred and fifty visits in brothels where there were more than three thousand Chinese women and girls. She had taken six of the girls into her own house for rehabilitation. A monthly periodical for women in romanized Malay—Sahabat (Friends)—had begun publication under Miss Blackmore and five hundred copies were distributed free.

In Penang the two missionary wives were equally active. Their program had so broadened in scope that a full-time missionary, in addition to the missionary wives, was needed. At the two schools for girls marked improvement in the pupils' schoolwork was evident.⁴¹¹

In his first report as Presiding Elder, West told of developments at Ipoh. W. E. Horley† had taken Stagg's place. English services were held regularly with about twenty-five in attendance, and a Tamil congregation of fifteen to fifty met every Sunday. A Chinese church had been organized and services were attended by thirty to forty persons. Two schools were in operation, one Anglo-Tamil, the other Anglo-Chinese. Both had Sunday schools.⁴¹²

* Ill health continued to necessitate administrative adjustments. Dr. H. L. E. Leuring was obliged to request the supernumerary relation. Mrs. Shellabear had been compelled to return to England earlier and in 1894 her husband was called home by her continued serious illness. Balderston was forced to leave because of ill health and in the 1895 Minutes his name was entered as withdrawn. W. H. B. Urch returned to the United States in broken health and was transferred to the Michigan Conference.

† William Edward Horley (1870-1931) was born in Bloxham, England. He attended Hulme Cliff College and Harley College (Theology). Here he met William G. Shellabear, who interested him in Malaya. He arrived in Singapore on Jan. 12, 1895, and in June was appointed to Ipoh. To this region he gave his entire life as a missionary, except for the two last years spent in Singapore. He was instrumental in opening no less than eight Methodist schools, in addition to the one at Ipoh, in the Federated Malay States. The government conferred upon him the honorary order of M.B.E. (Member of the British Empire), the only missionary to receive this distinction in more than a century of British rule. He was said to be "the most beloved missionary in Malaya." He died suddenly of a stroke, on April 2, 1931.—Official Biographical Files, Division of World Missions.

CENTRAL CONFERENCE OF INDIA AND MALAYSIA

The second Annual Conference had no sooner been organized in India than need was realized for a coordinating body with power to deal authoritatively with common issues. It was felt that the General Conference was too far removed to deal understandingly with, and too preoccupied with domestic issues to give necessary attention to, India's local problems. Attendance for one week at the 1876 General Conference convinced Thoburn that "a legislative body, with carefully defined powers," was required in each major foreign field.

. . . it was manifest at a glance that the new and strange questions which must from time to time arise in twenty or more foreign countries, could never obtain a fair hearing, to say nothing of a proper solution, from such a body. In the next place, it was quickly evident that all questions from abroad would be pressed into American molds, and that antipodal legislation would not in every case adapt a proper means to a desired end. Lastly, it was constantly evident that every proposed measure would be, first of all, weighed in the balance with American interests, and if it were found to interfere with these it would stand a very poor chance of adoption.⁴¹³

The first approach to such an organization was made by the holding of a joint meeting of the North India and the South India Conferences at Allahabad on January 13, 1880. The assembly at its third session constituted itself "a corporate body for the management and control of our common interests in India" to be named "the Delegated Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church in India"; fixed the date for a first meeting; established a ratio of representation; and petitioned the General Conference to assign to the Delegated Conference "all those interests of our Church in India embraced in part IV of our Discipline, entitled 'Educational and Benevolent Institutions,' with the proviso that the rights and interests of the Missionary Society should in no wise be interfered with, and that the principle of self-support "wherever it obtains" also should not be interfered with. The South India Conference made the second part of this proviso a condition of its participation.⁴¹⁴

On January 20 E. W. Parker wrote to Corresponding Secretary J. M. Reid telling him of the plan for a delegated Conference, promising to send him the Minutes, and assuring him that the object was not to form a separate Indian Church but "to control and unite and steady all in connection with the Church at home." "The danger," he said, "is not in organization but in independent action while our work is so scattered."⁴¹⁵

The memorial sent to General Conference asked authorization for a central body but the petition got no further than the Standing Committee on Missions.* This failure on the part of the General Conference to act, however, did not stop the India Conferences. In accordance with the action of the joint meeting the first Delegated Conference met as planned in Allahabad, July 14-18, 1881. Six ministerial and two lay delegates were present from the North India Conference. South India Conference sent seven ministers and two laymen. The Conference approved a constitution; formulated a memorial to the viceroy on marriage and divorce, of which one of several provisions called attention to "the hardships created by treating child marriage as bona fide marriage"; established a Board of Education made up of the Boards of the two Conferences; and elected a general Board of Publication and Management, authorized to register with the government and to establish a central publishing house and branch depositories. A report on episcopal visitation asked for "more constant and direct superintendence and leadership, such as Bishop Asbury gave to our Church in America when it was new," and suggested that "the Bishops who may visit us in the future . . . remain two years, or at least through two cold seasons in India, during every four years." A detailed statement on the "Official Relation of Lady Missionaries" was adopted which later was incorporated in the by-laws of the W.F.M.S. Officers were elected for the Sunday School Union of the Methodist Episcopal Church in India. Finally, an Executive Committee, which had been elected, was instructed to fix the time for the next meeting.⁴¹⁶

* See p. 170 n.

The 1884 General Conference, prompted by the action which had been taken in India, made provision for the organization of a Central Conference in all mission fields which had two or more Annual Conferences, as has been previously noted.*

On January 13, 1885, now on firm ground by virtue of General Conference authorization, the first Central Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church in India met in Bareilly with Bishop John F. Hurst presiding. This was not a delegated Conference. Fifty-one persons were present, all ministers, of whom twenty were Indian. A constitution, drafted by the General Conference, stated the object of the Central Conference to be "the supervision of the educational, publishing, and such other connectional interests and work as may be committed to it by the several Annual Conferences and Missions in India." A Board of Publication was authorized, with Publishing Houses at Lucknow and Calcutta (already in existence) and branches and depositories "at such other places as the Central Conference may from time to time determine." A book committee was also authorized "to have general supervision of the Publishing interests of the Church in India," and two agents for the Publishing Houses in Lucknow and Calcutta. A Board of Education was established, to consist of six members—three from the Board of Education of each Conference—to approve the courses of the schools and to have general supervision of them. The report on education favored limiting boarding schools for Europeans to one for each sex in each of the leading provinces. Editors of the various publications were elected. Action was taken for the formation of an India Methodist Sunday School Union. Seven years later the Union was reported to have been "little more than a name."⁴¹⁷

* See pp. 170 f.

The Second Central Conference was convened in Bombay, February 17, 1887, by Bishop Ninde. This was a delegated Conference with eleven ministers (one of whom was Indian) and four laymen (two of whom were women missionaries) from North India, and nine ministers and six laymen (one a woman missionary) from South India. A special committee on resident Bishops presented a memorial, which the Conference approved, asking for a resident Bishop for India. It deprecated "the sending or coming from America" as missionaries any persons not sent "by the proper appointing authority of . . . [the] Church." The Boundary Commission defined the boundaries of the North and the South India Conferences, and of the new Bengal Conference. A resolution approving the separation of "the Singapore work, with the work of that entire vicinity," and its organization into a mission to be administered directly by the Missionary Society, was approved.⁴¹⁸

Between 1887 and 1895 three meetings of the Central Conference (beginning with the third meeting in 1889, the Central Conference was extended to include both India and Malaysia) were held.* Few actions of major importance were taken at these meetings. The Conferences offered opportunity for consideration of the various phases of the missionary program and were doubtless a stimulus to the work as a whole. The fourth meeting memorialized General Conference to authorize five Annual Conferences in India. At the fifth meeting a Financial Board of the Methodist Episcopal Church in India was created "to hold and control for the benefit of the . . . Church in India, all donations, bequests, funds—and properties [including churches, parsonages, schools, and other properties acquired without aid from the Missionary Society] . . . for such purpose as may be contemplated by the donors or purchasers." Reports were received from four Publishing Houses, Lucknow, Calcutta, Madras, and Singapore. Three separate courses of study were approved for missionaries, and also courses for Exhorters, deaconesses, and trained nurses. At each Conference the Publishing Agents and editors of periodicals and books were elected. At the fifth session sixteen editors and four agents were chosen.⁴¹⁹

* The third meeting was held in Kanpur, July 27-31, 1889; the fourth in Calcutta, Jan. 19-21, 1892; and the fifth in Allahabad, Feb. 22-26, 1894. Each was a delegated Conference, with both ministerial and lay delegates, and each had both men and women delegates. Bishop Thoburn presided at all three Conferences.

VII

Expanding Program of Foreign Missions— Japan and Korea

THE FIRST TREATY made by Japan with any Western nation was negotiated by Commodore Matthew C. Perry of the United States Navy on March 31, 1854. He had been sent to Japan to arrange, if possible, for "friendly commercial intercourse" but in any case for assurance of protection for American navigators in Japanese seas. The treaty permitted entrance of American ships and citizens to two ports—Hakodate on the northern island of Hokkaido, and Shimoda on the main island of Honshu, with a consul for Shimoda—but had no provision for permanent residence of American citizens.* A beginning had been made toward opening the doors of a hitherto closed nation.¹

There is no evidence that the Missionary Society recognized a great missionary opportunity opening to the Church † but there were others whose imagination and concern were kindled. A minister in Oregon wrote in 1854 to the Society's Treasurer :

I propose to be one of one hundred to raise ten thousand dollars for the purpose of establishing a mission in JAPAN. I think that one hundred persons can certainly be found who will contribute $100 each for this enterprise. We must have a mission in Japan as soon as possible. Who will come up to this work?²

We find no record of official action stimulated by this proposal.

Townsend Harris arrived at Shimoda in 1856 as the first American consul and very soon by display of a courteous, tactful, and sympathetic attitude, without threats or display of force, succeeded not only in securing extension of the Perry treaty but also, in the covenants of 1857 and 1858, the designation of six open ports,‡ the right of consuls to reside at the ports and to

* See p. 35.

† Other denominations acted much more promptly and decisively than the Methodists in establishing missions in Japan. In 1859 missionaries of the Protestant Episcopal Church, the Presbyterian, U.S.A., and the Dutch Reformed arrived in Japan. The Baptists followed in 1860. The Church Missionary Society (Anglican) sent its first missionaries in 1869.—John H. DeForest, Sunrise in the Sunrise Kingdom, p. 94.

‡ The six open ports were Shimoda (later replaced by Tokyo), Hakodate, Kanagawa (later Yokohama), Nagasaki, Niigata, and Hyogo (Kobe and Osaka).

travel freely throughout Japan, the privilege of other American citizens to reside permanently at the open ports, lease land and erect buildings (including dwellings), and to practice freely their own religion, even to the extent of building suitable places of worship for their own use. The propagation of Christianity, however, was prohibited.³

Oregon ministers continued to show special interest in Japan and in 1859 the Oregon Conference asked that a mission be established. Bishop Osmon C. Baker reported the action to the General Missionary Committee which went no further than "to say that this Committee look favorably upon a mission to Japan so soon as the condition of the treasury will permit."⁴

The sixties and early seventies constituted a momentous era in Japan's history. Crosscurrents of modern and medieval ideas were making themselves felt, and extremists of liberal and conservative views struggled for the nation's leadership. But by 1868 a clear sense of direction had been attained. The shogun, feudal de facto military ruler of the realm, had yielded in the revolution of 1867-68 his palace and his rule in Yedo to the young emperor, Meiji Tenno, who renamed the city Tokyo, and set up the framework of constitutional government. The "Charter Oath" which he took when he assumed the throne contained such revolutionary phrases as "the rights of all classes shall be assured. . . . The uncivilized customs of former times shall be broken through Intellect and learning shall be sought for throughout the world, in order to establish the foundations of the Empire." Within five years legal inequality among the classes was abolished, distinctive insignia of caste and class outlawed, laws against alienation of land abrogated, the outcastes emancipated, and Buddhism disestablished. A half eager, half reluctant people were plunged headlong into the modern world. Under the new regime Shinto, which had helped pave the way for the emperor's restoration to power, was officially revived as a means of increasing and maintaining emperor veneration.⁵

Stimulated by fear of propagation of Christianity the authorities in 1868 revived the custom of posting proscription boards outside all public offices. These usually bore the inscription: "The evil sect, called Christians, is prohibited. Suspicious persons shall be reported to the proper officers and rewards will be given." This was a much modified form of the drastic mid-seventeenth century efforts* for the extinction of the early Roman Catholic communities.⁶

Numerous deputations were sent to Western nations during these years to study their political and social institutions. Guido Verbeck, a missionary

* The long story of these efforts is recounted in detail in Otis Cary's History of Christianity in Japan: Roman Catholic and Greek Orthodox Missions, and in condensed form in I. W. Wiley, China and Japan . . . (pp. 452-62). The deep suspicion, hatred, and fear that was a permanent deposit of the Roman Catholic "Christian Century" has been a continuing hindrance to the acceptance by the Japanese of either Roman or Protestant Christianity in modern times.

of the Dutch Reformed Church of America, who had come to Japan in 1859, at an opportune moment dropped the suggestion to the young statesmen of the new Japan, "Before starting a school system, send an embassy abroad to study the systems in different lands and select the best for Japan." This was one of the influences which led to the sending to the United States and Europe in 1871 the Iwakura embassy which included, together with Prince Iwakura, a group of men whose members were to be among the most prominent statesmen of Japan during the next quarter century. Their report resulted in the passing of a law setting up a complete system of public schools from the primary grade to the university, with provision for compulsory primary attendance. Immediately foreign teachers, particularly teachers of the English language, were in strong demand.

This opened up a golden opportunity for the American missionaries. They were quick to see that daily contact in government schoolrooms with students eager not only to learn English but also to acquaint themselves with American institutions and ways of life was one of the best possible means of exerting a positive Christian influence.* Teachers soon gathered about themselves groups of eager students, holding occasional meetings for acquaintance and fellowship. It was from these "bands" that the first Christian churches grew. Except for the regard in which these American teachers were held there could not possibly have come into existence as there did in 1872 a Christian Protestant church openly organized and with public services of worship.†

In 1873 the official attitude toward religion suddenly changed in Japan. In February orders were issued for the removal of the proscription boards against Christianity. A Kobe newspaper article, after criticizing Buddhism, Shinto, and Confucianism, proceeded to advocate the general adoption of the Christian religion. Missionaries felt free to rent store fronts and engage in public preaching services in both Kobe and Osaka. Their day schools taught Christian truths without official objection. In Nagasaki the Dutch Reformed missionaries opened a private school in their house, and soon after added a school for girls. An American Board missionary doctor received permission from the central government to teach anatomy in a provincial hospital where he was also allowed to preach. The dawn of a new day had come in Japan.⁷

* M. L. Gordon: Up to this time "the missionaries could do little else than make preparations for the future, . . . They studied the language; they prepared grammars and dictionaries, and portions of the Bible were translated, though not published. . . . They ministered to the sick and unfortunate, and by kind deeds and pure and upright lives showed the Japanese that they were not such foes to mankind as they had been represented."—An American Missionary in Japan, pp. 44 f.

† This first Protestant church in Japan was organized in Yokohama by the Rev. James Ballagh of the Dutch Reformed Mission on March 10, 1872. It consisted of eleven members, nine of whom were students. On Sept. 20, 1873, seven of the members became the nucleus of a church in Tokyo under American Presbyterian auspices. In 1874 a church was formed in Kobe, consisting of seven men and four women, and another in Osaka, with seven men as members. Both of these were organized in connection with the Congregational missionaries.—Otis Cary, A History of Christianity in Japan: Protestant Missions, pp. 97 ff.; J. H. DeForest, op. cit., pp. 102 f.

JAPAN MISSION

On June 1, 1873,* Robert S. Maclay† with his wife arrived at Yokohama, commissioned by the Missionary Society to establish a Methodist mission in Japan. Before the year ended four other missionaries with their wives arrived: Julius and Mary Frances Soper of the Baltimore Conference; John C. and Mary S. Davison, Newark Conference; Merriman C. and Flora Best Harris, Pittsburgh Conference; and Irvin H. and Sara L. Correll, Philadelphia Conference.

Maclay was influential in the establishment of the mission. Before leaving China he had written the Missionary Society (December 16, 1870, as previously stated‡) urging the beginning of missionary work in Japan. On furlough in the United States he zealously advocated speedy action and in an impassioned address at the annual meeting of the Missionary Society on November 30, 1872, emphasized the opportunity and responsibility of the Church. The necessary authorization was given by the General Missionary Committee in November, 1872,§ and $25,000. appropriated. Before the committee meeting adjourned Bishop Peck placed in the hands of Maclay "his commission as Superintendent of the Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Japan." 8

The mission was organized on August 8-9, 1873, by Bishop William L. Harris, in Maclay's residence, the Mission House, No. 60 Bluff, Yokohama. Four of the missionaries (all except M. C. Harris) were present,¶ with their wives, and also a number of visitors. The Bishop presented a projected program of work, and at the close of the second session announced the following appointments: Superintendent (to reside at Yokohama), R. S. Maclay; Yokohama, I. H. Correll; Tokyo, Julius Soper; Nagasaki, J. C. Davison; Hakodate, M. C. Harris.

It is to be noted that the places to be occupied were not arbitrarily designated by the Bishop. Harris, writing later, says that the "centers chosen

* The year 1873 was noteworthy for a large increase in the Japan Protestant missionary personnel, which was more than doubled by the accession of twenty-nine new members, and by the addition of three new missions; the Methodist Episcopal; the Canadian Methodist; and the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel. The ten missionary societies, with their personnel including missionary wives, at the close of the year were: A.B.C.F.M., nine men, eleven women; Baptist Union (U.S.A.), three men, three women; Church Missionary Society (England), three men, three women; Protestant Episcopal (U.S.A.), eight men, two women; Presbyterian (U.S.A.), six men, seven women; Dutch Reformed, five men, six women; Society for the Propagation of the Gospel (England), two men; Methodist (Canada), two men, two women; Woman's Union Missionary Society (U.S.A.), five women; Methodist Episcopal (U.S.A.), five men, five women. Total, eighty-seven. These were distributed as follows: Yokohama, thirty-three; Tokyo, sixteen; Osaka, sixteen; Kobe, twelve; Nagasaki, eight; Aomori Ken, two. The Roman Catholic Church reported fifteen missionaries and the Greek Orthodox Church one at Tokyo. The Greek Church was "represented also in Hakodate."—O. Cary, op. cit., pp. 104 f.

† See p. 375.

‡ See pp. 383 f.

§ A year earlier, Nov. 16, 1871, an appropriation of $12,500. had been made "contingent on opening a mission in Japan," which was not used, presumably because the Bishop had not found a suitable man willing to undertake the commission.—"Minutes of the General Missionary Committee, M.S.," p. 292.

¶ Julius Soper: "Rev. J. C. Davison (my brother-in-law) and wife, and Mrs. Soper and I reached Yokohama on Friday, August 8, 1873 . . . Dr. R. S. Maclay . . . and wife, and Rev. I. H. Correll and wife were already on the field, having arrived . . . a few weeks in advance [June 1]. Rev. M. C. Harris and wife did not arrive until the 14th of December following."—"Personal Reminiscences of By-Gone Days in Japan," ms., pp. 1 f.

by the Mission at this first meeting were the result of much investigation and consideration." He continues:

Yokohama was the commercial city of the Empire, and here it was deemed wise that the superintendent and treasurer should reside. Tokyo, being the largest city of the Empire, as well as the capital, . . . was the second place selected. The intention was to occupy Kobe and Osaka, but our brethren of the American Board had already entered this field, and they suggested that we take instead Kiushiu [Nagasaki], agreeing to leave South and North Japan to other Missions. . . . Hakodate was the chief and only open port north of Tokyo, and, as at that time there were no Protestant Missions north of the capital, this city was chosen.⁹

Other considerations influencing the choice of mission centers were stated by Maclay in his first report to the Missionary Society, dated August 18, ten days after the organization of the mission:

Every station selected is now fully open to us, and every facility for the efficient prosecution of the work indicated is already at command. Foreign communities exist at all the points we have named; steam transit connects them with each other and with the headquarters of our mission at Yokohama; United States consuls are there to afford protection to our missionaries and extend to them all proper encouragement in their work. . . . All these cities possess a national reputation, and as centers of foreign trade they are destined to exert a powerful influence on the future of Japan.

In all the cities we have selected there is an imperative demand for missionary laborers. At Nagasaki there are only two missionaries, at Hakodati none at all, in Yedo only two, and in Yokohama, where the supply is the largest, there is ample room for additional laborers. . . . The call to each of these cities was so direct and urgent that we could not hesitate in giving to it a favorable response.

On September 6 Maclay wrote, "our Japan mission is entering promptly on its great work . . ." On October 21 the Board authorized purchase of a lot at Yokohama for $5,000.; one at Tokyo for $1,500.; and land in Nagasaki for $2,000.¹⁰

The first annual meeting* of the mission was held at the mission house, Yokohama, on June 27, 1874, attended by all of the missionaries. It was given over to reports from the members and to general discussion of the mission program. The importance of procuring translations of the Discipline, of the Methodist Catechism, and of hymns was emphasized. An interdenominational committee had already been formed for the translation of the Scriptures and authorization was given for Maclay to cooperate in the work.¹¹ The missionaries had been chiefly engaged during the first year in the study of the Japanese language. So eager had they been to begin preaching in the vernacular that they had plunged ahead and some had made first attempts.

* Mission meetings were intended to be held annually. Strangely, Maclay's reports to the Missionary Society give no account of proceedings of the annual meetings. J. M. Reid lists meetings following 1874 as follows: (1) June 30-July 5, 1875; (2) June 30-July 5, 1876; (3) July 10-16, 1877; (4) July 1-8, 1879; (5) June 29-July 6, 1880; (6) Aug. 25-30, 1881; (7) July 6-12, 1882; (8) July 20-26, 1883.—J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, Missions and Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, III, 424-59.

By July, 1874, Julius Soper* was preaching in Japanese. I knew, he wrote, that "it was pretty 'poor preach.' [But] . . . I was wise enough not to attempt too much. . . . I stuck pretty close to readings from the Gospels† . . . and making comments and explanations as I went along." The Japanese were accustomed to listening to their Shinto priests mumbling prayers in ancient Japanese and the Buddhists intoning the sutras in dog-Sanskrit, so if they failed to understand all that the missionaries were saying they no doubt attributed it to the esoteric nature of the subject matter.¹²

On October 4, 1874, Correll, in Yokohama, baptized two converts—the first fruits of the Japanese Mission. In his report for the first year Maclay cited other evidences of progress:

In Yedo [Tokyo] . . . mission property has been secured, daily instruction is given to a regular class of intelligent young men, and Sabbath services are held. As the result of this work a number . . . have already united with the Church on probation. At [Yokohama a] . . . chapel for daily preaching has been opened. . . . At Nagasaki mission premises have been secured in a very desirable station, and at all the services are seen men of high rank . . .¹³

Before the establishment of this mission the W.F.M.S. had shown interest in Japan and impatience because the Missionary Society had not opened the way. The General Executive in 1872 instructed its Committee on New Work to consult with Board authorities "upon the feasibility of sending missionaries to Japan . . . as soon as Methodist Missions are established" there. And again in the same year, "We advise the establishment of missions in . . . Japan as soon as the Parent Board approve." In the next year's Report a similar statement was recorded: "We look forward with hope to the speedy entering and occupancy of Japan." In 1874, the Japan Mission having been established, the Society felt free to proceed and the General Executive at its fifth annual meeting took action and entered in its Minutes, "Appropriation, North-western Branch, Japan, 'Missionary Teacher, outfit and salary,' $1,500." On October 28, 1874, Dora Schoonmaker,‡ the Society's first missionary to Japan, arrived on the field.¹⁴

The mission's second year showed progress, more particularly in material

* Julius Soper (1845-1937), born in Poolesville, Md., graduated from Georgetown College (A.B., 1866; A.M., 1867) and from Drew Theological Seminary (B.D., 1873). He was principal of a private academy in Georgetown for five years (1867-72). In 1873 he was admitted on trial in the Baltimore Conference and appointed missionary to Japan (Gen'l Minutes, 1873, pp. 28, 33). On May 20, 1873, he married Mary Frances Davison, and together they sailed to Japan on July 16, 1873. After ten years in Japan ill health in the family caused absence from the field for three years (August, 1883-September, 1886). He was Presiding Elder of the Tokyo District, 1886-92, and of the Hakodate District, 1892-95. From 1896 to 1907 he served as dean and professor of systematic theology in the Philander Smith Biblical Institute. He was twice elected (1892, 1900) as delegate to General Conference. In 1913 he retired. His ability, energy, and devotion enabled him to make a major contribution in laying the foundations of Methodist institutions in Japan.—Official Biographical Files, Division of World Missions; The Japan Christian Year Book, XXX (1937), 346 ff.

† When the Methodist missionaries began their work only a part of the New Testament had been translated. In 1871 Goble, a Baptist missionary, ventured to print an edition of the Gospel of Matthew, and in 1872 J. C. Hepburn and S. R. Brown published Mark and John.—O. Cary, op. cit., pp. 85 f.

‡ Dora Schoonmaker was for several years a teacher and principal in the Morris, Ill., public schools before she was sent to Japan by the Northwestern Branch. In 1879 she married Prof. H. M. Soper of Chicago.—Louise Manning Hodgkins, The Roll Call . . . , p. 11.

ways. In addition to the property purchased in Yokohama and Tokyo, lots had been donated on lease by the Japanese government in both Nagasaki and Hakodate. In each of the four stations buildings suitable for chapels had either been rented or were in process of construction. The hoped-for edicts for religious freedom had not been issued but the attitude of the government was not unfriendly and no instances of violent persecution had occurred. A few converts had been made, Maclay having baptized one person; Correll, one; Harris, two; and Soper, two; and there was a "most promising class of inquirers." All of the building projects reported in 1875 were completed or well on their way to completion in 1876, and the number of converts and inquirers was increasing.

In 1876 the government officially adopted the Christian calendar with the observance of Sunday as a day of rest and worship. Presumably a contributing motive was a desire for prestige in the West. This immensely aided missionaries as it gave tacit approval to Christian worship in chapels and homes. Before the government action it was impossible for Christians to attend church services with any regularity.¹⁵

While the missionaries had reason for encouragement the going was not easy, as they discovered in three years' time. Soper wrote:

The work of the Christian missionary in Japan is more difficult than at first we supposed, and far more difficult than dreamed of by the Church at home. The circumscribed limits for open and active work, only a small portion of the empire being yet thrown open to foreigners; the uncertain attitude of the Government toward Christianity; the lack of moral backbone in the Japanese character, [*] and their dislike of any thing that savors of foreign dictation and supremacy, whether of Church or State; all these, besides other difficulties and hindrances, rise up before the missionary almost mountain high. Already not a few of the Japanese Christians have left the Churches in which they were instructed and baptized, and have established independent Churches of their own. And not a few interested in Christianity, and convinced (mentally) of its truth, are unwilling to take a decided position until Christianity is publicly tolerated by the Government.¹⁶

The sermon at the third annual meeting (1876) was preached by Maclay in the Japanese language and the proceedings, as far as possible, were conducted in Japanese. A course of study was planned for Japanese helpers.

At the end of four years Superintendent Maclay was able to report significant achievements in the mission's work of evangelization: the beginning of a Christian community; the founding of Christian schools for both boys and girls; the introduction of Christian instruction into other private, and into some public schools; a creditable array of translations and original writings in the Japanese language, including a Japanese hymnal; and a start of itineration to outstations. His report read, in part:

* If he had been writing after long years of contact and a more intimate acquaintance with the Japanese, Soper surely would have modified his broad generalization about "lack of moral backbone," for he would have found many examples of nobility and strength of character among Japanese converts.

During the four years of our service in Japan the members of our mission have acquired the Japanese language, so as to be able to use it with a fair degree of fluency and accuracy; . . . have baptized and received into the Church over one hundred converted Japanese, while more than an equal number are under their instruction as probationers; have trained for the Christian ministry nine Japanese, who . . . having been licensed as local preachers, were duly recommended by the last annual meeting of the Japan Mission for admission on trial, in . . . Annual Conferences in the United States, preparatory to their ordination to the work of the Christian ministry . . . ; have organized . . . [Classes] in connection with all our stations, and one . . . at a place two hundred miles in the interior of Japan; . . . and, best of all, . . . have contributed something toward laying in Japan the foundations of that kingdom which shall never be destroyed.¹⁷

A notable event at the fourth annual meeting of the mission (1877) was the recommendation, after examination, of five Japanese preachers for admission on trial in Annual Conferences in the United States, and arrangements for the recommendation, after examination by the Quarterly Conferences with which they were connected, of four others.* Significant also, at this annual meeting, was the joint conference with members of the Canadian Methodist Mission for consideration of preparation jointly of a hymnbook for use by both missions, and a uniform translation of those parts of the Disciplines of the two Churches in which the English texts agreed. The joint group favored cooperative arrangements wherever possible.

In 1878 Bishop I. W. Wiley made an extended tour of Japan, visiting all of the missionary centers with the exception of Hirosaki, and counseling with the missionary of each station (February 7-March 30). He also met representatives of other missions. He was much impressed by the character of the personnel and their achievements:

The missionaries of Japan are a body of scholarly and cultured gentlemen and ladies. They have already accomplished a great work. . . . In 1870 there were not ten Protestant Christians in the empire. There are now more than a score of Churches, with a membership of more than fifteen hundred.

The Bishop felt that the Methodist plan of wide distribution of missions was "wisely determined," on the expectation of speedy increase of personnel, but he was distressed, as was Maclay, that "six years have passed and they have not come yet." This statement was not strictly accurate for two families had been added to the mission,[†] but much larger reinforcement was sorely needed.¹⁸

* The nine Japanese preachers to be admitted were: Saehachi Kurimura, Bunshichi Onuki, and Yekichi Ohara to the Baltimore Annual Conference; Kenjiro Asuka to the Newark Annual Conference; Tomonari Kudo to the Philadelphia Annual Conference; also, after examination, Takuei Kikuchi to the Newark Annual Conference; Kenro Abe to the Philadelphia Annual Conference; and Rjyohi Kosugi and Yeiken Aibara to the Baltimore Annual Conference.

† John Ing and family of the China Mission, after a furlough, had arrived in Japan in December, 1874. (See p. 398. Also, later account in this chapter.) W. C. Davidson (whose name is frequently spelled Davisson or Davison in the records) and his wife, of the Northwest Indiana Conference, Problems of finance were of major concern at the 1881 annual meeting of the mission. A finance committee was elected consisting of three missionaries, three Japanese members of Conference, and three church stewards, with the president of the annual meeting as chairman, to fix the rate of salary for the preachers, and to apportion to the charges the amount each would be expected to contribute. The annual meeting recommended that each local church meet in full its expenses other than pastor's salary; that each member of the church contribute as a minimum ten sen per month toward pastoral support, and that wherever possible each Society pay two-thirds of the cost of erection of its church when built.

The year 1883 witnessed the most widespread spiritual awakening that had occurred since the opening of Japan to Christian missionaries. It was not confined to any one denomination or locality but was experienced throughout Japan.* Fifteen conversions took place in the school of Aoyama, and many believers were quickened. Twenty students in the girls' school in Tsukiji were baptized on March 18, and twenty-seven more later. Eighteen students of the girls' school in Nagasaki were baptized on one Sunday. The religious life of many pastors was deepened and their preaching took on a new note of assurance and power.¹⁹

THE FIRST FIVE CENTERS, 1874-83

At Yokohama the foreign concession† was on a high bluff looking out to sea. It was here that Maclay and Correll found places to live. For the first few months Maclay was apparently occupied with the general work of administration and of public relations.

Correll's‡ first converts, referred to as "Kichi and wife," were apparently helpers in the missionary's house. In his report for 1874 Correll says:

Yesterday (October 4, 1874) we were permitted to administer the holy ordinance of baptism to two persons who, we have reason to believe, have not only made a profession of religion, but have a saving trust in Jesus Christ. After their baptism they were received into full membership in the Church, having served their six months of probation before their baptism.²⁰ had arrived in 1877. Miss Olive Whiting, W.F.M.S. missionary, was sent by the New York Branch in 1876 to assist Miss Schoonmaker in her schoolwork at Tokyo. In June, 1880, she married Charles Bishop.

* The report of the Evangelical Alliance for January, 1884, showed an increase of 2,745 church members in 1883.—J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., III, 459.

† The foreign concessions at the port cities in which foreigners were permitted to reside were strictly limited, rather isolated areas. The concessions at Nagasaki and Hakodate, like that at Yokohama, were on bluffs at the seaside.

‡ Irvin H. Correll (1851-1926) was born near Easton, Pa. In 1871 he graduated from the Millersville (Pa.) State Normal School. In 1872 he was pastor of the Village Green Circuit and in the following year was admitted on trial in the Philadelphia Conference (Gen'l Minutes, 1873, p. 17). His appointment was to Foochow, China, but when he and his wife arrived in Japan the severe illness of Mrs. Correll made it impracticable for them to proceed farther and the assignment was changed to Yokohama. Within a year he acquired ability to preach in Japanese, an acquisition which served him well in his twenty-five years of evangelistic and administrative work in the mission. For brief periods he was related to the Publishing House, to the Aoyama Anglo-Japanese College, and to the editing of the first Japanese Methodist periodical. He was Presiding Elder in turn of the Yokohama, North Tokyo, West Tokyo, and Nagasaki Districts. After withdrawal from the Methodist Church he returned to Japan as a missionary of the Protestant Episcopal Church in charge of their publication agency.—Official Biographical Files, Division of World Missions; Gospel in All Lands, October, 1897, pp. 465 f.

On June 20, 1875, the first regular worship services were held in the building on the bluff which had been designated by the authorities as available for a chapel. The building—the first Methodist church in Japan—accommodated three hundred people and the attendance was good. A Sunday school was also prospering, and Mrs. Correll had started a school. Correll had managed also to rent a house down in the city which, after a time, the missionaries began to use for religious services, naming it Furocho Chapel. This was taken in charge by Maclay. On October 11, 1875, he established a day school in the chapel under a Japanese Christian teacher. He reported this year: members, one; probationers, two; day school pupils, seven; weekly preaching services, five; average attendance, thirty.²¹

The next year (1876) saw expansion into outlying communities. Correll first visited Kanagawa, three miles north of Yokohama, where he preached a number of times. Then on October 17 he and his teacher went to Hachioji twenty miles to the northwest, where arrangements were made for services which were continued for several days and later a Society formed. A well-to-do gentleman living in a village five miles distant invited Correll to come to his house and preach, which he did. Meantime Maclay had enlisted four new members at Furocho, and a second chapel had been opened at Aoicho (Yokohama) where nine had been received into membership and a second day school opened. Another Society had been formed at Uruga, seventeen miles south of Yokohama, where Perry had made his landing in 1853, and a "Brother Makino"—whom Maclay called his assistant—had been placed in charge. The assistant reported six probationers.²²

The Bluff Chapel was in a very undesirable location and as the mission possessed an unoccupied lot, well located, in 1877 the chapel was moved and remodeled, and all the Methodist groups united in a single worship service on Sunday mornings. The Hachioji Society now had a chapel with a Japanese, Tomonari Kudo, in charge of the work. He reported twenty-four probationers and had begun services in Mizonokuchi, some eighteen miles from Yokohama.²³

The most remarkable and daring outreach of all was made into the Shinshu country, a hundred and sixty miles into the mountains west of Yokohama. This involved an arduous journey, presumably by jinrikisha, possible only after long negotiations with the government for a passport. Pressing invitations had come at intervals from people in the city of Matsumoto. Finally, a passport having been received, Correll visited the city in 1877 and for ten days held meetings with the people, who described themselves as without a religion of any kind. A few years before they had destroyed their idols, torn down their temples, and determined to abjure religion. But they had come to feel the necessity of a faith and, having heard of Correll's religious teaching, had decided that it would meet their need. About three hundred persons, representing all classes, gave their names to the missionary as desiring

Christian instruction. On a third visit in June, 1878, Correll baptized thirty-three adults and four children.²⁴

The Yokohama charge was now (1878) divided into two Circuits. The Tenan Circuit had four appointments: Tenan, with both the Bluff Chapel and a native chapel; Hachioji; and in the Shinshu region Matsumoto and Matsushiro. The Furocho Circuit had one appointment in the native section, Suniyoshi, and three out-appointments—Hodogaya and Kanagawa; Nishio; and Nagoya. I. H. Correll, missionary-in-charge of the Tenan Circuit, held combined Sunday services for Yokohama in the Bluff Chapel within the compound and maintained a day school of some seventy pupils. Hachioji had a Japanese pastor, S. Abe; as also did Matsumoto, K. Kurimura. Maclay was missionary-in-charge of the Furocho Circuit. The appointment in the native city, Suniyoshi Chapel, also had a Japanese pastor, Saehachi Kurimura, and here also a day school was conducted. Yekichi Ohara preached at Nishio. When he was living in Yokohama in the autumn of 1876 he was converted and immediately felt that he ought to return to Nishio, his native town, near Nagoya, about two hundred miles southwest of Yokohama, to preach the Gospel. He resigned his position as a teacher, went to Nishio, and began to preach. Maclay visited him there in June, 1877, baptized five adults, organized them into a Class, and when he returned to Yokohama arranged to have Ohara granted a license as a Local Preacher.²⁵

Hodogaya, a suburb of Yokohama, and Kanagawa, appeared in the report for 1878 with Father Suzuki, a converted Shinto priest, in charge. That year R. Kosugi joined Ohara in taking charge of Nishio and Nagoya.²⁶

The W.F.M.S. made its first appropriation for Yokohama in May, 1877, "for one day school and two Bible women," and the school was opened in September under the supervision of Mrs. Correll, with a Christian Japanese teacher and five girls as pupils. In February there were nine in attendance, and a Sunday school had been organized in connection with the day school. In 1878 the New England Branch sent out Miss Susan B. Higgins, who arrived in Yokohama on October 20. She entered the school at once as English teacher, with four children and three adults in her class. The attendance rapidly increased until on March 1 fifty-two pupils were enrolled. Miss Higgins also organized a class of women to meet once a week. Unfortunately, within a year her work was brought to an end by her death on July 3, 1879. The Society decided against a replacement until a missionary home could be provided and two women sent. Provision was made in 1882 for a home by the purchase of the house used for the theological seminary,* and Emma J. Benton of the New England Branch and Anna P. Atkinson of the New York Branch were sent out. In June of the next year Rebecca

* Minutes, B.M., May 16, 1882: "That we hereby authorize the sale of the Theological Seminary building situated on Lot No. 221 Bluff, Yokohama, together with that portion of the lot . . . on which the building stands, to the WFMS . . . for the sum of $3500. or failing in this, the selling of it to any other party on the above conditions [.]"—VIII, 371.

J. Watson of the Topeka Branch arrived and Miss Atkinson was transferred to Tokyo. In 1884 Mrs. Caroline W. Van Petten* of the Northwestern Branch, a widow, was transferred to Yokohama to establish a Bible-training school. A beginning was made the same year in operation of the missionary home.²⁷

These years were auspicious for Christian work among the women and girls of Japan. They had shared the nation's awakening and were eager to learn of the new Western ways. The feudal system had allowed them little freedom and few educational advantages. The hour for the cultural emancipation of Japanese women had now come. The government had sent several young women to the United States for study and its educational department was maturing plans for women's education. The opposition to girls' schools which the missionaries in China and India had encountered had no parallel in Japan. While more or less apathy existed among the common people and many Japanese men were skeptical of woman's capacity for learning, the government placed no obstacles in the missionaries' way. Even parents who were not prepared to enroll their girls in mission schools were influenced by their interest in Western ways to welcome instruction in cooking, knitting, and sewing. Often it was possible to introduce Bible study along with domestic arts.²⁸

In 1879 the Mission Seminary and Training School was established and a building completed at a cost of $5,000., including the land.† On September 13, Milton S. Vail‡ of the Maine Conference arrived in Yokohama and on October 1 the school was opened with twenty students. Miss Jennie S. Vail, sister of Milton S. Vail, who came to Japan in 1880, gave full time to the English department, and there were also two Japanese teachers. In March, 1880, Gideon F. and Mira H. Draper§ of the Central New York

* Mrs. Caroline W. Van Petten was a member of the first class to admit women at Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill., and later graduated from Mt. Union College in Ohio. After the death of her husband, a minister who was preparing for missionary work, she went to Japan as a result of a "direct call from the Northwestern Branch." She arrived Sept. 26, 1881, and for three years taught at the girls' school in Tsukiji. After nine years as principal of the Training School in Yokohama she was appointed superintendent of Bible women in Nagasaki.—L. M. Hodgkins, op. cit., p. 27.

† A gift of $10,000. had been received from J. F. Goucher for permanent investment "to advance some special form of mission work." The mission decided to apply one-fourth of the interest from the fund toward a seminary library and three-fourths for student scholarships.—J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., III, 452, 454.

‡ Milton Smith Vail (1853-1928) was born in Concord, N. H., of Puritan ancestry, was converted at thirteen, and studied at Pennington Seminary and in Mannheim, Germany. While in Germany he served for a time as American vice-consul. He graduated from Boston University (A.B., 1877) and in 1879 was received on trial in the Maine Conference (Gen'l Minutes, Spring, 1879, p. 83). After graduation he became principal of the preparatory department of Ohio University (Athens, Ohio) and instructor of German and Greek in the college. He sailed for Japan on Aug. 15, 1879. When in 1882 the seminary was moved to Tokyo he continued there as instructor. On Jan. 1, 1885, he married Emma C. Witbeck, principal of Ferris (Girls') Seminary. From 1895 to 1900 he was professor of theology at Cobleigh Seminary (Chinzei Gakkwan), Nagasaki. In 1900 he returned to the United States broken in health. During 1903-25 he was principal of the Anglo-Japanese School in San Francisco under the Pacific Japanese Mission. Always sympathetic, genial, thorough, deeply devoted to the Japanese people, he made a truly great contribution to the cause of Christian missions.—Official Biographical Files, Division of World Missions; anon., art., California Christian Advocate, Sept. 14, 1904, p. 24.

§ Gideon F. Draper (1858-1951) was born in Lakeville, Conn. He was admitted to the Central New York Conference in 1879 (Gen'l Minutes, Fall, 1879, p. 58). In 1880 he received the A.B. degree from Syracuse University. On March 20, 1880, with his bride (Mira E. Haven) he arrived in Japan and began teaching in the seminary. He became ill and was obliged to leave Japan in feeble health early in 1882 with little thought that he would ever be able to return. His heart, however, was in missionary work and in the spring of 1886 he again reached Japan and entered upon a long career as Presiding Elder and educator. He was recognized as one of the most able Conference landed at Yokohama. The next year the school was moved to Tokyo.²⁹

In 1879 Correll reported three Circuits in the province of Shinshu, where "the work of the Lord has surely progressed in a very remarkable degree." Progress continued the next year, a number having been added to the Church, and several important Stations opened. These Circuits and Stations were not named in either Correll's or Maclay's reports but they were in the same general region as Matsumoto and were probably begun as outstations of that center. Maclay in 1879 stated that the Society in Nishio had sixteen members and Nagoya fifteen. In 1880 a new appointment was listed at Uye-no-Hara, in the same District.*

In the spring of 1881 Maclay and Correll were ordered home on furlough by their physician. Their absence during 1881-82 made a number of administrative changes necessary. Julius Soper was transferred to the Yokohama District, where he continued as treasurer of the mission and began to teach theological classes in the mission seminary.

I have aimed to teach two hours per day Still, with the work of superintending Churches, preaching the Gospel, translating, and performing the duties of treasurer of the mission, my hands have been so full that I fear my teaching has not been what it should have been. Teaching under such circumstances is neither satisfactory to ourselves, nor advantageous to the work.

Needless to say, the lack of intensive supervision combined with shortage of Japanese pastors caused the work of the local churches to suffer. Soper managed during his two years on the District to make two visits to the interior. He found the churches for the most part to be in a prosperous condition financially, and he felt hopeful, while it would be difficult to say how rapidly the charges would develop, that in a few years several would become self-supporting. In 1883 there were eight Methodist day schools in Yokohama in successful operation (one under the Missionary Society; two maintained by the W.F.M.S.; and five operated by members of the churches). Pupils numbered about seven hundred.³⁰

While Maclay and Correll were laying foundations in Yokohama and vicinity, the Sopers were equally busy in the much larger city of Tokyo. Almost immediately after their arrival they opened their home for daily classes in English, using this as a means for getting students to come on Sunday for religious instruction. In June, 1874, a larger house was rented which had a room large enough to seat forty or fifty persons. This was fitted up for chapel and school purposes and in September Sunday services were begun, entirely in Japanese, with hymns, prayers, and Scripture reading with comments.³¹

Soon after Mrs. Soper's arrival in Tokyo, a Secretary of the Imperial and successful of Methodist missionaries in Japan.—Official Biographical Files, Division of World Missions.

* In his 1880 report to the Missionary Society Maclay said: "For the sake of clearness we now use the word 'district' to indicate our charges, instead of the word 'circuit' which has heretofore appeared in our Annual Reports."—Sixty-second Ann. Rep., M.S. (1880), p. 170.

Household called, asking if she would instruct his young wife, the Princess, in English. Arrangements were made for her to come to Soper's house two or three times a week. She was always accompanied by at least two attendants, more often by three.

While giving the Princess her lesson, I tried . . . to sow a little seed in 'Caesar's Household' by furnishing Bibles for the attendants to read, which they did diligently. Whether it . . . ever . . . [bore] any fruit or not we do not know. God knows and it is not necessary that we should.³²

In 1872 the Japanese government, as already mentioned, had sent five girls to the United States, under the care of the wife of the U.S. minister, to study. One of these girls, Miss Yoshimasu, while in Washington heard of Soper and his plan of going to Japan as a missionary. She and one other of the five returned early in the summer of 1873 and a few weeks after the Sopers' arrival Miss Yoshimasu brought her young brother and sister, and a neighbor's little girl, to the parsonage and asked to be taught the Bible. This was the beginning, in November, 1873, of the first Methodist Sunday school in Tokyo.³³

One of the three girls whom the Sopers had met in Washington at the home of the Lanman's was Ume Tsuda. After she had been in Washington for a year and a half she wrote to her parents telling them of her decision to become a Christian and to be baptized, and expressed her wish that they too would become Christians. By a strange coincidence a letter to Mrs. Tsuda arrived at almost the same time from Mr. Tsuda, who was one of the commissioners of the Japanese government to the International Exposition at Vienna, telling of his interest in a display of books:

Being interested in books I stopped and inquired what books these were. The answer quickly came: 'These books are all one Book, the Christian Bible, translated into many languages of the world, and printed by the British and Foreign Bible Society.' This deeply impressed me. While I know very little about Christianity, I feel there must be something good and real in such a religion, to induce its followers to spend so much time and money in translating their Sacred Writings into the languages of the earth and scattering them broadcast throughout the world. And now, wife, I think it would be well for us, on my return, to seek out a missionary and begin the study of such a religion.³⁴

In December, 1873, Mr. Tsuda* returned home and in January he and his wife called upon the Sopers and a plan for Bible study was immediately arranged. Every Sunday they came across the city for Bible instruction. On January 3, 1875, they were both baptized and through the years Soper baptized twelve of the thirteen Tsuda children. The Tsudas introduced a friend, Masao Furukawa, and his wife, and on January 17, 1875, Soper began to hold worship services regularly in their home in Kanda, later a great student center. On January 26, 1876, Mr. and Mrs. Furukawa and, on

* Merriman C. Harris: "Prominent among the [Japanese Christian] laymen is the Hon. Sen Tsuda. In age and membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church he ranks first. The first convert of our mission in Tokyo, . . . He is the pioneer of the new scientific agriculture of Japan, opened the first school for agriculture, and published the first Agricultural Magazine . . . He . . . represented the government in an important mission at Chicago World's Fair."—Christianity in Japan, pp. 73 f.

February 6, Shizuok Ikushima, a relative of Furukawa's, were baptized. By June, 1875, Furukawa had erected a building for a day school which he had started and in this school of thirty boys and girls Soper taught on weekdays, utilizing it on Sundays for worship services. There on September 16, 1875, the first Methodist Class in Tokyo was formed and on October 2-3, the first Quarterly Meeting and Love Feast were held. On October 12 a second Class was organized at the Tsuda home.³⁵

In the meantime important developments were under way in Azabu, the western section of the city where the Tsudas lived. On May 9, 1875, the worship services were moved from the Sopers' home in Tsukiji (the Tokyo foreign settlement) to the Tsuda residence. Since her arrival in Japan Miss Schoonmaker had made her home with the Sopers. Shortly after her arrival, with Mr. Tsuda's help, she opened a day school with eight or ten pupils.* During the first eight months she found it necessary to move the school from house to house in Azabu not less than five times. Finally, on June 17, 1875, a part of a Buddhist temple on North Temple Street was rented—an arrangement of expediency on both sides, as the priest needed additional income—and in it Miss Schoonmaker set up quarters of her own† and for the school. At first adult women were received but, beginning with November, only girls were admitted. At the same time the school was opened the Sunday afternoon services were transferred from the Tsuda home to the Buddhist temple as it offered facilities for a congregation of a hundred and fifty people.³⁶

In December, 1876, Miss Schoonmaker, who had been joined by Miss Olive Whiting, moved to a boarding school building and home which had been erected on one of the two lots in Tsukiji which Soper had purchased from the government. The building, somewhat to Miss Schoonmaker's disappointment, was located within the limits of the foreign concession. In a few months twenty-one boarders and eleven day pupils had been enrolled in the school, later named Kaigan Jo Gakko.

At first the girls received were of a class able and willing to pay their tuition, but the condition of the poor weighed so heavily upon the minds . . . [of the missionaries] that they determined to care for the girls from this class, even though the others must be dismissed. These girls are under bonds to remain in the school from four to six years, and two years thereafter as assistants, if desired. . . . The girls who pay their own tuition do not object to this new element in the school, so the two classes work harmoniously side by side.

Miss Schoonmaker had also been holding a meeting for women on alternate Fridays at a place several miles distant and one woman had handed in her

* See p. 189.

† "Seventh Ann. Rep., W.F.M.S." (1876): Miss Schoonmaker says: "My house is a part of an old temple, the other portion of it being still occupied by the priest and his hideous idol, The street is lined with temples its whole length, and I see men and women prostrating themselves before their idols every day. I have twenty-eight scholars, five of whom, after their six months probation,—now nearly out,—will be baptized. They give good evidence of saving faith in the Lord Jesus Christ."—As printed in Heathen Woman's Friend, VIII (1876), 1 (July), 21.

name as a candidate for baptism. Miss Matilda A. Spencer* and Miss Mary J. Holbrook † arrived in Japan on October 21, 1878, to reinforce the school program.³⁷

On the second of the two lots purchased by Soper a missionary residence and a chapel were erected. On January 27, 1877, the chapel—the first Methodist Episcopal church built in Tokyo—was dedicated. A Sunday school was begun, the house crowded on the first Sunday. On either side of the entrance to the chapel was a small room. In one of them lived the janitor, who was also book salesman, and in the other were all of the Christian books that had been translated into Japanese. A missionary home was also built this year in Tokyo by the W.F.M.S.

The year 1877 brought some disappointments. Several of the members became disheartened and turned back to their old paths. But Soper was not discouraged. The church, he reported, "has steadily grown, not only in numbers, but in activity and progressiveness."³⁸

By 1877 two Japanese evangelists had been raised up. One of them, Bunshichi Onuki, accompanied Soper on the missionary's first evangelistic trip outside the city in November, 1877, to Ajiki, in central Honshu, about thirty-five miles to the north. He found there a goodly company ready to receive the Gospel. On a second trip in April, 1878, he baptized on Easter Day and Monday sixteen adults and one child. These few Christians rented a neat building and at their own expense converted it into a chapel, and furnished it with a pulpit and seats.

Health conditions brought Harris and his wife from Hakodate to Tokyo in 1878 making possible the formation of two Tokyo Circuits. First Tokyo Circuit had four preaching points: Tsukiji (the foreign settlement), Fukama, Tsuchiura, and Mita, of which the last three were in large towns in the country. Tsuchiura and Mita were established in 1877 and both were put in the charge of resident Japanese evangelists. At Fukama the members of the church, some forty in number, with the help of a grant from the Missionary Society had built a chapel, the people themselves contributing one-third of the cost.

Second Tokyo Circuit, assigned to Harris, included Azabu where in February, 1878, a hired chapel had been secured, and Shiba, in another section of the city, where also a small chapel had been rented in which services were held on Friday evenings. Harris was successful in securing a preaching place in the Ginza section and services were instituted there. Correll had followed a lead some three hundred and fifty miles northeast to Yamagata, a large and prosperous city, and this distant station was also attached to Harris' Circuit. The Tokyo missionary staff was increased in 1879 by the arrival of Charles Bishop* of the North Indiana Conference.³⁹

* Matilda A. Spencer (1848-1933), of English parentage, was educated in Germantown, Pa., private schools. Through the Philadelphia Branch there came to her "a clear and direct call" to mission work in foreign fields. She had a long and fruitful career in W.F.M.S. work in Japan.—L. M. Hodgkins, op. cit., p. 17.

† Mary J. Holbrook (1852-1912) was born in Somersetshire, England. She graduated from Wyoming Seminary and taught for several years before going to Japan under the auspices of the Cincinnati Branch. In January, 1890, she married Benjamin Chappell of the Aoyama Anglo-Japanese College.—Ibid., pp. 17 f.

On December 26, 1879, a disastrous fire swept downtown Tokyo and destroyed all Methodist buildings in Tsukiji—the chapel, the missionary residence, and the girls' school so recently built with such high hopes. Within nine months a new church was dedicated (September 11, 1880) on the former site, and comfortable parsonages built for Harris and Bishop, while the W.F.M.S. had in process of erection "a spacious and substantial building" for a missionary home and school.⁴⁰

Soper's transfer to Yokohama left the Tokyo District in 1881 in the hands of Harris and Charles Bishop. Harris was appointed Presiding Elder. Previously, in 1878, Soper, Aibara, and Yoshimatsu had established a boys' and youths' school in Tsukiji in which they composed the teaching staff. The next year Bishop was made the teacher in charge. By 1881 the school enrolled "sixty-five young men, all self-supporting." In the fall, with an additional house rented for a dormitory, the enrollment increased to fifty boarders and twenty-seven day pupils. Among them there was one Christian but Bishop reported "great discussion among the boys" concerning Christianity.

In January, 1882, John F. Goucher proposed to the Missionary Society the organization of an "Anglo-Japanese University" at Tokyo, and, conditional on the transfer of the seminary and training school from Yokohama, offered to contribute $5,000. for the purchase of a site for a building, and an additional sum for professors' salaries. Later in the year the transfer was made and in 1883 twenty-five acres of land in Aoyama, Tokyo, were purchased and the schools united. The "Anglo-Japanese College" was listed in the Missionary Society Report with three instructors, M. S. Vail, James Blackledge, and John O. Spencer.†

At the annual mission meeting of 1882 Correll was appointed Presiding Elder of the East Tokyo District which included this year two appointments in the city (Tsukiji and Kanda); one thirty-five miles out, the Kazusa Circuit; Morioka, four hundred miles to the north; and Tendo and Yamagata, also north 250 miles. Since after his return from furlough he was unable to visit

* Charles Bishop (1850-1941) was born in Troupsburg, N.Y., attended Northwestern University, and graduated (1879) from Garrett Biblical Institute. In the same year he went to Japan, beginning his missionary service in Tokyo. Later he was at Nagasaki, Sapporo, and Hirosaki, and served as Presiding Elder of the North Tokyo District for one year. (1884-85). For years he was a member of the faculty of Aoyama Gakuin, and at various periods, besides his professorship, he was mission treasurer, Publishing Agent, treasurer of the Methodist Publishing House, and editor of Tidings from Japan. He was finally retired in March, 1926 ("Minutes of the Executive Committee, Board of Missions," March 18, 1926, Item 4007). In appreciation of his many useful years, Ambassador Joseph C. Grew wrote to him: "Your constructive work through the years, especially your work at Aoyama Gakuin, will not be forgotten, for our Japanese friends do not readily forget such selfless service as you have rendered."—Official Biographical Files, Division of World Missions.

† James Blackledge, Philadelphia Conference, an Englishman, arrived in Japan in 1882. He left on furlough in 1886 and in 1887 transferred to the Southern California Conference. (Gen'l Minutes, Spring, 1882, p. 27; ibid., Fall, 1887, p. 286.) John O. Spencer was received by transfer from the Wyoming Conference in 1883 (Minutes, Japan Conference, 1884, p. 5), and remained in Japan until 1899. Later he was president of Morgan College, Baltimore, Md.

the points farthest out Soper made the journey in his stead and "baptized and received into the Church quite a number of persons." The West Tokyo District this year was in the charge of Soper.

At the annual meeting in July, 1883, Correll was transferred to the West Toyko District, which included the three large Circuits in the province of Shinshu; Hachioji, which for several years had not had a pastor; and Azabu and Aoyama in the city. The next year Azabu was transferred to the Canadian Methodist Mission which had established their educational center nearby. Correll then opened work at Yotsuya, a part of the city where no missionary activity was under way, and placed Tenju Kanamura in charge. In November, 1883, a Society was organized at Aoyama and in December a dwelling house was rented for a chapel.

A pastor was appointed (1884) to Iida but about the middle of the year charges were preferred against him and he was discontinued. Two new Societies were organized in Shinshu Province, at Sakashita and at Takato—about six miles apart. Both proposed to pay their chapel rent, all incidental expenses, and some part of the pastoral support.⁴¹

At the Tsukiji church, where Bishop lent assistance in 1883, the members had a meeting on the morning before the first Quarterly Conference was held and on their own part agreed to double the amount paid toward church support during the preceding year. This was done despite the fact that several who had previously borne a part of the church expenses had removed to another part of the city, and also that the women of the church—many of them servant women—were themselves supporting a new project. The average attendance at Tsukiji was about eighty and during the year forty-seven were baptized. On September 23, 1883, David S. and Mary Ann Spencer of the Wyoming Conference landed in Yokohama. Soon after their arrival Spencer began teaching a class of young men at the Tokyo Kanda church. Apparently their only object was to learn English, but their teacher "determined to make their thirst for English the means of bringing the Gospel to bear upon their hearts" and soon a number of them were converted and united with the Church. Beginning on April 1, 1884, he began to teach in the theological department of Aoyama.⁴²

At Hakodate* M. C. Harris† and wife arrived on January 26, 1874, a

* When Harris arrived in Hakodate the only other Protestant missionary was a Church of England clergyman. Two French priests ministered to about a score of Roman Catholic Church members. A Russian chaplain of the Orthodox Church, Father Nicolai, was also located there. Later he went to Tokyo and almost single-handed founded a Japanese national branch of that Church with some 30,000 members.—O. Cary, op. cit., pp. 78 f.; idem, A History of Christianity in Japan: Roman Catholic and Greek Orthodox Missions, pp. 376 ff., 392 ff.

† Merriman Colbert Harris (1846-1921) was born in Beallsville, Ohio, and at seventeen joined the 12th Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, in which he served for two years. He was admitted on trial in the Pittsburgh Conference in 1869 and appointed to Urichsville (Gen'l Minutes, 1869, pp. 45, 50). While engaged in preaching he entered Allegheny College, graduating in 1873. On Oct. 23 he married Flora L. Best of Meadville and on the same day he and his bride started for Japan, arriving on Dec. 14, 1873. He was the first Protestant missionary in Hakodate. His work in Japan was chiefly evangelistic. In 1886 he was appointed Superintendent of the Japanese mission on the Pacific coast where he continued until elected in 1904 Missionary Bishop of Japan and Korea. In 1916 he asked to be retired. He was three times decorated by the emperor, on the third occasion with the Second Order of the Sacred Treasure. No higher decoration had ever been given to a foreigner. His greatest most inhospitable time on the cold, windy, snow-blanketed island of Hokkaido (Yezo, Yoso, Yeso). Not until April were they able to find a house for rent in the foreign concession. On August 1 they located an available site and contracted for the building of a residence. Very soon after their arrival they accepted several pupils for the study of English and within a few months several young men became deeply interested in study of the Bible. The feeling against "foreign barbarians" was strong in Hakodate, and frequently broke out in violence. After a particularly vicious outbreak the American consul called Harris and his wife to his office and after warning them handed them a pistol and cautioned them never to be without it. They thanked him and left, walked together to the seashore and threw the gun into the sea. In October, 1875, Harris succeeded in renting a preaching place in a good location by a down payment of one hundred dollars and a promise to pay one dollar a month thereafter. He employed as an assistant a Christian young man,* formerly connected with the government schools, with the idea of training him for the ministry.⁴³

In 1877 Harris had organized a small but vigorous church in Hakodate and a building was in process of erection, toward the cost of which the Board had made a grant of $1,200. Harris already had in hand from local receipts an amount sufficient to cover the balance. On February 17, 1878, the chapel—"excellently located on one of the more quiet and retired streets"—was dedicated by Bishop Wiley.† This year, as previously reported, it became necessary for Harris and his wife to move to the milder clime of Tokyo. He had labored, Maclay reported, "faithfully and successfully," and had won "in a high degree the respect and confidence of the Japanese and the members of the foreign community." The vacancy caused by his removal was filled by the transfer of W. C. Davidson from Hirosaki. Within a year, on December 7, 1879, a terrible conflagration, which reduced almost the entire city to ashes, destroyed the newly completed church and school. From the ashes a new building quickly arose. Maclay wrote in his 1880 report to the Board that Davidson had already rebuilt the church and school building, had begun public religious services in the auditorium, and had reopened his school with an attendance of twenty-six pupils.⁴⁴

Miss Mary A. Priest, sent by the New York Branch, arrived in Hakodate in 1878, the only Protestant woman missionary in all of north Japan. She studied the Japanese language diligently and soon opened a girls' school.

strength as a missionary was in his understanding and sympathetic disposition and his deep interest in the moral, social, and religious welfare of the Japanese.—Official Biographical Files, Division of World Missions.

* Harris does not name his assistant. Presumably he was Takuhei Kikuchi, who in 1877 was licensed as a Local Preacher and recommended for admission on trial.—R. S. Maclay, in Fifty-ninth Ann. Rep., M.S. (1877), pp. 156 f.

† I. W. Wiley: "The exercises consisted first of a baptismal service at half-past nine A.M. I addressed the candidates in English, and Mr. Harris translated into Japanese. Then he read the baptismal service in Japanese, and I performed the baptism of four adult males. After this, at eleven, I preached in English At three P.M. Dr. Maclay preached and the new chapel was dedicated, all the services being in Japanese except the dedicatory prayer."—China and Japan . . . , p. 340.

When the big fire burned the house occupied by the school of eleven girls she taught them in her bedroom. Miss Kate Woodworth, sent out by the Philadelphia Branch to assist her, arrived in December, 1880, but before she reached Japan, Miss Priest's health had failed and she had left for home.

In the spring of 1881 the New York Branch sent Miss Mary S. Hampton, who took over the school, named the "Caroline Wright Memorial." In her first report she stated that the buildings were completed and that the school had sixteen boarders and a few day pupils. "The fact that it is a Christian school," she said, "is an attraction to very few." Pupils were drawn to the school because it taught English and because the charge for board was very low.⁴⁵

On October 6, 1881, Lee W. Squier from the North Ohio Conference arrived in Hakodate and was appointed to the Hakodate Station, with Itsuki Honda as his associate. The next year Squier succeeded Davidson as Presiding Elder, Davidson having removed to Yokohama because of his wife's ill health. Charles W. Green of the Philadelphia Conference arrived in August, 1882, and was appointed to Hakodate. In his first report (1883) Squier pictured a District growing in membership, in spiritual strength, in new Circuits, and in promise for the future. Two new towns had been entered—Esashi on the west coast of Hokkaido, and Aomori on the tip of Honshu, Japan's main island, across the strait from Hakodate and capital of the Aomori Prefecture in which Hirosaki is located. Financial stringency, brought about by unfavorable currency exchange, necessitated closing the day school in Hakodate, an action which Squier was confident would be only temporary. It reflected, however, a situation which was not to continue long. A few years later it would have been almost impossible for any private individual or group to obtain the privilege of opening a primary day school for general education or, having once started a school, to discontinue it.⁴⁶

In 1883 the W.F.M.S. established a medical mission, and a suite of rooms had been made available for a dispensary. At Christmas, 1883, Florence N. Hamisfar, M.D., arrived and took over the medical work. Her day's schedule very soon became crowded.

Day begins here at three in the morning. . . . At four o'clock people are astir, and at five o'clock the work of the day has commenced in earnest. Often as early as six my door bell sounds, and patients begin to come. I have hardly time for breakfast, I am usually very busy all the forenoon in my dispensary, occasionally slipping away to visit a very sick person about whom I am anxious. I return to find the waiting room well filled. At 12 o'clock each day we have a prayer meeting in my study for the Missionaries. . . . I am falling more and more in love with the Japanese. The Governor of Hakodati is my friend, and has appointed me teacher of English in the Imperial Normal School of Hakodati⁴⁷

Sapporo, the capital of Hokkaido, the northernmost of the four main islands of Japan, is first mentioned in the records in Maclay's 1877 report:

Brother Harris . . . , at the cordial invitation of all the parties concerned, has recently administered baptism to fifteen of the students in the Agricultural College at Sapporo.

Back of this casual mention lies a story of the remarkable results of a Christian layman's influence. The governmental "Colonization Department for Yezo" proposed to establish as one of the imperial universities of Japan a college of agriculture in Sapporo. William S. Clark, president of the Massachusetts Agricultural College, was appointed as president and director pro tem. On weekdays he was busily engaged in the work of teaching and administration and on Sundays he preached to the students. By his magnetic personality and his Christian witness in the classroom* and by his preaching, in the one year he remained in Sapporo he led a goodly proportion of his students to become Christians.† In 1879 Sapporo was listed as an appointment on the Hakodate Circuit, "to be supplied." Again, in 1880, the situation was the same, Maclay reporting that the "great needs . . . [were] a resident helper and a church building." The student converts had been organized as a Methodist Society and funds had been provided for the erection of a church building. Some of the students had graduated but "eight members and one probationer" remained. In 1881 "gratifying development" of the Society was reported. The next year, still without a pastor, the little church was self-supporting, as it had been from the beginning. On January 1, 1883, the Society was dissolved. A basis of union had been previously drawn up by some forty Christians, representing four denominations, in the belief that as a united group they could exert more influence for Christianity. In the meantime a Methodist chapel had been built and the new organization, the Sapporo Union Church, paid to the mission treasury nearly $500., the cost of the chapel.⁴⁸

Hirosaki, at the northern end of Honshu, was some sixty miles south of Hakodate across the Tsugaru Strait. It was a city of about 38,000 inhabitants, formerly the Daimio Tsugaru's capital. Methodist missionary work in the city was unofficially begun by John Ing‡ in 1874. His account of the mission and his connection with it, written in 1877, is as follows:

* When Japanese officials on one occasion reminded President Clark that he had been brought to Japan to teach agriculture and morality, not Christianity, he is said to have replied, holding up a Bible, "If I am to teach morality here is my textbook."—H. Ritter, A History of Protestant Missions in Japan, p. 97.

† Among Clark's converts were several who became influential in national and international affairs. One was Inazo Nitobe, the Quaker essayist and Japanese representative in the League of Nations. Another was Kanzo Uchimura, founder of the movement called "Churchless Christianity" which through the years has had a considerable following among university professors and other Japanese of culture. A third was Shosuke Sato, later president of the university, regarded as Hokkaido's first citizen—a dedicated Methodist layman till his death.

‡ John Ing, the son of a Methodist minister, was received on trial in the St. Louis Conference in 1870 and in the same year went to China as a missionary (Gen'l Minutes, 1870, p. 29; ibid., 1871, p. 35). He graduated from Indiana Asbury (later De Pauw) University in 1868 and later received the A.M. degree. He left China in 1874 (see p. 396). That same year he responded to a call to go to Hirosaki as a teacher of English in the school of the daimio, the Tsugaru clan school, To-O-Gijuku. In 1876 the Missionary Society again placed him on the missionary list. Because of Mrs. Ing's ill health the family left Japan in 1878. In 1880 Ing was made supernumerary by the St. Louis Conference and in 1882 he was located.—Ibid., 1880, p. 61; ibid., 1882, p. 33; Official Biographical Files, Division of World Missions.

the Daimio still maintains a school here (the 'Ancient School') for his old knights, with which institution we have been connected since December, 1874, the time of our first arrival in this city. This school is now in a very flourishing condition, having in all, between three and four hundred pupils, both sexes being represented. . . . Foreign text-books on the sciences, history, etc. have been introduced into the Japanese department, while in the English, over which we have had the honor of presiding for almost three years, we use the same text-books as used in our academies and colleges at home.

The Rev. Y[oitsu] Honda, our native preacher, is the president of the institution . . . [He] came with us from Yokohama in December, 1874, at which time the first regular missionary work was commenced in this place, and as a result of this, fourteen young men, all students, save one, were baptized at the Sabbath service here in our dwelling on June 6, 1875. For several months Brother Honda preached in the school buildings every Sabbath afternoon Mr. K. Kikuchi, a member of our Church, and late president of the school, purchased houses and grounds in another part of the city, into which he and Brother Honda moved their families. A portion of these buildings was set apart for a chapel, and the Gospel has there been faithfully preached to the present.

The Society here was first organized as a 'Union Church.' On December 26, 1876, the writer received a neatly written paper in English, informing him that the Society had, for reasons set forth in the documents, . . . determined to identify themselves with the Methodist Episcopal Church, and requesting him to communicate the same to the proper authorities. The document was signed by nineteen persons

. . . During all this time Brother Honda has labored gratuitously, and no member of the Church has received any financial assistance from the Missionary Society.⁴⁹

Ing and his wife were devoted, resourceful, and wise in counsel. Their home and their lives were focal points of the Hirosaki movement. Yoitsu Honda, also, sturdy, responsible, independent, and a born leader, was possibly even more influential in the development of the movement. As a youth he had already won his spurs in the clan struggles of the Restoration period. Later he was sent by the daimio to Yokohama to discover the vital center of Western culture and to master the English language. There under S. R. Brown, J. C. Hepburn, and James Ballagh he came into a satisfying Christian experience and in the summer of 1874 began to preach in villages near Yokohama. In October he was elected an elder of the Kaigan Church of Christ in Yokohama, the first Protestant church in Japan. When he and Ing met in Yokohama they became comrades at once. Late in 1874, accompanied by Ing, Honda returned to Hirosaki. By this time their friendship had been sealed. Honda* became the interpreter and the sponsor of the

* Yoitsu Honda (1848-1912), a samurai, was regarded from childhood as a genius. After graduating from the school of the Tsugaru clan at Hirosaki he was sent in 1869 to Yokohama to study English and Western learning. There under the influence of missionary tutors he became a Christian and in May, 1872, he was baptized by James Ballagh. When he returned with John Ing to Hirosaki he became a teacher in the Tsugaru clan school, To-O-Gijuku, and later on its president. He became interested in politics and in 1881 was elected a member of the Aomori Prefectural Assembly and from 1882 for four years was its speaker. When the Hirosaki Methodist Church was organized he was made a Local Preacher. On Feb. 17, 1878, he was ordained a Local Deacon, and on Sept. 3, 1884, a Local Elder. For one year he served as pastor at Sendai (1885-86). At the 1890 session of the Japan Annual Conference, his credentials were recognized and he was received into full member-

American missionary-teacher who soon, however, was on his own. Seventy years later the elder statesmen of the Hirosaki church would recall the thrill of their first experiences of prayer in the Ing household, as well as the strange fascination of the Western world with which Ing was surrounded.

After Honda went back to Hirosaki he organized a branch of the Union Church of Tokyo and Yokohama. The dozen whom he and Ing led into the Christian life were truly a tiny Pentecostal community, as later recalled by some of them. When the Ings knew that they were soon to return they asked the little group whether they wanted to continue as a local autonomous church or desired to associate themselves with the worldwide Methodist Church of which Ing was a representative. It was Honda's wisdom and self-effacement, we are told, that led the Hirosaki church—now with nineteen members—in December, 1876, to change its relation and become a Methodist church. Meanwhile the property, chapel and ground, was purchased by the mission. Honda was Methodism's ablest son in Japan. No one person could claim him as his trophy, but in God's leading of him John Ing played a noble part.⁵⁰

Bishop Wiley was greatly impressed by developments at Hirosaki:

I scarcely know how to write about this remarkable work There is a large school, venerable in its history . . . ; entirely free from government competition; with nearly four hundred pupils, . . . ; Christianity thoroughly tolerated . . . ; its officers thorough Christians and most of the teachers; . . . its course of study equaling that of our highest conference seminaries; its prepared students going to our colleges in America to complete their education; its whole tone and tendency as thoroughly permeated with Christian influence as any school in America, and fifty of its students, young men and young women, members of our Church.⁵¹

Fortunately, when it became necessary for Ing to leave Hirosaki W. C. Davidson had arrived in Japan ready to take his place.* In his first report (1878) the Hirosaki Circuit was said to have three preaching places in the city of Hirosaki; one in Kuroishi, a town of 6,500 people, eight miles distant; and three in Aomori, with 10,000 inhabitants, twenty-seven miles from Hirosaki. The Hirosaki services were attended by about five hundred people; those at Kuroishi, where T. Wakayama preached, by about two hundred.

ship in the Conference. (Minutes, Japan Conference, 1884, p. 12; ibid., 1890, p. 13.) He was next elected principal of Tokyo Ei-wa Gakko, Aoyama. He then went to America and studied at Drew Theological Seminary. Returning to Japan he resumed the presidency of Tokyo Ei-wa Gakko and continued as president and professor until 1907. Largely through his influence the three Methodist bodies united to form the Japan Methodist Church and in 1907 its General Conference elected him as its first Bishop. He was also the first president of the Gospel League of the Christian Church Federation, and likewise the first chairman of the Japan Y.M.C.A. He held various important governmental posts, and was frequently chosen as president or chairman of interdenominational committees and associations. When offered degrees by two American universities he declined them, declaring that he was unworthy of the honor. At sixty-five he was fatally stricken with typhoid fever. His monument on the main street of Hirosaki bears the inscription, "A man of great statesmanship . . . a spiritual leader of Japan."—Yoshimune Abe, "Yoitsu Honda," ms. in Board of Missions Library; Benjamin Chappell, obituary in The Christian Movement in Japan, Tenth Annual Issue (1912), John Lincoln Dearing, Ed., pp. 395 ff.; I. W. Wiley, China and Japan . . ., account of Honda's conversion and early Christian life, written by himself, pp. 355 ff.

*The precise date of Ing's leaving Hirosaki is not given in any available source. Davidson arrived on Nov. 8, 1877.

Work had just recently been begun at Aomori. Most of Davidson's time was devoted to teaching in the college.⁵²

Davidson's transfer in 1879 to Hakodate necessitated considerable readjustment. Hirosaki, with Honda assigned as pastor, was made an outstation on the Hakodate Circuit of five appointments.* Robert F. Kerr, a layman and a graduate of Indiana Asbury University, who had come from the United States to teach in the school, was a real help both by precept and example to the young preachers. During the year sixteen persons were baptized at Hirosaki. In 1880 Hirosaki was reported to have had "fair success during the year" under Honda's leadership as pastor, who was "proving himself to be a true man of God, 'rightly dividing the word of truth.'" ⁵³

During the years 1881-83 the Hirosaki church failed to advance. Honda became absorbed in political activities as a member—later as speaker—of the Prefectural Assembly; Davidson was transferred to Yokohama and his place was taken by C. W. Green, a new, inexperienced missionary. As a result, for lack of aggressive leadership, a kind of apathy, deadly in its spiritual effect, developed among the members of the church.⁵⁴

Nagasaki was in the southwest part of the island of Kyushu, in the oldest part of Japan. The people of Kyushu had a long history of intractability to central government and of stubborn pride and independence.† John C. and Mrs. Davison‡ were assigned to this unwelcoming field in 1873. After twelve months he wrote to the Missionary Society:

Our labor during the year has been mostly devoted to preparation for pulpit work, although regular classes have been maintained in Scripture reading and in the study of English. Since the annual meeting regular preaching exercises have been sustained with interest at two P.M. on Sundays in the chapel-room fitted up in our house. The average attendance so far has been eleven natives. Two persons have applied for baptism, both young boys.

Within his second year Davison had a church building under way, and on June 30, 1876, a "fine chapel, capable of seating over three hundred persons," was dedicated. Five persons had been baptized during the year.

* The five Hakodate Circuits were: Hakodate; Hirosaki; Matsumaye; Aomori; and Sapporo.—Sixty-first Ann. Rep., M.S. (1879), p. 153.

† The espousal of Roman Catholicism three hundred years earlier by several of the feudal chieftains was viewed as virtually an alliance with Portugal and Spain and resulted in decades of bloody civil war as well as in the savage extermination of Christians. When the restoration of 1868 took place two of the strongest clans, Satsuma and Choshu, headed it but not in the name of internationalism. They were among the most fervidly nationalistic of all the clans. The open port of Nagasaki was forced on them and the arrival of Westerners was opposed. When thousands of Japanese Catholic Christians, thinking it safe to come out of hiding, revealed their faith, they were snatched up by government authority and deported to a barren island to the south of Kyushu.—O. Cary, A History of Christianity in Japan: Roman Catholic and Greek Orthodox Missions, p. 82 et passim; idem, History of Christianity in Japan: Protestant Missions, pp. 71 ff.

‡ John Carroll Davison (1843-1928), born in Harmony, N. J., graduated from the Harmony Academy and Drew Theological Seminary (B.D., 1875). He was admitted on trial in the Newark Conference in 1873 (Gen'l Minutes, 1873, p. 36). On May 20 he married Mary E. Stout and together they sailed for Japan, where they arrived on Aug. 8. Nine years (1873-82) were spent in pioneer work in Nagasaki and in the province (Kyushu). Following a brief furlough they were assigned (1883) to Yokohama. For thirty-seven years, following the organization of the Japan Conference, Davison served as Presiding Elder (1884-1921). Hymnody was one of his major interests and he prepared the first Methodist Japanese Hymnal.—Official Biographical Files, Division of World Missions.

The Satsuma rebellion against the new government in Tokyo during the latter part of 1876 and the first six months of 1877, "in which the resources of the country to the extent of fifty millions of dollars and the lives of probably fifty thousand Japanese were sacrificed," seriously interfered with all missionary activities in Kyushu. Davison, in his annual report, tells how the civil war affected his program :

In consequence of this disturbance we have not been able to visit any part of the surrounding country, and have also experienced a great falling off in attendance upon our weekly congregations; more especially has this been the case during the last two months, in which time quite a large number of the people, including the Governor of the Ken [prefecture], have fallen victims to the cholera. At the beginning of the war the Government school was closed, and the foreign teachers dismissed; since which time the opening of a school for young men and boys in connection with our work would doubtless have been attended with good, but for want of necessary force to carry it on it could not be undertaken. Though regular preaching services have been sustained throughout the year, and a few have been baptized and received into the Church, yet the tangible results of our labor have been far short of what we had hoped to see.

During these months Davison gave much of his time to the writing and translation of hymns, and some time also to teaching private classes.⁵⁵

On Tuesday, March 9, 1878, Bishop Wiley presided at the Nagasaki Quarterly Conference and on the following Sunday morning he preached in the chapel to a congregation of thirty-four persons, and conducted a baptismal and sacramental service. Two persons were baptized and four Japanese partook of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. At all services a Local Preacher, Kenjiro Asuka, who had been recommended to the Newark Annual Conference for admission on trial, was present.

Two W.F.M.S. missionaries, Miss Elizabeth Russell from the Cincinnati Branch and Miss Jennie Gheer from the New York Branch, arrived in Nagasaki on November 23, 1879. They rented a house and on December 2 opened a girls' boarding school with one pupil and soon had enrolled thirteen—all that the house could accommodate. The Society was confident that schools could be opened throughout the province if teachers could be found, and Nagasaki was believed to be a suitable location for a teachers' training school.⁵⁶

On April 4, 1880, Carroll S. Long arrived in Nagasaki and at once became active in schoolwork. He was convinced that the greatest need was "a school in which to train helpers and young men desirous of a Christian education." He had in hand, "gathered from various sources," about $500. He and Mrs. Long began three English language classes—one of Chinese pupils, one of Japanese, and one of "foreign children"—and contributed the proceeds, about $25. per month, to the building fund. These classes were the nucleus of Cobleigh Seminary (later Chinzei Gakkwan; still later, Chinzei Gakuin) which in time became one of the most widely and favorably known Methodist schools in Japan. For the first year Long* was principal. In 1882 W. C. Kitchin of the Detroit Conference arrived and was appointed head of the school.

By 1881 the W.F.M.S. missionaries, Miss Russell and Miss Gheer, agreed that their greatest contribution could be made by a normal school. It was organized in 1881 with two departments—preparatory and normal—and eighteen pupils. Miss Russell wrote to the Society:

We have an enthusiastic school and have been very fortunate in securing a Japanese teacher, a graduate of one of the government normal schools, who is devoted to his work; best of all he has become a Christian and will be baptized at our approaching Quarterly meeting. Two of our girls have been baptized, and give evidence that they are trying to live a better life. We have a Bible class each Sabbath afternoon The girls know most of the catechism and commandments and are now learning lessons in the life of Christ.

The school was named the Kwassui Jo Gakko (Living Waters School). Despite the gloomy prediction made at the beginning "that many years must pass before any Japanese in Nagasaki would consent to place a daughter in a Christian school," by 1883 the institution had reached the limit of its accommodations and of the girls enrolled thirty were from Nagasaki.⁵⁷

THE JAPAN CONFERENCE: 1884-95

At the 1884 General Conference the Committee on Missions recommended "That the Mission in Japan be organized as an Annual Conference, the boundaries of which shall be those of the Empire of Japan." Pursuant to this authorization Bishop I. W. Wiley convened the mission in Tokyo on August 28, 1884, and organized the Annual Conference.† After devotional exercises, including prayers, hymns, and Scripture readings in English and Japanese, the Bishop addressed the Conference at some length, explaining the General Conference action. He then read the names of fourteen elders, four deacons, and fourteen probationers transferred from their respective Conferences, and announced the Japan Conference duly organized.⁵⁸

The Conference continued in session for six days. It is to be noted that of the thirty-two Conference members thirteen were missionaries and nineteen were Japanese ministers. Five Japanese were admitted on trial. Eight organized Districts‡ were reported. Forty-two appointments were listed, of which twenty-two were "to be supplied." There were 1,148 church members, including 241 probationers. Sunday schools enrolled 1,203 pupils.⁵⁹

* In Davison's absence on furlough (1882) C. S. Long served as Presiding Elder of the Nagasaki District, and later (1887-90) of the Nagoya District.

† The charter members of the Conference were: Elders, R. S. Maclay, J. C. Davison, M. C. Harris, I. H. Correll, Charles Bishop, C. S. Long, L. W. Squier, James Blackledge, C. W. Green, Yeiken Aihara, Saehachi Kurimura, Bunshichi Onuki, Kenjiro Asuka, and Takehei Kikuchi. Deacons, M. S. Vail, Tenju Kanamura, Sogo Matsumoto, and Keinosuke Kosaka. Probationers, W. C. Kitchin, D. S. Spencer, J. O. Spencer, Chiujō Nakayama, Yasutarō Takahara, Toranosuke Yamada, Genjiro Yamaka, Heizo Hirata, Itsuki Honda, Hatanoshin Yamaka, Sakaye Hiranuma, Totaro Doi, Yajizo Kamijo, and Kyukichi Nakada.—Minutes, Japan Conference, 1884, pp. 4 f.

‡ The eight Districts were: East Tokyo; West Tokyo; North Tokyo; Yokohama; North Yokohama; Nagasaki; Yezo (later Hakodate); and North Hondo [Honshu].

A Woman's Conference was organized on August 28, and continued in session for seven days. All members were W.F.M.S. missionaries or the wives of missionaries. Although no provision was made for Japanese membership a course of study for Bible women was adopted. In the local churches W.F.M.S. auxiliaries were being organized, one in Yokohama in 1886, affiliated with the New England Branch; and one in Tokyo in 1887, associated with the Northwestern Branch. Within six months there was $25. in the treasury of the Tokyo auxiliary, pledged toward the support of a Bible woman in the Yokohama training school.⁶⁰

Substantial growth had been made during the preceding year. At the final meeting of the mission (1883) church members numbered 708; probationers, 235. At the first Conference 907 full members were reported; probationers, 241.

The organization of the Japan Conference coincided with a new spirit in the nation and a changed attitude of many Japanese toward Christianity. Prominent national leaders were advocating the official adoption of Christianity, though their reasons were almost wholly those of expediency in adaptation to Western culture and in seeking advantage in dealings with the "Christian powers." Officials were required to wear the European style of dress while on duty and women were even urged to exchange their costumes for Western dresses. In 1884 a prominent national leader, Yukichi Fukuzawa, who only a few years earlier had opposed Christianity as dangerous, published an essay declaring that European nations and America excelled all others, not only in political institutions, but also in religion, customs, and manners.

Any nation therefore which lacks this distinctive badge of Western civilization stands in the position of an opponent, and is not only unable to cope with the superiority of enlightened Americans and Europeans, but is directly exposed to their derision. . . . The adoption of Western religion, along with institutions and customs, is the only means by which the social colour can become so assimilated as to remove this bar to intercourse and this cause of opposition.

In a later article Fukuzawa stated that too much importance could not be attached "to Japan's entrance into the comity of Christian nations." There was a measure of hypocrisy in his position since he made it clear that he was not advocating that the majority of his fellow countrymen become genuine Christians but only that the nation assume the title of a Christian country, and that a sufficient number of representatives of the upper and middle classes accept baptism to give substance to the claim.⁶¹

The leader of the Liberal Party, Itagaki, visited Imabari, Shikoku Island, in 1884 and in an address said that Christianity was a need of the times and that Japan could not expect to rank with Western nations until it possessed their religion. In Kochi, the city in which he lived, he asked the leading merchants, bankers, and politicians to meet the missionaries of the Reformed and Presbyterian Churches whom he had invited to visit the city. He delivered an address advocating the adoption of Christianity at one of the public gatherings held. He did not himself become a professed Christian but others whom he influenced—including some who later held important political offices—became believers. When a few months later a church was organized, Itagaki presented a building to it and offered to pay one half of the pastor's salary.⁶²

On an official visit to America, Mr. Kentaro Kaneko, secretary of the Privy Council, stated that the Christian missionary idea had failed to penetrate the upper classes. "They report a large number of converts," he said, "but we see little or no sign of their influence." This contention stimulated Dr. D. C. Greene to make a study of the extent to which Christianity was making headway among the influential classes. He found that while the shizoku (the class of knights), which included most of the leaders of thought, constituted less than six per cent of the population they furnished about thirty per cent of the church members. He continued:

Not less than thirty students of the Imperial University are avowed Christians. Among the members of a single Congregational church are a judge of the Supreme Court of Japan, a professor in the Imperial University, three Government secretaries (holding a rank hardly, if any, inferior to Mr. Kaneko himself), members of at least two noble families; while in a Presbyterian church are the three most prominent members of the Liberal Party, one of them a count in the new peerage. Two influential members of the legislature of the prefecture of Tokyo, one of them the editor of the Keizai Zasshi, the ablest financial journal in Japan, are also members of a Congregational church. In the prefecture of Gumma, the President and Vice-President and three other members of the legislature are Christians, and in the Executive Committee, out of a total of five, three are Protestant Christians.⁶²

Among the many evidences of this new attitude of the Japanese there were two which deserve special mention. In August, 1884, the government abolished the "Shinto and Buddhist official Priesthood," and transferred "the power of appointing and discharging incumbents of temples and monasteries, and the promotion and degradation in rank of preceptors" to the religious superintendent of these sects. By this proclamation the connection of these religions with the State was almost completely dissolved, and the government relieved from all responsibility for the conduct of religious affairs. This long step in the direction of religious liberty did much to loosen the hold of Buddhism and Shinto upon the loyalty of the people.

Previous to 1883, while mutual good will and considerable cooperative effort had prevailed between the Protestant missions, each was a small group working within a limited area and had not conveyed the impression of constituting a Christian movement of large dimensions with common aims and purposes. This year, however, an event occurred which deeply impressed many of the Japanese people and had a wide influence. On April 16-21 in Osaka a Conference of 106 missionaries, representing sixteen missionary societies, four Bible societies, and two seamen's missionary societies, was held in the Municipal Hall of the foreign concession. The spirit of unity clearly evident, together with the enthusiasm and hope of the missionaries, was a revelation to the Japanese who were present and to those who read the reports in the newspapers. The Conference marked the beginning of a series of revivals which exerted a powerful influence upon Christians and nonbelievers. Maclay wrote:

A spirit of religious revival . . . is spreading in Japan, both among the foreign community and among Japanese Christians. I have not before seen anything like it since coming to Japan⁹³

Churches everywhere were purged and refreshed. Lay leadership in the prayer meetings was conspicuous. The whole revival movement seemed to rest on the shoulders of the church members rather than being induced by the ministers.

Two trends evidenced throughout the history of Christianity in Japan became observable at this time. One was the appeal it now readily made to the upper middle class, to professional men, and to men and women of affairs and social standing. This had marked advantage in the possibility which it offered of promoting the growth of a vigorous Christian Church, but it left the masses largely unreached. The other tendency was that some took an instrumental view of religion. Numbers became Christians in order to set forward public morality, good citizenship, or national prestige. There were few "rice Christians," few who sought baptism in order to gain material benefit, but some were not motivated by a desire for a personal experience of God's presence and power to save.

While the growth of the Church was accelerated for several years, difficulties still remained. Though Buddhist priests, no longer possessing the authority of government officials, could not enforce legal measures against Christians, nevertheless they did continue to put obstacles in the way of Christianity. In this they sometimes had the connivance of local officials. In one instance cited by Otis Cary in his volume on the history of Protestantism in Japan a Christian underofficial near Kobe "was forbidden by his superior to attend Christian services, to have family worship, or even to read the Bible." In protest he resigned his office but later was given a better position. In a few places chapels were stoned and windows broken, and even personal injury inflicted.

After a while the efforts of the Buddhists against Christianity took the form of . . . [a] Movement for the Extermination of the Religion of Jesus. Priests and others visited different parts of the country delivering lectures, and stirring up the people to resist the progress of Christianity. One of the leading arguments they advanced against it was that it required its followers to abstain from war, and, therefore, in case Japan should be attacked, they would do nothing for the defence of their country.⁶⁴

Despite a considerable measure of hostility on the part of some of the people the widely prevailing eagerness to possess the benefits of science and Western learning, which generally prevailed, caused Europeans and Americans to be regarded with favor. Missionaries had no difficulty in getting a hearing. Church membership steadily increased and some enthusiastic leaders expressed confidence that if reinforcements were sent in sufficient numbers the evangelization of Japan could be accomplished within another decade.

As early as 1881 Soper had begun the translation and publication of the Berean series of Sunday-school lessons, and even earlier of the Smaller Catechism and portions of the Discipline. The publication met a widely felt need in the churches and demand steadily increased. The 1885 Conference asked for the appointment of a Publishing Agent and Squier was appointed. Within a single year depositories for the sale of publications increased from four to fourteen. Consignment of books to Peking, Hawaii, and San Francisco was made. Sunday-school supplies were used in such volume by other denominations that the publications became self-supporting. Publication of literature was supported by annual appropriations from the Sunday School Union and the Tract Society.

A distinctive type of missionary activity which was begun in Yokohama in 1884 later spread to other centers. Eight persons, some of whom had been in San Francisco, planned to reproduce in Japan some of the features of the Chinese and Japanese missions on the Pacific coast. They organized the Gospel Society* (Fukuinkwai) for Christian work among young men, which offered education for the poor, a library, a reading room, a dispensary, and a hospital. The success of the Yokohama Society inspired the organization of similar Societies in other cities which in turn were the forerunners of the English night schools held later in connection with a number of downtown churches.

At the second Annual Conference (September, 1885) two Japanese were admitted on trial and one missionary, Dr. Herbert W. Schwartz,† was received by transfer from the Colorado Conference. Prominence was given to

* The stated objects were, first, "To gather the young men who return from America, and who may be wandering about . . . homeless and friendless; to make a Christian home for them . . . to assist them to procure employment, and to encourage them to attend church and come under Christian influence. Second, To gather together the young men of . . . [the city]; to give them opportunity for education and self-culture by means of a night school, and to instruct them in virtue and the Christian faith."—W. S. Worden, in Gospel in All Lands, March, 1889, p. 108.

† Herbert Woodworth Schwartz (1857-1921) was born at Woodstock, Ill. He attended the Cortland State Normal School (New York) and Syracuse University Medical College (M.D., 1884). In 1884 he was received on trial in the Colorado Conference and in 1885 was transferred to the Japan Conference (Gen'l Minutes, Fall, 1884, p. 221; 1885, Spring, p. 229). On Aug. 22, 1884, he married Lola Reynolds, and in October they sailed for Japan, arriving at Yokohama on Oct. 29. His missionary service covered a wide range of activities. In addition to teaching in several schools he held positions with the Tokyo Gospel Society, the Methodist publishing agency, and the American Bible Society. He served also as Presiding Elder and medical evangelist. For several years while on furlough he was connected with the Pacific Japanese Mission. He retired in 1918. Few, if any, missionaries had a stronger hold on the affections of the Japanese people than Dr. and Mrs. Schwartz.—Official Biographical Files, Division of World Missions.

the educational work as a most important factor in evangelization and the Missionary Society was asked to send more missionaries to meet the demand for teachers in educational centers. Mission institutions included two theological schools, two high schools, twelve common schools (ten day schools, two night schools), four girls' schools, and several vernacular schools in which all instruction was in the Japanese language. Besides these there were a large number of schools of lower grade. In response to calls for missionary teachers in schools not under Conference control W. C. Kitchin was appointed to the Kei-O-Gijuku in Tokyo, and Dr. Schwartz to educational work in the chiu gakko in Sendai (Miyagi Prefecture). Two W.F.M.S. institutions had been opened during the Conference year, the Bible women's training school at Yokohama, and a girls' day school at Fukuoka. At the 1886 Conference five Japanese were admitted on trial.

Bishop H. W. Warren presided at the fourth session of the Conference (August 12-18, 1887). Three missionaries were received by transfer: Joseph G. Cleveland from the Mississippi Conference; Epperson R. Fulkerson, Nebraska Conference; and Whiting S. Worden, Northwest Indiana Conference. W. C. Davidson of the Northwest Indiana Conference, formerly a member of the Japan Mission, who had been on furlough, returned this year. Three Japanese preachers were admitted on trial. Districts were increased from four to six by the addition of Aomori and Nagoya.⁶⁵

The rapidly increasing Japanese interest in Christianity reached high tide in 1888.* At the fifth session of the Conference (August 22-29, 1888), at which Bishop C. H. Fowler presided, the number of full members was reported to be 2,854, probationers, 849; an increase for the year of 884 members and 325 probationers. There were twenty-five churches; ten parsonages; and seventy-seven Sunday schools with 4,198 pupils. Charges numbered forty-eight. Members of Conference totaled thirty-eight—sixteen missionaries and twenty-two Japanese—and seven probationers. There were also thirty-three Local Preachers. The Conference was reinforced this year by the coming of four missionaries: Herbert B. Johnson, Wyoming Conference; John Wier, Troy Conference; D. N. McInturff, Blue Ridge Conference; and Milton N. Frantz, Philadelphia Conference. Two Japanese were admitted on trial. However, the net gain of missionaries was small. L. W. Squier had left in 1887, and this year W. C. Kitchin transferred to the Troy Conference and W. C. Davidson to Northern New York. The loss of R. S. Maclay, the founder of the Japan Mission, was most keenly regretted. While in attend-

* O. Cary: "The period of rapid development may be considered as closing with the year 1888. . . . The statistics of the Protestant missions for 1888 show something of what had been accomplished up to that time. There were 150 male missionaries, 27 unmarried male missionaries, and 124 unmarried female missionaries; making a total, including wives, of 451. Of 249 churches, 92 were wholly self-supporting. The church-members numbered 25,514. . . . 15 boys' schools had 2,709 pupils, while 39 girls' schools had 3,663. There were also 47 day schools with 3,299 pupils, 14 theological seminaries with 287 students, 3 schools for Bible-women with 92 pupils, and a school for nurses with 14 pupils. There were 142 ordained Japanese ministers, 257 unordained preachers and helpers, 8 colporteurs, and 70 Bible-women . . . —A History of Christianity in Japan: Protestant Missions, pp. 208 f.

ance upon the 1888 General Conference he had been offered and had accepted the position of dean of the newly founded Maclay School of Divinity in connection with the University of Southern California. For fifteen years he had been the foremost leader of Japan Methodism—for eleven years the Superintendent of the mission; for seven years its treasurer—and for the first four years of the Japan Conference filled numerous offices. In the absence of a Bishop he was elected president of the Conference and guided the sessions in a way eminently satisfactory to his colleagues. For several years he was a member of the committee for the translation of the New Testament into Japanese and by his scholarship contributed much to the excellence of the translation.⁶⁶

At the 1887 session of the Japan Conference J. O. Spencer had asked and received a location. In 1888 he raised a question with the Board as to the status of a missionary under appointment by a Bishop who, by taking a location, was no longer subject to episcopal appointment. Spencer this year was principal of the preparatory department of the Anglo-Japanese College. Since his work was entirely educational he felt that he should not continue "to sustain the relation of a minister." The Board appointed him "a lay missionary to Japan."⁶⁷

During 1889 the Church barely held its own. When the Conference met in its sixth session (August 14-22, 1889), under the presidency of Bishop E. G. Andrews, it was faced by the fact that the net gain in membership was only 119—108 full members and eleven probationers. National politics were turbulent. In February a new constitution was promulgated and the populace was troubled by questions affecting treaty revision. Political meetings were frequent and often noisy, sometimes marked by violence. The prevailing mood affected religious meetings. When, for lack of church buildings, religious services were held in rented halls and theaters they were characterized by inattention and occasionally by disturbances. Plans for unification of the several Methodist bodies,* strongly urged by prominent members of the Conference but by no means favored by all, took up much of the time of the Conference session. The missionary force was increased by three: J. W. Wadman, transferred from the Montana Conference; G. B. Norton from South Kansas; and J. F. Belknap, admitted on trial. Three Japanese preachers were received.⁶⁸

Yoitsu Honda at this time was at the Northfield, Massachusetts, seminary but evidently was in close touch with conditions in Japan. Under date of July 6, 1889, in the course of a frank letter to Bishop Andrews he made a number of statements which throw light on the situation prevailing in the Church. A closer, more harmonious relationship between the missionaries and the native workers, he said, was needed. Few of the missionaries were able to converse in Japanese and this made it impossible for them to understand the people and their ideas and to sympathize with them. In the past the Bishops visiting Japan had been "too busy" to confer personally with the Japanese workers and he ventured to suggest that the Bishop take time to talk with preachers, teachers, leading church members, and students; also that he visit eleven of the prominent centers, most of which had never been visited by a Bishop. It was most important, Honda felt, for the Bishop to visit Hirosaki. "[A] majority of the native members of . . . [the] Conference" had come from Hirosaki yet in fourteen years "neither Bishop nor superintendent of Mission" had visited the city. One could not acquaint himself with the real situation of Methodism in Japan merely by seeing Tokyo for it was not representative of Japan as a whole.⁶⁹

* The several Methodist bodies were: the Methodist Episcopal Church, South; the Canadian Methodist Church; the Methodist Protestant Church; and the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Reports of pastors at the seventh session of the Conference, convened by Bishop J. P. Newman at Aoyama, Tokyo, on July 10, 1890, indicated a net loss in membership of 288—146 full members and 142 probationers. Nevertheless, Districts were increased from six to seven by the organization of a Sendai District. For the first time a Japanese was appointed as Presiding Elder. The loss in membership, together with other unfavorable conditions, made the year the most critical that the Church had experienced. A strong reaction against foreigners had set in, resulting in social antagonism hard for the native Christians to endure, and many no longer attended religious services. Unequal treaties remained in force and middle- and higher-class people chafed bitterly under the aspersion of political immaturity and the discriminatory treatment of the nation by the Western powers. Within the Church there were many who had become members without a real spiritual awakening and wholehearted committal and these were winnowed out by the winds of popular disapproval. Japanese students returned from study in the universities of Europe and America where they had come into contact with widely variant views of the relations of science and religion, and of the "higher criticism" of the Bible, and spread abroad the doubts that had been created in their minds. Among the rank and file who had the impression that all Westerners were Christians the anti-social and immoral conduct of many Europeans and Americans discredited the Church and the Christian religion. Add to all of these influences the effect of an aggressive organization by the Buddhists of the "Great Association for Honoring the Emperor and Preserving Buddhism," and it is not difficult to account for the recession in religious interest and Church growth.

The "Imperial Rescript on Education" issued on October 30, 1890, had a profound effect upon the thinking and attitudes of the Japanese people.* Copies were widely circulated, especially among teachers and students. On national holidays school pupils were assembled to listen to its reading. Com-

* The Rescript read, in part, "Know ye, Our subjects: Our Imperial Ancestors have founded Our Empire on a basis broad and everlasting, and have deeply and firmly implanted virtue" mentaries upon it were written by Japanese scholars in which they declared that Western nations were unacquainted with the principles of loyalty and filial piety and that Christian teachings were contradictory to those inculcated by the Rescript. Opinions of missionaries concerning it were divided. Some conservatives interpreted it as an attack upon the religion of the West while others—and these were a majority among the Methodists—lauded its emphasis upon filial love, harmony, and benevolence, and saw in it nothing that was not in accord with Christian teachings. As interpreted by many Japanese it undoubtedly tended to strengthen the traditional foundations of the father-centered family and the emperor-centered nationalism of Japan and insofar as it did this it weakened the effect of Christian teaching.⁷⁰

The anti-foreign feeling was manifested in many ways. One manifestation was increased resistance to the holding of property by foreigners. Japanese law forbade legal ownership of land by citizens of other nations. From the beginning the mission had difficulty in renting suitable residences for missionaries and buildings for chapels and schools and under these circumstances the only alternative was to purchase real estate and register it under the name of a Japanese. This was done by foreigners employed by the government, with the approval and frequently by the assistance of officials. But about this time outcry arose against the practice and the charge was made that the best land in the country was being bought up by foreigners and that Japanese who held land in trust for them were traitors. A few repudiated the relationship and even went so far as to mortgage or sell property and retain the proceeds. Against this procedure there was no legal redress.

Antagonism was also manifested in official interference, direct and indirect, with Christian work. In one city certain military captains and lieutenants who had become Christians were ordered to cease efforts to promote the propagation of Christianity. Such government officials were told by their superiors that profession of the Christian religion stood in the way of their promotion and foreign teachers in government schools were discontinued as fast as their contracts expired. Some who lost their jobs believed that their religion was the real cause.

Notwithstanding these various evidences of anti-Christian propaganda and antagonism, in the first Diet elections under the new constitution (November, 1890) following the change from an absolutist government to a constitutional monarchy, thirteen of the members elected were Christians and two of the highest offices—the speaker, and the chairman of the Committee

. . . Ye, Our subjects, be filial to your parents, affectionate to your brothers and sisters; as husbands and wives be harmonious, as friends true; bear yourselves in modesty and moderation; extend your benevolence to all; pursue learning and cultivate arts; and thoroughly develop intellectual faculties and perfect moral powers; furthermore, advance public good and promote common interests; always respect the Constitution and observe the laws; should emergency arise, offer yourselves courageously to the State; and thus guard and maintain the prosperity of Our Imperial Throne coeval with heaven and earth. So shall ye not only be Our good and faithful subjects, but render illustrious the best traditions of your forefathers."⁷¹—O. Cary, A History of Christianity in Japan: Protestant Missions, pp. 226 f.

of the Whole—were filled by Christians. By nomination of the House of Representatives and confirmation by the emperor, a prominent Methodist layman, Mr. Sen Tsuda, was made vice president.⁷¹

To add to the complications of the year the first serious dissension since the founding of the mission occurred in 1890. To some of the Bishops it appeared to be a feud between two groups of missionaries, which threatened to create division between missionaries and Japanese members of the Conference. It seems from a communication sent to the Board from the field that when the Japan Conference was organized Bishop Wiley advised the formation of a "Mission Council" separate from the Conference, which should hold meetings, consider matters "not properly belonging to the Annual Conference," make decisions and keep minutes.⁷² Such an organization held meetings from year to year at the time of the Conference sessions and gradually took upon itself increased responsibilities and powers. Bishop S. M. Merrill, who for a number of years had episcopal supervision of the Japan work, was not at all happy over the development. On May 28, 1890, he wrote to Secretary Leonard:

There appears to be a Conference within the Conference—the interior Conference being . . . almost an unauthorized and irresponsible power. That is, there is a something, distinct from the Conference called the 'Mission,' which has officers of various sorts, which votes, and does other things that belong to a regularly constituted body. The powers of this Mission, or whether it is entitled to exercise any powers where the work is organized into an Annual Conference, should be determined with some definiteness. . . . I can not but feel that not a little jeopardy attends our interests in Japan Some vigorous administration is the demand of the situation.⁷³

Bishop Merrill's letter was written too late for the Missionary Secretaries to confer with Bishop Newman in advance of the Japan Conference session. The dissension reached its climax in a meeting of the "mission," convened on July 9, 1890, which continued in session through at least a part of the day, and throughout the evening and night until 2:45 A.M. It reconvened at three o'clock on the afternoon of July 11 for final action, the "mission" then voting that "all reference to this investigation be stricken from our minutes." *

* The matter at issue at this meeting chiefly concerned the action of J. O. Spencer, dean of the college department, in writing independently to the Missionary Secretaries for approval to appoint Benjamin Chappell, a Canadian of acknowledged ability and high character, to a position on the college staff without consultation or approval of the "mission." Letters to the Board written by Spencer, H. W. Schwartz, as Corresponding Secretary of the Conference, and three other members of the Conference (G. B. Norton, W. S. Worden, and D. N. McInturff) were read and the writers interrogated. Letters from the three last-named persons made insinuations against Spencer, e.g., "troublesomeness," "political trickery," and "untruthfulness." A committee of five was appointed which brought in a series of four resolutions from the entire committee; and on a fifth resolution majority and minority reports. No resolution was unanimously adopted and on the committee report as a whole the vote stood: aye, 14; no, 5; excused from voting, 2. While all who had participated in the irregular correspondence signed a statement confessing "mistakes and . . . wrongs," and agreeing to live as brethren in peace and harmony, two (McInturff and Norton) within a short time left the field. Some months earlier (Jan. 14, 1890), Milton N. Frantz had written to the Missionary Secretary asking for a "recall." (Correspondence Files, Division of World Missions.) He gave several reasons for his dissatisfaction, of which one was his "utter lack of confidence" in Spencer whom he charged with intrigue. The withdrawals, the number of negative votes on the committee report, and the number who asked to be excused from voting, revealed existence of a minority dissident group and a cleavage within the "mission."

Bishop Newman cabled to New York, "glorious reconciliation." Actually, however, two or three of those most intimately concerned were not really reconciled and within a short time left the field. The first to act was G. B. Norton who on July 23 wrote to the Bishop asking for a transfer from Japan. The unfortunate episode could not possibly have occurred if from the beginning all the matters at issue had been brought before the Annual Conference to be fully discussed and settled according to its accepted rules of procedures.

The proceedings of such a meeting could not be kept secret and it inevitably increased the disquiet, uneasiness, and dissatisfaction among Japanese pastors and laymen. Latent ill feeling toward missionaries already existed on the grounds that they were keeping the control of the churches too much in their own hands; that the Japanese were not given a voice in the location and forms of work of missionaries; and that they had no part in the control of funds appropriated for schools and evangelistic work. Bishop Andrews had discerned what he described as "the self-assertive tendencies of the native preachers" and had written Newman that his appointment of Matsumoto as Presiding Elder the preceding year had been "partly by way of satisfying . . . [these] tendencies." These matters of financial independence, the administrative autonomy of churches and schools, and the placing of Japanese in positions of initiative were problems encountered by all the denominations. John H. DeForest, veteran missionary of the American Board, stated the situation as he understood the Japanese to see it.

We seemed to our Japanese brethren to be carrying our work, not as co-labourers with them on equal terms, but as a band of foreigners who acted together, as it were, with closed doors, and who, after forming plans, asked them to help carry them out. . . . Doubtless we were not so sympathetic and considerate as we might have been. . . . We rapidly adapted ourselves to the situation, and not only learned to respect their autonomy, but also to glory in it. We recognized their right to be wholly independent of us in forms of faith as well as in methods of work.⁷⁴

Methodist polity did not admit the extent of independence "in forms of faith" allowed by Congregationalism. There were areas of difference between the Methodist missionaries and some Japanese members of the Church in matters of faith and doctrine* as well as in administration of the schools and churches. This was one of the factors in the rapid growth at this time of Kanzo Uchimura's "Churchless Christianity." Large numbers of persons who had sincere appreciation of Jesus and His teachings but were unwilling

* Some years earlier Joseph Cook, American author and lecturer, on a visit to Japan addressed a number of inquiries to missionaries and Japanese. In answer to the question, "What are the chief objections made by educated . . . [Japanese] to the acceptance of Christianity?" four persons in Tokyo replied: (1) The supernatural element—e.g., miracles and divinity of Christ; (2) opposition of Christianity to ancestral worship; (3) the doctrine of future existence; (4) its supposed disadvantage to the growth of national spirit and to the independence of the country; (5) alleged conflicts between Christianity and modern science; (6) supposed hindrance of Christianity to the progress of civilization.—O. Cary, A History of Christianity in Japan: Protestant Missions, pp. 161 f.

to accept some of the doctrines which they asserted were taught by missionaries no longer cared to be considered adherents of any Western-related organization. "There is such a thing," Uchimura asserted, "as Christianity outside the churches":

it is taking hold of the Japanese people far more strongly than the missionaries imagine. The western idea, that a religion must show itself in an organized form before it can be recognized as a religion at all is alien to the Japanese mind. With us religion is more a family affair than national or social, as is shown by the strong hold that Confucianism has had upon us without showing itself in any organized societies and movements.⁷⁵

At the eighth session of the Japan Conference (July 8-15, 1891), Bishop D. A. Goodsell, presiding, nine Japanese were admitted on trial—the largest number, up to that time, ever received at one session. Frank T. Beckwith came by transfer from the Des Moines Conference and was appointed instructor in the college and preparatory departments of the Philander Smith Biblical Institute. C. W. Green was transferred to the Philadelphia Conference. A memorial to General Conference was adopted, asking for an episcopal residence in Tokyo or Shanghai. The memorial stated that a more accurate knowledge of the field was necessary for successful administration than any Bishop could have who stayed only a short time and departed expecting never to return. In almost twenty years as a mission and Conference no Bishop—with one exception—had presided over the Conference more than once. Pastors' reports showed a gain in membership, for the year, of 246 full members and seventy-four probationers. Baptisms numbered 536—seventy-four children and 462 adults. This year thirty-five missionaries' wives and W.F.M.S. missionaries were appointed to schools and evangelistic and industrial work. Yasuji Ninomiya was elected as lay delegate to the 1892 General Conference.

Soper was much encouraged by the Conference and by general conditions.

The relation between the Japanese brethren and the Missionaries is closer and firmer than ever before. . . . Our work is more solid and hopeful than a year or two ago. . . . The Government . . . will afford us all the protection possible. The Government will preserve order The Police simply ask us—in the troubled Districts—to let them always know in advance, when we propose to hold public Preaching services, and advise us to be as careful and prudent as possible, so as to give our enemies no pretext for putting a stop to our evangelistic movements.⁷⁶

During 1891 Nagoya was a chief center of antagonism to Christianity. On one occasion several Japanese brought placards which they proposed to paste on the walls of the church but the police prevented them. At another time a stone was thrown against a window of the missionary's house which crashed through the pane and fell into a bedroom. For a while from one to a dozen policemen were constantly on guard for protection of the house and the church. W. S. Worden, the missionary, was fearful that antagonism to foreign control might spread to the Japanese preachers: "if we can prevent the Japanese brethren from combining and arraying themselves against the foreign members of the conference it will be a great victory for our church." ⁷⁷ His fears proved to be groundless.

Bishop W. F. Mallalieu presided at the ninth session of the Conference (July 14-21, 1892). The 1892 General Conference had not given favorable consideration to the proposal for an episcopal residence in the Orient. In view of this fact the Conference requested that the same Bishop "come to . . . [the Japan Conference] at least two years consecutively," and that Bishop Mallalieu be assigned to preside over the 1893 session. Fourteen Japanese preachers were admitted on trial.

While 484 baptisms were reported—436 adults and thirty-eight children—the net gain in membership was negligible, only fifty-three full members and thirty-seven probationers. There were thirty-one church buildings, four more than the preceding year. J. C. Davison felt an urgent need for more chapels, even though they must needs be small. He was also convinced that too much dependence was placed upon preaching as a means of winning converts and that too few of the preachers realized the importance of direct personal work with individuals. The discrepancy between number of baptisms and net gain in membership was explained by the fact that many indifferent or unworthy persons left the Church. On the Nagasaki District, for example, 117 persons were received into full membership while seventy-two who had shown themselves unworthy were either expelled or discontinued.⁷⁸

A different Bishop presided at the 1893 Conference (July 6-13), Bishop Randolph S. Foster. A. B. Leonard, a Corresponding Secretary of the Missionary Society, and Mrs. S. L. Keen, Corresponding Secretary of the Philadelphia Branch of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, were present. This was the first time that a Secretary of either Society had attended a meeting of the Japan Conference and their attendance contributed much to the interest and inspiration of the session. Nine Japanese preachers were received on trial. The Committee on the State of the Church reported that there had been "no special progress" during the year, and the statistics indicated only a small gain in membership: seventy-nine full members and 160 probationers. Sunday schools had increased by thirteen and enrollment by 1,298. The number of Districts was increased from seven to ten and three Japanese Presiding Elders were appointed.

The Conference convened in its eleventh session in Tokyo on July 4, 1894. Because of the disastrous earthquake which had partially destroyed all of the Aoyama buildings sessions were held in a temporary tabernacle erected for the purpose. Bishop William X. Ninde presided. Correspondents were appointed for all of the official Methodist periodicals as a means for publicizing Japan Methodism in the Church at large. With one exception the Presiding Elders again reported a year of only indifferent success. "It has been the same steady pull," said one, "against the tide of indifference to Christianity." There were no reports of persecution but stagnation seemed to have settled down like a pall upon the churches, with the result that the work was practically at a standstill.⁷⁹

In the war with China over Korea (1894-95) five ministers entered the services as chaplains; the Bible Societies distributed many copies of the Gospels to soldiers; and women missionaries visited sick and wounded soldiers in the hospitals.⁸⁰

At the 1895 Conference (July 11-20), Bishop John M. Walden presiding, a Japanese was for the first time elected as ministerial delegate to General Conference. On the second ballot Yoitsu Honda received thirty-six votes out of a total of fifty-eight and was declared elected. Ten Japanese preachers were admitted on trial and one—Takeshi Ukai, a probationer in the California Conference—was received by transfer. Of the eighty-one Stations and Circuits listed for appointments, seventeen were left "to be supplied." Thirty-seven W.F.M.S. missionaries and wives of missionaries were appointed, chiefly to schools, a few to evangelistic work and supervision of Bible women. A number of Japanese Bible women were employed, five in the Fukuoka District. There were twenty-one missionaries of the Missionary Society in active service, including one Japanese, and one woman (Jennie S. Vail). Two had died, and twelve had returned to America. Increase in number of full members for the year was ninety-three; decrease in probationers, sixty.⁸¹

Permission to missionaries to travel in any part of the country, one of the results of the ratification of new treaties (1894-95) which did away with extraterritoriality and other restrictions, facilitated missionary activity. It now became possible to visit rural districts freely and to open up new work in numerous places where there had previously been no missionary work.⁸²

TOKYO DISTRICTS, 1884-95

Japan is a capital-centered nation and it was inevitable that there should be a concentration of church and schoolwork in Tokyo. Of the later arrivals during the period ending with 1895 all but one or two of the missionaries at one time or another were placed in Tokyo for part-time or full-time teaching. Most of the women missionaries did some teaching if not in the day schools, in the English language night schools in connection with the churches or in the schools for training of women evangelists.

At the first session of the Japan Conference (August 28-September 3, 1884) Bishop Wiley created a North Tokyo District by dividing what had been known as the East Tokyo District. The new District had four Circuits: Kanda, Komagome, Kitsuregawa, and North Tokyo—which was a general name for any work which might be opened during the year. Charles Bishop was appointed Presiding Elder.

At Kanda, to which Hatanoshin Yamaka was appointed, with David S. Spencer to assist, sixteen members and six probationers were added during the year. Kanda and its surrounding area had many schools, with about twenty thousand students, and Bishop considered it to be the most promising center in Tokyo for missionary work. The Kitsuregawa and Sakuyama Circuit, a hundred miles in extent, was supplied by Masakichi Takeshita, a Local Preacher, who added 123 full members and twenty-six probationers to the membership within the year. No one was found to supply Komagome, which remained connected with Kanda. At the 1885 Conference, presumably for lack of sufficient missionary personnel, the District was discontinued, and most of the appointments placed in other Districts.

To the East Tokyo District in 1884 Harris was assigned. Five appointments were listed: Tsukiji Circuit, Shimosa (Shimofusa), Yamagata and Tendo, Asakusa, and Sendai—the latter two “to be supplied.” Since Sendai was not mentioned in the report for the year it may be assumed that no supply was available. Harris reported at the next Conference that Christian services were held at many new points which would be occupied as soon as possible. There were about thirty conversions at Shimosa and a like number on the Yamagata and Tendo Circuit.⁸³

Marked progress attended the work on the District during the following Conference year. At the Tsukiji church fifty-four adults and three children were baptized, bringing the membership to 155 and making the church self-supporting. The Sakuyama Circuit included Sakuyama, Kitsuregawa, Karasuyama, Yomura, “and other places.” A small chapel was built at Kitsuregawa. Mission work was begun at Sukagawa, a Class formed, and a Sunday school organized. A small Society was organized at Fukushima, capital of Fukushima Prefecture; also in April, 1886, at Yonezawa where the twenty-five members (most of whom were students of the Yonezawa Chiu Gakko), recruited by Nagano Chiugo, acting pastor, proposed to build a church without asking for aid. Herbert W. Schwartz, M.D., at Sendai had become instrumental in organizing a Society of forty-five members and eight probationers. Through the efforts of Mrs. Schwartz many of the women of the city became interested in the Christian religion.⁸⁴

The West Tokyo District, with Maclay as Presiding Elder, in 1884 included five Circuit appointments: West Tokyo, Akasaka (Aoyama), Yotsuya, Azabu, and Joshii (in Gunma Prefecture). Maclay’s report at the close of the year contained this description of the District:

The district as at present constituted, includes the western part of Tokyo city, together with portions of the geographical divisions of the country known as Musashi and Joshii . . . an important center of the silk industry in Japan The proximity of this territory to Tokyo, the enterprising character of its population, and the facilities for transportation furnished by its railroad indicate the importance of this district as a field for missionary efforts; and it is much to be regretted that owing to the inadequate supply of preachers in our Mission, we have not been able to put a large evangelizing force into the field.⁸⁵

Maclay gave few particulars concerning progress at the various appointments. The congregation at Aoyama, composed chiefly of students of the Methodist schools, was "steadily growing in numbers and influence." At Yotsuya, a night school for young men, conducted in addition to preaching services and pastoral work, had been helpful in bringing many under Christian influence. At Tamachi, near Azabu, Miss M. A. Spencer, W.F.M.S. missionary, conducted a day school, and in the building used by the school large congregations attended the services held by Genjiro Yamaka, the pastor.⁸⁶

The year 1885 marked encouraging advance in the Tokyo churches: Tsukiji, Asakusa, Yamagata, Tendo, Kanda, Mita, Osuba, and Yotsuya.

The Kanda church was enlarged 1885-86 to care for the growing congregation, and a parsonage erected. At Aoyama the building for the Philander Smith Biblical Institute (the theological department of the Anglo-Japanese College) was completed and occupied. Instructors in the Biblical Institute this year were David S. Spencer,* Milton S. Vail, I. H. Correll, and James Blackledge. W. C. Kitchin was appointed at the 1885 Conference as instructor in English language and literature in Kei-O-Gijuku, a large and well-known private school, "with full liberty to teach Christianity to the students." Within a year a large number had become interested in the Christian religion and eighteen had become members of the Tsukiji church.

On all of the charges progress was registered. On the Mita charge (formerly listed as the Azabu Circuit) a Society of thirteen members was organized and a chapel built. Nearby the W.F.M.S. missionaries opened a day school and organized a Sunday school. At Kumagaya, in Saitama Prefecture, a Society of twenty-one members was organized. Work was begun at Urawa, capital of Saitama Prefecture, with the baptism of two adults, and in the same prefecture public meetings were held at Honjo and Shimamura in rented halls.⁸⁷

At the 1886 Conference the two Tokyo Districts were consolidated into a single District, a measure made necessary by the paucity of missionaries. There were not enough to man the Districts and the educational institutions. Of the pastoral appointments all were filled by Japanese. Julius Soper, although absent on furlough, was appointed Presiding Elder. He arrived in

* David Smith Spencer (1854-1929) was born at Lemon, Pa.; was converted at the age of fourteen; graduated from the Wyoming Seminary in 1879 and from Drew Theological Seminary (B.D., 1884). On May 18, 1882, he married Mary Ann Pike, and in 1884 went with her to Japan as a professor in the Philander Smith Biblical Institute. He had a varied career as a missionary—teaching (1883-86), serving as Presiding Elder, as a stationed missionary, and as manager of the Methodist Publishing House. He translated a number of books into Japanese, including a History of the Christian Church and an Introduction to the New Testament. He also was an author of several Japanese books and tracts. A man of profound religious experience, gracious personality, and unusual executive skill, he was loved and honored by his colleagues and the Japanese. He retired on Oct. 1, 1926, after forty-two years of missionary service.—Official Biographical Files, Division of World Missions.

Tokyo, after three years' absence from Japan, on November 6, 1886. At the close of the year he wrote to the Missionary Society:

I began my official work November 20 by holding the Quarterly Conference of the Tsukiji Church. Since then I have traveled over the entire district twice, and visited some of the country churches three times, besides holding regularly the Quarterly Conferences of the city churches and frequently preaching, not only on Sundays, but also during the week. . . .

Quite a large number—about 225, including adults and children—have received baptism during the year.⁸⁸

Beginning in April, 1887, Miss Anna Kaulbach* who had come to Japan in the preceding fall, was in charge of five day schools in Tokyo with an average attendance of 343. All of the schools were in close proximity to churches and in connection with all of them Sunday schools were also held. During the spring (1887) Miss Spencer traveled over the District, giving Bible readings and lectures to the women, using a "Magic Lantern" with illustrations of the life of Christ. These lectures awakened deep interest. The Kaigan Jo Gakko (Tsukiji) this year enrolled 162 girls. The teaching staff was strengthened by the addition of Mary A. Vance,† who arrived in February. Misses Spencer, Kaulbach, and Vance were active also in the work of the Tokyo Gospel Society, each teaching one evening a week in its night school, assisting in a Sunday evening service, and conducting a Sunday school. Without their interest and cooperation, Soper reported, "the Society would have been an utter failure." They were also chiefly responsible for the Tsukiji and Asakusa Sunday schools in the Tokyo District, and also for the Kanda, Mita (the Azabu and Shiba charges) and Fukagawa schools.

As a result of Dr. Schwartz' work in the Sendai chiu gakko about forty students were said to have been converted. During 1886 he continued teaching but by 1887 he was beginning to feel uneasy lest he lose his skill in the practice of medicine.‡ However, he wrote Corresponding Secretary Reid that he was willing to do whatever Reid and the Bishop thought best. In April, 1887, J. G. Cleveland having arrived with his wife in Japan became associated with Dr. Schwartz at Sendai, rendering assistance also in the night school. Soon afterward the city of Yonezawa applied for a missionary to teach English in its samurai chiu gakko. Cleveland volunteered and "by the middle of November, 1887, . . . [he and his family were] settled in Yonezawa."⁸⁹

* Anna Kaulbach, after teaching for eight years in the Waverly, N. Y., public schools, answered the call of the New York Branch, W.F.M.S., and sailed for Japan July 20, 1886. In 1888 she returned to the United States and in the same year married P. C. Wilson of Chattanooga, Tenn.—L. M. Hodgkins, op. cit., p. 44.

† Mary A. Vance of Burlington, Iowa, went to Japan under the auspices of the Des Moines Branch. In December, 1890, she married J. F. Belknap of the Anglo-Japanese College, Aoyama. Her death occurred on Sept. 27, 1892.—Ibid., p. 46.

‡ The demand of the Japanese was for English teachers in the government and in the private schools, not for doctors.

In November, 1887, open-air preaching services* which continued for more than a month were conducted in the Uyeno Public Park, Tokyo, by Sennosuke Ogata,† pastor of Aoyama church, Tokyo, assisted by several young men of the Gospel Society. Large crowds attended the meetings and, according to Soper, hundreds of people were converted.⁹⁰

Soper considered the work on the Tokyo District in 1887 to have been "on the whole, . . . prosperous," though several of the older appointments had made little or no advance. There were on the District fourteen "regularly organized stations and circuits, . . . besides a number of preaching places," but there were only six "regular" preachers. To fill the other appointments Local Preachers were employed as supplied. Sixteen women—nine W.F.M.S. missionaries, five wives of missionaries, and two single women working under the parent Society—received appointments within the District. Nine were appointed to schools and seven to general "woman's work." Two new school buildings were erected by the W.F.M.S. at Aoyama, one for a chapel and recitation rooms, the other for dining rooms, dormitories, and a home for women missionaries. At Yotsuya and Kawamata, a new center in central Honshu, the members had built "small but neat" chapels, the latter without any help from the Missionary Society. Asakusa and Tendo had "barely held their own" and Sakuyama had retrograded.⁹¹

"Steady and substantial growth" characterized the work of the churches in 1888, with nearly every Society giving evidence of new life and activity. In financial contributions the year was the best in the history of the District. Two churches registered full self-support. There were 211 baptisms of adults but as a result of pruning of the records small net increase was registered. Two churches were built, one at Sendai costing 928 yen, and one at Shirakawa, an important city in Fukushima Prefecture where work had been begun some three years earlier.

In September, 1888, the Kaigan Jo Gakko in Tsukiji was divided, the higher department transferred to Aoyama to constitute the Ei-wa Jo Gakko (literally the English-Japanese Girls' School) leaving the preparatory department at Tsukiji with 122 pupils. Miss Mary E. V. Pardoe.‡ who did not arrive in Japan until November (1888) unexpectedly found herself in

* In his report to the Missionary Society Soper stated that these were the first open-air preaching services ever conducted in Tokyo. In this he seems to have been mistaken since Matilda A. Spencer gave a detailed account of two days' open-air services held in this same park, Oct. 12-13, 1881. (See Heathen Woman's Friend, XII [1881], 7 [January], 156 f.) The writer estimated that more than four thousand people attended the meetings.

† Sennosuke Ogata (1854-1942) was born in Tokyo and educated in the San Francisco, Calif., public schools and De Pauw University (B.A., 1885; D.D. [honorary], 1896). He made his way through college by working as a gardener and janitor. During his senior year he was a lecturer on Japan. He was received on trial in the North Indiana Conference in 1885 and transferred as a missionary to the Japan Conference in 1886. He was a teacher in the Philander Smith Biblical Institute, 1885-87; evangelist in Tokyo and Nagoya, 1885-1906; Presiding Elder, Tokyo East District, 1893-97; Tokyo District, 1898, and other Districts later; acting president of Aoyama Gakuin, beginning in May, 1907. For many years he was one of the most outstanding and influential Methodist leaders in Japan.—Official Biographical Files, Division of World Missions.

‡ Mary E. V. Pardoe, after nine years of public school teaching, was made preceptress of Dickinson Seminary. In 1888 she was sent to Japan by the Philadelphia Branch. She died in Tokyo, Aug. 31, 1893.—L. M. Hodgkins, op. cit., p. 57.

full charge as principal. She was an experienced teacher and with the assistance of an Englishwoman conversant with the Japanese language and a missionary's wife who had lived for a number of years in Japan the school had a successful year. In April, 1889, Miss Frances E. Phelps* reached Japan to begin work in the school.

Vicissitudes extending over a number of years attended the work at Yonezawa, where Mrs. Cleveland had established a girls' English class and thereby opened the way for the W.F.M.S. to begin a girls' school. Rebecca J. Watson—a seasoned missionary—took over the assignment and in mid-January, 1889, opened the school, with fifteen pupils. On March 6 Miss Mary Bell Griffiths, who had been sent from America by the Des Moines Branch to take charge of the Yonezawa program, arrived. When Conference convened in August, 1889, Miss Griffiths was assigned to the evangelistic work of the station and Mary E. Atkinson, who in the meantime had arrived on the field, was named principal of the school. Her report made at the close of the year gives insight into the program:

Though nominally in the employ of Japanese managers we are left with the entire care and government of the school. . . . The school is opened every day with a half hour of Bible study at which time the teachers and students are expected to be present. We have also had a noon prayer-meeting, the attendance at which was distinctly understood to be voluntary, but the girls all came, and greatly added to the interest of the meeting by their verses of Scripture and earnest prayers; they have also attended the Friday afternoon meeting for women. Our hearts have been cheered and many a burden lightened by the interest manifested in our religion, and the sweet Christ-like lives of the girls at home.⁹²

Miss Griffiths continued in Yonezawa until May 20, 1891, when she was called to take up work in Tokyo. This left Miss Atkinson, as school principal, without any missionary assistance. The school this year grew rapidly, increasing from eighteen to forty-two students and resulting in serious overcrowding, making it necessary to use the small dining room as a classroom by day and a sleeping room at night, and the other sleeping rooms as classrooms. In December, 1893, Miss Atkinson left for the United States.† In 1891 Louisa Imhof was appointed to evangelistic work. In the spring of 1894 she received a severe eye injury caused by a stone thrown at her as she was returning from an evening meeting, which made it necessary for her to leave Japan for the United States. Other W.F.M.S. missionaries were sent to Yonezawa in that year‡ but as promises made by citizens in 1888

* Frances E. Phelps received her educational training in the public schools and in Grinnell College (Iowa). She went to Japan under the auspices of the Des Moines Branch in 1889 and continued in educational and evangelistic missionary work until 1915.—Ibid., p. 61.

† Mrs. J. G. Cleveland: "All of the women except Mary E. Atkinson were removed . . . This young woman, less than twenty-five years old, bright, capable and attractive, isolated from all of her own kind in that snow bound valley,—it was a crime. . . . After Miss Mary's return to the U.S.A., the ladies closed the school, and all our work in Yonezawa, city of grand old samurai families, seemed to come to naught."—Mrs. J. G. Cleveland, "Reminiscences, Yonezawa," p. 19, ms., Board of Missions Library.

‡ Miss Alice M. Otto, sent to Japan by the Des Moines Branch in September, 1894, was appointed principal of the school. Miss Belle J. Allen was transferred from Ei-wa Jo Gakko, Aoyama, to relieve Miss Imhof.

of buildings for the school and a missionaries' residence had not been kept, and suitable facilities were not available, the Society withdrew their women and assigned them elsewhere.

Increase of membership on the Tokyo District was small in 1889, but financial progress was encouraging, testifying to increased interest and zeal of church members. At Aoyama the educational staff was strengthened by the addition of Benjamin Chappell,* a Canadian Methodist minister who for years made a noteworthy contribution as a teacher, administrator, and author.

The program of the Tokyo Gospel Society was outstanding among Christian institutions. On Saturday evenings lectures and Bible meetings were given; on other weekday evenings night school sessions were held; and on Sunday afternoons children's meetings. Usually on Sunday evenings Sennosuke Ogata preached. Fourteen young men were baptized in the course of the year.⁹³

Soper refused to be discouraged by the difficulties which beset all missionary work in Japan in 1890. The Tokyo District, he declared, not only held its own but "even made some headway." The great need in the city, he felt, was more and better church buildings. A good beginning had been made in the erection of the Ginza church and the purchase "of a fine church lot in Kanda at the cost of 6,000 yen." But this was only a beginning.

Here in the capital of Japan, with its million souls, the Methodist Episcopal Church has only two fairly decent places of worship (Tsukiji church and the new Ginza hall), and no place where we can congregate more than 250 people. How long shall this state of things continue?⁹⁴

Equally, or even more important, was the need for more preachers. "There are new openings and loud calls on every side," but for lack of workers there was no possibility of response. The teaching staff of the Tsukiji Girls' School was given additional assistance by the sending, December, 1890, of Jennie S. Locke from the New York Branch.

At the 1890 Conference the Tokyo District was again divided, the northern part cut off to constitute a Sendai District. Twelve charges were left—eight in the city and four in the country. One of the four rural charges was abandoned for "want of men and money." The Ginza Society, organized in 1890 by some forty members of the Tsukiji church, had a successful year. Five day schools, under W.F.M.S. auspices, reported progress.

* Benjamin Chappell (1852-1925) was received by transfer from the New Brunswick and Prince Edward's Island Conference. He arrived in Japan in 1889 and in August began teaching in the college department of the Philander Smith Biblical Institute, Aoyama, Tokyo. He was an alumnus of Mt. Allison University (B.A., 1874; M.A., 1882). After graduation he became principal of the Dorchester, N.B., academy, and later served as pastor of several churches in New Brunswick and Prince Edward's Island. For about three years (1881-83) he was a missionary in British Columbia. He was dean of the Anglo-Japanese College, Aoyama, 1898-1907. He wrote and translated into Japanese several pamphlets; also the treatise, "The Unshakable Foundation of the Christian Faith." After retirement in 1918, following a brief period in Canada for recuperation, he returned to Japan and continued to serve at Aoyama Gakuin in the retired relation until his death.—Official Biographical Files, Division of World Missions; obituary in The Christian Movement in Japan, Korea & Formosa . . ., 1925, A. Oltmans, Ed., pp. 429 ff.

In his report at the 1891 Conference Soper emphasized "the urgent necessity of giving more attention to the practical and social side of Christianity." The crying need of Japan, he said, "is Industrial Education." He spoke with high appreciation of the educational work of the W.F.M.S. missionaries at the Aoyama Young Ladies' Seminary (Ei-wa Jo Gakko) and at the Tsukiji Girls' School—"a grand work for the Christian education of women in Japan." At the 1891 Conference Elizabeth R. Bender, who had arrived in Japan in December, 1889, from the Baltimore Branch, was appointed principal of Ei-wa Jo Gakko.⁹⁵

Soper discerned signs of new life in nearly all the churches of the District in 1892 and some he believed to be making "decided headway." A number of inquirers were reported, and on the Kazusa Circuit at one point a class of eighteen persons was baptized. At the 1892 Conference, following return from furlough, J. C. Davison was appointed Presiding Elder. Results in the churches were to him disappointing. Three charges reported no adult baptisms and in nine others the membership ranged from one to fourteen—fifty-six in all. Losses by transfer and other causes reduced the total membership below that of the preceding year. While all of the charges paid their current expenses only three contributed anything toward the support of their pastors. Two chapels were built—one at Aoyama and one at Ajiki.

For several years efforts had been made by W.F.M.S. missionaries to secure a qualified woman from America to establish in Tokyo an industrial home. Finally in December, 1889, Miss Ella A. Blackstock (Minneapolis Branch) arrived and for a time taught drawing, music, and other subjects at Ei-wa Jo Gakko. In April, 1891, she rented a building in Aoyama for the beginning of the industrial department of the school. The curriculum included cooking, sewing, embroidery, drawn work, knitting, flower arrangement, Japanese etiquette, and the Bible. In 1893 about thirty pupils were enrolled.

At the 1893 Conference the transfer of R. P. Alexander, a probationer from the New England Southern Conference, was announced and he was appointed to the Biblical Institute college and preparatory departments. The District was again divided into Tokyo East and Tokyo West Districts. Davison was continued in charge of the West and S. Ogata was appointed to the East District.⁹⁶

The years 1894-95 marked some advance in the Tokyo Districts, particularly in the East District. This District embraced an area fifty miles from east to west and nearly a hundred miles from south to north, the churches of which—apart from the three in Tokyo—were widely scattered over the four provinces Kazusa, Shimosa, Hitachi, and Shimotsuke. In this immense field there were only two ordained pastors, two probationers, and four Local Preachers. The pastor of the Sakuyama Circuit in ministering to the people of the five preaching places was obliged to travel on foot from eight to twenty-five miles per day. Ogata was an able minister whose energy, confidence, and religious zeal met a ready response from the people. From the two years he reported 199 baptisms and financial contributions of 1,511.88 yen. Conditions also improved somewhat in the West District although not to such a marked degree. The enrollment of the five Tokyo day schools in 1895 was 645, an increase of 111 pupils in twelve months. Most encouraging was the graduation in 1895 of ten theological students from Philander Smith Biblical Institute, seven of whom (in addition to three others) were admitted to the Conference on trial. The enrollment at Aoyama Jo Gakko, exclusive of the industrial department, was 126. Miss M. Helen Russell (Pacific Branch), who arrived on August 27, 1895, was a welcome addition to the staff of teachers.⁹⁷

YOKOHAMA DISTRICT

On his return from furlough in December, 1883, J. C. Davison found that he had been appointed Presiding Elder of the Yokohama District. In May, 1884, he made his first tour of the District, a trip of over five hundred miles. In his report he gave a summary of the charges and their conditions in 1883-84. Yokohama Circuit included the two city Stations Tenan (on the Bluff) and Furocho (native city), Onoyecho (also in Yokohama), Kanagawa (a suburb), "and several preaching places in private houses in Yokohama, Nagoya and Nishiwo." The pastor at Nishio was instrumental in opening a station at Ebimura, which was made the nucleus of a new Toyohashi Circuit, the center to be in the city of Toyohashi, two hundred miles west of Yokohama, where there was no Protestant work. Nagoya Church was in the midst of a campaign for a church building. The following year Davison gave account of the same charges mentioning, for the first time, Tshara, an outstation of Toyohashi—where there had been two baptisms—and of Yebimura on the Nishio Circuit where there were several additions to the membership of the Class.⁹⁸

For one year only (1884) the Japan Conference had a North Yokohama District, with I. H. Correll as Presiding Elder. At Kanagawa the members managed to erect a chapel. At Matsumoto there had been dissension in the church but, happily, harmony was restored. In Nagano, the chief city of the Shinshu region, new work was begun. Correll preached during the year in eighteen towns and cities and everywhere found openings which only lack of resources in men and money had kept him from entering.

In 1884, of the twelve W.F.M.S. missionaries on the field, two were in the Yokohama District, Emma J. Benton with responsibility for day schools and Sunday schools, and Mrs. Caroline W. Van Petten with the direction of the Training School for Bible Women.

At the 1885 Conference I. H. Correll was appointed to the consolidated District. In two tours of the area he found substantial progress generally under way in the churches and many opportunities for enlarging the work. In Yokohama the Tenan church building was moved to a lot on a prominent street of the "native city," reconstructed, and dedicated "in the presence of a full house." The Furocho congregation "increased greatly in size and interest." Religious services were begun in Fujisawa, Odawara, and Ikusawa. At Nagoya pastor T. Yamada, with the cooperation of others, collected books and opened a public library which awakened such widespread interest that Yamada instituted an inquiry meeting in the library. Preaching places were established at Gifu and several other points in the region of Nagoya. Toyohashi Circuit began the year with five full members of the church and closed it with twenty and numerous probationers. Matsumoto had the best year thus far, with "greater interest . . . [among] prominent citizens and new places . . . opened for the preaching of the Gospel."⁹⁹

In the first four months of the 1886-87 Conference year Correll traveled 1,150 miles on his District and baptized fifty-six persons. He was so convinced of the opportunity for immediate advance that he appealed to Corresponding Secretary Reid for three additional foreign missionaries for the District—for Yokohama; Matsumoto, in which the Methodists were "really the only Protestant Church at work," and Nagoya, "a city of about 120,000 inhabitants," and "within a day's journey of at least a dozen places . . . already entered."

In Yokohama, moving the Tenan church into the "native town" had resulted in a very great change. The members were much more zealous and probationers had greatly increased in number. By the close of the year there were sixty-seven probationers. On the Honjo Circuit 115 adults and thirty-three children were baptized, and a small church was built without help from the Missionary Society. A new church also was erected at Kumagaya, costing $500., of which the Missionary Society paid $100. In connection with this charge a new appointment was opened at Fukaya, seven miles distant.

The Yokohama Gospel Society gave a good account of itself during these years. The program in 1887 was in the charge of E. R. Fulkerson, with two other men and three women missionaries giving part-time assistance. The same year a branch Society was opened at Kanagawa, where the head man of the town—who two years before was hostile—put up a building at his own expense for headquarters. The principal features at both places were a night school, with English classes and Bible teaching, and a library with a reading room.¹⁰⁰

At Honjo, in 1888, much bitterness toward Christians developed, which militated against the church. It was weakened also by removal of transient residents from the town and by internal dissensions. A beginning was made at Mizonokuchi, in connection with Kanagawa. The Class at Ikusawa, on the Odawara Circuit, erected a small church, a part of the cost of which was subscribed by non-Christians. A large Class made up chiefly of teachers and officials was organized at Oiso; another at Isebara, a town of considerable size; and a beginning made among the farmers at Goshonomiya with services in the house of one of the wealthiest landowners of the region. At Tobe, a part of Yokohama, another new charge, where there were twenty-nine baptisms, all expenses were met by the members. Hachioji, one of the earliest appointments, was relinquished, apparently as a concession to the Canadian Methodist Church, which had been operating there for some time. Every charge on the District, with the exception of Yokohama, showed some increase in full members, the net gain being seventy-eight. A storm in the following year completely wrecked the Yokohama church building. In 1888 the Furocho day school, in its new quarters in the new Gospel Society building, increased its enrollment to 130. This school was under the care of Gazelle M. Rulofson who had come to Yokohama in August, 1886, sent by the New England Branch.

At the 1890 Conference the Districts were so rearranged as to increase the Circuits from eight to thirteen, constituting "an area one-fourth larger than the state of Massachusetts, . . . [with] a population . . . numbering between three and four million." In his three trips round the District in 1891 G. F. Draper, the Presiding Elder, traveled "between twenty-six and twenty-seven hundred miles." He felt that on the whole the churches had made some advance, though a few had retrograded. His analysis of the cause differed from that of some others.

This retrogression is due to various causes; prominent among them being undue haste in administering baptism thus bringing into the church many who have proved a serious hindrance to its prosperity. Many came in who hardly could distinguish between the church and a political or social club. The ideas of personal sin, a personal Savior, and personal holiness were not with them and it is no wonder that they soon fell away.

Three new church buildings were dedicated during the year: a very neat and well-located edifice at Matsumoto; a little building at Odawara; and a very attractive structure at Kanagawa.¹⁰¹

When the Training School for Bible Women was established in 1884 under the direction of Mrs. Van Petten with a group of six women it was thought that a building large enough to house twenty would be ample size but it was soon outgrown and enlarged. Again it proved inadequate and in 1890 the W.F.M.S. constructed a building with accommodations for fifty. In June, 1891, the school closed its best year, having enrolled thirty-seven:

All have been engaged in various kinds of work in the city, holding meetings for women and children, Christians and non-Christians, poor and sick and blind. They have assisted in church and Sunday-school work, and two months in the year have been spent by two classes in the country, in the same kinds of work.

Five completed the course of four years' study of the Bible . . . and from this time, will devote their whole time to this work.¹⁰²

Anna S. French,* who arrived in Japan in October, 1889, was appointed to supervise the day schools of the Yokohama District. At the 1890 Woman's Conference she reported an enrollment of 467 in five schools: Furocho, Kanagawa, Tobe, Aizawa, and Chojamachi—all in or near Yokohama. During the year a sixth school, also in the village of Aizawa, was begun with an evening school for those who were caring for their baby brothers and sisters during the day while the mothers were employed in the teahouses. In 1891 in Yamabukicho, in a part of Yokohama which was without an organized church or preaching place, a two-story building was erected for a Methodist day school, which combined the work of the Chojamachi and Furocho schools.

In his fifth year in the Yokohama District Draper made three trips over his extensive territory, traveling more than two thousand miles in train, jinrickisha, and on foot. He discovered an increased interest in the spiritual life among attendants at preaching services but deeply regretted that "with such a working force as . . . [the Church had] in the field so little gain . . . [could] be reported." At the 1893 Conference J. G. Cleveland was appointed Presiding Elder of the Yokohama District. To him—when he had spent a year in close contact with the churches, the preachers, and the lay people—the cause of the existing conditions was not so much to be found in the nation, in international relationships, or in changed attitudes of the Japanese toward foreigners, as in the Church itself and in the lives of its members.

The churches languish, not because the pastors do not work, but because of the need of a more complete surrender to Christ. . . . The people have heard much about the educating and civilizing power of Christianity, but they need to see it exemplified in the lives of believers; they need to see the New Birth shine forth from the churches, and feel its power touch them through the lives of godly men and women.¹⁰³

In 1893 Maud E. Simons, from the Baltimore Branch, who had arrived in 1889, was given charge of the Yokohama District day schools. The next year a new building was erected for the Aizawa school—two schoolrooms, a sewing room, and rooms for the teachers. By the end of the first month the rooms were full, and a house was rented for the sewing class which within a week was overflowing. Additional accommodations were also necessary for the Tobe school. In all of the schools the average attendance exceeded that of the preceding year.¹⁰⁴

* Anna S. French in 1894 married a Presbyterian missionary (Freyer) in Syria.

HAKODATE DISTRICT

At the first meeting of the Japan Conference (1884) L. W. Squier was continued as Presiding Elder of the Hakodate District.* In several places persecution of converts was severe, with infliction of bodily injuries accompanied by disinheritance and ostracism. In 1885 a new chapel was built at Fukuyama. Work was begun at Otaru with "some very influential and earnest men" enlisted as probationers. The Hakodate Society this year attained full self-support and contributed generously toward the cost of the first native Christian cemetery in Japan.

Miss Ella J. Hewett (Philadelphia Branch) arrived in Japan in October, 1884, and was appointed to the Caroline Wright Memorial School (Hakodate) as assistant to the principal. An addition to the school was built this year at a cost of $5,000. This made it possible for the school to accommodate a hundred boarders and fifty day pupils.¹⁰⁵

For one year (1884-85) the Hirosaki area constituted a separate District (North Honshu) of which C. W. Green was Presiding Elder. It included in addition to Hirosaki three large towns, Aomori, Kuroishi, and Morioka, in thickly populated districts. Aomori had been weakened by the removal of several of its active members. Hirosaki showed evidence of life and growth. Morioka had not been prosperous. The W.F.M.S. opened a girls' school at Hirosaki in 1884 and at Morioka a day school was established. Suteki Chinda,† with an assistant, was appointed to the Kuroishi Circuit but as his time was principally occupied by teaching in the Hirosaki school and the assistant was in failing health the interests of the Circuit suffered. On one of his rounds Green was accompanied by Yoitsu Honda who rendered exceptional service. At the September, 1885, Conference the Hokkaido and North Hondo Districts were combined, with Green as Presiding Elder. An outstanding event of the Conference year was the erection of a new church at Hakodate where Sogo Matsumoto was the efficient pastor.

General growth and an "extraordinary degree of enterprise and activity . . . in nearly all the charges" during 1886-87 were reported by the Presiding Elder. New preaching places were opened, Sunday schools organized, and a church built. There were accessions to membership in all the Societies and the numerical growth of some was unusually large. At Aomori the membership was nearly doubled. Marked success was also registered at Hirosaki, and at Fujisaki, without any outside help, "a good church, with house attached for a pastor," was built. L. W. Squier* and Dr. Hamisfar left Japan under a cloud.¹⁰⁶

* The District was variously designated: Yezzo; Hokkaido and North Hondo [Honshu]; Hakodate; Hakodate and Aomori; and Hokkaido.

† Suteki Chinda (later Count Chinda) was one of the four students sent by Ing to Indiana Asbury for higher education. On his return he was employed as a teacher at Hirosaki and as a Local Preacher. He later entered government diplomatic service and was at one time Ambassador to the United States. During his later years as Lord Chamberlain he exercised a strong influence in court circles. His interest in the Hirosaki school continued throughout his life.

The 1887 Conference saw the Hakodate region again set apart from the Hirosaki and Aomori area. While Hakodate, as represented by the number of charges, seemed too small to be designated a District yet it was sufficiently extensive, according to Green's report to the next Conference, "to require during the year 2,400 miles of travel." Widely separated towns made necessary the long journeys. Conversions occurred at several places where there had been no previous converts. A point of special interest was Kabato, "one of the prison towns of the Hokkaido." A Class of seventeen members was organized and later the membership doubled.

On the Aomori District (1887-88)† new preaching places were established in different neighborhoods of Hirosaki as a means of reaching more people. A revival at Aomori added many names to the roll of probationers. G. F. Draper, this year Presiding Elder of the District, was convinced that serious loss had been caused by the attempt to cultivate so vast a field as the Aomori and the Hakodate areas as a single unit and felt that resident supervision of the Hirosaki region was very important. He might also have said that the District was showing the lack of efficient supervision for the missionaries (excepting Draper himself) sent to the northern post were not well-equipped men, either from the standpoint of experience or by knowledge of the Japanese language. They had to depend largely upon interpreters and on such unofficial part-time supervision as could be given by Honda and Matsumoto. Both of these men were capable of efficient leadership but they were otherwise occupied and had neither official responsibility nor access to the policy-making circle of the Conference.

Draper also emphasized the importance of the Hirosaki school. "While not nominally a Christian school," he said, "it is freely opened to us and the influence of an earnest, God-fearing worker is strongly felt." He was so firmly convinced of the advantage of having a Methodist teacher in the school that he was willing—despite his conviction of the need for full-time District supervision—to fill the vacancy until the Board could send out someone for the place. He wrote to the Missionary Secretary reinforcing a request sent some months earlier.‡ In January, 1888, D. N. McInturff arrived to fill the position in the school.¹⁰⁷

Notwithstanding Draper's earnest plea for separate Districts, at the

* After Squier had been transferred by the Bishop to the North Ohio Conference, information was received implicating him "in gross immorality." Evidence in the case was forwarded to the North Ohio Conference (Minutes, Japan Conference, 1887, pp. 10, 12). At the North Ohio Conference, September, 1887, he was permitted to "withdraw under charges."—Gen'l Minutes, Fall, 1887, p. 274.

† For this year there was a separate Aomori District.

‡ G. F. Draper, letter, Aug. 25, 1887, to J. M. Reid: "We have been holding out inducements to the School authorities in order that the position might be kept open. This cannot with justice be done any longer. We must either supply the place ourselves immediately or allow them to seek help elsewhere. . . . I believe that the retention of this place is essential to the welfare of our work in this section. . . . Nine of the best preachers of our Conference have come to us from this school. . . . By all means send a married man if possible, and put me in communication with him at the earliest possible moment."—Correspondence Files, Division of World Missions.

August, 1888, Conference, at which Bishop Fowler presided, the Hakodate and Aomori Districts were again combined and Green designated Presiding Elder. "To reduce as much as possible the inevitable 'loss'" of the arrangement Matsumoto was appointed as assistant. John Wier, newly arrived from the New York Conference, was appointed to the To-O-Gijuku School as president and McInturff to the Aomori High School. In August, 1888, To-O-Gijuku, with seven Japanese teachers, for the first time came under the supervision of the Methodist mission. Wier's first impression of the school was unfavorable. Writing to Secretary Leonard on February 9, 1889, he expressed himself as almost ready to break off relations with the institution and establish a boys' school at Hakodate "under full Mission management." Why continue, he asked, "to subsidize a concern which is non-Christian" and so inflexible that no Conference president can change it? * Hasty action such as he had in mind would have been extremely unfortunate and would have resulted in immeasurable loss to the Church. The school was held in high esteem throughout north Japan and no institution started de novo under Methodist auspices could have successfully competed with it. Eight months later his outlook had entirely changed. "The outlook," he wrote to Leonard, "is getting bright." The school year had opened September 1 with 125 new students; they had come from "the best families in the North," the constitution of the school had been amended to put Bible study as a regular part of the curriculum; and he considered the way open to put able Christian men on the faculty. Milton N. Frantz of the Philadelphia Conference, received by transfer at the 1888 Conference, whom Wier estimated highly, was appointed to the school at the 1889 Conference.¹⁰⁸

On June 9, 1889, the Hirosaki Girls' School (Hirosaki Jo Gakko) was opened with Miss Mary S. Hampton of the Hakodate School as principal. A new school building, "a rough wooden structure, square, and two stories high," planned to accommodate about two hundred pupils, had been erected during the preceding year. It was located within two blocks of the missionary home, a neat Japanese house of five rooms. Funds for the buildings were principally contributed by Japanese patrons. The institution's beginning was made easier by the reputation established by the former W.F.M.S. school founded in 1884.¹⁰⁹

While Green was devoting his time to getting Wier and his family estab-

* Opinions of the missionaries concerning the Hirosaki school were divided. Not all agreed with Draper's judgment of its importance and value. The managers and Japanese teachers of the school for their part faced compounded difficulties. As the national system of public education developed, tax-supported schools rapidly increased in number and the old local institutions had either to become a part of the system, thereby losing their independence, or else reorganize under private ownership with its inevitable struggle for support. Under these circumstances the Christian atmosphere and life of the Hirosaki school were jeopardized. Neither Honda, who at this juncture was preoccupied with other interests, nor any of the older missionaries were at hand to aid in the delicate task of adjustment. Attempts to make the school fully Christian by revision of its constitution failed. In the end agreement was reached on the basis of the Conference undertaking to furnish a missionary teacher of English who, the authorities of the school gave assurance, would be free to carry on Christian work among faculty and students. Under this arrangement the school continued year after year to pour forth a stream of Christian teachers into the Japan Church.

lished in Hirosaki, Matsumoto made an extended tour of the District. Later Green, accompanied by Matsumoto, visited many of the Stations. Conditions in the charges varied; a few churches seemed to be advancing; others because of removals and lack of pastoral supervision were scarcely holding their own. At Hirosaki there had been several accessions to the church; Morioka was advancing and Otaru and Odate were growing. In December, 1888, Augusta Dickerson of the Philadelphia Branch, a Normal School graduate with eleven years' experience in public school teaching, arrived and was appointed to the Caroline Wright Memorial School in Hakodate.¹¹⁰

At the 1890 Conference John Wier was appointed Presiding Elder of the Hakodate District. The five Societies of the Hakodate Circuit—Hakodate, Nanai, Mori, Osshamamde, and Yamagoshinai—all reported conversions and accessions during the year. The Hakodate church added sixty to its membership while the Sunday-school attendance of the Circuit almost doubled. A boys' night school in which, along with other subjects, the Bible was taught daily was well attended. Miss Dickerson reported a successful year during which the spiritual life of most of the pupils had "deepened and broadened." Miss Georgiana Baucus, from the New York Branch, arrived at Hakodate in July, 1890. Her presence was a great help and blessing to the school. The Otaru Circuit of five towns doubled its membership and Sunday-school attendance in 1890-91. A Society of twenty members was organized at Iwanai and asked earnestly for a pastor. Four contiguous towns presented the possibility of a compact Circuit. No preacher was available for the Kabato Circuit of four towns in the agricultural region of Hokkaido, a rapidly growing section, and the same situation existed on the Fukuyama Circuit of three towns. The "urgent need of the District," Wier reported, was for more preachers and church buildings. If these could be supplied he was certain of the future of the Church.

Sapporo as a growing city attracted many new people, among them numerous Methodists who desired a Society of their own. In 1891 a Class of some thirty members, principally professional men, asked for a fully organized church, promising to build a chapel at their own expense and, after the first year, to pay the full support of a pastor. At the 1892 Conference M. Matsumura was appointed. At Kabato "a large meeting house . . . [was] built free of debt," and at Chiubetsu—one of the four other points on the Circuit—land was promised for a church.

In his first report (1893) as Presiding Elder of the Hakodate District Julius Soper told of his initial trip over the District, which required forty-five days. A second round, in the spring, occupied thirty-seven days. The missionary opportunity seemed to him to be very great since the population was rapidly increasing and the immigrants from the south, separated from their old surroundings and associations, were less bound by traditional habits and customs and more accessible to new social and religious influences.

After visiting nearly every appointment several times during the 1893-94 Conference year Soper bemoaned the fact that "true, earnest and intelligent believers . . . [were] still comparatively few" in the churches. He attributed this in part to the fact that while there were a number of excellent preachers there were too few who were diligent in pastoral work and that many of the preachers failed to give their members "thorough instruction and faithful training." At Hakodate the constantly shifting population hindered the growth of the church. Over five years there had been many baptisms but very little net gain in membership. At Otaru an attractive, substantial church was built, seating two hundred. Nearly one half of the cost was raised on the field. The pastor, Konosuke Sawai, who had completed five years at Otaru, was appointed to the Akita-Honjo mission. Petty persecution of Christian pupils in many of the District public schools by Buddhist teachers interfered with Sunday-school attendance. Few boys came.

Despite the war during 1894-95, Soper gave an optimistic account of the churches, saying that this year was spiritually the best of his three years on the Hakodate District. "Never," he reported, "was the work, on the whole, more prosperous, and never was the outlook more hopeful." The W.F.M.S. school staff was strengthened by the addition in May, 1894, of Florence E. Singer of the Philadelphia Branch as instructor in music.¹¹¹

AOMORI DISTRICT

After an uncertain status for several years the Aomori region was permanently set apart as a separate District at the 1889 Conference.* Sogo Matsumoto† was appointed Presiding Elder and pastor at Morioka. From Akita on the south to Aomori on the north was a distance of 140 miles. The area constituted one of the richest farming regions in Japan. At the 1890 Conference Morioka was included in the newly formed Sendai District, of which Matsumoto was made Presiding Elder. He was succeeded on the Aomori District by J. G. Cleveland. By his second year (1891-92) Cleveland felt that substantial progress was being made, especially in Hirosaki, Akita, and Aomori.

* Appointments included in the District were: Akita, Aomori, Hirosaki, and Morioka.

† Sogo Matsumoto (1840-1904) was the son of a well-to-do merchant of Matsushiro, Nagano Prefecture. Because of smallpox scars, as a child he isolated himself and began a life of reading, which his father encouraged by building him a separate library. At fifteen he had become learned in Oriental philosophies and literature, and was becoming expert at the difficult art of Japanese sonnet-making. Financially independent, he led an easy and comfortable existence in Tokyo, operating an antique shop. At thirty-five on a visit to Yokohama he passed a small house from which he heard a foreign voice stumbling over his native tongue, badly but most earnestly. Curiosity drew him into the room. Although he understood little of what was being said, at the conclusion he obtained from the missionary, Maclay, a copy of the Scriptures, in Chinese. He perused the book, and deciding that the teachings surpassed those of Confucius and Buddha, he set out independently to proclaim them. This he did by street-corner preaching, first assembling crowds by narrating accounts of Japanese folklore and history. Eloquence soon won him a following, but his rather unorthodox interpretation of Christian doctrine led the missionaries to give him instruction. Two months later he was converted. When the Japan Conference was organized he was among the charter members of the mission, among the oldest in years. He spent the rest of his days as a preacher, filling appointments in the towns of Matsumoto, Hakodate, Sendai, and other places, and was appointed as the first Japanese Presiding Elder. Two of his sons followed him into the ministry. Long known as "Father Abraham" for his appearance, he was beloved by his own people and by the missionaries. He wrote a number of hymns which are still popular in the Church today. He was especially noted for his eloquence and the effectiveness of his concise and scholarly preaching.

The Hirosaki Girls' School (Hirosaki Jo Gakko) under the care of Miss Baucus had many difficulties with which to contend—lack of a competent Japanese principal; too few trained Christian teachers; and insufficient financial support—but despite all had a successful year.

The itinerating presiding eldership was continued, with J. W. Wadman appointed in 1892. This year there were four Circuits in the District and thirteen preaching places, supplied with seven pastors, three assistant pastors, and a few Local Preachers and Exhorters. In his first year's report Wadman singled out Tadasu Fujita's work on the Goshogawara Circuit for special mention. Entirely blind, Fujita nevertheless was in labors abundant.

A country town called Numadate, near Goshogawara, has been stirred to its very center. A short time ago a student from that place was converted to God in our church at Hirosaki, and returning to his native city, which was entirely heathen, he evidenced by his holy life the power of Christianity and a blessed work began which resulted in the conversion of nearly twenty people. Brother Fujita assisted this young man, trudging twice a month on foot through winter's snow and cold, guiding himself with his stick a distance of five miles in order to tell these people in their own homes the wondrous story of Jesus and his love. The head man of the town has given a good lot for a new church and another contributes 50 yen while all the others help to that extent that the new building soon to be erected will not cost the Mission a cent.¹¹²

The year was one of unusual prosperity in the Hirosaki church. The congregations frequently more than taxed the capacity of the building. The women's work, the Sunday school, and the Y.M.C.A.—all were thriving. At Kuroishi and Odate, previously regarded as hard and unyielding, the barriers were being broken down. Wadman had tried to carry the Gospel to hitherto unreached villages and towns by tract distribution, pastoral visitation, "magic lantern" exhibitions, preaching and lecturing. Some had been awakened in about a dozen new places, notably in Hachinohe, a large city south of Aomori, and at Noshiro, a seaport town of Akita Province. Three Bible women were employed on the District this year: one in Aomori, and two in Hirosaki and in the nearby town of Yoshida, where a Sunday school of some fifty pupils was conducted, and women's meetings and children's meetings held monthly in Kuroishi and Fujisaki. In 1894 the local authorities at Hirosaki decreed that Bible teaching could no longer be included in the curriculum of the girls' school. For a time it appeared that an impasse had been reached but Miss Baucus overcame the difficulty by introducing devotional exercises, and Bible study by classes, preceding the hour scheduled for the government program.

The visit of Corresponding Secretary A. B. Leonard to Hirosaki in the summer of 1893, requiring a horseback ride of thirty-five miles "over a steep, unused mountain path and through tough, bridgeless lanes across rice fields," was greatly appreciated. At a morning service he baptized four adults, one of whom was the wife of a member of the Imperial Diet from Aomori Province.

Again, at the 1894 Conference, a different Presiding Elder was appointed—this time Henry B. Schwartz from the New England Conference who had arrived in Japan in the spring of the preceding year. At Hirosaki the attendance at the Sunday services during the year convinced the Presiding Elder, the pastor, and the people that a new and larger building was necessary. Sunday-school attendance was larger than ever before, and four afternoon schools were also well attended. The 1895 freshman class at the Hirosaki school numbered 130, much larger than in any preceding recent year. Of the students who participated in the commencement exercises—all selected on account of merit—three-fourths were Christians. Assisted by several pastors, Schwartz held special meetings during the year at Aomori, Hachinohe, Goshogawara, Odate, Noshiro, and Akita, at which attendance was large and manifest interest was shown. At Fujisaki, where for several years the church had been entirely self-supporting, the Class meetings were remarkable for their spiritual earnestness. Miss Baucus, who for some time had carried double responsibility as principal of the Hirosaki Jo Gakko and superintendent of Bible women, was cheered by the arrival early in the year of Irene E. Lee of the New England Branch. Notwithstanding evidences of religious interest on the District as a whole, there was a loss in membership during the year.¹¹³

NAGASAKI DISTRICT

By 1884 the religious climate in hostile Kyushu—as in other parts of Japan—had changed. For ten years the little Nagasaki Methodist band had been sowing seed on stony ground and there had been little harvest. Carroll S. Long described what had occurred in 1883:

Scores are being genuinely converted, testifying to the truth and power of the new religion. Persons who have been members of the Church for years are being born into the kingdom of grace and glory, and for the first time are realizing the joy of sins forgiven and adoption into the spiritual kingdom of Christ. . . . there is every indication that the glorious work will spread in every direction, and that hundreds will be brought to a knowledge of the true God. It is marvellous indeed. I never saw anything more striking at home.¹¹⁴

In other centers in Kyushu where little or no Christian work had been done the mood of the people had seemingly changed and missionaries were all but overwhelmed by the crowds who came to hear. Long's report as Presiding Elder told of his experiences at various places on the District:

while preaching to a large congregation . . . at Kumamoto, the largest city on the island, two or three evil designing men offered an insult, which was immediately resented by the congregation, who demanded from them silence and respect for the speaker. At the same place I organized a class of 15, among whom were some of the most influential men in the city. At Agune [Akune], a considerable town on the western coast of the island, the whole town thronged to the preaching place, which had been rented for us by one of the citizens without our knowledge, and hundreds, being unable to obtain entrance, brought straw mats and, spreading them in the street and sidewalks, sat upon them during the two hours of preaching, and listened with the closest attention. At Yawegawa [Yanagawa] two teachers in the government school brought 14 of their pupils to the hotel where we were stopping, and desired us to send them a minister of the Christian doctrine. In the large city of Fukuoka we formed a class of 8 persons, and had many more inquirers who will doubtless soon accept the truth.¹¹⁵

Long's report for 1884 was in much the same tone. Some of the Japanese preachers had suffered persecution but were undaunted. At Kumamoto the chapel was stoned four times but finally the police arrested a Buddhist priest as the leader of the mob and he was sentenced to jail. The pastor, Kenjiro Asuka, asked for leniency and loaned the priest a blanket for protection from the cold while in jail. Three fellow priests came to the chapel to thank Asuka for his kindness and when he told them that he was only practicing the religion which he preached, they expressed regret for what had been done. As a result, congregations at the chapel increased and Asuka organized a class of five priests who began to study the Bible "with great earnestness." Members of the church began to visit from house to house, exhorting and singing the Gospel to hundreds who had never heard it before. During the year Long traveled about three thousand miles, visiting nearly all the important towns and cities in Kyushu and preaching to large congregations. He baptized more than seventy persons and received as many into the Church. But his report also had a somber note: "A few have been expelled."

At the 1884 Conference Jennie Gheer, who for almost five years had been teaching in the girls' school, was appointed to women's work and gave herself to the evangelizing of women and children through the churches. Miss Russell was continued as principal of Kwassui Jo Gakko, Nagasaki, assisted by Emma J. Everding of the Baltimore Branch who arrived in 1883, and Gertrude Howe, temporarily transferred from China.

Long was reappointed to the District at the July, 1884, Conference and found much encouragement in the progress under way. In April, 1885, he left Japan on furlough. During the remainder of the Conference year W. C. Kitchin, principal of Cobleigh Seminary, was Acting Presiding Elder. His gloomy view of the religious situation was in strange contrast to that which Long had so recently presented. In Kumamoto he saw only a city "given over to idolatry among the masses, and infidelity among the educated civil and military officers." He conceded, however, that the church in Asuka's care was "growing continually." The Fukuoka church, organized by Long in 1884, was next to the Nagasaki church in members and adherents.¹¹⁶

In May, 1885, a girls' school was opened by Miss Gheer in Fukuoka. The addition to the church of forty-three converts in October, 1884, prompted an urgent call to the Nagasaki missionaries for a school. They replied that it would be necessary for them to wait for permission from the Society at home and could not expect to hear before April 1.

The first boat that landed at Fukuoka after April 1st found a great crowd waiting at the landing to welcome the new teacher. Miss Russell says: 'What could we do? We just talked and prayed over the matter, counted our resources, and then dividing our stores of school equipment and household stores, sent Miss Gheer on, feeling that we could stagger through the work some how until Conference.' . . . Miss Gheer was most kindly received, not only by the little band of believers there, but by outsiders. The daily paper reported her coming, and gave kindly accounts of the progress she was making from day to day. . . . She rented a house large enough to accommodate a school of seventy, which was pledged in advance, and has three living rooms, besides one for her Bible women.¹¹⁷

At the 1885 Conference (September) J. C. Davison, after an interval of almost four years, was reappointed Presiding Elder of the District. He noted that "considerable advance had been achieved" during that time, and that the District personnel, not including the women's work, consisted of nineteen men:

two Japanese elders, seven local preachers, and ten exhorters. Of these latter, five are theological students in Cobleigh Seminary Of the seven local preachers, six are in the regular work, one of whom is already a probationer in the Conference and two more are candidates for admission this year.¹¹⁸

The list also did not include Charles Bishop, appointed this year as principal of Cobleigh Seminary. At the September, 1886, Conference the missionary personnel was increased by the appointment of David S. Spencer as principal of the reopened English department of the seminary; Miss Mary J. Elliott from the Cincinnati Branch to Kwassui Jo Gakko; Mrs. Bishop and Mrs. Spencer to women's work; and Miss Lida B. Smith of the New York Branch to the Fukuoka girls' school. At the beginning of the Conference year the Kurume Circuit was organized, comprising the city of Kurume and Yanagawa where some evangelistic work had been done in earlier years. Another promising beginning was made at Yatsushiro and surrounding villages where in April (1886) nine persons were baptized and received into the Church.

Davison gave aggressive leadership to the work of the District. During the Conference year 1886-87 he traveled over three thousand miles and was absent from his home 113 days. He visited every one of the nine provinces of Kyushu and also Okinawa in the Ryukyu Islands. The next year he made "two full rounds of the entire circle of appointments" and two additional trips. For the most part the churches were prospering, and the members growing in Christian knowledge, but he felt that the religious experience of many was lacking in depth and in fervency. A cause for regret was the unattractive character of the rented houses used as chapels—dark, gloomy, narrow, and often unclean and ill-smelling—not at all such as to invite attendance or a spirit of worship.

Cobleigh Seminary reported in 1888 a prosperous year, with 205 students enrolled. The faculty was strengthened by the addition of H. B. Johnson* as principal of the theological department.

In 1888 a new church was built in Fukuoka with a seating capacity of 250 and the W.F.M.S. erected a school building which was “an ornament to the city.” In Nagasaki municipal improvements necessitated the moving and rebuilding of the church. The government paid 1,000 yen toward the cost. A parsonage was added to the property. In 1890 sixty-two adults and ten children were baptized on the District but no net increase in membership was registered. This was explained by the fact that the pastor who had served the Akune Circuit the previous year, and the Sendai Circuit (Kagoshima Prefecture) earlier, withdrew and joined the Roman Catholic Church, taking with him a considerable number of his members. Davison lamented the lack of thoroughly trained men in the Church’s ministry, seven of the eight pastors on the District not having had theological training, and to this he attributed their vulnerability to Catholic propaganda.

The teaching staffs of the W.F.M.S. schools at Fukuoka and Nagasaki were reinforced in 1888-90 by several new recruits.† These additions made it possible for Elizabeth Russell to take a much needed furlough after more than nine years of continuous service, and for Emma J. Everding, who had been overcome by serious illness, to return home for recuperation.¹¹⁹

Somewhat conflicting judgments prevailed concerning religious conditions in Kyushu in 1891. Charles Bishop, reporting to the Conference in the absence of Davison, was optimistic:

The Nagasaki church can . . . report a year of prosperity, and with respect to the residents in the city it has been unprecedented.

For thirty years the city people presented a well-nigh impregnable barrier to the advance of Christianity. But the present pastor has succeeded in bringing several of the residents of the city to Christ, and it is found desirable to divide the church and form a new one for them.¹²⁰

The Conference committee on education in its report on Cobleigh said:

* Herbert B. Johnson (1858-1925) was received on trial in the Wyoming Conference in 1883. He was pastor at Luzerne, Pa. (1883-86), and Plains, Pa. (1886-87). At the August, 1888, Japan Conference his transfer was recorded and he was appointed to Cobleigh Seminary (1888-94). He was dean of Anglo-Japanese College and principal of its preparatory department, 1894-96. He returned from furlough in 1897 and held various positions in the Japan Conference until 1904 when he became Superintendent of the Pacific Japanese Mission and a member of the California Conference in 1906. He received the B.D. degree from Drew Theological Seminary in 1894; S.T.D., University of the Pacific, 1907. He was the author of Introduction to the New Testament, and Discrimination Against the Japanese in California, as well as a contributor to various religious periodicals.—Official Biographical Files, Division of World Missions; Alumni Record of Drew Theological Seminary . . . 1867-1925, William Pearson Tolley, Ed., p. 152.

† The recruits during 1888-90 were: Miss Belle J. Allen, sent by the Cincinnati Branch, who arrived at Fukuoka on Sept. 28, 1888; also, in September of the same year Miss Anna Van Zandt Bing of the Cincinnati Branch arrived to take charge of the musical department of Kwassui Jo Gakko; Miss Louisa Imhof from the Topeka Branch came in March, 1889, to direct the industrial department of the school. In 1890 Miss Martha E. Taylor of the Northwestern Branch reached Japan and was sent to Fukuoka.

The past year has been the most difficult in some respects of any year the school has seen. The opposition to Christianity in the patronizing territory has been greater, and the financial difficulties more trying than any we have previously met. The Preparatory school was discontinued for a time There has been an enrollment of 105 this year as against 152 last year¹²¹

The difficulties and uncertainties attached to the founding and development of a Christian school where a few Japanese guaranteed financial support and religious freedom of action for missionary teachers were again exemplified at Kagoshima, as they previously had been at Yonezawa. In the winter of 1891 two W.F.M.S. missionaries arrived in the city prepared to open a girls' school. Their earnest efforts were frustrated by impossible demands and lack of the financial support which had been promised * and somewhat later the school was closed. In January, 1892, two women missionaries returned and with the assistance of two Japanese workers conducted four Sunday schools, women's meetings, and a boys' Bible class, and did some visiting in three towns other than Kagoshima.¹²²

I. H. Correll, who in 1891 had been appointed Presiding Elder of the Nagasaki District, reported at the 1892 Conference an upsurge of religious interest. "Its greatest force was felt in Nagasaki, Fukuoka, Kumamoto, Yanagawa, and Kagoshima," although several other places also felt its influence. The W.F.M.S. also noted a change in attitude among property owners in Nagasaki. While four years earlier it was next to impossible to rent a house from a Japanese landlord for any Christian purpose, in 1892 there were eleven Sunday schools and nine industrial classes in different parts of the city held in rented quarters. The city church (Kojiyamachi), organized in the preceding year, had developed a remarkable amount of strength and activity. The Deshima (Nagasaki) church, whose membership was composed almost entirely of students and teachers of the two Methodist schools, also had enjoyed a spiritually fruitful year.

While a strong Christian influence prevailed in Cobleigh Seminary at the close of the 1891-92 school year "almost every student . . . [leaving] the institution a professing Christian," a disappointing decrease of enrollment occurred. Correll attributed this to three principal causes: the cutting off of financial aid to students; the prevailing unrest; and the growth of a nationalistic spirit, which militated against all schools under missionary (i.e., foreign) control. It had become necessary, in his opinion, if the school was to be maintained at its former level, for the head of the institution to be a Japanese. Accordingly, at the 1895 Conference the school was put under a board of managers consisting of four Japanese, four missionaries, and the president, ex officio, all required to be members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

* R. Ella Forbes sailed for Japan in the fall of 1889 under the auspices of the Northwestern Branch. After a period of language study she arrived in Kagoshima on Jan. 22, 1891. A few weeks later Miss Grace Tucker (New York Branch), recently arrived in Japan, joined Miss Forbes. Disappointed in their attempt to open a school, they resigned. In 1892 Miss Forbes returned to America broken in health. In July, 1891, Miss Tucker was appointed to the Fukuoka Girls' School, in association with Miss Seeds.

A second visit to the Ryukyu Islands was made early in 1892, this time by I. H. Correll, who was convinced that missionary work should be begun there. At the July, 1892, Conference, Nagano Chiujo was appointed as the first Methodist missionary. While he found many obstacles in the way he had greater success than had been anticipated and was able at the end of the year to report several full members and fourteen probationers. The Circuit was renamed Okinawa at the 1893 Conference. Chiujo appealed for help, especially for work among the women. Mrs. Inoue, a Bible woman, was sent, accompanied by Mrs. Van Petten who went to aid in getting the women's work started.

The Deshima (Nagasaki) Epworth League, the first in Japan,* organized in 1891, reported in 1893 eighty members. The young women of the League conducted eleven mission Sunday schools, while the young men supplied two—part of the time three—preaching places.¹²³

A much needed church building at Kumamoto was dedicated in December, 1893, and a chapel on one of the main streets of Nagasaki was completed in May, 1894. The Presiding Elder was unable to report any numerical growth during the Conference year (1893-94) and his report sounded a note of discouragement. He appealed to the Missionary Society for reinforcement, saying that it would be impossible for him to continue very long "carrying the burden of the work alone." He also expressed disappointment in not having received more help from the Bishop† "in arranging for . . . [the] work in Nagasaki" which, he said, had been "so much crippled."¹²⁴

Accounts of the W.F.M.S. work, while less doleful than Correll's, had in them few notes of cheer—personnel depleted, aggressive work rendered impossible, "that already organized, crippled"; "influence circumscribed." The girls' school (Kwassui Jo Gakko) had prospered—154 enrolled, of whom 123 were boarding pupils—yet there were "greater difficulties to contend against than in any former year." Five of the missionaries had gone home and only three replacements had come. However, before the close of the year Miss Lola M. Kidwell, from the Cincinnati Branch, arrived. The 1895 enrollment was 187, again an increase. The dedication of a chapel in June provided a much appreciated addition to school facilities. An American woman physician, Dr. Mary A. Suganuma, arrived in 1894 and opened a dispensary (in 1895, the Kwassui Dispensary and Hospital). While she was not a member of the mission, she worked in close association with it and rendered a great service. During her first year she treated 853 patients.

* The second Epworth League chapter was organized in Nagoya in 1892. Within five years there were five Epworth League chapters in Japan.

† Bishop W. X. Ninde held the 1894 Japan Conference. In a letter to Secretary A. B. Leonard, under date of Oct. 1, 1884, Correll said: The Bishop "was in Kobe some 10 or 12 days I understand. Of course we have no work there and I do not see why he should stop there so long . . . He was in Japan about 3½ months and of that he spent about 3½ hours in Nagasaki. Do you not think I have some reason for complaint?"—Correspondence Files, Division of World Missions.

The return of Epperson R. Fulkerson from furlough in November, 1894, and his assignment to Cobleigh Seminary, somewhat relieved the situation in the general work but was not, in Correll's view, sufficient:

We are greatly in need of a large increase in our working force. The field is still an undeveloped Mission field, and cannot be developed with the force now at work. The attention the people generally are giving to the preaching of the Gospel, is decidedly on the increase and the opposition at different points is waning. In consequence of this, the opportunities for aggressive work have greatly increased and our desire is to take advantage of them¹²⁶

There were no developments of special significance in connection with any of the churches during the year. Evangelistic work for women superintended by Mrs. Van Petten was carried on chiefly by twelve Bible women in eight cities of Kyushu and in the Ryukyu Islands. At a Bible institute, held in January, 1895, all but one of the women were present. Baptisms during the year numbered sixty-nine, including ten children. Total number of church members on the District was 485. Of these 119 were probationers.

NAGOYA DISTRICT

At the August, 1887, Conference the Nagoya District was organized with ten Circuits.* The area, which was large, mountainous, and difficult to travel, had previously formed a part of the Yokohama District. W. C. Davidson was appointed Presiding Elder but unexpectedly departed for the United States, leaving the District unprovided for. To fill the vacant post Bishop Warren appointed C. S. Long, who arrived in Japan from furlough December 1. Because of scarlet fever in his family he was prevented until January 15 from entering upon his work. During the remaining months of the Conference year he visited all of the charges twice, some of them three times, and two four times, traveling more than two thousand miles.¹²⁶

At Nagoya, where Toranosuke Yamada had been the energetic and faithful pastor for two years, the church was in favor with many of the officials and other prominent men of the city. Six years earlier the prejudice against foreigners and Christianity was so strong that "even extensive advertisement in the papers and great personal effort" failed to assemble a respectable audience for Joseph Cook of Boston, although in Tokyo and Yokohama he had been heard by immense audiences. Now the situation, as pictured by Long, was very different.

When [I was] in the city a few days ago the mayor, who has held his office twelve years, allowed me the use of the city council chamber for holding religious services. He also issued, at his own expense, invitation cards, bearing the names and subjects of the speakers, and stamped with his official seal, and sent them to all the government officials, teachers, and men of note and influence throughout the city. As a result the large hall was crowded with the very best men and women of the place. . . .

* The ten Circuits of the Nagoya District in 1887 were: Azumi; Elimura and Shinshiro; Iida; Matsumoto; Matsushiro and Nagano; Nishio; Nagoya and Gifu; Tahara; Takato and Sakashita; and Toyohashi. Azumi sometimes appears in Minutes as Adzusa, Azusa and Adzumi. Prevailing spelling later is Azume.

In order to further show his friendship to us and, let us hope, his appreciation of the doctrines we represent, this enthusiastic official gave our party . . . a reception and a magnificent dinner at one of the chief hotels, as did also the faculties of the two leading government schools, two or three days later.¹²⁷

Long considered Nagoya, with its 360,000 population, "surrounded by an innumerable number of thriving towns and villages," the most important center for Christian work in the District. In October, 1888, Mary A. Danforth, assisted by Long, opened a girls' school (Seiryu Jo Gakko)* in the city. The school began with thirty-four pupils and closed its first year, despite woefully inadequate facilities, with eighty-six. Toyohashi, an important military post—the largest town occupied by the mission between Nagoya and Yokohama—was the head of a Circuit of three points. The Society had thirty-two members. As in other Districts, and in so many of the mission fields of the Church, progress was hindered by an inadequate supply of preachers. Three or four of the charges were without pastors for all or a major part of the year. The Iida Circuit had been without a pastor for two years yet had increased its membership. The Matsumoto church was organized into a "Working Society," each member pledged to give at least one day's labor each week to the making of useful articles, the proceeds to be added to the building fund.

At the 1889 Conference Long gave a good account of the churches.

All the interests and institutions of the Church have been carefully guarded and maintained. Class meetings, prayer meetings and Sunday schools have been well kept up, and our Love Feasts have been seasons of great spiritual profit and enjoyment. 'Watch Night' services were held in most of the Churches. The Quarterly Conferences have been well attended, and the progress indicated by carefully prepared reports show that faithful and effectual work is being done by all the officials of the Church

The number of families observing family worship has greatly increased Local Preachers and Exhorters have been more active and their labors more acceptable and successful than in any previous year. . . . Several societies are laboring with commendable zeal to provide suitable houses of worship.¹²⁸

Another beginning was made at Nagano and new work started at Nakayama and Tajimi.

On October 13, 1889, a new church was dedicated at Nagoya costing $2,400., of which the members contributed $1,200. It was built on a central corner lot, one of the choicest locations in the city. Five hundred persons were present at the dedication.

During 1890 severe opposition developed at almost every point on the

* Mary E. Wilson, "who was making a tour of the world with her father . . . seeing the great need, consented to remain [with Miss Danforth] and teach for the year." At the end of the year she decided to remain with the school indefinitely and was accepted by the New York Branch as a regular missionary.—Twentieth Ann. Rep., W.F.M.S. (1889), p. 47.

District. At Nagoya antagonism was "especially severe and persistent, amounting at times to open persecution and even to personal violence." The church was stoned so frequently that it was impossible to keep glass in the windows. To avoid mob violence "quiet services" were conducted at the homes of church members instead of public halls. A few Christians yielded to the pressure and ceased to attend worship services. At the close of the Conference year Long* left for America on furlough. Three months later word was received of his death.¹²⁹

At the July, 1890, Conference only six Circuits were listed. W. S. Worden was appointed Presiding Elder. The persecution of the Nagoya church continued, for three months "severe and violent," but this seemed to intensify rather than to decrease the religious interest. Five weeks of special meetings saw men "convicted of sin, Christians . . . awakened and led to a higher view of Christian life, and some . . . brought into the church." The revival spirit spread to other places, especially to Gifu, Nishio, and Toyohashi. About sixty received baptism. Atsuta, a city of 20,000, a stronghold of Buddhism, three miles from Nagoya, was entered and a dozen men became interested in the Christian religion. Preaching places were established at Teppo cho in Nagoya, and at three nearby towns: Biwajima, Komaki, and Ushiyama, and also at Kitagata, near Gifu. Worden gave credit to Kanichi Miyama for much of the success of the year. Miss Danforth also gave high praise to the Japanese teachers of the girls' school for their "splendid work." In the autumn of 1890 a Ladies' Benevolent Society was organized in Nagoya whose active philanthropic work helped considerably toward breaking down prejudice and opposition. The society opened a dispensary and hospital in which two physicians contributed their services. A Methodist Bible woman lived in the dispensary.¹³⁰

On October 28, 1891, an earthquake in the Nagoya region wrought terrific devastation. Lesser shocks continued for days. Ten thousand people were killed, 15,000 injured, and a hundred thousand houses destroyed. The missionaries resident in the city organized the Nagoya Earthquake Relief Association, with W. S. Worden as president. Relief was administered in temporary hospitals, and in huts and tents erected for shelter. For weeks food, clothing, blankets, bandages and medicines were distributed to suffering people. Self-help associations were organized and several hundred looms supplied to them. The relief work of the missionaries and non-Christian

* Carroll Summerfield Long (1850-90) was born near Athens, Tenn., one of a family of twelve children. He graduated from the East Tennessee Wesleyan University in 1875 and in 1886 received the Ph.D. degree. He was received into the Holston Conference on trial in 1875 (Gen'l Minutes, 1875, p. 129) and was appointed to Asheville, N. C. He was instrumental in founding Chandler College and Powell's Valley Seminary. On his arrival in Japan in 1880 he was appointed to educational work in Nagasaki where "by means of a special fund, personally collected, supplemented by a grant from the Missionary Society, he founded Cobleigh Seminary." In April, 1885, because of impaired health he returned to the United States. After serving for two years as Presiding Elder in the North Carolina Conference he returned to Japan in the fall of 1887. Again in America, in 1890 he accepted the position of associate editor of the Methodist Advocate (Chattanooga), but within a few weeks became suddenly ill and died on Sept. 4. He was a man of indomitable ill, of burning zeal, and of intense faith.—Obituary, Minutes, Japan Conference, 1891, pp. 63 f.

foreigners did much to break down the previously existing walls of prejudice and hatred. In towns where before the earthquake preaching services could not be held, audiences numbering hundreds listened gladly to Gospel messages.

The new church at Nagoya sustained only slight damage and teachers and pupils of the Seiryu Jo Gakko came through the disaster unscathed. On July 5, 1892, the first commencement of the school was held. Two pupils who had completed the four years' course received diplomas.¹³¹

At Atsuta and at Gifu new churches were built during the year to replace chapels destroyed by the earthquake and Societies were organized at Atsuta and Komaki. Twenty-one persons were received into full membership at Nagoya.

Substantial growth was registered in churches of the District during the Conference year 1892-93. A few seemed to lose ground. Effort was abandoned at Kitagata and Kozuchi was substituted as a preaching place. At Shinshiro where in 1891 the work gave promise of success the pastor in 1893 "was tried . . . found guilty of negligence of duty, and his license was taken away." At the July, 1893, Conference David S. Spencer was appointed Presiding Elder. He found "Buddhist opposition to Christian work still determined." He felt that a mistake had been made by scattering efforts in too many little towns; that work should be concentrated more in natural centers and from them extended gradually to outlying regions. On the Gifu Circuit the chief work was in the city of Gifu, a sizable center of 35,000. No Society had been organized, although there were twelve full members and seven probationers, with a church building. A married pastor was needed, and a Bible woman. Preaching was maintained at Kozuchi, twelve miles away, and at Hachiman, thirty-two miles distant. A church was dedicated at Komaki on October 8, 1893, and on the evening of the same day "Buddhist friends made . . . a formal call, smashed the lamps, shoji, and doors, and made their call generally interesting."

This year (1893) six young women were graduated from Seiryu Jo Gakko* of whom three were "earnest, working Christians." Seventy-five pupils were enrolled, many of whom became members of the King's Daughters' Society, active in benevolent and relief work. Spencer highly commended the work of the Bible women in several of the churches, especially the help which they gave to the Sunday schools.¹³²

As was the case with other Districts Nagoya was greatly affected by the turbulence and distraction of the Sino-Japanese war. The city was the center of a Military Division and the war spirit dominated the interests and thoughts of the whole population. As a consequence, all Christian work was much hindered during 1894-95. Several of the most active men of the Nagoya First Church were drafted for military service and the church felt the loss of their help. In Nishio a series of special evangelistic services in which a stereopticon was used drew large numbers of people, including prominent men of the city. The pastor and members went out to nearby cities to hold meetings, including Nakashima, Yokosuka, Terazu, Ishiki, and Ohama, and awakened considerable interest. The once strong Society at Ebimura had dwindled to about four families but by personal work Spencer and the pastor brought about some improvement. At Shinshiro much interest was shown in the Sunday school. At Toyohashi the membership was increased and congregations and Sunday school outgrew the rented quarters.¹³³

* At the July, 1893, Conference Mary E. Wilson was appointed principal of Seiryu Jo Gakko, Miss Danforth having returned to America on leave because of failing health. In October Miss Carrie A. Heaton arrived, sent by the Northwestern Branch. Harriet S. Alling, after eight years' teaching in the Aoyama schools, transferred from the General Society to the W.F.M.S. She returned to Japan in 1894 under the Northwestern Branch and at the July, 1894, Conference was appointed principal of Seiryu Jo Gakko.—L. M. Hodgkins, op. cit., pp. 51, 82, 85, 90.

Pressure was brought to bear for the girls' school in Nagoya to conform more closely to the curriculum of the government schools, but in Miss Alling's judgment to do this would lower the academic standard. The withdrawal of three teachers—all for valid reasons—left the school without a Christian teacher other than the two missionaries. While there was no opposition there was an evident lack of interest in the Bible studies. While, near the close of the year, three students were baptized, the principal did not feel too happy over conditions and the results of the year's work. In June five Bible women were employed on the District, engaged in numerous types of Christian activity, and it was generally felt that much good was accomplished.¹³⁴

At the July, 1895, Conference appointments were made to nine Circuits and Stations. Members numbered 311—full members, 230; probationers, 81—as compared with 544—full members, 376; probationers, 168—reported in 1888.

SENDAI DISTRICT

The Sendai District was established at the July, 1890, Conference by taking Morioka from the Aomori District; and Sendai, Shirakawa, Yamagata and Tendo, and Yonezawa Circuits from the Tokyo District. The territory comprised "four prefectures, five provinces, five cities, several small towns, and a population of almost 3,000,000." Sogo Matsumoto was appointed Presiding Elder. Other than two W.F.M.S. women there were no missionaries on the District. The Japanese preachers included one elder, four probationary members of Conference, and one Local Preacher. At Morioka eight persons were baptized during the year and at Sendai the same number. The Sendai church completed the liquidation of a troublesome debt and achieved entire self-support. The Shirakawa church, which for several years had been under the handicap of a different preacher each year, regained "its former strength" through the earnest effort of J. Yajima, a Local Preacher. In all, twenty-eight persons on the District were baptized during the year.¹³⁵

At Yamagata in 1892 K. Iida, the pastor, by faithful and patient work

succeeded in interesting as seekers a number of high police officers, physicians, and schoolteachers. At Tendo and at Handa on the Yamagata Circuit there were a few members in Classes, and at Shigashine and Tateoka—also in the vicinity of Yamagata—a few believers remained, the remnant of church organizations of earlier years. To restore these places to their former strength, Matsumoto insisted, at least one additional preacher was required. Later in the year (1892) a pastor was assigned to Tendo, Sanshiro Kokita, who “infused life into the Church.” In 1893 the Sendai church had the misfortune of having a pastor who did not have the interest of the church on his heart but the situation was saved by Miss Phelps who at the July, 1892, Conference was appointed to the District for evangelistic work and made her home at Sendai. She opened a Saturday school for children, was made responsible for the Sunday school, taught two Bible classes, and opened a school for poor children who had no other school privileges. Through her efforts attendance at the Sunday services was increased. Matsumoto considered himself incapable of adequately characterizing her service. It was, he said, “love [exemplified] in practical deeds.” The church at Morioka, which this year reported fifty full members, included in its membership many of the businessmen of the city.¹³⁶

To the great satisfaction of the Sendai Methodists H. W. and Mrs. Schwartz returned from America in 1894 and, as always, engaged earnestly in every branch of the Church’s work. In the company of K. Kimura Dr. Schwartz visited Yonezawa, Yamagata, Tendo, and Sakai, giving helpful illustrated lectures to large audiences.

Matsumoto’s fourth report as Presiding Elder at the July, 1895, Conference was tinged deeply with disappointment:

I closed my last year’s report full of expectation for this year; but the year has passed and I am again here to report little improvement in our work. Since the [Japan-China] war broke out, people have talked about and listened to no other subject

The Sendai church under the leadership of Tokumatsu Ikeda, appointed pastor at the 1893 Conference, had grown in every way. Ikeda was respected by the people of the city and there were “many seekers of the Gospel among the young men.” However, there were only three baptisms during the year. At Yamagata “the conversion of certain influential men . . . helped sustain the church.” Miss Phelps this year (1894-95) superintended the work of five Bible women. Church membership of the District as reported at the 1895 Conference was 355; full members, 313; probationers, 42. Church buildings numbered five. Twelve Sunday schools enrolled 542 pupils.¹³⁷

FUKUOKA DISTRICT

The Fukuoka District, with Saehachi Kurimura as Presiding Elder, was formed at the July, 1893, Conference by the division of the Nagasaki District. When organized it had six charges.* In area it was the smallest District in the Conference yet it embraced two large prefectures, Fukuoka and Saga, with their capital cities of considerable size—Yanagawa and Kurume. In sharp contrast to the long and tiresome trips other Presiding Elders were required to make in reaching their appointments the Presiding Elder of the Fukuoka District could visit almost any one of the churches by leaving home in the morning and returning in the evening. Yet there were in the District twenty towns of more than one thousand houses and a large number of villages of three to five hundred houses.

The largest Society in the District was Fukuoka, with about eighty members. Concerning the church Kurimura said at the 1894 Conference:

Fukuoka church seems to be stationary, neither advancing nor retreating. Today is just the same as yesterday. Of course there is some increase of members, but when we make up the balance of accessions and withdrawals there is found to be no change. Nevertheless when we think of the internal condition of this church, we must thank God . . . for the church is becoming stronger and more substantial.

Omuta, connected with Miike, was new and it had been difficult to secure a preaching place. Subscriptions to the amount of one hundred yen had been received toward building a chapel. No preacher was available for Kurume though it was an important city. The Fukuoka pastor preached there once a month. Miss Leonora Seeds, a graduate of Ohio Wesleyan University, was appointed at the July, 1891, Conference as principal of the Fukuoka Girls' School (Fukuoka Jo Gakko). At the same time Miss Grace Tucker, who for a time assisted Miss Forbes in Kagoshima, also was appointed to the Fukuoka school, and later as superintendent of Bible women's work. On June 28, 1894, two girls were graduated, the first to finish the complete course. The school this year enrolled seventy-four pupils. The older pupils assisted in the five Sunday schools of the city. Five Bible women were engaged in evangelistic work in the District.¹³⁸

At the 1894 Conference Kurume was supplied with a preacher by the appointment of Makoto Shirozu. When he was appointed "there were only three or four Christians." At its close six full members and two probationers were reported. The District as a whole had 238 members, of whom forty-four were probationers.

SHINSHU DISTRICT

In 1893 the Shinshu region, first visited—it will be recalled—by Correll in 1877, was set off as a separate District with six appointments,† all formerly included in the Yokohama District. The region was the greatest silk-producing section of Japan, with a population of approximately 1,225,000. G. F. Draper was appointed Presiding Elder but illness in his family made it necessary for him to leave the field in the middle of the year. J. G. Cleveland was then appointed in his stead. There was no substantial advance made on the District during the year.

* The six charges of the Fukuoka District in 1893 were: Fukuoka, Kokura and Ashiya; Kurume; Miike; Saga; and Yanagawa.

† The six charges of the Shinshu District in 1893-94 were: Azume; Iida; Kami-Ina; Matsumoto; Matsushiro; and Takato.

In the towns of Inariyama and Omi on the Matsushiro Circuit preaching services were held for the first time. Also at Kiso, a mountain-locked town on the Kami-Ina Circuit, the first Christian service was held. No other denomination had work in any of these places. In Iida, a large town, where the Methodist Society was likewise the only church, Draper felt that it "had not measured up to its responsibilities." In 1894 the Shinshu District was discontinued and all of its charges again included in the Yokohama District. Shinshu reported at the 1894 Conference 147 full members and sixty-two probationers. No church on the District, with one exception (Matsushiro), reported more than twenty-nine full members.¹³⁹

TWENTY-TWO YEARS OF THE JAPAN MISSION

In 1895 the Japan Conference had in its nine Districts eighty pastoral charges with 3,371 full members and 668 probationers. The Conference had sixty-nine ministerial members of whom eighteen were American missionaries and fifty-one were Japanese. Of the missionaries two were appointed to Gospel Societies; six to educational work; one to the Publishing House; and two were on furlough. Of W.F.M.S. missionaries there were this year twenty-three on the field, of whom nineteen were engaged in schoolwork of one kind or another and four in the women's evangelistic program. There were also nine missionaries' wives who held appointments as evangelistic workers. The Conference had forty-four Local Preachers; 123 Sunday schools with 6,144 pupils; forty-two church buildings; and fourteen parsonages. At the 1894 Conference the Aoyama Gakuin, Tokyo, reported an enrollment of 135 students, of whom twenty-two were in the Biblical Institute and 113 in the college and preparatory department. Chinzei Gakkwan (Cobleigh), Nagasaki, enrolled seventy-four students. There were eleven boarding schools in 1895 under W.F.M.S. auspices with 725 pupils, and eighteen day schools with 1,819 pupils. The churches during the Conference year 1894-95 paid 159.95 yen toward general missions and 456.66 toward home missions (support of the Conference missionary in Okinawa), besides contributions to several other church benevolences. They contributed 2,486 yen toward support of their pastors. The net gain in full members during the year was ninety-three but there was a decrease of sixty probationers.¹⁴⁰

Although Japan was open to the West the forces resistant to religion were strong and deeply rooted in Japanese life and thought. The deputations sent to study the ways of Western nations were limited to political and social institutions. Religion was not included within the scope of their inquiry.

In Japan the ancient ways were particularly tenacious. This seems a paradox, for was not the nation inviting guidance into new ways from the West? In one sense, yes; but more profoundly, no. The search for new light and leading from the West was genuine but to few if any Japanese did it mean giving up any of the deeply cherished values of the past. Rather, "the things men . . . live by" were to be enhanced, certainly not discarded. They might be reinterpreted in terms of whatever new wisdom or power could be gained from world contacts but the ancient ways, so tenaciously held, would be as sacredly adhered to as in the past. In essence these "ancient ways," expressed in simplest terms, were national loyalty and filial devotion. Of these the former, which centered in the veneration of the emperor, or "emperor cult," was probably the stronger. According to it the emperor was descended from the gods and was himself divine. The imperial line, in the words used in the new constitution promulgated in 1890, constituted "a lineal succession unbroken for ages eternal." It invested the emperor with the dignity and sanction of divinity and made disloyalty a sacrilege. Openly to deny these beliefs was considered treasonous. The cult bound every citizen into the national entity and made him the blood brother or son of the emperor. This thoroughly integrated thought system found its spiritual expression in Shinto, "the way of the gods," which through the village shrine and the household "god-shelf" penetrated almost every essential interest and activity of the individual, the family, the neighborhood, and the nation. To understand how Shinto was interwoven into the total fabric of Japanese civilization and life is to comprehend how difficult it was for Christian missions to make converts in Japan, and why so many of those who yielded to the persuasion of the missionaries and were baptized and enrolled as church members later fell away.

Of the three principal religions of Japan—Shinto, Buddhism, and Confucianism—Shinto was by far the most formidable. During the period of which we have written the belief was cultivated among all classes of Japanese that a close connection existed between Shinto as the national cult and the maintenance of the imperial dignity of the emperor and of the Japanese government.

Buddhism as it was developed in India was profoundly modified after it entered Japan. Indeed, it is not too much to say that after a few centuries much that was believed and stressed was the exact opposite of the early Buddhism of India. Nirvana, the dogma of extinction, for example, had become an unspeakably beautiful and charming paradise which offered ample compensation for the ills and pain of earthly existence. It transformed the Shinto gods into incarnations of the Buddha. Like Shinto it proliferated into many sects founded by the Japanese. In other ways, while continuing to be thought of as a missionary religion from the outside world, it had become thoroughly domesticated to Japan's ancient ways. Some of its later temples were scarcely distinguishable from Shinto shrines. There was nothing incompatible between the two religions so that the majority of Japanese practiced the twofold religious life.

The introduction of the new religious teachings tended to stir conservative adherents of the old religions to their depths. Their leaders well knew that the new imperiled the old and were alerted into a hostility which found various forms of expression.

Despite this resistance the missionaries did not have to wait such an interminable time as in some other fields to see first fruits of their evangelistic labors. In sharp contrast with China where ten years passed before the first convert was baptized, in Japan within the second year, as we have seen, Maclay was able to report that a number of persons had united with the Church on probation, within four years more than a hundred converts had been received into membership, nine young men had been licensed as Local Preachers, and Classes had been formed at all Stations.

Nevertheless, the membership of the churches increased slowly and at the end of a little more than two decades many of the Societies had fewer than a score of full members. Undoubtedly a larger missionary force would have contributed to more rapid growth. As in China and India the number of missionaries during the entire period was incommensurate to the immensity of the task. Bishop Wiley, in writing of his visit to Japan in 1878, deplored the fact that so few missionaries had been sent to the field.

In my deliberate opinion there has never been any thing like . . . [the situation in Japan] in the history of missions; and yet, in the midst of all these great birth-throes of a nation of thirty-five millions, coming forth into a new and better life, all that the great Methodist Church of the United States has been doing for five years, is to sustain one family in each of four great centers, and two families in another.¹⁴¹

The evangelistic approach of the missionaries was in the nature of a frontal attack. A central emphasis on individual decision without reference to national customs or social relationships was the accepted pattern. In all evangelistic efforts the criterion of success was conversion, interpreted as a new start with insistence upon the abandonment of former customs and beliefs, of cherished loyalties, and membership in a church of the American pattern. The absolute break was dramatized by requiring public baptism for admission to the Church. In all of this the missionaries were simply following the precedent set by revivalism as they had experienced and practiced it in America. The result was inevitable. There was nothing which even remotely resembled an incipient mass movement. Year by year every missionary hoped that there might be a break, with large numbers entering the Church, and every year the hope was disappointed. Under the conditions which existed in Japan there was no reason to expect it. In Japan as in China and India the missionaries of this period in general failed to realize that missionary strategy required a study of conditions entirely different from those which prevailed in the country from which they came. The inquiring minds of the Japanese, the eagerness with which the more able of the preachers were listened to, and the ready acceptance of many of the basic teachings of the Gospel suggest that had the churches emphasized less a particular ecclesiastical organization and polity many more might have been enlisted as Christian disciples. As it was, the only alternative offered to multitudes who could not bring themselves to break absolutely with the social and political order was secret discipleship.

Special meetings were often held at the principal centers in which missionaries and Japanese pastors preached. Many of these meetings were attended by eager audiences which filled the halls and chapels to capacity but as a rule very few registered as converts and united with the churches. An outstanding exception to this occurred in 1877, when after a ten-day meeting held by Correll some three hundred people handed in their names as inquirers. Eleven years later in the same town six hundred people gathered into a public theater to hear a religious address by C. S. Long. Yet after a Methodist Society had been in existence for seventeen years (1895) it registered only thirty-three members. Pastors in many places drew sizable audiences to their week-by-week preaching to listen to Gospel messages yet only a few became candidates for baptism and church membership.

In a significant number of cases men and women were moved by the personal influence of missionaries, Japanese pastors, and lay members to enter upon a serious study of the Scriptures, to engage in long deliberation, and to enlist for a protracted period of training, and finally took the decisive step and united with the Church, thereby to varying extents disassociating themselves from the traditional relationships with family, community, and national life. A few rooted families of standing in local communities, and a few outstanding men in the higher levels of political life, managed to find the synthesis of the new with the old and became faithful, widely influential members of the Church.

Evidence from the records makes it clear that methods and procedures of thorough training for church membership were not used to the extent which prevailed, for example, in North India. Some of the missionary leaders recognized and deplored the lack of adequate preliminary training of inquirers. G. F. Draper in commenting on retrogression in membership in two or three places on the Yokohama District in 1891 said that it was principally because of "undue haste in administering baptism." Two years later he recurred to the same theme, saying there was general recognition of need for "greater carefulness in the admission of members," and for those admitted to "understand better than in former days the duties and responsibilities that church membership involves." One of the strongest statements was made by Cleveland in 1895:

We, along with other churches, are suffering from the evil effects of baptising and bringing into the church scores of people who knew not into what they were being baptised, and consequently our statistics have shown a fictitious, rather than a real growth. In view of this I have felt the necessity of a careful revision of the church records everywhere. This has been done by the pastors after due consultation with the leaders and stewards, and while it has resulted in a marked decrease in the total membership, I feel that the reports can be relied on as being more accurate.¹⁴²

On some of the principal charges the six years 1889-95 registered a net loss in membership. Not less than eight churches, including Aomori, Hirosaki, Fukuoka, Matsumoto, Nagoya, Tsukiji and Kanda (Tokyo), and Yokohama, had fewer members—counting full members and probationers—in 1895 than in 1889. Kumamoto, Sendai, Hakodate, and Aoyama (Tokyo) had made marked gains. However, in a few cases new Societies formed during the six years had drawn some members away from the older churches. Also, the total number of charges had considerably increased during the period.

While these losses reflected insufficient preparation for church membership, another factor undoubtedly entered in. It is to be noted that the recession occurred chiefly during the years of reaction from the earlier period of admiration and adulation of the West. Many people had embraced church membership for the added social prestige that it gave them among a certain proportion of the population. For them profession of religion was a badge of their westernization, rather than profound Christian conviction. When the tide turned they fell away. In evidence of this we find such statements in Presiding Elders' reports as that of Correll in 1892, "there have been 72 unworthy persons expelled or dropped from the Church Rolls during the year," and D. S. Spencer's statement in 1894 that a very small net gain on the Nagoya District was accounted for by "dropping worthless names" from membership rolls.

The missionaries' high evaluation of education as a means of evangelization is evidenced by the considerable proportion who were appointed year after year to the schools, although acute need was felt for more and more men to supply vacant churches and to respond to the many calls for establishment of work in new centers. The distribution of virtually the entire missionary personnel of both the Missionary Society and the W.F.M.S. coincided with the location of schools. Tokyo, Nagasaki, Sendai, Hirosaki—and for the women Hakodate and Fukuoka also—were chiefly teaching posts. Edwin O. Reischauer's statement in his The United States and Japan that "missionaries [to Japan] from the start concentrated on education and in cooperation with native believers built up many of the pioneer schools both for boys and girls" is true of the Methodist as well as Presbyterian, Congregational, and some other missions.¹⁴³ In fact, no other denomination exceeded the Methodists in the number or size of the schools which they sponsored.

The schools gave stability to the work and vastly widened the sphere of Christian influence beyond the borders of the Churches.

The contribution of the schools to evangelization was both direct and indirect. Year after year they reported the conversion of pupils, in some cases by the year of graduation a large majority or all of the members of a class having become Christians. It is probably not too much to say that the schools were the most effective means of recruiting and training for the Christian life and church membership. This is one principal reason why Japanese Christians have been very largely from the better educated of the population. In the second place the schools very soon became the recruiting ground for the ministry. Japanese pastors who within a surprisingly few years constituted the majority of the members of the Conference were mostly graduates of the schools.*

The Church was fortunate in its early missionary personnel. Maclay, who from the beginning of his career in China was an effective missionary, gave exceptional leadership. His experience in China had given him confidence, sureness of judgment, and tact in working with his fellow missionaries. The other four of the first contingent were strong men, with capabilities of leadership, cooperative and adaptable, and with the quality of endurance. There were also many capable men among those who came later. But, unfortunately, the selection was not always carefully made with a view to suitability for work with the Japanese. Where courtesy and sensitivity in personal contacts are required, as well as integrity of character, the qualifications are exacting. Some of the missionaries of the later years possessed this combination, but not all. Several evidenced a certain roughness or crudeness which made them unacceptable to the Japanese. Several were not well adjusted in their relations with their fellow missionaries, uncooperative and lacking in charity and brotherly kindness. Moral lapses ruined the career of three. One man† after leaving the field frankly confessed his unfitness for missionary service in Japan.

Lack of mastery of the Japanese language acted as a brake upon progress. Some of the missionaries acquired facility in Japanese conversation and a smaller number developed ability in preaching, but few if any studied the written language sufficiently to read with facility or to appreciate Japanese literature.‡ This would seem to indicate a disregard for a thorough under-

* As previously noted a goodly proportion of the members of Conference were graduates of To-O-Gijuku in Hirosaki which—while not a mission school—was largely under Methodist influence.

† W. C. Kitchin, letter to Secretaries of the Missionary Society, March 9, 1894: “. . . my experience in Japan was a failure. The causes of this failure lay, for the most part, in myself. . . . I never fully learned how to work with the people, despite my most earnest efforts to do so, I never liked them. I tried to conceal my feelings towards them, but, of course, to no purpose. The result was a discontent with my work on my part, a lack of confidence in me by the Japanese, and a failure all around. . . . Serious misunderstandings arose and a continuance in mission work anywhere appeared impossible, and, moreover, I became so thoroughly disheartened that I gave up in despair.” (Correspondence Files, Division of World Missions.) Kitchin was a missionary in Japan for six years, 1882-88.

‡ The Board refused to return at least one man to Japan following a furlough because of his failure to acquire Japanese, and in another case rejected the application of a volunteer for service standing of Japanese culture, philosophy, and religion. Methodist missionaries of this period thought of themselves as evangelists commissioned to convey a final message, and in seeking to fulfill their commission they seemed not to have given much consideration to the spiritual heritage of the Japanese people. It is impossible to cite a single Methodist missionary of these years who was an outstanding scholar in any field of learning, either oriental or occidental. There were few basic books written by early missionaries in Japanese or English, a loss deeply felt through the years.

The Church was fortunate also that men like Tsuda, Honda, Ogata, T. Yamada, H. Yamaka, and others came within the orbit of the Methodist work during the early years. By their stalwart character, intellectual ability, and devoted efforts they did much to give the Church recognition and standing in the national life.

The Japan Mission was notable for the readiness with which native ministers were admitted to ordination and placed in positions of responsibility in the Church. When the Japan Conference was organized, eleven years after the founding of the mission, nineteen of its thirty-two charter members were Japanese—five elders, three deacons, and eleven probationers. At the sixth session of the Conference a Japanese was appointed Presiding Elder, and at the tenth session three were named. Japanese were also given early recognition in the administration of the schools and on the faculties. While many of the Japanese members of Conference felt aggrieved over the existence of the "mission" as a separate organization in which important matters affecting the Church were discussed and decisions reached without consultation, at no time did an open break occur. The interracial character of the Conference was an element of strength, and contributed to mutual understanding, confidence, and cooperation.

In Japan, as in China and India, the tradition of itinerancy operated to the disadvantage of growing local Societies and a developing Church. A lack of continuity was implicit in the custom of annual appointment of every missionary and minister. It was futile to expect much to be accomplished in a single year. Time was required for a pastor to become acquainted with the community, to form friendships with individuals, to win the confidence of the people, and to work intensively with inquirers. Yet missionaries and Japanese pastors were moved about from Hakodate to Nagasaki, from Yokohama to Nagoya, and so forth, like wooden men on a chessboard rather than as individual personalities to be given a chance to become oriented in the social life of a group and rooted in a community. Not only was the mission and, later, the Conference superintended by a succession of American Bishops, strange to the field, in annual rotation, but the Presiding Elders also changed frequently, in some cases year by year.

in Korea because while in Japan he had not acquired a preaching knowledge of the Japanese language.—C. W. Green to John Wier, Jan. 15, 1891, Correspondence Files, Division of World Missions.

The caliber of the W.F.M.S. missionaries, almost without exception, was high and some were women of outstanding ability. Their contribution in establishing, successfully administering, and developing permanent educational institutions was without parallel and constituted a great service to the Church and to the nation. While leadership among the men missionaries was often changed in the Districts, many of the women served steadily in one area, giving the work of evangelization a continuity it otherwise would have lacked. Outstanding, too, was the development of a corps of well-trained Bible women, who in 1895 numbered thirty-four and during the Conference year made 13,287 calls.

Emphasis on the importance of Christian literature and activity in the publication and distribution of Bibles and translation of other important books in many fields of religion, as well as religious pamphlets and tracts, characterized the mission and the Conference from the beginning. The writing and translation of hymns also received special attention.

In the second decade of the Japan Mission the missionaries—both men and women—demonstrated anew the Methodist pioneering spirit. When opportunity offered for missionary extension into the smaller cities, towns, and villages, readiness was never lacking to establish distant outposts of existing Circuits, or even to cross the next mountain range to introduce the Gospel. Some of the Japanese evangelists trained by the missionaries possessed much the same spirit. There is but little question that the area thus opened was too extensive, for the lines often were very thin.* Neither missionaries nor Japanese pastors were available in sufficient number to occupy the ground staked out. Furthermore, the expansion too often represented merely individual initiative, rather than a well-thought-out plan of advance by the Conference or by District councils, with the result that many of the new preaching points suffered from lack of systematic cultivation and adequate support. Comparatively few of the preaching places which attained the status of organized Societies entirely passed out of existence but some had long, intermittent periods of hibernation that were neither good for themselves nor for the communities in which they were located.

Within the brief period of less than two and a half decades a firm foundation had been laid for the building of an indigenous Japanese Christian Church. If attention were fixed solely upon statistics the outlook for Christianity in Japan at the close of the period was not encouraging. But other considerations should be taken into account. The influence of the Christian religion upon Japanese society had increased more rapidly than the membership of the Churches. There were many in public and private life who though they did not call themselves Christians—or even theists—nevertheless had in important particulars been won to the Christian point of view and cherished plans and hopes for Japan based upon Christian ideals.

* The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, the Methodist Protestants, and the Canadian Methodists did not attempt the evangelization of anything like the wide expanse undertaken by the Methodist Episcopal Church.

KOREA MISSION

On June 24, 1884, Robert S. Maclay, pioneer Methodist missionary in China and founder of the Japan Mission, called at the United States Legation in Seoul. General Lucius H. Foote, first American minister to Korea, received Maclay cordially and procured a small Korean house near the legation for his use. His party included his wife, an interpreter, and a cook. He had with him two pack horses for carrying baggage.

Maclay had not been appointed as missionary to Korea but commissioned to make a tour of investigation. His purpose was "to test in a quiet way the disposition of the people, to discover . . . the openings and most suitable methods for commencing Christian work in Korea, to ascertain the advantages of Seoul as the place for the headquarters of our proposed Mission, and to determine, if possible, what part of the city would be best for . . . our missionary work." He arrived at Seoul on June 24, 1883, and went by chair into all parts of the city without meeting with any expressions of ill will from the people. He was courteously received by the representatives of Western powers, and ascertained their views as to his Church's mission. He interviewed the Japanese minister, who was much interested, and offered to do anything in his power to help. On July 3 he was notified by Kim Ok Kuin of the foreign office that the king approved the beginning of school and hospital work by the mission.¹⁴⁴

Maclay's visit occurred two years after the signing of the treaty between Korea and the United States negotiated by Commodore Robert W. Shufeldt, who since his investigation of the affair of the General Sherman* in 1866 had been deeply interested in establishing friendship between the United States and Korea. After abortive efforts in this direction in 1878, as the climax of a commercial and diplomatic cruise around the world he was sent to China in the spring of 1881 as a naval attaché to the American legation, with secret authority to make a treaty.

Korea at this time was under the influence of both Japan and China with the government in power pro-Chinese. When Shufeldt's intention had become known to Li Hung Chang, who was in charge of China's foreign policy, he quickly arranged for Shufeldt to negotiate a treaty through his nation. Final action was not completed until the spring of 1882. Then, on May 22, Shufeldt later reported:

* The General Sherman ran aground in an attempt to ascend the Ta Tong River and was burned and her crew massacred by a mob. Commodore Shufeldt found that the ship was loaded with contraband arms, her captain a mere adventurer, and that the Korean authorities had no part in the killing of the crew.—H. G. Appenzeller, "The Opening of Korea: Admiral Shufeldt's Account of It," The Korean Repository, I (February, 1892), 58 ff.

the Koreans having provided a tent upon the point at Chemulpo [Inchon] I landed with a staff of officers, and a small guard of men. Having peacefully planted the American flag before the tent and to the tune of Yankee Doodle, I signed the first Treaty ever made between the Hermit Nation and any Western Power.

The treaty accorded to the United States the status of most favored nation and defined the privileges of trade in open ports, but did not mention religious toleration.¹⁴⁵

In May, 1883, General Lucius H. Foote assumed his duties as United States minister to Korea. The following August the Korean government sent on a special mission to the United States Min Yong Ik, the queen's nephew, and four colleagues of high rank. On the same train that carried this distinguished group across the country to Washington was John F. Goucher, then a leading Board member of the Methodist Missionary Society. Already interested in Korea as a possible mission field* he took pains to become acquainted with the members of the mission and was deeply impressed by them. As a result, he wrote to the General Missionary Committee on November 6, 1883, urging that Korea be entered at an early date and offering to provide $2,000. for the purpose. One week later the General Missionary Committee voted that "$5000 be appropriated to the Japan Mission for the purpose of opening Mission Work in Corea of which $2000 is a special donation by Rev. J. F. Goucher."¹⁴⁶

This action prepared the way for the visit of Maclay in the summer of 1884. The following autumn Dr. Goucher renewed his offer to the General Missionary Committee, adding $3,000. for the purchase of a site for the mission, "Provided a competent ordained Missionary of experience, and a Medical Missionary, both married, shall be placed in that field during the present year." J. M. Reid moved that "Korea be entered upon our mission scheme."¹⁴⁷

KOREA MISSION ESTABLISHED

Missionaries were soon found, Dr. and Mrs. William B. Scranton† and the

* Goucher was by no means alone in his interest in Korea as a mission field. On Jan. 4, 1883, the Christian Advocate in an editorial headed "Corea, a New Opening for Missionary Work," gave more than a column and a half to the newly opened country, and ended: "Will the churches in the United States permit the twelve million of souls to whom the pure Gospel is an unknown truth, to be misled by errorists . . . ; or duly heeding the sublime order of their Lord . . . will they turn their attention to Corea, and make fitting preparation to go and possess it in the Master's name?" (Christian Advocate, LVIII [1883], 1 [Jan. 4], 1 f.) Offers of special gifts for Korea came in at once, $2,000. within a month. Late in the year Marcus L. Taft of China, on a health trip to Japan, reported landing at Fusan, Korea, getting a view of the city from a high hill, but not being allowed within the gates.—Ibid., 49 (Dec. 6), 771.

† William Benton Scranton was born in New Haven, May 29, 1856. He graduated from Yale in 1878 and from New York College of Physicians and Surgeons in 1882. That summer he married Miss Louise Arms and settled in Cleveland, Ohio, where he practiced for two years. Then he answered the call for a doctor for Korea, and became the first missionary appointed to that field. He was ordained Dec. 4, 1884, and admitted to New York East Conference the following spring. He was supervisor of Methodist medical work in Seoul throughout his period of service, besides giving much time to the duties of Superintendent of the mission (1892-1901) and to Scripture translation. He resigned June 14, 1907, and took up private practice in Korea. He died in Kobe, Japan, in 1922. A vigorous and versatile man, he lived to the breaking point for his cause.—Official Biographical Files, Division of World Missions.

Rev. and Mrs. Henry G. Appenzeller.* At the same time the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society appointed Mrs. Mary F. Scranton,† Dr. Scranton's mother, to open work among Korea's secluded women. The party sailed from San Francisco, arrived in Yokohama, Japan, February 27, 1885, and went on to Tokyo for a meeting with Dr. Maclay. In March Bishop Fowler appointed Maclay Superintendent of the Korea Mission, and H. G. Appenzeller, Assistant Superintendent.

Meanwhile, events had occurred in Korea which changed the political picture entirely. On December 4, 1884, a group who had come under Japanese influence attempted in one bloody thrust to overthrow the conservative pro-Chinese government. They were completely repulsed, those who could escape to Japan, and the conservative element was more firmly seated than ever; but the violence of the émeute brought about a general breakdown of law and an increase in crime which led large numbers of people to flee from Seoul. Japanese influence, on which Maclay had counted, was definitely out. On April 2, 1885, George C. Foulk, who had succeeded General Foote at the legation, wrote to Dr. Maclay, "There is not one officer in the government now to whom the subject of your work could be effectively broached."¹⁴⁸

Maclay and his young friends, however, were not to be deterred. On Maclay's advice, Mr. and Mrs. Appenzeller set sail on March 23, and reached Inchon, twenty-six miles from Seoul, on Sunday, April 5. Appenzeller wrote to the Board of Missions, "We came here on Easter. May He who on that day burst asunder the bars of death, break the bonds that bind this people, and bring them to the light and liberty of God's children!" But Mrs. Appenzeller, who "first stepped from the sampan upon the bare rocks," soon found that she was an embarrassment rather than a help. The authorities remonstrated with her husband for exposing her to "the unknown perils of this unsettled land," and informed him that "neither . . . [the United States] legation nor that of any other power could promise him protection." Without going farther, the Appenzellers returned to Tokyo.

* Henry Gerhard Appenzeller was born Feb. 6, 1858, in Souderton, Pa., of a substantial Lutheran family with its roots in Germany and Switzerland. He was converted in a revival meeting in a Presbyterian church Oct. 6, 1876, and joined the Methodist Church April 20, 1879. From Franklin and Marshall College (A.B., 1882) he went to Drew Theological Seminary (B.D., 1885). During his Drew days he became increasingly interested in Korea, and in December, 1884, was appointed to that field. On Dec. 17 (1884) he married Miss Ella Dodge. He was ordained in San Francisco Feb. 2, 1885, just before his sailing, and became a member first of the Newark Conference, and a year later, of the Philadelphia Conference. He began his work in Seoul as Assistant Superintendent, and in 1887, upon the return of R. S. Maclay to America, he was made Superintendent of the Korea Mission, which office he held until his furlough in 1892. In the spring of 1887 he made the first trip to Pyongyang ever undertaken by a missionary, and between then and 1890 he traveled through six of the eight provinces, covering 1,800 miles. In addition to his duties as Superintendent, pastor, and principal of Pai Chai Haktang, he was a member of the Permanent Bible Committee (for translation) and president of the Korean Religious Tract Society. With George Heber Jones, he edited the Korean Repository from 1895 to 1898. At the height of his powers he met sudden death in the sinking of a Japanese steamer, June 11, 1902. The mission lost too soon a leader whom they trusted, a man of courage, deep conviction, and broad attainments.—William Elliot Griffis, A Modern Pioneer in Korea, the Life Story of Henry G. Appenzeller, p. 60 et passim; Official Biographical Files, Division of World Missions.

† Mrs. Mary F. Scranton (1832-1909), a widow, was born in Belchertown, Mass., the daughter of a Methodist minister. She was active for a number of years in the work of the W.F.M.S. in Connecticut and New York. When her son was appointed to Korea she received an invitation from the W.F.M.S. through both the New England and New York Branches to go to Korea as one of their missionaries.—L. M. Hodgkins, op. cit., p. 39.

During a brief stopover in Nagasaki they met Dr. Scranton, without his family, and in spite of their adverse report he continued on his way. Arriving in Inchon, May 3, 1885, he met Dr. H. N. Allen, a Presbyterian missionary who had established himself during the previous September as physician to the legation and after saving the life of the king's nephew during the revolt of December had been put in charge of a government hospital in Seoul. Dr. Allen, being greatly in need of help, invited Dr. Scranton to share his work temporarily. This gave him official recognition at once and allowed time for thorough study of the situation. Although convinced that any missionary operations must be entered upon very cautiously on account of the Koreans' suspicion of foreigners, he was ready by June 1 to recommend a site for the mission and to send for his wife and baby and his mother. They arrived toward the end of the month, with the Appenzellers. In July property was purchased on high ground near the American legation and the Presbyterian mission. Mrs. Mary F. Scranton soon secured W.F.M.S. permission to buy adjoining lots with a small house. Methodism had a real foothold.¹⁴⁹

Dr. Scranton began medical work in Seoul under Methodist auspices on September 10, 1885, conducting a dispensary in his own home. On the following June 15 he saw his first patient in the Korean house at Chong Dong (Seoul) he had been remodeling for hospital use. It had a waiting room, office, drug room, operating room and five wards, and in an adjoining house three wards for women. The signs on the two posts of the building were made by the doctor's Korean teacher, and read:

American doctor's dispensary. Old or young, male or female, everybody with whatever disease, come at ten o'clock any day, bring an empty bottle and see the American doctor.

The following year (1887) the king granted Dr. Scranton a sign with the name Si Pyung Won, or Universal Relief Hospital. In the year ending September 10, 1886, the total number of patients was 842. Most of these were from the poorest classes, but some wealthier people came or were seen at their homes.¹⁵⁰

In her rooms in her son's house Mrs. Scranton was already teaching. A Korean of high rank, unaccountably permitted to live with her and receive instruction, was with her for some time in 1886.

On July 16 (1886) Mrs. Scranton wrote:

I have also with me a little girl of ten She has been with me a little more than two weeks the queerest little specimen of humanity I ever had any dealings with. . . . I was obliged to give a paper agreeing not to control or unduly influence this child after her education is completed, or take her to America against her will.

Little Konimi constituted the first girls' school in Korea. By March, 1887, there were six other pupils, and early in 1886 Mrs. Scranton and her little flock had moved into the first girls' school building,* a large native-style house, both school and home, made possible by a $3,000. gift from Mrs. William E. Blackstone of Oak Park, Illinois, who with her husband was a generous patron of Methodist missions.¹⁵¹

The first missionary school for boys in Korea was begun in Seoul by Henry G. Appenzeller in the summer of 1886.† Its first students were young men who desired to learn English, then considered the road to government promotion. Between June 8 and July 2, six were enrolled, but for various reasons these all disappeared.‡ On September 1 the school reopened with one pupil and by October 6 there were twenty on the roll and eighteen in actual attendance. A number of these became official interpreters, but not before they had been inoculated with Christian doctrine.¹⁵²

Throughout the year 1886 the missionaries pursued the policy of not attempting public evangelistic preaching, which by treaty was not permitted. The persecution which had aimed to exterminate the Roman Catholic Church § in Korea was only twenty years in the past, and the general distrust of foreign religious activities had relaxed but little. While the government was welcoming American advisers in its departments, American engineers to open its mines, and American teachers for a government school,¶ it did not countenance American missionaries. The Scrantons and the Appenzellers went quietly ahead, keeping strictly within the letter of the law, assured that healing and teaching would lead to preaching. Within five years the anti-foreign feeling had given place to general good will.

Even without preaching there were some visible spiritual results. On Easter Day, 1886, an attaché in the Japanese legation was baptized, the first Methodist baptism in Korea. The young man had been given Christian teaching in Japan several years before, had come to Korea in the fall of 1885, and throughout the winter, with two companions, had been under Appenzeller's instruction. The Class continued, and in the fall was moved to the home of the Japanese consul, where it grew to an occasional attendance of twelve.

* This was the beginning of what later became the Ewha Haktang, predecessor to Ewha High School and Ewha Woman's University.

† Appenzeller had done some sporadic teaching in August and September of 1885, the first two students being young men sent over by Dr. Scranton who wanted English as a prerequisite for medical study. His four students were all obliged to leave for government service in September.—Charles A. Sauer, Ed., Within the Gate, p. 84.

‡ For six weeks in the late summer Seoul was visited by a severe epidemic of cholera, in which hundreds died daily. Any kind of aggressive work was impossible.

§ Roman Catholics from France had been in Korea for eighty-two years (1784-1866) and had built up a strong following. Unfortunately, their political activities had convinced the government that they were agents of French imperialism. The persecution was directed against Koreans as well as missionaries. A new anti-foreign edict was posted in the center of Seoul, and the makers of ink cakes were ordered to imprint it on every slab of ink. "The executioners of the missionaries, severing the heads from their bodies, cried 'It is done.' So it seemed with the Catholic church in Korea."—L. George Paik, The History of Protestant Missions in Korea, 1832-1910, pp. 37-38.

¶ In the spring of 1885, the King of Korea requested General John Eaton, Commissioner of Education of the United States, to nominate three competent young men "to undertake the management and teaching" of the government school. Commissioner Eaton nominated three Union Theological Seminary (New York City) students, two of whom were about to graduate: George W. Gilmore, Princeton, 1883; D. A. Bunker, Oberlin, 1883; and H. B. Hulbert, Dartmouth, 1884. The government school was organized in September, 1886. The school did effective work but did not prosper as it deserved, for peculating officials connected with it diverted certain funds to their private uses. Disheartened, first Gilmore, then Hulbert, and finally Bunker resigned and returned to America. The last two later returned to Korea as members of the Methodist mission.—Ibid., p. 118.

After slightly more than a year the Korea Mission could report one probationer, 100 adherents, twelve Sunday school pupils, and one hospital.¹⁵³

The year 1887 saw advance all along the line. In the early spring the new building for women's work, already housing seven girls in the school, was visited officially by the president of the foreign office and three vice presidents. They saw stereopticon pictures, had supper, and listened with much interest while the girls were catechised. A few days afterward the president sent the school a name, to be framed and hung above the gate, Ewha Haktang, Pear Flower School, Pear Flower being a fond Korean name for a woman. Soon there followed a kenison, a special military attendant, assigned only by royal favor. The girls' school was fully established. It was strengthened by the arrival in October of Miss Louisa Rothweiler* as an assistant to Mrs. Scranton.

The boys' school was also making strides. In September Bishop Warren† dedicated its new brick building, the first building in Korea for the Christian education of boys. Principal Appenzeller reported:

The hall contains a chapel, four lecture rooms, a library, the principal's office, and a basement under half the building, to be devoted to the industrial department. . . .

Up to date 37 men and boys have been admitted; a large number of the old students are back and hard at work. Two of the students have been converted to Christianity during the year and are now probationers in our church.

The king sent a name for the school, Pai Chai Haktang, Hall for Rearing Useful Men.¹⁵⁴

Dr. Scranton, during the year ending July 1, 1887, had seen more than two thousand patients, many of them from outside Seoul. He was begging for a second doctor, so that something might be done for the sick left to die outside the gates, and for stations in the country, where medical work might open the way for the Church. He was relieved of some of his load by the arrival on October 31 of Dr. Meta Howard, sent by the W.F.M.S. (North-western Branch) as the first woman physician in Korea. She was successful at once. A hospital for women was fitted out, and she made calls, besides, in the homes of rich and poor alike. During less than two years of service she treated three thousand patients. But her health broke; in September, 1889, she was obliged to return to America, and women's medical work went back to Dr. Scranton.¹⁵⁵

Both Scranton and Appenzeller were active members of the Permanent Executive Bible Committee, which was organized February 7, 1887, and

* Louisa C. Rothweiler (1853-1921), daughter of a German Methodist pastor, was the first missionary to be supported by the German societies of the W.F.M.S. She was sent by the Cincinnati Branch, spent one term in Ewha School and a second in evangelism and translation. In 1899 she returned to America in broken health. In 1902 she was made secretary of German work, and for fourteen years was official correspondent for Korea.—Fifty-second Annual Report of the Cincinnati Branch . . . Woman's Foreign Missionary Society . . . (1921), p. 42.

† Other episcopal visits to Korea: 1888, Fowler; 1889, Andrews; 1891, Goodsell; 1892, Mallalieu; 1893, Foster; 1895, Ninde.

with Horace G. Underwood and Dr. John W. Heron, Presbyterians, formed a committee for translating the Bible into Korean. Appenzeller and Underwood had been working on the translation of Mark for two years and within a month of the organization of the committee the Appenzeller-Underwood translation of Mark was published.¹⁵⁶

In April and May of 1887 Appenzeller made the first of many trips of exploration into the interior, this one to Pyongyang, the ancient capital of Korea and its second city in population, 185 miles north of Seoul. "Ground has been broken in this province by colporteurs sent out from Mukden," he reported on his return. "Volunteers are needed, and he who enters this promising field must be prepared for many hardships."

Soon after his return Appenzeller was hailed one day by a Korean who said he was a Christian. After verifying his statement Appenzeller first gave him some translating to do and later employed him as a colporteur. There were several of these colporteurs who were converts of John Ross of Manchuria, a Scotch Presbyterian missionary who had done extensive work in northwest Korea.

In the late summer of 1887 Appenzeller sent two of them into the north, "the first to be gone a month or six weeks," the second perhaps three months, going as far as "his home in Aichin on the Yalu." They reported many Christians awaiting baptism.

Mrs. Scranton felt that the time had come for an advance movement. "There are regions beyond," she wrote to the Society, "which must be taken for the Master. There are two or three places we have in mind where we hope mission stations will soon be established."¹⁵⁷

In September, 1887, a mission bought a small house in the southern part of Seoul to be used as a chapel. Early in October "in a room eight feet by eight feet and six feet high, with but four persons present," Appenzeller held the first formal Methodist service in Korea. The next Sunday the colporteur's wife was baptized—"the first woman in Korea baptized by a Protestant missionary." In the same room Scranton and Appenzeller "with five communicants, celebrated the Lord's Supper. In this quiet way Methodism began her public work in the hermit nation." A few weeks later a second house, adjoining the first, was purchased where meetings were held in a room eight by sixteen feet. Regular Sunday services were begun and continued for several months.¹⁵⁸

This year ended with the good news that additional missionaries were on the way—Franklin Ohlinger and wife, formerly of the China Mission, and George Heber Jones* of the St. John's River Conference. Ohlinger arrived

* George Heber Jones was born in Mohawk, N. Y., Aug. 14, 1867. His formal education did not extend beyond high school, but his brilliant mind assimilated all that he read and touched. At sixteen, the only convert in a revival meeting, he joined the Methodist Episcopal Church. When appointed to Korea he was a member of the St. John's River Conference (admitted on trial in 1888, Gen'l Minutes, 1888, Spring, p. 5); later transferred to Northern New York; then to the Japan Conference; and finally to the Korea Mission Conference at its first session, 1906. His first five years were in in January, 1888, and was appointed superintendent of the mission press and teacher in the school. Jones arrived on May 18, 1888, also to be an assistant in the school.

OPPOSITION AND EXPANSION

In the spring of 1888 Appenzeller, in company with H. G. Underwood of the Presbyterian Mission, made a tour to north Korea with medicines, books, and tracts to be sold. They had been en route about two weeks, when they were overtaken by a letter from the American minister in Seoul saying that since their departure he had received from the Korean foreign office, by order of his majesty the king, a dispatch stating that it is well known to the Korean Government that Americans residing in Korea are engaged in different ways in disseminating the doctrines of the Christian religion; citing the fact that it is objectionable to the government, not authorized by the treaty, and demanding that it shall cease. My aid, as the minister of the United States, being invoked to this end, it becomes my duty to request that you will refrain from teaching the Christian religion and administering its rites and ordinances to the Korean people.¹⁵⁹

This was a development not entirely unexpected. The edict was obviously directed chiefly against the Catholic Church which, with the backing of the French government and against official protests, was proceeding with the erection of a cathedral on a site overlooking the palace. Nevertheless, under the terms of the edict it included Protestants. The government's attitude was in large measure a matter of expediency.*

Appenzeller and Underwood returned immediately to Seoul and were assured by men high in authority that their prompt acquiescence had a good effect. Riots incited by political agitators followed and throughout the summer there was much unrest. But preaching services continued to be held in missionaries' homes. Four of the best Korean men in Pai Chai even volunteered to do missionary work in the country during the summer. In October Appenzeller visited Aichin and reported a Society there of one member and fourteen probationers. School and hospital work went steadily forward.¹⁶⁰

Pai Chai Haktang in 1888 had sixty-three students; the building was Seoul, as teacher in Pai Chai and evangelist. In May, 1893, he married Miss Margaret Bengel, of the W.F.M.S., and in the fall was appointed to Inchon, to be its first resident missionary. After ten years he had "achieved the unique honor of being the presiding elder of a district every church of which he had himself organized (forty-four of them); every preacher and class leader was a son in the Gospel to him; and he had personally baptized every church member on the district." He left Korea in July, 1909, and for his remaining ten years gave himself to highly fruitful service in the Laymen's Missionary Movement, the Korea Quarter Centennial, the Methodist Board of Foreign Missions, and the Foreign Missions Conference of North America. He died May 11, 1919. A prolific and brilliant writer in both Korean and English and a lecturer much sought after, he became an authority on Korea.—Official Biographical Files, Division of World Missions.

* A Korean high in the royal favor offered this explanation of the edict: "The King honors you and is deeply sensible of the good you propose for his people, but he dreads the open and extensive propagation of Christianity, as it would put a weapon and a war cry in the possession of the opposition which would not only drive you from the country but possibly lose him his throne."—Charles Davis Stokes, "History of Methodist Missions in Korea, 1885-1930," typed ms., Ph.D. dissertation, pp. 95 f.

completed and fully occupied, even to the industrial department. The principal reported:

now no aid is given to any one unless he works for it. As soon as we can begin press work we shall be able to employ a large number of students. The care of the campus, sweeping college hall, and lighting the fires are done by our boys.

The W.F.M.S. home housed Ewha's eighteen girls and was the center of a growing movement among women. Toward the end of 1888 Mrs. Scranton reported:

Our Sunday evening meetings are well attended. Two weeks ago thirty were present besides our girls. . . . I have had some difficulty in getting a teacher for the women and have adopted a new plan. I asked one of the colporteurs if he would come and talk for me, provided the women were willing to have him do so. They consented, provided he did not see them. . . . I arrange a screen between them and the place where he is to sit, and in this way the women's ideas of seclusion are held sacred, and the speaker's voice can be heard as distinctly as though he were visible.¹⁶¹

Dr. Scranton continued to look for places into which medical work might be extended. With the year's attendance at the hospital at a maximum, in December he opened a dispensary at Aogi, a crossroads center just outside the west gate of the city, on the Inchon road.

At the end of 1888 the mission reported eleven members, twenty-seven probationers, and thirty-four adult baptisms. There were seven missionaries and three assistant missionaries.¹⁶² Two Bible women also were carrying on evangelistic work.

The annual meeting* of 1889 discussed at length the attitude of the mission to government restrictions, especially with regard to continuing the religious services on the mission compounds. After much debate it was finally decided to continue the religious services but to omit the singing for the time being. The next year the use of singing was made discretionary on the part of the leader. It was not until 1892 that restrictions placed upon public worship and the administration of the Sacraments were finally removed by the mission.¹⁶³

The first Local Preachers had been licensed November 25, 1888, and throughout 1889 they kept steadily at work. One of them was located in Pyongyang, where he had a small congregation meeting regularly, and from this center he made trips into the country preaching and selling Scriptures. The other taught Chinese in Pai Chai and during the summer vacation traveled southward. The Word could not be confined to one city.

At a regular monthly meeting of the mission in December, 1889, following the advice of Bishop Andrews the first Quarterly Conference in Korea was organized, made up of a group that had been worshiping for nearly two years in missionary homes and had just moved to an empty house on the hospital compound.

* Minutes of the annual meetings were not printed until 1893. Manuscript Minutes are not in the Board files.

The stewards have taken active steps toward paying the current expenses of the church. Some are giving more than a tenth of their annual income, If they don't have enough to heat the room we worship in a cold room rather than run into debt.¹⁶⁴

Expansion of the hospital work had become a necessity. Dr. Scranton felt, while Si Pyung Won must be continued as a dispensary, it was not in a suitable location for a permanent center of medical work. At his urgent suggestion a site was purchased on South Gate Street, one of the two principal thoroughfares of the city, about eight minutes' walk from the mission compound. The lot was 200 by 400 feet, on a knoll that commanded a view of nearly the whole city, with two small houses on it. In August, 1889, William B. McGill, M.D.,* arrived to assist in the medical work.¹⁶⁵

Besides assisting Dr. Scranton at Si Pyung Won, Dr. McGill took charge of building the new dispensary on South Gate Street (Sang Dong) and it was opened in mid-October, 1890. The building was of brick, containing a waiting room and a drug room. The old Korean houses already on the lot were used as wards. Women's medical work continued at the old site, and was greatly strengthened by the arrival, October 14, 1890, of Dr. Rosetta Sherwood.† She fell at once into Korean ways.

Our patients both sit and sleep upon the floor in Korean fashion, and save the fact that it is difficult for the doctor to work over them, I like the custom very well

Medical care was free to all, but those who were able were asked to pay for their medicines, and more than a fourth of the inpatients provided their own food. All the inpatients had religious instruction; each was given a lesson sheet from the Gospels, and many bought copies of Luke. Dr. Sherwood began at once her program of training by using three girls from Ewha Haktang as assistants in the drug room and dispensary. Marriage, however, removed such helpers by the time they were sixteen. Margaret Bengel, barely twenty-one, sent by the Cincinnati Branch to teach in Ewha Haktang, arrived on the same ship with Dr. Sherwood.

* William B. McGill, M.D. (1859-1918), a layman, was a graduate of the College of Medicine of the University of Pennsylvania (1889) and was also an experienced builder. He opened Methodist work in Wonsan in 1893, and did much pioneer work through the countryside. He was withdrawn at his own request in April, 1906, because of a change in mission policy.—Official Biographical Files, Division of World Missions; Norman Found, "The Life of William McGill," The Korea Mission Field, XXXII (1936), 8 (August), 158 f.

† Rosetta Sherwood was born in Liberty, N. Y., Sept. 19, 1865. After a course in the Oswego Normal School and a period of teaching, she enrolled in the Woman's Medical College of Pennsylvania, where she graduated in 1889. Sent to Korea by the New York Branch, W.F.M.S., she gave two years to the women's hospital in Seoul. On June 27, 1892, she was married to Dr. William J. Hall. After his death in 1894, she returned to America and remained two years before going back to Korea under the W.F.M.S. She opened a women's hospital in Pyongyang, and continued there for many years. In 1928 she began the Woman's Medical Institute in Seoul, and continued to press for medical education for women. She was the pioneer in work for the blind and the deaf. She retired in 1935, full of honors, and died in 1951.—Twelfth Annual Report, Woman's Division of Christian Service of the Board of Missions and Church Extension . . . (1950-51), p. 240; Official Biographical Files, Woman's Division of Christian Service, Board of Missions.

The Sunday evening meetings for women had been discontinued in April, 1889, but they were resumed in October, and on February 12, 1890, Appenzeller formed the group into a Class, in effect a women's church, to which at the 1890 annual meeting of the mission Ohlinger was assigned as pastor.¹⁶⁶

Perhaps the most important event in 1890 was the formation of the Korean Religious Tract Society on June 25, with Ohlinger as president, to be devoted to production and circulation of publications in the Korean language. Literature offered an effective means of evangelism since the people were in general literate. The official ban did not extend to circulation of books. Taking advantage of this the missionaries turned to translation of books and tracts despite lack of skill for such work. Printing was done at the Trilingual Press,* just started under Ohlinger's management.¹⁶⁷

In April, 1891, six years after the first missionaries had landed, George Heber Jones and a native helper, Brother Yon, made a trip to the Chinese boundary in the north, covering seven hundred fifty miles in thirty-two days, and visiting thirty large cities and districts to preach and sell books. They found the people approachable and friendly. In Pyongyang, where the work was languishing for want of supervision, they received on probation five who had applied for baptism.¹⁶⁸

During the furlough of the Scrantons in 1891-92, Miss Rothweiler was in charge of the girls' school. She reported in the fall of 1891 that during the previous year four new girls had been received, making twenty-eight, of whom four had received baptism. Four others gave their names as candidates, and the whole group would have followed if it had been suggested, but "we feel that it is too important a step to be taken without full appreciation of its import." Three of the twenty-eight were married during the year, and initiated the Christian homes toward which Ewha always aimed.¹⁶⁹

Just before his furlough, Dr. Scranton reported that the Aogi dispensary was closed, but that Christian work was being continued under the supervision of Mr. Ohlinger. The new dispensary at Sang Dong was "fulfilling its bright promise." Dr. McGill, left in charge of medical work for the year, was assisted by an Anglican physician, Dr. I. Wiles. In December, 1891, William J. Hall, M.D.,† arrived and was immediately pressed into service. At

* Franklin Ohlinger: "Nearly all our purchases have to be made in China and Japan, and the 'import,' together with the transportation, makes all our material very expensive. We find it difficult to compete with the large printing-establishments in Japan, where much child-labor is employed. At times the work has barely been sufficient to keep the students who 'work their way' at school by type-setting in rice, and, again, there has been an inconvenient rush of work. This will be largely obviated by the publication of the magazine, The Korean Repository, to begin with January, 1892."—In Seventy-third Ann. Rep., M.S. (1891), p. 272.

† William James Hall (1860-94), son of an Anglican farmer, was born at Brockville, Ontario, in January, 1860. During his high school days at the neighboring town of Athens he was converted in a Methodist revival and "went to work at once to win for Christ his companions in the school." Two of those whom he won became missionaries in China. In the medical school of Queen's University, Kingston, Ontario, he became a Student Volunteer. He finished his medical course in Bellevue Hospital, New York, in April, 1889. For two and a half years he was superintendent of the Madison Street Mission. He was admitted to the East Tennessee Conference, October, 1891. He arrived in Korea on Dec. 16, 1891, and served for eight months as an assistant in the two Seoul hospitals. In August, 1892, two months after his marriage to Dr. Rosetta Sherwood, he was appointed to Pyongyang. After two years of hard work in the midst of the tribulations of war, he died of typhus, Nov.

the same time Miss Ella A. Lewis, New York Branch, W.F.M.S., came to assist in the women's medical work.

The Korea Mission closed its sixth year with fifteen members and fifty-eight probationers, eighty-five pupils in schools and seventy-six in Sunday schools. More than six thousand patients had been treated in its hospitals.¹⁷⁰

In the summer of 1892 the Appenzellers went on furlough and Dr. Scranton, who had just returned, became Superintendent of the mission as well as of the medical work. More and more he gave himself to evangelism. In September meetings were begun on the east side of the city, three miles from the original compound, using at first a small house owned by the mission and occupied by two old men and their families. Dr. Scranton instructed the men on the outside, while his mother taught the women on the veranda and in the court. This building was soon outgrown. Happily, about this time the W.F.M.S. forwarded a special gift for the erection of a chapel. The first service in the chapel was held Christmas Day, 1892, when Dr. Scranton baptized six men and boys and celebrated the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. "It was thought best," wrote Mrs. Scranton, to make the attempt of having the women and the men meet in the same building; accordingly a paper partition was put through the center of the room, the men occupying one side and the women the other. They enter by different gates and doors, so cannot see each other although all can see the speaker.¹⁷¹

In the summer of 1892, shortly before her marriage to Dr. Hall, Dr. Sherwood opened a dispensary (Baldwin Dispensary), also on the east side, which was soon placed in the charge of Ella Lewis. Ultimately it became the Lillian Harris Memorial Hospital.

In Seoul the hospital and schoolwork continued to advance. Miss Rothweiler could even look to a time when "Koreans shall consider it desirable for their daughters to get an education and not, as now, regard it as a favor bestowed on us." Miss Josephine Paine, a missionary of the New England Branch, arrived in September to assist in the school.¹⁷² The increasing number of Christian workers coming out of Ewha was a great encouragement. Writing in 1893, Mrs. Scranton gave specific examples: one who had married two years earlier was now a Bible woman at the hospital; another was interpreter for the doctor at Baldwin Dispensary, and with her husband worked constantly to bring their neighbors to Christ; one was assistant in the women's hospital; the first girl who enrolled in the school was wife of a native preacher.

In this same year Pai Chai began in a small way the training of preachers.*

24, 1894.—Minutes, Korea Mission, 1895, pp. 6-10; Seventy-fourth Ann. Rep., M.S. (1892), pp. 291 f.

* Appenzeller aimed to provide thorough instruction and well-rounded training for the Pai Chai students but he had many obstacles with which to contend. The curriculum was limited by the paucity of textbooks and by the lack of well-educated Korean teachers. There were also other difficulties. Registration was transient and attendance irregular. Of 104 students enrolled in 1894 only twenty-one continued for a full year.—Seventy-sixth Ann. Rep., M.S. (1894), p. 247.

In the earlier years this had been impossible because of lack of converts, but in 1893 two Korean teachers and more than a dozen students were converted. Dr. Scranton reported that twelve of the most intelligent Christians were meeting two or three afternoons a week for special training.¹⁷³

OUTSIDE THE GATES

By 1891 it had become clear that the field as a whole could not be cultivated merely by evangelistic tours. Other missionaries agreed with Ohlinger, who insisted that inland missionary residences must be established "in order to get nearer to the people." When the 1892 annual meeting was held Bishop Mallalieu, who presided, gave his approval and made appointments in accordance with a new plan. Appenzeller was appointed to Chon-ju in the south. McGill was given general and medical work in Wonsan, to the northeast, about 175 miles from Seoul, and went at once to buy land and build the brick house which he occupied the following spring. Dr. Hall was assigned to Pyongyang, accompanied by Chang Sik Kim,* a Local Preacher, who in Hall's absence was left in charge. George Heber Jones was appointed to Inchon and the presidency of Pai Chai, where he was assisted by W. A. Noble,† who arrived in October. However, no W.F.M.S. missionary was sent outside of Seoul, and even Dr. Rosetta S. Hall had to assent to her husband going north without her, while she managed the women's hospital.¹⁷⁴

In the work outside of Seoul there were many encouragements. In Pyongyang a citizen whose son had been cured by Dr. Hall offered to sell for $700. a plot of ground with a building adequate for all immediate needs, and Hall volunteered to become responsible for half the cost if the Board would grant the rest, which it did. He also offered to become responsible, with the help of his friend Noble, for the outcoming expenses and salary to the end of 1893 of Dr. John B. Busted, an associate of earlier years, if he could be sent at once. Dr. Busted ‡ and his wife arrived in June. Dr. McGill, in Wonsan, was "an indefatigable bookseller." He was unable to accomplish much in the city but found plenty to do in other places. He went to Anpyun, Ham Hung, and to numerous villages, where he treated patients and sold them books. In one year he prescribed for 1,350 patients.¹⁷⁵

In Inchon some twenty-six boys aged eight to twelve gathered themselves

* Chang Sik Kim (1857-1929) was the first Protestant preacher to be ordained in Korea (1901). In 1893-94, while stationed in Pyongyang, he was subjected to severe persecution and imprisoned as a result of anti-Christian agitation during the Tonghak uprising. In 1904 he was appointed District Superintendent (Presiding Elder) of the Yeng Byen District, the first Korean to achieve this position.—Mattie Wilcox Noble, Compiler, Victorious Lives of Early Christians in Korea . . ., pp. 5 ff.

† William Arthur Noble (1866-1945) was born in Springville, Pa.; attended Wyoming Seminary (1887-89) and Drew Theological Seminary (1890-92). Through the friendship of Dr. W. J. Hall he became interested in Korea, and after being admitted to the Wyoming Conference in 1892 was transferred. He arrived Oct. 17, 1892, with his bride of three months. He taught in Pai Chai until 1895, and was then appointed to Pyongyang. Through the years he served as Presiding Elder of every District of the Church in Korea, and was widely known for his sound and steady administration. He retired March 31, 1933, and died in California in 1945.—Official Biographical Files, Division of World Missions.

‡ Dr. Busted was appointed to Sang Dong, Seoul. After four years his health failed and it became necessary for him to leave Korea.

into a school to be taught by the native preacher—"our first day school in Korea." Instruction was along native lines, with Christian catechism and morals in addition. The boys had daily prayers at eight and attended the Sunday services. It may well have been the result of decision in the spring of 1893 to make a deliberate effort to win entire households for God instead of concentrating solely on the men. One of the women from the home in Seoul spent some time in Inchon in the spring, and later her place was taken by a young woman from the adult school Mrs. Scranton conducted in the home. Finding she did not get far with invitations to women's meetings, she adopted a different plan. She walked to Seoul, twenty-seven miles, bought some small articles that appeal to women, and returned on foot to Inchon to sell them. As a peddler she was welcome, and she always made an opportunity to talk about the Jesus teaching. As a result, women were soon going in large numbers to the chapel.¹⁷⁶

In December Dr. Scranton left his many duties in Seoul for a trip southward on foot, with a pony to carry his books and medicines and a supply of food. Writing to his mother, he said:

I am well, but dirty happy though often lonesome. . . . The pleasures of the work and the successes more than balance the discomforts. . . .

I baptized three today . . . by a running brook in lieu of Chapel I was unwilling to baptize them in semi-secret . . . [in a house]. They were not at all perturbed.¹⁷⁷

The year brought several changes in personnel. Decided differences as to missionary policy threatened actual discord and resulted in the departure of the Ohlingers* in August.¹⁷⁸ The press was taken over by Homer B. Hulbert, a layman who had first come to Korea as a teacher in the government school in 1886.† Hulbert arrived October, 1893, and at the same time Miss Mary W. Harris‡ and Miss Lulu E. Frey,§ both sent by the Cincinnati Branch, W.F.M.S., to teach in Ewha. Dr. Mary M. Cutler,¶ from the New York Branch, had preceded them by eight months, and was already well established in her medical work.¹⁷⁹

The year 1894 was one of turbulence in Korea. The Tonghak (Eastern Learning) begun as an eclectic religious system, had become a political

* The Ohlingers returned to America. They had been almost broken by the death of two children in one week.

† Hulbert left in 1897 to take a government position. He became a recognized authority on Korea.

‡ Miss Harris married Dr. E. Douglas Folwell who arrived in 1895.

§ Lulu E. Frey was born in Sidney, Ohio, March 9, 1868. She graduated from Ohio Wesleyan University in 1892; from the Chicago Training School in 1893; and reached Korea in October of that year. She began at once teaching in Ewha Haktang and was made its principal in 1906. She was responsible for the beginning of Ewha College and of the Kindergarten Training School. "The Ewha we know is a product of her faith and leadership." She died in a Boston hospital, March 18, 1921.—Official Biographical Files, W.D.C.S.; Fifty-second Ann. Rep., Cincinnati Branch, W.F.M.S. . . . (1921), p. 42.

¶ Mary M. Cutler was born on a farm in Cutlerville, near Grand Rapids, Mich., Dec. 12, 1865. After graduating from the Grand Rapids High School and the medical college of the University of Michigan, she practiced three years in Pomeroy, Ohio, and then applied for service in Korea. On reaching the field she was appointed at once to the women's hospital in Seoul. She was moved in 1912 to Pyongyang, where she spent her remaining years on the field. She retired in 1939 and died April 27, 1948. Few doctors can look back upon so long a period of service, with results that can come only through skill and steadfastness.—Ninth Ann. Rep., W.D.C.S. (1948), pp. 254 f.

movement, and by the end of 1893 had gathered strength enough in the south to organize an armed rebellion and move on Seoul. The government, unable to resist the attack, turned to China with a request for troops which were immediately sent. Japan, officially notified of the Chinese move, dispatched a division of soldiers direct to the capital. Thus began the war which ended in 1895 with the complete triumph of Japan.¹⁸⁰

Pyongyang was a storm center. Occupied by a Chinese army of 20,000 for some two months and then captured by the Japanese, its population had been reduced from 80,000 to about 8,000 to 10,000. Houses were deserted, officials fled, cholera attacked. In October, Dr. W. J. Hall, who had been working in Seoul through the summer, returned to the ruined city "to comfort the brethren." His death from typhus was the first such tragedy in the mission.

Other than this, Dr. Scranton reported, "no member of the Mission has been called upon to suffer in his person or estate, though all have been in much danger." Work went on in each center as usual. In Inchon the event of the year was the erection of a Korean-style chapel, the first one ever put up by Korean Christians themselves.¹⁸¹

In March Mrs. Scranton undertook an evangelistic tour in the country, probably the first such trip ever made by a foreign woman unaccompanied by her husband. While the filth, vermin, and disease were offensive, she was drawn to large numbers of the women, and confident of their salvation from dirt as well as from sin. That same hope sustained her as she went down to live at Sang Dong in Seoul. Dr. Scranton had been pastor there for some six months, but the little church was weak because of the lack of women. So Mrs. Scranton took a room, determined to camp until the mothers of two of the male members should yield themselves also. These women yielded and were baptized in August.¹⁸²

Pai Chai, in spite of all the public excitement, had a year of quiet, steady progress. The Methodist Catechism was taught in the vernacular, and several boys committed the book to memory. The Chinese classics formed a prominent part of the course, and in English, "instruction was given in the common branches, ancient history, physics, chemistry, political economy, vocal music, and the Bible." The total number enrolled was 104, in English thirty-four, and in Chinese seventy.¹⁸³

The Trilingual Press took on new life under Hulbert's management. The entire appropriation was used for the purchase of new machinery, and prices were adjusted so as to cover expenses.¹⁸⁴

At the annual meeting held January 16-23, 1895, in Seoul the Korea Mission took stock of ten years' effort. It had now six missionaries and their wives,* and six from the W.F.M.S. It had four Korean Local Preachers and five Exhorters. There were seventy-five members and 146 probationers in three regularly organized charges in Seoul (Chong Dong, Baldwin Chapel, Sang Dong) and three outside (Aogi, Pyongyang, Inchon); five other places were listed "to be supplied." The Sunday schools had 152 pupils. Inchon had established work on the neighboring island of Kangwa. Chong Dong, the oldest charge, was preparing to build the first church of any size in Protestant missions in Korea. Women were coming to Mrs. Scranton's home to talk about the Jesus way day after day, until the number reached into the hundreds.¹⁸⁵

* Two more arrived during the year, in June Dalzell A. Bunker and his wife Annie Ellers, who had been physician to the queen while he taught in the government school; and in December, E. Douglas Folwell, M.D.—Korean Repository, II (July, 1895), 278.

FIRST DECADE OF THE KOREA MISSION

The Korea Mission had its beginning in a country whose people had not accepted Western ideas, and foreigners had to move with caution. With Japan making a bid for political and economic leadership in the Far East, and the Western nations seeking advantages in trade, political uneasiness was inevitable. The United States, having declared for Korean independence and religious neutrality, could ask no favors for American missionaries. These could only seek to adapt themselves to Korean ways and to recommend their religion through kindness and helpfulness.¹⁸⁶

An indirect missionary approach was adopted as a fixed policy. Dr. Scranton spoke of the hospital as a plow, breaking up the ground and the school as a harrow, smoothing it for seeding, but neither he nor Appenzeller ever lost faith in a coming day of harvest.¹⁸⁷

Korea is the only field entered by the two missionary Societies of the Methodist Church at the same time. Everywhere else the W.F.M.S. followed the lead of the General Society, taking up work established by the wives of missionaries. Here the mother of the first missionary began work at the same time as her son, living for the first few months in the same house with him, and afterwards always in a neighboring compound. This close relationship heightened the effectiveness of cooperative planning. A young unmarried woman could not have accomplished with Korean women what Mrs. Scranton did—middle-aged, widowed, the mother of a grown son.¹⁸⁸

In Korea, too, Methodists and Presbyterians entered almost simultaneously, worked side by side in closest harmony throughout the initial period, and thus developed early such important interdenominational procedures as Bible translation and the publication of religious literature. When Dr. Scranton first landed he was welcomed and taken as an associate by Dr. Allen, Presbyterian, who had been in the country some ten months. When the Appenzellers first landed at Inchon they were in company with Underwood, a Presbyterian. Since it was deemed unsafe for a foreign woman to remain in the country Underwood, a bachelor, remained. The two men had been friends in America and their friendship was continued in Korea. It was not until the two missions began spreading out through the country that a question* of comity arose.¹⁸⁹

For both missions, development of Christian conviction among Koreans was uphill work. Governed by the Confucian code, whose cardinal point was filial piety, the Korean added the worship of innumerable spirits, all the way from Tok gavi—the hobgoblin whose nightly gambols are the subject of many a ghost story—to Tai Chang Kun, . . . whose throne fills a quarter of the heavens. . . .

. . . the announcement that there is an obligation on man that is superior even to filial piety . . . comes to him as a shock. To admit it strikes him at first as treason to the living parent and to the memory of the dead ancestry The appeal to the supernatural and spiritual meets with no response. The little knowledge of these he has obtained, comes through a system where they are reduced to a brutish level and rendered hideous.¹⁹⁰

Nevertheless, progress in Korea was relatively rapid. To have had one convert within one year was real success. The work of John Ross, missionary at Mukden, China, in translating the New Testament into Korean and sending it across the border, had permanent value. The American missionaries found a leaven at work when they came.

Moreover, their work was greatly accelerated by their use of the popular language with its completely phonetic alphabet. Braving the scorn of the educated, they immediately began to learn Korean, to speak it among the people, to use it as a medium of teaching, both in the schools and through their printed materials, and they were rewarded with a church in which the Bible was universally read.

A Bible church, a giving church, a laymen's church, a family church—to this goal Korea was on the way by 1895.¹⁹¹

* At the annual meeting of 1893 a comity agreement proposed by the Presbyterians was considered. Scranton was opposed to drawing up any general rules, saying he preferred that joint arrangements should be made for specific cases as they arose. With Bishop Foster and Secretaries Leonard and Mrs. Keen present, the Committee on Fraternal Relations was instructed "to report that the Mission is debarred from binding itself to these rules."—Minutes, Korea Mission, 1893, pp. 4, 16, 40-42.

VIII

Expanding Foreign Missions— South America and Mexico

THE FIRST MISSIONARY APPROACH to Latin America by a United States board was made by the Methodist Episcopal Church which in 1835 sent Fountain E. Pitts to spy out the land and report to the Missionary Society. In 1836 the first Methodist missionary to the southern continent was appointed. In the same year Theodore Parvin, who had been ordained by the Presbytery of Philadelphia went to Buenos Aires as a self-supporting Presbyterian missionary.¹ The breaking away from Spain and establishment of republican forms of government by Latin American nations, including the adoption of constitutions largely modeled after that of the United States, awakened widespread interest among the people of the older republic. The possibility of missionary extension to Latin America was considered by several other denominations but none of their boards took immediate action.

SOUTH AMERICA MISSION

Account of the earliest Methodist work in Brazil, Uruguay, and Argentina has been previously given in some detail.* These efforts as previously noted came to an unfortunate end. Whether, under all the circumstances, the Missionary Society was then justified in abandoning South America as a missionary field was a subject on which opinion in the Church was divided. Many of the friends of missions considered the withdrawal hasty and ill advised. The attempt had been entered upon after long consideration, prosecuted at heavy expense, and had engaged the earnest effort of some of the most able ministers of the Church. Granted that the difficulties seemed insuperable, should not the Society have persisted until continuance was no longer possible instead of giving up? Stephen Olin, who on more than one occasion had been critical of missionary policies, believed that the course followed was wise.

We are among those . . . who believed that the discontinuance of this effort, which has . . . demonstrated itself to be nearly hopeless, was, upon the whole, expedient,

* See Vol. I, 344-57.

and that it was better to incur the charge of instability and irresolution—no slight faults in those who guide the missionary enterprise—than to persevere in the face of difficulties, of which it was nearly certain that they would continue to increase rather than diminish.²

So far as Argentina was concerned Olin's forebodings of increased difficulties proved to be without foundation. Conditions at Buenos Aires were not at any time as difficult as had been anticipated and in 1846 improved sufficiently for the Society for the Promotion of Christian Worship to ask that a successor to William H. Norris be sent as soon as practicable. The Missionary Society agreed to contribute for support the same amount as previously given. The Bishop in charge of foreign missions then appointed Dallas D. Lore of the Philadelphia Conference to Buenos Aires.

ADMINISTRATION OF LORE, 1847-54

On December 16, 1847, eighty-seven days after sailing from New York, Lore, with his wife, reached his destination. Two months later he reported that he was holding two prayer meetings each week with a good number in attendance, of whom many were young men. His constituency was confined to that part of the foreign population that could speak English—American, English, Scotch, and Irish.

Lore was diligent in labor and by July he had found upward of sixty families who welcomed his pastoral calls. The Sunday school had increased from eighty-four to 105 in attendance, and the congregation was generous in financial support. On March 30, 1849, twelve persons were received on probation, three men and their wives and six young unmarried men. Shortly afterward six more persons were received. "A hundred in one of your congregations at home would not have been so great an event," wrote Lore to the Missionary Advocate, "as this was to us."

In its 1850-51 Report the Board expressed the conviction that the Church should have a mission in every large city in South America where there was a Protestant population. The object should be:

1. To take care of the Protestant population in these Roman Catholic cities and countries. It is our duty to administer to their spiritual wants, and thus, with the blessing of God, save their souls. It is our duty also to educate their children, especially in the Sunday schools, in the principles and worship of the Protestant Churches, and thus raise up a Protestant population in the midst of the Roman Catholic cities and states.
2. This leads us to state that another important object of these missions is to present an example to the Catholic population of the pure simple Christianity enjoyed by Protestants, and thus gradually win them to embrace it. It is neither the policy nor the desire of these missions to interfere with the political or ecclesiastical institutions of South America, only so far as the light and example of the missions shall influence the public mind.

The Report went on to say that such missions would not necessarily be of much expense to the Board since the Buenos Aires mission had "not drawn upon the treasury for any money during the last year," all expenses having been met by the local Society for the Promotion of Christian Worship.³

The mission at this time was little more than a chaplaincy to the American and British colony in Buenos Aires. The question of the internal organization of the mission—whether it should be regularly organized as a Methodist Society—was a subject of correspondence between Lore and John P. Durbin, the Corresponding Secretary of the Missionary Society, in view of the fact that the Society for the Promotion of Christian Worship was composed of Protestants of various denominations. Both were of the opinion that as soon as possible a regularly organized Methodist church should be formed.⁴

Under the ruling political regime in Argentina any attempt to undertake Protestant missionary activity among the native population was thought to be impossible. But near the close of 1851 the ruling government was overthrown and a liberal regime instituted. In exultation Lore wrote:

The Provisional Government, acting under the authority of General Urquiza, is certainly composed of the best men in the country, and thus far we believe their acts have given general satisfaction. The freedom of the press is restored, and free instruction; and we hope that freedom in religious faith and practice, if not already included, will soon be proclaimed. . . . We must wait, however, until the constitutional government is established.

This letter, following earlier hopeful reports from Lore, had the effect of widening the horizon of the Board and of the General Missionary Committee in relation to South America. Under "Appropriations for 1853" the committee reported:

South America.—Buenos Aires Mission, $1,000. For the extension of the work in the interior, $1,000. . . . for establishing a mission at Monte Video, $2,000.⁵

If the appropriations were to be utilized additional personnel was required. Where were the men to be found? The same difficulty that again and again had hindered advance in other fields interposed an insuperable barrier in South America. In February, 1853, Durbin informed Lore that suitable persons had not been found. "What are we to do?" he asked despairingly. "We cannot make the instruments for the work to be performed." And there the matter of expansion beyond the bounds of Buenos Aires rested for three years.

In 1854 Lore's term of service in Buenos Aires, agreed upon when he enlisted, expired and in August he sailed for home. On his last Sunday evening with the church, following a Love Feast, "twenty-four persons gave themselves to God and to his cause—all on probation except one, who joined by letter from the Scotch Church"—the largest number that had united with the Society at one time. The mission had not received a cent from the missionary treasury toward the pastor's salary in the seven years; the congregation had contributed some eighteen hundred dollars over and above ministerial support, of which about $600. had been forwarded to New York and the balance expended on mission property. In addition about $400. had been raised for the American Bible Society; about $625. for Sunday-school purposes; about $50. for the tract cause; and about $800. for charity. This was the aggregate contribution of a church that had never exceeded sixty persons and a congregation of not more than three hundred.⁶

CARROW'S ADMINISTRATION, 1854-57

On March 24, 1854, Bishop Waugh appointed Goldsmith D. Carrow of the Philadelphia Conference a missionary for a term of seven years. He sailed from New York in June and arrived in Buenos Aires a few days in advance of Lore's departure. J. M. Reid made this comment on Carrow's early work:

Mr. Carrow entered upon his work with great enthusiasm. He opened a day-school, of which Mrs. Carrow was the chief support, and he begged the approval of the Board and assistance in his great work. All restraints upon religion having been removed by the latest revolution, which closed in 1855, he gave particular emphasis to the often repeated suggestions of his predecessor that the work should be extended into the surrounding country; he also pleaded the duty of the Church to re-enter Montevideo.⁷

Carrow was full of plans. Very soon he proposed organizing a Spanish Sunday school. In May he made a horseback tour of rural areas from fifty to one hundred and fifty miles south of Buenos Aires. At one Sunday appointment a goodly congregation gathered for a preaching service, people coming "from various distances, ranging from three to thirty miles." In June he wrote suggesting sale of the church property and erection of a new church and school. By October he was convinced that missionary work in the rural region must be made:

this is the time . . . for enlarging our mission operations in this part of the South American continent. The government is perfectly tolerant, and can never again be otherwise. Immigrants are rapidly pouring in. The foundations of a new nationality are being laid. . . . The natives though educated in the Romish faith, prefer and freely patronize English schools, and as freely consent that their children should be taught to read the Scriptures therein. Foreign residents located in the country districts of this province, English, Scotch, Irish, German, &c., are entirely destitute of religious privileges, and very much desire for their own sakes, and especially for the sake of their children, to have the Gospel, religious worship, Sunday and week-day schools.⁸

He beseeched the Board for assistance, a man to take charge of the day school which he stated he had opened in September (1855)—although evidently it was an outgrowth of the school begun soon after his arrival—and also a missionary for the country work. Carrow's representations, together with his energy and aggressiveness, so impressed the Board and the Bishops that every effort was made to provide missionary recruits. On November 20, 1855, Bishop Ames commissioned Thomas Carter of the New York Conference as a missionary to Buenos Aires but Carter after a long-drawn-out correspondence with Durbin decided that he should not go.

In 1856 the Bishop appointed William Armstrong of the East Genesee Conference to missionary work in the interior. Before arrangements for his outgoing were completed word was received that "the Scotch Mission in Buenos Aires" had begun missionary work in the same area and among the same people as the Methodists had in mind, and had begun "building three churches in the most promising points." Consequently Armstrong's appointment was withdrawn.⁹

In March, 1856, Henry R. Nicholson of the Baltimore Conference was appointed to Buenos Aires to take charge of the school and to assist Carrow in other ways in the mission. Nicholson, who spoke Spanish as his native tongue, came from the Wesleyan missions in Spain recommended by "the Mission House" in London. He was sent out with the hope that in addition to his school duties he would "find opportunity to preach the Gospel to the Spanish Roman Catholic population in their own language." From information supplied by Nicholson to the New York office it was learned that when he took charge the school had three teachers, eighty-nine pupils, fifty English, seventeen Americans, and twenty-two Argentines—and in connection with it an English Bible class of twenty-six members, a Spanish Bible class of twenty-five, and a French Bible class of seventeen.

Coincident with Nicholson's appointment to the school Bishop E. R. Ames on March 12, 1856, appointed Carrow as Superintendent of the South America Mission. No sooner had the new order been established when complications developed which threatened the life of the whole Buenos Aires missionary enterprise. The chief factors in the sorry situation may be briefly stated. Preceding his appointment as Superintendent Carrow had expelled certain members from the church and had become abusive in his attitude toward them. Carrow and Nicholson soon were at odds and the mission was "rent into two parties." Carrow made extravagant demands upon the Missionary Society, virtually demanding an appropriation of fifteen thousand silver dollars a year for three years to place the mission "on an efficient basis" and threatened to withdraw if the demand was not met. Nicholson advanced a claim that under agreement with the Board when he was sent out he had a right to take over the school, with the library and school furniture, a claim which Durbin denied. The Society for the Promotion of Christian Worship notified the Board (1857) that it could no longer be responsible for the salary of the missionary and asked release from "all further pecuniary duties and responsibilities." The Board decided (July 21, 1857) that despite the Corresponding Secretary's denial of Nicholson's right to take over the school his proposition be accepted, except for possession of the building, and the school discontinued as a mission school, the proceeds from tuition to constitute his salary as a missionary. The Board also requested the Bishop to replace Carrow as Superintendent as soon as practicable; and to request the mission to organize a Quarterly Conference and administer its affairs in all respects "according to the Discipline and usages of the Methodist Episcopal Church." Carrow was relieved as Superintendent and withdrew from all connection with the mission. He left it with its membership reduced to thirty-nine and without a school. The authorities were "completely disheartened." Durbin went so far as to question whether the mission should not be entirely given up but was influenced by Norris and Lore who favored its continuance.

Nicholson, who was a probationary member of Conference, was discontinued by the Baltimore Conference of 1858 because he had given written notice to the Buenos Aires Mission that he had withdrawn "entirely from the service of the Board of Missions . . . renouncing all responsibility thereto or dependence thereupon pecuniary or otherwise."¹⁰

ADMINISTRATION OF WILLIAM GOODFELLOW, 1857-69

In August, 1857, Bishop Ames appointed William Goodfellow* of the Rock River Conference as Superintendent of the Buenos Aires Mission. He was detained in New York until October 26 and did not reach his destination until December 27. Durbin's instructions to the new Superintendent were not of a character to hearten him.¹¹ The Missionary Society was discouraged over their only South American mission. Durbin indicated that if prospects did not brighten they must proceed to close it up, sell the property, and abandon the field. This gloomy outlook did not seem to disconcert Goodfellow. He took hold with a firm hand, made no exorbitant demands, sent no glowing reports, but moved steadily forward. He had been told that the mission would be expected to be wholly self-supporting, and he did not hesitate to place the church "outside of and above the local . . . [Society for the Promotion of Christian Worship] which had so long controlled it." While the society had disavowed financial responsibility, as stated above, a man less confident of his ability to command individual sources of support would naturally have attempted to re-establish the former relationship. This Goodfellow did not do and, nevertheless, did not find it necessary to draw upon the Board for any part of his salary. Within two years the church membership increased from thirty-nine to sixty-seven—fifty-six full members and

* William Goodfellow (1820-98) was born near Wooster, Ohio. He was received into the Ohio Conference on trial in 1844. In 1846 he became a professor in McKendree College, and in 1851 in Illinois Wesleyan University. In 1854 he became a member of the faculty of Garrett Biblical Institute. He transferred to the Rock River Conference in 1855. In 1884 he became supernumerary. His wife, Mary, was a daughter of John Dempster. In Buenos Aires Goodfellow became a friend and counselor of Sarmiento, the great South American educational pioneer. Most significant of his many contributions to the missionary cause was the inauguration of the work of Spanish evangelization in Argentina. —Obituary, Gen'l Minutes, Fall, 1899, p. 439.

eleven probationers. The congregation supported its pastor and met all other expenses.¹²

In 1860 Goodfellow visited Montevideo, Uruguay, on an exploratory tour. He found several Methodists, one a Local Preacher, another a former Class Leader. He proceeded to organize a Class and establish a weekly prayer meeting. An interest very soon developed also in beginning work among the native population. Goodfellow strongly urged the Board to reopen the mission in the city, but the Board was not prepared to act and nine years passed before the Montevideo Mission was re-established.¹³

The Buenos Aires Society continued to grow, though slowly. In 1861 seventy-four full members and twenty probationers were reported. In January, 1863, the Superintendent opened a school for poor children in the parsonage dining room with eighteen pupils. By the close of the year it had reached an enrollment of 103 and had paid its own way. By October, 1864, sixty-three of those enrolled were paying a tuition fee and forty-one were free pupils. Goodfellow had been gradually reaching out into the surrounding country to immigrant settlements until regular monthly preaching appointments had been established at Tatay, Lobos, Guardia del Monte, and Canualas, and once in three months at Tuyu.¹⁴

Before work with the Spanish-speaking population was possible the Superintendent turned hopefully to the large number of Protestant European colonists. The Missionary Society Report for 1864 described one of the most promising of the lines of expansion:

Brother Goodfellow has visited the province of Santa Fé, lying on the Parana, some two days' sail by steamer above Buenos Aires, and found it rapidly filling up by emigrants from Europe, chiefly German and French. These colonists are encouraged in every practicable way by the Government, and are building towns, and prosecuting the cultivation of the soil, and the raising of flocks and herds. They are a thrifty middle class of people, of fair intelligence, and possessed of some money.

About two-thirds of these immigrants were Catholic, continued the Report, the remainder Protestant. "Among the Protestants some excellent men, ministers and preachers, have come with the people, and they express earnest wishes that our mission should accept their services, and take the oversight of their countrymen." These people, "evangelical in their doctrines and experience," offered the churches, schoolhouses, and parsonages which they were building to the mission. The Report drew hopeful parallels to the immigrant work already accomplished in the United States:

it seems to us very probable that we shall see, under the fostering care and aid of our Missionary Society, the work which has been done in the United States among the Germans and Scandinavians repeated among the Germans and the French on the banks of the Parana in South America.¹⁵

Thomas Carter, previously mentioned, changed his mind, was sent out as an assistant, and arrived on February 14, 1864. Most of the out-appointments were supplied by him. In three different localities in the Argentine province of Santa Fe, Goodfellow had secured ground for churches and parsonages. At Rosario, a city of about 30,000, it was hoped to begin building a church at once. Carter established residence in the city and began services in his own hired house. He was successful in securing subscriptions for $1,800. in gold in Rosario, and $1,200. in Buenos Aires. At Esperanza, a second locality, there were some 330 Protestant families. They already had a church and parsonage project under way. At San Carlos, the third immigrant settlement, with a Protestant population of some three hundred German and French, an admirable location for buildings was secured.¹⁶

[This was] the oldest of the agricultural settlements in these countries; the starting-point of the great change from grazing to agriculture now going on over vast extents of territory. Some European Protestants of various nationalities and denominations residing there have long had self-formed independent religious organizations among them on a small scale, all attempting to follow European methods utterly unadapted to their circumstances, and all failing to harmonize divers elements or secure any satisfactory result for their own members, and much less for the irreligious and priest-ridden elements that surround them.¹⁷

At the close of 1864 the mission staff consisted of four ministers: the Superintendent at Buenos Aires; Thomas Carter at Rosario; David F. Sauvain, a Local Preacher of "the Swiss National Church" at Buenos Aires, preaching in French; and John Andres, a retired missionary of the South American Missionary Society, who had united with the Buenos Aires Methodist Church, at Esperanza. The Church in Argentina reported 128 members, including thirty-eight probationers; the day school five teachers and 106 pupils.¹⁸

At this juncture Board members had become confident that the mission was established on a permanent basis and would justify substantial financial investment. In 1864 $16,000. gold was appropriated for the building of a new church in Buenos Aires and when it became apparent that this would be insufficient the amount was increased to $30,000. gold. A beautiful, commodious building was then erected. Locally a rumor was circulated that the Missionary Society was merely a transient society which in a few years would no longer be in existence and "money given would be lost to the donors and to the country. . . . Hearing of this, the Board . . . sent permission to guarantee the return to donors or their heirs all their benefactions for buildings, in case the mission field should be abandoned . . ." ¹⁹

Late in 1865 Goodfellow made an extensive trip, visiting places where missionary work had been established, and where other opportunities offered.

We reached home yesterday [December 1] . . . after twenty-two days' absence, having traveled one thousand miles by railroad, by steamer, by rowboat, sailboat, by boat drawn by peons wading in the water, and again, by their running along on the river bank, by boat towed up the river by horses, and on land by market wagon, diligence, carriage, and on horseback. With great gratitude we returned from this wide and fruitful field²⁰

The "Plan of Work" * as reported by the Superintendent in 1865 listed ten ministers. Other than Goodfellow himself and Thomas Carter, only one of these had been commissioned by the Board—John W. Shank, of the Central Illinois Conference, who arrived in Buenos Aires on March 1, 1866. Francis Neville Lett came to the mission from the Patagonian Missionary Society.† He was assigned to the Buenos Aires Circuit with a "range of travel . . . as wide as four annual conferences of ordinary size." H. R. Nicholson and his family had removed to Azul upon quitting the mission, the preaching point farthest south, where several Methodist families had settled. Goodfellow asked him to resume work and to take charge there. In the city of Santa Fe, and in Parana—formerly the national capital—there were small congregations of Protestants to whom John Andres, Theophilus Weigle, and E. S. Sauvain preached alternately. About forty immigrant families of German Protestants had settled at Villa de Urquiza in the province of Entre Rios. This point also was supplied by the ministers from Esperanza and San Carlos. On a visit to the town Goodfellow started a subscription for a church.‡ It was completed in September, 1867, and John Jacob Rau, who had been licensed to preach two years previously, continued to hold German services and to conduct a day school and Sunday school.

In 1865, two churches were dedicated, one in Esperanza costing $2,455.—of which the Missionary Society contributed $666.—and one in Rosario at a cost of $3,000., other than for the lot, all of which was paid for by residents of Rosario and Buenos Aires.²¹

Other than in such settlements as have been mentioned the English-speaking people were located in scattered groups over a wide expanse of country. In October, 1866, bent on extension of the work, J. W. Shank set out on an exploratory trip.

. . . I . . . traveled, besides four hundred miles by rail and stage-coach, about seven hundred and fifty miles on horseback, and visited from house to house

* The "Plan of Work" for 1865 was: Province of Buenos Aires, William Goodfellow, Superintendent and pastor; John W. Shank, assistant; Buenos Aires (French work), David F. Sauvain; Buenos Aires Circuit, Francis N. Lett; Azul, Henry R. Nicholson; Province of Santa Fe, Rosario, Thomas Carter; Esperanza, John Andres; San Carlos (German work), Theophilus Weigle; San Carlos (French work), Eugene S. Sauvain; Province of Entre Rios, Villa de Urquiza, J. J. Rau.—Forty-seventh Ann. Rep., M.S. (1865), p. 109.

† The Patagonian Missionary Society (later the South American Missionary Society) was founded in 1844 by an Anglican layman. F. N. Lett worked in the mission for a time as a lay catechist. He was employed by the Methodist mission in 1865 and licensed as a Local Preacher. After supplying the Buenos Aires Circuit for two years he was expected to begin work at Cordoba (1868) but instead returned to the Episcopal mission.—E. F. Every, South American Memories of Thirty Years, pp. 60 f.; Forty-eighth Ann. Rep., M.S. (1866), pp. 20 f.; ibid., 49th (1867), pp. 44 f.

‡ In September, 1866, Goodfellow called upon Senor Don Justo Jose de Urquiza, ex-president of Argentina, then governor of Entre Rios, his native province, and appealed to him for assistance in building the church. The Superintendent expressed the hope that he would insure the success of the undertaking. The governor asked if $500. gold would do this and on being assured that it would immediately had an order written for the amount.—J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, Missions and Missionary Society of the Methodist Church, I, 344.

nearly all the English-speaking people settled in a space of country fifty by two hundred miles along the Atlantic coast.

The journey was romantic, but dangerous in no small degree; often traveling alone, the compass was my only guide. I was often compelled to ford lakes and rivers and avoid dangerous quicksands as best I could. . . . and once while alone came squarely upon a lion in the open field. I was welcomed by the people, some even greeting me with shouts of joy and with tears, not having heard a sermon for years. The region visited was organized into a circuit, with pledges on the part of the people to support the minister.

It was while performing this labor, and when about three hundred miles south of Buenos Ayres, that, owing to insufficient diet and excessive riding on ill-trained horses, I completely broke down, and being compelled to continue the excessive horseback riding for days in order to get back to the city, my maladies were so increased that I could not recover except by long-continued rest, if at all. After about two months I returned to the United States²²

In January, 1866, the mission arranged with John Beveridge, a layman, to conduct services in Cordoba. He began a Bible class, circulated books, and in November, 1867, began publication of Estrella Matutina, a religious periodical.²³

The twenty-fifth of May, 1867, was a red-letter day in Buenos Aires Methodism. The occasion was the holding of the first Spanish service after twenty-one years of English language work. In the evening the sermon was preached by a protégé of Goodfellow's, a young English immigrant, John F. Thomson,* who had gone to the Ohio Wesleyan University for an education, and had now returned to inaugurate the new departure.

When the service was opened the larger congregation was outside the house, and the exercises were varied with an occasional tuft of grass or a cobble-stone thrown into the house. The police came to protect the worshipers, and after using a horse-whip a few times the larger crowd was inside. . . . An immense audience greeted the young preacher, leaving no vacant standing room. The altar, pulpit steps, and sofa in the pulpit were all filled. Members of Congress and of the State Legislature, judges, lawyers, and physicians, mingled with the commoner people as they crowded the house of God.²⁴

On June 4, 1868, the mission personnel was further increased by the arrival of Henry G. Jackson of the Northwest Indiana Conference. Goodfellow planned that Jackson should take the pastorate of the Buenos Aires English church, in order to release him entirely for the duties of the superintendency. With the English work in the surrounding area, and in Rosario, and the possibility of a widespread German and French program among immigrants, there was more than enough to occupy the Superintendent's full time. In addition to a Spanish Sunday-evening service at the English church Thomson preached at the Boca, at that time a separate, destitute settlement outside of Buenos Aires, where he established a Sunday school and a day school. Goodfellow had ambitious plans but within a few months after Jackson's arrival his health and that of Mrs. Goodfellow began to decline and he found it necessary to ask for relief from the arduous program which he had so successfully promoted over a period of twelve years. His request for release was granted in April, 1869. Of the five Superintendents of the South America Mission, 1847-93, Goodfellow's term was the longest.²⁵

* John F. Thomson (1843-1933) was born in Plymouth, England, and emigrated in 1853 to Argentina. He graduated from Ohio Wesleyan in 1866 and the same year married Helen Jane Goodfellow, a niece of William Goodfellow. For many years he served as Presiding Elder in Argentina and Uruguay. He was an eloquent speaker but was most widely known for the vigorous, polemical character of his sermons. He was fond of debate and did not hesitate to take on any opponent in theological and ecclesiastical controversy, frequently being the challenger. He had great influence in scholarly circles, particularly among university students.—Official Biographical Files, Division of World Missions; William C. Poole, Compiler, History of One Hundred Years of the First Methodist Episcopal Church (American Church), Buenos Aires, 1836-1936, pamphlet, pp. 12 f.

SPANISH MISSION POLICY DEVELOPED, 1869-78

On April 8, 1869, Bishop Davis W. Clark appointed Henry G. Jackson,* pastor of the Buenos Aires church, as Superintendent of the South America Mission. The Missionary Society at this time was embarrassed by increasing indebtedness and was seeking means of decreasing its obligations. When Jackson recommended limiting missionary operations to the Spanish-speaking people the Board and the General Missionary Committee agreed immediately to the change of policy. He was authorized "to close up at once" the principal German and French missions, leaving only the English work in Rosario and Buenos Aires, the latter being self-supporting.²⁶

In a letter written on November 16, 1869, Jackson related that a Spanish Sunday school which was meeting in the Buenos Aires English church had increased steadily in numbers since its organization a few months previously. The Spanish congregation also was very large.

Often more persons have come than could get into the house. Of course a good many of the English-speaking people attend the Spanish service; but a large majority of the congregation are natives and foreigners, who do not understand English.²⁷

Jackson speculated on the cause of this large increase. He thought it probable that the explanation lay in the aggressively polemical character of Thomson's preaching. He seemed to have some doubt concerning the wisdom of the course pursued but hoped that good would result.

In 1868 Thomson began preaching in Spanish every other Sunday in Montevideo, holding the services in the homes of friends of the cause. Soon larger accommodations were required and the location was changed to the Masonic schoolroom. The Superintendent visited Montevideo in November

* Henry Godden Jackson (1838-1914) was born at Manchester, Ind. After graduation from the Manchester Academy he attended Indiana Asbury University and in 1865 received the M.A. degree. In 1862 he married Alice Clark of Manchester. He was received on trial in the Northwest Indiana Conference and during 1862-65 was principal of Stockwell Collegiate Institute, Stockwell, Ind. He then became pastor of Ames Methodist Episcopal Church, New Orleans, La. On his return from Buenos Aires he served several prominent churches as pastor, including Grand Avenue Church, Kansas City, and Centenary Church, Chicago. In 1890 he was appointed Presiding Elder of the Chicago Northern District, beginning a long period of superintendency in Chicago. He rendered noteworthy service in preparing the Spanish Hymnario of more than one hundred hymns of which fifty-seven were from his own pen—some original productions, others free translations of standard English hymns.—Obituary, Minutes, Rock River Conference, 1913, pp. 97 ff.

(1869) and found "the prospects . . . encouraging." Jackson held an English service. This congregation was small, but he felt that if services were held regularly a good congregation could be gathered. On November 6, 1869, the Committee on South America, at the suggestion of Goodfellow, who was present at the meeting, recommended an appropriation of $2,268. (salary, $1,500., rent, $768.) for work in Montevideo. At the beginning of 1870 the Superintendent transferred Thomson to Montevideo, with the understanding that he would visit Buenos Aires twice each quarter. The English Society had a membership of eighteen, a congregation of about forty, and a weekly prayer meeting of about twenty-five. The Spanish work at Buenos Aires was placed in the charge of Jose J. Rial, a converted Spanish priest who had united with the Methodist Society. He also preached at Barracas in the southern part of the city and within a few months had started a subscription for the building of a chapel.

In Buenos Aires an epidemic of yellow fever in 1871 seriously hampered religious and social activities. Deaths mounted to a height of nine hundred a day, until 25,000 people had died—one-eighth of the entire population. Persons of all ages were numbered among the victims.²⁸

On May 1, 1870, Thomas B. Wood of the Northwest Indiana Conference arrived and was stationed at Rosario. In accordance with Superintendent Jackson's policy the mission program was changed "from that of a chaplaincy for a small English community" to that of a missionary enterprise for the evangelization of the Spanish-speaking people. As might have been anticipated the interest and activity of the English language group rapidly declined. The Spanish services, begun on April 23, 1871, were largely attended—as they were in Buenos Aires. Wood described the first service:

The occasion had been announced in the daily papers, and curiosity brought together a crowd of people, many more than the little church could hold. All classes of the Spanish-speaking people were represented, and among them enough of the highest in society to give the whole enterprise a character of respectability . . . and nothing like disorder has ever shown itself at the first or any subsequent service. . . . Hymns that all can read and understand, tunes in which all are invited to join, prayers in their own language and adapted to the occasion, and sermons that appeal to them as Christians (which they all profess to be) to realize in their hearts and lives the scriptural privileges and duties of Christianity, all this is entirely new to these people, and some of them are getting permanently attached to it.²⁹

A Spanish Sunday school was commenced on April 30, 1871, with four Italians and one gaucho. Attendance soon increased to fifteen and then to twenty-five native and Italian men and youth—no women or children. The opposition of Roman Catholic priests in Rosario to Protestant mission work was intense. Systematic denunciation and threats were made by the priests against all who attended the mission services. This deterred the more timid from continuing to attend or even to study the Bible in their homes, and caused the removal of all "the Romish children" who understood English from the mission's English Sunday school.³⁰

At the close of 1870 Buenos Aires had two English congregations, one English Sunday school, two Spanish congregations, three Spanish Sunday schools, an English Sunday-school teachers' meeting, and a weekly Bible class. The First Church English congregation was of good size; its prayer meeting had an average attendance of about forty-five, and its Sunday school of about 145. The second English congregation, very small in number, met in Barracas.

The First Church Spanish congregation was large and the Society had a number of full members and probationers. The Barracas Spanish congregation was also large, the meeting room crowded to capacity at eight o'clock on Sunday morning.

In 1872 a vacancy occurred in the United States consulate at Rosario and without previous knowledge on his part Thomas B. Wood was appointed acting consul. Concerning this appointment J. M. Reid gave this account :

The United States Consulate is curiously but usefully connected with our work. As early as 1857 the Department of State at Washington discovered the importance of Rosario as the key to the interior provinces of the Argentine Republic, and established there a commercial agency. This was erected into a Consulate in 1870, with jurisdiction covering all the Argentine provinces beyond Buenos Ayres. . . . This post has been held by [T. B. Wood ever since 1872] and became increasingly important as the growth of trade of Rosario advanced. It served to give position to the incumbent, which was of value both in its effect on the public mind and in facilitating intercourse with public men. All the time-consuming work of the Consulate was done by a clerk, and the requirements of the office did not interfere with the regular work of the missionary.³¹

The mission continued to be centered in 1872-73 in the three major cities, Buenos Aires, Rosario, and Montevideo, in each of which activities were maintained in Spanish and English with bilingual preaching services and prayer meetings. At Barracas a new chapel was dedicated on May 9, 1872, for the Spanish congregation. The Rosario prayer meeting was reported as "partly Spanish and partly English." The Spanish congregations in the three cities had an aggregate attendance of six hundred; the English congregations four hundred. In each of the three cities the mission was influential in public education. In the beginning the school authorities and teachers of the Buenos Aires schools used their influence to restrain women and children from attending Methodist religious services but by the early seventies their attitude had changed and the Superintendent of the mission was called on "to draft a complete school system" for the municipality to be recommended for adoption by both private and public schools.

In 1874 Jackson strongly protested lack of reinforcements :

I learn, to my great disappointment, that nothing has been done with regard to sending me help for Buenos Ayres. I have been for months carrying on both the English and Spanish works. The English Church is in good shape and with the time and attention that one man could give it, if he had only it to attend to, it could be made a glorious success. The Spanish work in Buenos Ayres would afford work for two men. How can it be expected that I can do justice to both? It is impossible.³³

The great event of the year was the dedication in March of the new First Methodist Church (popularly known as the "American Church"), at Corrientes 718, Buenos Aires. The total cost, including the lot, building, organ, and furnishings, was $125,874. gold. Toward the cost the Missionary Society contributed $40,000.; the local congregation $85,874.

From Rosario Wood wrote that responsible people were being added to the Church, "both native and English." He was impressed with the opportunity for Spanish evangelization which, he said, "stretches out wide as the Pampas." He mentioned also openings in towns, particularly San Lorenzo and Cordoba.

The mission was encouraged in 1875 by the arrival of Thomas McClintock* of the New Jersey Conference, who was assigned to Buenos Aires First Church. This left Jackson free to give attention to Spanish evangelism and to special work. He was busily engaged in the compilation of a Spanish language hymnbook, of which the first edition was published in 1876. The book contained some original hymns although most were translations.³⁴

Tract † production and distribution by 1875 had come to have an important place in the mission program. Older boys from the Sunday schools were enlisted in distributing tracts and selling Bibles, Testaments, and other books at the railway gates, on river boats, at factory doors at the hour of closing, and on the streets.

Joseph R. Wood of the Northwest Indiana Conference arrived on April 19, 1875, and was sent to Rosario to work in cooperation with his brother, with special reference to English preaching and pastoral service. A few heads of families were the mainstay of the English Society. Other than these the congregation chiefly consisted of working-class people who were quite poor. The Spanish services were attended by a small number of permanent adherents and occasional hearers. The Spanish Sunday school was made up of orphan boys and a few others. J. R. Wood's coming in part testified to the fact that the Missionary Society could not wholly resign itself to neglect the English residents and the immigrant German, French, and Italian population. T. B. Wood had the discernment to realize that if the Protestant immigrants were imbued with zeal and a vital Christian faith they could do much to reinforce the missionary work among the Spanish-speaking native population.

* Thomas McClintock's stay in South America was brief. After a year in Buenos Aires, he was transferred in 1876 to the English Church in Montevideo, and in 1877 he was back in the United States, appointed to Palmyra, N. J.—Biographical File, Board of Missions Library.

† The principal sources for tracts were the American Tract Society and the London Religious Tract Society. The Methodist Tract Society published no tracts in Spanish.

In 1872 at Rosario, T. B. Wood had taken into his home four orphan boys, hoping that the Missionary Society would provide funds for establishing an orphanage with these boys as a nucleus. The Society did not see its way clear to undertake the project but in 1875, when the W.F.M.S. made its second appropriation for work in South America, $1,050.* was included for a girls' orphanage in Rosario.³⁵

Beginning in 1875 T. B. Wood occupied the chair of physics and astronomy in National College, an institution which had recently been established in Rosario as the headquarters of higher education for the province. The local site for Spanish mission operations had proven to be so utterly unfit that Spanish preaching was suspended in 1877 until a suitable place could be provided. Principally by the personal efforts of the missionaries a Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals was founded which succeeded in doing away with bull-fighting in Rosario. In 1877 Wood transferred to Montevideo where he became pastor of the English Church.

Having given nine strenuous years to the superintendency of the South America Mission, in 1878 Jackson asked the Bishops to relieve him and with their consent returned to the United States.³⁶

ADVANCE UNDER WOOD'S ADMINISTRATION, 1878-87

Thomas B. Wood † had distinguished himself as missionary, United States consul (1873-77), and head of the Rosario municipal school system since his arrival on the field in 1870, and when the superintendency became vacant he was the logical appointee. He continued to reside in Montevideo and superintended the mission in addition to his other responsibilities. Thomson was transferred to Buenos Aires in 1878 to give his entire time to evangelistic effort. Wood's enlightened and aggressive program soon registered advance in all lines of missionary work.

Developments in Uruguay were most impressive. Some outstanding converts were made who dedicated themselves to missionary evangelism. One

* The $1,050. appropriation was made up as follows: New England Branch, orphanage, $300.; New York Branch, orphanage, $150.; orphanage expenses, $300.; Baltimore Branch, orphanage, $150.; Philadelphia Branch, orphanage, $75.; Cincinnati Branch, one orphan, $75.

† Thomas B. Wood (1844-1922) was the son of a prominent minister, Dr. Aaron Wood of the Northwest Indiana Conference. He finished studies at Indiana Asbury at nineteen and the next year received from Wesleyan University the degree of A.B. (1864). He continued to study for three years (A.M., Indiana Asbury, 1866; A.M., Wesleyan University, 1867). For the next three years he taught natural science and German at Wesleyan Academy, Wilbraham, Mass. In 1865 he was received on trial in the New England Conference; for two years he was president of Valparaiso College, Indiana; and in 1868 transferred to the Northwest Indiana Conference. In 1867 he was married to Ellen Dow, a musician, and teacher at Wilbraham. In Argentina and Uruguay Wood held numerous educational positions including a professorship of political economy and constitutional government (1874-76), and of astronomy and physics (1876-77) in National College; directorship of a school in the Waldensian country, Uruguay (1887-89); presidency (1889-91) of the Buenos Aires Theological Seminary. He established in 1877 El Evangelista, the first evangelical paper in Uruguay, and was its editor for eleven years (1877-88). He was Presiding Elder of the Lima District, 1891-95; president of the Lima Business College, 1899; the founder of normal schools in Ecuador (1900); president of the Lima Theological Seminary (1905-13); director of the Callao (Peru) mission schools (1907-13) and pastor of the English church, Lima (1907-13). He left Peru on furlough in 1913 and in January, 1915, retired.—Biographical File, Board of Missions Library.

of these was Juan Correa, an untiring and dauntless itinerant, whose journeys embraced the most populous rural areas and principal towns in a wide range of Uruguay. His spirit is revealed in a statement concerning him made by Wood:

Not long ago he was away from home three months, during which he suffered all sorts of hardships, including imprisonment, but was as ready as ever to start again. His imprisonment was in no sense a result of religious persecution, but of the anarchical state of the country The authorities took him for a spy or a conspirator, because they could not conceive it possible that a man should go about, as he was doing, with no other object than to preach the Gospel! ³⁷

Out of Correa's work came Carlos Lastrico, scarcely less adventurous and heroic than Correa.

One of those who heard in Montevideo the Gospel for the first time from the lips of J. F. Thomson was Francis Penzotti, who had come to the city years earlier as an Italian immigrant. His interest was aroused but he did not immediately find the peace that he sought. It remained for Wood and Andrew M. Milne to lead him later into the full light of the Gospel. His conversion was a notable victory for the evangelical cause. Penzotti and Lastrico are "destined," Wood declared, ". . . to carry the Gospel to every cabin and hovel" in eastern South America, "throwing themselves on the people for support," as the heroic Circuit Riders of North America had done in earlier decades. In March, 1879, Penzotti received his first appointment as evangelist to the Waldensians* in Uruguay. At the request of the colonists he removed with his family to the colony, making it his headquarters until 1887. Wood listed in 1880 six centers, besides the capital, in Uruguay where missions had been established: Bella Vista, Pocitos, Union, Esmeralda (all suburban points), Colonia Circuit, and Canelones.

For one year (1881) the South America Mission bore the name Southeast South America Mission.†

Wood gave attention in 1881 to the more thorough organization of the Societies in the principal centers. The Montevideo Society was organized

* The Waldensian sect, whose original center was in a small mountainous area some thirty-five miles southwest of Turin, in Italy, was chiefly an outgrowth of the labors of Peter Waldo who in 1173 became convinced that every man had a right to interpret the Scriptures for himself. In the persecution waged against them by Pope Innocent III early in the thirteenth century thousands were put to death and other thousands fled into exile. Persecution continued through later centuries but the movement could not be suppressed by fire or sword. Seeds were planted in all parts of Europe which produced abundant fruit in the days of Luther and Calvin. Small groups emigrated to South America in 1857 and 1858, most of whom settled first near the city of Florida in southern Uruguay and later "on the left bank of the River Rosario in the Department of Colonia." By 1869 the colony (first named Colonie du Rosario Oriental by the immigrants and later by Uruguayans, Colonia Valdense) had 150 families numbering 809 people.—George B. Watts, The Waldenses in the New World, pp. 3, 5, 46-50.

† The name of the mission was changed by the General Missionary Committee. Two other missions in South America were listed by the committee: Northeast South America, to include the basin of the Amazon and the coast region adjacent; and Western South America, to designate William Taylor's work in those areas. At its 1882 session the General Missionary Committee took action restoring the original name, "all the work of the Missionary Society in South America being comprehended under this designation."—Sixty-third Ann. Rep., M.S. (1881), p. [141]; ibid., 64th (1882), p. [41].

with ten Class Leaders (all but one its own converts, and all but two converted Roman Catholics), six stewards, six trustees, and four Local Preachers. In the Buenos Aires Society a board of trustees was elected and regular Quarterly Conference meetings arranged for. At Rosario also a regular Disciplinary organization was created.³⁸

A member of the Buenos Aires Spanish congregation, a watchmaker, in 1880 gathered a group of ragged children from the streets and began to teach them. A converted night policeman, moved by like zeal, gave of his spare time by day. Between the two they managed to maintain a six hours' school. Money was raised by subscription for rent and school requisites and a room hired. By the beginning of 1881 over fifty boys and girls were in regular attendance. Mr. F. Fletcher, a zealous Englishman, became interested and began to give much of his time to the school. Larger quarters were rented, more pupils enrolled, and more helpers enlisted. By this time pupils numbered about 120, all from the poorest classes. Sunday-school teaching supplemented the day-school instruction. A woman's society was organized under Mrs. Thomson's leadership and by 1883 the "Ragged School" was considered a regular part of the mission's activities.

Owing to the Superintendent's absence* during a part of 1881 only J. R. Wood, of the missionary staff, was free to itinerate. He made a tour of some three hundred miles along the Parana River, nearly one half the way from Rosario to Asuncion, Paraguay. The Spanish work had been developing so rapidly in recent years that in 1881 the total membership—full members and probationers—outnumbered the English nearly four to one. Nearly all day-school pupils were Spanish-speaking. Correa, accompanied by Milne—the American Bible Society's colporteur—was this year on tour in Paraguay and Matto Grosso Province (Brazil) which were for the first time in their history visited by Protestant preachers.

William Tallon,† who had been assisting Thomson in Buenos Aires, was appointed to the American Church in Montevideo in 1881, the beginning of a long and fruitful ministry. He was effective in defense of Protestantism from the pulpit and in public discussions in the university, and brought into the Church "a number of young men of superior education, unusual talent, and well tempered zeal." A mission headquarters' site was purchased in Montevideo in 1883 within a square from the proposed site for the new national government buildings.³⁹

* T. B. Wood was given leave of absence for a part of 1881-82 for recuperation. His responsibilities as Superintendent were taken over during his absence by Mrs. Wood.—Sixty-third Ann. Rep., M.S. (1881), p. 45.

† William Tallon (1848-1911), born in England and taken to Argentina as a child, received his entire education in South America. He was converted under the ministry of William Goodfellow and in 1881 was received on trial in absentia in the Austin Conference (Gen'l Minutes, Fall, 1881, pp. 291 f.). His ministry was spent in the pastorate and the presiding eldership. He was twice married, his second wife, whom he married in 1909, being Bertha Kneeland, a W.F.M.S. missionary. As a delegate to the 1908 General Conference he made his only trip to the United States. As a preacher of the Gospel his influence was widely felt in South America. He stood high in public esteem and he was deeply loved by many.—Biographical File, Board of Missions Library.

In 1882 Bishop W. L. Harris in the course of a trip around the South American continent visited Argentina and Uruguay with the purpose of inspecting the missions and counseling with the missionaries and native workers. He arrived in Montevideo on January 16. The episcopal visit was keenly anticipated, the more so because the mission had only once before been visited by a Bishop, and that nine years previously. Unfortunately Harris' visit occurred during Superintendent Wood's absence on furlough. His conferences with the Spanish pastors and laymen materially strengthened the connectional feeling among them.⁴⁰

The first successful effort to enter Bolivia was made in 1883. No previous attempt had been made since 1879 when Jose Mongiardino, a colporteur, was murdered and the Bibles he took into the country were burned. This year Penzotti and Milne succeeded in entering and canvassing the principal towns and villages, including, among others, Tupiza, Potosi, Sucre, Oruro, and La Paz. Penzotti served as an evangelist and Milne as a colporteur. In June, 1884, Penzotti, accompanied by two colporteurs, John P. Geymonat and P. Ocariz, again visited Bolivia.* They held public services in the frontier town of Tupiza, and from there went on to Potosi, Sucre, Cochabamba, Punata, Oruro, and other towns, finally reaching La Paz. In Chuquisaca they established a Sunday school. In La Paz they obtained employment for a time as carpenters while they worked by night as evangelists.⁴¹

In the two years 1882-83 the Buenos Aires English church registered a net gain of forty-five members. Thomas H. Stockton† of the Newark Conference arrived in 1883, with his family, to become its full-time pastor, permitting Thomson to give his entire time to the Spanish work. He was well received by the congregation. The church from the beginning of his ministry provided his entire support and all church expenses, aided the Spanish work financially, and during his first year raised $100. for general missions. In 1884 Thomson was appointed to the Buenos Aires City and Province Circuit.

Superintendent Wood reported that the years 1884-85, despite the petty persecution which still was met everywhere, were the most successful of any since the founding of the mission.

The conversion of souls, the ingathering of members, the founding of new congregations, Sunday-schools, and day schools, the increase of funds raised, both in the aggregate and in the average per member, the growth of reliability and zeal in the new workers, . . . and a sensible gain in our hold on the public mind, are the salient features of our progress.⁴²

* On this, as on the preceding tour, Penzotti crossed the Andes to the Pacific coast, where in Tacna, Iquique, Antofagasta, Caldera, Copiapo, and other towns he preached and distributed Bibles.

† Thomas H. Stockton (1839-92) was born in Philadelphia, the son of Dr. Thomas H. Stockton, an illustrious minister of the Methodist Protestant Church. He was received on trial in the New Jersey Conference in 1871 (Gen'l Minutes, 1871, p. 63) and transferred to the Newark Conference in 1878, serving pastorates in both. He was an able preacher, deeply interested in the Christian education of young people.—Official Biographical Files, Division of World Missions; Christian Advocate, LXVII (1872), 32 (Aug. 11), 547.

In 1885 there were thirteen "helpers under regular appointment." In addition there were eighteen others who had acted as supplies or assistants at various places during a part or the whole of the year.

A line of new appointments was established in 1885 from Montevideo to Porto Alegre, Brazil, a distance of five hundred miles. Tallon's work included "a self-supporting day school, a growing Sunday school, a class . . . and a congregation at Porongos" and congregations begun in other places. Lemos had a day school, a Sunday school, and a congregation at San Fructuoso; and Correa a day school, a Sunday school, a Class, and a Bible depot at Porto Alegre, with congregations developing at several places.

The Rosario Circuit in 1885 embraced new work near the city west of the river under the charge of Rudolph Gerber, who began a day school in Carcarana. At Helvicia, farther up the river, a day school was established by J. R. Wood. Developments had been under way for a year on the West Entre Rios Circuit. At Mendoza, in the far interior, at the foot of the Andine wall, about 720 miles west of Buenos Aires, a congregation had been gathered, with a Sunday school and a Bible depot, by Thomas Cingiali, a colporteur.

Self-supporting Protestant day schools,* an early outgrowth of the evangelical movement, gradually increased in number over the years. Growth was accelerated in the eighties, as indicated by the establishment of the five above-mentioned schools in 1885. Four years later there were over twenty self-supporting primary schools.⁴³

Beginning in December, 1885, Penzotti, again accompanied by Milne, made his third extended itinerary. By way of London, they went to Venezuela where, beginning at La Guayra—its principal port—they visited many of the principal cities, not only of that republic, but also of the Isthmus of Panama, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru, and Chile, preaching everywhere it was possible and selling Bibles. On this trip they were absent from their homes for fourteen months of dangerous work "and sufferings of all kinds." For more than a year Penzotti did not hear from his wife or children.⁴⁴

In 1886 immigrant Protestant representatives of the San Carlos rural region again sent a petition asking the Methodist mission to supply them with religious services. Wood acceded to the request, reversing the policy which Jackson had adopted seventeen years before, and assigned Robert Weilmüller, a Local Preacher, to San Carlos, a four-week Circuit whose extreme points were nearly fifty miles apart.⁴⁵

First Church, Buenos Aires, in 1887 was stated by Wood to be more vigorous than ever before. Beginning in 1886 Second Church (Spanish)

* The Methodist veteran in the self-supporting Protestant day-school work was Salvador Negrotto. For over thirty years he was an influential leader in the movement, the school which he himself conducted being widely known as a Protestant institution. Many of his pupils were from prominent families and not a few became leaders of liberal thought and action. He received no aid from the Missionary Society, and was a generous patron of all mission enterprises. He died in Buenos Aires in 1885.—Sixty-seventh Ann. Rep., M.S. (1885), pp. 43 f.

was in the charge of George Paddock Howard,* whose work was highly successful. The Ragged School continued to flourish, aided by a government rent subsidy of $100. a month.

In Uruguay by 1887 Methodist missionary operations had become so interwoven with the Waldensian that it was almost impossible for lines of separation to be drawn. The Spanish and French work also was inseparable. The "Department of Colonia" of Uruguay had many Waldensian immigrants. The Waldensian Synod in Europe made no effort to promote religious activities among them or to organize churches. Some of the immigrants, however, themselves took the initiative in organizing religious societies. A Waldensian minister, Daniel Armand Ugon, a graduate of the Waldensian Theological School of Florence, Italy, and his wife arrived on November 27, 1877. He formed "congregations at two points, with 6 Sunday-schools, 5 day-schools, and about 450 church members." The organic form of organization was Waldensian but the methods used were Methodistic. On Wood's invitation he entered the employ of the Methodist mission in 1884, was appointed to the Colonia Circuit, and opened a theological school for the training of young men for the ministry. In 1886-87 ten students were enrolled in three classes. Under his ministry many of the Waldensians were drawn into closer relations with the Methodists. Not less than twenty lay and ministerial workers were recruited at this time from among the Waldensians for the mission's program of Spanish evangelization.⁴⁶

In Montevideo services were being held in several different centers. In one place a new convert opened his home for meetings twice a week. Charles W. Miller of the Alabama Conference, who arrived in February, 1887, was appointed to the English work. Apart from these developments in and about the city of Montevideo, extensive English and Spanish work was under way in the interior. On the Central Uruguay Circuit the important city of Durazno, long impenetrable, was entered. There were good results in the city of Florida. Tallon had won recognition all through the interior of the republic as an important public man. Far into the interior on the Rio Grande Circuit (Brazil) two new Classes had been formed.⁴⁷ In both Uruguay and Argentina liberal sentiment was spreading during the decade of the eighties. By 1884 there were marked changes in public and governmental attitudes. El Diario, an influential, widely read daily, published in Montevideo, openly supported the evangelical movement. In Buenos Aires La Patria Argentina, also a daily of large influence, "declared itself in favor of the true Christianity as

* George Paddock Howard (1858-1909) was born in Buenos Aires. He was converted in 1878 under Jackson's ministry and for the next four years was a self-supporting pastor in Buenos Aires. From 1883 to 1885 he acted as a supply preacher and "helper," and in 1886 received his first appointment. He was Presiding Elder of the Rosario District during 1900-1903; the Uruguay District, 1903-1907; Buenos Aires Central District, 1907-1909. He was absent from the field only one short period in more than twenty years. Death came to him in London, England, where he had gone for recuperation. He has been described as "one of the most useful ministers of the Methodist Episcopal Church in eastern South America."—Homer C. Stuntz, South American Neighbors, p. 197; Official Biographical Files, Division of World Missions.

distinguished from the false . . .” In Rosario La Capital opened its columns to J. R. Wood for articles advocating evangelical religion. The Argentine national government opened a Normal School in Cordoba, one of the strongest Roman Catholic centers, with four North American Protestant teachers. There were also developments of even wider significance. In two provinces of Argentina—Entre Rios and Santiago—the “organic relation between Church and State” was abolished by state constitutional amendment. The Argentine National Congress passed a bill “banishing sectarian instruction from the curriculum of schools dependent on the national government.” Prelates were deposed from their offices by executive decree, government appropriations for Church purposes were cut off, and the Pope’s legate was exiled.⁴⁸

Civil war in Uruguay in 1886 compelled the suspension of almost all religious activities in the interior. Conditions were so serious that the annual meeting of the mission which had been scheduled for Montevideo had to be changed to Buenos Aires. Thousands fled from the city to avoid impressment into the army but not any of the native preachers were moved by the dangers which threatened them, meeting all of their engagements even though church services were attended by very few persons.⁴⁹

One of Wood’s major interests from the beginning of his missionary career was temperance reform, in which practically nothing was being done. What is said to have been the first organized effort was the formation of a teetotaler’s club in the little Rosario Methodist Society in 1874 under Wood’s pastorate. This later developed into a Good Templars’ Lodge and from that point expanded aggressively. One of the difficulties was that some Methodist church members considered temperance activity a variety of fanaticism which hindered the growth of Protestantism and they were hostile to temperance education. To avoid controversy within the Church propaganda was chiefly confined to the temperance organizations.

By the close of his superintendency Wood had become convinced that South America must be evangelized chiefly by personal effort with individuals. “Everything else,” he said, “is secondary to this.” In some countries, particularly in Bolivia and Ecuador, evangelical preaching in Spanish was still prohibited by law. In all countries, however, the way was more or less open for house-to-house visitation and for the distribution of evangelical literature. In 1887 Wood wrote to the Missionary Society:

This truly apostolic method was long left to the colporteurs, but in late years we have not only extended it, but also developed it as an essential part of pastoral and evangelistic labor. Our pioneer preachers, Correa, Penzotti, Aboledo, Lastrico, Ferrarini, and others, have had training as colporteurs, and now carry their experience thus acquired into all their work.

In 1887 Wood was released at his own request from the superintendency of the mission.⁵⁰

THE MISSION UNDER DREES' LEADERSHIP, 1887-93

Fortunately an experienced missionary, well versed in the Spanish language and familiar with the conditions he would be called upon to meet, was available for the superintendency. On May 25, 1887, Charles W. Drees,* for thirteen years a missionary in Mexico, and for nine years the Superintendent of the Mexico Mission, was appointed to South America. On July 26 he arrived in Buenos Aires† where he was met by Wood:

I transferred the superintendency to him August 1, introducing him immediately by circulars to all our workers; also to the workers of other denominations in these parts of the world; also to over a hundred of the most important men in civil authority in these countries; also to about a hundred leading journalists and many business men with whose enterprises our work has come in contact.⁵¹

In his first report to the Missionary Society Drees told of developments in the latter part of 1887 and in 1888. In Barracas where services had been discontinued early in 1887 they were resumed later in the year and the little chapel repaired and reopened. A site for a chapel had been procured at La Plata, the capital of Buenos Aires Province, about thirty-one miles southeast of the city of Buenos Aires.

At Rosario John M. Spangler, who had been with the Taylor mission in Chile for several years, had been appointed pastor of the English Society. The church had assumed his entire support, and under his leading there had been sixteen conversions and the membership had more than doubled. Juan Robles had been given charge of the Rosario Spanish Circuit. On the San Carlos Circuit, in order to minister to the several nationalities, Weilmüller had inaugurated preaching services in three languages—Spanish, German, and French. At Mendoza a large building which had been the headquarters of an Italian mutual aid society was purchased, remodeled, the interior re-finished, and in September, 1889, dedicated as a house of worship. It was agreed that morning services should be held in English and evening services in Spanish.⁵²

At the beginning of 1887 Penzotti had been appointed pastor of the Spanish church at Rosario but later at the request of the American Bible Society he

* Charles W. Dress (1851-1926) was born in Xenia, Ohio. At eleven years of age he united with the Methodist Church and at twenty was licensed to preach. He graduated at the Ohio Wesleyan University (A.B., 1871) and at the Boston University School of Theology (B.D., 1874). From there he went immediately to Mexico where he began his missionary work at Puebla. In 1878 he was appointed Superintendent of the mission. For some years he was also editor of the mission periodical, El Abogado. Following his service in South America he was Superintendent of the Puerto Rico Mission (1900-1904). He was commissioned by the American Bible Society to go to Spain to assist in the revision of the Spanish New Testament (1912-16). He translated the Methodist Discipline into Spanish, and revised the Spanish translation of Watson's Life of Wesley. On Oct. 1, 1924, after fifty years of active service, he retired. His scholarly training and acute mind enabled him to add materially to the impact of evangelical truth upon the scholarship and thought of Latin America.—Biographical File, Board of Missions Library.

† On Bishop Fowler's recommendation, made in 1886, the headquarters of the mission was returned to Buenos Aires. A theater at Mercedes, Buenos Aires, in which J. F. Thomson had been preaching to great audiences, was purchased in the same year as also other property intended as a site for a theological school and for a Spanish church.—Sixty-eighth Ann. Rep., M.S. (1886), p. 54.

was loaned to the society as their agent for the Pacific coast. Accompanied by his family and J. B. Arancet, he set out for Peru. When he arrived at Arica he was detained for six months by a cholera quarantine. Here he successfully conducted Bible distribution and held well-attended Spanish services. In July, 1888, he arrived at Callao and on November 3 wrote to Drees:

I am very happy in this new field as soon as I arrived here [Callao] I sought to bring the people together, and from that time have held three meetings each week. The attendance and interest have constantly increased. . . . Both the people and myself are very sorry that I am compelled to leave them so frequently as I must in going into the interior and to Northern and Southern Peru . . . in promoting the circulation of the Bible.⁵³

Meetings were at first held in a rented hall and when that would not accommodate the audience a larger building was found. An English chapel in Callao, the seaport of Lima, held about four hundred people. As there was no pastor it had remained closed for some time. This was offered to Penzotti for Sunday services, an offer which he gladly accepted. Soon persecution began and permission for the use of the chapel was withdrawn. After much difficulty another hall was procured and services were resumed. Much interest was awakened which in turn brought about intense and vicious persecution that continued month after month without abatement.⁵⁴

At Montevideo a new arrangement was instituted in 1888, dividing the city and suburbs into two Circuits. Three secondary points—Cuaram, San Jose, and Municipio Street—were tied in with the central church, all under the charge of George Paddock Howard; and the second Circuit, Aguador, was assigned to Antonio Guelfi. The fourteen schools, with about eight hundred pupils, were continued under the general supervision of Guelfi. The removal of a large number of English families from the city was a hindrance to the increase in attendance at the English services. No marked advance was made during the year on any of the four* interior Circuits.⁵⁵

By 1888 the day school at Porto Alegre (Brazil), capital of Rio Grande do Sul Province, had expanded into three schools with 221 pupils. Before opening the work in Brazil Wood had interviewed the emperor and two of his ministers on the subject of religious freedom. It had been understood earlier, when the first evangelical schools had been established in the empire, that the Bible would be excluded from them. Wood succeeded in gaining the emperor's consent for the teaching of the Bible on condition that respect should be shown for the established religion.† Two Sunday schools also had been organized and preaching services were maintained in two of the school-houses.

* The four interior Circuits were: Colonia, among the Waldensians; Canelones, which included a number of rural settlements; Central Uruguay, including Porongos (Trinidad), Durazno, Florida, San Jose, and Mercedes; and Tacuarimbo, embracing San Fructuoso, Paso de los Toros, Piedro Sola, Anoyalto, Cerro Largo, and other places in northern Uruguay.

† T. B. Wood's success in gaining permission for the teaching of the Bible in the schools was a foregleam of the decree of the Brazilian provisional government on Jan. 7, 1890, which guaranteed civil and religious freedom to all subjects of the empire.

A Sunday school was also organized in 1888 in Caracas, the capital of Venezuela, conducted from February to June by H. D. Osuna, a colporteur. Interest had been awakened by the visit made to the country in 1886 by Penzotti and Milne. A group of families petitioned the mission, asking for Penzotti to be sent to them as a permanent missionary but he was appointed instead to Peru and no missionary was available for Venezuela.⁵⁶

While Paraguay was visited in 1884, following the first tour by colporteurs in 1881, it was not until 1886 that aggressive missionary work was begun. In that year Juan Villanueva was appointed to establish a Paraguay Circuit. In 1887 Wood reported that Villanueva was keeping his round of appointments, observing growing interest in the preaching services. His name first appeared in the 1887 list of Local Preachers. If interest was increasing so also were threats.

Brother Villanueva has been repeatedly warned that he should go well armed, to guard against assassination. But he goes everywhere unarmed, speaking boldly against priestcraft and superstition. He told me once that if they killed him I must make haste and send another man to carry on the work. His brave wife, too, said on one occasion that she did not know but that it would require his death to teach the people that the Gospel cannot be killed by killing its champion.⁵⁷

The Circuit included Asuncion with regular visits "to the German colonies of Altos and San Bernardino and to the town of Paraguari." Villanueva was the only Protestant pastor in Paraguay and despite malicious hostility his influence was increasing in the newly established colonies. A mission school was maintained in Asuncion with Miss Juana Villanueva as teacher. Drees expressed interest in establishing missionary work among the Indians of northern and western Paraguay but no definite move was made.

A serious hindrance to Protestantism was the impossibility, because of the opposition of the Jesuits, of enrolling Protestant marriages in the Civil Register. The 1887 Paraguay Congress after much controversy enacted a law which provided that they should be enrolled as legal and on a par with Catholic marriages. In 1891 Drees reported that Juan Villanueva continued to meet with success. Attendance upon his services increased and the school enrollment advanced beyond one hundred.⁵⁸

After scrutiny of all data Drees estimated that there had been in 1888, in the entire mission, at least 176 genuine conversions. He was encouraged also by growth of self-support.* Not less than $26,000. gold had been collected for all purposes. Of this amount $5,250. represented school income. Six languages were regularly used in the work of the mission: English, Spanish, Portuguese, German, French, and Italian.* The 1888 annual meeting discussed the obligation of the Church to the Brazilian freedmen emancipated by the government decree of 1888, and also to the Indian population of the country. No specific action was taken.⁵⁹

* Four charges were entirely self-supporting: First Church, Buenos Aires; Rosario and Carcarana; Central Santa Fe Circuit; and San Carlos Circuit. Three other churches contributed considerable sums toward self-support: American Church, Montevideo; Montevideo Circuit; and Rosario Circuit. Almost without exception all minor church expenses were borne by the congregation.—Seventieth Ann. Rep., M.S. (1888), p. 39.

A mission press under direction of W. T. Robinson, earlier a Taylor missionary, supplied a sizable quantity of the literature distributed by pastors and colporteurs, chiefly in Spanish. Approximately 850,000 pages, tracts and periodicals, were reported in 1888 as having been printed. Books from the Mexico Mission press and from the American Tract Society were also circulated.⁶⁰

Bishop John M. Walden convened the South America Mission in annual meeting in First Church, Buenos Aires, September 19, 1889. The meeting closed on September 24. Of the twenty members of the mission, seventeen were in attendance. Five of the W.F.M.S. missionaries were present, as also almost all of the twelve Local Preachers.

The membership of the churches increased in 1890 by 295, or about nineteen per cent. The Sunday schools added 385 to their enrollment. The ease with which children could be brought into the schools in Montevideo and Buenos Aires indicated to Drees that Sunday schools represented one of the most promising lines of missionary activity. On the Montevideo Circuit alone eight were maintained in 1891. On the Colonia Circuit the school opened in 1884 by Ugon had been expanded into an institute (Liceo Evangelico) which this year (1891) enrolled forty students. The theological department had been transferred in 1889 to Buenos Aires. T. B. Wood who had remained for the time being in Uruguay gave the school general supervision. The mission force was strengthened at this time by the arrival in Montevideo of A. W. Greenman† and wife. He was appointed pastor of American Church.⁶¹

* J. M. Walden: "In what other Protestant mission on the globe, in what other field occupied by our world-wide Methodism, are there so many nationalities represented?" "Of the . . . twenty [missionaries] 6 were born in the United States, 4 in Spain, 2 in Great Britain, 2 in Switzerland, 1 in Italy, 1 in Portugal, and 4 in the Argentine Republic." Of the four Argentines "1 was of American parentage, 1 of Irish, 1 of Italian, 1 of Anglo-Portuguese. All but the 6 Americans, 2 Swiss, and 1 Spaniard were converted and called to preach within the mission . . . The genesis of the local preachers . . . is almost as diverse as that of the traveling preachers . . ."—In Seventy-first Ann. Rep., M.S. (1880), pp. 45 f.

† Almon Witter Greenman (1854-1942) was born in Newcastle, Ind. He attended Northwestern University, Garrett Biblical Institute, and Syracuse University (Ph.D., 1892). In April, 1880, he married Marinda R. Gammon. He was received on trial in the North Indiana Conference and appointed missionary to Mexico where he remained until 1889 when he was transferred to the Northwest Indiana Conference and appointed to New Carlisle. In October, 1890, he returned to the North Indiana Conference and was appointed missionary to South America. After fourteen years' service he left on furlough (1904). For two years he was in the pastorate (Wabash and Fairmount, 1905-1907) in the North Indiana Conference. For ten years (1908-18) he served as a missionary to Italy; and for a brief period, following a furlough, was again in South America (Peru). He retired in 1924, honored for his long, varied, and fruitful career.—Official Biographical Files, Division of World Missions.

In Buenos Aires by 1891 twelve Spanish mission centers* were in operation in the city and suburbs in addition to the central church where on Sunday evening the congregation usually filled the building to its utmost capacity. Other than the Spanish work a meeting for Italian people was maintained in the suburban town of San Fernando, a dozen miles beyond the city limits. This year the Superintendent asked for a special appropriation of $300. to open mission work in Balcarce in the province of Buenos Aires, about 250 miles from the city. Soon afterward a Society was organized with a membership of sixty-two adults and a Sunday school of more than fifty children.⁶²

In Buenos Aires T. H. Stockton was influential in the founding in 1890-91 of the North American Normal School, with an efficient corps of teachers, which soon had enrolled about a hundred pupils. While not organically connected with the Church, it was "designed to be an adjunct to it; and . . . ultimately incorporated therewith." In the Boca neighborhood W. C. Morris, an influential layman, was instrumental in inaugurating English language mission services. An English day school also was begun. Advance was also registered in the western Circuit of Mendoza and the newly opened San Juan area. On the Mendoza Circuit a day school was organized under the care of R. Griot, assistant pastor, with a sufficient number of pupils to provide for all the expense involved. In San Rafael, a town some distance south of Mendoza, a Methodist layman opened his home for religious services which he himself conducted. In San Juan, capital of San Juan Province, western Argentina, where colporteurs of the American and the British Bible societies had been active for some time in distributing tracts and selling Bibles, a few religious meetings had been held in private houses. Learning of the interest which had been awakened, a friend of the mission contributed £50 sterling toward the rental of a house for regular services. Venancio Aguirre, one of the colporteurs, was appointed as preacher. Within a few months twelve full members and nineteen probationers were enrolled, a Sunday school was begun, and the property purchased, the same friend contributing $3,000. Argentine currency as a first installment toward the purchase price.

In Central Argentina, comprising the Santa Fe and the Entre Rios Provinces, in 1891 there were five charges.† The Rosario church and con-

* Drees enumerated the twelve Spanish mission centers in his 1891 report to the Board. The central point of activity and influence was the church in the center of the city. To the north in Calle Junin was a mission with a day school enrolling about 180 pupils, a Sunday school, preaching and prayer services. Farther northward in a mission chapel in Calle Medrano, was a day school for girls and a Sunday school. Still farther to the north, in the suburban town of Belgrano, meeting in the same hall as the English congregation, was a Sunday school. Directly west from the central point, "along the main axis of the city" in Calle Pasco, a small hall of the theological school provided a place for preaching services and for a Sunday school. Farther westward, in the town of Flores, was another preaching place. Beyond, in San Miguel, the Young Men's Christian Association maintained a mission and another at the estancia of the same name. In the southwestern section of the city there were two places of worship, about a mile apart, each with a Sunday school. Still another Sunday school was held in a private home. In a little chapel located in North Barracas meetings were regularly held, and finally in a section of the city known as the Boca a variety of activities were carried on.—Seventy-third Ann. Rep., M.S. (1891), pp. 47 f.

† The five charges of Central Argentina in 1891 were: Rosario and Carcarana (English); Rosario Circuit (Spanish); Central Argentine Circuit (German); San Carlos Circuit (French, German, and Spanish); Entre Rios Circuit.

gregation were specially interested in benevolent and charitable activities, of which one was a house of shelter for homeless wanderers. People of Waldensian descent in Tala on the Entre Rios Circuit donated land and raised $700. toward the cost of a chapel.⁶³

In January, 1890, Penzotti left Callao taking with him two colporteurs, J. B. Arancet and J. Q. Illescas, for a brief period of Bible distribution in south Peru. He sent his two helpers to a town near Mollendo and went on to Arequipa alone. A few hours after his arrival he was observed by the Roman Catholic Bishop in the act of selling a Bible. The Bishop ordered the police to arrest him. He was taken into custody and on the order of the mayor put into prison. Nineteen days passed while the authorities engaged in investigations and legal proceedings. On the morning of the twentieth day the mayor came to the prison with a telegram from the president of Peru ordering Penzotti's release. He returned to Callao and resumed his preaching services. Here he was visited by Drees and Milne who organized a Methodist Society. Following its organization vehement attacks were made in the press, adherents were maltreated, and an inscription was written on the door of the meeting hall, "muere los Protestantes" (death to the Protestants). Then a judge issued an order for Penzotti's imprisonment, accusing him of violation of Article 4 of the Peruvian constitution, which read, "The State professes and protects the Apostolic Roman Catholic religion, excluding all other public worship." Pending trial he was arrested on July 26, 1890, and denied bail. In his 1890 annual report Drees gives an account of his imprisonment:

[He was] dragged to prison in the common jail, where he has ever since been confined under circumstances whose description would in some points read like Kennan's portrayal of Siberian prisons. He is compelled to pass his nights in a common dungeon, half subterranean, with from 80 to 100 criminals of all descriptions, from common thieves to murderers. Four months have passed, and up to latest telegraphic news, on October 16, all efforts to secure his release on bail have been fruitless. Meanwhile, his trial is dragging its slow length along. . . . He is of martyr stuff, and, I verily believe, would not flinch though the iron stake still stood in the old plaza of the Inquisition in Lima His people, too, stand firm, and themselves maintain the meetings with all regularity, while their beloved pastor prays with them in the spirit from his prison cell. Both they and he are upheld by a firm faith that they are fighting the battle of religious liberty for Peru and that God will give them the victory.

The members of the Supreme Court were unable to agree on a decision but finally the president of the court "decreed . . . [his] liberty." Still he was not released. Three months later E. E. Olcott, a New York mining engineer, visited him, took photographs, and wrote an article on the case which was printed "in the New York Herald and other periodicals." This publicity awakened widespread interest and many influential persons intervened in Penzotti's behalf. Finally, on March 28, 1891, after eight months and two days of imprisonment he was released. On the following Sunday he resumed his church services.⁶⁴

The Missionary Society regarded the persecution of Penzotti as a challenge to religious liberty in South America which could not be ignored. The Secretary of State of the United States intervened with the government of Peru in behalf of freedom of conscience. The Secretaries of the Board communicated with the Peruvian minister to the United States asking assurance that religious tolerance and liberty of worship be guaranteed to Protestant missionaries and colonists. The court's verdict set a precedent for a liberal interpretation of the law which in its original intent would exclude all liberty of teaching and worship.⁶⁵

In 1890 Thomson arrived in La Paz, Bolivia, after an extensive tour during which he had visited all of the other important cities of the country, delivering public addresses on religion. Here he found J. B. Arancet, with his wife and family, who had been appointed to the city by the American Bible Society as their agent. In addition to Bible selling he was holding meetings in his house. Thomson cooperated with him in the meetings. Bolivia had a large Indian population, many of whom spoke some dialect of the Quechua language, the vernacular of about three million Indians. As a means of preparing the way for elementary religious instruction of Indians a little company of the liberal young men of the city was organized into a Society for the promotion of Indian Sunday schools.⁶⁶

At the 1891 annual meeting held in Montevideo, October 8-14, the mission was organized into three Districts: Central District, C. W. Drees, Presiding Elder; Eastern District, A. W. Greenman, Presiding Elder; and Western District, T. B. Wood, Presiding Elder. Drees was also continued as mission Superintendent. During his absence in the United States on furlough the Central District "was provisionally divided into two," the Central, J. F. Thomson, Presiding Elder, and the Andine, C. W. Miller, Presiding Elder. In San Juan on the Andine District in less than two years after the beginning of evangelical preaching services, weekly meetings were conducted in three halls besides services in various homes of friendly families—one conducted in French. A primary day school had also been begun.⁶⁷

On the Eastern District the great increase of immigration in Brazil and the consequent stimulation of commercial activity increased the importance of Rio Grande do Sul as a fruitful field for missionary effort. With two congregations, two Sunday schools, and three day schools, Porto Alegre became one of the most influential of the mission centers. A wide field was also opened in the colonies in the northern part of the state. At Alfredo Chaves, with twenty-six full members and sixteen probationers, a chapel was in process of erection, made possible by the contributions of money and labor of the members. At Bento Gonzales thirty full members and fifty-four probationers were enrolled.

Thomas B. Wood, appointed to the newly constituted Western District, proceeded promptly to Lima and in June, 1892, reported schoolwork having developed so rapidly and unexpectedly that it was absolutely necessary for a man and two women teachers to be sent out as reinforcements "at the earliest possible day." He had a high school for boys under his direction; a high school for girls and a primary school for boys and girls, both under direction of Miss Elsie Wood, his daughter; with a total enrollment of ninety-nine pupils. The teachers were "all Christians, all evangelical workers, and the schools . . . [were] mission schools." By 1893 five day schools were in operation at Callao, the Society had a hundred members, preparations had been made for a high-grade school at Lima, a theological school was projected, and other Societies were in process of formation in and about Lima. Wood felt there was a possibility of developing a strong Circuit composed of points within easy reach by rail from Lima and in 1892 asked the Missionary Society to reclaim Penzotti from the Bible Society for this purpose.

No other man . . . can do this so well as Penzotti His sufferings and triumphs on this ground give him a peculiar advantage that no other can have. . . . Let him return to his calling, the ministry, and to his former employ under the Missionary Society.

Wood's request was not granted by the Missionary Society and Penzotti continued in the employ of the Bible Society.

On July 29, 1892, Thomas H. Stockton, pastor of First Church, Buenos Aires, died from an attack of the grippe, at that time epidemic in Argentina. "The nine years of his service in the mission were years of unremitting toil." His influence had been widely felt and his death was a serious loss to the mission. He was succeeded by William P. McLaughlin* of the Louisiana Conference who arrived in Buenos Aires on December 22, 1892.⁶⁸

WOMEN'S WORK IN SOUTH AMERICA

In 1872, two years after beginning work in Rosario, Thomas B. Wood appealed to the W.F.M.S. for assistance in missionary work among South American women. "We want a few Christian women . . . to show these people that a woman's mind and soul is her own, and not her priest's." There were some women, he said, who were beginning to realize this, but it was impossible for a man to go to their homes to talk with them about

* William P. McLaughlin (1849-1921) was born in Cincinnati, Ohio. He attended Ohio Wesleyan University (A.B., 1871; A.M., 1874) and the Boston University Theological School (S.T.B., 1875). In 1873 he married Mary R. Long of London, Ohio. He was received on trial in the Ohio Conference in 1875 (Gen'l Minutes, 1875, p. 146) and for ten years (1875-85) held pastorates in that Conference. He then transferred to the Louisiana Conference and became Presiding Elder of the Mission District. He and his wife sailed for South America on Nov. 9, 1892, under appointment to the First Methodist Church, Buenos Aires. For twenty-nine years—until the day of his death, Feb. 18, 1921—he continued as its pastor. Up to that time this was said to be the longest pastorate in the history of Methodism. He had friends in every circle of influence in the largest city of Argentina and was an indefatigable worker for religious and civic welfare, honored and esteemed far beyond the circle of members of his church.—Official Biographical Files, Division of World Missions.

religion. Wood's letter was printed in the Heathen Woman's Friend and met with immediate response. The W.F.M.S. General Executive Committee at its next meeting provided for an appropriation of $50. "to be used by Mrs. . . . T. B. Wood of Rosario, S.A. for the employment of Bible readers in the mission work in that city." In 1873 the Northwestern Branch appropriated $1,500. for a "missionary teacher, outfit, passage, salary, and incidentals."⁶⁹

Among the girls attending the Rosario school and Sunday school Wood found a young woman whom he trained as a home visitor. Within a brief time she was distributing "more gospel portions and tracts than any other two or three . . . distributors" wholly on her own accord. "She penetrates the houses, and reads the books to the people . . . chiefly to the women. . . . Wherever she goes, they treat her kindly, and urge her to come again." Account of her work, published in the 1873 W.F.M.S. Annual Report, stimulated a wide interest among the Branch Societies and in 1874 four Branches made appropriations to South America, ranging from $200. to $1,442., a total of $2,922. In 1875 appropriations were increased to $3,822.⁷⁰

On January 21, 1874, Miss Jennie M. Chapin of the New England Branch and Miss Lou B. Denning of the Northwestern Branch sailed from New York en route to Rosario. Following their arrival they devoted themselves energetically to the study of Spanish and to acquainting themselves with the needs of the women and children of the city. What impressed them most was the limited educational facilities and the inefficiency of such schools as existed. The principal of the one municipal school for girls "could teach nothing higher than Las Tables (the tables of the four fundamental rules of arithmetic)," yet she was reputed to be the best equipped of any teacher in the city. The two missionaries soon decided that their first task was to establish a girls' school and by September, 1875, five pupils had been enrolled. By 1876 the five had increased to ten: four Spanish, three German, and three English. The school was begun under the direction of Superintendent T. B. Wood but this year word was sent from W.F.M.S. headquarters that the work must not be subject to administration of the Missionary Society.*

The homes of the pupils' parents and those of many other families were open to the missionaries and they gave much time to visiting, talking, praying, and singing with the women.

The women sit on the ground, smoking their cigars, and drinking their mate; yet they listen gladly and thankfully. As one poor soul said, 'Nobody before ever cared to teach me so much as to say the Lord's Prayer, or to wash a kettle.'⁷¹

* Fifty-ninth Ann. Rep., M.S. (1877): The two missionaries "began work under Brother Wood's direction . . . but in 1875 instructions came to them from their Executive Committee that the existing arrangement was unsatisfactory, and they must commence a separate work." Superintendent Wood made a direct appeal to the W.F.M.S. Executive Committee but "a resolution was passed declaring the request contrary to their constitution."—P. 41. See also Seventh Ann. Rep., W.F.M.S. (1876), p. 25.

By 1877-78 the school, now with ninety-five pupils—eighty-eight day scholars, four boarders, and three orphans—required the entire time and effort of the two missionaries. The three waifs were the nucleus of a proposed orphanage.

Under the increased burden of the larger school enrollment Miss Denning and Miss Chapin both failed in health. On August 4, 1880, Mrs. E. M. J. Clemens of the Northwestern Branch, who had come to Montevideo from England, arrived in Rosario and at almost the same time Miss Julia E. Goodenough, also of the Northwestern Branch, reached the city. They immediately took over the school and on August 13 the Misses Denning and Chapin left Rosario on furlough. Mrs. Clemens described the school as it was when she and Miss Goodenough took charge:

There were fifty-five pupils in all. Instruction was given to thirty-seven classes, and in three languages, Spanish, English, and French. Geography, arithmetic and grammar were taught in both Spanish and English; astronomy in Spanish only. Drawing, writing, sewing, knitting, and fancy work each had its allotted time. . . . The pupils were mainly well dressed . . . indicating that they were chiefly from the wealthy families There were, however, representatives from the descendants of the aboriginal Indian population

At 7:30 A.M., a bell for family prayers, after which breakfast. The school opened at nine. . . . Thirty minutes recess for lunch; and recitations closing at 3 P.M.⁷²

The administration of the work under Mrs. Clemens and Miss Goodenough was far from satisfactory to the Society. Without consultation the school was divided into two departments—virtually two separate schools. The primary department, set up by Miss Goodenough in a separate building some distance removed, had only fourteen pupils. Mrs. Clemens was left alone with increased responsibilities under which she became entirely prostrated and was compelled to close the school summarily. To relieve her the Society sent out a capable matron, Mrs. L. Turney of Michigan, but she arrived too late to save the situation. Mrs. Clemens left Rosario on June 16, and reached New York on August 7. Fortunately, by this time Misses Chapin and Denning were ready to return. They arrived in Rosario on February 9, 1882. Arrangements were made for Miss Goodenough's employment as a teacher in a school at Cordoba.

[As soon as Misses Chapin and Denning] arrived they entered upon the difficult task of procuring suitable accommodations for the school and family. . . . The derangement of the whole work made the task of bringing back system and order no easy one, but with patience and persistency . . . [they] succeeded in regaining some of the ground which had been lost.⁷³

W.F.M.S. work in Montevideo was opened in 1879. When John F. Thomson was on his visit to the United States he described the educational need and opportunity in the city and recommended the employment of Miss

Cecilia Guelfi, an Argentine, as a person well qualified to take charge of a school. The Society promptly sent forward an appropriation sufficient for the missionary salary of Miss Guelfi and for the rent of a schoolroom. On February 10, 1879, she began the school with forty pupils. The next year division was made into two schools: one for young children, principally children of the mission church, who were taught gratuitously, and a normal school whose pupils paid a small tuition fee. These were principally from Catholic families. Miss Guelfi was highly commended by T. B. Wood, who declared that she was equal to any two teachers who could be sent out from the United States, at least until they had had not less than five years' experience. The government offered her twice the missionary salary which she received but she preferred missionary service. In June, 1883, there were 159 pupils enrolled and three additional places were calling for schools. Mrs. L. A. Alderman, W.F.M.S. official correspondent, was confident that Miss Guelfi was capable of managing a system of six schools and declared that she would "answer for their installation and organization." Miss Guelfi died on April 19, 1886, but she had laid a strong foundation for women's educational work in Uruguay and in 1887 there were fourteen schools in operation, with twenty-six teachers and assistants, and 625 pupils.⁷⁴

By 1883 the Buenos Aires Ragged School had grown to such proportions that division into two schools seemed necessary. In response to urgent requests Miss Goodenough, who had gone from Rosario to Cordoba to teach in a small Anglican school, came to Buenos Aires to take charge of the girls' division. The W.F.M.S. agreed to support the work, to be known as the Girls' Evangelical School, and made for it an appropriation of $2,190. In January, 1884, the school opened with forty pupils and by March had an enrollment of ninety. The program was expanded to include activities among the pupils' mothers and other women. It was reported:

Monday evening is the woman's meeting, led by an energetic Italian woman, who speaks in Spanish or Italian, as occasion requires. Tuesday afternoon, a sewing meeting; Tuesday evening, a class and Gospel meeting in the school room; Friday night, an English prayer meeting.⁷⁵

In Rosario the rented building which served as a home was entirely unsuited for the purpose. Miss Denning gave a graphic description of the house:

Imagine yourselves in a brick house, brick floors under your feet, brick ceilings over your head, vegetation growing on the dank walls, roofs, and even on the matting over which you walk—no fire all winter, and the thermometer from 50 to 35 degrees, and sometimes below the freezing point. On a rainy day you have to put on waterproof and rubbers to go from the sitting-room to the dining-room, and from every room to the kitchen.⁷⁶

The Society decided that a situation so uncomfortable and detrimental to the health and usefulness of the missionaries should not be allowed to continue and in 1882 the construction of a building for a home and school was authorized. On March 3, 1884, the school opened in the new house with an attendance of sixty girls from five to fifteen years of age. On Sundays a Spanish Sunday school was held in the schoolrooms with an enrollment of thirty-six.

On March 5, 1885, the two missionaries opened a second school—a day school for poor children—with an enrollment of fifty girls, with Paulina Ladavese, one of the orphans of the home, in charge. No authorization or appropriation had been made for the enterprise, but as the income of school No. 1 supplied sufficient margin above its own incidental expenses to pay the rent, the missionaries acted on their own responsibility. In 1887 a cholera scourge occurred which sadly interfered with all activities in the city but the two schools were able to open in March with an increased enrollment. Nine “cholera orphans” were taken into the home, increasing the family to twenty-four. In 1888 pupils in the two schools numbered 250; orphans and boarding pupils, 20; income from tuition, $1,500., Argentina currency. Preaching, prayer services, and the Sunday school were regularly held in the schoolrooms. Misses Chapin and Denning retired in 1890 after sixteen years of faithful, efficient service. Administration of the schools was taken over temporarily by Miss Elsie Wood, who had been chosen by the New York Branch for work in Lima, Peru. In February, 1891, Miss Mary F. Swaney, under the auspices of the Topeka Branch, arrived to take charge. The school at this time was suffering from effects of competition of the government schools, in which teachers were paid higher salaries. The principal asked the Society for increased funds for larger and better accommodations but no increase was forthcoming. Despite her disappointment Miss Swaney kept bravely at her work and in 1893-94 the number of day pupils was largely augmented. As the period closed (1895) enrollment in the two schools was the largest in several years. Numerous applications to the lowest grade had to be refused for lack of seating room. The second school—now known as the San Luis school—with 134 pupils was also overcrowded.⁷⁷

In Montevideo, following the death of Miss Guelfi, the day schools were at first continued under the supervision of her brother, the Rev. Antonio Guelfi. The fourteen schools attracted wide public attention and won much favor for the evangelical cause. Sunday schools were held in most of the schoolrooms and in many of them preaching services and prayer meetings were established. In view of this fact a portion of the rent, in addition to half of the current expenses, was paid by the Missionary Society. The W.F.M.S. sent out several missionaries as teachers.* It was planned that Miss Minnie J. Hyde should be given charge of the central school, reorganize it, add an advanced grade for training assistants, and draw volunteers for teacher training from the primary grades. In 1892 Miss Rebecca J. Hammond, of the Cincinnati Branch, a former Taylor missionary, arrived to assist her. They consolidated the schools into six centers. The results of their management were seen in better organization, better discipline, and a larger attendance. The schools were thoroughly graded, the course of study extended, and English language added as a requirement for Spanish pupils. Young people's meetings were held, a temperance society instituted, and a benevolent society organized whose members made and repaired garments for the poor. A new building was completed for the central school. Its location and the facilities which it provided were most satisfactory and the mission was confident that it would add greatly to the influence of the Church in Montevideo and to the cause of Protestantism in the province.⁷⁸

* Miss Minnie J. Hyde was sent out by the Northwestern Branch in 1888. After five years of exceptional service she returned in ill health in 1893. Miss Mary E. Bowen went out under the New England Branch in 1888 to Rosario. She later served for a time in Montevideo. After a furlough she returned in 1895 to Rosario. Miss Lizzie Hewett, after several years' service in Mexico under the auspices of the Northwestern Branch, was transferred in 1893 to Montevideo where she spent two years.

In 1888 Miss Eleanor LeHuray of the New York Branch was appointed to Buenos Aires and infused new life into the Girls' Evangelical School and into a second girls' school begun some time before in the western part of the city. She already possessed a knowledge of Spanish and was able to enter at once upon her work of supervision. Improvement in regularity of attendance of pupils, good order, and steady advancement in their studies was soon evident. Her visits to the parents' homes also was productive of much good. By 1890 she had established a boarding school for the preparation of teachers for the free evangelical schools throughout the republic. The pupils were mainly from Protestant families in all parts of the country—English, German, Italian, and Spanish. A Class meeting and a meeting for women were held weekly in the schoolroom. The next year the training school had twenty-five pupils. By 1893 the city day school registered 146 pupils and a need was felt for increased space. The training school was showing advance in scholarship and was receiving commendatory reports from public examiners. When Bishop and Mrs. Newman visited Buenos Aires in 1893 a children's rally was held in a public hall attended by more than twelve hundred children from the Methodist Sunday schools of the city. A women's meeting was also held at which Mrs. Newman organized a Woman's Foreign Missionary Society.⁷⁹

In 1894-95 a more extensive educational program than ever before was under way. The day school had 160 in attendance; the boarding school twenty-two, of which five were in the normal class—a decided decrease—but Miss LeHuray declared them to be the "very best girls in every sense of the word, members of the church, responsible and true." Public demand had made it necessary to admit little boys to the girls' schools, though this was against Miss LeHuray's inclination. A Bible woman had been employed for house-to-house visitation. She also had a Sunday school of seventy-five in her home.⁸⁰ on September 15, 1891. Twenty pupils were in attendance, all that the small room could seat. A year later there were four rooms and 128 pupils. A second school, "called for convenience the Callao high-school," was "held in the best school room* in the city." In 1894-95 the W.F.M.S. reported in Peru "two missionaries, eight assistants, and seven schools" with 276 pupils in all. The appropriations of the Board and the W.F.M.S. were combined so that it was impossible to estimate how many pupils were supported by the Society. A revolution in March, 1895, accompanied by much fighting in Lima and its environs, caused many pupils to leave the schools. Other losses resulted from persecutions and threatenings incited by friars from a Lima monastery so that the educational program for the time being was seriously interfered with.

The first evangelical school in Peru was opened by Elsie Wood in Callao

In 1894 Rebecca J. Hammond was transferred from Montevideo to Asuncion, Paraguay, to assist in schoolwork which had been under way for seven years but was said to be in a disorganized state. The Society reported in 1895 that under Miss Hammond's direction the school had "become well organized and . . . [was] winning increased confidence on the part of the public." In one of the suburbs of Asuncion a "ragged school" had been opened.⁸¹

WILLIAM TAYLOR IN SOUTH AMERICA

"On the 16th. of October, 1877," wrote William Taylor in his Story of My Life, "I bought for myself and for my brother, Rev. Archibald Taylor, a through ticket from New York to Callao, Peru, and embarked on the Pacific Mail Steamship Company's steamer, the Acapulco . . ."

Two years before he had committed himself to return to India to carry on his evangelistic campaign there† but now he firmly believed that God had called him to plant missions on the South America West Coast.‡ He says in his memoirs that he labored hard to get the concurrence of the Bishops in his plan:

I offered to go in their name, pay all my own expenses, and found self-supporting missions, if they would consent to ordain and appoint the men required and allow them to retain a Conference connection at home and be returned on the Minutes as 'missionaries to South America,' and thus keep the whole movement under their own control.⁸²

It is plainly evident why the Bishops declined to concur in Taylor's plans.

* "These rooms with good-sized courts or play grounds" belonged "to the committee in charge of the English Protestant church, which . . . [had] been for years without a pastor."—Twenty-fourth Ann. Rep., W.F.M.S. (1892-93), p. 72.

† See p. 533.

‡ Taylor tells how his attention was first directed to South America as a mission field. One of his "fellow-pioneer" missionary friends in California during his early days had been J. A. Swaney. Subsequently Swaney was employed for six years on the Pacific coast of Peru and Chile by the American Seamen's Friend Society as chaplain. "It was he," wrote Taylor, "who first interested me especially in the South American field; and by him I was greatly helped in the very difficult task laid upon me by the Holy Spirit of planting self-supporting missions in that great country."—William Taylor, Story of My Life . . . , p. 681.

He specified that the missions which he proposed to found should not be "under the control of the Missionary Society." As previously in India he was determined to be wholly independent, in no wise responsible to the Church's organization for the founding and administrative control of Methodist missions. One would have supposed that the failure of the self-supporting phase of the South India mission would have demonstrated how impracticable his plans were. Not so. With or without the Bishops' assent to the ordination of the men he should select, he proposed to go. In pursuance of his plans he made three trips to South America, in 1877-78 to the West Coast; in 1880 to Brazil; and in 1883-84 again to the West Coast.

Taylor arrived at Callao, Peru, on November 3, 1877. It was then a city of about 30,000 and was the port of entry for Lima, the capital of the country. He found there a considerable colony of English and Scotch, of whom about a hundred were employed in the repair shops of the Pacific Steam Navigation Company. Besides these there were many who were employees of business houses, export firms, and heads of commercial companies. About seventeen years earlier William Wheelwright, an American and the founder of the Pacific Steam Navigation Company, had had a church edifice framed in New York and shipped to Callao. Some of his friends purchased a site and the building was duly erected. During the intervening years Church of England clergymen had served as pastors but for six weeks prior to Taylor's arrival the church had been without a pastor and he was invited to supply the pulpit. This would seem to have offered an open door of opportunity but at the end of two months he reported with a tinge of disappointment that he "did not establish a mission." His work, however, was not without result. Archibald Taylor preached in Callao almost a year. He was succeeded by J. M. Baxter who remained for more than three years.⁸³

On January 5, 1878, Taylor arrived at the little town of Mollendo, Peru, about five hundred miles south of Callao. Here were located the shops of the Arequipa and Puna Railroad, employing "a large number of English and American mechanics." He established headquarters at the house of the Pacific Steam Navigation Company's agent and in the evening called on many of the townspeople. On Sunday he preached to a small congregation who assembled to hear him and on Monday forenoon, accompanied by another friend, canvassed as many as possible of the people. His subscription paper read:

Believing a school-teacher, being also a Gospel minister, to be greatly needed in Mollendo, I propose to send hither a competent man, combining in himself the twofold character of teacher and preacher, the first engagement to cover a period of at least three years, I respectfully ask the friends of this movement to contribute the funds for passage and a guarantee for support till the school shall become self-supporting. It will require three hundred and thirty dollars paper currency, for passage, and at least one hundred and fifty dollars per month for sustentation.

Taylor's first call was on an American railway contractor who said he was a Roman Catholic and did not wish to put his name to the subscription paper but would give fifty dollars "to bring the man out," and one hundred dollars more if necessary, and thirty dollars per month for his support. The first call assured almost one-fourth of the required total! This, said Taylor, "was my first financial strike in South America."⁸⁴

Taylor's experience of two and a half months caused him to view the West Coast South America situation in a new light. The English-speaking residents whom he had hoped to enlist in the evangelization of the continent were not primarily interested in churches or, for that matter, in religion. They were, however, concerned for the education of their children. No country on the West Coast had a good school system. There were few public schools and those which existed were inferior. Many British residents at great expense sent their children to England to be educated, which involved years of separation. German, French, and American residents were in a like situation. If he could send well-prepared teachers who were at the same time Christians—the men preachers as well as teachers—he would be able to lay the foundation on which within a few years an evangelical Church could be built. After a night of meditation the course he should follow was clear.

His next stop was at Tacna, Peru, forty miles inland from the port of Arica. This, he said, "was to be my first departure from the old lines of purely evangelistic work to the new line of school work . . . where nothing more is at present possible." He wanted to raise thirty pounds sterling for passage of a single man and a guarantee of one hundred dollars a month until the school became self-supporting. Eight men signed the subscription, volunteering more than twice the amount for "a good man and his wife" for three years.

At Iquique, after Taylor had met some discouragement from "half a dozen leading gentlemen" the station master offered to subscribe liberally for a school and assisted in plans which resulted in a list of fifty names with subscriptions in excess of the amount required.⁸⁵

From Iquique Taylor went on to Pabellon de Pica and Huanillos, both in Peru; Antofagasta, then a Bolivian port; and Caldera, Copiapo, Coquimbo, Valparaiso, and Concepcion* in Chile.

At Pabellon de Pica, Huanillos, and Lobos Island Taylor found 105 vessels loading guano. The captains and crews at each of the two first-named places subscribed enough to support a chaplain. Articles of agreement guaranteeing passage and support, drawn up by Taylor, were readily signed by the captains and witnessed by the British consul. At Antofagasta, the chief seaport of Bolivia, Taylor found a colony of English-speaking people, some of whom held positions paying large salaries. They were pleased with his proposal to send them a teacher and subscribed $495. for passage (an amount almost three hundred dollars more than Taylor asked) and $145. a month for salary, also more than he suggested. Only a small number of people at Caldera, the next port, seemed interested in a school so Taylor accepted an invitation to go inland forty miles to Copiapo where a goodly number of British, mostly Welsh, were engaged in mining, railroading, and business. A Wesleyan Local Preacher had been instrumental several years before in holding preaching services there, and in organizing a church. His health had failed so he had gone away and the people were eager for a preacher to be sent to them and readily subscribed.⁸⁶

* The order in which Taylor visited the places named differs in his account from Arms' account. The latter names the places (with the exception of Santiago) in geographical sequence from north to south. As Taylor was journeying southward along the coast Arms' order as given above seems the more plausible.

Taylor's next stop was at Coquimbo, an important seaport of northern Chile with extensive copper-smelting establishments from which large amounts of copper, and some gold and silver, were annually exported. He found among the British managers and operatives of its industries some earnest Christian men among whom he readily organized a committee which agreed "to provide a place of worship and support for a preacher."⁸⁷

From Coquimbo Taylor went to Valparaiso, a commercial city of approximately 80,000 population with the largest trade by sea of any port on the Pacific coast of South America, a terminal and port of call of several United States and European lines of steamers. At Valparaiso Taylor found three English churches—Anglican, German Lutheran, and Union. The Union Church membership was made up of Presbyterians, Methodists, and people of several other denominations. The pastor of this church was David Trumbull, of the widely known Trumbull family of Connecticut, a man of great influence not only in Valparaiso but also among leading citizens of the republic. To him Taylor suggested the appointment of a seamen's chaplain, a proposal which Trumbull heartily endorsed. However, Taylor says, no one was available to make contacts for him with the ship captains. On March 15 he got a longshore boat to put him aboard the nearest ship in the harbor. He introduced himself to the captain and asked him to assemble the crew.

. . . in five minutes I had a congregation. I sang a solo or two, and then distributed hymn books, and had good congregational singing, followed by a plain sermon of twenty minutes, and closed with prayer. I then explained our wish to appoint a man of God as seamen's preacher for that port. Then all who wished to have a share in the business came and wrote their names and amount of their donations in my book, to be paid over to the treasurer by the captain on account of his men.

Each captain sent him in his boat to the next ship. On Monday he had completed his canvass and on Tuesday afternoon he held a meeting of the captains, submitted a proposal for the organization of the Valparaiso Seamen's Evangelical Society, and got the meeting to approve the organization and vote an appropriation for passage and support of the man whom he would send to them.⁸⁸

Continuing his journey southward for Valparaiso Taylor visited Talcahuano, the seaport nine miles from Concepcion. Here the American consul gave him cordial cooperation, and a subscription of $400. was raised for a teacher. At Concepcion Taylor called on William Lawrence, "a wine merchant and a man of wide influence," and several others. The governor of the province was much pleased with his plan to establish a school and made a liberal contribution. Altogether, $800. was subscribed, with assurance that an ample amount would be secured to bring out three teachers.⁸⁹

Taylor next went on to Santiago, the capital of Chile. The American minister presented him to the president of the republic and to the minister of justice and education. They were liberals, much interested in education. They expressed appreciation of what Taylor had done in establishing schools and promised their aid. The minister of education asked about the possibility of a school for girls but Taylor made no plans to secure pledges.

On March 20 Taylor embarked at Valparaiso on his return journey. En route he stopped at Panama, and for one day at Colon, and arranged to send a preacher. He arrived in New York on May 3, six months and eighteen days from the date of his leaving. He had opened, according to his report, "twelve centers of educational and evangelizing work." Arms in his History of the William Taylor Self-supporting Missions in South America says that he had arranged to send out six preachers: one each to Callao, Coquimbo, Colon and Panama; to a seamen's mission at Valparaiso, and to Huanillos and Pabellon de Pica (Peru); and a single man as preacher and teacher at Iquique. He planned to send, besides, three teachers for schools at Mollendo, Antofagasta, and Copiapo—in each case the teacher to serve also as a preacher—and teachers to Tacna, Concepcion, and Talcahuano. In all, thirteen persons would be sent. Before leaving New York Taylor had arranged with A. P. Stowell, a student at Boston University, to act as his "recruiting sergeant" for the enlistment of first-class workers. On his return Stowell sent him the names of eight candidates "who were ready for orders."⁹⁰

The first remittance Taylor received from the field, "and it came in due time," was from the Roman Catholic patrons of Tacna, Peru, passage for man and wife, amounting to $436.95. However, even before this was received, in May, 1878, he found himself in financial straits, without funds to pay the passage of the first party whom he had planned to send. The same mail which contained the check from Tacna brought also a letter from the chairman of the Concepcion committee, who feared that the movement would imperil his business, and he had ordered the collector "not to collect the subscriptions." This convinced Taylor that he could not depend wholly on the promises made to him on the field. He did not have available funds for the outgoing transit of his missionaries and he began immediately to solicit his friends, to arrange for appeals in churches, at Conferences and Camp Meetings, and in religious periodicals—particularly the Christian Standard and the Christian Witness—and to go about selling his books in an effort to raise the necessary amount.⁹¹

OUTGOING OF TAYLOR'S RECRUITS

During 1878 three groups of missionaries recruited by Taylor went to the field. The first party of nine preachers and teachers consisted of A. P. Stowell, William A. Wright, and Ira Haynes La Fetra, from Boston University School of Theology; Mrs. Stowell, J. W. Collier, J. W. Higgins, Miss Lelia H. Waterhouse, Miss Sarah Longley, and Miss Cora B. Benson. When the party had assembled at New York they found that Taylor had not received sufficient remittances from South America to pay outgoing expenses. Miss Waterhouse wrote: "With farewells said and all our arrangements made, the party was . . . ready to sail. What could they do? Go back home? They took steerage passage."

Each was provided with a small blanket and mattress or a hammock. We put our mites together and bought some canned goods and remedies.

The first night out I spent down in the hold, in foul air, with portholes all closed and for fellow voyagers had the lowest class of emigrants My bed was a piece of canvass stretched on poles. For bedding I had a blanket, my shawl, and a little pillow By morning I was in a stupor and they had to carry me on deck. The next three nights I slept out on the hurricane deck . . . on my . . . mattress [sic]. . . .

. . . We stood around a long, bare, swaying, swing shelf [at supper], each one provided with a tin cup, spoon and plate, and an old steel knife and fork. One huge dish in the center contained the mess from which we were all supposed to dip. I never attempted to eat there again, and hardly know how I subsisted. . . . We opened our canned food . . . but with no way to heat or season it 'twas not very palatable. On the fourth day, while lying on one of the hatchways . . . I had a sinking spell which alarmed both sailors and passengers. After trying in vain to rouse me they summoned the ship's surgeon who swore big oaths because they did not call him sooner. He forced champagne between my lips, ordered the stateroom next to the purser's to be vacated, had the burly purser carry me to it and detailed one of the ladies to remain in the stateroom to watch me. He also ordered food to be served to me from the cabin table . . . and . . . was very kind . . . although rough and dissipated

I was ill all the way to Aspinwall [Colon].⁹²

The second group of recruits to leave sailed from New York on August 30. It consisted of Mr. and Mrs. Alexander T. Jeffrey and Mr. and Mrs. Lucius C. Smith. The third party included Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Birdsall, Mr. and Mrs. Magnus Smith, Charles Newhouse, and Miss Edith Collier, sister of J. W. Collier. They sailed from New York on November 30, 1878. Several others recruited by Taylor arrived on the West Coast in 1879. Early in the year Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Hoffman and Oscar von Barchwitz-Krauser came to work among the German colonists in southern Chile. In July Mrs. Marietta Vasbinder, a sister of Lucius Smith, came out to aid her brother. Later, probably in August, Mr. and Mrs. James P. Gilliland arrived.

In all, during 1878-79 twenty-five missionary teachers and preachers went out under Taylor's auspices. He had given no instructions as to how they were to proceed on reaching their destinations. An appointment had been given to each, together with the name of the committee chairman, or other person, who had agreed to be responsible for the raising of funds for salary and expenses. "There was no uniformity, no general organization, no central authority." Many of those who went to the field did not find the welcome they expected. They understood that the people were anxious for schools and ready to supply funds to get them started. It would take only a short time to build up a school of a hundred and in some places several hundred pupils. Afterward tuition fees, commissions on textbooks and on furniture imported from abroad, together with free-will offerings, would furnish ample support. However, not all the promises made to Taylor were kept.

The actual conditions which the missionaries met varied widely. Magnus Smith, a well-equipped young minister with graduate study in Germany, and his wife were appointed to Mollendo. No one met them on their arrival and no one offered them hospitality. Instead of the large number of English and American mechanics Taylor had counted on, Smith found "very few English and American residents." The population was chiefly Peruvian and Italian. At the beginning of his boys' school on January 7, 1879, he had five pupils and up to March 10 fourteen. On January 27 Mrs. Smith began a girls' school with five pupils. A Sunday school was started with six children. Smith wanted to begin preaching services but was told it would not do. Of the men who had pledged to support the school nearly all failed to keep their promise. Smith had incipient tuberculosis before leaving the United States. He was stricken with fever and while he was very ill the port was bombarded by the Chilean fleet. The residents of the town fled and Smith had to be carried out on his bed. A few days later he died. His widow, heart-broken and destitute, and without a home, returned to the United States. The school was abandoned and never reopened.⁹³

Taylor's appointees to Tacna, the second point at which arrangement had been made for a school, were the Stowells and Miss Cora B. Benson. Taylor was confident that here he had a group of responsible men back of his project and he purchased school desks, a piano, and other equipment in New York, which were sent on in advance. The party arrived at the port on July 24, 1878, went on at once to Tacna, and reported soon after their arrival that "the work had opened far beyond their anticipation." For their first year they were paid $2,500. In August, 1879, both Stowell and his wife became ill, and the school was closed. On the voyage to New York he rapidly recovered but two weeks after Mrs. Stowell arrived at her mother's home she died. To take their place Taylor appointed Fletcher Humphrey and his wife who reopened the school on March 1, 1880, the beginning of the new school year. Miss Benson in the meantime had remained in Tacna, unwilling to abandon her teaching work. Charles Newhouse also came out, with the third party of recruits, to teach in the school. By the end of the first term of school Arica and Tacna had become the principal theater of war between Chile and Peru and the school had to be abandoned.⁹⁴

To Iquique, Taylor's next port of call, he appointed J. W. Collier. It was a principal point of the nitrate industry, which he later characterized as "the most promising field we had in South America." When he had arrived in New York in June, 1878, a remittance from the Iquique committee was awaiting him. Collier, whom Taylor described as a "professor" and a minister, arrived at his designated station on July 25, 1878, and was delighted with it: "the richest, the wickedest, the most inviting to the missionary" of all places in Peru, and felt that the promise was very great "for a good, thorough work." Since Collier was a bachelor Taylor sent out his sister, Edith Collier, to assist him. Here again war interfered with the missionary enterprise making it necessary for a time for all activities to be given up. The two missionaries went to Lota, a chief coal mining center of Chile, where they began a school and church services. Soon afterward Collier was called to Valparaiso to fill temporarily the pulpit of the English Union church. After the close of the war work was resumed at Iquique on an extensive scale. A building for a chapel, parsonage, and school was built by Gilliland in 1885, a school having been founded by him in 1884. He was also zealous in evangelistic effort and in 1888 began preaching in Spanish. Others collaborated with him, notably W. C. Hoover who, with his wife, came to Chile in 1889 to teach but in 1893 gave up schoolwork to devote full time to the Spanish pastorate.⁹⁵

From Iquique Taylor had gone on to Pabellon de Pica, and to Huanillos, the last port of Peru. Arms says that at each place Taylor had arranged to send a preacher. But neither Taylor nor Arms states that preachers were actually sent.

To Antofagasta, at the time of the outgoing of the early recruits still a Bolivian port, Taylor appointed Alexander T. Jeffrey and wife. They started a school on September 28, 1878, and on October 14 wrote to a fellow missionary that the school had opened well and increased its enrollment beyond all expectations. A religious service had been held in the home of one of the patrons, attended by twenty-five people. When on February 12, 1879, war was declared between Chile and Bolivia, Jeffrey found it necessary to leave and Antofagasta was left for years without further missionary attention.⁹⁶ As one result of the war Antofagasta became a Chilean port.

In 1891 Karl Beutelspacher, a converted German sailor, arrived in Antofagasta and supported himself by laboring in the railroad shops. He began to hold religious services in English and after a year became a colporteur and preacher. He also commenced preaching in Spanish and after a few months devoted himself wholly to Spanish language evangelism. By 1896 he had "built up a church of vigorous Christians, ready to give for the support of the church and ready to work for its extension." Several of his converts entered the ministry; two became members of the Conference. It was said of the Antofagasta converts "that they all appeared to be preachers and raised up congregations wherever they went."⁹⁶

At Copiapo Taylor had found in 1878 an inviting situation. For some ten years religious services had been conducted by a Wesleyan Local Preacher, who succeeded in organizing a Wesleyan Society and a Sunday school. His health had failed some time before Taylor's arrival and he had gone away. The members of the church desired a preacher and readily subscribed funds for support. The city was the center of a rich silver and copper mining region. To this attractive opening Taylor appointed Lucius C. Smith and his wife. Within nine months Smith had developed ability to preach in Spanish, and regularly conducted English and Spanish services and maintained a Sunday school. Mrs. Smith had private classes in vocal and instrumental music. Within a few months she died of an attack of typhoid fever. Smith remarried and for a time, according to Taylor's account, they pushed the battle grandly. Early in 1883, however, Smith left to aid in the English work at Santiago. In 1882 the Gillilands moved on to Caldera to start a school and do such evangelistic work as was possible. Mrs. Vasbinder, left alone at Copiapo, continued for several years to carry on the school. Meanwhile, as the silver mines were being gradually depleted the principal supporters of the church and school moved elsewhere. Taylor wrote:

I sent a new man from America to take charge . . . but its resources had become so reduced that he ate up our house and school furniture and left the field.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry B. Compton arrived in 1883, accompanied by Miss Rebecca J. Hammond. Later the Comptons transferred to Coquimbo; Miss Hammond to Concepcion; and in 1888 Copiapo was abandoned.⁹⁷

Taylor's 1877-78 itinerary had taken him next to Coquimbo. To this place Taylor appointed J. W. Higgins, a single man, who arrived near the end of July, 1878. The committee boarded the steamer when it reached port and announced that they had remodeled a dwelling house for a chapel at an expense of $600. He reported that everyone seemed interested. He organized a Sunday school and a fellowship band, and began prayer meetings, but made no effort to organize a Methodist Society. Before the middle of 1882

Higgins left for the United States.* He was succeeded by J. W. Collier whose period as a supply at Valparaiso had ended. During the year Miss Rachel Holding came from the United States and started a school. Because of ill health Collier was obliged after a short time to resign the pastorate and in May, 1883, died. At the invitation of the committee A. T. Jeffrey, who had gone to Coquimbo to recoup his health, agreed to fill the vacancy temporarily. Taylor was in Chile at the time (1883), having made the trip from New York partly to visit the West Coast missions and partly—as he wrote later—to get away from controversy regarding the pros and cons of his self-supporting missionary plan. As Jeffrey's health did not improve Taylor took upon himself the pastorate of the Coquimbo Circuit which included, besides Coquimbo, Guayacan, Serena, "and the copper mines in the mountains." At this time he bought a site for the boys' and girls' school, the first real estate purchased for the Chile mission. For months he and W. T. Robinson,† who had recently come from Brazil and had formed a small day and a night class for boys, labored with their own hands in the erection of a two-story school building.‡ The work was not entirely to Taylor's liking, as a letter written at the time shows:

to have my wings clipped and to be stuck down in a duck pond with the tadpoles for nearly a whole year, is no joke for a man of my years; but I accept it as of the Lord, and he gives me strength according to my need.⁹⁸

Some years later (1888) Spanish services were begun at Coquimbo and also at Serena—the capital of the province—by a Local Preacher of the church who after a year was assisted by Harry Compton. He and Mrs. Compton had come to take charge of the school but were also interested in Spanish evangelistic work and continued in it actively until 1890, when it had reached such proportions that Dr. Juan Canut de Bon,§ a Spaniard, was appointed pastor. During the first months of his pastorate he suffered severe persecution, on one occasion being attacked by a mob of a hundred people. He continued as pastor, preaching at Coquimbo and neighboring

* On his return to the United States Higgins transferred from the East Maine to the New England Conference and was appointed to the Cottage Street Church, Cambridge.—Gen'l Minutes, 1883, p. 50.

† William Theodore Robinson (1850-1932) was born in Utica, Ind., and converted at the age of twelve. He attended Iowa Wesleyan (A.B., 1871; M.A., 1873) and continued there as professor of mathematics and astronomy until 1879. In November, 1880, he sailed for Pernambuco, Brazil, appointed by Taylor, but left in 1883 for work in Coquimbo and Concepcion, Chile. In 1888 he was appointed to the Buenos Aires Circuit and made Agent of Publications. He went to the United States in 1898 for three years, where he was a member of the Des Moines Conference, and returned to South America to continue mission work in Ecuador and Chile. His forty years' service in Brazil, Chile, Ecuador, and Argentina was spent as pastor, educator, manager and editor of the mission press, and Presiding Elder of the Northern District of the South America Conference.—Official Biographical Files, Division of World Missions.

‡ While in Coquimbo Taylor received official notice of his election by the South India Conference as a lay delegate to the General Conference meeting in Philadelphia, May 1, 1884, and left for the United States.

§ Juan Canut de Bon was an ex-priest, who had been converted to Protestantism and had become a fervent evangelist. He was one of the first evangelical Spanish preachers in Chile and held services in many places. So many were his converts and so strong was the impression that he made on the minds of the people that for years evangelical Christians were popularly known as "Canutos," that is, followers of Canut.—W. E. Browning in Webster E. Browning, John Ritcliff, and Kenneth G. Grubb, The West Coast Republics of South America: Chile, Peru and Bolivia, p. 30.

towns, for two years. During 1892-93 Harry Compton became pastor. In 1892 Gilliland was appointed pastor at Serena.⁹⁹

In the home of a friend in Boston, in June, 1878, Taylor met Ira Haynes LaFetra* who had recently completed his training at the Boston University School of Theology. After a few moments' conversation Taylor said to him, "I want you to go to open the work at Valparaiso." His words came to LaFetra as a "call from the Lord" and within a few weeks he was on his way. His first religious service on shipboard was on August 4 on the Sarah Anderson, with seven captains, several masters, and, in all, more than fifty present. According to his own account he was given "a most kindly greeting as their chaplain" by the committee of the Seaman's Evangelical Society. Shipmasters, officers, and men—all were most cordial. His plans included the organization of fellowship bands on every vessel for weekly meetings on the voyage. On shore, also, his visits at the English hospital and boarding houses gave much promise of good.

When the Jeffreys had to leave Antofagasta they went to Valparaiso as a place of refuge. LaFetra, thinking he could find support more easily than the Jeffreys, since he was a single man, gave over the seamen's chaplaincy to them and went to Santiago. On Christmas Day, 1879, Jeffrey was joined by Otto von Barchwitz-Krauser who had returned from an unsuccessful missionary venture in southern Chile. Shortly after his arrival Jeffrey transferred to Concepcion and Krauser was left in full charge. In his book, Six Years with William Taylor in South America, Krauser gives a detailed account, including many personal incidents, of his work from January 2, 1880, to February 19, 1883. At the termination of his service the mission was taken over by the American Seamen's Society.¹⁰⁰

From Valparaiso in 1878 Taylor had continued his journey southward and visited Talcahuano,† a seaport, Concepcion, and Santiago. He appointed to Concepcion William A. Wright, Ph.B., Miss Sarah Longley, and Miss Lelia H. Waterhouse. They embarked from New York as members of the first party of nine missionaries. Mr. Lawrence, chairman of the committee of sponsors, had been informed in advance of the date of their arrival but no one met them at the Concepcion station. They made their way alone through cold and rain to the Lawrence home. What followed was graphically described by Miss Waterhouse:

* Ira Haynes LaFetra (1851-1917) was born at Harveysburg, Ohio. He became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1868, and was licensed to preach in 1872. In the same year he graduated from Ohio Wesleyan (A.B., 1872; M.A., 1875), and in 1877 from Boston University School of Theology. In 1879 he was received on trial in the East Maine Conference. In Chile and in the United States he came to be known as the "builder of the Chile Mission." In September, 1882, he married Adelaide Whitefield and together for twenty-five years they labored for the founding and development of Santiago College. LaFetra's "outstanding characteristics were his daring initiative, his statesmanlike foresight, his calm perseverance, and his invincible determination." Ill health compelled his retirement in 1906.—Official Biographical Files, Division of World Missions; Charles E. Locke, "A Memoir," California Christian Advocate, Jan. 17, 1918, p. 9.

† In an "index of the work and the workers" in his Story of My Life Taylor made no mention of having sent a teacher to Talcahuano, nor does G. F. Arms include the place in his account. It is included among the locations at which Taylor established work by Reid and Gracey, in Missions and Missionary Society (I, 380), presumably by error.

[We] waited . . . in the parlor, as they were at breakfast. When she came in we saw a pleasant looking . . . English lady, but she looked constrained and distressed, and after a . . . formal greeting said: 'I am going to be very frank with you. I think the best thing you can do will be to turn right about and go home. My husband . . . declines to have anything to do with the school, for it may hurt his business among the Catholics. He has not taken any of the subscriptions and says the time has not come to start an English school.'¹⁰¹

Miss Waterhouse was the first to find her voice, and she said firmly, "But . . . —we have come to stay." Soon the situation began to clear. Mrs. Lawrence confided that as for herself she was anxious for an English school as she did not want to be obliged to send her youngest daughter to England to be educated. Mrs. Willson, wife of a member of the committee, came in and the two women quickly became interested in the plans. With their co-operation a vacant house was rented, cleaned, and furnished. Since it was midyear, the school had to begin with only a few pupils. The English-speaking community was small but soon two schools were established, one for girls and another for boys, with sufficient patronage to maintain them. The girls' school was in the charge of Miss Waterhouse. It was called Colegio Americano para Senioritas (a few years later, Concepcion College). Some of the pupils were from poor families, able to pay little or nothing for tuition, and the school was maintained by the principal at great personal sacrifice. Soon after the arrival of the party, Miss Longley married Mr. Wright and in about a year they returned to the United States. For some months A. T. Jeffrey was in charge of the boys' school. On March 20, 1881, his brother, George M. Jeffrey, arrived to assist. Soon afterward Martha M. Boyce and Mary E. Elkins were sent out by Taylor. John M. Spangler and Mrs. Spangler came in March, 1883, to take charge of the boys' school, now known as the Colegio Americano. After four years of heroic work Miss Waterhouse, broken in health, was forced to retire from the field. Esther L. Spinks followed her as director of the girls' school* but she soon became tired and discouraged and returned home.¹⁰²

Concerning the first decade of the two schools (1878-88) G. F. Arms wrote:

The schools for boys and for girls were able to secure sufficient patronage to maintain themselves. At no time, however, could the work have been called a real success. Without doubt this was due in part to the frequent changes in the missionary forces. The first principal . . . and one of the two teachers left within two and a half years. The former's successor remained two years. The third principal remained but two years and the fourth only three. Several of the teachers gave but one, others but two years' service.

Attendance at the boys' school was small, but twice that of the girls' school. Property had been purchased and a building erected for the boys' school in 1886, on which a debt of $5,000. remained. Interest on the debt amounted to $600. annually. Rent for the girls' school required $600. These charges plus insurance, repairs, and other expenses absorbed almost the entire income. The missionary teachers received no salary and the other teachers only part salary. The situation had become desperate and an urgent call was made for reinforcements. The Transit and Building Fund Society responded in 1888 by sending Goodsil F. Arms* and Mrs. Ida Taggard Arms. He had been a pastor for eight years and Mrs. Arms a successful teacher. They were given charge of Colegio Americano and Mr. Arms was also made responsible for Concepcion College. For fourteen years they were in close relation in various capacities to the two schools—although much of Arms's time was given to evangelistic work—a period as he states in his history "of uninterrupted prosperity." The success of the schools, he says, "was due chiefly to Mrs. Arms and the most excellent teachers† who cooperated with her."

* Some other teachers who served for brief periods at Concepcion College during the years 1882-87 were: Henrietta C. Ogden, Mary E. Sanborn, Rebecca J. Hammond, Emma Bard, Mary Knoll, Rose M. Williams, and Mrs. Ira Ross.

The stay of most of the missionaries and teachers who served in Concepcion was too brief for them to gain facility in the use of the Spanish language. Consequently no evangelistic work was begun during the early years. A beginning was made, however, by Pedro Yanez when he became a teacher of Spanish in Colegio Americano in 1891, the services attended chiefly by the school's boarding pupils. When he was dismissed as a teacher Arms continued the Spanish meetings. In 1893 Canut de Bon was sent to Concepcion. After six months' effort and an advance of a thousand pesos on rent a house was secured for use as a chapel, but unlike the work in Serena, only a small attendance at services could be won. Among the few converts was Indalecio Romero, who later became a successful pastor. While Canut de Bon was stationed in Concepcion he visited Angol and Tenuco several times. The following year (1894) he was assigned to the Angol and Traiguén Circuit; he made many converts (one later became mayor of the city of Angol) and was soon able to organize churches in Angol, Traiguén, Los Angeles, and Mulchen. In Angol a chapel was fitted up for religious services. During the same year

* Goodsil F. Arms (1854-1932) was born in Sutton, Quebec, Canada. He united with the Church in June, 1868, was licensed to preach in 1876 and in the same year entered Montpelier Seminary. His college education was at Wesleyan University (A.B., 1880; M.A., 1883). He was admitted on trial in the Vermont Conference in 1880 (Gen'l Minutes, Spring, 1880, p. 84) and appointed to St. Alban's Bay. On Jan. 17, 1883, he married Ida A. Taggard, also a graduate of Montpelier. In 1888 they began a period of almost forty years of missionary service in Chile. For many years he was related in various capacities to Colegio Americano, Concepcion, the boys' school, and the Concepcion College for girls. He also held numerous other appointments, including that of pastor of the English church (1888-94); pastor of the Spanish church (1895-1901); Presiding Elder of Concepcion District (1896-1901); superintendent of schools, Concepcion (1910-12); pastor at Coquimbo (1916-20); consular agent, Coquimbo (1916-20); District Superintendent, Northern District (1921-26); president, Union Theological Seminary, Santiago (1923-27). He was a versatile man: a competent educator, pastor, evangelist, administrator, and author.—Official Biographical Files, Division of World Missions.

† Among those associated with Mr. and Mrs. Arms in the work of the schools were: Edwin P. Currier, Buel O. Campbell and Mrs. Campbell, George B. and Mrs. Benedict, B. B. Keister and Mrs. Keister, Kate Russell, Cora M. Starr, Emma Grant, Elena Neissmann, Mary A. Stout, Marian A. Milks, and Alice H. Fisher.—Goodsil F. Arms, History of the William Taylor Self-Supporting Missions in South America, pp. 127-32.

Romero was appointed to develop the Spanish work at Temuco; within two years he organized a church of thirteen full members and thirty-nine probationers. Upon Canut de Bon's assignment to Angol, Harry Compton was appointed to Concepcion. However, he left toward the end of the year for Argentina and the Presbyterians absorbed much of Canut de Bon's work, while some members moved away. When in January, 1895, Arns took over the Spanish work in Concepcion in addition to his work at the college only seven or eight converts were to be found.¹⁰³

Taylor recognized the importance of a strong educational institution in the capital of Chile and on his return to the United States in 1878 set about locating someone equal to the task of developing a girls' school. At the Mount Allison Seminary, Sackville, New Brunswick, he found Adelaide Whitefield,* the preceptress, a gifted, experienced teacher, whom he asked to go to Santiago for this purpose. The trustees were unwilling to let her go but finally agreed to release her for two years. She sailed for Chile, taking with her a well-qualified teacher, Miss Lizzie Kipp, and also a trained kindergarten teacher, Miss Rosina Kinsman. It was a daring venture and an inspiring example of faith.

Where has it a parallel? Three . . . [young women], without funds, without any missionary society to sustain them, without a knowledge of the language, to enter a foreign land where the strong social currents and the dominant intensely hostile church were bitterly opposed and expect to establish there a high-grade boarding and day school for young ladies, covering the expenses with the current income!

The three young women arrived at Santiago on September 11, 1880. Fortunately, the project which they were to undertake was not entirely unprepared for. When LaFetra came to Santiago from Valparaiso he found that English services had been held there some time earlier but had been abandoned. LaFetra succeeded in reviving interest in them and started a movement that later resulted in the organization of the Union Church of Santiago which through the years did a great work for evangelical religion in Chile. He had been in the city about a year when the three missionaries arrived and was able to be of immediate assistance to them. Within a month he rented a house on Vergara Street (No. 17) and made arrangements for opening a school on October 1 with departments for both girls and boys. The plans which he made in association with Miss Whitefield envisioned a school that would appeal not only to British and foreign residents but also to upper-class Chileans. LaFetra secured the endorsement of the American minister, the consul, and several distinguished, liberal citizens of Chile. The school was beset with difficulties that would have discouraged less stout-hearted and capable educators. By their energy, perseverance, and wise administration LaFetra and Adelaide Whitefield LaFetra, his wife, in the course of years developed the school (later Santiago College) into one of the most outstanding educational institutions of the nation.

* Adelaide Whitefield was born near Ransomfield, N. Y., and educated at Wilson Academy and at Houghton Seminary. Following graduation in 1868 she continued as an instructor for three years and then transferred to Lasell Seminary, Auburndale, Mass. From there she went to Mount Allison. For twenty-five years she gave herself with unflinching faith and rare devotion to the education of the girls and young women of Chile. "Her beautiful personality, her wide culture, her unusual power of entering graciously into the lives of the young women under her care, her deep spirituality made an impression upon the womanhood of Chile which will never be effaced."—Frank Mason North, "The Missionary-Minded Women of Methodism," ms., Board of Missions Library, pp. 50 f.

When Lucius C. Smith came to Santiago in 1883 to aid in the English church work he soon inaugurated Spanish services* in a room rented for the purpose. Soon after the meetings were begun the room was raided by a mob which carried off the seats, Bibles, and hymnbooks and burned them in a street in the central part of the city. Smith narrowly escaped being killed. He afterward resumed the services in a different location but as no provision could be found for his support as a Spanish language evangelist he requested and received a transfer to Mexico.¹⁰⁴

When on his outbound trip Taylor had disembarked at Colon on the Isthmus of Panama he had spent the brief interval before the train left for the city of Panama in walking about the town. From numerous Negroes he then learned that most of them were Wesleyans from Jamaica and were without a minister. He promised them "that he would try to send them a man on his return to the States." True to his promise he appointed Charles W. Birdsall and his wife who went out as members of the third party of missionaries. Birdsall was not mindful of the dangers of the hot, malarial climate and died within four months. To take his place Taylor appointed E. L. Latham of the Providence Conference, who organized a Methodist Society and erected a combined chapel, schoolhouse, and parsonage. He stayed for three years before going on to Nicaragua. Taylor then sent out B. S. Taylor of the Troy Conference who within a short time was stricken with fever and after a narrow escape from death returned to the United States. To Panama City William Taylor sent Richard Copp, whose name is listed, with no particulars, in his "official report for 1881." When B. S. Taylor left Colon Copp took charge in both places, working effectively until after more than ten years his health failed. Taylor then transferred the mission, including the property, to the Wesleyan Church. The story of the beginning of work in San Jose, Costa Rica, is much the same. Taylor appointed John E. Wright as missionary. "He did a good work, got a good

* The first regularly constituted Spanish preaching services in Chile were held in 1868 in Santiago. Nathaniel P. Gilbert was sent by the American and Foreign Christian Union in response to an appeal from the foreign residents of the city. He arrived in 1862, and in connection with his English services taught a Bible class of Chileans. In 1866 he began regular preaching in the Spanish language. The first Chilean evangelical church was established on June 7, 1868. By 1871 it had nineteen members. David Trumbull began work in Valparaiso among English-speaking people in December, 1845. In 1847 he organized the Union Church for English-speaking Protestants but his primary interest was in the people of the country. Services in Spanish were gradually begun and in 1869 the second church for Spanish-speaking people was organized in Valparaiso. In 1872 because of financial difficulties the American and Foreign Christian Union, under whose auspices Trumbull was serving, asked the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, U.S.A., to take over its work in Chile. This was done in 1873 and stations were soon opened in various parts of the country.—W. E. Browning, in W. E. Browning, J. Ritchie, and K. G. Grubb, op. cit., pp. 27 f.; Florence E. Smith, in W. Reginald Wheeler et al., Modern Missions in Chile and Brazil, pp. 137-42, 150 f.

support, . . . [married a young woman from California and together with his wife] developed an important school work." Mrs. Wright's health failed within a short time and they left Costa Rica for California.¹⁰⁵

After Taylor's dispatch of the third party of missionaries to the South America West Coast others, as we have noted, continued to be sent. One whom Taylor hoped to include in the third group was Oscar von Barchwitz-Krauser, an itinerant Local Preacher. He was an acquaintance of Charles W. Birdsall who told the evangelist about him. From Toronto Taylor wrote, "The Lord wants you to go to South America in my self-supporting missions, and preach on faith line to the Germans in the south of Chili, your own country people." Within a few days Krauser replied, "I say from the bottom of my heart, 'Here, Lord, am I: send me.'" In company with Charles H. Hoffman and wife he arrived at Valparaiso on January 5, 1879, and from there went on by the next steamer to work among the Germans at "Osorno [in the south of Chile], Puerto Varas, and the scattered settlements around Lake Llanquihue." The Hoffmans went to Valdivia, also in the south, but found the people unresponsive, not caring "to have anything to do with church services" and scorning evangelistic efforts. Considering his work a failure he joined Krauser. They started a small school which furnished them a little support, and held meetings in a few homes for preaching and Sunday-school teaching. Soon Krauser left the work around the lake to Hoffman and went to Osorno where he succeeded in making friends and had several conversions. Apparently for lack of support both Krauser and the Hoffmans returned to Valparaiso where Krauser joined A. T. Jeffrey in the Seamen's Bethel. Some of the missionaries and other friends contributed steamship fare for the Hoffmans and they returned to the United States.

When the Gillilands arrived in 1879, they came with the expectation of opening work at Majillones, a Bolivian port, but they found it blockaded and decided to go instead to the Lobos Islands (Peru) for work among the seamen. They were received cordially by the captains of the vessels loading guano at the islands and were given aid in making contacts with the crews and in securing support. Unfortunately, the islands were attacked by a Chilean gunboat and the vessels warned to leave. There was no alternative than to seek another field of service. On February 14, 1880, they reached Callao, then went on to Lima where they rented a house and for a time held religious services. Here also war interfered and for a while in 1881 they were engaged in teaching at Copiapo before going early in 1882 to start a school at Caldera.

J. G. Price organized a mission at Guayaquil, Ecuador, late in 1880, supporting himself by private teaching. In the report of the January, 1881, conference of West Coast missionaries it was stated that Price had "returned to the States on account of ill health." Guayaquil was later listed as one of the abandoned stations.¹⁰⁶

On his second trip to South America, this time to Brazil, Taylor took with him Justus H. Nelson,* his wife, and "one other helper." The party of four arrived in Para, capital of the state of Para, on June 19, 1880. Schoolwork was begun later in the same year at Pernambuco, and was also started but continued for only a short time at Maranham and Bahia. Taylor's stay at Para was very brief—only two weeks—but he said that he "opened the way for a college for the natives," a foundation on which Nelson built. At Pernambuco he laid the groundwork for a mission and appointed to it "several very strong men . . . , but they set their plow too deep" and all left, sick and discouraged, except George B. Nind who continued for some ten years teaching music and preaching every Sunday in the streets and parks. At Para Nelson's educational efforts were so successful that additional missionaries were needed and in June, 1881, Taylor sent John N. Nelson, a brother of Justus; Miss Hattie Batchelder, a graduate of Kent's Hill College, Maine; and Miss Clare Blunt, a graduate in music from the same institution. Shortly thereafter ill fortune swept in like a flood on the mission. The school building and all the furniture and schoolbooks were destroyed by fire. John N. Nelson and Miss Batchelder were taken away by yellow fever. These calamities caused the school enterprise to be given up. Justus H. Nelson began to teach part time in government schools and to give himself to preaching. A Methodist Episcopal church was organized on July 1, 1883. Nelson reported several years later (1893) that under his supervision Marcus E. Carver began a successful mission at Manaos in December, 1887, but soon decided to withdraw from the Methodist Episcopal Church and to continue entirely independent of any denomination.¹⁰⁷

ORGANIZATION AND SUPERVISION OF THE TAYLOR MISSIONS

A serious defect in Taylor's West Coast missionary program was lack of organization and efficient supervision. He acted independently, proceeding as though the Church had no official Missionary Society. Most of the missionaries were young and inexperienced. They were related to no supervisory missionary society. The men who were Conference members held only a casual relationship to their Conferences and were not eligible for ordination. Theoretically both men and women were responsible to William Taylor and subject to his direction but he did not have the relation to them of Bishop or Presiding Elder. Each station was independent in finances and administration. Taylor had made arrangements for establishing schools, for the payment of salaries of teachers for three years, and for payment in whole or in part of outgoing expenses. But he did not guarantee salary payments and made no provision for return expenses in case of illness, or for support of those who became disabled in service.

* Justus H. Nelson (1851-1937) was one of the few Taylor self-supporting missionaries to South America who remained for any extended period of time. His case was also exceptional in that he was appointed by a Bishop, having gone to Brazil by appointment of Bishop Thomas Bowman in June, 1880. He was a native of Wisconsin; was graduated from Lawrence (Wisconsin) College (A.B.) and from Boston University School of Theology (S.T.B., 1879). He also took a one-year eclectic course in Boston University School of Medicine. He was admitted on trial in the Providence Conference, 1880 (Gen'l Minutes, Spring, 1880, p. 68); and transferred to the Wisconsin Conference, 1881 (ibid., Fall, 1881, p. 256). He retired in 1926 after forty-five years of fruitful service.—Official Biographical Files, Division of World Missions.

Despite these conditions the missionaries went to the field with the feeling that Taylor would stand back of them—they spoke of him as “Father Taylor”—and thought of him as the authority to whom they could look for counsel, supervision, and help if difficulties developed. However, there was no way of communicating with him except by letter, and he was far away and fully occupied in intensive efforts to recruit additional men and women as replacements for those who resigned or died on the field and in raising funds for their outgoing. It was only a matter of months after the first missionaries reached the West Coast when vacancies occurred, readjustments had to be made, and transfers were necessary.¹⁰⁸

This situation was very largely brought about by the outbreak on February 12, 1879, of the War of the Pacific. Chile first declared war against Bolivia in an effort to gain control of the nitrate beds of the north, particularly in the region of Antofagasta, then a port of Bolivia. Since an alliance existed between Bolivia and Peru, Chile also declared war against Peru. A decisive naval battle was fought on May 21, 1879, in which Chile defeated the Peruvian fleet. The war continued by land until October, 1883, when Peru was forced to sign a treaty of peace. Peru ceded to Chile the province of Tarapaca and agreed to Chilean occupation of the territories of Tacna and Arica for a term of years; and Bolivia ceded to Chile the province of Antofagasta, thereby losing all access to the Pacific. During the four years of the war every port from the northern boundary of Peru to the Straits of Magellan was jeopardized and, as has been noted, one station after another had to be abandoned.¹⁰⁹

When he returned from his first trip to the West Coast Taylor attempted for the second time to get the concurrence of the Bishops in his undertaking, asking them to agree to appoint as missionaries the men whom he would select, ordain them, allow them to retain Conference membership, and record them in the Minutes of the Conferences as “missionaries to South America.” They were “courteous and kind,” he stated later, but emphatically refused, saying that the Church had no missions in the country and that as Bishops they had no power to create a mission or to appoint men to one which did not exist. Their position was incontrovertible but to Taylor it seemed unreasonable. As a courtesy to him the first preachers whom Taylor sent out were admitted on trial to Conference* but the Bishops ruled that "they could not be elected to orders nor be under episcopal supervision unless the mission was in 'a region within the control of the Missionary Society.'" The General Missionary Committee at its 1878 annual meeting, also by request of the Bishops, extended the jurisdiction of the Society to include all of South America and made a general appropriation of $500. Taylor objected to this action, contending that it would bring him under the supervision of the Society and restrict his freedom of action. Thereupon the Society withdrew its jurisdiction, and some of the preachers were dropped from Conference rolls and left without any kind of official status in the Church.¹¹⁰

The need for some form of organization and for supervisory leadership for the Taylor missionary enterprise as a whole was so strongly felt by the missionaries that early in 1879 an effort was made to get the group together for consultation, for definition of purpose, and for planning means and methods. A meeting was called for January 24, at Coquimbo. But too few could come for organization to be attempted. Only J. W. Higgins, pastor at Coquimbo, Lucius C. Smith of Copiapo, A. T. Jeffrey of Antofagasta, and I. H. LaFetra of Valparaiso, all Chile missionaries, were present. Letters from most of the others were read, different urgent matters discussed, and decision made to send a report of the meeting to the absentees.

Because of the war most of the missionaries were in critical circumstances and some were finding it "almost impossible to provide themselves with the bare necessities of life." Under these conditions a second effort was made to form a field organization. On January 22, 1880, ten missionaries met at Santiago.† LaFetra was elected president of the conference, and also chairman of an executive committee to supervise the work during the year. The published report said:

We came here without anyone to look after us, and have been working as best we could. The Lord has wonderfully guided us and enabled us to organize our work so that it really begins to take permanent shape. . . . It is the unanimous feeling among the workers that God sent us here to stay, and that our work is to take Chile for Christ.¹¹¹

* In 1879 John W. Collier, W. A. Wright, I. H. LaFetra, Alexander P. Stowell, Israel Derrick, Alexander T. Jeffrey, and Magnus Smith were admitted on trial in the East Maine Conference and listed in the appointments of the Bangor District as "missionaries to South America." (Minutes, East Maine Conference, 1879, pp. 14, 44.) With the exception of Magnus Smith and the addition of Oscar von Barchwitz-Krauser and J. W. Higgins the same list of appointees was included in 1880. In 1881 John E. Wright, John N. Nelson, and Charles H. Hoffman were admitted on trial and included in the list of members of Conference as "missionaries." (Ibid., 1881, pp. 15, 53.) That same year John E. Wright and John N. Nelson were transferred to the Wisconsin Conference, where Nelson's brother Justus and he were listed as "Missionaries to South America," and Wright listed as "Missionary to Central America." (Minutes, Wisconsin Conference, 1881, p. 40.) In 1882 Alexander P. Stowell and Israel Derrick were discontinued. There is no evidence in the sources that Derrick went to South America. In 1883 W. A. Wright was transferred to the New England Southern Conference; J. W. Higgins to the New England Conference; and I. H. LaFetra, Oscar von Barchwitz-Krauser and Lucius C. Smith "were discontinued, being engaged in Christian educational work in places beyond the supervision of the Church."—Minutes, East Maine Conference, 1883, pp. 10, 21.

† Those present at the second meeting were: I. H. LaFetra of Santiago; W. A. Wright and Lelia H. Waterhouse of Concepcion; Lucius C. Smith and Mrs. Marietta Vashinder of Copiapo; A. T. and Mrs. Jeffrey; J. W. and Mrs. Collier, and Oscar von Barchwitz-Krauser of Valparaiso.—G. F. Arms. op. cit., p. 57.

It is to be noted that the action in organizing a field conference was taken by the missionaries on their own initiative, without any suggestion from Taylor. Apparently he had not felt need for a field organization, or for supervision other than what he was giving by correspondence. However, he made no objection to what had been done and agreed to cooperate.

I will concur in the action of your Conference in all things in harmony with our self-supporting principles, and do my best to help you to carry your wise counsels into effect. . . . The president elected by the Conference for the year will be my representative in my absence in all things he can do in connection with his own pastoral charge. The Holy Spirit must lead the whole movement to make it a success.¹¹²

At the third meeting of the field conference, held at Santiago on January 14-17, 1881, "seven central stations" were reported in operation, at four of which there were schools employing fifteen teachers. Six preachers, including the seamen's chaplain at Valparaiso, were engaged in wholly religious work. In addition a large number of outlying points were regularly visited by preachers and teachers. At all of these points Sunday schools had been organized. The religious work was supported almost entirely by English-speaking people. It was not possible for any preacher to secure a living if any considerable part of his time was given to Spanish preaching. Besides the abandonment of a large proportion of the stations favorable prospects at others had been diminished by the departure of many foreign residents as a consequence of the war. The report of the third meeting indicates that as time went on proportionately larger effort was being devoted to religious work.¹¹³

Another difficulty arose during the early years in connection with the holding of property by the mission. Under Chilean law any property purchased by or for the mission—whether school or church property, or furnishings purchased for churches or schools—had to be held as the private property of some person. Because of the frequent changes of personnel this caused such serious inconveniences that Taylor sought legal remedy, but without result.¹¹⁴

GRADUAL MODIFICATION OF MISSION OPERATION

By 1881 thirty-three men and women had been sent to the field by Taylor. Of these three had died and seven had returned to the United States by reason of ill health, failure to make satisfactory adjustment, or dissatisfaction and disillusionment. There was a tendency for discouragement to increase. The next year, before leaving for home, A. T. Jeffrey wrote:

It seems darker to me the farther we go. There must be something materially wrong with the plan. We have tried to be as faithful as we could, yet what have we done? The work is as dear as life, but I have a wife and two helpless children. If I remain here, it will be only to eke out a miserable existence. This is not all:

I shall rejoice when the Lord relieves me from school work and places me where I can devote the remainder of my life to the preaching of the Gospel.¹¹⁵

In 1881 Bishop W. L. Harris visited the West Coast on a tour of inspection. He arrived at Valparaiso on December 13 and sailed on the twenty-ninth for Talcahuano and the East Coast. Despite the earlier decision of the Bishops that Taylor's missionaries were not eligible for ordination he ordained eight young men* who had previously been "elected to orders by one Conference or another, under varied circumstances."¹¹⁶

While teaching of the Bible was, by Taylor's agreement with some of his patrons, not permitted as a part of the curriculum of the schools, earnest teachers found ways of inculcating evangelical truths and Christian attitudes. Miss Waterhouse told of her methods at Concepcion:

I kept a space on one blackboard for 'General Exercises.' Upon this I had a passage of Scripture credited . . . to its author, St. Peter, St. John, Jesus, Mary the mother of Jesus, Solomon, David, Isaiah, etc., and beneath this passage was a quotation from some poet. Each pupil was required to commit the selections to memory, translate them into Spanish, and examinations were had, and credit marks were given as in other studies. I arranged the Lord's Prayer as a chant and that was used for an opening exercise in each room.

On Sunday afternoons she met the girls in a schoolroom where she had written Jesus' parables and incidents of His life on a blackboard for them to copy into blank books to take home and read to their mothers.¹¹⁷

The election of William Taylor as lay delegate to the 1884 General Conference, by the South India Conference, had important and unexpected effects on his West Coast Self-supporting Mission. "I saw that my Lord meant that I should be there," he wrote later, "so when the General Conference roll was called, in May, 1884, I answered, 'Here.'" He presented a memorial which in substance asked for the recognition of his West Coast Mission as a regular mission of the Church, "without being put under the jurisdiction of the Missionary Society," and local Societies within the mission as being in "a direct legitimate relation" to the Church. The memorial was read and referred to the Committee on Missions which for three weeks took no action on it. In the meantime, on May 21, William Taylor was elected † Missionary Bishop for Africa.¹¹⁸

The election of Taylor as Bishop was equivalent to an endorsement of his plan and method of missionary expansion. General Conference to be consistent had to legitimize what he had done in Chile, an action which the Bishops had refused to take and the General Missionary Committee had declared to be illegal. This was done in the following form:

* The 1882 Minutes of the East Maine Conference state that a certificate of ordination from Bishop Harris of "several members of the Conference, employed as missionaries in South America, was read" (p. 6). Names are not given.

† Taylor's comment on his election was: "Meantime the Lord had put me through on a fast train into the missionary episcopacy, with authority to open missions and develop Methodist churches on my own missionary methods anywhere in Africa."—Op. cit., p. 688.

Wherever Methodist Churches are organized in territory outside of an Annual Conference, or of any regular Mission of our Church, such work may be attached to such home Conferences as the said Churches may elect, with the concurrence of the Bishop having charge of said Conference, and may be constituted a Presiding Elder's District.¹¹⁹

Taylor's election as Bishop made it impossible for him to retain his former relation to the West Coast Mission. Such supervision as he had previously exercised was ended and he could no longer be personally related to the mission for its financial support. He immediately called together members of a group of supporters who had been most sympathetic and cooperative and arranged for the incorporation of the Transit and Building Fund Society of Bishop William Taylor's Self-support Missions, with trustees, officers,* and counsel. Headquarters were established in New York City. The purpose of the society was stated as follows:

The particular business and object of said Society is to provide ways and means, and to manage and appropriate the same as follows: To pay passage of missionaries to foreign countries from New York, also the traveling expenses of pioneer evangelists in the countries; to build or purchase dwelling and school-houses or houses of worship for the use of the missionaries.

The funds of the Society shall not be used to pay salaries of agents at home, or preachers or teachers in foreign countries.

There is no provision made by this Society for missionaries returning from their field of labor.

The Society does not deem itself justified in paying the out-going expenses entire where less than five years' service is rendered.¹²⁰

The society at once assumed complete direction of the Taylor missions. At a meeting held on May 7, 1885, I. H. LaFetra was made general agent and attorney for the purchase and transfer to the society of all the property, real and personal, of the West Coast Mission.

With the election of Taylor as Bishop the primary emphasis shifted from establishing schools to evangelization and the founding of churches. It was proposed to bring the missions to be established in Africa under the jurisdiction of the society, although it had no organic relation to the Church. In effect, there were now in the Methodist Episcopal Church, by authority of the General Conference, two missionary societies with the same general objective but organized on different bases, and operating on quite different principles, an anomalous situation which must have been readily apparent.

In 1885 a liberal charter was secured from the Chilean government which provided conditions under which missions of the evangelical Churches could operate freely without fear of official interference. The charter provided:

Those who profess the Reformed Church religion according to the doctrines of Holy Scriptures, may promote primary and secondary instruction according to modern methods and practice, and propagate the worship of their belief obedient to the law of the land.¹²¹

* The officers elected were: President, William Taylor; First V. P., the Rev. Asbury Lowrey; Second V. P., Anderson Fowler; Corresponding Secretary, the Rev. Alexander McLean; Recording Secretary, Mrs. Asbury Lowrey; Treasurer, Richard Grant.—G. F. Arms, op. cit., p. 95.

The charter also made provision for acquiring lands and buildings for these objects and their retention by act of legislature.

An annual meeting of the field conference was convened in January, 1886, in Santiago. Time was allowed for ample discussion of all problems. The conference unanimously favored the organization of a Methodist Society at every station where practicable, and also the attaching of the mission as a whole to some Annual Conference as a Presiding Elder's District, as provided by the 1884 General Conference.¹²²

In July, 1887, Asbury Lowrey arrived in Chile for an official visit as vice president of the Transit and Building Fund Society. He brought with him as missionary reinforcements Ira G. Ross and wife, with two children, and Miss Isabel MacDermott. He visited the various stations and laid much stress on forming regularly organized Methodist churches. He was convinced that a mistake had been made in not making greater effort to do this in the past. Concerning Iquique he said:

A chief obstacle to productive work here, as in every place on the coast, is the erroneous idea that a specific church organization is inexpedient and would be damaging. This prejudice has been so cultivated and diffused that it is exceedingly difficult to induce persons who were acceptable members of some denomination in the country from which they came to unite in church fellowship here.¹²³

At Concepcion Lowrey organized a Methodist Society with thirteen members. He either found or himself organized a Society at Colon and at Para (Brazil). Arms is critical of Lowrey's insistence on organization of churches with denominational affiliation, feeling that "he little realized the difficulties in the way, and especially if the work were made sectarian in character." The church at Concepcion, he says, was composed of the nine missionaries, two of whom were clergymen, three young women who were educated in the girls' school, and a young German. What was the outcome?

Before his report was published the church was without a minister, one of the two had gone to Argentina with his wife and family, and the other to the States. One missionary teacher had died and another had gone to Santiago, as had also the young German. Two of the three young ladies were gone, leaving only three missionary lady teachers and one student. The organization had come to nothing. But in the community there was quite a British colony, the members of which, though not willing to join a Methodist church and obey the rules in regard to theatergoing and abstinence from the use of wines, were willing to attend services and help support them.¹²⁴

On July 1, 1888, ten years had passed since the first party of Taylor's missionaries had sailed from New York. Of more than eighty that had been sent out only twenty-two were on the field. The average length of service of the sixty who had left the field was about three years and two months.

Of the many stations where work had been begun only nine remained. In Chile the mission was limited to four cities where property had been purchased as centers within which an ongoing program could be maintained: Iquique, Coquimbo, Concepcion, and Santiago. In addition a school had been opened among the Germans at Angol in 1887 by W. F. Griewe and his wife who had come to the field in 1884 to work among the colonists. The school continued for some eighteen months. It was closed when the Chilean government established a free school in Angol. At Colon on the Isthmus of Panama a Society of forty-six members had been organized, a mission house and church built, and a Local Preacher licensed. In Brazil work was in progress at Para, Pernambuco, and Manaos. The disheartening list of abandoned stations on the West Coast included Mollendo, Callao, Lima, Tacna, Antofagasta, Guayaquil (Ecuador), Lobos Islands, Copiapo, Caldera, Valparaiso (Bethel work), Valdivia, Osorno, Lake Llanquihue, and Con-tulmo.¹²⁵

Abandonment of the missionary work in a number of the stations was caused by war and would have taken place under any administrative auspices. The Missionary Society, however, probably in most cases would have re-opened the missions after the war ended while Taylor made no attempt to re-establish abandoned stations except at Callao.

The year 1888 was especially difficult because of the serious depletion of personnel. The need for missionaries was so acute that those remaining on the field contributed out of their scant resources to pay the passage of Ira Ross to the United States to enlist recruits and to procure additional funds, but in raising money he was unsuccessful, and to complicate the situation further did not himself return.¹²⁶

The 1888 General Conference, besides declaring that the plan of self-supporting missions inaugurated by Bishop Taylor in South America and Africa deserved "an opportunity for full development under the fostering care of the whole Church" and that the official agencies of the Church were "sufficiently broad and flexible in their scope and purpose to embrace all departments and methods of missionary work," enacted additional legislation. It directed that all property acquired under the plan should "be held by and for the Methodist Episcopal Church"; that the Board appoint a standing committee for the oversight of self-supporting missions; and that missionaries and churches organized under the plan should be "entitled to the same rights and be amenable to the Discipline . . . the same as missionaries and churches in other fields." This legislation precipitated the issue of the jurisdiction of the Transit and Building Fund Society over Methodist missions and missionaries.¹²⁷

In 1889 Bishop John M. Walden visited the West Coast and made a careful study of the work. While he commended the efforts of the missionaries his opinion of the self-supporting plan was "decidedly unfavorable." Up to the time of his visit nothing had been done to connect the mission with any Annual Conference but in September, 1890, he presented the question of "attaching the work of Bishop Taylor in South America as a district" of the Cincinnati Conference. The Conference constituted a Chile District,* with six Chile missionaries as members.† James P. Gilliland was appointed Presiding Elder.¹²⁸

In 1889 Justus H. Nelson had asked the Bishops to organize the self-supporting work in Brazil as a Presiding Elder's District under the provision of paragraph 361 of the Discipline. His request was granted and at the 1890 session the New England Southern Conference voted to create a Brazil District.‡ Nelson was appointed Presiding Elder.¹²⁹

In 1890 Charles W. Drees, Superintendent of the South America Mission, accompanied by Andrew M. Milne, colporteur, made a four-month tour of the West Coast missions. He left Buenos Aires on February 20 and, after a few days in western Argentina, crossed the Andes and arrived at Valparaiso on March 3. His purpose, he stated, was:

first, to confer with the missionaries in Chili concerning the unification of our Methodist work in South America, by carrying into effect the organization of an Annual Conference comprising Argentina, Uruguay, Paraguay, and southern Brazil, together with Chili and the additional territory providentially opened up by this Mission; and, secondly, to respond to the earnest call of our brethren in Peru, carrying to them encouragement and help, perfecting their organization as a Methodist church, and gathering facts and data such as might stir up our Church and Missionary Society to take a direct interest in spreading the work of the Gospel over the wide territories open to us in Spanish South America, including Chili, Peru, Ecuador, and Bolivia.¹³⁰

Drees found in Chile an almost unanimous desire that "their work should be brought into connection with the regular missionary operations of the Church," and also for an all-South America Conference organization. He was convinced that a comparison of methods and results of the two existing organizations, taking into account all of the factors, "would lead to conclusions overwhelmingly in favor of the practical wisdom of those of the Missionary Society." He did not feel, however, that the disparate methods were necessarily incompatible or mutually exclusive, and he thought that the Taylor missions demonstrated the desirability of large expenditure for higher education and of good church buildings along with aggressive evangelistic work. A much more glowing estimate of the value and results of the Taylor mission, made in the same year, was contained in an article by Anderson Fowler in Gospel in All Lands. He pronounced the mission "a marvelous success." During the preceding ten years, he said, about $120,000., gold, had been invested in building colleges, schools, and churches, and furnishing them; more than twenty missionaries had been constantly at work, all self-supporting; some stations had furnished $20,000. surplus over self-support; hundreds of persons had been converted of whom several at the time of his writing were teachers in the mission schools. Santiago College he declared to be "the finest of its kind in the world."¹³¹

* The action of the Conference was: "Resolved, That this Conference invites our presiding Bishop to organize our Methodist Episcopal Church in Chili, South America, into a presiding elders district, and attach it to this Conference, under paragraph 361 of the Discipline."—Minutes, Cincinnati Conference, 1890, p. 27.

† The missionaries who became members of the Cincinnati Conference were Goodsil F. Arms, transferred from the Vermont Conference; Ira H. LaFetra, from Austin; Harry B. Compton from New England; and Rowland D. Powell, Ohio. James P. Gilliland was a Local Elder. He was recommended by the Madisonville Quarterly Conference and was received on trial. Compton was left without appointment to attend the Boston University School of Theology. James Bengé, Juan Canut de Bon, and A. J. Vidaurre were given appointments as supplies.—Ibid., pp. 29, 40, 45.

‡ In 1889 Justus H. Nelson was transferred from the Wisconsin Conference to the New England Southern Conference.—Gen'l Minutes, Spring, 1889, p. 80.

The 1888 General Conference, in addition to the legislation already noted affecting self-supporting missions, passed an enabling act which prepared the way for including the missionary work in Chile in an all-South America Annual Conference. The 1892 General Conference re-enacted the authorization. When, finally, in 1893 the South America Annual Conference was organized, the Chile District previously attached to the Cincinnati Conference and the Brazil District connected with the New England Southern Conference were included in it. Since this placed Chile and Brazil under the jurisdiction of the Missionary Society it was in conflict with the judgment, wishes, and expectations of the Transit and Building Fund Society. When Bishop Newman, who had organized the Conference, reported the action to the Board a committee was constituted to confer with the officers of the Transit Society in reference to a transfer of their work to the Missionary Society. After negotiations it became clear to these officers that two "kinds of missionary work could not be carried on successfully in the same territory under different authorities; [and that] something must be done by them." Within a short time, Anderson Fowler and Richard Grant made the following proposal to the Bishops:

We the undersigned Committee of the Transit and Building Fund Society . . . offer to you, as representing the M. E. Church, to transfer all the Mission Work and Mission Property belonging to the above society in Chili, upon the condition that Chili be set apart exclusively for Self-Supporting Mission Work, and that the Mission Work in Chili be carried on, and conducted on the plan of Self Support as heretofore . . .¹³²

The proposition was accepted by the General Missionary Committee on November 13, 1893, and the Board on December 19 concurred.* The com-

* Numerous complications arose in the process of transfer. It was found that under Chilean law the Missionary Society, as a foreign corporation, could not hold title to the mission property for more than a few years. It was then agreed that Richard Grant and Anderson Fowler should hold the titles in trust for the Missionary Society (Minutes, B.M., XV, 158 f.). Various other problems, legal and otherwise, arose on some of which the members of the Board were unable to reach agreement. In the course of years the original plan of self-support was modified by consent of all parties. Not until 1905, however, when by approval of the Chilean government La Corporación Andina Construcciones was formed to hold legally all the properties of the Chile Mission, were property matters satisfactorily settled.—G. F. Arms, op. cit., pp. 213-25; Minutes, B.M., XVI, 230 ff., 250 f.

mittee appropriated $25,000. contingent upon the receipt of contributions specifically designated for Chile.¹³³

When in 1893 the Taylor mission in Chile was transferred to the Missionary Society approximately 145 * missionaries, counting the wives and teachers, had been sent to the field. Of these forty-three were still in Chile. Ten had died. The average period of service of those who left the field was probably not more than three and a half years.† Some had been pledged to give at least three years of service. Some were dissatisfied because there was so little opportunity for evangelistic work. Others left because they felt that little was being accomplished. Still others could not adjust themselves to the hard conditions involved—uncomfortable living quarters and uncertain and scant financial support. Speaking frankly, Arms said there “were too many misfits.” Neither Taylor nor the officers of the Transit and Building Fund Society gave as much attention as should have been given to the temperament and personality of the volunteers. Too many were hurriedly sent out who should never have been accepted as missionaries.¹³⁴

SOUTH AMERICA CONFERENCE, 1893-95

Pursuant to the action of the 1892 General Conference‡ Bishop John P. Newman on July 1, 1893, organized the South America Annual Conference. Thirty-eight preachers who were members of Annual Conferences in the United States were recorded as charter members.§ This official action, Bishop Newman said, was justified by many reasons.

* Of the approximately 145 Taylor missionaries sent to the West Coast some account has been given of sixty. Those not mentioned included William F. and Mrs. Albright, Adrian Allan, Mr. Baldwin, Alice Baldwin, J. M. and Mrs. Baxter, Mrs. James Benge, Mary Bray, Josephine Corbin, Mabel E. Curtis, Emily Day, Carl Ebert, George H. Farwell, Edith A. Fawcett, Fannie Freestone, Mary Fuller, Etta Goodwin, Walter Gregg, Laura J. Hanlon, Mr. and Mrs. Herman, Lizzie E. Holding, J. C. Horn, Mr. Hurlburt, Hannah S. Johnson, Mrs. Oscar von Barchwitz-Krauser, T. Wolcott LaFetra, Miss L. Leach, Mary F. Lee, Millard F. Lemon, Addie Lewis, G. W. and Mrs. Martin, Nellie Martin, Lillian Mathewson, James W. and Mrs. Nelson, Mrs. Justus H. Nelson, Mrs. George B. Nind, Eudora Pierson, Miss Potter, Mrs. Rowland D. Powell, Mrs. W. T. Robinson, F. F. and Mrs. Roose, Miss E. Rugg, J. H. Schively, Louise Schofield, Eva L. Schultz, Clifford S. and Mrs. Scott, Clara Sears, Samuel J. Smith, J. M. and Mrs. Vincent, Sabra Wakeman, Miss Wallace, A. S. Watson, Mrs. Sarah Webster, Charles S. and Mrs. Winans.

† The “Minute Book” of the Transit and Building Fund Society was lost in a fire and no record exists of the date of arrival and date of leaving Chile of many of the missionaries.

‡ G. C. Journal, 1892: “The South America Mission may, at any time during the next four years, with the approval of the Bishop presiding, organize into an Annual Conference, to be called the South America Annual Conference.”—P. 416.

§ The thirty-eight charter members of the Conference were: Charles W. Drees, Goodsil F. Arms, William F. Albright, James P. Gilliland, Ira H. LaFetra, and Rowland D. Powell, from the Cincinnati Conference; Thomas B. Wood, Northwest Indiana Conference; John F. Thomson, Central Ohio Conference; Almon W. Greenman, North Indiana Conference; Charles W. Miller, Central Alabama Conference; Andrew M. Milne, William Tallon, John M. Spangler, Juan C. Correa, Francisco Penzotti, Joaquin Dominguez, William T. Robinson, Juan Robles, Juan Villanueva, George G. Froggatt, and Rudolph Griot, New England Conference; William P. McLaughlin, Ohio Conference; Lino Aboledo, Antonio Guelfi, and George P. Howard, New Jersey Conference; Rudolph Gerber and Robert Weihmüller, Central German Conference; Ramon Blanco, Silvio S. Espindola, and Buel O. Campbell, New Hampshire Conference; Justus H. Nelson and Frank R. Spaulding, New England Southern Conference. Probationers of the second year: Juan Canut de Bon, Harry B. Compton, James Benge, and Willis C. Hoover, from the Cincinnati Conference; Carlos Lazzare, from the New England Conference. Probationer of the first year: James A. Russell, from the Illinois Conference.

In addition Alberto J. Vidaurre was received as an effective elder on credentials from the Chile Presbyterian Church, and Martin Arnejo, Remigio Vasquez, Karl Beutelspacher, and William C. Morris were admitted on trial.—Minutes, South America Conference, 1893, pp. 4, 5, 7, 18.

We should occupy the whole continent of South America, and everywhere plant therein a living, energetic, Protestant Christianity. The invitation comes from every quarter, and the voices are heard from all the provinces: 'Come over and help us.' We are bound to heed these solemn importunities. This action will unify Methodism throughout the continent; will remove a standing protest against our missionary policy; will provide for the effectual evangelization of Chile; will enable us to attend to the business of the Annual Conference with precision and regularity; will present to the Church at home a profounder claim for larger appropriations, and will secure to the Church of South America an annual episcopal visitation, which is necessary for the ordination of deacons and elders, the number of which annually increases.¹³⁵

The newly organized Conference had six Districts—Argentina, Uruguay, Paraguay, Brazil, Chile, and Peru—and extended into eight of the ten nations of the continent, in six of which the Methodist Church was "the only organized missionary agency for evangelistic work among the native peoples and in the national language." Nineteen members of Conference were present at the organizing session. No members were present from Chile, Peru, or Brazil. Drees was appointed Superintendent of the Conference and Presiding Elder of the Argentine District. The statistical secretary reported a total membership of 1,370 full members and 1,118 probationers; forty-eight Sunday schools with an enrollment of 3,434 pupils and 220 officers and teachers; and twenty-three church buildings. The report did not include Chile statistics.¹³⁶

The second session of the Conference was held at Mendoza, Argentina, February 16-20, 1894. In the absence of a Bishop C. W. Drees presided. Twenty-three members of the Conference answered the roll call, of whom seven were from Chile. None was present from Peru or Brazil. Drees reported as Conference Superintendent that in most of the centers congregations were larger than ever before, conversions more numerous and more thorough, and "spiritual life deeper and more genuine." A major difficulty existed, however, in lack of Conference members for many of the charges. That year two men were transferred into the Conference: George B. Benedict from Wyoming Conference and William Groves from Wisconsin Conference.

The third Conference session was convened in Buenos Aires on March 6, 1895, Bishop James N. FitzGerald presiding, with seventeen Conference members in attendance. LaFetra and Arms were the only members present from Chile, and neither Peru nor Brazil was represented. Despite severe economic depression throughout the Conference there were evidences of increasing material support of the Church and growing realization that hope of extension of the work chiefly depended upon development of self-support in the local churches, particularly the older congregations. Five missionaries were received by transfer: Daniel McGurk from North Kansas Conference, Edward A. Wilson, Colorado, Samuel P. Craver, Iowa, J. H. Keeley, North Dakota, and Frank D. Tubbs,* Mexico. Tubbs was appointed president of the theological seminary.¹³⁷

ARGENTINE DISTRICT

In 1893 organized missionary work was being carried on in the national capital and in five provincial capitals of Argentina. Regular religious services were held in thirty-five cities and towns and many others were more or less regularly visited by preachers in their evangelistic work. The District staff of workers included four missionaries of the Missionary Society and their wives; two missionaries of the W.F.M.S.; eight ordained and twenty unordained preachers; twenty-five teachers; and twenty-nine other helpers. There were 886 full members of the Church; 676 probationers; 804 pupils in day schools; and 2,198 Sunday-school pupils. Property owned was valued at $200,000.

A mission was established in January, 1893, in San Luis, capital of San Luis Province, by Carlos Lastrico and in November a Society of thirty members was organized by the Presiding Elder. A group of Methodists moved in 1894 from Mendoza to Tucuman, in northern Argentina, providing a nucleus for a Society in that prosperous city.

The theological seminary was transferred in 1893 from Buenos Aires to Mercedes, a provincial town west of the city. Educational interests of the Conference were materially advanced in 1895 by Nicholas Lowe of Mercedes who deeded to the Missionary Society property to the value of $25,000. gold.¹³⁸

URUGUAY DISTRICT

The Uruguay District, as organized at the first session of the South America Conference, comprised all of Uruguay, the province of Rio Grande do Sul, a southern frontier state of Brazil, and one charge (Concordia) in the province of Entre Rios, Argentina. The Conference area had a population of nearly two million people. The principal centers from which missionary extension was being carried on were Montevideo, Trinidad, Porto Alegre, and the cities along the Uruguay River. A. W. Greenman was appointed Presiding Elder.

In Montevideo the day schools and religious services had formerly been confined to small rooms in out-of-the-way parts of the city. These were replaced by attractive, well-furnished halls in the two most important sections of the newer part of the city. The primary schools, for years maintained jointly by the W.F.M.S. and the Missionary Society, were moved to larger quarters near the city's center and reorganized into two large schools, a girls' school under the W.F.M.S. and a boys' school under the Missionary Society.

* In 1898, following the death of his wife, Tubbs returned to the United States and transferred to the Ohio Conference.—Gen'l Minutes, Spring, 1898, pp. 86 f.

The Central Circuit, the most extensive Spanish language work in the Uruguay District, continued to expand. Serious difficulties growing out of extreme poverty and failure of crops compelled the closing of the day schools at Trinidad and Durazno. Rio Grande do Sul, in southern Brazil, in soil, climate, and population was more closely related to the River Plate Republics than it was to the more northern states of Brazil. For these reasons and for convenience of administration it was attached to Uruguay. Civil war in the state made it impossible in 1894 to carry out plans that had been formulated for extension. At Salto, on the Uruguay River in the northwest angle of Uruguay, services were begun with a large attendance.¹³⁹

In 1895 a new station was opened at Colon, Entre Rios, near a colony of foreign Protestants, with a congregation of some sixty people. A Sunday school was organized which gave promise of permanency. A chapel on the premises of a German immigrant was made freely available for use of the congregation. Substantial increase was registered at Concordia and Salto and a school was begun at Concordia. Repeated invitations for religious services had come from five or six towns in Uruguay to which response was impossible for lack of preachers. Toward the end of the year peace was proclaimed in Rio Grande do Sul which made renewed activity possible, and W. T. Robinson was appointed to Porto Alegre.¹⁴⁰

PARAGUAY DISTRICT

At the first Annual Conference session* Joaquin Dominguez was appointed preacher in charge at Asuncion, the capital city of Paraguay. This appointment, Drees felt, promised to impart strength and activity to the mission. Regular English preaching services were held (1894) in addition to Spanish services. The girls' school, begun in 1887, and the boys' school established in 1892 by Antonio Bandres, were continued without interruption, giving evidence of public confidence.¹⁴¹

In 1895 Rudolph Gerber succeeded to the pastorate of the Asuncion church. Previously the congregation and schools were chiefly patronized by foreign residents—Italian, Spanish, and others—and the native population had been only slightly influenced, partly because none of the missionaries had been able to acquire the Guarani language which was used almost exclusively by the Paraguay population. In 1894 a Sunday school was opened in a small building erected in a poor district of the city, but these first efforts dismally failed. Fortunately, early in 1895 Miss Olga Lehman, a Swiss, a gifted musician and experienced teacher, offered her services to the mission. She succeeded in winning the confidence of the people of the neighborhood and within the year thirty-four pupils were enrolled in a day school, and a Sunday school was also established. This work, Drees felt, would be the beginning of "an increasing evangelical movement among the masses of the [Paraguayan] people."¹⁴²

* At the first Conference session Charles W. Miller, who was in the United States on furlough, was appointed Presiding Elder. He did not return, as was expected, to South America, and in 1894 was transferred to the Holston Conference.—Minutes, South America Conference, 1894, p. 7.

BRAZIL DISTRICT

The only organized Methodist Society in the Brazil District was at Para. In its first ten years (1883-93) 108 persons had been received on probation and fifty-one into full connection. In 1890 in the New England Southern Conference three appointments had been listed in the Brazil District. Nelson was named Presiding Elder and pastor at Para. The other two appointments, Manaus and Pernambuco, were left "to be supplied." In 1892 Para and Manaus were made a single charge with Nelson as pastor. A new appointment, Santarem, was listed. In Pernambuco Nind, who was a licensed Exhorter, held preaching services weekly in his home and conducted a Sunday school. In September, 1892, he was obliged to return to the United States because of the illness of his wife and his work was absorbed by other denominations. The work at Maranham and Bahia had been given up for lack of a missionary or lay helpers. In 1895 the Para church reported forty-four full members, twenty-six probationers, and 250 adherents; also an Epworth League and a Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Nelson published a monthly paper, Apologista Christias Brasileiro, which carried the Gospel message far beyond the limits of Para. For an article printed in 1893, critical of the Roman Catholic Church, the missionary was condemned to serve a sentence of four months in the common jail of Para. In May, 1893, the mission was reinforced by the arrival of Frank R. Spaulding of the Columbia River Conference.¹⁴³

PERU DISTRICT

At the 1893 South America Conference Thomas B. Wood was reappointed Presiding Elder of the Peru District, including in addition to Peru, Bolivia on the east and south, and Ecuador on the north where it was hoped to begin work. The one fully organized church was at Callao. A congregation had been in process of building at Lima, approaching the status of a Quarterly Conference but not yet ready for complete organization. Preparations were under way at other points, looking toward the formation of a strong Circuit. Wood had ambitious hopes of other Circuits southward and northward. The Callao day schools were still small—attendance about one hundred—but Wood envisioned them as the beginning of an important school system. Since preaching was banned everything possible was done to promote the circulation of evangelical publications.¹⁴⁴

Wood's 1895 report gave account of the bitter opposition encountered the previous year in Peru, including the stoning of preaching places, schools, and dwellings, and vicious attacks upon colporteurs, preachers, and teachers. Because of prevailing conditions advance in all phases of missionary work was inevitably slow. But neither the missionary authorities at the home base nor the field personnel were daunted. In January, 1894, three missionary teachers—George M. Hewey (accompanied by his wife), Miss Ethel G. Porter, and Miss Ina H. Moses—arrived from the United States. Since the 1894 appropriations were not sufficient to extend the Lima school the reinforcement was applied to expansion of the Callao schools. In November J. M. Spangler and family also came to Callao from Rosario, Argentina.¹⁴⁵

CHILE DISTRICT

The personnel of the Chile District in 1893 included, in addition to the forty-three missionaries already mentioned, eighteen full-time Chilean workers and twenty-five part-time teachers. There were six Methodist Societies and three unorganized congregations. Adherents totaled nine hundred. Eight Sunday schools had a total enrollment, including officers and teachers, of 511. Six boarding schools had 180 boarders and 772 day pupils. There were also two day schools. The property owned included five school buildings, two chapels and parsonages, and a printing plant, with a total estimated value of $397,000. Four chapels, parsonages, an orphanage, and two additional school buildings, were rented. Other than periodicals tens of thousands of tracts were printed and circulated annually.¹⁴⁶

Since the Chile District remained on the self-supporting plan it had special administrative problems of its own. To deal with these problems a "mission conference" * was created composed of all the missionaries—ministers and laymen and women—and all the Chilean pastors. It dealt with all the problems of finance—means of securing funds and their distribution—amount to be allocated to supplement the contributions of the people for the support of pastors, or for special evangelistic work, and the amount to be used for repairs and improvements of the schools. It also considered plans for improving the work of the churches and the schools. A session was held in Santiago in February, 1894. Because of distance, difficulties of travel, and expense no members from Chile were present at the 1893 organizational meeting of the South America Annual Conference. It was therefore necessary for a District Conference to be organized for the licensing of Local Preachers and Exhorters; for making recommendations for Conference relations and ordinations, and for other strictly ecclesiastical matters. The first District Conference was held at the same time and place as the "mission conference." When in 1895 Bishop J. N. FitzGerald visited the West Coast the Chile District

* This body, though known locally as a "mission conference," was not a Mission Conference in the Disciplinary sense of the term. It might have been more properly called a District field conference.

Conference was convened for the second time. Its actions were later sanctioned by the Annual Conference.¹⁴⁷

An Orphans' Home and Industrial School had been established in Santiago on August 1, 1891. By January 1, 1893, a debt of $4,405. had been accumulated. At the 1894 Annual Conference R. D. Powell, the superintendent, was able to report that after many vicissitudes assets were in excess of liabilities. In a new location brickmaking had been adopted as a means of self-support for the school and was amazingly successful. Some seventy-five orphan children had been brought together in a Christian home and plans were under way for an enlarged industrial program.

FORTY-EIGHT YEARS OF SOUTH AMERICA MISSIONS, 1847-95

In 1895 the South America Conference had in its six Districts forty-eight pastoral charges with 1,942 full members and 1,688 probationers. Ministerial members of the Conference numbered fifty-three of whom twenty-four were sent to South America by the Missionary Society. Of these missionaries six were pastors of English churches; five were in educational work; one was an American Bible Society colporteur; five were Presiding Elders; three were pastors of Spanish language churches; and the others had various appointments. W.F.M.S. missionaries numbered seven, all engaged in school-work. Other than the twenty-four Conference members sent out by the Missionary Society, there were twenty-nine pastors. Most of these were South Americans. A few were of Spanish or Swiss birth. Five were North Americans but had not been sent out by the Missionary Society. There were thirty-six Local Preachers; sixty-four Sunday schools with 4,635 pupils; twenty-four church buildings and forty-five rented halls and chapels; and nine parsonages. The Conference had one theological school; one high school; and twenty-eight other day schools with 2,017 pupils. Of these, eight schools with 971 pupils were in Argentina. Chile reported 424 pupils in day and boarding schools. The Buenos Aires girls' schools under W.F.M.S. auspices enrolled about 125 pupils; in Rosario about 200; and in Montevideo approximately 125.¹⁴⁹

Why, after almost five decades of missionary effort, was not a more impressive showing possible? The reasons are obvious and can be briefly stated. South America missions did not appeal as strongly to the Church as those of other regions. The South America background was in sharp contrast to that of China, India, Japan, Korea, and Africa. The masses of the people of these nations were wholly without the light of the Gospel, living under conditions which made a powerful missionary appeal to Christian sympathy and faith. South America was different. All of the countries claimed to be Christian. Popular conceptions of Latin American Roman Catholicism were formed from such acquaintanceship as people had with the Church in the United States. Even many church members who were well informed concerning actual conditions prevailing in South American countries were lukewarm concerning the sending of missionaries. Within the Missionary Society itself differences of opinion prevailed. As a result, South American missions lacked the powerful advocacy which characterized the missions of the Orient and of Africa.

Again, the appeal for South America was weakened by the fact that it was launched and for the first two decades was continued as a mission not to the total population but to a limited group, chiefly the numerically small number of English-speaking residents of three or four cities of the continent. Even when Goodfellow undertook to expand the scope of the mission to include the European immigrants of the interior the Missionary Society and the General Missionary Committee were not fully committed to the proposal and when a condition of financial stringency developed withdrew their assent, an action, however, which a few years later was modified and finally entirely changed. The support of South American missions was uncertain and insufficient for an aggressive evangelization program. The missionary personnel was numerically inadequate. Three Superintendents in succession—Carrow, Goodfellow, and Jackson—had ambitious ideas for development of the mission program but were unable to get either the funds or the personnel to carry out their plans. At the beginning of Wood's administration (1878), the Methodist Episcopal Church had only two North American missionaries in South America, exclusive of Chile. During his energetic superintendency, work was begun in Brazil (Rio Grande do Sul Province), Paraguay, and Bolivia, making five republics in which a start was made in missionary work. The total population was counted in millions, yet in 1887 there were but six North American Methodist missionaries on the field and the appropriation (exclusive of $10,000. for the purchase of real estate in Buenos Aires for the theological school) was only $31,000.

In China and India Christian missionaries did not hesitate to begin with those at the bottom of the social scale. In this way the Gospel demonstrated its power to lift the masses from the depths to higher levels. To the Protestant pioneers in South America the paucity of funds and of missionaries, along with the difficulties of establishing missions among a native people, made even a beginning seem impossible. The Bible Societies were committed to the policy of translating the Scriptures into Indian languages and some colporteurs were diligent in circulating translations and tracts to the Indians. At different times and places, as has been noted, the need of missions was considered. The appeal of numbers alone should have been strong. No real census of the Indian population had ever been made but by some authorities the total in the period 1845-95 was estimated to have been as large as seven to nine million. Their religious, social, and economic need was not less than that of the depressed masses of China and India but few voices were raised in their behalf and neither the Methodist Episcopal Church nor any other evangelical agency realized the urgency or the greatness of the opportunity and little was attempted.

For several reasons Taylor's West Coast schools cannot be said to have been, on the whole, largely effective as an evangelistic agency. The requirement of self-support made a substantial tuition charge necessary. This automatically excluded many of the children and youth of English wage earners' and mestizo families among whom the most promising human material was to be found. Missionary free schools would have included many of these. The tuition also entirely excluded Indian children. In consequence of the cost the pupils were drawn from middle- and upper-class families, of whom a large proportion were Roman Catholics. While many of the crude superstitions, beliefs, and practices current among them were modified by association with evangelical teachers few were converted and united with a Protestant church.

Some of those from whom Taylor solicited subscriptions for teachers' salaries had stipulated that religion must not be taught in the schools. He felt that concession must be made in the interest of maintaining his self-supporting principle, agreed to the condition, and instructed his outgoing missionaries accordingly. That the policy operated as a limitation on the Christian influence of some of the early schools cannot be doubted. However, the character, personality, and spirit of many of the missionaries whose chief aim was to acquaint their pupils with the Gospel and to lead them to a vital Christian experience was not without its effect. Although the Bible could not be brought into the schools the pupils were constantly in the presence of the living Word, exemplified in the lives of their teachers. Many men and women in their later years, former pupils in the schools, who had never openly declared themselves to be Protestant Christians revealed a genuine personal faith in Christ. Great changes also took place in the attitude of the general public toward evangelical religion, much of which could only be attributed to the schools' influence.

After some years Taylor realized that it was impossible for evangelical schools to be maintained in a Roman Catholic country by funds secured from Catholics, and turned to Protestant foreigners as a chief source of support. The restrictions on teaching the Bible were then no longer enforced. At Concepcion* and at other places the emphasis on the religious life of the pupils was pronounced, with much attention given to Bible reading, prayer, and Sunday-school attendance.

* How greatly the situation was changed may be seen from this description: "Mrs. Arms [who for years was in charge of Concepcion College, the girls' school] was ever trying to bring to . . . [the knowledge of the pupils] the blessed truths of the gospel. . . . As they came to know the Bible and the Christian life as they saw it in their teachers many of them came to the conviction that the Protestant religion was the religion of the Bible, the true religion. In the morning all the pupils were assembled for singing, Bible reading, and prayer. In the evening the teachers and boarding pupils gathered for a service of singing and responsive Bible reading and prayer, in which all took part.—G. F. Arms, op. cit., pp. 134 f.

The difficulties of missionary work among the mestizo population in all of the republics were multiplied by the high percentage of illiteracy. Accurate statistics do not exist and estimates vary widely. In Argentina, it may be roughly estimated, seventy per cent of the population was illiterate; in Uruguay, fifty-five per cent; in Chile, sixty per cent; in Paraguay and Bolivia, eighty to eighty-five per cent; and in Peru about the same. This meant, of course, that schools were necessary before the Bible could be read or Protestant preaching could be fully effective. Evangelization on a large scale required that a native ministry be raised up and for this day schools and ministerial training agencies were necessary. Schools required teachers and since the Church sent very few educational missionaries to countries other than Chile increase of schools was slow. In Argentina great change for the better took place when in 1868 Sarmiento—friend of Horace Mann, pre-eminently an educator whose obsession was the founding of schools and training teachers for them—became president. He is said to have enlisted the aid of William Goodfellow in recruiting teachers in the United States, and imported sixty-three whom he commissioned to establish and direct normal schools. During the six years of his presidency school facilities and enrollment almost doubled, reaching a total of 1,645 schools and more than 100,000 pupils. Within a few years the effect of Argentina's educational renaissance was felt in the neighboring republics of Uruguay and Chile and strong stimulus was given to the establishment of day schools by the mission and by local churches not only in Argentina but also in other countries.

Progress of the South America Mission was also seriously hampered by restrictions upon freedom of religious belief and practice. When the mission was begun Roman Catholicism was the state religion in Chile, Argentina, Bolivia, Paraguay, and Peru. Only in Uruguay of the South American states was no restriction placed upon freedom of conscience, although in Brazil * a spirit of toleration prevailed. The constitution of Chile, for example, declared the Roman Catholic religion to be "the sole and exclusive faith of the State of Chile," and that the officers of government would never permit any other "public cult or doctrine." The constitutions of other republics had similar statements, differing in phrasing but not in substance. Considering the difficulties which have been enumerated and the antagonism of priests, local government authorities, and public mobs, the growth in number and in the enrollment of the day schools, Sunday schools, and members of local churches was notable. Progress was slow, to be sure, but there was steady and dependable increase and by 1895 evidence was convincing that Methodism had become permanently rooted in all of the republics embraced within the South America Mission.

* By decree of the Brazilian provisional government on Jan. 7, 1890, all subjects were guaranteed civil and religious freedom.

MEXICO MISSION

Bishop Matthew Simpson wrote to William Butler on December 9, 1872: "You are hereby appointed as superintendent of our Mission in Mexico. As soon as may be practicable . . . you will please proceed to the city of Mexico." Dr. Butler could not leave immediately since, following his return from India, he had become secretary of the American and Foreign Christian Union, an undenominational organization which had been formed by missionary-minded men and women of various Churches. The purpose of this body as stated at its founding in 1849 was "the uniting of all Christian denominations in the work of the world's evangelization." At home the Union's principal service was among immigrants; abroad, its major emphasis was evangelism in what were then called "the Papal Lands"—Mexico, Central and South America, and parts of Europe.¹⁵⁰

EVANGELICAL BEGINNINGS IN MEXICO

The first representative in Mexico of the American and Foreign Christian Union, the Rev. Henry C. Riley, became a significant figure in the small but vigorous evangelical movement that had come into open expression in the 1860's. Stirrings of this movement had begun with the secret and costly distribution of the Bible during Mexico's struggle to gain independence from Spain, which had culminated successfully in 1821. Fearless and indomitable lay evangelists and Bible Society agents—Mexicans, British, and citizens and soldiers of the U.S.A.—extended this effort in the years that followed, especially while the Mexican War of 1846-48 was being waged.

The promulgation of religious freedom in the new constitution of 1857 opened the way for new religious developments. This stimulated action on the part of a number of priests of liberal spirit who were seeking a vital expression of faith and fellowship not found in the Roman Catholic Church of their day. A distinguished group of them founded in the 1860's an independent Church called the Church of Jesus.* It was with the leaders of this Church that Henry C. Riley engaged in active and fruitful cooperation from his arrival in 1868, with Butler's support as secretary of the Christian Union. This action also increased in the Churches a sense of missionary responsibility and opportunity concerning Mexico as a mission field.¹⁵¹ About this time the Christian Union began to shift its major activity to Europe. Believing that more could be achieved through denominational channels than through undenominational agencies supported by individuals, the Board

* In 1869 the congregations of the Church of Jesus entered into a pact of union with the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States. The resulting organization became the Mexican Episcopal Church. Its first Bishop was Henry C. Riley.

asked Butler to return to its service and establish a denominational mission* in Mexico.¹⁵² In his letter of appointment Bishop Simpson wrote:

You will organize as early and as fully as you can according to the Discipline of the Methodist Episcopal Church. But at the same time you will cultivate the most friendly relations, and proceed in the most perfect Christian courtesy with all evangelical societies and ministers, and especially you will cooperate as far as you may with Rev. Dr. Riley in the work which he has so successfully commenced.¹⁵³

Butler's correspondence in the period following his appointment makes clear his attitude toward the work already begun by the Christian Union and toward the Mexican people. In one letter he said:

we are resolved to avoid all interference with the great and precious work now being accomplished in that land by the Christian Union, under the direction of the Rev. Dr. Riley. We go in as fellow-helpers, with the purpose of doing our part of the work in as unsectarian and kindly a spirit as may be possible to us, seeking to save the people without offensively obtruding upon them those foreign and denominational aspects about which they are at present so sensitive, and with an appreciation of the successful means and Christ-like spirit by which so many souls have lately been won for Christ in that land.

It is a satisfaction to assure our people that in forming our plans we have had the opportunity of taking counsel with the man who, probably of all others, is best qualified, by experience and labor, to advise in this important movement. Dr. Riley providentially happened to be in New York during the meeting of our Committee. . . . Under the altered circumstances, he cheerfully acquiesced in our entering without hesitation and in strength. He generously offered to aid us there in every practicable way, feeling . . . that we would both work together in harmony to lift up poor, degraded and priest-ridden Mexico.

The annual subscriptions from the members of the Methodist Church hitherto devoted chiefly to the support of Dr. Riley's work will, we trust, be continued to it by the generous donors.¹⁵⁴

In the interval before Butler's departure the Missionary Society asked Bishop Gilbert Haven to visit Mexico and report on the outlook. He left in December, 1872, and arrived in the capital city by train from Veracruz within the first few days of January, 1873. His stay of three months was of great significance, and he laid well the foundations of the new mission. The U. S. minister to Mexico presented him to the President, Lerdo de Tejada, who assured him that religious liberty under law prevailed in the republic, that he welcomed the mission, and that he would protect the missionaries in the enjoyment of their civil rights. This official announcement of the changed policy of the Mexican government gave increased confidence to all of the new missions.¹⁵⁵

In Mexico City, Pachuca, and Puebla Bishop Haven explored the oppor-

* Other denominations also entered Mexico in this period: 1871, the Society of Friends and the Northern Baptists; 1872, the Presbyterians, U.S.A., and the Congregational Church; 1873, the Methodist Episcopal Church, South; 1874, the Presbyterians, U.S.; 1878, the Associated Reformed Presbyterian Church; 1880, the Southern Baptists.—G. B. Camargo and K. G. Grubb, Religion in the Republic of Mexico, p. 87.

tunities for purchasing land and buildings suitable for mission purposes. In Puebla he found a possibility of purchasing the abandoned chapel of a former monastery. In Mexico City he learned that part of the old convent of San Francisco might be available, but he did not open negotiations with the owners to buy.¹⁵⁶

On Sunday, January 26, 1873, the Bishop organized in Mexico City the first Methodist Class of the new mission. The seven members represented four nationalities: Mexican, Irish, English, and American (U.S.). Among the interested visitors present was W. H. Cooper, of Chicago, representing the group of Protestants in Mexico who were connected with the American and Foreign Christian Union. During the same week Bishop Haven engaged a hall as a chapel. It was opened February 2 with a union service conducted, on the invitation of the Bishop, by Alejo Hernandez, a Mexican preacher from the Texas Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, who had just arrived with Bishop John C. Keener, also of that Church.* The latter was also present and participated.¹⁵⁷

In this hall, which was abandoned after a month because of its unfavorable location, two Mexican preachers—members of the first Methodist Class—who were to bring outstanding gifts to the young Church, began their first work in evangelism. One was Dr. Ignacio Ramirez, about sixty years of age and for many years previously a Dominican friar, who had for some time been an eloquent preacher of the Protestant faith. The other was Gabriel Ponce de Leon, an active and prosperous businessman in the city who had been moved by the reading of the Bible and by the consequent spiritual experience to leave the Roman Church and start preaching the riches of Christ.¹⁵⁸

ADMINISTRATION OF WILLIAM BUTLER, 1873-79

William Butler completed arrangements for departure to his new post early in 1873. Accompanied by his family he arrived in Mexico City on February 23. In the following three weeks he counseled with Bishop Haven regarding the purchase of property and the development of the mission. But the Bishop had more to leave with the new Superintendent than advice; he turned over to him $5,000. received from a layman in Indiana who on hearing that the San Francisco Convent could be obtained for mission purposes had made the gift for its purchase.¹⁵⁹ Bishop Haven left Mexico City by coach and had a hard and tiring journey of three weeks before crossing the border into Texas. In March, a second missionary, Thomas Carter of the New York Conference, arrived on the field.

Prior to Bishop Haven's departure the little congregation had been meeting for two weeks in the Butler home while new quarters were sought. By this time it numbered more than twenty. Bishop Keener then offered the use of a chapel which he had purchased, Butler paying for some of the fixtures and furniture in lieu of rent. Here "The Mission of the Methodist Episcopal Church," as it was announced, began its public worship on the last Sunday of March, 1873. About seventy Mexicans attended the morning service with Ramirez as the preacher. In the afternoon Butler conducted a service in English for twenty members of the foreign community.¹⁶⁰

* The founding of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, mission will be narrated in detail in Volume V.

It was urgent that the mission be settled in adequate quarters, and Butler now devoted his full energies to finding a way for purchasing the historic property which had come to Bishop Haven's notice. Various known as the San Francisco Monastery, Convent, or Cloisters, the land and buildings in question were a section of a great monastic establishment built on the site once occupied by the palace of Montezuma and expropriated in part by the Mexican government in 1856. Its immense blocks of cloisters and cells had offered accommodations for four thousand monks. It was the first such institution on the American continent and had formed one of the most active centers for the propagation of the Roman Catholic faith among the Indians. The adjacent church was the first built in New Spain and here also was the first cemetery used by the Spanish rulers.¹⁶¹ The building available for sale included only the monks' cloisters and sacristy. These had recently been occupied by a circus which failed to attract the audiences anticipated because many women of Mexico City regarded it as somewhat sacrilegious for them to enter precincts once consecrated to the uses of a monastery.

Butler had to proceed with great caution in making the first approaches for inspection of the property and negotiations for purchase. If his purpose became generally known, he might find his efforts blocked. He has told of his first visit to the building:

. . . I waited until ten o'clock at night, then went and knocked at the great door. The sleepy janitor opened the portal a little way only, and was reluctant to admit any one at such an hour. However, a silver dollar proved quite persuasive to compensate him for his interrupted sleep . . . and by the light of his lantern he showed me the premises.

To my great satisfaction I found the property just what we required, and at once made earnest efforts to secure it. But I learned that one of the parties whose signature was necessary was a fanatical old lady who would rather see the building go up in smoke than sold to Protestants. What to do I could not imagine. . . . We could only seek divine help and wait.¹⁶²

Three weeks passed. Then one day as Butler was talking with a friend on the street his companion hailed an acquaintance passing by, introduced him, and drew him into conversation. As it proceeded India was mentioned. Butler thus reports the swift-moving transaction that followed:

'What,' said I, 'have you been in India?'

'Yes, I fought under Havelock, and was one of the volunteer cavalry that rode with him into Lucknow.'

Instantly it flashed across my mind that here was help at last if I could win him.

'Well,' I replied, 'I have done my best to immortalize you and your gallant comrades.'

'What do you mean?' said he.

Asking him to remain where we were for a few minutes, I hurried to the hotel and took a copy of The Land of the Veda, which I carried back and showed to him, opened at the portrait of General Havelock.

He looked at it astonished, and said, 'That is indeed our illustrious commander,' and commenced at once to read the pages that refer to the bravery of the heroes, led by their devout general. I stood prayerfully and anxiously waiting. Finally, turning to me, he said, 'How much I would like to possess this book!'

'Please accept it as a gift from the author.'

Thanking me with genuine heartiness, he exclaimed, 'Is there not something I could do for you to show my gratitude?'

I had learned that he was an Irishman and a Catholic, but Providence led me to feel that he could and would help me, so I replied, 'You are probably the only man in this city who can do something very necessary for me.'

'What is it?'

I explained the circumstances: how we were anxious to secure a suitable property for our work, but that the bigoted old lady would not be willing to sell to us, and I feared to trust any broker in the city lest they should be induced to fail us.

He asked, 'Would you trust me?'

I felt free to say, I would.

'Have you the money?'

Yes, the money was ready in the bank.

'Well, say nothing until I come to you.'

I reminded him that I was a Protestant missionary, and that he was a Catholic, but he said: 'What of that? Have five hundred dollars ready for me to-morrow.'

He came the next day, took the money, paid the installment, and obtained his receipt. The property was his and all secure. As soon as the papers in the case were ready he took me to the government office and made out a deed to me as agent of the missionary society of our church, and the Circus of Chiarini was ours.¹⁶³

Although the sale of this historic property, later known as 5 Gante Street, was closed about the first of April, 1873, it was the first of June before Butler was able to complete all the formalities necessary to taking possession. He then began the work of reconditioning the buildings for their new use, and the dedication of the church took place on Christmas Day. A full program of services was planned for that week, and invitations were sent to the president of the republic, his ministers, distinguished citizens, and the press. Announcements of the event were carried by the daily papers, some of which added notes of their own on the occasion.

El Siglo XX reported:

'Mr. Bwttter [sic] has been working untiringly in order to carry out his religious thinking. He even makes use of the shovel himself in order to stimulate the workers to finish the reconditioning of the building as quickly as possible.'

El Federalista commented:

'Those who believe in hell but do not accept a purgatory have a new place in which to pray. We offer our condolence to our neighbor [probably referring to the Roman Catholic Church] who defends the existence of both furnaces.'

El Monitor Republicano:

'We believe that no progressive person will fail to attend the solemn dedication of this church.'¹⁶⁴

Carter was assigned to Gante but within a few months illness forced him to return to New York and the little church was left without a pastor. Fortunately the Superintendent was able to procure the services of W. H. Cooper, a distinguished theologian of the Protestant Episcopal Church, who was fluent in Spanish. He had come from the United States under the auspices of the American and Foreign Christian Union to work in cooperation with the Church of Jesus. He soon found that this body was undergoing radical change with which he was in such marked disagreement that he must withdraw. He agreed to join the Methodist mission staff, and after a brief period at Orizaba was placed in charge of the Gante Street Church. This proved to be a short pastorate, for in February, 1875, Cooper's health required him to move to a lower altitude. He went down to the more congenial climate of Orizaba, where he had been stationed for a time in 1873 and had conducted the first Methodist service held in the city.¹⁶⁵

Within a year after Butler's arrival word of the mission's message and service spread through the city and other parts of the republic. Urgent requests poured in from various centers for preachers to bring the Gospel and to solemnize marriages and baptisms. Detailed information was contained in Butler's first annual report:

There are three Sunday-schools with eight officers and teachers and 47 scholars. There is one day-school with ten scholars. Two English congregations in the cities of Mexico and Pachuca with a regular attendance of 105 persons. There are seven Mexican congregations with an average attendance as follows . . . [:] San Fernando, 12; Philipe, 18; Mission House [Gante] 40 [all in Mexico City]; Pachuca, 70; Rio [Real] del Monte, 19; Orizaba, 20; Miraflores, 40. Total attendants, 219. There are two class-meetings with a regular attendance of English and Mexicans of 39. The growth of the past quarter has been about 40 per cent.¹⁶⁶

Large opportunities were at hand, but it was proving exceedingly difficult to find helpers suitably prepared to undertake the pioneering work of extension now needed. Four Mexican preachers, in addition to the two previously mentioned, had been enlisted: Francisco Aguilar, Jose Maria Segovia, Dr. Marcellino Guerrero, Jose Isidore Niceto, and Felix Galvan. But additional missionaries also were required. Bishop Simpson—who had episcopal supervision of the field—visited Mexico in the early part of 1874. He and Dr. Butler turned first to Boston University School of Theology for help. For the previous year or two it had been offering a course in Spanish for students looking forward to mission service in South America and Mexico. The first two graduates with this special training were soon to be available.

Bishop Simpson sent urgent messages asking for the young men to report in Mexico City as soon as possible. The first recruit was Dr. Butler's son, John W. Butler, and the second was Charles W. Drees. They reached Veracruz on May 8, 1874, and proceeded at once to the capital where they remained for a time. Within five months Drees preached his first sermon in Spanish.¹⁶⁷

Even before the arrival of Drees and John W. Butler the mission had very substantial reinforcement from the W.F.M.S. At its fourth annual meeting, May 14-19, 1873, the General Executive Committee appropriated $5,776. for work in Mexico, including funds for three Bible women, two in Mexico City and one in Puebla; a missionary and a missionary teacher in Mexico City; an orphanage in Mexico City; and various miscellaneous items. In February, 1874, two young women, Miss Mary Hastings of the New York Branch and Miss Susan M. Warner of the Cincinnati Branch, arrived. Their first responsibility was the teaching of a few boys and girls in a class that Butler had gathered in Mexico City. An orphanage was also opened in Gante directed by them.¹⁶⁸

William Butler's wisdom as a missionary strategist was shown in the policy which he enunciated virtually at the beginning of the mission. He observed that the Protestant work under way in Mexico was for the most part "political and harshly controversial." Preachers were indulging in what amounted "to little more than tirades against the Romish clergy and Church."

Such conduct and such methods of missionary work are only calculated to irritate and disgust conscientious Romanists and lead them to hate Protestantism, and even be willing to see it persecuted and driven away. I am more than ever convinced that no good can come of this policy or of the spirit from which it springs, and that to be useful to these people our Mission must avoid all this bitterness and theological pugnacity, and devote itself to preaching the Gospel in the spirit of the Gospel.

The Methodist helpers are taught, he said, "that they can preach the Gospel without abusing the Romanists, and that the best way to remove the darkness of superstition and sin is simply to introduce the light of truth and holiness . . ." ¹⁶⁹

The W.F.M.S. appropriation for 1874 was increased to $9,202.

In planning the mission program Butler used the same method that he had so successfully utilized in India, the choosing of a few strategic centers and gradually expanding missionary activity from each. By 1875 it was clear that the most promising locations were Mexico City, Pachuca, Puebla, Orizaba, and Miraflores.

For obvious reasons Mexico City—the national capital—was chosen as the permanent center of the mission. Concerning it Butler said in his second annual report:

In that city places for preaching have been opened at five separate points. Our missionaries there work unmolested under the protection of a liberal government, and amid the general prevalence of religious freedom; and during the past year the increase of the average attendance upon religious services . . . has been sixty per cent.¹⁷⁰

Seven Mexican congregations were listed in 1875 in Mexico City and vicinity: Trinity (Gante), Guerrero, Santa Ines, Santa Caterina, Mixcoac, Miraflores, Tlalmanalco, with five day schools. There were six Mexican preachers and three schoolteachers.

The mission this year (1875) gained a valuable assistant quite unexpectedly, Mathias Goethe, a Lutheran minister from Sacramento, California, who had come to Mexico on a health leave. He was a man of culture and of strong evangelical spirit and was induced to join the mission. The German colony subscribed funds for his support. At times he would preach on a single day in three services using three different languages. It was a heavy loss when he died in 1876. Two priests also joined the mission in 1875, Jose Maria Gonzales, a doctor of theology, whose stay was brief, and Trinidad Rodriguez whose conversion was brought about by his comparison of what he called "the Protestant and Catholic Bibles." He became an earnest and capable preacher of the Gospel. Still another recruit, Pascual Espinosa, came to the mission from "the Church of Jesus" and remained for years in the ranks of the effective ministry.¹⁷¹

The orphanage was divided in 1875, the boys being taken to Puebla, while the girls remained in Mexico City. The next year Henrietta C. Ogden* of the Cincinnati Branch came to assist Miss Warner in the care of the forty girls in the home. In 1877 Miss Mary F. Swaney, of the Baltimore Branch, arrived and was given charge of the orphanage. A Bible woman, also employed by the W.F.M.S., was added to the little corps of women workers.¹⁷²

Dr. Butler, convinced that Protestant literature was an indispensable aid in the work of evangelization, took it upon himself in 1875 to establish a mission press. His son, Edward C. Butler, resigned his position in New York and went to Mexico City to assist in the enterprise. As no missionary on the field had experience as a printer Edward Butler was made director of the press, with two printers and a binder, to aid. Since funds were not available in the appropriations for equipment and for cost of publication of the required literature, he went to the United States to obtain from churches and interested friends $12,000., which he estimated would be required. His success heartened the entire mission. In 1877 El Abogado Cristiano (a Spanish language Christian Advocate) was established as an enterprise

* Henrietta C. Ogden (1857-99) was born in Springfield, Ohio, where early in her life she became an active worker in the W.F.M.S. She was associated with Miss Warner in the Mexico City orphanage and in the Pachuca school. Illness caused a break in her service but as soon as she had sufficiently recovered she returned to Mexico. In 1882 she joined the William Taylor South America West Coast Mission as a teacher in the girls' school in Concepcion, Chile. She retired in 1889.—Louise Manning Hodgkins, The Roll Call . . . , p. 14.

of the press, with William Butler as editor. It circulated 1,752 copies of which 1,158 were paid subscriptions.

On his visit to Pachuca in 1873 Bishop Haven had found an active Methodist Class which had been formed by a group of Wesleyan mining engineers from Cornwall. The first English services of worship had been held in one of their homes twenty years previously by a visiting Wesleyan minister from England, the Rev. Henry Davis. The Mexican authorities of the time objected but they withdrew their opposition on learning that Davis was only a visitor. In the intervening years several Mexican workers in the mines had become regular attendants at the Class meeting. By 1873 there existed a little congregation under the leadership of a physician, Dr. Marcellino Guerrero,* using a modified form of service published by the Church of Jesus in Mexico City and calling itself the Reformed Church in Pachuca.¹⁷³

When Butler visited the city he found several Local Preachers among the Cornish people, and a hall was hired in the public square for weekly services. A Sunday school was started, the Local Preachers took turns in conducting services, and a missionary from Mexico City visited and preached every third Sunday. Christopher Ludlow, a Cornish engineer who had come to Pachuca to install one of the largest pumping machines ever brought to Mexico, was an excellent preacher and Butler persuaded him to join the missionary force. The Superintendent's 1875 report listed Ludlow as preacher-in-charge of the Pachuca Circuit of three preaching points: Pachuca, Real del Monte—a mining town of some 5,000 inhabitants at an elevation of about 9,000 feet—and Omitlan. He was assisted by F. Aguilar and by a local schoolteacher, C. G. Paull. The English congregations of Pachuca and Real del Monte also were served by Ludlow and T. Trelour (Local Preacher), occasionally assisted by William Butler.¹⁷⁴ A girls' school was opened at Pachuca with Miss Warner as principal. She soon returned to Mexico City, exchanging with Miss Hastings who was made director of the school of forty Spanish-speaking pupils and thirteen English children. Miss Hastings at this time was alone but was unafraid.

I am . . . the only American in the State as far as I know, at least the only missionary. I am living, as well as teaching my day-school and Sunday school, in a hired house over a grocery and liquor store, through which is the entrance. I was saying to a friend a day or two since, with regard to the mission, 'It seems a very small beginning, yet it is really a good thing that we are permitted to be here and to work at all.' His reply was, 'I think you have already a great hold.'¹⁷⁵

* Dr. Guerrero held public services regularly every Sunday morning, and in the afternoons as regularly presided over public billiard tables, the income from which he regarded as a necessary offset to losses in his medical practice caused by fanatical persecution. Dr. Butler was soon able to help him to see the inconsistency of this, and he came into the enjoyment of a more earnest religious life, gave up Sabbath desecration, and devoted more time to preaching the Gospel. In 1875 he relinquished the pastorate to one of the younger men and moved to the city of Mexico, where he continued a devoted member of the Church to the time of his death in 1888.—John Wesley Butler, History of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Mexico: Personal Reminiscences, Present Conditions and Future Outlook, p. 64 f.

In the Ninth Annual Report (1877-78) the W.F.M.S. gave account of a new schoolhouse and home built by the Society in Pachuca. The school numbered sixty-four pupils of whom fifty were Mexican and fourteen English. The Society had also employed a Bible woman who made hundreds of visits to homes and distributed tracts and Bible portions.¹⁷⁶

A well-located plot of ground in the center of the city was procured by Ludlow and Frank Rule, another member of the foreign settlement, and Ludlow built a small chapel and homes for both missionary societies. The chapel seated about a hundred and fifty persons and was used by both the English and Mexican congregations. It was dedicated on April 2, 1876, during the Tuxtepec Revolution. The city was attacked in the afternoon while the English service was in progress. Butler reports what happened in the chapel:

Mr. Ludlow, who had a fervent spirit and a strong voice, was leading in prayer, when a volley of bullets began to fall around the place. When he finished the petition and opened his eyes there was just one member of the congregation left before him, a deaf old lady, and two preachers in the pulpit! He said that he had noticed footsteps, but thought it meant more worshippers coming in.

In the course of the Tuxtepec Revolution the city was bombarded twice and the mission buildings were considerably damaged; but with danger so close about them the mission family suffered no injuries.¹⁷⁷

In 1876 Filipe N. Cordova assisted Ludlow with the Mexican work and T. Trelour aided him with the English services. C. G. Paull continued to direct the boys' school. Despite the revolution the mission activities experienced no serious interference.¹⁷⁸

Puebla, the third center of the mission to be occupied, approximately ninety miles east of Mexico City, had in the middle seventies a population of some 70,000 people. It was known as the religious capital of the republic. Here, as in Mexico City, Bishop Haven located a highly desirable property available for purchase, and contracted for it at a price of 10,000 pesos, making a down payment of 3,000 pesos. The building was a portion of the immense headquarters of the Spanish Inquisition in Mexico—a part which included the Examining Chapel. In his Mexico in Transition William Butler gives a vivid description of the structure at the time of purchase:

Around us were the evidences of the popular vengeance that had been wreaked upon the accursed building; the doors, windows, and floors had been torn up and smashed to pieces, and the plaster defaced. But all this could soon be repaired. On the upper floor to the right was a suite of rooms which would make a comfortable parsonage, and on the left the Examining Chapel could be made into the first Methodist Episcopal Church in Puebla. It was capable of holding about one hundred and fifty people. On the floor below a room as large as the chapel would give us a good school-room, and the apartments and corridors to the right would afford accommodation for the boys' orphanage and a theological seminary. We were thus—at least for the time being—amply provided for in the work which our Church was to undertake in Puebla.¹⁷⁹

Charles W. Drees was designated to open the mission in this, the second largest city in Mexico. He arrived in Puebla in January, 1875, accompanied by Christopher Ludlow, the Cornish engineer-preacher from Pachuca who was now studying Spanish so that he might extend the range of his evangelism to include the Mexican people. The first task confronting them was the repair of the premises that had been purchased. It was a gruesome undertaking for out of the cells and from beneath the floors they had to remove more than a hundred human skeletons.

By early February Drees was ready for his first effort to bring together the Mexican Protestants of the city. Through one of them whom he had employed as a colporteur he extended invitations for a meeting. Three came from outside, who with the colporteur, Ludlow, and Drees made a little company of six. They talked over the cause of God in that place, read the Scriptures, and prayed. These were men who for conscience' sake had suffered wounds, hunger, and nakedness. They reported knowing twenty or more persons of like convictions. In March meetings were held regularly every Sunday morning and afternoon and every Thursday night. Attendance was small. Drees had met many who called themselves Protestants, but were either afraid to attend or were suspicious of him.¹⁸⁰

In the following month the mission decided to relocate the boys' orphanage in Puebla. Drees went to the capital and conducted the group by train to their new home—fourteen boys from four to thirteen years of age, their supervisor with wife and child, and the schoolteacher with his wife and three children. By July an organ had been given to the church, and at the first service the singing attracted a curious crowd around the building. Suddenly a big stone came crashing through a window. The consul-general of the United States was in the congregation. He handed ten dollars to the missionary with the promise to pay for all the windows that might be broken. The dedication of the chapel was set for August. The president of the republic was notified of the occasion, and he instructed the governor of the state to give the full protection of the law. About two hundred people attended and for the most part were very quiet and attentive. The majority were of the lower economic strata of the city's population. There were, however, a goodly number of the more well-to-do. The impression made upon the community encouraged the growing brotherhood of the mission.¹⁸¹

In August, 1875, Dr. Butler wrote to the Cincinnati Conference a letter of commendation of Drees, characterizing him "as one of the noblest and most devoted missionaries" that had ever been sent forth.

He occupies today the post of honor in Mexico in his critical position in the city of Puebla; so that more depends upon his prudence, his courage, and his Christian zeal than upon any other man in this mission.¹⁸²

One of the early converts in the Puebla school was Pedro Flores Valderrama who became an outstanding minister* in the Methodist Episcopal Church. He developed a keen interest in recording the growth of the Mexico mission, and prepared a long and scholarly manuscript which has been an important source for later historical studies. His own experience in attending his first Protestant service, in the Puebla chapel, is reported in a moving passage that expresses what many thoughtful men in Mexico felt as they experienced the vital fellowship of Protestant worship:

I was very much impressed by the simplicity of that service, and the clearness and precision with which the Christian doctrine was expounded. When the service was ended, I could not but feel that that was the way to worship God. It satisfied the cravings of my spirit. I did not care for the ostentatious and ritualistic forms. This way of worshiping God was in harmony with my inclinations as a free man.¹⁸³

Valderrama also tells of the opposition that arose in Jesuit circles in Puebla to the Protestant congregation. A small paper published under their auspices began to denounce all those who attended the evangelical services, and listed their names, addresses, and employment. This was manifestly intended to bring about the dismissal of Protestants from their jobs and to put pressure on them to retract. The congregation refused to be frightened. Only one person withdrew under this attack. The congregation continued to grow but Drees, who was a sensitive man despite his courage, was conscious of social ostracism.

I continually meet persons to whom I have been introduced and who have been very friendly in private, but when they encounter me on the street, they take particular pains not to see me; not that they are opposed to our work or lack good will, but it would compromise them, socially and commercially, to be known to be friendly to the Protestant minister.¹⁸⁴

Dr. Butler's annual report for 1876 listed a theological department at Puebla with eight students. Drees had taken the first steps in planning for this soon after the dedication of the chapel in August, 1875, by forming what he called a theological training class,† which enrolled three members.

One of the members of Drees' class was Herman Lüders, a young German. He was working at a sugar mill in the state of Veracruz when he first heard Drees preach. He was converted and became convinced that loyalty to the Master called for the investment of his life in Christ's cause. He had already received solid scientific training; now he enrolled in the

* Pedro Flores Valderrama (1856-57?-1932) was born in Puebla. He was among the first orphans to attend the Boys' School in that city. In 1880 he entered the ministry, holding pastorates in Puebla, Pachuca, Tulancingo, Leon, Real del Monte, Tlaxcala, Tuxpan, Oaxaca, and Orizaba. He was a brilliant orator and tireless writer. He served for many years as editor of El Abogado Cristiano, and was principal of the Mexico Methodist Institute in Puebla (formerly the Boys' School he had attended). He has been described as a "profound preacher," and an "irresistible apologist."—Biographical File, Board of Missions Library.

† From this small nucleus developed within a few years the Theological Seminary and Preparatory School of the Mexico Methodist Institute in Puebla. Years later it became the Union Theological Seminary in Mexico City.

theological class in 1876 and was appointed with Drees to the Puebla Circuit. He was also designated as assistant in the "Theological Department." In 1879 he was assigned the additional role of instructor* in the boys' orphanage. Puebla was made the head of a Circuit in 1875 by the addition of Apizaco and San Salvador. San Salvador was listed as an appointment for only one year. In 1877 Los Reyes appeared in the list of appointments.¹⁸⁵

In April, 1876, Samuel W. Siberts and wife arrived in Puebla to join the mission, remaining until May, 1877. Ten persons were received into membership on February 4, 1877. One of the ten had been present at the first service and during the entire year had attended every service held. Also in February a day school was opened, with an average attendance of twenty pupils, and soon afterward a Temperance Society was organized, probably the first in Mexico.¹⁸⁶

Orizaba, located on the border of the "tierra caliente," the hot land of the eastern coast, was a city of 40,000 people. Its warm, moist climate fostered the growth of tropical plants and trees, making it a beautiful, attractive city. As has been noted, the first Methodist Spanish language service was held by W. H. Cooper on May 17, 1873, attended by nine persons. Later in the same day an English service was held at which ten persons were present, one of whom declared that for twenty years he had not been inside a church. A search was at once made for a regular place of worship. The only location available was "a small chapel in the interior of . . . [an] old convent very dirty and uncomfortable, utterly unfit for a place of Christian worship," although it temporarily served the purpose. Within a month forty persons had been enrolled on a list of friends of the mission. Enemies also were in evidence. Cooper was pelted with stones and the door of his house smeared with filth. When he appealed to police headquarters for protection an intoxicated policeman was sent. The barroom nearest his residence was reported to be the property of the priest, who furnished free drinks to the patrolmen on the beat. After some weeks Cooper went to the Gante Street Church at Butler's behest and Orizaba was left without a missionary. When his health compelled Cooper to leave Mexico City he returned to Orizaba. There was open hostility to his return and he was hooted at and stoned in the streets, but he bore all his hardships patiently for some months. His advanced age and a complete failure in health then forced his return to the United States.

Richard Stephens, a probationer of the Baltimore Conference, arrived in Mexico in 1875 and was assigned to Orizaba. Drees accompanied him to his appointment and preached at three services on the first Sunday—two in Spanish and one in English. A request for services had come from

* Besides being an effective preacher and teacher Lüders was a capable musician. He composed a number of hymns, some of which continued to be sung for many years. Young people, especially, admired and loved him. After many months of illness he died on Jan. 17, 1882. The Puebla Epworth League honored him by taking the name "Herman Lüders Chapter."—Souvenir Book of the Golden Anniversary or Jubilee of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Mexico [1873-1923], p. 29.

Cordoba, twenty miles distant, and two days later Drees and Stephens went to the town and preached on two consecutive evenings to a good-sized audience. Butler's 1875 report listed the Orizaba Circuit, with Cordoba as an outpost with both Mexican and English services.¹⁸⁷

Miraflores was thirty miles southeast of Mexico City. Here, as in Pachuca, the beginnings of Protestant influence may be traced to a Christian layman. Years before the founding of the Methodist mission an enterprising Mexican businessman of Miraflores had gone to Paterson, New Jersey, to purchase machinery for a spinning mill he planned to build in his town. In Paterson he met a young Scotsman, J. H. Robertson, of training and experience in this industry, and persuaded him to return with him on a three-year contract to build and manage the mill—the second of its kind in Mexico. Mr. Robertson remained in the country and eventually became proprietor of the mill, which he converted into a cotton goods factory. He took a real interest in his workers and helped to develop a clean, prosperous village for his people with a well-planned self-help program aided by the management. When John W. Butler and his colleagues first visited Miraflores in 1875 they were cordially welcomed by Mr. and Mrs. Robertson, then advanced in years. The missionaries discovered that a small evangelical congregation was meeting in the house of a factory worker named Ildefonso Avila. A man of limited education, he was respected in the community for his good works. He had decided to leave the Roman Church after hearing a sermon by an Episcopal minister in another town and reading evangelical books and tracts given to him. He began at once to speak to his fellow workmen and to read the Bible with them. Robertson encouraged the opening of a chapel by the mission and offered the use of a large storeroom for which he supplied suitable furnishing and equipment. The first services here in February, 1875, were attended by sixty persons in the morning and 115 in the evening. Miraflores was at first made an outpost of Mexico City and both English and Mexican congregations were served by the Superintendent and John W. Butler.¹⁸⁸

From Miraflores the work was extended to Amecameca, a town in the foothills of Popocatepatl, the site of a Catholic shrine which thousands of pilgrims visited every year. This was made a Station on the Miraflores Circuit of seven preaching points, including Tlalmanalco, Rosario, San Juan, Sanclalpan, and Ayapango. Samuel W. Siberts was appointed missionary-in-charge in 1877, with three Mexican assistants, Filipe N. Cordova, Elijio Lopez, and Conrado Gamboa. In 1878 a church, a missionary residence, and a parsonage were dedicated in Miraflores.* The next year the W.F.M.S. opened a school which soon enrolled twenty-seven pupils. A year earlier the

* Mrs. Robertson had died but before her death she had asked her husband to provide a permanent place of worship. In her memory Mr. Robertson donated a large plot of ground and made a generous contribution toward the buildings. Both British and Mexican factory workmen also made contributions.—J. W. Butler, op. cit., p. 80.

W.F.M.S. also established a school in Amecameca and employed a Bible woman.¹⁸⁹

In 1876 a mission was established at Guanajuato, some three hundred miles northwest of the capital by the old highway, 153 miles in a straight line. This marked an outreach in a new direction since all of the earlier missions were to the east. The city was founded in 1554 and was celebrated for its many silver mines, the richest in Mexico—the Veta Madre (Mother Lode) considered to be the richest in the world. From the beginning of Methodist work in the country it was under consideration as a mission site. The turbulence and extreme fanaticism which prevailed in the city during these years led an English resident to tell Butler he could never establish Protestantism there, “It would cost you your lives.” An agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society had once sold Bibles and other books there, and an American Presbyterian missionary had made a short visit, but Mr. and Mrs. Samuel P. Craver, when they arrived in February, 1876, were the first missionaries to come with the purpose of remaining. They were accompanied by Dr. Butler and were cordially received by the English residents, but all prophesied failure for the venture.

A few days later Butler called on the governor of Guanajuato state, presented him with copies of the Bible and books published by the mission, and explained that Protestants gave obedience to civil authorities, asking only such protection as Mexican law gave to persons of all religious beliefs. The governor seemed to appreciate this call, said that he was glad to welcome Protestantism to the state, and promised all the rights guaranteed by the constitution. He added that the missionaries might find the work difficult. The governor invariably kept his promise in the troubles that broke over the mission almost at once.

The Roman Catholic Bishop of the diocese lived nearby in the important ecclesiastical center of Leon. Notified by local priests of the Protestants' arrival, he hurried to Guanajuato and issued an episcopal edict which was read in all the churches of the diocese on the following Sunday. J. W. Butler tells of the first weeks in the young mission:

Two results were noticeable after . . . circulation of this edict: one a more manifest hostility on the part of the people, and the other a greatly increased demand for our tracts. Five days after it was read in the churches an employee of the mission was attacked by a mob, but was protected by the police . . .

Two Mexican preachers, Francisco Aguilar and Jesus Ramirez, came to Guanajuato in March, and public services were begun in the home of the missionaries on April 2. The morning service was attended by twelve men . . .

In the evening thirty were present, including a few women. The attendance gradually increased so that by the third week the mission home was found too small to accommodate the numbers. A hall was therefore secured and the attendance mounted to one hundred and fifty. . . .

. . . On August 19 the first Quarterly Conference was held, at which time

Simon Loza* was licensed as a local preacher, the first fruits of our work in Guanajuato. . . .

Things moved smoothly till October 31, when blind fanatics again attacked our mission house. It was on Sunday and a market day. At a given signal about three thousand people from the market rushed to the house, pelting it with stones until not one window glass was left whole, and yelling fiendishly, 'Death to the Protestants!' They attempted to force the large door The five policemen placed by the chief of police to guard the house were stricken down, but word reached the governor and soon a force of soldiers arrived. The colonel rode into the crowd advising them that they had three minutes in which to disperse before he would open fire with a cannon he had just planted on the corner. This prompt governmental action established the fact that the Laws of Reform were not a dead letter in Guanajuato¹⁹⁰

Queretaro, capital of the state of Queretaro, a city of some 30,000 people, a large proportion of whom were Indians, was 110 miles northwest of Mexico City. It was said to have "more [Catholic] churches than schoolhouses and more priests than school children." In 1876 Samuel W. Siberts was assigned to the city. In 1877, Herman Lüders was temporarily given the assignment and the next year was appointed with the title of "missionary in charge," with Lucio Vallejo as Mexican preacher. In May, 1879, according to Drees' statement, Vallejo was in charge. He was succeeded by Felipe N. Cordova, one of the outstanding preachers trained in the Puebla theological class. He was forty years of age when he united with the Methodist Church and made his decision to train for the ministry. He had been a soldier during his earlier years, fighting on the side of the Liberal party, and was a man of deep conviction and courage. He was aware that in Queretaro he would find strong opposition and violent fanaticism as he attempted to gather a Protestant congregation. He was able to rent a house from a liberal-minded man, although the owner realized that Protestants would be living in it and that it would be used for preaching services. Soon slanderous reports began to be circulated about him and there were threats of violence. Somewhat later Drees reported to the Board:

[Cordova's] . . . house has been constantly watched by his enemies In public discourse and in the confessional, all the influence of the priests has been brought against him. . . . Our tracts have been decried as if they were firebrands of hell. On the 18th of April a mob filled the streets surrounding the house where he lived. The most desperate characters of the city were there armed with knives. . . . The presence of a small Federal force and the interposition of a Federal judge prevented what the apathy of the State authorities only served to . . . [intensify].¹⁹¹

Despite the fierce antagonism Cordova continued circulating books and tracts, preaching and using every opportunity to converse with people on the streets and in their homes. He succeeded in winning the friendship of several families and a number of young men. By early spring (1881) Drees felt that the intense opposition had sufficiently subsided for Almon W. Greenman and his wife, who had come from the North Indiana Conference as missionaries, in May, 1880, and had been temporarily stationed at Puebla, to take up their residence in the city. Shortly afterward intense antagonism again began to develop. The Bishop of Queretaro issued a pastoral letter to be read in the churches, "the language of which was artfully designed to stir up popular hatred." In the beginning of April Drees was present in Greenman's residence when an attack was made.

* Simon Loza was born in the state of Guanajuato. His parents wanted him to be a priest and his early education was in preparation for that vocation but he chose to go into business. Aided by one of his teachers he began the publication of a children's magazine which became very popular. His conversion occurred in one of the first Protestant services held in Guanajuato.

This morning [April 3] at eight o'clock the mob began to collect and was soon very numerous and began to throw stones. Matters kept getting worse and worse as time went on. We could see that there were two or three policemen in the square, but it was clear that they did almost nothing to restrain and nothing at all to disperse the mob. At a little after ten when the rabble was peculiarly violent and after the third rush at the house, Cordova who was standing near one of the windows, in spite of my remonstrance and efforts to detain him stepped hastily out and fired two shots into the ground hoping to intimidate the enemy. We have since learned (at least so it is said) that a boy or young man was wounded by one of the balls and that he has since died. Still a mortal half hour passed before the Jefe Politico came and brought a small squad of troops, five or six men. Still the people were suffered to go on stoning us until half past eleven when a company of mounted men came dashing into the square and cleared it.¹⁹²

The state government had been informed in advance yet no precautions had been taken. In the afternoon a judge came and took the testimony of Cordova and Drees concerning what had happened. Cordova was at first placed under house arrest but later in the evening was taken to prison and held for three days. Drees sent an appeal to the United States legation and to the federal government at Mexico City making complaint of negligence of the state authorities and asking for more adequate protection. Meanwhile, the situation became more and more threatening. Rumors of a repetition of mob violence on the next Sunday were brought to the missionaries. The governor, a strong Roman Catholic, urged them to leave the city. The imminence of a vicious attack was so great that all preparations had to be made in haste and the missionaries left the city at night by stage. They were three days on the journey to Mexico City. Representations were made to the American minister and to the Mexican federal authorities. The latter finally notified the state government that the Laws of Reform must be respected and gave the mission full assurance of protection. The liberal press, notably El Monitor and La Patria, asserted that concerted action on the part of the Catholic clergy apparently existed to persecute Protestants throughout the country. The National Congress called upon the Minister of the Interior for a report on the Queretaro affair.

Greenman and his family and Conrado Gamboa, accompanied by Drees, returned to Queretaro the first of July, 1881, and resumed Sunday services on July 3. Cordova* was transferred to Apizaco.¹⁹³ Work was continued without difficulty but there was little immediate growth. Some who came to the city from other states joined the church. Preaching points were established and permanent congregations built up in San Juan del Rio, Celaya, and San Luis de la Paz. In 1882 a well-located site in Queretaro was procured and in 1883 a chapel was built. On September 1, 1883, the Bishop issued another pastoral letter and as a result a mob came and stoned the mission residence but troops arrived promptly and dispersed it. In 1883 women's work was begun in the city. Mary F. Swaney was transferred from Mexico City, and on February 26 she opened a girls' school which soon had enrolled twelve girls, though later only eight were in attendance. In July the Mexican pastor also opened a boys' school. Most of the schools' pupils were Indians. After some difficulty a Bible woman was employed. As a result, the Catholic Bishop opened free schools for boys and girls within a half block of the Methodist mission, the first free Catholic schools established in the city.¹⁹⁴

In Celaya a riotous outbreak occurred in 1884. The resident priest indulged in inflammatory public appeals and on June 24 a mob attacked the home of O. Torres, the Mexican pastor, after Torres and Greenman had protested incessant threats and violence to the local authorities. When they took refuge in an adjoining house the mob broke down the door and one of them fired two shots into the room where they were. In immediate danger of being killed, Greenman and Torres in self-defense returned the fire, killing one and wounding two of the rioters.† At this point mounted police arrived and carried the two preachers and Mrs. Torres to the barracks for protection.¹⁹⁵

The year 1876 was turbulent, the Tuxtepec Revolution affecting all phases of the nation's life. In two or three places missionary work was seriously retarded, with religious services temporarily suspended at two points. The

* Cordova's case dragged a slow course through the lower courts, finally reaching the district court "on appeal from the jurisdiction of the lower tribunals." The district judge affirmed the sentence, which was subject to review by the Supreme Court in Mexico City. An able lawyer was procured to argue the case before the court. His argument was printed and the docket was watched in order to present it at the opportune moment. "We were suddenly informed that the documents in the case had been secretly brought from Queretaro . . . surreptitiously introduced without being registered, into the documents of the court, placed intentionally in a file of papers classified as of little or no importance and that consequently the Court had confirmed the sentence without even considering it. It was impossible without great expense to get a rehearing." Cordova was advised to leave the country, Siberts, Craver, and others strongly recommending this course. It was "not a question of amenability to law but of the course to be pursued in the face of relentless persecution which had the immense advantage of being able to shield itself under the forms of law. In view of all the circumstances I determined to send . . . [him] to New Mexico. I . . . cordially . . . [recommended him to the Superintendent] of the New Mexico Mission." (C. W. Drees to J. M. Reid, letter, Nov. 10, 1884, Official Correspondence Files, Division of World Missions.) In 1896 Cordova was transferred from the New Mexico Mission Conference to the Mexico Conference and appointed to the San Augustin Circuit, Hidalgo District.—Minutes, Mexico Conference, 1896, pp. [19], 22.

† As in the Queretaro riot, the local, state, and federal authorities were slow to act, and later failed to punish the rioters. The municipal and police headquarters were within five minutes' walk from the place of attack but about two hours passed before any measure was taken to disperse the mob. The two houses were bombarded with stones, doors and windows broken, and long-bladed knives and firearms brandished, yet nothing was done. A detailed statement of the case was laid before the federal government and a judicial investigation was begun in Celaya but three weeks later no definite action had resulted.—C. W. Drees to J. M. Reid, letter, July 17, 1884, in Official Correspondence Files, Division of World Missions.

Mexico City Circuit, however, was so extended during the year that division became necessary.

On April 23, 1878, the Board adopted a resolution directing Secretary Robert L. Dashiell "to inform the Bishop having charge of . . . [the Mexico Mission] that in the judgment of this Board . . . [Dr. Butler] should be recalled from Mexico as soon as practicable." The conditions and circumstances leading up to this action were involved but in general were similar to those which had resulted in his departure from India some twenty years before.* William Butler was a wise, devoted, and faithful Christian missionary and had rendered in Mexico, as previously in India, a great service to the cause. However, he was not primarily an administrator. He had scant respect for the rules imposed by the Board for field administration. He made use of the appropriations for the mission in accordance with what seemed to him to be the most urgent immediate needs and did not hesitate to obligate the mission, and hence the Board, in expenditures beyond what had been appropriated. The Board might have anticipated from the earlier experience just such a development as occurred.

In 1876, he had with the approval of his Bishop come to the United States at his own expense to solicit funds for a mission press, the need for which was beyond dispute. His successful campaign produced $12,000., much of which was earmarked for specific publications. This was done independently of the Board; and while he agreed to submit a detailed account of monies received he was dilatory in sending the report. While his motives were certainly worthy, his procedure was somewhat irregular. The Board felt that the funds he received should be applied against items covered by their appropriation to the mission and that the salary of the press manager should be paid from the fund. Butler maintained that to do this would not be keeping faith with the donors. There were also other financial problems. Under the strain of the Tuxtepec Revolution Butler had exceeded his 1876 appropriation in his attempt to keep the mission intact—the only Protestant Church which succeeded in doing so. Although he had been led to believe that the Board would help out with the deficiency—to meet which he had made personal loans†—the question apparently was never considered in Board meeting. In desperation to keep operating at the same level Butler used some of the press money temporarily to apply on loans, and drew on anticipated future appropriations. The Board was alarmed by his unauthorized actions and demanded a full financial account, which he submitted holding that his procedure was fully justified. At the time of Bishop Merrill's scheduled

* See pp. 470 ff.

† A sidelight on Butler's procedure appeared in a letter dated March 15, without signature, printed in the Missionary Advocate: "Not knowing what may occur [in the course of the Revolution] Dr. Butler has made the best possible arrangements for all the stations in the mission. He has borrowed money to send to each station a remittance on behalf of the second quarter's claims, so as to avoid any embarrassment to the brethren and their helpers in the event of any of the stations being cut off from us for a time, or we from them."—Missionary Advocate, New Series, IV (1876), 1 (January), 71.

visit to the mission the Board voted to send Secretary Dashiell along to look "into all the financial affairs of the Mission." Meantime, having been reminded by Butler on September 8, 1877, that no appropriation had yet been made from the contingent fund to cover his 1876 deficiency the Board voted $1,400.—and "no further appropriation" to cover the items of deficiencies and rent.¹⁹⁶

The Bishop and Dashiell arrived in Veracruz, accompanied by T. W. Price, a lay member of the Board, on January 10, 1878. During the six weeks spent in the country they visited all the Stations and Circuits of the mission. On their return Dashiell made a report to the Board, concluding with a detailed account* of Butler's financial transactions.¹⁹⁷

Following the report Charles H. Fowler presented a statement enumerating the irregularities in Butler's administration of the mission, viz., expending money in excess of the appropriation; accumulating indebtedness to an extent which endangered the credit of the Missionary Society in Mexico; making unauthorized use of titles to Missionary Society property as a basis of credit; and failing to transmit to the Board full and detailed statements of his expenditures, withholding such parts as he hoped to overtake by future appropriations. He then offered an accompanying resolution instructing the treasurer to conduct the financial business of the mission through other parties than Dr. Butler. The resolution was amended to include the provision for the Superintendent's recall, as stated above and then adopted.

Dashiell stated in his report that he did not see "how the geography of the mission . . . could be improved." He gave some account of each principal center. In any one of a hundred additional cities and towns, he was confident, a mission could be planted "with the prospect of immediate fruits." "I know," he said, "of no land where there are such possibilities." He warmly commended the work of Dr. Butler in the planting of the mission and said that this part of the work had been done most wisely.¹⁹⁸

Bishop Stephen M. Merrill communicated the Board's action to Butler, who resigned as Superintendent of the mission as of September, 1878. The Bishop suggested he continue until the annual mission meeting in January, 1879, when he could leave "with the affection and esteem of all connected with the Mission, and of the Church at large." He minimized the charges which had been made, referring to them as "the flurry in the Board about the Finances." Butler agreed to remain in accordance with the Bishop's suggestion. In his annual report he stated that he was "broken in health," a statement which was in accord with Dashiell's opinion that he was unable longer to stand the arduous labor and "the wear and tear of the long journeys" which the superintendency required.¹⁹⁹

* The investigation revealed that Butler had borrowed from the Bank of London and from private parties (chiefly from Christopher Ludlow and Mrs. Wilson) an amount in excess of $7,800. which the Board was required to pay, over and above its regular appropriation.—Minutes, B.M., Jan. 15, 1867-Oct. 21, 1879, pp. 576 f.

On May 14, 1878, the Board appointed John W. Butler "Fiscal Agent of the Board in Mexico."

ADMINISTRATION OF CHARLES W. DREES, 1879-86

In December, 1878, Bishop Merrill appointed Charles W. Drees Superintendent of the Mexico Mission, the appointment to take effect at the close of the annual meeting in Mexico City in January. Because of the financial stringency affecting all the work of the Board he was instructed to retain residence in Puebla in order to combine, for the time being, his pastorate and the superintendency. He reached Puebla on a Sunday morning and almost immediately left for Orizaba, beginning his round of visitation of the mission stations.²⁰⁰

The 1879 appointments listed seven charges* with 241 full members and 303 probationers. The average attendance at weekly worship services was 876. Mary F. Swaney reported forty-nine girls in the Mexico City orphanage. Difficulty had been encountered in retaining teachers and instruction of the children had suffered from lack of continuity. Many of the girls had become sincere Christians and were regular in attendance upon preaching services and Class meetings. Later in the year Clara Mulliner (New York and Western Branches) arrived to reinforce the teaching staff at the orphanage.²⁰¹

Two appointments were added to the Mexico City charge during the year; one at Chicoloapam, a large Indian village twenty miles from the city. A chapel was built, a day school established, and regular preaching services held. The second new appointment was Tuyahualco, where fifty-eight probationers were received. In October of the same year (1878) the missionary personnel was reinforced by the arrival of J. M. Barker of the East Ohio Conference, who was appointed to Pachuca. On the Pachuca Circuit the work prospered in Pachuca, Real Del Monte, and Omitlan, and promising beginnings were made in three other places. At Guanajuato urgent invitations had continued to come from the city of Leon, the second most populous city in Mexico.

At the annual meeting a publishing committee consisting of C. W. Drees, S. W. Siberts, and J. M. Barker was placed in charge of the mission press and

* The charges, with missionaries and Mexican assistants, were: Mexico City and Circuit (four congregations), J. W. Butler, J. Medina; Puebla Circuit, C. W. Drees, H. Lüders, F. Montero; Pachuca Circuit, J. M. Barker, C. Gamboa, J. M. Euroza; Orizaba Circuit, G. S. Uempley (under appointment), E. Coronel, D. Mendoza; Miraflores Circuit, S. W. Siberts, F. N. Cordova, Elijio Lopez; Guanajuato Circuit, S. P. Craver, S. Loza; Queretaro, supplied by L. Vallejo. There were six male missionaries; six assistant missionaries; and four W.F.M.S. missionaries, four Bible women; twelve Mexican preachers; seven theological students; and seventy orphans (twenty boys, fifty girls). Churches owned by the Missionary Society numbered five, parsonages, seven; preaching halls rented, fourteen. Money contributed during the year on the field amounted to $4,253.—Sixty-first Ann. Rep., M.S. (1879), p. 162.

John W. Butler was named as Publishing Agent. Clara Mulliner* returned to the United States because of ill health and her place at the Mexico City orphanage was taken by Margaret Elliott from the Philadelphia Branch, W.F.M.S. In October, 1879, George S. Umpleby† of the East Ohio Conference arrived in Mexico.²⁰² A school was opened in Orizaba under the direction of Mrs. Umpleby in February (1883) with three pupils enrolled. By the end of the year there were seventeen. Irene Loza, a sister of Simon Loza—Mexican Local Preacher—was employed as teacher and soon demonstrated ability in both governing and teaching.

Early in February, 1880, Bishop W. L. Harris arrived in Mexico to convene the annual meeting and visit the mission. Accompanied by the Superintendent he acquainted himself with all of the principal stations, traveling in stagecoaches, on horseback, and by railroad about 1,500 miles. During the year Quarterly Conferences were organized on the Guanajuato, Orizaba, and Miraflores Circuits, with the result that all Circuits with the exception of Queretaro had regularly organized Societies. The mission press was active, publishing several important books and large editions of numerous tracts. In several places opposition was strong. At Ayapango in 1881 four parents were imprisoned for sending their children to the Methodist school and many others lost their employment.

A decreased missionary appropriation made 1881 a difficult year for the mission. All financial aid was cut off from three congregations which in 1880 had reported sixty-two probationers and an average attendance of seventy-five. Two of the congregations were taken over by another denomination, work at a third was suspended, and openings planned at other places were deferred. However, at Orizaba in 1883 a desirable location was procured in the best part of the city for a chapel and parsonage.

Simon Loza, who succeeded Umpleby, told of a magistrate who walked thirty-six miles to confer with him regarding the Gospel about which he had heard. He received the Good News with joy, returned to his home with an Exhorter's license, and established a Methodist Society.²⁰³

Concerning the Miraflores Circuit in 1880 S. W. Siberts reported that the most outstanding feature was the school at the head of the Circuit, with an average attendance of about 120 pupils, the majority of whom were from Roman Catholic families. Through the children many of the parents were influenced. A theological class had been organized, which this year had an attendance of seven. With Siberts shifted to Puebla in 1882 Miraflores Circuit was, in addition to the Mexico City Circuit, put under J. W. Butler's supervision with two Mexican assistants—Abundio Tovar and Corscencio Ramirez.

* Miss Mulliner returned to Mexico City later in 1879 and continued to teach at the orphanage school until her retirement in 1884.

† George S. Umpleby remained only four years in Mexico.

Miss Swaney reported that the Mexico City orphanage and school in 1882 was in excellent condition.

We cannot boast of a large number of orphans but as a school and home for girls . . . [it] is a success. Our girls are growing responsible, trustworthy, womanly . . . Health, peace and prosperity have come to us. Our work moves on steadily—no break, no disturbance occurring. . . . I cannot now count over . . . conversions nor any one marvelous sign of God's presence with us, but when we see the change in the spirit of our girls, the order, the improvement—physical, mental, and moral—the discipline, we say humbly and gratefully, What hath God wrought?²⁰⁴

A beautiful little church was completed in Ayapango in 1882, opening a new era for Methodist work in that community. Out of their dire poverty many of the poorest people contributed liberally. The school in 1883 had increased to thirty girls and one of the pupils—an Indian girl—was in charge of the primary department. Three miles beyond Ayapango a congregation of some sixty Christians was found in 1883 at Loyatcingo, which was entirely without the services of a minister. Different members of the group were accustomed to read and explain the Scriptures in their meetings. Some years before they had been persuaded that all American missionaries were political agents and not true ministers of the Gospel. They became convinced that this was a false report and began attending the Ayapango services.²⁰⁵

On the Mexico City Circuit in 1883 the administrator of a large estate at Arroyo Seco, some distance from the city, asked Butler to provide evangelical preaching services for the employees. From the beginning more than seventy attended, and within a few months more than a hundred. The administrator fitted up a suitable place of worship with seats, an organ, and pulpit desk, at a cost to himself of about $300.

A boys' day school, a need for which had been felt for years, was opened in Mexico City in 1884 and was an immediate success, with as many as eighty-three boys enrolled. In March, 1884, Miss Eleanor LeHuray arrived in Mexico City under the auspices of the New York Branch to take charge of the girls' orphanage, beginning a long and eminently fruitful missionary career. In September she was joined by Mary De F. Loyd of the Philadelphia Branch, an experienced teacher who was appointed superintendent of the orphanage school.²⁰⁶

At Pachuca in 1880 J.M. Barker was assisted at the English church by four Local Preachers, and on the Mexican Circuit by Doroteo Mendoza, a Local Preacher, and two helpers, Conrado Gamboa and Justo M. Euroza. In addition, at El Chico services were begun by a layman—Dr. William B. Rule—without compensation. The next year Mendoza was appointed elsewhere and his place was taken by Pedro F. Valderrama. Preaching services in Spanish were held at six different towns and cities on the Pachuca Circuit. Day schools were attended by about a hundred and fifty children. By 1882 the Pachuca girls' school numbered ninety day pupils, "twenty English and seventy Mexican." Miss Elliott was transferred from Mexico City to Pachuca to assist Miss Hastings. The school reported in 1885 that forty-five boys had been admitted to the primary department.

In July, 1882, a mission was formally inaugurated in Tulancingo, the second city in importance in the state, where a beginning had been made the preceding year against the strong opposition of Catholic priests and others. At Real del Monte a church was dedicated on November 2. Preaching services in both Spanish and English were regularly held.

On February 25, 1884, Lucius C. Smith, who had left Chile because of his desire to devote his entire life to Spanish language missionary work, arrived as missionary-in-charge of the Pachuca Circuit in succession to J. M. Barker. As his assistants in the Spanish work five Mexican helpers were appointed. William B. Rule was engaged for the separately organized English work. In all, thirty-eight persons were received into full membership during the year. Early in the year Laura Mills Latimer,* under the auspices of the New England Branch, came to the assistance of Miss Hastings in the work of the Pachuca girls' school.²⁰⁷

At the 1880 annual meeting, no American missionary being available, Herman Lüders was appointed to Puebla where he remained until his death in 1882. The Circuit personnel also included a Local Preacher, an Exhorter, and an instructor for the boys' school and orphanage. The Apizaco congregation was encouraged by the completion of a substantial chapel, costing approximately $1,600., with rooms at the rear for a Mexican preacher and his family. Concerning the church at this time the Superintendent wrote:

The membership is composed of poor people who live in the midst of constant and unrelenting persecution. The influence of the Gospel is seen in many who were formerly idle, inebriate, and clothed in rags and filth, who now attend our services with punctuality, clothed neatly, and in their right mind.²⁰⁸

A school for girls had been opened in Puebla in 1879 in a rented house with three little girls, and by the end of the year had grown to an attendance of twenty-two. In 1881 Susan M. Warner was transferred from Pachuca to take charge of the school.

This year Epigmenio Monroy, a Local Preacher who had been converted in one of the first meetings held in Pachuca, was assigned to Apizaco. He held regular weekly services and also opened a day school which soon enrolled some thirty children. In addition he arranged to begin services in Santa Anita, five miles distant. In April, five days before the date announced for the first service, when he and two associates were returning home from the village, they were assaulted by fourteen men armed with knives and clubs and almost hacked to death. His two companions were injured, one of them severely. After some time they were found and Monroy was taken to his home where after twenty-eight hours of intense suffering he died with a prayer on his lips for his assailants. The record reads like the Book of Acts: "Monroy died in a state of great peace and with a spirit like Stephen's, of forgiveness for his murderers." His severely wounded associates, after lingering for weeks, died in the Tlaxcala hospital. Drees wrote, "It seems an hour of Satan's triumph; but in the name of the Lord of Hosts will we lift up our banners." Monroy, a faithful minister, is still held in remembrance as the first martyr of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Mexico.²⁰⁹

* Laura Mills Latimer, after several years' teaching in the United States, went to Mexico under the auspices of the Woman's Board of the Presbyterian Church, U.S.A. After two years she transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church mission, under sponsorship of the New England Branch. In 1885 she founded the Guanajuato school but was compelled by ill health to retire from the mission in 1886.

After Lüders' death early in 1882 S. W. Siberts was given charge of the Puebla Circuit. Accompanied by his assistant J. M. Euroza he made an exploratory trip into the mountainous area of Tetala, a district inhabited by pure-blooded Indians. Hundreds of Testaments and tracts were distributed and preaching services held in the schoolhouse and homes in San Martin Texmelucan. In Xochiapulco, the principal town of the region, a congregation of more than three hundred gathered for a preaching service. The town had a Catholic church but had been without a priest for eleven years. The next year brought disturbing trials. At Puebla Siberts was left without a Mexican preacher; his teacher at the boys' school left him; the teacher at Apizaco resigned and he had to close the school; and, worst of all, three preachers at Apizaco proved to be unfaithful. "We can never hope to do permanent work," he concluded, "by picking up adventurers and unreliable persons for our preachers and school teachers."²¹⁰

In 1884 an arrangement was made whereby Greenman was given full charge of the Puebla Circuit and Siberts left free to devote his entire time to the theological seminary. He had brought his theological class with him from Miraflores in 1882 and the two groups were then united.²¹¹

S. P. Craver was reappointed to Guanajuato in 1880. The outstanding event of the year was the purchase by the Missionary Society, under the supervision of Bishop Harris, of a very desirable property in the center of the city. Adaptations and repairs made of it an attractive chapel which was dedicated on October 24 in the presence of a large congregation. The former chapel was retained and services were held in both, as also in the nearby towns of Marfil, La Luz, and Silao. In 1881 serious hindrances to the work in Marfil and La Luz developed and the religious services were temporarily suspended. The next year a congregation which varied from twenty-five to fifty persons were assembled at Salamanca, about forty-five miles southeast of Guanajuato. Conrado Gamboa was transferred from Queretaro to shepherd the new flock.

In 1883 Simon Loza, who for six years had been the Mexican pastor at Guanajuato, was moved and Gamboa was appointed to take his place along with F. N. Cordova and Ignacio Gaytan. Craver, because of poor health and desire for a more central location on the Circuit, removed to Silao. Decreasing production from the mines caused many members of the Guanajuato congregation to leave the city.

In 1884 Gamboa started out on horseback one morning for Cuéramaro, an outstation, accompanied by the chapel keeper, for a preaching service. A short distance out of town they were set upon by three armed men, also on horseback. The men fired, killing the chapel keeper and seriously wounding Gamboa. He was shot through the right lung and lay for two hours on the road suffering intensely before he was found. The surgeons said he could not live but he recovered and for eight years continued his labors in the ministry.²¹² Fanatical persecution failed to daunt either the men or the women missionaries. Early in 1885 Laura M. Latimer opened a second school in Guanajuato with twenty-eight girls enrolled. Unfortunately when Miss Latimer found it necessary to leave Mexico the school was closed.

A cherished plan for a number of years had been to establish a central mission in the city of Leon which had been repeatedly listed in connection with Guanajuato. Occasional visits had been made but no regular services attempted. The arrival of Duston and Margaret Kemble of the North Ohio Conference in May, 1881, seemed a promise that the plan might at last be realized. After a reconnaissance visit to the city by Drees and Kemble, during which a number of persons were interviewed, a decision was reached that it would be wise for the Kembles to remain for a while in Guanajuato studying the language and acquainting themselves with prevailing religious conditions. On February 7, 1882, they went to Leon.²¹³ Not until July 2, however, was it possible to open a small chapel for private religious services. Twelve persons were present at the first service and with a part of these a Methodist Society was organized. On September 20 public services were begun in a different location where the congregation soon increased. At the close of the year Kemble reported opposition organized but not violent. He made many acquaintances and distributed large quantities of tracts and Testaments. In 1883 persecution became more serious. A colporteur was set upon and seriously wounded, and members were turned out of their houses, deprived of employment, and their lives threatened. Nevertheless, a few joined the church and a small day school was begun. Outlying villages were visited and at Cuéramaro, forty-five miles south of Leon, fifty-six people—young and old—asked for a preacher. Severo Lopez was appointed this year as Kemble's Mexican assistant.

In January, 1884, Leon was attached to the Guanajuato Circuit with Kemble in charge. Lopez was appointed elsewhere and no one was found to take his place. The congregation at Leon was depleted by the removal of the most stable members to other places. As a result, most of the fruit of the preceding two years was dissipated. At Silao also most of the members moved to other places. Times were hard and many of the poorer people shifted "from place to place in sheer desperation seeking for bread." Kemble could report, however, that very few relapsed into their former sinful habits. After five years Kemble returned to the United States.²¹⁴

MEXICO CONFERENCE

In accordance with the action of the 1884 General Conference* Bishop W. L. Harris convened the Mexico Conference in its first session in Trinity Church, Gante 5, on January 15, 1885. He announced the transfers of fourteen ministers† as members. Of these, six were missionaries. The W.F.M.S. missionaries were recognized‡ and seven preachers were admitted on trial.§ Jacinto Hernandez and Joaquin V. Hernandez were received on credentials from the Protestant Episcopal Church, and Jose P. Nevares of the Presbyterian Church was received as a Local Elder in the Methodist Episcopal Church. Felipe N. Cordova was transferred to the New Mexico Spanish Mission. C. W. Drees was appointed Presiding Elder of the Mexico District, which embraced the entire Conference.

Growth during the twelve years of the mission, so far as it could be indicated statistically, was as follows: members in full connection, 728; probationers, 633; average attendance on Sunday worship, 1,431; adherents, 3,873; theological students, 16; day schools, 20; pupils, 968; churches and chapels, 14; halls and other places of worship, 22; parsonages, 14. The financial report for 1884 was encouraging.¶ The W.F.M.S. had seven day schools—Puebla, Pachuca, Miraflores, Queretaro, Leon, Real del Monte, and El Chico—with a total enrollment of 290 pupils. There were seventy children in the Mexico City orphanage and also forty women under instruction. A girls' school was opened this year in Guanajuato. A new girls' school building also was completed at Miraflores.²¹⁵

The Conference appointed a committee to confer with representatives of other missions concerning arrangements for a general assembly of the evan-

* The 1884 General Conference adopted the recommendation of its Committee on Missions "that the Mission in Mexico be organized as an Annual Conference, the boundaries of which shall be those of the Republic of Mexico."—G. C. Journal, 1884, pp. 232, 345.

† The fourteen charter members were: Charles W. Drees, Felipe N. Cordova, Samuel P. Craver, Samuel W. Siberts, John W. Butler, Augustin Palacios, Almon W. Greenman, Duston Kemble, Simon Loza, Justo M. Euroza, Conrado Gamboa, E. Fuentes y Betancourt, Abundio Tovar, and Pedro F. Valderrama.

‡ The W.F.M.S. missionaries and their appointments were: Mary De F. Loyd and Eleanora Le Huray, Mexico City Girls' School and Orphanage; Mary Hastings, Pachuca Girls' School; Susan F. Warner and Mary F. Swaney, Puebla Girls' School; Laura M. Latimer, Guanajuato Girls' School.—Minutes, Mexico Conference (1885), p. 17.

§ The seven preachers admitted on trial were: Lucius C. Smith, Severo Lopez, Benjamin F. Velasco, Jacinto Hernandez, Joaquin V. Hernandez, Sixto Bernal, Roman Medina.

¶ Offerings in 1884 were: for the Missionary Society, $471.; for benevolences, $492.; for self-support, $2,736.; for church building and repairs, $301.; for other purposes, $1,226.; total, $5,226.

gical Churches in Mexico. In September, 1885, Levi B. Salmans* of the New England Southern Conference, who became Mexico's first Methodist medical missionary, and Mrs. Salmans arrived.

At the second session, January 14-18, 1886, Bishop R. S. Foster divided the Conference into three Districts: Central District, including Mexico City, Miraflores, and Pachuca, C. W. Drees, Presiding Elder; Northern District, made up of Guanajuato, Leon, and Queretaro, S. P. Craver, Presiding Elder; and Eastern District, composed of Puebla and Orizaba, A. W. Greenman, Presiding Elder. The creation of Districts involved further subdivision into charges, appointments being made to eighteen Stations and Circuits. This reorganization gave a larger degree of responsibility to the Mexican preachers. Twelve of the eighteen charges were placed directly under Mexican leadership. One preacher, Fedencio Anguiana, was admitted on trial. Jacinto Hernandez was discontinued at his own request.

The amount contributed this year for self-support amounted to $5,227. The Conference emphasized its importance "for the organic life of the nascent Evangelical Church in this Republic since this has direct relation to the independence and autonomy of the Church itself."²¹⁶

The year 1886 was noteworthy for advance in the schoolwork of the W.F.M.S. In Mexico City a large, pretentious, and well-located stone building, comparatively new, was purchased for the orphanage home and school.† A beautiful new building was completed for the Puebla Girls' School which this year enrolled eighty-two pupils. Two were Indian girls who had walked fifty miles for the privilege of attending a Protestant school. At Apizaco a mixed school had been begun which had grown too large for the pastor to care for. This year the girls were placed in a separate school with forty-five pupils on the first day. The next year eighty girls were enrolled. Twelve pupils of the Orizaba school were received into the church as probationers in 1886. The standard of teachers and the influence exerted by the W.F.M.S. schools was such that in 1889 a state government department of education asked that the women in charge take over responsibility for a public school. One town offered the building and furniture of the girls' public school. These

* Levi B. Salmans (1855-1938), born in Hocking County, Ohio, was educated at De Pauw University (A.B., 1880; A.M., 1883) and Drew Theological Seminary (B.D., 1883). On his arrival in Mexico he was appointed to Pachuca as an evangelistic missionary (September, 1883—June, 1886). His next appointment was Puebla where he taught in the theological seminary and served as president of the Boys' School (July, 1887—August, 1889). Convinced of the great need for medical evangelism he returned to the United States and in 1891 received the M.D. degree from the Kentucky School of Medicine (Louisville). He was appointed in July, 1891, to Guanajuato and in January, 1892, also to the presiding eldership of the Northern District. On his arrival in Guanajuato in 1891 he opened a hospital with eleven beds, the Casa de Salud, El Bueno Samaritano (Good Samaritan Hospital and Dispensary). The institution was gradually enlarged—first to sixteen rooms with thirty beds, and later to still larger capacity. He also founded the first modern training school for nurses. Until his retirement in 1927 the hospital was his major interest. On his several furloughs he pursued graduate study in Chicago, Cincinnati, and in Germany. For six years (1895-1901) he published the American Medical Missionary, and he was also the author of many pamphlets and books.—Official Biographical Files, Division of World Missions.

† Since the W.F.M.S. was unable to meet the demand for cash payment the Missionary Society purchased the building in trust for the W.F.M.S., the women's Society making a first installment payment of $10,000.—Seventeenth Ann. Rep., W.F.M.S. (1886), p. 57.

developments were the cause of no little concern to the Roman Catholic hierarchy. The Bishop of Puebla forbade Catholics "under pain of excommunication, to send their children to Protestant schools, or to be employed by that sect in the capacity of servants, mechanics, teachers, etc., or to sell them the necessary materials for the consummation of their enterprises" ²¹⁷

On November 9, 1886, Drees received a cablegram from Bishop Warren requesting him to accept the superintendency of the South America Mission. The request, which came by unanimous action of all the Bishops, was wholly unexpected and without explanation of why the transfer was proposed. The decision was not an easy one for him and Mrs. Drees to make, as they had become deeply attached to Mexico, but they felt that they were not at liberty to decline. On December 2, 1886, they set out on their long journey, much to the regret of the Mexico Conference and with the expression of high appreciation of their service from all of the members.

Drees was able to give a good account of his stewardship as Conference Superintendent. Most of the property enterprises of the Conference had been successfully completed. All financial matters were in excellent condition. The Conference was fully organized and a single administrative head was no longer required.²¹⁸

Bishop J. F. Hurst left Mexico after presiding over the third session of the Conference in January, 1887, with the conviction that "the bolts are all broken and the doors are wide open for Protestant work among all the . . . races of the Mexican Indians." President Diaz informed him that if missionaries were threatened and word was telegraphed to him troops would be sent immediately.²¹⁹

The Bishop was overly optimistic. At intervals trouble spots continued to appear here and there. At Panotla, in the state of Tlaxcala, where a congregation had been assembled in February, 1886, a mob some months later compelled the preachers to take refuge in a private house in which a room had been loaned for a chapel. After an hour troops arrived from Tlaxcala and dispersed the rioters. Some of the ringleaders were arrested and fined. A few days later six or seven of the church attendants were jailed because they had refused to pay a fine of $25. each, imposed on the charge that they had originated the disturbance by attending a Protestant religious service. While there were fightings without there were also troubles within. Craver, Presiding Elder of the Northern District, reported that at Salamanca discord, quarrels, and backbiting had "almost destroyed the congregation." Some had returned to the Catholic Church. Others had fallen out with the pastor and his wife and left the congregation and among those who remained less than entire harmony prevailed. There was difficulty in holding some of the pastors in the work. Teaching was more remunerative and some left on that account.

Others were unfitted for the difficult work of the pastorate and quit because of failing in it. In 1888 Craver reported three charges on the Northern District without pastors.²²⁰

Substantial reinforcement came to the Conference during 1886-87. In 1886 Miss Lizzie Hewett* was sent by the Northwestern Branch to the Puebla Girls' School; and Miss Harriet L. Ayers from the Cincinnati Branch to assist Miss Loyd at the girls' orphanage school in Mexico City. In 1887 Nella H. Field from the New England Branch came to Pachuca and the next year established a girls' school in Tezontepec. In 1887 G. B. Hyde† was received by transfer from the Vermont Conference; William Green from the New York Conference, and W. P. F. Ferguson‡ from the Troy Conference. The Puebla Girls' School became a boarding school in 1888 with sixteen boarding pupils enrolled in the first six months, making a total enrollment of 129. In 1889 a second building was added.

In 1887 the first effective attempt was made to begin missionary work in the state of Oaxaca in response to an appeal which had come from several congregations which were struggling to maintain religious services without the aid of a pastor. This was another example—of which missionary history contains many—of the vitality and depth of devotion so often generated simply by the introduction of the Bible to a people, accompanied by clear, patient instruction in its reading and use.

About 1870 an agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society had made his way into the mountains of this state and had begun teaching individuals who were willing to receive his teaching. He was a Quaker and, strangely enough, bore the name of John William Butler. A little group was gradually brought together until by July, 1871, they met in a member's home and organized the "Evangelical Society of our Lord Jesus Christ." Its object was "to implore the grace of God that in us he may fulfill his promises: . . . 'All things, whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer believing, ye shall receive.'" The interest spread to other places outside the city of Oaxaca. Some seventeen years later it was the surviving members of the society, in these struggling congregations, who appealed to the Methodist Episcopal Church for help. The congregations at Oaxaca, Etila, Zaachila, Cuilapa, and Cuicatlan had been served for a time by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, mission, but since it had been no longer able to provide for them they turned to the sister mission for assistance. In August, 1888, Valderrama was sent to meet with the groups and report on conditions. His report was favorable, the

* After one year at Puebla Miss Hewett was transferred to the mountain village of Tetela (1887-91). In 1893, after a year's furlough she was assigned to the Montevideo (Uruguay) Girls' School. —L. M. Hodgkins, op. cit., p. 43.

† G. B. Hyde, after two years in Mexico, decided to study medicine and was away from the mission for six years. Returning in 1895 as a physician he remained until 1906 when his wife's health made it necessary for them to leave Mexico.

‡ W. P. F. Ferguson was appointed to the English language church in Mexico City and re-appointed at the 1889 Conference. He remained less than two years. The Minutes for 1890 recorded his transfer to the New York Conference.

Finance Committee approved acceptance of the Circuit, and Valderrama was asked to serve temporarily as pastor.

At the January, 1889, Conference Jose Chavez was appointed pastor of a Circuit which embraced the entire state of Oaxaca and portions of Chiapas and Veracruz. Leaving Puebla it took him and his family eight days by railway, stage, horseback, and litter to reach his Circuit. The missionaries going into this area visited many towns and found friends sympathetic to an evangelical Christian ministry. Large congregations assembled for preaching. Tribes were found of whom little had been known. A gross form of idolatry prevailed and there was a "rumor of human sacrifice." More than twenty different languages were found to be in use.²²¹

A general assembly of Protestant missionaries—an event which John W. Butler characterized as the most remarkable in the history of evangelical missions up to 1888—convened in Mexico City on January 31, 1888, and continued in session for four days. Reports revealed that eleven denominations were represented by organized missions in the nation. Of chapels and churches sixteen had been built without aid from their parent boards and nineteen had received partial assistance. Fifty-nine missionaries and Mexican pastors had been killed by mobs or assassins.²²²

At the 1889 Conference Harry G. Limric and Frank D. Tubbs, probationers, who had arrived in the preceding year, were received on trial from the Montana Conference. The three Districts were increased to four by dividing the Eastern District into the Puebla and the Coast Districts.

The year 1889 was one of the most fruitful that the Mexico Mission had known. Twenty-eight new congregations were added and the net increase of full members and probationers was 394. Six new day schools were organized and the total number of all pupils enrolled was 526. Three Sunday schools and 274 pupils were added. Three new churches were built.²²³

The most spectacular developments were in the Oaxaca region. At the 1889 Conference the bounds of the District were enlarged to include the "Sierras de Puebla," with three large Circuits among the Aztec population. The District as increased was as large as all of New England and the state of New York. There were for the most part no railroads and only the most primitive roadways. Some journeys required from ten to twenty days on horseback. On the Oaxaca Circuit in 1890, Pedro Lopez traveled over nearly the entire length and breadth of the state, visiting the people, distributing tracts, and preaching the Gospel. He visited some thirty of the largest towns and established a school and regular preaching in the region of Juquila in view of the Pacific Ocean a few miles north of the spot where Balboa in 1513 laid claim to it in the name of the King of Spain. The established points on the Circuit were Oaxaca, Cuicatlan, Jacatlan, Cuilapa, Zaachila, Etla, Santiago El Mayor, and Tlacolula.²²⁴

In each of the Districts except Puebla new Circuits and additional preaching points were established. Almost invariably the opening of new work was followed by persecution, in some instances severe and bloody. At San Felipe Teotlalzingo, where preaching was begun in the preceding year, the congregation was assaulted early in April, "led by the local authority," with "shooting and firing of houses." Several were wounded and property was damaged. Later the teacher of the day school was shot in the leg. In both cases though the criminals were identified they were not prosecuted. At San Cristobal the services were interrupted on two occasions by shots fired through the door during worship services. At Queretaro the persecution of earlier years was renewed to such an extent that it was feared for a time that the property would be destroyed and the congregation scattered. An appeal to President Diaz brought relief.²²⁵

Several important changes in Conference personnel occurred in 1889-90. A. W. Greenman, after almost ten years in Mexico, returned to the Northwest Indiana Conference. William E. McLennan* of the same Conference arrived in November, 1889, to become pastor of the English congregation in the capital. Theda A. Parker of the New York Branch was added to the staff of the Puebla Girls' School, and Anna M. Rodgers from the Philadelphia Branch, appointed to Guanajuato in 1889, was present at the Conference for the first time. Victoriano D. Baez, who was to have a long and distinguished career in the Conference, was admitted on trial.²²⁶ Amelia Van Dorsten, of the Northwestern Branch, arrived and was assigned to the Tetela school.

The 1891 Conference met in Pachuca. Districts were increased to five by adding the Hidalgo District. The Central District was renamed Mexico. The appointments strongly emphasized the failure of the denomination to supply the missionaries and to raise up the native preachers required to meet the demands of a growing Church. Despite the rapidly increasing number of congregations the Conference lacked by fifteen a sufficient number of members to man its thirty-seven Stations and Circuits. On the Puebla District six of the seven appointments were left to be supplied by Local Preachers and other recruits who lacked the educational and other qualifications required for entrance to Conference membership. One missionary was received by transfer, I. Chester Cartwright from the Rock River Conference, who was appointed to the English language work in the state of Hidalgo. Mrs. Cartwright was a doctor of medicine.²²⁷ Anna R. Limberger came from the Philadelphia Branch and was assigned to the Puebla Girls' School for the kindergarten and elementary department work.

Reports of pastors at the January, 1892, Conference indicated continued expansion. Benjamin F. Velasco, pastor of Tezontepec, Mexico District, reported that when he was first appointed to the charge in 1890 there were four small congregations. This year there were fifteen, with about eight hundred adherents. The pastor had only one assistant and both taught day schools on five days of the week. To provide a reasonable number of preaching services and anything like adequate pastoral care division into three Circuits was called for but preachers were not available. Ever since his first year (1889) as Presiding Elder of the Coast District William Green had been emphasizing the necessity for appointment of an experienced missionary to the Oaxaca Circuit. To make this possible Bishop C. H. Fowler, who presided at the 1892 Annual Conference, reduced the number of Districts from five to four, and appointed Lucius C. Smith to Oaxaca. During the remaining years of his life he gave himself with indefatigable energy to his challenging task. "Our field," he wrote, "contains about fifteen hundred appointments." He conversed with numerous tribesmen and with painstaking care wrote out alphabets for twenty different languages which he had identified. Continually he beseeched the Conference and the Missionary Society to take advantage of the many favorable opportunities he found. He suffered a long and painful illness, the result of being hit on the head by a stone thrown at him while preaching. At his death in 1896 he was buried in the municipal cemetery of Oaxaca, the first Methodist missionary to die in Mexico.²²⁸ The missionary personnel was increased in 1892 by three new arrivals. Francis S. Borton came from the United States and was received on trial in the Mexico Conference. Effie Dunmore of the Philadelphia Branch arrived and was assigned to the Tetela Girls' School. Lillian Neiger (Northwestern Branch), who was conversant with the Spanish language, also arrived and was appointed to Guanajuato. The Society reported this year a total of forty-two Mexican workers, of whom thirty-seven had been trained in Methodist girls' schools.

* W. E. McLennan remained in Mexico only two years. At the January, 1892, Conference he was transferred to the Northwest Indiana Conference.

At the January, 1893, Conference two preachers were received on trial and none by transfer. One was discontinued, one was located at his own request, and one, Conrado Gamboa, had died—a net loss of one for the year. Yet the number of congregations continued to increase, six having been added during 1892. As a result, the dearth of pastors was again accentuated. Nevertheless, the number of conversions increased by 118 over 1892. Five new day schools were established, enrolling 481 additional children. There was also a marked increase in enrollment in some of the schools. The two Guanajuato schools almost doubled their enrollment. Dr. Salmans testified to their religious value. Most of the probationers received into the Guanajuato church in 1892, he said, came from among the older pupils of the schools. Girls' schools under W.F.M.S. auspices were in operation in twelve centers: Pachuca, Mexico City, Puebla, Chicoloapam, Ayapango, Tezontepec, Apizaco, Orizaba, Tetela, La Canada, Guanajuato, and Miraflores. The highest enrollment in any Protestant girls' school in Mexico was in the Pachuca Girls' School, 355.²²⁹

For lack of sufficient missionary appropriation the day schools in the chief towns in two of the principal Circuits of Guanajuato District, which were not largely attended, were abandoned. Persecution at Cuernamoro had the effect of increasing the growth of the church.

At Cordoba, in the Coast District, a yellow fever epidemic raged for two years (1892-93) causing more than a thousand deaths. Many members of the church were among the victims. Assemblage of the people in all houses of worship, Catholic and Protestant, was forbidden by the authorities.²³⁰

In 1893 new congregations continued to be established. On the Mexico District a beginning was made at Cereza, between Pachuca and El Chico, and fourteen persons were received on probation. On the Puebla District a new congregation with a day and night school was organized at La Colonia, a short distance from Puebla. Credit for this interesting work was given to students of the Puebla Theological School. Two new congregations were also established on the Tlaxcala Circuit. Finally, on the Coast District two additional congregations were formed on the Tuxpan Circuit and two more on the Teziutlan Circuit.

By an outlay of some $15,000. new property was procured in Pachuca as a headquarters building which provided facilities for the boys' school and ample living quarters for the teacher and for the missionary family and the Mexican pastor. The former headquarters building was transferred to the W.F.M.S. for the girls' school.²³¹

Two churches were dedicated in the Mexico District in 1894, a new stone church in San Augustin of which only a fraction of the cost was contributed by the Missionary Society, and a chapel in Poxtla, near the base of Popocatepetl. At least three new congregations were established on the Tezontepec Circuit as a direct result of the work of Jose Gutierrez, a poor farmer, in distributing tracts in the state of Hidalgo. On the Puebla District Craver received in 1894 a petition sent by some forty persons of San Miguel Zacaola asking for preaching services in their town. It was not possible for several months to send a preacher but in December Miguel Garcia, a theological student, agreed to go. More than eighty persons came together for the first service. In June in response to urgent requests, services were begun in Jicarrero, a village about 120 miles from Mexico City in the state of Morelos. Before the end of the year some forty people were in the congregation. A long-cherished hope was realized in the establishment this year of the Queretaro Methodist Institute, with primary and secondary departments. A large enrollment was not expected but Dr. Salmans was able to report at the close of the first year an enrollment of twenty boys and men, some of whom came from long distances.²³²

The eleventh session of the Conference met in Trinity Church, Mexico City, on January 17, 1895, with twenty-two members in attendance, eight more than were present as charter members at the first session ten years before. Of the twenty-two, eight were missionaries. Three missionaries had been transferred out of the Conference during the year.* Eduardo Carrero was received on credentials from the Southern Presbyterian Church, and two preachers were received on trial. Six W.F.M.S. missionaries were present at the Conference session; one was on leave of absence for rest in the United States. This year, for the first time in the eleven years of the Conference's life, a Mexican was appointed Presiding Elder. J. M. Euroza was put on the Hidalgo District. William Green who had served for six years as Presiding Elder of the Coast District was transferred to the New York Conference. William C. Evans, who had been received by transfer from the East Ohio Conference, gave vigorous leadership to the Mexico City English church. Previously only one worship service had been held on Sunday. He instituted an evening service and infused new life into the midweek prayer meeting and the Sunday school. He secured funds by personal solicitation for fitting up an attractive free reading room which was kept open every evening until ten o'clock. Many young men from the United States, England, and Germany took advantage of the opportunity of reading newspapers and other periodicals and books from their own countries.²³³

A church was dedicated in 1894 at Atzacan, some seven miles from Orizaba. In 1892 Bishop Fowler and Charles Parkhurst, the editor of Zion's Herald, had visited the place and met an Indian, a leader of the village, who had been saved from alcoholism by the Gospel and had become a zealous Christian. He pleaded with the visitors for help to build a church. He would donate all the land needed and promised to contribute of his means and labor, along with other members of the little congregation, if only some assistance from outside might be given. Parkhurst printed an appeal in his journal and subscribers quickly responded with $527. This gift, with local contributions, materials, and labor made it possible to build an attractive church.

The day schools of the reorganized Central District enrolled in 1895 more than a thousand pupils; those of the Hidalgo District, 1,320 pupils. Five capable young women graduated from the complete normal course of the Mexico City school, each of whom accepted positions in the mission work.

In Pachuca, as an improvement to the property transferred to the W.F.M.S. by the Missionary Society, a new, beautiful and commodious girls' school building was erected. At Guanajuato the girls' school this year reached an enrollment of 113, and the boys' school an enrollment of ninety-seven.²³⁴

* S. P. Craver after nineteen years in Mexico was transferred to the Iowa Conference; Harry G. Limric, after six years of service, to the East Ohio Conference; and Frank D. Tubbs, after six years, to the South America Conference.

TWENTY-TWO YEARS OF THE MEXICO MISSION

At the close of 1895 the Mexico Conference had forty-one charges with 2,060 full members and 2,325 probationers. There were twenty-nine Local Preachers. Churches numbered thirty; parsonages, nineteen. Congregations were far in excess of churches, many meeting in hired halls and in residences. Adherents also far exceeded the number of church members—by some estimated to be three to one—but in neither case were estimates given in the Conference statistics. There were three high schools with 120 pupils and fifty-three other day schools with an enrollment of 3,795 pupils. The W.F.M.S. girls' schools numbered twelve, with 1,416 pupils. In addition to missionaries forty-four Mexican teachers were employed, of whom forty were mission school graduates and members of the Methodist Church. Sixty-two organized Sunday schools listed 1,927 pupils and 127 officers and teachers.²³⁵

In considering the result of a quarter century of missionary effort it should be remembered that the Methodist mission was established only twenty-five years after the military invasion of 1846-48 and the forced ceding to the United States of the area now comprising California, Nevada, Utah, most of Arizona and New Mexico and parts of Wyoming and Colorado. The memory of this was still fresh and painful in the minds of Mexicans. In that atmosphere the coming of strangers from beyond the Rio Grande, no matter what their declared purpose, aroused suspicion in the minds of many, if not open antagonism.

A very different set of attitudes toward Protestant religious influences coming from the North had been nurtured by the attempt of European monarchists, Pope Pius IX, and powerful members of the Roman Catholic hierarchy, to destroy republicanism in Mexico and the United States by establishing Maximilian of Austria as Emperor of Mexico. The fantastic and tragic struggle was undertaken while the United States was engaged in civil conflict with the hope that the Monroe Doctrine which had held European aggression in check since the eighteen twenties could not be implemented and that the weakened condition of the country might make possible territorial expansion. The undertaking had ended six years prior to William Butler's arrival in 1873. In the struggle the armies of President Juarez had been bled white by the enormous slaughter they had undergone. A few months before Abraham Lincoln's tragic death he had written Juarez, still in exile, "Be of good cheer my friend. Mexico will rise again." The puppet Maximilian—whose instincts and purposes on more than one occasion had shown him to be more humane and liberal than his manipulators—finally fell before a firing squad at Queretaro in 1867.

The net effect of these conflicting events—United States intervention and defense in common against the European conspiracy—was to make many Mexicans more open to the Gospel message than the people of Paraguay,

Bolivia, Peru, and Colombia, where the Roman Catholic Church wielded undisputed power. Men prominent in the life of the republic—judges, mayors, and some governors, as also Juarez and Diaz—befriended missionaries and pastors and thereby made it easier for people to stand steadfast in the face of Roman Catholic persecution. Juarez expressed what many liberal minds were thinking, "Upon the development of Protestantism depends the future happiness and prosperity of my nation."²³⁶

The antagonism of the Roman Church to Protestantism and to Protestants was deeply rooted, determined, and vicious. The country, the clerical party contended, should close its doors to Protestants. This represented the attitude of bishops and priests throughout the period of which we write. With fanatical bigotry archbishops, bishops, and local priests again and again incited their people to a frenzy which led them to wreck chapels, attack congregations, and even to murder missionaries and native pastors. Unthinking and brutal fanaticism was ready to rise in riotous mobs at any hour at a priest's bidding. In various cities and rural communities no Protestant dared to consider his property or person immune from Catholic vengeance. One never knew when the lightning would strike next. Because of the conflict between Church and State the protection of government assured by the Reform Laws of 1857 did not guarantee security. It was in this chaotic situation that the mission had to begin and carry on its work.

The agents and colporteurs of the British and Foreign Bible Society and the American Bible Society did much toward laying a foundation for the work of the missionaries. The indefatigable pioneer James Thomson of the former Society made two extensive visits to Mexico well in advance of the arrival of any evangelical missionaries. The first was as early as 1827 when he arrived in Mexico City with an imposing caravan of twenty-four mules. From the capital as a center he made two long trips into different parts of the country on which he sold 4,235 copies of the Bible. In 1830 it seemed necessary for him to withdraw but in 1842 he returned for a brief period. The Society resumed operations in 1863 by opening a Bible depository in Mexico City but it was not until the end of foreign rule that extensive distribution was possible. In the years 1863-78, 158,000 Bibles were circulated. During this same period, beginning in 1826, the American Bible Society was also active at intervals. One notable action was the sending of W. H. Norris, the South America missionary, to Veracruz in 1847 with a supply of Bibles to accompany the American troops on their military exploits. He distributed thousands of Bibles and Testaments in Spanish, French, German, and English. During the army occupation he placed the Bible in the homes of thousands of families in Veracruz, Jalapa, Puebla, and Mexico City. In 1867-70 an agent of the Society put in circulation some eight thousand copies of the Scriptures, in the northern states of the country. The reading of the Bible did much to stimulate a spirit of religious inquiry among the people and to create a desire to hear the message of the Gospel.²³⁷

In Mexico as in other fields the success of the mission depended upon raising up a native ministry by recruiting and training young men of spiritual gifts, sterling Christian character, courage and perseverance. There were very few government elementary schools. The process of preparation had to begin at the elementary level. Yet no provision was made in the early years by the Missionary Society for even one qualified man to give his whole time to an institution for the training of young men for the ministry. A "theological class" of two, three, or five students was a poor substitute for such a school. For lack of it the mission was for years retarded in its development. Of thirty-four men whose names appear as assistants or pastors during the years 1873-78 only six continued in the work and appeared in the 1879 record as receiving appointments. About one half of the recruits of early years were listed only once or twice in the yearly appointments and then disappeared. Later, after the Puebla Theological School was well organized and one of the missionaries was appointed to give full time to it the situation improved.

During the early years of the mission several men who had trained for the priesthood left the Roman Catholic Church to become Methodist ministers. Augustin Palacios studied law in Saint Gregorio College in Mexico City but turned aside in 1847 and entered the Mexican army to resist the American intervention. At the war's close he took up the study of Catholic theology and in 1851 was ordained. He became ecclesiastical judge in the cathedral and later assistant chaplain to Maximilian. Becoming disillusioned concerning the Roman Catholic Church he established an independent congregation, taking the Bible as his sole guide. He surreptitiously attended Methodist services and becoming persuaded his suspicions that the missionaries were political agents had no basis united with the Church and entered its ministry. For ten years he was a faithful and successful preacher in Mexico City, Puebla, and Orizaba where he died on January 5, 1889. Jose Maria Gonzales was a philosopher and an able writer but was carried away by vagaries that seriously impaired his usefulness as a minister. He did not stay long with the Methodists. Trinidad Rodriguez was ordained in the Roman Catholic Church at twenty-five years of age. He had served several parishes when one day he encountered a colporteur and bought from him a Bible, Pilgrim's Progress, and several other Protestant books. Instead of condemning them outright, as most priests did, he studied them at length and under their influence was converted and became a devout Methodist.

Emilio Fuentes y Betancourt came to the Mexico Mission with the recommendations of the Missionary Secretaries. He was hailed as an important accession to the working forces, Drees saying that his "thorough culture, and his ability as preacher and educator, promise [that he will be] . . . very useful in different departments of work of this mission." He was an ordained priest of the Roman Catholic Church, educated in leading universities of Cuba and Spain, who after long inner conflict had renounced Catholic dogmas and practices and had consecrated himself to preaching the Gospel among Spanish-speaking people.*

The mission lacked the continuity of leadership required to develop a consistent policy and program for the field as a whole. Of the nineteen missionaries sent to Mexico between 1873 and 1890 only seven spent more than ten years on the field. Three were in Mexico for two years or less; three from three to five years; and six from six to ten years.

Christian missions failed to enlist outstanding liberal national leaders as members of the Protestant Churches. To this general statement the Methodist mission was no exception. Many of them were friendly and some, including Juarez and Diaz, were outspoken in paying tribute to Protestant religious and social principles but very few went so far as to embrace membership. Nor were many converts made from the ranks of liberal, socially minded professional men and women—lawyers, doctors, journalists, teachers, and businessmen—of whom there were many. Certain concepts of the social and political revolution were also basic in Protestantism but the Mexican liberals did not recognize them as basically Christian. As a consequence, while many of these were friendly to missionaries they stood aloof from the humble folk who had no prestige to lose by being branded as Protestants.

The reason for the situation is not far to seek. The Roman Catholic Church vied with the government in its appeal for the allegiance of the entire populace. Although dis-established it still had political power and social standing. The Protestant Churches disavowed all political connections, had no wealth, and no social prestige. Despite the fierce, determined conflict between the State and the Church, the leaders of government could not ignore it or entirely sever their connection with it. This was true also of leaders in local community life. Many of both groups never attended mass or other religious services except on state occasions but they were within the Church's pale and when they died were given a ceremonial funeral and burial by the Church.

The membership of the Methodist Church in Mexico was predominately mestizo. There were some people of foreign birth but the rank and file of the members were of mixed Indian and Spanish lineage, of whom the larger proportion were men. Almost without exception they were poor—most of them very poor and living under primitive conditions. They were chiefly manual laborers, tradesmen, industrial clerical workers, and primary school teachers. The rural members were principally small farmers and peasants.²³⁸

* Fuentes had a checkered career in the itinerancy. For a time after his arrival in Mexico he was assigned to special work in Mexico City. At the first session of the Annual Conference he was located at his own request. In 1887 he was readmitted to Conference membership and appointed to Leon. At the 1888 Conference he announced that he had been appointed professor in the Veracruz State Normal School and withdrew from membership in the Conference. At the same time he expressed his "profound gratitude for all the consideration and the deference" which the Church had shown him.—Minutes, Mexico Conference, 1889, p. 8.

There were a few churches in Indian villages and in all rural churches there were usually some members of pure Indian descent. As in South America so also in Mexico the large Indian population offered a challenging missionary opportunity but little was done to meet it. No missionaries were given special training to establish missions to any of the numerous Indian tribes, nor was literature produced in more than a very few of the many Indian languages.

Doubtless the natural course was for missions to be first established in the larger centers of population but it is to be questioned whether this policy should have been so exclusively followed. Since the other denominations followed the same course an undue concentration of Protestant missions in the towns and particularly the large centers resulted.* Schools as well as churches were located in the larger centers.

This fact was in itself a cause of confusion to the Mexican people who could not differentiate between the several Churches presented to them as Protestant. It also resulted in a very large number of small towns and rural communities being left without any evangelical religious services, in many of which equal or larger opportunity for fruitful Christian work existed. The influence of the Protestant emphasis on the establishment of schools reached far beyond the boundaries of the missions' constituencies. All over Mexico the founding of a Protestant school in a locality was certain to be promptly followed by the opening of a Catholic school. With its greater command of financial resources it could readily extend the number of its schools and make substantial contribution to the literacy of the population.

Within its first quarter century the numerical strength of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Mexico was greater than in South America after more than twice the time. Yet growth had been slow—much less rapid than that of some missions in the Orient. Such progress as it had made was achieved in the face of the incessant opposition—often violent persecution—of a strongly entrenched Roman Catholicism and the fanaticism of superstitious and deluded masses. While it gained the favor of liberal government officials its gradual progress was due to its own inner vitality and not to official influence.

The movement developed along the same lines as Methodist missions in other lands, the conversion of adults by means of evangelistic effort and the instruction and training of children in its schools. The mission was an extension of the Church in the United States. The local Methodist Societies were an exact reproduction of the churches across the border. In other words it was an exotic growth. An alternative would have been to acquaint people with the Gospel of Christ—which Spanish Roman Catholicism had never done—and encourage converts to develop Societies according to a pattern determined by the peoples' environment and needs. This was not done by Protestant missionaries in any other land and there was no reason to expect that the Mexican movement would set the precedent.

* This tendency persisted during the later years and was still evident as late as 1935. Camargo and Grubb cite as an example the state of Tamaulipas in which in that year there were twenty-two organized Protestant churches of which three were in the capital, ten in the chief port city and adjacent urban communities, and five in towns on the United States border. Of the four remaining two were in small towns, and only two of the entire number in rural neighborhoods.—Op. cit., p. 95.

William Butler's reports for the years of his administration were invariably general in character, with very few specific details, and estimated the movement above its actual achievements. This tendency was also evident in some of the annual reports of other missionaries in later years. The internal difficulties against which the local Societies had to contend strengthened the moral fiber of native workers with the consequence that many of them were stalwart Christians determined, against all opposition, to hold fast to the good confession which they had made. However, the rank and file of the church members—and even many of the local leaders—showed little initiative in personal evangelistic effort, a tendency doubtless accentuated by their Roman Catholic background where all religious activities were exercised by the priest. The missionaries were slow in transferring primary responsibility to Mexican preachers. A few young leaders were being trained in the theological school at the close of the period of which account has been given, but at that time only one of the four Presiding Elders was Mexican.

IX

Expanding Foreign Missions—Africa

“FOR THE LIBERIA MISSION* . . . my anxiety will continue to be intense.” With these words John Seys concluded in April, 1845, his second period of superintendency of the small, uncertain mission on the west coast of Africa. His affection for the people almost matched that of Melville Cox, but necessity and family responsibilities had called him home. Thus the Board found itself once again in difficulty concerning its oldest foreign enterprise. While Seys’ last report was on the whole optimistic, with bright prospects seen for the future, nonetheless the mission was limited in scope and without great resources. There were only three training schools, other than small day schools, and one of these was closed temporarily on account of the death of the principal and the lack of a replacement. A serious shortage of workers existed.

The Liberian colony in 1845 occupied only a thirty-six-mile strip of coastland. Colonists were few in number, about six thousand, which represented the sum total of the civilized population in Liberia. Of the tribes-people who were under the jurisdiction of the government and in contact with it, there were about 150,000, the Deys, Vais, Golas, Bassas, Pessahs, and others. The mission extended from Robertsport (Cape Mount), the north-western boundary, to Harper (Cape Palmas), approximately three hundred miles. In the coastal towns, and short distances up the chief waterways, a line of appointments had been established—about eighteen regular stations and a few others—where thatch schoolhouses had been constructed.

The oldest and chief centers of work were along the seacoast. The Society in Monrovia, the capital, on Cape Mesurado, was the most thriving. From Robertsport, the most westerly point, the stations were located on the coast at almost equal intervals to the east. There were Robertsport on Cape Mount, Caldwell and New Georgia near the mouth of the St. Paul River, Marshall on the Borlor River, Buchanan (Grand Bassa) on the St. John River, Greenville and Sino on opposite sides of the Sino River; and at the other extremity, Harper and Tubman Town. Within the Bush new schools had been projected at Norakka, Sardakka, Gillibo, and Barrakka. The “oldest native stations," Robertsville and Hedddington among the Queah, were near the St. Paul River. Millsburg, the site of Ann Wilkins' school for girls, and White Plains, where the Manual Labor School was housed, faced each other across the St. Paul River. Edina, Bassa Cove, and Bexley, all rather small settlements, hugged the St. John River banks.

* For an account of the founding of the Liberia Mission, see Vol. I, 325-44.

Not only was the mission without a Superintendent but, with the increase in stations (Garrettson, Mount Andrew, and Morrisburg) as a result of Seys' last interior trip, in need of more workers than ever. For almost a year the stations remained without any oversight, and the chief school, Monrovia Seminary—the training center for future workers—closed.

THE LIBERIA MISSION REINFORCED

Not until late 1845 did the Missionary Society find men to fill the major posts. As soon as commissioned, John B. Benham of the Oneida Conference and William B. Williams of the New York Conference sailed, arriving in December of that year, the former to become Superintendent, the latter school principal. A third man, William B. Hoyt, of the New York Conference, accompanied them.¹

When the January, 1846, Annual Conference met Benham had barely been able to unpack his bags. Although the three missionaries had been added to the membership the acute shortage of workers continued. Benham's first report, submitted a year later, was marked by discouragement. The problems of breaking the hard African soil had depleted his energy. He had toured as far into the interior as Hedddington, stopping at all the appointments along the route, including the two schools. At Robertsville and Hedddington he discovered how uncertain was work built upon the friendship of chiefs. Should their displeasure be aroused, their esteem lessened, the mission would be disrupted. On the other hand, they had to be appealed to in terms of the gifts of civilization and education for their people, and very materially in the form of money "dashes" for the privilege of coming among them and for "protection." Corruption led to more corruption. Benham was faced with the complaints of King Tom of Hedddington who felt that he was not receiving enough monetary respect. Pitiably the Superintendent concluded that "perhaps, something, as a kind of tribute, will be necessary." Zoda Quee, at Robertsville, intimated he needed more reward for the influence and safety he afforded. And these men, Benham learned, were regarded as the mainstays of these missions. At Morrisburg the king refused to keep the preacher assigned because he did not offer board and schooling for the boys. At some of the centers he found the buildings in such condition that he had to give immediate orders for essential repairs to save them. At others, he learned that frequent illness had prevented the preachers in charge from carrying on their work regularly and that, of course, meant that some day schools had been discontinued. At the Harper settlement he was told of difficulties between teachers and natives which had led to the barricading of one mission house and the demolition of another.²

A noteworthy event of the year was the capture by the Africa Squadron of a slave ship from Philadelphia, which brought about the rescue of some 750 youths between ten and twenty years of age, of whom about fifty were girls. Tragically, numbers of these Congos, horribly crowded and without accommodations aboard ship, were in a dying condition.* The United States Agent for Recaptured Africans was charged with responsibility for their welfare, and settled upon the plan of distributing the survivors among Church missions. Acting promptly, the Methodist missionaries in council resolved to receive one hundred, nineteen of whom would be girls. Then an appeal for funds was issued, which received a generous response from America.† In later years, these rescued young people swelled the membership of the churches being, under the circumstances, more receptive than other natives to Christian teaching.³

Within four weeks of his arrival in Liberia Williams was dead, and again the seminary was without proper direction. John B. Gripon‡ filled in temporarily. Later J. W. Roberts, the preacher in charge of Millsburg and White Plains, served for a time as principal. Hoyt was then made seminary overseer but by April, 1847, he was again in New York because of the "utter prostration of his wife" and his own declining health. In June, 1847, Gripon again took charge as principal but within six months he died.⁴

In 1846 Superintendent Benham was cheered by the developments of the work. The Missionary Society's Annual Report reflected this optimism. A new native station—Jamaica—among the Vais and Golas had been opened on the coast twenty-five miles northwest of Monrovia on the site of a sacred town which had been destroyed. It seemed providential, for the natives were offering the land with the requirement that "some civilized man should reside there." Also, a school had been established among the Kru people living in Blue Barre on the Sino River opposite the American settlement. New churches had been erected at Edina and Bassa Cove, and that whole area was considered a promising field.⁵

* By the time the captured ship reached port at Monrovia only 756 of the original 900 slaves were alive. Benham, following his visit to the ship, reported: "The stench of the vessel was such, that we remained but a few moments on board . . . ! It was supposed that a thermometer would range at one hundred to one hundred twenty, in the hold. Though I did not go down, I saw that, with few exceptions, they were in a state of entire nudity. Several were in a dying condition, and many others were so emaciated that their skin literally cleaved to their bones. Others, again, had worn their skin through, producing putrid ulcers, which fed swarms of flies."—In Twenty-seventh Ann. Rep., M.S. (1845-46), p. 19.

† A special appeal was sent to the Board for about $2,000. for their annual support, practically all of which was secured in two special meetings in New York. Later, about $4,000. was procured in special gifts, very welcome for the care of 183 children.—Ibid., pp. 21 f.; Christian Advocate and Journal, XXII (1847), 18 (May), 71.

‡ John B. Gripon (?-1847) was intimately associated with the Liberia Mission from the time of Melville Cox's last illness in 1833 until his death. He was "not only an efficient school teacher but a superior mechanic."—Twenty-sixth Ann. Rep., M.S. (1844-45); p. 21; ibid., 29th (1847-48), p. 18. (1847-48), p. 18.

Hardly had Benham become acquainted with the work and gauged its needs when his health was so undermined that he felt he could not continue. Since his arrival the Board had sent out only three missionaries—Lavinia Johnson, Laura Bush, and John L. Morris.* Miss Johnson and Morris were Negroes. On January 7, 1848, he sailed for home, explaining so brief a tenure by “febleness of body and inability to work in the Africa climate.”⁶

The only white missionaries now remaining were Ann Wilkins and her assistant, Laura Brush. Candor obliged Benham to confess in his final report that Garrettson, the once hopeful station in the interior among the Queah, had little more than a nominal existence; that wars and rumors of wars threatened to break up the Mount Andrew Gola mission; that the people of Mount Hall, a fairly new center, objected to being put on a Circuit and would not cooperate; and that in certain areas Mohammedanism was a strong competitor with Christianity and “more formidable than heathenism itself.” Apart from these hard facts, he could also report the opening of new centers: Lanesborough on the Mecklin River (a branch of the St. John) among the Bassas; Jamaica, or Little Cape Mount,† on the Loffa River; and Mesurado (St. Paul) River Circuit, in the Vai and Dey territory extending about twenty miles along the river from its mouth.

Benham left behind him twenty appointments‡ counting the schools; an increased number in Society, almost one thousand, and seventeen Local Preachers. Almost $250. had been raised for the support of missions. In line with the wishes of the Missionary Society several day schools among the colonists had been discontinued in an effort to concentrate on native work. The cry was for more men, six as a minimum merely to cover the present endeavors, and a dozen if the calls from the interior were to be answered.⁷

Liberia itself was developing as a nation. A constitution on the United States pattern was approved on July 26, 1847, a government organized, and the former governor of the colony, Joseph J. Roberts, elected president. By coincidence, the return home of Benham and the failure of the Missionary Society to find a successor for him placed the Liberian Church in the same position of autonomy as the nation. Necessity dictated the decision of Bishop Beverly Waugh, who was in charge of foreign missions, to divide the mission into three Presiding Elders' Districts, and thus distribute the responsibility for operation. The Society stated that “if our coloured brethren shall show themselves competent to the task of managing, successfully, the spiritual and financial interests of these missions, to the satisfaction of the Board and the authorities of the Church, it will be a matter of rejoicing to all. It will, indeed, be a gratifying consummation of hopes long entertained, and devoutly cherished.”⁸

* Lavinia Johnson probably arrived about the same time as Benham. She went to the U.S. for several months' recuperation in 1846 and returned to Liberia with Laura Brush in 1847. John L. Morris was sent in 1846. His case was exceptional. He was a slave whose freedom was purchased, on approval of the Board, for $700.—the money raised by “voluntary subscription.”—Minutes, B.M., IV, 487; Twenty-eighth Ann. Rep., M.S. (1846-47), pp. 16, 21.

† This center was so successful that when Bargay, the king, learned that the preacher was to be sent elsewhere, he sent this message by a missionary: “Tell your father I am hungry for a missionary.”—Twenty-ninth Ann. Rep., M.S. (1847), p. 21.

‡ Monrovia and Krutown Chapel, St. Paul River Circuit, Millsburg and White Plains, Roberts-ville, Heddington, Mount Andrew, Mesurado Circuit, Marshall, Mount Hall, Grand Bassa Circuit, Lanesborough, Greenville, Blue Barre, Harper, Barrakka, Gillibo, Edina, Cape Mount.—Ibid., pp. 27 f.

The Districts formed—Monrovia, with seven stations, Bassa, with two, and Cape Palmas, with five—became a permanent feature. Two men, who later were to become Bishops, were named Presiding Elders, Francis Burns for Cape Palmas, John W. Roberts for Monrovia. James S. Payne, later president of the republic for two terms, headed the third District. However, the Board became doubtful about placing responsibility wholly in the hands of Liberians, and shortly began another search for a Superintendent. N. S. Bastion, of the Illinois Conference, was secured for the position and arrived at Monrovia on September 19, 1849, fifty days after sailing from Baltimore.

Bastion was a man of courage and vision. His reactions were optimistic. He wrote of the work around Monrovia as being “in a state of great prosperity,” enjoying “a very extraordinary outpouring of the Spirit of God.”⁹ The stations “up the river” reported “unusual times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord,” with one exception where the attitude of hostile tribes had made continuance impossible. He laid before the Board what he visualized as the crying need:

It appears plain to my mind, that nothing can now retard the progress of our missions in this land, unless it be the want of a good high school, in which to rear up an abundant supply of well qualified teachers to supply, as they shall rapidly increase in number, all our schools.¹⁰

Fired by this idea, he proceeded on his own to make plans for the resuscitation of Monrovia Seminary, then lying in ruins. Since the death of Williams, and the brief terms of his successors, the seminary had been closed. The buildings were poor; furthermore, they hardly allowed for growth and expansion. A new small, inexpensive building might be put up, he explained, but in Liberia’s moist climate deterioration would soon make costly repairs necessary. He estimated the price of a building worthy of the project, and sought out ways to finance it. Once calculated, he gave orders for the purchase of an adjoining piece of property, planned a new building which was to be “probably the most capacious and substantial edifice in the republic,” let the contract at $7,500. (later raised to $10,000.) and built “a brick academy building . . . at Millsburg, for females, at a cost of $4,000.” As he later wrote to the Board, in a closely reckoned statement, the expense could be covered by the trimming of the appropriations for the next two years, the abandonment of the Gola mission which he felt was wasteful expenditure, and the suspension of Africa’s Luminary which had very few subscribers. He had looked to the members of the Conference and to the Monrovia Society for aid, and they had paid in nearly $1,000. The receipt of his letter in New York caused consternation among the authorities. The Africa Committee recommended immediate action to "stay proceedings in the Seminary enterprise," ordered him to "waive his contemplated journey to England in its behalf," and to "report . . . the grounds & reasons of this extraordinary movement." This was on January 16, 1850, and on the next day the Board expressed its judgment to the Bishop in charge of foreign missions "that Brother Bastion should be recalled." By July he was back in the States, alone—for he had left his wife and child buried in Africa.¹¹ His report to the Board, considering the circumstances, was surprisingly well received, all his bills were ordered paid, and due recognition was given to his "conviction of the extreme necessities of the case," though doubts were shown that these necessities required such haste "as to warrant the prosecution of the enterprise in an informal and unauthorized way." He was fully acquitted of "intentional wrong in the case."¹²

This distressing episode brought to an end the system of white superintendency in Liberia. Much can be said for Bastion. He seems to have stiffened procedures in respect to the keeping of accurate and up-to-date records and in addition to such administration to have given thought to basic problems growing out of the social institutions of the Africans which stood in the way of the Gospel. Not until the advent of William Taylor in Africa was there again a discernible plan developed for proceeding toward definite ends.

While Bastion's approach to Liberia's need had been found unacceptable, the Board could not deny that it was burdened with the practical failure of the work. At the time of his appointment, what almost amounted to despondency was felt at headquarters. To the Church at large it had announced that the frequent and unavoidable changes in the superintendency of this mission, have seriously militated against its prosperity. Not more than one, of all those who have occupied this post, has been able to live, and remain long enough in the country to make himself thoroughly acquainted with the actual state of all the mission stations, or to devise and execute the most efficient plans for the prosecution of our missionary work in this interesting field. . . .

. . . But it is a question demanding the most rigid examination, whether our efforts have not been too generally confined to the colonists, to the neglect of the native tribes among and around them? It is also a subject worthy of the most careful inquiry, whether sufficient attention has been paid to the interests of education in that country? . . .

. . . Quite a number of our most hopeful converts have been enticed away from our native stations, and have gone back to the bush, where they have soon relapsed into their superstitious customs and heathen practices. It makes the heart sick to reflect upon the number of cases of this kind. . . .

. . . Whatever may have been the cause, our missionaries in Africa have not, except in a few instances, extended their labours far beyond the limits of civilization. We are strongly inclined to think this policy has been a mistaken one; and it is by no means improbable, that some change in the mode of our operations may be deemed advisable.¹³

Besides, the General Conference in 1848 had felt need to admonish the Liberia Mission for its slow development, and suggested a rather rugged procedure to cure its laggardliness. It recommended that the Board of Managers take such steps, by diminishing appropriations or otherwise, as . . . to induce our members there to do what they can for the support of our missionaries, and to fully establish our itinerant system of preaching, that the blessing of the gospel may be more speedily extended to the natives.¹⁴

As viewed by the Church at long distance these criticisms seemed reasonable. Nonetheless, there were factors on the field which did offer some explanation for the slight progress, and could only be appreciated by those who experienced them. A major problem completely beyond control was dealing with the restless, nomadic habits of the Africans. "Fear of the Congos," the unpredictable moves of a king, the necessity of moving on when trade slackened, sporadic revivals of the slave trade, primitive warfare for the sake of captives were all contributing to the breaking up of mission centers. Ill health was itself accountable for much undoing of work.¹⁵ Even the successful stabilizing of his health did not insure that a missionary could keep from becoming irritable and nervous. Ann Wilkins, hardy soul that she was, wrote:

Perhaps you think sickness is a great trial; but, ah! it is one of the mildest of my trials here. There are those in my every-day duties which require the patience of Job, the meekness of Moses, and the wisdom of Daniel or Solomon. Besides these, is the horrid alarm of war, that sometimes comes suddenly, when we have been dwelling in peace and quietness for some months, and shakes my whole nervous system with an awful terror . . .¹⁶

Apparently, complaints reached the New York office as to the temperamental behavior of the Liberia missionaries. The Board of Managers believed them to have some truth, and, when ready to commission Bastion, Bishop Morris had written as instructions:

The brethren at Liberia as we are told, think that our white superintend's [sic] have not allways [sic] been sufficiently cautious and forbearing in their manner of intercourse among them. It may be that the brethren there having become as free and independent as we are here claim more respect than the Superintendents thought them entitled to, and it is also possible that the Diseases of that climate may so affect the white mans Constitution as to produce peevishness of which he is not fully conscios in his debilitated state. However these things may be in reality our brethern [sic] complain as we learn that some if not all of our white American Superintendents have been crabbed among them.¹⁷

The Missionary Society had some justification in singling out the failure of the schools. Education as a prime means of evangelism was at a low ebb in Liberia. Except for the efforts made to operate an academy of high level for girls, a practical school in manual techniques for boys, and another academic school for missionary potential, there was no systematic plan for either religious or secular instruction. However, there were many hindrances. One was lack of teachers. As for schools for "native" children, they came and went, both the schools and children. Even if retained through a given course pupils reverted to their former way of life. There was not enough incentive to study from either the child's or the parents' viewpoint. And school routine once interrupted by illness of an instructor or the need to halt for more pressing matters of missionary work meant the scattering of the group for good. As for practical training for either boys or girls, apart from recommending in 1846 that religious teaching be connected "as far as practicable with agriculture and the arts," neither encouragement nor command seems to have been given. In 1849 the Board, however, suggested a scheme to enlist promising native youths and prepare them in America for future service to their home church. An appropriation of $1,500. was made for that purpose in 1851. For several years it was put in practice, with some success, though it could only be a drop in the bucket toward meeting needs. Sunday schools were attempted. By 1848 there were five in Harper; at the two other largest towns two or three, and one each in most of the other appointments, with a membership of from fourteen to 156.¹⁸

A LEADERLESS MISSION

After Bastion's departure, general supervision fell once again upon the Presiding Elders. For awhile, the issue was left unresolved. Pros and cons of appointing another white Superintendent were debated in the Church journals.* G. F. Cox, a brother of Melville B. Cox, wrote a persuasive letter calling attention to existing leadership under such men as Roberts, A. D. Williams, and Burns, and asserted that all they needed was "authority, occasional counsel, . . . pecuniary aid, which must be called for for fifty years to come . . . and a warm and generous heart preserved to them in America." W. H. Payne, brother of James S. Payne, saw inherent ability in African youth, and a desire on the part of the older generation to give their children the best available education, but declared that the mission was making bricks without straw, lacking books and apparatus of the most elementary kind.

The 1852 General Conference decided that the problem of future administration must be grappled with. In the Liberia Conference of that year, as well as in the General Conference, various proposals were examined: episcopal powers for the Church in Liberia, a separate organization of that Church, annual visitations by American Bishops, a Missionary Bishop for Africa. These, after much discussion back and forth, were cut down to the designation of Bishop Scott to visit and report on the situation.

* The question of white people in Liberia was one of the burning issues until Taylor's time. Benham's last comment had been that while whites might manage to live in Africa "they cannot be depended upon for much labor." (Twenty-ninth Ann. Rep., M.S. [1847-48], p. 26.) In 1852 Dr. Bond spoke very strongly against sending any more white missionaries to the field, considering it "extremely hazardous." Bishop Willis J. King, looking back on this opinion, comments that the attitude "practically sounded the death knell of Methodist interest in Liberia for nearly a half century." In reflecting on the long tenure of Ann Wilkins, he was led to remark that it was the male missionaries who "were realistic and returned to the safety of the homeland; the female missionaries, in each instance" who "decided to remain at their posts . . . One cannot blame the realists, but one must recognize the faith and courage of the idealists."—"History of the Methodist Church Mission in Liberia," mimeographed ms., in Board of Missions Library, pp. 25, 26.

The Bishop left Baltimore in November, 1852. He spent two months in Liberia, studying the mission work and preaching, and making broad observations and recommendations. His report was full and detailed and indicated a sympathetic and understanding attitude toward the many problems faced. The linguistic problem alone he thought formidable, not to mention the reduction into writing of the innumerable dialects. It was difficult enough even to persuade the people to listen to preaching in their own tongue. Under the vicious system of "dashes" in order merely to gain a hearing, and for acceptance and to continue work, a permanent conversion could never be counted on. There was also the "hydra-headed monster" of polygamy, with each man having as many wives as he could afford to buy, these constituting his wealth. When it was suggested that he should give up all but one, the reply was, "Me send woman away?—where she go to?—what she do?" to which an answer was by no means easy. Bishop Scott declared that the whole social organization of the native people would have to be "upturned from the very foundation." *

The Bishop dealt at some length on two problems acute in Liberia at that time, the evils of missionary trading and of holding civil office. He also made a study of the claim that missionary salaries were too high, and came to the conclusion that they were not, that it cost more to live in Monrovia than in any large American city, and instead of missionaries receiving subsidiary aid from their people they often had to render it. Moreover, it was not possible to confine themselves to the products of the country.¹⁹

Bishop Scott made a number of administrative arrangements of a more or less routine nature, but in his plan for the education of Negro children he broke new ground. Finding that schools established in or near towns had "proved an almost total failure," partly because parents did not allow children to remain long enough even to learn to read, and partly because nearness to parents, friends, and old associations tended to counteract the influence of teachers, he suggested an appropriation to each Presiding Elder's District sufficient to pay the board of not more than five children in the home of each married preacher. The preacher was to have the entire control and management of these children for not less than four years, to see that they were educated in his home if no suitable school was within reach, and to be responsible to the Presiding Elder, who had to report to the Conference, for their proper care. The plan also provided that "as large a proportion of girls as practicable, not exceeding half the number," should be thus cared for. The Conference agreed to initiate his proposed scheme for in-residence education. For years following, this system was known as the "Scott schools."²⁰

* Scott wrote that the people "go almost stark naked, and they love to go so—and are not abashed in the presence of people better dressed; they eat with their hands, and dip, and pull, and tear, with as little ceremony and as little decency as monkeys, and they love to eat so; they sleep on the bare ground, or on mats spread on the ground, and they love to sleep so; the men hunt or fish, or lounge about their huts, and smoke their pipes, and chat, and sleep, while their wives, alias their slaves, tend and cut and house their rice—cut and carry home their wood—make their fires, fetch their water, get out their rice, and prepare their 'chop,'—and all, even the women, love to have it so." As they say, "this be countryman's fash." They seem incapable of conceiving that your fash is better than theirs, or that theirs is at all defective."—In Thirty-fifth Ann. Rep., M.S. (1853), p. 108.

The Bishop also filled the important function of ordination during his visit, for the first time in Liberia's history raising to the regular ministry a number of Africa's sons on their own soil. This was the first time that any Protestant ordination had taken place in that country. Eleven men were ordained as deacons, and eight as elders. He reorganized the work into four Districts—the newest one, Sino—having a total of sixteen appointments.*

While not all of Liberia's problems were dealt with, to be sure, the visit of Bishop Scott served in large part to revitalize the work and hearten the workers. The Board next year (1854) gave further encouragement by making an appropriation of $32,957., which represented more than forty per cent of the total foreign missionary appropriation for that year. For five years (1853-57) the Liberia Conference was allowed self-administration, though ostensibly for four years under the supervision of Bishop Scott and for the fifth year of Bishops Scott and Janes. Each year Francis Burns received instructions to sit with the Conference as president pro tem. Inasmuch as he submitted detailed, orderly, and well-written annual reports to the Board and kept up a regular correspondence, he was in actuality exercising the role of Superintendent without the title and power. Judging by his reports of mission centers and of the program, Liberia moved along at least as well as it had under its earlier white Superintendents. Proportionately, the number of new places entered and the number going into decline remained about the same and for the same reasons. He kept awake to possibilities for extension of the work, although he knew that the shortage of workers would prevent an effective manning of any new station. A few new mission stations, nevertheless, were established during these years.† When the area around Cape Mount—to the northwest of Monrovia—came into the possession of Liberia, Burns himself made a trip to survey the land and interview the chiefs. Years before an attempt had been made unsuccessfully to establish a mission in this

* The appointments in 1853 were: Mesurado District: (1) Monrovia; (2) Lower Caldwell and New Georgia Circuit; (3) Upper Caldwell, Clay Ashland, and Louisiana Circuit; (4) Millsburg and White Plains, embracing Robertsville, Heddington, and Jallah Fays; (5) Marshall Circuit; (6) Robertsport. Grand Bassa District: (1) Edina and Lanesborough Circuit; (2) Buchanan, embracing Fishtown and Peter Harris's; (3) Lower and Upper Bexley; (4) New Cess. Sino District: (1) Greenville, embracing Blue Barre and Fishtown; (2) Louisiana, Lower and Upper Reedsville, and King George's; (3) Lexington and Farmersville, embracing Soldier's, King's, and Governor Pine's. Cape Palmas District: (1) Mount Emory Circuit; Gillibo and Sardakka; (2) Barrakka and Quidekah. —Gen'l Minutes, 1853, p. 313.

† The native missions in existence at the time were among the Pessahs along the St. Paul River; the Bassas on the Borlor River; the Krus, in the Sino River area; and the Grebos where schools had earlier been established, near Harper. The Grebos were receiving instruction from one of their own converts, a released slave captive, John C. Lowrie. The new stations were: Louisiana, Lexington, and Farmersville in the Sino District (1853); Bluntsville, Sino District (1855); and Careysburg, Monrovia District (1858).

locale, but the situation was now altered, especially since the slave-trading of the area had been crushed and tribes of the backlands, Deys and Vais, felt free to settle on the coastline. As an outcome of the visit, Daniel Ware of the Conference volunteered to go to the Vais, and soon thereafter took his wife and family into the midst of the tribe to make their home.

By and large, education probably got its greatest stimulus during these years, in good part owing to the inducements of the Missionary Society. Apart from the "Scott schools," the Board paid the salaries of teachers of the day schools, which in 1857 numbered over twenty. A number of boarding students at these schools were also supported at the Society's expense. In 1853 there were five boys and four girls at Monrovia Seminary preparing in accordance with the plan agreed upon, for education in America. At the same time the Board paid for the preparation in the United States of Miss L. E. Hazard as a teacher for the Girls' Academy at Millsburg. Two young men were also being given college educations. In order to increase the number of girls and guarantee their freedom as adults the Board decided to provide parents with indentures equal to dowries, to be registered in Liberian courts.²¹

As for institutions, the Board cooperated with the Conference in meeting the cost of construction of new buildings—having recovered from the shock of Bastion's bold program. In 1850 it advanced funds for a new structure at White Plains, and in 1854 supplied pre-cut materials for a new seminary at Harper.

By Bishop Scott's advice White Plains Manual Labor School was re-organized and separated from the pastoral charge. A lay person, A. B. Hooper, experienced in such lines of work, was given oversight. As a farmer, he soon had a good agricultural department established and a farm growing rice, cassava, and vegetables.

In 1852 James W. Horne was obtained by the Society as principal of Monrovia Academy, "probably the finest in the republic." The school had both regular and college departments. He filled the position with distinction but health finally forced him to withdraw in 1857. The school then fell temporarily into the hands of Daniel Ware of the Conference, who merely conducted classes.

The Cape Palmas (Harper) Seminary was under construction in 1854 and in the same year three young women, Maria E. B. Staunton, Margaret Kilpatrick, and Caroline M. Brown were sent out as instructors. While waiting for completion of the building the teachers assisted at Millsburg.

To the Millsburg school the Board also sent other assistants, Negro women. Ill health continued to defeat the purposes and hard efforts of recruitment for the school. Miss Sarah M. Reynolds, "educated in a pious family in Western New York, in view of service in Africa," arrived in 1853, and died after two years' service. Miss Staunton, her colaborer, died in 1856.

Ann Wilkins was forced to withdraw in 1856 after giving twenty years to her school, but her decision was delayed too long. In November of the following year, in America, she departed this life. Under the changed circumstances, Miss Kilpatrick remained in charge at Millsburg.²²

From time to time the Board also recruited American Negro preachers and others to serve as Local Preachers and assistants.* Some recruits were also enlisted within Liberia. In the Conference, however, there was no drive, no zest for the task, and little vision. Bishop Scott at the time of his visit had felt called upon to admonish the members on their wish for a discontinuance of the itinerancy in favor of settled work. Despite the Bishop's justification of the slowness of the work, already mentioned, the Board sensed, doubtless rightly, that the fire of inspiration was lacking and while ordinary good work was being done much more might be done, especially in self-support.

THE LIBERIAN EPISCOPACY (1858-76)

General Conference in 1856, as we have seen,† settled upon the election of a Missionary Bishop for Liberia, the necessary Disciplinary change being subject to the approval of the Annual Conferences. In anticipation of their approval, it further decided to permit the Liberia Conference to elect its own Bishop instead of following the usual procedure. There was but one natural choice that Liberia could make—Francis Burns.‡ Besides having served as president of the Conference annually and as liaison between the Conference and the Missionary Society, he had gained experience as sometime principal of Monrovia Seminary, editor of Africa's Luminary, and also of the Conference journal. Everything having proceeded as hoped for in the Annual Conferences, Burns was duly consecrated Bishop at the hands of Bishops Janes and Baker on October 14, 1858, at the Genesee Conference.²³

Bishop Burns immediately returned to Liberia. His new responsibilities did

* While the records are far from dependable or complete, lists of names did appear annually and we base our statement on them, risking some duplication since initials often vary. Those admitted into full Conference membership from 1844 through 1855: N. S. Bastion, James Byrd; 1853, John Thompson, W. J. Tyler, Charles A. Pitman; 1854, W. P. Kennedy, Sr., Othello Richards, H. H. Whitfield; 1855, Philip Coker, Philip Gross, W. B. Montgomery. Those admitted on trial, 1844-55: 1851, Plato Hutt; 1852, E. D. Taylor; 1854, Edmund W. Diggs. The list of laymen received during the period is uncertain. The following names appear in the records: James Brown, J. H. Burns, John A. Clarke, C. Douglass, N. W. Finley, H. R. Gibson, R. Gross, C. Harris, S. D. Herring, W. W. Johnson, G. Loyd, D. C. McFarland, W. Russel, C. H. B. Scotland, G. L. Seymour, A. H. Strauss, F. J. Thompson, W. H. Urbeck, S. B. Webster.

† See p. 176.

‡ For biography of Francis Burns see p. 176*n*. During the years of his indenture he was permitted to attend school during the winter season. When called to preach his education was insufficient, and there appeared to be no field in which he might labor. When the way opened, however, he felt unwilling to enter it; but possessing an unquenchable thirst for knowledge, he employed all his efforts to obtain an education. He was advised by David Terry to take a special course of study in preparation for missionary service in Liberia. In 1834 it was arranged that he should accompany John Seys to Liberia as a missionary teacher. He served efficiently as a teacher in Monrovia Seminary. An acquaintance said that he had earned the affection and respect of all who came to know him, and especially of those privileged to an intimate association with him; that his manner was exceedingly pleasant, and his spirit as kind, sweet, and good as ever beamed from human heart or disposition. He was married to Miss Louisa E. Hazard, who had been educated in the United States by the Board as a teacher for the Girls' Academy at Millsburg. In accordance with his expressed wish his body was returned from Baltimore to Liberia for burial.—Matthew Simpson, Ed., Cyclopaedia of Methodism, pp. 147 f.; Missionary Advocate, XXIII (1868), 1 (Jan. 21), 76.

not materially differ from those he had been carrying as Presiding Elder since 1849, but he was no longer under District limitations. As always, the two main considerations he faced were the raising up of more preachers and assistants, which had to be accomplished through a more effectual education system, and the extension of the Conference work beyond the Americo-Liberians to the masses of Africans themselves. It goes without saying that the small budget for Liberia did not make possible extensive changes. Increased self-support alone could free funds. Burns recognized the nature of his problems, and felt the frustration of a man of vision fighting against almost impossible odds. To the Board he continually wrote, presenting his ideas, begging for assistance. He was a strong believer in education and requested an appropriation for a Conference library. Almost as soon as he undertook his new responsibilities (1859) he published a newspaper, the Liberia Christian Advocate. In 1861 he called for funds for all phases of the work.* At the same time he recognized that the capacity for leadership of missionary personnel was of greater importance. Writing to the Society that year, he said:

You send money freely enough but . . . men and women of the right stamp are in higher demand with us than money. . . . One man with the right ring in him will sustain and carry forward successfully a heavier work than half a dozen sleepy, worn-out timid fellows, and with much less expense. To employ the latter, if the former can be had at any price, is working in the face of economy and progress too.²⁴

There is no doubt that the small number of Conference members—only eighteen—could hardly be spared from their tasks of maintaining the established work. They had to be inspired to do this and undertake more as well. Under his urgings, during his first year, the Bishop saw actual beginnings made at two or three locations. He told his fellow preachers that such undertakings were “a condition of both our spiritual life and growing usefulness. If we stay here we die.”²⁵

A mission for the Golas, among whom unsuccessful efforts had been made previously at Morrisburg and Mount Andrew, was projected in 1860, fifty miles beyond Careysburg, which was located fifty miles inland. Tragically, such interior work was held up “for want of funds,” as also the “Threo and Little Bassa Missions” that same year.

Two new missions among natives were authorized by the following Conference, one among the Queah, and the second in the Kru country. The Queah mission became possible through the admission on trial of a member of the tribe, Charles A. Pitman. But at the end of 1864 the Board still indicated its regret that Liberian ministers were “better prepared and more successful as pastors of established Churches in settled communities than as pioneers carrying the Gospel into the dark and dreary regions adjacent to them, and in which heathenism, in its worst forms and fruits, reigns and revels.”²⁶

* In 1861 Burns urged Secretary Reid to help secure an endowed chair in theology at the government's Liberia College in order to continue ministerial training.—Francis Burns to J. M. Reid, May 6, 1861.

As for the educational problem the blight had not been removed. In 1861 the Missionary Society published the report that all three high schools were closed “for want of proper teachers” with the result that “our most promising youth have gone into schools belonging to other Churches.” Monrovia was reopened the next year with the trial experiment of a native principal, W. F. Burns, a young man who had been educated in America at the Board’s expense, but he remained for only a short time. Following the departure of Ann Wilkins, the girls’ school had been transferred across the river to White Plains. However, during the furlough of Miss Kilpatrick in 1860 in America the school lost ground under Nathan E. Dixon, her assistant, and its boarding department was discontinued. The White Plains Manual Labor School having waited in vain for a principal had been closed in 1860. Cape Palmas Seminary had been kept open under J. S. Payne and his wife until 1857, and then by H. R. Gibson, who had assisted Horne, and Sarah Simpson, another Negro, a Board missionary. Mrs. Simpson took the responsibility for the primary department. Some training was continued in the Scott schools—some thirty-two in number—but on account of the initial over-enthusiasm for the scheme some disappointment was registered. During this period the Board continued its financial aid in the form of subsidizing education, and by paying the board of outstanding students to be trained as teachers and preachers.²⁷ Burns realized how difficult it was for the Board to find heads for the seminaries and knew that eventually such leadership must be supplied by the Liberians themselves. By means of reducing his meager budget, he proposed to the Society in New York that $2,000. be deducted annually for the express purpose of educating a half dozen Liberians of promise in United States colleges—an extension of the earlier plan.²⁸

There was little in the bleak picture of these years to give encouragement. The appointments actually diminished in number, several stations having failed for one reason or another, with few new places added. Death continued to remove the older and more valuable, experienced workers,* and as yet few recruits were coming from the schools or the mission itself. What discouragement must have been felt when the number of Conference members never seemed to increase! At the 1861 session, for instance, five were received, but “the same number [were] placed on the superannuated list.”²⁹

The greatest blow to Conference morale came with Burns’ failure of health in 1862. A quick trip to the United States in the spring of the following year did not restore his strength, and in April he expired in Baltimore. “Thus ended the career of the man," writes Bishop Willis J. King, "who was probably the greatest leader yet produced by the Methodist Church in Liberia."³⁰ In a resolution passed by the Board on June 17 it was stated: "Seldom has the Board been favored with more lucid, comprehensive and business like documents from any Superintendent of any of the Missions under our care."³¹

* Among the more important members who had died were Elijah Johnson (1849), James R. Moore and William H. Payne (1852), Daniel Ware, Sr. (1856), John L. Morris (1858), A. D. Williams (1860), and Samuel F. Williams (1861).

The field was again without episcopal leadership. When General Conference assembled in 1864 it was faced anew with the administration of Liberia. Although the initial edge of enthusiasm for a native Bishop had been dulled, the Church's governing body provided for the election of another Missionary Bishop for Liberia. In January, 1866, the Conference chose its one remaining outstanding leader, J. W. Roberts, who had been unofficially in charge since Burns' death. On June 20, 1866, in St. Paul's Church in New York City, this brother of the first president of the Liberia Republic was consecrated to the episcopacy. "With commendable zeal Bishop Roberts [then] hastened back to his mission, and entered on his work."³²

While "progress" in the work as most other foreign missions could report it could not be claimed for Liberia, yet withal the state of the Church was considered good, and Roberts clearly indicated satisfaction with it. He reported an increase in 1866 to 249 native members, and 209 native probationers. The total membership, including probationers, was 1,809. An increase in the depth and tone of piety among both preachers and people was evident. "At almost every point within the bounds of the Conference the Lord has been gracious in the outpouring of the Holy Spirit, in quickening the Societies, and in the conversion of souls," he wrote in 1869.³³ Although there were two viewpoints on what it meant to extend the work to the natives of the interior—for the Board all Africa lay open to evangelism, and to the Liberian colonists only fifty-mile marches beyond the border of civilization—the limited realists on the field felt that they were doing their best. "When it is understood," wrote Roberts to headquarters in 1866, "that Mount Holly [Mt. Olive], Durbinville, Sinou Mission, Queah Mission, Ammons[ville] Station, Vey and Golah Missions, are directly among the natives, separate and distinct from the civilized settlements, and that members of the Conference are laboring at nearly every one of these points, the impression which seemingly has obtained, that our native brethren are neglected by us, will be removed."³⁴ All told, several tribes were actually being approached, if only on a small scale, which was a new development.* Besides the tribes he referred to, the Grebos and the Krus were being reached at two or three different places. In the light of what such missions demanded—an ability to communicate in another language, willingness to cope with and not become discouraged by the vagaries of a primitive people; isolation from one's family and no support to speak of—Liberia was probably doing the best of which she was capable. There was always the shortage of men, and death more than once claimed the volunteer* who projected a trek into the interior. There was, however, a decrease in Conference membership. Those available had to spread their ministry further than ever. Words of complaint grated harshly on these men's ears. Roberts, piqued by murmurings, had commented in his official report for 1864:

* A new center of about sixty people had been opened circa 1863 at Mount Olive. It was on the Marshall Circuit, some twelve miles inland beyond that town. The same year Durbin Station was opened on the Mecklin River as part of the Edina Circuit, to be developed into a native center, but the preacher died shortly afterward.—Forty-seventh Ann. Rep., M.S. (1865), pp. 88, 90 f., 91.

If some of us were followed by night and by day to various points of our work, under the blighting rays of a tropical sun, and heavy dews and rain, I am sanguine some who now question would exercise sympathy instead of censure.³⁵

In 1870 Bishop Roberts made a tour of the Bassa District, accompanied by J. H. Deputie, whom he considered one of his best men. Something of the pioneer American Methodist experience was reflected in his account:

To sit in a 'dug-out,' (canoe,) twenty inches wide, four or five days successively, propelled by hand-paddles at the rate of three or four miles an hour, then change to walking over prairie lands and the heavy sands of a sea-beach, unfavorably compares with the ease and comfort of steamboat and railway locomotion.

The trip was worth the discomfort, for it reassured him concerning the general state of the work at the points he visited—Buchanan (Grand Bassa), Ammonsville Station on the St. Paul River, Marshall, Mount Olive, Durbinville, Edina, and Bexley.³⁶

The continuing failure to establish a school system which would produce future workers constituted one of the chief drawbacks to the mission's growth. The record of day schools in continuous operation during Bishop Roberts' administration was indeed poor, and the other institutions were not prospering either.†

Since the schools were producing almost no recruits, few men were received into Conference from the field. Roberts' son joined the ranks and doubtless a few others raised in Christian homes, and a few who had been selected and supported by the General Missionary Committee in New York for this specific purpose, but the United States had to continue to be the mainstay for missionary personnel.‡

* For example, Beverly R. Wilson who served as an adviser (1864); a "Brother Wilkinson" (1864); and J. D. Holly (1866).

† From 1866 to 1877 the total number of schools never rose beyond fifteen from the initial figure of ten. At different times a school would be reported as suspended. At its peak number there were, all told, only about 450 students (1872 statistics). The seminary at Monrovia had declined in influence by 1865. The White Plains Girls' Seminary was still open in 1865 under Nathan E. Dixon but described as not up to old standards. The Cape Palmas Seminary alone was "in good condition," in the hands of J. A. Tuning from the Monrovia Seminary. But in 1876 it was referred to as a "seminary day school" and had only sixty students.

‡ The annual report for Liberia, 1864, states: "Our chief supply of men for the work in Liberia has come from America." (Forty-sixth Ann. Rep. M.S. [1864], p. 84.) The Minutes are not available for every year of the period, and in many cases are incomplete. Twenty-six men received into Conference membership during 1856-75 were: 1856, Samuel F. Williams; 1859, Thomas Fuller, Nasey D. Russ; 1860, Daniel Ware, Jr.; 1861, Charles A. Pitman, Thomas E. Dillon, John C. Lowrie, James Thompson; 1864, J. D. Holly, Jefferson Campbell, Henry E. Fuller; 1865, J. H. Deputie; 1867, James R. Moore; 1868, J. M. Montgomery; 1869, W. P. Kennedy, Jr., Lewis R. Roberts; 1870, Hardy Ryan; 1871, Horatio B. Capehart; 1872, Charles H. Harmon, George J.

With illness and death ever taking their toll, it is understandable that the Conference membership stood at only twenty in 1877, only three more than a decade earlier. Church membership did increase, though at a snail's pace, until it passed the two thousand mark in 1875, with thirty-three churches open for services.

The Liberia Conference in 1875 was scheduled to meet at Greenville on January 28. Roberts came to Monrovia early in the month and hired a boat to take members down the coast to the appointed town. The vessel, however, was stranded, and the session was transferred to Monrovia.

The bishop had been for months in failing health, and by the time conference convened he was unable to meet with them, and two days afterward . . . he departed in holy peace, with the entire conference at his bedside.³⁷

By and large, Roberts did well. More than once, a feeling of hope and trust in him could be read in the Annual Reports. During his administration, Liberia had been granted, along with other Mission Conferences in 1868, full status as an Annual Conference.

At the beginning of 1876 the Conference had five Districts, with a total of twenty-one appointments.*

BISHOP HAVEN'S VISIT AND CONFERENCE MATURITY

The question of choosing a successor for Bishop Roberts came before the 1876 General Conference. The Bishops, in their address, as earlier noted,[†] held an adverse opinion of Liberia's development under a continued missionary episcopacy. It appeared to them "that the Church ought to do either more or less for that field" and advised that one of their number make a tour of inspection. Nor were the General Missionary Committee and Board pleased with the condition of the mission. Over the past few years the committee had been decreasing the appropriation. In 1873 the Board had stated:

The policy of the Society for many years past has been one of retrenchment in appropriating for Liberia. After large expenditures, long continued, the return seemed to be discouragingly small. With a whole continent of heathenism behind the Church in Liberia, there seemed to be far too little of missionary enterprise in its members, and but slow approaches were being made toward becoming self-sustaining. Year by year, under these and other dampening influences, the appropriations . . . [had] been reduced, until from some $35,000 they had fallen to $8,500 in currency.³⁸

Hargraves; 1874, J. P. Artis, W. T. Hagau, Joseph Harris, Peter Wright; 1875, Henry W. Lucas, Charles Cummings.

* Monrovia District: (1) Monrovia; (2) Robertsport (Vai); (3) New Georgia and Penqua; (4) Ammonsville (Marbar); (5) Vai Mission. Two of the oldest appointments, Heddington and Robertsville (Queah) had been discontinued as a result of a too rigid itinerant system. St. Paul River District: (1) St. Paul River Circuit; (2) Millsburg and White Plains (reduced to Circuit status); (3) Bensonville and Queah Mission; (4) Arthington. Bassa District: (1) Buchanan; (2) Bexley and Edina Circuit; (3) Mount Olive (Bassa); (4) Marshall; (5) New Hope (Beah); (6) New Cess. Sino District (where the natives were mostly Krus): (1) Greenville; (2) Louisiana and Sino Mission; (3) Lexington; (4) Butaw. Cape Palmas District (work among Grebo natives): (1) Mount Scott and Tuhman Town; (2) Grebo Mission.—Fiftyeighth Ann. Rep. M.S. (1876), p. 35.

[†] See pp. 171-72 for discussion of this decision.

As a result of this general state of mind, no new Bishop was elected. Instead, Bishop Gilbert Haven was commissioned to survey the field and convene the Conference. On December 16, 1876, he arrived in Monrovia for a forty-six-day visit of the country. The Bishop, though a warm friend of the Negro, could be objective and his judgment was critical:

These brethren having enjoyed for twenty years the blessing of a diocesan episcopacy . . . have had one luxury which attends that blessing—plenty of time for every subject to be more than fully considered. . . . Our brethren here have been lapped in foreign benevolence so completely that they are almost like swathed limbs, powerless for use. American prejudice, called conscience, has lavished its abundance upon them. They have never been required to walk alone. The very stationery to supply the secretary has been charged to the Missionary Board. It was so charged this year, as well as the canoe sent out to summon the members to Conference.³⁹

He also found that the cost of traveling from place to place, and the small scale of the work at some points, led the Presiding Elders to settle down as stationed preachers, and the stationed preachers as settled pastors. These faults he condoned somewhat, by adding that the same pampering* given Liberians by the Methodists was also extended by other denominations.

It was time for reform. Under his prodding, the Conference rose to take their responsibilities more seriously.

They responded heartily to the new order, appointed committees on Freedmen's Aid and Church Extension, and other causes that have risen and flourished since they became an episcopal district, set off practically from the rest of the Church. . . . While thus cognizant of the new order of things in the Church in America, they were not negligent of the order demanded for the Church in Liberia. Committees on education, on divorce, on the extension of the work, on temperance, and other such themes . . . created the most enthusiasm and the warmest discussion.⁴⁰

Acting on one of Haven's recommendations the parent Society next year reduced Liberia's appropriation to $5,000. so that the churches at Monrovia, Sino, Bassa, and Harper would be thrown on self-support.

Also as a result of Bishop Haven's visit a plan was again projected to resuscitate Monrovia Seminary, which had been closed since about 1866 for lack of a suitable leader. Royal Jasper Kellogg of the Wyoming Conference was sent out by the Board as principal, as was also "a colored man of classical attainments" to assist him. Further, the Board agreed to furnish the school with books and other equipment. These appointees sailed in April, 1878.

Finally, Haven considered the possibility of beginning a new interior mis-

* Toward the end of Roberts' oversight, one senses in his reports a self-satisfaction with the conduct of the Liberia Conference. It certainly had established a routine existence for itself and less urgency was felt for growth and extension. As a Conference it had settled down and accepted its limitations, depending on funds with which it was supplied. When criticism came from overseas, the sharp reply was: "untie our hands" with money, and then we shall go forth.—Fifty-sixth Ann. Rep., M.S. (1874), p. 46.

sion around Boporo on a large scale, and sent Charles A. Pitman, one of the more adventurous men, to prospect.

The 1877 Annual Conference reported a membership of 2,488 members, the largest ever, and this despite the fact that immigration from America—which brought in Methodists—had almost entirely ceased.

For the next several years the Conference assembled without a Bishop, each time choosing one among their number to preside according to the Discipline. The Districts remained about the same as in the past, as did the appointments, with a few old centers dropped and a large number of new outstations and Circuit points substituted.* The Sino and Bassa Districts alternated in existence, being sometimes combined with other Districts. C. A. Pitman was annually named Presiding Elder of the Monrovia District, Daniel Ware of the St. Paul River District, and C. H. Harmon of the Cape Palmas District.

Through regulation of funds in New York by the General Missionary Committee, as noted, the larger Societies were put on their own resources. The procedure of the committee was unusual and did not leave the churches entirely happy. To a degree petulance played a part, since a feeling of being stepchildren began to grow: no episcopal visit, no Bishop of their own; everywhere increased interest in Africa, but for Liberia constantly reduced appropriations. Meeting in January, 1880, the Conference took "incipient measures toward an independent organization."⁴¹ The step, however, had to be approved by the Church membership, and the Board at home learning of the situation used the time required for polling to explain its policy and allay ruffled feelings. To the relief of both the Board and the Conference the matter was settled by the time of the next session, and the Conference with a little embarrassment tried to dissociate itself from the movement.

Under Kellogg's direction Monrovia Seminary had again become the hope of the Conference. He saw that the building was put in good repair and that the school offered high-level training. Other high schools and those giving practical instruction had long since been discontinued. By 1880, though, Kellogg was back in the United States, and a successor, R. P. Hollett, on his way to replace him.

The 1881 session had a modicum of new life. The Conference itself adopted a plan of assessing the stations in order to sustain the work established. Besides, new native work was recommended—a permanent station in the Vai country on a manual-labor system, new work among the Pessahs and Golas in the Queah region of St. Paul River District, and the reopening of Durbinville in the Bassa District. The interest in native work was doubtless related to the political situation in Liberia at the time. A series of bad wars with independent tribes had led the government to try a policy of conciliation in order eventually to incorporate them within the nation.

* Among the new places were Settra Kru under the native Kru, Charles Cummings; Garraway, Bendu, Hartford, Fortsville, Farmasetta, Bullemtown, and King Joseph's Town.

The previous year the Board had authorized Hollett to close Monrovia Seminary at his discretion and pioneer either the country beyond Liberia, or the Niger and Schadda, or even both regions, as a prospect for "a new Africa mission." He came to the Conference with an account of his explorations and the report he had made on a visit to New York upon their completion. He had chosen the Niger River. From his experience he advised a "system of missions," that is, a chain connecting civilization with the deep hinterland lest the missionary be cut off. He saw serious deterrents to a single mission:

A stranger, attempting to reach the interior, would be subject to repeated detentions by the intermediate tribes, though probably a missionary regularly journeying back and forth would soon be able to avoid them. The repeated subdivision of the tribes makes tribal wars frequent, in which the paths are cut off, and the absence of regularly-executed laws would expose his property to the cupidity of the natives.

The ill-concealed hostility of the Liberian Government, the vicinity of a nominally Christian people of immoral practices, the constant exaction of oppressive "dashes," the unfortunate custom of some of the early missionaries of hiring the natives to attend church and school, the difficulties of transportation, and the unreliability of the promises of native kings, would all increase the barriers in the way of establishing a mission in this part of Africa.⁴²

Nothing further was done. Hollett had intended making a trip into the Mandingo country, also, but the rainy season and bad health, not to mention native wars in progress, made him cancel his plans. He returned home instead, not resuming the seminary principalship.

The death of J. S. Payne occurred during the 1882 session. For two terms he had been president of the republic; for forty years he had served the mission. In 1880 he had been delegate to the General Conference, and he had presided over the last Annual Conference. Others of the early force, the strong, devoted, and capable men, were dropping by the wayside. Charles Cummings and James R. Moore had both died during the year.⁴³ Too few were replacing them—only nineteen ordained men were present in 1882.

St. Paul River District under Daniel Ware surged ahead in an extraordinary fashion in 1883. An out-and-out evangelistic program was conceived at Careysburg and Bensonville.

They . . . banded themselves together as a visiting missionary corps of some twenty-five or thirty, and, as an army terrible with banners, . . . [went] through a scope of country ten or more miles in circuit, visiting towns and villages of Golahs and Pessahs, striking them with terror and awe.

The greegrees and fetish men and women who crowded the services were so moved they laid down their charms and turned to the Gospel.⁴⁴

Such small triumphs cheered the march of the Liberian Church. Giving increased, occasionally by leaps and bounds, as in 1884, when $5,477. (over a previous $399.) was collected for building and improving churches and parsonages; and $1,800. (over an earlier $215.) for clearing old debts.⁴⁵

The Liberia Conference in its own way was now functioning satisfactorily. It was conducting its annual session in a well-regulated fashion, and it was reaching natives, freed captives, and immigrants who settled within the bounds of the republic. Some faithful workers had been raised up. Membership increased. Self-support had been initiated. Temperance was introduced, and greatly advanced through the labors of the well-known Negro evangelist Amanda Smith who began a visit in 1883. While not an inspired work Methodism was at least rooted. Perhaps no future could be expected on a greater scale, but there was no reason to expect retreat either.

A NEW FORCE ENTERS

Bishop Haven's visit to Liberia bore still other fruit besides a revitalization of the Church. Up to this time, the W.F.M.S. had taken no concrete action in extending its ministry to women of the dark continent. The Board had, of course, as has been noted, sent out a number of women from the opening of the mission to 1857, when the sending of white missionaries ceased.*

The W.F.M.S. first considered Africa when an application from the field for "female workers" was received in 1872. Its Committee on New Work favored action "in view of the prospect of interesting and affiliating the African Church in this country." This is significant inasmuch as the recommendation came from Baltimore where relations between Negro and white churches were always under discussion, and where the Negro church was strong.⁴⁶ By 1874 the Society felt the time had come to act, though on a small scale—the support of a native teacher in the Bassa District. The Baltimore Branch undertook this project, appropriating that year $200. for a school in "Bixby" (Bexley).⁴⁷

Correspondence on further needs was begun, also, with the secretary of the Liberia Conference. Nothing more was entered upon until 1877, up to the time Bishop Haven, accompanied by Secretary J. T. Gracey, made his tour. Stirred by a sense of duty, one of the W.F.M.S. members went to consult the returned visitors on what more should be undertaken. A letter, besides, from James H. Deputie of the Conference helped point to the needs. He wrote:

The parent Missionary Society made a failure, in the early days of missions, by not getting girls and training them, in a country like this, where polygamy is practiced to such a fearful extent. The boys we raise will go to their people and to their kin to take their wives To secure a piece of land and establish a

* They were Sophronia Farrington, Ann Wilkins, Laura Brush, Maria E. B. Staunton, Caroline Brown, and Margaret Kilpatrick. Miss Staunton's career was brief. Miss Brown married James S. Payne, outstanding member of Conference, and died a few years later, and Miss Kilpatrick after continual attacks of fever died in New York in 1865.—Frank Mason North, "The Missionary-Minded Women of Methodism," ms., in Board of Missions Library, p. 36.

Home for the education of females, is the thing we greatly need. Let them be placed under the care of a good governess with assistants; let the teachers take the entire control of the children and place them under strict discipline, and the future will tell wonders on the redemption of Africa. To build a house and send out teachers will cost your Society a considerable sum of money, . . . yet I am convinced this is the most efficient plan that can be adopted to bring out beneficial results. Your school at Bexley is doing a good work as far as it goes, and so with all others established on a similar basis; but the great demand just now is training institutions to qualify teachers for the native work.⁴⁸

Whether for financial or other reasons, Deputie's suggestion was not acted upon. What the Society did do was to contemplate the sending of a missionary of its own. At the executive meeting in Minneapolis in 1877, $500. was appropriated for the establishment of work. The next year $1,500. was appropriated provisionally, but still a way did not open. While the women were thus hesitating, the Missionary Society itself settled upon a woman candidate to teach at Monrovia Seminary and arranged for her transportation early in 1879. This was Mary A. Sharpe.* Spurred by this action, the W.F.M.S. concluded that this was more rightly their province and arranged to take the financial responsibility for her support.⁴⁹

Mary Sharpe was a woman of courage and indomitable will, and challenging work was her meat and drink. Not being needed immediately at the seminary she sought out the Krus † in their settlements near Monrovia, and soon had under construction a bamboo church, which was also to serve as a schoolroom. She wrote that although to most people it seemed impossible that the Krus would let their girls come to school they came and continued to come.

Before long, she was on a trip up the Niger to investigate the possibilities of interior work. After going some distance inland, she chose a future site. Writing of the habits of the natives there, she reported: "Polygamy is common; human sacrifices are offered, especially on the death of a leading man; in every town the slaves outnumber the free people, and cannibalism is practiced." Despite their primitive state, she found them friendly, interested in improvement, and desirous of teachers and preachers. She then returned to her station near Monrovia to continue work among the Krus, while hoping for a replacement to free her.⁵⁰

A second W.F.M.S. missionary was sent out in March, 1880. This was

* Mary A. Sharpe (1837-1914) was born in Elmira, N. Y. She was for many years engaged in missionary work among the freedmen. Bishop Gilbert Haven influenced her to go to Liberia. She was sent there by the Board in 1879 and transferred to the Philadelphia Branch of the W.F.M.S. shortly afterward. She worked with the Krus near Monrovia, 1879-83, and built a school and chapel for them. In 1887 she was authorized to build a school on the seminary grounds in Monrovia. For many years she maintained a more or less nominal relationship to organized Methodism in Liberia, but finally withdrew as "she chafed under institutional restraint of any kind." "Although Miss Sharpe was fiercely independent, and for most of her life, unorthodox in her methods of work, she symbolized, in a large way, the type of missionary heroism inspired by Bishop Taylor." She died in Liberia and was buried in Monrovia cemetery, not in the section reserved for missionaries but in a humbler part among her dearly beloved Africans.—W. J. King, op. cit., pp. 54 f.

† For further information on this tribe see pp. 896 f.

Emma Michener,* who was probably as mild in temperament as Mary Sharpe was bold. But her dedication could not have been less, nor her courage. At first, she taught in Monrovia Seminary, but soon transferred to Bassa, eighty miles south along the coast. Two attacks of African fever so debilitated her that for months she was at death's door. She, too, made a trek into the interior, alone, except for her bearers, to seek a site for a mission, swung in a hammock, carried by nude savages through dense forests and thick jungles, or supported on their heads as they wade[d] waist-deep across large rivers; twelve miles from even a civilized Negro, and fifty miles from the only two other white persons in Monrovia, right out among the natives⁵¹

She began a school at Bassa, quickly assembling forty-two children including six boarders. The natives were so pleased to have her with them that they agreed to put up a building without cost to the Society. It was to be ready for use in January of 1882, but on December 11, 1881, she lay dying aboard a steamer bound for Monrovia. Another attack of fever had suddenly seized her. As a means of recovery a sea voyage was undertaken but the trip was useless. So was given another life to Africa's redemption.† Her devoted people wrote twice to the W.F.M.S. begging for another laborer among them, offering the same generous terms of free mission property and building. Unfortunately, the opening was never filled.

In the meanwhile, Mary Sharpe's decided opinions and independent methods were becoming a source of dissatisfaction. Some felt that her endeavors among the Kru would lead to naught because of their unsettled state and wandering proclivities. The Missionary Society did not favor her retention on the field and so the W.F.M.S., after consulting with the Bishops and missionary authorities, decided to recall her at the end of 1883. The Society, however, failed to reckon with Mary Sharpe's independent spirit. The official records concerning her stop with the letter of recall in 1883, but Mary Sharpe went on. Having started work, more or less on her own, she continued it for years. Bishop Haven considered her to be "second to none in ability to organize and carry on mission work successfully." Bishop Taylor organized a church of over twenty Kru men in 1887 who spoke of her as "their heroine missionary."⁵²

The death of Emma Michener ended for the time being the participation of the W.F.M.S. in Africa missions. Perhaps the fact that Bishop Taylor

* Emma Michener (?-1881) was sent to Liberia by the Philadelphia Branch at her own request, after an attempt had been made to persuade her to choose a less rigorous field. She had been a successful teacher at a school for Negro children in Philadelphia, and had also given valuable assistance to the home missionary employed in her city. "Uncomplaining and persevering, systematic and enthusiastic, with great faith and courage, and a strong will, Miss Michener seemed peculiarly qualified by character and discipline for successful work in this difficult field [Liberia]."—Mrs. S. L. Keen, "In Memoriam—Miss Emma Michener," Heathen Woman's Friend, XIII (1882), 9 (March), 200-203.

† Hers was an exceptional kind of faith, a complete surrender of self to what she believed to be the will of God. She had utmost trust in God's design for her life. When shipwrecked on her way to Africa, she faced death without a qualm, telling herself: "I thought God had called me to go to Africa; but if He wants me to go up from a watery bed tonight, all is well."—Frances J. Baker, The Story of The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society . . . , p. 396.

reached the Africa scene about this time and was highly successful in recruiting women may have entered into the decision.

BOPORO MISSION

The thought of Africa's spiritual darkness plagued the Missionary Society. Despite the Board's constant goading of the Conference and its defensive replies, the facts remained unaltered. Since the 1840's Livingstone had been penetrating the deepest mysteries of the continent. He began what was his final expedition in 1866. Five years later Stanley set out on his famous search for him. The world outside was alive with interest and speculation. Other expeditions were being organized, especially by Germans. The last indication the Board had had of Liberia's intention to break through the bounds of civilization had been heard in 1869, and it was only a paper plan. Bishop Roberts wrote at that date:

We have on the ground a young man of respectable literary advantages, a probationer of one year's standing in our Annual Conference, who expresses much anxiety to go out into the interior and labor among the natives. I have determined to send him, believing such a move will meet your approval, to Bofrova [Boporo], the capital of the Condo Country, over one hundred miles distant, to select a mission station, and he will in all probability leave some time in December. He will return and report prospects before a final determination, although I have not the least doubt of his success.⁵³

That the trip was made we have found no record. In any event no action was taken. This would have had little significance if the time had not been otherwise ripe for a great advance.

From Liberia itself came a call to action in 1872, but not from the Conference:

Some most eminent Liberian statesmen and Christians addressed the Board on the subject of missions into the interior, and the General Missionary Committee appropriated $10,000 to begin such a work, but required the money to be administered from . . . [the U.S.], and the work . . . placed under the supervision of Bishop Janes.⁵⁴

The Board replied to Liberia's call that it would do all in its power to open the mission at the earliest day, but at the meeting of the General Missionary Committee the next year Bishop Janes announced he had not found a suitable man for Superintendent and therefore the appropriation was not renewed. There the matter stood until 1876, the Conference in the meantime passing resolutions on the necessity of undertaking such a mission, the desirability of the Board financing a "Missionary Training Institute for Interior Work," and the like, but taking no initiative on their own.

Bishop Haven's visit in 1876-77 became the occasion for making a decisive move. On Haven's motion C. A. Pitman,* the native boy who had made good, was sent into the Boporo country to explore it again, "with a view to re-entering it." † Dr. E. W. Blyden of the Presbyterian Mission, who had made one exploratory trip into the hinterland in 1872, Pitman, and a company of others began the trek. Pitman fulfilled his assignment, making preparation for the establishment of a mission at Boporo itself, a village of fifteen hundred permanently settled inhabitants. "We found the King and people very well disposed toward our mission," Pitman wrote in his diary, "they seemed anxious to have Christian schools in their country." The King of Boatswain, son of the earlier king who had been so cooperative in the mission's early days, and his people had "no sympathies with Mohammedanism, but rather regard[ed] themselves as committed to Christianity by their ancestors, who bound them in their last wills and instructions not to receive Mohammedanism, but to receive, embrace, and foster Christianity."⁵⁵

Men had been found at last, by means of a public notice, to undertake the "Intro-African Mission." Even at the time of reporting C. A. Pitman was serving as Superintendent pro tem. As though providentially, Joel Osgood of the Ohio Conference for years had wanted to go to Africa, at his own expense if need be. He still wanted to go and was still available. The Board obtained passage for him on the Liberia for January 2, 1878. Shortly afterwards, it selected Melville Young Bovard of the South-East Indiana Conference as Superintendent. At its meeting later in the year, the General Missionary Committee appropriated $2,500.

From the start, the mission seemed ill-fated. Old King Jimmy went back on his word and the promised grant of mission premises did not materialize. An open hand for "dashes" nonetheless was only too visible. A contest between integrity and corruption ensued, which ended in an economic boycott of the missionaries. A scourge of smallpox finally drove the two men out of Boporo. After having retreated town by town, Osgood and Bovard paused at Muhlenburg for rest and consideration of the situation. Kellogg also was at Muhlenburg for physical recuperation and joined the men in consultation. It was decided that Bovard go to New York and make a personal report.⁵⁶ Osgood stayed on awaiting final action. For the time being Boporo was abandoned and he used his time to scout for a more receptive town. Numerous requests for schools were presented and numbers of children promised. Fearing bankruptcy, he did not dare to begin even one school

* John Seys, while on a trip to Heddington in 1838 to make a pastoral visit, lost his way and was brought to safety by a little boy of the Aneah tribe. With the consent of the parents, Seys brought the youngster into the mission family at Monrovia, named him Charles A. Pitman, and saw that he received a thorough education. When Seys left the country Pitman came under the guidance of B. R. Wilson and was taught by Ann Wilkins. He was converted as a child and received his first license to preach in 1856. In 1862 he was received as a member of the Conference and served as Presiding Elder for twenty-four years. Over the years he served as minister, educator, captain of the first Liberian volunteer company which he himself organized, member of the national legislature, and judge. He was "one of the greatest orators of [the] Methodist Episcopal pulpit." He died in 1892.—Minutes, Liberia Conference, 1893, pp. 49 ff.

† The Church had tried to found a mission there thirty-nine years earlier. See Vol. I, 337, 339.

before the more urgent demands of establishing a mission center had been met. Eventually he settled upon a site some seventy-five miles from the Liberian border and there engaged in evangelistic work and teaching. In reporting in 1880, Osgood had only the handicaps to relate: minor attacks of illness, and interruptions caused by a raging war. Meanwhile the Board, having heard Bovard's report, decided not to send him back.

Before the conclusion of two more years, Osgood, having been almost fatally stricken with disease, was on his way home. The Society again was faced with defeat. "Experience has forced upon our Society," wrote the Secretaries, "the conclusion that no attempt at interior work is likely to be successful without the employment of larger force in the way of missionary colonization, perhaps by a gradual system of approach." Doubtless influenced by Osgood's account, they concluded that "the unreliability of the different tribal chiefs . . . where no dominant power exists, and the impossibility of protecting . . . a single missionary family or a small missionary property from their rapacity" was too much to overcome. The mission was not resumed. Another large investment had been made for naught.⁵⁷

NEW ERA FOR LIBERIA

When the 1880 General Conference assembled, the exploration and entry of Africa was a live topic. To the Church, Liberia—faltering and without a Bishop—was very much a problem. Despite the fact that a petition was brought to the Conference from the Liberians asking for another Bishop, no action was taken. How much William Taylor, missionary to India and the South America West Coast, who was present as a lay delegate from South India, had to do with this verdict is not clear, but the fact remains that he was consulted, and gave an opinion which was to have a far-reaching effect. "It is no use to elect a bishop for Liberia," he said,

Liberia is a very unfortunate approach to Africa, being hedged in by hostile and warlike nations, and cannot be made an acceptable gateway to the continent. If you could find some man like Livingstone, who would open up Africa, it would be wise to elect such a man, but otherwise it is useless to send a man to live there in episcopal service.⁵⁸

Four years later, by a strange chain of events—which some considered providential—Taylor was himself chosen by General Conference to be the Methodist Livingstone.* Within twenty-four hours he was consecrated as

* On May 12 the Bishops in answer to a request submitted their opinion in a formal statement that "it would not be wise . . . to fix Episcopal residences in India, Europe, and Africa." On May 15 the Liberia delegate, Daniel Ware, arrived at Conference, seemingly too late to represent the cause of missionary episcopacy. He was urged, nonetheless, to speak on the subject, and seek a way to reopen the question. The way came, apparently, for on May 17 the Committee on Episcopacy presented a report which recommended by a "unanimous" vote the "election of a Missionary Bishop for Africa" (p. 312). Other interests were at work, however. Daniel Curry, chairman of the committee, was concerned to see a southern Negro elected to the episcopacy. Along with other nominations Stephen Olin proposed Taylor. A storm of enthusiasm followed. Though efforts were made to postpone the vote beyond the next day, they were overruled, and Taylor was elected by a wide margin.—G. C. Journal, 1884, pp. 179, 248, 312. See also M. S. Collins' account of the events as quoted in William Taylor, Story of My Life . . . , pp. 692-93, 695.

Bishop of Africa, with two assignments—the oversight of Liberia and the penetration of the continent.

Without delay Taylor began preparations for his new task. First, he felt that he had to have a corps of missionaries who would commit themselves wholeheartedly to his self-supporting system and go where they were led. Before the end of the year he had assembled some thirty men and women volunteers, with about a dozen children. Next, to help finance the undertaking, he turned to the Transit and Building Fund Committee, which had been active for some time in supporting his South America West Coast work. Then he determined his plan of action. Taking with him some members of the group he would go first to Liberia to convene the Conference and visit a few of the chief centers. Some of the party would later join him at Cape Palmas, and still others would go to the point he designated for his entry into the interior, the city of Luanda (St. Paulo de Loanda), Angola.⁵⁹

On January 29, 1885, the Liberia Conference once again met under its own Bishop. Taylor found a membership of thirty preachers and fifty Local Preachers. There were twenty-eight churches and twenty-nine Sunday schools. A little under $1,800. was being given annually to support pastors and Presiding Elders. The Missionary Society was continuing an annual appropriation of $2,500. The status of the work had not changed: it was now considered the "old" work—"dead" work by some—but the very presence of Taylor, and the fact that he was to be permanently at hand as Missionary Bishop, inspired new hope and confidence.

Ten new men were received into membership. Of these, six* were intended for the work which Taylor proposed to inaugurate shortly in Angola among the "raw heathen." Four others were admitted on trial. Eleven were elected and ordained deacons; and seven members and two Local Preachers were ordained as elders. Two were located. During the year Joseph Harris, long-time worker, had died.

Interest in education was revived. Surveying their two remaining seminaries, the Liberians were ashamed to admit that the Cape Palmas building stood "as a mere wreck," and the Monrovia building in need of major repairs. A petition was sent to the Board for financial aid for carpentry work, and also for the sending of another principal to Monrovia Seminary. A special Committee on Education was set up to inaugurate a system of management, which indicated their readiness to take responsibility.

Under his double commission Taylor had no intention of being a full-time resident in Liberia; rather, he chose to give his supervision by holding the Annual Conferences, at which time he dealt with the needs in a businesslike fashion. As might be expected, however, the challenge of initiating new work consumed a good part of his time and energy on his yearly visits.⁶⁰

* Dr. W. R. Summers, Levin Johnson, Ross Taylor, the Bishop's son, and Clarence L. Davenport were transferred from their home Conferences; Amos E. Withey was admitted on trial, and Joseph Wilkes was readmitted.

At the February, 1886, Conference Taylor discussed with Josiah S. Pratt, an inland trader who belonged to the Church, the possibilities of starting industrial missions at his trading posts on the Cavally River, some eighteen miles southeast of Harper. Pratt took up the matter with the chiefs at Tataka and Grebo and received an enthusiastic response. Next year when Taylor returned, ready to make the trip, he found the countryside in a state of excitement bordering on panic because the Half Cavally tribe, who alone had never made peace in the vicinity, were threatening war. A mere threat could not deter the Bishop. Without further ado, he lined up his party and crew, Pratt, Amanda Smith, the evangelist, and her companion, and two Monroviaans for interpreters. After a terrifying eight-hour ordeal on March 15 in a surfboat trying to break through the treacherous waters to the river's even flow, they were on their way to the Bush country. This vicinity had been pioneered many years earlier when Seys established the inland station among the Grebos. At each stopping-off point they received a friendly reception and—as is customary in tribal settlements—had to answer the chief's questions of "who they were," "where they were going," and "what for." Upon learning, the tribes in each instance asked for a mission:

the kings and chiefs insisted on our having a mission palaver. They were entirely unwilling to let us pass them otherwise. So we had an assembly of the kings, chiefs, and people, and the whole plan of an industrial school for 'book and plenty of hard work and God palaver.'

I drew up articles of agreement, binding them to give us all the land we may need for school farms, to help to clear the ground and plant, to carry all the heavy logs for pillars to elevate the mission house six feet above ground, and to carry all the timber for frame, and the plank, shingles, etc., and binding us to send the missionaries, and to do all our part of the agreement.⁶¹

In order to reach his two destinations he had to arrange, all told, for five other missions among the Bush people.* Though close together, each represented a different tribe, some of which were hostile to others. Inland about twelve miles from the river banks the king of the Grebo tribe had his headquarters. Receiving word of Taylor's near presence, he requested a visit. When the party was about a quarter of a mile from Grebo the big signal drum announced the portentous occasion. Arrangements were made to open missionary work.

Upon returning to Cape Palmas, Taylor planned as his next trip a survey of the Kru coast. The Kru tribes especially interested him, and furthermore appeals had come from them. They were of superior stock, strong, intelligent, and independent. They had never bowed to slavery or dealt in the nefarious trade. Though belonging to many powerful tribes of the interior, a feeling of enterprise had brought large numbers of them to the coast to engage in shipping, hauling, and navigating. A small group had settled near Monrovia, and these were being ministered to by Mary Sharpe, as already noted, and another large body dwelt along the shoreline between the Sino River and Harper. Work had been going on at Settra Kru, the Gilbert Haven Station, earlier. In 1886 one of Taylor's men, Benjamin J. Turner, was placed in charge.

* Besides Tataka and Grebo, the stations were: Eublica, Yorkey, Beaboo, Bararobo, and Wissika. Five were on the west side of the river and two on the east. On Nov. 6, 1887, Taylor's first white missionaries arrived. After a short stay at Harper, they left for their appointments: Eublica, Ashley and wife; Yorkey, Andrew Ortlip; Bararobo, Hillman and Johnson; Wissika, Horace Garwood; Tataka, the Rev. Dr. Harnet and wife. Mrs. Ashley died within a few months.—Nathan Barnes, "Liberia and the Church, Questions and Answers," typed ms., p. 90, in Board of Missions Library.

Once again Taylor set out in a surfboat. Garraway was the first town reached. This, too, had once been listed as a hoped for outpost on a Circuit. After a free discussion among the natives, the palaver decided in favor of a mission* and offered him the best location in town.⁶²

Among other points† where Taylor called was Sass Town, of which he gives an account in The Flaming Torch in Darkest Africa. His plan was acceptable and the groundwork was laid then and there. In order to gain interest through participation, he drew up an agreement that the tribe should supply the land, clear the brush, cut timber for building, and otherwise labor gratuitously. While waiting for an iron house to be delivered from England, he with others pitched in to build an adobe chapel, making the bricks on the spot. In the meantime, he relates, we had commenced religious services . . . , preaching a plain Gospel 'short-cut' into the way of salvation. Marvelous results attended these meetings, which developed some striking illustrations of the aptitude of the heathen mind to receive divine truth on the foundation of faith in God implanted in every human breast.

* * * *

Beginning with the foundation already laid in their hearts by the Holy Spirit, I made a close application of the moral law and emphasized their personal responsibility to God. Had I struck at their tribal customs and immediately denounced polygamy and witchcraft, it would have awakened controversy that would have resulted in an uproar, and possibly our expulsion from their country. Instead of attacking specific sins I have always sounded the savage heart with the plummet of God's truth, and allowed them to make their own application.⁶³

A number were converted at Sass Town, and upon departing Taylor assigned K. V. Eckman to take charge. During the two years of his stay—up to his death on October 4, 1890—Eckman not only accomplished a creditable

* "Brother Gartner" and "Sister Mecker" were the first appointees. They both died early in 1888. The Misses Agnes McAllister and Clara Binkley, who arrived in Liberia in January, 1889, were then stationed there. Miss McAllister remained for nineteen years. She translated a number of hymns into the Kru language and wrote a book, The Lone Woman in Africa.—N. Barnes, op. cit., pp. 90 f.

† The sources are none too clear as to the date of the founding of the Kru Coast missions and Taylor's statements are ambiguous. He says: "We opened next [following the Cavally stations] a chain of stations on the Kroo coast, Pluky [opposite Harper], Garraway, Grand Sess, Piquinn Sess, Sass Town, Niffoo, Nana Kroo, and Settra Kroo . . ."—Story of My Life . . ., p. 721.

work at Sass Town and was dearly loved, but also opened several substations in the interior which he placed under converted natives. At the time of his death there were almost two hundred members at this station. Mr. and Mrs. John G. Tate continued the work.

One other station in the Cape Palmas region was resumed in 1888, Barrakka, where work had originally been begun in 1844. In 1890 the Cape Palmas District appeared in the Minutes with all the new openings along the Cavally River and the seacoast, a total of fifteen.

Within the Conference bounds still other self-supporting missions were inaugurated. Niffu and Jacktown which had originally been listed in the appointments years earlier were added along the Sino River, and under Taylor's influence others were revived. Ebenezer was an interesting example. It was begun by Zachariah B. Roberts, who for fifteen years had been a Sunday-school superintendent at Greenville. One day in December, 1888, he felt moved to spread the Gospel personally and thereupon set up a small preaching center on the Sino River, building a mission house and chapel. Within a short time he had a school in operation, and an orchard of some six hundred coffee trees. Another interesting sidelight on how missions were begun was the case of the Wah (or War) country appointments among the Bushmen begun in 1890. Thousands of these people had left their homes in the interior and approached the borders of civilization, locating about thirty-five miles from Greenville. They sent word for missionaries and when on a trip J. W. Draper came to them for some weeks in 1889 they begged him to remain, promising both house and chapel.* He was not free to do so, but at the next Conference he asked to be permitted to undertake the mission and was sent.⁶⁴

All the stations opened along the Cavally River in 1887 were still being manned and reporting some success in 1892 when the Cavally Rebellion burst upon the countryside. In addition there were a few other stations of more recent date in the same area: Plebo, 1888; Ideorobo, 1890; Bonika, 1890. At war's outbreak, it was obvious that the missionaries could accomplish nothing among unsympathetic people, and since many Liberian missionaries were recalled by the government to safer areas, this meant the abandonment of Bonika, Bararabo, Grebo, Plebo, and Ideorobo. Some were never reopened.

Though the Presiding Elders' annual reports during the remaining years of this period were cheerful enough, they indicated no unusual development. In a number of places the mission buildings were deteriorating and new roofs were almost constantly in demand, also wood planking for floors to replace bamboo. Finances in the churches were still at the straining point so that if the pastor was to be supported there was no extra money for repairs.

* Blue Barre, among the Krus, was a similar case. They also appealed to Draper: "come and teach our children; we be old now; we no fita learn book, but we can learn God palava, and our children can learn book." Years before this town, too, had been among the Liberian appointments but had been dropped. In 1890, Kennedy, Presiding Elder of Sino District, reported, "I have visited this place often, and tried hard to get a house erected. Notwithstanding the many faithful promises made by the king, governors, and leading men, I have not as yet succeeded. We must not expect the natives to build houses for us without some remuneration; and they will not work without pay, though they are glad to have us among them."—Minutes, Africa Conference, 1891, p. 21.

In the light of the renewed hopes, the educational picture seemed more dismal than ever. Before Taylor arrived, all the day schools but one—a small primary school at Mount Olive—had been given up. Although the Missionary Society met its obligations toward the restoration of Monrovia Seminary, as arranged in 1885, from year to year the building remained unfinished. Despite its condition Bishop Taylor requested in 1887 that Daniel Ware begin classes immediately. Ware, serving as principal, did open a school of sorts, upon which no comment was made. In 1891 word was received by the Board from S. P. Stillman and C. E. Smirl, teachers at Monrovia, "asking that means be furnished for their support, and that the school be made really a Mission school for the education of natives of African tribes." The Board, apparently tired of the whole enterprise, replied that they had transferred the school "into connection with the Self-Supporting work of Bishop Taylor."⁶⁵

In January, 1892, Ware died. Appointed to succeed him was a woman, one of Taylor's people, M. M. Dingman, who took on the job feeling that there was nothing to lose since everyone was already convinced that self-support could not work. She felt encouraged since applications from paying students were coming in but the next year she left and Anna E. Whitfield temporarily filled in. In 1895 A. D. Williams, in whom the Board had no confidence, though Taylor felt otherwise, was in charge. The building still needed repairing.⁶⁶

Cape Palmas Seminary, too, had been closed earlier on account of its dilapidated state. Talk of repairs went on from year to year. Finally, in 1891, William D. Nichols of the Oregon Conference arrived to take charge. By the end of March he had the building in good enough condition to use:

This is a boarding and day school, the design of the boarding department being especially for the bringing up and the training of young men and women for mission work.

We have arranged to take as Mission resident students fifteen boys, and the same number of girls. The girls, in addition to their usual studies, are taught to cut and fit garments, sewing, many kinds of fancy work, and housekeeping. They are divided into sets, each set being required, under a competent matron, to do one kind of work for one month. . . . The resident boys and young men are required to work two and one-half hours A.M., and one and one-half P.M. . . . None are excluded on account of their poverty or inability to pay tuition in labor or otherwise.⁶⁷

The cost of restoration and equipment amounted approximately to $3,000. Some of this came from voluntary gifts to Taylor's Africa Fund. In an attempt to make the school self-supporting, Nichols was willing to work without salary. Three acres of garden and ten of farm land were in cultivation. He felt that the cost of operation thereby could be kept down to $500. per year. But as in so many other instances, death, no respecter of persons, took away this effective worker. Following his decease early in 1894 the seminary was assigned to Alma Lawson, who soon afterward became Mrs. A. Osborne.⁶⁸

White Plains, former site of Christian training for so many years, was selected once again as a school center in 1894. In the intervening years a farm of two hundred acres had been developed on the property, on self-help lines. E. H. Greeley and his wife were sent out this year by the Missionary Society, on request, to organize a new school among "pure native elements."⁶⁹

Amanda Smith, who had come to Liberia in 1883, made a great impression in the Cape Palmas District, to which she gave most of her time during her eight years' stay. Taylor also found her helpful on his excursion up the Cavally River. Mary A. Sharpe continued to labor with the Krus. At the 1886 Conference she was commended "as a true missionary, a lover of our people," doing "a great and noble work among this tribe of heathen at her own charges." The succeeding Conference voted to "visit her work more than they have done in the past, and assist her more in the . . . [proclamation] of those Gospel truths committed to their trust."⁷⁰ From 1890 on her work was included in the appointments.

The proximity of a number of self-support missions to the supported work of the Conference more than once brought about misunderstandings and suspicion. For this reason, Taylor decided in 1892 to offer a number of his centers in the Liberia Conference area to the Missionary Society. The first seven were accordingly transferred in 1893, and the following year he relinquished his remaining work within the bounds of the Conference, while agreeing to continue personal supervision.*

In 1894 there were eight truly native missions in the old Conference area, including Jacktown, at which a large coffee orchard had been planted. The others were: Blue Barre, with a good farm; Wah Country, with a farm; Ebenezer, with a farm; Fortsville, with two hundred acres for future disposal; Pessah, also given over to coffee-growing; Gola, a Circuit of seven small towns; and Vai Mission, near Cape Mount, with twenty acres of coffee trees under cultivation.

The "West Coast" work, that is, the industrial missions of the Cape Palmas District, separately supervised by Presiding Elder John G. Tate, that year included Wissika, with farm and coffee orchard; Eublica, with the same industries; Beaboo, likewise equipped; Barrakka, among the Grebo, also with a farm and plantation; Brooks Station (Pluky), with a

* He offered the Board twenty-six stations, and seven were accepted: Powellville, Monrovia District; Ebenezer, Jacktown, Blue Barre, Wah Country, in Sino District; Fortsville, New Cess, in Bassa District. All hoped to reach entire self-support in three to six years. (Seventy-fourth Ann. Rep., M.S. [1892], p. 26; ibid., 75th [1893], pp. 22 f.) The next year he tendered Wissika, Eublica, Beaboo, Barrakka, Brooks Station (Pluky), Garraway, Piquin Cess, Grand Cess, Sass Town, and Niffu.—Ibid., 76th (1894), pp. 37 f.

nursery mission in the village and a church in Bigtown; Garraway and Sass Town, both with substations; Piquin Cess; Grand Cess; and Niffu. On each of these stations there was a coffee orchard approaching the age of profitable bearing; and self-support was already established in part from other sources.⁷¹

THE DISTRICTS IN 1895

Monrovia District, of which T. A. Sims was Presiding Elder, had long contained at Monrovia the most flourishing and prosperous Society in the Conference. Robertsport and Vai Mission had been ravaged by recent wars. At Paynesville a new chapel had been built. Powellville, which had been turned over to the Board in 1893, had an orchard of over five thousand coffee trees and was near self-support. Marshall, New Georgia, and Johnsonville, old appointments, were barely holding their own.

The St. Paul River District,* under W. T. Hagan as Presiding Elder, had nine charges. On the Upper and Lower Caldwell Circuit there were several accessions to membership during the year, including a young Mohammedan woman. The Circuit had two Sunday schools. The Pessah mission farm of more than two hundred acres had a coffee orchard of some five thousand trees which gave promise of assuring full self-support within a few years.

James H. Deputie was Presiding Elder of the Bassa District,† which included twelve charges, a number of them new. The most outstanding of the old stations was Mount Olive which had a good church building, the "Simpson Memorial." At Bexley and Hartford a revival had broken out but as was frequently the case it did not result in any increase in membership. The New Cess mission, opened nearly fifty years earlier, recently had been in the charge of a Local Preacher who built a chapel and several dwellings and cleared enough of the two-hundred-acre farm for a coffee orchard of more than five thousand trees. Mrs. Lucy Sharp, a widow, conducted a large day school of native children. Following the death of the pastor Taylor appointed Mrs. Sharp to the charge.

The Sino District,‡ with James W. Cooper as Presiding Elder, had seven appointments. Of these only three were early mission centers, and the condition of these was not highly encouraging. The other four—former Taylor farms—were barely existing with very limited funds, each with a one-man

* St. Paul River District, 1895: (1) Virginia and Brewerville Circuit; (2) Upper and Lower Caldwell Circuit; (3) Clay Ashland and Sass Town Circuit; (4) Millsburg, White Plains, and Arthington Circuit; (5) Robertsville; (6) Bensonville and Crozierville; (7) Pessah Mission; (8) Gola Mission; (9) Careysburg and New Land.

† Bassa District: (1) Fortsville Mission; (2) Fortsville Station; (3) Hartford Station; (4) Bexley Circuit; (5) Gibboom Station; (6) New Cess Mission; (7) Lower Buchanan Circuit; (8) Paynesbury and Carterstown; (9) Upper Buchanan Circuit; (10) Edina Circuit; (11) Farmington Circuit; (12) Mount Olive Mission.

‡ Sino District: (1) Ebenezer Mission; (2) Jacktown Mission; (3) Blue Barre Mission; (4) Wah Country Mission; (5) Louisiana Circuit; (6) Lexington Station; (7) Bluntsville Station.

staff, but an air of hope seemed, nonetheless, to pervade them. Three of the seven reported day schools in operation.

The Cape Palmas and Cavally River District* listed ten stations. The former Cape Palmas District which years earlier had declined to but one charge, Harper, had become possibly the most flourishing District in the Conference when the "West Coast Missions" in the Kru country, and the Cavally River stations were attached to it. Taylor's mission at Barrakka, in the charge of a woman, Grace White,† was making history. Three substations, manned by natives, were being opened. A new mission house costing $1,000. was going up. A mission farm growing fruits and vegetables and four thousand coffee trees offered sustenance and support. And best of all, spiritually it was an exemplar. One of its Local Preachers by humility and prayer, and with a great fund of courage, had personally brought to an end a war of a hundred years' standing. Some of the Cavally River missions had not held up, but of the eight originally begun, Wissika, forty miles inland; Eublica, at which a nursery school was being maintained by a lone woman whose missionary husband had died; and Beaboo—also under a woman in like circumstances—still remained. The Brooks mission station at Pluky, under Elizabeth McNeal, had acquired a good residence and an iron chapel.

The Conference had at the close of 1894 a membership of forty men, twenty-five of whom were engaged in the old work of the Conference. Fifty-three Local Preachers were also listed. Besides, Taylor claimed that there was "a continually increasing number of native evangelists." The membership, as reported, was 3,364, including 251 probationers. Sunday-school children numbered 2,779. Compared with 1884, growth was evident but not extraordinary, with an increase of over a thousand members, eighty probationers, and six hundred Sunday-school pupils.

In the Kru country, five of Taylor's centers were in existence in 1895. These were Garraway, "manned" by two women, and having two substations under native people; Grand Cess, owning an iron church; Piquinin Cess, under a young Kru and his wife; Sass Town, with three substations forty miles inland; and Niffu, also cared for by a converted Kru. Among the notable accomplishments was the settlement through Christian agency of a fifty-year-long war between Sass Town and Piquinin Cess.⁷²

Up to 1895 Taylor had sent to Liberia over fifty missionaries, a large

* Cape Palmas and Cavally River District: (1) Barrakka Mission; (2) Wissika Mission; (3) Eublica Mission; (4) Beaboo Mission; (5) Brooks Station (Pluky); (6) Garraway Mission; (7) Grand Cess Mission; (8) Piquinin Cess Mission; (9) Sass Town Mission; (10) Niffu Mission.

† Grace White was much opposed by the natives when she began her work among them. She won their trust and affection completely. When she died the kings and headmen of the surrounding country begged the privilege of carrying her body to the funeral services. The people among whom she worked petitioned that her body be buried near the station and not be taken to the coast or America, saying: "'Miss White always told us the truth, and she must be buried in our midst, and we want the missionaries to stay and labor among us.'"—W. Taylor, The Flaming Torch . . . , pp. 558 f.

proportion of whom were women.* The Board had sent out during the same years for District work and the schools nineteen men.† This was an increase over the earlier period but as fatalities continued there ever remained a shortage of workers.

WILLIAM TAYLOR IN LIBERIA

While in a sense Taylor did for Liberia what earlier Superintendents, Bishops, and the Conference itself were not able to accomplish (that is, extend the mission to African tribes both within and beyond the nation's domain) he did not substantially improve upon the over-all condition of the already established work. The initial impulse to action he brought to the Conference gradually declined and most of the new undertakings came to naught.

Taken as a whole, his scattered self-supporting missions did not operate on a large scale. Most were manned by one or two persons who tried, giving themselves unstintingly, to manage the hard labor of building, farming, teaching, and preaching. Practically all the centers attempted coffee-growing, and a number had small produce farms as well, specializing in rice, potatoes, sugar cane, and cassava. Some had permanent housing of substantial materials, but a large portion had merely temporary native structures which deteriorated within a few years.‡ At most places day schools and Sunday schools were held, and when at all practicable boarding students were accommodated or else children were adopted by the missionary. At Pluky, for instance, Elizabeth McNeal took a dozen children into her home for teaching and training. In several cases, the work was only temporary in duration, subject to interruption on account of local wars, shortage of funds, or ill health of the person in charge. Conversions did not come about easily. Old habits were ingrained. At Niffu the missionary reported: "They are willing to give up their greegrees but they hold tenaciously to their wives." The winning of a king who would lead his people to Christianity was indeed

* Taylor's missionaries in Liberia, other than single women, were: Mr. and Mrs. B. J. Turner, Z. B. Roberts, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Ortlip, Horace Garwood, "Revs. Hillman and Johnson," "Rev. and Mrs. Harnet," "Rev. and Mrs. Ashley," "Bro. Gartner," Henry Wright, John R. Ellery, B. F. Kephart, William M. Yancey and Mrs. Assenath Yancey, William A. and Mrs. Warner, Charles Owens, Ernest O. Harris and Mrs. Harris, William Schneidmiller, Clarence Gunnison, Victor Hugo, James B. Robertson, William Hanse, K. V. Eckman, R. C. Griffith, Dan Williams, Hugo Heppel and Mrs. Heppel, Sandy Yancey and Mrs. Elizabeth R. Yancey, Mr. and Mrs. Cerinthus Gibson, John G. Tate and Mrs. Tate, Boston and Mrs. Betty Tubman, John Miner, John Smith, J. M. Thompson, W. C. Tuning and Mrs. Angie Tuning, S. J. Tim, William D. Nichols, Lyman M. Sharper, and Thomas Stacy.

† In the years 1885-95 arrivals were: 1885, J. W. Bonner, J. W. Draper, F. C. Holderness, A. H. Watson, John W. Early; 1887, C. B. McLain, J. D. A. Scott, P. E. Walker, A. L. Sims; 1888, J. E. Clarke; 1890, I. N. Holder; 1891, M. D. Collins; 1893, J. N. Roberts, J. J. Powell, A. F. Nimmo; 1894, Hamilton C. Russ, Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Greeley; 1895, D. L. Harris and H. H. Evans.

‡ As Taylor was able to do so, he replaced these native structures with "ant-proof" houses.

rare, but not impossible. The instance of King Charles Hodge of Bigtown, outside of Cape Palmas, was a noteworthy example.*

Taylor's industrial missions were, for the most part, based on coffee-raising, a crop he felt would be so successful that within a few years it would begin to repay all the mission expenses. For each new station—if at all possible—he supplied several hundred young scions.† And in one instance, at least, he experimented with cattle-raising, importing a number of Short Horn cattle which he placed at Jacktown, twenty miles inland on the Sino River. This of course was Taylor's answer to the problem of self-support. The directly religious element of his missions was a system of evangelization based on conversion of the young through isolation in a Christian environment, the nursery missions. Finances limited this phase. If Taylor had not been able to enlist a number of women of courage and ability, who were not afraid to stay alone and did not mind the utter isolation, he could not have put it into practice at all. A tremendous amount of credit must be given to these women,‡ some of whom put in years of service.

BISHOP TAYLOR'S PENETRATION OF THE CONTINENT

While the challenge of Liberia undoubtedly appealed to Taylor, with still more enthusiasm he approached the other half of his episcopal commission—the penetration of the continent with the Christian message. In 1880 the German explorers Paul Pogge and Hermann von Wissmann had set out to study the southern basin of the Congo. Wissmann continued into the heart of the continent, the Bashilange country, in 1883. That area then became Taylor's goal.

A party of forty-four recruits§ including families with children had been

* As Taylor recounts it: "The first time I saw him I preached to him for a solid hour as he sat on the floor of his mud hut; and although he admitted the truth of all I said he was unwilling to give up his evil practices. . . . I sent to a suburb of his big town a lady missionary from Oregon, Miss Lizzie [McNeal], who adopted a number of children before they had become heathen, and they were soon witnesses to the saving grace of the Lord Jesus. Then with her little family of about twenty children she held open-air meetings under a breadfruit tree, and he and his chiefs were soon attracted to them. Her method was to read and explain the Scriptures and then give her converted children a chance, one by one, to give their testimony before their heathen neighbors. . . . A great revival resulted, during which the king, several of his chiefs, and a number of his people were converted to God." The king put up a chapel and himself became preacher in charge.—The Flaming Torch . . . , pp. 457 f.

† The idea was sound, but a scourge from India hit Africa's coffee orchards which ended the hopes of that continent as chief supplier. The Western hemisphere then became the chief producer.

‡ The women in Taylor's Liberian work, other than missionary wives, were: Elizabeth McNeal, Mrs. Meeker, Barbara Millard, Rose Bowers, Anna E. Whitfield, Agnes McAllister, Clara Binkley, Ann Beynon, Georgiana Dean, Kate Orr, M. M. Dingman, Elizabeth Bates, Daisy Lee, Anna White, Mrs. Miner, Grace White, Sara Wilcox, Lena Carlson, Alma Lawson, Jennie Hunt.

§ The group was composed of "one or more thoroughly-trained financiers, two physicians—one male and one female—two or more experienced school-teachers, mechanics, farmers, trained musicians, vocal and instrumental, some highly educated, some not; but all intelligent; some gifted evangelists Two of the company were . . . Quakers . . ." (Gospel in All Lands, March, 1885, p. 113.) Of this party a number withdrew before the actual work was commenced. Three men, three women, and five children returned with Taylor's approval, mostly on account of illness. One other left to recruit his own missionaries to found a Quaker mission. During an unavoidable wait in Luanda, all but one of the party became ill with "African fever." One died from refusal to take proper treatment. Taylor's son Ross was of this original party but he decided to return home, which was a sore disappointment to his father. Nonetheless, it seemed justified inasmuch as he had four children under six years of age and his wife did not favor staying. In America he edited a publication, Illustrated Africa.—Ibid., January, 1886, p. 44; Bombay Guardian, XXXI (1885), 33 (Aug. 15), 514.

enlisted and while awaiting their arrival in Liberia Taylor made a few months' tour of the Conference's west coast. At the same time he planned his approach to the interior. Studying his map, he concluded that the Portuguese province of Angola, two thousand miles down the west coast of the continent from Liberia, would offer the most direct route to the interior. Rather than choose a waterway such as the Congo, unnavigable at the time in many places, he decided to go straight east, across land for the most part, to the Kasai River, a tributary of the Congo which flowed in a north-south direction.

He sent ahead Dr. William R. Summers and Charles W. Gordon, as ground breakers, to the capital city and seaport, Luanda, to introduce the mission through official letters and to set up quarters. At last his party was assembled and on its way. Taylor later wrote:

We arrived at Saint Paul de Loanda [Luanda] . . . on the 20th of March, 1885. We were kindly received by the governor general of the province and by . . . the British consul. One of the largest and best houses in the city was procured for the temporary residence of our people . . . Here we afterward purchased a suitable site and built a substantial two-story house conveniently arranged for all mission purposes.⁷³

The Bashilange country was a thousand miles interior. Taylor's scheme was the establishment of a chain of missions from the coast to the Kasai River to serve as depots and transport centers. In this he received full cooperation both from the government and the chieftains.

The chiefs and governors of the country contiguous to Loanda have been seen and consulted. These dignitaries are all favorable to the missionaries, and promise to give, or lease for 99 years, all the land they need, and to furnish other facilities for the prosecution of their enterprises.⁷⁴

Restless to be off as soon as arrangements could be made, Taylor chose six workers for his pioneer party "to select and open stations [in a straight line east through Angola] in which to settle [his] workers, and especially the families."⁷⁵ It was a safari of the first order. After a 240-mile sea and river voyage along the coast and on the Cuanza to Dondo, they were ready to begin. Dondo, at the head of steamboat navigation, was made the first station. Next, they proceeded on foot, a "tramp of fifty-one miles," to Nhang-a-Pepe following the ancient caravan trail—"a path . . . fifteen inches wide, through a rugged mountainous country." Here another station was decided upon, to be a receiving center and farm.⁷⁶ Thirty-nine miles farther they trudged, climbing eventually "a mountain elevation of extraordinary . . . formation" to reach Pedras Negras. Despite the fact that this wild mountainous region was lion-infested, an ever-present threat to the surrounding villages, the scouting party decided the site was suitable, having in mind an industrial school. The trek was resumed for another sixty miles to what Taylor at last called his "interior station"—Malange.

September 10, 1885, marked their entrance into this town. They had left Luanda on May 20.

In short order, these five places were constituted a District, and members of the party were given appointments, under A. E. Withey as Presiding Elder. The string of missions fell short of reaching the Congo State beyond the Kasai River; furthermore, those now established were being designed for other purposes than mere stopping points in a chain. As Taylor explained, all felt it to be the will of God to settle as they had; all, that is, except the physically weak but intrepid Dr. Summers who made known his intention of continuing on to Luluabourg in the heart of the Congo Free State.

The initial task of station-founding completed, Taylor hastened to Europe to see the Belgian and Portuguese heads of state to present his program and ask for cooperation and grants in aid. In both countries he received favorable replies.* Coincidence led to his meeting on his journey two of Africa's great explorers, the Frenchman, Count de Brazza, and the German, Hermann von Wissmann. From Wissmann he learned details of his just completed exploration of the Kasai River from its mouth on the Congo to seventy-five miles above Stanley Pool in the Congo Free State, which indicated a direct waterway to Central Africa.⁷⁷

Upon his return the next year the Bishop had another group of recruits ready to begin. With his newly gained knowledge, he was determined to try another approach to the interior, this time by traveling from the ocean along the Congo River to its tributary, the Kasai, which would eventually bring him to his destination. As he saw the situation:

The south side of Lower Congo, extending from the ocean to Stanley Pool, was preoccupied by the Missionary Society of English Baptists and the American Baptists' Missionary Union, and others. Not wishing to intrude ourselves on preoccupied territory, and presuming that the organized transport facilities of the government, and of the missions by the way, could be depended upon for the transportation of our mission supplies to Stanley Pool, we settled on Kimpopo [Kimpoko], twenty miles up the east side of Stanley Pool, as our transport station and port of embarkation for the upper Kassai countries.⁷⁸

He accordingly led a pioneer party "up through the mountains to Stanley

* Taylor never seemed impressed by a man's importance of position, nor the protocol to be observed in approaching dignitaries. His manner was direct, man to man. As representative or agent of God, he spoke for a kingdom which no other could transcend. Often being short on time, Taylor would cut through the routine of interview and appointment and seek out a personal reception directly at the palace gate. Having in this fashion obtained the ear of the King of Portugal—first having submitted credentials, of course, including a letter from President Hayes—he sat down with the king and conversed freely. As he later told it, the king "asked me so many questions about my missionary work in different countries as to afford me a good opportunity of giving him a brief history of my self-supporting missions in India and in South America and in the Portuguese colony of Angola. He seemed interested and pleased, and bade me welcome to work under the flag of Portugal. I asked no favor of his royal majesty, but was nevertheless favored by his good will in all our subsequent intercourse with his Angola government officials, from the governor general down." Using shortcuts, he also gained admittance to the royal chambers in Brussels. "I was kindly received by all the different officers of state, and about 4 P.M., the time appointed, I was conducted by a servant to the royal residence of his majesty. A line of soldiers along the way leading to the reception room stood with their caps off as I passed through, and the king himself opened the door and received me."—W. Taylor, Story of My Life . . . , pp. 713 f.

Pool" and occupied the former site of a government station at Kimpoko. From here he expected to get passage on a government steamer and proceed to Luluabourg on the Lulubo River. Luluabourg, almost in the center of Africa, was the goal of Dr. Summers, who proposed to make the approach from Angola. They hoped that they might arrive at about the same time. The mission stations which resulted incidentally from this undertaking became the framework for the second south central African mission, called by Taylor the Upper Congo District.

Besides the planned program already described, two other mission stations had been founded at stop-over points along the Atlantic coast between Liberia and Luanda. One was at Cabinda, about fifty miles north of the Congo's mouth, in French-held territory later under Angola, considered important because of its location near the gateway to Central Africa; the other, Mamba, eighteen miles up the river from Mayoumba, 150 miles farther north, on the ocean.⁷⁹ This was in the French Congo which later became French Equatorial Africa.

ANGOLA DISTRICT

Not without hardship, sickness, and death was the Angola District put on a self-sufficient basis. But even in Africa, where there was nothing to build on, the system of industrial institutions was eventually started. Except for the aid received from the Transit and Building Fund Society and occasional outright gifts from well-wishers,* the means of subsistence had to be gleaned from the soil and by the sweat of the brow. Direct approach or appeal to those Europeans in authority locally brought cooperation and often grants of land and other favors, but in many instances property had to be bought from tribespeople, equipment had to be imported from England and the United States, and supplies for trading purposes had to be stocked. Only large sums of cash could cover these costs. With faith that the goal could be reached, year by year new volunteers came to add to mission strength.†

Of the five centers in Angola, undoubtedly the easiest to manage and most convenient to live in was the port of Luanda. Situated at the mouth of the Bengo River, as the capital it was well settled and civilized, and attracted a number of visiting foreigners and traders. A school was organized by Charles M. McLean and Charles A. Ratcliffe and paying students obtained. This was

* The buildings at Dondo and Luanda together cost over $10,000. This sum was a gift from Thomas Critchlow, a leading committee member of the Transit and Building Fund Society.

† Records of Taylor's missionary personnel were not systematically kept. As far as can be learned, the following members of Conference, with their wives and children, were in Taylor's first two parties which arrived in Angola in 1885 and 1886: William R. Summers, Clarence L. Davenport and Mrs. Mary Myers Davenport, M.D., Joseph and Mrs. Wilkes, Agnes Wilkes, Amos E. and Mrs. Irene F. Withey, Mary Estella, Herbert C., Florence, and Lotti Withey; Charles A. Ratcliffe, Charles Murray McLean and Mrs. McLean, Samuel J. Mead and Mrs. Ardella Mead, Albertha (Bertha) Mead (niece); W. H. Mead and Mrs. Minnie Mead and their children, Nellie, Edna, John, Willie, Julia, and Sam; William P. Dodson, and Charles W. Gordon. Missionary workers in the first two parties other than Conference members were: Heli Chatelaine, Andrew S. and Mrs. Myers, Karl Rudolph, Miss Effie H. Brannen, "Brother Smith and wife," J. H. Cooper and Mrs. Cooper, William S. Miller, and Miss Hartly. There was, possibly, a Miss Cliff.

the natural beginning of their self-support. Besides teaching, the two young men distributed tracts and Scripture portions, and taught crowds how to sing Gospel hymns. In 1887 Miss L. Fannie Cummings and Miss Susie J. Harvey started a girls' school but they remained there less than a year.

An iron house made in England was in use by 1887, which answered admirably the needs of the work and the rigors of the climate. It served as both mission house and schoolroom, and had a large room for public meetings. McLean was transferred to Dondo in 1887. After Ratcliffe returned to the United States in 1888, William P. Dodson took charge of the evangelistic program for two years. The school remained closed for lack of suitable teachers. In 1890 Lancaster C. Burling, Mrs. Burling, and their two sons arrived, as also Janette Roseman, a widow, who spent her time developing a nursery school. When the Burling family and Mrs. Roseman left, after about three years, only one man, C. W. Gordon, was sent as replacement.⁸⁰

Dondo, the second site selected by the scouting party, was almost as large and important as Luanda. The population was almost entirely native and the chief men had requested the mission.

Dondo was about 140 miles from Luanda, on the Cuanza at a junction for trading, hence a center for caravans which offered a constantly changing audience for preaching services. As described by a missionary, Dondo "is laid out in long streets, and has sidewalks, and street lamps, and many other good things." At the outset, Taylor placed two men and one woman here, who opened an English night school for support's sake while they applied themselves to learning the languages necessary to engage effectively in their work. A decent house was purchased on the main artery traversed by the caravans. The school did not last long because the missionaries were not proficient enough in Portuguese to make it a success. A paying day school, a free evening school, and a Sunday school for young people were successful from the start. The young people's program developed so well that the rest of the work was cheered by it. A farm was also tried but it could not be made to pay for itself. The solution to the financial difficulties came with the beginning of a well-manned, well-equipped mechanical department. As time passed, a printing press was added, used especially for printing Scripture portions for the children, and an organ which was extremely helpful in attracting a crowd of hearers.⁸¹

Dondo, however, was not salubrious; it was known as the "furnace of Angola." Breakdowns came. Clarence Davenport, writing to Gospel in All Lands on November 3, 1887, counted up the losses: "You have received a card telling you of the death of my beloved wife [Dr. Mary Myers Davenport]. Since then our numbers have been still further reduced. . . . [by] the sickness of my sister-in-law, obliging their return to the States. Thus we lost our mechanic, Andrew S. Myers (my brother-in-law)." Nothing daunted, though the mission was now reduced to two, himself and Susie J. Harvey, he intended to keep it going. "Being in the midst of men of evil lives there was but one of two steps we could take. 1st, for Sister Harvey or myself to leave the station and thus overthrow the work, or 2nd, to get married." The work went on. Among others buried in the cemetery at Dondo was Mary Estella Withey, daughter of the Presiding Elder, who had been of great service to the mission.

Nhange-a-Pepe and Pungo Andongo, the next two stations, were also on the major trade route, the latter ninety miles beyond Dondo. Nhange-a-Pepe was beautifully located in a fertile valley with an excellent climate, "a lovely place where caravans stopped for the night under the mighty [baobab] trees, like a paradise wide and lovely to look at, inviting," but the drawback came from the fact that the native population "living under native chieftains . . . [was] rather scattered, and two neighboring traders . . . [made] up the white population. Little support . . . [was] to be expected from them." Because of its fortunate location Nhange-a-Pepe was early used as a receiving station for new arrivals to facilitate acclimatization. A number of houses were hopefully erected, and the cost of a missionary residence, a tannery, and a shop met through the generosity of an English friend. Karl Rudolph, one of the original party—considered outstanding by Taylor—was in charge of the preparatory training school. A Society of thirteen men and boys was organized. A very practical manual-labor program combined with regular periods of worship was made the order of each day.* From building corrals to operating the store and cooking the meals—all was done by the converts and staff.⁸²

At Pungo Andongo,† the missionary family of Joseph Wilkes, father, mother, and daughter, alone took over. The climate varied from chilly mornings and evenings to fiery sun-parched hours, a contrast so extreme that it brought on recurring attacks of illness. All was hard going. A school begun for purposes of support did not meet the need and had to be abandoned in the interests of a trader's shop. This in turn cut down the amount of time given to religious work, but a free night school and Sunday school were held. The Wilkes family having become considerably worn down, departed in despair, and others were sent to replace them in 1889. Proceeding on the foundations laid, A. E. Withey and Charles W. Gordon brought the mission into the enviable position of "making money to open new stations in the

* Karl Rudolph wrote in 1888 that "with a McCormack plow and two yokes of cattle he plow[ed] half an acre of good ground in the forenoon of each working day, and that he . . . [took] all the afternoons for study and for teaching others."—Quoted in Bishop Taylor's Quadrennial Report of Our Church Work in Africa, pamphlet, p. 12.

† Robert Shields tells of the awesome impression Taylor unintentionally made on an important chief while on a visit to Pungo Andongo. The two men were invited to share the same room at the mission. The African chief occupied one corner, and the Bishop the other. At retiring time, the Bishop prepared for the night, while being closely observed by his companion. First he took out his teeth, cleaned them; then removed his wig and combed his long beard. Next he knelt down to pray, aloud, in English. As Taylor talked with God in a foreign tongue, the chief could not stand it any longer. He ran to the door, opened it, and called for his people. He announced to them that this white man was a God, for he talked to someone not in the room, that he took off his hair, and also took his teeth out of his mouth. Who but a God, said the chief, could do such a thing?—In August Klebsattel, Typed Ms. Notes, in Board of Missions Library.

regions beyond." In 1892 a native church of three members was organized. An adobe house, including chapel and storeroom, almost an acre of fruit-bearing trees in the town, and a farm of some three hundred acres a short distance away completed the station.⁸³

The last of the five original stations was Malange, opened in September, 1885. This was a village over two hundred miles to the east of Luanda, of some two thousand natives. It had a good climate, and was well suited for agriculture. A substantial supply of lumber was nearby. Taylor appointed to this station a farming couple from Vermont, Samuel J. and Ardella Mead, and their niece, Bertha. When Mead set out for his station he was worried about how to begin. On the outskirts of the town he paused to pray, then with his party determined to knock on someone's door. A young man answered. Mead blurted out: "We are strangers in this land; are Christians from America. We have come here to teach the natives the knowledge of books and of the Lord Jesus. We now lack shelter and a place to arrange our food." This plain statement seemed to affect the young man, who worked as a foreman in a large trading house, and he at once extended the party hospitality, and that very night in his home—their first headquarters—the first Methodist prayer meeting in Malange was held.⁸⁴

From this simple beginning arose one of the most successful of Taylor's African missions. By 1888 William H. Mead with his large family of children, and young Robert Shields, had joined Samuel J. Mead. The ground breaking was laborious work—ploughing, hauling logs, hewing timber, sewing and shopwork—but out of it grew a well-equipped center. Samuel Mead took care of the big farm; William Mead with native assistants operated two pit saws and turned out several thousands of dollars' worth of lumber in one year. A carpenters' shop and a trading shop contributed to income. While the first school did not cover expenses, "for lack of white or half-caste children," and ultimately was closed upon the departure of the teacher, a second school, free, for native children was opened. Costs were met by the presence of some students willing to pay and by tutoring others.

One of the mission members wrote in a letter dated September 29, 1888: Bro. Shields from Ireland and Bertha [Mead, whom Shields later married only to lose in death six weeks later] are pulling on in the native language, and have commenced to translate hymns. Music is a great attraction and draws the natives to us. . . . We have the little organ, violincello, cornet and violin

Sunday morning is our class-meeting, then service and Sabbath-school until 11 o'clock. P.M. we take the cornet or other instruments, some native boys to sing and help explain the Bible pictures, and go to the native villages about, some of them a few miles away, and tell them of Jesus and his love. . . . Wednesday evening we have school for all. Tuesday evening prayer-meeting, and private lessons in music are given by some of us two evenings a week; and we have morning and afternoon day school.⁸⁵

In 1890 Malange had an organized Society with five members and thirty probationers. In 1893 Bishop Taylor reported that the Society had grown to more than fifty, and a new one-story mission house had to be built in addition to the two-story house already standing, both put up at no outside cost. In 1894 S. J. Mead's school classes numbered about sixty pupils. Having no children of their own the Meads began adopting native children until they had eight in their family.⁸⁶

As these first five stations discovered their most successful functions and became more than self-sufficient, openings were sought for extension of the work. Out of Malange itself came two new missions in 1890, Quiongua—later called Ben Barrett—and Canandua. William and Minnie Mead and five of their children went to Canandua for one year and then to Nhang-a-Pepe. Quiongua was manned by Robert Shields and twelve-year-old Samuel Mead, considered a juvenile missionary, who was apt in the language and gave "evidence of unusual working of the Holy Spirit." Within less than two months the boy was dead, another of four children of this courageous family to be buried in Africa.* Nonetheless, Quiongua was kept going.† and in three years' time had a number of buildings, and industries to meet all expenses, with a surplus of about four hundred dollars for their trust fund. Four to six people were helping at this station during 1894.⁸⁷

Taylor proposed to open another station, to be called Munhall, to honor a generous benefactor who with others supplied the funds for its founding. Munhall was to be part of his scheme of Africa Industrial Nursery Missions. Writing later, he particularly showed his pleasure with this undertaking, which came to be known as Quessua :

One of the most successful mission stations connected with the Malange Mission was located in 'Gan N'Zambi' ('The Garden of God'). In this Angola Eden we opened Munhall Mission and placed it in charge of some of our own native converts. . . . We saw the La Quess and Lombi Rivers meandering through the valley, and beneath our feet at the base of the mountain . . . [were] Munhall Mission house and farm, with its fields of mandioca, sugar cane, Indian corn, and fruit trees in their tropical variety. . . . In addition to a common school and general missionary work we founded in this mountain home a nursery mission for native girls . . .⁸⁸

At the end of this period (1895) the Angola District appeared in good

* The William Mead family was exceptional. They never allowed the death of their children to be a deterrent to continuing their mission. Mead himself died in 1892. The oldest son, John, fourteen, made his father's coffin. His wife lined it and covered it and then read the funeral service herself. Taylor wrote of him: "Though about forty years of age when he went to Angola he so mastered the Portuguese and Ambunda languages as to preach in either fluently and effectively. He and his wife Minnie took six children with them to our work."—Minutes, Liberia Conference, 1893, p. 43.

† "It was . . . decided that the station at Quiongua should be called the Benj. Barratt [Barrett] Mission, as a token of loving remembrance of the donor of the funds for its erection. The new premises, located upon a healthy eminence, will include several good-sized rooms, high and airy, also a two-story central building of three rooms, so located that they will constitute a contiguous whole, with each department properly separated to its own quarters."—Minutes, Africa Conference, 1892, p. 37.

financial health. Bishop Taylor had created a "Trust Fund" * a few years earlier and contributions for special causes continued to come in. In 1895 the assets, including commercial capital, cattle, and cash were more than $41,000. Earnings from livestock, industries, trade, and other sources made the District completely self-supporting. All the appointments had permanent, comfortable houses, some of stone, some of adobe.⁸⁹

Through the years new recruits continued to come, while a number also departed for health or other reasons.† There were a number of deaths, especially of children. Of Taylor's initial party three men had died, one from "African fever," the second from consumption, and the third from seven years' overwork. Only one woman of the original group was stricken, Dr. Davenport, whose death Taylor attributed to "two years' exhaustive labor" in a fearful temperature. Others, however, who came later, and missionary children, raised the death total. The spirit of the ill and the bereaved was remarkable.‡ Despite much illness and many fatalities S. J. Mead and others considered Angola a "good country." We "have borne more burdens," he declared, "done more thinking, lived and encountered more in the past five years than one would in fifteen years in New England."⁹⁰

All the missionaries had learned to master the native tongue, Kimbundu, which, as Taylor adds, "had not been reduced to manuscript, much less to printing, and we had no interpreters; so we had to sit down and patiently pick the words from between the teeth of the Ambunda." The children especially were quick at learning the languages and were put to use as juvenile missionaries—exhorting, bearing testimony, and interpreting. Within five years after the work was begun the tongue had been so conquered that a grammar and the Gospel of John had been printed. Portuguese, too, had to be acquired as it was the second language of the country. Often English was not used at all in an interior station.

* The Trust Fund was planned to contribute to the support of the stations, besides furnishing supplies at cost. The missionaries were to use it in trading, raising cattle, and other productive industries, for obtaining goods at cost, and carriage rates. They were, however, to continue to support themselves, and to open and build substations. Taylor, in turn, would use the Trust Fund for sending out more missionaries as the work expanded, paying for their passage, outfit, including books, etc. "He was also to provide funds for the opening of new stations, including the erection of mission buildings, provide them with furniture, schoolbooks, tools, and implements, a few head of cattle, and funds for the redemption of little girls from polygamous slavery, for infant training schools."—J. C. Hartzell, "Self-Supporting Methods" in the Methodist Episcopal Missions in Africa," Gospel in All Lands, December, 1897, p. 546.

† Later arrivals in Angola were: 1887, Susie J. Harvey; 1888, William Hicks and Mrs. Hicks, Robert Shields; 1890, Mrs. Janette Roseman; 1891, Lizzie Whiteside, Christian A. Borella, Taylor Mead; 1892, Jeanette Peck, and Luzia Gossalvish; 1893, Miss McKenzie, I. B. Case and Mrs. Case, Harriet Bacon; 1894, Louise Raven, John W. Shuett and wife, Lavinia Ratcliffe (who died within forty days), Mrs. Catherine Dodson.

‡ Of this spirit William Hicks and his wife were examples. They "never thought of returning home till Dr. Reid . . . informed him that his sick wife would die in three days if she remained where she was, but a voyage at sea might save her. Both were very reluctant to leave. She rather preferred to stay and die at her post; but Brother Hicks . . . felt that he could not do less than try to bring his wife from the grave's mouth." (Bishop Taylor's Quadrennial Report of Our Church Work in Africa, pamphlet, p. 15.) Another example was W. P. Dodson. In 1893 his health became so impaired that he was advised to make a voyage to the United States for recovery of his strength. He replied that "he would rather die in the work than to go home, unless clearly seen to be the will of God." In his annual report the Bishop said: "I arranged for his passage home, but the next news I received was that his heroic wife [Jeannie, who had agreed to carry on the work during her husband's absence] had gone to her home in heaven. Her husband holds on to the work daily in sight of her grave."—Seventy-fifth Ann. Rep., M.S. (1893), p. 28.

For the year ending July, 1895, there were reported twenty-four probationers and fifty-seven full members. In the infant nurseries fifty-six children were being brought up as Christians. The day schools reported 165 students, and the Sunday services an average attendance of 170.⁹¹

Amos E. Withey, one of the original party, who had been Presiding Elder through these years, commented in his 1895 report:

We have occupied this province nearly ten years. There are twenty-three white missionaries. . . . There are eight stations and substations in the province. Our means of support are by trading, cattle raising, mechanical industries, and farming. We have no salaries. . . .

There are many inquirers after the truth in the several stations who are quite regular attendants upon our services, and join heartily therein and give mental assent to all that is required of them. Many of them have thrown away their idols and endure persecution for righteousness' sake. Some have abandoned the pursuit of business that was contrary to the Gospel. Some are accepted as being regenerated. . . . We are hopeful, cheerful, trustful; rejoicing evermore, praying without ceasing, and in everything giving thanks.⁹²

Despite the fact that reinforcements were sent in 1886, in April, 1887, and again in December, 1888, the turnover never permitted the District to reach full strength, an important factor in continuing self-support. On several occasions men had to "hold the fort" in a neighboring mission while waiting for new recruits. The success of Malange was credited in part to the fact that Samuel and Ardella Mead had been posted there from the outset and remained there continuously through the years.⁹³

When at last changes came about through the retirement of Taylor as Missionary Bishop by the General Conference of 1896, and the formation of a separate Congo Mission Conference at the same time, to be organized by Taylor's successor, Bishop J. C. Hartzell, a new realism was imposed on the self-supporting mission. Considering the shortage of men it was considered wise to concentrate and consolidate the work in this part of Africa. With Taylor's approval it was decided that the missions should come under the aegis of the Missionary Society* and, secondly, that some should be discontinued—notably Dondo and Nchange-a-Pepe—and their force transferred elsewhere. Dondo was later reopened.

UPPER CONGO DISTRICT

The goal of penetrating the African interior was not put aside. To achieve this a second mission field in South Central Africa was opened in 1886. Summer's determination to reach the hinterland at all costs was a great challenge to Taylor. As already noted, Taylor intended the Kimpoko mission to be

* The action was taken by the General Missionary Committee: "We accept the missionary work heretofore known as Bishop William Taylor's Self-Supporting Missions in Africa, and constitute them foreign missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church. We authorize and request the Board of Managers to accept and pay annually interest on certain annuities, etc. We refer the unpaid obligations due the William Taylor Mission Fund, to an amount not exceeding $4,500, to the Board of Managers with power."—Gospel in All Lands, March, 1897, p. 105.

the springboard from which he would reach his goal. In Malange, meanwhile, Summers was making his plans.

It was May, 1886, before Dr. Summers was able to complete his preparations. With the funds he was able to accumulate entirely by his own efforts, he reported later, he had supplied himself with one hundred dollars' worth of medicines, paid carriers, and had seventeen boxes of material for paying my way and future use, and three loads of rations on the way; the other loads being books, boxes of medicines, stationery, private materials, etc., one load of biscuits and one of dried salt fish, the two latter given me by a patient, a mulatto gentleman, who, when on the journey, wound up by giving me a riding ox and saddle!⁹⁴

With his thirty-six-man caravan he marched for three months through jungle, over highlands, open fields, and across streams. Though thrice threatened with poison by unreliable carriers, he managed to reach the Bashilange country (also known as Baluba) in safety and received a cordial welcome from the powerful king of the region. Among his company were native tailors, blacksmiths, and other artisans, with whose help he hoped to introduce some of the arts of civilization along with his medical ministrations.⁹⁵

A few months after his arrival he recounted:

Every chief wants a Missionary. In some places I have had difficulty in leaving the towns, the Chief crying and begging me to remain. At one place the Chief, named Mwamba Mputto, was with his people overjoyed at my arrival. He begged me to stay, saying he wanted his people to become like white men, and that he had been expecting me for a long time. I said, 'I cannot possibly remain, as I must go on and meet the steamer [on which he expected Taylor's company to arrive], and that then I would, perhaps, come back, or some one else would probably come.' The Chief cried like a child, and said he was sure the white man would come at some time, and that he had built a house for him, to be ready in a few days.⁹⁶

At Luluabourg, after a long wait because of the inadequate mail service cross-country, Summers received permission from the government capital at Boma to build. He put up three houses for the mission, brought in seven head of cattle, and set about earning his support by collecting medicinal plants for the Congo State.

Meanwhile, Taylor had organized a second company of missionaries and set out to reach the Bashilange country by waterway, by traversing first the Lower Congo from the Atlantic coast, and hoping near Stanley Pool to reroute to the Kasai River, a tributary. His party reached Stanley Falls, as we have seen, and with permission from the government he began the construction of a receiving and transport center at Kimpoko. The site was to his liking:

No cattle, no horses, no asses, no domestic animals larger than goats. Elephants stalk the plains and hills, and hippopotami herd in the rivers. One of my men went out in a native canoe and killed three of these monsters of the deep, which gave us a taste of the beef of those parts We consider the site of Kimpoko to be beautiful, climate salubrious, equable, and healthful.

. . . The Lord has reserved for us the best place of the pool. We are now housed at Kimpoko. Leading out from our door are five thousand miles of explored steamboat navigable water-ways.⁹⁷

While there he personally planted some fifty fruit trees as a beginning for missionary support.

Luluabourg was still several hundred miles' distance to the southeast of Kimpoko—and a thousand miles northeast of Malange. From Stanley Pool Taylor had planned to travel with his party by government steamer. Here, however, he met his first setback. No steamer bookings were available, not even for one person. Completely frustrated, he began to imagine the possibilities of a steamer of his own. Before long, he was imploring his supporters back home for the means to purchase one, at an estimated cost of $20,000. "An appeal was made to the American people for popular subscriptions of one dollar each; they responded grandly," he recounted later, "and [hastening to England] I left an order with a Liverpool firm for the boat, and sailed back to Africa."⁹⁸

In the spring of 1887 he returned from England and was joined at Harper by a second corps of missionaries. At Vivi on the Lower Congo, the terminal point for ocean transport, he awaited the arrival of the steamer. Here he assembled his missionary force, recalling some from Kimpoko and bringing in others from the coast and adding the second force in an all-out endeavor to get the boat transported up to Stanley Falls. While thus bound to Vivi, Taylor engaged in exploratory trips along the north bank of the river, where no missionary society had yet begun to labor. His first fear of edging in on pre-empted territory was soon eliminated by the assurance of other societies that there was room and work for all. No further encouragement was needed. By the end of December, 1887, at a District Conference at Vivi, he reported:

Meantime, though I have wrought in our varied work at Vivi three months out of the five of our sojourn here, I have explored the line to Isangala, and report the opening of five stations—. . . Vivi, the site of the former capital of the state. For a little over seven acres of ground here and the buildings remaining we paid £160. . . . At Vumtomba Vivi, four miles distant . . . we have built an adobe house and opened a station. . . . Sadi Kabanza, about twenty miles from Vivi. . . . Matamba, about twenty-nine miles from here, all on the caravan trail. . . . Isangala, where our freights have to be taken by boats up the river to Manyanga. We have not built, but our missionary, E. A. Shoreland, occupies, rent free, the station-house of the Government. . . . Natumba, near Banana, we have just received permission . . . to select a site . . . and to settle on the premises in a tent till we can get a small iron house ordered from Liverpool.⁹⁹

Inasmuch as the steamer was still not ready for launching, the workers were given appointments. From beginning to end, the saga of the steamer Anne

Taylor had its comic touch. After one half of the transportable parts had been hauled in manloads a distance of sixty miles from Vivi to Isangila, the next navigable point in the river, it was discovered that the heavier machinery as shipped from England could not be moved without the most powerful pulling apparatus. Taylor's exasperation knew no bounds:

After innumerable delays and disappointments, utterly despairing of getting our steamer stuff transported to Stanley Pool, we [decided to have her] . . . built and put onto the Lower Congo, a first-class steamer, eighty feet long and sixteen feet beam.^[*] At that time Banana was the port of entry, and freights for the Upper Congo were carried up by river steamers to Matadi, the starting point of the Congo Railroad. With that arrangement our steamer would have soon refunded the money invested in her, and would have yielded a large income for the establishment of missions.¹⁰⁰

With this decision made, the first half of the parts had to be hauled back to the initial depository at Vivi. That accomplished, still more trouble ensued. When it came to assembling the steamer, no one knew how. Forthwith, a dispatch had to be sent to England for both a builder and an engineer, to put the Anne Taylor together again.

The builder did his work, but the engineer condemned the boiler sent out . . . as inadequate to the Congo service, making it necessary to order a new one by telegram from England, and he could not wait to complete his work. To avoid further expense and risk of hiring an untried engineer, Mr. Teter [stationed at Vivi] undertook the completion of the steamer.¹⁰¹

Teter, to do this, decided he must have the boat brought down to Banana, and accordingly "employed a Congo Government steamer to tow her from Vivi beach." Eventually, at Banana, "by his own genius and industry, [he] put in the boiler and adjusted the engines, high and low pressure, Worthington pump and fittings," and became engineer of the boat. Ironically, several years had now passed since the usefulness of such a steamer was determined, and when at last in 1892 the boat was ready for duty, the river transit system had considerably improved. By 1894 the steamer had become part of W. O. White's charge at Vivi, being used "as occasion demands, and as a Bethel Mission." Finally in 1897 it was sold, with Taylor's blessing.¹⁰²

The appointments of 1888 covered the full extent of the District.†

* Among the special features of the ship were a "bath-room, galley, capstan, to work by steam, electric lights, hose and nozzle . . . for many purposes, among others to put to flight, if need be, a fleet of attacking canoes." It also had a "saw-mill and separate steam-engine to run it, to saw wood when in transit, and to saw plank when at rest."—William Taylor, general report, in Gospel in All Lands, March, 1887, p. 131.

† The first and farthest station was Kimpoko. Here four people were appointed: Bradley L. Burr, Dr. James A. Harrison, and Hiram and Roxy Elkins. Luluabourg, Dr. Summers' station, was included in the list. Along the Congo, between the ocean and Stanley Falls, were the six centers Taylor had opened during his visit at Vivi. To Vivi itself—primarily a transport depot because of its convenient location on the river—J. C. Teter, J. S. Cutler, Silas M. Field, Edward E. Claffin, William Rasmussen, William O. White, William S. Briggs, William H. Arringdale and wife, and Mrs. Belle Claffin were appointed. To Isangila, also a transport center, E. A. Shoreland was sent. At Vumtomba Vivi Elizabeth J. Trimble, Mary B. Lindsay, and Mr. and Mrs. Lyman B. Walker were stationed. John A. Newth went to Sadi Cabanza; Charles Claffin to Matamba. Natumba, near the port of Banana, at the mouth of the Congo, was assigned to Mary Kildare, a spirited Irishwoman who had paid for her own way to Africa to join the Taylor forces, and Susan Collins. Finally there were the two stations established by Taylor as he first journeyed between Liberia and

For the Congo region the plan was the same as for Angola and Liberia: the missionaries were to plant industrial missions and child nurseries to accomplish the dual goals, self-support and evangelism. Taylor regarded the possibilities of achievement of these goals better rather than worse in Africa than elsewhere despite the backward state of civilization and the lack of foreign support to draw on. He told the General Conference of 1892 that the native people of Africa are, in available resources, the richest people in the world. Their debasing heathenism keeps them down on the dead-level of hand-to-mouth subsistence. What they need is leadership, to teach them to appreciate, develop, and utilize the indigenous resources of their own country for all the purposes of Christian civilization; hence, any plan of missionary work for Africa that does not teach, both in theory and in practice, the industries essential to that end, is too narrow to meet the demands of the case. Brain-culture and religious teaching are essential to the elevation of barbarous heathens to the plane of Christian civilization; but without hand-culture it will be an arid plane on which they must starve, or beg for subsistence. . . .

So that, to secure the best results of missionary labor in Africa, we must provide for the education of head, heart, and hand simultaneously, and the shortest and surest way to success is to begin with the little children.¹⁰³

How much his plan succeeded depended on the caliber of the missionary. Mamba, truly isolated from the rest of the work, was a case in point. At Mamba Ai Sortore, farm supervisor, died within three years from overwork. Following his death, Martha Kah, a woman of courage and perseverance, took on the double assignment of the farm and the mission all by herself. In 1888 the French government having gained control of this area by the 1884-85 Berlin Conference (which settled European territorial rights) an edict was issued that schools could only be taught in the French language. Taylor himself was ready to abandon the station, but Miss Kah was not willing to quit. In 1890 Henry Nehne came to assist and in 1894 married Miss Kah. They planted a good farm, built a "superior mission-house," and began a small boarding school. As for the language difficulty, a Swiss woman, Jennie E. Buckhalter, was obtained in 1892 as an additional missionary. She began a popular child nursery but, tragically, died in 1894 before her work got under way.¹⁰⁴

In contrast, Cabinda, also isolated on the Atlantic coastline, illustrated what a less than first-rate missionary could do. Taylor had such faith in his chief appointee, J. L. Judson, "as a man of superior ability and integrity"

Angola—Mamba, 150 miles north of the Congo's mouth, a two-to-three days' journey north from Banana, at which he had in 1886 placed Henry E. Benoit as preacher-in-charge assisted by Ai Sortore, as farm supervisor, and two women; and Cabinda, about fifty miles north of Banana, to which J. L. Judson was assigned, aided by Archer Steel, Jr., and Thompson. Some of these stations were of brief duration. Taylor's report to the Missionary Society in 1889 indicates a few of the vicissitudes of his kind of missions: "We, two years ago, started three stations between Vivi and Isangila—Vumtomby Vivi, Sadi Kabanza, and Matumba [Matamba]. We built pretty good houses at a total cost of $30, not counting our labor. One of the noblest young missionaries we had, John A. Newth, of London, sleeps, all alone, in his station at Sadi Kabanza [died 1888]. . . . The people I appointed to work Vumtomby Vivi and Matumba Stations became dissatisfied with their work and huddled together at Vivi, with others of kindred spirit, and worked against us."—W. Taylor, letter, ibid., August, 1886, p. 423; Sixty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1886), p. 49; ibid., 71st (1889), p. 38.

that he gave him letters to the Portuguese governor there and he was accordingly well received. "For a year," Taylor relates, "he reported extraordinary success in every department of his work. He went in by a dash and went out like a flash, by sudden death." Soon afterward the mission property was seized for debt and affairs were at sixes and sevens. Gradually the temptation and downfall of Judson became apparent to Taylor. In writing his obituary later on, he sadly commented that Judson "went unhappily into business speculations on his own account, wasted the funds entrusted to him for building up the Mission, contracted heavy debts in his own name, and fell into gross immorality, and suddenly died. . . . Poor man! we have no hope in his death!"¹⁰⁵

During these years the center at Kimpoko continued to develop. Once its original purpose was abandoned it was treated as a mission and industrial farm. To insure against droughts, an irrigation ditch over a mile long was dug, which tapped a mountain stream. In 1899 B. L. Burr, in charge, wrote:

Three of our boys have given up their fetiches and made a profession of having faith in Jesus. They join in all our social meetings, and we believe them to be sincere. . . . Mrs. Elkins, Dr. Harrison, or myself have been quite regular in visiting the villages and in endeavoring to instruct the people.

In times of sickness Dr. Harrison has been in the habit of visiting the farther villages . . . attending on all who asked for his services. . . .

I have had a general oversight of the station since Jan. 1, 1889. We have been self-supporting, besides paying out quite a sum for transport [they later built a mission house 15x80 feet]. . . . The plantation, though small, has been a factor in reducing our living expense, while the sale of hippo meat has kept us in ready money. [When short on cash, Burr would go out for a few hours to kill a hippopotamus or two.] We hope soon to get some cattle from the far interior by means furnished us by friends at home.¹⁰⁶

Burr, who served as Presiding Elder, too, a good part of the time, brought the mission to a high level of usefulness. When he died in 1894 he left it with "two good mission houses, a well-developed farm, small native school, and regular preaching appointments in the native villages." Two families were keeping up its efficient operation, the Rasmussens and the Jensens.¹⁰⁷

Luluabourg continued to be the only mission in the far interior and that in name only. It was not a success despite the hopes, dreams, and struggles to bring it into existence. When Taylor was prevented from getting there by lack of transportation in 1886 he sent Dr. Harrison to consult with Summers, and for a while both men labored together, finding favor with the people. A call for reinforcements was sent out, but nothing could be done. Unfortunately, Dr. Summers at best was not rugged in health. His first season at Luluabourg saw his store of energy much depleted by a severe attack of pleurisy and pericarditis for which he had no medicines, nor anyone to render personal care. In 1888 he died. The post remained "to be supplied" because of the impossibility of arranging transportation for appointees, although from time to time men were assigned to reopen the work.¹⁰⁸

At Vivi, under the hand of J. C. Teter and his capable wife, Mary Lindsay, a fellow missionary whom he married on the field, the fertile plains were made to bring forth mango and palm trees, and abundant garden produce. In the way of livestock, Teter reported he had "twenty-five goats, eight sheep, two head of young cattle, half a dozen muscovy ducks, and one hundred chickens." When short of meat he took his gun and went out to kill a deer or a buffalo. Within no time this mission, obviously, was self-paying.¹⁰⁹

The other missions, likewise, had become self-operating, the credit due mostly to the faith and ingenuity of the staunch pioneers. Mary Kildare for several years remained at Natumba, alone.* On her ten acres of ground—purchased for $120.—there was a "comfortable little house of galvanized iron." She conducted a school, with about twenty pupils, and itinerated on preaching missions to the nearby villages. With a box of Liberian coffee presented her by Taylor she began a tree nursery as well as a fruit orchard.¹¹⁰

A new station was opened in 1890 at Matadi, on the south bank of the Congo River across from Vivi. The town had been selected by a corps of Belgian railway builders as the logical point to begin the Congo inland railway since river steamers could traverse the waterway from the ocean to this point. With the beginning of the project some thousands of men were brought from Sierra Leone, Liberia, the Guinea coast, and elsewhere to undertake the labor. Great numbers of them had made an acquaintance with the Church's ministrations and in many cases had become members of the various missions.

Here at Matadi, passing through their acclimatizing fevers, many died. No church to go to when well, and no minister to visit them when ill, they got discouraged, and determined to go back to home and friends. In this condition of things Brother Teter [of Vivi] came across and down the Congo a few miles and established regular preaching on Sundays . . . He had large audiences, and soon a Methodist Episcopal Church organization of twenty-eight members.¹¹¹

Apart from this inviting opportunity no other work of account took place in the following years, although a few new appointments were listed. The Gospel in All Lands informed its readers late in 1893:

In January, 1893, there were reported on the Congo and vicinity the eleven stations of Mamby, Natomba, Banana, Boma, Matadi, Vivi, Mangila, Brooks, Manyanga, Kimpoko, and Luluaburg, with fifteen missionaries, about twenty-five members and probationers, and property valued at over $24,000. The steamer Annie Taylor, belonging to the mission, is running on the Congo River.¹¹²

* Mary Kildare was one of these wholly devoted spirits. Writing to a friend in America, giving thanks for a gift of supplies, she added: "I do wish I could tell you how very happy I am. It is such a wonderful joy to be in Africa for Jesus under any circumstance, but how much more reason have I to be joyful now. In every trial and discouragement the grace of God has been sufficient. . . . His presence has been my comfort and safety. I sometimes wonder if there is anyone happier than I. . . . I wish you could see how cozy and comfortable I am in this pretty little home, standing in the centre of an acre of ground. . . . all surrounded by a good strong fence with various kinds of fruit trees."—In Report of Bishop Taylor's Self-Supporting Missions from March 25th, 1888, to October 31st, 1889, pamphlet, p. 39.

With the continuing arrival of recruits*—some coming unbidden at their own expense, some from Liberia—a rough balance was maintained against the deaths and the departures. Of the fourteen self-supporting missionaries at work at this date, six were of the original Congo group, wholly committed to the Taylor proposition, thoroughly immersed in the work.

When in 1892 Taylor as Missionary Bishop submitted his quadrennial report to General Conference he was full of hope for the future of the Congo mission, though admitting that it was still in its infancy and not much had been thus far accomplished in "soul-saving." He had in mind to send out a large reinforcement so that the work could be pushed the twelve hundred miles from the Atlantic to the Kasai River. Mastering the Fiote language was just one drawback that he mentioned.¹¹³

As it was, the Upper Congo District had a hard time holding its own. In 1895, two years before the work was turned over to the Missionary Society, the annual report indicated a decline. A brave but forlorn note could be sensed in the description of Natumba, Vivi, and Isangila as "maintaining their ground hopefully," but the death of six men and one woman within a two-year period had left a number of stations without missionaries.

In 1896 Hartzell, elected as Taylor's successor, submitted a report to the General Missionary Committee in which he stated that the District at that time included six stations on the Lower Congo, three of which were occupied by eight missionaries; that there were twenty-six children in homes of missionaries, and that the property, including the steamer, and other assets, amounted to $12,900.

On his tour in 1897 Hartzell found only two missions actually functioning. One was Natumba, which Mary Kildare was still maintaining but without organized school or church work. At Boma he found property, and likewise at Matadi, but the former had never been opened as a mission and the latter had never been built upon. Vivi was still in good condition, though the man in charge, J. Oman, had just died. A mission family of converted children was living there. The string of stations farther along the river had been abandoned on account of the death or departure† of missionaries.¹¹⁴

* Those who served the Congo mission during the period 1887-95 were: Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Arringdale, Mr. and Mrs. Bradley L. Burr, Dr. James A. Harrison, Mr. and Mrs. Hiram Elkins, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Clafin, Mr. and Mrs. Lyman B. Walker, William O. White, Dr. William R. Summers, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Teter, Mr. and Mrs. William Rasmussen, J. S. Cutler, Silas M. Field, Mr. and Mrs. Edward E. Clafin, William S. Briggs, Mary B. Lindsay, Elizabeth J. Trimble, Susan Collins, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Steele, John A. Newth, E. A. Shoreland, Mary Kildare, Archer Steel, Sr., Archer Steel, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Lancaster C. Burling and their two children, J. L. Judson, Ai Sortore, Martha Kah, Henry Nehne, John Kuno, Jens W. Jensen, M. D. Collins, James G. Brimson, Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Walrath, Edward Pixley, Jennie E. Buckhalter, Mr. and Mrs. William Snape, and Mr. and Mrs. Crilles Jensen. Inasmuch as some of these names appear but once in the official records we cannot be absolutely sure that they entered upon work on the field.

† In the 1897 Missionary Society Annual Report Bishop Hartzell stated that Taylor had sent fifty-eight missionaries, all told, to the Congo, counting three children. Of these thirty-one had returned home, and at that time only five were on the field. He judged by this that the Congo had a much higher death rate than Angola.—Seventy-ninth Ann. Rep. M. S. (1897), p. 36.

INHAMBANE DISTRICT, EAST AFRICA

Before his official retirement, Taylor opened one other Methodist center on the African continent. Although he linked the work as a District with the Liberia Conference it was distant three thousand miles by coastland from the Angola endeavors thus far mentioned. The region was Southeast Africa, in the Tonga country, the area today of Natal and Mozambique. The entry of this far distant corner of the continent was another example of those fortuitous situations which Taylor so often came upon, recognized, and seized. For a number of years the American Board had occupied the area, but for a variety of reasons had decided to withdraw. One of their missionaries, Erwin H. Richards, had for ten years labored in the vicinity of Inhambane Bay (Mozambique)—the land of the Zulus—and did not have it in his heart to desert his converts. Taylor stepped in and as “a Christmas present to the Tonga people,” in 1892 appointed Richards to that portion of Africa, with entire control. The following year Richards returned to his former station and through “liberal responses of the friends of the cause” was able to “purchase back all the [American Board] mission property.”

To the Missionary Society Taylor reported:

We purpose . . . to open a mission this year in Zambezia, a large province opened by the English government,^{1*1} bounded on the north by the great Zambezi River. . . . It is said that the founders of that new province have promised to preclude from it both slavery and rum, and we want to cooperate with them in planting and developing Christian civilization there by means of industrial education, nursery missions, and Gospel preaching.¹¹⁵

Richards made a tour of his field and in 1894 arranged for work to be opened at four of the former centers, Inhambane, Makodweni, Kambini, and Mongwe. Taylor in response arranged for four missionaries to come from New Zealand to take up the work.¹¹⁶

While with the American Board, Richards had translated the New Testament into the Tonga tongue and had it printed at their Board press. Eventually from the successful labors of this one man sprang another Methodist Conference, but when in 1896 the work was turned over to the Missionary Society it was a part of the Congo Mission Conference. At that time five missionaries were reported and several native preachers and teachers, 275 children in missionaries' homes, and property worth $3,000.¹¹⁷

AFRICA MISSIONS IN RETROSPECT

At one point in the long history of the Liberia Mission the question was raised whether the Church was doing too much or too little for Liberia. The question reflected a double-mindedness and doubt as expressed in the administrative policy through the years. Even at this distance in time who shall say which would have been the better way? How many factors entered in, each of which would have to be tested as a variant—climate (humid, disease-laden), caliber of American white missionary leadership (at times plodding and unplanning, and at other times imaginative, energetic, and courageous), the character of the Liberian freedmen (a few educated and experienced, others uneducated and with little experience and unused to making decisions for themselves)?

* Zambezia was the former name of the British territories of Rhodesia and Nyasaland and a district of Mozambique.

The Church through the decisions of the Missionary Society, the General Missionary Committee, and the General Conference maintained no one steady policy. Neither was it thorough enough in exploring the alternatives and making a close study of results. This is not to condemn those in authority; their patience through the years dealing with a lethargic people,* too many of whom were willing for everything to be done for them and unassertive in doing things for themselves, grew thin. Also it must be remembered that there were an ever-growing number of foreign missions demanding the Church's attention and financial support at the same time. The Board's policy was one of vacillation with attempts at solution more in the nature of temporary expedients than considered and tested experiments. Whatever policy was tried, what was needed was determined, patient effort during a sufficient time to learn the value of what was attempted. The display of a certain amount of enthusiasm and confidence that the situation could be bettered was also needed to instill hope and to arouse the dependent Conference to greater endeavors. Some recognition of this was obviously in the mind of some General Conference leaders when after debating the issue in 1884, this body moved as though by common impulse to turn the field over to William Taylor. His reputation as a human dynamo had been well established and though he was a controversial figure, particularly on account of his disregard for the accepted official agency of missionary control, the possibility of trying a leader of his reputation and wide experience overcame all objections.†

The Church's established mission in Africa was in Liberia but for years, as we have seen, a strong desire existed to extend the work from the Americo-Liberians to the native Africans of the interior. In fact, it had been at times proposed to inaugurate a second, and independent Africa mission. Taylor's commission had been twofold: so administer Liberia that the spirit will be resuscitated, and open an effective mission to a "benighted" Africa.

First, then, what did Taylor do for Liberia? Probably not as much as was expected of him. By and large, he did not try to do too much about the

* It must be kept in mind that the struggling Republic of Liberia could do little about a school system.

† He was retired by the 1896 General Conference at seventy-five years of age. Despite his years he was still quite competent to continue. To the end he remained a controversial figure.

“old work,” as such. He approached the Liberia problem along three different lines. The most direct was through the Conference, when he made the members face squarely the condition Church life had fallen into and then proposed changes which were within the realm of possibility. Where a situation had been tolerated which led finally to neglect, he drove toward new resolutions on the subject, outlined plans, and wrote to the Board for men or means to put them into effect. He tackled the educational problem with full force, for the reasons the Board had long pointed out. Men on the field had to be prepared to take over.* The three seminaries had to be re-opened, and no excuses. While the Board came through patiently with extra appropriations as asked, for repairs and refurbishing, he saw that classes were begun even if all was not restored and ready to function on the most efficient level. Furthermore, he appointed people of his own ilk who undertook their work with an unswerving belief in its eventual success. It is interesting to note that even as late as 1895 Taylor and the Board were not seeing eye to eye about the kind of man he had put in charge at Monrovia Seminary. At least, it can be said that the educational system was once more in operation.

Lastly, Taylor’s plan included the establishment of new centers of work, not isolated, unrelated missions, but organized planned centers, located in a chain, in relation to each other, to serve as stepping stones to regions beyond. He opened three centers of work, two in new areas, the third, in the midst of the Conference work. All were, one might say obviously, on his system of self-support. He brought out from America his own missionaries to man them although he did occasionally appoint a Liberian. There was a plan behind the founding of these missions; those on the Cavally River he saw as an entree to the inland tribes from which thousands could be reached, and in an area as healthy “as our own Hudson.” Those along the coast were directed to one tribe, the Krus. As far as he was able he saw to it that these missions were related to all of native life: manual labor for the sake of the mission, and the teaching of skills as a means of livelihood; the introduction of large-scale farms and orchards for the better utilization of the soil and also to supply a steady income; the nursery schools for systematic instruction of children and youth and for their nurture as Christians; and the substitution of the natives’ gifts of free land and labor for the missionaries’ giving of “dashes.” Within this period he brought into existence, all told, twenty-eight centers of work, some of which through the years took on real importance.

While Taylor chose to turn over his work to the Conference and thereby

* His contention was that “the best material for [an] evangelizing agency in any country is the raw material—indigenous—and the best place for its development is the place in which it was born; that is the special business of my foreign missionaries, so that we have some hundreds of native lads and lasses under training for their great life work.”—Seventy-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1895), p. 30.

place it under the aegis of the Missionary Society, he was in no sense indicating a failure of his own system. The conditions on which he did so, and the state of the work at the time showed favorably what his method could accomplish. He pointed out that these stations had been carried on "with not a dollar from the Missionary Society" and that they were debt free. He felt that with income from coffee, and certain specific grants from the Society that there should be no trouble in maintaining them, to which end he offered his assistance. The proffer of the missions was in response to what he termed the desire of the Society to "take a controlling hand" in his African missions, but he was prepared to go ahead on his own should the Society decline his offer.¹¹⁸ The conditions he imposed were three: all stations receiving support from the Society to be under its control. Any person, however, desiring to found or develop a mission to the point of self-support should be free to do so. Lastly, all self-supporting churches abroad should sustain the same relation to the Methodist Episcopal Church as did those at home.¹¹⁹

Until Taylor's appearance, no white male missionary had been sent to Liberia in twenty-seven years. He personally brought to Liberia more than fifty men and women, mostly to take charge of his self-supporting work. By the proof of a good number of white people surviving the rigors of disease and fever, the Board felt reassured. Taylor believed it was God's will that he should concentrate again on building up a force of white missionaries.¹²⁰

Perhaps Taylor's chief value to the Conference was his presence as Bishop from America residing among the African people. Taylor said from the outset that the only way foreign Bishops could be effective in Africa was to "proceed to the field directly to which the Lord called them, eat where they labor, sleep where they eat, commit their way unto the Lord, trust also in him, and allow him to bring to pass results worthy of his own wisdom and preserving power."

One difference in Taylor's method was his reference to a time deadline, a date set for accomplishment. Everyone felt the goal could be realized—and within a short time. Besides, Taylor had an answer for everything—nothing was insuperable or discouraging. Language difficulties, for instance, he would face by introducing a phonetic alphabet. He hoped "by this short cut to have numberless interpreters in three years." If something failed, he always had a positive solution.¹²¹

South Central Africa was entirely Taylor's field, initiated by him, directed by him, and independent of any controls, either by the Missionary Society or by the Liberia Conference with which it was organically related by District organization. What he accomplished, speaking practically, was a mere beginning, a string of missions stretched across the face of Angola and the Congo. They served to introduce Methodism; they made friends; they established good will; and they made a few converts. When they were removed from Taylor's control and were officially received by the Church's Missionary Society and organized into a Conference some were closed down.

Was Taylor's way, then, a sensible scheme for the evangelization of Africa? One of the real values of the Taylor undertaking was in the spirit in which it was entered and in the faith which believed it could move mountains. As early as 1887, there appeared an editorial in the Methodist Review, presumably by Daniel Curry, in recognition of this:

Not the least valuable of the results that may be expected to accrue from Bishop Taylor's work in Africa is its probable influence in modifying the methods of missionary administration in the field and in the home office. . . . Organic ecclesiastical action is usually quite too conservative to utilize opportunities, or to venture upon perilous enterprises. The sure way to accomplish great results is to go about the work, and often that is possible only through a degree of practical disregard of constituted authority. . . . The hardships of ill-provided expeditions may become the most effective discipline for profitable labor; and if the outgoing host shall be depleted till only a few tried souls remain, these shall see the victory. . . . It is a good thing for a band of missionaries when the faint hearts fall out by the way; and Bishop Taylor's plan of hard service and poor pay may hasten the process among his not always wisely-selected recruits.

The watchword of 'self-support' comes in good time, and it may be hoped that it will accomplish much-needed amendments in the financial affairs of some of our older and well-established missions. It is found to be generally almost absolutely impossible to bring up a mission to the stage of self-support. . . . the continuous and assured receipts of gifts from the home treasury by a foreign mission is far from being wholesome in its action . . .¹²²

The sense of conviction he communicated to his volunteers which led them to dedication of their whole selves can be felt by his summation of purpose written for those at home:

God is most manifestly leading this movement, and if we go with Him we are bound to succeed on a scale in breadth, depth, and accumulating force, proportionate to the stupendous work to be done, and the available resources of God for this very thing. . . . We must go for a full realization of God's own purposes and plans We are in for it.¹²³

The entire dedication of some is illustrated by the case of Ardella and Samuel Mead, at the Malange station. The farm of three hundred acres had been bought with Mrs. Mead's own money. Taylor offered to refund the money along with interest and have the property deeded to the Transit and Building Fund Society. The Meads prayed over the matter and then returned the reply that "as they had given themselves body and soul to God for his work in Africa they had nothing to withhold, but would at once deed the whole property, free of all incumbrances and no pay, to the Transit and Building Fund Society."¹²⁴

William Rasmussen, a native Dane, provides another example. Converted in the United States in 1885, within six months he left for Africa. For four years he put heart and soul into his work at Vivi before being stricken by hematuric fever. Found insensible, he was sent back to Denmark by officers of the Congo State. Upon recovery of his health, he converted his mother and a number of friends in his homeland, and after a year left for Africa again where he married another missionary. He was arranging to build and open a new station, Brooks No. 2, when his health again broke. After recuperation in Denmark and the United States—where he worked briefly at the Danish mission in Des Moines, Iowa—he again returned to Africa in 1893 with his wife and small son. His health broke for a third and final time in 1895, and he died at the scene of his work.¹²⁵

When Bishop Hartzell reached the field and met the men and women with whom he would work, he had nothing but praise:

This company of Christian workers commanded my thorough respect as consecrated and faithful servants and handmaidens of the Lord. . . . They had been compelled to struggle, at times with desperation, for the necessities of life, and to build houses to shelter them from the heat and rain.

They had tried to hold more stations than was possible for their numbers, and had often been sick at heart because they had not more time for direct missionary work among the multitudes about them; their homes were poorly furnished, most of them sleeping on cots, and they could not have many things which in America would be considered absolutely necessary as household comforts. They had been systematic in their studies of the Bible, of good literature, and especially of the works of Wesley and Fletcher.¹²⁶

The question remains whether Taylor's premise concerning self-support in Africa was sound. William Taylor claimed that the Church had two methods in opening new fields, the "primary, apostolic method, of indigenous self-support from the commencement," and the use of funds and the "fostering care" of missionary societies. If these two methods "proceed harmoniously side by side" in England and America, "why can they not do so in any and all other countries?" But what appeared to him to be "undebatable" was considered by others to be a "fanatical, wild scheme" which would lead to scandal and disgrace. He could not see that his primary method would in any way "lessen the number nor retard the work" of the societies, but on the contrary believed that it would enlist "thousands of prophets and prophetesses who never could have been sent out by the Missionary Society" "Why put such men, already at the front of the battle," he added, "under the control of men ten thousand miles away?"¹²⁷

The Missionary Society was paying about $2,500. annually during these years for ministerial support, but it was also making additional appropriations for specific requests if it felt they were warranted. Bishop Taylor received a salary, as well, which he accepted, not for his personal use but because he wished to have available additional funds to put into his field as he saw fit. How much he may have given to Liberia it is impossible to know. In his own Liberian work, Taylor introduced new industries and occupations, some of which called for initial outlay. He also built well, importing corrugated iron for houses when possible. Such examples had their stimulating effect on the over-all work. Two or three new missions were begun by Liberians on their own following his success. The income received for ministerial support even when combined from both sources—that raised locally and that received from New York—did not cover the cost of living. In order to live, these preachers and the Local Preachers, too, had “the honor of carrying on this work mainly by their own productive industries of various kinds.” When the financial accounts were examined in 1896 it was evident that the centers which succeeded were those where a strong trade had been inaugurated with the natives, and in order to conduct such, oftentimes it was necessary to first put a considerable sum of money in stock. In the Congo for some reason trading posts were not set up. The other scheme for raising money, in which a tremendous investment had been made, the river transport business, was a fiasco which undoubtedly played some part in holding back the growth of the District. Isangila and Vivi, for instance, were especially designed to enter on the “transport line of business,” as their “paying industry.”¹²⁸

Critics were numerous from the beginning and not a little of their criticism had considerable point. It was asserted, for example, that food raised by the missionary cost twice as much as that available in the open market, that it was difficult to make a living during six days which would permit him to follow his missionary function on the Sabbath; that the necessities of earning a livelihood in a secular community sometimes called for a compromise of Christian principles. Probably these charges were half true. Some of Taylor's men having tried the system came up with criticisms out of their own experience. Joseph Wilkes, who with his wife and daughter had been stationed all alone at Pungo Andongo and had a particularly trying time, wrote following his return home three years later that the exigencies of existence forced the missionary to accept work which might be “to repair whiskey stills, false balances, and billiard tables” and “to keep accounts that relate to the white man's rascality in dealing with the ignorant heathen.” He described the “destitution among some of the missionaries” as “pitiable in the extreme.”¹²⁹ Charles A. Ratcliffe, at Luanda, who had the rather easy assignment of beginning an English language school for children of Portuguese residents, wrote, after putting his efforts into this line of self-support for a while, that he was going to resign and take to the road for direct evangelizing endeavors. Otherwise he could not feel that he was engaged in the great missionary movement in Africa.

The nature of some of the jobs cynically offered to missionaries and the kind of trade which had to be accepted in their own trading stores did prey on their conscience. A. E. Withey, Presiding Elder in Angola, wrote in 1891: Our Mission Store trade has been radically changed in character during the year, and for the better. The competition trade in rubber and wax it has been judged best to discontinue, on account of so much stolen property in this line being offered for sale, which could not be known to be the rightful property of the seller. And in its place, trade in breadstuff has been developed, which brings us nearer to the people to whom we came, and makes us fulfill a sort of Joseph office to the natives, which seems to meet a great need that they have.¹³⁰

Sometimes these real problems were only present at the outset, and as a workable system of self-support was evolved, and the most efficient ways found, a better planned program was introduced.

Withey gave a description of his District in 1892 which indicated a well-rounded life:

in general from four o'clock A.M. until eight o'clock P.M., with regularity and seasons of rest interspersed, we have been able to study the Holy Scriptures and two foreign languages, read the sermons and writings of the holiest men we have ever heard of, to translate into the Kimbunda a hymn book, catechism, the ten commandments, and portions of the Scriptures for our Ambunda and Brethren to teach our own and native children the word of God, and common English branches of study, 'to preach the word' every Sabbath and other days, . . . to hold Sabbath schools, to work with our hands, to repair station property, and lay foundations of new, and enlargement of old, to care for an increasing trade in five stations; to clothe our adopted children, to relieve the necessities of the poor and needy, to gather the lame, halt, and blind, and feed them, to sing to them in their own language, and teach them the word of God, to treat many sick, to bury the dead and to praise the Lord with cheerful hearts and glad voices of content, 'worshipping Him in the beauty of Holiness.'¹³¹

Another question which seems debatable was that of time. Not infrequently it was pointed out by critics that a missionary who was given his support by the Board could immediately without worry begin his evangelistic mission and give his entire time to it. Two missionaries could make almost twice as much progress. Under the self-support arrangement, it was claimed, it might take seven men to accomplish what one paid missionary might achieve within the same period of time. It was felt that one way or the other the faith type of mission failed. If seven men were stationed at one place there was a waste of man-power. If only one or two men were stationed, the spread of the Gospel was unduly delayed. To look at the matter in reverse, however, when the question was asked, "what did paid missionaries accomplish in Liberia and in how short a time?" no greater results were seen. In any case, the old familiar directive, "to lay foundations broad and deep," could certainly apply to the Taylor method. Three of his emphases, infant training, industries, indigenous resources, related Christianity to every facet of life of the African. Something must be said for the value of example, too. The Taylor missionaries in deriving their living from Africa itself were becoming at one with the Africans. They were not specialists in the Gospel, that is, one-sided in the aspect they showed of themselves, but people first who lived and labored on the scene and while doing so made God's kingdom their chief love.

One of the most insistent questions concerning Taylor's missionary system was financial. It was claimed by his opponents and sometimes by individuals connected with the Missionary Society that Taylor's was "the most expensive Mission ever established in one year," having cost $63,000., and that possibly it was "immersed in debt to a dangerous point"—a charge vigorously denied by Taylor. In any case, if the total outlay of the Board over the years was added up it would have been discovered that the sum ran to almost a million dollars.¹³²

The claim was made that Taylor was constantly appealing for money for his "so-called self-supporting Mission" which was, in reality, supported by money and goods sent from America, the only difference between it and a standard mission being that it had no parent committee and no organization. To this line of argument Taylor replied that the money donated was not a charity "never to be seen again" but an investment for God "on a business principle to fulfill a mission of mercy and come back with a margin of profit for the further extension of the work."¹³³

It has to be borne in mind in seeking to evaluate Taylor's missionary approach that it was a mission of faith. It was the belief that this work was of God, that He was in it, that He would provide. It was launched on a self-help basis, but it did not preclude the moving of the Spirit in others to lend a helping hand. When premises were being bought in Luanda, Angola, "a friend of the enterprise" saw fit to give $8,000., the price asked; when the need for a steamer was announced other friends donated $20,000. Taylor believed that by asking it shall be given unto you, although he added, "as you know we never solicit anything."

There was no doubt that Taylor went ahead and made whatever initial investments he felt were warranted to plant his industrial system or provide permanent shelter and mission houses. If some benefactor offered assistance, well and good, but if not he would proceed anyway. Apart from the special gifts, Taylor had his "Africa Fund," made up of general contributions from well-wishers in the United States and England. During a twelve-year period he received into it $54,053. This was greater by far than the amount the missionaries were able to raise on the field through their labor—$28,395.* The Trust Fund established in 1891 in Angola indicated a modification of the self-support principle. It served as a boost to the trade conducted with the natives—the most successful means of income to be found. Taylor was able to allocate to it only $7,773. over a four-year period, which fell short of meeting pressing needs. Hartzell observed in a financial report issued in 1897: "Had the trust or trading fund been enlarged to $10,000 or $12,000 and had the money for buildings and necessary outfits . . . continued, the mission stations occupied could have been held, and much more done in their development." Without a trading fund in the Congo, very little income was derived from the usual self-support schemes, and much of the work had to be neglected.¹³⁴

* It is interesting to see how income was derived. From the financial books of A. E. Withey, treasurer in Angola, come these figures for the twelve years 1885-97. Day schools at Luanda and Dondo during about four years provided $3,415. of the above. Burling as a mechanic earned around $2,000., and Andrew Myers about $1,000. at the same trade, and another $1,000. was realized from sawing and selling lumber at Malange. The chief income, some $16,800., came from profits in trade with natives at the several stores. Expenditures during the twelve-year period for living and general maintenance showed that on the average support of thirty-five people together cost but $2,584. a year.—Gospel in All Lands, December, 1897, p. 15451.

The chief contrast between the methods used by organized missionary societies and independents is one of placing of responsibility. An individual who is not duly elected and given a terrible trust of administration of millions of dollars for the sake of the Gospel can well afford to take risks, to venture, and to chance his life and those of his followers (whom he promises nothing better than the possibility of a glorious death). Such a man is in debt to no one; he can well carry "the Flaming Torch," as Taylor aptly titled one of his books, dramatizing and highlighting the work of the Lord, arousing enthusiasm and often pure joy. A missionary society would be irresponsible in the extreme if it did not consider, first of all, the preservation of the lives of those it appointed; if it did not weigh the best use of funds placed in its hands by its entire body of membership; if it did not keep a balanced distribution of men and money all over the world, not emphasizing one field at any particular time. Of course, these points made a difference. The Methodist Missionary Society had method and organization. It was moderate and sensible, as it had to be, but in the process some of the fire of mission undertaking was lost as the years passed by. Taylor was able to obtain what the Society could not, types of applicants who were fearless, even more than that—rugged, robust, and with consuming drive. By his system, too, he was freed of the financial worries which plagued the Board at every step it took. What better contrast than the Board's effort to inaugurate an interior Africa mission—the one at Boporo—and Taylor's Angola, Congo, and East Africa missions.

Bishop Willis King of Liberia comments in his "History" that while Taylor's plan of self-supporting missions has been generally considered a failure, he cannot view it in that light. He writes:

The final test of the value of Bishop Taylor's plan is what it did in helping to establish the work of Methodism in remote sections of Liberia, and in giving to it such vitality that, in its essentials, the work was carried forward by the people themselves, even after the missionaries withdrew. It is not a mere coincidence that, in some ways, the most vigorous and loyal Methodists in Liberia, are those on the Kru Coast, where mission stations were first established by Bishop Taylor and his self-supporting missionaries. With little aid financially, and left for many years without missionary leadership, they have remained loyal to Methodist traditions, and have kept alive their Christian heritage under most difficult circumstances. They have vindicated the faith which Bishop Taylor had in the possibilities of men of all races and nationalities to enter into the Christian heritage.¹³⁵

The same was true for other centers begun by Taylor. Not all, of course, remained in existence. However, before they are discredited, thought must be given to other factors which affect the welfare of a mission. Particularly in Africa, the introduction of Western civilization and the invasion of the white man created havoc with life patterns based on the simple level of native society. Steamboats, railroads, trading centers caused shifts in population. Unhealthful or badly located towns were more or less evacuated. The ancient trade routes were superseded by roads. But while necessity dictated the removal of missionaries from missions where population was diminishing, later visitors to these deserted mission centers have testified to finding a spirit of Christianity still present.

X

Expanding Foreign Missions— Europe

EARLY METHODISM differed widely from Presbyterianism and Lutheranism in having no close tie with the Churches of continental Europe. At one point, however, religious influence from continental sources made a direct and very significant contribution to the origin and rise of the Methodist Movement. In the evening of May 24, 1738, it will be recalled, John Wesley attended the meeting of a Religious Society in Aldersgate Street, London. There, according to his own words he felt his "heart strangely warmed. . . . did trust in Christ, Christ alone, for salvation" and received the assurance that he was "saved . . . from the law of sin and death." In this meeting Methodism as a spiritual and evangelical force was born. In the influences and events which led up to the experience the European Moravians and their teaching had no small part. He had first met some of them on the voyage to and sojourn in Georgia. He was particularly impressed by Spangenberg, lecturer of Halle University, the Moravian pastor to whose searching questions, "Have you the witness within yourself? Does the Spirit of God bear witness with your spirit that you are a child of God?" he could give only a hesitating, uncertain answer. Later at Herrnhut in Saxony he witnessed Classes with meetings for personal religious testimony, open air preaching, and preaching by laymen. While at the Aldersgate meeting the inner light burst upon Wesley's mind and heart as "[o]ne was reading Luther's preface to the Epistle to the Romans." There was comparatively little in common between the spirit and teaching of the nineteenth century Lutheranism of Germany and the Scandinavian countries and the experience and religious faith of the Methodist preachers of the same period. As for the Calvinism of the Reformed Churches, its basic doctrine of predestination was the very antithesis of the Arminian teaching of free grace and universal redemption central in Wesley's preaching* and that of his followers.¹

* This statement does not ignore George Whitefield's adoption of the Calvinistic creed nor the founding and spread of the Calvinistic Methodist movement. However, it was apart from the main stream of Methodist life and theology and never took root in America. See John S. Simon, John Wesley and the Methodist Societies, pp. 34, 47, 98-99.

Against this background it is understandable why the practice of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the period 1844-95, and more recently, has differed from that of the Presbyterian and Lutheran Churches. In his One Hundred Years . . ., a history of the missions of the Presbyterian Church, U.S.A. (1837-1937), Arthur J. Brown says:

The Presbyterian Church . . . recognizes that churches . . . known on the Continent as Reformed, have long been established . . . ; that they are indigenous there with European history, traditions and leadership; that they are so widely distributed that there would be no justification for establishing American controlled churches alongside of them; and that any assistance that they require from their American brethren should be given to them for their own work.²

While the Methodist Episcopal Church was in general accord with the Presbyterian and Lutheran Churches that Europe was not considered foreign missionary ground for American churches in the same sense as Africa and the Orient, it considered itself fully justified in answering appeals which came from European countries for spiritual help. It also felt justified, when converts were moved, for their own spiritual welfare, to organize Societies within the more formal State Churches and to aid them as their needs seemed to require. The impetus for separate denominational organization, as we shall see, came more from within than from without.*

NORWAY MISSION

Norway, in common with Sweden and Denmark, following the Reformation embraced Lutheranism and supported a State Church. About the middle of the nineteenth century the laws were relaxed sufficiently to allow Catholic and Dissenter worship.

Methodism in Norway owes its introduction to a single founder, Ole Peter Petersen. As a young Norwegian sailor, Petersen had his first contact with the Methodists in Boston in 1843. The next three years brought much serious reflection and a strong feeling of spiritual need. In 1846 he responded to an altar call by Olof Gustaf Hedström,† Swedish pastor of the Bethel Ship Mission in New York Harbor. On a sea voyage thereafter, in March of 1846, his soul found peace.³

After an absence of five years, Petersen returned to Norway, arriving at his home in Fredrikstad in June, 1849. His intention was to witness to his new-found life in Christ, and to get married. He was detained for about a year, owing to an inner compulsion to fulfill his self-imposed mission. Meanwhile, he not only impressed his fiancée with his fervent and cogent personal witness but left lasting evidence in homes where he attended or conducted prayer meetings. A number of Hans Nilsen Hauge's* followers, given to pietism and critical of formalism in the State Church, were aided by him to a clearer understanding of the sacraments and of evangelical doctrine, including "freedom in Christ" and "the witness of the Spirit." Petersen's plan, at that time, was not to preach nor to create a new denomination.⁴

* The Bulgaria and Italy missions were exceptions to this statement.

† For Hedström and the Bethel Ship Mission see pp. 271 ff.

In 1850 Petersen, still a layman, returned with his bride to America, meaning to earn his living in coastal journeys at sea but, through the influence of Hedström, who hoped for greater things from him, he was made a Local Preacher in 1851. Shortly thereafter Bishop E. S. Janes sent him as a missionary to the Norwegians in upper Iowa. Meanwhile, people in his native land in whom he had awakened desire for a more vital faith were appealing to Hedström and to the Missionary Society for Petersen or someone equally well qualified to come and preach to them.

At a meeting of the Foreign German Committee of the Mission Board, held March 16, 1853, Pastor Hedstrom called attention to this revival in Norway, begged of the visit of Mr. Petersen, and a special committee was raised by the Board to bring the subject before the Bishops having charge of foreign missions.† The committee promptly discharged their duty, and on the 8th of June following Bishop Waugh addressed a letter to Mr. Petersen, recalling him from Iowa, and directing him to report to the Corresponding Secretary of the Missionary Society as missionary to Norway. His business, as the Bishop told him, was "to raise up a people for God" in Norway.⁵

On July 31, 1853, Bishop Waugh ordained Petersen both deacon and elder and in December he arrived in Fredrikstad, Norway. During his three-year absence Methodism had flourished, but Mormonism also had gained ground, coming from America by way of the Danish Mormon mission at Copenhagen. Some Norwegians, it was reported, knew no distinction between Mormonism and Methodism. Many doors were at once thrown open to the Methodist preacher from America. He went about preaching with power before large gatherings. People were awakened and his first letters to the missionary office reported some fourteen conversions. But offense also was taken by some that a missionary had been sent "to so enlightened a nation as Norway." Others objected to the novel doctrines of the Witness of the Spirit and complete sanctification. Opposition "occasionally became violent."⁶

Petersen meanwhile was made to feel like an alien, since the laws required that in order to leave the State Church a person must testify before

* Hans Nilsen Hauge (1771-1824), the son of a peasant, convinced that he was divinely commissioned, began to preach at the age of twenty-six, attacking rationalism and calling people to repent. He was thrown into prison and for twenty years (1804-24) was held in custody. His followers, known as Haugianer, or Leser (that is, readers), were earnest believers in evangelical doctrine.—Encyclopaedia Britannica, 1954, XI, 253.

† A few months earlier the General Missionary Committee (Nov. 9, 1852) had shown an interest in missions in Scandinavia by making an appropriation of $750. "for work in Norway and Sweden." At the 1853 meeting the appropriation was increased to $2,000.—"Minutes, General Missionary Committee," Vol. A, Nov. 9, 1852; Nov. 3, 1853.

a magistrate he had elected to follow a certain non-Lutheran pastor, who likewise must appear before the same magistrate, show his credentials, and swear obedience to the laws of the land. For the first two years he considered it advisable to counsel his converts to remain in the Lutheran establishment, despite the awkward and uncomfortable relations. His reasons were twofold. In the first place, he thought it best not to give the impression that conversion consisted in transferring from one Church to another. Also, he felt that his followers would be stronger in their determination if they were given opportunity to weigh the consequences more carefully and unhurriedly.

With the beginning of a revival in Sarpsborg, a town of about one thousand people, not far from Fredrikstad, Petersen took up residence there, while he continued to travel extensively. He reported striking successes in Sarpsborg, with many seeking help through prayer. Still, in all humility, he said he did not understand why the Methodist Church had entrusted him with so important an assignment in this "dry land." The work was arduous and exhausting. At times it was a chore to remove his shoes before retiring at night. He wrote, "I have for some time been traveling six or seven miles on the Sabbath, all on foot, and preached three times; sometimes to very large congregations. In addition . . . , I preach as often in the evening through the week as I can get opportunity."⁷

Petersen's reports in the fall of 1855 complained of lonesomeness, of having received no word of advice or encouragement from New York, and of accomplishing only a few conversions during the summer. He was diligent and consecrated but temporarily frustrated:

I love the doctrine and like to converse about it. But when I speak in its favor I feel an inward voice saying, Teach yourself before you teach others. . . . I feel, sir, that we are but ill-qualified as yet to establish a mission in this foreign land without books and a man able and qualified for this undertaking. . . . I am not able to undertake the work without more help and means. . . . We have twenty privileges in America to one in this country. And if I may be allowed to speak the true feeling of my heart, I should be very glad and thankful to God if there were a sure way opened for me from Norway to America again. I often wonder whether I have any personal religion or not. Please remember us, and do what you can for us.⁸

In July, 1856, Christian Willerup,* who had been serving in the Wisconsin Conference as a missionary to the Norwegian and Danish people, arrived in Norway, under appointment of Bishop Morris, as Superintendent of the Scandinavian Mission. He became pastor at Fredrikshald (later Halden), not to be confused with Fredrickstad, while Petersen remained in nearby Sarpsborg. Withdrawals from the State Church now began. Among the first to leave was Andrew Haagensen, then a young man, who joined the Methodists to give his life to preaching and editing. He and eleven others submitted a request to the government church department for permission to organize an independent congregation at Sarpsborg, with Petersen as pastor. They also sought recognition as a branch of the Methodist Episcopal Church. With the granting of these requests, Methodism became the first dissenting body to benefit from the law of 1845 making independent congregations possible.⁹ On September 11, 1856, the first Methodist Society in Norway was organized at Sarpsborg with about fifty members. At the close of the year the Society had grown to 119 members. A Sunday school was begun, the first of any denomination in Norway. Before the close of the year Halden (Fredrickshald) likewise had a Society of about seventy members and a Sunday school. Many of Petersen's adherents kept their names on the books of the State Church. Possibly some attended his meetings as a convenience, there being no Lutheran church in Sarpsborg.

* See pp. 276 f., 279.

An adequate church building was now the immediate need in Sarpsborg. Meetings were being held in private homes, in shops, and in schoolhouses and sometimes, Willerup reported, "not only the house has been full, but many have stood in the yard and on the street." He prayed that God would provide a "sufficiently roomy and substantial meeting house." In 1857 the congregation erected the first Methodist church building, without help from the Missionary Society.¹⁰

Willerup was much encouraged by the growing number of adherents, as well as by the episcopal visit in 1857 of Matthew Simpson, the first visit of a Bishop to Norway. He relieved Willerup of his pastoral charge and appointed him to Copenhagen, "that he might lift up the standard of evangelical religion" in the capital of Denmark and that he might be a more general evangelist.

Engebret Arresen, once a Haugian preacher, was appointed to the west coast town of Porsgrunn. There a Society was organized on May 22, 1858.¹¹

In 1858 Bishop Morris appointed S. A. Steensen and A. Cederholm, both from the Scandinavian missions in the United States, as missionaries to Norway. Steensen was sent to Sarpsborg to work with Petersen. The next year Petersen returned to the United States and for nine years the Norway Mission was deprived of his assistance. On his departure Steensen became pastor. Cederholm was appointed first to Enningdal and a little later to Halden, which in 1859 had 148 members, two Local Preachers, four Exhorters, and nine Class Leaders.¹²

On the threshold of the 1860's total membership in Norway reached 595, with Sarpsborg (250), Halden (184), and Porsgrunn (90) having the largest number of members. Three new preaching places, Eidsberg, Holand, and Enningdal, had been established. There were now five pastors and five Local Preachers. Five Sunday schools were reported, with a combined membership of 134.¹³ Although faithful work was done by the pastors little advance was made during 1860-65. Willerup's reports as Mission Superintendent were much the same year after year for all the stations. In 1861 Holand became a four-point Circuit served by P. Olsen, assisted by M. Hansen. In 1863 two new appointments were added, Hedmark County and Odalen. The next year a small Society was organized in Kristiania (now Oslo).¹⁴

Corresponding Secretary Durbin, who visited Norway in 1866, was of the opinion that emigration to America was the chief hindrance to more rapid growth of the mission. He noted also the lack of literature in the Norwegian language and the great need of a school for the ministry. Also: He noted the obstructions to Methodism that were interposed by the clergy, and such as came from the laws that prevented the exercise of the pastoral office by dissenters; and he advised that measures be taken to obtain formal authority to exercise the pastorate; and if it should not be granted, then he advised the Methodists to proceed to the exercise of pastoral functions without it and to let the question of privilege be tested by law.¹⁵

Bishop Calvin Kingsley made an inspection of the Norway Mission in 1868. His study of the situation convinced him that Willerup's administration—partly because his residence was in Copenhagen—was less effective than it should be. In reaching this conclusion he agreed with O. P. Petersen, who had suggested as much in correspondence with the Bishop. Accordingly, he appointed separate Superintendents for the three Scandinavian countries, naming Petersen as Superintendent of the Norwegian work. He instructed Petersen, then in Wisconsin, to proceed to Norway and administer the mission "until it should be revived and should spread widely and with power."¹⁶

Reluctantly leaving his family behind, Petersen made his way back to Norway in the summer of 1868. He found conditions no less challenging than in the 1850's. In his first report following his return he emphasized problems growing out of the subordinate relationship of Methodism to the state religion. He was particularly concerned over the influence exercised by the State Church upon the children.

You may depend upon it, that so long as we shall have to send our children and youths to the Lutheran State Church for training, we will not be able to make much progress as a Church, and our children will not fare very well, at times they will be abused; if that was all it might be borne with, but they must listen too, and be instructed in some of the State Church heresies, and be told that they must not follow their parents, but come back to the State Church and be confirmed therein, otherwise they cannot be respected or married, but will be looked upon as heathens, etc.¹⁷

Petersen arrived in Norway in June, 1869. For that year he reported, conservatively, a total membership of only 656. There were ten preaching points, seven church edifices, and nine Sunday schools. Within three months he had visited all points in the Norway Mission and had "preached often to large and attentive congregations," where God had manifested His power and awakened the souls of the listeners. He was disturbed, however, that the mission appealed, for the most part, to "the poorer classes, who work from five o'clock in the morning to seven and eight o'clock at night for about sixty cents a day." Among the few more prosperous who attended, there was a tendency to hold back because of the pressure of the poorer folk who crowded the small and uncomfortable meeting places. Nevertheless, the revival spirit was so pronounced that the State Church built prayer houses next to its churches and permitted laymen to speak against Methodism.¹⁸

In accordance with his understanding with Bishop Simpson, Petersen took leave of Norway in 1871. He had accomplished much in two years. Membership had risen from 656 to 975; five new Sunday schools had been organized, and the number of scholars had increased from 241 to 604.¹⁹

To succeed Petersen, Martin Hansen was appointed Acting Superintendent. He had been converted as a seaman through Episcopal and Methodist influences in New Orleans in 1855, and had returned to his home in Sarpsborg. Here he joined the Methodist Church in 1857. His ordination as elder followed in 1870. Among the earlier congregations that he served were Porsgrunn, Skien, Brevik, Halden, Horten, and Oslo. His new appointment was popular with his ministerial colleagues. On his initiative a children's paper, Den Lille Børneven (The Friend of the Little Children) and Evangelisk Kirketidende (Evangelical Church Times) began publication.²⁰

Hansen's reports from Oslo reveal a healthy growth. In 1873 he was appointed Superintendent in full charge. He could record that in the capital city alone 120 persons in full connection and 177 on probation had been added to the church rolls. The construction of a new chapel to accommodate 1,200 was begun in 1873. One widow gave $4,500. in the form of property. Other members contributed sacrificially. The building cost $16,800., about half of which was paid at the time of dedication in 1874. Because of the economic doldrums in the 1870's both in Europe and in America, the Oslo debt hung heavily upon the pastor and his parishioners. Hansen found time to open a school for the training of young men for the ministry. It soon had seven students, but, since the enterprise required financial assistance from the Missionary Society, its future was uncertain.²¹

Bitter opposition to Methodism developed in the west coast seaport city of Stavanger, where Anders Olsen began preaching in 1874. One clergyman delivered some forty polemics against the Methodist heresy, while others were only less vitriolic. Pastors and members of the Church were ridiculed. Verses in derision of the "Methodists" were sung. And as late as the watch night service of 1876 worshipers were disturbed and alarmed by an unruly crowd outside.²²

Hansen proved to be an efficient Superintendent. During his term of office Methodism was given a solid footing in Norway. While there had been thirty-three preaching points in 1870 there were in 1875 eighty-two. Among the more promising charges, recently organized, were Kragero, Larvik, Kongsberg, Honefoss, Furnes, and Stavanger. From 896, membership had increased to 1,870. On probation were another 637. Annual offerings had risen from about $3,000. to over $13,000. While nothing had been raised in 1870 for missionary purposes or for self-support, during the Conference year ending June, 1875, $843. was paid to the Missionary Society and $823. was gathered for self-support.

The Superintendent briefly summarized the progress of these years:

We have gone forward both spiritually and financially; we have grown in numbers and in strength; and I think it may be said, to the glory of God, that the members in every Society are growing in wisdom and grace. I think there are very few of them who are not truly converted to God, for, in the first place, we do not generally receive any in full connection of which we have not reason to believe that they are converted; and, secondly, we exclude every member who will not walk in the ways of our Lord. And, besides, backsliders commonly leave us of their own accord and go back to the State Church.²³

NORWAY CONFERENCE

The time had come for Conference organization. Pursuant to the action of the 1876 General Conference* Bishop E. G. Andrews convened the Norway Conference on August 17, 1876. Charter members were six Norwegian preachers who had previously been elected as elders in the Wisconsin Conference and one as deacon. Five preachers were received on trial and three were admitted into full connection. Christian Willerup was transferred back from the Denmark Mission to give him Conference status although he was to continue his work in Denmark. Receipts for self-support and benevolences had materially increased. There were seven much-needed Local Preachers, eighty-three Exhorters, thirty-six Sunday schools with 1,859 pupils, and seventeen churches and chapels. Appointments† were divided into two Districts, Kristiania and Porsgrunn.

Certain restrictions still hindered the growth of the Church. It was impossible, for example, for persons under nineteen years of age to leave the

* G. C. Journal, 1876: "That a Conference be organized in Norway to embrace that country, and to be called the Conference of Norway."—P. 301.

† Appointments were: Kristiania District, Presiding Elder, Martin Hansen; Oslo, Frederick Ring, one to be supplied; Hamar and Furnes, Lars Dobloug; Odal and Kongsvinger, Lars Brynildsen; Holand, Christen N. Hauge; Moss, Joseph Wahlstrom; Fredrikstad, H. Joachim Petersen; Sarpsborg, Hans P. Thorstensen; Halden (Fredrikshald), Christian Willerup; Drammen, Hans P. Bergh; Kongsberg, Bernt Jorgensen; Honefoss, Nils Jonassen. Porsgrunn District: Presiding Elder, Anders Olsen; Stavanger, Ole Olessen; Arendal, to be supplied; Kragero, to be supplied; Brevik, Bernt Larssen; Porsgrunn, Peter Olsen; Skien, Christian P. Rund; Larvik, Carl L. Carlberg; Horten, Seved Hansson.—Gen'l Minutes, 1876, pp. 109 f.

State Church, hence probationary members of the Methodist Societies had to be at least that old. It was not possible for Methodist members, no matter how well educated, to become schoolteachers, military or naval officers, judges, or apothecaries. Bishop Andrews, however, was impressed by the extent of freedom which dissenting Churches enjoyed.

Boards of trustees can be regularly incorporated, and hold property for the Methodist Episcopal Church. The rites of marriage, baptism, and the Lord's supper, performed by our ministers, are of unquestioned validity. No espionage is held upon our assemblies. All is entirely free.²⁴

The Bishop was convinced that Methodism was making a significant contribution to Norwegian church life:

far beyond its organized and numerical success, it has quickened religious thought, has made manifest the defects of the existing Church life, has stirred the pastors to greater activity, has introduced in many places better measures for the religious improvement of the people, (the prayer meeting societies are an evidence,) and thus beyond its own proper limits has done great good. I believe that this result is of incalculable value, and amply repays all our efforts.²⁵

In 1877 Bishop Andrews again presided over the Conference. He found that progress during the year had been "eminently satisfactory." A reduction in missionary appropriations for the first six months of 1877 had necessitated greater efforts for self-support. Prior to the annual session the Presiding Elders had ascertained in their respective Quarterly Conferences the ability of the Societies "to bear additional burdens." Thus equitable apportionments could be made for the coming year. Assessments for self-support were increased.²⁶

The years 1876-80 were characterized by both temporal and spiritual difficulties. Annual Conference sessions were held in successive years in Horten, Oslo, Stavanger, and Drammen. In 1877 Frederick Ring, by resigning as pastor of the strategic Oslo church, helped to set in motion a series of withdrawals. He is said to have inaugurated an independent evangelistic movement which centered chiefly in himself.²⁷

The economic situation was very serious. Hansen said in his 1879 report:

The reason of our pecuniary troubles has been the general suspension of business every-where in the country, on account of which the wages have been considerably reduced, and several of our members been without work and without bread. With regard to Church matters, there has been a disorganizing tendency among our people, caused by persons who seem to wish to elevate themselves above the ordinances of the Lord and all other authority. Under the influence of this commotion the people have been running here and there, forgetting the one thing needful

* * * *

The Sunday-school work has also been hindered and restrained in no small degree by the whirlwinds that have agitated our spiritual atmosphere. The fault may partly be with the parents, and perhaps with some of the teachers, but the chief cause is, doubtless, to be found in the selfishness, willfulness, and the perverted and distorted idea of liberty that appear at present to be prevailing.

Anders Olsen told of similar difficulties in the Porsgrunn District. Hansen subsequently pointed out that economic trials were forcing some congregations, then in debt, to seek once more financial assistance from the Church at large. The men were mostly day laborers, who generally could not earn fifty cents a day, and the women, who were in the majority, earned little or nothing.²⁸

Bishop S. M. Merrill convened the 1880 Annual Conference on August 19. He vigorously seconded the appeal of the Conference to the Board for special appropriations in relief of pressing church debts, particularly at Drammen and Larvik. The statistics, he stated, could not reveal all that the churches did for themselves such as relief of poverty of members, payment of rents, and payment of State Church taxes.

The Bishop was distressed by the opposition and the handicaps imposed by the State Church. In some instances imposing edifices were erected near the plain chapels of the poorer Methodists. All dissenters were required to contribute toward the cost and maintenance of the stately structures that they never frequented. In addition to these hindrances to increase of membership heavy emigration caused serious losses. As a result membership in 1880 fell off 225 from the preceding year.²⁹

In 1880 Martin Hansen left Norway for America. However, this loss was at least partly compensated for by the arrival of John H. Johnson from the Norwegian-Danish Conference, who was appointed Presiding Elder of the Kristiania District. He appears to have been equally effective on both sides of the Atlantic.* In his first report from Norway he declared that he had traveled and preached daily to well-filled meeting houses. "The Spirit of God," he said, was at work.³⁰

The 1881 session of the Conference at Fredrikstad was marked by tremendous enthusiasm. "At all the public meetings the chapel was densely packed, and at the preaching services, held in a large hall, no less than three thousand persons were present." The popular response was, in fact, much greater than the official membership would suggest, for at that juncture there were not even three thousand in full connection.³¹ Bishop J. T. Peck presided at the Conference. Visitors included Secretary John M. Reid and Karl Schou, Superintendent of the Denmark Mission. The twenty-fifth anniversary of the founding of Methodism in Norway was observed. Martin Hansen's effort to maintain a school at Oslo, because of lack of financial support from America, had proved unsuccessful and urgent need was felt for a theological institute. A lively discussion occurred concerning the feasibility of establishing a union seminary for the three Scandinavian missions, Norway, Denmark, and Sweden. Because of unexplained difficulties "not easily surmounted," the three committees appointed to consider the project—one from each country—found the proposal unworkable.³²

* John H. Johnson (1837[?]-96) emigrated from Norway in 1857 and located at Perry, Wisc., where he became a district school teacher. In 1859 he united with the Methodist Church and later was licensed as a Local Preacher. He enlisted at the beginning of the Civil War in the Fifteenth Wisconsin Regiment, composed mostly of Scandinavians in which, after the resignation of the chaplain, he received from the government a chaplain's commission. In 1865 he was received on trial in the West Wisconsin Conference. He became a member of the Norwegian-Danish Conference at its organization in 1880 and in August of that year sailed for Europe as a missionary. He held important pastorates in Wisconsin, including Richland, Sheboygan, and Racine. For twenty-two years, in Norway and the United States, he served as Presiding Elder. At the time of his death he was pastor of the First Norwegian Methodist Episcopal Church in Chicago.—Obit., Christian Advocate, LXXI (1896), 50 (Dec. 10), 883; Official Biographical Files, Division of World Missions.

New congregations in Trondheim and Haugesund were reported in the Larvik Conference of 1882. In 1883 chapels were built at Bergen and at the glassworks near Rands Fjord Station. In Trondheim a two-story building, favorably located, was converted into a combination parsonage and chapel, the chapel being on the second floor. Johnson wrote to the New York office concerning Trondheim: "nobly has the missionary, our dear brother Ristvedt, with a few true-hearted men and women, toiled and struggled to get our work firmly established here; and here is the most important point for our mission work north of the Dovre Mountains." The chapel in Bergen, seating five hundred persons, also was erected above a first-floor parsonage. Considerable indebtedness resulted, but Bergen was no exception in that respect.³³

The Conference of 1884 in Bergen brought news of much activity in church building. New churches were dedicated at Tonsberg and Eidsberg while several others were refurbished. Nels E. Simonsen and James A. Sanaker, both later to become prominent in Norwegian mission work in the United States, were ordained by Bishop John F. Hurst. A committee was named to collaborate with similar committees in Denmark and the United States in composing a common hymnal.³⁴

Notably active in the work of the Church at this time were two women, one of them a hymn writer and the other a public speaker. Elevine Heede, while studying in France, came into contact with a Wesleyan minister and his family. Her life was changed. For a time she taught the Norwegian and English languages in the Methodist theological school in Oslo, editing meanwhile a children's paper. Of even greater significance was her preparation of Sions Harpe, the recognized hymnal of Norwegian Methodism. She composed some original hymns, including the beloved "Aand fra himlen" ("Spirit from Heaven"), and translated others from the German and English languages.

Frederikke Nilsen played a somewhat different role. A well-known actress for twenty-six years, she was at the time of her conversion the prima donna of the theater in Bergen. Eventually she took to the Methodist pulpit, despite general opposition to women's participation in public affairs. On occasion she digressed from preaching to lecturing, especially on the right of women to preach. Not only did she attract large crowds in the Scandinavian countries but likewise in America, where she appeared in some three hundred cities and towns in twenty states. At the time of her death in 1912 Norway and Denmark were about to adopt woman suffrage, a tribute to the indefatigable labors of Mrs. Nilsen and her associates.³⁵

The 1885 Conference was held in the city of Trondheim. The location was described in a most interesting way in the Annual Report of the Missionary Society:

Far up in the North, farther north than, perhaps, a Methodist Conference was ever before held, at Trondhjem . . . the Norway Conference met this year, on the 11th day of June. The old cathedral of the city, built in 1035, is the most remarkable edifice in the kingdom. This was the capital of the old Norwegian kings, and the old palace still stands, being used as an arsenal. In this . . . place, amid a most interesting people, Methodism had a week of great interest and gladness while the Bishop and preachers conferred together as to how spiritual holiness could be spread over that 'land of the midnight sun.'³⁶

Optimistic reports of progress were made by Johnson, serving as Presiding Elder of the Bergen District, and Lars Petersen, Presiding Elder of the Kristiania District. A mission had been opened at Kristiansand on the south-east coast and churches built at Haugesund and at Tistedal, near Halden.³⁷

Bishop Cyrus D. Foss presided at the eleventh Annual Conference, which met in Halden in 1886 with twenty-six Conference members present. The Bishop emphasized the significance of the Sunday-school movement in a country where thirty years before such a thing as a Sunday school was unknown. Now not only mission churches but "every State Church" had a school. The "evangelical leaven," he said, had permeated religious thought and earnest religionists continued to awaken people from "their doctrinal ceremonial stupor." To this Johnson added: "Not only the work of temperance and lay preaching, but every other good work in the country has been quickened and advanced by the presence and work of Methodism."

In Kragero a lot was bought and plans made to build a chapel following a revival. New mission work was undertaken in Levanger and in Vardalsoren where a merchant soon began to build a chapel. In the same year new Societies were organized in Hamar and Kristiansund (not to be confused with Kristiansand).

Encouragement was stimulated not alone by evidence of spiritual growth, but also by increased membership. The reports for 1886 recorded 3,737 members and 659 probationers. There were thirty-one churches and chapels and forty-eight Sunday schools with an enrollment of 4,099.³⁸

The 1887 Annual Conference met in Oslo. The year was notable in the improvements made in churches and in church building. At Lister a new church, costing 4,700 crowns, was dedicated. Two new Societies were organized—a second organization, located in the center of the city, at Oslo, and a Society at Vardalsoren, sixty miles north of Trondheim. Heavy emigration to the United States prevented continuance of growth in church membership.³⁹

One of "the most substantial, fine, and well furnished churches" in the mission was dedicated at Skien in 1888. A frame church at Kristiansand and a brick church at Kragero were dedicated; also a church at Kongsberg. At long last Johnson was able to report that the theological school at Oslo was in operation. In 1885 announcement was made of 12,000 crowns having been collected for its establishment. The school began with six students, and M. Hansen as principal. Courses were given in the Norwegian, English, and Greek languages, Church history, theology (Wakefield's), Bible exegesis, counseling and psychology. The Board of Education (U.S.) made a grant of $250. for loans to students. A factor retarding Church growth not previously mentioned was stated in Johnson's report. Many converts, he said, were intrigued by the so-called "free-mission" movement which discouraged church membership. In 1888 Johnson left Norway to return to the United States. M. Hansen was reappointed to the Bergen District to succeed Johnson.⁴⁰

Bishop Charles H. Fowler met the 1889 Norway Conference on July 17 at Kongsberg. Little of special interest was reported. At Hamar a new church had been built. J. Lanaker was elected as principal of the theological school in succession to Hansen. Anders Olsen succeeded Petersen as Presiding Elder of the Kristiania District.⁴¹

The Skien congregation were hosts to the 1890 Annual Conference in their new church, Bishop H. W. Warren presiding. Under Hansen's active leadership the Bergen District was able to make a good report, although only four of its charges had a hundred or more members. The District stretched "along the Norway coast from Kragero to Hammerfest," the most northerly town on the globe, a distance of more than 1,200 miles. The District had a number of small churches, some of which were "new and very poor." On July 6 a new church for the Society of twenty-five members was dedicated at Egersund. At Hammerfest, which had a population of 2,300, Hansen organized a Society of eighteen members on May 25. A second preacher was sent to Bergen, the second largest city in the country, with a population of 48,000, so that work might be carried on in two sections of the city. On the Kristiania District, as for several years past, little progress was reported.⁴²

Only a fragmentary report of the 1891 Annual Conference, held at Bergen in July under the presidency of Bishop J. M. Walden, reached the Board office. The Conference voted two to one against the admission of women to General Conference and was also against equal representation of laymen. During the year sixteen Epworth League chapters had been organized, with a combined enrollment of three hundred young people, in contrast with earlier years when their membership in a dissenting Church was illegal.⁴³

In 1892 the Conference was divided into five Districts: Tromsø District, in the north, with only three churches; Trondheim, with four appointments "reaching from Aalesund [Alesund] to Levanger, a distance of 180 miles"; Bergen District with twelve appointments; Larvik District, with seven, extending from Skien to Drammen, about 130 miles; and Kristiania District, covering an extensive area, with fifteen appointments. Only two of the five Presiding Elders traveled their Districts.* Of the other three, two were pastors and the third was principal of the theological school. The school in 1893 had nine students preparing for the ministry. The need for it became more apparent every year. This year there were several town and country places in which preaching might have been established but preachers were lacking. During the year the fifth Society in Oslo was organized, made up of members transferred from the first church. Two chapels were dedicated during the year, one at Hammerfest, the other at Tauggronden, a village several miles from Kongsberg. At Oslo an orphanage had been opened. The first contribution toward it (500 crowns) had been made by M. Hansen as a memorial to his deceased daughter. Friends also aided by additional gifts. In 1893 twenty orphans were being cared for.⁴⁴

Debts on many of the churches continued to be an impediment to growth, increasing the difficulty of adding new members. Other hindrances were enumerated by J. Thorkildsen, Presiding Elder of the Bergen District, in his 1894 report:

The slow going character of the people, with some marked exceptions, the prevalent tendency against reforms, and the naturally cramped state of the lines of communication often make mission work very difficult.⁴⁵

The 1895 Conference met at Stavanger, Bishop James N. FitzGerald presiding. Increase of full membership for the year was 118; there were, however, only thirty-four more probationers than in 1894. Most of those converted, he said, as in previous years, did not become members of Methodist Societies but stayed in the State Church.

The Bishop also visited some other places, preaching the word of God to multitudes. At Bergen he dedicated a new chapel for the Second Church there. . . . The chapel . . . is a solid building with good light, and has sittings for five hundred hearers. The debt is large At Voss, a country place about seventy miles from Bergen, a new chapel was also dedicated by the bishop.⁴⁶

This year, which marked the end of the period 1845-95, the Norway Conference had thirty-one ordained and thirteen unordained Norwegian preachers. Other helpers numbered sixty-seven. There were 4,736 members in full connection and 509 probationers. In addition 2,555 adherents were reported, and 10,450 attendants at public worship. The forty-three churches and chapels were supplemented by ten halls and other places of worship. The fifty-seven Sunday schools enrolled 5,728 pupils. Little effort had been made to provide parsonages. This year only one was reported. Other than the active effort in behalf of temperance reform little emphasis was placed on social work. Also, in contrast to most of the overseas missions, women's work had no distinctive place in the mission program.⁴⁷

* In 1892 the Presiding Elders were: Bergen District, Johan Thorkildsen; Kristiania District, T. B. Barratt; Larvik District, James A. Sanaker; Tromsø District, J. P. Lie; Trondheim District, Anders Halversen.—Gen'l Minutes, Fall, 1893, p. 275.

The membership as stated in these statistics by no means represents the total results achieved in the four decades of earnest effort. Every year some of the converts—in some years a considerable proportion—emigrated to America where they became members of the rapidly growing Methodist Societies in the Middle West and Northwest. Norwegian emigrants, in proportion to the population of their country, exceeded in number the emigrants of all other European countries, with the exception of Ireland. Many of the converts—in some years a majority—remained in the State Church. While this restricted the growth of the Methodist Church it is probable that it was a factor in modifying the rigid formalism and contributing to the warmth of the religious life of the State Church. While the Methodists constituted a small minority in Norway during these years they nevertheless gave impetus to the movement for religious toleration, temperance reform, and the religious education of children.

DENMARK MISSION

As in Norway, so also in Denmark at mid-century, dissatisfaction was felt with the stiff formalism and privileged political position of the State Church. At the same time apathy in matters of moral and spiritual concern prevailed. Hans Nilsen Hauge of Norway helped to lay the groundwork for free church movements. Nicolai Frederik Severin Grundtvig's advocacy of the "living word" in preference to dogmatic liberalism in theology gave inspiration to the popular movement.* The Danish government voted religious toleration in 1849.

The first Methodist to preach in Denmark, according to Haagenen, was a Dane, Boie Smith, who had turned to Methodism in New York City in 1849. In 1857 he returned to his native land where he was engaged by the Scandinavian Mission.⁴⁸

Christian B. Willerup of the Scandinavian Mission, released by Bishop Matthew Simpson in 1857 from his pastorate at Halden "that he might be

* Grundtvig (1783-1872), a Danish poet, statesman, and divine, first expressed bold theological opinions in 1810. For many years he was forbidden to preach, but in 1832 he was again given freedom to express his views in the pulpit. His theology was characterized by a substitution of the authority of the "living word" for the apostolic commentaries. His aim was to see each congregation almost autonomous. Patriotism had a large part in his dogma; he established popular schools in which national poetry and history were part of the curriculum. His followers regarded everything as pure, and therefore were free to enjoy all pleasures.

a more general and active evangelist," and particularly that he might undertake a Danish mission, arrived in Denmark about the first of July, 1858. In that year the Missionary Society announced that a goodly number of persons in Kobenhavn (Copenhagen) were preparing to become members of the Methodist Episcopal Church by applying to the government for separation from the State Church. On January 11, 1859, the first Methodist Episcopal Society in Denmark was organized in Copenhagen.⁴⁹

Denmark at this time comprised the peninsula of Jutland and a group of islands in the Baltic Sea. Beginning in Copenhagen, the capital city, on the island of Sjaelland, the mission expanded into smaller centers of population. In late 1858 or January, 1859, and again in 1860, J. P. Larsson, of Swedish birth, who had for a while continued Willerup's work in Halden, having his hands tied in Sweden by the lack of religious freedom, joined Willerup to assist him temporarily in Copenhagen, but returned to Norway in 1861, this time to Fredrickstad. Also in 1860 Boie Smith commenced to preach in Vejle and Markus Nielsen came from Porsgrunn, Norway, to open a mission in Svendborg. In 1861 Lars Dobloug was transferred from Norway to aid Willerup. By 1862 Societies were organized in Vejle and Svendborg. C. Johansen, once a leader in a free church in Norway, was appointed in 1863 to Aalborg, formerly included in the Norway Mission. Work was begun in Faaborg and Trolleborg in 1865, with Christian Sorensen as pastor.⁵⁰

In 1864 Willerup reported that although members had increased at every place where a Society had been formed yet on account of removals, principally by emigration to America, the total membership for all Scandinavian work was less than stated in his report for the previous year.⁵¹

Probably the greatest immediate need was a church building in Copenhagen. As early as 1861, Willerup had declared that the house in Copenhagen was crowded with people, mostly of the poorer classes. "The higher classes and persons of position," he reported, "drop away on account of the uncomfortable quarters we are confined in." But he did not wonder at their leaving. Sometimes the throng and the atmosphere were "almost intolerable."⁵² Financial aid came from a wealthy Copenhagen man, converted by the mission, who gave 3,000 rix-dollar (about $1,500.) toward a church. Also, Harold Dollner, Danish consul-general and merchant in New York, gave liberally and in his will provided for building additional churches. The General Missionary Committee appropriated $5,000. in 1861 and the Missionary Society promised in 1863 whatever amount was necessary for the completion of the Copenhagen church, knowing that Dollner had already contributed $5,000. in 1863 and might donate more.⁵³ War between Denmark and Prussia in 1864 delayed construction but finally the building was completed and on January 6, 1866, the beautiful brick structure of St.

Paul's Methodist Church, Byzantine in style, was dedicated. Among the audience of a thousand people were several dignitaries, including a judge of the Supreme Court, the governor of the city, some university professors, some Lutheran ministers, members of Parliament, and Joseph A. Wright, United States minister to Berlin. Wright delivered an impressive speech before the altar, with P. K. Rye interpreting for him. Rye, who had been assisting Willerup in Copenhagen since 1864, was associate pastor of the church, which at that time had only ninety-eight members, including probationers, and a Sunday school of twenty-two pupils. The church was later renamed St. Mark's, partly to accommodate the Lutherans since they too had a St. Paul's Church in the city. Denmark at the close of 1865 had five appointments: Copenhagen, Vejle, Svendborg, Aalborg, and Faaborg (which included Trolleborg), with 181 members in all.⁵⁴

Corresponding Secretary Durbin visited Denmark along with the other Scandinavian missions in the summer of 1866. He judged on the basis of his observations that the opportunity for evangelization was not as great in Denmark as in Norway.

It is noticeable that our missions in the country circuits in Denmark do not prosper as in Norway; and I suggested to Brother Willerup, . . . [that it would] be better to employ the brethren in Norway if he had need of more men there. He seemed convinced that we ought not to let these Danish missions be disbanded. Two or three years will indicate the best policy to be pursued in this respect.⁵⁵

In 1868 three superintendencies were created for the Scandinavian countries; Willerup, a Dane, was continued in charge of the Danish Mission. In 1869 four ordained men carried the responsibility of ministering to 219 members on three Circuits and nineteen preaching points. Four Sunday schools enrolled 326 children. M. Nielsen, who had been appointed to the Copenhagen church, found on examining the register that of all those who had been received into church membership since the beginning of the mission, seventy-three had emigrated to America; 133 had withdrawn or been expelled; and thirteen had died; leaving 100 members, of whom fifteen were probationers. In 1870 a new field was opened on the island of Lange-land, where Bishop Grundtvig had at one time been active. There twenty people stood ready to join the Methodist Church. On this thirty-five-mile-long island, separated from Svendborg by fifteen miles of water, services of worship were conducted temporarily in the spacious house of a farmer.⁵⁶

At the close of 1872 Karl Schou succeeded Willerup as Superintendent; Willerup retired to the United States. Schou came at a critical juncture.

Theaters and saloons are the universal resorts on Sabbaths, more than other days. Prostitution is licensed, and it is almost impossible either for a lady or gentleman to pass unmolested through the thoroughfares of the city. The prisons are about closed against religion; no persons being permitted to speak with the prisoners upon the subject of salvation but the priest. In the hospitals likewise, some of our sisters, who are nurses, have been repeatedly cautioned against speaking to any about their souls We are not permitted to enter unless some one of our members is sick, and not permitted to speak to any other.⁵⁷

There were, however, reasons for encouragement. Hindrances to recognition by the government were removed; Schou won legal recognition in 1872 as pastor of the Copenhagen congregation by taking the prescribed oath of loyalty to the State. A Young Men's Christian Association was organized. Improved prospects were not confined to Copenhagen. By 1874 the Danish Mission as a whole had 388 members in full connection and twelve Sunday schools with 1,013 pupils. Support came from an unexpected quarter when the United States minister to Denmark, M. J. Cramer, made bold to preach and vigorously defend the Methodists. It developed that he himself was an ordained Methodist minister and a member of the Cincinnati Conference.⁵⁸

At Odense, the oldest city in the north part of the island of Fyn—according to tradition founded by Woden himself—Schou rented a hall in 1874, and the following year services were held regularly. There Grundtvig's adherents were gaining strength, and an unusual kind of opposition developed. While they discarded the orthodox interpretation of Scripture they regarded the work of the Holy Spirit in the heart as of prime importance, but in practice often obstructed Methodist advance. The movement gave vent to drinking, dancing, and gambling. "Every thing is pure for them," said Schou. "These are our bitterest opponents."⁵⁹ In the four preaching points on the island of Fyn (Odense, Svendborg, Faaborg, and Trolleborg) only fifty-five Methodists, including ten probationers, could be officially reported in 1875. Nine new preaching places were added to the appointments. On the island of Thorseng, where at first an entrance was gained with difficulty, there were seven preaching places. In Schleswig, then under Prussian control, for the first time permission was gained to preach.⁶⁰

In 1876 Schou was moved to declare that "the devil had marshaled all his forces of every kind against us." Other than this he mentioned no specific obstacles! He had visited all of the charges and most of the preaching places several times and had found the services well attended and "often pervaded by deep religious feeling." Many probationers at the various charges had been dropped—in Copenhagen over eighty at one time—for what reason is not stated in the reports. Work was begun this year at Vendsyssel, off the north end of Jutland.

The year 1877 was said by Schou to have been "especially marked by continued and heavy trial, and much hard work without any great results." Financial difficulties affected all but bore most heavily on the laboring classes. A new chapel was built at Vejle, also with the aid of Mr. Dollner. N. F. Carstensen saw fit to exclude some unruly members at Copenhagen but prospects for the future were nevertheless good. The work in Jutland was extended this year (1877) to include a large part of the northern section. In 1878 in Vendsyssl eight hundred people attended a single meeting. At the annual meeting of the mission Bishop Bowman divided the Vejle Circuit and listed two Circuits in the Vendsyssl section of the country—Fjovring and Frederikshavn—each with seven appointments.⁶¹

Schou's guarded optimism suffered a blow in 1878. Carstensen in Copenhagen returned to the church of his fathers and took many of his parishioners with him. Under these trying circumstances Schou recorded in 1878:

I took charge of the society in February, and have been here alone since, without the aid of a local preacher or exhorter. God has been good to us during that time, and brought us out of our sore afflictions, and given us gladness for sorrow. His name be praised.

In this difficult work I have had a wise and faithful counselor in Dr. Cramer, the United States Minister to Denmark. I cannot speak too highly of the interest he has taken in our work here. He has aided me by his counsel and assistance, liberally by his means, and filled the pulpit for me several times.⁶²

Copenhagen later revived. A lesser blow came in 1879 with the expulsion of Sorensen, pastor in Langeland, for having caused Methodism much embarrassment by his "ungodly and wicked life."⁶³

The 1880 meeting of the Denmark Mission was convened in Copenhagen on September 2 by Bishop S. M. Merrill. All of the members of the mission were present at the first session. Appointments were made to seven charges,* each of which had from six to twelve preaching places. There were in Denmark at this time only four chapels. In his report to the Board the Bishop emphasized a crying need for more preachers and more chapels.

There ought to be just double the men employed in Denmark, and many more plain comfortable chapels. The people can be reached, but they will not make their church home in rented halls, often uncomfortable, difficult to reach, and never churchly in appointments. The State Church influence necessitates the building of churches to be dedicated, and treated as churches.⁶⁴

Too many of the rented halls and church sites were in out-of-the-way places. The chapel at Langeland was an example of the too prevalent remoteness. It lay in the country, six miles from Rudkobing, the only town on the island. Besides, when it was built in 1875 it was with the proviso that one half of it, fitted for a dwelling, should be occupied by the donor and his family for the remainder of their lives. At other places the rented quarters were only small rooms—at two points basement rooms "where a feeble light and damp atmosphere make it rather unpleasant to sit for a couple of hours, even if it is to listen to a most interesting sermon."⁶⁵

Bishop Merrill's plea for more chapels was reiterated in the report of

* The seven charges and the pastors appointed in 1880 were: Copenhagen and Christianhavn, Carl F. Eltzholtz; Vejle and Circuit, J. J. Christensen; Hornslyd, Horsens, and Circuit, H. Hansen; Rudkobing and Circuit, C. Thaarup; Frederikshavn and Circuit, P. M. S. Jensen; Odense, Svendborg, and Circuit, J. de L. Thomsen; Hjorring and Circuit, O. Olsen.—Sixty-second Ann. Rep., M.S. (1880), p. 106.

Bishop J. T. Peck the next year (1881). He recommended that "one or two churches should be built each year for a decade, and at least one new city entered every year." The annual meeting was held at Vejle where the chapel was too small to entertain the mission satisfactorily. City authorities denied the mission the use of the town hall, contrary to the treatment accorded to Methodists in Norway and Sweden. Two chapels were built this year, one in Frederikshavn and another at a country appointment on the Vejle Circuit. Societies were organized at Odense, Horsens, and Enkelund. J. de Lorent Thomsen, recently from America, the first preacher stationed at Odense, achieved remarkable results through the regular means and through open-air meetings. His preaching changed the lives of many. Lutheran opposition developed to the extent of inaugurating a Sunday-school program of their own and exerting pressure upon the children of Methodist parents to join.⁶⁶

Day schools were established during these years in several places and were rendering excellent service, particularly on the Vejle Circuit. The year 1882 was marked by the dedication of a church at Svendborg on October 15, built of brick, with an auditorium seating four hundred people. The 1883 annual mission meeting was held in the new Svendborg church. The ministerial force was increased by three, two Local Preachers and a missionary, H. Jacobsen, transferred from the South India Conference. He was a native of Denmark who had served in seamen's missions at Calcutta and at Rangoon, Burma. He was appointed to Odense.⁶⁷

At the 1884 annual meeting the mission celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Denmark. In his report Schou commented on the religious progress during the period:

Great changes have taken place in that period of time here in the country, also in the religious condition of the people. That great instrument of good, the Sunday-school, which was scarcely known twenty years ago, is now an acknowledged power even in the Lutheran Church. The employment of lay workers in spreading the Gospel message, which was despised and scorned, has also become a powerful instrument for good; so much so, that a proposition has this year been made by a number of Lutheran pastors that laymen, upon certain conditions, should be admitted as preachers and pastors. Though such a proposition could not for a moment be entertained by the higher powers, still it shows the tendency.

. . . We are preaching the Gospel in more than 60 regular appointments. . . . Though our loss of members has for many reasons been great, we have reached 1,000, with as many adherents, and over 2,000 regular attendants. In our 22 Sunday-schools we teach over 1,400 children⁶⁸

In 1885 mission work was begun in an attractive rented hall, "Bethania," leased for five years, located in a populous section of Copenhagen. Preaching services were held twice a week, with prayer and Class meetings, and a Sunday school maintained of more than two hundred children. In the Christianhavn church, there were seven sermons each week, three prayer meetings, thirteen Class meetings, and three Sunday schools with about six hundred scholars. Preaching services were also held twice a week at a mission hall (in a changed location), as also Class and prayer meetings, and a Sunday school.

This year the mission had six day schools. The schools were operated within the law; instruction was given in all the subjects of the public school, and the girls in addition were taught sewing and embroidery. However, education on higher levels was available only under Lutheran auspices or through private tutoring.⁶⁹

The stimulus of the Methodist Sunday-school movement was more and more felt among Lutheran officialdom.

Methodism was the first religious body in Denmark to begin the Sunday-school work, and although it was for years opposed and declared to be unnecessary for Danish children, it has now been taken up with vigor, in some places in self-defence and in other places with good intentions, and Lutheran Sunday-schools are being established throughout the country. In September last a public appeal for help was issued by a pastor here in Copenhagen, that he might be enabled to prosecute his Sunday school work, which was threatened by the sects, and especially by the Methodists.⁷⁰

Relations with the Danish government remained somewhat less than cordial. The Methodist Church was one of the recognized churches in Denmark, but in order to have the benefits of legality, it was also necessary that the pastor receive government recognition. The first to receive recognition was Willerup. In 1872 recognition as pastor of the Copenhagen Church was given to his successor, Schou, as we have noted, when he swore loyalty to the State. All Methodists in Denmark were then considered members of the Copenhagen Church until further recognition took place. It was not until September, 1886, that legal recognition was extended to another, H. Jacobsen, pastor of Horsens. Horsens was the youngest and smallest of the appointments, but here, in the State Prison, Jacobsen had converted a noted convict. It was doubtless for this that he was given recognition, and, in accordance with the regulations, for only so long as he served the Methodist congregation at Horsens. The recognition then was of little value. Because of this many who were interested in Methodism did not take steps to leave the State Church, and could only be counted as adherents.⁷¹

The prevailing disregard of the Sabbath by the populace posed a problem. The Methodists strictly observed Sunday as a day for rest and worship and many of them were thrown out of employment by their refusal to work on that day. The unwillingness of many converts to unite with the Church also continued to be an insoluble problem. Schou made a study of the church records over a ten-year period and found that less than a half of those professing conversion joined on probation and that a half of those who became probationers later decided to remain in the State Church. He concluded that the impact of Methodism upon the attitudes and religious thought of the Danish people could not by any means be measured by its membership rolls.⁷²

The year 1887, in Schou's judgment, was one of the best the mission had known. The membership was increased by more than fourteen per cent and no previous year had closed with so large a number of probationers. A fourth Sunday school was opened in Copenhagen. The pastor at Odense and Faaborg reported fifty-five conversions. At Frederikshavn the congregation so increased that it was necessary to enlarge the church.

The 1888 annual meeting was held at Svendborg. With Bishop Mallalieu's encouragement action was taken to establish a theological institute at Copenhagen. The school was opened on August 1 with five students. Again this year a larger net gain in membership was registered than in any previous year, a total of 175.

While 1889 saw a larger number of conversions, 415, a net gain of only 173 was recorded. On February 3, 1889, the Dollner Memorial Church, an imposing Gothic structure, was dedicated in Odense, the most beautiful and practical of any Methodist church in Denmark. Although it seated 550 people it was uncomfortably crowded on many Sundays of the year. Adjoining this brick building stood a day school, with apartments for the pastor and the sexton.

Schou died during the year. He had been an excellent Superintendent and was therefore difficult to replace. Bishop Fowler appointed J. J. Christensen his successor.⁷³

In Copenhagen in 1890 a third preaching place was established, known as Elim. At Frederikshavn, a seaport on the Kattegat between Denmark and Sweden, many of whose inhabitants were fishermen, the Methodist Society in 1890 had a membership of 343, including probationers. Some of the fishing boats bore such names as Wesley, Fletcher, and Moody. The Copenhagen Theological Institute, as it was called, caused the mission to be less dependent upon transfers from the United States. It usually had five or six students who were aided by the Board of Education in America. Christian Jensen, one of the 1890 graduates, was sent in 1891 to Kalundborg, an "ancient town . . . [of] five thousand inhabitants in Sjaelland [Zealand]." He began his work there in a dancing hall but such interest was awakened that the hall would not hold all who came to the meetings. The congregation resolved to build a church, which was dedicated on July 14. It accommodated four hundred people and was filled every Sunday. A year later there was a Society with sixty-four members and nineteen probationers.⁷⁴

Christensen reported in 1891 that at Vejle ninety persons were converted during the preceding year and seventy-four received on probation. He said:

I believe . . . [the pastor] would see yet greater results if we had a larger chapel. We have, in order to reach all those who desired to attend the meetings, preached in the woods around the town; here several hundreds have assembled to hear the preaching of the word. It was here that our Annual Meeting was held this summer; we were then obliged to rent a large public hall, where we held our services, and where Bishop Walden preached to a crowded house.⁷⁵

By 1890 a Methodist Book Concern, established earlier, was advancing rapidly in the size of its operations.* Two weekly papers were printed and circulated, Kristelig Talsmand and Sondagsskolen, as well as hymnbooks and a quantity of tracts. The growth of the operation is shown by the fact that in 1890, 1,455,000 pages of matter were printed and in 1892, 2,331,085. The staff of the Book Concern in 1892 consisted of a manager, a printer, a compositor, and two boys.⁷⁶

The Denmark Mission did not make heavy demands upon the Missionary Society. Valiant effort was put forward to achieve full support although many of the converts were poor and their ability to contribute was limited. It was quite impossible for some of the pastors with families of three or four children to live on the meager salaries of three or four hundred dollars a year which they received from the people. Expansion was hampered also by shortage of preachers. If more men and more money were available, Christensen wrote in 1892, he could easily have opened twenty new preaching places during the year for he had received "invitations from several towns to come and preach the word of God to them." Churches were also dedicated at Varde and Holstebro. Building steadily continued, with two churches erected in 1893: a new chapel, called Bethania, for the second Methodist church in Copenhagen; and a church at Vejle with seats for eight hundred, a pastor's quarters, a schoolroom, and two apartments available for renting.⁷⁷

At the 1895 annual meeting fifteen charges were filled by as many ministers, leaving two places to be supplied.† There were eighteen ordained ministers and thirty-five "other helpers." Full members numbered 2,540; probationers 304; an increase for the year of 107 full members and sixteen probationers. Adherents were estimated at 2,790. There were thirty-two Sunday schools with an enrollment of 3,659 pupils. The Epworth League had thirteen chapters and 737 members. Church buildings totaled seventeen and rented halls, 116. Nekso, on the Baltic island of Bornholm, appeared in

* The first mention of the circulation of printed matter originating in Denmark occurs in the Report of the Corresponding Secretary made to the Board of his visit to the Denmark Mission in the summer of 1866. He wrote not long after the building of the first Methodist church in Copenhagen that "the brethren have commenced a weekly Sunday-school paper, which they circulate among the congregation, by the aid of the Sunday-school scholars, at one cent per weekly number."—Forty-eighth Ann. Rep., M.S. (1866), p. 63.

† Appointments in 1895 were: Aalborg, C. Jensen; Aarhus, H. Hansen; Esbjerg, Laust Christensen; Faaborg, Jens Nielsen; Give, R. Petersen; Frederikshaavn, L. C. Larsen; Holstebro, C. Thaarup; Horsens and Hornsyld, S. N. Gaarde; Kalundborg, P. M. S. Jensen; Langeland, to be supplied; Lokken, C. Nielsen; Nekso (on the island Bornholm), Lauritz Petersen; Odense, Anton Bast; Randers, to be supplied; Svendborg, N. P. Nielsen; Varde, P. Egelund Nielsen; Vejle, Anton Christensen, S. K. Johansen, teacher in Copenhagen Theological Institute and editor of Kristelig Talsmand and Sondagsskolen.—Seventy-seventh Ann. Rep., M.S. (1895), p. 118.

the appointments for the first time. Christensen and several other preachers had visited the island in 1894 and held a series of meetings. A number of people who were converted asked for a regular pastor and took it upon themselves to build a church which was dedicated in December, 1895.⁷⁸

Despite the annually reiterated statements of Superintendents Schou and Christensen concerning the influence of the Denmark Mission on the State Church, and the indubitable fact that a majority of the professed Methodist converts remained within the Church of their fathers, it cannot be said that Methodism, preceding 1895, became a great force in Denmark. Its future, however, was no longer in doubt. Its leavening power in later years would be determined by its genuineness and continued growth in a land where formal Christianity had long been known and among a people whose loyalty to Lutheranism or to any other form of Christianity showed signs of lacking depth and strength.

The more sensuous aspects of Grundtvigianism attracted some, while others became adherents of Mormonism at its strong Copenhagen mission. Many hundreds of converts emigrated to Utah, the Zion of the Mormon faithful. Despite severe competition from without and some ministerial defections from within, Methodism gained enough members and followers to guarantee its continuance and growth in years to come.

SWEDEN MISSION

Sweden, like other European countries, had embraced Christianity centuries before Methodism appeared as a religious force. Following the Reformation, the nation established a State Church, founded upon allegiance to the Augsburg Confession—though it was not officially Lutheran. Methodism, at its inception, was introduced into Sweden in a modest manner. By the time the Methodist Episcopal Church was ready to list the country as a missionary field the way had been well paved.

In the form of Wesleyanism the Church was first made known in Sweden in the eighteenth century through a Swedish Lutheran priest who had himself become acquainted with it while serving in America. Through the earnestness of this man—Dr. Karl Magnus Wrangel—Wesley had previously sent his first missionaries to America. Following a conversation between Wesley and Wrangel, it was arranged also for the introduction of Methodism to Sweden by the formation there of a society to print and distribute tracts.⁷⁹

Methodism was given much greater impetus as a result of the evangelistic labors of George Scott of England, who was undoubtedly the outstanding religious personality affecting Swedish religious life in the nineteenth century. For twelve years, until expelled by the government, he worked indefatigably for vital Christianity. Scott had no intention of introducing

Methodism as an organized Church yet his preaching resulted in the free church movement in Sweden,* of which Methodism became a part.⁸⁰

METHODISM COMES FROM AMERICA

When Olof G. Hedström began preaching aboard his floating chapel in New York, on May 25, 1845,† he set in motion a chain of circumstances destined to establish the Methodist Church in all the Scandinavian countries, as we have seen thus far. Sweden, like Norway and Denmark, was evangelized first by converted sailors returned to their native shores. The Missionary Society officially included Sweden only after appeals had come from the land itself.

The number of people who came under the influence of Hedström's preaching was amazing. Victor Witting—later made Superintendent of the mission—writes that there were as many as twenty-eight Scandinavian ships in New York Harbor at one time. He personally had experienced Hedström's influence:

The first time I saw Pastor Hedström was toward the end of October, 1847—the same day I arrived in America. We had hardly anchored in New York Harbor, opposite Castle Garden, when a middle aged man, large and with black hair, carrying a package of Bibles and tracts under his arm, came aboard. This was Pastor Hedström. After he greeted the Captain and had a few words with him and other officers, he began conversation with immigrants and seamen, inquiring what kind of passage we had, bidding us welcome to America, dealing out some tracts, and finally pointing to a distant ship flying the Swedish flag, he invited us to come there in the evening since a Swedish Service would be held.⁸¹

Hundreds of these immigrants and seamen found a vital Christian experience at the Bethel Ship. Some settled permanently in America, establishing Scandinavian churches in the localities to which they went. Others were seamen on temporary call in New York who, by the nature of their work, returned to their homeland in due course of time. On arrival they told relatives and friends of their new-found religious experience. This testimony was reinforced by a lively correspondence from those who had remained in America bearing their witness to the religious impact upon their lives which had come through Hedström and the Bethel Ship. In sufficient numbers to have made a great difference, immigrants became so concerned about the spiritual welfare of their parents, brothers, sisters, and friends that they

* Speedily acquiring a knowledge of the Swedish language, Scott preached an evangelical message to overflowing congregations. He founded the Swedish Temperance Society which was closely allied with the evangelical movement. He also established the Swedish Missionary Society in 1835 which was largely responsible for the propagation of an evangelical revival throughout the country. He began the publication of a religious journal entitled The Pietist, which achieved the widest circulation of any religious periodical in Sweden in the nineteenth century. The movement was continued by his successor, Carol Olaf Rosenius, and eventually resulted in the organization of "Evangeleskafoosterlandstiftelsen" (The National Evangelical Foundation), a reform movement within the State Church. In the course of time, a group from this movement broke more completely with the Church of Sweden and organized a separate Church called the Mission Covenant, which became the largest free church denomination in Sweden.—Gunnar Westin, George Scott, Hans Liv Och Verksamatt, Vols. I and II.

† See pp. 272-74.

crossed the ocean for only one purpose—to work for their conversion in the Methodist evangelical pattern. In 1852 Hedström reported:

Several have gone home during the year—some to Sweden, Norway, and Denmark—for nothing else than to warn their friends to flee the wrath to come, and some of them, we have heard, have proved a great blessing to many souls.⁸²

John Peter Larsson was among the first. While on the seas, about 1852, he had been shipwrecked, but an English ship had come to the rescue and returned Larsson to Swedish shores.

Being a zealous Christian, he told his friends and neighbors what great things God had done for him in America, and by this means, . . . awakened so great a religious interest that he . . . [was detained] among them for more than eighteen months, 'working with his own hands,' meantime, to support himself.⁸³

In order to sustain Larsson in labors so productive, on Hedström's advice the Missionary Society voted a sum of $200. per annum, at its September, 1854, meeting. Larsson made the city of Kalmar his center but also itinerated through the countryside for the purpose of distributing Bibles, visiting in homes, and holding meetings. The following year the Missionary Society included him in their appointments to Scandinavia as "Missionary, Sweden."⁸⁴

Another pioneer was Jonas Ostlund who was converted on the Bethel Ship in 1851. Compelled by his concern for the spiritual welfare of his loved ones, he returned in 1855 to his childhood home in Ostansjö, Norrland, to bear testimony of that which God had wrought in his life. Invited by a devout couple to hold a little devotional service in their home one Sunday evening, he accepted with considerable hesitation. However, these Sunday evening gatherings continued for one year, the entire period of his stay in the homeland. In 1856 he returned to America. He later became the first minister of any denomination to preach the Gospel of Christ in North Dakota.⁸⁵

One of the more affluent members of the Bethel Ship—who had served as a Class Leader—S. M. Swenson, returned to Sweden on business in 1855, and while visiting Kalmar to look at Larsson's work, at once fell into evangelistic labor.

Methodism came to the Island of Gotland in the Baltic Sea off the east coast of Sweden through the efforts of two returning seamen, C. Levander and John Lindquist. These efforts resulted in an informally organized Society. An appeal was sent by these adherents to Christian B. Willerup, Superintendent of the mission in Denmark and Norway, and a second appeal was sent to the Board of Missions in New York, for a preacher. Both appeals were of no avail and Hedström finally reminded Willerup of his responsibilities not only to Denmark and Norway, but also to Sweden.

August Olson, converted on the Bethel Ship in 1853, also returned to Sweden. He was the first to preach the Gospel as a Methodist in the communities south of Gothenburg. Two churches, one in Wallda and the other at Släp, resulted from his labors.

Many others whose names remain unknown followed the pattern, bringing great numbers to a conversion experience during the decade 1850-60. The movement was nebulous and did not begin to take form until the following decade.

The complete dominance and authority of the State Church, protected by law, posed a deterrent to Methodist aggression. By a law of 1855, obviously directed toward the Baptists, fines were imposed upon laymen who administered the sacraments. Since every citizen of Sweden was considered a member of the Established Church, and since all except its priests were considered laymen, freedom to practice one's religion outside of the State Church was seriously restricted.

However, in response to the growing pressure of the free church movement, three steps were taken liberalizing the law. By an enactment of 1858, members of the State Church were permitted to assemble for devotions without the leadership of a Lutheran pastor, provided that these sessions did not conflict with the regular service hours of the parish church and that the service was open to the parish clergy, Church officials, and public officials.

In 1860 an act of Parliament gave Christians of faiths other than the "true evangelical" the right to petition the king for permission to organize congregations. If granted, this permission was limited by rigid laws. Services were to be held only in churches or chapels, reports had to be made to parish priests, children under eighteen could not affiliate, marriage could only be performed outside of the State Church if both parties belonged to the "strange" Church, and penalties were prescribed for the spreading of doctrines contrary to the "true evangelical faith."⁸⁶

During the 1860's Methodist interest in Sweden was renewed through the visits of three of the most gifted leaders of early Swedish Methodism in America. In 1863 Olof G. Hedström himself made a visit to Sweden, going first to Karlskrona. For four weeks he preached almost daily in the surrounding communities to large congregations of people. In the city he preached in a rented meeting house to overflowing audiences. On July 23 he wrote in a letter:

You can judge for yourself how great the hunger for God's word is when I tell you that I have preached no fewer than fourteen times in two weeks and that people came to the meetings from a distance of ten, twenty, yes even forty miles.⁸⁷

Hedström proceeded to Gothenburg. The city, second in the kingdom, had a population of 40,000, and because of its size, wealth, and commercial interests was thought to be "liberal in its views and feelings in regard to religion." Hedström was pleased with the responsiveness he observed, and following his departure a Local Preacher, August Olson, was left to circulate among the people who had shown interest.⁸⁸

Hedström, because of his experience, ability, and status, was listened to by a segment of Swedish society unreached by returning seamen and immigrants. The affluent as well as the poor had respect and confidence in him. Even the State Church priests were friendly and some opened their churches to him. Though his proclamation of a full and free salvation from sin was strange to them, they were impressed by his sincere and humble piety. On one occasion, when he was invited to conduct a service in a Lutheran church, even to the extent of the liturgical parts of worship, he demurred, agreeing to preach if the priest would himself conduct this part of the service. However, the priest became so absorbed by Hedström's solemn preaching and prayer that he completely forgot to fulfill his responsibility.

After a trip through Norway, Hedström visited his brother in Luleå and preached in his home, being the first Methodist preacher in the northern part of the province of Norrland.

Albert Ericson* also visited Sweden, reaching Stockholm shortly before Christmas in 1866. He had been sent to study Swedish literature as preparation for a professorship in the newly created theological institution in the United States. With singleness of purpose Ericson became completely preoccupied with his studies. He had been in Stockholm a considerable time when he was one day invited to preach in a Baptist chapel. Word spread that a Methodist preacher had come to Stockholm. Many who had heard about Methodism through correspondence or visits by returning seamen and immigrants were eager to learn more about it. A group of pietistically minded dissenters, dissatisfied with the ministry of the Established Church and the Baptists alike, invited Ericson to preach in a hall called "Benikebrinken." Ericson accepted this as providential guidance. This ministry was fruitful. The influence spread like fire. Again, Ericson appealed to a more affluent and educated segment of society.

Probably the most notable consequence of Ericson's labors in addition to the establishment of Methodism in Stockholm was his influence upon a group of young men who became dynamic Methodist ministers in a period that desperately needed consecrated and intelligent leadership—J. Kihlstrom, D. S. Sörlin, Theodor Larsson, N. J. Nilsson, C. J. Johansson, C. J. F. Petterson, J. A. Johnson, and others.

When Ericson completed his studies he was ready to return to America. Letters were sent to the Board of Missions in New York and to Bishop Janes who was supervising European missions, requesting that Ericson remain in Stockholm. Permission was granted for an extended stay but when word arrived Ericson was already on his return trip. However, this led to another fortuitous event through which Victor Witting succeeded Ericson in Stockholm.

* See p. 283 n.

Witting was the editor of Sändebudet, a journal comparable to the Christian Advocate, published in Chicago. For some time Witting had longed to pay a visit to his native land and his family.⁸⁹ On May 1, 1867, the same day that a disappointed and sad crowd of Christian friends waved farewell to Ericson at the station in Stockholm, C. O. Lundberg, a Chicago businessman, walked into the office of Sändebudet, and invited Witting to accompany him to Sweden on an expense-paid trip. After arrangements were made for the care of Sändebudet the invitation was eagerly accepted. Witting arrived in Gothenburg the middle of June. He sought out Larsson and preached for him awhile before traveling to the province of Skane in the southern part of Sweden, to visit his family. Here he preached in the city of Malmö and the university city of Lund, where a Mission Covenant meeting house was opened to him. Many students crowded the reasonably large hall and not a few theological students. Several of these received an evangelical conversion.*

Up to approximately this time, no regular appointments had been listed for Sweden. The restrictions imposed by law had been so discouraging to Larsson that, feeling his hands were tied, he had accepted an appointment in Halden, Norway, in 1858. While religious freedom had been expected almost hourly, expectations were, of course, ahead of deeds, for such reforms as were contemplated required consideration and time for acceptance even though the king personally favored them. In the meantime, Willerup decided not to make further appointments until he heard "the good news," as he put it. At the end of 1865 the Missionary Society Report indicated that Sweden still "waits for our coming."⁹⁰

However, a commencement had been made at two points. During 1864, A. Cederholm, a Swede, had been transferred from Norway to the Island of Gotland, Sweden, where Methodism had been earlier introduced, as we have noted. The island was small and sparsely populated with poor farmers, for the most part, and had only one town, Visby. Shortly word was sent home that "the Lord is with them in great power in all their meetings."⁹¹ Two years after its establishment, the Gotland mission was still limited in scope because of the laws of the State. About fifty people had been awakened and were ready to build a church. Another Swede, Alexander Palm, had been sent to assist. During the year (1866) Corresponding Secretary Durbin—on an official tour of Scandinavia—visited Gotland and advised Cederholm "to form into classes all persons who wish to come under our pastoral care,

* Methodism gained intellectual status it did not earlier have through the preaching of Hedström, Ericson, and Witting. In no small part, this had a determining effect upon the future character of Methodism in Sweden. Early Methodism had appealed to intelligent dissenters and pietists, who while they were dissatisfied with the religious life of the Established Church, yet could not feel at home in a free church movement which was growing up in Sweden with exclusively lay leadership, many of whom were extremists. Without Hedström, Ericson, and Witting this could not have occurred.—See Henry C. Whyman, "The Conflict and Adjustment of Two Religious Cultures—The Swedish and the American" and have them apply to the government for authority to him to take pastoral care of them, and then to administer the sacraments to them as they have need, and to hold his services at such hours as best suit the people.”⁹² Not too long afterward, Cederholm died suddenly. J. P. Larsson was transferred to be his successor.⁹³

Since the visit of Hedström to Gothenburg in 1863, a number of people had been interested in Methodism. August Olson, though only a Local Preacher, had kept up and extended the results of the initial enthusiasm until Willerup upon the advice of Durbin decided to appoint a regular missionary in 1866. Larsson was transferred back from Norway, and given the same instruction Cederholm had received: “to form the people into classes . . . and, with the aid of Brother Olsen, take the pastoral oversight of them; and as soon as possible, have the people apply to the government for authority to be given to Brothers Larsen and Olsen to become their pastors.”⁹⁴

The year following Durbin’s visit still another visitor to Scandinavia helped give substance to the Swedish beginnings. This was Bishop Kingsley, fulfilling his assignment of episcopal supervision of European missions. While in Copenhagen in 1867, the Bishop and Victor Witting met by chance. Up to this time nothing had been done to follow up on the successes of Ericson in Stockholm because a strong enough man had not been available to occupy so important a city. Bishop Kingsley had in mind to visit the capital city, and invited Witting to meet with him and Willerup there at a future date. The reunion took place as arranged. Kingsley preached to overflowing crowds in the Benikebrinken Hall, being interpreted by Willerup. Witting also preached on several occasions. At the earnest request of the leaders of this congregation, the Bishop asked Witting to accept an assignment in Stockholm. The challenge was too great not to accept; consequently, late in July, 1867, Witting returned to America for the purpose of moving his family to Stockholm where they arrived in the beginning of November of that year.⁹⁵

The year 1867 was in every way encouraging. In writing the Missionary Society Annual Report for the Scandinavian Mission, Durbin commented:

There is a more general awakening among the people, and in some places, as particularly in Stockholm and Gottenburg, and in their vicinities, this awakening is widespread and profound. . . . The mission in Sweden has been greatly strengthened by the transfer of Rev. V. Witting to Sweden this year. And God has raised up two or three powerful young men to help in this part of the work.⁹⁶

This was cause for rejoicing, for Methodism was overcoming considerable handicaps. The restraints imposed by law were severe enough; adherents had to call upon their courage to withdraw publicly from the State Church in order to petition for a dissenting pastor. The imposition of fines for infractions of the law and the cost of rental for public buildings meant financial strain for these folk, whom Durbin had observed on his visit, were poor, "very poor," being "with very rare exceptions, servants and day-laborers." The preachers were limited in their abilities. Durbin had commented in his report on his trip that most had a language problem, having lost facility in their native tongue through residence in America or labors in Norway, and that in most cases they had "in their youth only the simplest rudiments of education."⁹⁷

During 1868 Societies were formed in all three centers of work. The church in Stockholm had the honor of being the first—on January 8—with a membership of fifty-seven people. By September the mission had seven Societies, fifteen preaching places, 424 members and five Sunday schools with 354 children.⁹⁸

Up until this time, the Sweden Mission had been a part of the Scandinavian Mission with Norway and Denmark, under the superintendency of Willerup. It was not long before the Missionary Society recognized the advisability of having a Superintendent for the Swedish work alone. Witting received the following letter from Durbin, dated April 14, 1868:

Dear Brother, I am authorized and instructed by Bishop Kingsley to notify you that he has separated our mission in Sweden from the superintendency of Brother Willerup and placed the same in your hands. With receipt of this letter, will you therefore regard yourself as superintendent of all our missions in Sweden and also the responsibility of its management and development.⁹⁹

SEPARATE ORGANIZATION

With the appointment of Witting as Superintendent a new era was inaugurated. A Preachers' Meeting was held in Stockholm on September 17-24, 1868, at which seven men were present: Witting, J. P. Larsson, Alexander Palm, Seved Hansson, Erik Carlsson, Johan Kihlstrom, and Daniel S. Sörlin. A few others were also there. After an address by Witting, they organized under the name of the Swedish Methodist Missionary Society with a constitution and by-laws. Appointments were made to Stockholm, Gothenburg, and Visby, on the Island of Gotland, and to Kalmar and Wallda as well.¹⁰⁰

Kalmar—on the southeast coast—had first been visited as long ago as 1855 by J. P. Larsson when he had itinerated the countryside. Witting visited Kalmar shortly after the annual meeting. Work here was being revived under D. S. Sörlin. In November, a Society was organized, and the Lutheran mission house purchased for headquarters.

Karlskrona, opened to Methodism through Hedström's preaching, had importance because it was a principal port of the Royal Navy. A considerable number of navy personnel were members of the Methodist group. Hardly a naval vessel left port without one or two Methodists aboard. For a long journey these men would have a captive audience. The ships were not large and they usually returned to Karlskrona with a considerable number of committed Methodists.

During the year Witting visited Karlskrona and preached in the same meeting house that Hedström had used five years before. Throughout his eight-day stay, the aisles were so filled he could scarcely reach the pulpit and even the spacious grounds were thronged. An extended revival occurred. When Witting could no longer remain he released his colleagues D. S. Sörlin, J. P. Larsson, and J. Kihlstrom from other assignments to spend brief periods of time in Karlskrona. The Society, organized sometime after May, 1868, had eighty-two members in September, and 156 before the end of the year, with a Sunday school of 144 children. On March 1, 1869, a meeting was held at which 2,213 crowns were subscribed to build on real estate already purchased. Action by the first Quarterly Conference held by this Society resulted in the building of Emmanuel Methodist Episcopal Chapel, the first Methodist chapel of Sweden. In addition to a large sanctuary, it contained four smaller rooms for Class meetings and Sunday-school work. It was dedicated February 27, 1870, with four hundred people standing outside unable to get in. In June, 1869, Bishop Kingsley had transferred Bengt A. Carlsson from the Erie Conference to care for this city work.¹⁰¹

In Stockholm, Johan Kihlstrom, a particularly able young man, was granted a Local Preacher's license, thus becoming the first Methodist minister produced by the Sweden Mission. He then devoted his full time to this city. From Stockholm Methodism spread to the neighboring communities of Sigtuna, Upsala, Gävle, Arsa, and Morko.¹⁰²

On the Island of Gotland the work begun in Visby continued to flourish and spread to other communities. Under Larsson several Classes were formed, and a Sunday school organized of about a hundred students. The following year this field was reported as even more "glorious," with work enough for four men. Andrew H. Berg had been added in October, and he had helped spread the fire of revival.¹⁰³

Gothenburg, which had probably been given longer cultivation than anywhere else, was cause for rejoicing. Witting himself filled the appointment. During the year a "powerful revival" took place, and the large crowds called for a proper place of assemblage. A lot was purchased looking toward building, although on account of the poverty of the people it did not seem possible to raise the enormous sum of ten to twelve thousand dollars needed for construction. Although the attitude of the priests of the Established Church was generally negative toward the intrusion of another organized Church which was proving a drain on its constituency, here in Gothenburg the archdean of the Diocese viewed the situation differently and extended a cordial hand of cooperation. Another well-wisher was a wealthy lady of the city who besides making cash gifts offered to clothe any poor children in need.¹⁰⁴

Calls came from other towns for ministers to come unto them. Mönsteras, about thirty-five miles from Kalmar, sent a letter of twenty signatures or so, stating they had a large meeting house, which would probably be turned over to them. These people were all moderately well off if not wealthy.¹⁰⁵

A strong mission in Örebro was started when Witting was invited to this community by A. M. Graezer who with his family had moved there from Brooklyn, New York. They had been converted under the ministry of Hedström. The first Methodist sermon was preached on September 15, 1868, at the Academy (Real Skolon), which seated up to eight hundred persons. It was about half-filled then, but Witting revisited the community the following January and held more meetings at the Baptist chapel. This time a revival resulted. In April, 1869, N. J. Nilsson, one of the brightest young preachers of this period, was appointed to Örebro and in June a Society was organized with 157 members which grew to 212 by October, and 238 by the end of the year. Örebro by location was important, being about midway between Stockholm and Gothenburg. The whole countryside came under the Methodist influence, and Witting reported, "Societies can be formed any day in a half dozen places around, if we only had the means to take care of them."

In all things, the Sweden Mission was most industrious, which perhaps accounts for the almost sensational development of the movement. In less than two years of Witting's superintendency, Sunday schools were in operation in almost all the centers, despite the fact that children in the public schools were forbidden to attend them. The parents saw that the children attended, nonetheless, and there was no lack of suitable teachers. Large numbers were reported attending; and also conversions occurring.

Literature was almost immediately produced, first in the form of tracts, explaining Methodism, and then through the publication of a small monthly, Lilla Sändebudet, which quickly paid its own way. Within the first two years of independent organization, the missionary personnel rose from seven men to fifteen, the number of Societies showed exactly the same increase, with a leap from fifteen to forty-nine appointments. The most astonishing statistics, however, were those concerning membership, an increase from 424 to 1,326 in one year. Converts were found among the middle class; and through the addition of these members the financial state of the mission was bettered.* By special invitation, Witting was asked to preach before Princess Eugenie at her summer home near Visby.¹⁰⁶

* For instance, a rich citizen of Mönsteras opened his mansion for preaching services in 1870. The same year an important business-man and manufacturer instituted a program of morning and evening prayers at his woolen mill, and preached every Saturday to his employees. Besides, he gave generously to pay the chapel debt and extend Methodism to other places.—Fifty-second Ann. Rep., M.S. (1870), pp. 74, 75.

The next six years were remarkable in mission history. During 1869-70 Methodism had been taken to a number of new towns; Vänersborg, which reported a Society of fifteen members in 1870; Nysund, fifty-nine members; Sigtuna, thirty-five members; Gävle, thirty-one members; Vingaker, two Societies totaling eighty-five members; Arboga, a Society with thirty members; Valdemarsvik, twenty members; Östergarn, on the Island of Gotland, 112 members; and Filipstad, twenty-six. In the appointments for 1871 three more centers were scheduled for entry: Norrköping, Upsala, and Malmö, all important cities. This impressive expansion was made possible by another remarkable feature of the Swedish mission: all the preachers were Swedish, converted in their own country, with the exception of the Superintendent. A good number of these men, being untutored, served in the capacity of Local Preachers, but being on their own soil, familiar with the language and the ways of their own people, they had little difficulty in obtaining a hearing and finding a following. Apparently, also, a number were in a position to labor without salary, so that calls could be answered in new places although there was no appropriation to cover them. Besides the formation of Societies, very often there were additional outstations connected with the work, and in practically every center a Sunday school was established. Each year new town names appeared in the Superintendent's report.*

Summing up the situation in his 1875 report, Witting remarked:

We occupy new places only as the finger of God distinctly points to them, and then we dare not refuse to go. For instance, a member moves to a new place; he begins to tell his friends and neighbors what the Lord has done for his soul, he prays with and for them, he talks to them about the one thing needful. Many are convicted, conversions occur, a class is formed, and we are called to come and take care of the new converts. Under such circumstances we dare not refuse, for the opening is surely of God, and thus our missions are organized.¹⁰⁷

In order to answer the need for better-trained preachers, in 1874 a seminary was established with headquarters in Örebro until arrangements could be made for a permanent site in Stockholm.† During its first term, seventeen men were given instruction, six of whom immediately set out in the work.¹⁰⁸

A very systematic attempt was being made at the same time to reach the young children. By 1872, besides the numerous Sunday schools, which had over three thousand enrolled, two day schools had been inaugurated, and a cry was raised for more. A child's paper was issued shortly afterwards, which within two years attained a circulation of more than four thousand.

As another phase of laying a firm foundation, chapel building was systematically pursued. In 1875 alone five churches were erected and dedicated,

* Places entered, 1870-75—but not all of them permanently—were: Nora, Hallsberg, Kristianople, Jönköping, Malmköping, Eskilstuna, Linköping, Motala, Oscarshamn, Nybro, Karlshamn, Västervik, Delary, Morko, Ransåtar, Arsa, Lindesberg, Söndersborg, Kristinehamn, Majorna, Grebbestad, Karlskrona Circuit, Buttle, Kappelshamn, Laerbro, Moerkoen, Linde, Ryssby, Södertälje, Finspang, Edswalla, Lommelunda, Ronneby, Bjuf, Lövers, Öland, Lerbäck, Halmstad, Strömstad.

† Tuition was free but the students had to support themselves. In 1876 the seminary was brought to Stockholm and housed in St. Paul's Church. It was transferred to Upsala in 1883.

three of which cost from $7,000. to $10,000. each, and four others were under construction.¹⁰⁹ The necessity for owning property and having a suitable structure to accommodate the ever-increasing crowds, of course, was obvious, but the haste in which buildings were contracted for by people who could not raise the money could only be justified by the situation in Sweden. Indebtedness was undertaken for periods sometimes covering a life span, but because of the stability of the nation there seemed little risk. The undertaking was vindicated by Witting, who wrote in 1876:

The churches, thirty-one in number, are valued at $97,262, and the indebtedness on them is $55,442. The increase of value for the past year is $17,627, and of indebtedness, $9,472. This disproportion of indebtedness to value naturally causes anxiety. But the reasons for building are urgent. Suitable halls for preaching are obtained with difficulty, and at a large annual expense; and the school-house accommodations, of which the early American Methodists made such good use, are not to be had. A permanent church-home, convenient and attractive, gives, it is thought, a status and influence to the Church essential to its success. If a church is built it must be substantial and enduring, not a temporary and cheap structure This the law of the Swedish cities and the sentiment of the community enjoin. . . . A conference which sat under the shadow of a cathedral which was about two hundred years in building, and is six hundred years old, may, perhaps, be pardoned if it lay its plans for the life-time of the generation. I say these things rather in extenuation than justification of the indebtedness; yet, on the other hand, not quite sure but that the circumstances and the temperament of the people justify the course pursued.¹¹⁰

The use of the printed word was so valued that a power press was purchased in 1874, and sufficient other equipment, to establish the Wesleyana printing house. Immediately a large supply of tracts and pamphlets was issued, and a number of Methodist classics were translated into Swedish, and found an appreciative market. The two publications were also produced by the press.¹¹¹

At the annual meeting of 1874, the extent of the work was considered to be so vast that three Districts were created, and the next year a fourth was added: Stockholm, under J. P. Larsson, with twenty appointments; Gotland, under Frank O. B. Wallin, with five appointments; Karlskrona, under Bengt A. Carlsson, with seventeen appointments; and Gothenburg, under Gustaf Fredengren, with nine appointments.

As Methodism spread like wildfire, it became a threat to the Established Church. Obstacles were thrown in its way in an effort to curb withdrawals. But as usually happens, resistance and trial merely strengthened the membership by sloughing off the superficial followers, and by presenting a cause to rally round for the truly convicted adherents. Persecution succeeded only in drawing attention to the spirit of Methodism.

Public pronouncements against the Methodists, in which they were ridiculed or described as dangerous heretics, incited mob violence or pranks, some of which had serious consequences. The crashing of chapel windows by stones thrown during services was almost to be expected. Arriving for or leaving a Methodist service was not without its personal hazards.

One Sunday the parish priest at the little seaside town of Grebbestad spoke in bitter and violent opposition to the Methodists who were just establishing work in that community. That evening a group of farm hands secured an old ship's cannon at the waterfront, loaded it with lead and stones, dragged it to the private home where the Methodists were meeting and fired broadside against the house. Fortunately, no great damage was done. Considerable newspaper publicity was given to this event, none of which adversely affected Methodism.

A mob with charcoal-blackened faces invaded a Methodist service in Nybro, Sundland, while the sermon was being preached. The pugilistic champion of the community disguised in an animal mask and horns went directly to the pulpit, and to the consternation of the congregation took hold of the preacher as though to throw him out. The preacher—a man of courage and considerable physical strength—tore off his adversary's mask and with the words, "So it is you Carlson," sat him with some force in the first pew. The same preacher, C. J. F. Petterson, on another occasion was assaulted, badly beaten, and thrown into a pit where the mob started to bury him alive. His cries brought help and the mob fled.

Not all were as fortunate. In Kalmar, Johan Larsson, an Exhorter, was stoned into unconsciousness. When he revived, he continued his homeward journey but became violently ill and died praying for those who had perpetrated the crime.

The laws against dissenters were extremely intolerant and so long as they continued to remain on the statutes local authorities found legal support when it served their purpose to jail or fine Methodists for preaching the Gospel. In Warberg, a Methodist preacher, N. J. Nilsson, on complaint of the parish priest was brought to court and fined. When he could not pay the fine he was put in prison for eleven days on bread and water. The story of Philippi was re-enacted, for when the eleven days were over, the jailer, impressed with Nilsson's Christian spirit, took him into his home where a richly spread breakfast table was set and a group of invited Methodist guests were assembled to welcome him from jail. Here again newspaper publicity brought criticism to the community of Warberg, and contributions from all other Methodist Societies in Sweden paid for a memorial chapel there shortly after the event.

On the national level a more understanding and tolerant spirit was exercised. Count Aldercrantz suggested to Witting that Methodists refuse to be satisfied with the actions of local community courts and officials but rather appeal to higher courts.* In general those who suffered fines or jail sentences failed to make such an appeal.

More surprising to the Methodists than any official opposition on the part of the Established Church and local authorities was the antagonism which they experienced from older nonconformist groups which later became a part of the Swedish free church movement. These were in general entirely lay led and thus Methodism with its ordained ministry gained official status more easily. Even George Scott, whose work in Sweden before his expulsion by the State, resulted in the National Evangelical Foundation, out of which came the Mission Friends, wrote an article for the Established Church organ Vaktaren in 1869 in which he was sharply critical of the Methodists.¹¹²

Up until 1873, a Methodist either obeyed the laws of the land or his conscience. The fact that on the whole Methodists chose to obey conscience and that the law was not stringently applied in many places did not make them less rebellious.

The Methodist annual meeting in 1874, held in Stockholm, was presided over by Bishop Harris. It was decided to take advantage of the new Dissenters' Law of 1873 and to apply for withdrawal from the State Church in accordance with its provisions.

Preparation for this important step was carefully made. In February of 1875 a committee of seventy-five, both preachers and laymen, representing various geographical areas of Sweden gathered at Stockholm and sought an audience with the king. An appointment was made. The committee was officially received by the king, asking each in turn his name and home town. He invited the members of the committee to speak freely and without reservation in the matter which they had come to present. Victor Witting as the chairman and spokesman of the group presented the request in as few words as possible. His petition on behalf of himself and his colleagues for permission to withdraw from the State Church and to establish an independent denomination was supported by a document carrying the names of fourteen hundred Swedish Methodists. In addition, the king was presented with the Discipline, the Catechism, the Hymnal, and a volume of John Wesley's sermons. The king's answer was, "I cannot immediately offer you any definite promise but I will do for you what I can."

The ensuing conversation impressed Witting with King Oscar's spiritual

* One such appeal was epoch-making in the development of Methodism in Sweden. In Kalmar, B. A. Carlsson, an ordained Methodist minister, performed a marriage of two Methodists. On complaint of the Lutheran parish priest, Carlsson was brought to court in Kalmar and fined 300 kronans. He appealed to the Royal Court at Göta where the decision was reversed. The complainant, dissatisfied with this turn of events, appealed the case to the king and here the decision of the court at Göta was upheld and Carlsson freed. This action is of particular significance because Carlsson's defense was simply that he was an ordained pastor or priest and according to Swedish law entitled to perform marriages since that statute does not limit this right specifically to Lutheran priests but simply uses the word priest. The result of this action was to heighten the prestige of the Methodist Movement in the eyes of the public. The official actions of its ministers were recognized by the State. Its ordained ministers were acknowledged even though the Methodist Church in Sweden was not yet officially recognized.—Stilla Stunder, July, 1881, p. 400.

earnestness. He described this as one of the happiest and most blessed days of his life.

The king was anxious to know how Methodism differed from Lutheranism. Witting answered that the essential difference lay in the interpretation of the sacraments and in the doctrine of Holiness. The latter particularly excited the king's interest, resulting in a detailed description of the Methodist concept of holiness. When the king in response inquired if salvation was not imparted through baptism and communion, Witting answered that in this respect the Methodists approached the Reformed thought.

After this presentation had been made there was a considerable period of waiting. The Sweden Mission continued to develop its work but in their planning they now had to consider two alternative courses of action—continuing as they had or in the event their petition was granted planning to take more formal steps toward organization. Making his annual report to the Missionary Society in 1875, Victor Witting said:

We have every reason to believe that, as far as he [the king] is concerned, our petition will be granted, but the decision is not yet published. The reason why it takes so long time ere we get a definite answer is, that the petition is to be sent to the consistories in all the dioceses within whose boundaries we have Societies, and the Government has requested their opinion about it. . . . In case it is granted we will immediately organize under the name and style of 'The Swedish Methodist Episcopal Church,' and in case it is not granted, we will go on as hitherto, preaching the Gospel and organizing Societies wherever we can.¹¹³

During the period of waiting, the preachers of the Swedish Mission gathered for their eighth annual meeting. The Minutes of this meeting indicated the spirit of determination which characterized the group.

The committee appointed had an audience with the King in last February, when the petition was presented.

No answer to this petition has as yet been received, but his Majesty has requested the several Diocesan Consistories to come in with their opinions upon it.

We can consequently do nothing before the reply from the Government is received, but in case this should be favorable, we propose the following resolutions,

1. That we immediately organize in accordance with the Discipline of the Methodist Episcopal Church.
2. That we pray God to graciously bless this important step. Amen!
3. That the names of those members, who have not, within six months from the date our petition is granted, notified of their intention to withdraw from the State-church, shall be stricken out from our Church-records.
4. That, in case the reply is unfavorable, we occupy the same position as hitherto.¹¹⁴

It was not until a year later in March, 1876, that the answer was given. It was affirmative. Thus the Methodist Episcopal Church became the first denomination to be officially recognized by the State to which members could belong by withdrawal from the Established Church.

SWEDEN CONFERENCE

The next logical step after being granted status as an independent denomination was the organization of the Sweden Conference. At the annual meeting held in 1875 at Visby an application was drawn up to the General Conference for authorization to organize. The General Conference of 1876 complied with the request. Later that year the enabling act was used and the Conference formed.

In the church at Upsala, August 2, in the presence of Bishop E. G. Andrews, the mission held its first session as a regular Annual Conference. Eight elders, eighteen deacons, and twenty-three probationers were listed as charter members.* An additional nine were admitted on trial.¹¹⁵

For Victor Witting this day marked a personal triumph. Methodism, recently acknowledged by the State, was now formally established as a Church. Less than nine years ago, there had not been even one Class, or one chapel, not one congregation or Sunday school. Now there were fifty-five traveling preachers, of whom twenty-six were ordained. There were fifty-nine Local Preachers who labored without salary or compensation. Out of their combined efforts during this brief period had come a membership of 5,663 persons, and 4,931 children in 125 Sunday schools. There were thirty-one churches and chapels valued at $97,262.¹¹⁶

The Conference was organized into three Districts: Stockholm District with twenty-six appointments; Karlskrona District, with twenty-six appointments; and Gotland District, with seven appointments.† What remained to be done now was the cultivation of the field—the pruning and nourishing.

Bishop Merrill, presiding at the 1880 Conference session, observed:

The work of our Church in Sweden is decidedly encouraging, and yet it needs the supervision and fostering care of the Church in America. It has been disturbed by irregularities on the part of trusted ministers, and fears have been entertained of its permanency in some localities; but these difficulties are passing away, and the Conference is proving itself to be both vigorous in administration and loyal to the Discipline of the Church. The multitudes that attend our ministry are something

* Elders: Victor Witting, Bengt A. Carlsson, John P. Larsson, Andrew H. Berg, Gustaf Fredengren, Frank O. B. Wallin, Nils M. Liljegren, Johan Kihlstrom. Deacons: Carl Wallenius, Seved Hansson, Alexander Palm, Carl A. Stenholm, Carl J. Johansson (Ist), Carl Carlsson, Theodor Larsson, John Hellberg, Emanuel Nilsson, Nils Sandell, Jacob M. Ericson, Johannes Roth, Andrew J. Gustafsson, Jens Pedersen, Carl N. Elmström, Frederick Ahgren, Carl H. Lindskog, August Wallen, Jacob T. E. Kjellstrand, Probationers: N. J. Nilsson, Jonas P. Danielsson, Frank U. Liljegren, Carl Englund, Isaac G. Finerus, Carl P. Carlsson, Frank W. Ilohne, Peter G. Bergdahl, Carl J. Johansson (2nd), Peter A. Juhlin, Foelix G. Holmgren, Richard Cederberg, Carl W. Henriksson, Adolph F. Häggström, Carl A. Jansson, Anders Andersson, Peter G. Söderlind, Carl L. Ljunggren, Lars G. Berglund, Carl O. Ljungdahl, Andrew Johnson, Matthew J. Elander, Frans J. Svenborg. (Minutes, Sweden Conference, 1876, pp. [3] f.) Andrew H. Berg was expelled by this Conference; and Witting returned to America after the session concluded.

† Stockholm District: Stockholm; Södertelje and Morko; Sigtuna; Upsala; Gävle; Arsa; Mora; Eskilstuna and Malmköping; Arboga; Odenswi; Linde; Nora; Örebro; Glanshammar; Lekhyttan; Nysund; Kristinehamn; Edswalla; Ransäta; Filipstad; Lidköping; Gothenburg; Majorna; Wadda; Warberg, Grebhestad and Strömstad. Karlskrona District: Karlskrona; Lövers and Kristianople; Kalmar; Öland and Nybro; Ryssby; Mönsterås; Oscarshamn; Västervik and Loftahammar; Valdemarsvik; Norrköping; Linköping and Boxholm; Motala; Lerbäck; Finspang; Hallsberg; Jönköping; Delary; Bjuf; Lund; Malmö; Karlshamn; Ronneby. Gotland District: Visby; Butle; Öster-garn; Kappellshamn; Lommelunda; Boge; Wamlingbo. (Gen'l Minutes, 1876, pp. 95-96.) In 1878 the Gotland District was combined with the Karlskrona District. The Gothenburg District, which had lasted only one year, was re-created in 1878. In 1887 Gotland was again formed into a District.

wonderful. The people every-where in Sweden appear hungry for the bread of life. Our Churches are full to overflowing, but the larger part of them are very poor. They have built and are building some churches without aid from the Board.¹¹⁷

Three years after Conference formation it was voted: "That this Conference organize itself into a Conference Missionary Society." One of its chief concerns was the fact that the "far greater portion of the people of our country is yet without true godliness." In geographic extent, the Conference included about one half the country—the southern half—with heavy concentration around Stockholm. A large number of the more important cities had Methodist Societies, such as Upsala and Lund, university cities, Gävle, Malmö, and other thriving seaports. In fact, quite often the Church made better headway in the cities and towns than on the country appointments, which were frequently reported as "hard to cultivate." While the missionary society probably did not lead to the entering of new areas, it nonetheless was rather successful in raising funds and encouraging giving. Despite the fact that the membership, by and large, was in the lower income bracket,* self-support was often early reached in the congregations and substantial sums raised toward the missionary offering. Typical of giving was the amount collected for this latter cause in 1879; the sum of 6,080 crowns, equivalent of 3,000 days' work, or $3,000.¹¹⁸

With the establishment of Methodism in towns, the more educated people were attracted to the Church. This was important since Sweden at this time was badly ridden by class distinction and cleavages. J. P. Larsson, one of the oldest members of the mission, and for years Presiding Elder of the Stockholm District, was particularly qualified to observe the change. Writing in 1883, he remarked:

The confidence in our cause has increased very much during this period. In some of our chapels now several of the greatest and most esteemed persons are seen at the services, hearing the word of God with deep devotion and veneration. New doors are opened every-where, and, in some places, new congregations are formed. Now we can, indeed, say that the country is open to us. . . .

Now that our cause is pretty well known and, in most places, legally ordered, the persecution seems almost ceased; so that we, untroubled and in peace and safety, can spread the Gospel of Christ in the country.¹¹⁹

Probably the greatest sign of the Church's acceptance and respectability was evidenced when one of its outstanding leaders, J. M. Ericson, editor of the Svenska Sändebudet, was elected to the Swedish Diet—the Riksdag—in 1885. He was one of nineteen representatives from Stockholm.¹²⁰

During the 1880's very little restriction was imposed on dissenting Churches. The Established Church, however, in its favored position had the legal right to educate the State's children, and to claim tax money for its support. Under pressure, many parents, though adherents of Methodism, permitted the Lutheran priests to instruct and confirm their children. B. A. Carlsson, Presiding Elder of the Gothenburg District, commenting on this situation in 1881, stated that "this unmeet behavior often produced the sad effect that the children not only were forbidden to attend our services in general, but also entirely were drawn away from both God and his people."¹²¹ Referring to the same interference, the Presiding Elder of the Karlskrona District, N. M. Liljegren, wrote in 1883: "There is no persecution at present worth mentioning; but still the established Church must lay every possible hinderance in our way, and our members are compelled to contribute to the Lutheran Church."¹²² A complaint was made at the Conference in 1885 that baptisms and funerals were usually performed in accordance with the liturgy of the Established Church in cases where Methodist adherents had not formally withdrawn. A dual church affiliation resulted in disadvantage to the Methodist group.¹²³

* This was a period of great emigration from Sweden. Those who left could afford to pay transportation, those remaining being too poor to take the risk.

The heavy taxation was equally a problem. In 1887, Johannes Roth, Presiding Elder on the Island of Gotland, stated:

Our members pay now twenty-five per cent. of the pastoral support, and would pay more if they were not so heavily taxed to the support of the State Church. All our members, and pastors, too, are by law obliged to pay of their income yearly to the expenses of the State Church; but we hope our God, that has released us from the dominion of personal sin, will in due time also release us from this evil.¹²⁴

Even when militant opposition had subsided, the Methodists had to content themselves with a position of relative isolation from other Christian forces in Sweden since no cooperation with other Churches either established or free was possible.

In order to offset the grip of the Established Church upon the children and youth of the nation, the Conference early emphasized the need for Sunday schools. In 1881 a full-time worker was employed to advance the Sunday-school program throughout the land. J. P. Larsson of the Karlskrona District reported that a contribution from the Sunday School Fund in America had made possible "the salary of a traveling agent of our Sunday-schools." Wherever possible, youth groups were also formed.¹²⁵

Twelve years after Conference organization the Swedish field was composed of four Districts, and missionary outreach to Finland* represented a fifth District, which in itself claimed the labors of seven pastors and five Local Preachers. The Stockholm District had twenty-six Circuits and Stations. The Karlskrona District had twenty-two; Gothenburg District, twenty-four, and Gotland District, seven. Membership totaled (including Finland) over 12,000, with 3,453 probationers, and another 8,870 adherents. There were sixty-three ministers, fully ordained, and forty-one other preachers, not counting the assistance of 117 Local Preachers and other helpers. The theological school, however, had only thirteen students, and was operating at minimum capacity, having only two instructors. There were no day schools. On the other hand, some two hundred Sunday schools were being conducted, with a count of 14,417 children.

* See p. 978.

It was obvious that Sweden presented no serious difficulties to the Missionary Secretaries. In fact, the Board's Annual Report for 1888 was almost exuberant:

The work in Sweden is a constant joy to the Church. The warm-hearted, enthusiastic temperament of the Swedes falls into easy harmony with Methodist ways and usages. Under many difficulties our brethren are waging the battle with confidence and hope, and frequently the shout of victory goes up from the camp. . . . There is a healthy increase in membership at most of the stations They lose many members by emigration, but their loss from that cause is almost always our gain in the United States. And these genuinely Methodistic Swedes are in the very front rank of desirable immigrants here.¹²⁶

The successful prosecution of the Swedish mission was reported during the remaining years covered by this volume. In Stockholm, alone, there were three Societies in 1889, and four years later another was added. In the city of Gävle, more than a thousand members were reported in 1890. The Society there was not only self-supporting but a large contributor as well to the Conference missionary society. In some areas of work the Methodist Church found itself competing with other Protestant dissenting bodies in presenting the evangelical faith. Concerning this, J. M. Ericson, reporting on the Stockholm District in 1891, had this to say:

There is much competition with other denominations, but we find time after time that our special doctrines of the work of the Holy Spirit in witnessing with the believer and sanctifying him to love God and man with a perfect heart are gaining ground. Our church government is also esteemed by other Churches, and our usages and the manner in which we work are adopted by them in many details. The very State Church is no exception to this.¹²⁷

The Stockholm District included 8,500 square miles. Just before it was split into the Gävle District in 1892 the Stockholm District had

29 stations, of which 13 . . . [were] in cities (including 4 in Stockholm), 11 in places where there . . . [were] large factories, iron-works, or saw-mills, and the remaining 5 in country places. To visit them . . . [the Presiding Elder had] to travel more than fifteen hundred English miles every quarter. The regular preaching places . . . [were] seventy-nine. During the year eight hundred and thirty-three . . . joined on probation, and four hundred and seventy-two probationers . . . [had] been received into full connection¹²⁸

The new Gävle District included the most northerly appointments in Sweden. Its thirteen Stations were under the superintendence of K. Lundgren.

In 1890 the Karlskrona District changed its name to Malmö. This District, covering the southern tip of Sweden, included some of the oldest centers but still contended with poverty. C. P. Carlsson, the Presiding Elder, stated as late as 1891, "Our poor members are bravely struggling on, numbers of them having a 'week of self-denial' all the year round in order to have something to lay on the altar of the Lord." As everywhere in the Sweden Conference, this District was burdened with heavy debts incurred by chapel building.¹²⁹

The Gotland District inaugurated a special newspaper, Gotlands Sändebud, in 1891. This was intended to unite the Methodists on the island since for a good part of the year they were cut off from Methodism on the mainland because of weather conditions. The people here were poor, the land not being suitable for agriculture—their only means of livelihood—but in spirituality they were rich. Typifying the zeal of these islanders was William Anderson, pastor for a number of years at one of the outposts, who became Presiding Elder in 1892. Unaffectedly and simply he stated: "I love my people and my work, and by the grace of God I will be wholly consecrated to my dear Saviour and my people."¹³⁰

K. A. Wik, Presiding Elder the next year, described the financial struggle of Gotland:

Our people are poor and our preachers have no more than $250, and a few $350, as salary for the year, and from this they are obliged to pay house rent and sustain their families, and when we visit the poor and sick we must give money to them of the little we have.

But they were not without hope. He added: "God will help us, and we trust in him for this world and the world to come."¹³¹

The Gothenburg District, which contained some of the first points of entry for Methodism, reported the religious state to be "generally good." The Gothenburg Society in 1889 had a membership between five hundred and six hundred, and nearby were two places where the Church had found an interested audience. At Örebro, also, there was a congregation of the same size, but the members came from eighteen parishes and two towns. In a number of places revivals took place, and it was not unusual for each pastor to report annually an increase of membership, and a number of conversions. Sunday schools served as a great adjunct for the Church. The Gothenburg Church alone cared for seven hundred children; at Örebro some three hundred and fifty were taught. There were in 1889 twenty-eight chapels in the District, and four more were then under construction.¹³² C. L. Ljunggren, the Presiding Elder in 1891, credited the success of the District to the attention given by preachers to prayer meetings and Class meetings.¹³³

In 1895 the Conference held its twentieth session, meeting at Gävle. Since organization it had been held yearly under the presidency of a visiting Bishop. On this occasion Bishop J. N. FitzGerald was present. Ericson, who served as secretary through all the years, saw the occasion as a measuring rod:

Fourteen years ago the Conference also met in Gefle [Gävle], and in the very same church. It was then presided over by Bishop Jesse T. Peck, and among other visitors was the esteemed Corresponding Secretary of the Missionary Society, Dr. J. M. Reid. . . . There were then (1881) 52 ministers in the Conference including probationers; now the number is 103. The number of church members, including probationers, was 8,205; now it is 16,397. We had then 52 church buildings; now, 110; then, 129 Sunday schools; now, 213; then 6,473 Sunday school scholars; now, 16,984; the missionary collection in 1881 was 7,314 crowns; now, 14,987; the money raised for self-support was then 10,078 crowns; now, 72,328. What we call current expenses in 1881 amounted to 39,527 crowns; this year the sum is 88,739 crowns. Surely we have all reason to say, 'Praise God, from whom all blessings flow!' ¹³⁴

Undoubtedly the Sweden Mission was one of the most successful of the Methodist Church. No one reason can account for this. It might well be imagined, though, that because Sweden was already a Protestant, Christian nation an open door and a responsive hearing were found. Added to this was the fact that the Methodist missionaries here did not long hold the title of "missionary" but soon became pastor. Being Swedish converts they had no difficulty finding acceptance among their own people, beginning often with relatives and friends. Methodism did not have to labor under the label of a foreign movement and therefore have to justify her ways in introducing alien customs. Methodism was truly indigenous; even the forms of propagation were already familiar and were merely utilized by the Methodists to their purpose.

The Church also closely applied its rigors of discipline. Strength was felt in its stoutness of conviction. It quickly overcame internal hazards. There are evidences that in a few instances ministers failed to meet the rigid and high standards. Bishop I. W. Wiley reported in 1879 that of a class of five only two met the qualifications and were admitted to full connection. One man was dropped completely and the other two continued on trial—this in spite of the desperate need for preachers.¹³⁵

The Church was particularly well organized, and ready to recognize the threats from the outside, also. Apart from the Sunday schools, the youth were being kept in the Church through the introduction of young people's groups, particularly—in the 1890's—the Epworth League, which met with general acceptance. Within a year or two the number of leagues had leapt to fifty-nine. The leagues were described as conducting "energetically to the salvation of sinners and [giving] help [to] the sick and poor." The members displayed great zeal "in their labor for the spiritual and temporal welfare of sinners."¹³⁶

The concern for a sufficiency of literature was never diminished, with the result that the distribution of books, tracts, and periodicals remained large. It was spurred in part by the competition offered by other Churches, and also as an antidote to the religious indifference which was becoming evident in Sweden at the end of the century. The "avowed infidels" were a serious concern as well as a challenge to the Church.

As part of the close integration of Methodism, meetings were arranged in several places. Such conferences on the Gothenburg District, it was reported, were well attended by the membership and "proved a great benefit, especially to the preachers."¹³⁷

Perhaps the simplicity of the preaching and the plain presentation of the Gospel in contrast to the formalism of the Established Church in itself was a contributing factor. Almost every year revivals were reported, and frequent references were made to the teaching of the basic tenets of the evangelical message. The fact that the majority of followers were found among the poor people and times were hard in Sweden may have been another reason for the welcome the Church was given.

As in all mission fields, there was a shortage of men. This was about the only serious problem the Conference faced other than shortage of funds. The first situation became more acute with the superannuation or death of a number of the older valuable members during the 1890's. The seminary was not producing trained men at the rate it was hoped, the chief reason doubtless being that pastors could not be spared to develop this project. To help this situation, the Missionary Society arranged, in 1893, to provide for two regular teachers, and a third instructor was hired by the District in which the school was located. The Board also continued appropriations for Sweden to ease the Conference in its plight.

It will be noted that no separate work seemed necessary among the women.* This was probably because Churchwomen were already accustomed to organizing their own groups. In Methodism the women formed sewing societies, using the income from selling their wares to meet pressing needs within their own church or for contributions to the Conference missionary society. Day schools and boarding schools were not called for, since the king and government were tolerant and advanced enough to legislate wisely and make room for other denominations to promulgate the Christian faith among their people, including the children in the state schools. There is no question that the cooperation received from these quarters eased Methodism's acceptance and growth.

FINLAND AND ST. PETERSBURG MISSION

Methodism reached Finland in almost the same manner it had entered Sweden. Seamen converted on the Bethel Ship returned to their homeland;

* Two women were employed on the Karlskrona District in 1883. One was Mrs. Nilsen from Norway who for twenty-five years had been associated with the theater. When she preached in Norrköping the crowds were so great that admission had to be by ticket. The other woman, Mrs. Nelly Woll, had been a teacher in a Lutheran college.—Sixty-fifth Ann. Rep., M.S. (1883), p. 101.

other Finnish Methodists came back to their native land to live. Some Swedish converts resettled there. And while Finland, like many other northern European countries, was officially opposed to the introduction of new religious movements, a number of Protestant groups—the Baptists, the Russian Orthodox, and some Swedish sects—had already made some inroads, thus preparing the way for evangelical preaching.

A converted Finn, Gustaf Lervik, who returned from America in 1859, was the first to set about telling what God had done for his soul. He met with opposition; his books and tracts were burned; and he became discouraged. Nothing came of his endeavors. In 1866 Wilhelm and Gustaf Barnlund were converted in New York, and three years later also returned to their native land and established a small Methodist work.¹³⁸

Years passed, and, officially, nothing was undertaken. However, the missionary spirit of converts continued to spread Methodism. In 1879 a Local Preacher in Sweden, C. Martinsen, moved from Stockholm to Statka, Finland. Before long, he had entered into labors. To his former Presiding Elder, B. A. Carlsson, he wrote:

I have hired a large hall, where I have preached, without being disturbed or interrupted, every Sunday twice to a house full of attentive hearers. Still more, as it seems, the people are susceptible to the preaching of the word of God every-where, and the word is working mightily on the hearts of the people.¹³⁹

At the same time another Local Preacher, K. Lindborg, had also gone to Finland. He, too, continued to serve the Church, and was encouraged by finding willing listeners and a welcome everywhere. Lindborg toured the countryside around Kristinestad (Kristiinankaupunki), where he had settled. On his itinerations he met a number of Swedish-speaking Methodists who had been converted in America. A Society could easily be organized, he reported, and he communicated the wish of the people to have a preacher sent to them by the Missionary Society. Apart from these two men, others were, at different places, introducing the Methodist Way. At Abo (Turku), a Mr. Lundmark, a student and Local Preacher from Upsala, began preaching.¹⁴⁰

The next year a group of Methodists assembled by Lindborg in Vaasa wrote to the Presiding Elder of the Stockholm District, asking for someone to come to them to "hold the Lord's Supper." But Carlsson stated, "we have not had time, and I wished to get an advice of the brethren and our Bishop, before such a work is commenced in Finland." Despite the lack of response, Lindborg continued in his good works and the numbers grew. At the end of 1883 he submitted a report to the Stockholm District telling of the many places he had made converts. In Gamlakarleby (Kokkola), he had had particular success; but interest had been maintained at Vaasa and Kristiinankaupunki, also. Two Sunday schools had been formed.¹⁴¹ In 1884 the

Kokkola Society bought a lot for a chapel, although there were only thirty-eight members in full connection.¹⁴²

The Sweden Conference now took cognizance of this field and included it in the Stockholm District. Such spontaneous development year by year could no longer be treated casually. In 1884 the Conference decided to give Finland full-time attention, and proceeded to organize the whole country as a new District. Carlsson, Presiding Elder of the Stockholm District, who had been to date most closely identified with the Finnish field, was then appointed Presiding Elder.

At the end of the year Carlsson related in his report what he himself had accomplished at Helsingfors (Helsinki), the capital.

Almost the whole winter I have had to hold five or six meetings a week (class and prayer meetings included), with a goodly number of hearers, and among them not a few persons of rank, and some of the nobility. Among others, the late minister of affairs of Finland at St. Petersburg has made us a visit; and on Sunday, January 18, we had his sister, Mrs. Karamsin, formerly married to a Russian prince, among the hearers at our little hall Since then the noble lady has given us 200 Finnish marks to aid us in getting a new organ.¹⁴³

Other denominations had previously instituted missions in the capital and consequently the people were sympathetic to hearing new doctrine preached. Four students from the university cooperated with Carlsson in holding services, although they were not Methodists. Legally he had no permission to undertake the mission, but he had visited the officials who "listened to his explanations and permitted him to carry on." He added that the Finnish Parliament had in mind to change the laws in the near future.¹⁴⁴

Carlsson's hearers were of the most impoverished social group, but he found the people so warmhearted and sincere that though he was lonely at first, and a little discouraged, he felt this to be his call. At Christmas he was particularly touched when among other gifts his people gave him a big bearskin to keep his feet warm in the terribly cold weather.¹⁴⁵

Three years later (1887) the Finland District had two ordained preachers and six Local Preachers. Seven appointments were being filled,* and many of these had outstations. Once the first enthusiasts had been garnered into the Church, the progress became more difficult; and as Methodism appeared a threat to the State Church city by city raised objections through Church Councils of priests. Turku, one of the most aristocratic cities, was an example. Carlsson wrote:

When I came to preach the first time, I had scarcely arrived when I was placed before the police-master in the city, and was forbidden to preach. As the prohibition came at the order of the priests we fixed another time for the service, and invited them to come and hear, and the dean himself came. After this I visited him and was permitted to relate to him about the work of our Church and the purpose of our mission He listened, . . . showed me a great kindness and promised no more to hinder us in our work if we do not hold our services at the same time as their services¹⁴⁶

* Helsinki, A. F. Petterson; Ekenäs, P. Jeppson; Turku, K. E. Schildt; Björneborg (Pori), K. Lindborg; Kristiinankaupunki, A. G. Edlund; Nikolaistad (Vaasa), L. Lindroth; Kokkola, G. A. Hiden.—Sixty-ninth Ann. Rep., M.S. (1887), pp. 147 f.

In Helsinki satisfactory progress was being made. A society of young men was working for temperance and morality. Two Sunday schools, one in Finnish and one in Swedish, were teaching more than two hundred children. Even a preachers' school—the rudiments of a seminary—had been opened, which was receiving amazing cooperation from educated persons.¹⁴⁷

A well-ordered program was getting under way. The year before a periodical, Nya Budboraren (The New Messenger) had been issued and was taking hold. In Kristiinankaupunki, a home for orphans was instituted.

Every year in this community about a hundred poor people are sold to the lowest bidder because they cannot support themselves, and among these there are many children. Two of our sisters—who had long entertained a desire to be able to . . . help, have now, through much self-denial and fervent prayer to God, devoted themselves to this generous work. This . . . home exists through free gifts

The first meeting of the preachers in Finland was held at Vaasa November 16-18, 1887, for the sole purpose of common edification, and the mapping out of a program.¹⁴⁸

At the same time that Finland had been entered word had come from St. Petersburg (Leningrad) that a congregation could be formed in that city if only a preacher could be sent. But the call could not be answered. Again in 1888, a high officer in the city asked the Presiding Elder of the Finland District to come personally or at least send someone in his place, adding: "Now is the proper time for you to commence a mission here."¹⁴⁹

Bishop Fowler, on his tour of Scandinavia the following year, determined upon a mission in Russia, because a petition of many signatures had since come to the Swedish Conference reinforcing earlier requests. To this new appointment Carlsson was sent with two assistants. Carlsson found it difficult to fill this responsibility along with his other duties, but managed to visit the Russian capital about once a month. Later he reported:

At the opening of last August I went there with Bishop Fowler, in order to commence the work I hired a little plain preaching hall for 30 rubles a month, in which we since have had many blessed meetings. It will not hold many people, but God has been in the midst of us every time we have been gathered together in his name. Some have been converted by the preaching of the word and brought to Christ. The first Sunday in November we formed a little Methodist class and received the first members on trial, the number of whom was 7, to whom 3 have been added since. The same day we celebrated the Lord's Supper for the first time; 8 persons united with us in this memorable feast. The newly formed little society numbers at present 3 persons in full connection and 8 on trial. There are already 2 brethren who are helping us in the work for God.¹⁵⁰

Among the chief deterrents to advancement in Finland was the lack of skill of the Swedish preachers in speaking the Finnish tongue. Up to this time their work had been primarily among the Swedish-speaking residents, but as the Church became known others became interested. The congregation at Pori was entirely Finnish-speaking, and had to resort to using an elderly lady as interpreter. Also, the continuing enmity of the State Church posed problems, particularly in work with children.

In 1888 the law of the Russian Empire restricting religious freedom for dissenters' groups was altered so that Church members outside of the Establishment were allowed to separate from the State Church, and form new congregations of their own denominational choice under condition that the pastor be a Finnish subject. Further legislation in 1891 granted the Methodist Church the legal right to organize and hold property.¹⁵¹

When Bishop I. W. Joyce held the Sweden Conference in 1892, he judged the time had come to put the Finnish and Russian work into a separate mission, the Finland and St. Petersburg Mission. Johannes Roth was given the superintendency. The membership then stood at 458 with 134 probationers, and another 825 as adherents. One missionary and an assistant filled each of the following places: Turku, Pori, Ekenäs, Kokkola, Helsinki, Kristiinankaupunki and Narpes, Vaasa, Viborg (Viipuri), and Leningrad.¹⁵² Three of the preachers were Finnish.

Converts were not made too easily, the Superintendent explaining that "a Finn requires time before deciding to take such an important step." "After having viewed Methodism on all sides they usually express a desire to join us; the church then receives into her charge those who, once becoming members, are true and faithful Methodists for life."¹⁵³

The pattern of Methodism was beginning to be established, first through a strong emphasis on the Sunday-school program, and the inaugural of youth groups akin to the Epworth League, and then through the development of literature in the chief language of the country. In 1893 the first issue of Rauhan Sanoma (The Messenger of Peace), a monthly paper in Finnish, appeared. Through grants from the Sunday School Union and the Tract Society other literature in Finnish, including the Discipline and Hymnal, was prepared for distribution.¹⁵⁴

The mission was in poor financial condition. In this nation, too, the State Church collected taxes for its maintenance, which meant double giving for Methodists. Furthermore, the membership was primarily of people from the lowest income group, and two years of famine following failure of crops had reduced their resources to nothing. It was impossible, therefore, to build or to do much educationally. Benefactors on occasion came forward with gifts, and the Missionary Society made a yearly appropriation.

N. J. Rosen was named Superintendent in 1894, and at the same time the mission was divided into two Districts.* The arrangement was made in order to supply new places, especially among the Finnish people.

GERMANY AND SWITZERLAND MISSIONS

On November 9, 1849, Ludwig S. Jacoby, accompanied by his wife, arrived in Bremen, under appointment of Bishop Thomas A. Morris, as missionary to Germany.

This was the consummation of interest in Germany as a mission field on the part of American Methodists which had been growing over the years. German immigrants, writing to relatives and friends in the fatherland, pictured life in America in glowing terms. They also described the happiness and peace which they experienced as a result of their conversion in Methodist meetings. The Missionary Society began to receive inquiries from Germany about Methodism and requests for Methodist preachers. In 1844 Bishop Soule presented to General Conference a request from William Nast that he be allowed "to visit Germany, with a view to more extended usefulness among his brethren of the German nation." The Committee on Missions recommended that permission be granted. The visit was made but Nast decided that the State Church was so strongly entrenched and the laws restricting religious freedom so formidable that any immediate attempt to establish a mission was inadvisable.¹⁵⁵

For four years no further move was made. In the meantime, with German immigration at flood tide the German missions in the United States increased to eighty-four and church membership tripled. As one result correspondence between immigrants and their kinsfolk and friends in the homeland grew apace, quickening their interest in evangelical religion. With the establishment of a liberal national government in 1848 the rulers of the German states† were forced to grant a larger degree of religious freedom.¹⁵⁶ Both William Nast and Ludwig S. Jacoby were delegates to the General Conference of 1848, and both were members of the Committee on Missions. They called the attention of the Conference to the favorable political changes in Germany

* North District: Pori, Hjalmar Bergqvist; Kokkola, S. A. Huttqvist; Kristiinankaupunki and Narpes, Karl Selin; Vaasa, Anders Gronblad. South District: Turku, Erland Bjornberg; Ekenäs, Herman Rabe; Helsinki, N. J. Rosen; Helsinki Circuit, G. A. Hiden; Lovisa and Kotka, K. Lindborg; Tammerfors (Tampere), L. K. Ahlgren; Viipuri and Leningrad, August Ek, Aaron Blomqvist, K. U. Strandroos; Viipuri Circuit, O. E. Fagerbund.—Seventy-sixth Ann. Rep. M.S. (1894), p. 107.

† Until the nineteenth century Germany did not exist as a unified nation, but as a collection of states which for a thousand years, since the days of Charlemagne, had had their own rulers and government. Napoleon Bonaparte had at the beginning of the nineteenth century consolidated the more than three hundred states into thirty-nine, thus actually promoting German national unity; and at the Congress of Vienna in 1815 a Germanic Confederation was formed, a Confederation which was dominated by Austria. During the succeeding decades agitation for constitutional government and reforms constantly threatened the conservative rule of the princes and the reactionary Hapsburg dynasty of Austria. The aspirations of the people became concerted under the leadership of Prussia, a northern and Protestant state which had gradually evolved during the previous century and a half into a major power and Austria's only rival contender for power among the Germanic states. Finally, after a series of insurrections as revolution spread from France to Germany, a provisional national government was organized in 1848-49. The new national Parliament quickly disintegrated, however, under the warring factions, and the old order was re-established in 1850. The reforms and freedom granted in 1848-49 were revoked. Austria and Prussia continued to vie for control.

and petitioned for a missionary to be sent. No action on the petition was taken. However, the Conference adopted an amendment to the constitution of the Missionary Society which provided that "in the intervals between the meetings of the General Missionary Committee, the Board of Managers [of the Society], with the concurrence of a majority of the bishops, may adopt a new missionary field." Thus empowered, the Board, on May 3, 1849, "determined to establish a mission in Germany," and recommended the appointment of two missionaries. The Board also appropriated $1,800. for the purpose.

In June, a month later, Bishop Morris appointed L. S. Jacoby.* He was not in rugged health and for this, or other reasons, did not welcome the appointment but made no protest and on October 20, his thirty-sixth birthday, sailed from New York.

GERMANY MISSION FOUNDED

The choice of Bremen as headquarters was a natural one. It was one of the few "free cities"; its new constitution (of April 18, 1849) guaranteed "full liberty of faith and conscience," the "right to hold social worship in private and public," and to form "new religious societies." While this was also true of Hamburg, the alternate choice cited by the Board, Bremen was the chief place of embarkation. In 1849 nearly 60,000 emigrants had departed for America from that point alone. It was in closer touch with America, and offered a chance of directing emigrants toward Methodism.¹⁵⁸

Jacoby was well received upon his arrival by several influential persons to whom he had letters of introduction. He lost no time: two days after his arrival he wrote to Nast, relating his activities. He had made a visit to a printer and, finding that he could have tracts printed at the rate of 1,500 pages for sixty cents, he had ordered copies of a dozen different tracts. The establishment of a semi-monthly Methodist paper in Germany seemed immediately essential to him for the double purpose of counteracting misrepresentations of Methodism and of aiding emigrants with reliable information about their new homeland. He estimated that with $500. he could pay for its publication and distribution for one year. The Board responded readily and on January 30, 1850, authorized the publication with the condi-

* Ludwig Sigismund Jacoby (1813-74) was born in Alt-Strelitz, Mecklenburg, Germany, of Jewish parents, but when a young man (1835) was baptized a Lutheran. He emigrated to the United States in the fall of 1839, and during the following Christmas season he was converted under William Nast. Three months later he felt the call to preach and for a year he served as a Local Preacher. In 1841 he was received on probation in the Missouri Conference, and was sent to St. Louis where he opened a German mission. He was received into full connection in 1843. In 1848, prior to his appointment to Germany, he was Presiding Elder of the Quincy District in the Illinois Conference. His remarkably able administration of the German-Swiss work in Europe continued until 1872 when he withdrew. He was delegate to the General Conference in 1872, and then as a member of the Southwest German Conference became pastor of the 8th Street German Church in St. Louis, Mo. (1872-73), and Presiding Elder of St. Louis District (1873-74). He married Amalia Nuelsen, the sister of Heinrich Nuelsen, in 1839 or 1840. On June 10, 1874, he died of cancer after a lingering illness, leaving his wife and eight children.—Official Biographical Files; Gen'l Minutes, 1841, pp. 201, 202; ibid., 1843, p. 404; ibid., 1848, p. 282; ibid., 1874, p. 88.

tion that $500. be subscribed in America "for that specific object," and paid into the treasury, to cover the cost of the experiment.¹⁵⁹ This marked the beginning of the Bremen Book Concern.

The next step—finding a preaching place—was difficult. He finally rented a dancing saloon in the Kramer-amt-Haus (Grocers' Hall) which would seat about five hundred persons and here preached his first public sermon on Sunday evening, December 23, 1849, to about four hundred hearers. Reminiscing about it ten years later, he wrote:

. . . I trembled before I commenced to preach as I was used to do when I had the chills and fever. I was a poor plain home-made preacher, and in this city there were great celebrated preachers; but there was one thing that encouraged me: I had not sent myself; I was fully convinced the Lord had sent me to Germany.¹⁶⁰

The crowds attending his services soon caused Jacoby to rent a larger saloon in the Kramer-amt-Haus. On February 26, 1850, less than four months after he had begun the work, he wrote to the Missionary Society proposing the erection of "the First Methodist Episcopal Church in Germany." In the same letter he described his weekly schedule: on Sunday nights he preached in the Kramer-amt-Haus to about five hundred; Monday evenings were spent with prayer meetings at the house of an adherent; on Tuesday evenings he preached in a dancing saloon in a suburb to about three hundred; Thursday evenings he lectured on the doctrines of Methodism at the Kramer-amt-Haus; while on Friday evenings Class meeting was held with the fourteen members he had received on trial. In addition he was busied with tract distribution. To assist him in beginning the work with the emigrants at Bremerhaven (the port of Bremen, about thirty-five miles distant) he employed, the first week of March, one of the members (E. C. Poppe) as a colporteur.¹⁶¹

People gathered from all parts of Bremen, sometimes coming from ten to fourteen miles away, to hear Methodist preaching. On Easter Day, 1850, Jacoby admitted twenty-one persons to the Society and administered the Lord's Supper to them, and on the next evening they participated in a Love Feast. On May 21 the Church held its first Quarterly Conference.¹⁶²

On June 16, 1850, Jacoby opened a Sunday school in the Kramer-amt-Haus with about eighty children, the first Sunday school in Germany modeled on those in the United States. It was instantly popular and within two months attendance had grown to between two and three hundred. In the course of the next few months Sunday schools were also opened in Bremerhaven, Hastedt, and Buntenthor, in conjunction with the regular work, and in his report of March 1, 1851, Jacoby indicated an average total attendance of 750. So alarming to the State Church was this extension of Methodist influence over the children that the Lutherans adopted the institution and began opening schools of their own.¹⁶³

During February, 1850, members of the Board conferred with Bishop

Morris and "officially offered an appointment" to Charles H. Doering* as missionary to Germany. On May 6 he was commissioned. In the meantime the Sunday school of Morris Chapel, Cincinnati, had pledged the support of an unmarried missionary to Germany. Thus enabled to provide the field with a third man, on March 20, 1850, Bishop Morris appointed Lewis Nippert† of the Ohio Conference as assistant missionary. On June 7 Doering and Nippert arrived at Bremen, together with Dr. John McClintock who inspected and reported favorably upon the infant mission.¹⁶⁴

The urgent appeal for a church building also received attention. At a meeting held on April 15, 1850, the Board of Managers resolved to make a special effort to raise a fund of $5,000., to build in Bremen the first Methodist Episcopal church in Germany, but it was not until 1855 that the church was built. However, in 1852 Jacoby reported that "we have since the last year changed the saloon [in the Kramer-amt-Haus] into a nice chapel, after the American fashion."¹⁶⁵

Following the arrival of Doering and Nippert, the mission expanded rapidly. While Jacoby retained pastoral care of the work in Bremen, his coworkers formed the Bremen Circuit‡ with fifteen preaching points. At the time of Jacoby's annual report, March 1, 1851, the Bremen Society had a membership of twenty-eight in full connection and twenty-three on trial, while the appointments on Bremen Circuit had a total of thirty-six probationers. In addition to his regular services at the Kramer-amt-Haus, Jacoby preached biweekly to 125 persons in a house in Grosslinger-Deich, a suburb. The work in Bremerhaven was not as successful as anticipated. The emigrants were too preoccupied with "visionary plans" for their lives in America to listen to spiritual counsel, and the preaching place was too inconveniently located to attract them.¹⁶⁶

* Charles H. Doering (1811-97) was born in Springe, Hannover, Germany. He worked as a merchant in Bremen and in 1835 emigrated to the United States. While rooming with a Methodist family in Wheeling, W. Va., he was converted. He studied at Allegheny College, supporting himself by giving German and French lessons, and while in college was licensed to exhort. Received on trial in the Pittsburgh Conference in 1841, he was immediately transferred to New York Conference; and received into full connection in 1843 in the Pittsburgh Conference. He served in New York and Pittsburgh, founding "German Methodism east of the Allegheny Mountains," before his appointment to Germany. In Germany he served as pastor, Presiding Elder, and teacher in Martin Mission Institute. In 1871 he succeeded Jacoby as Agent of the Bremen Book Concern, continuing until 1883 when, following the death of his wife (Nancy McLaughlin) he was superannuated. He lived with his son in Berea, Ohio, until death.—Official Biographical Files; Gospel in All Lands, April, 1898, p. 147; Christian Advocate, LXXII (1897), 36 (Sept. 9), 592; Gen'l Minutes, 1843, p. 370; ibid., 1883, p. 73.

† Lewis Nippert (1825-94) was born in Gorsdorf, Alsace, and at five years of age emigrated with his parents to the United States. The family settled near Wheeling, [W.] Va. Converted at the age of fifteen, he was admitted on trial in the Ohio Conference in 1846. His first appointment was in Louisville, Ky. He also served in Indianapolis, Pittsburgh, and Columbus before going to Germany. In 1868 he was elected superintendent of Martin Mission Institute, where he remained until 1886 when he returned to the U.S. He transferred to the Central German Conference and was appointed to Pittsburgh. He also served in Columbus, and in Cincinnati where he died. He was married to Mela Durtze, 1851; to Adelaide Lindemann, 1859; and to Countess Ida Eleanor Uxekull Gyllenband, 1870.—Official Biographical Files; Gospel in All Lands, April, 1898, p. 148; Gen'l Minutes, 1846, pp. 69, 73; ibid., Spring, 1886, p. 77; ibid., Fall, 1886, pp. 252, 253; ibid., Fall, 1894, p. 412.

‡ Of the fifteen Bremen Circuit appointments ten were within the state of Bremen, including Bremerhaven, Vegesack, Hastedt, and Bunteithor, while two (Dwobeck and Hasbergen) were in the grand duchy of Oldenburg, one (Baden) in Hannover, and two others (Witzew and Thedinghausen) in Brunswick.

A Society was also established in Waltersdorf, situated in a part of the grand duchy of Weimar surrounded by Saxony. Ehrhardt Wunderlich, converted in Dayton, Ohio, had been compelled to return to his home in Saxony for military reasons. He began preaching, selling Bibles, and distributing tracts as an unpaid helper. During a visit to Waltersdorf in February, 1851, Jacoby found that Wunderlich had organized a Class of twenty-six persons. So successful was his work that in August, 1851, the Board appropriated $100. to sustain it.¹⁶⁷

The missionary personnel was supplemented in 1851 by the arrival of Heinrich Nuelsen,* on April 15, and Engelhardt Riemenschneider,† in June. Two paid colporteurs, E. C. Poppe and C. Nahrman, were employed and, in addition to Wunderlich, two other unpaid helpers.¹⁶⁸

With Nuelsen to replace him in Bremen, Doering began a mission in Hamburg in July, 1851. Nahrman had previously spent nearly two months there as colporteur, and returned to assist Doering. A preaching place was soon rented, with preaching three times a week, and a Sunday school opened. Riemenschneider was assigned to open work in Frankfort-on-the-Main where he arrived July 3, 1851. He had to wait nearly two months for government permission to hold meetings. He preached in many places in the surrounding country, but was threatened with imprisonment, and on one occasion, having held a meeting in Erdhausen in the duchy of Hesse, he was put in jail overnight and conducted to the frontier of the duchy the next morning. In Frankfort as well as in the other communities he found it difficult to rent a room for preaching, and in some villages impossible. Nippert arrived in Heilbronn, in Wurttemberg, September 8, 1851. After obtaining legal permission to remain, he rented a house, fitting up one of the rooms for meetings. His congregation soon spread into an adjoining room, and still being too crowded, he rented an outside place. His Methodist preaching soon gained a following. The difficulty of finding preaching places made it necessary in many cities and villages to utilize dance halls,

* Heinrich Nuelsen (1826-1912) was born in Norten, near Gottingen, Germany, of liberal Catholic parents. In 1839 he was converted and the next year emigrated with his parents to Cincinnati. In 1844 he was received into the Missouri Conference, and transferred to the Illinois Conference. He was received into full connection in 1847. Previous to his appointment to Germany in 1851, he served in Weston, Mo., Beardstown, Ill., Galena, Ill., and Burlington, Iowa. He succeeded Doering as Book Agent in Bremen, 1883, which post he held until 1889, when he returned to the U.S. In 1890 he was listed as a superannuated member of the Switzerland Conference, of which he had been a member since its organization. He was married to Magdalena Reuter, who died in 1863, and later to Rosalie Mueller. He was the father of Bishop John L. Nuelsen.—Gen'l Minutes, 1846, p. 78; ibid., 1847, p. 179; ibid., 1883, p. 73; ibid., Fall, 1889, p. 259; ibid., Fall, 1890, p. 272; Gospel in All Lands, April, 1898, pp. 148 f.; Official Biographical Files.

† Engelhardt Riemenschneider (1815-99) was born in Eubach, Hesse, Germany, and raised a Lutheran. In 1835 he emigrated to the United States. Three years later he was converted and in 1840 he was received on trial in the Pittsburgh Conference. He was received into full connection in the Northern Ohio Conference in 1842. In Europe he served in Frankfort, Bremen, Bremerhaven, and Basel. He was superannuated because of ill health in 1870 and a few years later returned to the U.S. His name appeared in the 1878 Minutes as a superannuated member of the Central German Conference, which relationship he apparently retained until his death in Chicago. He was married to Catharine Nuhfer, who died in 1865.—Gen'l Minutes, 1840, pp. 12, 77; ibid., 1842, p. 288; ibid., 1869, p. 153; ibid., 1870, p. 154; ibid., 1878, p. 11; ibid., Fall, 1899, p. 298; Gospel in All Lands, April, 1898, p. 149; Official Biographical Files.

saloons, and private homes. In Grosslinger-Deich, a suburb of Bremen, the preaching had to be suspended for want of a room but by June, 1852, a chapel was finally readied.¹⁶⁹

The first annual meeting of the Germany Mission was held in Bremen, March 11-17, 1852. The five missionaries (Jacoby as Superintendent, Riemenschneider, Nippert, Nuelsen, and Doering) and several native assistants attended. Among the latter was Ehrhardt Wunderlich who was recommended for admission on trial in an Annual Conference in order to become a member of the mission. In addition to forming a Germany Missionary Society, a Tract Society was organized.¹⁷⁰

Jacoby's health had been precarious before he left the United States and in 1852, after he had been advised repeatedly by the Board to conserve his strength, Jacoby put Riemenschneider in charge of Bremen Station, thus freeing himself from many of his duties. The Bremen Station by then had three preaching places: the Kramer-amt-Haus, Steffensweg, and Buntenthor. The two latter places were in the suburbs and in 1852 a small chapel and parsonage, worth $4,000., was built and dedicated in Steffensweg. Bremen Circuit, under Nuelsen, had thirteen preaching places, with thirty-six full members. In May, 1854, Bremen Station and Bremen Circuit were united as one mission and put in the charge of Doering. Included in the mission were Baden, Uelzen, and Morsum (all in Hannover Kingdom) where one of the helpers, Ernst Peters, had labored for six months. Upon receiving in October, 1853, the ultimatum to leave the country or give up his work, Peters was appointed to Brake, located on the Weser in the duchy of Oldenburg. This village of two to three thousand people had no church; Peters rented a small room and soon attained some success. In addition he visited the city of Oldenburg regularly. Riemenschneider was in charge of Bremerhaven, where he had a congregation of between eighty and one hundred and fifty persons.¹⁷¹

In 1855 Bremen Station and the Circuit were once again separate, under the direction of Doering and Nippert respectively. In his annual report Nippert felt forced to acknowledge a lack of success "in the last years" in the area around Bremen. Most of the appointments on the Circuit were given up in order to concentrate upon the more promising ones. Hastedt and Vegesack showed little fruit; other places had lost almost entire Classes through emigration. Especially was this true in Hannover, where the members had suffered some persecution; many later joined Methodist Societies in Cincinnati.¹⁷²

The work in the city of Bremen received an impetus through the dedication, April 1, 1855, of a chapel, so long desired by Jacoby. The edifice, three stories high, included not only a chapel large enough to accommodate four hundred, but also the office of the Superintendent, a large bookstore, and the living quarters of the preacher-in-charge. Located on the broad and lovely George Street, it was known as the Tract House or as the George-street Chapel. The whole property cost about $20,000., of which $11,000. was still due at the time of dedication.¹⁷³

Nippert, whose headquarters were in Heilbronn, quickly reached out to ten nearby villages and cities, including Neuenstadt, Weinsberg, and Gruppenbach. He also occasionally visited the kingdom of Wurttemberg, but the Methodists, not wishing to compete with the Wesleyan Society* there, restrained for a few years their desire to occupy it. With Riemenschneider's assignment to Bremen Station in 1852, Frankfort-on-the-Main was added to Nippert's work. The Frankfort Mission included Friedrichsdorf (which in 1853 had a Society of twenty-two members) and Offenbach (with eight members) as well as Frankfort (with a Class of ten). Assisting Nippert in this large field were S. Kurtz, and Louis Wallon, Sr., who later became a prominent member of the East German Conference in the United States. In 1854 Nippert reported that the work was flourishing in Frankfort and Heilbronn, but preaching was not now permitted in Friedrichsdorf, and persecution had hindered progress in Neuenstadt, Wahlheim, and other places. In addition, emigration had cut into the membership: the whole Class from Offenbach had removed to the United States, as had members of some other communities. On the brighter side, he reported that Ernst Mann, a young painter who had been converted in Bremen, had returned to his home town, Pirmasens, in the Bavarian Palatinate, and had begun to hold meetings there. He soon had twenty-five converts. Mann was received into the mission as a helper. The entire Circuit now totaled 135 members. The next year, 1855, Mann not only held services in the Palatinate, but also in Bischwiller, Alsace. Although opposition seemed slight at first, he was soon banished from Alsace, which was Roman Catholic and at that time a part of France. In 1855 Frankfort and Wurttemberg were again separated, with Nuelsen appointed to the former, and Louis Wallon, Sr., to the latter. Nippert, who had spent over four years in South Germany, was appointed to Bremen Circuit.¹⁷⁴

The work in Hamburg was discouragingly slow. At the end of 1853 Doer-

* The Wesleyans had begun work in Wurttemberg previous to 1845 but their missionary, C. G. Mueller (or Miller), was now aged and the work, the missionaries feared, was slipping from him. Feeling that unless his mission took immediate steps to occupy the field, the Albright brethren would take it over, Jacoby had decided in the fall of 1851 to send Nippert to work in an area of Wurttemberg not reached by Mueller and also to assist Mueller. The Board of Managers, in June, 1852, advised Jacoby to travel to London ostensibly for his health, but gave him unofficial instructions to sound out the Wesleyans without arousing their suspicion of any attempt to supplant them. Jacoby reported to Durbin in May, 1853, that his "journey was not in vain." The Wesleyans were willing to give their work over to the American Methodists, but on the condition that the latter support Brother Mueller. This Jacoby felt was impossible: it would be necessary to wait until Mueller's work had ended. Heilbronn remained the center of Methodist work in Wurttemberg, under Lewis Nippert; Louis Wallon, Sr., a helper, visited Wurttemberg occasionally.—L. S. Jacoby to J. P. Durbin, letters, Oct. 17, 1851, May 29, 1853, Correspondence Files, Division of World Missions; J. P. Durbin to L. S. Jacoby, letter, June 18, 1852, pp. 510 f.; Bishop Waugh to L. S. Jacoby, letter, July 14, 1852, p. 520; both in "Letters from the Board of Missions, Germany, Sept. 25, 1849-Nov. 15, 1866," in files, Division of World Missions, hereafter referred to as "Germany Letter Book." Thirty-third Ann. Rep., M.S. (1851-52), pp. 123 f.; ibid., 36th (1854), pp. 22 f.; F. H. Otto Melle, Ed., Das Walten Gottes im deutschen Methodismus, pp. 182 ff.

ing and his helper, Adrian Van Anandel,* were able to report only six full members and four on trial. In November of that year a new appointment in the seamen's chapel in St. Pauli, a section of Hamburg, was opened. Faced with strong legal interference, Doering, with the support of the consul, appealed successfully to the United States' treaties with the free cities, giving him the rights of their own citizens. The appointment within the city reached many emigrants, for the trustees of the English Reformed Church at the harbor had given Doering the use of their building. At the end of 1854 the membership had apparently not grown, but each appointment had a congregation of fifteen to forty persons and a Sunday school of sixty to ninety children. During this year Van Anandel was received as a missionary and the following year was left in charge of the Hamburg Mission. While the work in the city remained static, he began preaching in three nearby villages. However, Jacoby became dissatisfied with him as a missionary, and described him as unsuited for the work in Germany. Only the work among the emigrants in Hamburg deterred Jacoby from giving up this "great Sodom." The following year Ernst Peters was in charge and the mission finally began to yield fruit with larger congregations and several conversions.¹⁷⁵

The Saxony Mission included Reussdorf, Waltersdorf, Triebes, and Dordendorf, and "several small dominions on its borders"—the grand duchy of Weimar, the principality of Reuss Schleiz, and the duchy of Altenburg. In the last two principalities the Methodists were relatively free to carry on their work. In 1852 Ehrhardt Wunderlich formed nine Classes with a total of thirty full members and eighty-nine probationers. The following year, after Ehrhardt Wunderlich's departure for America, Friedrich Wunderlich † was so successful in carrying forward his brother's work that Jacoby wrote of him in September, 1855:

He has been a very useful man for the last three years and will make a good travelling preacher. I have visited Saxony and asked the Helpers if Br. Wunderlich could not now be spared and go into an other field of labor, but all agreed . . . that it would be a great injury to the work in Saxony if he would be taken away. So I left him there to continue to superintend the work.¹⁷⁶

By the end of 1855 there were eighteen missionaries and assistants in

* Adrian Van Anandel, a Dutchman fluent in German and English, had been converted among Methodists in Hamburg several years previous to Doering's arrival there. He began working with a Dr. Craigh, an Irish missionary, but upon the arrival of Doering he chose to unite with the Methodist mission. With the consent of Dr. Craigh, who was unable to provide funds for the mission, Van Anandel brought part of his work with him to the Methodists.—L. S. Jacoby to J. P. Durbin, letter, May 29, 1853, Correspondence Files, Division of World Missions.

† Friedrich Wunderlich (older brother of Ehrhardt Wunderlich) and Carl Dietrich were converted under Ehrhardt's preaching and assisted him in Saxony. In 1852 they were given Exhorter's licenses. Both were admitted on trial to the Germany Mission Conference in 1856. Dietrich was admitted into full connection in 1858; Friedrich Wunderlich, in 1859. Friedrich Wunderlich suffered poor health, however, and located in 1860. In 1879 it was reported that at Waltersdorf, the cradle of Methodism in Saxony, "Brother Wunderlich, the old pioneer, still helps, working as much as his time and strength permit."—Thirty-third Ann. Rep., M.S. (1851-52), pp. 117, 124; ibid., 34th and 35th (1852-53), pp. 96 f.; ibid., 38th (1856), pp. 35, 41; ibid., 39th (1857), pp. 54 f.; ibid., 43rd (1861), p. 52; ibid., 61st (1879), p. 73; Gen'l Minutes, 1856, p. 187; ibid., 1858, p. 341; ibid., 1859, p. 357; ibid., 1860, p. 368; Gospel in All Lands, April, 1898, p. 150; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, Missions and Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, II, 297.

nine stations or centers. Members in full connection numbered 596 and probationers forty-four. The twenty-six Sunday schools had an enrollment of 1,512 scholars. Heartened by such success, Jacoby suggested "that the time is at hand, probably, when we should become a mission conference."¹⁷⁷ There were adversities, but, discouraging as they were, they did not dim the enthusiasm and optimism for the mission which had been expressed by the Board at the end of its first year. For in the spring of 1855 Bishop Morris wrote to the missionaries in Germany that hope for success in Germany now seemed as reasonable as it did "in England in 1739 or in America in 1769. Opposition . . . is not more extensive or violent in Germany now than it was at first in England and America." At the request of the Bishop, Jacoby attended the General Conference session at Indianapolis in May, 1856, to present the case for a Mission Conference. After consideration of the proposal the General Conference resolved

That the German Missionaries of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Germany, and in that part of France and Switzerland where the German language is spoken, be organized as a Mission Annual Conference.¹⁷⁸

GERMANY MISSION CONFERENCE, 1856-68

The five missionaries met in Bremen September 10-15, 1856, to organize their Mission Conference. No Bishop was present. Jacoby presided and Doering was elected secretary. Four men were added to the personnel: three admitted on trial, Friedrich Wunderlich, Carl Dietrich, and Ernst Mann; the fourth was a probationer who had just arrived following transfer from the Cincinnati Conference, Hermann zur Jacobsmuhlen.* The Conference members were aided by eleven helpers and assistants. The membership totaled 535: persons in full connection 426, and on probation 109, a drop of 101 from the previous year. Jacoby was fully convinced of the value of the itinerancy, and to this end the work was organized in ten appointments,† six of which were Circuits. Included were three notable new appointments: Berlin, which remained to be supplied until 1858 when Nippert was appointed; and Lausanne and Zurich, marking the beginning of Methodist work in Switzerland.¹⁷⁹

The second Annual Conference (1857) was memorable for its guests.

* Hermann zur Jacobsmuhlen (1830-62) was born in Holdorf, grand duchy of Brunswick, Germany. Having been converted to Methodism after studying "Hofacker's Sermons," he emigrated to the United States to escape religious persecution. He was admitted on trial in the Cincinnati Conference in 1855 and appointed to Allegheny, in the North Ohio German Mission District. On July 1, 1856, Bishop Morris transferred him to the Germany Mission Conference where he was appointed to Zurich. The following year he was admitted into full connection. He later served in Bremen (1860-62) and Pforzheim in the grand duchy of Baden (June, 1862-December, 1862). On Dec. 11, 1862, he died of typhoid fever, leaving a wife (he had married Emma Bruner, 1859) and two small sons.—Official Biographical Files; Bishop Morris to Jacobsmuhlen, letters, May 27, June 6, 1856, "Germany Letter Book," pp. 52 f.; Gen'l Minutes, 1855, pp. 635, 639; ibid., 1856, p. 151; ibid., 1857, p. 532; ibid., 1860, p. 368; ibid., 1863, pp. 128 f.; Gospel in All Lands, April, 1898, p. 151.

† The appointments were: Bremen: George-street Chapel and Bremen Circuit; Steffensweg Chapel and Farge English appointment. Oldenburg Circuit; Bremerhaven and Brake; Hamburg; South Germany; Saxony Circuit; Lausanne Circuit; Zurich Circuit; Berlin.—Thirty-eighth Ann. Rep., M.S. (1856), p. 35; Gen'l Minutes, 1856, p. 187.

Bishop Matthew Simpson, making the first episcopal visit to the mission, presided, and the Conference was also attended by Dr. John McClintock (an old friend of the Germany Mission), Dr. Nast (who was also attending a convention of the Evangelical Alliance to be held later in Berlin), and Joseph A. Wright, American minister to Prussia. Adolf Leuring and Ernst Peters were admitted on trial. There were few changes in the appointments. Berlin again remained "to be supplied." Although Jacoby reported the year as prosperous, with "an increase of two hundred and thirty-five members," making a total of 774, the membership in full connection (558) at the end of 1857 was still smaller than two years previously. The growth of the Germany Mission was seriously retarded by emigration to the United States.¹⁸⁰

The year 1858 was an eventful one: a large accession of converts brought the total membership well above a thousand. E. Mann began holding meetings in Geneva, and Nippert was appointed to open work in Berlin, although he had not yet begun to preach by mid-December for want of a suitable preaching place. Wilhelm Schwarz,* the last missionary sent from the United States, arrived July 27, 1858. None was admitted on trial, but Carl Dietrich and Ernst Mann were admitted into full connection. The work of the Conference was organized for the first time into Districts†: Bremen, Oldenburg, South Germany, and Switzerland.¹⁸¹

On February 19, 1858, Nippert began instructing a group of young men who gave promise for the ministry. They decided to form an institute for Biblical instruction, and this grew into the well-known Martin Mission Institute. The need for such a program was described by Jacoby:

The young men of the mechanics and workmen have a very limited education; they, in general, neither speak nor write correctly, and know little of the word of God. From the commencement I saw the great difficulty of finding useful men for our ministry, if they were not educated for this work; and though I earnestly prayed to the Lord to open our way, I waited with patience till he should grant us the necessary help. The time was nearer than we believed.¹⁸²

By fall of the year six students had been received. Most of them were Local Preachers who studied four days a week and traveled a Circuit the remainder of the time. On December 10, 1860, William F. Warren was trans-

* Wilhelm Schwarz (1826-75) was born in Oberachern, in the duchy of Baden, and reared in a Roman Catholic family. He left his studies for the priesthood at the University of Frieberg, feeling himself unsuitable, and emigrated to New York in 1845. The following year he was converted, and entered the Ohio Conference. In March, 1848, he was received into the New York Conference and served in Newark, New York City, and Albany. Transferred by Bishop Ames to the Germany Mission Conference in May, 1858, Schwarz worked in Bremen for two years, then replaced Nippert in Berlin. He later served in Basel and opened the German Mission in Paris.—Paul F. Douglass, The Story of German Methodism, . . . , pp. 124 f.; J. P. Durbin to Bishop Morris, letter, May 19, 1858, "Germany Letter Book," p. [94].

† The organization of the Districts and the list of Stations were given in the annual report for 1859: Bremen District, L. S. Jacoby, P. E.; Bremen, Vegesack, Hastadt, W. Schwarz; Bremen Circuit, C. Achard; Berlin, L. Nippert; Saxony, F. Wunderlich; Hamburg, to be supplied; Oldenburg District, C. H. Doering, P. E.; Oldenburg, C. H. Doering; Varel, C. Dietrich; Edeweck, to be supplied; Brake, to be supplied; Bremerhaven, A. Leuring; Neerstedt, to be supplied; Delmenhorst, to be supplied. South Germany District, H. Nuelsen, P. E.; Ludwigsburg, H. Nuelsen; Heilbronn, Ulm, Bonlanden, Sulzbach, Frankfort-on-the-Main, Pirmasens, Kreuznach, Alsace, all to be supplied. Switzerland District, E. Riemenschneider, P. E.; Zurich, Riemenschneider and H. zur Jacobsmuhlen; "a new Mission" [Biel and Neighborhood], to be supplied; Thun, E. Mann; and Lausanne, to be supplied.—Forty-first Ann. Rep., M.S. (1859), p. 26.

ferred by Bishop T. A. Morris to the Germany Mission Conference from the New England Conference, and appointed "First Teacher in the Mission Institute at Bremen," although he did not arrive in Germany until June, 1861. At the Conference session of 1860 Jacoby, who had been "acting director" of the institute, was officially elected to that post, and moved into the newly completed institute building. At the same session three students from the institute were admitted on trial into Conference membership, Ernst Gebhardt, August Rodemeyer, and Arnold Sulzberger. In 1866 Warren returned to the United States and J. F. Hurst arrived to replace him as theological professor. In 1866 a centennial gift of $25,000. from John T. Martin of Brooklyn was received for the erection of a new building. The following year it was decided to remove the institute from Bremen to Frankfort-on-the-Main, and rename it "Martin Mission Institute."¹⁸³

In 1862 an incident occurred which threatened to be Jacoby's undoing. Although he had been well schooled in modern and ancient languages, he desired as a young man to go into business in Vienna, and to do so he borrowed money. Instead of carrying through his business venture and repaying the money, he went to England and then to America. A shipwreck en route caused him to spend nine weeks on a fishing boat where he found several books on medicine. Having studied these, he posed as a physician upon his arrival in the United States. During the Christmas season, 1839, he went to services in Cincinnati at which William Nast was preaching, intending to take notes and ridicule the group; instead, he felt convicted of his sins and was "powerfully converted." Through the years his debts weighed heavily upon his conscience but he had not the means to regulate his affairs. Eventually, in 1862, the Board requested him to travel from Germany to Bulgaria, accompanied by W. F. Warren, to examine the mission there. Although Jacoby saw the danger in attempting to leave Germany with unpaid debts, he felt compelled to go. Upon crossing the Austrian frontier the German police caught up with him. Jacoby engaged a lawyer and immediately requested Bishop Janes to recall him. A man of proud heart, Jacoby had been disturbed throughout his ministry that he had not felt perfect love and charity. He had constantly beseeched God to grant him humility. Now, the exposure and confession of his guilt brought him through humiliation an "inward peace." Describing his past fully in a letter to Dr. Durbin, June 30, 1862, from Vienna, he humbly wrote, "I praise the Lord that He has brought me down into the dust" Dr. Durbin and Bishop Janes kept the matter a secret. Even Bishop Morris, who had episcopal charge of the Germany Mission Conference, was not informed of it. Instead, Dr. Durbin and Bishop Janes simply forwarded Jacoby's request for recall to Bishop Morris without assigning any reasons, and advising him to refuse to do so. Meanwhile, Jacoby withdrew his request for recall. Satisfied by both

Brothers Jacoby and Warren that the case was justly settled, Durbin and Janes let the matter rest, and Jacoby continued his able administration another ten years.¹⁸⁴

The Districts underwent frequent reorganization* as more and more places were entered. Bremen District, the scene of nearly twenty years of labor, showed little advance by 1868. Although at this time each of the centers in the District had a chapel, with a total of seven for the District, the people remained indifferent and the prospects poor. The toll of emigration was also severe.

Although Oldenburg District had the benefit of religious freedom, the work was retarded by public indifference. New missions were undertaken in Varel around 1861; in Flensburg, Schleswig-Holstein, in 1866; and in Aurich in 1867. The older stations, Oldenburg, Hamburg, Edewecht, and Brake, were maintained. In 1868 the District had an even smaller membership than Bremen District, and had only three chapels, one in Oldenburg, one in Edewecht, and one in Westerstede on the Edewecht Circuit.

East District included sections of Prussia, Saxony, and Pomerania. Efforts to build strong Societies in Prussia (chiefly in Berlin) were rather fruitless, but the work in Saxony grew rapidly despite persecution, largely on account of the indefatigable labor of Friedrich Wunderlich. In 1865 there were twenty-seven preaching places in Saxony and three years later it was divided into three Circuits: Reussdorf (which included Waltersdorf), Dortendorf, and Gossnitz. The last included the hopeful new stations, Planitz and Leubnitz. Other new stations were Gransee and Neu Ruppın, about forty miles from Berlin. In Pomerania, in North Germany, work was begun in 1862, with six or so appointments, and met with much success. The principal places were Greifenberg and Kolberg, where thirty years earlier two thousand people had left the State Church. Some of these now began to attend Methodist services. Within three years Pomerania, under the care of Johannes Staiger and Bernhard Schroeder, had thirteen preaching places and several Sunday schools; during succeeding years it continued to show a steady growth. In 1868 the East District had thirty-nine preaching places, but only two chapels—one in Berlin and one in Dortendorf. The following year it was renamed the Berlin District.¹⁸⁵

The South District included the kingdom of Wurttemberg (its principal field), the duchy of Nassau, the grand duchy of Baden, and parts of Prussia and Bavaria. Parts of the District did not have religious freedom. Yet it became the largest of the German Districts. Ludwigsburg and Heil-

* In 1860 Bremen and Oldenburg Districts were realigned and renamed. Taken from the old Bremen District, Berlin, Hamburg, Saxony, and the Mission Institute formed the new East District. The bulk of the work in the state of Bremen was combined with that of the grand duchy of Oldenburg and parts of Hannover in the new North District. Two years later North District was divided and Bremen and Oldenburg Districts were re-created.—Forty-second Ann. Rep., M.S. (1860), pp. 54-56; ibid., 44th (1862), p. 26; ibid., 45th (1863), pp. 31 f., 42; ibid., 46th (1864), p. 44.

bronn remained the key centers within Wurttemberg. Several cities in the grand duchy of Baden quickly assumed importance, following the proclamation of religious freedom in 1861. In 1862 a mission was opened in Pforzheim, a center for jewelry manufacturing, and in 1864 a Society was formed. The following year preaching was begun in Karlsruhe, the residence of the grand duke of Baden. At about the same time a mission was begun in Mannheim; and in 1865 work was reported in Lahr, also in Baden. A Local Preacher, P. Schaaf, sustained the work in Pirmasens, in Bavaria, where there was still no religious freedom in 1863. Still other major centers, in Prussia and Nassau, were opened during these years. Frankfort-on-the-Main, which had "seemed to be entirely in darkness," and was left to be supplied in 1859, began in 1862 "to give great promise." In about 1862 the surrounding principalities of Nassau and Hesse-Darmstadt were opened by their extension of liberty. Other new centers were Dillenburg, Heidelberg, Marbach, Beilstein, Vaihingen, Calw, and Herrenberg.

South District, the largest of the Mission Conference,* had before its division in 1868 nine Circuits with approximately 127 preaching places, and nine chapels. At the Conference session of 1868 the District was divided, forming Frankfort and Wurttemberg Districts. Frankfort District included the Circuits in Baden, Bavaria, Nassau, and Prussia. Wurttemberg District, the larger of the two, included the entire kingdom of Wurttemberg. Inasmuch as the Wesleyans occupied the eastern part of Wurttemberg, and the Roman Catholics the southern part, the Methodist Circuits were mostly in the northern and western sections. The District was renamed Heilbronn in 1869.¹⁸⁶

ANOMALOUS STATUS OF METHODIST CHURCH MEMBERSHIP

The history of the Germany Mission Conference is a record of constant frustration, with the missionaries baffled in their efforts by the ever-varying restrictions and opposition they continued to encounter. While Prussia and Oldenburg extended religious freedom, it was severely curbed in other states—especially in Hannover, Saxony, and Bavaria. Jacoby complained in 1865 that Americans could not understand the difficulties posed by the many small states . . . , every one with its own government and different laws, and most of them trying to hinder the progress of our work as much as the laws permit them; and they are especially encouraged to do so by the State Church clergy, so that we often are forced to give up a field that promised a great harvest.¹⁸⁷

The severe restrictions had caused Jacoby in January, 1851, to pose to the Board the problem of whether the missionaries should form Societies within the

* District membership in 1868 was: Bremen District—362 in full connection, 33 on probation; Oldenburg District—286 and 36; East District—471 and 177; South District—1,712 and 709, respectively.—Gen'l Minutes, 1868, p. 146.

State Church in those areas where they could not by law organize independent churches. Bishop Morris, then in charge of foreign missions, and the Board were not blind to the serious implications of such a policy. The Bishop wrote Jacoby that he was afraid of the experiment but concluded that it would be far better to preach and to form "mere Societies" than "to leave the people in their sins." After giving the matter thorough consideration the Board decided on March 19 that the missionaries should be free to form Societies within the State Churches where the Methodist Church could not be formally organized. Missionaries and native preachers for years proceeded in accordance with this policy. It soon became apparent, however, that the practice placed converts received into membership in Methodist Societies within the State Church in an anomalous relation. They were ostensibly members of the Methodist Episcopal Church but under the law their membership was in the State Church. They were accepted as members in accordance with the Discipline, believed themselves to be in every respect Methodists, and were ministered to as such by their pastors and in case of a misdemeanor brought to trial in Disciplinary form and expelled, yet in reality they had not been members. Even those received into Annual Conference membership were sometimes still legally members of the State Church.* The choice open to the mission of continuing consistently to follow the plan which it had chosen, remaining as a reform group within the State Church, or bringing about a complete rupture with the State Church thereby exposing its entire membership to "the civil disabilities of dissenters" was an impossible one. It was finally resolved by Prussia's victory† over Austria in 1866. As William F. Warren declared:

Either horn (of the dilemma) demanding a substantial abandonment of the whole work, it is not surprising that our missionary authorities hesitated, doubted, procrastinated, hoping and praying for a providential solution.

* Ernst Gebhardt was admitted on trial in 1860 and two years later was taken into full connection. In 1865 Jacoby reported that Gebhardt, who was serving in Heilbronn (in the kingdom of Württemberg), had been forced to leave the State Church by the State clergy, and that by government order he was permitted to administer the sacraments only to those persons who withdrew from the State Church. Following Gebhardt's expulsion, over 120 Methodist members declared their withdrawal from the State Church.—Forty-second Ann. Rep., M.S. (1860), p. 52; ibid., 44th (1862), p. 25; ibid., 47th (1865), p. 81.

† The Hohenzollern ruler, William I of Prussia, and his chief minister, Bismarck, fought and defeated Austria in the Seven Weeks' War. Provocation for the struggle had been their rivalry in the joint occupation of Schleswig and Holstein. Austria once and for all was forced out of the Germanic body by the Peace of Prague, August, 1866. Schleswig-Holstein, Hannover, Electoral Hesse, Nassau, and Frankfurt were incorporated with Prussia as the North German Confederation, and a constitution was framed; separate treaties were made with Baden, Bavaria, the grand duchy of Hesse, Saxony, and Württemberg. Bismarck and Prussia next aspired to complete German unity by adding the states in the south, and to establish German influence in European affairs. All this was achieved by 1871 with the climax of the Franco-Prussian War. All the southern states entered the new empire and King William was proclaimed German emperor. France was defeated and Germany received Alsace and the German-speaking portion of Lorraine.

The Reich, or Empire, included twenty-six states. Twenty-two were monarchial (four kingdoms, six grand duchies, five duchies, and seven principalities); three were free city republics (Bremen, Hamburg, and Lübeck); the twenty-sixth, Alsace-Lorraine, was made a Reichsland, a conquered province with an imperial governor. The new constitution (April 16, 1871) provided a federal, representative system of government while retaining monarchic features. Some states, e.g., Bavaria, Württemberg, and Baden, received special privileges as inducements for entering the union. Prussia was the most favored: to Prussia went the presidency, the chancellorship, the chairmanship of all but one of the standing committees, and a representation of seventeen out of a total of fifty-eight in the Bundesrat. Many areas of government, however, were left to the states under constitutional guarantees.

At length the providential solution came, came as it so often has, in the upheavals of civil war. The first report of Prussia's needle guns was the signal of our deliverance. The reconstruction of all North Germany under Prussian influence since the war, and the constant liberalization of the South German and Swiss and Scandinavian governments, have rendered the longer continuance of our former relations to the State Churches . . . absolutely inexcusable.¹⁸⁸

The ascendancy of Prussia was received with quiet enthusiasm by the Methodist personnel. The states, or duchies, in the northern, central, and northeastern portions of Germany had been Protestant (Lutheran and Calvinist) since the Reformation, while those in the west, south, and southeast had remained mostly Roman Catholic. This demarcation remained basically unchanged until very recent times, but the emergence of Prussian leadership meant the strengthening of Protestantism and the extension of constitutional reforms and national unity. Furthermore, the breach between Protestantism and Catholicism widened during the 1870's with Bismarck's Kulturkampf, a struggle with the Roman Catholic Church, prompted most likely by the political fear of coalitions between the Catholic Center party and Austria or France.¹⁸⁹

Although the members of the mission had suffered from the war's interruption of commerce and industry, Jacoby reported in 1866 that by their annexation to Prussia, countries where Methodists were not previously permitted were now open to them. The Methodists were also freed from their insoluble dilemma.

The liberalizing effect of the Prussian victory of 1866 was followed by the action of the General Conference in May, 1868, establishing the Mission Conference as a regular Annual Conference. This action was viewed by Warren as the establishment of bona fide Methodism, the right settlement of the relation of our foreign converts and their societies to the Church. By that action our church, before restricted to the limits of this republic, was rendered ecumenical, catholic, universal.¹⁹⁰

METHODISM IN SWITZERLAND

Methodism was introduced in Switzerland in 1777 when John Fletcher, associated with John Wesley in England, returned to Nyon, his birthplace. For four years Fletcher held meetings and organized Sunday schools in the French-speaking cantons. In 1839 English Wesleyans sent two preachers to Switzerland in appreciation of Fletcher's contribution to Methodism in England. Through their work a Methodist Society was formed at Lausanne in 1841.¹⁹¹

The initial efforts of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Switzerland occurred fifteen years later, when Ernst Mann of the Germany Mission preached in Lausanne in February, 1856. In the summer of that year Jacoby visited Switzerland and chose Zurich as the best place for beginning a mission "for the German Cantons . . . because rationalism was there the master of the State Church; and, as I understood, [there was] only one pietist among the preachers." The Lausanne and Zurich Circuits were immediately organized and included as appointments of the newly created Germany Mission Conference in 1856. Mann was appointed to Lausanne, and H. zur Jacobsmuhlen was assigned to the work at Zurich. Within three months Jacobsmuhlen reported three preaching places, Zurich and two nearby towns. The following year Lausanne Mission Circuit reported twenty members, and Zurich Mission Circuit, no members, but forty probationers. The numbers in Jacobsmuhlen's congregations reached four hundred at the end of his first year. Ernst Mann remained in charge of the Lausanne Circuit in 1857, but E. Riemenschneider was appointed "missionary in charge" of the Zurich Circuit, with Jacobsmuhlen as a second missionary. "German Switzerland," Jacoby wrote, "may yet yield an abundant harvest."¹⁹²

The mission did not proceed without some troubles, however, for in the same year (1857) Jacobsmuhlen was refused residence in Zurich by the city's stadthalter. Jacoby enlisted the aid of Theodore Fay, United States minister at Bern. Through his influence permission of residence and continuance of his work was procured. In 1858 the Board of Managers granted $5,000. for a church in Zurich. With the additional help of German and American friends, the mission was enabled in 1858 to purchase "a large house," actually a hotel called the "Peacock." The Peacock was converted into a chapel, accommodating six to eight hundred persons, and a Book Depot, both of which were opened the following year.¹⁹³

The work in Zurich and its environs grew rapidly. In 1859 Societies were formed in nearby Horgen and Winterthur. Two years later the Zurich Circuit had seven appointments in three cantons, although the mission force was limited to two preachers and one helper. In 1863 meetings were held in St. Gallen and Schaffhausen, both of which became separate Circuits within two years. The conversion of about forty persons from Thalwil during a revival at Horgen in 1863, led the missionaries to plan for a chapel there, and the following year one was completed.* As for Zurich, L. Nippert, who became Presiding Elder of Switzerland District in 1863, reported that year:

we preach twice on Sunday to from five hundred to seven hundred hearers. . . . Our fifteen classes are held both on Sunday and on week nights Our Sabbath-school is in a prosperous condition¹⁹⁴

Although Zurich remained the stronghold of Methodism in Switzerland the work spread into other important centers. In 1858 meetings were begun in Geneva, and the following year (1859) in Biel. Basel was entered about 1859 and a new and attractive chapel building seating five hundred was dedicated there October 12, 1862. The same year a chapel was rented in Liestal, and plans were soon under way for building. Four years later (1866) it was reported that Liestal had a "new neat village church very much in debt." La Chaux-de-Fonds, a French town in the canton Neuchatel, which had also a few thousand Germans, was reported as a station in 1864 in conjunction with the mission in nearby Biel. Neuchatel, a city of fifteen to twenty thousand people, most of whom spoke French, was opened in 1865 by W. Schwarz as an appointment on the Biel and La Chaux-de-Fonds Circuit. Despite the protests of the State Church, the city government granted permission for meetings in a "large and even elegant hall." Although the mission had an active Sunday school, it had no Sunday preaching, nor did La Chaux-de-Fonds. Preaching was begun in Bern probably late in 1865, and the following year it was an appointment on the Emmenthal Circuit, although no Classes were formed. Included among the appointments of the Lausanne Circuit were Nyon, Fletcher's birthplace, and Morges, a town adjoining Nyon in the midst of the French population.¹⁹⁵

* The early and middle sixties were noteworthy for the amount of property acquired and for churches built. In Horgen a house was bought and converted into a commodious chapel and parsonage by 1866. In Uster a large, third-floor hall was rented in 1863 and a preacher stationed there to care for the five Classes which had been organized. Three years later (1866) a new stone chapel large enough to seat 500 costing $2,500. was opened in Uster, which by that time had 160 members in full connection.

Also included as an adjunct of the Swiss work was a mission in Paris. In the summer of 1866 Secretary Durbin accompanied W. Schwarz to Paris to take preliminary steps for the founding of a mission to a portion of the seventy or eighty thousand Germans scattered through the city. The two Methodists arranged with French Wesleyan brethren to work in the western part of Paris, which was not occupied by the Lutherans. The French Wesleyans granted them the use of their two preaching places (and later, upon completion, the chapels) once each Sunday, and on September 1, 1866, Schwarz began to preach, in German. The following year he reported fifty members and such a large congregation that he was given permission to hold meetings in the large Wesleyan chapel.

In 1858 when the Germany Mission Conference was organized into four Districts, the Zurich and Lausanne Circuits were included in a single Switzerland District.* In 1860 the Mission Conference held its annual meeting in Zurich, the first time outside of Germany. Three years later (1863) the Switzerland District included five Circuits: Zurich, Winterthur, Biel, Basel, and Lausanne. Zurich Circuit was much the largest, with twenty weekly appointments, thirty-one Classes, about three thousand hearers, 313 members in full connection, with another 170 on trial, and nine Sunday schools with about six hundred scholars. In fact, the Zurich Circuit already had the largest membership of the entire Germany Mission Conference, and was second only to Ludwigsburg Circuit in South Germany District in the number of preaching places.

* In 1859 Riemenschneider was listed as Presiding Elder of the Switzerland District. In 1863 he was succeeded by Lewis Nippert, who also was in charge of Zurich Circuit.—Forty-first Ann. Rep., M.S. (1859), p. 27; ibid., 45th (1863), p. 36.

So rapidly did the mission in Switzerland grow that the work which had been started in two communities eight years previously was divided in 1864 into two extensive Districts, East Switzerland and West Switzerland,* with a total of 1,151 members in full connection plus another 453 on trial.¹⁹⁶

The success of Methodism in Switzerland during the first dozen years was at least partly attributable to the greater freedom offered by that country. Upon the formation of the Swiss Confederacy by the twenty-two cantons in 1848, a liberal constitution had been adopted securing to all (except Jews and Jesuits) "freedom of the press, of worship, of association and of settlement and equality before the law." Although these guarantees were at times narrowly interpreted in some cantons, the country presented far fewer problems to the Methodist mission than were encountered in Germany. During the 1860's and 1870's direct popular control over the government was extended, and Jews were admitted to "full civic rights."¹⁹⁷

Concomitant with the above changes were modifications in the policies of the State Church. In many of the cantons pastors of the State Church were at complete liberty doctrinally, and rationalism seemed to be in the ascendancy. Methodist missionaries at times were prompted by this circumstance to refer to some State pastors as "infidel" ministers, and hoped to attract the orthodox faction to their own folds. This had been Jacoby's expressed purpose in choosing Zurich Canton, the stronghold of rationalism in Switzerland, to be the center of Methodist operations in that country. Despite the dissatisfaction felt by the orthodox members of the State Church, their prejudices against "sects" were too strong to allow for much success among them.

Yet the mission had the assets of sound organization, a devoted, hard-working ministry, and attachment to Methodist doctrines and usages. In 1868 the total Swiss membership (1,985 in full connection and 563 on probation) was already two-thirds as large as the membership in Germany.¹⁹⁸

GERMANY AND SWITZERLAND CONFERENCE, 1868-86

In accordance with the action of the 1868 General Conference† the mem-

* East Switzerland District had L. Nippert as Presiding Elder, and contained three large Circuits attended by seven missionaries: Zurich and Horgen, L. Nippert, H. Gisler, E. Diem, J. Schneebehi; Uster, H. Gerdes; Winterthur and St. Gallen, G. Bruns, J. Messmer. The Circuits had a total of thirty-eight preaching places. In 1867 Nippert became Presiding Elder of South District and was replaced by H. Nuelsen. In 1868 East Switzerland District was renamed Zurich District. (Forty-ninth Ann. Rep., M.S. [1867], p. 59; ibid., 50th [1868], p. 107.) West Switzerland District was under the presiding eldership of H. Nuelsen, and contained five Circuits with as many missionaries: Basel, W. Schwarz; Liestal, H. Nuelsen; Biel and La Chaux-de-Fonds, A. Sulzberger; Emmenthal, I. Salenbach; Lausanne, E. Mann. Paris, France, was added to this District in 1866. In 1865 W. Schwarz became Presiding Elder. He was succeeded by Riemenschneider in 1867. The District was renamed Basel District in 1868.—Ibid., 46th (1864), pp. 49 f., 52; ibid., 48th (1866), p. 54; ibid., 50th (1868), p. 106.

† The General Conference of 1868 repealed the former acts restricting the powers of Mission Conferences, as has been previously stated (p. 168). All Mission Conferences at that time became regular Annual Conferences.

bers of the former Mission Conference were convened in Bremen on July 2, 1868, as a regularly constituted Annual Conference. The Conference had seven Districts—Bremen, Oldenburg, Frankfort, Wurttemberg, Zurich, Basel, and East.* Ten of the forty-four appointments were “left to be supplied.” There were forty-two preachers, including John F. Hurst and F. Paulus of Martin Mission Institute. Members in full connection totaled 4,816; probationers 1,518. The Conference had only twenty-seven churches and one parsonage. Sunday schools numbered 148, with 6,350 pupils. Changes in name and organization of Districts were frequent.†

The Wurttemberg District grew rapidly, becoming the largest within Germany. By 1877 it had seventeen Circuits with 212 preaching places. To meet the needs of such a vast field there were only seventeen preachers and three helpers, every one of whom conducted “from eight to ten meetings a week, not including the Sunday-school and class work.” With the help of Local Preachers and Exhorters, “nearly each of these two hundred and twelve places has its Sunday preaching.” The State Church in Wurttemberg continued to be strong and active in opposition. The District suffered also from drops in membership, occasionally, because of heavy emigration. Yet in 1882 the year’s labor was declared more satisfactory than for many years: from five to six hundred were converted, and church attendance was improved. Efforts toward self-support and clearance of chapel debts also showed favorable results.¹⁹⁹

In the 1870’s the financial situation worsened; labor was scarce while taxes and cost of living were high. American lard, ham, and bacon were sought by even the most productive farming regions of Wurttemberg. American Methodists sent help to their German brethren. Although there was peace, Bismarck

* Appointments of the seven Districts in 1868 were: Bremen District, E. Gebhardt, Presiding Elder; Bremen and Buntenthor, E. Gebhardt, C. Girtanner; Bremen Circuit and Vegesack, to be supplied; Delmenhorst and Neerstedt, E. Pucklitsch; Bremerhaven, J. Von Oehsen; Oldenburg District, L. S. Jacoby, Presiding Elder; Oldenburg, Varel, and Brake, H. Gerdes; Edevecht and Westerstede, G. Goess; Aurich, F. Klusner; Hamburg, to be supplied; Flensburg, J. Spille; East District, C. Achard, Presiding Elder; Berlin, C. Achard; Grænsee, to be supplied; Kolberg and Greifenberg, A. Leuring and A. Prante; Gosnitz, B. Schroeder, two to be supplied; Reussdorf, to be supplied; Dortendorf, J. Locher; Frankfort District, L. Nippert, Presiding Elder; Frankfort, L. Nippert and F. Paulus; Homburg, to be supplied; Dillenburg, to be supplied; Heidelberg, A. Sulzberger; Karlsruhe and Pirmasens, E. Diem; Pforzheim, J. Schneebeli; Lair and Alsace, C. Weiss; Wurttemberg District, C. H. Doering, Presiding Elder; Heilbronn, C. H. Doering, J. Breiter, one to be supplied; Marbach, F. Haerle; Beilstein, to be supplied; Ludwigsburg, A. Rodemeyer; Bietingheim, A. Baedecker; Vaihingen, to be supplied; Cakeu, H. Mann; Herrnberg, H. Schlaphof; Zurich District, H. Nuelsen, Presiding Elder; Zurich and Bulach, H. Nuelsen, F. Deppeler; Aarau, two to be supplied; Uster, J. Staiger; Horgen, G. Bruns; Schaffhausen, C. Dietrich; Winterthur, C. Raith; St. Gallen and Tockenburg, H. Gisler; Chur, one to be supplied; Basel District, E. Riemenschneider, Presiding Elder; Basel, E. Riemenschneider; Licstal, F. Koechli; Biel, G. Hausser; Bern, J. Messmer; Lausanne and Geneva, K. Glaettli; Paris, W. Schwarz.—Gen’l Minutes, 1868, pp. 146 f.

† In 1870 a part of the Oldenburg District was added to the Bremen District and for two years (1872-73) the Bremen District was incorporated in the East District (renamed Berlin District in 1869). In 1885 Bremen District was divided and Ostfriesland District was created from six of its Circuits, with Franz Klusner as Presiding Elder, but in 1886 the District was discontinued. In 1881 Oldenburg District was incorporated in the Bremen District. In 1871 Karlsruhe District was organized by taking four Circuits from the Frankfort District. After three years it was reincorporated in Frankfort District. In 1869 Wurttemberg was renamed Heilbronn District; in 1870 the name reverted to Wurttemberg; for two years (1871-73) it was known as Ludwigsburg, and after 1891 it was changed to Stuttgart District. Switzerland’s District organization remained unchanged until 1872, when Zurich District was divided and a third, Horgen District, was formed. In 1874 the three Districts were united under the name Schweiz District which continued until the organization of the Switzerland Conference.

believed it necessary to build up the country's military strength, increasing the economic demands upon the people. The stringent financial condition was blamed upon the Jews by many Christians. F. Cramer, Presiding Elder of the Frankfort-on-the-Main District, reported in 1881 that the situation had called forth an "Anti-Semite" party of which the court preacher, Stoecker, of Berlin, was the father, although he would not concede it.

In 1879 the Conference reported its first decrease in membership. Bishop Wiley, who had presided at the Conference session that year, accounted for it through deaths, heavy emigration, and increased opposition from the State preachers, but "above all, for want of means to push and develop their work." Yet between 1870 and 1880 the average contribution per member was doubled.

On the other hand, the political scene seemed brighter and the Methodists profited by the extension of religious freedom. They were now free to hold meetings in Nassau and Hannover, and molesters were brought to court and punished. In the state of Saxony the Methodists were incorporated as a religious body in 1872. In Oldenburg the Presiding Elder reported in 1872 that although the Methodists were not yet incorporated, they were on an equal basis with other benevolent institutions, exempt from government taxes on bequests, etcetera. Complete freedom was granted in Alsace. In Wurttemberg, however, the Methodists applied for the right to incorporate their church property (there were already twelve chapels in the District in 1872), but were refused on the ground that the work was directed by foreign authorities.²⁰⁰

Much of the opposition encountered by the Methodists following the creation of the empire in 1871 was prompted by the authorities of the State Churches. In Karlsruhe, Frankfort, and Wurttemberg the Presiding Elders complained of the activities of the State Church leaders. They categorized all Protestant groups other than the State Church as "sects" and repeatedly warned their people against them. Many times they brought legal action to bear. In Wurttemberg the State Church seemed especially bigoted. Presiding Elder F. Cramer reported in 1880:

In February of this year the Church authorities sent a circular to all the ministers of the land, in which they pretended to justly draw the line between the State Church and the Methodists, but by which, in reality, they sought to obstruct our work. . . . the pastors of Stuttgart prepared a written address to their parishioners, which was read simultaneously from all the pulpits, then given out at the church doors to each person, and finally circulated through their religious papers . . . in thousands of copies. The three Methodist societies, the "Evangelical Association," the "Wesleyans," and ourselves, united in a "Reply," which, to the number of 30,000 or 40,000 copies, was circulated in Stuttgart and through the whole land. Since then, several diocesan synods have framed and circulated addresses against us. . . . We have not yet seen much harm produced. . . . On the other hand, many of the attendants upon our assemblies in other places [than Stuttgart] are very careful that the [State Church] pastor should not know that they come to our services.²⁰¹

A somewhat different situation prevailed in the Palatinate, under the rule of the Bavarian king. The government's proclamation of religious freedom in the spring of 1872 was not the "green light" the Methodists took it to be. In 1874 Gustav Hausser, Presiding Elder of the Frankfort-on-the-Main District, reported difficulties hindering the work in the Palatinate:

Our minister was, some months back, informed that the singing and praying in the meetings must be suspended till our Society is recognized by the Government. We have, consequently, addressed a petition, signed by nearly four hundred of our members and friends, to the King of Bavaria, but have not as yet received an answer.

Ten years passed before the Bavarian king decreed that the Methodist Church be recognized as a "Private State Church in Bavaria." By this act the Methodists were finally free to pray, sing, and pronounce the benediction; furthermore, they were required to give religious instruction to the children of their members.²⁰²

It was in Saxony, however, that the Methodists encountered the most confounding network of restrictive measures. True, Saxony had been among the first to incorporate the Methodist Episcopal Church. But the Methodists found themselves "hamstrung" in many ways. Only in half a dozen or so designated cities (Zwickau, Schwarzenberg, and others) were they allowed to hold public services. In other cities or villages where there were Methodist members, "devotional exercises" for members were permitted, but only by ministers authorized to do so by the State. Fines were imposed for administering to nonmembers. In other places where the Methodists as yet had no members, they could only "deliver discourses, without singing or prayer." Members could not be admitted into full connection until they had withdrawn from the State Church, a step which was difficult and expensive. The effect of this was usually the existence of a larger number of probationers than full members on the Berlin District, in Saxony. Young people whose parents were not Methodists could not withdraw until they had reached the age of twenty-one. Fines were also imposed for admitting children of the State Church to Methodist Sunday schools. In Berlin, in 1884, a Methodist brother "was fined 100 marks and 60 marks cost because he met with members on Sunday, at unauthorized hours, in order to sing spiritual songs." In some places near Berlin in 1895 the police forbade people to rent their rooms for Methodist meetings. By 1895 the Methodists still had not succeeded in obtaining a relaxation of the prohibitions curbing their work.²⁰³

The years from 1868 until the organization of a separate Switzerland Conference in 1886 were a period of unspectacular but steady growth. The extension of religious freedom by the cantons in the 1860's and 1870's effected an important change in the status of the Methodist Episcopal Church. In his annual report for 1872, Presiding Elder Clement Achard described the significance of government recognition in the Zurich District:

Last winter we separated from the State Church and sent our resolutions to the government. The government . . . recognized us in its session of the 13th of January, 1872, as the Zurich District of the M. E. Church in Germany and Switzerland. Now by this we have been entitled to secure property in the name of each community. the religious education of the children of our members is wholly under our control, while formerly they were obliged to receive their religious instruction from the ministers of the State Church, most of whom are infidels. Besides this our members are now made free from the taxes which they till now had to pay to the State Church.²⁰⁴

Opposition was still encountered in Switzerland, and occasionally an overt act of violence, but usually it was the work of rowdies from nearby taverns. A few incidents were reported, such as an attempt by a mob to prevent members from assembling at night on one of the appointments in 1869, and the stoning of the preacher "in open daytime." Government officials, however, were usually ready to safeguard Methodist groups.

In the city of Zurich a congregation of six or seven hundred crowded into the chapel in the Peacock for Sunday services. The size of the congregation, one of the largest in the entire Conference, was an indication, Presiding Elder Nuelsen believed, of dissatisfaction with the rationalistic preaching in other pulpits of the city. The Peacock, now too small, was sold in 1872, and the following year a newly built church seating eight hundred was dedicated. Through the next decade, although the work went on apace, the membership grew slowly, reaching 483 (full) in 1885.

Horgen Circuit was next to Zurich in size. Forced to sell its property in the city of Horgen to a railroad company in 1874, the mission bought a good building which it converted into a parsonage and chapel. In 1885 the Horgen Circuit had 406 members and thirty-two probationers, and was the only Circuit to have three chapels, the other two being in Thalwil and Adliswil. The latter was built in 1872 and within one year was considered too small.

On Biel Circuit, third in size, most of the members were employed in watchmaking factories where they received better than average wages and consequently the Circuit made better than average progress toward self-support. In 1875 a chapel was built in Biel. Sunday schools existed at almost every point on the Circuit. The Schaffhausen Society was also flourishing. In 1874 a large house was bought and arranged to include a parsonage, a large hall, and a small one. The 1874 Annual Conference was held here with Bishop Harris presiding. The mission at Lausanne, reaching a mostly transient German population in a French-speaking area, was a small but surprisingly successful one. The Society had seemed more promising than most to Durlin during his tour of 1866, and he commented on it favorably. In 1872 it was reported that the Lausanne mission had "supplied nearly a dozen candidates for our work." Two years later the Presiding Elder of the Schweiz District, Carl Dietrich, stated: "The congregation in Lausanne is the pride of our work. The members are a shining light . . . They show great liberality, although the most of them are servants."²⁰⁵ The Circuit remained a small one, with only seventy-three members in full connection in 1885, and still without a chapel. Geneva was continued as an appointment on the Lausanne Circuit.

The Bern Circuit, with sixty members in 1868, was slow to grow, partly because of the great difficulty in finding a suitable preaching place. In 1875 the hall which had been used was relinquished because of high rent; the minister finally "found a room over a horse stable, where the entrance . . . [was] not very inviting" but for which the rent was understandably cheap. Ten years later the Circuit membership had grown to 177, but Bern was still without a chapel. Niederutzwil was a prosperous factory town in the canton St. Gallen. A Mr. Rickli, owner of several factories, felt dissatisfaction with the rationalism pervading the State Church, and after making a "close examination of the different Christian denominations" in Switzerland, chose the Methodist Discipline "as the right one." Upon the arrival of a new preacher "noted for his infidelity," Mr. Rickli and forty others publicly withdrew from the State Church and, after consideration, asked for a Methodist preacher. Brother J. Harle was supplied, and Bishop Andrews, during his visit for the Conference session, "gave his consent" for the organization of a Methodist Society. Mr. Rickli continued to be the patron of the church and in subsequent years furnished it with chapel and parsonage gratis. In 1885 the Niederutzwil Circuit had 112 members in full connection and twenty-one on trial.²⁰⁶

The young Paris Mission seemed firmly established with a membership of seventy-seven in 1869, but the following year it was broken up by the Franco-Prussian War. On August 28, 1870, Schwarz held the last service, for on that Sunday the French government ordered all Germans to leave the city within three days. Schwarz and his family left for Switzerland. Finding it impossible to take anything but necessary clothing, he left both private and mission property under the protection of the American embassy. During the next two years Schwarz found encouragement in letters from the scattered members who had joined Methodist Societies in Germany, England, and Switzerland. Two had become ministers in America. By 1872, with the war over, many had returned to Paris. These pressed Schwarz for a preacher and renewal of services. In February of that year he visited Paris to spend two weeks among them and encouraged a young Exhorter to resume services in the French Wesleyan chapel, which was again offered. Against Schwarz' persuasion, the Annual Conference of 1872 decided not to resume the Paris Mission. Schwarz tried to find private means for retaining the young Exhorter there in the hope that the succeeding Conference might favor resumption of the mission, but it did not.²⁰⁷

Within the period 1868-86 the Methodist Deaconess Movement* within Germany was originated. The Mission Conference of 1864 expressed a need for such a society but the first attempts at organization were ineffective. Finally a number of preachers, after conferring together, proceeded to organize an independent Bethany Society (Bethanien Verein) to which the Annual Conference of 1874 gave endorsement. Within fifteen years the society had ninety-nine sisters, owned five large houses as centers of work, and a clinical hospital.

An extensive youth movement developed in Germany and Switzerland during these years. Several youth groups were formed in the 1870's. Youth organizations, popular in the United States, gave impetus to the movement. Growth was rapid, particularly in the North Germany Conference where on November 20, 1895, young people from thirty-three youth associations of the Conference met at Zwickau and formed a Youth Federation. The societies of the South Germany Conference took similar action the next year.

By 1886 the Germany and Switzerland Conference had more than doubled the membership of 1868, with 11,134 in full connection and 3,033 probationers. Marked progress had also been made in building, with eighty-five chapels in 1886 as against twenty-seven in 1868, and twenty-three parsonages compared with only one. There were also 417 Sunday schools with 22,509 scholars.

Authorization for Germany and Switzerland to divide into two Conferences within the next quadrennium was given by the General Conference in 1884. The 1885 session was divided as to the wisdom of such a move, but in 1886 partition was approved.²⁰⁸

GERMANY CONFERENCES, 1886-95

At its session in Zurich, beginning on June 24, 1886, the Germany and Switzerland Conference was divided. The Germany Conference began its separate existence with 6,697 members in full connection and 2,134 probationers. The Conference had fifty-nine native ordained preachers, and only one foreign missionary, Heinrich Nuelsen. Churches or chapels totaled sixty-three, and rented halls 243. There were four Districts†: Bremen (with fifteen Circuits), Berlin (twelve Circuits), Frankfort-on-the-Main (eleven Circuits), and Wurttemberg (with twenty-nine Circuits).

* For a fuller account of the Deaconess Movement see Vol. IV.

† In 1888 a fifth District, Karlsruhe, was organized with Circuits taken from Wurttemberg and Frankfort Districts. Three years later the Karlsruhe District was disbanded, and its area was re-absorbed by the Wurttemberg and Frankfort Districts. Wurttemberg was at this time (1891) renamed the Stuttgart District.—Seventieth Ann. Rep., M.S. (1888), p. 118; ibid., 73rd (1891), pp. 128, 131.

The next several years showed marked growth in almost all areas of the Germany Conference. Many revivals were held with over a thousand conversions yearly and many accessions, but increases in membership did not reflect the extent of success, for heavy inroads were made by emigration, deaths, and expulsions. A number of new missions were added. In 1886 a "successful start" was made in the royal city Wilhelmshaven, in the Bremen District. Work in Leipzig (in Berlin District) was begun during 1890-91 and at the 1891 Conference session it was included in the list of appointments. Here the mission reached some university students from America, Russia, and other countries. Another important city within the Berlin District was opened in 1894, Stettin, the capital of Pomerania. Danzig was also reopened that year. On the Frankfort District work was initiated in Hanau and in Marburg, a university town, in 1889. A year later Heidelberg was reported as a renewed station in the Karlsruhe District. In Pomerania, Bavaria, and even in Saxony, gains were made and new places entered. The membership in full connection in 1892 reached 8,327, plus 2,598 probationers.* In that year alone nearly fifteen hundred became probationary members, and over seven hundred were received into full connection.

The General Conference of 1892 passed an enabling act for the division of the Germany Conference, and when the Conference met in Bremen, June 21, 1893, with Bishop Vincent presiding, the division was made, thus creating a North Germany Conference and a South Germany Conference.²⁰⁹

NORTH GERMANY CONFERENCE

The newly organized Conference included four Districts, Bremen, Oldenburg, Berlin, and Leipzig, with forty appointments. Its first session was held at Plauen, July 11-16, 1894. The next year there were thirty-nine German preachers in full connection and ten on trial.

In 1893 the Bremen District, P. G. Junker, Presiding Elder, had six appointments with 1,453 full members and 274 probationers.† In the city of Bremen the work had never shown much gain. As early as 1873 C. A. Doering had reported that Bremen during the twenty-three years we have been laboring here, has been constantly increasing in size and in the number of its inhabitants, but the mission itself has not kept pace with this increase. One reason is the constant emigration . . . Perhaps one hundred . . . [members] have left here for . . . [America]. Another reason is the multiplied efforts of the State Church . . . to counteract our own

* Berlin District had proportionately an unusually large number of probationers (1,252), because in Saxony the Methodists did not have the right to receive anyone into full membership until he had fully withdrawn from the State Church; furthermore, no one under twenty-one years of age was allowed to leave the State Church.—Thirty-second Ann. Rep., M.S. (1890), pp. 106 f.

† The six appointments of the Bremen District were: Bremen, Jacob Neuhart; Bremerhaven, Hermann Meyer; Flensburg and Aabenraa (Apenrade), August Hillner, one to be supplied; Hamburg and Wandsbek, Ernst Pucklitsch, one to be supplied; Kiel, to be supplied; Vegeesack, Johannes Von Oehsen.—Gen'l Minutes, Fall, 1893, p. 286.

influence. But yet our influence is not on the decrease. Many prejudices prevailing against us have disappeared.²¹⁰

Bremerhaven presented much the same picture. For many years it had remained stationary but later showed some growth. By 1895 it had a membership of 111, including twenty-two probationers.

Hamburg seemed to suffer more acutely for a lack of a suitable preaching place than almost any other city. In his annual report for 1885 Presiding Elder Nuelsen had written:

We commenced Hamburg Mission in 1851, thirty-five years ago, but as we had not a place of our own, we were driven from quarter to quarter, and the work kept pace with our meeting places—instable. Now, we have bought a house, with a garden along-side large enough to permit a nice chapel to be built. . . . [It] will be finished by February next. It will seat nearly 600 people. . . . The question with Hamburg Mission was either to buy and build, or to lose thirty-five years' labor, and turn from a city of about a half million in number who so much are needing our workers.²¹¹

Over a period of years the members had saved until they accumulated about a fourth of the total cost to enable them to build. Following the completion of its chapel in 1886, the Society had begun to grow rapidly, nearly doubling its membership in the succeeding decade. In 1895 the Hamburg Circuit had 223 members including probationers.

The membership of the Flensburg Circuit, in Schleswig-Holstein, fluctuated over a long period. A preacher had been sent there in 1866 and thirty-seven members were soon reported. Legal permission to carry on the work had been received in 1868, and five preaching places were reported by the preacher, J. Spille. So large was the Circuit that he was compelled to travel on horseback, in the Methodist itinerant tradition. By 1880 its area reached from the East Sea to the North Sea and to the borders of Denmark, with eight preaching places and sixty-five members. At the close of 1885, Flensburg Circuit had nearly doubled, with 117 members, but during the next decade it dropped to a membership of ninety-three, including fourteen probationers.

The Oldenburg District in 1893, with Frederick Eilers as Presiding Elder, had eleven charges.* The Society in Oldenburg had been without a chapel until 1865. Following the acquisition of a building conditions improved and in 1866 seventy-three full members and twenty on probation were reported. Growth had been in spurts, but in the 1880's a steady increase had begun. By the end of 1895 the city and its outlying area had a membership of 151 plus twenty-two probationers. The Delmenhorst-Neerstedt Circuit had been the center of some of the earliest Methodist work and by 1895 was the largest in the Oldenburg District, with 176 members in full connection and twenty-nine on probation.

* The appointments of the Oldenburg District for 1893 were: Aurich, to be supplied; Bielefeld, Heinrich Eberle; Brake, to be supplied; Delmenhorst and Neerstedt, Hans Mader, one to be supplied; Dornum and Esens, Adolf Leuring, one to be supplied; Edewecht, Franz Jacob; Leer and Rhauderfehn, Heinrich Willinghofer, two to be supplied; Neuschoo, I. H. Barklage; Oldenburg, Franz Klusner; Osnabruck and Metten, Ernst Schutten; Wilhelmshaven, Oscar Lindner.—Ibid.

Edewecht was another Oldenburg District center where successful work was done under difficult circumstances. A blacksmith's shop had been used for years as a chapel. A church had been finally built but crop failures and emigration interfered with normal growth. Despite all hindrances 121 full members were reported in 1895. In a suburb of Munich meetings had been held for years in a "miserable" room scarcely large enough for twenty to thirty persons but finally in 1877 the Society had been able to purchase a lot in the city and erect a chapel.

Aurich and Neuschoo were located near the North Sea, in Ostfriesland. Aurich had been opened in 1867, and the following year it was said that meetings here attracted a congregation of five hundred. Neuschoo had been opened about the end of 1868 and within a year had a large Society and a chapel with a parsonage. In 1870 Neuschoo had been separated from Aurich and was "so largely extended by powerful revivals" that a student from the Mission Institute had been sent to assist at both Neuschoo and Ackummersiel, a small nearby port. The following year Ackummersiel became a separate Circuit, while Neuschoo Circuit, then with two chapels, became one of the most promising fields in the Bremen District, where it had been temporarily placed. Neuschoo continued to be a successful field, and in 1885 it was the largest Circuit, with a Society of 139 members in full connection, which it maintained, more or less, to 1895. Aurich, despite a new chapel and parsonage in 1878, turned out to be a difficult station. It had been able to report only forty-seven members at the close of 1885, and again in 1895.

Bielefeld, in Westphalia, also had an interesting history. The work had been begun in 1869 when a young man converted in Bremen returned to his home in Bielefeld and initiated meetings on his own. Ernst Pucklitsch was transferred from Bremen District to take charge of the new opening. The mission had the protection of the Prussian government and the following year Pucklitsch reported a large Circuit including Osnabruck, a city of 26,000. The field was hard to cultivate, however, until the 1880's. At the close of 1885 the Bielefeld Circuit claimed 122 members and twenty-seven probationers. Osnabruck and Metten became a separate Circuit and in 1895 reported seventy-one members, including eighteen on probation. Bielefeld Circuit in the same year had a Society of 123 including nineteen probationers.

The Berlin District, in the charge of Karl Schell as Presiding Elder in 1893, had seven appointments* of which three were in the city of Berlin. From the beginning of the mission a strong Society in Berlin, the capital of Prussia, had been considered especially important. The work had suffered for years for lack of a suitable preaching place. Within a brief period five moves were made in an effort to find a satisfactory location. Finally in 1866 the General Missionary Committee appropriated $15,000. for the construction of a church, lecture room, and parsonage with the hope that adequate facilities might usher in a new era. Joseph A. Wright, United States minister to Berlin, and his wife became patrons of the enterprise. The commodious Salem Church (evaluated at about $32,000.) was dedicated November 4, 1867. But attendance at the new church had been small and the Society showed little sign of growth. For some years Berlin had been attached to a Circuit while the membership remained static. Finally, during the 1880's rapid growth began and in 1888 Berlin had been divided into three Circuits: Salem Church on Yunker Street; Emanuel Church on Rugener Street; and Elim Church on Weidenweg. A chapel was built for the Elim Society in 1894 and in 1895 it was reported that Emanuel also owned church property. A Society was organized on Steinmetz Street in 1894, but had no chapel. In 1895 Berlin had four Stations with three churches, 565 members in full connection and another 157 on trial, making Berlin the major center of Methodism in Germany.

* The seven appointments of the Berlin District were: Berlin, Elim Church, Heinrich Burkhardt; Emanuel Church, Diedrich Rohr; Salem Church, Karl Schell, one to be supplied; Kolberg and Greifenberg, Oscar Kohler; Koslin and Belgard, Hugo Gunther; Neu Ruppin, Ernst Schmidt; Stettin, to be supplied.—Ibid.

Of the dozen or so appointments in Pomerania, a Prussian province of North Germany, the principal centers were Kolberg, Greifenberg, and Belgard. A new chapel had been dedicated in Kolberg in August, 1870. The field had been laborious, but sufficiently promising so that two years after the opening of the new chapel it was declared too small. The Circuit at that time reported 155 members. In 1874 success had been reported in Belgard, and the need for a church expressed. The following year Danzig had been entered, and supplied from Kolberg. Although the work continued on a sound footing for the next ten years, at the end of 1885 the Methodists had only one church in all of Pomerania—the one in Kolberg. In 1895 the Kolberg Circuit reported ninety-six members including thirteen on trial. Danzig, a separate Circuit in 1895, had a Society of about the same size as Kolberg.

The Leipzig District,* Gustav Hempel, Presiding Elder, had sixteen appointments in 1893, the largest number of any District in the North Germany Conference. It was a new District, made up principally of thirteen Circuits taken from the former Berlin District. As a university center Leipzig offered access to a great number of students from many parts of Germany and also from foreign countries, many of whom—Jacoby reported—"experienced a work of grace in their hearts."²¹²

Most of the appointments of the Leipzig District were within the state of Saxony where restrictions on evangelical work created special difficulties.

* The sixteen appointments of the Leipzig District were: Kassel, P. J. Grunewald; Chemnitz, Philipp Lutz; Göttingen, Arnold Sulzberger, Jr.; Greiz and Gera, August Prante; Langenwetzendorf, C. I. Bendixen; Leipzig, E. C. Anner; Mayburg, Christian Raith; Planen and Reichenbach, Karl Schaarschmidt, one to be supplied; Saalfeld, Emil Zimmer; Schleiz, R. R. Neupert; Schneberg and Eibenstock, G. A. Schilde, one to be supplied; Schwarzenberg and Annaberg, Engelbert Wunderlich, Dietrich Bargmann; Werdau, Paul Pritzlaff; Zeitz, Ferdinand Schmidt; Zschopau and Dittersdorf, Hermann Bottger, one to be supplied; Zwickau, Wilhelm Schutz, Heinrich Bank.—Ibid.

Nevertheless, success attended Methodist efforts in Saxony, as was evidenced by the fact that it was necessary to build seven new chapels from 1890 to 1893, with two more under construction for the next year. On the Zwickau Circuit the young people's societies were reported to be very active, and a valuable factor in promoting the work. Despite the fact that Zwickau was an important center of Methodist work in Saxony, the Society had not been able to build a church until 1884. In 1893 full members numbered 250; probationers 260.

At Plauen and Reichenbach "a forward movement" was reported to be under way, with forty-eight probationers having united with the Church during 1893. Plauen had first appeared in the records as a preaching place in 1870. In 1874 considerable mission property was said to be owned, "the first in the Kingdom [of Saxony]." Legal restrictions had retarded growth through the years, opposition being so severe that in some country areas members "were even forbidden to pray." In 1893 the Circuit reported 154 full members and 121 probationers.²¹³

SOUTH GERMANY CONFERENCE

South Germany Conference was organized, together with North Germany, at Bremen, June 21, 1893. Its first regular session was held at Strassburg, July 4-9, 1894. It had three Districts: Frankfort, Karlsruhe, and Stuttgart, and forty-two appointments. Ordained preachers numbered 31; unordained, 5; and "other helpers," 125. In 1895 there were forty-nine churches. Sunday schools numbered 196, with 7,813 pupils.

The Frankfort District, Heinrich Mann, Presiding Elder, had nine appointments.* The Frankfort Circuit in 1894 had a membership of 275 in full connection and eighty-three on probation. The growth over the years had been gradual. In 1864 the pastor had preached regularly to about three hundred hearers. By 1866 there were 213 members and probationers in the city and vicinity who met for services in a small hall on the third floor of a private house: "grave, plain people of the working class, among them a few mechanics and a tradesman or two." They had already begun to accumulate a fund for the building of a church. After 1868 the Circuit benefited from the assistance of students of the Martin Mission Institute who visited the appointments, preached on Sundays, and distributed tracts. By 1885 the Circuit had 286 in full connection and fifty-one probationers. On July 18, 1889, a church seating six hundred had been dedicated.

On the Dillenburg Circuit the members had a severe struggle year after year with poverty. Many of them worked for ten hours a day in the iron mines for a daily wage of forty-five cents. None earned as much as a dollar a day yet they contributed five dollars a year per member to the Church.²¹⁴

* The nine appointments of the Frankfort District in 1893 were: Bonn and Cologne, Hermann Schmeisser; Dillenburg, Christian Schwarz; Frankfort and Darmstadt, Adolph Theis, one to be supplied; Friedrichsdorf, Wilhelm Kuder; Hanau, Emil Schilling; Kreuznach and Kirn, Wilhelm Seiz, one to be supplied; Simmern, F. G. Notzold; Wetzlar and Gieszen, to be supplied; Wiesbaden, Jacob Kaufman.—Ibid.

The Karlsruhe District, Ernst Gebhardt, Presiding Elder, had fourteen appointments.* One of the strong centers of the District was Pforzheim—opened in 1862—in the grand duchy of Baden, with a membership in 1894 of 339, including probationers. In 1869 a beautiful chapel and parsonage had been built and the following year the Circuit reported 270 members and ten preaching places. The Mannheim Circuit, opened in 1864 and with a membership of 112 in 1895, was also in Baden. Because of the suppression of religious freedom in Bavaria until the spring of 1872, making it impossible for a missionary to be assigned there, Pirmasens in the Bavarian Palatinate had been attached to the Mannheim Circuit for a number of years. Pirmasens was “the mother church of our circuits in the Palatinate,” the homeland of Philip Embury and Barbara Heck. In 1871 the Conference appointed F. Koechli to Pirmasens, and six years later a chapel was built there. Kaiserslautern, about thirty miles from the ancestral village of the Heck family, soon thereafter became a major center in the Palatinate, and was chosen as the location for the long-projected Barbara Heck Memorial Chapel, which was dedicated in July, 1885. In 1895 Kaiserslautern reported a total membership of 200; Pirmasens, 248.

Two very important centers in the District were Calw, with a membership in 1894 of 217, and Freudenstadt with 224 full members and sixty-two probationers, second only in the Karlsruhe District to Pforzheim. The Society in Karlsruhe had struggled for years to save enough money for a chapel, and finally managed in 1884 to buy a house and convert it into a chapel. Karlsruhe Circuit in 1895 had a total membership of 187.²¹⁵

The Stuttgart District, of which Carl Dietrich was Presiding Elder, had nineteen appointments.† Under his leadership the revival spirit was prevalent throughout the District with many conversions and numerous probationers received into membership.

The Heilbronn Society was considered to be the mother church of Methodism in Wurttemberg. In 1895 its Circuit was the largest in the District, with four chapels and 349 members including fifty probationers. The Heilbronn Society had built in 1864 a large, beautiful chapel and parsonage at a cost of about $18,000. It was considered to be one of the finest in the Conference. On the Circuit in 1867, 250 people had professed conversion and the record of successful work had been maintained during all the years since. The second largest Circuit in the Stuttgart District in 1895 was Heimsheim, with a membership (281) only slightly below that of Heilbronn.

* The appointments of Karlsruhe District in 1893 were: Altensteig, Christian Soll; Bischweiler, to be supplied; Calw, Wilhelm Lauferberger; Freudenstadt, Gottfried Surer; Heidelberg and Hockenheim, Ludwig Mann; Kaiserslautern, Christofe Jeulter, one to be supplied; Karlsruhe, Samuel Gebhardt; Knittlingen, Konrad Walz; Lahr, Hermann Schilpp; Nagold, to be supplied; Pforzheim and Neuenberg, Jakob Harle, one to be supplied; Pirmasens and Zweibrucken, Karl Burkhardt, one to be supplied; Speyer, Mannheim, and Ludwigshafen, Johannes Walz, Heinrich Dorn; Strassburg, Johannes Spille, one to be supplied.—Ibid.

† The nineteen appointments of the Stuttgart District in 1893 were: Ausbach, Karl Konig; Bayreuth, Christian Steinmetz; Beilstein, to be supplied; Bietigheim, Ludwig Schnell; Ebingen, Emil Rhoner; Heilbronn, Johannes Renner, Jacob Diener; Heimsheim and Leonberg, Heinrich Ricker, one to be supplied; Herrnberg, to be supplied; Ludwigsburg, Adolf Sharpff; Marbach, August Kunz; Nuremberg and Weissenburg, R. A. F. Wobith; Ohringen and Neuhutten, Wilhelm Kleinknecht, one to be supplied; Ottmarsheim, Friedrich Brandle; Schweinfurt and Bamberg, to be supplied; Sindelfingen, Jacob Conzelmann; Sinsheim, August Gommel; Stuttgart, A. G. Bruns; Vaihingen, Edward Baumann; Weinsberg, William Steinbrenner.—Ibid.

In Stuttgart, the capital of Wurttemberg, a large and beautiful city, the Methodist Society had no church. From the beginning of its work in 1874 it had been much hindered by lack of a chapel and by frequent moves from one rented hall to another. Though it numbered more than a hundred faithful members in 1894 they still were without funds for building. Ludwigsburg, also in Wurttemberg, was a key center, although the Circuit in 1895 had only 143 members, including probationers. In 1866—with Bietigheim as one of its preaching points—it had reported 533 full members and 135 probationers. The decrease could doubtless be accounted for in large part by preaching points being taken over from year to year by new Circuits. In Nuremberg, one of the very old celebrated cities of Germany, the Society was compelled in 1892 to leave its rented hall and was unable to find any place for its meetings other than an old storehouse, uncomfortable and much too small. This was a calamity which threatened the future of the Society. However, by great exertion, it was able by incurring a debt of $27,466. to build within the next two years a commodious chapel. In 1895 Dietrich reported that the services were well attended and the influence of the Church was greatly increased.²¹⁶

SWITZERLAND CONFERENCE, 1886-95

When separately organized on June 24, 1886, the Switzerland Annual Conference had about forty per cent of the total membership of the former Germany and Switzerland Conference. It included the entire area of the Swiss republic and neighboring parts of France where the German language was spoken. There were twenty-five preachers in full connection, one on trial, and seven "assistants." There were two Districts: Zurich District * with eighteen appointments, H. Jakob Breiter, Presiding Elder, and Biel District † with six appointments, Leonhardt Peter, Presiding Elder. In all, there were 192 preaching places.

Zurich was the stronger of the two Districts when the Conference was

* The eighteen appointments of the Zurich District were: Affoltern, Heinrich Huber; Basel, August Rodemeyer; Bern, Kaspar Glaetli; Bulach, Ferdinand Schmidt; Chur, Friedrich Deppeler; Horgen, H. Geerdess Odinga; Langnau, Ernst K. Schmidtman; Lenzburg and Aarau, Jakob Geering, one to be supplied; Liestal, Adolf Sharpf; Niederutzwil and New Toggenburg, Johann Harle, one to be supplied; Rheineck, Johann Schneebeli; St. Gallen and Hcrisau, Andreas Rappanner, one to be supplied; Schaffhausen and Hallen, Bernhard Schroeder, two to be supplied; Thalwil, Gottfried Bar; Turbenthal, Heinrich Brunner; Uster, Heinrich Kienast; Winterthur and Frauenfeld, Jakob Spörri, one to be supplied; Zurich and Aussersihl, Gerhardt Bruns, one to be supplied.—Ibid., Spring, 1886, p. 78.

† The six appointments of the Biel District were: Biel, Leonhardt Peter, one to be supplied; Geneva, Ludwig Brandle; La Chaux-de-Fonds, Gottlieb Spörri; Lausanne, Edmund Diem; Lyss, Johann Wettstein; Neuchatel, Gottfried Krauss.—Ibid.

separated and continued to hold the lead, despite transfer of Circuits to Biel (later renamed Bern) District and heavy emigration. Several chapels were built, including one in Aussersihl and one in Wetzikon in 1890. In 1892 the Rorbas chapel became too small and the congregation was permitted to hold "song" services in a State church. In several places larger congregations required additions to the chapels or new buildings. By 1895 the District had a membership, including probationers, of 3,559, on its fourteen Circuits, and fifteen chapels. Sunday schools numbered 113, with 8,526 pupils. The Zurich Society was the largest in all Switzerland and Germany, while Basel was the third largest.

Half of the Biel District was within French-speaking Switzerland and the German children attended French schools and spoke French, which made it necessary for some of the Sunday-school teachers to use French in teaching. The growth of the Bern Society had been retarded for years by lack of a chapel but in 1887 a fine building valued at about $18,000. was acquired. On the St. Imier Circuit the pastor built a chapel at his own expense in 1887 but the next year decided to emigrate and faced the members with the alternative of buying the building or seeing it taken over by the Salvation Army. For a long time the members of the Rapperswil Society on the Lenzburg Circuit were forced to hold services in a mechanic's sooty workshop but in 1889 succeeded in building a chapel. Lausanne had only a transient German population, but despite continuous emigration—one-third of the Methodists moving away in a single year—the Society there doubled in size between 1886 and 1895. Despite the many handicaps, in 1895 the District reported seventy-seven preaching places with 1,898 full members and 397 probationers on fourteen Circuits.

In 1892 a third District, St. Gallen, was formed from five Circuits* of the Zurich District. Jakob Sporri was appointed Presiding Elder. During the first few months the membership of the District diminished, because of the decline in the embroidery industry which caused many to move elsewhere for jobs. Each year many members were gained, but the losses from removals kept the size of the District static. The dominance of the Catholic Church in this region added to the difficulties. Still there was encouragement. Two chapels were given free of debt by individual members, one in Weinfelden, on the Frauenfeld Circuit, and one in Niederutzwil. In Rheineck it was necessary to build a gallery in the chapel to make it sufficiently large. Teufen and Chur were the only Circuits still without chapels in 1895. The Society in Chur held its services "in a hidden corner of the town," to which it was difficult to attract people. At the end of 1895 the membership was

* The five Circuits were subdivided into nine: Chur, Frauenfeld, Niederutzwil, Rheineck, Schaffhausen, Ober-Hallau, St. Gallen, Herisau, and Teufen. At the end of 1892 the St. Gallen District reported 1,064 members in full connection; 139 probationers; and six churches, including new ones in Herisau and Frauenfeld.

1,122 plus 208 probationers, showing an increase of only fifty-eight members and sixty-nine probationers in three years.²¹⁷

Sunday schools were popular among Swiss Methodists. Sunday-school attendance was usually double or triple that of adults at regular Sunday services. The Sunday School Magazine was published, continuing until 1907. Sunday-school conventions were held, which deepened the interest and increased the influence of the Sunday schools. By 1895 the number of schools had reached 222, with an attendance of 16,900.

A branch of the Bremen Book Concern was founded in Zurich in 1890, with the small capital of about $1,400. A small store was rented. Having made a considerable net profit at the end of its first fiscal year, the Concern became independent in 1891 under the name "Christliche Vereins Buchhandlung." In January, 1894, the publication of two weekly papers, the Evangelist and the Kinderfreund, was undertaken.²¹⁸

In time the attitudes of pastors of the State Church underwent considerable change. Compelled to acknowledge the influence of Methodist revivals, Class meetings, prayer meetings, and Sunday schools upon other Christian groups in the country, some of the State pastors heeded the advice of one, that "the best method against Methodism is to do the same as it is doing." Some Methodist practices were adopted by other Church groups. The more favorable disposition toward Methodism was well demonstrated when at the Annual Conference session of 1890 Methodists rejoiced that the pastors of the State Church in Bern had passed a resolution that the functions of a Methodist preacher in baptism and the other rites, should be acknowledged as legal.²¹⁹

However, there were many who had been converted to Methodist beliefs, but who were still bound by many ties to the State Church, and therefore did not become members. There were, in all, fifty preachers in Conference membership in 1895, serving a membership of over seven thousand.

FORTY-SIX YEARS OF METHODISM IN GERMANY AND SWITZERLAND

In 1895 the mission begun by Ludwig Jacoby in 1849 had grown into three Annual Conferences, with 144 German and Swiss preachers, and almost 20,000 lay members (including probationers) in Methodist Societies. Attendance at religious services far exceeded this number. More than 31,000 children and youth were receiving Christian teaching in 548 Sunday schools. Most of the Societies were small, but two—Berlin and Zurich—had a membership in excess of seven hundred each while ten others had a membership of above three hundred each.

A significant fact in the history of Methodism in Germany and Switzerland is that the movement very early became self-sufficient. During forty-six years only seven missionaries had been sent from the United States, all arriving within the first nine years. By 1883, thirty-four years after the founding of the mission, leadership was very largely in the hands of preachers who had been raised up in Germany and Switzerland and by the close of 1886—with the exception of one man, who was the Publishing Agent—entirely so. The length of the missionaries' service on the field was greater than in any other mission of Methodism, a factor which undoubtedly contributed to the development of the Church. The average tenure was twenty-five years. It is also significant that all seven missionaries were native sons, with no language barrier, and therefore enjoyed readier acceptance by the people to whom they preached than did American missionaries to Italy and the Orient.

The ministry was of humble origin. Their fathers, in the great majority of cases, were workmen, who could offer their children few advantages and no luxuries. They were sons of poverty, inured to hardship. They had little formal education and their sermons—frequently almost an hour in length—were chiefly exhortations, including many quotations from the Bible. The common people heard them gladly, for they spoke from their hearts with deep earnestness and their words had a reality born of their own experience. Before many years had passed, however, Jacoby had begun to emphasize the importance of a "theological institute." "If a man gets up in Germany to make an address to a congregation," he wrote, "it is at least expected that he shall speak his mother tongue correctly and know how to express himself well." In due time a theological school (Martin Mission Institute) was established, which became of inestimable value in training the preachers. At the 1886 Conference session 104 of the 112 ministers who received appointments had been trained in the institute. Durbin credited the mission with having a more adequately trained ministry than the early preachers of the Methodist Church in the United States.

Preachers and lay people were steadfast in their loyalty to Methodist forms and practices. Weekly prayer meetings were held and were largely attended. Private prayer in the homes and grace at meals were habitual. Every member was required to attend Class and offer a personal testimony. Members who neglected attendance were excluded from membership. H. Nuelsen, when Presiding Elder of the Basel District, stated that at least three-fourths of the members were present at Class every week. From the beginning of the mission no State Church preacher or Roman Catholic priest was employed by the mission as a minister.

In the theological vernacular of the time the Methodists were called "pietists"—sometimes in derision, more often in contradistinction to the extreme rationalism widely prevalent in State Church circles among both ministers and laymen. Methodist emphasis on faith, assurance, and personal religious experience was welcomed by many who felt a need for a sustaining force in their bleak lives. The informality of Methodist meetings was also in contrast to the formalism of State Church services and the warmth and sense of fellowship which pervaded them appealed strongly to the common people.

In accordance with Methodist tradition the Movement met its most ready response among the impoverished. "Methodism has to begin," Jacoby observed, "with the poor." The indigent working classes were most in need of the spiritual sustenance freely offered by the missionaries and the native pastors. As one secular Bremen newspaper commented in May, 1851,

The happy influence of the blessed labour of the Methodist missionaries, upon the most neglected part of the working population with us in Bremen, is well known to every citizen in Bremen who takes any interest at all in the affairs of his father city.²²⁰

Secretary Durbin on his visit to the mission in 1866 observed that the members were universally working people, with scarcely "a half-dozen proprietors in the entire Conference." The Presiding Elder of the Berlin District thus characterized the membership of the Berlin Society in 1893:

High dignitaries, members of the aristocracy, men of letters and world-wide fame do not belong to this congregation, but many workingmen, artisans, servant girls, and many others, not welcome in fine society, yet monuments of the divine power of the Gospel . . . leading a pious life and good example for others.²²¹

A like situation prevailed in Switzerland. In general, but not universally, members were from the servant and laboring classes. Following a meeting with the Society at St. Gallen Durbin described the composition of the group:

the small company came together in their small hall in a second story, the access to which was literally through the dark. About forty persons were present, of whom four-fifths were servant girls. Five men were present, one of whom was the only male member in the mission.²²²

Durbin was disturbed by the disproportion between women and men.

In Germany and Switzerland Methodism was not active in the area of social reform. Although Jacoby and his fellow preachers advocated temperance, the Church in Germany in general did not take a strong, undeviating stand on the use of alcoholic liquors. Considering the inadequate diet of farmers and laborers, Jacoby wrote to the Missionary Secretary, wine was important as an industry and as nourishment. The Board advised that the mission could "waive the application of the Rule" of the Discipline with regard to the use of wine in the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper inasmuch as wine was used in Germany "as a pabulum" rather than as a beverage. However, wine of intoxicating strength should not be used. Methodists shared to a considerable extent in Germany's liquor traffic since many of the members were growers of vines and hops, principal sources of alcoholic beverages. Sunday labor and the purchase and sale of state lottery tickets were permitted by civil statutes and were tolerated by Methodists without general or strong protest.

Missionary progress in Germany during the 1850's and 1860's had been hindered by legal proscription. With the collapse of the national Parliament in 1849 the rulers of certain German states had branded all religious groups other than the state-recognized Churches as "sects" and imposed upon them severe restriction. Only in the state of Bremen, the duchy of Brunswick, the grand duchy of Oldenburg, and in Prussia was religious freedom continued. Persecution became an increasingly frequent occurrence. Legal permission to preach was often denied. Preachers were threatened, sometimes imprisoned, and occasionally subjected to mob violence. In Saxony, where in 1738 John Wesley was "dragged from one magistrate to another for more than two hours" before he was permitted to stay overnight in Dresden, a particularly deep-seated aversion to Methodists seemed to prevail. In 1869 in Dortendorf Methodist services were temporarily closed by the police and all attendants were fined because "they had attended a religious service" without the special permission of the State Church preacher. In 1880 at another place the Methodist chapel was closed and the key was taken over by the police. In different states fines were imposed for preaching and even for attending services. Although the amounts were small they became in the aggregate a financial problem, so much so that in 1854 the Board authorized Jacoby to pay the fines imposed by the police authorities and charge them to the incidental expenses of the mission. After the unification of the German states and the gradual liberalization of their laws, opposition naturally lessened.

While legal proscription did not exist in Switzerland prejudice and open opposition were more or less prevalent. Occasional acts of persecution occurred as late as the 1880's and 1890's. In 1886 in St. Imier a band of men tried to destroy the chapel and the home of a Local Preacher but at the last moment were prevented by the police. Revivals frequently precipitated threats and petty persecution. The attitude of the State Churches of Switzerland and Germany was not one of out-and-out antagonism. As Durbin stated, they were willing to recognize the missionaries as auxiliary helpers but when the missions "began to exercise the functions of a Church, and in church hours, they became exceedingly opposed" and would "persecute if it was practicable."

From the beginning the growth of the Church was seriously retarded by the poverty of its members, most of whom earned not more than fifty cents to a dollar a day. In 1873 Nuelsen reported that within the Basel District, Switzerland, the majority earned a mere $2.00 a week. The high cost of living, in some towns higher than in America, prohibited meat in their diet which consisted mainly of potatoes and coffee. Those who were able to ac-accumulate sufficient funds emigrated, thereby strengthening German Methodism in America but leaving the churches in Germany in sorely straitened circumstances.

The imperative need for chapels for worship and for preaching services early became apparent to the missionaries. Only a few homes of members were available or suitable, while rented halls were difficult to procure because of prejudices against renting to Methodists and because of the exorbitant rental charged. Entrance to such halls as could be had was frequently through deserted streets and alleys and dark hallways. In Switzerland, in Biel, Bern, and Lausanne the halls were remotely located on the third floor. Some halls were in saloons or even, in a few cases, over cow stables. To many of the places which were used only the poorest and most desolate were willing to come. To provide decent and commodious places of worship for the members and to broaden the appeal to the public there was no alternative other than to build. Beginning at an early date chapels were constructed at a gradually increasing rate until by 1895 few Circuits were without chapels while a few had two or three. This involved the accumulation of a staggering debt. While the Missionary Society encouraged building, the debts were the obligation of the local Societies, although the Board aided in annual interest payments. The heavy indebtedness understandably hindered the expansion of the churches so that finally the Missionary Society altered its policy and began to assist in debt liquidation although as early as 1880 two-thirds of the entire expenditure of the mission was paid by the churches. By 1895 the Methodist Church in Switzerland was almost completely free of debt; in Germany, however, the property debt was still considerable. The heroic efforts of the Methodists inspired many. The State Church had no extensive church-building program although whole regions were without churches "while Methodism, poor and weak," as J. M. Reid observed, "had sprinkled the land with chapels and institutions of religion" with little foreign aid. "The practice of contributing at every religious meeting," Reid stated, was more systematic and prevalent than I have known in any part of our Church in America."²²³ The annual giving of the people averaged nearly five dollars per member. As this did not meet the aggregate financial requirements of the mission the Germany and Switzerland Conference in 1885 voted to cut the salaries of the preachers ten per cent. The pastors were unanimous in the feeling that it was unfair to ask or expect the people to give more than they were giving. This reduction brought the minimum annual salary of a single man to $120., and the maximum for a preacher with a large family to $760. Although many could afford meat on their tables only once or twice a week, the ministers readily supported an additional four per cent cut the following year.

The traditional Circuit system as used in the United States was adopted in Germany and Switzerland and worked well. A Circuit was usually formed of one town with six to sixteen appointments in the surrounding country villages. Rapid urbanization toward the end of the century changed the pattern somewhat, resulting in greater concentration in the cities where the work was usually more productive.

BULGARIA MISSION

At the May 20, 1857, meeting of the Board John P. Durbin, Corresponding Secretary, announced that Wesley Prettyman of the Ohio Conference and Albert L. Long of the Pittsburgh Conference had been appointed by Bishop Matthew Simpson to establish a Bulgaria Mission. This action of the Bishop had not been taken precipitately. Back of it lay almost five years of consideration of its advisability, correspondence with officials of the Turkish government * and with officers of the American Board,† and a search for suitable candidates.

As early as November 8, 1852, at a meeting of the General Missionary Committee, the question of the Methodist Church "taking a part in resuscitating the old Oriental Churches within the Turkish empire" had been taken up, with Bulgaria particularly in mind.

These people are of the Greek Church, though not of the Greek nation, and are fallen into as deep superstition and darkness as any of the Oriental Churches; and yet they are not so bigoted, but are of a mild, inquiring, religious disposition, and exceedingly athirst for the word of God. It was believed to be our duty to send a mission to these people at as early a day as practicable.²²⁴

At this same meeting the Bishop was authorized "to institute a mission in Bulgaria," and $5,000. was appropriated for the purpose. No candidates were found during the next two years and like action was taken by the Board in 1855 and by the General Missionary Committee in 1856. Finally, in 1857, Bishop Simpson made the appointments as stated and on July 20 Corresponding Secretary Durbin wrote a general letter of instruction concerning objectives of the mission.

Its chief object is to awaken in the Bulgarian Church, which is of the Greek rite, a desire for evangelical religion, and lead her people to seek for the same. It will be necessary for you to use all kindness and skill in approaching the people privately and publicly; and you should be well acquainted with the doctrines and customs of the Greek Church, as well as of our own Church, not for the purpose of assailing them in controversy, but, as the occasion offers, to show that they are not agreeable to Scripture.²²⁵

* The Bulgarians, a Slavic people, have been in the Balkan Peninsula since the seventh century. For hundreds of years their kingdom embraced practically the whole peninsula but in 1396 they were completely subjugated by the Turks, whose domination lasted for almost five hundred years. During the period of which we write Bulgaria was bounded on the north by the Danube River, on the south by Turkey, Macedonia, and Thrace (now Greece), on the west by Serbia (now Yugoslavia) and on the east by the Black Sea. Bulgaria is about the size of Virginia.

† The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions had maintained a mission in Istanbul (Constantinople) for years and many Bulgarians had urged the Board to extend their mission over the mountains to them. The American Board could not at that time spare the men or the money for this extension and informally asked the Methodist Board to enter the field.—Thirty-ninth Ann. Rep., M.S. (1857), p. 24.

Durbin further advised the institution of schools as soon as possible, the distribution of Bibles and tracts, and free and open consultation with the American Board missionaries on methods and locations. The Board expected to send out with the two young missionaries a minister "of more age and experience" as Superintendent, but a man of the qualifications desired had not been available. Durbin instructed the appointees to settle in one place, on an equal footing, and to do nothing except with concurrent judgment and consent of both. The missionaries, accompanied by their wives, arrived at Istanbul (Constantinople)—the capital of the Turkish empire—in September, 1857, and were kindly received by the American Board missionaries, by Turkish authorities, and Protestant business people. They made a tour of exploration and selected not one but two locations* in Bulgaria, Varna to be Prettyman's headquarters and Shumen, a city of about 40,000 population of whom about 8,000 were Bulgarians, as Long's residence.† Correspondence with the Missionary Society, and further consideration, led them to agree on one central location and Shumen was chosen. Prettyman's medical knowledge opened many doors for him and increased his influence among the people. Some of the Bulgarian priests called upon him and invited him to accompany them on visits to the sick.²²⁶

On November 12, 1858, Bishop E. S. Janes appointed Frederick W. Flocken‡ of the New York Conference to Bulgaria. Information had been received that in Tulcea, a town in the extreme eastern section of Bulgaria (now in Rumania), a group of Russians and Germans exiled from Russia because of disagreement with the Greek Church were asking for evangelical Protestant religious services. As Flocken knew both Russian and German he was instructed to locate in the town, provide religious services for these people, and at the same time learn the Bulgarian language to minister to the Bulgarians in the area. Flocken visited Tulcea, then went on to Shumen for consultation with Prettyman and Long. Together it was decided that he should remain with them,§ their reason apparently being that the

* Two cities for missionary operation were chosen, contrary to instructions of the Board, because Prettyman and Long agreed that they could not work together in a spirit of mutual understanding and cordial cooperation. This was a source of regret to the two families and forbearance was exercised but they continued to be reserve and open disagreements between the two missionaries as long as they both remained in the field.

† Varna and Shumen were chosen as locations for the mission on the advice of E. E. Bliss and Cyrus Hamlin, missionaries of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions.—William Webster Hall, Jr., Puritans in the Balkans: The American Board Mission in Bulgaria, 1878-1918; A Study in Purpose and Procedure, pp. 19 f.

‡ Frederick William Flocken (1831-93) was born in Odessa, Russia, and came to the United States in 1849. He joined the New York Conference in 1853 and was appointed to Shumen, Bulgaria, in 1858, arriving in 1859, and remained there until he was directed in April, 1860, to go to Tulcea. During 1870-71 he served in Ruschuk and in 1871 returned to the U.S. He went again to Bulgaria in March, 1873, as Superintendent of the mission, continuing until his return to the U.S. at the end of 1878. As a member of the East German Conference he was appointed to Boston and did not return to Bulgaria.—Official Biographical Files.

§ This decision clearly was not to Durbin's liking but since the action was a fait accompli he decided to make the best of the situation by writing that he would authorize Flocken to remain at Shumen until the Bishops, with whom "the right of decision belongs," could be consulted and send out "specific instructions, if they shall think proper to send any instructions."—John P. Durbin to Prettyman, Long, and Flocken, letter, Aug. 31, 1859, "Letters from the Board of Missions: The East—Bulgaria, Mar. 20, 1854-Nov. 14, 1866," in files, Division of World Missions; hereafter referred to as "Bulgaria Letter Book."

mission was primarily Bulgarian and great need existed for increasing their ministry to that people.²²⁷

Letters from prominent Bulgarians in Tirnovo, about seventy miles west of Shumen, indicated a promising missionary opportunity. On September 17, 1859, the move was made. On December 24 in his new home Long began holding public religious services in the Bulgarian language. About fifteen persons were present at the first service. Attendance increased to the point where it became necessary by 1861 to rent a hall and have it fitted up for worship services.²²⁸

In April, 1860, Flocken removed from Shumen to Tulcea. Durbin and the Bishops had expressed their disappointment in December, 1859, that he had not begun a mission there on his arrival in Bulgaria and advised him, if the circumstances were still favorable, to do so. A religious group, the Molokans,* invited him to stay. He revisited the city and while there prayed that God would direct him to the right conclusion with regard to the move.

I left the city with the conviction that, with great care and patience, by the assistance of God, these people [the Molokans] could be brought into a Church organization, schools be established among them, and through them pure Gospel truths be brought into Russia proper. I cannot get rid of the conviction that we should occupy this field.²²⁹

Some two hundred Molokan families lived in and about Tulcea, having fled from Russia to that area because of the persecution they had suffered. On May 15, 1860, Flocken opened a school in his study which by the end of the month had an enrollment of fifty-two children, most of whom attended a Sunday school he had started. Soon the Molokans provided a house for the school. In 1862 he reported having received into church membership two full members and two probationers, and the organization of two Sunday schools, with an average of forty-five to fifty, and two day schools—one for boys and one for girls. He had four Bulgarian assistants—three men and one woman. He carried on a correspondence in Russian with Molokans in Russia, and preached weekly to the Germans in Tulcea and in neighboring villages among whom he contemplated organizing a Methodist Society.²³⁰

During the first few years Prettyman was principally occupied with the study of the Bulgarian languages. Long exhibited greater facility in the acquirement of languages. Prettyman had a hall fitted up in Shumen for preaching services. The greatest achievement in 1861 was the enlistment of native Bulgarian assistants in the work of the mission. In each station, the Lord had "raised up at least one ardent and zealous man to be a coworker."

* The Molokans (Molokani), a dissident sect of the Eastern Orthodox Church, received their name from their custom of continuing to drink milk (moloko) during fasts. They resembled the Quakers in their insistence on the spiritual interpretation of the Bible, their rejection of the sacraments, and their indifference to outward forms. They had no hierarchy or paid clergy. They rejected the authority of civil government and were pacifists, refusing to participate in military service.—Julius F. Hecker, Religion and Communism, A Study of Religion and Atheism in Soviet Russia, pp. 69-71. For a fuller statement see Edward Thomson, Our Oriental Missions, II, China and Bulgaria, 106 ff.

In Shumen there was Milanovich, a talented and enthusiastic young teacher; at Tulcea Ivan Ivanoff, "a man of lovely temper and disposition, and of great influence among his Molokan brethren." Gabriel Elieff, faithful and earnest colporteur, formerly with the British and Foreign Bible Society, had worked under Long's supervision for two years and had grown in grace and acquitted himself remarkably well. Long asked that he be made a member of the mission, continue as a colporteur, placed on the salary list, and allowed a commission on books sold with the understanding that any deficit would be made up from the appropriation for mission support. This evidently was agreed to by the Board.

Serious political disturbances in 1862 created widespread fear among the people and threatened to disrupt the operations of the mission in Tirnovo. For two nights Long's house was filled with Bulgarian families who took refuge in it from fright. Long was tempted to yield to discouragement. Attendance upon the preaching services had diminished instead of increasing. Some whom he had thought were convinced of the truth had failed to commit themselves. Most serious of all, the Bulgarian people had become disheartened by longtime defeat in ecclesiastical controversy with the Greeks* and had yielded to apathy.²³¹

From year to year Prettyman renewed his plea for missionary reinforcements, particularly for the sending out of a Superintendent. The missionaries' hands had been tied, he asserted, by the instruction "not to make any arrangements which could not be easily altered by the Superintendent." † Their efficiency had been undermined by their inability to make definite plans; a more aggressive policy had to be instituted if they were to carry out their commission. To do this would require an enlarged missionary force, facilities for printing, the establishment of schools, and all the varied instrumentalities of successful missions.²³²

Evidence reached the Board from one source or another in 1862 that the internal affairs of the Bulgaria Mission were not satisfactory. Changes were made concerning various aspects of mission administration. L. S. Jacoby and W. F. Warren were in Germany at the time and Bishops Morris and Janes commissioned them to proceed to Bulgaria and "examine the internal and external conditions of the mission minutely and carefully" in all of its aspects, including financial affairs and records, and to make a joint report of

* Since the ninth century the Bulgarian churches had been under the direction of the Greek patriarchate which had imposed the Eastern rite and the Greek language against the will of the people. Greek priests were brought into the churches, Greek became the language of the upper-class people and the Bulgarian language was written in Greek characters.

† Durbin acknowledged that Prettyman's complaint was justified and a year earlier in the Annual Report (1860) he had appealed to the Church for increased funds for Bulgaria. Our "Bulgarian mission cannot accomplish its work . . . until it is organized and consolidated by the appointment of a superintendent. This is the great want at present." (Forty-second Ann. Rep., M.S. [1860], p. 51.) He considered the superintendency of the Bulgarian mission the most difficult position the Board had to fill and both he and the Bishops were concerned not to make a mistake. He had suggested two or three men to them as possibilities but they did not consider any one of those named sufficiently well qualified.—John P. Durbin to Prettyman, letter, Aug. 10, 1861, "Bulgaria Letter Book."

their findings. They were directed to interview each missionary separately and then to arrange a joint meeting for consultation. They were instructed also to advise the Board as to the future organization, administration, location, and program of the mission.²³³

The committee made an intensive study of the mission and its operations and presented an extended report. They found no fault with its plans and methods and sympathized with it in its struggles arising from the opposition, both on the part of the ecclesiastics and of the political leaders. They agreed with the missionaries on the necessity of a Superintendent, of establishing a mission press, and of stationing a missionary in Istanbul. They, too, felt the need of schools, on whatever level they could be maintained. Finally, the question was raised of the wisdom of the mission keeping to its original purpose of merely attempting vitalization of the Orthodox Church, believing that in time separate and independent Methodist organization would be preferable. The committee recognized that for the immediate future either course presented great difficulty.²³⁴

Prettyman and Long were now (1863) in the sixth year of missionary service in Bulgaria and the fruits of their work seemed to them small. Attendance upon the public services continued to diminish. Some gave evidence of theoretical acquaintance with the truths of the Gospel but distressingly few were willing to profess faith in them publicly. There was lack of feeling of individual moral responsibility and absence of a sense of sin. One of the American Board missionaries wrote: "We are laboring in a valley of dry bones." The prevailing feeling of disillusionment led to a conference between the American Board representatives and the Methodists at Nova Zagora, in August, 1863.

Comparing notes, the two groups found that each had used the same methods with apparently like results. They complained of a want of impressibility on the part of the Bulgarians. 'While some facts of a more or less hopeful nature were reported, the general feeling seemed to be that the Bulgarians were a very different people from what they were supposed to be six or eight years . . . [before].'²³⁵

It was agreed that formation of separate religious Societies should not be urged but deferred as long as possible. In case the work should be blessed with conversions "it was not thought desirable . . . [that the converts] should be organized into churches but upon satisfactory evidence of piety should be invited to commune with us."

Prettyman's discouragement, particularly, was complete and his appeal to be relieved was accepted by the Board.²³⁶

Following Prettyman's withdrawal Long* transferred in June, 1863, from

* Albert L. Long (1832-1901) was born in Washington, Pa. He graduated from Allegheny College (Meadvile, Pa.) in 1855 and from the theological seminary in Concord in 1857 (M.A.). He was admitted into the Pittsburgh Conference in 1857 and the same year appointed to Bulgaria. Within two months after his arrival in Shumen, Bulgaria, he began holding services in the Bulgarian

Tirnovó to Istanbul, the center of Turkish influence, with approval of the Board and the Bishops. At the same time he was designated Superintendent. He at once began preaching in his dwelling and soon had a congregation larger and more intelligent than in Tirnovó. He joined with Dr. Elias Riggs of the American Board, and two Bulgarian scholars, in a translation of the Bible into Bulgarian, to be published by the British and Foreign Bible Society. He also was engaged in the preparation, translation, and publication of evangelical books and tracts for popular circulation. In 1864 he began publication of a small monthly periodical, Zornitza (The Day Star), which met with much popular acclaim among the Bulgarian people.* In 1876 it became a weekly and within five months reached a circulation of one thousand copies. It was prized for its accuracy in reporting news and for the high level of its comment.²³⁷

By 1864 Long had become fully persuaded of the value of Flocken's ministry in Tulcea. Preaching to German colonists in German and to the Molokans and other Russians in their own language and conducting schools for both boys and girls, he wrote, was a work of "the most promising kind and of the greatest importance in the evangelization of this part of Europe." It was imperative, he felt, that steady assistance should be given to Flocken, even if the Bulgarian work must take second place.²³⁸

A wholly unexpected interference with Long's activities occurred on July 18, 1864, when the offices, printing establishments, and the Bible depositories of the Protestant missionaries and the Bible societies in Istanbul were forcibly taken possession of and closed by agents of the minister of police. Arrests of a number of Turks on accusation of being Protestants were made at the same time. By intervention of the United States chargé d'affaires the offices were reopened on the third day "but not until a thorough . . . search had been made by the police for prohibited books."²³⁹

Long continued to preach, in addition to his work of literature translation and Bible revision. His Sunday services were attended by some ten to forty Bulgarians. He also conducted a Bible class preceding the morning worship and made a few calls on Bulgarian acquaintances.

An important event of 1865 was the coming of Bishop Edward Thomson, the first Bishop to visit the Bulgaria Mission. With Long and I. G. Bliss of the American Bible Society he visited Istanbul, Varna, Tulcea, Tirnovó, and language. In 1859 he went to Tirnovó and in 1863 to Istanbul as Superintendent of the mission. At the invitation of the American Bible Society he came to New York in 1866 to superintend the stereotyping of the New Testament in the Slavonian and Bulgarian languages, returning to Istanbul after two years. When mission work was temporarily suspended in 1871 Long remained in Istanbul as a professor in Robert College. He resigned his position in Robert College because of ill health and died in Liverpool, England, July 28, 1901, on his way home. His influence over "leading Bulgarians and young men . . . seeking an education . . . was extraordinary." He was not only proficient in languages, but was also a professor of natural science and a gifted archaeologist.—Christian Advocate, LXXVI (1901), 34 (Aug. 22), 132 f.

* For a time, under governmental ban, publication had to be suspended. The action was hard to understand since the periodical carried no political news or discussion. Long was inclined to attribute it to the influence of the Bulgarian censor, a Jesuit. When the case reached the Grand Council the ban was rescinded. Beginning in 1867 and continuing for eleven years T. L. Byington, an American Board missionary, was editor.—Forty-sixth Ann. Rep., M.S. (1864), p. 89.

Svistov. He considered Tulcea a choice center for missionary operations because of its location, size, and mixed population of Greeks, Russians, Germans, and Bulgarians. He was well impressed by Flocken and by his work. The most promising aspect of the station, in his opinion, were the schools. He saw little prospect of establishing a Protestant church anywhere among the Bulgarians. If one were organized he felt certain it would be persecuted. He felt Istanbul to be a wise choice since Long could "operate more successfully upon not only the Bulgarian population, but the whole country, than he could in any provincial city."²⁴⁰

This year (1865) the American Bible Society asked for Long's return to the United States at their expense to superintend the electrotyping of "a parallel edition of the New Testament in the Ancient Slavic and the Bulgarian languages." He left Istanbul in May, 1866, and returned in 1868. While in New York he pressed the Missionary Society to send three new missionaries to Bulgaria—one for Shumen, one for Tirnovo, and one for Vidin or Ruschuk—and asked for the establishment of a girls' school.²⁴¹

The Society in response sent out E. A. Wanless and wife of the Wisconsin Conference in 1868. They remained in Istanbul for language study until late in 1869 before going to their appointment, Ruschuk, an old city of some 30,000 population, on the right bank of the Danube. The year was marked also by a remarkable religious awakening at Tulcea among members of the Lipovan sect. This resulted in the organization of a Methodist Society with two Classes. Class leaders and three stewards were appointed, and an Exhorter licensed. Dimitri Petroff, the Exhorter, a Lipovan, began a course of special study with Flocken. In June, 1870, by direction of the Board, Flocken was moved from Tulcea and placed in charge at Ruschuk with Wanless as his associate, and instructed to restrict his work to Bulgarians. Petroff was left in charge of the seventeen members and two probationers.

Both at Svistov, where Gabriel Elieff had succeeded in organizing a Class of fourteen members, and at Ruschuk, the Methodist activity aroused determined hostility and severe persecution. Members were threatened and scurrilous literature was circulated among the people. At the same time, 1871, for reasons not fully explained,* Flocken and Wanless were recalled by the Bishops and the General Missionary Committee. Long, having been called to a professor's chair in Robert College, Istanbul, was permitted to remain and render such aid to the mission as his time permitted.²⁴²

The Russian and Bulgarian converts, left as sheep without shepherds, protested the Church's action. They could not believe that they would be abandoned and pleaded with the Board to provide them with missionaries.

* J. P. Durbin in letters to Long, Prettyman, Flocken, and Bishops Simpson and Janes, expressed doubts about the wisdom of continuing the work in Bulgaria.—Letters, July 29, Aug. 17, 1863, July 28, 1866, "Bulgaria Letter Book."

Thus appealed to, the General Missionary Committee at their November, 1872, meeting decided to re-enter Bulgaria "with a full force of workers, and prosecute the mission vigorously." Flocken was reappointed to Bulgaria and Henry A. Buchtel* and wife of the Northwest Indiana Conference were also commissioned for the field. The three sailed on February 12, 1873. Long's time was so fully occupied by increased responsibilities in connection with Robert College that time was lacking for supervision of the mission and he sent in his resignation. Flocken was appointed Superintendent. Work was resumed at all of the former stations and Bulgarian assistants visited a number of new places.

In 1872 the Bulgarian Church was declared schismatic by the Greek patriarch of Istanbul. This action resulted in the creation of an autonomous Bulgarian national Church.† As Flocken saw the situation in 1873:

The great battle which has engaged the mind of every Bulgarian for so many years is over; the separation of the Bulgarians from the Greek Patriarch, to which the whole nation looked as the only means of their salvation, is attained. A Bulgarian Exarch is at the head of the National Church; about 15 Bulgarian bishops are occupying the former Greek dioceses, and over 500 Bulgarian priests are conducting the services of the Church. And so it might be supposed that the long-felt want is now supplied; but the fact, as expressed by the Bulgarians themselves, is, that they now have a hierarchy, which differs from the former only in the language, and in nothing else. And as the long-looked-for and promised reformers are not coming, and the new priesthood does not come up to the expectation of the people, the dissatisfaction is to-day as great as ever²⁴³

It is clear that the change brought no new spiritual life to the Bulgarian Church but merely new rules and practices which removed the services further from the comprehension and religious experience of the people. In several dioceses the Bible was not read as before in Greek but in Slavic, which to most Bulgarians was almost an unknown tongue. Under the new regime the Methodist services were regarded with apathy by most and by some with hostility. Hostility occasionally changed to violent persecution.²⁴⁴

Despite the lack of missionary assistants Flocken was able to report in 1874 an expansion of the mission program, an increase in the number of native helpers, and a growing number of inquirers attending meetings at various centers, notably at Plevna, Lon Palanka, and Orkhanie. He was encouraged, too, by the action of the W.F.M.S., which previously employed a Bible woman, in engaging the services of a second woman as a Bible reader and colporteur.²⁴⁵

Bishop W. L. Harris arrived in May, 1874, and carefully reviewed the field situation. He was convinced of the obligation of the Church to maintain

* The Buchtels had no more than settled in Ruschuk when "Mrs. Buchtel's health suddenly failed" and she was ordered home by the physician. They arrived in New York in September, 1873.—Fifty-fifth Ann. Rep., M.S. (1873), p. 125.

† The Bulgarian State Church remained a branch of the Holy Eastern Orthodox Church. Its government was hierarchical, with an exarch at its head, and a Holy Synod.

the mission and on his return to New York urged that reinforcements be sent without further delay. Elford F. Lounsbury of the New York Conference arrived in Bulgaria in June, 1875, and with a young Bulgarian assistant was assigned to Svistov, Gabriel Elieff having moved to Plevna in October, 1874. In December, 1875, Dewitt C. Challis and his wife arrived and took up their residence temporarily at Ruschuk for language study. Mrs. Challis was a physician. With these reinforcements, an annual meeting was deemed desirable. It was held in Ruschuk on April 22, 1876, with Flocken, Long, Challis, and Lounsbury in attendance. Missionary work was in progress at Ruschuk, Lovech, Svistov, Tulcea, Plevna, Lon Palanka, and Orkhanie. There were fifty-two full members, ten probationers, three day schools with forty-three pupils, and five Sunday schools with an enrollment of sixty-one pupils.²⁴⁶

On October 2, six months after the first annual meeting, Bishop E. G. Andrews met the missionaries, Bulgarian preachers, and three Exhorters at Ruschuk.* Gabriel Elieff was ordained first as deacon and then as elder. Three preachers, Naiden J. Voinoff, Tena Nachoff, and Stefan Getchoff, were recommended for admission on trial in an Annual Conference. Ivan Ivanoff, the Russian helper, was licensed to preach. Later J. I. Economoff, who had graduated at Drew Seminary and had been received on trial in the Newark Conference, arrived. Appointments were made to nine Circuits and Stations.†

In his report to the Board Bishop Andrews observed:

The political condition of Bulgaria greatly increases the difficulty of our mission work. The minds of men are pre-occupied and agitated. Great changes are either hoped or feared. The people, divided by race and by creed, distrust, fear, and hate one another. . . . A state of apprehension exists in both classes of society. . . . It is not safe to travel away from the great highways, nor to congregate under circumstances capable of misapprehension. Our preachers, therefore, must restrict their movements, must be content with very small congregations, must do their work chiefly by private conversation, and wait for a better day.

The first period of the mission was an apparent failure and after resumption of the work there was but one effective missionary. It should, however, be realized, the Bishop said, that most of those who are enrolled as native preachers were the fruit of mission work during the early period. Far from having been a failure it yielded the instruments by which much larger results could be hoped for.²⁴⁷

The W.F.M.S. took a hopeful view of the situation and in 1877 increased their appropriation to provide support for four native Bible women. These women worked under great difficulties and faced heavy persecution again and again.

* The two meetings were recorded as separate sessions of the first annual meeting of the Bulgaria Mission.

† The appointments were: Ruschuk, F. W. Flocken, Gabriel Elieff; Svistov, D. C. Challis, Dimitri Matcieff; Tirново, E. F. Lounsbury; Lovech, Naiden J. Voinoff; Orkhanie, Stefan Getchoff; Lon Palanka, Tena Nachoff; Plevna, Yordaki Tsvetkoff; Vidin, Todor A. Nicoloff; Tulcea, Ivan Ivanoff. — Fifty-eighth Ann. Rep., M.S. (1876), p. 126.

At Lone Palcanka [Lon Palanka], where Magdalena Elief is at work, the native preacher has been obliged to leave his work to attend to the war sufferers, but Magdalena keeps bravely at her Bible work She finds the superstitions of the people sadly in her way,—they believe so fully in enchantment and sooth-saying. She has had trouble to find a house to live in, because she would not consent to let the Priest come and sprinkle it with holy water to drive out the evil spirits, as their custom is, the first of each month.

The priests have threatened the people to leave them all to the power of the bad spirits, if they do not take their children away from the Protestant schools²⁴⁸

With a hope of reclaiming the remnants of what had been lost by the Crimean War and ostensibly for the deliverance of Greek Christians from Turkish oppression, Russia in 1877 declared war against Turkey. In the course of the Russo-Turkish war the Russian army approached the Danube and threatened several of the cities in which missions were located. The danger of the Russian army overrunning the region became so imminent that the consuls of several nations sent their families out of the country. This peril, and domestic troubles which swept over them like a flood, caused the three missionaries to leave Bulgaria temporarily.* The victorious advance of the Russians to Istanbul was followed by the treaty of San Stefano (March 3, 1878), and the treaty of Berlin (July 13, 1878). After five centuries independence had come to Bulgaria. The treaty of Berlin divided the Bulgarian territory into three parts: an autonomous principality, including northern Bulgaria, practically independent, but tributary to Turkey; an autonomous province, Eastern Rumelia, south of the principality; and Western Rumelia, or Macedonia, under Turkish rule.† All of the Methodist work was within northern Bulgaria.²⁴⁹

In Flocken's absence from the field Challis, who had returned early in 1879, was named Acting Superintendent of the mission. (In 1881 his appointment was changed to Superintendent.) In September, 1879, he called together the Bulgarian preachers, colporteurs, and a helper, with Lounsbury—also returned to the field—and himself, in an annual meeting of the mission. A new situation had been created by the war. While the mission had been sadly demoralized the country now had a liberal constitution with freedom of religion ostensibly assured, and liberty of speech and of the press guaranteed. At least four missionaries, it was agreed by the annual meeting, were an indispensable need—one each for Shumen, Svistov, Tirnovo, and Vidin; also two W.F.M.S. missionaries for direction of the work among women.

* The death of Mrs. Challis from smallpox necessitated his return to the United States with his infant child; Lounsbury also considered his return with his wife to be required and, because of the continued illness of Mrs. Flocken, her husband had to accompany her to America. Challis married Irene L. Shepard and returned with her to Bulgaria in December, 1878.

† In 1885 Eastern Rumelia became a part of the principality. Not until 1908 was a united Bulgaria able to throw off all allegiance to Turkey and become an entirely independent kingdom.

Schools were called for, and more books—particularly the Discipline, the Catechism, and Binney's Theological Compend.²⁵⁰

On the whole, the future prospects of the work seemed favorable. Two new stations were listed, Sevlievo, a city of 6,000 with a number of surrounding villages; and Orkhanie, a large village about 150 miles northeast of Svistov, where a small Society had been organized sometime previously. Although its members never had regular pastoral care and had been severely and persistently persecuted, yet they had stood fast. Gabriel Elieff was appointed to Sevlievo, and Dimitri Ivanoff, who had been working as a colporteur in neighboring villages, to Orkhanie as a supply. Plans were also made for regular preaching at Troian, a village eighteen miles from Lovech, which gave promise of being a "fruitful field."

In 1880 two additional missionary couples were sent to the field, Addison R. and Emma K. Jones of the New England Conference and John S. and Rosa D. Ladd of the New York Conference. Appointments for 1881-82 were made to seven charges.* The Superintendent's headquarters were established at Lovech, where nearly all of the members had been slaughtered by the Turks during the war. The most notable event of 1880 was the announcement that the Board had authorized the opening of a girls' school and desired also to establish one for boys. Svistov, as the central station of the mission, seemed to be the logical location for a girls' boarding school but the high cost of property in the city made it impracticable as the site. The second choice was Troian. The Superintendent and Mrs. Challis moved there in October, 1880, and at the end of November opened the Troian Boarding School in an eight-by-sixteen-foot room with nine pupils. The charge for tuition was set at five dollars a year and ten cents a day for board. However, here, also, obstacles were encountered. Intrigues and petty persecution blocked the purchase of property for a permanent location. Failing to obtain land, the Superintendent turned to Lovech where an excellent site was purchased before opposition could be organized. In the fall of 1881 the school was reopened in two buildings—the home of the Bulgarian pastor, and in a rehabilitated old house nearby.

In the winter of 1880-81, a few weeks after the opening of the Girls' School, a school for boys was opened at Tirnovo in rented quarters, by Mrs. Addison R. Jones, with the assistance of J. I. Economoff. They immediately began a search for a suitable site on which to erect a school building. Here again, as at Troian, transfer of the property was blocked, this time by a fanatical ex-priest who was prefect-governor of Tirnovo District. After a year of futile effort the Tirnovo project was abandoned, although the prospect for a successful school was excellent. In 1882 the mission completed the erection of a combined church and parsonage in Svistov. This building offered the possibility of a temporary schoolroom.²⁵¹

* The seven charges to which appointments were made in 1881 were: Ruschuk, E. F. Lounsbury; Svistov, S. Thomoff, J. S. Ladd; Tirnovo, J. I. Economoff, A. R. Jones; Sevlievo, G. Elieff; Lovech, S. Getchoff; Plevna, supplied by Yordaki Tsvetkoff; Orkhanie, supplied by Petko Ivanoff, Exhorter. —Sixty-third Ann. Rep., M.S. (1881), p. [192].

Difficulties other than those mentioned hindered the progress of the mission. Public school pupils were prohibited by a civic regulation from attending mission meetings. Persons in public service had to obtain special permission and this was difficult to procure. To the politicians of the country, with few exceptions, all religion was a matter of indifference. Challis analyzed the prevailing situation in these terms:

This is a critical time in the history of the people. They have tasted the sweets of freedom, but they have not those high moral qualifications that are needed for self government. . . . The educated and wealthy are scrambling for office, and are never scrupulous in choosing the means to secure their ends. But the masses of the toiling peasantry are incapable of speaking for themselves, and rebuking the hypocrisy of the demagogues who control them. Nor are they themselves capable of appreciating the fine moral distinctions that do not involve self-interest. In a word, this new-born nation is without the gospel except as it is supplied by missionaries; and without the gospel they are deprived of that great safeguard of true liberty, a national conscience.²⁵²

Over against this characterization Challis portrayed the first twenty-five years' history of the mission. During the entire period the number of missionaries had been painfully few and during three intervals the mission had been left without even one man in the field. There had been no established base of operations, not a foot of property was owned, and no permanent church or school established. All preaching and worship services had been "in small, ill-adapted, private rooms, and generally in obscure or unattractive places." The missionaries had been faithful men who had done good work, but with constantly shifting centers much of their influence had been dissipated and lost. A handful of converts had been made and a few very small congregations had been assembled. Without "the presence of the well-manned and successful mission of the American Board" * it would be impossible, the Superintendent felt, to regain prestige among the people. But there were grounds of hope for the future. The most recent occupation of the field had been more adequate. There were four missionaries, with their wives, from America; two well-educated Bulgarian preachers had enlisted in the work; a beginning had been made in the purchase of property and the building of churches and parsonages; and arrangements provided for the boys' school at Svistov and for the girls' school at Lovech.²⁵³

Before the new policy of enlarged personnel and increased support had a fair chance to produce results the General Missionary Committee in November, 1882, again entertained a proposal to abandon the mission on the ground that it had "brought no adequate compensation for the expenditure of men and money upon it." After long debate the preponderance of sentiment appeared to be in favor of discontinuance. However, before the final vote was taken a cable was received from Bishop Foster and Corresponding Secretary Reid—on tour—stating that "new plans and a broader policy" had been adopted at the mission's annual meeting and recommended a generous advance in the appropriation. This message determined the issue. Ten thousand dollars was appropriated for support of missionaries and other workers, and four thousand dollars for the purchase of real estate.²⁵⁴

* Preceding independence, William Webster Hall, Jr., declares, the Protestant missionaries had built their work into the life of the Bulgarians. The "foundations of the evangelical work had been laid so firmly that they could not be moved by extreme national feeling, by ecclesiastical opposition, by the prejudice of a superstitious peasantry, by Roman Catholic propaganda, by Russian hostility, or by the influence of atheistic thought emanating from Western Europe."—W. W. Hall, Jr., op. cit., pp. 46 f.

The Superintendent was much encouraged by this and other developments. Following the opening of a new Svistov church the congregation increased from an average of ten persons to forty, with sixty sometimes present. The new brick building at Lovech, two stories besides a basement and an attic dormitory, beautifully situated on a large hillside plot, was occupied by the girls' school on November 1, 1882. Also, in November, the boys' school was reopened in the Svistov church as a combined theological and day school, named a little later the Literary and Theological Institute.

The outlook for the schools now seemed promising. But peace proved to be short-lived. In January, 1883, enmity and jealousy on the part of a Bulgarian group caused the minister of education to issue an order closing the boys' school on the charge of "illegal existence." * The missionaries contested the right of the officials to do this but the local magistrate proceeded to close the school by force. The Bulgarian teachers, Thomoff and Economoff, were arrested and dragged off to jail. The Americans were grossly insulted and the school door sealed. An appeal to the ministry of education for permission to reopen the school remained unanswered for nearly four months. The reply finally received was to remain closed "for the present." In the meantime, instructions were issued ordering the girls' school at Lovech also to be closed. Under protest this was done. A shift in government changed the official attitude. † On September 28, 1883, the English consul telegraphed Challis to inform the ministry of education of intention to reopen the schools. This the Superintendent did. On October 1 the boys' school was again opened, and the girls' school on October 20. While some unpleasant conditions were imposed official permission was granted.²⁵⁵

In June, 1883, a mission press was established and by the end of the year had printed 135,000 pages, including the Discipline and numerous tracts.

Bishop J. F. Hurst presided at the annual meeting of the mission held at Ruschuk on October 1, 1884. Because of illness A. R. Jones had returned

* According to the law the opening of a new school must be preceded by notice given to the educational authorities. Such notice had been filed, but by oversight or intent no receipt was returned. The school inspector was induced to deny having any official knowledge of the opening of the school. On this ground it was closed.

† Government action against the schools, although instigated by reactionary Bulgarians, who were strongly antagonistic to Protestant missionary work, was possible only because an anti-constitutional political regime was temporarily in power. When the anti-constitutional ministers were ousted, the constitution restored, and liberal leaders reinstated, official opposition to missionary schools ceased.

to America and Dimitri Naidenoff, pastor of the Orkhanie Circuit, had died. Despite this loss a hopeful spirit pervaded the session. An encouraging increase in communicant members was recorded. Fifteen boarding pupils had been attending the girls' school during the year and the new year opened with eighteen boarders and five day pupils. The W.F.M.S., in response to Challis' repeated appeals, had taken over the girls' school and had sponsored a primary school at Ruschuk. In November Linna M. Schenck from the Northwestern Branch arrived on the field as principal of the Lovech school.²⁵⁶

In the absence of a Bishop the 1885 annual meeting was convened by Superintendent Challis at Svistov on July 10. The year was marked by the beginning of work at Varna, where it had been long contemplated, with Trico Constantine of the Minnesota Conference as pastor. He was a Bulgarian who had received his education in the United States. In the beginning he had very few hearers but people were impressed by his earnestness and evident sincerity and within a few months he had an attendance of twenty persons and had received three on probation. The mission was organized into four* Districts.²⁵⁷

In various localities the people of the villages were becoming more accessible. Clara Klaia, in the employ of the W.F.M.S., had made many friends among the women of Ruschuk. Peter Tickcheff, appointed to village work, enumerated a dozen families where he was perfectly free to read and explain the Scriptures in their homes. He found the coffee houses everywhere freely open and at any hour he could find an audience, usually ready to give respectful attention to his exhortations. The colporteur in the Upper Danube and Varna Districts reported one hundred persons in twelve different cities and villages who were sympathetic and friendly.²⁵⁸

This year (1885) war again threatened to disrupt the mission program. In the continuing struggle to achieve national unity Bulgaria now became engaged in a plot with Eastern Rumelia to unite as one. The balance of power was upset by a coup d'état and Russia was displeased by the timing of the act. Serbia, seeing a chance to enlarge her borders, attacked Bulgaria from the west. The work of the mission was only slightly interrupted. The Lovech Girls' School was offered temporarily to the Red Cross for a hospital and the students prepared lint and bandages. The building, however, was not required and the school program was soon resumed. All of the congregations were maintained during the brief period of warfare and the year proved to be one of the most successful the mission had known.

Again at the 1886 annual meeting of the General Missionary Committee

* The Districts and appointments were: Lower Danube District, E. F. Lounsbury, missionary-in-charge and pastor at Ruschuk; village work, P. Tickcheff; Upper Danube District, S. Thomoff, missionary-in-charge and pastor at Svistov; theological school, J. S. Ladd, acting principal, J. I. Economoff, teacher; Varna District, T. Constantine, missionary-in-charge; Balkan District, D. C. Challis, missionary-in-charge and pastor at Lovech; Sevlievo, G. Elieff; Orkhanie, S. Getchoff; Plcena, Y. Tsvetkoff; Lovech Girls' School, Linna M. Schenck.—Sixty-seventh Ann. Rep., M.S. (1885), p. [187].

question was raised concerning continuance of the mission. Earl Cranston, later a Bishop of the Church, was a leader of the opposition:

The history of Bulgaria as a mission field cannot but decrease the confidence of the public in our missionary management. It does not contain one encouraging chapter. From the very outset it is a record of failure. It is for us to decide whether to continue this costly undertaking—to continue to spend dollars and waste lives in a foothold—or, on the other hand, to withdraw these zealous and godly men from a field where their best efforts fail, and send them where all barriers have been broken down and where hungry souls are eagerly calling for missionaries.

Despite the strength of opposition, once more the committee was not agreed. Among others, Daniel Curry came to the defense of the mission. "I doubt whether there is a mission on earth," he said, "that could stand such a pummeling as our Bulgarian Mission receives at the hands of this Committee once a year. . . . I am ashamed of the treatment this mission receives and do not believe in withdrawing from Bulgaria."²⁵⁹ The mission this year (1886) reported sixty-five full members and twenty-four probationers, an increase of ten full members. The average attendance at Sunday worship services was 151, an increase of seventeen. Five Sunday schools had a total enrollment of 110.

Such limited progress was explained in part by the fact that the Church had not provided suitable facilities for public services. Of the eight charges in 1886 only one (Svistov) had a chapel as a place for preaching and worship. Constantine described the predicament under which he had to conduct services in Varna:

the people coming to worship in a Turkish harem, for such used to be the house in which we now live, and being obliged to pass through three doors before they can come to the fourth, which leads into the [meeting] hall. Strangers, even when they wish to come to service, cannot find us, and often they are either afraid or ashamed to make inquiries, or sometimes they are purposely put off the track by their informants²⁶⁰

By 1887, however, the mission was beginning to take on an aspect of permanency. Real estate was now owned in four principal cities. Methodist hymns were frequently heard in the public schools. Bibles distributed by colporteurs were in the homes of almost every reading family in the land. Members of the Protestant churches had come to be regarded as the most trustworthy employees to be had. The Literary and Theological Institute enrolled forty students (1887) in three courses: college preparatory, scientific, and theological. Four young men graduated in 1886 and entered the work of the mission. Four young women who completed their studies also enlisted in general mission work. The girls' school had an enrollment (1887) of fifty-two. Ella E. Fincham, from the Northwestern Branch, came to the field as an assistant to Miss Schenck. All classes of people looked upon the institutions with growing favor. In the churches self-support now showed considerable advance. Members paid this year more than $400. for support of native preachers while the Sunday collections paid most of the incidental expenses. The tuition income of the Svistov school for the year was $792., which practically covered the expense of the boarding department.²⁶¹

In Varna a chapel was formally opened on December 8, 1888, with the mayor and a member of the city council present at the services. On September 30, 1889, the long-contemplated Literary and Theological Institute building, described as the finest structure in Svistov, was dedicated. The cost of the building, including land, was $8,000. These ample facilities gave an added impetus to the work of the school. A chapel was also built in Ruschuk. As churches began to be erected and attendance upon public services increased, public tension and antagonism became more pronounced. Whether by coincidence, or partly or wholly a matter of cause and effect, this same year the exarch issued a circular directing all civil and ecclesiastical authorities to use strict measures to prevent extension "of Protestantism and Romanism" in the country. The effect was immediate.

The Bishops instructed the priests to be watchful against the free distribution of tracts and to report all attempts at proselytism. The minister of education issued a circular forbidding the employment of non-Bulgarian teachers in private schools. The minister of justice forbade the circulation of the 'Protestant Bible' in the prisons. The minister of war forbade the sale of our books in the army. . . . The minister of finance discovered a new interpretation to the tax law, whereby he ordered the payment of a round income-tax by all our teachers for the past five years! New books were issued, exposing the evil work of the Missions and showing up the iniquities carried on under Protestant civilization.²⁶²

Without assigning any reason, the state minister of public worship ordered the pastor at Orkhanie to leave town. An attempt to resume public services was followed by a peremptory order forbidding all Protestant preaching. The Superintendent reported the situation to the British consul who filed a protest with the government. This received immediate attention and the church was given permission to open public services. At Plevna the little group was subjected to vilification and petty persecution. Work was begun in Silistra (now in Rumania) in 1890 with preaching in a private residence. Soon afterward a mob, apparently incited by the local authorities, stoned the house and the owner dispossessed the preacher. At Ruschuk this same year Lounsbury reported disturbances by rowdies, with stones thrown through his windows. In addition to the Lovech school the women's work included primary schools at Ruschuk, Svistov, Orkhanie, and Hotantza. Bible work was maintained at six stations. After six years of effective service ill health required Miss Schenck to retire as preceptress of the girls' school.

The 1891 annual meeting was convened at Ruschuk on April 24 by Bishop Walden. George S. Davis* of the Nebraska Conference had arrived some months earlier under appointment as Superintendent of the mission. In adherence to the "time limit" the Bishop changed the appointments of nine of the preachers. On Sunday of the annual meeting week he dedicated "a beautiful stone church" at Ruschuk. Before the close of the year Davis had traveled 1,400 miles in visiting the charges. In his annual report he was insistent on the need for more churches and more laymen. "But few people can be induced to attend services in private houses," he wrote. "Without churches it is utterly impossible to succeed." He emphasized the need for a school of mechanics in which educated Christian craftsmen would be trained.²⁶³ A chief difficulty encountered in missionary evangelism among the Bulgarians, Davis felt, rooted in the fear of the Orthodox clergy that it would undermine their economic status. He wrote:

The Italian or Austrian can with perfect liberty exercise his Catholicism, the Turk his Mohammedanism, the Israelite his Judaism, or the German his Lutheran faith; but it is heresy of another order for the Bulgarian not to abide within the pale of the Orthodox Church. While both foreigners and Bulgarians are accorded protection in the constitution for propagandism, the former will meet with fanatical opposition from the ecclesiastical hierarchy; and the Bulgarian espousing either Catholicism or Protestantism must prepare himself to be condemned by public opinion as an apostate—almost a traitor.²⁶⁴

Mrs. Walden, the Bishop's wife, had a high estimate of the educational and spiritual value of the girls' school:

During the ten years nearly a hundred girls have received instruction and twelve have graduated. About thirty have been received into the church: of these four are wives of preachers and five are teachers in this and other schools. The Boarding School is no less educational than the rest, and the cooking and house-keeping is done under the direction of the matron and under the eye of the American teachers who live in the same building. The value of this domestic training can only be appreciated by visiting the homes they make and contrasting them with other Bulgarian homes. The school now contains thirty girls in the five classes and forty children in the Primary Department.²⁶⁵

The General Conference in May, 1892, constituted the Bulgaria Mission a Mission Conference. On September 8, 1892, Bishop I. W. Joyce convened the members of the mission in the Svistov church and organized the Conference. Eighteen preachers were transferred from Conferences in the United

* George Stanley Davis (1857-1922) was born in Picton, Ontario, the oldest of a family of seven children. In 1881 he came with his father, a Local Preacher, to Michigan where both joined the Detroit Conference. In September of that year he married Mary N. Betles. He attended Garrett Biblical Institute for one year (1881-82), spent four years in home mission work, and four years, until 1891, as editor of the Omaha Christian Advocate. In 1891 he was appointed by Bishop Mallalien Superintendent of the Bulgaria Mission and went there with his wife and three children. He served for seven years in Bulgaria. He returned to the U. S. and spent 21 years in the New York Conference in nine appointments. Davis was "an effective minister," his record being one of "faithful, intelligent, efficient, loyal service."—Minutes, New York Conference, 1922, p. 247.

States and recognized as charter members.* G. S. Davis was reappointed Conference Superintendent. Three pastors were ordained as elders and four as Local Deacons. Gabriel Elieff, the oldest member of the mission, was superannuated. D. C. Challis, who had completed sixteen years of effective service in Bulgaria, was transferred to the Detroit Conference, and J. S. Ladd, in the mission for twelve years, to the New York Conference. Church members were reported in thirteen places, all comparatively small groups. Miss Fincham reported thirty-four boarding pupils and twenty-five day pupils in the Lovech Girls' High School. The Bishop appointed a committee of five to report to the Board on the advisability of a change of location for the Literary and Theological Institute.† Despite the fact that, other than the Superintendent, only two missionaries—Lounsbury and Constantine—were available, appointments were made to twelve stations and four other points were left to be supplied. Most of the newer places were villages where work had been begun by faithful Bulgarian preachers whose zeal led them to seek new openings for the Gospel.

This year, for the first time, an appointment was made to Sofia, the Bulgarian capital, an action which resulted in long-continued controversy‡ with the American Board mission.²⁶⁶

Miss Kate B. Blackburn,§ sent by the Northwestern Branch, left the United States in November, 1892, to become principal of the girls' school. Soon after her arrival Miss Fincham, who was in ill health, left for America. Lydia Diem, daughter of a member of the Switzerland Conference, sponsored by the Northwestern Branch, as teacher of French, music, and drawing, also arrived in 1894. Her sister, Amelia Diem, joined her in 1895.

The Mission Conference was convened in its second session at Varna on August 23, 1893, by Bishop John H. Vincent. Fifteen members, including three probationers, answered the roll call. E. F. Lounsbury had been transferred earlier in the year to the New York East Conference. His

* The preachers—four missionaries and fourteen Bulgarians—transferred into the Conference were: G. S. Davis, G. Elieff, S. Getchoff, M. D. Delcheff, and M. G. Vulcheff, from the Nebraska Conference; D. C. Challis, Z. G. Dimitroff, I. Todoroff, I. Dimitroff, P. Vasileff, B. Todoroff, and K. G. Palamidoff, from the Detroit Conference; E. F. Lounsbury from the New York East Conference; T. Constantine from the Minnesota Conference; J. I. Economoff and S. Thomoff from the Newark Conference; J. S. Ladd from the New York Conference; and P. Tickeff, from the North India Conference.—Minutes, Bulgaria Mission Conference, 1892, p. 6.

† The committee unanimously agreed that the school should be moved from Svistov to Ruschuk. Svistov had proven to be an unhealthy place and was reported to be on the decline.—Minutes, B.M., XIV, 474 f.

‡ Controversy with the American Board mission arose out of the fact that Sofia was definitely within the territory of the American Board and previously had always been so regarded. In 1862 Durbin specifically renounced all claim to Sofia as a field for Methodist missionary effort. The appointment was made by Bishop Joyce on the initiative of Superintendent Davis, neither of whom knew of the previous agreement. When the compact was called to the attention of the authorities the appointment was canceled. But this for several reasons did not satisfy the Bulgarian Methodist mission, particularly as Davis felt that it was necessary to have someone stationed at Sofia to deal firsthand with the government on official matters. Full agreement on the points at issue was not reached until 1907. A detailed account of the entire controversy is given by W. W. Hall, Jr., op. cit., pp. 128-32, 180-82.

§ Kate B. Blackburn (1865-1933) was born near Jacksonville, Ill. She graduated from the Illinois Female College (later, in 1930, MacMurray College) and during 1890-91 attended the Chicago Training School to prepare herself for missionary service. She gave thirty-three years of faithful, efficient service to the Lovech Girls' Boarding School.—Louise Manning Hodgkins, The Roll Call . . . , p. 23.

transfer left one American missionary on the field. Two missionaries, however, were announced as transferred to the Conference: L. T. Guild from the Nebraska Conference, to be the editor of publications, and Arthur J. Jolly from North Ohio. Superintendent Davis reported that there had been "some forty conversions during the year." Additions to the membership had occurred at several places. A small Society had been formed in the city of Lom. He severely criticized the standards of the Literary and Theological Institute:

It is proposed to remodel our school plans and reduce them to a practical working basis. . . . Since our coming to the Mission forty students have been in our Svistov school, largely at the expense of the Missionary Society. Not one has been considered a theological student, neither has practical, systematic, historical, or exegetical theology been taught. . . . Our yearly examinations will not admit students to the class of the following year in national schools. We are not a theological school, neither up to the requirements or standards of the government institutions surrounding us on every side.²⁶⁷

Davis proposed, in addition to the selection of a better site, using the proceeds of the Svistov property for the building of a "theological school and students' home," and the selection of promising young men, to receive theological and literary instruction, together with practical training in mission work. He favored also the admission of non-theological resident students who would pursue their studies in national schools better equipped than the mission school could be.* This plan, Davis said, was adopted by the mission with "surprising unanimity."²⁶⁸

The third session of the Conference opened on June 13, 1894, at Ruschuk, Bishop John P. Newman presiding. No preachers were received on trial and none by transfer. Two received by transfer in 1893 were reported as returning to the United States—L. T. Guild to the Nebraska Conference and A. J. Jolly to South Dakota. Superintendent Davis in his report to the Missionary Society noted a church and parsonage built in Tirnovo and a church and parsonage almost ready for dedication in Lovech. He insisted that great injustice was done when "what is being accomplished is measured by the statistical reports from other Missions." He continued:

In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred a man joining our Church has burned the bridges behind him forever. That which he suffers from his convictions, the persecution he endures, the fears that reports may be true as to the possible withdrawal of our organization from Bulgaria, may cause him to ponder well the cost of severing his connection with the national Church; but when that resolve is taken all is settled. Then . . . these persons examine the new faith so critically, and embrace it so deliberately, that when once admitted they have a very intelligent idea of the doctrines and usages of the Church.

* Davis' statements were a frank acknowledgment that the mission school had not kept pace with the phenomenal advance in public education from 1880 on. In point of technical competence the Bulgarian public schools had outstripped the Methodist and other mission schools. The Missionary Society had failed to supply teachers having specialized educational training.

Members of the Church, he said, occupy positions of trust and responsibility—some as mayors of towns. “We reach the classes that represent the people.”

Miss Blackburn reported a registration of forty-eight pupils in the Lovech Girls’ School from ten different cities and villages—twenty-eight boarders and twenty day pupils. In addition to general studies the advanced class had studied the life of Christ, the Discipline, the Articles of Religion and the General Rules, and the more important points in the Church economy. By 1895 one pupil had been received into full connection in the church and three as probationers.²⁶⁹

Bishop J. N. FitzGerald presided at the fourth meeting of the Conference, held at Ruschuk, May 8-11, 1895. Again G. S. Davis was the only ministerial missionary on the field. Fourteen Bulgarian members of Conference were present. One preacher was received on trial, the first in four years. The Conference was divided into two Districts—the Lovech District, of which T. Constantine was appointed Presiding Elder; and the Ruschuk District, of which G. S. Davis, the Superintendent, was designated Presiding Elder. In all, pastors were appointed to twelve charges, leaving four “to be supplied.”²⁷⁰

On November 1, 1894, the Missionary Society’s Committee on Western Europe recommended the appointment of a commission to confer with the American Board concerning the possible transfer of the Bulgarian work to them. On November 18, 1895, the commission notified the General Missionary Committee that a transfer was not feasible chiefly because of straitened financial conditions of the American Board, and the only hope of overcoming the existing “highly unsatisfactory” conditions was to obtain “large reinforcements of missionaries and missionary property.” After much discussion the committee finally voted: “That $15,485. be appropriated to Bulgaria [for 1896] to be administered by the Board and the Presiding Bishop.”²⁷¹

THIRTY-EIGHT YEARS OF THE BULGARIA MISSION, 1857-95

After thirty-eight years the Bulgaria Mission reported thirteen stations and Circuits with 177 full members and seventy-three probationers, and an estimated three hundred additional adherents. The Mission Conference had sixteen members, including one probationer. There were: one Local Preacher; three colporteurs; eleven Sunday schools with a total enrollment of 224; six churches; and four parsonages. Of the six church buildings in the Conference, two were halls. There were four schools—the Lovech Girls’ School, a theological school, and two primary schools. The largest Methodist Society was at Ruschuk, with thirty-eight full members and thirty-two probationers. The Bulgarian preachers, almost without exception, were well-educated men. One was a graduate of Drew Theological Seminary who had served several years in the pastorate in the United States; two were graduates of Robert College and of the Drew seminary; one was a graduate of Princeton [New Jersey] College, with several years' study in other American institutions; one was a graduate of an American preparatory school and of Drew Seminary; one was an undergraduate of the Samakov School of the A.B.C.F.M.; and five were graduates of the Literary and Theological Institute. One was an ex-priest of the Eastern Orthodox Church.²⁷²

It should be remembered that in the beginning this mission was not an evangelistic agency in the same sense as the other overseas missions of the Church. Its direction was not to lead people to break the ties which bound them to the State Church but, as Durbin said, "to awaken in the Bulgarian Church . . . a desire for evangelical religion, and lead her people to seek for the same." * To accomplish a purpose so ambitious as this, much more was required in terms of a missionary force than was supplied. Bishop John M. Walden stated this emphatically in 1891.²⁷³

Five years of fruitless labor convinced the missionaries that the stated purpose of the mission was impracticable. No amount of missionary labor could ever regenerate the Bulgarian Church. This conviction, as the Jacoby and Warren Report suggested, presented a dilemma:

Should we aim to organize . . . churches immediately, or leave the converts in the Greek Church, and merely organize them into societies on the old Wesleyan plan? . . . Great difficulties will beset either policy. If we wish the converts to remain in the old church, then (1) they will be subject to the most arbitrary whims and exactions of their spiritual superiors, without the least chance for appeal. (2) They would in all likelihood be required to give up all intercourse with the Missionary, and then the separation would be forced upon us. (3) If left unmolested in the [Bulgarian] Church, it is doubtful whether a live Christian, especially a young convert, could go to their communion, admit their priest to annually sanctify his home with holy water, and countenance the other superstitions of the Church as far as would be necessary, with a good conscience. . . . On the other hand, if we aim at an independent organization from the outset, we encounter this difficulty: Every man at present a member of the Bulgarian Church, is subject to the Patriarch and his government until by a formal act he passes from the Bulgarian Community to one of the following, (1st) Turkish, (2d) Jewish, (3rd) Armenian, (4th) Roman Catholic, (5th) Protestant. . . . Now as there is no Protestant Community in either Shumla or Tirnova, the convert cannot come out from under the Greek Patriarch's jurisdiction.

To establish a Protestant community involved a degree of responsibility which no missionary could undertake. For one thing, any move tending to religious division would be resisted not only on ecclesiastical grounds but also for political reasons. In view of the difficulties Jacoby and Warren concluded that "perhaps it would be best to await the development of events without proclaiming any fixed policy on the subject."²⁷⁴ This "no policy" recommendation, so far as it influenced the missionaries, undoubtedly hampered their evangelistic activities.

* See p. 1018.

It was hoped that the separation of the Bulgarian Church from the rule of the Greek patriarch would not only increase the spirituality of the Church but also promote freedom of religion, making possible the organization of Protestant churches without stimulating popular antipathy and persecution. This proved, however, to be a vain hope and under the new order hostility was increased rather than diminished, making evangelization even more difficult than before.

Following an episcopal visit to the mission in 1886 Bishop W. X. Ninde presented a hopeful view of the general situation:

While in Bulgaria I sought by every means available to get a reliable understanding of the condition and prospect of our work. It is very evident that no considerable number of the inhabitants of the country appreciate our errand or court our presence among them. The masses are grossly ignorant and superstitious, and blindly devoted to the 'orthodox' Church. The more intelligent and educated are rapidly drifting into Agnosticism. They have no respect for the native Church or interest in it, except as it stands for a symbol and prop of national unity; yet motives of policy dispose them to stand by it in contrast with Protestantism. They have no sympathy with an aggressive, spiritual type of Christianity Our progress in this country must, therefore, be slow, yet the work is not without signs of encouragement. . . . Our schools are doing good work, and promise growing usefulness. Open opposition has ceased, and, indeed, the people generally treat our missionaries with respect and kindness. . . . Indeed, our hope is in gaining a hold on the young Bulgarians who have some education and are not yet enthralled by the current infidel notions. . . . The question of discontinuing the mission ought not to be mooted We have the secret confidence of the best class of Bulgarians, and we may some day win their open allegiance.²⁷⁵

The responsibility for failure of the Bulgaria Mission over a period of almost four decades—if failure it should be called—cannot be charged entirely to the missionaries. The Board and the General Missionary Committee did not have a clearly defined policy to which they consistently adhered. Challis' summary of the record, written in 1887, is pertinent: commenced in 1857; left without a resident missionary in 1864; abandoned in 1871; re-occupied in 1873; broken up in 1877; renewed in 1879. If he had written this in 1895, the account might have been continued in similar terms up to the close of the period. Granted that war and political disturbances over which the Board had no control made the undertaking seem impracticable, it must be said that there were other missions compelled to struggle against equally serious obstacles which the Society supported without wavering.

As for the American missionaries sent to Bulgaria by the Board, it should be said that half of them did not have a fair chance to demonstrate what they were capable of achieving. Of six, one was in Bulgaria less than twelve months, two for approximately a year, one for three years, one for five years, one for a decade. In all six cases the men left the field on account of illness of the missionary or his wife or were recalled by the Board because discontinuance of the mission was contemplated. Obviously service during so limited a tenure was not a test of what might have been accomplished under different conditions. It was unfortunate that the first two missionaries were so incompatible that they could not live and labor together in the same locality. Jacoby and Warren testified that Prettyman was "a good man," but he lacked the temperament and some of the abilities required in a missionary in so difficult a field. Long was well adapted to the work, with exceptional ability as a linguist, and through his long years of service demonstrated sterling character and complete devotion. Challis, Flocken, Lounsbury, and Davis also were able men, capable administrators, and effective missionaries.

ITALY MISSION

In November, 1870, the General Missionary Committee authorized the founding of a mission in Italy and on March 14, 1871, at the St. Louis Conference, Bishop E. R. Ames appointed Leroy M. Vernon * as missionary and Superintendent of the work of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Italy.

These actions were the culmination of long-continued agitation for the establishment of an Italian mission. Its most persistent advocate was Charles Elliott who, beginning in 1832 and continuing until his death in 1868, never ceased in conversation, in print, and in public discussion urgent advocacy of the project. While Elliott's views were considered impracticable by many influential leaders of the Church, there were those who seconded his proposal. Among these were E. H. Pilcher, a prominent member of the Michigan Conference, who contended that the warm-hearted and impulsive Italian people, whose religion had been formal and legalistic, needed the "life and love which form the great elements of Methodism," and would prove responsive to the message. Proponents of the undertaking also cited the long and remarkable history of the Waldensians† in Italy. The Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society also successfully established missions among the Italians. In 1861 the Wesleyans sent two missionaries, one of whom—Henry J. Piggott—remained and gained a foothold for Protestantism in nu-

* Leroy M. Vernon (1838-96) was born near Crawfordsville, Ind. In his early youth he emigrated, with his parents, to Iowa where the family home was established near Mt. Pleasant. He entered the Iowa Wesleyan University in September, 1855; was converted in February, 1856; and graduated in June, 1860. He studied in the theological department of the university and was received on trial in the Iowa Conference in September, 1860. In November of the same year he married Fannie B. Elliott, daughter of Charles Elliott, then president of Iowa Wesleyan. His second wife, whom he married in June, 1871, was Emily F. Barker. In 1862 Vernon transferred to the Missouri and Arkansas Conference and was stationed in St. Louis. In March, 1864, he was appointed Presiding Elder of the Springfield District. He was president of St. Charles College, St. Charles, Mo. Following his return from Italy he was for about three years (1893-96) dean of the College of Fine Arts, Syracuse University.—Official Biographical Files; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., III, 276 ff.

† See p. 773n. Also Enrico Sartorio, A Brief History of the Waldensians (pamphlet), pp. 3-11.

merous places.* However, in the early fifties Italy, more than any other country in Europe, had seemed to be completely closed against any Protestant missionary efforts. Rome, particularly, as the headquarters of the Roman Catholic hierarchy, was closely guarded and "worship within the city other than that of the Roman Catholic Church was strictly prohibited under the severest penalties."²⁷⁶

For an understanding of the difficulties and vicissitudes which attended the founding and development of the Methodist Episcopal mission it is necessary to know the political situation preceding and during 1845-95.

In the middle of the nineteenth century Italy was not a unified country, but a group of states passing through the historical crisis which led to national unification. Some were directly under Austrian rule and all the rest, including the Papal States, were dependent on Austria for military support, except for the one national Italian state, the kingdom of Sardinia. Particularly oppressive was the government of the Papal States (Umbria, the Marches, and the patrimony of St. Peter) under Leo XII. Agitation in the various states for constitutional and national government gained momentum after 1815 and a series of insurrections occurred. Charles Albert, who became king of Sardinia in 1831, was known to hold liberal views. As king of the one state in Italy not dependent on foreign bayonets, he was looked upon as the future liberator of a national Italian state. In 1846 Pope Pius IX was elected, the first to be elected without Austrian influence, and initiated a series of reforms in the Papal States. Pius' mild reforms unleashed a storm of national enthusiasm which went far beyond the Pope's intentions. As the revolutions of 1848 swept Italy Pius found himself the center of Italian national aspirations much against his own will. Charles Albert of Sardinia led the military revolt against Austria but, in spite of receiving aid from several of the states of Italy, was defeated in both 1848 and 1849 and abdicated in the latter year in favor of his son, Victor Emmanuel II. Pius in the meantime saw himself driven from Rome by the national movement he had originally espoused. Rome was declared a republic in 1849, and the Pope's temporal power was abolished by the revolutionaries; Pius was only restored to his capital by a French army later in the year. From that year until his death in 1878, Pius IX was a firm enemy of the Italian national cause because it would inevitably deprive him of his temporal power in Rome and central Italy.

Sardinia, under King Victor Emmanuel II and his principal minister, Cavour, remained the refuge of liberalism and nationalism in Italy. In 1859 with the aid of the French emperor, Napoleon III, the northern states freed

* The Wesleyan mission began in Milan and from there moved to Florence, Naples, Padua, and other cities and towns. In 1866 the Wesleyan Society reduced its appropriation in the face of what was considered by competent authorities to be the greatest opportunity ever given to the Methodist Church on the continent of Europe.—G. G. Findlay and W. W. Holdsworth, The History of the Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society, IV, 479-509 f.

themselves from Austrian control and were annexed to Sardinia. The following year the famed revolutionist Garibaldi liberated southern Italy. The Sardinian army then entered the Papal States to quell disturbances and join forces with Garibaldi, which resulted by the end of 1860 in the annexation of Sicily and Naples and all the Papal States except the patrimony of St. Peter (Rome and its environs) to the kingdom of Italy, proclaimed in March, 1861.

The only Italian territories now remaining in foreign hands were Venetia, still controlled by Austria, and Rome, where the Pope was maintained in power by French troops. In 1866 Italy allied herself with Prussia against Austria and although her own forces were defeated, Italy benefited by the Prussian victory and annexed Venetia. In 1870 the urgency of the Franco-Prussian War compelled Napoleon III to withdraw his troops from Rome. Troops of the kingdom of Italy entered Rome September 20, 1870, and although the Pope's minuscule army opposed the Italian forces, Pius was forced to capitulate. The Roman people declared overwhelmingly for union with Italy and on July 2, 1871, Rome became the capital of a united Italy.

The Papacy was indemnified for the loss of its temporal power by the acquisition of certain privileges and immunities and a generous annual income. The Pope, however, refused to be reconciled and considered himself a prisoner in the Vatican.²⁷⁷

The Italian people were disaffected by the Vatican's policy of plotting with foreign governments in an attempt to maintain its temporal power and to thwart the passionate popular desire for a unified nation. As a result many had become strongly anti-Church. The Papacy had been dispossessed of much of its material wealth. It had lost many of its hospitals and schools. Most of its political power was gone. Lost also was no small part of the spiritual prestige which was its most important heritage from the past. It had reached the lowest point in centuries. Of all times this was the most opportune for the establishment of a Protestant mission in Italy. On August 16, 1871, Vernon and his family arrived in Genoa.²⁷⁸

THE MISSION ESTABLISHED

On March 10, 1872, Vernon sent to the Missionary Society an "able and discriminating report" covering all the fundamental questions to be considered in beginning so important a mission. For its chief seat his first choice was Rome; second, Florence; third, Genoa. However, when the General Missionary Committee met in December, 1872, none of these three cities was accepted. Instead, Bishop Haven, who had been given episcopal supervision of the mission, sent, on December 5, 1872, the following transatlantic cable: "Head-quarters, Bologna: Spencer Coming: Rent Immediately." Three hours after receipt of the cablegram Vernon left Genoa, reaching

Bologna at midnight, whence he reported to New York missionary headquarters. No record is given of why the carefully worked-out conclusions of months of investigation were ignored. Less than two years later the headquarters were transferred to Rome.²⁷⁹

Vernon had also reported favorably on the Wesleyan Methodists' proposal to unite their forces with those of the American Methodists in one Italian Methodism. Piggott, the Wesleyan superintendent, had made the suggestion on his first meeting with Vernon, believing it would be sustained by the Wesleyan Missionary Society. However, there seemed to be so many practical difficulties that the proposal was abandoned and the Board advised only cordial fraternal relations.

Early in January, 1873, Frank A. Spencer, of the Ohio Conference, who had been for several years a missionary in India, arrived in Bologna. After many difficulties* a hall for worship was opened, with fifty hearers at the first service, June 22, 1873. The preceding Sunday sixty persons had attended services in Modena, and by the end of June work had been opened in Forli and Ravenna. Although Bologna proved to be a field difficult to cultivate, the work was carried on with "order, regularity, and patience." Forli and Modena became active churches. It became evident very soon that stations and especially pastors had to be chosen with great care. In Brescello† the arrival of the Methodist preacher caused general alarm, followed by threats of violence.

In his first annual report Vernon said that the mission numbered "fifteen actual laborers and about forty additional hopeful believers." To those acquainted with the difficulties encountered, he continued, "even these results appear indeed to be the Lord's doing and marvelous in our eyes." He named seven cities in which missionary work was under way‡ and two other prospective stations. He wrote with enthusiasm of the Rev. Teofilo Gay, descendant of "a long succession of Waldensian pastors," educated at Geneva, who had served as assistant pastor of French churches—one in Holland and one in London—who had been engaged to begin work in Rome.²⁸⁰ Work begun at three of the seven places named—Bagnacavallo, Pescara, and Rimini—soon failed, their names not appearing again in the reports. Toward the

* "We have generally found great difficulty in securing places for public service, never more than in Bologna, where we were betrayed by notaries, worried by a coterie of bargain-breaking priests, and resisted directly by the Cardinal Archbishop himself. . . .

" . . . Even after we had with incredible difficulty found a place for worship here, necessary repairs still delayed us. But June 22, all in readiness, we opened a very commodious chapel but a few paces from where the Council of Trent, three centuries ago, formulated a gigantic apostasy. . . . We have since held four public services per week. These . . . have reached a considerable number of people, some of whom have become inquirers . . . and several others professed believers and members of the Church."—Fifty-fifth Ann. Rep., M.S. (1873), pp. 130 f.

† Leroy M. Vernon: "When it was known we . . . were about to commence preaching, there was general alarm. The priests and the faithful, by an address multitudinously signed, appealed to the syndic, or mayor, to forbid the entrance of the Protestants and the erection of a 'pulpit of pestilence.' . . . The Catholic populace threatened to mob the proprietor of our hall, to burn the house and the preacher, and to club all adherents."—In ibid., 56th (1874), pp. 127 f.

‡ The seven places named were: (1) Modena; (2) Bologna; (3) Forli; (4) Ravenna; (5) Bagnacavallo; (6) Rimini; (7) Pescara and Chieti. Plans were under way for opening missions in Florence and Rome.—Ibid., 55th (1873), pp. 130-34.

end of 1873 there came into the hands of the Superintendent of the mission "a successful and interesting work among the Italian soldiers in Rome." It had been begun by a young Italian soldier after his discharge from service, on his own responsibility, and supported at his own expense plus contributions from friends. These resources were insufficient, and affiliation with the Methodist work greatly increased and enlarged the project.²⁸¹

Late in September, 1873, a school was begun in Bologna under Spencer's direction. He had had experience in India, and "had a special predilection for teaching, and a decided faith in schools as effective missionary instrumentalities." Apparently the school was a rather reluctant concession to his preferences. There was an initial rush of students, and even after the novelty wore off "the school went forward with fair numbers and usefulness." However, the General Missionary Committee made no further appropriation for its support. It was thereupon closed, and Spencer returned to the United States in 1874. In the light of later developments, it seems that the progress of Methodism was delayed by many years for lack of a consistent, far-seeing plan for educating boys up through elementary school and higher grades until they thoroughly understood the principles of religion and morality. There would then have been a group ready to enter theological school thoroughly grounded in the essentials of character. The reason for this short-sighted policy seems in part due to the attitude of Vernon himself. In a letter to Secretary J. M. Reid, dated January 12, 1874 (six months before Spencer's recall), he asked:

Do you really need, under existing circumstances, a second Missionary here? If he could preach and conduct a station himself he would indeed be very useful. He would however do the work in some regards better, in others not so well, as an Italian who would live on half his salary. . . . The support necessary for a second Missionary will provide two effective native men of good ability. I believe they can now be had.²⁸²

He observed that in other missions a second foreigner was usually occupied in educational work, whereas, he felt, theological and other schools already established by other Protestants (Waldensian and Wesleyan) could be used to train young Italians "until we can do better." In this and other ways Vernon followed a policy of using Italian evangelists, pastors, and teachers who had been converted, rather than delaying rapid evangelism until workers could be trained into a thorough understanding of Methodist religious experience, aims, and policies. This had been the practice of the Waldensian and Wesleyan groups which in their beginnings had availed themselves of native converts. The first annual meeting of the mission was held on September 10, 1874, convened by Bishop W. L. Harris. Nine Italian preachers had been received on trial in the Germany and Switzerland Conference on July 2 and of these two had been elected to deacon's and elder's orders.

These two, Enrico Borelli and Luigi Capellini, were ordained by Bishop Harris. An optimistic report of the progress was again made by Superintendent Vernon :

We now preach the Gospel regularly every week in fourteen different places; our working force consists of twelve Italian preachers, five of whom are ordained, four students, one colporteur, and the superintendent. Our members and probationers aggregate about six hundred. . . . We thank God, take courage, and bid the friends of Italy be of good cheer.²⁸³

Dr. Vernon's faith in the value of native workers appears in his glowing accounts of conversions among leading intelligentsia. Alceste Lanna, Ph.D., D.D., was a professor in the most popular Catholic college in Rome. Two years before meeting Dr. Vernon he had resigned his chair as professor of philosophy at the Vatican Seminary. He was converted during Vernon's visit to Rome in July, 1874. Shortly thereafter (January, 1875) occurred the conversion, in Milan, of another highly educated Romanist. Professor Enrico Caporali, LL.D., was the son of a Viennese baroness, "a wide-ranging, industrious student . . . already favorably known as an editor and author." In May, 1875, the Rev. Vincenzo Ravi of Rome, formerly president of a Catholic college in Sicily, brought with him the entire congregation of forty which he had organized independently, after studying Protestant theology in Florence and Scotland.²⁸⁴

And there were others. These three are mentioned specifically because their influence in the important churches of Rome, Naples, and Milan was to result in radical changes in mission policy in Italy.

By October 1, 1874, the headquarters of the mission were established in Rome, on the instruction of Bishop Harris, where it had always seemed to Vernon that it should be. Superintendent Vernon was authorized to buy a small Catholic church, then believed to be obtainable. That purchase proved impossible, but a very good site was put up at public auction. There was not time for authorization, so (April 5, 1875) he bid it in on his own responsibility—a procedure heartily approved by the Board in New York. They appropriated funds to build a small church and mission residence, on which work was begun on July 15. The efforts of the opposing Catholic clergy were overcome by the municipal architect, and thus St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal Church, on the Via Poli, Rome, finally stood complete. So, "though last to enter Rome, the Methodist Episcopal Mission was the first to build a church for the use of native Protestant Christians in 'the Eternal City.'" It was dedicated according to the Methodist ritual on Christmas Day, 1875. Dr. Ravi, Dr. Lanna, and Dr. Gay all preached able sermons on this, the crowning occasion of the year; Dr. Gay became its first pastor.²⁸⁵

Appointments were made in 1876 to thirteen stations.* In Naples Vincenzo Ravi had begun preaching in his rented house. Even before renting, in February, a small theater in the center of this city of 700,000, he had received a few probationers. Some of the attendants were "of very decided intelligence and culture." A few were in comfortable circumstances. A converted soldier from the Military Church in Rome returned to his home in Grottole, a Neapolitan town of 4,000 people, and began talking to his friends and acquaintances about Christ and His salvation.

Though a humble shoemaker, God blessed his testimony and his exhortations, and the result . . . [was] a considerable number of conversions, and the formation of a Methodist Society. The field is open, the ground fertile, and only awaits a faithful husbandman²⁸⁶

Some success was had this year in Sunday-school work. It had been begun earlier but had encountered formidable barriers, some of which were now breaking down. Six Sunday schools had been organized. Total church membership this year, as reported by the Superintendent, was: full members, 774; probationers, 162.

Early in 1877 the work among the Italian soldiers was voluntarily turned over to the Wesleyans. It had been successful and interesting, but very expensive. The Wesleyans had rooms not well adapted to other uses which were very suitable for this work, thus they could conduct it for "about half what it cost us."²⁸⁷

The W.F.M.S. General Executive this year made its first contribution to the Italy Mission—$1,500. in direct appropriations for Bible women, and $2,500. "provisional." The following year appropriations were reduced in line with the realities to $1,750. With this assistance Vernon employed in 1877 three Bible women, one each for Venice, Terni, and Rome.²⁸⁸

By 1877 Methodist Societies had been organized in Florence, Forli, Milan, Terni, Venice, Perugia, and Naples even though they met with the usual difficulties of finding locations where the owners dared withstand the popular prejudice against renting places for Protestant worship.

It was not easy for a Bible woman to reach Italian women. The difficulties encountered grew out of the inferior status of Italian women in the culture of the time. They had little formal education. Whereas the general literacy rate in Italy in this decade was very low, it was much lower among women, especially in southern Italy. A girl's life at home was one of endless tasks with little social life and no confidante except her confessor, who turned her hopes toward early marriage and the interests of her Church. The object of all her training was to keep her innocent and obedient to authority, with no will of her own even in the choice of a husband. The city working girl's life was hard with long hours, low pay, and with living and working conditions that made her an easy prey to temptation. From infancy she was taught to revere and obey the power of the Catholic Church.²⁸⁹

* The 1876 appointments were: Rome, St. Paul's, Teofilo Gay, Alceste Lanna; Rome, Military Church, Luigi Capellini; Milan, Julius C. Mill; Bologna, Enrico Borelli; Florence, Antonio Arrighi; Naples, Vincenzo Ravi; Soccavo, Edoardo Stasio; Perugia, Enrico Caporali; Venice, Francesco Cardin; Forli, Dovadola, Amedeo Guigou; Terni, Daniele Gay, Crisanzio Bambini; Brescello, B. Malan; Grottole, to be supplied.—Fifty-eighth Ann. Rep., M.S. (1876), p. 130.

The status of women in Italy emphasized the need of educating a nucleus of future teachers and homemakers who would have a real conception, through their own experience, of the meaning of Christian home life and of the Christian religion. Mrs. Vernon, who had been in charge of women's work in the mission, considered the work of the Bible women as highly important but also felt that much more than Bible women's work was required. In 1880 she wrote to the W.F.M.S.:

it would be wise to send out some capable young woman whose exclusive business might be to direct the Society's work and greatly enhance its efficiency. She could be a great power for good. We live in strong hope, also, that the Society at no distant day will be able to establish in Rome a school or orphanage for girls. Many would be very glad to have their children under the care and training of such a school, and would cheerfully do what they could for their support. Let our sisters bear in mind this great desideratum, and may God speedily bring it to be an accomplished actuality.²⁹⁰

ITALY CONFERENCE

The 1880 General Conference, on recommendation of the Committee on Missions, authorized an Italy Annual Conference.* The Conference was organized by Bishop S. M. Merrill on March 19, 1881. Appointments were made to eighteen charges.† Ordained Italian ministers numbered thirteen; unordained, six. There were 708 full members and 311 probationers, but only two church buildings. Other than these, there were fifteen halls and miscellaneous places of worship. Special services, three times a week, were begun this year among the soldiers at Venice.²⁹¹

Notable conversions had continued to take place. A prelate of the Roman Catholic Church was one of the nine persons received into full connection in Rome on Christmas Day, 1878. Also in that year Dr. Vernon became acquainted with Monsignor Campello, a canon of the Patriarchal Basilica of St. Peter's. His conversion came three years later.

The most striking event of . . . [1881] was the conversion of Monsignor Campello, a canon of the Patriarchal Basilica of St. Peter's in Rome. He had occupied that envied and distinguished position for fourteen years, after passing

* "The Committee on Missions, to whom was referred the memorial of the Italian Mission, asking for the organization of an Annual Conference in Italy, beg leave respectfully to recommend that the prayer of the memorialists be granted; provided, that the Bishop presiding at the meeting of the Italian Mission approve the same." (G.C. Journal, 1880, p. 369.) The recommendation was adopted.

† The eighteen appointments at the first session of the Italy Annual Conference were: Rome, Via Poli, A. Lanna; Rome, Piazza del Esquilino, D. Polsinelli; Naples, V. Ravi; Terni, E. Ageno; Perugia and Foligno, G. Gattuso; Todi, E. Caporali; Arezzo, C. Bambini; Florence, Teofilo Gay, Emilio Borelli; Pisa, E. Stasio; Bologna, D. Gay; Modena, D. Gay; Turin, B. Bracchetto; Milan, S. Stazi; Milan, Outside the Gate Ticinesc, G. Cavalleris; Venice, Enrico Borelli; Venice, Military Church, G. Benincasa; Faenza, Forli, and Dovadola, A. Guigou; Asti, G. Carboneri.—Sixty-third Ann. Rep., M.S. (1881), p. 198.

six years in the canonry of Santa Maria Maggiore of this city. For many years he had been restless and unhappy because of serious doubts touching various doctrines and institutions of Romanism. . . . His resolution was taken early last summer. Finally, on the 14th of September, in our St. Paul's Church, on Via Poli, Rome, he solemnly abjured popery in a formal letter there read and addressed to the Cardinal Archpriest of St. Peter's, Cardinal Borromeo. He publicly professed a personal faith in Christ alone for salvation, embraced the Protestant religion, and entered our Church.

Count Campello was a man of unusual natural gifts and of culture. It was hoped that he might become a minister and render effective service as a Protestant preacher. However, a chronic throat condition limited his preaching. He established an independent magazine, Il Libero, which rendered notable service in interpreting the Christian faith to the Italian people.²⁹²

The next year (1882) was marked by the reception of six men on trial. A new church was dedicated at Florence and a centrally located property purchased at Bologna. Vincenzo Ravi, pastor at Naples, was brought to trial on a charge of immorality and removed from the ministry. In retaliation he preferred charges in the civil courts against the Superintendent for the ecclesiastical action. By formal decree of the court the church discipline was upheld and Vernon was completely vindicated, giving the Methodist Church a standing in Italy which it had not previously had. Ravi was reinstated six years later through the influence of William Burt who was convinced of the preacher's contrition.²⁹³

For several years Mrs. Vernon had hoped to see a Methodist orphanage established in Rome. In 1878 she had first appealed to the W.F.M.S., calling attention to the effectiveness of such agencies in other countries and asserting that missions of other denominations had gained many advantages by their charitable and educational work. There was no immediate response to the appeal but in 1882 Mrs. Jennie Fowler Willing, Official Correspondent of the W.F.M.S., asserted in no uncertain terms her conviction that the Society ought immediately to send some of . . . [the] strongest, most highly cultured and deeply consecrated women . . . [to Italy].

There ought to be a Deaconesses' Home in Rome, an Orphanage in Florence, and at least a hundred women at work in the different towns and cities before . . . Christmas . . . of 1885.²⁹⁴

In 1885 the Society finally acted, sending Miss Emma M. Hall * as their first missionary to Italy. Her first annual report indicated that "tangible results" were few. Nevertheless, she had been able to make many home visits, enlisted and trained Sunday-school teachers, and prepared lesson helps which were printed in the Methodist weekly periodical. In October, 1888, she established a Home and Orphanage in Rome with a mission band and Sunday afternoon meetings. The rental of enlarged quarters enabled her to gather nine or ten girls into a really Christian home which could provide a nucleus for many other interests. This, initiated in the first year of service of Mrs. E. P. Crandon as Official Correspondent, was eventually given her name. In 1889 the W.F.M.S. made provision for the greatly needed work—long urged by the Vernons and others—of training Bible women. Miss Hall was requested to bring into the Home for training every new candidate for Bible women's work whom she recommended for employment. She was also asked "to prepare a course of study in the Bible" and some simple primary courses for the Bible women already employed, many of whom were pastors' wives and burdened with parish duties.²⁹⁵

* Emma M. Hall (1849-?) studied at Cazenovia Seminary, later at the University of Michigan (A.B., 1874) in the first class which had women members. She afterward also took graduate work at the university. Before going to Italy she taught for ten years at Detroit, Circleville, Ohio, and the University of Illinois.—L. M. Hodgkins, op. cit., p. 40.

In 1883 an appropriation was made by the Board for an assistant to the overburdened Superintendent. J. H. Hargis, pastor of Hedding Church, Jersey City, N. J., was appointed by Bishop Foss and on December 27, 1883, he sailed for Italy. Soon after beginning work on the field he became critical of Vernon's financial records and wrote to the Missionary Society urging a prompt investigation. An auditing committee was appointed which fully cleared the Superintendent, and in 1886 Hargis returned to the United States.²⁹⁶

The fifth session of the Italy Annual Conference was held in Bologna, April 23-27, 1885, with Bishop Hurst presiding. On April 23 he dedicated the new church in that city. At this session seven deacons and five elders were ordained. An Italian congregation in Geneva, Switzerland, asked for recognition as a Methodist Society. This was given and Teofilo Malan, the pastor, was admitted to the Conference on trial. Services at the time were being held in "the old consistory, or chapel, where John Calvin first delivered his exposition of the Psalms."²⁹⁷

By this time, wrote Secretary J. M. Reid, "the novelty of Protestant missions had worn off." The reaction against the formality and priestcraft of the Roman Church had partly spent itself, and a general indifference toward Protestant preaching was developing. This situation prompted inquiry concerning the desirability of union of all Protestant church bodies. A delegated council was called to meet in Florence in 1885 to determine the possibility—and practicability—of union. The Waldensians and the Free Church had already agreed on conditions of union, to be sanctioned by their respective synods. These two, with the Wesleyans and the Methodist Episcopal mission, sent delegates to the council meeting. Despite the fact that a considerable degree of cooperation already existed organic union was not agreed upon.²⁹⁸

The 1886 Annual Conference was held April 29-May 3 at Venice, under the presidency of Bishop C. D. Foss. William Burt* of the New York East Conference had arrived on the field April 29, and was appointed Presiding Elder of the Milan District. Vernon was continued on the Rome District.²⁹⁹

The 1888 Conference was held in Rome under the presidency of Superintendent Vernon, no Bishop being present. It was a momentous session. Upon his arrival two years earlier, Burt had been shocked and "almost overwhelmed with discouragement" to find that most of the ministers of the Conference drank wine and smoked, and that "wine was served at the table of the Presiding Elder to all who wished it . . . and often in Italian company he took the social glass." The Italian edition of the Discipline had been amended to prohibit simply drunkenness and immoderation. Burt felt the mission to be in the "hands of worldly cunning ex-priests." He had for two years protested quietly to the Bishop in charge and others, enlisting their support. On March 14, 1888, Everett S. Stackpole, from the Maine Conference, arrived to establish a theological school at Florence. He quickly joined Burt in criticizing the operation of the mission. At the Conference session Burt was faced with charges of maladministration brought by one of the pastors he had antagonized. The Annual Conference acquitted him, but by the narrow margin of three, because, wrote Burt, "seven ex-priests voted against me . . . while the President of the Conference [Vernon] did all he dared to do in favor of those who prosecuted me." Vernon, who had given seventeen years of service to the mission, announced his retirement. An Italian minister, Giovanni B. Gattuso, was appointed Presiding Elder of the Rome District and Burt was continued on the Milan District. Appointments† were made to ten Stations in the Rome District and fourteen in the Milan District.

On Christmas Day, 1888, Burt expressed to Missionary Secretary J. O. Peck satisfaction and encouragement at the progress already made. Five of the ex-priests in the mission at the time of his arrival were no longer with it, and three of the Italian preachers had given up the use of wine and tobacco. There still remained some who gave trouble, including Dr. Teofilo

* William Burt was born in Padstow, Cornwall, England, Oct. 23, 1852. Left fatherless at an early age, he cared for his mother, two brothers, and a sister. He was converted in a Wesleyan meeting at fifteen, and immediately felt the call to preach. In 1868 he emigrated to the United States, found work as a machinist in Warren, Mass., and after a year and a half, was able to send for his family. Having seen them established, he entered Wilbraham Academy, graduated in 1875, and then went to Wesleyan University (A.B. 1879), and to Drew Theological Seminary. On his graduation in 1881, he was admitted to the New York East Conference and appointed to St. Paul's, Brooklyn, whose place of worship was in a butcher shop. He helped them build a church, served other appointments with much success, and in 1886, was sent to Italy as a missionary. From 1889 he was Presiding Elder for all Italy. Elected Bishop in 1904, he had supervision of all Methodist work in Europe with Zurich as center. In 1912 he returned to America and served the Buffalo area from that time until his retirement in 1924. He died in 1936. Mrs. Burt was Helen B. Graves (1856-1946), whom the Bishop met at Wilbraham.—Official Biographical Files.

† The 1888 appointments were: Rome District, Giovanni Gattuso, P.E.; Foggia, Pietro Tagliatela; Melfi, Gualtiero Fabbri; Naples, Edoardo Stasio, Antonio Savarese; Palermo, Gaetano Conte; Perugia, Raffaele Wigley; Pisa, Emilio Borelli; Pontedera, Felice Dardi; Rome, Teofilo Gay; Terni, Domenico Polsinelli; Venosa, Carlo Boglione; Milan District, William Burt, P.E.; Adria, Aristide Frizziero; Alessandria, Giovanni Pons; Bologna, Giacomo Carboneri; Dovadola, Paolo Gay; Faenza, Pietro Ballerini; Florence, Constantino Tollis, Vittorio Bani; Forlì, Carlo Gay; Genoa, Daniele Gay; Geneva, Teofilo Malan; Milan, Vincenzo Ravi; Modena, Crisanzio Bambini; San Marzano, Augusto Manini; Turin, Bernardo Bracchetto; Venice, Federico Cruciani.—Seventieth Ann. Rep., M.S. (1888), pp. 288 f.

Gay who had spoken against the temperance report given by Stackpole at the last Conference, but, Burt wrote,

Let the church have a little patience and stand by us in this difficult work and the Italy Conf. shall become a Conf. of the Methodist Episcopal Church loyal to our spirit and discipline. It may however be necessary that we first destroy a large part of that which has been before rebuilding.³⁰⁰

REAPPRAISAL

Following Vernon's retirement those left in charge made a critical study of conditions in the mission. In order to facilitate the reappraisal William Burt was appointed by Bishop Fowler at the 1889 Conference to superintend the entire mission as a single District. In collaboration with E. S. Stackpole, he came to some disturbing conclusions that were to change radically the conduct and character of the mission.³⁰¹

The mission in seventeen years had been extended from Venice to Palermo; and it was largely the work of one man's building. Vernon was an urbane, cosmopolitan gentleman and scholar. The mission was not to a primitive society but to a civilized land celebrated for its art and literature. Its cities were known around the world for their culture and their trade; but the country's wealth had been too little shared with an illiterate and exploited peasantry. Rome had been the capital of medieval Christendom and was still the head of a worldwide Church, although, because of abuses that had grown out of its struggle for wealth and temporal power, it had largely lost the allegiance and respect of its peoples.

The Superintendent knew that Methodism, with its emphasis on a spiritual rebirth, moral reformation, and strict discipline in everyday life, would need eloquent ambassadors if it was to win the hearts and minds of people devoted by tradition to a religion of pageantry and ritual which left individual morality too much to the easy bargains they could make with the priest at the confessional. He was keenly aware of the psychological effect on a people, proud of the flowing beauty of their language, of having to listen to foreigners presenting the Gospel in halting and ungrammatical speech that was an offense to them. Vernon found many dissatisfied intellectuals among both philosophers and churchmen, and he had unusual ability to attract them to the evangelical point of view. Like Henry J. Piggott of the Wesleyan mission, he reasoned that the most effective means of their salvation was to set converted priests to work preaching the Gospel to their fellow countrymen. These then were the men who in more than a score of Italy's cities and towns were carrying on the mission.

Stackpole, now in the first year of his service, had been shocked that some of these priests-turned-Methodists seemed more interested in exposing the abuses of the priesthood than in proclaiming the evangelical Gospel, and in their personal living had not departed much from the practices of their previous condition. They were users of tobacco, wine bibblers, and wore clerical gowns in the pulpit. To Stackpole—characterized by Bishop Vincent as “an intense believer in the most intense type of Methodism”—these things were not to be condoned and he condemned them in no uncertain terms. But beyond this he was prone to put together and reject everything in Italian customs and ideals that differed from American Methodism and to insist that converts conform to American practices.

Upon Burt fell the full responsibility of evaluating what had been accomplished in seventeen years, of facing the fact of mistakes in policy and poor judgment in making appointments, of performing major surgeries both in personnel and institutions. It was his job to keep the good and eliminate the harmful practices.

The survey of the work revealed certain faults which had hampered a number of the pastors in the performance of their ministry: (1) some were mercenary in spirit; they seemed interested only in a secure job, pleasant living quarters, a good salary, and a comfortable pension at their time of retirement. (2) Some were worldly men. Besides the things Stackpole had condemned, they allowed attendance on dancing parties, theaters, and other amusements to interfere with their pastoral work. (3) Some pastors falsified their statistical reports in order to gain prestige for progress in the Conference and so get better appointments. Some, it was charged, even connived with neighborhood pastors of other denominations to augment their congregations when the Presiding Elder was expected. (4) Too many pastors had brought over from their priesthood in the Catholic Church the concept of a separate clergy with a privileged status in the community. They were “too proud to associate familiarly with the poor people” to whom they preached.

The study of congregational practices gave evidence that: (1) conversion as a vital experience was not required or expected for church membership. There were no “altar calls” or revivals in the conduct of services in the parishes. Too often “intellectual change of opinion or belief” or “disgust with the Papacy and the corruptions of the Roman Catholic Church” were sufficient to obtain enrollment as a church member. (2) There were seldom any prayer meetings or Class meetings held in the churches; and in those that were held the ministers conducted a service of scripture reading, prayer, and exposition, similar to the Sunday service. There was no opportunity or desire for spontaneous prayer or testimony; and so these traditional Wesleyan devices for the guiding and training of the spiritual life of adults were neglected. The Italian ministers, perhaps because they did not understand them or know how to use them, considered them “not adapted to Italy.” (3) The congregations were not taught to sing hymns with spirit or religious enthusiasm. In Italy, the land of song, this was evidence of lack of spiritual fervor. The hymnal the churches were using was published by the Waldensians. Some of the Sunday schools were using translations of Moody and Sankey songs, but for the most part there were few hymns expressive of the warmth and joy of evangelistic worship. Even those pastors who were poets tended to write religious hymns that were literary or philosophical rather than devotional. (4) The congregations were not trained in giving; therefore progress toward self-support was slow even in parishes where the worshippers had some means. In summary then, Burt and Stackpole agreed that two fundamental mistakes had been made. One was in relying for pastors upon Italian preachers trained either as priests or in a Waldensian theological school. The other was the failure to begin a comprehensive educational program at the starting of the mission. The Calvinistic sermons and Presbyterian forms of worship, inherited from Waldensian training on the one hand, and a Jesuitical morality on the other, were not to be changed by merely a shift of pastors. Burt was convinced that unless a church was true to the doctrines and practices of the Methodist Episcopal Church the work should be given to another denomination.³⁰²

A NEW ORDER ESTABLISHED

Burt took hold of the difficult task of establishing a new order in the mission with a firm hand. He began at once to reform the undesirable practices in pastoral conduct. In addition to the pastors who resigned or were dismissed, rather than conform,* several of the Italian Bible women left, taking a considerable number of their families and friends with them. Burt found the tasks he had set for himself difficult and slow of accomplishment, and at times a bitter experience. In a letter to Missionary Secretary Peck, he wrote:

At Rome . . . we have been basely betrayed, and our church is in a very critical position—Dr. [Alceste] Lanna who had been pastor there for 10 years . . . was located at his own request. . . . Dr. [Teofilo] Gay who had been pastor at Rome for the past three years was also located at his own request because he could not approve the idea of introducing here the ways and customs of the Methodist Episcopal Church. . . . He has gone over to the Waldensians and now declares that during the sixteen years of service in our Church he has never had the idea of ever establishing here a Methodist Episcopal Church, but simply used our means with the purpose of establishing as soon as possible an independent church according to his own ideas. I weep when I consider how our Church has been betrayed in Italy. The very men who have been employed by our Church have never been of us, and they leave us and counsel others to do the same because we wish to introduce the class-meeting, kneel in prayer, and invite sinners to the altar. . . . Some will leave us, ministers and members, but we shall be better off without than with them. To retain them would be to compromise the whole Church, as in the past, and leave us no warrant of success. To part with them is to release [sic] ourselves of a burden so that we may be free to go forward to victory. I am only sorry we cannot be rid at once of all who are not truly of us.³⁰³

* One of those no longer connected with the mission was Enrico Caporali. For several years he had edited La Nuova Scienza, his salary coming from the Missionary Society. The periodical was sometimes called the "Italian Methodist Quarterly Review," and the publication cost was covered by the Methodist Tract Society. It was an independent magazine, however, with no mention of the Methodist Church within it, and was philosophical rather than religious in aim. Following the removal of Methodist support from the magazine, Caporali withdrew from the ministry. The Methodist mission then established a new paper, L'Evangelista.—Everett S. Stackpole, 4½ Years in the Italy Mission, A Criticism of Missionary Methods, pp. 83 ff.; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., III, 325, 326.

Reforms in the conduct of congregations followed the purge of the disloyal in the ministry: the "call to the altar" was included in more and more of the services, from worship at Annual Conference to the farthest towns and cities; most of the hymns of Charles Wesley were translated to improve congregational singing; a new translation of the Methodist Discipline was circulated to emphasize the requirements and meaning of conversion and membership; prayer meetings and Class meetings were emphasized and incorporated into parish programs; congregations progressing in self-help were commended and their pastors publicly notified at the Annual Conference sessions.

The reform program in education also was thoroughgoing. F. A. Spencer (returned to his former work in India) must have read with real satisfaction that the policy of starving schools to pay for immediate evangelism had been reversed. It was this policy that had caused him to leave Italy after only a year and a half of service. Now Burt heartily encouraged the home Boards to speed up in Italy the program of education in day schools, orphanages, and the Sunday schools so ably supervised by Emma Hall. At this time, also, a careful supervision of native workers was instituted. The Florence Theological School, established under Stackpole's direction, had been opened on January 1, 1889, with seven young men. Elmer E. Count and Vittorio Bani, an Italian pastor-teacher, were added to the teaching staff and the school's function in the mission was now stressed. "We shall soon be substituting for those who are unfaithful to our rules those well trained in our Discipline," was the stated purpose.

The 1890 Conference was convened in Bologna on April 23 by Bishop H. W. Warren. Appointments were made to twenty-four Stations and Circuits. Elmer E. Powell, a transfer from the Illinois Conference, was appointed professor in the seminary. The results of the new administration's policy were described in Burt's annual report to the Board:

To those who simply compare statistics it may seem a contradiction to assert that this year has been one of marked success in our Italian work. But even the statistics will show that we have advanced along those lines that indicate permanent success. The ministers were never so united as now, and, with few exceptions, they are consecrated to the work of saving souls. Among the members there is a true esprit de corps. They begin to realize their mission as members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and to love our doctrines and methods.³⁰⁴

The need for evangelical schools was pressing. If the Methodist Church expected to stay in Italy, Stackpole declared, she must give attention to facilities for the education of her young people. Only as schools were provided for the children of the growing number of Protestants could it be hoped that the need for educated ministers and trained lay workers would be met. The need was emphasized by the rapid growth of the population and the activity of the Roman Church. As the authority and influence of the Papacy increased in other parts of the world the Catholic Church in Italy had gradually recovered from the staggering effects of the unification of Italy. By 1889 the Papacy was crowding Rome with its schools. While in 1870 there had been only five seminaries in the city for the training of priests, in 1889 there were forty-one; while in 1870 schools conducted by priests, friars, and nuns numbered only nine, in 1889 there were 117.³⁰⁵

As for the Methodist mission it could boast of less than a half dozen schools all told. There was a day and English school at Pontedera with seventy-five children, and an "evening-school of 50 working-men," in 1890. At Palermo there were over eighty children in a day school. Burt rejoiced to be able to report in 1892 two schools in Rome. He wrote:

two well-organized and ably managed institutes . . . promise much for our work not only in Rome, but all over Italy. One is for girls, under the care and direction of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society. This is mostly for poor girls. . . . The other is for boys. These are for the most part from well-to-do families in different parts of Italy. . . . We now have twenty-five of these bright boys, and I am sure from the demands for admission we might have a hundred of them for next year if we only had the room for them. These are sons of lawyers, doctors, and army officers . . . They attend the municipal day schools and live in our home and are under our religious instruction as our boys.³⁰⁶

Among the children brought to the boys' school in Rome were the three sons of General Menotti Garibaldi, a member of the Chamber of Deputies and the son of the hero of the Italian struggle for independence and unification.

The activity of the Catholic Church in establishing schools for the training of priests intensified the missionaries' sense of need for an enlarged Methodist institution. As early as 1889 Bishop Fowler had urged moving the seminary to Rome and at the 1892 Conference Bishop Joyce brought about its relocation. In 1893 it was reorganized and in October was reopened in Rome. Stackpole, who favored the move, and also E. E. Count, returned to America. N. Walling Clark* of Frankfort, Germany, was trans-

* Nathaniel Walling Clark (1859-1918) was born at Plattsburg, N. Y. In 1872 he experienced conversion and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church. He graduated from Wesleyan University in 1879 (A.B.) and from Drew Theological Seminary in 1893 (B.D.). On Aug. 22, 1883, he married Felicia H. Buttz. He was received into Philadelphia Conference. After serving pastorates in that and the Newark Conference he was appointed professor in Martin Mission Institute, Frankfort, Germany. For two years (1901-1903) he was traveling secretary for Europe and the Levant, of the World's Student Christian Federation, and during 1904-18 Superintendent of the Rome District, Italy Conference. He was an indefatigable worker and "a scholar of unusual attainments."—Alumni Record of Drew Theological Seminary (1867-1925), p. 148; Christian Advocate, XCIII (1918), 12 (March 21), 369; Official Biographical Files.

ferred to the Italy Conference and appointed as president. In 1891 property had been purchased on Via Venti Settembre (September 20), next to the War Department and "a short distance from the royal palace" as a site for a "collegiate, publishing, and otherwise connectional building." Unfortunately funds were not available for building and it was necessary to make temporary provision for the seminary. There were twelve applicants for admission the first year in Rome, but as the policy had been adopted of admitting only those who had been "employed for at least one year under proper supervision in the regular work" only four were admitted. For the second year twenty applications were received but for lack of facilities only four students were accepted. These were from Milan, Florence, Pisa, and Palermo, Sicily.³⁰⁷

Meantime, the educational work for women and girls was progressing under the capable leadership of Emma Hall. The "nine or ten" pupils reported in 1889 in the girls' Home in Rome had by 1892 increased to forty-one from all parts of Italy. Fifteen were from Methodist families; twenty-six nominally Catholic. During the year four of the older girls were admitted to the Church on probation.

As the program for women and girls was widening in scope the W.F.M.S. in 1891 sent Miss Martha Ellen Vickery of the Northwestern Branch to assist Miss Hall. Miss Vickery emphasized the need of facilities for higher education of women. We are not doing that "which will best promote the spread of evangelical Christianity," she said, until a school for this purpose is established.

. . . the power of the Romish Church is in the faith of their women. The crowd of earnest devotees is composed largely of the peasant women and ignorant people. Very rarely do you see a man among the worshipers, or an intelligent looking woman. The government free schools in Rome are very good, and all, even to the University, are open to girls. Still, owing to prejudices of co-education—much stronger than ever existed in America—they are sent to the convent schools³⁰⁸

Miss Vickery was confident that a higher school would not lack patronage.

In 1893 property was purchased by the W.F.M.S. between the city hospital and the Italian Academy of Fine Arts as a site for the Home and Orphanage, previously housed in rented quarters. On May 10, 1894, during the Conference session, a spacious new building was dedicated by Bishop Newman. The desired standard in the school was not reached in 1895 but progress was made. Courses in Bible history, music, French, and English were added to the regular government program. The six grades which began with the "first elementary" extended to the "second normal preparatory." The teachers were all earnest Christians, as interested in the spiritual as in the intellectual development of the pupils.³⁰⁹

As evidence increased of the missionary success of Methodism, and its institutional strength grew, the opposition of the Catholic hierarchy became intensified. Long articles were published in the widely circulated Catholic periodicals attacking the Protestants in general, and especially the Methodists as "the most dangerous of the sects." Warnings were addressed to the Methodists of what they might expect "from an offended and angry people" if they did not desist from their efforts. A few of the ex-priests on whom reliance had been placed in earlier years continued to make some trouble. Ravi was irresponsible in fulfilling his duties as pastor and in 1895 became a supernumerary. Gualtiero Fabri of Pisa—who had withdrawn from the Conference in 1893 rather than face expulsion—appealed to the Missionary Society and to friends in America for money, reviling Burt and claiming that he had been persecuted.³¹⁰

The 1895 Conference met in Florence, May 16-20, Bishop FitzGerald presiding. A detailed report of cities was made by Superintendent Burt. Appointments were made to nineteen of the twenty-nine Stations and Circuits.* Four of the centers, Bari, Pavia, Pegli, and Rapallo, had been opened during the six years of Burt's administration. Work had also been extended to some of the little villages and suburbs around the larger centers, some being supplied by theological students. The mission in Geneva (Switzerland) had been extended to Montreux, Vevey, and Lausanne. The prejudice against renting buildings to Protestants for worship services continued to be strong. Burt emphasized the handicap imposed by having to use small, often inconveniently located halls. In too many cases the only available quarters were on "unfrequented streets or hidden away in the back part of a building or up stairs." The meager progress in Modena and Naples—founded within three years of the beginning of the mission—was largely because of small, inadequate halls. The new building in Rome, designed to accommodate the church, theological school, college, Publishing House, and residences, was dedicated on September 20, 1895.³¹¹

TWENTY-THREE YEARS OF THE ITALY MISSION

The report in general for 1895 listed 1,179 members in full connection, 760 probationers; twenty native ordained preachers; nine native unordained preachers; eleven native teachers; twenty-four other helpers; two Bible women; twelve day schools with 398 pupils; twenty-seven Sunday schools with 816 pupils; eleven churches and chapels; and twenty-five halls and other places of worship.

* Appointments for 1895 were: Adria, to be supplied; Bari, to be supplied; Bologna, Crisanzio Bambini; Dovadola, to be supplied; Florence, Vittorio Bani; Forli and Faenza, Federico Cruciani; Foggia, Domenico Polsinelli; Genoa, Pietro Tagliatela; Geneva Circuit, Edoardo Tourn; Milan: First Church, Edoardo Stasio; Second Church, Vincenzo Nitti; Third Church, to be supplied; Modena Circuit, Aristide Frizziero; Naples, Constantino Tollis; Palermo, to be supplied; Pavia, Giuseppe Vitale; Pegli Circuit, Antonio Beltrami; Perugia, to be supplied; Pisa, Bernardo Bracchetto; Pontedera, to be supplied; Rapallo and Melfi, to be supplied; Rome: First Church, Felice Dardi; Second Church, E. E. Powell; Third Church, to be supplied; San Marzano Circuit, Paolo Gay; Terni, Augusto Manini; Turin, Giovanni Pons; Venice, Angelo Penninetti; Venosa, to be supplied.—Gen'l Minutes, Fall, 1895, p. 370.

In Rome and Turin where buildings adequate for the maintenance of all features of a parish program had been provided the work really took root and flourished. In Bologna, Venice, Foggia, and Pisa, where suitable, well-located halls had been procured, not only was the record of evangelism excellent but Sunday schools, Epworth Leagues, and day schools and night schools flourished and bore fruit.³¹²

Work had been begun and abandoned in many places during the twenty-three years the mission had been in existence. One such place was Asti. In his first annual report as Presiding Elder of Milan District, in 1887, Burt revealed the hopelessness of the situation there. The first members were formerly Plymouth Brethren. In 1885 one man was added to the Church, and he was the only one during six years of work. The "congregation" consisted of four to eight persons. An important reason for many failures was the instability of some of the preachers. For seventeen of the twenty-three years a mistaken policy had governed appointments. While the pathetic record must be charged to the Superintendent's error of judgment, it must also be said that the erroneous policy—so far as we have been able to discover from the available records—was never seriously called in question by the Missionary Secretaries or by any of the Bishops who presided over the Conferences.

Instability also marked the work of Bible women and the day schools—although not to the same extent as the preaching appointees—and for the same reason. In the early years many of the Bible women were wives of the ex-priests who were given appointments. While twelve day schools were reported in 1895, the number had varied from year to year. Continuance depended upon the availability of funds for payment of teachers and for textbooks. Self-support of schools and of churches could not be expected because of recurring depressions and unemployment. By 1895 the increasing numbers of young men trained in the theological school or under the supervision of mature pastors were adding to the stability of all phases of the missionary program.

It should be emphasized, however, that very many of the Italian preachers, including ex-priests, were men of great ability and faith. Of those in the Conference in 1895, two—Edoardo Stasio and Crisanzio Bambini—had given twenty years of steadfast service. Emilio Borelli and Enrico Borelli, both of whom died in the 1890's, had contributed almost as many years. Seven others had been with the mission between ten and fifteen years. Some of those who had been troublesome had been insincere and unreliable; others had been Protestant in spirit but intellectually incompatible with the Methodists. Both Burt and Stackpole on the other hand believed in the most rigid adherence to Methodist doctrines and customs. The Wesleyan missionary, Piggott, had found many sincere, courageous, and highly qualified ex-priests offering him their services, and it was to his sorrow that his Church had restrained him from training and utilizing the great reserve of potential preachers.

It should also be noted that with Italy the Missionary Society had been unable to follow its practice with Germany and Scandinavia of sending as missionaries men who were natives of those countries. There was no mission to the Italian people in the United States to draw upon for leadership. Those who were sent to Italy were Americans of mostly Anglo-Saxon background, unfamiliar with the Italian language and customs, and lacking the advantage of personal conversion from the entrenched Church.

Burt and Stackpole were keenly distressed by the "great spiritual lacuna" Piggott always felt existed in the Italian work—"the absence of those times of powerful religious awakening, of special effusions of the Spirit of God, recounted in the story of other Missions." A partial cause for this undoubtedly lay in the fact that the converts had considered themselves already Christians and had led moral lives under their former faith before throwing off its errors in favor of a more spiritual faith. The difficulties in the way of evangelistic efforts could not be better stated than they were by Piggott:

It is not all true that is currently said . . . of the rupture of the Italian mind from the Roman faith. Nothing, indeed, can be more extreme than the vituperation and ridicule which . . . are poured upon the Pope and the priesthood; but the Italians distinguish, or try to distinguish, between Popery as a system of religion and the men who administer and abuse it. The Roman Catholic faith is still the faith of their ancestors, the faith associated with all the past glories of their land in art, science, and story. It is, in fact, the only Christian faith which the mass of the people recognize. . . . The long political agony is doing something—strengthening national character, consolidating new institutions—and, seeing how wisely the providence of God is ruling the destinies of the nation, one's hope is strong that the baptisms of the Spirit will follow.²¹³

CENTRAL COUNCIL OF EUROPE

The 1893 Italy Conference appointed a committee to take up with other Conferences the question "of forming some kind of union or central Conference in Europe." The inquiry resulted in the organization of the "Central Council of the Conferences and Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Europe." The Council held its first session in Berlin, April 21-26, 1895. Delegates were present from Bulgaria, Denmark, Finland, Italy, North and South Germany, Norway, Sweden, and Switzerland. The Council concerned itself principally with the relations of Methodism in Europe to the State Churches, problems involved in property holding in the various countries, the press, and other topics of common interest. The General Missionary Committee was memorialized to establish a mission in France,* the Church

* In the 1840's the Missionary Society exhibited interest in the spiritual welfare of France, and constantly watched for an opportunity to extend Methodism into that land. In 1847 it was noted

Extension Committee to extend its operations to Europe, and the General Conference to establish an episcopal residence in Europe. It was decided to make the Council a permanent organization, to meet quadrennially preceding the meeting of General Conference.³¹⁴ that France was abandoning her "frivolous skepticism." The Wesleyans had entered France many years before but their work was small. When in 1852 their labors were organized into an independent French Methodist Conference in connection with English Methodism under the Rev. Charles Cook, a Wesleyan, an opportunity was seen to extend the work through financial aid. The General Missionary Committee at its 1852 meeting voted to make an appropriation of $2,500. for the free use of the French Conference. The next year the sum was doubled. For some years the appropriation was continued. For a few years, also, an appropriation was made to the Irish Wesleyan Conference.

REFERENCES AND NOTES

BIBLIOGRAPHY

References and Notes

I

CHANGING STRUCTURE OF AMERICAN SOCIETY

1. Statistical Abstract of the United States, First Number, 1878, p. 150; U. S. Eleventh Census, Population, Part I, p. xi.
2. Daniel Dorchester, Christianity in the United States from the First Settlement down to the Present Time, p. 735; Gerald Shaughnessy, Has the Immigrant Kept the Faith? A Study of Immigration and Catholic Growth in the United States, 1790-1920, p. 134.
3. H. K. Carroll, The Religious Forces of the United States, Enumerated, Classified, and Described; Returns for 1900 and 1910 Compared With the Government Census of 1890; Condition and Characteristics of Christianity in the United States, pp. xxxiii, xxxiv.
4. Ibid., pp. xxxviii, xl, liv, 229.
5. Sixty-eighth Annual Report of the Missionary Society (1886), p. 36. Hereafter this title will be abbreviated.
6. Kendrick C. Babcock, The Scandinavian Element in the United States, University of Illinois Studies in the Social Sciences, III (1914), 3 (September), 8.
7. Prescott F. Hall, Immigration and Its Effects Upon the United States, pp. 6 f.; Richmond Mayo-Smith, Emigration and Immigration, A Study in Social Science, pp. 42 f.; Allan Nevins, The Emergence of Modern America, 1865-1878, p. 49; Ellis Paxson Oberholtzer, A History of the United States Since the Civil War, I, 247; Reports of the Immigration Commission, III, Statistical Review of Immigration, 1820-1910, Distribution of Immigrants, 1850-1900, pp. 22 ff.
8. John R. Commons, Races and Immigrants in America, pp. 66 f.; P. F. Hall, op. cit., pp. 27 ff.
9. George M. Stephenson, A History of American Immigration, 1820-1924, pp. 42 f., 90, 91.
10. U. S. Twelfth Census, Population, Part I, p. clxx; George T. Flom, "The Scandinavian Factor in the American Population," Iowa Journal of History and Politics, III (1905), 1 (January), 57, 71.
11. Marcus Lee Hansen, The Immigrant in American History, p. 168; P. F. Hall, op. cit., pp. 37, 38.
12. Statistical Abstract of the United States, Twenty-fourth Number, 1901, p. 416; P. F. Hall, op. cit., pp. 54 ff., 71, 81.
13. M. L. Hansen, op. cit., pp. 170, 188 f.; Arthur Meier Schlesinger, The Rise of the City, 1878-1898, p. 74; Frank Julian Warne, The Immigrant Invasion, pp. 2 f.; U. S. Bureau of the Census, A Century of Population Growth from the First Census of the United States to the Twelfth, 1790-1900, p. 226.
14. Statistical View of the United States . . . Being a Compendium of the Seventh Census . . ., p. 163.
15. Unidentified eastern journal of June, 1854, as quoted in Dan E. Clark, "The Western Movement in the Upper Mississippi Valley During the Fifties," Proceedings of the Mississippi Valley Historical Association, 1913-14, p. 216.
16. U. S. Eighth Census, Population, pp. iv, vi, 104, 604.

17. As quoted by Reuben Gold Thwaites, Wisconsin, The Americanization of a French Settlement, p. 291.
18. R. G. Thwaites, op. cit., p. 292.
19. U. S. Ninth Census, I, Population, 3; William Watts Folwell, Minnesota, The North Star State, p. 270.
20. John Bach McMaster, A History of the People of the United States, From the Revolution to the Civil War, VIII, ch. XCII.
21. Herald of Freedom, March 10, 1855, as cited in Charles Robinson, The Kansas Conflict, pp. 91 f.; see also pp. 22 f.; Wallace Elden Miller, The Peopling of Kansas, p. 50; J. B. McMaster, op. cit., VIII, 219.
22. W. E. Miller, op. cit., pp. 52 ff., 60.
23. J. B. McMaster, op. cit., VIII, 107, 108.
24. Ernest L. Bogart and Donald L. Kemmerer, Economic History of the American People, p. 438.
25. E. P. Oberholtzer, op. cit., I, 278.
26. U. S. Ninth Census, I, Population, 3.
27. Osgood Hardy, "Agricultural Changes in California, 1860-1900," Proceedings of the Pacific Coast Branch of the American Historical Association, 1929, pp. 216-30.
28. U. S. Eighth Census, Population, p. iv; U. S. Ninth Census, I, Population, 3.
29. U. S. Eighth Census, Population, p. iv; U. S. Tenth Census, Population, Part II, p. 3; Compendium of the Eleventh Census, 1890, Part III, pp. 8, 9; U. S. Twelfth Census, Population, Part II, p. xx.
30. Marcus L. Hansen, "Official Encouragement of Immigration to Iowa," Iowa Journal of History and Politics, XIX (1921), 2 (April), 164; K. C. Babcock, op. cit., III (1914), 3 (September), 80 f.
31. Sixty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1880), p. 189.
32. U. S. Eleventh Census, Population, Part I, p. 2; Eleventh Census as quoted in Winfred Ernest Garrison, The March of Faith, The Story of Religion in America Since 1865, p. 126.
33. Mary Roberts Coolidge, Chinese Immigration, pp. 16, 17, 20 f., 23; Statistical View of the United States, . . . Being a Compendium of the Seventh Census . . ., pp. 122 f.
34. M. E. Willing, letter, Christian Advocate and Journal, XXVII (1852), 26 (June 24), 102 f.
35. M. R. Coolidge, op. cit., pp. 254 f.
36. A. Nevins, op. cit., pp. 54 f.
37. M. R. Coolidge, op. cit., p. 258.
38. G. M. Stephenson, op. cit., pp. 261 f.
39. Martin C. Briggs, address, Gospel in All Lands, January, 1885, p. 24; U. S. Eleventh Census, Population, Part I, p. cxxvi, cf. p. 401.
40. Yamoto Ichihashi, Japanese in the United States: A Critical Study of the Problems of the Japanese Immigrants and their Children, pp. 53 f.; H. A. Millis, The Japanese Problem in the United States . . ., pp. 2 f.; Sidney L. Gulick, The American Japanese Problem, A Study of the Racial Relations of the East and the West, p. 10; U. S. Eleventh Census, Population, Part I, p. 401.
41. Y. Ichihashi, op. cit., pp. 66 f., 229 f.; H. A. Millis, op. cit., pp. 5, 11 f.
42. Compendium of the Eleventh Census, 1890, Part II, p. 603.
43. Christian Advocate and Journal, XXVII (1852), 34 (Aug. 19), 134; ibid., 40 (Sept. 30), 158.
44. Thirty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1854), p. 18.
45. Sixty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1879), p. 70.
46. D. Dorchester, op. cit., pp. 622 f.
47. Sixth Annual Report, Board of Managers, Woman's Home Missionary Society (1886-87), p. 29. Hereafter this title will be abbreviated.
48. Report of the Industrial Commission, XV, 290, 291, as quoted in P. F. Hall, op. cit., p. 181.
49. U. S. Eleventh Census, Statistics of Churches, p. 413.

50. A. Nevins, op. cit., pp. 31, 32; Carroll D. Wright, The Industrial Evolution of the United States, pp. 133 f., 153; E. L. Bogart and D. L. Kemmerer, op. cit., pp. 466 f.
51. Katharine Coman, The Industrial History of the United States, pp. 260 f., 262 f., 303 f.; Victor S. Clark, History of Manufactures in the United States, II, 154 ff.
52. Edward Atkinson, as quoted by Arthur Meier Schlesinger, Political and Social Growth of the American People, 1865-1940, p. 42.
53. Mary [R.] Beard, A Short History of the American Labor Movement, pp. 62 ff., 72 ff.
54. George E. McNeill, Ed., The Labor Movement: The Problem of To-Day, pp. 103, 107 f., 116 f., 121; C. D. Wright, op. cit., p. 242.
55. J. B. McMaster, op. cit., VIII, 96, 97, 99.
56. C. D. Wright, op. cit., p. 218.
57. C. D. Wright, as quoted by Washington Gladden, Applied Christianity: Moral Aspects of Social Questions, p. 120.
58. W. Gladden, op. cit., p. 121.
59. G. E. McNeill, Ed., op. cit., p. 147; M. [R.] Beard, op. cit., p. 81; A. Nevins, op. cit., pp. 293 ff., 299 ff.
60. William Godwin Moody, Land and Labor in the United States, pp. 146 f., 147.
61. K. Coman, op. cit., p. 361; E. L. Bogart and D. L. Kemmerer, op. cit., p. 517; C. D. Wright, op. cit., pp. 245 ff., 253 ff.; Selig Perlman, A History of Trade Unionism in the United States, pp. 57, 68, 81, 114, 118; M. [R.] Beard, op. cit., pp. 81 f.
62. Helen L. [Summer] Woodbury, History of Women in Industry in the United States, pp. 11, 17, 19; Edith Abbott, Women in Industry; A Study in American Economic History, p. 81.
63. Helen Campbell, Women Wage-Earners: Their Past, Their Present, and Their Future, p. 196.
64. E. Abbott, op. cit., pp. 305 f., 309 f., based on the report, "Employees and Wages," of Davis R. Dewey for the Twelfth Census. Chapters IV and XII of Abbott's book contain an extensive study of women's wages.
65. Compendium of the Tenth Census, 1880, Part II, pp. 1343, 1352.
66. Twelfth Annual Report of the Bureau of Statistics of Labor of Massachusetts, 1881, p. 466.
67. Tenth Annual Report of the Bureau of Statistics of Labor of Ohio, 1886, p. 43; Florence Kelley, Our Toiling Children, pp. 5 f.; V. S. Clark, op. cit., II, 178.
68. Second Annual Report of the Factory Inspectors of the State of New York, 1887, p. 29.
69. Samuel P. Orth, The Armies of Labor, A Chronicle of the Organized Wage-Earners, p. 8.
70. Henry Scott Holland, "Property and Personality," in, no Ed., Property, Its Duties and Rights Historically, Philosophically and Religiously Regarded, Essays by Various Writers, pp. 182 ff.; Arnold Toynbee, Lectures on the Industrial Revolution of the Eighteenth Century in England . . ., p. 197; W. Gladden, op. cit., pp. 158 f.; Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, Department of Research and Education, Our Economic Life In the Light of Christian Ideals, pp. 37 f.
71. E. L. Bogart and D. L. Kemmerer, op. cit., p. 515; R. Whately Cook Taylor, The Modern Factory System, pp. 437 f.; W. Gladden, op. cit., pp. 158 f.; Samuel Lane Loomis, Modern Cities and Their Religious Problems, p. 95.
72. W. Gladden, op. cit., p. 103.
73. E. L. Bogart and D. L. Kemmerer, op. cit., pp. 447 f., 449 f.; Harold Underwood Faulkner, American Economic History, pp. 423 ff.; Solon Justus Buck, The Granger Movement, A Study of Agricultural Organization and Its Political, Economic and Social Manifestations, 1870-1880, pp. 20 ff.; A. Nevins, op. cit., pp. 160, 167.
74. A. Nevins, op. cit., p. 155; E. L. Bogart and D. L. Kemmerer, op. cit., p. 440.
75. A. Nevins, op. cit., pp. 159 f., 165 f.; James Truslow Adams, The Epic of America, pp. 317 f.; E. L. Bogart and D. L. Kemmerer, op. cit., pp. 440, 447; H. U. Faulkner, op. cit., p. 423.

76. Minutes of the Board of Managers of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, XIII, 272 f., hereafter referred to as Minutes, B. M.

77. Vernon L. Parrington, Main Currents in American Thought, III, The Beginnings of Critical Realism in America, 260.

78. Hamlin Garland, A Son of the Middle Border, pp. 364, 365.

79. W. G. Moody, op. cit., pp. 32 f.

80. S. J. Buck, op. cit., p. 28; W. G. Moody, op. cit., p. 56; [W. G. Moody,] "The Bonanza Farms of the West," Atlantic Monthly . . . , XLV (1880), 267 (January), 42.

81. U. S. Twelfth Census, V, Agriculture, Part I, xxi, xlv-xlvi, cxxv, 688; Charles Dudley Warner, Studies in the South and West with Comments on Canada, pp. 124 f.; H. U. Faulkner, op. cit., p. 424; W. G. Moody, op. cit., pp. 41, 99 ff.; S. J. Buck, op. cit., pp. 9 ff.

82. W. G. Moody, op. cit., p. 56; S. J. Buck, op. cit., p. 17.

83. H. U. Faulkner, op. cit., p. 424; S. J. Buck, op. cit., pp. 20 f.; K. Coman, op. cit., pp. 306 f.

84. U. S. Eleventh Census, Population, Part I, pp. lxxviii ff.; Frederick H. Fowler, "Abandoned Farms," in Cyclopedia of American Agriculture . . . , L. H. Bailey, Ed., IV, 102 ff.; Wilbert L. Anderson, The Country Town, A Study of Rural Evolution, ch. III.

85. A. M. Schlesinger, The Rise of the City, 1878-1898, pp. 57, 67; Josiah Strong, The New Era or the Coming Kingdom, pp. 166 f.

86. J. Strong, op. cit., pp. 168 f.

87. H. U. Faulkner, op. cit., p. 429; W. G. Moody, op. cit., pp. 84 f.

88. William Bennett Bizzell, Farm Tenantry in the United States . . . , p. 119; E. L. Bogart and D. L. Kemmerer, op. cit., p. 462; U. S. Tenth Census, Agriculture, pp. 28-29; U. S. Twelfth Census, V, Agriculture, Part I, lxxvii.

89. Cf. Farm Tenancy, Report of the President's Committee, p. 3.

90. W. B. Bizzell, op. cit., pp. 114 f.

91. A. M. Schlesinger, The Rise of the City, 1878-1898, pp. 79 ff. Schlesinger designates the eighties as the years in which the city became "a controlling factor," but actually the process of urbanization began decades earlier.

92. U. S. Bureau of the Census, A Century of Population Growth . . . , p. 15.

93. U. S. Eleventh Census, Population, Part I, p. lxxvii.

94. A. M. Schlesinger, The Rise of the City, 1878-1898, p. 64.

95. Adna Ferrin Weber, The Growth of Cities in the Nineteenth Century, A Study in Statistics, p. 28.

96. P. F. Hall, op. cit., p. 170.

97. J. B. McMaster, op. cit., VIII, 68.

98. The Sun, New York City, November 29, 1903, as cited in J. R. Commons, Races and Immigrants in America, p. 165.

99. U. S. Tenth Census, Population, Part II, p. 470.

100. Based on Seventh Special Report of the Commissioner of Labor, 1894, in P. F. Hall, op. cit., pp. 171 f.

101. J. R. Commons, op. cit., pp. 160 f.

102. Robert Hunter, Poverty, p. 32.

103. K. Coman, op. cit., pp. 371 f.; "Contract Labor and Induced and Assisted Immigration," in Abstracts of Reports of the Immigration Commission . . . , II, 375-86.

104. A. M. Schesinger, The Rise of the City, 1878-1898, p. 109.

105. Cf. Charles D. Kellogg, "Child Life in City and Country," Journal of Social Science . . . , XXI (September, 1886), 207-23.

106. W. M. F. Round, "Immigration and Crime," Forum, VIII (December, 1889), 428; Sydney G. Fisher, "Immigration and Crime," Appletons' Popular Science Monthly, XLIX (1896), 625 ff.; cf. "Immigration and Crime," in Abstracts of Reports of the Immigration Commission . . . , II, 163-221.

107. J. Strong, op. cit., p. 179.

108. U. S. Tenth Census, XXI, Report on the Defective, Dependent, and Delinquent Classes of the Population of the United States . . . , pp. liv f.

109. James Ford Rhodes, History of the United States from the Compromise of 1850 . . ., III, 64; J. B. McMaster, op. cit., VIII, 283; E. L. Bogart and D. L. Kemmerer, op. cit., p. 436.
110. Statistical Abstract of the United States, Eighteenth Number, 1895, pp. 342-43.
111. Charles A. and Mary R. Beard, The Rise of American Civilization, II, 383 f.; Abel Stevens, Supplementary History of American Methodism . . ., pp. 139 f.
112. E. L. Bogart and D. L. Kemmerer, op. cit., p. 764; R. Hunter, op. cit., pp. 61 ff.; Charles B. Spahr, An Essay on The Present Distribution of Wealth in the United States, pp. 128 f.
113. John R. Commons, Social Reform and the Church, p. 6.
114. J. S. Pike, in Tribune, New York City, June 5, 1860, p. 6.
115. E. P. Oberholtzer, op. cit., I, 268 ff.; A. Nevins, op. cit., p. 73.
116. Daniel Dorchester, "The City as a Peril," in Evangelical Alliance for the United States of America, National Perils and Opportunities, p. 23.
117. Ibid., p. 25; J. F. Rhodes, op. cit., VI, 393 ff.; A. Nevins, op. cit., pp. 178 ff., 185 ff.; Delos F. Wilcox, The American City: A Problem in Democracy, p. 75; Burton J. Hendrick, The Age of Big Business: A Chronicle of the Captains of Industry, pp. 125 f.
118. Charles R. Tuttle, An Illustrated History of the State of Wisconsin . . ., pp. 346 f., 356 f.; "Editor's Table," Harper's Magazine, XV (December, 1853), 125-28; ibid., XXII (December, 1860), 119; William Warren Sweet, Methodism in American History, pp. 319 f.
119. H. von Holst, The Constitutional and Political History of the United States, IV, 222.
120. V. L. Parrington, op. cit., III, 30.
121. Henry Adams, The Education of Henry Adams, pp. 271 f.
122. Henry Steele Commager, The American Mind, An Interpretation of American Thought and Character Since the 1880's, p. 317.
123. William Jewett Tucker, My Generation, An Autobiographical Interpretation, pp. 76 f.
124. James D. Richardson, Comp., A Compilation of the Messages and Papers of the Presidents, V, 3887.
125. John Adams, letter, Nov. 15, 1813, in Thomas Jefferson, The Writings of Thomas Jefferson, H. A. Washington, Ed., VI, 258.
126. Albert K. Weinberg, Manifest Destiny, A Study of Nationalist Expansionism in American History, p. 460.
127. Tyler Dennett, Americans in Eastern Asia . . ., p. 99; Samuel Flagg Bemis, A Diplomatic History of the United States, p. 345; Harold Underwood Faulkner, American Political and Social History, p. 506; Thomas A. Bailey, A Diplomatic History of the American People, pp. 324 ff.
128. J. D. Richardson, Comp., op. cit., II, 2066 f.; T. A. Bailey, op. cit., pp. 305 f.; H. U. Faulkner, American Political and Social History, p. 506.
129. J. D. Richardson, Comp., op. cit., II, 1527; A. K. Weinberg, op. cit., p. 161.
130. T. Dennett, op. cit., p. 272; S. F. Bemis, op. cit., p. 355; T. A. Bailey, op. cit., p. 329; John Bassett Moore, The Principles of American Diplomacy, pp. 186 f.
131. President James Buchanan, as quoted by James Morton Callahan, Cuba and International Relations, A Historical Study in American Diplomacy, pp. 304 f.; A. K. Weinberg, op. cit., p. 190; S. F. Bemis, op. cit., p. 356.
132. Peter Parker, as quoted by T. Dennett, op. cit., p. 286; see also p. 290.
133. Frederic Bancroft, The Life of William H. Seward, II, 470 ff.
134. Ibid., pp. 474-91; S. F. Bemis, op. cit., pp. 400 ff.
135. Merle Curti, The Growth of American Thought, pp. 484 f.
136. John Bassett Moore, A Digest of International Law . . ., I, 432.
137. A. K. Weinberg, op. cit., pp. 252 f.; S. F. Bemis, op. cit., p. 462.
138. Allan Nevins and Henry Steele Commager, America, The Story of a Free People, p. 418.
139. A. T. Mahan, Armaments and Arbitration, or the Place of Force in the Inter-

- national Relations of States*, p. 117. See also, "A Twentieth Century Outlook" in A. T. Mahan, The Interest of America in Sea Power, Present and Future, pp. 217 ff.
140. Congressional Record (III, Part I), 56th Congress, 1st session, p. 711.
141. W. F. Taylor, address, Gospel in All Lands, January, 1885, p. 22.
142. Tract, Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, 1878.
143. Josiah Strong, Our Country: Its Possible Future and Its Present Crisis, p. 175.

II

A CHANGING CHURCH IN A CHANGED SOCIETY

1. Episcopal Address, in "Journal of the General Conference, 1852," pp. 184 f. in G. C. Journals, III.
2. Edmund S. Janes, address, in G. C. Journal, 1868, Appendix, p. 385.
3. Pastoral Address, in G. C. Journal, 1872, p. 444.
4. Minutes, New Jersey Conference, 1846, p. 3; ibid., 1856, p. 3; Minutes, Oneida Conference, 1858, p. [13]; Minutes, Philadelphia Conference, 1857, pp. 3, 4; ibid., 1867, p. 18; Minutes, Illinois Conference, 1859, pp. 9 ff.
5. Stephen Olin, The Works of Stephen Olin, D.D., LL.D., Late President of the Wesleyan University, II, 422 f.
6. Minutes, New Jersey Conference, 1855, pp. 6 ff.; Minutes, Philadelphia Conference, 1862, p. 18.
7. Minutes, Indiana Conference, 1859-60, pp. 32, 33; ibid., 1865, pp. 32, 33.
8. Minutes, B. M., VIII, 120 f.; Chauncey Hobart, History of Methodism in Minnesota, p. 166.
9. John M'Clintock to Dallas D. Lore, March 24, 1842.
10. Elijah Hedding, A Discourse on the Administration of Discipline, p. 75. See also, George R. Crooks, The Life of Bishop Matthew Simpson of the Methodist Episcopal Church, p. 111.
11. Abel Stevens, A Compendious History of American Methodism, pp. 552 f.; Francis I. Moats, "The Rise of Methodism in the Middle West," pamphlet, reprinted from the Mississippi Valley Historical Review, XV (1928), 1 (June), 88.
12. Abel Stevens, "The Priesthood of the People," Methodist Quarterly Review, LV (January, 1873), 56 f.
13. "Journal of the General Conference, 1852," pp. 90, Appendix, 148, and "Journal of the General Conference, 1856," pp. 165, Appendix, 289 ff., in G. C. Journals, III; G. C. Journal, 1860, Appendix, p. 319.
14. Ibid., pp. 278, 290; ibid., 1864, Appendix, pp. 407 ff.
15. Ibid., 1864, Appendix, p. 412.
16. Ibid., 1868, p. 275.
17. Ibid., 1872, pp. 39 ff.
18. Ibid., 1876, p. 334; ibid., 1880, pp. 275 f., 310 f., 317; ibid., 1884, pp. 260 f.; ibid., 1888, pp. 472 f.; ibid., 1896, pp. 351 ff.
19. Episcopal Address, in "Journal of the General Conference, 1852," p. 186, in G. C. Journals, III.
20. John Scripps, "Early Methodism in the Far West," Western Christian Advocate, IX (Jan. 20, 1843), 157.
21. George Peck, Our Country: Its Trial and Triumph. A Series of Discourses Suggested by the Varying Events of the War for the Union, pp. 93 f.
22. "Journal of the General Conference, 1856," p. 153, and "Journal of the General Conference, 1848," p. 173, in G. C. Journals, III.
23. G. C. Journal, 1864, Appendix, p. 416.
24. Quoted by George Prentice, The Life of Gilbert Haven . . . Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, p. 142.
25. "City Evangelization," Christian Advocate, XLI (1866), 6 (Feb. 8), 44.
26. William Warren Sweet, Methodism in American History, p. 338.

27. J. M. Thoburn, My Missionary Apprenticeship, p. 112.
28. U. S. Eleventh Census, Statistics of Churches, p. xxi; Thirty-Fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1852), p. 31; Christian Advocate, XLVIII (1873), 2 (Jan. 9), 13.
29. Pastoral Address, in "Journal of the General Conference, 1852," pp. 159 f., in G. C. Journals, III.
30. Christian Advocate, XLIII (1868), 46 (Nov. 12), 362; G. C. Journal, 1868, Appendix, p. 586.
31. W. W. Sweet, op. cit., pp. 335 f.
32. John F. Hurst, address, in the New York Observer, as paraphrased in Gospel in All Lands, January, 1888, p. 28.
33. Methodist Review, LXXIII (November-December, 1891), 923.
34. Gilbert Haven, letter, in Zion's Herald as paraphrased by G. Prentice, op. cit., p. 238.
35. Alfred Brunson, A Western Pioneer: or, Incidents of the Life and Times of Rev. Alfred Brunson . . ., II, 282 f.
36. William Warren Sweet, The Methodist Episcopal Church and the Civil War, pp. 38 f.
37. Editorial, Christian Advocate and Journal, XXX (1855), 13 (March 29), 50; ibid., 32 (Aug. 9), 126; ibid., 33 (Aug. 16), 130; ibid., 34 (Aug. 23), 134. For Bond's position see also ibid., XXVIII (1853), 50 (Dec. 15), 198; ibid., XXX (1855), 3 (Jan. 18), 10; ibid., 4 (Jan. 25), 14; ibid., 14 (April 5), 54.
38. G. C. Journal, 1860, pp. 319, Appendix, 425 f.
39. Ibid., pp. 246, 261 f., 277, Appendix, 408 ff.; Discipline, 1856, p. 79.
40. Register of the Baltimore Annual Conference . . ., 1861, pp. 19 ff., 44 ff.; ibid., 1862, pp. 8 f., 22 f., 41; Charles J. Baker, History of the Origin, Rise, and Progress of the Independent Methodist Churches of Baltimore, pp. 3 et seq.; W. W. Sweet, op. cit., pp. 40, 47 f.
41. W. W. Sweet, Methodism in American History, pp. 284 ff.; Winfred Ernest Garrison, The March of Faith, The Story of Religion in America Since 1865, p. 19.
42. Daniel Dorchester, Christianity in the United States From the First Settlement Down to the Present Time, pp. 447 f.
43. Discipline, 1848, p. 21.
44. "Journal of the General Conference, 1848," pp. 174 f., in G. C. Journals, III.
45. John Bach McMaster, A History of the People of the United States, from the Revolution to the Civil War, VIII, 127.
46. G. C. Journal, 1868, p. 248; Henry Wheeler, "Relations of the Methodist Episcopal Church to the Cause of Temperance," Methodist Quarterly Review, LVIII (October, 1876), 639 ff.; from an 1873 brewers' journal, quoted in Andrew Landale Drummond, Story of American Protestantism, p. 320.
47. Frances E. Willard, The Autobiography of an American Woman: Glimpses of Fifty Years, pp. xvi, 698; Ernest Hurst Cherrington, Ed., Standard Encyclopedia of the Alcohol Problem, VI, 2891 ff.
48. G. C. Journal, 1872, pp. 383 f.; ibid., 1876, pp. 337 f.; ibid., 1880, pp. 397, 399.
49. Ibid., 1880, p. 397; ibid., 1884, p. 392; ibid., 1892, p. 494.
50. J. W. M. [probably John W. Mendenhall], "The Prohibition Movement," Methodist Review, LXVII (March, 1885), 280.
51. G. C. Journal, 1892, pp. 537, Appendix, 494 f.; ibid., 1884, p. 171; Christian Advocate, 101 (1926), 36 (Sept. 9), 1226, 1230.
52. G. C. Journal, 1884, pp. 238 f., Appendix, 392.
53. Samuel Warren Dike, "Some Aspects of the Divorce Question," reprinted from The Princeton Review, March, 1884, pp. 169 f.
54. Sydney G. Fisher, The Cause of the Increase of Divorce, pp. 19 f.; Arthur Meier Schlesinger, The Rise of the City, 1878-1898, p. 156.
55. "Journal of the General Conference, 1856," pp. 118 f., in G. C. Journals, III; G. C. Journal, 1860, pp. 34, 200; ibid., 1868, pp. 353 f.; ibid., 1872, pp. 141, 177; ibid., 1876, pp. 101, 155, 190.
56. Ibid., 1884, pp. 45, 279 f., Appendix, 331 ff.

57. Ibid., 1888, p. 62; Richard Wheatley, "The Alleged Decay of the Family," Methodist Review, LXIX (November, 1887), 876, 877.

58. Peter Cartwright, Autobiography of Peter Cartwright, the Backwoods Preacher, W. P. Strickland, Ed., pp. 74 f.; Episcopal Address, in "Journal of the General Conference, 1852," Appendix, p. 186, in G. C. Journals, III.

59. Thomas A. Morris, in Western Christian Advocate, as quoted by Hiram Mattison, Popular Amusements: An Appeal to Methodists in Regard to the Evils of Card-Playing, Billiards, Dancing, Theater-Going, Etc., p. 54.

60. C. Howard Hopkins, History of the Y.M.C.A. in North America, p. 199; H. Mattison, op. cit., pp. 65 f.

61. G. C. Journal, 1872, pp. 379 f.

62. Daily Christian Advocate, May 30, 1872, p. 2; ibid., June 3, pp. 2 f.

63. George P. Mains, "Our Special Legislation on Amusements: Honest Doubt As to Its Wisdom," Methodist Review, LXXIV (May, 1892), 375 ff.

64. J. B. McMaster, op. cit., VIII, 74; Christian Advocate and Journal, XXX (1855), 35 (Aug. 30), 138.

65. Arthur T. Pierson, address, in the New York Observer, as quoted in Gospel in All Lands, January, 1888, p. 29.

66. George P. Mains, "The Church and the City," Methodist Review, LXXVI (March-April, 1894), 229 f. See also, D. H. Ela, "Christianity's Next Problem," Part II, ibid., LXVIII (September, 1886), 770 f.

67. Samuel Lane Loomis, Modern Cities and Their Religious Problems, p. 66.

68. Sermon, as quoted in G. Prentice, op. cit., p. 296.

69. Episcopal Address, in G. C. Journal, 1888, pp. 57 f.

70. A. M. Schlesinger, op. cit., p. 331.

71. John R. Commons, Social Reform and the Church, p. 40; Henry F. May, Protestant Churches and Industrial America, p. 56.

72. "Sentimental Sociology," Methodist Review, LXX (January, 1888), 139.

73. Episcopal Address, in G. C. Journal, 1888, pp. 57 f.

74. Carroll D. Wright, "The Growth and Purposes of Bureaus of Statistics of Labor," Journal of Social Science . . . , XXV (December, 1888), 3; Aaron Ignatius Abell, The Urban Impact on American Protestantism, 1865-1900, p. 21.

75. G. C. Journal, 1884, p. 135; "The Elevation of Working-men," Christian Advocate, LV (1880), 51 (Dec. 16), 801.

76. Charles Howard Hopkins, The Rise of the Social Gospel in American Protestantism, 1865-1915, pp. 86 f.

77. Christian Advocate, XLIV (1869), 3 (Jan. 21), 20.

78. Washington Gladden, Working People and Their Employers, p. 36.

79. Terence V. Powderly, Thirty Years of Labor, as quoted by H. F. May, op. cit., p. 217.

80. Josiah Strong, The New Era or the Coming Kingdom, p. 208.

81. Washington Gladden, Applied Christianity: Moral Aspects of Social Questions, pp. 149 ff.

82. American Christian Commission, Document No. 1, pp. 25 ff.

83. Zion's Herald, May 27, 1891, p. 174.

84. Minutes, New York Conference, 1896, pp. 78 f.; ibid., 1897, p. 74.

85. Minutes, Rock River Conference, 1895, p. 14.

86. G. C. Journal, 1892, Appendix II, pp. 460 f.; Discipline, 1892, p. 183.

87. George P. Mains, address, in Aggressive Methodism, V (1893), 12 (December), 5.

88. Alfred Brunson, "Proposed New Articles of Religion," Methodist Review, LIV (April, 1872), 231.

89. William Fraser McDowell, Creative Men, Our Fathers and Brethren, p. 64.

90. Percy Bunting, "Lines of Development and Steps Towards Reunion in British Methodism," in George Eayrs, W. J. Townsend, and H. B. Workman, Eds., A New History of Methodism, II, 486 f.

91. Henry C. Sheldon, "Changes in Theology Among American Methodists," American Journal of Theology, X (January, 1906), 38 f.

92. "A 'New Orthodoxy,'" Methodist Review, LXVIII (May, 1886), 449.
93. H. C. Sheldon, op. cit., pp. 41 f.
94. Christian Advocate and Journal, IX (1835), 37 (May 8), 146 f.
95. Pastoral Address, in "Journal of the General Conference, 1852," p. 160, in G. C. Journals, III.
96. Elias Bowen, History of the Origin of the Free Methodist Church, p. 25.
97. George Hughes, Days of Power in the Forest Temple, A Review of the Wonderful Work of God at Fourteen National Camp-Meetings, from 1867 to 1872, pp. 55 ff., 422.
98. Guide to Holiness, New Series, V (1867), 1 (January). See also, M. E. Gaddis, "Christian Perfectionism in America," typed ms., Ph.D. dissertation, University of Chicago, 1929.
99. W. W. Sweet, Methodism in American History, pp. 343 ff.
100. Henry Liebhart, "Present State of Protestant Theology," Methodist Quarterly Review, LXV (January, 1883), 132.
101. Methodist Review, LXVII (September, 1885), 766; "A 'New Orthodoxy,'" ibid., LXVIII (May, 1886), 453 f.; Daniel Curry, "Present Necessity for a Restatement of Christian Beliefs," ibid. (September, 1886), pp. 759 ff.; "The New Theology," ibid., LXX (March, 1888), 285 f.; "Revolution in Theology," ibid., LXXIV (March, 1892), 281-88.
102. J. Pullman, "Methodism and Heresy," Methodist Quarterly Review, LXI (April, 1879), 346.
103. G. C. Journal, 1868, p. 139.
104. Ibid., 1872, pp. 143, 310; ibid., 1876, pp. 206 f.; J. M. Buckley, A History of Methodists in the United States, pp. 540 f. See also, A. Brunson, "Proposed New Articles of Religion," Methodist Quarterly Review, LIV (April, 1872), 229-46.
105. G. C. Journal, 1880, Appendix, p. 414.
106. Ibid., pp. 295, 302, 303, 322, 323.
107. Richard Crook, "The Doctrine of the Atonement," Methodist Review, LXVII (May, 1885), 352.
108. D. Curry, op. cit., p. 750.
109. Methodist Review, LXVII (September, 1885), 766.
110. Minutes, Rock River Conference, 1880, pp. 14 f.
111. Methodist Quarterly Review, LXV (April, 1883), 255, 256.
112. Christian Advocate, LVI (1881), 42 (Oct. 20), 657.
113. Arthur J. Balfour, as quoted by William Jewett Tucker, My Generation, An Autobiographical Interpretation, pp. 3 f.
114. William Wells, "The Scientific Conference at Chautauqua," Methodist Quarterly Review, LIX (January, 1877), 66.
115. Alexander Winchell, "God in the World," ibid., LVIII (July, 1876), 515.
116. Methodist Quarterly Review, LIII (April, 1871), 348 f.
117. William North Rice, Christian Faith in an Age of Science, p. 404.
118. A. C. Armstrong, Transitional Eras in Thought with Special Reference to the Present Age, p. 116.
119. Rowland Williams, "Bunsen's Biblical Researches," in, no Ed., Essays and Reviews, p. 59.
120. C. W. Goodwin, "Mosaic Cosmogony," ibid., p. 253.
121. Benjamin Jowett, "On the Interpretation of Scripture," ibid., pp. 425 f.
122. Methodist Quarterly Review, XLIII (January, 1861), pp. 161, 163.
123. Christian Advocate and Journal, XXXVI (1861), 12 (March 21), 92.
124. Charles C. McCabe, Introduction to William Henry Burns, The Higher Critic's Bible or God's Bible? pp. 12 f.
125. Gilbert Haven, "The Divine Element in Inspiration," Methodist Quarterly Review, L (January, 1868), 6, 7.
126. Daniel Curry, "Inspiration of the Scriptures," ibid., XL (April, 1858), 257, 259.
127. J. W. M. [probably John W. Mendenhall], "The Rationale of Belief," Methodist Review, LXVII (March, 1885), 290 f.

128. Henry A. Buttz, "Conditions of Authoritative Biblical Criticism," ibid., LXXVIII (March-April, 1896), 191, 203 f.
129. G. C. Journal, 1864, Appendix, p. 414; ibid., 1868, p. 247; Discipline, 1864, p. 87; ibid., 1868, pp. 90, 91.
130. Episcopal Address, in G. C. Journal, 1884, p. 44; Christian Advocate, 101 (1926), 36 (Sept. 9), 1208; Western Christian Advocate, Sept. 7, 1921, p. 917.
131. Christian Advocate, 101 (1926), 36 (Sept. 9), 1120.
132. Ibid., pp. 1210, 1212.
133. Frederick William Robertson, Sermons on Religion & Life, I, 30 f.
134. Merle Curti, The Growth of American Thought, pp. 538 f.; H. F. May, op. cit., pp. 107, 110 f.
135. Journal of the General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church . . . 1877, p. 267.
136. James Thayer Addison, The Episcopal Church in the United States, 1789-1931, pp. 286, 287, 328. See also, Spencer Miller, Jr., and Joseph F. Fletcher, The Church and Industry, pp. 52 ff.
137. Washington Gladden, as quoted by H. F. May, op. cit., p. 173.
138. Walter Rauschenbusch, Christianizing the Social Order, pp. 23, 94; Phillips P. Elliott, "The Church and Society," in Samuel McCrea Cavert and Henry Pitney Van Dusen, Eds., The Church Through Half a Century, Essays in Honor of William Adams Brown, p. 306; Charles W. Gilkey, "Protestant Preaching," ibid., p. 215; A. M. Schlesinger, op. cit., p. 339.
139. H. F. May, op. cit., pp. 195 f. For Bowne's position see his Principles of Ethics, pp. 259 ff. For an interpretation of his views, see Francis John McConnell, Borden Parker Bowne, His Life and His Philosophy, pp. 165 ff.
140. D. H. Ela, "Christianity's Next Problem," Methodist Review, LXVIII (July, 1886), 597 ff.; ibid. (September, 1886), 768 ff.
141. C. M. Morse, "Regeneration as a Force in Reform Movements," ibid., LXXIII (November-December, 1891), 923 ff.
142. G. C. Journal, 1892, p. 56.
143. "Journal of the General Conference, 1856," p. 192, in G. C. Journals, III.
144. C. H. Hopkins, History of the Y. M. C. A. in North America, pp. 81 ff.; D. Dorchester, op. cit., p. 694.
145. Leonard W. Bacon, History of American Christianity, pp. 343 ff.; Minutes of the Annual Conferences, 1858, p. 346. Henceforth these Minutes will be referred to as General Minutes.
146. C. H. Hopkins, op. cit., pp. 7, 8, 26, 27, 180.
147. Ibid., pp. 15, 22 f.
148. William R. Moody, The Life of Dwight L. Moody, chs. XII, XVII, et passim; William Warren Sweet, Revivalism in America, Its Origin, Growth, and Decline, pp. 169 f.; W. E. Garrison, op. cit., pp. 74 ff.
149. Clarence P. Shedd, Two Centuries of Student Christian Movements, Their Origin and Intercollegiate Life, pp. 103, 119 f.
150. Ibid., pp. 154, 165 f.
151. Robert P. Wilder, The Great Commission, chs. I-VI, et passim; John R. Mott, Addresses and Papers of John R. Mott, I, The Student Volunteer Movement for Foreign Missions, Part One, "Early History of the Student Volunteer Movement for Foreign Missions."
152. Horace Bushnell, Christian Nurture, pp. 187 f.
153. R. R. Goodwin, "About Revivalists," Methodist Review, LXVIII (July, 1886), 603-606.
154. "About Revivals," ibid. (March, 1886), 272-74.
155. Paul F. Douglass, The Story of German Methodism, Biography of an Immigrant Soul, p. 94.
156. G. Hughes, op. cit., pp. 68 f.
157. G. C. Journal, 1880, pp. 181, 212.

158. George R. Crooks, Life and Letters of the Rev. John M'Clintock, D.D., LL.D., Late President of Drew Theological Seminary, pp. 201, 203.
159. John Miley, Systematic Theology, II, Library of Biblical and Theological Literature, 408 f.
160. Daniel D. Whedon, Statements: Theological and Critical, p. 301.
161. F. G. Hibbard, The Religion of Childhood; or, Children in their Relation to Native Depravity, to the Atonement, to the Family, and to the Church, chs. III, IV.
162. Seventy-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1890), p. 33.
163. Discipline, 1854, pp. 85 ff.
164. Ibid., 1856, pp. 31 ff.
165. Daily Christian Advocate, May 22, 1856, unpagcd.
166. Edward Thomson [Jr.], Life of Edward Thomson, D.D., LL.D., Late a Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, pp. 158 f.
167. Annual Report of the Sunday-School Union of the Methodist Episcopal Church, 1845, pp. 41, 43; ibid., 1846, p. 34; ibid., 1848, p. 82.
168. G. E. Stobridge, Biography of the Rev. Daniel Parish Kidder, D.D., LL.D., pp. 177, 203.
169. Ibid., p. 205.
170. Ibid., pp. 161 f., 183.
171. "Journal of the General Conference, 1852," p. 115, in G. C. Journals, III.
172. Pastoral Address, p. 158, in ibid.
173. G. C. Journal, 1868, pp. 254, 291, Appendix, 549.
174. Dictionary of American Biography, XIX, 278 f.; William Wells, "Our Sunday-school Literature," Methodist Quarterly Review, LVIII (April, 1876), 335 f.
175. Leon H. Vincent, John Heyl Vincent, a Biographical Sketch, pp. 106 ff.; Sunday School Journal, New Series, I (1868), 2 (November), 21, 22 f.
176. Ann. Rep., S.-S.U., M.E. Ch., 1868, p. 62.
177. Year-Book of the Sunday School Union, and of the Tract Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church . . ., 1873, pp. 74 f. A full report of this first Chautauqua Lake Assembly, Aug. 4-18, 1874, is in the 1874 Year-Book . . ., pp. 95-274.
178. John H. Vincent, The Chautauqua Movement, p. 17.
179. Ibid., ch. III.
180. Addie Grace Wardle, History of the Sunday School Movement in the Methodist Episcopal Church, p. 107.
181. Ann. Rep., S.-S.U., M.E. Ch., 1849, pp. 36 f.
182. Discipline, 1852, p. 86.
183. Ann. Rep., S.-S.U., M.E. Ch., 1877, p. 34.
184. Frank Glenn Lankard, A History of the American Sunday School Curriculum, pp. 206 ff.; John Richard Sampey, The International Lesson System; The History of Its Origin and Development, pp. 60 f.
185. J. R. Sampey, op. cit., pp. 60 ff.
186. Ibid., pp. 87 f.; Year-Book, S.-S.U., and Tract Soc., M.E. Ch., 1872, p. 54.
187. G. C. Journal, 1868, Appendix, pp. 516 f.
188. Ann. Rep., S.-S.U., M.E. Ch., 1870, p. 36; Manual of the Methodist Episcopal Church. A Quarterly Magazine of Information Concerning the Benevolent and Publishing Interests of the Church, January, 1884, p. 23; Ann. Rep., S.S.U. and Tract Soc., M.E. Ch., 1892, p. 39.
189. Year-Book, S.-S.U., and Tract Soc., M.E. Ch., 1872, p. 35.
190. Ann. Rep., S.-S.U., M.E. Ch., 1845, p. 43; Annual Report of the Sunday School Union of the M. E. Ch. for 1895, p. 61.
191. Ann. Rep., S.-S.U., M.E. Ch., 1845, p. 44; Ann. Rep., S.S.U., M.E. Ch., 1895, p. 74.
192. Ann. Rep., S.S.U. and Tract Soc., M.E. Ch., 1892, p. 39.
193. Year Book, 1916, Board of Sunday Schools, Methodist Episcopal Church, p. 140.
194. Francis Edward Clark, Training the Church of the Future, p. 85.
195. G. C. Journal, 1864, p. 169.
196. Frank O. Erb, The Development of the Young People's Movement, pp. 50 f.;

Joseph F. Berry, Four Wonderful Years, A Sketch of the Origin, Growth, and Working Plans of the Epworth League, pp. 16 ff.; Dan B. Brummitt, Epworth League Methods, pp. 11 f.

197. J. F. Berry, op. cit., pp. 3 f.; D. B. Brummitt, op. cit., pp. 9 f.
198. Ibid., p. 11; Manual of the Methodist Episcopal Church . . ., October, 1884, pp. 278 f.; ibid., April, pp. 115 ff.; ibid., July, 1887, pp. 235 ff.; "The Oxford League," Our Youth, I (1886), 6 (Jan. 9), 92.
199. J. F. Berry, op. cit., pp. 8 ff.
200. Ibid., pp. 25 ff.
201. Ibid., ch. III; G. C. Journal, 1892, pp. 496 ff.
202. J. F. Berry, op. cit., pp. 68 ff.; D. B. Brummitt, op. cit., pp. 30 f.
203. G. C. Journal, 1892, pp. 496 ff.
204. The Methodist Year Book for 1895, p. 86.
205. G. C. Journal, 1860, pp. 313, 456.
206. Ibid., 1868, pp. 320 ff.; ibid., 1872, Appendix, pp. 703 f.; ibid., 1896, p. 727.
207. Ibid., 1872, pp. 376, 378; ibid., 1876, p. 624; Manual of the Methodist Episcopal Church . . ., January, 1881, pp. 133 f.
208. G. E. Strobridge, op. cit., pp. 254 ff.; Report of the Board of Education of the Methodist Episcopal Church . . ., 1884, p. 2; G. C. Journal, 1868, Appendix, p. 586.
209. G. C. Journal, 1872, p. 376; Rep., Bd. of Education, 1884, p. 16; ibid., 1885, pp. 37 ff.; G. E. Strobridge, op. cit., pp. 260 ff.
210. G. C. Journal, 1872, pp. 703 ff.; Rep., Bd. of Education, 1883, p. 45.
211. Ibid., 1884, p. 26.
212. G. C. Journal, 1888, pp. 352, 488 f.; ibid., 1896, p. 746.
213. Hand Book and Annual Report of the Board of Education . . ., 1890, p. 6.
214. Ibid., 1892, p. 13; G. C. Journal, 1892, p. 475; ibid., 1896, p. 750.
215. Year-Book, S.S.U. and Tract Soc., M.E. Ch., 1872, pp. 93 ff.
216. Ibid.; Annual Report of the Tract Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, 1853, p. 11.
217. Ibid., pp. 13 ff.; The Work of the Tract Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, A Brief Historical Statement, pamphlet, p. 1.
218. Ann. Rep., Tract Soc., M.E. Ch., 1854, pp. 24, 40 f.; ibid., 1860, p. 3; ibid., 1865, p. 4; "Journal of the General Conference, 1856," p. 158, in G. C. Journals, III; G. C. Journal, 1860, Appendix, p. 432.
219. Ibid., 1872, pp. 342, Appendix, 443.
220. Ibid., 1876, pp. 585, 596.
221. Ibid., 1888, p. 336; ibid., 1892, p. 282; ibid., 1896, pp. 659 f.
222. D. B. Brummitt, op. cit., p. 216.
223. "Minutes of General Conference 1796," p. 17, in G. C. Journals, I.
224. [First] Annual Report, Methodist Sunday School Union, 1828, as quoted in Christian Advocate, 101 (1926), 36 (Sept. 9), 1186.
225. H. C. Jennings, The Methodist Book Concern, A Romance of History, pp. 140 ff.
226. Abel Stevens, History of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States of America, IV, 463 f.

III

THE CHURCH FACES ITS MISSIONARY TASK

1. Thirtieth Ann. Rep., M.S. (1848-49), pp. 94 f., 96.
2. "Journal of the General Conference, 1852," Appendix, p. 189, in G. C. Journals, III.
3. Letter, Christian Advocate and Journal, XXIX (1854), 24 (June 15), 94.
4. Stephen Olin, The Works of Stephen Olin, D.D., L.L.D., Late President of the Wesleyan University, II, 393.
5. Ibid., pp. 393 f., 395.
6. Christian Advocate and Journal, IX (1835), 38 (May 15), 149.

7. S. Olin, op. cit., II, 432 ff.
8. "Journal of the General Conference, 1844," p. 107, in G. C. Journals, II.
9. Ibid., pp. 104, 107; Twenty-seventh Ann. Rep., M.S. (1845-46), pp. 12 f.
10. "Minutes of the General Missionary Committee of the Methodist Episcopal Church," May 2-3, 1850.
11. Thirty-fourth Ann. Rep., M.S. (1852), pp. 16 f.
12. "Minutes, General Missionary Committee," Nov. 15-19, 1860.
13. G. C. Journal, 1868, pp. 339, Appendix, 519 f.; Fiftieth Ann. Rep., M.S. (1868), p. 14.
14. G. C. Journal, 1872, pp. 296 f.
15. Ibid., pp. 381 f.; ibid., 1876, pp. 150, 347 ff.; Discipline, 1876, pp. 160-68.
16. S. Olin, op. cit., II, 435.
17. Ibid., pp. 438, 439.
18. "Journal of the General Conference, 1848," pp. 28, 92, in G. C. Journals, III.
19. Sixty-second Ann. Rep., M.S. (1880), p. 190.
20. Gospel in All Lands, January, 1892, pp. 17 f.
21. Ibid., April, 1892, p. 199.
22. "Journal of the General Conference, 1856," p. 302, in G. C. Journals, III.
23. Minutes, B. M., IV, 356, 412.
24. Ibid., V, 167, 170, 172, 178, 187.
25. John A. Roche, The Life of John Price Durbin, D.D., LL.D., with an Analysis of his Homiletic Skill and Sacred Oratory, pp. 195, 196.
26. Twenty-seventh Ann. Rep., M.S. (1845-46), p. 105; ibid., 28th (1846-47), p. 107; Missionary Advocate, III (1847), 9 (December), 68; Minutes, B. M., V, 356.
27. Ibid., pp. 293, 406; ibid., VI, 541 f., 583, 627.
28. J. A. Roche, "John Price Durbin, D.D., LL.D.," Methodist Review, LXIX (May, 1887), 342.
29. Abel Stevens, History of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States of America, IV, 398.
30. J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, Missions and Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, I, 37.
31. Minutes, B. M., VII, 292; G. C. Journal, 1872, p. 336.
32. Ibid., 1860, pp. 173, 239, 242, Appendix, 366 f.; Forty-second Ann. Rep., M.S. (1860), p. 10.
33. G. C. Journal, 1864, pp. 226 f.; ibid., 1868, pp. 285 f., 294.
34. Daily Christian Advocate, June 1, 1868, p. 107.
35. G. C. Journal, 1872, pp. 326, 332; Fifty-fourth Ann. Rep., M.S. (1872), p. 21.
36. This work, revised and enlarged by John T. Gracey, was published in three volumes under the same title in 1895.
37. G. C. Journal, 1876, pp. 297 f.
38. Frank Milton Bristol, The Life of Chaplain McCabe, Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, pp. 53 f., 68, 80 f., 254 ff., 291, 304, 340, 343.
39. Seventy-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1894), p. 20.
40. "Memoir," Christian Advocate, XCI (1916), 17 (April 27), 553.
41. Sixty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1881), p. 199.
42. Minutes, B. M., IX, 6 f., 12; Sixty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1883), p. 109.
43. Thirty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1851-52), p. 42; ibid., 45th (1863), p. [162]; ibid., 47th (1865), p. 174; ibid., 54th (1872), p. 177; ibid., 77th (1895), pp. 12 f.
44. Fifty-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1872), p. 177; ibid., 61st (1879), p. 28; ibid., 65th (1883), p. 32; ibid., 66th (1884), p. 32; ibid., 78th (1896), p. 14; ibid., 79th (1897), p. 14.
45. Twenty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1845-46), pp. 7, 14 f.; Minutes, B. M., V, 29 f.; "Minutes, General Missionary Committee," May 2, 1850.
46. Minutes, B. M., VII, 57, 122, 500; Forty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1865), p. [4]; ibid., 57th (1875), pp. 31, 32.
47. Minutes, B. M., IX, 278; ibid., XII, 124; ibid., XV, 174; ibid., XVI, 58.
48. Treasurers' Account in Seventy-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1890), p. 10; ibid.

- 73rd (1891), pp. 10, 14, 19; ibid., 75th (1893), p. [14]; ibid., 77th (1895), p. 14.
49. G. C. Journal, 1880, Appendix, p. 581.
50. Treasurer's Account in Twenty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1845-46), p. 15; James M. King, "Indian Contract Schools and the Churches," Gospel in All Lands, November, 1892, p. 508.
51. Treasurer's Account in Twenty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1845-46), pp. 16 f.; ibid., 52nd (1870), pp. 168, 169; ibid., 63rd (1881), p. [29]; ibid., 77th (1895), pp. [13, 15].
52. Ibid., 77th (1895), p. 146; ibid., 63rd (1881), p. 57; ibid., 62nd (1880), pp. 46, 69, 174; ibid., 64th (1882), p. 49; Charles C. McCabe, World Wide Missions, as quoted in Woman's Home Missions, 12 (1895), 10 (October), 188 f.
53. Twenty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1843-44), p. 60; ibid., 33rd (1851-52), p. 4; ibid., 74th (1892), p. 391; Minutes, B. M., VI, 433; ibid., IX, 6; G. C. Journal, 1876, p. 105; ibid., 1892, pp. 353, 471.
54. G. C. Journal, 1864, pp. 96, 266.
55. A. J. Kynett, "Church Extension," Methodist Quarterly Review, LIV (April, 1872), 283.
56. G. C. Journal, 1868, pp. 293, Appendix, 367; Daily Christian Advocate, June 1, 1868, p. 107; Gen'l Minutes, 1867, pp. 38 f.
57. [First] Annual Report of the Church Extension Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church for the Year 1866, p. 19.
58. Ibid., 2nd (1867), pp. 22 ff.
59. Ibid., p. 28.
60. Ibid., 5th (1870), pp. 37, 39.
61. A. J. Kynett, op. cit., p. 293.
62. G. C. Journal, 1872, pp. 337 ff.; Discipline, 1872, pp. 159-70.
63. Seventeenth Ann. Rep., Bd. of Ch. Ext. Soc. . . . 1882, pp. 7 ff.; ibid., 30th (1895), pp. 24 f.
64. F. M. Bristol, op. cit., pp. 119 f.
65. Fourteenth Ann. Rep., Bd. of Ch. Ext. Soc. . . . 1879, pp. 106 f.
66. Ibid., p. 54; ibid., 30th (1895), pp. 5 ff.
67. Lois S. Parker to William A. Mansell, Oct. 5, 1907.
68. As quoted in Heathen Woman's Friend, I (1870), 13 (June), 97.
69. Ibid., I (1869), 1 (June), 3.
70. L. S. Parker, loc. cit.; "Memoranda of the Origin of the 'Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church'" (signed by all of those present at the first meeting, with the exception of Mrs. Parker who was in India), in Heathen Woman's Friend, XIII (1881), 2 (August), 41 f.; ibid., I (1869), 1 (June), 3 ff.; ibid., I (1870), 13 (June), 97; Mary Sparkes Wheeler, First Decade of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society . . . with Sketches of its Missionaries, pp. 38 ff. The sources do not agree on all particulars.
71. J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., I, 49; Mary Isham, Valorous Ventures. A Record of Sixty and Six Years of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society . . ., p. 16; Clementina Butler, Mrs. William Butler, Two Empires and The Kingdom, p. 110.
72. Heathen Woman's Friend, I (1869), 1 (June), 3; M. S. Wheeler, op. cit., p. 41.
73. Christian Advocate, XLIV (1869), 24 (June 17), 186.
74. Ibid., 46 (Nov. 18), 362; M. Isham, op. cit., pp. 20 f.
75. L. S. Parker, loc. cit.
76. M. Isham, op. cit., p. 21; editorial, Heathen Woman's Friend, I (1869), 6 (November), 45.
77. Editorial, Christian Advocate, XLV (1870), 9 (March 3), 67.
78. Louise McCoy North, The Story of the New York Branch of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, p. 52.
79. Editorial, Heathen Woman's Friend, V (1873), 6 (December), 572.
80. Heathen Woman's Friend, IV (1872), 6 (December), 385; "Report of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society to the 1884 General Conference," in G. C. Journal, 1884, p. 649.
81. Unpublished ms., Executive Committee, W.F.M.S., circa 1871, collection of "Old

- Records of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the M. E. Church, 1858-1935."
82. Minutes, B. M., VII, 179 f.
83. William L. Harris to Mrs. W. F. Warren, July 13, 1871, in the files of the Woman's Division of Christian Service. The files do not contain Mrs. Warren's reply.
84. Fourth Annual Report of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church for 1873, p. 12; ibid., 5th (1874), p. 18; ibid., 6th (1875), p. 21; ibid., 7th (1876), p. 27.
85. Ibid., 7th (1875-76), pp. 15 ff.; G. C. Journal, 1876, p. 241.
86. "Minutes of the Reference Committee of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society," May 18, 1880-Oct. 2, 1883, April 17, 1881, unpagcd ms.; Minutes, B. M., VIII, 217 f.; ibid., pp. 315 ff.
87. Editorial, Heathen Woman's Friend, XVI (1884), 1 (July), 8.
88. G. C. Journal, 1884, pp. 285 f., 351 f.; Discipline, 1884, pp. 160 ff.
89. Ibid., § 1, p. 161; G. C. Journal, 1884, pp. 657-61; Fifteenth Ann. Rep., W.F.M.S. (1883-84), pp. 95 ff. The constitution as printed in G. C. Journal (as revised by the G. C. Missionary Committee) differs from that of the W.F.M.S. Annual Report in providing that constitutional change or amendment be made only by the General Conference.
90. Discipline, 1884, p. 162.
91. Seventieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1888), pp. 17 f.
92. Twenty-sixth Ann. Rep., W.F.M.S. (1894-95), p. 185.
93. Ibid., p. 182; Frances J. Baker, The Story of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, 1869-1895, p. 173.
94. As quoted by Mrs. T. L. Tomkinson, Twenty Years' History of the Woman's Home Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, 1880-1900, p. 17.
95. Joseph C. Hartzell, "The Missionary Work of Mrs. Jennie Culver Hartzell in New Orleans," unpagcd ms.
96. Mrs. T. L. Tomkinson, op. cit., pp. 10 f.; Fourth Ann. Rep., W.F.M.S. (1873), p. 4.
97. Mrs. T. L. Tomkinson, op. cit., pp. 11 ff.; Stella Wyatt Brummitt, Looking Backward, Thinking Forward, The Jubilee History of The Woman's Home Missionary Society of The Methodist Episcopal Church, p. 15.
98. Mrs. Joseph C. Hartzell, as quoted by Mrs. T. L. Tomkinson, op. cit., p. 22.
99. J. C. Hartzell, op. cit., p. 3.
100. Mrs. T. L. Tomkinson, op. cit., pp. 24 ff.; constitution, in First Annual Report, Board of Managers, Woman's Home Missionary Society (1881-82), p. 37; G. C. Journal, 1884, Appendix III, pp. 661-65.
101. Mrs. J. C. Hartzell, letter, Daily Christian Advocate, May 18, 1880, p. 60.
102. Mrs. T. L. Tomkinson, op. cit., pp. 47 ff.
103. Minutes, B. M., VIII, 57 f., 344 ff., 392 f.
104. Ibid., IX, 109 f.
105. G. C. Journal, 1884, pp. 43 f., 351 f.; Discipline, 1884, pp. 162 f.
106. Third Ann. Rep., B. M., W. H. M. S. (1883-84), pp. 6, 15, 109.
107. Fourteenth Ann. Rep., B. M., W. H. M. S. (1894-95), p. 74.
108. "Journal of the General Conference, 1844," p. 140, in G. C. Journals, II; Annual Report of the Sunday-School Union of the Methodist Episcopal Church, 1846, pp. 53 f.
109. Ann. Rep., S.-S. U., M. E. Ch., 1846, pp. 53 f.; ibid., 1850, pp. 75, 79 f.; ibid., 1854, p. 13.
110. Manual of the Methodist Episcopal Church . . ., January 1881, p. 93.
111. Ibid., April, 1881, p. 172.
112. Seventieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1888), p. 149.
113. Annual Report of the Tract Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, 1854, p. 26; ibid., 1859, p. 25.
114. Year-Book, Sunday-School Union, and Tract Society, M. E. Church, 1875, p. 9.
115. Manual of the Methodist Episcopal Church . . ., January, 1881, p. 102; Year-Book, S.-S. U., and Tract Soc., M. E. Ch., 1890, p. 7.
116. Manual of the Methodist Episcopal Church . . ., July, 1881, p. 357; Seventy-fifth

Ann. Rep., M. S. (1893), pp. 130, 179; Forty-second Annual Report of the Tract Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church 1894, p. 61.

117. Ann. Rep., S.-S.U. M.E. Ch., 1846, p. 75.

118. "Journal of the General Conference, 1852," Appendix, p. 143, in G. C. Journals, III; G. C. Journal, 1860, p. 369. For other acknowledgments of the service of the Bible Society see Annual Reports of the Sunday School Union for 1868, p. 50; 1869, p. 69, and 1895, p. 69; G. C. Journal, 1872, pp. 385 f.; ibid., 1884, pp. 395 f.; ibid., 1888, pp. 469 f.

119. Minutes, New York Conference, 1893, pp. 99 f.; Sixty-Second Annual Report of the American Bible Society . . ., 1878, p. 27; Henry Otis Dwight, The Centennial History of the American Bible Society, pp. 400, 440 f.; Christian Advocate, LXXIII (1898), 38 (Sept. 22), 1521 f.

120. Forty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1859), p. 69.

121. Julius Richter, A History of Missions in India, pp. 211 f.

122. S. L. Baldwin, "Some Problems Solved by Methodism in China," Gospel in All Lands, February, 1889, p. 62.

123. Fifty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1871), p. 31.

124. Editorial, Christian Advocate, XLVII (1872), 35 (Aug. 29), 276; ibid., 46 (Nov. 14), 364.

125. Sixtieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1878), p. 71.

126. Sixty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1880), p. 38; ibid., 63rd (1881), p. 76; ibid., 76th (1894), p. 172; ibid., 73rd (1891), pp. 78 f.; ibid., 74th (1892), pp. 85 f.

127. Willard F. Mallalieu, "Some Facts Concerning China," Christian Advocate, LXVIII (1893), 3 (Jan. 19), 35.

128. Seventy-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1897), p. 291; ibid., 81st (1899), p. 192; ibid., 85th (1903), p. 301.

129. Forty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1860), p. 37.

130. Isaac W. Wiley, letter, as quoted by S. L. Baldwin, op. cit., p. 61.

131. Seventy-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1890), p. 61.

132. G. C. Journal, 1860, Appendix, p. 404; S. L. Baldwin, op. cit., pp. 59, 61.

133. Seventy-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1891), p. 78.

134. Seventy-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1894), p. 175.

135. Fifty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1876), p. 36.

136. Fifty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1875), p. 51.

137. Seventy-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1890), p. 54.

138. Sixty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1881), pp. 31 f.

139. Sixty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1886), p. 159; ibid., 62nd (1880), p. 112.

140. Seventy-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1895), p. 155.

141. Sixty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1880), p. 52.

142. Christian Advocate, LXII (1887), 50 (Dec. 15), 812.

143. Minutes, B. M., V, 4 f.

144. "Minutes of the China Committee, M. S.," 1846-68, March 26, 1847, unpagcd ms.

145. "Minutes of the India and Turkey Committee, M. S.," Feb. 18, 1856, I, 2; ibid., April 7, 1858, pp. 11 f.

146. "Minutes of the China Committee, M. S.," April 20, 1866; "Minutes of the India and Turkey Committee, M. S.," July 20, 1868, II, 11; Minutes, B. M., VII, 82.

147. Christian Advocate, XLVII (1872), 23 (June 6), 183.

148. Missionaries' Manual, 1885, pp. 11 f.; Minutes, B. M., XVI, 19 f. Numerous other actions on the problem of furloughs may be found in the Minutes, B. M., and in the "Minutes" of the several regional committees.

149. First Ann. Rep., W.F.M.S. (1870), p. 8; ibid., 6th (1875), p. 23.

150. Twenty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1840-41), p. 91. The 1868 revision of the constitution added: "it being understood that they shall not receive more than is usually allowed to other superannuated ministers, their widows and orphans."—G. C. Journal, 1868, p. 515.

151. Minutes, New York East Conference, 1856, pp. 23 f.; Christian Advocate, LXXV (1900), 44 (Nov. 1), 22 f.; Minutes, B. M., VI, 95 f., 98, 113; "Minutes of the China Committee, M.S.," Oct. 19, 25, 1853; ibid., Jan. 17, 23, 1854; ibid., Jan. 31, 1855; ibid.,

July, 1856; ibid., November, 1856. See also Moses C. White, "Manuscripts Relating to the Founding of Methodist Missions in Foochow, China," passim.

152. Minutes, B. M., IX, 22.
153. J. M. Thoburn, My Missionary Apprenticeship, p. 25.
154. Minutes, B. M., XI, 321 f.
155. "Journal of the General Conference, 1836," p. 455, in G. C. Journals, I.
156. J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., II, 300.
157. G. C. Journal, 1860, pp. 277 f.
158. Minutes, B. M., VI, 490; G. C. Journal, 1864, pp. 199, Appendix, 383 f.
159. Ibid., p. 384.
160. Minutes, B. M., VI, 532; Edward Thomson, Our Oriental Missions, I, India and China, 112.
161. J. M. Thoburn, "Missionary Policy of the Methodist Episcopal Church," Methodist Quarterly Review, I (January, 1868), 89; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., III, 9.
162. G. C. Journal, 1868, pp. 283, Appendix, 497.
163. D[anie]l Wise, art., Christian Advocate, XLV (1870), 33 (Aug. 18), 257; ibid., 50 (Dec. 15), 393.
164. Daniel Curry, "Missionary Methods," Methodist Quarterly Review, LXV (July, 1883), 528.
165. G. C. Journal, 1880, Appendix, p. 401.
166. Ibid., pp. 245 f., 368; Minutes, B. M., IX, 334.
167. Ibid., pp. 334 f.
168. G. C. Journal, 1884, p. 173.
169. Ibid., Appendix, pp. 349 f.; Discipline, 1884, pp. 163 ff. The statement of Thomas Benjamin Neely, The Methodist Episcopal Church and its Foreign Missions: "The first law in regard to a 'Central Mission Conference' appears in the book of Discipline for 1892" (p. 233), is obviously erroneous.
170. Minutes of the Third Session of the Central Conference of the Methodist Church in India and Malaysia . . . 1889, pp. 1, 5; ibid., 1894.
171. Thirty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1855), p. 128.
172. Daily Zion's Herald, May 20, 1852, p. 62.
173. Ibid., p. 62; "Journal of the General Conference, 1852," pp. 66, 67 f., Appendix, 193 f., in G. C. Journals, III.
174. Levi Scott, "Journal," included in James Mitchell, The Life and Times of Levi Scott, D.D., One of the Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, pp. 92-140; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., I, 234 f.
175. Daily Zion's Herald, May 29, 1852, p. 94; ibid., May 31, pp. 97 f.
176. G. C. Journal, 1860, pp. 312, 360; ibid., 1864, pp. 280, 384.
177. Ibid., 1868, Appendix, p. 517.
178. Episcopal Address, ibid., 1876, pp. 394 f. A detailed account of his tour may be found in J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., I, 65 ff.
179. George Prentice, The Life of Gilbert Haven, Bishop of The Methodist Episcopal Church, pp. 476 ff.
180. J. M. Reid, Missions and Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, I, 64.
181. G. C. Journal, 1880, p. 364.
182. Daily Christian Advocate, 1884, pp. 62, 66, 74 f., 77 f., 81, 99, 101 ff., 179 ff.; G. C. Journal, 1884, pp. 174, 179, Appendix, 311.
183. Episcopal Address, ibid., 1888, p. 45.
184. Ibid., pp. 331 f., 438; ibid., 1892, p. 440.
185. "Journal of the General Conference, 1856," pp. 146 f., 177, in G. C. Journals, III; Discipline, 1872, p. 52. The result of the vote of the Annual Conferences was announced to the 1860 General Conference but through editorial oversight the rule as amended did not appear in the Discipline until 1872.
186. Abel Stevens, Supplementary History of American Methodism . . ., p. 41.
187. G. C. Journal, 1864, pp. 176, 226, Appendix, 356, 388.

188. Ibid., 1876, Appendix, pp. 395 f.; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., I, 242.
189. G. C. Journal, 1876, p. 353.
190. Ibid., 1880, pp. 96, 129, 154, 155, 166, 173.
191. Ibid., p. 184.
192. T. B. Neely, op. cit., p. 125.
193. G. C. Journal, 1884, p. 312; cf. Harry Wescott Worley, The Central Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church . . ., p. 69.
194. G. C. Journal, 1884, pp. 248, Appendix, 312; Sixty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1884), p. 40; William Taylor, Story of My Life . . ., p. 692.
195. William Taylor, letter, "Not 'Out of Order,'" The Christian Witness and Advocate of Bible Holiness, April, 1886.
196. G. C. Journal, 1888, pp. 300 f., 392 ff.
197. Ibid., 1892, pp. 253, 258, 273, 438, 470, 627; Gospel in All Lands, July, 1892, p. 340.
198. A. Stevens, Supplementary History of American Methodism . . ., p. 42.
199. J. M. Thoburn, My Missionary Apprenticeship, pp. 9 f.
200. Ibid., pp. 7 ff.
201. Edwin W. Parker, "Journal," quoted by J. H. Messmore, The Life of Edwin Wallace Parker, D.D., Missionary Bishop of Southern Asia . . ., p. 31.
202. L. S. Parker, as quoted by J. H. Messmore, op. cit., pp. 41 f.
203. S. Moore Sites, Nathan Sites, An Epic of the East, pp. 22 f.
204. Ibid., pp. 30, 33, 36, 39 f., 41 ff., 46 f.
205. "Autobiography of William Rockwell Clancy," typewritten sketch, pp. 6 f.
206. Clara A. Swain to Mrs. Sarah J. Hale, July 8, 1869, in the files of the Woman's Division of Christian Service of the Board of Missions of The Methodist Church.
207. M. S. Wheeler, op. cit., p. 80.
208. Louise Manning Hodgkins, The Roll Call, An Introduction to Our Missionaries, 1869-1896, p. 73.
209. Ibid., pp. 22 f.
210. Episcopal Address, G. C. Journal, 1892, p. 48.
211. Daniel Curry, "Methodist Foreign Missions," Methodist Quarterly Review, LXV (April, 1883), 311.
212. Fifty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1873), p. 111.
213. Fifty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1869), p. 33.
214. J. M. Thoburn, op. cit., pp. 67, 69 f.
215. Fifty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1877), p. 66; ibid., 47th (1865), p. 34.
216. Forty-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1862), p. 42.
217. Sixty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1880), p. 119.
218. Fifty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1877), p. 135.
219. Sixty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1887), p. 177.
220. Seventy-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1892), p. 121.
221. Fifty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1869), p. 102.
222. Fifty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1870), p. 46.
223. Sixty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1880), p. 119.
224. Sixty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1883), pp. 141 f.
225. Fifty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1876), p. 63; ibid., 70th (1888), p. 232.
226. Erastus Wentworth, as quoted by R. S. Maclay, Life Among the Chinese . . ., pp. 250 f.
227. F. J. Baker, op. cit., pp. 179 f., 185.
228. Ninth Ann. Rep., W.F.M.S. (1877-78), p. 19. The Ninth and Tenth Annual Reports W.F.M.S. were erroneously printed as the Eighth and Ninth. The corrected dates are used here. Seventy-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1893), p. 155.
229. Dora Schoenmaker, letter, Heathen Woman's Friend, VII (1875), 2 (August), 38.
230. Tenth Ann. Rep., W.F.M.S. (1878-79), p. 24; Seventy-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1894), pp. 259 f.
231. Abel Stevens, letter, Gospel in All Lands, March, 1890, p. 141.

232. M. C. White, op. cit., p. 29; Ninth Ann. Rep., W.F.M.S. (1877-78), pp. 19 f.; Fifty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1877), p. 134.
233. Sixty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1880), p. 124.
234. Seventy-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1889), p. 213; Isabella Thoburn, as quoted by F. J. Baker, op. cit., p. 206.
235. Twenty-sixth Ann. Rep., W.F.M.S. (1894-95), pp. 56 f.
236. Seventieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1888), pp. 241 f.
237. F. J. Baker, op. cit., pp. 282 f.; Ninth Ann. Rep., W.F.M.S. (1877-78), p. 26.
238. J. H. Messmore, as quoted by J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., III, 115 f.
239. M. C. White, op. cit., pp. 8 ff., 25, 33, 49.
240. F. J. Baker, op. cit., p. 139.
241. Clara A. Swain, A Glimpse of India, Being a collection of Extracts from the Letters of Dr. Clara A. Swain . . ., edited anonymously, pp. 36, 74.
242. Fifty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1876), p. 105.
243. Seventy-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1889), p. 292.

IV

NATURE AND SCOPE OF DOMESTIC MISSIONS

1. Twenty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1845-46), pp. 96, 97.
2. Ibid., pp. 99-102, 103; ibid., 32nd (1850-51), p. 25; ibid., 37th (1855), p. 52; ibid., 48th (1866), p. 110; ibid., 56th (1874), p. 142.
3. Seventieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1888), p. 345.
4. Thirty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1850-51), pp. 18 ff.
5. Ibid., p. 19.
6. Missionary Advocate, X (1854), 1 (April), 5.
7. Christian Advocate and Journal, XXVI (1851), 17 (April 24), 66.
8. Gen'l Minutes, IV, 244, 397 f., 476 f.; Minutes, Minnesota Conference, 1860, pp. 23 f.
9. S. R. Beggs, Pages From the Early History of the West and North-West . . ., pp. 311 f.
10. Twenty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1847-48), pp. 101 f.
11. Missionary Advocate, III (1847), 8 (November), 60.
12. Gen'l Minutes, IV, 488 f., 526 f.; Forty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1866), pp. 109 f.; ibid., 58th (1876), pp. 156, 157, 161, 162.
13. Discipline, 1840, p. 154; Gen'l Minutes, V, 499 ff.; ibid., VI, 243 f.
14. Christian Advocate and Journal, XXII (1847), 20 (May 19), 79.
15. Ibid., 32 (Aug. 11), 127.
16. Ibid., XXIX (1854), 29 (July 20), 114; ibid., XXX (1855), 28 (July 12), 110.
17. Minutes, Wisconsin Conference, 1863, pp. 6 f., 27 f.
18. Gen'l Minutes, VI, 98; Chauncey Hobart, History of Methodism in Minnesota, pp. 68 f.
19. James Lawson, "History of the West and Northwest Wisconsin Conferences . . . 1856-1889," in P. S. Bennett, History of Methodism in Wisconsin . . ., Part III, pp. 367, 386, 394.
20. C. Hobart, op. cit., pp. 34 f.
21. Ibid., pp. 36 ff., 53 f.
22. Ibid., pp. 64 f.; Missionary Advocate, XIII (1857), 5 (August), 39; North-western Christian Advocate, quoted by C. Hobart, op. cit., pp. 101 f.
23. Gen'l Minutes, VI, 382; William McKinley, A Story of Minnesota Methodism, pp. 64 f.
24. G. C. Journal, 1892, p. 416; Year Book, Minnesota Conference, 1894, pp. 31-33, 38.
25. Stephen Norris Fellows, History of the Upper Iowa Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, 1856-1906, p. 38.

26. Twenty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1847-48), p. 104; Edmund H. Waring, History of the Iowa Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church . . ., pp. 160 f.
27. E. H. Waring, op. cit., pp. 157 f., 168; S. N. Fellows, op. cit., p. 219.
28. Christian Advocate, XLVIII (1873), 18 (May 1), 138.
29. Bennett Mitchell, History of the Northwest Iowa Conference, 1872-1903, pp. 1 f., 10 f., 22 f., 40.
30. Hauser Winter, "The Division in Missouri Methodism in 1845," Missouri Historical Review, XXXVII (1942), 1 (October), 7. The writer's authority is the Missouri Statesman, Oct. 10, 1845. He says that the Western Christian Advocate, XII (Oct. 31, 1845), reported the vote as 84 to 14, and D. R. McAnally, in Life and Times of Reverend William Patton (p. 236), as 84 to 13.
31. Robert R. Witten, Pioneer Methodism in Missouri and the Mission of Methodism . . ., pp. 15 f.; Allan Nevins, Ordeal of the Union, p. 504; "Letters for the People on the Present Crisis," by a St. Louis man to a New York friend, 1853, Huntington Library, cited, ibid., pp. 504 f.
32. Gen'l Minutes, IV, 286 f., 396 ff.; Charles Elliott, South-Western Methodism, A History of the M.E. Church in the South-West, from 1844 to 1864 . . ., pp. 24 f.; "Journal of the General Conference, 1848," p. 97, in G. C. Journals, III.
33. C. Elliott, op. cit., pp. 68 ff.
34. Ibid., p. 275.
35. Ibid., pp. 421, 428 f., 457; Gen'l Minutes, 1863, pp. 8 f.; ibid., 1864, pp. 8 f.; ibid., 1875, pp. 201, 204; ibid., Spring, 1895, pp. 160, 204; R. R. Witten, op. cit., pp. 85 f.; Forty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1864), p. 156.
36. Gen'l Minutes, IV, 286 f.; ibid., V, 130, 309; C. Elliott, op. cit., p. 30.
37. G. C. Journal, 1868, pp. 307, 317; Gen'l Minutes, 1869, pp. 21, 23; ibid., 1873, pp. 27, 177.
38. John H. Pitezel, Lights and Shades of Missionary Life . . ., p. 307; Thirty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1851-52), p. 93; E. H. Day, letter, Christian Advocate and Journal, XXVII (1852), 13 (March 25), 50; Gen'l Minutes, IV, 655.
39. Ibid., pp. 512 f., 540; ibid., VI, 604 ff., 667; "Journal of the General Conference, 1856," Appendix, p. 280, in G. C. Journals, III.
40. "Journal of the General Conference, 1852," p. 152, ibid.; William H. Goode, Outposts of Zion, with Linnings of Mission Life, pp. 240 f.; Thirty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1855), p. 51.
41. Gen'l Minutes, V, 480; Thirty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1855), p. 51; W. H. Goode, op. cit., pp. 240 f., 288.
42. "Journal of the General Conference, 1856," p. 282, in G. C. Journals, III; W. H. Goode, op. cit., pp. 370, 382, 392 f.; H. D. Fisher, The Gun and the Gospel . . ., p. 53.
43. G. C. Journal, 1860, p. 272; David Marquette, "Methodist Episcopal Church," in Julius Sterling Morton and Albert Watkins, History of Nebraska, From the Earliest Explorations of the Trans-Mississippi Region, p. 799; Gen'l Minutes, 1861, pp. 71, 241 f.; ibid., Fall, 1880, pp. 267 ff., 388 ff. Statistics of membership and of pastoral charges as stated by Marquette do not agree with the General Minutes which we use as authoritative.
44. G. C. Journal, 1880, pp. 369, 393; Sixty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1883), pp. 243 f.
45. Gen'l Minutes, Fall, 1893, pp. 341 f.
46. David Marquette, A History of Nebraska Methodism, First Half-Century, 1854-1904, p. 402.
47. Seventy-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1893), p. 335; ibid., 76th (1894), p. 369; ibid., 77th (1895), p. 330; Gen'l Minutes, Fall, 1895, p. 579.
48. Russell K. Hickox, "Lewis Bodwell, Frontier Preacher; the Early Years," Kansas Historical Quarterly, XII (1943), 2 (August), 269.
49. Central Christian Advocate, July 19, 1855, as quoted by William Warren Sweet, The Methodist Episcopal Church and the Civil War, p. 33; Minutes, Kansas and Nebraska Conference, 1859, p. 13; anon., "Life of Capt. Marcus D. Tenney," Collections of the Kansas State Historical Society, XI (1909-1910), 293.

50. James Shaw, Early Reminiscences of Pioneer Life in Kansas, p. 110; W. W. Sweet, op. cit., p. 87; H. D. Fisher, op. cit., pp. 162 f.
51. Minutes, Kansas Conference, 1861, p. 13.
52. G. C. Journal, 1872, p. 428; Minutes, South Kansas Conference, 1874, pp. 27 f.
53. Harold C. Evans, Chief Editor, Kansas, A Guide to the Sunflower State, p. 66.
54. G. C. Journal, 1880, pp. 114, 393.
55. Sixty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1884), pp. 259, 261; ibid., 69th (1887), pp. 375, 377; ibid., 77th (1895), pp. 329 ff., 332 f.; Minutes, Southwest Kansas Conference, 1884, p. 25; ibid., 1887, pp. 127 f.; ibid., 1895, pp. 154 f.
56. Minutes, B. M., VIII, 291, 348.
57. D. D. Akin, "Second Period, 1892-1902," in History of the Southwest Kansas Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, I, 85 f.
58. Ibid., p. 87; Gen'l Minutes, Spring, 1895, pp. 157, 176, 185, 207.
59. Forty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1859), pp. 67-68; W. H. Goode, op. cit., pp. 399 ff. Cf. J. Shaw, op. cit., p. 74.
60. W. H. Goode, op. cit., pp. 433 f., 449 f.; John L. Dyer, The Snow-Shoe Itinerant, An Autobiography of the Rev. John L. Dyer . . ., pp. 345 f.
61. J. Shaw, op. cit., p. 89; Minutes, Kansas and Nebraska Conference, 1860, p. 10.
62. Jacob Adriance, quoted by Isaac Haight Beardsley in Echoes from Peak and Plain; or, Tales of Life, War, Travel, and Colorado Methodism, p. 232; J. L. Dyer, op. cit., p. 201.
63. I. H. Beardsley, op. cit., p. 237.
64. J. M. Chivington in Rocky Mountain Advocate, quoted by I. H. Beardsley, op. cit., p. 244.
65. J. L. Dyer, op. cit., pp. 114, 117, 135, 136 f.
66. Gen'l Minutes, 1862, pp. 24, 26.
67. G. C. Journal, 1860, pp. 268, 276 f.
68. Gen'l Minutes, 1864, p. 242; J. L. Dyer, op. cit., pp. 185 f.; G. C. Journal, 1864, pp. 226, 388.
69. I. H. Beardsley, op. cit., pp. 416 f.
70. J. L. Dyer, op. cit., pp. 326 f.
71. As quoted by I. H. Beardsley, op. cit., p. 432.
72. Gen'l Minutes, Fall, 1895, pp. 268, 432 ff.
73. Christian Advocate and Journal, XXIII (1848), 17 (April 26), 66.
74. Nathan Bangs, A History of the Methodist Episcopal Church, IV, 190.
75. Fifty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1873), pp. 144-56; ibid., 56th (1874), pp. 184 f.
76. Missionary Advocate, XIII (1857), 2 (May), 14.
77. Christian Advocate and Journal, XXII (1847), 10 (March 10), 39.
78. Ibid., 14 (April 7), 55.
79. Missionary Advocate, XIV (1859), 12 (March), 93.
80. Christian Advocate and Journal, XXVI (1851), 17 (April 24), 66.
81. Seventy-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1894), p. 360.
82. Missionary Advocate, XVII (1861), 2 (May), 13 f.; Gen'l Minutes, 1860, p. 241.
83. Stephen Olin, The Works of Stephen Olin, D.D., LL.D., Late President of the Wesleyan University, II, 421.
84. Ibid., pp. 420 ff.
85. Christian Advocate, XLVIII (1873), 15 (April 10), 114.
86. Fifty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1876), p. 33.
87. Missionary Advocate, XVII (1861), 1 (April), 6.
88. G. C. Journal, 1864, Appendix, pp. 384 f.
89. Forty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1867), p. 121.
90. Thirty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1854), p. 85.
91. Christian Advocate, XLI (1866), 6 (Feb. 8), 44; Zion's Herald, Dec. 23, 1896, p. 828, as quoted in A. I. Abell, The Urban Impact on American Protestantism, 1865-1900, p. 172.
92. G. C. Journal, 1864, p. 234.

93. Boston Methodist Home Missionary Society Association, "Records, 1866-73," unpagcd ms.; Christian Advocate, XLV (1870), 18 (May 5), 140.
94. Annual Report of the Chicago Home Missionary and Church Extension Society, 1887, p. 26.
95. Samuel A. Seaman, Annals of New York Methodism, Being a History of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the City of New York . . ., pp. 402 ff.; Christian Advocate and Journal, XXVII (1852), 47 (Nov. 18), 187; Christian Advocate, XLVII (1872), 41 (Oct. 10), 325.
96. Annual Report, quoted by Frederick B. Newell, "Sixty-Five Years of Service of the New York City Society to New York Methodism," in New York City Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, 1866-1931, pamphlet, p. 15.
97. Christian Advocate, XLV (1870), 18 (May 5), 140.
98. Ibid.
99. Annual Report, quoted by F. B. Newell, op. cit., p. 11; Northwestern Christian Advocate, I (1853), 16 (April 20), 62.
100. Editorial, quoting the Northwestern Christian Advocate in Christian Advocate and Journal, XXX (1855), 3 (Jan. 18), 10.
101. George B. Dean, City Evangelization in the Methodist Episcopal Church, pamphlet, p. 29; Annual Report of the Chicago Home Missionary and Church Extension Society, 1887, p. 26.
102. Boston Methodist Home Missionary Society Association, "Records, 1866-73," unpagcd ms.; Bureau of Methodist Missions for Boston and Vicinity, Minutes, 1889-91; James Mudge, History of the New England Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, 1796-1910, pp. 309 f.
103. "[Proceedings of the Cleveland] City Evangelization Union," ms., pp. 1 f., 3, 9 f., 20, 23, 25 f., 29, 50 ff., 96.
104. "[Minutes, [Cleveland] City Church Extension Society, 1890-96," ms., p. 41.
105. Horace Benton, Financial Secretary, Cleveland City Evangelization Society, unpagcd pamphlet.
106. G. B. Dean, op. cit., pp. 87, 90 ff., 93; G. C. Journal, 1892, pp. 352, 460.
107. Josiah Strong, The New Era or the Coming Kingdom, p. 200.
108. George P. Mains, "The Church and the City," Methodist Review, LXXVI (March-April, 1894), 227 f.
109. Forty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1864), pp. 11, 102 f.
110. Ibid., p. 102.
111. G. C. Journal, 1880, p. 369; Sixty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1880), pp. 192 f.; ibid., 70th (1888), p. 345.
112. Twenty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1846-47), p. 31; Christian Advocate and Journal, XXI (1846), 11 (Oct. 21), 42; Missionary Advocate, II (1847), 10 (January), 77.
113. H. K. Hines, Missionary History of the Pacific Northwest . . ., pp. 365 f.; Missionary Advocate, IV (1848), 4 (July), 29.
114. James W. Bashford, The Oregon Missions, The Story of How the Line was Run Between Canada and the United States, p. 72; H. K. Hines, op. cit., pp. 365 f.
115. Thirtieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1848-49), pp. 21, 24 f.; Christian Advocate and Journal, XXIII (1848), 39 (Sept. 27), 154; Minutes, B. M., V, 95, 96, 113, 141, 142.
116. Christian Advocate and Journal, XXIV (1849), 26 (June 28), 102.
117. Minutes, B. M., V, 67; "Journal of the General Conference, 1848," pp. 29, 32, 39 f., and "Journal of the General Conference, 1852," p. 153, in G. C. Journals, III; C. V. Anthony, Fifty Years of Methodism, A History of the Methodist Episcopal Church Within the Bounds of the California Annual Conference . . ., p. 41.
118. Minutes, B. M., V, 258, 274; T. A. Morris to W. Roberts, Feb. 17, 1851, in "Letter Book, Oregon, California, and New Mexico, Nov. 26, 1849—Feb. 1, 1865," hereafter referred to as "Oregon, California, and New Mexico Letter Book"; Christian Advocate and Journal, XXVII (1852), 51 (Dec. 16), 202.
119. Christian Advocate and Journal, XXVIII (1853), 29 (July 21), 114; ibid.,

XXIX (1854), 20 (May 18), 78; ibid., XXIX (1854), 16 (April 20), 63; ibid., XXX (1855), 8 (Feb. 22), 30.

120. Minutes, Oregon Conference, 1891, pp. 41-44.
121. G. C. Journal, 1872, pp. 417, 427; Gen'l Minutes, 1874, pp. 79 f., 243.
122. Minutes, Columbia River Conference, 1884, pp. 21 f.
123. Ibid., 1886, p. 40; Sixty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1887), p. 369.
124. G. C. Journal, 1884, pp. 110, 410; Minutes, Puget Sound Conference, 1884, pp. 40-42; ibid., 1887, pp. 50, 59.
125. Ibid., 1892, pp. 70 f.
126. C. V. Anthony, Fifty Years of Methodism . . ., pp. 9 f.; Christian Advocate and Journal, XXII (1847), 36 (Sept. 8), 143; ibid., 37 (Sept. 15), 147.
127. Missionary Advocate, III (1847), 7 (October), 54.
128. Minutes, B. M., V, 43.
129. Christian Advocate and Journal, XXIII (1848), 51 (Dec. 20), 203.
130. Minutes, B. M., V, 77 f., 101; Christian Advocate and Journal, XXIII (1848), 26 (June 28), 103; ibid., XXIV (1849), 4 (Jan. 25), 14.
131. C. V. Anthony, op. cit., p. 20.
132. Christian Advocate and Journal, XXIV (1849), 26 (June 28), 102.
133. C. V. Anthony, op. cit., p. 21.
134. Christian Advocate and Journal, XXIV (1849), 38 (Sept. 20), 150; ibid., 39 (Sept. 27), 154; Thirty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1849-50), p. 17.
135. Christian Advocate and Journal, XXV (1850), 5 (Jan. 31), 18.
136. Thirty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1849-50), p. 12; C. V. Anthony, op. cit., pp. 27, 42.
137. Christian Advocate and Journal, XXV (1850), 15 (April 11), 59; Leon L. Loofbourrow, In Search of God's Gold, A Story of Continued Christian Pioneering in California, p. 35.
138. Minutes, B. M., V, 150, 206, 258; Christian Advocate and Journal, XXV (1850), 24 (June 13), 94.
139. John P. Durbin and G. Lane to S. D. Simonds and Isaac Owens, Feb. 18, 1852, in "Oregon, California, and New Mexico Letter Book."
140. C. V. Anthony, op. cit., pp. 115, 120; Bishops Waugh, et al., to I. Owen, June 8, 1852, in "Oregon, California, and New Mexico Letter Book"; Gen'l Minutes, V, 155.
141. Christian Advocate and Journal, XXVIII (1853), 24 (June 16), 94.
142. Ibid., XXIX (1854), 20 (May 18), 78; ibid., XXVII (1852), 38 (Sept. 16), 150.
143. Ibid., XXX (1855), 27 (July 5), 106; C. V. Anthony, op. cit., pp. 163 ff.
144. Gen'l Minutes, 1865, pp. 280 ff.; ibid., 1872, p. 109; ibid., 1875, pp. 108 ff., 283; Fifty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1870), p. 109; ibid., 58th (1876), p. 161; ibid., 62nd (1880), p. 238; ibid., 77th (1895), pp. 322, 332; G. C. Journal, 1872, pp. 427 f.
145. "Journal of the General Conference, 1848," pp. 29, 39 f., in G. C. Journals, III; Gen'l Minutes, IV, 601, 680 f.
146. John P. Durbin to E. G. Nicholson, July 22, 1850, in "Oregon, California, and New Mexico Letter Book"; Gen'l Minutes, IV, 601.
147. Missionary Advocate, X (1854), 3 (June), 19; ibid., VI (1851), 11 (February), 86.
148. Minutes, B. M., V, 336 f., 385, 397; Missionary Advocate, X (1854), 3 (June), 19; ibid., 5 (August), 36; ibid., XI (1855), 8 (November), 61; Thirty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1855), pp. 31 f.; "Journal of the General Conference, 1856," Appendix, p. 264, in G. C. Journals, III.
149. G. C. Journal, 1864, p. 89; J. L. Dyer, op. cit., pp. 186, 196, 240, 246, 247.
150. Fifty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1875), p. 162; ibid., 73rd (1891), pp. 308 f.
151. Seventy-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1889), p. 312; ibid., 72nd (1890), p. 294; ibid., 73rd (1891), p. 299.
152. Seventy-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1892), p. 311; ibid., 77th (1895), p. 280.
153. Bishops' Address, G. C. Journal, 1868, Appendix, p. 367.
154. Gen'l Minutes, Fall, 1885, pp. 321, 472; Thomas Harwood, History of New Mexico Spanish and English Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church from 1850 to 1910, II, 36, 40.

155. Sixty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1886), pp. 327 f.
156. Seventieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1888), p. 374.
157. Seventy-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1891), p. 307; ibid., 74th (1892), p. 314; ibid., 75th (1893), pp. 286 f.; ibid., 77th (1895), p. 285.
158. Gen'l Minutes, Fall, 1895, pp. 386 f.; Seventy-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1895), p. 286.
159. Missionary Advocate, XV (1859), 4 (July), 29; Gen'l Minutes, 1859, p. 289; ibid., 1860, p. 315; G. C. Journal, 1860, pp. 197, 366.
160. Ibid., 1864, p. 89; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, Missions and Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, I, 94 f.
161. Fifty-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1872), p. 149.
162. Fifty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1873), pp. 173 f.
163. Fifty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1875), p. 167.
164. Fifty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1876), p. 167; ibid., 59th (1877), p. 184; ibid., 60th (1878), pp. 191 f.
165. Sixty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1879), p. 173; ibid., 63rd (1881), p. 261; Minutes, Colorado Conference, 1879, p. 23.
166. Sixty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1883), pp. 213, 215; ibid., 67th (1885), p. 257.
167. Seventy-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1891), pp. 278 f.; ibid., 75th (1893), p. 273.
168. "Minutes of the Committee on Domestic Missions, Nov. 26, 1850-Oct. 21, 1879," unpagcd ms.
169. Gen'l Minutes, V, 548; "Journal of the General Conference, 1856," p. 283, in G. C. Journals, III.
170. Minutes of the 25th Anniversary of the Utah Mission . . ., 1895, pp. 21 ff.; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., I, 96; Gen'l Minutes, 1870, p. 157.
171. Fifty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1870), pp. 128 f.
172. Fifty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1871), pp. 125 f.
173. Sixty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1885), p. 288.
174. Sixty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1884), pp. 244 f.
175. Sixty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1887), p. 340; ibid., 72nd (1890), p. 316.
176. Seventy-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1891), p. 326.
177. Seventy-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1892), p. 324; ibid., 76th (1894), pp. 323 f.
178. Sixty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1885), p. 283.
179. Seventy-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1894), p. 328.
180. Gen'l Minutes, Fall, 1895, pp. 402, 598.
181. Ibid., 1864, p. 160; ibid., 1865, p. 154; ibid., 1866, p. 218; ibid., 1869, pp. 156 f.; Forty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1867), pp. 129 ff.
182. Minutes, Rocky Mountain Conference, 1872, p. 8; ibid., 1873, p. 11; ibid., 1874, p. 17; Fifty-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1872), pp. 150-52.
183. Minutes, Rocky Mountain Conference, 1874, p. 17.
184. Ibid., 1875, p. 26.
185. Minutes, Columbia River Conference, 1877, p. 19; ibid., 1881, p. 17; ibid., 1883, pp. 18, 36.
186. Journal, Idaho Conference, 1889, p. 22.
187. Ibid., 1891, p. 32.
188. Gen'l Minutes, Fall, 1891, pp. 357, 426.
189. Doane Robinson, History of South Dakota, pp. 545 ff.; Gen'l Minutes, 1860, p. 231; ibid., 1861, p. 177; ibid., 1873, p. 121; ibid., 1876, p. 153; ibid., Fall, 1879, p. 71; B. Mitchell, op. cit., p. 59.
190. G. C. Journal, 1880, p. 369; Gen'l Minutes, Fall, 1880, pp. 305, 433.
191. Sixty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1880), pp. 215 ff.; ibid., 64th (1882), p. 188; ibid., 65th (1883), p. 220; D. Robinson, op. cit., pp. 545 ff.
192. Minutes, B. M., IX, 189 f.; Minutes, Dakota Mission Conference, 1882, p. 26; ibid., 1883, p. 42.
193. Minutes, South Dakota Conference, 1895, pp. i-vi.

194. Sixty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1884), p. 240; G. C. Journal, 1884, pp. 176, 416.
195. Ibid., pp. 352, Appendix, 416; Gen'l Minutes, Fall, 1886, pp. 321 f.; Minutes, North Dakota Conference, 1895, pp. 18 f., 38, 57, 60-63.
196. G. C. Journal, 1876, p. 279.
197. George W. Kingsbury, History of Dakota Territory, III, South Dakota, Its History and Its People, 954; G. C. Journal, 1880, p. 369; Gen'l Minutes, Fall, 1878, p. 55; ibid., Fall, 1879, p. 71; ibid., Fall, 1880, pp. 305, 433; Sixty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1880), p. 214; ibid., 64th (1882), p. 186; ibid., 74th (1892), p. 296; B. Mitchell, op. cit., p. 32.
198. G. W. Kingsbury, op. cit., pp. 954 f.
199. Sixty-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1882), pp. 185 f.
200. Sixty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1886), p. 313.
201. G. C. Journal, 1888, p. 419; Seventy-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1895), pp. 270 f.
202. I. H. Beardsley, op. cit., pp. 452 f.; Gen'l Minutes, 1869, p. 149; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., I, 96 f.
203. G. C. Journal, 1872, p. 425; ibid., 1876, p. 377; ibid., 1880, p. 384; Gen'l Minutes, 1877, p. 82; ibid., Fall, 1878, p. 10; ibid., Fall, 1879, p. 6; Minutes, Wyoming State Conference, 1915, unpagged; I. H. Beardsley, op. cit., pp. 452 ff.
204. Journal, Colorado Conference, 1888, p. 35; Minutes, Wyoming State Conference, 1915, unpagged; Gen'l Minutes, Fall, 1888, pp. 339, 501.
205. Seventy-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1892), p. 344.
206. Seventy-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1895), p. 298; Gen'l Minutes, Fall, 1895, pp. 403, 599.
207. George D. King, arts., The Anaconda Standard, 1909, quoted by Edward Laird Mills in Plains, Peaks and Pioneers, Eighty Years of Methodism in Montana, pp. 26-31; Forty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1865), p. 161.
208. Journal, Montana Mission, 1886, pp. 82 f.
209. Forty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1865), pp. 161 f.
210. Ibid., p. 164.
211. Forty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1866), pp. 146 f.; Minutes, Rocky Mountain Conference, 1872, pp. 18 ff.; G. D. King, in The Anaconda Standard, quoted by E. L. Mills, op. cit., pp. 46-50.
212. Minutes, Rocky Mountain Conference, 1872, pp. 8, 13; Gen'l Minutes, 1872, pp. 70, 223.
213. Ibid., 1877, p. 80; G. C. Journal, 1880, p. 369; Sixty-second Ann. Rep., M. S., 1880, pp. 219 f.
214. Sixty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1883), p. 227; ibid., 68th (1886), p. 318.
215. G. C. Journal, 1884, Appendix, p. 416; Minutes, Montana Conference, 1887, pp. [3], 37 f.; ibid., 1895, p. 60.
216. Gen'l Minutes, Fall, 1892, p. 394; Seventy-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1894), pp. 319, 322.
217. Seventy-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1895), pp. 291, 293; Gen'l Minutes, Fall, 1895, p. 598.
218. James H. N. Williams, "The Methodist Episcopal Church," in The History of Nevada, Sam P. Davis, Ed., I, 565-80; Minutes, California Conference, 1855, p. 5; ibid., 1859, p. 24; ibid., 1860, p. 31; ibid., 1861, p. 30; ibid., 1864, p. 27; Gen'l Minutes, V, 547 ff.; ibid., 1863, p. 227.
219. Discipline, 1884, pp. 315 f.; Sixty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1885), p. 291; Gen'l Minutes, Fall, 1884, p. 246.
220. Seventy-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1895), p. 277.
221. Seventy-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1890), p. 288.
222. Seventy-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1892), p. 300.
223. G. C. Journal, 1880, p. 369; Laurence F. Schmeckebier, The Office of Indian Affairs; Its History, Activities and Organization, p. 91; Sixty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1880), p. 218; ibid., 64th (1882), p. 191.
224. Sixty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1883), pp. 222 ff.

225. Sixty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1881), p. 269; ibid., 67th (1885), pp. 262 f.; ibid., 69th (1887), p. 324; ibid., 70th (1888), p. 354.
226. Gospel in All Lands, July, 1892, pp. 325 f.; Gen'l Minutes, Spring, 1889, pp. 90, 227.
227. Ibid., Fall, 1892, pp. 390 f.; ibid., Fall, 1893, p. 587.
228. "Journal of the General Conference, 1852," p. 189, in G. C. Journals, III.
229. Sixty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1883), p. [198].
230. J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., I, 85 f.
231. Thirty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1851-52), pp. 68 f.; Christian Advocate and Journal, XXVI (1851), 24 (June 12), 94; ibid., XXVII (1852), 20 (May 13), 79; ibid., XXVIII (1853), 5 (Feb. 3), 18; ibid., 19 (May 12), 74; ibid., XXXI (1856), 12 (March 20), 46.
232. Sixty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1887), pp. 355 f.; ibid., 71st (1889), pp. 348 f.; ibid., 72nd (1890), p. 344; ibid., 73rd (1891), pp. 357, 358; ibid., 74th (1892), pp. 363, 364 f.; ibid., 75th (1893), pp. 323, 324; ibid., 76th (1894), pp. 354 f.
233. Sixty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1886), pp. 291 ff.; ibid., 69th (1887), pp. 353 ff.; ibid., 70th (1888), pp. 394 f.; ibid., 71st (1889), p. 354; Gen'l Minutes, Spring, 1889, pp. 11, 15, 16.
234. Seventy-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1889), p. 354; ibid., 72nd (1890), p. 341; ibid., 76th (1894), p. 354.
235. J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., I, 86.
236. Thirty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1849-50), p. 64; ibid., 52nd (1870), p. 121.
237. Christian Advocate and Journal, XXII (1847), 50 (Dec. 15), 198.
238. "Journal of the General Conference, 1852," pp. 146 f., in G. C. Journals, III; G. C. Journal, 1860, Appendix, pp. 464 ff.
239. Ibid., 1864, pp. 196 f.; ibid., 1872, pp. 304, 419; Forty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1864), p. 101; Gen'l Minutes, 1872, p. 129.
240. Paul F. Douglass, The Story of German Methodism, Biography of an Immigrant Soul, pp. 83-87; G. C. Journal, 1876, p. 377.
241. Ibid., p. 380; ibid., 1880, p. 392; ibid., 1884, p. 413; Gen'l Minutes, Fall, 1879, p. 135; ibid., Fall, 1895, p. 576; Minutes, West-deutschen Konferenz, 1895, p. 85.
242. Albert Bernhardt Faust, The German Element in the United States with Special Reference to its Political, Moral, Social, and Educational Influence, I, 469; G. C. Journal, 1884, p. 415; P. F. Douglass, op. cit., pp. 88 f.; Minutes, Nördlichen deutschen Konferenz, 1887, p. 1; ibid., 1895, p. 91; Gen'l Minutes, Fall, 1895, p. 571.
243. Ibid., 1874, pp. 114, 284; ibid., Fall, 1879, p. 45; ibid., Fall, 1883, p. 218; ibid., Fall, 1888, p. 386; ibid., Fall, 1892, pp. 388 f.; Seventy-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1891), pp. 313 f.; ibid., 74th (1892), p. 318; ibid., 75th (1893), pp. 290 f.; Minutes, Oregon Conference, 1883, p. 30; Minutes, Columbia River Conference, 1884, p. 25; Minutes, Puget Sound Conference, 1884, p. 43; ibid., 1885, p. 20; G. C. Journal, 1892, Appendix, p. 415.
244. Ibid., 1868, p. 570.
245. Christian Advocate and Journal, XXII (1847), 50 (Dec. 15), 198.
246. Ibid., XXIII (1848), 44 (Oct. 25), 171; Twenty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1845-46), pp. 56 f.
247. Christian Advocate and Journal, XXII (1847), 3 (Jan. 20), 11.
248. Ibid., 22 (June 2), 87.
249. Twenty-sixth Ann., M. S. (1844-45), p. 57.
250. Christian Advocate and Journal, XXX (1855), 41 (Oct. 11), 162.
251. G. C. Journal, 1868, Appendix, p. 569.
252. Christian Advocate and Journal, XXIII (1848), 35 (Aug. 30), 138; Forty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1860), p. 75.
253. John L. Nuelsen, Introduction to P. F. Douglass, op. cit., pp. xiv, xv.
254. George T. Flom, "The Scandinavian Factor in the American Population," The Iowa Journal of History and Politics, III (1905), 1 (January), 90 f.; Prescott F. Hall, Immigration and Its Effects Upon the United States, p. 62.
255. Kendrick Charles Babcock, "The Scandinavian Element in the United States,"

- University of Illinois Studies in the Social Sciences*, III (1914), 3 (September), 72 f.; G. T. Flom, op. cit., p. 82.
256. Fifty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1873), p. 164; C. Hobart, op. cit., pp. 304 f.
257. George M. Stephenson, The Religious Aspects of Swedish Immigration, A Study of Immigrant Churches, p. 133.
258. Nils M. Liljegren, N. O. Westergreen, and C. G. Wallenius, Svenska Metodismen i Amerika, pp. 292 f.
259. Ibid., pp. 286-90.
260. Ibid., pp. 152 ff.; Henry C. Whyman, "The Conflict and Adjustment of Two Religious Cultures—The Swedish and the American . . .," pp. 166-67; Twenty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1845-46), pp. 94 ff.; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., II, 180, 182 ff.; Gen'l Minutes, III, 578.
261. Missionary Advocate, II (1846), 5 (August), 36; Twenty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1845-46), pp. 94 f.
262. Missionary Advocate, II (1846), 5 (August), 36; Thirty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1854), pp. 83 f.; ibid., 37th (1855), p. 56; Christian Advocate and Journal, XXVII (1852), 51 (Dec. 16), 202; John Olaf Olson Anders, The Origin and History of Swedish Religious Organizations in Minnesota, p. 10; Abel Stevens, Supplementary History of American Methodism . . ., p. 203.
263. Thirtieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1848-49), p. 91; ibid., 31st (1849-50), p. 77; Christian Advocate and Journal, XXVII (1852), 48 (Nov. 25), 191.
264. N. M. Liljegren, et al., op. cit., pp. 188 f.; Gen'l Minutes, 1873, p. 107; ibid., 1875, pp. 48, 49; ibid., 1876, p. 129; Forty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1860), pp. 70 f.
265. Forty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1867), pp. 125 f.; ibid., 53rd (1871), pp. 122 f.; ibid., 54th (1872), p. 144; ibid., 60th (1878), pp. 172 f.; S. A. Seaman, op. cit., p. 398; N. M. Liljegren, et al., op. cit., p. 342.
266. Ibid., p. 340.
267. Thirty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1854), p. 112; ibid., 37th (1855), p. 57; ibid., 42nd (1860), p. 70; ibid., 47th (1865), p. 132.
268. N. M. Liljegren, et al., op. cit., pp. 345, 350; J. Mudge, op. cit., p. 311; Gen'l Minutes, Spring, 1879, p. 53; ibid., Spring, 1880, pp. 53, 67.
269. N. M. Liljegren, et al., op. cit., pp. 169, 191 f.; Gen'l Minutes, IV, 261, 263.
270. Christian Advocate and Journal, XXVIII (1853), 33 (Aug. 18), 130; ibid., XXIX (1854), 15 (April 13), 59; ibid., 47 (Nov. 23), 186.
271. N. M. Liljegren, et al., op. cit., p. 208; Christian Advocate and Journal, XXIX (1854), 34 (Aug. 24), 134.
272. Gen'l Minutes, VI, 143, 450 f.; Missionary Advocate, XXII (1866), 4 (July), 31; Forty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1860), pp. 680 f.
273. Thirty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1850-51), p. 63; ibid., 33rd (1851-52), p. 64; Minutes, Iowa Conference, 1853, pp. 232, 237; E. H. Waring, op. cit., p. 149; Ernst Wilhelm Olson, Ed., History of the Swedes of Illinois, Part I, pp. 357, 361.
274. E. W. Olson, Ed., op. cit., Part I, pp. 398-400; Gen'l Minutes, 1866, p. 222; ibid., Fall, 1893, p. 383.
275. C. Hobart, op. cit., p. 118; E. W. Olson, Ed., op. cit., Part I, p. 360.
276. Christian Advocate and Journal, XXIX (1854), 34 (Aug. 24), 134; C. Hobart, op. cit., p. 119; Thirty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1854), pp. 114 f.; C. G. Nelson, "Swedish Methodism in Minnesota," in Algot E. Strand, Compiler and Ed., A History of the Swedish-Americans of Minnesota, I, 203.
277. J. O. O. Anders, op. cit., pp. 34 f.
278. C. Hobart, op. cit., pp. 307 f., 309; Minutes, Minnesota Conference, 1872, p. 36; J. O. O. Anders, op. cit., pp. 12, 34 f.; C. G. Nelson, in A. E. Strand, Compiler and Ed., op. cit., I, 205, 211.
279. Minutes, Minnesota Conference, 1873, p. 60; ibid., 1876, p. 56.
280. Minutes, Austin Conference, 1881, p. 15; ibid., 1883, p. 16; E. W. Olson, Ed., op. cit., Part I, p. 411. Olson states that a Swedish District was formed in 1881 but the Conference Minutes do not evidence this.
281. Minutes, California Conference, 1892, p. 23; ibid., 1895, pp. 22, 100; E. W. Olson,

- Ed., op. cit., Part I, p. 411; Minutes, Puget Sound Conference, 1890, p. 21; ibid., 1895, p. 62.
282. N. M. Liljegren, et al., op. cit., pp. 217 f.; G. C. Journal, 1868, Appendix, p. 576.
283. N. M. Liljegren, et al., op. cit., p. 220; Gen'l Minutes, Fall, 1881, p. 234.
284. N. M. Liljegren, et al., op. cit., p. 369; G. M. Stephenson, op. cit., p. 262; G. C. Journal, 1876, p. 380; Protokoll, Nordvestra Svenska Arskonferens, 1877, pp. 24-26; ibid., 1893, pp. 26-29, 70; Gen'l Minutes, 1877, pp. 92, 259 f.; ibid., Fall, 1893, pp. 383 f., 533; E. W. Olson, Ed., op. cit., Part I, p. 408; Minutes, New York East Conference, 1895, pp. 58, 104 f.
285. John E. Molee, letter, quoted by K. C. Babcock, op. cit., III, 45 f. See also Theodore C. Blegen, Norwegian Migration to America, The American Transition, pp. 102 f.
286. K. C. Babcock, op. cit., III, 62; Thirty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1850-51), p. 64; Christian Advocate and Journal, XXVI (1851), 43 (Oct. 23), 170.
287. Ibid., XXVII (1852), 16 (April 15), 62; ibid., 19 (May 6), 74; ibid., 29 (July 15), 114; ibid., 30 (July 22), 118; E. W. Olson, Ed., op. cit., Part I, p. 360.
288. Christian Advocate and Journal, XXVIII (1853), 27 (July 7), 106.
289. Thirty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1856), pp. 84 f.; J. O. O. Anders, op. cit., p. 11; T. C. Blegen, op. cit., pp. 120 f.
290. Gen'l Minutes, 1860, pp. 207, 266, 288.
291. Minutes, West Wisconsin Conference, 1863, p. 166; ibid., p. 190; Minutes, Wisconsin Conference, 1870, p. 228; ibid., 1870, p. 272.
292. Christian Advocate and Journal, XXVIII (1853), 23 (June 9), 90; Thirty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1854), pp. 114, 115; C. Hobart, op. cit., pp. 119, 151, 300; C. G. Nelson, in A. E. Strand, Compiler and Ed., op. cit., I, 201 f.; J. O. O. Anders, op. cit., pp. 33-35.
293. Minutes, Minnesota Conference, 1872, p. 36; Fifty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1874), p. 148.
294. C. Hobart, op. cit., pp. 307 f.
295. Minutes, Minnesota Conference, 1876, p. 11.
296. Sixty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1883), pp. 240 f.; ibid., 66th (1884), p. 248.
297. Seventy-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1889), pp. 325, 327.
298. Seventy-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1890), p. 306; Gen'l Minutes, Fall, 1880, p. 234.
299. Ibid., Fall, 1883, p. 217; Seventy-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1890), p. 307.
300. Seventy-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1892), pp. 331, 333.
301. K. C. Babcock, op. cit., III, 45; N. M. Liljegren, et al., op. cit., pp. 214 ff.; G. C. Journal, 1868, Appendix, p. 577.
302. E. W. Olson, Ed., op. cit., Part I, pp. 404 f.; G. M. Stephenson, op. cit., p. 259; Thirty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1851-52), pp. 62 f.; ibid., 45th (1863), p. 102; ibid., 54th (1872), pp. 145 f.; ibid., 72nd (1890), p. 308; N. M. Liljegren, et al., op. cit., pp. 266 ff., 322.
303. Seventy-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1892), p. 384.
304. J. O. O. Anders, op. cit., pp. 80, 84; Alfred O. Fonkalsrud, The Scandinavian-American, pp. 138 f.
305. Christian Advocate and Journal, XXII (1847), 6 (Feb. 10), 21.
306. "Journal of the General Conference, 1848," pp. 53 f., in G. C. Journals, III; Thirty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1850-51), pp. 65 f.; ibid., 33rd (1851-52), pp. 65 f.; ibid., 34th (1852), p. 26.
307. Christian Advocate and Journal, XXIX (1854), 31 (Aug. 3), 122; Thirty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1855), p. 60.
308. Christian Advocate and Journal, XXIX (1854), 42 (Oct. 19), 166; ibid., XXX (1855), 37 (Sept. 13), 140.
309. Fiftieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1868), p. 144; ibid., 52nd (1870), p. 120.
310. Fifty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1876), p. 146; ibid., 59th (1877), p. 166.
311. Sixty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1881), p. 243; Gen'l Minutes, Spring, 1886, p. 57.
312. Sixty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1887), pp. 352 f.; Minutes, B. M., XI, 276 f., 299.

313. Seventy-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1891), pp. 344 f.
314. G. C. Journal, 1860, Appendix, p. 383.
315. Forty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1865), pp. 133 ff.; ibid., 48th (1866), p. 113; ibid., 50th (1868), p. 147; Christian Advocate, XLIV (1869), 47 (Nov. 25), 371.
316. Ibid., XLVI (1871), 4 (Jan. 26), 29; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., I, 148 ff.
317. Ibid., 159 f.; Fifty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1870), p. 124; ibid., 53rd (1871), p. 136; ibid., 62nd (1880), p. 205; Mrs. Otis Gibson, "Woman's Missionary Society of the Pacific Coast," in Mrs. L. H. Daggett, Ed., Historical Sketches of Woman's Missionary Societies in America and England, p. 137; Second Annual Report, W. F. M. S. (1871), p. 4; First Annual Report, Board of Managers, Woman's Home Missionary Society (1881-82), p. 14; "Minutes, General Executive Board, Woman's Home Missionary Society," ms., IV, 28.
318. Fifty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1875), p. 149; ibid., 62nd (1880), p. 204; Christian Advocate, XLVIII (1873), 8 (Feb. 20), 61.
319. Fifty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1870), p. 127; Christian Advocate, XLV (1870), 48 (Dec. 1), 381; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., I, 152.
320. Sixtieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1878), p. 176.
321. Sixty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1881), p. 251; ibid., 74th (1892), pp. 355 f.
322. Sixty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1883), pp. 207 f.; ibid., 75th (1893), pp. 319 f.; ibid., 77th (1895), pp. 312, 313, 314 f.; Gospel in All Lands, January, 1885, p. 24.
323. Christian Advocate, XLIV (1869), 47 (Nov. 25), 371; Sixty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1880), p. 207; Journal, Oregon Conference, 1878, pp. 31 f.
324. Sixty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1883), p. 211; ibid., 67th (1885), p. 254.
325. Sixty-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1882), p. 179; ibid., 67th (1885), p. 255.
326. Mrs. O. Gibson, "Woman's Missionary Society of the Pacific Coast," in Mrs. L. H. Daggett, Ed., op. cit., pp. 136-41; Christian Advocate, XLVIII (1873), 27 (July 3), 209; Mrs. T. L. Tomkinson, Twenty Years' History of the Woman's Home Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, pp. 202 f.; Sixty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1881), pp. 254 f.; O. Gibson, The Chinese in America, pp. 134 ff.
327. Sixty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1885), pp. 249 f.
328. Fifty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1870), pp. 123 f.; ibid., 61st (1879), p. 178.
329. Christian Advocate, XLVIII (1873), 27 (July 3), 209; Sixty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1884), pp. 217 f.; ibid., 71st (1889), pp. 339, 340; ibid., 73rd (1891), pp. 348 f.; ibid., 75th (1893), pp. 318 f.; ibid., 76th (1894), p. 348.
330. Ibid., 76th (1894), p. 345; ibid., 77th (1895), p. 311.
331. Sixty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1884), p. 216; ibid., 74th (1892), pp. 353 f.
332. Seventy-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1889), p. 339; ibid., 75th (1893), pp. 315 f.
333. Fifty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1875), p. 149; ibid., 61st (1879), pp. 179 f.; ibid., 66th (1884), p. 213; ibid., 74th (1892), p. 359.
334. Gospel in All Lands, March, 1892, pp. 148 ff.; Seventy-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1891), p. 348.
335. Sixty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1879), p. 181; ibid., 62nd (1880), p. 204; ibid., 63rd (1881), p. 250; ibid., 68th (1886), pp. 304 f.; ibid., 70th (1888), p. 406; Gen'l Minutes, Fall, 1884, p. 240.
336. Sixty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1885), pp. 250, 252; ibid., 68th (1886), pp. 306 f.; ibid., 71st (1889), p. 345.
337. Seventy-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1890), pp. 336, 337 f.; ibid., 74th (1892), pp. 360-62.
338. Ibid., 74th (1892), p. 362; ibid., 77th (1895), p. 316.
339. Sixty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1885), p. 252; ibid., 70th (1888), p. 404; ibid., 74th (1892), p. 361; ibid., 76th (1894), p. 350; Minutes, California Conference, 1892, p. 74.
340. Seventy-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1890), p. 339.
341. Seventy-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1892), p. 361; ibid., 75th (1893), p. 320; ibid., 76th (1894), pp. 349-53.

342. Seventieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1888), pp. 404 ff.; ibid., 71st (1889), p. 346; ibid., 72nd (1890), p. 339.
343. Ibid., 72nd (1890), pp. 339 f.; ibid., 73rd (1891), pp. 355 f.
344. Seventy-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1892), p. 362; ibid., 75th (1893), pp. 320, 322.
345. Gen'l Minutes, Fall, 1895, p. 286.
346. Seventy-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1891), p. 361; ibid., 74th (1892), pp. 367 f.; ibid., 75th (1893), p. 326; ibid., 76th (1894), pp. 357 f.
347. Seventy-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1889), pp. 351 f.; ibid., 72nd (1890), p. 346; ibid., 75th (1893), p. 325; ibid., 76th (1894), p. 357.
348. Ibid., 76th (1894), pp. 356 f.
349. Seventy-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1889), pp. 353 f.
350. Seventy-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1892), p. 366; ibid., 76th (1894), pp. 356, 358; Minutes, Rock River Conference, 1894, p. 37; ibid., 1895, pp. 14, 45.
351. Ibid., 1885, pp. 18, 21; ibid., 1887, p. 22; ibid., 1888, p. 48; ibid., 1892, p. 40; ibid., 1895, p. 45.
352. Sixty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1885), p. 249; ibid., 68th (1886), p. 296; ibid., 69th (1887), pp. 359 f.; Minutes, East Ohio Conference, 1893, pp. 50, [72].
353. Sixty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1886), p. 296; ibid., 69th (1887), pp. 360 f.
354. Seventy-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1891), pp. 359 f.; ibid., 74th (1892), p. 366; ibid., 75th (1893), p. 325.
355. C. V. Anthony, op. cit., p. 278.
356. Seventy-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1891), pp. 361 f.; ibid., 74th (1892), p. 368; ibid., 75th (1893), pp. 326 f.; Gen'l Minutes, Spring, 1895, p. 144.
357. Seventy-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1892), pp. 368 f.; ibid., 76th (1894), pp. 358 f.; Minutes, New York East Conference, 1893, pp. 38, 72.
358. Seventy-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1893), p. 327; ibid., 76th (1894), p. 360; Minutes, Philadelphia Conference, 1894, p. 45; ibid., 1895, p. 123.
359. Seventy-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1893), p. 327; ibid., 76th (1894), p. 359; Minutes, New York East Conference, 1893, p. 38; ibid., 1894, p. 73.
360. "Journal of the General Conference, 1848," pp. 84 f., in G. C. Journals, III. For account of the course of the discussion in the Church at large see John N. Norwood, The Schism in the Methodist Episcopal Church, 1844, A Study of Slavery and Ecclesiastical Politics, ch. V.
361. Daily Christian Advocate, May 4, 1848, p. 2.
362. "Journal of the General Conference, 1848," p. 117, in G. C. Journals, III.
363. Ibid., p. 97; Discipline, 1848, p. 166.
364. Editorial, Pittsburgh Christian Advocate, West Virginia Conference Supplement (Feb. 19, 1891), quoted in Wallace Guy Smeltzer, Methodism on the Headwaters of the Ohio . . ., p. 161.
365. Daily Zion's Herald, May 28, 1852, pp. 90 f.; "Journal of the General Conference, 1852," p. 92, in G. C. Journals, III; Gen'l Minutes, V, 120, 123; ibid., 1873, pp. 159 f.
366. "Journal of the General Conference, 1856," p. 162, in G. C. Journals, III.
367. Bishops' Address, "Journal of the General Conference, 1856," pp. 199 f., in G. C. Journals, III.
368. R. N. Scott, et al., Eds., Official Records of the Union and Confederate Armies, as quoted by W. W. Sweet, op. cit., p. 98.
369. Forty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1863), pp. 84 f.
370. "Journal of the General Conference, 1852," p. 65, in G. C. Journals, III.
371. G. C. Journal, 1860, pp. 308 f.
372. Ibid., 1864, Appendix, p. 279.
373. Ibid., pp. 252 f., 263, Appendix, 487.
374. Christian Advocate and Journal, XXXIX (1864), 44 (Nov. 3), 349.
375. G. C. Journal, 1864, p. 130.
376. William Warren Sweet, "The Methodist Episcopal Church and Reconstruction," Transactions of the Illinois State Historical Society for the Year 1914, p. 89;

James Ford Rhodes, History of the United States from the Compromise of 1850 to the Final Restoration of Home Rule at the South in 1877, V, 568-86, 598.

377. G. C. Journal, 1864, pp. 216, 225.

378. R. N. Price, Holston Methodism, From its Origin to the Present Time, IV, 353 ff., 392 f.; J. E. Bryant, "Why is Our Church in the South?" in Fourteenth Annual Report, Board of Church Extension Society, for the Year 1879, pp. 27 f.; J. M. Buckley, A History of Methodists in the United States, American Church History Series, V, 517; Christian Advocate, XLII (1867), 42 (Oct. 17), 333.

379. Minutes, Mississippi Mission Conference, 1865, pp. 2, 3, 4, 6; Forty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1865), pp. 149 f.; ibid., 48th (1866), p. 115; Missionary Advocate, XXIII (1867), 3 (June 18), 22 f.

380. Ibid., pp. 22 ff.; ibid., XXIV (1868), 8 (Nov. 17), 6 f.

381. Ibid., XXI (1865), 3 (June), 21; ibid., 9 (December), 69; Forty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1866), pp. 137 ff., 141.

382. Daniel Curry, Life-Story of Rev. Davis Wasgatt Clark, D.D., Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, pp. 228, 231; Forty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1866), pp. 132 f.

383. Ibid., 48th (1866), pp. 129-32; Gen'l Minutes, 1867, pp. 8 f.

384. Edmund Jordan Hammond, The Methodist Episcopal Church in Georgia . . ., pp. 105-107.

385. Ibid., pp. 111-13.

386. Christian Advocate, XLII (1867), 3 (Jan. 17), 21; ibid., XLIV (1869), 10 (March 11), 77.

387. Ibid., XLIV (1869), 4 (Jan. 28), 29; Minutes, North Carolina Conference, 1875, p. 15.

388. Christian Advocate, XLII (1867), 44 (Oct. 31), 348; Fifty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1877), p. 175; ibid., 69th (1887), p. 367; ibid., 77th (1895), p. 322.

389. Minutes, Louisiana Conference, 1869, pp. 1, 3, 5; ibid., 1879, pp. 30-33; Christian Advocate, XLIV (1869), 4 (Jan. 28), 29.

390. G. C. Journal, 1864, pp. 216, 225; L. C. Matlack, "The Methodist Episcopal Church in The Southern States," Methodist Quarterly Review, LIV (January, 1872), 103-26.

391. Minutes, Texas Conference, 1873, p. 15; ibid., 1874, pp. 19, 25; E. O. Haven, "Our Work Among the Colored People," Christian Advocate, XLVII (1873), 8 (Feb. 20), 57.

392. W. W. Sweet, "The Methodist Episcopal Church and Reconstruction," Transactions of the Illinois State Historical Society for the Year 1914, pp. 90 f.; Minutes, New York East Conference, 1895, pp. 41 f.; W. H. Daniels, Ed., Memorials of Gilbert Haven, Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, p. 267; Christian Advocate, XLII (1867), 14 (April 4), 108; Minutes, Tennessee Conference, 1869, pp. 9, 19; Minutes, Louisiana Conference, 1875, p. 6; Minutes, Georgia Conference, 1885, p. 23; Merle Curti, The Growth of American Thought, p. 483.

393. Minutes, Kentucky Conference, 1868, p. 14.

394. G. C. Journal, 1868, p. 318; Christian Advocate, XLIV (1869), 11 (March 18), 85.

395. Minutes, Lexington Conference, 1882, p. 14; ibid., 1895, pp. 51 f.

396. G. C. Journal, 1868, p. 130; E. J. Hammond, op. cit., pp. 117 f.

397. G. C. Journal, 1868, pp. 318 f.

398. Ibid., 1872, p. 428.

399. Minutes, West Texas Conference, 1886, p. 22; ibid., 1887, p. 21; ibid., 1893, pp. 38, 42.

400. Christian Advocate, XLIV (1869), 6 (Feb. 11), 45.

401. G. C. Journal, 1872, pp. 92-94.

402. Ibid., 1876, pp. 329 f.

403. Christian Advocate, LI (1876), 11 (March 16), 83.

404. Ibid., 7 (Feb. 17), 53.

405. Ibid., 23 (June 8), 182.

406. G. C. Journal, 1876, pp. 329-31.
407. Daily Christian Advocate, May 30, 1876, p. 1; G. C. Journal, 1876, pp. 113, 331 f.
408. Ibid., p. 235.
409. Ibid., 1880, pp. 289, 393; Christian Advocate, LV (1880), 45 (Nov. 4), 712.
410. Minutes, West Texas Conference, 1876, p. 10; Christian Advocate, LI (1876), 52 (Dec. 28), 410.
411. Ibid., LV (1880), 9 (Feb. 26), 132; G. C. Journal, 1880, pp. 247, 382.
412. Minutes, Blue Ridge Conference, 1889, p. 20.
413. Minutes, Central Tennessee Conference, 1878, pp. 1, 6, 18, 36; ibid., 1895, p. 31.
414. Christian Advocate, IV (1880), 11 (March 11), 169; Minutes, South Carolina Conference, 1880, pp. 12 f.
415. G. C. Journal, 1880, pp. 237, 393; ibid., 1888, p. 418; Journal, Mississippi Conference, 1888, p. 10; ibid., 1890, pp. 14 f.
416. G. C. Journal, 1892, pp. 215 f., 416 f.; Minutes, Upper Mississippi Conference, 1893, pp. 7 f.; Minutes, Alabama Conference, 1893, p. 14.
417. Christian Advocate, LV (1880), 10 (March 4), 153.
418. G. C. Journal, 1884, p. 416; Minutes, Florida Conference, 1886, pp. 9, 11, 12.
419. G. C. Journal, 1872, pp. 224, 427; ibid., 1880, p. 393.
420. Minutes, Missouri Conference, 1884, pp. 142, 147; ibid., 1886, pp. 6, 61; Minutes, St. Louis Conference, 1884, p. 172; ibid., 1886, pp. 8-9; G. C. Journal, 1884, p. 415.
421. Minutes, Northwest Kansas Conference, 1888, pp. 12, 38; Minutes, Kansas Conference, 1888, p. 27; G. C. Journal, 1888, p. 406; Minutes, Central Missouri Conference, 1889, pp. 6 f.
422. G. C. Journal, 1892, p. 415; Minutes, Gulf Mission, 1893, pp. 1, 3, 9.
423. Gen'l Minutes, IV, 540; ibid., Spring, 1895, pp. 127 et seq.; ibid., Fall, pp. 589, 594, 596; The Methodist Year Book for 1896, pp. 36, 37. In two cases, the South Carolina and the West Texas Conferences, the statistics used are for 1894, statistics for 1895 not being available.
424. Christian Advocate, XLI (1866), 8 (Feb. 22), 58.
425. Report of Organizing Convention of Freedmen's Aid Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, 1866, p. 4.
426. Ibid., pp. 12, 14; G. C. Journal, 1868, p. 332; Annual Report, Freedmen's Aid Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, 1868, p. 2.
427. Ibid., 1867, p. 2; ibid., 1868, p. 7.
428. Ibid., 1868, pp. 13 f.; G. C. Journal, 1868, pp. 332, Appendix, 572 f.
429. Ibid., 1872, p. 413; ibid., 1876, p. 310.
430. Ann. Rep., Freedmen's Aid Society . . ., 1877, p. 19.
431. G. C. Journal, 1880, p. 293; Ann. Rep., Freedmen's Aid Society . . . 1885, pp. 20 f.
432. G. C. Journal, 1884, pp. 252, 365 f.
433. Ann. Rep., Freedmen's Aid Society . . ., 1887, pp. 28 f., J. D. Walsh, "The Methodist Episcopal Church in the South," Methodist Review, LXX (March, 1888), 257-60; G. C. Journal, 1888, pp. 451, 698 f.
434. Ann. Rep., Freedmen's Aid Society . . ., 1870, pp. 12 f.; ibid., 1884, pp. 19 f.; ibid., 1886, pp. 23 f.
435. Ibid., 1895, p. 2.
436. Twenty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1844-45), pp. 85 f.; ibid., 28th (1846-47), p. 96.
437. S. Olin, op. cit., II, 416 f.
438. Twenty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1846-47), p. 80; ibid., 31st (1849-50), pp. 64 f.
439. Thirty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1850-51), pp. 70-72.
440. "Journal of the General Conference, 1852," p. 36, in G. C. Journals, III; Thirty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1854), pp. 71 f.
441. Forty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1863), p. 91; Missionary Advocate, XVIII (1862), 1 (April), 6 f.; S. G. Arnold, "President Grant's Indian Policy," Methodist Quarterly Review, LIX (July, 1877), 410.

442. Ibid., pp. 411 ff.; George Warren Hinman, The American Indian and Christian Missions, pp. 95 f.
443. J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., I, 130 f.; Gospel in All Lands, July, 1885, p. 324; Fifty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1874), p. 153.
444. Ibid., pp. 152, 153; ibid., 62nd (1880), pp. 194 f.
445. Ibid., 62nd (1880), pp. 194 f.; ibid., 65th (1883), pp. 199 f.
446. Twenty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1847-48), p. 88; Eleventh Ann. Rep., B. M., W. H. M. S. (1891-92), pp. 56 f.
447. G. C. Journal, 1892, pp. 167 f.
448. Thirtieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1848-49), p. 77.
449. Minutes, B. M., V, 15; Thirtieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1848-49), pp. 77 f.; ibid., 37th (1855), p. 64.
450. J. H. Pitezel, Lights and Shades of Missionary Life . . ., pp. 21, 38.
451. Christian Advocate and Journal, XXV (1850), 9 (Feb. 28), 34.
452. Thirty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1851-52), p. 91.
453. Christian Advocate and Journal, XXIX (1854), 23 (June 8), 90.
454. Missionary Advocate, XI (1855), 4 (July), 29; ibid., XIV (1858), 9 (December), 70; Gen'l Minutes, 1860, p. 307; ibid., 1861, p. 194; Sixty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1887), p. 347; ibid., 70th (1888), p. 388; Minutes, Detroit Conference, 1888, p. 43.
455. Twenty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1845-46), p. 89; ibid., 29th (1847-48), pp. 89 f.; ibid., 30th (1848-49), p. 81.
456. After 1883 the mission under the name of Kewawenon disappears from the Detroit Conference Minutes. The Missionary Society continued to make appropriations for the work. Through the following years it seems to have been incorporated into other appointments (Pequaming, L'Anse). In 1889 it was retransferred to Michigan Conference and quite likely appeared under the name of Clarion. Forty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1865), p. 116; ibid., 72nd (1890), p. 326; Missionary Advocate, XXI (1866), 11 (February), 86; ibid., XXII (1866), 8 (November), 62 f.
457. Twenty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1845-46), pp. 90 f.; ibid., 29th (1847-48), p. 92; ibid., 30th (1848-49), pp. 84 f.; ibid., 31st (1849-50), p. 71.
458. Twenty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1846-47), pp. 92, 94; ibid., 33rd (1851-52), pp. 72-78; ibid., 36th (1854), pp. 77 f.; Christian Advocate and Journal, XXVII (1852), 27 (July 1), 106; ibid., XXVIII (1853), 11 (March 17), 42; ibid., 33 (Aug. 18), 131; Gen'l Minutes, V, 112, 273.
459. Thirty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1855), pp. 63-65; ibid., 39th (1857), p. 16.
460. Minutes, Michigan Conference, 1855, p. 9; Thirty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1856), p. 87; Missionary Advocate, XII (1856), 9 (December), 70.
461. Ibid., XIII (1857), 7 (October), 54.
462. Minutes, Michigan Conference, 1857, p. 472; Forty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1859), pp. 58 f.; ibid., 42nd (1860), p. 65; ibid., 69th (1887), p. 348; Missionary Advocate, XIV (1858), 6 (September), 45 f.
463. Ibid., XX (1864), 5 (August), 38; ibid., XXII (1866), 2 (May), 14; Forty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1865), pp. 120 f.; Gen'l Minutes, 1859, p. 352; ibid., 1866, p. 173; Minutes, Michigan Conference, 1873, pp. 31, 60; ibid., 1874, pp. 34, 78.
464. Seventy-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1890), pp. 324 f.
465. Sixty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1887), p. 348.
466. Seventy-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1890), p. 324.
467. Ibid., p. 326.
468. Twenty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1846-47), pp. 82 f.; ibid., 29th (1847-48), pp. 86 f.; Christian Advocate and Journal, XXIX (1854), 39 (Sept. 28), 154; W. McDonald, letter, Zion's Herald, as reprinted in Missionary Advocate, XII (1856), 8 (November), 59; ibid., XIV (1858), 7 (October), 52; ibid., XXII (1866), 6 (September), 46.
469. Sixty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1887), p. 351; ibid., 72nd (1890), p. 327.
470. Twenty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1846-47), pp. 81 f.; Thomas Commuck, "Sketch of the Brothertown Indians," in Report and Collections of the State Historical Society of Wisconsin for the Years 1857 and 1858, IV, 297 f.

471. Thirty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1855), p. 66.
472. Minutes, Wisconsin Conference, 1858, p. 6; ibid., 1859, p. 8; ibid., 1860, p. 7; ibid., 1861, p. 6; ibid., 1862, p. 24; W. DeLoss Love, Samson Oocom, and The Christian Indians of New England, pp. 329 f.
473. Charles E. Brown, Wisconsin Indian Tribes, p. 6; Forty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1863), p. 82.
474. Gen'l Minutes, III, 631; ibid., IV, 48; Twenty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1847-48), p. 94; ibid., 31st (1849-50), p. 73; ibid., 38th (1856), pp. 92 ff.; ibid., 47th (1865), pp. 122 f.; ibid., 68th (1886), p. 283; ibid., 75th (1893), pp. 309 f.; ibid., 77th (1895), p. 302.
475. Gen'l Minutes, IV, 628; ibid., Fall, 1895, p. 496; Christian Advocate and Journal, XXIII (1848), 45 (Nov. 8), 178; Forty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1865), p. 123; ibid., 54th (1872), pp. 138 f.; ibid., 68th (1886), p. 283; ibid., 72nd (1890), pp. 320, 321.
476. Twenty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1847-48), p. 97.
477. Christian Advocate and Journal, XXII (1847), 47 (Nov. 24), 186; Twenty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1847-48), pp. 96 ff.; ibid., 69th (1887), pp. 349 f.; Osmon C. Baker, letter, Zion's Herald, as reprinted in Missionary Advocate, XIII (1857), 6 (September), 46.
478. Forty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1865), pp. 113 f.; ibid., 55th (1873), p. 159; ibid., 69th (1887), pp. 349 f.; ibid., 70th (1888), p. 392; Minutes, B. M., XV, 18. For a more detailed account of the mission see W. W. Clawson, "Brief Historical Sketch of the St. Regis Indian Mission, 1847-1897," ms.
479. Thirty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1854), pp. 80-82; ibid., 37th (1855), p. 67.
480. Forty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1865), p. 116.
481. Fifty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1871), p. 118; ibid., 54th (1872), pp. 137 f.; Christian Advocate, XLVIII (1873), 14 (April 3), 107.
482. Seventieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1888), p. 389.
483. Minutes, B. M., XI, 232; Seventy-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1890), p. 323.
484. Ibid., pp. 323 f.; ibid., 74th (1892), p. 348.
485. Alfred Brunson, A Western Pioneer . . ., II, 119 f.; Christian Advocate, CXXIII (1948), 29 (July 15), 3, 30 f.; Twenty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1846-47), pp. 88 f.; ibid., 31st (1849-50), pp. 70 f.; C. Hobart, op. cit., pp. 26-29.
486. Ibid., p. 26; Gen'l Minutes, V, 621, 624; ibid., VI, 95.
487. Twenty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1846-47), p. 87; ibid., 31st (1849-50), p. 70; ibid., 33rd (1851-52), p. 90; C. Hobart, op. cit., pp. 26-33; Missionary Advocate, VI (1850), 9 (December), 69 f.; J. H. Pitezel, op. cit., p. 307.
488. Thirty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1856), p. 96; ibid., 75th (1893), pp. 310 f.; Minutes, Minnesota Conference, 1894, p. 52.
489. Thirty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1849-50), p. 75; "Journal of the General Conference, 1848," p. 68, in G. C. Journals, III; Minutes, B. M., V, 79.
490. Historical Record and Directory of the Washington Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, Kansas City, Kansas (1890), pp. 8 f.; Gen'l Minutes, IV, 287, 397.
491. Thirty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1850-51), pp. 75 f.; ibid., 33rd (1851-52), p. 69; W. H. Goode, letter, Western Christian Advocate, as reprinted in Missionary Advocate, X (1854), 7 (October), 54; Gen'l Minutes, IV, 652; ibid., V, 129.
492. W. H. Goode, Outposts of Zion . . ., pp. 309 f.; Thirty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1855), pp. 51 f.; Missionary Advocate, XII (1857), 12 (March), 91.
493. Missionary Advocate, XII (1856), 4 (July), 28; Historical Record and Directory of the Washington Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church . . ., pp. 12 f.; Sixty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1880), p. 198; ibid., 65th (1883), p. 222.
494. W. H. Goode, Outposts of Zion . . ., pp. 251, 253, 295; J. J. Lutz, "The Methodist Missions Among the Indian Tribes in Kansas," Transactions of the Kansas State Historical Society, IX (1906), 191 f.; Gen'l Minutes, IV, 397, 652; Thirty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1851-52), pp. 70 f.
495. W. H. Goode, Outposts of Zion . . ., pp. 279, 286; Gen'l Minutes, 1852, p. 129; ibid., 1853, p. 312; ibid., 1854, p. 480; ibid., 1855, p. 661; Thirty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1854), p. 82; ibid., 37th (1855), p. 66.

496. W. H. Goode, Outposts of Zion . . ., pp. 295 f.; Missionary Advocate, XI (1855), 1 (April), 6; Thirty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1850-51), pp. 75 f.; "Taking the Census and Other Incidents in 1855," Transactions of the Kansas State Historical Society, VIII (1905), 234.

497. Mrs. Ida M. Ferris, "The Sauks and Foxes in Franklin and Osage Counties, Kansas," Collections of the Kansas State Historical Society, XI (1909-10), 357; Gen'l Minutes, 1860, p. 46; F. W. Hodge, Ed., Handbook of American Indians North of Mexico, II, 477; Grant Foreman, The Last Trek of the Indians, pp. 222-28.

498. Thirty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1851), p. 70; G. Foreman, op. cit., pp. 209 ff.

499. Sixth Ann. Rep., B. M., W. H. M. S. (1886-87), p. 53; ibid., 14th (1894-95), pp. 106 f.; ibid., 15th (1895-96), p. 105; Woman's Home Missions, 7 (1890), 12 (December), 185; Mrs. T. L. Tomkinson, op. cit., pp. 158 f.

500. Sixty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1885), pp. 263 f.

501. "Minutes, General Executive Board, W. H. M. S.," ms., Sept. 28, 1886, II, 49; ibid., June 20, 1891, III, 95, 97; ibid., April 20, 1892, pp. 119 f.; Seventh Ann. Rep., B. M., W. H. M. S. (1887-88), pp. 55 f.; ibid., 8th (1888-89), p. 74; ibid., 10th (1890-91), p. 73; ibid., 11th (1891-92), p. 75; ibid., 14th (1894-95), p. 106; Gen'l Minutes, Spring, 1890, p. 91.

502. Fourth Ann. Rep., B. M., W. H. M. S. (1884-85), pp. 45, 88; ibid., 5th (1885-86), p. 90; ibid., 14th (1894-95), pp. 105 f.; Mrs. T. L. Tomkinson, op. cit., pp. 156 f.; Sixty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1885), p. 264; ibid., 70th (1888), p. 354; Gen'l Minutes, Spring, 1889, p. 90; ibid., Fall, 1892, pp. 391, 588.

503. Tenth Ann. Rep., B. M., W. H. M. S. (1890-91), p. 74; ibid., 12th (1892-93), p. 70.

504. Minutes, Rocky Mountain Conference, 1874, p. 22; ibid., 1876, pp. 16 f.; Gen'l Minutes, 1877, p. 80; ibid., Fall, 1878, p. 9; Sixty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1881), p. 240; Minutes, Montana Mission, 1882, p. 27; ibid., 1883, p. 30.

505. Sixty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1880), p. 194; ibid., 63rd (1881), p. 240; Woman's Home Missions, 2 (1885), 2 (February), 9; Ward Platt, Ed., Methodism and the Republic, A View of the Home Field, Present Conditions, Needs and Possibilities, p. 303.

506. Seventy-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1894), pp. 321 f., 337 f.; ibid., 77th (1895), pp. 290 ff.; Journal, North Montana Mission, 1894, pp. 6, 10.

507. Sixty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1880), pp. 194 f.; ibid., 63rd (1881), p. 241; ibid., 65th (1883), p. 200.

508. Minutes, Oregon Conference, 1878, pp. 28, 36; ibid., 1879, p. 43; ibid., 1884, p. 33 (for membership data, 1884, unpagged); ibid., 1885, p. 62; Fifty-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1872), p. 137; ibid., 55th (1873), pp. 158 f.; ibid., 63rd (1881), p. 239.

509. Minutes, Oregon Conference, 1887, p. 75.

510. Ibid., 1888, p. 40.

511. Seventy-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1893), p. 311; ibid., 77th (1895), pp. 303 f.; Minutes, Oregon Conference, 1890, pp. 44 f.; ibid., 1891, pp. 40, 63; ibid., 1895, pp. 61, 75.

512. Fifty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1873), p. 159; ibid., 56th (1874), pp. 156 ff.

513. Minutes, Oregon Conference, 1876, pp. 31 et seq.; ibid., 1877, p. 36; ibid., 1885, p. 62; ibid., 1887, pp. 75 f.; Fifty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1877), p. 173; ibid., 62nd (1880), p. 195.

514. Minutes, Oregon Conference, 1890, pp. 44 f.; ibid., 1891, p. 40; ibid., 1892, p. 45; ibid., 1894, p. 9; ibid., 1895, p. 62; Seventy-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1893), p. 311.

515. Fifty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1873), pp. 158 f.

516. Fifty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1874), p. 153; ibid., 59th (1877), p. 172; ibid., 63rd (1881), pp. 239 f.; Minutes, B. M., IX, 7, 39 f.

517. Gen'l Minutes, 1877, p. 80; ibid., Fall, 1878, p. 9; ibid., Fall, 1883, p. 305; Sixty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1881), p. 239; ibid., 64th (1882), p. 165.

518. Missionary Advocate, XXI (1865), 7 (October), 54 f.; Fifty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1871), p. 118; ibid., 56th (1874), pp. 154 f.; ibid., 59th (1877), p. 173; ibid., 64th (1882), pp. 163 f.; Mrs. T. L. Tomkinson, op. cit., p. 165; Minutes, Columbia River Conference, 1877, p. 15.
519. J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., I, 131; Fifty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1874), p. 155; ibid., 69th (1887), p. 346; ibid., 70th (1888), p. 387; ibid., 72nd (1890), pp. 321 f.; Gen'l Minutes, Fall, 1881, p. 339; Minutes, Columbia River Conference, 1887, p. 28.
520. Seventy-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1891), p. 343; ibid., 75th (1893), p. 310; Mrs. T. L. Tomkinson, op. cit., p. 166; Mrs. H. C. McCabe, "Indian and Frontier," Woman's Home Missions, 17 (1900), 1 (January), 13.
521. Minutes, Oregon Conference, 1882, pp. 15, 25; ibid., 1883, pp. 21, 40; Sixty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1886), pp. 283 f.; ibid., 75th (1893), p. 312; Fifth Ann. Rep., B. M., W. H. M. S. (1885-86), p. 91; ibid., 7th (1887-88), p. 56; ibid., 8th (1888-89), pp. 74 f.; ibid., 9th (1889-90), p. 78; ibid., 13th (1893-94), p. 86; ibid., 14th (1894-95), p. 108; "Minutes, General Executive Board, W. H. M. S.," ms., June 30, 1891, III, 97; Mrs. T. L. Tomkinson, op. cit., p. 162.
522. Fifty-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1872), p. 137; ibid., 55th (1873), p. 160, Minutes, Oregon Conference, 1875, p. 18; Minutes, Columbia River Conference, 1890, p. 41.
523. Minutes, California Conference, 1870, p. 21; ibid., 1872, p. 28; Fifty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1873), p. 157.
524. Minutes, California Conference, 1874, p. 18; ibid., 1875, p. 55; ibid., 1877, pp. 18, 57; ibid., 1878, p. 53; ibid., 1879, p. 57; ibid., 1880, p. 56; ibid., 1882, pp. 39 f., 90; ibid., 1883, pp. 23, 35, 92; Fifty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1874), p. 156.
525. Minutes, California Conference, 1893, p. 19; Seventy-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1894), pp. 333, 334.
526. Minutes, California Conference, 1870, p. 21; ibid., 1871, p. 18; ibid., 1872, p. 21; ibid., 1874, pp. 56, 63; ibid., 1876, pp. 57, 62; ibid., 1877, p. 57; Seventy-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1892), p. 346; ibid., 76th (1894), p. 334.
527. Fifty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1874), pp. 155 f.; Minutes, California Conference, 1875, p. 54; ibid., 1877, p. 57; ibid., 1878, pp. 9, 53.
528. ibid., 1891, pp. 22, 41; "Minutes, General Executive Board, W. H. M. S.," ms., June 20, 1891, III, 96; Eleventh Ann. Rep., B. M., W. H. M. S. (1891-92), p. 75; ibid., 13th (1893-94), p. 86; ibid., 14th (1894-95), p. 107; Seventy-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1891), p. 9; ibid., 74th (1892), pp. 346 ff.; ibid., 76th (1894), p. 333.
529. Minutes, California Conference, 1871, pp. 21, 25; ibid., 1872, p. 28; ibid., 1874, p. 63; ibid., 1875, p. 55; ibid., 1876, p. 62.
530. Woman's Home Missions, 17 (1900), 1 (January), 7 f.; "Minutes, General Executive Board, W. H. M. S.," ms., April 28, 1888, II, 94; ibid., Oct. 1-3, 1891, III, 102; Seventh Ann. Rep., B. M., W. H. M. S. (1887-88), pp. 52 f.; ibid., 9th (1889-90), p. 76.
531. Eleventh Ann. Rep., B. M., W. H. M. S. (1891-92), p. 71; ibid., 14th (1894-95), p. 102; Mrs. T. L. Tomkinson, op. cit., pp. 169 f.; Gen'l Minutes, Fall, 1892, p. 393.
532. Seventy-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1890), p. 328; ibid., 74th (1892), pp. 320 f.; ibid., 77th (1895), p. 274; Walter Weston, "The Navajo Indians," Gospel in All Lands, June, 1890, pp. 283 f.
533. Minutes, B. M., XIII, 179 f., 477; ibid., XIV, 276, 361; ibid., XV, 81; Seventy-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1892), p. 321; ibid., 75th (1893), pp. 292 f.; ibid., 76th (1894), p. 305; Gen'l Minutes, Fall, 1889, p. 361.
534. Seventy-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1895), p. 274; Fourteenth Ann. Rep., B. M., W. H. M. S. (1894-95), p. 101.
535. ibid., 11th (1891-92), pp. 71 f.; ibid., 13th (1893-94), p. 81; ibid., 14th (1894-95), pp. 101 f.; "Minutes, General Executive Board, W. H. M. S.," ms., Oct. 1-3, 1891, III, 102; Mrs. T. L. Tomkinson, op. cit., pp. 172 f.
536. Western Christian Advocate, reprinted in Missionary Advocate, XIV (1858), 7 (October), 53; ibid., XXII (1866), 6 (September), 46.

V

EXPANDING MISSIONS—CHINA

1. Stephen Olin, The Works of Stephen Olin, D.D., LL.D., Late President of the Wesleyan University, II, 434.
2. Twenty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1845-46), pp. 10, 12; ibid., 28th (1846-47), p. 11.
3. Fifty-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1872), p. 38.
4. Twentieth-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1846-47), pp. 41 f., 45; ibid., 29th (1847-48), pp. 40 f., 44; S. L. Baldwin, "Some Problems Solved by Methodism in China," Gospel in All Lands, February, 1889, p. 56; Missionary Advocate, II (1846), 3 (June), 27; Minutes, B. M., IV, 476 f.; ibid., V, 12; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, Missions and Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, I, 416; I. W. Wiley, China and Japan . . ., p. 196.
5. Christian Advocate and Journal, XXIII (1848), 39 (Sept. 27), 154; Twenty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1847-48), p. 47; ibid., 30th (1848-49), p. 29.
6. Frank Mason North, "The Missionary-Minded Women of Methodism," ms., pp. 44 f.; Minutes, B. M., V, 164 f.
7. For "Letter of Instructions" given White and Collins, see "Founding and Early History of our Chinese Mission, at Foochow, 1847-1853," pp. 20 ff., in "Manuscripts by Moses C. White . . . Relating to the Founding of Methodist Missions in Foochow, China."
8. Ibid., pp. 21 f.
9. "Early History of the China Mission of the Methodist Episcopal Church," p. 4, in "Manuscripts by Moses C. White . . . Relating to the Founding of Methodist Missions in Foochow, China."
10. Missionary Advocate, IV (1848), 2 (May), 12 f.; ibid., VI (1851), 11 (February), 84; Christian Advocate and Journal, XXIII (1848), 17 (April 26), 66; ibid., 27 (July 5), 106; "Founding and Early History . . .," p. 32, in White MSS. Collection.
11. Minutes, B. M., V, 100; Missionary Advocate, VII (1851), 10 (January), 73; "Founding and Early History . . .," p. 33, in White MSS. Collection.
12. Missionary Advocate, IV (1848), 7 (October), 53; "Founding and Early History . . .," pp. 29 f., in White MSS. Collection.
13. Christian Advocate and Journal, XXIV (1849), 38 (Sept. 20), 151.
14. Thirty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1850-51), p. 134; R. S. Maclay, "Woman's Work in our Foochow Mission," Heathen Woman's Friend, IV (1872), 3 (September), 328 f.
15. Christian Advocate and Journal, XXIII (1848), 9 (March 1), 34; ibid., 26 (June 28), 102; Missionary Advocate, IV (1848), 7 (October), 53 f.
16. Ibid.; ibid., VI (1850), 4 (July), 28; James W. Bashford, China and Methodism, p. 48.
17. Christian Advocate and Journal, XXIII (1848), 17 (April 26), 66; ibid., XXIII (1848), 27 (July 5), 106; Missionary Advocate, VIII (1852), 2 (May), 10.
18. Ibid., V (1850), 10 (January), 78.
19. Ibid., VI (1850), 6 (September), 48.
20. R. S. Maclay, "Journal," ibid., 4 (July), 29; ibid., VI (1851), 11 (February), 84.
21. Christian Advocate and Journal, XXVI (1851), 21 (May 22), 82; Missionary Advocate, IX (1853), 2 (May) 10.
22. Thirty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1850-51), p. 135.
23. Christian Advocate and Journal, XXVIII (1853), 9 (March 3), 34.
24. R. S. Maclay, "Journal," Missionary Advocate, VII (1851), 7 (October), 49.
25. Minutes, B. M., V, 116, 188, 203, 205, 216; "Founding and Early History . . .," p. 49, in White MSS. Collection; Christian Advocate and Journal, XXVI (1851), 2 (Jan. 9), 6; E. Wentworth, "Mission Life," in Isaac W. Wiley—A Monograph, Richard S. Rust, Ed., pp. 31 f.
26. "Early History of the China Mission . . .," p. 8, in White MSS. Collection; "Founding and Early History . . .," pp. 3 f., 37, 49, in White MSS. Collection; M. C. White, "Journal," pp. 1, 2; in White MSS. Collection; C. C. White, information copied August

- 21, 1898, from data given by the Rev. M. C. White and from papers published by him in 1897, p. 5, in White MSS. Collection; Missionary Advocate, VII (1851), 2 (May), 10; ibid., VII (1852), 10 (January), 73; ibid., VIII (1852), 4 (July), 26 f.; Christian Advocate and Journal, XXVI (1851), 38 (Sept. 18), 150.
27. "Founding and Early History . . .," pp. 29, 43 f., 50 in White MSS. Collection; E. Wentworth, "Mission Life," in Isaac W. Wiley—A Monograph, R. S. Rust, Ed., pp. 36-44; Thirty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1854), pp. 28 f.; Christian Advocate and Journal, XXIX (1854), 1 (Jan. 5), 2; ibid., 14 (April 6), 54; ibid., 47 (Nov. 23), 186; ibid., 51 (Dec. 21), 202; G. A. Clayton, Methodism in Central China, ch. I; Minutes, B. M., V, 356.
28. Christian Advocate and Journal, XXIX (1854), 21 (May 25), 82; ibid., XXX (1855), 49 (Dec. 6), 194; ibid., 52 (Dec. 27), 206; ibid., XXXI (1856), 12 (March 20), 46; "Minutes of the China Committee, M. S., 1846-68," Aug. 4, 1854, unpagged; Gen'l Minutes, Spring, 1877, p. 98; Minutes, B. M., V, 397; Thirty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1855-56), p. 23; Missionary Advocate, X (1854), 7 (October), 50.
29. Minutes, B. M., V, 234; Thirty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1856), pp. 31 f.; R. S. Maclay, Life Among the Chinese . . ., pp. 194 ff., 200, 206 ff.; I. W. Wiley, China and Japan . . ., p. 179.
30. R. S. Maclay, op. cit., pp. 169 ff.; I. W. Wiley, op. cit., pp. 174, 178.
31. R. S. Maclay, op. cit., pp. 212 f.; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., I, 436-40.
32. R. S. Maclay, op. cit., pp. 212 ff.
33. Fortieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1858-59), p. 16; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, loc. cit.
34. Missionary Advocate, XIV (1859), 12 (March), 89 f.
35. Ibid.; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., I, 441.
36. Thirty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1849-50), p. 134; ibid., 32nd (1850-51), p. 147; ibid., 40th (1858), pp. 44, 46; R. S. Maclay, op. cit., pp. 231 ff.
37. Missionary Advocate, XIV (1858), 9 (December), 65; Frances J. Baker, The Story of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, 1869-1895, pp. 262 f.; Mary S. Wheeler, First Decade of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, with Sketches of its Missionaries, pp. 34 f.; Eddy Lucius Ford, The History of the Educational Work of the Methodist Episcopal Church in China, A Study of its Development and Present Trends, pp. 45 f.
38. J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., I, 444; Christian Advocate and Journal, XXXVI (1861), 14 (April 4), 107; Minutes, Vermont Conference, 1865, pp. 40 f.
39. Walter N. Lacy, A Hundred Years of China Methodism, p. 56; Fortieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1859), p. 22; ibid., 41st (1860), pp. 21 f.; ibid., 43rd (1861), pp. 35 f., 39.
40. S. Moore Sites, Nathan Sites, An Epic of the East, pp. 30, 35 ff.; W. N. Lacy, op. cit., pp. 56 f.
41. Christian Advocate, LXX (1895), 16 (April 18), 6.
42. J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., I, 461; Forty-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1862), pp. 40, 49 f.; ibid., 45th (1863), p. 18; Edward Thomson, Our Oriental Missions, I, 235-56; J. W. Bashford, op. cit., p. 109.
43. Forty-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1862), p. 41; ibid., 45th (1863), pp. 21 f.; ibid., 46th (1864), p. 33; ibid., 47th (1865), p. 65.
44. Forty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1866), pp. 27 ff.; ibid., 49th (1867), pp. 48 f.
45. Fiftieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1868), pp. 94, 99; ibid., 51st (1869), pp. 64 f.; W. Lacy, op. cit., pp. 62, 63; Missionary Advocate, XXV (1870), 12 (March 15), p. [45].
46. Fifty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1869), p. 64.
47. Fortieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1858), pp. 16 ff.; Heathen Woman's Friend, II (1870), 2 (August), 17.
48. Fifty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1870), pp. 31, 51.
49. Ibid., pp. 46-50.
50. W. N. Lacy, op. cit., pp. 65, 300; R. S. Maclay to William L. Harris, Dec. 16, 1870, as quoted by W. N. Lacy, op. cit., pp. 300 f.; Fifty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1871), p. 50; ibid., 54th (1872), p. 54.
51. Christian Advocate, XLVIII (1873), 50 (Dec. 11), 396; J. M. Reid and J. T.

- Gracey, op. cit., I, 479-80; Fifty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1874), pp. 52, 186; Gen'l Minutes, 1873, p. 85.
52. Mary Isham, Valorous Ventures . . ., pp. 168 f.; Mrs. J. T. Gracey, Medical Work of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, Methodist Episcopal Church, pp. 149 f.; F. J. Baker, op. cit., pp. 155 ff., 161 f.; Twelfth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1881), p. 32; ibid., 15th (1884), p. 26; Year Book, Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, Methodist Episcopal Church (70th Ann. Rep.), 1939, pp. 164 f. (hereafter referred to as Year Book, W. F. M. S.).
53. Christian Advocate, XLVIII (1873), 50 (Dec. 11), 396; Fifty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1873), pp. 52 f.
54. I. W. Wiley, op. cit., pp. 224-31.
55. Ibid., pp. 233 f., 235.
56. Ibid., pp. 213 f.
57. Ibid., pp. 220 f.
58. Missionary Advocate, I, New Series (1873), 1 (January), 2, 3.
59. Fifty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1876), p. 53.
60. Sixty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1879), p. 56; ibid., 67th (1885), p. 52.
61. G. C. Journal, 1880, Appendix, p. 407; E. L. Ford, op. cit., pp. 146 ff.; Sixty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1881), pp. 57 f., 60 f., 63-65; Fourteenth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1883), pp. 24 f.
62. F. J. Baker, op. cit., pp. 266-68, 270 ff.
63. Sixty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1881), p. 66.
64. Twentieth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1889), pp. 35 f.; ibid., 22nd (1890-91), pp. 35 f.; ibid., 24th (1892-93), p. 35; ibid., 26th (1894-95), pp. 40 f., 41-42; F. J. Baker, op. cit., pp. 268, 302 f.
65. Sixty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1883), p. 58; ibid., 72nd (1890), p. 56; ibid., 73rd (1891), p. 65; ibid., 75th (1893), pp. 44 f.
66. Sixty-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1882), p. 49.
67. Ibid., p. 51; ibid., 65th (1883), p. 55; ibid., 66th (1884), p. 51; Encyclopaedia Britannica, VI, 201 f.
68. J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., II, 45-47.
69. Sixty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1885), pp. 52 f.
70. Seventieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1888), p. 66; ibid., 71st (1889), p. 62; ibid., 76th (1894), p. 48.
71. Seventeenth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1886), p. 28; ibid., 23rd (1892), p. 46.
72. Gospel in All Lands, March, 1888, p. 119; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., II, 50.
73. Seventy-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1890), pp. 48 f.; Gen'l Minutes, Spring, 1890, p. 75; ibid., 1891, p. 72.
74. Seventy-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1891), p. 116; ibid., 74th (1892), pp. 66, 67 f.; ibid., 75th (1893), pp. 45 f.
75. Ibid., 75th (1893), p. 42; ibid., 77th (1895), pp. 49 f.
76. Seventy-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1894), p. 41.
77. W. N. Lacy, op. cit., p. 62; Fiftieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1868), pp. 99 f.; ibid., 52nd (1870), pp. 31, 52 f.; Gen'l Minutes, 1870, pp. 29, 191.
78. Christian Advocate, XLVI (1871), 10 (March 9), 75.
79. Fifty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1871), pp. 52 f.; ibid., 54th (1872), pp. 61 f.
80. Fifty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1873), p. 62.
81. J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., I, 479 f.; Fifty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1873), p. 59; Gen'l Minutes, 1873, pp. 69, 129.
82. Fifty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1873), pp. 59-61.
83. Fifty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1874), pp. 64 f.; ibid., 57th (1875), p. 59; ibid., 60th (1878), pp. 66 f.
84. I. W. Wiley, op. cit., pp. 144, 145-47.
85. Sixty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1880), pp. 58-61; Gen'l Minutes, 1880, p. 297.
86. Sixty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1881), p. 73.
87. Ibid., pp. 77-80.

88. Ibid., pp. 73, 76 f.
89. Ibid., pp. 75 f.
90. "Minutes of the Reference Committee, W. F. M. S., May 18, 1880-Oct. 2, 1883," April 10, 1882, unpagcd ms.; Thirteenth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1882), p. 30; Year Book, W. F. M. S., 1939, p. 171; Sixty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1881), p. 72.
91. Twelfth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1880-81), p. 40.
92. "Minutes of the Reference Committee, W. F. M. S., May 18, 1880-Oct. 2, 1883," April 4, 1881, unpagcd ms.; ibid., June 24, 1882; Year Book, W. F. M. S., 1939, pp. 164-68; Louise Manning Hodgkins, The Roll Call—An Introduction to Our Missionaries, 1869-1896, p. 25.
93. Sixty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1881), p. 58; ibid., 64th (1882), pp. 60 f., 233; ibid., 66th (1884), p. 62; ibid., 67th (1885), pp. 58, 59; ibid., 68th (1886), pp. 69 f., 361, 362; Gen'l Minutes, Fall, 1881, pp. 226, 227; ibid., Spring, 1882, p. 35; ibid., Fall, 1883, p. 239; ibid., Fall, 1886, p. 267; J. W. Bashford, op. cit., p. 111; Minutes, North Nebraska Conference, 1886, p. 21. The personal diaries of V. C. Hart indicate serious ill feeling among the missionaries. At the 1884 annual meeting charges were preferred against Hart by three of his fellow workers, and against Hykes and Kupfer. The charges came to naught and were withdrawn.
94. Sixty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1881), p. 75; ibid., 64th (1882), pp. 61, 63; ibid., 65th (1883), pp. 63 f., 66; ibid., 67th (1885), p. 65; ibid., 68th (1886), p. 73; ibid., 69th (1887), pp. 102 f.; ibid., 73rd (1891), pp. 81 f.; Seventeenth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1885-86), p. 34; ibid., 26th (1894-95), pp. 47 f.; M. Isham, op. cit., p. 225.
95. Sixty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1883), p. 64; ibid., 66th (1884), p. 66; ibid., 67th (1885), pp. 62 f.
96. George A. Stuart to the Missionary Secretaries, May 3, Aug. 20, 1887, Jan. 17, 1889.
97. Seventy-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1889), p. 78.
98. As quoted in E. I. Hart, Virgil C. Hart: Missionary Statesman . . . pp. 123 ff.
99. Ibid., p. 126; Sixty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1884), pp. 62, 67 f.; ibid., 67th (1885), pp. 63 f.; ibid., 68th (1886), p. 76; ibid., 69th (1887), p. 106; Gen'l Minutes, 1884, p. 42.
100. E. I. Hart, op. cit., pp. 182 f., 215, 218.
101. J. R. Hykes to Missionary Secretaries, Nov. 23, 1888.
102. J. R. Hykes to C. C. McCabe, June 17, 1889; J. R. Hykes to J. M. Reid, Jan. 14, 1888, V. C. Hart to C. C. McCabe, Nov. 27, Nov. 30, 1888, and others. Hykes apparently was difficult to get along with. Miss Howe encountered some unpleasantness in her association with him at the time of her resignation.
103. Robert C. Beebe to J. M. Reid, Sept. 3, 1887; R. C. Beebe to C. C. McCabe, Feb. 6, 1889; V. C. Hart to C. C. McCabe, Feb. 18, 1889; V. C. Hart to S. L. Baldwin, Feb. 20, 1889; G. A. Stuart to Missionary Secretaries, March 24, 1889.
104. Seventy-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1890), p. 60; Gen'l Minutes, Fall, 1889, p. 333; ibid., Spring, 1887, p. 68; J. R. Hykes to S. L. Baldwin, July 28, 1894.
105. Seventy-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1889), pp. 70 f.; ibid., 73rd (1892), pp. 79, 81; ibid., 74th (1894), pp. 67 f.
106. Sixty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1887), p. 102; ibid., 70th (1888), p. 77; ibid., 71st (1889), p. 73; ibid., 73rd (1891), p. 88; ibid., 74th (1892), p. 79; ibid., 75th (1893), p. 60; ibid., 76th (1894), pp. 64 f.
107. Seventy-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1893), p. 62.
108. Seventieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1888), p. 81; ibid., 72nd (1890), pp. 62 f.; ibid., 75th (1893), p. 58; ibid., 76th (1894), p. 70; C. F. Kupfer to C. C. McCabe, Sept. 9, 1891; E. L. Ford, op. cit., pp. 98 f.
109. Seventy-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1891), p. 79; ibid., 75th (1893), p. 58; ibid., 77th (1895), p. 60.
110. Sixty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1887), pp. 103, 104; ibid., 72nd (1890), pp. 78, 79; ibid., 75th (1893), p. 59.
111. Sixty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1885), p. 60; ibid., 70th (1888), p. 79; ibid., 71st (1889), p. 70; ibid., 73rd (1891), p. [89]; ibid., 74th (1894), p. 68.

112. Seventy-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1889), pp. 79, 80; ibid., 77th (1895), p. 64.
113. J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., I, 465.
114. Ibid., I, 464-70; J. W. Bashford, op. cit., p. 62.
115. Fifty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1870), pp. 54, 55; ibid., 53rd (1871), pp. 54-58; ibid., 54th (1872), p. 63; E. L. Ford, op. cit., p. 54.
116. M. S. Wheeler, op. cit., pp. 101 f., 111 ff.; M. Isham, op. cit., pp. 175 ff.; F. J. Baker, op. cit., pp. 274 ff.; W. Lacy, op. cit., p. 64; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., I, 474; Year Book, W. F. M. S., 1939, pp. 164, 177.
117. Fifty-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1872), p. 64.
118. Fifty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1874), pp. 68 f.; Gen'l Minutes, 1872, p. 46; ibid., 1873, p. 36.
119. Fifty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1874), p. 71.
120. Fifty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1875), p. 66; Richard Terrill Baker, Ten Thousand Years, The Story of Methodism's First Century in China, pp. 79 f.; Perry O. Hanson, "The Methodist Mission in Shantung, 1873-1933," China Christian Advocate, XX (1933), 4 (April), 14.
121. I. W. Wiley, op. cit., pp. 62 f., 64-67.
122. M. Isham, op. cit., pp. 177 ff.; Mrs. J. T. Gracey, op. cit., pp. 131 ff.; Eleventh Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1879-80), pp. 32 f.; F. J. Baker, op. cit., pp. 147 ff.
123. Sixty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1879), pp. 66-68. The two statistical statements do not agree in all details.
124. Ibid., pp. 63 ff.; ibid., 63rd (1881), pp. 83 f.
125. Sixty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1886), pp. 80 f.
126. Sixty-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1882), p. 70.
127. Sixty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1887), p. 119.
128. Ibid., p. 123; ibid., 70th (1888), pp. 98, 102 f.; ibid., 71st (1889), pp. 93 f.; ibid., 72nd (1890), pp. 86, 87.
129. Sixty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1886), pp. 89 f.; ibid., 69th (1887), p. 112; ibid., 70th (1888), p. 102; ibid., 71st (1889), pp. 91, 92; H. H. Lowry to Missionary Secretaries, Dec. 20, 1883; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., II, 131-33.
130. Seventy-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1890), pp. 94 f.; ibid., 75th (1893), p. 68; ibid., 77th (1895), pp. 84 f.
131. Seventy-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1891), p. 102; ibid., 75th (1893), pp. 69, 71.
132. Seventy-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1891), pp. 104 f.
133. Minutes, North China Conference, 1893, pp. 10, 12 f., 17, 22 ff.; Christian Advocate, LXIX (1894), 30 (July 26), 480.
134. H. H. Lowry to Missionary Secretaries, Jan. 22, Aug. 8, 1894; Seventy-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1893), p. 36.
135. H. H. Lowry to Missionary Secretaries, May 14, 1894, Dec. 14, 1895; Minutes, B. M., XVI, 64 f.
136. Seventy-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1895), pp. 77 ff., 70 f., 80 ff.
137. Minutes, North China Conference, 1895, p. 68.
138. F. Ohlinger to R. L. Dashiell, Nov. 9, 1878; Nathan Sites to C. H. Fowler, Oct. 1, 1880.
139. J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., II, 154-59; Spencer Lewis, "Pioneering in West China," China Christian Advocate, XX (1933), 9 (September), 17-18.
140. Ibid.; Sixty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1881), p. 58; Minutes, B. M., VIII, 367 f.
141. S. Lewis, op. cit., XX (1933), 10 (October), 8, 17; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., II, 163-65; clipping on F. I. Wheeler, in Library, Board of Missions. Dates given by Reid and Gracey are not correct.
142. Sixty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1884), p. 82; ibid., 67th (1885), pp. 82 f.; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., II, 164.
143. S. Lewis, loc. cit.; Sixty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1884), p. 82.
144. Sixty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1883), p. 80; ibid., 66th (1884), pp. 84 f.; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., II, 165.
145. Sixty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1885), pp. 82 f.; ibid., 68th (1886), pp. 100 ff., 104; S. Lewis, op. cit., XX (1933), 11 (November), 8, 17.

146. Sixty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1886), p. 101.
147. S. Lewis, loc. cit.; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., II, 167 ff.
148. Sixty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1886), pp. 99 f.
149. E. I. Hart, op. cit., pp. 149 f., 184, 186; V. C. Hart to J. M. Reid, March 5, 1887; Sixty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1887), pp. 126 ff.; E. I. Hart refers to Virgil C. Hart's appointment to the superintendency. This designation does not appear in any other source and is to be questioned.
150. S. Lewis, op. cit., XX (1933), 12 (December), 17; S. Lewis to J. M. Reid, June 14, 1888.
151. Seventy-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1889), pp. 105-108; S. Lewis to Corresponding Secretaries, April 24, 1889.
152. Seventy-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1890), pp. 102 f.
153. Seventy-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1891), pp. 120-22; ibid., 74th (1892), pp. 121, 124; ibid., 75th (1893), p. 88; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., II, 175-77.
154. H. C. Canright, Ms. Notes; Seventy-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1892), pp. 122, 125; ibid., 76th (1894), pp. 76 f., 78; ibid., 77th (1895), p. 91. For further comment on the Chengtu field, see H. Olin Cady, Ms. Notes.
155. Ibid., 77th (1895), pp. 87 f., 90.
156. Ibid., pp. 88 f.; Alfred Cunningham, A History of the Szechuen Riots (May June, 1895), pp. 2, 5, 7, 17 ff.
157. H. Olin Cady, "Chentu, West China, and the Late Riots," Gospel in All Lands, October, 1895, pp. 502, 504; Minutes, B. M., XVI, 66; Seventy-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1896), p. 73.
158. Seventy-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1895), p. 93.
159. Seventy-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1892), p. 121.
160. Li Ung Bing, Outlines of Chinese History, pp. 491-504; K. S. Latourette, A History of Christian Missions in China, p. 467 n.
161. J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., II, 97 ff.; Gospel in All Lands, January, 1892, p. 53; Missionary Herald, quoted, ibid., June, 1892, p. 256.
162. R. S. Maclay to W. L. Harris, Aug. 23, Oct. 9, 1871; V. C. Hart to Corresponding Secretary, May 7, 1875.
163. Missionary Herald, as quoted in Gospel in All Lands, June, 1892, p. 256.
164. Forty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1864), p. 33; ibid., 57th (1875), p. 59; ibid., 71st (1889), p. 96; ibid., 72nd (1890), p. 68; ibid., 73rd (1891), pp. 83, 85; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., II, 26 f., 48.
165. Fifty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1870), p. 48; ibid., 69th (1887), pp. 95 f.; ibid., 70th (1888), p. 67; ibid., 71st (1889), pp. 62 f.
166. K. S. Latourette, op. cit., pp. 467 f.
167. Ella Shaw, biographical materials, Library, Board of Missions; E. I. Hart, op. cit., p. 182.
168. W. F. Mallalieu, "Some Facts Concerning China," Christian Advocate, LXVIII (1893), 3 (Jan. 19), 35.
169. Seventy-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1891), p. 95.
170. V. C. Hart to J. M. Reid, March 5, 1887.
171. Bishops' Address, 1856, G. C. Journals, III, 198 f.
172. Sixty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1883), p. 71; ibid., 73rd (1891), pp. 78 f.
173. J. M. Thoburn, My Missionary Apprenticeship, p. 36.
174. E. Thomson, op. cit., I, 256 ff.; Missionary Advocate, X (1854), 3 (June), 17.
175. Fifty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1875), p. 66; G. A. Clayton, op. cit., pp. 75 f.
176. Seventy-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1893), p. 61; ibid., 76th (1894), pp. 67 f.
177. Sixty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1881), p. 63; Margaret E. Burton, The Education of Women in China, pp. 39 f., 51.
178. Sixty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1879), p. 55; ibid., 70th (1888), p. 58; Christian Advocate, I (1875), 52 (Dec. 30), 410.
179. Fifty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1874), p. 66; ibid., 74th (1892), p. 121.
180. Sixty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1887), p. 94.

181. Seventy-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1893), p. 45; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., II, 63.
182. Ibid., II, 66 f.; R. T. Baker, op. cit., pp. 48 f.
183. C. H. Fowler, "Our Opportunity in China," Christian Advocate, LXIV (1889), 10 (March 7), 148; Arthur Judson Brown, New Forces in Old China . . ., p. 269; J. Campbell Gibson, Mission Problems and Mission Methods in South China . . ., pp. 29-31.
184. J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., II, 11 f.
185. Minutes, Foochow Conference, 1877, pp. 12-13; ibid., 1878, p. 14; Records of the General Conference of Protestant Missionaries of China, 1877, p. 268; ibid., 1890, p. 326.
186. Minutes, North China Mission, 1883, p. 21; Records of the General Conference of Protestant Missionaries in China, 1877, p. 268.
187. Ibid., pp. 136 ff.
188. A. H. Tuttle, Mary Porter Gamewell And Her Story of the Siege in Peking, pp. 61-63, 64; James W. Bashford, China, An Interpretation, p. 138.
189. Heathen Woman's Friend, VII (1876), 9 (March), 193.
190. J. W. Bashford, China, An Interpretation, pp. 139 f.; K. S. Latourette, op. cit., p. 462; Twenty-fifth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1893-94), p. 44.
191. E. Wentworth, as quoted by J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., I, 447 f.
192. Heathen Woman's Friend, II (1870), 3 (September), 28.
193. E. A. Ross, The Changing Chinese: The Conflict of Oriental and Western Cultures in China, pp. 197, 241; S. Wells Williams, The Middle Kingdom . . ., II, 239 ff.
194. J. W. Bashford, China, An Interpretation, pp. 128 f.; Ella Shaw, biographical materials, Library, Board of Missions.
195. Heathen Woman's Friend, V (1874), 11 (May), 649.
196. Ibid., XXV (1894), 9 (March), 260-61.
197. Christian Advocate, L (1875), 2 (Jan. 14), 9.
198. Heathen Woman's Friend, XII (1881), 8 (February), 169.

VI

EXPANDING MISSIONS—INDIA AND MALAYSIA

1. William Butler to James P. Durbin, Sept. 26, Nov. 7, Nov. 11, 1856, March 4, 1857. Letters found in the Clementina Butler MS. Collection of hand-written copies of the Butler-Durbin Correspondence, hereafter referred to as Butler-Durbin Correspondence. Butler to Commissioner Tucker, Nov. 18, 1856, included in above collection. Thirty-ninth Ann. Rep., M.S. (1857), pp. 58-60.
2. Minutes, B.M., V, 30.
3. Twenty-ninth Ann. Rep., M.S. (1847-48), p. 114; ibid., 30th (1848-49), p. 8; ibid., 31st (1849-50), p. 89; ibid., 34th (1852-53), pp. 17 f.; "Report of the General Missionary Committee," 1852, Appendix, p. 136, in G. C. Journals, III; Minutes, B.M., V, 281.
4. J. M. Thoburn, India and Malaysia, p. 223; Clementina Butler, William Butler, The Founder of Two Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church, pp. 36 f.; Christian Advocate and Journal, XXXI (1856), 17 (April 24), 66; William Butler, From Boston to Bareilly and Back, pp. 114 f.
5. William Butler, The Land of the Veda . . ., p. 221.
6. William Butler, report to Bishop Simpson and Board, March 10, 1857, in Butler-Durbin Correspondence. This closely written twenty-four-page ms. has apparently never been printed.
7. C. Butler, op. cit., pp. 57 f., 62.
8. W. Butler, The Land of the Veda . . ., pp. 62 f., 65 f., 233-57, 430, 433 f.; J. E. Scott, History of Fifty Years: Comprising the Origin, Establishment, Progress and Expansion of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Southern Asia, pp. 34, 37 ff.; Mrs.

E. J. Humphrey, Six Years in India: Or, Sketches of India and Its People as Seen by a Lady Missionary, p. 75.

9. J. E. Scott, op. cit., pp. 39 f.

10. W. Butler, The Land of the Veda . . ., p. 441; J. E. Scott, op. cit., pp. 74 f.; E. W. Parker, "Journal," as quoted in J. H. Messmore, Life of Edwin Wallace Parker, . . . Missionary Bishop of Southern Asia . . ., p. 56; other references in Messmore, pp. 56, 57, 58; J. M. Thoburn, My Missionary Apprenticeship, pp. 46 ff.

11. Durbin to Butler, July 26, 1858, Dec. 19, 1859; Bishops Janes and Simpson to Butler, Dec. 21, 1859, all in Butler-Durbin Correspondence.

12. Forty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1859), p. 34; ibid., 42nd (1860), pp. 35, 36, 38, 45.

13. J. E. Scott, op. cit., p. 57; Mrs. E. J. Humphrey, op. cit., pp. 124 f., 132, 133 ff., 212 ff.; [James W. Waugh] "Early Bareilly Mission History," ms.; J. L. Humphrey, "Our First Convert in India a Mohammedan," Epworth Herald, XIX (1908), 15 (Sept. 5), 363 f.; Zahur Al Haqq, Autobiography of Rev. Zahur-Al-Haqq, pamphlet, passim.

14. Forty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1863), p. [59]; ibid., 46th (1864), p. [63].

15. J. M. Thoburn, My Missionary Apprenticeship, pp. 56 f., 60, 61.

16. Ibid., pp. 78 ff., 87 f., 90, 93 f.; Forty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1861), p. 16.

17. J. M. Thoburn, My Missionary Apprenticeship, pp. 99 ff.; Forty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1864), p. [63].

18. J. L. Humphrey, Twenty-One Years in India, pp. 67, 76 f.; J. E. Scott, History of Fifty Years . . ., pp. 55 f.; Fortieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1858), p. 35; ibid., 41st (1859), p. 37; ibid., 42nd (1860), p. 38; ibid., 46th (1864), p. 61; Missionary Advocate, XVI (1860), 7 (October), 49; ibid., XVII (1861), 8 (November), 58.

19. Ibid., XV (1859), 8 (November), 59; ibid., XVI (1860), 9 (December), 69; ibid., XIX (1863-64), 10 (January), 74; J. E. Scott, op. cit., pp. 56 f.; J. L. Humphrey, op. cit., pp. 80 ff.; C. D. Rockey, in Brenton T. Badley, Ed., Visions and Victories in Hindustan, A Story of the Mission Stations of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Southern Asia, pp. 106, 112.

20. J. H. Messmore, op. cit., pp. 84 f., 86, 95, 96; Forty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1864), p. [63].

21. J. E. Scott, op. cit., pp. 57 f.; Forty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1860), p. 38; J. L. Humphrey, op. cit., pp. 152 f.

22. Forty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1863), pp. 52 f.; ibid., 46th (1864), p. [63].

23. J. E. Scott, op. cit., p. 58; H. J. Sheets, in B. T. Badley, Ed., op. cit., pp. 131 f., 143.

24. Missionary Advocate, XVII (1861), 8 (November), 57; Forty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1863), pp. 48-51.

25. Edward Thomson, Our Oriental Missions, I, India and China, 72; Forty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1864), p. [63].

26. Mrs. E. J. Humphrey, op. cit., pp. 157 f.; J. L. Humphrey, op. cit., pp. 124 ff.; 129, 132, 133; L. A. Core, in B. T. Badley, Ed., op. cit., p. 73.

27. Forty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1861), p. 15; Missionary Advocate, XVII (1861), 8 (November), 57; ibid., I (April), 1-3.

28. L. A. Core, in B. T. Badley, Ed., op. cit., p. 148; J. E. Scott, op. cit., p. 59; Forty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1863), p. 52; ibid., 47th (1865), p. [41].

29. Missionary Advocate, XVII (1861), 8 (November), 58.

30. J. E. Scott, op. cit., pp. 71 f. For a more detailed account, written by Parker, including extracts from his "Journal," see J. H. Messmore, op. cit., pp. 70 ff. Forty-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1862), p. 23.

31. Ibid., 44th (1862), pp. 19-23; ibid., 45th (1863), p. 54.

32. Ibid., 45th (1863), p. 54; ibid., 46th (1864), p. [63].

33. Missionary Advocate, XVII (1862), 11 (February), 82; Christian Advocate, XXXVII (1862), 27 (July 3), 209.

34. Forty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1863), p. 53; T. C. Badley, in B. T. Badley, Ed., op. cit., pp. 158 f.

35. J. M. Thoburn, India and Malaysia, pp. 237 f.; J. E. Scott, op. cit., pp. 66 f.; J. M. Thoburn, My Missionary Apprenticeship, p. 63.

36. Wesleyan Missionary Notices . . ., III (1896), 86 f.

37. Forty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1859), p. 34.
38. J. M. Thoburn, India and Malaysia, pp. 286 f., 288 f.
39. Butler to Durbin, April 23, 1858, in Butler-Durbin Correspondence; J. E. Scott, op. cit., pp. 63, 72; Mrs. Ralph Pierce to Mrs. Mary W. Mason, Sept. 30, 1859; J. M. Thoburn, India and Malaysia, p. 265.
40. Butler to Durbin, June 28, 1864, in Butler-Durbin Correspondence.
41. C. Butler, op. cit., pp. 98, 100; Lois S. Parker to W. A. Mansell, Oct. 5, 1907; Mrs. E. J. Humphrey, op. cit., pp. 96 f.
42. Julius Richter, A History of Missions in India, pp. 180 f.; Forty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1859), p. 39; Butler to Durbin, Oct. 1, 1859, in Butler-Durbin Correspondence.
43. Butler to Durbin, Feb. 16, 1861, ibid.; Frederick B. Price, Ed., India Mission Jubilee of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Southern Asia, pp. 153 f.; Fifty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1876), pp. 113-14; J. M. Thoburn, India and Malaysia, p. 370.
44. Missionary Advocate, XVI (1860), 3 (June), 18; [J. W. Waugh] "Early Bareilly Mission History," ms.; J. E. Scott, op. cit., pp. 69 ff.; J. M. Thoburn, India and Malaysia, p. 269.
45. Durbin to Butler, April 26, July 12, 1858, in Butler-Durbin Correspondence; Christian Advocate and Journal, XXXIII (1858), 26 (July 1), 101.
46. Butler to David Terry, Dec. 28, 1858, in Butler-Durbin Correspondence; Durbin to Butler, March 1 and 3, 1859, ibid.
47. Durbin to Butler, Feb. 19, 1863, ibid.; Minutes, B. M., VI, 432-33.
48. E. W. Parker to Secretary McCabe, Nov. 11, 1889; Durbin to Butler, May 22, 1857, in Butler-Durbin Correspondence.
49. Forty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1859), pp. 40-42; ibid., 46th (1864), pp. 64, 77.
50. J. H. Messmore, op. cit., p. 84.
51. Missionary Advocate, XIX (1863), 6 (September), 42; Butler to Durbin, Aug. 14, 1863, in Butler-Durbin Correspondence.
52. Butler to Durbin, May 13, 1864 and Bishops to Butler, Nov. 18, 1863, ibid.
53. Forty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1864), pp. 65-69; Butler to Durbin, Feb. 16, 1863, in Butler-Durbin Correspondence.
54. Forty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1864), p. 62.
55. Ibid., p. 62.
56. Forty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1866), p. 76; Missionary Advocate, XX (1864), 5 (August), 36 f.; Parker's "Journal," quoted by J. H. Messmore, op. cit., pp. 97, 121, 143 f.
57. Minutes, B. M., VI, 432; G. C. Journal, 1864, p. 219.
58. Bishop Thomson's address can be found in the Minutes, India Mission Conference, 1864, pp. 3-20. Minutes, India Conference, Minutes, North India Conference, and Minutes, Northwest India Conference were printed in a somewhat different format from those of other Conferences, carrying two dates—the year covered by the Presiding Elders' reports and the year of the Conference: e.g., Minutes, India Conference, 1874, preceded by Ninth Annual Report Mission Stations, 1873. In these references we use only the date of the Conference, which in this case would be 1874. J. H. Messmore, op. cit., pp. 98 f.; J. M. Thoburn, My Missionary Apprenticeship, p. 110.
59. Minutes, B. M., VI, 606 f., 619.
60. Forty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1865), p. 42; ibid., 49th (1867), pp. 99 f.; J. H. Messmore, op. cit., p. 106; Lois S. Parker to W. A. Mansell, Oct. 5, 1907.
61. J. E. Scott, op. cit., p. 60; Minutes, India Mission Conference, February, 1866, P. E. Repts., pp. 45 f.; Forty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1867), pp. 102 f.
62. Minutes, India Mission Conference, February, 1866, P. E. Repts., p. 42; ibid., 1868, pp. 40 f.
63. H. H. Weak, in B. T. Badley, Ed., op. cit., pp. 190 f.; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, Missions and Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, III, 11; J. E. Scott, op. cit., p. 60.
64. J. M. Thoburn, My Missionary Apprenticeship, pp. 137 f., 144, 145 f.
65. Ibid., p. 197; H. H. Weak, in B. T. Badley, Ed., op. cit., pp. 193-95; Missionary Advocate, XXIII (1867), 8 (November), 58 f.

66. Forty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1863), p. 48; Missionary Advocate, XX (1864-65), 11 (February), 81; Minutes, India Mission Conference, February, 1866, P. E. Reps., pp. 39 f., 41; ibid., 1869, pp. 36-37.
67. Minutes, India Mission Conference, February, 1866, P. E. Reps., p. 10; ibid., 1867, p. 23; ibid., 1869, pp. 25 f.; Brenton Thoburn Badley, in B. T. Badley, Ed., op. cit., pp. 9 f.
68. Forty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1865), p. 33; ibid., 49th (1867), p. 74; Minutes, India Mission Conference, 1872, p. 50.
69. Forty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1865), p. 32.
70. Minutes, India Mission Conference, 1869, p. 23.
71. Ibid., February, 1866, P. E. Reps., pp. 22-26; Forty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1865), pp. 29-30; ibid., 49th (1867), p. 81.
72. Minutes, India Mission Conference, 1868, pp. 10 f.; ibid., 1870, p. 29.
73. Ibid., February, 1866, P. E. Reps., pp. 18 f.
74. Ibid., 1867, pp. 9, 13; ibid., 1868, pp. 18 f.
75. Ibid., 1867, p. 15.
76. Ibid., 1869, pp. 28 f.; Fifty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1869), p. 106; Mrs. E. J. Humphrey, "Female Medical Class in Nynee Tal," Heathen Woman's Friend, I (1869), 7 (December), 50-51; "Second Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S.," ibid., III (1871), 1 (July), 151.
77. Minutes, India Mission Conference, February, 1866, P. E. Reps., p. 26; ibid., 1867, p. 20.
78. Ibid., February, 1866, P. E. Reps., pp. 27 ff.; ibid., 1867, p. 26.
79. J. M. Thoburn, My Missionary Apprenticeship, pp. 268 f.; Minutes, India Mission Conference, 1867, pp. 27 f.; ibid., 1869, pp. 5-6; ibid., 1872, pp. 15 f.
80. J. M. Thoburn, My Missionary Apprenticeship, p. 259; Minutes, India Mission Conference, 1871, pp. 22 f.
81. Ibid., 1866, P. E. Reps., p. 31; ibid., 1873, p. 31; S. Knowles, The Gospel in Gonda . . ., p. 2.
82. Minutes, India Mission Conference, 1869, p. 22; ibid., 1871, p. 21; ibid., 1872, p. 21.
83. Mrs. T. S. Johnson, "Diary," unpagcd ms., Jan. 30, 1870; Minutes, India Mission Conference, 1870, pp. 51, 57-58, 61-62; Calvin Kingsley, Round the World: A Series of Letters, II, Asia, 305 f., 307.
84. Minutes, India Mission Conference, 1872, pp. 55, 61.
85. Minutes, India Conference, 1874, pp. 83, 85.
86. William Taylor, Ten Years of Self-Supporting Missions in India, pp. 142 f.; Minutes, India Conference, 1874, pp. 41, 42 f.
87. Ibid., 1876, p. 68; G. C. Journal, 1876, p. 300.
88. Missionary Advocate, IV (1876), 9 (September), 129; G. C. Journal, 1876, p. 313; Minutes, South India Conference, 1876, p. 11; Minutes, North India Conference, 1877, pp. 25 f., 43; Fifty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1876), p. 117.
89. Parker's "Journal," as quoted in J. H. Messmore, op. cit., p. 121; J. M. Thoburn, My Missionary Apprenticeship, pp. 191 f.
90. Minutes, India Mission Conference, 1870, pp. 53, 60.
91. J. H. Messmore, op. cit., p. 145.
92. Fifty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1871), pp. 81 f.; ibid., 54th (1872), p. 99.
93. J. M. Thoburn, India and Malaysia, p. 343.
94. Christian Advocate, XLVIII (1873), 12 (March 20), 92; Minutes, India Conference, 1874, pp. 28, 83; ibid., 1876, p. 95; Fifty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1874), p. 114.
95. Minutes, India Conference, 1875, pp. 75, 76.
96. Ibid., 1876, p. 6.
97. J. M. Thoburn, My Missionary Apprenticeship, p. 201.
98. Fifty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1870), p. 95.
99. Minutes, India Mission Conference, 1873, pp. 8, 67, 69.
100. Ibid., pp. 3, 4; Forty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1863), p. 48.
101. Minutes, India Mission Conference (1873), pp. 5 f.
102. J. M. Thoburn, My Missionary Apprenticeship, pp. 207-209.

103. "Fourth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S.," in Heathen Woman's Friend, V (1873), 1 (July), 495-96.
104. Minutes, India Conference, 1875, pp. 21 ff.
105. Ibid., 1876, pp. 21, 24.
106. Ibid., pp. 34 f.; Minutes, North India Conference, 1877, pp. 8 f.
107. Minutes, India Mission Conference, 1870, p. 22; ibid., 1872, p. 3; ibid., 1873, pp. 15, 16, 67.
108. Fifty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1870), pp. 85 f.
109. Minutes, India Mission Conference, 1873, p. 23.
110. Fifty-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1872), pp. 101 f.
111. Fifty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1873), pp. 108, 110.
112. Ibid., p. 109.
113. Minutes, India Conference, 1875, pp. 7-9; ibid., 1876, pp. 9, 10.
114. Minutes, North India Conference, 1877, pp. 6 f.
115. J. M. Thoburn, My Missionary Apprenticeship, pp. 258 ff.
116. Ibid., pp. 262, 264.
117. Minutes, India Mission Conference, 1872, p. 24; Fifty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1874), pp. 113, 114, 116; Minutes, India Conference, 1875, p. 32.
118. Minutes, North India Conference, 1877, p. 26.
119. Ibid., p. 27.
120. Julius Richter, A History of Missions in India, p. 338.
121. Heathen Woman's Friend, XXV (1894), 9 (March), 260.
122. Durbin to Butler, Aug. 23, Sept. 23, Dec. 27, 1857, in Butler-Durbin Correspondence.
123. Durbin to Butler, July 5, 1867, ibid., in which he quotes from a letter of Mrs. Bartlett, of the Female Missionary Society of New England; Missionary Advocate, XXIV (1868), 3 (June), 21; ibid., XXIV (1869), 11 (February), 85.
124. Heathen Woman's Friend, I (1869), 1 (May), 1.
125. Ibid., I (1870), 13 (June), 104-107; "Minutes," First Annual Meeting, General Executive Comm., W. F. M. S., 1870, ms., pp. 8 f.
126. Heathen Woman's Friend, III (1872), 8 (February), 237; Minutes, India Mission Conference, 1871, p. 33; Christian Advocate, XLVI (1871), 10 (March 9), 75.
127. Heathen Woman's Friend, II (1871), 11 (May), 128.
128. "Second Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S.," in Heathen Woman's Friend, III (1871), 1 (July), 145; G. C. Journal, 1892, pp. 379 f.
129. Heathen Woman's Friend, IV (1872), 1 (July), 297; "Second Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S.," ibid., III (1871), 1 (July), 152; "Fourth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S.," ibid., V (1873), 1 (July), 494.
130. Missionary Advocate, XXI (1865-66), 8 (November), 59; ibid., XXII (1866), 4 (July), 27.
131. Heathen Woman's Friend, I (1869), 7 (December), 49; ibid., II (1870), 1 (July), 4.
132. Christian Star, reprinted in Heathen Woman's Friend, I (1870), 12 (May), 90.
133. Report of the Second Decennial Missionary Conference, Held at Calcutta, 1882-83, pp. 189 f.
134. J. M. Thoburn, Life of Isabella Thoburn, pp. 77 f.; Minutes, India Mission Conference, 1873, p. 5.
135. "Second Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S.," in Heathen Woman's Friend, III (1871), 1 (July), 153.
136. J. M. Thoburn, Life of Isabella Thoburn, pp. 89 f., 107-109.
137. Jennie Tinsley Waugh, "Memories of Early Days," ms.; "Fifth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S.," in Heathen Woman's Friend, VI (1874), 1 (July), 688.
138. J. M. Thoburn, Life of Isabella Thoburn, pp. 119 ff., 147 ff., 181 ff., 193.
139. Northern Christian Advocate, quoted in Heathen Woman's Friend, III (1872), 8 (February), 233 f.; Mrs. J. T. Gracey, Medical Work of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, Methodist Episcopal Church, pp. 30 f.

140. Heathen Woman's Friend, IV (1872), 3 (September), 325 f.; ibid., 6 (December), 375; Mrs. J. T. Gracey, op. cit., pp. 45 f., 55 f.
141. "Minutes," Second Annual Meeting, General Executive Comm., W. F. M. S., 1871, p. 35; Heathen Woman's Friend, IV (1872), 3 (September), 327; Frances J. Baker, The Story of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, 1869-1895, pp. 204 f.
142. G. C. Journal, 1892, p. 385.
143. Minutes, India Mission Conference, 1870, pp. 50, 65; William Taylor, Four Years' Campaign in India, pp. 1, 2, 3, 6, 14, 15.
144. Ibid., p. 16.
145. J. M. Thoburn, My Missionary Apprenticeship, p. 282.
146. W. Taylor, Four Years' Campaign . . ., pp. 15 ff., 24.
147. Minutes, India Mission Conference, 1870, p. 73; ibid., 1871, p. 51; ibid., 1872, pp. 16, 61; ibid., 1873, p. 67; Bombay Guardian, XVII (1871-72), 20 (July 15), 153.
148. J. M. Thoburn, My Missionary Apprenticeship, pp. 291 ff.
149. W. Taylor, Four Years' Campaign . . ., pp. 25-43, et passim; Minutes, India Mission Conference, 1871, pp. 30, 35, 36; Bombay Guardian, XVII (1871-72), 7 (April 15), 55.
150. W. Taylor, Four Years' Campaign . . ., chs. VII-X passim.
151. Ibid., p. 75.
152. Bombay Guardian, XVII (1871), 43 (Dec. 23), 340.
153. W. Taylor, Four Years' Campaign . . ., pp. 113 f.
154. Ibid., pp. 116, 124, 126, 132, 143, 146, 149, 172.
155. Ibid., p. 149.
156. Ibid., pp. [50], 51.
157. Ibid., pp. 151-53.
158. J. M. Thoburn, India and Malaysia, p. 429; W. Taylor, Four Years' Campaign . . ., p. 238; George Bowen as quoted by Robert E. Speer in George Bowen of Bombay . . ., pp. 261, 263 f.
159. Minutes, India Mission Conference, 1872, pp. 41, 42 f., 56.
160. W. Taylor, Ten Years of Self-Supporting Missions . . ., pp. 133 f.
161. G. C. Journal, 1872, p. 114. Taylor is mistaken in saying "it was read and laid on the table—not to be taken up again."—W. Taylor, Ten Years of Self-Supporting Missions . . ., p. 135.
162. Bombay Guardian, XVII (1872-73), 11 (May 11), 81.
163. W. Taylor, Four Years' Campaign . . ., pp. 164 f.
164. Bombay Guardian, XVIII (1872-73), 40 (Nov. 30), 313; ibid., 41 (Dec. 7), 321; W. Taylor, Four Years' Campaign . . ., p. 238; Fifty-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1872), p. 116.
165. Bombay Guardian, XVIII (1872-73), 51 (Feb. 15), 402; George Bowen, as quoted by R. E. Speer, op. cit., p. 267.
166. Bombay Guardian, XVII (1871-72), 48 (Jan. 27), 377.
167. Indian Statesman, quoted, ibid., XVIII (1872-73), 16 (June 15), 124 f.
168. Ibid., 45 (Jan. 4), 353; Frederick Wood, in B. T. Badley, Ed., op. cit., p. 224.
169. W. Taylor, Four Years' Campaign . . ., p. 230; Bombay Guardian, XVIII (1872-73), 25 (Aug. 17), 193; ibid., 33 (Oct. 12), 257.
170. W. Taylor, Four Years' Campaign . . ., pp. 224, 233, 234 f., 274; Missionary Advocate, New Series, II (1874), 4 (April), 52.
171. W. F. Oldham, "God Keeps," Christian Advocate, XCII (1917), 44 (Nov. 1), 1135 f.; idem, "Some Life Experiences," ms.
172. Idem, "God Keeps," Christian Advocate, XCII (1917), 45 (Nov. 8), 1167 f.
173. Bombay Guardian, XIX (1873-74), 50 (Feb. 7), 396; ibid., XX (1874-75), 3 (March 21), 17; J. M. Thoburn, India and Malaysia, p. 428; W. Taylor, Four Years' Campaign . . ., p. 236; W. E. L. Clarke, in B. T. Badley, Ed., op. cit., p. 360.
174. W. Taylor, Four Years' Campaign . . ., pp. 260 f., ch. XXI passim.
175. Christian Advocate, XLVIII (1873), 20 (May 15), p. [153].
176. W. Taylor, Four Years' Campaign . . ., p. 270.

177. Bombay Guardian, XVII (1871-72), 34 (Oct. 21), 265; W. Taylor, Four Years' Campaign . . . , pp. 275, 283, 286, 395.
178. Ibid., pp. 272 f., 287.
179. J. M. Thoburn, "Rev. W. Taylor's Work in India," Christian Advocate, XLVIII (1873), 52 (Dec. 25), 409.
180. Idem, My Missionary Apprenticeship, pp. 301, 303; W. Taylor, Four Years' Campaign . . . , p. 295.
181. J. M. Thoburn, My Missionary Apprenticeship, pp. 314 f.; W. Taylor, Four Years' Campaign . . . , p. 293.
182. Ibid., pp. 293, 294.
183. J. M. Thoburn, My Missionary Apprenticeship, p. 315; W. Taylor, Four Years' Campaign . . . , p. 294; idem, Ten Years of Self-Supporting Missions . . . , p. 142.
184. J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., III, 20.
185. J. M. Thoburn, My Missionary Apprenticeship, pp. 316 ff., 330, 334, 335, 340, 372 ff.; W. Taylor, Four Years' Campaign . . . , pp. 350, 352 f.; G. Schanzlin, in B. T. Badley, Ed., op. cit., pp. 325 f.
186. W. Taylor, Four Years' Campaign . . . , pp. 296 f.; Bombay Guardian, XX (1874-75), 1 (March 7), 1.
187. W. Taylor, Four Years' Campaign . . . , pp. 299 f., 303.
188. Bombay Guardian, XX (1874-75), 12 (May 23), 91; ibid., 17 (June 27), 129; ibid., XXI (1875-76), 2 (March 13), 12; W. Taylor, Four Years' Campaign . . . , pp. [301], 304 f., 310 f., 313 f., 315, 317 f., 369.
189. Ibid., pp. 362 f.
190. Ibid., pp. [384-85].
191. Ibid., pp. 320 ff.; Bombay Guardian, XXI (1875-76), 2 (March 13), 11.
192. W. Taylor, Four Years' Campaign . . . , p. 328; James Mills Thoburn, "Wayside Notes, An Autobiography," Western Christian Advocate, July 26, 1911, p. 8.
193. Minutes, India Conference, 1876, pp. 60, 62.
194. W. Taylor, Four Years' Campaign . . . , pp. 328, 329, 404.
195. J. M. Thoburn, "Wayside Notes . . .," Western Christian Advocate, July 26, 1911, p. 8; William Taylor, Story of My Life . . . , p. 647; Bombay Guardian, XXI (1875), 11 (May 15), 81; ibid., XXI (1875), 25 (Aug. 21), 193 f.; Minutes, South India Conference, 1877, p. 24.
196. Christian Advocate, XLVIII (1873), 23 (June 5), 180; ibid., 28 (July 10), 217.
197. J. M. Thoburn, India and Malaysia, p. 295.
198. J. M. Thoburn, "Wayside Notes . . .," Western Christian Advocate, Nov. 8, 1911, pp. 8, 10; idem, My Missionary Apprenticeship, p. 287; W. F. Oldham, "God Keeps," Christian Advocate, XCII (1917), 45 (Nov. 8), 1167; W. Taylor, Ten Years of Self-Supporting Missions . . . , p. 111.
199. Minutes, South India Conference, 1876, pp. 5, 16 ff., [24 f.]; Fifty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1876), p. 125.
200. J. M. Thoburn, My Missionary Apprenticeship, pp. 340 f.
201. Minutes, South India Conference, 1876, pp. 12, 22; ibid., 1877, pp. 18 f., 20, 21, [29]; ibid., 1878, pp. 14 f.; Fifty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1877), p. 141; ibid., 60th (1878), p. [138].
202. Minutes, South India Conference, January, 1880, pp. 11 f., 12; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., III, 121; Sixty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1879), p. 141.
203. Minutes, South India Conference, December, 1880, p. 20; Sixty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1881), pp. 189, 190.
204. Minutes, South India Conference, 1881, p. 14.
205. Ibid., 1881, p. 14; J. M. Thoburn, "Wayside Notes . . .," Western Christian Advocate, Oct. 11, 1911, p. 8; W. Taylor, Ten Years of Self-Supporting Missions . . . , p. 389.
206. Bombay Guardian, XXIX (1883), 24 (June 16), 370.
207. J. M. Reid, report to Board of Managers, Missionary Society, in Manual of the Methodist Episcopal Church . . . , III (1883), 228 f.

208. Minutes, South India Conference, 1882, pp. 28 f. The Minutes contain no record of action on the resolutions.
209. Ibid., 1883, p. 29; Sixty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1885), pp. 184 f.; "Minutes, General Missionary Committee," Vol. C, [125 f.], [126].
210. Minutes, South India Conference, January, 1886, pp. 38 f.; Sixty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1886), pp. 192 f., 195.
211. Minutes, South India Conference, February, 1887, pp. 4 f., 9, 17, 18, 51, 52, 53, 54, 58-59; J. M. Thoburn, "How Christ Came to India," Northwestern Christian Advocate, Feb. 14, 1912, p. 205.
212. Sixty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1886), p. 194; ibid., 69th (1887), p. 222; Minutes, Bengal Conference, 1888, p. 43; Gospel in All Lands, March, 1886, p. 122; Minutes of the Second Session of the Central Conference of the Methodist Church in India, 1887, pp. 8, 9, 17.
213. Minutes, South India Conference, 1888, p. 51.
214. Ibid., pp. 16, 48, 49; ibid., January, 1891, p. 29; ibid., December, 1891, pp. 17, 19; ibid., 1892, pp. 10, 11, 16, 17.
215. Ibid., 1888, p. 26.
216. Ibid., 1883, pp. [15], 16; ibid., December, 1891, pp. 19 f.
217. Ibid., 1877, p. 20; ibid., 1882, pp. 13, 14; ibid., 1883, p. 16; Frederick Wood, in B. T. Badley, Ed., op. cit., pp. 228 f.
218. Fifteenth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1884), p. 24.
219. Minutes, South India Conference, 1890, pp. 23 f.; ibid., February, 1887, pp. 27 f.
220. Frederick Wood, in B. T. Badley, Ed., op. cit., pp. 228 f.
221. Minutes, South India Conference, 1888, p. 21; ibid., 1889, p. 24; Seventieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1888), p. 232.
222. Minutes, South India Conference, 1890, pp. 18, 22 f.
223. Minutes, Bombay Conference, 1893, p. 24.
224. Ibid., p. 26.
225. Minutes, South India Conference, 1882, pp. 12, 14; ibid., February, 1887, p. 29; ibid., 1890, p. 25; Minutes, Bombay Conference, 1892, p. 31; ibid., 1893, p. 28.
226. Mrs. W. F. Oldham, "What Missionaries' Wives Have Done and Are Doing for the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of South India," Southern Asia Jubilee, 1856-1906, South India Woman's Conference, Sec. 2, p. 6; Eighteenth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1887), p. 28; ibid., 21st (1889-90), p. 25; ibid., 22nd (1891-92), p. 27; Minutes, South India Conference, January, 1891, p. 21.
227. Ibid., December, 1880, p. 14; Minutes, Bombay Conference, 1892, p. 18; ibid., 1895, p. 20.
228. Seventy-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1893), p. 189; Minutes, Bombay Conference, 1894, p. 9; Twenty-sixth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1894-95), p. 23.
229. W. H. Stephens, in B. T. Badley, Ed., op. cit., pp. 241 f.; Bombay Guardian, XXIX (1883), 9 (March 3), 131; ibid., XXXI (1885), 15 (April 11), 226; Minutes, Bombay Conference, 1893, p. 28; ibid., 1894, p. 24.
230. F. R. Felt, in B. T. Badley, Ed., op. cit., pp. 366 f.; Minutes, South India Conference, 1876, p. 14; ibid., 1882, pp. 15, 34; ibid., 1888, p. 25; ibid., 1890, pp. 24, 25; ibid., 1892, p. 33.
231. Ibid., 1881, p. 26; ibid., February, 1887, p. 37; ibid., 1888, p. 22; ibid., 1890, pp. 25 f.; ibid., January, 1891, pp. 20, statistics, v; Seventieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1888), pp. 234 f.; Twenty-first Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1890), p. 24.
232. Minutes, Bombay Conference, 1893, p. 32.
233. Minutes, South India Conference, 1882, p. 15; Minutes, Bombay Conference, 1895, p. 14; ibid., 1896, p. 30.
234. Minutes, South India Conference, 1881, p. 26; ibid., 1882, p. 15; ibid., 1889, pp. 20, 23; ibid., 1890, p. 21; ibid., January, 1891, p. 19; ibid., December, 1893, p. 23; J. M. Thoburn, India and Malaysia, p. 429.
235. Minutes, South India Conference, 1881, p. 26; ibid., 1884, p. 22; ibid., February, 1887, p. 28; Bombay Guardian, XXX (1884), 50 (Dec. 13), 786; A. Colin King, in B. T. Badley, Ed., op. cit., p. 420.

236. Minutes, South India Conference, 1888, p. 22; Minutes, Bombay Conference, 1892, p. 30; ibid., 1895, p. 24.
237. Minutes, South India Conference, 1882, p. 15; ibid., 1883, p. 17; ibid., 1884, p. 22; ibid., January, 1886, p. 19; Seventy-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1896), p. 171.
238. Minutes, Bombay Conference, 1892, p. 32; ibid., 1893, pp. 29, 30; Seventy-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1894), p. 180; Minutes, South India Woman's Conference, 1891, p. 21.
239. Minutes, South India Conference, 1884, p. 20; ibid., January, 1891, p. 20; Minutes, Bombay Conference, 1892, p. 37; ibid., 1894, p. 29; ibid., 1895, pp. 28 f.; Seventy-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1892), p. 214.
240. Minutes, South India Conference, 1881, p. 31; ibid., 1884, p. 18; ibid., January, 1886, p. 27; Minutes, Bengal Conference, 1889, p. 24.
241. Minutes, South India Conference, 1881, pp. 26 f.
242. Ibid., 1882, p. 19.
243. Ibid., p. 18; J. M. Thoburn, My Missionary Apprenticeship, pp. 363 f.
244. Minutes, South India Conference, January, 1886, p. 25; Minutes, Bengal Conference, 1889, p. 30; Seventy-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1889), p. 223; Minutes, Bengal-Burma Conference, 1894, p. 21.
245. J. M. Thoburn, My Missionary Apprenticeship, pp. 335 ff., 367 ff.; G. Schanzlin, in B. T. Badley, Ed., op. cit., p. 319; Minutes, South India Conference, 1881, p. 28; ibid., February, 1887, pp. 34, 35; Minutes, Bengal Conference, 1892, pp. 22 f.; Minutes, Bengal-Burma Conference, 1894, p. 23.
246. Minutes, South India Conference, 1878, p. 18; ibid., January, 1880, p. 12; ibid., 1881, p. 23; ibid., 1883, p. 26; ibid., February, 1887, p. 35; Seventy-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1889), p. 224; Minutes, Bengal-Burma Conference, 1894, p. 22; ibid., 1895, pp. 26, 27; Minutes, Bengal Conference, 1890, p. 30; ibid., 1892, p. 24; Twenty-sixth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1894-95), p. 27.
247. G. Schanzlin, in B. T. Badley, Ed., op. cit., pp. 319 f., 321 ff.; J. M. Thoburn, My Missionary Apprenticeship, pp. 322 f.; Minutes, South India Conference, 1881, p. 27; ibid., 1882, p. 19; ibid., January, 1886, pp. 25 f.; Minutes, Bengal Conference, 1888, p. 38; ibid., 1890, pp. 29 f.; Minutes, Bengal-Burma Conference, 1894, pp. 6, 24.
248. Minutes, South India Conference, January, 1886, p. 26; ibid., February, 1887, p. 34; Minutes, Bengal Conference, 1888, pp. 37 f.; ibid., 1890, p. 29; Twenty-fifth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1893-94), p. 30.
249. Minutes, South India Conference, 1882, p. 19; ibid., 1883, p. 21; ibid., 1884, p. 27; W. P. Byers, in B. T. Badley, Ed., op. cit., pp. 525 f.; Sixty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1885), p. 179.
250. Minutes, Bengal Conference, 1892, p. 21; Minutes, Bengal-Burma Conference, 1895, p. 21; Twenty-third Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1891-92), p. 40.
251. Sixty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1886), p. 194; ibid., 69th (1887), p. 241; Minutes, Bengal Conference, 1888, pp. 47 f.; ibid., 1889, p. 29; ibid., 1892, pp. 21 f.; Minutes, Bengal-Burma Conference, 1895, p. 22.
252. Minutes, South India Conference, 1888, p. 26; ibid., 1889, p. 30.
253. J. J. Kingham, in B. T. Badley, Ed., op. cit., p. 264; Minutes, South India Conference, 1882, p. 16; ibid., 1890, p. 31.
254. Ibid., 1881, p. 10; ibid., 1882, p. 16; ibid., 1884, p. 24; ibid., February, 1887, p. 42; Sixty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1886), pp. 202 f.
255. Minutes, South India Conference, 1890, pp. 30, 31; ibid., December, 1895, p. 23; J. J. Kingham, in B. T. Badley, Ed., op. cit., p. 269.
256. Minutes, South India Conference, 1882, p. 16; ibid., 1883, pp. 10, 18 f.; ibid., February, 1887, p. 40.
257. Mrs. W. F. Oldham, "What Missionary Wives Have Done . . ." in Southern Asia Jubilee, 1856-1906, South India Woman's Conference, Sec. 2, pp. 7 f.; Minutes, South India Conference, 1888, p. 44; ibid., 1889, p. 30.
258. Seventy-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1892), pp. 206, 207.
259. Bombay Guardian, XXI (1875-76), 39 (Nov. 27), 306; W. Taylor, Ten Years of Self-Supporting Missions . . ., p. 313; Minutes, South India Conference, 1882, p. 16; ibid., February, 1887, p. 39; ibid., 1888, p. 28; ibid., 1889, p. 52; ibid., 1890, p. 28; ibid., December, 1895, p. 20.

260. W. Taylor, Four Years' Campaign . . ., pp. 296 f.; J. E. Robinson, "Reminiscences," Indian Witness, LII (1921), 19 (May 11), 367 f.

261. Minutes, South India Conference, 1882, p. 15; ibid., 1890, p. 29; ibid., December, 1891, p. 22.

262. Sixty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1887), pp. 233 f.; Gospel in All Lands, January, 1889, p. 31.

263. J. H. Garden, in B. T. Badley, Ed., op. cit., p. 610; W. Taylor, Ten Years of Self-Supporting Missions . . ., p. 313.

264. Minutes, South India Conference, 1882, p. 17; C. B. Ward, History of Twelve Years' Work in the Nizam's Dominions, 1879-1891, pp. 49, 58, 64 ff., 69 ff., 73, 74, 76; Sixty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1885), p. 184; ibid., 75th (1893), p. 164. Also see W. Taylor, Ten Years of Self-Supporting Missions . . ., pp. 312-30; also C. B. Ward, Our Work, passim.

265. J. H. Garden, in B. T. Badley, Ed., op. cit., pp. 612 ff.; Minutes, South India Conference, January, 1890, pp. 28 f.; ibid., 1892, p. 19; ibid., December, 1893, pp. 18 f.; ibid., December, 1895, p. 20.

266. Seventy-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1890), pp. 197 f.; ibid., 74th (1892), p. 208; Minutes, South India Conference, January, 1891, p. 22; ibid., December, 1893, pp. 24 f.; Florence W. Maskell, "History of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the South India Conference," in Southern Asia Jubilee, 1856-1906 . . ., pp. 13 f.

267. Minutes, South India Conference, December, 1893, pp. 17, 20; ibid., January, 1895, p. 21; Seventy-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1892), p. 201.

268. C. B. Ward, Our Work, pp. 204, 215 ff., 237; J. M. Thoburn to J. O. Peck, Dec. 28, 1892; Minutes, South India Conference, December, 1893, p. 19; ibid., December, 1895, p. 21.

269. Ibid., pp. 21 f.

270. Minutes, India Conference, 1874, pp. 28 f.; Fifty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1873), pp. 118 f.

271. Minutes, South India Conference, 1878, p. 18; ibid., 1881, p. 23; ibid., January, 1886, p. 35; Minutes, Northwest India Woman's Conference, 1895, pp. 22 f.; Minutes, Bengal Conference, 1889, p. 33; F. M. Wilson, in B. T. Badley, Ed., op. cit., pp. 281 f., 283, 284; Minutes, Northwest India Conference, 1893, p. 8; ibid., 1894, pp. 16, 21; ibid., 1895, pp. 22 f.

272. Missionary Advocate, II (1874), 4 (April), 53; C. F. H. Guse, in B. T. Badley, Ed., op. cit., pp. 339 f.; Minutes, South India Conference, 1876, p. 15; ibid., February, 1887, pp. 37 f.; Seventieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1888), pp. 258 ff.; ibid., 73rd (1891), p. 206; Minutes, Bengal Conference, 1888, p. 21.

273. Missionary Advocate, II (1874), 4 (April), 53; W. Taylor, Four Years' Campaign . . ., p. 394; O. M. Auner, in B. T. Badley, Ed., op. cit., pp. 459 ff.; Seventy-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1889), pp. 219 ff.; Minutes, Bombay Woman's Conference, 1894, p. 26.

274. Minutes, India Conference, 1875, pp. 42 f.; Minutes, South India Conference, 1876, p. 24; ibid., 1881, p. 31; ibid., February, 1887, p. 20; Sixty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1887), p. 207; ibid., 71st (1889), p. 177; Minutes, North India Conference, 1889, p. 40; ibid., 1890, p. 47; ibid., 1892, pp. 2 f.

275. Minutes, Northwest India Conference, 1893, p. 3.

276. Minutes, North India Conference, 1892, p. 2; Minutes, Northwest India Conference, 1893, p. 3; ibid., 1894, p. 4; ibid., 1895, p. 11.

277. Minutes, Bengal Conference, 1888, p. 42; ibid., 1889, p. 37; ibid., 1891, p. 21; Minutes, South India Conference, 1881, p. 32; ibid., 1884, p. 19; ibid., February, 1887, pp. 24 f.; W. A. Revis, in B. T. Badley, Ed., op. cit., pp. 414 f.

278. Minutes, South India Conference, 1881, p. 32; ibid., January, 1886, pp. 13, 16 f.

279. Minutes, Northwest India Conference, 1896, p. 35.

280. Minutes, South India Conference, 1882, p. 22.

281. Ibid., 1884, p. 32; ibid., January, 1886, pp. 17, 35; ibid., February, 1887, p. 24;

Minutes, Bengal Conference, 1889, p. 18; ibid., 1890, p. 36; Minutes, Northwest India Conference, 1893, pp. 13 f.

282. Minutes, South India Conference, 1881, p. 33; Minutes, Bengal Conference, 1891, p. 17; Twenty-third Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1891-92), pp. 41 f.; Minutes, Northwest India Conference, 1894, pp. 21 f.; Caroline [Buck] Wilkie, "Philo Melvin Buck, Called of God," ms., pp. 35 f.

283. Minutes, South India Conference, 1882, p. 22; ibid., 1883, pp. 23 f.; C. B. Hill, in B. T. Badley, Ed., op. cit., pp. 475 f.

284. Minutes, Northwest India Conference, 1893, pp. 1 f.; ibid., 1894, pp. 8 f.; ibid., 1896, unpagcd. See under Ajmer District. Minutes, Northwest India Woman's Conference, 1893, pp. 12 ff.

285. J. M. Thoburn, India and Malaysia, pp. 449 f., 450 f.; B. M. Jones, in B. T. Badley, Ed., op. cit., pp. 431 ff.; Thirteenth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1882), p. 21; Epworth Tidings, Rangoon, XXVI (1939), 10 (November), 4.

286. Sixty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1884), p. 167; J. M. Thoburn, India and Malaysia, pp. 520 ff., 523.

287. Ibid., p. 523; Minutes, South India Conference, February, 1887, p. 29.

288. Minutes, Bengal Conference, 1888, pp. 32 f., 64.

289. Sixty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1887), p. 238; Minutes, Bengal Conference, 1888, pp. 7, 14, 15, 45, 58, 61 ff.; ibid., 1889, p. 31.

290. Seventy-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1893), p. 177; Gospel in All Lands, January, 1892, pp. 57 f.

291. Minutes, Bengal Conference, 1890, p. 28; ibid., 1892, p. 35; Seventy-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1889), p. 225; Minutes, Bengal-Burma Conference, 1895, p. 27.

292. Minutes, Bengal Conference, 1892, p. 25; Minutes, Bengal-Burma Conference, 1894, pp. 20 ff.; ibid., 1895, pp. 21, 23.

293. Minutes, Bombay Conference, 1894, p. 27; ibid., 1895, p. 27.

294. Minutes, Bengal Conference, 1889, p. 18; ibid., 1892, p. 33; Minutes, Bombay Conference, 1894, statistics, unpagcd; ibid., 1892, pp. 33, 35.

295. Minutes, Bengal Conference, 1888, pp. 42 f.; ibid., 1889, pp. 33 f.; ibid., 1892, p. 27.

296. Ibid., 1890, p. 37; ibid., 1892, p. 30; Minutes, Northwest India Conference, 1894, p. 13.

297. Minutes, Bengal Conference, 1892, pp. 34 f.; Minutes, Bengal-Burma Conference, 1894, p. 27.

298. Seventy-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1892), p. 218; ibid., 76th (1894), pp. 169, 170; Twenty-sixth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1894-95), pp. 26 f.; Minutes, South India Conference, February, 1887, pp. 30, 31; Minutes, Bengal Conference, 1888, pp. 35, 36; Minutes, Bengal-Burma Conference, 1894, pp. 17, 19; ibid., 1895, pp. 17, 18.

299. Sixty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1887), p. 247; Minutes, Bengal Conference, 1888, p. 36.

300. Minutes, B. M., XVI, 50 f.

301. Seventy-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1893), p. 183; Minutes, Bombay Conference, 1892, pp. 5, 19.

302. Ibid., 1893, p. 22.

303. Ibid., 1894, pp. 24, 25; ibid., 1895, p. 22.

304. Ibid., 1893, p. 31; ibid., 1895, p. 27.

305. Ibid., 1892, p. 37; ibid., 1894, p. 28.

306. Bombay Guardian, XXXII (1886), 6 (Feb. 6), 83; Seventeenth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1886), p. 27; ibid., 18th (1887), p. 11.

307. Minutes, Bengal Conference, 1889, p. 19; Minutes, Bombay Conference, 1892, p. 16.

308. Tenth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1878-79), p. 10; ibid., 20th (1889), p. 34.

269. Ibid., 13th (1882), p. 9; Louise Manning Hodgkins, The Roll Call . . ., pp. 26, 41.

310. Fiftieth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1884), p. 24; Minutes, South India Conference, January, 1886, p. 19; F. W. Maskell, "History of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the South India Conference," in Southern Asia Jubilee, 1856-1906 . . . , pp. 2 f.; Mrs. Effie G. Lindsay, Missionaries of the Minneapolis Branch of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, pp. 22 f.; L. M. Hodgkins, op. cit., pp. 73 f.

311. Mrs. W. F. Oldham, "What Missionary Wives Have Done . . .," in Southern Asia Jubilee, 1856-1906 . . . , Sec. 2, pp. 4 f.; F. W. Maskell, "History of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the South India Conference," ibid., pp. 4 f.; Eighteenth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1887), p. 27; ibid., 19th (1888), pp. 20 H ff.; ibid., 21st (1889-90), p. 25; ibid., 26th (1894-95), pp. 18 f.

312. Sophia Blackmore, "A Record of Forty Years of Woman's Work in Malaya," ch. I, pp. 7, 8; Eighteenth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1887), pp. 31 f.

313. Minutes, Bengal Conference, 1888, pp. 49 f.; Nineteenth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1888), pp. 23 f.

314. Twenty-first Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1889-90), pp. 23 f.; ibid., 22nd (1890-91), p. 28; ibid., 24th (1892-93), pp. 33 f., 35.

315. J. H. Garden, in B. T. Badley, Ed., op. cit., p. 332; F. W. Maskell, "History of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the South India Conference," in Southern Asia Jubilee, 1856-1906 . . . , pp. 9 f.

316. Abel Stevens, Supplementary History of American Methodism . . . , pp. 101 ff.; Minutes, Bengal Conference, 1888, p. 15; G. C. Journal, 1888, p. 435.

317. J. M. Thoburn, My Missionary Apprenticeship, pp. 255 f.

318. F. J. Baker, op. cit., pp. 256 f.; Twenty-sixth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1894-95), pp. 122 f.; Lucy Rider Meyer, Deaconesses, Biblical, Early Church, European, American, with The Story of the Chicago Training School, For City, Home and Foreign Missions, and The Chicago Deaconess Home, pp. 148 f.

319. Twenty-third Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1891-92), pp. 36 ff.; Minutes, South India Woman's Conference, 1890, pp. 33 f.

320. Minutes, North India Conference, 1887, pp. 45, 55; Sixty-second Ann. Rep., M. S., (1880), pp. 111 f.; Ninth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1877-78), pp. 17 f.; ibid., 10th (1878-79), p. 7.

321. J. M. Reid, report to Board of Managers, Missionary Society, in Manual of the Methodist Episcopal Church . . . , III, 1883, 231-33.

322. Ninth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1877-78), pp. 12, 18; Sixtieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1878), p. 120.

323. Heathen Woman's Friend, X (1879), 10 (April), 232; Sixty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1880), pp. 128, 138.

324. Minutes, North India Conference, 1887, pp. 79, 81.

325. Ibid., 1890, p. 63.

326. Seventieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1888), p. 202; J. H. Messmore, The Life of Edwin Wallace Parker . . . , pp. 215 f.; F. J. Baker, op. cit., p. 259.

327. Minutes, North India Conference, 1890, p. 13; Gospel in All Lands, April, 1888, pp. 169 f.

328. Seventy-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1890), pp. 174 f.

329. Minutes, North India Conference, 1890, pp. 79 f.; ibid., 1891, pp. 28, 76; J. M. Thoburn to J. O. Peck, Jan. 13, 1891.

330. J. M. Thoburn to J. O. Peck, Dec. 28, 1891.

331. Minutes, North India Conference, 1892, pp. 57 f.

332. J. M. Thoburn to J. O. Peck, Dec. 30, 1892, Jan. 17, 1893.

333. Minutes, North India Conference, 1895, p. 54.

334. Ibid., 1882, p. 38.

335. Ibid., 1887, pp. 31 f.; ibid., 1889, p. 17.

336. Heathen Woman's Friend, XII (1880), 1 (July), 4; ibid., XV (1883), 5 (November), 99 f.; Twenty-sixth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1894-95), pp. 10 f.; Minutes, North India Conference, 1886, p. 27; ibid., 1890, p. 35.

337. Fifty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1877), p. 115; Minutes, North India Conference, 1891, p. 33; ibid., 1894, P. E. Repts., p. 5; Twenty-sixth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1894-95), p. 11.

338. Minutes, North India Conference, 1880, p. 16; ibid., 1886, pp. 37 ff.; Twenty-second Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1890-91), p. 17; ibid., 26th (1894-95), p. 12.
339. Minutes, North India Conference, 1879, pp. 27 f.; Sixty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1883), pp. 120 f.; ibid., 68th (1886), p. 158; Eighth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1876-77), p. 10; ibid., 9th (1877-78), pp. 17 f.; F. J. Baker, op. cit., pp. 139 f.; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., III, 47.
340. Minutes, North India Conference, 1882, pp. 53 f.; ibid., 1887, p. 44.
341. Ibid., 1878, pp. 25 f.; ibid., 1886, pp. 25 f., 42 f.; ibid., 1890, p. 45.
342. Ibid., 1892, p. 4.
343. Ibid., 1878, pp. 86 ff.; ibid., 1891, p. 24.
344. Ibid., 1879, p. 15; Seventieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1888), p. 191.
345. Minutes, North India Conference, 1891, p. 28.
346. Sixty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1880), p. 131; ibid., 67th (1885), pp. 125-27; Thirteenth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1882), pp. 18 f.
347. Minutes, North India Conference, 1878, pp. 3 ff.; ibid., 1895, pp. 10 f.; Sixty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1885), pp. 126 f.
348. Fifty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1874), p. 105; Minutes, North India Conference, 1878, p. 7; ibid., 1879, pp. 8 ff.; ibid., 1893, P. E. Repts., p. 14.
349. Heathen Woman's Friend, XXIV (1892), 4 (October), 75 f.; anon., "Mary Reed, My Jewel," The Methodist Woman, January, 1942, pp. 10 f.
350. Minutes, North India Conference, 1882, p. 25; Sixty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1884), p. 140; Thirteenth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1882), p. 18.
351. Minutes, North India Conference, 1877, p. 5; ibid., 1880, pp. 49 f.; ibid., 1886, p. 53; ibid., 1889, p. 8; ibid., 1895, pp. 11 f.; Sixty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1879), p. 107.
352. Sixtieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1878), p. 134; ibid., 61st (1879), p. 131; Minutes, North India Conference, 1892, p. 16; ibid., 1895, p. 15.
353. Ibid., 1878, pp. 29 ff.; ibid., 1887, p. 9; B. T. Badley, in B. T. Badley, Ed., op. cit., pp. 83, 94 f.; Sixty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1883), p. 141.
354. Minutes, North India Conference, 1895, p. 16; Minutes of the Eleventh Annual Meeting of the W. F. M. S. of the M. E. Church in America, Connected With the North India Conference . . ., 1882, p. vii; Twentieth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1889), pp. 23 f.
355. Minutes, North India Conference, 1877, p. 30; ibid., 1879, p. 37; Twenty-sixth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1894-95), p. 14.
356. Minutes, North India Conference, 1882, pp. 14 f.; ibid., 1893, P. E. Repts., p. 26; Sixty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1886), p. 172.
357. Fifteenth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1884), p. 17; ibid., 19th (1888), p. 20-c.
358. Minutes, North India Conference, 1878, p. 32; ibid., 1884, pp. 23 ff.; Seventy-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1892), pp. 188 ff.
359. Minutes, North India Conference, 1878, pp. 31 f.; Seventy-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1890), p. 160.
360. Sixty-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1882), pp. 125 f.; Minutes, North India Conference, 1885, pp. 61 f.; ibid., 1895, p. 25; ibid., 1896, P. E. Repts., p. 18; Sixteenth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1885), p. 18.
361. Minutes, North India Conference, 1892, pp. 1, 2; ibid., 1893, P. E. Repts., pp. 1, 2; Gospel in All Lands, January, 1892, p. 59.
362. Minutes, North India Conference, 1889, pp. 41 ff.; Minutes, Northwest India Conference, 1894, pp. 3 f.; "Minutes of the Reference Committee of the W. F. M. S., Nov. 26, 1883-Oct. 25, 1888."
363. Gospel in All Lands, August, 1892, pp. 355 f.; Minutes, North India Conference, 1892, p. 4; Minutes, Northwest India Conference, 1893, p. 7.
364. Minutes, North India Conference, 1892, pp. 6 f., 8; ibid., 1894, P. E. Repts., p. 3.
365. Ibid., 1892, pp. 12 f.; ibid., 1895, p. 13.
366. Ibid., 1892, p. 27; ibid., 1893, P. E. Repts., p. 19; Twenty-sixth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1894-95), pp. 9 f.
367. Minutes, North India Conference, 1895, p. 6.
368. Minutes, Northwest India Conference, 1894, p. 45.

369. Ibid., 1893, pp. 23, 33 f., 38 f.; ibid., 1894, p. 45; Twenty-fifth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1893-94), p. 18; ibid., 26th (1894-95), p. 16.
370. Minutes, Northwest India Conference, 1894, pp. [1 f.].
371. Seventy-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1895), pp. 143 f.
372. Minutes, Northwest India Conference, 1894, pp. 25 f.; ibid., 1895, pp. 32 f.; ibid., 1896, p. 28.
373. Ibid., 1894, pp. 8 f., 10.
374. Ibid., 1893, p. 8.
375. Ibid., pp. 8 f.; ibid., 1894, p. 18; ibid., 1896, pp. 18, 20 ff.
376. Ibid., 1894, p. 23; ibid., 1895, pp. 30 f.
377. Ibid., p. 17; ibid., 1896, p. 34.
378. C. [B.] Wilkie, "Philo Melvin Buck, Called of God," pp. 35 f.; Seventy-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1893), pp. 154 f.
379. Minutes, Northwest India Conference, 1895, p. 29.
380. Seventy-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1893), pp. 154 f.; Minutes, Northwest India Conference, 1895, pp. 27 f.
381. J. H. Messmore, op. cit., pp. 188 f.
382. Sixty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1881), p. 138.
383. Minutes of the Fifth Session of the Central Conference of the Methodist Church in India and Malaysia . . ., 1894, p. 41.
384. J. M. Thoburn, "Missionary Policy of the Methodist Episcopal Church," Methodist Quarterly Review, L (1868), 1 (January), 75-93.
385. E. W. Parker to J. O. Peck, Aug. 28, 1888.
386. E. Thomson, Our Oriental Missions, I, India and China, 76 f.
387. Fifty-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1872), p. 100.
388. J. M. Thoburn, Episcopal Address, Minutes of the Third Session of the Central Conference . . . in India and Malaysia . . ., 1889, p. 22.
389. Minutes, Northwest India Conference, 1894, p. 20.
390. Lucknow Witness as quoted in Bombay Guardian, XIX, New Series (1873-74), 17 (June 21), 134.
391. J. L. Humphrey, Twenty-one Years in India, pp. 85 f.
392. J. M. Thoburn, India and Malaysia, pp. 405 f.
393. Minutes, North India Conference, 1887, p. 81.
394. C. B. Ward, History of Twelve Years' Work in the Nizam's Dominions . . ., p. 50.
395. J. M. Thoburn, India and Malaysia, p. 524.
396. W. F. Oldham, quoted, ibid., p. 526.
397. Christian Advocate, LX (1885), 18 (April 30), 286. Nathalie Toms Means (Malaysia Mosaic, A Story of Fifty Years of Methodism, p. 19) says the church "was formed with three members and fifteen probationers." Thoburn's article in the Advocate must have been written almost immediately after the event to have reached New York for printing in the April 30 issue. Gospel in All Lands, March, 1886, p. 121.
398. W. F. Oldham, quoted by J. M. Thoburn, India and Malaysia, pp. 529 f.; N. T. Means, op. cit., p. 24.
400. Minutes, Second Session, Central Conference, India, 1887, p. 8; G. C. Journal, 1888, p. 435.
401. Seventy-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1889), pp. 230 ff.; ibid., 72nd (1890), pp. 222 ff.; Minutes, Malaysia Mission, 1890, pp. 10 ff.
402. J. M. Thoburn to J. O. Peck, July 29, 1890.
403. William G. Shellabear, "Mission to the Millions of Malaysia," extracts from a circular issued in England, Aug. 18, 1890, reprinted in Gospel in All Lands, May, 1891, pp. 214-17.
404. Minutes, Malaysia Mission, 1891, pp. [3]-12, 18 f., 22 ff.; ibid., 1892, pp. 19 ff.; Seventy-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1894), pp. 195 f.; Sophia Blackmore, "A Record of Forty Years of Woman's Work in Malaya," ms., ch. II, pp. 4-5.
405. Ibid., ch. II, pp. 1-4, 6; Twenty-second Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1891), p. 33.
406. Minutes, Malaysia Mission, 1892, pp. 12 ff., 18.

407. Minutes, Malaysia Mission Conference, 1893, pp. 4, 20, 21; ibid., 1894, p. 28; Seventy-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1893), pp. 199, 200 f., 203.
408. Minutes, Malaysia Mission Conference, 1893, pp. 20 f.; ibid., 1894, pp. 9, 11; Seventy-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1894), pp. 191, 193, 195; Twenty-fifth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1893-94), p. 32; ibid., 26th (1894-95), p. 32.
409. J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., III, 195 f.; S. Blackmore, op. cit., ch. II, pp. 10 f.; Seventy-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1894), pp. 195 f.
410. "Minutes of the Woman's Conference," in Minutes, Malaysia Mission Conference, 1894, pp. 25 ff.
411. Minutes, Malaysia Mission Conference, 1895, pp. 13, 15; Twenty-sixth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1894-95), pp. 29 ff., 33.
412. Seventy-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1895), p. 190.
413. J. M. Thoburn, My Missionary Apprenticeship, pp. 348 f.
414. "Minutes of a United Session of the North India and South India Conferences," in Minutes, South India Conference, 1880, pp. 1-3.
415. E. W. Parker to J. M. Reid, Jan. 20, 1880.
416. Minutes of the Delegated Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church in India . . ., July 14-18, 1881, pp. 3, 4, 6, 8, 10 f. The Minutes, p. [3], mistakenly call this the "Second Delegated Conference."
417. G. C. Journal, 1884, pp. 285, 349; Minutes of the First Central Conference . . ., in India . . ., 1885, pp. 5, 7, 9, 10, 14, 17.
418. Ibid., 1887, pp. 5, 8 f., 17 f., 23.
419. J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., III, 169 f.; Minutes, Fifth Session, Central Conference, India and Malaysia, 1894, pp. 56 f.

VII

EXPANDING MISSIONS—JAPAN AND KOREA

1. Samuel F. Bemis, A Diplomatic History of the United States, p. 357; Tyler Dennett, Americans in Eastern Asia, p. 269.
2. Christian Advocate and Journal, XXIX (1854), 42 (Oct. 19), 166.
3. S. F. Bemis, op. cit., p. 358; Otis Cary, A History of Christianity in Japan: Protestant Missions, pp. 39 f. This work is almost the only source of comprehensive, detailed historical data on Christian work in Japan during the period covered by this volume.
4. G. C. Journal, 1860, p. 393.
5. Kenneth S. Latourette, The Development of Japan, pp. 119 f., 126; Ruth Benedict, The Chrysanthemum and the Sword, pp. 76 f.
6. Gospel in All Lands, April, 1892, pp. 159 ff.
7. O. Cary, op. cit., pp. 97 ff.
8. Julius Soper, "Personal Reminiscences of By-Gone Days in Japan," ms., pp. 1 f.; Fifty-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1872), p. 121.
9. J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, Missions and Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, III, 411; Merriman C. Harris, Christianity in Japan, pp. 45 ff.
10. Fifty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1873), pp. 137 f.; Minutes, B. M., VII, 356.
11. J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., II, 418. Although Minutes of the meetings have apparently been lost, Reid and Gracey evidently had access to them since they give an account of proceedings of each meeting.
12. J. Soper, "The Way Opened," ms., pp. 5 f.
13. Fifty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1874), pp. 133, 134.
14. "Minutes," Third Annual Meeting, General Executive Comm., W. F. M. S., 1870, ms., pp. 10, 36; Fourth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1873), p. 7; ibid., 5th (1874), p. 14.
15. Fifty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1875), pp. 132 f.; ibid., 58th (1876), p. 135; John H. DeForest, Sunrise in the Sunrise Kingdom, pp. 98 ff.

16. Fifty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1876), pp. 135 f.
17. Fifty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1877), pp. 152 f.
18. J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., III, 435; Isaac W. Wiley, China and Japan . . ., pp. 465, 466 f.
19. J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., III, 454 f., 459 ff.
20. Fifty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1874), pp. 135 f.
21. Fifty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1875), pp. 135 ff.
22. Fifty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1876), pp. 137 f.
23. Fifty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1877), pp. 153 f.
24. J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., III, 441 f.; Fifty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1877), p. 154.
25. Ibid., 59th (1877), p. 159; ibid., 60th (1878), pp. 148 ff.
26. Ibid., 60th (1878), p. 155.
27. Fourteenth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1883), p. 37; ibid., 10th (1878-79), pp. 21 f.; ibid., 11th (1879-80), p. 37; ibid., 13th (1882), p. 37; ibid., 15th (1884), pp. 37 f.
28. O. Cary, op. cit., p. 197.
29. Sixty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1880), pp. 173 f.; ibid., 64th (1882), p. 145.
30. Sixty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1879), pp. 158 f.; ibid., 63rd (1881), p. 206; ibid., 64th (1882), p. 144.
31. Fifty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1874), pp. 136 f.
32. Mary F. Soper, "The First Methodist Parsonage in Tokyo, Japan," Tidings from Japan, 5 (1902), 3 (March), 25.
33. J. Soper, "Personal Reminiscences . . .," ms., p. 2.
34. Idem, "The Way Opened," ms., pp. 2 ff.
35. Ibid., pp. 4 ff.; idem, "Personal Reminiscences . . .," ms., pp. 5 f.
36. Ibid., pp. 4 f.
37. Ibid., Ninth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1877-78), p. 28; ibid., 10th (1878-79), pp. 20 f.
38. Mary F. Soper, "A Budget of Old Memories," ms., pp. 8 f.; Fifty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1877), p. 155.
39. Sixtieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1878), pp. 152, 155 f.
40. Ibid., pp. 152, 155, 156; ibid., 61st (1879), p. 154; ibid., 62nd (1880), pp. 168 f.
41. Sixty-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1882), p. 141; ibid., 65th (1883), pp. 178 f.; ibid., 66th (1884), p. 182; Minutes, Japan Conference (1884), pp. 18 ff.
42. Sixty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1883), p. 180; ibid., 66th (1884), p. 181.
43. Fifty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1874), p. 137; ibid., 57th (1875), p. 137; Robert S. Spencer, Typhoon Days in Japan, p. 16. The place name is variously spelled in the sources: Hakodati, Hakodatti, and Hakodate.
44. Fifty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1877), pp. 156 ff.; ibid., 60th (1878), p. 151; ibid., 62nd (1880), pp. 168 f.; I. W. Wiley, op. cit., pp. 340 f.
45. Tenth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1878-79), p. 22; ibid., 13th (1881-82), p. 38; Frances J. Baker, The Story of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society . . ., p. 335.
46. Sixty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1883), p. 182.
47. Sixteenth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1885), pp. 41 f.
48. Fifty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1877), p. 157; O. Cary, op. cit., pp. 124 f.; H. Ritter, A History of Protestant Missions in Japan, p. 97; Sixty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1883), p. 182.
49. Fifty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1877), pp. 157-159.
50. I. W. Wiley, op. cit., pp. 355 ff.; Sixtieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1878), p. 149. Maclay's statement does not agree in some particulars with Honda's written account as given by him, over his own signature, to Wiley.
51. I. W. Wiley, op. cit., pp. 352-55.
52. Sixtieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1878), pp. 150 f.
53. Sixty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1879), pp. 154 ff.; ibid., 62nd (1880), p. 177.
54. Sixty-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1882), p. 147.
55. Fifty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1874), p. 137; ibid., 59th (1877), pp. 155 f.; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., III, 439 f.

56. Eleventh Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1879-80), p. 41.
57. Sixty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1880), p. 176; Twelfth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1881), pp. 47 f.; ibid., 14th (1883), pp. 37 f.
58. G. C. Journal, 1884, p. 345; Minutes, Japan Conference, 1884, pp. 3 ff.
59. Gen'l Minutes, 1884, pp. 242, 365.
60. "Minutes, Woman's Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Japan," in Minutes, Japan Conference, pp. 40-47; F. J. Baker, op. cit., p. 341.
61. Japan Weekly Mail, as quoted by O. Cary, op. cit., pp. 172 ff.
62. Ibid., pp. 74 f.; D. C. Green, quoted, ibid., p. 210.
63. Ibid., pp. 177 ff.; R. S. Maclay, quoted, ibid., pp. 164 ff.
64. Ibid., pp. 177 f.
65. Minutes, Japan Conference, 1885, pp. 15, 33; ibid., 1887, pp. 25, 60 ff.
66. Ibid., 1888, pp. 1 f., 10, 20 f., 27 f., statistics, unpagcd.
67. Minutes, B. M., XI, 321 f.
68. O. Cary, op. cit., pp. 212 ff.; Minutes, Japan Conference, 1889, pp. 19, 27, statistics, unpagcd.
69. Y. Honda to Bishop E. G. Andrews, July 6, 1889.
70. J. H. DeForest, op. cit., pp. 92, 171 ff.; O. Cary, op. cit., pp. 213, 226 f.
71. D. S. Spencer, "Recent Movements in Japan," in Gospel in All Lands, May, 1891, pp. 203 f.; O. Cary, op. cit., pp. 229, 238, 241.
72. Minutes, B. M., XIV, 189.
73. S. M. Merrill to A. B. Leonard, May 28, 1890.
74. Charlotte B. DeForest, The Evolution of a Missionary; A Biography of John Hyde DeForest, for Thirty-Seven Years Missionary of the American Board, in Japan, pp. 176 f.
75. Kanzo Uchimura, as quoted by W. F. Oldham, "Japan," ms., p. 21.
76. Minutes, Japan Conference, 1891, pp. 30, 31; J. S. Soper to A. B. Leonard, July 27, 1891.
77. W. S. Worden to Corresponding Secretary, Feb. 23, 1891.
78. Seventy-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1892), p. 243; Minutes, Japan Conference, 1892, p. 44.
79. Ibid., 1893, pp. 44 ff.; ibid., 1894, pp. 1 f., 33, 43, 71 ff.
80. O. Cary, op. cit., pp. 249 ff.
81. Minutes, Japan Conference, 1895, pp. 28, 122, statistics, unpagcd.
82. O. Cary, op. cit., p. 253.
83. Minutes, Japan Conference, 1884, p. 38; ibid., 1885, pp. 17, 19 f.; Sixty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1885), pp. 204 f.
84. Minutes, Japan Conference, 1886, pp. 24 ff.
85. Ibid., 1885, p. 18.
86. Ibid., p. 19.
87. Gospel in All Lands, January, 1886, p. 45; Minutes, Japan Conference, 1886, pp. 27 ff.; Sixty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1887), pp. 240 f.
88. Ibid., p. 276.
89. Ibid., p. 277; Eighteenth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1887), pp. 38 f.; H. W. Schwartz to J. M. Reid, Feb. 16, 1887; Mrs. J. G. Cleveland, "Reminiscences, Yonezawa," ms., p. 1.
90. Seventieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1888), p. 307.
91. Ibid., pp. 307 f.; Minutes, Japan Woman's Conference, 1888, pp. 25, 41.
92. Minutes, Japan Conference, 1889, pp. 40 f.; Nineteenth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1888), p. 36; Minutes, Japan Woman's Conference, 1889, pp. 32, 36 f.
93. Ibid., 1891, pp. 41 f.; Twenty-sixth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1894-95), p. 52; Seventy-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1889), p. 265.
94. Seventy-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1890), p. 247.
95. Ibid., pp. 246 f.; Minutes, Japan Conference, 1891, pp. 53, 54, 55.
96. Ibid., 1893, p. 27; F. J. Baker, op. cit., pp. 324 f.
97. Minutes, Japan Conference, 1895, pp. 67, 70; John Weir to Bishop W. V. Mal-lalieu, April 30, 1895.

98. Sixty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1884), pp. 182 f.; ibid., 67th (1885), pp. 205 f.
99. Ibid., 67th (1885), pp. 207 f.; Minutes, Japan Conference, 1886, pp. 30 ff.
100. I. H. Correll to J. M. Reid, Jan. 7, 1887; Minutes, Japan Conference, 1887, p. 53; ibid., 1888, p. 47.
101. Ibid., 1889, pp. 42 f., 44; ibid., 1891, pp. 55 f.; Minutes, Japan Woman's Conference, 1888, p. 37.
102. Twenty-first Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1890), pp. 37 f.; Seventy-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1891), p. 249.
103. Minutes, Japan Woman's Conference, 1890, pp. 38 f.; Minutes, Japan Conference, 1893, p. 29; ibid., 1894, p. 42.
104. Minutes, Japan Woman's Conference, 1893, p. 9; ibid., 1894, pp. 82 ff.
105. Minutes, Japan Conference, 1885, pp. 26 f.; Sixty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1884), p. 187.
106. Minutes, Japan Conference, 1885, pp. 27 ff.; ibid., 1887, pp. 28 ff.
107. Ibid., 1888, p. 30.
108. Ibid., pp. 30 f.; John Weir to A. B. Leonard, Feb. 9, Oct. 21, 1889.
109. Minutes, Japan Woman's Conference, 1889, pp. 28 f.
110. Minutes, Japan Conference, 1888, pp. 30 ff.; ibid., 1889, pp. 28 ff.; Minutes, Japan Woman's Conference, 1888, p. 28; Louise M. Hodgkins, The Roll Call . . ., p. 5.
111. Minutes, Japan Conference, 1891, pp. 43 ff.; ibid., 1893, pp. 9, 11; ibid., 1894, pp. 27 ff., 71; ibid., 1895, pp. 50 ff.; Minutes, Japan Woman's Conference, 1890, p. 22; ibid., 1894, p. 8.
112. Minutes, Japan Conference, 1893, pp. 6 f.
113. Seventy-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1893), pp. 223 f.; Minutes, Japan Conference, 1893, pp. 6 ff.; ibid., 1895, pp. 43 f., 45 f., 47; Minutes, Japan Woman's Conference, 1893, p. 43; ibid., 1894, pp. 41 f.
114. C. S. Long in Northern Christian Advocate as quoted by O. Cary, op. cit., p. 170.
115. Sixty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1883), p. 184.
116. Sixty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1884), pp. 184 f.; Minutes, Japan Conference, 1885, pp. 24 f.
117. Sixteenth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1885), p. 46.
118. Sixty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1886), p. 235.
119. Minutes, Japan Conference, 1886, pp. 36 f.; ibid., 1890, p. 40; Minutes, Japan Woman's Conference, 1889, p. 55.
120. Seventy-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1891), p. 237.
121. Minutes, Japan Conference, 1891, p. 57.
122. Minutes, Japan Woman's Conference, 1891, pp. 64, 66; ibid., 1892, pp. 83 f., 87 f.
123. Seventy-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1891), pp. 248, 250 f.; F. J. Baker, op. cit., p. 331; Minutes, Japan Conference, 1892, p. 72; ibid., 1893, pp. 14, 71 f.
124. Ibid., 1894, pp. 12 ff.; I. H. Correll to A. B. Leonard, Oct. 1, 1894.
125. Minutes, Japan Conference, 1895, p. 55.
126. Ibid., 1887, p. 61; ibid., 1888, p. 38.
127. Gospel in All Lands, May 1888, pp. 267-69.
128. Minutes, Japan Conference, 1888, pp. 38 ff.; ibid., 1889, p. 36.
129. Twentieth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1889), p. 47; Minutes, Japan Conference, 1889, p. 36; ibid., 1890, pp. 42, 61.
130. Ibid., 1891, pp. 48 ff.
131. Seventy-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1892), pp. 251 ff.; Minutes, Japan Woman's Conference, 1892, pp. 71 f.
132. Minutes, Japan Conference, 1893, pp. 22 ff.; ibid., 1894, pp. 16 ff.; Minutes, Japan Woman's Conference, 1894, pp. 86 ff.
133. Minutes, Japan Conference, 1895, pp. 59 ff.
134. Minutes, Japan Woman's Conference, 1895, pp. 79-83.
135. Minutes, Japan Conference, 1889, pp. 68 ff.; ibid., 1891, pp. 50 ff.; ibid., 1893, p. 25.

136. Ibid., 1892, p. 48; ibid., 1893, pp. 24 f.; Minutes, Japan Woman's Conference, 1893, pp. 50 ff.
137. Minutes, Japan Conference, 1894, pp. 23 f.; ibid., 1895, pp. 63 ff.
138. Ibid., 1894, pp. 8 ff.; ibid., 1895, p. 49; L. M. Hodgkins, op. cit., pp. 68, 70; Minutes, Japan Woman's Conference, 1894, pp. 93 ff.
139. Minutes, Japan Conference, 1894, pp. 39 f.
140. Ibid., pp. 102 f., 108 f.; ibid., 1895, statistics, unpagged; Minutes, Japan Woman's Conference, 1895, statistics, unpagged.
141. I. W. Wiley, op. cit., pp. 381 ff.
142. Minutes, Japan Conference, 1895, p. 74.
143. Edwin O. Reischauer, The United States and Japan, p. 13.
144. R. S. Maclay, "A Fortnight in Seoul, Korea, in 1884," Gospel in All Lands, August, 1896, pp. 354, 358-59; idem, "Korea's Permit to Christianity," Missionary Review of the World, IX, New Series (1896), 4 (April), 287-90.
145. H. G. Appenzeller, "The Opening of Korea: Admiral Shufeldt's Account of It," The Korean Repository, I (February, 1892), 57-62; L. George Paik, The History of Protestant Missions in Korea, 1832-1910, pp. 59-61.
146. "Minutes, General Missionary Committee," Vol. C, 33; L. G. Paik, op. cit., p. 73.
147. "Minutes, General Missionary Committee," Vol. C, 70-72.
148. L. G. Paik, op. cit., pp. 91, 158 f.; Robert S. Maclay, "Commencement of the Korea Methodist Episcopal Mission," Gospel in All Lands, November, 1896, pp. 500-501; Sixty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1885), pp. 234 f.
149. Ibid., 67th (1885), pp. 234-38; W. B. Scranton to J. M. Reid, April 23, June 1, June 8, 1885; A. T. Pierson, The Crisis of Missions; or, The Voice out of the Cloud, p. 108; William Elliot Griffis, A Modern Pioneer in Korea, the Life Story of Henry G. Appenzeller, p. 99.
150. Sixty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1886), pp. 268 f., 270 f., 272; Charles A. Sauer, Ed., Within the Gate, p. 9.
151. Seventeenth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1886), pp. 46-47; Heathen Woman's Friend, XVIII (1886), 4 (October), 98; ibid., XIX (1887), 1 (July), 11-12; Horace Horton Underwood, Modern Education in Korea, pp. 17-18.
152. C. A. Sauer, Ed., op. cit., p. 84; Sixty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1886), p. 267.
153. Ibid., 68th (1886), pp. 266 ff.; Gospel in All Lands, March, 1886, p. 141; L. G. Paik, op. cit., pp. 153 f.
154. Sixty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1887), pp. 312 ff.; ibid., 70th (1888), p. 340; Eighteenth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1887), p. 50; W. B. Scranton to J. M. Reid, April 21, 1887.
155. Sixty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1887), p. 315; ibid., 70th (1888), p. 340; ibid., 71st (1889), p. 293; Twentieth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1889), pp. 67 f.; L. M. Hodgkins, op. cit., p. 47.
156. Harry A. Rhodes, Ed., History of the Korea Mission, Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., 1884-1934, p. 410.
157. Sixty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1887), pp. 314 f.; L. G. Paik, op. cit., pp. 46-48; Eighteenth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1887), p. 51.
158. Sixty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1887), p. 314; ibid., 70th (1888), p. 337. A discrepancy exists between these two reports as to the exact date of the first baptism. They agree that it occurred early in October.
159. Ibid., 70th (1888), pp. 337 f.; Charles Davis Stokes, "History of Methodist Missions in Korea, 1885-1930," ms., pp. 84 f.
160. Seventieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1888), pp. 338 ff.; L. G. Paik, op. cit., pp. 145-47, 148.
161. Seventieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1888), p. 339; Ninetcenth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1888), p. 47.
162. Seventieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1888), pp. 341, 344; ibid., 71st (1889), p. 293.
163. C. A. Sauer, Ed., op. cit., p. 11.
164. Seventy-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1889), p. 291; ibid., 72nd (1890), pp. 272 f.

165. Seventy-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1889), p. 292; W. B. Scranton to A. B. Leonard, June 24, 1889.
166. Seventy-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1891), pp. 273, 275; Twenty-first Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1890), p. 52; ibid., 22nd (1891), pp. 66 f.
167. Seventy-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1891), pp. 272 f.; The Korean Repository, II (February, 1895), 75; C. D. Stokes, op. cit., pp. 88 f.
168. Seventy-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1891), pp. 271 f.
169. Twenty-second Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1891), pp. 64 f.
170. Seventy-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1891), pp. 273-76; ibid., 74th (1892), p. 291.
171. Seventy-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1893), p. 252; Twenty-fourth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1893), p. 80.
172. Seventy-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1892), pp. 282, 291-92; ibid., 75th (1893), p. 252; Twenty-third Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1892), p. 83.
173. Twenty-fourth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1893), pp. 78 ff.; W. B. Scranton to A. B. Leonard, May 6, 1893.
174. Seventy-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1892), pp. 282, 285 f.
175. Minutes, B. M., XIV, 469, 472; Seventy-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1894), pp. 241 f.
176. W. B. Scranton to A. B. Leonard, Dec. 12, 1893; Twenty-fourth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1893), p. 81.
177. Mrs. M. F. Scranton to A. B. Leonard, Dec. 20, 1893; W. B. Scranton to his mother, December, 1893.
178. W. B. Scranton to A. B. Leonard, March 20, May 6, Dec. 12, 1893.
179. Twenty-fourth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1893), p. 82.
180. George Heber Jones, "Presbyterian and Methodist Missions in Korea," International Review of Missions, I (1912), 432 f.; L. G. Paik, op. cit., pp. 162 f.
181. Seventy-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1894), pp. 240, 241, 243, 250; ibid., 77th (1895), p. 242; Minutes, Korea Mission, 1895, pp. 9 f.
182. Twenty-fifth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1894), pp. 65 f.; Seventy-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1894), p. 245; L. G. Paik, op. cit., p. 168.
183. Seventy-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1894), pp. 246 f.
184. Ibid., pp. 248 f.
185. Seventy-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1895), pp. 242-45; Twenty-sixth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1895), pp. 74-75; Minutes, Korea Mission, January, 1895, pp. 2, 3, 5, 17 f., 23-25, 29-32.
186. L. G. Paik, op. cit., p. 105.
187. Seventy-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1893), p. 255.
188. Sixty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1886), pp. 267 f.
189. L. G. Paik, op. cit., pp. 154 f., 433 f.
190. The Korean Repository, II (April, 1895), 145-47.
191. H. A. Rhodes, Ed., op. cit., pp. 90-92; L. G. Paik, op. cit., pp. 124-25; Gospel in All Lands, November, 1896, p. 500.

VIII

LATIN AMERICAN MISSIONS

1. Arthur Judson Brown, One Hundred Years, A History of the Foreign Missionary Work of the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. . . . , pp. 788, 789.
2. Stephen Olin, The Works of Stephen Olin . . . , II, 423.
3. Twenty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1847-48), pp. 39 f.; ibid., 32nd (1850-51), p. 118; Christian Advocate and Journal, XXIII (1848), 41 (Oct. 11), 162; Missionary Advocate, V (1849), 9 (December), 70.
4. J. P. Durbin to D. Lore, Nov. 9, 1851.
5. "Journal of the General Conference, 1856," Appendix, p. 260, in G. C. Journals, III; Missionary Advocate, VIII (1852), 4 (July), 26.
6. Christian Advocate and Journal, XXIX (1854), 43 (Oct. 26), 170; Missionary Advocate, X (1854), 9 (December), 67.

7. J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, Missions and Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, I, 321; Beverly Waugh to G. D. Carrow, March 24, 1854.
8. J. P. Durbin to G. D. Carrow, Jan. 13, Sept. 20, 1855; Christian Advocate and Journal, XXX (1855), 31 (Aug. 2), 122; ibid., XXXI (1856), 3 (Jan. 17), 10.
9. Bishop E. R. Ames to T. Carter, Nov. 20, 1855, J. P. Durbin to T. Carter, Nov. 24, Dec. 26, 1855, Jan. 18, 1856, J. P. Durbin to Bishop Ames, March 19, 1856, Feb. 6, 1857, all in "Letters from the Board of Missions, South America, May 14, 1850—Oct. 17, 1865," ms., hereafter referred to as "South America Letter Book."
10. Thirty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1855), pp. 25 f., 28 f.; ibid., 38th (1856), pp. 52 ff.; Bishop Ames to G. D. Carrow, March 12, 1856, J. P. Durbin to G. D. Carrow, March 20, 1856, Report of Committee on Spanish Missions, July 21, 1857, J. P. Durbin to W. Goodfellow, June 13, 1859, all in "South America Letter Book"; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., I, 267. The correspondence between Durbin and Carrow, Durbin and Nicholson, Durbin and Ames, etc., is voluminous and only some of the more important letters are cited.
11. Minutes, B. M., VI, 148 f.; Bishop Ames to J. P. Durbin, Aug. 24, 1857, in "South America Letter Book"; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., I, 323 f. Reid's statement that Goodfellow was appointed "to the superintendency in February, 1856," is erroneous.
12. J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., I, 323 f., 325 f.; Forty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1859), p. 44.
13. Forty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1860), p. 62.
14. Forty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1861), p. 68; ibid., 46th (1864), pp. 19 ff.; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., I, 329 f.
15. Forty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1864), pp. 17 f.
16. Ibid., pp. 19 ff.
17. Sixty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1887), p. 77.
18. J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., I, 338 f.
19. Ibid., pp. 331 f.
20. Forty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1865), p. 109.
21. Ibid., pp. 102 ff.; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., I, 330, 333 f.
22. Ibid., pp. 341 f.
23. Forty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1867), pp. 44 f.
24. J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., I, 349 f.
25. Fiftieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1868), pp. 89 f.; ibid., 51st (1869), p. 47; Minutes, B. M., VII, 141-42.
26. J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., I, 353.
27. Fifty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1869), p. 48.
28. Ibid.; ibid., 52nd (1870), pp. 38 ff.; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., I, 360 f., 369 ff.
29. Fifty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1871), p. 39.
30. Ibid., pp. 39 f.
31. J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., I, 366 f.
32. Fifty-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1872), p. 49; ibid., 55th (1873), pp. 42, 44 f.
33. Fifty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1874), p. 49.
34. William C. Poole, History of One Hundred Years of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, Buenos Aires, 1836-1936, pamphlet, pp. 14 f.; Fifty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1874), p. 50; ibid., 57th (1875), p. 47; ibid., 59th (1877), p. 41.
35. Fifty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1875), pp. 45 ff.; ibid., 58th (1876), pp. 41 ff.
36. Fifty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1877), pp. 39 f.; ibid., 60th (1878), p. 37.
37. Sixty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1881), p. 49.
38. Ibid., pp. 42 f., 49; ibid., 64th (1882), p. 41; Francis G. Penzotti, Spiritual Victories in Latin America, The Autobiography of Rev. Francis G. Penzotti . . ., pamphlet, pp. 5-10.
39. Sixty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1881), pp. 42 f., 51; ibid., 65th (1883), pp. 45 f.
40. Sixty-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1882), pp. 44 f.; Christian Advocate, LVII (1882), 14 (April 6), 219.

41. Sixty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1883), p. 50; ibid., 66th (1884), p. 46; F. G. Penzotti, op. cit., pp. 13, 15 ff.; Arthur Walker, Ed., From Cape Horn to Quito with the Bible, Andrew Murray Milne . . ., pp. 71-79.
42. Sixty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1883), p. 46; ibid., 66th (1884), p. 44; ibid., 67th (1885), p. 41.
43. Ibid., pp. 40-44; ibid., 71st (1889), p. 51.
44. F. G. Penzotti, op. cit., pp. 31-40.
45. Sixty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1887), p. 77.
46. Ibid., pp. 70 ff.
47. Ibid., pp. 69 f., 70, 73, 74.
48. Sixty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1884), pp. 46, 48 f.
49. Gospel in All Lands, April, 1887, pp. 172 f.
50. Sixty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1887), pp. 61, 62, 66 f.
51. Ibid., pp. 61 f.
52. Seventieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1888), pp. 39 ff.
53. Ibid., pp. 50 f.
54. Sixty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1887), pp. 50 f.; ibid., 70th (1888), pp. 50 f.; F. G. Penzotti, op. cit., pp. 42-45.
55. Seventieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1888), pp. 45 f.
56. Sixty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1887), pp. 74, 81; ibid., 70th (1888), pp. 49 f.
57. Sixty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1887), pp. 78 f.
58. Ibid., pp. 79 f.; ibid., 70th (1888), pp. 47-49; ibid., 73rd (1891), p. 55.
59. Seventieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1888), pp. 39 f.
60. Ibid., p. 53.
61. For change of location of seminary, see Pampa Breezes, V (1946), 4 (November). Seventy-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1889), pp. 43 ff.; ibid., 72nd (1890), p. 40; ibid., 73rd (1891), pp. 53 f.
62. Minutes, B. M., XIV, [58 f.].
63. Seventy-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1891), pp. 46, 49 ff.; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., I, 388.
64. F. G. Penzotti, op. cit., pp. 46-53; Seventy-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1890), p. 44; A. Walker, Ed., op. cit., pp. 104 f. These several accounts of Penzotti's case do not agree on some particulars. We have taken Penzotti's own account as the most authoritative.
65. Gospel in All Lands, March, 1891, pp. 143 f.; Seventy-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1891), pp. 55 f.
66. Seventy-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1890), p. 45; ibid., 73rd (1891), p. 56; A. Walker, Ed., op. cit., pp. 140, 161 f.
67. Seventy-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1892), pp. 42 f., 44, 46 f.
68. Seventy-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1891), pp. 54 f., 58 f.; ibid., 74th (1892), pp. 43 f., 45, 53 ff.; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., I, 391 f.; Gospel in All Lands, March, 1891, pp. 143 f.; Minutes, B. M., XIV, p. [315].
69. Heathen Woman's Friend, IV (1872), 6 (December), 379; "Minutes," Third Annual Meeting, General Executive Comm., W. F. M. S., 1872, ms., p. [36]; Fourth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1873), p. 7.
70. Heathen Woman's Friend, IV (1873), 11 (May), 457 f.; ibid., V (1874), 9 (March), 620; Fifth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1874), pp. 13-16; ibid., 6th (1875), pp. 27-31.
71. Heathen Woman's Friend, VIII (1876), 3 (September), 59; Eighth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1877), p. 16.
72. Ninth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1877-78), p. [30]; Mrs. E. J. M. Clemens and Mrs. J. F. Willing, Rosario, pp. 83, 85.
73. Thirteenth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1882), pp. 44 f.; ibid., 14th (1883), pp. 42 f.
74. Tenth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1878-79), p. 24; ibid., 11th (1879-80), pp. 48 f.; ibid., 14th (1883), pp. 44 f.; ibid., 18th (1887), p. 58.
75. Fifteenth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1884), pp. 47 f.; ibid., 16th (1885), p. 53.

76. Mrs. E. J. M. Clemens and Mrs. J. F. Willing, op. cit., pp. 28 ff.; Fiftieth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1884), p. 45.
77. Sixteenth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1885), p. 52; ibid., 18th (1887), p. 57; ibid., 19th (1888), p. 53; ibid., 24th (1892-93), p. 70; ibid., 26th (1894-95), pp. 61 f.; Seventieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1888), pp. 51 f.
78. Nineteenth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1888), p. 54; ibid., 21st (1889-90), p. 48; ibid., 24th (1892-93), pp. 71 f.
79. Nineteenth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1888), p. 54; ibid., 20th (1889), p. 65; ibid., 21st (1889-90), p. 48; ibid., 24th (1892-93), p. 71.
80. Twenty-sixth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1894-95), p. 63.
81. Twenty-fourth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1892-93), p. 72; ibid., 26th (1894-95), pp. 63 f., 134; ibid., 31st (1900), p. 134; Louise Manning Hodgkins, The Roll Call . . ., p. 75.
82. William Taylor, Story of My Life . . ., pp. 635, 647.
83. Goodsil F. Arms, History of the William Taylor Self-Supporting Missions in South America, pp. 22 f.; W. Taylor, op. cit., p. 681.
84. Ibid., pp. 651 ff.; G. F. Arms, op. cit., pp. 23 f.
85. W. Taylor, op. cit., pp. 656, 659 f.; G. F. Arms, op. cit., pp. 25 f., 31 f.
86. Ibid., pp. 26 ff.
87. Ibid., p. 29.
88. W. Taylor, op. cit., pp. 664 f.; G. F. Arms, op. cit., p. 29. The accounts of Taylor and Arms are not in agreement as to the procedure followed at Valparaiso and cannot be fully reconciled.
89. Ibid., pp. 29 f.
90. W. Taylor, op. cit., pp. 671 f.; G. F. Arms, op. cit., pp. 30 f.
91. W. Taylor, op. cit., pp. 673, 683 f.; G. F. Arms, op. cit., p. 54.
92. Ibid., p. 33; Lelia H. Waterhouse, "Memories of my Pioneer Missionary Work in Chile, South America," ms., pp. [2 f.].
93. G. F. Arms, op. cit., pp. 44 f., 54, 112.
94. Ibid., pp. 37 f., 52 ff., 59; W. Taylor, op. cit., p. 674.
95. Ibid., pp. 663, 674 f.; G. F. Arms, op. cit., pp. 47, 52, 104 f., 120 f., 141, 142.
96. W. Taylor, op. cit., p. 675; G. F. Arms, op. cit., pp. 26 f., 43, 51, 143 f., 147, 179 f.
97. Ibid., pp. 27 ff., 43 f., 45 f., 82, 109, 141; W. Taylor, op. cit., p. 675.
98. G. F. Arms, op. cit., pp. 29, 39, 82, 86 f., 104; W. Taylor, op. cit., pp. 676, 687.
99. G. F. Arms, op. cit., p. 142.
100. Ibid., pp. 43, 48, 51 f., 113; O. Von Barchwitz-Krauser, Six Years with William Taylor in South America, pp. 157-230.
101. G. F. Arms, op. cit., pp. 29 f.; L. H. Waterhouse, op. cit., pp. [5 f.].
102. Ibid., p. [6] et passim; G. F. Arms, op. cit., pp. 63 f., 77, 82, 84, 85.
103. Seventy-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1893), p. 257; ibid., 76th (1894), pp. 258, 259; ibid., 77th (1895), p. 37; Gen'l Minutes, Fall, 1894, p. 393; ibid., Spring, 1895, p. 78; G. F. Arms, op. cit., pp. 106, 117, 123, 124 f., 133, 150 ff., 156.
104. Ibid., pp. 52, 60 f., 74 ff., 113, 141; W. Taylor, op. cit., pp. 676 f.
105. Ibid., pp. 677, 678; G. F. Arms, op. cit., pp. 22, 44, 55.
106. O. Von Barchwitz-Krauser, op. cit., pp. 82 ff., 98; G. F. Arms, op. cit., pp. 45 f., 56 f., 62, 71, 72, 81 f., 104 f., 112.
107. W. Taylor, op. cit., pp. 678 f.; Seventy-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1893), pp. 262 f.
108. G. F. Arms, op. cit., pp. 55 f., 190 f.
109. Hubert Herring, History of Latin America, pp. 515 f., 527, 553 f.; W. E. Browning, in Webster E. Browning, John Ritchie, and Kenneth G. Grubb, The West Coast Republics of South America: Chile, Peru and Bolivia, pp. 23 f.; G. F. Arms, op. cit., p. 51.
110. W. Taylor, op. cit., pp. 635 f.; G. F. Arms, op. cit., p. 188.
111. Ibid., pp. 50, 54, 57 f.
112. W. Taylor to I. H. LaFetra, quoted by G. F. Arms, op. cit., pp. 80 f.
113. Lelia H. Waterhouse, quoted by G. F. Arms, op. cit., pp. 71 ff.
114. Ibid., pp. 88 f.

115. A. T. Jeffrey, quoted, ibid., pp. 82 f.
116. Christian Advocate, LVII (1882), 9 (March 2), 136; G. F. Arms, op. cit., p. 79.
117. L. H. Waterhouse, op. cit., pp. 29, 31.
118. W. Taylor, op. cit., p. 687; G. F. Arms, op. cit., p. 93; G. C. Journal, 1884, p. 248.
119. Discipline, 1884, p. 155.
120. G. F. Arms, op. cit., pp. 94 f.
121. Ibid., p. 98; W. E. Browning in W. E. Browning et al., op. cit., p. 29.
122. Gospel in All Lands, April, 1886, p. 187.
123. Sixty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1887), p. 83.
124. G. F. Arms, op. cit., pp. 109 f.
125. Report of Bishop Taylor's Self-Supporting Missions, From July 1st, 1884, to March 24th, 1888, pp. 5-13; G. F. Arms, op. cit., pp. 111-17.
126. Ibid., pp. 110 f., 112 ff.
127. G. C. Journal, 1888, pp. 363 f., 440 f.
128. G. F. Arms, op. cit., p. 194; Minutes, Cincinnati Conference, 1890, pp. 27, 45.
129. Gen'l Minutes, Spring, 1890, p. 79.
130. Seventy-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1890), p. 42.
131. Gospel in All Lands, April, 1890, p. 208.
132. Minutes, B. M., XV, 144 f.
133. G. C. Journal, 1888, p. 364; ibid., 1892, p. 416; "Minutes, General Missionary Committee," Vol. D, 170 f.; Minutes, B. M., XV, 144 f.; G. F. Arms, op. cit., pp. 215 f.
134. Ibid., pp. 86, 113-14, 231 f.
135. Minutes, South America Conference, 1893, pp. 3 f.
136. Seventy-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1893), p. 261; Minutes, South America Conference, 1893, statistics, unpagged.
137. Ibid., 1894, pp. 9, 32; ibid., 1895, pp. 5, 28; Seventy-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1895), pp. 31 ff.
138. Seventy-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1893), p. 261; ibid., 76th (1894), p. 257; ibid., 77th (1895), p. 33; Pampa Breezes, V (1946), 4 (November).
139. Seventy-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1893), pp. 268 f.; ibid., 76th (1894), pp. 262 f.
140. Seventy-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1895), pp. 43 f.
141. Seventy-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1893), p. 265.
142. Seventy-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1895), pp. 38 f.
143. Seventy-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1893), pp. 262 f.; Gen'l Minutes, Spring, 1890, p. 79; ibid., Spring, 1892, p. 60.
144. Seventy-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1893), pp. 266 f.
145. Seventy-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1895), pp. 40 f.
146. Seventy-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1893), pp. 263 ff.
147. G. F. Arms, op. cit., pp. 197 f.
148. Minutes, South America Conference, 1894, pp. 51 ff.
149. Seventy-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1895), pp. 46 f. This statistical statement, based upon the Missionary Society Annual Report, does not agree with the Minutes, South America Conference, 1895, in which there are numerous inaccuracies.
150. Matthew Simpson to William Butler, Dec. 9, 1872; John Wesley Butler, History of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Mexico: Personal Reminiscences, Present Conditions and Future Outlook, pp. 20 f.
151. G. Baez Camargo and Kenneth G. Grubb, Religion In The Republic Of Mexico, pp. 87 f.; Pedro Flores Valderrama, "History of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Mexico," ms., chs. I, II.
152. William Butler, Mexico in Transition from the Power of Political Romanism to Civil and Religious Liberty, p. 288.
153. M. Simpson to W. Butler, Dec. 9, 1872.
154. Christian Advocate, XLVII (1872), 48 (Nov. 28), 381.
155. George Prentice, The Life of Gilbert Haven, Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, pp. 470 ff.
156. W. Butler, op. cit., p. 289.

157. J. W. Butler, op. cit., p. 38; Christian Advocate, XLVIII (1873), 12 (March 20), 93.
158. G. Prentice, op. cit., p. 473; Gonzalo Baez Camargo, Biografia de un Templo, p. 82.
159. W. Butler, op. cit., p. 289; Fifty-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1872), p. 122.
160. G. Prentice, op. cit., p. 473.
161. W. Butler, op. cit., pp. 289 ff.; G. B. Camargo, op. cit., pp. 8, 19, 57 ff.
162. W. Butler, op. cit., pp. 290.
163. J. W. Butler, op. cit., pp. 42-44.
164. El Siglo XX, Dec. 24, 1873, El Federalista, Dec. 21, 1873, El Monitor Republicano, Dec. 25, 1873, quoted in G. B. Camargo, op. cit., pp. 88 f.
165. J. W. Butler, op. cit., pp. 66, 71; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., III, 355, 366 f.
166. Fifty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1873), p. 141.
167. J. W. Butler, op. cit., pp. 49 f.
168. Fourth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1873), pp. 7, 13 ff.; J. W. Butler, op. cit., pp. 59 f.; L. M. Hodgkins, op. cit., pp. 9, 10.
169. Fifty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1875), pp. 140 f.; Fifth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1874), p. 12.
170. Fifty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1874), p. 139.
171. J. W. Butler, op. cit., pp. 51 ff.
172. Fifty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1876), p. 141.
173. Fifty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1877), p. 164; J. W. Butler, op. cit., pp. 63 f.
174. Fifty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1875), p. 139.
175. Eighth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1877), p. 17; Heathen Woman's Friend, VIII (1876), 1 (July), 21.
176. Ninth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1877-78), pp. [31]-32.
177. J. W. Butler, op. cit., pp. 64-67.
178. Fifty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1876), pp. 141 f.
179. G. Prentice, op. cit., pp. 474 ff.; J. W. Butler, op. cit., p. 87; W. Butler, op. cit., p. 295; Fifty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1873), p. 141.
180. Ada M. C. Drees, Ed., Thirteen Years in Mexico (From Letters of Charles W. Drees), pp. 41-43, 47.
181. Ibid., pp. 45, 54 f.; J. W. Butler, op. cit., pp. 88 f.
182. Minutes, Cincinnati Conference, 1875, p. 54.
183. P. F. Valderrama, op. cit., ch. I, p. 8.
184. Ibid., ch. X, pp. 114 f.; A. M. C. Drees, Ed., op. cit., p. 63.
185. Ibid., p. 74; Fifty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1875), p. [139]; ibid., 58th (1876), p. [141].
186. J. W. Butler, op. cit., pp. 106 f.
187. Ibid., pp. 71 f.; A. M. C. Drees, Ed., op. cit., pp. 58 ff.; Fifty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1877), p. 161; ibid., 60th (1878), p. 159; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., III, 366 f.
188. J. W. Butler, op. cit., pp. 78-80.
189. Fifty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1877), p. 161; Ninth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1877-78), pp. 31 f.; ibid., 11th (1879-80), p. 51.
190. J. W. Butler, op. cit., pp. 102 ff., 105-107.
191. C. W. Drees to J. M. Reid, July, 1880.
192. C. W. Drees to J. W. Butler, April 3, 1881.
193. C. W. Drees to J. M. Reid, April 13, 1881.
194. J. W. Butler, op. cit., pp. 121 f.; Sixty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1883), p. 193; Fourteenth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1883), p. 47.
195. C. W. Drees to J. M. Reid, July 17, 1884; J. W. Butler, op. cit., p. 122.
196. W. Butler to the Missionary Society, March 20, Sept. 8, 1877; W. Butler to Robert L. Dashiell, May 28, 1877; Minutes, B. M., VII, 519, 538 f., 546, 569, 576 f., 579 ff.
197. Sixtieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1878), pp. 157-63. The complete statement made by the Secretary was not included in the Annual Report as published.

198. Minutes, B. M., VII, 576 f.
199. Stephen M. Merrill to W. Butler, June 5, 1878; "Minutes of the South America and Mexico Committee, M. S.," ms., Nov. 17, 1879, p. [108].
200. A. M. C. Drees, Ed., op. cit., pp. 106 f., 108.
201. Tenth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1878-79), pp 25 f.
202. Sixty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1879), pp. [162 ff.].
203. A. M. C. Drees, Ed., op. cit., p. 126; Fourteenth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1883), p. 48; Sixty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1880), pp. 181 ff.; ibid., 63rd (1881), p. 218; Minutes, Mexico Conference, 1888, p. 24; J. W. Butler, op. cit., p. 73.
204. Thirteenth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1882), p. 47.
205. Sixty-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1882), p. 155; ibid., 65th (1883), p. 191.
206. Ibid., 65th (1883), p. 189; L. M. Hodgkins, op. cit., pp. 31 ff.
207. Sixty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1880), p. 184; ibid., 63rd (1881), p. 224; ibid., 64th (1882), pp. 156 f.; ibid., 66th (1884), pp. 198 f.
208. A. M. C. Drees, Ed., op. cit., p. 129; Sixty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1881), p. 222.
209. Ibid., 63rd (1881), pp. 216, 222 f.; C. W. Drees to J. M. Reid, April 13, 1881.
210. Sixty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1881), p. 92; ibid., 64th (1882), p. 156; ibid., 65th (1883), pp. 191 f.
211. Sixty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1884), pp. 190 f.
212. J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., III, 382 f.
213. Sixty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1881), p. 227; Sixteenth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1885), p. 55.
214. Sixty-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1882), p. 159; ibid., 65th (1883), p. 195; ibid., 66th (1884), p. 201; ibid., 67th (1885), pp. 229 ff.
215. Minutes, Mexico Conference, 1885, pp. 5, 6, 15, 16; Sixty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1885), pp. [232 f.]; Gospel in All Lands, June, 1885, p. 264; Sixteenth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1885), p. 55.
216. Minutes, Mexico Conference, 1885, p. 12; ibid., 1886, pp. 14, 16, 23 f., 25.
217. Seventeenth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1886), p. 57; ibid., 18th (1887), pp. 59 f.
218. A. M. C. Drees, Ed., op. cit., pp. 238 f., 241.
219. Gospel in All Lands, May, 1887, p. 201.
220. Minutes, Mexico Conference, 1887, pp. 25, 28; Seventieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1888), p. 318.
221. J. W. Butler, op. cit., pp. 130-32; Minutes, Mexico Conference, 1889, pp. 20, 48.
222. Gospel in All Lands, March, 1888, pp. 121 f.
223. Seventy-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1890), p. 254; Minutes, Mexico Conference, 1889, pp. 20 f.
224. Seventy-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1890), pp. 266 f.
225. Ibid., pp. 257, 260.
226. Minutes, Mexico Conference, 1890, pp. [5], 15, 16.
227. Ibid., 1891, pp. 16, 18-19; Seventy-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1891), p. 259.
228. Seventy-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1892), pp. 267 ff.; J. W. Butler, op. cit., pp. 131 f., 134 f.
229. Minutes, Mexico Conference, 1893, pp. 14 f.; Seventy-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1893), pp. 237, 244; Twenty-fifth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1893-94), p. 58.
230. Seventy-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1893), pp. 237, 243.
231. Minutes, Mexico Conference, 1894, pp. 24, 27, 36, 37; Seventy-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1893), p. 240.
232. Minutes, Mexico Conference, 1895, pp. 25, 26, 33, 45; Seventy-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1895), pp. 225, 237.
233. Minutes, Mexico Conference, 1895, pp. [5, 13, 14], 17; Seventy-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1895), p. 224.
234. J. W. Butler, op. cit., pp. 73-75; Minutes, Mexico Conference, 1896, pp. 29 f., 40.
235. Ibid., pp. 65 ff.; Seventy-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1895), pp. [238 f.]; Twenty-seventh Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1895-96), p. 69.

236. J. W. Butler, op. cit., pp. 35, 152.
 237. Harry Otis Dwight, The Centennial History of the American Bible Society, pp. 184, 220, 301.
 238. G. B. Camargo and K. G. Grubb, op. cit., p. 99.

IX
AFRICA

1. Minutes, B. M., IV, 429-30; Missionary Advocate, I (1845), 6 (September), 24; ibid., 9 (December), 38; Twenty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1845-46), p. 18.
 2. Ibid., 27th (1845-46), pp. 25 ff.
 3. Ibid., p. 19. For details on the care given some of these children by Ann Wilkins, see Ann Wilkins to Mary R. Garrettson, June 22, 1846.
 4. Twenty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1847-48), p. 18.
 5. Twenty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1846-47), p. 20.
 6. J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, Missions and Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, I, 231; Missionary Advocate, IV (1848), 1 (April), 5; ibid., 3 (June), 21, 22.
 7. Twenty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1847-48), pp. 26 ff.
 8. Thirtieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1848-49), pp. 15 f.
 9. Thirty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1849-50), pp. 13 f.; Christian Advocate and Journal, XXV (1850), 1 (Jan. 3), 2.
 10. Thirty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1849-50), pp. 15 f.
 11. Thirty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1850-51), pp. 149 ff.; "Minutes of the Africa Committee, M. S., Jan. 17, 1843—Nov. 3, 1870," ms., Jan. 16, 1850.
 12. Minutes, B. M., V, 193, 195, 200.
 13. Thirtieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1848-49), pp. 16 ff.
 14. "Journal of the General Conference, 1848," p. 131, in G. C. Journals, III.
 15. Missionary Advocate, III (1847), 3 (June), p. 21; ibid., III (1848), 12 (March), 94; Ann Wilkins to Mrs. Mary W. Mason, Oct. 18, 1849.
 16. Missionary Advocate, V (1850), 12 (March), 94.
 17. Minutes, B. M., V, 159.
 18. Ibid., pp. 148, 251; Thirty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1849-50), Appendix, p. 94.
 19. Missionary Advocate, IX (1853), 6 (September), 42.
 20. Ibid., 3 (June), 26 f.; Ann Wilkins to Mary R. Garrettson, May 8, 1856.
 21. Thirty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1855), pp. 35 f.; ibid., 39th (1857), pp. 38, 41.
 22. Thirty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1853), p. 101; ibid., 36th (1854), pp. 41 f.; ibid., 37th (1855), pp. 35 f.; ibid., 38th (1856), p. 58; ibid., 39th (1857), p. 41. Although the Board permitted her to return to America in March, 1854, she delayed for two years. See letter "My Dear Sister Wilkins . . .," March 24, 1854.
 23. J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., I, 238; Willis J. King, "History of the Methodist Church Mission in Liberia," mimeographed ms., pp. 31, 33 f.
 24. Francis Burns to J. P. Durbin, Dec. 27, 1861. See also F. Burns to John M. Reid, May 3, 1859.
 25. W. J. King, op. cit., pp. 33 ff.; Forty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1860), p. 18.
 26. Ibid., 42nd (1860), pp. 18 f.; ibid., 43rd (1861), p. 46; ibid., 46th (1864), p. 83.
 27. Thirty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1857), p. 41; ibid., 42nd (1860), p. 19; ibid., 43rd (1861), p. 47.
 28. W. J. King, op. cit., p. 41.
 29. Forty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1861), p. 46.
 30. Forty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1863), p. 65; W. J. King, op. cit., p. 40.
 31. Minutes, B. M., VI, 449.
 32. W. J. King, op. cit., p. 41; Forty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1866), p. 14.
 33. Fifty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1869), p. 45.
 34. Forty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1866), p. 18.

35. Forty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1865), p. 92.
36. Fifty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1870), p. 34.
37. Fifty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1875), p. [35].
38. Fifty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1873), p. [37].
39. George Prentice, The Life of Gilbert Haven, Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, pp. 482 f.
40. Ibid., p. 483.
41. Sixty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1880), p. [33].
42. Sixty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1881), p. 36.
43. Sixty-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1882), pp. [35] ff.
44. Sixty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1883), p. 41.
45. J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., I, 259.
46. "Minutes," Third Annual Meeting, General Executive Comm., W. F. M. S., 1872, ms., pp. 60, 76.
47. Fifth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1874), p. 21.
48. Quoted in Eighth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1877), p. 18.
49. Tenth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1878-79), p. 29.
50. Frances J. Baker, The Story of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, 1869-1895, pp. 392 f.
51. Ibid., pp. 395 ff.
52. Bishops' Address, in G. C. Journal, 1888, pp. 653 f.
53. Fifty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1869), p. 46.
54. Fifty-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1872), p. 47.
55. Fifty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1877), pp. 35 f.
56. Sixtieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1878), pp. 34 f.
57. Sixty-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1882), pp. 36 f.; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., I, 253.
58. William Taylor, Story of My Life . . ., p. 692.
59. Gospel in All Lands, March, 1885, p. 113.
60. Minutes, Liberia Conference, 1885, pp. 14 f., 18, 32, 39 f.
61. W. Taylor, op. cit., pp. 716 ff.
62. William Taylor, The Flaming Torch in Darkest Africa, pp. 521 ff., 530, 534 f. In this book Taylor makes a number of references to the "Gerribo" tribes and to the place of "Gerribo." In other sources available to us there is no indication of such a tribe or place whereas it is clear that there are Grebo tribes and a town of Grebo. We have used "Grebo" wherever Taylor refers to "Gerribo."
63. Ibid., pp. 538 f., 543.
64. Minutes, Africa Conference, 1890, p. 48; ibid., 1891, p. 21. In 1889 the name was changed from Liberia Conference to Africa Conference and remained thus until 1893, when it again became the Liberia Conference.
65. "Minutes of the Africa Committee, M. S., Nov. 25, 1870—Feb. 17, 1903," May 18, 1891, p. 141.
66. Seventy-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1893), p. 31; "Minutes of the Africa Committee, M. S., Nov. 25, 1870—Feb. 17, 1903," June 17, 1895, pp. 163 f.
67. Minutes, Africa Conference, 1892, p. 39.
68. Seventy-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1892), p. 25; ibid., 77th (1895), p. 28.
69. Seventy-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1894), p. 33.
70. Minutes, Liberia Conference, 1887, p. 14.
71. Seventy-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1894), pp. 33 f.
72. Ibid., p. 32; ibid., 77th (1895), pp. 21-29.
73. W. Taylor, The Flaming Torch . . ., p. 459.
74. Gospel in All Lands, July, 1885, p. 330.
75. W. Taylor, The Flaming Torch . . ., p. 467.
76. Idem, Bishop Taylor's Self-Supporting Missions in South Central Africa, pamphlet, p. 3.
77. Idem, Story of My Life . . ., p. 710.
78. Ibid., p. 714.

79. Sixty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1886), pp. 47 ff.
80. Gospel in All Lands, May, 1888, pp. 216 f.
81. Ibid., pp. 216 ff.
82. Ibid., p. 217.
83. Seventy-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1889), p. 32; ibid., 74th (1892), p. 38.
84. W. Taylor, The Flaming Torch . . ., pp. 473 f.
85. Seventy-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1889), pp. 32 ff.; Christian Witness, as quoted in Gospel in All Lands, January, 1888, p. 47.
86. Seventy-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1893), p. 23; W. Taylor, Story of My Life . . ., p. 704; Report of Bishop Taylor's Self-Supporting Missions From March 25th, 1888, to October 31st, 1889, pamphlet, p. 14.
87. Minutes, Africa Conference, 1892, p. 36; Seventy-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1893), p. 23.
88. W. Taylor, The Flaming Torch . . ., pp. 479, 483.
89. Minutes, Liberia Conference, 1896, p. 28.
90. W. Taylor, The Flaming Torch . . ., p. 478; Gospel in All Lands, August, 1889, p. 363.
91. Minutes, Liberia Conference, 1896, pp. 28 f.
92. Ibid., 1895, p. 26.
93. Gospel in All Lands, June, 1889, p. 249.
94. Letter quoted by W. Taylor, Story of My Life . . ., p. 708.
95. Gospel in All Lands, May, 1888, pp. 218, 219.
96. African News, I, 97, as quoted in Minutes, Africa Conference, 1892, p. 29.
97. Minutes, Africa Conference, 1892, p. 30; Sixty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1886), pp. 49, 50.
98. W. Taylor, The Flaming Torch . . ., p. 502.
99. Gospel in All Lands, March, 1888, p. 144.
100. W. Taylor, Story of My Life . . ., p. 715.
101. Minutes, Africa Conference, 1892, p. 31.
102. Seventy-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1894), p. 35; ibid., 79th (1897), p. 37.
103. G. C. Journal, 1892, Appendix I, pp. [367 f.].
104. Minutes, Africa Conference, 1890, p. 51; ibid., 1892, p. 30.
105. Seventy-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1889), p. 30; Minutes, Africa Conference, 1892, p. 29.
106. Ibid., 1891, p. 30; Seventy-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1889), p. 36.
107. Seventy-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1894), p. 35.
108. Gospel in All Lands, May, 1888, p. 219; letter quoted by W. Taylor, Story of My Life . . ., p. 708.
109. Seventy-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1889), p. 37; W. Taylor, The Flaming Torch . . ., p. 500.
110. Seventy-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1889), pp. 37 f.
111. Seventy-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1890), p. 27.
112. Gospel in All Lands, October, 1893, p. 450.
113. G. C. Journal, 1892, Appendix I, pp. 374 f.
114. Seventy-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1896), p. 22; ibid., 79th (1897), pp. 36 f.
115. W. Taylor, The Flaming Torch . . ., pp. 551, 554; Seventy-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1893), p. 29.
116. Seventy-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1894), p. 36.
117. W. Taylor, The Flaming Torch . . ., pp. 362 f.; Seventy-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1896), p. 22.
118. Seventy-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1892), p. 26; ibid., 76th (1894), p. 37.
119. William Taylor, in "Reports of Missionary Bishops," G. C. Journal, 1896, Appendix I, p. [311].
120. Christian Witness and Advocate of Bible Holiness, July, 1887, unpagued.
121. W. Taylor, Story of My Life . . ., pp. 691 f.; Methodist Times of London, as quoted in Gospel in All Lands, March, 1885, p. 131.

122. Editorial, "Bishop William Taylor," Methodist Review, LXIX (July, 1887), 601 f.
123. Christian Witness and Advocate of Bible Holiness, July, 1887, unpagcd.
124. Report of Bishop Taylor's Self-Supporting Missions From March 25th, 1888, to October 31st, 1889, pamphlet, p. 37.
125. Minutes, Liberia Conference, 1896, pp. 35 f.
126. Gospel in All Lands, November, 1897, p. 532.
127. William Taylor, letter in Christian Witness and Advocate of Bible Holiness, April, 1886, unpagcd.
128. William Taylor, Bishop Taylor's Quadrennial Report of Our Church Work in Africa, pamphlet, p. 2 n.; Seventy-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1889), pp. 36 f.
129. Northwestern Christian Advocate, as quoted in Gospel in All Lands, May, 1888, p. 219.
130. Minutes, Africa Conference, 1892, p. 37.
131. Ibid., p. 36.
132. Daily Christian Advocate, June 1, 1888, p. 221; Methodist Review, LXIX (July, 1887), 597-602.
133. Mission Life, as quoted in Gospel in All Lands, March, 1890, pp. 119-24; Seventy-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1892), pp. 22 f.
134. Gospel in All Lands, December, 1897, pp. 545-47.
135. W. J. King, op. cit., pp. 55 f.

X

EUROPE

1. John S. Simon, John Wesley and the Religious Societies, pp. 129 f., 192 f.; idem, John Wesley and the Methodist Societies, pp. 34, 47; W. J. Townsend, H. B. Workman, and George Eayrs, Eds., A New History of Methodism, I, 191, 192, 281.
2. Arthur Judson Brown, One Hundred Years, A History of the Foreign Missionary Work of the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. . . ., p. 1037.
3. Andrew Haagensen, Den Norsk-Danske Methodismes Historie paa begge Sider Havet, pp. 213 ff.; Carl Frederick Eltzholtz, Livsbilleder af Pastor O. P. Petersen . . ., pp. 8-18.
4. A. Haagensen, op. cit., pp. 206 f.
5. J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, Missions and Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, II, 193.
6. Ibid., II, 193 f.; Johan Thorkildsen, Den Norske Metodistkirkes Historie, p. 18; Thirty-fourth and Thirty-fifth Ann. Reps., M. S. (1852-53), pp. 117 ff.; A. Haagensen, op. cit., p. 208.
7. Thirty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1854), p. 66; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., II, 194 f.
8. Christian Advocate and Journal, XXXI (1856), 1 (Jan. 3), 2.
9. A. Haagensen, op. cit., p. 213; Thirty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1856), pp. 43 f.
10. A. Haagensen, op. cit., p. 210; Thirty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1856), pp. 44 f.; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., II, 195 f.
11. Thirty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1857), p. 66; ibid., 40th (1858), p. 37; ibid., 41st (1859), p. 52.
12. Fortieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1858), p. 37; ibid., 41st (1859), pp. 49, 51 f.
13. Forty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1860), p. 60.
14. Forty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1861), pp. 61 f.; ibid., 55th (1863), pp. 72 f.; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., II, 196.
15. Ibid., II, 197.
16. Fifty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1869), pp. 83, 91; C. F. Eltzholtz, op. cit., pp. 213 ff.; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., II, 197.
17. Fifty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1869), p. 94.

18. O. P. Petersen to J. P. Durbin, Sept. 22, 1869; Fifty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1869), p. 95.
19. J. Thorkildsen, op. cit., pp. 135, 139; Fifty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1871), pp. 77, 80.
20. J. Thorkildsen, op. cit., pp. 120-24.
21. Fifty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1873), p. 100; ibid., 56th (1874), pp. 97 f.
22. J. Thorkildsen, op. cit., p. 162; Fifty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1874), p. 100.
23. Fifty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1870), p. 70; ibid., 55th (1873), pp. 101 f.; ibid., 56th (1874), p. 99; ibid., 57th (1875), pp. 94, 97, 98.
24. Fifty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1876), pp. 96 f., 102; ibid., 62nd (1880), p. 89; Paul Neff Garber, The Methodists of Continental Europe, pp. 53 f.
25. J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., II, 199 f.
26. Fifty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1877), p. 89.
27. J. Thorkildsen, op. cit., p. 200.
28. Sixty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1879), pp. 81 f., 83; ibid., 62nd (1880), p. 90.
29. Ibid., 62nd (1880), pp. 86, 87 ff., 91.
30. Ibid., pp. 86 f.
31. Sixty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1881), p. 102.
32. J. Thorkildsen, op. cit., pp. 205, 206-208; Sixty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1881), p. 102; ibid., 64th (1882), p. 80.
33. Ibid., 64th (1882), pp. 80, 81; ibid., 65th (1883), pp. 90, 91, 93.
34. Sixty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1884), pp. 98 ff.; A. Haagensen, op. cit., p. 252; J. Thorkildsen, op. cit., pp. 222-24.
35. Ibid., pp. 189 f., 224 f.
36. Sixty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1885), p. 112.
37. Ibid., pp. 112 ff.
38. Sixty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1886), pp. 131-34.
39. Sixty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1887), pp. 154-56.
40. Seventieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1888), pp. 148-52; ibid., 71st (1889), pp. 132 f.; Minutes, Norway Conference, 1890, pp. 23 ff., 42.
41. Seventy-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1889), pp. 132 f.; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., II, 202.
42. Minutes, Norway Conference, 1890, pp. 1, 39; Seventy-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1890), pp. 134 ff.
43. A. Haagensen, op. cit., pp. 266 f.
44. Seventy-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1893), pp. 119, 120 f.
45. Seventy-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1894), p. 99.
46. Seventy-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1895), pp. 114, 116 f.
47. Ibid., pp. 116-17.
48. C. B. Willerup to J. P. Durbin, March 10, 1858; A. Haagensen, op. cit., p. 190.
49. Thirty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1857), p. 66; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., II, 222 f.; C. B. Willerup to Corresponding Secretary, July 28, 1858.
50. A. Haagensen, op. cit., pp. 284 f.; Thirty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1857), p. 65; ibid., 42nd (1860), pp. 60, 61; ibid., 44th (1862), p. 38; ibid., 45th (1863), p. 72; ibid., 47th (1865), p. 98; C. B. Willerup to Corresponding Secretary, Sept. 8, 1858.
51. Forty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1864), p. 81.
52. Forty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1861), p. 60.
53. Ibid., 43rd (1861), p. 60; ibid., 45th (1863), p. 70; ibid., 47th (1865), pp. 95 f.; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., II, 223 f.
54. A. Haagensen, op. cit., p. 288; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., II, 224; Forty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1865), pp. 95-97, 98, 101; ibid., 48th (1866), p. 62.
55. Ibid., 48th (1866), pp. 63 f.
56. Fifty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1869), pp. 83 f., 86; ibid., 52nd (1870), p. 103; ibid., 53rd (1871), p. 72.
57. Fifty-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1872), p. 82; ibid., 55th (1873), pp. 86 f.
58. Ibid., 55th (1873), pp. 87, 89; ibid., 56th (1874), pp. 91, 92; ibid., 68th (1886), p. 139.

59. Fifty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1874), pp. 90-91.
60. Fifty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1875), p. 85; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., II, 226-27.
61. Sixty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1876), pp. 84-85; ibid., 59th (1877), pp. 101-103; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., II, 227 f.
62. Sixtieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1878), pp. 108-109.
63. Sixty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1879), p. 100.
64. Sixty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1880), pp. 106 f.
65. Ibid., p. 109.
66. Sixty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1881), pp. 125, 126, 128 f.
67. Sixty-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1882), pp. 92, 93; ibid., 65th (1883), pp. 104, 106.
68. Sixty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1884), pp. 112 f.
69. Sixty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1885), pp. 118, 121.
70. Karl Schou, "The Methodist Episcopal Church in Denmark," Gospel in All Lands, December, 1886, p. 535.
71. Sixty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1886), pp. 137, 139.
72. Ibid., p. 136; K. Schou, "The Methodist Episcopal Church in Denmark," Gospel in All Lands, December, 1886, p. 534.
73. Sixty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1887), pp. 158 f., 160, 162; ibid., 70th (1888), pp. 155, 156; ibid., 71st (1889), pp. 135, 136; A. Haagensen, op. cit., p. 309.
74. Seventy-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1890), pp. 142, 143; ibid., 73rd (1891), p. 154; ibid., 74th (1892), p. 158.
75. Seventy-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1891), p. 156.
76. Seventy-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1890), p. 144; ibid., 74th (1892), p. 159.
77. Ibid., 74th (1892), pp. 157, 158; ibid., 75th (1893), p. 126.
78. Seventy-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1892), pp. 157 f.; ibid., 75th (1893), p. 126; ibid., 77th (1895), pp. 118 f., [121]; ibid., 78th (1896), p. 107; Gen'l Minutes, Fall, 1895, p. 600.
79. Victor Witting in Stilla Stunder, October, 1880, p. 39.
80. Henry C. Whyman, "The Conflict and Adjustment of Two Religious Cultures—The Swedish and the American . . .," pp. 36-50.
81. Victor Witting, Minnen Fran mitt lif som Sjöman, Immigrant Och Predikant, Samt en historisk afhandling af Metodismens . . ., p. 161.
82. Thirty-fourth and Thirty-fifth Ann. Reps., M. S. (1852-53), p. 63.
83. Thirty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1854), p. 67.
84. Thirty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1855), pp. 41, 43.
85. V. Witting, Minnen Fran mitt lif . . ., p. 425.
86. George M. Stephenson, The Religious Aspects of Swedish Immigration, A Study of Immigrant Churches, p. 144.
87. V. Witting, Minnen Fran mitt lif . . ., p. 158.
88. Forty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1886), p. 65.
89. G. M. Stephenson, op. cit., pp. 143-45.
90. C. B. Willerup to J. P. Durbin, Sept. 8, 1858; Forty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1865), p. 95.
91. Ibid., 47th (1865), p. 100.
92. Forty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1866), p. 64.
93. Forty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1867), pp. 61, 65.
94. Forty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1866), p. 65.
95. V. Witting, Minnen Fran mitt lif . . ., pp. 523 ff.
96. Forty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1867), p. 61.
97. Forty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1866), pp. 69, 70.
98. G. M. Stephenson, op. cit., p. 120.
99. V. Witting in Stilla Stunder, March, 1881, p. 238.
100. Idem, Minnen Fran mitt lif . . ., p. 540.
101. Ibid., pp. 544 ff.; idem, in Stilla Stunder, May, 1881, p. 315.
102. Ibid., p. 320.
103. Fifty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1869), p. 88.

104. Fiftieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1886), p. 114.
105. Ibid., p. 115.
106. Fifty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1869), pp. 87 f., 90; V. Witting in Stilla Stunder, May, 1881, p. 319.
107. Fifty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1870), pp. 71-77; ibid., 57th (1875), p. 90.
108. Fifty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1874), p. 95.
109. Fifty-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1872), p. 87; ibid., 56th (1874), p. 95; ibid., 57th (1875), p. 91.
110. Fifty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1876), p. 91.
111. Fifty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1874), p. 95.
112. V. Witting in Stilla Stunder, June, 1881, pp. 354 ff.; ibid., July, 1881, pp. 397 ff.; idem, Minnen Fran mitt lif . . ., p. 564.
113. Fifty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1875), pp. 90 f.; V. Witting, Minnen Fran mitt lif . . ., p. 567.
114. Minutes, Eighth Annual Meeting of the Swedish Preachers, 1875, p. 24.
115. Minutes, Sweden Conference, 1876, pp. 3 f., 11.
116. Ibid., p. 34; Fifty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1876), pp. 90 f.
117. Sixty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1880), p. 92.
118. Sixtieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1878), p. 89; ibid., 61st (1879), p. 87.
119. Sixty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1883), p. 95.
120. Sixty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1885), p. 104.
121. Sixty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1881), p. 121.
122. Sixty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1883), p. 101.
123. Protokoll . . . Sverige-Tionde Arskonferens . . ., 1885, p. 31.
124. Sixty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1887), p. 151.
125. Sixty-third Ann., Rep., M. S. (1881), p. 119.
126. Seventieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1888), pp. 132, [146].
127. Seventy-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1891), p. 144.
128. Ibid.
129. Ibid., p. 143.
130. Seventy-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1892), p. 147.
131. Seventy-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1893), p. 113.
132. Seventy-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1889), pp. 125 f.
133. Seventy-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1891), p. 141.
134. Seventy-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1895), p. 109.
135. Sixty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1879), pp. 86-87.
136. Seventy-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1893), p. 112.
137. Seventy-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1892), pp. 144, 149.
138. Committee on Policy and Work in Europe, Board of Foreign Missions, "History and Statistical Data on Methodist Episcopal Work in Europe," ms., p. 30.
139. Sixty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1880), p. 94.
140. Ibid., pp. 94 f.
141. Sixty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1881), pp. 112 f.; ibid., 65th (1883), p. 100.
142. Sixty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1884), p. 105.
143. Ibid., p. 108; Protokoll . . . Sverige-Tionde Arskonferens . . ., 1885, pp. 26-30.
144. Ibid.
145. Ibid.
146. Sixty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1887), p. 149.
147. Ibid., p. 148.
148. Ibid., pp. 148 ff.
149. Seventieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1888), p. 145.
150. Seventy-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1890), p. 126.
151. Seventieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1888), p. 145; ibid., 73rd (1891), p. 140.
152. Seventy-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1892), pp. 161 f.; [163].
153. Seventy-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1893), p. 129; ibid., 76th (1894), p. 108.
154. Seventy-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1893), p. 130.
155. "Journal of the General Conference, 1844," pp. 36, 58 f., in G. C. Journals, II;

Paul F. Douglass, The Story of German Methodism, Biography of an Immigrant Soul, p. 101; Bishop Thomas A. Morris to L. S. Jacoby, Sept. 25, 1849, in "Letters from the Board of Missions, Germany, Sept. 25, 1849-Nov. 15, 1866," ms., hereafter referred to as the "Germany Letter Book"; Christian Advocate and Journal, XXV (1850), 5 (Jan. 31), 18.

156. Thirtieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1848-49), p. 76; F. H. Otto Melle, Ed., Das Walten Gottes im deutschen Methodismus, pp. 164, 165 f., 168.

157. "Journal of the General Conference, 1848," p. 121, in G. C. Journals, III; F. H. O. Melle, Ed., op. cit., pp. 165 f.; P. F. Douglass, op. cit., pp. 101 f.; Minutes, B. M., V, 126; Thirty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1849-50), p. 28.

158. Christian Advocate and Journal, XXV (1850), 5 (Jan. 31), 18; Thirty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1849-50), p. 28; F. H. O. Melle, Ed., op. cit., pp. 171 f.

159. Minutes, B. M., V, 161; Christian Advocate and Journal, XXV (1850), 5 (Jan. 31), 18; ibid., 8 (Feb. 21), 30; ibid., 16 (April 18), 62; Thirty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1849-50), pp. 28, 30.

160. Ibid., 31st (1849-50), pp. 28 f.; ibid., 41st (1859), p. 27; Abel Stevens, Supplementary History of Methodism: A Continuation of the Author's Abridged History of American Methodism, pp. 198 f.; F. H. O. Melle, Ed., op. cit., p. 163.

161. Thirty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1849-50), pp. 29 f.; A. Stevens, op. cit., pp. 198 f.; P. F. Douglass, op. cit., p. 104; F. H. O. Melle, Ed., op. cit., p. 173; Gospel in All Lands, April, 1898, p. 148.

162. Christian Advocate and Journal, XXV (1850), 23 (June 6), 90; F. H. O. Melle, Ed., op. cit., p. 172; A. Stevens, op. cit., p. 199.

163. Gospel in All Lands, April, 1898, p. 148; Thirty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1850-51), pp. 112 ff.; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., II, 293; F. H. O. Melle, Ed., op. cit., pp. 267 f.

164. Minutes, B. M., V, 166, 172; Bishop Morris to C. H. Doering, May 6, 1850, "Germany Letter Book"; Gospel in All Lands, April, 1898, p. 148; Thirty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1849-50), p. 30.

165. Minutes, B. M., V, 171, 216; Christian Advocate and Journal, XXV (1850), 18 (May 2), 70; ibid., 22 (May 30), 86; Thirty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1851-52), p. 118; A. Stevens, op. cit., p. 199.

166. Thirty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1850-51), pp. 111-15; ibid., 33rd (1851-52), p. 120 n.

167. Christian Advocate and Journal, XXVI (1851), 39 (Sept. 25), 154; Thirty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1850-51), pp. 115 f.; Minutes, B. M., V, 253; L. S. Jacoby to J. P. Durbin, Feb. 24, 1851.

168. Christian Advocate and Journal, XXVI (1851), 7 (Feb. 13), 28; Minutes, B. M., V, 227, 233; F. H. O. Melle, Ed., op. cit., p. 175; Thirty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1850-51), p. 111; Gospel in All Lands, April, 1898, pp. 148 f.

169. Thirty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1850-51), pp. 108, 116; ibid., 33rd (1851-52), pp. 118, 121 f., 123; Christian Advocate and Journal, XXVII (1852), 2 (Jan. 8), 6.

170. Thirty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1851-52), pp. 126 ff.

171. Thirty-fourth and Thirty-fifth Ann. Reps., M. S. (1852-53), pp. 91 f., 93; ibid., 36th (1854), pp. 19 f.

172. Thirty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1851-52), p. 120; ibid., 37th (1855), pp. 5, 8 f.; ibid., 38th (1856), p. 37.

173. Thirty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1855), pp. 6 f.; Christian Advocate and Journal, XXX (1855), 21 (May 24), 82.

174. Thirty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1851-52), pp. 21 f.; ibid., 34th and 35th (1852-53), pp. 95 f.; ibid., 36th (1854), pp. 22 f.; ibid., 37th (1855), p. 11; Gospel in All Lands, April, 1898, p. 150; Christian Advocate and Journal, XXX (1855), 49 (Dec. 6), 194.

175. Thirty-fourth and Thirty-fifth Ann. Reps., M. S. (1852-53), pp. 94 f.; ibid., 36th (1854), pp. 18, 21; ibid., 37th (1855), p. 10; ibid., 38th (1856), p. 39; Christian Advocate and Journal, XXX (1855), 49 (Dec. 6), 194.

176. Thirty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1851-52), p. 124; ibid., 34th and 35th (1852-53),

- p. 97; ibid., 36th (1854), pp. 23, 25 f.; ibid., 39th (1857), pp. 55 f.; L. S. Jacoby to J. P. Durbin, Sept. 6, 1855.
177. Thirty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1855), pp. 5, 14; Christian Advocate and Journal, XXX (1855), 42 (Oct. 18), 166.
178. Bishop Morris to missionaries in Germany, May 2, 1855, Bishop Morris to L. S. Jacoby, Nov. 19, 1855, both in "Germany Letter Book"; "Journal of the General Conference, 1856," p. 96, in G. C. Journals, III.
179. Bishop Morris to L. S. Jacoby, Nov. 19, 1855, "Germany Letter Book"; "Journal of the General Conference, 1856," p. 96, in G. C. Journals, III; Thirty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1854), p. 18; ibid., 38th (1856), p. 35; Gen'l Minutes, 1856, p. 187; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., II, 300.
180. Thirty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1855), p. 14; ibid., 39th (1857), pp. 50, 51, 52 f., 57; P. F. Douglass, op. cit., p. 127; Gen'l Minutes, 1857, p. 532.
181. Fortieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1858), pp. 24, 25, 27 f.
182. Ibid., pp. 24, 27 f.
183. Ibid., p. 27; ibid., 42nd (1860), pp. 52, 53; ibid., 49th (1867), p. 58; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., II, 303; Bishop Morris, letter of transfer of W. F. Warren, Dec. 10, 1860, J. P. Durbin to L. S. Jacoby, June 6, 1861, both in "Germany Letter Book"; Gen'l Minutes, 1858, p. 341; ibid., 1860, p. 368.
184. L. S. Jacoby to J. P. Durbin, May 21, 1850, June 30, 1862; J. P. Durbin to L. S. Jacoby, Aug. 1, 1862, J. P. Durbin to W. F. Warren, Sept. 8, 1862, all in "Germany Letter Book"; Christian Advocate and Journal, XXVI (1851), 1 (Jan. 2), 2; Gospel in All Lands, April 1898, pp. 146 f.
185. Forty-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1862), pp. 26 f.; ibid., 45th (1863), p. 34; ibid., 47th (1865), p. 80; ibid., 50th (1868), pp. 104, 107, 108; ibid., 51st (1869), p. 82; Gen'l Minutes, 1868, p. 146.
186. Forty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1867), p. 60; ibid., 50th (1868), pp. 105 f.; ibid., 51st (1869), pp. 70 f., 72; Gen'l Minutes, 1868, pp. 146, 147.
187. Forty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1865), p. 77.
188. William F. Warren, True Theory of Missionary Work, pamphlet, pp. 21-25.
189. Encyclopaedia Britannica, X, 296; Prince H. Zu Loewenstein, The Germans in History, pp. 351 f.
190. W. F. Warren, op. cit., pp. 25 f.
191. Paul Neff Garber, The Methodists of Continental Europe, p. 19.
192. Thirty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1856), p. 42; ibid., 39th (1857), pp. 56 f.; P. N. Garber, op. cit., pp. 19 f.
193. Fortieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1858), p. 28; ibid., 41st (1859), p. 28; J. P. Durbin to L. S. Jacoby, Dec. 15, 1857, Feb. 23, 1858; J. P. Durbin to Hon. Theodore Fay, Jan. 29, 1858, all in "Germany Letter Book."
194. Forty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1859), p. 28; ibid., 43rd (1861), p. 54; ibid., 45th (1863), pp. 36-40.
195. Fortieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1858), p. 28; ibid., 41st (1859), p. 28; ibid., 42nd (1860), p. 56; ibid., 44th (1862), pp. 27 f.; ibid., 45th (1863), p. 41; ibid., 46th (1864), pp. 49, 50; ibid., 48th (1866), pp. 53 f.
196. Fortieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1858), p. 24; ibid., 45th (1863), pp. 36, 40, 42 f.; ibid., 46th (1864), p. 52; ibid., 48th (1866), pp. 54 f.
197. Encyclopaedia Britannica, XXI, 686 f.; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., II, 341.
198. Fifty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1869), p. 77; ibid., 54th (1872), pp. 76 f.; Gen'l Minutes, 1868, p. 147.
199. Sixty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1880), pp. 78, 82; ibid., 59th (1877), pp. 78, [86 f.]; ibid., 64th (1882), p. 77.
200. Fifty-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1872), pp. 67, 69, 73, 75; ibid., 55th (1873), p. 70; ibid., 61st (1879), p. 70; ibid., 63rd (1891), p. 93; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., II, 319.
201. Sixty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1880), p. 82; ibid., 69th (1887), pp. 132 f.; ibid., 72nd (1890), p. 113; P. N. Garber, op. cit., p. 55.

202. Fifty-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1872), p. 75; ibid., 56th (1874), p. 79; ibid., 58th (1876), p. 76; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., II, 331.
203. Fifty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1874), p. 76; ibid., 60th (1878), pp. 77 f.; ibid., 66th (1884), p. 89; ibid., 70th (1888), p. 111; ibid., 74th (1892), p. 129; ibid., 77th (1895), p. 96; Minutes, North Germany Conference, 1895.
204. Fifty-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1872), pp. 76 f., 79.
205. Fifty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1869), pp. 74 ff.; ibid., 55th (1873), pp. 74 f.; ibid., 56th (1874), pp. 85, 87; ibid., 57th (1875), p. 81; ibid., 67th (1885), p. 103.
206. Forty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1866), p. 54; ibid., 50th (1868), p. 107; ibid., 54th (1872), pp. 78, 81; ibid., 59th (1877), pp. 84 f.; ibid., 66th (1884), p. 95; ibid., 67th (1885), p. 103.
207. Fifty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1869), p. 79; ibid., 52nd (1870), pp. 60 f.; ibid., 54th (1872), p. 76.
208. Gen'l Minutes, Spring, 1886, pp. 202 ff.; G. C. Journal, 1884, p. 415; Seventy-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1889), p. 113; ibid., 77th (1895), p. 95; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., II, 331 f.; P. N. Garber, op. cit., p. 37; F. H. O. Melle, Ed., op. cit., pp. 242 f., 273 ff.
209. Sixty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1886), pp. 109 f., 114 f.; ibid., 73rd (1891), p. 126; ibid., 74th (1892), pp. [134 f.]; ibid., 75th (1893), p. 90.
210. Fifty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1873), p. 79; Gen'l Minutes, Fall, 1893, pp. 286, 578; ibid., Fall, 1895, pp. 434-36, 602.
211. Sixty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1885), p. 97.
212. Seventy-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1893), p. 95.
213. All facts and figures for which sources are not given in this section on North Germany Conference may be found in the Annual Reports of the Missionary Society for the years mentioned or in the General Minutes, Fall, 1893, or Fall, 1895.
214. Forty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1866), p. 47.
215. Seventy-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1894), p. 91; Gen'l Minutes, Fall, 1894, p. 580.
216. All facts and figures for which sources are not given in this section on South Germany Conference may be found in the Annual Reports of the Missionary Society for the years mentioned or in the General Minutes, Fall, 1893, or Fall, 1895.
217. Sixty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1887), pp. 138 ff.; ibid., 70th (1888), pp. 127, 128; ibid., 71st (1889), p. 120; ibid., 74th (1892), pp. 137, 142; ibid., 75th (1893), pp. 105, 106.
218. Seventy-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1891), p. 137; ibid., 74th (1892), pp. 140 f.; ibid., 76th (1894), pp. 90 f.; F. H. O. Melle, Ed., op. cit., pp. 270 f.
219. J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., II, 345; Seventy-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1889), p. 118.
220. Christian Advocate and Journal, XXVI (1851), 27 (July 3), 106; Thirty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1856), p. 37; L. S. Jacoby to J. P. Durbin, Oct. 17, 1851.
221. Forty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1866), p. 57; ibid., 75th (1893), p. 91.
222. Forty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1866), pp. 50, 57.
223. P. F. Douglass, op. cit., p. 114; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., II, 321; Christian Advocate and Journal, XXVI (1851), 1 (Jan. 2), 2.
224. Minutes, B. M., VI, 133; Thirty-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1852), p. 17.
225. Minutes, B. M., VI, 6; "Journal of the General Conference, 1856," p. 260, in G. C. Journals, III; J. P. Durbin to W. Prettyman and A. R. Long, July 20, 1857, Oct. 1, 1861, in "Letters from the Board of Missions: The East—Bulgaria, March 20, 1854-Nov. 14, 1866," hereafter referred to as "Bulgaria Letter Book."
226. Thirty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1857), pp. 61-63; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., III, 203 f.
227. Fortieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1858), pp. 38 f.; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., III, 204 f.
228. Forty-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1859), pp. 59 f.; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., III, 205 ff.

229. J. P. Durbin to F. Flocken, W. Prettyman, and A. L. Long, Dec. 27, 1859, "Bulgaria Letter Book"; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., III, 215 f.
230. Forty-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1860), pp. 50 f.; ibid., 44th (1862), pp. 34 f.; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., III, 216 f.
231. Forty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1861), pp. 64 ff.; ibid., 44th (1862), pp. 30 f.
232. W. Prettyman to J. P. Durbin, March 5, 1861; Forty-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1862), p. 33.
233. Bishops T. A. Morris and E. S. Janes to L. S. Jacoby and W. F. Warren, May 21, 1862. "Bulgaria Letter Book."
234. Jacoby-Warren Report on Bulgaria, Aug. 21, 1862.
235. William Webster Hall, Jr., Puritans in the Balkans: The American Board Mission in Bulgaria, 1878-1918 . . ., pp. 23 f.
236. W. W. Hall, Jr., op. cit., p. 27.
237. J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., III, 222; Forty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1863), p. 16; ibid., 46th (1864), p. 87; W. W. Hall, Jr., op. cit., pp. 35, 84 f.
238. Missionary Advocate, XX (1864), 4 (July), 25.
239. Forty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1864), pp. 88 f.
240. Edward Thomson, Our Oriental Missions, II, China and Bulgaria, 117-25.
241. Forty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1866), pp. 104 f.
242. Fiftieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1868), pp. 126 f.; ibid., 53rd (1871), p. 97; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., III, 223-30.
243. Fifty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1873), pp. 124 f.
244. J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., III, 232 f.
245. Fifty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1874), pp. 124 f.; Heathen Woman's Friend, XII (1881), 7 (January), 157 ff.
246. J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., III, 234 f.; Fifty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1875), p. 125.
247. Fifty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1876), pp. 127 ff.
248. Eighth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1877), pp. 16 f.
249. Encyclopaedia Britannica, XIth Ed., IV, 782; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., III, 239 f. On the role which Methodist and American Board missionaries played—particularly A. L. Long and George Washburn—in indirectly aiding Russia's entry into war with Turkey, see W. W. Hall, Jr., op. cit., pp. 40 f.
250. Sixtieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1878), p. 141; ibid., 61st (1879), pp. 143, 147-49.
251. Ibid., 61st (1879), pp. [143 ff.]; ibid., 62nd (1880), pp. 164 f.; ibid., 63rd (1881), p. 192; Heathen Woman's Friend, XII (1881), 11 (May), 242 f.; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., III, 248 ff.
252. Twelfth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1880-81), pp. 51 f.
253. Sixty-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1882), pp. 134 ff.
254. J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., III, 254 ff.
255. Sixty-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1882), pp. 135 f.; ibid., 65th (1883), pp. 165 ff.; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., III, 252 ff., 259 f.
256. Sixty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1884), pp. 169 ff.; Fifteenth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1884), p. 41; ibid., 16th (1885), pp. 48 f.
257. Sixty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1885), p. [187].
258. Ibid., pp. 189 f.
259. Gospel in All Lands, December, 1886, p. 544.
260. Sixty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1887), p. 255.
261. Sixty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1886), pp. 213 f.; ibid., 69th (1887), pp. 252, 257 f.
262. Seventy-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1889), pp. 235, 238, 241.
263. Seventy-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1890), p. 227; ibid., 73rd (1891), pp. 219 ff.; Twenty-first Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1889-90), p. 51; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., III, 269 f.
264. Seventy-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1891), p. 217.
265. Twenty-second Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1890-91), p. 61.
266. Minutes, Bulgaria Mission Conference, 1892, pp. 5, 9, 20, 24, 28.

267. Seventy-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1893), pp. 211 f.
268. Ibid., p. 210.
269. Twenty-fourth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1892-93), p. 74; ibid., 26th (1894-95), pp. 65 f.; Minutes, Bulgaria Mission Conference, 1894, pp. 22, 44 f.; Seventy-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1894), pp. 199 ff.
270. Minutes, Bulgaria Mission Conference, 1895, pp. 9, 21, 24.
271. "Minutes of the Western Europe Committee, M. S., Sept. 21, 1880-Nov. 27, 1894," ms., p. [380]; "Minutes, General Missionary Committee," Vol. D, p. [295].
272. Seventy-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1894), p. 199; ibid., 77th (1895), pp. 251 f.
273. John M. Walden, "The Methodist Episcopal Mission in Bulgaria," Western Christian Advocate, reprinted in Gospel in All Lands, August, 1897, p. 359.
274. Jacoby-Warren Report on Bulgaria, Aug. 21, 1862, pp. 42-45.
275. Sixty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1886), p. 207.
276. Christian Advocate, XLIV (1869), 27 (July 8), 209; W. Moister, A Hand Book of Wesleyan Missions, pp. 36 ff.; G. G. Findlay and W. W. Holdsworth, The History of the Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society, IV, 478 ff.; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., III, 273 ff.
277. The New International Encyclopaedia, XII, 479-83; William L. Langer, Ed., Encyclopedia of World History, pp. 650-59.
278. J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, III, 278.
279. Ibid., III, 280, 282, 288.
280. Fifty-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1873), pp. 130 f., 132, 133 ff.; ibid., 56th (1874), pp. 127, 129; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., III, 280 f., 283 f.
281. Ibid., III, 284 f.; Fifty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1874), p. 128.
282. L. M. Vernon to J. M. Reid, Jan. 12, 1874; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., III, 284.
283. Fifty-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1874), pp. 131 f.
284. Ibid., pp. 129 f.; ibid., 68th (1886), p. 221; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., III, 287-89, 325.
285. Gospel in All Lands, November, 1885, p. 497; Fifty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1875), p. 129; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., III, 288, 290-92.
286. Fifty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1876), pp. 131, 132.
287. Ibid., pp. 132, 133; ibid., 59th (1877), pp. 148 f.
288. Heathen Woman's Friend, IX (1877), 3 (September), 64 f.; Ninth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1877-78), p. 55; Fifty-ninth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1877), p. 149.
289. Gospel in All Lands, August, 1892, p. 374.
290. Eleventh Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1879-80), p. 44.
291. Sixty-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1881), pp. 198 f., 201, 202.
292. Sixtieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1878), p. 145; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., III, 305 f.
293. Sixty-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1882), p. 139; William Burt to C. C. McCabe, Feb. 23, 1895.
294. Tenth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1878-79), p. 28; ibid., 13th (1882), pp. 42 f.
295. Seventeenth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1886), p. 52; ibid., 19th (1888), p. 51; ibid., 20th (1889), p. 58; "Minutes of the Reference Committee, W. F. M. S.," ms., 1889, p. 21; Frances J. Baker, The Story of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, 1869-95, pp. 357 ff.
296. Minutes, B. M., IX, 439; ibid., X, 350-51, 432 f.; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., III, 309 f., 315.
297. Gospel in All Lands, July, 1885, p. 330; Sixty-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1885), pp. 197, 198.
298. J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., III, 313; Gospel in All Lands, May, 1890, p. 230.
299. Sixty-eighth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1886), pp. 217, 221.
300. William Burt to J. O. Peck, Dec. 25, 1888; Seventieth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1888), pp. 288, 456.
301. Seventy-first Ann. Rep., M. S. (1889), p. 244.

302. Everett S. Stackpole, 4½ Years in the Italy Mission, A Criticism of Missionary Methods, p. 28 et passim.
303. W. Burt to J. O. Peck, June 6, 1889.
304. Seventy-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1890), p. 231.
305. G. G. Findlay and W. W. Holdsworth, op. cit., IV, 507 ff.; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., III, 325 f., 327.
306. Seventy-second Ann. Rep., M. S. (1890), pp. 232, 233; ibid., 74th (1892), pp. 237 f.; Gospel in All Lands, April, 1892, p. 204.
307. Seventy-third Ann. Rep., M. S. (1891), p. 227; ibid., 75th (1893), pp. 215, 217 f.; ibid., 76th (1894), pp. 204 f.; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., III, 331 ff.
308. Gospel in All Lands, August, 1892, p. 378; Twenty-third Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1891-92), p. 81.
309. Twenty-fifth Ann. Rep., W. F. M. S. (1893-94), pp. 64 f.; ibid., 26th (1894-95), pp. 68 f.
310. Seventy-sixth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1894), pp. 203 f.; W. Burt to C. C. McCabe, Feb. 12, 1894.
311. Seventy-fourth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1892), p. 237; ibid., 75th (1893), p. 216; ibid., 77th (1895), pp. 200, 201, 203; Gen'l Minutes, Fall, 1895, pp. 369 f.
312. Seventy-seventh Ann. Rep., M. S. (1895), pp. 200-203, [204].
313. G. G. Findlay and W. W. Holdsworth, op. cit., IV, 480, 493, 499; William Burt, Annual Report, Official Correspondence Files, April, 1887.
314. Seventy-fifth Ann. Rep., M. S. (1893), pp. 215 f.; J. M. Reid and J. T. Gracey, op. cit., II, 233.

Bibliography

- Abbott, Edith, Women in Industry; A Study in American Economic History. New York, D. Appleton & Company, 1924.
- Abe, Yoshimune, "Yoitsu Honda." Ms. in Library, Board of Missions of The Methodist Church.
- Abell, Aaron Ignatius, The Urban Impact on American Protestantism, 1865-1900. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1943.
- Adams, Charles Francis, Jr., and Adams, Henry, Chapters of Erie, and Other Essays. Boston, J. R. Osgood and Company, 1871.
- Adams, Henry, The Education of Henry Adams. New York, The Modern Library, 1931.
- Adams, James Truslow, The Epic of America. Boston, Little, Brown & Company, 1932.
- Addison, James Thayer, The Episcopal Church in the United States, 1789-1931. New York, Charles Scribner's Sons, 1951.
- Aggressive Methodism*. A Quarterly Devoted to City Evangelization. Begun in November, 1889, as "the organ of the New York City Church Extension and Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church." In January, 1893 (Vol. V, No. 1) it became a monthly, and in February, 1894 (Vol. VI, No. 2) the title was changed to The Christian City. Ceased publication in 1916.
- Akin, D. D., "Second Period, 1892-1902," in Vol. I, History of the Southwest Kansas Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church. 6 vols. N. p., published by the Conference, n. d.
- Alumni Record of Drew Theological Seminary, Madison, New Jersey, 1867-1925*, William Pearson Tolley, Ed. Madison, New Jersey, published by the Seminary, 1926.
- American Bible Society, Sixty-second Annual Report of the American Bible Society . . . [for the years 1877-1878]. New York, American Bible Society, 1878.
- American Christian Commission, Document No. 1. New York, 1867.
- Anders, John Olaf Olson, The Origins and History of Swedish Religious Organizations in Minnesota. Rock Island, Illinois, Augustana Book Concern, 1932. A thesis, Ph.D., University of Minnesota.
- Anderson, James A., Centennial History of Arkansas Methodism. A History of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, In the State of Arkansas 1815-1935. Benton, Ark., L. B. White Printing Co., 1935.
- Anderson, Wilbert L., The Country Town, A Study of Rural Evolution. New York, The Baker & Taylor Co., 1906.
- Anon., Mrs. Jennie Culver Hartzell, In Memoriam. Pamphlet. Probably written by Marguerite Cook. N. p., n. d.
- Anthony, C. V. Fifty Years of Methodism, A History of the Methodist Episcopal Church Within the Bounds of the California Annual Conference from 1847 to 1897. San Francisco, Methodist Book Concern, 1901.
- Appenzeller, H. G., "The Opening of Korea: Admiral Shufeldt's Account of It." The Korean Repository, I (February), 1892.
- Arms, Goodsil F., History of the William Taylor Self-Supporting Missions in South America. New York, Methodist Book Concern, 1921.
- Armstrong, A. C., Transitional Eras in Thought with Special Reference to the Present Age. New York, The Macmillan Company, 1904.

- Arnold, W. E., A History of Methodism in Kentucky. 2 vols. Louisville, The Herald Press, 1935-36.
- Babcock, Kendrick Charles, The Scandinavian Element in the United States. University of Illinois Studies in the Social Sciences, III (1914), 3 (September). Urbana, Ill., published by the University of Illinois.
- Bacon, Leonard Woolsey, A History of American Christianity. The American Church History Series. Vol. XIII. New York, The Christian Literature Company, 1897.
- Badley, Brenton T., Ed., Visions and Victories in Hindustan, A Story of the Mission Stations of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Southern Asia. Diamond Jubilee Edition. Madras, India, Methodist Publishing House, 1931.
- Bailey, Thomas A., A Diplomatic History of the American People. New York, F. S. Crofts & Co., 1940.
- Baker, Charles J., History of the Origin, Rise, and Progress of the Independent Methodist Churches of Baltimore. Pamphlet. Baltimore, E. B. Read & Son, Printers, 1884.
- Baker, Frances J., The Story of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, 1869-1895. Rev. ed. New York, Eaton & Mains, 1898.
- Baker, Richard Terrill, Ten Thousand Years, The Story of Methodism's First Century in China. New York, Board of Missions and Church Extension, The Methodist Church, 1947.
- Bancroft, Frederic, The Life of William H. Seward. 2 vols. New York, Harper and Brothers, 1900.
- Bangs, Nathan, A History of the Methodist Episcopal Church. 3rd ed. 4 vols. New York, T. Mason and G. Lane, 3 vols., 1839; G. Lane & P. P. Sandford, Vol. 4, 1841.
- Barchwitz-Krauser, O. von, Six Years with William Taylor in South America. Boston, McDonald & Gill, 1885.
- Barnes, Nathan, "Liberia and the Church, Questions and Answers." Typescript ms. in Library, Board of Missions.
- Bashford, James W., China, An Interpretation. New York, The Abingdon Press, 1916.
- China and Methodism. New York, Eaton & Mains, 1906.
- The Oregon Missions, The Story of How the Line was Run Between Canada and the United States. New York, The Abingdon Press, 1918.
- Beard, Charles A., and Beard, Mary R., The Rise of American Civilization. 2 vols. in 1, rev. and enlarged. New York, The Macmillan Company, 1947.
- Beard, Mary [R.], A Short History of the American Labor Movement. New York, Harcourt, Brace and Howe, 1920.
- Beardsley, Isaac Haight, Echoes from Peak and Plain; or, Tales of Life, War, Travel, and Colorado Methodism. Cincinnati, Curtis & Jennings, 1898.
- Beggs, S. R., Pages From the Early History of the West and North-West: Embracing Reminiscences and Incidents of Settlement and Growth, and Sketches of the Material and Religious Progress of the States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Missouri, with Especial Reference to the History of Methodism. Cincinnati, Methodist Book Concern, 1868.
- Bemis, Samuel Flagg, A Diplomatic History of the United States. 3rd ed. New York, Henry Holt & Company, Inc., 1950.
- Benedict, Ruth, The Chrysanthemum and the Sword. Patterns of Japanese Culture. Boston, Houghton Mifflin Company, 1946.
- Bennett, P. S., History of Methodism in Wisconsin, in four parts. Part 3 by James Lawson. Cincinnati, Cranston and Stowe for the authors, 1890.
- Benton, Horace, Cleveland City Evangelization Society. Pamphlet. N. p., n. d.
- Berry, Joseph F., Four Wonderful Years, A Sketch of the Origin, Growth, and Working Plans of the Epworth League. New York, Hunt & Eaton, 1893.
- Bethelship Norwegian Methodist Church, 75th Anniversary, Bethelship Norwegian Methodist Church, Brooklyn, New York, 1874-1949. Pamphlet. N. p., 1949.
- Biographical File, Library of the Board of Missions of The Methodist Church. This comprehensive file includes data on all deceased missionaries, as well as deceased Bishops and staff members.
- Bizzell, William Bennett, Farm Tenantry in the United States, A Study of the Historical - Development of Farm Tenantry and Its Economic and Social Consequences on Rural Welfare with Special Reference to Conditions in the South and Southwest.* A thesis, Ph.D., Columbia University. Bulletin 278, Texas Agricultural Experiment Station, College Station, Texas, Agricultural and Mechanical College of Texas, 1921.

- Blackmar, Frank W., Kansas. 3 vols. Chicago, Standard Publishing Company, 1912.
- Blackmore, Sophia, "A Record of Forty Years of Woman's Work in Malaya." Typescript ms. in Files, Woman's Division of Christian Service, Board of Missions of The Methodist Church.
- Blegen, Theodore C., Norwegian Migration to America, The American Transition. Northfield, Minnesota, The Norwegian-American Historical Association, 1940.
- Board of Church Extension of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Annual Reports.
- Board of Education of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Annual Reports. Title varies: Annual Report, Handbook, etc.
- Board of Foreign Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Annual Report . . . for the Year 1916.
- Board of Foreign Missions, Methodist Episcopal Church, Committee on Policy and Work in Europe, 1923, "History and Statistical Data on Methodist Episcopal Work in Europe." Ms., in Files, Division of World Missions, Board of Missions of The Methodist Church.
- Board of Sunday Schools of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Yearbook, 1916.
- Bogart, Ernest L., and Kemmerer, Donald L., Economic History of the American People. New York, Longmans, Green & Company, 1947.
- Bombay Guardian*. Became a weekly periodical in 1866 (Vol. XII) after beginning as a monthly; ceased publication in 1918. Originally published by the Oriental Press, Bombay; later by the Anglo-Vernacular Press and Bombay Guardian Printing Works.
- Boston Methodist Home Missionary Society Association, "Records, 1866-73." Ms.
- Bowen, Elias, History of the Origin of the Free Methodist Church. Rochester, N. Y., B. T. Roberts, 1871.
- Bowne, Borden P., The Principles of Ethics. New York, 1892.
- Brace, Charles Loring, The Life of Charles Loring Brace, Chiefly Told in his own Letters, ed. by his daughter. New York, Charles Scribner's Sons, 1894.
- Bristol, Frank Milton, The Life of Chaplain McCabe, Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Cincinnati, Jennings and Graham, 1908.
- Brown, Arthur Judson, New Forces in Old China, An Unwelcome But Inevitable Awakening. New York, Fleming H. Revell Company, 1904.
-
- , One Hundred Years, A History of the Foreign Missionary Work of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A., With Some Account of Countries, Peoples and the Policies and Problems of Modern Missions. New York, Fleming H. Revell Company, 1936.
- Brown, Charles E., Wisconsin Indian Tribes. Pamphlet. Wisconsin University Historical Series. N. p., 1923.
- Browning, Webster E., Ritchie, John, and Grubb, Kenneth G., The West Coast Republics of South America: Chile, Peru and Bolivia. London, World Dominion Press, 1930.
- Brummitt, Dan B., Epworth League Methods. Cincinnati, Jennings and Graham, 1906.
- Brummitt, Stella Wyatt, Looking Backward, Thinking Forward, The Jubilee History of The Woman's Home Missionary Society of The Methodist Episcopal Church. Cincinnati, The Woman's Home Missionary Society, 1930.
- Brunson, Alfred, A Western Pioneer: or, Incidents of the Life and Times of Rev. Alfred Brunson, A.M., D.D., Embracing a Period of Over Seventy Years. 2 vols. Cincinnati, Hitchcock & Walden, 1872.
- Buck, Solon Justus, The Granger Movement, A Study of Agricultural Organization and Its Political, Economic and Social Manifestations, 1870-1880. Harvard Historical Studies. Vol. XIX. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1933.
- Buckley, J. M., A History of Methodism in the United States. 2 vols. New York, The Christian Literature Co., 1897.
-
- , A History of Methodists in the United States. American Church History Series. Vol. V. New York, The Christian Literature Co., 1896.

- Bureau of Methodist Missions for Boston and Vicinity, Minutes, 1889-91.
- Bureau of Statistics of Labor of Massachusetts, Twelfth Annual Report. Boston, Rand Avery & Co., 1881.
- Bureau of Statistics of Labor of Ohio, Tenth Annual Report [for the year 1886]. Columbus, The Westbote Co., State Printers, 1887.
- Burns, William Henry, The Higher Critic's Bible or God's Bible? New York, Eaton & Mains, 1904.
- Burton, Margaret E., The Education of Women in China. New York, Fleming H. Revell Company, 1911.
- Bushnell, Horace, Christian Nurture. New York, Charles Scribner, 1861.
- Butler-Durbin Correspondence. Handwritten copies of the original letters, in the Clementina Butler MSS. Collection, in Files, Division of World Missions, Board of Missions of The Methodist Church.
- Butler, Clementina, Mrs. William Butler, Two Empires and The Kingdom. New York, Methodist Book Concern, 1929.
- William Butler, The Founder of Two Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church, by his Daughter. New York, Eaton & Mains, 1902.
- Butler, John Wesley, History of The Methodist Episcopal Church in Mexico: Personal Reminiscences, Present Conditions and Future Outlook. New York, Methodist Book Concern, 1918.
- Butler, William, From Boston to Barcilly and Back. New York, Phillips & Hunt, 1886.
- Mexico in Transition from the Power of Political Romanism to Civil and Religious Liberty. 2nd ed., rev. New York, Hunt & Eaton, 1892.
- The Land of the Veda, Being Personal Reminiscences of India, Its People, Castes, Thugs, and Fakirs, Its Religions, Mythology, Principal Monuments, Palaces, and Mausoleums, Together with the Incidents of the Great Sepoy Rebellion. Jubilee Edition. New York, Eaton & Mains, 1871.
- Cady, H. Olin, Ms. Notes (China). Library, Board of Missions.
California Christian Advocate.
- Callahan, James Morton, Cuba and International Relations, A Historical Study in American Diplomacy. Baltimore, The Johns Hopkins Press, 1899.
- Camargo, Gonzalo Baez, Biografia de un Templo. Mexico, D. F., "Luminar," 1953.
- and Grubb, Kenneth G., Religion In The Republic Of Mexico. London, World Dominion Press, 1935.
- Campbell, Helen, Women Wage-Earners: Their Past, Their Present, and Their Future. Boston, Roberts Brothers, 1893.
- Canright, H. C., Ms. Notes (China). Library, Board of Missions.
- Carroll, H. K., The Religious Forces of the United States, Enumerated, Classified, and Described; Returns for 1900 and 1910 Compared With the Government Census of 1890; Condition and Characteristics of Christianity in the United States. Rev. ed. New York, Charles Scribner's Sons, 1912.
- Cartwright, Peter, Autobiography of Peter Cartwright, the Backwoods Preacher. W. P. Strickland, Ed. New York, Methodist Book Concern, 1856.
- Cary, Otis, A History of Christianity in Japan: Protestant Missions. New York, Fleming H. Revell Company, 1909.
- A History of Christianity in Japan: Roman Catholic and Greek Orthodox Missions. New York, Fleming H. Revell Company, 1909.
- Cavert, Samuel McCrea, and Van Dusen, Henry Pitney, Eds., The Church Through Half a Century, Essays in Honor of William Adams Brown. New York, Charles Scribner's Sons, 1936.
- Cherrington, Ernest Hurst, Ed., Standard Encyclopedia of the Alcohol Problem. 6 vols. Westerville, Ohio, American Issue Publishing Company, 1925-30.
- The Chicago Home Missionary and Church Extension Society, Annual Reports. Chicago, Methodist Book Concern.
- China Christian Advocate*.
- Chinard, Gilbert, Thomas Jefferson, The Apostle of Americanism. Boston, Little, Brown and Company, 1929.

- The Christian Advocate*. From 1833 called The Christian Advocate and Journal; changed to The Christian Advocate Jan. 4, 1866.
- Christian Missions Among the American Indians*. Bulletin 280. United States Board of Indian Commissioners, Washington, 1927.
- The Christian Movement in Japan*. Tenth Annual Issue, John Lincoln Dearing, Ed., Yokohama, published for the Conference of Federated Missions, 1912.
- The Christian Witness and Advocate of Bible Holiness*.
- Church Extension Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Annual Reports. Title varies, sometimes Yearbook and Annual Report, the main change being to Board of Church Extension, in 1872.
- Clancy, William Rockwell, "Autobiography of William Rockwell Clancy," Typescript ms., in Library, Board of Missions.
- Clark, Dan E., "The Western Movement in the Upper Mississippi Valley During the Fifties." Proceedings of the Mississippi Valley Historical Association for the Year 1913-1914. Vol. VII. Cedar Rapids, Iowa, The Torch Press, 1914.
- Clark, Francis Edward, Training the Church of the Future. New York, Funk & Wagnalls Company, 1902.
- Clark, Victor S., History of Manufactures in the United States. 3 vols. New York, McGraw-Hill Book Company, Inc., 1929-49.
- Clarke, William Newton, A Study of Christian Missions. New York, Charles Scribner's Sons, 1900.
- Clawson, W. W., "Brief Historical Sketch of the St. Regis Indian Mission, 1847-1897." Ms. in Library, Board of Missions.
- Clayton, G. A., Methodism in Central China. London, Charles H. Kelly, n. d.
- Clemens, Mrs. E. J. M., and Willing, Mrs. J. F., Rosario. New York, Phillips & Hunt, 1883.
- Cleveland City Church Extension Society, "Minutes . . . 1890-96." Ms.
- Cleveland City Evangelization Union, "Proceedings, 1886-88, 1898-1906." Ms.
- Cleveland, Mrs. J. G., "Reminiscences, Yonezawa." Ms., in Library, Board of Missions.
- Coman, Katharine, The Industrial History of the United States. New rev. ed. New York, The Macmillan Company, 1914.
- Commager, Henry Steele, The American Mind, An Interpretation of American Thought and Character Since the 1880's. New Haven, Yale University Press, 1950.
- Commons, John R., Races and Immigrants in America. New York, The Macmillan Company, 1907.
-
- Social Reform and the Church*. New York, Thomas Y. Crowell & Company, 1894.
- Commuck, Thomas, "Sketch of the Brothertown Indians." Report and Collections of the State Historical Society of Wisconsin for the Years 1857 and 1858. Vol. IV. Madison, Wis., James Ross, State Printer, 1859.
- Congressional Record*, III, Part I, 56th Congress, 1st session. Washington, Government Printing Office, 1900.
- Coolidge, Mary Roberts, Chinese Immigration. New York, Henry Holt & Company, 1909.
- Correspondence Files, Division of World Missions, Board of Missions of The Methodist Church.
- Correspondence Files, Woman's Division of Christian Service of the Board of Missions of The Methodist Church.
- Crooks, George R., The Life of Bishop Matthew Simpson of the Methodist Episcopal Church. New York, Harper and Brothers, 1890.
- Cunningham, Alfred, A History of the Szechuen Riots (May-June, 1895). Shanghai, "Shanghai Mercury" Office, 1895.
- Curry, Daniel, Life-Story of Rev. Davis Wasgatt Clark, D.D., Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church. New York, Nelson & Phillips, 1874.
- Curti, Merle, The Growth of American Thought. New York, Harper and Brothers, 1943.
- Daggett, Mrs. L. H., Ed., Historical Sketches of Woman's Missionary Societies in America and England. Boston, published by Mrs. L. H. Daggett, 1879.

- Daily Christian Advocate*. Issued only during sessions of the General Conference.
- Daily Zion's Herald*. Issued only during the 1852 session of the General Conference.
- Daniels, W. H., Ed., Memorials of Gilbert Haven, Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Boston, B. B. Russell & Co., 1880.
- Davis, Mrs. John, Lucy Webb Hayes. A Memorial Sketch. Cincinnati, Cranston & Curts, 1892.
- Dean, George B., City Evangelization in the Methodist Episcopal Church. Pamphlet. Philadelphia, Dept. of Evangelism, Board of Home Missions and Church Extension of The Methodist Episcopal Church, n. d.
- DeForest, Charlotte B., The Evolution of a Missionary; A Biography of John Hyde DeForest, for Thirty-Seven Years Missionary of the American Board, in Japan. New York, Fleming H. Revell Company, 1914.
- DeForest, John H., Sunrise in the Sunrise Kingdom. New York, Eaton & Mains, 1904.
- Dennett, Tyler, Americans in Eastern Asia; A Critical Study of the Policy of the United States with reference to China, Japan and Korea in the 19th Century. New York, The Macmillan Company, 1922.
- Dictionary of American Biography*. Dumas Malone and Allen Johnson, Eds. 21 vols. New York, Charles Scribner's Sons, 1928-44.
- Dike, Samuel W., "Some Aspects of the Divorce Question," a reprint from The Princeton Review, March, 1884.
- The Discipline. The Doctrines and Discipline of the Methodist Episcopal Church*. New editions were issued quadrennially after sessions of the General Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church.
- Donaldson, Thomas, The Public Domain. Its History, with Statistics, with References to the National Domain, Colonization, Acquisition of Territory, the Survey, Administration and Several Methods of Sale and Disposition of the Public Domain of the United States, With sketch of Legislative History of the Land States and Territories, and References to the Land System of the Colonies, and also that of Several Foreign Governments. Washington, Government Printing Office, 1884.
- Dorchester, Daniel, Christianity in the United States from the First Settlement down to the Present Time. Rev. ed. New York, Hunt & Eaton, 1895.
- _____ "The City as a Peril." Evangelical Alliance for the United States, National Perils and Opportunities. New York, The Baker & Taylor Co., 1887.
- Douglass, Paul F., The Story of German Methodism, Biography of an Immigrant Soul. New York, Methodist Book Concern, 1939.
- Drees, Ada M. C., Ed., Thirteen Years in Mexico (From Letters of Charles W. Drees). New York, Abingdon Press, 1915.
- Drummond, Andrew Landale, Story of American Protestantism. London, Oliver and Boyd, 1949.
- Dwight, Henry Otis, The Centennial History of the American Bible Society. New York, The Macmillan Company, 1916.
- Dyer, John L., The Snow-Shoe Itinerant. An Autobiography of the Rev. John L. Dyer, Familiarly Known as "Father Dyer" of the Colorado Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church. Cincinnati, Cranston & Stowe, 1890.
- Elliott, Charles, South-Western Methodism. A History of the M. E. Church in the South-West, from 1844 to 1864. Comprising the Martyrdom of Bewley and Others; Persecutions of the M. E. Church, and Its Reorganization, etc. Rev. ed. by Leroy Vernon. Cincinnati, published for the editor by Poe & Hitchcock, 1868.
- Eltzholtz, Carl Frederick, Livsbilleder af Pastor O. P. Petersen, Grundlaegger af den biskoppalige Methodistkirke i Norge og Medgrundlaegger af den norsk-danske Methodisme i Amerika. Chicago, Den norsk-danske Boghandels Trykkeri for C. H. Johnson, 1903.
- Epworth Herald*.
- Epworth Tidings*.
- Epworth Tidings*, Rangoon, XXVI (1939) 10 (November), 4.
- Erb, Frank O., The Development of the Young People's Movement. Chicago, University of Chicago Press, 1917.

- Essays and Reviews*. 5th ed. London, Longman, Green, Longman, and Roberts, 1861.
- Evans, Harold C., Chief Ed., Kansas, A Guide to the Sunflower State. New York, Viking Press, Inc., 1939.
- Every, E. F., South American Memories of Thirty Years. London, Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, 1933.
- Farish, Hunter Dickinson, The Circuit Rider Dismounts, A Social History of Southern Methodism, 1865-1900. Richmond, Va., The Dietz Press, 1938.
- Farm Tenancy, Report of the President's Committee*. Washington, Government Printing Office, 1937.
- Faulkner, Harold Underwood, American Economic History. New York, Harper and Brothers, 1924.
- American Political and Social History. New York, F. S. Crofts & Co., 1937.
- Faust, Albert Bernhardt, The German Element in the United States with Special Reference to its Political, Moral, Social, and Educational Influence. 2 vols. New York, Houghton Mifflin Company, 1909.
- Factory Inspectors of the State of New York, Second Annual Report . . . For the Year Ending December 1st, 1887. N. p., The Troy Press Company, Printers, 1888.
- Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, Department of Research and Education, Our Economic Life In the Light of Christian Ideals. New York, Association Press, 1932.
- Fellows, Stephen Norris, History of the Upper Iowa Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, 1856-1906. N. p., published by the Semi-Centennial Commission of the Conference, 1907.
- Findlay, G. G., and Holdsworth, W. W., The History of the Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society. 5 vols. London, The Epworth Press, 1921.
- Fisher, H. D., The Gun and the Gospel, Early Kansas and Chaplain Fisher. 2nd ed. Chicago, Medical Century Company, 1899.
- Fisher, Sidney G., The Cause of the Increase of Divorce. Philadelphia, 1890.
- "Immigration and Crime." Appletons' Popular Science Monthly, XLIX (May to October, 1896).
- Flom, George T., "The Scandinavian Factor in the American Population." The Iowa Journal of History and Politics, III (1905), 1 (January).
- Flood, Theodore L., and Hamilton, John W., Eds., Lives of Methodist Bishops. New York, Phillips & Hunt, 1882.
- Folwell, William Watts, Minnesota, The North Star State. Boston, Houghton Mifflin Company, 1908.
- Fonkalsrud, Alfred O., with the collaboration of Stevenson, Beatrice, The Scandinavian-American. Minneapolis, 1915.
- Ford, Eddy Lucius, The History of the Educational Work of the Methodist Episcopal Church in China, A Study of its Development and Present Trends. Foochow, China, Christian Herald Mission Press, 1938.
- Foreman, Grant, The Last Trek of the Indians. Chicago, University of Chicago Press, 1946.
- The Forum*.
- Found, Norman, "The Life of William McGill." The Korea Mission Field, XXXII (1936), 8 (August).
- Fowler, Frederick H., "Abandoned Farms." Cyclopedia of American Agriculture. A Popular Survey of Agricultural Conditions, Practices and Ideals in the United States and Canada, L. H. Bailey, Ed. Vol. IV. New York, The Macmillan Company, 1909.
- Freedmen's Aid Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Annual Reports.
- Gaddis, Merrill Elmer, "Christian Perfectionism in America." A thesis, Ph.D., University of Chicago, 1929.
- Gage, S. H., "Moses C. White." Journal of Applied Microscopy and Laboratory Methods, IV (1901), 1 (January).
- Garber, Paul Neff, The Methodists of Continental Europe. New York, Board of Missions and Church Extension, The Methodist Church, 1949.

- Garland, Hamlin, A Son of the Middle Border. New York, Grosset & Dunlap, 1917.
- Garrison, Winfred Ernest, The March of Faith, The Story of Religion in America Since 1865. New York, Harper and Brothers, 1933.
- General Minutes*. See Minutes of the Annual Conferences.
- Gibson, J. Campbell, Mission Problems and Mission Methods in South China: Lectures on Evangelistic Theology. Edinburgh, Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier, 1902.
- Gibson, O., The Chinese in America. Cincinnati, Hitchcock & Walden, 1877.
- Gilbert, Simeon, The Lesson System. New York, Phillips & Hunt, 1879.
- Gladden, Washington, Applied Christianity: Moral Aspects of Social Questions. Boston, Houghton Mifflin Company, 1894.
- Working People and Their Employers. Boston, Lockwood, Brooks, and Company, 1876.
- Godkin, E. L., "The Church as a Reformatory Agent." The Nation, June 16, 1870.
- Goode, William H., Outposts of Zion, with Linnings of Mission Life. Cincinnati, Poe & Hitchcock, 1863.
- Gordon, M. L., An American Missionary in Japan. Boston, Houghton Mifflin Company, 1892.
- The Gospel in All Lands*. Begun in 1880 as an independent missionary journal; purchased by the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church in May, 1885. Appeared monthly, except 1882-84 when it was a weekly, until February, 1903. Several volumes not dated or numbered.
- Govan, Gilbert E. and Livingood, James W., The University of Chattanooga: Sixty Years. Chattanooga, Tenn., University of Chattanooga, 1947.
- Gracey, Mrs. J. T., Medical Work of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, Methodist Episcopal Church. Dansville, N. Y., A. O. Bunnell, Printer, 1881.
- Griffis, William Elliot, A Modern Pioneer in Korea, the Life Story of Henry G. Appenzeller. New York, Fleming H. Revell Company, 1912.
- Guide to Holiness*. New Series. Began publication in 1839 under the title, The Guide to Christian Perfection; title changed in January, 1867, to Guide to Holiness.
- Gulick, Sidney L., The American Japanese Problem, A Study of the Racial Relations of the East and the West. New York, Charles Scribner's Sons, 1914.
- Haagensen, Andrew, Den Norsk-Danske Methodismes Historie paa begge Sider Havet. Chicago, Den norsk-danske Boghandels Officin, 1894.
- Hall, Prescott F., Immigration and Its Effects Upon the United States. 2nd ed., rev. New York, Henry Holt & Company, 1913.
- Hall, William Webster, Jr., Puritans in the Balkans: The American Board Mission in Bulgaria, 1878-1918; A Study in Purpose and Procedure. Studia Historico-Philologica Serdicensia. Supplementi vol. I. Sofia, 1938.
- Hallenbeck, Wilbur C., Urban Organization of Protestantism. New York, Harper and Brothers, 1934.
- Hammond, Edmund Jordan, The Methodist Episcopal Church in Georgia, Being A Brief History of the Two Georgia Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church Together with a Summary of the Causes of Major Methodist Divisions in the United States and of the Problems Confronting Methodist Union. N. p., 1935.
- Hansen, Marcus Lee, The Immigrant in American History. Arthur M. Schlesinger, Ed. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1940.
- "Official Encouragement of Immigration to Iowa." Iowa Journal of History and Politics, XIX (1921) 2 (April).
- Haqq, Zahir Al, Autobiography of Rev. Zahir-Al-Haqq, First Convert in the Mission of the Methodist Episcopal Church in India. Trans. from Hindustani by Mrs. E. J. Humphrey. Pamphlet. New York, printed for the Missionary Society, 1885.
- Hardy, Osgood, "Agricultural Changes in California, 1860-1900." Proceedings of the Pacific Coast Branch of the American Historical Association, 1929.
- Harper's Magazine*. Called Harper's New Monthly Magazine up to December, 1899.
- Harris, Merriman C., Christianity in Japan. New York, Eaton & Mains, 1907.
- Hart, E. I., Virgil C. Hart: Missionary Statesman. Founder of the American and Canadian Missions in Central and West China. New York, Hodder & Stoughton, 1917.

- Hart, Virgil C., "Personal Diaries." These are in possession of Miss Grace Hart, Ottawa, Ont., Canada.
- Harwood, Thomas, History of New Mexico Spanish and English Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church from 1850 to 1910. In Decades. 2 vols. New Mexico, El Abogado Press, 1910.
- Heathen Woman's Friend.* Published monthly in Boston by the W.F.M.S. beginning in June, 1869. Each volume runs from No. 1, July, to No. 12 in June the following year. Vol. XXVIII, No. 7 (January, 1896) name changed to Woman's Missionary Friend.
- Hecker, Julius F., Religion and Communism: A Study of Religion and Atheism in Soviet Russia. London, Chapman & Hall, Ltd., 1933.
- Hedding, Elijah, A Discourse on the Administration of Discipline. New York, G. Lane & P. P. Sandford, 1842.
- Helmers, John, "History of the Epworth League." A thesis, M. A., University of Chicago, 1923.
- Hendrick, Burton J., The Age of Big Business: A Chronicle of the Captains of Industry. New Haven, Yale University Press, 1921.
- Herring, Hubert, History of Latin America. New York, Alfred A. Knopf, Inc., 1955.
- Hibbard, F. G., The Religion of Childhood; or, Children in their Relation to Native Depravity, to the Atonement, to the Family, and to the Church. Cincinnati, Poe & Hitchcock for the author, 1864.
- Hickman, Russell K., "Lewis Bodwell, Frontier Preacher; the Early Years." Kansas Historical Quarterly, XII (1943), 2 (August).
- Hicks, John D., The Constitutions of the Northwest States. The University Studies of the University of Nebraska. Vol. XXIII. Lincoln, published by the University, 1924.
- Hines, H. K., Missionary History of the Pacific Northwest, Containing the Wonderful Story of Jason Lee, with Sketches of Many of His Co-Laborers, All Illustrating Life on the Plains and in the Mountains in Pioneer Days. Portland, H. K. Hines, 1899.
- Hinman, George Warren, The American Indian and Christian Missions. New York, Fleming H. Revell Company, 1933.
- Historical Record and Directory of the Washington Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, Kansas City, Kansas, 1890.
- Hobart, Chauncey, History of Methodism in Minnesota. Red Wing, Minn., Red Wing Printing Co., 1887.
- Hodge, F. W., Ed., Handbook of American Indians North of Mexico. 2 vols. Washington, Government Printing Office, 1907.
- Hodgkins, Louise Manning, The Roll Call. An Introduction to Our Missionaries, 1869-1896. Boston, Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, 1896.
- Hogue, Wilson T., History of the Free Methodist Church of North America. Vol. I, 3rd ed. Winona Lake, Indiana, The Free Methodist Publishing House, 1938.
- Holland, Henry Scott, "Property and Personality." Property, Its Duties and Rights Historically, Philosophically and Religiously Regarded. Essays by various writers. New ed. London, Macmillan and Co., Ltd., 1915.
- Holst, H. von, The Constitutional and Political History of the United States. Trans. by John J. Lalor. 8 vols. Chicago, Calloghan & Company, 1877-92.
- Hooper, Florence, "Isabella Thoburn—Creator of Ideals," in Program, 1940: Great Adventures. Sara Estelle Haskin, Ed. Woman's Missionary Council, Methodist Episcopal Church, South.
- Hopkins, C. Howard, History of the Y.M.C.A. in North America. New York, Association Press, 1951.
- The Rise of the Social Gospel in American Protestantism, 1865-1915. New Haven, Yale University Press, 1940.
- Horne, C. Silvester, The Story of the L. M. S., 1795-1895. London, London Missionary Society, 1894.
- Hoskins, Mrs. Robert, Clara A. Swain, First Medical Missionary to the Women of the Orient. Boston, Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, Methodist Episcopal Church, 1912.

- Hughes, George, Days of Power in the Forest Temple. A Review of the Wonderful Work of God at Fourteen National Camp-Meetings, from 1867 to 1872. Boston, John Bent & Co., 1873.
- Humphrey, Mrs. E. J., Six Years in India: Or, Sketches of India and Its People as Seen by a Lady Missionary. New York, Carlton & Porter, 1866.
- Humphrey, J. L., Twenty-one Years in India. New York, Eaton & Mains, 1905.
- Hunter, Robert, Poverty. New York, The Macmillan Company, 1912.
- Ichihashi, Yamato, Japanese in the United States: A Critical Study of the Problems of the Japanese Immigrants and their Children. N. p., Stanford University Press, 1932.
- "India Correspondence, Ms., 1856-66." See "Letters From Board of Missions."
- The Indian Witness*. Official organ of the M. E. Church in Southern Asia. Lucknow, India.
- International Review of Missions*.
- Isham, Mary, Valorous Ventures. A Record of Sixty and Six Years of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, Methodist Episcopal Church. Boston, Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, Methodist Episcopal Church, 1936.
- Jackson, John, Mary Reed, Missionary to the Lepers. New York, Fleming H. Revell Company, n. d.
- Jacoby-Warren Report on Bulgaria, in Correspondence Files, Division of World Missions, Board of Missions of The Methodist Church.
- The Japan Christian Year Book*. Begun 1903, continued through Vol. 38, 1940; title varies slightly.
- Jefferson, Thomas, The Writings of Thomas Jefferson. H. A. Washington, Ed. Philadelphia, 1854.
- Jennings, H. C., The Methodist Book Concern, A Romance of History. New York, Methodist Book Concern, 1924.
- Johnson, Mrs. T. S., "Diary." Ms.
- The Journal of the Proceedings of the Bishops, Clergy, and Laity of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America, Assembled in a General Convention in the City of Boston, October 3rd to October 25th . . . , 1877*. Boston, Alfred Mudge & Sons, 1878.
- Journals of Annual Conferences*. Variant name used by Conferences in some instances for Minutes. Most of these are available in the Library, Board of Missions.
- Journals of the General Conference*. Vol. 1, 1796-1836. Vol. II, 1840, 1844. Vol. III, 1848-1856. From Vol. IV (1860) there is only one Conference to a volume and the volumes are unnumbered from 1864.
- Kansas State Historical Society, Collections, and variant title, Transactions, 1875-1926. Topeka, State Printing Office.
- Kelley [Wischnewetzky], Florence, Our Toiling Children. Chicago, Woman's Temperance Publication Association, 1889.
- Kellogg, Charles D., "Child Life in City and Country." Journal of Social Science, containing the Transactions of the American [Social Science] Association, XXI (September, 1886).
- Keyser, H. A., Bishop Potter, the People's Friend. New York, Whittaker, 1910.
- King, Willis J., "History of the Methodist Church Mission in Liberia." Ms., mimeographed, in Library, Board of Missions.
- Kingsbury, George W., History of Dakota Territory, III, South Dakota, Its History and Its People. Chicago, The S. J. Clarke Co., 1915.
- Kingsley, Calvin, Round the World: A Series of Letters. Vol. I, Europe and America, Vol. II, Asia. Cincinnati, Hitchcock & Walden, 1870.
- Klebsattel, August, Ms. Notes (Africa). Library, Board of Missions.
- Knowles, S., The Gospel in Gonda: Being a Narrative of Events in Connection with the Preaching of the Gospel in the Trans-Ghaghra Country. Lucknow, Methodist Publishing House, 1889.
- The Korean Repository*.

- Hart, Virgil C., "Personal Diaries." These are in possession of Miss Grace Hart, Ottawa, Ont., Canada.
- Harwood, Thomas, History of New Mexico Spanish and English Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church from 1850 to 1910. In Decades. 2 vols. New Mexico, El Abogado Press, 1910.
- Heathen Woman's Friend.* Published monthly in Boston by the W.F.M.S. beginning in June, 1869. Each volume runs from No. 1, July, to No. 12 in June the following year. Vol. XXVIII, No. 7 (January, 1896) name changed to Woman's Missionary Friend.
- Hecker, Julius F., Religion and Communism: A Study of Religion and Atheism in Soviet Russia. London, Chapman & Hall, Ltd., 1933.
- Hedding, Elijah, A Discourse on the Administration of Discipline. New York, G. Lane & P. P. Sandford, 1842.
- Helmers, John, "History of the Epworth League." A thesis, M. A., University of Chicago, 1923.
- Hendrick, Burton J., The Age of Big Business: A Chronicle of the Captains of Industry. New Haven, Yale University Press, 1921.
- Herring, Hubert, History of Latin America. New York, Alfred A. Knopf, Inc., 1955.
- Hibbard, F. G., The Religion of Childhood; or, Children in their Relation to Native Depravity, to the Atonement, to the Family, and to the Church. Cincinnati, Poe & Hitchcock for the author, 1864.
- Hickman, Russell K., "Lewis Bodwell, Frontier Preacher; the Early Years." Kansas Historical Quarterly, XII (1943), 2 (August).
- Hicks, John D., The Constitutions of the Northwest States. The University Studies of the University of Nebraska. Vol. XXIII. Lincoln, published by the University, 1924.
- Hines, H. K., Missionary History of the Pacific Northwest, Containing the Wonderful Story of Jason Lee, with Sketches of Many of His Co-Laborers, All Illustrating Life on the Plains and in the Mountains in Pioneer Days. Portland, H. K. Hines, 1899.
- Hinman, George Warren, The American Indian and Christian Missions. New York, Fleming H. Revell Company, 1933.
- Historical Record and Directory of the Washington Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, Kansas City, Kansas, 1890.
- Hobart, Chauncey, History of Methodism in Minnesota. Red Wing, Minn., Red Wing Printing Co., 1887.
- Hodge, F. W., Ed., Handbook of American Indians North of Mexico. 2 vols. Washington, Government Printing Office, 1907.
- Hodgkins, Louise Manning, The Roll Call. An Introduction to Our Missionaries, 1869-1896. Boston, Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, 1896.
- Hogue, Wilson T., History of the Free Methodist Church of North America. Vol. I, 3rd ed. Winona Lake, Indiana, The Free Methodist Publishing House, 1938.
- Holland, Henry Scott, "Property and Personality." Property, Its Duties and Rights Historically, Philosophically and Religiously Regarded. Essays by various writers. New ed. London, Macmillan and Co., Ltd., 1915.
- Holst, H. von, The Constitutional and Political History of the United States. Trans. by John J. Lalor. 8 vols. Chicago, Calloghan & Company, 1877-92.
- Hooper, Florence, "Isabella Thoburn—Creator of Ideals," in Program, 1940: Great Adventurers. Sara Estelle Haskin, Ed. Woman's Missionary Council, Methodist Episcopal Church, South.
- Hopkins, C. Howard, History of the Y.M.C.A. in North America. New York, Association Press, 1951.
- The Rise of the Social Gospel in American Protestantism, 1865-1915. New Haven, Yale University Press, 1940.
- Horne, C. Silvester, The Story of the L. M. S., 1795-1895. London, London Missionary Society, 1894.
- Hoskins, Mrs. Robert, Clara A. Swain, First Medical Missionary to the Women of the Orient. Boston, Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, Methodist Episcopal Church, 1912.

- Hughes, George, Days of Power in the Forest Temple. A Review of the Wonderful Work of God at Fourteen National Camp-Meetings, from 1867 to 1872. Boston, John Bent & Co., 1873.
- Humphrey, Mrs. E. J., Six Years in India: Or, Sketches of India and Its People as Seen by a Lady Missionary. New York, Carlton & Porter, 1866.
- Humphrey, J. L., Twenty-one Years in India. New York, Eaton & Mains, 1905.
- Hunter, Robert, Poverty. New York, The Macmillan Company, 1912.
- Ichihashi, Yamato, Japanese in the United States: A Critical Study of the Problems of the Japanese Immigrants and their Children. N. p., Stanford University Press, 1932.
- "India Correspondence, Ms., 1856-66." See "Letters From Board of Missions."
- The Indian Witness*. Official organ of the M. E. Church in Southern Asia. Lucknow, India.
- International Review of Missions*.
- Isham, Mary, Valorous Ventures. A Record of Sixty and Six Years of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, Methodist Episcopal Church. Boston, Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, Methodist Episcopal Church, 1936.
- Jackson, John, Mary Reed, Missionary to the Lepers. New York, Fleming H. Revell Company, n. d.
- Jacoby-Warren Report on Bulgaria, in Correspondence Files, Division of World Missions, Board of Missions of The Methodist Church.
- The Japan Christian Year Book*. Begun 1903, continued through Vol. 38, 1940; title varies slightly.
- Jefferson, Thomas, The Writings of Thomas Jefferson. H. A. Washington, Ed. Philadelphia, 1854.
- Jennings, H. C., The Methodist Book Concern, A Romance of History. New York, Methodist Book Concern, 1924.
- Johnson, Mrs. T. S., "Diary." Ms.
- The Journal of the Proceedings of the Bishops, Clergy, and Laity of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America, Assembled in a General Convention in the City of Boston, October 3rd to October 25th . . . , 1877*. Boston, Alfred Mudge & Sons, 1878.
- Journals of Annual Conferences*. Variant name used by Conferences in some instances for Minutes. Most of these are available in the Library, Board of Missions.
- Journals of the General Conference*. Vol. 1, 1796-1836. Vol. II, 1840, 1844. Vol. III, 1848-1856. From Vol. IV (1860) there is only one Conference to a volume and the volumes are unnumbered from 1864.
- Kansas State Historical Society, Collections, and variant title, Transactions, 1875-1926. Topeka, State Printing Office.
- Kelley [Wischnewetzky], Florence, Our Toiling Children. Chicago, Woman's Temperance Publication Association, 1889.
- Kellogg, Charles D., "Child Life in City and Country." Journal of Social Science, containing the Transactions of the American [Social Science] Association, XXI (September, 1886).
- Keyser, H. A., Bishop Potter, the People's Friend. New York, Whittaker, 1910.
- King, Willis J., "History of the Methodist Church Mission in Liberia." Ms., mimeographed, in Library, Board of Missions.
- Kingsbury, George W., History of Dakota Territory, III, South Dakota, Its History and Its People. Chicago, The S. J. Clarke Co., 1915.
- Kingsley, Calvin, Round the World: A Series of Letters. Vol. I, Europe and America, Vol. II, Asia. Cincinnati, Hitchcock & Walden, 1870.
- Klebsattel, August, Ms. Notes (Africa). Library, Board of Missions.
- Knowles, S., The Gospel in Gonda: Being a Narrative of Events in Connection with the Preaching of the Gospel in the Trans-Ghaghra Country. Lucknow, Methodist Publishing House, 1889.
- The Korean Repository*.

- Lacy, Walter N., A Hundred Years of China Methodism. New York, Abingdon-Cokesbury Press, 1948.
- Langer, William L., Ed., An Encyclopedia of World History. Boston, Houghton Mifflin Company, 1956.
- Lankard, Frank Glenn, A History of the American Sunday School Curriculum. New York, The Abingdon Press, 1927.
- Latourette, Kenneth Scott, The Development of Japan. New York, The Macmillan Company, 1918.
-
- A History of Christian Missions in China. New York, The Macmillan Company, 1929.
- “Letter Book, Oregon, California, and New Mexico, Nov. 26, 1849—Feb. 1, 1865,” in Files of the Division of World Missions, Board of Missions of The Methodist Church.
- “Letters from the Board of Missions: The East—Bulgaria, March 20, 1854—Nov. 14, 1866,” in Files of the Division of World Missions, Board of Missions of The Methodist Church.
- “Letters from the Board of Missions, Germany, Sept. 25, 1849—Nov. 15, 1866,” in Files of the Division of World Missions, Board of Missions of The Methodist Church.
- “Letters from the Board of Missions, India, March 20, 1856—Nov. 5, 1866,” in Files of the Division of World Missions, Board of Missions of The Methodist Church.
- “Letters from the Board of Missions: South America, May 14, 1850—Oct. 17, 1865,” in Files of the Division of World Missions, Board of Missions of The Methodist Church.
- Lewis, Spencer, “Pioneering in West China.” China Christian Advocate, XX (1933), 9 (September), 10 (October), 11 (November), 12 (December).
- Li Ung Bing, Outlines of Chinese History. Joseph Whiteside, Ed. Shanghai, The Commercial Press, Ltd., 1914.
- Liljegren, Nils M., Westergreen, N. O., and Wallenius, C. G. Svenska Metodismen i Amerika. Chicago, Svenska M. E. Bokhandes-Föreningens Förlag, 1895.
- Lindsay, Mrs. Effie G., Missionaries of the Minneapolis Branch of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Minneapolis, Murphy-Travis Co., 1904.
- Loofbourow, Leon L., In Search of God's Gold, A Story of Continued Christian Pioneering in California. San Francisco, Auspices of the Historical Society of the California-Nevada Annual Conference of The Methodist Church in cooperation with the College of the Pacific, 1950.
- Loewenstein, Prince H. Zu, The Germans in History. New York, Columbia University Press, 1945.
- Loomis, Samuel Lane, Modern Cities and Their Religious Problems. New York, The Baker & Taylor Company, 1887.
- Love, W. DeLoss, Samson Occom, and The Christian Indians of New England. Boston, The Pilgrim Press, 1899.
- McConnell, Francis John, Borden Parker Bowne, His Life and His Philosophy. New York, The Abingdon Press, 1929.
- McKinley, William, A Story of Minnesota Methodism. New York, Eaton & Mains, 1911.
- Maclay, R. S., Life Among the Chinese: with Characteristic Sketches and Incidents of Missionary Operations and Prospects in China. New York, Carlton & Porter, 1861.
- McMaster, John Bach, A History of the People of the United States, From the Revolution to the Civil War. 8 vols. New York, D. Appleton and Company, 1921.
- McNeill, George E., Ed., The Labor Movement: The Problem of To-day. Boston, A. M. Bridgman & Co., 1887.
- McPherson, Edward, The Political History of the United States of America, During the Great Rebellion, from November 6, 1860, to July 4, 1864. Washington, D.C., Philp and Solomons, 1864.
- Mahan, A. T., Armaments and Arbitration, or the Place of Force in the International Relations of States. New York, Harper and Brothers, 1912.
-
- The Interest of America in Sea Power, Present and Future. Boston, Little, Brown and Company, 1918.
- Manual of the Methodist Episcopal Church. A Quarterly Magazine of Information con-*

- cerning the Benevolent and Publishing Interests of the Church.* Issued by the General Conference from 1880 to 1888. New York, Phillips & Hunt.
- Marquette, David, A History of Nebraska Methodism, First Half-Century, 1854-1904. Cincinnati, The Western Methodist Book Concern Press, 1904.
- Mattison, Hiram, Popular Amusements: An Appeal to Methodists in Regard to the Evils of Card-Playing, Billiards, Dancing, Theater-Going, Etc. New York, Carlton & Porter, 1867.
- May, Henry F., Protestant Churches and Industrial America. New York, Harper and Brothers, 1949.
- Mayo-Smith, Richmond, Emigration and Immigration, A Study in Social Science. New York, Charles Scribner's Sons, 1890.
- Means, Nathalie Toms, Malaysia Mosaic, A Story of Fifty Years of Methodism. Singapore, The Methodist Book Room, n. d.
- Melle, F. H. Otto, Ed., Das Walten Gottes im deutschen Methodismus. Bremen, Kommissions Verlag des Traktathauses, 1925.
- Messmore, J. H., The Life of Edwin Wallace Parker, D.D., Missionary Bishop of Southern Asia; Forty-one Years a Missionary in India. New York, Eaton & Mains, 1903.
- The Methodist.* Founded 1860; merged with the Christian Advocate, and suspended publication on Oct. 7, 1882.
- Methodist Quarterly Review.* In 1885 became a bimonthly, the Methodist Review.
- The Methodist Woman*, II (1942), 5 (January).
- The Methodist Year Book for 1895.* New York, Hunt & Eaton, n. d.
- Meyer, Lucy Rider, Deaconesses, Biblical, Early Church, European, American, with The Story of the Chicago Training School, For City, Home and Foreign Missions, and The Chicago Deaconess Home. Chicago, The Message Publishing Company, 1889.
- Miley, John, Systematic Theology. George R. Crooks and John F. Hurst, Eds. 2 vols. New York, Hunt & Eaton, 1894.
- Miller, Spencer, Jr., and Fletcher, Joseph F., The Church and Industry. New York, Longmans, Green, and Company, 1930.
- Miller, Wallace Elden, The Peopling of Kansas. Columbus, Ohio, Press of Fred J. Herr, 1906.
- Millis, H. A., The Japanese Problem in the United States: An Investigation for the Commission on Relations with Japan Appointed by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. New York, The Macmillan Company, 1915.
- Mills, Edward Laird, Plains, Peaks and Pioneers, Eighty Years of Methodism in Montana. Portland, Oregon, Binsfords & Mort, 1947.
- The Minutes of the Annual Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church.* 6 vols. 1773-1857. Issued without volume numbers, 1858-77; beginning in 1878 issued twice a year in Spring and Fall.
- Minutes of the Board of Managers of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church.* Most of these are in ms. form. Files, Division of World Missions, Board of Missions of The Methodist Church.
- Minutes of the Central Conference of India,* and later India and Malaysia, various dates, in Files, Division of World Missions, Board of Missions of The Methodist Church.
- Minutes of the Delegated Conference, of the Methodist Episcopal Church in India, Held at Allahabad, N. W. P., July 14th-18th, 1881.* Lucknow, Methodist Episcopal Church Press, 1881.
- "Minutes of the General Missionary Committee of the Methodist Episcopal Church" (May 1850—November 1862). Mss. in Files, Division of World Missions, Board of Missions of The Methodist Church.
- Minutes of the various field Woman's Conferences (Bombay, Japan, Northwest India, South India),* various dates. In Library, Board of Missions.
- Minutes.* The official Minutes issued separately, for the annual sessions of the Missions, Mission Conferences, and Annual Conferences, at home and abroad. In some cases the official title uses the words "Proceedings," "Yearbook," or "Journal" rather than "Minutes." In a few cases the Minutes have been printed in the language of the foreign

- Pratt, James Bissett, India and Its Faiths, A Traveller's Record. London, Constable & Company Limited, 1916.
- Prentice, George, The Life of Gilbert Haven, Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church. New York, Phillips & Hunt, 1883.
- Price, Frederick B., Ed., India Mission Jubilee of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Southern Asia. Calcutta, Methodist Publishing House, 1907.
- Price, R. N., Holston Methodism, From its Origin to the Present Time. 5 vols. Nashville, Publishing House of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, 1906-14.
- Rainsford, W. W., The Church's Opportunity in the City Today. Boston, 1895.
- Rauschenbusch, Walter, Christianity and the Social Crisis. New York, The Macmillan Company, 1913.
- _____ Christianizing the Social Order. New York, The Macmillan Company, 1921.
- Records of the General Conference of the Protestant Missionaries of China, 1877*. Shanghai, Presbyterian Mission Press, 1878.
- _____ 1890. Shanghai, American Presbyterian Mission Press, 1890.
- Reid, J. M., Missions and Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church. 2 vols. New York, Phillips & Hunt, 1879.
- Reid, J. M., and Gracey, J. T., Missions and Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church. 3 vols. New York, Eaton & Mains, Vols. I and II, 1895, Vol. III, 1896.
- Reischauer, Edwin O., The United States and Japan. Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1950.
- Report of Bishop Taylor's Self-Supporting Missions From July 1st, 1884, to March 24th, 1888*. New York, A. H. Kellogg, n. d.
- Report of Bishop Taylor's Self-Supporting Missions From March 25th, 1888, to October 31st, 1889*. New York, The Law and Trade Printing Company, n. d.
- Report of Organizing Convention of Freedmen's Aid Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, 1866*.
- Report of the Second Decennial Missionary Conference, Held at Calcutta, 1882-83*. Calcutta, India, Baptist Mission Press, 1883.
- Report of the Third Decennial Missionary Conference, Held at Bombay, 1892-93*. 2 vols. Byculla, India, Bombay Education Society's Steam Press, 1893.
- Reports of the Immigration Commission, III, Statistical Review of Immigration, 1820-1910. Distribution of Immigrants, 1850-1900*. Washington, Government Printing Office, 1911.
- Rhodes, Harry A., Ed., History of the Korea Mission, Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., 1884-1934. Seoul, Korea, Chosen Mission Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., [1934].
- Rhodes, James Ford, History of the United States from the Compromise of 1850 to the Final Restoration of Home Rule at the South in 1877. 6 vols. New York, The Macmillan Company, 1912.
- Rice, William North, Christian Faith in an Age of Science. New York, A. C. Armstrong and Son, 1903.
- Richardson, James D., Compiler, A Compilation of the Messages and Papers of the Presidents. 11 vols. N. p., Bureau of National Literature, 1893.
- Richter, Julius, A History of Missions in India. Trans. by Sidney H. Moore. New York, Fleming H. Revell Company, 1908.
- Ritter, H., A History of Protestant Missions in Japan. Trans. by George E. Albrecht, rev. by D. C. Greene. Tokyo, The Methodist Publishing House, 1898.
- Robertson, Frederick William, Sermons. Vol. I: Sermons on Religion & Life, Vol. II: Sermons on Christian Doctrine, Vol. III: Sermons on Bible Subjects. London, J. M. Dent & Co., n. d.
- Robinson, Charles, The Kansas Conflict. New York, Harper and Brothers, 1892.
- Robinson, Doane, History of South Dakota. 2 vols. Indiana, B. F. Bowen & Co., 1904.
- Roche, John A., The Life of John Price Durbin, D.D., LL.D., with an Analysis of his Homiletic Skill and Sacred Oratory. New York, Hunt & Eaton, 1890.

- Ross, Edward Alsworth, The Changing Chinese: The Conflict of Oriental and Western Cultures in China. New York, The Century Co., 1912.
- Round, W. M. F., "Immigration and Crime." The Forum, VIII (September, 1889—February, 1890).
- Sampey, John Richard, The International Lesson System; The History of Its Origin and Development. New York, Fleming H. Revell Company, 1912.
- Sartario, Enrico, A Brief History of the Waldensians. Pamphlet. N. p., n. d.
- Sauer, Charles A., Ed., Within the Gate. Seoul, Korea, The Korea Methodist News Service, 1934.
- Schlesinger, Arthur Meier, Political and Social Growth of the American People, 1865-1940. 3rd ed. New York, The Macmillan Company, 1941.
- The Rise of the City, 1878-1898. New York, The Macmillan Company, 1933.
- Schmeckebier, Laurence F., The Office of Indian Affairs; Its History, Activities and Organization. Baltimore, The Johns Hopkins Press, 1927.
- Schurz, Carl, "Manifest Destiny." Harper's New Monthly Magazine, LXXXVII (June-November, 1893).
- Scott, J. E., History of Fifty Years: Comprising the Origin, Establishment, Progress and Expansion of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Southern Asia. Madras, India, Methodist Episcopal Press, 1906.
- Seaman, Samuel A., Annals of New York Methodism, Being a History of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the City of New York from A.D. 1766 to A.D. 1890. New York, Hunt & Eaton, 1892.
- Seventh Special Report of the Commissioner of Labor*. "The Slums of Baltimore, Chicago, New York, and Philadelphia." Prepared by Carroll D. Wright. Washington, Government Printing Office, 1894.
- Seymour, Flora Warren, Indian Agents of the Old Frontier. New York, D. Appleton-Century Company, Inc., 1941.
- Shaughnessy, Gerald, Has the Immigrant Kept the Faith? A Study of Immigration and Catholic Growth in the United States, 1790-1920. New York, The Macmillan Company, 1925.
- Shaw, James, Early Reminiscences of Pioneer Life in Kansas. N. p., Haskell Printing Company, 1886.
- Shedd, Clarence P., Two Centuries of Student Christian Movements, Their Origin and Intercollegiate Life. New York, Association Press, 1934.
- Sheldon, Henry C., "Changes in Theology Among American Methodists." American Journal of Theology, X (January, 1906).
- Simon, John S., John Wesley and the Methodist Societies. London, The Epworth Press, 1923.
- John Wesley and the Religious Societies. London, The Epworth Press, 1921.
- Simpson, Matthew, Ed., Cyclopaedia of Methodism. Embracing Sketches of its Rise, Progress, and Present Condition, With Biographical Notices and Numerous Illustrations. 4th rev. ed. Philadelphia, Louis H. Everts, 1881.
- Sites, S. Moore, Nathan Sites, An Epic of the East. New York, Fleming H. Revell Company, 1912.
- Smeltzer, Wallace Guy, Methodism on the Headwaters of the Ohio: The History of the Pittsburgh Conference of the Methodist Church. Nashville, The Parthenon Press, 1951.
- Soper, Julius, "Personal Reminiscences of By-Gone Days in Japan." Ms. in Library, Board of Missions.
- "The Way Opened." Ms. in Library, Board of Missions.
- Soper, Mary Frances, "A Budget of Old Memories." Typewritten ms. in Library, Board of Missions.
- "The First Methodist Parsonage in Tokyo, Japan." Tidings from Japan, 5 (1902), 3 (March).

- Southern Asia Jubilee, 1856-1906, South India Woman's Conference.* Madras, India, M. E. Press, n. d.
- Souvenir Book of the Golden Anniversary or Jubilee of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Mexico [1873-1923].* Library, Board of Missions.
- Spahr, Charles B., An Essay on The Present Distribution of Wealth in the United States. New York, Thomas Y. Crowell & Co., 1896.
- Speer, Robert E., George Bowen of Bombay, Missionary, Scholar, Mystic, Saint, A Memoir. N. p., 1938.
- Spencer, Robert S., Typhoon Days in Japan. New York, Friendship Press, 1934.
- Stackpole, Everett S., 4½ Years in the Italy Mission, A Criticism of Missionary Methods. Lewiston, Maine, printed at the Journal Office, 1894.
- Statistical Abstract of the United States.* Various numbers. Washington, Government Printing Office.
- Statistical View of the United States . . . 7th census.* Washington, B. Tucker, 1854.
- Statistical View of the Population of the United States, 1790-1830.* Washington, U. S. State Department, 1836.
- Stephenson, George M., A History of American Immigration, 1820-1924. Boston, Ginn and Co., 1926.
- The Religious Aspects of Swedish Immigration, A Study of Immigrant Churches. Minneapolis, The University of Minnesota Press, 1932.
- Stevens, Abel, A Compendious History of American Methodism. New York, Carlton & Porter, 1867.
- History of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States of America. 4 vols. New York, Carlton & Porter, 1864-67.
- Revivalism in America, Its Origin, Growth, and Decline. New York, Charles Scribner's Sons, 1944.
- Supplementary History of American Methodism: A Continuation of the Author's Abridged History of American Methodism. New York, Eaton & Mains, 1899.
- Stilla Stunder, Victor Witting, Ed. A Methodist monthly publication in Sweden.
- Stokes, Charles Davis, "History of Methodist Missions in Korea, 1885-1930." A thesis, Ph.D., Yale University, 1947.
- Strand, Algot E., Compiler and Ed., A History of the Swedish-Americans of Minnesota. 3 vols. Chicago, Lewis Publishing Company, 1910.
- Strobridge, G. E., Biography of the Rev. Daniel Parish Kidder, D.D., LL.D. New York, Hunt & Eaton, 1894.
- Strong, Josiah, The New Era or the Coming Kingdom. New York, The Baker and Taylor Co., 1893.
- Our Country: Its Possible Future and Its Present Crisis. New York, The Baker and Taylor Co., 1885.
- Stuntz, Homer C., South American Neighbors. New York, Methodist Book Concern, 1916.
- The Sun,* New York City, Nov. 29, 1903.
- Sunday School Journal.* New Series, I (1868), 2 (November).
- Sunday-School Union of The Methodist Episcopal Church, Annual Reports. Combined with reports of the Tract Society from 1872-93. Reports for 1845-95 (except 1866 and 1871) available in Drew University Library. Title varies: Annual Report or Yearbook.
- Swain, Clara A., A Glimpse of India, Being a collection of Extracts from the Letters of Dr. Clara A. Swain, First Medical Missionary to India of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church in America, edited anonymously. New York, James Pott and Company, 1909.
- Sweet, William Warren, The Methodist Episcopal Church and the Civil War. Cincinnati, Methodist Book Concern, 1912.
- "The Methodist Episcopal Church and Reconstruction." Transactions of the Illinois State Historical Society for the Year 1914.

- Methodism in American History. New York, Methodist Book Concern, 1933.
- Revivalism in America, Its Origin, Growth, and Decline. New York, Charles Scribner's Sons, 1944.
- Taylor, R. Whately Cooke, The Modern Factory System. London, Kegan Paul, Trench, Trubner & Co., Ltd., 1891.
- Taylor, William, Bishop Taylor's Quadrennial Report of Our Church Work in Africa. [To the General Conference of 1888.] Pamphlet. N. p., n. d.
- Bishop Taylor's Self-Supporting Missions in South Central Africa. Pamphlet. London, Hazell, Watson, & Viney, Ltd., 1885.
- The Flaming Torch in Darkest Africa. New York, Eaton & Mains, 1898.
- Four Years' Campaign In India. New York, Nelson & Phillips, 1875.
- Story of My Life, An Account of What I Have Thought and Said and Done in My Ministry of More Than Fifty-three Years in Christian Lands and Among the Heathen, Written by Myself. New York, Eaton & Mains, 1896.
- Ten Years of Self-Supporting Missions in India. New York, Phillips & Hunt, 1882.
- Tewksbury, Donald G., The Founding of American Colleges and Universities Before the Civil War, with Particular Reference to the Religious Influences Bearing Upon the College Movement. New York, Bureau of Publications, Teachers' College, Columbia University, 1932.
- Thoburn, J. M., India and Malaysia. New York, Hunt & Eaton, 1892.
- Life of Isabella Thoburn. New York, Eaton & Mains, 1903.
- My Missionary Apprenticeship. New York, Phillips & Hunt, 1884.
- Thomson, Edward, Our Oriental Missions. Vol. I, India and China. Vol. II, China and Bulgaria. Cincinnati, Hitchcock & Walden, 1871.
- Thomson, Edward, [Jr.], Life of Edward Thomson, D.D., LL.D., Late a Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Cincinnati, Cranston & Stowe, 1885.
- Thorkildsen, Johan, Den Norske Metodistkirkes Historie. Oslo, Norsk Forlagsselskab, 1926.
- Thwaites, Reuben Gold, Wisconsin, The Americanization of a French Settlement. Boston, Houghton Mifflin Company, 1908.
- Tipple, Ezra Squier, Ed., Drew Theological Seminary, 1867-1917, A Review of the First Half Century. New York, Methodist Book Concern, 1917.
- Tomkinson, Mrs. T. L., Twenty Years' History of the Woman's Home Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, 1880-1900. Cincinnati, The Woman's Home Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, 1903.
- Townsend, W. J., Workman, H. B., and Eayrs, George, Eds., A New History of Methodism. 2 vols. London, Hodder & Stoughton, 1909.
- Toynbee, Arnold, Lectures on the Industrial Revolution of the Eighteenth Century in England. Popular Addresses, Notes, and Other Fragments. New and cheaper ed. reprint, London, Longmans, Green and Co., Ltd., 1927.
- Tract, Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, 1878. Library, Board of Missions.
- Tract Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Annual Report, 1854. From 1872 through 1891, the Report was combined with that of the Sunday School Union, and the title ran: Year-Book of the Sunday-School Union, and of the Tract Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church . . . During 1892 and 1893 it appeared under Annual Report of the Sunday-School Union and of the Tract Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church . . . For 1894 and 1895 it was printed alone.
- The Tribune*, New York City, June 5, 1860.
- Tracy, Joseph, History of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions: Compiled chiefly from the Published and Unpublished Documents of the Board. 2nd ed. New York, M. W. Dodd, 1842.
- Tucker, William Jewett, My Generation, An Autobiographical Interpretation. Boston, Houghton Mifflin Company, 1919.

- Turner, Frederick J., "Dominant Forces in Western Life." The Atlantic Monthly: A Magazine of Literature, Science, Art, and Politics. LXXIX (1897), cccclxxiv (April).
- Tuttle, A. H., Mary Porter Gamewell And Her Story of the Siege in Peking. New York, Eaton & Mains, 1907.
- Tuttle, Charles R., An Illustrated History of the State of Wisconsin. Being a Complete Civil, Political, and Military History of the State . . . Boston, published by B. B. Russell, 1875.
- Tuttle, Robert G., "Seedtime and Harvest in India." World Outlook, XLIV (1954), 10 (October).
- Underwood, Horace Horton, Modern Education in Korea. New York, International Press, 1926.
- "A Union Theological Seminary." Pampa Breezes, Vol. 5 (1946), No. 4 (November). Printed in Buenos Aires.
- U. S. Bureau of the Census, A Century of Population Growth from the First Census of the United States to the Twelfth, 1790-1900. Washington, Government Printing Office, 1909.
- U. S. Census Reports. Washington, Government Printing Office, various dates.
- U. S. Immigration Commission, Abstracts of Reports of the Immigration Commission, with Conclusions and Recommendations and Views of the Minority. 2 vols. Washington, D.C., Government Printing Office, 1912.
- Vincent, John H., The Chautauqua Movement. Boston, Chautauqua Press, 1886.
- Vincent, Leon H., John Heyl Vincent, a Biographical Sketch. New York, The Macmillan Company, 1925.
- Valderrama, Pedro Flores, "History of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Mexico." Ms. in Methodist Files, Mexico, D. F.
- Walker, Arthur, Ed., From Cape Horn to Quito with the Bible, Andrew Murray Milne, General Agent of the American Bible Society for Argentina, Uruguay, Paraguay, Bolivia, Chili, Peru, and Ecuador: A very Partial Record of his Extensive Journeys and Labours in South America during his Ministry, 1864 to 1907. Rosario, Argentina, 1942.
- The War of the Rebellion: A Compilation of the Official Records of the Union and Confederate Armies*. Series I, Vol. XLVIII, in two parts. Washington, Government Printing Office, 1896.
- Ward, C. B., History of Twelve Years' Work in the Nizam's Dominions, 1879-1891. Bombay, printed at the Anglo-Vernacular Press and "Bombay Guardian" Printing Works, n. d.
-
- Our Work. Chicago, E. J. Decker Company, 1894.
- Wardle, Addie Grace, History of the Sunday School Movement in the Methodist Episcopal Church. New York, Methodist Book Concern, 1918.
- Waring, Edmund H., History of the Iowa Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church Including the Planting and Progress of the Church within its limits, from 1833 to 1909, inclusive. N. p., n. d.
- Warne, Francis Wesley, A Tribute to the Triumphant. New York, Methodist Book Concern, 1926.
- Warne, Frank Julian, The Immigrant Invasion. New York, Dodd, Mead and Company, 1913.
- Warner, Charles Dudley, Studies in the South and West with Comments on Canada. New York, Harper and Brothers, 1889.
- Warren, William F., True Theory of Missionary Work. Pamphlet. N. p., 1869.
- Waterhouse, Lelia H., "Memories of my Pioneer Missionary Work in Chile, South America." Ms. in Library, Board of Missions.
- Watts, George B., The Waldenses in the New World. Durham, North Carolina, Duke University Press, 1941.
- [Waugh, James W.], "Early Bareilly Mission History." Ms. in Library, Board of Missions.
- Waugh, Jennie Tinsley, "Memories of Early Days." Ms. in Library, Board of Missions.
- Weber, Adna Ferrin, The Growth of Cities in the Nineteenth Century, A Study in

- Statistics*. Columbia Studies in History, Economics, and Public Law. New York, 1899. "Webb Scrap Books." Vol. I. Library of Kansas State Historical Society.
- Weinberg, Albert K., Manifest Destiny, A Study of Nationalist Expansionism in American History. Baltimore, The Johns Hopkins Press, 1935.
- Wentworth, Erastus, "Mission Life." Isaac W. Wiley, late Bishop of the M. E. Church: A Monograph, Richard S. Rust, Ed. New York, Phillips & Hunt, 1885.
- Wesleyan Missionary Notices, Relating Principally to the Foreign Missions under the Direction of The Methodist Conference*. 7th Series, Vol. III, 1896.
- Western Christian Advocate*.
- Westin, Gunnar, George Scott. Hans Liv och Verksamhet. Vols. I and II. Stockholm, Diakonistyrelsens Boklag, 1928-1949.
- Whedon, Daniel D., Statements: Theological and Critical. Collected and edited by his son, J. S. Whedon, and his nephew, D. A. Whedon. New York, Phillips & Hunt, 1887.
- Wheeler, Mary Sparkes, First Decade of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, with Sketches of its Missionaries. New York, Phillips & Hunt, 1881.
- Wheeler, W. Reginald; McGregor, Robert Gardner; Gillmore, Maria McIlvaine; Reid, Ann Townsend—Members of a Commission Appointed to visit Chile and Brazil by the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A., and Speer, Robert E., Modern Missions in Chile and Brazil. Philadelphia, The Westminster Press, 1926.
- White, Moses C., "Manuscripts Relating to the Founding of Methodist Missions in Foochow, China." Collection in Library, Board of Missions.
- Whyman, Henry C., "The Conflict and Adjustment of Two Religious Cultures—The Swedish and the American (As found in the Swede's relation to American Methodism)." A thesis, Ph.D., New York University, 1937.
- Wilcox, Delos F., The American City: A Problem in Democracy. New York, The Macmillan Co., 1904.
- Wilder, Robert P., The Great Commission. London, Oliphant, 1936.
- Wiley, I. W., China and Japan: A Record of Observations made during a residence of several years in China, and a tour of official visitation to the missions of both countries in 1877-78. New York, Phillips & Hunt, 1879.
- Wilkie, Caroline [Buck], "Philo Melvin Buck, Called of God." Ms. in Library, Board of Missions.
- Willard, Frances E., The Autobiography of an American Woman: Glimpses of Fifty Years. Chicago, Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, 1892.
- [Willard], Josiah Flynt, Tramping With Tramps, Studies and Sketches of Vagabond Life. New York, The Century Co., 1899.
- Williams, Daniel Jenkins, One Hundred Years of Welsh Calvinistic Methodism in America. Philadelphia, The Westminster Press, 1937.
- Williams, James H. N., "The Methodist Episcopal Church." The History of Nevada, Sam P. Davis, Ed. Vol. I. N. p., The Elms Publishing Co. Inc., 1913.
- Williams, S. Wells, The Middle Kingdom: A Survey of the Geography, Government, Literature, Social Life, Arts and History of the Chinese Empire and Its Inhabitants. Rev. ed. 2 vols. New York, Charles Scribner's Sons, 1883.
- Winter, Hauser, "The Division in Missouri Methodism in 1845." Missouri Historical Review, XXXVII (1942), 1 (October), 7.
- Wisconsin State Historical Society, Report and Collections . . . for the Years 1857 and 1858.
- Witten, Robert R., Pioneer Methodism in Missouri and the Mission of Methodism; A Semi-centennial Sermon Delivered by the Rev. R. Witten before the Missouri Conference at its Session in St. Joseph, Missouri, October 7, 1906. Springfield, Mo., 1906.
- Witting, Victor, Minnen Fran mitt liv som Sjöman, Immigrant Och Predikant Samt en historisk afhandling af Metodismens . . . Worcester, Mass., Burbank & Co., 1902.
- Woodbury (Sumner), Helen L., History of Women in Industry in the United States.

- Vol. IX of Report on Condition of Woman and Child Wage-earners in the United States. Washington, Government Printing Office, 1910.
- Woman's Division of Christian Service of the Board of Missions and Church Extension of The Methodist Church, Annual Report (1950-51). These Reports are published annually under different thematic titles, but remain Annual Reports.
- Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Annual Reports. The First Annual Report (1870) through the Eighth (1877) are published in the June or July issue of Heathen Woman's Friend. Thereafter the Reports are printed as separate pamphlets and bound into volumes. Beginning in 1919 the Annual Report is called Year Book.
- Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Fifty-second Annual Report of the Cincinnati Branch . . . (1921). Cincinnati, The Methodist Book Concern Press, n. d.
- Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Minutes of the General Executive Committee. "Minutes" of first three annual meetings (1870-1872) in ms. book "Methodist Episcopal Church, Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, General Executive Committee Minutes, April, 1870, May, 1871, May, 1872" in Files, Woman's Division of Christian Service, Board of Missions of The Methodist Church. Minutes of the fourth (1873) through the eighth (1877) meetings are separate pamphlets bound into one volume. Minutes (1878-94) were published in Heathen Woman's Friend. Beginning with the twenty-sixth meeting, 1894-95, official Minutes were included in the volumes of Annual Reports.
- Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, "Minutes of the Reference Committee." 4 vols. Mss. in Files, Woman's Division of Christian Service, Board of Missions of The Methodist Church.
- Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the M. E. Church in America, Thirteenth Annual Report [1882] of the Work in India of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the M. E. Church in America. Lucknow, 1883.
- Woman's Home Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Annual Reports, Board of Managers. Files of the W. D. C. S., Board of Missions of The Methodist Church.
- Woman's Home Missionary Society, "Minutes, General Executive Board, 1880-1895." 4 vols. Ms. typescript, in care of Mrs. J. N. Rodeheaver, Winona Lake, Ind.
- Woman's Home Missions*. Began publication in 1884 as the monthly periodical of the Woman's Home Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church.
- The Work of the Tract Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, A Brief Historical Statement*. Pamphlet. (Circa 1904.)
- Worley, Harry Wescott, The Central Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, A Study in Ecclesiastical Adaptation, or A Contribution of the Mission Field to the Development of Church Organization. Foochow, The Christian Herald Mission Press, 1940.
- Wright, Carroll D., "The Growth and Purposes of Bureaus of Statistics of Labor." Journal of Social Science . . ., XXV (December, 1888).
-
- The Industrial Evolution of the United States*. New York, Charles Scribner's Sons, 1902.

INDEX

INDEX

A

- Abbott, Sibyl, 152
 Abe, S., 674
 Abernathy, F. L., 320-321
 Aboledo, Lino, 778, 818*n.*
 Abrams, Minnie F., 599-600, 602*n.*
 Achard, Clement, 990*n.*, 999*n.*, 1002
 Adams, G. H., 242-243
 Adams, John, 354
 Adams, John (President, U. S.), 34
 Adelaide Springer Osage Mission, 348-349
 Adriance, Jacob, 214-215
 Africa: explorations of Livingstone and others, 178, 892, 904, 906; slavery, 871, 875, 879, 890; primitive habits, 877, 890; polygamy in, 887, 889, 890, 903; problems of missions in, 894
 Africa Conference. See Liberia Conference.
 Africa Mission. See entries for "Boporo Mission," "Liberia Mission," and for Angola, Congo, Mozambique, and French Congo.
 African Methodist Episcopal Church, 312*n.*, 314
 African tribes, work among: Deys, 869, 872, 879; Vais, 869, 871, 872, 879, 883, 885*n.*, 887, 900, 901; Golas, 869, 871, 872, 873, 881, 883, 887, 888, 900, 901*n.*; Bassas, 869, 872, 878*n.*, 887, 900; Pessahs, 869, 878*n.*, 887, 888, 900, 901, 901*n.*; Queahs, 870, 872, 881, 883, 885*n.*, 887; Congos, 871, 875, 892; Krus, 871, 878*n.*, 881, 883, 885*n.*, 887*n.*, 890-891, 890*n.*, 896-899, 898*n.*, 900, 902, 923, 930; Grebos, 878*n.*, 883, 885*n.*, 895, 896, 900; Sinou, 883; Aneahs, 893*n.*; Half Cavally, 896; Bush Tribes, 896, 896*n.*, 898, 900; Ambundas, 912, 928; Zulus, 921
 Agassiz, Jean L. R., 76
 Agrelius, Carl P., 277, 279-280
 Aguilar, Francisco, 833, 836, 842
 Aguirre, Venancio, 783
 Aibara, Yeiken, 671*n.*, 680, 689*n.*
 Akers, L. Stella, 416*n.*
 Alaska, 36, 158
 Albright, William F. and Mrs., 818*n.* 1, 4
 Aldercrantz, Count, 967
 Alexander, R. P., 709
 Allan, Adrian, 818*n.*
 Allen, Belle J., 707*n.*, 723*n.*
 Allen, H. N., 744, 756
 Allen, Mabel, 395*n.*
 Allen, Ray and Mrs., 542*n.*, 586, 586*n.*
 Alliance Mission, 554
 Alling, Harriet S., 729*n.*, 730
 American and Foreign Christian Union: in South America, 806*n.*, 828, 829, 830, 833
 American Baptist Missionary Union. See "Baptist Church."
 American Bible Society: re domestic missions, 155-156, 244, 246*n.*; in China, 402; in Japan, 693*n.*; in South America, 761, 774, 779, 779*n.*, 783, 785, 824; in Mexico, 828, 864-865
 American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions: 140*n.*, 228, 295; in China, 365*n.*, 368*n.*, 369*n.*, 371, 380, 380*n.*, 383, 410*n.*, 425*n.*, 438*n.*; in India, 514, 517*n.*, 569*n.*, 651*n.*, 652; in Japan, 666, 667*n.*, 668, 699; in Bulgaria, 1018, 1018*n.*, 1019, 1019*n.*, 1022, 1023, 1029, 1035, 1037; in Zambezia, 921
 American Federation of Labor, 16
 American Reform Tract and Book Society, 347*n.*
 American Seamen's Friend Society, 792*n.*, 802
 American Society for the Promotion of Temperance, 54
 American Tract Society: in South America, 771*n.*, 782
 Ames, Edward R. (Bishop), 144, 208, 216, 238, 244, 302, 308, 319*n.*, 333, 762, 763, 1040
 Anderson, Colin, 358
 Anderson, Otto, 274
 Anderson, William, 974
 Andres, John, 765, 766*n.*
 Andrews, Edward G. (Bishop), 174, 174*n.* 1, 2; 175*n.*, 535, 605, 695, 699, 746*n.*, 749, 939, 940, 970, 1003, 1026
 Angola, missions in: Taylor's plan for, 895-905; missionaries, 895, 907, 912*n.*; Luanda, 895, 905-906, 907, 907*n.*, 908, 910, 927, 929, 929*n.*; area investigated by Taylor, 904-907; Dondo, 905, 907*n.*, 908-909, 913, 929*n.*; Nhang-a-Pepe, 905, 909,

- 909*n.*, 913; Malange, 905-906, 910-911, 913, 914, 925, 929*n.*; Pungo Andongo, 905, 909-910, 927; Cabinda, 907, 917, 917*n.*; Schools, 907, 908, 909, 910, 911, 913, 927; appointments (1885, 1886), 907*n.*; Quessua (Munhall Mission), 911; Canandua, 911; Quiongua (Ben Barrett), 911, 911*n.*; assets, 911-912; heroism of missionaries, 911*n.*, 912*n.*; Trust Fund, 912, 929; statistics (1895), 913; turned over to Missionary Society, 913; program in District, 928
- Anstey, L. H., 571
- Antes, H. R., 361
- Anthony, C. V., 298
- Appenzeller, Henry G. and Mrs.: 743, 744, 745, 746, 747, 748, 751, 752, 752*n.*, 753, 756; account of, 743*n.*
- Arancet, J. B., 780, 784, 785
- Argentina: friendly regime, 1851, 760; revolution, 1855, 761; liberalism develops, 777-778
- Argentina Mission (see also "South America Mission" entries for W.F.M.S. and other information): 155, 758, 759; re-establishment of work, 759-772; missions in Buenos Aires, 759-761, 764, 769-770, 774, 779-780, 783; self-support in, 760, 763-764, 768, 775, 776, 781-782; Rosario, 765, 769, 779; growth of, 765, 766, 776, 783-784, 786; Ragged School, 774, 777; District statistics (1893-1895), 820
- Armenian Church: in India and Malaya, 524, 657
- Arms, Goodsil F. and Mrs.: 794*n.*, 796, 799, 803-804, 805, 814, 816*n.*, 818, 818*n.*, 1, 2; 819, 826*n.*; account of, 804*n.*
- Armstrong, Andrew C., 78
- Armstrong, J. M., 344, 364
- Armstrong, William, 762
- Arnold, Ebenezer, 339-341
- Arnold, S. G., 326
- Arresen, Engebert, 936
- Arringdale, William H. and Mrs., 916*n.*, 920*n.*
- Arthur, Chester A. (President, U. S.), 328
- Ashcroft, F., 635*n.*
- Ashe, William W. and Mrs., 509*n.*, 611*n.*
- Ashley, Mr. and Mrs., 896*n.*, 903*n.*
- Associated Reformed Presbyterian Church: in Mexico, 829*n.*
- Asuka, Kenjiro, 671*n.*, 688, 689*n.*, 721
- Atkinson, Anna P., 674, 675
- Atkinson, Mary E., 707
- Atwater, Jane Isabel. See Mrs. Moses C. White.
- Avila, Ildefonso, 841
- Ayers, Harriet L., 857
- B
- Bacon, Harriet, 912*n.*
- Badley, Brenton H. and Mrs.: 190, 488*n.*, 497, 607, 623-624; account of, 623*n.*
- Baez, Victoriano D., 859
- Bagley, William, 327*n.*, 354
- Bagnall, Benjamin, 400, 401, 402, 422
- Bailey, George, 615
- Baker, Albert H. and Mrs., 164, 191, 562, 564-565, 571
- Baker, Osmon C. (Bishop) and Mrs., 141, 182, 266, 305-306, 665
- Balderston, Benjamin H., 588*n.*, 656, 658*n.*, 660*n.*
- Baldwin, Alice, 818*n.*
- Baldwin, John, 564
- Baldwin, Stephen L. and Mrs., 125*n.*, 157, 159, 164*n.*; work of, 379, 381, 384, 386, 389, 394*n.*, 445
- Baldwin, W. W., 253
- Ballagh, James, 666*n.*, 685, 685*n.*
- Ballou, S. S., 341-342
- Bambini, Crisanzio, 1046*n.*, 1047*n.*, 1050*n.*, 1057*n.*, 1058
- Banbury, James J., 406*n.*, 408
- Bancroft, Jane M., 603*n.*
- Band, the, decline of, 47
- Bandres, Antonio, 821
- Bangs, Nathan, 110*n.*, 176*n.*
- Bani, Vittorio, 1050*n.*, 1054, 1057*n.*
- Bannister, Edward, 235*n.*
- Baptist Church: 2*n.*, 50*n.*, 84, 135*n.*, 160*n.*, 218, 234, 246*n.*, 250*n.*, 327*n.*, 341*n.*; in India, 472*n.*, 524, 573*n.*, 574, 583*n.*; in Japan, 664*n.*, 667*n.*; in Mexico, 829*n.*; in Africa, 906
- Baptist Church (English) Missionary Society: in Africa, 906
- Barchwitz-Krauser, Oscar von and Mrs., 798, 802, 807, 810, 810*n.*, 1, 2
- Bard, Emma, 803*n.*
- Bare, Charles L. and Mrs., 607, 607*n.*, 609, 617, 644*n.*
- Barker, J. M., 848, 848*n.*, 850, 851
- Barnlund, Gustaf, 977
- Barnlund, Wilhelm, 977
- Barnum, Nelson, 331
- Barrow, La Clede and Mrs., 419*n.*, 420, 420*n.*
- Basle Missionary Society, 156
- Bastion, N. S.: administration of, 873-875, 880*n.*
- Batchelder, Hattie, 808
- Bateman, A. L. S., 259

- Bates, Elizabeth, 904*n*.
- Batstone, W. H. L., 545*n.*, 573
- Baucus, Georgiana, 717, 719, 720
- Baume, James and Mrs., 453, 460, 475*n.*, 488*n.*, 511*n.*, 618
- Baxter, J. M. and Mrs., 793, 818*n*.
- Beckwith, Frank T., 700
- Beebe, Robert C. and Mrs., 402*n.*, 403-404, 403*n.*, 405, 406
- Beccher, Henry Ward, 64, 347
- Beg, Hoosin and wife, 457*n*.
- Belgian Congo. See "Congo."
- Belknap, C. G., 327*n.*, 359
- Belknap, J. F. and Mrs., 695, 705*n*.
- Bell, Miss H. M., 569*n*.
- Bender, Elizabeth R., 709
- Benedict, George B. and Mrs., 804*n.*, 819
- Bengal Conference: Sunday schools, 190-191; formed, 543, 546, 585-586, 585*n.*; work in Districts: Calcutta, 586, 588-589, Ajmer, 586, 589-591, Mussooree, 586, 591-592, Burma, 586, 592-594, Tirhut, 586, 592; difficulties, 586-587; Industrial Home, 587; Methodist Brotherhood, 560, 587-588; schools, 134, 589-594; women's work, 598
- Benge, James and Mrs., 816*n.*, 818*n*. 1, 2
- Bengel, Margaret, 747*n.*, 750
- Benham, John B.: 876*n.*; administration of, 870-872
- Benn, Rachel, 419*n*.
- Bennett, Jesse L., 259
- Benson, Cora B., 797, 798-799
- Benson, Henry C., 235-236, 235*n*.
- Benton, Emma J., 674, 710
- Benton, S. O., 263
- Benton, W. G., 398, 399
- Berg, Andrew H., 963, 970*n*.
- Bergner, Peter, 271-272
- Bethany Association (see also under "Deaconess Movement"), 603*n*.
- Bethel Ship Mission, 125*n.*, 221-222, 271*n.*, 272-274, 933, 956, 957
- Beutelspacher, Karl, 800, 818*n*.
- Beveridge, Albert J., 38
- Beveridge, John, 767
- Beynon, Ann, 904*n*.
- Bhosle, Sakharam, 594*n*.
- Bible Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, 155
- Bible Women. See under various W. F. M. S. and mission entries.
- Bing, Anna Van Zandt, 723*n*.
- Binkley, Clara, 897*n.*, 904*n*.
- Binkley, Samuel L. and Mrs., 381
- Birchard, J. L., 327*n*.
- Bird, Wellington, 327*n*.
- Birdsall, Charles W. and Mrs., 797, 806, 807
- Birdsall, Lillie, 538*n*.
- Bishop, Charles: 672*n.*, 680, 681, 689*n.*, 702-703, 722, 723; account of, 680*n*.
- Bishop, Mrs. Charles (see also Olive Whiting), 722
- Bishop, Horace S., 241
- Bishops, Official Body of: on secular changes, 39, 40, 46; on lay delegation, 45; on decline of Class meetings, 47; on expensive church edifices, 49; on use of liquor, 54, 57; on divorce, 58; on neglect of the poor, 62-63; on labor's organizing, 63-64; on doctrinal conformity, 73; on social evils, 85-86; on spiritual revitalization, 86; urge educational board, 105; loss of power to G. M. C., 117; appoint Corresponding Secretaries of M. S., 122*n.*; role and functions of, 135*n.*; on unauthorized missionary societies, 134*n.*; supervise foreign missions, 171; preside in foreign missions, 172-174; opposed to episcopal residence abroad, 174; favor visitations of foreign missions, 175; disfavor missionary episcopacy, 177-178, 894*n.*; and status of Missionary Bishops, 179; on missionary outreach, 184-185; on occupancy of Kansas-Nebraska territory, 207-208; organize Conferences in South, 301-302, 306, 309; recommend increased recognition for Negroes, 303; handling of Taylor work, 809-810, 812
- Bismarck, Otto von, 994*n.*, 999-1000
- Black, Lillian, 603
- Blackburn, Kate B.: 1035, 1037; account of, 1035*n*.
- Blackledge, James: 680, 689*n.*, 704; account of, 680*n*.
- Blackmar, Louisa E., 602
- Blackmore, Sophia: 601, 654, 654*n.*, 657, 659, 660; account of, 601*n*.
- Blackstock, Ella A., 709
- Blackstock, John and Mrs., 533*n*. 1, 2; 535*n.*, 549, 611*n*.
- Blackstone, William E. and Mrs., 604, 628, 745
- Blain, J. D., 235
- Blair, Kate A., 603
- Blake, Almira, 468*n.*, 508
- Blaker, George, 331
- Blanco, Ramon, 818*n*.
- Bland, Adam and Mrs., 235, 259
- Blewitt, Frank J. and Mrs., 542*n.*, 560, 569, 580, 586*n.*, 632*n*.
- Blunt, Clare, 808

- Board of Church Extension of the M.E. Church, 137-138, 245*n.*, 322
- Board of Education of the M.E. Church, 105-108
- Boatswain, Jimmy (King), 893
- Boetzinger, Bruno, 264
- Boggs, William G., 272
- Bohemians, domestic mission to, 297-298
- Bolivia: entry, 775, 785; preaching prohibited, 778; Taylor enters Bolivia, 794-795; included in Peru District, 822
- Bollinger, G. H., 266
- Bolst, Maria, 452
- Bombay Conference: organized, 544-545, 594; arrival of missionaries, 545, 594*n.* 1, 2; work in Districts: Bombay, 595-596, Central Provinces, 596, Sind, 596-597; schools, 595-596
- Bon, Juan Canut de: 801, 804, 805, 816*n.*, 818*n.*; account of, 801*n.*
- Bonafield, Julia, 391*n.*
- Bond, George A. and Mrs., 542*n.*, 653
- Bond, Thomas E., 44*n.*, 52, 61, 876*n.*
- Bonin Islands, 35
- Bonn, Frederick, 267
- Bonner, J. W., 903*n.*
- Booth, William, 88, 348
- Boporo Mission, Africa: 930; contemplated, 886-887; undertaken, 892-894
- Borella, Christian A., 912*n.*
- Borelli, Emilio, 1047*n.*, 1050*n.*, 1058
- Borelli, Enrico, 1045, 1046*n.*, 1047*n.*, 1058
- Borneo, 158, 656, 657
- Borton, Francis S., 860
- Bose, Ram Chandler, 623
- Bosworth, Sarah, 394*n.*
- Bourne, F. S. A., 425*n.*
- Bovard, Charles L., 239
- Bovard, George F., 243
- Bovard, Melville Young: 537*n.*; as Superintendent, Boporo Mission, 893-894
- Bowen, Elias, 70-71
- Bowen, George: 487, 514-515, 517-518, 519, 520, 528*n.* 1, 2; 529, 533*n.*, 535*n.*, 539, 546-547, 548; account of, 517*n.*
- Bowen, Mary E., 790*n.*
- Bowers, Rose, 904*n.*
- Bowman, Thomas (Bishop), 121*n.*, 123, 174, 174*n.* 1, 2; 362, 422, 808*n.*, 950
- Bowser, Wellington and Mrs., 537*n.*
- Boyce, Martha M., 803
- Boyd, Martha Chesterton, 394*n.*
- Boynton, C. B., 347*n.*
- Bracchetto, Bernardo, 1047*n.*, 1050*n.*, 1057*n.*
- Brakeman, N. L., 302*n.*
- Brannen, Effie H., 907*n.*
- Brasher, J. J., 308
- Bray, Mary, 818*n.*
- Brazil Mission (see also "South America Mission"): 156, 758, 774; growth of, 777, 785, 808; religious freedom, 780; Brazil District formed, 816; part of work in Uruguay District, 821; Epworth League in, 822; District statistics (1883-95), 822
- Brazza, Count de, 906
- Bredberg, Jacob, 274, 283
- Breece, A. E., 656*n.* 1, 2
- Breiter, H. Jakob, 999*n.*, 1011
- Brewer, H. B., 228
- Brewster, William N. and Mrs., 391*n.*, 392, 588*n.*, 653, 654
- Bridger, E. A., 350
- Briggs, Charles A., 81*n.*
- Briggs, Martin C., 10, 235*n.*
- Briggs, William S., 916*n.*, 920*n.*
- Brimson, James G., 920*n.*
- British and Foreign Bible Society: 783; in Mexico, 842, 857, 864-865; and Bulgarian translation of Bible, 1023
- Brockway, W. H., 333
- Brooks, David, 277
- Brown, Caroline M., 879, 889*n.*
- Brown, Florence M. (see also Mrs. Wilson E. Manly): 428-429
- Brown, Frederick and Mrs., 416*n.*, 418
- Brown, John D. and Mrs., 164*n.*, 455*n.*, 459, 460, 475*n.*, 484, 488*n.*
- Brown, Maria Kane (see also Mrs. George R. Davis): 412; 444; account of, 412*n.*
- Brown, S. R., 669*n.*, 685
- Brown, W. D., 540*n.*
- Bruere, William W. and Mrs., 538*n.*, 547, 554, 594*n.*, 598
- Bruns, Gerhardt, 998*n.*, 999*n.*, 1011*n.*
- Brunson, Alfred, 52, 68, 73, 198-199
- Brush, Laura, 872, 872*n.*, 889*n.*
- Bryan, Mary, 509*n.*
- Buchanan, James (President, U. S.), 35
- Buchtel, Henry A. and Mrs., 1025, 1025*n.*
- Buck, Philo Melvin and Mrs.: 488*n.*, 509*n.*, 580, 581, 588*n.*, 607, 620-621, 632*n.*, 637-639; account of, 620*n.*
- Buckhalter, Jennie E., 917, 920*n.*
- Buckley, James M., 76, 543, 543*n.*
- Budden, Annie M., 509*n.*, 604, 619
- Buddhism: in Japan, 691, 734
- Buenos Aires Mission. See "Argentina Mission."
- Bulgaria: geographical bounds (1857), 1018*n.*; ecclesiastical controversy in, 1021, 1021*n.*, 1025, 1025*n.*; Russo-Turkish war, 1027; government action against mission

- schools, 1030, 1030*n.*; war with Serbia, 1031
- Bulgaria Mission and Mission Conference: 155, 173, 933*n.*; episcopal visitations of, 174*n.* 1, 2; 175*n.* 1, 2; 1023-1024; schools, 184, 184*n.*, 1020, 1024, 1026, 1028-1037; account of, 1018-1040; establishment of, 1018-1022; missionaries appointed, 1018, 1019, 1024, 1025, 1026, 1028, 1034, 1036; dissension in, 1019*n.*, 1021-1022; difficulties, 1021, 1022-1024, 1027, 1029-1030, 1031-1033, 1037, 1038-1040; Zornitza published, 1023; appointments, (1876) 1026, (1881) 1028*n.*, (1885) 1031*n.*; Literary and Theological Institute, 1028-1029, 1030, 1032, 1033, 1035, 1036; summary of work, 1029; mission press begun, 1030; Districts, (1885) 1031, (1895), 1037; Mission Conference organized, 1034-1035; Sofia opened, 1035; statistics, (1886) 1032, (1895) 1037; evaluation of, 1037-1040
- W. F. M. S.: Bible women, 1025, 1026-1027; schools, 1031, 1033, 1037; Lovech Girls' School, 1028, 1030, 1030*n.*, 1031, 1032, 1033, 1034, 1037; arrival of missionaries, 1031, 1032, 1035
- Bundy, S. G., 348
- Bunker, Dalzell A. and Mrs., 745*n.*, 755*n.*
- Burchard, J. L., 358, 359-360
- Bureau of Indian and Frontier Work, 348, 350-351, 358
- Burling, Lancaster C. and Mrs., 908, 920*n.*, 929*n.*
- Burns, David, 196
- Burns, Francis (Bishop): 125*n.*, 156, 176-177, 873, 876; account of, 176*n.*, 880*n.*; important leader in Liberia, 878; elected Bishop of Liberia, 880; administration and evaluation of, 881-883
- Burns, W. F., 882
- Burr, Bradley L. and Mrs., 916*n.*, 918, 920*n.*
- Burt, William: 1058, 1059; arrival in Italy, 1050; charged with maladministration, 1050; account of, 1050*n.*; administration of, 1051-1057
- Busby, Edward S., 542*n.*, 579, 586*n.*, 632*n.*
- Bushnell, Horace: 90; account of, 93*n.*
- Bushnell, Kate C., 401
- Busteed, John B., 753, 753*n.*
- Butcher, Annie. See Mrs. George C. Hewes.
- Butcher, John C. and Mrs., 611*n.*, 616, 630
- Butler, Clementina Rowe (Mrs. William): 140, 142, 142*n.*, 449, 452, 467-468; account of, 140*n.*
- Butler, Edward C., 835
- Butler, John W., 155, 834, 841, 848, 848*n.*, 849, 850, 854*n.*, 858
- Butler, John William (Quaker), 857
- Butler, William: 140, 140*n.*, 149*n.*, 158, 161, 163, 164*n.*, 189; account of, 449*n.*; as Superintendent, India Mission, 449-474, 475, 475*n.*, 489, 492, 500, 608, 640; as Superintendent, Mexico Mission, 828-848, 863, 868
- Butterfield, H. W. and Mrs. 590-591, 594*n.*
- Buttrick, John B. and Mrs., 545*n.*, 564
- Buttz, Henry A., 81
- Byers, William P. and Mrs., 542*n.*, 561, 586*n.*, 588

C

- Cadman, S. Parkes, 67
- Cady, H. Olin and Mrs., 425, 426, 428, 429*n.*, 430
- Calabrese, Vito L., 296
- Calvinistic Methodist Church: among Welsh, 284-285, 284*n.*
- Camp Meetings, 71, 91-92, 277, 282, 340
- Campbell, Buel O. and Mrs., 804*n.*, 818*n.*
- Campbell, Letitia A.: 412; account of, 412*n.*
- Campello, Monsignor, 1047-1048
- Cartright, Harry L. and Mrs., 427*n.*, 428, 429*n.*, 430
- Capellini, Luigi, 1045, 1046*n.*
- Caporali, Enrico, 1045, 1046*n.*, 1047*n.*
- Carboneri, Giacomo, 1047*n.*, 1050*n.*
- Cardenas, Benigno, 237
- Carhart, L. H., 317
- Carleton, Mary E., 385, 407*n.*
- Carley, Mrs. E. M., 288
- Carlson, Lena, 904*n.*
- Carlsson, Bengt A., 963, 968*n.*, 970*n.*, 972, 977-979
- Carlsson, Carl P., 970*n.*, 974
- Carlsson, Erik, 962
- Carlton, Thomas, 121*n.*
- Carrero, Eduardo, 862
- Carroll, G. O., 542*n.*
- Carroll, Mary E., 599-600, 602*n.*
- Carroll, William A. and Mrs., 542*n.*, 586, 586*n.*
- Carrow, Goldsmith D. and Mrs.: 761; administration of, 761-763, 825
- Carstensen, N. F., 949, 950
- Carter, Robert E. and Mrs., 537*n.*, 567, 569, 583
- Carter, Thomas, 262, 762, 764-765, 766*n.*, 830, 833
- Carter, Thomas C., 400, 400*n.*
- Cartwright, I. Chester and Mrs., 859
- Cartwright, Peter, 42

- Carver, Marcus E., 808
 Carver, Margaret. See Margaret Carver Ernsberger.
 Cary, Mary F., 509*n*.
 Case, I. B. and Mrs., 912*n*.
 Case, William, 331, 364
 Casson, Herbert N., 64
 Cather, A., 253
 Catley, E. E., 542*n*.
 Caulkins, Wilford, 323
 Cavour, Prime Minister of Sardinia, 1041
 Cawdell, J. A., 453*n*, 459, 476, 483, 491, 511*n*.
 Cederholm, A., 936, 960-961
 Central China Mission (see also "China Mission"): 158; medical work of, 134, 398, 403-404; literature distribution, 188; opened unofficially, 382; officially established, 396; beginnings of, 396-397; arrival of missionaries, 396, 397, 398, 400, 402, 402*n*, 406, 406*n*, 407, 407*n*; account of, 396-410; health problems in, 397, 399, 401, 405; chief centers of work, 398-399; statistics, 398, 399, 408; educational activities, 400, 401, 408-409; expansion of work, 400-401, 403, 404-405; internal problems of, 405-406; work in Districts (1887-95), 407-410; difficulties of, 409-410; use of preaching, 410
 ——— Schools (see also under W. F. M. S. entry): Kiukiang Fowler Institute, 401, 402, 407; Girls' Boarding School, Wuhu, 403; Chinking Institute, 409; Boys' Boarding School, Wuhu, 409; Nanking University, 410
 ——— W. F. M. S.: arrival of missionaries, 397, 401, 402, 406, 406*n*, 407*n*; Bible women's program, 401; medical work of, 401, 408, 409; educational activities, 408, 409; evangelism of, 408-409; schools: Kiukiang Girls' Boarding School, 397, 402, Nanking Girls' Boarding School, 410
 Central Conferences: provided for, by General Conference, 170-171; India, 546, 586, 594*n*, 643, 653; provision for three Conferences, 543; India and Malaysia, 170-171, 175, 661-663
 Central Council of Europe, 1059-1060
 Chaffee, J. F., 202*n*.
 Challis, Dewitt C. and Mrs.: 1026, 1026*n*, 1031*n*, 1035, 1035*n*; administration of, 1027-1033; death of wife, 1027*n*.
 Challis, Mrs. Irene L. Shepard (2nd wife Dewitt C. Challis), 1027*n*.
 Challman, Peter: 276; account of, 276*n*.
 Chamberlain, N. A., 254
 Chan Hon-fan, 289
 Chandler, D. W. and Mrs., 162, 384, 388
 Chandler, I. L., 315
 Chandler, John, 275
 Chapin, Jennie M., 787-790
 Chaplains, Methodist, appointed, 54*n*, 82
 Chappell, Benjamin: 679*n*, 698*n*, 708; account of, 708*n*.
 Charles Albert, King of Sardinia, 1041
 Charn, Ambica. See Ambica Charn Paul.
 Chatelaine, Heli, 907*n*.
 Chatterton, Miss, 571*n*.
 Chattin, W. C., 353
 Chautauqua, 77, 98-99
 Chavez, Jose, 858
 Cheah Teck Soon, 657
 Cheney, N. G., 618
 Cherrington, Fletcher B. and Mrs., 488*n*.
 Chew, Benjamin J. and Mrs., 587-588, 588*n*.
 Child Nurture. See listings under "Methodist Episcopal Church."
 Children's Day, 106-107
 Chile: officials welcome Taylor work, 796; war with Peru, 799; liberal charter, 813-814
 Chile Mission (see also "South America Mission" entries for W. F. M. S. and other information): 155, 190; visited, 776, 779; Taylor enters, 794-796; first purchase of land, 801; Chile District formed, 816; set apart as self-support mission, 817-818; District statistics (1893-95), 823-824
 ——— Schools: Concepcion College and Colegio Americano founded, 803-804, 826-827; Santiago College, 805-806, 817
 China: emigrants of and treatment, 9-10; Burlingame Treaty, 10; world trade forced upon, 34; Wanghia Treaty, 34; concern for, as mission field, 114-115, 156; Christian mission background in, 369*n*; Treaties of Tientsin, 396; Chungking riots, 424-425; reacts to American treatment of emigrants, 425; integrity of, in redressing wrongs, 425, 425*n*, 429, 435; Szechwan riots, 429; Opium War, 432; reasons for anti-foreignism, 432; infanticide in, 444-445; status of women, 445-446
 China Inland Mission, 400-401
 China Mission (see also under Foochow, Central, North China, and West China entries): 107, 130-131, 155, 156, 188-189; founding, 114-115, 131; beneficences to, 133-134; shortage of men, 157; criticism of policy in, 158; deficiencies in policy

- of, 158, 436-437; Methodist forms transplanted in, 159; self-support in, 160-161; episcopal visitations of, 173*n.*, 174*n.* 1, 2; 175*n.* 1, 2; Sites' call to field, 182, 182*n.*; need for women's schools, 188; early medical work in, 192; arrival of first missionaries, 367, 368; statistics, 430; evaluation of, 430-448; anti-foreignism retards progress, 432-433; persecution of, 433-434; handicaps of itinerancy, 437; difficulties, 438, 439-440; converts among all classes, 440-441; effect of Christianity upon family life, 441-442; training of leaders, 442; Christian attitude toward status of women, 446-447; Methodist Church rooted, 447-448
- Chinda, Suteki: 714; account of, 714*n.*
- Chinese, domestic missions to: inauguration of, California, 286-287; Chinese Mission House, 287, 287*n.*, 290; supported by women's groups, 287, 289; missionaries to, 287, 289; in New York City, 290, 290*n.*: statistics (1895), 290*n.*; criticism of, 291, 292
- Chiujo, Nagano, 703, 725
- Chivington, John M., 214-215, 344
- Chow Loke-chee, 292
- Christensen, Christine. See Mrs. William W. Ashe.
- Christensen, J. J.: 950*n.*; administration of, 953, 955
- Christian, Christopher W., 487, 528*n.* 1, 2; 533*n.*, 535*n.*, 577
- Christian Advocate*, regional family begun, 111
- Christian Endeavor Society: 102, 104*n.*; in India, 579-580
- Christian Labor Union of Boston, 64
- Christian Social Union, 84
- Christian Union Church in America, 327*n.*
- Christian Villages. See "Wesleypur."
- Christianity, Mary, 509*n.*, 615
- Church Association for the Advancement of the Interests of Labor, 84
- Church Extension Society, 135-137
- Church Lyceums, 103
- Church of England. See "Church Missionary Society" and "Society for the Propagation of the Gospel."
- Church of Jesus (Mexico), 828, 833, 835, 836
- Church of Scotland: in India, 524
- Church Missionary Society of the Church of England: in India, 160*n.*, 524, 530, 561; in China, 368, 380*n.*, 391*n.*, 410*n.*, 438*n.*; in Japan, 664*n.*, 667*n.*, 681*n.*
- City Evangelization Union, 67-68, 226
- City Missions: 67-68, 82; of W. H. M. S., 153, 223; Bethels, 221-222; Boston, 222, 225; New York, 222-223, 224; Chicago, 223, 224-225; Cleveland, 225-226
- Clafin, Charles and Mrs., 916*n.*, 920*n.*
- Clafin, Edward E. and Mrs., 916*n.*, 920*n.*
- Clancy, Charlotte Fleming (2nd wife William Rockwell Clancy), 607*n.*
- Clancy, William Rockwell and Mrs.: 183, 574, 575, 577, 588*n.*, 607, 607*n.*, 623, 623*n.*, 635; account of, 183*n.*
- Clark, Mrs. A. R., 151*n.*
- Clark, Davis W. (Bishop) and Mrs., 149, 151*n.*, 254, 256*n.*, 306, 307, 308, 322, 768; account of, 305*n.*
- Clark, Francis E., 102
- Clark, George Washington, 364
- Clark, John, 330-331, 336, 343, 364
- Clark, Laban, 192
- Clark, N. Walling: 1055-1056; account of, 1055*n.*
- Clark, William R., 59-60
- Clark, William S., 684, 684*n.*
- Clarke, J. E., 903*n.*
- Clarke, William E. L. and Mrs., 542*n.*, 551, 594, 594*n.*
- Class Meetings, decline of, 47
- Clegg, Maria, 360-361
- Clemens, Mrs. E. M. J., 788
- Cleveland, Grover (President, U. S.), 37
- Cleveland, Joseph G. and Mrs., 694, 705, 707, 713, 718, 733, 736-737
- Clifton, T. A., 611*n.*
- Cline, W. H., 213, 320
- Close, Benjamin, 201
- Cobb, George T., 272
- Cocagne, John B., 262, 263
- Colder, James and Mrs., 374, 376
- Colleges, Methodist. See under separate mission entries.
- Collier, Clara, 407*n.*, 408, 429*n.*
- Collier, Edith, 797, 799
- Collier, John W. and Mrs., 797, 799, 801, 810*n.* 1, 2
- Collins, Judson D.: 163, 185, 189, 190; work of, 367-375, 383; account of, 374*n.*
- Collins, M. D., 920*n.*
- Collins, Susan, 916*n.*, 920*n.*
- Colombia (see also "South America Mission"): visited, 776
- Comfort, George, 256
- Commuck, Thomas, 337
- Compton, Harry B. and Mrs., 800, 801-802, 805, 816*n.*, 818*n.*
- Conference Missions, Domestic: Societies, 120*n.*; Rock River, 197-198; Illinois, 197; Southern Illinois, 198, 198*n.*; Peoria

- (Central Illinois), 198, 198*n.*; Wisconsin, 198-200; West Wisconsin, 200; Northwest Wisconsin, 200; Minnesota, 200-202; Northern Minnesota, 202; Iowa, 203, 207; Western Iowa, 203-204, 208; Northwest Iowa, 204; Missouri, 204-206, 208, 213; St. Louis Conference, 205-207; Arkansas, 206*n.*; Michigan, 207; Detroit, 207; Kansas-Nebraska, 208-209, 213; Nebraska, 209; North Nebraska, 209-210; Northwest Nebraska, 210; Kansas, 210-213; South Kansas, 212-213; Southwest Kansas, 212-213; Northwest Kansas, 212; Rocky Mountain, 214-216; Colorado, 216-217; older Conferences, 217-221; city missions, 221-226; missionaries connected with, 198-202, 202*n.*, 204, 207, 208, 211, 213, 214, 215; appropriations for, 301
- Conference of Southern Local Preachers, 302-303
- Condon, E. H., 529-530
- Congo, missions in (see also "French Congo"): Luluabourg, 906, 907, 914, 915, 916*n.*, 918, 919; Kimpoko, 906-907, 913, 914-915, 916*n.*, 918, 919; Upper Congo District, 907; Boma, 914, 919, 920; Vivi, 915, 916, 916*n.*, 917*n.*, 919, 920, 925, 927; Isangila, 915, 916*n.*, 917*n.*, 920; Vumtomba Vivi, 915, 916*n.*, 917*n.*; Sadi Kabanza, 915, 916*n.*, 917*n.*; Matamba, 915, 916*n.*, 917*n.*; Banana, 915, 916, 917*n.*, 919; Natumba, 915, 916*n.*, 919, 920; Manyanga, 915, 919; Matadi, 916, 919, 920; appointments (1888), 916*n.*; missionaries, 916*n.*, 917, 920, 920*n.*; Taylor method, 917; schools, 919; Mangila, 919; Brooks, 919; field turned over to Missionary Society, 920; statistics, Congo District (1896, 1897), 920, 920*n.*; Bishop Hartzell's report on, 920; Brooks No. 2, 926; general problems, 927, 930
- Congregational Church: 2*n.*, 84, 93, 135*n.*, 139-140, 211, 226, 234, 246*n.*, 250*n.*, 287*n.*, 327*n.*; in India, 524; in Japan, 666*n.*, 691, 737
- Conklin, Charles G. and Mrs., 155, 586*n.*, 591, 594, 602*n.*
- Constantine, Trico, 1031, 1031*n.*, 1032, 1035, 1035*n.*, 1037
- Cook, Albert E., 545*n.*, 566, 573
- Cook, Albert J., 397, 398
- Cook, A. S., 355
- Cook, Joseph, 699*n.*, 726
- Cooke, Charles P., 241
- Cool, P. Y., 236
- Coombs, Lucinda (see also under Mrs. Andrew Stritmatter), 398, 414
- Cooper, Ezekiel, 110*n.*
- Cooper, J. H. and Mrs., 907*n.*
- Cooper, James W., 901
- Cooper, W. H., 830, 833, 840
- Copeland, C. E., 656*n.* 1, 2; 657
- Copp, Richard, 806
- Copway, George, 364
- Corbin, Josephine, 818*n.*
- Cordova, Filipe N., 837, 843-845, 848*n.*, 852-853, 854*n.*
- Core, Lewis A. and Mrs., 588*n.*, 600, 602*n.*
- Corey, Catherine, 385
- Cornelius, Thomas, 364
- Cornelius, Y., 588*n.*, 632*n.*
- Correa, Juan C., 773, 774, 776, 778, 818*n.*
- Correll, Irvin H. and Mrs.: work of, 667, 667*n.*, 670-681, 689*n.*, 704, 710, 711, 724, 725, 725*n.*, 726, 732, 736; account of, 672*n.*
- Cory, J. B., 225
- Costa Rica, 806-807
- Count, Elmer E., 1054, 1055
- Cowles, John Phelps, 385
- Cox, G. F., 876
- Craig, Frances, 602*n.*
- Craig, Robert H., 586, 586*n.*
- Cramer, F., 1000
- Cramer, M. J., 949, 950
- Crandon, Mrs. E. P., 1049
- Crane, Horace A., 594, 594*n.*, 595
- Cranston, Earl, 121*n.*, 1032
- Crary, B. F., 216
- Craven, Thomas and Mrs., 488*n.*, 490
- Craver, Samuel P. and Mrs.: 819; Mexico, 842-843, 845*n.*, 848*n.*, 852, 853, 854*n.*, 855, 856-857, 861, 862*n.*
- Creamer, Alfred G., 542*n.*, 586, 586*n.*
- Crews, George B. and Mrs., 416*n.*, 423, 425
- Critchlow, Thomas, 907*n.*
- Crooks, George R., 52, 53*n.*
- Crosthwaite, Isabella, 419*n.*
- Croucher, Miranda, 419*n.*
- Cruciani, Federico, 1050*n.*, 1057*n.*
- Culshaw, Joseph, 588*n.*
- Culver, Mrs. C. V., 350*n.*
- Cummings, Charles, 884*n.*, 887*n.*, 888
- Cummings, L. Fannie, 908
- Cunningham, Edward and Mrs., 488*n.*
- Curnow, James D., 427*n.*
- Currier, Edwin P., 804*n.*
- Curry, Daniel: 74, 80, 91, 169, 185, 534, 894*n.*, 925, 1032; account of, 80*n.*
- Curtis, William F. G., 528*n.*, 533*n.*, 535*n.*, 556, 566, 574
- Curtis, Mabel E., 818*n.*
- Curtiss, William and Mrs., 416*n.*, 420

- Curts, Kate O., 509*n*.
 Cushman, Clara M.: 413; account of, 413*n*.
 Custer, General George A., 252
 Cutler, J. S., 916*n*., 920*n*.
 Cutler, Mary M.: 754; account of, 754*n*.
 Cutting, H. A., 627
 Cydwalader, D., 285*n*.
- D
- Daily, Rebecca B., 602*n*.
 Daily, W. C., 302*n*., 305*n*.
 Dale, Mrs. James, 151*n*.
 Damon, W. C., 244
 Danforth, Mary A., 727, 728, 729*n*.
 Daniel, Henry Martyn: 475; account of, 475*n*.
 Daniel, John 235
 Dardi, Felice, 1050*n*., 1057*n*.
 Dart, Jennie M., 509*n*.
 Darwinism, 76, 77
 Das, S. N., 542*n*., 561, 586*n*.
 Dashiell, Robert L.: 126, 129, 315, 846-847; account of, 126*n*.
 Date, Henry, 636
 Davenport, Clarence L. and Mrs.: 895*n*., 908-909, 912
 Davidson, W. C., 671*n*., 682, 683, 686, 687, 694, 726
 Davidson, William Henry, 327*n*.
 Davis, Anna L., 407*n*.
 Davis, Franklin G., 533*n*. 1, 2; 535*n*., 562, 566
 Davis, George R. and Mrs., 186, 411, 412, 412*n*., 416, 419, 437
 Davis, George S.: 1035*n*.; administration of, 1034-1037; account of, 1034*n*.
 Davis, Hattie E., 416
 Davis, J. P., 302*n*.
 Davis, Mrs. John, 151*n*.
 Davison, John C. and Mrs.: 667, 667*n*., 687, 688, 689*n*., 701, 709, 710, 722, 723; account of, 687*n*.
 Day, E. H., 207, 348
 Day, Emily, 818*n*.
 Day, Martha, 602*n*. 1, 2
 Deaconess Movement: 153; in China, 429; in India and Malaysia, 571*n*., 575, 593, 597, 598, 600, 604-605, 628, 658, 659, 660; before General Conference, 602-603; in Germany, 1004
 Deal, William Grove, 234
 Dean, Georgiana, 904*n*.
 Dease, Stephen S. and Mrs., 607, 607*n*., 613, 619
 Deatker, John F., 588*n*., 591, 658*n*.
 Deering, William, 224-225
 DeForest, John H., 699
 DeForrest, James A., 302*n*., 306
 Delamater, Clayton E., 545*n*., 548, 553, 594*n*., 595
 De Line, Sarah M., 547, 599-600, 602*n*., 625
 Denmark Mission: 107, 124, 155; beneficences to, 133*n*.; episcopal visitations of, 172-173, 173*n*., 174*n*. 1, 2; 175*n*. 1, 2; account of, 946-955; establishment of, 946-948; religious toleration, 946, 949; missionaries appointed, 946-947, 948, 951; appropriations for, 947; difficulties, 947, 948, 949, 950, 951, 952-953; made separate mission, 948; recognized by State, 949, 952; appointments, (1880) 950, 950*n*., (1895) 954*n*.; schools, 951, 952, 953; theological institute, 953; growth of, 953, 954-955; Epworth League in, 954; Book Concern in, 954, 954*n*.; evaluation of, 955
 Denning, John O., 594*n*.
 Denning, Lou B., 787-790
 Dennis, Levin, B., 345
 Duppeler, Friedrich, 999*n*., 1011*n*.
 Deputie, J. H., 884, 884*n*., 889-890, 901
 Derrick, Israel, 810*n*.
 Desai, Manappa, 545*n*., 573
 De Souza, Charles W. Ross and Mrs., 540*n*., 578-579, 581-583, 586*n*., 632*n*., 634-635
 DeVine, Esther J., 509*n*., 625
 Diaz, Porfirio, 859, 864, 866
 Dickerson, Augusta, 717
 Dickins, John, 110*n*.
 Diem, Amelia, 1035
 Diem, Edmund, 998*n*., 999*n*., 1011*n*.
 Diem, Lydia, 1035
 Dietrich, Carl, 988*n*., 989, 990, 990*n*., 999*n*., 1003, 1010, 1011
 Dimmick, B. F., 104
 Dingman, M. M., 899, 904*n*.
 Disciples of Christ, 246*n*.
Discipline, changing character of, 41, 43, 47, 51-52, 53, 56, 58, 73, 93, 94-95, 99-100, 123, 146-148, 176-177, 222, 227, 299-300, 300*n*., 303
 Divorce. See under "Methodist Episcopal Church."
 Dixon, Nathan E., 882, 884*n*.
 Dobloug, Lars, 939*n*., 947
 Dr. Cullis' Faith Mission, 569*n*., 596
 Doctrine, Methodist. See under "Methodism."
 Dodson, Catherine, 912*n*.
 Dodson, William P. and Mrs., 907*n*., 908, 912*n*.

- Doering, Charles H.: 268, 984, 986, 987-988, 990*n.*, 999*n.*, 1005; account of, 984*n.*
- Doi, Totaro, 689*n.*
- Dollner, Harold: 947, 949; account of, 133*n.*
- Domestic Missions (see also "City Missions," "Conference Missions," "Indian Missions," entries under foreign language groups, and below): need for in West, 113-114; system of appropriations for, 116, 118; favored by Missionary Society, 119-120; growth of (1845-74), 194-195; need for, 195-196; and question of slavery, 204-205, 210-211; funds for, 205-206, 206*n.*, 207, 212, 218, 228-229, 233, 236, 237; conducted by W. H. M. S., 245, 245*n.*
- Domestic Missions under Missionary Society: 195*n.*, 200, 217-218; "Foreign" missions (3rd class), 226-227, 227*n.*, 302; Oregon, 131, 227-232; California, 232-236; New Mexico, 236-239; New Mexico Spanish, 239-241; Arizona, 241-243; Utah, 243-247; Idaho, 247-249; Dakota, 249-252; Black Hills, 252-253; Wyoming, 253-254; Montana, 254-258; Nevada, 258-259; missionaries connected with, 227, 228, 229, 230, 233, 234, 235, 236-238, 241-259; schools, 228-229, 240-241, 244-247, 253
- Dominguez, Joaquin, 818*n.*, 821
- Donahue, Julia M., 385
- Donnelly, A. M., 244
- Donohue, Timothy and Mrs., 394
- Doran, Frank, 202*n.*
- Doremus, Sarah R., 139*n.*
- Downey, Clara A., 509*n.*
- Downey, Joseph R. and Mrs., 453, 458*n.*, 488*n.*, 501
- Dowring, Charles, 588*n.*
- Draper, Gideon F. and Mrs.: 675-676, 712-713, 715, 716*n.*, 733, 736; account of, 675*n.*
- Draper, J. W., 898, 898*n.*, 903*n.*
- Drees, Charles W.: 854*n.*, 855, 856; transferred to South America, 779; administration of, 779-786; account of, 779*n.*; tour of West Coast Missions, 816-817, 818*n.*; Superintendent, South America Conference, 819, 821-822; Mexico, 834, 838, 839-841, 843-844; appointed Superintendent, Mexico, 848; administration of, 848-854
- Drew, Daniel, 32-33, 32*n.*
- Drummond, Henry, 77, 89
- Dudley, Hannah, 509*n.*
- Duff, Alexander, 452, 467, 643
- Duncan, Hugh, 255
- Dunmore, Effie, 860
- Dunton, Mrs. L. M., 152
- Durbin, John Price: 95, 124, 129; qualifications, 122-123; as Corresponding Secretary, 117-118, 122-126, 129, 140-142, 163-164, 165, 194-195, 235, 236, 302; account of, 122*n.*; on Liberia, 171, 171*n.*; on China, 376; on India, 449, 450-451, 451*n.*, 454, 454*n.*, 458*n.*, 469, 470-474, 500-501; on Buenos Aires missions, 760, 762, 763; on Norway, 937; on Denmark, 948; on Sweden, 960, 961, 962; on Germany, 991, 1014; on Paris Mission, 997; on Switzerland, 1015, 1016; on Bulgaria, 1018-1019, 1019*n.*, 1020, 1021*n.*, 1024*n.*, 1038
- Dutcher, Eugene S. and Mrs., 351
- Dutch Reformed Church: in Japan, 664*n.*, 666, 666*n.*, 667*n.*, 690-691
- Dutt, Antone, 588*n.*, 591-592
- Duvall, Richard P., 347
- Dyer, John L., 214-216, 237-238
- Dyer, L. S., 352

E

- Eales, William, 576
- Early, John W., 903*n.*
- East China Mission. Identical with Foo-chow Mission.
- Easton, Celesta, 509*n.*
- Eaton, General John, 745*n.*
- Eaton, Sarah A., 509*n.*
- Ebert, Carl, 818*n.*
- Eckman, K. V., 894, 897-898, 903*n.*
- Economoff, J. I., 1026, 1028, 1028*n.*, 1030, 1031*n.*, 1035*n.*
- Ecuador (see also "South America Mission"): 807-808; visited, 776; preaching prohibited, 778; included in Peru District, 822
- Eddy, Barton T. and Mrs., 542*n.*
- Eddy, Thomas M., 126-127
- Edgar, J. E., 349
- Edgell, Benjamin E. and Mrs., 384
- Education. See under "Methodist Episcopal Church," "Board of Education," "Sunday School Union," "Theological Seminaries," and under the various mission and W. F. M. S. entries.
- Eggleston, Edward, 202
- Eilers, Frederick, 1006
- Ekdahl, Edward S., 588, 588*n.*
- Ela, Walter, 298
- Eldred, A. J., 335
- Eldridge, Mary L., 362-363
- Elicker, Anna, 575-576
- Elief, Magdalena, 1027

- Elieff, Gabriel, 1021, 1024, 1026, 1026*n.*, 1028, 1028*n.*, 1031*n.*, 1035, 1035*n.*
 Elkins, Hiram and Mrs., 916*n.*, 918, 920*n.*
 Elkins, Mary E., 803
 Ellery, John R., 903*n.*
 Elliott, Charles, 176*n.*, 205, 206*n.*, 326, 1040
 Elliott, Fannie B. See Fannie B. Elliott
 Vernon.
 Elliott, Margaret, 849, 851
 Elliott, Mary C. See Mrs. William H.
 Stephens.
 Elliott, Mary J., 722
 Elliott, Melville C., 485
 Ellsworth, C. R., 354
 Elsam, Charles G., 545*n.*, 594*n.*
 Emerson, J. C., 302*n.*
 Endsley, Andrew J., 46*n.*
 Engel, Gottlob, 594*n.*
 English, Fanny M., 509*n.*
 Episcopal Church. See "Protestant Episcopal Church."
 Epworth League: 104-105, 159, 296, 339;
 India, 544, 548, 549, 552, 588-589, 608,
 615, 622, 624, 657; Japan, 725; Brazil,
 822; Norway, 944-945; Denmark, 954;
 Sweden, 975
 Ericson, Albert F., 283*n.*, 959-960, 960*n.*
 Ericson, Andrew, 276
 Ericson, Jacob M., 970*n.*, 971, 973, 974
 "Erie War," 32
 Ernsberger, David O. and Mrs.: 538*n.*, 542*n.*, 569, 570-571, 600, 602*n.*; account of, 570*n.*
 Ernsberger, Izillah, 601, 602*n.*
 Ernsberger, Margaret Carver (3rd wife David O. Ernsberger), 570*n.*
 Ernsberger, Mary A. Hughes (2nd wife David O. Ernsberger), 570*n.*, 571, 602*n.*
 Espindola, Silvio S., 818*n.*
 Esping, Julius, 222*n.*
 Espinosa, Pascual, 835
 Euroza, Justo M., 848*n.*, 850, 852, 854*n.*, 862
 Evangelism: forms used on foreign field, 185-193 (also see under various mission and W. F. M. S. entries); Sunday schools used for, 190-191; in Domestic Missions, 239
 Evangelists, order of, 91
 Evans, Alice A., 602*n.*
 Evans, H. H., 903*n.*
 Evans, William C., 862
 Everding, Emma J., 721, 723
- F
- Fabbri, Gualtiero, 1050*n.*, 1057
 Fairchild, J. H., 353
 Falstrom, Jacob: 342; account of, 342*n.*
 Fancher, Daniel, 338
 Fancher, E. L., 152
 Farnon, Edwin T., 588*n.*, 592, 632*n.*
 Farwell, George H., 818*n.*
 Fawcett, Edith A., 818*n.*
 Fay, Theodore, 996
 Feistkorn, William, 594*n.*
 Felt, Frank R., 594*n.*
 Female Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, 142-143
 Female Missionary Society of New England, 501
 Ferguson, John C., 406*n.*, 407
 Ferguson, W. P. F.: 857; account of,
 857*n.*
 Ferris, Elizabeth (see also Elizabeth Ferris Shellbear), 604, 657, 659, 660
 Field, Nella H., 857
 Field, Silas M., 916*n.*, 920*n.*
 Fieldbrave, Isaac, 623
 Fieldbrave, Joseph: 456, 462, 465, 475;
 account of, 456*n.*
 Files, Estella M., 599, 602*n.*
 Fillmore, Millard (President, U. S.), 34
 Fincham, Ella E., 1032, 1035
 Finity, M., 345
 Finland and St. Petersburg Mission: 107,
 155; episcopal visitations of, 175*n.* 1, 2;
 account of, 976-981; establishment in Finland, 976-979; religious freedom restricted, 977, 978-979, 980; appointments, (1887) 978*n.*, (1894) 981*n.*; Society formed in St. Petersburg, 979; orphanage begun, 979; publications in, 979, 980
 Finley, N. W., 880*n.*
 Fish, Pascal, 344, 346, 364
 Fisher, A. N., 295
 Fisher, Alice H., 804*n.*
 Fisher, Elizabeth N. (see also Mrs. William N. Brewster), 391, 391*n.*
 Fisher, George W., 214
 Fisher, H. D., 246*n.*
 Fisher, Thomas P., 594*n.*
 Fisher, W. H., 215
 Fisk, General Clinton B., 304
 Fisk, Willbur, 367
 Fiske, John, 76, 77
 FitzGerald, James N. (Bishop), 125*n.*,
 819, 823-824, 945, 974, 1037, 1057
 Flanders, Lewis and Mrs., 140, 140*n.*
 Fletcher, John, 995
 Flocken, Frederick W.: 1019; account of,
 1019*n.*; administration of, 1020-1027
 Floy, James, 109
 Floyd, John C. and Mrs., 588*n.*, 656, 656*n.*

Folwell, E. Douglas, 754*n.*, 755*n.*

Foochow Conference (see also "Foochow Mission" entries): 159, 162, 174*n.*, 175*n.*, 178; organized, 169, 386-387; Districts and appointments, 387-388, 390, 394; expansion of work, 393; statistics, 394; Woman's Conference organized, 394

Foochow Mission (see also "China Mission," and "Foochow Conference"): 182, 182*n.*, 186, 187, 190; educational activities, 188, 189, 189*n.*, 370-371, 378, 390, 391, 395; medical work of, 191-192, 369-370, 395; account of, 369-396; beginnings, 369-377; combats infanticide, 369*n.*, 378, 444-445; literature production, 371-372, 392; use of preaching, 372-373; health problems in, 373-375, 379-380; arrival of missionaries, 374, 376, 379, 380, 381, 383, 384, 392, 394, 395; first organization, 377-378; orphanage opened, 378; expansion of work, 380, 382-383; statistics, 381, 382, 383, 394; attitudes toward polygamy, foot-binding, 386, 443-444; character of converts, 388-390, 392-393; difficulties of, 393; opium problem in, 432, 441, 443

———— Schools (see also under W.

F. M. S. entry below): Anglo-Chinese College, Foochow, 134, 161, 390, 395, 438*n.*; Hinghwa Theological School, 395; Foochow Boys' Boarding School, 378, 379; Hinghwa Boys' Boarding School, 395

———— W. F. M. S.: appropriations for, 384; medical work of, 384, 385; arrival of missionaries, 384, 385, 391, 391*n.*, 392*n.*, 395*n.*; Bible women's program, 384, 390

———— W. F. M. S., Schools: 391-392; Foochow Girls' Boarding School, 379, 390-391, 444; Juliet Turner Memorial School, Hinghwa, 392; Hamilton Girls' Boarding School, Hinghwa, 392

Foote, Frank W. and Mrs., 509*n.*, 607*n.*

Foote, General Lucius H., 741, 742, 743

Forbes, R. Ella, 724*n.*, 732

Forbes, Robert, 202*n.*

Ford, R. C., 656*n.* 1, 2

Fordyce, John, 499*n.*

Foreign language missions, U. S. (see also under each language): 261-262; literature for, 109-110, 153; conducted by W. H. M. S., 287, 296; funds for, 297, 298, 298*n.*, 299

Foreign Missions. See under individual names. For policies see entries for "Missionary Society," "General Conferences," and "General Missionary Committee."

———— aided by Sunday-School Union grants, 101, 153-154; aided by Board of Education, 107; aided by Tract Society, 109, 154-155; declining interest in, 114-115; reproduction of domestic pattern, 158-159; under episcopal supervision, 171-175; missionary methods, 185-193; need of women's work, 188-189

Forman, John N., 90

Formosa, 35-36

Forsberg, Carl G., 277

Foss, Cyrus D. (Bishop), 175*n.*, 943, 1049, 1050

Foster, Eva M., 658, 658*n.*, 659

Foster, Randolph S. (Bishop): 68, 69, 74, 130, 173*n.*, 174*n.*, 419, 539-540, 701, 746*n.*, 757*n.*, 779*n.*, 855, 1030; account of, 74*n.*

Foulk, George C., 743

Fowler, Anderson, 813*n.*, 817-818, 817*n.*

Fowler, Charles Henry (Bishop): 68, 127-128, 146*n.*, 175*n.* 1, 2; 246; re China, 405, 406, 407, 425, 441; re Japan, 694, 716; re Korea, 743, 746*n.*; re Mexico, 847, 860, 862; re Europe, 944, 953, 979, 1051, 1055; account of, 127*n.*

Fox, Alexander, 654, 656*n.*

Fox, Daniel O. and Mrs., 519, 522-524, 528*n.* 1, 2; 533*n.*, 535*n.*, 546, 549-550, 555, 563-565, 569, 594*n.*

France: 124; German-Swiss mission in Paris, 997, 1003-1004; mission urged for, 1059

Franklin, Peter A. H., 281

Frantz, Milton N., 694, 698*n.*, 716

Frease, Edwin F. and Mrs., 545*n.*, 553, 594*n.*, 595, 601

Free Church (Italy), 1049

Free Church Movement in Sweden, 955-956, 956*n.*, 960*n.*

Free Church of Scotland: in India, 514, 521, 524, 552

Free Methodist Church, 71

Freedmen, 155, 261*n.*, 309, 310

Freedmen's Aid Commissions, 321-322

Freedmen's Aid and Southern Education Society (Freedmen's Aid Society), 149-150, 310, 321-324

Freedmen's Bureau, 304, 306, 321-322

Freeman, James M.: 109; account of, 109*n.*

Freer, Hephya, 569*n.*

Freer, Ruth C. (see also Mrs. F. J. Blewitt), 569*n.*

Freestone, Fannie, 818*n.*

Frelinghuysen, Theodore, 37

French, Anna S., 713

French Congo, appointments in: Mamba,

907, 917, 917*n.*, 919; Mayoumba, 907
 French, domestic missions to: in New York
 City, 262; in Detroit, 262-263; first French Methodist Church in U. S., 263; in New England, 263; in New Orleans,
 263-264; evaluation of, 264
 French Wesleyans, 997
 Frey, Cecelia M., 419*n.*
 Frey, James H., 612*n.*
 Frey, Lulu E.: 754; account of, 754*n.*
 Frizziero, Aristide, 1050*n.*, 1057*n.*
 Froggatt, George G., 818*n.*
 Frost, George W., 327*n.*
 Fuentes y Betancourt, Emilio, 854*n.*, 865-
 866, 866*n.*
 Fujita, Tadasu, 719
 Fukuzawa, Yukichi, 690
 Fulkerson, Epperson R., 694, 711, 726
 Fuller, Delia, 509*n.*
 Fuller, Mary, 818*n.*
 Fullerton, Thomas M., 201
 Furukawa, Masao and Mrs., 677-678

G

Gaddis, Frances L., 349
 Gaddis, M. P., 219
 Gaebeleim, Arno C., 299
 Gallimore, Anna, 509*n.*
 Galloway, Helen R., 429*n.*
 Gamble, John W., 537*n.*
 Gamboa, Conrado, 841, 844-845, 848*n.*,
 850, 852-853, 854*n.*, 860
 Gamewell, Frank D. and Mrs., 412*n.*, 415,
 423, 424-425, 425*n.*
 Garcia, Miguel, 861
 Garden, Joseph H. and Mrs., 542*n.*, 563,
 567, 572
 Garibaldi, General Menotti, 1055
 Garretson, Catherine, 133*n.*
 Gartner, "Brother," 897*n.*, 903*n.*
 Garwood, Horace, 896*n.*, 903*n.*
 Gary, George, 163, 227*n.*, 228, 228*n.*
 Gascoigne, Stephen, 356
 Gattuso, Giovanni B., 1047*n.*, 1050, 1050*n.*
 Gavitt, Elnathan E., 218
 Gay, Daniele, 1046*n.*, 1047*n.*, 1050*n.*
 Gay, Edwin W., 588*n.*, 632*n.*
 Gay, Paolo, 1050*n.*, 1057*n.*
 Gay, Teofilo, 1043, 1046*n.*, 1047*n.*, 1050-
 1051, 1050*n.*, 1053
 Gaytan, Ignacio, 852-853
 Gebhardt, Ernst, 991, 994*n.*, 999*n.*, 1010
 General Conference of the Protestant Missionaries of China, 442*n.*
 General Conferences: 39, 44, 44*n.*, 49, 52,
 92, 101, 102, 103, 111, 123, 124, 134, 139*n.*,
 155-156, 169, 509

General Conferences (1844-96), Acts and Decisions, General Church Program:
 institutional chaplains, 82; order of evangelists, 91; Sunday School Union, 97,
 109; Church Lyceums, 103; Epworth
 League, 105; Children's Day, 106; creation of Board of Education, 105-107; creation of Tract Society, 108-109; creation of General Missionary Committee,
 116, 116*n.*; Missionary Society, 118-120,
 124*n.*, 125, 126, 127, 129; creation of
 Church Extension Society, 135-136;
 creation of Board of Church Extension,
 137-138; W. F. M. S., 139, 143*n.*, 144,
 145, 146-147; W. H. M. S., 151, 152-
 153; re-entry of South and authorization for Negro and white Conferences, 300-301, 303-304, 307-308, 313-320; Freed-men's Aid Society, 322-323; Deaconess
 Movement, 602-603

Church Life: discipline,
 46, 47; slavery, 51, 53, 54*n.*; temperance,
 54-57; divorce, 57-58; amusements, 59-
 60; labor, 64; doctrine, 70, 72*n.*, 82; child nurture, 96, 99; anti-discrimination, 323

Polity: salaries, 41*n.*; lay representation, 44-46; missionary terms,
 163-164; Mission Conferences, 167, 168,
 170, 313; seating of delegates, 168*n.*,
 313; foreign Central Conferences, 170-
 171, 661-663; foreign episcopal visitation,
 173-174, 175, 176; missionary episcopacy,
 174-180, 885-886; Plan of Separation,
 299-300

Missions: city missions,
 67-68, 82, 222; Conference missionary societies, 120*n.*; Liberia, 171-172, 176,
 178, 875-877, 880-886, 894, 922; India,
 175, 179, 472-475, 482, 485, 485*n.*, 486,
 487-488, 489*n.*, 518, 534, 544, 586, 594,
 632; Africa, 178-179, 894-895, 913, 917,
 922; domestic missions, 195, 195*n.*, 302;
 missionary reports, 221; German language work, 265-267; Scandinavian language work, 278, 281, 283; Indian missions, 325, 328-329, 344; China, 386;
 Malaysia, 653, 657; Japan, 689; South
 America, 815-818; Mexico, 854

General Missionary Committee: 132, 147,
 158, 163, 175, 180, 200, 295; creation and function of, 116-118; opposed to creation of separate mission boards, 120; million dollar program, 131-132;
 expenses, 134; authorizes Alaska Mission, 158; appropriations: domestic missions, 195, 200, 217-218, 244*n.*, 245;

- Spanish language missions, 239; foreign language missions, 262*n.*, 281; Conference missions (1852-56), 301; Southern work, U. S., 301, 302
- actions re: China Mission, 131 421-422; New Mexico Mission, 237, 239; Indian missions, 325, 325*n.*, 327, 331, 345, 361-362; India Mission, 450, 468, 470-474, 500-501, 519, 543*n.*, 544; Malaysia Mission, 650*n.*, 653; Japan Mission, 665, 667; Korea Mission, 742; South America missions, 760, 768, 773*n.*; Taylor's work in South America, 809-810, 812-813, 817-818, 825; Liberia Mission, 884, 885, 887, 922; Africa, 892, 893, 913*n.*, 920; Scandinavia missions, 934*n.*, 947; Bulgaria Mission, 1018, 1024, 1025, 1029-1030, 1031-1032, 1037; Italy Mission, 1040, 1042
- Gerber, Rudolph, 776, 818*n.*, 821
- Gerdes, H., 998*n.*, 999*n.*
- German Evangelical Basel Mission, 554
- Germans, domestic missions to: German language publications, 101*n.*, 111-112, 269; rapid expansion of, 265; organization of Conferences, 265-267; self-support and contributions, 268-269; statistics, 269
- Germany: immigration, 3, 3*n.*, 6, 8*n.*, 37, 266; Revolution of 1848, 3; restriction of religious freedom, 981, 985, 988, 992-995, 1000-1001, 1015-1016; ascendancy of Prussia, 981*n.*, 994-995; formation of German Empire, 994*n.*
- Germany and Switzerland Conference: 166, 168, 172-173; organized (1868), 995, 998-999; Paris mission, 997, 1003-1004; work in Districts: Bremen, 999; Oldenburg, 999; Frankfort, 999; Wurttemberg, 999-1000; Zurich, 999, 1002-1003; Basel, 999; East, 999; appointments (1868), 999*n.*; statistics, (1868) 999, (1886), 1004; difficulties, 1000-1002; youth movement, 1004; divided, 1004 (see under "Germany Conference" and "Switzerland Conference" entries)
- Germany Conference: 168, 169; organization and growth of, 1004-1005; Districts, 1004, 1004*n.*; divided, 1005 (see under "North Germany Conference" and "South Germany Conference" entries)
- Germany Mission and Mission Conference (see also other entries above): 107, 154-155, 166; beneficences to, 134*n.*; American Bible Society grants, 155-156, 156*n.*; episcopal visitations of, 173*n.*, 174*n.* 1, 2; 175*n.* 1, 2; 990; establishment of, 981-984; missionaries appointed, 982, 984, 985, 989, 990; Book Concern and publishing in, 982, 983; growth and statistics of, 984-989, 992-994; difficulties, 986, 987, 990, 993-995, 994*n.*, 1015-1016; Tract Society organized, 986; Mission Conference organized, 989; appointments, (1856) 989*n.*, (1859) 990*n.*, 992; Martin Mission Institute, 990-991, 1014; work extends into Switzerland, 995-998 (see also under Switzerland entry); deaconess work in, 1004; temperance in, 1015-1016
- Gershon, Henry, 588*n.*
- Getchoff, Stefan, 1026, 1026*n.*, 1028*n.*, 1031*n.*, 1035*n.*
- Gheer, Jennie, 688, 689, 721, 722
- Giambruno, Giovanni B., 296
- Gibson, Cerinthus and Mrs., 903*n.*
- Gibson, Eugenia, 509
- Gibson, H. R., 880*n.*, 882
- Gibson, Otis and Mrs.: 164*n.*, 384; administration of, 287-289, 292; work of, 376-381, 384
- Giddings, Joshua R., 35*n.*
- Gilbert, Nathaniel P., 806*n.*
- Gilchrist, Ella, 401
- "Gilded Age," 31
- Gilder, George K., 487, 528*n.* 1, 2; 533*n.*, 535*n.*, 551, 553, 555, 570, 572, 575, 579-581
- Gill, Joseph H. and Mrs.: 488*n.*, 495, 496, 611*n.*, 621-622, 639*n.*; account of, 495*n.*
- Gillilan, J. D., 246
- Gilliland, James P. and Mrs., 798, 799, 800, 802, 807, 816, 816*n.*
- Gilmore, George W., 745*n.*
- Gilruth, Archibald, 190, 586*n.*, 591, 594*n.*, 595
- Gisler, H., 998*n.*, 999*n.*
- Gladden, Washington, 65, 66, 84
- Gladwin, Wallace J., 488*n.*, 513, 535*n.*, 538, 550-551, 566
- Glaettli, Kaspar, 999*n.*, 1011*n.*
- Gloss, Anna D., 416*n.*
- Glover, Ella E., 419*n.*
- Godfrey, A. C., 201
- Goethe, Mathias, 835
- Golden Hours*, 112*n.*
- Gonzales, Jose Maria, 835, 865
- Good Tidings*, 101
- Goode, William H.: 60, 208, 213-215, 326, 344, 345, 346; account of, 345*n.*
- Goodenough, Julia E., 788, 789
- Goodfellow, William and Mrs.: administration of, 763-768, 825, 827; account of, 763*n.*

- Goodsell, Daniel A. (Bishop), 107, 175*n.*, 700, 746*n.*
 Goodwin, Etta, 818*n.*
 Goodwin, Frank A., 528*n.*, 533*n.*, 535*n.*
 Gordon, Charles W., 905, 907*n.*, 908, 909-910
 Gordon, Philip B., 531, 532
 Gossalvish, Luzia, 912*n.*
 Gouchenor, Mary, 406*n.*
 Goucher, John F. and Mrs., 133-134, 134*n.*, 390, 421, 612*n.*, 675*n.*, 680, 742
 Goucher Schools, 133-134, 612*n.*, 616, 617, 630
 Gould, Jay, 32, 32*n.*
 Gowan, George A., 302*n.*, 305*n.*
 Gracey, John Talbot and Mrs.: 127*n.*, 168*n.*, 173, 455*n.*, 464-465, 475*n.*, 480, 482, 485, 488*n.*, 500, 507, 534, 889; account of, 464*n.*
 Gracey, Samuel L.: 395; account of, 395*n.*
 Graezer, A. M., 964
 Grant, Emma, 804*n.*
 Grant, Richard, 569*n.*, 813*n.*, 817, 817*n.*
 Grant, Ulysses S. (President, U. S.), 32, 36-37, 326-327, 327*n.*
 Grau, John J., 268
 Gray, Asa, 77
 Gray, Charles A., 588*n.*, 653
 Gray, Richardson, 488*n.*, 496, 619
 Greek Orthodox Church: 12; in Japan, 667*n.*, 681*n.*
 Greeley, E. H. and Mrs., 900, 903*n.*
 Greeley, Horace, 14
 Greeley, James, 344
 Green, Charles W., 683, 687, 689*n.*, 700, 714, 715, 716, 717
 Green, Nancy B. See Nancy B. Green Humphrey.
 Green, Nellie R., 416*n.*
 Green, William, 857, 860, 862
 Greene, Lily D., 509*n.*
 Greene, Lucilla H., 509*n.*
 Greenig, George H., 538*n.*, 564
 Greenman, Almon Witter and Mrs.: in South America, 782, 785, 818*n.*, 820; account of, 782*n.*; in Mexico, 844-845, 852, 854*n.*, 855, 859
 Greensky, Isaac, 334
 Greensky, Peter, 364
 Greer, Vesta, 416*n.*
 Gregg, Walter, 818*n.*
 Gregory, James J. and Mrs., 394*n.*
 Grenon, William H., 545*n.*, 594*n.*
 Griewe, W. F. and Mrs., 815
 Griffith, R. C., 903*n.*
 Griffith, W. R., 286, 286*n.*
 Griffiths, Mary Bell, 707
 Griot, Rudolph, 783, 818*n.*
 Gripon, John B., 871, 871*n.*
 Groves, William, 819
 Grundtvig, Nicolai Frederik Severin: 946, 948, 949, 955; account of, 946*n.*
 Guelfi, Antonio, 780, 790, 818*n.*
 Guelfi, Cecilia, 789
 Guerrero, Marcellino, 833, 836
Guide to Holiness, 71
 Guigou, Amedeo, 1046*n.*, 1047*n.*
 Guild, L. T., 1036
 Gunnison, Clarence, 903*n.*
 Guthrie, R. H., 302*n.*, 305*n.*
- H
- Haagensen, Andrew, 280-281
 Hagan, W. T., 884*n.*, 901
 Hair, G. R., 251
 Hale, Ira P., 259
 Hale, Lillian G., 416*n.*
 Hall, Emma M., 1048-1049, 1054, 1056
 Hall, Henry H., 396-397, 398
 Hall, William J. and Mrs. (see also Rosetta Sherwood): 750*n.*, 751, 752, 753, 753*n.*, 755; account of, 751*n.*
 Hamilton, John W., 322*n.*
 Hamilton, Stewart, 224
 Hamisfar, Florence N., 683, 715
 Hamline, Leonidas L. (Bishop), 196, 232, 368
 Hammond, Rebecca J., 791, 792, 800, 803*n.*
 Hampton, Mary S., 683, 716
 Hamren, Olif, 274
 Hancher, John W., 253*n.*
 Hanlon, Laura J., 818*n.*
 Hanse, William, 903*n.*
 Hansen, H., 950*n.*, 954*n.*
 Hansen, Martin: 937, 939*n.*, 942, 945; administration of, 938-941, 944
 Hansen, Walter, 237
 Hanson, A. J., 288, 291, 292
 Hansson, Seved, 939*n.*, 962, 970*n.*
 Hanzlik, Laura, 406*n.*
 Haqq, Fazi, 632*n.*
 Haqq, Tafzzul, 632*n.*
 Haqq, Zahur ul and Mrs.: 456, 460, 465, 475, 476, 478, 492-493, 504, 617, 626-627, 641; account of, 456*n.*
 Hard, Clark P. and Mrs.: 528*n.*, 531, 533*n.*, 535*n.*, 542*n.*, 551, 562, 565, 576, 582, 585, 586*n.*, 589, 590, 594*n.*, 595; account of, 531*n.*
 Hardie, Eva M., 509*n.*
 Haren, Alexander, 306-307
 Hargis, J. H., 219, 1049
 Harle, J., 1003

- Harmon, Charles H., 884*n.*, 887
 Harnet, Mr. and Mrs., 896*n.*, 903*n.*
 Harris, D. L., 903*n.*
 Harris, Ernest D. and Mrs., 903*n.*
 Harris, John, 355
 Harris, Joseph, 884*n.*, 895
 Harris, Mary W., 754, 754*n.*
 Harris, Merriman C. and Mrs.: administration of Japanese missions in U. S., 293-296; work of, Japan, 667, 670, 679, 680, 681, 682, 689*n.*, 703; account of, 681*n.*
 Harris, Sylvanus D., 413
 Harris, Townsend, 664
 Harris, William L. (Bishop): 138*n.*, 141, 142, 145, 173, 174, 174*n.* 1, 2; 183, 290-291; re India, 487, 519, 526, 527-528, 528*n.*, 533; re China, 385-386; re Japan, 667-668; re Latin America, 775, 812, 849, 852, 854; re Europe, 1002, 1025, 1044-1045
 Harrison, Benjamin (President, U. S.), 37
 Harrison, James A., 916*n.*, 918, 920*n.*
 Hart, Edgerton H. and Mrs., 394*n.*, 407*n.*
 Hart, Virgil C. and Mrs., 158, 188, 381, 440; administration of, 382, 396-407, 437; and West China Mission, 425, 425*n.*, 426, 437
 Hartford, Mabel C., 391*n.*, 392
 Hartly, Miss, 907*n.*
 Hartsough, Lewis, 244, 251, 253
 Hartung, George, 267
 Hartzell, Jennie Culver (Mrs. Joseph C.): begins work among freedmen, 148-149, 150-151; account of, 148*n.*
 Hartzell, Joseph C. (Bishop): 148, 148*n.*, 149, 315-316, 322*n.*; succeeds Bishop Taylor, 1896, 913; re Africa, 920, 920*n.*, 926, 929-930
 Harvey, Emily, 509*n.*
 Harvey, Susie J., 908, 909, 912*n.*
 Harwood, Thomas, 238-240, 241
 Hastings, Mary, 834, 836, 851, 854*n.*
 Hathaway, Mrs. M. L., 150
 Hauge, Hans Nilsen: 934, 946; account of, 934*n.*
 Hauser, Isaiah L. and Mrs., 455*n.*, 461-462, 475*n.*, 477, 488*n.*
 Hausser, Gustav, 999*n.*, 1001
 Haven, Erastus O. (Bishop): 106, 303*n.*, 310; account of, 106*n.*
 Haven, Gilbert (Bishop): 48, 51-52, 62, 80, 303*n.*, 311, 321; re Mexico, 173*n.*, 829-831, 836, 837; re Liberia, 173, 173*n.*, 886, 889, 890, 891, 892-893; death of, 173*n.*; account of, 311*n.*; re Italy, 1042
 Hawaiian Islands, 37, 236, 294-295
 Hawkins, Lucius, 302*n.*
 Hawley, J. H., 205
 Hayes, Lucy Webb (Mrs. Rutherford B.): 151; account of, 151*n.*
 Hayes, Rutherford B. (President, U. S.), 37
 Hayner, James F. and Mrs., 419*n.*
 Hazard, Louisa E., 879, 880, 880*n.*
 Headland, Isaac T. and Mrs., 419*n.*
 Heafer, Louise, 509*n.*
Heathen Woman's Friend, 141
 Heaton, Carrie A., 729*n.*
 Hebinge, Josephine M., 657, 659, 660
 Hebrews. See "Jews in America."
 Hedding, Elijah (Bishop), 43, 108, 121*n.*
 Hedrick, Margaret, 598, 602*n.*
 Hedström, Jonas J.; 273, 274-275, 276; account of, 273*n.*
 Hedström, Olof Gustaf: 271, 275, 933, 934, 956, 957, 960*n.*; account of, 271*n.*; Bethel Ship work, 272-274; in Sweden, 958-959, 963
 Heede, Elevine, 942
 Helm, J. Wilbur, 356
 Hempel, Gustav, 1008
 Henderson, George S., 588*n.*
 Henry, G. A., 327*n.*, 355
 Henry, W. M., 302*n.*
 Henschen, William, 283*n.*
 Hepburn, J. C., 669*n.*, 685
 Heppe, Hugo and Mrs., 903*n.*
 Herman, Mr. and Mrs., 818*n.*
 Hernandez, Alejo, 830
 Hernandez, Jacinto, 854, 854*n.*, 855
 Hernandez, Joaquin V., 854, 854*n.*
 Heron, John W., 747
 Hewes, George C. and Mrs., 509*n.*, 611*n.*
 Hewett, Ella J., 714
 Hewett, Lizzie, 790*n.*, 857, 857*n.*
 Hewey, George M. and Mrs., 823
 Hickok, Henry and Mrs., 368, 371, 374, 375
 Hicks, William and Mrs., 912*n.*
 Hicks, W. W., 455*n.*, 464, 488*n.*
 Higgins, J. W., 797, 800-801, 810, 810*n.*
 Higgins, Susan B., 674
 High, J. C., 298
 "Higher Criticism," 78-81
 Hillis, Hester A., 569*n.*
 Hillman, Mr., 896*n.*, 903*n.*
 Hines, Gustavus, 229, 230
 Hines, H. K., 228, 229, 249
 Hines, J. W., 229
 Hingeley, J. B., 202*n.*
 Hinman, Alanson, 228
 Hiranuma, Sakaye, 689*n.*
 Hirata, Heizo, 689*n.*
 Hitchcock, Luke, 121*n.*, 225

- Hoag, Lucy H.: 397, 402, 403, 409; account of, 397*n*.
- Hobart, Chauncey, 201, 270, 281, 343
- Hobart, William T. and Mrs., 416*n.*, 417
- Hobbs, G. W., 302*n*.
- Hodge, Charles (African king), 904, 904*n*.
- Hoffman, Charles H. and Mrs., 798, 807, 810*n*.
- Hoge, Elizabeth, 509*n*.
- Hoisington, Henry L., 656, 656*n*.
- Holbrook, Mary J.: 679; account of, 679*n*.
- Holcombe, Chester, 425*n*.
- Holder, I. N., 903*n*.
- Holderness, F. C., 903*n*.
- Holdich, Joseph, 156
- Holding, Lizzie E., 818*n*.
- Holding, Rachel, 801
- Hollett, R. P., 887, 888
- Hollister, William H. and Mrs., 545*n.*, 571-572, 571*n*.
- Holly, J. D., 884*n*.
- Holmes, D. J., 302*n*.
- Homestead Acts, 7*n.*, 20
- Honda, Itsuki, 683, 689*n*.
- Honda, Yoitsu (Bishop): 685, 686, 687, 695-696, 702, 714, 715, 716*n.*, 739; account of, 685*n*.
- Hooper, A. B., 879
- Hoover, Willis C. and Mrs., 799, 818*n*.
- Hopkins, George F. and Mrs., 588*n.*, 594*n.*, 611*n*.
- Hopkins, Nehemiah S., 415, 417
- Horley, William E.: 659, 660; account of, 660*n*.
- Horn, J. C., 818*n*.
- Horne, James W., 164*n.*, 879, 882
- Hosford, Chauncey O., 233, 233*n*.
- Hoskins, Robert and Mrs.: 477, 485*n.*, 494, 495, 500*n.*, 606, 607, 614, 626, 632*n.*, 636; account of, 477*n*.
- Hospitals, Methodist (see also listings for medical work under the various mission entries): founding of, 82
- Hough, A. M., 236, 254-256
- Howard, George Paddock: 777, 780, 818*n.*; account of, 777*n*.
- Howard, John, 353
- Howard, Leonora, 414-415, 415*n*.
- Howard, Meta, 746
- Howard, Oliver O., 304, 356*n*.
- Howe, Delia, 401
- Howe, Gertrude: 397, 401, 402, 408, 422, 721; account of, 397*n*.
- Hoy, Isetta E. See Mrs. James C. Lawson.
- Hoyt, Benjamin F., 201
- Hoyt, Mrs. F. S., 151*n*.
- Hoyt, William B., 870, 871
- Hrejsa, Francis J., 297
- Hu King-eng, 384, 385
- Hu Ngieng-su and family, 442, 447
- Hu Po-mi, 382, 387, 388, 393
- Hu Sing-mi, 287-288, 386
- Hu Yong-mi, 384, 387, 388
- Hudson, Thomas M., 159, 594*n*.
- Huffaker, T. S., 347
- Hughes, George, 71, 92*n*.
- Hughes, Mary A. (see also Mary A. Hughes Ernsberger), 600
- Hugo, Victor, 903*n*.
- Hulbert, Homer B., 745*n.*, 754, 754*n.*, 755
- Humphrey, Fletcher and Mrs., 799
- Humphrey, James Lorenzo and Mrs.: 452, 456-457, 459, 460, 462-463, 467-469, 482-483, 486, 492, 496, 502, 607*n.*, 619, 647; account of, 456*n*.
- Humphrey, Nancy B. Green (2nd wife J. L. Humphrey), 607*n*.
- Hunt, Albert S., 156
- Hunt, Jennie, 904*n*.
- Hunt, Sandford, 121*n*.
- Hunt, T. Dwight, 233
- Huntington, C. A., 327*n*.
- Huntington, Frederic D., 84
- Hurlburt, Joseph, 200-201, 201*n*.
- Hurlbut, Jesse L., 101, 109
- Hurst, John F. (Bishop): 50, 175*n.*; re India, 171, 541, 543*n.*, 560, 662; re Mexico, 856; re Europe, 942, 991, 999, 1030, 1049
- Husk, Libbie A. See Mrs. James H. Messmore.
- Hutchings, Emily, 550
- Huong, Pau-seng, 440-441
- Hyde, G. B.: 857; account of, 857*n*.
- Hyde, Laura. See Mrs. Frank W. Foote.
- Hyde, Minnie J., 790-791
- Hykes, John R., 397, 401, 403, 405-406, 407, 433-434
- Hymns, Gospel, 88*n*.

I

- Iida, K., 730
- Ik, Min Yong, 742
- Ikeda, Tokumatsu, 731
- Iliff, J. M., 260-261, 261*n.*, 345
- Iliff, Thomas C.: 245, 256; account of, 256*n*.
- Imhof, Louisa, 707, 707*n.*, 723*n*.
- Immigration. See under United States entry.
- India: attitude toward missionaries, 451, 639-640; Sepoy Rebellion, 451-453, 465, 581; famine in, 461, 468-469, 606; child marriages in, 494, 498, 549, 614, 627, 650, 662; polygamy in, 496; women's position in, 498; government grants to Methodists, 599, 621, 640; India National Congress, 641; manufacture and sale of liquor and opium in, 649-650

India and Malaysia Missions, Education (see also entries under the various Conferences in India, and the "Malaysia Mission" entry): 189, 190, 456-464; schools: Philander Smith Institute, 134, 460n., 470n., 580, 618, 621n., 637; Centennial High School (Reid Christian College), 460n., 623, 623n., 649; Bareilly Theological Seminary, 460n., 479, 481n., 490, 590, 612n., 613, 624, 649; Cawnpore Girls' and Memorial School, 470n., 488, 491, 626; Hussainabad Boys' School, 483; Anglo-Indian Boys' Orphanage (Taylor High School), 550; Calcutta Boys' School, 559; Baldwin High Schools, 564; Avery Girls' Boarding School, 583; Allahabad Boys' Boarding School, 575; Agra Medical College, 577, 649; Goucher Schools, 612n., 616, 617, 630; Frey schools, 612n.; Muttra Christian Boys' Boarding School, 628; Central Anglo-Vernacular School, 628; Date Bible School for Christian Boys, 636; Chinese Boys' Boarding School, 652, 653, 656-658; other schools, 457, 481, 550-553, 559, 564, 601, 613, 614, 618, 619, 632, 635, 649, 658, 660; as a means of evangelization, 466-469; Board of Education, 486, 537, 538, 632, 662; statistics on schools (1873), 487; zenana schools, 503-505; criticism of, 643-645

Evangelism: 607, 625, 648; military: 457-459, 513, 523, 524, 531, 532, 550-552, 556, 556n., 566, 578, 579-581, 591, 594, 618, 623, 626, 628, 646, 646n.; industrial, 461, 463-464, 469n., 479, 479n., 570-572, 587, 613; zyatt, 465, 466; mohalla preaching, 466, 575, 577-579, 627; Fellowship Bands, 515, 515n., 516, 532, 562; among seamen, 529, 544, 547, 555-556, 558, 563, 588n., 593, 651; melas, 608-609, 622, 633; criticism of, 635, 641-645; schools as a method of, 643-645; by women in Malaysia, 659

Medical Work: 456, 469n.; 482-483, 486, 492, 494-496, 507-508, 573, 577, 585, 589, 592, 596, 597, 613-615, 619-621, 650, 654; among lepers, 578, 587, 619-620

Orphanages: 457, 459, 460, 468-470, 479-481, 494, 499, 501, 507, 508, 550,

559, 561, 568-570, 568n., 571-572, 575, 576, 582, 587, 592, 593, 598, 599, 600, 606, 621, 649, 658, 659

Publications: translations, 470, 616; Kaukab-i-Hind, 139n.; Indian Witness (Lucknow Witness), 484n., 557, 588n., 645; The Messenger, 558; Herald, 564; India Methodist Watchman, 568n.; Woman's Friend, 600; Children's Friend, 616n.; Malaysia Message, 655, 655n.; Sahabat, 660

Publishing: 662-663; Calcutta Publishing House, 155, 543, 662; Methodist Publishing House, 469-470, 543; Lucknow Mission Press, 484, 649; Conference Book Agency, 545-546; Madras, 563, 652n.; Singapore, 651n., 655, 659

W. F. M. S. (for publications see previous entry): 488, 491, 568, 571, 577, 662; arrival of missionaries, 486, 502, 503, 507, 509n., 547, 553, 574, 575, 583, 590, 598-602, 602n., 639, 642-643, 654; status of work (1875), 491; appropriations, 502; organization of India W. F. M. S., 502-503; work in zenanas, 503-505, 547, 597-600, 620, 625, 645, 650; medical work of, 507-508, 577, 615, 619-620, 650; in North India, 508, 605, 606, 613-614, 615, 616, 618, 619-620, 621, 622, 624, 625, 628, 630, 631; Bible women, 548, 552, 597, 614, 615, 622, 625, 627, 644-645; in South India, 553, 554, 559, 568, 571, 583, 597-602, 603-604; in Bengal Conference, 559, 589, 590, 593, 598, 599, 601, 602, 604; in Allahabad District, 574-575, 576, 577, 578, 581; orphanages, 576, 600, 621; in Woman's Missionary Conference, 586, 598; in Malaysia, 601, 654, 657, 658, 659, 660; Deaconess Movement, 602-605, 628; Homes for Homeless Women, 619, 624, 657; in Northwest India Conference, 632-633, 646; high caliber of missionaries, 642, 643, 650; in Delegated Conference (1881), 662

W. F. M. S., Schools: 189, 505-507, 549-550, 559, 571, 574-576, 581, 583, 589, 597-606, 614-616, 618, 619, 621-622, 624-626, 628, 630-631, 633, 635, 646, 656, 657, 660; Moradabad Girls' Boarding School, 476, 491, 505, 615, 630; Lucknow Christian Girls' Boarding School (Isabella Thoburn College), 491, 502n., 505-507, 625; Woman's Training School, Pooona, 550; Calcutta Girls' School, 559, 598-599; Johnson Girls' School, Jabalpur, 575-576; W. F. M. S. Home for Medical

- Students, 577; Female Training School, Narsinghpur, 590; Girls' School, Rangoon, 599; Girls' Boarding School, Baroda, 601; Bidwell Memorial School, 613; Sigler Boarding School, 614; Wellesley Girls' High School, 618; Aligarh Girls' Boarding School, 633, 646
- Women's Work (see also entries for W. F. M. S.): first girls' school, 467-468; schools, 476, 552, 560, 561, 571, 575, 578-579, 627; medical work of, 482-483, 578-579; zenana work, 498-501, 503-505, 552, 571, 603, 627; organization of W. F. M. S., 502-503; Woman's (North) India Conference, 503, 508-509, 624; in Allahabad District, 575, 578-580; South India Woman's Missionary Conference, 579, 597; work in Bengal Conference, 586, 592, 593, 598; work in South India, 597-602; Woman's Missionary Conference formed in Bengal and in Burma, 598; work in North India, 616, 627; Woman's Malaysia Mission Conference, 659
- India Conference (see also "India Mission," "North India Conference," "South India Conference," and other India entries): 159, 191; Mission Conference organized, 167, 474-475; Annual Conference organized, 168, 485; charter members, 475*n.*; work in Districts: Moradabad, 476-479, Bareilly, 476, 479-483, Lucknow, 476, 483-485; schools, 476-483, 486, 487, 490-491, 493-494, 496-501; arrival of missionaries, 481, 485, 485*n.*, 488, 513, 519; rearrangement of Districts and work in: Rohilkhand, 487, 493-494, Kumaon and Garhwal, 487, (Lucknow) Oudh, 487, 496-498; Moradabad, 491-493, Bareilly, 494-496; review of work, 487, 488-491; District Conference set up, 489*n.*, 489-490, 497; Kanpur included in, 487-488, 513
- India Mission (see also North India, South India, Bengal, Bombay, and Northwest India entries; also other India entries): 107, 124, 134, 134*n.*, 155, 156*n.*, 161, 179; beneficence to, 133, 161; need for women missionaries in, 140; expansionist policy of, 156; Epworth League in, 159; Central Conference formed, 170-171; Delegated Conference formed, 170*n.*; episcopal visitations of, 173*n.*, 174*n.* 1, 2; 175*n.* 1, 2; preaching in, 186, 187-188, 187*n.*; literature distribution, 188; persecution, 451-452, 461, 548, 637-640; establishment of, 449-450; centers of work: Bareilly, 449, 451, 455-457, Moradabad, 451, 455, 459-460, Shahjahanpur, 451, 455, 460-461, Budaun, 451, 455, 462-463, Lucknow, 451, 455, 458-459, Naini Tal, 455, 457-458, Bijnor, 455, 461-462, Lakhimpur and Sitapur, 455, 464-465; plan and growth of, 451, 454-455, 463-464, 468; arrival of missionaries, 452, 453, 455, 459, 641-642; dissension within, 453-454; work among special groups: Tharus, 458, 483, Sikhs, 459, 627, Thakkurs, 482, 553, 629, Kanarese, 531, 542-543, 544, 564, 568-571, 573, Hindustani, 531, 539, 542-543, 548-549, 560-561, 567, 574-575, 577-581, 608, 615, 628, 636, 639, Telegu, 531, 544, 463, 568-570, 572-573, 593-594, Tamils, 531, 532, 539, 542, 547, 548-549, 551, 563-564, 583, 593-594, 600, 601, 601*n.*; Marathi, 547-549, 567, Chinese, 584, 594, 601, Doms, 618, 622; development of native work and ministry in, 465, 474*n.*, 476, 489-490, 640-641, 646-649; difficulties, 465-469; statistics, (1863) 473, (1895) 639; Epworth League in, 544, 548, 549, 552, 588-589, 608, 615, 622, 624, 657; social reforms of, 650
- Indian Department, Washington, D. C., 325, 326-327, 328, 332, 350, 355
- Indian Mission Conference, 260-261, 261*n.*, 345, 348-349
- Indian Missions, American (see also "Indian Tribes"): 325; of W.H.M.S., 153, 328, 348-349, 350, 350*n.*, 354, 357, 360, 362*n.*, statistics (1844-45), 324; schools and education, 324*n.*, 325, 327-329, 330, 333, 334, 336-342, 346-352, 355, 357-363; main centers of work: Michigan, 329-338; New York, 338-342; Minnesota, 342-343; Kansas, 343-347; Oklahoma, 347-349; Montana, 349-351; Oregon, 351-354; Idaho, 354-355; Washington, 355-357; California, 358-360; New Mexico, 360-361; Arizona, 361-362; missionaries connected with, 327, 327*n.*, 329-330, 332, 333, 335, 336, 350, 351, 352, 353, 354, 355, 358-364; persecution in, 340, 344; failures, 363-364
- Indian Tribes, American, work among (see also "Indian Missions"): Potawatomi, 332, 335, 347; Ottawa, 332, 335; Chipewew, 332, 342, 343; Saginaw, 333; Brothertown, 337-338; Stockbridge, 337-338; Oneida, 337-339, 338*n.*; Onondaga, 338-339, 340; St. Regis, 339; Seneca, 341, 345; Cattaraugus, 341, 342; Alleghany, 341; Tonawanda, 341-342; Wyan-

- dot, 343-346, 364; Shawnee, 345-346; Delaware, 346; Kansas (Kaw), 346-347; Sauk, 347; Fox, 347; Kickapoo, 347; Ponca, 347-348; Osage, 348-349; Otoe, 348; Pawnee, 349; Arapahoe, 349; Cheyenne, 349; Crow, 349-350; Blackfeet, 349-351; Fort Peck (Sioux), 349-350; Klamath, 351-353; Siletz, 351, 353-354; Shoshone, 354-355; Bannock, 354-355; Sheef-eater, 354-355; Yakima, 355-356; Nooksack, 357; Konkau (Concow), 358; Apache, 360-361; Navajo, 361-363
- Indians, Mexico: 848, 852, 855, 856, 858, 860, 862, 867
- Indians, South America: 785; lack of missions among, 782, 825-826
- Industrialization. See under "United States."
- Ing, John and Mrs.: in China, 396, 397, 398, 446; in Japan, 671*n.*; 684, 685, 686, 714; account of, 684*n.*
- Ingham, S. W., 249-250
- Ingham, Mrs. W. A., 350*n.*
- Ingram, F. L., 133
- Inhambane District. See Mozambique.
- Inskip, John S., 71
- Institutional Churches, 67-68
- Inter-Seminary Missionary Alliance, 89
- Intro-Africa Mission. See "Boporo Mission."
- Irish, Ralph, 407*n.*
- Irvine, J. E. and Mrs., 348
- Isham, George W. and Mrs., 545*n.*
- Itagaki, Taisuke, 690-691
- Italians, domestic missions to: account of, 296-297
- Italy Mission and Conference, 107, 124, 130, 155, 156*n.*, 157, 169; episcopal visitations of, 173*n.*, 174*n.* 1, 2; 175*n.* 1, 2; 1044; account of, 1040-1059; establishment of, 1040, 1043; missionaries appointed, 1042, 1043, 1049, 1050, 1054, 1055; schools, 1044, 1047, 1050, 1053-1057; appointments, (1876) 1046*n.*, (1881) 1047*n.*, (1888) 1050*n.*, (1895) 1057, 1057*n.*; Conference organized, 1047; union of Protestant church bodies considered, 1049; orphanage opened, 1049; difficulties, 1050-1052, 1053-1054, 1057; theological seminary, 1054, 1055-1056, 1057; statistics (1895), 1057; evaluation of, 1058-1059
- W. F. M. S.: appropriations for, 1046; Bible women, 1046-1047, 1049, 1053, 1058; arrival of missionaries, 1048, 1056; orphanage, 1049, 1056; schools, 1055, 1056
- Ivanoff, Dimitri, 1028
- Ivanoff, Ivan, 1021, 1026, 1026*n.*
- Iwakura, Prince, 666
- J
- Jackson, Andrew (President, U. S.), 35
- Jackson, Henry and Mrs. (2nd wife), 455*n.*, 459, 463-464, 475*n.*, 488*n.*, 492, 511*n.*, 588*n.*, 589, 592
- Jackson, Henry Godden and Mrs.: 302*n.*, 767, 776, 777*n.*, 825; administration of, 768-772
- Jackson, James and Mrs., 290, 402*n.*, 403, 407, 409, 434
- Jackson, Mrs. Melissa (1st wife Henry Jackson), 488*n.*
- Jackson, Sheldon, 246*n.*
- Jacobs, Simon P.: 537*n.*, 558, 564, 567-568, 570, 571; account of, 564*n.*
- Jacobsen, H., 540*n.*, 951, 952
- Jacobsmuhlen, Hermann zur: 989, 990*n.*, 996; account of, 989*n.*
- Jacoby, Ludwig S.: 11, 166, 981, 999*n.*, 1014, 1015, 1021-1022; administration of, 982-998; account of, 982*n.*
- James, Jennie R., 569*n.*
- James, William, 255
- Jamison, J. M., 248, 248*n.*, 355
- Janes, Edmund S. (Bishop): 39, 108, 121*n.*, 165, 173, 185, 192, 235, 245, 329, 367, 374*n.*, 375, 454; re Africa, 519, 878, 880, 892, 991-992; re Bulgaria, 1019, 1021, 1024*n.*
- Janney, Levan R., 535*n.*, 555, 586, 586*n.*
- Janvier, Joel T. and Mrs.: 186, 452, 457*n.*, 458, 465, 475, 479, 480, 483, 497-498, 630-631, 640; account of, 452*n.*
- Japan: 11, 156; U. S. entry of, 35, 664; Missionary Society urged to open mission in, 664-665; changing attitudes toward Christianity, 665, 666, 690-693, 696-697, 737; religions of, 665, 666, 669, 691, 692, 693, 696, 700, 718, 721, 729, 734-735; political and social reforms, 665-666, 691; Iwakura Embassy, 666; women's position in, 675; Satsuma rebellion, 688; "Imperial Rescript on Education," 696-697; "Churchless Christianity," 699-700; treaty rights to Americans, 702
- Japan Conference (see also "Japan Mission" entries): 130, 169; organized, 689; statistics, 689, 694, 696, 700, 701, 702, 733; charter members, 689*n.*; Woman's Conference organized, 690; yearly sessions, 691-702; medical work of, 693, 725, 728; "Mission Council," dissension over, 698-702; work in Districts: Tokyo (1884-95), 702-710, Yokohama (1884-

- 95), 710-713, Hakodate (1884-95), 714-718, Aomori (1889-95), 718-720, Nagasaki (1884-95), 720-726, Nagoya (1887-95), 726-730, Sendai (1890-95), 730-731, Fukuoka (1893-95), 731-732; Shinshu (1893-95), 732-733; Epworth League formed, 725
- Japan Mission (see also "Japan Conference"): 107, 155, 156; beneficences to, 134, 134*n.*; establishment of, 157, 667-672; provision for Central Conference, 170*n.*; episcopal visitations of, 173*n.*, 174*n.* 1, 2; 175*n.* 1, 2; arrival of missionaries, 667, 671*n.*, 675, 680*n.*, 681, 683, 684, 686, 687, 688, 693, 694, 695, 700, 705, 709, 715, 716, 720, 723; Japanese preachers admitted, 671*n.*; main centers of work: Yokohama (1874-83); 672-676, Tokyo (1874-83), 676-681, Hakodate (1874-83), 681-684, Hirosaki (1874-83), 684-687, Nagasaki (1874-83), 687-689; work among women, 675, 705, 706, 725, 728; converts among upper classes, 691, 692; cooperation with other missions, 691-692; lack of hostility, 692-693; Gospel Societies organized, 693; emphasis on education as means of evangelization, 693-694, 709, 737-738; use of literature, 693, 740; criticism of procedure in, 695-696, 699, 715, 735, 736-737, 738-739; anti-foreign feeling affects, 696-697, 700-701; problem of school founding, 724; Sino-Japanese War affects, 729-730; evaluation of, 733-741; special problems in Japan, 734-736; quality of missionary personnel, 738, 740; native ministers in responsible positions, 739; foundation laid for indigenous Japanese Christian Church, 740
- Schools (see also W. F. M. S. entry): theological seminaries and Biblical institutes: Yokohama Mission Seminary and Training School, 134, 675-676, 680; Philander Smith Biblical Institute, 134, 669*n.*, 700, 704, 704*n.*, 706*n.*; Yokohama Training School for Bible Women, 675, 694, 710, 712-713; Cobleigh Seminary (Chinzei Gakuin, Chinzei Gakkwan), Nagasaki, 675*n.*, 688-689, 721, 722, 723, 724-725, 726, 728*n.*, 733; universities and colleges: Aoyama Gakuin (Ei-wa Gakko, Anglo-Japanese College), Tokyo, 672*n.*, 680, 685*n.*, 708*n.*, 733; Agricultural College, Sapporo, 684; lower schools: Kei-O-Gijuku, Tokyo, 694, 704; Sendai chiu gakko, 694, 705; To-O-Gijuku, Hirosaki, 684*n.*, 685*n.*, 716, 738*n.*; Tsukiji boys' school, 680; Aomori High School, 716; Fukuoka Girls' School (Jo Gakko), 694, 721-722, 732; Seiryu Jo Gakko, Nagoya, 727, 729, 729*n.*
- W. F. M. S.: work begun, 669; arrival of missionaries, 669, 672*n.*, 674, 675, 679, 682, 683, 688, 705, 706, 707, 708, 709, 710, 712, 713, 717, 718, 720, 721, 722, 723, 724, 725, 727, 729, 732; appropriations for, 669, 674; medical work of, 683, 688; Bible women's program, 690, 694, 712-713, 740; high caliber of missionaries, 740; effectiveness of educational work, 740
- W. F. M. S., Schools: Kaigan Jo Gakko, Tokyo (Tsukiji Girls' School), 189, 678, 705, 706-707, 708, 709; Caroline Wright Memorial School, Hakodate, 682-683, 714, 717; Kwassui Jo Gakko, Nagasaki, 689, 721, 725; Aoyama Young Ladies' Seminary (Ei-wa Jo Gakko), 706, 709; Hirosaki Girls' School (Hirosaki Jo Gakko), 716, 719, 720
- Japanese, domestic missions to: Gospel Society, 292-293; separated from Chinese work, 293; missionaries, 293; first Japanese Methodist church in America, 293; extended to Hawaii, 294-295; Japanese District organized, 295-296; growth, statistics, 295-296, 295*n.*
- Jefferson, H. S., 545*n.*
- Jefferson, Thomas (President, U. S.), 34, 34*n.*
- Jeffrey, Alexander T. and Mrs., 797, 799, 801, 802-803, 807, 810, 810*n.*, 811-812
- Jeffrey, George M., 803
- Jeffries, Charles R., 487, 528*n.*
- Jeffries, Enoch, 540*n.*, 556*n.*, 565, 582, 586*n.*
- Jellison, Ernest, 406*n.*
- Jensen, Christian, 953, 954*n.*
- Jensen, Crilles and Mrs., 918, 920*n.*
- Jensen, Jens W., 920*n.*
- Jensen, P. M. S., 950*n.*, 954*n.*
- Jewell, Carrie I., 391
- Jewell, Charlotte, M., 416*n.*
- Jews in America: 12, 27*n.*; work among, 299, 299*n.*
- Johansen, C., 947
- John, Griffith, 433
- Johnson, A. G., 274
- Johnson, Miss A. M., 297
- Johnson, Andrew (President, U. S.), 33-34, 326
- Johnson, David, 364
- Johnson, Ella, 385

- Johnson, Hannah S., 818*n*.
 Johnson, Herbert B., 694, 723; account of, 723*n*.
 Johnson, John H.: work of, 941-944; account of, 941*n*.
 Johnson, Lavinia, 872, 872*n*.
 Johnson, Levi, 309
 Johnson, Levin, 895, 896*n*., 903*n*.
 Johnson, Stephen, 368*n*.
 Johnson, Thomas, 345, 364
 Johnson, Thomas S. and Mrs.: 190, 455*n*., 469, 475*n*., 479*n*., 480-481, 486-487, 495, 588*n*., 589, 590, 594*n*., 596, 608, 614; account of, 469*n*.
 Jolly, Arthur J., 1036
 Jones, Addison R. and Emma K., 1028, 1028*n*., 1030-1031
 Jones, Anna. See Mrs. J. M. Thoburn.
 Jones, George Heber: 743*n*., 747, 748, 751, 753; account of, 747*n*.
 Jones, Samuel, 203
 Jones, Thomas and Mrs., 419*n*.
 Joseph, J. S., 588*n*., 632*n*.
 Jowett, Benjamin, 79
 Joyce, I. W. (Bishop), 980, 1034, 1055
 Juarez, Benito Pablo, 863, 864, 866
 Judd, Charles W., 183-184, 193, 453, 459, 475*n*., 476, 479, 480, 483, 485
 Judson, Adoniram, 466
 Judson, J. L., 917-918, 917*n*., 920*n*.
 Jung, Sir Salar, 567
 Junker, P. G., 1005
 Junior League, Methodist, 159
 K
- Kah, Martha, 917, 920*n*.
 Kahn, Ida, 397*n*.
 Kali, Gangadhar B., 545*n*., 594*n*.
 Kamijo, Yajizo, 689*n*.
 Kanamura, Tenju, 681, 689*n*.
 Kaneko, Kentaro, 691
 Kansas-Nebraska Bill, 6, 207
 Kastendieck, Henry F., 537*n*., 607*n*.
 Kaulbach, Anna: 705; account of, 705*n*.
 Kawabe, T., 294
 Keeler, Anna C., 602*n*.
 Keeley, J. H., 819
 Keen, Mrs. S. L., 130, 701, 757*n*.
 Ke-en-e-kuk, 347
 Keener, John C. (Bishop), 830-831
 Keister, B. B. and Mrs., 804*n*.
 Kelley, Luella, 509*n*.
 Kellner, Augustus, 266
 Kellogg, Royal Jasper, 886, 887, 893
 Kelso, Charles C., 658*n*.
 Kemble, Duston and Mrs., 853-854, 854*n*.
 Kemper, Harriet, 509*n*.
 Kennedy, Mary. See Mrs. Lewis A. Core.
 Kennedy, W. P., Jr., 884*n*., 898*n*.
 Kensett, William T., 588*n*., 654, 658*n*.
 Keokuk, 347
 Kephart, B. F., 903*n*.
 Kepler, Charles O. and Mrs., 419*n*., 420
 Kerr, Harriet, 509*n*.
 Kerr, Robert F., 687
 Ketcham, Charles, 346, 364
 Ketring, Mary, 416*n*.
 Khan, Hasan Raza, 628-629, 632*n*., 634
 Khan, Mahrub, 632*n*.
 Khan, Taj, 632*n*.
 Khandaji, Gyanoba, 540*n*., 594*n*.
 Kidder, Daniel P., 96-97, 97*n*., 106, 108, 115, 153
 Kidwell, Lola M., 725
 Kihlstrom, Johan, 962, 963, 970*n*.
 Kikuchi, Takuhei, 671*n*., 682*n*., 685, 689*n*.
 Kildare, Mary, 916*n*., 919, 919*n*., 920, 920*n*.
 Kilpatrick, Margaret, 879, 880, 882, 889*n*.
 Kim, Chang Sik: 753; account of, 753*n*.
 Kim, Tan Jiak, 652
 Kindergarten of the Church Association, 102
 King, David, 342*n*.
 King, Harry and Mrs., 419*n*.
 King, James M., 328*n*.
 King, William L. and Mrs., 545*n*., 564
 Kingsbury, Mrs. Thomas, 140*n*.
 Kingsley, C. S., 229, 247, 248*n*.
 Kingsley, Calvin (Bishop): 173, 173*n*. 1, 2; 237, 247*n*.; re China, 382, 383; re India, 456*n*., 485-486, 489*n*.; re Europe, 937, 961, 962, 963
 Kingsley, Charles, 84, 84*n*.
 Kinsman, Rosina, 805
 Kipp, Lizzie, 805
 Kirk, Marion B., 537*n*., 571
 Kissack, Sadie. See Sadie Kissack McCartney.
 Kitchin, W. C., 689, 689*n*., 694, 704, 721, 738*n*.
 Klaia, Clara, 1031
 Klusner, F., 999*n*., 1006*n*.
 Knights of Labor, 15, 64
 Knoll, Mary, 803*n*.
 Know Nothing Party, 61, 61*n*.
 Knowles, Emma L., 509*n*., 559, 618, 625
 Knowles, Samuel and Mrs.: 187, 457, 462-463, 475*n*., 484, 624-625; account of, 453*n*.
 Koehli, F., 999*n*., 1010
 Koepsel, Louis H., 542*n*., 586*n*.
 Korea: 157; U. S. treaty with, 741-742; changing attitudes toward Christian missions, 741, 744, 745, 748, 749; unsuccessful rebellion, 1884, 743; persecution

- of Roman Catholics, 745; Tonghak rebellion, 754-755; religions of, 757
- Korea Mission: 155; episcopal visitations of, 175*n.* 1, 2; account of, 741-757; beginnings of, 134*n.*, 742-744; arrival of missionaries, 742, 743, 747, 748, 750, 751, 753, 754; medical work of, 193, 744, 746, 749, 750, 752, 753; statistics, 746, 749, 752, 755-756; cooperation with other missions, 746-747, 748, 756-757; Pai Chai Haktang, 746, 748-749, 752-753, 755; day school for boys, Inchon, 753-754; extension of work, 753-754; evaluation of, 756-757
-
- Literature and Publications: publication and distribution of literature, 751; Trilingual Press, 751, 754, 755; Korean Religious Tract Society, 743*n.*, 751; Korean Repository, 743, 751*n.*
-
- W. F. M. S.: arrival of missionaries, 743, 746, 750, 751, 754; general work of, 744, 749, 752, 755, 756; medical work of, 746, 750, 752, 754; Ewha Haktang, 745*n.*, 746, 749, 750, 751, 752
- Kosaka, Keinosuke, 689*n.*
- Kosugi, Riyohi, 671*n.*, 674
- Kudo, Tomonari, 671*n.*, 673
- Kuin, Kim Ok, 741
- Kullman, August and Mrs., 587-588, 588*n.*
- Kuno, John, 920*n.*
- Kupfer, Carl F. and Mrs., 158, 159, 402*n.*, 408, 409, 439
- Kurimura, K., 674
- Kurimura, Saehachi, 671*n.*, 674, 689*n.*, 731-732
- Kurtz, S., 987
- Kyle, Theresa, 509*n.*
- Kynett, Alpha J.: 136; account of, 136*n.*
- L
- Labor and Labor Unions, U. S.: 10, 11, 14-16, 17-19, 27, 30; conflict with immigrants, 10, 11, 27; Churches' treatment of, 63, 65, 66, 82-86
- Lacy, William H. and Mrs., 161, 394, 434
- Ladd, John S. and Mrs., 1028, 1028*n.*, 1031*n.*, 1035, 1035*n.*
- Ladies' China Missionary Society of Baltimore, 379
- Ladies' Repository*, 111
- La Fort, Thomas, 340
- La Fetra, Ira Haynes and Mrs.: 797, 802, 805-806, 810, 810*n.*, 811, 813, 816, 818*n.*, 819; accounts of, 802*n.*, 805*n.*
- La Fetra, T. Wolcott, 818*n.*
- Lakin, A. S., 302*n.*
- Lal, Chimman, 462, 632*n.*
- Lal, Chunni, 632*n.*
- Lal, Mohan, 632*n.*
- Lall, Sunder, 495
- Lambuth, Walter R., 416
- Lanaker, J., 944
- Lane, George, 121*n.*
- Lanna, Alceste, 1045, 1046*n.*, 1047*n.*, 1053
- Larsen, C. J., 282
- Larsson, John Peter, 947, 957, 960, 961, 962, 963, 970*n.*, 971
- Lastrico, Carlos, 773, 778, 820
- Latham, E. L., 806
- Lathbury, Mary A., 290, 292
- Lathrop, Mary T., 149
- Lathrop, S. G., 256
- Latimer, Laura Mills: 851, 853, 854*n.*; account of, 851*n.*
- Lau Yong-ming, 389
- Lauck, Ada J., 509*n.*
- Lawrence, Abbott, 34
- Lawrence, Martha E., 596
- Lawrence, William and Mrs., 796, 802-803
- Lawson, Alma (Mrs. A. Osborne), 900, 904*n.*
- Lawson, Anne E., 509*n.*
- Lawson, Christina H., 599-600, 602*n.*
- Lawson, James C. and Mrs., 509*n.*, 607*n.*, 623, 632*n.*
- Lay Representation. See under "Methodist Episcopal Church."
- Layton, Margaret E.: 598, 602*n.*; account of, 598*n.*
- Lazzare, Carlos, 818*n.*
- Leach, L., 818*n.*
- Lee, Daisy, 904*n.*
- Lee, David H., 533*n.* 1, 2; 535*n.*, 560, 578, 588*n.*
- Lee, G. W., 327*n.*
- Lee, Irene E., 720
- Lee, Jason, 228, 364
- Lee, Mary F., 818*n.*
- Lehman, Olga, 821-822
- LeHuray, Eleanor: in South America, 791; in Mexico, 850, 854*n.*
- Leiden, Franz E., 588, 588*n.*
- Leming, Sarah F., 509*n.*
- Lemon, T. B., 209*n.*, 210
- Lemon, Millard F., 818*n.*
- Leo XII, 1041
- Leon, Gabriel Ponce de, 830
- Leonard, Adna B.: 129, 130, 151, 334, 337, 342, 419, 420, 701, 719-720, 757*n.*; account of, 129*n.*
- Leonard, Albert T. and Mrs., 542*n.*, 588*n.*, 632*n.*
- Leonard, Isabella, 601, 601*n.*
- Leonard, Minnie J., 588*n.*

- Lepers, work among, 578, 587, 619-620
 Lervik, Gustaf, 977
 Leslie, David, 163, 229*n.*
 Lett, Francis Neville: 766; account of, 766*n.*
 Leuring, Adolf, 990, 990*n.*, 999*n.*, 1006*n.*
 Leuring, H. L. Emil and Mrs., 654, 656, 657, 658*n.*, 660*n.*
 Levander, C., 957
 Lewis, Addie, 818*n.*
 Lewis, Ella A., 752
 Lewis, Spencer and Mrs.: 187; work of, 422-425, 426; administration of, 427-430, 440
 Lewis, T. Willard, 302, 302*n.*, 306
 Lewis, Thomas D. and Mrs.: 350; account of, 350*n.*
 Li Hung-chang, Viceroy, and Lady, 414-415, 741
 Li Yu-mi, 382, 387, 447
 Liberia: 922*n.*; end of colonization, 178*n.*; in 1845, 869; tribes in (see also "African tribes"), 869; emancipates slave ship, 871; becomes independent nation, 872; and slavery, 875, 879, 890; customs of natives, 877*n.*; tribal wars in, 887-888, 896; requests interior mission, 892
 Liberia Conference (see also Congo, French Congo, Angola, and Mozambique entries and "Taylor Self-Support Missions"): 2, 166, 166*n.*, 168, 173; self-support in, 160, 875, 885-886, 899-901, 904, 924-927; and episcopal supervision, 171-172, 175; Missionary Bishops for, 176-179, 880-885; condition and extent of, (1845) 869, 870, (1848) 872, (1850's) 880, (1880's) 889, (1890's) 898-899, (1894-95) 901-902; recruits for, 872, 879-880, 884, 886, 887, 889, 889*n.*, 890, 899, 900, 900*n.*; work among native tribes, 869-870, 878*n.*, 881, 883, 887, 887*n.*, 888, 900; education in, 870, 871, 872, 873, 875-880, 882, 884, 887, 888, 890, 891, 895, 899, 900, 901, 902, 903, 923; temporary autonomy for, 872, 878; shortage of workers in, 872, 881; Districts, (1848) 872-873, (1853) 878*n.*, (1876) 885, (circa 1880) 887; publications in, 873, 880, 881; Liberians ordained, 878; appropriations for, 878, 885, 886, 887, 895, 926; Francis Burns elected Bishop, 880; J. W. Roberts elected Bishop, 883; growth in, (1886) 883, (1875) 885, (1877) 887, (1885) 895; self-satisfaction in, 883, 886*n.*; extension into interior, 883-884, 887, 892; becomes Annual Conference, 885; Bishop Haven describes as pampered, 886; considers independent organization, 887; death of leaders, 888; appeals for women workers, 889-890; asks for own Bishop, 894; Taylor elected Bishop, 894-895; Taylor's missionaries join, 895; self-support native missions in, 896-898, 902, 923, 930; new appointments added, 898; commends Mary Sharpe's work, 900; evangelism of Amanda Smith in, 900; receives Taylor's missions, 900; Central Africa work placed under, 906, 907, 924
 Liberia Mission (see also "Liberia Conference"): 107; Sunday School Union aids, 101; need for bribery in, 870, 877; Benham, Superintendent of, 870-872; Bastion, Superintendent of, 873-874; end of white superintendency, 874, 876*n.*; shortcomings of, 874; problems of, 875, 877, 881, 922; native leadership for, debated, 876-877; Bishop Scott visits, 877-878; official dissatisfaction with, 885-886; Church's policy in, questioned, 921-922; evaluation of prosecution of, 921-924; Taylor's contribution to, 922-923 ——— Schools: Monrovia Seminary, 870, 871, 873, 879, 880, 884*n.*, 886, 887, 888, 890, 891, 895, 899, 923; Girls' Academy, 870, 873, 879, 880, 882, 884*n.*, 900; Manual Labor School, 870, 879, 882; Cape Palmas Seminary, 879, 882, 884*n.*, 895, 899-900
 ——— W. F. M. S.: 889-892; appealed to for workers, 889-890; undertakes support of Board missionary, 890; opens schools, 890, 891; sends second missionary, 891; Mary A. Sharpe recalled, 891
 Liebhart, Henry: 101, 155; account of, 101*n.*
 Liljegren, Nils M., 970*n.*, 972
 Limberger, Anna R., 859
 Limric, Harry G., 858, 862*n.*
 Lincoln, Abraham, 35*n.*, 302*n.*, 863
 Lindborg, K., 977, 978*n.*, 981*n.*
 Lindquist, John, 957
 Lindsay, Mary B., 916*n.*, 920*n.*
 Ling Ching-ting, 382-383
 Linn, John, 271
 Lipovan Sect, 1024
 Literature, Methodist (see also "Tract Society," "Methodist Book Concern," "Sunday schools," and under the various mission and W. F. M. S. entries): developing Sunday school materials, 96, 100, 101; teaching materials for foreign fields, 101; for German language Sunday schools, 101

- Little, Edward S. and Mrs., 402*n.*, 407, 408, 439
- Livingstone, David, 178, 892
- Ljunggren, Carl L., 970*n.*, 974
- Locke, Jennie S., 708
- London Missionary Society, 369*n.*, 371, 410*n.*, 483, 495, 523*n.*, 565, 571, 619, 651*n.*
- London Religious Tract Society, 771*n.*
- Long, Albert L.: work of, 1018-1023; account of, 1022*n.*; administration of, 1023-1025
- Long, Carroll S.: 688, 689, 720-721, 726, 727, 728, 736; account of, 728*n.*
- Long, Samuel P. and Mrs., 542*n.*, 584, 586, 586*n.*, 592, 598
- Longden, Wilbur C. and Mrs., 402*n.*, 405, 408, 410
- Longley, Sarah (Mrs. William A. Wright), 797, 802, 803
- Lopez, Elijo, 841, 848*n.*
- Lopez, Pedro, 858
- Lopez, Severo, 853, 854*n.*
- Lore, Dallas D.: 43, 122*n.*, 157; Superintendent, New Mexico Mission, 237, 239; administration of, South America Mission 759-761
- Lore, Julia A., 509*n.*, 615
- Lounsbury, Elford F., 1026, 1026*n.*, 1027, 1031*n.*, 1033, 1035, 1035*n.*
- Lowe, Nicholas, 820
- Lowrey, Asbury and Mrs., 103, 813*n.*, 814
- Lowrie, John C., 878*n.*, 884*n.*
- Lowry, George D. and Mrs., 419*n.*
- Lowry, Hiram H. and Mrs.: 157, 381, 411, 412, 413, 415, 416, 418, 419, 420, 436; account of, 411*n.*
- Loyal Legion, 159
- Loyd, Mary De F., 850, 854*n.*, 857
- Loza, Irene, 849
- Loza, Simon: 842-843, 848*n.*, 849, 852, 854*n.*; account of, 843*n.*
- Lüders, Herman: 839-840, 848*n.*, 851, 852; account of, 840*n.*
- Ludlow, Christopher, 836, 837, 838, 847*n.*
- Luke, Charles, 636
- Luke, Hasan, 632*n.*
- Lundgren, K., 973
- Luther, B., 588*n.*
- Lutheran Church in America, 246*n.*, 284
- Lyceums, Church, 103
- Lynch, James: 312; account of, 312*n.*
- Lynch, James (Wesleyan), 450*n.*, 530*n.*
- Lynch, W. O., 320*n.*
- "Lynden Jim," 357
- Lyon, D. Willard, 90
- Lyon, Ella, 385
- Lyon, James and Mrs., 537*n.*, 568, 588*n.*, 632*n.*, 635
- Lyon, Mary, 369*n.*
- M
- McAllister, Agnes, 897*n.*, 904*n.*
- McBurnie, Eva, 406*n.*
- McBurnie, Susan, 509*n.*
- McCabe, Charles C. (Bishop): 80, 128-129, 134, 136, 138, 158, 406, 652; account of, 128*n.*
- McCabe, Mrs. H. C., 348
- McCabe, Mrs. L. D., 350*n.*
- McCartney, James H. and Mrs.: 428; account of, 427*n.*
- McCartney, Sadie Kissack (2nd wife J. H. McCartney), 427*n.*, 429*n.*
- McClintock, John, 43, 52, 53*n.*, 92-93, 176*n.*, 984, 990
- McClintock, Thomas, 771; account of, 771*n.*
- McCoy, Frank L. and Mrs.: 542*n.*, 586*n.*, 587, 588; account of, 588*n.*
- MacDermott, Isabel, 814
- McDowell, Kate, 509*n.*, 604, 615
- McGill, William B.: 750, 751, 753; account of, 750*n.*
- McGregor, John W., 588*n.*, 590, 594*n.*, 607*n.*
- McGregor, Kate, 509*n.*
- McGrew, George H., 615, 617
- McGurk, Daniel, 819
- McHenry, Albert D. and Mrs., 488*n.*, 616
- McInturff, D. N., 694, 698*n.*, 715, 716
- McKaig, R. N., 202*n.*
- McKenzie, Miss, 912*n.*
- McKesson, Mary. See Mrs. Charles G. Conklin.
- McKinley, William (President, U. S.), 37
- McLain, C. B., 903*n.*
- McLaughlin, E. T., 254-256
- McLaughlin, William P. and Mrs.: 786, 818*n.*; account of, 786*n.*
- Maclay, Charles, 235*n.*
- Maclay, Robert S. and Mrs.: 157, 166*n.*, 182, 186, 187, 189; administration of, China, 366-381, 390; administration of, Japan, 667-695, 703-704, 718*n.*, 735, 738; work in Korea, 741, 742, 743, 743*n.*; accounts of, 369*n.*, 375*n.*
- McLean, Alexander, 813*n.*
- McLean, Charles M. and Mrs., 907, 907*n.*, 908
- McLennan, William E.: 859; account of, 859*n.*
- McMahon, John T. and Mrs., 488*n.*, 497, 498, 618, 621
- McMillan, Carrie. See Mrs. Philo M. Buck.
- McNabb, Robert and Mrs., 394*n.*
- McNeal, Elizabeth, 902, 903, 904*n.*

- Madden, R. H., 569*n*.
 Madsen, Niels, 586*n*., 588
 Magruder, J. W., 67
 Mahan, Alfred Thayer, 37-38
 Mains, George P., 60, 62, 68, 226
 Malan, Teofilo D., 296, 1049, 1050*n*.
 Malaysia Mission and Mission Conference (see also under "India and Malaysia Missions" entries): 155; beginnings, 650-653, 653*n*.; arrival of missionaries, 651, 653-654, 656, 657, 660; mission press, 655; Conference members, 658, 659; main centers of work: Singapore, 651-656, 657-658, Penang, 656-657, 658-659, 660, Ipoh (Federated Malay States), 660; work among special groups: Chinese, 652-654, 656-660, Tamils, 652, 654, 656-660; schools, 652-654, 656-660; Mission Conference organized, 657; statistics (1893), 657-658
 Malaysia Mission, W. F. M. S. See entry for "India and Malaysia Missions, W. F. M. S."
 Mallalieu, Willard F. (Bishop), 64, 158, 175*n*., 436, 701, 746*n*., 753, 953
 "Manifest Destiny," 33-37
 Manini, Augusto, 1050*n*., 1057*n*.
 Manly, Wilson E. and Mrs., 427*n*., 428-429
 Mann, Ernst, 987, 989, 990, 990*n*., 995, 996, 998*n*.
 Mann, Heinrich, 999*n*., 1009
 Mann, Horace, 827
 Mann, J. L., 304-305
 Mansell, Ann Benshoff (1st wife Henry Mansell), 459*n*., 488*n*.
 Mansell, Henry: 164*n*., 186, 187, 455*n*., 459-460, 475*n*., 477, 478, 489-490, 489*n*., 497, 518, 534, 632*n*., 637; account of, 459*n*.
 Mansell, Hester V. See Mrs. David C. Monroe.
 Mansell, Lulu Benshoff (2nd wife Henry Mansell), 459*n*., 488*n*.
 Mansell, Nancy Monelle (3rd wife Henry Mansell), 460*n*., 509*n*.
 Mansell, William A. and Mrs., 509*n*., 611*n*., 624
 Maps: China, 431; India, 638
 Marian, David, 545*n*., 573
 Mariners' Bethels (see also "Bethel Ship Mission"), 133*n*., 221-222, 957
 Markham, Thomas B., 344
 Marks, Lillian, 509*n*.
 Marksman, Peter, 332, 333, 343, 364
 Martin, Carlos R., 379
 Martin, Charles A. and Mrs., 542*n*.
 Martin, G. W. and Mrs., 818*n*.
 Martin, John T., 991
 Martin, Nellie, 818*n*.
 Martinsen, C., 977
 Martyn, James, 588*n*.
 Masih, Fazi, 632*n*.
 Maskell, Florence W., 571*n*.
 Mason, Letitia: 398; account of, 398*n*.
 Masters, F. J., 289-292
 Masters, Luella, 385
 Mathewson, Lillian, 818*n*.
 Matson, Henrietta, 604
 Matsumara, M., 717
 Matsumoto, Sogo: 689*n*., 699, 714, 715, 716-717, 718, 730, 731; account of, 718*n*.
 Matsuno, K., 295
 Maxey, Elizabeth, 602*n*., 603
 Maximilian, Emperor, 863-864
 Maxwell, Allan J. and Mrs., 607*n*.
 Mead, Albertha, 907*n*., 910
 Mead, George B., 355, 355*n*.
 Mead, Samuel, 911
 Mead, Samuel J. and Mrs., 907*n*., 910-911, 912, 913, 925
 Mead, Taylor, 912*n*.
 Mead, William H. and Mrs., 907*n*., 910, 911, 911*n*.
 Medical Work, Missions (see also under various mission and W. F. M. S. entries), 191-193
 Meeker, "Sister," 897*n*., 904*n*.
 Meiji Tenno, Emperor of Japan, 665
 Meik, James P. and Mrs., 540*n*., 559, 561, 586*n*., 589
 Mendoza, Doroteo, 848*n*., 850
 Merrill, Stephen M. (Bishop): 174, 174*n*. 1, 2; 209*n*., 438*n*., 538, 698; re Mexico, 846-848; re Europe, 941, 950, 970-971, 1047
 Merrill, Mrs. William B., 140*n*.
 Messmer, J., 998*n*., 999*n*.
 Messmore, James H. and Mrs., 166*n*., 453-454, 455*n*., 469, 475*n*., 483-484, 484*n*., 499*n*., 503-504, 621, 622-623
 Methodism (see also "Methodist Episcopal Church" entries): changes from itinerancy to station system, 40-44; admits laymen, 45-46; becomes middle-class movement, 49-50; doctrinal changes opposed, 69-76; accepts Darwinism, 77-78; moderate in reaction to "Higher Criticism," 79-81; social services of, 82; slow in social concern, 83, 85; less revivalistic, 86-87, 91-92; religious influences from continental sources, 932
The Methodist, as journal of opposition, 53*n*.
 Methodist Book Concern, 110-112, 300*n*.
 Methodist Church of Canada: 169, 170*n*.;

- in West China, 405*n.*; in Japan, 667*n.*, 671, 681, 695*n.*, 712, 740*n.*
- Methodist Episcopal Church (see also "General Conferences" entries): size, (1846, 1895) 2, (1850) 49; grows through immigration, 11-12; established in cities, 41; salary scales developed in, 41-42; appointment system breaks down, 43; more theological seminaries, 43; better educated ministry, 43-44; lessening number of Local Preachers, 44; struggle for lay representation, 44-46; decline in discipline and usages, 46-49; politics in, 49; neglects poor, 50, 62-63, 85-86; and slaveholding, 51-54; and temperance, 54-57; Civil War chaplains, 54*n.*; and divorce, 57-58; and amusements, 58-61; unsympathetic to labor, 63, 65, 82-86; institutional churches begun, 67-68; city missions inaugurated, 82; chaplains, 82; old people's homes and orphanages opened, 82; hospitals opened, 82; great revival of 1857-58, 86-87; neglect of child instruction, 93-95; rise of Sunday-school movement, 96-102; importance of Sunday schools in church extension, 102; centenary celebration, 105-106; creates Board of Education, 105-108; creates Tract Society, 108; Book Concern of, 110-112; declining interest in foreign missions, 114-115; 1879 appropriations for benevolent societies, 120; launches church-building program, 134-139; extends into South, 136-137 (see also entries below); expansionist policy of, 156-158; transplants forms on foreign field, 158-160; extension of episcopacy abroad, 171-174; conceives Europe as mission field, 93
- Methodist Episcopal Church, Agencies of. See under proper names.
- Methodist Episcopal Church, Postwar Work in South (see also under "Freedmen's Aid" and "Freedmen's Bureau" entries): account of, 299-324; repudiation of Plan of Separation, 300; effect of government policy on, 302, 302*n.*; missionaries appointed and District Departments set up, 302; Conference of Colored Local Preachers formed, 302-303; southern Conferences organized, 304-309, 313, 320; education, 305, 324; hardships of, 305, 307, 308, 309; racial composition of, 309, 314, 315, 321; friction with M. E. Church, South, 310-311; problems of, 310-311; movement for segregated Conferences, 312-313, 314-316, 321
- Methodist Episcopal Church, Southern Conferences of: border Conferences, Western Virginia, 300; Kentucky, 301; biracial Conferences, Holston, 305; Mississippi, 305; South Carolina, 306; Tennessee, 306; Texas, 306; Georgia, 306-307; Virginia, 307; North Carolina, 308; Alabama, 308; Louisiana, 309; West Texas, 313; white Conferences, Georgia, 313; Alabama, 316-317; Holston, 317; Austin, 317; Blue Ridge, 317; Central Tennessee, 318; Upper Mississippi, 319; Negro Conferences, Little Rock, 207*n.*, 319*n.*; Delaware, 304; Washington, 304; Lexington, 313; Savannah, 316; Central Alabama, 317; East Tennessee, 317; West Texas, 317; Florida, 319; Central Missouri, 320; Gulf Mission, 320-321
- Methodist Episcopal Church, South: 204, 206*n.*, 238, 261*n.*, 277-278, 343-344; problems of division, 299-300, 310-311; in China, 416; in Japan, 695*n.*; in Mexico, 829*n.*, 830, 857
- Methodist Episcopal Zion Church, 316
- Methodist New Connexion, 88, 307, 411-412
- Methodist Protestant Church, 307; in Japan, 695*n.*, 740*n.*
- Methodist Young People's Union, 103, 105*n.*
- Mexican Episcopal Church, 828*n.*
- Mexico, 35, 156; religious freedom, 828-829, 835; Tuxtepec Revolution, 837, 845-846, 863-864; President Diaz offers protection, 856; attitudes of Mexicans toward outsiders, 863-865; conflict between Church and State, 864
- Mexico Conference (see also "Mexico Mission" entries): 169; organized, 854-855; charter members, 854*n.*; discussion among church members and pastors, 856-857; arrival of missionaries, 857, 859, 860, 862, 866; growth and statistics of, 854, 857, 858-860, 861, 863; schools, 858, 860-861, 862, 863; Mexican appointed P. E., 862
- Mexico Mission (see also "Mexico Conference"): 107, 155, 156, 156*n.*; episcopal visitations of, 173*n.*, 174*n.* 1, 2; 175*n.*; William Butler appointed Superintendent, 828-829; organization and growth of, 828-833, 840-846, 848; purchase of property, 830-832, 837-838; arrival of missionaries, 830, 833-834, 835, 840, 842, 848, 849, 851, 853, 866; Butler method of work, 834; main centers of work: Mexico City, 834-835, 850, Pachuca, 836-837, 848, 851, Puebla, 837-840, 850-851;

- schools and orphanages opened, 835, 838, 840, 845, 849, 850, 851, 853, 867; hostility and persecution shown, 836n., 838-840, 842-845, 849, 851-852, 853, 856, 858, 859, 860, 864, 867; appointments (1879), 848n.; setbacks, 849, 852, 853-854; medical work, 855, 855n., 857n.; shortage of preachers, 859-861; summary of work, 863-869; role of colporteurs and Bible agents, 864-865
-
- Literature and Publications: 155, 156, 156n.; mission press, 782, 835-836, 846-847, 848, 849; El Abogado Cristiano, 835-836
-
- Schools: Puebla theological school, 839, 852, 855n., 861, 865; Queretaro Methodist Institute, 861
-
- W. F. M. S.: 836-837; appropriations for, 834; arrival of missionaries, 834, 835, 848, 849, 850, 851, 857, 859, 860; Bible women, 834, 835, 842, 845; orphanages, 834, 835, 850; appointments (1885), 854n.; marked advance (1886), 855-856; receives Missionary Society property in Pachuca for school, 861, 862; summary of work, 863
-
- W. F. M. S., Schools: 836, 841-842, 845, 848-849, 850, 851, 853, 854, 854n., 855-856, 857, 859, 860-861; Tetela Girls' School, 857n., 859, 860, 862; Guajuato Girls' School, 851n., 853, 854, 854n., 859, 860, 862; Apizaco Girls' School, 855; Puebla Girls' School, 851, 854, 854n., 855, 857, 857n., 859, 860; Pachuca Girls' School, 836, 851, 854, 854n., 860-861, 862; Orizaba Girls' School, 860; Miraflores Girls' School, 841, 849, 854, 860
- Meyer, Fannie E., 429n.
- Michener, Emma: 184, 890-891; accounts of, 184n., 891n.
- Miles, George, 516, 520
- Miley, John: 69, 70, 70n., 94; account of, 69n.
- Military Evangelism. See under "India and Malaysia Missions, Evangelism."
- Milks, Marian A., 804n.
- Millard, Barbara, 904n.
- Miller, Charles M. and Mrs., 542n., 586, 586n.
- Miller, Charles W., 777, 785, 818n., 821n.
- Miller, Emily C., 356-357
- Miller, I. T., 351
- Miller, Lewis, 99
- Miller, Mollie, 538n.
- Miller, Oriel, 509n.
- Milne, Andrew M., 773, 774, 775, 776, 781, 784, 816, 818n.
- Milne, Robert, 651n.
- Miner, Mrs., 904n.
- Miner, G. S., 395
- Miner, John, 903n.
- Ministerial Education Society of the Northwest, 106
- Mission Annual Conferences: constituted, 166-170, 313. For specific accounts see under the various foreign fields.
- Missionaries, Board. For listings see under separate mission entries, and by name. For policy of service see listings under "Missionary Society."
- Missionaries, Self-Support. See listings under "Taylor Self-Support Missions," and Angola and Congo entries, and by name.
- Missionary Advocate*, 365
- Missionary Board. See "Missionary Society."
- Missionary Episcopacy, 174-180, 885-886, 894n.
- Missionary Methods (see also under separate mission entries): preaching and itinerating, 185-188; literature distribution, 188; schools and teaching, 188-191; medical programs, 191-193
- Missionary Motive, 180-184, 891n., 919n., 925
- Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church: 9, 21, 42; nationalistic note expressed by, 38; aided by Board of Education, 107; aided by Tract Society, 109-110; linked to General Missionary Committee, 116-118; demand for two boards, 119-120; constitution changed, 119n., 226, 982; organization and function of, 121-122; Board presidents, 121n.; the Secretariat of, 122-130; income, 130-134; division of appropriations, 131n.; memberships in, 133n.; distribution of missionary dollar, 134n.; proposal to unite with Church Extension Soc. fails, 136n.; view of, toward formation of W. F. M. S., 141; missionary salaries, 145, 163, 166n.; distribution of literature, 155; shortage of missionary supply, 157-158; policy on self-support, 160; policy on furloughs, 163-164; on missionaries' retirement, 164-165; preference for married missionaries, 165-166; women missionaries, 166; lay missionaries, 166, 166n.; considers autonomy for foreign Conferences, 169-170; qualifications of missionaries, 185; partiality for home missions, 365; purchases slave to make him missionary, 872n.
-
- program of, re China: au-

- thorizes mission, 367; instructions to mission, 369; financial difficulties of, affect, 420; urged to establish West China Mission, 420
-
- re Domestic Missions: recognizes need to aid, 194-195, 195*n.*; appropriations for, 205-206, 206*n.*, 207, 212, 218, 228-229, 233, 236, 237; on mission to Mormons, 243-244; and Bethel Ship Mission, 272; funds for minor foreign language missions, 297, 298, 298*n.*, 299; organizes South into District Departments, 302; appropriations for Alabama Conference, 308-309; Indian policy, 325; and "Peace Policy" among Indians, 327-329, 330, 331, 332, 336, 340, 341, 354, 358, 360, 361-362, 363
-
- re European Missions: 124; promises funds for Copenhagen church, 947; includes Sweden as mission field, 956; authorizes mission in Germany, 982; appropriates funds for Germany, 982-983, 985; sends missionaries to Germany, 982, 983-984; sanctions formation of Methodist Societies within State Churches in Germany, 994; appropriates funds for Zurich church, 996; instructions to Bulgaria Mission, 1018
-
- re India and Malaysia: 451*n.*, 467, 485, 490, 548, 609, 640, 641-642; commissions Butler to establish mission, 449-451; appeals for reinforcements, 453*n.*; instructions to missionaries, 465; on private appeals for funds, 468-471; controversy with William Butler, 470-474; Mission Conference, 474; actions on indebtedness, 475-476; on women's work, 499-501; on William Taylor's work, 519; recognition of Taylor's work, 527-528; relations with South India Conference, 536, 539-542; turns down appeal for expansion of Burma work, 594; cuts appropriation, North India, 610; decreased appropriation, Northwest India Conference, 632; methods of recruiting personnel, 641-642; rigid form of organization, 645; report on Malaysia, 651-653; approves Shellabear as missionary, 655
-
- re Japan: urged to open mission, 664; addressed by Maclay on founding mission, 667, 679, 680; Conference asks for more missionary teachers, 694; policy on language facility of missionaries, 738*n.*
-
- re Liberia and Africa: 881, 895, 923; sends missionaries to Liberia, 870, 872, 884, 886, 889, 903; approves autonomy for Liberia, 872-873, 879-880, 890, 899, 900; appropriations for, 871, 878, 885, 886, 890, 899, 926; recalls N. B. Bastion, 873-874; dissatisfied with mission, 874, 881-882, 885; educational schemes for, 876, 879; other financial aid, 879; appealed to by Bishop Burns, 881; on Bishop Burns, 883; on founding interior mission, 883, 888, 892, 894; allays Conference dissatisfaction, 887; offered Taylor's Liberia missions, 900, 923-924; takes over Taylor's Africa missions, 913, 920, 921; Taylor's report to, 1889, 916*n.*; policy in, evaluated, 921-922; methods in, contrasted with Taylor's, 925-926, 930
-
- re Mexico: establishes mission, 828-829; dispute with William Butler, 846-848; appoints Drees Superintendent, 848, 852, 854*n.*; urged to facilitate work among Indians, 860, 861; makes no provision for developing native ministry, 865; critical of lack of country work, 867
-
- re South America: 820; withdrawal from, 758; appropriations for, 759, 760, 762-763, 765, 771; objective in, 759, 760; unable to find personnel for, 760-761; Carrow's dispute with, 762-763; relieves Carrow as Superintendent, 763; postpones reopening Montevideo, 764, 766; agrees to limit work to Spanish-speaking people, 768-769, 771, 772, 778; challenges persecution in Peru, 785, 786, 787, 790-791; disagreement with Taylor over South America West Coast missions, 792-793, 808-810; jurisdictional dispute on West Coast missions, 812, 815, 816, 817-818
- Mitami, M., 294-295
- Mitchell, Bennett, 204, 250
- Mitchell, Mrs. C. G., 152
- Mitchell, Emma E., 407*n.*
- Miyama, Kanichi, 292, 293, 294, 728
- Mohammedans: 148*n.*; in India and Malaysia, 492, 561, 568, 591, 602, 616-617, 624, 631, 639, 644, 646; in Liberia, 872, 893
- Molokan sect, 1020, 1020*n.*, 1023
- Monelle, Nancy. See Nancy Monelle Mansell.
- Monroe, David C. and Mrs., 509*n.*, 607*n.*
- Monroe, Samuel Y.: 135-136; account of, 135*n.*
- Monroy, Epigmenio, 851-852
- Montgomery, Sir Robert, 459
- Moody, Dwight L.: 77, 88, 89, 89*n.*, 532; account of, 88*n.*

- Moore, Daniel Davies and Mrs., 588*n.*, 656-657, 658*n.*
 Moore, James R., 882*n.*, 884*n.*, 888
 Moore, Sarah E., 360-361
 Moore, William Arnold and Mrs., 540*n.*, 568, 569*n.*, 594*n.*
 Morehouse, L. A., 357
 Morgan, Fred H. and Mrs., 660
 Morgan, Henry, 67
 Mormonism: in Utah, 243-246; in Sweden, 281, 281*n.*; in Norway, 934; in Denmark, 955
 Morrill Tariff Act, 19
 Morris, John L., 872, 872*n.*, 882*n.*
 Morris, Robert, 34
 Morris, Thomas A. (Bishop): 58, 121*n.*, 208*n.*, 229, 234, 301*n.*; letter of commission to Bastion, 875; re Germany, 982, 983-984, 989, 991, 994; re Bulgaria, 1021
 Morris, William C., 783, 818*n.*
 Morrison, Robert, 369*n.*, 651*n.*
 Morton, Thomas E. F. and Mrs., 540*n.*, 551, 556, 576-577, 582, 586*n.*, 590, 594*n.*
 Moses, Ina H., 823
 Mott, John R., 90
 Mougey, J. W., 320-321
 Moule, G. E. (Anglican Bishop), 403
 Moya, Clemente A., 299
 Mozambique, missions in: Inhambane District, 921; Inhambane, 921; Kambini, 921; Makodweni, 921; Mongive, 921
 Mudge, James and Mrs., 58, 71, 90*n.*, 484*n.*, 488*n.*
 Mueller, C. G., 987*n.*
 Mukerji, Piyarey M., 513, 528*n.*, 529, 533*n.*, 535*n.*, 556*n.*
 Mulligan, W. G. T., 586*n.*
 Mulliner, Clara: 848, 849; account of, 849*n.*
 Munhall, L. W., 74
 Munson, Ralph W. and Mrs., 542*n.*, 586*n.*, 653, 654, 656*n.*, 657, 658, 658*n.*
 Myers, Andrew S. and Mrs., 907*n.*, 908, 929*n.*
 Myers, Quincy A. and Mrs., 427*n.*
- N
- Nachoff, Tena, 1026, 1026*n.*
 Nada, George, 335
 Nakada, Kyukichi, 689*n.*
 Nakayama, Chiujo, 689*n.*, 727
 Narasiah, Mutyallappa, 545*n.*, 573
 Nash, Ada, 590
 Nast, William, 262, 981-982, 990, 991
 Natal, 921
 Nath, Proshono C., 586*n.*
 National Association for the Promotion of Holiness, 71, 71*n.*
 National Camp Meeting Association, 91-92
 National League for the Protection of American Institutions, 328*n.*
National Magazine, 112*n.*
 National Sunday School Convention, 100*n.*
 Neeld, Frank L. and Mrs., 607, 607*n.*
 Neely, Thomas B., 103
 Negroes (see also entries under "Methodist Episcopal Church, Postwar Work in South," for "Freedmen," and for "Slavery"): denied equality, 61; Old People's Homes established for, 82; Southwestern Christian Advocate for, 111; women's work begun, 149, 150-151, 152; Conference leadership in Liberia, 872-873; on question of electing to episcopacy, 894*n.*
 Negrotto, Salvador, 776*n.*
 Nehne, Henry, 917, 920*n.*
 Neiger, Lillian, 860
 Neissmann, Elena, 804*n.*
 Nelson, James W. and Mrs., 818*n.*
 Nelson, John Newton, 808, 810, 810*n.*
 Nelson, Justus H. and Mrs.: 808, 810*n.*, 816, 816*n.*, 818*n.*, 822; account of, 808*n.*
 Nelson, Martinus, 281-282
 Nelson, Reuben, 121*n.*
 Nestorians, 369*n.*
 Nevares, Jose P., 854
 New Connexion Methodist Mission. See "Methodist New Connexion."
 New England Aid Company, 211*n.*
 New England Women's Foreign Missionary Society, 140*n.*
 Newborg, Peter, 276
 Newhouse, Charles, 797, 799
 Newhouse, Finley D. and Mrs., 542*n.*, 579, 586*n.*
 Newlon, William E., 533*n.*, 535*n.*, 564
 Newman, Jesse F., 406*n.*
 Newman, John Philip (Bishop) and Mrs.: 150, 175*n.*, 302, 302*n.*; re Japan, 696, 698-699; re South America, 791, 817, 818-819; re Europe, 1036, 1056
 Newman, Sven B., 273, 274, 275, 276, 283
 Newsom, John E. and Mrs., 611*n.*, 632*n.*, 635
 Newth, John A., 916*n.*, 917*n.*, 920*n.*
 Niceto, Jose Isidore, 833
 Nichols, C. C., 244
 Nichols, Don W., 406*n.*
 Nichols, Florence L., 509*n.*
 Nichols, Milton H., 533*n.* 1, 2; 535*n.*, 556
 Nichols, William D., 899-900, 903*n.*
 Nicholson, Enoch G., 236-237
 Nicholson, Henry R., 762-763, 766, 766*n.*

- Nickerson, Florence, 509*n*.
 Nickerson, Linus M., 352
 Nielsen, Markus, 947, 948
 Nilsen, Frederikke, 942-943, 976*n*.
 Nilsson, N. J., 964, 967, 970*n*.
 Nimmo, A. F., 903*n*.
 Nind, George B. and Mrs., 298-299, 808, 818*n*., 822
 Nind, Mrs. Mary C., 600-601
 Ninde, William X. (Bishop): 171, 175*n*. 1, 2; re India and Malaysia, 542-543, 585, 586, 653, 663; re Japan, 701, 725, 746*n*.; re Bulgaria, 1039
 Ninomiya, Yasuji, 700
 Nippert, Lewis: 984; work of, 986-990, 990*n*., 996, 997*n*., 998*n*., 999*n*.; account of, 984*n*.
 Nitobe, Inazo, 684*n*.
 Noble, William Arthur: 753; account of, 753*n*.
 Nonaka, K., 292
 Norcross, A. H., 297
 Norris, W. H., 302*n*.
 Norris, William H., 759, 763, 864
 North, C. C., 106
 North China Mission and Conference (see also "China Mission"): 157, 162, 185, 191; account of, 410-421; beginnings of, 410-412; arrival of missionaries, 411, 413, 415, 416*n*., 419*n*.; educational activities, 412, 416; Peking University (Wiley Institute), 412, 417, 418; medical work of, 413; character of converts, 413-414; chief centers of work (1879), 415; statistics, 415, 418*n*., 419, 421; use of preaching, 416; Districts, 416, 417, 418, 419; persecution of, 418; Conference organized, 419; handicaps of, 419-420; mission protests salary reduction, 420; program threatened by war, famine, floods, and pestilence, 420-421
 North China Mission, W. F. M. S.: opens work in, 412; arrival of missionaries, 412, 413, 416*n*., 419*n*.; Mary Porter Gamewell School (Peking girls' school), 412-413, 412*n*., 413*n*., 416, 444; educational activities, 414; medical work of, 414-415
 North Germany Conference, 1893-95: organized, 1005; work in Districts: Bremen, 1005-1006, Oldenburg, 1006-1007; Berlin, 1007-1008, Leipzig, 1008-1009; summary of work and statistics, 1013-1018; difficulties, 1015-1017
 North India Conference (see also "India Conference," and "India and Malaysia Missions" entries): 130, 169, 186-187, 190; schools, 134*n*., 192, 605-632; Sunday schools, 190; organized, 487, 605; work in Districts: Rohilkhand, 605, 612-617, Kumaon, 605, 618-622, Oudh, 605, 622-626, Sitapur, 605*n*., Garhwal, 605*n*., Amroha (Sambhal), 605*n*., 626-627, Agra, 605*n*., 627-628, Aligarh, 605*n*., 628-629, Bareilly, 605*n*., 629-630, Moradabad, 605*n*., 630, Pilibhit, 605*n*., 630-631, Gonda, 605*n*., 631, 632, Budaun, 605*n*., 631-632; visual aid evangelization, 607; arrival of missionaries, 607, 607*n*., 611*n*.; statistics and growth of, 609-611; appropriations for, 610
 Northeast South America Mission. Identical with the South America Mission.
 Northrup, Frederick H., 611*n*.
 Northrup, James A., 537*n*.
 Northwest India Conference: established, 632; self-support, 632, 634; schools, 632-638; charter members, 632*n*.; work in Districts: Agra, 633-634, Kasganj, 634, Ajmer, 634-635, Allahabad, 635-636, Bulandshahr, 636, Mussooree, 636-637, Meerut, 637-639
 Norton, Albert, 519, 526, 528*n*., 551, 554, 575-576
 Norton, G. B., 695, 698*n*., 699
 Norway Mission and Conference: 107, 124, 154, 155, 156*n*., 169, 956, 959; episcopal visitations of, 173*n*., 174*n*. 1, 2; 175*n*. 1, 2; account of, 933-946; establishment of, 933-936; missionaries appointed, 934, 935, 936, 941; appropriations for, 934*n*.; difficulties, 937, 939-941, 944, 946; theological school, 938, 942, 944, 945; publications in, 938, 942; Conference organized, 939; Districts, 939, 945, 945*n*.; appointments, 939*n*.; growth of, 943; Epworth League in, 944-945; orphanage founded, 945; statistics (1895), 945-946
 Norwegians-Danes, domestic missions to: 153; mission organized, 279, 279*n*.; early leaders, 279-280; Norwegian Mission District organized (1856), 280; separation of Norwegian and Swedish work, 280-281, 280*n*., 281*n*.; Norwegian Annual Conference formed (1880), 281, 281*n*.; in Utah, 281-282; on West Coast, 282; publications of, 283
 Nuelsen, Heinrich: 985, 986, 990*n*., 998*n*., 999*n*., 1002, 1006; account of, 985*n*.
 Nuelsen, John L. (Bishop), 269

O

- Oakes, Thomas H., 529, 533*n*. 1, 2; 535*n*., 542*n*., 558, 563

- Oehsen, Johannes von, 999*n.*, 1005*n.*
 Ogata, Sennosuke: 706, 708, 709, 710, 739;
 account of, 706*n.*
 Ogburn, Kate L., 407*n.*
 Ogen, Henrietta C., 803*n.*, 835, 835*n.*
 Oh Ai-toh, 654
 Ohara, Yekichi, 671*n.*, 674
 Ohlinger, Franklin and Mrs.: work of,
 China, 383, 387, 388-390, 421, 438, 438*n.*;
 work of, Japan, 747-748, 751, 753, 754;
 account of, 390*n.*
 Okamoto, M., 294
 Olcott, E. E., 784-785
 Oldham, William Fitzjames (Bishop) and Mrs.: conversion of, 521-523; missionary in India and Malaysia, 535, 542*n.*, 564,
 582, 584-585, 586*n.*, 592-593, 605*n.*, 650-
 655; account of, 523*n.*
 O'Leary, Cecelia. See Mrs. W. A. Moore.
 Olin, Stephen, 40-41, 114, 115, 119, 219-220,
 324-325, 327, 365, 368*n.*, 758-759, 894*n.*
 Olsen, Anders, 938, 939*n.*, 941, 944
 Olsen, Peter, 937, 939*n.*
 Olson, August, 957, 959, 961
 Oman, J., 920
 Onuki, Bunshichi, 671*n.*, 679, 689*n.*
 Oregon Institute, 228-229
 Oregon Mission. See under "Domestic Missions under Missionary Society." Orphanages, Methodist (see also various mission and W. F. M. S. entries), founding of, 82
 Orr, Kate, 904*n.*
 Orthodox Church. See "Greek Orthodox Church."
 Ortlip, Andrew and Mrs., 896*n.*, 903*n.*
 Osbon, A. M., 95, 273
 Osborn, William B., 537*n.*, 546, 550-551
 Osborne, Mrs. A. See Alma Lawson.
 Osborne, D. E. and Mrs., 416*n.*
 Osborne, Dennis: 512, 535, 545, 555, 574-
 583, 586, 586*n.*, 591, 593, 632*n.*, 635;
 account of, 512*n.*
 Osgood, Joel, 893-894
 Ostlund, Jonas, 957
 Otto, Alice M., 707*n.*
Our Youth, 105*n.*
 Owen, Isaac: 229*n.*, 233, 233*n.*, 234-235;
 account of, 233*n.*
 Owen, Thomas B., 394*n.*
 Owens, Charles, 903*n.*
 Oxford League, 103
- P
- Paine, Jason L., 250*n.*
 Paine, Josephine, 752
 Palacios, Augustin, 854*n.*, 865
 Palm, Alexander, 960, 962, 970*n.*
 Palmer, A. J., 296
 Palmer, General Joel, 353
 Palmer, Phoebe, 71
 Palmer, W. C., 367
 Panama (see also "South America Mission"): 806; Taylor enters, 796
 Papacy, 1041-1042
 Paraguay (see also "South America Mission" entries): first entry by Protestants, 774; work begun, 781; District statistics, 1893-95, 821-822
 Pardoe, Mary E. V.: 706, 707; account of,
 706*n.*
 Parker, Edwin Wallace and Mrs.: 140*n.*,
 143, 181, 185, 189, 190, 192; work of,
 453, 458-464, 472-477, 479*n.*, 487, 489-494,
 510, 605-606, 608-609, 609*n.*, 612, 612*n.*,
 614, 615, 622, 640-642, 657, 661; organization of W. F. M. S., 139-141, 143, 146*n.*; accounts of, 139*n.*, 181*n.*
 Parker, Joshua, 565
 Parker, Lois Stiles Lee. See Mrs. Edwin
 W. Parker.
 Parker, Peter, 35-36
 Parker, Richard C., 327*n.*
 Parker, Theda A., 859
 Parkhurst, Charles, 862
 Parrish, G. L., 351
 Parsees, 527, 594-595
 Parsons, Josiah: 459; account of, 453*n.*
 Parvin, Theodore, 758
 Patagonian Missionary Society. See "South American Missionary Society."
 Paul, Ambica Charn, 457, 460, 465
 Paull, C. G., 836, 837
 Paulus, F., 999, 999*n.*
 Payne, Charles H., 107
 Payne, James S.: 873, 882, 889*n.*; account of, 888
 Payne, William H., 876, 882*n.*
 Peabody, Francis G., 84
 Pearcey, Frank, 553
 Pearne, T. H., 305*n.*
 Pearne, Thomas, 352, 364
 Pearne, William H., 302*n.*, 312
 Peat, Jacob F. and Mrs., 427*n.*, 429*n.*
 Peck, George: 47, 95, 176*n.*; account of,
 47*n.*
 Peck, Jeanette, 912*n.*
 Peck, Jesse T. (Bishop): 108-109, 174*n.*,
 667; re Europe, 941, 951, 975
 Peck, Jonas O.: 129, 609, 610, 1050; account of, 129*n.*
 Peck, N. R., 259
 Peery, E. T., 344*n.*
 Peet, James, 202
 Pennsylvania Dutch, mission to, 299

- Penzotti, Francis: work of, 773-781, 784-786, 818*n*.
- People's Party (Populists), 23*n*.
- Perkins, Fannie A., 602*n*.
- Perkins, J. W., 335
- Perrie, Joseph R., 376*n*.
- Perrine, Florence. See Mrs. William A. Mansell.
- Perry, Matthew C., 35, 35*n*., 664
- Pershad, Ishwari, 632*n*.
- Persia, 156
- Peru: lack of religious liberty, 784-785; war with Chile, 799; revolution, 1895, 792
- Peru Mission (see also South America Mission entries for W. F. M. S. and other information): 155; visited, 776, 780, 784-785; Taylor enters, 792-794; Taylor centers, 793, 794, 807
- Peter, Leonhardt, 1011, 1011*n*.
- Peters, Benjamin (Indian): 532, 535*n*., 562; account of, 562*n*.
- Peters, Ernst, 986, 988, 990
- Peters, Ezra, 593
- Peters, Mary, 395*n*.
- Peters, Sarah, 407*n*., 409
- Peters, William, 588*n*., 631
- Petersen, Lars, 943, 944
- Petersen, Ole Peter: 273, 279, 280, 933; work of, 934-938
- Petroff, Dimitri, 1024
- Petterson, C. J. F., 967
- Peyton, William K., 296
- Phayre, Sir Robert, 556
- Phelps, Frances E.: 707, 731; account of, 707*n*.
- Philippine Islands, 38, 158
- Phillips, Charles, 651
- Phillips, John M., 121*n*.
- Pierce, Franklin (President, U. S.), 35
- Pierce, Gustavus M., 244-245, 246*n*.
- Pierce, Ralph and Mrs., 452, 455*n*., 488*n*., 511*n*. 1, 2
- Pierce, Sarah White (2nd wife Ralph Pierce), 166*n*., 455*n*.
- Pierson, Eudora, 818*n*.
- Piggott, Henry J., 1040, 1043, 1051, 1058-1059
- Pilcher, E. H., 1040
- Pilcher, Leander W., 191, 411, 412, 420
- Pinckney, Caroline, 271*n*.
- Pitezel, John H., 207, 329-330, 331, 343
- Pitman, Charles A.: 880*n*., 881, 884*n*., 887, 893; account of, 893*n*.
- Pitman, Charles A. (Missionary Society Secretary), 122, 123, 197, 228*n*., 325, 366
- Pitts, Fountain E., 758
- Pius IX, 863, 1041-1042
- Pixley, Edward, 920*n*.
- Plan of Separation, 299-300
- Plomer, Claudius H., 540*n*., 575, 579, 586*n*., 632*n*., 635
- Plumb, Nathan J., 383, 386, 387, 392, 393, 438, 438*n*.
- Plumer, Jane V., 615
- Plymouth Brethren: in Italy, 1058
- Poe, Adam, 121*n*.
- Pogge, Paul, 904
- Poiglase, John, 651, 654
- Polk, James A. (President, U. S.), 228*n*.
- Polsinelli, Domenico, 1047*n*., 1050*n*., 1057*n*.
- Pons, Giovanni, 1050*n*., 1057*n*.
- Pope, W. B., 73
- Poppe, E. C., 983, 985
- Porter, Emma C., 166*n*., 455*n*.
- Porter, Ethel G., 823
- Porter, James, 119
- Porter, Mary Q. (see also Mrs. Frank D. Gamewell): 412, 444; account of, 412*n*.
- Portuguese, domestic missions to, 298-299
- Potter, Miss, 818*n*.
- Potter, Phebe E. See Phebe E. Potter Wentworth.
- Potter, S. W., 354
- Powar, Sundarbai, 547
- Powderly, Terence V., 65
- Powell, Elmer E., 1054, 1057*n*.
- Powell, J. J., 903*n*.
- Powell, Rowland D. and Mrs., 816*n*., 818*n*. 1, 2; 824
- Prante, August, 999*n*., 1008*n*.
- Pratt, Josiah S., 896
- Prauch, Arthur W. and Mrs., 542*n*., 554-555, 594*n*., 650
- Pray, Susan M., 385
- Presbyterian Church: 2*n*., 49*n*., 71, 81*n*., 93, 135*n*., 211, 218, 230*n*., 234, 246*n*., 284*n*., 287*n*.; among American Indians, 327*n*., 341*n*., 342*n*.
- Presbyterian Church in the U. S.: in Japan, 690-691; in Mexico, 829*n*.
- Presbyterian Church of England: in India, 583*n*.
- Presbyterian Church, U.S.A.: 284*n*.; in India and Malaysia, 160*n*., 452*n*., 459, 513*n*., 514, 574, 580, 635, 651*n*.; in China, 410*n*.; in Japan, 664*n*., 666*n*., 667*n*., 737; in Korea, 744, 746-747, 748, 756-757, 757*n*.; in Mexico, 806*n*., 829*n*.
- Presbyterians, Scotch, 747
- Prettyman, Wesley, 302*n*., 1018, 1019, 1020-1022

- Price, J. G., 807-808
 Price, T. W., 847
 Priest, Mary A., 682-683
 Princeton Foreign Missionary Society, 89n.
 Printing Presses. See "Methodist Book Concern" and under the various mission entries.
 Prohibition Party, 55, 56
 Protestant Episcopal Church: 84, 84n., 234, 246n., 250n., 287n., 327n., 336n.; in China, 410n.; in Japan, 664n., 667n.; in Mexico, 828n.
 Publications, Church, 110-111, 112n.
 Publications, Mission. See under the various mission entries.
 Pucklitsch, Ernst, 999n., 1005n., 1007
 Pultz, Lizzie M., 509n.
 Putnam, Jonathan W., 201, 201n.
 Pyke, James H. and Mrs., 413, 419, 434
 Pykett, George Frederick and Mrs.: 656, 658, 658n.; account of, 656n.
- Q
- Quakers. See "Society of Friends."
- R
- Rader, D. L., 254
 Raith, Christian, 999n., 1008n.
 Ramabai, Pandita, 547
 Ramirez, Corscencio, 849
 Ramirez, Ignacio, 830, 831
 Ramirez, Jesus, 842
 Ramsay, Henry, 453, 477
 Randall, A. B., 199
 Ransom, John D., 632n.
 Rasmussen, William and Mrs., 916n., 918, 920n., 925-926
 Ratcliffe, Charles A., 907, 907n., 908, 927
 Ratcliffe, Lavinia, 912n.
 Rau, John Jacob, 766, 766n.
 Raven, Louise, 912n.
 Ravi, Vincenzo, 1045, 1046, 1046n., 1047n., 1048, 1050n., 1057
 Raymond, Mary E., 362-363
 Raymond, Miner: 69; account of, 74n.
 Reasoner, N., 244
 Reed, Mary: 509n., 619-620; account of, 620n.
 Reeder, G. A., 241-242
 Reeder, Henry, 346
 Reformed Church in America, 327n.
 Reid, John M.: as Corresponding Secretary, 124, 126, 127, 129, 130, 133, 183, 264, 272, 770; re China, 368, 406, 425, 425n.; re India, 528, 540, 606; re Europe, 941, 975, 1030, 1049; account of, 127n.
 Reischauer, Edwin O., 737
 Revivalism, 86-87, 91-92
 Reynolds, Sarah M., 879
 Rial, Jose J., 769
 Rice, William North, 78
 Rich, Mrs. Thomas A., 140n.
 Richards, Erwin H., 921
 Richards, Ira A. and Mrs., 537n., 545n., 564, 571n.
 Richards, John, 524-525, 524n.
 Rickli, Mr., 1003
 Riemenschneider, Engelhardt: 985, 986, 987, 990n., 996, 997n., 998n., 999n.; account of, 985n.
 Riggin, F. A., 257, 362
 Riggs, Elias, 1023
 Riley, Henry C., 828-829
 Rindge, F. H., 133
 Rindge, Mrs. M. K., 133
 Ring, Frederick, 939n., 940
 Robbins, William E., 519, 528n. 1, 2; 533n., 535n., 549-550, 594n., 595
 Robert, John, 588n.
 Roberts, Ellis, 573
 Roberts, Mrs. J. E., 349
 Roberts, J. N., 903n.
 Roberts, Mrs. J. S., 150
 Roberts, John Wright (Bishop): 177, 871, 873, 876, 883-885, 886n., 892; account of, 177n.
 Roberts, Joseph J. (President, Liberia), 872
 Roberts, Thomas, 285n.
 Roberts, William, 163, 166, 227-234, 228n., 229n., 247-248, 247n., 248n., 288
 Roberts, Zachariah B., 898, 903n.
 Robertson, Frederick William, 83, 98
 Robertson, J. H. and Mrs., 841, 841n.
 Robertson, J. T., 593
 Robertson, James B., 903n.
 Robidoux, Pacifique J., 264, 320-321
 Robinson, John E. (Bishop) and Mrs.: missionary in India, 158, 528n., 533n., 535n., 544, 546, 548-549, 550, 555, 564, 565, 566, 571, 583-585, 584n., 586, 594n.; in Singapore, 595-596, 652-653; account of, 583n.
 Robinson, John W. and Mrs., 611n., 623
 Robinson, Mary C., 402
 Robinson, William T. and Mrs.: 782, 801, 818n. 1, 2; 821; account of, 801n.
 Robles, Juan, 779, 818n.
 Rockey, Noble L. and Mrs.: 607, 607n., 616, 630; account of, 616n.
 Rodemeyer, August, 991, 999n., 1010n.
 Rodgers, Anna M., 859
 Rodriguez, Trinidad, 835, 865
 Rogers, E. H., 64, 252

- Roman Catholic Church: 1-2, 12, 50*n.*, 61*n.*, 226, 241, 328*n.*, 334, 339-341, 351, 359; in China, 369*n.*, 421, 438*n.*; in India and Malaysia, 524, 594, 656; in Japan, 665, 665*n.*, 667*n.*, 681*n.*, 687*n.*, 723; in Korea, 745, 748; in Italy, 1041-1042, 1055, 1059
 ——— in South America: missionaries sent to members of, 759; members of prefer English schools, 761, 762, 764; intimidates people attending services and schools, 769-770, 778; supports Taylor's work, 794, 796; Nelson jailed for criticism of, 822, 827
 ——— in Mexico: method of work among members of, 828-829, 834; Jesuits, 839; persecutes Protestants, 842-845, 856, 864-866, 867-868
- Romero, Indalecio, 804-805
 Roorck, J. H., 327*n.*, 352
 Roose, F. F. and Mrs., 818*n.*
 Roscoe, Harvey L. and Mrs., 611*n.*
 Roseman, Janette, 908, 912*n.*
 Rosen, N. J., 980, 981*n.*
 Rosenius, Carol Olaf, 956*n.*
 Ross, Ira G. and Mrs., 803*n.*, 814, 815
 Ross, John, 747, 757
 Ross, W. Z., 302*n.*
 Roth, Johannes, 155, 970*n.*, 972, 980
 Rothweiler, Louisa C.: 746, 751, 752; account of, 746*n.*
 Round, J. E., 302*n.*
 Rouse, Wilma, 392*n.*
 Row, I. F., 535*n.*, 547, 563
 Row, Rama Krishna, 601
 Rowe, Phoebe, 506, 604, 625
 Royal, T. F. and Mrs., 352, 353
 Rudisill, Abraham W. and Mrs.: 542*n.*, 545*n.*, 562, 600, 600*n.*; account of, 562*n.*
 Rudisill, James, 545*n.*
 Rudisill, L. A., 246*n.*, 355
 Rudolph, Karl, 907*n.*, 909, 909*n.*
 Rugg, Miss E., 818*n.*
 Rule, Frank, 837
 Rule, William B., 850, 851
 Rulofson, Gazelle M., 712
 Rural life, U. S.: plight of farmers, 19th century, 19-23; increased farm tenantry, 24-25; Methodism related to, 26
 Russ, Hamilton C., 903*n.*
 Russell, Elizabeth, 688, 689, 721, 722, 723
 Russell, James A., 818*n.*
 Russell, Kate, 804*n.*
 Russell, M. Helen, 710
 Russia. For work in, see "Finland and St. Petersburg Mission."
 Rust, Elizabeth L. (Mrs. Richard S.), 150, 151, 151*n.*
 Rust, Richard S., 149, 322, 322*n.*
 Ruth, E. Naomi (3rd wife W. G. Shellabear), 655*n.*
 Ryder, Mrs. M. A., 150
 Rye, P. K., 948
- S
- Sage, Russell, 32
 Sahai, Ram, 632*n.*
 Salmans, Levi B. and Mrs.: 855, 860, 861; account of, 855*n.*
 Salvation Army, 88
 Samoa, 37
 Samuel, H. N., 589
 Samuel, Jacob, 542*n.*, 576, 590
 Samuelson, Charles, 274
 Sanaker, James A., 942, 945*n.*
 Sanborn, Mary E., 803*n.*
 Sandwich Islands. See "Hawaiian Islands."
 Sankey, Ira D., 88
 Santo Domingo, 36, 37*n.*
 Sarmiento, Domingo Faustino, 763*n.*, 827
 Sato, Shosuke, 684*n.*
 Sauvain, David F., 765, 766*n.*
 Sauvain, Eugene S., 946, 766*n.*
 Sawai, Konosuke, 718
 Sayford, S. M., 89
 Scandinavia, immigrants from, 4, 6, 8, 27*n.*, 269, 278-279
 Scandinavians, domestic missions to: common mission to three nationalities, 269-270, 277, 280-281; Scandinavian Mission District, 277, 280; education, 282-283, 283*n.*; publications, 283; statistics, growth, 283-284
 Schaaf, P., 993
 Schell, Edwin A., 105
 Schell, Karl, 1007
 Schenck, Linna M., 1031, 1031*n.*, 1032, 1033
 Schilling, Gerhard J. and Mrs., 588*n.*, 593
 Schively, J. H. and Mrs., 545*n.*, 611*n.*
 Schiverly, J. H., 818*n.*
 Schmidt, Ferdinand, 1008*n.*, 1011*n.*
 Schmidt, J. G., 276
 Schmucker, Peter, 268
 Schneebeli, Johann, 998*n.*, 999*n.*, 1011*n.*
 Schneidmiller, William, 903*n.*
 Schofield, Louise, 818*n.*
 Schools: domestic missions, 228-229, 240-241, 244-246. For foreign schools see under various mission and W. F. M. S. entries.
 Schoonmaker, Dora, 189, 669, 669*n.*, 678
 Schou, Karl: 941, 955; administration of, 948-953; given legal recognition, 952; death of, 953

- Schroeder, Bernhard, 992, 999*n.*, 1011*n.*
 Schultz, Eva L., 818*n.*
 Schwartz, Henry B., 720
 Schwartz, Herbert W. and Mrs.: 693, 694, 698*n.*, 703, 705, 731; account of, 693*n.*
 Schwarz, Wilhelm: 990, 990*n.*, 997, 998*n.*, 999*n.*, 1003-1004; account of, 990*n.*
 Scott, Clifford S. and Mrs., 818*n.*
 Scott, D. W., 253
 Scott, Frances, 602*n.*
 Scott, George: 270, 955-956, 968; account of, 270*n.*
 Scott, J. D. A., 903*n.*
 Scott, Jefferson E.: 187, 454*n.*, 488*n.*, 492, 577, 582, 624, 628, 628*n.*, 633; account of, 492*n.*
 Scott, Julian, 419*n.*
 Scott, Levi (Bishop): 53, 121*n.*, 213-214, 277; re Liberia, 172, 877-880
 Scott, Thomas and Mrs.: 455*n.*, 463-464, 475*n.*, 481-482, 494-495, 500*n.*, 613, 644; account of, 481*n.*
 Scranton, Mary F.: 743, 744, 747, 749, 752, 754, 755, 756; account of, 743*n.*
 Scranton, William B. and Mrs.: 193, 742-756, 757*n.*; account of, 742*n.*
 Scripps, John, 46
 Seamen, work among. See Mariners' Bethels; see also under "India and Malaysia Mission, Evangelism."
 Sears, Anna B., 416, 416*n.*
 Sears, Clara, 818*n.*
 Seeds, Leonora, 724*n.*, 732
 Seely, Mary. See Mary Seely White.
 Segovia, Jose Maria, 833
 Segregation. See under "Methodist Episcopal Church, Postwar Work in South."
 Self-Support. See under separate mission entries.
 Self-Support Missions. See "Taylor Self-Support Missions."
 Sellers, Rue A., 509*n.*
 Seminaries, theological: 43; Union Seminary dissociates itself from Presbyterian Church, 81*n.*; introduce social studies, 84. For accounts of specific ones, see under entries for the various foreign missions and Conferences.
 Seney, George I., 22*n.*, 82
 Seward, William H., 36
 Seys, John, 166*n.*, 869, 893*n.*, 896
 Shank, John W., 766-767, 766*n.*
 Sharp, Lucy, 901
 Sharpe, Mary A.: 891, 897, 900; account of, 890*n.*
 Sharper, Lyman M., 903*n.*
 Sharpff, Adolf, 1010*n.*, 1011*n.*
 Shaw, Ella C., 406*n.*
 Shaw, Fawcett E. N. and Mrs., 545*n.*, 594*n.*
 Shaw, James, 330, 519, 528*n.* 1, 2; 529, 532, 533*n.*, 535*n.*, 566, 579
 Shaw, M'Kendree, 120
 Sheldon, H. B., 358
 Sheldon, Henry C.: 70; account of, 74*n.*
 Sheldon, Martha A., 509*n.*
 Shellabear, Elizabeth Ferris (2nd wife W. G. Shellabear), 655*n.*
 Shellabear, William G. and Mrs.: 588*n.*, 655, 656*n.*, 659, 660*n.* 1, 2; account of, 655*n.*
 Sherman, General W. T., 326
 Sherwood, Rosetta. See Mrs. William J. Hall.
 Shields, Robert, 909*n.*, 910-911, 912*n.*
 Shinkle, Mrs. Amos, 151*n.*
 Shinto, in Japan, 665, 666, 669, 691, 734-735
 Shirozu, Makoto, 732
 Shogren, Eric, 277
 Shoreland, E. A., 915, 916*n.*, 920*n.*
 Shreves, Oramil, 537*n.*
 Shuett, J. W. and Mrs., 912*n.*
 Shufeldt, Commodore Robert W., 741, 741*n.*
 Sia Sek-ong, 161, 182, 387, 388, 394, 438*n.*
 Siberts, Samuel W. and Mrs., 840, 841, 843, 845*n.*, 848, 848*n.*, 849, 852, 854*n.*
 Simmons, Charles W. and Mrs., 611*n.*
 Simonds, S. D., 235
 Simons, Maud E., 713
 Simonsen, Nels E., 283, 942
 Simpson, Matthew (Bishop): 68, 121*n.*, 123, 135*n.*, 144, 172, 173*n.*, 216, 306, 318, 319; re India, 449, 451, 454, 469*n.*, 528; re Mexico, 828-829, 833-834; re Europe, 936, 938, 990, 1018, 1024*n.*
 Simpson, Sarah, 882
 Simpson, William, 196
 Sims, A. L., 903*n.*
 Sims, T. A., 901
 Sin Tru-tsai, 396
 Singer, Florence E., 718
 Singh, Paul, 594*n.*
 Sites, Nathan and Mrs.: 182, 380, 381, 387, 421, 434; account of, 182*n.*
 Sites, Ruth, 391, 391*n.*, 392*n.*
 Skipworth, N. M., 352
 Slaughter, W. B., 216
 Slavery: issue in settling the West, 6, 211; Methodism's attitude toward, 51-54; strength in Missouri, 204-205; question of, in domestic missions, 204-205, 210-211; strength in Texas, 306; attitude of Indians toward, 344-345; and Liberia, 871, 875, 879, 890

- Slicer, Henry, 59
 Small, S. M., 309
 Smirl, C. E., 899
 Smith, Adeline M., 134, 429
 Smith, Amanda, 889, 896, 900
 Smith, Boie, 946, 947
 Smith, "Brother" and Mrs., 907*n*.
 Smith, Erastus, 244
 Smith, George (Anglican Bishop), 368
 Smith, H. W., 252
 Smith, Henry Preserved, 81*n*.
 Smith, Joel A. and Mrs., 402, 402*n*.
 Smith, John, 903*n*.
 Smith, Joseph F., 246*n*.
 Smith, Julius H. and Mrs., 588*n*., 592-594
 Smith, Lida B., 722
 Smith, Lucius C. and Mrs.: South America, 797, 800, 806, 810, 810*n*. 1, 2; Mexico, 851, 854*n*., 860
 Smith, Mrs. Lucius C. (2nd wife), 800
 Smith, Magnus and Mrs., 797, 798, 810*n*.
 Smith, Nena, 538*n*.
 Smith, Samuel J., 818*n*.
 Smith, Stacy A., 187, 427*n*.
 Smith, Thomas, 499
 Smith, William C., 219
 Smith, William F. C. M., 540*n*., 581-582
 Smith, William Robertson, 78*n*.
 Smootz, M. F., 569*n*.
 Smyth, George B., 392
 Snape, William and Mrs., 920*n*.
 Snider, Samuel E., 351, 362
 Snuggs, Edward T., 659
 Social services, Methodist (also see under mission and W. F. M. S. entries): growing interest in, 82-86; extended on mission field, 188-193
Society of the Brethren, 89*n*.
 Society of Friends: among Indians, 261*n*., 327*n*. 1, 2; in Mexico, 829*n*.; in Africa, 904*n*.
 Society of Friends (English), 483, 575
 Society for the Propagation of the Gospel: in India, 549; in Japan, 667*n*.
 Solomon, Abraham, 631
 Soper, Julius and Mrs.: 189, 667, 667*n*., 669, 670, 676, 678-679, 680, 681, 693, 700, 704-705, 706, 706*n*., 708, 709, 717, 718; account of, 669*n*.
 Sorensen, Christian, 947, 950
 Sorlin, Daniel S., 273, 962, 963
 Sortore, Ai, 916*n*., 917, 920*n*.
 Soule, Joshua (Bishop), 108, 981
 South America: 4, 9; independence arouses interest in U. S., 758; policy of missions in, 759; immigration, 761; U. S. establishes consulate at Rosario, 770; War of the Pacific, 809; literacy in, 827
 South America Conference. See "South America Mission."
 South America Mission (see also entries for "Chile Mission," "Argentina Mission," "Brazil Mission," "Uruguay Mission," "Peru Mission" and "Columbia Mission"): 131, 155, 169; episcopal visitations of, 173*n*., 174*n*., 175*n*. 1, 2; re-established by Lore, 759-760; Carrow appointed, 761, 765; schools and orphanages founded, 761, 764, 768, 769, 770, 772, 774, 775, 776, 783, 785, 788, 821-822; arrival of missionaries, 762, 764-765, 766, 767, 768, 769, 770, 771, 774, 775, 777, 779, 782, 783, 786, 819-820, 823, 824; internal threat to, 762-763; Goodfellow appointed Superintendent, 763; question of continuation, 763; growth and statistics of, (1861) 764, 770, (1884-85) 775-776, 782-783; work among nationals, 764-768, 771, 776, 779, 782; development of Spanish work, 767, 768-772, 774 783; hostility and persecution shown, 767, 773, 780, 781, 784-785, 792, 822-823; Jackson appointed Superintendent, 768; Uruguay entered, 768-769; chief centers of work, 770-772; Wood appointed Superintendent, 772; new territories entered, 774, 775, 776-777, 780; colporteurs, 775, 776; need for evangelism, 778; Drees appointed Superintendent, 779; annual meetings, (1889) 782, (1891) 785; Conference formed including Taylor work, 817, 818; work in Districts (1893-95), 819-824; evaluation of, 824-826

 Literature and Publications: Estrella Matutina, 767; Spanish hymnal, 768*n*., 771; distribution of tracts, 771, 782, 823; El Evangelista, 772*n*.; Spanish Discipline, 779*n*.; Apologista Christiano Brasileiro, 822; publications promoted in Peru, 822; publications in Chile, 823

 Schools and Education (see also Chile Mission, Schools, and under W. F. M. S.): Lices Evangelica, 777, 782; North American Normal School, 783; in Peru, 786; Buenos Aires theological seminary, 820; summary of educational work in S. A., 824, 827

 W. F. M. S.: 189-190; appropriations for, 772, 787; work of (1872-95), 782, 786-792; missionaries sent, 787, 788, 790, 791, 792, 821, 823; schools, 787, 790, 791, 792-793; Girls' Evangelical School, 789, 791; work separated from Missionary Society, 787; orphanage

- started, 788; W. F. M. S. branch organized, 791; summary of work, 820-823, 824
- South American Missionary Society, 765, 766
- South Germany Conference, 1893-95: organized, 1009; work in Districts: Frankfort, 1009-1010, Karlsruhe, 1010, Stuttgart, 1010-1011; summary of work and statistics, 1013-1018; difficulties, 1015-1017
- South India Conference: 169, 191, 488, 535-537; organized, 487; Taylor's preparatory work in, 510-535; program of self-support, 519, 527-528, 536-537, 539-542, 548, 568-570, 569*n.*, 650; appointments (1876), 535*n.*; missionaries of, 535*n.*, 537*n.*, 538*n.*, 542*n.*, 545*n.*; statistics, (1876) 535-536, (1887) 543, 597; work in Districts: Bombay, 533, 543, 544, 546-556, Calcutta, 533, 556-561, Madras, 533, 543, 544, 562-572, Hyderabad, 544, 572-573, Allahabad, 573-583, Burma, 583-585, Central India, 585; problems of, 536-537; development of native work, 536-543, 545, 577-578; schools, 537, 549-585; growth of, 542-543
- Southern Baptist Convention: in Mexico, 829*n.*
- Spangler, J. N., 217
- Spangler, John M. and Mrs., 779, 803, 818*n.*, 823
- Spanish language missions: 239-241, 299, 299*n.*; El Abogado Cristiano published, 240
- Sparkes, Fannie J.: 183-184, 479, 503, 509*n.*, 604, 628; account of, 183*n.*
- Sparr, Julia, 385
- Spates, Samuel, 342-343, 364
- Spaulding, D. L., 352
- Spaulding, Frank R., 818*n.*, 822
- Speer, Robert E., 90
- Spence, J. F., 305*n.*
- Spence, Mattie B., 574-575, 602*n.*
- Spencer, David S. and Mrs.: 681, 689*n.*, 703, 704, 722, 729, 730, 737; account of, 704*n.*
- Spencer, Frank A. and Mrs., 485*n.*, 488*n.*, 1043, 1044, 1054
- Spencer, John O., 166, 680, 680*n.*, 689*n.*, 695, 698*n.*
- Spencer, Matilda A.: 679, 704, 705, 706*n.*; account of, 679*n.*
- Spencer, William Anson: 138; account of, 138*n.*
- Sperry, Henrietta C. See Mrs. Robert S. Maclay.
- Spilfe, Johannes, 999*n.*, 1006, 1010*n.*
- Spinks, Esther L., 803
- Sporri, Jakob, 1011*n.*, 1012
- Squier, Lee W., 683, 689*n.*, 693, 694, 714, 715
- Squire Gray Eyes, 344, 364
- Stackpole, Everett S., 1050, 1051-1052, 1054, 1055, 1058, 1059
- Stacy, Thomas, 903*n.*
- Stagg, William T., 659, 660
- Stahl, Josephine, 602*n.*
- Staiger, Johannes, 992, 999*n.*
- Stanley, Sir Henry Morton, 178, 892
- Stanton, Alice M., 406*n.*
- Stanton, Edwin McMasters, 302, 302*n.*
- Starns, Thomas, 352-353
- Starr, Cora M., 804*n.*
- Stasio, Edoardo, 1046*n.*, 1047*n.*, 1050*n.*, 1057*n.*, 1058
- Staunton, Maria E. B., 879, 889*n.*
- Steel, Archer, Jr., 917*n.*, 920*n.*
- Steel, Archer, Sr., 920*n.*
- Steele, Salmon, 207, 220-221
- Steele, Walter and Mrs., 920*n.*
- Steensen, S. A., 936
- Steere, Anna E., 416*n.*
- Stephens, Anna M. Thompson (2nd wife W. H. Stephens), 601, 602*n.*
- Stephens, Grace: 600, 602, 604; account of, 600*n.*
- Stephens, Matthew, 623-624
- Stephens, Richard, 840-841
- Stephens, William H. and Mrs., 538*n.*, 547, 551-552, 552*n.*, 594*n.*, 599, 602*n.*
- Stevens, Abel, 52-53, 53*n.*, 108
- Stevens, Leslie, 406*n.*, 407
- Stevenson, Ida M., 419*n.*
- Still, Abraham, 345-346
- Stillman, S. P., 899
- Stivers, T. Stanley, 305*n.*, 475*n.*
- Stocks, John, 216
- Stockton, Thomas, H., 775, 775*n.*, 783, 786
- Stoddard, Mrs. H. J., 140*n.*
- Stone, Dema. See Mrs. David O. Ernsberger.
- Stone, George I. and Mrs., 537*n.*, 555, 556, 594*n.*, 596, 597
- Stone, James Sumner, 542*n.*, 547, 558
- Stout, Mary A., 804*n.*
- Stowell, Alexander P. and Mrs., 796, 797, 798-799, 810*n.*
- Stowers, C. N., 327*n.*
- Stritmatter, Andrew and Mrs., 397, 398, 399, 414, 433-434
- Strong, Josiah, 38, 66, 84
- Stuart, George Arthur and Mrs., 402*n.*, 404, 406, 409
- Student Volunteer Movement, 89-90

- Stuntz, Homer C. and Mrs., 542, 588*n.*, 611*n.*
- Suganuma, Mary A., 725
- Sullivan, Lucy, 509*n.*, 604
- Sulzberger, Arnold, 991, 998*n.*, 999*n.*, 1008*n.*
- Sumatra, 658-659
- Sumer, Joshi, 591, 632*n.*
- Summers, William R., 895*n.*, 905, 906, 907, 907*n.*, 913-914, 916*n.*, 918-919, 920*n.*
- Sunamoto, T.: 293-294; account of, 294*n.*
- Sunday, John, 330-331
- Sunday School Children's Fund, 106, 106*n.*
- Sunday School Movement (Methodist), 96-102
- Sunday School Teacher*, 98*n.*
- Sunday School Union of the M.E. Church, 96-98, 101, 101*n.*, 102, 109, 110, 153-154, 155, 693
- Sunday schools: literature of, 110-111; evangelical agency, 190-191
- Swain, J. S., 302*n.*
- Swain, Clara A.: 145, 183, 192, 486, 502, 507-508, 509*n.*, 613, 615; account of, 183*n.*
- Swaney, J. A., 792*n.*
- Swaney, Mary F., 790, 835, 845, 848, 850, 854*n.*
- Sweden Mission and Conference: 107, 124, 155, 156*n.*, 169; episcopal visitations of, 173*n.*, 174*n.* 1, 2; 175*n.* 1, 2; account of, 955-976; establishment of, 955-962; appropriations for, 934*n.*, 957; missionaries appointed, 957, 960, 961; religious freedom restricted, 958, 960, 961-962, 967-968, 968*n.*, 971-972; mission separately organized, 962; growth of, 962-965, 970, 972-973, 975; relationship with Established Church, 963, 966, 971-972; Lilla Sändebudet published, 964; theological seminary, 965, 965*n.*, 976; Wesleyana printing house begun, 966; Districts, 966, 970, 972, 973-974; persecution of, 966-968; recognized by State, 968-969; Conference organized, 970; appointments, 970*n.*; charter members, 970*n.*; Epworth League in, 975; evaluation of, 975-976; women preachers employed, 976*n.*
- Swedish Evangelical Lutheran Mission, 590
- Swedish language missions (see also Scandinavians, domestic missions to): 153; immigrants receptive to Methodism, 270; Swedes establish missions on own initiative, 271; Bethel Ship mission, 272-274; in New York City, 274; in Chautauqua, 274; in New England, 274; in Illinois, 274-275; "Swede Mission," 275-276; in Minnesota, 276-277; in Texas, 277-278; on West Coast, 278; separate Swedish Conference organized (1877), 278; statistics, 278
- Swedish Missionary Society, 270-271, 271*n.*
- Swenson, S. M., 957
- Switzerland, work in (see also "Germany and Switzerland Conference" and "Switzerland Conference" entries): 107, 155, 166, 168; beginnings of, 995-997; Book Depot opened in, 966; Districts, (1858) 997, (1864) 998*n.*; growth and statistics of, 997-998; religious freedom in, 998, 1001-1002
- Switzerland Conference: organized, 1011; work in Districts: Zurich, 1011-1012, Biel, 1011, 1012, St. Gallen, 1012-1013, publications and Book Concern, 1013; summary of work, 1013-1018; difficulties, 1016-1017
- Swormstedt, Leroy, 121*n.*

T

- Taft, Marcus L., 400, 401, 402, 415, 742*n.*
- Tagliatalata, Pietro, 1050*n.*, 1057*n.*
- Takahara, Yasutaro, 689*n.*
- Takahashi, T., 295
- Takeshita, Masakichi, 703
- Tallon, William and Mrs., 774, 774*n.*, 776, 777, 818*n.*
- Tarbell, William E. and Mrs., 398
- Tate, John G. and Mrs., 898, 900, 903*n.*
- Taylor, Archibald, 792, 793
- Taylor, B. S., 806
- Taylor, Eliza M. F. (Mrs. George L.), 143
- Taylor, Edward T., 133*n.*
- Taylor, Graham, 84
- Taylor, John L. and Mrs., 392, 392*n.*
- Taylor, M. J. Edna, 538*n.*
- Taylor, Martha E., 723*n.*
- Taylor, Mrs. O. T., 140*n.*
- Taylor, Ross, 895*n.*, 904*n.*
- Taylor, William (Bishop): 94, 179, 179*n.*, 229*n.*, 233, 233*n.*, 234-235, 546*n.*, 583*n.*, 600*n.*; in India, 487, 490, 549, 550, 553, 554, 645-646; administration of, India, 509-540; account of, 509*n.*; re India, 541, 562*n.*, 565, 566, 570, 570*n.*, 583, 650; attitude toward class in society, 649*n.*; in South America, 792-797, 798, 799, 800, 801, 802, 808; dispute with Missionary Society, 792-793, 808-810; re South America, 803, 805, 806, 807, 808*n.*, 809, 815, 818, 826-827; elected Bishop of Africa, 812-813, 895; administration of, Liberia, 874, 890*n.*, 891-892, 895-904; opposed to Bishop for Liberia, 894; philosophy of native conversion, 897; administration of Africa, 904-923; scheme for industrial missions, 904, 917; visits Bel-

- gian and Portuguese kings, 906; orders river boat, 915-916, 919; retired as Bishop, 922*n.*; emphasis on education, 923; his system, 923-924
- Taylor Self-Support Missions, India (see also "South India Conference"): main centers of work: Lucknow, 510-512; Kanpur, 510, 512-513; Bombay, 510, 514-521; Poona, 510, 520-524; Calcutta, 510, 524-529; Madras, 510, 529-532; Bangalore, 510, 532; plans of work, 510-511, 510*n.*, 515-516, 518-520, 524-525; statistics (1873), 527; arrival of missionaries, 519, 533, 537-538; Bombay and Bengal Mission, 528, 528*n.*, 533, 533*n.*, 535; schools, 532; criticism of, 533-535; women missionaries, 538*n.*
- Liberia and Africa (see also under Angola, Congo, and Mozambique entries and "Liberia Conference"): among Kru people, 891, 896-897, 902, 923, 930; missionaries of, in Liberia, 895, 896*n.*, 902-903; among Bush people, 896, 902; other centers opened, 898; Monrovia Seminary transferred to, 899; Africa Fund for gifts, 899, 929; conflict with Conference-supported missions, 900; Taylor offers Liberia missions to M.S., 900, 923-924; summary description (1894), 900-901, 923-924; method and evaluation, 903-904, 911, 912, 917, 922-931; industrial missions scheme, 904; Trust Fund in, 911-912, 913*n.*, 929; cost in lives, 912; value of women, 904; occupations of missionaries, 904*n.*, 914; caliber of missionaries, 911, 912*n.*, 917, 919, 925-926, 930; extended to south central Africa, 921; work reviewed, 922-931; Bishop Hartzell praises, 926; use of white men, 924
- South America: 174*n.*, 792-818; education as approach to evangelization, 794-796; twelve centers of work, 796; outgoing of recruits, 797-808, 814; hostility and persecution, 801, 806; hardships of missionaries, 797-799, 808, 810, 811-812; criticisms of, 801, 808-810, 818, 826-827; Concepcion College, 803-804, 826-827; Colegio Americano, 803-804; desperate need for funds, 804; decline of work, 804-805, 807-808, 814-815; Santiago College, 805-806, 817; need for organization, 810-811, 814; emphasis shifts to evangelization, 813; put under Transit and Building Fund Society, 813-814; annual meeting (1886), 814; review of, 814-815; work attached to Cincinnati Conference, 816; Drees tours work, 816-817; work comes under South America Conference, 818-819; evaluation of, 826-827
- Te Jui, 417
- Tefft, B. F., 115
- Tejada, Lerdo de (President, Mexico), 829
- Teller, Henry M., 328
- Temperance: Methodist attitude toward, 54-57; Temperance agents, 82
- Templeton, Laura S., 289
- Tenant, J. A., 352
- Tenney, Marcus D., 211
- Terrell, Alice, 419*n.*
- Terry, David: 125, 272, 470; account of, 125*n.*
- Terry, Edna G., 416*n.*
- Terry, Martha, 166*n.*, 455*n.*
- Teter, J. C. and Mrs., 916, 916*n.*, 919, 920*n.*
- Thaarup, C., 950*n.*, 954*n.*
- Theological Seminaries. See under Seminaries.
- "Third Class Missions." See "Domestic Missions under Missionary Society."
- Thoburn, C. R., 542*n.*
- Thoburn, David Lyle and Mrs., 611*n.*
- Thoburn, Isabella: 145, 189, 486, 491, 502, 503-507, 509*n.*, 599; account of, 502*n.*
- Thoburn, James M. (Bishop) and Mrs. (2nd wife): 49, 120, 158, 164, 165, 173*n.*, 179; account of, 180*n.*; missionary call of, 180-181, 438; missionary in India, 186, 453, 453*n.*, 457-458, 458*n.*, 465, 467, 474*n.*, 475, 475*n.*, 477-478, 484, 484*n.*, 487, 488*n.*, 489, 491, 493, 496-497, 509, 510, 513, 526-528, 528*n.* 1, 2; 529, 533*n.*, 534-535, 535*n.*, 536-537, 538*n.*, 539, 543-544, 543*n.*, 556-558, 581, 583, 584, 586*n.*, 587, 594, 602, 603, 605, 609, 610-611, 616, 620, 628, 632-633, 641, 643, 649, 651, 654-659, 663*n.*; elected Bishop, 544
- Thoburn, J. M., Jr., and Mrs., 542*n.*, 556, 568*n.*, 586, 588
- Thoburn, Minerva Rockwell Downey (1st wife J. M. Thoburn). See Mrs. Joseph R. Downey.
- Thomas, David W. and Mrs., 192, 455*n.*, 475*n.*, 479, 490, 499-500, 507-508
- Thomas, Hiram W., 75-76, 76*n.*
- Thomas, James B. and Mrs., 545*n.*, 611*n.*, 631
- Thomas, William A., 540*n.*, 560-561
- Thomoff, S., 1028*n.*, 1030, 1031, 1035*n.*
- Thompson, Anna M. See Anna M. Thompson Stephens.

- Thompson, J. M., 903*n*.
 Thomsen, J. de Lorent, 950*n*., 951
 Thomson, Edward (Bishop): 53, 79, 96, 173, 244*n*., 305; re China, 182, 375*n*., 381, 439; re India, 159, 167, 460, 461-462, 475, 644; re Europe, 1023-1024
 Thomson, Helen Jane Goodfellow, 767*n*., 774
 Thomson, James, 864
 Thomson, John F.: 767-768, 772, 773, 775, 779*n*., 785, 788, 818*n*.; account of, 767*n*.
 Thorkildsen, Johan, 945, 945*n*.
 Thornton, S. W., 238
 Tickcheff, Peter, 1031, 1031*n*., 1035*n*.
 Tiffany, W. H., 302*n*.
 Tim, S. J., 903*n*.
 Timmerman, John, 341
 Tindale, Matthew, 542*n*., 577-578, 586*n*., 611*n*., 632*n*.
 Ting Ang, 377
 Ting Mi-ai, 161
 Tinsley, Jennie M. (2nd wife James W. Waugh), 470*n*., 509*n*.
 Tiong Ahok and Mrs., 161, 390, 391, 391*n*., 392-393, 394
 Tirrell, E., 263
 Todd, Althea M., 392*n*.
 Todd, Elbert S., 396
 Tollis, Constantino, 1050*n*., 1057*n*.
 Tomlinson, Joseph S., 301*n*.
 Tompkins, De Loss M. and Mrs., 542*n*., 611*n*.
 Torbet, Hiram, 537*n*.
 Torres, O. and Mrs., 845
 Torrey, J. D., 338
 Tovar, Abundio, 849, 854*n*.
 Tract Society of the M. E. Church, 101, 108-110, 154-155, 693, 771*n*.
 Transit and Building Fund Society: 538, 569*n*.; re South America, 804, 814; incorporates to handle finances of Taylor work, 813; jurisdictional dispute with Missionary Society, 815-818; re Africa, 895, 907, 907*n*., 925
 Trask, Sigourney, 384, 385
 Trefren, S. L., 244*n*.
 Trelour, T., 836, 837
 Trimble, Elizabeth J., 916*n*., 920*n*.
 Trimble, Joseph M.: 125-126; account of, 125*n*.
 Trimble, Lydia A., 392*n*.
 Tripp, Mary R., 363
 Trumbull, David, 795, 806*n*.
 Tsuda, Sen and Mrs., 677, 678, 698, 739
 Tsuda, Ume, 677
 Tsvetkoff, Yordaki, 1026*n*., 1028*n*., 1031*n*.
 Tubbs, Frank D.: in South America, 820, 862*n*.; in Mexico, 858
 Tubman, Boston and Mrs., 903*n*.
 Tucker, Grace, 724*n*., 732
 Tucker, William Jewett, 33, 66*n*., 84
 Tuning, W. C. and Mrs., 903*n*.
 Turner, Benjamin J., 897, 903*n*.
 Turner, W. S., 236
 Turney, Mrs. L., 788
 Tuthill, David, 241
 Tuttle, Daniel S. (Prot. Epis. Bishop), 246*n*.
 Twombly, John H. and Mrs., 102-103, 141
 Tyler, John (President, U. S.), 34
- U
- Uchimura, Kanzo, 684*n*., 699-700
 Ugon, Daniel Armand, 777
 Ukai, Takeshi, 294, 295, 702
 Umpleby, George S. and Mrs., 848*n*., 849
 Underwood, C. W., 652, 654
 Underwood, Horace G., 747, 748, 756-757
 Unitarian Church, 327*n*.
 United Methodist Church, 308*n*.
 United Presbyterian Church: among American Indians, 354
 United States: population, 1, 17-19, 24, 26, 27, 30, 55; immigration: European, 2-5, 296-297, Oriental, 9-11, 290, 292, Scandinavian, 269, 278-279, 281, Welsh, 284-285; class distinctions, 61, 62; agriculture and rural life, 5, 7*n*., 8, 12, 19, 24-25; settlement of the West, 5-9; discrimination against foreigners, 9-11; industrialization, 12-14, 16, 17-19, 26, 27, 83; labor, 14-19; rise of cities, 23-24, 26-27, 28-30; increased wealth and effects, 30-33; imperialism, 33-38; trade treaty with China, 34; trade treaty with Japan, 35; prohibition, 54-55; divorce rate in, 57; trade depressions, 130, 131*n*., 132, of 1837-41, 12, 14, 115, of 1857, 86, of 1873-78, 3, 12, 15, 64*n*., of 1883, 15, of 1893, 12, 16; distribution of immigrants, 269-270, 273, 280, 281; relations with American Indians, 325, 347, 349, 350; conducts Indian program in cooperation with churches, 326-329, 331, 333, 336, 357, 362; Perry treaty, 664; securing of six open ports, 664
 United States, missions in. See "Domestic Missions" entries and "Methodist Episcopal Church, Postwar Work in South."
 Urban life, 26-27, 28-30, 41, 50, 50*n*., 66-68, 87-88
 Urch, William H. B., 657, 658*n*., 660*n*.
 Urquiza, Don Justo Jose de, 760, 766*n*.
 Uruguay: liberalism develops, 777; civil war, 778

Uruguay Mission (see also "South America Mission" entries for W. F. M. S. work and other information): 758, 760; re-entered, 768-769; Montevideo, 769, 777, 780; growth of, 772-773; District statistics (1893-95), 820-821

V

- Vail, Jennie S., 675, 702
 Vail, Milton Smith and Mrs.: 675, 680, 689*n.*, 704; account of, 675*n.*
 Valderrama, Pedro Flores: 839, 850, 857-858; account of, 839*n.*
 Vallejo, Lucio, 843, 848*n.*
 Van Anda, J. A., 256
 Van Andel, Adrian: 988; account of, 988*n.*
 Vance, Mary A. (see also under Mrs. J. F. Belknap): 705; account of, 705*n.*
 Vanderbilt, Cornelius, 31*n.*, 32, 32*n.*, 33
 Van Deventer, E. W., 260
 Van Dorsten, Amelia, 859
 Van Orsdel, William W.: 258; account of, 258*n.*
 Van Petten, Caroline W.: 675, 710, 712, 725, 726; account of, 675*n.*
 Vardon, Algernon S. E., 551, 576, 585, 586*n.*, 594*n.*
 Vasbinder, Marietta, 798, 810*n.*
 Velasco, Benjamin F., 854*n.*, 860-861
 Venezuela: 156; visited, 776, 781
 Verbeck, Guido, 665-666
 Verity, George and Mrs., 419*n.*
 Vernon, Frances B. Elliott (1st wife Leroy M. Vernon), 1040*n.*
 Vernon, Leroy M. and Mrs.: 130, 1047, 1048, 1051; account of, 1040*n.*; administration of, 1042-1050
 Vickery, Martha Ellen, 1056
 Victor Emmanuel II, 1041-1042
 Vidaurre, Alberto J., 816*n.*, 818*n.*
 Villanueva, Juan, 781, 818*n.*
 Villanueva, Juana, 781
 Vincent, B. T., 215
 Vincent, J. M. and Mrs., 818*n.*
 Vincent, John Heyl (Bishop): 77, 97*n.*, 98, 101, 102, 103, 109, 1005, 1052; account of, 98*n.*
 Virgin Islands, 36
 Voinoff, Naiden J., 1026, 1026*n.*
 Vosburg, J. B., 359
- Wadman, J. W., 695, 719
 Wager, William J., 658*n.*
 Wakayama, T., 686
 Wakeman, Sabra, 818*n.*
 Walden, John M. (Bishop): 121*n.*, 175*n.*, 239, 332, 702; re South America, 782, 815-816; re Europe, 944, 954, 1034
 Walden, Mrs. John M., 151*n.*, 1034
 Waldensians, 772*n.*, 773, 773*n.*, 777, 784, 1040, 1044, 1049
 Waldo, Peter, 773*n.*
 Wales, emigration from, 284-285
 Walker, Lyman B. and Mrs., 916*n.*, 920*n.*
 Walker, P. E., 903*n.*
 Walker, Wilbur Fisk and Mrs., 413, 420
 Wallenius, Carl C., 283*n.*
 Waller, Alvin F., 163, 228, 228*n.*, 229*n.*
 Walley, John and Mrs., 402*n.*, 409
 Walling, Julia F., 384
 Wallon, Louis, Sr., 987, 987*n.*
 Walrath, J. E. and Mrs., 920*n.*
 Wang Cheng-pei, 413, 414, 414*n.*
 Wang Jui-wu, 413-414
 Wanghia Treaty, 34
 Wanless, E. A. and Mrs., 1024
 Ward, Charles B. and Mrs.: 537*n.*, 538*n.*, 545*n.*, 565, 566, 568-570, 572-573, 650; account of, 568*n.*
 Ward, Mary, 592
 Ware, Daniel, Sr., 879, 882
 Ware, Daniel, Jr., 884*n.*, 887, 888, 894*n.*, 899
 Warne, Frank W. and Mrs., 558-560, 561, 586*n.*, 588
 Warner, Ellen H. (see also Mrs. Daniel O. Fox), 583, 599, 602*n.*
 Warner, Joel, 250*n.*
 Warner, Susan M., 834, 835, 836, 851, 854*n.*
 Warner, William A. and Mrs., 903*n.*
 Warren, Henry W. (Bishop), 68, 162, 174*n.*, 175*n.* 1, 2; 394, 694, 726, 746, 856, 944, 1054
 Warren, William F. and Mrs., 141, 990-992, 994-995, 1021-1022
 Waterhouse, Lelia H., 797, 802-803, 810*n.*, 812
 Watson, A. H., 903*n.*
 Watson, A. S., 818*n.*
 Watson, Arthur J., 656, 656*n.*, 659
 Watson, Rebecca J., 674-675, 707
 Waugh, Beverly (Bishop), 108, 121*n.*, 165, 233, 376, 379, 509*n.*, 761, 872
 Waugh, James W. and Mrs.: 164*n.*, 187-188, 453, 460, 469, 475*n.*, 476, 479, 483, 510, 511*n.*, 619, 623; account of, 469*n.*
 Waugh, Lydia M. Hayes (1st wife James W. Waugh), 470*n.*, 480, 488*n.*
 Weatherby, Samuel S. and Mrs., 478, 485, 485*n.*, 588*n.*
 Weaver, W. R., 361

W

- Webb, John D., 538*n.*, 576, 582, 586*n.*, 591, 632*n.*
- Webster, Sarah, 818*n.*
- Weigle, Theophilus, 766, 766*n.*
- Weihmüller, Robert, 776, 779, 818*n.*
- Welch, Ellen M. See Mrs. Charles B. Ward.
- Wells, G. Wiley, 147*n.*
- Wells, Phebe, 395*n.*
- Welsh, domestic missions to the, 284-286
- Wentworth, Erastus and Mrs., 115, 188, 376, 376*n.*, 379, 444
- Wentworth, Phebe E. Potter (3rd wife Erastus Wentworth), 166*n.*, 376*n.*, 379
- Wesley, John, 50, 932, 955, 995
- Wesleyan Church (English): 69, 73, 93*n.*; sends Scott to Sweden, 270; in Panama, 806
- Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society: 119*n.*, 131*n.*, 270*n.*, 290, 450*n.*, 453*n.*, 511*n.*, 513*n.*, 524-525, 526, 530, 553, 556, 556*n.*, 561, 565, 578, 581, 646, 646*n.*; in Sweden, 955; in Germany, 987, 987*n.*, 993; in Switzerland, 995; in Italy, 1040-1041, 1041*n.*, 1043, 1044, 1049
- Wesleypur, 461, 479*n.*
- West, Benjamin F. and Mrs., 588*n.*, 653, 654, 656, 656*n.*, 658, 658*n.*, 659-660
- West, John N. and Mrs., 545*n.*
- West China Mission (see also "China Mission"): 134; account of, 421-430; beginnings of, 422-423; educational activities, 423, 426, 427, 428, 429; arrival of missionaries, 422, 423, 427, 427*n.*; riots temporarily end, 424, 429; restoration of, 425-427, 429-430; medical work of, 428; statistics, 430
- West China Mission, W. F. M. S.: educational activities, 422; orphanage, 422; arrival of missionaries, 422, 429; Deaconess Movement begun, 429
- Western Methodist Book Concern, 110*n.*
- Whedon, Daniel D., 94
- Wheeler, Frances I., 402, 408, 422
- Wheeler, Francis M. and Mrs., 485*n.*, 488*n.*, 613
- Wheeler, Joseph R., 302*n.*
- Wheeler, Lucius N. and Mrs., 381, 382, 411, 412, 413, 422, 423
- Wheelwright, William, 793
- Whetstone, Mrs. J. L., 151
- Whitcomb, Mary, 166*n.*
- White, Anna, 904*n.*
- White, Asa: 233; account of, 233*n.*
- White, Grace: 902, 904*n.*; account of, 902*n.*
- White, J. Campbell, 90
- White, J. H., 201
- White, Laura M., 406*n.*
- White, Mary Seely (2nd wife Moses C. White), 374
- White, Moses C. and Mrs.: 163, 165, 185, 192; work of 367-376; account of, 368*n.*
- White, O. D., 332
- White, Sarah E. See Sarah White Pierce.
- White, William O., 916, 916*n.*, 920*n.*
- Whitefield, Adelaide. See Mrs. Ira Haynes La Fetra.
- Whitefield, George, 284*n.*, 528, 932*n.*
- Whiteside, Lizzie, 912*n.*
- Whitfield, Anna E., 899, 904*n.*
- Whitfield, Wilmot, 250
- Whiting, Olive (see also Mrs. Charles Bishop), 672*n.*, 678
- Whitman, Marcus, 228
- Whitman, Perrin, 228
- Wier, John, 694, 716, 717
- Wigren, John, 276
- Wik, K. A., 974
- Wilbur, James H.: 163, 227-228, 229*n.*, 230, 232, 327*n.*, 355-356; account of, 356*n.*
- Wilcox, Myron C. and Mrs., 392, 402, 402*n.*
- Wilcox, Sara, 904*n.*
- Wilder, Robert P., 90
- Wiley, Isaac W. (Bishop) and Mrs.: 149, 151*n.*, 159, 174, 174*n.*, 175*n.*, 245; account of, 192*n.*; missionary in China, 192, 374-376, 384, 389, 393, 399, 414, 421, 422, 438*n.*, 442; re Japan, 671, 682, 686, 688, 689, 698, 702, 735; re Europe, 975, 1000
- Wilkes, Agnes, 907*n.*
- Wilkes, Joseph and Mrs., 895*n.*, 907*n.*, 909, 927
- Wilkins, Ann, 872, 875, 876*n.*, 880, 889*n.*, 893*n.*
- Wilkinson, Lydia A., 391*n.*
- Willard, Frances E., 55, 64, 215
- Willard, Oliver A., 215, 216
- Willerup, Christian B.: 277, 279, 939, 939*n.*, 948, 962; Superintendent of Scandinavian Mission, 935-937; administration in Denmark, 936, 946-948, 952; and Sweden Mission, 957, 960
- Williams, A. D., 882*n.*, 899
- Williams, Dan, 903*n.*
- Williams, J. E., 342
- Williams, James, 252-253
- Williams, Mary, 286*n.*
- Williams, Rose M., 803*n.*
- Williams, Rowland, 78*n.*, 79
- Williams, Samuel F., 882*n.*, 884*n.*
- Williams, William B., 870, 871

- Williamson, Charles H., 262
 Willing, Jennie Fowler, 140, 141, 149, 150, 360, 1048
 Willits, Oscar and Mrs., 416*n.*
 Willson, Mrs., 803, 847*n.*
 Wilson, Beverly R., 884*n.*, 893*n.*
 Wilson, Edward A., 819
 Wilson, Frances O., 416*n.*
 Wilson, Harkua, 496, 619
 Wilson, J. A., 542*n.*
 Wilson, Mrs. John, 468*n.*
 Wilson, Mary: 495*n.*, 509*n.*, 614; account of, 614*n.*
 Wilson, Mary E., 727*n.*, 729*n.*
 Wilson, Minnie E., 392, 392*n.*
 Wilson, Peachy T. and Mrs., 455*n.*, 464, 484, 488*n.*, 508, 537*n.*, 607*n.*, 614, 621, 629-630
 Witsee, T. L., 238, 362
 Winans, Charles S. and Mrs., 818*n.*
 Winckler, Walter, 529, 566
 Winnega, J. M., 242
 Winslow, Sallie, 538*n.*
 Winter, A. E., 545*n.*
 Wise, Daniel: 97-98, 109, 168-169; account of, 97*n.*
 Wisner, Julia E., 599, 602*n.*
 Wissmann, Hermann von, 904, 906
 Witbeck, Emma C. See Mrs. Milton Smith Vail.
 Withey, Amos E. and Mrs., 895*n.*, 906, 907*n.*, 909-910, 913, 927-928, 929*n.*
 Withey, Florence, 907*n.*
 Withey, Herbert C., 907*n.*
 Withey, Lotti, 907*n.*
 Withey, Mary Estella, 907*n.*, 909
 Witting, Victor: 276, 283, 283*n.*, 956, 960, 970, 970*n.*; administration of, 961-969
 Woll, Nelly, 976*n.*
 Woman's Christian Temperance Union, 55, 64, 152, 159, 577, 822, 840
 Woman's Conferences. For formation on field, see under various mission and W. F. M. S. entries.
 Woman's Foreign Missionary Society. For field work, see entries listed under the various missions; otherwise see below.
 Woman's Foreign Missionary Society: 130; organization and recognition of, 139, 140-148; Branches formed, 143, 143*n.*, 147-148; achievements of, 148; considers including domestic field, 149; on furloughs, 168; early missionaries sent, 183, 184, 189; schoolwork, 189; Sunday schools, 191
 Woman's Home Missionary Society: 82; background, 148-151; organized, 151; relations with Missionary Society, 152; program, 153; Spanish-American work, 153; work among Indians, 153, 328, 348-349, 350, 350*n.*, 354, 357, 360, 362; city mission work, 153, 223; domestic missions work, 245, 245*n.*; foreign language missions, 287, 296
 Woman's Missionary Society of the Pacific Coast, 287, 289
 Woman's National Indian Association, 347, 349, 351
 Woman's Rights Movement, 57
 Woman's Temperance Crusade, 55
 Woman's Union Missionary Society: 139, 141, 183, 501; in Japan, 667*n.*
 Wood, Catherine, 602*n.*
 Wood, Ellen Dow, 772*n.*, 774*n.*, 787
 Wood, Elsie, 786, 790, 791-792
 Wood, Frederick W. and Mrs., 555
 Wood, Joseph R., 771, 774, 776, 778
 Wood, Thomas B.: 158, 769-771, 782, 785, 786, 787, 818*n.*, 825; appointed consul, Rosario, 770; administration of, 772-778; account of, 772*n.*, 779; permission to teach Bible in Brazil, 780; P. E., Peru District, 822-823
 Woodall, George W. and Mrs., 402*n.*, 403, 538*n.*
 Woodman, William, 339-340, 364
 Woodward, L. T., 229
 Woodworth, Kate, 683
 Woolston, Beulah, 166*n.*, 369*n.*, 379, 381, 384, 390, 391, 438*n.*
 Woolston, Henrietta B., 509*n.*
 Woolston, Sarah H., 166*n.*, 369*n.*, 379, 381, 384, 390, 391, 438*n.*, 444
 Worden, Whiting S., 694, 698*n.*, 700-701, 728
 Worley, James H. and Mrs., 392, 395-396, 402, 402*n.*
 Worley, Thomas H. and Mrs., 402*n.*
 Wrangel, Karl Magnus, 955
 Wright, A. C., 406*n.*, 408, 409
 Wright, D. B., 242
 Wright, George Frederick, 77
 Wright, Henry, 903*n.*
 Wright, John E. and Mrs., 806-807, 810*n.*
 Wright, Joseph A., 948, 990, 1008
 Wright, William A. and Mrs., 803, 810*n.* 1, 2
 Wunderlich, Ehrhardt, 985, 988, 988*n.*
 Wunderlich, Friedrich: 988, 989, 990*n.*, 992; account of, 988*n.*

Y

Yajima, J., 730
 Yamada, Toranosuke, 689*n.*, 711, 726, 739
 Yamaka, Genjiro, 689*n.*, 704
 Yamaka, Hatanoshin, 689*n.*, 703, 739
 Yancey, Sandy and Mrs., 903*n.*
 Yancey, William M. and Mrs., 903*n.*
 Yanez, Pedro, 804
 Yates, Elizabeth, 416*n.*
 Yek Ing-kwang, 387
 Young, Brigham, 243, 246*n.*
 Young, Effie G., 419*n.*
 Young, John, 327*n.*, 350
 Y. M. C. A., 44, 59, 87-88, 89

Young Men's Missionary Society (Boston), 365, 365*n.*
 Young People's Christian League, 103
 Young People's Methodist Alliance, 103, 104, 105*n.*
 Youth Movement, Methodist, 102-105

Z

Zambezia (see also Mozambique), 921
 Zenana visitation. See under various mission and W. F. M. S. entries.
 Zweizig, William H., 299

3 1144 00268251 5

Methodist Center

245927
cop.2

~~_____~~
~~_____~~ Barclay, W. C.
~~_____~~ History of Methodist missions.

DREW UNIVERSITY LIBRARY
MADISON, NEW JERSEY 07940

