Dear Mr. McGonagle,

Thank you very much for sending me a copy of Paul Meyvaert's review of Carolingian Essays in Speculum, and for your interest in my forthcoming publication of my dissertation. I am right now in the final stages of revising it, and am hoping to have it completely finished by the end of this summer.

I truly appreciate your letter, because at this stage I am intent on writing and have not concerned myself too much with the obstacles of getting it published. I had considered the University of Toronto Press, where I did my dissertation, or a German series that is particularly interested in publishing new medieval sources. My manuscript is rather technical, and will include first editions of a number of medieval texts.

I will consider your invitation to submit my manuscript to you very seriously. It would be no sooner than this summer. Thank you very much again for your interest. If there is anything further you would like to know about its length, organization, or intended audience, in view of the goals of Catholic U. Press regarding scholarly publications, please do write again.

Sincerely yours,

Susan A. Keefe
(Assistant Professor of History)
