Dear Albert,

You may have already seen the enclosed article from the Journal of Humanistic Psychology, but if not, I have been wanting for a long time to share ^{with} you its contents. As you can readily see, I have tried to juxtapose Wesley with the current encounter culture. It is a project on which I have been working for two or three years, the longer version of which is in Chapter Two of The Intensive Group Experience: The New Pietsou (Westminster, '72).

Usually, I don't expect any critical comment you might have on my efforts, but in this case I have some anxiety that you might blast me right out of the saddle if you look with too critical an eye (which probably means I need it all the more). Anyway, now that I have reprints, I wanted to send you one to let the chips fall where they may.

Drew remains in a deep struggle - for survival, for cohesiveness, for clarity, ~~about~~ its mission. It looks quite probable that we will soon have to begin a search for a new team - got any ideas? If so, please let me know. I would value your advice in so many ways. Edrite - I send our warmest regards,

Tom
