Hi Ginger and Roger,

I spoke with Joe this morning about lighting the sanctuary at night. I know this may come up at the trustees meeting today. He has not heard back from electrician yet . Between us - I think he is not pushing it because he thinks it may be too expensive or hard to install. My whole point was to do something so that the church looks inviting at night. Now it is very dark and depressing. There are the security lights, but they are not welcoming. I still would like to get a price on lighting the three big widows from inside so they show off outside. If this can't be done economically, maybe a timer can be put on all the exterior door lights (lanterns and breezeway overheads) so they come on at dark and go off in morning, still leaving on the security lights. With more and more people going downtown - new theater, bus station, eating, etc - we need to show up. Think about if Duke Chapel was in the dark at night. Please bring this up at meeting if Joe does not.

Sid
