DEAR BROTHER GOLD,—Near two weeks ago I was reading in the book of Nehemiah, and I was struck with some surprise while reading the 8th, chapter, 14—17 verses, "And they found written in the law which the Lord had commanded Moses, that the children of Israel should dwell in booths in the feast of the seventh month.

And all the congregation of them that were come again out of the captivity made booths and sat under the booths: for since the days of Joshua, the son of Nun, unto that day, had not the children of Israel done so. And there was very great gladness."

The points that so forcibly struck my mind was that the commandment was plainly written in the law and that it had not been observed. We might not wonder that in the days of the judges, some, yea even many of the commandments of the Lord should be neglected; because of the many captivities and the impossibility of the people hearing the law; but when we come to think of the time of Israel's being established into a kingdom with a man after God's own heart to reign over them, and of the peaceable and quiet reign of the wonderfully wise Solomon, whose zeal was so great for the service of God that he built the wonderful temple in Jerusalem: where in the law was to be read and taught continually, and then many other kings to gether with such teachers as the prophets Nathan, Samuel, Elijah, Elisha, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Daniel, Hosea and a host of others speaking in the name of the Lord, and yet this one commandment was entirely left unobserved for the space of nearly one thousand years. Now why this was so no one cannot tell, but I was struck, while reading it, with the similarity of the neglect of the observance of that commandment in all those hundreds of years and the example of feet-washing in this day and how it has been neglected for these hundred of years by our fore-fathers, even such men as Gold, Davis, Smith, Cavanaugh, Hall, Hassell, Moore, Woodard, Beebe, Durand, Chick, and many others living, and a Hyman, Laurence, Hassell, Beebe, Osborne, Philpot, Gadsby and a host of others who have passed away. It is as plainly taught in the New Testament that we should wash each others feet as it is in the old, that Israel should dwell in booths during the feast of the seventh month. Now there is a question in my mind: ought Israel to have followed the footsteps of their fathers, or to have observed the law of God? Of course every believer in the Bible will say that they should have followed the commandment of God.

But how about feet-washing? a brother says, "The apostles did not teach it." Neither did the prophets teach Israel to dwell in booths. Again, our fathers did not practice it. Neither did Israel from the days of Joshua to the days of Nehemiah dwell in booths, yet Nehemiah did not look upon it as being any less a necessity for him and those who were with him to observe this commandment. Some days ago a brother pointed out a church that was organized in 1703 that has always been blessed with an able ministry and yet have never observed feet-washing, and that it is quite likely that if the churches in the old country from whence those brethren came had washed feet that they would have observed it after they came over here. I expect that it is quite likely that the churches in the old country did not observe this commandment of our Lord, but is that any reason that we should not observe it? A good brother said to me a few days ago that it is strange that you, down there in North Carolina should have spiritual exercises of mind on the subject of feet-washing, and I up here in Virginia should not be exercised on it at all. I do not suppose that David nor Solomon nor the prophets were exercised on the commandment of the Lord for the children of Israel to dwell in booths during the feast of the seventh month, but it was a duty that Israel should have observed in their days, just as much as in the days of Nehemiah, who was exercised on it and who taught Israel to return to the way of the Lord instead of teaching them to walk in the way of the fathers who had not observed God's commandment. It is argued by many good brethren that because it is not found but the one time in the bible it is therefore not obligatory that we should do it, but it will be remembered that that time it was given by our Lord and is just as binding as if though all the evangelists and apostles and preachers and all the church from that time to the present had observed it, because the Lord said, "ye ought to do it," and the word 'ought' means duty-bound, and if we read that commandment with the words "ye are duty-bound" in the stead of the word 'ought' it will read with the same sense with which it now reads.

Some few of our brethren and sisters have said that it is not decent to take off our coats and shoes in public; but it is very evident that the Lord did it and he did not do anything indecent. The indecency is in us, and it is no more indecent than it is to come up out of the water with our clothes wet. We know that this is an argument of pride and we are commanded to crucify the flesh with the affections and lust thereof; therefore we should not let our false pride hinder us from our duties to our God. We cannot be Old School Baptists and follow the teachings of the flesh; but we must follow the teachings of the spirit, and it makes no difference how zealous we may be in the house of God and how much we may wish to see the prosperity of Zion if our convictions are not in direct accord with the teachings of the word of God, they are wrong and should not be followed. We learn that when Israel returned to the commandment of the Lord to dwell in booths, that there was very great gladness, and might not we expect the same if the church in this day would return to all the commandments of the Lord, to that of feet-washing as well as the others? Let us take no man for our guide, but the plain teachings of the written word of God for so has he commanded us.

With love to the household of faith, and a hope in the glorious resurrection of the dead, I remain your brother in the afflictions of the gospel.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—Brother B. W. Jenkins of N. C., desires my views on 55th Psalm, 12, 13, 14 and 15th verses through the LANDMARK.

"For it was not an enemy that reproached me; then I could have borne it: neither was it he that hated me that did magnify himself against me then I would have hid myself from him, but I was thou a man my equal, my guide, and mine acquaintance. We took sweet counsel together, and walked into the house of God in company.

The brother desires to know who it was that caused David trouble. I think he had reference in this connection to Ahithopel, a native of Giloh in Juda, a statesman of great sagacity, held to be an oracle by the people. A trusted counselor of David, he went over to the rebel Absalom and advised him to commit himself fully by taking to himself the concubines of his father, and to fall upon him (David) in his weakness, before he had time to gather an army. But the latter counsel was not taken. 2nd Sam. 15 chap.

We learn from the book of 2d Sam. that Ahithopel was David's guide and they took sweet counsel together and it seems that he had the confidence of David; but after this we see him working for David's destruction and endeavored to turn David's darling son against him. Notwithstanding David had fought so earnestly for Israel, Ahithopel would have had him destroyed by his own brethren. I think there is a lesson of interest to the church in this, for we have seen brethren come in among us and we could walk together as brethren for a long time, and seemed to get along well, and almost knit together as David and Johnathan.

But ere long we would see a jealous, envious spirit manifest and those whom we so highly esteemed will go around among those who are nearest to us in feeling, and try to destroy this confidence in us. David could have borne it very well if it had been an enemy, (some of the Philistines or ites), but what causes us serious trouble is when it gets into Israel.

It is painful to see his own equal leading his son Absalom to partake with the concubines, but we see in a short time Ahithopel and Absalom hanged and they both die.

It never troubles us for the world to speak harshly of us, because they are dead, and the dead works of men suit them, but living works suit Zion who has the life of Christ. O how distressing when we see those whom we once loved and could associate with as fellow-laborers in our Master's vineyard, turn after the vain and human teachings of men, introducing new theories to decoy the children of God off from us, they will begin to tell the Absalom's, the weaker members, to marry the concubines. (institutions of men, such as Sunday Schools, Temperance Societies, Farmer's Alliance's, Masons, etc., and they will soon kill themselves to the love and fellowship of the church and hence die, go to hell or the grave of error; such was painful to David and it is painful to us to-day. We do not like to have to fight against those whom we loved, but remember that men of yourselves shall rise up among you speaking perverse things to draw away disciples after them." Many have been the times that Zion has suffered on account of those among us who have introduced new theories, new doctrines, &c.,

But it is also painful to see those teachers lead off the weaker members in having them join or marry the institutions of men as Absalom was done.

Absalom rode on a mule which is a mongrel brute, representing this mongrel work system of Babylon which tries to mix works and grace together, as Fuller and his colleagues did when they married the Sunday Schools, Masonry, Theological schools, Boards, conventions, &c., and they were hanged on an oak tree by the hair of the head. There is where all will be hanged when they ride upon that system, trusting in it for salvation. The oak is not an evergreen but puts up in the Spring green and fresh, and lasts 'till cold weather, then it loses its foliage. Their religion being of the head and not of the heart, they are hanged there by the hair of the head in the hot season, in their protracted meetings and in the winter they will die again, or fall from grace as they call it.

This will represent Mr. Fuller in leading off children of God into Babylon. It is painful for the children of God to be led off; we are willing to give up all the children of Babylon among us, but we hate to see the children of God making such departures. Are not some trying to do this to-day? and it is causing Primitive Baptists trouble.

How painful to see our brethren go off and cause trouble among us. Brethren have caused trouble by preaching deep and mystified things that the church could not enjoy, which was no comfort to us and had a tendency to destroy instead of unite. Then let us take the simple truths of the gospel.

We believe that children of God go astray and cause confusion many times, then they are not an enemy to the opposing world, but one who is our equal in the church of Christ, with whom we have taken sweet counsel and had sweet enjoyment together.

Brother Jenkins, have you not seen such? But all those that engage in those things, death will seize upon them and they will go down to hell, margin, grave. Go down into the grave of error and die to enjoyment as God's children and to church fellowship. Brother Jenkins, I had never thought on the subject before, but these are some of my feeble views and if any other have better, let us hear from them. I feel a willingness at all times to keep no word back from my dear brethren that will be of interest to them. Dear brother, it does seem to me that no one has such conflicts as I do, but the Lord has a purpose in sending such sore troubles upon me. I am just back from a tour of 64 days in the North. I shall never forget those dear ones whom I met. I spent the latter part of my tour in Kentucky, and found many dear and precious saints there who are sound in the doctrine of the O. S. Baptists. I was at the homes of brethren Farmer, Mc. Cowen, Herndon, Yunt, Smith, Robertson, Turner's, Voorhees, Ransdell, Slead: Sister Johnson's, and met Brother Hunston, Chilton, Ridder, and many others who feel precious to me. Dear saints I can never forget you. While in some very dark seasons I felt the presence of Jesus I hope. How unworthy I feel of your kindness.

There has been some trouble there, but I do hope those dear brethren may be brought together again and jealousy and envy removed.

It seems that prospect for peace among us in the future is better than before, for I see a coming together and brethren putting away their inconsistencies. I returned home June 6th, and have been quite feeble ever since my return. My mother who is with me is also helpless and confines me looking after her. She is very large and old. Last Sunday at our communion and feet-washing, my dear old mother who is past her three-score years and ten came and told the dealings of the Lord with her, and was received, but has been taken sick since. We have a great many Primitive Baptists here who are sound in the faith, have no institutions of men or auxiliaries. They all practice feet-washing, I once opposed it, but it is a lovely ordinance to me now.

Our churches seem to be in perfect peace, and occasional in-gatherings. "Behold how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity."

Perhaps there are more than one hundred and fifty churches in seventy five miles of here. Write to me brethren, and pray for me. May God bless us all, Yours in affliction,

LEE HANCKS.

SINNERS SAVED.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—The LANDMARK of Aug. 15th brings to me good tidings. I feel thankful to our good Lord that I have lived to see the day that the ministry in the "East" and other places are so mightily stirred in defense of the doctrine of the salvation of sinner, and the glorification of the mortal bodies of those sinners chosen in Christ to that glorious end.

Here is our humble hope. If in this life only we have hope we are of all men most miserable, but we have hope for as Christ in the human body of our Savior, and the first of them that slept, died and rose again, even so shall those that fall asleep in Christ will God bring with Him. Yes, when he comes the second time without sin unto salvation, he shall come again dear child of God, and take you unto himself.

You know that you yourself are a sinner. You have been taught this lesson some time ago. You know you feel the plague of your own heart, and have sorrow upon sorrow in consequence of the corruptions of the flesh, and often under a deep sense of your own sin you are made to cry from your inmost soul. Save me O God, for I sink in deep mire where there is no standing. O man, do you not feel this yourself? Are you not affected by it? If so why charge it to a personage you have no knowledge of? Again, under this feeling of sin, imperfection and unfitness to do righteousness, you cry unto God for help, Lord save I (the man) perish. And the great God looks on you through the intercession of Him who died to redeem you (man) from all iniquity, to purify you peculiarly to Himself, and under this influence you are zealous of good works.

We know not for what to pray for, as we ought, but the spirit maketh intercessions for us with groanings which cannot be uttered. Hence through this intercession you are enabled to overcome for a time and give praise to God, feeling that He has taken you out of the mire and clay, horrible pit, and placed your feet upon a rock, establishing your goings, and put a new song in your mouth. You cry out, come near all that fear God and I will tell you what he has done for my soul, not what God has done for Himself, or His own soul, or spirit, nor his progeny, but what he has done for my soul, He hath taken me, not himself, out of a

Herein we rejoice in God through our Lord Jesus Christ, looking for that blessed hope and glorious appearing of Him who died for us and rose again, that whether we wake or sleep we should live together with Him. For God hath not appointed us to wrath, but to obtain salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ. He appointed us, (not portions or particles of Himself.) We are delivered from sin and its corruptions by God's appointment through the mediation and intercession of His Son and our Savior, Jesus. Hence we hope for deliverance. The first fruit, even Jesus the child of Mary, has been received into heaven itself, and we the chosen, nurtured and cultivated crop, under the Holy Spirit's teaching, are waiting for the adoption, the redemption of our bodies from the grave. Then these vile bodies of ours, made so by sin, shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption and fashioned like unto the glorious body of our risen and ascended Lord. Then brethren there will be fullness of joy and pleasure forever more. Oh what a dear Savior we poor sinners have, to guide us all along life's rugged road, until the cup of our suffering is full, and then to safely transport us across the dark and terrible river of death to the haven of eternal repose at the right hand of God to enjoy the sweets of eternal bliss forever and ever.

Glorious boon. In this hope we take courage feeling that the pains and trials of this life will soon be over, and that our salvation is nearer than when we first believed. Then children of God hope on, wait on, ere it's long you will hear the triumph of God and the voice of the archangel. The sleeping dust of the saints shall arise, and we which are alive and remain, shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye, and all shall be caught up together to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Then comfort one another with these words. Your affectionate brother.

ELDER GOLD, DEAR BROTHER:— It is with a feeling of much weakness and unworthiness that I now attempt to write to you. Were it not I had promised the Lord, if he would enable me to try, I would still be silent.

In 1883 I was impressed to write to you my experience. I felt like your time was too precious for one so ignorant as I to write to you.

On the 23rd of Sept. I was in so much trouble about writing I could not read. I said oh Lord I cannot write. Something seemed to say to me, I know you cannot, but I am able to do all things, so I wrote and felt like I had done my duty. Brother D. R. Moore preached here on the night (25th). His text was "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." I felt like he was with us, and that was enough. I went to the Little River Association at Union, and don't think I ever enjoyed preaching any better. I felt like it was good to be there. Oh! how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity. After I came home I read what I had written and it looked so imperfect, like myself, I did not tell father that I had written. My sister found it and said, if I wanted her she would copy it. I did not consent. I kept it until the second of Feb. 1885, I read it over and dropped it in the fire, though my conscience condemned me. I thought I would never write again. I have learned that the Lord blesses his children in duty, and not out of duty. I do feel that he has chastised me, but not half what I deserve, for I am so disobedient; the things I would do I do not, the things I would not do I do. To will is present, but how to perform that which is good, I find not.

Oh! what a blessed thought it is to the poor helpless sinners that Jesus died for them. I do feel that he has been good to me. Yesterday a week ago I went to sleep, when I awoke I felt sad, I did not know what was the matter, I could not sleep much that night. I went to the Association next day at Cedar Grove, and went to brother Hines that night: brethren Jones and Edwards preached. Brother Jones text was, "What is prayer?" It seemed to me I had never prayed an earnest prayer, and felt like I was deceived, and had deceived the church. Oh how miserable I did feel that night. How could I sleep when the Lord had hid his face from me. The brethren preached what I believed was the truth, but I did not enjoy it or anything else, I felt so miserable. While brother Moore was preaching I could only say, Oh Lord why am I thus? Something seemed to say you have not kept your promise in writing. Here I promised if he would let me feel his presence again I would try. That evening brother Moore's text came with force to my mind, "My God shall supply all your needs." I felt he had supplied my needs. Sleep was sweet to me that night, and the preaching was comforting to me on Sunday.

Brother Gold I have written more than I intended, but I hope you will pardon me. Please pray for me.

Your unworthy little sister.

ELDER P. D. GOLD, DEAR BROTHER:—I this morning seat myself to drop you a few lines in my weak way, by the way of communication for the first time, hoping you will look over my ignorance and imperfectly composed letter.

My education is very much limited, and having to labor very hard for a living, letter writing is a great task to me. I often think if I could write like you and some of the brethren I read of in the LANDMARK, it would be a great satisfaction to me to communicate to them, for I assure all if not deceived, there is nothing that is more pleasure to me than to read the rich experiences of the brethren and sisters in your valuable paper. It is a feast to my soul, and I sometimes hope, if I am not deceived, that I have been made to thank God that it was even his will to condescend to poor sinful man in his low, sunk-down ruined state of sin and death, and raise him up to realms of immortal bliss: but such was his mind and purpose, and that too before this earth was fashioned, or man spoken into existence, for known unto him were all his works from before the foundation of the world. Nothing was hid from his all-seeing eye.

Brother Gold, if I believe anything, I hope it is this. He saw his people in eternity ruined and lost forever, helpless, without God and without hope in the world, nothing that they could or ever would do to save them; for it is by grace alone we are saved, and that not of ourselves, it is the gift of God. What a truth? and the poor trembling child of God knows this to be a solemn truth. I am yours in hope of eternal life.

WHAT IS ORDER.

ELDER P. D. GOLD, DEAR BROTHER IN THE LORD:—I desire to write a few things to you, or rather ask you and the dear brethren who are in order with all Primitive Baptists the world over, a few questions, on a point of order.

Question 1st. If a Primitive Baptist church receives Missionary baptism, and is fellowshiping Masons and other institutions, is she in order with true Primitive Baptists? If not, are those that joined her by experience and baptism while she is in this condition in order or legal; Can it be that when a church is in disorder, that her work is in order? Though a minister have legal baptism himself, is the baptism that he administers while in this condition legal or right? Could or would such baptism if known be received by Primitive Baptist order?

I will now try to give the reason why I ask these questions, or write this. I have become dissatisfied with my baptism, believing that Harmony Church could not administer legal baptism. I desire the counsel and instruction of those brethren that never have mingled with any of the works of men or the institutions of men as a church.

Harmony Church which I joined, I believe was set up on the true principles of Primitive Baptists, but at the time when I joined, she had been receiving or had Missionary Baptism, and was in fellowship with Masons, and a few days before I joined at Harmony, a Missionary preacher, together with the pastor of Harmony Church, conducted a revival which lasted a week. Harmony a Primitive Church and Rocky Creek a Missionary Church, were hand in hand running this revival meeting. It continued from Sunday until Friday, during which time some came and gave in their experience at Harmony and received the right hand of fellowship from both churches, with the understanding that they would join and be baptized at Rocky Creek. It went on this way until Friday, when they moved the meeting to Rocky Creek Church, and continued it until Sunday, during which time some came forward, gave in their experience, and received the right hand of fellowship from each church with the understanding they would go to Harmony and be baptized.

A few days after this I joined at Harmony and was baptized by brother Jesse Culver, who was the pastor of Harmony Church at that time, and who helped conduct this meeting, and I must say here, that I believe he was a christian hearted man, but this is the question, with me now is my baptism legal or in order? I cannot see how the church being in such gross disorder, receiving Missionary baptism, fellowshipping all of the institutions of the day, can be in order. Several of my brethren will agree that the church was in disorder, but they say her work was good and in order.

Finally the church, and Mt. Zion Association, the Harmony, was not in that Association at that time, but went in since. Mount Zion Association and Harmony Church about the same time, set up resolutions declaring a non-fellowship with Missionary baptism, and all institutions of men, and put away Missionary baptism, and the work of those who had Missionary baptism, but the question in point now is, did Mt. Zion Association, and Harmony Church put away all the works of disorder? She retains all those that were received and baptized while in this condition, (as they were baptized by men who were legally baptized themselves.) This is a question now with the brethren in this Association. Every church is, or will be concerned. Some say she is in order, some say she is not.

Now brother Gold, you and your brethren need not be backward in your expressions on these things. I am not writing for any person but myself, but I think I can safely say that the brethren all here would be glad to hear from you on those things.

This Association is divided into three parts. She first set up resolutions against all institutions which put away masons and all institutions, but there was an arminian element which caused the second division. I am with those who protested against institutions, and arminians, and believe if any are right, it is this side, but I now conclude that we are lacking in regard to order, and if I am wrong, and not in order, I want to know it, and am willing to confess it and acknowledge an error when shown to my understanding.

Now dear brethren, in conclusion I will say that what I have written is in love and the best of feelings towards all. I hope none will take offense. I have not written with the intention of stirring up strife, for be it from me, but what I have written in regard to Harmony, which I know to be facts, and only state these things that the brethren may know things as they are: and I hope the brethren that are in order will be faithful for my satisfaction and others, and the cause of Christ, and give the counsel and instruction on these things, for the comfort of God's people.

Brethren that come among us from a distance and put in their letters are becoming dissatisfied since finding this out, and I write to hear from brethren that never have mingled with such things, thinking them better prepared

EVERLASTING HABITATION.

Mrs. M. D. Howe of Mo. requests my opinion of Luke 16 : 9 :

"And I say unto you, make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness, that when ye fail they may receive you into everlasting habitations."

The unjust steward acted wisely in his generation, which was to obtain a home for himself. For in the generations of the world the chief purpose is to look for self, and find a home for self. Everything that is done is to that end, what can I make is the question. Will it pay me to do so and so, is the scope of all that men of the world aim at, or that the fleshly principles of a child of God aim at.

The world counts it a wise thing for a man to make money for himself, or get gain. In this light the unjust steward is commanded as being one of this generation who is wiser than the children of light. For he acted in a way to be sure of a home for himself when his lord dismissed him, for he had bro't his lord's debtors under obligation to serve him and give him a home or help.

Now the children of light are to act in such a way that when they fail in the flesh they shall be received into everlasting habitation. How is this done? What evidence is there that one is a child of God if he is unfaithful in the unrighteous mammon? If we are not faithful in the least, and in all matters of worldly business, who will commit to us the true riches? He that is unrighteous in little will be unrighteous in much.

One of the best ways of determining whether one is righteous or not is to see how he acts in matters of worldly business.

If one claiming to be a christian is unfaithful in worldly business the church cannot receive him into her fellowship. But if one is faithful in the unrighteous mammon then he obtains friends by his proper use of these things, in the sense that people see and know that he is righteous. Take for illustration Zaccheus, the publican, who was accused of being an unrighteous man. When the Lord called him, Zaccheus showed that he was righteous in worldly riches, or the mammon of unrighteousness, by restoring four fold if he had taken away anything wrongfully, and by giving half his goods to feed the poor. By thus doing he obtained friends. For the disciples thus were made his friends.

When one comes to the church bringing good fruit he finds friends in the church who receive him into their fellowship, which is an everlasting habitation.

One now goes to the church until he fails to find a home anywhere else.

Now let the child of God be as wise in finding him an everlasting home, as the people of this world are wise in finding natural homes for themselves here in this world.

Paul tells us that the love of money is the root of all evil. There are not many that believe that in these days when the love of money is the ruling passion. From the preacher to the gambler, from the merchant to the beggar, all are trying to get money. Merchants trade for it, preachers beg for it, rogues steal for it, gamblers trick for it. So much fast living, style, extravagance laziness and pride are abounding now that much money is demanded to keep up styles, &c., Of course when so much money is demanded people will not see any wrong in it.

But Jesus illustrates the evil by the case of the rich man and Lazarus. The rich man fared sumptuously every day. The poor man Lazarus was full of sores, unable to labor, and was laid at the gate of the rich man, and desired to feed upon the crumbs that fell from the rich man's table. Now, while deeper things may be taught by this than what I may say, yet certainly such living on the part of the rich man is condemned. He cared not for Lazarus. He was one that oppressed the poor. Nothing is more plainly taught in scripture than that the poor should be remembered and helped. We should be forward or quick to remember the poor and give unto them.

The rich man oppresses the poor man, even when he does not mean to do so. It is dangerous to be rich. It is contrary to safety and God's word. They that will be rich fall into a snare, and many foolish and hurtful lusts which drown men in destruction and perdition. The man of God is warned to flee these things, and seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness. There are no more wicked men in our country than men rich in worldly goods in oppressing the poor. Do not rich men oppress you and draw you before the judgment seats?

Do not they blaspheme that worthy name by which ye are called? James 2: 6,7.

The rich man dies and is buried. In hell he lifts up his eyes, being in torments. Is not he a wicked man? If he is not wicked, who is a wicked man?

God hath chosen the poor of this world rich in faith. Lazarus dies and is carried by angels into Abraham's bosom. Lazarus had his evil things in this world, while the rich man had his good things in this world.

Remarks on John A. Cobb's piece.

In the original separation between what are now known as Primitive or Old School Baptists, and the modern Fullerite Baptists, or New School, those who believed in the bible order withdrew from those that held to the new, modern, worldly measures. But how was it then about those that were baptized before the division? If all of them were baptized by sound men, still they were mingled with others not thus baptized. If all had been in order before the division then there was no need of a division. Necessarily there were things unclean and in disorder at that time, and previously. To wash their hands of such things the brethren withdrew and protested against the continuance of such things. To put away such disorder is to withdraw from it, and not repeat it. But how can those who joined the church at such a time clear themselves of it? Only by doing as I have stated.

In the association and church alluded to by our brother, how can they put away what was done in the past? It seems to us that when a church repents of her evil, and turns away from it, and does that which is right, that ends that sin. We will say here is a man that sins to shame and reproach, as the younger son did. But he afterwards repents and comes back to the father's house. What is to be done with him. Must we kill him to get rid of him? No; receive him into the house. So it is with a church.

Put away your strange gods and strange wives. That means turn away from your wicked works and do that which is right.

I would suggest that if Brother Cobb does not feel satisfied with his baptism, that is if he does not feel that it is a gospel baptism, that he receive baptism now in the gospel way.

When I left the New School I desired baptism, and would not have been satisfied to come in without it, and have never since been troubled an hour about my baptism being right.

We should be separate from all worldly institutions, nor can we with any consistency recognize the baptism, nor any other act of any so-called church of any other denomination.

Other brethren are requested to give their views of this question.

P. D. G.

THE FATHERS TO THE CHILDREN.

"And he shall go before him in the spirit and power of Elias, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just; to make ready a people prepared for the Lord."

This language was spoken by the angel Gabriel that stands in the presence of God, concerning John the Baptist before he was conceived in the womb. He was great in the sight of the Lord, for Jesus said that of those born of women there was not a greater than John the Baptist. It was also prophesied by Malichi that the Lord would send Elijah, the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord;

"And that he should turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the hearts of the children to their fathers, lest the Lord come and smite the earth with a curse.

This Elijah, or Elias, is John the Baptist, the herald sent before Jesus to turn many of the people of Israel to the Lord their God. John had the Holy Ghost before he was born. It was a notable instance of his leaping in the womb for joy when Mary saluted his mother. He received no part of his preparation of man. For he was in the wilderness until the time appointed for his showing to Israel. His food was locusts and wild honey, the simplest of food, and even such as man had nothing to do with preparing. His clothes was of the plainest kind, his raiment being of camel's hair, and a leathern girdle was about his waist.

This is the herald of the King of righteousness. No work of man to introduce him, but he was in the wilderness until the word of God came to him, then at once he came forth preaching the gospel. How wonderful was the beginning of the gospel in its manifestation and organization. Jesus never learned letters of men, nor did any apostle whom Jesus called ascribe any part of his preparation to man.

It was by the Holy Ghost that John and all of them preached. They all spake as the spirit gave them utterance.

John was sent to make ready a people prepared for the Lord. For many of the children did he turn to the Lord their God. Observe it was the Lord's people that John was to make ready. Is it true that any are ever saved except the Lord's people? Was John sent to make ready any others? Were any of that generation of vipers saved? Did any of that generation of vipers receive the baptism of John. John was sent before Jesus in the spirit and power of Elias. This is the power of God. The prophet Elijah was a wonderful restorer of the worship of the true God. He slew the false prophet, and rebuilt the altar of God, and vindicated the worship of the true and living God. No more notable prophet perhaps ever appeared to assert the Almighty power of God who answered by fire from heaven, and to turn the hearts of the people to the worship of the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. For the worship of the true and living God is one worship, even as God is unchangeable. There is no true God but the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob.

Jesus said "God is not the the God of the dead but of the living, for all his people live unto him. No truer men in the worship of God ever lived than Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. Such as they are the fathers. John was sent to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, or that the children should have the same heart that the fathers had, and hence that they should be one. He was sent to turn the disobedient to the wisdom of the just.

The God of heaven gives his people one mind and one voice. When John came and preached, those that believed him were given the heart of the father, or believed what the fathers believed, and worshipped the same God.

Abraham saw the day of Christ and was glad. The fathers saw his day, and now the spirit or heart that they possess was given to the children, hence worship they the same God and thus were one.

Who were these children John was sent to? Were they little infants only a few months or years old? Is that the meaning of the term 'children of Israel'?

We say no. But it was grown people, adults, that John baptized. They confessed their sins. There is no instance named in scripture where infants were baptized.

But people who believed the preaching of John confessed their sins and worshipped the God of their fathers, and were possessed of the same mind and spirit that their fathers were blessed with.

This is the effect of all gospel preaching the world over. Those that God sends to preach do preach as John did, and all who are ordained unto eternal life believe what the servants of God do and are blessed with the same heart and mind of the fathers, and thus a spiritual worship is given God's people in all generations, and these contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints. Thus the earth is preserved so that the Lord does not smite the earth with a curse. The people of God are the salt of the earth, and the world is preserved for their sake until all the children of Israel are gathered in.

P. D. G.

ONE STAR DIFFERENT FROM ANOTHER STAR IN GLORY.

"For one star differeth from another star in glory.

So also is the resurrection of the dead." 1st Cor. 15: 41, 42.

The subject is the resurrection of the bodies of the saints, or the resurrection of the dead. It is denied by some, and Paul is reasoning with such. Why preach that Jesus is risen if there is no resurrection of the dead? For if Christ be not risen our faith is vain, our preaching is vain, and we are false witnesses.

If the dead rise not, then is not

Christ risen? Christ, the head or life of the church, is not raised if his church or body does not rise.

If the dead rise not, why then are they baptized for the dead? What shall they do who are baptized for the dead if the dead rise not? Why are ye baptized as if dead, or as dead? Your baptism shows you are dead. Then, if there is no resurrection that is the end of it. We then, if we have no hope but in this life, are of all men most miserable?

But Paul pursues this matter still, and answers the Sadduceic objection, who is supposed to ask this question, How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come? Here the question of the resurrection is fully considered, showing that it necessarily includes the body or man that is raised. For a resurrection necessarily embraces the raising up of the man, body, or seed that is sown, and not something else beside that identical thing. I mean by this that if wheat or any other grain is sown, when it is risen or comes up, it is not oats, corn, cotton, or something else, but it is wheat—not the same literal grain—but something of the same kind; for every seed brings forth its own kind. If it is a man that is sown in corruption or death, it is a man that is raised up or risen, and not something else. We sow wheat, and when it sprouts, we say that wheat is come up. When Jesus arose from the dead it was the same Jesus that was crucified, but not risen under the laws when he was crucified, but risen in the power of an endless life to die no more.

Now there are bodies terrestrial or earthly, and there are bodies celestial or heavenly. Each one has its own glory or beauty, and identity. When sown in the ground as a bare or naked grain of wheat, it had its own glory. When it dies and yields a crop in a risen stalk and head of wheat, it has another glory far surpassing the glory it possessed as a bare grain. But each body has its own glory.

There are different kinds of flesh. The flesh of men is not the same as that of horses, or fishes, or of birds. So there are bodies celestial and bodies terrestrial, and each one has its own glory or honor.

Then a man's body has a glory or honor and comeliness while here in the flesh, though it is an earthly body. But in the resurrection this same man will have another or heavenly body, differing from this earthly body. For the glory of the earthly body is a glory wholly separate and distinct from the glory of the heavenly, for this corruptible or earthly body shall be changed. He shall change our vile body, and fashion it like unto His glorious body. What wonderful changes or transformations does a piece of timber or metal undergo in the hands of a skilful workman? What change is wrought in the grain of what that is sown and dies and reappears in the stalk and fruit of a new crop. We say the same wheat that is sown comes up or is risen.

Jesus said, except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die it bringeth forth much fruit. This was true fully of Jesus, and the fruit he bears in his resurrection is his people.

Let us illustrate by Paul himself. While in the flesh or living here on earth, Paul's body had a glory, for the glory of the terrestrial is one. When Paul is risen from the dead he will appear in a heavenly or celestial body, or another glory differing altogether from the glory he had while on earth, as one star differs from another star in glory. The sun has one glory, the moon another, and the stars another glory; for one star differeth from another star in glory. So also is the resurrection of the dead. It (the body or dead) is sown in corruption; it is raised in incorruption; it is sown in weakness; it is raised in power. Thus as one star differs from another star in glory, does Paul in the resurrection differ from Paul here in the flesh. Paul in each state has his glory, but he is changed from glory to glory. The stars shine in the night, but when the sun is risen they have no glory by reason of the glory that excelleth. The law had its glory, but it is the glory of death, and no glory in comparison with the gospel. We are changed from the glory of the law to the glory of the gospel.

Then this does not mean that one saint in Heaven will excel another saint in Heaven in glory. Paul is not contrasting one saint with another saint. But he is contrasting the earthly body or state of a Christian, with the heavenly state of the same Christian, and showing how one differs from the other in glory. For it is sown in weakness, it (the same it) is raised in power.

So full are mankind of their notions of human merit that they think of Heaven as a place of such distinctions and grades as that some men in glory will be as far in advance of others as the sun outshines a small looking twinkling star. Perhaps, too, each one thinks that he himself will be the star of the first magnitude. The modern religion of the world is full of it. Every preacher and Sunday school teacher, &c., claims or thinks that he will be specially exalted or promoted because he is doing so much good for the Lord and helping him so much. Though there is not a word of truth in it.

Obituary.

JAMES WADE AND ELIZABETH RILEY.

James Wade was born October 30, 1808. Elizabeth Riley was born July 22, 1812, and they were married March 4, 1830. Sister Wade departed this life May 8, 1878, aged 65 years, 8 months and 16 days old. Brother Wade departed this life February 6, 1888, age 79 years, 3 months and 18 days. Eleven children were born unto them, five of them dying before them, leaving six children and a large number of grand and great grand children, with many brethren, sisters and friends to mourn our loss, but not as those who have no hope, for we feel that our loss is their eternal gain. They are done with the troubles and sufferings of this world, and are gathered home with the redeemed "gone before" to sing endless praises to the Redeemer. Brother Wade obtained a hope in Christ and joined the Primitive Baptist Church, at Black's Creek, Madison County, Ga., November 10, 1832, before the division. In that division he took a stand against the institution that caused so much trouble among the Baptists, and at his death was sound in the faith of God's elect, contending for the old Primitive Baptist doctrine, and dying in the full triumphs of faith through Jesus Christ, the Redeemer. Sister Wade obtained a hope and united with the same church July 16, 1849, and died in the same triumphs of faith, loving and contending for the doctrine of salvation by grace. The old brother and sisters hope bore them up even in sickness and death. The unworthy writer visited the brother in his last sickness, and talked with him. He expressed himself reconciled to the dealings of the Lord, saying that he would be better off if taken out of this troublesome world. They were honest, industrious citizens, good neighbors, ever ready to help those in need and distress. Their house always was open as a home for their brethren, sisters and friends. They were ever ready to contribute to church expenses, and to help the preachers by contributing to their necessities, always filling their seats at meeting, unless hindered. It makes us sad to look on their vacant seats. Our humble desire is that the children, brethren and friends may be enabled to follow their examples in life, and our last end be like theirs. May the good Lord comfort the bereaved children in this sad dispensation is our desire.

SARAH E. CHANDLER.

Mrs. Sarah E. Chandler, the daughter of William and Nancy Smith, of Caswell Co., N. C., was born September 22, 1867, and died January 3, 1888, making her stay on earth 20 years, 4 months and 11 days. Her father came out of the war afflicted with rheumatism, and soon became helpless, and being poor the mother, with her four children, labored hard for a living, and by industry and economy supported themselves and thereby won the esteem and respect of their neighbors and friends generally. Though trained in the school of adversity, the subject of this notice grew up a bright and lovely girl. She was truthful, kind, gentle and affectionate, cheerful without levity, and beautiful without being vain. She was married to Joseph I. Chandler by the writer October 28, 1886, and proved to be a helpmate, indeed. But, alas, how fleeting the joys of earth! Death laid his hand on her in the form of puerperal fever, and after an illness of about four weeks she breathed her last, in the midst of many sad hearts and weeping eyes. She had all the attention that medical aid, kind friends and relatives could bestow, and, though she made no public profession of a hope in Christ, we have reason to believe she was one of those little ones whom the Father will not suffer to perish. Her mother observed a change in her some years before her death. She manifested a kind regard for those who walk in the footsteps of the Savior. The writer has often observed her at preaching as paying serious and respectful attention, and sometimes the penitential tear would be stealing down her cheeks. Being thus adorned with the peaceable fruits of righteousness, I believe she has been transplanted from the garden of earth to the paradise of God, where the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary are at rest. Then may we fondly cherish the memory of her virtues and graces, and grieve not as those who have no hope. May the Lord sanctify this bereavement to the good of the living, and prepare them as far as it can be his will for bright mansions in the skies. The deceased leaves a kind husband with a bright little boy, Jesse

Gold, by name, an afflicted father and mother, two brothers and a devoted sister, to mourn their loss, which we hope is her eternal gain.

How blest are they whose transient years
Pass like an evening meteor's flight,
Not dark with guilt, nor dim with tears,
Whose course is short, unclouded, bright.

O, stay, thy tears, the blest above
Have hailed a spirit's heavenly birth,
And sang a song of joy and love,
Then why should anguish reign on earth

WM. SPINEY.

Wm. Spiney departed this life last December. He died with heart dropsy. His age was about 57 years. He was a consistent member of the Primitive church, and was satisfied of reaping the reward that is prepared for them that have been faithful unto the end.

HELEN SPINEY.

SARAH MALINDA EDWARDS.

Died, on the 6th day of June, 1888, at her residence, in the county of Carroll, Va., Mrs. Sarah Malinda Edwards, wife of Mr. M. F. Edwards, and daughter of Elder William and Lucy Lundy. The subject of this notice was born on the 1st day of December, 1855, making her 32 years, 6 months and 5 days old. She joined the Primitive Baptist Church at Good Hope on the 4th day of July, 1885, and was baptized on the same day by Elder B. E. Caudill. She lived a faithful member, and in the full confidence of all who knew her, and on the 31st day of March, 1888, she was one who went into the constitution of a Primitive Baptist church at Mt. Lebanon, in the above named county. She is also the one who wrote a notice for the Monitor last fall in regard to the death of her little daughter Minnie. O. Edwards, who died on the 17th day of October, 1887, who was a bright, intelligent little girl of about eleven years of age, and loved by all who knew her. Her mother seemed to lose all interest in life in the death of her little Minnie, who seemed to be more satisfaction to her than all the rest of her children. She left five living—one little boy and four little girls. The baby, little Dora, was just one year old the night before her mother died, and who on the night of the 22nd of June passed from the earth to meet her mother on that bright and happy shore, where sickness, pain and death are felt and feared no more, Sister Edwards has been down some time with measles and typhoid fever, and could not talk without great effort and pain. On the morning of the day she died she said to her husband that she saw three bright shining lights above her, which he believed were the spirits of her three little children who had gone before waiting to convey her spirit home to her seat among the angels around the throne of God in Heaven. When asked by a lady friend if she dreaded to cross the dark river, she said the only regret was leaving her dear husband, who had been as good a husband as ever lived, and her five little children behind, and that she would liked to have talked three hours if she had been able. At about the hour of 10 o'clock she went to sleep without a struggle, to wake no more until the last loud triumph shall sound. During the sickness of little Dora kind and gentle hands were ready and willing to minister to her wants and comforts, but all that sympathizing friends could do would not avail, for that grim monster death had marked her for his own and snapped the brittle thread of life asunder on the night of the 22nd of June. We can only point the bereaved husband, father, mother and friends to the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world, and encourage them to still be guided by the ruling power of one who is mighty to save, relieve our troubles; and especially to the husband, for we believe that God for Christ has pardoned his sins, but who has never put on the whole armour of God and shown to the world the good work done in him. We sympathize with the bereaved ones, and offer all the consolation we are able, and would say to them, grieve not for them that are gone, for we know that your loss is their eternal gain, and that God hath said, "Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted," also "Blessed are they that die in the Lord."

Written by order of the church at Mt. Lebanon by the clerk, C. L. Woltz.

WM. LUNDY, Moderator.

P. S.—Since the above was written it has so pleased the divine Lord and Master to bring the husband into the fold, he has come forward upon a confession of faith, and was received into the church at Mt. Lebanon ready for baptism. He prefers to wait for Brother B. E. Caudill, who is expected to pass through this section of the country, soon to be baptized.

The afflictions of this family have been so great within the last year that the power of God is shown in a wondrous degree. The ruthless hand of death has snatched the old and young alike away from the gray-haired father, upon whom the suns of seventy-six summers have shone with tender care, and the frosts of seventy-six winters have kissed his brow, even to the babe upon the breast, five have gone, father, daughter, daughter-in-law and two grand daughters.

Afflictions though they seem severe,
Are oft in mercy sent.

C. L. WOLTZ.

DEACON WILLIAM A. DAWSON.

The subject of this memoir, Deacon William A. Dawson, was born Aug. 3d, 1818; was married to his first wife Elizabeth A. Lindsey Nov. 19th, 1846, with whom he lived, till her death Sept. 9th, 1858, and by whom he had three children—one son and two daughters.

On the 24th of Jan. 1851, he was married to Susan R. Watkins, with whom he lived 'till his death July 6th, 1888 and by whom he had one son. His last wife and all of his children survive him to mourn their loss, but doubtless their loss is his eternal gain, for it would be difficult to find a better man than Brother Wm. A. Dawson was.

He was always the same humble christian. Several years ago he joined the church at Cane Creek, with which he remained a faithful and exemplary member 'till the Lord called him home to receive his crown of righteousness.

He was so prompt in attending the church meetings that when sickness or any other cause forbade his being present his absence was really a matter of comment among the brethren. Some one would be ready to inquire, "Where is brother Dawson to-day?" I wish that all of the Baptists would follow his commendable course in that and many other christian duties.

He had a good hope in Christ many years before he joined the church, and during that interim his walk was as good as any member of the church.

The kind attention shown to him by his neighbors and friends during his last sickness was conclusive proof that he was much beloved, and that he had not out-lived all of his friends.

Even those who differed from him religiously seemed to vie with each other in trying to administer relief to him.

The scriptures tell us that he that would have friends must show himself friendly. Brother Dawson was a friend to all and especially to the needy. The writer of this obituary spent a part of several days with him just before his demise; he was conscious to the last and remained steadfast in the faith. He said his doubts were gone and a clear evidence of a blessed immortality was granted unto him "in the last time."

How pleasant it must be to say with Paul, "I have fought the good fight, I have finished the course, I have kept the faith, henceforth there is a crown laid up for me and not for me only, but for all those who love his appearing."

He was economical, industrious, and a man of fine judgment; all of which had a tendency to make him an excellent farmer. His children are all married and seem to be doing well. In his death his country has lost a patriot, his community has lost a good neighbor, his family has lost a kind husband and father and the church has lost a useful member. The bereaved ones have my prayers and sympathy, and may this bereavement prove a blessing to all of us.

ZION'S LANDMARK.

DEVOTED TO THE CAUSE OF JESUS

COMMUNICATED.

ELDERS GOLD AND LESTER—DEAR BRETHREN: As I have been reading the LANDMARK for some time and being interested and much instructed, I feel to say a few words to your many readers, if only you will give place in your paper.

I would love to speak of your editorials and the many communications that have been especially interesting to me, but space seems to forbid; but allow me to say a few words in regard to editorial of June 1st complaint and remarks of Elder J. H. Purifoy, of Alabama, and also editorial on same July 1. Allow me to say, I firmly do believe that a person may and does think he believes many things not in keeping with God's word. Tradition and imagination have a great influence on our minds. I read and get an incorrect idea then go out in thought, and even meditate until I feel the Lord is in the matter, and all be a mistake. I think I am safe to say that this is so of myself, so I am permitted to say this of others. My mind was once settled on the conclusion that the pass-over, feet-washing and the Lord's supper were all the same night. I so preached for over twenty years, hence I objected to feet-washing coming in the church. Why? Because it only washed away the typical or former dispensation of type and shadow, etc. But now I see that no two of these were at the same time, not heretofore at the eating of the pass-over. All types are done when Jesus says I eat no more till it be fulfilled, etc. I would love to speak further on this, but I must come to the points on my mind. So one or the other was a whim or tradition, and just as honest as I know. Now to the question, What is an evangelist? I think I am safe to say that Timothy, Titus and Philip (one of the seven) were all evangelists. The work therefore assigned them, especially that of Timothy and Titus, is hardly done by a person who is not abiding with the church to ordain men of sound mind, husband of one wife, etc. How can one unless he is acquainted, and how can a person who is not acquainted, who is from place to place, perhaps not in the same locality once a year, how can he do the work of an evangelist. To-day even we see men who are yet doing the work of an evangelist as was handed down to Timothy and Titus. Until to-day we cannot be too careful, cannot be too well acquainted. Titus 1:1-9. Then can we say that those to set in order, etc., are not acquainted, not abiding, etc.? Just here let me say I see but little profit or benefit to the church from the preacher who is all the time separated from the care of the church. He may serve as a kind of picket duty, while the main and only work is in the field of battle giving orders, etc. How could churches get along if no pastors. If one can go loose, have no care of the church, why not another and so on? But one may say, Are there not diverse gifts? True, and to profit withal, all to profit? Are there not diverse gifts? (officers) in the field of battle, each, all, to his proper place, and all move on smooth and harmonious. But one officer may say, I will go out and review and see how things are going. Think what derangement and vacancy is caused thereby. Just so when a minister leaves the field

—his church. But I do not want to be understood that a minister must not, cannot, visit from place to place. No. I believe in those visits. I do believe they are profitable and for mutual good. I would that you, Brother Gold, could visit us away out in Iowa, or we you, which is only a personal correspondence. This I believe in, etc. I feel now to say a word of Philip. All my life till the 1st of in LANDMARK, from the remarks before referred to by Editor and Elder Purifoy, my mind was that that Philip, who is of the seven, baptized the Eunuch. But after a more careful reading I am made to see that the Philip who preached at Samaria and baptized the Eunuch was the other Philip, the apostle. It will be remembered we find two by the name Philip, one an apostle, the other a deacon. Now, then, do deacons baptize? However he may have been set a part to that work after, but the reading does not say to me it was Philip, one of the seven, that baptized; but over in the 21st chapter and 8th verse the reading is free to say Philip, one of the seven as a distinction from the other Philip. Stephen, though he was full of faith and power and worked wonders and miracles, yet it does not say he preached, nor does it say Philip, one of the seven, preached, yet from the word preached none have left a more able sermon than Stephen. Now, then, he who is full of faith and doctrine by the Holy Ghost, as was he, even to-day is persecuted. The same is very apt to say and talk as the Christ will give him utterance. I have heard brethren who have done good talking as close to the line of truth as any preacher who were not talked about as a preacher. So I see as regard both Stephen and Philip the deacon. Now, may you look in this matter, and see if you don't see that it was the apostle Philip that baptized? I am aware the heading says the deacon Philip baptized, but the reading fails to say so, and as I take the reading rather than man's heading I speak as I do. Now may love, peace, all for the good of Zion abound, is my prayer, for Jesus' sake.

AARON WOOD.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD;—I feel like I want to testify to the readers of the LANDMARK of the wonderful works of God, for though my pen has lain silent for a long time, my mind has not been altogether at ease. I have felt often that I desired to confess my sins before you all, and to tell you that my high priest still lives, for though I travel much by nights, and make many blunders, yet by faith I can sometimes look to calvary, and view my sins all washed away in Jesus' blood. For a long time I felt to be in Babylon with my harp hung on the willows, and I would not even look to Jerusalem, for I felt that I had sinned and justly merited my wretched condition, and I wrote the following lines:

With shame I must confess my sins,
Worldly objects charm mine eyes,
And lead me down by Babylon's streams
To pine away, and probably die.

On willows in the midst thereof
I hung my harp because of sin;
My mouth is shut, my tongue is dumb
When I attempt a song to sing.

This worldly-mindedness that led Me to this Babylon to roam;
Oft' whispers to my weary soul,
Why don't you sing me Zion's songs.

With shameful face I bow my head,
And when blest Zion I think on;
I almost weep and sigh aloud,
Because I can't sing 'Zion's song'.

I can truly say that Babylon is not a desirable place for the child of God, and when we sin and think too much of the world we are sure to get there. Then why do we depart from the commands of God? we know it will lead us into trouble. Our God cannot look up on sin with the least degree of allowance, therefore he says to the children of Israel, "Turn ye, turn ye, why will ye die." How good is the Lord! how merciful! When we sin he chastises us, and generally brings us back to him. He will not suffer us to be tempted above that we are able to bear, but will with the temptation make a way for us to escape. He gently leads us by his spirit, and though we may have a long dreary winter, the sun is ever shining, and will ere long burst through the clouds to warm up our cold hearts; then we can appreciate His presence. Often the brightest days come after the darkest night.

Oh! we are made in grief to bear
Affliction's needful rod:
And oft' the stroke seems most severe
That leads us to our God.

We cannot always see that "all things work together for good to them that love God, who are the called according to his purpose" yet they do; and when we can feel and know it, we can rejoice even in our worst afflictions.

EXPERIENCE.

DEAR BRETHREN GOLD AND LES-TER:—Through and by the goodness and tender mercies of God I make the attempt to try and tell you and the dear children of God what I hope the Lord has done for my soul, if I am not deceived.

It has been impressed upon my mind for some time to write out my little experience and send it to you for publication, but feeling so unworthy and that I had nothing to write that would be comforting, would lay it aside, but it causes me to see so much trouble I cannot rest any where I go. I have asked the Lord to give me language to express my feelings, and to guide my tongue to speak the truth. I feel like it will be a pleasure to me to tell you, if I can tell you, but it seems to be hard for me to do, but nevertheless I must try and do the best I can, for I do not feel like I can live unless I do. My opportunity for writing is poor, as I have to be with my old afflicted mother most of my time attending to her, for she is very much afflicted with paralysis.

The 3rd chap. of Gal. 1st verse came to me, also 1st chap. 2nd verse of Jonah. At a very early age in life I had serious thoughts of death and eternity, and would pray to the Lord to make me a christian. Oh I thought what an awful thing it was to die and be forever lost. I wanted to go to heaven where all the good people go when I died. I desired above all things to be a christian. I thought if I would pray to him he would save me. When I did wrong I was sorry for it, and would ask the Lord to forgive me, but I thought it was time enough for me, I would wait and enjoy myself with the world in my young days, and after I got married I would get religion: but still there was something on my mind all the time. I went on that way for some time.

Nine or ten years ago being very much troubled I dreamed that mother told me that I was not going to live long, nor my husband either, and some one would have to take my children, I thought then was my time to pray, if I ever did. I thought surely if I died in that condition I would be forever lost. I had made promises to the Lord and had broken them until I thought I had committed sin, and I knew I was not fit to die.

In a dream I was told to read the 540th hymn, and the one next to it. I found the hymn next morning and read it over and over again: it gave me some comfort, but soon my troubles returned again. I was no better but getting worse all the time. I would have hard feelings against the Lord for keeping me so long in that condition. Oh why could he not hear me. My prayers did me no good. I thought it was a sin for me to try to pray. I thought that I never would try again but could I help it? No, for every breath I drew was praying to the Lord, I felt with the poet.

I can but perish if I go,
I am resolved to try,
For if I stay away I know
I must forever die.

Without a change I felt that I soon must die for I could not live under such a burden of sin. I saw no chance for me, for I felt to be such a sinner the Lord could not hear me, and I must die. To my great surprise the word came to my ears and sounded so loud,

"peace be to this house." I felt that it was the Lord, but my burden had not left me. I went in the house and opened the bible to the 10th chap. of Luke. I found these words, "peace be to this house." I went out rejoicing and praising the Lord.

I had found Jesus the Lord, what I had been desiring so long. He was precious to my soul. Daniel came in my view when he was cast in the den of lions. I felt that the Lord was with me, and nothing could hurt me. I loved christians and wanted to be baptized. I promised the Lord that I would go to brother Duke Allsbrook's and tell him. The next morning I felt like it was all imagination of me. I had nothing to tell him, and I was afraid I would deceive him, and thought it was the best for me to stay at home.

Dear brother Gold, I felt sure I was deceived. Now where do you stand? Ten times worse sinner than you ever were before. Then I did not know what to do. I felt that I had done all I could do, and could do no more. I felt that the house would sink on account of sin. Oh I felt to be such a sinner the Lord was going to punish my children for what I had done, and was miserable. I felt that I had rather die than to live. I had never asked anyone to pray for me. I wanted to go to brother Duke Allsbrook or to sister C. A Allsbrook, and it was getting so late I did not have time to go that far, and there was no body at the house but my three youngest children. I could not keep from going that way. I went as far as old sister Pollie Baker's gate. She saw me and came to me. I told her my case, and asked her to pray for me. She prayed for me standing at her gate, and when I turned off from her I was going off to die.

I could not stay at home. Late in the evening I went over to brother's to see mother, and when I got there I found him. I never had such feelings in my life. I got a chance to ride with him part the way home. I told him my feelings. He told me I was not deceived, it would all come back to me; but I never believed him. When I came home my oldest daughter was cooking supper. I thought I would go off and pray one more time before I died. I walked off down the pasture fence some distance from the house. I wanted to fall at his feet, here Lord take me, do what thou wilt with me, for if I am saved it will be through thy goodness and tender mercy; for I can do nothing. I came to the house expecting nothing but to hear that awful sound. My troubles all left me, and I felt light and good, and was made to rejoice again, and it was all interpreted to me as plain as my fingers, "Peace be to this house." Then I could say I hope I had a hope. I thought I would never see any more trouble, and went to bed feeling so happy and good. The next morning when I awoke there was that sweet love, and there came a light in my breast, and I thought that light was love. Jesus all the day long was my joy and my song. I thought the remnant of my days would I spend to his praise. Oh how I wanted to tell what a dear Savior I had found, and could not help telling it.

That night there were heavy impressions to go and unite with the church, and felt that I had to go, for I felt like I should die if I did not go, and felt that I could not live out from among them. I thought of those that stay away so long, oh how can you stay away? I felt that I must go for God had commanded me. I wanted to die and be buried with him. I promised the Lord I would go if he would take that trouble off me.

The first opportunity which I thought would be the next meeting I promised the Lord I would be a dutiful servant to him, take up my cross and follow him through evil as well as good. He says if I obey him in his commandments I shall live, and I believe his word; for when I fail to do my duty I get in so much trouble, and feel like I shall die.

He says, "Watch and pray lest ye enter into temptation. He commanded the house to stand. When meeting came on I failed to go. I felt like I had nothing to tell them, and did not see how they could receive me; for I did not feel worthy of being with such good people, and I got in so much trouble I could not rest: my whole heart was in trouble day and night. He was the first and the last with me. Oh what was the matter with me? I was sore troubled. I felt like I could not live in that condition. With tearful eyes and troubled at heart I asked the Lord what would he have me to do. My mind was directed to brother Moore. I could not keep him off my mind. It came to me, write to A. J. Moore. Next morning I wrote to him and told him my feelings. I was so anxious to hear from him. In a week's time I received his letter, and felt that the Lord had done great things for me whereof I ought to be glad.

I know he told my feelings, and hope the Lord will bless him for his comforting words. Oh how I wanted to see him.

On Saturday before the 2nd Sunday in March I went forward, though I told them nothing. Oh how I wanted to talk, but I could not express my feelings. I had tried to talk before to several I did not see how they could receive me, unless I could have told them my feelings. I was buried with them in baptism the next day by brother A. J. Moore. I felt that after a storm a calm.

I will copy off brother Moore's letter for publication. It gave me so much comfort I feel like it will be some to the dear children of God. I hope the Lord will bless you all. Remember me in your prayers. Your unworthy sister if one at all.

JULIA BELL.

Scotland Neck, N. C.

MRS. JULIA A. BELL, DEAR FRIEND:—Yours of the 23rd is at hand. In reply I will say your troubles are the same that all the Lord's poor and afflicted people have to pass. We have our nights as well as days, our sowing as well as the harvest time. You give expressions which indicate an inward operation of the Holy Spirit. I feel that the Lord has done great things for you, whereof you ought to be glad. His word seems to be written in your heart. He has not left you comfortless, for if you can have fellowship with doubting Thomas, John in prison, Jesus has built your house upon a rock, though the waves of trouble beat high, the rains beat down, the winds blow, the houses shall stand, for it has a sure foundation, and God has commanded it to stand. It is not a house that is built upon a sandy foundation that shall fall, and great shall be the fall.

Were you not arrayed in the brightness of the pure and spotless lamb you could not see your own nothingness. God sheds abroad his love in our hearts by the Holy Ghost. This makes us love him, his word, and people. It may be that your troubles are pressing you sore because you have in heart promised to come away from the world and unite with the church, and have failed to do so, and the work is heavy. There is a rest remaineth to the people of God, and it is found in the church of Christ here on earth.

After I received a hope there was but little rest for me until I went and told the reason of my hope, and was baptized. In obedience there is rest, but the way of transgressors is hard. It is better to obey God than man. I felt that I could not see how the brethren could believe me, but yet I must go for I felt God had commanded me. We see a beauty and a glory in the church, for Christ is there. We love the food which he gives, and feel we shall die if we stay away.

We injure only ourselves. Truly we suffer by conferring with flesh and blood for they that live after the flesh shall die: but they who through the spirit mortify the deeds of the body shall live. The Lord is our only guide, inquire in his sanctuary at a throne of grace, and follow where he leads; he is a hiding place from the wind, and a covert from the tempest, the shadow of a great rock in a weary land, and may he lead, guide and direct you to your dear old mother. God's ear is not heavy, nor his arm shortened. He knows her sorrows and bottles up her tears. He will come in his own good time and take her unto himself.

A. J. MOORE.

PREDESTINATION AND ELECTION.

ELDER P. D. GOLD, DEAR BROTHER:—By your permission I will offer the following thoughts upon the subject of Predestination and Election, for it seems to me that these truths must be taught in every act of God in the salvation of sinners; and that to destroy them we destroy the foundations of all hope of salvation by grace, and if they can be destroyed, then we had as well take the ground occupied by infidels and atheists. For if no election, no salvation, no God, and if no God, no Christ and if no Christ no truth in the Bible.

But everything visible shows that there is a God. And as there is a God, and surely there is, all these things prove him to be an all-wise God. That being the case we may safely appeal to the scriptures for a proof of his determined counsels from eternity. Then to the law and to the testimony, for if they speak not according to his word it is because there is no light in them. Isa. 8 : 20.

The prophet uses this strong and positive language "Remember the former things of old; for I am God, and there is none else like me, declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done, saying my counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure." Isa. 46 : 9, 10. This settles the matter in regard to Predestination and Election, for if the end was declared from the beginning, and the things that were not yet done are seen and arranged so it must be, there can be no failure unless the eternal God fails or alters his position, and to say that he does change or alter in the least degree is to give him the lie. Then as he has elected or predestinated the end, and the things not yet done, and will do all his pleasure, it is safe to preach his eternal purpose in the salvation of the church, his elect.

"In the Lord shall all the seed of Israel be justified, and shall glory." Isa. 45 : 25 "But Israel shall be saved in the Lord with an everlasting salvation: ye shall not be ashamed, nor confounded world without end. Isa 25 : 17. This looks like he would finish what he begins. "For thus saith the Lord that created the heavens; God himself that formed the earth and made it; he hath established it, he created not in vain. He formed it to be inhabited. I am the Lord and there is none else." 18th verse. Is there no election in the above? Is not election and predestination established in every line? "For Jacob have I loved, and Esau have I hated. For Jacob, my servant's sake, and Israel, my elect, I have called thee by thy name: I have surnamed thee, though thou hast not known me. I am the Lord and there is none else, there is no God beside me: I girded thee, though thou hast not known me, that they may know from the rising of the sun, and from the West that there is none beside me. I am the Lord and there is none else. I form the light and create darkness: I make peace and create evil, I the Lord do all these things. Drop down ye heavens from above, and skies pour down righteousness: let the earth open and let them bring forth salvation, and let righteousness spring up together; I the Lord have created it. Woe unto him that striveth with his maker! Let the potsherd strive with the potsherd of the earth; shall the clay say to him that fashioneth it, what makest thou, or thy work, he hath no hands? Woe unto him that saith to his father, what begettest thou, or to the woman what hast thou brought forth. Thus saith the Lord, the Holy One of Israel, and his maker; ask me of things to come concerning my sons and concerning the work of my hands command ye me. I have made the earth and created man upon it; I, even my hands have stretched out the heavens, and all their hosts have I commanded." Isa. 45 : 4—12 These scriptures declare the sovereignty of God in a wonderful degree, and it would seem would awe man into silence in regard to his purposes. It is strange that Arminians are willing to acknowledge his sovereignty in creating, and yet deny his sovereignty in governing or saving, i. e. acknowledge that he hath made men and deny his power to govern them. Of Israel the Lord hath said, "This people have I formed for myself; they shall show forth my praise." Isa. 43 : 21. How shall we understand this if no predestination or election. But now thus saith the Lord that created thee, O Jacob, and he that formed thee O Israel, fear not, for I have redeemed thee ; I have called thee by thy name ; thou art mine, when thou passest thro' the waters I will be with thee; and thro' the rivers they shall not over-flow thee : when thou walkest through the fire, thou shalt not be burned, neither shall the flame kindle upon thee, for I am the Lord thy God, the Holy One of Israel, thy Savior. I gave Egypt for thy ransom, and Ethiopia and Sheba for thee. Since thou wast precious in my sight thou hast been honourable, and I have loved thee ; therefore I will give men for thee and people for thy life. Fear not, for I am with thee, and will bring thy seed from the east and gather thee from the west. I will say to the north, give up ; and to the south, keep not back ; bring my sons from far and my daughters from the ends of the earth." Isa. 43: 1-6. How strong this language, can there be any co-work in it? How gloriously the eternal God setteth forth his sovereignty.

"I even I am the Lord and beside me there is no Saviour." 11th verse. Where is there room left for a co-worker if there is no Saviour but Christ the Lord : I will bring the blind by a way they know not; I will lead them in paths they have not known ; I will make darkness light before them and crooked things straight. These things will I do unto them, and not forsake them. Isa. 42 : r6. This does not look like a co-working system and certainly does teach that where he begins a work he will finish it.

"Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith the Lord, speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem and cry unto her that her warfare is accomplished (not will be) that her iniquity is pardoned, (not will be if she works) for she hath received of the Lord's hand double for all her sins." Isa. 40 : 1-2. Language could make this no stronger. And Jerusalem here certainly means the whole church—redeemed by Christ and proves conclusively that God had elected her and accomplished her warfare, and pardoned her iniquity all himself, and certainly is proof sufficient that as her battles are fought and the victory won, and her iniquity pardoned, that there can be no question or doubt of her final salvation or rather about her final acceptance into glory. And all through the effectual working of her glorious husband, father and effectual Savior, Christ the Lord. No co-work here, but Election certainly shines forth most conspicuously. But read the 15, 16, and 17 verses, same chapter. See how much he would be likely to be benefited by the help of all men were they co-workers with him. "Behold the nations are as a drop from the bucket, and are counted as the small dust of the balance : behold he taketh up the isles as a very little thing. And Lebanon is not sufficient to burn, nor the beasts thereof sufficient for a burnt-offering. All nations before him are as nothing, and they are counted to him less than nothing and vanity."

From this it will certainly be admitted that could all the wisdom, power and strength of all the nations of earth be consolidated into one individual that as a co-worker with God it would amount to absolutely nothing. For this work would only be vanity and vanity cannot help save a soul. Then unless God saves through Christ absolutely there can be no salvation. Then, "He shall feed his flock like a shepherd, he shall gather the lambs with his arm and carry them in his bosom, and shall gently lead those that are with young." 11th, verse. Certainly he will not lead any of them to be dragged down to hell by the devil, but as he has redeemed them he will gather them. It is a truth that we have no desire to deny that Ezekiel saith, 33 chap. and 11th verse, "Say as I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked, but that the wicked turn from his way, and live : turn ye, turn ye from your wicked ways, for why will ye die, O house of Israel." But this is spoken to a people beloved and re-learned, and must relate to their temporal deliverance, and not to their eternal salvation, and if we admit it to be eternal salvation are we not warranted in saying that it is not of their will that they turn or can turn, it must be by the spirit of God. The vanity of man is such that he is humbled by the power of God. "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts." Zech. 4: 6. And certainly the co-workers' mouths must be stopped by the following pointed declaration or enquiry. "Can the Ethiopian change his skin or the leopard his spots ! then may ye also do good that are accustomed to do evil." Jer. 13 : 23. This is to the point and is conclusive proof that the sinner will never turn of his own free will. But as we started out to prove Election and Predestination and Election to be our only hope of salvation and life eternal through Christ we will notice the following. "Behold my servant, whom I uphold ; mine elect in whom my soul delighteth : I have put my spirit upon him, he shall bring forth judgement to the Gentiles." Isa. 42 : 1. Now it is plain that the prophet is speaking in this verse of Christ—Christ is the head of the church and as such it would certainly be quite out of place to think for a moment that the head should be elect, and the body non-elect. Certainly no sane mind could conceive of such an idea, such a thing would amount to an impossibility. Then as the head is elect it follows as a matter of course that the body which is the church is also elect, and while there is life in the head the body has life in it, and the head cannot live without the body, neither can the body live without the head. So we may safely conclude that there is no separating them without death to both. Hence the truth of election is established by this text, if there was no other. And if all men compose the body spiritually of Christ then he died for all if not then he died to save the body the Church.

Probably Christ can set the matter to rest for us. Shall we not believe him in preference to all else. Hear him. "I am the good shepherd : the good shepherd giveth his life for his sheep." Jno. 10 : 11. Therefore doth my Father love me, because I lay down my life that I might take it again." 17th verse. "As the Father knoweth me even so know I the Father, and I lay down my life for the sheep, 15th verse. Now if all the world are sheep then it is proper to teach that Christ died to eternally save them all and all are saved in the same sense that the sheep are saved. The whole world of mankind do not follow Christ, but the sheep do follow him, so saith Christ in the 4th verse of John, 10 chap. This proves their election; goats never turn to sheep. God has never given goats the chance to become sheep. Arminians to the contrary notwithstanding, therefore all the bosh about men being co-workers with God is outside of the book. Christ speaks of the Gentiles as other sheep saying, "And other sheep I have which are not of this fold, them also I must bring, not wait until they take a notion to come, and they shall hear my voice, and there shall be one fold and one shepherd. John 10 : 16. It must certainly be upon the principle of choice or election that those Gentile sheep were brought in, and in their case at least it is plain that there was no co-work in the matter. Christ said to certain ones while speaking of sheep in this same chapter, "But ye believe not because ye are not of my sheep." 26 verse. Can work mongers assign another reason for their not believing? Will they give Christ the lie, by saying he was trying to save them, or that he was teaching them to turn to sheep and be saved. It would fit their theory.

Will any whom Christ died eternally to save be lost. Let heaven's messenger answer. "She shall bring forth a son, and thou shall call his name Jesus ; for he shall save his people from their sins." Math. 1 : 21. Who or what deluded soul will have the hardihood to say he has not done it. Who will rise up and give the eternal God the lie to his face, by saying that any part of that which he was to save is now in an awful and eternal hell. Let the conditionalist answer. Who are his people? Let Christ answer. "All that the Father giveth to me shall come to me; and him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out." Can the presumptuous Legalists or co-worker have the effrontery to contend that a part of those whom the Father gave the Son will turn away and be lost. Yes they say that one man is as much the gift of God to Christ as another, But some will perish for failure to co-operate or co-work with him. But such monstrous stuff never proceeds from the mouth or drops from the pen of any true seeker after truth.

We have heard from the master himself that he hath an elect, and except those days be shortened there should no flesh be saved: but for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened." Matt. 24:22, Mark 13:20. For false prophets and false christs shall rise and shall show signs and wonders to seduce if it were possible even the elect" 22nd verse. 27 verse, "And then shall he send his angels, and shall gather together his elect, (if they will let him) from the four winds, from the uttermost part of the earth to the uttermost part of heaven. Who dare gain-say it? "And shall not God avenge his own elect which cry day and night unto him, though he bear long with them? I tell you that he will avenge them speedily." Luke. 18: 7-8. Thus saith Christ. Will any one say not so, he has no elect to avenge? Certainly not. St. Paul asked who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect? It is God that justifieth." Rom. 8: 31. He could never justify that he never had, so the truth is established by this text. The Colossians were told to put on therefore, as the elect of God, holy and beloved bowels of mercies, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, long-suffering. Col. 3: 12. This proves that God's elect possessed all these graces. Paul charged Timothy before the elect angels." Tim. 5: 21. No doubt having reference to the Elders of the church. He Paul endured all things for the elect sake that they may also obtain the salvation which is in Christ Jesus with eternal glory. 2nd, Tim. 2: 10. Both Election and Predestination are clearly taught in this text as well as effectual calling. "Paul an apostle of Jesus Christ, according to the faith of God's elect, and the acknowledging of the truth which is after godliness." Tit. 1: How strange that an apostle should declare his apostleship was after the faith of God's elect. And yet men claiming to love God and seek as they say for the truth to deny that they teach Election. How blind indeed must such be. Paul wrote to the strangers scattered throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia Bithynia, elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through sanctification of the spirit, unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ: grace unto you and peace be multiplied." 1st Pet. 1: 2. And yet men will declare that they cannot find Election and Predestination, not able to see that all the graces of the spirit are vouchsafed to the saints through that channel and no other. Truly such characters who are thus blinded are said to be ever learning and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth. 2nd, Tim. 3: 7. Peter spoke of some thus, "But these, as natural brute beasts made to be taken and destroyed, speak evil of the things that they understand not, and shall utterly perish in their own corruption." 2nd, Pet. 2: 12. These brute beasts care nothing for truth, Christ, God or heaven. Cursed children; 14th verse. The corner stone of the building was elect. 1st, Pet. 2: 6. John wrote to the elect lady and her children." 2 John. 1: 1. And closed his epistle with the greeting of the elect sister. Nothing can be plainer than that he regarded the church of Christ as elect. Peter thought them to be a chosen generation." 1st Pet. 2: 9.

But we are bound to give thanks always to God for you brethren beloved of the Lord, because God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation through sanctification of the spirit and belief of the truth. 1 thess. 2: 13. Who can find the beginning? When we are able to find the beginning then we can tell how old the choice is, and when our poor finite minds run back into non-entity as far as they can yet we have not found the beginning. For God had no beginning, so the choice is as old as the chooser, so Election is not a new or infant thing. If all men are chosen thus to salvation, before any of them would fail or fall short of it, the eternal God must fail to carry out his will in their choice. And as there is no change in him the conclusion is irresistible that those chosen are the people whom Christ died eternally to save, hence the choice or election hath obtained it and the rest were blinded. Rom. 11: 7. It seems to me that it would be difficult to prove that the following characters were chosen to salvation. "For it is a people of no understanding therefore he that made them will not have mercy on them, and he that formed them will show them no favor." Isa. 27: 11. Hard as this may appear I dare not apologize for it, God's prophet hath boldly declared it, and man must be still and know that he is God.

The purpose of God it seems even before children are born stands according to election, it does not depend upon their work either good or bad. He loves one and hated the other. Rom. 9: 11, and 9: 13. Man dare not say he is unrighteous, verse 14. The Lord hath mercy on whom he will have mercy, and compassion on whom he will have compassion. 15th. Is there injustice? God forbid. So then it is not of him that willeth nor of him that runneth, but of God that showeth mercy. 16th. Then man is not a co-worker. The saved or elect must attribute their salvation exclusively to the mercy of God. For he raiseth up men that he may show forth his power in them, or at least he did so in Pharaoh's case. 17. Therefore hath he mercy on whom he will have mercy and whom he will he hardeneth. 18th. Man may say why doth he yet find fault. 19th. Yet it is plain that the Apostle heedeth it not, but as the Holy Ghost revealed it to him, boldly says. "Nay but O man who art thou that replyeth against God. 20.

The Apostle would not swerve either to the right or to the left because of men's objection. But boldly asketh hath not the potter power over the clay, of the same lump to make one vessel unto honour and another unto dishonour? 21st. This it seems ought to stop the mouth of all co-workers. As common sense seems to say that all clay is passive, then how gloriously, or grandly glorious grace through election or by election shines in man's salvation. If we consult the 22 and 23 verses of this chapter we can certainly see in every line the purpose of God fully and clearly set forth by the inspired penman to the utter confounding of all the haters of God's election.

We suppose that the potter would be justified in marring each vessel on the wheel, if he chose to do so. But in-so much as it is not his pleasure to do so we must adore the mercy of our Divine creator, that there is a remnant ascending to the election of grace, and if by grace then it is no more of works. Rom. 11: 5 and 6. Can we conclude that those who were made, or created for the day of evil ever had grace given them in Christ Jesus before the world began? Certainly not. Then see, "The Lord hath made all things for himself, yea even the wicked for the day of evil." Prov. 16: 4. Who can claim them for the day of salvation. How hard men labor to avoid the plain teaching of the Bible, and by garbling it endeavor to make it teach what it does not teach, and thereby make the plan of salvation to turn or rest upon fallen man. But God will not have it so but teaches his children to love the glorious and only plan, salvation by grace. Often we hear men say, O, if I believed this doctrine I would just take my fill of sin. I would lie, steal, cheat, and murder as I went. The believer of these things neither lies steals or murders, but if men pretend to believe these truths and are guilty of such crimes, it does not disprove the doctrine, but to the contrary proves that they are guilty of those ugly crimes leaves the doctrine untouched and proves that the wicked will do wickedly, and they are of their father the devil

God's people are spoken of as a people predestinated to be conformed to the image of his son, see Rom. 8:29. If they are not conformed to the image of Christ, then he Christ could not be the first among many brethren, for they were to be conformed that he might be. If one of them is lost, the whole plan of salvation is overturned and the devil victorious. But thank the Lord whom he did predestinate them he also called; and whom he called them he also justified, and whom he justified them he also glorified. Rom. 8:30. All the false reasoning of men can never overturn this, and though men may talk about burning their Bibles if this be true, yet God by inspiration hath spoken it and while he is God thus it must be. Then who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect? It is God that justifieth, yea it is Christ that hath died, yea rather that is risen again. 33 and 34 verses. He leadeth the van. The devil is destroyed to these people, there is no hell for them.

They are blessed with all spiritual blessings. See Eph. 1:3, were chosen in Christ or in him before the foundation of the world. 4th verse. Predestinated unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself, according to the good pleasure of his will. 5th, not our will. Why was it thus, because we co-worked with him? No; but to the praise of the glory of his grace, wherein he, not ourselves hath made us accepted in the beloved. 6th, Then why talk about our ability when he hath done for us what men nor angels never could do for us. The saints obtained the inheritance by Predestination. see 11th verse. Then how silly to think of obtaining it by any work that we can do. But will not some of them fail of the inheritance. Let Christ answer that the mouths of man may be stopped. All that the Father giveth me shall come to me. John 6:37. Find one of them in hell and make him an impostor if you can. It never can be. Then all the passages of scripture that men torture into a seeming consent of free will, moral agency, are subservient to these pointed truths of Jesus and his apostles. But we will notice again that he Christ is to see the travail of his soul and be satisfied. Isa. 53:11. If any of the travail of his soul are in hell, Christ cannot, it seems to me be satisfied. And if he travailed for Judas, Herod and such, it seems that he must have travailed in vain. How strange that he should travail for the damned, for if he ever travailed for them certainly he would have delivered them. Shall I bring to the birth and not cause to bring forth, saith the Lord; Isa 66:9. Certainly not, then when he begins a work he finisheth it. How weak to argue that heginns the work of a sinner's salvation or conversion and then stops and fails to finish.

The great Apostle Paul with all his searching and reading and praying with, the light of inspiration in his heart, was confident that where he had begun a good work he would perform it, Phil. 1:6 Uninspired men find where he begins and fails, thereby proving themselves to be servants of that wicked one, and in open rebellion against God. God never leaves nor forsakes the soul he designs to manifest his love to. The Prophet says, his reward is with him, and his work before him, Isa. 4:10. Jesus said, "For the son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost," Luke 19:10 Then was his work, finished and he Christ said, "I have glorified thee on the earth; I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do," John 17:4. To say he begins and fails to finish is simply to pronounce him a liar; and is fearful blasphemy: Then see Mark 13:27. "And then shall he send his angels, and shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from the uttermost part of the earth to the uttermost part of heaven." Certainly he would not, or could not gather together something that he did not have, and if any of them are left out, then the arminian may be correct, if not then he is a false teacher, and by his reasoning defies the living God.

But men often bring in false reasoning and try to bend the Scripture to suit their argument. For instance this text is almost invariably referred to by conditionalists. "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten son, that whosoever (Jew or Gentile) believeth on him should not perish but have everlasting life, John 3:16. Now Primitive Baptists believe this and greatly rejoice that thus it is, There is no promise in this text to any but believers. The dead believe not; the living believe. This does the arminian no good, for we have seen that it is the sheep only that believe. And they believe because they are sheep. The Ephesians believed according to the working of his mighty power which he wrought in Christ when he raised him from the dead, Eph 1:19, 20. So the work monger is left out, besides Christ shows conclusively the sense in which we are to fully understand this text. God gave his son to die for the world, why because of the church that was hid or was living in, but not as the world, for the world was condemned, the church was not of the world. The elect or kingdom of God the church, is like unto treasure hid in a field. Thus Christ saith, Again the kingdom of heaven is like unto treasure hid in a field; the which when a man hath found, he hideth, and for joy there of goeth and selleth all he hath, and buyeth that field, Matt. 13:44. The church is the treasure, the field the world, Christ the man, his life all that he had and this he gave for the world because of the treasure. And both the field and the treasure are his, and he has the right and will dispose of them as seemeth him good.

Again in order to try to prove conditional salvation men will quote this, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not. Matt. 23:37." And claim that it proves that Christ was offering to save the Jerusalemites but they would not let him, or that he was willing to save them but they would not co-operate with him.

How pitiful Christ in his humanity wept over the doomed city, and used the above language. But in his humanity, he was man, and dependent, but in his divinity he was the eternal God, Creator and upholder of all things. Sovereign, Lord over all, had power over all flesh to give eternal life to as many as the Father had given him, John 17:2. How then as the giver of eternal life could he be weeping over these people because they would not let him exercise that power? Impossible that thus it was. But he was only speaking of gathering together the children, meaning the christians who were in the city. But the wicked would not. That is they were ready to do him bodily harm when even he came into the city. He could have no satisfaction with the children, it must be remembered that he saith how often would I, showing plainly that he was not talking of the new birth, for that only can take place once, and not often times, while a gathering together can occur often and besides, a hen gathers her chickens in order to protect them and not to make them. So the Arminian will have to look for something else to sustain him. This text belongs to the saints. And how often would the saints gather together and comfort each other with the truths of the gospel, but look at the opposition they meet with from those opposers. The saints could make the same appeal that Christ did and yet not offer to save them. Christ said nothing to them about saving them in this text, he was not talking of their eternal salvation.

But men will often strive to make the scriptures clash to carry a point. For instance this text is often referred to to prove that man hath at least a part of the work to do. Matt. 7:24. When Christ is speaking of the two builders, one wise the other foolish, showing that the wise man built on a rock but the foolish on the sand, Arminian like. Christ shows that the man who heard his sayings and doeth them was like a wise man which built upon a rock. Christ the wise man built upon a rock and he built the whole spiritual house, and it stands all the storms, the man built the house, but some say he began and did not finish because the house did not co-operate with him and will not when Baptists say it is the Lord that builds. But we will let inspiration decide who builds the house. And the great architect himself shall speak first, "And I say also unto thee, that thou art Peter (man) and upon this Rock (Christ) I will build my Church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it" Matt. 16:18. "Bless the Lord O my soul, and all the powers in me bless His Holy name. I know he means just what he says, and it will be done. Poor deluded conditionlists would rob him of his honor, and take the work into their own hands, for they say he only begins and leaves them to finish. This is the sandy foundation and the foolish only build on it. For says the man of God, "Except the Lord build the house they labor in vain that build it: Except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain." Ps. 127:1. "Wisdom hath builded her house, she hath hewn out her seven pillars." Prov. 9:1. "This house is built of lively stones, ye also as lively stones are built up a spiritual house &c, 1 Pet. 2:5. Christ is the great builder and all the material was elected together with him, and by him, and for him, and to him be all the glory both now and in the world that hath no end.

J. C. HALL.

ELDER P. D. GOLD, MY DEARLY BELOVED BROTHER:—I send to you greeting. It is by and through the divine mercies of God that I am spared to make the attempt to write you a few lines to let you hear from us in our lonely and bereaved condition. It pleased the blessed Lord to call my dear father to his long eternal home on the 14th of May. His sufferings were great, and he bore it all with patience, and was willing to go, and said he was ready to go, but was just waiting for the summons to come to take him. Brother Gold, it seemed to me I could not bear to give him up, and it too was a hard trial to do, but we had it to do, and not my will but thine be done, O Lord, for it is the Lord that giveth and the Lord that taketh away, and blessed be the name of the Lord. I can study about his happy condition now, and tell them we ought not to grieve after him if we could help it, but we cannot for it is human nature for people to grieve after loved ones that are gone and left them behind. I miss him so much, it don't seem like I shall ever get over missing him; but he has paid the debt we have all got to pay sooner or later, and sometimes I feel like if I could know that I had grace to sustain me in the trying hour of death I would feel better satisfied than I do, but that is one of the two things that I crave above all, and that is living faith and dying grace, but my great fears are that I am deceived in the matter, and if I am I pray God to underceive me and right me wherein I am wrong for Jesus sake.

Brother Gold, I have suffered extremely since I saw you last fall, and am still suffering with pain in my breast and through me. The vocal cords and larynx are partially paralyzed, and it has caused me to suffer a great deal, and I am not able to speak above a whisper yet, but if it is the will of our blessed Lord I do hope to regain my speech again. My mother's health is very feeble at this time. The rest of the children are all in common health.

Dear brother I would be glad to have you visit us in our lonely and bereaved condition. It seems to me that I want to see you worse than I ever did in my life, and if you can get the consent of your mind to visit us we would all be glad to see you come at any time when you can. Our beloved brother Gore preached at New Hope yesterday, and came home with us, and spent the night with us. I did enjoy his company so much and did enjoy his sweet sermon yesterday. It was good food to the hungry soul. He has been sick for about fifteen days, but he told me this morning that he felt much better than he had before for some time. O how much I do enjoy his pleasant company. He is so sound in the faith and doctrine of God our Savior.

I will close this short imperfect letter, hoping it will reach you in due time and find you and yours all well.

I would be glad to hear from you at any time, if you feel disposed to write to one who feels to be less than the least of all. They all join me in much love to you. Accept my best love and kindest regards for yourself. When it goes well with you remember me at a throne of grace, and may the blessings of God rest and remain with you, both now and forever. I remain your affectionate sister in the bonds of peace.

Remarks.

Sister Stewart refers to the death of her father, brother Eldridge Stewart, a most precious brother to me.

The first time I was ever favored to wash feet with the brethren assembled at communion, brother Stewart said to me, brother Gold may I wash your feet. I cannot tell the feeling of unworthiness and humility that possessed my Spirit.

Truly a good man has gone, May the Lord bless and comfort the bereaved ones.

P. D. G.

ELDER AARON DAVIS.

This aged and lovely brother passed away from earth recently. He had long been Moderator of the White Oak Association. He was especially noted for his love of the brethren—love of truth, love of peace, and his faithful devotion to the cause of Jesus.

Many sweet hours have I passed in communing with him. He had nothing too good for his brethren.

His time, money, and better than all, his heart was fully given to the cause. Sweet is the memory of the blest.

MOUNTAIN ASSOCIATION.

For years it was my desire to visit this Association, but not until last September was the way open for such a trip.

Elder Jas. D. Draughn cared for me with remarkable kindness, not only conveying me from his home across the Blue Ridge to Zion, in Alleghany Co., N. C., where it was held, but also by other kindnesses.

Personal mention of all that showed me favor cannot be made.

Elder Wm. Lundy is the Moderator, and this was its 90th Session. Such good order prevailed both in the sessions of the body, and also at the stand, by young and old, that too much by way of commending these people could not well be said. The place is about 40 miles from any Railroad. The country is peopled very much by Primitive Baptists and their friends, and it is here among both young and old that the best behaviour I have ever seen was exhibited.

The Associate Editor of the LANDMARK, Elder P. G. Lester preached one of the finest sermons it has ever been my lot to hear. This dear Brother has been associated with me for years and never has this writer beheld anything in him that is not noble or praiseworthy.

Elder B. E. Caudill of Kentucky was there in his love, zeal and full strength of faithfulness. This was his home for years, and has many friends here, and his visit was truly refreshing. We were thankful for the privilege of his company and gift.

The names of all the preachers cannot now be stated here, as they are not all known to me. But they are a true and warm-hearted set of brethren, and so are the brethren, not preachers, without exception in that Association, as far as known to me. Let me mention a most remarkable spring, called "The All-healing spring," owned by Brother Solomon Fender, Edwards X Roads, Alleghany County, N. C., about six miles east of Sparta, the county site of that county. The water cures skin troubles, such as tetter, etc., and Piles Dyspepsia and Consumption. No such Spring possesses so many medicinal virtues anywhere within my knowledge. It has been known only a short time. The Association was entirely harmonious in all its proceedings, and is in peace with all the surrounding Associations of all that country. Its order is excellent and it is sound in faith.

It was my privilege to hear Elder Smith Webb preach at Good Hope. He is a young preacher of fine promise, full of good matter. Also it was my hap to alight a little while at the home of Elder Wm. Lundy, one of the loveliest and most untiring laborers and useful preachers in all the mountains of that section. His wife, Sister Lucy Lundy, has been confined to her bed about 17 years almost entirely helpless. No one can tell the trials of a preacher's wife left as much as she is by her husband who devotes almost all of his time to preaching, and who feels constrained to thus do. Nor does any one know but such a preacher, the trials that he has in thus leaving his family to labor in the cause of Jesus. What cause but that of Jesus could constrain a godly man thus to go. Sister Lundy is a meek and lovely christian woman.

Among the active brethren that are not preachers, brother H. C. Booker is worthy of being mentioned. He travels more than any other member as a correspondent in all that country, and is untiring in his work of faith and labor of love. His company was very precious to me. For a few minutes my limbs were refreshed, as Brother Hawks and myself rested at his lovely home, and there we saw and conversed briefly with his faithful and amiable wife.

Elder A. J. Taylor, of the Senter Association, was at the Mountain. He is a pioneer preacher like Elders Lundy, Caudill, Halsey and Hawkins. Brother Taylor is one of the most indefatigable and untiring preachers in all that country, and such men are of great service to the cause of truth.

SIGN OF THE SON OF MAN.

"And in those days, after that tribulation, the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light,

And the stars of heaven shall fall, and the powers that are in heaven shall be shaken.

And then shall they see the Son of man coming in the clouds with great power and glory.

And then shall he send his angels, and shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from the uttermost part of the earth to the uttermost part of heaven." Mark, 13 : 24-27.

But in those days after that tribulation shall appear the sign of the Son of man. What tribulation?

The general subject matter was the destruction of the temple &c. For when the disciples called the attention of Jesus to the goodly stones and glory of the temple he said to them, "The days will come when not one stone shall be left upon another, but all shall be thrown down." This no doubt produced great surprise and disappointment in them, for they expected that Jesus would reign forever in great worldly splendor in that temple and in that city. When they had opportunity they asked him privately when should these things be, and what shall be the sign when all these things shall be fulfilled.

In answer to these questions Jesus cautions his disciples to be not deceived by the coming of false christs, for that many should come in the name of Jesus saying, I am Christ and shall deceive many. At the very threshold then stands the danger caution, "take heed, beware, or you will be deceived; for many shall be deceived." There is only one Jesus and he is the true Christ. How true that has been. For there are many which say lo here and lo there, claiming to be some great one. Many have followed them. Look at the different denominations now filling the earth, yet there is but one true church.

There shall be also wars and rumors of wars, earthquakes, famines &c, in many places, but these are merely the beginning of sorrows. They shall also deliver you up to councils, and ye shall be beaten and persecuted; yet the gospel shall be published among all nations.

Still the end is not yet, but it draws nigh. For when ye shall see the abomination of desolation, which Daniel the prophet spoke of, then know that the destruction of the temple is nigh. That was the Roman army which wasted and ravaged the world, and destroyed nations not a few, and demolished the temple. This Rome is, and was then the great enemy of the Jews and of Jerusalem, It is the monster seen by Daniel.

When the disciples should see this sign, the Roman army standing in the holy place, Jerusalem then might they know. This should be done in that generation, the disciples then living should see these things. For Jesus said that generation should not pass or die until all this is fulfilled.

When they saw this then let them flee to the mountains. Nor let any one that is in the field return to take anything out of his house, nor the one that is on the house-top, come down to take anything out of his house. But at once let them flee. They should also pray that their flight might not be in winter, as the severity of winter would increase the burden that would be on those with young that had to flee for refuge. As such could not hourly flee well that were burdened with children. In a literal sense this was true as the mother could not speed well on journey thus embarrassed. Of course those joined to false denominations are corrupted and effeminate. Those joined to false denominations bring forth offspring or fruit unto corruption, and they are not strong to flee from destruction, nor strong to overcome. Hence there is a woe upon them. It is said that the Roman commander desired to save the temple, and offered amnesty to all Jews who would leave Jerusalem, and that when this offer was proclaimed that all the christians fled from Jerusalem and escaped. Then the temple was destroyed, so that not one stone was left on another, all of which was accomplished in that generation. Then the priesthood was taken away, nor was there anymore high priest, nor could the Jews anymore go up to Jerusalem to worship; and the Jewish system of worship in the temple ended forever. This was removed and the kingdom of Jesus appears in the heavens, or far above the earthly Jerusalem.

Now in the spiritual view of the matter how is this worship or temple thrown down in the hearts of the children of God? It is done by throwing down and destroying the system of selfrighteousness in the soul. We naturally are righteous in our own eyes, and admire what appears to us as the wonderful structure of righteousness in us. We regard the law as the means or rule by which we shall make ourselves righteous. But when the wrath of God is revealed in us against all our unrighteousness then can we see the abomination of desolation (sin) standing in the holy place, or sin by the commandment becomes exceeding sinful. Then not one stone is left upon another. Destruction follows, and such trouble we never had before or since, and we die.

The covenant of the law or works is thus removed or fulfilled and the first testament finished. He taketh away the first that he may establish the second. Jesus then appears in great glory in the clouds or witnesses of heaven, the gospel covenant, and all the words of scriptures fly as doves to their windows proving this, and we are surrounded by so great a cloud of witnesses or proof that he is the Messiah. Then Jesus sends his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, or the gospel is preached to us and we hear the joyful sound, while all the tribes of the earth mourn, or all that is of earth in us mourns as we perish! but they that are ready to perish in the land of Assyria (Babylon or confusion) and the outcasts of Israel shall come. For Jesus shall call his people from the four winds of heaven, from the North, South, East and West, or from all quarters of the earth, and they shall hear the gospel preached, and shall come and worship the Lord at the Holy Mount at Jerusalem, the new Jerusalem above, or spiritual Jerusalem, the Mount Zion and the city of the living God.

Then the covenant of works is ended, or not one stone left upon another. Then Jesus our prophet, our priest, our King reigns gloriously in Mount Zion, and his people worship him in Spirit and truth.

VIEWS REQUESTED.

Elder P. D. GOLD, DEAR BROTHER IN THE LORD:—I see two questions asked through the LANDMARK by brother E. H. Hill of Hill's Store, N. C. which is only about five miles from me.

I find these questions in LANDMARK number 7, page 162. As these questions, partly if not all, have reference to my case and others around me, after reading it very carefully, my mind was impressed by some power, and I hope it is of the Lord, to write to you, and by the help of the Lord explain how we were received and baptized, and whom by, and what was done, as near as I can by the help of the Lord, and then ask your views whether we were received by divine authority or not.

I will state to you first that it is about eighteen miles to the nearest Primitive church. We never got to hear them preach unless we went along way, and for three years I have been trying to get some of them to come and preach in my neighborhood. On the 26th day in August 1886 I have a hope to believe the Lord directed the minds of Elder Isaac Jones, and Elder R. W. Snider, and enabled them to fill an appointment on that day, and I had a great desire to be with the Primitive Baptists, for I thought they were the only people that talked what I believed, and I had had a hope for three years if I am not deceived.

The greatest trouble with me was I feared I was not good enough to be with as good people as I took them to be, and I never had told any of them my condition. After preaching by both Elder Snider and Elder Jones, they opened the door of the church with two members from Tom's Creek church. One of them was an ordained preacher, the other one was a faithful brother, and had been for some thirty years, with Elder Isaac Jones from the Eastern part of the State, which composed a body of three to set in conference. It was the first Primitive conference I ever was at, and it was the first opportunity I ever had to join the church. I was impressed, it seemed to me, to go forward to tell the church what I hoped the Lord had done for me, and my wife related the dealing of the Lord with her, also two brothers came and did the same, and we were all received and given the hand of fellowship by Elder Isaac Jones, Elder R. W. Snider, and Brother G. R. Adderson. It seemed to me they could witness all of our troubles. That same day my wife, A. B. Jackson and myself were baptized by Elder Isaac Jones, and we asked them to constitute a church here, and if so I will give the land, as it was so far to the Primitive church, and so the brethren said they would leave an appointment on the 18th of Nov. 1886 for the purpose of getting an arm granted to come down and meet with them, and constitute the church.

Elder R. W. Snider carried up the report to Tom's Creek church, with which he held his membership, and by some means or other the arm was not granted, but Mount Tabor church granted an arm in good faith, and they all met on the day appointed, Elder Isaac Jones was appointed Moderator, James H. Buroughs Cl'k, W. D. King assistant, and after we were examined by the moderator on all the doctrine of the Primitive faith, the rules of Decorum were read to us. They considered us to be sound in the Faith, and constituted us into a church according to the apostolic order with only three members, and while the door of the church was open one came forward, gave satisfaction to the church and was received, and was to be baptized the next day. At the water the door of the church was opened again, then others came forward, and related the dealings of the Lord with them, and they were received and baptized. We have received three by letter which makes our number ten, and I hope it is of the Lord, and not of the flesh.

This is the cause of those two questions being asked. Now if we have not been properly received according to gospel steps and divine teaching where do we stand.

Please give us your views at once through the LANDMARK, as we would be glad to hear from you without delay if you can find room in the next LANDMARK. This thing has caused some little trouble perhaps for the lack of understanding of the word of God. I would not have asked for this information if the matter had been fully explained to you, and I have written this for your consideration, and I hope you will understand this, and give us your views upon the subject.

I hope this will meet your just approval. From your unworthy brother, if one at all.

W. H. LAWRENCE.

Remarks.

I do not see any cause or ground of trouble in the above matter. It seems to me that the brethren acted properly and well in this instance. An arm of a church can receive members, and there are cases where such a thing is proper. When for instance as in the above case there is no church near. We hope the brethren will not let fleshly feelings be stirred in this matter. We are but few any way. Let us cleave together, and not fall out by the way.

P. D. G.

ONE EVENT.

E. C. W. requests my view of Eccl. 3 18 : 22.

"I said in mine heart concerning the estate of the sons of men, that God might manifest them, and that they might see that they themselves are beasts," &c.

"Wherefore I perceive that there is nothing better than that a man should rejoice in his own works; for that is his portion; for who shall bring him to see what shall be after him?"

There is a sense or state in which men are as beasts, and have no pre-eminence over them namely, that they die as beasts, and go down to the dust as beasts, or all go to one place.

We see and know that we sicken, suffer pain, die as the beasts. We have no more power to avert pain or escape death than they. Beasts are as apt to be healthy and live out their days as men. While men reason on the future, and have a consciousness of a future existence that beasts do not have, even the most exalted men—those that are the farthest removed from beasts in their tastes and sentiments—know nothing absolutely of the future, any more than the beasts. We know no more what disease will kill us, if any, or when or how we shall die than the beasts know concerning themselves, for we know nothing about it, and the beasts could not know less.

Again, when we die our flesh decomposes, and our bones decay as those of a beast and we go back to the dust as much as the beast does.

They have one breath or natural life, and all inhale the same kind of air, and have the same organism. All is vanity. Even in our thoughts how brutish we are. Often we feel that we are more brutish than the beasts, and that they have not fallen as far below their original creation as we have. Does not the revelation of truth in a man show him that he is as a beast, and often do we not feel that it is better for a beast than it is for us.

Beasts have no souls while we have. When one sees and feels his guilt, and that there is no hope for him he desires the lot of a beast—to die and let that be the end of him. For when a man dies his spirit goes upward to God who gave it, while the spirit of a beast goes downward, or to the earth. The body or flesh of man, when he dies, goes back to the dust whence it came, while the body and life of a beast goeth downward.

Solomon of course is limiting the matters he is here speaking of to this life; and confining our attention to the things visible, wherein is the life of a man no better than that of a beast, for one dieth as well as another, and one event happeneth to both of them alike.

What is a man's portion in this life? To rejoice in his own works. That is all he will get here. He cannot enjoy anything after his death of what is on this earth. Neither his own nor the labors or prosperity of any other can he enjoy after death. It is only while he lives can he enjoy anything even of his own. Then his portion in this life is to so live that he can rejoice in his own labors or works, and not in those of another man. To so live that one can enjoy the fruit of his own labor while he is living here is wisdom. What think you of a man who toils and lays up riches for another that shall come after him, he knows not who, and will not use and enjoy the fruit of his own labor here? Is he wise? If he doesn't enjoy it now he never will, for who knoweth what shall be after him, or who knoweth the spirit of a man that shall go upward.

What think you of a man whose conduct is so wicked and violent now that he cannot enjoy the fruit of anything he does now, but all his deeds are wronging his own soul? Such a man cannot enjoy the future, nor in the future can he enjoy the past. Then is it not prudent to so live that we can enjoy our own works, by doing such things as we can enjoy.

One who is careful of his conduct and lives soberly, righteously and godly in this present evil world, so that he can now enjoy the works or labors of his own hands, acts the wisest part, and chooses those things which shall not be taken from him.

The beginning of wisdom is to fear the Lord. They that do fear him shall not want any good thing. P. D. G.

ELDER P. D. GOLD,—DEAR BROTHER:—If a member of the Primitive Baptist church is in sympathy with the "Farmer's Alliance," and will not join them himself, but tells his son under age to join, is it proper to deal with him in the church for it or not? I am your unworthy brother if one at all.

N. J. JONES, Sr.

Remarks.

The general course of Primitive Baptists is to keep separate from all secret societies, and all oath-bound societies, and all entanglements with the world of any sort, hence they also abstain from all organizations or societies that men originate. Their reason for so doing is that neither Jesus, nor the Apostles, nor the church as represented in the New Testament ever did such a thing, nor is such a thing taught therein. We are told to come out from the world and be separate from it.

It is enough for a child of God to be a member of the church of Jesus Christ. Ye are complete in him wanting nothing, growing up into him in all things who is the head of all principality and power. To join any worldly organization is an admission of the insufficiency of Jesus and his church for us. We are married unto the Lord and should not be joined to any worldly organization.

Do you see the evil effects of secret societies in the United States at this time? One society is formed to protect itself, and another is formed to protect itself. Thus they are arrayed against each other, and embittered. Society is cut into factions hating one another. All of which Primitive Baptists are opposed to and deplore. We believe we should cherish peace and goodwill towards all men, and live as friends of all classes of men.

Why should farmers join a society to band and protect the themselves against other sorts of men? Selfishness is at the bottom of all such things. Let the farmer not say a confederacy to other farmers. But let the farmer till his land with judgment, make his supplies at home, and then he will be at ease, and harm no man, nor be arrayed against any class at all.

Parents should encourage their children to do right. While parents cannot inspire in the hearts of their children a love for Jesus, yet they should discourage their going into anything they would not do themselves. Our control over our children should be for good and to edification. I should not be ashamed of my convictions, nor of my profession, but should so act before my children that they may see and feel that I am sincere. What I would not enter into myself I should not advise them to go into.

For instance my child desires to insure his life. I advise him that it would be better not to do so. For I have never known a Baptist to be profited by such a thing. He replies, "I am not a Baptist and you cannot expect me to love what you love." True, you are not a Baptist, my son, but you should carefully consider your conduct, if you are not a Baptist; for you must lie on the bed you make. You can do as you think best, my advice to you is, keep your money and manage it yourself.

I do not think it wise to force or compel a child that is grown, or even a younger one, if reason and gentle words will reach him. We are not to provoke our children to wrath. But if a father lives right he can usually have government over his children to some extent.

The church is a far better judge than I am of the circumstance presented. We should deal gently with our brethren and reason with them out of the scriptures. Perhaps they may see their errors.

P. D. G.

Remarks.

Matt. 7 : 7, 8, "Ask, and it shall be given unto you," &c. This address is to the disciples. It is called Christ's sermon on the mount. Jesus did not speak this to the multitude, but he spoke to his own disciples whom he called, "And seeing the multitude he went up into a mountain; and when he was set his disciples came unto him: and he opened his mouth and taught them saying, 'Blessed are the poor in spirit for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.'"

The Lord has blessings in store prepared for his own people whom he has chosen. But there are many who deny that God has a chosen people. We would not of course conclude that they who deny the election of God give any evidence that they are themselves elected. We would much sooner conclude that such as believe that God has an elect people are themselves of that number than to suppose that those who do deny it are the ones.

The elect of God are a poor and an afflicted people. "I will leave in the midst of thee an afflicted and a poor people, and they shall trust in the name of the Lord," "Fear not little flock, it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." See these elect people described in the beginning of this wonderful sermon of Jesus. They have not a single natural possession or resource, qualification, nor any strength or ability of their own. "He hath saved us and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose, and grace given us in Christ Jesus before the world began."

They receive all their spiritual blessings from Jesus. Therefore they look to him and live by faith. They have no abiding place here nor any good thing dwelling in the flesh. They have

ELD. P. D. GOLD, ESTEEMED EDITOR:—You will please give your views, through ZION'S LANDMARK, on Matt. 7: 7, 8.

"Ask and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find: knock, and it shall be opened unto you; for every one that asketh receiveth, and he that seeketh findeth, and to him that knocketh it shall be opened." Matt. 7 : 7, 8.

"Strive to enter in at the strait gate, for many I say unto you will seek to enter in, and shall not be able. When once the master of the house has risen up and hath shut to the door and ye begin to stand without, and to knock at the door saying, Lord, Lord, open unto us; and he shall answer and say unto you, I know ye not whence ye are." Luke. 13: 24, 25.

"I go my way and ye shall seek me, and shall die in your sins, whither I go ye cannot come." Jno. 8: 21.

"Ye will not come to me that ye might have life." Jno. 5: 40.

Please let me hear from you as soon as possible, and oblige an enquirer after truth.

hope toward God, and desires after God. Hence they are a people that call upon the Lord. Indeed he teaches them to pray.

Would you not prefer to call on one able to help you, and one who has reserved for you the very blessings you need, than to call on one who has not provided them beforehand? The Lord God has provided good things for his people, and will be sought unto for them. Then what an encouragement this is to ask for these blessings. Hence Jesus says to such, "ask, and ye shall receive, seek and ye shall find, knock, and it shall be opened unto you. For every one that asketh receiveth, and he that seeketh findeth, and to him that knocketh it shall be opened." Then every one that seeks shall find. There is no doubt or uncertainty about this.

But how is this harmonized with the statement made in Luke 13: 24, 25, that many shall seek to enter in at the strait gate and shall not be able?

It demonstrates an elect people of God who do not come in of their own power. Those who depend on their own sufficiency, or merit, do not strive to enter in at the strait gate. They do not call on the name of the Lord in the sense of coming to the Lord as his children, and trusting in him with faith that works by love. All that truly hunger and thirst after righteousness shall be filled, but no others shall. Those that feel that they can do something good of themselves do not truly call on the name of the Lord. None that believe that it is left with the creature to begin his salvation himself, can truly call on the name of the Lord. But all that are called of God do call on the Lord in a time acceptable to God.

That it is evident that none but the Lord's people truly seek him let us consider John 8: 21, where Jesus says, "I go my way and ye shall seek me and shall die in your sins." Jesus here addresses unbelievers who are from beneath. When such seek the Lord it is not as a Saviour, but from some other motive or cause. Those that love sin or are in their sins cannot seek the Lord in truth. It is those that abhor themselves as sinners, and that hate sin that call upon the name of the Lord. David says, "If I regard iniquity in my heart the Lord will not hear me."

Hence those living in sin will not come to Jesus that they might have life, because their deeds are evil.

Those whose deeds are evil, or who love darkness rather than light, will not come to Christ that they might have life. Whatever else may be said, Jesus here plainly says, that such will not come to him that they might have life. Those here named have no desire at all to come to Jesus, because they love darkness, their deeds being evil. Such are altogether different from the class named first in this editorial, namely, the disciples of Jesus, to whom he said, "Ask, and ye shall receive," for the disciples are those that do feel their need, do hunger and thirst after righteousness, and are such as shall be filled, while these last do hate truth, and have no desire at all to come to Jesus.

P. D. G.

"A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches, and loving favour rather than silver and gold.

The rich and the poor meet together: the Lord is the maker of them all.

A prudent man foreseeth the evil, and hideth himself: but the simple pass on, and are punished."

Obituary.

DAWSON GINN.

Died at his residence in Greene Co., N. C., on the evening of Sept. 4th 1888. Mr. Dawson Ginn in the 63rd year of his age. In 1853 he was united in marriage to Miss Nancy Howell who still survives him. He was afflicted for several years, and died of heart disease.

He never made any open profession of religion, though he had an affection for the Primitive Baptists and wanted to unite with them. Through fear of being deceived himself, or of deceiving the church, or partly perhaps during his last days, thinking that in his last stage of sickness he would not be able to undergo baptism, he never joined the church but no doubt had a hope in Christ.

He was a kind father and husband and a quiet and excellent neighbor and citizen. He was a good farmer, producing his supplies from his own farm, and I suppose he owed not one dollar when he died. He left nine children who are nice people and good citizens; and so far as I know think as he did.

Few and evil are the days of our pilgrimage here, but we should feel that all of our times are in the hands of Him who orders and directs them aright.

A FRIEND.

HUMPHREY DODSON.

He never was connected with any church, but was of a serious turn of mind. Before his death he said he had a hope of a better world than this. He was a meek man in his general conduct esteeming others better than himself. He was a kind neighbor, a good father, and a faithful husband.

He was a strong Primitive Baptist in sentiment and the preachers often visited him, for his house was a home for Baptists.

He was more than 78 years of age when he died. He lived in Pittsylvania Co. Va. and was married to Mary A. Simpson with whom he spent 31 years of his life pleasantly. They had four children.

We miss such men as he is, but our loss is his gain.

W. H. DAWSON.

MARTHA S. WATSON.

Died August 4th 1887, in Palmyra N. C. of consumption, Martha S. Watson, daughter of Steven and Julia A. Anderson, She was born August 12th 1847, in Southampton Co., Va., and married Charles Fletcher Watson Jan. 3rd 1866, by whom she had seven children, six boys and one girl; five of them survive her.

Sister Watson joined the Primitive Baptist church at Kehukee on Saturday before the 3rd Sunday in Oct. 1879, by an experience of grace (which was fully exemplified in her walk to the time of her death) and was baptized the following day by Elder A. J. Moore.

In contemplating the sad loss of a kind and loving wife to the bereaved husband, a tender and affectionate mother to the five children that are left to fight the battle of life without the guardian care of a christian mother, our hearts are made to rejoice that she has only been transported from the church militant to the church triumphant. Sister Watson was in her right mind within a few hours of her death, fully realizing her condition; and was perfectly resigned to the will of God; putting her whole trust in Jesus.

Her health had been failing for some time but she was only confined to her room about seven weeks. During that time she bore her afflictions with that patience characteristic of the true christian. During her sickness she dreamed of meeting her two children, that had preceded her to the grave, in paradise, and was told by one of them that they were feasting at the table of the Lord, that she could not yet feast with them, but soon her angelic spirit was released from the tenement of clay and took its flight upward to meet with her little children around the throne of God, for of such is the kingdom of heaven. One by one the ties of nature are being severed and Jesus is taking the redeemed ones home to himself, that where he is there they may be also.

The Purpose of Zion's Landmark.

By the help of the Lord this paper will contend for the ancient Landmark, guided by its stakes of Truth, and strengthened by its chords of Love.

It hopes to reject all traditions and institutions of men, and regard only the Bible as the standard of truth.

It urges the people to search the Scriptures, and obey Jesus the king in the holy hill of Zion, keeping themselves unspotted from the world.

It aims to contend for the mystery of the faith in God and the Father, Jesus the Mediator, and the Holy Spirit the blessed Comforter.

All lovers of Gospel truth are invited to write for it—if so impressed.

May grace, mercy, and peace be multiplied to all lovers of truth.

ZION'S LANDMARK.

DEVOTED TO THE CAUSE OF JESUS

LOOKING AFTER OUR POSSESSIONS.

DEAR BROTHER JOHN:—In accordance with my promise which I made to you on starting for Canaan, I have managed to gain just this little space of time in which to write you a hasty note, and very much fear that it will not in any sense meet your expectations, as I am fully aware that your anticipations of our joint-heirship and large inheritance in Canaan, upon the so-called family deeds, or the old will, said to have been made by our original ancestor, were very high of grand, great and glorious things in Canaan. But dear John, I wish to put you on your guard, and will advise you thro'gh this letter that you shall at once discharge the lawyer whom we have had as our attorney, and you need not look to him any longer for advice in our case, as I have found since reaching this point that we have been paying him fee after fee all to no purpose whatever, so far as our advantage is concerned. The fact is, John, he knows absolutely nothing of the laws of Canaan, nor of its rightful owners, as the sequel of his counsel to us heretofore will clearly demonstrate.

I mean this John, you remember of course that our counsel stated most positively that our ancestor died in Canaan seized of a large estate, and that the will to that effect was on record at the Metropolis, at Jerusalem, and could be seen at any time among the records in the Temple, where all the Holy writings are kept.

According to this instruction, as you know, I left home in high hope a short time ago: and as you doubtless remember the first thing said to be necessary was to attend the Junior court, and get a way-bill for the route, as this Court purports to furnish way-bills to all persons attending its sessions, which said sessions meet on every Sunday morning: and for the accommodation of all concerned, they convene in meeting houses, school houses, or any where they can be allowed; and in order that their Courts may prove a blessing, to poor as well as rich, the fees for advice, way-bill &c. are set at small amounts ranging from one penny up to a dozen hen eggs, and so on. At this I could make no complaint, nor find any fault, so I complied and was furnished the required document. The officer in charge however, informs me that I must needs make application to the higher Court and have my papers countersigned, in order to insure me a safe and unobstructed passage through the desert regions lying along my route of travel. Pursuant to this instruction, the commanding officer ordered the entire Court to rise and sing a piece known as Homeward Bound. This done, he bade me advance to the higher Court. I obeyed and upon arriving at the place I was informed that the court was already in session, and had been for two weeks, engaged in what is known as its protracted term, and as it was expected to rise or adjourn that day, I had better be in haste to acquaint the court of my presence in the assembly, and to further signify my desire of their approval of my way-bill.

As I hastened toward the court-room some one passed by me and said, they are calling Court now. In an instant I heard the shrill notes of the Court's hired chorister as he led off in these lines.

"Why will ye waste on trifling cares,
That life which God's compassion spares," &c.

I entered and took my seat, and so after singing and prayer, the Court opened and proceeded with business. I was delighted when I saw the familiar face of our counsel, as he mounted the rostrum and opened a large volume which he said was law. I have no right to dispute a full code of the laws of Canaan, and from which he began to quote and reason and explain in order as he said to let the public know who are the heirs of Canaan. I was intent to listen of course, as I desired to be fully assured of my interest. As such I at length was delighted to hear him explain, each, any, every one of you, and all mankind are heirs of God, and can be heirs to Canaan, if you will just make the effort, and said he, adding further, as I am engaged in the business of recruiting forces, and in fact I am authorized emigrant agent in behalf of the King of Canaan, and while the choir sings, "Oh you must be a lover of the Lord," all who wish to go to Canaan, will come forward and give me their hand and God their heart, and I'll insure them their safe passage home to Canaan.

Now you know John, I was glad, as such I obeyed, and having answered all the necessary questions they asked me, I was next ordered to the cleansing pool of the court, and there and then they washed me, countersigned my passport and said I was sure of a prosperous journey, safe arrival into and a happy settlement in Canaan. But as I was about to make my start, I was politely informed that the court had not adjourned, and that I must await further orders. Then another lawyer, who had been somewhat reserved during the first part of the services, rose and in deep, grave and commanding tones said, "Let your light shine," &c announcing that it was required of all pilgrims to Canaan that upon starting they should pay something into the treasury in order to pay the expenses of the agents. I thought it strange why the agents should stand more in need of money, or why it could be that the pilgrims to Canaan could travel for less than the regular authorized agents. But I felt too anxious about my own interest to detain the court with what might have proved to be a simple and yet a perplexing question, and so I paid as nearly as I could what they required of me, and was then permitted to start on my journey. My passport and way-bill located each day's travel and stopping place, so the first day I reached a point designated on my way-bill and known by the name of "Benevolence." Being wearied and hungry I turned in for the night, in hope of being refreshed and rested. Upon entering the reception chamber I was introduced to a goodly number of little children who all had small papers, and were called little leaders, and these little children said that they knew our lawyer and were also acting under instructions from him, and as such it was required of myself and many others who accompanied me, to give them our names and some money, otherwise we should and would be halted, and no telling how long before we could proceed. Having unbounded confidence in the wisdom, and integrity of our lawyer, I of course paid over the change and was allowed to take a seat. At length the bell rang for supper, and we all being hungry, were obedient to the first call. Upon entering the dining hall we were seated, and a slice of eloquence, well coated with keep-pace with the age, and flavored with an ingeniously prepared coat of self-esteem, was set before us, and, instead of pure cold water that we so much desired, our drink was a mixture of fluid extract of witticism and compound fluid extract of self-confidence, of these equal parts, and we were required to sip as long as necessary.

Supper being ended, we were conducted by a blind servant, who held no light for us, to a dark chamber, and there required to repose upon the bed of carnal security until we had rested, having been informed that he would wake us up at the proper time. I have no recollection of ever having felt better. My meal seemed to suit my appetite, and my bed, oh how sweet: and soothing slumbers, and fanciful dreams I had of Canaan. The fact is, when the blind porter aroused me and bade me to rise and pursue my journey, I and my comrades all with one consent began to lament the shortness of our stay at Little Leader Hall, but were soon willing to take up our march again, for no sooner than we were fairly out of bed than we were again seated in the dining hall, and abundantly supplied with a repast of zeal, but not according to knowledge. So after eating heartily we took up our march, and though the sun shone so dimly, for it was a cold dark day all the day long, we went on cheerfully and happily. None of us seemed to be tired or hungry.

At length it became quite dark, in fact so much so had not our road been an exceedingly broad one, we would have been forced to stop: but shortly after this we came in front of a large and splendid mansion, in which swung one dimly shining lamp, the light of which was supported by an oil made from human reason, which would shine very nicely and then would seem to go entirely out: but we managed to make our way to the gate in front. The porter who stood at the gate required our passport, which having approved by his endorsement, he bade us enter and be seated. Upon entering we were confronted by an immense crowd of females of all ages and rank each one was clothed in the latest fashion, and took especial pains to make us feel at home, at the same time informing us that they too were acting under orders from our lawyer, and that their establishment was known by the name of "Woman's Missionary Society," and that as we were pilgrims, it was especially necessary for us to pay them something in support of their noble cause. Of course we complied, and in a short time were all seated together with these lovely sisters to partake of a hearty repast of human flattery. I am sure that I have not at any time seen a set of guests seem more to enjoy a meal. The fact is, I especially played the glutton, even so much so that I didn't rest so well as I desired.

Supper being ended, we were informed that it was against the rules of the society to sit up late, upon which a lame porter who wore a thick bandage over his eyes conducted us to a frail, shaking and dirty room, and assigned us our lodging upon a bed of gossip, provided with a thick covering of criticism.

At the first appearance of day we arose and made our toilet and entered the dining hall, where we were again joined by those fashionable devotees of charity, and altogether feasted heartily upon a lusciously prepared dish of manevolence seasoned with deception, and so soon as we had dined we took up our journey, but to our great surprise and regret we saw that the clouds had not cleared away any: but in addition to that a thick mist was rising from the earth, which in its nature seemed to stupify us, and very soon we all became sleepy. Our wills to exert ourselves, became dangerously remiss. Having gone on in this narcotized state for some hours, all upon a sudden, the silence was broken by a terrific war in the distance. As we advanced it became more distinct, until at length we came up in front of a large house. Here were gathered an immense congregation of people, and the first person that I recognized was "our attorney," he being on his way to a district meeting of the court, and finding so many of the pilgrims stupified, some staggering, some sitting down, others trying to return back, and many thousands more sound asleep, he had managed to collect them together in this place, and he and several other lawyers of the same court were using the most strenuous efforts to rally the emigrants. They were telling all sorts of jokes to accuse them. Sometimes they would get up laughing, sometimes crying, then again they would have nearly the entire congregation filled with indignation. So at length they succeeded in stimulating us by working a sort of magic trick by means of which it appeared to us that fire came down from God out of heaven. So by this means our skies seemed to clear away and we had all the light we wanted. Then they gave each one of us a large drink of a solution of human sympathy mingled with trust in man, and I am quite certain that I have never felt more like doing anything, every and all things, in all my life. I felt strong, could see clearly, little things were magnified to mammoth concerns, and large ones became monsters &c. I shouted victory, victory, and so did my comrades.

The fact is I knew one thing then, that if our title to Canaan was wanting, or in any degree wrong, that it mattered nothing to us, for we could capture the whole thing, and that such a valiant band of well equipped soldiers as we could and would do anything.

In this condition our lawyer ordered his chief clerk to arise and collect the fare from the pilgrims and let them go. This was promptly executed, and each one of us was ordered to proceed. But we had not gone far before every one of us became sick, and blindness came over us, next a fearful coldness: so much so had it not been for our timely arrival at the court room, where grand preparations had been made for the accommodations of the members of the district court, we must certainly have died. But as we came up in front of the hall an officer of the court bade us advance, and demanded our passports. This done, he said that these were correct, but that he was collecting officer for the court, and that as our passports showed us to be subject to taxation, according to a late act of the court, it was made his duty to demand it. Most of us were forced from necessity to demur, as we had had so much expense on the way, and an aged and well-read pilgrim of our company confronted him quoting from the old code of Canaan, with which he seemed to be familiar, but all his points of law and argument were treated with contempt by the collector, who laughed at him, and called him an old fogey and behind the times, and politely informed him that the lawyers of this court had ascertained that a large proportion of the old laws were not binding, as they were not the sort of laws suited to the government of pilgrims nowadays, as such by an order of the court many of the former laws and classes of laws had been repealed, and new acts substituted in their stead: upon which a wild war-whoop rang out from the court room, and a band of officers neatly dressed in black uniform neatly buttoned up to the chin, and tall beaver hats, armed with gold-headed canes, immediately surrounded us and made us all feel ashamed of our folly: so we begged pardon, paid the tax and on a renewal of our obligation to implicit fidelity, and an unfaltering faith in and practise of all orders in the future were allowed to enter the court room and occupy a back seat. This however kept us from freezing, though the heat was so little. At a distance from us sat a warm crowd, some of them seated so closely around the stove, patented by Fuller of England nearly one hundred years ago, and to which some additions and improvements have been made, that the perspiration of "Zeal, but not according to knowledge," ran down in streams. But at length some of the officers taking notice of us that were yet cold, ordered more fuel to be brought, upon which a young lawyer arose and began to chunk in a lot of home-missions, state-missions, foreign-missions, education, church-extension, and Sunday School mission wood, and began to blow with all his might, so that in a short time we were all in a state of perspiration.

Now about this time the court took a recess, and some very clever, well dressed and exceedingly polite young lawyers furnished the assembly with a hearty repast of wit, jokes, and many amusing and diverting stories about old fogies, stingy misers, out of style old ladies, told us how many stars Judson, Rice, Fuller, and such as they, had in their crowns, and what high and exalted stations they held in Canaan. At the recital of which I began to see that

I for one was a fool, for I had been by some means or other led to think, that Canaan had but one king, and that his subjects had been redeemed from their vain conversation, not with perishable things as silver and gold, but by the blood of Christ, who as a Lamb slain from the foundation of the world, had freed them &c.

So I patiently awaited further manifestations, and after recess proceeded with its business as follows. 1st, Called the roll. 2nd, Sang "From Greenland's icy Mountain," and took up a collection, &c, &c.

But while all this was going on an old fashioned looking man, gray haired and plainly dressed, and carrying an old time-worn book came into court and requested audience. After some hesitation and debate it was granted him and in a short but telling address he opened to the court the fact that the court was bogus, its officers and lawyers irresponsible, its enactments all invalid, and at best its entire proceedings treason.

Filled with consternation the court adjourned in disorder. I am here now in rags, penniless and friendless, sick and without shelter. Please excuse haste, and I'll let you hear from me soon. Your devoted brother.

DAVID.

ELD. P. D. GOLD,—DEAR BROTHER:

I have had a great desire to write to you about the 6th chapter and 63rd verse of St. John; also Romans 8th chapter and 26th verse. As I have had deep trouble concerning those two places, how it is the Spirit that quickeneth, the flesh profiteth nothing. &c., Please give me your views on the above, if consistent with your feelings. My experience teaches me that it is the Spirit of God that quickeneth, while I know the flesh profiteth nothing; but what is it that is quickened? Is it this old flesh, or is it an immortal part of God that is shut up in the flesh or in the soul, that has to be awakened by Divine quickening, or must the Spirit make intercession with the spirit or with this flesh that profiteth nothing? I must confess this poor finite mind of mine is too weak to understand the above. While I am satisfied that your editorials have found the way to my heart and given me great consolation and courage to think that God in his Providence has chosen you, as I believe, an able expounder of the New Testament; many a silent tear has stolen its way down my cheek while reading your comments in the LAND-MARK upon the Sacred Scriptures. I have also been made to rejoice at the writings of the many dear brethren which come from the East, West, North and South, setting up the foundation upon the same rock which Jesus said the gates of hell should not prevail against. My prayers and heart's desire is to God that the brethren fall not cut by the way, but let little matters of difference cease, that all may work harmoniously together as did Pharaoh's horses, and leave hidden things to God, and take hold of that which is revealed. If we lack revelation, or wisdom let us ask of God, who giveth to all (christian) men liberally and upbraideth not; for we are few in number and should not bite and devour each other. If my memory serves in the days of Moses Israel was not afflicted for Egypt's sins but for the sins of herself. So let us all strive to keep the unity of the spirit in the bonds of peace. Dear Brother Gold, I take such a deep interest in the cause of Christ that I am willing to suffer persecution and go through peril: by land and by sea, knowing that God is able to bless the faithful in Christ Jesus and to punish the wicked. It enables me, as I hope, to bear my cross with meekness and love. I shall start soon to the Mountain country, where there are many good dear brethren, and I think I have a great desire that the LAND-MARK might be placed in the hands of all the dear brethren, believing it to be blest of the Almighty, as a Messenger of Peace to the children of God.

I have written much more than I intended. My love to yourself and family. Your Brother in Christ and in gospel bonds,

N. B. ORRELL.

ZION'S LANDMARK.

ELDERS GOLD AND LESTER,—DEAR BRETHREN IN CHRIST, I feel like writing of my travails as a pilgrim, if indeed I be one. As I once wrote my travail from nature to grace, as I hope, I will not go over it again, but will give you the last and most blessed revelation I ever had before deliverance from a burden of sin.

I was on a broad road going to a certain place, I knew not why, but was bound to go there. It seemed to me I traveled all day on this road, and there were no fields, nor houses on either side, but a wilderness of very thick and dark woods. Very late in the evening I wondered where will I stay tonight. Oh what horror fell on me at the thought. Right here was the greatest trouble, I ever had, feeling myself a great sinner. I felt sure the Lord would send a wild beast of some kind and slay me this night. About this time I came to a long straight piece of road, and in the end of the road it seemed that I saw a house, two or three miles off, and the sun was nearly gone down. I was tired, weary and heavy-laden, the Lord said come unto me all ye that are such. I did not know I was going to him, but I believe I was, for when I came to the old house in the road, there was a wall on either side of the road up to the house, no way to go in any direction around it, there was a wide door in the end of the house. I walked in and thro' and out at the other door, at the end of the house, and it seemed to me that the land went upward and I looked at the beautiful hill; and here in this old house were some men, blacksmiths as I tho't, but no work was going on here, but up the hill was the finest house I ever saw, and on the right-hand side of the house was a field without a border, green all over, as far as I could see, and no hills or vallies in it, but there were sheep as I thought all over it, and then they became little children, and it came to my mind, this is the Paradise of God. Turning myself to see the hill again, I saw a man standing near me who smiled and looked very pleasant. It came to my mind that this is the Lord, so I asked him is this the Lord? He stretched out his hand and said yea, by this are ye saved. Here I awoke from my slumber, and the most blessed feeling I ever had in my life was there. Now if this is Christ I know him, if not, I know nothing of Christ. Now to think of a blessed Saviour, I wanted to follow him all the time. The church got on my mind, but to be baptized was more than I could bear, I tried to pray to the Lord to make known to me what my duty was. So I dreamed I was at a pond of water somewhere, and saw a little hill there beside the pond and on it were 4 posts like unto a well-curb. I went to it to see what it was, and it was a grave hewn out of stone, as I thought, white and clean inside. It came to my mind as I looked at it, this is the Lord's grave, and as I turned to go away, I saw that Elder B. C. Pitt was there; he took me by the hand and we walked in the water and on out of it, and when we got to the land I was wet all over and he to the waist. I awoke and was glad. I could almost feel the water running down my head. Here I was made reconciled: so the next meeting I thought I would go and tell the people what I had as a hope, but when the conference was opened I could not go. Brother Brake and wife were received that day. I went home with them to stay all night. After we ate dinner some said 'Let's go over to Uncle Billie's.' I said all-right. Had not thought how it would be to see him and his father meet. We all went and Brother Brake was the last one to meet the old man, so they met, and fell on each others necks and kissed. My heart was burst asunder. I could not stay there all night, but had no excuse at all to go, but Brother B. C. Pitt came along on his way home, and I stopped him and went home, so that night was a night of labor to me. I did not sleep a wink. I thought I would go to the water next morning, but felt so unworthy that I did not start until I thought the conference would be closed. So I went to the other side of the pond just as they were going in the water. I saw them baptized: there was no joy for me that day, and on I went sometimes troubled, then again rejoicing. By the next meeting-time I had concluded that I could live as well out of the church as in it, so I had not much thought of going to the church that day, but when the door was opened a restlessness took possession of me. I thought I would go, and brethren it may seem strange to you, but it is even so, I remember they all commenced to sing the closing hymn, and I went away as it were, and when I came to my right mind I was before the church and weeping. I know not what I told them, but I was received into the fellowship of the church at Pleasant Hill, Edgcombe Co., N. C., Saturday before the 4th Sunday in Sept. 1883, and was baptized the next day by Elder John W. Jackson. I have had many trials by the way since then, but the Lord has delivered me out of them all.

On one occasion I was thrown into trouble by speaking a few words concerning the widows. Tim. 5th chap, and in this trouble I felt like I surely must be mistaken about my hope for I tho't what I said was the truth, yet I had hurt my brother or sister's feelings: and while in this troubled state of mind, I was plowing in the field one morning, and thinking about what I had said, and the harm it had caused, and resolved to speak no more, when there was a voice behind me, just as I passed the stump my trace rubbing the stmp, I thought the rubbing of the trace must be the voice or the cause, the voice saying, "Speak the words that become sound doctrine." There was a ringing in me of some kind, I can't tell how, but my natural mind was taken away, and I plowed 8 or 10 rows of cotton, and didn't know how I did it, but when I came to my natural mind I could not but weep for joy. I felt that I had done no one anywrong, but I was trying to give God the glory in all these things. I feel so yet, but I hope my brethren will not become offended with me but correct me when I stray. What is the gospel? Sometime before these things occurred I had a dream I wish to mention just here. I dreamed I had been on a journey somewhere and on my way home I stopped in at the old Pleasant Hill Meeting house to rest, and laying down on a bench with my hat over my face. I heard it raining a light rain on the house. When I raised my hat I saw the smoke coming thro' the shingles and gathering into streaks, like unto the sun drawing water, but they all pointed to one place, and I went to the pulpit and there was a Jew in the pulpit, as I took him to be, and he cut off the smoke with his hands as he moved them, and threw it all over the house, and I looked to see where it went, and the house was full of people eating this bread for it was bread when he threw it, and it fell all around us on every side, but I did not get away. I awoke and behold it was a dream. I thought a good deal about it for a day or two, and heard much of Elder Greenwood though had never seen him. The next meeting time there he was but I had not thought of my dream. At last he went into the stand with Elder Jackson, and soon rose up to speak. His text was, "say ye unto the cities of Judea, behold your God," with some other words, but these he used as a text, and the motion of the Jew commenced, yea the smoke came down, and he gave me the bread from heaven, if I know what it is, and I think all the people eat the gospel bread that day. This is the gospel—Jesus, the way, the truth and the life. Believest thou this?

JESSE D. FIV.

EBENEZER.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—It is not the thought that the communication from me will be so much appreciated, that urges me forward, but for sometime I've had a mind to tell you a little of my trials and conflicts, and how my faith has been tested for the past eight months, and with what wonderful strength the Lord in his infinite wisdom, love and mercy has given me, by which I could explain, "Just and righteous are thy ways O Lord." Often have I indulged in hard suspicion as to God's faithful love in dealing so severely with me, thinking surcly if I were a vessel of his chosen mercy the furnace would not be so hot, or that he would not suffer me to endure the heat without his manifest aid, and I have even dared to pry into the future, from which I could view nothing but sorrows, trials and perplexities, all seemed dark, not one ray of light to beckon me onward with hopeful anticipations, only the present with all its gloom could I behold. But in viewing the past O so many Ebenezers crowded my path; so many seasons of rejoicing in hope of the glory of God, and even in the trying hour of giving up the one nearest and dearest of all earthly friends, how that His omnipotent hand upheld me, and sustained me for so long a while.

Surely with his help and presence we can bear all things, but when He withdraws himself, how poor, dependant and helpless we feel; then Satan comes in with his fiery darts, tempting us in every way to utter harsh and false things against that blessed Being whose ways are always right, and whose love and mercy is as boundless as eternity. When enabled thus to view the strange vicissitudes of life, I can rejoice to know that whatever of trial or sorrow comes to me through His providence is appointed by an unerring hand, and feel sure that it will be for my good. But oh when no spiritual comfort is given, and my way so hedged up with thorns of doubt and unbelief, how bitter the cup of sorrow and how loath I am to drink, not being able to comprehend a gracious "needs be" in its dregs, and my dear brother I have even dared to say, I cannot drink this cup, my strength is not sufficient, so long have I borne that I must now give up all my hope of deliverance from the burden which keeps my head bowed down and my heart torn and bleeding. But blessed be Israel's God who delivered the needy when he crieth, and him that hath no helper. His everlasting arm was under me ready to rescue me from Satan's embrace. O what a wonderful loving Father we have, how willing to help in time of need, and how faithful to fulfill every precious promise, made to the heirs of promise.

It has now been thirteen years since I first found favor in the sight of God, and never since then have I doubted his ability, power nor will, but so often doubt myself as ever having known him in the forgiveness of my sins which causes me many seasons of gloom, but I know that nothing but the grace of God can save me, and I desire to trust him at all times, commit my cause and way unto him as unto a loving faithful Saviour, whose ear is not heavy that it cannot hear, and whose hand giveth liberally and upbraideth not.

I must tell you of one of the most refreshing seasons I've ever been blessed with. One night a few months since, when spiritual comfort was all gone, crosses heavy, and providences dark, with such indescribable feelings that I ventured to take my cause to the Lord, with the ardent desire that he would deliver me from this horrible state.

Not long after retiring, in a dream I was led to a strange place where preaching was to be; you appeared with a bible in your hands, from which you read these words, "Because I live, ye shall live also," John 14:19. With such a force did the sweet assurance of this scripture come to me, that I was relieved of my burden of unbelief, and as you so beautifully described the unlimited power and boundless love of him who had given us this blessed emphatical assurance of spiritual life here in this world, and life eternal beyond, that my heart was filled with thanksgiving and praise to the bountiful giver of all good; then I could rest in the Lord, feeling secure from all harm, that my life was safe in the hands of Jesus, whose omnipotence must become feebleness, and immutability become mutable ere the life of one for whom he lay down his own life can be destroyed. I cannot begin to tell you how beautifully you described our life in Christ, but it was a rich promise to my heart; not until that time did I feel perfectly resigned to God's will in all things, but brother Gold, if not dreadfully deceived, I could then realize every rough wave as wafting me nearer and nearer the desired haven of rest, could welcome my sorest trials as coming directly from him who is our life, and felt with one of old, Let him do unto me as seemeth good to him. Many sad seasons have I since passed through, but find much comfort while meditating upon this glorious night of deliverance and rejoicing. O if such seasons here in this sin-stricken and woe-worn world, with a treacherous and undivided love, be so sweet, what must it be, in a sinless, sorrowless state, with purified affections to "behold the King in his glory, and to be forever with the Lord," who is our life, the same unchanged and unchanging Savior. The thought is overwhelming. What amazing love has the Father bestowed upon us here, and when we consider that we now see through a glass dimly, but when He who is our life shall appear, we shall appear with him and see him as he is, face to face. It is far beyond the comprehension of our finite minds to conceive of the great love and happiness that await those who sleep in Christ.

Brother Gold, I have written too lengthy and my thoughts are scattering, but I have written them without premeditation, and hope you will cast a mantle of charity over all imperfections, and pardon the liberty I have thus taken in writing to you, but I felt so very lonely to-night with no one to mention the name of Jesus to, that my mind was lead to you.

Pray for me when you have the spirit of prayer. With christian love to you and sister Gold, I remain your sister I hope in Christ.

RUTH TAYLOR.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—After reading some of David's 'sweet and comforting sentences' this bright morn, and feeling that the Lord is good and gracious, my thoughts have wandered to you and the remainder of the dear saints whose writings I've repeatedly read with so much pleasure and comfort. And though absent, I hope you are basking and rejoicing in the congenial sunlight of christian love and devotion. Blessed thought, that Christ ever liveth to make intercession for his people and that he is able to save all who call upon his name. And as their days are so shall their strength ever be. For Christ is their strength. His eyes are upon the righteous. His ears open unto their cry. He heareth them and delivereth them out of all their troubles.

We should not be discouraged at afflictions and tribulations, for Christ has said: in the world ye shall have tribulation and trouble, but in me ye shall have peace, and this peace surpasseth all human understanding, causing sin-tossed souls to be still, and rejoice in the Prince of peace, who has been exalted to give repentance and remission of sins. I feel that affliction is needful for erring ones like myself, it teaches them their dependance, and to realize that Christ is an all sufficient Savior, the great Physician, which healeth both soul and body.

I ask to be remembered by you at a throne of grace, and hoping that you will ever be enabled to feel, that "the Lord is your Shepherd and to appreciate His tender mercies. I am your sister in Christ I hope.

MOLLIE D. BURGESS.

TO THE CHURCH AT PENNY GROVE:—The Lord has done great things for me in a mysterious way, whereof I am glad.

I a vile persecutor of the church of Christ, Saul-like, have been stricken down on my way in darkness, thinking I was doing God service, and the greatest light I have ever seen shone around me, which showed me I was blind, which brought me in the most extreme agony I have ever experienced, but thanks be to the Lord, if I am not deceived, I can now see with that Spiritual eye. (you remember Job saw the Lord with his eye, not eyes) through the mercies of God and the sufferings of Christ.

Vile as I find myself to be, I feel that it was only an act of mercy that the church has received me. I would not have blamed them if they had not received me, but would have loved them yet, and would have tried to get a low seat near them to catch a crumb of the gospel which I feel was much better than I was worthy to receive. I feel to humbly beg pardon of all Primitive Baptists in the world for persecuting them as I have done, for I thought I was doing God service. Now with this slight sketch of my feelings, with respects towards you, I ask you to dispose of my name as seems good in your sight.

I also send in this letter my license and credentials as a preacher of the Free Will Doctrine. Yours Respectfully.

¶ [ELDER P. D. GOLD, DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—Through the tender mercies of our God, I have been spared to fill my tour of appointments, as published in the LANDMARK, and return home, Aug. 13th finding all well, after an absence of thirty three days, traveling through portions of Johnston, Wake, Rockingham, Stokes and other counties of North Carolina, and Henry, Patrick and Pittsylvania counties of Virginia.

The churches where I traveled seemed to be generally in peace, and I was very much edified and built up under the preaching and and spiritual conversation of Elders Harriss, Moore, Stone, Atkinson, Corn, Mcghee, Cahill, Turners, Minter, Jones, Dicks, Dameron and others with whom I met, while on my tour; besides a host of dear brethren, sisters and friends outside of the ministry whose names I will not now mention.

¶ Suffice it to say that I was much comforted, met, conveyed and kindly cared for by those dear brethren, sisters and friends.

May the good Lord bless them ac-ording to the multitude of his tender mercies. I hope this short sketch will suffice as I am now feeling very unwell, Affectionate Yours.

JOHN R. ROBERTS.

Goldsboro, N. C.

MY DEAR BROTHER:—Through the mercy and goodness of an all-wise creator I am yet on the shore of time, though many are falling asleep in death. May God in his mercy help me to devote myself in an humble, spiritual manner, that I may be able to say with Paul, "I have fought a good fight, &c," when it shall be his will to call me away from this present sinful world.

Pray for me that my house may be set in order. I cannot have the many comforts that you have when meeting and mingling with the dear saints. You can comfort the saints and say to those of a doubtful mind, be strong. That gives joy and strength to the wayfaring traveller who is ready to halt or faint by the way. If I could feel that Jesus is mine, like Job did when he said, "I know that my Redeemer liveth," then I could rejoice in my future welfare, and hold on in spite of all the Satanical powers. I could then be able to over ride all the snares and devices set up by men which are spreading themselves as the green bay tree.

May the Lord abundantly bless you with his presence. Affectionately, one who is willing to receive counsel from all God's dear children. Farewell.

A. REED.

Winston, N. C.

ELDER P. D. GOLD, DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—I believe what the Lord says by the mouth of the prophet, all thy children shall be taught of the Lord, and great shall be the peace of thy children, and that when the Lord begins to teach then our experience begins, and never will end until time ends with us, that it will be line upon line, precept upon precept, all our days, here a little and there a little. In the language of the Psalmist we feel sometimes to say,

"Come hither, all ye that fear God, and I will tell you what he has done for my soul." For my fellowship has abounded toward you since reading your sketch of your experience in your reply to Dr. Hooper.

I will try and give a relation of what I hope has been the Lord's dealings with me, or some of them. I cannot remember anything out of the general course of children's life taking place with me until I was about eleven or twelve years old, when one day as I was about some work which my father had sent me to do all at once a sense of guilt and condemnation seemed to rest upon me with such force that I trembled with fear. I felt not worthy to live, nor fit to die. I believe now, although I did not know it then, that I was then quickened of the Spirit of God, and then began a warfare in my poor soul. I think if ever I did I then hungered and thirsted after righteousness, but felt far from it. I would retire to bed, but felt afraid to sleep lest I should awake in torment. I would cry so loud that no one could sleep in the house. My brothers would scold me and tell me to go to sleep, that there would nothing hurt me; but my father and mother would sit by my bed and try to comfort me, tho' all in vain. I felt like I was alone in the world, not a single friend, nor did I deserve any. A gloom was upon my young life which I tried in vain to shake off. My parents did all in their power to release my mind, but to no avail. They let me go to my Uncle's on a visit, but when I got there I could not stay, and in spite of all they could say I started for home again.

Thus trouble kept on until it was reported that I was deranged. This was a severe blow to me, for I felt that my only desire was to be perfect, and wherever I went I now believe I was praying for purity of heart.

With tongue nor pen I have never been able to describe the distress of mind I then passed through. How long I was in this strait of mind I cannot now tell, but upon a beautiful spring day as I was walking from the house to the barn a feeling of despair of ever enjoying anything in this life came over me, and darkness that was to be felt shrouded me.

When about mid-way between the barn and house in a moment unexpected something like a heavy cloak fell from my shoulders to the ground. The rapture of that moment I can never describe. My poor soul was filled with thanksgiving and praise.

"Tongue cannot express the sweet comfort and peace,
Of a soul in its earliest love."

Yet strange as it may seem I did not receive this as an experience, but about this time Elder William Chote was preaching at our place at the house of one of our neighbors. I sat with a number of other boys about my age on a bench in an alley, which led to a well. I was surprised at what I heard. It seemed different from any thing I had ever heard.

He always seemed very near to me after that. I did after that listen with interest to the preaching of the gospel wishing for perfection that I might know I was a christian, for I had a very strait path marked out for christians. I said to my father that if ever I united with the church, I would live different from what I saw others live. He said my son you will find that you cannot direct your steps. This I soon found to be true.

I find many things of which I have neglected to write, and the exhortation of Moses in Deut 8 : 2, 3, is an admonition to me, "And thou shalt remember all the way the Lord thy God led thee these forty years in the wilderness, to humble thee, and to prove thee, to know what is in thy heart, whether thou wouldst keep his commandments or not. Yours in christian love.

EXPERIENCE.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS :—It has been impressed on my mind to write out a part of my experience for your consideration, although I feel too unworthy to make the attempt.

I had many serious thoughts about religion when very young, but it was mostly brought on by death, or some other cause, and did not last long before it would wear off, and after awhile return again worse than ever, until I thought it was time enough for me to get religion yet. I will throw it away and not let such thoughts trouble my mind. I went on a long time trying to harden myself against such thoughts. I thought I could get religion at any time if I wanted to when I got old. I went on in this way until I was scared by a dream. I dreamed that mother and I walked in the old orchard and I looked up in the sky west of us. I tho't I saw the moon, and it was very large and in the shape of an anvil, and it was the color of fire: on the other side of it was a man standing with a large hammer in his hand, and he would strike the moon and the streams of fire would fly toward me. The further off I got the harder they would come until I awoke. I was scared and trembled all over. I thought the dream was sent on me because I was such a sinner, and if I ever tried to pray it was then, and the more I prayed the worse I got until it appeared there was a great weight and condemnation hanging over me. Let me be at home or abroad I could not get rid of it.

While in this condition I attended a camp meeting. On Sunday evening I tho't if I could get away out of company and pray it would relieve me, for I thought that all that looked at me could see the condition that my mind was in. So time went on for several weeks, until one Friday I went to the spring to make a fire to wash out some things. I walked out in the woods to get some brush to kindle my fire. I was trying to pray all the time for every breath was to the Lord for mercy. When something spake to my mind these words, "Fall on your knees and pray, it may be that the Lord will have mercy on you." I stopped and a great many things rolled through my mind. I feared some one would see me and said Lord cannot I pray as I walk and felt more condemned than ever. I never shall be able to tell the trouble that I was in all the early part of the day. I cannot find words to express it. About the middle of the day I started to the house. I did not think I would live to get to the house. I saw no chance for me to live. I thought I would die calling on the Lord for mercy. And it rolled through my mind as I stopped on the hill, Lord have mercy on me, Lord have mercy on me.

I had not gone more than half way up when the same voice spoke in my mind, "What have you done that you need beg for mercy." My burden was gone, and I felt so light, everything looked beautiful, although I did not feel like rejoicing, but was made to wonder what had gone with my burden and trouble, and why I felt so much better until late in the evening of the same day when these words were brought forcibly to my mind, "See his glorious work." Oh the joy I felt, I never can tell. I could rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory. I went to the church at Sardis and told them what I have been trying to write. When I got there it looked so little and I felt so unworthy, I did not see how they could receive me, but they did receive me without asking me a question and I was baptized on Sunday by Brother Bodenhamer.

SARAH ANN OLIVER.

TO J. D. M. DEAR SIR:—Remembering that you insisted I should write to you, I the more cheerfully yield to a personal desire to continue our friendly relations especially after your telling me (in the buggy) that you intend to be saved and attain in this life to spiritual perfection if possible. It seems incredible to me that a man that truly hungers can fail of salvation, not that you or any one can attain thereto by any merit of his own that makes God a debtor on a contract of conditions fulfilled. For all the Apostles and Elders in their first and only general conference wrote to the churches on the basis of Peter's statement that "We believe that thro' the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ we shall be saved even as they," the Gentiles. Certainly Peter could hope to be saved by grace only. Acts 15 : 11. If by grace, how say you it is by grace and something else. "The simplicity that is in Christ" is something unmingled with the works of man, call it obedience, or by any other name. These additions as merits corrupt the mind and pervert the gospel into another gospel. Grace gives the merits, is not given to merits. 1 John. 4 : 10. Sinners who sorrowfully see themselves sinners fly from self to God by aid of grace. Paul's conversion was a pattern of grace and he spent his life fighting against the doctrine of salvation by works. The law drives men to grace. Man cannot renew himself. Its first effect is confession of sin, for nothing is man's own but sin. Grace is given gratuitously, it resides in Christ abundantly. By it alone can man return to God, Ps. 68 : 6. With it man can conquer the flesh, for it gives the strength it needs. We are children of God by adoption. Dead men can't catch hold of a rope nor do their part in being quickened into life, nor in becoming sons by adoption. It is of grace lest any one be lifted up. Grace works in us to will and to do, Phil. 2 : 12, 13 and Heb. 13 : 20, 21. That which grace aids it did itself bestow, for if man's salvation be upon condition, that he become righteous, then Christ is not the Saviour of sinners but of the self-righteous only, that is to say, Man is his own Savior, which robs Christ of his glory and he died in vain. Gal. 2 : 21. It was by the grace of God that Jesus tasted death for every man. He died that all might have this life, some this life and that to come, namely, those given to him and for whom he prayed. He by his death purchased some good things for all ; all good things for some. John 17. He knows every one he purchased with his blood and not one shall perish. He prayed for the elect among his murderers and they were added to the church on the day of Pentecost and it was the Lord, not man that added them, Acts. 2 : 23—47. To look to Christ is to be justified by faith : to think of being justified by

The Pharisee thought of God's goodness to him ; the Publican of his unworthiness. Martha thought of her much service. Mary waited for the one thing needful." The gospel may be stated thus : "Do this, O Christ, and live, O man." "But this generation has been taught as I taught at Damascus and at the eave, that the way to be saved is to do O man and live." I learnt it from Cambell, Thomas and everybody, for it is the theory alike of Pagans, Mohammedans, Catholics and Protestants—all but the poor old Baptists. Man fell, but has no power to raise himself. Christ made satisfaction for sin on the cross. Why not admit this plain teaching as the Eunuch did ? "This it is to believe on Christ as the Scripture hath said." John 7 : 38.

If our obedience saves us Christ need not have died but given his laws only. What means Heb. 1 : 3. There is no chance to misunderstand that language unless it be to question who the pronoun 'our' stands for, that it means the predestinate, the elect, is beyond question, with me. Christ paid the debt they owed, paid the price of that ransom. None of the redeemed can perish. Thro' the operation of grace the elect die to the world. Col. 3 : 3. Love itself is our death to the world and our life with God, for our love goes forth from the world and so it is dead to the world which is left behind a corpse. Election is unto, not because of faith, love and holiness. Election makes the future as certain as the past. The election of the saints was coincident with the election of Christ, their head, for you know He and his church are one, the multitudinous Christ. He elected the unjust to be justified, chosen out of the world that they might compose another world and yet be in the world now, a new world to itself hereafter. 1 Jno. 2 : 1, 2. Jno. 3 : 16, Heb. 2 : 5. The elect are the "stars whom God numbereth," Mat. 8 : 2 ; Psalm 135 : 4, 5.

Is it true that in all the Bible there is only one verse and that Acts. 2 : 38. Is it true that Christ cannot save without the help of man? Is it the function of the church to save mankind? Write soon. Direct here, always truly yours,

CHURCH HISTORY DEBT.

ELDER P. D. GOLD, DEAR BROTHER:

—For the information of your subscribers, please publish the following account of the cause, the present condition, and the prospects of the payment of the Church History Debt.

The principal of the debt $2,000. is the excess of my unavoidable expenses above my income during the six years when I was at work at the Church History. While I was engaged in preparing the book, I and my family had to live. I labored hard day and night, depriving myself, for several years, not only of the time needed for the support of my family, but of numerous midnight hours greatly needed for rest and sleep, and I accomplished the task imposed upon me by my brethren as faithfully as I could. It was a labor of love, both on the part of my father (who worked about four years on the History) and on the part of myself; we made no charge for our services. I sacrificed my school at Wilson, N. C., to the History, and sold myself and family out of house and home, and have mortgaged nearly all my property, except my books and school apparatus, which have very small pecuniary value, though valuable to me as a teacher, in order to secure the payment of the debt of $2,000.

I never expected to ask my brethren to help me pay any of this debt, but thought that there would be income enough from the sale of the books to pay it. And this would have been the case, and the debt been about cancelled by this time, if the book had contained no more matter than I ever promised it should contain; but it contains three times as much matter (and even this seems but small for the history of the Church for about six thousand years) so that, as the publishers and binders had first to be paid, I have not realized a cent from the sale of the books, and I still owe the publishers two hundred dollars for printing and binding 4,000 copies. They have about six hundred dollars' worth of books and agents' accounts on hand; and, if these books should ever be sold, and the accounts collected, there will be a credit to me of about $400 to go towards paying the debt. And on each copy of the book hereafter printed or sold I am to have 75 cents (or only 50 cents, if sold by paid agents), if any more copies should ever be sold; but the sale is very small now, while I have already paid $700 interest on the debt, and the interest (eight per cent.), is constantly accumulating. There is but little probability, I think, of my ever receiving enough from the sale of the book to pay even the interest on the borrowed money.

Because of the great increase of matter it was impossible to furnish the book in leather binding for two dollars; but it was furnished in good cloth binding for that price, and the binders charged half a dollar extra for the leather binding. I do not know of any other book so large and so well printed and bound as the Church History, that is sold at so small a price. As books usually sell, the history in cloth binding would bring about three dollars. Schaff's History of the Apostolic Church, in cloth binding, though it gives the history of only a hundred years, and contains only about half as much matter as the Church History, sells for four dollars. The postage on each copy of the Church History is nearly a quarter of a dollar; and another quarter of a dollar is allowed on each book to any one who buys as many as six copies at a time; so that only about a dollar and a half may be received for the book itself.

It is all I can possibly do to support, in a very economical manner, my family of six, by the income from my present school and the donations received by me in my ministry; so that the prospect certainly is that all my property will be sacrificed for this debt unless my brethren and sisters and friends help me. They have already kindly contributed about $500. for this purpose, so that the present amount of the debt is about 1600. If the books now in the hands (not sold) of the publishers and agents should be sold (which may possibly be the case in a year or two) the amount would be reduced to about $1200. and interest for a year or two.

The debt was contracted solely by my long continued and earnest endeavor to serve the interests of religious and eternal truth and the cause of the Primitive Baptists. I gave my time and services to my brethren freely and in love; and if they, with equal freeness, will give me money to pay this debt, or will help to sell copies of the History so that I can be relieved of the debt, I hope that I shall feel humbly thankful to them and to the Lord for putting such love in their hearts. The inspired Apostle Paul affectionately exhorts us to bear one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ." Gal. 6: 2,

Yours in love,

INFANT SPRINKLING.

BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—Being requested by J. J. to give my views on infant baptism and the mode of baptism, and feeling my inability to comply with the request, also being young in the cause, I earnestly implore God to so direct my thoughts and guide my pen as not to be a reproach to the cause for which our forefathers fought so hard and endured so much persecution.

I will quote Rom. 6: 1—4, "What shall we say then? Shall we continue in sin that grace may abound? God forbid. How shall we that are dead to sin live any longer therein? Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the father, even so we also should walk in the newness of life." It appears from this that gospel baptism is a burial in the water; and that before one is a proper subject for it there must be a death to sin. We do not think that an infant has committed any sin or has any knowledge of good and evil, neither do we think it accountable for sin until it has this knowledge. We consider an infant a type of innocence: not holiness. We do not consider an infant dead to sin, because it never knew what sin was, has never sinned except in Adam because it knew not the law; then if it knew not the law it knew not sin, but being born in sin, it is saved by the blood of Jesus Christ, for he died to save sinners; he died to save that which was lost, and all are in a lost condition by the sin of Adam. "Wherefore as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned. For until the law sin was in the world: but sin is not imputed where there is no law, then sin is not imputed to the infant which knows no law, and hence it does not need the baptism of repentance (preached by John) for where there is no sin no repentance is needed; and if it does not know anything about conscience, and consequently could not receive baptism in answer of a good conscience toward God when it knows nothing about God or conscience, for it is written, "The like figure whereunto even baptism doth now save us, not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God. 1st," Pet. 3: 21. So if it cannot receive the baptism of repentance, or the baptism of a good conscience toward God, we think that it cannot according to the word of God receive any baptism. We quote Heb. 10: 22, on the mode of baptism, "Let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water." We do not think our bodies would be washed much by sprinkling or pouring a little water on the top of the head, and even if we washed the body by pouring, it would be very unhandy to pour enough water to wash the body decently, and besides that would not be a baptism by burial with Christ. We think that those who were baptized of John in Jordan," Matt. 3: 6, were immersed in the waters of the river Jordan, by John, and we think that when Philip baptized the eunuch, when

"They went down into the water both Philip and the eunuch," Acts. 8: 38, that Philip immersed the Eunuch or buried him in the water, and raised him up out of the watery grave, typical of the resurrection of Christ that he might "walk in the newness of life" Rom. 6: 4 and then they "came up out of the water." Acts. 8: 39. We believe that when the children of Israel were in the cloud and in the sea that that was a type of the baptism which should distinguish us from the world, for it is written 1st, Cor. 10: 2. "And were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea." So we think and are fully satisfied beyond the shadow of a doubt that is the true mode of baptism into the church of God that is, the baptism which is administered and required to be administered by man here on this earth, is that of immersion or a burial in the water; and that none are lawful subjects until they become to be accountable for their acts, have a knowledge of good and evil, die to the sinful state in which they were conceived and born, or are regenerated and born of God. So brethren and sisters, I hope if this should meet any of your eyes that you will excuse your poor little unworthy brother, if a brother at all, for all his errors and mistakes, for I feel to hope that God will do the same as they are from the head and not the heart.

JESSE A. ASHBURN.

I have visited several associations this year, and found them all in peace and in general correspondence with others. About the usual number has been baptized. The increase of membership is not as large as that of other denominations. You know Israel was the fewest of all people. When the Lord adds "it is of such as shall be saved."

ANSWER TO BROTHER N. B. ORRELL.

It cannot be an immortal part of God, shut up in the flesh or soul of man, that is awakened by divine quickening. For anything that is immortal could not die or become mortal. For to be mortal is the same as dying. Therefore that which is immortal is undying. The eternal God is not divided. It is not that a part of God dwells in man which is quickened. Immortality is incorruptibility. We commonly say the soul of man is immortal. But Jesus only hath immortality dwelling in light that is unapproachable.

When we say man is mortal we mean he is dying or corrupt. We do not mean that he will cease to exist, in some form, nor do we mean that the soul of man ever will cease to exist in some form because it is corrupt.

WHAT IS QUICKENED.

It is man (not God, or a part of God in the man) that is quickened. What condition were they in before they were quickened? They were dead in trespasses and sins. The entire man by nature is dead thus. In the day that man sinned he thus died. While in this nearer and nearer the desired haven of rest, could welcome my sorest trials as coming directly from him who is our life, and felt with one of old, Let him do unto me as seemeth good to him. Many sad seasons have I since passed through, but find much comfort while meditating upon this glorious night of deliverance and rejoicing. O if such seasons here in this sin-stricken and woe-worn world, with a treacherous and undivided love, be so sweet, what must it be, in a sinless, sorrowless state, with purified affections to "behold the King in his glory, and to be forever with the Lord," who is our life, the same unchanged and unchanging Savior. The thought is overwhelming. What amazing love has the Father bestowed upon us here, and when we consider that we now see through a glass dimly, but when He who is our life shall appear, we shall appear with him and see him as he is, face to face. It is far beyond the comprehension of our finite minds to conceive of the great love and happiness that await those who sleep in Christ.

Brother Gold, I have written too lengthy and my thoughts are scattering, but I have written them without premeditation, and hope you will cast a mantle of charity over all imperfections, and pardon the liberty I have thus taken in writing to you, but I felt so very lonely to-night with no one to mention the name of Jesus to, that my mind was lead to you.

Pray for me when you have the spirit of prayer. With christian love to you and sister Gold, I remain your sister I hope in Christ.

RUTH TAYLOR.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—After reading some of David's 'sweet and comforting sentences' this bright morn, and feeling that the Lord is good and gracious, my thoughts have wandered to you and the remainder of the dear saints whose writings I've repeatedly read with so much pleasure and comfort. And though absent, I hope you are basking and rejoicing in the congenial sunlight of christian love and devotion. Blessed thought, that Christ ever liveth to make intercession for his people and that he is able to save all who call upon his name. And as their days are so shall their strength ever be. For Christ is their strength. His eyes are upon the righteous. His ears open unto their cry. He heareth them and delivereth them out of all their troubles.

We should not be discouraged at afflictions and tribulations, for Christ has said: in the world ye shall have tribulation and trouble, but in me ye shall have peace, and this peace surpasseth all human understanding, causing sin-tossed souls to be still, and rejoice in the Prince of peace, who has been exalted to give repentance and remission of sins. I feel that affliction is needful for erring ones like myself, it teaches them their dependance, and to realize that Christ is an all sufficient Savior, the great Physician, which healeth both soul and body.

I ask to be remembered by you at a throne of grace, and hoping that you will ever be enabled to feel, that "the Lord is your Shepherd and to appreciate His tender mercies. I am your sister in Christ I hope.

MOLLIE D. BURGESS.

TO THE CHURCH AT PENNY GROVE:—The Lord has done great things for me in a mysterious way, whereof I am glad.

I a vile persecutor of the church of Christ, Saul-like, have been stricken down on my way in darkness, thinking I was doing God service, and the greatest light I have ever seen shone around me, which showed me I was blind, which brought me in the most extreme agony I have ever experienced, but thanks be to the Lord, if I am not deceived, I can now see with that Spiritual eye. (you remember Job saw the Lord with his eye, not eyes) through the mercies of God and the sufferings of Christ.

Vile as I find myself to be, I feel that it was only an act of mercy that the church has received me. I would not have blamed them if they had not received me, but would have loved them yet, and would have tried to get a low seat near them to catch a crumb of the gospel which I feel was much better than I was worthy to receive. I feel to humbly beg pardon of all Primitive Baptists in the world for persecuting them as I have done, for I thought I was doing God service. Now with this slight sketch of my feelings, with respects towards you, I ask you to dispose of my name as seems good in your sight.

I also send in this letter my license and credentials as a preacher of the Free Will Doctrine. Yours Respectfully.

¶ ELDER P. D. GOLD, DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—Through the tender mercies of our God, I have been spared to fill my tour of appointments, as published in the LANDMARK, and return home, Aug. 13th finding all well, after an absence of thirty three days, traveling through portions of Johnston, Wake, Rockingham, Stokes and other counties of North Carolina, and Henry, Patrick and Pittsylvania counties of Virginia.

The churches where I traveled seemed to be generally in peace, and I was very much edified and built up under the preaching and and spiritual conversation of Elders Harriss, Moore, Stone, Atkinson, Corn, Mcghee, Cahill, Turners, Minter, Jones, Dicks, Dameron and others with whom I met, while on my tour; besides a host of dear brethren, sisters and friends outside of the ministry whose names I will not now mention.

Suffice it to say that I was much comforted, met, conveyed and kindly cared for by those dear brethren, sisters and friends.

May the good Lord bless them ac-

ording to the multitude of his tender mercies. I hope this short sketch will suffice as I am now feeling very unwell, Affectionate Yours.

JOHN R. ROBERTS.

Goldsboro, N. C.

MY DEAR BROTHER:—Through the mercy and goodness of an all-wise creator I am yet on the shore of time, though many are falling asleep in death. May God in his mercy help me to devote myself in an humble, spiritual manner, that I may be able to say with Paul, "I have fought a good fight, &c," when it shall be his will to call me away from this present sinful world.

Pray for me that my house may be set in order. I cannot have the many comforts that you have when meeting and mingling with the dear saints. You can comfort the saints and say to those of a doubtful mind, be strong. That gives joy and strength to the wayfaring traveller who is ready to halt or faint by the way. If I could feel that Jesus is mine, like Job did when he said, "I know that my Redeemer liveth," then I could rejoice in my future welfare, and hold on in spite of all the Satanical powers. I could then be able to over ride all the snares and devises set up by men which are spreading themselves as the green bay tree.

May the Lord abundantly bless you with his presence. Affectionately, one who is willing to receive counsel from all God's dear children. Farewell.

A. REED.

Winston, N. C.

ELDER P. D. GOLD, DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—I believe what the Lord says by the mouth of the prophet, all thy children shall be taught of the Lord, and great shall be the peace of thy children, and that when the Lord begins to teach then our experience begins, and never will end until time ends with us, that it will be line upon line, precept upon precept, all our days, here a little and there a little. In the language of the Psalmist we feel sometimes to say,

"Come hither, all ye that fear God, and I will tell you what he has done for my soul." For my fellowship has abounded toward you since reading your sketch of your experience in your reply to Dr. Hooper.

I will try and give a relation of what I hope has been the Lord's dealings with me, or some of them. I cannot remember anything out of the general course of children's life taking place with me until I was about eleven or twelve years old, when one day as I was about some work which my father had sent me to do all at once a sense of guilt and condemnation seemed to rest upon me with such force that I trembled with fear. I felt not worthy to live, nor fit to die. I believe now, although I did not know it then, that I was then quickened of the Spirit of God, and then began a warfare in my poor soul. I think if ever I did I then hungered and thirsted after righteousness, but felt far from it. I would retire to bed, but felt afraid to sleep lest I should awake in torment. I would cry so loud that no one could sleep in the house. My brothers would scold me and tell me to go to sleep, that there would nothing hurt me; but my father and mother would sit by my bed and try to comfort me, tho' all in vain. I felt like I was alone in the world, not a single friend, nor did I deserve any. A gloom was upon my young life which I tried in vain to shake off. My parents did all in their power to release my mind, but to no avail. They let me go to my Uncle's on a visit, but when I got there I could not stay, and in spite of all they could say I started for home again.

Thustrouble kept on until it was reported that I was deranged. This was a severe blow to me, for I felt that my only desire was to be perfect, and wherever I went I now believe I was praying for purity of heart.

With tongue nor pen I have never been able to describe the distress of mind I then passed through. How long I was in this strait of mind I cannot now tell, but upon a beautiful spring day as I was walking from the house to the barn a feeling of despair of ever enjoying anything in this life came over me, and darkness that was to be felt shrowded me.

When about mid-way between the barn and house in a moment unexpected something like a heavy cloak fell from my shoulders to the ground. The rapture of that moment I can never describe. My poor soul was filled with thanksgiving and praise.

"Tongue cannot express the sweet comfort and peace,

Yet strange as it may seem I did not receive this as an experience, but about this time Elder William Chote was preaching at our place at the house of one of our neighbors. I sat with a number of other boys about my age on a bench in an alley, which led to a well. I was surprised at what I heard. It seemed different from anything I had ever heard.

He always seemed very near to me after that. I did after that listen with interest to the preaching of the gospel wishing for perfection that I might know I was a christian, for I had a very strait path marked out for christians. I said to my father that if ever I united with the church, I would live different from what I saw others live. He said my son you will find that you cannot direct your steps. This I soon found to be true.

I find many things of which I have neglected to write, and the exhortation of Moses in Deut 8:2, 3, is an admonition to me, "And thou shalt remember all the way the Lord thy God led thee these forty years in the wilderness, to humble thee, and to prove thee, to know what is in thy heart, whether thou wouldst keep his commandments or not. Yours in christian love.

EXPERIENCE.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—It has been impressed on my mind to write out a part of my experience for your consideration, although I feel too unworthy to make the attempt.

I had many serious thoughts about religion when very young, but it was mostly brought on by death, or some other cause, and did not last long before it would wear off, and after awhile return again worse than ever, until I thought it was time enough for me to get religion yet. I will throw it away and not let such thoughts trouble my mind. I went on a long time trying to harden myself against such thoughts. I thought I could get religion at any time if I wanted to when I got old. I went on in this way until I was scared by a dream. I dreamed that mother and I walked in the old orchard and I looked up in the sky west of us. I tho't I saw the moon, and it was very large and in the shape of an anvil, and it was the color of fire: on the other side of it was a man standing with a large hammer in his hand, and he would strike the moon and the streams of fire would fly toward me. The further off I got the harder they would come until I awoke. I was scared and trembled all over. I thought the dream was sent on me because I was such a sinner, and if I ever tried to pray it was then, and the more I prayed the worse I got until it appeared there was a great weight and condemnation hanging over me. Let me be at home or abroad I could not get rid of it.

While in this condition I attended a camp meeting. On Sunday evening I tho't if I could get away out of company and pray it would relieve me, for I thought that all that looked at me could see the condition that my mind was in. So time went on for several weeks, until one Friday I went to the spring to make a fire to wash out some things. I walked out in the woods to get some brush to kindle my fire. I was trying to pray all the time for every breath was to the Lord for mercy. When something spake to my mind these words, "Fall on your knees and pray, it may be that the Lord will have mercy on you." I stopped and a great many things rolled through my mind. I feared some one would see me and said Lord cannot I pray as I walk and felt more condemned than ever. I never shall be able to tell the trouble that I was in all the early part of the day. I cannot find words to express it. About the middle of the day I started to the house. I did not think I would live to get to the house. I saw no chance for me to live. I thought I would die calling on the Lord for mercy. And it rolled through my mind as I stopped on the hill, Lord have mercy on me, Lord have mercy on me.

I had not gone more than half way up when the same voice spoke in my mind, "What have you done that you need beg for mercy." My burden was gone, and I felt so light, everything looked beautiful, although I did not feel like rejoicing, but was made to wonder what had gone with my burden and trouble, and why I felt so much better until late in the evening of the same day when these words were brought forcibly to my mind, "See his glorious work." Oh the joy I felt, I never can tell. I could rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory. I went to the church at Sardis and told them what I have been trying to write. When I got there it looked so little and I felt so unworthy, I did not see how they could receive me, but they did receive me without asking me a question and I was baptized on Sunday by Brother Bodenhamer.

SARAH ANN OLIVER.

TO J. D. M. DEAR SIR:—Remembering that you insisted I should write to you, I the more cheerfully yield to a personal desire to continue our friendly relations especially after your telling me (in the buggy) that you intend to be saved and attain in this life to spiritual perfection if possible. It seems incredible to me that a man that truly hunger can fail of salvation, not that you or any one can attain thereto by any merit of his own that makes God a debtor on a contract of conditions fulfilled. For all the Apostles and Elders in their first and only general conference wrote to the churches on the basis of Peter's statement that "We believe that thro' the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ we shall be saved even as they," the Gentiles. Certainly Peter could hope to be saved by grace only. Acts 15 : 11. If by grace, how say you it is by grace and something else. "The simplicity that is in Christ" is something unmingled with the works of man, call it obedience, or by any other name. These additions as merits corrupt the mind and pervert the gospel into another gospel. Grace gives the merits, is not given to merits. 1 John. 4 : 10. Sinners who sorrowfully see themselves sinners fly from self to God by aid of grace. Paul's conversion was a pattern of grace and he spent his life fighting against the doctrine of salvation by works. The law drives men to grace. Man cannot renew himself. Its first effect is confession of sin, for nothing is man's own but sin. Grace is given gratuitously, it resides in Christ abundantly. By it alone can man return to God, Ps. 68 : 6. With it man can conquer the flesh, for it gives the strength it needs. We are children of God by adoption. Dead men can't catch hold of a rope nor do their part in being quickened into life, nor in becoming sons by adoption. It is of grace lest any one be lifted up. Grace works in us to will and to do, Phil. 2 : 12, 13 and Heb. 13 : 20, 21. That which grace aids it did itself bestow, for if man's salvation be upon condition, that he become righteous, then Christ is not the Saviour of sinners but of the self-righteous only, that is to say, Man is his own Savior, which robs Christ of his glory and he died in vain. Gal. 2 : 21. It was by the grace of God that Jesus tasted death for every man. He died that all might have this life, some this life and that to come, namely, those given to him and for whom he prayed. He by his death purchased some good things for all ; all good things for some. John 17. He knows every one he purchased with his blood and not one shall perish. He prayed for the elect among his murderers and they were added to the church on the day of Pentecost and it was the Lord, not man that added them, Acts. 2 : 23—47. To look to Christ is to be justified by faith : to think of being justified by

The Pharisee thought of God's goodness to him ; the Publican of his unworthiness. Martha thought of her much service. Mary waited for the one thing needful." The gospel may be stated thus : "Do this, O Christ, and live, O man." "But this generation has been taught as I taught at Damascus and at the cave, that the way to be saved is to do O man and live." I learnt it from Cambell, Thomas and every body, for it is the theory alike of Pagans, Mohammedans, Catholics and Protestants—all but the poor old Baptists. Man fell, but has no power to raise himself. Christ made satisfaction for sin on the cross. Why not admit this plain teaching as the Eunuch did ? "This it is to believe on Christ as the Scripture hath said." John 7 : 38.

If our obedience saves us Christ need not have died but given his laws only. What means Heb. 1 ; 3. There is no chance to misunderstand that language unless it be to question who the pronoun 'our' stands for, that it means the predestinate, the elect, is beyond question, with me. Christ paid the debt they owed, paid the price of that ransom. None of the redeemed can perish. Thro' the operation of grace the elect die to the world. Col. 3 : 3. Love itself is our death to the world and our life with God, for our love goes forth from the world and so it is dead to the world which is left behind a corpse. Election is unto, not because of faith, love and holiness. Election makes the future as certain as the past. The election of the saints was co incident with the election of Christ, their head, for you know He and his church are one, the multitudinous Christ. He elected the unjust to be justified, chosen out of the world that they might compose another world and yet be in the world now, a new world to itself hereafter. 1 Jno. 2 : 1, 2. Jno. 3 : 16, Heb. 2 : 5. The elect are the "stars whom God numbereth," Mat. 8 : 2 ; Psalm 135 : 4, 5.

Is it true that in all the Bible there is only one verse and that Acts. 2 : 38. Is it true that Christ cannot save without the help of man? Is it the function of the church to save mankind? Write soon. Direct here, always truly yours,

CHURCH HISTORY DEBT.

ELDER P. D. GOLD, DEAR BROTHER:—For the information of your subscribers, please publish the following account of the cause, the present condition, and the prospects of the payment of the Church History Debt.

The principal of the debt $2,000. is the excess of my unavoidable expenses above my income during the six years when I was at work at the Church History. While I was engaged in preparing the book, I and my family had to live. I labored hard day and night, depriving myself, for several years, not only of the time needed for the support of my family, but of numerous midnight hours greatly needed for rest and sleep, and I accomplished the task imposed upon me by my brethren as faithfully as I could. It was a labor of love, both on the part of my father (who worked about four years on the History) and on the part of myself; we made no charge for our services. I sacrificed my school at Wilson, N. C., to the History, and sold myself and family out of house and home, and have mortgaged nearly all my property, except my books and school apparatus, which have very small pecuniary value, though valuable to me as a teacher, in order to secure the payment of the debt of $2,000.

I never expected to ask my brethren to help me pay any of this debt, but thought that there would be income enough from the sale of the books to pay it. And this would have been the case, and the debt been about cancelled by this time, if the book had contained no more matter than I ever promised it should contain; but it contains three times as much matter (and even this seems but small for the history of the Church for about six thousand years) so that, as the publishers and binders had first to be paid, I have not realized a cent from the sale of the books, and I still owe the publishers two hundred dollars for printing and binding 4,000 copies. They have about six hundred dollars' worth of books and agents' accounts on hand; and, if these books should ever be sold, and the accounts collected, there will be a credit to me of about $400 to go towards paying the debt. And on each copy of the book hereafter printed or sold I am to have 75 cents (or only 50 cents, if sold by paid agents), if any more copies should ever be sold; but the sale is very small now, while I have already paid $700 interest on the debt, and the interest (eight per cent.), is constantly accumulating. There is but little probability, I think, of my ever receiving enough from the sale of the book to pay even the interest on the borrowed money.

Because of the great increase of matter it was impossible to furnish the book in leather binding for two dollars; but it was furnished in good cloth binding for that price, and the binders charged half a dollar extra for the leather binding. I do not know of any other book so large and so well printed and bound as the Church History, that is sold at so small a price. As books usually sell, the history in cloth binding would bring about three dollars. Schaff's History of the Apostolic Church, in cloth binding, though it gives the history of only a hundred years, and contains only about half as much matter as the Church History, sells for four dollars. The postage on each copy of the Church History is nearly a quarter of a dollar; and another quarter of a dollar is allowed on each book to any one who buys as many as six copies at a time; so that only about a dollar and a half may be received for the book itself.

It is all I can possibly do to support, in a very economical manner, my family of six, by the income from my present school and the donations received by me in my ministry; so that the prospect certainly is that all my property will be sacrificed for this debt unless my brethren and sisters and friends help me. They have already kindly contributed about $500. for this purpose, so that the present amount of the debt is about 1600. If the books now in the hands (not sold) of the publishers and agents should be sold (which may possibly be the case in a year or two) the amount would be reduced to about $1200. and interest for a year or two.

The debt was contracted solely by my long continued and earnest endeavor to serve the interests of religious and eternal truth and the cause of the Primitive Baptists. I gave my time and services to my brethren freely and in love; and if they, with equal freedom, will give me money to pay this debt, or will help to sell copies of the History so that I can be relieved of the debt, I hope that I shall feel humbly thankful to them and to the Lord for putting such love in their hearts. The inspired Apostle Paul affectionately exhorts us to bear one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ." Gal. 6: 2,

Yours in love,

SYLVESTER HASSELL.

INFANT SPRINKLING.

BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—Being requested by J. J. to give my views on infant baptism and the mode of baptism, and feeling my inability to comply with the request, also being young in the cause, I earnestly implore God to so direct my thoughts and guide my pen as not to be a reproach to the cause for which our forefathers fought so hard and endured so much persecution.

I will quote Rom. 6: 1—4, "What shall we say then? Shall we continue in sin that grace may abound? God forbid. How shall we that are dead to sin live any longer therein? Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the father, even so we also should walk in the newness of life." It appears from this that gospel baptism is a burial in the water; and that before one is a proper subject for it there must be a death to sin. We do not think that an infant has committed any sin or has any knowledge of good and evil, neither do we think it accountable for sin until it has this knowledge. We consider an infant a type of innocence: not holiness. We do not consider an infant dead to sin, because it never knew what sin was, has never sinned except in Adam because it knew not the law; then if it knew not the law it knew not sin, but being born in sin, it is saved by the blood of Jesus Christ, for he died to save sinners; he died to save that which was lost, and all are in a lost condition by the sin of Adam. "Wherefore as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned. For until the law sin was in the world: but sin is not imputed where there is no law, then sin is not imputed to the infant which knows no law, and hence it does not need the baptism of repentance (preached by John) for where there is no sin no repentance is needed; and if it does not know anything about conscience, and consequently could not receive baptism in answer of a good conscience toward God when it knows nothing about God or conscience, for it is written, "The like figure whereunto even baptism doth now save us, not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God. 1st," Pet. 3: 21. So if it cannot receive the baptism of repentance, or the baptism of a good conscience toward God, we think that it cannot according to the word of God receive any baptism. We quote Heb. 10: 22, on the mode of baptism, "Let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water." We do not think our bodies would be washed much by sprinkling or pouring a little water on the top of the head, and even if we washed the body by pouring, it would be very unhandy to pour enough water to wash the body decently, and besides that would not be a baptism by burial with Christ. We think that those who were baptized of John in Jordan," Matt. 3: 6, were immersed in the waters of the river Jordan, by John, and we think that when Philip baptized the eunuch, when

"They went down into the water both Philip and the eunuch," Acts. 8: 38, that Philip immersed the Eunuch or buried him in the water, and raised him up out of the watery grave, typical of the resurrection of Christ that he might "walk in the newness of life" Rom. 6: 4 and then they "came up out of the water." Acts. 8: 39. We believe that when the children of Israel were in the cloud and in the sea that that was a type of the baptism which should distinguish us from the world, for it is written 1st, Cor. 10: 2. "And were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea." So we think and are fully satisfied beyond the shadow of a doubt that is the true mode of baptism into the church of God that is, the baptism which is administered and required to be administered by man here on this earth, is that of immersion or a burial in the water; and that none are lawful subjects until they become to be accountable for their acts, have a knowledge of good and evil, die to the sinful state in which they were conceived and born, or are regenerated and born of God. So brethren and sisters, I hope if this should meet any of your eyes that you will excuse your poor little unworthy brother, if a brother at all, for all his errors and mistakes, for I feel to hope that God will do the same as they are from the head and not the heart.

JESSE A. ASIBURN.

I have visited several associations this year, and found them all in peace and in general correspondence with others. About the usual number has been baptized. The increase of membership is not as large as that of other denominations. You know Israel was the fewest of all people. When the Lord adds "it is of such as shall be saved."

ANSWER TO BROTHER N. B. ORRELL.

It cannot be an immortal part of God, shut up in the flesh or soul of man, that is awakened by divine quickening. For anything that is immortal could not die or become mortal. For to be mortal is the same as dying. Therefore that which is immortal is undying. The eternal God is not divided. It is not that a part of God dwells in man which is quickened. Immortality is incorruptibility. We commonly say the soul of man is immortal. But Jesus only hath immortality dwelling in light that is unapproachable.

When we say man is mortal we mean he is dying or corrupt. We do not mean that he will cease to exist, in some form, nor do we mean that the soul of man ever will cease to exist in some form because it is corrupt.

WHAT IS QUICKENED.

It is man (not God, or a part of God in the man) that is quickened. What condition were they in before they were quickened? They were dead in trespasses and sins. The entire man by nature is dead thus. In the day that man sinned he thus died. While in this

By the help of the Lord this paper will contend for the ancient Landmark, guided by its stakes of Truth, and strengthened by its chords of Love.

It hopes to reject all traditions and institutions of men, and regard only the Bible as the standard of truth.

It urges the people to search the Scriptures, and obey Jesus the king in the holy hill of Zion, keeping themselves unspotted from the world.

It aims to contend for the mystery of the faith in God and the Father, Jesus the Mediator, and the Holy Spirit the blessed Comforter.

All lovers of Gospel truth are invited to write for it—if so impressed.

May grace, mercy, and peace be multiplied to all lovers of truth.

ZION'S LANDMARK.

DEVOTED TO THE CAUSE OF JESUS.

EXPERIENCE.

ELDER P. D. GOLD—Dear brother in Christ, I have been thinking for the last two or three years that I would write a little for your paper of what I hope the Lord has done for my soul; but feeling so little and unworthy, I have put it off until now. I hope the Lord will guide my pen in the right way. I was born in Muscogee County, Ga., and when I was five years old my parents moved to this State. I was raised by Christian parents; they have been members of the Primitive Church before I could remember, and my father was deacon of the church. I have looked at them time and again, and wished I was as good as I thought they were. When I was thirteen or fourteen years old I had a dream, and in my dream it seemed that I and several other young people were together, and I thought some ugly thing caught us, and said he was going to kill us, and I promised in my dream that if he would let me off that time I would do better; and awhile after that I had another dream, and in my dream it appeared that I was dead and laid out, but knew everything, and could see myself. They carried me to the graveyard and I thought I got away from them and started back home, and while running I looked back and something ran after me but I got away from it.

These two dreams would come to my mind and cause me at times to think about dying and what would become of me, but still I thought it time enough yet, and that when I got older I would do better. I thought I could do better if I would try. So I went on rolling sin as a sweet morsel under my tongue, and drinking it down as the ox drinketh the water until I was twenty-two years old, which was in the summer of 1867, and my father and mother went to a meeting, and left me at home with the children. There was a protracted meeting going on in about one mile of my father's house, and I heard of several of my associates and others joining the church, and my father and mother came home and told me what a good meeting they had, and such good preaching where they had been: and it seemed to me that I was left alone, and thought I would do better and get religion and join the church. I thought I would steal off and try to pray, and when I commenced to pray I could not say anything hardly, and what I did say seemed to go down to the ground instead of going up, and I soon found that I could not do anything within myself, and in the place of getting better I got worse. I worried along trying to find some relief but could not. It seemed to me the day of grace had passed and there was no hope for me. One night before I retired I knelt down by my bed and thought I would try to pray to my maker for some relief, and I lay down and it did not seem like I had been asleep, and these words came to me, "be not afraid, your sins are all forgiven." But still I did not feel much change in myself, and awhile after that I went to bed as before, and I thought I was embracing the Saviour in my arms and then awoke and everything seemed light and lovely, and if I could always feel as I did then there would be a heaven here on earth. It has been twenty years since that time and I have wanted to join the Primitive Baptist church and live with christian people, but it seems that I was afraid to offer myself to the church for fear I would be deceived, and would deceive others. I often think of what my old Grandmother Huckabay told me, that whenever the Lord commenced a good work he would carry it out to the end. Sometimes it seems to me that everything goes well with me, and then again it seems that sin is mixed with all I do. Oh is there any one like me? Once when I was bowed down in this way these blessed words came to my mind, "Come in ye blessed of the Lord."

DEAR BROTHER GOLD, AND BROTHERS AND SISTERS IN CHRIST, (if one so unworthy as I may claim such relationship with the people of God)—I am alone to night, and a long way from home with no one to express my thoughts to.

I want to write a word of comfort and admonition to the household of Faith, looking alone to the blessed Lord and Saviour to direct my pen. For my dear brethren and sisters he is our only light, our life, our director, our all. When he reveals himself to us crucified for our sins and risen for our justification, then we are ready to exclaim with Thomas, "My Lord and my God;" but when he withdraws himself from us, if but for one night, we are ready to say I know not the man. It really seems to me that men everywhere ought to praise the Lord for his wonderful works unto the children of men. We are dependent alone on him for the very breath we breathe, and yet how unthankful we are: but notwithstanding all our shortcoming and unthankfulness, the blessed Lord has remembered us all the days of old.

I want you to go back with me to the Garden of Eden. Let us consider the standing of Adam there, (I know that I have not the mind to go into this great ocean of truth and love, concerning the great plan of salvation, but if you will bear with me we will try to wade around the edge, and pick up some of the little shells which perhaps will give us some faint idea of what is contained therein) for I believe he was put in the garden and left as it were to do as he pleased, (not able to stand, nor liable to fall) but to do as he pleased, and he pleased to do just as all of his posterity have done since, that is evil, when not directed by the power of God. Now it is evident that Adam was driven out of the garden, and it was said to him, "by the sweat of his face he should eat bread, until he returned to the ground, for out of it he was taken, for dust thou art and unto dust thou shalt return."

Now let us remember where the tree of life is, (the only tree too that I know of mentioned in the Bible that one might eat of and live forever) for it is in the garden, and man on the outside, and to make it doubly sure that he should not get to it, the Lord placed around it a cherubim and a flaming sword that pointed every way to keep the way of the Tree of Life. Religious men and women of to-day deny the truth of this scripture and say, "if you will give us money enough we will evangelize, or christianize the world, denying again the scripture that says, "you were not redeemed with corruptible things as silver and gold, but with the precious blood of Christ, as a Lamb without blemish and without spot, who verily was fore-ordained before the foundation of the world, but was manifest in these last times for you. Now according to my way of looking at the matter (and I believe it is in accordance with the written word of God too) Adam is in a state of sin and death, and wherever or whenever there is a child born into this world it is born of that same corruptible seed, having a mind not subject to the law of God, neither can be.

Yes, they are represented in the scriptures as being conceived in sin and shapen in iniquity. If therefore the infant is not a fit subject of grace who then can be saved? Let us see what the scriptures say of it. You know there was and is a people who were saved in Christ before the world began, as it is written, "Who hath saved us and called us with a holy calling, not ac-according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began." And again, in hope of eternal life which God that cannot lie promised before the world began. Now I know there is a people, and a good many of them too, that say this scripture is not true, but that people are called here in time, and that according to their works, and that God did not promise eternal life before the world began, but will now give to all who will accept the terms offered. Now we know the promise was and is to a 'royal priesthood, a peculiar people, who are said to be the bride, the Lamb's wife.' He is the true vine, they are the branches, He the head, they the body. He the good shepherd they the sheep. He speaks of them as being 'his love, his fair one, saying thou art all fair my love, there is no spot in thee. But says one Abel was saved because he brought a more excellent offering than Cain. Why certainly he did and he brought it by faith which is the gift of God. "Because ye are sons God has sent the Spirit of his son into your heart crying Abba, Father." Abraham by faith obeyed the Lord. Jacob was loved of God before he was born and afterwards made father of the sons who became heads of the twelve tribes of the children of Israel, who stood as a figure of the twelve apostles, and of spiritual Israel, who should be manifest. Joseph stood as a type of Christ, was sold for twenty pieces of silver, but did not lose his virtue to save. Neither did Christ, notwithstanding he was crucified and slain. He is risen, and to-night reigns and will reign as Lord of lords and King of kings, forever in the house of Jacob. As it is written, "and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end." Moses was made able to say, "I had rather suffer afflictions with the people of God than to dwell in the pleasures of sin for a season." Joshua constrained by love could say "As for me and my house we will serve the Lord." Gideon, when called upon by the Lord to save Israel from the hand of the Midianites, could say, "O my Lord wherewith shall I save Israel. Behold my family is poor in Manasseh, and I am the least in my Fathers' house." I hear such expressions now-a-days among the Baptists, but in the strength of Israel's God they go preaching the gospel of the Son of God. David was chosen king of Israel and could not fall by the hand of Saul. Daniel prayed three times a day to his God, was cast into the lions' den, but the Lord was with him there. The children were cast into the fiery furnace but there was one with them there like unto the Son of God. Job was deprived of his wealth and afflicted from head to foot with sore boils, but he could say, "If we receive good at the hands of the Lord shall we not receive evil?" David could give God all the praise and say, "Bless the Lord O my soul and all that is within me bless his holy name." Isaiah could look to Christ as the wonderful Counselor, the mighty God, the Prince of peace, and say of man, "All flesh is as grass, and all the goodliness thereof is as the flower of the field. I know that Jeremiah had a view of the Saviour and the purpose of his coming when he could tell of the covenant he would make with the house of Israel, See Jer. 31st, chap. Right here I want to say that the Primitive Baptists are the only people that I have ever met that have any use for that covenant. Ezekiel could view the whole house of Israel as dry bones and see and know of a certainty that life came to them by the Lord God himself. I mention all these things to try to show that in all the days of old there was a people who trusted in the name of the Lord. He has said that he would never leave himself without a witness. As it is written, I will also leave in the midst of thee an afflicted and poor people, and they shall trust in the name of the Lord. I believe in that age the people of God looked forward to the coming of Christ as their Saviour, and I believe to-day there is a people that look alone to him as their Saviour, and I believe that people are known as Primitive Baptists. Now my dear brethren and sisters, if we are that people and the only people among more than 600 different denominations, why is it so, is it because we are from our shoulders up higher than other people, or is it because we were chosen in Christ before the world began? I will answer for myself. My hope is in the Lord my God.

Now my Father's children, I have tried to show you that by grace ye are saved through faith, and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God. Not of works lest any man should boast. I want now as an humble child of God to talk with you some concerning our duty to each other and to our God. It seems plain to me and I believe it is according to the scriptures too, that there are different gifts to the children of God, but all of the same spirit, and I believe that these gifts are for the benefit of the Church, as Paul said, "Brethren if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual restore such a one in the spirit of meekness, considering thyself lest thou also be tempted. Bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ."

My dear friends, I want to speak of some of the things that I have heard, seen and felt of late, hoping that none will be offended, and that some may be spiritually benefited. First I want to speak a few words concerning feet-washing. I believe that our Lord literally washed his disciples' feet, and that he was and is the God of the whole earth. God is love and when we are enabled to follow him in any of his commands we are divinely benefited. I believe that the churches whose members practice washing one another's feet do receive a blessing, and are made to shed tears of joy and love which the people of God where they do not practice it never enjoy. I long to see the time come, if it can be the Lord's will, when we can see eye to eye and speak and practice the same thing, for we are but few in number with the world and the devil all against us. What a blessed thing it is when we can sow to the spirit and of the spirit reap everlasting life. Now my dear brethren and sisters, if I have told you the truth, and we that engage in washing one another's feet receive a blessing that those of our dear brethren that do not, don't receive, in the name of Israel's God should we exclude from our fellowship those who are not blessed to see as we do?

I have heard it said that brother Gold was the man to preach feet-washing, and that he ought to impress it on the mind of the churches. Now I believe that Brother Gold is called of God to preach and he has given him the message to deliver, and if not he had better not try to preach feet-washing. O that we could all have the spirit of feet-washing in our hearts. If we did I honestly believe we would ever hereafter live in love and fellowship with each other, and all for Christ, and when a brother or sister is overtaken in a fault go to them in meekness and love with a hope to restore and not to kill them, bearing one another's burdens, and so fulfilling the law of Christ.

My dear friends in Zion, it has just entered my mind, why have I written this letter? I believe I love you, and don't want to deceive you, though I may do it, I can't promise you that I will not for I am a stranger to myself. May God bless us all, and teach us to pray and how to pray. May he mark out the way before us and enable us to walk therein, and finally save us all with an everlasting salvation is the prayer of your unworthy brother in hope of eternal life.

W. J. STEPHENSON.

MESSERS GOLD AND LESTER, DEAR BRETHREN:—I feel like I would like to pen a few thoughts for your paper. I feel thankful to say to the readers of the paper that I have just returned from the New Hope Association, where I found ministering brethren from the Primitive Western, Beulah, Euharlee, Marietta and the Mount Moriah all speaking the same doctrine of salvation by grace, and all seem to be in love. I attended the Cane Creek and the Mt-Moriah Associations, and met Brother John Rowe and Brother Adams at the Mt. Moriah Association, and was glad to see them. Inded they are all earnestly contending for the faith once delivered to the saints as far as I was able to judge. Oh how I wish the brethren everywhere would quit trying to hunt up something new to publish, it is always calculated to lead off some of the little babes in Christ, and then it don't add anything to themselves, they only come out worsted in the bargain.

I only speak from experience. When I lose sight of the great "I am," then it is that I am hunting up something new. When it pleases God to humble one of his little ones, he don't want anything better than he has already been taught by his Holy Spirit. Why I see a great many things in print that I could take up and give my views on and be entirely different from what is held forth. But what good will it do, it is always on some point that does not concern our salvation. Now I could take brother Lester's piece on the "New Creature" in Christ Jesus being made subject to vanity and get up a great controversy about it, for I don't near see it like he does. The scriptures don't read with the same light to me as it does to him, and I am satisfied he was honest in what he wrote or he would not have written it, and with all the argument I might bring forth it would not change his views any, and I am satisfied he could not make any with me on it. So now what good would there be in my sallying into him through some other paper, and then declaring non fellowship for him on the account of his not seeing it as I do, for I take the whole paragraph from the 19th verse to the 24th. (Read 19th verse.) Here Paul says the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God. Now I wonder if the new creature is waiting for the manifestation of itself, or is it the old creature waiting for the manifesting of the new, and again when a thing is subject to another it has the control of the thing that is made subject, so if I believed that I would believe in falling from grace as the Methodists do now.

Brother Gold, I shall direct this letter to you for I don't know where Brother Lester's Post Office is, if he wants to reply to me I would be glad to hear from him. I am not seeking after controversy, for I don't think they do any good. Then we should always try and keep peace instead of causing confusion. When we see a brother that we think is advocating something that would likely cause a jar in the family, we should call his attention to it, and not just try and bury him at once. That is not Christ's example, and I don't want either of you to think that I would do you the least harm, for I love you if I have never seen you in the flesh. Brother Adams of your state can tell you who I am, and what I believe. I am willing for him to spend his judgment on me although I have many troubles to contend with, and am anything but perfect, though as Paul said, "It is by the grace of God that I am what I am." Without this I cannot expect to be anything.

D. M. SAWYER.

TO MR. KEENE, My DEAR BROTHER, if one so unworthy may address you thus. I received your kind letter in due time, and am sorry to have kept you so long for an answer. I have often thought of writing, but felt that I could not. I assure you that it gave both my dear mother and myself much pleasure to find that we were not forgotten by you, that we were remembered in love by one of the Lord's own chosen people: but I wonder if you know me as I know myself, whether you would have written me as you did. I am so vile and worthless. I feel that in me there is no good thing. I am prone to evil and that continually.

You asked me dear brother to tell you of what I sometimes hope have been the Lord's dealings with me. Well I will try, but I feel I have nothing to tell. This is often my trouble. While others can tell the very time and place where they were called by his grace, I cannot. While they tell of days and nights of anguish on account of sin, and of the heavenly joy that followed when the assurance was given them that their sins were forgiven, that they were forever saved, by the spotless lamb of God, I fear I have never felt this. O what a blessed feeling that must be. What more would mortal man wish for than to know that it was for me, that the blessed Savior, the Lord of life and glory, should shed His blessed blood, to know that for me He is preparing the mansion above. Oh blessed thought, but is it for me, surely if it was I should not be so cold and lifeless. If I love why am I thus? Why this dull and lifeless frame? Hardly sure could they be worse. Who have never heard his name. I can hardly remember the time when I was not somewhat anxious about my soul. When I was very young I went to the English Church with my brothers and sisters, and of those there I used to think that all that were good would go to heaven, and the bad to hell, but they were first sent to the Baptist chapel when I was seven or eight years old, and I think from that time I always looked upon that people as God's people. I loved them from the first, and was never so happy as when there with them. I do not know when I first felt that I was a sinner. I think it gradually dawned upon me. I saw two of my sisters one a short time after the other, brought to know the Lord and were baptised at the chapel. One of them I especially noticed. She used to tremble when in trouble, when holding the hymn book when in trouble on account of sin. Oh how I wished I was like her. I felt that could not be.

We had a very unhappy home. I used to be so happy all day Sunday, for there was service three times a day. I felt sad when the day was ended. We lived very near the Chapel, while most of the people lived at a distance. We used often to walk part of the way with one or the other of them, often the minister, in hope of hearing a few more precious words fall from their lips before leaving them, but I don't think they ever guessed that I wanted to hear anything. I merely went as company for my sister, and they often spoke a word of encouragement to her. O how I used to listen to one that would suit me. Yes, and surely sometimes there were some, and when they talked of things they now hated, the things they once loved, and loved the things they once hated, and that they were once blind, but now they could see I was discouraged; for I could not say this. Still Oh how to be like them. Surely I did, and do hunger and thirst after righteousness. Why, these longings, why these sighings for something the world can never give. When I was about eleven years old we had a new teacher in the Sunday school. He had lately been brought into the church, and he seemed so full of love to Jesus that I loved him right away. One Sunday he explained to us the meaning of the word grace, and affections.

And I think this led me to think more especially than before about my condition. I would see clearly that unless I was born again, and unless I was one of those favored ones there was no hope for me. I used to wish that I had been a great sinner and had been stopped in my wild career by the Holy Spirit through some portions of scripture applied to my soul.

At the same time I was wicked to wish it. Not very long after this I had to leave the Sunday school and go away from home. I used often to think of what my dear teacher had said, and the minister too, and oh how I wished and longed and prayed that I might feel that I was one of these favored chosen ones.

About this time I dreamed the dream that I spoke of when in London. I thought I saw the end of the world. I was sitting on a pathway which crossed a field, and all one side of the world became dark, and it rained fire and brimstone, and on the other side was as bright as the sun. On the one side every one was in despair, wringing their hands, and running every way to escape, but could not. On the other side all was peace and happiness, people were walking about dressed in white, and looking so happy, and out of the midst of them came my teacher, and with him the blessed Saviour shining as the sun.

They came right up to me, and Mr. Touman said, this is one of my scholars, and Jesus smiled on me. Oh such a heavenly smile and laid his hand upon my head, but before he spoke to me I awoke. I felt so happy for awhile and thought surely this means something, but then the thought came, it was only a dream after all. But it had often encouraged me when I was almost ready to give up in despair, but I have not mentioned to any one what I felt, and so time passed on until I was seventeen years old; then we came to Canada. Little did we think when we left England that we had heard the gospel preached for the last time for many years, but we soon found when we arrived here that there was nothing we could hear for hungry souls, and as year after year went by I began to question whether there was any reality in religion at all. It seems so strange we would hear nothing of any one who believed in the only doctrine that I felt could be of any use to the sinner, salvation by grace alone. I grew so cold and careless, and the thought would often come to me that no shield of God would be like this for God was able to make his presence and to draw out the heart even though his child be quite alone. I would try to pray but could not utter a word, and at times it would seem to be perfect mockery for me to pray. I would think some times that I would give it all up and go into company and enjoy myself as others did, for after all what difference was there in them and me. I tried to do so but had to give it up for it disgusted me, and at night I would think what is to become of me.

So the time went on until about a year ago, when my brother met me with John Leitch, and he sent mother the Signs of the Times. Ah, surely God's hand was in it. We then found there were such people in America and then how I longed to meet with them. Which we did and found they were the same dear people as we had left in England. Once more we were among those who worshiped God in spirit and in truth. Oh that I were one of them, but after dwelling with them and you I felt more unworthy than ever. I came home and I felt I never would be one of them, for I could not tell them anything satisfactory, and yet why do I love them and how is it that I could have sat for ever and have them expound the scripture? What you said tho'gh gave me some encouragement, and when I got home I cried to the Lord to show some token for good, and strength to see. Before I opened my eyes in the morning these words came to me, "Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid, ye believe in God believe also in me." I was amazed. I thought can those words be for me? I had often thought of those beautiful words which our precious Saviour spoke to his disciples before leaving them, and thought how it must have cheered them to think of them after he was gone, but I never thought of claiming them for myself. I thought then surely I must have some part or lot in this matter, but oh I am so sinful, day by day I go on continually falling into sin, my nature is so vile, yet oh I desire to do right, but when I would do good evil is present with me, so that I cannot do the things that I would.

Dear Mr. Keene, I am afraid I have tired your patience. When I commenced I did not think of writing so much, but will now close with christian love from my dear mother.

It is Sunday morning, and people are wending their way to different churches, and I thought as I was watching them Oh that there was one where the true gospel of Jesus was preached, where I could go in hope of getting a crumb; but oh I feel so dissatisfied with it all that sometimes I will never go again to the so-called places of worship. Still when I am there I often feel encouragement from the fact that my soul desires something that is not to be found there. It does seem wonderful as you say, when we look at the thousands around us who care for none of these things, to whom the precious Saviour is as a root out of dry ground, with no form or comeliness. But I can say he is not so to me. To me he is altogether lovely.

Yet oh how forgetful I am of him, and how my wicked heart goes seeking for satisfaction in the things of the world. So that I often feel that after all there is no difference between myself and those whose sole happiness is in worldly things. Hardly could they be worse who have never heard his name. I cannot tell you my feelings as I read your letter. I thought who am I that I should receive such an epistle of love from one of God's people. Often I have thought I would give the world to be able to speak to a minister of the gospel, and now my hopes are realized, and I have read your letters over and over, and my heart has been made glad, though I have been afraid too that you are deceived in me, that there can be no good in poor sinful me, and I often cry, Lord decide the doubtful case.

When I received one of your letters I was feeling so lifeless and cold and sinful, and as I read it I felt my heart like wax before the fire melt into love and strong desire, and oh how I did enjoy reading your experience. Methinks that you should have no need to doubt, seeing you can look back on such a calling, you can indeed make your calling and election sure. But I know dear brother you cannot always feel so; it would not do, for then you could not sympathize with the weaklings of the flock, such as I hope I am, for if I am one at all I feel I am the smallest, weakest and most worthless of all, but the poet says,

"Those feeble desires,
Those wishes so weak,
He Jesus inspires,
And bids you still seek."

I know I do desire to know him, to love him, and to be more like him, and I did feel as that dear man of God Elder P. G. Lester opened up the scriptures my heart did burn within me. I have some interest in this matter, and how I did wish to speak to that dear people, but I felt that I could not. I thought I should not be able to utter a word, and oh I hope that after all I am not deceiving them; yet I know I told them the truth, what I did tell in my poor way. But I have thought many times since after all if they knew me would they have decided as they did. But I felt after leaving the meeting house such a quiet peaceful feeling, and I felt although doubts kept showing themselves that all was right, and the next morning before rising these words came so sweetly to my soul, "I the Lord am he that brought thee out of the land of Egypt, and out of the land of bondage." I am willing to be judged by God's people, and my prayer to God is "Search me and know my thoughts, and see if there be any wicked way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting." Your sister in hope of eternal life.

DEAR BROTHER IN HOPE:—As I have a little time at my disposal I will try to pen you a few lines, though I am afraid it will be a poor scribble at best. As I read over the beautiful letters you have sent me and others, I feel ashamed to attempt to write you, yet feel bound to do my best, hoping that you will again favour me, though feeling still unworthy: and in fact more unworthy than ever. As I look back to the time when first you wrote me, I find I have made poor progress. Oh what a poor stumbling creature I am. If it were not that I hear others complaining of the same thing I sometimes think I should sink in despair. How it does seem to cheer one at times to feel that those that we feel are without doubt the Lords's dear people have been in just the same places as we have. But oh dear brother, I often fear that after all I am not one of these; yet his love in time past forbids me to think he'll leave me at last in trouble to sink. For surely in this I am not deceived. It could be no other than his mighty love that has prevailed to lift my poor soul above earth and earthly things at times. Oh what a blessed time I experienced in Erfrid a year ago last June. I seemed to be carried out of myself, and seemed to feast on the precious things of the gospel, so that I was constrained to the church to tell my little story. But oh how different my feelings at the next meeting, at the time of my baptism. Never had I felt the weight of my sins as I did at that time. The time that I had looked forward to with joy, oh it was dreadful, and felt that I was adding to my sin a thousand fold in daring to make a profession before men. I felt like one walking in the dark. Oh I cannot describe how I felt, and I think at the communion table I felt even worse. I even thought my heart would burst. What a strange thing this, was it not dear brother? Were any of the Lord's people baptized while in such a condition? But I hope the Lord led dear old Elder Biggs to speak a word of comfort to my poor soul, so that the cloud gradually lifted and moved away.

Oh may the Lord deliver us out of all trouble. Hoping yourself and family are well, I will close with love, from your unworthy sister.

Remarks.

Our English brethren have } Sunday Schools in which only the bible is taught and expounded by } spiritual minded people, setting forth the special atonement of Christ and the doctrine that we hold.

The objections we have to the American system of Sunday Schools are, among other things, that they do not expound the bible correctly, but teach falsehoods, and that they assume that such schools are a necessary adjunct of the church, whereas the bible authorizes no such idea.

P. D. G.

MUCH BELOVED BROTHER AND SISTER MEWBORN:—My love to you and all the dear loved ones at Mewborn's Church. My love for you all and for that church is best known unto the Lord. Many times have I longed and desired to be with you at the table of the Lord in remembrance of his command in obedience to our Lord and master. Wash one anothers feet. Is there any reason why we should not wash feet that can be found in the lids of the bible? Is there any why we should wash feet? Yes many. One is because we should not move the ancient landmark. No man shall move his stakes. We may be guilty of moving all. We are not to follow the world, for ye are not of the world. Therefore fear not little flock. Ye poor in spirit. Then show your faith by your works. Submit yourselves to God and wash one anothers feet and pray for me. Brother Mewborn, it has been on my mind for some time to write something of the past. I love to think of old times, old people and old customs. I love to think of Jesus walking and sitting on the well talking with the woman. She said he told her all things whatsoever she did.

I love to read the old sermons that Brother Gold publishes in the LANDMARK. I love to think of the pastor of your church, which was your dear father. I love to think of the first time and the last that I ever heard him. It has been about twenty five years ago. He was a great man. He was looked upon by a great many as looking into the future. And I with all my soul desired to see and hear him. I went down to his church (Mewborn's) took my seat as near the stand as I could not to get in the way. He came in, walked up into the stand, looked very straight at me which I could very easily account for, as he had never seen my face in that house before. He sat down, opened and looked in his book a few minutes, then rose and took the stand and cast his eye at me again which made me feel so little and fearful that I had taken too much liberty. For I should have taken a seat at the back of the house instead of a seat next to the members and was almost sorry that I was there. But my sorrow was turned into joy, and I went home rejoicing, and I have always wanted to show my friends what the Lord had done for me that day through and by the preaching of his faithful servant your father, for he preached not himself but Christ Jesus the Lord. His text I do not remember. But in his discourse he spoke of the degrees in heaven if there be any, as some one had desired his views he would give such as he had. But I can give you only a few hints of what he said. But said he the kingdom of heaven is composed of little children. Let out all the cups said he, and take of all sizes from the least to the greatest, and fill them full and the least cup on the table is full, it wants no more, it needs no more, it is just as full as the largest. And so it is with the saints in glory. All are full of the love and grace of God. The very least saint is just as happy as the greatest. Not the least, not the greatest, but all as one. Then let none strive to be the greatest. But be ye all as one as becometh the children of God. Then my little hope revived, and I went home hoping and praying the Lord that I might be one of the least. I felt little, poor and needy, and unworthy to be called one of the least. Then I love to feel little. Jesus blessed little children and of such is the kingdom of heaven. Then why be great, why go to the house of feasting when it is better to go the house of mourning. But as I have written some few things in remembrance of dear old Brother Mewborn, I will also write a few more of his works and labors that I remember that may not be remembered by many in this day. Then I remember the last sermon that he ever preached at our church (Nahunta). It was near the close of the war, perhaps some time in the last year of the war. He preached his farewell sermon that day. He told us that day that it was the last time that he should stand in that pulpit. And so it was. His text I do yet remember. It was, "And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free. If the son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed." Said he, I should be glad to know if there is one in the house that will remember this day and this text when I am gone. For I say unto you all, this is the last time you will ever see my face in this stand. He preached long and admonished the church and prayed for them, and bid them adieu. And a long farewell it has been. Oh the sorrow that was seen and felt by all that were in that house, and it has been long remembered by me. I prayed to the Lord that I may never forget that text or that day of sorrow of some because he said we should see his face no more in that stand. And in remembrance of him and his request I write these things that his name may live though he is gone. And the summons will soon come for me as it did for him, and it will be too late for me to write for him which is my desire to do before I go hence to the unknown land, and I do think a remembrance should be kept of all the dear old pastors of every church for the love and respect shown of the Lord. But first let us show our love for them by our works and by our deeds of charity which is the love of God. Dear brethren and sisters, are the pastors of our churches provided for as well as we are ourselves? Shall the pastors and editors feed the flock and not eat themselves, and not provide for them.

But what I have said of this dear and faithful servant of the Lord is only a small sketch of him. It seems that the inspiration of the Almighty hand gave him the understanding of many things. He predicted the coming of the late war. He also predicted the coming of a greater war than ever has come since the coming of Christ that was yet to come and also of the Millennium.

Some of us have lived to see some of his predictions come to pass. His fame went out in the land and he was called to go to the army to preach for them. But he wrote to them his health would not admit of his going, and moreover he was soon going to leave this world and go to the world of spirits, that his heavenly Father was soon going to call him and he must be ready to go. And so he could not go to them, but he would pray the Lord for them. This I think was sometime in the date of 1864. How long he lived after this I do not know, but not long. He died the same year April 29th 1864. Though brother Mewborn this is best known to others that watched over him and saw him pass through the valley and shadow of death.

Some may wonder why I should write thus. The reason is best known to myself and heavenly Father.

Old brother Parrott Mewborn was a man, excellent, faithful, and I have been constrained in my own mind for a long time to say something in remembrance of him, but the half can never be told, and so I leave him with the Lord.

PIERCY HAM.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—I wish to say to the brethren through the LAND-MARK that we now have a deed for a lot in Morhead City for the purpose of building a Primitive Baptist Meeting House, and there are now four brethren and five sisters living in the place with a probability of more at an early day. Now we want to build a meeting house in which to worship. At this time we have to use the dwelling houses of the brethren for the preaching, conference and all, and they are generally small and not sufficient to accommodate the people who want to hear us preach. If any brother, sister or friend feels a willingness to forward anything to help us to build a house of worship, it will be received with thanks. If our churches would take hold of this matter and speak of it to the brethren I think they might help us some.

Money sent for that purpose can be sent to my address and I will see that it is justly applied.

I will say to the brethren generally that my health is much better. Yours affectionately.

L. H. HARDY.

Newport, N. C.

Remarks.

I think help given for the above purpose would be well directed.

P. D. G.

BROTHER GOLD:—Your visit to Alleghany Co. has been a great feast to the poor old persecuted Primitive Baptists that will long be remembered, and I feel that the more the true ministers travel and preach the closer God's people will be drawn together, and the great anti Christian powers become weaker. I feel there is a loud call to God's servants to cry aloud and spare not, for we know there is no cause like the cause of Christ. I want to love my brethren and sisters better than I do, but I do not want to love them better than I do the cause of Christ.

I must close as time is come to start to preaching. Give my love to all inquiring friends, if any, and especially to sister Winstead and her kind husband. I have often thought of him. Yours in hope of eternal life.

LOOKING AFTER OUR ESTATE.

Well dear John, I am afraid that you will think me remiss, as I have been so slow to send you a further account of my condition; but I have been waiting until I could give you something conclusive; so that I am able to inform you that, after the informal adjournment of the court of which I wrote you and the dispersion of its officers &c. that all of us who were here as pilgrims in search of our claims in the Holyland, having been forsaken by our lawyers in consequence of the fact that our money had failed, were exposed to the greatest trials and hardships, but about a week ago there came a young looking man along the road who had a meek and benevolent looking countenance, and halted on the road just over against us. He was going towards where we had come from but did not travel the same road. The road he traveled was carefully laid out and followed the mountain all the way, and it was strait and narrow. He however stopped when he came opposite us and called out aloud, "Come unto me all ye that labour, and are heavy laden and I will give you rest." But we had been so badly deceived and maltreated that we hesitated. So He called again and said, "Ho every one that thirsts, come to me." At this call as well as I can remember all my comrades left me, and I was alone. I would have gone but something said "my name is legion." I had staid in the tombs and had my dwelling among the dead, had cut myself with stones, and too, just at this moment had been able to see what I had not known before, that I was naked, absolutely nude! I not only was wanting in a will to go, but really was ashamed to start. About this time I observed my comrades that I imagined had reached the road of the stranger, were all standing in a group just a short distance from me, and they too were naked. I broke the silence, as I exclaimed at the top of my voice, I adjure thee torment us not before the time. Upon this the stranger advanced towards us and having come up to us said, "Come out of them." Immediately, I felt a sensation of pain such as I cannot describe. I was in agony and fear took hold of me. Alas, said I, this, this is surely death. I recovered a little from my first paroxysm, and found myself and companions prostrate at the feet of the stranger. I tried to implore his mercies but could not look upon him for his countenance had become brighter than the sun, and when I attempted to approach nearer to him he said, "It is hard for thee to kick against the pricks." But in a short time after this he said softly to us "Arise, let us go hence." At this we all received strength and arose, but could not see, but were led by him, and as he proceeded gently and slowly with us, he said "I will bring the blind by a way that they have not known," and thus he led us all that day. Night coming on we halted at a place and rested for awhile, but very soon we were up and going again, and we had great trouble to proceed, as the many wounds and bruises upon us were sore and smarting and a most loathsome stench arose from their putrefaction, and thus we began to complain, "My wounds stink and are corrupt on account of my foolishness." At this complaint he seemed not to take the least offense but said, "For the Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." Upon this he said, "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom God." I thought at once how strange; Alas that I should ever have started out to look for this kingdom with nothing but natural eyes. Then said our leader again, "The natural man receiveth not the things of the spirit, neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." Oh said I, what a delusion to have listened to and believed in the teaching of natural men. But said our leader "they are of the world, therefore the world heareth them." Then said I what shall we do! He answered, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." But said I how can these things be? He said, 'God hath from the beginning chosen you unto salvation, through sanctification of the spirit and belief of the truth.' Then he added, 'Except he be born of water and of the spirit he cannot enter the kingdom of God,' and so soon as he had thus said, immediately we felt ourselves entering a stream of water. First it was very shallow only reaching our ankles, but at length it became a flowing river, and we were laving in its refreshing waters, and our leader began to say, "There is a river the streams whereof shall make glad the City of God." Upon which we all began to shout and sing, "The Lord is my shepherd I shall not want," and as these strains were echoing, our wounds were all healed, and our flesh became as the flesh of little children, and our leader exclaimed, "And he showed me a pure river of water of life." As these words fell from his lips our eyes were opened and we saw him and believed. Then he led us to the banqueting house, and he added, "Bring forth the best robe and put it on him and put a ring upon his hand, and shoes on his feet." And bring hither the fatted calf and kill it and let us eat and be merry. And so dear John we are now at the home of the King and he has proclaimed us to be his heirs, and thus joint heirs with his Son, Jesus Christ our Lord. All this honor, vast inheritance, wealth and glory came to us, not for nor in any consideration of any title held by us or our ancestor; for I have learned from the statue book of the kingdom, as well also as from the king himself, that our ancestor died insolvent, and worst of all a condemned culprit.

He it seems was allowed to live upon a sort of quit rent system, and at the mercy of the King of Canaan, but was forced to confess judgment in open court, and died unable to pay one farthing. In consequence of which dear John, both you and I and all of our fathers' family are doomed to eternal beggary, and death at last in consequence of our relationship to our father. For by one man sin entered the world, so death hath passed upon all men for that all have sinned. So you see how foolish we were to listen to our lawyer and to hope for Canaan. But it was the best we knew, and our lawyer was as ignorant as we. "So if the blind lead the blind then both shall fall into the ditch."

I will close for this time, and will write you again soon. My highest regard to all concerned. Your happy brother, DAVID.

ELDER P. D. GOLD, DEAR BROTHER,—My mind has been drawn with peculiar interest to the Articles. in the 15th, No. of September LANDMARK, and while reading the editorial

THE SIMPLICITY OF CHRIST.

I comprehended more fully than ever before. Christ as the essential gospel was to me indeed the glad tidings of great joy. But O I know so little, yet the little is far, very far above what I deserve, and have learned this little by revelation, through an experience led in a way I knew not. I tho't I knew the way to joys eternal, but it was the way to boasting, pharasaical blasphemy, the popular religion of this the nineteenth century. Jesus is the Saviour of his people, sheep, or bride, his body the church. This simplicity is recorded by prophets and apostles, the writers of the Old and New Testaments "I am the Lord and beside me there is no Saviour," Isa. 43: 23.

The Apostle to Titus 1: 3, "According to the commandment of God our Saviour, hath in due time manifested his word through preaching." Yes the apostle preached his word committed unto him, as the other disciples and evangelists did, and every one who has his word committed unto him does this day, no others do or can preach the simplicity of the gospel. Yes, if anything is added as you dear brother truly say of water its simplicity is destroyed; also if any of the elements or ingredients of water be taken from it it is no longer water. We are told that hydrogen, a gas, one of the elements of water can be separated and burnt, and there seems to be many calling themselves preachers who are engaged in separating the doctrine from the gospel, or a part of the doctrine, and many more adding creature merit and creature works to what they preach for gospel. These who separate the doctrine from the gospel have no more gospel left than they would have water if the hydrogen was taken from it, and those who add creature works have only a dirty cesspool of filth left.

The greatest blessing ever given is the knowledge of Christ, "Whom to know is life eternal." The carnal mind being enmity against God it behooves us to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace, for if we follow the way that seemeth right unto a man we will most surely find death and lose the simplicity of Christ. The simplicity of the gospel will end in a life of joy, but if it be destroyed death ensues. Yours in bonds of love,
T. H. SCOTT.

BROTHER GOLD,—Once more I write you a few lines for publication.

Truly I desire not to write anything to offend anyone, unless the truth shall offend, for in these last days the truth is evil spoken of by its enemies. My mind much of late has been impressed once more in my declining years to communicate to the brethren and all lovers of the truth, as I have not the privilege of meeting them face to face, and to talk of Jesus, and his power, his mercy and his goodness. If we be one in Spirit why cannot we talk about what great things the Lord has done for us whereof we are glad. Nothing have we to claim on our part. Although separated, both far and near, we love the same Lord. What a blessed hope is ours which hope is Christ both sure and steadfast, as an anchor to the soul. Oft'times in perils and snares cast down but not destroyed, persecuted but not forsaken. Our hope is yet the same, Christ and him alone in every kind of trouble.

Dear brethren let me, as a poor unworthy mortal, admonish you to be firm 'earnestly contending for the faith once delivered to the saints.' Consider how great is that faith, the gift of God, what a gift that man cannot bestow, and it is so great. Man can take our worldly substance, cause us trouble of mind, but that free gift cannot be taken by wicked men. Blessed hope. His grace is sufficient, how free without money and without price. So dear brethren look to the Rock from whence you are hewn. There is a woe unto them that join house to house and field to field. The common people heard his word gladly when on earth, so to this day. Now can we not have common houses to worship God in spirit and in truth, and not say we are not able to build, we must have free houses. Consider what is our faith. How can two walk together unless they are agreed. Consider if we are built upon the foundation of the Apostles and their doctrine, not doctrines, but Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone, of whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto a holy temple in the Lord. Now we believe the foundation of God stands sure.

The grace of God is free without money and without price. The Church is built by Christ, for he said thou art Peter and upon this Rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it, showing Peter was nothing but a man. If any bring any other gospel than already has been preached let him be accursed. If our gospel be hid it is hid to them that are lost, whose minds the god of this world has blinded, lest the glorious gospel should shine in their heart. We believe that unto us that are saved it is "Christ the power of God, not of works lest we should boast. Now we have such a great High Priest and need no money, no help from man, the gold is his, the silver is his and the cattle upon a thousand hills are his, for if he were hungry he would not tell us. What a God we have to serve and worship. He needs no help. We are the poor sinful worms of the dust.

My desire is for the Lord to have mercy, and the voice of the turtle to be heard once more in our land. O then we could hear poor sinners telling of the good news of life and salvation, that they had found Jesus of Nazareth of whom Moses and the prophets spake, precious to their souls. Then there would be no mocking of the poor old servants of God when traveling to try to speak in that great name wherever their captain bids them go. What a reformation there would be. There would be no begging money to send the gospel to the heathen, they then could see the heathen at home, and instead of mockery and derision there would be love. If I have wronged any man or taken anything by false accusation I restore four-fold. Oh how they would love to talk about Jesus, about God's elect, and not persecute the servants of God. Oh how they would love the truth the eyes of their understanding being open, seeing the grace of God is without money and without price, without the aid of man, the aid of Seminaries or boards of men, no more sending preachers by men.

I will now say to the brethren, I hope what I have written will not give any offense. I can speak for myself and not for another. Forty one years ago, the 5th morning in July 1847, and from that day I have had a hope that I was changed by the power of God. I felt that love I have oft'times tried to tell but never told it as I felt, it is so unspeakable and full of glory. From then until now all institutions of men are vain with me. My hope is Christ and him alone.

I was brought up in the Sunday School from my seventh to my sixteenth year in all formality. In an instant it seemed to me I had made a mockery of the blessed Lord Jesus, and there was no mercy for me, such a sinner as I was. At the very time all hope was gone, no mercy for me, I was lost forever to be hurled into hell with all the nations that forget God; but the fifth morning in July 1847, I hope I felt the glory of God, the manifestation of that love unspeakable and full of glory. Then I saw my condition, and how helpless I was; not unto my poor sinful self but unto God be all the glory. Now how can I believe in false churches, institutions of men.

If you believe in God you also believe in Jesus, "For in my Father's house are many mansions. I go to prepare a place for you." Consider who has prepared a place for us, if we are what we hope. O the blessed Jesus is seated at the right hand of the Father to make intercession for us, his people, to grant repentance unto Israel and the remission of sins. So dear brethren let us do the best we can, ever looking to Jesus the Author and the finisher of the christian faith. We have nothing to boast of but Jesus and him crucified, how poor we are but yet how rich, for if Christ and God be for us who can be against us? O dear brethren, if we be dead and our life hid with Christ in God, who is our life when he shall appear then we shall also appear with him in glory. Lord it is enough to follow the meek and lowly Lamb, have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness but rather reprove them. Teach your children that whoever they go to hear speak behave themselves, observe the Sabbath and read their Bibles. It will tell you to shun the path of wicked men, their steps lead down to hell.

Oh no the bride don't teach them to go to hear the servant of God to make diversion and all manner of sport. It does teach that when the servants of God meet it is to worship in spirit and in truth.

I did earnestly think I was doing right when I had my prayer-book, now I am accused of prejudice, but O no, how can I go with that I don't believe? Not all the formality of men nor all the prayer-books can ever change one soul, all the works of men can never advance the Redeemer's kingdom. That was made plain to me in my 27th year. Then my feelings were led to join the poor old despised Baptists, not for popularity, but it was my mind. I knew if I joined the Baptists I would be hated, but I was willing to bear the scoffs and frowns of the world for the sake of Jesus. My brethren how plain it was to me that all the prayers I ever learnt were formality of man. Prayer is the desire of the heart. Children go to the church with luxuries of life to sell to disturb the place of worship, but Jesus overthrew the money-changers' tables that sold doves in the temple. They should not make his Father's house one of merchandise. So much as we see the evil day approaching what manner of persons ought we to be. Oft'times I think that in our conversation we ought to "let our light so shine that others may see our good works and glorify our Father which is in heaven." Then again there is nothing good I can do, it is of the Lord. So "All thy righteousness is of me," saith the Lord.

Brother Gold, I hope you will visit us again and preach at our church. We are but few in number. I often think of your presence at our Association at Spoon Creek, when there were contentions.

Study—What for? To find how to get the advantage of another? No, study to do right—Study to show that you are approved of God—that you are an honest man. Study to become useful in your day and generation. If people would study as earnestly to benefit mankind as they often do to harm them how much better all would be.

REQUEST.

Friend H. A. Wilson requests my mind on the following scripture.

"And through covetousness shall they with feigned words make merchandise of you; whose judgment now of a long time lingereth not, and their damnation slumbereth not." 2 Pet. 2: 3.

This is solemn language of Peter. He tells us that there were false Prophets among the people of old, that is among the people of God or among the Jews. A false prophet is one that pretends to foretell events, or to tell beforehand what is to come, but the Lord has not sent him and he cannot foretell the truth, or truly prophesy, for it is impossible for one to truly prophesy unless he is moved by the Holy Ghost to speak the truth. But even as there were false prophets among the people of God in olden times, so shall there be false teachers among you in these days. Teachers in the bible sense of that word are expounders of that word of prophecy. In the olden time prophets foretold events, in the present time teachers declare the true meaning of what has already been written. Of course then false teachers pervert the right way of the Lord, and mislead the people, and do far more damage than if they engaged in open professed wickedness. A drunkard or gambler, or other riotous man that makes no pretension to religion, does not near the amount of wickedness that a false teacher does who corrupts the word of God.

As no one could possibly be a true prophet unless God called him to prophesy, so no man can possibly be a teacher of good things in the kingdom of God unless the Lord calls him to teach. All other teachers are false or not of God.

But what harm will a false teacher do? Can not the people see that such are false and avoid them? What does Peter say, He says, "And many shall follow their pernicious ways; by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of." Many people shall follow these false teachers, or be led away by them. It is not a difficult matter to mislead people and corrupt their minds. People are easily beguiled.

What is the controlling motive of these false teachers? It is to make money supposing that gain is godliness. "Through covetousness shall they with feigned words make merchandise of you." The love of money is the root of all evil. In all conditions of life money plays its part. We see the love of money in all kinds of worldly business. Especially is it true among preachers and teachers of what is called religion who under cover of feigned words, wherein preachers profess great love for souls, and thus profess great love of men, but really influenced by the love of money they make merchandise of souls or of men. The greater number they get into their denominations the greater income of money. Each one they get into their number is so much stock in their trade, or is their merchandise.

Putting up the plea that if they had so much money they could save so many souls they thus deny the Lord that bought them. It is as much as to say the Lord did not buy them, but money can do that. Thus through covetousness they deceive the simple by good words and fair speeches. They preach for money. Stop their salaries or the money they get or hope to get, and their preaching would stop.

Is this wickedness before God? Peter says, "The judgment of these false teachers now of a long time lingereth not, and their damnation slumbereth not." So that God condemns it and has of old condemned such things. From the beginning he has condemned and punished sin.

If God spared not the angels that sinned—angels, characters of exalted station, yet he spared not them, but delivered them into chains of darkness to be reserved unto judgment; and spared not the old world but saved Noah; if he turned the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah unto ashes, but saving just Lot—it shows that the Lord saves the righteous and also punishes the wicked; or he knows how to save the godly out of temptation, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished. What a mark of destruction is fastened on that man who loves the way of Balaam, and whose heart is exercised with covetous practices. No surer omen of destruction could rest on one than to see him perverting the right way of the Lord for gain or money, thus beguiling unstable souls and dealing deceitfully in the word of the Lord. From of old the just condemnation of God rests on such characters as these.

CAN A CHURCH DO WRONG?

The Papists say the church is infallible, and therefore as a church, or in her official character, cannot do wrong. In 1870 the Latin Ecumenical Council also declared that the pope himself, as a pope in his clerical or official character, is infallible and therefore cannot do wrong. How many popes there are.

You frequently hear men talk and often see them act as though they cannot do wrong. The more intolerant and ungodly a man the more assumptive he often is, acting on the idea that he can not be mistaken or do wrong. At times you may see a church member acting as though he could not do wrong.

Does a true church of Christ ever do wrong? If one individual christian may do wrong why may not two or a dozen, or a church do wrong? Christians are men and women, descendants of Adam, saved by grace. They are not free from sin and are still in the flesh.

What does the word of God say about that matter? Was anything wrong with the church at Corinth when Paul told them they were carnal, and that they were guilty of many disorders? Were the churches of Galatia wrong when rebuked as they were by Paul who said to them, "O foolish Galatians, who hath bewitched you?" How was it with the seven churches of Asia? Scarcely one of them was without fault.

Man is a strange and contradictory character. When he asserts he is right and without fault he is often in the greatest of all blunders, then he is committing the most outrageous wrong. When one is bitterly condemning himself then he is justified of God. The Publican's language was, God be merciful to me a sinner. The Pharisee's language was that of self-praise and condemnation of the Publican, but he was justified and the Pharisee was not. The thief who owned he was justly punished heard words of salvation, while the other heard them not.

Man is usually more concerned about the conduct of others than he is about his own conduct. Busy-bodies in other men's matters are those that find fault of others, while now and then one has so much to do at his own house, or sees so much wrong in himself, that he is busy at home, and he is the wise man. A church may do wrong, and when it does it should repent of it.

Mercy is the great thing needed. When we are humble we are glad that one owns his wrong and confesses his faults; and then we freely forgive him.

Oh how we all need mercy and forgiveness, and what pity we should show to one another.

P. D. G.

Brother John H. Ball requests my view of John 3 : 16 ; 17.

"For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.

For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world ; but that the world through him might be saved."

These words were used by Jesus in answer to the question of Nicodemus, "How can a man be born when he is old ?" or on the subject of being born again. It is as much as to say that the regeneration, or being born again, is accomplished in the death and resurrection of Jesus as the head and life of his people, and that they are begotten again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, which is manifest in and through the belief of the truth, "for he that believeth is passed from death unto life, and shall never come into condemnation."

It is the nature of Israel to sin against Christ. He is typified in the wilderness by the manna which the people loathed and murmured against. The Lord sent fiery serpents among them that bit many of them. Much people died of their bite. In their distress they cried unto Moses. God commanded Moses to make a fiery serpent and lift it up in the camp and all bitten ones that looked at this were healed.

Jesus refers to this as typical of himself. We may then gather that the sin of Israel was against the Lord, and therefore the Lord is revealed in the type of the brazen serpent as that in the form of a serpent, yet without poison or death, but having the power of life and healing the bitten, which saves believers.

It is God then that sends salvation, that so loved the world that he gave his only Son that whosoever believeth on him should not perish but have everlasting life.

The serpent of brass made and lifted up was not to condemn, nor to kill, but to save life. This is the application Jesus here makes of the type. We know that type was in mercy to Israel. It did not cause the death of any. If any one failed to look to it and live that serpent of brass was not the cause of his death. No one could truly say that the brazen serpent bit any one, or caused his death, or that it was lifted up to aggravate his case, nor to increase his condemnation. If any one bitten did not look to it that would only show the power of disease and death he was already under. We do not know that any one bitten did not look to the brazen serpent : but if such was the case his death could in no sense be attributed to the brazen serpent.

Now Jesus thus applying this said, "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life."

Some people talk as though the coming of Jesus is the cause of the condemnation of unbelievers, but the type does not teach it, nor do his own words teach it. God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved. In the gospel the middle wall of partition excluding the Gentiles from gospel blessings is destroyed, and everywhere to the ends of the earth the gospel is preached to Gentiles as well as to the Jews, so that there is no difference between Jews and Gentiles, but the same God is rich unto all that call upon him. The word world in the text embraces this idea, showing that as the lifting up of the serpent in the wilderness was to heal all bitten ones that looked, so Jesus is lifted up that he may draw all men unto him everywhere. For it shall come to pass that whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved.

Jesus is then not sent into the world to condemn any one at all. If any do not believe on him it only proves that such are condemned already because it shows that such love darkness rather than light because their deeds are evil. It is the love of sin and darkness, and the hatred of light and truth that keeps men from coming to Christ.

Will any then that hate sin be kept away from him? Will any who hate darkness and love light be kept away from Jesus? Why should any who were bitten and threatened with death refuse to look to the serpent Moses lifted up? It is not at all reasonable to suppose that such would be the case. Can you see that any when Jesus was manifest in the flesh refused to call on him who felt their distress and also believed that he was the Christ. Observe that it was necessary that people should believe on Jesus or they would not call on him or receive any healing from him. All that feel they are sinners indeed are thus sensible of their need of a Saviour, and when they believe that Jesus is the Christ they have the witness of salvation. Jesus is himself salvation. To believe on him is to see this. To believe on him is the same as receiving of his fulness.

The love of God is such that he sent his Son in that love. In this way his love is manifest. This is the measure of his love. Then what hinders the salvation of any soul that truly looks to Jesus? If one has eyes or sight to see and believe in Jesus as the Lamb of God that soul looks to Jesus even as the ends of the earth or from the ends of the earth and is saved. There is that in Jesus lifted up that draws with saving, blessed, irresistible power such souls as see and feel that they are perishing.

This issue opens Volume 22. of the LANDMARK. This writer has been conducting the paper about 17 years. During which time acquaintance has been made personally or by correspondence with thousands of brethren and friends, many of these have gone to their eternal home. While now and then the writer has been pretty sharply criticized, and perhaps justly, the far greater proportion of the readers and writers have exercised surprising kindness towards him. For it appears to me that my work has been done with much imperfection. Our people love each other, or they would not bear with me as they do.

This paper aims and hopes by the grace of God to contend for the ancient Landmark as heretofore. None of the stakes of Zion shall ever be removed, nor shall any of her cords be loosed.

May the wisdom of God guide us, and the grace of God rest on us still as of old, and may grace, mercy and peace be bestowed upon the Israel of God.

Obituary.

ELDER WM. HUBBARD.

By the request of my mother and many friends, I send you the obituary of my father, Elder William Hubbard, and hope you will publish it for the benefit of many friends and relatives.

Father was born in S. C. the 22nd of April, 1809, and departed this life Oct. 23d, 1884. His disease was Paralysis and Dropsy. He was in very feeble health for two years before he was confined to his bed. He was stricken with Paralysis in June 1884 and was speechless for several days, but with the help of a good physician he recovered enough to talk so as to be understood, and then Dropsy of the bowels set in which brought him low again. He was tapped four times, and four gallons of water were taken each time. He lingered two weeks after he was tapped the fourth time. I never saw or heard of any one that bore afflictions with so much patience. He said from the first he would never get well, and did not care. He was perfectly resigned to the will of God. He said he was just waiting his maker's time. He said a few days before he was taken down that his time was short, and he would write out his experience and call to the ministry and commenced, but did not quite finish it. I will give you a part of it below. He was married to Miss Margaret Morgan in 1829, and after her death was married to Sarah A. Whittier in July 1833. He was baptized in 1831, and soon after was ordained to the ministry at Liberty church, Lumkin co, Ga. He had been preaching 53 years. He never let anything keep him from his appointments that could be helped, I have known him to go through cold and heat many times. He went to his meeting as long as he was able to ride which was just four months before his death. His mind was perfectly clear to the last, and was visited often by his brethren and enjoyed their company so much. He was a kind, indulgent husband and father.

His youngest son preceeded him to the grave three years and myself and brother are left behind. Father and mother were living with me at the time of his death and mother is still with me, and is quite feeble, as she has been afflicted for several years with a cough. I have sent his experience to Brother Respass but have never seen it in print. I am as ever your unworthy sister,

SALLIE J. BUCKHALTS.

S. L. MOORE.

Our beloved brother S. L. Moore departed this life August 7th, 1888, in the 45th year of his age. His disease was Neuralgia and the breaking down of the nervous system. His suffering was great for several yeats previous to his death: so much so that six years previous to his death he became perfectly blind. He was nursed by an affectionate wife and sister. They both staid with him night and day. We could not sleep such gloomy days and dreary nights. May I never again behold or see a dear friend suffer so severely and so long knowing that death was all that would relieve him. Before he died he

—He was a kind husband, and in his long six years of sickness and blindness he was meek and humble. He never made an open profession of religion but he had a hope in Jesus, but said it was too little to go to the church with. He had had a little hope for about twelve years. I believe he possessed true christian charity, in my opinion the greatest christian grace bestowed upon poor mortals. He spoke to me once about baptism and said he wished he was fit to be baptized. I told him when he was not worthy Christ was and that was all that was worthy. But he said if his hope was large enough he would be baptized. Just before he died he said God is good and Christ is good, and let them have me. He left an affectionate wife and mother and brothers and sisters to mourn his loss, but our loss is his eternal gain.

But friends were there who stood and watched his fleeting breath.

His weeping wife wept over his couch,
And prayed O God of love Relieve his aching head from pain, Receive his soul above.

BROOKSIE HAMPTON.

Our dear little Brooksie died about 3 o'clock, on the morning of the 4th of June 1888 of cancer of the tonsil.

On the 20th of Oct. 1887, our little daughter (Lelia) was taken sick with diphtheria, and while our physician was examining the throats of the rest of our dear little ones, preparatory to sending them from home, thus hoping they would escape the ravages of so dreadful a disease, he discovered on the right tonsil what he supposed to be a small insignificant ulcer, about one half the size of a grain of corn. This supposed ulcer remained about one thing for some weeks, when suddenly it commenced to grow very rapidly. We had it examined by different physicians at home, all of whom pronounced it simply hypertrophy or enlargement of the tonsil, which they said could be relieved very easily. I decided to take him to Dr. McGuire of Richmond, Va.

On the night of the first of February

1888, (which was the night before I started for Richmond) while sitting around my fire-side, it came to me, just as if it had been spoken in so many words, "This is the last time that you and your little family will thus be permitted to sit together around this fireside." This I then believed and still believe, was a presentment given by him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will, thus making known to me that e'er long death would again visit our home and claim as its victim one of the noblest subjects of God's creation.

Yes, one though a child in years, yet almost a man in intellect, a child that never met a stranger who failed immediately to become acquainted with him, to become very deeply interested in him, and a child whom none knew but to love, tho' young in years he was morally the best child I ever knew, and would scorn dissipation of every character, and his reasoning upon such was almost like that of a man, a child whom we were delighted to claim as ours, and to his death there had scarcely been a single act of his life of which we were not proud, and best of all we have abundant evidence that he strongly believed in the existence of a Saviour, and that when the summons of death came his gentle spirit was borne from our hearts and home to that happy land above from whence no traveler returns.

I kept concealed from my wife the revelation, if revelation at all, that I had on the night before. I started with my little son to Richmond, knowing as I did that it would greatly add to her troubles. We arrived in Richmond on the morning of the 3rd, of February, and with an aching heart I took him to Dr. McGuire for examination, and after the Doctor had finished his examination he turned to me and said with a countenance mingled with pity and distress—Mr. Hampton, it gives me pain to tell you what I think of your child, still I know no deception, and must use the utmost candor. I think it a hopeless case. In my opinion this is a cancer, and if so all the Doctors in the world can't save him, and I can never think of putting a knife in that tonsil, knowing as I do that it will only tend to aggravate the disease, and cause the death of your child sooner than to allow the disease its natural course.

Several weeks before his death his breathing became more difficult, still with that patience that I have never seen in any other person he was enabled to bear up under his affliction until the gate was opened for him to pass over Jordan and enter into that happy land.

For several weeks before his death he kept the Bible and Hymn book upon his bed, and his happiest moments appeared to be while hearing the Scriptures read or Spiritual hymns, often selecting the hymn, and would join in singing as best he could. A short while before his death he told the girl that waited in the house, that he sometimes felt while we were singing like he could hardly stay on the bed.

At another time Elders Taylor, Monk and Blalock came to see him. Elder Taylor said that he felt impressed to pray for him, and kneeling beside his bed he prayed to that God who is too merciful to afflict, only for good and too wise to err, to remove, if it was his holy will, this dreadful disease from our child, and restore him to health again, to enable him to bear up under his remaining afflictions; and that when death should come that he might be translated to that beautiful world where there is no sorrow, no pain and no parting. The next morning he asked the girl again if she heard the preacher praying to God for him. A few days before his death he asked me to sing, "Home, Sweet Home," for him.

I have many times been weeping over him and when he discovered it he would reach out his little arms and fold them around my neck and beg me not to weep, often saying "Papa I am so sorry for you, I am not suffering one bit.

Having been told by eminent physicians that his death would be an awful one, that is to say, he would die hard, I have seen him imagining of course, hundreds of times, always suffering the most agonizing pain, and calling, or trying to call upon me for help, and if ever my heart desired or prayed for any one thing it was for that child to die easy, and thank God, when his time or mission in this world was finished, and his gentle spirit was summoned to the spirit world, he was sitting upon his bed leaning against his Uncle, when suddenly his little head dropped backward, and as I saw the death-like color play over his eyes I called to his mother, and said, he is gone, and without a single motion of the body, or limbs, or a twitch of the muscles, or a struggle of any kind to be seen by any one present, he quietly fell asleep and passed over the river and his gentle spirit returned to the God who gave it, and we believe without a single pain.

His stay on earth was 6 years, 10 months and nine days.

G. C. HAMPTON.

MRS. SARAH HOLLOMAN.

By request I send you this obituary notice of Mrs. Sarah Holloman, for publication if you see proper.

She was born on the 11th of September 1855, and was married to Nathan Holloman on the 14th of January 1876, with whom she lived in peaceable conjugal love until the 13th day of July 1888, when her spirit left its tenement of clay to dwell as we hope in that light of unalloyed spiritual love and union with Christ. She was not a member in any church but was a strong believer in the Primitive Baptists. Just before she died she told those present that she had heard the prettiest singing for the last five days that she ever heard.

A short time before she passed away she desired to get up and when her husband asked what she wanted, she said I want to go to my baby and he said lie still and let me bring it to you. She replied no, you cannot bring it to me I am going to it, (She spoke of one that died a few days before.) She had her right mind to the last.

She left a husband and five children, three boys and two girls, a mother, two brothers and two sisters and many friends behind to mourn their loss.

May the Lord bless the loved ones left behind.

D. A. MEWBORN.

OUR TREATMENT CURES DROPSY IN ITS VARIOUS FORMS.

Some may cry humbug, without knowing anything about it. Remember, it does not cost a cent to realize the merits of the remedy for yourself. In ten days the difficulty of breathing is relieved, the pulse made regular, the urinary organs made to discharge their full duty, sleep is restored, the swelling all—or nearly all—gone, the strength restored, and appetite made good. I am constantly curing cases of long standing—cases that have been tapped a number of times, and the patient declared unable to live a week.

Send for ten days' treatment, give full history of the case, age, sex, how long afflicted, how badly swollen and where, are bowels costive, have legs bursted, etc. Remember,

TEN DAYS' TREATMENT FURNISHED FREE.

A valuable discovery, outside of any medical book or published opinion. A vegetable preparation, entirely harmless. Removes all symptoms of Dropsy in ten days. Cures case pronounced by the best physicians hopeless. From the first dose the symptoms rapidly disappear, and in ten days at least two thirds of all the symptoms are removed. From 30 to 60 days effects a permanent cure.

Send for circular containing questions, testimonials, etc.

The Purpose of Zion's Landmark.

By the help of the Lord this paper will contend for the ancient Landmark, guided by its stakes of Truth, and strengthened by its chords of Love.

It hopes to reject all traditions and institutions of men, and regard only the Bible as the standard of truth.

It urges the people to search the Scriptures, and obey Jesus the king in the holy hill of Zion, keeping themselves unspotted from the world.

It aims to contend for the mystery of the faith in God and the Father, Jesus the Mediator, and the Holy Spirit the blessed Comforter.

All lovers of Gospel truth are invited to write for it—if so impressed.

May grace, mercy, and peace be multiplied to all lovers of truth.

The Subscription Price of Zion's Landmark.

For single subscribers $2.00 per year. Clubs of eight or a larger number $1.50 each, and the getter up of club receives a copy free for the time the club is paid. The subscribers in clubs need not all be at the same Post Office, and names can be sent from time to time in making up clubs: also in renewing clubs the same rule may be observed.

Any one sending me eight new names with $12.00 cash will be furnished a copy of the LANDMARK free for one year, and a copy of the "Church History" free.

When a subscriber desires his paper changed he should state plainly both the old and the new postoffices. When one wishes his paper stopped, let him send what is due, if anything is due, and also state his postoffice.

Let each subscriber keep his paper paid up if possible, and when he renews give the same name it has been going in, unless he wishes it changed, then he should state both the old and the new names.

ZION'S BANK.

I have a never-failing bank,
My more than golden store,
No earthly bank is half so rich,
How then can I be poor?

'Tis when my stock is spent and gone,
And I not worth a groat,
I'm glad to hasten to my bank,
And beg a little more.

Sometimes my banker, smiling says:
Why don't you oft'ner come?
And when you draw a larger bill,
Why not a larger sum?

Why live so niggardly and poor?
My bank contains a plenty;
Why come and take a one-pound note
When you may have a twenty?

Nay, twenty thousand ten times told,
Is but a trifling sum!
To what my bank contains for me,
Secure in God the Son.

Since then my banker is so rich,
I have no need to borrow.
But live upon notes to-day,
And draw again to-morrow,

I've been a thousand times before,
And never was rejected;
Those notes can never be refused,
That are by grace accepted.

All forged notes will be refused,
The firm will then detect,
While those that deal in forged notes,
Prove they are not God's elect.

'Tis only the beloved of God,
Redeemed by precious blood,
That ever had a note to bring—
They are the gift of God.

Thousands of ransomed sinners fear,
They have no note at all,
Because they feel their misery
And ruin by the fall.

Tho' thousand notes are scattered round,
All signed and sealed and free,
Yet many a doubting soul will say,
Ah' they are not for me.

Base unbelief will lead the soul,
To say what is not true;
I tell the poor self emptied soul
These notes belongs to thee.

Should all the banks in Europe break—
The bank of England smash—
Bring all your notes to Zion's Bank
You're sure to get your cash.

Nay, if you have but one small note,
Fear not to bring it in;
Come boldly to this bank of grace,
The banker is within.

I'll go again, I need not fear
My notes will be rejected,
Sometimes my banker gives me more Than asked for, or expected.

Sometimes I have felt a little proud,
I've managed things so clever;
Perhaps before the day was gone,
I felt as poor as ever.

Sometimes with blushes in my face
Just at the door I stand;
I know if Moses kept the bank,
My soul would be condemned.

But ah; my bank can never break,
My bank can never fail:
The firm—three persons in one God—
Jehovah—Lord of all.

Should all the bankers close their doors,
My bank stands open wide
To all the chosen of the Lord,
For whom the savior died.

The leper had a little note,
"Lord if thou wilt, thou can!"
The banker paid the little note
And heard the dying man.

Behold! and see the dying thief
Hang by his banker's side,
He cried, Dear Lord, remember me;
He got his cash and died.

His blessed banker took him home;
 To everlasting glory
 There to shout his banker's grace
 And tell his endless story.

With millions more, Jehovah's choice,
 Redeemed by precious blood,
 Oh, may my soul with him be found Among the sons' of God.

Then will I praise my banker's grace,
 And sound his name abroad:
 Make heaven to echo with my voice
 Before the throne of God.

ELDER P. D. GOLD, DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—A short time since I received a letter post-marked Ruffin N. C. from one who signs herself "a little sister" asking me to say something thro' the LANDMARK upon the scripture found in 2d Cor. 8 chapter, and 13th, 14th and 15th verses. To-day I feel like trying to comply with the request. The scripture refered to reads as follows "For I mean not that other men be eased and you burdened. But by an equality that now at this time your abundance may be a supply for their want, that their abundance also may be a supply for your want, that there may be an equality. As it is written he that had gathered much had nothing over; and he that had gathered little had no lack."

I wish to say first, that Paul began to present the especial theme embraced in these verses at the beginning of the 8th chapter, and continues it on to the end of the ninth chapter. Both chapters ought to be read together. They should not have been divided into two chapters at all, as they relate to one subject, and that one subject is the obligation of considering the needy and distressed, and ministering to them as they have need, and as God has made us able. Each verse in these two chapters is worthy of our most careful study as Paul pursues the theme and by various arguments, illustrations and quotations, enforces this subject upon his brethren.

The whole spirit and tendency of the religion of Christ is against selfishness, and toward kindness, helpfulness and charity. Love is the very essence of true religion. And love to God and to man is what James means when he says "a pure religion and undefiled in the sight of God and the Father is to visit the widows and the fatherless in their affliction and to keep himself unspotted from the world." By many reasons which are weighty to the spiritual mind Paul here urges his brethren to the practice of this grace of giving to the needy. And in his view the love of God's people to each other, is not a mere feeling, or a bare sentiment, but an acting power producing results; and it is not to be confined to ones own family or friends, or home, church, or the brethren close at hand who may be in need, but to reach out and take in all the people of God everywhere. Saints at Corinth are to love saints at Jerusalem, and to be just as ready to help them as though they were near neighbors. The love of God knows no country, time, race or condition. It levels all human distinctions. It teaches that rich and poor, bond and free, learned and unlearned have one Lord whose name is one. It presents God's own people as one family enjoying one common heritage. In the Father's house all things are common, and each is not to call what he has his own, but his Lord's. God means all his bounties both temporal and spiritual for all his people whom he loves equally. Here the apostle is speaking of temporal things. God has made our bodies and he cares for our bodies. He feeds them and will raise them up at the last day; therefore it is not out of place for us to care for the bodies of our brethren as well as for their spiritual interests.

Let us notice by what arguments the apostle urges this grace of giving upon his brethren. First he urges this upon them by the example of others. In verses 1 and 6, he speaks of the grace of liberality which the churches of Macedonia had shown forth. They in great affliction and poverty, had been so full of the joy of the Lord that they had exceeded all the apostles expectations. Their liberality equalled their great poverty. Up to their power and even beyond it they had abounded in this grace, even beseeching the apostle to receive their gift for their poor brethren. Such love was in them that they, gave not only their means, but first of all, themselves to the Lord. Was not this a noble spectacle. How earnestly the fire of love must have burned in their hearts! Now the apostle would by this excite his brethren at Corinth to equal liberality. 'See,' he would say, "what an example you have in the dear brethren of Macedonia?" There is no argument stronger than a good example. In this we see a kind of holy spiritual emulation! Oh that we all might feel more of this spirit! It is better to emulate the good than the evil in others.

Another motive which he urges is that they had abounded in other graces, and he would not have them lacking in this grace also; and coupled with it he urges upon them the forwardness of others in this very matter, and that hereby they might prove the sincerity of their love, verses 7 and 8. As faith without works is dead, so love without fruit is but an empty profession. As they had professed to love God and his people, he bids them now prove it. Love always prompts to helpfulness. "Now here are brethren at Jerusalem who need your help, let me see if your love is sincere" is what he says. And so "if a brother be poor and lacking daily food and we shut up the bowels of our compassion from him how dwelleth the love of God in us. Surely this appeal must have been very strong in their view. Is it not equally powerful as applied to us?"

A third motive appealed to, verse 9th is the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ toward them. They knew what that grace was. They knew that he was rich but for them had become poor, that they who were poor by his poverty might be made rich. So much had he done for them, what could they do for him? They could feed the hungry, clothe the naked, and give drink to the thirsty. Surely if a poor beggar has had unmeasured wealth bestowed upon him at such infinite cost to the giver, he will be ready to do anything for other poor beggars, especially if his benefactor tells him, that he will regard it as being done unto him. Paul here appeals to the greatest example of beneficence that the universe ever saw, and tells his brethren that knowing the grace of God to them they surely cannot be deaf to the appeal of suffering and want in others. This would betray a lack of appreciation of what the Lord had done for them, and exhibit the sin of ingratitude, in its violent form. God had been so rich in mercy to them that they must show mercy to others. Paul appeals to the most lofty of motives here. Surely every loving heart must respond to it at once.

In verse 24th Paul brings another motive to bear. He says, "Show a proof of your love, and of our boasting on your behalf." That is, Paul had declared elsewhere the love of the brethren at Corinth, and now he desires that they shall justify his boasting, and not put him to shame, as though he had praised too much. Here is a kind of holy ambition appealed to, that they should not lessen the good reputation which had gone abroad concerning them. He desired them to maintain a good report among the brethren. This is not wrong, on the contrary it is a right motive to appeal to in connection with others. In verses 4th and 5th of the ninth chapter, he urges the same tho't again, desiring that not himself alone, but they also might not be ashamed on account of this, his boasting concerning them.

In verse 6th, chapter 9th, he urges great liberality in giving. And says, while each must give according as he purposeth in his heart, yet he that gives bountifully shall reap in the same way; he that gives sparingly shall also reap sparingly. The giving, it must be borne in mind, is always to be according to what a man hath, and not according to what he hath not. Many a man giving one penny has given more bountifully than the other person who gave pounds. No man can judge another in this. God judges all. But let no man say, "I give the widow's mite" unless he has given all his living. That was what she gave. He that out of poverty has abounded in liberality has given more than the rich man who does not know by any deprivation, that he has ever given a dollar away. Now the argument used by the apostle here is this. Do you wish to reap comfort, joy, love and peace largely, then sow, or give largely. Do you desire only to reap sparingly, then sow sparingly. As a man soweth so shall he reap.

In verses 8th and 10th of the 8th chapter, Paul urges another motive. Some one might argue after this fashion. "I would gladly give to these poor saints at Jerusalem but I must look out for myself. I must lay by all I can for a rainy day, &c." This is all very well if God has not called for a portion of treasure committed to you. But now that he calls you to help your needy brethren, have you no trust in God? God is able to make all grace abound toward you. He is able to give you sufficiency in all things. He will care for you at all times. Therefore Paul would argue we need not fear to obey God. He that has given the treasure which we have is able to give more according to our need. All riches are our Father's therefore we need not fear to help our poor brother in his need. God has given us this bounty that in using it aright we may ourselves find a blessing as well as confer a blessing upon others. How much greater the blessing of giving than receiving!

In verses 11th and 12th of chapter 9th Paul presents still another reason why his brethren should give. It will supply the needy and then they will return abundant thanksgivings, not to the church at Corinth, but to God, the giver of all. And what believer is there who does not desire to hear the God he loves exalted in the highest! And these poor saints whose suffering your bounty will relieve will praise God for it. Surely this is not a mean unworthy motive. Had Paul appealed to their natural fleshly principles he would have argued "you will get great praise for this it will be a feather in your cap." But no, he only appealed to them to do this to the praise of God and the glory of his name. And surely as they loved

In verse 14th, Paul brings to view another important and touching thing. He says that these poor saints thus relieved by their bounty will pray for them. Surely I need do no more than the apostle has done; just suggest this thought. Oh how good it is to feel that we have the prayers of saints. Paul asked his brethren to pray for him. He declares that he prays for them. How often do we feel to say brethren pray for me. As for me I can bear witness that many a time when I stand up to preach, I feel as though it would help me much to know that some brother was praying for me. Paul said his brethren helped him by their prayers. Now then for this reason he urges upon his brethren to help these poor saints at Jerusalem. Being helped; in gratitude and love they would remember their generous brethren in their prayers. Surely this was a blessing to be much desired.

Finally Paul sums up this whole matter by exclaiming "thanks be to God for his unspeakable gift." This is the crowning argument of all. Paul has brought his other forces forward and presented them in turn: but, after all, the crowning motive with every believing heart is Jesus. Nothing can break down all the selfishness of our proud rebellious natures like a view of Jesus, and of the great love of God in giving him, "Thanks be to God for his unspeakable gift." And practical thanks is the giving of our bounty to his needy ones.

Now, from this wide field out of which I have been trying to glean a few sheaves let us return to the words which our 'little sister' especially pointed out. Verse 13th, "For I mean not that other men should be eased and you burdened." Some might object that Paul was putting burdens upon them and relieving others. Here he denies any such intention. He had before appealed to the churches in Macedonia for the same object, and he would appeal to others in their behalf should they ever come to be in need. This he says substantially in verse 14th, "Now ye have abundance while your brethren at Jerusalem are in want. Therefore help them. If the condition should ever be reversed, I would, he says in substance appeal to them in your behalf." Help the needy ones now, feeling sure that you shall always find help when you have need. God is the God of Providence as well as of grace. "My God shall supply all your need through riches of grace in Christ Jesus." In the sermon on the Mount Jesus enforced the same truth when he said, "If ye then being evil know how to give good gifts to your children how much more shall your heavenly Father give good things to them which ask him. "Therefore (notice this word therefore) ALL THINGS whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you do ye even so unto them." In other words we need not fear to give to them that have need, for our Father in heaven will see that we do not lack any good thing. To the same effect Jesus spake again when he said, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness and all these things (what ye shall eat and wear) shall be added unto you." And again Jesus said "Your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things." This is using the treasures committed to us wisely, and laying up "treasures in heaven where moth and rust do not corrupt nor thieves break through and steal."

Now in verse 15th, Paul quotes from Exodus 16th and 18th, "he that had gathered much had nothing over, and he that had gathered little had no lack." By this he enforces the idea of God's providential care over his people, and that we are no more secure with much, and no less secure with little, while in his hand. The God of Israel had sent them manna from heaven every night. They could not see its coming. In the morning it was there for them, then it was their business to gather it. All must gather, the strong, the weak, the aged, the young, each according to his ability must gather. There was no use in greed for he who gathered much could not use it the next day, and only what he needed that day. There need be no fear of helping the weak and the aged in their gathering, for he that gathered little had no lack. Each day was the blessing sent fresh from heaven, sufficient for each, sufficient for all. Here was constant care and never failing provision for all their wants. And thus Paul here presents as a lesson for us. True this was a miracle, but cannot our God work miracles still, miracles of providence as well as of grace. Is his power limited? Is his arm shortened that it cannot save? As God worked then so does he work now. It is as safe for us to trust him as it was for Israel. What if he works in ways more hidden from mortal sight. Nevertheless he is working.

Now Paul applies this to his brethren. He tells them that as it was during the wilderness journey, so shall it be always. He still gave them all temporal supplies. They had nothing that they had not received. He that gathered did so, as Israel did of old. It is right to be diligent in gathering. In no place does the word of God encourage slothfulness or that men should be spendthrifts, therefore when day dawns gather what the Lord has given you to gather, but do not be greedy. If you gather much all that you can gain is just the present supply. If you are able to gather little, do not be anxious, still all your need shall be supplied. If your pot of manna is full put some in your brother's, who has been able to gather but little or none. Surely this is no gainsaying such reasoning and such an example as this.

I do not forget that the manna under the old covenant was a type of spiritual food, but here Paul does not so use it and I am speaking of the use which Paul makes of it. If the manna is a type of that which is spiritual, it no less furnishes an example in these temporal things.

Oh that these words of Paul in these two chapters, might sink deep into our hearts! We have no right to say to another how much he shall give, but we ought to stir one another up to remember the poor. Let each according as he purposeth in his heart give. Let him give from the heart, that is willingly, for the Lord loves a cheerful giver, and the best rule I know of is the one here laid down. Cheerful giving from the heart. Let no one say I will see what others give and measure my gift accordingly. The Lord has all hearts in his hand and he knows how to move them just right. See to it that we do what he bids us do. That is our duty.

I leave these reflections for the "little sister," and for the readers of the LANDMARK. I remain as ever your brother in hope.

happy meetings here and some accessions, I have baptized eighty three in a little over two years. I baptized a dear sister yesterday who could not walk, she is helpless, but I never heard one talk that was so filled with Holy Ghost as she seemed to be. Her great trouble seemed to be that she had not discharged her duty before now. Her whole being seemed to be filled with praise to God. May the Lord bless us all. Yours in affliction.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—I once thought when I joined the church that I would join a band who are perfect and clear of sin, hence after I joined I was often finding fault of this thing and that, and another, until I saw a great many things in my brethren that look horrible for Primitive Baptists, consequently I was for cutting them off. But dear brother, when the Lord, as I trust, enabled me to begin to work at the beam in my own eye, I saw the great trouble was in me and I had such a tremendous beam in my eye that the sight was so obscured that a mote in the brother's eye looked like a mountain; but when as I trust I was enabled to cast the beam out of my eye the mote was quite small in the brother's eye.

"When I turn mine eyes within,
All is dark and vain and wild,
Filled with unbelief and sin,
Can I deem myself a child?"

The hardest one I have ever found to fellowship is myself. I would to God that we could all examine ourselves more and have more forbearance one with another.

I do love the precious LANDMARK in which always are things of interest to me. I do love to hear from those dear ones in Virginia, North Carolina and West Virginia, for it seems like home when I read their writings.

My health is quite feeble. I am able to be up, but unable to work. It is very straining on my lungs to speak, they are so weak, yet I am trying in weakness to serve four churches. We have many

DEAR BROTHER GOLD AND BRETHREN, FRIENDS, AND READERS OF ZION'S LANDMARK:—I feel some impression to pen a few lines relative to my late tour in Alabama among our people out there—I mean Primitive Baptists. I visited five associations and several churches of our faith and order. I found them, so far as I was able to judge, sound in the doctrine of God our Savior, also in practice. They had had some trouble in the Beulah association in regard to some of their members joining the Farmers' Alliance. They had withdrawn from three of the churches. It seems a little strange to me that any Primitive Baptists should desire to join any worldly institution knowing at the same time that it will give offence to their brethren. I do hope that all of our dear brethren who have erred in this thing may be brought to see their error and repent—turn home to their true friends—the church. If we are fitted for membership in this—the highest Institution in the world—the church of Christ—it is enough, we should not want to belong to any other; and I for one do not. I arrived at Lincoln, Talladega County, Alabama the 28th Aug. filled an appointment—two days at Corinth church of the Mt. Moriah association which Elder J. T. Stewart had made for me—then at other churches on to Birmingham, and then on to the Little Hope association in Bibb County, where I met many good and precious brethren and sisters of like precious Faith with whom I enjoyed myself well. From this association I journeyed in company with Elder G. W. Stewart, and other brethren of Providence church near my uncle's. Preached at Elder Stewart's house—his wife, sister Stewart, being very low with consumption. Filled an appointment at the church. After preaching one precious sister, Mrs. Addie Fisher, came forward—gave a satisfactory evidence of a hope in Christ and was received to Baptism. Much feeling was manifested. I tarried with my uncle eight days—visiting with Elder Stewart the church at old Five Mile, where I met with some precious brethren, sisters and friends, with whom I had met four years ago. Returning Sunday evening, preached at an old sister's house whose name I have forgotten. Monday evening preached at my Uncle's. Tuesday preached at brother Stewart's again, by request of his wife. Here we had a good meeting. Indeed, I did feel that the presence of the Lord was with us. Brother Stewart spoke with much warmth of feeling. Returned back to my uncle's, and next morning took my leave of them—all in tears—my uncle, who is in his eighty third year, accompanying me fifteen miles on horse back to Stewart's Station, on the A. G. S. R. R. Passing through Birmingham I came to the Wetumpka Association in Shelby County. Here I met Elder Rowe, of Georgia, and J. E. W. Henderson, James Baxley and Elder J. P. Sayers, and other brethren in the ministry. Elder Sayers is its Moderator—an able and faithful minister. I was much pleased with Brethren Henderson and Baxley; also, it was a joy to meet brother Rowe, with whom I had met before. We had appointments together for three weeks after this association. Visited several churches of the Wetumpka, and around to the Mt. Moriah association. Here we had a good, orderly meeting and able preaching by Elder Robison, of the New Hope association, of Georgia, and Elders Kidd and Sayers of Alabama, and also Elder Rowe and old Elder Carlisle, of the Hillabe, and its Moderator who is in his eighty-third year, is an able and faithful minister, and much beloved. I became much attached to him—meeting him again at his son's, in the town of Goodwater, where he is living, his wife being dead. Here I and Elder Rowe spent two days. Preached once in the Methodist house. Spent most of the time here with Dr. P. P. Salter, a very precious brother. From here we came to Hillabe Association, in Tallapoosa County, stopping Friday night in Alexander City with Elder Cleveland, a good and kind brother. Saturday went out one mile to where the Association convened with Fellowship church Eld. Cook, of said Association who is quite an interesting preacher, preached the introductory. Here I was blessed to see our dear and aged brother Mitchell for the first time, and many other good and precious preachers—among them Eld. Shirley, of the Beulah, who is a lovely man and preacher. Elder Carlisle is Moderator, and a good one. I enjoyed this Association much. After this I and Elder Rowe parted, he coming home and I going on to the Olive, filling some appointments with Elder Cook. At the Olive, I met again Elder Henderson and Elder Purifoy, and Elders Cleveland and Thrash, of Georgia. Also, that dear old brother Carlisle, and Elders Mitchell and Baxley; J. T. Stewart, of the Mt. Moriah; Avery and Saterwhite of the Beulah; also, Elder Smith. I was greatly pleased at hearing these dear servants of the Most High God showing the way of Salvation by grace through our Lord Jesus Christ. This seemed to me to be a glorious spiritual Association of kindred spirits mingling in the true worship of God. Elder W. M. Mitchell is Moderator of the Olive, and is an excellent one. I was truly interested in his company and conversation. This was the fifth and last Association I visited in Alabama, and three in our State. In all these meetings there was love, union and harmony, with a very slight exception. No discord in the doctrinal sentiments I heard advanced—all of a piece. On Sunday after the Olive I preached at Elder Baxley's church, and near his residence. Spent the night with him. Elders Mitchell and Henderson also were there.

Here we remained till Monday evening. I and Elder Mitchell with other brethren and sisters, took the cars at Notasulga for Opelika, where I stopped about two hours at Elder Mitchell's house. Had the pleasure of meeting Sister Mitchell and Sister Pucket—brother Mitchell's oldest daughter, with whom Elder and sister Mitchell are living.

I, in all my journeyings in Alabama, feel like the good Lord sustained me and blessed and prospered my way, and I hope I feel thankful to him and to his dear people out there for their kindness and care for me—a stranger in their midst. May the Lord bless them all abundantly, and all his people, and keep us humble and at each others feet—esteeming others better than ourselves, and keeping the unity of the spirit in the bonds of peace. Farewell!

Yours to serve, in hope of eternal life,

THE BETTER RESURRECTION.

(Heb. 11th and 35th.)

ELDER P. D. GOLD, DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—My thoughts this morning have been running over with talk and preaching I heard at and on my trip to the Association, and I must say that the preaching was the most harmonious and best connected I ever heard in my life. But I have read something through your papers and brother Thomson said on the above subject, and I stayed all night with a brother and was treated with much kindness by him and his whole family and may God bless them all. We were talking or speaking about this writing on the Better Resurrection, and he said what did we know about the Better Resurrection? I feel to say something which I hope will not hurt the feelings of any one, but I trust that these lines may be written with God as a guide for my pen.

Now to the subject. What do we know about the Better Resurrection? In one sense we know nothing, in another we know much about it. Somebody says, how do we know it? I will state how. In one instance we will notice Paul proves by over five hundred witnesses that our Saviour arose and in our experience we saw no other way that we could be saved but by his obedience, and we see by many proofs. He says, "we shall be like him," is one proof. In all the trials and troubles we feel that we shall come to the end of this world of trouble. The apostles often speak concerning the Better Resurrection, and why not we? But what do we know? We know that the bible together with our experience harmonized both together, is the very base or foundation of our faith. Experience gives us hope. The bible is what somebody else says, and our experience is what we know, but we have so many reasons to believe the word that we can say that the bible harmonizes. We only have bible authority to say that we are men and women, and bible authority to say that God made the world. We have the same to say that there is an elect people, and we know that they are called together here on earth by grace or love. We know that Paul says, by grace are ye saved, and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God, not of works lest any man should boast.

We know that the prophets spoke of things from feeling sensible of their coming in future time, and we see many prophecies fulfilled. I am one that believes every word of the bible is truth so strong that I can say that I know it is so, and I know that a change in me has taken place. Our Saviour says to Nicodemus, "Ye must be born again," and why not look forward to the better resurrection. May God unite and so consolidate Israel that every one of her body may see eye to eye, and speak the same as it is Christ in Jesus.

I have thought Brother Gold that I would write my experience, but it would take so much space, and I am such a poor speller that I have put it off. The people of God feel dear to me. I will close my scribble.

"The way of the wicked is an abomination unto the Lord: but he loveth him that followeth after righteousness."

DEAR BROTHER GOLD,—I feel impressed to write a few words through the LANDMARK to Sister R. Anna Phillips, if my Lord will be my helper, though a stranger in the flesh; but I don't feel like she is in the spirit, in the sweet bonds of love in our dear Savior. Oh how sweet to my poor soul were those words: "who shall roll away the stone." Dear Sister, a Sister in Christ, I do believe with all of my soul; help me to beg my Lord in the right way to do my duty according to his will, and roll away these stones that keep me from my church, and doing my duty towards casting in my mite. Oh, so freely would I divide my living if I had my way at home, but my husband is not of the same faith. He believes you can if you will, and I cannot link with him in any such doctrine, but still hope and trust in my Lord that this stone will be rolled away, and we can link together in the same faith of the Lord Jesus Christ, and sing praises to our King with one accord, for it is the right way, I do believe with all my soul. What a feast to my poor soul, when it is loaded down with grief and sorrow, for if I know myself I do want to do right in the sight of my Lord. When I read in the LANDMARK the travels of God's dear children, it makes me almost believe I am one of the number. It makes my poor soul leap for joy and say, thank God, Jesus shows his smiling face again. If I only be obedient to my master these stones would be rolled away and I could serve my church as I ought. Then tell me dear sister how can I do my duty when I am not my keeper I cannot do as I would if this stone is not rolled away. Dear brethren and sisters, my mind is weak, but my whole dependence is upon the Lord to lead me through this wilderness of troubles and trials of life. May it be my Lord's will to unfold the mystery that hinders my poor husband from being with me in the faith.

Pray for me dear children, that in due time this stone will be rolled away, and I can delight in doing my duty to my Lord and master. S. M. R.

DEAR BROTHER LESTER,—I like your views on the "new birth." You make it so plain it is edifying to read it. I often think of you. The first time I saw you was at Union Church; you took for a text the first chapter (seventh and eighth verses) of the Song of Solomon. I was built up by your preaching more than I had been for a great while. You told an anecdote about a man that had a pet lamb, that when his hounds ran after a hare, the lamb would go running after them. You said what did the lamb run with them for; if it caught the hare it could not eat it. You said it was running to keep up with the company that it was with, which illustrated the believer in the Lord that would go with the world and the false churches. They are going with them to keep up with the company they are with. They can't eat such stuff. After they get it it will feed dogs but not lambs. They must be fed on the Lamb of God that was slain from the foundation of the world for just such poor sinners as they are. We have some Baptists out here that like the Methodists better than Campbellites. For my part I would as soon die with the fever as with the ague. They are both daughters of old Babylon that deceiveth the nations of the earth. Brother Thomas told of a preacher that asked some converts how they wanted to be baptised. Some said we wanted to be sprinkled, he very willingly did it. Some said we want to be poured, he very readily did that. Some said we want to be baptised, like the Lord. He said you will have to go to the creek, which will show to any unprejudiced mind that pouring and sprinkling are false things, and inventions of men, when the advocate of them admits it himself, saying you will have to go to the creek to be baptised like our Lord. I have had some thought on John 3d chapter, and 3d and 5th verses. Jesus told Nicodemus except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God. I think the kingdom here means the church. Some will say we can see Lester, Gold and the brethren. An infidel can see the Adam part of the church I will admit, but to love them as the church of God none but those that are born again can. Seeing here is by an eye of faith, that is the kind of eye Jesus meant. The 5th verse (last 2 lines) reads, except a man be born of water and of the Spirit he cannot enter the kingdom of God." I understand this being born of water to mean baptism before we can enter the church, for we have to be baptised before we can have a right to the Lord's supper and other blessings of the church. Baptism does not give a man a good conscience, but is the answer of a good conscience. 1 Peter, 3d chapter. He says in speaking of the ark, the like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us. He says it does not put away the filth of the flesh, but is the answer of a good conscience. He does not say it gives it, but is the answer of it. In John 3d and 5th verses the Campbellites say, the spirit comes last, well it does what if it does. It did not make Jesus the son of God, and it was not one step in it. It was in approval of what he had done. He laid the example for every quickened soul not to make them God's children, but to show they love the Lord. If I am wrong in this I hope you will set me right. I like your views on the new birth and on the means question much. If Jesus saves his people from their sins, the preachers don't. From your unworthy brother.

 EXPERIENCE.

Having a desire for a great while to write upon experimental religion is one reason why I now make the attempt, believing it to be a duty enjoined on me from the force of impression; for without such impressions I would not dare to write, hoping that it is of God who gives the moving cause of my feelings. I shall endeavor to proceed in the following manner, the Lord being my helper. True religion then is not of a carnal character, nor a matter of man's control; it is the power of God to every one that believeth, not merited by any works of man, as the scripture plainly declares.

Now then, to our experience. In the 1st place when awakened to a knowledge of our ruined and miserable condition by reason of sin, how awful did we feel? This was done too, not by our consent, but by reason of him who had subjected the same in hope. Hope maketh not ashamed, because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts (in the pardon of all our sins) by the gift of God's holy spirit. It was then you went walking and leaping as one who had laid long before the beautiful gate of the temple. Joy, peace, love and happiness were then the song and theme of your soul. "Glory to God in the highest, peace and good will toward men;" such was the acclamation of the spirit, when newly born of God. Being now delivered from so great a death that caused your long pining sickness, your sleepless hours and lonesome days were turned into joy, were full of praise, honor and adoration to the great king of glory, the captain of your salvation. O these were days long to be remembered. Who can forget among all the vessels of mercy these golden hours of exultation, which speak, dying sinner live forever, your sins ended in the days of your calamity, though often since you may feel of the lost, as if it were spoken to you, but remember once in Christ forever. When your load and burden of sins is all removed, and in the room and stead there-of joy of heart springs up, new feelings enter the mind, even praises of a peculiar kind, it not spoken orally by the word of mouth, yet within you felt a living change, a calm and tranquil frame of mind. This is what we call as the word says being born again. By this ye shall know that ye have passed from death unto life, because ye love the brethren. There is then that felt in the heart which the world can't take away. Christians become your chief associates, because you love them being all of the same fraternity and heirs of promise, called to the fellowship of the Spirit and union of the body of Christ, by the resurrection from the dead, adopted as an heir of God and joint heir with Christ, if so be that we suffer with him we shall also be glorified together. The great and grand reason of our hope is that being raised from the dead, whereas in times past we walked according to the course of this world, and were by nature children of wrath even as others, but now being delivered from death by the great sacrifice of Christ for sins, the atonement being applied to us through sufferings and death, and raised to walk in newness of life by the resurrection of Christ from the dead, is indeed a strong evidence of our hope. Every christian is dead to sin by the crucifixion of Christ, and made alive by his resurrection. Jesus now lives to die no more. Reckon yourselves dead to sin, but alive in Christ. With such strength of feeling let us journey on, for by and by we shall reap. Faith then lays hold on the promises by the word of inspiration; for if we have been planted in the likeness of Christ's death we shall be in the likeness of his resurrection. Seeing then we have such hope we use great boldness of speech, because the love of Christ constraineth us to say if we have suffered with him we shall also be glorified together; and the apostle says in addition to this, our hope of you is steadfast, for as much as ye have been partakers of the afflictions ye shall also be of the consolation. Every christian therefore by experimental knowledge knows that he has felt sin which caused repentance, after which he met with a change of feeling attended with the spirit of love in his heart. Though it might not last a great while, before doubt arose concerning himself whether this be religion or not; so that you were constrained to cry out and say O Lord, if I am deceived please undeceive me. I do feel so bad, the good feelings I had are now gone.

O what shall I do? I feel so prostrated in mind, so low sunk down, that my case seems almost worse than before. At first I felt relieved. But after some time spent in this way these good feelings returned again. O bless the Lord, and bless his holy name, and so we travel on some times singing and some times crying. This is what I call experimental religion. Your good and bad feelings simply speaking are about all of it. This will meet out with every christians' case under the head of the widow's two mites which were all her living. Our doubts and fears are strong evidences if we could take them right that we are christians, for who ever doubted that he had not; if a man had no money in the bank, if it were consumed by the flames, it would not thus trouble him; even so a man without hope or change has no fears or doubts, being alone of himself; but the christian, having something more precious than money in bank, is often made to cry out with tears, Lord remember me. I feel so desolate within. All such exclamations as these the christian is familiar with, and will be while here in an enemy's land. Satan is ever trying to deceive and harrass the children of God, but never has accomplished his design no, nor ever will in the entire destruction of one. So then little christian, fear not, for with thee it shall go well. Afflictions may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning.

Now bretheren and sisters, by way of conclusion if the view I have on experimental religion is not right, and does not measure out with yours I still am a stranger to it. To know it any other way in substance though written some what imperfectly as you see, but it embraces my feelings in part, if not altogether yours. It is hard to write all experiences to the full measure of the gospel, so what is written at present may suffice, hoping that it may be of some benefit to the readers. Yours in gospel bonds,

W. L. WALKER.

WHAT FOR?

The question often arises in my mind, For what reason am I a member of the church? Or what prompted me to confess to be a fellow-lover of the meek and lowly Jesus? Believing that this is an important question with every professor of religion, whether it interests them all or not, and knowing that there are many motives which may prompt people to profess the name of Christ, I venture to give, if the Lord direct me, 1st. some of the reasons which may prompt others, but which certainly do not prompt the true followers of the "meek" and "lowly" Lamb; 2d for what we, if indeed he has made me one of the number, desire to follow him.

We are taught in the word that God works all things after the council of his own will. He speaks and it is done: He commands and it stands fast. In the beginning he created the heavens and the earth, by the word of his power. He said let the earth bring forth the living creatures, cattle, creeping things, and beasts of the earth: and it was so. (Gen. 1, 24.) And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, (Gen. 2, 7.), and when He had breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and he became a living soul we find him a man of the world. Of the same sum and substance as the cattle, and creeping things and beasts of the earth. (Only a little more favored). Only a creature of God as they; and not in any sense related to the divine Maker. Only made after the image of His person, and without sin; yet formed of the substance of the earth, the serpent, who beguiled them, as well as the others. Therefore, it is not strange that when God gave them a law they should be so ready to violate it. God their maker told him (Adam) that in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die, but the serpent, their earthly enemy—told Eve that God knew that in the day they eat thereof they should not die, but should be as wise as he as gods knowing good and evil. How fascinating the thought! be wise! be great! and how congenial to their earthly natures! No wonder that they believed it! Well they violate God's law, are driven out from his presence, not only bearing their earthly nature, but curse and vengeance of their Maker to be the father and representative of all the human family.

But before they are driven out of the garden, we find them pinning fig leaves together to hide their nakedness, and in their offspring we find Cain offering for a sacrifice the fruit of the ground, and because it was not accepted slaying his brother Abel, who had by faith offered a sacrifice which was typical of the advent and mission of Christ into this world. Here in two brothers we find a type of the two classes of which I purposed to write. And we might trace the two natures or disposition all down through time, but this is not necessary at present. What is of importance to us is to know whether we, as Cain, are bringing an offering of the earth, and like our mother, believing the alluring words of the adversary of the soul, or whether we are willing to believe the spotless sacrifice of Christ, and believe his sweet and dying words when he said, "It is finished."

This is a day of deception. The serpent is no less subtle than he was in the days of Eve. It is a day when men cannot endure sound doctrine. When they, being ignorant of Christ's righteousness, go about to establish their own righteousness; and if it were possible they would deceive the very elect. This time was prophesied of by one of old when he said, seven women shall lay hold of one man, saying we will eat our own bread, and wear our own apparel, only let us be called by thy name. How many of us are eating our own bread, and wearing our own apparel? or serving God for reward? Oh, the thought of eternal punishment after death! Who can endure it? Not one of Adam's fallen race desires to be lost. They think at a convenient time they will accept the "terms of the gospel," and God will have mercy upon them, and save them. For we being of the same earthly nature of our mother, and by her transgression brought under the curse of our creation, it is not strange that, like her, we believe the plausible persuasions of the serpent, when he tells us we are not dead but sleeping; and if we will awake, and "put on Christ"—make long prayers, and keep the law—we will be saved. It is natural for every one to want to escape eternal damnation, and as the carnal mind knows no other way only to "do good, and get good;" this is one of the first motives which prompts men to a profession of religion. They join the church, make prayers, go to meeting, pay the preacher, and live honestly in the sight of men and what is it all for? To escape eternal punishment, and have a home in Heaven when this life is over.

Another thing to prompt us to be "christians" our friends are all members of the church; the most influential men and women of our community are members. Religion is becoming quite fashionable, and if I do not join the "church" I will not be popular; so I will join with them, and what for? Evidently for reward.

A third reason which may prompt: some mother or father or some very dear friend has died, and on the death-bed told the loved ones to meet him in Heaven: Or my precious child, or brother, or sister: how could I bear to be separated from them! I must join the church and "do better." What for? because I want to meet my earthly ties,—loved ones—in Heaven. Oh my precious "Heaven—born" soul is this what we serve God for?

Having now noticed a very few things which prompt men to a profession of religion, I will now leave this class and turn to another,—my father's family, of whom it was asked concerning one "Doth Job serve God for naught?" Now I would ask do we serve him for naught? or would we desire to serve him if there was no Heaven to gain or hell to shun? yes, I am persuaded that there is none other to whom we can go, but to him who has the words of eternal life. If there was no reward to gain, we would not desire to take our fill of sin; for we have been full and are yet full of sin? have so much that we are sick of it; and when one takes enough of any thing to make him sick, he does not so long as he is sick desire the same, and the Heaven born child is not only sick of sin but dead to sin, lives no longer therein. Then it cannot be for reward that he shuns the vices of this world, but because it is a pleasure to do so. Not because somebody else serves God but for love, because He is worthy to be served. He does not want to be saved because some body else is; for he desires to sing free grace if every earthly friend is doomed to woe.

Why do we desire to sing his praise? Because he has loved us with an everlasting love, and with loving-kindness He has drawn us.

"Twas' the same love that spread the feast,
That sweetly forced us in:
Else we'd refuse all peace with him,
And perished in our sin."

We love him because he first loved us: because he lived, died, laid in the grave, rose and ascended into the Heavens for us; and because He lives we shall live also.

O, what amazing love;
That Jesus died for me!
That Jesus shed his precious blood,
My soul from sin to free!

God, the quickening Spirit, takes the sinner just as he is, shows him what he is by nature, and how vile and miserable he has made himself by practice; shows him his own spotless purity; by that the sinner weighs his deeds and finds that his best performance is only sin compared to Christ's holiness. This makes him abhor himself, reform his way and plead the mercy of God. When every effort fails him, then he falls at the feet of sovereign mercy and says; "If I perish I perish." Here the balm reaches his soul, Jesus reveals himself a Savior and says "My grace is sufficient for you." Then it is not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit saith the Lord. Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but by his mercy he saved us.

Now I have tried to show some causes which lead men to a profession of godliness and the true cause which makes men truly desire to serve God, which is love; not that we loved him, but that he loved us and by loving-kindness he has drawn us. How different are the two classes! How their motives differ, and still it is not strange that it is so. For all are born of the earth and worse than that, brought under the curse by not only the transgression of fore parents, but a multiplicity of sins we have committed, until we are far from God. Man in the original state was not related to God, but of rather the same make-up as his adversary the devil. So if he was not related to God at first he, in his natural state, is certainly much less related to him, or farther from him now. And if he was not related to the devil at first he was made of the earth substance and by yielding to his persuasions and obeying him, and afterward living with and in obedience to him for nearly six thousand years, they are certainly if not akin very much alike. Then man in a natural state must necessarily be very much more like, or of the nature of the devil than God; hence the great importance of being born of God, before we can see the kingdom of or be related to God. And no birth is ever brought about by the performance of the creature, unborn or unconceived; so we may well say that it is all of God from first to last; and not of him that willeth, or of him that runneth; and to his dear name be all the praise.

I have scarcely touched my subject and my letter is already much more lengthy than I intend; but imperfect as it is, I submit it to your judgment, asking pardon for all errors.

S. E. BROYLES.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—The Lord said that, whosoever spoke against the Holy Ghost it should not be forgiven him, neither in this world, nor in the world which is to come. We learn from that there will be another world after this one is destroyed. Isaiah says, 'For behold, I create new heavens and a new earth: and the former shall not be remembered nor come into mind.' And again, 'For as the new heavens and the new earth which I will make shall remain before me saith the Lord, so shall your seed and your name remain.' I see that somethat this new heaven and new earth as being the kingdom of heaven that was at hand when Christ was on earth. It looks like it may be so. But Peter and John spoke of a new heaven and a new earth that looks to me like it is that new earth that will be made after this earth is destroyed or the world to come. For Peter says, "But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night: in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burnt up. etc" Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness. It does not look to me like Peter is speaking of Christ's kingdom here on this earth, but of the world to come, that will be made after the great judgment day. And John, after describing the final judgment, says, "And I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away and there was no more sea. And I John saw the Holy City, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband." It is true he does not say that it came to this new earth, but where else could it come? The old earth was destroyed and it came down from God out of heaven. And what was this new earth made for, if it was not made for a home for the saints? I may be mistaken, and if I am I would like to be put right. I have for some time thought that this new world would be the eternal heaven of the saints after the judgment day. For where God is is heaven, and if he will come and dwell with his saints on this new earth, it will be heaven to them. John said, "And I heard a great voice out of heaven saying, 'Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them and be their God.'" If God took his saints with him in the third heavens, then they would dwell with God, and not God with them as John says will be the case I would like to know whether I stand alone in this belief or not, for if so I must be wrong and would like to be put right. I would like to know your views through the LANDMARK, provided there would be no danger of bringing about contentions and offences with the brethren." For if you have no time to write to me privately about it, rather than give any offence I am willing to remain as I am. So I leave it with your better judgment. Remember me when at the Throne of Grace. Your Brother in Christ, I hope,

JOHN J. WEEDEN.

Remarks :

There are two kingdoms, the fleshly and the spiritual, one in which there is sin and death, the other in which there is righteousness and peace. Or one is the law kingdom, under which is the knowledge of sin and death follows ; the other is the gospel kingdom, in which sin is done away and destroyed forever, and death is swallowed up in victory.

Those that die in unbelief, or under the curse of the law, shall be raised in corruption, and reap the fruit of their doing in everlasting punishment or destruction from the presence of the Lord and the glory of his power.

While all that are found in Jesus shall rise to glory to be ever with the Lord, where indeed all things are made new. Then the former things will be no more remembered nor come into mind. Sin will have been completely purged away and death be gone, sorrow and suffering ended, nor shall any of the things of the former corrupt world come into memory. The first heaven and earth shall pass away, or the legal heavens.

The gospel heaven is the beginning of the everlasting kingdom of God. The heavenly or final perfect state of the redeemed will be the perfection of that which is begun here or foretasted in the gospel. It will be the amplification and completion of that which is revealed in Spirit now in its incipient state. What is now known in part then shall be fully known. It will not though be different in quality. True it doth not yet appear what we shall be. For now we have a body of death and are swallowed up of much sorrow under the veil of the flesh. But then all that will have been done away. Sin that is the cause of all our distress will then be done away with all its effects. We will then be revealed in our true character of which hope is now the forerunner as an anchor to the soul.

So that a literal heaven and a literal earth, or such as are typified by the natural ones, are not here meant, but that glorified state and condition of the redeemed in which God dwells in them in his unclouded glory, for they shall be like him because they shall see him as he is. It is the removal of all former imperfect things and their remembrance and the revelation of perfection described here by figures of a new heaven and a new earth, for such it will be indeed.

The new earth is to represent the blessed state of the body of the redeemed in glory, and the new heaven is that light and joy that shall rest upon, cover, bless and crown the saints forever in glory, so that God shall dwell with them in fulness of joy.

But how little do we now know of such a state as this. P. D. G.

He that meddleth with strife is as he that taketh a dog or a sow by the ear. It would not hurt you so much to take a sheep by the ear, for if you loved a sheep you would not hurt it, nor will a sheep hurt you. But take care of yourself if you take a dog or a sow by the ear.

Editorial.

Elder McLennon Wright requests my view of Matt. 11 : 12,

"And from the days of John the Baptist until now the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force."

The law and the prophets were until John, since then the kingdom of heaven is preached.

John the Baptist was greater than any prophet. He was the friend of the bridegroom. He came to announce the coming of Jesus. He baptized Christ. Was he as insignificant a thing as a reed shaken by the wind? No indeed, for none born of woman was greater than John. But how was he treated? They treated him as they pleased and beheaded him for condemning fornication.

John came neither eating or drinking and they said he had a devil. The Son of man came eating and drinking, and they said, "Behold a gluttonous man and a wine-bibber, a friend of publicans and sinners. Neither one pleased them, and when Jesus was delivered into the hands of sinful men they did to him what they pleased; for with wicked hands they took and crucified him.

So that the kingdom of heaven suffered violence from the days of John the Baptist until the time that Jesus spake these words, and may we not say until even now also. The kingdom of heaven is on earth only as it is in Jesus and his servants. Whatever of violence is done to any of them is violence done therefore unto the kingdom of heaven, and whatever good is done unto any of them is good done unto the kingdom of heaven.

Violence is wrong. He that does violence does wrong. The violent persecute, oppress and kill. By force they took John and slew him, by corruption or violence they took Jesus and violated the law in putting him to death. For they found no cause of death in him, yet they hated him without a cause and with violence they killed the Prince of life. That is they violated law and right in killing both John and Jesus.

To this day they persecute and take the saints of God who suffer persecution, or do not resist, do not return evil for evil. It is the righteous that suffer or receive the violence, and do not return evil for evil.

Men who claim that they have the power of themselves to do many mighty works say they can take the kingdom of heaven by force, in the sense that they can save themselves and others, and they compass sea and land making their converts. They claim that they are making christians, and thus taking the kingdom of heaven by force. But it is that principle in men that persecutes and slays the innocent and does violence.

A poor lost sinner, who sees and feels his vileness and guilt, knows that it is not by might nor power, but by the Spirit of God, that a sinner is saved. When one has no strength and is ready to perish then the Lord takes up and saves the lost. Such needy souls would do no violence, nor hurt the hair of the head of one of God's little ones. One must become as a little child, ignorant, helpless and utterly without strength, before he can ever enter the kingdom of heaven. How different is that spirit from the spirit of the violent ones that killed the prophets, put John to death, crucified Jesus, and that hates and persecutes him now that is born after the spirit.

P. D. G.

TO THE ELDERS WHO MAY COMPOSE THE PRESBYTERY AT BELL-SPUR—I write the following as a call to the ministry if indeed a call. A short time after I hope that God for Christ's sake pardoned my sins, when getting in doubt I was asking God for brighter evidence, when a voice seemingly spoke to me saying "Yes, thy sins are pardoned and you must now go preach," at these words, or rather thoughts, I fell to the ground praying God if it could be his will, that he might remove this impression from my mind. Viewing then and there my imperfection and inability in every particular my first conviction of sin, as I hope through a dream came over me seemingly with more weight than I could bear. I dreamed that I was nailed to the cross. I beheld the Soldiers, I began to weep when one of them stepped forward and said weep not for thus it must be that the Scriptures might be fulfilled. The last part of my dream seemed to stop upon my mind, the Scriptures might be fulfilled. Then passage after passage of Scripture rolled through my mind stopping at the Scripture where he chose the weak things of this world to confound the mighty and the strong. I knew I was weak but far too weak for this. Thus my life ran feeling that there was no peace, no joy in life for me. I had a hope after death and I had rather die than live under this burden. Then I would think if I could only know that I was called to preach I could go, but yet how could I preach, when I could not even talk? No, this could never be. Finally, when I had given up that

I must die I asked the question, must I die for my sins? No, but for disobedience. I then promised the Lord if he would show me in a dream that it was my duty to preach that I would try. That night I dreamed that I was in a wilderness all alone, while wandering about I came to a spring in a rock, as I thought, in shape of a heart. I heard a voice saying, this is the spring from which you drank peace to your thirsty soul, therefore behold what I the Lord shall show thee. Then I beheld in my dream an immense number of people coming through an opening in the wilderness, and the same voice said unto me, "water them freely" then I said I have no cup. Then I looked and in my hand I saw a cup casting forth rays as the sun. I gave them to drink, and they all departed. Then the voice said to me, "this is my Gospel, go ye therefore and declare it unto all men, for lo I am the way." Then I awoke perfectly calm and happy. I thought the first opportunity I had I would join the church and then try to preach. Then these words appeared to my mind, "This is what your disobedience is. You are not called to preach but do your duty, and join the church." This gave me great joy. I then joined the church thinking all would then be well, but I found still there was something else. I thought this was to be baptized. When I was baptized I felt as though all my troubles were gone, but in a few hours the words came to me, "you promised the Lord to preach." I at once denied saying to myself that I had rather die than make the attempt to preach. I was then in worse trouble than ever. I had lied to God as no Christian would do. So days and weeks passed during which time I made many promises by which I obtained I believe consolation, but broke them all, then received the chastening of the Lord times which I shall not mention, all the while putting in as my best excuse my stammering tongue, until in Oct. 1886 I was thinking of my troubles when I was or felt impressed to pray for relief. I fell to my knees, but before I uttered a word these words came through my mind as a question.

"Art thou professing to worship a God whom thou thinkest unable to loose the stammering tongue." When I arose my first words were, "Blessed be God." I then promised to try the next opportunity, and so I did, and felt better. Since then I have had many ups and downs. I could give many dreams, such as I feel are precious to me, but deem it unnecessary. Whether it be of God I know not. This the worthy brethren must judge, and may the Lord be their guide that all things may be done in accordance with his will, is my sincere desire. JOEL E. MARSHALL.

ORDINATION.

In obedience to a call from the church at Bellspring, Patrick county, Va., for a Presbytery to examine brother Joel E. Marshall with the view to his ordination to the work of the ministry, the following Elders met on the 4th day of Nov., 1888: James M. Blancett, S. D. Williams, Asa D. Short, J. W. Barnard, G. W. Rakes and P. G. Lester.

This Presbytery was organized by choosing Elders Blancett Moderator and Lester clerk.

Brother Marshall's call to the ministry was read by the clerk as written by him for reasons explained below. Elder Lester led on questions, Elder Williams led in prayer with laying on of hands by the Presbytery, charge by the Moderator and right hand of fellowship by the Presbytery and the church.

Remarks :

Elder Joel E. Marshall after a spell of sickness in his eighth year began to stammer, and it is with considerable difficulty that he now conducts an ordinary conversation.

Sometime after he was convicted he began to have spasms, during which at first his lips were seen to move as tho' he was trying to speak. Later on he began to whisper, when it was ascertained he was engaged in prayer. Soon he began to pray aloud. After that he obtained a hope. He, during the time these spasms are on him, lies first upon his back, and directly engages in prayer, then turns upon his side, resting on his elbow and begins to preach. Directly he sets up, then gets upon his feet, and preaches for three quarters of an hour with marked ability without stammering whatever. He sometimes begins these services with singing and conducts them in regular order.

After he has finished preaching, he falls upon his face and remains quiet for about ten minutes, and then arises, relieved in mind but wearied in body.

When he attempts to preach at church and has any degree of liberty of mind he prays and preaches without any particular impediment in his speech.

When he feels to have the spirit he can read a hymn, otherwise he cannot.

If he has impressions to preach, and does not go first, sometimes he has a spasm, and begins to preach before, or by the time the preceding one is through.

When prayer has been made he omits it, but otherwise he invariably prays.

When he preaches in one of these spells he does not know that he preaches when he comes to himself, or what text he used, only a certain text was on his mind which is always the one used on that occasion.

His preaching in these spells is more clearly defined, and shows greater ability than when under ordinary circumstances. While these things seem strange to some, yet they are the facts in the case as given by his pastor Elder James M. Blancett and other of our preachers and brethren. I have heard the brother sing, pray and preach clearly, but not during a spasm. There is nothing too hard for the Lord.

P. G. L.

THE DOOR AND THE KEYS OF THE CHURCH.

Dear Brother Gold, I give my views in reference to the proper keys that open the door of the church. The Son of God is the door of the church. The Holy Ghost gives the keys to them that have been born again, and such present themselves to the church; present the key for the church to examine to see if it will enter the door, as its foundation, and the church says yea, and the door is opened. Then they are baptised in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost and have the right to sit together in Heavenly places.

I was speaking with an able minister of the Gospel who contended that the gospel ministry is the key of the church. I contended that every one that had been born again had a key to fit the same lock in the door, and then asked him if there were no ministers where there were several members in a church could they not transact business such as receiving members, and dealing with members for transgression? He said no. Your Brother I hope in the faith

CHARLES IVEY.

P. S. BROTHER GOLD, Please give your views on the above subject. I want to be established in nothing but the truth, and to know nothing among men but Jesus Christ and Him Crucified on my part. Brother Gold, I am now going on my seventy-third year, and cannot expect to scribble much more, and have always been negligent and forgetful, and still more so now. This much I want to try and recollect never to do any thing to hurt my brethren's feeling.

Remarks.

Christ is the way, the truth, and the life. He also says, I am the door, by me if any man enter he shall go in and out and found pasture. That is he that enters in by Christ, the door, shall have the utmost freedom in the house, because Christ is the true door; so that one who enters by Christ enters by the true way that gives him all liberty and the fullest right to the house or church. As if you should bring one into your own house yourself, by your own choice, whom you loved, and should desire him to have the most home-like feeling, you would say to him, "come and go just as you please." it would be the same as saying, go in and out and find pasture. While the gospel preacher preaches that which unlocks the hearts, or gains admittance in'to the hearts of gospel hearers so that as he preaches the gospel all true hearers receive with joy his message, and he is in their hearts to live and to die with them, his message is as a key opening the hearts of the hearers, so that an open door is given him.

But when one goes to the church seeking membership he does not enter by the preacher. If he has an experience of grace and is led by the Spirit of God when he goes home to his friends the church, and tells them what great things the Lord has done for him, that which he tells is as a key opening the door or hearts of the bretheren, so that he comes in by Jesus, or in his name, and an open door of fellowship is given him, so that he is received into the fellowship of the church and dwells there.

Can a church receive members when no preacher is present? most certainly it can. Churches are not so dependent on preachers as that in the absence of a preacher at the church meeting. The deacon then or some other brother should offer prayer, and they should worship God, hold their conference, and attend to the proper business of the church.

It occurs to me that churches are too remiss in this matter at times failing often to open the door of the church for the reception of members.

The preacher is a servant of the church, not the Lord over it. The mind of the Lord is with his people. All the gifts are with the church. When they are therefore gathered in the name of the Lord and the spirit or mind of the apostles, all other gifts are with the church whether they are in person present or not.

So that a church should, in the absence of her pastor or a preacher, at her regular meetings, whenever she thinks proper attend to the proper business that needs attention, remembering that they are accountable to the Lord, and not to the preacher.

Our aged brother Ivey has long been a faithful, warm hearted Baptist. May the Lord be his comfort and stay, his rod and staff, in his old age, so that he shall still bear fruit even to old age. For in Jesus is all our fruit found.

P. D. G.

HIGH AS THE HEAVENS ARE ABOVE THE EARTH.

"I have been attending our Associations regularly for the last forty-five years, and can say of a truth that I never enjoyed myself better than I did at our two Associations at Town Creek and Camp Branch. The glorious gospel of the blessed God was preached in all its purity, not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the spirit and power. The brethren and sisters were made to rejoice in hope of the glory of God's salvation by grace which was the theme dwelt upon, and that according to God's eternal purpose which he purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord and his electing love, combined with his foreknowledge, predestination, effectual calling, justification and final glorification in the land of pure delight where saints immortal reign. What shall we say to these things? If God be for us who can be against us? And if brethren would stop where the apos-ties stopped all would be right, but when they begin to speculate and theorize and get outside of the Book it always works out just as the apostle says, words to no profit, but to the subverting of the hearers. Moses, the servant of God, says: "Secret things belong to the Lord our God, but revealed things unto us and our children, that we may do all the words of this law," and I have made it a point during my ministry of nearly forty-five years to be governed by this rule, and, Brother Gold, if all our preaching brethren would do the same, how much useless and unprofitable controversy might be avoided, instead of wasting their time in trying to prove the absolute predestination of all things which they cannot do without making God the author of all the wickedness and meanness that takes place in the world stop where the Saviour and the Apostles do and all will be well: and may the God of all grace incline the hearts of the people everywhere thus to walk and maintain the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace, is the prayer of your aged brother, now in his 76th year, for Jesus' sake. Your unworthy brother in gospel bonds,

JOHN R. MARTIN.

Remarks:

The above is quoted from the minutes of the Pigg River Association, and written by its clerk, Elder John R. Martin, who has been the ablest preacher of that Association, and faithful for many years.

He is one of the oldest and most gifted preachers of all the mountains of Va., or N. C., It is well worth weighing.

The Bible, from the beginning to its close, condemns sin, and God abhors it. Man is without excuse or apology when he sins. My own experience teaches me God hates it. Sin is my worst trouble, and the cause of all our troubles. Jesus saves his people from their sins. One of the sweet thoughts of salvation is freedom from sin. Any theory of man that in any sense would charge God foolishly as being the author of sin is to be utterly and forever rejected by this paper.

That God overrules the wicked and makes them subserve his purpose, I fully believe. God is God of all the deep places of the earth. But no man can explain these things, nor comprehend the ways of God, save as they are revealed or declared in his word. For high as the heavens are above the earth so far are his ways above our ways and his thoughts above our thoughts.

P. D. G.

ELDER P. D. GOLD.—DEAR BROTHER IN THE LORD:—You will please find in this letter $5.00 to assist Brother Sylvester Hassell in paying the enormous debt incurred in waiting on his Baptist brethren. I do hope that the Baptists and friends will see that Brother Hassell will not have one dollar of that debt to pay. It would be shame on Baptists to suffer such a thing. May the Lord put it in their hearts to relieve our brother. I am poor, have to work hard for my living, besides my serving the churches as best I can: but I will be one of any number that will give him $5.00. Here is the money.

Dear Brother Gold, may the Lord sustain you in your editorial and ministerial labors, and at last bring you to the full enjoyment of his glory, is my prayer in your behalf for Jesus' sake. Yours in bonds of everlasting love, I hope. Most affectionately,

W. W. SAMMONS.

Cedar Chapel, Tenn.

Brethren and friends will please consider Brother Hassell's case.

Let all brethren who can spare the money make their contributions to him for he needs them. Every dime will help. Put a pile of little gifts together and they will make the large one, and will meet the case.

Obituary.

SUSAN E. JOYNER.

MR. P. D. GOLD:—Please publish the death of our mother Susan E. Joyner, the wife of Howell Joyner, and the daughter of Elizabeth and David Philips who was born and raised in Edgcombe County N. C.

Mother departed this life Jan. 29th 1880. Her stay on earth was 53 years. She never professed any kind of religion but was a strong believer in the Primitive Baptist cause and loved all of God's people. She always attended church at 'Tysons' as regular as any of the members every third Saturday and Sunday in each month. She was confined to her room for four months and during that time she suffered a great deal from a disease unknown of the stomach. She lived forty two days without eating or drinking as she could not retain anything. Mother had a strong desire to recover until three weeks before she died. That night she had my father and her children to kneel around her bedside and pray, she prayed with us that if consistent with God's will she might be restored to health, if not all of us might be resigned. I cannot recall any of the words of her prayer. I very well remember the words of the hymn she repeated which we had engraved on her tombstone.

"How lost was my condition,
Till Jesus made me whole,
There is but one physician
Can cure a sin-sick soul?" &c

Your friend,

PATTIE E. COBB.

Farmville, N. C.

MINNIE LEE.

DEAR BRETHREN:—Having been requested by brother William Atkinson to write an obituary of his infant daughter who died while I was sojourning with him, and not feeling able to comply with the request, I earnestly implore God to guide me while I attempt to write.

Minnie Lee infant daughter of brother William and sister Nannie Atkinson was born Nov. 25th 1883, and died Dec. 16th 1887, aged 4 years and 21 days. She was a special favorite of her parents and all who knew and were acquainted with her, being of an amiable loving disposition and of pleasant turn.

She had a severe cold for two or three weeks before she died which gave rise to croup which ended her life: the aid of a skillful physician and all other remedies were of no avail, she must die. About twenty four hours before the last expiring breath left her, she arose from her pillow, and said, "I must die," then after a few short breaths she seemed to gain strength, and in a loving tone with eyes fixed heavenward and countenance serene, she said, "I want to hug Papa," then she wanted to hug the doctor, then Mr. Ashburn, then mamma, and while her mother was in her embrace she, her mother, began crying, which she noticed and fell back upon her pillow, and said in a low whisper, "hush, hush, hush," then appeared to sink into unconsciousness, then she aroused to a knowledge of her parents which knowledge she kept until she died. Brother Atkinson seemed to give her up willingly, and says he believes she was a minister in the hands of God in bringing him to Jesus.

There are many ways by which we are shown the power of God, and yet only one way by which men are saved, and that is by the grace of God, by which we trust Minnie Lee is now singing the song of Redemption. Your unworthy little brother.

J. A. ASHBURN.

J. J. SAMMONS.

Please publish the death of John J. Sammons who was born in September 1842, and died Oct. 25th 1888, and leaves a wife and four children, two sisters and one brother, and many friends to mourn their loss. He was under the terrific disease of consumption for about twelve months before he died. He bore his affliction with great patience. His mother and two sisters are members of the Primitive church, and faithful members they are. The writer visited him in his sickness. He appeared to have some hope of eternal life, but would not acknowledge it. His mother and sisters and myself have some hope for him.

I write this by request of his daughter
W. F. COVIL.

Onslow Co., N. C.

JESSE W. BAILEY.

This little one was the pride of the family, and was the last one of mothers's children, he was also my dear baby brother and the son of W. J. Bailey, and his wife Cealey Jane Bailey. He was born Dec. 23d 1871, and died June 4th 1874, making his days few on this earth. He was sick twenty two months. Poor little sufferer. I believe he suffered his suffering on this earth. I always have felt quiet and composed about him, though I missed him so much when he first was taken from us. I was the one that held him in my lap and rocked him for seven months day by day, and my dear mother watched over him at night for a long time until he got so low we had to keep him on the bed. He was set up with for seven months, and after all was done with poor mortal hands for him, the dear Lord of heaven sent the angel of death to visit our home and take the pet from us.

That was a solemn shock to us. It was the first one that had died since my birth, and it seemed like it would almost kill me. All of us can bear more than we think for, though I was nothing but a child when he died; but it taught me to worship no mortal on earth.

But it is all for God's own purpose and I hope for our good; but it is hard to give our people up.

I hope the Lord has saved little Jesse from all woe,
Has guarded him from all harm,
And from the many griefs below,
And called him to his arms.

MOSELER LILEY.

WARNER LAFAYETTE LILLY.

This Dear baby was the son of E. A. Lilley and Moseler Lilley. He was born November the 12th 1884, and died the 17th of the same month making his stay only five days. The Lord only sent him to gladden our hearts, and sent an angel to take him from us to his long home. Our nature is to grieve for our loved ones.

The little babe has gone to rest
To reign with God forever blest,
It's little tongue will always praise
A Saviour's love redeeming grace.

MOSELER LILLEY.

JOSEPH E. BAILEY.

This day one year ago I lost one of my best earthly friends Joseph E. Bailey, a dear Brother. He was the son of Warner J. Bailey and Cealey Jane Bailey, was born December the 15th, 1889 and died August the 5, 1887. This boy was a dear boy indeed always thinking for the welfare of the family and especaly dear afflicted mother. He was a laboring man. SIX or seven years ago he had the measles and he never got over it. His health began to give way. He was sick twelve weeks and two days with Typhoid Fever. He tried to be candid in all he said and did. He was never known to be drunk in his life, nor swear an oath. Before he died he prayed and said he was seeing pleasure, and was willing to die, and all the family and many friends were gathered around his bed. He told us all good bye. He fell into a sleep and remained that way three days, and the fourth day he woke up. It filled our hearts with joy to think he had revived but it was only to die for he died that night.

MOSELER LILLEY.

OUR TREATMENT CURES DROPSY IN ITS VARIOUS FORMS.

The Purpose of Zion's Landmark.

By the help of the Lord this paper will contend for the ancient Landmark, guided by its stakes of Truth, and strengthened by its chords of Love.

It hopes to reject all traditions and institutions of men, and regard only the Bible as the standard of truth.

It urges the people to search the Scriptures, and obey Jesus the king in the holy hill of Zion, keeping themselves unspotted from the world.

It aims to contend for the mystery of the faith in God and the Father, Jesus the Mediator, and the Holy Spirit the blessed Comforter.

All lovers of Gospel truth are invited to write for it—if so impressed.

May grace, mercy, and peace be multiplied to all lovers of truth.

VISION.

Upon a dark and doleful night,
As fears began to rise,
I passed into a pleasant dream
Of forms beyond the skies.

Not often though such happy dreams,
Are e'er my lot to own;
But ah to me they are more dear
Than all this world alone.

Here in my dream behold I stood Upon a glittering shore,
And even thought of cherished friends
I loved in days of yore.

And her: it seemed upon this strand
That robes of gold appeared,
Approaching from a fairer land,
And lo a voice I heard.

I turned and cast one look across Unto the other shore,
And lo! there stood the happy band
I'd longed to see before.

One friend of mine that passed away
Stood up among the throng,
And said, behold I've reached the land
You shall possess ere long.

She said, behold those spotless robes,
That's cast upon that side,
Go take them up and bear them on To shield your Savior's Bride.

Go teach the truth as you have been Taught by a Savior's love,
There is but one true source of joy,
And that is from above.

Though oft your cross is hard to bear
And oft your courage low,
But only do think of him who bore
Our sins to make it so.

He left the glorious courts above,
Descended from glory;
Fulfilled the law, restored it back,
That we might holy rise.

Then I awoke and lo! the joy
That seemed to fill my breast,
And that renewed my hope again
Of Sweet and lovely rest.

DESIRES.

Lord, remember me in mercy,
While upon this earth I stay,
Teach me Lord, thy holy statutes,
And allow me not to stray.

Lord wilt thou be ever near me?
Curb my restless spirit in.
Keep me in the path of duty,
Guide and guard me from all sin.

Guide my feet in all their stepplings,
That they may not go amiss,
Keep them in the path of virtue,
In the road to endless bliss.

And my hands Oh Lord, direct them,
In the work that they should do,
Teach them Lord, to do thy bidding,
Till their work on earth is through.

And my heart Lord, take it, cleanse it
From its vile and sinful ways,
Teach it to obey thy mandates;
Save it through all coming days.

And when death shall claim its victim,
Let me lean upon thy word;
Make the passage smooth before me,
And receive my spirit Lord.

SECRET BENEVOLENT SOCIETIES—THEIR UNIVERSALISM.

About a dozen years ago Mr. Hale, one of the most intelligent and truest men ever born in North Carolina, for a long period editing the old Fayetteville Observer, but at the time to which I refer, New York correspondent of the Raleigh Observer, then edited by his able son, Mr. Peter M. Hale, wrote to the latter paper that he had in early life become a member of a Masonic Lodge, and attended their meetings for a while until he found that his time could be more profitably employed otherwise; and that he never had seen any credible evidence to prove that the Masonic society was more than about one thousand years old—origin actually dating about 800 A. D. Now the Masonic Society is, I suppose, the most ancient of all secret Benevolent Societies, and at least as honorable, moral, and useful as any of them. And Mr. E. J. Hale, a gentleman of extraordinary intelligence and reliability, thus declares that this Society, of which he himself was a member, is 800 years younger than the christian church, and that the time of a busy, virtuous man is wasted in attending its meetings.

The nineteenth is the most prolific of all the centuries in Societies of every kind—literary, philosophica^l, scientific, moral, benevolent, political and religious, numbering them by hundreds and even by thousands, and it may well be called the century of Societism. These organizations apparently threaten to destroy almost all healthy individuality; and they have attained such colossal proportions that they seem to look down with great contempt upon the Church of Christ as an imperfect, antiquated, obsolete, insignificant thing, justly superseded, or at least supplemented by modern, men-made Societies—so much wiser and better have men become than the Omniscient and Holy Spirit of Almighty God! Assuredly it does become all those who acknowledge Christ as their only and eternal King, to keep utterly and forever aloof from these compromising and entangling alliances with the world. They are of the world and let the world have its own. As most forcibly remarked Brother Asa Biggs, formerly United States Senator and District Judge of North Carolina, "They have no Jesus in them." They utterly ignore the one thing needful, salvation only by the atoning blood of the incarnate Son of God; and therefore they pertain only to time and have no connection whatever with the infinitely more momentous interests of eternity. In reference to joining any of these organizations the sentiment of the child of God should be, "Perish popularity—perish worldly business—perish mortal life itself, sooner than take any step to bring dishonor upon the precious name and work of my adorable and Divine Redeemer!" Let it be repeated; these men-made Societies are of the world and are for those who have nothing better; if they are of any benefit in making men more outwardly moral or more outwardly kind towards their fellows, let the world have them to its heart's content; but the child of God has no business in them. Not all the efforts and all the contributions of all the Societies in the world ever saved one soul from sin and death. Jesus Christ is the only Saviour; this is the stone set at nought of the worldly builders, but which is really the head of the corner; "neither is there salvation in any other; for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved." In this unspiritual, materialistic, unbelieving, idolatrous, degenerate and degenerating age, that has far more faith in men, means and money than in God, let the Primitive Baptist Church, the Church of Christ, consider it has peculiar province and glory to affirm and reiterate and emphasize, in the most uncompromising manner, this grand, central, apostolic, all-important, all-comprehending truth of the christian religion. There is no particle of salvation in man, but all salvation is in God. Around this great citadel of Truth, and under this holy banner, let the soldiers of the cross rally in the strength of Israel's God, and they will put to flight the armies of the aliens. If this be lost all is lost; and christianity is reduced to the dead level of heathenism, with no power to save any soul of the human race; and the dissemination, by gold and hirelings, of such a lifeless system over the world can be of no spiritual benefit to mankind. To this wretched condition of weakness and death the nominal Christianity of this country and of Europe seems now almost reduced. Says the Apostle Paul, "In the last days, perilous times shall come; for men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud," &c., "Heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God, HAVING A FORM OF GODLINESS, BUT DENYING THE POWER THEREOF; from such turn away."—(2d Tim. 3: 1—5.)

The oath-bound secrecy of many societies that are called benevolent cannot but forever condemn them in the renewed mind of the child of God, who reads and receives in his heart the following words of eternal truth:—"Swear not at all" (Matt. 5: 34); "Men love darkness rather than light because their deeds are evil; for every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be re-proved; but he that doeth truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest, that they are wrought in God." John 3: 19—21.

Another fatal objection, in spiritual-ly enlightened minds, to Modern Benevolent Societies, is their inculcation of the poisonous and awful delusion of Universal Salvation—the certain salvation of all the members, all being represented as going at death from the earthly to the heavenly lodge, thus substituting the Society for the church and even for Christ himself, or idolizing the Society as the means and the god of salvation. "Universalism," says Prof. W. G. M. Shedd, "is most prevalent in the corrupt times—itsself being both a sign and a cause of the corruption." This blasphemous point-blank contradiction of the plainest declarations of the Scriptures seems to be leavening almost all the nations and denominations of the nineteenth century; and it is therefore not at all strange that it is incorporated in the teachings of the Societies of this Century. With myself at least it is a most serious question whether all the ostensible good claimed to have been done to humanity, by "Benevolent" Societies is not far more than counterbalanced by their propagation of this most corrupt and corrupting doctrine of Universalism. History shows that Modern Phariseeism has taken these successive and descending steps—Arminianism, Pelagianism, Unitarianism, Universalism and Atheism.

LOOKING AFTER OUR POSSESSIONS.

Dear and beloved brother John! When I wrote to you last I was in the midst of gay festivities, for I was at the banquet. I remained there for three days, and I and my Comrades supposed that we were to stay there for all time, or at least until some grand convoy should come and transport us away to our patrimony in Canaan: as such we were having a gay and glorious time, but on the morning of the fourth day, just as we were coming out from breakfast, we were confronted by a mild, but firm looking man, who asked us by what authority we were stopping over at the mansion?

We replied by relating how we had first started out, and how the clever, and kind young man had pity on us &c, all this said he is very well, but you shall see how matters will go on. He who has brought you here is Christ Jesus the Lord. You are now as you suppose heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ which indeed is true, but must not expect to live thus idly, indolently all your days: "For now being justified by faith we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." Yes said He, "They who live godly in this world must suffer persecution." Now you are no longer under the law but you are under grace. My office said He is to reprove you of sin, and righteousness, and judgment. There is a dreary, and tiresome wilderness between this blessed Mansion (Church Fellowship) and the fair land to which you go. (Heaven above.) Now that you have become heirs of God, in the future all men, except the few of your own family, will hate you, and will illy treat you, yea and will seek to cheat you, and lure and misguide you, so said He, I am sent by the command of Jesus to be your ever present guide, and will now say to you, that as it has been my special business, for over 6000 years, to conduct pilgrims, and manage soldiers in their march to Canaan, and so doing I have never failed in one single instance, but ever and anon brought them safely through. At times I have had to inflict chastisement on many who have been disobedient. For if you live after the flesh you shall die, (That is die to time comfort and peace of soul,) but if you through the spirit do mortify the deeds of the body you shall live." So said He, you will now each one arise and put on your armor. We obeyed, and he stooping down to our feet, put on our sandals, and he said, "Having your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace," and so He arose and said, placing a helmet upon us, "And for an helmet the hope of salvation," also a breastplate, and He added, This, and this staff serve the one and selfsame purpose, "For we walk by faith and not by sight," and lastly He gave us a sharp two-edged sword, saying, "Wherefore take unto you the sword of the spirit, which is the word of God." Thus equipped, He bade us advance. So the first day we marched along without any special trouble, except that now and then darts having poisoned points upon them would come flying in among us, but we could not see from whence they came, but our leader would cheer us by saying, "Behold I send your forth as lambs among wolves, Be you therefore wise as serpents and harmless as doves." Night coming on we began to dread and fear, but we reached a little hill, and rested upon its summit, our leader calling our attention to a luminous appearance like a fire in the skies above us, and so soon as we were fairly still a gentle rattling upon the earth around us was heard, and our leader said eat, yea and live. This indeed said he is the manna even faith in Jesus Christ, for His body is meat indeed and His blood is drink indeed, so we sat and drank and lay down to repose a little. He placed a stone for our pillow, saying, "Behold I lay in Zion a chief corner stone elect, precious, and he that believeth on Him shall never be confounded, and oh! what a glorious night of rest we had! It was here that we saw a ladder reaching from earth to Heaven. That is from regeneration to sanctification and glory, and its end lost in endless eternity. At the break of day we arose and pursued our journey, the pillar of fire fading away as the sun arose above the horizon, and a pillar of dark cloud standing in its place, but alas for us! for no sooner than we had reached the foot of the hill and entered a dark ravine, our leader shouted, courage my valiants and in an instant such a mighty host was seen advancing upon us from the left led by a famous general whose name is Shame and Doubting. His battalion was divided into four commands, the first was led by himself in person. The second was led by an old commander by the name of Captain Flattery, the third was led by a young man whose name was Money and Honor, and the fourth was led by a woman gorgeously uniformed and called Fashion. Oh! said I to my comrades, why have we allowed ourselves to come out here in the wilderness to die. But we stood firm. First Captain Flattery opened fire upon us in the front by sending forth a sickening compliment by saying that we were taking too much upon ourselves that we were good, safe, and in fact were now heirs of Canaan, and sure of Heaven, and that in as much as our motto was, "By grace are you saved through faith, and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God &c." Why, said he, shall you make any further effort? The fact is, said he, you are straining at gnats and swallowing Camels," you will break down and destroy yourselves. Now, said he, I have had a long experience, and I have made it my business, being as I am a friend to suffering humanity, to invent a scheme, and have a plan on foot by which you can, if you will, save yourselves much of this needless labor and unnecessary work, and you can rest here with me and my comrades, and at the proper time I'll conduct you through to Canaan by a nearer rout, and not only so, but you will be in the very best society, and have the applause of the world, whereas you will, if you scorn a kind offer ever be hated by all men, and you will be doomed to travel alone all your days. As he continued to fire into us with fury we began to feel a little fearful, and a very feeble soldier of our ranks, a brother Regard the Flesh, whom we have taken along with us to chop wood and bring water, said, "Boys, let's go!" But about this time our commander said, "Whosoever will be the friend of the world is the enemy of God." "There is a way that seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death." Upon this a brave little soldier of our company by the name Spiritual Mind jumped up and caught hold of his sword and dashing forward shouted, "The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty to the pulling down of strongholds," and at this we all followed, and in a short time old Flattery and his command were vanquished, and upon his retreating the entire command of Shame and Doubting fled, and so we journeyed on for a while, but very soon we had to halt on account of our comrade and brother soldier, Regard the Flesh, he having become sick, and said also, that he did not relish the food which we were eating, and he made complaint that he was uncomfortable in his plain white garment saying, it looked odd, and he hated to be gazed upon by every villager and by-stander that he passed. So he set up a great plea to stop, and his causing us to halt gave the enemy great advantage, for though they could not enter our road, it being securely hedged on either side, yet they would skulk and linger along, and shoot at us every time that they could get in reach of us; so while we were halted, old General Shame and Doubting came up in our rear and commenced pouring into our ranks a heavy discharge of shame and doubting arrows. Oh! said he, see what you have come to by your folly, you were all one time in your life men of high standing and respectability, you all held and could have held good and honorable positions in society, and you have forfeited it all by going off after this deceiver. Why said he, your captain is nothing on earth but an imagination, your General whom you call Christ is a mere man of low degree, born of a common woman and, "Casteth out devils by Beelzebub, the prince of the devils." How vain and even foolish in you to follow such a whim. The time has been when men had dreams, visions, revelations &c. &c. when angels would eat and drink with them, and relate to them good things; but, said he, that day is past, and you now live in an age of open revelation, and can only understand Canaanitish warfare, and learn to fight successfully by being drilled and trained by me. I furnish rations, uniform, quarters, arms and all needed munitions, free, and the service in my command is high, as I have formed an alliance with all the great powers of earth, and I have sole command of every road that leads to Eternity, except this little miserable narrow guage, and I control all the stock, and I am President of all the other routes and as such, if you will listen to me, you can have an easy trip from now on. Come, said he, surrender. At hearing this Regard the Flesh threw down this ax and water-bucket, and said, good day boys, if you wish to die in shame and disgrace I will not. So our Captain bade us take him under arrest and send to the rear, saying, "And a man's foes shall be they of his own household." And while bringing him under our enemy fired upon us heavily and he too put up a stout resistance, so much so that we exclaimed, "Oh wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death." But at length we succeeded in getting him securely fettered, as we thought, and turned upon our enemy again, and as we were upon the eve of despair, a young soldier of command, by the name of Hope in Christ, ran to the front and raised the flag, red with blood of Christ Jesus! At the sight of his our enemies fell back and became as dead men! Then said our commander, I have been waiting for a little while, just to see if you would not use the weapons which you have at your command. I can assure you that if you will but use them you shall never fail. "No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper, and every tongue that shall rise in judgement thou shalt condemn," so, said He, now let us proceed, we shall have a little space to rest now, except that we must convene a court-marshal and try the case of Regard the Flesh. So we halted and when we had eaten and drunk to the full satisfaction of us all, our commander sent a brother Love the Cause, to bring Regard the Flesh from prison, but when he reached the prison we were alarmed to hear the sharp clanking of his two-edged sword and so we all ran to see the cause, and upon reaching the prison, which was near to the hedge on one side of our narrow road, we were surprised to find a band of men dressed in garments nearly white, and who could interpret a great deal of our language, and who sternly affirmed themselves to be older in the command of Jesus than we. These men, I say, had succeeded in reaching the hedge, and were handing over to Regard the Flesh lunch baskets full of modern rations, such as stove cooked meats, cakes of science, and tea of self-esteem, and had smuggled into him a repeating pistol, composed of human power which shot eloquence, wit, slang and mutilated scripture. So with much effort we succeeded in driving them off and in bringing our prisoner to trial. The result of the trial will appear in my next letter. As I am on active duty, and my face toward Zion, I'll bid you farewell for this time. Your contented brother.

DAVID.

ELDER P. D. GOLD:—VERY DEAR BROTHER.—I am in the Providence of an all-wise God, yet living and well and on the line of my profession, in the far west, 1,500 miles from my home, at Cabell, Carroll Co., Va., I have met and tried to preach to many thousands of people since I parted with you at dear Brother Hawks, at Chesnut Grove, Va., I traveled with my dear brother and true yoke-fellow, Elder B. E. Caudill, through Va., N. C., Tenn., and Ky., to the Red Bird Association, of which Elder Caudill is its humble, yet very efficient Moderator, and Elder Taylor Gilbert, Clerk. We there met with the messengers and a goodly number of correspondents in the unity of the spirit and bond of peace, had a pleasant Association and quite a number of good meetings all along the line. The dear brethren and sisters seemed to rejoice where we preached. I then took the train at London, Ky., for the West stopped at Mexico Mo., visited my son H. S. Lundy and family. He is a Primitive Baptist. I then went west to Saline and Layette Counties, saw friends and relatives—then west to Clyde, Kan. visiting relatives and tried to preach several times. I then went to Washington where I met with several from N. C. and some Old Baptists, they seemed wonderfully pleased. Sister Low and Forest with their husbands, S. Scott and wife, Sister Long and Harriss; Elder A. J. Taylor's daughters with their husbands and children, all seemed overjoyed. Their treatment was very kind. Old Brother Boyer, Sister Boyer and young brother Boyer from Ill., and near Morrow Station, 7 miles west of Washington, Kansas, with many others are very anxious to have preaching by Primitive Baptists. Let me speak a word in their favor. Some Primitive Baptist minister ought to pass that way; for there are several little bleating lambs in that section. The prospect is favorable for a constitution of a church near there by proper management. Any minister of the Primitive order seeing this and living near enough ought to visit them. Write to H. Long, or W. Boyer, Morrow, Kansas and they will give information. The Signs of the Times and Primitive Monitor will please copy. Perhaps some minister will see it and thereby become inclined that way. If I live to get home I will give a more particular account of this trip. I hope the brethren ren and sisters will be engaged at a throne of sovereign grace,

WILLIAM LUNDY.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS IN CHRIST, if worthy to claim you. Being requested to write a little for the LANDMARK, I have about got the consent of my mind to try in my weakness to write a little about what I feel like the Lord has done for poor unworthy me. I was born in Stokes Co., July the 23rd, 1853. My parents moved to Surry Co., in 1856 where I was brought up to womanhood. I think the first serious impressions that I had were in my fourteenth year, when staying with my sister. At that time one day when in the field at work by myself all at once fear came on me. It seemed to me the hills were going to close in all around. Falling to my knees I tried to pray to the Lord to have mercy on me, a poor sinful child. I went on for sometime not thinking more about it, when one night I dreamed and saw the Lord in the yard, and I went up to him and shook hands with him, and that dream is in my mind until yet. It made me begin to study whether or not I ever would meet with him. I began to read the Bible and get in some secret place to try to pray, but didn't want anybody to know anything about it. My parents were Missionaries, and I went to their meetings, and the members would try to get me to the mourner's bench, but I never did feel like going. I went on in this way for sometime travelling over rough and rugged roads, out of one trouble into another for several years, all the time trying to beg the Lord to have mercy on me a sinner. In the winter of '84 I was taken with fever and was very low. I tried to pray to the Lord to have mercy on me one more time, when these words came to me, "Fear not, I am with thee, I will strengthen thee." There came such a good feeling over me that I felt easy, and felt like I was going to get well, and did so. It was not any good that I had done, but by the grace of God that I am what I am. I did not praise the Lord as I ought, and went on for over four years, not living in obedience to his command. I would go to meeting and the preachers would tell my feelings so well that it seemed strange how I could doubt so much. But it seemed that it never would do for me to go to the church, that I could see my wrongs so plainly that other people could too. So I promised myself that I would not go until I had better evidence. But I was made by a higher power to say "Lord, if you will spare my life I will go." So I went and to my surprise was received and baptized the 8th of July: but I don't claim to be anything yet but a poor beggar. Pray for me.

MRS LUZETTA STONE.

ELDER GOLD, Dear Sir:—Through the solicitations of Elder J. W. Davis I was induced to subscribe for the LANDMARK. I have received two copies and am well pleased. I think that J. C. Hall's article on, "Election and Predestination" is the best piece I ever read, but I am satisfied that I am one of the few that think so at this place, for our town is filled with arminism under the different names of churches, claiming that "Salvation" is conditional, and that the conditions are hinged solely upon the individual, that God has done all that He ever will do for the sinner. And that the full development, completion, and final triumph of the church depends on, and is in the hands of the Sabbath school. And it is further agreed and advised, that if the congregations are not able to support both let their preachers go and maintain their Sabbath School. So you see the course that is being pursued in this part of the moral vineyard. Yours Respectfully,

C. W. WILSON.

Remark: The Sunday school is one of the great idols among these modern denominations. Israel is kept separate from the world and trusts alone in the Lord. This is a day of blasphemy, wickedness, love of money, love of power, political corruption, oppression of the poor by the rich, show of religion, worship of human learning, worship of fine houses, children disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, a day of abomination, yet a day in which they are very righteous and doing wonderful works.

P. D. G.

BROTHER GOLD, Please write through the LANDMARK when convenient on this text. The Lord is there. I once heard Brother Pate preach from this text many years ago, and have often thought I would ask him to take it up again, but believing that he would preach what God gave him to preach, and that would be sufficient. It may have been thirty years ago since I heard him preach from this text, and have nearly lost sight of the run of his discourse, would be glad to hear from you on the same subject. Please write soon as convenient. Brother Gold I have often thought of the goodness and severity of God. May we not hope this great calamity, yellow fever, is the goodness of God though severe, but we must remember that God will do all his pleasure, and he is just as well as good. Brother Gold, I can't read any at all, hardly ever hear any preaching only what I hear through the LANDMARK, would be glad some kind brother would write through the LANDMARK on Micah, his sorrow, his search through the vineyard for grapes, but finding none: but after a while he spied a few berries in the top-most boughs. Brother Gold, I have a small idea of those things, but my ideas are so small I have no pleasure in them? Brother Gold, I thought I would say something to you about the 8th chapter of Romans. This chapter has been precious to my poor soul. Many a time has my poor hungry, thirsty, soul feasted while reading this chapter, but never filled: but reading on down to the 20th, verse there I find a stop, and wonder in my own mind if I have ever known any thing about the ways of the Lord. This verse reads, Therefore the creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly

This I have always believed and shall believe to the day of my death, if I believe anything. Brother Lester in his remarks gave me full satisfaction in part, on this subject, but my dear brother, I think this scripture has a two fold meaning. I think Adam is the subject that is spoken of, for we all know that Adam had no will of his own in his creation, for what has the clay to do or say with the potter, or what has the creature to do with his creation. I think Adam is the creature that was made subject to vanity, for the very reason of the 22nd verse of this chapter. I think Brother Lester is very right when he says, that every christian is subject to vanity, but not willingly: for the heirs of salvation are all born of God, but not willing to live after the flesh. The things they would not do they do, but as the creature was made subject so all his offspring must be, for we know that the first man Adam is the father of all living so all men are subject to transgress as he was. Can we suppose that Adam would have been willing to disobey his Creator if he had known the end from the beginning, but when his eyes were opened and he saw what he had done, in sorrow, shame and fear he fled from the presence of his Maker. Whether man was made subject or not, God knoweth. We know nothing at all. But why should we marvel at the fall of man, since the preparation for the rise was made before the fall. What did good old Simeon say when he took the little babe in his arms and blessed him? Brother Gold, this is why I said what I did in the letter I wrote to you which was sometime in March '87, or in a letter I wrote to Brother Mewborn, sometime after writing to you, I hardly know which, but you have them both. But in one of those letters I said that I believed that the life of Adam was hid with Christ in God from the day he was created, not that all his posterity would be delivered from the bondage of corruption, but the creature itself shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption.

Brother Gold, please give your views on the 23rd verse of the same chapter. Who was Paul speaking of when he said "Ourselves also which have the first fruits of the spirit?" If you ever find space for this letter that I speak of please correct it and set it in order as becomes things of God. If I in my weakness have spoken in error I beg pardon. Please let me hear from you as soon as convenient.

My love to all especially Sister Gold. May the grace of God rest upon all; may he give us our daily bread, forgive our sins, lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil.

P. HAM.

Remarks :

Sister Ham is remarkable for the fertility and freshness of her mind at her advanced age of life. God's people bear fruit to old age.

We think it idle to speculate on what is not, and never will be. Like sister Ham we think if it had been the will of God for Adam to remain in the Garden of Eden he would have remained. A wise man accepts things as they are and does not speculate on what would be if so and so had been—or if such and such things had not been.

Sister Ham asks my view of Rom. 8 : 23. This states that even the Apostles, who had the first fruits of the spirit, groaned within themselves, waiting for the adoption—that is the redemption of their body from the bondage of corruption, or it shows that they are also as the creature made subject to vanity, or that no gifts as apostles even with the first or choicest fruits of the Spirit can exempt any one of God's people from this groaning and travelling in pain, in which all the saints of God are involved and entangled from Abel 'till now, and will be until the resurrection, and that all the saints travail together in this groaning.

The 18th, verse says I reckon that the sufferings of this present time, &c. So that Paul does not refer to Adam and his transgression years ago. The whole matter under consideration forbids that view for the apostle is treating not upon Adam in his transgression, but of the child of God now involved and afflicted and suffering in the flesh. That child is a creature as thus manifested. Certainly he is not a creator, but is created in Christ Jesus unto good works; but as in the flesh he is made subject to vanity, a sinner saved by grace, not yet what he hopes to be, still now what he does not want to be, not willingly in this state of vanity or corruption, yet subjected in hope which hope now saves him.

Sister Ham, do you not feel these very things within yourself even now! Does not your groaning within yourself cause you to hope, and does not hope save you as you are enabled to look to the day of your deliverance or adoption, when your vile body shall be changed? Sister Ham, you must, like the prophet Micah, hunger for the first ripe fruit while in this valley of Mesech. Now and then a ripe grape of the gleaning, or a little wine of the vintage, is given you, or an olive berry of the top-most boughs is plucked, but you must wait for resurrection or the deliverance of the creature, your body, from the bondage of corruption before you are satisfied with Christ the first fruit and full crop of the resurrection.

THE CONTENTNEA ASSOCIATION.

It seems to be a precious and pleasing privilege for Primitive Baptists to communicate their thoughts one to another, and I am thinking this morning of how lately I have been with so many of them, and yet it seems so long ago.

How pleasant it was to sit and hear them talk of their hopes, and fears, faith and their travails through this sin-smiten world. As I have'nt any of them to talk with this morning, and I promised to write when I returned home, and tell how I enjoyed the association, I thought I would say something, but it is impossible for me to describe the enjoyment I received while there.

We left home Thursday evening, stopped that night at Mr. Jas. Corbet's, where we were cared for and treated kindly. I think the most of the family are Baptists, but as I am not I was careful not to ask who was. We left there Friday morning and started, we knew not where, but as God is every where he directed our steps, and we arrived safely at Mr. R. W. Atkinson's about sunset, and I do think that they are the kindest people I ever met. Lord Bacon has beautifully said, "If a man be gracious to strangers it shows that he is a citizen of the world, and his heart is no island, cut off from other islands, but a continent that joins them." They are good people. We stopped with them every night during the Association, and I thought Mr Atkinson was a preacher from the way he talked, but I found out he was not though I think he will be. I hope no one will think me presumptuous in saying so. Saturday morning we all went out to the church and there met ever so many brethren and friends.

Here I want to step back and speak of the feast that I may be understood. There was a time, and is now once in a while, that I could go to church and enjoy the preaching as well as any one could wish. I could go to the Lord in prayer and feel that I could say, "The God of Israel is my God." But alas, I got so I could not pray, and could not hear when I would go to church, and when I try to pray in the secret of my heart I think that I really desire for the world and sin to be shut out that I may feel a little softening of heart, such a flood of vain, vile, foolish thoughts come in as to drown the very breathings of prayer within me. I may be at church and think I will hear as I have before and be all attention, and the next I know it is all gone and for my life I cannot get it back. So when I got the chance of going to this Association I came to this conclusion, that if I could go Mr. Chick would be there and preach and I could hear him as I did once before. I shall never forget one sermon I heard him deliver. I think I felt as much like shouting as any one ever did not to shout. But I will not dwell on this. The first sermon as usual was all a blank and said to myself, have I come all of this distance and cannot hear a word? I could hear people all around me complimenting the fine sermon, and I did not even know what the text was or where it was. Elder L. H. Hardy preached next. I wanted to go to the stand, but a lady friend asked me to go in the house with her that she might see what they did in conference, as she had never been to an Association before. We went out just before he closed, and Elder James S. Dameron took the stand, and although I had never seen him before that I remember, I felt that he was talking to me directly. He told me why it was I could not read my Bible, and I thought how blind I must have been not to know the cause of my darkness. He spoke a very short time, but he took me back to my childhood and brought me to where I am, and would not have left me there but for one thing, disobedience. When he had finished speaking I wanted to go and talk with him so I could know if he knew me, and was talking to me. But I thought of myself and went anywhere but where he was. I can think of it now and know he was speaking to me and for me. I believe many times when the soul is hungering for the living bread, the bread of which if we eat we shall never die, the Lord in due season moves some one through this medium to speak of what the Lord has done for their soul in bringing them out of darkness into light. Then do we thank God for his goodness to us.

After I got back to Mr. A's, before I was aware of what I did I was speaking freely of what I had received by going out that day, and I fear I should have betrayed myself had not a Free Will Baptist laughed at me and told me I could not trust in my own strength and my good works, and I do truly feel that I cannot trust in an arm of flesh, it is too weak, yet I am so blind to spiritual things I trust in Christ to give me light. I sometimes fear that I am so guilty that God cannot forgive me without placing a stain on his purity, yet I can but say to whom can I go but thee? I could feast on the word of God after this and when Elder Chick did preach I felt that it was good that I was there.

It was a feast of fat things. Instead of darkness there was light. The Lord can do all things that it is his pleasure to do.

There were others that spoke just as well as those I have named. I felt what shall I render unto God for his goodness to me in giving me a hearing ear and a heart of understanding. "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and the knowledge of God: How unsearchable are his judgments and his ways past finding out!"

P. D. Gold spoke last and I must say that I listened to what I received as most excellent preaching.

During the closing exercises, or parting hymn, a dear little girl who is greatly afflicted—told me if she was as good as I she could go then and speak to all the people she knew, and enjoy life as I did, and that caused me to look at myself more closely. It seemed that I had gone off from self and this brought me back. I thought, O dear one, you do not know me, O that I could know myself. A short time after this Elders Hardy, Dameron and Chick came to tell us good-by. I could not hide my emotion and could not speak. I hope they did not censure me, or think me foolish. We left there, and stopped that night with a Mr. Phelps. They too belong to the church. I say the church because I believe the Primitive Baptist is the true church. We were cared for with all the kindness here and left for home next morning with their blessing. We arrived home safely.

You who asked me to write I fear will be disappointed, for what I have said is so imperfect. I have written more than I expected to when I took up my pen, but you will excuse,

L. M. J.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—Your remarks in reply to Brother Cobb, and your editorial on how we shall be changed in our bodies when we shall be resurrected are both timely and good, I think. You ask others to write in reference to the things spoken of in Brother Cobb's letter, but you have said enough and I wish to only say, I concur with you. Primitive Baptists or gospel churches may err both in faith and practice; and it would be very difficult to find a perfect church on earth, in its militant state, because it is composed of men and women in the flesh. Therefore, when a gospel church turns away from any error, it should be received in love, as you have said. If such church had received and baptized gospel believers and ordained gospel preachers and deacons, such gospel work should be received also. The church at Corinth, the churches of Galatia and of Asia, are examples of this. The yoke of Jesus is easy and his burden is light. His laws are not intolerant, nor his Spirit destructive, but restoring and forgiving.

How much better it would be if all gospel churches would seek to receive one another even as Christ has received them, in peace and love. For wars and divisions among the churches of the saints are very hurtful to the Lord's people. May all consider the Divine obligation to endeavor to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace. In much affliction, your brother,

D. BARTLEY.

ELDER P. D. GOLD, DEAR BROTHER, When I was on a short preaching tour in the counties of Pamlico and Beaufort, I promised sister Cratch, of Blounts Creek church, to write a short sketch of my tour and send it to the LANDMARK. I left home on the morning of 19th of October, and rode to brother J. W. Lupton's and dined, after which he and sister Lupton, his beloved wife, and myself took a canoe and crossed the sound to Goose Creek island, where brother John R. Rowe is pastor, it being the time of quarterly meeting, and he being absent on a long tour of preaching. I officiated and preached two days. From there I was conveyed by brother W. M. Potter to Bayboro, where I stayed all night with my brother in the flesh Dr. H. B. Ross. Monday night I tried to preach at a school house near the town of Bayboro, and stayed that night at brother Potters. Tuesday morning I was sent by brother Potter to Grantsboro where I tried to preach to a small but interesting congregation. Brother W. M. Brinson met me at this church, he is a licentiate and a very lovely brother. We took dinner at brother Dowdy's, who is a lovely brother and has a very interesting family, his wife is also a Baptist. After dinner brother Brinson took me in his buggy to brother John Rowe's, (father to Elder J. R. Rowe,) who lives near Sandy Grove church, my next appointment. Here I met several of my kindred in the flesh as well as I trust in Christ. We had a very pleasant meeting the following day at Sandy Grove church though the congregation was small. In the evening my dear cousin, (the wife of brother Rowe) took me in her buggy to her dear brother's, Riley Ross, who is 82 years old, and is much afflicted with Bronchitis, though he is a Baptist and sound in the faith of God's Elect. Thursday morning we left our dear brother and family and went to Blount's Creek, where we met a very interesting congregation being mostly Baptists, from thence we returned to her home.

After resting a few hours I visited another relative who lived near by, whose name is Riley Ross, there I staid with him and his good family 'til Saturday morning when he sent me to Aurora where I met the steamer and arrived at brother J. M. Lupton's late in the evening. Sunday morning we went to Beulah church, Hyde County, where I have my membership, and there I tried to preach my last sermon on my trip. In the evening I reached home and found all well for which I hope I felt thankful to the Lord.

TOUR.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD AND LESTER, Editors of our ZION'S LANDMARK, according to promise I now appear at my desk to give a short sketch of my tour south. I left the morning of the 13th Sep. from London, Ky. passed through Knoxville, Tenn. to Johnson city, thence the narrow gauge to Elk Park, N. C., Watauga Co., from there to the Senter Association. Notwithstanding the very wet weather I met a respectable crowd of brethern from different Associations, and all the churches of this District were well organized and union abounded far and near, and not a discord internal nor external. The preaching was all of one peice salvation by grace alone. I then passed on to the Mountain, to represent the Redbird Association in the 90th session of the Mountain. Here I met with a long desired meeting, all both churches and correspondents were organized and found in one mind, from the Southern Coast to the center of this nation peace flowed here like a mighty river. Here I met the Editors of the LANDMARK Elders Gold and Lester with correspondence from all around, Washington, Indian Creek, New River, Fishes River, Roaring River, Silver Creek, Senter and Redbird, and a host from the East toward the Kehukee. Oh how my poor heart was then made to rejoice. I felt each day it was good to be there, and especially Sunday evening when we were taking the parting hand. I must say I thought that one of the lovelist times of life seen or felt by me. Surely we will never forget that hour. I then passed on the following day to Meadow Creek, with brother Gold and Lundy to Good Hope. At each place we had fine good meetings, then across the Blue Ridge to Lamsburg when we parted with dear brother Gold, he going East and we turned West. May the good Lord ever be with dear brother Gold as he has been in the past. I did enjoy his company so much. The next day my self and dear brother Lundy in connection with our dear young brother Smith Webb at the Mt. Lebanon church met a large congregation of people to whom we preached. At the close of this meeting two came forward and gave the relation of their faith and were received for Baptism. We then adjourned for dinner, and after a large crowd dined with the aged widow, we all repaired to the Creek where your unworthy writer Baptised three willing subjects. M. F. Edwards, and sister Miller, with another young sister, brother Cain also Baptised a brother. That was certainly a good time: we left them there, the meeting still going on in the road, in many tears, and dear brother Lundy then set our face West, and passed many churches in the Mountain and Senter Districts to the Baptist valley, in Silver Creek. There we preached two days, Saturday and Sunday, and Sunday one came forward by the name of J. E. Curlee, and gave reasons of a good hope through grace. We all believed he was truly a child of God, and on Sunday morning the unworthy writer Baptised the dear brother, we then preached at the church, saints rejoice, and so closed my tour south. One month from that night two more joined that church. May the Lord ever bless all that said pray for me or mine. So I feel to take courage and go forward ever trusting in the Lord. Pray for me one and all, as one of the most unworthy.

Editorial.

WHAT SHALL I DO ?

In every avenue along life's journey the child of God finds the above question day by day burning in his heart. In all of our sickness we wish to be cured and the first question is, what shall I do? Is there no balm in Gilead, is there no physician that can cure a sin-sick soul? We remember of having heard of one who could heal all manner of diseases, but then we were well and did not feel that we ever should need the services of this physician, so we did not charge our memories with the facts concerning him, and so we know not where to find him. All earthly physicians have failed and our case is worse. Our means with which to buy have also failed. Our head grows sick and our heart becomes faint; wounds, bruises and putrefying sores cover us from the head even unto the foot. We realize there is no soundness in us, and to add to this awful state of affairs we find no one able to heal us, and the sentence of death is read out to us, whereupon we turn to the wall from all natural helps and remedies and yield up our case as one deserving this end, but still we wo'd plead for mercy, and in our anguish of soul we cry out what shall we do? or what shall I do? And at this the greatest time of need, there is a voice that proclaims "Look unto me and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth, for I am God and there is none else." Or again this same voice says, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy-laden, and I will give you rest." Again the answer may be in the form of an impression in the heart, "If I can but touch the hem of his garment I shall be healed," "Jesus thou Son of David have mercy on me." This does not seem to be doing much and yet it is the work of God; for these afflicted ones believe in this word, and this is the work of God that ye believe on him whom he hath sent. There is nothing better than to look to Jesus and believe in him, and put our trust in him, and when we can thus do, which we cannot alway, we are perfected in him in every part, and can and do rejoice in him the God of our salvation and do rest in a finished work of salvation in him.

As pertaining to the church and the privilege thereof we are often burdened and groan in spirit and are made to enquire what shall I do? In all such cases the only remedy is in doing what we are impressed to do "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do do with all thy might." Every one taught of God has the right to come before the church and give an expression of their feelings or impressions, and it is the privilege of all such to feel and act freely in love and meekness. If you feel to speak to the church, who has said you shall not, what do you feel burdened or impressed to do that is allowable for God's people? If you feel to shout, or sing, or pray, or or preach or to do all these, just go about it, and if it is God working in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure, you will surely work out your own salvation with fear and trembling.

God calls a man to preach, lays upon him the yoke and work of the ministry, and bids him go and preach the gospel. And he says, "Lord I cannot go, I cannot preach. I am too ignorant to preach the gospel. I am too unworthy and am unfit in every way. Well, all this is true and the Lord knows it. What an indescribable feeling is in the heart of this poor man, when he sees his entire unfitness for the work and when he knows that the Lord knows him altogether, and that he cannot preach, and yet the command is "Go and preach the preaching I bid thee." I cannot go, what shall I do? I will take an excursion trip down to Tarsus and enter the marts of business there and wear off this impression; but the Lord turns him down to hell, and makes him do business in deep waters and causes the billows to go over him and the weeds to wrap about his head, and from thence he cries, "I will pay that which I vowed. salvation is of the Lord." This is an instance in which let Jonah have gone which way he might and he would have finally arrived at Nineveh just as he did. God does not call men because they are qualified for the work, but because he would have them preach the gospel. In his will and command is the qualification, "Preach the preaching I bid thee." Not what you know now, but what I will tell you then. Among many illustrations of this truth in my own experience I will mention one of the most prominent in my mind at present. Once I was appointed to preach at an Association and it fell on me to follow some of the ablest gifts in our ministry, and it seemed to me that they were especially clear and powerful in the word that day, so much so that nothing was left for me to say ; besides the congregation appeared to me to be satisfied. Being in good natural health I felt to have no excuse that the brethren would accept, so I began to try to think of something to say, but all was closed and sealed. The more I struggled the greater I became distressed, until the agitation of mind was becoming intense. Finally while walking along the road alone during intermission, I tried to ask the Lord to give me something to say. And the answer was you do not need anything now, there is no one here to whom to preach, and with it came the thought that we are often anxious while living to know whether we will have grace with which to die. And it occurred to me that while living we need grace with which to live and not until we come to die will we need it for that hour, that we should be willing to live instead of wanting now to be willing to die, and that when the time came to preach would be time enough for something to say, and power to say it, where, upon I became reconciled to preach or not just as the Lord should direct. When the time came for me to say something I looked over the large audience of upturned and pleasant faces, and this text was given me, "They did all eat and were filled." I felt that it was even so in that instance, and readily concluded that all I had to do was to quote this text as a reason why I should not preach because the full soul loatheth the honeycomb. So I put in my excuse and gave the proof text, but I thought I would make a few remarks about the breaking of the loaves and fishes, and it took me about one hour to let go the subject. I forgot all the preachers that had gone before and those to follow, and in my own mind I felt to be comforted. The people can answer for themselves. We can but trust in the Lord, "For in the

What to do under any and all circumstances can only be determined by that Spirit which has impressed the mind with the necessity that something sho'd and must be done. It is necessary that one should feel for himself the need of whatever is designed for him by the great giver of every good and perfect gift. And while the cause of that need is in the sinner, yet the sense or knowledge of it is in and by the Spirit of Christ in him. And though the sinner must and is made to feel that something must be done, yet the doing of it is of and by the Lord God working in him, yet the work is made to appear as tho' it was actually done by the sinner, and the sinner stands as fully justified and commended as if he had of himself done it, and thereby the Spirit helpeth our infirmities.

God works in his people both to will and to do of his good pleasure, and as he works in them they manifest outwardly in their conduct and conversation.

In order to do an acceptable work it is necessary that one should have a will to work, to know what to do and how to do it and to have the power to do it. God requires nothing to be done contrary to the will of his servants. They are willing to do what he requires, but they may not know how to do it. "To will is present with me but to perform that which is good I find not." I want to do says one, but I do not know how to do this great work, what shall I do, who will undertake for me? O Lord have mercy on me ; what shall I do? is often expressive of the extremity of ones resources, when all helps fail and despair is taking hold upon them. Then Jesus appears and the poor trembling child of God is raised out of all his troubles is made wise unto salvation, the work is performed and God is glorified. He looks back and sees the hand of the Lord in all his troubles and conflicts, and the way he has come was the right way, and the work is of the Lord and is a perfect work. Now what is to be done but to praise the Lord for his goodness and for his wonderful works to the children of men. "Praise ye the Lord." P. G. L.

MOST WONDERFUL NAME.

Sister P. Ham requests my view of these words, "The Lord is there." Eze. 48 :35. The clause reads, "And the name of the city from that day shall be, the Lord is there."

There is a peculiarity in the Book of Ezekiel.* The carrying away of Israel into captivity, and the restoration of that people to their own land, the sins of that nation, and God's judgments upon them, his love to them and the bringing them home again are portrayed by this writer with a force of inspiration that stands unsurpassed in bible language.

We must regard Israel under the law as typical and passing through great tribulation into gospel deliverance. Going into Babylon represents death, returning to their own land shadows forth the resurrection. The vision of the dry bones sets forth the whole house of Israel as utterly dead and scattered in hopeless confusion. The coming of bone to his bone shows the complete and perfect return of each vitalized bone to his place in the perfect body of the church risen from the dead and complete in Jesus.

In the last chapter of the book there is an account of the rebuilding of the temple, the order of the worship, the munificence of the gifts, the great estate of the priesthood, the unity of the tribes, the four-square beauty and order of the city, with three tribes on each side, and as many gates; quite the same description is given in the book of Revelation concerning the new Jerusalem, the holy and heavenly city, coming down from God out of Heaven, and God dwelling with men. In that description the richest of Jewels are used to set forth the splendor of the glorious unearthly city of God. Twelve gates represent the twelve tribes of Israel, three on each side, and all ornamented with the covering of the twelve judges to judge the twelve tribes of Israel.

The city lieth four square. This shows strength, a city four square having the same strength equally distributed on all sides of its four walls, each one being equal and equally imparting its strength to every part of the building or city. (2d) It also shows the equality of the city. What one part has another possesses, and thus there is a oneness, for they have all things in equal perfection, and in unity, and there is no lack, nor strife, schism, nor confusion. (3) It also shows the order and beauty of the city, for each tribe hath its lot linked to another and so fitly joined together that there is no lack in any part of the city, for the strength of the first reaches unto the last, and the strength of the last goes to the first one, so that all the strength of all the twelve tribes is fully in each one, and the one is in the many, and the many are in the all, or one is in all, and all are in one. The first portion is for Dan which means judgement, and shows that this tribe is judged and justified by the God of heaven. Next Asher joins Dan which means blessed or happy, for all those whom God judges are blessed. On the border of Asher joined unto his portion is Naphtali which means prevailing, as one that has the spirit of prayer and of overcoming. Unto Naphtali is joined Manasseh which causes one to forget all his sorrow and toil as overcoming and prevailing. On the pleasant border of Manasseh and joined unto him lies Ephraim, as one fruitful and prosperous as favored of God. Next unto Ephraim is joined Reuben because the Lord looks upon this one and smiles, therefore love appears. Then unto Reuben is joined Judah which means praise, in him praise is offered to God, for from his border all offering to God is made in this holy city, and the Sanctuary shall be in the midst of it. For the Prince shall be there even Jesus, and the priests: and unto Judah shall be joined Benjamin the son of the right hand, and the resurrection or that which is risen in the death of Rachel, and is the son of the right hand. Next unto Benjamin is joined Simeon which means heard, for God has heard the cries of his people, and given them rest and peace. By the border of Simeon joins Isaacher the fruit and reward of purchase or hire. Jesus has the reward of his toil, and sees of the travail of his soul in this fruit of the womb. Joined unto Isaacher is Zebulon which is a goodly dowry or dwelling place. For as a dowry always comes out of the husband's estate and is for none but the wife, she dwells here and enjoys a good home for her husband shall dwell with her forever. Unto Zebulon is joined Gad which means a troop or all the fruits, gifts and conquests flow out of Jesus, of which blessings and gifts of goodly words and victorious deeds there shall be no end to order and establish it on the throne of his father David forever. For the zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this.

Observe that each portion is joined to the preceding one going westward, or as the sun runs. How a city can lie four square and yet run westward all the time I will leave those to answer who say there are no mysteries in the bible.

There is an enlargement, ever increasing wonder without limit of its glorious increase in God's works. This is peculiarily in Zion, the perfection of beauty, and the joy of the whole earth, for there God hath shined.

The law had it glory but it was the ministration or glory of death, wherein God shows his abhorrence of sin and his justice in its execution. But the gospel has glory so far exceeding, that the law hath no glory in comparison, for it is swallowed up and vanished away. As the night curtained with darkness, but cheered by the dimmed light of moon and stars, borrowing their light from the sun but fading into disappearance as the undimmed sun casts his light and heat all over the earth filling every inch of earth and heaven with his glory, so that every thing that hath sight beholds his splendor; so the law was the shadowy dispensation preceding the gospel and borrowing some cheerful rays of promise and hope, but it was not the day. For when the true light shines and Jesus the sun of righteousness comes with healing in his wings, and the day pouring, from on high visits, then God who commanded the light to shine out of darkness shines in our hearts to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. That light should shine out of darkness is a noted miracle. That the law which was as the darkness of night should hold covered and concealed that which by the match of truth, blazes into glory is a mystery. How little does a sinner convicted of his sins and overwhelmed under the shadow of death ever hope there is day for him, and when Jesus shines in him and this great light is sprung up the glory of God is risen indeed. The darkness is passed and the true light now shines, for you who were sometimes darkness are now light in the Lord.

When Israel returned from Babylon it was a type of the resurrection. When thy returned to their own land thy saw the glory of God. But this is not the true day nor the better resurrection. The children of these Jews who were brought back from Babylon crucified Jesus, and they were afterwards driven from their city, and the temple was destroyed, and their country trodden down of the Gentiles, and the carnal literal Jews are yet dispersed abroad. We must not then expect the realization of this glorious scripture in the literal return of the Jews to Jerusalem, nor in any such material or earthly manifestation. We do not see the glory of Jesus in splendid earthly cities, palatial residences, nor opulent towns, nor mammoth ships, nor coffers of gold, nor piled up wealth, nor great factories, nor fleet trains, nor busy steam-whistles, nor human beings, nor science, nor art. These things flourish most where there is least of Godliness. The wonderful language used in setting forth the munificence of the offerings and the opulence of the city does not teach that there is to be such a city literally, but it denotes an eternal kingdom of spiritual peace and glory, a reign of grace unto glory, the triumphs of regeneration wherein all things are made new, the coming to the heavenly Jerusalem, the city of the living God, the realization of all that is written of Jesus and his bride, the Lamb's wife made ready to dwell with him in glory by his coming and dwelling with her.

God dwells in his people now of a truth, and they are temples for the indwelling of the Holy ghost. Jesus is now in his people the hope of glory. The kingdom is within his people, but there is yet to be a fuller revelation of these glories. The time will come when God will dwell in full revelation of glory with his people, when there shall be no night there, when there shall be no unclean nor uncircumcised, nothing that loveth or maketh a lie, nor idolater, nor adulterer, nor fornicator, nor unclean person shall be there, where there shall be no pain, nor sorrow, nor sickness, nor death, when these vile bodies will be changed, and we shall be like Jesus because we shall see him as he is, and ever be with the Lord, when the former things will have passed away. It shall be holiness to the Lord, for the name of the city shall be called, "The Lord is there."

P. D. G.

END OF THE YEAR 1888.

This year is fast passing away, and soon will be numbered with things that were: but not so with its events, for God requireth that which is past. Indeed we cannot at will dismiss things that are past. They will come back to us. It is said that old men live in the past, and young ones in the future. But really nothing is absolutely forgotten by man. Such is the constitution of his mind that whatever is imprinted thereon can be reproduced under proper circumstances, and will live again. Could one be assured he must confront his past life and receive according to that which he hath done whether it be good or evil, how careful it seems it ought to make him. Nothing but the blood of Jesus blots out sin. In his regeneration we are made new creatures, old things having passed away.

The events of nations are but the aggregate of the incidents of individual life.

With our own conduct and its results the wise man is far more concerned than he is with what others have done or expect to do. This year has been notable for the scourge of yellow fever in the South, and it has therefore been a year of much suffering in those quarters. It has been a year to be dreaded for its political excitement and the corruption of the ballot-box, for the slander and vehement accusations of party malice on all sides. It should make the patriot tremble for his country. Each man that desires to know the truth and that seeks for enduring liberty should give diligence to make his own calling and election sure which is far more important to him than any political election.

This year has been as usual noted for the excitements of religious meetings to persuade unbelievers to join some denomination, each one especially desiring that such should join his own: while the Lord has added to the church such as should be saved.

The world is rapidly coming to its close. Each year, each day, each moment brings us nearer to this. May each of us so live that we shall be found ready when the Lord shall come. P. D. G.

THE UNCLEAN SPIRITS.

Sister Martha L. Liles requests my view of Matt. 12 : 43—45;

"When the unclean spirit is gone out of a man he walketh through dry places, seeking rest and findeth none."

"Then he saith, I will return into my house from whence I came out ; and when he is come he findeth it empty, swept and garnished."

It was charged against Jesus by his enemies that he cast out devils by Beelzebub the prince of devils. Jesus replies that if satan cast out satan then it is as a house or kingdom divided against itself, and therefore it could not stand. This would be a sufficient refutation to all that respect the truth. The answers of Jesus were so true, so full of wisdom and fact, that none that desired to know the truth would question or dispute them.

He also illustrates by the text under consideration, namely, that if no higher power than satan operates in the casting out of devils, nothing would hinder the return of the unclean spirits into the same house or creature out of whom they voluntarily went. If satan is bound by one stronger than himself and cast out then he cannot return, for the same greater power than himself that bound and cast him out will also keep him out. But suppose the unclean spirit, of his own accord, goes out of the man and leaves him, what will prevent the return of that same spirit into that same man when he desires it ?

Which is greater, the spirit of a man or the man ? Does the man control his own spirit ? Has any man power over his own spirit in the day of his death ? It is true that the spirits of the prophets are subject to the prophets. That is the spirit is subject to the prophet who is a man of God, or the spirit of the prophet (not the spirit of God) is subject to the prophet who is the man of God. But we determine ones' character by his spirit. If his spirit is a good spirit we say he is a good man, and if his spirit is evil we say that he is an evil man. In this sense the spirit is greater than the man, for it gives character to the man. Hence we are to try the spirits. Here in this text the spirit answers to the inhabitant or occupant of the house, and the man answers to the house occupied by the spirit ; as the man occupying the house is greater than the house, so the spirit possessing and controlling the man is greater than the man.

When the unclean spirit is gone out of a man, not cast out by a superior force, but goes out of his own will or accord, this unclean spirit walketh through dry places seeking rest, and finding none he returns to his own house, or the man, and when he returns he finds no difficulty in re-entering, for it is still his own house, and one has no difficulty in returning to his own house. He even finds it ready to receive him or swept and garnished, dressed up and furnished in just that sort of self-righteousness that is a place for unclean spirits to dwell in.

When one according to the corrupt principles of vile nature makes a profession of religion satan appears to enter into a worse form in that man than before and his last state becomes the worse.

Does the Spirit of God wait until the devil or unclean spirit voluntarily leaves a man, and then enter afterward to see what he can do, and is he liable to be cast out by satan afterward? No, Jesus casts satan out of the objects of his love. For he first binds the strong man and casts him out, and then he comes and takes possession.

The Jews of that generation were wicked. They had made a profession of religion. Where was satan? For the time the unclean spirit had gone out and left them and, going through dry places and finding no rest, he returns to these Jews and enters into them and dwells there and they bring upon themselves swift destruction, and their last state is worse than their first one. True religion will greatly benefit mankind, but a false profession founded on anything less than the power of God brings on deception, pretense, hypocrisy, and all manner of corruption. For when the unclean spirit returns he brings with him a full number (seven) of other spirits more wicked than himself and the last state of that man, (not of that unclean spirit, or the seven more wicked spirits) is worse than was the first state of that man, so corrupting is the religion of self-works and the profession founded on self-righteousness.

For remember all these unclean spirits dwell in that man, and that will cause the man to be in a far worse condition.

Obituary.

C. C. GOLDING.

Died in Old Town, Grayson county, Virginia, at his Residence, November the 22d 1887 C. C. Golding, Son of William Golding and Jane Golding, age 38 years, five months and 27 days. C. C. Golding was known in Carroll, Grayson and surry, and highly esteemed and loved by all who knew him. Conscious to the last, he spoke deliberately and though hopeful of the future to assure his friends he was not afraid to die, but he wished to live with them longer, if he died it would be all right. His death was a shock to all who heard of it that knew him. Very few knew he was sick. He died suddenly with a throat disease. He was never known to be in bad company, and was a man of fine sense, surpassing all the young men that went to school with him in learning. He studied hard, and obtained a good education, taught school about fifteen years of his life and always gave general satisfaction. He labored hard with his mind to improve his education, and was qualified for almost any business with little practice, but the good Lord called him from time for some purpose unknown to us. He was a fine looking man with no bad habits, and will no doubt be missed very much by all who knew him. Too much could not be said of his moral character, for it could hardly be surpassed. What a great blessing and comfort it must be to his parents to hear so much said of this son, so much better than to hear one speak ill of him, but no one could justly do that. What God doth must be relized, for he knoweth all things, and doeth all things well. We know it is impossible to see him on this earth again. May God prepare us to meet him in glory singing the song of redeeming Grace. And that we all may be prepared to die as happy as we believe he did. It is hard to bear, and brings grief and sorrow from the depths of our hearts, but let us hope and pray that he is in a world far superior to this, and has, since the day of his death, joined that great celestial choir.

He wrote a letter to his father just before his death, after hearing of the death of his Uncle and Aunt, as follows:—"Father, I never heard of the death of my uncle and aunt until after they were buried. If they were prepared it is all right with them. They have paid the debt we all owe. There is one glorious thing with me, that is the little hope that I have that my Father's whole house will be saved in the glorious kingdom of God, and not one of them be missing." In some of his writing just before death "God is the wisest and greatest of all beings he said. We ought never to use his name in vain. His great and glorious name ought to be praised by every creature here below." He leaves a father, and five sisters, and a great many friends to mourn the great loss of a son and brother. We extend the warmest sympathies to the bereaved family, for few such dutiful and obedient sons are to be found any where. He never was known or heard to give his father a cross word during his life, always obeyed and honored his father and mother. We write this for publication in the LANDMARK because he was a Baptist believer.

A BAPTIST FRIEND.

EDITH KISER.

* Edith Kiser was born October the 22nd, 1887 and died September the 16th, 1888

Her sickness was Cholera Morbus. She only lived nine days after she was taken. Brother Gold, if parents could think any more of child than one another it seemed like we did. It was respected by the strangers around us as being a child with as good appearance as they ever saw. Oh brother Gold, how hard it is to give up a dear child. I will give you a dream my wife dreamed about our baby after it was taken, she dreamed of being back in Russel Co, Va., at a notable place on her father's farm near the graveyard, she thought her mother was down in a hole in the ground with a red blanket spread around her and her mother spoke to her and said, give me Edith and she refused to give her down to her, and she said to her the second time to hand her down that she could take better care of her than she could: she then handed her down. Brother Gold pray for us in our lonesome condition while we are far in the West, far away from any brethren. A lover of the Baptist doctrine.

J. E. PORTER.

Mr. J. E. Porter, of Edgecombe co., N. C. departed this life on the 24th, of July last in the old town of Southport, in the 46th year of his age. Mr Porter was a true man in all the relations of life which he was called to fill. He was clerk of the lowest court in Edgecombe, a member of the Grange, and for a long time secretary of the State Grange; which offices he filled with entire satisfaction. Mr. Porter was a gentleman of high order, a man of extensive reading, and of superior intelligence, well informed on most subjects, was greatly beloved by his many friends; a more hospitable and polite gentleman at his home could not be found, and especially to ministers of the gospel. He was a great sufferer, and although he had the best medical attention that could be had, nevertheless they were not able to arrest the progress of his disease; he continued to decline until the fatal hour arrived. Mr. Porter was not a member of the church, but he loved the church and was a prompt attendant with his Christian wife as long as he was able to go, and we believe that he gave his heart to God and was saved. Among his last words were, "I shall soon be happy."

May the blessings of our Heavenly Father rest upon his bereaved wife and children. May his children be led to God, and join their pious mother in His holy service, and may they compose an entire family in the Lord.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Whereas, It has pleased Almighty God to remove from our midst, by the irresistible hand of death, our highly esteemed and worthy brother, Joseph E. Porter, which sad event occurred in Southport, N. C., at 6 P. M. on the 24th of July 1888, in the 46th year of his age, thereby depriving us of one of our best and most useful members.

RESOLVED 1st. That we sincerely mourn his demise and with sad hearts meekly bow to the will of him who doeth all things well.

RESOLVED 2nd. That his bereaved wife and children, have lost a kind husband and an affectionate father, and the community a highly cherished and respected citizen.

RESOLVED 3d. That we tender to his family our deepest sympathy, and commend them to Him, who has promised to be with them in the sixth trouble—yea in the seventh will never leave nor forsake them.

RESOLVED 4th. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family of the deceased and one each to the Tarboro Southerner and Progressive Farmer for publication and that the same be spread upon our minutes. Respectfully submitted,

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Aug 9th, 1888

Whereas, It has pleased our Heavenly Father, in his infinite wisdom to remove from our midst by death after a long and suffering illness our beloved brother Joseph E. Porter. Brother Porter has been from the earliest organization of our Order a true and faithful member, having filled many of the positions of our Grange. He was also Secretary of the State Granger for many years, giving the highest satisfaction and causing universal regret when he declined a re-election. We will ever miss his cheerful face, and words of wisdom at our meeting.

Therefore Resolved: That by this painful visitation of "Our Heavenly Father" the grange has lost one of its most valued and esteemed members, that we greatly cherish his memory and profit by the example of devotion to the Order he has left us and while we deeply feel our loss, yet we bow submissively to the Great Master, who does all things after the council of his own will.

Resolved, That we tender to his afflicted wife and children our sincere and heart-felt sympathy in their irreparable loss and can but hope that He who "tempers the wind to the shorn lambs" will sustain and protect them in their sore hour of bereavement.

Resolved, That as a testimonial of respect, a page in the minutes be set apart as a memorial to our deceased brother bearing thereon his name and the date of his birth and death.

Resolved, That the desk of our worthy Overseer be draped in mourning, and the usual badge of mourning be worn for 30 days. That a copy of these resolutions be furnished the family of deceased brother, that they be entered on the minutes of the Grange and published in the Tarboro Southerner and Roanoke Patron.

TARBORO SOUTHERNER

OBITUARY.

"At a meeting of the Justices of the Peace Monday the following resolutions were adopted.

Resolve we feel the loss of J. E. Porter, late Clerk of the Inferior Court, keenly. He was a good officer, genial, clever and upright.

Resolved, that the SOUTHERNER be requested to publish this brief tribute to a worthy man

REMARKS.

Mr Joseph E. Porter was a man of rare courage and of sterling principles of truth, and of strong and clear convictions of duty. While very quiet and reserved he was full of courage, bravery and firmness, and of endurance in the midst of many trials through which he passed. It was his lot to live in days of hardship and toil, days that required much cool enduring courage to enable one to meet the fire of war and the sword of waste and death.

His father was one of like courage and endurance, well known as a lover of truth and sternly opposing corruption. He passed away from earth but a few weeks before his son, and the two rank together as men of virtue and integrity, father and son equally sharing the same fate, equally bearing the same honor of loving the right and hating the wrong.

Mr. Porter's predilections were in favor of the Bible doctrine of divine, creative and eternal sovereignty, and hence of the predestination of God who works all things after the counsel of his own will. In this gracious and glorious power and wisdom there is room for hope for a sinner. In this doctrine lies a source of strength and comfort in the midst of affliction and distresses. What can more truly keep one in the midst of sorrows and trials than the heart-belief in the wisdom and omnipotence of God who orders all the raging of the elements, holds the reigns of the universe and makes all things work together for good to them that love him, to them who are the called according to his purpose.

The last years of his life were passed in much bodily suffering. His disease was of the most painful kind taxing all his powers of endurance to bear the burden of suffering. But there is an end of such sorrows in death which comes as a relief to such distress. The departure when made in the hope of the resurrection is most blessed.

DEVOTED TO THE CAUSE OF JESUS.

COMMUNICATED:

INTRODUCTORY.

ELDERS GOLD AND LESTER, DEAR BRETHREN IN CHRIST AS I HOPE: Having gotten permission of sister Annie Young to send her experience to the LANDMARK for publication and having received so much comfort to my soul from reading it, I herewith send it, believing that it will be a comfort to many others, especially those who have been so fortunate as to meet her and admire her Christain virtues.

Oh what a comfort to me is the LANDMARK! It comes as meat in due season to my hungry soul, as dew upon the withered grass. Love to all the dear readers of the LANDMARK. Your little sister in Christ, if one at all.

EXPERIENCE.

Dear sister in Christ, according to promise, by your request, I will, guided by the Lord, try in my feeble way to write my Experience, desiring the Lord to direct my pen.

The first time I remember feeling concerned about my soul was when at a session of the Little River Association on Sunday while Brother Tucker was preaching. I then felt to be a sinner, and if I died I would go to ruin. I was then about twelve or thirteen years old I suppose. After that I would often get into much trouble, feeling to be such a great sinner. I would often go off to myself to try to ask the Lord to have mercy upon me, but I did not feel like my prayers did rise to my head. I felt like it was a sin for me to try to pray, one so sinful, so vile; yet I felt I could not help calling upon the Lord for mercy. I did not want any one to know that I was concerned about religion, in fact would always try to appear cheerful in company to smother my bad feelings as much as possible.

I went on in this way for a long time, my troubles still increasing. I would promise the Lord if he would forgive me for my disobedience I would try to live a better life, I would not commit so much sin again; so soon I would break my promise! then I would think I have lied to the Lord, surely he never will forgive one so sinful. Thus I would make promises and break them until it seemed me such a sinner never would be pardoned. I could not see how the Lord could act justly and save such a wretch as I felt to be. All my sins rose like mountains before me and I didn't know what was the matter with me. I did not think it was conviction for I had read experiences in the LANDMARK and my case seemed different. I thought if I ever was convicted I would know it. I remember telling sister once if I ever had religion I would know it, but if I have any it came in a way unexpected to me. When I had given up all for lost one of my sisters and I were washing, I felt miserable all day. I did not know what was going to become of me. I surely thought I was going to die, but I did not know what was the matter. When dinner was ready I told them I did not want any, I felt bad, and would lie down. All I could do was to plead to the Lord for mercy. I firmly believed I would die and go to Torment, it just seemed to me like I was on the verge itself. I felt if he sent me to hell it was nothing more than I deserved, and I did not see how he could remain just and save such a wretch as I felt to be. I cried aloud, so much so I alarmed them in the kitchen, and papa came to me and asked me what was the matter, and if I did not want the Dr. I told him no, I did not feel like I needed any medical aid. Right then I put my trust in the Lord, and it seemed he spake peace to my soul. I never shall be able to give him enough praise; for I do believe he took me out of the miry clay, out of an horrible pit and put a new song in my mouth even praises unto God. Then I did not take that for deliverance, for about two years following I was in much trouble desiring and trying to pray to the Lord to renew me and pardon me of my many sins, for I craved above all things to be a child of God; and when I would go to preaching the preacher would describe my feelings so much better than I could. I heard Brother D. R. Moore shortly after I was delivered, at Watts' schoolhouse. Oh! such preaching I never heard before. I thought I would be so glad if I was behind the door where no one could see me, it seemed he knew all about me and it was all to me. I do believe the Lord did have a purpose in it. Oh! how I did want to shake hands with him. And this still increasing upon me I wanted to be a christian. I felt He was able, and the only one that could save. One day while walking in the yard these words seemed with me, The wind bloweth where it listeth, thou hearest the sound thereof but canst tell from whence it cometh or whither it goeth, so is every one that is born of the Spirit. Then my mind was led back to the time I gave up all for lost, and it seemed all was joy and peace, and that I could see a beauty, that God for Christ's sake had pardoned my sins and I could say may his holy name have all the praise, for it is due his holy name. Let me be brief and pass on then to my next trouble which was desiring to live with God's people, yet feeling so unworthy, so sinful, so worldly minded I would think it was a sin for me to think of joining so good a people. My health went to declining, and then my sister's health and mine commenced failing; and we both were troubled about living with God's people. I then thought the Lord had sent this punishment upon us for my disobedience. I did not have much ease of mind. I was fearful that none ever joined the church that did as many wrong things as I did.

Some had advised me to join the church; so I went on Saturday before the second Lord's day on May 1883 and was received into the church and baptized next morning by Brother J. A. T. Jones. That was the time I felt all was well. It was glory that was indescribable and full of glory. But soon doubts arose, and then for several months I was in much trouble, feeling I had certainly deceived the church, that I was a hypocrite, but above all things I did not desire to bring a reproach upon the cause of Christ. I thought I would go and tell them to erase my name from the church book for I had deceived them; but when the time came I did not do it. I still wanted to live with them, that is I felt to love them too well to give them up, so I would wait awhile. One day I was in trouble and I got my Bible and read where it said, Tribulation worketh patience; patience experience, and experience hope, and hope maketh not ashamed because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts. Then I became more reconciled, I felt to glory in tribulations and a glory it was in believing the Lord had ordered it for our good. I yet feel unworthy, and am so sinful! But my trust is in the Lord. I feel to love God's people, and desire not to bring a reproach upon the cause. I have been quite lengthy, but have left many things untold, but I think I have said enough at present in my imperfect way. Give God all the praise; and write me your experience if you feel like it.

Remember me at the throne of grace is my desire.

Carey, N. C.

(The following was written by Elder Aaron Davis the year that he died.)

It is unexpected that I attempt to write. I am old and near the end this life, and have never wrote anything for publication. I wish to give a reason of my hope in Christ, some of the dealings of the Lord with me, and have so often read the experiences of others from different parts of the land, and could so much enjoy that I feel to hope that I am identified with them.

I was born March the 30th. 1812, which makes me now in the 76 year of my age, and have been a professd Baptist for nearly fifty years. At a time unexpected I was made to feel that I was a lost and ruined sinner when I was strolling along, not thinking, nor caring anything about future things. The old preacher that was preaching on the Monday of the White Oak Association in preaching said, "This poor little soul," when I was made to feel that I was in possession of something that would forever exist in happiness or misery, and I was stopt still, and looked towards the preacher, and felt there was reality in what he was preaching: so instead of being unconcerned I went toward him to hear what more he had to say about that poor little soul, and when the meeting was over and I started home I was in such distress that I could not prevent the tears flowing from my eyes, and for about twelve months I was in great distress, such as to go away in the forest to pray for mercy, and oftimes in silent shades of the night to pray for mercy, until it seemed there was no mercy for me. I can now remember I was made to feel that so great a sinner was I that I thought it was abomination to pray to God for mercy. When I would read it condemned me, and I concluded I would not try to read any more: but when traveling along one day I felt a desire to read the Scriptures once more. And Oh how I wanted to get home again to see if there was any promise for me: but when I got home there was company there, and Oh what distress it was to me that I could not read, but when at supper my wife who was a Baptist, and two of the company got in conversation about some passage of scripture, and they had me to get the book and look for it, Oh what joy it was to have the privilege of reading. I opened the book, and the first that my eyes fell upon were these words, "Therefore my brethren, dear beloved and longed for, my joy and crown, so stand fast in the Lord my dearly beloved," when all my distress was gone, and I was made to praise the Lord with joy that is inexpressable and full of glory. Then every desire of my heart was filled and well supplied and the Savior was all I needed, and when I had faith to believe that Jesus was my Savior it supplies all my need. I wanted nothing only to praise God, and I wanted everything to praise him, and have had a desire for his name to be praised ever since.

AARON DAVIS.

Elder P. D. Gold, you will please publish this in the LANDMARK. This is all that my Father had written. I do not know whether he intended to write any more or not.

Yours as a friend,
JOHN B. DAVIS.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—I feel that I must write to you, not that I have the least desire to see it in print, but I want to tell you how I have been, and am still burdened, feeling that I must write, and the worst part is I feel that I have nothing to write about, except what you all know more about than I do. I will say that my love for God's children does not abate—which is sometimes my strongest evidence that I am born of Him. I know my mind is often, often wandering away from what I consider to be right, and all my efforts seem to be for worldly gain. When I can see how vain and foolish I am, I am made to say, "why was I made to hear and enter while there is room. While thousands make a wretched choice, And rather starve than come," I know—and we all know that it is not by our works, as some boast, but by grace, free and unmerited on our part. I feel sometimes that I must write, and feel just like a blank. I think I am willing, but have nothing new to tell, and can't tell that in flaming language like some. Perhaps I lack so much in one sense I am afraid at times I lack it all, and if I do I know that I can't save myself. But pray for me, dear brother that my faith fail not, for where or to whom can I go but to Jesus? He alone hath the words of eternal life. May the Lord abundantly bless you with all of His children. Your sister in a precious hope.

EMMA HUDSON.

P. S. I wrote last night and will add a little more this morning. I write only for you to read. Tell me if you ever feel as I express, and if you feel disposed please give your views of the 47th verse of the 5th chapter of Matthew. I think Christ was talking to his disciples, and what he said to them I think applies to us, or at least was written for our instruction and comfort. You did not come to see us at Cain Creek this year. Come when you can.

[The following is from the pen of Elder Joshua Lawrence and was first published in the Primitive Baptist in Jan. 1837. The Primitive Baptist was published for years by Elder Burwell Temple. Its publication began in Jan. 1836, about 52 years ago. Elder Temple was much beloved in this country, and his paper was useful.

From time to time I wish to republish articles from the pen of Elder Lawrence. He lived in troublous times when men rebuilt the wall with sword in one hand and trowel in the other: for while they were comforting the little ones in the city with the promises, they must needs keep off the enemy from without with the sword. TEETH TO TEETH.

Tom Thumb tugging with the wolves for the sheepskin.

BY JOSHUA LAWRENCE.

Matthew, 7: 15; "Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves"—is the solemn caution of our Lord Jesus to his followers. And again 10: 16: "Behold I send you forth as sheep in the midst of wolves; be ye therefore wise as serpents and harmless as doves." And again, Luke 10: 3; "Go your ways: behold I send you forth as lambs among wolves." And again, Paul, Acts 20: 29; "For I know this, that after my departing shall grievous wolves enter in among you, (you the gospel church is meant) not sparing the flock." Verse 30: "Also of your own selves (gospel professors are meant) shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them."

Then with such proof as the above, who can doubt of wolf preachers clothed in sheepskins? Who can doubt of wolves in the gospel church? I do not. So then in order to recover the sheepskin and detect the wolves, I shall tug teeth to teeth by scripture for the sheepskin which they have assumed, like the true shepherds of the sheep, in order to devour the sheep thereby. And to accomplish this I shall briefly treat of six kinds of ministers of the gospel, all of whom wear the sheepskin, whether wolf or sheep underneath the skin. I shall leave you to judge, reader, while I am tugging at the skin and getting it aside for you to see the wolf in sheep clothing.

1st. I shall treat of a self-made minister.

2d. On men made ministers.

3d. On devil-made ministers.

4th. On a christian that makes himself a minister, not being called of God to that office.

5th. On my gentleman preacher.

6th. On God's ministers. Laying down the marks of each so that they may be known by the church of God.

7th. I shall treat of Theological Schools, that prolific source from which many of these kinds of preachers come, and enquire into the origin of Theological Schools.

8th. I shall enquire into their tendency in countries where they have been established.

9th. I shall enquire whether they can be so conducted as to be serviceable to the church of God, &c.

I have no apology to make for my writings, but wish it fairly understood that I do not write to please nor offend any man or set of men; nor do I write in the fear of man. I have a right to my opinion, and you may have yours and welcome for me, and write what you think right; yet I think it is high time for somebody to write, as the dogs are taking the children's bread and the wolves their clothing—and drum them out of the camp of the saints as they have long since made the house, or church of God, a house of church traffic, a den for wolves, and a lodging for spiritual dogs, and a place of rendezvous for thieves and robbers to divide their spoil.

There are three never failing marks to know a sheep from a wolf, although a wolf's whole body may be covered with a sheepskin. The first is, by their track: the wolf don't part the hoof like a sheep, but has a foot like a dog; so it is with a wolf preacher in sheep's clothing, he does not in his heart part with sin nor does he in his practice part with the ways of sinners, although he may part with some of the grosser sorts of sins; yet I hope to show you as we go along his dog's foot, although he has a sheepskin on his back he will be sure to have the wolf's foot—therefore said the Saviour by their fruit ye shall know them. The second mark is their food; you know the food of a wolf and a sheep is as different as two things can be. What a miracle it would be to see a flock of wolves feeding on the pastures like sheep or see sheep gnawing bones and feeding on dead carcases; a thing that never was. And there is equally as much difference between the food of a real gospel minister and a wolf in sheep's clothing, as there is between the food of sheep and wolves. The third mark is the voice. I suppose all the men in the world could never learn a wolf to bleat like a sheep, nor a sheep to howl like a wolf. I may add a fourth mark, and that is, by looking into their mouths; a sheep has no upper front teeth—wolves are like dogs, have a good set above and below, and strong holders in the bargain. These four are never failing marks to know a wolf from a sheep, which you will keep in memory for further remarks.

God who is rich in mercy and goodness, after man had become fallen and his mind and foolish heart become darkened by reason of sin, hath chosen in his infinite wisdom to communicate light to the human mind by prophets, his Son, apostles and ministers, and through this medium and the agency of his divine Spirit we stand indebted to him for all spiritual light and life.

Thus Enoch the seventh son from Adam was a prophet, and from him to Malachi there seems to be a succession of prophets to enlighten, guide, warn, reprove the people of God, and to warn the world, under both the antediluvian and Jewish dispensations. So, equally so, God has in all ages of the church through his rich and unbounded grace raised up, qualified, and sent gospel ministers of his own choosing to guide, warn, feed and comfort his gospel church from her first establishment until now; and I think will do so until the end of the world. Yet with these helps the gospel church has often wandered from the right ways of the Lord, like the Jewish church, and 1260 years is allowed by all as given her to wander in her wilderness state, before, she will recover her virgin beauty and pristine excellency in doctrine, ordinances and discipline.

But the wanderings of the Jewish and gospel churches from the plain commandments of the Lord has not been owing so much to the private members of either church as to two other causes; the first of which is, their connections with the great, the rich, the influential, and powerful men of this world: this in both churches has been one cause in all cases and in all ages of her downfall and deviations from the right way of the Lord, Witness the marriages before the flood with the family or daughters of Cain, the marriages and alliances of the Jews with the surrounding nations &c., Witness the Constantine connection, and the connection of the kings and queens of England, &c., And well it may be so, for says Jesus, my kingdom is not of this world—come out and be separate, says Paul. For so soon as the church becomes connected with the men of this world, then she must shape her doctrines, ordinances, and discipline to please the taste, the relish, the views and pride and pomp of the men of this world with which she stands connected or dependent in anyway whatever; more especially in support of her ministry, then she goes by this connection from the truth and right ways of the Lord and from the good old way of ancient times. And this I pronounce in my opinion to be one of the causes of so much corruption at present in the Baptist churches, it is from the society connections of the day that her doctrines etc., are corrupted.

The second and worse cause is that of false prophets or false ministers, or wolves in sheep's clothing. These have been the main, the leading cause in the bosom of the churches; which have led the church of God astray from God's truth, ordinances, statutes and discipline to the traditions, doctrines, and commandments of men; for their wolf taste can't relish the pleasant and fat pastures of the gospel where God's sheep love to feed; therefore they seek wolf meat, as will be shown in time and place.

Therefore, because these wolves are the main cause of scattering and driving astray and devouring the sheep of Christ, the Old Testament is full of warnings to the Jewish church against false prophets; and equally so in reading the New Testament you find it full of warnings both by Christ and his apostles to the gospel church, to beware of wolves in sheep's clothing, or false teachers with their damnable heresies; for here is the church's greatest danger, in listening to and obeying the plans, doctrines, commandments and traditions of men for the commandments of Jesus Christ. Touch not, taste not, handle not, is the advice of Paul; for these are to perish. And says Jesus, "In vain do you worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." To listen to and do after the doctrines of these false teachers has in all ages been a curse to the church of God; therefore she is so often and so solemnly warned in the gospels and in all the epistles against the deceivers and ruiners and distressers of the church of God.

Can you think, dear reader for a moment, that it is impossible for the gospel church to know these wolves in sheep's clothing from a true minister of God's making and sending? Surely not. For if it was impossible for the gospel church to know them in any age of the church when she is plagued with them, then those warnings of the Holy Ghost would have been in vain, seeing the church could not know them by any mark laid down in those warnings; but one reason why the gospel church knows so little about these wolves is, because she will not take the pains to search out the marks of these wolves, as laid down by infallible inspiration in the New Testament, her chief guide in all the matters of religion. And another reason why the gospel church is so backward to do this is because of that universal charity religion that is pleaded for in this age of the Christian church among professors of religion, saying, let us all be brothers, we are all going to heaven, you by that road of doctrine and practice, and we by this road or way; let us not contend about doctrine, ordinances, or church government, these are all trifles of minor importance; let us unite and commune together, and live in peace and love, for we shall all meet at last in heaven, although you go this road and we that. And so such professors of religion would have the church of Christ unite Christ and Baal, believers and infidels, the temple of God and the temple of idols, truth and error, the works of hypocrites and saints, light and darkness, fire and water, false teachers and true, the ministers of God, men and the devil. What fellowship has this heterogeneous assemblage of hypocrites, doctrines, practices and opinions? Why you must say, none. Then this universal charity religion is a device of the devil, through false teachers to darken the truths of God and corrupt his church and the one pure religion on earth, and in the end make gain to false teachers who preach for pay and divine for honor. Then I pronounce this universal charity religion is a religion of loaves and fishes, and not belonging to the gospel church, nor the one pure religion of Jesus Christ, nor his apostles; for how can two walk together except they be agreed, and they that are not for the truth must be against it; two opposites can't both be truth or alike, nor more akin than fire and water, light and darkness, or God and satan. For it is said of the first saints—and they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine. Then there is but one true doctrine, and all the rest is false; then find out apostolic doctrine; contend for the faith once delivered to the saints. And again, John: if any man come unto you and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed, for such is partaker of his evil deeds." And again, Paul: though I or an angel from heaven preach any other gospel unto you, than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.

For if Jesus Christ and his apostles had been of this universal charity religion, then the Pharisees and Jewish priests would not have persecuted and killed Christ. But he was not for brothering such hypocrites, but reprovng and testifying against their evil deeds and false doctrines therefore they hated him. Nor would the Jewish and heathen priests have persecuted and killed the apostles, if they would have taken them into brotherhood, and not have contended against their false gods, doctrines and traditions, but said, "let us all be brothers, you preach your idolatry, another Diana, another circumcision, another that the resurrection is past already, and another the law and works, and we Christ crucified; we are all going to heaven, so let us unite and be at peace and love, and hear all and be all in one church and fellowship. This is that universal charity religion. Were the apostles of it? No Sir, they testified against all but the one truth, salvation by grace and faith followed by good works. This made them hated of all that held errors and preached errors and false doctrines. They would be brother to none but those that held the truth, therefore hated and killed. And such a religion is universal charity, however fine it may appear, it is nothing less or more than the very sink of hypocrisy; and all hands in such a band of brothers must use some of the God-aborred stuff to get along in this crowd of hypocrites and assemblage of practices and opinions which true saints in all ages have disdained, though death stared them in the face.

So then the religion of Jesus Christ has no christian fellowship but with the household of faith, and the believers and practicers of the truths of God in doctrine, ordinance and discipline, as delivered to the saints in the New Testament. Then universal charity and peace, and love for all kinds of doctrines, all kinds of ordinances, all kinds of discipline, and all kinds of professors, and opinionists, or for any kind and every kind of professors, is but a hypocritical child of the devil and a religious imp of hell, with which Jesus Christ nor his apostles never claimed brotherhood nor fellowship. Witness their harsh and severe language to the pharisees and false teachers laid down in the New Testament. For such a charity as this, or Christian fellowship as this, is any thing and every thing, and at last nothing but varnished hypocrisy to God and man, if it is not playing the hypocrite with satan also. Love God, love and believe the truth, love Jesus Christ and the brotherhood of faithful men, and contend earnestly for the faith or doctrine, ordinances and discipline of the church of God once delivered to the saints by Christ and his apostles, and thou shalt do well; for who is to maintain the truth in the world if the church of God don't do it?

Therefore to help the gospel church to judge and determine rightly in distinguishing between God's ministers and all other ministers, I shall draw the line of distinction by marks from the scriptures laid down by the Holy Ghost; so that I think no man can well fail to know them apart. Then I will no longer keep you in suspense by any further preparatory remarks, but proceed to discuss the subject as proposed.

PART I.

On self-made ministers.

First, I am to treat of a self-made minister, and that there are such read Jude 1: 19. "These be they who separate themselves, sensual, having not the Spirit. Enoch prophesied of these. King Saul was among the prophets, tho' he was not called to the office by Almighty God. Read how these lying prophets come to prophecy, 1 Kings 22: 22. And he said, "I will go forth, and I will be a lying spirit in the mouth of all his (Ahab's) prophets. And he said, thou shalt persuade him and prevail also go forth and do so." And says Paul, Acts 20: 29, 30; "For I know this, that after my departing shall grievous wolves enter in among you not sparing the flock. Also of your own selves shall men arise, (mark that of their own selves) speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them. If they arise of their own selves, not called of God to the ministerial office, of course they are self-made ministers. Jeremiah, 14. 14: The prophets prophecy lies in my name: I sent them not, neither have I commanded them, neither spake unto them: they prophecy unto you a false vision and divination, and a thing of nought, and the deceit of their heart. Here God says he sent them not, then of course they sent themselves to tell lies and falsehoods out of the deceit of their own hearts. Ezekiel, 13: 3. "Woe unto the foolish prophets that follow their own spirit." 4th, O Israel, thy prophets, not my prophets, are like the foxes of the desert; that is, very cunning and crafty. 10, "Because they have seduced my people, saying, peace; and there was no peace: and one built up a wall or doctrine, and lo, others daubed it with un-tempered mortar. Now hear for what all this is done by a self-made preacher or prophet, for preachers are often called prophets in the New Testament as well as old. Micah, 3: 11. "And the priests thereof teach for hire, and the prophets thereof divine for money; yet will they lean upon the Lord and say, is not the Lord among us." Now to prove that there are in the gospel church false ministers self-made, as well as there were false prophets self-made, 2d, Peter 2: 1, "But there were false prophets also among the people, even as there shall be false teachers among you, (you the gospel church is meant.) Who is a more false prophet or false minister than he who makes himself such, and one not being called to the office by the God of heaven, nor qualified for the office by him? The above texts I deem sufficient to prove my point that there have been and now are plenty of self-made preachers, or else I would produce many more to prove the fact. Then taking the evidence as sufficient from scripture, that there are such beings as self-made ministers, I proceed to chalk them out by the marks of scripture evidence so you can know them.

The marks from Jude appear to be these: that a self-made minister separates himself to the office without a call from God; he also separates himself in a great degree from sin and sinners, that he may appear a sheep or in the sheep skin; he is sensual, or knows and preaches by scent and not by revelation—for Jude says, they have not the spirit. Then a self-made minister has not the spirit of God, nor does he preach by the spirit, and of course not according to the truths of the spirit; but by sense, because being a natural man he receiveth not the things of the spirit, for they are foolishness to him. Then the holy and sublime doctrine and truths of the gospel will be at nought by a self-made minister, as far as he can safely do so to get gain and save his reputation as a gospel minister; which is proved by the 10th verse: But they speak evil of those things which they know not: but what they know naturally, as brute beasts, in those things they corrupt themselves. What things are meant by Jude, but the great leading truths of the gospel, which these men don't know nor can't know since they are declared by Paul to be spiritually discerned, and not received naturally, as a brute knows things by instinct of nature. They in the 11th verse are said to go in the way of Cain—what was Cain's way but to bring an offering to the Lord without faith of the fruit of the ground, of his own carnal, corrupt, natural, deceitful heart? It was a ground dead offering, and not a living sacrifice, typical of the blood of Jesus that cleanses from all sin. Cain's way was to hate and kill his brother, and why and wherefore? Because his own words were wicked and his brother's righteous. So Cain was the first wolf in sheep—clothing, he killed Abel his brother. Then self-made preachers hate God's preachers, they have killed thousands of them, they hate the doctrine they preach, they hate these men of faith, they have religious practices which is the sheep skin Cain like; but their hearts are wolf, sheep devouring, sheep hating, faith hating, truth hating and enmity against God. For the carnal mind is enmity against God, and such a mind has this self-made preacher, since he is a natural man. Then beware of self-made preachers, for they are every one to a man Cain's and would go in his way if it was not for God's lets.

All these men's preaching, praying singing, and religious duties, are nothing but works of wickedness like Cain's, the fruit of the ground only and not the fruit of the spirit; having no faith, it is impossible for them to please God. The tree not being made good by divine grace, all their fruit is not good; their hearts and principles being corrupt, so are all their religious acts at enmity against God; his plan of salvation and the merits of his Christ are set at nought by these Cains, these wolves that take the sheep skin and holy orders not being called of God thus to officiate, as Aaron, Paul, Moses, Peter, &c.

run greedily after the error of Balaam. What was the prophet Balaam's error? Why king Balak's silver and promised greatness, for him to come and curse Israel. So that a self-made minister has two things in view, money and honor: of this Holy Ghost says they are greedy, for this they preach, for this they run. Then when you see any minister, no matter what Sect he belongs to, greedy of these two things, or showing plainly for these he preaches, say and mark him, he is a Balaam, he is a self-made minister, he would curse the church of God for money, which was Balaam's reward. And this is the reward for which this man preaches and prays, for this reward of money and greatness he runs from town to town, from place to place. These self-made Balaams would curse the Christians from the face of the earth for money, as Balaam would Israel, had not God interposed.

Again in the verse: And they perish in the gainsaying of Core. I want every self-made minister in the world and every body else, to read the 16th chapter of Numbers, and all men that don't believe in a divine call to the ministry; for it is to this chapter and to this transaction of Korah, whose name in the text is spelt Core, as is common in scripture, such as Noe for Noah, &c. to which Jude alludes. Korah and his company wanted to take the priest office on themselves, and did so. They charged Moses and Aaron usurping the priest office, or putting themselves in the two highest offices, and more especially the priest office; and they being of the tribe of Levi had as much right as Aaron they thought, and therefore took their censers and offered strange fire to the Lord; exercising the priest office without being chosen of God to officiate, or called to minister in it by him. And for their presumption were consumed by fire from heaven, and thus perished on their gainsaying of Moses and God that is, in not believing the divine call, choice and appointment of Aaron to the priest office. Thus every man that takes on him the ministry without the call of God is compared by Jude to a Korah, and shall as certainly perish sooner or later in his gainsaying of God's ministers about a divine call to the ministry as did Core and company. Take care, ye professors that join in with such ministers that are not called of God. Remember Korah was not all that perished, but his company, his adherents also. Our God is a consuming fire, and here he signal'y proved it as well as in Sodom. Think on it, ye self-made ministers, and tremble; for the Holy Ghost can't lie. Then you perish in hell fire if you take this office on you in an unconverted state, or not called of God; for the office of a minister is too sacred for any but chosen, called, qualified, and initiated into it by God himself; for what have you to do with God's holy things and tabernacle, seeing he has not put them in your trust? You are a gainsayer and usurper, and will perish in your own deceivings.

Thus these men Korah and company thought that Moses and Aaron had taken the two highest offices in the Jewish nation on themselves; Moses to be leader and law giver and ruler, and Aaron to be priest and head of all ecclesiastical concerns, and to live without work by tithes on the labors of the people. And for as much as Korah, Dathan and Abiram were sons of the tribe of Levi, as well as Moses and Aaron, that they of course had the same claim and right to the priest office; and might claim and assume that office as well as Aaron, and tithes the people also. And no doubt they thought they were men of as good and better talents than Aaron, and so might and could officiate in the office of high priests as well as he; not believing in a special call of God to office as priest, and that any man had a right to fill that office that chose to fill it, and so took their two hundred and fifty censers and the office of priest without God's call to office and offered strange fire to the Lord. But how fared it with them? Sad tale of woe, they and their families, tents and effects, all went down alive into the pit, the earth opening her mouth where these wicked gainsayers stood and closed upon them:

and a fire from the Lord consumed the two hundred and fifty men that offered incense with strange fire, and thus they gainsaying, died for their exercising the priest office to which office God had not called them. And what of all this, say you. Why, don't you recollect that saying of Paul, Saying no man taketh this honor to himself, but he that is called of God as was Aaron. And again; Paul called of God to be an apostle. And again: Separate me Paul and Barnabas for the work wherunto I have called them. And again: those that were with him (that is, Christ on the white horse,) and rode on white horses were called, chosen and faithful. And again: Then Jesus called unto him the twelve and sent them out. And again: He sent the seventy to preach. And again: Did not God call Saul, David, Jonah, Jesus Christ, John the Baptist, Aaron and all the prophets and apostles, Moses and Abraham specially, to their respective offices? And so, equally so, all his ministers to a man are chosen, called and qualified by him for the ministry. And can any man with all these scriptures as proof of a special call of God, dare without this call take the office of minister on himself? Daring presumption, as that of Korah and company, who saw the proofs that God gave that Moses and Aaron was his choice, of which I shall now speak. Thus for this daring presumption, gain-saying, and exercising the office of priest, they perished as an example set up of God to all future generations, not to thrust themselves into the priest office without God's call thereunto.

ENTERING INTO POSSESSION IN CANAAN.

DEAR AND MUCH LOVED BROTHER JOHN I am able now to give you some good intelligence, as I can say in deed and in truth, "That my heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is that they might be saved." As such, I'll say to you dear John that my mind is almost constantly running back, and my heart throbbing with strong emotions of sympathy for you all who are left back at home. I remember very distinctly, how very often you and I used to talk of starting to Canaan, how we would count our little money, and unpack and brush and repack our apparel, and set time to start, and how much we expected to enjoy the journey, and how rejoiced we hoped to be when we had reached Canaan, &c., But I must say that all our plans, schemes and hopes were fabulous and vain as I have shown you in my past correspondence, as such I can't help feeling the deepest solicitude for you all. But I must now confine my epistle to what is before me, so I'll say that the trial of brother Regard the Flesh resulted in the Court's finding him guilty of disloyalty to our Commander, and unfaithfulness to the King, and in addition to his public demonstrations we found upon his person a sort of Babylonish garment which he tried to conceal under his uniform, and he had also put by in a secret place, a (the fleshly desire of the heart) certain sum of money; he attempted to excuse himself for these by pleading, that he needed more clothes in order to keep him warm, and he said that, as for the money he had always been accustomed to pay tithes to the Lord, and that as the daily allowance made us was too small to divide he had brought this along in order to pay expenses, but all his pleadings did him no good. The judge said "That in the opinion of the Court brother Regard the Flesh should be bound hand and foot and cast into a dark cell and there remain until his vile nature of covetousness, timidity, doubting, &c. should be as completely new as that of his comrades." Upon this the entire army set up a wailing for him, and after a few minutes lamentation, he was delivered up to a tall, strong, but pale and grim looking officer, who, being seated on a white horse conveyed him out of our view so quickly that we scarcely realized that he had ever been with us. The fact is, that at this moment we heard the sound of trumpets and the shouting of a mighty host, and as they neared us we heard the entire army singing, "The winter is past, the rain is over and gone." &c., And one said, "These are they who have come out of great tribulation and have washed their robes in the blood of the Lamb!"

We had now advanced up the mountain's side which overhung the dark and dreary valley through which we had passed and in which the trial and sentence of Regard the Flesh had all taken place, and from the summit of this lofty mountain, (Faith given in death) we could see clearly all the beautiful scenery ahead, and oh! what a delightful view it was. While halted on the mountain several of our command, viz; Love the Cause, Contend for the Faith, Despise the Flesh, Hate his own Life, Reprove Error and Scorn New things, these all began to recapitulate the dangers, risks, trials troubles, oppositions, &c., with which we have had to contend on our journey, and to say but now how glorious, how great and indescribably grand is our happy lot. About this time a chariot, that shined like gold and appeared to have been decorated with all manner of precious stones, drawn by a flying team, came for us and halted within a few feet of us and the teamster alighting from the coach said, "Blessed are they that do his commandments that they may have right to the Tree of Life and may enter in through the gates into the City;" and then he added "blessed are the dead that die in the Lord from henceforth; yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labours and their works do follow them." Then he bade us be seated in the coach, and as we took seats and hasted away over a beautiful street which seemed to be paved with gold, the strains of sweet music which we heard from the mountain became more and more distinct until we came up to a beautiful gate; here we halted until the Porter should interview the King, and thus allow us to be admitted and assigned to our homes in Canaan. But while we were waiting we observed a vast army coming up to the gate, all of which were robed in garments of divers colors, and they were carrying heavy and massive baggage, and were led by a woman which rode on a red colored beast, and she carried an immense train of good works, changes to suit the age, fine clothes, essays on religion, and a large amount of an ingredient called religions affiliation, &c., This vast army came up to the gate and halted. The porter about this time came back with orders from the King, to bring us in and to permit us to settle upon the estate granted to us by our Canaanitish Father, which said grant was made before the foundation of the world in which you live. But as we were entering the woman who rode upon the Beast also asked to be permitted to enter, and she urged that she had a large possession in Canaan, and that she and her children were now come to occupy it. But the Porter replied, "I know not whence ye are," Why said she, "I am Mrs. Modern religion, which has done so much for the suffering millions of earth. I have changed times and customs, built Cathedrals, Convents, Churches, Schools and Colleges. I have done much and very great things for Jesus Christ, in fact where he had failed and had retired from effort being grieved and outdone, I came to his relief and assistance and have ever and at all times succeeded in bringing victory for Jesus." Nay, said the Porter, "Nay indeed! you are mistaken, I am instructed to say to you 'depart for I never knew you.'" And upon this she and her company began to say, "Rocks fall on us, and mountains hide us, for the great day of his wrath has come and who shall be able to stand." Then said the King, who by this time had come to the gate, "And these shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal." So said he, "Depart ye cursed into everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels," and upon this we were commanded to sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and Moses, and the prophets, and many others from our world, and said the King, "I have loved thee with an everlasting love, therefore with loving-kindness have I drawn thee." But we will have to rest here a little while until Regard the Flesh shall have been brought in, he will serve out his time and come in with us, "When this corruption shall put on incorruption and this mortal shall put on immortality then shall death be swallowed up of life." But here comes my mother, sisters, brother, children and many old friends, all rejoicing to meet me. Oh glory, I am so happy in Canaan that I lose sight and recollection of earth! Farewell, poor John, I hope grace will bring you here at last. I'll look for you by and bye. Once your Brother, but now a saint in Jesus,

DAVID.

DEAR BRETHREN, SISTERS AND FRIENDS :—This will inform you that I have involved myself and family in giving my whole time from Nov. 1. 1887, to August 1888, in writing a book, and that my book is now in the hands of a publisher for publication. I have not the money to pay the publisher for publishing my book. Now I appeal to all of you who want a copy or more of this work to come to my assistance by sending in your names, and money to pay for its publication. The price of the book is $1.50 per copy. I will mail to any one who sends me $1.50 one copy of my book within seventy days from the time I receive your money, or else I will refund your money. My book will be neatly bound in cloth and will contain a fine lithograph portrait of the author. A full account of my yearly life and raising, my experience, call to the ministry, also an account of a debate between myself and Rev. C. F. Fields of Missionary Baptist notoriety, on the doctrine of Election and the doctrine of special atonement.

Dear kindred in Christ, I know that I have nothing in view in writing this book but the good of the cause of my blessed Jesus, and the glory of God. Therefore I shall expect all those who love the cause of Jesus and are able, to lend a helping hand in this work. I am as ever yours in hope of a better life.

THE CHILDREN OF THE KINGDOM.

Some one has requested me to give what I understand to be the meaning of the 11th and 12th verses of the 8th chapter of Matthew, "And I say unto you, that many shall come from the East and West and shall sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob in the Kingdom of heaven; but the children of the kingdom shall be cast out into outer darkness: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth."

It is said that Jesus came to his own (the Jews as a nation) and his own received him not, but as many as received him to them gave he power to become the sons of God. The Jews as a people were the subjects or children of the legal kingdom, or organized and established service under the law or Mosaic dispensation. As the subjects of a literal kingdom they shadowed forth the subjects of a spiritual kingdom of which Christ is King which is the church today under the gospel dispensation. When Christ was in the flesh the Jewish nation did not accept him as their King nationally, and charged him with blasphemy when he claimed to be the Son of God—the king of an invisible kingdom. In a legal sense they had the preference over all other nations to the blessings of the gospel kingdom, but they refused to enter themselves, and prevented those who would have entered or who would have followed Christ. In speaking to the Jews on this matter Jesus says: "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets and stonest them that are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together as a hen doth her chickens, and ye would not." The Jews would not that Jesus should gather any of their children into the enjoyment of his blessings. While Jesus had power to have broken down and destroyed this opposition on the part of the Jewish Elders, yet he was pleased to have it so, that the Jews might fully show forth what was in them by rejecting him against themselves and their children. This rejection was in a legal sense, wherein the filling up of the iniquity of the Jews is clearly set forth.

When Paul preached the word of God the Jews spake against the things which were spoken by Paul and contradicted and blasphemed and put from them the things which should have been first spoken to them, and judged themselves unworthy of everlasting life, whereupon Paul and Barnabas turned to the Gentiles. Acts. 13: 46 and 47. As Jesus had said unto them, behold their house was left desolate unto them, so now they are left without either legal or gospel light, but are cast out from all the glory and power of the law dispensation and being without God and without hope in the world they are without light whatever, and are in every way as other nations and therefore in outer darkness. They are left without excuse like all sinners are, and therefore their condition is so miserable as to be represented by weeping and gnashing of teeth.

The Gentiles, which represent all other nations than the Jews, heard Paul gladly and glorified the word of the Lord, and from that time 'til now the Gentiles have been coming as the Lord brings them, and setting down in the gospel kingdom with the fathers while the Jews have never again attained unto the glory of ancient Israel, nor have they been brought to believe in Jesus. No, not so much even as the Gentiles were in the days of Jesus, before the middle wall of partition had been broken down.

This centurion who came to Jesus and asked a blessing of him, was a gentile, who was of a people who had never been recognized as the people of God, and yet his faith even surpassed any which had hitherto been found in Israel. Jesus expected fruit from this fig tree Israel, the Jews, but found none. But where none could have been expected, legally, he found the best of fruit.

How few in this day seem to have the faith to believe what that Gentile did, who believed that Jesus had but to speak the word and his servant should live. Nothing but this faith of which Jesus is the Author and finisher can bring a poor sinner to believe so confidently in Jesus, and nothing but the word of this King of kings and Lord of lords can give life to the dead and bring them to him. Therefore we poor sinful Gentiles who believe in Jesus, have nothing wherein to boast only in the Lord. How careful should we be to shew forth the praise of him who has called us out of darkness into his marvellous light. May it be the desire and privilege of his people to ever sit together in heavenly places in him, according as they are chosen in him.

VIEWS REQUESTED.

ELDER P. D. GOLD, DEAR SIR:--I would like to hear your views through the LANDMARK on Revelation 13th chapter, especially 8, 16, 17 verses. Can this be applied to the Farmers' Alliance? They have their marks, signs and name, and it is numberd; and they say that no one can do thus and so, save he be a member, and they say, who is or who will be able to manage us? Some are saying that this chapter describes the Alliance, I am writing for information.

A FRIEND AND WELL-WISHER.

Remarks:

We consider the two Beasts named in Rev. 13 to possess far more power and to be much more dangerous than the Farmers' Alliance. The Farmers' Alliance is an innocent matter compared with this danger. It is very natural for farmers in this day of oppression and hardship to band together and agree to do their buying and selling together. But the Farmers' Alliance is not needful to a Primitive Baptist, as he has Jesus as his guide and protector. Nothing should be done in secret by the Lord's people, because what Jesus taught and said was done openly.

The two Beasts that are mentioned in Rev. are the most terrific, dangerous and destructive powers, except Satan himself, that have ever menaced the saints of God. For the dragon or devil gave the first beast which arose out of the sea his power and great authority. This Beast rose up out of the sea to denote the corrupt origin of this power. He was like a leopard, full of spots that cannot be changed, nor effaced. The spots denote the character of this religion of the Beasts, namely, that there is no uniformity in their professions, or it is part of grace and part works, part one thing and part another, or spotted. This pleases the world which likes that sort of variety or confusion. The Beast had feet as a bear. The feet of a bear somewhat resemble those of a man, yet they have not the beauty of the man's foot, and they have great power in their feet so that they can squeeze a man, hold and destroy him with their feet, so that as they catch one in their embrace and draw him up to them with their feet their dreadful power is felt. This false religion represented by this terrible beast draws by the power of his ways millions into his embrace that never escape his clutches. He also had a mouth like a lion. The lion not only roars, representing great swelling words of power and authority as this Beast, or false religion, whose swelling words cause nations to tremble; but the mouth and the teeth are full of strength, so that he can tear, devour and destroy. Likewise the mouth of false teachers is full of pride and destruction, subverting many by falsehood. Besides all this the dragon gave him his power, his seat and great authority, so that he becomes exalted over the world with great authority ruling the nations of the earth. This beast is not a literal beast of the earth with a leopard's spots, a bear's feet, and a lion's mouth; but he is a monster with those traits, not one individual man or person but a beastly spirit of power and dominion in a form claiming worship and controlling men. The Catholic power evidently answers to this description.

There is also a second Beast having two horns as a lamb, coming up out of the earth, but, though appearing as a lamb in some respects he spake as a dragon, and exercises all the power of the first beast. Both of these beasts come up from beneath, one out of the sea and the other out of the earth while in true religion or the true worship of God all comes from above. "For every good gift and every perfect gift comes down from the Father of lights with whom there is no variableness neither shadow of turning.

There is great power of an earthly and devilish sort given to these beasts so that they commanded the admiration and worship of all whose names are not written in the Lamb's book of life slain from the foundation of the world.

The second beast had power to work miracles in the sight of men, and deceive those that dwell on the earth.

The false and wicked principles (earthly and corrupt as emanating from sea and earth) that mankind love, the love of money, power, pride, show, deceit and corruption, enter into the composition of this false religion.

The craft of this false religion is to compel men to worship the image to the first beast that is made to it, and to compel all small and great to receive a mark in their right hands or their foreheads, so that none could buy or sell, have liberty to traffic unless they have the mark of the beast.

Give false religion full control and it will require universal submission to its behests compelling all to support it and to become members of it. This first showed itself publicly when Constantine, the Roman Emperor issued a decree that no one could hold an office unless he was a christian. The spirit of wickedness now would, if not restrained compel all mankind to worship the image made to the first beast, or the power of false religion.

P. D. G.

"And Balaam rose up in the morning and saddled his ass, and went with the princes of Moab." Num. 22; 23.

Balaam is called a prophet (see 2nd Pet. 2: 16,). but he does not rank with true prophets, though God put a word in his mouth, and he spoke the truth none using sublimer language than he did, yet he loved the wages of unrighteousness. He was therefore mad, for the dumb ass speaking with man's voice rebuked the madness of the prophet. This is the only instance in which the dumb ass ever spoke with man's voice.

The leading motive in Balaam's heart was the love of money. For this he toiled and prophesied, and taught Balak to cast a stumbling block before Israel. He knew what was a great snare to Israel, namely the inducing them to marry women of other nations, and thus he beguiled and led them away to worship false gods.

Women are easily led away with false doctrines to worship idols, and they often lead away men into the same snare. True women such as are taught of God are as good christians as men are. But in the 4: p2 women of Moab and other idolatrous countries are used to represent false religion, and such women always were a snare to Israel. Hence Israel was forbidden to marry any such people, or to marry any women except those of their own nation.

Balaam did not love Israel, although he talked so favorably of that people. Sometimes one of much learning and strong parts talks strongly in favor of the people of God, yet he does not love them. He will slyly cast a stumbling block in the way. He will teach that Israel can unite with the denominations of the earth, and should join in with them and make affinity, form a confederacy, commune with them, labor together, or say that we are too old-fashioned.

Balaam thirsted for Balak's gold. With all of his high-sounding declarations that he could not curse Israel, even if Balak gave him his house full of gold, still that was what he thirsted for.

God suffered him to go, but then he could not overthrow God's purpose.

The ass that Balaam rode represents the burdened people bearing the saddle and burdened of Balaam. The crying out of the dumb ass speaking with man's voice shows that now and then people who are saddled or burdened with the heavy salaries now buckled on them are groaning and speaking out against them, but the false teachers of this day not only saddle these burdens or salaries on the people, but they get on them and ride themselves, and require of the people to support them entirely. For these false teachers love the wages of unrighteousness, and divine for money now as they did of old.

The year now approaching is still unknown to us, though not to him who declares the end from the beginning. It is not necessary for us to know any thing of the future, since he who is our life and righteousness knows all things. The life of faith and therefore of dependence is best called out by a sense and consciousness of the fact that we know nothing of the future, but that God knows all things, and that we are to trust him for all things, having the promise of the life that now is and of that which is to come.

Faith is not the cause of any thing any farther than that it is the way in which divine and spiritual blessings are conveyed to us and received by us. While natural blessings may be received or enjoyed without faith, since it is by sight that they are enjoyed, it is impossible for divine or spiritual blessings to be enjoyed or known except by faith. Then faith deals with what is beyond sight, and does not, nor can it blunder, or err in things distant, any more than it ever does in things past or present.

We should therefore have no more distrust of things unknown, or in the future, than we do things now present. We do not wish to be of that number whose gloomy forebodings dampen all the present or shroud the unknown with blackness. Why should the future be any worse than the past? Are not all things in the hand of God? If he give us Christ will he not give us all things?

This paper is not ashamed of the doctrine it has been advocating, but hopes by the grace of God to contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints, and may the Lord God enable the writers to feed the flock of God, to whom be greeting.

LANDMARK—ITS AIM.

THE LANDMARK aims to publish, according to the ability God gives, the truth as expressed in the Bible.

To tell the meaning of prophecy as unfolded in passing events, or events not yet transpiring, or as fulfilled in the experience of the child of God, is one object of this paper. For the Bible is in the main prophecy and the showing how prophecy is fulfilled. The Bible is unlike all other books, for while if they utter truth they can speak only of that which is visible; the Bible speaks of that which is unseen and invisible, or prophecy which not until fulfilled becomes in any sense visible. Only therefore as one is brought under the power of Bible teaching and becomes conscious by partaking of the things it declares, does he know that what it teaches is truth. But when what it teaches is fulfilled in one he becomes convinced by many infallible proofs that what it utters is vine and everlasting truth.

Now in love I trust to write of these glorious things so far as they are revealed to me and in me, and I desire to communicate to the people of God these precious things of divine truth. Without doubt it is of much comfort to the children of God to communicate with each other by epistles of love as they sojourn in this land of Mesech. The LANDMARK is a medium of such correspondence in which all the brethren are welcome to write and express their feelings, views and minds. P. D. G.

— — — — — VIEWS REQUESTED.

My views are requested of 1st Peter 3: 19, 22 by Mrs. B. A. Wilson.

"By which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison?"

Which sometimes were disobedient, when once the long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing, wherein few, that is eight souls were saved by water.

"The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us, not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God by the resurrection of Jesus Christ?"

The context will aid us often in understanding the meaning of a writer. In this instance Peter is encouraging and exhorting believers to do good, to return good for evil, to follow Jesus, and if they suffer let it be for well-doing. He appeals to the highest authority and the perfect example of Jesus, who did no sin, neither was guile found in his lips, who when he was reviled reviled not again. For Christ hath also once suffered for sins the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit; by which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison.

It was in the flesh that Jesus suffered. That is when he was found in fashion as a man, yet he knew no sin, and was without guile. Then all the people of God must suffer while in the flesh if they follow Jesus. Since then it is the will of God that we suffer, should it not be for well-doing? "For if ye suffer for righteousness' sake happy are ye."

But what is meant by Christ going by the Spirit and preaching to spirits in prison, when once the long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, at which time these spirits were disobedient? Some people conclude from this scripture that repentance is preached to souls after death, and hence that there is no eternal punishment. I saw two men recently talking to each other in favor of universalism. But it needs no argument to prove to a child of God that there is a hell. Every christian knows there is a hell from his own experience and from the word of God also. When one is convicted of sin he is taught that there is the sting of a guilty conscience.

This text of the Scripture is used by the Catholics to prove purgatory, and by others to prove that there is no hell. Is that what Peter means? If we are given the knowledge of the mystery of the scriptures that will decide the matter, for the word of God decides all cases. There is no other scripture that hints such a thing or gives the least semblance, or color of support to the idea that Jesus preaches repentance to any after their natural or corporeal death. A wise man then would not wish to build on so slender a rope of sand as the merest conjecture that this scripture teaches such a thing as that there is no hell.

In the case of the parable of the rich man and Lazarus there is no such a thing as repentance preached to him. The dead are buried far out of our sight. Their souls are gone much farther out of our sight than their bodies.

Jesus suffered and was put to death in the flesh. He even went by the Spirit it by which he was quickened, not in the flesh, and preached to the Spirits in prison during the long-suffering of God in the days of Noah while those to whom he preached were disobedient. While Noah was building the ark the long-suffering of God waited, bearing with the disobedience of these spirits shut up in prison. For it was true that they were shut up or in prison out of which they could not escape. For the coming flood had shut them up so that they could not overleap that appointment of God that they should be destroyed. But even then the Spirit of Jesus was in Noah a preacher of righteousness, and thus Jesus by this Spirit in Noah preached to these spirits in prison then. This shows something of the long-suffering of God and his amazing goodness. While the ark was a preparing God showed his long-suffering which waited one hundred and twenty years, and during this time Jesus went by the same Spirit by which he was quickened from the dead and in Noah preached to the spirits or souls then shut up in prison, the prison of the impending doom of a coming flood, under which they were shut up, and out of which they could not escape. Under the old testament dispensation Jesus by the Spirit preached to the disobedient. That was the Rock that followed the Israelites in the wilderness and suffered in all their affliction and was made to serve with their sins.

In the flesh Jesus was put to death, but he was quickened by the Spirit by which he thus preached.

Eight souls were saved by water which is a figure of the resurrection. As water separates filth from persons' clothing, so water separated Noah and his family from the rest that were washed away or drowned, while they were raised up or lifted up and rose above the element of water that destroyed the world that then was. The like figure whereunto baptism doth now also save us. The ark and flood of water and the saving of Noah and his family from death was a figure of the resurrection as also baptism is. For Peter here expressly says that both are a figure of the resurrection? It is in that the water saved eight souls by lifting them above the flood and thus raising them up, for the water that drowned the world lifted these eight souls above the element of death, and delivered Noah and his family into the new world, wherein God made a covenant with Noah and all flesh that he would no more destroy the earth with a flood of water.

So baptism also now saves us. How? Not by the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but by the answer of a good conscience by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead. Baptism must necessarily set forth burial and resurrection. Here was death and resurrection in the water of the flood, and the ark lifted above the flood of water and saving eight souls. So in gospel baptism there is the answer of a good conscience in following Jesus in the resurrection, who was put to death in the flesh for our sins and quickened by the spirit and risen, by which spirit he preaches to the spirits shut up in prison, and we receive the answer of a good conscience towards God.

Why are any baptized for the dead if the dead rise not? Buried with Christ by baptism into the likeness of his death and risen with him by the faith of the operation of God, which in the figure of baptism sets forth that Jesus is gone to heaven, exalted far above all principalities and powers, angels and authorities being made subject to him.

They who are baptized with Jesus suffer with him. Baptism represents suffering and death. The flood represented suffering and death. But in the resurrection that follows is salvation. So that we must suffer with him. Therefore let all our suffering be for the truth's sake, and we shall be quickened by that Spirit by which Jesus preached to the spirits in prison.

The people of God now in the flesh are all in prison. We that live are always delivered unto death for Jesus' sake, that his life also might be made manifest in our mortal flesh. If Christ be in you the body is dead because of sin, but the Spirit is life because of righteousness, or the resurrection. Oh wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death. I thank God through Jesus Christ or the resurrection. Then my spirit or my mind with which I serve God is imprisoned in the jail or body of death, the flesh. But Jesus preaches to me by his Spirit, and therefore I am saved by hope. Baptism then is the figure of the resurrection, and it now saves us. Baptism now saves us, giving us now the answer of a good conscience towards God by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead. The flesh retains its filth. After we are baptized we know the flesh is still filthy, therefore we are not to walk after it. But in Jesus we have the answer of a good conscience towards God. For the Spirit brings the things of Jesus and the resurrection to us, and the Spirit is life because of righteousness, or the resurrection.

We must suffer in the flesh as long as we live. But Jesus by the Spirit preaches to us. That long-suffering of God is thus to us and how blessed in this prison of clay to have now the answer of a good conscience toward God by the resurrection of Jesus Christ, knowing that if we suffer with Jesus we shall also be glorified together. For he shall also quicken our vile bodies by his spirit that dwelleth in us, and we shall be caught up on the right hand of God to be forever with the Lord.

CIRCULATION AND PRICE OF THE LANDMARK.

While other papers offer premiums to induce people to subscribe for their papers, and canvass and beg people for that purpose, it has never seemed to me to be consistent with the Primitive doctrine. One man has as much right as another has to publish a paper. No one man or set of men has a right to a monopoly, nor does any right minded man want such a thing. If a brother is exercised to write and publish a paper let him do so. There are different gifts of writing as well as of preaching.

If a man attempts to publish a paper and fails he should not blame his brethren. If a man publishes a book, of his own accord, and people do not buy it he has no right to blame them.

If a paper is of the Lord it will be upheld by the people of God. Baptists should show their faith and confidence in God by submitting to his providence and loving each other, and not scrambling after money and seeking preeminence. The cost of publishing the LANDMARK is so great to me that I cannot afford to give premiums. To help brother Hassell in his history I propose to give a $2. copy of that work to any one getting up a club of eight new names for the LANDMARK, and that is about the same as taking the profit of the subscription out of my own pocket and giving it to the History.

The LANDMARK makes no war upon any other paper. It desires friendship and brotherly love among our people, and I hope is thankful to all that help me to publish by subscribing for it, or by obtaining new subscribers. But we are not able to offer any thing besides the truth published in its columns to induce people to take it, nor do we see the need of any thing else. The paper is cheap at its present price. We hope our friends will feel disposed to help us along as best they can in love, and that they may have the spirit to pray for us that our labor may not be vain in the Lord.

It is impressed on my mind and has been for years to write. Shall I object to others following their impressions and writing too? It is right to show courtesy to our brethren, and it is my duty and should be my pleasure, and is if I am right to be courteous and kind to my brethren, and not be jealous of them. Let each one wait on his own proper gift and be fellow-helpers to the truth. But it does not appear to be consistent with faith and the principles of the bible for me to be over-anxious to get subscribers, nor to have people to subscribe for it; but trust in the Lord who opens a way in the wilderness. It looks too much like the world when one tries to hire people to subscribe for a paper, or when he tries to get more subscribers than any one else, or break them down. Where is faith? Where is brotherly love? The love of money and worldly striving we do not want.

Of course we are helped and encouraged by people contributing to us their help for which we desire to be thankful, but we wish all things to be done in charity and to edification. P. D. G.

ELDER P. D. GOLD, DEAR BROTHER:
—Please give your views on a brother's marrying a woman that has been divorced, even that was divorced for her husband committing fornication, and oblige a friend.

Remarks.

There has been much trouble arising from this matter of divorces and parties divorced marrying again.

There has been so much conflict among Baptists too about the question whether a party who is innocent, obtaining a divorce from one guilty of fornication, has the right to marry again while divorced that one who desires peace among brethren, peace at home and in his own conscience, would be careful how he moves in this matter.

Of course when parties are involved in this matter they must bear it as best they can, and abide in their lot. One thing taught that we do well to heed is that the husband should love his wife as he loves himself, and the wife see that she reverence her husband. Let each one live properly and there can be no occasion nor use for any such thing as divorces. Marriage is the most important of all earthly relationships, and should be honored as such. When people marry it should be with the understanding that nothing but death shall part them.

In our country some Baptists have married again after having been divorced as above described, and the brethren tolerated it; but it would spare churches much trouble if all would cease from doing so.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

Elder B. E. Caudill's Post Office is changed from Larue Ken. to London, Laurel Co. Ken.

ELDER WELBORN'S BOOK.

We have never seen the book of Elder Welborn and therefore cannot judge of its contents. We publish this notice at his request. We do not consider that Primitive Baptists are bound to purchase books of our brethren, that should be left to their own judgment and feelings, and it is so with papers published by our people.

We rather think the Kehukee Association is somewhat bound to help Elder Hassell out of his trouble because they requested him to publish the History and fixed the price.

If any one publishes a book of his own accord he takes the risk of making or losing according to the merit of the book and its sales. If Elder Welborn succeeds with his book I shall be glad of it. If he does succeed he gets the profits, if he fails he must be the loser. We lend him a helping hand by publishing his notice as he requests. P. D. G.

"DAVID TO JOHN."

Our David slings stones at a hair's breadth. Some are apt to be struck by such missiles. His arguments are hard as stones and as weighty.

Having come up from the brook with a good shepherds sling we bid him God-speed, and feel that he can take much prey.

Obituary.

ELDER AARON DAVIS.

By the request of my mother, other relatives and many friends, I send you the obituary of my father, Elder Aaron Davis, and hope you will publish this for the benefit of many friends and relatives.

Father was born in Onslow Co., N. C., on the 30th of March 1812, and departed this life Sept. 11th 1888, making him in the 77th year of his age. His disease was the inflammation of the bowels. He had suffered for many years with dyspepsia, and in the last few years it turned upon his bowels of which he suffered for the balance of his days. Two years ago he had a severe attack of pneumonia when we all thought he would die, but he recovered, and just before this he had an attack of vertigo, of which he suffered and at times afterwards was troubled with it. In his death sickness he seemed to be resigned to the will of the Lord, and he was just waiting his Maker's time, and he said further to his wife, friends and children who were standing around, doing all that could be done to relieve him, that he was going to die, and all he dreaded was the sting of death, that he was in possession of something that came from the Lord, and that he believed it would go back to him. He had a well grounded hope of future happiness. One thing that wearied him was that he wanted to be buried at South West Church, Onslow Co., and it was unusually wet, the creeks were all impassable, and he was afraid that he could not be carried there. He said once while preaching at South West that he wanted to be buried there, that it was the most sacred place on earth to him. He joined the church there May 2d, 1846, and was baptized, we suppose, the day following, and on May 1st 1847 he was licensed to preach, and on May 3d 1856 he was chosen as their pastor, and served them as long as he lived.

He also had the care of three or four other churches. He served as moderator of the White Oak Association for many years. He was highly esteemed by his churches, and will be held in grateful remembrance by all. He has been preaching for over forty one years. He never let anything keep him from his appointments that he could help. I have known him to go off many times through heat and cold, and often sick, hardly able to get in his buggy.

His mind was perfectly clear up to within a few hours of his death. He was married twice, of which there are five children living, three by his first wife and two by his last. He was a kind and indulgent father and husband. Very truly yours.

JOHN B. DAVIS.

Rocky Point, N. C.

Remarks.

Elder Aaron Davis was a dear lover of peace and opposed to new things. He was raised up in days when such men as Lewis Puckett and Parham Puckett, men gifted in speech, but of bad morals and hurtful conduct, lived in that section. Such a man as Elder Davis was very useful then in preserving the Association as salt.

We notice some men that are of bright gifts seemingly, but they are not balanced. They get into some conceit, get puffed up from flattery, or think they are smarter than other men, and hatch up some new notions from cockatrice eggs, or some other wicked incubation, and such men do much mischief. How much better to have such men as Elder Davis who do not feel they are smart enough to father some new thing, or are not extremists or hobbyists, getting up some unimportant thing, and swell up on it, and press it to the neglect of weightier matters, and hurt brethren's feelings, and bring discord in the churches.

But such men as Elder Davis are far wiser after all. The man who pursues a quiet, peaceable, righteous and straight forward course, and serves in peace and love is far wiser and more useful.

Elder Davis was a good preacher, a useful man and most lovely in his spirit. The people he served loved him and cherish his memory and should do so as long as they live.

P. D. G.

ELDER AARON DAVIS.

Tribute of respect to the memory of Elder Aaron Davis, from the church at Yopps, of which he was pastor, and which he so faithfully served until his death.

Whereas, under the dispensation of our heavenly Father, he has seen fit to lay his afflicting hand upon us in the removal from time to eternity of our much beloved brother and pastor Elder A. Davis, and to give him the exchange of worlds which we must all pass through. Therefore we the church at Yopps desire to show our appreciation for his service, and our heartfelt grief at his departure, and pay the last respect the living can to the dead, and we desire to bow in deep humiliation and grief to this stroke of the divine justice of God, believing that he does all things well, though we miss him and as it is a sad grief to part with those we love, yet it is far better for him to be absent from the body and present with the Lord, and we would be reconciled to his will and say thy will be done. May the Lord comfort, and sustain the family of our deceased brother, and give them to feel that all their dependence is in him for life and salvation.

W. T. JENKINS.

J. K. HARPER.

On a bright and beautiful Sabbath eve, Mr. Harper rode through Tarboro apparently in good health, on his way to meet his wife and youngest daughter. They were arriving from a visit to Mrs. J. R. Pitt, the oldest daughter who was quite sick. He had gone only a mile when feeling a difficulty in breathing he thought he would get out of his buggy, and as he did he placed his hand over his heart, gasped and fell. What a terrible scene for his fond wife and child to witness. They were only two miles away. Just at this time Mr. Logan Staton drove past, stopped and sent Mr. Harper to his house to be cared for by kind friends, while he went to meet and to bear the sad things to the bereaved wife and child. "In the midst of life we are in death."

Not a year since Mr. Harper lost a noble son the pride of his life, this severe blow leaving him with heart disease, which was the cause of his sudden death.

Mr. James K. Harper was born the 20th of September 1825, was married to Miss Nancy J. Staton on the 7th December 1854, and died December 2nd 1888.

He was the father of seven children, three of whom have been summoned to their long home, while four are left to mourn with their mother the loss one who was ever devoted and kind. His wife was a member of the Primitive Baptist church and he loved their doctrine. At the Association at Town Creek he expressed himself as having feasted upon the preaching. He was industrious, energetic and hospitable. He will be sadly missed.

We extend our deepest sympathy to the bereaved ones. Time rolls on and each day wafts our souls nearer and nearer to the Eternal Home. It is there we hope to meet with loved ones gone before, and unite our songs in sweetest praise. How glorious to meditate upon the reunion of saints around the Great White Throne, with Jesus there, our Lord and King. No more weeping, no more pain, but forever in His presence to live, sanctified through suffering, glorified by death. It is now that we can view death as an angel of peace bearing away our loved ones to realms of endless day.

DIED.

At the residence of his father on Wednesday August 22nd 1888 little Earnest, youngest son of John F. and Virginia P. Hall, aged two years, one month and one day.

Oh! how can we give him up
Our comfort and our joy?
But then it was the Lord's good will
To take our darling boy.

He was the sunshine of our home
A pleasure to all around;
But now he sleeps in the dark cold earth,
Beneath a precious mound.

SISTER.

HYMN AND TUNE BOOK. This book has been carefully compiled by Elders Silas H. Durand and P. G. Lester. No hymns unsound in sentiment have been admitted, and great care has been taken in the selection of soul-cheering, devotional tunes. PART I.

ON SELF-MADE MINISTERS.

So then, both Jude and Paul show us that no man can or ought to take the office of minister on himself without this call; if he does, he is guilty of the same daring presumption, and Jude says, such will perish with Korah and company for so doing. Then how dare any man to take this office on himself without God's call, or others to confer this office on men who they have no reason to believe are born of God's spirit and called of God? You will say, we don't believe in a special call of God to the ministry. Why not, when the whole tenor of scripture shows it? Let me tell you this was the case of Korah and company. They did not believe in Aaron's special call, if they had they would not thrust themselves into office. Then such as assume the office of minister, and those that confer it without this call, are every one to a man a Korah and company; and you will as certainly perish and be consumed by the fire of God's wrath, and your souls go down alive into the pit of hell as Korah and company, should not the rich grace of God prevent; wherefore, repent of this thy daring presumption. For what hast thou to do with God's ark and holy things, or God's holy word, gospel and ordinances, seeing he has not called thee nor put thee in trust with his gospel goods, nor employed thee as a shepherd to feed his sheep, nor recommended thee to be a witness for him to bear witness of him and testify of the gospel of the grace of God; nor to be steward of his house to give them their meat in due season: nor employed thee to be overseer by the Holy Ghost to feed his flock. Oh, thou blind guide, wilt thou lead others to hell, having not known the way thyself? How in the name of sense art thou able to be a guide to others, for you don't know nor can't know Jesus Christ the way to heaven, having not the Spirit to reveal him to you, nor the call of God to the ministry to have the gifts of God's Spirit and grace, that you might be enabled there-by like Paul to preach the unsearchable riches of Christ; you will be damned and ought to be damned for deceiving men out of their souls for money and honor, and thrusting yourselves into the ministry and putting on the sheep skin to deceive the sheep and the world out of their souls to get money without God's call.

Then men gainsay or wrest God's doctrine, God's call to the ministry, God's ordinances in a right way, and burlesque the truths of God and his holy people and salvation by grace and faith; and this they do because they have not the spirit to teach them better. Therefore, they teach the doctrines of men for the commands of God, having not the spirit they are ignorant of God's righteousness and therefore teach their own: having not the spirit, pure gospel doctrine is foolishness to them, therefore they teach other doctrines, such as morality and other men pleasing things, &c. all which are like the goods and effects, and such churches like the tents of Korah will perish, for the day comes to try by fire, Jude, 1. 12.

These self-made ministers have another mark by him given : Clouds they are without water, carried about of winds. Then true ministers are clouds with water and without destructive winds. So then here is a vast difference between a minister of God and one self-made. Self-made ministers then although they may put on all the appearance of God's ministers, or clouds full of rain to water the plants of the earth, look black, heavy and lowering, and big with rain, yet in such a ministry there is nothing but wind of doctrine, storm and tempest, sweeping over the plain ; and is as destructive to the plants of grace and the church or garden of God, and world, by their windy errors, as the blasting east wind on the fruits of spring, or the hot winds that sweep over the sandy deserts of Arabia, blinding the eyes of the traveller with sand, thirst and death ; or, as the whirlwind roaring through the forest, spreading terror, destruction, and devastation in its course ; yet not one drop of water to make the plants of the earth to grow, nor call the hidden seeds to birth. So is the self-made minister like a cloud that carries nothing but wind, destroying the souls of men by his errors and carnal reasoning. In such ministers there is not one drop of the water of life springing up in him, no grace of God, no treasure in his earthen vessel, no spirit to attend the word to make it life ; Christ is not with him always, as promised his own ministers. No showers of the heavenly grace of God attend this man's preaching, as at the day of pentecost ; this man can't draw water from the wells of salvation, and pour it out on the thirsty plants of Zion, nor on the wilderness to make the deserts bloom like the rose, and the thirsty land become springs and pools of water. A child of God may sit under this man's ministry two hours and go away from church as thirsty as he came and rather worse ; no comfort, no strength, no consolation, no food for his soul, no milk of the word for him ; all dead, flat, insipid, heart distressing, and contrary to what his feelings, his experience, and God's word dictate to his conscience to be the right way. Yet men having the form of godliness, moralists and self workers, hypocrites and self-righteous, will think it fine food, food fit for sheep. Not so ; for this man not having the spirit can't preach by the spirit, nor can't preach the things of the spirit, and therefore can't feed those taught by the spirit ; but this man is of the world, therefore the world heareth him, and receiveth this man because he has come in his own name ; him therefore, as Christ saith, they will receive. But he that is taught of God's spirit will hear him that is taught of God's spirit by the word therefore, as John says, he that is of God heareth us--us, God's ministry ; and these strangers God's sheep will not follow, for they speak with a voice they don't know, and preach a doctrine that in their view of things don't agree with God's word nor their experience ; and so not one drop of water in these kind of ministers for a child of God. However much such men may feed goats, dogs and swine, their ministry is no pasture for sheep.

Same verse : Trees whose fruit withereth without fruit twice dead. These self-made ministers. Dead trees is another mark. Can any man hope for fruit from a dead tree ? Alas, how much less from a tree twice dead, plucked up by the roots. How vain then for men and women to attend on such a man's preaching ? What can be hoped for from a dead tree, from a minister dead in sin and dead in his profession, and dead in error and his ministry ; dead to God and holiness, having no grace, no gifts from God to preach Christ the way of truth and life ? All the fruit they bear, whether preaching, praying, or any thing else, is but withered fruit ; the fruit of a dying tree, not fit to eat, such is all this preacher says and does ; yea, the withered fruit and the boughs of a tree plucked up by the roots that lies dying on the surface of the ground with its withered fruit. Then no wonder that such men's preaching tastes so bad to the children of God, having by experience tasted of the fruit of the tree of life ; yea, the twelve manner of fruits that grow on Christ the tree of paradise. These fruits have been so sweet to their taste they can't forget the relish all their days : and as God's ministers are trees of righteousness, the planting of the Lord, so are they trees of life, bear living fruit, fruits of the spirit ; yea, their words through the spirit are spirit and life. Therefore God's children know the difference in the taste of the preaching of a God made minister and self-made one, and this is one of the fruits by which God's children know the difference in the taste of the preaching of a God made minister and a self-made one, and this is one of the fruits by which God's children are to know a wolf preacher from a God preacher, by taste of their preaching. For preaching of a God minister will be to their souls at times as milk and wine, as fat things full of marrow, as wine on the lees, as a fatted calf, as a wedding supper, as pleasant fruits from a green tree full ripe, as a river of water in a thirsty land ; by which the children of God will be fed, will grow like a calf in a stall, renew their strength as the eagle after shedding his old feathers and the new ones get full grown : will be comforted and filled with love, joy and peace ; with singing and gladness among his brethren. But the preaching of a self-made minister will be to their taste sapless and dry, bitter to the taste of their souls, unsound and full of rotten specks and worms of error, half ripe and half green, some may do and some won't do and spoil all the rest. Then throw it all away, for it is all sourish, bitter and withered, and indigestible food of a dead tree. The preaching of such self-made preachers will do for moralists and others, as this is all they have ever tasted ; but you get a taste of the fruit of the tree and I warrant you know the difference between the preaching of God's minister and a self-made one. You will say like Jude, dead tree, nothing on this tree but fruit not fit to eat ; no water in this cloud, nothing but wind : no preaching to me nor comfort for me in this man's preaching.

Verse 13, same chapter, sets forth other figurative marks of these men : Raging waves of the sea, foaming out their own shame ; wandering stars, to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness for ever. Compared to raging waves of the sea, foaming out their own shame. How terrible and awful to stand on the sea shore and behold the raging billows of the sea driven by a tempest rolling mountain high towards the shore and dashing against the banks with fury and foaming and dying on the shore, as if ashamed retiring back to the bed of the ocean, as if rebuked by rocks and sand banks. Here these proud waves are stayed and all their fury broken. How terrible and awful are men made preachers to the church of God. How furious and wrathful and reddened with vengeance is their countenances and words, foaming out their threats and punishments and rolling billows of sorrow to the church of God in their persecution of the saints by torture and death. Witness the mighty men of power, the popes, who all to a man I doubt not were self-made. How terrible and awful, worse than the raging waves of the sea, have these men made the kings of the earth and church of God to tremble ; rolling on the billows of persecution one after another, they and their adherents against the church of God from age to age have foamed, dashed, and beat against the church of God ; yet like the furious billows have died in their and to their shame ; and it is a shame to them to this day, and the names of the persecutors of the church will be covered with shame to the end of the world. Nor have they any more prevailed against and destroyed the church, than the raging waves of the sea have the high land ; they have only beat on the shore and there died in foam, because she is founded on a rock so that neither the gates of hell nor men-made preachers, who always have been the persecutors and the stimulators of a kings, emperors, queens and magistrates of the earth thereunto, from Cain to this day. For a self-made priest and self righteous men have been at the bottom of all the persecution and blood of the church of God, as both scripture and history prove beyond all contradiction.

Another mark is that of wandering stars. Now there are three sorts of stars; the fixed stars that never wander from their spheres, or the place where the God of heaven has fixed them, but all move on in perfect order and harmony in their various revolutions round the sun, and held by its attractive influence are forced to pay their obedience to a half second in their revolutions, whether there be storms or tempest it detains them not, nor turns them out of their course: to these God's ministers are compared, and thus Christ is said to hold the seven stars in his right hand, meaning the minister of the seven churches of Asia. A second sort of stars is what is called shooting stars, or falling stars: these are properly speaking, no stars, but a mere meteor or perhaps something like electricity, or inflammable gas, that explodes suddenly; this kind of stars never were seen to wander, but always go straight forward until they die out, and are a fit emblem of those preachers that pop up all at once and preach away for awhile and show great light and blaze away for a few years, but in falling into sin, or marrying a rich wife, die as soon as these kind of falling stars, and the trace of their course is as dark as their beginning, or end.

Then to a third sort of stars Jude must have alluded, and that is, the blazing comet. These are wandering stars, have every appearance of a star appearing very suddenly; and who can think of their mighty motion without being struck with surprise, that when he sets off his journey he runs nobody knows where, often beyond orb of Saturn in the untrod paths of space, as if intending to escape from the system of the universe, blazing with its undiminished touch as if it intended to set surrounding worlds on fire in its passage; and wandering from our world is lost in sight, sometimes for a century, and goes nobody knows where. But as if under the control of almighty power at any time and to the unbounded extent of space, are at length by the powerful attractive influence of the sun forced to retrace his steps and again appear on our coast and to our sight after centuries. Thus they may be said to wander among the stars, rove through the system of the universe and through unknown space, which fixed stars do not. But the two main characteristics of difference of this kind of stars and fixed stars is this, these are wandering stars, others are not; these very plainly appear to have their light springing from themselves, to wit, the blaze above, which appearance is seen neither in sun, moon or star. And although the sun may be said to be the fountain of light and sheds forth her luminous beams on all around, yet she shows no such appearance; but this star seems to be independent, and as if he would mimic the sun and blaze through the world. This star seems as if it would be king among stars, and the peculiar object of notice among stars; and a terror to all and the admiration of the gazing multitude and talk of all.

To this kind of stars I think Jude compares self-made teachers. First they spring up among ministers rather suddenly, and are the objects of notice from their first appearance, while many of God's ministers are laughed at or like the smallest fixed stars, hardly observable in the firmament of the church, or scarce noticed among ministers of greater gifts. Secondly, a self-made minister is sure to wander in doctrine from the scriptures, and often from opinion, and speak not according to God's word, because there is no light in him, having not the spirit. He is never settled and rooted and grounded in the faith, having never had Christ revealed to his soul the way, the truth and life, and formed in his soul the hope of glory; and seen by experience in his own soul, that there is not another name by which he can be saved. Therefore he wanders in his preaching in the airy regions of the law, works and self doings in part or the whole for salvation; and wanders out of the word of God in the trackless paths of human reason, moral lectures, and the regions of human brutal sense, as Jude says—preaches natural knowledge for Jesus crucified, making not divine revelation his guide for it is foolishness to him, having not the spirit, for he knows it not since it is only received by those that have the spirit as the wisdom of God, and the world by wisdom knows not God. He wanders over sea and land to make men two fold more children of hell than himself. They are often very extensive in their preaching, and if you will narrowly scrutinize their preaching, you will find that they like the blazing star have their light of themselves, and no thanks to the sun of righteousness—for they blaze through the churches with terror, are the gazing stock of multitudes, preaching science and morality and novelty. What a preacher, what light, what wonderful ideas this man has got! But you mark this man's preaching and you will find one half borrowed and the other unscriptural, when tried by the standard. I warrant you he don't preach Christ for salvation, beginning, middle and end; nor the author and finisher of our faith. This man wants to shine the most conspicuous among ministers; he is not dependent on God for light to preach, he has it of himself. He can study it out, he can preach whether God helps him or not. Nor did he ever feel the want of God's help, nor did he ever say Lord, I can't preach except thou help me; having never felt God's help to preach, he don't know what it is to be without it. And often these men wander from opinion, or one creed to another, from one new idea to another, until all their preaching is ideal speculative reasoning, and no old, sound, solid gospel in all they say. And oftener than miss, they keep wandering until they wander to—nobody knows where to quite new, unheard of opinions, and sometimes wander back, the dog to his vomit and the sow to the mire. And thus says Jude to whom the blackness of darkness is reserved for ever. Awful indeed, but just in God, thus to punish them for taking this sacred office on them without his calling them to office; and for endeavoring to deceive men out of their precious souls, saying this is the way to heaven—when they themselves don't know the way how can they guide others?

WAR IN HEAVEN.

By an impression of my mind I wish to make a few remarks upon Rev. 12 chapter and 7th verse, which reads as follows.

"And there was war in heaven. Michael and his angels fought against the Dragon, and the Dragon fought and his angels."

The book of Revelation of Jesus Christ unto his servant John concerning things which must shortly come to pass was significant, and he was representing principles and characters instead of visible things and places. To work by this rule we are more likely to arrive at a correct solution. But suffice it to say that we very cautiously, and with solemnity, approach this mysterious book, knowing that it is sublimely deep and mysterious and knowing also that the true meaning or import of the scriptures is hidden from the natural or carnal mind, and can only be discerned or comprehended by the Spirit as God gives us insight. As a warning against error, the Lord hath said by the mouth of the wise man to keep thy foot when thou goest to the house of God, and be more ready to hear than to give the sacrifice of fools, for they consider not that they do evil. We see that great evil may be done to precious souls by carelessly and indiscriminately dealing out or administering God's word. It is from this cause that so much heresy, superstition and infidelity have sprung. It is alarming that men who profess to be called of God to break the bread of life to a dying people, will take up a portion of the divine teachings of the Holy Bible and scatter it to the four winds. And for this cause I the least and unworthiest of all approach this sublimely mysterious book with profound solemnity.

To regard the aforesaid passage as literal would be likely to leave the impression on the minds of a judgment-bound people that heaven, or the eternal abode of the divine majesty, where God alone reigns and rules with unmo- lested supremacy, has been the origin, or progenitor of the devil, and all diso- bedient and rebellious spirits.

But I wish it understood that as a wit- ness for the truth, and an advocate for the perfecting of the saints and the spot- less purity of God's kingdom, I oppose any doctrine that is calculated to make an impression upon enquiring souls that there ever has, is, or ever will be, any imperfection, impurity or rebellion in God's holy dominion: "And there was war in heaven." We presume that hea- ven is often put for the air or firmament as the "fowls of heaven, the winds of heaven, the clouds of heaven, the birds which fly in the midst of heaven." In all such passages the heaven is put for the air. "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth. This heaven which God created in the beginning was the firmament above the earth. The Bible informs us that the Lord God di- vided this firmament which he called heaven, and made it consist of two di- visions of the firmament called the hea- vens. The sun, moon and stars being placed in the second, or upper firmam- ent of heaven, are called the army or host of heaven. And David says of those heavens, "that they declare the glory of God, and the firmament show- eth his handy-work." He also says of them that "all thy works shall praise thee O Lord and thy saints shall bless thee." And again he says, "Praise ye him, sun and moon, praise him all ye stars of light." The Apostle Paul in speaking of them to the Romans says, for the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and un- righteousness of men who hold the truth in unrighteousness, because that which may be known of God is manifest in them; for God hath shewed it unto them; for the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made; even his eternal power and God-head, so that they are without excuse. And now we come to the hea- ven of heavens, or the third heaven. Paul speaks of having been caught up to the third heaven. The Jews said that their God was in this heaven. He is called by the Jews and others, The God of heaven, and that there he exer- cises his sovereign dominion over all creatures and all things from his es- tablished and eternal throne. Now from these passages we see that the He- brews acknowledged three heavens:

1st. The aerial heaven where the birds fly, the winds blow and the rains are formed.

2nd. The heaven of firmament where he placed the sun, moon and stars.

3rd. The heaven of heavens or the third heaven, which is the place of God's residence, the home and dwelling of an- gels and the blessed. This is the true throne and palace of God's eternal maj- esty, separated from all imperfections and earthly impurities, where he reigns in eternal supremacy and peace. It is the temple of his divine majesty where his excellent glory is revealed in the most conspicuous manner. It is the habitation of his holiness, the place where his honor dwells. It is his sacred mansion of eternal light, joy and glory.

So there never has been, or ever will be any war in that heaven.

But in the old Jewish church and the gospel militant church, which typifies or represents the first and second heaven, there ever has been incessant war. It took its origin from the first acceptable offering unto the God of heaven by Abel for which he was murdered by his own brother. And this war has been vigor- ously prosecuted down all the heavy throes of time to the present day, and will continue 'til the last foe to Mich- ael's spiritual kingdom is vanquished. So this war of which John speaks, has been and is in the second heaven, the militant gospel church, the spiritual kingdom of Christ (Michael) which we hope to prove to the satisfaction of all though we will have to confine ourselves to a very small compass.

Michael and his angels fought against the dragon. Michael is Christ, and the first account we have of this name is in the prophecy of Daniel, which says "But the prince of the kingdom of Persia withstood me one and twenty days, but lo Michael, one of the chief princes, came to help me, and I remained there with the kings of Persia.

"Now I am come to make thee understand what shall befall thy people in the latter days, for yet the vision is for many days." Then said he, "Knowest thou wherefore I come unto thee? And now will I return to fight with the prince of Persia, but I will show thee that which is noted in the scripture of truth and there is none that holds with me in these things, but Michael, your Prince. And at time shall Michael stand up, the great prince, which standeth for the children of thy people. And there shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation, even to that same time, and at that time thy people shall be delivered every one that shall be found written in the book, and many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake." We understand a portion at least of this prophecy had its fulfillment in the suffering, death and victory of Jesus Christ by his resurrection. An account of which is given in the 27th, chapter of Matthew: which says that Jesus, when he had cried again with a loud voice, yielded up the ghost; and beheld the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom: and the earth did quake and the rocks rent; and the graves were opened, and many bodies of the saints which slept arose and came out of the graves after his resurrection, and went into the holy city and appeared unto many. The Centurion and others beholding the earthquake and these wonders that happened, feared greatly, saying, truly "this was the Son of God." Here all was confusion, consternation, and such a time of trouble never had been witnessed since there was a nation, even to this same time. And at this time every one was delivered whose names are written in the book. For a moment of reflection we will go back to the declaration of war by the dragon against the spiritual kingdom of Christ (Michael) as indicated in the first of the 12th, chapter of Revelation.

Here we have a description of the adornment of the mother of Jesus, and the great desire of the dragon to slay him even at mother's breast, while lying in the ox manger. And this war lasted while his visible body was on earth—vigorously persecuted by the first beast or dragon, having seven heads and ten horns, in the person of king Herod and his minions. Here we see him deserted and forsaken, while he is captured and surrounded by his deadly foes, the dragon and his angels, who seemingly have gained a complete victory over him. We stand afar off and behold them gathered around him, mocking, smiting, and spitting in his face, and finally they pass the sentence of death against the Prince of life and glory, and then we see them driving him up Calvary hill to the place of his shameful execution bearing his own cross, and wearing a crown of thorns. Presently we see them halt, fit the cross to his back, and after extending his arms we see them driving nails into his innocent hands, after which he is suspended between the heavens and the earth in agonizing pain. Here we behold the Lamb of God, the Prince of life, passing through the valley of the shadow of death, and treading the winepress all alone, and crying with a loud voice saying, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" Then he testified and said, "It is finished." Thus having gained a complete victory over the dragon and his angels, through his blood he spoiled the powers of darkness, and destroyed him that had the power of death, which is the devil, and delivered them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage." Heb. 2: 14. "Thus bringing life and immortality to light through the gospel, He burst the bars of death and conquered the grave. This is the power and the victory of the kingdom, predicted by the prophet saying, that "The God of heaven would set up a kingdom which should never be destroyed, and that it should break in pieces and consume all earthly kingdoms, and that it should not be left to others but should stand forever." And another prophet in speaking of a kingdom says, "Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion, shout, O daughter of Jerusalem, behold, thy King cometh unto thee; he is just and having salvation; lowly and rideth upon an ass, and upon a colt, the foal of an ass, and he shall speak peace unto the heathen; and his dominion shall be from sea to sea, and from the river to the ends of the earth: and in that day I will make Jerusalem a burdensome stone for all people: all that burden themselves with it shall be cut in pieces, though all the people of the earth be gathered together against it. This is the stone which was cut out of the mountain without hands, which break in pieces the clay, the iron, and brass, the silver and the gold, and is made the head of the corner; but whosoever shall fall on this stone shall be broken, but on whosoever it shall fall it will grind him to powder. Now we will have to be brief and pass on to the third clause of the passage, "And the dragon fought and his angels. Now in elucidating this sublime subject it would be well to call attention here to the fact that this dragon is identified by seven different names, as dragon, devil, satan, serpent, beast, false prophet and Apollyon; and is represented as the enemy of righteousness, opposed to the law of God and the spiritual kingdom of Christ (Michael) and is also represented as the angel of the bottomless pit. We understand the true definition of the name angel, to be Herald, Minister or Messenger, either for good or for evil. This dragon was first introduced by the name serpent, in the garden of Eden, and was more subtle, which means piercing, keen, sharp, cunning and penetrating, than any beast of the field, which the Lord God had made. And in the reckoning of time, as before stated, the first account we have in the bible of this dragon, serpent, was near six thousand years. And the passage referred to plainly teaches that he was defeated, overcome and cast out by the blood of Jesus Christ which was shed about four thousand years after that time, which shows plainly that John who received the revelation was representing and speaking of principles and characters, instead of visible things and places. And if we work by this rule we are more likely to arrive at a correct solution. We find that in this great conflict, the Dragon was overcome and cast down by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of the testimony of his angels, ministers.

Now for further illustration of the nature of this war and strife of which John saw a vision, we will refer to the case of Nebuchadnezzar, the king of Babylon, who in his own dream saw his own wicked position and his fall from his ungodly and his haughty, wicked reign by the similitude of a tree which grew and was strong, whose height reached unto heaven, and the sight of it reached to all the earth, and whose leaves were fair and the fruit much, and in it was meat for all, and under it the beasts of the field dwelt, and on its branches the fowls of heaven had their habitation. But when the kingdom departed from Nebuchadnezzar, the King of Babylon, he confessed his wickedness and his inferiority, and also confessed the true and living God whose dominion is an everlasting dominion, and his kingdom is from generation to generation, and he praised and honored the King of heaven, and said, "That all his works are truth and his ways judgment, and all those who walk in pride he is able to abase." Such was the case with the king of Babylon, when the Lord by the mouth of the prophet Isaiah, prophesied against them saying, "How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning? How art thou cut down to the ground which didst weaken the nations?" For thou hast said in thine heart, 'I will ascend into heaven, I will exalt my throne above the stars of God. I will sit also up on the mount of the congregation in the sides of the north. I will ascend above the heights of the clouds: I will be like the Most High.

This seemed to be the exalted position and these seemed to be the thoughts of this great king, whose kingdom and power were over the nations of the earth; Yet, saith the Lord, thou shalt be brought down to hell to the sides of the pit.

He is said to have made the earth to tremble and to have weakened the nations thereof, and made the world as a wilderness.

Such was the condition and the exalted principle of this great king previous to the rending of the kingdom out of his hands. He was exercising ungodly and haughty principles under his kingly authority and by his greatness he was represented as the Morning Star, or Sun of the morning, by the name Lucifer. He had said figuratively, that "he would ascend into heaven," and this has reference to his self-esteemed greatness. He also said in his heart "I will exalt my throne above the stars of God." This does not mean stars in the firmament of heaven. But such stars of God as Daniel, Shadrack, Meshack, and Abednego. So we find that the Prophet was alluding to the ungodly and haughty principles exercised by king Nebuchadnezzar under his kingly authority while under the influence of an evil and haughty spirit. He inhabited his throne above the humble, merciful and divine principle of heaven or holiness, which is mercy, love to God and man, and obedience unto righteousness. So he fell from heaven and not out of heaven. If for instance we add to our faith virtue, and knowledge, and to knowledge temperance, and if these things be in us and abound, we will neither be barren nor unfruitful, neither shall we ever fall. Fall from what? Why fall from heaven of course. To fall from holiness is to fall from heaven. To attain to righteousness is to attain to heaven. And in this sense to be convicted of sin and transgression by the power of God is to fall from the heaven to carnality and be debased to the hell of degradation, for she that liveth in pleasure is dead while she liveth. This was the condition of Nebuchadnezzar, the king of Babylon, of whom it was said that he fell from heaven. He fell from heaven both morally and physically, being driven from men, and had his dwelling with the beasts of the field and ate grass like oxen, was wet with the dew of heaven, and seven times passed over him 'till he knew that the Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will. Then he praised and honored him that liveth forever, whose dominion is an everlasting dominion and whose kingdom is from generation to generation, and all the inhabitants of the earth are reputed as nothing, and he doeth according to his will in the army of heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth, and none can stay his hand, or say unto him what doest thou?

Now as before stated we find seven names given in the bible to the great red dragon who stood before the woman to devour the child as soon as it was born. He was called serpent, devil, satan, beast, dragon, false prophet, Abaddon or Apollyon, and is also represented as the angel of the bottomless pit. And to speak of one of these names includes all the rest. He is often called in the plural number. Paul fought with beasts (devils) at Ephesus. James says the "devils believe and tremble." In many instances we are told of Christ casting out a plurality of devils, or unclean spirits. Such as the prophet Isaiah described saying, "And behold joy and gladness, slaying oxen and killing sheep, eating flesh and drinking wine, let us eat and drink for to-morrow we die." But saith the prophet, "Surely this iniquity shall not be purged from you 'till ye die, saith the Lord." But as we are somewhat digressing we will return to the subject of the dragon being cast out of heaven. The Lord says by Isaiah, that "My thoughts are not your thoughts saith the Lord, neither are your ways my ways, for as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts, for as the rain and snow cometh down from heaven," &c., Isa. 55 : 8, 9, 10. Again the prophet saith, I am the Lord that maketh all things, that stretcheth forth the heavens alone, that spreadeth abroad the earth by myself. David also saith as the heavens are high above the earth so great is his mercy toward them that fear him. We only quote these passages which we give as a rule against careless reading about heaven, that we may not get the literal and the figurative, the temporal and the spiritual, mixed.

Isaiah says, or the Lord hath said by him, "Drop down ye heavens from above and let the skies pour down righteousness; let the earth open, and let them bring forth salvation, and let righteousness spring up together."

This passage is figurative and accords with that form of prayer taught by Christ saying, Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven, or as in earth so in heaven. Moreover the Lord saith "I have made the earth and created man upon it, my hands have stretched out the heavens, and all their host have I commanded." And in speaking of the power of the spiritual kingdom of Michael, Christ, he saith, "I have raised him up in righteousness, and I will direct all his ways: he shall build my city and he shall let go my captives, not for price or reward, saith the Lord." Hence "we were not redeemed with corruptible things as silver and gold, but with the precious blood of Christ." "And I heard a loud voice in heaven saying, "Now is come salvation and strength, and the kingdom of our God and the power of his Christ, for the accuser of our brethren is cast down. And they overcame him by the blood of the Lamb and the word of their testimony. We are taught here how, and by whom this mysterious battle was fought in the spiritual heaven, the militant church. This rule will also unravel the mystery of the fallen angels, which seems to mystify the minds of so many bible readers today, which is caused by the false idea that they were once Celestial bodies or angels in the third heaven, around the spotless throne of God, where God alone reigns and rules with omnipotent supremacy; and that by reason of disobedience and rebellion against his Divine Majesty, they were cast down to hell. But we understand angel to mean messenger, minister or herald, either for good or for evil, celestial or terrestrial, the latter of whom we understand to be the class of angels who fell. Michael has and did have angels, so did and does the dragon have angels. They are called his ministers who are sometimes transformed as the ministers of righteousness, whose end shall be according to their works. They are also called apostles and deceitful workers transforming themselves into the apostles of Christ.

So we learn from ancient history that the messengers of the Jewish Synagogue were sometimes called angels. This would seem true by the language of David who says, "Bless the Lord, ye his angels that excel in strength, that do his commandments, bless ye the Lord all ye his hosts, ye ministers of his that do his pleasure.

It appears that these angels, or ministers were subject to error, by the language of Job who said, "Behold he put no trust in his servants, and his angels he charged with folly." This would not be true of celestial bodies, else we say that heaven includes folly or foolishness. We are informed that the messengers or ministers of the militant gospel church in an early day were sometimes addressed as angels.

This is also plain by the Epistle of John to the angel of each of the seven churches in Asia, which could not be reasonable nor true of a celestial body, or minister, who could not or would not be subject to a written epistle from flesh and blood. Paul in speaking, as we suppose, of the lower order of angels, or ministers he says, "are they not all ministering spirits sent forth to minister for them who shall (in the future) be heirs of salvation."

These are the class of angels of whom the apostle is speaking when he says, "And of the angels he saith, who maketh his angels spirits, and his ministers a flame of fire.

For unto the angels hath he not put in subjection the world to come, whereof we speak.

We will now notice the commission of John to the angel of the church of Ephesus. In that epistle the Lord declared that he had somewhat against that angel, because he had left his first love, and was told to remember from whence he had fallen, and repent and do the first works, or else, says the word I will come unto thee quickly and will remove thy candlestick out of his place except thou repent. This also would not be reasonable, nor true of a celestial being. He was commanded to repent and to do the first works, because he had left his first love, with the injunction, upon his failure, that the Lord would remove his candlestick (church) out of his place. If we were to have it read, "unto the Elder, minister, or pastor of the church of Ephesus, then the demands of the Lord would seem reasonable and easily understood. His candlestick was the church of Ephesus, over which this angel had the care and oversight.

So with the angels of whom Peter speaks, By reason of neglect of duty they were classed, and punished together with the antediluvians, and lower order of Sodomites. Like the angel of the church of Ephesus they left their first love, and betrayed their ministerial trust. And further-more Peter says of these angels that they are as natural brute beasts made to be taken and destroyed, speaking evil of the things that they understand not, and shall utterly perish in their own corruption. So with Jude's angels who kept not their first estate or had fell from their first love or ministerial trust, or had left their own habitation which was their rank or station; for which cause they were reserved in everlasting chains under darkness unto the judgment of the great day.

Now all of these angels were terrestrial bodies, and subject to vanity like all other creatures, subject to the law of carnality which is in our members. And as we have no authority to say that there is or ever has been any law given or enacted in the councils of eternity, then it is only reasonable to say that they were terrestrial angels or ministers, because where there is no law there can be no transgression. Sin and rebellion is a violation of the known law, hence where sin and rebellion is not liable or does not exist, law is needless. In the first place the command was to repent and do the first works. This angel had left his first works, and fell from his first love in consequence of which he was commanded to repent and reform.

Yet we are taught that there is no repentance beyond our nature existence, for now is the accepted time, now is the day of salvation, there is not the shadow of hope for any who will not repent now. This character had forfeited his ministerial trust, and the penalty was repentance and reformation or the removal of his church and the condemnation of himself.

The sins of the church of which he had the care and oversight were required at his hand. So with all those fallen angels mentioned by Job, Peter, Jude, and John who had failed both by precept and example to teach the right ways of the Lord. Thus we find two classes of angels or ministers. The one is a terrestrial body who is subject to vanity as all other creatures, subject to a known law, subject to the law in our members which is almost continually warring against the law of our mind, and bringing us into captivity to the law of sin which is in our members. The other is a celestial body, a ministering spirit unto the divine majesty beyond the limits of a sin-stained world, where no error is known, where no law is needed, and where all is one eternal purity, and where violation is impossible, for "he is not the God of the dead, but of the living." This law of sin and death which is in our members is carnal, therefore we are carnal, sold under sin by violation a holy and righteous law through the law which is in our members. We understand this law in our members to be the same law in Adam which prompted Eve to acts of disobedience to the law of God. Eve received the law in Adam—while she was a member of his body, so in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. The first man is of the earth earthy, the second man is the Lord from heaven. And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly. He that is of the earth is earthy and speaketh of the earth. The above scriptures give us a description of the two characters, the carnal and the spiritual. Speaking of those who were changed from nature to grace by the victory of Michael over the dragon he says, And you hath he quickened who were dead in trespasses and sins, wherein in time past ye walked according to the course of this world, according to the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience. Among whom also we all had our conversation in times past in the lusts of our flesh, fulfilling the desires of the flesh and of the mind, and were by nature the children of wrath, even as others.

These scriptures teach us that all carnal beings walk according to the course or custom of this world, according to the prince of the power of the air which is that avaricious, serpentine, rebellious spirit which dwells in our carnal or fleshly mind meaning the same in substance or import, hence this prince of the power of the air, or this spirit of disobedience, pollutes man's nature, or the law in our members or flesh reigns and rules with deadly force in our mortal bodies, till arrested and quickened by the spirit of Christ, "the seed of the woman which was to bruise this serpent's head." Thus thanks be unto God man is redeemed by the blood of Christ and brought into fellowship with God, being reconciled to the Father by the obedience and blood of Jesus Christ, our spiritual head.

And God said let us make man in our image, after our likeness, so God created man in his own image, but through the subtlety of the serpent he violated the law of God by hearkening unto the voice of Eve who was beguiled, or deceived by the serpent, and so fell or died from his original favor with God. So by man comes death, wherefore as by one man's disobedience sin entered into the world and death by sin, and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned. But if by one man's offence death reigned by one, much more they which receive abundance of grace and of the gift of righteousness shall reign in life by one, Jesus Christ. Therefore as by the offence of one, judgment came upon all men to condemnation, even so by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life. Then we are admonished to mortify our members which are upon the earth, and putting off anger, wrath, strife, malice, blasphemy, filthy communication out of our mouth, lie not one to another, seeing that ye have put off the old man with his deeds, and have put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him.

So we conclude that man is transformed into the spiritual image and likeness of him that created him, and not after personal likeness, (as many suppose.) The scriptures teach us that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God, and that the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye, and the pride of life is not of the Father, but is of the world, or carnal nature of man, or the vanity of man's nature whose god is no higher than its own head. Paul says of them that their god is their belly, their glory is in their shame, who mind earthly things. Now as the serpent was more subtle than any beast which the Lord God had made, so the Lord says by the Prophet that the heart is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked, who can know it? I the Lord search the heart, I try the reins, even to give to every man according to his ways and according to the fruit of his doings.

Subtile means—piercing, penetrating or fine drawn, which is best calculated to beguile or deceive fallible creatures.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—if one as unworthy as I fell may address you thus. I have been greatly impressed for sometime to write you a short sketch of my life; why it is I know not: as my education is very limited, I fear to make the attempt, and then it comes to me if God be for me who can be against: if I have been taught in the school of grace why should I seek the smiles or regard the frowns of man. I have had serious thoughts about death and my soul's salvation ever since my earliest recollection and would often when a small child try to pray to the Lord to save me from destruction, but I thought some day I would be a christain by my own good works, but he brought me in a way I know not and in paths I had not seen and blessed be God, and praise to his glorified name. I shall be as brief as possible. I was born in Henry Co. Va., married in my 17th year, so as the care of the family grew upon me it seemed the cares of this life grew also. I was very much entangled with the things of this world: it seemed I seldom had time to pray. In this way. I traveled a long time until I hope the Lord arrested me. My trouble was not great like some, neither was my hope bright like some, but one thing I know wherein I once was blind I now see. What I once loved I now hate, and what I once hated I now love, but it's, by nothing good I have ever done: if I am saved its by the precious blood of Jesus Christ. I would try to pray, but it seemed my prayer was more for my body that my neverdying soul: at length there came an aching void this world can never fill. I told my companion I believed I was going to die, and he accused me of being superstitious; so I went on in this way for sometime. At length my sweet babe was taken sick, and I felt it was going to be taken from me for my disobedience, so I lay on its little bed with my testament, often in my weakness trying to beg the Lord to let it live, but alas the dear ones time had come and I had to see my dear one die. So I cried out with a loud voice praying to my Heavenly Father to forgive my sins. I remember hearing my voice crying in the still night and seeing the twinkling of the pale sweet stars that I so enjoy to look at now and then. I came to myself, I was seated repeating,

"Afflictions though they seem severe
Are oft in mercy sent,
They stopped the prodigal's career,
And caused him to repent."

I then felt I could give up my child and say "The Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away, and blessed be his holy name," but I could not claim this for a hope. I had a lonesome time. I went to beg the Lord for mercy and to show me my duty, and one day as I went these words presented themselves, "Blessed are they that have not seen and yet beleived," but still I could claim no hope, and I had a hope too that I would meet my Savior in peace and my darling child, so one Sunday morning I went to its grave: as I fell on my knees a serpent rolled down in front of me, at first I was very much frightened and a voice spoke, "it was satan," he had sent it to frighten me away, but the Lord could send a raven to cheer. I thought if I could see a dove I would be satisfied. I went several times expecting and hoping to see my dove, but I did not see it until the Lord saw fit, and as I neared the spot one day not long after I saw two beautiful doves sail from my grove. Then I felt that if I had ten thousand tongues they would all be in praise to Jesus.

I also dreamed of crossing a beautiful river on a narrow pole on my knees that gave me consolation, so I went on in this way for sometime, and felt like I wanted to hear some Old Baptists tell their experience, so I went to an old uncle and aunt that I have that have been members for years, and they related their experiences. I thought theirs was so bright that I again got in the dark and went off and begged the Lord if I was wrong to show it to me. I told them that perhaps I had deceived them, so that night I dreamed I was in a dark place. I looked and could see light, and went and looked through and saw two beautiful white doves descending, and as I put my hands through one of them lit on my hands and then soared away singing. The other acted in like manner, and I thought my mother spoke and told me it was to shew me I had been changed. So I went to Reed Creek church and related what I hope the Lord has done for my soul. I was received and baptized by my beloved pastor, Zac. T. Turner. After I returned I again got into trouble, and feared I had deceived the good people, and that night as I dozed to sleep a still small voice whispered, "Well done thou good and faithful servant, thou hast been faithful over a few things I will make thee ruler over many." So I have given a brief sketch of my travail; dispose of it as you wish. I have had the comfort of reading every number of your precious paper for the last 11 or 12 months, and it has been comforting indeed. My mother took the paper in my father's name, and we live close together, that is why I have been so blessed. My father and mother are both Primitive Baptists. So I say no more at present.

Your Sister in hope of eternal life,

V. A. PHILPOT.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—I feel impressed to write a few lines to you regarding my past and present impressions. My road is so rugged, my strength so insufficient, my light so dim, my manners so unbecoming, and my load so heavy. How can I act. How can I forbear to act. I have a calling, I sometimes hold as a sacred calling, sometimes as a Divine calling, and yet my judgment is so weak, my views so narrow, and the work so great. I sometimes feel, "Woe unto me if I preach not the gospel." Then I will make the attempt, but to feel that I have done dishonor to the cause, been exposed by my ignorance, gave an "uncertain sound" and thereby become a stumbling block. Can it be that such a vile sinner as I can be called to preach Christ whom with these same hands I helped to nail to the tree? I have been shown that my work is not around home; that it is far away from my own place of residence, and yet I have a loving wife, kind and true, though a Methodist, yet I feel as if she is a christian. I have a widowed mother, am her only child, am not a year old in the cause, am not worthy of ordaining, not worthy of being a door-keeper in the house of Elijah's God, and yet how can it be that I am called to preach. The power of God unto salvation to them that believe. There are many others in our body more worthy than I, and why are they not called to fill that field? I have never been there and yet I have seen the place. I am so young (only 27) that it seems as though I am yet but a stripling, my faith too weak, seeming sometimes to fail me, and yet I feel as though I had some evidence of things not seen. My case seems to urge me, my surroundings pull me back, my weakness and youth discourage me, and yet my heart seems to compel me. My choice in earthly pursuits was the study of law. I tho't how nice it would be to plead at the bar of justice and keep innocent men from being punished, but I have had a view of the bar of justice, and that I stood condemned. Many seemed contented while standing at that bar, but I was not, I wanted justice no longer but mercy was my cry. I tried to cross over the bar but was too weak, tried to get under but was too large, the bar could not be broken, then mercy was my cry. At last I found myself on the other side of the bar, how I got there I know not, but viewed my sins marked out of the book of Seven Seals, by the blood of Jesus, which alone could atone for the sins of the bride, the Lamb's wife. Then I saw my name enrolled in the book of life carried by an angel in the midst of heaven.

Dear brother, though I never saw you yet I hope I love you. Your words cheer me when I read them. If you feel so to do give me some comfort on my case. My doubts are many, my fears great. I will write no more at present as I have begun to write twice before and failed. Your unworthy, but affectionate brother,

JESSE A. ASIIBURN.

Remarks :

My dear young brother, Is it a cross to you to preach Jesus? Whenever it ceases to be a cross to you you will cease to preach him.

Are you too weak to preach so wonderful a name? Whenever you feel strong enough to preach that name you cannot say as Paul did, "When I am weak then am I strong. Most gladly therefore will I glory in my infirmities that the power of Christ may rest upon me."

Do you feel too ignorant to preach so glorious a name? When they perceived the boldness of Peter and John, knowing that they were ignorant or unlearned men, they took knowledge of them that they had been with Jesus. Are you too vile and base to preach that holy name? God hath chosen the base and foolish things of the world to confound the things that are mighty that no flesh should glory in his presence.

In order to follow Jesus we must go through great tribulations and learn that our sufficiency is of God. One thing is sure, that whatever the Lord requires of his humble and poor ones he enables them to perform. The great thing for you and me is to seek counsel of him and obey his word, and keep his commandments.

Be of good cheer, he has overcome the world. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness," and all that is needful will be added. May the Lord guide you. P. D. G.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—I find the following omission in the minutes of New River Association for the Spring term 1888. COME.

"And the Spirit and the bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will let him take the water of life freely."—Rev. 22: 17.

I have a mind to write on the subjects prominent in this portion of the word as they appear to my mind both in their separate and connective sense.

We are told that God is a Spirit and seeketh such to worship Him as worship him in spirit and in truth, for they who worship him must worship him thus. The worship of God is by inspiration, which is conceived in the Spirit, and is conducted by the Spirit according to the wisdom of infinity. It is impossible for one to worship God who has not the know'edge in the Spirit of his existence and of his divine and glorious character, a God of Truth and without iniquity, who is just and right; the living and the true God, glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, doing wonders.

No man knoweth the things of God but the Spirit of God. This does not mean that the Spirit of God is a man but that no man knoweth these things yet the Spirit of God does know them; that the knowledge of spiritual things is in and of the Spirit of God alone. The entire work of Jesus was and is according to the mind of the Spirit, according to which he now maketh intercession for the saints, in harmony with the will of God.

As the Spirit of God wrought in Jesus so he did the will of his Father, "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work of mine own self I can do nothing, but my Father which is with me he doeth the work." If the work of Jesus was in and of the Spirit, how much greater the necessity for the work of the church and each individual member thereof to be likewise. When the Spirit wrought mightily in Samson the effect was wonderful, but when the Spirit was not working in him, there was nothing more than was, and is common among men of similar character. So it was with Jesus, when there was no demonstration of his Divine Character by the work of the Spirit, he was apparently as other men of upright deportment. So also is it with the church, and the members individually, without the exercise of the Spirit in him or them, they produce nothing better than morality.

The Spirit of worship or devotion to God, when sent into the heart immediately recognizes and cries out unto the living God. This is the same Spirit that moved upon the face of the waters, and that shines in the heart of the poor sinner, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. This Spirit is life, and is the light, wisdom, knowledge and understanding of men.

This Spirit not only moved upon the face of the waters, but was in the heart of Abel, wherein he offered a proper sacrifice, and obtained witness of God that he was righteous. In that offering though it was made early in the morning of time, and was the first, was made the first proclamation of the first declaration in the text, "And the Spirit and the Bride say come." All the fullness of the qualifications requisite to the worship of God was in Abel, and fully exercised in the Spirit by faith in him. His offering clearly set forth the need of salvation in Jesus, and the spirit of prayer was prominent in the service which was answered, in which God testified of his gift. From this offering, and from the heart of Abel issued the holy incense and inspiration of the typified Saviour, and spiritual aspiration for the coming of Jesus, who should be for salvation to the ends of the earth. And the Lord inclined unto him, and heard his prayer.

"And heaven came down his soul to greet,
And glory crowned the mercy-seat."

As the smoke of this offering ascended toward heaven, the bright and the morning star burst forth in the heaven heralding the day dawn, and the approaching of the day star that arose in the heart of this servant of God, and the voice from the altar said Come, and the voice from heaven said surely I come quickly, and the angels respond saying, "Even so, Come Lord Jesus."

From that time forth God has had a people that worshipped Him; which he has regarded as his people, the Bride of his Son. They dwell together in the unity or oneness of the Spirit, and in the bond of peace. They are the habitation of the Lord their God. They constitute "the holy place of the tabernacles of the Most High." They are the sons of God, the church of the first born which has ever been guided in all her devotions by the Spirit of God, and as that Spirit has given wisdom and utterance, has she prayed to the Lord in an acceptable time—a time to be heard and answered.

The spirit, and the people of God, called his church, are divinely inseparable, they lift up their voice together, and together do they sing.

The necessity for and obligation to worship God are found in his people, but the wisdom of and power for the worship are in and of the Spirit. They know not what they should pray for as they ought, but the spirit maketh intercession for them with groanings which cannot be uttered. This intercession is never made except in the heart of God's people, and never without an earnest engagement of the powers of mind and thought of the one in whose heart the prayer is made. Neither does the individual engage in the true worship of God, only as the Spirit gives the unction. The Church in its collective sense is first considered as engaged in prayer following the Spirit. Simultaneously with the Spirit the Bride presents her devotions to her Lord, and implores his coming and his presence. As in the text the Spirit and the Bride say to Jesus, Come. In all the varied exercises of the church the Spirit of prayer is continually engaged in behalf of the church to the Lord to come in the supplying of whatever is felt to be needed, and the minister, or Elder is also exercised by the same Spirit and burden of prayer that the Lord should come, even quickly, as he has promised that he would and bless his people with such blessings as they need, which he has in store for them.

The church may not know the character of its exercises, but in all that pertains to it in any kind of experience wherein it is burdened on account of a felt sense of sin, distress, trial, conflicts, confusion, strife, coldness, indifference, slothfulness, or whatever may be the cause of dissatisfaction, the Spirit is engaged in bringing the state of affairs prominent before it, and the groans and sighs are but the intercession being made by the Spirit, in which the church in these heart-pangs is equally and identically engaged in unutterable language praying the Lord to come, for his coming brings righteousness, ease, deliverance, peace, joy, energy and perseverance to his afflicted and tempest-tossed ones, and they sit down at his feet, and rest under the shadow of his wing. His fruit is sweet to their taste, and his words are full of praise. In the light of his countenance they are reconciled, and in his righteousness are they exalted. Now they join in sweet anthems of praise and thanksgiving to him for the brightness of his coming, and the fulness of his love.

This prayer of the Spirit and the Bride is addressed directly to Jesus and to him only. The coming of Jesus is all that can really and properly concern this Shulamite. Her desire is to her husband, her delight is in him, and with him she is satisfied.

And he says, "He that saith these things, saith surely I come quickly," and John says, "Even so, come Lord Jesus." This is said of the church as a compact body, organized here in this world, and which is exercised and worships as composed of many in one, having for its law-giver and King, the Lord Jesus, to whom it says, Come. In these words of Jesus is clearly shown that the Bride has well said what he declares she has said, and that he grants the right vested in her to thus speak by promising to come quickly. He never answers a prayer not in every way properly made. A prayer either by the church or a single member is altogether fleshly, unless the Spirit is the primary producer in point of life-giving or quickening to see the need of that for which to pray, the wisdom to pray, and the power to produce the prayer.

When the Bride says to her Lord and husband to come, she acknowledges it to be her pleasure that he should come, and his right to come into his garden and eat his pleasant fruits. I do not understand that the Spirit and the Bride is speaking to some one out of the church to come to the church or to Jesus either, but they are speaking to Jesus to come. At his coming the gates lift up their heads, and the everlasting doors fly wide and the king of glory comes in.

The preaching of the gospel proclaims the right and privilege of all believers in Jesus to the enjoyment of all the blessings bestowed upon the church as a body of baptized believers, walking after the Spirit and not after the flesh.

The church by living in love and fellowship, both in word and in deed there by provokes others of like precious faith to love and good works, and the gospel properly and faithfully preached, exhorts all believers unto obedience. But I doubt whether the church is authorized to speak to them as she speaks in the text.

"And let him that heareth say, Come."

What applies to the whole church in point of prayer applies to each individual. This last declaration applies to individuals who hear and know the gospel's joyful sound in an individual capacity. When one feels his own personal need of Christ he need not make his wants known to the church, nor consider the needs of any but himself, nor wait 'till the church is moved like himself—but he may speak for himself in his own behalf. If he hears or understands his needs are supplied in Christ, let him say, Come. Every poor soul who feels the need of the grace of God has the privilege and right to the Tree of Life, or to approach to the throne of grace, and ask whatsoever he will, and it shall be granted him. What a blessing it is that one may speak to Jesus freely for all his wants, from where he is, that is the child of God may be alone in the wilderness, or upon the sea, and yet from thence may he look unto Jesus and say, Come. When Peter realized he was sinking he was alone, although Jesus was very near, and Peter said, "Lord, save me." This was as much as to say, Come Lord.

When one feels the need of anything then is the time to ask for it, and let such a one ask freely, for Jesus has said, "Let him that heareth say, come, let him speak, for to this man will I look, even to him that is poor and of a contrite spirit, and trembleth at my word. It is a glorious privilege we have to ask for what we want. "Let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst come."

As mercy and truth met together in Christ, so do they meet in the hearts of his people. At the same time that Jesus comes to one of his chosen and redeemed ones they come to him. This declaration applies to one who is hungering and thirsting after the righteousness of Christ, and has not yet found him precious to his soul. And of such a one Jesus says, Let him come. The thirst in his soul for the consolations that come by, and follow the sufferings of Christ is a sure evidence of the existence in him of the Spirit of life. And all who have his spirit are his, and have a right to the tree of life, that they may eat and live forever. The very power of that life that is in him is bringing him to realize the washing of regeneration and the renewing of the Holy Ghost. All that is within him is now engaged with solemn concern in seeking the salvation of God. And Jesus speaks to all the powers, whether opposing or otherwise, saying, "Let him come." As he says in another place, "If any man thirst let him come unto me and drink."

This coming is not as passing from one place to another, but is passing from one state to another. Or is being bro't into the knowledge of salvation in Jesus, even as Jesus is being revealed the hope of glory. To come to Jesus in this case is to be made partaker of the divine nature. Jesus brings them, or they come by the word of his power. He speaks and it is done, he commands and it stands fast; therefore he says, let him come. At this command there is a dissolution, or separation of powers, when the opposition gives way, and the aggressive rushes in and passes the palace, the spoil is divided, and the rightful owner declares the right of possession, and lights up the abode of an hitherto dark, unholy, polluting and most degrading tenant, and makes the house his abode, and having adorned with his grace and righteousness and placed it upon a new foundation, against which the gates of hell cannot prevail, the poor sinner in whose heart this wonderfully glorious work has been done, now rejoices in the finished work of Jesus, and is found in him, and rests in his love and peace that passeth all knowledge.

"And whosoever will let him take the water of life freely."

God works in his people both to will and to do of his good pleasure, and commands them to work out their own salvation with fear and trembling according as he works in them that which is right and acceptable in his sight. This applies to all who have this will wrought in them, which leads them to appreciate and desire the joys and comforts of salvation which are so freely promised in his word. Where one desires any of the blessings which are in Christ, there is nothing to prevent his partaking of them. The water of life here embraces any and all of the refreshings from the presence of the Lord that produce joy and gladness of heart.

This does not embrace the dead sinner as some suppose and preach, but only refers to those who have life, and are exercised and controlled by a living and divine will, which is in and of the spirit of God that dwells in them. Christ says to those who have not his spirit, and are therefore not his or at least are not yet manifested as such; "Ye will not come unto me that ye might have life." That is ye will not to come unto me, you have nothing in you that prefers me and my righteousness or desires them in the least. Such characters have no will in them that leads them to seek after God, and to love his ways and esteem his riches, but their will is to serve themselves and trust their own works for righteousness and salvation. To address such as these it should read whosoever will not, let him take the water of life freely. This would give the preference to the unbelieving, almost to the exclusion of those who desire to partake, or quite so, except they might be allowed to partake of this water, but not freely. No man can act contrary to his will. If his will be carnal his actions will be likewise carnal. But if his will be spiritual, his actions will be spiritual. The will controls the mind, and the mind directs the man. We often speak of ones changing his mind, but there is no such thing as that one can change his mind, but his mind changes him. One cannot begin to think about changing his mind. He is often brought to where two ways meet, and for a time halts between two opinions, but in this case he has but to ascertain what his mind is on the subject and then he acts according to his mind which asserts its power in deducing a conclusion. All these declarations refer to the Spirit of intercession in the hearts of God's people, and to the church and its members in whatever situation they may occupy in their experience and relation to Christ in his dealings with them, to whom he comes, and they to him.

P. G. I..

MARKS OF HONESTY.

"And that ye study to be quiet, and to do your business, and to work with your own hands, as we commanded you:

That ye may walk honestly toward them that are without, and that ye may have lack of nothing." 1st Thess. 4: 11, 12.

We feel that honesty lies at the foundation of true character. As good marks of an honest man as any we know are named by the text quoted above.

What are some of these marks?

1st. That ye study to be quiet. Some people study to say something, but it is often better to study to be quiet, that is if you study to know what not to say as well as to know what to say it often would be better. Good and wise words go a long distance, nor does it require many good words to answer the purpose of speech. We do not consider the most incessant talkers the best ones, but those that know what to say, when to say it, and how.

A hearer needs sometime for reflection that he may meditate on what is said to him.

Again, if one always tells the truth it does not call for so many words. Lies need much bolstering and propping, much artful argument and cunning invention to avoid detection, and conceal their character; while truth is plain and straightforward. No one can possibly have a good character who does not tell the truth.

Again, one should study to be quiet in his temper. A blustering, noisy man never commends himself to good judges as a desirable companion. Nor is it any sign of strength to see one very excitable and boisterous, or that his cause is a good one if he gets mad easily. If a man is right he can be quiet, knowing that truth will ultimately prevail. He that ruleth his own spirit is better than he that taketh a city.

Again, this study contemplates quietness of conduct also. For no man is a quiet man whose actions are rash and violent. We love a man who is of a peaceable, gentle, and lovely turn of conduct, and whose actions are full of love.

(2nd.) Another mark is that one is to study to do his own business. Every christian who is able to work should have some business of his own to attend to, and it should not be a hurtful business, such as stealing, wronging or defrauding others, but it should be a useful business or employment. Each man should study to do his own business, and that will keep him from meddling in another man's business. We are forbid being busy-bodies in other men's matters. Each man should avoid disturbing others in their legitimate business. A good way to keep one from meddling in others business is for each one to have a business or employment of his own, and to mind that business. If a man had a business of his own that keeps him employed constantly he has no time for mischief. In that case he is not only kept out of mischief, but is doing that which will benefit some one.

(3rd.) Another mark of the honest man is to study to work with your own hands. Too many people go to school and study books in order to learn to live without work. But we should study to work with our own hands. Work is honorable. It is noble to labor. There is a foolish notion among the proud and lazy that labor is degrading, but it ought to be a disgrace to a man if he is too lazy or too proud to work. In the sweat of man's face he is to eat bread. How long? only a year or two? No, but until he returns to the dust, or as long as he lives is the command of God: so that not only did Paul command it, but God himself commanded it. Paul also illustrated it by laboring himself or working with his own hands. Look around you and behold the labor of all creation. The air is often in motion, the water is moving, vegetation is growing, the clouds move, animals are busy, the sun moves. Jesus toiled while on earth and he says, "My Father worketh hitherto and I work." So that God himself in perfect activity worketh all things according to the counsel of his own will, and works in his people both to will and to do of his own good pleasure.

(4th.) The mark of effect here to be noticed is that you may walk honestly or act honestly toward them that are without. That is if you work properly at your own business you will be able to pay your debts, and keep your word, and thus walk honestly, not only towards your brethren, but also towards people not your brethren, but that are without. It is right to act righteously and honestly towards our brethren, and also toward those not our brethren.

You cannot make any fair-minded man believe you are honest while you have no mind to pay your debts. There is no surer rule by which to measure the honesty of any man than his disposition to pay his debts. If one makes a debt he knows he cannot pay, or if he does not intend to pay it, is very extravagant and cannot pay it on that account, or puts his property in such a condition that it is not bound for his debt or if he does any thing carelessly or intentionally, by which he fails to pay debts he owes, or if he does not earnestly try to pay his just debts, mankind have a just cause for branding him as dishonest.

But if one does what the scriptures teach he will be apt to have money so that he can pay his debts, or walk honestly towards those that are without. Primitive Baptists do not retain any in fellowship who act unrighteously in matters of debts.

(5th.) He will also have something left after paying his debts to give to him that is in need and to feed and clothe himself with. He that will not work shall not eat. But he that works shall eat. Here we will say is one in need. He is an old man or infirm from sickness. He has nothing to eat. The question comes up about helping such an one. Well some one says, that man was once strong and well but he was lazy then, and if he did get any thing he would buy liquor with it, or something he did not need, and he would not work, nor would he take care of what came into his hands. It is very hard to give such a man any thing. Can you do so cheerfully? Do you feel that it is right to do it? But suppose the one that is in need was a hard-working man when he was able, and saved his earnings and was honest, but by the hand of adversity he is brought low and is needy, then you can cheerfully help that one, and feel it is more blessed to give than to receive.

The scriptures thoroughly furnish the man of God unto all good works. We do well to follow their teachings in all things.

ANCIENT LANDMARKS.

There is a departure by some from the ancient Landmarks in discipline, self-discipline, and church discipline.

Anciently, and within the memory of men now living, it was the good habit of our people from principle to pay their debts. That is one of the surest marks of honesty. The man who would shirk from paying a debt, or would promise to pay when he did not intend to do so, or had no grounds which he could depend to enable him to pay it, was rejected by the church who refused to fellowship such persons. Of course if one acted honestly and strove to pay a debt, but was found unable, that is if he had acted fairly and done what he could to pay but failed, that was a different matter and to be excused.

One brother did not sue another one then before the courts, or go to law. If a Baptist owed a debt to another Baptist and would not pay it the creditor would report the case to the church, and the church would investigate the case, and if they found the debtor would not act righteously in the matter they would withdraw fellowship from him.

In the matter of general conduct Baptists were then noted for their candor and sincerity. They would plainly tell one to his face what they believed. If a trouble arose in a church the members would not listen to all sorts of flying tales and rumors, but they would search the evidence in the case, and decide according to facts, and their decisions were final. Baptists read and studied the scriptures more than they do now, and had better views of discipline, and what is also very important, they were firm and decided, and were not afraid of man, and when their opinion was made up and expressed it was final, or their yea was yea, and their nay was nay.

They also were less conformed to the world then than now. They possessed the art of saving more than now, and were more afraid of making debts. They did not live so extravagantly. They dressed plain, labored hard and taught their children to labor.

They loved their wives and their wives loved their husbands and honored them, and they were opposed to divorces. They helped their pastors more than they do now. Their object then was to so help their preachers that they could devote much of their time to preaching and feeding the flock, visiting them &c.

They helped the poor members then more than they do now.

The preachers then were better informed in the scriptures than they are now, and were bold in rebuking error among the brethren where they served, and the brethren then were strong in the faith.

Obituary.

MRS. SYLVESTER HASSELL.

Mrs. Frances Louisa Hassell, my beloved wife, after four weeks illness, passed gently from earth, in our rented home at Williamston, N. C. yesterday evening at six o'clock, Jan. 6th 1889. She was the youngest daughter of Calvin and Winnifred Woodard, of Wilson N.C. and was born Oct. 13th, 1859, thus being in her thirtieth year. We were married May 3rd, 1876; and there have been born to us seven children, John, Mark, Frank, Charles, Mary, Calvin, and Winnie, of whom the last five are still living. Little Winnie was born on the 9th of December, and her mother was taken with chills three days afterwards, and in two weeks her fever took a typhoid form, and the best medical skill and the most faithful nursing could not prevent her spirit from obeying her Maker's call to leave these mortal shores. A more faithful and devoted wife and mother I never knew; a more beautiful, intelligent, industrious, economical, pure, modest, quiet, patient, uncomplaining, self-sacrificing, lovely woman I should not know where to find. She was not only my wife and the mother of my children (all the five living, being under eight years of age,) but also my housekeeper, and my teacher of Music and Art. Surely a man never had a more efficient help-mate. It seemed barely possible for me to meet my family expenses with her invaluable help; only the Lord knows how they can be met without her. Her loss is the severest trial of my life. May the Lord give me His indispensable grace to enable me to kiss the rod that smites me, and to bear with meekness and righteousness the dreadful blow. All things work together for good to those that love Him. His grace shines the brightest in the furnace of affliction, and thus shows its unearthly and indestructible character. We owned only half-interest, not yet entirely paid for, in the Wilson Collegiate Institute, at Williamston, N. C. and that we had to sell, to try to pay the Church History Debt of $2000. My wife deeply felt that all her own, as well as my, hardest years of labor were taken from our poor little helpless children and given to the church History. For many years she longed for a little home that she could call her own; but about three years ago she dreamed that the Virgin Mary appeared to her and showed her a bright mansion in the skies and said, "This is the house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens, and is meant for you." After that she troubled herself no more about an earthly home, but felt that she should soon be called from this world to a better, a brighter, and an enduring home in Heaven. When she left her mother's place in Wilson County, at the close of our last summer vacation, she told her that she never expected to visit her again, but that she was going down to Williamston to die. This presentiment continued with her 'till she died. Dr. J. H. Reid who attended and nursed her most skilfully and faithfully both day and night, declared that he never felt so much interest in a patient before: that he never saw so quiet, patient, and lovely a sufferer; that he would give everything he had to secure her recovery. But our Heavenly Father, whose thoughts and ways are infinitely above ours, has seen proper to take her dear spirit to Himself, in a world, as I cannot but believe, of Everlasting Light and Love and Rest. A calm, sweet, angelic smile rests upon her features in death, and I feel assured that her labors and sufferings are forever ended. Her remains are to be interred in the church-yard at Skewarkey tomorrow.

SYLVESTER HASSELL.

JOHN PINER.

Will you please publish this Obituary Notice of our beloved son John Piner who was born on the 6th day of July, 1856, and died April 26, 1888. Our son was always kind and obedient to his parents, and kind to all who were his neighbors: he was twice married, and left behind a widow and one child to mourn the loss of our son. He was for the last few years of his life a dear lover of the Doctrine of Jesus Christ, as preached by the Baptists, and for the last few months of his life he had a great desire to unite himself with the church, but owing to his weakness caused by the monster disease known as Consumption could not accomplish that which his heart mostly desired, but when the monster death came he was well resigned to the will of his Lord and Savior, and half the time almost with joy saying that he was going to that Blessed world above. Just before his death he aised three Hymns one was,

Come humble siners in whose breast a thous and thoughts revolve,

but was too weak to sing, but we have full faith to beleive that his spirit is in the happy throng above and singing those lovely notes which he loved so dearly.

Yes Brother Gold, he is gone, but his absence affords us joy when we think that he has gone Home, to live where sin, sorrow, trouble, pain nor none of the troubles of this life can mar his peace.

So let us try to meet him ere long on that happy shore.

By the help of the Lord this paper will contend for the ancient Landmark, guided by its stakes of Truth, and strengthened by its chords of Love.

It hopes to reject all traditions and institutions of men, and regard only the Bible as the standard of truth.

It urges the people to search the Scriptures, and obey Jesus the king in the holy hill of Zion, keeping themselves unspotted from the world.

It aims to contend for the mystery of the faith in God and the Father, Jesus the Mediator, and the Holy Spirit the blessed Comforter.

All lovers of Gospel truth are invited to write for it—if so impressed.

May grace, mercy, and peace be multiplied to all lovers of truth.

DEVOTED TO THE CAUSE OF JESUS.

Poetry.

THE END OF THE WAY.

The following beautiful lines were written by a young woman in Nova Scotia, an invalid for many years with spinal disease, and a great sufferer, but in whom the grace of God is wonderfully manifested.

My life is a wearisome journey,
I am sick with the dust and the heat,
The rays of the sun beat upon me,
The briars are wounding my feet;
But the city to which I am journeying
Will more than my trials repay,
When I get to the end of the way.

There are so many hills to climb upward,
I often am longing for rest;
But He who appoints me my pathway Knows just what is needful and best;
I know in His Words He has promised
That my strength shall be as my day;
And the toils of the road will seem nothing
When I get to the end of the way.

He loves me too well to forsake me,
Or give me one trial too much;
All His people have been dearly purchased And satan can never claim such.
By and by I shall see Him and praise Him,
In the city of unending day;
And the toils of the road will seem nothing
When I get to the end of the way.

When the last feeble step has been taken,
And the gates of the city appear,
And the beautiful songs of the angels
Flood out on my listening ear;
When all that now seems so mysterious
Will be plain and clear as the day—
Yes the toils of the road will seem nothing
When I get to the end of the way.

Though now I am foot sore and weary
I shall rest when I am safely at home;
I know I'll receive a glad welcome,
For the Savior Himself has said, Come!
So when I am weary in body,
And sinking in spirit, I say,
All the toils of the road will seem nothing
When I get to the end of the way.

Cooling fountains are there for the thirsty.
There are cordials for those who are faint;
There are robes that are whiter and purer
Than any fancy can paint;
Then I'll press hopefully onward,
Thinking often through each weary day,
The toil of the road will seem nothing
When I get to the end of the way.

PART I.

ON SELF-MADE MINISTERS.

If Philip had not known the way, how could he have guided the Eunuch?

I am admonished they are accused of hard speeches against God. These men speak against God's foreknowledge, his sovereignty, election, predestination, imputed righteousness; and indeed they make the gospel by their preaching not a matter of necessity for the salvation of a sinner, but a mere auxiliary help to help a sinner save himself. They are said to speak great swelling words—flowery, eloquent words, pompous expressions, such as the wisdom of this world dictates; and why? Having men's persons in admiration, because of advantage. Ah, that is the bite. If it was not for getting a rich wife, for loaves and fishes, for money and to be thought honorable, and get gain by preaching, $500 or $1000 a year, preachers would be scarce. If persecution unto death and confiscation of goods was again to come on the church, you would soon see how then our ranks would be and our meeting houses. Instead of being filled with gay and fashionable preachers, and a dressy and showy assembly as they are now, you would find them standing about like old deserted martin gourds, a habitation for screech owls and scorpions. Now as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, so do these also resist the truth; men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith; Paul.

But like the wandering stars, when escaped to the outskirts of creation are forced back, so says Paul, these shall proceed no further, for their folly shall be made manifest, like that of Jannes and Jambres, or like the wandering stars. Almighty power shall make the folly of such men appear in time, and eternity to suffer forever.

I now come to sum up the marks of these men in a short way, as given by the Holy Ghost, which could not err, and lay them before you. Jude shows in the third verse the necessity of writing of the common salvation, and of the saints earnestly contending for the faith once delivered the saints; and why? because, verse 4th, certain men had crept in, that is the church, unawares. Then these self-made preachers creep into the churches; this word creep means in a low unperceived manner, as the squatted cat to her prey, or the creeping gunner to his game. So these men have their game in view; before they get in the church they see their prey, and it is for this prey that they are induced to become religious, for this prey they creep into the church, unsuspected by the church. Because even a Peter could not discern the heart of a Simon Magus when he baptized him, and so he crept in; but his game was money. Judas crept in among the twelve, although known to Christ to be a devil from the beginning; he crept in for the bag, that was his game. So all self-made ministers have their game in view. Some a rich wife, some to get more custom to their shop, some to get money thereby, some to get honor, and others to save and restore their reputation. Now not one of these are the marks of a God minister; they have no worldly gain in view by coming into the church; they come in from conviction of duty, and are compelled of necessity to preach; and have no worldly gain in view by coming into the church, nor for preaching, but woe are they if they preach not, whatever they may lose thereby. For God lays the impression on their consciences, and of necessity they must preach for their own peace and good of souls, and not for gain. See a wide difference between the two sorts of ministers in this mark. And Paul agrees with Jude and says of some that they crept in to spy out our liberty.

Second mark: But these speak evil of those things they understand not—that is, the great leading truths of the gospel, the eternity of the plan of salvation, God's fore-knowledge, purpose, election, predestination, ordination, appointment to salvation, decrees and final salvation—because they have not the spirit to know these, nor the value of these truths. But every one of God's ministers will contend for these truths, because they are taught them and the value of them by the same spirit that taught the penman of the holy scriptures. And as says the scripture, to the testimony; if they speak not according to these it is because there is no light in them. Here you see a wide difference. These natural preachers only know what they know naturally like brute beasts, by nature, instinct, study, and acquired knowledge; but God's ministers, to them, as says the scripture, it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of God but to them that are without, (that is without this gift) it is not given. But on the other hand Paul says, "Unto me who am less than the least of all saints this grace is given, that I should preach among the gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ." And again: I certify you, brethren, that the gospel that was preached of me is not after man, neither learned I it of man, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ. Here is a vast difference again. They are Cains to a man, hate Christians, hate truth; but religious worshippers, wolves in sheep skin. God's ministers love the truth, love Christians, feed the flock, preach and give to their hearers a living Christ, as Abel his firstling of the flock. But the others, dead works, a ground offering of an earthly moneyed heart; carnal minded morality, which is enmity against God and in opposition to his system of salvation by Christ.

And here is a vast difference—they are Balaam's running greedily after money and popularity. Then whenever you see a minister, no matter of what sect he may be, that shows plainly that money is his object, for this he must have or he won't preach; for this he leaves one place and goes to another where he can get more; or for the promise of this like Balak promised Balaam, he saddles his beast and sets out to preach here or there; or when he lays plans or schemes to get money by his preaching, or he must have his price for preaching, or he will go where he can get it, say Balaam, say wolf in sheep's clothing, say self-made minister, say sheep starver, sheep killer—say mad false prophet, running greedily after the error of Balaam. For if you will be so good as to compare this mark with all the prophets, John the Baptist, Jesus Christ, or any one of the apostles, I warrant you don't find one of them seeking to make money by their ministry, Judas excepted, Balaam excepted, both self-made ministers not called of God. Then here is a vast difference, by which easily known apart.

Perished in the gainsaying of Core. Whoever goes to school to study to be a preacher, whoever takes up preaching not being born again, whoever takes up preaching to make money, not being born of God and called of God, is a Korah and an offerer of strange fire; not having been called of God to the ministry, and having the heavenly fire of divine love shed abroad in his heart by the Holy Ghost, and the gifts of God's spirit given to him like sweet incense burn on the altar of his heart—which incense and heavenly fire alone make any man's preaching acceptable to God; and all God's ministers know when they feel this. And it is under these feelings they always believe their preaching is acceptable to God and profitable to men. But the others offer their preaching with the fire not from heaven, but from the kitchen of their own hearts and from the fire of lust for money and lust for honor, and thus will perish in their gain-saying and for taking this office on themselves not being called of God—blackness of darkness is reserved for them. Here then is a great difference.

These are clouds without water. Let Christian be ever so thirsty and dry for comfort or for the pleasant water of life, gospel blessings, he may sit under such men's preaching and go away as he came not getting one drop to refresh and strengthen his soul; while God's ministers, like clouds full of water, will often refresh the assembly, and say, it is good I was here—I am glad I went to preaching to-day, for my soul is feasted on fat things full of comfort and joy. Here is a vast difference again.

These speak great swelling words that they learn and study, aiming in their preaching to be as eloquent as possible to be admired and praised. But God's ministers speak not with enticing words which man's wisdom dictates but in plain words that the Holy Ghost enables them to speak with, and often in seeming broken manner to them that hear them, humming and hawing, and can hardly get along, that the glory might be of God, or the good done by their preaching shown plainly to be of God and men's faith, will stand in the power of God and not in the wisdom of words, as Paul says. And here is another difference.

These men love to preach to the rich and be fawned on by the rich and caressed by the rich and get rich persons in the church; and why? Having men's persons in admiration, because of advantage. Of these men they think they are likely to get what they preach for—money. Had Balak have had no silver, had he not been a king, old Balaam would not have run there for silver and greatness. Then silver is their object and honor, why they admire and choose rich folks in preference to the poor. But God's ministers preach the gospel to the poor; God hath chosen the poor of this world to build his church out of, and God's ministers love the poor pious saints better than all the rich persons in the world that are not so; and had rather keep the company of a poor pious saint than dwell in palaces of the great. And here is a vast difference.

For by this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if you have love one towards another—be not high minded, but condescend to men of low estate. These are mockers who walk after their own ungodly lusts like Ishmael; they being children of the bond woman, persecute the children of the promise, they mock at God's truths, they mock at a system of salvation wholly of grace. The ungodly lust of money is their ruling principle, for which they preach, joined with the unholly lust of honor and praise; after these they walk in their religious course. While God's ministers contend in the face of friend and foe earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints, in doctrine, ordinance and discipline, and walk not in their religious course after money, nor honor, nor praise; but from a sense of duty, the love of Christ and souls constraineth them. Through good report and through evil report, through loss or gain, they walk on; for necessity is laid on them, and woe is them by night and day in their feelings if they preach not. If any body is pleased to give them any thing, it is with thankfulness accepted; if not, they still walk on, coveting no man's silver or gold or raiment; desiring to finish their course with joy, and seek the souls of men to salvation and not their money. And here is a vast difference again.

These men separate themselves to the ministry. God never sent them and they are no more fit to preach than satan. But God's ministers are called away from their fishing nets and plough tail, and made willing in the day of his power to take up the cross of preaching as heavy as it is to them; and learn to obey from the things they suffer on the neglect of it, and count all things loss for Christ's sake. They never have their eye on money or gain before they set out; they do not separate nor take the office of minister on them to make money; they don't preach for it, this is no part of their object. And here is another difference.

The self-made preacher will try to reason away the plainest scripture. God's preacher will contend for a plain express scripture, although he suffers persecution for it. The self-made will not preach with the general scope of scripture; will let the main fundamental doctrine lie hid untouched, and pick his parts and often misconstrue them to make his dogmas stand. But God's is for the whole truth and a delivering the whole council of God, though poverty and death stare them in the face, and men say all manner of evil of the truths they preach.

I forbear. Attend to these marks and I warrant you you hit the mark of a self-made preacher nine times out of ten. Nor will you touch one of God's preachers by any mark here given of a self-made preacher. Then judge and act accordingly with promptness in behalf of the truths of God and to the help of his ministers, and thou shalt do well; and reject those of these marks, for they are the enemies of the cross of Christ, their god is their belly, and they glory in that that should be their shame.

I did not when I sat down to write this part, think of even writing five pages, but the subject has crowded on me and forced me onward to this length; and I can say contrary to my wishes because I have no money to spare for printing, and am unwilling to burden others. But so it is I have written it and all I wish for my trouble is for you reader to compare it with sound reason and scripture, and give the casting vote as the scripture may decide in your view of things, that you be not deceived by false teachers and embrace their damnable heresies to your ruin; and may light from heaven accompany your comparing it with preachers and scripture.

MY DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST :—I have just received your brief note and feel like responding at once. I have no doubt about what kind of preaching you have heard from the text you name if it has been at revival meetings. It is a common assumption that God is by the striving of his Spirit within the heart endeavoring to turn men from sin to God. And it is futhermore taught that by all manner of outward means he is striving after the same object. It is then said that there is a point beyond which his Spirit ceases to strive and men are given up to finally perish in their hardness, because they have refused to yield to the entreaties of the Spirit. It is also taught that this text in Gen. 6th, and 3rd, sustains this view. And I have no doubt that this is what you have heard preached.

It seems to me that the connection shows the application of this text. In the first place the whole matter had no reference to the final salvation of anybody, but solely to the providential dealings of God with men, just as afterwards God dealt with the Jews, punishing them as a nation when they disobeyed his law and prospering them when they kept his commandments. The blessings and curses set before that people were wholly of a temporal character? No promise of eternal life was given for their obedience, and no threat of everlasting punishment was given for their disobedience. All related to God's dealings with them in this world. In like manner the text in Gen. 6th and 3rd refers to temporal and not eternal things. The judgments were time judgments. The punishment took away natural life but had nothing to do with eternal life. All was in the order of Providence in this world and had no relation to what should befall men in the next world. In proof of this I wo'd suggest that infants as well as their parents were drowned in the flood. Yet the rankest Arminian believes they were saved beyond.

God, by his law, his daily providence, his creation and by the preaching and example of Noah was continually warning and reprovng the people for their sins. But now seeing that their wickedness was very great, he sends forth the decree and says "I will not always thus strive with man, I will destroy him from the face of the earth." Here are his providential dealings with men. And he deals with men in the same way now. When nations or men now run riot in wickedness, they are soon cut off and destroyed as a nation. But many may share in these calamities who yet are heirs of glory.

But when we turn to the text we see at once that no hope of any reformation is expressed. On the contrary man is given one hundred and twenty years to fill up the cup and then he must be destroyed. And in this time Noah, moved by faith, built an ark to the saving of his household. Here is the secret of the difference between Noah and the rest. Noah had faith and was moved by it. His faith was not dead, it produced works, and to-day what saves men is faith which is the gift of God; and no man ever turns to God, or ever hears the accents of his voice without faith. Men show out the hardness and reprobacy of their minds and hearts by continuing in sin. Men show forth the power and grace of God when they turn from sin.

In the text the expression "for that he also is flesh" is equivalent to saying, "For that he also is evil." It means man is proved to be wicked already, and yet God does not yet destroy the world. All this again I say is outside the covenant of grace and therefore does not relate to either final salvation or final misery.

I leave these thoughts with you my brother. Make what use of them you choose. I remain as ever your brother in hope of life everlasting.

F. A. CHICK.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD :—The enclosed letter of one of the Lord's poor and afflicted will comfort others in their afflictions, if published. I had forgotten her until I received her letter, but the Lord had not, neither had she forgotten me. It was a good meeting, a re freshing from the Lord, the day that she and three other sisters went to the church, as dear Elder Job Smith and many others will remember. How much I would delight to go again and see how they all do, and to speak words of comfort to them, and to this dear, helpless sister in her affliction. If I but knew they all would be glad to see and hear me I would go, if the Lord would enable me. Gladly have I sent the book to the poor sister. Will not some of the liberal brethren, who are rich in good works, clothe the sister? Jesus says, "I was naked and ye clothed me."

Yours in love,

D. BARLEY.

ELDER DAVID BARTLEY, DEAR BROTHER :—You may think it strange and be a little surprised to get a letter from one so weak as I feel myself to be ; but I have had an impression to write to you sometime and I believe I am impressed by the good Spirit.

Being very lonely this morning, no one to say a word to me, nor did I feel like I wanted any company except it was some one to talk to me about heaven and divine things, for that is all I want to hear. Dear Brother, you remember the time you preached at Ward's Will meeting last August four years ago I think; the day that I joined the church. You remember I was afflicted with rheumatism and had to go on two crutches. I had been in so much trouble on account of sin that life was no pleasure nor comfort to me ; until I became so wretched it seemed to me that the Lord would not suffer me to live any longer. And then my doom was soon to be banished from all God's people forever. I was so miserable and would think, if I could only be something that had no future being. My very cries were, "Lord have mercy on poor me. What shall I do?" Not one word could I tell to any one. I was afraid to say a word about it for I really thought I was going to die and go to torment, and I hated to tell any one of it that they should have it to say, when I was dead, "she said she was going to torment, we can't have any hope for her. Brother Bartley, you know something about it, I know you do. I would go for days with my teeth clinched, and my tongue cleaving to the roof of my mouth, not even dared to eat. Sometimes I would think, "Don't you want any thing to eat? You had just as well eat you will go to hell any way." It would scare me so bad that I would jump up off my chair and say, "Lord have mercy. What will I do? Oh that I never had been born in this world. I would that I could have died when I was a child." And then it seemed to me something would say, "Yes, but you did not die; so now you must bear whatever is upon you." Oh how miserable I was to think I was in this low world of sorrow, and without God or hope in the world, and nothing in this world could do me any good. I think if any poor mortal ever suffered I did. I felt to be guilty and condemned; and yet it seemed to me it was just if I died, and went to torment. But still I did not want to go, the very thought was a terror to me. One night I said to my grandmother, I wish I knew what ailed me. She said, "You act like one with hysterics." Well said I if I have it will soon kill me; for I don't feel like I will stand it much longer. I could not think it was conviction, for to tell you the truth I thought the Lord's dealings with his people were to make them feel good and happy ; but I felt to be the worst of mortal beings. One night while lying on my bed, my pillow wet with tears, I would say, Lord save me from that dreadful place that I saw. Please dear Lord be merciful to me, a poor, dependent creature. I surely felt dependent alone upon God, and while I lay in anguish this came forcibly to my mind, "Awake, thou that sleepest, arise from the dead, and Christ will give thee light." Said I what does this mean? I have not been asleep to-night, and it seems to me as if some one has spoken to me. Don't fear, it is your Father's good pleasure that will comfort you. All things work together for good to them that love God. But still my burden of sin was not gone. After this one night I was lying on my bed but was not asleep, and to tell you the truth I don't know what kind of a condition I was in, I never can tell. I often think of that night.

I was struck as I thought with death what I had been looking for a long time. I thought I was dying and going right to torment. I felt to be as helpless as a baby. I tried to pray but it seemed that my prayers did not go higher than my head. Lost and helpless I lay dying two hours, I suppose, and thought every breath would be the last with poor afflicted me. All at once my burden was gone and I felt like I was not dying. O how rejoiced I was! I have never felt so miserable since that time as I did before, but have a warfare daily set before me.

My health is very bad; my afflictions are great; I am in a helpless condition; can't walk, and am very poor; I have no money to buy me any clothes, that is needful for my body, and no one to help me. I am in a sad lonely condition and suffer here in this world if any poor creature does. Brother Bartley you published a book on the "Resurrection;" I do feel such a desire to read it, I wish you would please send me one. I would freely send you the money for it if I had it but have not. I wish I could see you again and hear you preach one more time before I die. I will never forget the sermon that you preached at Ward's Will. Brother Bartley, write for the LANDMARK and give your views on 1 Cor. 13: 1-8, also Gen. 27. I take the LANDMARK, brother Gold sends it to me, and I do feel so very thankful to him. It brings such good, comforting news to me especially in my lonely situation. I can say with truth,

"Like one alone I seem to be,
Oh is there any one like me?"

Remember me at the throne of grace when it is well with you. Your sister in Christ, I hope, ELDERS GOLD AND LESTER, DEAR BRETHREN IN CHRIST:—I highly appreciate the LANDMARK which comes to me regularly, laden with the truths of the gospel written by the dear brethren and sisters from far and near, speaking the same thing, salvation by grace and grace alone. I often feel like if I could write like others it would be a comfort and pleasure to me to write for the LANDMARK, and at times feel so impressed, but feeling my weakness and sinfulness, that if I am a child of grace I am the least of all. I fear to make the attempt, lest I should be a stumbling-block in the way of others. Much of my time my way is dark and gloomy, fightings without and fears within. I fear I've not been born again. The things I would I do not, and the things I would not these I do. But sometimes a light seems to spring up across my path which causes me to rejoice in hope of that immortal crown which is reserved in heaven for all those that love the appearing of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, which hope is as an anchor to the soul, both sure and steadfast. It reaches within the veil whither our fore-runner is gone to prepare those mansions for the loved and the blest. Oh, am I one of that number? The question often arises in my mind am I his or am I not?

I am your brother in hope of eternal life, if one at all

L. J. D'BERRY.

DEAR BRETHREN GOLD AND LESTER:—It has been in mind for some time to write a few lines through the LANDMARK to the dear brethren and sisters. When I can read your views on the scripture that seem so divinely directed and your experiences of grace my mind reverts to the time when I sometimes hope that I was laboring under the sentence of death that the apostle spoke of when he said, for I was alive without the law, but when the Commandment came sin revived and I died, not that he then died in sin, but died to the love of sin.

I was going along very well up to the time that I hope that I was arrested by the power of God. I was a student of a Sunday school serving a god of the flesh which is of the earth earthy, and to the earth must return. David says is there not a cause? I say there is a cause for every effect and this brings me under obligation, to give you a reason or a cause. for what I say about Sunday Schools.

They say that by training in Sunday School we cultivate a spark of grace within, and thus secure to ourselves the hope of heaven but I can not agree with them. I was in Sunday School, and I feel to say from the depth of my heart I found not the Lord, but if I know him in the pardon of my sins, he found me. Christ says, Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you and ordained you that ye should go and bring forth fruits and that your fruits should remain. Christ said, "No man can come to me except the Father which hath sent me draw him, and I will raise him up at the last day." When I hope that I was arrested by the power of God, and made able to see my condition I often went to the lonely grove and besought the Lord to pardon me, a poor mortal of the earth. I had no need of a Sunday School in my condition, and often when I looked at the sun as he set behind the western hills felt I would never see him again, but that I would be in despair. I would go with my young friends, but no comfort for me there. I hope the Lord led me as Jacob, and has permitted me to sit in heavenly places in Christ, and I could sing, "Tis thus the Lord his love sends to call poor sinners home, and more than a father's love he feels and bids the needy come. Dear brethren and sisters farewell. May God bless you is the desire of a poor sinner for Christ's sake,

J. C. WILLIAMS.

ELDER P. D. GOLD, DEAR BROTHER: Seventeen years ago Saturday before the 4th, Sunday in last February I united with the Primitive Baptist church at Friendship meeting house, in this (Wayne county.) Soon after I was baptised (which was the 4th, Sunday in March 1871.) I became deeply troubled from what source or what cause I was then and am still unable to tell. However I have since that time received evidence sufficient to cause me to believe that it was the Lord working in me to will and to do his own good pleasure.

Saturday before the 4th, Sunday in April '73 the church licensed me to exercise in a public way what they believed to be a gift in the ministry, and on the 1st Sunday in February 1876 I was ordained to the work of the ministry under the Presbytery composed of Elders J. S. Brinson and James R. Parker. Since that time I have traveled and tried to some extent in N. C. S. C. and Va., and never have I yet traveled in any portion of this State or any other State where the majority claiming the name of Primitive Baptist did not believe in and contend for the doctrine of Predestination and election. Moreover in regard to their modes of worship, ordinances &c. they all claim about the same except that of the ordinance of feet washing. So far as I have traveled or heard the churches in the State of N. C. are not a unit in the practice. The churches in N. C. and Va., where I have traveled are divided on the subject, some wash feet and some do not, but of those of our brethren who do not practice feet washing I have met but few if any but what will admit that Jesus washed the disciples' feet and said ye ought also to wash one another's feet. However there have been different constructions put upon it, but none of them have ever changed the true meaning of feet washing. If the idea conveyed by the scriptures is not to literally wash one another's feet our dear little band have failed as yet to arrive at its true meaning. At the time I united with the church at Friendship she was living in the omission of that sacred duty, not because the greater portion did not believe feet washing to be a duty: but mainly because their fathers before them had failed to practice it. But feeling then as I still feel that the failure of my father to do what Jesus said ye ought to do is no reason why I should not do it, I commenced trying to obey the command of Jesus to his apostles, viz:—"Teach them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you &c, untill the blessed Lord in his own good time worked in the brethren to will and to do, of his own good pleasure, to wash one anothers feet. Since then other churches have fallen in line, in the good work, and are now letting their light shine before men. In the bounds of the White Oak Association some of the churches under the Pastoral care of Elder B. H. Wooten, Maple Hill, Bay and Stump Sound all practice feet washing, those under the Pastoral charge of Elder L. H. Hardy, Hadnots Creek, Newport, and probably North River in the White Oak, and Hunting Quarter practice feet washing. The church at Rileys Creek, Wilmington Yopps and Southwest, formly under the care of our dearly beloved but now departed Brother Elder A. Davis do not practice feet washing. Not perhaps because they do not think it to be a duty enjoined on the church; but because their pastor who was so highly esteemed among them failed to teach or pratice it. Haskins Chapel, Beaver Dam, and Mewborns, under the Pastoral charge of Elder I. J. Taylor, and J. W. Gardner all practice feet washing. Likewise those churches, Cedar Island, Goose Creek Island, Sandy Grove, and Bethel, under the Pastoral charge of Elder John R. Rowe practice feet washing. From what we have seen and heard among those that do not practice feet washing, we are satisfied that many of them would be glad to hear their Pastors teach it; and still gladder to see them pratice it. It is to be greatly deplored, that so many of our ministering Brethren fail to observe and teach things wherein they and the flock of God would be happy, and that too without any reason, except that their fathers, or that the Northern brethren do not practice it. It matters not with me or you, who have been or are now neglecting these things. It is better to obey God rather than man. We shene not expect the church of God to shine in her beauty it matters not what his numbers are, as long as she fails to observe all the Commands of our God. Happy are ye if ye do them. Not if ye don't do them. The way the Lord's children are to labor to enter into the rest that remaineth to the people of God is to observe all things whatsoever he has commanded them.

A great many say they are willing to obey the Lord, but the best way to prove it is to obey. The Lord said if ye be willing and obedient ye shall eat the good of the land &c., To be willing is not enough. Ye must do, as well as will. Sometimes it is left to the church to introduce and go ahead in feet washing, and other important matters, and if the pastor ever makes any move in the matter, it is after the church has put forward. Whereas it is commanded that he should go ahead, and say be ye followers of me as I am of Christ. As Titus in all things showing thyself a pattern of good works &c., It seems to me to be very inconsistent for a preacher to teach and practice anything in one place and not in another. Of course if it is right to practice anything in one place, it is right to practice it in another. I can't see how a preacher if he believes feet washing is a command, can consistetly hold the Pastoral charge of any church if she should presumptuously refuse to observe the ordinance. It is the duty of the preachers or pastors to teach these things, not only to preach thereon: but teach them by example. I feel thoroughly impressed that it is the duty of the editors of our papers to come out plain on these things, tell the brethren that it is their duty to wash feet, or else show scripture to prove that it is not. If their was more plain exhortation used both through the papers and from the stand, and less crossing over deep hidden matters, the church would be better off. I close for the present, hoping the good Lord may bring again zion.

Affectionately yours,

J. R. ROBERTS.

"The preparations of the heart in man, and the answer of the tongue, is from the Lord."

WAR IN HEAVEN.

Continued.

We presume the above language of the Prophet referred to the Serpent of our nature, the law in our members or the vanity to which we are subject. Paul says the creature was made subject to vanity, and that he would not have known lust, except the law had said, thou shalt not covet. Christ testified and said that his kingdom was not of this world, and that his house was not of this building.

We see this conflict in all earthly kingdoms, and would be analagous to the powers of darkness and would overthrow the kingdom of satan who had the power of death, and of hell. And consequently, it was upon these important vital facts and principles that a war-declaration was made against the king of righteousness by the dragon and his host. In Revelation, 1: 18. Christ says by John, I am he that liveth and was dead, and behold I am alive forevermore, and have the keys of hell and of death. John says he saw an angel come down from heaven, having the key of the bottomless pit, and a great chain in his hand. This will represent the kingdom of Christ, with the everlasting gospel chain, and he himself the golden ring to which this chain is fastened, and by this chain is the only means by which the devil can be secured and defeated. In Rev. 16: 13, 14, John says, I saw three unclean spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast and out of the mouth of the false prophet.

Here are three names representing the same creature, 14 verse, for they are the spirits of devils working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth and the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty. And in the 17 chapter by receiving an interpretation of the vision of the ten horns of the beast on which the woman sat, he says, These have one mind, and shall give their power and strength unto the beast. These shall make war with the lamb, and the lamb shall overcome them, for he is Lord of lords, and King of kings: and they that are with him are called, and chosen, and faithful.

And in the 19: 19 verse he says, I saw the beast and the kings of the earth, and their armies gather together, to make war against him that sat on the horse, and against his army. Now these scriptures alone are sufficient proof that the war of which John speaks was and is on the earth with the kings of the earth, and the rulers of church and state.

Paul in speaking of this war says, the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God, to the pulling down of strong holds, casting down imaginations and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ. This also explains the nature of the war, and how the dragon was cast down.

Jesus, on the return of his disciples from preaching the spiritual kingdom, and saying that the devils were subject unto them, says that he beheld satan, as lightning, fall from heaven. He did not say he fell out of heaven, but from heaven. And we have previously shown how that the devil once had the power of death, but his power was destroyed by the blood and power of the resurrection of Jesus Christ, and satan's power is limited to the law in our members, which is still warring against the law of our mind, and is bringing us into captivity to the law of sin and death.

Jesus further said to his disciples, Behold I give unto you power to tread on serpents, and scorpions, and over all the power of the enemy. What did he mean by serpents and scorpions? We understand it pleased Christ to take these reptiles to illustrate the dangerous and poisonous nature of sin, if obeyed in the flesh. Now as the fangs of the serpent and scorpion, and the communication of their poison into our veins, produce pain and death, so will sin when finished or obeyed in the flesh. But thank God for the gift of his son, for the spirit of the law of life in Christ Jesus hath made us free from the law of sin and death. Hence the spirit of the law is in Christ, for he only had power to redeem and pardon sinners.

In representing evil spirits John says, that they had a king over them which is the angel of the bottomless pit; and in the 11: 7 verse in speaking concerning the two witnesses, that when they shall have finished their testimony, the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit shall make war against them and shall overcome them and kill them. And in the 17: 8 verse in representing the vision of the beast on which the woman sat, he says, The beast that thou sawest was, and is not, and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit; and go into perdition. (which means destruction.) In the 20: 10 versè he says, and the devil that deceived them was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and the false prophet are and shall be tormented day and night forever and ever. Here are the different names used to denote the enemy of Michael's kingdom and says that he shall be tormented day and night; yet we are unauthorised to say that eternity has any reckoning of time. And as the sun makes the day, and its absence makes the night, it naturally leaves the inference that their trouble was as is in this time-world.

This dragon of whom John speaks had seven heads and ten horns. The beast on which the woman sat was red and had seven heads and ten horns also. The beast which John saw rise up out of the sea had seven heads and ten horns. Which proves it to be the same beast which was callad a great red dragon. The woman who sat upon the beast was arrayed in purple and scarlet, (which is red.) Most assuredly this great dragon was very red, being stained in the blood of all martyrs from Abel to Christ together with the blood of all the male children in Bethlehem from two years old and under, and of that flowing from the wounded hands and side of Jesus on the cross, and with all the righteous blood of the saints down to the present day. Most assuredly he is very red. Now in conclusion, we have shown that the first account we have of this dragon, who fought against Michael was near six thousand years ago in the garden of Eden, by the name serpent. Since we find about seven names given as, serpent, Devil, satan, dragon, beast, false prophet, and Abaddon or Apolyon. And his habitation is among the sons and daughters of men. And woe unto the inhabitants of the earth, the children of the flesh, carnal men and women. For if ye live after the flesh ye shall die, but if ye through the spirit do mortify the deeds of the body ye shall live. There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk after the spirit; for the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made us free from the law of sin and death; for what the law could not do in that it was weak through flesh, God sending His own son, in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin condemned sin in the flesh.

Does it not seem strange that sin was not condemned in a literal forked tongued serpent or dragon? No. Because we are not authorized to say that such a being was, or is the one bringing in sin. But the scriptures teach us that by man came sin.

And that makes the reason plain why man is the only responsible party for his acts. James says that every man is tempted when he is drawn away of his own lust and enticed.

Then when lust hath conceived it bringeth forth sin and sin when it is finished bringeth forth death. Paul tells us that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God. Neither fornicators, nor adulterers, nor idolaters, nor effeminate persons, nor thieves, nor covetous persons, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners shall inherit the kingdom of God. 1 Cor. 6: 9. Now we presume [that these above named criminal acts are the issue of and emanate from the law in the flesh, therefore if we live after the flesh we shall die, but if we through the spirit of Christ do mortify these deeds of the body we shall live. Again Paul says to the Galatians of these ungodly acts that the works of the flesh (he does not say here that these are the works of an evil, spiritual monster whose range or habitation is in the regions of the unknown) but he plainly says that the following are the works of the flesh, and that they are manifest (to wit) Adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revellings and such like, of the which I tell you before as I have also told you in time past, that they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God. Gal. 5: 19. But the eminent apostle says, Walk in the spirit and ye shall not fulfill the lust of the flesh, for the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh, and these are contrary the one to the other, so that ye cannot do the things that ye would. This well represents the nature and the conflicting principles of the warfare under consideration, which is a war of principle or characters which is carnality and spirituality.

Paul speaks of it and says that the carnal mind is enmity against God, for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be, so then they that are in the flesh cannot please God, for they that are after the flesh do mind the things of the flesh, but they that are after the spirit do mind the things of the spirit, for to be carnally minded is death, but to be spiritually-minded is life and peace. Rom. 8: 7. This is why flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God, and that corruption cannot inherit incorruption. 1 Cor. 15: 50.

But the fruit of the spirit is in all goodness, and righteousness and truth, love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness temperance, against such there is no law. Eph. 5: 9.

Herod is represented as a great red dragon having seven heads and ten horns, and his minions that he hissed on are his angels. The Pope is a dragon and his priests and his crusades are his angels. These devils, or dragons and their angels are to be cast into a lake of fire and brimstone, which is the second death. But the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made us free from the law of sin and death, the law in our members and the violated law. The one prompting us to acts of disobedience and the other binding us under its curse. It was this law of the spirit of life in Christ that entitled Jacob to the birth-right and blessing, instead of Esau, who was only entitled to it by the law which was added by reason of transgression, and hence Jacob was no swindler; for he obtained the birth-right and blessings under the oldest law.

King David said to Saul, that "wickedness proceedeth from the wicked: but mine hand (saith David) shall not be upon thee. 1 Sam. 24: 13. David also says in his 7th Psalm, that "God judgeth the righteous and is angry with the wicked every day If he turn not he will whet his sword; he hath bent his bow and made it ready. He hath also prepared for him the instruments of death. He ordained his arrows against the persecutors. Behold he (man) travaileth with iniquity and hath conceived mischief, and brought forth falsehood. He made a pit and digged it and is fallen into the ditch which he made; his mischief shall return upon his own head, and his violent dealing shall come down upon his own pate. Ps. 7: 16. David further says that "The Lord is known by his judgments and the wicked is snared in the work of his own hands;" Ps. 9: 16. King Solomon says that, "the ways of man are before the eyes of the Lord and he pondereth all his goings; his own iniquities shall take the wicked himself and he shall be holden with the cords of his sins."—Prov. 5: 22.

The Scriptures inform us that sin is the transgression of the law of God, and that by man came sin, and by sin came death, and so we conclude that the five senses of man's fleshly body are the transferring medium to the soul. Faith comes by hearing, and hearing by the word of God. It is through this medium of the five senses that the soul is converted into a living faith in Christ, of a condemnation by obedience to the law in the flesh. To whom we yield ourselves servants to obey, his servants we are to whom we obey, whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness. It is through this medium which is transferred to the heart and thence to the soul, and the soul returns to God who gave it, either justified through obedience unto righteousness, or else contaminated by sin and uncleanness, and opposition to the divine law of God given in Christ, (Michael.) For we shall all appear before the judgment-seat of Christ, that we may receive the things done in the body, whether it be good or bad. 2 Cor. 5 : 10. Now if we connect these and other scriptures of like import and prayerfully study them, our minds will not be so much engrossed in the mystery of iniquity, or the works of the dragon who opposeth the kingdom of Michael, and why it is that the justice of God will execute the vengeance of a holy but a violated law on man as the transgressor, instead of the devil, or dragon, the superior creature to man, under whose influence, and at whose instance, those acts of rebellion were committed.

"But by man came sin." Rom. 5 : 12, 17. It is the lust of man, the creature, which bringeth forth sin and sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death. Dead in trespasses and sins, in which condition none can enter into the kingdom of Christ and of God. Paul says, "That by man came death. 1 Cor. 15 : 21. Christ called Peter Satan, and commanded Peter to get behind him. Matt. 16—23, but we understand it not to be a personal address, but spiritual. It was Peter's self-confident boasting, or his self-righteousness, to which Christ had reference, which he as fully reproveth as he does the world of sin. Peter was a satan, Judas was a devil, and Herod was a great red dragon. James speaks of a plurality of devils, and says that, "they believe and tremble." Jas. 2 : 19. We often witness a display of this kind in some of our church revivals.

We naturally infer that all human beings are either saints, or devils, either justified through faith, or condemned in sin without faith, in which condition it is impossible to please God. And self righteousness is also very sinful in its nature. So in our day we hear men boasting as loudly as Peter did of their religion saying, "I will never do thus and so, I know I will not." Not knowing, or considering that it is by grace we are saved through faith, and that not of our selves, for it is the gift of God, not of works lest any man should boast.

It is only through and by the efficacy of the blood of Christ, which cleanseth from all sin, and obedience unto righteousness, that poor fallen creatures can receive any favor with God ; for the gospel of Christ is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth. Then let us take our normal stand in Michael's little invincible army, with his banners unfurled, and our sails well spread to the heavenly breezes with the sword of the spirit in hand, and having on the breast plate of righteousness, and our feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace, and fight valiantly with our brave and victorious captain in view, with the full assurance that in the end of this great protracted conflict, the victory will be inscribed on Zion's banner, the promise and glory being due to Zion's King. But let each soldier take his normal stand in rank and file, and look to the right and dress well : for our noble captain has given us the height and depth, the length and breadth of the battle field, and to go beyond its limits, is the same as to join the army of Apollyon : for then we are sure to be captured by the Dragon's host. For our Captain says, that "He that is not with me is against me, and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad." And to hide our talent would be equally as dangerous, or fatal to our hope of salvation through Christ, as to bury one's sword ; the enemy beholds him unarmed—without the camp and treading upon unholy ground. They advance upon him with smiles, enfold him in their coils, and bear him triumphantly away. We sadly witness various instances of this kind in our day. Michael, our captain, instructs us on this subject by the mouth of his apostle saying, "Thou therefore my son be strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus. Thou therefore endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ." No man that warreth entangleth himself with the affairs of this life, that he may please him who hath chosen him to be a soldier. But Michael has not given any of us all the field to fight in. To some he has given ten talents, some five, and to some of us he has kindly imparted but one, (and fewer gifts and graces) but let us be content and seek to improve.

Now as these few remarks are very scattering and quite limited, with the imperfections and the mental weakness of their author, we trust that its imperfections will be excused, with the favor of a more thorough and correct explanation of this mysterious subject.

Hoping that some talented friend or brother will reply and correct errors and mistakes, we dismiss the subject with the cheering assurance that the Dragon and his angels prevailed not. Then of course Michael and his angels will, must and shall prevail.

We would like to have noticed the rise, work and power of the second beast with horns like a lamb, and who exercised all the power of the first beast; but space forbids. But God grant that we receive not his mark in our forehead and in our hands. Amen.

HENDERSON GROSS,

Gazil, Kanawha Co., W. Va.,

DEAR BRETHREN, AND SISTERS, IN HOPE OF ETERNAL LIFE. Duty seems to impress me to write you but what shall I say for your comfort, that you may be edified by the Holy Spirit? Should the Lord enable me by such power, doubtless some of his little ones, will be comforted and their hopes brightened for Heaven, and immortal happiness, whilst wandering through this wilderness of sin, battling under the banner of King Emmanuel as it floats, blood-stained, yet leading on to victory. No other subject can be admired so much, by the people of God, as that spoken by the Angels, being dispatched from the throne of Glory with sweet intelligence, good news, glad tidings of great joy, "for unto you is born this day in the City of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord". Luke 2 chapter 11 verse.

Glorious tidings, a saviour born. Oh! dear brethren and sisters who feel to have an interest in that Saviour, how much does that language mean, uttered by the sinless lips of an angel, direct from heaven unto you. Lo shepherds are out in the field, in the cold, and perhaps dark night, attentive and discharging their duty, keeping watch over their flock. Prophets had foretold the event but doubtless there had some hundred years elapsed since the prophet Malachi, the last prophet of the old scriptures, had cried out and said, "Behold I will send you Elijah the prophet, before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord, and he shall turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the hearts of the children to their fathers, &c. Mal. 4:5, 6. Surely Elias had come but they knew it not. He came in the person of John the Baptist, for Christ on one occasion speaking in reference to John the Baptist said, this is Elias which was to come. "But unto you this day is born in the City of David, a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord." Strange things had begun to occur. Zacharias was visited by a heavenly messenger. Things seeming to be impossible were about to be performed. Elizabeth's age should be no barrier in the way. The mighty, wondrous working of the Lord, predestinated from eternity, was being made manifest and who could stay his mighty hand. For not believing that Zacharias was dumb for a season, but that did not impede the progress of the work of the Saviour. Mary, the Virgin, was visited by the angel Gabriel, sent directly from the throne of God, for he says, "I am Gabriel that stand in the presence of God." The message delivered her was that she should bring forth a son and call his name Jesus, for he shall save his people from their sins. How this harmonizes with the text, for unto you, yes unto his people, is born this day in the City of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord. In the mouth of two or three witnesses every word shall be established," to the glory of God. Here we have two witnesses from a glorious region of sinless lips, joying and taking delight to do the will of him whose countenance outshines the glittering sun, with all its dazzling splendor, and to their testimony echo all the prophets and apostles, urged by the same Spirit speaking by the same power. They declare him by divine authority to be a Saviour. View the shepherds in your imagination, after receiving the grand intelligence, as they turn their faces toward Bethlehem, saying one to another let us now go even unto Bethlehem, and see this thing which is now come to pass, which the Lord hath made known unto us, and they came with haste.

Oh! what amazing wonder, not in the inn, not in some palace, not in a dwelling inhabited by a human family, but in a manger, a place for beasts, was found the darling Son of the great I AM. "The foxes have holes, the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head."

Dear brethren and sisters, what condescension, the Father's only son, sole heir of all things, who surrenders all for a time, says here am I, send me. Oh, how worthy of praise and adoration. The shepherds adored him, they worshipped him, they spread the glad tidings, and thanks be to our God, they have not ceased yet, but to-day the shepherds are sounding out the good tidings of great joy that a Saviour born still lives and reigns. Good old Simeon saw him, embraced him, and said, Lord lettest now thy servant depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation. The prophetess Anna saw him, and spake of him to all them that looked for redemption in Jerusalem; but redemption, oh what it cost the babe of Bethlehem, my sins, your sins, the sins of the whole world, bearing down upon the little babe in swaddling clothes, in the manger. So much innocence, bearing so much guilt, a guilty world of such horrid crimes and deeds, but what a sure foundation laid in Zion. What a strong arm to uphold and embrace. Here was a field bearing all manner of sin and degredation, a field of crime, a field of guilt, but the humble babe of Bethlehem left all that he had, the robe, the crown, the honour, the glory, the sweet association of angels, and the joys of heaven. He purchased the field for the pearl that was in the field. Does it not belong to him, is it not his own? That pearl is his Bride, loved by him with an everlasting love, redeemed by his own precious blood. This bride has a Saviour. It was he of whom the angels spoke; "for unto you (the bride) is born this day in the City of David a Saviour, which is Christ, the Lord." All who have a hope fear not, he is able, fear not little flock, it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom. Yours to serve,

GEO. A. REID.

DEAR EDITORS GOLD AND LESTER:— As I have been requested to have my experience published in your most valuable paper, I will endeavor to write a brief sketch if the Lord will enable me. I was very young when I was first alarmed about my condition, if I ever was, while on a visit with my sister to brother Wm. Lundy's. We went with the girls to milk the cows. It was getting dark, the stars were beginning to shine for there was a star, or it appeared as a ball of fire fell to the earth. I saw the star fall and heard the sound thereof as the sound of distant thunder. That night I was afraid to go to bed, for it seemed as if the floor would give way and let me fall, I was so afraid. The next day we went to preaching and on our return told mother what we saw. She said the end of time would come as unexpected and what would become of us; which made me study a great deal. I sometimes thought that the sun did not shine with the same brilliancy that it did before; everything seemed so dark, but after awhile that seemed to wear away. I could enjoy myself as well as ever rolling sin under my tongue as a sweet morsel. I went on in this way I don't know how long, until one Sunday I went to Good Hope. I got tired setting still and some other girls and myself got up and went to the spring. Before we got there I felt so condemned it seemed my blood ran cold. I could not help but tremble. I was afraid somebody would ask me what was the matter. I did not know but I never went to the spring any more in time of preaching as I remember. It was not long after that my mother and two sisters joined the church, and I felt there was a chance for every one but me. I would try to pray, but it did no good. The more I prayed the worse I got. One night when I went to bed it seemed like I could'nt live I was in so much trouble. I dreamed of seeing brethren Webb and Jennings on the water, they were robed in white. I wanted to get to them but it seemed they were in some kind of building which resembled a ship. I started to walk on the water and began to sink when one of them spoke to me and took me by the hand, and kept me from sinking. That seemed to give me some relief at that time. I thought there might be a little chance for me. I got along very well for awhile but I was soon in as much trouble as ever. Nothing did me any good. It seemed that every one had forsaken me. My husband would come in very often from his work and find me crying. He would ask me what was the matter. I never would tell that I thought I was going to die, for I did not want any one to know where I was going. I thought destruction was my doom. One day while alone I went out to the back of the house and knelt down to try to pray. I don't think I uttered one word. I soon got up and went in the house and came to the conclusion it was a sin to ask God to have mercy on such a wretch as I was and would never try to pray again. I sat there I don't know how long but I could not help praying. That day I don't know how nor when the burden left me, for I found myself singing, and these words came to me, "Take my yoke upon you and learn of me, for my yoke is easy and my burden light."

From this time on I have never had this burden of sin, as it is my burden now is whether I am changed or have I been deceived in the whole matter. I often feel very doubtful about my condition. I staid out of the church a long time thinking I would get a better hope, till I could not stay any longer.

The things I once hated I now love.

Your unworthy sister, if one at all.

ELDER P. D. GOLD, DEAR SIR:—
Enclosed you will find $2.00 (two dollars) for the renewal of my subscription to ZION'S LANDMARK.

Long may you live to issue your noble paper. In reading its bright pages, that glow in beauty, we feel that the sweet wings of thought have been plumed by the Divine hand of Love.

It is a pleasure to read a christian's experience that has budded and blossomed into the full blown flower of hope, that sweet hope of life eternal filling their souls with love and praises to their Savior to whom all honor is due. I love to read these things, and see the harmony of those who have been joined by that heavenly kindred tie. But sad to know I can but read, yet cannot feel. I close, wishing you a happy journey throug all coming years. Respectfully.

SALLIE F. PRICE.

Remarks.

Does not my friend herself love these things that she writes of? do not you give evidence th at you are born of God who is love. He that loveth is born of God.

You must have some spiritual feeling or you would not lament that feeling of deadness that distresses you.

All persons ordering medicine from me will give their nearest Express Office. My medicine will, as soon as I get bottles, be put up in six and twelve ounce bottles. Price 50 cents and one dollar per bottle.

ELDER P. D. GOLD, DEAR BROTHER

—In the glorious gospel of Christ the Savior of sinners through the mercy of God I drop you a few lines which leaves us all well as usual, hoping they may find you and family enjoying the same great blessings. Brother Gold, I thought when I was at your house I would have written something for your paper, but it seems I never can get in a mind to do so. I have been traveling most all the time since I returned home from your country. The Primitive Baptists are in the most prosperous condition in this country I have known them in upwards of forty years that I have belonged to them. We would be pleased to see some Appointments come out in the LANDMARK for you to visit our country. You will give my love to all enquiring friends. When parting with so many brothers and sisters I thought I would never see them any more in this cold hearted and God forgetting world, but they were so good to me I am made to wonder why it was so. May the Lord give us grace to spend our days in honor to his great name.

A. J. Taylor.

Brother Gold, I would like to see a comment in the LANDMARK upon the 9th verse of the one hundred and thirty seventh Psalm.

Remarks.

The Scripture reads,
f) "Happy shall he that taketh and dasheth thy little ones against the stones."

Babylon literally here means the kingdom of Babylon that carried Israel away captive, and became an oppressor of Israel, and enslaved them. So that it displeased the Lord, and he destroyed that kingdom forever. Cyrus was raised up for that purpose, and God blessed him, and he was happy in destroying Babylon.

Spiritually or in the gospel day and as fulfilling the ancient type of Israel, Mystery Babylon is the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth, or that persecuting power under the guise and form of religion that makes great professions of worshipping, and yet oppresses the saints of God, and slays the just. The daughter of Babylon represents the pride and beauty, the glory and delicacy of Babylon. As daughters are celebrated for their delicate beauty and are the pride of the house, so the daughter of Babylon sets forth the glory and beauty of false persecuting religion. One need but read seriously the book of Revelation to ascertain the fearful power and influence of that mother of Harlots.

The little ones are the children or offspring of that mother of harlots whose progeny is a great multitude.

For more are the children of the desolate or unmarried one than of the true wife. But it is not to the honor of a woman without an husband to bear children. But true children are the gift of the Lord, and are olive plants round about the table, and Happy is Jesus who hath his quiver full of them, for he shall see of the travail of his soul and shall be satisfied: But those little ones of Babylon are the product and offspring of fornication committed by the mother of harlots with the nations of earth, or joining all sorts of worldly societies and institutions of men and devils, and bringing forth fruit unto them. These little foxes are to be taken. All these forms of false worship with all the daughters and little ones of falsehood are enemies to zion, and all must be dashd against the stones.

Who is able to do this? Who is alone able to purge Jerusalem, to deliver the daughter of zion out of Babylon? Who alone is able to make war with the beast and false prophet and slay them? Who alone is able to destroy with the breath of his power, and the brightness of his coming, all these powers that oppose themselves, and exalt themselves above all that is called God? Who alone is able to cleanse Jerusalem of all her idols, and render unto Babylon a reward according to all her works, and to dash all her little ones against the stones, so that they shall no more hurt nor destroy in all the holy mountain of the Lord, so that Israel shall be free and her enemies afflict her no more forever?

None but Jesus, the Lion of the tribe Judah, can do these things. He rides on the white horse conquering and to conquer, and they that are with him are called and chosen and faithful.

Jesus perfectly does the will of God, and he is perfectly happy, glorified, full of grace and truth, and he rides prosperously because of his enemies, and does the will of God in destroying every enemy of the church and the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand, and with him are pleasures forever more. O king live forever.

P. D. G.

GO ON TO PERFECTION.

Brother T. T. Rowland requests my view of Heb. 6 : 2—6 and 7. chap.

"Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God."

"Of the doctrine of baptisms, and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment." &c.

We consider that the epistle to the Hebrews especially exalts the priesthood of Christ above that of Aaron, and the law of liberty or perfection in Christ Jesus above that of the law that came by Moses.

Hence he exhorts the Hebrews to leave the principles of the doctrine of Christ and go on to perfection. What are the principles of the doctrine of Christ here named? They are the types and figures, principles or beginnings, of the doctrine fore-shadowing Christ as contained in the law, such as repentance from dead works—the doctrine of baptisms or washings under the law—of laying on of hands—of the resurrection of the dead and eternal judgment. These types made nothing perfect. For instance the works of the law were dead works, for the law could not give life. We should not go back to the law to lay again that foundation of repentance from dead works, of faith, or of baptisms, such as washing bodies or sacrifices under the law, or of laying the hands of people on lambs, or other offerings made under the law, for these things could not take away sin, nor make the comers thereunto perfect. For the law made nothing perfect. Why then should we want to lay that foundation again, or why blend it in any sense with the gospel? Why after the sun is risen should one wish to burn candles? For these first principles were shadows and types under the law and pointing to Jesus, and as lights of night are the best for the night time and needful then, but when the sun arises they are all to be blown out as of no further use at all. When Jesus comes we are to forever leave the legal dispensation and dwell in the brightness and glory of the gospel dispensation as children of the day and of the light.

Whatever is in type or otherwise taught of Jesus under the law is far more fully taught in the gospel. Therefore leaving these principles of the doctrine, let us not lay again the foundation of repentance or turning to dead works. If we have turned from this foundation to a better and living substance, why should we wish to return to that again? Observe that we are not told to leave the doctrine of Christ, but leaving the principles of the doctrine, that is to leave types or the law. It is the same foundation or types of all these things—that is of repentance from dead works, of faith toward God, of baptisms, of laying on of hands, of resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment, wherein under the law there was a fresh remembrance of sin made every day, and therefore of eternal or unending judgment, that we are to leave, and go on to Jesus the substance, life, reality and glory of all these things.

In Jesus alone is perfection, nor is there anything but perfection in him. In him is no failure or darkness, nor death, but all perfection, while the law makes nothing perfect.

We will go on to perfection by leaving these principles, if God permit. We are dependent on God altogether for this. The hand of God is not such as the world supposes, trying to save all but failing with many, because they will not permit God to save them. For instead of God being dependent on us we are dependent on him.

For if any after having tasted of the powers of the world to come, gospel world, should fall away to renew them unto repentance is impossible seeing that they have crucified the Son of God afresh and put him to an open shame. For Christ was crucified once at the end of the legal world, and never will be crucified again. He dieth no more. If therefore the death of Jesus does not save, or if perfection is not found in him, it can never be found at all.

It would put Jesus to open shame to go back from him to the law of works for perfection or salvation. It would be saying that the death of Jesus is not sufficient to save. What a reproach on Jesus to go anywhere else for perfection, after one has tasted of the good word of God and been enlightened.

But Paul says, we are persuaded better things of you than that you will do this. As much as to say that no true Hebrew will thus act, although we thus speak. For God is not unrighteous to forget your work of faith and labor of love in that these are things that accompany salvation. Wherever we see a work of faith and labor of love we know that these are things that accompany salvation.

While they are not the cause of salvation they are proof of it, and God is not unrighteous to forget these things, seeing that he that hath begun a good work in you will perform it to the day of Jesus Christ.

CHAPTER 7.

We will notice briefly the theme of this chapter. The priesthood of Jesus is set forth in glorious superiority over that of Levi. In Melchisedec, the Christ of the old Testament, to whom Abraham paid tithes, we see the tribe of Levi also paid and acknowledged the superiority of Jesus as an eternal priest, and also as king of righteousness and king of peace. Now consider how great he is, how far above Levi. Consider Christ Jesus the apostle and high priest of our profession.

Now if perfection were obtained by the Levitical priesthood what need was there of the further priesthood of Melchisedec? The change of priesthood requires a change of law also. While the law made nothing perfect, and these better things were fore-shadowed even under the law, the bringing in of this better hope did, by the which we draw nigh to God.

Moreover the priests under the law were made without an oath, but this by the oath of him who cannot lie who said, the Lord sware and will not repent, thou art a priest forever after the order of Melchisedec. Jesus is by so much more made the surety of a better testament.

Furthermore under the law there were many priests, and they could not remain by reason of death, and they were therefore changeable, but Jesus abideth a priest forever without change. Such an high priest became us who is holy and consecrated forevermore, and who offered himself once without spot to God, having obtained eternal redemption for us.

He is the mediator of the New Testament founded on better promises, even grace and truth. For while the law came by Moses, grace and truth came by Jesus Christ. Wherefore Jesus, since he is consecrated forevermore and ever liveth, is able to save unto the uttermost them that come unto God by him.

Perfection is then in Jesus. We should leave all types and shadows behind, going on unto perfection which is alone in Christ Jesus.

P. D. G.

WHAT DOES JESUS CALL IT?

We feel that Jesus always calls things by their right names? Does he call feet-washing an ordinance? He calls it an example.

"For I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you."—John. 13: 15.

He says, "if I your Lord and master wash your feet ye also ought to wash one another's feet. Surely we should wash one another's feet. Jesus both by word and example tells us so.

What does Paul, who is a judge in Israel appointed to expound the meaning of what Jesus said and did, say of feet-washing? Does he call it an ordinance? He classes it with good works. In speaking of widows he says, "Well reported of for good works; if she have brought up children, if she have lodged strangers, if she have washed the saints' feet, if she have relieved the afflicted, if she have diligently followed every good work:" 1st, Tim. 5: 10. These are all the instances mentioned in the bible of saints' washing each other's feet. Under the law the host brought water to his guest that he might wash his own feet.

Paul explains feet-washing to be a good work. He does not class it as baptism or the Lord's supper. He does not say if this widow had been baptized, or has kept the Lord's supper, but if she have brought up children properly, if she has controlled her family well. It is a very important matter to train up children to be useful men and women. That is a good work. If she has lodged strangers, or has been careful to entertain strangers, or show kindness to such as are in distress, if she have washed the saints' feet.

To stoop down to the saints' feet to wash them: if she have relieved the afflicted: if she have shown kindness to afflicted and suffering people : if we wash with the Lord's supper. Shall we have diligently followed every ordinance, and will he bear with our work. You see then how the Lord's supper is to be used in his house and he says I wash groups feet-washing, not with water, but with the Lord's supper, and girds himself with the church, but with the Lord's supper, and does so, and I feel that he is an works as christians should perform it, and he so regards me.

ly. We do not go to preaching to lodge strangers, or to bring up children, or to relieve the afflicted, as is meant here.

The apostles are ordained of God to declare what is the law in Zion. Several instances are found where they refer to the Lord's supper, and where the brethren observed it, yet washing the saints' feet is not once named in connection with the Lord's supper. That is one reason why they that hold that feet-washing is connected with the Lord's supper should not exclude from their fellowship those brethren who do not so see feet-washing. For as the apostles were empowered to set in order everything that should be observed in the church, and are judges appointed by the Lord to declare the true meaning of all that Jesus did and said, and as not one of them has ever connected feet-washing with the Lord's supper, we should not exclude our brethren from our fellowship who do not see that feet-washing is connected with the Lord's supper.

There is never any contention in the church about baptism, or the Lord's supper. For the apostles plainly and expressly declare their import and use.

What is a more wonderful thing than feet-washing to manifest our tenderness and love one to another. It is right to wash feet. It is on my mind to do so, but here is a brother that does not see it connected with the Lord's supper, because in no instance after the church is set up on the day of Pentecost is it ever once mentioned by a single apostle as

In the minds of many brethren an ordinance is that which certain characters are authorized to administer as the administration of baptism and the Lord's supper. That then is an ordinance. We would not hold that a widow woman can baptize or administer the Lord's supper.

No Baptist would for a moment recognize one a true Baptist who has never been baptized. Hence, baptism is an ordinance, or is indispensable to the existence of a church. We say then that baptism is an ordinance. So the Lord's supper is set down in scripture as an ordinance. In the 11th chapter of 1st Cor. Paul commends the brethren for keeping the ordinances, and names the Lord's supper as an ordinance, so in 15th of 1st Cor. he names baptism, but not a word is said about feet-washing.

We do not mean to ignore washing the saints' feet, but we gain nothing by calling that an ordinance which the Bible does not so call. If the bible did not give it a name at all then we might be at some loss what to call it. But Jesus calls it an example, and Paul explains it as a good work.

We love feet-washing. It was on my mind to wash feet before I was received by the Primitive Baptists. I have never failed to wash feet when I had an opportunity. I have washed in connection with the Lord's supper because it is right to wash feet, but I have never felt it in my heart to make it a test of fellowship with a brother who does not connect it with the Lord's supper, for reasons given above, tenuousness and feet washing and feel they consider how to wash feet then and I've Levi. Con- right to wash feet at any time and high Suppose you are called to ser- church that is not, according to your- idea, fully walking in obedience in every thing, you say you cannot preach to that people because they are not faith- ful in all things. Which would be more like feet-washing to tell that church in love what is right, and labor with them, or to turn away from them and have nothing to do with them. Suppose the Lord should deal with me in that way, or suppose the brethren should have nothing to do with me because I am not perfectly living and walking in Christ Jesus.

Do not say I am opposed to feet- washing because I claim the scriptural interpretation of it as it appears to me. That would not be washing my feet. It is a very lowly act. One must have the spirit of a true widow to wash feet aright. Unless you know what it is to wash feet you will not be happy in doing this thing. Jesus just a short time before his crucifixion washed his disci- ples' feet in token that in lowliness of spirit he would wash them from all sin by his death, and that he would wash their conduct or walk. How lowly and humble we should be in order that we may wash each others feet. It is too humble a thing for Baptists to fuss and strive about. They who strive about it certainly need to have their own feet washed.

We do not mean to lessen the value or need of feet washing by saying it is not an ordinance or law, but an exam- ple. It is enough that Jesus has said, I have given you an example that ye should do to one another as I have done to you. It is enough to com- mend it to us that Paul has once nam- ed it as a good work.

Obituary.

W
by th
JOHN LITTLETON.

foot-wa-ory of John Littleton Goodwin calls it July 1, 1883, after a brief illness. "Little "Lit" was in his third year and the youngest child of Thomas C. Goodwin who lived near Reidsville, N. C. and had the misfortune to lose his wife Mrs. F. J. Goodwin on the 16th of June 1887.

Baby was beautiful, intelligent and af- fectionate, and was the idol of his mother, and it is sad to reflect that the father's heart should so soon be pierced after the irreparable loss of his dear wife.

Death is sad, but the most beautiful rose falls as the frost visits our home: so does the fairest of earth's treasures fade as the reaper of death calls at many a hap- py home. It does not seem possible that so fair a flower could be so soon removed from earth to sit on the Throne with God, and be one of his most beautiful angels: only a grave, and yet how that mound will cause the heart of the grief-stricken father to swell afresh with great sorrow overshadowing his life. How lonely is his home without his two treasures.

They have vanished from our sight to that blessed home above where the loved ones cannot die.

MRS. FANNIE J. GOODWIN.

In memory of Mrs. Fannie J. Goodwin, wife of T. C. Goodwin, Reidsville, N. C. died June 16th 1887.

Death has again knocked at the door of a happy home and called to Heaven one of earth's most treasured gems.

Mrs. Goodwin was the youngest daugh- ter of Esq., Joseph Neal deceased. She was a devoted wife and mother and leaves a heart stricken husband to mourn his loss, and also left two straight forward little boys, who seem nearer to a father's heart than ever. She was beloved by all her neighbors and friends and was much con- cerned in regard to her future welfare for several months previous to her sickness and death. Her chief delight seemed to be to read her Bible and ZION'S LANDMARK and expressed a hope in a crucified Sa- vior, to whose will she seemed to be re- signed and said she intended to unite with the church as soon as opportunity present- ed itself, but as an all wise providence took her from a sick bed ere she could accomplish the desire the will no d will be taken for the deed.

Yes it is all over. She fell as a flower folds its petals at the ap of evening to awaken no more resurrection morn.

MOLLIE E. KEMPER.

By the request of my dear sister in the flesh it becomes my solemn duty to request you to insert in your valuable paper the decease of her daughter Mollie E. Kemper, in the Village of Acton, Indiana, in her 34th year.

She joined the Old School or Primitive Baptist Church called Forks of Little Buck Creek, Marion County, Ind. on her profession of faith in Christ and was baptised by her uncle, Elder P. K. Parr about nine years previous to her demise.

She lived the life of an humble and devoted christain, and had the love and fellowship of all her Brothers and sisters in the church. She took a deep interest in the welfare of the church always filling her seat, unless providentially hindered.
No doubt but many who read this will remember forming Mollie's acquaintace at different Associations in Ind., Ohio and Kentucky. Although she was of a meek and humble disposition, yet she was pleasant and sociable. She was only known to be loved and respected. She and I had been corresponding by letter for a number of years (as her mother was a poor scribe,) not many weeks passing between our letters.

She never failed to give words of cheer and consolation repeating the promises made by the Blessed Savior to those of his people who were tried by sorrow and Affliction with the consolations where-with she had herself been comforted. Some four years before her decease her health began to fail and finally had so far deranged her nervous system that on Christmas day 1887 her mental faculties also became deranged notwithstanding the goodness and mercy of the Lord was still manifest in that, that while the fleshly or natural mind was so wrecked, be bestowed upon her a double portion of his spirit, so that much of the time her whole theme was of heaven and heavenly things.
Like Paul she seemed to be caught up to the third Heaven, and saw things most unlawful to tell. But she would speak of a view of its glories and beauties and grandeur and that she saw friends there enjoying the rapturous bliss in such ecstatic strains that were amazed. By persuasion and friends her mother sent her to Indianapolis for the Hospital for the

After some four month's treatment she was brought home, her mind having gained its normal state. Although Consumption that dread disease had effected a permanent hold on her vitals, from which she suffered much almost one year, yet she did not murmur nor complain, but would seem cheerful and pleasant.
She kept her mind and was conscious until her last moments. She talked to her brother the morning before she died, telling him they had not long to live together in this world, and she hoped they would meet in that better world of perpetual bliss and enjoyment.

The Purpose of Zion's Landmark.

"Ask for the old paths where is the good way."

By the help of the Lord this paper will contend for the ancient Landmark, guided by its stakes of Truth, and strengthened by its chords of Love.

It hopes to reject all traditions and institutions of men, and regard only the Bible as the standard of truth.

It urges the people to search the Scriptures, and obey Jesus the king in the holy hill of Zion, keeping themselves unspotted from the world.

It aims to contend for the mystery of the faith in God and the Father, Jesus the Mediator, and the Holy Spirit the blessed Comforter.

All lovers of Gospel truth are invited to write for it—if so impressed.

May grace, mercy, and peace be multiplied to all lovers of truth.

The Subscription Price of Zion's Landmark.

For single subscribers $2.00 per year. Clubs of eight or a larger number $1.50 each, and the getter up of club receives a copy free for the time the club is paid. The subscribers in clubs need not all be at the same Post Office, and names can be sent from time to time in making up clubs: also in renewing clubs the same rule may be observed.

Any one sending me eight new names with $12.00 cash will be furnished a copy of the LANDMARK free for one year, and a copy of the "Church History" free.

When a subscriber desires his paper changed he should state plainly both the old and the new postoffices. When one wishes his paper stopped, let him send what is due, if anything is due, and also state his postoffice.

Let each subscriber keep his paper paid up if possible, and when he renews give the same name it has been going in, unless he wishes it changed, then he should state both the old and the new names.

If money sent has not been receipted please inform me of it. When you can, always send money by Money Order, Postal Note, Check, or Draft, or Registered letter, or by Express.

DEVOTED TO THE CAUSE OF JESUS.

Poetry.

THE NEEDY SOUL'S PRAYER FOR REFUGE.

O Lord, I fain would pillow,
Upon thy faithful word:
For many a raging billow
Against my soul is stirred.
Of all my wisdom emptied,
Of all my strength bereft,
Oppressed and sorely tempted,
Thus I am often left.

And wilt thou cease to guide me
Amidst the rising storms?
Shall he be denied me,
A fearful trembling worm?
O how these frequent questions
Perplex my troubled mind,
When satan's vile suggestions
Are with them intertwined.

No other power can shield me
Except thine arm of grace.
No word but thine can yield me
A solid resting place.
Thou who didst spread the ocean
Can'st tread its swelling wave,
Can'st quell its fierce emotion,
And show thy power to save.

Amidst continual dangers Thou leadest me along,
Preservest fainting strangers,
And makest weaklings strong.
The fatherless forsaken
May build upon thy care.
That hope shall not be shaken
Which has its anchor there.

O Lord, thy word can never Like men and princes fail.
Thou keepest truth forever
And wilt o're all prevail.
The storm will soon be over,
And calm ensue at length,
For in the Lord Jehovah
Is everlasting strength.

ABOUNDING IN HOPE.

The apostle desired that his brethren might abound in hope. This is an inestimable blessing, but beyond the reach of mortal man to obtain. The apostle in his benediction tells the source and author of that blessing, the way in which it is experienced, and the power that brings it to us. "Now the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing, that ye may abound in hope through the power of the Holy Ghost." Rom. 15: 13. The God of hope is one of the titles which is given to our dear Redeemer, expressing that he is the author of our hope, as well as the object of it. By him we hope, and in him we hope, and for him we hope. We have this hope as an anchor to the soul both sure and steadfast, and therefore "We are saved by hope." The anchor is prepared and given by the master of the vessel, and the vessel has nothing to do with regard to the anchor but to be saved by it. So the hope is given by our God to these vessels of mercy, and it has been securely cast by him, and has "entered into that within the veil," into all those wonderful things that set forth the finished work, the blood and righteousness of Jesus; and that anchor will hold every one of the vessels of mercy until the shifting tides and storms of life's ocean shall be past and we shall have come into the ocean of eternal blessedness.

The apostle does not intimate that the saints can believe of themselves, nor that they can by any power of their own obtain either peace or joy. But here as elsewhere he ascribes all the power by which they believe to the God of hope, and expresses his desire that he would fill them with all joy and peace in believing: joy and peace can be experienced in no other way. Those who have seen their true condition as sinners can have no joy or peace until the same power that raised up Jesus from the dead reveals him to them as their Redeemer, and causes them to believe in him. The apostle regards it as very important that the saints should know what is the exceeding greatness of God's power to us-ward who believe, according to the working of his mighty power which he wrought in Christ when he raised him from the dead. Eph. 1: 19. And how it enhances in our eyes the infinite value of this wonderful gift of faith and of the belief that follows upon this "evidence of things not seen," and how wonderful it makes the loving kindness of our God to such worms of the dust appear, when we consider how exceeding great and mighty is the power which has caused us to believe. Jesus now becomes our peace, and the spring of all our joy. Whenever faith is in lively exercise and we are enabled to believe, a wonderful transformation takes place in our feelings. We are lifted above our surroundings of gloom, sorrow, affliction, pain; are lifted above our sins, our depravity, our wretchedness, and are set on high, the circumstances are the same, the sins and depravity are the same, the affliction is still there, but to us they are not the same, for we are looking not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen.

We are now abounding in hope. But what is the benefit of this? Can hope feed a hungry man, or relieve him that is in pain and affliction, or open the prison door to him that is bound? No! but it can afford such strength and patience to endure, through the prospect which opens before us that we may well almost forget the hunger and pain, and distress.

A man is traveling through a desert. He is lame and blind, and hungry and thirsty, and very poor, and sorely beset with enemies who constantly threaten to destroy him. When he first found himself in this condition he was about to give up all for lost. But there came one to him and communicated to him most wonderful things. He told him of a blessed inheritance that was kept in reserve for him beyond. He described the loveliness and blessedness of that inheritance until the poor way-faring man's soul was so in love with it that he almost forgot himself. This one that was talking to him of these things he could not see, being blind, and yet somehow he seemed to have a kind of vision of him in his soul, and to see him by this inner sight as one of surpassing loveliness and beauty, and sometimes it seemed as though he could see the inheritance in its beauty and glory, as though it were revealed to him far away, and yet, as it were within him in this mysterious power of vision. While he is feeling the presence of this wonderful Being and hearing the whispers of love, and receiving the rich and exceeding great and precious promises, he does truly forget his poverty and remember his misery no more; for the words are "like the best of wine that goeth down sweetly, causing the lips of them that are asleep to speak."

But the scene is changed. He is alone again, and his wonderful companion has withdrawn himself, and his voice is heard no more. For awhile he travels on with joy and animation, fully satisfied that all the promises shall be fulfilled. For he was promised that soon he should be free from all pain and distress of every kind, and have all that he could possibly desire, and infinitely more. So for awhile he goes on cheerfully, whispering and singing to himself. And he finds himself occasionally in company with others like himself with whom he loves to talk of the trials and afflictions they all feel, and of the voice and promises of their friend, and of the prospects before them. But sometimes these comforts are out of his sight and hearing, and the enemies come around him, and jeer, and threaten, and deride and argue against his hopes, and ridicule him for entertaining such visionary notions, until finally he gets worn out and discouraged, and his hunger seems more terrible than ever, so that he is ready to faint, and his lameness is so great that he can hardly limp along. This is a time of sore trouble and distress. But while in this sad and desolate condition one is sent to him with a message from that dear and glorious friend whose voice and presence were so delightful to him, which comes as cold water to a thirsty soul. This message reaffirms all that was said to him before about the inheritance, and describes again and again its exceeding loveliness and transcendent glory until his soul is fired with ardent desire and filled with inexpressible joy. This message also sweetly repeats the precious promises and gives assurances of love and faithfulness that are most comforting: and with this heavenly message there comes in some mysterious way into his soul an unquestioning belief in all its declarations, so that he is filled with holy confidence, and with all joy and peace, and abounds in hope. He is still lame and poor and sick and blind and hungry and thirsty; and yet this hope is so bright, so sweet, so sure and steadfast, so unspeakably blissful, that his hungry soul seems really to be fed and satisfied with it, his sickness to be cured by it, and his very poverty to be turned into indescribable riches in its holy and transforming light. This hope so abounds in him, and he so abounds in it that the lame man leaps like a hart and the tongue of the dumb sings, while in this wilderness waters break out and streams in the desert. The very wilderness itself and the solitary place is glad for him, and the desert in his view rejoices and blossoms as the rose.

ELDER P. D. GOLD, DEAR BROTHER:—After reading several numbers of your valuable paper I will now send you two dollars to pay my first years' subscription and hope to get the paper prompt for out of it I get all that does me any good spiritually speaking for if there is another predestination Baptist, only myself and wife, in 200 miles of this place I have no knowledge of them and all the preaching I have is do and live and if you will make the start the Lord will meet you half way and save you. Now I have no use for such preaching at all, neither do I have any use for a half way Saviour; I want a full and a complete Saviour one that works every thing after the counsel of his own will, and that can bend or break our will and make it conform to his; one that is all power; one that command the army of heaven and upon earth can stay the hand or has the right to say why or what doest thou. As I am in a destitute place I would like some of the preaching Brethren to pay this country a visit so I and wife might once more get to hear the blessed doctrine of the Bible salvation by grace and that through our Lord Jesus Christ, not of works lest any man boast. And now may the Lord bless you and all that call on him in sincerity is my prayer for his great name's sake. Amen, Yours in hope of a better world beyond the grave.

ELDER P. D. GOLD,—Dearly beloved Brother in Christ. It is by and through the divine mercy of God that I am spared to drop you a few lines to let you hear from me once more. I am in feeble health yet but some better off than I have been. I have thought of you a great many times, and I would be glad for you to visit us for we all want to see you very much. Dear Brother, I have felt so lonely and sad for sometime. I can't rest any day nor night. I feel to be less than the least of all God's saints. When it goes well with you remember me at a throne of grace. Write soon. I remain your affectionate sister.

PART 2.

I now, readers, set out on the second part, not knowing where I will stop, to treat of men-made ministers; but will endeavor to keep scripture, history, facts and truth on my side in their description. And for proof that there are such men in the world as men-made preachers, I offer you 2 Timothy, 4th and 3rd: For the time will come, when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers having itching ears; 4. and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables.

I need not quote another scripture at present, this is so express and to the point; and is the language of the Holy Ghost by Paul to Timothy, of what should come to pass in the gospel church in some future age of the church. For the time will come says he (not now come,) when they (the professors of the gospel church) will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lust, (mark the cause assigned by the Holy Ghost why the church will not endure sound doctrine—lust,) the lust of pride, money, and honor, and power; these were the lusts that did and now prevail in the church, that produced this cause. What cause? Why the apostle tells Timothy; of putting the church at the great work of heaping up teachers having itching ears. Then the lust of the church, pride, money, honor and power, was the original cause why the church could not endure sound doctrine where these lusts prevail. And further, these lusts put the churches to making preachers to her own liking, or to suit her lust. And mark these words in the text (heap to themselves) teachers having itching ears; which word, heap, shows the great abundance of this kind of teachers that the church would make at some future age of the gospel church, to satisfy her own lust: for this is the original fountain that gave rise to all men-made teachers, according to the prophecy of the Holy Ghost who could not err.

Then I shall enquire when this time came in the gospel church for her to make teachers; for you will not doubt but that the New Testament showeth that Christ made and justified the first teachers of the Christian church, a thing so plain need not be proved; for it shines as with a sunbeam that the first teachers of the Christianity were men chosen, called, qualified, and made able ministers of the gospel by God Almighty's spirit and grace, and gifts of the Holy Ghost, no man can doubt that reads the New Testament. John the Baptist, Jesus Christ, the twelve apostles, the seventy, Paul, Barnabas, Apollos Timothy, Titus, and others, their successors, were ministers of God, and not self-made, men-made, nor devil-made—made so of God, spread the gospel against all opposition, without scheming and monied societies, throughout the vast Roman empire; the mighty field, white unto harvest, for the first gospel laborers at that time comprehended almost the civilized world; for it is said of the apostles, they went every where preaching the gospel. And it is said by Christ, that the gospel of the kingdom must first be preached to all nations, and then shall the end come; meaning the end of Jerusalem and the Jews as a nations. And the different languages of this vast assemblage of nations, of which the Roman empire was composed, was no impediment in their way, being enabled by the Holy Ghost to speak in the mother tongue of all. And although the kings and emperors, and governors of provinces, and heathen and Jewish priests, stood up and raged in anger with sword, fire and faggots, against Christ, his apostles, gospel, doctrine, and followers, yet they all could not stop its progress nor hinder its spread, but rather furthered it by their persecution. For when persecuted in one city they fled to another, and carried the torch of divine truth with them according to the directions of the Lord when he sent them out. And here I feel under the necessity of digressing from my subject, in order to show the powerful and extensive spread of the gospel under the first preachers of the Christianity; for the reason of showing that the church never made teachers until after 300 years of her first progress. Some few days after Christ's ascension we find the disciples assembled at Jerusalem, and Peter stood up and spoke to the number, and they were an hundred and twenty. Whether these were all that had been converted by John the Baptist, Christ and his apostles, I shall not determine; but I should rather think not, because it is said in the gospel, and many believed on him there, &c. I would rather suppose that these were inhabitants of the city and associated with the apostles, and that there were many disciples elsewhere, but that these formed the first gospel church which continued the head and center of union of all the rest. About ten days after this church was formed the day of pentecost came on, when three thousand were added to them. And in the 4th chapter of Acts we find they had multiplied to five thousand. There is another incident, in the gospel of John, which shows that these were not all; it reads thus, Nevertheless among the chief rulers also many believed on him: but because of the Pharisees they did not confess him lest they should be put out of the synagogue, for they loved the praise of disci men more than the praise of God. So that it appears Christ had many ples besides the five thousand, that did not join this church; still the church increased as we find, for it is said: Believers were the more added to the Lord, multitudes both of men and women. No infants are mentioned as members of the first church, but men and women; think on it, ye infant baptisers. And directly after, another incident falls in the history of the progress of this church—the murmuring of the Grecians against the Hebrews, because their widows were neglected; and then it is expressly said: That the number of the disciples multiplied in Jerusalem greatly, and that a great company of the priests were obedient to the faith. All this seems to take place in about one year after Christ's ascension, and seems to be confined to the city of Jerusalem only.

In the 8th chapter of Acts, we find there was a great persecution against this church at Jerusalem by Saul and others, and on that account the members thereof were scattered abroad throughout Judea and Samaria, except the apostles. And here is the first spread of the gospel 5th vers: Then Philip went down to the city of Samaria, and preached Christ unto them. 6th, And the people with one accord gave heed unto those things which Philip spake. 8th And there was great joy in that city. 12, But when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ they were baptised both men and women. Thus then we may safely suppose there was a second Baptist church established; that it was a Baptist church, and such an one as the United Baptists of the modern times, and of my own time there can be no doubt is clear from express text. For they are said to believe Philip's preaching, and the name of Jesus Christ, and then were baptised, of course on that faith, both men and women—no children in this church neither are mentioned, nor in that Jerusalem.

And that the church at Jerusalem was a Baptist church is clear also, for the apostles were Baptists, and it is said, Acts, 2. 41: Then they that gladly received the word were baptised and added unto them, &c. The third spread of the gospel was the baptism of the Eunuch, who no doubt so full of joy carried it into Ethiopia. Ananias, who lived at Damascus, was a Baptist: for he preached Baptism to Paul, and no doubt baptised him—but whether there was a church here, or not, I can't say.

We are told that they who were scattered abroad went every where preaching the word. The effect of this preaching is churches rise throughout all Judea, and Galilee, and Samaria, and were edified; and walking in the fear of the Lord, and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost, were multiplied. This work of multiplying believers and churches to this time, according to the best data I can come at, was about four years.

There were saints about this time at Lydda, for it is said: As Peter passed through all quarters, he came down also to the saints which dwelt at Lydda. Nor do I know that a church was here, but it shows the spread and progress of the church: that it was extending fast to different places. But here Peter healed Eneas. 36 verse: And all dwelling at Lydda and Saron saw him, and turned to the Lord. So that out of these there is a probability there might be a church at Lydda.

There were disciples at Joppa, who sent to Lydda for Peter to raise Dorcas from the dead; and on performing this miracle it is said—verse 42: And it was known throughout Joppa, and many believed in the Lord. Here again we see the spread of the gospel and the increase of believers, and out of these there might be a church formed, for aught I know. Hitherto it seems the gospel and church appear to be confined to the Jews and Samaritans, and that the apostles did not know they were at liberty to preach it to other nations, until the case of Cornelious at Cesarea, a centurion, and an Italian by nation. But while Peter tarried at Joppa, he had the vision of the sheet, went to Cornelius, preached with success to this man, his kinsmen and friends—the Holy Ghost falling on them with power—and he commanded them to be baptised in the name of the Lord. Here is another spread and increase of the church, to the astonishment of the Jewish Christians; because these were Gentiles, and the first fruits of the gospel among them.

Here I cannot forbear making the following remark, that it plainly appears that all the conversions of the first Christians were dependent and effected by two things, viz: the miracles of Christ and his apostles, with the descent of the Holy Ghost on, or while preaching. Then in this day, since miracles have ceased, all preaching to make sinners christians is dependant on the descent of the Holy Ghost to give the word power to life and salvation, otherwise the word preached may be a witness and feed sheep. This preaching at Cesarea took place somewhere between the sixth and eight year after the death of Christ.

In the 11th and 19: Now they which were scattered abroad upon the persecution that arose about Stephen travelled as far as Phenice, (or the country of Phenicia,) and Cyprus, (which was an island in the sea,) and Antioch, (I suppose in Syria, from the next verse,) preaching the word unto none but unto the Jews only. That is, to the Jews in those places. 20th, And some of them (that is, the preachers,) were men of Cyprus and Cyrene, which when they were come to Antioch, spake unto the Grecians, preaching the Lord Jesus. 21st, And the hand of the Lord was with them, and a great number believed, and turned to the Lord. 24th, And much people were added unto the Lord. Here we plainly see the wide spread of the gospel; and the increase of the gospel church is spoken of by the words, a great number, and much people; words surely made use of to show the mighty increase of believers of the gospel. This work of conversion of the Grecians was about the eighth or ninth year of the apostolic ministry.

About this time Herod the king killed James, and sought to kill Peter also. But yet the 12: 24th tells us, But the word of God grew and multiplied. Meaning both preachers and number of members. Somewhere I suppose between these years, 8 or 9, Barnabas and Paul were sent by the church at Antioch to preach to the Gentiles. They departed to Seleucia, and then sailed to Cyprus and Salamis. Here they preached the word of God in the synagogue of the Jews; and had John also to their minister. And passed through the isle of Salamis to Paphos; there loosed and sailed to Perga. Here Paul preached, 13: 49, And the word of the Lord was published throughout all the region. From here Paul and Barnabas are expelled out of all their coast.

Next we find them at Iconium, preaching and so speaking, 14. 1st, That a great multitude, both of the Jews, and also of the Greeks, believed. Iconium was the chief city of Lyconia. This happens about the 12th or 13th year. Next we find them at Lystra and Derbe, cities in same country or district. From Derbe they returned to Lystra, to Iconium, and Antioch; then passed throughout Pisidia and Pamphylia, and to Perga; then to Attalia, from thence sailed to Antioch, and here abode long time. This is Paul's and Barnabas's first travel among the heathen, and shows us plainly the spread of the gospel and its wonderful success among the heathen.

About the year 16, after the death of Christ, it was that men came from Judea and taught, 15. 1st, Except ye be circumcised after the manner of Moses, ye cannot be saved. Then the church sends Barnabas and Paul to Jerusalem with the apostles to consider of this matter. This occasions their second journey. They pass through Phenice and Samaria, and then to Jerusalem; from thence back to Antioch, carrying the determination of the council. 15. 41st, And he (Paul) went through Syria and Cilicia, confirming the churches. That is after the parting of him and Barnabas, about taking John with them. From this text then we learn that in sixteen years there were many churches in these two countries, Cilicia and Syria; how many we are not told, but from the expressions made use of to show the number of converts, I should suppose there were many churches; for they are set forth by the historian in the plural, churches. And as Paul travelled through these churches he found them, 16. 15th, And so were the churches established in the faith, and increased in number daily. There can be no doubt that these were all Baptist churches, and like ours of the United Baptists of this day, in doctrine, ordinance and discipline. But more by the by.

Paul now being forbidden to preach the gospel in Asia, passes to Misia and Bithynia, and comes to Troas; from Troas to Samothracia, then to Neapolis and from thence to Philippi, in Macedonia in Greece. Here he plants the church of Philippi, and this was a Baptist church, for Lydia and the jailor and houses were baptised.

From Philippi Paul passed through Amphipolis and Apollonia, and came to Thessalonica; and in this city some of the Jews believed, Acts 17th, 4. And of the devout Greeks a great multitude, and of the chief women not a few. Here he plants another Baptist church, for there are two epistles written by Paul to this church.

From Thessalonica Paul and Silas are sent to Berea, and here they preached. 12th verse: Therefore many of them believed; also of honorable women which were Greeks, and of men not a few. Here I think also there was another church, although the historian doesn't mention it; for Timotheus abode there still, after the brethren sent Paul and Silas to Athens, another city of Greece, and no doubt to preach to the new converts or church until Paul sent for him.

At Athens Paul made a few converts. From Athens he came to Corinth, where he spent a year and a half in preaching to that city; for here it was revealed to Paul that Christ had much people in that city. And the success of Paul at Corinth in preaching is found in Acts, 18: 8. And many of the Corinthians believed and were baptized. Here then Paul plants another Baptist church, and that they were of the same sort as the churches that compose the Kehukee Association there can be no doubt; for these first heard Paul preach, then believed, then were baptized. So that in all cases baptism is administered according to the scripture account after faith or belief, and not otherwise, if known. But it has been said by an enemy that there are drunkards, fornicators, covetous and cold hearted professors in the churches of the Kehukee Association. No doubt of this truth; but let that sect or body of churches cast their stones that have got no such among them, and then we will thank them for their calumny. But sirs, read Paul's epistles to the church at Corinth, and there you'll find drunkards, incestuous persons—have a verse: 2d Epistle, 12: 21: That I shall bewail many which have sinned already, and have not repented of the uncleanness, fornication and lasciviousness which they have committed Besides the divisions, strifes, debates, envyings, wraths, whisperings, swelling, tumults, mentioned by Paul to this church. So you can see these things were in the first apostolic churches, and we, like those churches, when we find them put them out of doors. Let others do the same. For it is not given to the ministers of the Kehukee Association to know the hearts of them they baptize, nor was it given to Paul, or Peter, or else he would not have baptized Simon Magus.

From Corinth Paul sailed into Syria and came to Ephesus; from thence he sailed to Cesaria, then down to Antioch, then went all over the country of Phrygia; lastly fixes his stand at Ephesus, and fulfilled his promise to his brethren of returning to them. Here Paul stays two years, preaching and disputing in the school of one Tyrannus. And this was about the 25th or 26th year after Christ's ascension. Paul's success at Ephesus is found in Acts, 19: 5: When they heard this, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. These were the disciples he found at Ephesus, who had been baptized unto John's baptism. 19th, Many also of them which used curious arts, brought their books together and burned them before all men. 20th, So mightily grew the word of God and prevailed. Here then you see again the progress, spread, power, and prevalence of the gospel, and the establishment of another Baptist church at Ephesus; for there is as proof that there was a church here, Paul's epistle to the Ephesians and John's revelation to the angel of the church at Ephesus. Isay Baptist church at Ephesus: for here Paul finds twelve Baptists who were baptized unto John's baptism: and who could be more real Baptists than those of this order? And there is I think no doubt, but those that burned their books of magic joined in with these and formed the church at Ephesus. There is another item in the 26th verse that shows the power, success and extent of Paul's preaching: Moreover we see and hear, that not alone at Ephesus, but almost throughout all Asia, this Paul hath persuaded and turned away much people. Mark the extent—throughout all Asia, much people.

And these are not all the proofs, for there are mentioned as we have passed along, disciples at Rome, Alexandria, Cyprus, &c., Now all these churches, converts and spread of the gospel brings us up to about the 28th year after Christ's ascension. What a mighty work of salvation on the earth in 28 years!

Acts, 21: 20, gives us a clear view of the number of disciples in Jerusalem: Thou seest brother how many thousands of Jews there are which believe; and they are all zealous of the law. Here in this verse the number of believing Jews is set forth by thousands, then the number of christians in 28 yrs must have been immensely great. While Paul was purifying himself in Jerusalem, the Jews take him and carry him and bind him in the castle. He is brought before Felix, preaches before Agrippa, has his trial, appeals to Cæsar, sets sail for Rome, in his passage two hundred and seventy six are converted after the shipwreck he came to Puteoli where he found brethren, and thence to Rome where he was a prisoner two years.

Now here let us stop pursuing the history of the church and first preachers of the gospel, and recapitulate and make remarks on the past progress. The Acts of the Apostles is the first Ecclesiastical history that ever was written of the Christian church, and contains the history of the church for about thirty one years, and carries us to the reign of Nero the Roman Emperor, from whose reign I shall in a short way pursue the history of the church up to Constantine's reign 325, and so on.

Now during this 31 years the gospel had spread throughout Judea, Samaria, Galilee, and by far the greater part of Lesser Asia; through Greece and most all the islands of the Aegean sea; Cyprus, Salamis, Crete, &c.; good part of the sea coast of Africa, at Rome in Italy, Antioch in Syria, Ephesus, Joppa, Thessalonica, Berea, Derbe, Iconium, Corinth; at another Antioch, which was in Pisidia; at Saron and Lydda, &c. &c. Disciples are also mentioned at Damascus, Lystra, Troas, Athens, Tyre, Cesarea; while Jerusalem continued the head and principal seat of Christianity, where thousands are said to believe. Now then the number of churches that the scriptures tells us did exist. First, the church at Jerusalem, the mother of all true gospel churches. There is another mother, the church of anti-christ; but she is the mother of harlots, that is of all spurious churches. The church at Rome, for Paul says their faith was spoken of throughout all the world. Corinth, Galatia, Ephesus, Philippi, Colosse, Thessalonica, Crete, the church at Cenchrea, the church in the house of Priscilla and Aquilla—Sardis, Philadelphia, Smyrna, Pergamus, Thyatira, Laodicea. Here are seventeen churches that the scriptures tell us where they were, and the last six we should have known nothing about, as they are not mentioned in the history of the Acts of the apostles, had it not been for John who is the last writer of the new Testament who mentions them. Now I feel no doubt, from the mention made in the scriptures of the great multitudes that believed, much people, many people believed, &c., and the wide range of the apostles' travels in Asia and Greece and the numerous cities and places mentioned at which they preached, that there were hundreds and thousands of churches established and built up during this 31 years of their ministry. And I am confirmed in this opinion for several reasons; first, that the history of the Acts of the apostles is very limited and concise; for the first third part of that history is taken up with the transactions of all the apostles about Jerusalem; the last two-thirds leave out the preaching and acts of the twelve apostles, and pursues Paul, Barnabas, Silas, &c., in their travels and acts among the heathen. Now admit, and this you must admit, that the twelve and the seventy were not idle preachers and left all the work to Paul and his companions; no, by no means, when the express command of their master was, to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature.

Then we have no historical account in the scriptures of the success and extent of the preaching of the twelve and the seventy, except about Jerusalem, save a few incidental expressions, such as: They went everywhere preaching the word—for the persecution of the Jews and the conversion of Cornelius, opened their way to all heathen nations as well the twelve and seventy as Paul and Barnabas. And again, Colossians, 1: 23; Which was preached to every creature under heaven. Now Paul, Barnabas and Silas could not do this. This agrees with our Saviour's prediction: And this gospel of the kingdom must be first preached to all nations, and then shall the end come—which end if you will read and compare means the destruction of Jerusalem. Again, Col. 1: 6, Which is come unto you as it is in all the world. Meaning the gospel—which texts show the extent that the gospel was to be preached in the apostolic age—in all the world. Again, by Paul: Their sound went into all the earth, and their words to the end of the world. So then here is a decisive view of the extent of the preaching of the gospel by the apostles in their day, by themselves and those that were raised up under their preaching; such as, Titus, Timothy, Apollos, and no doubt a thousand others. Then I say, I think with good reason, there were thousands of churches in this wide extent—all the world.

A second reason I offer for thousands of churches in the apostolic age is, the many hundreds of thousands of christians that were destroyed throughout the Roman Empire, during what is termed the ten general persecutions; beginning with Nero, who lived in the apostolic age. For the first epistle of Peter shows and accounts the christians widely scattered in different countries, Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia and Bythinia; and no doubt in all places where there is mention made of disciples which are a great many, they followed the practice of other cities of congregating into churches. Nor can we think that the apostles left such materials scattered all over the country without building them into churches. For the word churches often occurs in the New Testament. I have other reasons, but these may suffice since there is no proof to the contrary.

However I will offer a few additional proofs of a great number of Christians in the apostolic age. Tacitus, an eminent philosophic historian, was a Roman knight by birth and was born in the reign of Nero, the very emperor Paul was brought before, and by whose orders he was beheaded. Tacitus says in his writings, this denomination had their rise from one Christus, (meaning Christ) who in the reign of Tiberius was put to death as a criminal by the procurator (governor) Pontius Pilate. At first such were only put to death that confessed themselves of this sect, (meaning Christians,) afterwards a vast multitude. The next is, the testimony of Pliny the younger, who was the governor of Pontus and Bythinia, two districts in Asia Minor; who wrote to the Emperor Trajan his complaint about the Christians, and how he should proceed concerning them. In his letter, which was written between the 75th and 80th year after Christ's ascension, the following is found: Especially upon account of the many persons who are in danger of suffering, for many of all ages and of every rank of both sexes—Nor has the contagion of this superstition (meaning the Christian religion) seized cities only, but the lesser towns also and the open country. He further complains that the gospel had so supplanted heathenism and sacrifices to the heathen gods, that those who brought to market victims for sacrifice could not find a purchaser. All which goes to show the prevalence of the gospel and number of converts. Nor is there less reason to believe that the number of Christians was less in these two provinces than others. These proofs are of more worth, because they come from the enemies of Christians.

I think the many evidences before us all fully sufficient to prove that the number of churches was very great; and that there were many thousands of Christians all over the known world; which comprehends the space of about 75 years from the ascension of Christ to Pliny. This is one thing I set out to prove by my digression.

DEAR HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH:—Why is it that we show so little concern for the Church History debt, when it has been the sacrifice of time, labor, and property for the cause of truth? Is it because our love for God and His people has grown cold? Or have we forgotten the great debt of love we owe to Him, who shed His precious blood on Calvary, that we might live? Have we lost sight of the time when we were bowed down with the weight of sin, with no eye to pity, no arm to save and His blood-bought mercy shed a halo of light around us, and filled our hearts with unspeakable joy and praise to His holy name: 'twas then we loved God's people and felt that we could do all things for His sake; and the same merciful Jesus speaks to us in flaming words, "If ye love me keep my commandments." Are we doing it? Time after time we have been reminded of this unfortunate matter that concerns not only a few of us, but the whole body of Baptists, the temple of Christ, not for our information and good, but for generations in the far future: a goodly number have already contributed liberally, but comparatively few, according to number, who claim to be Baptists. The "beloved disciple" so tenderly entreats us as little children to love one another, not only in word and tongue, but in deed and truth. "But who so hath of this worlds good, and seeing his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him? And whatsoever we ask of him, we receive, because we keep his commandments, and do those things that are pleasing in His sight." What have we that we have not received? And shall we not bear each others burdens, and fulfil the law of Christ, for He says it is more blessed to give than to receive. As ye have done to the least of these little ones, ye have done to me" and verily we shall receive our reward.

I believe with all my heart the Baptists are the chosen peopel of God, and they are dearer to me than any people on earth, but we certainly fail to do some duties that bind us to each other. I believe this debt could be paid quickly if the right step was taken, and no one hurt but better by benefitting one, who justly merits it.

Let one or more of each church, who feel interested in this matter, go out among its members and friends, and make a statement of the case to those who are unacquainted with it. I feel sure they will cheerfully help, as they are able, for I believe the fault is, because we have not given the subject enough thought. Let us not be slothful in this business, for it is the Master's business, and He tells us, "What thy hand findeth to do, do with all thy might." Let every one give as God has prospered him, and be directed by conscience, not to think of our own needs and wants, but of him who has made this great sacrifice, which none other among us has done, in defence of the gospel; and in addition has suffered the sorest bereavement that befalls mortal man. Husbands as you love your wives and children, ponder these things well, and for a moment place yourself in his condition, and think of the many responsibilities and disadvantages he must labor under in consequence of his loss; think of the little motherless children, who are deprived of Heaven's best gift, and of her who realizing her sacrifice, craved a home of her own to shelter her little ones from the storms of life, but God in his purpose and wisdom chose to give her a mansion in Heaven.

Surely it is enough to arouse us to action: May we with willing hearts, and open hands, divide with him the substance that God has blessed us with and lift this burden of debt from his shoulders, and lighten his grief-smitten heart and sure he will give God the glory on our behalf.

"So let our lips and lives express
The holy gospel we profess,
So let our works and virtues shine
To prove the doctrine all divine."

I am a poor Baptist, having but a small share of this world's goods. I am not able to buy a copy of the Church History, but I know that God gives me all that is needful for my good, and I am happiest where I can be a help to my fellow-creatures, because I know it is my Heavenly Father's will, and I mean to deny myself to help in this case, trusting to God to open a way whereby I can do it liberally and it shall be as free as the water that courses nature's brooks, when I was naked, wretched and undone, He clothed me with a robe of His righteousness, and bid me hope in Him, where if I hunger, I am fed with the sincere milk of His word, "I will give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish." With these blessed assurances I can trust Him fully for all things.

From one who feels to be the least in my Fathers' house.

TRIBULATION.

ELDER P. D. GOLD,
WILSON, N. C.

O, MY DEAR BROTHER:—I feel that in the loss of my beloved wife I have been led down into far greater depths than ever before, and that all the waves and billows of the Lord have rolled over me; but I hope that I have found the everlasting arms of Divine love underneath. How I mourn and miss my precious companion! By day and by night my eyes are fountains of tears. How gladly I would have taken her place on the bed of suffering and death, and endured for her all that she was called to endure, if it could only have been the will of our Heavenly Father! So Adam, in the strength of his natural affection, deliberately chose to go down into death with Eve; and so the Lord Jesus, with infinitely stronger love for his bride, eternally chose to come down from the throne of Glory for her, and endure all the humiliation and poverty and persecution and sorrow of His earthly life for her, and descend into the agonies and horrors of an accursed death for her sins and her salvation. I never so deeply realized the strength and indestructibility of true love before—especially that truest and strongest and most undying love in the universe, the love of Jesus for his bride, the church, the wife of the Lamb. I am thoroughly persuaded with the inspired Apostle of the Gentiles, that there is no power in the universe which can separate the poor sinner whose little hope is anchored in the blood of the Lamb from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. And I have been made to realize more than ever before a fellowship with the sufferings of my adorable Redeemer, who was most sorely smitten and afflicted and even forsaken of His God, and brought down to the level of the worm and into the dust of death, and who with strong crying and tears both in the day time and in the night season appealed and cleaved to his God, and, even in the thick and chilling darkness, clung to the Divine Throne, and exclaimed, Though thou hearest me not,

"Thou art holy, O thou that inhabitest the praises of Israel!" Psalm 22. I wonder not, O Lord, at the severity of thy judgments upon me the chief of sinners, even though thou shouldst at once consign me to eternal flames; but I marvel at the multitude and magnitude of his mercies to me, the most unworthy of thy creatures. Thou hast given and Thou hast taken away; and forever blessed be Thy holy name. Thou art as merciful in the one as in the other, if I indeed be thy child, though I cannot understand now thy dealings; and I would bow in filial and reverential subjection to thee, my Father, and kiss thy chastening rod in all its smittings, and die to self and sin and satan, and live, a partaker of thy holiness, spiritually, devotedly, and eternally to thee!

"Holy Jesus, lovely Lamb, Thine, and only Thine I am;
Take my body, spirit, soul,
Only thou possess the whole.

Thou my dearest object be,
Let me ever cleave to thee;
Let me choose the better part,
Let me give Thee all my heart.

Whom have I on earth below?
Only Thee I wish to know;
Whom have I in heaven but Thee?
Thou art all in all to me."

I feel that I can never be sufficiently thankful to the Lord for the lovely spirit and character of my dear wife, and for the blessed assurances that he has given me that she has entered into that eternal rest that remaineth for the people of God.

I have had to break up house-keeping and scatter my little family. Sister Cordelia Slade, the daughter of my father by his second wife, a member of the Church of Skewarkey, and the wife of brother William Slade, a deacon of our Church, and a merchant here, has most kindly taken Winnie, my infant daughter, and treats it as her own; and my wife's mother, sister Winnifred Woodard, of Wilson County, has my little boy Calvin, who is about a year and a half old, and my little girl Mary, who is about three and a half years old. While the separation of these three little ones from me is very painful to myself, I feel that at present it is the best arrangement I can make for them ; and I would sincerely thank those dear sisters for their great kindness. My two oldest children—Frank, who is seven and a half years old, and Charles, who is about six, I keep with myself, and I have just started them to school. I have moved to mother's place, father's old family mansion, where mother also lives, and I board there with my half-brother Walter and his family. Back home again at last, but under such distressing circumstances—my beloved wife removed to the eternal world, and my babe in another part of town, and little Mary and Calvin sixty miles away, where I can hope scarcely ever to see them except during my Summer vacation ! And yet there is not one stroke of Thy rod, O Lord, which I do not richly deserve and greatly need : and to all Thy providences, however afflictive, I would humbly say, with the meek and lowly Lamb of God, "Not mine, but Thy will be done." For thirty-three long years, Thine only, Thy perfect and Thy loving Son, was in one sense, absent from Thee and Thy courts of glory, and not for the purpose of being tenderly cared for, like my little ones, but to become the poorest and most persecuted and afflicted and sorrowful of men, to toil and suffer hunger and thirst, and weariness and cold and hatred and scorn and buffeting and spitting, and scourging and mockery and agony, and the unequalled pain and shame of a death on the bloody tree, with a vile malefactor on either hand, and with a black supernatural pall overspreading the noon-day heavens, and hiding from Him the beloved countenance of His Father—in order to accomplish the salvation of His sinful and rebellious enemies !

"Oh for such love let rocks and hills
Their lasting silence break,
And all harmonious human tongues
The Saviour's praises speak!"

And let not one murmuring tho't ever arise in my heart or in that of any of the dear children of God against any of his providential dispensations. He is not only our loving Father, but our infinitely wise Teacher, and our almighty, unchangeable, and eternal Friend : and he is most carefully and tenderly training us to loosen our hold upon the material and temporal and dying objects around us, and to fix our thoughts, affections, and desires upon the spiritual and eternal and living glories of his Heavenly kingdom. May we feel that our treasure and our citizenship is there ; may our hearts be there ; and may we be enabled by Divine grace to live the pure, humble, unworldly, patient, zealous, self-denying, reverential life of Jesus Christ our Lord.

Yours in love and deep trial,

SYLVESTER HASSELL.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD :—I was blessed to make my visit up in Moor: Co., as published in the LANDMARK, and hope the Lord had some purpose in my going—as I found a few up there who seemed to be much interested in Primitive Baptist preaching.

I was met at Sandford and conveyed to Mr. A. R. Smith's, son-in-law, of Sister Edith Matthews, the only member of our faith that I know of in the Co., I preached on Tuesday night at Juniper Springs, a Missionary house, to a goodly number of people. Some seemed to be much interested. On Wednesday the appointment was at Jonesboro at a Missionary house, and but few attended, though they seemed interested. Thursday I was at a Methodist house over in Harnett. It was Thanksgiving day and quite a number were out. Old people 60, 70 and 80 years of age who had never heard Old Baptist preaching before, gave marked attention to the Word preached, and some manifested deep interest and seemed to know and love the truth, as I trust I was enabled to set it forth in the right spirit.

Brother Gold, I am more and more convinced that we, I mean our traveling preachers should travel and preach, in such destitute sections, as we believe the Lord has a people scattered throughout the country. I feel impressed to visit such destitute places. I wish you to state in the LANDMARK that where there are destitute brethren and friends who desire preaching—as I am more at liberty now, if they will correspond with me I will by the help of the Lord visit such. I preached Friday night at the Academy near Broadway to a very attentive congregation: Saturday and Sunday at the residence of dear old sister Matthews, who is in her seventy-fifth year, a precious sister indeed. Her children are all of them friends to the Cause and some of them are blessed with a good hope; and I think if they had an opportunity would make it manifest. I would like Brother Gold, if you could have a mind to that you would visit that section. I think to visit them again the last of March. I am now engaged in teaching near Benson, and will be through the winter months. Please publish the above in the LANDMARK, as the friends up there especially requested me to write. They take the LANDMARK. I hope the Lord is blessing you with his presence and strengthening you to do His will.

Ministers feeling impressed to visit the above section can address Mr. Hardy Matthews, or A. R. Smith, Jackson Matthews, or James D. Matthews, Broadway, N. C. They will be met any time, either at Jonesboro, on the C. F. & Y. V. R. R. or at Sanford on the Raleigh and Augusta Air line.

I remain as ever your brother in love and fellowship.

J. E. ADAMS.

ELDER P. D. GOLD. DEAR BROTHER IN THE LORD JESUS:—I send you for Publication in LANDMARK the proceedings of a conference held at a new meeting house about seven miles west of this place located on the old Raleigh road. (The friends of the Primitive Baptists bought one acre of land and built on it a good frame house and gave it by deed to the Primitive Baptists.) By request of brethren, the Saturday before the 3rd, Sunday in Nov. 1888, was appointed to constitute a new church, and Elders B. Greenwood and W. R. Wiggins were requested to visit them and act as a Presbytery, when the following conference proceedings were had. After singing a hymn of praise and prayer offered up by Elder W. R. Wiggins, on motion he was chosen Moderator, and the church clerk at Sandy Grove was chosen Clerk. On motion the following church Covenant was unanimously received and approved.

We, the undersigned, being called as we trust by the grace of God unto repentance and faith in Jesus Christ, and being separated from the world by the Holy Ghost causeth us to confess ourselves Pilgrims and strangers in a strange land who seek a city that hath a foundation whose builder and maker is God, we therefore for the love we have toward each other in Christ Jesus are united in church fellowship commending ourselves to the Lord who hath promised to receive such and be their God, holding ourselves hence-forth his, no longer our own, also voluntarily and mutually give ourselves to each other and the Lord meaning to become one body jointly, to visit and jointly to act by the bond of the gospel, each esteeming themselves members of the spiritual body, accountable to it, bound to obey, subject to its control and no otherwise to separate there-from, than by consent first had. We also voluntarily engage, the Lord enabling us, to keep the faith once delivered to the saints which we do believe includes the following sublime and important doctrine, viz:—Being of a God, the trinity of persons in the God-head, the fall of Adam, and the imputation of his sin to his posterity, the corruption of human nature, and the impotence of man to do that which is truly and properly good. The electing love of God from before the foundation of the world. The covenant of Grace. Particular redemption, justification through his blood, regeneration and sanctification by the influence and operation of the holy spirit, the final preservation of the saints in Grace, the resurrection of the dead and the judgment according to the scriptures. Finally we do voluntarily and jointly engage in the strength of the Lord to do all things he hath commanded us to do that he may be with us always, particularly to deny ourselves, take up our cross and follow him in all his examples and precepts, assembling ourselves together to the worship of God, as often as we conveniently can. Attend our church conferences and keep up a gospel discipline that we may love as brethren, and submit to one another and the Lord, and also honor, maintain and obey those that shall have the rule over us as it is fit in the Lord. This is the covenant that we now enter into before the Lord and in the fear of God. In testimony whereof and in confirmation of the same we have unanimously set or ordered our names to be affixed this the 17th day of Nov. 1888.

On motion suitable rules of decorum were unanimously agreed upon and directed to be recorded in the church covenant.

On motion a door was opened for the reception of members by experience or letter, when the following brethren and sisters came and presented their letters viz :—W. L. Perry, Mary A. G. Chamblee, Mary R. Perry, N. W. Strickland and Mc D. Brantley, and were received in due form and were constituted into a church of regular Primitive Baptists with the other churches of our faith and order, and the right hand of fellowship was given them by the Moderator. The church unanimously agreed and chose Elder B. Greenwood their Pastor, and upon his accepting of the pastoral care of the church was received and the right hand of fellowship was given to him by the Moderator and brethren. Brother N. W. Strickland was then chosen unanimously to the office of Deacon and to-morrow at ten o'clock set for his ordination, and on motion Brother Mc. D. Brantley was chosen church clerk, and was received in due form. On motion it was agreed that the name of this church shall be called the Baptist church of Jesus Christ at Antioch. On motion the Clerk is appointed to write for publication in the LANDMARK the proceedings of this conference. On motion it is agreed that the time of monthly meetings is appointed to be held the third Sunday and Saturday before. After praise and prayer conference adjourned.

Sunday 10 o'clock, brother Strickland was ordained by Elders W. R. Wiggins and B. Greenwood by the laying on of hands.

MC BRANTLEY, Clerk.

ELDER P. D. GOLD, DEAR BROTHER:—Let me say through the LANDMARK to the many dear brethren and sisters whom I have met this winter, and who requested me to write to them, that I took my leave of my family on the 8th of Nov. 1888, filled all my appointments except two, from then to the 23rd of Jan. 1889, which was in the bounds of the Mayo, Abbott's Creek, Country line Little River, Black Creek, Contentnea, Toisnot and Kehukee Associations. I have never enjoyed better health in my life than I have on this trip. I was not troubled from hoarseness but very little, though I tried to preach about one hundred sermons. I returned home the evening of the 23. of Jan. 1889, found my family all well. My wives' health is better than it has been for several months. I feel that I was surely blessed on this trip. Hope that it will be my privilege to meet those dear brethren again in this world, and if not I hope to meet them where traveling over mountains, hills and valleys will not be done.

Brethren, pray for me and mine. Farewell.

VEIWS REQUESTED.

Brother C. D. Bray requests my veivs of Rom. 9: 1-4

Paul does not say he does wish himself accursed from Christ, but that he could do so.

No doubt he came nearer to Jesus in sorrow and suffering than any other disciple, and partook more therefore of the power of the gospel. For he that suffers most in the cause of truth follows Jesus the closest and is hence the greatest sympathiser. See what Jesus suffered for his people. Now Paul loved his Jewish kindred. They were dear to him. He says he has great heaviness and continual sorrow of heart for his brethren and kindred according to the flesh. He was a Hebrew of the Hebrew's, a genuine Jew, and he loved his own nation and his people.

There is that which is noble in ones loving his own people and suffering for them.

It is that principle or passion that makes men patriotic, and that causes so much self-denial. For to keep back the faults and commend the virtues of ones brethren, and to seek to help them forward, or relieve and benefit them, is noble. He that will not provide for his own has denied the faith and is worse than an infidel. Paul's brethren, the Jews, were the people that had been favored more than any other nation. Abraham was their father. Moses was their lawgiver, the prophets were of them, the oracles of God were committed to them, the royal kings, the great miracles, the temple worship, and all the great promises of the scriptures were theirs. Jesus was of the Jews, and God had chosen them and prefered them above all others, and the gospel was first preached to them. But now they were blinded, and salvation was hid from them, and wrath was coming on them unto the uttermost. Paul knew all these things, but that did not chill his care for them.

As Jesus wept over Jerusalem, foreseeings its impending and awful doom, saying O Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets and stonest them that are sent unto thee, &c. Or as David crying out for Absalom his son in his anguish saying, would to God I had died for thee." So Paul could say, that he could wish himself accursed from Christ for his brethren, his kindred the Jews, not that they are the elect of God, for they were not. The purer one is the more desire he has that others might do right, find mercy, escape punishment and attain unto happiness. If it were possible, but it was not possible, for Paul to be accursed from Christ for his brethren according to the flesh. It is perhaps as forcible a manner of expression as Paul could use to show his concern for them.

P. D. G.

BURDEN-BEARERS

"Bear ye one-anothers burdens." Gal. 6 : 2.
 "For every man shall bear his own burden."
 Gal. 6 : 5.

"From a casual view of these two declarations of the Apostle, it would seem that there is a contradiction ; but by a careful examination of the contexts their meaning is very clear. In the first instance he is discussing the importance of bearing with others in all points of weakness which are common to all, in which and through which one might be overtaken in a fault.

"Brethren, if, or although a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual restore such a one in the spirit of meekness, considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted." "Bear ye one anothers' burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ. In dealing with one who has erred from the right way those sitting in judgment, in order to do justly in the case, must keep in mind the fact that they are liable to fall through the same point of weakness to which the erring one has given way, or some other one just as effectual. There is no form of temptation, nor character of weakness to which one may be subject, but such as are common to all, or to which all are liable under similar circumstances. The reason why the world is so wholly incapable of judging the church or its members in making the necessary allowances for the weakness of the flesh is because they have not been made to see and feel all these imperfections in themselves. How ready and self-complacently a man of the world passes judgment upon a child of God. How often we hear them say: "I would not do as such a one does, or has done. He is not fit to belong to the church." And now and then we hear one who claims to have a hope say, I would like to join the church, but they keep certain ones among them whom I cannot fellowship, because I have known them to do things that I would not do. This may be all true, and yet those same ones may be christians, and those who find such unpardonable fault of them, may be guilty of worse deeds even than they. So far as the simple act is concerned we should view it in the light of the fact of our own weakness, thereby considering ourselves, lest we be likewise tempted.

When one is brought before the church under charge of being overtaken in some fault, and the charge has been sustained the matter in most cases ends there. The church cannot pass upon it any farther than to take gospel steps in bringing the case before it and ascertaining the facts; and then further action depends upon the action of the transgressor. If his conduct be such as to satisfy the church that he has turned and repented of his deed, and that he is sorry for it, and desires the forbearance and fellowship of the brethren, he must then be restored in the spirit of meekness.

Harsh dealing upon the part of the church is apt to bring forth stubbornness in the trespasser, and brings about exclusion, when kind treatment manifesting due sympathy would have brought out the proper acknowledgment perhaps and the erring brothers' restoration.

I have known instances when the church was wholly incompetent to judge the case, because of a lack of spirituality and meekness. One cannot be a proper judge of his brother while in the flesh, because he is not qualified to bear his burden. He is not prepared, nor willing to admit that he might be overtaken in the same, or a similar fault. Again, I have known instances where the aggrieved parties sat in judgment in cases where one had trespassed against one or more of the members. If the one who is grieved has the spirit of meekness and forbearance toward the offending one it will do for him to judge, but otherwise he should let the church decide. I should prefer to let the church dispose of the case, and then I should be willing to abide by its decision.

"Let such as are spiritual restore such a one." If one is spiritual then may he sit in counsel; otherwise he is not allowed to so act. For one to be spiritual is to have the mind of Christ that he may know as Christ did, the infirmities of the flesh. He was and is touched with the feeling of our infirmities; being tempted in all points as we are, yet without sin. It is when in this frame of mind that we are really able to bear one anothers burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ. He is long-suffering and is kind, and very pitiful and full of mercy. And so ought we to be toward one another. When we are free from those things with which our brother has to do, it seems very easy for us to judge as to what course he should pursue, and should he fail to take the course we adopt in our minds, we are often too ready to censure him, whereas, if we were in his position, our course might be even worse than his.

If a brother is burdened or weighted down with sorrow, trouble, or affliction we may bear his burdens by letting him know of our sympathies for him, and that we too have our burdens. Many times the child of God becomes so cast down and depressed in mind, and so filled with gloom and despondency that he concludes there is no one like him, and that his case is an outside one, and not like that which is common with God's children. But when one in whom he has confidence comes to him and tells of the same in himself, he thereby lifts from his burdened brother the cares that oppress him, and restores him to that state of reconciliation which brings rest, peace and joy, when really the burdened one has not lost his burden, but has simply taken upon him the burden of the one from whom he has received help, and thereby they bear one anothers burdens. It is often the case that the one who is burdened the most is the one who most diligently seeks to bear those of others. When we are sick and feel to be poor and needy, and for days and weeks the sunshine of hope seems to be shut out from our humble abode, it is so pleasant and refreshing to have one come to us with words of life and good cheer. They at once radiate our hearts and minds and with great love do our souls go out with thanks-giving to God, and we lay hold of the burdens of the weary ones of our Father's house, with renewed strength and vigor, and in the fullness of our desires we would gladly bear and endure all things, for the sake of him who endured the cross, despised the shame and is set down at the right hand of God who also maketh intercession for us.

There is nothing that more firmly unites and binds the people of God together than for them to be made partakers of the sufferings of Christ, and to have the spirit of meekness and forbearance, and to feel a desire of heart to bear each others burdens. It is when in this condition that they are strong in the Lord and in the power of his might. "When I am weak then am I strong." In our weakness the strength of the Lord is made perfect. Like the Butler we forget the imprisonment and sufferings of poor Joseph, while it is well with us. But when we are oppressed and seem to be threatened with some dire calamity, we remember our faults, confess them and immediately call attention to the interpreter of dreams who is in prison. When we are afflicted we are more apt to think of our brethren who are in distress, whereas we should remember them at all times and under all circumstances. Jesus told certain ones whom he had healed to tell no man, and they told it the more. Joseph who is a type of Jesus, said to the Butler when it goes well with you—that is when you are restored to your Butlership, “Remember me,” and he forgot him two full years. As we do unto one another so do we unto Jesus. As Jesus bears all our burdens in fulfilling the law, even so we should bear one another's burdens, and so, or thereby, fulfill the law of Christ.

In this idea of bearing one another's burdens it does not mean that one may put his burden upon another and himself go free of burdens, but he must bear his own and others also. Each lightens his burden by taking those of others. Jesus says, “my yoke is easy and my burden is light.” What a peculiar thought of a light burden. Christ and his people are so wonderfully the same that when they are burdened he is burdened, and their burden is his burden and therefore their burden is light when borne by each other. No one has the right to impose his burden upon another, but he does have the privilege to assume his brother's burden. Should one become selfish and attempt to bear his own burden simply, and alone, he must sink under it, because in all things there must be the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace and fellowship both in the sufferings of Christ and the conolations that come thereby, to enable one and all to endure hardness as good soldiers for Christ.

Should one conclude that he is better than his brother, and not liable to err, and that he will not assume the burden of his brethren, he declares thereby that he is something, whereas he is nothing. His judgment is not well-founded. He does not know that he is poor and miserable, blind and naked. He says: I am better than other men, better than this publican. He claims to be better than his brother because his brother is worse than he. Because my brother sins is no evidence that I am righteous. To say that I am better than my brother might not be saying much for me. It is one thing to show up my brother's faults and it is quite another thing to show myself to be faultless. One's righteousness is not built upon the ruins of others.

The child of God, when properly exercised does not rejoice at the downfall of his brother, but is made to wonder that it was not he instead of another. He is made to examine himself, and prove his own work and if he finds that he is sustained by the grace of God, then he has rejoicing in himself alone and not in another—and bears his own burden. Should he measure his perfection by the imperfection of his brother, who has fallen he would thereby do him an injury instead of doing him good. We are to do good unto all men especially the household of faith. It is a wonderful thing to be a christian.

May the Lord keep us humble.

MARRIAGE.

Married at the residence of the bride's father Mr. John Pace and Miss Victoria Brantley both of Nash County N. C. by Elder B. Greenwood.

MANY FEW.

Brother James C. Wade of Ga., requests my view of Matt. 22, 14:

"For many are called, but few are chosen."

One would suppose that all that is needed to induce one to seek first the kingdom of heaven, and to forsake all for that, would be only to hint to him that he has a chance of obtaining that kingdom. The common idea is that all men want to be saved, and are desiring that very thing. Hence people are very much surprised at us when we say that no man while following the natural bent of his mind truly desires to be saved in Jesus Christ, or by him.

In parables in this chapter it is plainly shown that the people, not only did not desire to come to the marriage feast of the son of the king, for they made light of the matter and went their own way to their merchandise, farms, or other business, and those that did not do worse, for they took the servants of the king that were sent to bid them to the feast and even slew them.

So that the king was wroth and destroyed those murderers, and burned up their city. This was done with the Jews and their city.

Then the gospel was sent to the Gentiles, or to those in the highways and hedges. When those servants went out they gathered together both good and bad. When the king came he found one at the marriage who had not on a wedding garment who when asked how he came in thus was speechless.

Surely if one is brought in aright he can tell that he was saved by grace, and can give a reason of the hope within him. For those who are taught of God can give some account of the way, but those who are not taught of God are speechless.

This man not having on a wedding garment was not a proper guest. For the king furnishes garments to all the chosen ones. He was therefore cast out as one unclean, and unfit to be there, and into outer darkness he was cast after being bound hand and foot.

While many are called with that general call that sounds in the word, but few are chosen or found complete in the preparation which is of God.

Again, many are first in their own judgment and thought, prefer themselves, yet they are rejected of God, while those who feel that they are vile in themselves and hate themselves, and feel that they are rejected and unworthy of notice, and lost in their own view, are really first or most highly esteemed in the judgment of all taught of God; for he that humbles himself shall be exalted.

P. D. G.

ONE MARK.

We profess to love one another. Do we? There is something needed among our people. Perhaps there is a suffering member of the church that needs help, or some repairing of the meeting-house needed, or you ought to give something to help your pastor who does not neglect you, but from time to time visits and serves the church. Now, when it is necessary, only a few of the members give any thing. Some who are wealthy perhaps do not give as much as some very poor ones. A few generally have to bear the burden. Who is it that loves? Is it the man who doesn't bear his part of the burden? Instead of showing his brethren that he loves them and loves the cause, he causes them to feel that he loves money more than he loves the cause of truth, and chills their love to him. For those that love the right and practice it cannot love those that do not love truth and right. A most practical test of love is to give to what is right. When it is needful to raise money, and some member or members pull back and will not help in this matter, it not only gives evidence that they do not love the church, but it gives evidence that they love money and that they are not disposed to do right. When one is added to the church he agrees to bear his part in the matter of church expenses, and when he fails to do so he has not kept his word, and throws a chill over the feelings of his brethren, and become a troubler in Israel. Do you want to bring trouble on your brethren? If you love them you do not. Then do your duty. Pay your debts. What says one, is that a debt? I thought when I joined the Old Baptists it would not cost me any thing. Do you think meeting houses grow up in the woods like trees? Do you think the poor need nothing? Do you think your preacher needs nothing to eat and wear, or do you think his crops grow without planting or cultivating.

We do not mean that the poor man should give as much as the rich man, but each should give as to his ability. Some do not try perhaps to save and have something on hand of purpose to give to good purposes.

But men that are prosperous in business often excuse themselves in not helping by saying, they have gone in debt for some land or other property, and therefore cannot help any, or the fact is their money is loaned out and they plead poverty. A man who wants to help the needy, or to bear his part of church expenses will not deprive himself of the means by loaning all his money out, or by going in debt so deep that he cannot help.

When one does not want to help he can find some excuse, and some times it is so poor he ought to be ashamed of it.

Let each one bear his part in the service and worship of God, and in the comfort of his people, and then there will be an equality and peace in the church of the living and true God.

It should be a pleasure to each member to bear his part or her part in the proper and needed expenses of the church.

P. D. G.

IS IT WISE?

When children are little some parents pet them, and humor them to any thing they can, and flatter them and dress them up with fine clothes, and spoil them, making them vain and lazy, fond of dress, self-willed, wanting their own way, and disobedient to parents, and heady and high-minded and vain.

Such parents sow some poor seeds and do some bad training when they bring up their children in that way. Start right with your children. Train them up to in the right way from the start, then you will not have so much trouble with them. It is not that we should be severe with them. But to flatter and praise them, and make them think they are better than other peoples' children, or to allow them to be idle and disobedient is wrong.

What right have I to bring up a parcel of children as vagabonds, and throw them as a burden on the country? To do this is to inflict a calamity on mankind: but if I am enabled to bring up children right so that they act a useful part here among mankind then that is a benefit to the public.

No man liveth or dieth to himself, and whatsoever we sow that shall we also reap.

Obituary.

BRYANT WILLIAMS.

Bryant Williams was born on the 23rd day of Feb. '31, and died on the 23rd day of Nov. 1887 making his stay on this earth 56 years. He never was united with any church but we believe, he was a well-wisher to the Primitive Baptist church, and was an honest, upright, peaceable, quiet man.

He was married to Mary E. Williams in the year 18— who survives him with nine children. It is sad to realize that the kind hearted noble man he was is dead; that the voice which only a few days ago was heard in our midst is hushed, the heart which throbbed in sympathy for the distressed has ceased its pulsations forever, and the form which stood among us now sleeps beneath the silent sod. Sadly do we miss him for he possessed many excellent traits of character, and was one of the kindest and most hospitable of men.

The doors of his house were ever open wide to his many friends and words of welcome always greeted them.

He was a devoted husband, and a dutiful father. It was always his aim to educate his children and fit them for the pursuits of life, but like many others death came to him in an our when he knew not and suddenly summoned him to lay down this mortal life, and to depart unto a place we hope where sin and sorrow are felt no more.

He had been in feeble health for about two years previous to his death and on the—day of Nov. 1887 he was taken seriously ill with Hemorrhagic Malarial fever, and although he was surrounded with his many friends and devoted family, and the best of medical skill, it seemed that there was no relief for him until the gate was opened for him to pass through to the great Hereafter. Not a murmur from his lips ever showed that there was a wave of trouble rolling across a peaceful breast. He was conscious to the last moment, and when at last the awful moment had come he seemed to give up the Ghost and pass away in perfect rest, and we hope has crossed the river safely and landed on that happy shore where pain and partings is no more. May he who has promised to be a husband to the widow and a fatherless comfort and sustain the bereaved ones, and enable all who feel the weight of this blow to live so that if like him we are called upon in such an hour as we think not to try the realities of another life we may be prepared for the change.

W. A. CANADY.

WILLIAM T. WILLIAMS.

Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints. Brother Gold, by the request of the brethren, and many friends, you will please publish the death of our departed brother William T. Williams. It was the practice of old to weep and lament to over the dead for awhile and then let the dead rest. We do not write for the dead, but to comfort and console the living. Yet doubtless it would have been better for some one else to write, but owing to my long acquaintance with Brother Williams who departed this life May the 28, 1888, after a few days of severe illness. There his body returned to dust from which it came, and as we hope and believe his spirit went to God who gave it. His age was seventy years wanting, a few weeks, much of his time had been spent in folly, before he was brought to the knowledge of the Truth. He was the son of John and Nancy, Williams, who were both strong believers in the Primitive Baptist faith. He was the only son that was left to provide and comfort his dear and aged mother, which I think he did willingly and cheerfully so long as she lived, yet he did many things that grieved her heart, of which she would often reprove him as any other good mother would have done, yet he never was known to give her an unkind look or word in all his life, knowing as he did she only did her duty as any good mother would have done. My own husband loved him like a brother; my children all loved him to the day of his death.

His belief was that of the Primitive faith from his youth even to old age, yet all these many years he was and alien from God and a stranger to grace.

He thought that himself was his own strong man keeping his own palace, his goods all in peace; until a stronger than he arrested him, bound him hand and foot, stripped him of all his goods, his self-will, self-confidence, which brought him very low as all that knew could plainly see, his appearance was that of a heavy laden soul.

and a great burden of a guilty conscience was his daily companion, until the grace of God, which is always sufficient, bid his soul rejoice and go in peace, still his faith was not sufficient until he had a vision of the night. In dark despair, he heard a voice saying, Arise, go down to the water and be baptized. Then he thought he rose up quickly, as the spirit bid him, and went down to the water by himself. When he got there he saw no one but himself.

There was much water, but no baptism. He went and stood by a small tree by the water-side, where he said he had stood many times and saw many go down into the water. He told me if he ever had passed from death it was in that dream. While waiting at the water to be baptized all his past life came before him, and went behind him and his soul was full of love and glory to God. His mother appeared to him. He did not tell me what she said. Owing to the falshness of his soul he could say no more, but I will tell you a few words that he said to me the morning of his baptism. The morning he was baptised there were others baptised also. He seemed not to be ready. While they were preparing to go down into the water I saw that he was not with them. I looked around and saw him standing by this same little tree. I went to him and asked him why he was not ready.

Said he, this is a lovely place to me, for it is the place where the Lord revealed himself to me, and where my dear mother came and talked with me, and now, said he I am ready and willing to follow my Lord and Master down into the water. Then he went forward and met the others coming up out of the water. Then he went down into the water and was baptized. I think he went on his way rejoicing. Then we hope the day of his death is better than the day of his birth. So for him to live is Christ and to die is gain; for blessed are the dead that die in the Lord; yea, saith the Spirit that they may rest. Then may the grace of God, that bringeth salvation, rest upon all, may he add daily to the church such as shall be saved.

Thus we bid adieu to all that are gone before.

The Purpose of Zion's Landmark.

"Ask for the old paths where is the good way."

By the help of the Lord this paper will contend for the ancient Landmark, guided by its stakes of Truth, and strengthened by its chords of Love.

It hopes to reject all traditions and institutions of men, and regard only the Bible as the standard of truth.

It urges the people to search the Scriptures, and obey Jesus the king in the holy hill of Zion, keeping themselves unspotted from the world.

It aims to contend for the mystery of the faith in God and the Father, Jesus the Mediator, and the Holy Spirit the blessed Comforter.

All lovers of Gospel truth are invited to write for it—if so impressed.

May grace, mercy, and peace be multiplied to all lovers of truth.

The Subscription Price of Zion's Landmark.

For single subscribers $2.00 per year. Clubs of eight or a larger number $1.50 each, and the getter up of club receives a copy free for the time the club is paid. ZION'S LANDMARK.

DEVOTED TO THE CAUSE OF JESUS.

P. D. GOLD, DEAR BROTHER :—You will no doubt think I am among the careless ones, which is true as I am six months in arrears. I have been taking the LANDMARK about twenty years and have heretofore about kept my dues paid up. I have often thought of the trials of editors, especially among the Primitive Baptists. It is taught in the Scriptures that the Lord's people are a peculiar people, and sometimes I fear we make ourselves peculiar in things that we ought not to ; I think that we ought to avail ourselves of all the joys, comforts, and instructions that we can reasonably and lawfully receive, and as such to me it is a great enjoyment to read our religious periodicals, yet we should not think of them more highly than we ought, but ever remember that our editors and correspondents are men and women of like passions with ourselves, remember that none are perfect only as they are perfected by the one offering of Christ. Therefore we should ever be ready and willing to serve one another in love and fear, and as such it is the duty of each subscriber to always keep his dues paid up. And while we are to ever remember that the Scriptures are the only infallible rule both of faith and practice, yet we sho'd highly appreciate every lawful medium of correspondence.

And I would herein, if I could set it in order, write some of my meditations of late on the mediation and intercession of Christ for his people. "Mediator," (middle man,) one with God, one with men, "That they all may be one, as thou Father art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us." Jno. 17 : 21. This is unity set forth in the prayer of the Son of God, and in him we see the work of mediation righteously and gloriously wrought. As he is the "Root and offspring of David, the bright and morning star," "A fountain opened, (the way manifested,) unto the house of King David, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem." O, how far from God, in his pure and holy character are poor, lost sinners, dead in trespasses and sins, under the law of sin and death, "Wherefore then serveth the law? It was added because of transgressions, 'til the seed should come to whom the promise was made. Ordained by angels in the hand of a Mediator. Christ in his flesh is the seed of the woman, the seed of Isaac, the seed of Israel, the seed that God hath blessed, "And if ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise," "Behold, a Virgin shall conceive and bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel. Isa. 7 : 14.

God is one with us in the person of Christ, and we are one with God in Christ. So our sins are his, and his righteousness is our righteousness, and so he suffered for us, the just for the unjust. For in that he died unto sin once, and in that he liveth, he liveth unto God. Jesus as the fulfiller and representative of his people, died for their sins, according to the Scriptures, and rose again for their justification. This was done upon religious and righteous principles, by virtue of his unity with his people. So justice has ever looked to him as surety for the salvation of Israel, as it is written, "Mercy and truth are met together : righteousness and peace have kissed each other.

Truth shall spring out of the earth, and righteousness shall look down from heaven." Ps. 85 : 10. Thus we see that the mediation of Christ brings heaven and earth together, mercy and truth, righteousness and peace, God and men. Then how beautiful and glorious is this salvation, every grace in it is harmonious, and all works together for good to them that love God, by grace given in Christ before the world began. In the fullness of the time he was made of a woman, made under the law, one with his people, manifestly bearing their sins. Well might the apostle say, "God who is rich in mercy." But truth must spring up or out of the earth, and Jesus Christ the anointed Saviour must suffer and die; as he said to Pilate, "To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world that I should bear witness with the truth." Look at him and behold every divine perfection of the god-head, and also behold him as a man of sorrow and of grief. Every jot and tittle of the law must all be fulfilled in him. And in due time when we were without strength Christ died for the ungodly. Was ever love like this, was ever grace so free. Then truly, "Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth," "And ye shall know the truth, (saith Jesus) and the truth shall make you free." First, it is evident both from Scripture and the experience of every child of God that none but God can teach us these truths. For it is written "All thy children shall be taught of the Lord." In our experience God is revealed to us as being, "holy, holy, holy" and the law finds us unholy, and works wrath, gives knowledge of sin, causes the offence to abound and is the strength of sin, accuseth us unto the Father, and condemns us, "But where sin abounds grace much more abounds," and this great joy is realized by the children of God, because it is the condemned that are justified, the lost found, the sinner saved. Boasting is excluded, and we glory in the Lord. And now we can and do know the truth, and the truth makes us free indeed, for Jesus is "Full of grace and truth and of his fullness have we all received and grace for grace."

And now dear child of God, I wish to present to you some of the many duties as I understand that are required of you, for you are not under law to Moses but under grace, and under the spiritual law of God in Christ, you have passed from death unto life, "For Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true; but into heaven itself now to appear in the presence of God for us."

As Paul saith to the Romans, "It is Christ that died, yea rather that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God who also maketh intercession for us." Then should we glorify God, in our works of obedience to him, remember that as the Father appointed unto his Son a kingdom on earth, even so hath Jesus appointed unto his people a kingdom and as he honored his Father so we should honor him, for the law of God is written in the heart, and we have an unction from God to love one another, and to all good works. Everything needful is taught us in the Scriptures, and it does seem to me a little strange that Primitive Baptists should ever be so careless, so thoughtless, as to turn again to the weak and beggarly elements of the world, and to be brought into bondage again. Do we not remember how we were once in bondage under all the rudiments of the world. But now being dead with Christ, or through Christ, from all these things, let us touch not, taste not, handle not, which all are to perish with the using.

I know that the people of God are to be a separate people from all the nations of the earth, and that they should dwell alone, and shall not be reckoned among the nations of the earth, and their laws are diverse from all other people. The doctrine of grace is only known by the Lord's people. Often other people speak as though they believed in the doctrine of grace, but their own speech betrayeth them. Grace only excludes boasting and exalts God. Then we do not speak of grace only as a theory, but from experience and a knowledge of the principles of grace in our hearts, "Then let your speech be always with grace seasoned with salt," walk as becometh the children of grace. Salvation by grace, that is the election of grace, grace given in Christ before the world began, and manifested to the heirs of promise in time is the most sublime and rich theme that ever engaged our mind or pen. And also it humbles us and prepares us to sit at the feet of Jesus and praise his holy name, and it is then we are enabled to cry out as did Moses and say, "The eternal God is thy refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms, and he shall thrust out the enemy from before thee," Deu. 33 : 27.

It is then by faith we can embrace Jesus in all his fulness, and glory in tribulation, knowing that "tribulation worketh patience, and patience experience, and experience hope, and hope maketh not ashamed."

O may the sweet distilling influence of the doctrine of grace ever abide in our hearts, and keep us humble and as little children, and as such serve one another in love and fear.

F. M. CASEY.

ELD. L. H. HARDY, DEAR NEPHEW :—At your request I write what I hope the good Lord has done for my poor soul, which all of God's dear children know is an impossibility, for if such a thing was possible they would have to keep a pencil in their hand and write all the time and then get so far behind they would become ashamed of themselves and stop and exclaim : Lord how shall I ever repay thee enough, or repay thee for the least one of thy great blessings, much more for them all.

I never have heard one of these little children exclaim (like some) "if I do a little wrong and become indebted to God I can read a chapter or two and say a prayer, and then God will be under obligations to me for my good deeds," not knowing that he is accountable to God for everything, for the wrong done, and also for the great privilege and blessings of enabling him to read those chapters and commit that prayer to memory that some body else had written probably for speculation which is not acceptable with God.—Neither indeed can be, for anything of the flesh or of a selfish nature God does not accept. Prayer that is acceptable is of a broken and contrite heart, the stony heart must be broken and made to feel there is no strength in it and that it is all of God, and that the desire as well as the prayer, must come from the self-same source and that it must all come by and through Jesus and for Christ's sake, not of us or anything we have or can do. But it is all of Jesus, he has done it all, took the whole debt and responsibility on himself, paid it, and the record shows that it is paid and canceled by him, that the children are free, then they can sing the song (and all of one sound) of deliverance and ascribe all the honor, praise and glory to him who is worthy to receive it, and do not want any themselves for they feel totally unfit to receive any of it, yea, not worthy to be called a child, much more to be an heir and joint heir with the one that has done so much for him, his best friend, the one that has paid this enormous debt of ten thousand talents when he had not a farthing to pay it with. Then who would dispose of such a legacy even if he could. Suppose for a moment that one could have a mind to do so, what part do you suppose he would dispose of? Why it would be the very portion that Jesus occupies, for this mind would be of the devil, and that is the chief desire of the devil to dethrone Jesus.

I say there is no chance or desire to dispose of this heirship for none knows what part or lot is his, nor will know until the last heir is brought into this kingdom, then I have no idea he would if he could dispose of it, for, who would want to part with such a happy band singing praises as we think this band will be? Not I, I hope, if it is my good fortune to be counted one in that number, for I had rather be a door keeper for such a happy band of little children than to dwell in the fine allurements of sin that are held out by the devil.

You see I have deviated somewhat from the subject thus far, but I have no

apologies to offer, for I have written as my mind led and dictated and if it is led by the right spirit it will be of some consolation to some little one, and if led by the opposite it will only prove how it is led, and may God have all the glory. I was born 31st day of August 1842, of sinful parents, though they were both members of the Primitive Baptist profession or faith, not only them, but my grand-father, and great-grand-father by father's side were of the same belief and held official positions in the church. My father was a minister and held in high esteem by the brethren, and was blest with a wonderful portion of revelation, though people say the days of revelation and miracles are past, it so he was blest with some supernatural power more than most people, for there is many living witnesses who can testify to some. I refer to these things to show that if there was or is such a thing as ones being born without sin I ought to have stood a chance, as many claim, that Christ done away with the Adamic sin upon the cross, and that no one is a sinner until he is old enough to know right from wrong. My parents were both professors and possessors long before I was born, and I feel thankful that I am of such a parentage, but that did not keep me from being a sinner, for I was born a sinner, and there was enough of the Adamic sin in me to forever banish me from the presence of God if I had never committed a single sin. If Christ done away with the original sin what kills the infant? History tells us more than one half of the human family die under seven years old, and they are not accountable before eight or twelve years old, then what becomes of them? Christ came not to save the righteous but sinners. I feel my case was different, I was born a sinner, and am a sinner yet, for the very things I would do, I do not, and the things I would not do, them I do. I feel it is almost needless to say I was raised morally. I was not allowed to associate with anything to lower morality, visiting towns, bar-rooms, ball rooms, parties &c. I was taught morality was one thing and christianity was another, that it was everybody's duty to be moral and to lead a quiet, sober, and truthful life.— I will have to pass over many things as space will not allow, which you are personally acquainted with, and probably might not be of much interest to others, and come down to the year 1880 or 1881 when through some unseen power I felt all was not well, though I had always believed the Primitive Baptists were correct and felt a desire to secrete myself and try to pray but did not know how for I never had tried to memorize a prayer, and if I had it would have done no good for a multiplicity of words is not prayer except they be of the heart, so all of my words were nothing, carried no weight that they were acceptable with the Lord but with their own sinful weight would fall to the ground proved all of my goodness was nothing. I could look at others and see a chance for them but none for me; the beasts, trees all seemed to be abiding in the sphere that they were made in, but man the top-most, the last the finishing piece of God's creation whom he had made in his own image or likeness the only living creature that was made to walk upright, to whom dominion was given over all creatures upon the earth or in the waters to whom he gave a law but who had violated that law, and in so doing became a dead sinner, and I felt to be the worst. God had blest the family for many generations, but alas for poor me there was no hope. The day had passed. I had been in feeble health for sometime and was taken down and remained several days. My wife wanted me to send for the Doctor, but I told her he could do me no good, that I had no fever, and that if he came he would want to know what was the matter and I could not tell him. I could lie on the bed and look out upon the beautiful trees and it seemed every leaf in its swaying to and fro was praising its Creator and abiding in its place, but alas, poor me, a most miserable creature who was ten thousand talents in debt and had not a farthing with which to pay, what would become of me; if I could only exchange with the trees, or had died when an infant, but all was gone now. I could not say Father, in trying to pray, but Master everytime. Several of the brethren came over to see me on Saturday night of the June meeting. Elder J. W. Gardner read a portion of Scripture, then used hymn, "Father I stretch my hands to thee," &c., then asked God through his son to continue his blessings: next day, Sunday, I felt much better and wanted to go to meeting, but I was afraid to go as I had not sat up any for several days. I continued to improve and got up. These words came with force from some source I could not tell where "why tarriest thou, arise and be baptized" and continued with force. I offered to the church the July following. After I was received there came trouble inexpressible that I was deceived and had deceived those good people, this was a trying time, it seemed I could not feel worse if I had been going to a dear friend's burial. Much more might be said, but fearing I will worry you I will stop. May our heavenly Father guide his dear children and shield them from all harm and gently lead the feeble ones into green pastures and at last receive them into that happy band where parting will be no more. Pray for me and mine. Yours as ever,

A DREAM, OR THE EXERCISE OF MIND WHILE ASLEEP.

I thought I was in my room and saw a smoke on the wall, and I said, open the door, and I was the first one to the door, and I looked southward and I saw a cloud reaching to the North and shining like gold, and in the cloud I saw Jesus wearing a shining crown, and said my Saviour, and clapped my hands and said, O my Saviour, and I thought I never sung before nor since that time, as I sung then, "Jerusalem, my happy home," &c., I thought I was in my room again and my husband called me out of the house and told me to come there and see the Apostle Peter: he and others had come to talk with us about the shining cloud, and we were all sitting on the ground wondering and talking about it, and I looked toward the East and saw Jesus coming in the air to us with a light in his right hand. He looked like I thought he did when about twelve years old, and his beautiful face I cannot forget. I said again, Savior, Savior, O my Savior. I thought my husband fell with his face to the ground and said, "my time has come, I am going," I thought I said, we are all going, our time has come, and I am glad, glad, I am so glad. I thought that Jesus carried us to a large house and there were only a few of us. I did not know any of them but my mother. We were all standing in a round ring, and Jesus in the midst, and he had a large cup in his hand, and we all drank of it: but when he came to my husband he gave him the cup in his hand, and he asked him why he gave him the cup to drink that way? Why not let him drink like the others? Then I thought Jesus asked him when he joined the church, but I do not know the answer. Then I thought he asked me when I joined the church, and I told him when my husband did. Then he held the cup in his own hand and gave him drink. Then I thought that Jesus and my husband walked upon a place above the floor, seated themselves side by side, both dressed in white and both looking in a little square Book: while they were looking in the book I looked to my left. I saw ladies dressing and undressing, taking off fine hats and putting on riding hats, and thought I did they think they would go to heaven that way. I thought that Jesus would put us all to sleep and then our souls would fly to heaven, then Jesus came down and told the ladies to follow him and they went out at the door. Then I thought a pale-faced woman came to me wearing a calico bonnet, and said, "don't I wish Martha was here," and I said where is she? she hung herself behind the kitchen. Then I awoke and rose upon my feet so delighted with my dream. This took place with me the second Sunday night of August 1885. I do not feel satisfied not to have it published, that the brethren, sisters, and friends may see something of the exercise of my mind. Since that time my husband has been chosen and ordained deacon of the church at Pleasant Grove, Caswell Co., N. C., where our membership is, and is bearing the cup to the children of God. Your little sister I hope.

PART 2.

ON SELF-MADE MINISTERS.

The second thing I intended to prove by my digression was that these seventeen churches were all Baptist churches; and if they were, there can be no doubt that the rest planted by the apostles and first preachers were. The gospel of Mark places the beginning of the gospel of Christ as commencing with John the Baptist, Mark 1: 4: John did baptise in the wilderness; and preach the baptism of repentance—verse 5: And there went out unto him all the land of Judea, and they of Jerusalem, and were all baptised of him in the river of Jordan, confessing their sins. This is the first account of baptism found in any history in the world. How was it performed? The text is plain—in the river of Jordan—not with a basin, pitcher, pail, nor porringer, nor gourd. Then sprinkling nor pouring could not be the mode of John's baptism, because those who sprinkle or pour don't go in a river to do it; they do it out of a river, so do not follow the pattern given as performed in the first instance. What kind of persons were baptised? Those that confessed their sins—then of course no children here, for they know nothing about confessing of sins.

A second proof and a second time, verse 10: And Jesus when he was baptised went up straightway out of the water. This was in the same river. John, 3: 23: And John also was baptizing in Ænon, near to Salim, because there was much water there: and they came, and were baptised. This one text outweighs in my mind all the quibbles and arguments ever produced by pe-dobaptists. For here we are told why John baptised in Ænon, because there was much water. Then it required much water for John to baptise, and you will not doubt he well understood the mode. His baptising in Jordan also proves the fact that he required much water; for this was in a river where there was also much water, as in Ænon. This proves to a demonstration that the first mode of baptism was not sprinkling: because it does not require much water to sprinkle or pour—a little and not much will do. Again, the baptism of the Eunuch proves the same fact. They went down both into the water, both Philip and the Eunuch, and he baptised him—and when they were come up out of the water, &c. Now this shows us that the apostles baptised in the same way John did; for John went into the water to perform baptism, so did Philip. Christ went into the water, or else it could not be said he came out of it. Here then we see plainly that sprinkling nor pouring neither is not baptism, according to John's nor the apostolic mode; for these went down into the water to perform baptism; but sprinklers nor pourers don't do so. So I say sprinkling is not even a shadow of the example of baptism, much less baptism itself. Then this point is proved that the apostles baptised in the same manner John did; and that was by going into the water to baptise, and there baptising. And I say, according to the scripture there is no such thing as being a Baptist without going into the water. Do this you must, whether you pour, sprinkle, or immerse, to be a baptist, for the example is clear. But I will warrant you, whenever the preacher and the candidate become humble enough to do this, fifty to one if he then don't immerse; which must be the right mode from these words: Buried with him by baptism into death. Immersion is the only mode of which this text can be applied, for there is no likeness between pouring and sprinkling and a burial, but in immersion there is.

But the apostles were Baptists as well as Christ, for he was a Baptist baptised in Jordan by John, who had a command from God to baptise and was he tells us sent to baptise; and therefore it was righteousness in John to administer it, and righteousness in Christ to submit to it; and so, as he said, it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness. If Christ himself would not preach before he became a Baptist surely he would not send his disciples to preach before they were baptised. Should you ask who baptised them? I shall answer, that some of John's disciples, which were Baptists, went over to Christ and followed him. John 1. 35: Again the next day after, John stood, and two of his disciples; 36. And looking at Jesus as he walked, he saith, behold the Lamb of God! 37. And the two disciples heard him speak, and they followed Jesus. One of them was Simon Peter's brother named Andrew, who also was one of the twelve. By these two disciples I suppose the ten were baptised, for it is said: Though Jesus baptised not, but his disciples. Then it is proven I think plain enough again, that John's baptism was the baptism that the apostles practised: as two of John's disciples were among the twelve, they surely practised the same mode by which they themselves were baptised by John; and as they were baptised in a river, or where there was much water by John, it is reasonable to believe that the apostles also followed the same practice of baptising in rivers and where there was much water; and that they baptised the ten, and continued after this mode wherever they made disciples.

You cannot believe that God gave John three modes of baptism, or his that he left it to John to choose any mode, or that he might choose the mode he pleased, or that any mode would do; for if John had a command from God to baptise that command must express the mode, else how would John go about or know how to obey the command and perform baptism, since it had never been performed before, nor had he ever read it in any book or seen it performed? So then it is clear God gave him the mode, and he knew how it was to be performed, in a river. And God also gave him to know the subjects of baptism, for he preached the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins. So that his very preaching set forth the subjects of baptism. Question. Had John a right to alter the mode, or had the church, or had any man—or the subject for baptism? I will answer this question, by stating another: Has any subject a right to alter the law of his king, or any servant to alter the command of his master, or a child his parent's command, although he may dislike it? You are forced to answer, No. Then how dare any man alter the mode of baptism, so as not to baptize in rivers, or where there is much water? He that does it is culpable to the great God. How dare any man to alter the subjects of baptism from those that confessed their sins, those that gladly receive the word, those that believe, to children as subjects of baptism. You have as much right to alter the laws of your State voluntarily and of your own accord, without the concurrence of a majority, and more so. God will hold you accountable for such an offence against his majesty. Have a text, Matthew, 5. 19: Whosoever therefore shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so, he shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven. 15. 6: Thus have you made the commandment of God of none effect by your tradition. So in one case, so in all, Matthew 15. 9: But in vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men. Revelation, 22. 18: If any man shall add unto these things God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book. Surely these four texts ought to satisfy man of the danger of altering God's doctrine or ordinances. Then to teach infant sprink ling is a doctrine of men; or to teach sprinkling or pouring for baptism for the commandment of God is the doctrine of men; since no such a mode of baptism is found in the New Testament. For if any man can find that John the Baptist, Jesus Christ, or the apostles ever baptised an infant, or that either of them sprinkled or poured for baptism, I will give that man my horse and gig. So that then infant sprinkling is a vain worship, pouring is a vain worship, and a making of none effect the command of baptism in a river, or much water of none effect; because these are traditions, both pouring and sprinkling, and the commandments of men in such a practice, since there is not one sentence of such a practice in the New Testament, which holds the commands of Jesus Christ to his ministers and church, and in that alone is the law for the church of God to be found. So the apostles were river and much water Baptists, and not basin Baptists: this is clear.

Matthew, 28. 19: Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptising them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Verse 20: Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you. Among these commands is that of baptism. Now do you think that the apostles could teach any other baptism than that of John's, which was baptising in a river or where there was much water? No, for two of them had just been baptised by John themselves. They knew also that Jesus was baptised in a river, Philip practised the same baptism on the Eunuch, in a certain water; and you can't prove this was not much water or a river. Nor can you prove in one instance in the New Testament that any man or woman was ever baptised but in a river, or where there was much water. A great deal has been said about the jailor and house—was there not a river hard by the city of Philippi, where Paul and Silas went when prayer was wont to be made? Was it not as nigh for Paul to go and baptize Lydia and the jailor, as it was to go and pray? Think on it.

So then after the mode is given by John the Baptist and Philip, and the subjects given such as confessed their sins, gladly received the word, I believe Jesus Christ is the Son of God, can any man forbid water that these should not be baptised as well as we believe and were baptised, he that believeth and is baptised shall be saved—can any man be so blind and so prejudiced as not to see that the subjects of baptism are believers, and not children nor unbelievers. Dark must be that man's mind, or God has sent him strong delusion that he should believe a lie that he might be damned; because he has pleasure in the unrighteousness of his pride, cavilling and disobedience.

Now if the apostles had the mode, and many examples of baptism in the river and much water—and if they themselves had thus been baptised, and if they were the subjects themselves, they must know the fit subjects of baptism. Now let us examine: first, the church of Jerusalem. Was this church a Baptist church? The apostle Peter stood up and said over the names of this church, and they were an hundred and twenty. Were they Baptists? Surely, for the apostles, or at least two of them, were river or much water Baptists; of this we are sure, as there is nothing to prove the rest were not, but a strong presumption they were all the same sort, and the balance of the hundred and twenty besides the twelve, as the church of John was to decrease, and the church of Christ was to increase. There is not much doubt that many or all these were John's disciples, since John was beheaded; and we read but of one preacher of John's order besides the two that came over to Christ, and that was Apollos, and he came over after the instruction of Aquilla, there is not much doubt; and twelve disciples of John's, found at Ephesus, to whom Paul gave the Holy Ghost. Here seems to be an end of the church of John. But to prove the fact, what sort of persons were added to this church, such as gladly received the gospel by the mouth of Peter, these were baptised. So you see it must be a Baptist church for these were baptized before added to the church; because it is said, the same day about three thousand souls were added to the church. And although it is not said whether they were baptized in a river, pond or creek, pool or font, that does not alter the case at all, since the mode is given in the scripture in several places, and the subjects in a great many places, and the administrators also. Is it not fair reason and just to say, that in whatever place water baptism is mentioned in scripture, it refers to the mode and subject as had been practised by John and the apostles, where example and mode were plainly pointed out in the scriptures; and after the manner that they themselves had been baptized, in a river or much water? I think so, for although in a great many places mention is made of many being baptized, yet no mention is made how it was done; yet surely we are to understand it as according to the mode and subject, where the scripture has pointed it out. And in the case of Philip and the Eunuch, and John's baptizing, there is not a stone left unturned to show the mode and subject of baptism. Were any of these children? No, they were men and women: infants could not be pricked in the heart by Peter's preaching, nor could they gladly receive the word.—And to prove this point once for all, let Peter, who is the preacher here, define baptism and its use: 1 Peter, 3:21: Baptism is not the putting away the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God. Can infants be conscious about baptism, or it be to them the answer of a good conscience toward God? Why you ought to know better. Then they are not the subjects of baptism, nor were there any in this church; but a Baptist church of believing men and women, I think fairly proven; baptised on hearing, believing, and gladly receiving the word,

Let us next come to the church at Corinth. Acts, 18:8. And many of the Corinthians hearing believed, and were baptised. 1 Cor. 1:12. And were you baptised in the name of Paul?—Here is fair proof that the church of Corinth was a Baptist church of believers, and they were baptised after they heard and believed. No infants here, for infants could not believe Paul's preaching, and are not fit subjects of baptism.

Next the church of Ephesus. Acts 16:3. And he said unto them, unto what then were ye baptised? And they said, unto John's baptism. Paul on coming to Ephesus found these twelve men that had been baptised with John's baptism, which was a river and much water baptism. These then were Baptists of the right kind, and were believers, for it is said in the 4th verse: John taught the people, saying unto the people, that they should believe on him which should come after him, that is on Christ Jesus. So then John taught faith in Christ as requisite to baptism, and these were baptised in that faith. After this, many by Paul's preach and working miracles, that used curious arts brought their books and burned them; which drew from Luke, the historian of the Acts, this reflection, verse 20; So mightily grew the word of God, and prevailed. And although no mention is made of those being baptised, yet I think there can be no doubt but they were, and joined in with the twelve; and the reason I offer for it is, that there was a church at Ephesus, which is proved by Paul's Epistle to that church found in the scriptures. Then I think the proof is strong, it was a Baptist church of much water.

Next we come to the church at Philippi. That this was a Baptist church is fully clear, for Lydia and house, and jailor and house were baptised, you will not dispute, and were the first fruits of Paul's preaching at Philippi, Paul's epistle to the Philippians as recorded in the scriptures proves beyond doubt; and if the converts in the church were baptised, why not all? I see no reason. So then this was a Baptist church beyond doubt.

I forbear giving further proofs; not because they cannot be produced, but because I am too far swelling this piece. For if there is satisfactory proof from scripture then these four were Baptist churches, of which I consider the proofs fully sufficient, then it follows as a matter of course that the other thirteen mentioned in scripture were; and all the hundreds and thousands of churches that were all over the world, as the gospel had been preached in all the world and to every creature under heaven, and the sound gone into all the earth, and the words of the gospel by the apostles to the end of the world; there must have been thousands of churches, and they all river and much water Baptist churches. For we hardly believe that if the apostles planted these churches and that they were Baptists, that they planted any church of any other sort than that of Baptist.

But it may be asked, what kind of Baptists were they, since there are so many sorts in this day? I think the proofs offered are fully sufficient to prove that there was but kind of Baptist in the apostolic age; all others have arisen since. For we must believe as the apostles had all been baptized by one mode, that they all practised one mode in all countries where they went. For the scripture by an apostle tells us: One Lord, one faith, and one baptism. And as they had but one baptism, I contend that they had but one mode among them. Stop, says the Quaker, there were two baptisms; the baptism of water, and that of the Holy Ghost; and we contend for the baptism of the Holy Ghost, for he that was to come, that is, Christ, was to baptise with fire and with the Holy Ghost; so we say that done away water baptism, and now the one baptism means the baptism of the Holy Ghost, and that is all that is necessary. This is a mistake of yours. Acts, 18, there you find twelve men baptised by John's baptism, who received the Holy Ghost by lay on the hands of Paul after water baptism. This agrees with John's testimony of Christ, that he should baptise with the Holy Ghost. But there is a text that sweeps your opinion away like chaff. Acts, 10: 47. Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Ghost as well as we? 48. And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord. Here you see as plain as the nose on your face, that water baptism came after receiving the Holy Ghost; then how is Holy Ghost baptism the one baptism or how is it sufficient if water baptism must come after it? So then I think it is clear that water baptism is the one baptism alluded to, and the apostles always used it as the one baptism, even after the Holy Ghost had been received.

Then Cornelius and his house were both Holy Ghost and water Baptists too, and these are the right kind of Baptists, for the Holy Ghost enables the sinner to believe; yea, as the scripture hath said, we believe according to the working of his mighty power, then after that they are baptized.

Simon Magus is said to believe and was baptized; but he was not a Baptist of the right kind, for he was a money baptist, as many are now-a-days. Judas was no doubt a Baptist, but he also was a money Baptist, and of the same bad kind.

It takes something more to make an apostolic Baptist, or what I call a genuine Baptist, than to go into the water and be baptized by immersion; for it is said of the first Christians: And they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine, in breaking bread and prayers. A man that don't believe apostolic doctrine has no business in the Baptist church, and is not steadfast therein; and why? because Paul says: A man that is a heretic, after the first and second admonition, reject. Who would or did the apostles call heretics, but such as did not believe their doctrine: these of course, as they had the true doctrine and none else but they. And again, John—If any man come unto you and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your houses, neither bid him God speed—alluding to the apostles' doctrine. And again, Paul—Though we or an angel from heaven preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed that is put off from the church. This is enough to show you that a man to be a Baptist of the right kind must believe apostolic doctrine; or what is the foundation or fundamental doctrine they taught. It is contained in the New Testament in the epistles, very plain and positive.

The summary of apostolic doctrine, or fundamental principles, is, I conceive, as follows: First, that God is love.—This is the foundation head, the first cause, sole because of all the blessings of the gospel, and man's salvation and eternal happiness. And that this love of God to his people is 1st, sovereign; 2d, incomprehensible; 3d, inconceivably great; 4th, everlasting under all circumstances; 5th, unchangeable, forever the same; 6th, free to us and undeserved by us; 7th, boundless and infinite, passing all understanding; 8th, that it is a bestowed love to make us the sons of God. In which love of God to us is no shadow of a turn. All this is easily proved from the writings of the apostles.

2d. That God did before the foundation of the world, or ere man was created, foreknow and foresee the end of all creation; and that man would fall and become a sinner; and in consequence of this foreseeing and foreknowing that men would become sinners, he did therefore by this foreknowledge before the world began—Acts, 2. 23: Him, being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and slain. Then from this text it was determined by God's foreknowledge, that Jesus Christ should die for the sins of men. 1 Peter, 1. 20: this foreknowledge did God see begotten through sanctification of Abraham the sprinkling of blood, or Paul, but of Christ. Then before the devil that is, before the spirit of the devil made, God, the sense that this wicked ing sanctified come from him who is blood, beginning a liar and a murderer, this wicked spirit did not come from God, and that it was this lying, murderous Spirit that always prompted them to act, and in that sense the devil was their father, and they always did

BROTHER GOLD:—I would like to have your views on Gen. 3 : 14, 16, also on John 8 : 44, as they are darkness to me. Brother Gold, I would like to hear you preach if it was so I could, but I am feeble and don't get to hear the truth from the pulpit often. I could hear self-made preachers often, but it is no food for me.

Remarks :

"And the Lord God said unto the serpent, Because thou hast done this, thou art cursed above all cattle, and above every beast of the field; upon thy belly shalt thou go, and dust shalt thou eat all the days of thy life."

"no other is the one who multiply thy sorrow as Jesus is. thy sorrow desire Father are one. desire over"

In the regeneration, wherein Jesus makes all things new, the chosen vessels of mercy are born of God, or born again, and they who by nature are children of wrath even as others, no difference, are quickened together with Christ and born of incorruptible seed by the word of God that liveth and abideth forever. As born of God they cannot sin. As led by the Spirit of Jesus they cannot sin: but they are still beset with a fleshly nature, and in that character as sons of Adam they do sin. But as Jesus came to destroy the works of the knowledge of him except as a murderer. We have no authority from the bible to consider that the devil or serpent was anything but a murderer, a destroyer or devil. Some claim that the devil was once an angel of light, but we have no evidence from the bible that he was ever anything but a murderer. For Jesus says he was a murderer from the beginning. There is nothing anterior to or beyond the beginning, nor is there any wisdom in prying into that which is beyond the record. We do well to give heed to what is written and revealed. There is nothing beyond the limit of that which is revealed to afford any foundation on which to rest a theory: nor do we need theories. There is no need of theories or speculation on bible truth. Of all sources of truth none are so complete as the bible. All speculation, or conjecture is excluded from the bible which is full of truth. Those who love truth find a most enduring foundation and abide. Here they rest on the solid foundation of truth. Behold then the folly of such as build theories of their own imagination and seek to prove them by the bible. One seeks to suborn baptisms; the false witness, and that of the Holy Ghost into the baptism of the Holy Ghost, for he that was to come, Jesus, Christ, was to baptise with fire and with the Holy Ghost; so we say that done away water baptism, and now the one baptism means the baptism of the Holy Ghost, and that is all that is necessary. This is a mistake of yours. Acts, 18, there you find twelve men baptised by John's baptism, who received the Holy Ghost by lay on the hands of Paul after water baptism. This agrees with John's testimony of Christ, that he should baptise with the Holy Ghost. But there is a text that sweeps your opinion away like chaff. Acts, 10:47. Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy and his lusts ye will do." The serpent wholly controls the wicked in the sense that his lust, or spirit prompts them, and is their motive in what they do.

3rd, He is their father, not in the sense that they are not the descendants of Adam, for they are Adam multiplied, but in the sense that they are controlled by Satan who works in them. While God works in his children both to will and to do of his good pleasure. The Prince of the power of the air is the spirit that now works in the children of disobedience. Because they are of their father the devil, his works they will do. As Jesus did the work of God, his Father, because the child follows and obeys its father, so these carnal Jews did the will of their father the devil. What else would any do than to do the will of his father whether good or bad. By father here is meant one that communicates his spirit or principle to his child. As Jesus possessed the spirit of his Father and therefore did the will of God always. Jesus said to the Jews, if ye were Abraham's children ye would do the works of Abraham. By this is meant more than to be the natural child of one. For we know that many literal natural children often do not the will of their natural fathers. For instance the father may be a sober man, but the child may be a drunkard; the father may do second Adam and the child the opposite. For we know that the spirit of the apostles, such as did not believe, were of these of course, as they were of the doctrine and none else but of the father again, John—If any man receive you and bring not this doctrine, such that him not into your houses, neither in the him God speed—alluding to the apostles' doctrine. And again, Paul the apostle, Though we or an angel from heaven preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed—that is put off from the church. This is enough to show you see yourself truly as you are you see Adam.

Now Jesus said to the Jews, "Ye are of your father, the devil, and his lusts ye will do." The reason they did the lusts of the devil was because he was their father. What think you of those people who teach that all people are naturally the children of God? I heard one of the leading preachers of the Missionary Baptist denomination, in 1887, at Asheville, N. C., (Basil Manly, one of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary teachers at Louisville, Ken., and has been one from the beginning of that school, to teach men to preach.) He said in speaking from the text of the prayer Jesus taught his disciples to pray that every body on earth had the right to call God Father. If so what becomes of the words of Jesus, "Ye are of your father, the devil." Can one be both a child of God and a child of the devil in that sense?"

To be a child of the devil is to have his spirit, or serpentine, corrupt principle in one. These Jews were naturally and literally as much the children of Abraham as David was, or as Paul was; but the spirit of these Jews was of the devil, and in that worst of all senses they were a generation of vipers, a seed of evil-doers, sons of Belial, or children of the wicked one, the tares. According to nature they were begotten of the natural offspring of Abraham as much as was David or Paul, but of the corrupt satanic spirit of the devil their father in the sense that this wicked murderous spirit come from him who is from the beginning a liar and a murderer, and this wicked spirit did not come from God, and that it was this lying, murderous Spirit that always prompted them to act, and in that sense the devil was their father, and they always did his lusts, and always served the devil, and never served God. It was the spirit of the devil and not that of God that worked in them always and invariably, and they therefore would always do his lusts. It is not contended that the devil or his followers can ever defeat or disappoint the purpose of God at all. It is held by me that the Lord uses the devil and wicked men as he pleases to subserve his purpose, but he never works in them or in Satan. They mean it for evil, but God purposes good in all he suffers them to do.

4th, On the other hand Jesus is the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth, and God dwells in him in divine fulness. Hence Jesus always does the will of God, for the Spirit of God without measure dwells in him. He is the wise son that makes a glad father.

The power of the Holy Ghost overshadowed the Virgin Mary, and the Holy Ghost by Almighty power prepared the body of Jesus, therefore that holy thing that was born of Mary is the Son of God. Never has another, nor ever can another, do the will of God as Jesus, because no other is the only begotten of the Father as Jesus is. He and his Father are one.

In the regeneration, wherein Jesus makes all things new, the chosen vessels of mercy are born of God, or born again, and they who by nature are children of wrath even as others, no difference, are quickened together with Christ and born of incorruptible seed by the word of God that liveth and abideth forever. As born of God they cannot sin. As led by the Spirit of Jesus they cannot sin: but they are still beset with a fleshly nature, and in that character as sons of Adam they do sin. But as Jesus came to destroy the works of the devil in his people, and to cast out and bind Satan, we rejoice in his blessed kingdom of life and peace.

5th. The serpent should bruise the heel of Jesus, the seed of the woman; but Jesus should bruise the head of satan. Hence when Jesus is manifest in the flesh the devil shows more desire to destroy Jesus than he ever did to destroy any one else. Nor were his children, these natural Jews, ever satisfied until they put Jesus to death. That lying murderous spirit of satan was inflaming them to hate Jesus without a cause. Hence satan enters into Judas, one of the twelve, and he betrays and sells Jesus for money, and they put him to death.

But he bruises the head or life and power of satan who is cast down to earth. For Jesus said, "I beheld satan (observe it was not angel of God but satan,) as lightning falls from heaven."

6th. Satan seeks whom he may devour. A buzzard does not hunt for living men but he scents the dead. He loves not fresh meat but carrion, and will scent that. Satan hunts the weak places and you cannot escape him by strategem. Be steadfast in the faith. Put on the whole armor of God. It will do you more good in resisting the wiles of the devil than all else. For you cannot resist him in any other way.

P. D. G.

BROTHER GOLD:—Will you please at your leisure, give a few thoughts upon the last two verses of the eleventh chapter of first Corinthians. Your little sister if one at all. MRS. L. GILLETT.

Remarks.

The rule of life laid down by Paul frees its observer from all censure from every quarter, and gives him peace of conscience also. Then is not this a good rule? If the wisdom that is from above so guides me that I give none offence neither to the Jews, who cleave to the letter of the law answering to moralists and legalists, or letter-worshippers that make clean the outside, then I have done well. For instance, there are people that regard the Sabbath as they call it with scrupulous nicety, thinking it wrong to write letters on that day. Now suppose I should say I would prefer that my children should go fishing or hunting on that day, rather than to go to Sunday School it would be casting reproach on their school, and showing that I have but little respect for that day in their view of this matter. It certainly would be wrong in me to suffer my children to go hunting or fishing on that day. To me one day is as good as another, and I esteem all days as the Lord's, yet I should not give such an occasion to another to regard me as a violator of the law. No, if I do not endorse Sunday Schools, is there any need of my making such an odious comparison, leaving the impression that I favor fishing and hunting on Sunday. In matters that have the spirit of the natural Jew, such as tithing mint, or small matters, such as eating swine's flesh which gives them offense, if eating it would reproach the truth in their view, I should refrain from eating it, although it would not defile my conscience to eat it; but for the sake of the cause of truth it would be better to not eat. Because the peace and good of the truth is to the glory of God, while eating this meat under such circumstances would not be to his glory. One should have such control of his appetite and such desire for the prosperity of Zion that he would prefer to serve the Lord and not his appetite, nor give offense to Gentiles. The Gentiles are such here as care neither for the church of God nor for Jewish ceremonies, care neither for truth nor morals.

Now I should not do anything on purpose to offend these people that do not acknowledge God in any sense. My conduct should be such that no man can rightfully be offended with me for any impropriety of action. The blessed doctrine of Christ surpasses all man's codes of right-living, so that if I am conformed to his teaching I shall not give offense to any on purpose, nor will any one have any right to be offended with me as thinking that the God I serve is beneath their god in purity or glory. Now suppose one makes no pretensions whatever to worship God, but he sees me defrauding a man in some business matter, and he should say, "I saw a man professing to be a christian cheating another man, and I would not do such a thing as that myself." We should not do any such a thing as that, but what we do should be to the glory of God.

Nor to the church of God. You know that an idol is nothing, and that eating meat offered to an idol is nothing. You know that all kinds of meat are clean by the word of God and prayer, but here is a weak brother that considers that meat thus offered is defiled. Now do not eat that meat for your brother's sake who is weak. Here is another brother too fond of strong drink. He does not need any encouragement to drink. If he were to see you take one drink that would encourage him to take two or three perhaps. Now for his sake do not drink at all. This would be to the glory of God. But if you do anything to cause your weak brother to stumble, you occasion a reproach to the cause and give offence to the church.

Please all in all things in this good sense and you will profit many.

P. D. G.

THAT PRIESTHOOD.

Dear Sir: Please give your views of Heb. 7: 1—3.

Respectfully yours, J. P. Worrell.

"For this Melchisedec, the king of Salem, priest of the most high God, who met Abraham returning from the slaughter of the kings, and blessed him."

"To whom also Abraham gave a tenth part of all; first being by interpretation king of righteousness, and after that also King of Salem, which is, King of peace;"

The most exalted figures of speech, and the most wonderful characters, and the noblest deeds are employed by the Holy Ghost to show forth in symbols the priesthood of Jesus.

Three things are noticeable here to measure this by: one is by Abraham, another is the oath of God, and another is the character of Melchisedec.

1st. Where is a greater man than Abraham the friend of God, the father of the faithful, the father of many nations. Yet here is a priest greater than that of the tribe of Levi, for Levi, while in the loins of Abraham, paid tithes to Melchisedec, and was blessed by Melchisedec, and the greater blesses the less. So that Melchisedec is greater than Abraham, and is greater, as the priest of the most high God, because that priesthood is greater than the priesthood of Levi.

Again, the Lord swore and will not repent, Thou (addressing Jesus) art a priest forever after the order of Melchisedec. The tribe of Levi were not made priests by an oath, but Jesus was made a priest by the oath of him that cannot lie. By two immutable things the Lord confirms this. One is his oath the other is the immutability of his counsel or purpose.

Men by an oath end a strife, or settle a controversy. To do this they swear by one greater. The Lord swore by himself because he could swear by none greater, since there is none greater than himself. Nor can the Lord change. If he could change or be changed it would show imperfection. That which can be changed is improved or made worse, one or the other, by the change, which would itself show imperfection. His purpose never changes either, therefore his purpose or counsel shall stand to all generations. By these two immutable things then namely, the oath of God who swears by himself, or by the eternal truth, power, glory and every attribute of the all-wise, omnipotent and eternal God, under all the holy solemnity, sanction of an oath; and immutability of his counsel, the Lord sware and will not repent; and this oath is to give strong consolation and good hope through grace to them who have fled for refuge to lay hold on this hope, which we have as an anchor of the soul both sure and steadfast, and enters into that within the veil whither the forerunner is for us entered.

Under the law an offender could flee to the city of refuge, and if he entered that city before the avenger of blood overtook him he was safe, but must dwell there until the death of the high priest.

But how much better is this priesthood. Here is an anchor to the soul both sure and steadfast that enters into heaven itself, not an earthly city of refuge. Under the law the high priest did not himself run the race that the poor must run who fled to this earthly city, and therefore he could not be touched with sympathy for this needy soul.

But Jesus is our forerunner. He himself has trod the road, he himself has resisted unto blood striving against sin. He is touched therefore with a feeling, infirmity, and knows how to have compassion upon the ignorant, and upon them who are out of the way. If our forerunner is entered into that within the veil or heaven for us, shall not we surely enter? If he has run for us, and entered in for us, shall not we enter? The oath of the Lord so says.

Then it is also confirmed by the immutability of his counsel. The counsel of God cannot change, nor be defeated. This is a matter of unspeakable joy to the child of God. What untold comforts dwell in the immutability of God's counsel. God cannot lie. He has given strong consolation to Israel. While the law made men priests who have infirmity, or are sinners, the word of the oath, which was since the law, makes Jesus a high priest who is the true Son of God, holy and without sin for he is consecrated forever more.

Again, Melchisedec is specially introduced here as a type of Jesus, or Jesus is declared by the oath of God to be a priest forever after the order of Melchisedec, nor is Melchisedec ever even once named except as in this wonderful character as setting forth the pattern of the eternal high priesthood of the most high God. Now consider how great this man was, older than the tribe of Levi, without father or mother, not having inherited his priesthood from any, without descent. He had to be king of righteousness is so much more wonderful. To be a peaceable king is lovely, but to be prince and king of peace is so much more wonderful. Now Jesus is that, and he is the eternal high priest in the temple of God which temple ye, the saints, are.

In the pattern Melchisedec is called a man. It may be that he appears without a father or mother, without a predecessor or a successor, and thus as abiding forever in the type to show as a pattern the character of the priesthood of Jesus. But more than belongs to man it appears is ascribed to Melchisedec. He is king of righteousness and peace. Is it not the Christ of the old testament who had not yet been manifest in the flesh? Christ the Son of God did appear in the old testament with the people of God. He is that rock of which Israel drank in the wilderness. In all their affliction he was afflicted, and the angel of his presence saved them, so that under the former dispensation where there was sin and death, yet there did appear from time to time that one like unto the Son of God shining as the body of heaven in its clearness above the clouds and smoke, the thunder and lightning, the trembling death of Sinai: while the law came by Moses showing the wrath of God against sin, one as the ancient of days without beginning or ending appeared full of grace and truth to the poor and needy. Hence the precious promises of life are revealed or uttered by holy men of old.

Because Jesus our high priest lives we shall live forever. Because he ever liveth he is able to save unto the uttermost them that came unto God by him. His blood cleanseth from all sin. He is the priest of a better testament founded on better promises.

The covenant partakes of the nature of the priesthood. The priests of Levi have a law-covenant or covenant of works, one calls for the other. But when Jesus comes he is by so much better priesthood that there is necessarily a new covenant answering to his glorious priesthood. In this new covenant God is merciful to our unrighteousness, and our sins and iniquities remembers no more. Hence in mercy our sins are brought to our remembrance, and we feel our sins, and when we confess them

Jesus is faithful and just to forgive us our sins.

We are kings and priests unto God by Jesus who hath so made us to offer up spiritual sacrifices holy and acceptable unto God by Jesus Christ.

What a glorious priest.

Obituary.

MISS RUTH C. GILBERT.

Died at the residence of her father, Mr. Robert Gilbert, Miss Ruth C. Gilbert in the 34th year of her age. She was taken sick on the 18th of November 1887, and died March the 9th, 1888. She was taken much worse on Friday and we thought she could not last long. She lived until Monday morning half past one when she passed away into a better world I hope, although it is hard for us to part with one we love so well. But the Lord's will must be done, and we must submit to it for he is just and holy.

Sunday morning Caty called us all around her bed and told us what she hoped the good Lord had done for her soul. She said, "I viewed the prettiest spot of ground I ever saw before in my life," and I wish you all could see it like I do. This is not my home, my home is in heaven above, I must leave you all, and brothers and sisters do try to meet me where parting is no more." Calling all of her brothers and sisters to her side she admonished them one by one to be kind and dutiful to their parents and to meet her in that happier world.

There are seven left, and three have gone, may we all meet together in heaven, where pain and parting will be no more.

JANE A. MARTIN.

PETER R. GILBERT.

Died, at the residence of his father, Robert Gilbert, Peter R. Gilbert, on the 9th day of December 1880. He lived 22 days and suffered much during his illness, but bore it patiently. He called us all to the bedside and asked us not to grieve for him, but to grieve for ourselves and try to get to heaven whether he did or not. He was a kind brother, a dutiful and affectionate son and never spoke evil of any one that I recollect of, was kind to all and we feel that he is now free from pain, troubles and earthly trials, while we are left in this world to contend with and endure them. He asked Mr James Shockley to pray for him and told him that live, or die, his desire was to go to heaven, he said. "I feel like I want to tell christians how I felt and what the good Lord did for my poor soul. When my dear brother was about to be carried to his grave, I felt like I had done all I could and prayed to the Lord to carry me home to Peter. My dear brethren, if I am worthy to so call you, I want you all to pray for my lonely father and mother and for all of us that are left so lonesome. It is hard to part with one so near and dear to us.

I professed a hope the cleventh of December 1880 and joined the Primitive Baptist church the first Saturday in September 1882, and my membership is at Russell Creek, Patrick Co., Va.

SARAH J. PATE.

Died, Sarah J. Pate, wife of W. B. Pate and daughter of Capt. W. T. Gardner, and his good wife, Elizabeth Gardner, Sept. 24th, 1888. Her husband will ever remember her gentle care and kindness, and feel this loss of her all through the weary years of a lifetime. She leaves three small children, a father, mother, two brothers and two sisters, besides a host of other relatives and friends to mourn her untimely death.

But the great God who doeth all things well, and he only, can bind up the broken hearts and wipe away the sorrowful tears from their eyes.

She bore her sickness with christian fortitude, for her life previous to her sickness had been that of a true christian woman, and she died with full faith in her Saviour. She was true to every trust confided in her; always ready to visit the sick and administer to their wants, with her gentle care and kindness, and no one knew her but to love her. It is indeed sad to part with those we love best, and yet it is often so. We feel that she has gone to rest in peace.

J. M. L.

R. W. GURLEY.

Brother R. W. Gurley departed this life the 25th of Dec. 1888. He was a brother in the flesh as well as in the church having joined the church twelve or fifteen years ago at New Chapel and was a faithful member until his death. He filled his seat when he and family were able to go to meeting. There was not anything ever brought against him. He died at the age of 38 years, one month and twenty two days. He had the consumption and was confined to his home for twelve months, and was confined half of his time to his bed, but there was a great beauty in all his affliction, and he was willing for the Lord's will to be done. He leaves a wife and four children, a mother and four brothers, and a great many friends to mourn his loss, but their loss is his eternal gain. To live with Christ is gain, and to leave this world of sorrow is gain. While in this world we shall have tribulation. I remain your brother in Christ I hope, if one at all.

J. T. GURLEY.

MINERVA F. GILLIAM.

Died, at her brothers' home, near Gilliam's church, in Alamance County, on the 6th of Jan. '89, Miss Minerva F. Gilliam in the 44th year of her age. She was the daughter of Elder Joseph Gilliam who was called to his reward about eight years ago. The subject of this notice was for some years past in delicate health, but the last three months of her life especially she suffered much, but through it all she manifested unusual patience and christian fortitude. Sometime previous to her death she exclaimed, "O Lord, my Lord, and my God, I will claim thee though thou slay me." The good Lord helped her thus to wait and suffer, and enabled her to show forth the power of godliness by an humble submission to his will. For several years she was a most devoted and consistent member of the Primitive Baptist church, and while she loved all in whom she saw the image of her Saviour reflected, of whatever name or denomination, yet she was intensely Baptist. She was modest and unassuming, and had no patience with anything bordering on pretense or show. Her real worth was known best only to those who enjoyed the privilege of an intimate acquaintance with her.

We thank God for such a life and for the gracious influence that will long flow therefrom. Though she has passed away in the prime of matured womanhood, her life was not incomplete. The Master accomplished through her that which he had for her to do, and he called her up higher.

W. T. BOWLES.

ELIZABETH SKINNER.

Departed this life, Dec. 25th, 1888, Elizabeth Skinner. She was born Sept. 10th, 1840, in Wilson County, N. C., where she lived all of her life. She united with the Primitive Baptist church at Moore's, Wilson County, on the 25th of Sept. 1875. She was baptized I think by Elder A. J. Moore.

Her light did shine through all the days of her membership, even brighter and brighter unto the end. She had consumption, and bore her sickness with marked patience. I was with her not long before she died and in my weak way to comfort her in her affliction. She seemed to be cheered, and said my visits did her so much good. I do not feel to mourn for her but to rejoice, for I believe that she has passed over the river and is now numbered among the blessed of the Lord. She leaves a husband and five children to mourn for her, also a father and mother, and many other relatives and friends, but I would say unto them, weep not for she is I believe at that happy home where the saints of God do rest and praise the Triune One.

S. HOLDEN.

CATHARINE WILLIAMS.

Catharine Williams departed this life on the 18th of May 1888, aged 61 years 8 months and 3 days. She was born in Davidson county, N. C., Sept. 15th, 1826, was married to James A. Williams Sept. 23rd 1855, by whom she had four children one dead and three living. She leaves a husband, three children and nine grand children to mourn their loss, but we trust their loss is her great gain. None knew her but to love and admire her wonderful character, which was ornamented with a meek and quiet spirit, gentleness, kindness, forbearance, and in short apparently every christian virtue shone with brightness in her lovely character. It was the lot of the unworthy writer to travel with the family of the now departed one for eight long weeks to the state of Missouri in 1868, and during our long and wearisome journey she scarce was heard to murmur or complain at any difficulty we had to pass through. Indeed when I received the sad news of her death it was a sad shock to me to know that I could never hear her voice nor see her face again in time, but I hope to meet her with all the redeemed in the mansions of eternal bliss. Dear brother, weep not for her as dead, for we believe she is asleep in Jesus, and will be awakened on the morning of the great day with those that are blessed to have a part in the first resurrection, for it is said, "Blessed and holy is he that has part in the first resurrection, on such the second death hath no power. Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord from henceforth, yea saith the spirit that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."

A. M WILLIAMS.

"Be ye also ready for at such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh."

How important it is that we should ever keep this injunction before us with our lamp trimmed and brightly burning. For suddenly the summons came to Mrs. Minnie L. Moore, and her gentle spirit was borne from our hearts and home to that bourne whence no traveler returns. She was the sixth child of Bryant and Mary Williams, both living at her death, and was just in the 18th year of her life when she departed. She was married on the 16th of September 1885 to Capt. William F. Moore, but lived only a few fleeting months to gladden the heart of her devoted young husband whom she loved.

On Saturday previous to her death she was taken and lingered until Sunday in excruciating pain until she lost consciousness. Monday she aroused and was conscious then till death came to her relief. Although relatives and friends and medical skill were in strict attendance she could not be relieved until the gate was opened for her to pass through to the great hereafter. I was sent for but when I entered her home I found that death had done its work, and Minnie was no more to greet me with her bright cheerful smiles. What a sad yet sweet picture as I beheld her with her babe on her bosom lying in their narrow bed, as if in peaceful slumbers. Minnie possessed such a happy disposition, was always bright and cheerful, and by her sweet temper made friends wherever she went. When she was about to pass through the gate she raised her dying eyes to me and said, "ma I have lived and sinned all my days, but now I die and go to heaven; and we find comfort in that the Lord receives every vessel of his mercy, and gives every heir of promise an abundant entrance into his everlasting kingdom.

We hope she was embraced in the everlasting covenant of love.

MARY E. WILLIAMS.

LEMUEL MAY HENDERSON.

Lemuel May Henderson was the infant daughter of Thomas A. and Hassie S. Henderson, that died July 23rd, 1888, aged three months and five days. Sweet babes they are gone, have been torn from the sweet embrace of a devoted mother who loved them with tenderest affection, and was sorely bereft at their departure. But alas! the sweetest blossoms of our earthly joys are soon blasted, SUSAN T. WHITE.

ESTHER REECE.

She is the daughter of Wm. and Lucy Caudle, and was born in Haywood, N. C. Feb. 6th, 1806, died Feb 9 1889, aged 83 years and 3 days.

Mother obtained a hope in Christ in her 16th year, and united with the Baptist Church soon after, at Gum Spring, Chatham Co, in the days when R. Daniel was raising agitation among the Baptists. He tried to influence her to let him baptize her, but she said she believed him to be an imposter, then she was baptized by her uncle Hezekiah Harmon. She was united by marriage to my father Joseph L. Reece in her 17th year, and moved her membership to Shady Grove, an arm of Sandy Creek Church, Randolph Co., N. C. When the Baptist divided in 1835 the church to which she belonged and all her relatives and her husband's, went with the Missionaries. She on that account remained with them 12 years, until she thought she was going to die if she stayed any longer: so in face of all opposing powers she went to the church and told them to take her name off their book for she could fellowship them no longer. About that time Elder John Stadler came through this part of the country preaching. She went to him and told him she wanted to get back home, that she couldn't live away any longer, supposing he would say, "We don't want you now, you've been away too long:" but to her great joy he said, "come home, we'll make you welcome," with the tears running down his face. She united with the old Sandy Creek Church where she remained till she joined the Church triumphant.

Her husband died in Oct. 1875. Though not a member of the church he was a firm believer of the Baptist doctrine, and a great friend to them. There were eleven children born of her. Mother was a woman of an uncommonly strong mind, never shrunk for cold or heat by day or by night when called upon to relieve suffering humanity (being a noted midwife.) Never sent the poor away empty.

One could mention no passage of scripture but she chuld tell them where to find it. She could debate with the most learned men on the doctrine of the bible, and they acknowledged they learned something by talking with her. Her home was a home for the Baptists. She loved that people all through life and remembered them in her dying hours.

When asked a few hours before she died, if she did not want some wine, her answer was "I want nothing more in this world, I want to leave it. I am ready now."

VANDELIA E. JONES.

FANNIE M. EDWARDS.

Sister Edwards was the daughter of Joseph D. and Patience Denmark, of Wayne Co. N. C. She was born Nov. 30th 1848, and departed this life Dec. 7th 1888. Making her stay on this earth 40 years and 7 days.

She united with the Missionaries when she was quite young, and continued her name with them until about the age of 30 years; when she became convinced that the Primitive Baptists preached the doctrine of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the Chief corner stone, being satisfied that the Primitive Baptist church was the church of Jesus Christ, she left her kindred and her county, and came over to sojourn with them, together with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, until it pleased our heavenly Father to call her from sorrow and pain.

Her qualities as a dutiful child, devoted wife, kind and tender mother, faithful christian, and good neighbor were unsurpassed. To love her one only needed to know her. She leaves a heart stricken husband, 6 children, an aged father and mother, 5 brothers 4 sisters; together with a large number of other relatives and friends to mourn, but not at those having no hope. A few minutes before she departed, she called to her bed-side her children, and gave to them a departing mother's last advice, repeated a part of the 23rd Psalm of David, she also requested them to read the same, and then fell asleep in Jesus. Her Burial was attended with a short service by the writer, surrounded with a large congregation of relatives and friends.

Dear heart stricken husband, dear motherless children, dear aged father and mother, dear brothers and sisters, together with relatives and friends, don't grieve. She is not dead but sleepeth, but she sha'l awake with the likeness of Jesus and be satisfied.

JOHN R. ROBERTS.

ELDER B. E. CAUDILL.

We are pained to hear of the death of Elder Ben. Caudill who was an earnest, untiring, faithful, and gifted preacher. He fell at his post.

P. D. G.

MRS. MARGARETT ELIZABETH PURVIS my devoted and beloved wife passed quietly from our earthly home near Tarboro N. C. on the 19th day of July 1888 after an illness of four days. For six months before her death she seemed aware of our earthly separation, and repeatedly told me how she wished her domestic duties carried on, that she felt satisfied for the future, her only regret was leaving me and her children. The last time she attended preaching was at the Old Baptist church in Tarboro where she heard her last sermon on earth. It was preached by Eld. P. D. Gold. On her way home, she expressed her self as satisfied in that sweet By and bye, that the sermon had thoroughly satisfied her, that Mr. Gold had expressed her feelings much better than she could have done and she could only wait for the call of him who doeth all things well.

Four days before her death she gave birth to a daughter, little Mary Emma, who lived eleven days after her mother's death

In my troubles, three weeks after my wife's death, I had a dream, as plain as anything, actually occurring in open day. I saw two little girls dressed in white, pass quietly out of sight and disappear. It caused me much anxiety and thought and could not get the picture out of sight. I could not understand it. Three days later, in broad open day, I saw no one, but it seemed that I heard in plain language.—“There is no difference in heaven, all are the same size, the children that you saw were your wife and baby, equal in size and happiness in the glory of God.” Since then I have been satisfied or reconciled upon the subject.

Sleep on dear Bettie, take thy rest,
For in heaven all are blest,

JNO. W. PURVIS.

MRS. T. M. BAKER.

At 6 o'clock Tuesday morning, April 15, 1888, the spirit of Mrs. T. M. Baker left its earthly tenement and passed to that land from whence no traveler returns. The funeral took place at Mt. Zion, on Monday morning at ten o'clock. The esteem which was held for Mrs. Baker was shown by the large attendance and deep concern manifested by all that were present. Elder Z. H. Bennett officiated in glowing terms. We can hardly find words good enough to use in speaking about her. She was possessed of all the virtues necessary to manifest her as a christian lady. She died of fiscal Erysipelas, age 43 years, 11 months and 15 days. She was a member of the Primitive Baptist church 25 years of her life on earth. She left a husband and eight children to mourn her death. The Saviour whom she loved she trusted in her afflictions and death, and died in the hope of eternal life.

LITTLE FANNIE WALKER.

This dear little daughter of Mr. J. H. Walker and wife was born August the 4th, 1887, and died Aug. the 8th, 1888, making her stay on earth 1 year and 4 days. She was a bright, sweet little child, very dear to her family and a treasure to them.

She was sick about 9 weeks and suffered much. She was very quiet in her long severe suffering.

How sad to see such dear little ones called away in youth. But the Lord gives and he takes away. Jesus loves little children and said, taking such up in his arms, suffer the little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven.

Eternity is sweet to contemplate by those who have a good hope of being gathered to their fathers when they die, especially as they remember the many dear ones gone before, but above all that the angels Jesus and the Father are there. P. D. G.

CORNELIA ANN LEATH.

Whose maiden name was Menutt was born April 26th, 1821, and died Nov 8th, 1888, aged 67 years, 6 months and some days. She was married to John F. Leath April 8th 1847, and was the mother of three children, two sons, one daughter. The son died while small, a son and daughter survive her with her husband. Her daughter married brother J. W. Gilliam, Alabama co. N. C. her son married S. A. Burch and has continued to live with his parents. She united with the church at Arbor, Caswell co. N. C. with her husband, in 1866, where she remained a member in full fellowship until her death. She was an uncommonly industrious woman, generally stout and never failed to attend her business, and did not appear to tire in trying to provide for her family and friends. She was a good wife, mother and neighbor, and is greatly missed by her friends. Her house was a good house for the Baptists. She took care of a great many of the ministers. Generally she was cheerful up to the time the fatal disease took her which was cancer of the tongue. She suffered indescribable pain for some eighteen months. She bore her suffering with great fortitude. Her tongue became so enlarged and painful that she could not eat any solid food for months. Near the last she could not swallow any thing without great difficulty and suffering. She could not speak plainly but delighted to hear singing and talking upon the subject of religion. Being asked by a friend a short while before her death if she ever saw any ease, she said she had been easy twice when she felt no pain. She felt so happy as to say, “A happy people, that happy throng”. This she enjoyed she said twice a short time before her death. All that knew her grieved for her, but we feel that her suffering will be no more, where sorrow and sickness are all done away, and we believe that the happiest day of all the days that sister Leath ever experienced was the day of her departure from this world of suffering, when her spirit was liberated from the body and entered eternal rest. That was the happiest day, that eternal day, of joy and peace. May her God prepare us all that are left to suffer, to meet her in peace world without end. Amen.

JAMES A. BURCH.

PRISCILLA THOMAS.

Sister Thomas was born Jan. 8th. 1810 and died Jan. 5th. 1889. She joined the church at the Falls of Tar River about 40 years ago. She passed through the fiery ordeal of life without a stain on her garments, and abode in Jesus, and with the brethren as long as she lived, and dwelt in love and in undimmed zeal in the truth until the Lord called her home.

Great was her suffering, but as great her patience in her last days.

She was never married, but was one of those who gave an undivided heart and service to the Lord which is better, in that it is free service and with less incumbrance.

The Purpose of Zion's Landmark.

"Ask for the old paths where is the good way."

By the help of the Lord this paper will contend for the ancient Landmark, guided by its stakes of Truth, and strengthened by its chords of Love.

It hopes to reject all traditions and institutions of men, and regard only the Bible as the standard of truth.

It urges the people to search the Scriptures, and obey Jesus the king in the holy hill of Zion, keeping themselves unspotted from the world.

It aims to contend for the mystery of the faith in God and the Father, Jesus the Mediator, and the Holy Spirit the blessed Comforter.

All lovers of Gospel truth are invited to write for it—if so impressed.

May grace, mercy, and peace be multiplied to all lovers of truth.

The Subscription Price of Zion's Landmark.

For single subscribers $2.00 per year. Clubs of eight or a larger number $1.50 each, and the getter up of club receives a copy free for the time the club is paid. The subscribers in clubs need not all be at the same Post Office, and names can be sent from time to time in making up clubs: also in renewing clubs the same rule may be observed.

Any one sending me eight new names with $12.00 cash will be furnished a copy of the LANDMARK free for one year, and a copy of the "Church History" free.

When a subscriber desires his paper changed he should state plainly both the old and the new postoffices. When one wishes his paper stopped, let him send what is due, if anything is due, and also state his postoffice.

Let each subscriber keep his paper paid up if possible, and when he renews give the same name it has been going in, unless he wishes it changed, then he should state both the old and the new names.

DEVOTED TO THE CAUSE OF JESUS.

CHRIST IN THE GARDEN.

While nature was sinking in stillness to rest,
The last beams of daylight shone dim in the west,
O'er fields by the moonlight my wandering feet
Sought in quiet meditation some lonely retreat—
While passing a garden I paused to hear [there,
A voice faint and plaintive from one that was
The voice of the sufferer affected my heart,
While in agony pleading the poor sinner's part.
I listened a moment then turned in to see What man of compassion that stranger could be.
I saw him low kneeling upon the cold ground,
The loveliest being that ever was found.
His mantle was wet with the dew of the night,
The locks by pale moonlight glistening and bright,
His eyes bright as diamonds to heaven were raised,
While angels stood round him in wonder arrayed,
So deep was his sorrow, so fervent his prayer,
That down on his bosom rolled sweat, blood and tear.
I wept to behold him. I asked him his name.
He answered 'tis Jesus, from heaven I came,
I am thy redeemer, for thee I must die,
The cup is most bitter, but cannot pass by.
Thy sins like a mountain are laid upon me,
And all this deep anguish I suffer for thee
I heard with deep sorrow the tale of his woe,
While tears like a fountain of water did flow.
The cause of his sorrow to hear him repeat Affected my heart, and I fell at his feet.
He looked with compassion and said to me, live.
Thy sins which are many I freely forgive.
I flew from the garden to spread it abroad.
I shouted salvation and glory to God.

Remark.

This is from the pen of an aged sister whose name is withheld. P. D. G.

What is sweeter than honey and the honey-comb? The word of God is sweeter. Is that so to the carnal, natural taste of man? Does the natural man love the word of God? Can he say, Thy words were found and I did eat them? No, indeed there is nothing in that precious word that is good and sweet. P. D. G.

PART 2.

ON SELF-MADE MINISTERS.

In Romans, 8. 29: And God has not, nor never will, cast away his people which he foreknew. And in Romans, 11. 2: By this foreknowledge he did predestinate sinners to the adoption of children. As in Ephesians, 1. 5: By Jesus Christ, according to the good pleasure of his will; to the praise of the glory of his grace—and accepted them in the beloved. And in the 11th of same chapter: In whom also we have obtained an inheritance, being predestinated according to the purpose of him, who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will. In a word it was by this foreknowledge God loved his people with an everlasting love: by it he made choice of his people, or elected them in Christ before the foundation of the world, to be holy and without blame in love, as in Ephesians, 1: 4. By this foreknowledge of a love of his foreknown people, he did foreordain before the foundation of the world Jesus Christ to be slain for the sins of his people, and be a propitiation for all their every crime, as in Peter 1: 20. By this foreknowledge he gave them grace in and saved them in Christ before the world began, as in Timothy, 1: 9. By this foreknowledge he wrote the names of his people in the Lamb's book of life, ordained them to eternal life, appointed them to obtain salvation by Jesus Christ, gave them to Christ, prepared a kingdom for them from the foundation of the world—by it he chose Jacob and refused Esau, before they were born or had done good or evil; by it his purpose of election stands, and according to it all the wheels of providence move to complete the work of salvation of his foreknown, beloved and elect people. By his foreknowledge of God was the system of salvation constructed, settled, and the Saviour and Redeemer chosen and appointed; and all other things relative to creation, redemption, regeneration, and glorification were finished in purpose and decree in eternity, through the means foreseen and fore appointed. And all God's promises to his Son, and his people in him, were confirmed and ratified with the oath of God to Christ and the heirs of promise before the world began. On all these points the scripture speaks clear and plain, as one of the main principles of apostolic doctrine. However much you may disbelieve it, or contend against it, all your jangling won't alter it.

3rd That election was an apostolic doctrine, and one of the fundamentals of their doctrine, no man can deny that reads the New Testament. And that God did not elect or choose his people on a foresight of their goodness, repentance, nor faith, nor good does, is self-evident from scripture; for they were chosen by his foreknowledge, as says Peter—and chosen in Christ, says Paul before the foundation of the world. Then as Paul says, and cites as a case in point the choice of Jacob, they were chosen before they had done good or evil, like Jacob, if chosen before the foundation of the world; for then when the choice was made before the world began, they could not have done good or evil. So then the choice of sinners in Christ before the world began was not dependent on does of goodness, or does of badness; but like the case of Jacob, that the purpose of God according to election might stand; not of him that willetth or runneth, but of God that showeth mercy to whom he will. For this election rests not on goodness, will, nor works; but is an election according to the grace and purpose of God. Then sinners were not elected to salvation and glory on a foresight of their goodness, but on a foreknowing of their badness; not elected because they were good or because they would be good; but elected before they had done good or evil, before born of the new birth, as some say; or as some others say, after they become Christians, then elected. Let this text stop your mouth: Chosen in him before the foundation of the world. If elected before the foundation of the world, how then elected after they become Christians, when this election took place so long before? No, Sir, you have got it wrong; they were elected before the world began; but their becoming Christians is only a proof that they were elected before the world began. So that becoming a Christian is a fruit of election and not election itself; or its cause: election is God's act in eternity, becoming a Christian is the act of the Holy Ghost on us in time. This is truth. They were not elected because they would be clean of themselves, but elected on a foresight of their filthiness, and to be made clean by the sanctification of the spirit and the sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ. They were not elected because they would be of themselves righteous, holy, or loving creatures, and God foresee they would be so and so elect them; no, but their election took place in eternity, on a foreseeing they were unholy and at enmity in their minds against God, hating him in their very hearts, of which every imagination was only evil and that continually. And thus God chose them by his foreknowledge, and elected them before the foundation of the world, without any reference to their good works; but alone to their unholiness and hatred he had reference; for thus are they elected to be holy and without blame before him in love. Then without this election they never would have been holy, nor loved God, nor been blameless in his sight. Then holiness, blameless ness before God, and love to God, are the fruit of election, and not the cause why people are elected. For the truth is, God's people were elected by his foreknowledge, when he foresaw all their sins upon them; and the sins which he foresaw did not hinder their election, because this election is of grace and not of works. Neither did he elect them because he foresaw who would repent and believe, for then no such a thing as election could have taken place in eternity; because the scripture tells us, that repentance and faith are both the gift of God—if so, men cannot repent nor believe until these gifts are given. Then strange indeed that God should elect men on the account of his own gifts; for then no thanks to them for their election, for it would be of God who gave the gifts of repentance and faith, or else they would not have repented nor believed. So then repentance and faith in the creature, if the gift of God, still make their election wholly of God, and not of self, nor no ways dependent on the creature, but dependent on God's gifts. So you get no glory here, and this is what men want to show the glory of their salvation with God; that's the reason men cannot receive particular, unconditional, and eternal election, as it is set forth in the scriptures—can't give up for salvation to be all of grace, all the gift of God or glory in the Lord, and not in themselves. But so far from God's electing sinners on a foresight of their repentance and faith, that repentance and faith is the fruit of election: For as many as were ordained to eternal life believed. I have said enough here, nor have I quoted many scriptures, as every man that has read his Bible knows election to be a doctrine taught by Christ and his apostles; and that Christ is elected of God, and that sinners are elected to be members of his church, and to eternal salvation through Christ.

DEAR BRETHREN GOLD AND LESTER:—Our Lord said, "Lo I am with you alway even unto the end of the world. Amen."—Matt. 28: 20. The last clause of that verse no doubt commanded the deep and most profound attention of the disciples of our Lord. They had been with him during his ministry, had witnessed the many wonderful miracles which he had wrought and heard his more than wonderful teachings. But now he was about to go away, was about to be separated from them so far as earthly vision was concerned. Their natural eyes were no more to behold that form around which they had clustered with such sweet and heavenly delight during the last three years of his sojourn on earth. No doubt they were sad, no doubt their hearts were troubled, although he had said to them, "Ye believe in God, believe also in me, for in my Father's house are many mansions. If it were not so I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you and if I go I will come again and take you to myself that where I am ye may be also." Ah what love there burned forth from that form which must soon be marred more than the sons of men. He had told them of his departure, but left with them this glorious assurance, "In my Father's house there are many mansions." Many places of rest for the weary. What could afford more rest for the weary saints than the great and wonderful promises of God. Surely nothing. When worn and tired in the great conflicts through which they must pass all through their earthly pilgrimage their desire must be rest. Here below they have the world, the flesh and the devil with which they had to contend. They have from sad experience learned that the flesh lusteth against the Spirit and the Spirit against the flesh, these two and the one is contrary to the other. Amidst the fiercest part of this sad and sore conflict they hear from the precious lips of their glorious Lord these heavenly words. "Lo I am with you alway even unto the end of the world, Amen." Then for the time being all their enemies are overcome by the power of Jesus' name. Thus in him they have peace and rest, for all the promises of the gospel center in that precious name. Hence they have the promise, "In my Father's house (the church) are many mansions," many great and glorious promises. In their great conflicts each one of those promises appears to them at the right time and in the right place because their Lord is with them and will never leave them, nor forsake them. He is and will be there to give them the shield of faith to quench the fiery darts of the wicked one, and the helmet of salvation and the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God. Yea, to give them all things needful to enable them to come off conquerors and more than conquerors through him that loved them and gave himself for them. He says to them by the mouth of his prophet, "When thou passest through the waters I will be with thee, and through the rivers they shall not overflow thee. When thou walkest through the fire thou shalt not be burned, neither shall the flame kindle upon thee. For I am the Lord thy God, the Holy One of Israel thy Saviour." All these great and glorious promises are in our Father's house, the church. In them the dear saints have a sweet mansion of rest. Ah, my dear brethren Editors, when you in your ministry have been wielding the sword of the Spirit, the word of God, O how you and they, the saints that heard you have been comforted when you by the Spirit's power have been able to present Jesus in all his great and wondrous character, and by faith enabled to say to them, "He is thy Savior and he has said to his disciples, and and to all the redeemed and regenerated sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty who have lived upon the earth from the day of his ascension, "Lo I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." O how sweet those promises are, what a sweet mansion of rest to the weary and way-worn pilgrim who like Abraham is seeking a city which hath foundations whose builder and maker is God, while here below they realize that they are pilgrims and strangers. The world knew not their glorious Lord neither does this world know them. But while resting in their Father's house upon the sweet promises of the gospel this world to them is but vanity, and they realize that this world is not their home and they can sweetly sing,

"O land of rest for thee I sigh,
When will the moment come,
That I shall lay my armor by,
And dwell with Christ at home!"

Perhaps some may enquire what was taught by our Lord when he said, "Even unto the end of the world." It will be remembered that these are the closing words of the gospel as recorded by Matthew and are the closing words of the great commission, "Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you, and lo I am with you always even unto the end of the world." They were commanded to go and teach all nations, Jews and Gentiles. But when the disciples had preached the gospel to both Jews and Gentiles the end of the world to each one of them on earth must come. Let it be remembered that our Lord did not say to the end of time. If he had used that language a Pagan monster would not have crucified Peter with his head downward, nor could he have had that loving disciple John put to death by casting him into a cauldron of boiling oil. If he had said to the end of time these disciples would have gone forth proclaiming the everlasting gospel 'til the last loud trump shall sound.

The feeble writer of these rambling thoughts realizes day by day that soon, perhaps very soon, the grim visaged monarch of the tomb will call him from earth. Then he will have reached the end of the world so far as he is concerned, and thus this frail body will return to dust. It is written, "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." From that period onward to the end of time there will be no such being throughout the vast expanse of created worlds as Hezekiah Cox. His body which was of the world will have mouldered to its mother dust. But just here comes up before our mental vision a sweet and glorious and a precious truth, that truth our Lord said to the weeping sister of Lazarus. "I am the resurrection and the life." That truth comes up most sweetly when we in our minds have been looking down into the cold confines of the tomb and gazing upon the pale nations of the dead. It is sweet to know that he who said to his disciples, "Lo I am with you alway even unto the end of the world," He has also said "I am the resurrection and the life." His apostle said, "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed on us that we should be called the Sons of God." The world knoweth us not for it knew him not. But it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when he appears we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is. We shall then be like him because he is our resurrection and our life. He came forth from the tomb in spiritual, eternal and immortal life. He came from that tomb with that life which he will give to all the saints in their resurrection. He gives to his saints in the new birth eternal life and that life is hid with Christ in God, and when he who is our life shall appear then shall we also appear with him in glory. He said, "I am he that liveth and was dead, and behold I am alive forevermore." That will be the condition of all the redeemed on the great and glorious morning of the resurrection, for they will be like him and see him as he is, when they are made like their glorious and risen Lord they will be alive forevermore.

But perhaps some will enquire why the subject of the resurrection is presented when treating upon the presence of our Lord with his disciples and all his saints in their earthly pilgrimage. The answer to that enquiry is that the Lord our God is omnipotent and omnipresent. In his omnipotence the sleeping dust of his saints is held and kept as safe from destruction as his body was when lying in Joseph's new tomb. The vain and futile efforts of Herod and the Jews to make that sepulchre secure by sealing that great stone only demonstrated the deep seated unbelief of frail mortal men in the power of God. While the penalty under the Roman law for breaking the king's seal was death, yet God who will laugh at our calamities and mocketh when our fear cometh, sent his angel to roll away that great stone, thus demonstrating the utter futility of all attempts by vain man to defeat the purposes of God. That power that rolled away that great stone will on the morning of the resurrection break adamantine locks and let the prisoners that have long been held by the power of the grave go free, then they will come forth to the resurrection of life. It is thus God by his power is and will ever be with all that pertains to his saints.

He in his omnipresence will see and in his omniscience will know all the redeemed. No ocean will be too deep, no mountain too high for that omniscient and omni-present God to see, find and call forth the sleeping dust of all the saints. He in his power, wisdom, and omnipresence is present with that dust and will be so 'till that morning. Then the voice of God will reach down into the dark caverns of the earth as well as the most costly adorned cemeteries where the dust of the saints is resting and call them forth into the glorious enjoyment of that spiritual, eternal, and immortal life which was secured to all of them by the resurrection of our ever glorious Lord. Oh what inefable joys await the dear followers of Jesus, and knowing that those wondrous things are all secured to them in the unchanging love of God. O, how their hearts should go forth in love to him and to one another, thus fulfilling that new commandment to love one another, and may peace, love and harmony abound among the redeemed in all lands and climes is the sincere prayer of this little one.

P. D. GOLD, DEAR SIR:—I am glad to see so much interest taken in the church history. I hope it will continue until the debt is paid. Some are holding back saying they do not understand how the debt can be so large after so much money has been paid. I would be glad to see how much has been paid on the debt and what the real debt is now. I think that the people would take more interest in trying to pay it if they knew what was lacking on the debt. I don't want to pay other people's debts, but I don't think the expenses of the history are Mr. Hassels' debt when he has paid all of the money that has been sent him for that purpose. That is all any of us can ask I think. Whom was the debt contracted for? Was it not for the lovers of the Primitive doctrine? I think it was. I have heard of some that seemed anxious for the history until the paying time came, then they backed down.

A. Friend.

Remark:

Eld. Hassell can explain better than I can the amount that has been paid and what is still due.

ELDERS GOLD AND LESTER, DEAR BRETHREN:—I greatly enjoyed each of your editorials in the last LANDMARK: "What shall I do?" and, "the most wonderful name", for each came home to me, as if written for me, bringing both instruction and comfort. As I read them my feelings were stirred with the desire to write to you of the blessing I received.

For many days the earnest and painful inquiry and prayer had been in my heart, "What shall I do?" No answer has been given to me, but in that most wonderful name I trust, the name of the LORD. His name is a strong tower, a hiding place, a safe retreat. In his precious name we have salvation, blessing, honor and glory. His name is the exalted name of the church, and it is, "THE LORD OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS." "Christ in us the hope of glory" is a glorious hope. This hope shall be consummated in our glorious resurrection, when we shall be changed into his glorified image, and shall be like him. All this is in and through Christ, and by him; yet it is all ours with him and in his dear name, as his brethren, and his members of his body, the church. "He loved the church, and gave himself for it." And now he is with and in the church, for it is his house, his dwelling place, his holy temple, his bride, his love. "THE LORD IS THERE!" "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for THOU ART WITH ME." Thou, who saith, "I am the resurrection, and the life." For these and a thousand reasons the name of JESUS is above every name. O glorious name! "Therefore unto you that believe he is precious." Yes,

"How sweet the name of Jesus sounds
In a believer's ear."

In the name and life and love of Jesus, your friend and brother,

D. BARTLEY.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—I feel tonight like saying a few words to you, and if approved, to the readers of the LANDMARK.

But how miserably dark I do feel. I surely feel like one that cries out of the depths. It seems that the night through which I am now passing is a very long and dreary one. I often want to ask, "Do christians get in such miserable places as this?" Am I indeed a child of God? I do feel some concern for his name and for the glory of his cross, but why am I thus? I look back on days that are passed when I was blessed to enjoy his presence, and oh how my soul longs for the joys that I then felt and rejoiced in, but it really seems that the time is passed and that the day will no more make its beautiful appearance in the horizon of my experience. But why do I complain? I am such a vile sinner and am not in the least worthy of any of his blessings, then why should I complain at my condition? But I cannot be content. No, I mourn and cry out of the depths of darkness which I so sensibly feel, but I cannot feel that my cry is heard. Now this is my present condition and I have been here for several weeks. If it was not for HOPE where would I be? Oh wretched soul in miserable despair! In all these troubles and dark groanings of my heart I am tugging at my hope and I find that it still remains both sure and steadfast. Oh could I be content with this, but I am not content. No, I want to fly on the wings of faith and meet my beloved Redeemer in the skies. How gladly would I kiss his blessed feet if I only were permitted to come unto him. But my way is hedged up and I am closed in on every side. The wall is thick and high and I cannot see over it. I feel like one who said "Wo is me for I am undone." I have seen the time when I rejoiced as a strong man to run a race, but now my strength is all gone and I am stumbling, halting, falling, crying. Is there another such in the house-hold of faith? I have felt "Surely that goodness and mercy have followed me all the days of my life," but now I say: "Will he forget to be gracious, will his mercies fail forever?"

But should one professing to be a christian thus complain? How does this agree with "Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven?" Oh that I could be content with my lot, for I know that what my Father does is best, yet, I would have it different at this time.

To-morrow the brethren expect to hear me speak some words in the blessed gospel and oh how unfit I am, how ignorant and full of nothingness. If it could be the will of God to send one of his servants full of the gospel to speak peace to us, but I may not expect so much joy, but the presence of the Holy Spirit I desire above all things that he might take of the things of the Father and show them unto me. I once could enjoy hearing the lambs who were coming home to the fold tell of the dealings of the Lord with them, but now my heart is so hard that nothing seems to take any hold on it. One has come and received baptism, three have returned to the fellowship of the church, and the saints have been made to rejoice, but my heart is cold and partakes of but little of the joys. Then again I cannot mourn as I would over my hardness of heart, my eyes seem to be dried up and seldom a tear arises to show any sympathy for the the repenting, nor any joy to the Lord for his goodness in the increase of his fold. What a deplorable state to be in, and yet it is true with me now and I cannot tell the half that I feel.

Lest I appear as one that complaineth I will close.

If you or any of the brethren or sisters can feel in your hearts that I am worthy of such a favor please pray for me that I may be delivered from this sad darkness. In hope and love,

L. H. HARDY.

ELDER P. D. GOLD, DEAR BROTHER:—I have been permitted to fill all of my appointments, and have been made to rejoice with some of God's dear children that are scattered in the upper part of S. C. At Mt. Pleasant, in Sumpter county, I baptized two brothers, and received one sister not yet baptized. At Columbia I received and baptized one brother, and here is the warmest little family of Primitive Baptists I ever met, five in number. I stayed with them two days and had to preach all time only while asleep. Oh how I love these dear ones, their company makes my cross easy to be borne. From Columbia, I went to Williamston, and was met there by a friend indeed, who also met me, or sent last November, who took me 12 miles to his home, a home indeed for Baptists. I tried to preach three days, and on Sunday I extended the privilege to all that loved the Primitive Baptist doctrine and wanted to follow it to come forward and give me their hand, and there were seven, four-brothers and three sisters. This is a destitute section, and this doctrine has not been preached in this section in forty years, till last November, and this is only the second time.

Dear brethren in the ministry, do not some of you that are traveling feel impressed to visit these destitute places? It would lighten my mind and comfort these dear people of God in the wilderness. I was well cared for, and taken back to Piedmont where I took the cars to Greenville and thence I went to Paris Mountain, where I remained for two days trying to preach. There is only one or two at this place that seem to love the truth, and there is one warm brother and sister there. From here I went to Cool Spring, where I have always been glad to meet those dear brothers and sisters since I first came up to see them. They are destitute of preaching, surrounded on every side by the enemies of truth. I go to see them twice a year.

I will say to all of them that I promised to write to, if this is published, I got home the 20th, found the family all up, better in health than when I left home. Oh, how thankful I ought to be for his mercy is great to me a poor sinner, often so unwilling to do my duty.

May the grace, mercy, and truth of the dear Redeemer guide us through the wilderness and save us in his kingdom above, is the prayer of a poor sinner.

YE CANNOT SERVE GOD AND MAMMON.

These words are found in Matt. 6 : 25. Things that are taking place and going on in my neighborhood and surrounding country I believe caused this portion of Scripture to roll across my mind. I will try to offer a few thoughts upon this subject.

First, We learn that holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. Then we understand that Matthew wrote this by God's direction, and all the words of God are pure and holy. This was written for our learning and instruction, then we do well to heed its teaching. "We cannot serve God and mammon," ye cannot serve God and the devil. No man can serve two masters, he will love one and hate the other, or else he will hold to the one and despise the other. No brother nor sister can serve God and love and serve in the evil ways and fashions of this evil world. The Scriptures teach us to abstain from every appearance of evil. Come out from her my people and be ye not partaker of her plagues, and touch not, nor handle not, nor taste not. All are to perish with the using thereof. "If any man will come after me let him first deny himself and take up his cross and follow me." If we say we hate the evil and devilish ways of the world and then run after them, where is the evidence that we tell the truth. "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." I see some of our brethren participating in worldly pleasures, such as playing checkers, and having christian balls and dances. I believe the people call them social entertainments. Now brethren, God is not served by any such conduct, neither is he well pleased with them that practice such things. You cannot find on record where the saints of old ever practiced such things. All the ways of God are righteousness, and everything that will not tend to the service of God will tend to the service of the devil or the world. Our subject says, "ye cannot serve God and mammon." If we undertake to do such we will be as a woman that has two husbands that are both living. She hates one of them, while she loves, serves and honors the other one. This brings about jealousy and malice, and consequently will bring on grievous fighting. One is likely to be slain, the other then will be hung, and the woman left a widow. This is an abomination to true wedlock. Even so in my weak judgment it is an abomination for Primitive Baptists to have balls or dances, or entertainments, or frolics of any kind in their houses, and then engage in playing checkers. It debases true christianity and causes the worldly-minded people to wage war with the saints. This is idolatry among our brethren. Now to serve God and mammon shows that we see no more beauty in God than we do in mammon. I believe the Scriptures teach us to count all things as loss for the excellency of Christ Jesus our Lord, and if the poor unworthy writer knows his feelings he was made to hate the things that he once loved, and love that he hated. So I have learned along by experience as well as the holy Scriptures, that I cannot love God and the devil too, nor serve God and mammon. Some of our brethren lead Predestination too far saying, "God intends them to do everything they do. The apostle Paul did not preach that doctrine. He preached saying, "if ye live after the flesh ye shall die: but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body ye shall live." Rom. 8: 13: If ye be willing and obedient ye shall eat the fat of the land: and again, if my children transgress my laws and set at nought my statutes and judgments, I the Lord will visit their transgression with the rod and their iniquities with stripes. If we can serve God and mammon and the Father of heaven be pleased at it, there would be no such thing as breaking his laws and setting at nought his statutes and judgments. To say that God has predestinated all the evil ways of the world would say at once that God has made a covenant with sin and death, and an agreement with the devil or mammon. Brethren, the God of a true Primitive Baptist is holy, just and pure, and makes no allowances for our sins. The apostle says "Some affirm that we say, let us do evil that good may come, whose damnation is just." Rom. 3: 8. Now if we ourselves say the Lord intends us to do evil, those that say such things about us do not slanderously report us. They tell the truth about us. God does not punish any one for telling the truth. So brethren let us turn from the evil of our way and serve the true and living God. "Ye cannot serve God and mammon: for where your treasure is there will your heart be." If we love the world we will serve the world: if we love God we will serve God. There is no mistake about that fact, and you will find it very difficult to serve both. Are you at ease in Zion? It seems like you are. How can a child of God sin and live at ease in Zion? Brethren, there is something wrong. Jesus says, "if ye love me ye will serve me, and to keep his commandments is to depart from every appearance of evil. Be ye separate from the world, love the brethren in the Lord, hate sin, and the lust of the flesh, mortify the desires of the mind, follow no man any farther than he follows Christ. We should adorn the profession that we have made by a well-ordered walk and a godly conversation, for religion never was designed to make our pleasures less.

O well, says some brother, I have children, and it is right for us to let them have some pleasure. Is it right for our children to play checkers? No, for it is gambling in the first degree, and many of our nation have received their death-blow at the gambling table, and these christian balls are nothing but a mock of religion. Is it right to make a mock of our profession? No, well then instead of a sugar stew or dance to get up a gathering, let us have a prayer meeting at our houses, and invite our brethren to come and sing and pray in our houses, and teach our children to sing some of the beautiful tunes found in Durand and Lester's hymn and tune books. If we do such things as worldlings allow just for fun, you are like the sow. She wallows in the mud because she wants to. You play checkers or cards because you want to do so. The dog eats his filthy vomit because he loves it. You allow entertainments at or in your houses because you love them. This will not do to be said brethren, for true Primitive Baptists are not guilty of such things. Woe unto you that are at ease in Zion: you had better make unto yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness that they may take care of you in the day of your destruction: for if ye want to serve God and mammon it is a true manifestation that you are not the servants of God. Then if ye are not the servants of God you are the servants of mammon: for ye cannot serve them both. I think if we take Paul's direction about our children we will have enough to do. "Ye fathers provoke not your children to wrath, but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." Eph. 6: 4. Here the words of Solomon concerning our children are good advice for us to go by. He says, "train up a child in the way he should go and when he is old he will not depart from it." Prov. 22: 6.

It seems to me that brethren show that they have had very bad training when they are practicing the above name evil things.

The brethren are making a general complaint about coldness in the churches, and they say they don't know the cause of it. I know some of the causes, what is it? It is because so many of the brethren have departed from their first love and are giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils, and have made a covenant with sinners, and love the wages of unrighteousness. Do not you think there is enough to cause coldness in a church or churches when these spirits get among brethren? I will make mention of a few more things and then close. I see that some of our brethren are carried away with these vain and perishing societies. If they can't join one way they will another. They persuade their children to join them, and they pay the policy through their children. Does that mend the matter? I answer no. Why? well, because our children are under our jurisdiction. While under age we are responsible for their conduct. Then if there is anything going on wrong by said society, and we pay our money through the hands of our child, do we help to support the evil or not? I answer, yes, If a set of men were to make an agreement to go to Tarboro to lynch a man, and it cost five dollars to go there, and I help to pay the fare of those men, though I don't go, am I guilty or not? Yes, I am. So brethren if we help to support these secret societies we are guilty of all their conduct. There is a great number of societies in the world unknown to me. How many men of these various societies are embittered one against the other? Let the potsherd of the earth strive with the potsherd of the earth, and let us keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. We are taught to seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all the necessities of life will be added unto us. O Israel, "Return unto the Lord thy God, for thou hast fallen by thine iniquity." Let mammon alone, and turn unto God thine help, confess your faults at once and repent of the evil of your doings, and the Lord will return unto you and restore your souls, and the brethren will have joy and gladness for your sakes. Oh that that self-denying Spirit that was in the apostle Paul could dwell in our brethren. He said, "If eating meat offend my brother, I will eat no more meat while the world stands. Brethren, love ye one another, and look not every one upon his own things, but upon the things of others, and go to church your meeting days, and help attend to the affairs that belong to the house of God, and let mammon's house stay filthy if he has not a mind to sweep it out himself. Let us not take any of our time with him, he is a bad master to serve. We can never satisfy him. Read the scriptures and give heed and with so much force. I thought I would write a few lines on it for the consideration of the readers of the LANDMARK, hoping if the editor would publish it it might comfort some one.

I remain yours, ever contending for gospel order with an humble hope in Christ.

DEAR AND ESTEEMED BROTHER—
In Christ: If you will accept such an expression from unworthy me. I wish to ask you one simple, but I think a very important question you may answer either by private letter or through the LANDMARK. Is it in order for an ordained Minister to receive or hear an experience from any person, and if in his Judgment the person is a proper subject for and demands Baptism of the Minister, in the absence of a church meeting, for the ordinance of Baptism to be administered by such minister. If so is the minister authorised to give such person or persons a written certificate of his administration recommending such person to any church of same faith and order, said minister being a Primitive Baptist in full fellowship with his church.

ANSWER TO BROTHER G. W. POUNCEY'S ENQUIRY.

The case of Philip and the Eunuch stands out as the most notable one on the matter. The angel of the Lord bid Phillip go to that certain desert, and the spirit bid him join himself to that certain chariot, so that it was under express direction of the Lord.

On the other hand, when Peter was commanded to go to the Gentiles he took several brethren as witnesses to strengthen the matter. Wherever there are churches or brethren near that could be witnesses it occurs to me it is wise and prudent for the ordained preacher to have brethren present in all such matters as receiving and baptizing people. Usually in the olden time preachers went out two and two. Jesus sent them out by twos. Paul and Silas, or Paul and Barnabas, and often some others went together. Our brothers in this country that travel and preach seem to hesitate about getting away from churches. It would be more like examples of the apostles and other early preachers if they would go out into the highways and hedges more, or go out into parts beyond more where others have not preached. There is not such need of their going to churches that have pastors or regular preaching. So that as they go in this country almost always where there are churches, if any desire to be baptized, it is an easy matter to get some brethren together to judge of experiences and not leave it all to the judgment of the preacher.

Where there is no church or brethren present and a preacher should find one that desires to be baptized, and he considers him a proper subject, I think he should baptize him, and give him a written statement of this to some church. But the church could exercise her judgment then about receiving him.

I believe those that are prepared to be baptized desire that the church should judge them, before they are baptized, and desire that the church should deal candidly with them.

We do not admire people that get up new things in the church. The patterns, commands and principles in the bible cover all the cases that are needful for all times for the churches.

THOUGHTS.

(By request.)

Now and then we find one who seems to be anxious to know the way sinners are saved, and others again who will tell you how it was done in their case, and yet they present and contend for an entirely different way whereby others are or must be saved. And to prove their theory they quote as proof-texts passages of Scripture which do not, to my understanding, prove it. I will present a few thoughts on some of these texts so often resorted to to prove the theory. The first text I will notice is in Gen. 6 : 3. "And the Lord said, my Spirit shall not always strive with man, for that he also is flesh; yet his days shall be an hundred and twenty years. This striving on the part of the Lord was not with men but was with man, which does not mean a personal or individual striving, but it was the Lord striving with man as a whole, and yet I do not understand that this striving was with all men, either individually or as a whole. In the first place the salvation of either man, or men is neither declared nor implied to be the object designed in this striving. The wickedness for which the flood was sent upon the earth was not that the reward of which is eternal punishment, except the Lord grant repentance, but the flood only, and corporeal death thereby was the reward of that wickedness here complained of by the Lord. Had man repented of this wickedness, he would have simply missed the flood and retained the hitherto special favors of his Creator, until he would have died like those before him. The destruction of all who were drowned by the flood was temporal and not eternal, just as the destruction of Jerusalem, and the churches that once existed and flourished in what is now termed the "Holy land." There were thousands of men in the days of Noah whose wickedness was not considered in the first and direct cause for the flood. In fact it might not have been thus considered, any more than were actions of the beasts of the field, fowls of the air, and fishes of the sea, all of which must die as a result of Adam's transgression.

The terms man, and men, or all men, do not embrace, necessarily at all times if they ever do, each and every one of those classes of animals belonging to the species of mankind.

Mankind are divided in the text, and context into two classes; designated by the terms men and man. Those referred to by the term man are also spoken of as the sons of God. These sons of God married the daughters of men, which thing was not right in the sight of God, for which cause he sent the flood and drowned them, except Noah and his family, and everybody else as well. He also destroyed every living thing that lived upon dry land except those that were saved in the ark. These sons of God were made up of the first born in a certain line from Adam, thro' Seth and Enoch. These sons stood as the type of the church of the first-born. It seems that these sons were not allowed to marry the daughters of men, or of those outside of their direct lineage. In their natures, "for that he also is flesh," they were disposed like others who were flesh to live after the flesh and for this manner of life they died. It is even so with the people of God in this day, "If ye live after the flesh ye shall die. As christians die to their temporal or true privileges and blessings so also those sons of God were by the flood cut off from natural blessings. And as the destruction of those sons, or man, involved the destruction of all men, so I am of the opinion that should the church become extinct, or so absorbed in fleshly pursuits of life or should fraternize with the religious world so as to lose its distinct characteristics, the world would be destroyed by fire, as it certainly will be some day. The church is the salt of the earth, and the light of the world. Should it become extinct in the United States, as it did in Asia, such a deluge of darkness would spread over this nation, as would in a few decades transform it into a mere habitation for bats and owls, and the grossest character of heathenish idolatry. It should be sufficient to produce the deepest sense of gratitude in the hearts of all men in this land of ours that the living and true God is known and worshipped here.

Had it been that the Lord was truly and indeed striving with the people in the days of Noah, as is claimed, it presents a deplorable prospect for the salvation of this corrupt nation, for in that case after the lapse of one hundred and twenty years the result was, as the Lord first declared, there was but one righteous man, and but eight whom he would under any consideration spare from the deluge. As we have the same God and the same carnal nature with which he strove if salvation is based upon the condition that men yield to his beseechings, then it follows that according to the antetype, which is quoted as a proof that the condition is such the world of mankind with but few exceptions is doomed to be destroyed by fire. But we have abundance of proof in the Scriptures that eternal salvation is not based upon that condition, but upon the sovereign will and power of God according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus.

Man, or the sons of God in that day, or dispensation, stood as did the Patriarchs in their dispensation and the children of Israel in the law dispensation, and the church in this the gospel day.

The Lord has in each day or dispensation of time had a special and peculiar class of individuals with which he has dealt in a peculiar way to that of the rest of mankind. He has never dealt so with any other nation.

"The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge: but fools despise wisdom and instruction."

"My son hear the instruction of thy father, and forsake not the law of thy mother."

ELDER P. D. GOLD, DEAR SIR:— Please give your views through the LANDMARK of 33rd, chapter of Ezekiel, and especially the 11th verse. I heard a Missionary Baptist preach from that text, and I desire to hear your views on it as he, according to my understanding, misconstrued the text, taking the house of Israel as the whole sinful world, and that if we do not turn to the Lord within ourselves that he will never save a single soul.

In my understanding the prophet Ezekiel in the 11th verse of the above named chapt. was speaking to the church or the house of God.

J. S.

Remarks.

Yes, the Missionary system puts forth the view that all the world is as Israel, that one is not more elect of God than another, but all the whole world of mankind are equally as the Israel of God, and that each man must first begin the work of salvation and then God is bound to regard such.

The system the Missionaries hold compels them to take the position that all men are God's children on the condition that they do certain things, that Christ died for all mankind equally, but that the salvation of none is made sure save as they repent—that therefore the Lord depends on mankind to send the gospel to the heathen, and thus work for Jesus and help him to save souls. In other words they frame a theory to suit carnal reason and then endeavor to interpret the scriptures according to their view of the matter.

The house of Israel in the type did not include the Canaanites that were cast out and destroyed, nor the Egyptians overthrown in fighting against Israel, nor the Babylonians, nor the Edomites against whom the Lord had indignation forever, nor the Philistines that warred with Israel. Nor does the house of Israel in the ante-type therefore embrace all the natural seed of Adam. If there is anything taught in the Bible it is taught that God has an elect people whom he did foreknow, and that the redeeming death of Jesus perfects them forever by one offering of himself once.

All our views, interpretations and expositions of scripture, as well as all our exhortations, are based on the doctrine of the gospel that the grace of God bringeth salvation.

The house of Israel in the ante-type embraces all the chosen of God and the redeemed in Jesus Christ, and such as hunger and thirst after righteousness manifest thus that they are of that number.

But Israel in the type here sets forth a disobedient and gainsaying people to whom the Lord sends prophets, yet do not repent. They are a wicked people and in their transgression are cut off and die. Now may we not expect that in the gospel there is to be the answer to this type, the response to this so clearly foreshadowed under the law. To suppose that because salvation is by grace that therefore one redeemed and born of God, yet still in the flesh, has no need of watching or keeping his body under, or giving diligence to make his calling sure, would be as unwise as for an ancient Israelite to suppose that because the Lord had delivered Canaan into his hand, and put him in possession of that land, that therefore he could serve as many idols as he chose to without any danger of losing the benefits of that land. Still he must not suppose his abstaining from false worship, and his cleaving unto the Lord, is any more the cause of being kept from evil than good works under the gospel are the cause of ones being redeemed by Jesus Christ. Suppose that a Jew, we will instance David, should say that his obedience to God in killing Goliath was the cause of his being an Israelite, or of his being anointed king, would that be good reasoning? Was not David a Jew by birth? Was he not born one? What act did David perform to make him a Jew? Was he not anointed king before he slew Goliath? His actions and speech showed that he was a Jew already. Make the tree good and his fruit will be good.

Suppose that Paul had reasoned that his preaching the gospel, or some other good work, was the cause of his being loved and called of God, and his keeping his body under was the reason why he obtained mercy and was born of God, and because he loved the brethren the Lord called him by grace to the knowledge of salvation.

But as Israel after the Lord had placed them in the Land of Canaan were under every obligation to serve and honor God, so in the gospel we belong to God and should glorify him in our body and spirit which are his. Under the law Israel could not enjoy the literal blessings of Canaan except in obedience, and must necessarily in disobedience go in distress, and as in death there was none of the pleasure of the Lord, and could not be, for his pleasure is just the opposite of death, and is always life and peace; so in the gospel those that sow to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting, but those that sow to flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption: for whatsoever one sows that shall he also reap. The land of Canaan being a type of the gospel, the one shows the other. Just as an obedient Jew ate the good of that goodly land which brought plentifully to the obedient, but to the disobedient the land refused to yield her increase, and the Canaanite would oppress such: so in the ante-type the child of God that walks by faith enters into the joy of his Lord and enjoys the rest that remains to the people of God. But if one walks after the fleshly principles of his nature he must eat of the bitter fruits of his own doings. While he walks by faith he eats at the Lord's table, but when he serves the flesh he dies.

There are many lusts of the flesh and many idols that steal the affections of the men of Israel away and defile the land. There are many that sin and commit folly in Israel and must die.

Now is there any of the Lord's pleasure or peace in such conduct? No indeed. The Lord has no pleasure in the death of the sinner. Where the pleasure of the Lord is there is no death. He that keeps the sayings of Jesus shall never die. As under the law the Lord reproved and exhorted Israel, so in the gospel there are exhortations and reproofs of his word and spirit.

What then is the difference between the law and gospel? The law related to fleshly or temporal blessings affecting the natural man. For instance. The Jew that violated the law in breaking the sabbath was stoned to death. In the gospel the blessings of obedience are in joy of heart, soul, mind and strength, inner joys of heart, peace of mind, fellowship of truth. The Jew inwardly quickened by the spirit of God to love things of God, not corn and wine, figs and pomegranates, milk and butter, literal temple worship, long life naturally, but to love the things represented by these emblems. He loves the things of God that are revealed by the spirit of God. He loves Jesus. He loves heaven. He loves truth. His affection is on things above. His joys are spiritual and heav-

only, holy and true. But if any of the abominations of the flesh decoy and ensnare him he is taken captive by them, stript of his peace and joy, defiled, imprisoned, and bereft of all his comfort and filled with shame. How sore is this punishment. How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation, if under the first testament every disobedience and transgression received a just recompense of reward, though under that testament God spake by men (prophets,) but in the last one by his Son.

But under the first testament when a transgressing Jew was punished even to death he was still a Jew. It did not make him a Philistine, nor a Canaanite. So a disobedient christian even if he dies does not become thereby an infidel or an uncircumcised one. If your child disobeys your laws even so as to abandon or be driven from home, still he is your child. A child of God may sin so as to die to all comforts of the spirit, and have none of the pleasure of the Lord in his heart, still he is a child of God, still an Israelite, but one in whom guile is found, one on whom shame rests, and that feels what a bitter thing sin is.

O House of Israel, why will ye die? Do you not have a lustful nature that is of the earth, and is it not a matter of grief and shame to you that you sin? To me it is a matter of shame and grief that I sin. Oh how foolish to sin. He that sinneth wrongeth his own soul. Why will ye die O House of Israel, not house of Esau.

Yet we do sin. There is no man that liveth and sinneth not.

P. D. G.

GOOD PART.

Mr. G. T. Cook requests my view of Luke 10: 42;

"But one thing is needful; and Mary hath chosen that good part, which shall not be taken from her".

While there are many things that trouble, not merely busy house-keepers, but others also, and while these things to us seem to be so important that they swallow up our entire attention and most of our time, so that we spend our years as a tale that is told, in heart consuming care and mind-bewildering anxiety over matters that advance us not one step toward eternal happiness, nor give us one crumb of solid spiritual comfort in the present life, yet there is but one thing we need. Who of us knows how to live? Naturally what one of us would choose the part that Mary did? We choose according to the principle that is in us, or according to our taste and desire. As things appear to us, and according to the prevailing principle of our nature we choose. If the prevailing principle of our nature is evil then we choose that which is evil. As things appear to us we decide. What principle is there in human nature that desires any thing contrary to nature? Are we not of the earth earthy, and do we not cleave to the dust? The whole man body and spirit is corrupt.

Joshua said to the carnal Israelites, if it seem evil to you to serve the Lord, choose you this day whom you will serve. If it seem evil to you to serve the Lord then choose between the false gods of your fathers on the other side of the flood, and the false gods of these Amorites among ye dwell. You can choose between false gods. But would the spirit that considers it evil to serve the true God ever choose to serve him? The spirit that considers it evil to serve the true God loves to serve a false god, for all people serve some sort of a god.

The declaration of Elijah to the Baal-worshippers is full of truth and wisdom. If the Lord be God follow him; but if Baal then follow him. Should we not follow the true God? But does it follow that people will always do that? If people were always to do that which they ought there would be no false gods. For such gods are the works of men's minds or hands. Most people are gods to themselves worshipping their own works or imaginations.

There is but one true God, the God of Israel, and he is known by revelation. The knowledge of him must be in the heart and then the heart and affection will choose him. Then one will say "Whom have I in heaven but thee, and there is none on earth I desire beside thee." As one sees and knows Jesus the Son of God in truth and the chiefest among ten thousand and the one altogether lovely, he will choose Jesus with the whole heart, and then will he be found of him as that one thing needful which shall not be taken from him. For to have the right disposition of spirit to seek Jesus never can fail of everlasting blessedness.

When one sees the truth and knows the Lord Jesus in truth, he not only knows that Jesus is that good part, but he also knows that there is nothing else good, or that he alone is that good part and that he that chooses that good part which shall never be taken away.

Mary loved Jesus. She knew more than any one of the disciples, for she knew that he was to be crucified, and therefore she brought that box of precious ointment and anointed him beforehand to his burial, and this is inseparably connected with the crucifixion and shall be told with it. Then Mary knew more truly who Jesus is than any other one, and therefore she loved him most and loving him most as she saw in him all she desired. He is that good part, the one thing needful, that shall never be taken from her. She willingly sits at his dear feet that she loved to wash, and hears his words. What a blessed place to be.

We read this and think how much better Mary's choice than Martha's. Hers was worldly care, labor and toil with no reward. But was it Martha's choice to be cumbered about much serving? She did choose it in a sense, though if she had loved it much she would not have been complaining at her lot. It was that spirit that so constantly binds us to serve and toil on earth with no reward. But when we sit down at the feet of Jesus and hear his words we have all we need, we see in him all we need, we want nothing else. But when we drift away in toiling and laboring for the things that perish we find no good in these things, but vexation of the spirit, and we envy others then. No one is right while murmuring or envying others.

P. D. G.

JOSHUA 24: 15:

(By request.)

"And if it seem evil unto you to serve the Lord, choose you this day whom ye will serve; whether the gods which your fathers served that were on the other side of the flood, or the gods of the Amorites, in whose land ye dwell: but as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord."

This is a favorite text with many to prove that the sinner is given to choose either the Lord or the devil, and as he chooses so it is with him.

If one is left to the freedom of his own will, there is no one to whom he is or can be held responsible, whatever he does is right as is granted in the license he has to do as he pleases. What would be the use of our lawmakers enacting a law punishing thieves for acts of theft, and then pass another law granting them the privilege to steal or let it alone just as they might choose? The Lord says thou shalt have no other gods before me. Then does it follow that he could with propriety say. You may have other gods exclusively if you choose? He undoubtedly means that his people shall serve him and him only. There can not be an instance cited in all the scriptures where the Lord has given his people, or any one else a choice between him and other gods, or between right and wrong, life or death.

In this instance in Joshua the people of God whom he had brought up out of Egypt are the ones addressed. They had turned aside from serving the Lord, which is contrary to his law and had them false gods, such as were served on the other side of the flood. They were insincere in their worship. With their lips they professed to serve the Lord, but their hearts were really set on idols, and therefore were far from the Lord. Joshua exhorted them to put away the gods which their fathers served on the other side of the flood, to fear the Lord and serve him in sincerity and in truth. And if it seem evil in you to serve the Lord, choose between the gods of your fathers, or the gods of the Amorites, but as for me and my house we will serve the Lord. It is readily seen that he gave them no choice between those gods and the Lord, but the choice was between those gods, the service of one of which had brought on the flood, and the other had brought the curse of God upon the Amorites, and upon Israel, and would again. An idol is nothing that should be worshipped, therefore one is as good as another, and either is an abomination in the sight of God. If one does not worship God, he may worship either the sun or the moon, and the curse of God rests upon him just the same in either case, hence while he may choose between them the choice amounts to nothing save to incur the displeasure and condemnation of the Lord. But they protested against the idea of forsaking the Lord who had done so much for them, and said, "We will serve the Lord for he is our God". But Joshua told them they could not serve the Lord: "For he is an holy God; he is a jealous God; he will not forgive your transgressions nor your sins." Why could they not serve him? Because they wanted to hold on to their gods and serve the Lord also. They did not agree to put these strange gods away, but Joshua pressed the matter, and made them witnesses against themselves, and exhorted them to put away the strange gods which were among them, and incline their hearts unto the Lord, and they promised to serve the Lord, and obey his voice. And Joshua made a covenant with them, and set up a great stone, which should be a witness unto them. They had then strange gods, and had set up Christ the faithful and true witness unto them.

I fear there are many of the people of God to-day who profess to be worshippers of God, and yet are holding to idols or strange gods. Things which are strange to their heart-felt experience and hope. If the Lord alone makes what we call christians, then they should worship in that light.

We are no where authorized to either choose or do that which is not right in the sight of God, and God's people know what is right and what is wrong. They are taught in their experience the right way and should walk in it.

P. G. L.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—I request your views through the LANDMARK on certain portions of scripture. In the first place I want you to read all of the fifth chapter of first Corinthians, for it all treats on the same subject concerning a man that had his father's wife. Paul admonished the brethren to deliver such a one to satan for the destruction of the flesh and &c., to purge out the old leaven and &c., Then he says therefore put away from among yourselves that wicked person. I think it all meant to exclude him from the church. You can give your views on it. Then I desire you turn to the second chapter of Second Corinthians commencing at the 5th verse, and notice the following to the 12th. and tell me what man that was Paul admonished the brethren to forgive and comfort and &c.

The LANDMARK comes to us very regularly. We are much comforted in reading it. Your Brother in hope of eternal life, as I trust.

J. W. ELLISON.

Remarks.

Brother Ellison, I am satisfied you have the right view of this matter. For Paul instructs the church to deliver this man, who had his father's wife, to Satan for the destruction of the flesh. That is one of the uses Satan is for. He eats up all such filth. A sound man in the faith and in walk has nothing in him Satan loves. A buzzard has no appetite for a sound, healthy body, but he loves carcass, or that which is corrupt. Satan feeds on the vile fleshly works of this people. Here is a man guilty of the most shameful and filthy conduct of having his father's wife. That man is not to be fellowshiped. The church should have mourned over his case and withdrawn from him, and not keep his company as a member, not even to eat with him. For the church of God is not to fellowship such ungodly conduct.

To withdraw fellowship from a disobedient member who does not repent is the proper remedy. This delivers him to Satan, if he is a child of God. If he is not he already belongs to Satan. If he is a child of God when he is delivered to Satan it is that his fleshly principles and walk may be destroyed. For Satan is as a roaring lion seeking whom he may devour. He will sift a child of God as wheat, if he is permitted to do so, that the chaff may be burned up.

What a gracious and wonderful deliverance if we are watchful and able to keep our bodies in subjection, and walk in the spirit so that Satan shall get no advantage of us.

The best thing that can be done to a disobedient child of God that does not repent is, after the church has faithfully labored with him for correction, to turn him over to Satan for the destruction of the flesh. That is the best thing for him, and for the church, and the cause. Indeed a church has no right to do otherwise in such a case, and sins if she does not do so.

When that is done as Jesus commands it will do good to bring the erring one to his proper senses. If the church is faithful in laboring with one, first telling him of his fault, and seeking to reclaim him, but he will not hear, there is no other remedy. It will endamage the church then if it is not done.

When a christian becomes a transgressor he is in that view of the matter a wicked person, and when he is turned over into the hand of Satan he will be brought into distress; and if God grants him repentance, which is manifested by his grief and sorrow, when this appears then the church shall restore such an one to his place in the church. It would be wrong to themselves and to the repenting one not to restore him by restoring their love unto him. It would be a wrong to the church and to the suffering one that a church should not be willing to rest under, therefore they should restore such a one lest he be overwhelmed with over-much sorrow

Obituary.

ELDER B. E. CAUDILL.

We regret to inform you of his death which occurred on the morning of the 11th of Feb. on his return from a tour of appointments in Tennessee. He was en route to the railroad, being driven in a buggy by a friend, when he was taken with a severe chill, I am informed, on the road, and called at a brother Cass' to rest. But he was never able to rally any more to pursue his journey, and I am informed he suffered intensely for ten days, after which he became easy and remained quiet until he fell asleep in Jesus.

Surely a good and great man has gone to his reward. Having obtained help of the Lord he continued and remained steadfast to the end with his feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace.

He died on the field of battle, facing and confronting the enemy to the last, seeking the union and communion of the association of saints. This for years seemed to be his greatest ambition on earth, namely to effect a line of union and communion among the Baptists from the East to the West with the North and South. His remains were brought to London, Ky and interred near his son-in-law, Henry Yadens, on Thursday the 14th.

He was followed to the grave by his dear wife, children and a goodly number of relations and brethren, besides a host of kind friends to his last resting-place on earth.

Brother, in that solemn trust,
We commend thee dust to dust,
In that faith we wait 'till risen,
Thou shalt meet us all in heaven

It is unnecessary for me to say in honor to his dear name that he was an extraordinary man, for those who knew him are living witnesses of this truth in whose memory his dear name will ever live as a citizen, christian and minister of the gospel of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

And with that ability the good Lord had given him he was fearless and faithful, never shunning to declare the whole counsel of God. Maintaining the doctrine of unconditional and particular Election to salvation by grace, through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, for which truth sake he was falsely accused, his name cast out, confronting the reproaches of a gain-saying and God-dishonouring world, but none of these things moved him, neither did he count his life dear unto himself, but chose rather to suffer affliction with the people of God than to enjoy the pleasures of this world. Poor, yes, in this world's goods, but rich in faith and an heir of God, well done thou faithful servant, enter into the joys of the Lord.

Farewell, dear yoke, fellow-laborer,

In the ministry of God's word.

I am left alone, thy absence to mourn,

But the Lord is my shepherd, I'll still pass on

To meet you in heaven and sorrow no more.

MARTHA BROWN.

Please publish the death of Sister Martha Brown, wife of Brother Richard Brown, who was born in Sumpter Co., S. C., where she lived until her death. She was born in the year of 1828, March 15th, married to Jesse Brown May, 1859, and became his widow in 1863, and became the wife of Brother Richard Brown in 1869, and was baptised by Elder Daniel Wootten in the year 1857. She lived a consistent member of the Primitive Baptist Church until the day of her death. Sister Brown was an affectionate wife and a devoted christian, and proved her faith by her works. She as well as brother Brown were always glad to see Baptists come, and their house was a home for Baptists. She was stricken down with Paralysis on the 17th of Nov. 1888, and died in about twelve hours, leaving Brother Brown alone to mourn his sad bereavement. But we hope that his loss is her eternal gain. May the Lord sustain him with his grace and enable him to be resigned to the will of God who does all things right, is my desire.

THOS. BELL.

HARRIET BROWN.

Sister Harriet Brown, wife of brother John Brown, departed this life Jan. 21st, 1889. Sister Brown joined the Primitive Baptist Church in 1856 and was a consistent member for thirty-two years of her life. She was born in Sumpter Co., July the 8th, 1815, died Jan. 21st, 1889, making 64 years, 6 months and 13 days. She was married in the year 1841, and lived with her husband nearly 47 years. Sister Brown was a devoted christian and an affectionate wife and mother. She was the mother of eight children, three sons and one daughter living to mourn, but not as those who have no hope. One son and three daughters are dead. Sister Brown as well as brother Brown were always ready to administer to the needy, and their house was always a home for Baptists at all times. Brother Brown is now left with one son who is afflicted, to keep house, all the others having married off.

THOS. BELL.

JOHN SWINSON.

Departed this life on the 20th of Nov. 1888, Brother John Swinson. He was seventy six years, eleven months, and thirteen days old. He had been a consistent member of the Primitive Baptist Church at Moratock, Washington Co., for quite a number of years. He was taken sick quite suddenly and died 16 hours after he was taken, of heart disease. Medical attention failed to relieve him, though he did not seem to suffer much pain. He died perfectly conscious, saying, just before his death, that he was very tired, and that he would soon be better off. He seemed to know that the Lord had called him when he was first taken, and accepted the summons, saying calmly, when asked about his business, "that nothing of that kind troubled him then." Philosophic in his temperament, wise in his conduct, governed in all his actions by reason and judgment, deeply imbued with Bible knowledge and wisdom, this virtuous and christian man lived the term of his life at the age the Psalmist David assigns for the limit of man's life, viz :— "The days of our years are three score years and ten, and if by reason of strength they be four-score, yet is their strength labor and sorrow ; for it is soon cut off and we fly away." He believed in family prayer and practiced it many years. And may the uprightness of his life and faith in the Lord Jesus prove to be of incalculable benefit to those he loved in this life.

His example was such as to be of lasting effect upon the morals of the community, and his godly conversation showed him to be well versed in Bible logic, or that he had studied to show himself approved unto God. His example of evening prayer by the fireside of his paternal abode has inculcated within its circle of inmates a serious disposition whenever the hour for its usual time arrives, and his aged widow cannot in the loneliness of the hour refrain from a feeling of loneliness and dejection as her thoughts revert to the by-gone scenes. She is well advanced in age, and surrounded by her children who are tenderly solicitous of her advanced age and comfort. May the Lord comfort her in her bereavement, and may an effulgent ray of her former happiness be tendered to her, from him who is the Father of the fatherless and husband of the widow.

MARTHA LANE.

It has been sometime since the death of my dear aunt, Martha Lane, and I feel it a duty of mine to say something in regard to her well spent life. I trust to God to guide me, that I may be able to tell as near as I can the truth of her life as I heard it from her own lips. She had entered, if I mistake not, her 70th year, died March, 1887. To begin : she took charge of her father's large family at twelve years of age, her mother having died, and the responsibility of the family of 8 or 10 falling upon her at such a tender age. She lived with her father, my grandfather, Lemon Lane, and raised 7 of the children to be grown men and women, 5 girls, and two boys, one of the girls, mother, another my step-mother. They were raised near the Falls of Tar River.

Brother Gold, few sisters like this you find.
Her whole life was spent in trying to make others comfortable and happy. Oh! how I have missed her. After raising her father's family, their names I feel impressed to mention. The boys William Lane, Frank Lane. The girls, Ann L. Lane, Sarah J.
Lane, Emily Lane, Susan F. Lane, Kiddia Lane. And first of all, but last here, was Aunt Martha who never married and was often heard to say, if asked why she did not,
"I didn't have time to get married. I was always too busy." My mother married my father Kenneth Thigpen and lived in the upper part of Edgecombe Co. Some children were born to them, all raised to be grown, except one, who died in infancy. My mother died when I was quite young, being only about 10 years of age. She asked Aunt Martha on her dying bed to stay with us and raise us, which she did, and was a mother indeed to us all. My father survived my mother only about two years and 6 or 7 months. My step-mother Susan F.
Thigpen survived my father 15 years, through trials and tribulation. After my father's death Aunt Martha was greatly afflicted by a cancer which came in her left breast. She after doing all she could herself went to Dr. Pittman of Tarboro.
After examination he told her to poultice two or three weeks, and see if it could not be brought to a head, but it kept getting larger when she went again and he pronounced it Encaphaloid or Brainlike cancer, and told her it would have to be taken off, as death stared her in the face. It was you know the power of God that enabled her to go through with this terrible ordeal. Nor do I know that she ever entertained any hope of eternal life until that time. She told me as she was going over the bridge at Tarboro still burdened with the trouble, and these words came to her, "Though I pass through the valley and shadow of death yet I fear no evil". She said she felt light and good, and felt like she could bear anything.
It was taken off by Dr. Pittman and other Drs, in a few days, and she under-went that trial without taking anything, except a little toddy made of brandy. I guess the Lord was with her. After that she lived 15 years. Or she would say it has been 15 years, and it has returned again. It reminded me of Hezekiah. On our return from Whitaker's association she found it returning and showed it to Fannie Thigpen, my sister and myself. We tried to hope it was not a return of the cancer, and did all we could for her, but all availed nothing. Her time had come, and she must go. I saw her sickness and death in a vision a year before she died, but didn't know the meaning until it came to pass, but before she died these words came to me, "To the end that ye might be established." Too much cannot be said of this good and noble aunt of ours. Of course she was not perfect, as there is no perfection in the flesh. She would work just as long as she could, and we would beg her to rest, telling her she had done enough, now we would wait on her, but she would say, I rather wear out than to rust out. Whenever I would do anything to hurt her dear old feelings, it would grieve me, Oh! so much. I believe she is now at rest with all the white robed throng, and may we, whom she raised from infancy, live to love and honor her who has set this example for us. She was helping us to raise our children when she died, and they all loved her. "Who can find a virtuous woman, for her price is far above rubies." I neglected to say she joined the Primitive Baptist church, at Cross Roads, in Edgecombe Co. and was a member there 'till she died, very near 15 years, for she joined in a short while after her great trial. She was with me for three months after the cancer made its appearance the last time. And I wish I could tell you what I under-went during the time and after she left my house to go to my sister's, Mrs. V. B. Knights, where she died in March, after leaving us in Jan. I hoped and prayed, Oh! the anguish of my soul, none knows but me and my God. Oh! that she could only be spared to me, but God knew best. My sisters, Mrs Knight, Fannie Thigpen, and sister Mary F. Hyman were all present when she died. Her sufferings were intense. "It is through great tribulation we are to enter the kingdom". Thus ended a meek and lowly life in a glorious death.

FLEMMING COLE.

Deacon Flemming Cole was born June 25 1828, and died of typhoid-pneumonia May the 14, 1888, aged 57 years, 11 months and 19 days.

He was married to Abigail Vest, Sept 2d. 1852.

He professed a hope in Christ and after several years joined the church at Laurel Creek, in Floyd County, Va. about the year 1866. The church soon saw in him gospel qualification for the office of deacon and in 1872 he was ordained to that work. Being truly a man full of the Holy Ghost, he filled the position to which he was assigned to a degree rarely attained by those set apart to that office.

He was not a man that made a superficial display before men to be seen of them, but his work was done in an unpretending way, and was to the point and effectual, and demonstrated a depth of thought and an honesty and firmness of conviction characteristic of the Spirit of God, by which he no doubt was led. He was one who undoubtedly used the office of deacon well, and in the spirit purchased to himself a good degree and great boldness in the faith which is in Christ Jesus. While his conduct and conversation were well befitting the profession he had made and the position to which he had been assigned in the church, yet owing to the unassuming qualities prominent in his general character and deportment, they did show forth fully to the general public the spiritual-mindedness that produced and prompted the pure motives and desires of his heart. In fact I am of the opinion that the church scarcely realized the full depth of his inward character, as it has in the absence of his timely counsels and wholesome admonitions, which he often gave at the proper time, and in the proper place, with meekness, gentleness and Godly fear.

He was prompt in business, and patient in matters of distress in the church. On points of discipline he was generally clear and decisive, and rarely let an opportunity pass when he felt that it was necessary that he should speak or act. And therefore his services were of great value both to the church and pastor. His daily concern was the welfare of the church, and the good of the cause. He did not sleep as do others, but watched and kept sober. He was vigilant and careful for the peace of the church, and promptly searched out the cause of any difficulty, and if possible effected peace without the matter being brought to the notice of the church.

But few who knew him best are prepared to fully estimate his worth either as a citizen or as a member of the church. The effect of his influence in either capacity was more easily discerned than was the source whence it came. Like the little flower, hid in some quiet nook, sending forth its pleasant fragrance which is only found by the industrious bee which seeks the sweetness hid away in its tiny folds; so was this good man sending forth from his quiet unassuming walk in life wholesome influence. While he himself was only found by those who seek after goodly pearls.

Brother Cole was naturally what the world calls a good man, therefore his own vile, carnal nature was his greatest enemy, against which he often brought strong accusations, and continually fought with the prevailing power of the Prince of Peace, by which he no doubt finally triumphed and is now at rest with Jesus. During the first part of his sickness he expressed a desire to live a few years longer, but was willing that the will of the Lord be done. His faith in Christ was strong, and his interest in the church unabated to the last. He left his dear companion Sister Cole, and one son, together with many friends and brethren to mourn his loss and absence, but they have an abiding assurance that it is well with him.

'What cheering words are these:
Their sweetness who can tell?
In time and to eternal days,
'Tis with the righteous well.'

P. G. L.

MARY BROWN.

The subject of this notice was born in Sumpter Co., S. C., March, 24th, 1832, where she lived until death called her home.

She was baptized by Elder Daniel Wooten in 1856, was a consistent member until death, always filled her seat at church meetings, was strong in the faith of salvation by grace. Sister Brown was a widow indeed. She lost her husband during the Confederate war, had four children, three of which are left to mourn her death, but have a good hope that she is at rest. May the Lord bless them. She died April, 1888. This church at Mount Pleasant has lost 3 worthy members in less than 12 months and received by baptism 4.

"The Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away, blessed be the name of the Lord."

The Purpose of Zion's Landmark.

"Ask for the old paths where is the good way."

By the help of the Lord this paper will contend for the ancient Landmark, guided by its stakes of Truth, and strengthened by its chords of Love.

It hopes to reject all traditions and institutions of men, and regard only the Bible as the standard of truth.

It urges the people to search the Scriptures, and obey Jesus the King in the holy hill of Zion, keeping themselves unspotted from the world.

It aims to contend for the mystery of the faith in God and the Father, Jesus the Mediator, and the Holy Spirit the blessed Comforter.

All lovers of Gospel truth are invited to write for it—if so impressed.

May grace, mercy, and peace be multiplied to all lovers of truth.

The Subscription Price of Zion's Landmark.

ZION'S LANDMARK.

DEVOTED TO THE CAUSE OF JESUS.

A PILGRIM.

BROTHER GOLD :—I have been impressed in my mind to write to you for a long time, but have put it off from time to time, fearing that it was myself and not of God, and I would get it off my mind, for I feel so weak and imperfect I don't think I could say anything of any worth within myself to a child of God. One night when I went to bed I tried to ask the Lord in my feeble prayer that if it was his will, to give me some manifestation of it in my sleep that night. I went to sleep sooner than usual and dreamed that I was in a house by myself, and some person came in with an ax in his hand and gave it to me, saying you must go to work in the Lord's vineyard, and must use this ax. I thought it strange that I had to work with an ax, but said nothing, only told him that I would do the best I could if it was the Lord's will. I looked to see who it was, and it was Jesus. He then spoke to me and said, "you are one of my beloved ones and your heart has often been my dwelling place, and I have much work required of you." I said, blessed Jesus, could it be possible that you have ever dwelt in this poor heart of mine, and I awoke from my sleep trying to praise God for his goodness to me, though it is still a mystery to me that God should require labor of me, and to use the ax too, a poor unworthy being as I feel myself to be. "And now the ax is laid unto the root of the trees, therefore every tree that bringeth forth not good fruit is hewn down and cast into the fire." Matt. 3 : 10. John was talking to the Pharisees and the Sadducees, such as we have in our day. He wanted some evidence, or in other words, fruits of repentance : so I believe when he used the word ax he laid the doctrine of regeneration before them, and of the new birth, as Jesus did to Nicodemus when he came to Jesus by night, and called him Rabbi. Jesus said to him, "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God. Nicodemus was ignorant of the second birth, and I suppose he felt much cut down, for he could not see how these things could be. The reason he could not was because he was not brought out of darkness into the marvelous light of God's kingdom. I often think of Nicodemus in my troubles and travails from nature to grace if I ever had any. It was 8 years from the time I believe the Lord showed me my wretched and sinful condition before I was brought into the light and knowledge of God as I hope I have been, though during the time of my troubles the Lord was very good to me, better than I thought I deserved. He dropped me many little crumbs of comfort, for which I felt mighty thankful to him and could rejoice and praise him for his goodness to me, but could not take it for religion. I think there must be something done for me more than a pleasant dream, or a sweet word of comfort from God, as I believe I often heard the word of Jesus in the 3rd, chapter of John, and 7th verse, "Marvel not that I said unto you, ye must be born again." These words would often come in my mind, and seemed that they were spoken directly to me, and that they meant exactly what they said. I told no one my feelings, and kept my troubles to myself and bore them the best I could until I came to the end of my own strength. Then I thought God had forsaken me forever, and that I was bound to die right there and then, a poor, God-forsaken sinner and would receive my just reward in the flames of hell, for I had made many faithful promises to God and had broken the last one I ever made, so I felt to be a poor and helpless sinner before God, not able to raise my eyes to the God of heaven, for there was no strength in me. I felt the bed I was lying on cleaving asunder, and I could feel myself sinking into an awful hell. I tried to raise my hand toward heaven, but could not move it. I could only breathe my prayer to God for mercy. My prayer was, I know that thou art able to have mercy on me if thou wilt, and save me from this awful death. I believe he is a God of mercy, for to my great surprise he put forth his hands and burst the bands of satan that bound my soul so fast, and set the prisoner free. It was there I saw the glorious light of liberty and felt its effects in this poor heart of mine. It was there I could feel safe in saying, My God and my Savior, and praise him on high. I then felt the effects of the power that brought salvation down. Here is the fruit of repentance that I believe John was talking about, and this is the birth that Jesus was talking to Nicodemus about. The word born means to be delivered. This is when we see and feel the special need of a Saviour in our deliverance. I was talking with a member of the Baptist church once, I used the language of the Apostle to Timothy, 4th, chap. and 10 verse, for therefore we both labor and suffer reproach, because we trust in the living God who is the Saviour of all men, specially of those that believe, and he said he did not understand that Scripture, that he could not see where the specialty came in. I tried to tell him how precious God was to a redeemed child of grace, that he had done more for them than he had for those that are yet in their sins. He said it was a mystery to him. I don't claim to be a judge of God's people, neither do I want to cut off any of them, for I love them too well; but if they fall at the words of God I can't help it. It seems to me if they had ever been born they would know something about it. I never heard of a child being born asleep, though we will leave them for God to judge. He is a wonderful counselor. He teaches us all that we know, and all our blessings come from him. I feel that I have received many crumbs of comfort from him.

I thought Satan and all his host was there shouting, "O we'll get you now," for we are men. O Brother Gold, this was a sad time with me in my dream as I had no one to go with me through this dark gloomy place, nothing to bear me along, but my little hope. I held fast to that, and it was enough, for with all that satan could do or say it bore me safely through, and when I crossed the great river I left satan and all his temptations behind me. Then I thought my great Redeemer met me with a smile and said you have fought a good fight and the reward is yours. He took my hand and said,

Come ye weary Pilgrim,
Come and rest your weary head,
You are free from your assailants,
By the blood that Jesus shed.

Oh what a beautiful place I thought it was. I then awoke from my sleep, and raised up in my sleep to see where I was, and found I was not where I dreamed I was. Brother Gold, words cannot express my feelings. I thought could it be possible that this would be my happy lot. I hope you will pray for me that when I leave this troublesome world I may be able to reach that beautiful land of rest. Yours in hope of eternal life,

MARTHA A. UNDERWOOD.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—I feel impressed to write a few lines on this scripture. Does the scripture teach that a soul which has been regenerated, been washed and made white in the blood of the lamb, been born-again, one who has been saved by the grace of God, can afterward be lost? I answer no. I will now proceed to prove by God's word the truth of my answer. Man in a state of nature is condemned, lost, dead in trespasses and sins, and wholly unable to save himself. This being his condition, it pleased God to provide himself an offering in the person of his Son and to accomplish the salvation of those who should believe in his name through the merits of his blood, by grace are ye saved through faith, and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God, not of works, lest any man should boast. Eph. 2:8,9. "Which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God." John 1:13. "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believed in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." John 3:16. We see from these passages that salvation is wholly of God, then if he has begun to save a soul will he not accomplish it? I take the position that he will, being confident of this verything that he that hath begun a good work in you will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ, Phil. 1:6. He who is born again is an heir of God and a joint heir with Christ. He is already saved, already in possession of eternal life, consequently can never come into condemnation, because he has passed from death unto life. Let us prove this declaration by the word of God.

The first text I will notice is, Titus, 3:5. "Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us by the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Ghost." Here the act of saving is spoken of in the past tense. It took place when we were regenerated and renewed by the Holy Ghost, saved already. Also 2nd Timothy, Who hath saved. We conclude from these and many other such passages that the man born of God is already saved, and cannot come into condemnation, old things passed away, behold all things are become new. For the gifts and calling of God are without repentance. Rom. 11:29. We know that whosoever is born of God sinneth not, but he that is begotten of God keepeth himself. 1st John 5:18. Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin. 1st John 3,9. Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth. James 1:18. For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened. Hebrews 6:4.

There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh but after the spirit. But ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit. Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his: God hath not cast away his people which he foreknew, even so then at this present time also there, is remnant according to the election of grace. Rom. 11:2-5. For the preaching of the cross is to them that perish foolishness, but unto us which are saved it is the power of God. 1st Cor. 1:18. For I know that in me, that is in my flesh, dwelleth no good thing. So then with the mind I myself serve the law of God, but with the flesh the law of sin. Rom. 7:18,25. For sin shall not have dominion over you, for ye are not under the law, but under grace. Rom. 6:14. There are some that say the prodigal son fell from grace. He was a son before he left and all the time I will close.

TO THE EDITOR OF ZION'S LANDMARK

--By request I report the proceedings of the debate between Elder William Lundy, of Carroll Co., Va., and M. F. Pressnell, of Watauga Co., N. C., on the 7th day of Oct. 1888. After Elder Lundy held services at Baptist Valley church he was challenged by M. F. Pressnell to debate Sunday-Schools. Elder Lundy accepted the challenge, provided their argument be strictly confined to the Bible, which was agreed to. They were to discuss it when Elder Lundy returned from his preaching tour in Ky., Mo., and other portions of the West. The following is a copy of the challenge.

Watauga Co., N. C.

"I, M. F. Pressnell, member of Shulls Mills Baptist Church, do trust in the faith of the Lord Jesus Christ, and do advocate Sunday-Schools and analytical education for the benefit of myself and beloved brethren, and at your request do challenge you and any man or men, that you may pick, to meet me at any place and time you may choose, for the purpose of discussing the aforesaid subject, and if it proves a curse for my sake and the brethren that participate with me I want to know it; if not, for your sake and your brethren, you and them ought to know it.

Yours &c, M. F. PRESSNELL.
Toscoe, N. C., Oct. 7th, 1888."

(On the back of the challenge were few written the following words.) "If you don't take me up at this offer hereafter hold your peace."

Elder Lundy returned to Baptist Valley the 10th of Dec., and Pressnell was informed to meet him at the church on the 11th at 10 o'clock preparatory to discussing the subject. So the arrangements were made. They were to have five moderators, Elder Lundy choose two, and Pressnell two, and those four were to choose the fifth one. The moderators were seated, and the discussion began. Pressnell led out by acknowledging that Sunday-Schools were not in the Bible, but the word teach was found 61 times, and quoted a few verses of Scripture. Elder Lundy followed by saying that there could be no discussion, as Pressnell had acknowledged that Sunday-Schools were not in the Bible. He rehearsed the same scriptures that Pressnell had read, and made a few remarks from the same, showing plainly to every clear-minded saint or sinner that the teachings of Christ recorded by the apostles were not Sunday-Schools, nor akin to it: but showed plainly who were to do the teaching, and who were to be taught. Each one had a few minutes reply, so the discussion was closed, the moderators retired for a short time, and without any disagreeing returned a verdict in favor of Elder Lundy. Pressnell looked a little worsted, but Elder Lundy after thanking the moderators, thanked Pressnell very kindly for his honesty in acknowledging that Sunday-Schools were not in accordance with the Bible.

ELDER P. D. GOLD DEAR BROTHER:—Please find inclosed by registered letter five dollars to pay on my subscription for ZION'S LANDMARK which has given me much trouble for I believe you needed it and I could not pay, I had thought for some time if I could git the money to pay up I would have you to stop sending it as I was not able to take it, but you may send it on until I see a little further if I am spared on this side of the grave, as it is a great satisfaction to me to read ZION'S LANDMARK. I saw an article written some time ago by Elder John C. Hall speaking of some letting their subscription run on in arrears and then order it stoped and never pay for it. I do hope that no true Baptist ever did that thing or never will, so no more. Pray for me and mine; your brother in hope of eternal life.

W. F. WORKMAN

MY DEAR FRIEND:—Your very kind letter of February 8th came safely to hand inclosing two dollars for our meeting house here. Allow me to return you my sincere thanks for the same, and appreciation of your remembrance of us. I sincerely believe that the Lord put it in your heart to send it to us: and may he bless you and yours. Although you are unknown to me in the flesh, I hope that we are alive in the spirit, as you say a great deal in a few words, that you are seeking salvation through the blood and righteousness of our Lord Jesus Christ. Those that seek it in this way alone are sure to find it soon or late, for his words are, "Seek, and ye shall find:" and when the Lord says, "Seek ye my face," the response of the heart of the child of God is, Thy face Lord will I seek. And they that seek me early shall find me. None will ever seek in this way until they are brought to see the end of their own strength, and that vain is the help of feeble man. May the Lord bless you with a manifestation of his own precious self as your salvation and hope of immortal glory is the prayer of your unworthy friend.

EXPERIENCE.

DEAR BROTHER HARDY:—I think that I feel impressed to try to relate to you the way in which I hope that I was brought, if I have ever been, to know the truth.

When I was about twelve or thirteen years of age I joined the Methodist church and went on believing that I could do great works. In the year 18-87, I heard a Primitive Baptist preach and he spoke of those depending on their own good works, and I did not like that for I was one of those very ones. After that time that dreadful thought came to my mind to "curse God." This was something that troubled me for I thought that I was already good enough. That was the most troublesome time that I had ever seen. All that I could say was, bless God. After I was relieved from my troubles on March the 8th, 1888, I wanted to tell the Lord's people what I hoped the Lord had done for my poor soul, but I felt to be so sinful and so unworthy, and also because I was too young, being only in my eighteenth year, but I loved the people that I once thought so little of and wanted to be with them. In June I was alone, desiring to know whether or not it was my duty to join the church when these words came to my mind, "Fear not little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." I thought that I would never doubt again but doubts and fears soon came and I feared that I was deceived, and tried to beg the Lord if I was deceived to undeceive me. My good works have all failed, and if I am saved it is the mercy of the Lord and nothing that I have ever done or ever can do. I have thought to myself many times, How can I be any part of a christian while I feel myself to be such a sinner. When I was relieved of my troubles I wanted to talk with you. It seemed to me if I could talk with you it would relieve my mind, but I thought that I was not worthy. In September the impression became so great that I thought I would never be spared to have the opportunity of joining the church I loved so well. It seemed to me if I had joined the church in September I would not have suffered so in mind. Dear brother, I have tried to write this to relieve my mind, though I have had many thoughts and dreams that I have not related. After being received and baptized I enjoyed a peace of mind for about one week. I don't think that I ever felt better satisfied in my life, but I cannot expect to always feel that way.

I have not said all that is on my mind lest I weary you to try to read it.

Dear brother pray for me. I am a little one if one at all, but I often fear that I am not.

ELDER P. D. GOLD, BELOVED IN THE LORD:—Please state in the LANDMARK that there was a church constituted at the new meeting-house, (Bethel,) in Harnett Co., N. C., on Saturday before the 2nd Sunday in this month, by members from Sandy Grove, New Hope and Fellowship, and the writer from Morattock church, churches of the Little River Association. Elders M Stephenson, J. T. Coats, and the writer composed the Presbytery. The name of the church is Bethel, located between Black Creek and Black River, distant half-way between Fellowship and New-Hope churches, ten miles North West of Benson depot. Myself, the unworthy writer, was unanimously chosen as Pastor. Time of meeting 2nd Saturday and Sunday. First Quarterly meeting in March. We desire ministers to visit us, if so impressed: would like for you, Brother Gold, to come and see how we do, and preach for us. You will be met at Benson any time. If you can come let me know. I am teaching at present near Benson. Love to you and all the brethren. Yours in hope,

J. E. ADAMS.

PART 2.

ON SELF-MADE MINISTERS.

4th. That of an effectual calling of the elect from darkness to light, and from power of sin and of satan unto God, to be a partaker of eternal salvation, is also an apostolic doctrine. First the foreknown and the predestinated conformity to his Son, are also predestinated to be called. Romans, 8; 30: And here are two verses that show who are called, and the design of calling. Romans, 9; 23: And that he might make known the riches of his glory on the vessels of mercy, which he had afore prepared unto glory. Verse 24: Even us whom he hath called, not of the Jews only, but also of the Gentiles. And also he calls the vessels of his mercy, afore prepared unto glory. And here you see the design of God is, to make known the riches of his glory on the vessels of mercy. 1 Cor. 7; 17: As the Lord hath called every one, so let him walk. It is a calling of God's grace. Gal. 1; 15: It pleased God, who called me by his grace. 1. Thess 2; 12: Who called you to his kingdom and glory. 4; 7: For God hath not called us to uncleanness. 2 Thess 2; 14: Whereunto God called you by his gospel. 2 Timothy, 1; 9: Who hath called us with any holy calling. 1 Peter, 5; 10: The God of all grace who hath called us. Now all these texts prove that the calling of a sinner is the act of God by his grace, and Romans, 11; 19: proves the gifts and callings of God are without repentance. Philippians, 3; 14: For the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. 2 Timothy: 9: An holy calling. Heb. The holy calling. I need not multiply texts further on this doctrine, for it would be almost to transcribe the scriptures; it is so full of proof that the elect shall be called of God. And indeed he is the person to do it, as the elect are only known by him. Therefore he sends his spirit to call them, the predestinated, foreknown, the vessels of mercy, the Lord's portion. And Christians are exhorted to make their calling and election sure; that is sure as to their own consciences; for otherwise it is as sure as the oath of God, or his promise to his Son. And as certain as he is unchangeable, for he has promised Jesus to save his children. I will only add, that it is a particular call, because not many wise or noble are called; but left uncalled by God with this holy and heavenly call. And that if God calls it must be effectual. And hence Paul was persuaded that he that had begun a good work in some, would carry it on to the day of Jesus Christ. And let this text show you the whole drift at once: 1 Peter, 2; 9: But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people, that you should show forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvelous-light. Can any man want more to prove that the elect are called, and for what end; to show forth God's praise, and that the calling is effectual to this end. It is fully proven by the scriptures that God calls the elect, not according to their works of righteousness; that this call is special, particular, effectual, holy, heavenly, high, without repentance, by grace, to his kingdom and glory as the end; and that all mankind do not have this call; and that this was a fundamental principle in apostolic doctrine I think none can doubt that will take pains to compare the scriptures.

5th. Justification before God and in the eye of the divine law, is only by the imputed righteousness of Jesus Christ; and that all our works done before or after grace have no part in this justification, but only serve to justify us in our own consciences and before men. To prove which they taught our own righteousness was as filthy rags, and that by the deeds of the law no flesh living could be justified, and not by works of righteousness which we have done has he saved us. And he who has had his eyes opened by divine grace is ready to say he commits sin enough in his best day to damn his soul, if it was not for Christ; for where is he and who is he that has no foolish thoughts, they are sin by the law, and the soul that sins shall die. Then in our best doings by the law all men stand condemned, and whether we sing, preach, or pray, sin is mixed with all we do. Then if God for one sin reserved the devils in chains of darkness, and for one sin drove Adam and Eve out of the garden, and they by one sin brought condemnation on all mankind—great God? what is to be our fate, that have sinned as the sand on the sea shore? Damn'd, forever damn'd, without a Christ, with all the works of righteousness we can do; and condemned to hell and eternal wrath by the law; for sin as a debt must be paid to God's justice, for disobedience to the law of his majesty; and to obey it we cannot, because we have lost by the fall of Adam that purity that would enable us to do so. Then to remedy this defect in us, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law to redeem them that were under the law, and become the end of the curse of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth. And this is the name whereby he shall be called, THE LORD OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS. And says Paul to declare his righteousness for the remission of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God; to declare his righteousness that he (God) might be just, and the justifier of him that believeth in Jesus. But here is a text that puts the matter quite out of all doubt; Acts, 13: 39: And by him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses, Galatians, justified by his blood. I need not dwell, but refer you to the epistles of St. Paul, and the Basket of Fragments, where this matter is as plain as it can be to him that has eyes to see. So that I shall set it down without fear of contradiction, that our acquaintance, atonement, forgiveness of sins, clearance from condemnation, this curse of the law and divine wrath, and eternal justification before God, is by the blood and righteousness of Jesus Christ being accounted ours, without which we are damn'd. And that this was a fundamental apostolic doctrine is clear from the scripture.

6th. But those thus foreknown, beloved, elected, called, and justified, shall persevere by the sufficient grace of God given them, through all temptations, trials, and difficulties, and come forth and be glorified in heaven, is clear from all God's absolute promises made to them. Such as He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation, but hath passed from death to life—I give them eternal life and they shall never perish. With a thousand others of like import. The oath of God to these heirs of promise secures their perseverance to the kingdom prepared for them. I refer you to the scriptures, where you may find line upon line of apostolic doctrine, confirmed with the oath and positive promises of God for the final salvation of every Christian. Then all the promises in the epistles show that this was a fundamental apostolic doctrine, and yea and amen to the glory of God by us.

7th. The day of general judgment both of the righteous and wicked, by the resurrection of the dead, wherein an eternal separation will take place; the righteous to heaven and the wicked to hell, to punish or be happy forever.

These are the foundation stones of divine truth, making the basis of apostolic doctrine, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone; believing in whom and walking in all God's commandments, and in love and peace with our brethren, performing good works, having ordained that we should walk in them. The man then that has been baptised by immersion on the profession of his faith, by a lawful administrator, and believeth this doctrine, and is steadfast in them, and in fellowship, in breaking bread in the Lord's Supper, and continues in prayer and good works is an apostolic Christian, a genuine Baptist of the old school, and is entitled to the name of Christian, and will certainly out-ride the storm and come safe into the port of heaven at last; and everlasting joy shall be on his head, because he knows the truth and the truth shall make him free.

Thus having digressed from my subject to give you the history of the apostolic church for 31 years, for the purpose of drawing the ministry of the apostles before you, and to show that the first churches were Baptist in the second place, and thirdly to give you a brief outline of the apostolic doctrine, to be as helps in our future enquiries and comparings with men-made teachers, we now resume our subject.

Did the apostles set out for, or preach for honor like Balaam? No, for it is self-evident from the gospel that Christ taught them otherwise; so that they could not set out for it, nor have no expectation of receiving it. For the Saviour taught them that they should be hated of all nations for his name's sake; and that they should suffer reproach, shame and persecution for his name's sake; and that if they had called the master of the house Beelzebub much more should those of his household; and if these things had been done in the green tree, how much more the dry; and that they should expect tribulation, distress, and death. Yea, that the time would come when they that killed them would think they done God service of ridding the world of such a pest; that their names should be cast out as evil, and defamed every where; and he sent them forth as sheep among wolves, to be persecuted and devoured by false wolf-professors as lambs; and directs them to be as wise as serpents and as harmless as doves; and in their patience to possess their souls under all their sufferings; and that he that would save his life should lose it. And a hundred such lessons as these did their master give them; and to rivet it on their hearts they saw all these things accomplished in him; and therefore he says, the servant is not greater than his master, and that it was enough for the servant to be as his master, or to suffer as Christ suffered, a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief, reviling, reproach and disgrace in life and death. Then with these lessons, and many such like and the example and sufferings of Christ before their eyes to confirm these lessons, how could they set out with the expectation of honor, or preach for the honor that is called so by men? They could not. But instead of this they faced dangers, suffered losses, took up the cross of dishonor, disgrace, shame, persecution, evil-fame, slander, reproach, imprisonment, loss of ease, character and life, for the sake of Christ and the souls of men; expecting no reward, hire, but in the world to come life everlasting. So then the apostles differ in this from all men-made, self-made and devil-made ministers who are all to a man like Judas for the bag, and like Balaam for honor and silver; but in the ministry of the apostles no such trait of character can be found.

Did the apostles expect, or set out, or preach for money, or to make gain by their preaching? Is there such a trait in their character as preachers? No; not in the history of 31 years of their lives can such a mark be found, but to the contrary, as I shall show. First, in all the lessons of Christ given in the gospels on this head of getting or making money by preaching, to his apostles. Let us hear, as from this source they were taught what to expect by preaching. Luke 9; 2 and 3: And he sent them to preach the kingdom of God, and to heal the sick—And he said unto them, take nothing for your journey, neither staves, nor scrip, neither bread, neither money, neither have two coats apiece. And whatsoever house ye enter, there abide; and if not received shake off the dust of your feet. 10th chapter, directions to the seventy: Go your ways, behold, I send you as lambs among wolves. Carry neither purse, nor scrip, nor shoes; and into whatsoever house ye enter, in the same house remain, eating and drinking such things as they give you, for the laborer is worthy of his hire. Go not from house to house—the same by cities—and if not received, shake off the dust of your feet, &c. Now I can't see for my life that there is any thing in these directions of Christ to the twelve, and seventy, to raise in them any expectation that they were to make or get money by their preaching. So far from it, that it seems to me to carry the idea that they were only to get something to eat and to wear, and thus live on the charity of the world for meat and clothes, or daily food. Nor do the directions seem fully to afford that; forasmuch as they seem to imply, that some houses and cities would not receive them and even give them that; for they are directed to shake off the dust of their feet against such. So then the apostles' expectations could not be to get money by preaching, as their directions implied no such thing by promise or otherwise.

Let us hear the terms of Christ of being one of his disciples and preachers as well as his directions in setting out to preach. Luke, 14; 33: So likewise whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple. Peter must leave his father and nets, and Matthew his receipt of custom, and Paul those things that were gain to him he counted loss for Christ, yea, even as dung that he might win Christ. But here is a text that shows both loss and gain. Matthew, 19; 27: Peter said, behold, we have forsaken all, and followed thee; what shall we have therefore? Verse 28: And Jesus answered, ye which have followed me, in the regeneration, when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel. Verse 29: And every one that had forsaken houses, brethren, mothers, &c. should receive a hundred fold, and in the world to come inherit everlasting life. Here in these verses the doctrine taught preachers is, that they must forsake and expect to lose the things of this world. Is there any money promised by Christ? No. But heaven, glory, and everlasting life. Then God's ministers are not to expect their reward here, but hereafter; they are to lose this life, to keep it to life eternal; they are to lose this world, to gain the world to come. But men-made preachers are not this doctrine; they are for having their pay ready down, in tobacco, eggs, chickens, fat turkeys, good things, roast beef, gold, silver, bank bills, and honor. If by free gift, well; if not, it must be distrained by law of rich and poor, to have their heaven here, for they can't wait for one to come. And I think it would be almost too much pay for their poor preaching to have two heavens, one on earth and one to come. So I take it that men-made preachers will be like the rich man, have their good things here, and their hell hereafter; and indeed they deserve it, for their oppression and tyranny which these men have ever exercised, whenever they have it in their power.

In a word, the doctrine taught preachers by Christ is, self-denial, loss of this world, yea, life itself if need be, for his and the gospels' sake; and no money, gain and honor here; but to look for their reward in the world to come, and be as their master here and hereafter. So that the apostles could not expect money on setting out to preach, from any promises of their master, but the reverse. Nor did they set out, nor preach for it as the history of their life showeth, as well as all the epistles they have written; a few incidents in which I shall show to clear this matter. Now if the apostles had set out to preach for money, or had been disposed to have made money by their preaching, they had a fair opportunity of doing so. Acts, 4; 34: For so many as were possessors of lands or houses, sold them and brought the prices of things that were sold and laid them down at the apostles' feet; and distribution was made unto every man as he had need. Here the apostles had a fine opportunity of pocketing (cash,) having by the consent of all the Christians that sold their estates, the entire confidence and control of the funds. If they had been moneyed preachers, like Judas, or some of our modern men-made missionaries, they might like Judas have pilfered the stock and got more than thirty peices of silver, for betraying their trust. Now only compare the conduct of the apostles in the management of the funds of the first Christians, with the conduct of the Board of the North Carolina Baptist Society for foreign and domestic missions. How different the apostles' conduct; they distributed to every one as he had need; the poor and suffering are here considered, and sharers of the rich. Did they do so with the funds of the Christians, and gentlemen and ladies of North Carolina? No, sir. Out of the funds of a little the rise of $2,000, five or six men are voted something like $1,800 for missionary services. Did the apostles vote themselves from $2 to $500 a peice for their services? Oh, covetousness, hide thy face. No, sir; so far from the spirit of making money by their preaching, or voting other men's money in their own pockets, they prove to the contrary by their conduct, in that they would not manage the funds, but told their brethren to look out among themselves seven men of honest report, that they might appoint to oversee this business. So they did, and thus the funds were by their request put in the hands of the seven deacons of the church, who dealt them out to the poor and widows, and not to missonary dandies in blue and black to gallant the ladies and seek fortunes by pretending to be gospel preachers, and beg for more money to divide among preachers, and not the poor and needy, like the apostles. And further, the apostles did not beg their brethren to sell their estates, nor did they beg them and dun them out of contentance to give them money, nor raise a fund that they might be gainers thereby, as missonaries do. But it was a voluntary act of the first Christians, as Peter said to Ananias; before he sold his land it was his, and after he sold it, it was equally his or in his power. So then there was no law of Jesus Christ for Christians to sell their property and have a fund in common, nor did the apostles make any such rule for the gospel church; which they might easily have done and got money by handfuls, if they had set out or preached for money as men-made preachers do. Ananias was smitten for his lying and hypocrisy, and not because he did not give his money into the fund. How strange that the priests now a days must have the management of all the funds of every sort in the Christian church; let it be for what it will, they must have overseeing it, Judas like; first bag it, then to get it, seems to be the game now playing by the priests. No apostles. The first funds, and indeed almost all that the New Testament mentions in the Christian church in her first age, was for the poor and needy. But now a days things, are changed, the funds are for the priests; young, hearty, hale, priests, in boots, whip and chair; while the poor and needy of the church are cast on the charity of the world, live or die, suffer or not, who cares so the priest gets the money and fares sumptuously and marries a rich wife.

If we ask Peter how he made out of getting money by preaching, after his master's death; and that he had a fine chance to do so none can doubt, if we consider the many cures of the sick he effected; and if he had been disposed like our modren men-made preachers to have made money by his preaching and miraculous cures, he could have made thousands thereby, as his fame was greatly spread abroad throughout all the country, as a healer of the sick and raiser of the dead. For what vast sums would the people have given to have had their dead raised, even men their wives and fathers their children; or others have given to be cured of their various diseases? Let him answer. Acts, 3; 6: Then Peter said, silver and gold have I none, but such as I have give I thee. Here you see what he says. Could he have thus said, if he had been a missonary at $500 a year? Could he have said thus, if he had hired himself out to have preached to a church or churches from $500 to $3,000 a year; or to receive a salary like the Bishop of York of $95,000 a year? No, sir, the apostle was no hireling, no seller of his preaching nor cures; he had freely received these gifts from Christ, and Christ told him to give them freely. Then if he had sold his preaching he would have betrayed trust and instructions. Then one mark of self-made preachers is to sell their preaching; but the mark of a God-made preacher is to give it, yea, to preach the gospel to the poor; and as Paul says, make the gospel of Christ without charge. But I suppose men-made preachers think they have been at some pains and cost to make themselves preachers, and therefore must sell their preaching to the highest bidder. I can't see any other reason they have for it, as any man with one eye can see it is contrary to scripture, and to the pattern given, and to the example of prophets, Christ, and apostles. But here is the main reason: these self-made preachers are like Simon Magus, he believed to make money; he was baptized to make money; and then he would give money to the Holy Ghost, to make money.

BROTHER GOLD:—Will you please publish a few lines in the LANDMARK for one who loves the cause of Christ, if he loves anything. I feel that all who love the great and glorious church of Christ, in the visible church and out of it, should do and say all they can that the Bible and the spirit of christianity demands at their hands for the cause of truth, therefore, dear brethren, sisters and friends, and all lovers of the freedom of American liberties, let me call your mind to the Church History, as I believe it to be the best book I ever saw except the Bible. There are but few men in the world that can understand as much about the man of sin without this Church History, as they will to have it, and read with care. I saw C. B. Hassell about the time the History was begun. He did not live to finish the blessed book. His son, Sylvester Hassell, whom I never saw, has completed the book and from what we see published he has made a great sacrifice, and I feel that the Primitive Baptist cause is hurt unless brother Hassell is rewarded by the brethren for the labor he has done. Fathers and mothers in Israel, what can you have in the way of reading matter that will protect you and your tender offspring more than the Church History, this side of the Bible? It will warn you and enable you to see and understand things concerning the mother of harlots and her daughters, that you may never see unless you read the History. I write this for the glory of God and the advancement of his cause which is the great theme of my soul.

Wilson, N. C.,

MY DEAR BROTHER IN THE LORD:—Your last very precious letter came duly to hand, and should have been replied to before this, but I have felt to be so barren and unfruitful, that I could not make up my mind even to attempt to write to you, who are so favored and blessed with the almost continual manifest presence of the Lord. I was much comforted and gratified by the perusal of your last epistle of love, in fact all your letters have been to me as an oasis in the desert, as the dew distilling upon the tender grass, as a cup of cold water to the thirsty, famished soul. How bleak and dreary would be the travel of the weary pilgrim over life's pathway through these low-grounds of sorrow and sin, except for the occasional sunshine from the sun of righteousness whose beams, with effulgent brightness and warmth, shine in upon our drooping souls, cheering and comforting each footstep of our journey. And how our hearts rejoice, when by the grace and mercy of our Lord we are enabled to hear the salutation coming from Jesus through the dear old prophet, "Ho every one that thirsteth, and realizing that we are indeed thirsty, and are permitted to drink of that living water, the streams whereof make glad the city of God. My mind is often led in sweet reflection to that beautiful expression of our Saviour as spoken by the mouth of the Psalmist. "As the heart panteth after the water-brook so panteth my soul after thee O God." We know, dear brother, the hart never pants for the water-brooks in full life and bodily strength, that such condition only arises after a long chase by its natural enemies, when footsore, weary, bleeding and exhausted it falls by the wayside panting for that which will revive and restore its fast ebbing vitality. And have not you and I sometimes gladly reached that same condition, arriving at the end of all our natural strength, the last straw gone, no support, realizing the truth of the words of the poet,

But to the sinner's friend.

And realizing also that our dear, heavenly Father will accept none but those of a broken heart and a contrite spirit, we come to him in rags and he clothes us in fine linen, pure and white, and he setteth a table before us, even in the presence of our enemies. From the rich storehouse of his precious love the riches of his grace are bestowed upon us. And we say, unworthy, unworthy, for we do not deserve the least of thy blessings, yet thou hast made us kings and priests unto thee, O Lord.— Thou hast delivered us out of many troubles. Thou hast lifted our feet out of the miry clay and set them upon the rock of our salvation, with the power of thy mighty hand. Thou hast raised us as thou didst Noah of old, above the waters, and with loving-kindness hast thou drawn us to the summit of thy holy mountain, and O, what a view is laid before us. The world behind and underneath us to the which we desire not to turn our eyes, (remembering Lot's wife) but with the eyes of faith we look for a better country, that is an heavenly, where One has gone on before to prepare a place for us, that where he is we may be also. While here we look upon the brightness of the noonday sun, and we know that in that other country no sun is needed, for our God is light as well as life. No contrast to him who hath eyes too pure to behold evil.

I look upon myself with loathing, seeing all vileness within and wondering at the mystery of godliness how such a vile wretch as I could ever attain to a hope that Christ suffered and died upon the cross for such a rebel; but how glorious dear brother, when in peace of mind we can lay our aching heads upon the breast of our dear Savior and with perfect trust be assured that our sins and iniquities were buried with him, and when he arose it was for our justification. My mind often wanders to that little flock, of which you told me in your last letter, where a church had been organized, choosing you for its pastor. I would like to visit it and you if it were possible. May it be a branch of God's right-hand planting, well-watered with the wisdom and knowledge of the glory of God. We are all as well as usual in Philadelphia, and we feel to hope that Christ in our little meetings is in our midst. My wife and daughter send love to you desiring to be remembered to your wife, also to dear brother Gold, if you see him. I shall hope to hear from you when you have time to write. Yours in christian love, BROTHER GOLD:—In searching the Scriptures my eyes fell on a portion that I do not exactly understand. There are several opinions on the same passage held by different denominations, or professions of people. The words are in Heb : 6—4. "For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, And have tasted of the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come, If they shall fall away to renew them again to repentance, seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame." I am anxious to know the truth. If those spoken of in the text were once enlightened and tasted of the good word of God, are such lost? Please give me your views in the LANDMARK as soon as convenient and you will much oblige your old friend.

ANSWER TO BROTHER BALL'S ARTICLE.

1st. One thing may be gathered from Scripture, among other things, out of this text, and that is, if one should fall away as described therein that one could never be renewed again unto repentance because it would put Jesus to open shame. It would not be putting the sinner merely or only to shame, but it would put the Son of God to open shame by crucifying him afresh. How would the falling away of such as are partakers of the Holy Ghost, or are sealed unto the day of redemption as heirs of God put Jesus to open shame? Because it would show the insufficiency of his death to do what he said it would do, what the Father said it would do, and what the Holy Ghost says it will do, and what the established child of God knows it will do. What could more effectually put Jesus to shame than for it to be made manifest that his work is not complete—that it does not take away all sin, that he has not power over all flesh to give eternal life to as many as the Father has given him. It would show that Jesus is not the Christ, is not sent of God, that the Scriptures are not true, that he has not finished the work that God gave him to do.

For one to attempt to do a thing and fail to do so, especially after declaring that he has finished the work, but when it is tested it fails, this would expose such an one to shame. Now if one could fall away after the effects of the death of Jesus are applied to him, so that Jesus would have to be crucified afresh to save those that fall, it would put Jesus to open shame, as showing that his death is not sufficient.

It would be impossible to renew them unto repentance, for Christ can never die again. He dieth no more. Death hath no more dominion over him. He hath perfected forever them that are sanctified by the one offering of himself once. So that it is impossible for one to fall away and be forever lost for whom Christ died.

It is through the crucifixion of Jesus that we are renewed unto repentance, so that one must be renewed before he repents. The common notion of Arminian work-mongers is that people repent and believe, and after that renew themselves. But the doctrine of the Bible is that one must be renewed, (not renew himself) and that this must be done before he repents. How clearly does the Bible prove that Jesus is exalted a Prince and a Saviour to grant repentance and the forgiveness of sins unto Israel, and that the goodness of God leads us to repentance.

You observe that the word does not say that a child may fall away thus. But it says if one should fall away, it would be impossible to renew him again unto repentance, &c., There could be no better way of showing the impossibility of such a thing than by showing that if such a thing could be it would expose Christ to open, public shame by showing the insufficiency of his atonement. For the object of this epistle is to show the exalted, glorious character of Jesus as the eternal High Priest of the eternal God, whose blood cleanseth from all sin, and who ever liveth to make intercession for us. If therefore there could be any failure in the salvation of the every man for whom he tasted death it would put him to an open shame.

If I should say that if the sun were to fall from his place, as the bright orb of day, that it would be impossible for man to restore him to his orbit, would it follow that there is danger of his falling, especially if it should be demonstrated that he is fixed in his course, and rejoices to run his race as a strong man, and that he must run his race—which would be impossible if he should fall, for if he should fall it would be impossible to lift him to his place in his orbit again.

So all Israel shall be saved—all that the Father gives to Jesus shall come to him, nothing shall separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus; but if one of these thus loved should fall away it would be impossible to save him, it would follow then that none of them shall ever fall thus. For we are persuaded better things of God's people (you) and things that accompany salvation though we thus speak. Heb. 6: 9.

PREDESTINATION.

1st. Why should it be thought that God's predestination (and none else can do this) should be otherwise than righteous and good? Infinite wisdom to determine, infinite justice and goodness to temper, and infinite power to execute could not but do that which is right. Instead of God's predestination being the cause of sin, it is that which causes the opposite of sin. Through God's predestination as a river flow all the good gifts and blessings that come to mankind. Whom (or all) that God foreknew he did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his son. All that ever have been saved, and all that ever will be saved are saved on the principle of predestination. That word is never in scripture applied to any but the chosen of God, and refers to their salvation. Then how can any sin be charged to that, or how can the damnation of any one be charged to that?

2nd. None but God can predestinate. Man cannot, because he has not the foreknowledge, wisdom, nor power. He does not know what a day or an hour will bring forth. Nor can angels, for they are ministers or servants sent forth by God to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation. But the Lord God declares the end from the beginning, saying my counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure. Nor is there any event not under his hand and power, so that it could in any wise defeat that which he purposes. One event as much as another in its place is used and needful to accomplish the will of God. While he does not work in the wicked to do wickedly, yet he uses events which the wicked mean for evil to bring to pass that which he has afore-purposed. For instance it was the purpose of God that Jesus should be called out of Egypt, and of course that he should go down into Egypt where his people had been, and out of which place he had called them.—Hence it is written, out of Egypt have I called my son. Then it was also foretold that in Ramah there should be weeping for children slain. So Herod moved with envy orders all the children from two years old and under to be slain. Now things in themselves good, or in themselves evil, are used by the Lord. We should be careful to notice that the work of God is always good, not only as he works in his people both to will and to do of his good pleasure, but he uses wicked men and wicked actions of men to accomplish that which is good when considered in its results and effects. The invariable tendency of the deeds and events of mankind, even wicked men and of events in themselves evil, is for good to them that love God and are the called according to his purpose. So that we may truly say we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose. For whom he did foreknow he did also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son that he might be the first born among many brethren. What event can you think of—evil as it may be in itself—that was not of benefit in some way to some child of God, even to many of them?

3rd. Then some, especially those that hate the predestination of God and want an excuse to commit sin, or that misunderstand the doctrine of God, will say that we hold that we may do evil that good may come, or it does not matter what we do; for if our unrighteousness commend the righteousness of God is God unrighteous who taketh vengeance, (See Rom. 3:3—9. To the carnal, natural reason of man it does appear that predestination is unjust, hence the judgment of the natural mind of man at once attacks it as unjust and rejects it. But what right has the carnal mind of man to judge? Does it know what is right? By no means.

It cannot know. No amount of education or learning can ever so enlighten it that it may judge what is right or what is wrong before God. It thinks it knows. But it puts darkness for light, bitter for sweet. There is not a profane man, a thief, or a durnkard, an adulterer, or idolator, a covetous man, or an unclean man in the country but what would at once say the doctrine of predestination is dangerous and wrong. They all would fully agree with any Arminian in the land that they can choose salvation and amend their lives, and that it is left to the man to save himself. We admit that the self-righteous Arminian has all the world on his side. His side is the popular, fashionable one. All such men can do well they say at any time.

But there is not a humble sinner who has seen himself vile and unable to do any good work but what is ready to exclaim, if I am saved it is not of works, but by grace, not of man, but of the Lord that I am saved.

4th. How good and pleasant it is to a soul deeply sensible of his guilt to be assured that the Holy Ghost works faith in the people of God—grants them repentance and all needed blessings—works in us—works in us both to will and to do of his good pleasure, thereby enabling us to work out our own salvation with fear and trembling. How good to know that sin is not imputed to the people of God—that the elect hath obtained it—that grace was given us in Christ Jesus even before the world began, that by grace are ye saved through faith, and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God; not of works lest any man should boast.

5th. The love of God is in no sense like the love of the world. God is love and in that love he chastises and corrects his people, and causes all things to work together (not separately, but they must be taken together,) for good to them that love God, to them that are the called according to his purpose.

What a cause for meekness, thankfulness and humility, to feel that Jesus is the author and finisher of our faith, and that the Father of lights of his own will begat us, that of God we are in Christ Jesus who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption. What a cause to worship, trust, love and adore the eternal One, of whom, through whom, and to whom are all things.

P. D. G.

MY DEAR SIR:—I would like to see your views in the LANDMARK on the writing of Paul, where he speaks of being taken up to the third heaven; what he meant by the third heaven, &c.

Your friend truly,

J. E. GILES.

Vance, Va.,

Remarks :

In 2nd, Cor. 12 : 1—10, the Scripture is recorded.

By way of reproof Paul refers to that wonderful vision and revelation. For the brethren of Corinth were boasting of their gifts, &c., But Paul gloried in his infirmities and sufferings, his privations and trials, his labors and tribulations, his poverty and stripes.

Paul could speak of revelations and visions more than they all. But that is not expedient. I have heard men talk wonderfully of visions and revelations, yet they were not faithful in trial, nor humble. Knowledge puffeth up. Paul's visions and revelations were beyond anything ever shown to any other man. For he was caught up to paradise, or the third heaven, a heaven far above anything we know of. There he saw things unlawful to be told, or not lawful for a man to utter. Wonder if some man will not make the attempt to tell what Paul heard? There are men now, pretended preachers and upstarts claiming to be teachers of the Bible, that say they know more than Solomon did. But he knew more while asleep, or made a better choice in a dream, than any natural man would ever make while awake; for God gave him choice of riches, wisdom, long life, &c., and he chose wisdom.

It would be exceeding folly in any man to attempt to tell what Paul heard.

One reason he refers to this is to reprove the Corinthians because they were glorying falsely. He knew that knowledge puffed up a man. How ugly one looks puffed up, swelled up and conceited. It is the nature of a frog to puff up when things do not suit him. When men get mad they swell up. When they get proud they become puffed up. Even Paul had the messenger of Satan, a thorn in his flesh, sent to buffet him lest he should be exalted above measure because of the abundance of his revelations. Now what Paul meant by a thorn in the flesh was not weak eyes. If it had been that he would have said weak eyes. It was that messenger of Satan that was to buffet, abase and distress him, to prevent his being exalted because of the abundance of revelations. We note then that revelations may exalt one unless thorns pierce the flesh. Nor does it mean natural thorns piercing literal flesh and bones, for they could be pulled out and the flesh cured.

Paul is describing that throne when he says, I see another law in my members warring against the law of my mind, and the good I would I do not, and the evil I would not that I do. Oh wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death. Then Paul could not extract that thorn. It is the nature of thorns to choke good crops and produce pain. The earth brings briars and thorns. They crowned Jesus with thorns.

Why does Paul refer to revelations? It is more to show the grace given him to bear sorrow, endure affliction, perform labor, receive grace to endure in faithfulness, and bear all that is laid upon him to bear.

The Lord did not remove that thorn out of his flesh, but he gave him sufficient grace to bear it which is better, because the power of Christ is revealed in the weakness of Paul, and therefore the weaker Paul is the more of the power of Christ is upon him. Suppose an infant so weak it could not lift one pound should be given such strength that it carries tons of weight, such as no man is able to carry, and in the bearing of this great weight it is manifested that the Lord strengthens that infant to lift this load, would not that more clearly show the power of God in that infant than if no burden was laid upon it, but it just passed along as ordinary infants do. We will say here are two infants one day old. One lies and sleeps as ordinary babes do; but the other speaks in audible voice the praises of God and shouts Hosannas to Jesus: which praises him more?

The Lord does not say that his people shall not be tempted, but he does say that with the temptation he will make a way of escape, because he will give them strength to bear the temptation.

So Paul gloried not so much in revelations as in infirmities, because in revelations a thorn was given him, the messenger of satan to buffet him. But in afflictions and distress grace was given him, and thus the strength of Jesus was made perfect in his weakness: not that he wanted a thorn or pain, but he desired Jesus so much that he could welcome these and death itself to be with Jesus. He gloried in his infirmities &c., for Christ's sake. For the strength of Christ was made perfect in Paul's weakness. Therefore when Paul was weak he was strong, and hence he must die to live. What a mysterious life and character. How blessed and wonderful.

VIEWS REQUESTED.

Sister Emma Hudson requests my view of Matt. 5: 47;

"And if ye salute your brethren only wha' do ye more than others? Do not even the publicans so?"

Jesus is addressing his disciples. When we see and feel that the holy words of Jesus require us to do the very things that nature does not want to do, yet the very things that our spiritual mind approves as good, and an inability to do those things that we would, and being oppressed with the nature that is always wanting to be flattered, and wanting to receive and not give, that desires to be noticed and honored, to dwell at ease, and to retaliate and return evil for evil, that salutes only those that salute us, that treats others as they treat us, or at least no better, that is full of suspicion that others are slighting us, or that surmises evil, or that imagines some evil is coming, or murmurs that our lot is a hard one, we must reproach ourselves as guilty and confess that we are vain, foolish and unprofitable.

What think you of the man that has no conflicts or distress, that can always pray for his enemy, that has no evil nature, that is so unselfish he loves all mankind, and calls all men brethren saying, all people are the children of God, and that he can do as well as he wants to do?

Publicans salute their brethren. People love such as are congenial to them. That is natural. But the people of God can only love their enemies and pray for those that despitefully use them as they have the spirit or mind of Jesus in them. He is the one perfect man, and those that are led by him are enabled to do such things as to genuinely and truly love their enemies.

The Lord God makes no difference at all between the evil and the good here on earth. He makes his sun shine on one just as on the other. He sends his rain on the just and the unjust. No one could ever tell from God's dealings towards mankind that he makes any difference so that one could thereby tell who is good and who is evil.

Now to be like him in doing good to men is what in sincerity and reality cannot be done, except by a true disciple of Jesus.

No wonder therefore seeing our failure we are cast down and distressed, and feel who is sufficient for these things? No wonder we exclaim, Woe is me. I am undone. I am unclean and dwell among a people of unclean lips. We love the law of God. We love the words of Jesus, and desire that we might be able to do what he requires. We feel it is good, holy and just.

P. D. G.

*The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge: but fools despise wisdom and instruction."

"My son hear the instruction of thy father, and forsake not the law of thy mother."

NEW CREATURE.

I am glad Brother D. M. Sawyer does not want a controversy, neither does he want instruction. I am not in favor of fleshly controversy, but I do believe we can profitably exchange views, though there be some difference. I always give my understanding of a text of Scripture and am tolerably firm in my convictions but am open to my brethren for correction and instruction in righteousness.

I do not accept brother Sawyer's definition of the word subject in the text, and therefore do not believe in falling from grace. Perhaps he would do well to read my article again, leaving out for the time his own views, that he may the more clearly see mine. I understand the word 'subject' here to mean that the christian, or new creature is so constituted that he is prone in his carnal nature to do wrong, and is liable to do so, and sometimes to his sorrow he does do wrong. We are liable in our fleshly minds to become puffed up and imagine ourselves to be of some importance when really we are nothing.

These are vain thoughts and show that we are subject to vanity. Those who believe in falling from grace do not believe that they do wrong in any sense and if they fall it is the devil's work, whereas the Lord makes the new creature subject to vanity.

I do not read of an old creature, or of anything that might be construed as such, to which Paul, or any other of the Apostles address their epistles. It is the new creature in Christ Jesus that groans and is burdened, and is waiting for a full manifestation or appearing of life, and when that takes place then will appear the new creature also, but not as a mere creature, but as a glorified son of God.

When Christ is revealed in a man that man is in Christ, and these two—Christ, the hope of glory and the man, each of which is in the other, constitute the new creature, and when the one swallows up the other as mortality is swallowed up of life, then shall the sons of God appear. P. G. L.

Obituary.

NANCY THOMPSON.

Dear Brethren and sisters, I have been requested by Union church, and especially by the two beloved sons, Jessie and John, members of the same church to write something in respect to their deceased mother, Sister Nancy Thompson. Sister Thompson was born January 11th. 1793, died Sept. 18th, 1888, aged 95 years 9 months 7 days. The sister came to her grave in full age like as a shock of corn cometh in his season. Unconcerned people will not believe that the deceased died an untimely death. She remembered her Creator in the days of her youth, and her days were long upon the earth. The sister and husband Elijah Thompson, together with their oldest son, were received in Union church and baptized 8th, July 1832, by Elder Wm. Wall. Jarriat Thompson lived a Christian life often praying in his family, and talking of the mercies of God, believing that God would be good to them that walked uprightly. Brother Elijah Thompson was married to the said sister Nancy Braswell, daughter of Jacob Braswell, on or about 1812, by whom she had 4 children all boys, two survive her. Sister Thompson was the grand mother of 16 children, 2 dead, great grand mother of 45 children, 5 dead, great-great grand mother of 5 children. There are many that will bear me witness that she was a mother in hospitality unto many. I have heard it said by some that knew her manner of life that if she had bread for her own children she had bread for them also. We believe that she is now feasting on the bread of life of which she had received a foretaste while she was at home in the body. I must say for one that I loved that sister, and believe that I have received benefit through her prayers for me.

A year or so before her death, when she was unable to go to the meeting, she became restless, and requested the writer to go to her sons and preach in her hearing. I did so one time. After lining the hymn and singing.

"How firm a foundation ye saints of the Lord,
Is laid for your faith in His excellent word &c."

I tried to preach to the dear old sister from 1st Peter, 1st chap. and 8th, verse. Whom having not seen ye love; in whom though now ye see him not, yet believing ye rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory. The sister was once shut up unto the faith which afterward was revealed unto her when she received Christ the end of the law for righteousness. She has been like others of us, had her doubts and fears, while at other times she was more transformed to love, or more perfected in love that casteth out fear, and then we have less trouble, for fear hath torment. Yes, once she knew as we know, saw as we see, heard as we hear, worked as we work, loved as we love, loved Him whom she had not seen. But now she can see Jesus, and the heavenly host: but we can not see her, yet believing that she has entered into that rest that remains to the people of God, we rejoice while we, according to our nature, will forever in time mourn over the loss of one who has lived so long among us, and so near the requirements of God's commands.

The children and we mourn not as those without hope. I will now say to the many little grand-children that grand-mothers' walk and order was a pattern for you to walk by, and that ere long God will descend from heaven and grand-ma and all that are asleep in Jesus will come with Him, and shall be so changed that we shall see Jesus and hope to be like Him. Shall it be our happy lot, 'hen it will not be some old and some young, but all will be new. Let us ever pursue the course of the two brothers, John and Jessie Thompson, in the kind and tender care for their mother, bear each others burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ. At God's appointed time He calmly called sister Nancy Thompson home to himself without a struggle. Like Job, she waited all the days of her appointed time till her change came: surely Jesus has the power of death. Jesus can make a dying bed soft as downy pillows are. We pray Him to keep us by His power that we may be ready to be revealed in the last time.

NOAH WORKMAN.

I take my pen in hand to try to write the obituary of my dear father, Noah Workman. Father was born in Davidson Co., N. C., May the 31st 1813, and died Feb. 19th, 1889, which death was a sad one indeed. He had been in feeble health for several years, though appeared well as usual on the morning of the 9th, and was out seeing to his affairs, and half past eleven o'clock he came to the house and said one of his ears was cold, and sat down and warmed it, and being told that he had left the barn door open, he said he would go and shut it, and walked out, and in a few minutes his only daughter looked out at the window and said to her mother, what is that before the barn? She looked, screamed out and said, it's your father, he has fallen dead; and both ran and saw him raise his hands one time, and he was gone. The summons came and he had to go. His remains were buried in the family grave-yard, on the 21st, in the presence of a large concourse of friends and relatives to mourn but we mourn not as those who have no hope: for we believe that his spirit now rests in that spirit land; although he never united with the church, but gave evidence of a good hope through grace. He was a strong believer in the Primitive Baptist faith of salvation by grace, to the exclusion of works, altho he seldom got to hear preaching, but when he did he seemed to enjoy it greatly. He had formed an acquaintance with some of our traveling ministers, and had heard them preach at my house, to-wit Elders James A. Burch, Isaac Jones, James D. Draughn and Eli Cain, the last one he ever heard, and the last time he ever was at my house was the 29th, of last October. Father was married the 16th day of February 1837, to Eliza Cross, my mother. To them were born nine children, seven sons and one daughter; our mother still survive him to mourn his absence: but we believe our loss is his eternal gain. Father was a hard working man and provided a good living for his family and was a friend to the poor and needy, and was blest in basket and store, and when he died he owed not a dollar. We miss him so much, but may we all be resigned to the will of him who doeth all things well, and blessed be the Lord may he be a husband to the widow and a father to the fatherless granting them his sustaining grace according to their day. W. F. WORKMAN.

MR. SINGLETON.

He was born in Beaufort county, N. C., June 20th, 1826, and departed this life Oct. 6th, 1888, making him 62 years 3 months and 16 days. His disease was Paralysis of the Brain. The last time the union was at Flat Swamp, Sept. 28, my husband as well as myself wanted to go; and the Saturday before was a bleak, cold day. He told some of his friends he felt very unwell that day, but he said nothing to me about it. In going to meeting on Saturday morning he was taken with a hard chill. He stayed to hear one sermon and then started for home. By the kindness of an all-wise Providence we were spared to reach our home. He continued to grow worse until the following Saturday morning, Oct. the 6th, about five minutes after 3 o'clock, death, that enemy to all mankind, snapped the brittle thread of his earthly existence, and took him hence. Though I mourn his loss, but not without hope. He was conscious to the last and I know he died in full assurance of that blissful immortality that awaits the finally faithful beyond this vale of tears. He seemed to have a premonition of his approaching end sometime before his death. I did not see it then, but after he was taken from me, I then could comprehend many things. He joined the church at Smithwick's Creek, the 4th Sunday in Nov. 1878, and lived a consistent member until his death. It was his greatest pleasure to look after and care for the brethren and sisters, so far as he could. I sincerely hope he has been gathered into that fold where the good Shepherd feeds his flock, and I will try by the help of his divine grace to live in this world, so that when my earthly career is ended I may look back upon a life well spent in serving my Divine Master, and meet my dear husband in a better world above. His funeral was preached at his home by brother Henry Peel, Dec. 16, 1888.

WINIFRED B. SINGLETON.

DICKINSON RUFFIN.

It is with the feelings of sadness that I now forward for publication in ZION'S LANDMARK the death of our beloved brother Dickinson Ruffin, who died Jan. 30th, 1889, in the 67th year of his age. Brother Ruffin and his wife united with the Primitive Baptist church, at Lawrence's church, Edgecombe Co., N. C. I do not know the date he united with the church. Brother Ruffin was a good and orderly member and lived according to the profession he had made in Christ Jesus our Lord unto his death, and seemed to be reconciled unto our heavenly Father's will. I was with brother Ruffin in his sickness, and he seemed to bear his affliction with christian fortitude, and when he was troubled to breathe I would say to him, I loved he would soon cough it off, and he would be better, and his answer would be, "If it is the Lord's will," and oh brethren, what a glorious sight it is to see one that the icy hand of death is laid upon, every action seems to say it is better for me to depart and be with Christ than to live here. Oh: how can we grieve or mourn for one that has this belief in Christ. Brother Ruffin left a kind and affectionate wife and eight children who ministered unto him in his afflictions as kindly as wife and children could, and while they are left here to mourn may God be with the bereaved sister and her children, and lead, guide and direct in all truth is my prayer for Christ's sake. Your little Brother, in hope of eternal life. W. B. STRICKLAND.

JOSEPH THOMAS GARDNER.

Mr. Gardner was about 39 years of age, the son of Capt. W. Gardner and sister Margaret Gardner, and was a lover of the Primitive Baptist people. He was a moral, well-behaved man, and we think he had been taught that salvation is of the Lord. He loved to hear these people talk of God's grace.

He was sick quite a while, and patiently bore his troubles. About the middle of February he gently passed away in the town of Goldsboro, N. C. We mourn not as those who have no hope.

LITTLE ROSANELLE WILSON.

Died Friday night, Feb. 15 1889 little Rosanelle youngest child of W. H. and M. H. Wilson. She was born July 11 1887 making her stay on this earth one year, 7 months and four days. She was taken with diptheria Christmas eve and was sick 2 months. Oh! how she did suffer tongue can never express. She was able to walk about the room and play with her playthings, until the 2d Sunday in January, when the poor little suffer had to give up. She walked about as long as her darling little feet could move. We did all in our power to relieve, but God had claimed her as his jewel so we had to give her up, but Oh; it is so hard. It seems as if all I had to live for is gone. I the writer left home Christmas eve the day she was taken and Oh, if I could just call back the time, but it is too late now, just to think I was away enjoying myself, and she at home suffering, little did I think she would be called so soon never to return again. She has always been the pet of our household. I have always thought that God would not suffer her to stay with us long. Mama always let her have her own way about every thing. Something she didn't allow the rest of us. I know God is just and right. But it is so hard for me to give her up. I love all my brothers and sisters, but I know I loved her the best of all. I ought to think I am blessed for none of the rest of my sister and brothers to die, it was very remarkable for so large a family and mama and papa had not to lose any more, there were eleven of us before sweet little Rosanelle died. All had diptheria except three, who have escaped it so far. Mama and papa were both resigned to the death of my dear little sister. But I can't be, I wish I could be more reconciled to it. I know it was for some good purpose although I can't know how. I shall know in the future. Every way I look I can see something to remind me of her. She was buried in sight of my window. O! I feel so sad when I look at it. Although I am bound to know she is better off than she would be here in this sinful world. I have often wished that I had died in my infancy. But God's will must be done. Rosanelle thought as much or more of me than she did of mama. And Oh! I did feel so much attached to her. She thought her "Sis" was the greatest thing. I can never forget how sweet she used to look when she saw me coming from school. She would run for me to carry her back and to see what I brought her. Oh! I feel such a remorse of conscience about leaving her at home so much visiting about. I will close by saying I hope to meet my little sister in a land of rest to be forever at rest.

Maggie Wilson.

J. B. HOUSE

J. B. House, the son of William and Amanda House, of Halifax co. N. C. was born February 26, 1861, and died February 15, 1889, making his stay on earth 27 years 11 months 19 days. He was a truthful, kind, affectionate, gentle and cheerful son.

He was married to Mollie Stacon, by Elder M. T. Lawrence January 26 1887. But, alas how fleeting the joys of earth. Death laid his hand on him in the form of the heart and kidney disease with the rheumatism. And after an illness of about four weeks, he breathed his last breath in the midst of many a sad heart and weeping eyes.

Wednesday morning he spoke to his mother and said, "I believe I will choke to death", and she asked him if he thought he would not be better off, and he replied and said, "I don't know". His mother and brother, my father, stayed by his bed-side both day and night.

May we fondly cherish the memory of a gentle son and a kind husband. May the Lord sanctify the bereavement to the good of the living and prepare them as far as it can be his will for the bright mansions in the sky.

The deceased leaves a kind wife, an afflicted father, mother, six brothers, three sisters, relatives and many friends to mourn his loss which we hope is an eternal gain.

"How blessed are they whose transient years,
Are like an evening's mellow flight,
Not dark with guilt, nor dim with tears,
Whose course is short, unclouded, light.

Weep not kind parents,
For one that is gone,
Weep not dear brothers and sisters,
For we hope he is an angel blest.

MARY B. TRAVIS.

Mrs. Mary B. Travis, who was born in Caswell Co., N. C. May the 9th. 1817, departed this life at the residence of her son-in-law, Thomas A. Henderson, January the 18, 1887. Her maiden name was White. She was married to Ellis E. Travis, April the 12, 1843. Sister professed a hope in Jesus several years before she united with the church in 1863, or 64. She was received into the fellowship of the Primitive Baptist Church at Moon's Creek, Caswell Co. N. C.; was Baptised by Elder Robert Shreeves. She was a true, humble Christian, firm in the doctrine of God, and loved to hear it preached. She delighted in reading her Bible and ZION'S LANDMARK. Her Bible was her greatest treasure. She also delighted in singing, but the voice which use to sing the praise of God is now forever hushed in death. Her Husband departed this life several years ago. After his death she lived among her children.

She was the mother of seven children, left five living (all married) two sons and three daughters, and brothers and sisters to mourn the irreparable loss of a kind, devoted mother and sister. Though we cannot grieve as though we had no hope, for we feel that she has left many bright evidences of her acceptance with God, and she has left this world of sin, sorrow and pain, and her weary soul is now sweetly resting in the Paradise of God, where sickness, sorrow, pain and death are felt and feared no more. She had been in feeble health several years, though more feeble and under the care of a skilful Physician the last three years. On Sunday night the 9th of January, she was taken worse, she suffered so intensely she couldn't sleep any until Monday morning. Then she dreamed of seeing her father and mother that had been dead several years. She dreamed she told them she was going to die. She talked freely about dying during her illness, and said her work was done, and that she couldn't see any thing in this world to want to live for, and suffer like she had for the last three years. The last nine days of her life her sufferings were so intense, it seemed almost past endurance, but all was done that loving hands and a skillful Physician could do but could not stay the hand of death.

She is sadly missed. She left an example worthy of imitation. No more will you hear her mother's gentle voice speaking words of comfort, no more will you hear her groans or see her suffer pains. Thus a good christian woman is gone from evils to come, has bid farewell to toil and pain and gone home to dwell with Jesus. During her illness she often said, "O where shall rest be found, rest for the weary soul." She felt of her heart and pulse often, and the day she died she thought they would have beat their last long ago. She was conscious of the approach of death, and was ready to go when the messenger came to bear her spirit to a brighter and better land. In her last sickness she expressed a desire to depart and be at rest as soon as it was the Lord's will to take her, and she said that the little hope she had claimed so long and had often seemed so small was not at all blighted, and all she dreaded was the sting of death. Jesus was so revealed in her as to destroy the sting of death.

The Purpose of Zion's Landmark.

By the help of the Lord this paper will contend for the ancient Landmark, guided by its stakes of Truth, and strengthened by its chords of Love.

It hopes to reject all traditions and institutions of men, and regard only the Bible as the standard of truth.

PART 2.

ON SELF-MADE MINISTERS.

Peter, what do you think of such money making preachers, or such persons as are religious by profession for to make money, or such as give money to make themselves preachers to get money, or such as sell their preaching for money? Answer Acts, 8; 20; But Peter said unto him, thy money perish with thee, because thou hast thought that the gift of God may be purchased with money. 21st. Thou hast neither part nor lot in this matter, for thy heart is not right in the sight of God. 22. Repent therefore, of this thy wickedness and pray God if perhaps the thought of thine heart may be forgiven thee. 23d For I perceive that thou art in the gall of bitterness, and in the bonds of iniquity. This is the true picture of all men and self-made preachers; they are hypocrites by profession: their whole object is to make money, like the pharisees by their religion; all their singing, praying and preaching is to make money. This is their main object in setting out. This is their object in going from town to town; and where they get the best price there will they stay the longest, and attend while money holds out; but when money fails farewell, Simon. These self-made and men-made preachers can't come down to the stoop of poverty for Christ and soul's sake; no, sir, they must walk in the first circles of society, and be clad in all the show and parade of the fashions of this world. No matter what sect they may belong to, highness of mind, greed of money by preaching, or running after it and planning to get it, are marks of these Simons. While they are in the gall of bitterness and in the bonds of their own sins, yet promise others liberty, while they are the servants of corruption, wickedness and hypocrisy; and if the grace of God should not prevent, they will be damned to a man, after all their sale preaching. Then remember this, that to give preaching freely is a mark of a minister of God; and to sell it is the mark of a self-made, a men-made, and a devil-made preacher, as I shall show.

Let us next enquire of Paul, who was a great preacher, extensive traveller, and laborious servant in the preaching of the gospel of Christ, how he made out in selling preaching, or getting money thereby. 2 Cor. 6. 10: As poor, yet making many rich: as having nothing, yet possessing all things. This he says was the case of him-self and others his companions poor and having nothing; yet he had learned to be content in this state of poverty. I would that others would do so, or go to work for money; and not like men-made preachers cheat the people out of their money, in that they sell them moral lectures for gospel, and carnal reason for revelation, and falsehoods and hypocrisy for truth and ministerial sincerity. Acts, 20; 33: I have coveted no man's silver, or gold, or apparel. 34. Yea, ye yourselves know that these hands have ministered unto my necessities, and to them that were with me. Here, ye men-made preachers, that preach for hire and divine for money, can you come up to this text? Can you say with Paul you have not coveted? Can you say your hands have supplied your fine clothes, gig and equipage; and not only done that, but then by your honest labor, (in making tents) or some other honest calling, assisted your brethren who have been in want? No, sir; the sun is too hot, labor too disgraceful, for men of such high calling, attention to the business of life, too mean for such high-bred silk men; planning almost every scheme that ingenuity can invent to get and beg a living out of the people, while ye yourselves labor not only to sell a few lies and errors to get your living by without work, for to dig you cannot. And I am sorry you should so disgrace the ministerial character, the most high calling and the most sacred of all others, and put on the sheepskin and appear as a sheep, when you are nothing but wolves and prove it by the desire and means you take to get money; which is wolf meat, as I shall show.

Read the 4th chapter 1st Corinthians: For we are made a spectacle unto the world, and to angels and men. We are fools, despised, hunger and thirst, are naked, buffeted, have no certain dwelling place, defamed, made the filth and off-scouring of all things to this day. This is the picture of the first preachers of the gospel, and if times were so now our ranks would be free from men-made preachers; for who would seek loaves and fishes by the ministry, when there was none to be got by it? As proof, Paul says that I know after my departure grievous wolves shall enter in, &c. I have showed you all things (says Paul to his brethren,) how that so laboring ye might support the weak. He gave his brethren an example of industry, and as he says again, let him labor with his hands for the things which are good, and have to give to him that needeth. Here in this text you can see the apostle inculcates industry on Christians, and shows his own example. But you will say, he said to Timothy, give himself wholly to the ministry. True, and did not Paul give himself wholly to it?

Whoever did so, more than he? Yet he worked with his hands to supply his wants and them that were with him. Go, thou men-made preacher, and do likewise; and not expect to live without work for preaching a few lies, which all men-made preachers do; for indeed they can't preach any thing else. And it is strange to me that mankind had rather buy lies from a men-made preacher at hundreds a year, than have the truth from God's ministers freely. But so it is, he is of the world, therefore the world heareth him; the world will love its own.

2 Cor. 4; 5: For we preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus the Lord; and ourselves your servants for Jesus' sake. Then here is a clear proof that the apostles did not set out to preach for money, nor was money any part; and if I may answer, no, not the least part why they preached. They had no eye to it, nor did they preach for it, for Paul tells us plainly for what the first preachers of the gospel preached—for Jesus' sake, not for the sake of money, nor for the sake of getting it by the trade of preaching. For Christ had loved them, given himself for them, called and chosen them, and given them the gifts of preaching, sent them out and told them to give the gospel freely and to preach it to every creature; not to the rich only, who could pay for it; but the poor, to every creature. Money or no money, was not to be taken in as any part of consideration why they should preach it to Tom or Dick, this church or that. That would give anything or the best price; as in the conduct of all men-made preachers of all sects; for this must be in the consideration for whom they preach, a good price or the best price they can get. Suppose a certain church says to a preacher, we will give you $500 to come and preach for us next year, and he goes and preaches; is it for money's sake, or Jesus' sake? Why if he would not have gone without the promise of money, then it was for money's sake and not for Jesus' sake. And I am forced to say, where such a bargain is made between a church and people and preacher, that it smells very strong of hire, very strong that money was the sake. For what is the difference between that and my saying to a man I will give you $500 to come and work for me, or be overseer for me next year? Would you not say, hiring? Would you not say, that man went for money's sake? Surely. Would you not say money is the main cause? So I say in all such cases, hiring preacher, money's sake. And hence these men make use of the name of Jesus, like the seven sons of Sceva did, saying, Jesus whom Paul preaches; and this they did no doubt to make money, thinking to cast out devils as well as Paul, by the name of Jesus. But understand this, that Paul was no money maker by the name of Jesus; nor money maker by preaching neither, save only what was given him to supply his wants by the churches, as a free donation. Now I defy any man to find such an hiring out one's self to preach among the apostles. The New Testament shows us no such conduct in one instance, of an apostle being hired to preach, or having a salary for preaching. Men-made preachers began this practice, and not God's preachers; and it is the practice of men-made preachers to this day. And I am sorry that it is so prevalent, as it supports so many blind guides and wolves in sheep's clothing; for it is for this hire that they are induced to sing psalms, make long prayers, and preach morality. Stop the hire and then see if your overseer don't leave you pretty quickly. So stop paying the preacher, and then see how soon the sacred desk will be empty, if you want to know whether he preaches or money or not; and I warrant you, he soon tells you he has a call elsewhere.

Suppose a man is preaching for a certain church at $400 per year, and it is understood between him and the church as the price he is to have for preaching for them; is it hire or not, say you? I say it is, for there is a bargain; secondly, a stipulated and an expectation of reward, and reward for labor done. This is the amount of all the hiring done in the world, and is as plain hiring as hiring can be hiring; and this man will flee if you don't pay him his wages, for he is a hireling, and he will flee because he is an hireling; for he careth not for the flock, but for his hire. And if he can find out a place where he can get more he will flee like Micah's priest with the Danites, for greater wages. This man is a self or men-made preacher; by such fruit they are known, for no such fruit is found on one bough of the apostles.

But since men-made preachers have introduced the practice of hiring themselves out to preach to the church of God hirelings are almost as plenty as grasshoppers; and they are as destructive to the plants of grace, as grasshoppers are to the plants of the field. For now we find preachers hired to go abroad to preach, hired to beg, to form societies, to sell and give away books, to teach theology, to print periodicals, and every step and opening leaf cries aloud money, the love of which is the root of all evil. Is it then any wonder that religion should be so sunk to mere form, show, pride, fashion and parade, and so different in its power on the morals of mankind to what it was in the apostolic age, when all their acts of religion had a marked disinterestedness, with love to Christ and the souls of men? For where in the New Testament will you find an apostle hiring himself out to go abroad to preach? They went without hire, they were not hired to beg, nor is there one instance in the New Testament of their being guilty of such conduct, and covetousness of money. They had the love of Christ as the root of all their religion, therefore they brought such good fruit. But in this day money seems to be the root of all the religion of the world. Is it then any wonder that the fruit of professors (for I can't call such Christians, they are so much unlike Christ,) should be so corrupt both in the ministry and private members, since their religion is founded and they make the basis of their religion, money? The love of it an evil root, evil must be the result. No wonder then that the fruit of professors is so generally bad even among all sects.

I forbear further quotations from scripture to show that to set out to preach for money was not the object of the first preachers of the gospel; and that the apostles did not preach for money in whole nor part, is one of the marks of a minister of God; and to preach for money, I hope to show by scripture, is a noted mark given by the Holy Ghost, of men-made, self-made, and devil-made preachers. And thus I have digressed somewhat again for the purpose of giving the reader both sides of the proof; first, the history of the lives of the apostles, and their abundant preaching unaided by money and salaries; secondly, in quoting their writings to prove that they did not preach for money; and then to prove in future that men-made preachers do preach for money. Thus you can have the matter beyond doubt. And having also given you the history of the gospel church for 31 years, and proved that they were Baptists and also given you a summary of apostolic doctrine, all of which I hope will make amends for my digression by the information they afford you. Therefore to finish my remarks I will just say, you shall pick up the Bible and examine the life of every prophet of God throughout, and you can't find his mark, money for prophecy, on one single one of them. Nor can you find one of them making gain by their prophecy, from Moses to Malachi. Elisha had a fair opportunity from Naaman, and he had a fair one when Gehazi brought back the gold and silver and raiment, after he had lied to Naaman. But see how the good old man disdains the deed; he smote Gehazi with the leprosy, as a proof of his disdain of the deed of a prophet's making money by his gifts given him of God. Take up the New Testament examine John the Baptist, Jesus Christ, and all the apostles, Judas excepted, for the mark of making gain, or preaching for money, and find it if you can. I know you cannot. Yet they lived by their own labor and the voluntary charity of the church and world, without tithing, or hiring themselves out, or begging societies. And the difference is very great, so much so that the one makes a mark of a false teacher, and the other a true one. For other particulars on this head. I refer you to the North Carolina Whig's apology for the Kehukee Association, where you will find the maintenance of the minister more full.

I have promised to resume the history of the gospel church in a short way, from 31 years up to 323, for the purpose of finding out when the church got to heaping up teachers having itching ears; or to making preachers after her own heart, that could not endure sound doctrine because of her lust. That there were many men-made teachers among the pharisees and sadducees, during this thirty-one year of the lives of apostles, is unquestionable; but that there were more of this stamp in the gospel or Christian church is clear from the history of the Acts of the apostles. For Paul foretells a time to come when the church should get to making teachers, and so does Peter, saying, as there were false prophets so should there be false teachers among you; you, the gospel church is meant. Now to find out this time when the gospel church got at this great business is my chief design; this cannot be done by scripture, because that history ceases within 31 years after the ascension of our Lord. Then to find out when the church became so corrupt that she could not endure sound doctrine through her great lust; for this is given as the cause why she fell on the plan of making teachers of the cast mentioned, teachers having itching ears—curious beings indeed. Now you must know this, that God's preachers every one to a man preach sound doctrine, nor can they be hired to preach any other sort, nor forced to it neither. This is the reason that so many of them have gone to the stake and been burned, and devoured as lambs by wolves in sheep's clothing. Then if the gospel church ever became so corrupt that she could not endure sound doctrine, she must make preachers to preach it for her, or go entirely without preaching; because God's preachers cannot nor would not preach any other sort but sound doctrine. So then she must make them, for you cannot believe God ever made a preacher to preach unsound doctrine, for this would be destroying his own work and design in preaching. Then as we cannot find out this time from the scriptures, we are under the necessity of pursuing church history, and secondly, Roman history in connection with the church history; as the Roman empire at that time, or from the reign of Nero in 31 up to Constantine in 323, comprehended almost all the civilized kingdoms of the world; and so within this wide spread empire is the Christian church to be found; and from them through the hands of the British nation, which at that time was a Roman province, we are chiefly indebted for our knowledge of the Christian church in times of antiquity; for Constantine went from Britain to Rome before he became emperor.

But I am so far swelling this piece beyond any thing I intended, I must only glance at the history of the church after leaving her history in Acts. Polycarp, who was Bishop of Smyrnia and so appointed by the apostles, had been taught by the apostles and lived in the age of the apostles, and had conversed with many that had seen Christ, was perhaps the first writer after the apostles of the affairs of the Christian church. Some part of his writings have been preserved by different historians. Papias was a hearer of the apostle John, and also a companion of Polycarp. In about 20 years or a little more arose Justin Martyr, another Christian writer of much note.

Then came Hegessippus, who gives a short account of the Christian church, about 31 years after Justin Martyr. Then comes Ireneaus the Frenchman, Bishop of Lyons, who was a disciple of Polycarp, who was a disciple of John—who lived a little more than one hundred years after the publication of the scriptures.

ADMONITION.

"Take heed unto thyself and to the doctrine, continue in them, for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself and them that hear thee." Tim.

The first thing that is required of the true minister is to take heed unto himself. If a preacher does not have an orderly walk and godly conversation his preaching will have but little influence.

I have heard it said, "The tongue may lie, but the feet will not." Hence the great necessity of one preaching by his daily deportment.

The minister is spoken of as an ensample to the flock or at least should be such. If the minister, whom the church looks upon as an ensample, is accustomed to visiting bar-rooms and drinking with the drunken, it may have a tendency to have a bad effect upon some weak one and prove very injurious to the cause. By laying this bad example before the weak brother it may result in his exclusion and thus our example causes the weak brother to offend.

I am of the opinion that the minister of Christ should keep out of bar-rooms, for when he is there he has some associates who are not pleasant by any means. If Arminians say Primitive Baptists drink too much let it be false. While the minister should stay away from such places he should in meekness point out the evil effects in such things.

It is very important that a minister should take heed unto himself in all his contracts to be able to pay his just debts and not promise more than he can comply with. He also should take heed how he talks, and be careful to tell nothing but what is truth and then not try to exaggerate: he had better say nothing than to say it wrong. People are watching a preacher's conversation. He should be faithful to meet his appointments; if he agrees to go to a place he should work to that end. I have known congregations broken down by the preacher failing to come and fill his appointments. He should be punctual every time. I have known ministers to appoint their meetings to be at a certain hour and would get there perhaps one-half an hour later than the time set, then stand around and talk to the brethren for sometime before they would commence meeting and the congregation become careless and indifferent about going. Perhaps a minister, sometimes, looks for perfection in his brethren, and because he does not find it will talk about the faults to dear brethren, and thus prejudice their minds against those brethren who are overtaken in faults and many times cause serious troubles. Paul says, "If any of you be overtaken in a fault, ye that are spiritual restore such in the spirit of meekness."

Suppose Christ had waited 'till he found perfection in us before he came to redeem us, we would never have been redeemed if he had. He came to seek and to save that which was lost. If the minister of Christ has the Cause at heart, is it not his duty to labor to save those who are lost to their enjoyments as God's children? The minister should labor hard to keep peace among brethren. I have found it a good plan if I can say no good, to say nothing.

The minister should not try to force his views on certain points on brethren. If brethren cannot understand everything about God's purposes and the extent of them, he should not try to destroy them. My opinion if more scriptural language was used by the ministry and more labor to preach what the Bible teaches and not try to bend it to suit our notions we would get along better. The minister should take heed how he governs his family, or house. He should have his children under subjection. It looks very unbecoming to see a preacher's children engage with a parcel of worldlings in making sport of their father's preaching. There is indeed a great responsibility resting upon a minister, hence the necessity of his taking heed unto himself daily.

The loudest preaching is done in our every-day deportment, and in that we should have a good report of them that are without. If you do not 'take heed' unto yourself your preaching the doctrine of Christ will be but a lifeless sound. After one has the deportment that becomes a servant of God, then he should be sound in doctrine and speak that which cannot be gainsaid. Notice, "the doctrine," which is a definite doctrine, and which is the doctrine of Christ, which includes election, predestination, specific atonement, grace, resurrection, final preservation of the saints, &c. Also practical godliness or exhortation, and experience. One who takes heed to himself and to the doctrine and continues—he saves himself (not with eternal salvation for he is already saved) and them that hear him. Every person cannot hear. That salvation then is the "common salvation," that we must not neglect and we must work out in fear and trembling. I believe there are but few pastors. I think a pastor is a father or nurse, and should labor more faithfully to save the brethren from errors and false teachings than the natural father would his child from disease. Pastors should labor for peace and if they see a wolf coming they should not fail to inform the lambs of him.

It seems to me that when one denies that sinners were chosen in Christ, redeemed by Christ, born again, quickened into life, changed from a state of darkness to light, that such is a wolfish doctrine and will devour the sheep that are captivated by it. I regret that I have ever heard such advocated in the South, yet some few advocate it. I believe all that Jesus did was to benefit poor sinners of Adam's race. That is my hope. To-day was our communion and feet-washing, and I felt the Lord was with us. Remember me in my afflictions at a throne of grace. Yours affectionately,
LEE HANCKS.
Ozark, Ala.

"If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? follow thou me." John 21:22.

These are the words of Jesus. Therefore we must not think them unimportant. They were spoken to Peter.—Peter was a believer, a disciple and an apostle. He was our brother. We have the same use of them as did he, therefore we do well to consider their meaning.

The circumstances under which they were spoken were these. Peter had just before thrice denied his Lord with cursing and swearing. The Lord was now risen from the dead and had appeared unto his disciples again and again. Peter had said just before "I go a fishing (his former employment) and the rest of the disciples had said "we also go with thee." They had toiled all night and caught nothing. In the morning Jesus stood on the shore and told them to cast their net on the right side of the ship and it at once enclosed a great number of fishes. At first none of the disciples knew him, but now John whose love made him wise to know his Master, said "it is the Lord." Peter when he heard this threw himself into the sea and came to land. The rest came in that vessel dragging the net full of fishes with them. There was a fire and fish laid on the coals. And Jesus gives them bread and fish likewise. We are told that this is the third time in which Jesus showed himself to his disciples. Then occurs that wonderful conversation, so full of meaning between Jesus and Peter when Jesus by questions probed his very heart, and called out a true confession from his lips, and in which he announced to Peter his work for all his life saying, "feed my sheep." Peter had denied his Lord grievously, but yet he could say in the presence of him who knows all things "thou knowest that I love thee." Yes Peter, the same Peter who just before had denied him could appeal to him to bear testimony after all that he did love the very Lord he had denied. I want to lay emphasis upon the pronoun "I." He did not say "my old man" denied thee but my "new man loves thee," but he said "I" love thee. And so Paul could say afterwards not only that "the Spirit has been sent into our hearts crying Abba, Father, but also that by the spirit WE cry Abba, Father. Yes! even we poor sinners, often denying Peters cry Father! Father!" And so we, even we ourselves, must be children of God, and if children then born of God.

Then having by a three-fold questioning searched the very heart of the erring yet loving Peter, the Lord tells him that he shall yet have opportunity to prove the greatness of his love: and faith by suffering a martyr's death. Once he had girded himself and went where he would but afterwards when he should be old another should gird him and carry him where he would not. And John says the Lord said this signifying by what death he should glorify God. Then Peter turning about sees John, and said to Jesus "and what shall this man do?"

Let us pause here a moment. What a clear view of our common fallen nature does this question present. We do not know just what motive actuated Peter in asking this question. But it clearly shows one thing viz. that he had not yet fully learned to trust all with his Master. His question seemed to say, "thou hast announced to me the work I shall do and the lot I shall stand in, this man also should have his measure of labor and suffering." Perhaps Peter had some little spirit of jealousy dwelling in his heart. He may have remembered just what John alludes to right in the context that he was that disciple whom Jesus loved and who leaned on his breast at supper. It may be that the thought crossed his mind "my lot is to be one of suffering, while John is perhaps to be spared all this." And so, from this perhaps, and other fleshly thoughts and motives he impulsively asks this question "and what shall this man do?" Is he not to bear my burden of toil or suffering also? Am I alone to die a violent death? Oh how pitiful the Lord is to our weakness and sinful infirmities! The servant is presumptuous who questions his master thus. It is enough that he has been told the will of his master concerning himself. Yet we are ever asking what shall others do instead of pressing onward in the endeavor to perform our own tasks, or to bear our own sufferings. Oh to be in such a spiritual frame as to see nothing, hear nothing, desire nothing but to do or suffer the will of God towards us! Then should we question, not what shall others do, but how may I best glorify God in my life or death.

And now we have the Lord's answer as given in text at the head of this article "if I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee; follow thou me." Concerning this language the statement of John is that the saying went forth from it that he should not see death; and John's reply to this is that Jesus did not say so, but "if I will that he tarry till I come." That is, the Saviour said in substance "I have appointed a martyr's death for thee, Peter. Thus will I be glorified in thee. Is not that enough for you to know? Suppose that on the other hand I have willed that this disciple of mine shall glorify God by not dying at all, what is it to thee. Your place is just to follow me. I do not say he shall not die; but if it be so it is nothing to thee." This, it seems to me is a just paraphrase of the Saviour's language and was understood by both John and Peter.

Now then let us look at the words themselves as they may apply to us. We too like Peter are given to looking at what others are doing. Sometimes the apparent idleness and neglect of our brethren stir us up until we are ready to say like care-burdened and troubled Martha "Speak to my sister that she help me." Yea, we go further than did Martha, instead of going to the Lord with our complaining we undertake to speak to our brethren ourselves that they help us. Others may appear to us idle and neglectful and as though they have but little to bear, when in reality they are just waiting 'till the Lord shall call them and assign them their work to do. Others may be in reality idle and neglectful and living at ease in Zion, but what is it all compared with the question, am I myself following the Lord? And cannot the Lord manage his refractory children without our interference? Let us not stand idly gazing at others who may seem to us idle, but be following the Lord for ourselves. We may be sure that our burden comes to us as God wills, and our place in the vineyard is God's appointment and is the best possible for us. And we can leave not only ourselves, but all our fellow disciples in his hand. He will glorify himself by their life and death as well as by ours. Is not that enough for us to know? Oh that each one could give over thinking so much about others and about how God is going to deal with them, and in what way he is going to lead them, and ask only for ourselves, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?"

This it seems to me is the general statement of the truth in this text as it applies to us. But I want to call attention to some special things where this language may apply. When Jesus says, "follow thou me," it implies plainly that we are to keep our eye upon him and go where he leads us. We are running a race. Others may run ahead of us, but we are not to look to them, but to the mark at the end. We are soldiers marching into battle. Our leader is Jesus. We are not to follow our fellow soldiers but our great captain. He will lead us in the right way. We are not to follow a theory, a doctrine, a set of forms, a church, but simply Jesus, and each one must follow him wheresoever he goes.

Again these three little words imply that each disciple is to hear the voice of Jesus speaking directly to his own heart. The speaker is a person and the call is personal. It is not to a nation, a tribe, a family, or even this body of believers as a body, but to persons each for himself or herself. My brother must hear it for himself as well as I. I cannot interpret the vision of the Almighty for him and neither can he for me. I have no right to say to him this or that is your work. I can only say "whatsoever he bids you, that do." Each must hear the call of Jesus for himself.

Again, these three words imply that sorrow, shame, reproach, pain and persecution await disciples of Jesus. This was his road, and if we follow him this is where we also must go. To follow him means to drink of the cup that he drank of and to be baptised with the baptism which he endured. And his was a baptism of fire, of distress and grief, and sore temptation. Peter had said, "I WILL GO WITH THEE to prison and to death." He had failed once, but now the Lord said, "Follow thou me." And Peter knew now that that meant the prison and death. How highly he was honored of his master. He was given the very task he had so miserably failed in, to go to prison and death for the Lord. But now he goes forth, not boastfully confident in himself, but humbly as becomes sinners and confident in the Lord. To follow the Lord means so much of suffering, of self-denial, of obedience, of walking with God, that I cannot begin to tell it. To be baptised is but to begin the following. It is but the mark of enlistment in the army. The marching and the fighting come afterward, but having put on the uniform let us march on keeping in view of our leader, and keeping step with his disciples. And if we love him, having not yet put on the name of Christ in baptism, let us hasten to do so as he commanded and showed us how.

But perhaps some of us are reasoning like Peter, "what shall this man do." Somebody or something has become a stumbling block in our way. Here is one who is and has been bearing the burden and heat of the day. He has been liberal up to and beyond his means in supporting the financial needs of the church. He has contributed to pastor, to the poor and to general expenses liberally. But others have not done so. Now the temptation is, "why should I be burdened when the rest will not put forth a finger to help bear it. I might as well give up the struggle." But listen, "your Master says, what is that to thee, follow thou me." What if they are all departing from the Lord, see that thou do not.

Again, here is a minister who has labored in the vineyard early and late. He has given all his time and strength in serving his brethren for Jesus' sake. But how have they served him? Perhaps many of them have never even asked if he needed anything. They are sure that the Lord will provide for him for they are content to let the Lord do it. It has never seemed to enter their heads or their hearts that they were stewards of the manifold grace of God. Now that faithful pastor hears the temptation cries to quit the work which is so little appreciated. But let that discouraged pastor be encouraged. The Lord to him says also, "what is that to thee, follow thou me." I have known of churches sending to associations to send them supplies of ministers, and never intimating that they would see to it that those ministers should suffer no loss. And when ministers have agreed to go in such cases I think are grandly fulfilling the text, "what is that to thee, follow thou me." Why do not those churches write to ministers themselves instead of turning over to the association, which has no authority to send anybody? But perhaps I am digressing.

Again here is one who sees a brother doing wrong or thinks he does. And he says I have no fellowship for that brother. I have no confidence in him. If the church will not put him out I will not stay in it, I will not sit with him in communion. Oh my brother, what is it you are saying? How much holier are you than he? Are you a better judge than the whole church? Will you cease to follow the Lord because that brother does not follow as he ought? Rather say my brother, "let the erring one do as he may I will serve the Lord," Jesus says to you, "what is that to thee, follow thou me." If your brother leaves his task undone, you should strive to do double duty, that the Lord may receive full measure of glory in spite of his transgression.

No one who loves God has a right under any circumstances to leave the church, so long as it remains a church of Jesus Christ. In so doing he is forsaking the Lord who dwells in that church.

Again, here is another who has a trembling hope in Christ. He also loves God's people and desires to be with them. But there is coldness in the church perhaps alienation and strife. Her loveliness is marred. Much of the pleasant land is laid waste. Such a state of things is sad. His tender heart is grieved. He sees here and there a member in whom he has no confidence. And he feels as though he cannot come into the fold in the face of all this. But let me ask him, is he any better than the worst one there? Is not his master a dweller in that church? Is he more holy, more pure, more just than God? Can he not gladly dwell where Jesus condescends to abide? Suppose all is as bad as he sees it to be, does not Jesus say "what is that to thee, follow thou me." Oh! if you wait 'till you find a perfect church you will never come in. There never has been a perfect church and never will be 'till we all reach heaven. And if there were anywhere on earth a perfect church it would not be a veritable home for you and me.

I want to say ere I close that I am glad to see that our papers are keeping Brother Hassels' financial sacrifices in preparing the history before the brethren. Perhaps some brother has it in his heart to give towards this debt ten, twenty, fifty or a hundred dollars, if only others would do the same. Let me say to that one suppose others do not contribute, WHAT is that to thee. Jesus says, "FOLLOW THOU ME." And JESUS GAVE HIMSELF for his needy brethren.

May God bless these thoughts which have seemed very sweet to me to others also.

MISS LAURA Y. HINES, BELOVED SISTER IN CHRIST:—It is with a feeling sense of my weakness and inability that I now attempt to fulfill my promise. Oh, may the dear Lord direct my words to his praise. I have had impressions to tell you what I hope the Lord has done for me for sometime. But I felt too ignorant and unworthy. Dear Sister, you never can know how much trouble it has given me. What I have to tell seems so little compared with yours and others: but where there is little given there is little required. We are commanded always to be ready to give the reason of the hope that is within us with fear and trembling.

The first time I ever recollect feeling myself a sinner was in Sept. 1869. I heard the world was coming to an end that day, and thought if that was so what would become of me, for I felt like I would be lost if that was so for I felt to be a sinner. When I awoke next morning it was bright and fair. I was so glad I thought I would try to be a better girl, but I soon forgot all this and went on in pleasure of sin, and would often say a form of prayer. In June, 1871, I was at a prayer meeting, one of the ladies saw I was crying and asked me if I didn't want them to pray for me, and told her I did. She said the Lord was willing and ready to save me if I would believe. After awhile they asked me if I did not feel better, and I told them I thought I did. I professed and even asked my father to let me join the Missionary Baptist church: he thought I was too young to know what I was doing, and I am so glad he thought so. It was not long before my trouble came back with double force. I would try to pray and do better, but all my efforts failed. I grew worse instead of better. In April 1874 my trouble was great. I went to Sunday School but couldn't enjoy myself. I felt so miserable, like one alone, that I could not help begging the Lord for mercy, though I did not deserve it. I knew I could not do anything to merit salvation. I was afraid to go to sleep for fear I would not live 'till morning. I felt if I were to die in that condition I would be lost. I could not help saying, Lord be merciful to me a sinner, for nothing but his mercy could save me. Finally I went to sleep and when I awoke next morning my trouble was all gone. I felt light and happy like the Psalmist said, He brought me up also out of an horrible pit, out of the miry clay, and set my feet upon a rock and established my goings, and he put a new song in my mouth even praise unto our God. It was a cloudy day, but there was sunshine in my heart; I can't tell you how I did feel. One of the officers of the Institute asked me what made me look so pleasant, I never told him anything, for I was afraid I would deceive him again. I soon found that I was not through with trouble, began to have doubts, was afraid I was deceived. I had a desire to be baptized, so I asked father again to let me join the Missionaries, but he did not. In 1877 I left School, talked some to father and had talked with others but none could satisfy me. I knew nothing of the Primitive Baptists, though my parents thought they were right. I had heard some say they were a hard set of people therefore I was anxious to hear them and find out what they believed. So in Sept. 1878 brother Bland preached here, his text was, "Show me your faith without your works, and I will show you my faith by my works." Oh, how I enjoyed it, he did tell my feelings so plain. I had been told by others that they believed in the stool of do nothing. But oh how different, for the Lord's people are commanded to work out their own salvation with fear and trembling, for it is God that worketh in them both to will and to do of his own good pleasure. The next March I heard Brother Woodard at Smithfield. his text was in the 14th chapter of Luke. Oh how he described my feelings, seeming as if his whole sermon was directed to me. I wished I could get in some corner where no one could see me. The next day his text was, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy-laden and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you and learn of me for I am meek and lowly in heart, and you shall find rest unto your souls, for my yoke is easy and my burden is light." How I loved those dear people, it seemed like I could not help telling Aunt Martha about it. She told Brother Woodard, he talked to me some and I felt relieved. But after that I felt sorry, for I was afraid I had deceived them, so I would not tell any one else, but I told father and sister before I got home. My Testament seemed like a new book to me. Sometimes I would get so full of joy I hardly could keep from crying aloud. When I would read the LANDMARK the brethren and sisters would tell my feelings so much better than I could. Oh, how I loved them and wanted to be with them, but I felt too unworthy. I went to Middle Creek in May, it was so hard to stay away. Brother Wilson's text was in Matt. 11: 28. I promised the Lord then that if I got another opportunity I would offer to the church. I cannot describe my feelings for the next three months, my health was bad the most of the time.

I did not expect to go to Middle Creek August meeting until the Thursday before. One of my sisters asked me if I was not going to carry my clothes to be baptized. I said you know I cannot. I did not sleep more than an hour Friday night. The next morning it was raining, and I promised the Lord if it stopped raining I would go and carry my clothes. I went to meeting but could not talk much to them. I told them I loved them and wanted to be with them and to my surprise they received me. Before I left the meeting house I was afraid I would be compelled to tell them I had deceived them. But while Brother J. E. Adams was praying at the water, I began to feel better. I thought that was the prettiest water I ever saw. Brother J. A. T. Jones baptized me, and is a very dear brother to me. Brother Ransom Gulley was ordained Deacon that morning. Brothers Wooten and I. Jones preached, then communion and washing feet were observed. My headache was all gone, and the joy I felt was inexpressible. On our way home that evening Papa said he thought I had done my duty, and wanted me to set an example for him and the rest. That made me feel sad, for I knew he was much better than I. I don't think I ever slept so well as I did for the next two nights.

I am so prone to sin I often fear I am deceived in the whole matter, at other times I feel like his grace would be sufficient if I were called to die. I am a mystery to myself. I don't see how the brethren and sisters can fellowship one so vile. Remember me at a throne of grace. Your unworthy sister, if one at all,

LIFE AND DEATH.

"See, I have set before you this day life and good, and death and evil. I have set before you life and death, blessing and cursing: therefore choose life, that both thou and thy seed may live. Deut. 30: 15, 19."

The dealings of the Lord with his people are characterized by two covenants, one as set forth in the law and the prophets, which is typical and answers to their common, or time salvation, which is conditional, and the other as set forth in Jesus and the apostles which answers to their eternal salvation, and is unconditional. In drawing from these two covenants those things which accompany salvation we should be careful to rightly divide the word of truth, that is those things which are legal should be treated as such, and applied in a legal sense to legal subjects, and those things which are gospel should be treated in a gospel sense and applied to gospel subjects. The works of the law were legal by virtue of the law of Moses under which those people addressed in the text were held as subjects thereof. Good works in this the gospel day and dispensation are by virtue of the law of life and grace under which all the subjects of grace are held as subjects thereof. Ye are no longer under the law—that is the law of Moses—the law of sin and death, but under grace.

There must be and is, an intelligent distinction between the dispensation under the law which neither gave nor promised eternal life, and the gospel dispensation which both promised and gives eternal life and salvation.

Moses was commanded to make all things according to the pattern which the Lord had shown him in the Mount, and Jesus did the will of his Father. Now in order to be profitably instructed, encouraged and edified by these things, we must follow the order in which they are given. Under the ceremonial law everything stood in its place, and only answered the purpose for which it was designed. So it was with Jesus, nothing which he might have done would have answered and accomplished the salvation and raising up of all those whom his Father had given him, but the strict and perfect execution of the will of his Father.

The law was given to the Jews, and the conditional covenant under it was made with them, and not the Gentiles of which class we are, therefore it would be but folly for us to try to keep a law that was not given to us, and which those to whom it was given could not keep, and had they kept it, they had no promise of eternal life for so doing, but the fruit of the land with long life therein. Neither the law nor the covenant of works under the law was designed to give life, nor could they give it. "Had there been a law given that could have given life verily righteousness should have been by the law."

To apply the text to sinners in this day would be to require something of them which God has never required, and which could not give them life should they do in form what was required of the Jews. The obedience of the Jews did not make the land of Canaan theirs, it was theirs by gift to their fathers before they were born. Only their entrance into the land and long life in it depended upon their obedience to the law of God.

While life and death were set before them yet they were not given freedom of will to choose between the two, but were commanded to choose life. This choosing of life did not imply the idea that they were without life with which to live and act; but refers to the way of life, as is the case with the saints in this day. Paul says if ye live after the flesh ye shall die, but if ye through the spirit do mortify the deeds of the body ye shall live. This land whither they went up to possess it did not nor does not represent heaven, but the church, so that this would properly represent, in the type, the people of God in this day who have the right to join the church and enjoy its blessings. The church is the place for all who believe in Jesus, and they are commanded to follow Jesus in keeping his commandments, but no-where have they or any of them the right to neglect their duty in these things.

The way of the Spirit, and the way of the flesh are before them, and those who live and walk in the Spirit enjoy the blessings of the spirit, and those who live or walk after the flesh die to those enjoyments.

P. G. L.

NEITHER.

To be so rich in worldly goods that one is under no necessity of laboring is a great curse, for it breeds discontent and leads to dissipation by enticing one into bad habits. Such people will be doing something. Man's nature is such that he must seek something to be at. If he is too proud to labor, or so rich he feels no need of it, he will be in some play, amusement, or dissipation to kill time which is most ruinous in its results. To be so poor one has nothing he can do, but resorts to begging to get poor bread and old clothes is a wretched condition to be in, as it causes one to lose all his energy and heart to do any thing. It would be better to put a beggar to work of some kind, and let him earn a shilling a day, than for him to get twenty-five cents a day by begging.

What a blessing it is to have work to do that is worth doing, and still another blessing is to have a mind to perform the labor. It is not good for one to be rich and feel to be above work. When one ceases to labor, that is able, he gets above work. He may not admit it, but he does.

There is much more said in the bible against the rich than there is against the poor, and yet people want to be rich.

Wisdom would say, give me neither riches nor poverty. Feed me with food convenient. A man in the right state of mind does not want to be a trouble to others, nor does he want all he can grab of this world. How vicious this age in its grasp after riches, its love of money.

How utterly regardless one is of the rights of others to be content to depend on others for his support. Am I right if I want to burden others to feed and clothe me? No man in his right mind desires to be dependent on others.

The humble laboring man who earns his bread by the sweat of his face is the happiest man, but what man could induce him to believe that?

To be reconciled to God and able to say as Paul, having learned in whatever state I am therewith to be content, is a happy medium.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD;—Please find enclosed two dollars for ZION'S LANDMARK. Though I feel I have been careless in sending it I hope you will forgive me this wrong, for I feel it is a wrong for me to owe a debt and not pay it when it is due. I believe Primitive Baptists should be prompt to come up to their contracts, and if they can't pay up let them show reason for such failure. Let them keep truth and honesty on their side, for when we say we will do a thing and do it not we lie and do not the truth, we say and do not. We should be doers of the word and not hearers only. So may the Lord enable each one who is in arrears to come up promptly and pay what is due; and thereby prove his faith by his works, and also enable you to continue your paper which I believe has proved a blessing to Primitive Baptists. Brother Gold, I hope the Lord will give you a mind to come to see us in South Florida again. I remain your brother in christian love and affection, if not deceived in myself.

J. W. FUTCH.

Remarks.

Brother Futch, I desire to visit you again in South Florida, and hope to do so, but my calls and labors here at home are so many that it is very difficult for me to leave long enough to make you a visit. We hope all in arrears will do as brother Futch advises. It will help me much for I am now needing the money.

P. D. G.

Elder P. D. Gold, Dear friend, please give your views through the LANDMARK, on Acts the 8th chapter, and 32d verse, also first John 2nd chapter and 19th verse. Your friend, LOU EMMA SNIDER.

Remarks.

The place of scripture which he read was this,

"He was led as a sheep to the slaughter; and like a lamb dumb before his shearer, so he opened not his mouth: Acts 8; 32."

Phillip had been preaching at Samaria with great effect, but there was need for his going down into a desert to preach, for there was a vessel of mercy in distress and enquiring the way of truth, and God purposed that he should hear words of salvation from the lips of Phillip. If it is in the desert that becomes as a fruitful field when the Lord sends his servants there, and the desert shall be glad and blossom as the rose, a cultivated, choice plant.

There was an Eunuch, a man of great authority under Candace, queen of the Ethiopians, that had been to Jerusalem to worship, and was returning. He was a convicted soul enquiring the way of truth. A preacher could not have asked for a riper subject than was he. Enquiring as he was and seeking knowledge of God, he was reading in the most wonderful chapter of that most wonderful book of Isaiah, and these words quoted above had seized his attention. The opportune moment controled and arranged by the God of heaven had come that these men should meet. How soon they become acquainted. But how strange the salutation as Phillip says to him, "Understandest thou what thou readest?" The answer is equally as frank as the question is important, "How can I, except some man guide me?"

It is then that Phillip opens his mouth and preaches. Notice that he does not open a book and read, nor does he pull a written sermon out of his pocket, nor repeat a memorized

one. All he has to do is to open his mouth and begin at this same scripture and preach Jesus, as one opening a cruse and the oil flows. How sweet too were the words and how blessed the effect on the eunuch.

As a sheep led to the slaughter appointed for that purpose, coming into the world for that purpose, and a sacrifice holy and without blemish, as a lamb without spot, dumb before the shearer, so Jesus without resistance goes to death. Have you ever noticed how a sheep without opening the mouth, or uttering a word of complaint, goes to the slaughter? What holy and perfect submission does Jesus show in all his life and beyond unto death. Here is the sacrifice that redeems us from all iniquity, cancels all sin, while all we like sheep are gone astray. It is too as the good shepherd he lays down his life for the sheep. He bore our sins in his own body that we, being dead to sin, might live unto God. Being dead to sin we are free from sin, and alive unto God. By whose stripes we are healed.

The blessed atonement of Jesus is the doctrine of truth that all the true servants of God preach.

The more devoted one is as a servant of God the more he preaches Jesus crucified, dying the just one for the unjust, that we being dead to sin might live unto God.

The word is gladly received here, as it always is when the Spirit of God leads the preacher and the hearer. •The word drops into good ground and it instantly brings fruit. For as they travel they come to a certain water and the eunuch says here is water, what doth hinder me to be baptized? There was certain water, not uncertain. By certain water is not meant water that soon will dry up or fail, but a constant supply of water. If the disciples had sprinkled people the eunuch probably had enough water in his bags of skins for that, as it was the custom of travelers to carry a supply of using water with them in crossing deserts.

People that do not hold the truth have a hard time in explaining away or perverting the scriptures. For instance, men that practice sprinkling for baptism say that John baptized in the wilderness where there was no water &c., When the word of God, not the word of poor, lying, foolish man, says that John baptized in the river Jordan, and also in Enon near to Salim, because there was much water there. Jesus came to John to the river Jordan, and he was baptized in the river Jordan. Besides the word baptize means to dip, wash, bury, plunge &c., and it sets forth the burial and resurrection of Jesus.

Why did the eunuch say, here is water, what doth hinder me to be baptized? Is not the plain duty of believers to be baptised, and to be baptised at once, not conferring with flesh and blood? Why did not Phillip say to him, wait a month or a year, or put it off as long as you can? That would be like some are inclined to in these days, but there is no bible authority for it. The invariable teachings and all the examples show that as soon as one is a believer he should no longer tarry, but at once arise and be baptised. On the day of Pentecost that was the way Ananias was sent to Paul and it was so done. When Peter was sent Cornelius that was the way. Nor did the jailor at Phillippi wait even until the next day to be baptized, but the same night he believed he was baptized.

We need to return to the ancient Landmarks in this matter as well as other things. Follow the pattern shown in the mount. Whatsoever he saith unto thee do it. The kings' business requires haste, and with all diligence and fervency we should obey the king of glory.

Where the whole counsel of God is declared in love and faithfulness to a child of God there follows a ready response out of the heart and in the life of the believer. For where the word of a king is there is power, and that word therefore does not return to him void, but it prospers in the thing whereto it is sent. Hence the seed sown springs up and yields a copious crop unto God. So that readily the heart of the eunuch is exercised unto godliness, and baptism is in his heart. Had Phillip said anything about baptism to him? If you preach Jesus baptism is preached, for it is all in Jesus. No preaching is complete that does not set forth Jesus crucified and risen, and in him his people crucified, and baptism sets this forth; for by baptism we are planted or buried together with Christ in his death.

So as they journey they come to a certain water and the eunuch says, here is water, what doth hinder me to be baptized? It is in his mind to be baptized. The very sight of water stirs him to speak. Phillip's answer is a very suggestive one. He wanted to know what the eunuch believed: but he did not ask him a direct, leading question which would suggest the answer: but he said, "if thou believest with all thine heart thou mayest." So the eunuch must confess his faith, or declare what was in his heart, or what he believed with all his heart. For it is with the heart man believeth unto righteousness. Surely when one believes in Jesus it is with all the heart, for Jesus is so glorious that when he is revealed or preached to us the new heart that is given in him is that with which we believe unto righteousness. Then with the mouth the eunuch makes his confession unto salvation, for he says I believe that Jesus Christ is the son of God.

That is all that is required or expected for one born of God to believe. If one with the heart believes this he is ready then to be baptized. He believes this before he is prepared to be baptized. One cannot truly be baptized in the name of the Father, and the Son, and Holy Ghost until he does believe this. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved. He must believe before he is baptized. He that believeth not shall be damned.

The chariot is commanded to stand still, and they both go down into the water. What for? For Phillip to sprinkle or pour some water on the eunuch? I would be ashamed to say that men guided by divine truth would go down into the water to do that. Even in this day men not guided by divine truth do not that way. When men sprinkle or pour water on men or children now they do not go down into the water to do this. It is the silliest nonsense to charge inspired men with doing that which men now not inspired never do.

When Jesus went down in Jordan with John who was sent from God to baptize it was to set forth his burial and resurrection. What a solemn act is baptism. No people can be the church of Christ that have departed so far from the faith as to reject the baptism of John.

When they come up out of the water the eunuch goes on his way rejoicing.

He now has the answer of a good conscience towards God. This is a present salvation of joy and peace of heart. It is not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God by the resurrection from the dead- and as a figure of the resurrection it doth now give us the answer of a conscience before exercised unto godliness, and hence it doth thus NOW SAVE us.

ALSO.

"They went from us, but were not of us; for if they had been of us they would no doubt have continued with us: but they went out that they might be manifest that they were not all of us." 1st. John 2: 19.

John in this connection of scripture is speaking of antichrist, and showing there are many anti-christs gone out into the world. He tells us (3rd chap. 3rd verse) that every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God, and this is that spirit of antichrist.

But does anti-christ first appear in a falling away from the true church? John says, they went out from us, but they were not of us. The worst enemies of Israel are the foes of her own house, counterfeit religion, perils among false brethren, an enemy within the camp is most to be dreaded. An evil heart of unbelief is our great trouble. A profane person among us causing a root of bitterness to spring up defiles many. All that do not confess in the utmost fulness that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is anti-christ.

Look at the many that make a partial confession of Christ, but they do not feel and say he is come in them causing them to be dead, and to mortify their members on earth; or there is no confession of guilt, shame and sin, and no heart-felt confession that Christ is in them the hope of glory.

Such go out from us, but they were not of us. What a relief to the child of God and to the church of God that they who are not of us do go out from us, but they were not of us. For discord produced by those opposed always disturbs peace. There is no relief like that riddance. "My soul abhorred them, and their souls abhorred me." The more faithfully Christ is preached the more such antichrists will go out from us, because they are not of us.

What a number of false denominations have risen up having been originated by men once of us. Paul says that man of sin, the son of perdition, could not be manifested or revealed until there come a falling away from the true church of Christ. At first departures are slight, but they gather strength until a rent is made, and then a going out of those who had a name among us, but were not of us; so in history of false denominations that originate designing men rising up among the people of God, and counterfeits seeking to circulate on the value and strength of the genuine.

In modern days such men as Andrew Fuller and Carey were once with us, but they went off or out by taking up new things and drawing off followers after them.

There is a blessed riddance to the church of such when they depart. A few of the true sort are in far greater peace than many with strife and hatred.

One thing may truly be said, if they had been of us they would no doubt have continued with us. For there is no place to which a true child of God can go except to Jesus, and he has no home except with the true child. Such no doubt will continue with us: while those that are antichrists will go out to show' what they are.

Hence time and opportunity or circumstances and occasions will show what men are. The tree is known by the fruit it bears.

P. D. G.

GLORIOUS SIGHT.

Brother T. Conoway requests my view of Heb. 2 : 9 :—

"But we see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death crowned with glory and honor: that he by the grace of God should taste death for every man."

1st. One reading with understanding the divine directions and commands relating to the priest-hood of Aaron and his sons must be impressed with the sacredness of that holy office. The holy garments put upon him, the precious stones bearing the engraved names of the tribes on the shining breast-plate of judgment borne on his heart, the holy anointing oil poured on him for consecration, the shedding of blood that brought him into the divine presence, the rich tabernacle in which he worshipped, all must impress such a reader with the profoundest reverence towards God who alone put this honor on the priest-hood, especially when perceiving that all this glory had no glory in comparison with the glory of Jesus, made a high-priest forever after the order of Melchisedec, who is the appointed heir of all things, who is the brightness of God's glory and the express image of his person; by whom he made the worlds, and by whom God hath in these last days spoken unto us, who when he had by himself purged our sins sat down on the right hand of the majesty on high, being so much better than the angels.

2d. When God gave dominion to man in creation over beast and fowl it was typical. For we see not yet all things put under man's feet. His dominion is very limited. He has absolute power over nothing, not over beasts always, a horse may kill him, not over his own thoughts nor his own tongue, nor circumstances, nor times, nor disease, nor sins, nor death. We see not yet all things put under man's feet. Where then shall we look for the fulfillment of that scripture. We must look to him in whom all divine fulness dwells and to whom all the promises point, even to Jesus. Hence we see Jesus of whom Adam is the figure. For angels, authorities, principalities, powers, and dominions are all subject to Him who is Lord of lords, and King of kings. For the world to come, of which the prophets and the apostles spoke, was not put in subjection under angels, but all things are delivered into the hand of Jesus—all power both in heaven and on earth, and he must reign until he hath put all enemies under his feet. Jesus is hence exalted a prince and a Saviour to give repentance unto Israel and the forgiveness of sins. He shall not fail nor be discouraged. The pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand. All that the Father giveth to him shall come to him, and none that cometh will he ever refuse. For it shall come to pass that whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved. For the promise is to as many as the Lord our God shall call. But does Jesus have power over the wicked? The prince of the power of the air, the devil, rules in his subjects. But Jesus has power over devils, and binds the strong man. He has power over all flesh that he should give eternal life to as many as the Father hath given him. The prey shall be taken from the mighty, and the lawful captive shall be delivered.

Satan has power of death, he is the destroyer, and the vessels of mercy were involved in death. Hence Jesus must come into their condition, or be found in fashion as a man, and be humbled to death that we through this poverty might be rich; or for-as-much as the children are partakers of flesh and blood Jesus likewise took part of the same, that by means of death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is the devil, and deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage.

3. Hence Jesus was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death. He took not on him the nature of angels but he took on him the seed of Abraham. Why does not the scripture say he took on him the seed of Adam? Do you observe that there is not one promise of eternal life, or one gospel promise, in Adam. In Isaac shall thy seed be called. In Abraham shall all nations be blessed. Abraham is the father of the faithful, so that Jesus takes on him the seed of Abraham to make reconciliation for their sins. So he is made a little lower than the angels. His humiliation is the most wonderful condescension in all creation or revelation. The astonishment of angels who desired to look into these things, the wonder of prophets who desired to know what manner of spirit it was in them which testified beforehand the sufferings of Jesus, and glory that should follow well sets forth the glory of Jesus. He manifested in sufferings and in death his power over death. For he had power to lay down his life, and power to take it again. Not only has he power over death, and the power to raise others from the dead, but he had power to raise himself from the dead.

4th. He is crowned with glory and honor. Because he was humbled to the death of the cross therefore God hath given him a name that is above every name, that of the name of Jesus every knee shall bow, and every tongue confess that he is Lord to the glory of God the Father. When he bringeth in the first begotten from the dead he commands all the angels of God to worship him. In the resurrection of Jesus he made a show or display openly of his divine power over all, and declares that all power both in heaven and in earth is delivered into his hands. Therefore God commands all men every where to repent, and hath given proof that he will judge the world in righteousness by Jesus, Christ in raising him from the dead.

It is said that God cannot save man unless man will allow him to do so—that man is a free-agent, and the Lord cannot save him until man gives his consent. But has not Jesus all power both in heaven and in earth? Is it not strange that the Lord should make a man that he could not control? Would you think an inventor much of an expert to make a machine he could do nothing with after he had made it? Does not the Lord make his people willing in the day of his power? We grant that no man left to follow his own natural mind would ever seek the Lord; but the Lord knows how to control the heart, the mind, the will, the soul of man, for he made us, and not we ourselves—that is we did not make ourselves.

5th. That he by the grace of God should taste death for every man. Who is the every man? The context or connecting scriptures explain that question better than any thing else. They stand as pointers, and sentinels furnishing their testimony to the true meaning of scripture. Verse 16 says, he took on him the seed of Abraham. Again, Verses 10 11 12 and 13 fully explain what is meant. It became God for whom are all things, in bringing many souls unto glory, to make Jesus the captain of their salvation perfect through suffering. Hence he must taste death for every one of them. Because both he (Jesus) that sanctifieth and they who are sanctified, (the every man) are all of one (parentage,) for which cause he is not ashamed to call them brethren, saying, behold I and the children whom thou hast given me. Then Jesus and all these for whom he tasted death are all of God, or have the same parentage, and therefore he is not ashamed to call them brethren. They are children whom God has given to Jesus, and therefore he is not ashamed to call them brethren. Here are children, but they are partakers of flesh and blood; therefore Jesus takes part of the same.

By the grace of God Jesus tasted death for every man, not by works—but by the grace of God, and by grace are ye saved through faith and that not of yourselves. Nothing that is of or by grace is of man. Grace is of God, and the grace of God bringeth salvation. Nor is the grace of God ever in vain. For grace reigns through righteousness unto eternal life by Jesus Christ our Lord. There is no instance in the bible where grace ever fails to save. It is of faith that it might be by grace to the end that the promise might be sure to all the seed. Then if Jesus by grace tasted death for every man will not that every man be saved? Will any one of that every man fail to be saved?

6th. The salvation of those for whom he died is so connected and linked with his death and resurrection that any failure to save any one of them militates so against the merit of the death and resurrection of Jesus that it is not to be tolerated in the true church of Jesus Christ. The glory and honor of Jesus cannot be unfolded as well in any other way, nor its power displayed as well in any other manner as in applying it according to the word of God in the salvation of Israel, the redeemed of Jesus.

In the salvation of the church we see Jesus exalted as having all power, and all things put in subjection under his feet.

He is the eternal High Priest made after the power of an endless life, who gave himself for the sheep, and whose blood cleanseth from all sin. By the one offering of Jesus once he hath perfected forever them that are sanctified. By so much is Jesus made the mediator of a better testament founded on better promises. He is full of grace and truth, full of power and glory, and is the Apostle and High Priest of our profession, who is Lord and king.

Do we see him as such? The child of God so sees Jesus as having all power. They that do not see Jesus, and that do not so worship him do not give satisfactory evidence and good proof that they are of that number for whom he tasted death. But all true believers do see Jesus thus exalted, and do bow the knee to him. P. D. G.

NEW THINGS.

Some Baptists want to make foot-washing a test of fellowship. That is a new test. Why remove the ancient Landmark which the apostles have set. Job says some remove the ancient Landmarks. Do you want to be of that "some" that disturb the peace of Israel? When you were received into the fellowship of Israel they were not making that matter a test of fellowship: why do you want now to change things and stir up strife by bringing something new.

It is brotherly to bear with each other, and when you feel like washing each others feet go and do so in peace and meekness, and do not fuss with other brethren as good as you are by cramping their feeling. Tell them you desire to wash their feet and they will wash yours too perhaps if they see that you are humble.

Obituary.

SOLOMON T. WEATHERSBEE.

Son of Mc. H. and M. E. Weathersbee was born June 17th 1876, and died Nov. 22nd, 1888. He was taken with bleeding at the nose. About eight months before he died the doctor told his mother if she did not mind the bleeding might terminate in Hemorrhagic fever in the fall. He was conscious until the last. His sister went to the bed to him and told him to be still and make haste and get well, he said he did not want to get well. All who knew him loved him and said there never was a better boy. He always kept good company and never was known to take the name of God in vain, nor use bad language. He was intelligent, industrious, generous and kindhearted. Thus God in his providence has seem fit to bereave the kind parents of their dear son and we hope take him to himself; may they be enabled by the grace of God to bow in humble submission to his divine will and kiss the rod that has smitten them, for the Lord giveth and the Lord has taken away.

A precious one from us has gone,

A voice we loved is stilled;

A place is vacant in his home

Which never can be filled.

GEORGE W. SAFLEY.

George W. Safley was a son of Wiley Safley and Lucy Safley, and also the husband of my dear mother, Nancy A. M. Safley. They were united in matrimony September 7th, 1865. They lived together 23 years, 5 months and 10 days, and were very much attached to each other. He was not only a dear husband, and kind father, but he was a devoted member of the Primitive Baptist church at Mountain Creek nearly 5 years.

He was born December the 25, 1838 and departed this life February the 17th 1889, making his stay on earth 50 years one month and 23 days. His remains were interred in the church yard at Mountain Creek. He had been afflicted with Catarrh of the head for the past four or five years, and finally fell a victim to those dreadful diseases Torpid liver and Dyspepia, or Indigestion. Our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ is the good Physican. He has promised to help in time of need, and He will certainly do it. He helped us in time of need, although it was a heart-striking thing to give up one who was so near and dear. But since it was the will of the All-Wise Creator, the King that sits upon the Throne, to take him away from us we must be still and know that he is God. David says, thy way O God is in the sanctuary, who is so great a God as our God. It is a great loss to lose our father but we hope that our loss is his eternal gain. We should not mourn for him as for those that have no hope, but nature seems to bind. The Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away, and blessed be his holy name. We are left alone and how we will get along God only knows.

TROY WOODALL

In the dispensation of an all-wise providence, we are again made to bow beneath the smiting rod of the reaper death, who like a thief, in the night, on Friday the 15 th, March 1889 entered the quiet and peaceful home of our much esteemed friend Mr. Troy Woodall, and bore his departed spirit to the land of unsullied bliss. While we bow in humble resignation to the will of him, [who doeth all things well the stroke is heavy. But the Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away. Blessed be his holy name. We through an eye of faith can look beyond this world of sorrow and affliction, and behold our departed loved one basking in the presence of our glorious Redeemer. O! the goodness and mercy of God in giving us these blessed assurances to heal our bruised and wounded hearts in the hour of affliction.

Mr. Woodall was not a member of any church, but he was as fully established in the doctrine of Predestination and Election as any one I ever knew. And I feel fully assured he is now a member of the church triumphant. God has only transplanted him to his everlasting home. He has reached the end of toil, pain and sin. All his heavenly longings are realized and he now beholds the King in all his glory.

He was a man of high and noble qualities, was much beloved and respected by all who knew him: but those who knew him best loved him most. His upright walk and christian zeal was an example for every one.

His death was sudden, living not more than twelve hours after being taken. He left three children to mourn the loss of a devoted father. May he who has promised to be a father to the fatherless, comfort them in this sad bereavement, and enable them to cry from the depth of a smitten heart, Thy will O God be done. May he enable them to solve in this world that when death comes they will meet with their loved ones in the arms of a merciful Savior.

A Friend.

NICOLAS ROBERSION

It is with trembling, and a consciousness of incompetency that I attempt to write in remembrance and respect of our husband and father, Nicolas Roberson, whose spirit passed from its mortal clay about eight o'clock on February 16th, 1889. Father lacked from the 16th to the 24th, of being 64 years old. His disease was erysipelas in the arm with weak lungs and a disordered system.

As all who knew him well know he was a hard laboring honest, poor man, very accommodating to all who called on him, even to his own inconvenience. Father was on his bed 71 days, during which time his suffering was very great, it being impossible even for him to ever have told had he recovered. We all, including relatives and friends, waited on him faithfully, never tiring to watch for the least evidence of hope for a change for the better; but alas, each prospect would vanish, and hopes prove false, until at last in spite of all the efforts of ourselves and physicians, death took him away. It seems hard, although we acknowledge it to be the road to heaven. He leaves a widow and five children. The children are aged from 25 to 41, all grown and seeming competent of conducting for themselves, but we feel the less prepared to give him up, for we were blessed with his company, precepts and example. Father professed a hope in Jesus and joined the church at Smithwick's Creek in May 1870, where he remained a consistent member until his death. His seat seldom was vacant, his most devoted pleasure seeming to be with the brethren praising the Lord, for the word that he seemed the most tireless to say was, "Bless the Lord." So far as I am a judge father died in the full triumph of faith, for he often told me he had nothing in this world to complain of, adding that "the Lord knows best. &c.," Much more might be written, but words would feebly express his suffering and our great loss. Indeed his death is a great blow to his family and community. He was buried Monday, Feb. 18th, in the old family grave-yard, a numerous host of friends attesting their respect by attendance at the funeral and burial.

L. L. ROBERSION.

Remarks.

Such a pleasant christian as was brother Nicolas Roberson we do not often see. How many pleasant moments I have passed with him, and how cheering was his presence at meetings of Baptists.

No doubt he is much missed in his family, neighborhood, and in the church.

May there always be witnesses of the truth as he was, and may his family remember his noble example.

P. D. G.

MRS. MARGARET ELIZABETH PURVIS.

Again I am called upon to chronicle the death of one whose exemplary life, and many christian virtues are yet as fresh in our memory as though no great chasm separates the dead from the living. As the last lingering beams of the setting sun were gathering around the once happy home of Mr. John W. Purvis, on the 12th of July 1888, the gentle spirit of his faithful wife, Margaret Elizabeth, was lulled to rest in that blessed sleep which frees us from all earthly trials and sorrows, surrounded by dear aged parents, devoted husband, loving children, kind sisters and brothers with many true friends. Her ties to this life were many and strong yet she willingly bade them all adieu, to depart and "be with Christ", who she so often said was her hope. Freely and calmly did she converse with her husband upon the subject of death, expressed herself as perfectly resigned to God's will, but felt that, "for her to die would be her gain". To her little children she would frequently say, "Mama must soon leave you for others to care for, be good children," commending them all unto God who cares for the orphans and supplies the needy. Mrs. Purvis was the oldest daughter of brother James and sister Nancy Hodges, and was to them an obedient and dutiful daughter. Oct. 12th, 1876, she was married to Mr. John W. Purvis, and a more suitable and faithful companion he could not have found, for in prosperity or adversity, joy or sorrow, trial or what ever might come to him, she bore her part well, and was always to him true and faithful, so self-sacrificing that almost her entire time was spent at home with her husband and little ones, doing with a cheerful heart whatever her hands found to do, which was much, for an industrious and persevering a woman as she was, finds no time for idleness. Thus being so much like Martha, she often found her way so obstructed that she could not attend our meetings as much as she wished, and often regretted not hearing the glorious Gospel of God our Savior in its purity, yet she could think upon the name of Jesus, feast upon His many rich promises, and rejoice in salvation by free unmerited grace. This was the doctrine she loved and believed and her dear ones feel confident that she has entered into the joys of her Lord forever. Mrs. Purvis was in the 32d year of her age, and the mother of six children, one an infant only four days old, who survived its mother ten days when God saw fit to take it to himself. It is hard to realise our dear ones as forever gone from us, yet death is no terror to the christian, it is the angel that unlocks to him the regions of unsullied bliss, the beauties of heaven and eternal glory. Then

Why do we mourn departed friends,
Or quake at deaths alarms,
'Tis but the voice that Jesus sends,
To call them to his arms.

Mrs. Purvis has been, and will be sadly missed, not only by her husband, children, parents and other relatives, but her many friends, and especially the poor to whom she so cheerfully gave, and helped in every way she possibly could.— But "she hath done what she could," and her works are proof that her life was not in vain. May God enable the bereaved to live as well as she did, die as calmly and triumphantly and be forever with him and the redeemed where partings are unknown.

The Purpose of Zion's Landmark.

"Ask for the old paths where is the good way."

By the help of the Lord this paper will contend for the ancient Landmark, guided by its stakes of Truth, and strengthened by its chords of Love.

It hopes to reject all traditions and institutions of men, and regard only the Bible as the standard of truth.

It urges the people to search the Scriptures, and obey Jesus the King in the holy hill of Zion, keeping themselves unspotted from the world.

It aims to contend for the mystery of the faith in God and the Father, Jesus the Mediator, and the Holy Spirit the blessed Comforter.

All lovers of Gospel truth are invited to write for it—if so impressed.

May grace, mercy, and peace be multiplied to all lovers of truth.

DEVOTED TO THE CAUSE OF JESUS.

Poetry.

COMPOSED ON THE CONVICTION OF A YOUNG LADY,

[By J. C. K.]

My dear young friends I pray attend!
A story I will tell,
I thought my life near was its end
And I was doomed to hell.
Ere I was fourteen years of age
The Spirit said to me,
You have a soul which must be saved
Or dwell in misery.

I straight way to the law then fled,
Its precepts to fulfill,
Ignorant of the blood that's shed Upon Mount Calvary's Hill.
I thought to preaching I would go
And try in time to mend,
Much good I thought I then would do,
Ere this frail life should end.

But oh! I no relief could find,
Still pressed as with a cloud;
I felt my nature still inclined,
To go the downward road,
At length afflictions laid me low,
And sin-sick on my bed,
I felt my guilt still overflow
O'er my poor guilty head

I thought I saw hell open wide;
And I o'er it did stand, Expecting every moment when I into it must land.
In anguish then I could not tell
Where I should fly for peace,
My soul condemned and doomed to hell
And felt my guilt increase.

I said, my dear and weeping friends,
Pray, pray for wretched me,
For this mortal life shall end,
I'm doomed to misery.
While I lay pleading to my Lord,
My sins to be forgiven,
By faith I heard the blessed word,
And saw the Lord from heaven.

He said dear child, go sin no more,
I have thy pardon bought,
Come dwell with me forever more.
For I condemn you not.

Such great, so unexpected love,
It filled my soul with praise,
I praised my Lord who dwells above,
And highest notes did raise.

Then some few hours of sweetest rest,
By faith I did enjoy,
For nothing did my mind molest,
Nothing did me annoy.
By faith I saw heaven open wide,
And I invited in,
To meet the Bridegroom with his Bride,
Where all are freed from sin.

Unto the church thence I did go,
This story for to tell,
I love my dear Redeemer so,
The great Immanuel.
Then down into the watery grave
I did descend in love,
To serve the Lord who did me save,
To dwell with him above.

By faith in Christ I'll now press on,
Toward the promised land,
And hope when mortal life is gone
On Canaan for to stand.
O come dear friends, and with me go,
And view the heavenly place,
E're death shall come and lay thee low,
Or Christ shall hide his face.

TEETH TO TEETH.

PART 2.

ON SELF-MADE MINISTERS.

He says in his writings, that he and his cotemporaries could enumerate and tell in most of the churches or the principal ones the succession of bishops from the first, that is from the apostles. The next Christian writer and a man of note, was Clement of Alexandria, who wrote 16 years after Ireneaus.

Tertullian was next, and joins on to Clement. He was a Carthaginian, or he lived at Carthage, in Greece. He was a pagan, but became a Christian; was a great writer and an able defender of its truths—he wrote about 211, A. C. Then comes Origen—he was born at Alexandria in the year 185, died 254, wrote in Greek, was a man of talents, the luminary of the Christian world—his writings are many. He suffered Martyrdom in the 69th year of his age. Then comes Cyprian, Bishop of Carthage who wrote about 20 years after the celebrated Origen. He was beheaded at Carthage, Sept. 14, 258. After Cyprian there are too many writers to mention them all, who wrote of the affairs of the church; but let it suffice to say these all wrote within 45 years after Cyprian. Next I notice Pettau, a German writer; because Cyprian and Origen were Africans. He lived about 290. Then comes Arnobius and Lactantius, as writers, about the year 300. Here we shall come to near our time, 323; for then comes the great eminent writer Eusebius, Bishop of Cesarea, who wrote voluminously of the affairs of the Christian church about the year 315. Then St. Chrysostom, who wrote between the years 354 and 398. Then St. Augustan comes next and wrote about the year 420. Here then I have given you only the history of the church in miniature, by a quotation of Christian writers from the apostles up to the year 420; not that these are half that have written of the affairs of the Christian church during this time, but I have selected these out of the mass from different countries, because they join in almost immediately after each other in quick succession, like links of a chain, and keep up a succession of the affairs of the church. In all the fragments of their writings that I have been able to come at, as preserved by other historians, I have not found a sentence that seems to indicate to me that the church ever got to heaping up teachers during this 323 years of her progress. And now we will go back and take up Roman history, and enquire there; and then I shall show my reasons why I think the church never got to making preachers for 323 years.

With regard to Roman history I can but also give it to you in miniature. From Nero, who has been mentioned as the reigning emperor at Rome in Paul's day, to Constantine the father of Constantine the great, there reigned thirty-four emperors; and Rome only every where presents to view a field of bloody crimes, of persecution, ecclesiastical and political assassinations; and luxury, debauchery, and depravity of manners. Indeed most of the emperors appear to be nothing better than cut throats, during this 300 years: for it is in the limits of this time that the ten great persecutions took place under ten of these emperors out of the thirty-four; whose names I will give you as they succeeded each other, and the date when, not but many of the rest persecuted the Christians in a less degree. Indeed, the church had not much rest from persecution for this 300 years, but these ten are marked as great, because they were more general and more abundant with all the horrors of cruelty that human wisdom could devise, and false zeal prompt men in power, full of malignity to inflict on submissive Christians.

It will suffice for our object here to notice, that the Christian church had been persecuted from John the Baptist up to Paul's being carried before Nero the second time by the Jews, Herod, chief priest and pharisees. But these were light, compared with the first persecution under Nero, which took place 31 years after the Saviour's ascension. Nero having set the city (Rome) on fire himself then afterwards to get clear of the odium, he charged the Christians with it; this gave the pretext for their persecution. Accordingly they were every where hunted and killed like wild beasts, torn and devoured by dogs, vexed and tortured and burnt and destroyed in different ways of the greatest cruelty.

Second persecution was under the reign of Domitian. This took place in the year 95. Many historians agree to compute the number of Christians that suffered death at that time at 40,000.

Third persecution existed in the reign of Trajan. It began in the year 100, and was carried on several years with great cruelty.

Fourth, the emperor Antoninus permitted a persecution which took place in the year 177; in which the Christians suffered abundantly.

Fifth, was under Severus, in the year 197. Astonishing cruelties and punishments were inflicted at this time on the followers of Jesus.

Sixth, was ordered by Maximinus—began 235. This was also very severe.

Seventh was under the reign of Decius, in 250. The rest had been bad, but this persecution surpassed all that had been before it. The Christians were driven from their homes, their estates were taken away and they tormented and destroyed by racks and a hundred other ways of cruelty.

Eighth, was under Valerian, in 257. In this persecution both men and women were put to death by scourging, fire and sword.

Ninth, was in the reign of Aurelian, in 274; but was not quite so bad as the rest.

Tenth, was in the reign of the monster, Diocletian, in the year 295. It is said in history, that 17,000 were put to death in one month's time. This was bloody work indeed, and the enemies of Christians began now to think they had nearly destroyed the Christian superstition, as they called it; but so far from it, God always works like himself, he lets things get as bad as they will can before he affords his help. Thus with the children of Israel at the Red Sea, when there was not a hair's breath between them and death; thus when they wanted water and flesh; thus with them when the decree of Ahasuerus went out to kill the Jews in all the provinces, but he saves them by little Esther; thus with Daniel, Joseph, David, and three Hebrew children, &c., And thus in the case when the heathen and heathen priests, and Emperor of Rome, thought Christianity as good as rooted out of the Roman empire, God puts to his hand by the Emperor Constantine; and Christianity in 25 years tramples down in the very dust all the rest of the religions of the empire. How astonishing this must have been to the Christians that remained in that day; when the church had waded through blood, fire, sword and prisons, for 300 years, until their enemies were ready to triumph with joy that we have put an end to you at last; that all of a sudden such a change should take place, that Christianity should have her day of triumph over all other religions so soon. When we think of the sufferings of Christians, and the hundreds of thousands put to death, is it not a wonder of wonders they had not destroyed it? Does it not prove it to be of God? For notwithstanding the thousands destroyed, yet their number multiplied with all this waste of the church. These days of persecution were the increase of the church; then the religion was life and power in the hearts of its professors, then were lives pure and heavenly, then the pure apostolic doctrine was their only source of consolation, then they sympathised with each other in their mutual sufferings and loved as Christians ought to do; then there were no fortune hunters in the church, then the church was free from pride, popery, fashions and parade of this world; then there were no money-preachers, there were no men-made preachers with itching ears, in those days that tried men's souls and faith. Then Christians were united in fellowship, prayers and tears; then their prayers and preaching was sharper than a two-edge sword; then the church and ministry shone as the light of the world, as a city set on a hill. Then the church was in her virgin beauty; then she was holiness to the Lord, and peace and love was in her borders. Then men hazarded their lives for the gospel and our Lord Jesus Christ; they laid down their lives in attestation of what they preached and believed. How different the church then when dressed in her own blood, from our gay and fashionable professors in this day! Yea, how different in her real love, peace, humility, preaching, kindness, tenderness, unity, meekness, submission, loss, heavenly-mindedness, boldness, hope and attention to the things of God and their own soul's concerns, to this age of the church and present ministry!

BROTHER GOLD:—The LANDMARK is to me a messenger of good news from a far country, and specially so during the past writer. It has been my preacher coming regularly twice a month, and whilst I have been kept in at home by age, infirmity, and unfavorable weather, I get some good and soul cheering preaching while sitting around by my fireside by reading the LANDMARK, and more than that I do enjoy those experiences so often coming forth. There is food to my soul in all of them. They set my soul in a flame of love to these writers, although I never have seen the writers. I do see and love them in the spirit, and I hope that others may continue to write of their travail from nature to grace. I enjoy those productions of Elder Lawrence, but I do regret that the class (which is many thousands) that should see and read them will never be benefited by them, for they will not read your paper; nor come to the light that their deeds might be reproved any more now than such would in the days of Jude when he was describing them, and giving out their awful end, for while the strong man's armor keeps the palace his goods are in peace although his palace may be on fire beneath. I intended to tell you when I commenced writing that I have been kept from preaching all through the winter. I do not think I have heard a sermon preached since November '88 until the 4th and 5th of March, when I had the pleasure of hearing Elder J. D. Draughn at Cedar Grove and Dutchville, and I felt that I was well paid in good things. I have not heard as good preaching as it was for some months, and if the two sermons that I have heard are fair sample of his preaching-talent we cannot find many better gifts anywhere. He had but a small congregation each day to hear him, but I feel thankful that I was one of that few, and I am going in the strength of the good things that he fed me with today, and I hope to feast on it for forty days. I did wish that everybody could have heard him. Of course there are several abler preachers than brother Draughn, but he has a variety of good things in his store, and to my poor soul and ear he can give them out in a most healthy and soul-cheering manner. I judge him to be one that studies and prays to show himself approved unto God as a faithful workman. Yours in brotherly love, E. WINSTON.

ELD P. D. GOLD, DEAR BROTHER:—I have read with a degree of profit I hope your editorials and the other writings in the "LANDMARK."

The correspondence between David and John was exceedingly interesting and I hope profitable to the household of faith who have had the privilege of reading them.

We are all aware that this is a day of corruption and we are made to lament it in this so-called christain age of enlightenment, when the old-fashioned doctrine of the Old School or Primitive Baptists is set at nought by the Babel-builders, to those who have eagerly watched the church of Christ for years battling and warring amidst the strife of tongues, and we feel like that it is owing to the wonder working power of our God that she is still sustained by his grace and that the voice of her Elders still sounds and the word is still going forth from Jerusalem. They were commanded to shine as lights in the midst of a crooked and perverse generation, and still the church is like a city set upon a hill, and for purity of doctrine to-day and for the truth she would have to turn that way. They are still the true light which the Lord has appointed and we rejoice because we hope the Lord is still her light, that he is in the midst of her and she shall not be moved. This is indeed the secret of her standing. Christ is her foundation and she has standing ground, and as these anti-christian powers of this progressive age have said there was no stand still in religion, so there is none with them for they are either declining or progressing, they have to do that for they have no ground to stand on. They have also said the old Baptists are right where Christ left them over 1800 years ago, but we tell them that he has not left them, but they were complete in him then and they are no more so now, nor will they ever be more so. So if they stand fast in the Lord Paul said he would rejoice, and the steadfastness of the church is a matter of comfort to the saints. We are glad to know from facts presented that the missionism of the 19th century is a failure from the fact that it was without warrant from the word of God and we believe the spirit of it to be anti-christ itself. That has been one of the floods that the dragon sent out of his mouth to destroy the woman who brought forth the man child. Truly we can say by the mercies of our God we are not destroyed, for if it had not been for the Lord who was on our side we would have been consumed from within and without. We watch now with great concern the history of the church of God and what is in store for us, what will befall us we are to wait and see. The church has been purged by the fires of persecution and though the fire still burns the bush is not consumed. The ark rode safely on the billows which doubtless seemed to threaten its destruction, so with the ark of God to-day on the stormy billows in this tempestuous sea of life. But when we recognize Jesus at the helm and he the captain we may have reason to fear not, and his voice sounds now in the ear of the disciples, saying, fear not, it is I. Yes, how glorious the promise I will be with thee in six troubles and in seven I will not leave thee. He hath also said I will never leave thee nor forsake thee.

" When the storm in its fury
On Gallilee fell,
And lifted its waters on high And the faithless disciples were bound in the spell,
Jesus whispered, fear not, it is I."

Jesus being the same yesterday and to-day and forever consoles the believer and he can be assured that the Lord is his defence, and the Holy one of Israel is his king.

These thoughts occurred to me brother Gold, I send them, do as you see fit, and may the Lord bless you and the correspondents and readers of the LANDMARK.

Yours in hope,
W. LIVELY.

EXPERIENCE.

DEAR BROTHER HARDY :—By request of a dear mother and sister I write my experience in as short a way as possible, not that I think any of the brethren are dissatisfied with me ; but there may be some who are not satisfied, as my first marriage was unpleasant. I married at the age of fifteen and lived with my husband about nine months, the most of which time he seemed to have no respect for me, and soon left me in much trouble. I went to my parents with whom I lived seven years and saw all the trouble I thought I could bear. At the end of seven years I was married again and lived a happy life for a short time. But a short time before I was married the second time I hope the Lord showed me my sins, when that awful sentence of death and hell was passed upon me. I was made to seek a place to pray for I had never felt the need of prayer before. The very breath I drew was a prayer to God for mercy, and many hours I spent in the woods seeking for a place to pray. I wanted no one to see me and tried to keep it hid from my dear father and mother but I could not. Mother asked me if I was going crazy, I told her I hoped not, but that I was suffering what I had never suffered before, and that I must soon die if I did not soon get some relief. I went to myself to meditate upon my troubles, and there was but little pleasure for myself or husband for he saw my troubles were great. I thought if I went to torment I would go there begging for mercy. I went on in this way until the next meeting, when I hope the Lord pardoned my sins, for I became satisfied that I could see beauty in the church of God, and I went to preaching whenever I could, and it seemed to be food for my hungry soul, notwithstanding I felt myself to be a sinner still. I went on in this way until the death of my husband and then my last earthly pleasure was taken away and I was sinful enough to wish him back again in this troublesome world (for I knew not what to do) when a guilt of conscience condemned my heart that he was taken from me on account of my disobedience to God. I then made up my mind to offer myself to the church the next opportunity I had, for my pleasure on earth was over and I could but look to the good Lord. Just before this I had a dream which caused me much trouble. I dreamed that I joined the church and that my sins were shown me plainer than ever, and I went to mother Buck, my husband's mother, and told her to go and have my name taken off, for I was a vile sinner. She placed her arms around my neck and told me that was good for me, for she felt the same way, and when she was baptized she felt a peace of mind. But doubts and fears soon came and she thought that would be my case. I awoke and thought over my dream and felt I had much love for the church and all the members, but I could see myself such a vile sinner, and thought I ought to feel good like they looked to be. I went back to my fathers' feeling very sad, sinful and lonely and I thought if I could get my troubles back again I would know better when they left me, but could not get them back. I seemed to be in darkness, and begged the Lord if I was deceived to undeceive me, and if I had ever been changed from nature to grace to give me better evidences, and strengthen my hope. I went on in that condition until I loved all the church members better than any one else. One day while all alone I sought the Lord with all my heart to give me a bright hope that I might be convinced, when these words came to my mind, "And you are of little faith, were you not chosen from the foundation of the world?" Dear brother that was enough, it was the brightest day I ever saw on earth and lasted me a week. I thought if I could see you and talk with you, and tell you what I hoped the Lord had done for my poor soul that I would be satisfied, but before I had that pleasure doubts and fears came again, and have troubled me until this day, but I have discharged the duty that I hope the Lord required of me.

I feel that I have been down in afflictions and sorrows, and troubles all of my days. Dear brother, pray that I may never bring any trouble in the church nor reproach on the cause of Christ, for I feel to be a great sinner in much weakness, and if I am saved it will be the mercy of God and not myself, for I can do nothing. The Lord has a set time for all things, for I think that I staid away from the church as long as I could, and truly hope the Lord sent me when I went. Dear brother, you have comforted me so many times, and so much in my troubles, and told my experience or feelings better than I could myself.

May the Lord bless you forever is the prayer of your poor unworthy sister in hope.

MARY J. PRESCOTT.

A VISIT.

(James 1: 37.)

"Poor and afflicted Lord are thine,
Among the great unfit to shine:
But though the world may thine it strange,
They would not with the world exchange."

BELOVED BRETHREN IN CHRIST JESUS;—Since it has been the request of so many of you to let you know thro' the LANDMARK how I appreciated my visit to you in your afflictions, I must say as far as I am concerned that I feel unworthy of the great blessings our gracious Lord has been pleased to bestow upon me, in arranging for me through Brother Gold the 51 appointments, and in causing me to fill every one of them but one, (South Mattamuskeet) in place of which I went to Rose Bay, also in the punctuality with which the brethren met me and conveyed me from place to place, and also in the many little attentions wherever I stayed among you. And dear brethren, if it please God also to have given you a sweet blessing through my visit among you, I shall feel doubly rewarded knowing that the Lord was there. I started from home Feb. 1, 1889, with feelings of hope, prayer and supplication. "If thou wilt not go with me send me not thither."

Arrived at Brother Robbins' from Mill Branch Church, met Elders Pitt and Jackson at the Meeting house. It being their quarterly meeting we had the freedom to address a goodly number of people. From here went to Toisnot. No one from Toisnot church had come after me. Brethren John Roberts and George Hales volunteered to bring or convey me thither. This little church was well represented with sisters, but two male members from Toisnot church also came to hear me. Brother D. L. Batts from Union Church conveyed me to his house. At Union church there were only three male members present, the sisters meanwhile were better represented. From Union I went on the train to Tarboro where I met a considerable congregation, and after meeting Brother Bradley conveyed me to his house, where I had a refreshing time in their midst. A little company of believers came over, and until 12 o'clock at night we were conversing about the things of God, and even then the little company that came were, or seemed to be, reluctant of going to their homes. Next morning Brother Bradley conveyed me to William's church where a small congregation awaited our coming. After meeting brother Lawrence Johnson took me to his home for dinner, and his companion being sick, I desired to go to sister Phippen's, widow of the late deacon Joseph Phippen, who in life was one of the faithful in Christ Jesus, who now together with her beloved daughter Mary made me welcome after a godly sort, as they always had done since I first got acquainted with them, some 8 or 9 years ago. This morning, 8th of February, I was conveyed to the Hopeland church in the town of Whitakers. A few came out to hear, and after meeting taking dinner at Elder A. J. Moore's I took the train to Rocky Mount, where brother Williford took me to his hospitable home. The next morning went to the church at the Falls of Tar River. Brother Green opened meeting. I followed. Had not been preaching long when brother Gold also arrived and closed the meeting for Saturday in his usual agreeable way. On Sunday the large meeting-house was nearly full of people as is usually the case at the Falls. On Monday morning brother Wm. Green, licentiate, conveyed me to Pleasant Hill church. Brother Green again opened meeting and preached, when I followed, after which I inquired after the number of members at Pleasant Hill church. One brother said 'two.' Then the whole church is here I replied, for there were but two male members at the meeting. Finally, however, I found that the church reports 84 members in her minutes. However, the sisters and colored members were more noble in coming to hear our little preaching. Now after meeting Mr. Wm. Shirley had come after me and conveyed me to Brother W. Tolston. To his house came old brother Tolson and others as well, and several sisters, and for about five hours we had one of the pleasantest meetings I had experienced for sometime. Old brother Killibrew and brother Evans who live in that neighborhood were sick and not able to be with us. After twelve o'clock in the night the company retired and the next morning brother Tolson sent me off to Old Town Creek church. Here I met Elder B. C. Pitt again, and with some degree of freedom I delivered my message to a small congregation. Now, brother Rob. Atkinson had sent his little son and cousin to meet and convey me to his pretty mansion, and again I enjoyed a comfortable evening with him and his. The next morning Brother Atkinson sent me to Autrey's Creek church where we had a good meeting. Brother J. R. Warren then took me in charge and to his house, where I met his family and enjoyed myself with them all in perfect freedom. Next morning we started for Tyson's meeting-house. Here brother Pollard met me, and after preaching took me to his home. The next morning brother Poland took me to Great Swamp church, where I met Elder W. Ross, and some of brother Elder David House's family, and after preaching went to Elder House's home, where I met him myself and enjoyed his hospitality in an excellent dinner. Neither did they send me away empty-handed, thanks my beloved friends for your liberality. The next day I was promised to Briery Swamp church and conveyed by Mr. W. R. Whichard who took me to his home, near the meeting-house of the church at Briery Swamp. Here brother Robinson's son had come for me to convey me to Flat Swamp. We had meeting or preaching at their house at night. Sunday at Flat Swamp I met Elder Robertson and a large congregation though it was a rainy morning. Bro. Bailey's son met me at the church-house and after taking dinner at Brother A. B. House's we arrived at brother Baileys in good time to preach there also at night. The next morning brother Baily accompanied me to Bear Grass church, where I met a goodly number of people assembled. Brother Rogerson, licentiate, took me to his house where I tried to preach at night. Next morning his little son brought me to Smithwick's Creek, and after preaching the fore-noon requested me to preach at night at the house of Deacon David Hardison, whose son-in-law, brother A. D. Mizell the next morning brought me to Skewarkey where Elder Geo. D. Roberson met me and took me to his home on our way to Spring-Green, where the next morning we went and met Brother Everett of Hamilton who took me to brother and sister B. L. C. Bryan's, who received me with a hearty welcome. Elder Lawrence, also sister Outterbridge came over in the afternoon. After a pleasant conversation we went to the meeting-house where preaching was given out. The house was partially filled, and during meeting-time it began to snow and rain, which made the roads very disagreeable. Brother M. T. Lawrence came the next morning to brother Bryan's and conveyed me to Conohoe where a few people assembled notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather. Brother Wm Hodges of Lawrence church met me here and after meeting took me in his top-buggy; and brother Lawrence the pastor of Lawrence church leading the way, we arrived at the house of brother Hodges in a few hours. The next morning we went to meeting, and the large meeting-house was almost empty, a few members only being present. The colored members as usual were represented. Time was now happily spent in the presence of Elder M. T. Lawrence and brother Wm. Hodges. Sunday morning was one of the coldest mornings the folks had experienced for a number of years. In consequence few people came out to hear us. Now I had hoped some one from Kehukee church to come after me, but no one came. Monday morning brother H. started me off for Kehukee, where I met about one out of ten of the members of the Kehukee church. Where were the nine? After preaching brother Whitehead conveyed me to his house and we stopped for dinner at brother Allsbrook's where we partook of a good dinner. Next morning brother Whitehead conveyed me to Deep Creek church where a small congregation assembled. Brother Vick after preaching conveyed me to Haywood's. That night we enjoyed ourselves in a solemn assembly, and the next day had preaching in the town of Haywood. Early in February the 28th I hurried home for one day and found my companion in usual good health.

On the first of March I started off again to be at Tarboro for Saturday and Sunday. Brother Gold had concluded to go also, and on Saturday afternoon I concluded to start off for Jamesville. Came to Williamston Saturday night. On Sunday morning it rained and continued to rain all day, and I stayed at brother Slade's all day, to enjoy their hospitality, and we had a prayer meeting at night, in the presence of Elder Gold who had come over to Williamston to visit the widow of the late Elder C. B. Hassell. Early on Monday morning through the kindness of broth er Slade I took the boat to Jamesville. On my arrival I met friend Stallings, a son-in-law of the late Elder Clayton Moore who took me to his house to partake of their hospitality. After meeting at the church house I went home with sister Mary Barnhill who is a widowed daughter of the late Elder C. Moore, who conveyed me the next day to Moratock. Sister Barnhill and her beloved daughter Miss. Annie Glasgow will be held in life-long remembrance by me. At Moratock I think was where I met Elder Joshua Rowe and his amiable wife, and heard him make some truly lovely remarks during preaching. After meeting a son of Elder Harrison took charge of me and brought me to his father's house in order to convey me the next day to White Plains. Here I met a good congregation; took dinner at Elder Harris'. Elder Topping who had come 13 miles took charge of me now. I stayed at his house from whence he conveyed me the next day to Pungo. Here brother Paul received me into his house and the next morning conveyed me to Rose Bay, because we could not reach Mattemuskeet. Arriving at Rose Bay I was cordially received by Elder Cartwright, brother Carawan, Elder Ross of Hyde county, and the entire church at Rose Bay warmly welcomed me in their midst and there I preached to a houseful of attentive listeners in the day and at brother Carawan's house at night. The next morning I went to Beulah brother Carawan conveying me thither. Preached to a school-house of attentive listeners in the day and at night at brother Carawan's house. Next morning went to Beulah, brother Carawan conveying me thither. Here at the house of brother Lupton I had the pleasure of listening to the conversations of brethren Cartwright, Carawan and others concerning eternal things. On Saturday the house was partially filled and all the people seemed to rejoice. Until late in the night we enjoyed godly conversation and on Sunday morning a large congregation assembled to hear the Word or the Dutchman either. That same night I preached at Mecklyville also, a crowded house again greeted us and the people reminded me of the days of the fishermen in Galilee.

Next morning brethren John W. and James P Lupton brought me over the waters in their boat to Goose Creek Island and we arrived in time for preaching at 11 o'clock. After meeting I went home with brother Albin Williamson where an appointment was made at Jones Bay School House. Tuesday (March the 12th) the brethren Williamson and J. J. Swindell conveyed me across the Pamlico sound in their sailboat and sure it was a pleasant voyage, by fine winds and weather all day. Bro. J. L. Goodwin met us as our boat landed and took us to his house, then to the meeting-house and after preaching took dinner on the island called Cedar Creek. Then brother Mason an experienced skipper took me over to Hunting Quarter in his large and commodious sailing vessel, a ride of three or four hours which I enjoyed. Some brethren remarked that I was not afraid on water. I said no, ever since Jesus himself went taking such voyages, his loved ones need not fear. This morning the 14th, it rained incessantly and a North East wind stirred the waters considerably. We took ship to go to meeting at Hunting Quarter where we met a small congregation. Brother Mason then took me in his comfortable boat to Straits, a voyage of some 25 miles. We sailed in two hours, arriving, wet though, at the house of brother G. A. Harriss at Smyrna, N. C. The next morning the wind was still high but not so much rain. There was little prospect for any meeting at all. A house full of people I found gathered together all the same, and after preaching I was requested to again preach at night. Though it had been raining all day the crowd that turned out at night was almost as large as the one that attended in the day. I was overwhelmed with the goodness of God. On the the morning of the 16th, it was still March weather. I now traveled again behind a horse to reach my appointment for North River. Brother Lewis from Smyrna conveyed me. On arrival met a few people to whom I delivered my message, and then departed in a skiff over the waters called North River, the water sometimes rolling so high that some of us got a good wetting. The stream was some three miles wide, and after a somewhat stormy voyage we arrived at a Baptist tavern kept by Elias Piver, Sister Piver being a member of the Primitiv Baptist church. Here brother D. W. Morton was already in waiting for me to take me to his house for the night. In his company I enjoyed myself and at his comfortable home as well. The next day brother Morton volunteered to convey me to Newport. Here I met Elder L. H. Hardy. I tried to preach to a large congregation and after that we took dinner at New Port at brother Mann's then brother Hardy sent me off to sister Bell's, a widow lady whose son took me over, the next morning, to Hadnott's Creek church. Here we met only one male member, the only active male member of that church, brother Pringle. One other member, brother Chaney is too old and feeble to attend. But the little church is well represented with believing sisters. In the afternoon a friend named Thomas conveyed me to White Oak church, where I also met Elder Gore whose appointment at White Oak was on the same day as mine. Brother Trott now took me to his house in order to convey me the next morning to North East church. After preaching went home with sister Gillett, and the next morning to Ward's Will where a very large and orderly audience greeted me, and after preaching was invited to brother Redd's house, he being sick in bed desired to hear me preach. Friday morning we went in a ship again to Yopp's, A ten mile voyage on the water brought us to the meeting-house, a large congregation being already on the spot. Went after preaching with brother C. C. Brown to brother Wilkins' house where they had requested a meeting at night. The next morning brother Brown in company with brother Wilkins and family all went to Bay meeting house where a large crowd had gathered. After meeting Gus Ketchum took me to his house in the neighborhood of South-west church. Here brother Rainor volunteered to take me to my next appointment at Cyprus Creek. I stopped at brother R. Jones, the father of Elder Isaac Jones, about a quarter of a mile from the church house. Here I met a poor but liberal-hearted few, and also Elder Isaac Jones who welcomed me to this, his own church. After preaching brother S. Lanier took me to his place from whence we started to Muddy Creek. Here I met Elder Cavanaugh at whose house we had a meeting or preaching at night. The next morning brother Cavanaugh sent me to the railroad and arrived at Dudley in time for preaching. Was met by brother Garriss from Friendship church who took me to his home. Here I met Elder Roberts and the next morning went to Friendship where a very small congregation was assembled. The next morning brother Roberts conveyed me to Goldsboro, and no one having met me from Chapel, I went home to find my folks in good health. Good-bye for the present, my beloved brethren and friends. Yours in hope,

B. GREENWOOD.

ELDER P. D. GOLD, BELOVED BROTHER IN CHRIST:—I feel to address you as a brother beloved and a servant of the Lord. It is alone through the worthiness of Jesus, our Elder Brother, our glorious High Priest. He is a precious Saviour, and by virtue of our union to him, his dear people have love and fellowship for each other. A love that is stronger than death. This holy love will eventually be complete in glory where all the ransomed of Jesus shall be gathered to the marriage supper of the Lamb. The riches of glory that await the ransomed sinner no thought can reach, no words describe, for it is withheld from mortal vision, and eternity alone will unfold the wonders of redeeming grace and undying love.

The few faint glimpses that the dear Redeemer is pleased at times to give to his beloved, believing ones lifts them above the world; the view is so wondrous and so glorious that this world with all its teeming glory and honour, all, all sink into utter oblivion even if he possessed them all. There is no riches like Jesus, he who possesses all things; riches in glory, life eternal. When the ransomed of Jesus come in possession of his glory then will be perfect freedom from sin, freedom from woe. Think! it is sinners, poor lost sinners, that are to be made heirs to a crown of immortal glory, be one with Jesus in all his glorious inheritance. Can it be possible? Wondrous love, boundless grace. All glory will be given to Jesus. Blessed truth, Jesus is King of saints. He rules for them and works in them and saves them by His own almighty power, and saves them from all their enemies.

My dear brother, your letter of Dec. 12 was very precious to me, and it affected my heart to think that a servant of God in the midst of all his labors should remember me, a poor, lone widow. You enquire how I am. "Do you feel very lonely and sad?" Yes, my dear brother, I do feel afflicted and bereaved, and at times it seems that my heart will break. Such sadness and loneliness. I do feel like one alone at times in this wilderness land and was it not for that little hope I have in Jesus I should sink it seems to me. It is this that holds me up. All my daily trials and conflicts lead me to cry, "Nearer my God, nearer my God to thee." The believer in the strong arm of God's power is very precious to me, there is no chance-work with him. His ways are perfect. My dear and loved ones that are left to me know not the sorrows and the loneliness of my heart and life. God has taken my precious brother, many of my dear ones and their memory is so precious to me that my heart-strings are touched with such tenderness it seems like breaking them. Yet the Lord is so good my heart is pained to think I cannot praise and thank him as I ought. I desire to be submissive and resigned to his most holy will.

Yes, the dear Lord has left me some

dear ones yet, and many, many precious brethren and sisters in Christ. May the Lord bless them by the abounding of his grace. So many of them have remembered me in hours of deep distress and trial, and still remember me. And every new trial, my dear brother, draws me nearer to my dear kindred in Christ. I should have responded to your christian epistle ere this, and took my pen in hand for the purpose. But as you know another wave of affliction has passed over us. God's afflicting hand has again visited our family, which has brought about changes which we have no control over. The affliction is very deep and heavy upon our dear pastor, my step-son. God sustains him wonderfully, he is enabled to bear this heavy affliction and bereavement like a man of God. He has 'lost a lovely and devoted companion, a help-mate indeed. But the ways of God are not our ways, they are past our finding out. All is wrapt in mystery, to us finite creatures. He maketh the clouds his chariot, he rides upon the wings of the wind. Our God is a great God and greatly to be praised. I hope you will excuse this long, hastily written letter. I feel so anxious to see you. I am glad and rejoiced that you are cheered in seeing poor wandering sinners coming to the fold. Oh that we could see a revival of God's work by the power of his Spirit.

Dear brother Gold can you not come down to see us next Sunday night, if you go to Tarboro? The train comes in early Sunday night and the nights are long enough to have service. We would all be so glad to see you, and hear you preach, and you may be enabled to comfort your brother in tribulation. If you can come please write and let us know in time to give out an appointment. Much love to sister Gold and all your family. Your humble sister in affliction, M. M. HASSELL.

MR. GOLD, EDITOR ZION'S LANDMARK:—Having had an impression for sometime to write to you I will now make the attempt. Being afraid they were fleshly impressions, I have postponed it until now, but I trust they are from the right source, and that the Lord will guide and direct my pen. I am a subscriber to your valuable paper, and can sometimes read the experiences and editorials with great pleasure, and feel that we've traveled the same way, and are partakers of the same great blessing. While at other times I feel if I was a christian why do I have so many trials and am tossed about on every side, and why cannot I live a better and more useful life. I think every day I live if I am spared I will try to do better, but alas when night comes I feel that I've spent another day in wickedness, and am made to cover my face with shame and confusion. If I know my own heart it is my desire to live free from sin, but I have so much of the Old Adamic nature, that I cannot do the things I would. I have thought when reading the experiences of christians if I could tell such an experience as theirs I would not have doubts and fears, and would unite with the church, but I do not want to be a reproach to the cause of Christ: so I go day after day with my head bowed as a bulrush. I've tried to pray to the Lord that if I was a christian that he would give me brighter evidences of it, and enable me to go forward in the discharge of my duty. I have been trying for a number of years to pray, but sometimes feel like I've never prayed a single prayer. I feel if I just could pour out my whole soul in prayer to God he would hear me and answer my prayer.

I was reared under christain influence. My father and mother both being Primitive Baptists, and true christians I believe. I've often thought if I was as good as my father I would not be afraid to die. I remember what he said to me on one occasion was a great deal of comfort to me. It was soon after the death of my oldest sister. He was speaking of the good hope he cherished for her and remarked, how sad I looked. I said if I could believe I possessed such a heart as she did I would be satisfied. He said he believed I would if I did not then possess it. He has long since, passed from time to eternity, but his influence still lives. I remember on another occasion when I was sitting by the bedside of my little sick boy, and feeling sore distressed, these words struck me right forcibly, “Afflictions though they seem severe,

In mercy oft are sent!”

and another time I was standing by the safe and my eyes dimmed with tears, it came to me as though some one had spoken it, many are the afflictions of the righteous; at another time this passage of scripture was presented with a good deal force, if ye are without chastisement then are ye bastards and not sons.

Mr. Gold, these things sometimes cause me to hope I have a house not made with hands eternal in the Heavens. Mr. Gold, I love the Primitive Baptists, think they are the purest people on earth, but they do not feel worthy to be among them. I must bring this to a close.

SALLIE A. WILES.

Remarks.

The Baptists in this section could not help, if they are like me, fellowshiping such an experience as the above. How often with shame I reproach myself for my vile nature. Unprofitable, vain and foolish is my life, and it appears to me that I am so far from what I should be that I must count myself unprofitable.

Again, It has often appeared to me that if I could indeed pour out my soul in prayer to God he would hear me. But that spirit would trust more to the prayer than to God. If we thought we were praying well then we would think we should be heard for our speech or good performance. How deceitful self is. What a snare and how contrary to all godliness.

By grace are we saved, through faith, and that faith is not of us, or is not our work, but it is the gift of God. Of course grace is all of God and none but the rankest Arminian would ever claim that "gift" here refers to grace. No man knowing the truth could so hold.

We must deny self to follow Jesus. But we want self to feel all right, and we wait for that and look back. Alas, how slow of heart we are to believe.

What sacrifice, what self-denial would we make, if we could have matters according to our liking. There would be no self-denial, no cross, no affliction, no tribulation then.

The warfare is with self, vile self. Oh wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death.

Our friend would do well, it appears, to go and tell the church her feelings and submit her case to them, and if they receive her let her live with them and enjoy the comforts and endure afflictions with the people of God.

P. D. G.

DEAR BROTHER GARDNER:—If you will forgive my boldness I will try to write you some of my many thoughts and feelings. From some cause I have had a desire to write to you ever since I first met with you. I left off writing thinking that I would see you at our association, but the desire to write has been greater since then than before. I dreamed a few nights ago of writing to you and I will make the attempt poor as it may be, I hope that it will relieve my mind. I feel to be one alone. I feel to be so little that sometimes I think surely I have claimed that which is not for me. If I am one surely the very least of all. If I have ever been burdened for my sins it has been from my youth. I have had serious thoughts about death and eternity from my earliest recollection, but was not troubled as I feel that some are. It would come and go. I had several dreams that would cause me to wonder what was the meaning of them. I desired above all things to be under conviction of sin. I desired to be so distressed that I could neither eat or sleep. I felt that if I could be in the condition of others that I had read of or heard talk I would have reason to believe that it was conviction. I do not feel like I have ever suffered enough. I had a desire to join the church about the time that I was eighteen. After I was married a year or two my troubles returned with more force and seemed to get worse and worse until I joined. I would ask myself why it was thus with me. I did not feel that I had anything to go with, but still I could not get clear of the impression. These words would often pass through my mind.

'Tis a point I long to know,
Oft' it causes anxious thought,
Do I love the Lord or no,
Am I his or am I not."

I dreamed one night of singing the last two verses.

I wished above all things to know whether 'twas right to offer to the church or not. I tried to pray to the Lord to show me what my duty was. As I woke one morning these words were presented to my mind,

"Perhaps He may admit your plea, Perhaps will hear your prayer."

I felt better satisfied after that. Sometimes I would feel much encouraged: when I would go to church I would promise myself I would the next meeting: but when the time would come I would put it off, so I went on in this way until last summer, and it got on my mind that I was going to die and felt that it was more than I could bear to die and never be baptized. I had felt so long that I did not have a friend in the world, after I was received and baptized I told my husband that I then felt like I had just gone home to my friends they seemed to receive me so willingly; I could not see why they should for I did not say but a few words. That evening I tried to pray to God that if it was not right for me to be baptized that something might take place to prevent my going next morning, but very much encouraged, I experienced such a calm and contented feeling that I really felt that the Lord was with me. I spent the next day very pleasantly I did not feel as much rejoiced as some seem to be. I wanted to lead a different life from what I had lived. I felt like I would always praise the good Lord for his goodness and mercy to me.

On Tuesday after I was baptized my mind got on communing. I was so much troubled that I almost wished that I had not joined, but I never have regretted being baptized nor I do think that I ever shall. My troubles gradually wore off, I have never been troubled so much since that day, though I feel that I am too unworthy to attempt such a sacred thing. I felt before the association that if I had not joined the church before then my enjoyment would have been but little, for I should have felt cramped, during the meeting I felt so many times that I was so glad that I did join when I did. I felt so much honored and blessed to think that I had such good company I really felt that it was too good for me. I had planned to myself to have a good talk with you when you were at my house but I did not have an opportunity. I hope that you will come to see us again soon. It revives us up to have visiting ministers to come to see us. We had a very pleasant meeting last month, three united with the church and were baptized. I went to church to-day, it really seems to me that brother Pitt preached the best sermon that I ever have heard him preach. It seemed to me that he preached my feelings better than I ever had heard him.

I want you to pray for me, if I am deceived, my prayer to God is that he will undeceive me, and show me aright. I will be very much pleased to hear from you, if you feel inclined to write.

I hope that you will pardon all imperfection, I feel to be the most imperfect of all, if one at all. Your little sister, I hope.

SEEK YE MY FACE.

"When thou saidst, Seek ye my face, my heart said unto thee, Thy face Lord will I seek. Ps. 27: 8.

All that is desirable and profitable to the child of God is found in its fulfillment, power and glory in the face of Jesus Christ. Therefore to find his face is to find what we seek after. And unless we seek his face, however much we seek that which we desire, we find it not. And unless he commands us to seek, we have neither the right, wisdom nor power to seek, but by his command we have all these, and to have these is to seek and to find and to enter in and rest. The work of grace in the hearts of God's people, in what they call an experience, is but the fulfillment or development of the work of Jesus, whereby the righteousness of the law is fulfilled in them.

The work of Jesus in the redemption of his people is fully and beautifully reflected in the Psalms of David. While he realized what he expressed which is the same that the people realize to-day, and while he speaks as though it was an individual, personal matter with him, which it was in his experience, yet it was most wonderfully so with Christ as he was and is identified with David and the children of God to-day, in his and their redemption. Jesus as the Saviour was not a volunteer, neither are his people volunteers. Neither was he a slave, but as the Son of God, and Saviour of his people, he was sent of his Father into the world, to serve him, do his will, and learned obedience by the things which he suffered. "For it pleased the Father in bringing many sons unto glory to make the captain of their salvation perfect through suffering." Jesus, as the man by whom came the resurrection of the dead, must necessarily be, and was fully sustained and upheld by his Father. All that he did was in fulfillment of the Scriptures, which he came to fulfill. While bound up with his people in the work of redemption he often prayed to his Father, and was heard in that he feared. And he says, my Father always heareth me. The great reason why he was always heard was that he prayed that the will of his Father should be done. Not only the thing for which to pray, but the time in which to pray was equally definite, therefore when his Father said, "Seek ye my face, his heart being set to do the will of God says, "Thy face will I seek."

Christ was manifested as a man, in the flesh. Now in the fulness of time God sends the spirit of Jesus into the hearts of the vessels of mercy, and develops in them what his Father developed in him in the work of redemption, which is Christ living again in the flesh of each one of his children, what he lived in the days of his flesh, and to have Christ thus dwelling and living in them is to be born again, and the manifestations of this life in the fulfilling of his work in them is their experience and growth in grace and in the knowledge of him until they all become gloriously one with him, even as he has ever been one and they one in him.

To serve God now is to have their pure mind stirred up by way of remembrance of those things which he has done for them, that is to have the work and righteousness of Christ revealed in and to them. They now have the mind of Christ, and he is their memory and remembrance. The work of salvation is the knowledge of Christ, and the knowledge of Christ is the revelation of God.

To have Christ is to have all, and to have any one thing is to have Christ.

Christ came to seek and to save that which was lost. He said unto his apostles, "Seek and ye shall find, for he that seeketh findeth." Now if this be true concerning them, how much more certainly true was it not of him who came to seek and to save that which was lost. He did not come to simply hunt, to look for his people, but he came to seek them, and to seek them was to find them, therefore he that seeketh findeth. He therefore sought them, found them and saved them. I will seek that which was lost, and bring again that which was driven away. "Behold I, even I will both search my sheep and seek them out. I will seek out my sheep and will deliver them out of all places where they have been scattered in the cloudy and dark day."

As certainly as Christ sought and saved his people, so certainly will they seek and find him, for their seeking and finding him is predicated upon the fact he has sought and saved them. If one never seeks and finds the face of the Lord it is conclusive evidence that Christ never sought and saved him, and it cannot be proven to the contrary. If one that was lost, whom Christ came to seek and to save, and whom he declares he found and saved, should finally be eternally lost, in what sense did Christ seek and save him? It is evident he did not save him, and therefore he must not have sought him. "He shall save his people from their sins." If one is saved from his sins, in what sense, and by what law is he lost? What would be the condition of one who is saved with an everlasting salvation, and yet lost to all eternity? By what law could one be condemned for whom Christ has obtained eternal redemption and brought in everlasting righteousness. Surely all Israel shall be saved with an everlasting salvation world without end.

The experience of the people of God in the things which accompany salvation is just as certain and effectual as is the salvation itself. Salvation in Christ and the experience of his people bear the same relation to each other as do cause and effect. The effect must be as certain as the cause. So the manifestation to and consummation of the salvation of the people of God is just as certain as is the salvation. Those who are redeemed by the blood of Christ have a right to the tree of life, and shall enter through the gates into the city, but not until the Lord bids them enter. Not until he bids them seek his face do their hearts reply, "Thy face O Lord will we seek." How do they seek his face? "Not every one that saith Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of God, but he that doeth the will of my Father." God works in his people both to will and to do of his good pleasure, and commands them to work out what he works in them. The Spirit maketh intercessions for them, and leads them to seek his face. To seek his face is to obtain that which we seek whatever that may be.

Where is the face of the Lord? The face of the Lord is where that for which we pray is to be found, and when we find it, by looking into it, as looking into a glass we see the face of the Lord. The face of the Lord is in the blessing and it is in his face. God shines in the face of Jesus and gives the light of the knowledge of his glory. The fulness of Jesus is seen in his face. All the fruits of the Spirit issue forth from his face. His character both as the God and Father, and as the Lord Jesus Christ is reflected in his face. "Let me see thy countenance for it is comely." We are often filled with great anxiety, and try to find what is the cause of all our troubles, and in vain do we seek for water in the wells of earth, but when the Lord speaks to us the parched ground becomes a pool, and springs break forth in the desert and a well of water springs up in our hearts into everlasting life. "With the heart man believeth unto righteousness." The worship of God is from the heart. He speaks to the heart, and the answer is from the heart. Thy face Lord will I seek.

All the gracious dealings of our God with us are but his voice bidding us seek his face, and his power bringing us unto him. How often does our heart go out in prayer to God midst the daily conflicts of life. Two of old said once, "Did not our hearts burn within us while he spake to us by the way." While Jesus was expounding the Scriptures unto them concerning himself there was much that gently chided them, and while they knew him not, their heart knew him and burned within them. Often our hearts thus burn while he speaks to us by the way, and for days we knew him not, but when he reveals himself

we remember the burnings of hearts. O how sweet it is to remember the heart-burnings of the past. We often look to them, and though we suffered then, yet now we regard them as bright jewels in our experience. Then we sought the Lord, even the Lord with the whole heart. May we often hear his voice bidding us seek his face and may our heart ever respond, "Thy face Lord will I seek."

P. G. L.

ELDER P. D. GOLD, DEAR FRIEND:—Please give me your view through the LANDMARK on the passage of scripture that says, all sin can be forgiven except the sin against the Holy Ghost. From a friend.
Yours Respectfully.

Remarks

(See Mark 3: 28, 29)

There was never forgiveness to those that charged Jesus of casting out devils through the chief of devils.

The people of God are kept back from this presumptuous sin. The sin of imputing the holy work of the Holy Ghost to Beelzebub is such blaspheming against the Holy Ghost as has no forgiveness neither in the law world, nor in the gospel world, but he that is guilty of this is in danger of eternal damnation.

What a blessed thing that a child of God does not know what that sin is, nor will he ever know by experience.

We may say that none are guilty of this sin who fear God and hate sin, and none are guilty of it who fear that they may have committed that sin.

The Pharisees so hated Jesus that they ascribed his divine and wonderful work, performed by the Spirit of God, namely that of casting out devils, a work that no man or prophet had ever done, to the chief of devils, and in this they showed the extremest malice in their hearts against the Holy Ghost, for which there is never forgiveness.

I feel that many children of God do many things they can never forgive themselves for, but reproach themselves for so doing as long as they live. Paul never forgave himself for persecuting the saints, but as long as he lived he felt he was not meet to be called an apostle because he persecuted the church, but he obtained mercy because he did it ignorantly in unbelief. So that if Paul could not but reproach himself all his life for his course, still he knew he had obtained mercy, and felt assured of forgiveness.

Those who receive no forgiveness, neither in this life nor that which is to come, neither under the law, nor in the gospel world, cannot mourn because of sin, nor do they see any of the beauty of the gospel world, nor do they know any thing of the power and comforts of the Holy Ghost. They never mourn or grieve because of their vileness, nor sinful natures, nor do they ever hunger and thirst after righteousness. They not only do not love any of the people of God, but they hate the saints, and abhor an experience of grace. They charge the blessed operations of the Holy Ghost to satan, and ridicule all the heart-felt teachings of the Spirit of God as fanaticism and dreams or vagaries of foolish minds, and craziness. They are given up to strong delusions to believe a lie and be damned.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS

Elder Wm. R. Welborn's address is changed from State Road, N. C. to Chestnut, Cascade Co. Montana Territory.

RED HEIFER.

"Speak unto the children of Israel that they bring thee a red heifer without spot, wherein is no blemish, and upon which never came yoke." Num. 19; 2.

The Hebrews were often called the children of Israel. What a lovely name and how it sets forth the character of God's people as children, little ones.

The Lord commands Moses and Aaron through the lawgiver and the priest. God speaks to Israel, so that provision is made for redemption of transgressions which is thus typified. Israel must bring a red heifer. Jesus is a Jew of the tribe of Judah, of the seed of David according to the flesh. In that sense Israel brought him forth. And thou Bethlehem in the land of Judah, out of thee shall he come forth unto me that shall be ruler in Israel. Out of him (Judah) came forth the corner, out of him the nail, out of him the battle-bow, out of him every oppressor together. So that Jesus is the brother born for adversity, and his people are his brethren.

The heifer is red without spot, or completely red. By redness is set forth his sacrificial character. Wherefore art thou red in thine apparel? By blood Jesus redeems Israel. He sheds his blood, or his life is given, for without the shedding of blood is no remission. The blood is the life, and he laid down his life for the people. He is without spot. He is wholly red in the sense that he is a complete atonement, his life being given for the people as one dying for all.

The heifer must be without blemish. In the type it sets forth the perfection of Jesus as an offering without blemish or spot. And as no yoke had ever been on this red heifer it shows that Jesus was never in bondage under sin, nor ever in sin did he serve any man, nor was the fear or power of sinful man ever put on him, nor did he ever serve sin but was free born, yet born for this adversity.

Moses and Aaron should give this heifer to Eleazar the priest, for the law is a witness of Jesus, and so is prophecy, and all bear testimony and in him all truth unites and all true witnesses agree.

One shall bring her forth without the camp. Jesus bore the reproach without the gate, and was put to death without the camp. The temple erected for the worship of God and a house of prayer for all nations was prostituted as a den of thieves, and is held by those that cry out crucify him, crucify him; for they hated him without a cause.

The heifer should be slain before the face of Eleazar. So Jesus should be slain before justice and truth as a propitiation for our sins. In the presence of God and before man, before the law and before every tribunal of justice, as well as before the guilty, Jesus is put to death.

Some of the blood of the heifer was sprinkled by Eleazar with his finger directed before the tabernacle seven times. It is with the finger of God that the blood of Jesus is sprinkled on all his people. No man can do this.

The heifer, her skin, her flesh &c., all shall be burned.

Jesus was slain and his blood sprinkled, not by man but by the eternal God, purges from all sin and sanctifies the heavenly things. Jesus was wholly or entirely offered. There is nothing of Jesus as a man that was not offered. He offered himself without spot to God. As the eternal High Priest, or as the eternal Son of God he offered the body that was prepared as an offering burned in the fire. In the midst of the burning of the heifer the priest should take cedar wood, and hyssop, and scarlet, and cast into the midst of the burning. These are emblematic of men's sinful characters; including those lofty and high looks, as the tall cedars of Lebanon, or low and base, as the hyssop, or red with sin and pride as scarlet.

The Lord God laid all the sin of all his people on Jesus, and cast all the characters of all his people into the sacrifice or offering of Jesus and hence the gifts and callings of God are all found in him and of him. Hence he is exalted a Prince and a Saviour to grant repentance unto Israel. They shall look on him whom they pierced and shall mourn.

A water of separation formed from the ashes of this heifer gathered up by a clean man and put in a clean place for the children of Israel, and running water added to the ashes in a vessel shall form a water for the purification of Israel.

This represents the atonement made for the redeemed of God as not only making propitiation for old sins, but as the grace of God represented by running water, and the strength of his death making that purification for sin that we must have in all our life of sinfulness. For contact with the dead or our own dead works and pollutions of flesh and guilt of conscience are stains from which cleansing and purging are needed daily.

All Israel, even all that serve in the temple and in holy things, are defiled, or there is iniquity in their holy things. Those that preach could never preach to sinners unless they felt their own sins. Those that come nearest the Lord feel most their uncleanness, and most need this water of purification. Those that pray most spiritually feel and see most that they are unclean until even or the end of their legal day. For such is our nature that when we would do good evil is present, and they that would serve the Lord feel defiled by reason of being still in the flesh, and are unclean until even, or the end of that legal day. But when the morning comes, as following the sprinkling of the water of purification, or as the Holy Ghost applies the cleansing of the atonement of Jesus, the morning without a cloud appears, then we rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory in the resurrection.

The people of God in their daily service are sinners and must daily confess their sins and call on the name of the Lord.

P. D. G.

WHOSE FAULT

Sometimes the question is asked, if man is not saved whose fault is it? The question is a queer one to ask, and one that it would seem would not be asked by any that know the truth namely, that salvation is of the Lord, and that it is by grace. We know that the Judge of all the earth will do right. We know that man is justly condemned as a guilty sinner, and that if he receives the due reward of his deeds he is lost, and it could not be otherwise. If the Lord were strict to mark one of a thousand of all our sins who then could be saved.

The word of God teaches so plainly the holiness, justice and righteousness of God that no room can be left to charge him with folly or injustice. He is not the author of the damnation of any. None among men can be supposed to be more righteous than Israel concerning the Lord said, O Israel, thou hast destroyed thyself; but in me is thy help found. No iniquity is in God, nor does it proceed from him; and the soul that charges the Holy one of Israel thus cannot be fellowshipped among the redeemed who cry out day and night "Holy, holy, holy is the Lord, just and true are thy ways thou king of saints."

Again, the experience of every child of God, not only at the time of his first deliverance from sin but constantly ever since in all God's dealings with him is, that he is the sinner and guilty, and deserving damnation, and that if he were sent to hell Justice would approve it well. Indeed the convicted soul cannot see what else could be done for him but to adjudge him to hell as the due reward of his sins.

It is only as one sees, being renewed in the spirit of his mind, that in Jesus is redemption for sinners that such can have any hope whatever. But when Jesus is revealed by the Spirit, and as man with the heart believes in him, then he sees Jesus made of God unto that soul wisdom, righteousness, sanctification and redemption, and hope founded on grace springs up.

By grace are ye saved through faith, and that not of yourselves. It is the gift of God, and not of works, lest any man should boast. Boasting is excluded by faith. Then God is just in the justification of him (ungodly) that believeth in Jesus.

The question could never be in the mind of one that sees his sinfulness, how could God be just and damn such a sinner, but the question with such is, how could God be just and not damn such a sinner.

Suppose one is guilty of murder, and the law says he shall die as the reward of his guilty deeds; could he or his friends say that it is the fault of the law that such a man dies; whose fault is it, if not the fault of the guilty? How else could it be? Suppose one is a drunkard and loves whiskey so much, and is so under its power that he has no other taste, desire or mind but to get drunk, shall it then be that whiskey when he drinks it will not make him drunk? Would you say that man is not a drunkard? What else would you call him? Whose fault is it? His very miserable, depraved and filthy condition itself tells and declares that he is the guilty one. What would his plea amount to if he should say, whiskey ought not to make me drunk, because I love it so I cannot do otherwise than drink it. The thief caught in the act of stealing cries out, the owner of these goods I have stolen ought not to blame me because I wanted them so much that I could not help but steal them. Suppose too he should say the law is wrong which forbids stealing, and therefore it is the fault of the law, and not my fault. But suppose the thief should say I ought not to be blamed for my father stole before me, and I inherited it from him. It is true that I love it, but it is not my fault if I love it. The dead and sickening carcass that pollutes the air, and poisons the neighborhood, if it could speak might say, you ought not to remove me and burn me for I cannot help this. It is my nature to be offensive. The fault is in you for having a taste that revolts at my stench. If you were like myself you would not be offended at me. What reasoning would that be.

Man loves sin, and will not come to Jesus because his deeds are evil, and because he loves darkness rather than light: and when the dark is taken away, and the true nature of man is known, it will be manifest that all God's judgments are righteous, and that man is righteously condemned and goes to the place he belongs to, whether it be that he is saved by grace, or whether he is damned in his sins; for the sins are man's sins, not those of some other creature or being.

SETTLEMENT.

The following Elders, Wm. Lundy, James S. Dameron, J. C. Hudgins, J. B. Parker, John R. Robers, T. B. Lancaster, A. J. Taylor, and P. D. Gold, by request of Middle Creed church, met at Middle Creek, April 12th, 1889 to advise what should be done concerning troubles there.

By request of these brethren Elder Wm. Lundy acted as Moderator of this Conference that was held in the presence of the church, and it was agreed that we advise the brethren on each side to confess their faults one to another and bury their past differences. Whereupon brother Ransom Gully and others made a general and satisfactory confession of wrong in harsh expressions, and Elders James Wilson and J. A. T. Jones, and brethren W. B. Godwin and Simeon Williams, and sister Nancy Wilson confessed their wrong in departing from the church and asked forgiveness, and were fully restored to the church as they stood before the trouble, Elder Wilson to be pastor again, and Elder Jones the assistant pastor.

The church agreed to stand on the original ground that has been held by the churches of the Little River Association during its existence, without any change.

The Elders in counsel also advise that the church at Middle Creek take the Scriptures as the man of their counsel in all matters of discipline in the church; and we also advise that the bringing up of any of the old matter of trouble as a matter of complaint by any member of this church be a sufficient cause for dealing with such as an offender.

We rejoice much. We hope that the brethren at Middle Creek are fully at peace and in fellowship with each other again.

Obituary.

GEORGE W. SPENCER.

He is the son of Thomas and Mary C. Spencer, and was born February 6th, 1859, and died January 4th, 1889, making his stay on earth 29 years 10 months 28 days. He grew up a farmer's boy, and like most of boys was fond of dancing; but with good morals. In August 1883 he professed a hope in Christ, and in October same date joined the Missionary Baptists, and his name is still on their Record.

But after he began reading his Bible and hearing some of the Old School Baptists preach, he soon became satisfied that he had joined the wrong church, and more he read and studied his Bible the plainer he could see his error. And for the last two years his greatest delight seemed to be in contending for the faith once delivered to the saints. I believe with all my mind that the scriptures were opened to him by revelation from on high. Being but a poor reader at best, but he could get light, and give light on the Bible, in so much that it seemed to astonish all who conversed with him. He died as strong in the doctrine of the Primitive Baptists as any one could.

He was married Dec. 25, 1883 to Miss J. A. Royster, by whom he leaves two charming little children, boy and girl, and while dying he took them by the hand and asked God to bless them. His disease was Typhoid fever. He was sick 10 days, and took hemorrhage of the bowels which soon took him off. After I and the Doctor found he must go, I asked him if he knew he was about to leave us, he said no pa, I still have hope of getting well. I told him I nor the Doctor had no hope for him. He opened his eyes and seemed astonished for a few seconds. He then said well pa, I have a hope beyond the grave, and said I want to talk to you all. He called his wife and told her not to grieve any more than she could help, and she would have to take her children and live with her father, and try to raise them right. He then told her father to take her and do the best he could &c. And he talked to his sisters, and neighbors, and he talked with as good reason and as good a countenance as I ever saw on his face. He then called on a neighbor to pray with him, and after prayer he commenced to talk to me again about his hope. He said it was but a hope but that was all any one could have. He was buried at our old family grave-yard, before a very large and grief-stricken audience. We want brother Louis Hon of Ill. to preach a funeral sermon in May. He leaves a wife and two children, with his father and mother, five sisters and one brother, with a host of his relatives and friends, to mourn their loss. Written by his poor unworthy father,

THOMAS SPENCER.

NANNIE F. MARTIN.

Nannie F. Martin departed this life Jan. 21, 1889. She was born July 19, 1856, was the daughter of Gabrel V. and Virginia A. Dalton. She was married to John T. Martin, of Stokes Co., in her 19th year, professed a hope in Christ in her 15th year and joined the Methodist church, but soon afterwards she became dissatisfied, and asked them to take her name off the church book. She said she believed she had many christian friends in the church, but it was not her faith and therefore she never attended their church meetings and never communed with them. She was as strong in the Baptist faith as any person I knew and often in her last years expressed a sincere love for the children of God. She was strictly conscientious and with a feeling of unworthiness she had never joined the people she most loved. From a child she was a kind affectionate daughter and a loving sister.

She was so unselfish, always forgetting self and thinking of those she loved. She was a devoted wife and mother. She leaves a kind and affectionate husband and three little children, a loving mother, brother and sister, and many dear friends and relatives to mourn her loss.

For several years she was a great sufferer with dropsy of the heart. She was very patient in all of her sickness and sufferings. It was a long time before her death she could not breathe lying down and so very weak it caused her to suffer a great deal to have to sit up day and night and she would often remark Oh! how long before I can rest; but I will rest sweetly in the bye and bye! She was often heard to say Lord have mercy upon us all, and save us all for Jesus sake. She was at times unconscious, but perfectly conscious all day that she died, called all the family up and kissed them good bye and asked each one not to grieve for her and to pray the Lord to prepare them to meet her in heaven, and sang

"Jesus lover of my soul."

Smiled and repeated several times "I feel better" and fell asleep in Jesus. She had been married 14 years the day she departed. May the Lord comfort us is the prayer of her mother.

MRS. ANGELINE ALEXANDER AND SAMUEL ALEXANDER JR.

Through deep sympathy to the bereaved family I offer a few thoughts to the memory of their loved ones, recently called from the shores of time we trust to their happy reward to join in the ceaseless praises with all the redeemed jewels to ever be like our blessed Jesus. First, Mrs Angeline Alex ander departed this life Jan. 17th, 1889, after several weeks suffering, though near her departure she seemed to be resigned to her Father's will, feeling that her light afflictions which are but as a moment compared to eternity were working for her a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. We feel that our community has lost a great friend, as she was ever ready to minister to those in destitute circumstances, or relieve suffering humanity in any way she could. To those of the family circle we know the loss must be great, but we feel your loss is great gain to her who has been received into that mansion not made by hands eternal in the heavens. The deceased was born and raised in the city of Philadelphia to mature age. She had come to North Carolina, and sometime after was united in marriage to a gentleman of highly refined qualities, Mr. Samuel Alexander, with whom she lived about forty years, as the writer has been informed, a faithful and loving companion, a tender hearted loving mother. She left three sons, and one very devoted daughter whose affections held out to the end in administering all that could be done for a fond mother; but in the fulness of time all medical skill must fail, and all the powers of earth bow in humble submission to the call of our God, when he says, dear child, come home. I feel there are many qualifications lacking in the humble writer to do justice to the fair name of one who seemed to be so lovely that no one knew her but to love her. My dear sister E. A. Everett who was present in her last sickness informs me she was so much resigned to the will of our Father that the sweet smiles of heaven seemed to rest upon her countenance. Oh how tender and loving were her remarks to her fond daughter when she saw she must soon pass the gloomy vale. Oh how sad it must be to the dear family she leaves behind that another must follow so soon. Second, her youngest son about 29 years old, Samuel Alexander Jr. departed this life on the second day of March 1889, of Pneumonia. He was confined to his room eight days. On the evening of the 8th day his spirit was gently transferred from its earthly habitation, we meet with here below. He was very much noted for his polite manners, most especially to old people. In his last hours he seemed to be aware of his departure, telling his sweet sister he saw his dear mother robed in the beauties of perfection in her peaceful home upon the other shore. He seems to love all around him, telling his fond sister how devotedly he loved her and desired to make it manifest by a kiss desiring his poor sister, whose heart was overflowed in grief, to seal her affections to him with a kiss asking to be forgiven, while she could not find anything in her poor heart that required forgiveness. It seems it is never too late for the Lord to send the arrow of conviction to these dear people that every jewel of his mercy may be brought home to the triumphant fold above, where his banner of love will ever sweetly wave. He was rational to the last, and talked so beautifully to his sister, through his last hours. Much more might be written, but for fear I might be too lengthy I will now give way. May we all rest in hope of gaining the prize of the high calling of our God world without end.

PART 2.

ON SELF-MADE MINISTERS.

Thus having given you a mere outline of church and Roman history for 300 years, I now come to enquire whether there were men-made preachers, or whether the church got to heaping up teachers during this 300 years—and offer you reasons, as I said, why I think she did not.

The first reason I offer is, that during this 300 years of persecution, nothing could have supported the church in her fiery trials but sound doctrine. Then you will mark the cause which the Holy Ghost says shall produce this effect; that is, for the church to heap up teachers. Now I contend that during this 300 years the church was sound in doctrine, ordinance, and discipline; although there were many heretics this 300 years, yet the church condemned them all as heretics, which I think proves she was sound in doctrine. And if she was sound in doctrine during this 300 years, the cause did not exist that was to produce the effect; and so of course, the effect could not exist without the cause. So there were no men-made teachers during this 300 years in the gospel church; for I contend that false doctrine could not have supported so many tens of thousands of men and women to have suffered what they did, and been burned at stakes, endured hot lead poured into their bowles, all their skin flayed off their bodies while alive, stuck full of lightwood splinters and thus burned gradually to death, racked to death on a large wheel full of spikes, roasted before slow fires, their flesh pulled off them with pinchers, &c., False doctrines could not have supplied them with submission, patience, fortitude, and courage, to have endured such sufferings and anguish; they must have a hope of a better life, founded on truth and the promise of the gospel.

And the second reason I offer you is, that then there was no money to be got by preaching. At this time all was loss of life and estate, and had the church been disposed to have heaped up such teachers, she could not have found men that would have put on holy orders and thus endangered life and estate; for during this 300 years they were sure to lose and win nothing of this world, such as false teachers and wolves covet. Money and applause was not for preachers then, but persecution and death.

And the third reason I offer you is, that severe sufferings, and poverty, and loss, seldom ever fail of humbling and destroying men's lust; which (lust) is given as one of the causes why they will heap to themselves teachers having itching ears. Then during this 300 years the church's lust was kept down by her persecutions, loss and sufferings, and so of course, no cause no effect.

A fourth reason I offer is, that the sufferings of the preachers and private members of the church were so notorious and so well known by all men throughout the Roman empire, that no man could be induced to come forward as a true gospel preacher, unless convicted of the truth of the Christian religion and being divinely impressed to preach as his duty to God; and so much so too, as to be willing to lay down his life for Christ and his gospel, and seal his testimony with blood. For he knew from what he saw before his eyes, and what he heard from his ears, and from the past persecutions of the church, that if he came forward as a gospel preacher he must face danger, suffer loss and persecution, be defamed and disgraced, set at naught by heathens and heathen priests, his countrymen, emperor, and nobility, and die as a martyr for truth. With these things in view, who would set out to preach, not convicted of the truth of the Christian religion? For in these days of the church there were no loaves and fishes for preachers; there was neither money nor honor annexed to the gospel ministry, for wolves in sheep's clothing to snap at, or for them to prepare themselves to sing psalms to gain. So then as there was no money nor honor to be got in those days, so I think there were no men-made teachers in the gospel church during this 300 years, nor do I find anywhere on the pages of the history that the church during this time ever got to heaping up teachers. For we all know that know any thing, that riches and honor gender lust; the church being in those days deprived of these, her lust as the cause given, not existing, these teachers then did not exist in the gospel church; for as much as persecution and dreadful sufferings kept her low in the dust, and her sufferings required her to believe sound doctrine for support under her trials. Other reasons might be assigned, but these must suffice for the present.

Now I am not writing from prejudice to any man or set of men on earth, but to bring forth truth to light; and therefore I will take up an objection that may by some be raised. And that is that it can be proved that there were a number of sects of professors, and those too who professed to be Christians, during this 300 years. Agreed. And you will say, how came these preachers, which the church called heretics, if the church did not make them? First, it is acknowledged by all historians, that the church condemned them as heretics; if so, then the church nor God did not make them; for if the church had made them she would of course have made them to her own liking. Then at that time she could endure sound doctrine, or else she would not have condemned these men for preaching unsound doctrine, and have called them heretics. Now you must notice the text, that the church must first become so as not to endure sound doctrine before she gets to making the teachers having itching ears; then of course the heretics were not of her making.

The first false teacher was Basilide, who lived about the year 120, and taught that the Jewish institution proceeded from a being inferior to God. This is a doctrine widely different from that taught by the apostles and Christian church.

The second was the Valentinians, a sect about the same time, whose wild notions or heresy consisted in certain notions concerning angelic natures, &c.,

The third set of heretics, also about the same time, was the Carpocratians.

The fourth, the Sethians, a sect of heretics who lived about 150. The Montanists, or Phrygians, about the same time.

The fifth sect, the Marcosians, or Colobarsians and Valentinians, about 159.

The sixth, Hermogenes, 180.

The seventh, Praxias, 195—Astemon, 200.

The eighth, Theodotus, 200—Tation, who founded a sect 172, called Encratites. Some of these held one error and some another; some that Christ was a mere man, &c., Paul of Samosata, was a very great heretic. So much so, that two councils of the church were held to try and condemn his opinions. There were many others during this 300 years—the Noetians, Sabellians—

the Arians, about 300; the Donatists, about 328; the Priscillianists, 378; the Pelagians, 405, &c.,

Now all these and the preachers of all these, differed in doctrine from the Christian Church; some more and some less, yet they all held errors, so that they were condemned as heretics by the Christian church. Then our question is, how came these preachers? I have shown that the church did not make them; if she had, she could have endured unsound doctrine. God did not make them; if he had, then they would have preached sound doctrine. So then they made themselves preachers, what the devil did not make. For I think the church under her persecution and death could endure sound doctrine, and well knew what sound doctrine was; and that she was persecuted because she held sound doctrine, and would not give up the truth but with itself.

What a bad state must the church have been in during this 300 years, not only to have been persecuted unto death, but to have had this painful suffering added to all the rest, to be plagued with so many false teachers, self and devil-made. But so it is that from Abel to this day the true people of God have been plagued with self and devil-made teachers, of heathen, Jewish and christian names. Then every age of God's ministers has had a time of war, and some one or other of these in some shape to fight; and will, until the 1260 years be accomplished, and the devil bound in the bottomless pit and shut up no more to deceive until the thousand years shall be finished. Then and not until then, shall God's ministers have peace, and the church rest from her conflict and sufferings; when the beast and false prophet shall be taken. Then let us fight on the day will soon be ours, the truth triumph, and the victory be won; for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it.

When Diocletian the last persecutor, and Maximin, the two Roman Emperors that reigned jointly, one over the western parts of the empire, the other eastern, resigned their power, Constantius the father of Constantine the great, and Galerius were universally acknowledged by the Roman people in the year 304, A. C. Constantius governed the western parts, which were Italy, Sicily, the greatest part of Africa together with Gaul, Spain, Germany, and Britain. Galerius governed the eastern parts, Illyricum, Pannonia, Thrace, Macedonia, Greece, Lesser Asia, together with Egypt, Syria, Judea, and all other oriental countries. Constantius died at York in England, 306, A. C. leaving his son as his successor. Galerius died four years after Constantius. Upon the death of Constantius, Constantine was proclaimed in Britain, 306, about the time Severus and Maximin had been already proclaimed. Maxentius, son of Maximin, was also proclaimed, 306. The next year Lucinius was created emperor, by Galerius, who had never willingly owned Constantine. These were competitors of Constantine for the empire, yet after a few years and some severe fighting they were all conquered, and Constantine remained sole master of the Roman world. This Emperor Constantine is the man that protected and countenanced the Christian religion, and established it by law as the religion of the Roman Empire, but I must acknowledge he brought it in too close a connection with the State for the good of the religion of Christ. Had he repealed all persecuting laws, and protected his subjects in the free exercise of their consciences in religious matters, it might have done better perhaps. However such was the strength of paganism during this time, that it is very questionable whether a toleration of liberty of conscience would have done or stopped persecution. At all hazards, he deserves the approbation of all Christian; for it was a desirable thing to be freed from persecution and death for conscience sake, or for the sake of being religious in a way I think right.

The persecuted and suffering Christian church is now destined to meet with a change after suffering like Israel of old 300 years. Constantine having established Christianity by law, her case was materially altered; her external situation was prosperous and flourishing, the long 300 years storm of pagan persecution had now ceased, under the government of the great Constantine, who ruled almost the whole civilized world. The mighty empire now was changed from a persecuting power to a protecting one. But I shall say the love and protection of his mighty power was much more fatal to the interest of the Christian church, than ever the malice and hatred of this power had or could have been. Evils very soon began to rise within her own bosom, produced or aided by the aggrandizement she received from her establishment without, which in the event reduced the church to the lowest state of spiritual pride and degradation. For worldly prosperity produced pride, ambition, emulation, luxury, and increased love of gain and honor; all of which stand opposed to the spirit of the gospel. For so soon as Christianity became the religion of the state, paganism, vain philosophy and superstition were willing to call her sister, or join in hand and hand and take refuge under her bowers; which did exceedingly debase the purity of her religion, and render her ministry ineffectual to any thing but hypocrisy, show, gain and ambition. For this state of the church produced the Arian and Pelagian heresies, the institution of monkery, image worship, the establishment of the supremacy of the Pope, the great passion in the church for relics, and pilgrimages to Jerusalem. It produced a separation between the eastern and western churches which has never been healed to this day. It produced the crusades, that shocking enthusiasm that wasted the lives of near three millions of people; the sale of absolution and indulgences in and for sin. It produced the persecution of the Albigenses and Waldenses: the hellish Inquisition, that cursed court of hypocrisy of wolves in sheep's clothing for judges of lambs of Jesus, and many thousands did they devour and their estates likewise. It also produced the great western schism, the bellowing bulls of the pope, and the interdicts of the popes on the kings of the earth, and a thousand other curses and plagues to the church of God; such as, purgatory, mass for the dead, &c., Now could Constantine have foreseen all this he would have hesitated to establish religion by law; but alas, this was all in the dark to him and the church of God too, yet plainly prophesied of by John and Paul. And such was the mighty blow in this particular given the church, that 1260 years is given her to recover from this downfall. Alas, how fatal is one wrong step in religion; only let the church step one step off gospel ground, or from the pedestal where the Saviour set her, and alas she goes the Lord knows where, as this case shows—one wrong step forces another upon you, until down you go sprawling—so with the church.

Now let me bring up the rear. All kinds of priests may be reckoned under three general heads; the heathen idolatrous priest, the Jewish priest, the Christian priest. Cain took on him the office of priest, for he brought forth his offerings the fruits of the ground to the Lord, but not having necessary faith in Christ it was not accepted; he then was a self-made priest, but Abel a God-made priest; for as yet there were no men-made priests. Noah and Abraham were priests of God, for they made their offerings. Melchisedek was the priest of the most high God, tho' we are not told under what institution he served. Jethro was a priest in the land of Midian. Saul, king of Israel, took on him the priesthood, and offered in the day of Samuel. Samuel offered also. Men from creation seem to have had an idea of an atonement for their souls, and to have made offerings; some acceptable and some not. Faith in Christ only made the difference. Then the services of no self-made priest can be acceptable to God, no matter how splendid their talents. Idolatry and priests to attend on Idol gods, seems to have first began in Syria, or Babylon. It was in Syria, Laban the father of Rachel lived; and you know when she came away with Jacob, she stole two of her father's gods and hid them under her in her stuff. You further know Jacob buried them under an oak near Bethel; this, if my memory serves me, is the first account of idols. The Chaldeans, who were the inhabitants of this country afterwards called Babylon, were properly speaking the priests of this country; they were devoted to the business of religion, pretended great skill in foretelling future events, interpreting dreams; they dealt in charms, they built temples to the stars, worshipped them; at length descended to worship things on earth. Thus Idolatry arose not long after the flood, and heathen priests in abundance, even among this the first of nations left in the plains of Shinar.

There can be no doubt on this subject, from scripture nor history, that the Babylonians first began image worship (or Idolatry,) and that they worshipped the heavenly bodies; since the names of their principal gods, or of the heathen gods in general, are those of the five primary planets, Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, Mercury, and Venus; they also worshipped the sun and moon. The Babylonish priests also first began the horrid custom of sacrificing human victims to their gods, and no doubt this custom grew out of Abraham's offering his son Isaac; for Abraham was a Syrian by birth. This spread from Babylon this horrid custom of burning children in the fire, even to all the superstitious nations, and Jews not excepted. The Egyptians had a vast number of gods of different ranks and grades; but the two greatest were Osiris and Isis. It is generally tho't by these they intended the sun and moon, but they had hundreds of others; and no doubt they paid divine honors to an ox, for here Aaron learned to make his calf idol, to go before Israel and for them to worship. Next we come to learned and polished Greece. Here we find gods and demi-gods, of three classes; celestial gods, marine or gods of the sea, and infernal gods; with great Jupiter the father of all gods and men. Here were priests in an abundance. Don't you recollect that passage in the scripture where the priests in the language of Lyconia cried out of Paul and his companion, the gods have come down among us in the likeness of men, and brought oxen to sacrifice to them? These were the priests of Jupiter. The gods of Greece are described by the poets with all the embellishment that fancy and literature could furnish; and the mythology of Greece is nearly the same as all other nations of antiquity, only a little more refined by learning. Their celestial gods were Jupiter, Apollo, Mars, Mercury, Bacchus, Vulcan, Juno, Minerva, Venus, Diana, Ceres, and Vesta; all these had their priests. You remember Diana at Ephesus, when Paul came there, and Demetrius the shrine maker and the craftsmen, what an outcry they made and how they preached the divinity of Miss Diana, that she came down from heaven and that all Asia and the world worshipped this famous she god, &c., The marine gods were Neptune and his wife Amphitrite, Oceanus, Triton, Proteus, Nereus and his consort Deris, &c., These all had their genealogies and wonders they had performed. And who were to tell all these lies of their divine power and wisdom in superintending and presiding over human affairs? Why, the priests must do this and make money by lying, as self and men-made preachers do to this day. The infernal gods were Pluto and his wife Proserpine, Plutus, Charon, the Furies and the Fates: and three judge gods, Minos, Acaous, and Rhadamanthus. These all had their priests, some male and some female. There were many other gods, such as Cupid, the god of love, the Muses, &c., In another chapter I will refer you to more detailed accounts of heathen mythology.

ELDERS GOLD AND LESTER, DEAR BRETHREN:—I feel inclined to write something for the LANDMARK, but oh, when I cast my eyes within and see my inability and unfitness, I almost shiver at the thought of so unworthy a being as myself to attempt to try to speak a word of comfort to the lovely children in Zion; yet I have had a desire to write and have put it off from time to time. While reading over the many precious truths contained in your valuable paper I resolved to try in my own weak way to mention some things that I have noticed in the last issue, which came to me to-day which was delayed on account of my removal from Oxford to this place. The first I shall notice which does my soul good to feed upon if the Lord will permit me to pick up some of the fragments is Brother Lester's on page 203, 4 and 5, titled thoughts by request, where he dwelt on Gen. 6 : 3, and the Lord said, my Spirit shall not always strive with man. Oh what sweet communion and comfort to read with the Spirit that such is written. Oh what warning I see in this piece to my soul and to my nation or church, to which these Israelites were a figure, and is applicable to the true church, and there is no other now. The Israelites were strictly forbidden to inter-marry into any other nation and their penalty was destruction; so it is with the church to-day. I was glad to see the old colored brother contending against some of his brethren inter-marrying with the checker-nation, and some inter-marrying with the social ball nation and some over here marrying the Sunday School and Alliance nations, and some one nation and some another nation, and if I was commanded to cast the first stone of innocence what could I say but guilty, guilty. So my dear brethren and sisters pray for me, I am so prone to such things, and if I was left to myself to stand or fall you know how it would be, though if I have not been deceived I hear one saying, "I am able to keep you, trust in me." He is the same one brother Lester is speaking of on page 209, 10 and 11, that brought those Israelites out of Egypt into the goodly land and let them eat out of his gardens and vineyards, fruit that they did not labor for, and now he says to me choose you this day whom you will serve. And here I must pick up more fragments, thanks to the Lord for them through him. Here is a beautiful figure to us to-day when we are brought from nature's darkness of Egypt to the marvelous light of the goodly land. We are commanded to choose whether we will serve the false gods, or serve him that brought us out of the darkness of Egypt and I can say for one I fully thought just as these Israelites did that I would serve him and never commit any more sin, but oh, I learned by sad experience like Joshua, that I cannot serve him in the flesh for he will not forgive me my transgressions nor my sins; they must be punished in his Son which was done over 1800 years ago if happily I am one of his. Oh how I doubt sometime and that often whether or not they have ever been.

On one occasion the Lord told Moses, just after he (Moses) was asking Him some precious favours, two in particular, which two are always on the mind of his witnesses to-day, which will be found in Exodus 33 and 34 chapters. After Moses had crossed the Red Sea he wanted to know if those people he was leading were the Lord's people or not, and he asked him to show him his way. How often the poor minister wants to know this, and notice how he granted this request, just as he does in this day and time. "Now Lord if these are yours show it to me by letting your presence go with me," and now we hear it in this way, "if I am surely called make it manifest to day by such and such one coming forward to-day telling of the goodness of God to him and how, natural it was with Moses to ask him to show him his glory, and just notice how he turns us off in this by saying, "No man can see my face and live, but I will let my goodness pass, and I will put my hand over your face, and after I have passed you can look on my back parts, same as to say Moses you can't see what I am going to do for you, but you can look back and see where I preserved you in the flags of the river, and how I melted Pharaoh's daughter's heart and made her love you and take care of you, school you, and then how I rescued you from her people and how kindly I talked to you at the burning bush, then brought you across the Red Sea, and how disobedient you have been to break my tables of stone which had the law written on them. So now meet me on Mount Sinai and present thyself to me on the top of the Mount with two tables of stone and I will write the same words that were on the tablets you broke. So you see we are continually breaking our promises to him which are written on wood or law covenant, but when he writes it on the table of stone as our hearts we are not able to break it, tho' we try every day of our lives. Oh how this old sinful nature of mine is striving to break that law. While he says my grace is sufficient for you, oh how precious these promises are, and how neglectful I am to obey his commands. Brethren pray for me that I may mortify the flesh and keep it in subjection, and walk humbly before him in love ever looking unto Jesus, who is the giver of every good and perfect gift.

I often get in darkness and am glad to say to-night that I realize that it is from my own disobedience. Oh that I could live as I ought to live, but I get in the condition that Moses was in on Mt Sinai. The Lord descended in a cloud and told Moses he was the Lord and proclaiming his goodness and mercy, long-suffering and goodness in truth, keeping mercy for thousands, forgiving iniquities and transgressions, then told him that he would by no means clear the guilty. Oh what a stumbling-block this was to Moses, why? because he was not allowed to see his face or future in the flesh. His future was that Christ his only Son had to pay this debt before the guilty could go free. Why was it that Paul could say who can lay anything to the charge of God's elect, because he could look back and see that Christ had paid the debt and the elect was free from this law of sin and death. Oh how glorious this thought is to us, that he has paid the penalty of death for us when we were dead in sin. Sometimes I find myself all in a glee of spirit, would then love to be with my brethren and tell them of his goodness to me. Then again I am away down in despair, lame in both ankles, cant walk, can't feel thankful to my God for what he has done for me. Then when the king sends for me I feel so unworthy of the situation I refuse many times when I feel impressed to go, but knowing that I am so sinful and do not walk as I should I shrink from duty, then I receive the chastening rod of God. Oh how full my soul gets when I read and compare the little cripple boy, and how he was restored to his grand-father's inheritance and this brings about another thought. We can take this property which is restored to us and place it in the bank and live off the interest of the inheritance, but when he went to the table of the king he was to eat there not from the inheritance which was placed in the bank. Remember you must eat at the king's table. Can't think because you belong to the church you have nothing to do. The little boy could do as he pleased with the inheritance that David restored to him, so can you do as you please with yours, but mind you he was subject to David's orders. So are you subject to your King's orders; you must eat at his table, you must not eat at any other. So you can live orderly and upright or you can live in confusion, but remember there is a difference in the two, one you are blessed in doing, the other you are chastised. Oh that all of his children would walk more and more in his footsteps, then what a lovely time there would be in Zion, but how different it is. Each one striving for the seat on the right or on the left, getting our mother to importune for us and she even trying to commit him, Christ, to grant her request before she asked it. Oh how prone we are and how we want to have some hand in the setting up of the kingdom, we forget that his kingdom is not of this world and each place will be filled with those for whom the place is prepared, for that it is not his to give and there is no change nor shadow of turn with him, so let us as the poet says, "Go on to seek to know the Lord and practice what we know. Your unworthy brother if one at all. Yours to serve,

D. M. SAWYER.

"Thy rod and Thy staff they comfort me."

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—For some time I have been thinking of writing. Now I want to tell you something about our Union meeting at Meadow last fifth Saturday and Sunday. Brother Gold, why do you never visit the church at the Meadow? I thought perhaps you would come to the Union. I believe I said our Union. Well sometimes I feel like I am embraced in the Union with God's dear people, and that was one of the times. Oh it was a Union indeed. I believe I enjoyed it as well as I ever did one in my life. It seemed that we had the very drippings of His sanctuary poured upon us. He must have been with us, the crumbs I received must have fallen from my master's table. You know he has promised "where two or three are gathered together in my name, I will be one in their midst." I felt that I could almost see Him, by faith, in our midst, clothed in the garment of His own righteousness. We were not helping him make christians, but he was and is drawing them by the sweet cords of love to his own kingdom. It is then by faith we can embrace Jesus in all his fulness, oh may the sweet influence of the doctrine of grace ever abide in our hearts, and hold us in humble submission to God's holy will that we may serve each other in love, "For he that loveth not knoweth not God, for God is love." Was ever love like this? Was ever grace so free? Boasting is excluded, and we glory in the Lord, and now we can and do know the truth and the truth makes us free, for Jesus is full of grace, truth and love. If it could be so I would be glad to feel all the time like I did during the Union. So happy in the doctrine of grace and I believe all the church was in sweet communion with the love of God. While the brother was praying, a prayer framed into such beautiful words, I felt that I wanted to look at the dear saints while in an attitude of prayer, so I turned my face to them, such a lovely scene met my view, they looked lovely to me bowed in humble submission to his holy throne. It melted my eyes to tears, yet they were tears of joy. I tried to pray too for I hoped the spirit of prayer was in me. Then how beautiful and glorious is this, salvation, every grace in it is harmonious, and all work together for good to them that love God. Surely we can exclaim, what wondrous love is this? Such love as brought our Savior from on high that we might look at him and behold every divine perfection of the god-head, and also behold him as a man of sorrow and acquainted with grief. Talk about any other salvation. I want salvation by grace, that is, the election of grace, grace given in Christ before the world, before the world began. This is the grace for me, it is the most sublime and richest theme that ever engaged our thoughts or pen.

Then to make our union more complete there were three dear wanderers made to realize the truth of the words of the poet,

"Where shall the weary sinner go,
But to the sinner's Friend."

They had for a long time been wandering around but could find nowhere else to go, so had to come home at last, and I was glad. They were baptized by brother A. J. Moore, Sunday morning at 9 o'clock. I hope they may be enabled to go on their way rejoicing, giving God all the glory; for it is God who has put the world behind and underneath us: it is He who has lifted us out of the miry clay and set us upon "The Rock of Ages," with the power of his mighty hand. Brother Gold, if I weary your patience don't even read this, though I get in these notions that I want to talk with Old Baptists, so I concluded to write, for I almost feel that we are sitting together in heavenly places: I want ever to be found at the feet of Jesus. I wish I could praise his holy name, a name above all other names. Thus truly did the poet say,

"How sweet the name of Jesus sounds,
In a believer's ear."

Remember me in your prayers.

P. D. GOLD, DEAR BROTHER:—After a long time I will write a few lines to let you know I receive the LAND-MARK regularly and find it laden with good preaching to me. It does my soul good to read them, for it is all the preaching I have in this country that does me any good, for there are no Old School Baptists in this country. I wish some of you ministers would come to this country and preach for us.

J. C. Hall's article on predestination and election, and Joshua Lawrence on self-made ministers is well worth the perusal. Your brother in Christ if one at all.

THE SORROW OF THE WORLD WORKETH DEATH.

Greenville, N. C.,

DEAR BRETHREN GOLD AND LESTER, AND BRETHREN AND SISTERS OF THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH:—It is with much fear and trembling that I feel compelled to have to address you on an important subject, for I feel that I am so weak and ignorant that I shall only grasp the shadow and miss the substance: but I feel and know that of myself I can do nothing but with the power of the Lord, if he has impressed me to write, I shall mention what he intends.

Dear brethren and sisters, if not badly deceived, I have been impressed several times through the LANDMARK, but have to say, if I am a child of God I am one of those disobedient ones that would rather bear the lash than obey. My life is such a mystery to me I almost fear to mention what I feel compelled to, and were it not for the great fear that is before me now I should forbear, but my bodily afflictions are so great, and my soul afflictions combined, I feel that I must yield, but I never should it seems to me had I not been made so in a way I had never expected. This way has made my cross more than I can bear, and I hope you will help me to bear it. What I feel to speak of is concerning what I have been foreshown concerning some of God's children, and it's coming to pass just as I saw it. I feel that if I can claim God as my God, and I do feel at times that I can say, "My Lord and my God," I feel that I can trust him for all things, for he never has deceived me. I am often deceived by the devil, but I hope I am not ignorant of his devices. Now my dear readers I hope you will forbear with me and let me ease my mind, and if we disagree let us do so as honest people. I believe the Primitive Baptists are more honest than any people in the world, and if they don't have the same exercises of mind they don't say we lie, and as for the world we need not expect any good works from a portion of them. I have been in one of the greatest straits for the last three days that I have ever had to encounter during my seven years of pilgrimage, but once, and this was because I was contending for the truth and I hope my dear brethren and sisters to be found contending for the Primitive faith while I live, let the world laugh me to scorn as much as they please; which thing they often do; but I pray God, if it can be his will, forgive them as they know not what they do. Now that is what I am impressed to address you upon. It is the gift of healing spoken of in the 2nd Cor., if I am not mistaken three times in the same chapter. And dear brethren and sisters, can you tell me why it is that this gift is paid so little heed to, when it is numbered with all the other gifts to the church, the ministry not excepted? I for one believe they are all necessary for our good, and because they are neglected, and paid so little heed to causes Zion many afflictions and many heavy doctor bills. I will now come to the point and tell as near as I can how I was made to know what I am trying to describe. Some two or three years ago it occurred to my mind, hearing that this gift was bestowed upon a certain brother that came to visit us from Great Swamp church, and it was so plain to my mind that I could not doubt it. So I could not conceal it and went to this brother and told him what I felt, and I was not at all surprised; to see him answer me in tears, it is the truth, but the surprise was with him; how did you know it? It is dear brethren with me a mystery, but I do believe it was revealed to me by the same Spirit that revealed to him the gift. I will go on and tell, if God will enable me, what I have seen. First, Friday before the second Sunday in July 1887, one of my sons, a boy aged 16 was taken down with a very severe case of Typhoid Fever, and my husband employed a physician of course who came to see him every day or every other day for ten days and he got no better at all but, rather worse, and the doctor told me that if his fever went down by the 18th it would be a miracle. This was the ninth, on the 10th he told me if it went down by the 21st it would be a marvel, but by some cause unknown to me I was strengthened by this word, believe only, and he shall live: I did not know what it meant, only I would remember what had been revealed to me, and desired that the Lord would impress him to come to his relief above all things. So on Sunday morning, to my joy and comfort, he and his wife came and it did seem that his mission was not concealed from me at all. After coming in and speaking to us he went to the sick boy and laid his hand upon him, and in a few minutes the Dr. came and took his temperature, and I think it was 103 and 104, and I think he staid an hour, and took it again and found it running down a little, and so went his way, and by twelve o'clock that night he had not a particle of fever that I could perceive, and never had any more. The doctor had lost all hope, as we were told afterwards, and it seems to me it was not any trouble to feed him as all went well. I will now mention the second. In September of the same year another one, a girl of 12 was taken down with Typhoid-Malaria, and a sicker child I never saw. The doctor attended her every other day for ten days, and at length gave her up. And so did every member of the family and every one that saw her, and I was very much discouraged, and knew not what to do. I quit giving her medicine. On Sunday night after she had a hard fit, and we all thought that she was dying, but she lay very low all day Monday, so sick she could take nothing, but yet I was comforted a little by the same precious words, believe only and she shall live. I tried as hard to believe as I ever did in my life. I knew God was able if he was willing, and I could remember how the other one was raised up, but would God impress his servant in like manner? On Tuesday one of my sisters, according to the flesh and a Free Will Baptist also, and I were in the house with the child, and I was walking up and down the room in much trouble when I went to the front door toward the road and saw a man coming on horse-back, and as soon as I saw him at a good distance I said to my sister, if yonder doesn't come Brother Phelps. She said I was then thinking of him. My dear readers, imagine how my heart did leap. I felt it was enough, that she would get well, so he rode up to the gate, and I went to meet him, and I saw the moment I met him then his burden was great. So he came in and told us all the truth, and laid his hand upon the child, and she was taken with a sweat, and that night by 12 o'clock she had no fever at all. This was the 13th day of her sickness. That day after brother Phelps left if I was ever burdened with prayer it was then, and no position would do only on my knees, that the Lord might be with him and strengthen and compel him to do his will. I will now speak of a third case. This past summer a sister-in-law of mine, she being a Primitive Baptist, was taken very sick with the Typhoid Fever, and this same doctor attended her, and I was waiting on her for several days, and she got no better. One evening this same brother came with the same impression and laid his hand on her, and she revived and seemed much better, and her taste returned, and the sickness ceased, and she was much better, but the brother told me that it was not ended, and he related a dream or vision that he had the night before concerning a beast of his own and another great black beast that engaged in a combat, and the one would not give it up, neither would the other for awhile, but at length he whipped the black beast, and they were both dripping with sweat. Her husband had gone to the doctor for medicine, and he came about night, and for fear she might displease him took a dose of the medicine and all the old symptoms returned, and it all worked out as he foretold, for it seemed to be a great struggle between life and death, for I never saw such sweating in all my life, so that night after she took the medicine I blamed her for taking it, and went off and lay down and it came to my mind you can't serve God and mammon, that we should believe him to be a whole God as much in this as we did in our salvation. I will go on to the fourth case, and this will reprove me for blaming other poor mortals. I will now tell what I have felt for the two weeks previous to the second Sunday in last month. I was bed-ridden the most of the time, and got so low that I could scarcely speak above a whisper, and when the second Saturday came, which was our regular meeting-time, I could set up but very little, but on Friday my husband sent for this same doctor, he came and pronounced my case Catarrh of the stomach. He did not promise anything, only that he thought I had better take some medicine, and it did me no good that I could see. Then I saw Elder John A. Williams. Brother Hardee said some one was lashing me yesterday. Then brother Phelps began to upbraid me for my unbelief and reached out his hand and said, "What ails your throat?" Soon I was relieved and my soul was full of praise.

I was standing at the table after breakfast cleaning up the dishes when I seemed to be rejoicing in God my Saviour for such great relief, when I was made to feel so humble I could not raise my eyes heavenward, and my mind was asked this question, who touched your clothes yesterday? Now brethren if this was not a revelation to me what was it? So the next day we had preaching at the Banks again, and I had a mind to tell it and one not to tell, so as I went up to the house some of the brethren met me who had heard of my rejoicing the day before, and began to talk with me, when this same gifted brother walked up and said, "What is it? I told him that I had something to tell him but would not do so now, he said "yes, tell it, and brother J. B. Hardee replied, "No secret societies here," and that moment I was compelled to make a full confession, and he walked off from us in tears, and then came back and stood before us. It did seem to me so much like the woman did that was healed of the issue of blood before the Saviour, and confessed the whole truth. He said he had been impressed during the week after hearing I was sick. Brethren I would not have attempted to write at all, but it does seem to be woe unto me if I conceal it. I feel my weakness so much. Now I will try and show you how I was made to write recently. Some others and myself were speaking of people joining the church, when I was asked if I loved them all alike. I said no, not in one sense. She asked me why? I answered her by asking her why Christ loved some of his disciples best, and the conversation continued until it caused me to feel very bad. I went home and could see no peace from Tuesday evening until Thursday morning. I was sitting down grieving because I could not help it. I resolved in my mind I would quit going to preaching at all, or if I did go I would only speak to these dear brethren that I feel to love so dearly and have nothing else to say, it mattered not how much they might have to speak concerning the love and goodness of God which I usually heard them speaking of. After fixing up my mind in this way this subject broke in upon me, "The sorrow of the world works death." I said, how Lord? The answer to my feelings was, if you do this it will be the greatest death-blow that you have met with yet: how could you bear to die to the greatest spiritual enjoyment you have on earth; you will be cut off that spiritual privilege which you so often enjoy, and love far better than you do your own life. Brother Gold and brethren, I hope you will all remember me in my weakness, for my trials are great and my crosses many; for it seems as if I am a target for a great many to shoot at. R. L. HARDEE.

ML. GOLD, DEAR SIR:—I have been a subscriber to your LANDMARK for about six months. Seeing you invite all lovers of truth to write for it, I will try in my weakness to give my views on "Truth and Falsehood," in as brief a manner as possible. When the world of mankind was in its infancy truth came among people from above, and falsehood from beneath. Truth had its origin from God. Our Saviour said, "I am the way, the truth and the life." We are further taught in the scriptures that the devil is a liar and the father of it. We find the first account of the devil in the garden of Eden, in the morning of time, trying to gain a victory over our first parents by lying.—We do not have any account of his final destruction up to the present. Now if God suffered him to go into the garden of Eden and lie to our first parents, we need not wonder at his chain being loose at both ends in this generation, but don't understand me to say that the devil has more power than God, for "the powers that be are ordained of God."

Now one word of counsel to the Baptists. When they hear of a slanderous report upon one of their brethren, not knowing whether it be false or true, don't go all around to the church and world behind his or her back and say that they say it is the truth, but I don't want my name in it, that is as much as to say that they don't want their name in Christ, for he is truth. The truth is where I want my name stamped, it is what I want to live by, and what I want to die by. If you know it is the truth you ought to take up that member and deal with him or her. If you don't know it is the truth you had better not say much about it. I would not give a bag full of moonshine for all the religion that that member has that goes about and circulates false reports on his brethren behind their backs and won't go to their face. If that is the religion of Jesus Christ I have read my bible "left handed," and been mistaken all the while. But somebody is always ready to blow the devil's trumpet now. To make, tell or circulate a lie is what I think is blowing the devil's trumpet and his children always know the sound of it. Now dear child of God, when you are persecuted and falsely accused think it is all joy. Try to endure what is put upon you, for the selfrighteous spit upon Christ and gave him vinegar to drink mingled with gall, just as bitter a dose as they knew how to fix up, and nothing can be more bitter to a christian than a lie, when it is circulated by his friends. The poor cast off person may do a thousand good and charitable deeds and there but a few that will help to circulate it; but let there be a base or slanderous lie started that is calculated to injure, and nine tenths of the human family are ready to blow the devil's trumpet. We have got the poor persecuted one started down the hill to ruin and we will all give him kick and get him to the foot, and then it will be big me and little you. Now dear reader, fear not him that can kill the flesh and after death can do no more, but rather fear him that can cast both soul and body into hell. I am persuaded that more people profess religion and join the church from the fear of the devil than they do from the fear of God.

I have seen several scrips inserted in your paper that the writer did not give his name. I do not like this way of doing business. I will introduce myself as

EXPERIENCE

Dear Brethren and Sisters, I was requested by a sister two weeks ago to write for publication in ZION'S LANDMARK what I hope the blessed Saviour did for me a poor sinner in Sept. 1869.

To-night I have an impression to comply with her request. When I was near 12 years old I went to a protracted meeting, and saw persons getting religion, and desired to be a christian.

One night I went with my cousin to milk. I thought I saw the Saviour sitting in a chair in the sky. I felt somewhat relieved. As I grew older I waxed worse and became very much unconcerned for some time. Occasionally I would think I wanted to be a Christian. In Feb. 1866 I was married; in Sep. following my burden returning I would lie on my bed at night and try to pray for my sins to be pardoned; sometimes would have a desire to pray, but could not utter a word. I went on in that condition until March 1867, when I was confined to my bed for several weeks, having a severe attack of fever. I thought death was my portion, and not prepared to meet my God in peace, and my sweet little babe that had a few days before entered the throng in perfect happiness. While laying on the bed of affliction it seemed to me that I often saw satan on the ceiling at the back side of my bed. One night I dreamed there was a large round hole cut in the floor near my bed and down in there was satan putting on fuel making a fire, and all down there was dark except the fire, and was black, the most frightful looking object I ever saw. I was on the side of this place: it seemed to me that I would fall in spite of all I could do; and one of my cousins was on the other side; but we neither one fell into that pit. I can't express my feeling I was so glad I escaped, but still my burden of sin was not gone. I tried with all my power to beg the Lord to have mercy on me, a poor lost and undone sinner. My grand-father Elder John Jones came to see me, and knelt by my bed side and prayed. I thought the most beautiful prayer I had ever heard. I soon began to get a little better, and promised my Saviour if he would spare me to get able to attend another protracted meeting I would go to be prayed for, that the scripture said "the prayer of the righteous availeth much." It seemed that all I could say or had said did no good, and it was not right for such a sinner as I was to beg such a great and allwise being for mercy. I felt like my prayers fell to the ground. Brethren I tell you I did all I could, and it seemed to do no good, so in August I attended the protracted meeting at White Plains nearly all the week thinking that to day I will go to night, and to night I will go to-morrow, and kept on that way until Saturday night. Now thought I is my last chance to fil' my promise, and must go, and as I was sitting there on the so-called mourner's bench my tears falling, the preachers going around talking to us, I knew I would not do as they told me for I felt like I had done all that was in my power, and it was worse than nothing. I would slip my father's bible and go in another room and read, that seemed to condemn me, and when I would hear any one coming I would hide it. I did not want them to see me with the good book, as vile as I was. I went in this condition until Sep. 1869. I would go to preaching and sometimes weep, at other times look at the christians sitting around the stand; they looked so good to me I would want to be with them, but not worthy to speak to them. The preaching condemned me. I could not get along with my work when I tried. I first wanted to read the bible and go off to try to pray. I was weaving a peice of double-wove cloth, and hired it finished. I would make baulks and get along so slowly: so one evening about one hour by the sun I was alone: I went out of the house, and looked all around me: it seemed to me the loneliest time I ever saw: the shade of the hills looked so dark. I looked towards the sun, and wondered in my mind if I would live to see it rise again: when these blessed words came to my mind, "I have loved thee with an everlasting love, therefore with loving kindness have I drawn thee." My burden left me, where there was so much darkness and gloom it all was light. I felt so light and turned around and went into the house saying,

"Alas and did my Saviour bleed,
And did my sovereign die:
Would he devote that sacred head,
For such a worm as I."

So the next morning I did not remember that I had ever read those words in the Bible, and I did not shout and praise the Lord like I had desired to if I ever should meet with a change, so I did not know whether to claim it or not. I thought if I could have praised the Lord as I had seen people then I would have known I was a changed person. I searched the Bible all the time I had to spare from doing my cooking, and got my supper ready and sat down to wait for my brother to come in. I took my Bible and bent my head down upon it, and asking the Lord if it was scripture and for me that I might find it, then raised up and opened the Bible: the first thing I flashed my eyes upon was those beautiful words in Jer. the 31st, chap. which you will find; no doubts and fears. I felt like I needed and desired the prayers of all Christians in my behalf. Brethren and sisters pray for me and my children that we may be saved in the end, and that we may live worthy to receive a home in heaven where there will be no more sorrow nor sighing, no more parting with loved ones, where all is glorious within.

R. W. JONES.

ELDER GOLD DEAR BROTHER:—
In hope of life eternal. Each one having our appointed place to fill, I hope you may long be spared to fill the place which you seem so peculiarly adapted to fill. Now, if it is not asking too much, please write your views on the 27th chap. of Matt. 52 and 53 verses. "And the graves were opened, and many bodies of the saints which slept arose. And came out of the graves after his resurrection, and went into the holy city, and appeared unto many." Also Rev. 6th, chap. 9th and 10th verses, "And when he had opened the fifth seal," &c., "You will greatly oblige a poor, weak, sinful, and most needy of all the household, if indeed one at all. Please remember me at the throne of grace. Grace be with all them that love our Lord Jesus Christ.

ANSWER TO SISTER YOUNG'S REQUEST.

The center, the beginning, the fulness of all is Jesus. The end of the law dispensation comes in the death of Jesus. The end of death, the resurrection, appears in the resurrection of Jesus. When he cries, "It is finished," no greater truth was ever uttered. When the veil of the temple was opened it boldly uttered the truth that Jesus had opened the way unto heaven itself, and that an open door is given the children of promise into the holy of holies, or heaven itself, in Jesus.

In the opening of the graves therefore of the dead, and many bodies of the saints which slept arising, is an open proof of the divine and god-like character of Jesus, and the eternal redemption of his people from sin and death. For the law which is the ministrations of death was fulfilled in Jesus and by him, and so death is swallowed up in victory.

Jesus is also the resurrection and the life. When he arose from the dead as the first fruits many of the people for whom he died arose from their opened graves, and came into the holy city, (not unholy) appearing unto many.

"Thy rod and Thy staff they comfort me."

It was not the bodies of some one else, but the bodies of certain saints which arose and appeared unto many. What a proof this is of the resurrection of the bodies of the saints. Therefore a man should respect and not abuse his body. Present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service. Your bodies are temples of the Holy Ghost. God dwells in his people of a truth. He shall change our vile body and fashion it like unto the glorious body of our Lord.

What a divine power there is in Jesus. How glorious is his redemption reaching to the bodies of his saints.

They enter into the holy city. When the dead saints are raised they do not go into an unholy place, or city, but they enter into a blessed place.

Christ is the first fruits, and if the first fruit is holy the lump also is holy. When one receives the knowledge of the forgiveness of his sins he has proof of his acceptance with God, and is risen from under the ministration of death into the glorious liberty of the sons of God, and stands on gospel ground of liberty, and enters into the holy city of gospel privileges, and is seen and known of many of the saints, and is passed out of death and shall die no more, death having no more dominion over such. Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection for over such the second death no power, neither can they die any more, for as Jesus lives they shall live also.

Jesus brought up his people from death. He has ransomed them from the grave. He has brought up his people from the past, and made them one. They must tarry for us that they without us should not be made perfect. The living shall not go before the dead for the dead in Christ shall rise first and we that are living shall be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye at the last trump; and we shall be caught up together, those of both dispensations and those already dead, and the living shall be caught up together to meet the Lord. What a wonderful equality and glory.

“And when he had opened the fifth seal, I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held: And white robes were given unto every one of them; and it was said unto them, that they should rest yet a little season, until their fellow-servants also and their brethren that should be killed as they were, should be fulfilled.” Rev. 6; 10, 11.

Remarks.

John was in the Spirit in the sense that every thing he saw was spiritual: for none of the things he saw then could have been seen by the natural eye, mind, or powers of mortal man; but all the things that he saw were in the Spirit. Therefore he could see the souls of those that were slain for the word of God and for the testimony which they held. No man with the ordinary powers of nature could ever see a soul; but when one is in the Spirit, completely controled by the Spirit of God, then he can behold the things which are invisible.

These souls were under the altar.— The altar is a holy place where God is worshiped, and where power, holiness, mercy, truth and grace are. This then is the holy place of worship and service where they cry unto God, holy and true art thou.

These souls were at rest. For when they cried unto God how long, holy and true, dost thou not aveng our blood on them that dwell on earth, white robes were given unto them. They walk in white and are pure. They shall rest yet a little season. They must rest until their brethren shall suffer like things as they have. They must tarry one for the other. Whatever is appointed for God's people to suffer they must endure. Tarry they must until all scripture is fulfilled. They are at rest. The dead that die in the Lord are at rest, and rest in peace, and they must wait until their brethren yet living suffer like things and then shall the end come.

The scriptures so clearly set forth the resurrection of the bodies of the dead. Carnal reason lifts up its objections to these things and pictures horrors. It says shall the souls of those dead come back here and abide in the mortal bodies again.

Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you that God should raise the dead? The dead in Christ shall rise first, that is, shall rise before those living are changed. That resurrection of the dead is still in the future. Even David is not ascended into heaven, said Peter on the day of Pentecost. His body or sepulchre was with them at that day.

But at the last trump (yet in the future) the dead shall rise, and those then living shall be changed in a moment, and they shall be caught up together in the air to meet the Lord. Surely these vile bodies will then have been changed to be caught up together in the air. No natural body can mount up in the air. Together shall all God's people be caught up to meet the Lord. All must tarry and wait for that most notable event and go up together. P. D. G.

DRUNKENNESS.

Now and then a Primitive Baptist is led away by drunkenness. He is seen hanging around grog-shops treating, or some one is treating him, and his breath smells of liquor, and his face tells the sad tale of his wrong.

What shall be done with such a brother? No doubt such a one is a grief to his brethren who lament that sort of conduct.

If he does not repent the church should withdraw from him. The best proof that he repents is that he turns away from his wrong course.

Primitive Baptists do not want drunkards among them, nor men that keep half drunk with liquor. We are commanded to be sober.

When it comes to the knowledge of the church that a member is drinking to drunkenness the church should deal with him. It is the duty of every member that has evidence that one is drinking to bring the matter before the brethren, unless such an erring brother repents; and when it is brought to their notice they should deal with the offender, unless he repents. A public wrong, or one against the body like drunkenness requires a public confession of that wrong before the church.

When one member trespasses against another only, in the sense for instance or slighting him, or speaking something or doing something that effects him specially, the one aggrieved should go to his brother who has trespassed against him and tell him of his fault between the two alone. If he hears and repents that ends that trouble, and no one else should ever know any thing about it. But if one becomes a drunkard associating with the drunken, and is seen hanging about grog-shops treating &c, he becomes a reproach to the cause of Christ and should make a confession publicly or before the church, and repent, or else let the brethren withdraw from him, and not be defiled by keeping his company.

Pastors of churches should set a good example before the churches themselves. Let them attend the meetings regularly, and warn their brethren against these traps and gins like secret societies, and warn them of drunkenness. If the pastor cannot be at the regular meeting he should make an effort to get some preacher to be there who is profitable to the brethren.

P. D. G.

DIVISIONS.

"Now I beseech you brethren, mark them which cause divisions and offenses contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned and avoid them. Ro. 16 : 17.

We are now living in a day of much strife and disputing, which so often result in divisions, and now our people are being rent asunder by an unlawful contention over things which have not been revealed even to the apostles and disciples, and which the angels in heaven need not know. How much better it would be for us if we could always remember that secret things belong to God, and only revealed things belong to us. Doubtless we, while in this world, shall never be fully satisfied that we know and understand all that is revealed. When we, as little children, are sitting together in heavenly places in Christ we do not need to know much. Little children do not know much, and yet they know enough to answer all purposes for children.— Trouble does not grow out of what we know, we are all agreed in that, it is what we do not know that we make a fuss about. Ignorance is no excuse for contention over that which we do not understand, but it is an excellent reason why we should hold our peace, and admit thereby that we are somewhat deficient in knowledge, at least on some points. I am free to admit that there are many things connected with the salvation of the people of God which I do not fully comprehend. In fact I cannot say that I fully understand a single point so as to be able to set it forth in words. I trust I know enough of all concerning salvation to believe the doctrine in my salvation, and that of the people of God universally, but the more I see the more there is yet to be seen, and I cannot explain that which I do see. O the depth of the riches, both of the wisdom and knowledge of God, how unsearchable are his judgments and his ways past finding out. Who by searching can find him out. None. He says we can not find him out. That his ways and his thoughts are as high above our ways and our thoughts as the heavens are above the earth. We must believe this, and we do not understand it. We do not know how high the heavens are above the earth. Then why should we bite and devour one another, because we do not know and understand everything both in heaven and in earth?

We are saved by hope, and hope that is seen is not hope, but if we hope for that which we see not, then do we with patience wait for it. We know we have a hope, but we cannot see it. Shall we say therefore we have no hope, because we cannot see it? Through the weakness and unbelief of the flesh we often fear our hope is not well grounded, or is not the right kind, or is not clear enough, but still the hope remains. Each and every one of God's children has a hope, and in it they are of one heart and one mind, and therefore are agreed as to hope. And the preaching that presents and describes the security and preciousness of hope edifies and feeds them all.

We walk by faith, and not by sight, and the just live by faith. Because I cannot see which way I take, do I therefore take no way at all? Because I do not walk by sight is no evidence that I do not walk at all. If I cannot see myself, how am I to lead and instruct others in the way?

If I live by faith, I cannot see how I live, yet do I not live? Yes I live. How do I live? The life that I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me and gave himself for me. How do I live by faith? It is Christ that liveth in me. How does Christ live in me? How does he live anywhere? Just as he lives at all he lives in me. Eternal life is in him, and he is my life, and I live by him, and because he lives. "Because I live ye shall live also." He is alive forevermore. My vileness and corruption have nothing to do with the fact that Christ lives, or how he lives, nor how he live in me. Glorious mystery, blessed thought! This matter is too wonderful for me. It is so high I cannot scale its summit, it is so deep I cannot fathom its depths, it is so long and so wide I cannot search unto its uttermost bounds. Shall I say therefore that it is not true? No. My hope and belief sustain me in holding fast to the mystery and power of that by which and in which I have hope.

We read that we are saved according to the purpose of God and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began. How was grace given us in Christ before the world was? Were we as personal individuals there? No, but the grace of God was there.

Christ who is our life was. As he is our life to day, so were we there. As we are to-day what we are by the grace of God, we were there by the grace of God just what we are by it to-day. A knowledge of how we were chosen in Christ, and grace was given us in him, is not the fundamental basis of our salvation, but the "truth" that is eternally true is the ground work of our redemption and salvation.

If we believe that our salvation is according to the election of grace, why should we try to get back into eternity to see how all this came about.

Thousands of these poor trembling ones have come before the church and related what they hoped the Lord had done for them, and have been adjudged by the church as being vessels of mercy and have been baptized, who did not then and do not now understand the doctrine of election to the extent that others may understand it.

Were the churches to adopt a rule that all who apply to them for membership should be examined upon the doctrine and give such satisfaction as one must give before he is ordained to the ministry, how many do we suppose would be admitted to membership? Do we suppose the Eunuch, who a few hours before did not know whether the Prophet was speaking of himself or of some other man, learned enough of the salvation of sinners through the sufferings and death of Christ to have expounded the way of life then and there with the same power with which Phillip did to him? He had the word preached and it was according to the life and power that were in him, and the revelation of Jesus in him confirmed him in the belief that Jesus is the Son of God, which was satisfactory to Phillip, and ought to be to us. Phillip preached unto him Jesus—and to preach him, is to preach the revelation of Christ in one the hope of glory.— There are no vain and speculative theories in Christ, nor in the preaching of him. Christ in his people is a mystery, but not a theory. The preaching of Christ crucified builds up, establishes, unites and cements the people of God together in love and fellowship, while theorizing and philosophizing tend to confusion, strife, contention and vain jangling—to the subversion of the hearers, the scattering of the flock and the reproach of Christ.

It was not the preaching of Paul that bewitched the Galatian brethren, but that of those Judaizing teachers who taught them contrary to the word of God, and therefore produced dissension and division contrary to the doctrine. So it is in this day. Division is not brought about by preaching Christ nor the man who preaches him, but by those who oppose the simple preaching of the gospel and contend for a gospel which is not the gospel but a perversion of the gospel. We are to contend earnestly for the faith once delivered unto the saints, but we should first be certain that what we contend for is that same faith.

A gospel experience has for its seal salvation by grace, through Jesus Christ to lost and condemned sinners. And more than this is not required on the reception of members into the church, and I conclude that more than this cannot be produced to disprove ones faith in Christ. If one has what he esteems a good hope through grace and trusts in, contends for salvation by grace through the mercy of God, and yet does not understand and fully advocate all the fundamental principles of the doctrine in its deepest and most profound character, who has the right, and by what law does he condemn him? If the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus has made me free from the law of sin and death, by what law am I yet condemned? If one has a gospel experience and his life and conversation are in harmony with it, that one, by all means ought to have the confidence and fellowship of the children of his Father.

I do not for one moment conclude that the servant of God should fail to preach the preaching that God bids him preach, whether it is fully believed or not, but I do contend that he ought to be very careful how he denounces one who trusts in the grace of God for salvation, simply because that one can not fully receive and endorse all he preaches, though some principle of truth, in part, be not endorsed. Some of the disciples were fools and slow of heart to believe all that the Prophets had spoken concerning Christ. They believed part, but were slow to believe all. Were they therefore not disciples of Christ? Others again were of little faith, even the apostles were such at times. Those who are weak in the faith, Paul says receive ye, but not to doubtful disputation.

The Hebrews were dull of hearing and therefore Paul said he had many things to say unto them, concerning Melchisedec, and hard to be understood. This is even so with many of us. There are indeed many things said of that mysterious man, which are hard to be understood and I fear there are few if any who do fully understand them. Yet those things are true, and those of the children of God who do not understand them are no less the children of God for their want of this understanding.

There are divisions which are necessary, and are according to the doctrine. We are to withdraw from all who walk disorderly. An heretic reject after the first and second admonition."

Offences must needs come, but woe to that man by whom they come: he had better never have been born. It is a fearful thing for one to so act as to bring about strife, contentions, offences and divisions among God's people. If there are heresies among them, brought in by those who are not of them or have turned away their eyes from the truth, and are turned unto fables, the doctrine furnishes the only infallible rule by which the proper steps may be taken to either reconcile them to the acknowledging of the truth, or to their rejection after gospel admonitions have been given in the spirit of meekness and Godly fear. And when this rule is fully adopted and executed in the proper spirit the result will invariably meet with the approbation of the Lord, and no division will occur contrary to the doctrine, though one should take place. While each principle of the doctrine savors of, and is in perfect harmony with each and every other principle, yet no one principle embraces in itself essentially all the others, therefore we are not authorized to contend for one of these to the neglect, or exclusion of the rest.

Predestination does not mean election, if it does why should both be used at all? If I do not hold the doctrine of predestination just like you do, that does not allow me to rail against you, or what you believe, nor does it allow you to reject me and what I believe. We may both be on extremes, and therefore neither of us be exactly clear on the subject. When my mind is engaged in the investigation of the predestination of all things I am unable to command words strong and clear enough to my own satisfaction to tell the beauties then before me, and I may fail to so present my thoughts as to be understood by you, and you thinking that I have been extreme on the subject, undertake to put me right, and in doing so you fall too far back and occupy what I conceive to be an extreme on the other hand. And while we are thus contending, not trying to get together but to sustain our respective positions, the devil seeing a good opportunity to get up a division (he loves such work) comes to each of us and if possible makes us each believe that the salvation and the well-being of mankind generally depends upon each one sustaining his position, whereas instead of peace, distress and division are the result.

It seems to me that if there were as great an effort made to understand each other, and to know simply the truth of the gospel of our salvation, as there seems to be to have our way, or none, there would be more harmony and love among us than is apparent at this time in some sections of the country.

The subject of feet-washing has been one of contentions in some localities and strange to say those instances where this subject has been precipitated almost to a test of fellowship, those who believe most in its literal observance have been the more contentious, and have thereby shown less of the spirit of truly washing one anothers feet. I believe that feet-washing is a duty to be performed in some way, but just how it is to be observed I am at times at a loss to determine. I have when I felt to do so, participated in its literal observance, and should I again feel to do so I shall not hesitate to wash my brother's feet; but good and able brethren differ as to the real character, and manner of its observance. I have never felt to persist in its literal performance, nor do I have less fellowship for one who does not literally wash feet than for one who does.

I do not believe it is an ordinance, as are baptism, and the Lord's supper. In my association we agree to disagree on the subject, and some do not wash and in but few instance has there been any particular feeling growing out therefrom.

May the Lord show unto his people his covenant and uphold them by his free Spirit, and restore unto them the joys of his salvation, is my earnest desire.

P. G. L.

ONLY BY PRAYER AND FAST- ING.

Brother J. Dail of N. C. requests my view of Matt. 17; 21:

"Howbeit this kind goeth not out but by prayer and fasting."

This is the answer of Jesus to his disciples that had failed to cast the devil out of a child that was a lunatic and sore vexed.

Jesus tells them that because of their unbelief they could not cast him out. He said that if his disciples had faith as a grain of mustard seed they might say to this mountain remove hence to yonder place; and it shall remove; and nothing shall be impossible unto you.

What can we do without Jesus in casting satan either out of ourselves or others? We cannot do any thing of ourselves, without faith it is impossible to please God, or to overcome sin. But faith even as small as a grain of mustard seed can remove mountains. Surely this power or faith comes from God. This power to cast out satan, throw down walls of Jericho with a shout, quench the violence of fire, make a diseased one who had been helpless for many years every whit whole, is of God.

Surely those that are blessed with this faith have that which is born of God, which not only comes from God, as a good gift, but which is born of him. For a thing might be a gift of God as rain, &c., and not be born of God. But that which is born of God partakes of the nature of God. Does not a child born of woman partake of the nature of its mother? Does not faith which is born of God partake of the character of God? Then it partakes of the power of God. Hence faith even as a grain of mustard seed has power to remove mountains. The power of God as to quality is irresistible; so that the least amount, so to speak, of that power, even to as small a quantity as a grain of mustard seed, is greater than any opposition. It is not that one portion of the power of God is greater or less than another, or that it may be lessened by division, or increased by augmenting the bulk. The power of God is infinite and cannot be increased or lessened in quantity by reduction. Faith being born of God even as a grain of mustard seed, the smallest of all seeds, would cast out devils and overcome all opposition.

Because of unbelief the disciples could not cast out this devil. All our weakness is in our unbelief. Faith deals with the power of God; unbelief shows the sinfulness of man. In unbelief we have no strength at all. For unbelief has no power but is a manifesting of our sinfulness and guilt, nor can unbelief ever do one thing that is spiritual, or ever take hold of the power of God; while faith does lay hold on that power and prevail thereby.

This kind goeth not out but by prayer and fasting.

This kind of healing is meant This gift or power of healing goeth not out except where there is prayer and fasting (true prayer and true fasting.)

Those that commune much with God pray and fast. They do not observe public fasts before men, nor do they make prayers to be seen of man, but they pray to their Father in secret, and he rewards them openly.

The gift of healing is where? When the Son of man cometh shall he find faith on the earth?

TOO BAD.

In some sections complaint comes that some of our preachers are much neglected by brethren. A letter just received states that an old Elder in good standing died in extreme poverty, while another died in the poor house, while there were rich brethren worth their thousands that withheld help.

A SIMPLE AND ALMOST SURE CURE FOR DIPHTHERIA.

Take the bark of Redoak (after scraping off the rough outside) and boil it in water until you have a tea-cup full of strong tea: let the tea get cool, then add a tea spoon full of powdered alum, and a table spoon full of Spirits Turpentine; use this mixture as a gargle, a table spoonfull at a time every half hour: stir the mixture well before using and let it go as low in the throat as possible. If the case is severe make a poultice of the tea alone with meal, and bind around the throat: it should be warm. Use the gargle also. I have used and seen used this remedy for ten years, and have never known it to fail, if treated with care and diligence It will give relief in 24 hours, unless it be an extreme case.

Obituary.

HARVY LEE SIMPKINS.

Departed this life on the 2nd day of November 1887, Harvy Lee Simpkins, aged 3 years 2 months and 11 days.

Little Harvy Lee was the dear little son of Brother J. Wade, and French C. Simpkins, a bright little Jewel, loved by all who knew him, and of a happy cheerful disposition. How crushing was the blow that removed him from the little family circle, how sad it is to miss his gentle presence, and no longer to hear his sweet voice in the home that he brightened and made glad. During his illness of about 24 days with Diptheria his parents seemed to realize that like a lovely flower too pure for earth he was soon to be transplanted in the heavenly kingdom, there to bloom forever in endless joy. Every thing that medical aid and loving care could perform was done for the little sufferer, but no earthly aid prolonged his stay. God had called him, he must go, soon his little spirit was borne by angels through the etheric region to the heavenly, pearly gate, to join in the anthems of praise to Jesus the giver of his eternal life; and while we mourn his loss and miss his presence, no care can ever befall him, no struggling with Diptheria now, no burning fever or sleepless nights; but the presence of Jesus, the company of angels, and the songs of the redeemed will be the employment of little Harvy Lee while we are battling with sorrows and cares. Dear parents, think of your little boy now, clothed with the righteousness of Christ a crown of glory a palm of victors, and his little tongue singing the song of Moses the servant of God, and of the Lamb.

HIS AUNT ETTA.

MRS MARY L. BRYAN.

Death seems not now as it once did. When the young die I feel they are only called from the evil to come; when those who have borne the heat and burden of a long and checkered pilgrimage go their departure is a grand and glorious release from this bondage of sin to mansions of rest, beyond the reach or fear of change. Therefore I must say joy mingles largely with sorrow in my humble tribute to the memory of this "mother in Israel." Years ago before death had entered the household, I was member of her family, as teacher. A happy unbroken and thoughtless circle was theirs then. But soon after or during the war death removed the husband, not long after a daughter just merging into womanhood followed, and them years ago another daughter exchanged the cross for a crown.

From the time of her husband's death she began to seek as never before the Saviour, tho' she had many bright manifestations of his love and care, doubts and fears kept her for some time out of the church after her conversion. I met and talked with her occasionally during the interval between conversion and membership, and had the pleasure of witnessing her baptism by Mr. Pusvis. Having known her intimately, and loved her much both before and after conversion, I honestly believe that when she arose from the baptismal waters she manifested reawakened life indeed, for I have never seen a greater change by grace than was manifested in her daily walk and conversion ever afterwards.

For several years she had been afflicted with heart disease, and for the last four months a great but patient sufferer till last month when I have not a doubt that her freed spirit was called to rest with God.

She leaves five daughters, an only son, and one sister with many friends to mourn their loss. She received every attention from her devoted children and sister, during her illness, and while I offer them my deep heart-felt sympathy in their great and sore bereavement, I can but rejoice in the thought that she is now happy, forever freed from sorrow, pain and care. Once, during her illness, when she and all thought she was dying, she said weep not for me, but for yourselves, I have a better home than this, one whose foundation is sure. Not long after this she gave her parting blessing and fell asleep in Jesus so gently and calmly that, but for strictest vigilance no one would have known the moment of her departure.

That God will strengthen us all to emulate her faithfulness in his cause, and permit us to meet her again, where congregations ne'er break up, and Sabbaths never end, is the prayer of

A. H. D.

JESSE COLEMAN.

Little Jesse Coleman was born to John A. Perdue, and Nannie his wife, of Franklin Co, Va. on the 23rd of Nov. 1886, and died March 22nd 1889.

We did all fond parents and physicians could do to keep off the cold hand of death, but the Lord called him, so helped us to say the Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away, blessed be his name. He suffered much pain for a short while, but we know he is freed from all pain. The little angel is gone home to his Saviour there to be forever blessed. Then dear parents weep not. I know he was a lovely child and we will miss him, but would not have him back in this sinful world.

May the Lord prepare us to meet him in that never-ending world, where we can sing God's praises forever more.

PART 2.

ON SELF-MADE MINISTERS.

NOW the worship of all these deities was conducted by priests richly dressed, in costly habits offering to these dumb gods sacrifices of animals, fruits, perfumes, wines &c., This worship of idols was sometimes accompanied with music and dancing, and the offering human beings in sacrifice to appease the anger of their gods. In a word, temples were erected of the most splendid architecture for these gods, as the one at Ephesus for Diana; festivals were made, games instituted, and a thousand other fooleries set on feet. The Phœnicians had gods Baal, Astarte, Hercules, Adonis, &c. Rome had nearly the same gods as Greece, and priests by thousands of different orders, of which I cannot now speak particularly, as I have said enough for my purpose from history. Come to the scripture and there you will find heathen and idol priests by thousands, attending on their different twenty gods mentioned. Of the Jewish priests I don't mean Aaron, nor the priests of his line; I mean pharisaical, or Moses priests, who preached Moses for loaves and fishes, or prophetic for pay and divined for money, of which the scripture is full.

Now who made all these heathen priests? You can't say God made them; the church did not make them—then we go to the old stand, they made themselves priests, what the devil did not make; or they were made so of men to attend on these idols, as no kind of religion can exist without priests, neither, heathen Jewish, nor Christian; neither false nor true. So then the more priests the better chance for that religion to stand, whether true or false. For how shall they hear without a preacher, and how shall they believe a religion, whether true or false, without hearing its tenets? So then every god and goddess had their priests, to tell of their divinity and preach them to the people; by which the priests made their gain on all they could dupe into their belief of their gods. Just so now by all sects—how long would any sect last and let them have no preachers? Why as soon as there were no priests to tell lies for money, all that sect would become extinct. So then the priests were the supporters and upholders of Idolatry. Equally so are the preachers the upholders of false religion, and false sects, and false tenets in the world; take these away, and down goes the fabric. Then it follows that all false sects must make preachers, for God won't do it, I know; or else down they will go certainly to extinction. Thus theological schools have been erected, to make preachers to uphold false worship; thus did the heathen, as did the Roman Catholics, and others; and they must have salaries, for false priests won't serve without pay. For this the heathen priests served, for this the Catholics served, for this the tobacco priests served, for this false priests will serve a false cause; yea, for this they will tell divine lies and cut throats, and suck the blood of lambs and confiscate their estates.

I now close this section of heathen priests, with some instances from scripture out of a hundred I could give you. You recollect Micah had a hosushold god, and he got a priest, a Levite, to be priest for him; but recollect he had to pay him wages. Now recollect, this Levite was entitled by tribe to the priests' office in the temple of God, but he would serve the idol for pay. Yes, sir, he soon ran away with Micah's god to get from the Danites a better price. So you see that men will serve the devil in religion for pay. Again, you recollect that when Jeroboam the king of Israel set up the two golden calf gods, one in Dan the other at Bethel, he took of the lowest of the people and consecrated them priests of these gods; to preach their divinity in opposition to the divinity of the God of Israel. And no doubt they were glad enough, as they could tithe the people and live without work. Here you see men-made priests serving idols for pay. Again you recollect that when Ahab had married Jezebel, the daughter of Ethbael of Sidonia, that she being brought up to worship the idol god Baal in her native country, that when she came to Jerusalem she must needs get Ahab to make and set up Baal at Jerusalem for her to worship. But what account is a god without a priest to preach his fame. So then she gets 400 men and makes them priests to preach the fame of her god Baal and feeds them at her own table. Here is making priests again by hundreds. These were no doubt Jews by nation, and had heard the fame of the God of Israel; yet would they be made priests for money, and the favour of the queen. But these four hundred were not enough to spread the fame and doctrine of Baal throughout the country; they would only do for the metropolis. This then put Ahab upon the expedient of setting up the idol Baal in groves in different parts of the country and consecrating 450 more. Here is making priests by handfuls. What did he want with so many, when the god Jehovah had but one poor old Elijah? Why, to support his false god and preach his false divinity in opposition to the God of Jacob. Thus the contention began between the priests of these two gods, and Elijah proved more than a match for them all.

So then we find that men will be made priests and tell lies, preach error, for money and sumptuous fare. And so it is now there are men enough that will be made priests, tell lies, preach falsehood, or this or that creed, or any creed for money, honor and gain. For it matters not with them, like Baal's prophets, whether they serve God or Baal, so money and good fare is coming. And they can please the sect that employ them, or the master from whom they expect their loaves and fishes; like Ahab's prophets, they had rather tell lies than truth, because it pleased the king, gratified his ambition and wishes. So will modern men-made priests—they had rather preach lies than truth because it pleases the people better; no please, no pay. Hundreds of instances I could give you from history and scripture, of the dumb sleepy dogs, as the scripture calls them, but I must forbear. On heathen priests suffice it to say, that these self-made, men-made, and devil-made idol priests have ever been opposed to God's preachers; and have stimulated the kings and magistrates of the earth to kill, burn, and destroy thousands of God's ministers.

Next in bringing up the rear, we come to Jewish priests or preaching. It is well known to every man, that has paid attention to the reading of the New Testament, that the Pharisees were a numerous sect; and that they had many scribes, doctors, and priests to support their tenets and hypocritical traditions, which they pretended to have derived from the Jewish fathers, and taught them as commandments of God when they were nothing but the commandments of men, set up by men, thereby to make void the commandments of God, as our

Saviour in many places showeth. Now our Saviour charges these priests with making long prayers, and making broad their phylacteries, pay tithes, &c. but yet he tells them this was all hypocrisy, pretence, outward show; that they might, under the cover of hypocrisy or sheep skin, devour widows' houses. Thus you see priests can play the hypocrite, put on a form of godliness, and be very religious even to get the chance of being called honest men, prey upon widows and get orphans' estates into their hands to make gain to themselves. Our Saviour charges these priests with the blackest crimes, so black as to be hypocrites, to lead the blind into the ditch; and you recollect the law of Moses says, cursed is he who leadeth the blind out of his way; how much worse to lead him into the ditch of error for a little money. He charges them with uncleanness of insides, as filthy as the sepulchres of the dead, or a nasty dish; although their external actions in a religious way had white-washed them outside, yet their hearts were wolf, were God-hating, Christ-hating, truth-hating, covetous, and as offensive to God as a dead rotten body in a grave was to men; and consigns them over to the greater damnation, with all their preaching and religion. Now who made these priests? Not God. These were self and men-made Jewish pharisaical priests, and served for hire as well as the false prophets. If God had made them then would they have loved Jesus Christ; if they had been Christians, then they would have loved the apostles; for Christ says of them, that they hated both him and his Father. And if these and the chief of the priests of Aaron's order had been Christians, then would they not have killed the prince of life, nor have persecuted the apostles unto death. So then we see that false priests, whether heathen, self-made, or men-made, or Jewish of the same description, possess a persecuting and a God and Christ-hating spirit, and are in opposition to God's priests in every age, and to his truth and people; and like ravening wolves have preyed on the estates and lives of God's people. And man is now about what he always was; he has not got better by the age of time, he is the same corrupt being; place him under like circumstances and he will prove it to you. Then wolves of the present age are still wolves, as much so as they were when Jacob minded Laban's flocks to keep them from catching the lambs. So are wolf preachers, they are the same at this day as they were when Cain devoured Abel, or as when the pagan wolves in the days of the ten persecutions drenched the world with the blood of the lambs of Jesus; or as when the popes, those master wolves, with their understrappers sucked the blood of the martyrs of Christ. Or as when Queen Mary of England, that bloody she wolf, roasted the saints of God in Smithfield, to gorge her wolfish stomach. Or as when the New England Cambridge and Oxford priests punished and whipped the Quakers, and imprisoned the Baptists in Virginia. This is not an hundred thousand part the of the cursed cruel deeds of self-made, men-made, devil-made preachers; nor can words portray the black and infernal malignity and horrid murders they have been the stimulators and cause of. And as wolves are the same they used to be in nature and principle to kill sheep, if it was not for those lets and barriers set up by the governments of the nations of the earth, they would have gone on killing in the Roman empire, had not Constantine made laws to have protected and thereby fenced up the sheep from the wolves. How thankful then to God and civil rulers should saints be, for the present fences made round the sheep to keep off the cursed wolves of the present age; for there are as many now, I am fully assured as there ever were at any one time since the world began. But they can only stand and grin through the pen, or howl in the thickets, while the sheep feel secure from the laws of the land. This is all that prevents, for says Jesus, I send you forth as lambs among wolves, and marvel not that the world hate you, and you shall be hated of all nations for my name's sake—the American nation not excepted. And why have self-made, and men-made, and devil-made preachers, these wolves in sheep's clothing hated God's ministers? Why, because God's ministers stand in their way of getting money by their preaching. God's preachers have ever declared this and their other black deeds to the world and have like Jesus testified that the deeds of these men are evil. For this reason, as Christ said, the world hated him; and so for this reason their men-made hypocrites hate God's ministers, because they will not let their black deeds and hypocrisy pass untold to the world. Read the Old and New Testament, and see how the false prophets and true were always in opposition; and how God's prophets testify against their divining for money and how Christ and his apostles testify against these false teachers. If they had let them have gone on to get money under their sheep skin covering, and not to have exposed them, then all would have been well. This is the reason, that the wolves are howling on my track, from the city of Washington to Pensacola.

BROTHER GOLD AND LESTER:—Dr A. J. Almond, of liberty, Va, requests me to write on the following text, "And the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads; They shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away;" Isaiah 35: 10:

I have no doubt but brother Almond is much better calculated to write upon the subject than I am, yet I have had some thought upon the subject which if guided by the Spirit I will try to pen down.

Believing fully that All scripture is given by inspiration of God and is profitable for doctrine, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: That the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good work's 2 Tim 3: 16- 17. And the prophet being a man of God, and as such thoroughly furnished was able to impart to us the things that God had inspired him to tell, although he had not actually lived to see the setting up of the gospel Kingdom, yet by inspiration he evidently believed firmly that Christ would come and set up such a kingdom: and that while he and his brethren believed by faith that Christ the deliverer of Sion would come and turn away ungodliness from Jacob (Rom .11: 26:) he and they had, through the working of the Holy Ghost, returned, being confirmed by Christ, and had by faith embraced the promise or rather in spirit come into the very heart of this kingdom, he could see the the glorious reign of grace as effectually bringing back or turning back God's ransomed ones who lived under the law dispensation, together with all who lived under the gospel dispensation, as though he had been an eye witness of Christ's death to accomplish beyond the possibility of a failure this very thing, consequently he declares, and the ransomed of the Lord shall return and come, not may come, but shall, positively shall. Why so positive? Because God had found a ransom (see Job 33: 24:) price by the sacrifice of himself (see Matt 20; 28; also Mark 10; 45; and 1st Tim 26.) The prophet seeing that the ransom price was paid, for by the eternal spirit he did see it just as Abraham saw it and was glad (see John 8; 56:) could but exclaim with all God's children, who have like precious faith revealed unto them, the ransom of the Lord shall return and come to Zion. I conclude that it would do no violence to the subject to say all the Elect, or all the called and chosen shall return and come; but ransomed will do. There is no denying the truth of this declaration without giving God the lie. Then all who preach conditional salvation ought to blush for shame, as they are guilty of giving God the lie to his face. For he has declared by his prophet that the ransomed shall return They say he died for all alike and all can come if they will. But the prophet says nothing of the kind, but in the plainest terms possible declares, that the ransomed of the Lord shall return and come to Zion with songs. Who out side of the Primitive Baptists say so now? Not one, save those who believe their report. Return from where? From the bondage of sin and death. Return from all hope of being justified by the deeds of the law. They will plead no longer for justification by work. But rely upon nothing but the grace of life through our Lord Jesus Christ for every purpose of salvation.

Come with songs. The theme will be free grace. If I must sing I will sing of grace which raised me from the fall, and led me to a hiding place, Jesus my Lord, my all. The Lord will allure her and bring her into the wilderness (see Hosea 2; 14.) Therefore I will allure her and give her her Vineyards from thence, and the valley of Achor for a door of hope; and she shall sing there, as in the days of her youth, and as in the day when she came up out of the land of Egypt. This may imply when she returned and came to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon her or their heads. For when the Lord allures his ransomed ones they are sure to return from all former owners, and come to Zion with the songs of deliverance, and expressing the joy of heart which is a fruit of the spirit. They shall obtain joy and gladness. These are great and glorious promises to God's ransomed family they shall obtain joy. Oh! what joy is experienced by every child of grace, as they are enabled to come or are led out of the wilderness of sin which I think implies conviction for sin. There are no songs of joy while under conviction, or while in the wilderness state. But the Vineyard is from thence, and as the sinner emerges from the wilderness the soul is filled with love and joy and peace, and can but sing,

"My soul break out in unknown strains,
And sing surprising grace."

Shall obtain joy and gladness. Sorrow and singing shall flee away. While contemplating the glorious reign of grace we are not only ready to sing, but the joy is inexpressible. Sweet assurances of God's sure plan of life crowd the mind, and we gladly claim the promises as ours. The sure foundation of Zion delights the heart. For Jesus is laid in Zion for a foundation. Behold I lay in Zion for a foundation, a stone, a tried stone, (Isa. 28; 16;) And all the subjects of saving grace are built in him (see Eph. 2; 22;) How gladly the saved or ransomed contemplate the foundation or Chief corner stone. Though they are weak and helpless in or of themselves they know that the foundation, the stone of Israel, cannot be removed, hence they gladly or with gladness of heart sing for joy, Jesus paid it all, all to him I owe.

Sin has left a crimson stain,
He washed it white as snow.

Sorrow and sighing shall flee away. Zion is not a habitation of mourning. She is a city of love, a quiet habitation. Zion is the city of our habitation, glorious things are spoken of thee, O city of God (Ps. 87; 3;) The Lord Loveth Zion more than all the dwellings of Jacob (2nd verse 87, Ps.) Peace is within her walls. Then all that come to her cease to sorrow or sigh. Why? Because her very gates are peace. Christ dwells in her, and when the sinner comes to Christ sorrow and sighing must flee apace. The water of life is within her walls. And all the ransomed ones find that this water is given, and is in them a well of water springing up into everlasting life. (see John 4; 14;) Hence sorrow and sighing are forgotten. They sweetly realize the fact that Jesus is theirs, and that they are his: no sighing over a broken heart, for Jesus has bound up all their wounds. They feel in their heart that the winter is past, the rain is over and gone. The flowers appear on the earth: the time of the singing of birds is come, and the voice of the turtle is heard in the land. Song 2; 11-12. In joy they sing in view of eternal rest,

"My suffering, will soon be o'er,
Then I shall sigh and weep no more."

In view of the great and glorious rest promised to the ransomed of the Lord all sorrow is banished hence, and like Thomas of old the happy saint exclaims with joy of heart, "My Lord and God." How any child of God who has come with singing to zion can conceive in his heart that God, who in the perfect offering of the blessed Jesus was honored, glorified and satisfied and through this perfect atonement accepted the sinner and declared him ransomed, should fail to bring all for whom the ransom was paid to zion. I confess I cannot see. I say how a child of grace or a child of God can advocate a conditional salvation is a mystery to me. Can it be? I think God's people all must do, and will, teach salvation free through the merit of Christ, and will not lug in any work to be performed by the creature in order to their salvation. I cannot believe that one born of God, i. e. one who has returned and come to zion, can ever doubt for a moment the power of God to save eternally every ransomed one. For to me it seems that it would be a misnomer for me or any one else to believe that Jesus would pay such costly, yea such a priceless ransom, yea make such a perfect, satisfactory payment and then consent to live in glory while his ransomed ones should dwell in an awful hell. It cannot be: as sure as he has ransomed them, just so sure shall they return and come, and will receive all the joys of heaven. Men have striven against the doctrine, and have whipped and murdered God's chosen servants for preaching it, when they had power to do so, and now they rail out against, and cry fanaticism, antinomianism and all such. But as sure as God reigns, just that sure Christ will save his ransomed ones. Then in view of this every child of God feels to say,

"In hope of that immortal crown,
I now the cross sustain,
And gladly wander up and down,
And smile at toil and pain."

If these few lines appear in the LANDMARK and brother Almond should see them I hope they may not offend but comfort him. I have felt some comfort while writing them. May God have all the praise is my prayer. And may grace be with you all.

Yours in gospel bonds,
J. C. HALL.

ADDRESS TO THE BAPTIST BROTHERHOOD.

(By the Primitive Baptist church of Crawfordsville, Indiana.)

BELOVED IN THE LORD:—Suffer us to stir up your pure minds on behalf of the author of our Church History. This large and excellent work is regarded by many competent judges as the truest, and by far the best church history written since the apostles sealed their testimony under the spirit of inspiration. It is a work of a thousand pages, and sold at two dollars per copy, being little more than a half price value.—The price being fixed by others at the mere cost of publication. Elder Hassel generously gave his consent, so that a greater number of brethren, and those of slender means might obtain it. This left him without remuneration for years of untiring labor and costly research, while his personal interests and business were necessarily given up, his health was much impaired, his home and property sacrificed, and a large debt accumulated through the unselfish and noble desire to secure to his brethren an authentic and faithful history of God's true church. Brethren and friends of truth, can we fold our hands in cold indifference and let the sad results of this sacrifice continue? Shall the Lord's devoted servant bear this burden alone, while we forget the trial of his faith, the sorrow of heart and weariness of spirit that must rest upon him? O no, a thousand times no! Our brethren are not indifferent to the claims of justice nor to pleas of mercy. Many have already responded to this call with generous hearts (may God bless and reward them) while very many no doubt have simply deferred action for the time, and in many cases, perhaps no one has stepped forward to lead and press this worthy cause; but O friends, has not the time come when all who have failed as yet, and those who desire to place their hands the second time to the work, shall unite in an earnest, persevering and decisive effort to cancel with the least possible delay this embarrassing debt, and remove the reproach of our forgetfulness.

In the typical church the laborer whether brother or stranger was the especial care of God's law. His wages were a sacred charge, and not to be withheld all the night, nor even should the sun go down upon it, "lest he cry against thee to the Lord and it be sin unto thee." The spirit of the gospel is not less kind, considerate and merciful, and one of the Lord's apostles with inspired pen charges home the grievous sin of keeping back the dues of them who have reaped down our fields. O how we should fear, lest the cries of them which have reaped should enter the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth, and the rust of our gold and silver become a witness against us. In the gospel fold as brethren of like precious faith "we share our mutual woes, our mutual burdens bear." As members of one family our obligations are identical. When one member suffers, the rest will sympathize. When we remember that the comfort and advantages of such a history become the inheritance of all God's family, that doubtless it will prove as enduring as the generations that are to come, that the task and responsibility of writing such a work, proved of far greater magnitude than was anticipated, that the work was prosecuted under nameless discouragements, but at length completed to the satisfaction of our most sanguine hopes, we realize that the obligations its author incurred become our own and we esteem him highly in love for his work's sake, and should delight to show our appreciation of the blessing conferred upon us, by ministering in the measure God enables us to his relief from debt and restoration to the comforts he so freely laid down on our behalf.

We should bear in mind, that to prepare so difficult a work requires a combination of rare and special gifts; a degree of learning, and a spirit of self consecration to the Lord and to the brethren, as perhaps only this one dear brother was found sufficient unto. Brethren, this is no common circumstance before us. It is not probable that the next hundred years, nor yet five hundred, will lay upon God's people an obligation more binding and more honorable, more sacred and magnanimous, nor yet more universal among all who rejoice in the truth, and love the name and cause of the Primitive Baptists, than does this laborious and complete history, which our beloved brother has offered to the church and to the honest enquirers of the truth, and will it not be some solace in after years to know that we have aided, even slightly, in dispersing shadows that would forever darken the memories of Elder Hassell's sacrifices if this embarrassment be not removed. Let us think that by the tokens of our ministering love we are all represented in the capable and untiring pen that has rescued from obscurity the evidences that surround the assemblies of the saints as we see them this day—our dear spiritual homes—with that kingdom which the God of heaven set up in the same form nearly two thousand years ago.

Is there one to chide the earnest, zealous, God-honoring saints, who conceived the design of tracing the footsteps of the flock back through ages of darkness, to the shores of Galilee, and to the beginning of all time? Is there one to feel that the time was not propitious or the field inviting? Can one be found to doubt the wisdom of Elder Hassell's selection to this important post. And are there any who can withhold their hearty approbation of the faithful manner of his work, and the success which has crowned the toil of years? If in these things we are joined together in one mind, let us also unite in the laudible purpose of speedily discharging every farthing of this debt and show to our uncomplaining brother, that we are not insensible to the unwritten claim which his high sense of honor will not suffer him to press. Let us make it manifest that there is a monitor in every heart, that as an advocate of equity and right, will press this sacred duty home to our bosoms till our deeds of love bring the reward of an approving conscience. Brethren, the work was timely. It was demanded in this day of doubtful profession and sore rebuke, with the world standing in almost solid phalanx against the ways of truth its institutions of learning every where, to men of wealth and power, unnumbered religious societies, its teachings and allurements, its ridicule, reproach and scorn all arrayed against the little flock, a flock regarded as the offscouring of all things, a sect every where spoken against, as not to be numbered with the nations, was made to the voice of History; and one charged with tracing through past ages, the identity, the faithfulness, the vicissitudes, the sufferings and triumphs of God's organized kingdom, and thus strengthen the weak hands and confirm the feeble knees, as commanded by the Lord's prophet. It has seemed as if the world like a Goliath, mailed in wickedness and pride, was this day defying the armies of Israel and the living God. Behold the figurative giant. His height six cubits and a span, a helmet of brass upon his head, and coat of mail five thousand sheckles strong, a staff for his spear like a weaver's beam and his spear head six hundred sheckles of iron, and yet one bearing a shield must go before him. It was well that in spiritual Israel there was a second David to battle against this haughty foe. But how unequal seems the conflict. A ruddy youth, a shepherd's bag, a few stones from the brook, and one also going before bearing a shield, even the God of truth. A thousand Rabbis were to be opposed, the books of Centuries to be sifted for the gleanings of truth, schools of learning disputed our brother's progress, systems of religion made defiant claims, while pens of priest and infidel preplexed his researches through the intricate mazes of many generations; but at length the reward was obtained and the testimony of impartial history was found to confirm the promise of the Lord that the gates of hell should not prevail against his church. His people of today feel to thank his holy name and take courage from the past, being as Elder Hassell's patient investigation that the witness of God's truths in all ages were their spiritual kindred. The Lord having commanded to stand in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, and the good way, encourages his pilgrim-saints to continue their way forth by the foot-steps of the flock, even as his poor ones have ever done. Dear Baptists brethren of Indiana and Carolina, of East and West, North and South, there is in this worthy cause such an appeal to our sympathy and active support as should make our hearts rebound with joy at the opportunity before us to manifest our interest, our gratitude, our love and zeal for the cause of Zion.

Let us covenant together, that we will each send at once one, or two dollars and the glad satisfaction over such a result will be ours. Singly we can do little, but in union lies the power of great achievements.

It is also the mind of this church that Eld. D. Bartley our brother in membership be authorized to personally solicit contributions within the bounds of the church and wherever opportunity may offer.

DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:— Many of the brethren, with whom I met on my recent trip, requested me to let them hear from me through the LANDMARK.

I left home March 17th in company with my brother, Elder J. T. Rowe, who preached at Blount's Creek. From here I went over into the bounds of the Kehukee Association. This body of Christians is so well known that it is hardly necessary for me to say that I enjoyed myself with them. Let it suffice to say that I was blest to meet all my appointments, being conveyed by the brethren and friends from place to place; from whom I received many tokens of christian fellowship for which I feel to thank God. Who is the giver of every good and perfect gift?

These brethren, especially those on the south-side of Roanoke River, have for a long time been blessed with a faithful ministry by which they have been saved from the snare of satan. This blessing, my brethren, is of the Lord; for it pleased God through the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe. Now brethren, while you have enjoyed the truth as it is in Christ your brethren over in Pasquotank and Currituck counties have been troubled by men, rising up among them, speaking perverse things, and drawing disciples after them until now the churches have very few in fellowship with only two ordained ministers. These seem to be faithful which makes one think that a faithful with quietness is better than a stalled ox in confusion.

Some of these dear ones seem to be repenting and doing their first work: that is, seeking the Lord with their whole heart as when they first felt their need of him. They are now saying "Come over and help us" Should any of you my brethren, feel that this cry is directed to you, confer not with flesh and blood. I have just spent about ten days with them which I count among the most pleasant days of my life. I reached Elizabeth City April the 9th and was met at a train by Mr. William Sanders who is a strong friend to the Baptists. He took me to his home and cared for me in a very comfortable way. Elder Charles Meads and several others from the neighborhood of Flatty Creek, 17 miles distant soon arrived. I spoke that night in the Methodist church to a very attentive congregation. Next day we took leave of the brethren, and in company with Elder Meads, reached brother Walker's about 7 o'clock, P. M. where I spoke to a few of the manner of God's love to poor sinners. The next day, Thursday, we met a small congregation at Coinjock. This church has recently had to dismiss her pastor on account of false doctrine. Here I tried to point to him who withholds no good thing from them who walk uprightly. From here we were conveyed to Powell's Point and spent the night with Elder A. J. Austin. Friday morning we were carried across Currituck Sound to Providence church on Kittyhawk Banks where we met a goodly number of people who seemed to be interested in the truth. In the morning we sowed our seed and in the evening we withheld not our hand. We spent the night with Elder A. J. Austin at the Life Saving station. The Next morning we recrossed the Sound and went to Elim church where we preached Saturday, Saturday night, and Sunday. We next crossed Albemarle Sound to Flatty Creek church where we preached Sunday night and Monday notwithstanding the storm was so heavy upon us. Tuesday morning was still stormy but to fill the rest of my appointments I must reach Elizabeth City ready for the boat Wednesday morning at two o'clock. So we started through the rain to try to get to the city, but the storm had washed away the bridges so we could not go. When we turned back I felt a spirit of rebellion against the providence of God saying, "Why am I thus hindered; why can I not go on to my appointments?" While thus musing over my disappointments, the spirit said "You must go back and baptize Mattie Lowry." In a moment I felt resigned to His will, and could truly say "Thy will be done." I went back and staid with them until Friday morning, preached four times, baptized this lady, and a brother for whom the church had looked for sometime. I again took leave of them Friday morning and reached home April 20th finding all well, for which I feel thankful to Him who doeth according to His will in the army of heaven and none can stay his hand or say unto Him what doest thou? My last appointment being the 21st I left home about 6 o'clock, traveled about 20 miles, found quite a number of brethren and friends waiting for me, to preach for them knowing nothing but Christ and him crucified, and returned home the same evening.

With many thanks to the brethren and friends for kindness to me while among them I subscribe myself,

Your servant for Jesus sake

ELDER P. D. GOLD, DEAR BROTHER :—I have had impressions from some source to try to write my experience for the LANDMARK, but fearing that it was of myself I have put it off from time to time, but hope it is from above, and that the Ruler of all things may direct my pen in trying to relate to the dear brethren and sisters of the household of faith, of my travels from nature to grace, if I have ever traveled that rugged road at all. I fear often that I have not.

When I was in my early boyhood at times I would have serious thoughts of what would become of me if I were called to die, though it would not last long before I would rest easy and be contented to practise sin and live as wickedly as ever. Then I believe I had eyes and saw not, ears and heard not, a heart and did not understand. This was my fix for several years, but by the grace of God I truly hope I was enabled to see and feel that all was not well with me : my crave was to be a better boy and at some future time be converted to christianity ; but the more I tried the worse I became. Oh, that I could be convicted of sin and be punished as I had heard christians tell of their convictions, and be converted. I would then have been willing to give up the whole world, had it all belonged to me, to have a hope in Christ and my sins pardoned. It seemed that there was something for me to do, though I did not know what for if there was no change I could see my soul eternally lost and by justice too, for I could not see anything that I had ever done that was right in the sight of God. Woe unto me, I thought I was an undone and ruined sinner doomed to eternal hell. While in this sad state I desired above all things that if it could be the will of God for my sins to be pardoned and a manifestation made unto me. One night while musing over a hard heart and a misspent life I dreamed a dream that I believe was good for me. I dreamed that I was in hell or a place of torment. It seemed that there was a great burden upon my breast. I heard a voice from heaven crying, "It is for your sins that you are here," and in my dream I heard the angels mourning on account of my sins, thought I had grieved the heavenly host, but after a few moments this burden was removed from me and I heard a voice saying, "Thy sins are forgiven thee, all by the mercy of Jesus; and the groaning turned into the most beautiful singing I thought I had ever heard, and it seemed I ascended unto heaven. Oh, what a happy time I thought it was, but when I awoke I found that it was only a dream, and I concluded that people were liable to dream almost anything, but this had quite a different effect upon me from any I had ever dreamed; but could it be possible my sins were forgiven. I could feel and see a difference in myself. I was not like I once was. I loved the dear people of God better than ever before. It seemed the bible was an entirely new book from what it once was. I could read it with an understanding that I once did not possess. This change of feeling took place during the month of August 1886. Something seemed to impress me that it was my duty to tell my feelings to the church, but I thought I was too unworthy a being to do so, thinking my hope was too little and probably I would deceive the church. I remember at different times when traveling along the road, and crossing a water-course of any size my thoughts would run upon what the Eunuch said to Philip, "See, here is water, what doth hinder me to be baptized?" It seemed that I ought to make a manifestation to the world of my little hope that I had in Jesus Christ. I traveled on in this way until September 1887. The impression became so strong that I could no longer keep from the church, so I went and gave in my experience and was received Saturday before the second Sunday in September and was baptized the next day. There were seven in all baptized at that time. I could see that Jesus had done all things well, and thought I would serve him the remainder of my days, but alas, things that I would do I do not, and things that I would not do those I do; but notwithstanding the doubts and fears I have I would not exchange the little hope I have for ten thousand such worlds as this. Your humble brother, if one at all.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—I have been requested by several of the brethren and sisters to write my experience. I will send it to you that they may all read it in the LANDMARK. I never shall be able to write out all my feelings and troubles, trials, conflicts and sorrows. But all these work together for good to them that love God, to those who are the called according to his purpose.

Before I had any evidence for a hope at all, when quite small, I felt very lonely, especially when mother went to church I had some little thoughts of a better time. After having hours of lonely feelings, some little scenes of joy from afar did appear to me, although I was without a change. Like one alone I have felt like a poor castaway for many years, and feel so yet. I was distressed in my mind a long time because I was a sinner and helpless, lost and ruined, and knew that I was a poor helpless mortal without strength, and felt that I was justly condemned before God. My cry was to him, O Lord, be merciful to me a poor mortal, nothing but dust, and felt that I was nothing, and was much afraid that he would not let me live until a change, thinking if spared awhile it might be better for me. It seemed that hell would be my doom in spite of all that could be done, but if it was that it would be perfectly just. Poor lost sinner, ruined and undone forever, without hope and without God in this world, I could not do one thing in the world that was right. One morning every thing looked new and lovely. I thought my sins were forgiven. But this hope soon passed away, and all was darkness and gloom again. It seemed that my life was no more than a hair, and that it would not take much to clip it, and it appeared if it was done that I should drop right into torment. Words cannot describe half the trouble and distress that I have been through. But the blessed God knows what is best for us all: he brings his children by ways that they know not: he leads them about and instructs them, as the apple of his eye. But the darkest time is always before day. Blessed dear friend one whose love never fails, after all of my greatest troubles, my good friend above delivered me. The next night I saw a vision, and in the vision I saw a little company, and saw myself at the window of torment stooped down, awaiting for my time to come to be cast into that place, and saw others appointed to that place. But I heard a voice from the midst of that little company that called me; and said, come away from that place; you have got nothing to do with that place. But I did not feel perfectly safe, until I was called the second time. The voice called me again: then I felt perfectly free and safe. Straightway I went right towards the sun-rise, and saw the light afar off before reaching it. Next morning I felt free, and had nothing to fear, and thought that I knew that it was the voice of the Almighty that called me away from destruction, and think so yet. It is impossible for me to ever describe the joy I did feel at that time. Bless the Lord, O my soul, and let all in me praise him. It was like a new world, old things had passed away, every thing looked new and heavenly. I felt that I could almost see heaven above the sky, and it seemed no more between. The sky looked pleasant, and I thought that I knew heaven was my home, and felt that I could not bear to stay here in this sinful and corrupt world, away from my sweet home. O how I longed to fly away Tongue cannot express the sweet comfort and joy of a soul in its earliest love. About one week perhaps after this I began to fear that I was deceived, and went off alone and cried to the Lord to be undeceived, if it was deception, and he comforted me. My mother was a member of the Primitive Baptist church forty odd years: she was my best friend at that time: she was very strict and strong in the faith: she encouraged me along through my weakness while she was with me. But soon after she departed this life in strong faith. Then I felt lonesome. I was afflicted and a poor mourner, and felt like a poor cast away, all my comfort was taken away, and no one to teach me. Poor, afflicted, and motherless, with no home, a wayfaring man, a so-journer here below. Primitive Baptists seemed the most like home folks after her decease of any one else in the world. I loved them, yet feared that they did not love me. After this I felt that the Lord was my friend. But now I believe he was my friend all that time. "Bless his holy name, his mercy endures forever." My whole heart's desire has been from first to last that God would keep and direct me and guide me in his way. When I began to feel impressed to go to the church it was a great burden to me. Impression grew heavier and heavier, and my desire went before me stronger and stronger for the Lord to show me if it was right for me to be baptized. I never was troubled as bad about anything before, and do not think that I could have lived much longer without some deliverance and had given out all hope, and lay down and cried and begged the Lord to show me some way, so that I could know what to do. I was miserable in this world, and the same day in the evening summer clouds were passing, and among them was a straight bright looking bank of cloud that reached away over, and about as far from the top edge of the straight bank as we are baptized from the edge of the water, so it looked to be, something that had great power, and that was bright as the moon, and clear and pure, and looked harmless as a dove, and remained there awhile, and then dipped itself right down in the cloud, and stood a little while, then came along slowly, and about half way from the place where it first appeared to the edge of the top of the bank, and it darted in the cloud one way, and a streak of lightning issued from it, and the thunder roared, and then it came gently along to the top of the bank and remained there awhile. It did so several times, and descended from where it first appeared, and sent the lightning, and thunder several times, and it ascended up again towards heaven going up a straight narrow path. I watched it as long as I could see it. I loved it, for it was great power.

This was the calmest, loveliest, and most wonderful sight that I have ever seen. The moment I saw it my burden was gone. I never felt so easy before, since I was delivered from my sins. The poorer we feel, and the more unworthy, and the more we feel like a poor castaway and nothing, and less than nothing, and the further we feel that we are from him, the nearer he is to us, and the greater his mercy towards us. The more we suffer here the sweeter rest will be. I felt assured then that it was right for me to be baptized. The members of my church looked like they would be glad to see me offer to the church. But four persons offered to the church that meeting and were not received, and I was afraid that if I offered that it would be my case, so I did not offer that time. After meeting was over, if any poor soul did see trouble I did, believing the Lord had delivered me, and showed me the way to go, and then I had had failed to obey him; after this the words came to me, "Why tarriest thou, arise and be baptized straightway;" I was made willing in the day of God's power, and if I am deceived it is in my deliverance from sin also. My trust was in God at first, as it is now, and when God begins a work he will surely carry it on until the day of salvation. When baptized I went on rejoicing in God my Savior, and these blessed words were in my mind, going from home to the church. No other trust intrude, none but Jesus can do helpless sinners good. He is able, he is willing, doubt no more. Oh what joy I received. God is the same always he is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever-more: he is of one mind and changes not, therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed. He it is that holds the winds in his fist. This world and all things therein are as nothing. The greatness and blessed thought of him who saves poor sinners, worms of the dust as we are from hell, and brings our poor souls with him to dwell, would banish all fear of mortal things away, and sweeten our troubles, afflictions and sorrows as we go from destruction to the promised land. Blessed promise blessed friend that reveals them to poor worms of the dust. I never shall be able to praise him as I want to, and honor his blessed pure name as I desire church as you know desired of that council to set up the church and equip her, and define the duties of each, from pastor to the poorest saint. You commenced right where the brethren on Saturday left off and completed that request, and the church got all she asked, but not in a way she expected, so it was of the Lord I feel sure, and the dignity of the church was sustained in all you all did and we are glad. Affectionately,

NOTICE.

I am preparing to publish a pamphlet on the Book of Joshua. It will be ready to distribute if the Lord will in a few months. The matter I wish to present cannot be inserted in the LANDMARK and give the proper space to other matter that ought to appear therein. The Book of Joshua contains matter of food for the household of Faith that it seems to me is worthy of being sought out and considered by all that reap the spoils of the wars of this mighty man of valor.

While it is considered by the world at large to be merely or chiefly a historical work, yet it possesses wealth far richer than lies in the heart of earthly chronicles. For there are emblems and types of the spiritual conquests of him whose bow abode in strength, and who is the captain of the Lord's host.

The pamphlet will contain about 150 pages, and will be mailed to those that order it at not more than 50 cents per copy, I prepaying the postage. It will be in large plain print so that people with dim sight can read it.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—I hope you reached your home safe and sound and found your family well. My people are as well as usual.

The result of the meeting at Middle Creek is the subject of much rejoicing generally, and having a soothing effect in all that and this section. I feel it, and see it daily manifested and feel to rejoice and give thanks. I never saw the position of the true ministry so plainly as I saw it then manifest, surely the churches generally do not respect the true ministry as they should. The Elders present there never did anything that manifested their love for the cause they represent plainer, or more forcibly than going to Middle Creek, in answer to the call of that church I do think. To me it told much for each Elder that went there; it told they felt their responsibility as watchmen to guard the Church of Christ. I mean the principles of the church, (not individuals.) Now I will say what I commenced this letter to say, which is this, can you, or will you, reduce the sermon you preached at Middle Creek on last Sunday morning to writing and put it in print, I mean publish it in the LANDMARK. I want to read it again and again. Brother S. D. Coley was here to-day—he was there and heard it also, and told me to write you and tell you to publish it in the LANDMARK; if you would he said it would benefit all the churches, and he wanted you to do it, if agreeable to your feelings. GOOD EATING AND DRINKING.

A friend requests my view of the following words:

"But let a man examine himself, and so let him eat of that bread and drink of that cup.

For he that eateth and drinketh unworthily eateth and drinketh damnation to himself, not discerning the Lord's body. For this cause many are weak and sickly among you and many sleep." 1st Cor. 11:29,30

In the ordinance of the Lord's supper, or the showing forth of the Lord's death in a gathering and eating together of the church, as a solemn assembly and feast to the Lord, each one is to tarry for all the others, and thus all are to eat together and drink together as unto the Lord. No one should eat or drink before another, but all tarry one for another. It is one bread or loaf, and one cup, nor is it man's bread or table, but the Lord's table. There can be no division or strife here. What right have we to invite any? It is not our table, but the Lord's.

We enquire are all well? Are all able to eat? We are not to examine others, but each one is to examine himself and thus he is to eat. That is by this examination each one is to discern the Lord's body, or be assured by the witness in his own heart that Jesus is his hope, or that with the heart he believes that Jesus died for him in the sense that Christ is precious to him, as his meat and drink.

It is the worship under the law each worshipper was to eat and drink of the sacrifices of the altar, and thus be a partaker of the altar. Here in eating is an endorsement of the altar. For when we eat it is an expression of approval. Also those that eat are partakers of the altar. It was a necessary part of worship and showed life, for we are not dead to that which we eat. When the Israelites were eating the paschal lamb it was a heart-felt worship. When sick we do not eat, nor when we are sorrowful. To eat and drink under the law at worship was required. Now even Christ our passover is sacrificed for us; when therefore we discern the Lord's body we eat his flesh and drink his blood, and this manifests that we have life in ourselves, or that we are partakers of Christ. For as naturally when we eat we partake of food which we swallow down, and it enters into our bowels; so, to pursue the type and figure, when we in eating and drinking discern the Lord's body we eat as unto the Lord, and worship and serve him, and when we tarry one for another we show that we are one people and one body.

Those that merely eat and drink without discerning the Lord's body are not partakers of this benefit, and receive not the health and blessing of Jesus, and are therefore weak and sickly, and many sleep or are deprived of the health and life of those who discern the Lord's body.

SECRET SOCIETIES.

What principle is there forbidding Primitive Baptists joining secret societies? Do they have any reason for their course in not joining them?

Answer. The type of the national Israel, a type of the church, is one. Israel was not allowed to make alliances with other nations, but was to dwell alone and not to be like other people.

Another is Jesus did nothing in secret.

Another is that none of the apostles give any intimation that any of them or believers in their day did such a thing: but on the other hand, they forsook all for Christ's sake.

Still another reason is, that believers are commanded to be separate from the world. How can two walk together except they be agreed? If one is joined to the world he becomes a partaker thereof. We should let our light shine and not put it under a bushel. Still another reason is that we should not swear.

The reason advanced for joining secret societies is love of money. A Baptist must have principle in him to make sacrifices for the truth, and not let money swerve him from the truth. A man who loves money more than he loves truth, that cannot endure the flatteries of the world, nor the temptation to make money—that does not prefer the peace of Jerusalem above money is not fit to be a Primitive Baptist.

One that loves his brethren truly would not offend them enough to join a secret society.

It has for years appeared to me that it is enough for one to be a member of the church of Jesus Christ, without going out to borrow anything from the world. Ye are complete in Christ wanting nothing.

These worldly secret societies have their chaplain and their worship. How can a Primitive Baptist join with them in that matter?

These societies will soon pass away, nor will they afford the relief promised. Trust in the Lord and do good and truly thou shalt be fed. God has promised to bless the labor of our hands. They that serve the Lord in their daily labor shall receive the blessing of the Lord.

HEALING.

The gift of healing is in the church. It does not refer to healing or curing head ache, or Pneumonia, or bodily pain, but healing of troubles in the church, removing old sores, fevers, or bad feelings, irritations, confusions, disorders, broken joints, halting, limping, and all manner of troubles in the church.

The most noted instance of that I have seen was recently at Middle Creek where the healing began and reached from member to member, from heart to heart, so that there was a wonderful healing. The ministry is used by the Lord to promote this healing. Where the word is faithfully preached, and gospel discipline is properly enforced, there is a wonderful healing of all their old sores, disease, troubles &c., distressing the church of God so much.

P. D. G.

ANSWER TO BROTHER GULLEY'S REQUEST.

I therefore, the prisoner of the Lord beseech you that ye walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called,
With all lowliness and meekness, with long-suffering, forbearing one another in love;

Endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace.

There is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling;

One Lord, one faith, one baptism,
One God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all.

But unto every one of us is given grace according to the measure of 'he gift of Christ.'—Eph. 4: 1-8

[As appears from the preceding letter of our dear brother J. P. Gulley, of Raleigh, N. C., requesting me, as far as I well can, to reproduce a discourse I delivered at Middle Creek on the 2nd Sunday of April 1889 on the above text, I will now, Jesus being my helper, attempt to do so. But it should be borne in mind that memory fails to reproduce what was there delivered. I never write a sermon, nor a single note or head of one, nor memorize a word. Nor do I know when I arise what shall even be the first word of a discourse, nor what I shall say; but trusting to the giver of all good things, even to Jesus, I speak what is given me in that hour.

Again, the circumstances often accompanying an occasion of interest may arouse one to thoughts and expressions born of the moment and the occasion which best fit that time and scene, but which can never be recalled. Such was that momentous occasion when the touch of divine power was bringing the church so recently torn and rent unto visible unity and great love and peace.]

In the text quoted above Paul appears as the prisoner of the Lord Jesus, not of man. A prisoner is under the power that holds and controls him, and cannot go beyond his power. Usually a prisoner is unwillingly held in unwelcome bounds and would gladly escape. But Paul could say not only do thyself no harm, we are all here; but he could say, most gladly do I suffer the loss of all things, and that I endure all things for the elect's sake that they may obtain salvation with eternal glory.

A dispensation of the gospel was committed unto Paul. There is power in a dispensation. It controls all under its authority. The dispensation of grace therefore held Paul under its glorious authority, so that there was a woe on him if he preached not the gospel. He was the prisoner not of man, but of the Lord Jesus, not arrested and held to answer for a crime, but bound to preach Jesus crucified and risen. While in the flesh he is in prison. This earth was his prison-bounds, eternity is his release and there is his liberty: but the way into this liberty is through this bondage.

The use of the ministry appears in Paul the apostle. For God had set in the church first apostles, secondarily prophets; and some evangelists, and some pastors, and teachers. They are not all apostles, nor prophets, but some of each. The apostles stand first in the church and have all the gifts. Every gift of the church is in an apostle, as the greater includes the less; but the less does not include the greater; hence a pastor or teacher, nor even a prophet, can do all the work or fill the place of an apostle. Every gift was in Paul but not in any man since his day, as it was in him. Nor can the apostles ever have any successors, for as apostles they are not dead. While as men they are dead, yet in their office as apostles their word is as good and authoritative today as it ever was. They occupy 12 thrones now judging the 12 tribes of Israel. Therefore to say that the apostles have successors is a mere myth or notion of men. Who to-day has the marks of an apostle? Who can raise the dead, or speak with tongues, or heal the sick, or smite with blindness? None. These things belong alone to the apos-ties.

What is the use of these gifts? "For the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ." &c., The body of Christ is the church, and the growing or building up of that body is until all come to the stature of a man and the size of a perfect man, no more to be tossed about by winds of false doctrines by the sleight of men and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive. Then the ministry is to feed the flock of God which he has purchased with his own blood, and to so establish them in the faith and doctrine of truth that wolves or deceivers shall not subvert them by their false teachings.

In a church there are various gifts which are helps, governments and servants for perfecting the body.

Every church needs a pastor or bishop, which office is good, and the work of a bishop is a good work. The pastor should be blameless in his own conduct, and should keep himself pure, should know how to rule his own house, or he cannot (rule), no, take care of the church of God. A preacher must not rule or lord it over God's heritage, but he must take care of the church. You endeavor to take care of that which you highly value. If you are worthy of being a pastor of a church then you love the church and will care for it. Feed the flock of God which he hath purchased with his own blood, over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers. Feed them with good doctrine and wise reproofs of wisdom and instruction, taking the oversight not for filthy lucre but of a ready mind. Deacons also must be blameless and serve tables in the sense of distributing to the necessities of saints, and with carefulness see that all are in peace and health or able to eat. For where there is trouble among brethren a deacon full of faith and the Holy Ghost will labor to remove troubles among brethren, and promote peace so that all may eat. Nor should deacons forget to see that the pastor of the church is not neglected in the ministrations. A good deacon would like to visit his pastor and see that he is not lacking in the supply of food and raiment.

Nor should any member of the church consider that there is no work of faith and labor of love, no duty for him or her to perform. There is a use for every member of the body, and they should all work together. The hand cannot say to the eye I have no need for thee. So in the church every member should enquire of the Lord, "What wilt thou have me to do?" Let the members contribute of their worldly substance as the Lord has prospered them, so that the deacons may have in their hands that which will supply the needs of their pastor and those destitute. Let each member pray for the peace of Jerusalem or the church. Let each one seek to so live that he will give no offence to the brethren. Let each one be so at the feet of the brethren that they all may serve one another, and thus to-gether strive for the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. Then the pastor shall be esteemed as worthy of double honor, the deacons shall purchase to themselves a good degree and great boldness in the faith, holding the mystery of the faith in a pure conscience, and every member shall be as those going up from the washing bearing twins, and Joseph shall appear as a fruitful vine running over the wall, and there shall be no breaking in or going out, nor any complaining in our streets, and the people in such a case shall be happy for God is thus manifested to be their Lord.

Observe the entreaty of the apostle to the brethren, "I beseech you that ye walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called," not merely that to which ye are called. The calling wherewith, or the power and glory by which ye are called, ye are to walk worthy of. How? By walking with all lowliness and meekness and long-suffering. It is one thing to be low-minded or given to things that are corrupt, but another and a blessed thing to have lowliness of mind, and meekness of spirit in the sense of not seeking things of the world, but seeking those things which be above.

Salvation is not in the things which the carnal mind considers high things, but in the things which the world considers as low. The mind itself must be lowly.

To forbear in love and to forgive each other, if any man have a quarrel against any; to be at the feet of the brethren, and to prefer others to self; to seek those things which be above is to walk worthy of this high vocation. How different that is from the world. While the carnal or natural mind considers it right to be exalted and puffed up, and full of ambition, it is the mind of those called with a holy calling to be meek and lowly, and love one another, and forgive one another; to confess their faults one to another, and pray one for another that they may be healed. This is the healing received in the gifts of healing.

Endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. There is a unity of the spirit in the bond of peace. There is a unity of the Spirit. God is One God, his cause is one, his church is one, his people are one; "One Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and a Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all. For there is one body and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling." What a unity, oneness. This is not a union. That might signify several joined together as a partnership, a joint stock company; but this is unity, oneness, one all the way and forever.

Unity embraces the entire church of God chosen in Christ Jesus before the world began, and grace given them in him, and he their head and life, their husband and surety must bear all their sins in his own body on the tree. This is the blessed oneness, unity, embracing all the redeemed who are quickened together with Christ Jesus.

In development each one is to endeavor to make this unity manifest, and all are to strive together for this unity of the spirit in the bond of peace. What a bond we are under to keep the peace, a bond of love and glory to be in peace, and walk in truth. Thus we prove we are born of God.

It must be that God's teaching is one and perfect, his work is one and perfect, his work is one and complete. They shall be all taught of God, and great shall be their peace, because of the unity.

As one body the body of a man has many members, but they dwell in one body, and are controlled by one life or power, one will, so that what benefits one member must also be good for all, and what harms one member injures all the body; or if one member be in pain all the body feels it; even so what is done to the least member is done to Jesus who is the life of the body and its head. In as much as ye have done this unto the least one ye have done it unto Jesus.

Hence we should seek to dwell together in unity. How good and how pleasant this is. There can be no peace nor prosperity in a church when all do not dwell in love. No back biting, envy, malice, nor railing can dwell in the church in unity. If ye therefore do rail at or hate one another ye shall be devoured by the sword.

Seek the same things of peace and truth whereby one may edify another. Endeavor to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace.

Endeavoring; not that you have accomplished and finished this, but it is that which you should seek to do. Striving together. How good this is. You think much more of one who endeavors, tries, than one who does not. You have two little boys James and John. You send them both out to plant corn. James does not try because he says he cannot do as well as you require him to do; but John knowing that he cannot plant corn well, yet tries his utmost to do as you tell him, just because you have told him; now which do you approve of? You have much more love for the conduct of John, because he endeavored to do as you told him and as was in his heart to do.

We may not always do this as well as we desire or should desire, but each should seek to do so. Do you know what trouble your wrongdoing may bring on others? When one does wrong it is sure to hurt somewhere. For there is one body, that which hurts the least member pains the whole body, and that which does good to the least member does good to the whole body.

The one Lord Jesus saves one of his people as much as another and who saves them all, and who loves them all, for no man ever yet hated his own body. Therefore he that offends one of these little ones that believe in Jesus had better never have been born.

There is one faith, even the faith of God's elect, that was once delivered to the saints. This is that most holy faith that we should build on. It is that precious faith, such as Paul and Peter had, and it is born of God; for whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world, and this is the victory that overcometh the world even your faith, the gift of God. One baptism first preached by John the Baptist, in which Christ set forth his own death, burial and resurrection. For Jesus said, I have a baptism to be Baptized with, and how am I straitened until it be accomplished. This he said signifying what death he should die. He should be plunged under the waves of death, should be buried—should bear the sins of his people unto death, and should be raised from the dead, and appear in the resurrection by the blood of the everlasting covenant. When Jesus came to John the Baptist to be baptized of him, and went down into the water and was buried by baptism it was showing forth his own death and resurrection. When we are convicted of sin and feel the billows of guilt and the waves of death roll over us, and die to self-hope, and Jesus is revealed unto our faith as the Lord our righteousness, or when we believe in Jesus, the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth, then we are prepared for baptism in the name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Ghost, one God, and by baptism are buried or planted together with Christ into the likeness of his death, and are risen in newness of life, and having the answer of a good conscience we go on our way rejoicing.

This one blessed hope of our calling by one Father, who is in us all, makes us one people. Now we should endeavor to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. Each brother should seek to do this. Love to each other is the mark of brotherhood. Hereby shall all men know that ye are the disciples of Jesus.

If ye have love one to another.

The one blessed principle and power of salvation leads to this. The holy calling of God, not according to our works, leads to this. May the God of peace that brought again that great shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, lead you to this by working in you that which is well pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ, to whom be glory forever and ever, Amen.

ELDER P. D. GOLD, DEAR SIR:—
Please give your views of Genesis 3rd chapter, 15th verse; also 8th chapter of Luke and 27th verse. What is meant by casting out devils?

Your friend I hope,
W. H. CROOK.

Remarks.

“And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel.” Gen. 3:15.

What infinite wisdom and glorious power characterize all the work of God, and how far above man's works and ways are his ways. The serpent operates in man to show his enmity to God, and his cunning. In his subtlety he deceived the woman, and in sorrow she shall bring forth, and her desire shall be to her husband, and he shall rule over her. But Satan is cursed above cattle and above every beast of the field.

What a blessing is hid in the curse upon the woman. Her seed (Jesus) should bruise the serpent's head. Jesus shall destroy the works of the devil. Jesus is the seed of the woman, not the seed of man, not the corrupt stock of Adam. Behold a virgin shall conceive and bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name Jesus, for he shall save his people from their sins. Into the mystery of a birth we may not look. The mother in bringing forth children yields the fruit of her womb, and as it were her own life is given and reproduced. In pain and sorrow she travails and brings forth. But in the birth of Jesus the Son of the highest, what a profound mystery and what a joyful gift to man.

Satan stands up to slay Jesus, but he only bruises his heel. He cannot touch that eternal life. Christ is put to death in the flesh. It is in the flesh (the heel) that Jesus is bruised. But the power, the life, of Satan is bruised and destroyed.

The enmity between the serpent and the woman, and between the seed of each is implacable and can never be compromised. It is only in slaying the serpent that the enmity is destroyed. That enmity is in the carnal mind of man, that is in the fleshly mind.

The church represented by Eve, the mother of all living, in sorrow and travail of soul brings forth fruit unto Jesus. But when the man-child is born there is great gladness and joy. The misery is remembered no more by reason of this happy deliverance.

The desire of the church is unto Jesus, the husband and head of the church, and he loves her as he loves himself, and this fruit is unto holiness and the end is everlasting life. Also.

“And when he went forth to land, there met him out of the city a certain man, which had devils a long time, and ware no clothes, neither abode in any house, but in the tombs." Luke 8: 27.

A man possessed of devils. What a sad, wretched plight to be in. Do you ever notice what a number was possessed of unclean spirits when Jesus was on earth? Have you ever felt that you were one of that number? How the devils plagued this poor man. Have they ever tormented you? They certainly have me. No man could tame or bind this man, nor comfort him.—No righteousness of man can clothe one under the power of Satan. No bands nor influence of man can control him nor tame him.

A certain man met Jesus out of the city. This man was not fit to enter the city. He had no friend. His companions were devils. What mercy Jesus has to pity the man and cast out the devils. Then the man is clothed and found in his right mind and sits at the feet of Jesus. It is God's people under conviction that are thus plagued and tormented by devils.

What became of the devils? They besought Jesus that they might enter a herd of swine. Why enter swine? Because they are unclean. Devils do not want to dwell except in forbidden places.

What did the people there then think of this miracle? One would suppose they would have been delighted. No. They desire Jesus to depart from their coasts. Ungodly men neither love Jesus nor those out of whom he casts devils. They would lament the loss of some hogs or money far more than to rejoice at the works of Jesus. For this enmity is in the minds of the seed of the wicked one.

The work of Jesus is to cast out devils, and to give a sound mind. He has all power. A devil cannot go beyond what he suffers or wills.

By nature Satan works in all mankind. But when one is quickened or called to Jesus then Satan hinders, and the man is cast without the city, and all the power of Satan is exercised to prevent the sinner from coming to Jesus.

Obituary.

J. T. GARDNER

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—By the request of mother I will write the obituary of my only brother, J. T. Gardner, who was born Aug. the 26, 1853, and died Feb. 22 1889.

He was the son of Capt. W. T. Gardner and Elizabeth. He was married twice. Joe was not a member of any church. He like a great many of the young men loved the amusements of the world in his early days, but, thanks be unto God who works all things after the counsel of his own good will, he saw fit to show Brother what a poor helpless sinner he was, and he was in a great deal of trouble because of sin, but where he commences a good work he will carry it on. He led him on in paths he did not know, for such is the word of God. He told me he would give the whole world if he could understand the scriptures. He desired the prayers of God's children. He was a great sufferer for the last 12 months of his life, but never complained. He bore his affliction with great fortitude, and was satisfied for God's will to be done. He received a hope and feared no evil though he walked through the valley and shadow of death. He was a dear lover of the LANDMARK, and his Bible. The Primitive Baptists were the people he loved. He told me a short while before his death how much he enjoyed your and brother Edgerton's conversation at mother's, when he was sick. I could say a great deal more concerning his stay on earth, but he is gone from this world of trouble and pain to a better land we hope. It is hard for us to part with those that are near and dear to us, but we feel that all things work together for good. We have had a trying time for the last 4 years, mother and father have lost in about that time 4 grown loving children; 3 grand children. But weep not dear father and mother, for it will not be long before we too will be called on to try the realities of death, but may we like Paul be enabled to cry we have fought a good fight, we have finished our course: henceforth there is a crown of righteousness laid up for us, at the right hand of God.

JOHN W. GARDNER.

MRS. MARY L. BRYAN.

At the residence of her daughter, Mrs. C. S. Simmons, on the morning of March 26, 1889, Mrs. Mary L. Bryan, aged 63 departed this life, after a long and painful illness. She was married when quite young to a most kind and worthy gentleman, Mr. Joseph Bryan, Edgcombe, Co., N. C., with whom she passed many years of great happiness. She was a faithful, loving wife, and a most tender and devoted mother. She bore her great sufferings with patient fortitude and christian resignation. No murmur escaped her lips, but she was ever afraid of being a trouble to others. Nature had done much for her, and grace did more. Those who knew her intimately can testify to her nobility of character. She was a true friend, a kind neighbor, and after the Lord opened her heart she was a most devoted christian. Nothing but sickness or the most inclement weather prevented her from going to the house of God. Her bible was her chief delight, and for several years previous to her death, she read but little else. Her thoughts ever turned heavenward. The church and community have sustained a great and irreparable loss. We miss her kindling eye, the warm pressure of her hand and her loving words of welcome. Oh! how her children will miss her, for who can fill a mothers' place? To them we extend our heartfelt sympathies. Do not sorrow as those without hope. Her happy spirit freed from all earthly cares is now basking in the presence of her Saviour. So imitate her example that there may be an undivided family in heaven. She so lived that though dead she yet speaketh. "And I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, write. Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth; yea saith the Spirit that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."

VERLINDA MENIFEE. (col.)

ELDER P. D. GOLD, DEAR BROTHER:— I send to you the obituary notice of one of our dear mothers in Israel who was taken sick on the 14th of March, and departed this life on the 29th of the same, her age as best known to the writer was about 78 or 79 years. She had lived out her three score years and ten. She was the wife of Elder Menifee, colored, of Texas. She was a faithful, earnest, zealous and true Primitive Baptist for many years. She was sound in the faith, and loved the doctrine of predestination and election. Her husband has been dead for several years, and she filled his place as near as she possibly could in the church that he left destitute of a pastor. Though very old she had her right mind. She gave a great deal of instruction among the members of that church. She prayed one of the most heart feeling prayers the night that I arrived at her house I think I ever heard fall from the lips of any mortal. She heard of me through the columns of ZION'S LANDMARK, and she wrote me a letter to come out there, which I did. Her house was a home for me while in Texas. My expenses going and coming were $98 and she paid $77 and 27 cents of the money herself, which shows at once that she is willing to give up all her living to feed the poor in spirit, and all such as hunger and thirst after the milk of the word. She showed her faith by her works. She was well informed in the scriptures of divine truth, always had her conversation godly, and gave much thanks to the Lord for all his kind blessings bestowed on her.

She greatly desired me to move out there and take the care of the church at Mount Olive, was willing to divide her little portion of this world's goods with me, but for the love and care that I had for the churches of N. C., that I try to serve in my weak way I could not go out there to live. I feel sorrow to give up one so kind, but since it is the will of her God, let it be even as he has declared it, and may he resign my poor brethren's hearts to his perfect will, for he knows what is best, even in taking our dear sister. She was asked if she was ready to die, a short while before she died by a Missionary preacher, and she said yes, that she was, and had been for some time. It takes nothing but the power of the Almighty to prepare one for meeting that great monster death, and be willing to die.

The church to which she belonged near Victoria Texas stands alone, with no other church within a great distance of it, with no preacher to preach for them, and she now is shrouded in mourning, for the loss of this dear mother.

May God bless all of her bereaved children, and brethren and friends.

Your servant for Christ's sake,

It aims to contend for the mystery of the faith in God and the Father, Jesus the Mediator, and the Holy Spirit the blessed Comforter.

All lovers of Gospel truth are invited to write for it—if so impressed.

May grace, mercy, and peace be multiplied to all lovers of truth.

PART 2.

ON SELF-MADE MINISTERS.

As I have got so much to say of the Christian priest hereafter, I shall omit bringing their rear at present, and proceed in my enquiries to find out the time the gospel church got to heaping up to herself teachers having itching ears, &c. And in order to do this we must travel after the church from the place where I left her, and begin again at the day of the great change made in her situation by Constantine, in her being protected and established by the Laws of this emperor about the year 323.

And upon our setting out I want you to observe the cause named by the Holy Ghost, that gave eyes to Paul to foresee why they should heap up these teachers; namely, they would become so that they could not endure sound doctrine. This would put them upon heaping up teachers after their own lust. Then there are two causes—lust, and not liking sound doctrine. These were the causes why the church got to making preachers. Now I have given you my reasons why the church did not make them for the first 300 years. Then when Constantine had established Christianity by law, and it was thereby declared that it should be the religion of the Roman people, or the law protected the Christians against persecution, certainly it produced a great change in the external affairs of the Christian church; so much so, that what follows will be but a faint picture. He proceeded after her establishment to erect the most sumptuous and splendid churches for the worship, of the finest and polished architecture; and settled by law for the first time salaries on the Christian ministry. Here it was that Christian Sabbath was first established by law, instead of the seventh day or Jewish Sabbath. Thus the British nation received the christian Sabbath of the Romans, for Britain was at that time a Roman province; and we have received it from the British nation, and that is the way we came by the Christian Sabbath instead of the Jewish Sabbath; and thus we keep the first day of the week, instead of the day God ordained. Nor is there any proof in the scripture for such a change of the Sabbath; for although it was called the Lord's day, because he on that day arose from the dead, yet it is no where proved that God, or Christ, or the apostles, authorised it to be thus changed. Then it was so done by this emperor without divine authority. Thus by Constantine taking the church into his imperial favor, he of course claimed the right of regulating her concerns; and so he changed and turned the whole frame of the gospel church, and all that had appertained to her for 300 years, upside down. Instead of imperial power now being against her, it is now her protector; and instead of persecution, fire and sword now being the portion of her cup, it was a flowing bowl of protecting laws and princely favor. Instead of poverty and confiscation of goods, now riches and salaries for the ministers by law; for wandering in the woods, dens, and caves, and worshipping God in secret in rags and skins with fear of the loss of life, sumptuous edifices in the grandest style, with the finest gowns were prepared for the followers of the Lamb to bow the knee in. Church members were honored and preferred to the first offices of state; ministers of the cross were revered as the nobles of the earth, clad in silk and velvet; salaries, riches and honor now flow freely into their pockets, and of course ambition and pride into their hearts and leanness into their souls. The ministers of the cross and members of the church now became brothers to the emperor, the queen and empress mother became sisters in the church and sisters to the clergy; generals, captains, lords, dukes, and commons, profess honor and defend the Christian cause. Was not this a fine time to gender lust in the hearts of the clergy and love of money, pride and honor? Was not here fine and great inducement for men to become professors of religion, and for men to become preachers to obtain a large salary and honor in the bargain? Was not this a great inducement for the pagans and pagan priests to turn their coats and jump in judgment with the emperor, and thus obtain his sunshine, have their purses bloated with gold, and have brothership of all the noble court of the emperor? But alas, alas, sad downfall of the Christian church; for it will take her 1260 years to have this wound cured, according to the Revelation of St. John. This one wrong step paved the way for men-made teachers and the blasphemy of anti-Christ and all the abominable errors of the scarlet whore and her harlot daughters. Sad proof that an over zeal and the unhallowed hands of statesmen have nothing to do with religion, for it is sure to produce a corrupt ministry and this is the leading cause to all other corruption and death in the church of God. For had Constantine repealed all persecuting laws, and protected all subjects in equal rights, and left religion to have stood upon its own intrinsic merits, all would have been well. For if religion be of God, let God and his people take care of it, and not statesmen; for if of God it does not need men's laws for its support, as is fully shown by 300 years of its progress in the world; if of men it cannot be the duty of statesmen to support imposition and hypocrisy in the world. So then statesmen and laws either to enforce religion, or to say what shall or shall not be a man's religion, have nothing to do with the matter; for they should only know men as citizens and subjects of government, and not as professors of this or that religion, provided such a religion does not destroy the peace and happiness of civil society, of which they have cognizance. For religion is a secret between man and his maker, with which law makers have nothing to do; and he who meddles with the consciences of men is a tyrant and an usurper of the dominion of God.

Now when the sunbeams of princely favor, money, honor, popularity, grandeur, titles and pomp were conferred on the ministry and Christian church she of course became proud, high minded, wealthy and honorable in this high station; wealth you know is one of the roots of pride, and pride is lust and a lust of the basest and meanest sort, and abhorred by God and all good men. Here then you see the very cause pointed out by Paul, her lust of pride, honor, wealth, titles, pomp, show, and parade; all these spring from wealth, while wealth produces in addition to these covetousness of more, and ambition still for higher honor, until they scaled the pinnacle of heaven and dethroned God out of his church and usurped the title of Lord God to the Pope, Christ's vicar on earth, Generalissimo of all the army of saints, and took possession of the keys of the church, hell, heaven, and purgatory; and that no man should buy or sell, or go in or out of either, without paying toll to his holiness. Paganism, that had for ages been the religion and pride of the Roman world, was now dissolved and sunk into contempt and insignificance. The zealous prince Constantine employed all his resources, genius, authority, laws, engaging charms, munificence and liberality, to efface the long standing superstitious paganism, and enforce and propagiate Christianity in every part of the Roman world. For this emperor full of zeal, by edicts restores every thing to the Christian church of which she had been deprived, indemnifies persons that had suffered, honors the preachers, gives commands to his governors to promote the gospel, erects churches sumptuous and grand in all the provinces. His mother Helena also aids by her acts of benevolence in the support of the gospel. Thus religion assumed a prosperous external and profitable appearance to preachers to get honor. Those preachers in populous cities and towns were exalted to a pitch of grandeur and style by those salaries of princely endowments settled on them by law.

ELDERS GOLD AND LESTER, BRETHREN IN CHRIST:—If I am worthy to claim the relation with you. I have an impression to write something about the dealings of grace, and how good I hope the Lord has been to me in bringing me out of darkness, and showing his kindness unto me. I was born in Floyd county, Va., Jan. 1st, 1850. I was married to Stokely Martin Jan. 22nd, 1871. I was brought up among the Missionaries, trained to go to Sunday schools, and to hear the Missionaries preach. I joined them at about 13 years old. I thought I was right, and was satisfied: nothing did then trouble me. There was a big meeting going on and I was pulled down to the mourner's bench, and they came around and talked so they got me scared, and when that was off I thought I was changed, and after I was married my husband was of Primitive Baptist belief (not a member) and I would go with him to hear them preach, but did not like to hear them. He would ask me how I liked the preaching, and I would tell him that I did not like to hear them at all, and he would say he believed they were right. He talked to me about the Old Baptists. I would turn away from him and scorn them, for I thought that I never could stand it to be an Old Baptist, and leave all of my folks. They were all Missionaries, and I thought they were right.

It looked so nice to go to the Sunday school and say my verses, and sing the Sunday-School songs: it was all that I studied about, and it was because I had not been changed from nature to grace. When I felt that change I did not have any more use for the Sunday-Schools, neither for the Sunday-School songs, it looked like that I hated them. I could not bear to hear them sung. I felt like they had ruined me, and felt like I had scorned good people. When I felt my sins I was at preaching, brother Cassell was preaching. He said the Baptists had much love for one another. It looked like that sounded the loudest to me of any preaching I had ever heard in my life. It got all over me in a minute. I never had such feelings in my life before, and knew that I did not love the members of the church that I belonged to, and I felt so bad that I wanted to get off to myself.—When preaching broke up my husband came to me and said, how did you like the preaching to-day. I was so full that I could not answer him, and did not want him to know it, seeming that my heart would burst, and we went home, and I would talk about something else, to keep him from saying any thing about the preaching, and he got his bible and sat down to read it, and I listened to him awhile, and got full. I got up and walked from him, and cried out, what shall I do, and felt so bad, thinking I was lost and ruined forever. I can't tell half how bad I felt. I did not feel fit to ask the Lord to have mercy on me.

In a short time after this I was taken down sick, and was lying on the bed, and thought I was going to die: it looked like that I was sinking down, and it was shown to me that I was wrong, and the church that I joined was wrong, and I got so that I could speak. Afterward I cried out and said, I have got something to tell. My husband said, tell it to me, and I told him I did not care who knew it, feeling I wanted the world to know it, and next morning my mother-in-law came to see me, it looked like I wanted to talk with her. She was a Primitive Baptist, and I hated for her to know it. I told her to sit down by me, and asked her to pray for me. She said she would, and said for me to pray for myself. It looked like that would break my heart, for I could not pray, and I told them I wanted to see Elder Cassell, and my husband said he would go after him. I told him he need not go for he would not come to see such a wretch as I was. I felt like I had committed the unpardonable sin, and felt like if I was sent to hell it was no more than just, and felt like I was the worst creature in this world; but thought the Lord would do just with all his creatures. I wanted to fall on my face and beg him, but did feel unworthy of it, and felt like I was cast off, and thought the Lord had forsaken me, and I did not feel like I had a friend in this world. Nothing was any pleasure to me. I wanted to be alone in some lonesome place, and felt like the bed was too good for me to lie upon, and as I was lying on it one night there was a beautiful light shone around me. I felt like I could almost fly, and felt like the Lord had pardoned my sins, and thought my troubles were done. It looked like I wanted to see some of the Baptists and talk with them, and in a few days one of them came to see me. I was so afraid they would say something to me about it. I was afraid to talk with them about it, and was afraid I was deceived, and thought I never would tell it: but I loved them and never could tell the love I had for them, and wanted to hear them preach.

It was shown to me that the Primitive Baptists were the true church, I felt like I wanted to be with them, but felt so little, I thought I was not worthy to be with such good people as they are. I went to hear them as soon as I got well, and it looked like I wanted to tell them my feelings but was afraid that I was deceived, and thought I never would tell it, and went to my brother's one day, and his wife asked me about it, and I told her my feelings. She asked me if I had ever told it before. I told her that I had not. She said I would tell it again, and on my way home felt sorry that I had said any thing about it, and was afraid I was deceived, thought I never would tell it any more, and felt so unworthy I tried to pray to the Lord to show me whether I was right or not. It appeared to me that I ought to tell it to the church, then my mind was the next meeting to tell it, and when I went to meeting, and it looked like it was so I could not tell what the Lord had done for me, and went home and was troubled so because I did not talk: it looked like I could not bear it, and thought if the Lord would spare my life until the next meeting I would tell my little hope and felt like it was so little it would not do to tell. The next meeting I went and the church sat and they called for members, and I was afraid to go and meeting broke, and my feelings were not to leave there without talking, and sister Philpot come to me and said, don't you want to talk, and I said, I have staid away as long as I can, and she said that is enough, and the church was called together, and I went up and told my feelings and was received into the church and felt like I had done right to join them, and felt like they were God's people.

It was on Saturday before the third Sunday in August 1877. But there was no impression to write anything until July 1888. Now it presses on my mind so that I am bound to write and feel like I want every body to know how I was lead astray, and know how much I mourned about it. I have lost many a night's sleep grieving because I joined the Missionaries and was satisfied, but the blessed Lord showed me the right way, and feel like I wanted to follow him. I have been afflicted about six years and have not had scarcely any good health, and am seldom able to go to my church meetings. It grieves me because I can't go. My heart is with them. I am just now getting over a spell of sickness, and have got so I can walk about the house.

I thank my good Lord he has raised me up again. While I was in that low state of health I viewed the loveliest place I ever saw. I was heard to exclaim and say, that beautiful place he has gone to prepare. I did not feel like I wanted to stay here any longer. I am so afflicted I don't feel like staying here long, but feel willing to go at the Lord's appointed time. The Lord will bring his children home: he knows when and how to call them all. The powers of darkness can never keep one of them away from him. The Lord having this seal, he knoweth them that are his, and O how thankful we ought to be towards him who created us.—Then as David said, "Bless the Lord O my soul for his goodness, for his mercy endureth forever." Let all within me bless his holy name for his unspeakable gifts towards the children of men.

May the blessing of God be with his people everywhere. Then let us pray with and for one another, and for the prosperity of Zion, is the prayer of your sister in Christ, in hope of eternal life, ISREBELL B. V. MARTIN.

—————
"FOR HE IS GOOD."

"O give thanks unto the Lord FOR HE IS GOOD; for his mercy endureth forever. Let the Redeemed of the Lord say so; whom he hath redeemed from the hand of the enemy."—Ps. 107: 1, 2.

No doubt the dear readers of ZION'S LANDMARK are familiar with the above Scripture. It is the language of David the man after God's own heart, and as he was a man after God's heart it seems he was in possession of a greater degree of praise than any of the prophets or apostles. For sometime this Scripture has been resting with some sweetness on my mind therefore I have concluded to write a letter on it for the consideration of your readers if blessed with light, for this whole Psalm is replete with comfort and precious thoughts for those whom he hath redeemed from the hand of the enemy.

1st. He says, "O give thanks unto the Lord for he is good." It is evident that before we can sincerely give thanks unto Him we must possess a spirit of thankfulness. There must necessarily be something to thank him for. And before we can render proper thanksgiving and adoration that is justly due Him we must possess the same spirit David did. And now as we are in possession of the spirit of thanksgiving why ought we to thank him, "because he is good."

2nd. How do we know "he is good." The Scriptures say "he is good." Our experience teaches us "He is good." While in nature's darkness his goodness preserved and protected us, and when He "delivered us from the power of darkness" his goodness was clearly manifested to us. We are often made to say, "Surely goodness and mercy have followed me all the days of my life." Then dear brethren and sisters do we not well remember the pit from whence we were taken, the wormwood and the gall which we drank, and the deep anguish of soul when we were surging as the troubled ocean, as the man that possessed the legion of devils seeking rest and finding none, by our own efforts, but only in a crucified Redeemer. Then we are brought to the end of our own strength, and then Jesus is revealed to us the Chief among ten thousand and the one altogether lovely; then we can exclaim with David, "For He is good and his mercy endureth forever; and in the language of the Poet we say and realize,

"For He is good, immensely good,
And kind are all His ways."

Goodness is an attribute that belongs only to God. In Him is all goodness and perfection, while poor mortal man is imperfection and his goodness is but as "filthy rags." David in this chapter after ascribing goodness unto the Lord tells of his wonderful workings in bringing his people who sat "sat in darkness and in the shadow of death being bound in affliction and iron to a city of habitation." His wonderful and almighty power was displayed in delivering them from Egyptian bondage and leading them forth by the right way to a haven of rest. They had "wandered about in the wilderness, hungry and thirsty and their soul fainted in them. Then they cried unto the Lord in their trouble and he delivered them out of their distresses." My dear brethren and sisters is not your experience here told you, you wandered about in the wilderness and desired the most secluded, solitary spot you could find. You did not only crave or desire to be secluded from all created things, but this solitary way seemed dismal and desolate to you. Then you hungered and thirsted for relief, for repose, for the given rest, (which is a boon to every way-worn traveler.) Then you cried unto the Lord in your trouble and he delivered you out of your distresses. You have realized there is no other source of help but before you obey the command of the Lord; "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest." Oh how sweet is this rest to a weary soul. You did not procure this rest by your own efforts, or by trying to keep the law as the Arminians endeavor to make you believe. Jesus plainly says, I will give you rest, and anything that is worked for is not given, for anything worked for requires a compensation for services rendered; therefore the Son of God was too wise, too just, too good to require something of poor, dead, fallen man when he knew he was utterly unable to accomplish it, but when we were without strength He died for us; and when there was no eye to pity, no arm to save, His own arm brought salvation. Now dear brethren and sisters, as we have been brought through deep waters, fiery trials, and have evidence of deliverance from the power of darkness and translated into the kingdom of God's dear Son, let's heed the admonition of David, "O give thanks unto the Lord for he is good, for his mercy endureth forever. Let the redeemed of the Lord say so, whom he hath redeemed from the hand of the enemy." Then again

David exclaims, "O that men would praise the Lord for his goodness and for his wonderful works to the children of men." David thought it was comely to praise the Lord, for he had felt the power of his wonderful works, and also all God's children in all ages have felt the working of his mighty power in them, also the visible demonstration of his power has been seen by them in his providential dealings. Ah, wonderful indeed is the work of the Holy Spirit in quickening into life those who are dead in sins. His work is always right and always effectual. He never purposed to do a thing and could not accomplish it. He does not strain with all his power and woo and beseech sinners to yield and fall; but "He speaks and it is done, he commands and it stands fast."

I hope the dear readers of the LANDMARK will pardon me for saying something relative to myself, I don't want to burden their time by telling them of my imperfections, short-comings, and conflicts by the way, but before I close will tell them I have yet a great conflict in contending with the enemies of the soul, the world, flesh and the devil; and the greatest or worst foe is the flesh, or self. I have passed through a long dreary winter. Clouds have overshadowed me, and the Dispenser saw fit to let them remain for a great length of time, and in the language of David it seemed my feet had well nigh slipped and it seemed the Lord had forgotten to be gracious, and my cry was, "Restore unto me the joys of thy salvation; and uphold me by thy free Spirit;" and I believe he heard my cry.

During my darkness and barrenness of mind I moved to the South Western part of the State, near the community where I was raised where I was directed, I hope by the Spirit to go, seven or eight years ago soon after my first impressions to declare the unsearchable riches of Christ. Notwithstanding Jesus' language "A prophet is not without honor save in his country," would often pass through my mind, it seemed there was a drawing in this direction, and have found the Primitive Baptists here in this part of the State sound in faith, and practice, so far as I am able to judge, and withal very dear lovely Baptists. I have had the pleasure of attending some very good meetings, and it seems the Lord has remembered me in mercy and restored unto me the joys of his salvation, and thereby filling my poor heart with joy and gladness that is unspeakable and full of glory. How little, how unworthy I feel. How little like a servant of the Lord though I must cry aloud and spare not. Who is sufficient for these things? I have been called on by some friends and old acquaintances lately to visit isolated or out of the places or houses of worship where only a very few ever heard the Primitive Baptists preach. Some would say these are hard sayings, others seemed puzzled and astonished; while others openly confessed to the truth.

I believe God's servants ought to visit such places more than they do. When we are impressed to go let no trivial matters hinder us. We do not know but there are some at such places whom the Lord has prepared for the reception of the word. We know it is not in our power to communicate life to the dead, yet we are to declare the counsel of God which is a savor of life to some and a savor of death to others.

Now may the Lord enable all his little ones to give thanks unto Him for his goodness and manifold blessings they have received at his hands, may they always endeavor to walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing and render unto Him the praise due to his name. May the Lord bless you Brother Gold in your labor of love and may the strength of Israel's God sustain you. May the Lord Bless all his children. Remember unworthy me in your petitions. Yours in love,

P. H. JAMES.

ELDERS GOLD AND LESTER, DEAR BRETHREN IN CHRIST:—If one so poor and unworthy as I oft'times feel may claim the relationship with those I be lieve to be the people of the living and true God.

I have had some feelings sometime to write what I hope the Lord has done for my poor soul, though I feel somewhat embarrassed at this time. I was born in Henry Co. Va., on the 13th of May 1850. I was brought up by godly parents. My mother was a Primitive Baptist, my father believed in them but was not a member. They taught their children to be as truthful and honest as they could. My mother is still living, my father died June the 29th 1870. I thought I was as pious probably as most young folks. I delighted in music and dancing, and thought there was not much harm in it, but as I grew up I delighted in sin more and more, thinking I could reform before I died and that would be enough. I learned from a parable to use a few words of prayer on going to bed, asking the Lord to have mercy on me if I died before I awoke.

After growing up I was taken sick and thought I was going to die. My mother said to me one day, "Do you ever think of what will become of you if never get well. These words seemed to reach my heart. I told her I did and turned my face from her to hide my tears. I decided to lead a better life, but soon forgot all this and became more sinful than ever. I commenced to use profane language to the bitterness of my soul. I dreamed of being in torment. O how dreadful it was to me. I also dreamed of seeing the Lord come to me. I thought I would cease sinning and try to lead a better life.

I was married in the year 1871 and the care of a family was now resting upon me. My heart grew hard and my study about religion was not so strong as I thought it was before, and I seemed to get more wicked than ever before. I would read the Scriptures and saw therein no promise to the wicked. My wife joined the church in August 1877, and a dear old member said your wife "Wisdom is better than rubies; and all the things that may be desired are not to be compared to it."—Prov. 8: 11.

has left you. It seemed to fill my heart with woe, for I felt like I wanted to go with her, and tried to pray to the Lord to have mercy on me. Though I had never seen what a sinner I was before the Lord, but as I humbly hope at His appointed time he broke up the corrupt fountain of my heart and so enabled me to see what a sinner I was before him both by nature and by practice. I thought myself to be the worst creature in the world. It looked like I had committed the unpardonable sin, and that there was a better chance for any one than for me. I could not pray now: it seemed like a sin for me to try to pray. My prayers seemed to fall to the ground or not to rise above my head. I didn't know what to do, but did not want any one to know anything about it, and would go off and read so that none could see my tears, and would go to preaching but could not hide my tears there, would wish to be off to myself, feeling so vile. I could not think this was conviction having been such a sinner, and now my soul must go for my sins and believed it would be just if the Lord sent me into everlasting punishment, but I did not want to go there. One day I was at work in the field and a dear Old Baptist came along. I tho't I would talk to him about my feelings but felt so mean was ashamed to say anything to him about it, so I did not, and the more I tried to pray the worse my feelings were, it seemed like the time had been when there was a chance for me, but now it is too late. One night it seemed all hope was gone 'till in a dream I saw some of the most beautiful little lights arise from my bed and I arose saying, bless my great and glorious God. I felt like my sins were all gone. Next morning I felt like the burden was removed, but did not think it was religion, but did not feel like I would see any more trouble, but soon began to doubt. Something seemed to say, you are deceived. My heart became as it wore cold and hard and I wanted my sins back on me so that I could grieve, and thought that now my conscience was seared as with a hot iron, and I might sin and my conscience would not forbid it. I could not pray, mourn or grieve. It was like one said, "I mourned because I could not mourn, and grieved because I could not grieve." But at the Lord's appointed time it pleased him to reveal unto me his loving kindness when in great fear and trouble the Words came to me as if one had spoken to me saying, "Fear not, behold I bring you good tidings of great joy; for unto you this day a Savior is born;" this made me feel like a new creature: old things have passed away and all things seemed new. I wanted to tell God's people how I hoped the Lord had been with me, yet I was afraid I had been deceived.

One day at meeting a sister said to me after preaching, why did you not come and tell us some good news. I told her I was afraid I had nothing to tell. On my return home at one time the words came to me that I ought to be willing to follow the Lord through evil as well as good report. I was disobedient and felt so unfit to be with God's people. One night I had a dream, it was down in a small valley in which there were many stones: there was a lamp given to me and by the light of it I picked up some of them. A voice behind me called me. I turned and saw the most beautiful white stream I ever beheld; it was white as snow. I went across it in my bare feet and it did not feel cold, and on the top of a distant hill I saw my mother and went towards her. I awoke and if I ever enjoyed the presence of the Lord it was that day. Tongue can't tell my feelings for I tho't this meant that there was something for me to do, that I may see the error of the ways of sin before it is too late. If I am deceived in this matter I hope the blessed Lord will undeceive me. As concerning religion and the preaching of the gospel it is all of God, for the Lord calls whom he will, and without his mercies I can never enter into the heavenly Canaan. May grace, love and mercy from the Lord be with the children of Zion forever and ever.

Yours in tribulation,

STOKELY MARTIN

Lacey's, Henry Co., Va.,

ELDER P. D. GOLD, DEAR BROTHER:—It has been on my mind to write you on a subject which I know is of much importance to the household of faith and if indeed the Lord has given me an exercise to profit by his grace I offer what I believe by the spirit has been shown me, and "We cannot but speak the things we have heard and seen." We also write these things that ye might believe, but not to make God's children believe, for faith the operation and power of God accomplishes that.

The subject of preaching is the subject I would present to the readers of the LANDMARK and I also hope that the LANDMARK may be seen in what I am about to write. The false idea that is so far from the truth that preaching saves souls eternally from their sins, and preachers are so many soul-savers going out to save sinners seems not only to be false but blasphemous, and I believe it is an abomination in the sight of the Holy One of Israel. Such a position is thieving in its nature, for it would reach forth its hand and pluck the glory from Jesus, the Saviour of his people, and the only Saviour which God has revealed from heaven: and Peter said there is no other name given under heaven whereby we must be saved. That there is a salvation in preaching we all admit, but it is that salvation that pertains to time and may be called a temporal salvation, and Paul calls it a great salvation; therefore it is a salvation of comparison, or may be compared, but the eternal salvation of the elect of God through Christ alone is an incomparable salvation which is from God only. He is the author of that, and it has no conditions only such as have already been complied with by Christ the ancient of days and the angel of the covenant. Hence he says there is none other.

We hear such expressions that certain ones will not be satisfied unless they can carry ten thousands of souls to Christ, and say they have saved them, and that the saddest words they ever heard a preacher say were that they had never saved a soul. If they should be with me, if indeed I am a preacher of the gospel of Christ, they would have to wear a crape as an evidence of deep mourning, for I will take the liberty to say that I have been trying to preach about nine years, and if I should preach until I am hoary headed I do not have any idea that all the preaching I have ever done, or ever would or could do, would ever save one single soul from the condemnation of the law of God. If God had not according to his grace saved sinners himself there would be no gospel, for this is the gospel telling what the Lord of life and glory has done, not what I am going to do. Those characters show their blindness and dead works by what they profess to do.

I have good reason to believe they know not God, nor the gospel, or they would not talk such malicious prattling. Paul said, "For after that in the wisdom of God the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe." He also said, "For I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to the Jew first, and also to the Greek." God's children who are taught of him have learned of Christ the difference between the gospel and preaching the gospel. But these work-mongers have never seen any difference, or they are too bent on their delusive way to acknowledge it.

We know there is a salvation in preaching, for we trust we have experienced it in two senses. 1st, while we preach certain things given us of God we see the righteousness of it, and we walk therein and are saved from going astray by the warning voice given us of God. Hence said Paul, "Both save thyself and them that hear thee." But we must not forget that Paul recognized the fact that Timothy was already saved eternally, for he had also written Timothy, "To him who hath saved us and called us with a holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace given us in Christ Jesus before the world began." When the true gospel is preached there is a deliverance in

it. I know I have been bound and almost ready to perish as a christian, and the hearing the word of God enabled me to feed upon it, the shackles were loosed and I could go, I could sing and feel to rejoice in the deliverance God has sent by preaching. Often by preaching we are stirred up to a sense of duty, and to obedience which we call salvation of a temporal nature. We know also that we would have often strayed into the paths of disobedience but for the warning voice given us of God in the gospel of his Son.— Thus he says in this sense to the heirs of grace hear and your souls shall live. If we live after the flesh we shall die, but if we through the Spirit mortify the deeds of the body we shall live.— The life I understand to be that life we live here and our present well being in a gospel sense.

2nd. We also know the effect of true gospel preaching, that when it is done the church is saved from worldliness. The word of the gospel years ago in the division among the Baptists was but the sword which Jesus said would be. "I came not to send peace but a sword." The word of God is said to be sharper than any two-edged sword, dividing asunder soul and spirit, joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart.

When the watchmen lifted up their voice against the iniquitous doings in Zion there was salvation in it, and some were saved as by fire. The gospel preached in its purity at that time separated the chaff from the wheat and they went out from us. The church to-day is blessed with the same gospel and with vigilant watchmen who cry aloud and spare not.

The innovation attempted in the church has poor success when an eagle-eyed watchman upon the wall gives the alarm, and the certain sound. Then Israel prepares for the battle, and there is deliverance in that; for they are thus delivered from their enemies. Take us the foxes, the little foxes which spoil the vines, while the grapes are tender. The grapes are thus preserved by looking after the foxes, but that don't make the grapes, for Jesus says, he is the vine, my Father is the husbandman. So giving the alarm don't make grapes as the seduced religious world preach and teach. The scriptures teach that the dragon cast a flood out of his mouth, and tried to destroy the woman, so she was preserved by the earth opening her mouth and taking in the flood. How? While the church was to be chaste and pure, the earth, the so-called churches received the flood of ungodly men who made us afraid, and they could hold to all their institutions and do as they pleased, and hold membership with them. So we see how our God can make the wrath of men to praise him and the remainder of wrath he restrains.

The church has the gospel preached all the time, and she has experienced a salvation in it too, and does until this day. There is a salvation then in preaching. The church stands separate from the world and all her institutions, and will continue to do so, for God has ordained the preaching and also the effects, and we are glad to know that what the world calls the gospel or preaching the gospel it has failed them; but the church has no need to complain: she still holds and can hold her views steadfast, as from the first, that there is a salvation in preaching which has been manifested to her. Yours in hope,
W. LIVELY.

EXPERIENCE.

ELDERS GOLD AND LESTER, DEAR BRETHREN:—I was requested by sister Lucy Lundy, when out at the Mountain Association last fall, to write out my experience and have it published in the LANDMARK; but feeling my unworthiness and inability to do so, I have deferred until now. I was born in Carroll county, Va., April 20th, 1867, and have been raised by Primitive Baptists. My father and mother both belonging to the church, and I thought I believed their doctrine, salvation by grace unconditional and unmerited by anything good that the sinner can do, but now I realize the fact that I was mistaken, for when I was very young I would have serious thoughts about death and eternity, and thought if I was a good boy when I died the Lord would bless me and take me to heaven; if not he would send me to hell. I imagined the Lord kept a memorandum of all that I did, and if my good deeds over balanced my bad ones he would save me. I remained in this condition until I was in my 18th year when my father sold out in Carroll and moved to Tazewell county, Va., where we now reside. After we reached our new home the people all being strangers to me I became dissatisfied and got into a condition that I did not care for myself nor any one else, only the worst set of boys that I could find. Things moved on this way for about two years, when the Presbyterians had a revival in their church. I got to attending it regularly day and night. At last I thought I would quit my way of living and join the church, as it is very popular in this part of the country to belong to the church, or a man-made organization called a church; so I went up to the mourner's bench where they would talk to me. They asked me if I wanted to be saved, to which I replied that I did. They told me that Christ had died for me, and had done all he could to save me, and now it depended me to do my part.

Dear brethren, I have never found out what my part is, but long since been taught by the word of inspiration that it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that showeth mercy. Then how can these wolves in sheep clothing and devils transformed as angels of light count the precious blood of Christ by which we are cleansed an unholy thing, and substitute man's works in the place of it, whose condemnation now of a long lingereth not, and their damnation slumbereth not. I joined the church and for Baptism had a little water sprinkled on my forehead by Mr. M. W. Dogett. My joining the church did not kill my desire for worldly pleasure, and it was not long before there was a party in the neighborhood which I attended. When I came home some one asked if I danced to which I replied that I did. Father remarked that we were required to let our light shine. At this time I began to have some very serious thoughts about joining a society that was not the church, and being sprinkled, which led me to the bible to see if I could not find something that would justify me; but instead of finding something to justify me I found where Christ said, "Woe unto you scribes and pharisees, hypocrites, you compass land and sea to make one proselyte, and when you make him you make him two fold more the child of hell than ye are yourselves." If ever I viewed myself a lost sinner it was then. I thought that I had committed the unpardonable sin wilfully and knowingly. I got into such a condition that when I laid down at night it appeared to me that I could see the flames of hell, and that I would be there.

Oh my soul, did I feel like I could do anything? No, no. I felt like it was a sin for me to try to pray, but I could not keep from begging the Lord to have mercy, mercy on me, a poor lost and undone sinner, without God and without hope in the world. I remained in this condition about six months when my burden wore away to some extent, but I could claim no hope. Time moved on with me about this way, until the summer of 1886, when one day I was meditating over my lost condition when the words of Christ's sermon on the mount came into my mind which read, "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness for they shall be filled." I have never been able to describe my feelings at that time. Every trouble and doubt was gone, and my soul was filled with love and praise to God. I could claim Jesus as my saviour, the chiefest among ten thousand and altogether lovely. I could see it was for his works, not my own, that I was justified. I stayed out of the church until the fourth Sunday in August 1887, when I went to an arm of Valley church, and told part of what I have here written, and was received and baptized by Elder J. R. Sparks. Since then I have had many doubts and fears, but I feel to trust him who has said, I will never leave nor forsake thee. He alone can open the eyes of the blind, and unstop the ears of the deaf.

I will close my imperfect sketch by asking you if you think it worthy a place in your good paper to correct and publish, if not all will be well with me, the least of all saints, if one at all,

E. E. LUNDY.

Thompson's Valley, Va.

ELDER P. D. GOLD:—I have been impressed to write to you for sometime, but when I would take up my pen the thought would come to me that I had better wait awhile; for I feel so imperfect, and often like saying that surely I am deceived after all; but my whole trust is in the Lord, for I know that if I am saved it is by his love and mercy alone; for in me dwelleth no good thing, (that is in my flesh.) It makes me feel very lonely to be here where there is not a single Baptist at all except myself, and I know that I never wanted to hear preaching as bad in my life as I do now, but the LANDMARK which comes duly twice a month is a welcome visitor to me, besides it is a great comfort, it gives me the greatest of pleasure to read the many precious lines from Brothers and sisters from almost all portions of the country. Oh how I do wish some of our good preachers would visit us and preach for us some times. Brother Gold, Mrs. Covington was telling me that she was expecting you down to see her sometime this spring, and I hope the time is not far off when you will pay the expected visit and preach for us down here. It would be a great pleasure to me if some of the traveling preachers would find their way down here, and stop and preach a sermon or two at least. I saw in the LANDMARK of March the 1st of where Brother Adams spoke of his preaching in some sections above here where there were no Baptists, and said he would preach in other places if it was desired, and I would be more than glad to have him visit us, and would have written to him before now, but I did not know his post office address. Will you be pleased to say to him and others of traveling ministers through the LANDMARK that I would be glad if they can make it suitable to visit us in this destitute portion of country.

Brother Gold, will you please give your views on John the 12th chapter 31: 32. verses, I was looking in the Testament this evening, and my eyes fell on the words, and I would like to have your views on them. I have been so scattering in my writing I am afraid that you can scarcely understand what I have written. I have often thought if I could write like others that I would write many long letters for publication, but my education is so limited, and my mind is often scattering.

Remember me in your prayers.

Your sister in hope,

ALICE A. BARNARD.

EXPERIENCE.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—Feeling very feeble this morning I feel impressed to write some of the dealings of the Lord with me, if not deceived. I have heard sermons and thought about death from a child, but at times I thought I was as good as any body, until I was brought to see my condition, and what a sinful being I saw myself to be.

One day feeling very bad I fell across the bed. It seemed to me I had not been there more than five minutes before I feel asleep, and I dreamed I fell in a pit and it was as deep as a house is high. There I was made to ask for mercy to spare me to get out and would do better. There I felt like I wanted to do something, if I only knew what to do. There I was made to give up all confidence in myself, and saw if I was saved it was an act of mercy of God, and if I was damned it was just. I went on for sometime in a fearful condition, and I dreamed the same dream again and my trouble grew worse and tongue and pen can never describe my feeling, what I passed through while under conviction, if it was conviction. Sometimes my troubles would wear off and when it started it would rise before me as mountains ready to crush me to the ground. I will mention another dream or vision that appeared to me. A mountain stood in front of me and I was placed there to climb it, and it was as straight in the air as the walls of a house, and I thought it was made known to me if I reached the top I would be saved, and if I fell back I would be lost: by hard scrambling I reached the top, and when I awoke I was telling what great things I hope the Lord has done for my soul, and I am so hard to believe it was the Lord's works with me, I was so miserable night and day I thought if I could only believe it was the Lord's works I would be satisfied: so one night in my weak way I asked if it was his will to show me my condition. It seemed in a moment of time I passed away in a slumber, and I was carried where I could not go forward nor backward, nor to the right nor to the left, there I was made willing to exchange with the beasts of the field, or the fowls of the air. There I was made to cry unto the Lord, what wilt thou have me to do, and the word that was spoken to me was "Stand still and see the salvation of the Lord," and it seemed to me I am no better satisfied, though I believed the good Lord answered my prayers, and I continued to beg, and now I am a beggar until this day, and the good Lord I hope carried a bright light to shine about me, it covered the whole earth and the words were spoken to me, take up thy cross and follow the meek and lowly Jesus, and when I awoke I felt like if I had a thousand tongues they would all be praising God for his great mercies to poor sinful me, as I feel myself to be, as my deliverance came in an unexpected way if I have ever been delivered. It was continually with me to go and tell what great things the Lord has done for your soul; and it was with me, What have I got to tell? what the Lord has given you. May the Lord keep me in the strait and narrow way, that I may press forward to gain the prize of the mark of the high calling as it is in Christ Jesus our Lord.

SALLIE E. TUCKER.

DEAR BROTHER:—I enclose the Obituary of Brother Joseph D. Biggs, for publication in the LANDMARK.

Dear brother Biggs will be greatly missed in his family and this community, and his church and the Association; but we cannot doubt that the change has been an unspeakably glorious one to him.

Mrs. Dr. Hassell lost her little girl Della last Wednesday after ten days illness with dysentery.

My babe, Fannie Winnie, has been sick two months, first with the measles, and then with bowel disorder, risings on her head, fever, and sleeplessness. She is a great sufferer. The ways of the Lord are mysterious; but we know that they are infinitely righteous, wise, and merciful.

Mr. and Mrs. Ward, of this place, lost their little boy, about a year old, last Thursday; and twenty minutes before he died, he tried to wipe the tears from the eyes of both his parents, who were sitting beside him, and to kiss them, It almost broke their hearts to part with him.

What a world of change and sin and sorrow! "More blessed are the dead who die in the Lord than the living who are yet alive." Yours in love and trial,
SYLVESTER HASSELL.

ELDER P. D. GOLD, DEAR BROTHER.—I will try in my weak way to write the experience of my little son, Joshua L. Williams. He was born the 7th of Feb. 1877.

The first of October 1888 he became serious and would not have anything to say to any one, and no one knew what was the matter with him; and no one could get him to tell anything about what was the matter with him, and he remained in that state until Friday before the second Sunday in March 1889. Then he commenced talking with me and asked me if he could go to preaching next day with me, at Lower Black Creek, and I asked him what did he want to go for, to see or to be seen? He said he wanted to go to hear preaching, for he was not so pretty that one should want to see him, and he had no fine clothes to show any one. He awoke Saturday morning and put his arm over me and asked me if he could go to preaching, and I told him that he could, and he turned over and went to sleep. He went Saturday and Sunday, and he came home on Sunday evening claiming that he had a better friend than I was: if the Lord did not forsake him that he had a better friend than I was; but he had always claimed me to be his best friend until that time. He went on claiming the Lord to be his best friend until Tuesday before the second Sunday in April. He claimed that the Lord had not forsaken him, that he had forgiven him for his sins; then he said that he wanted to be baptized because the Lord was baptized. On Saturday before the second Sunday he offered to the church at Lower Black Creek, and was received in full fellowship, and was baptized Sunday morning at half past 9 o'clock by Elder A. J. Moore. He is now visiting among the brethren and sisters. They all seem very anxious to hear him talk. The day that he was baptized he was 12 years, 2 months and 7 days old.

He is the son of W. G. Williams and Tildy E. Williams his wife. His mother died when he was 18 months old, Your Brother in hope if one at all.

W. G. WILLIAMS.

Remarks.

Young brother Williams was at Wilson last Saturday and Sunday at the meeting here. He is very small—a little boy, but there is a noted change in his conduct, and it is that of a man of God. He delights in the company and conversation of the brethren.

WHEELS.

An aged brother requests my views of Wheels in Eze 1; 15, 16. "Now as I beheld the living creatures, behold one wheel upon the earth by the living creatures, with his four faces," &c.,

Certainly one of the most sublimely awful and glorious visions revealed to man was this one shown to Ezekiel. The date or the time to the year, to the day, the location are both given when the word of the Lord came expressly to Ezekiel as he was among the captive Israelites by the river of Chebar. Surely such an event would be remembered. Observe it does not matter in what locality one is the Lord God can reveal himself to him, if it is his pleasure to do so. By far the greater number of the most wonderful visions God hath shown to men have been when they were in humble and obscure places.

This vision came out of the North. Is it from the North that cold comes? that the oppressing king of Babylon comes? that fair weather comes? So out of the North comes this awful appearance of the likeness of the God of heaven,—a whirlwind, a great cloud, a fire enfolding itself, and a lightness was about it. What an irresistible power in the cloud above, the wind that blows just where it pleases, and the fire that burns. Thick clouds are the coverings of the great I Am. He rides upon the storm, and a devouring fire goes before him, while he dwells in light unapproachable.

The Lord sent the king of Babylon to carry disobedient Israel into captivity, but God rules in the storm and directs every motion of the darkest cloud or the vehement storm, nor can the fierce passion of Israel's worst enemies do more than the Lord bids them do. He that puts Israel in the furnace himself dwells in the bush, therefore it is not consumed. The Son of man walks with the Hebrews in the midst of the burning fiery furnace.

LIVING CREATURES.

Out of this brightness comes the likeness of four living creatures.

The revelation of Jesus in the midst of affliction and trouble to Israel in the likeness of four living creatures, with the likeness of a man, for Jesus was found in fashion as a man, and was a man—with the face of a lion on the right side, denoting power and kingly dominion, with the face of an ox on the left, showing his patient endurance and laborious suffering in bearing burdens, is here revealed in visions of God. They also had the face of an eagle, denoting omniscience or infinite sight and knowledge.

With wings joined one to another they moved or stood together. With hands of a man under their wings they show the design and purpose of the Lord of hosts. Their feet were as the sole of a calf's foot that could walk in all places moving straight forward and shining as burnished brass. Quick as lightening they went and returned. Having a likeness as burning coals of fire it went up and down among the creatures which were living creatures, or in whom was no death.

A WHEEL.

As Ezekiel beheld the living creatures one wheel appeared upon the earth by the living creatures with his four faces. For the wheel had four faces as the living creatures.

A wheel is round and without beginning or end in that sense. This wheel had four faces or moved in every direction, and turned not as they went, and was as a wheel in the midst of a wheel. This represents the mysterious operations of God in grace and providence which though they may appear to conflict, yet all move together in perfect harmony without one turning against another, or without turning or shadow of a turn. Nor is there any beginning or end of their operations in the sense that one is not related to another, not growing out of another, or not resulting from another; but as links of one chain they are connected and resultant, and all move as one and work together for good to them that love God, to them that are the called according to his purpose.

For as a wheel within a wheel grace reigns and moves all events in furtherance of the will of God, and in support of his purpose as the army of the Captain of the Lord's host. As the ocean, like a beryl, bearing all ships and freight that move on its bosom,—without being burdened, constantly sending out waters, yet never diminishing aught,—receiving waters from every where, yet never increasing; so the wheel within a wheel is ever moving all things, yet never moved, never clogged, nor hampered, and with ceaseless activity and unmistakable wisdom moving with the living creatures. For Jesus has all power both in heaven and in earth, and works all things according to the counsel of his will.

THEIR RINGS.

As for their rings they were dreadful. There is no measure to the height or the depth of the boundaries of the works of God, or the rings of these wheels. Who can see how high are the ways of God, or how deep his works. They are high as the heavens above the earth. They are so high they are dreadful. Who can stand before his judgments, or look up to the throne of his holiness which is a glorious high throne from the beginning, and his works proceed of himself and are high and glorious.

These rings were full eyes round about those four, showing infinite wisdom in all the operations of God, for no movement is wrong, nor can make any mistake, nor blunder. All his works praise him and his saints bless him.

SAME MOVEMENT.

When the living creatures went the wheels went by them. Through the proud vain imagination of man many suppose, and the lying tongue of blind man may say that God is often disappointed, and that the ways of Providence are blundering, or that God often fails to do what he purposes, even in his failure to save the sheep for whom Jesus died, yet it was shown to Ezekiel that there is a time to every purpose, or a fixed time for the accomplishment of every purpose as it pleases him to fulfill his counsel, and that wherever the living creatures go the wheels go, when the creatures stand so do the wheels, and when the living creatures are lifted up the wheels are also lifted up. Wherever the Spirit was to go they went: for the Spirit of the living creatures was in the wheels. It is the all comprehending and all powerful Spirit of God that guides the train of his wonderful providence, and it never fails therefore in its purpose. You have but to look at the history of Israel and see this illustrated. The train or car of God's universal control of all events always accomplishes what prophecy said beforehand he would or what he purposed. The Bible proves this.

A CROWN.

What a crown of glory, the likeness of the firmament above, was upon the heads of the living creatures as the color of a terrible crystal, clear as the body of heaven.

With wings joined these flew in the firmament, and the noise of their wings was as the voice of the Almighty, and even when they stood on the earth a voice was heard above them. Their speech then is from heaven. For God speaks to us in these last days by his Son whom he hath appointed heir of all things. This voice is always speaking giving glory to God, and filling the heaven with praise.

THE BOW.

Above the firmament over their heads was the likeness of a throne bright and radiant as a sapphire stone, and upon the likeness of the throne the likeness of the Son of man above upon it. Here in vision Jesus appears in his resurrection glory above the throne of God, or seated on the throne. As in the flesh he is represented as the living creatures on earth, but as glorified he is above the throne, but still as the likeness of a man. For Jesus enthroned in glory still is Jesus crucified and risen, the same yesterday, to-day and forever.

The color as of amber, or as fire within, but shining through something darker, from his loins upward, and also from his loins downward. This represents the same Jesus in both dispensations, or from the loins (which mean division) reaching back through the legal dispensation, giving the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in Christ, who is the true light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world.

The brightness was as the appearance of the bow in the cloud in the day of rain or the light. This bow shows the reign of grace in the new covenant, confirmed in Jesus shining in glory, and this was the appearance of the God of heaven. What a girding this was to Ezekiel to prepare him to prophesy of the truth and power, the wisdom and glory, the fear and greatness of God before whom all nations are as nothing, and who is the God of Israel.

P. D. G.

PERFECT LAW OF LIBERTY.

Among the many mysteries set forth in the scriptures and in our experiences, and which come under our observation, the reason why all who alike talk the truth do not do the truth, or why all who love in word do not also love indeed, is one worthy of our attention and investigation. James sets forth the idea in the first chapter of his epistle that one may be a hearer of the word, and yet not the doer of the word, and exhorts the brethren to be doers of the word and not hearers only, deceiving themselves. For if any be a hearer of the word and not a doer, he is like unto a man beholding his natural face in a glass: for he beholds himself, and goeth his way, and straightway forgetteth what manner of man he was." It is shown by this that one naturally gets a correct impression of what manner of man he is by looking into a glass, and to continue thus looking is the only way to keep fully in mind just what he is, but to turn away is to forget what his manner is. The lesson to be illustrated by this is that the child of God who simply hears the word, but does it not, understands while hearing but does not do the word; and thereby turns away and forgets just what are his peculiarities, but that he who both hears and does the word, and is thereby not a forgetful hearer, is one that looketh into the perfect law of liberty and continues therein, does the work and is blessed in his deed. When we are looking into the finished work of Jesus, we are looking into the perfect law of liberty. "If the Son make you free you shall be free indeed." This does not mean that such a one is free to be slothful, and disobedient, but is free from the curse of the law, and yoke of bondage, and becomes the servant of righteousness. He is then under law to Christ. The law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus having made him free from the law of sin and death, he should walk after the spirit and not after the flesh. Having been made free from sin and become a servant to God he has his fruit unto holiness and the end everlasting life. This fruit is not a production issuing from him, but is a fruit produced in him, which is of the spirit, but which he should make manifest in word and deed.

Whatever is wrought in our hearts should be worked out. God works in his people both to will and to do of his good pleasure, and they are commanded to work out their own salvation, because the Lord thus works in them.

All the Lord has ever required of his people is to keep his commandments, and we are taught that in the keeping of them there is great reward.

The children of God do not serve him to obtain a blessing, nor because he has blessed them, but the blessing is in serving him. Is it true that all who look into the perfect law of liberty continue therein? Or are there those who look thereinto but do not continue therein? Evidently there are those who believe in Jesus and desire to follow him, and when he shows them his covenant, and fills their hearts with his love, they feel free, and then think they will take up the cross and follow him, but they soon give way to the suggestions of the devil and the flesh and do not do what was in their hearts to do. That this is true is not denied, but when we come to enquire for the cause of this state of affairs and bring forth the remedy, for some cause there appears differences of opinion. There must be a cause for this difference in the outer life of the people of God, and it ought to be sought after, and if possible located. The grace of God that bringeth salvation teaches those to whom it appears that denying ungodliness and worldly lust, they should live soberly, righteously and godly in this present world. Therefore those who do not live as becometh holiness do not live as they ought to live, and are simply hearers of the word and not doers, deceiving themselves, and not looking into and continuing in the perfect law of liberty and are continually forgetting what manner of man they are. If there is anything for us to do, it is right that we do it, and we do wrong when we do not do it. The idea of right and wrong can only be considered in a legal sense, when applied to the people of God, and should be observed simply because Jesus has commanded it.—Where there is a law given, those who are under it are under obligations to observe its statutes, legally, in the spirit of the law given. The law of Moses had its precepts and the people were required to keep them—legally—who, when they did so were blessed, and did not so were punished. We are not under law to Moses, and therefore are not required in any sense to keep his law, but we are under law to Christ and legally under obligations to keep the precepts and examples given in his law. “If ye love me keep my commandments.” Does not this imply that one may love him, and yet not keep them? If this one does not keep his commandments, and yet loves him, what is the character of such an one? What word shall we use to define it? I will use the word “disobedience.” To fear God and keep his commandments has ever been the only and whole duty of man.

When we are commanded to keep the sayings of Jesus the only consideration we can truly and properly entertain for observing the statutes of Jesus is simply because he has commanded us so to do.

When a father tells his son to do a certain thing, is it proper for the son to ask why such a thing should be done, or plead as an excuse for not doing it that he is not worthy or fit to engage in such work? Would you not call that an impertinent, disobedient son? And when we put in similar excuses are we not over curious and disobedient.

It seems to me that there is at this time and is more or less at all times, a fearful degree of slothful negligence indulged in by many in regard to attending their stated meetings. Why should we allow ourselves to grow so careless and indifferent about meeting with the brethren, and greeting our pastors at the times and places appointed for the public worship of God? When we stay away for months are we letting our lights so shine before men that they may see our good works and glorify our Father who is in heaven? What are our good works? What are the evidences that we love the Lord when we do not love his people well enough to give one or two days in a month from our avocations of life to meet with them and engage with them in the worship of him who loved us and gave himself for us?

There is a class of Baptists with which I have scarcely any patience at all, and that is those who are well able to attend meeting and do not, and when I meet them out anywhere their whole conversation is on religion. We are to love in word and in deed, and when it is all word and no deed, the less there is of it the better I am suited.—Those who are faithful but unable to attend to the active duties in the church I love to hear talk, and talk with them of the things of Jesus and his love, and with such I have had many pleasant interviews.

There is another class of believers in Jesus for whom I am much interested, and that is those who are not, for some cause, able to deny themselves, and take up their cross and follow him. They have a good experience and a good hope, and yet they are disobedient. Now and then they look into the perfect law of liberty, but they do not continue therein. What is the matter with them that prevents their being with the church. Child like they want to know too much. They want to walk by sight, when the pattern is "we walk by faith, and not by sight." They want to see their hope, but hope that is seen is not hope, "but if we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience wait for it." Why should one persist in his own way? is not the Lord's way better? If one has a hope that the Lord has pardoned his sins, and he loves the brethren, and desires to be with them, that is all there is about it, why not go and tell the brethren his feelings and impressions and let them decide it? Such characters say they love doctrine, and believe the preaching and rejoice in it at times and yet their actions go to indicate that they do not believe the preaching. The very spirit of the preaching is love to the brethren and love and obedience to Christ, and yet they do not obey, and therefore in that sense do not believe fully in that doctrine and preaching.

I may be extreme in these things, and would like to hear from some of our readers upon the thoughts herein expressed. What think you of Christ, and what of his bride? P. G. L.

P. D. GOLD, DEAR BROTHER:—I feel inclined to drop you a few lines though unworthy as I feel. I am not a subscriber of your most valuable paper. My father is taking it, and I get to read it. I first joined the Missionary Baptists, but after reading the scriptures and hearing the Old Primitive Baptists preach I soon found out that I was wrong. Brother Lipps came over and preached for us: as able a preacher as I ever heard. He gave me a minute of the Baptist Convention and told me to read it, and I did so, and found that money was their whole object from first to last. I soon afterwards joined the Old Regular Baptists and was baptized by Brother Lipps, and they soon constituted a church and gave it the name of the Oak Grove Church.

Peace seems to dwell among us. We are fifteen in number, but there seems to be a division about what is called the hard doctrine. Some preach that the sinner can do nothing to merit his salvation, neither can he do any thing to forfeit his salvation and some preach all that Christ died for will be saved. I read that in the scriptures that in due time Christ died for the ungodly. Now Brother Gold, if you can get the ungodly saved according to the scriptures I will believe all Christ died for will be saved. I find again and if the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear? In searching the scriptures I find that he is the propitiation for our sins, and not for ours only, but for the sins of the whole world. Now if Christ never did anything for those that are lost I would like to know what is going to condemn them, or how he is going to judge them. Some preach that he offers nothing to those that are lost. Now how can a person resist or reject a thing that is not offered to him. I find in the scriptures as your fathers did, so do ye always resist the Holy Ghost, and I find again that some of them rejected the counsel of God against themselves. Some contend that there is no cause why the sinner is lost and finally perishes. I find, and with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish, because they received not the love of the truth that they might be saved; and for this cause God shall send them strong delusion that they should believe a lie that they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness. Now if there is not a cause I do not understand the scriptures, if I do not know the truth I hope it is my heart's desire to know it; for we are all fallible creatures, liable to err.

Brother Gold, give me your views on the 2d Thess. the second chapter and the 10, 11; and 12 verses.

Your brother in the bonds of peace,
MARION F. MORRIS.

Remarks.

Our brother has quoted the words of 2d. Thess. 2: 10, 11.

Plain is the teaching of the Bible that there are two manner of people, one the righteous, the other the wicked. It is also clear that the righteous are those made so by the grace of God, and not by their own works, and it is also clear that the wicked are made so, not by the work of God but by their own works. The work of God has not made any wicked, nor has man's own works ever made himself righteous before God.

Does any one doubt or deny these plain propositions or statements.

For our words can do no more than state what is already true. Those are the best expressions that most truthfully state what is already known or made manifest to be true in the statements themselves.

When men work out principles of their own corrupt natures they make it manifest that they are wicked. When men work out that which God works within they make it manifest that they are righteous, and in this sense one is either condemned or justified by his works or words.

Those who receive the truth in the love of it, and follow righteousness, show that they are of God and therefore are righteous, because the righteousness of the saints is of the Lord. But those that hate the truth make it manifest in their unbelief, and have no cloak or covering for their sin. Jesus did not come into the world to make men sinners, nor does his coming make them sinners; but it shows what they are. Those that have pleasure in unrighteousness and that have no desire that Jesus should reign receive not the love of the truth. Satan the deceiver operates in these children of disobedience.

Satan works with power and lying wonders to deceive, especially working in one here called that wicked, who comes to deceive mankind, so that all whose names are not written in the lamb's book of life wonder after this notable deceiver, whose manner is according to the coming of satan. This embodies false religion which is opposed to all that is called God or godliness. Those therefore that are its followers are possessed with the spirit of wickedness, and do not love the truth, nor receive the truth in the love of it.

But our brother's trouble appears to be to see how one could reject the kingdom of God unless it had been offered to him, or how he could resist the Holy Ghost unless the Holy Ghost should strive to enter his heart, or how one could fail to receive the love of the truth unless the truth had been offered to him, or how one could put the kingdom of God away from himself, or far from him, unless it had been offered to him.

That the truth is preached when it is said that Christ is the propitiation for (Jews) our sins, and not for ours only, but for the whole world (Gentiles,) and these two classes include the whole race cannot be questioned. Nor can one truthfully say that there could be any insincerity in gospel utterances. The insincerity is all in man.

That is full of truth which declares that there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved; and Paul uttered the truth when he said that Christ gave himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time, and that he was therefore a teacher of the Gentiles. Jesus commanded his disciples to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned.

Christ is the Saviour of all men, but especially of them that believe, and when the gospel is preached as many as were ordained to eternal life among the Gentiles believed; Acts 13: 48. It does not say as many as believed were ordained to eternal life, but it reads, "As many as were ordained to eternal life believed."

The gospel was first preached to the Jews, and in the preaching to them it is manifested who are the despisers, and who are those that perish, and who are those from whom the gospel is hid, and who are those that are lost. How can any one know or have any evidence of his salvation except in belief of the truth or receiving the gospel; for that is salvation. The preaching of the cross is foolishness to them that perish, but unto us which are saved it is the power of God. No one can know any thing of salvation except as faith manifests it in preaching and hearing. When one rejects or puts far from him that kingdom he makes it manifest that he has neither part nor lot in the matter. In receiving or rejecting the word preached one shows what he is, and makes it manifest whether he is saved or not, or whether Christ has redeemed him or not. He that does not believe in Jesus makes God a liar, and shows he is full of corruption and is under the power of satan.

Those that stoned Stephen were uncircumcised in heart and ears. Then were they Jews inwardly? No. Did they have the Holy Spirit? No. In what sense then could they resist it? opposing what He taught and by blaspheming the worthy name of Jesus. These men and their fathers persecuted the prophets and thus resisted the Spirit that was in the prophets. Whenever one resists the Spirit of God it is not that which has the Spirit that resists it, but that which has it not. If any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his.

How can a man reject that which he desires or loves, or that which is in harmony with his heart. God never gives to one a spiritual blessing that his heart does not desire; for the gift is in the change of ones character. It is to give the heart itself; it is to give the true spirit or mind.

In true preaching then there is always the revelation of salvation, and those that are saved appear clothed in glory, while those that are lost despise and reject the word. There will never be any judgment hereafter to reverse or change the judgment now manifested in preaching the gospel. He that believes is saved now, and he that believes not is now damned. Salvation is now manifested as well as damnation, and it is thus that now the separation is made. So that Paul could say he is bound to give thanks to God for you because God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth; but he hath sent strong delusion to those to believe a lie who received not the love of the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness.

P. D. G.

SCRAP'S.

In some sections there has been considerable increase in the membership of churches: while in others it yet is winter time. Thus winter and summer are here and there at the same time. The day of prosperity is followed by the day of adversity, and when they strike a balance—sheet nothing is left of surplusage to boast of. The righteous are scarcely saved. They have no oil to spare.

But wait: your time is sure to come. Wait on the Lord, for he will bring it to pass. Acknowledge him in all thy way and he shall direct thy steps. Wait I say on the Lord. Do not as Saul who thrust himself in the priesthood where he did not belong. Much of salvation is manifested in enduring; for thus the strength is shown which God gives.

Without money and without price. Why use both terms? Sometimes one buys without paying the money, (yea often,) but there is a price, and he goes in debt and promises to pay and becomes oppressed by debt, if he is honest; and after he eats up what he buys still is owing for the thing he bought and it satisfieth not.

But in the gospel the thirsty buy wine and milk without money and without price. They pay no money, nor do they go in debt. They do not obtain it on that ground or consideration at all. It is by grace or freely given. It is that gift of God. Then it is never taken from them afterward.

But how can one buy without paying anything or promising to pay. He goes in the right or name of Jesus who has bought him and redeemed him, not with corruptible things as silver and gold, but with the precious blood of Christ. He obtains wine and milk or grace through and by grace, and obtains it righteously, and thus a perfect title is given him.

Hence it is called his faith. Where is your faith? Hast thou faith? This good part shall not be taken away, for it is obtained righteously.

How different that is from the system of works of the creature whereby claim is made and salvation based on the ground of work rendered or merit of some sort. If it be of works it is no more of grace. For it to be of grace it must be so wholly and not in part, free altogether from works of man.

The subjects of grace are so reduced they are not able to work at all. While those who depend on their own works are so full they cannot hunger and thirst after righteousness.

This is a day of oppression of the poor through legal forms.

The laws are enacted not to favor the poor. It is not safe to be rich at any time; but especially now it is the more dangerous because almost unconsciously the rich are grinding the poor. The poor are the Lord's little flock.

This is a day when the love of money is rampant corrupting politicians, voters and office-seekers, preachers and hearers. Indeed all classes of men are withered by its touch.

O thou man of God, flee these things. For preachers divine for gain supposing that gain is godliness. But one cannot serve God and mammon.

Obituary.

HARRIETT PATE.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—By the request of brother Pate I will try to write the obituary of his dear companion, sister Harriett Pate. She was the daughter of Cullin Howell and his wife Lucinda, and was married to brother H. F. Pate, Oct. 1st, 1867. Her funeral was preached by brother J. T. Edgerton. Sister Pate received a hope in Christ sometime in the year 1878, united with the church at Nahunta, Saturday before 3rd Sunday in July 1883, and was baptised by Elder S. Pate. She lived in full fellowship always filling her seat and bearing the marks of Jesus. She surely was a precious sister in the Lord. She with her husband procured a letter of dismission to organize a church at Goldsboro, which she was a member of when she died. Sister Pate was troubled with heart disease, and suffered a great deal, but she bore her afflictions with christian fortitude. I visited her in her last days and she was reconciled to her Maker's will. By her request I held prayer meeting at her house and sang and talked of the wonderful dealings of Christ with his people which she was able to rejoice and take courage at and press forward to the mark of the high calling in Christ Jesus the Lord.

Sister Pate, from the time she joined the church, was like the apostle in saying he had fought a good fight, he had kept the faith, henceforth there was a crown of righteousness laid up for him, and not only for him, but for all that love his appearing. Sister Pate was a devoted wife, a loving mother, a good neighbor, and she is greatly missed at the church at Goldsboro. But the heaviest stroke falls on her loving husband and dear children, aged mother, brothers and sisters. Sister Pate was the mother of nine children one girl and eight boys, all survive her but one infant which the Lord saw fit to take to himself a few days before her death, and I feel our loss is her eternal gain, so weep not husband, children, mother, brothers, and sisters: remember that all things work for good to them that love God. The Lord giveth and he taketh away, blessed be the name of the Lord.

May God bless all that are near and dear to her by the ties of nature and may her children be prepared to meet her at the

the right hand of God where we all shall know as we are known. We shall see him as he is and be like him. Then we will join in with sister Pate and all the loved ones of Jesus in singing the hymn,

"When we've been there ten thousand years,
Bright shining as the sun,
We've no less days to sing God's praise,
Than when we first began."

Then shall we ever be with the Lord.
And all sighing, sickness and pain, troubles and difficulties shall be done away and parting shall be no more.

JOHN W. GARDNER.

JOSEPH D. BIGGS.

One of the oldest and best known members of Keehuke Association died May the 18th 1889.

He was one of the best Clerks of the Association I ever knew.

He told me that he was baptized at the time of the division, and had not missed more than two or three sessions of that Association since. He knew more of its workings than any man living. How he will be missed. He was the life long companion of Elder C. B. Hassell. He knew Elder Joshua Lawrence well.

But best of all He knew the Lord Jesus, the head of the church.

His memory is blest.

The Purpose of Zion's Landmark.

"Ask for the old paths where is the good way."

By the help of the Lord this paper will contend for the ancient Landmark, guided by its stakes of Truth, and strengthened by its chords of Love.

It hopes to reject all traditions and institutions of men, and regard only the Bible as the standard of truth.

It urges the people to search the Scriptures, and obey Jesus the king in the holy hill of Zion, keeping themselves unspotted from the world.

It aims to contend for the mystery of the faith in God and the Father, Jesus the Mediator, and the Holy Spirit the blessed Comforter.

All lovers of Gospel truth are invited to write for it—if so impressed.

May grace, mercy, and peace be multiplied to all lovers of truth.

ON SELF-MADE MINISTERS.

Now if the church of England was to cease heaping up teachers from the theological schools of Cambridge, Oxford, Dublin, Fort William, and other seminaries in the United States and elsewhere, what would become of this sect? why, die of its own accord; for these factories and others keep this sect alive. But in a word take away the salaries from the minister, and I warrant you empty martin gourds, as the case of the revolution proved. Then this church has heaped up thousands of men-made teachers, and is still heaping them up, to oppress the poor Britons and Irish, past endurance.

You must take these as specimens of men-made teachers in both churches, and now all others seem to be following and wandering after the beast in this of theological schools to heap up teachers to support their different sects; and the more preachers the better chance to stand, and the more money the more preachers be sure; and the more moral darkness, lies and falsehood will be propagated. But God ere long will sweep all this trash away, as with the bosom of destruction, to the joy of his own preachers and the triumph of the gospel church on earth. It is not long now, I feel assured, that this state of things is to continue before the beast and the false prophet will be taken and cast alive into the pit.

From about 606 up to 1517, or thereabouts, is called the dark ages; and well it might, for who darkens the world like men-made teachers? During these 900 years the papal power held all Christendom in bondage and fear, and exercised her priest-craft to the highest pitch; made thousands of preachers, popes, cardinals, monks, friars, and scholastic divines of all sorts and grades; monkery assumed an instituted form, image worship was set up, the pope's supremacy was announced all over the world, pilgrimages were set on foot, absolutions and indulgences granted and sold, the inquisition established, the great religious wars or crusades were carried on &c., Now one would think that the many thousands of men-made preachers and scholastic divines that existed in this age of the church, would have been the light of the world and kept darkness afar off. But sad proof that there is no light in men-made preachers, sad proof that when a church gets to the highest summit of worldly grandeur, wealth, honor and power, that this should be the greatest time of darkness; but so it is that it was and so it ever will be, worldly prosperity ever ruins the church and thus darkens the world; and scholastic divines are one of the causes of covering the earth with darkness, and the people with gross darkness.

This time between 606 and 1517, a period of about 900 years, is the time that John no doubt in his Revelation prophesies of, of all the world's wondering after the beast; that is, of following the church of anti-Christ and her men-made teachers, having itching ears, which she had heaped up and sent abroad in every part of the Roman world, to sell pardons and indulgences and traffic otherwise in religious matters for money. And also they are the locusts, I think, alluded to that darken the gospel sun of the church. In that age of the church, emperors, kings and princes were hurled from their thrones by the popes—disrobed of their power by the vicar of Christ and their kingdoms filled with rebellion, for the bulls of his holiness must be obeyed. For the Pope was surrounded by tens of thousands of men-made teachers, who all as so many satellites received their instructions from him instead of Jesus Christ. Armies of monks, friars, and ministers were ready to obey his summons and execute his bloody commands, as well as the seventy-two cardinals, at all times; as by him and his power they got their pay for preaching. The clergy were forbid to marry, of which Paul foretold in the New Testament; councils were held by the popes, and at length they assumed the supreme command of the whole Catholic world, and gave new laws and doctrines to the church, even the doctrines of devils as Paul said. The first council was held at Nice, 325; then at Placentia. The Council of constance in 1414; the council of Trent, 1545. The crusades in the eleventh century, that wild enthusiastic project to recover Jerusalem from the Mahometans, that cost the lives of so many hundred thousands of Europeans.

In answer to the above dark state of the world I have nothing to say, as that comes not in my limits; but as to the dark state of the church for these 900 years, I answer that it is beyond all contradiction, that Christianity properly understood, as preached by God's preachers and exercising its due influence on the mind and character of men, must be a lamp of light to the nations of the earth; for only compare the nations who have the gospel preached to them, with those that have never had it, and how different in knowledge, manners and civilization, to the tribes of Indians that never have had the gospel light. Yet in this dark age there were thousands of thousands of men-made teachers, but there was no light in them to dispel this darkness; but the truth is their deeds were evil, from the pope to the friar, and therefore the darkness, for they loved darkness rather than light because their deeds were evil. And so now with men-made teachers; they hate the light offered to the world by God's ministers. Many during that age of the church left her communion and formed other churches upon what they in this dark age thought to be the gospel plan; and thus made a stand against the beast, but were destroyed by thousands. Yet those men bore their testimony against the man of sin, such as Claude of Turin, Peter de Bruys, Henry, Peter Waldo a Frenchman, Wickliff, John Huss, Jerome, &c. These men often carried terror even to the seat of the beast, and preached with power and made thousands of converts for the wolves to burn, drown, behead and banish. Which shows that men-made preachers even of the Christian name, and made by her who called herself the Christian church, can and will persecute God's preachers and people as well as heathen priests. For self-made and men-made preachers are men of the same sheep-killing spirit, whether found in the antideluvian, Jewish, heathen, or Christian church, matters not—wolf is wolf, before and since the flood. And wolf will be wolf, whether found in Asia, Africa, Europe, or the wilds of America. So are all self-made, men-made, and devil-made teachers; and so they will be found at the day of judgment, when God shall have divested them of the sheepskin.

But while the Pope slumbered and rolled in luxury and power at the head of this bloody whore, and saw all these rising sects in his power, and thousands destroyed, and dreamed of nothing but dominion, peace, riches and power, in 1517 Martin Luther arose, and to his aid Calvin, Melancthon, Carolstadt, Bucer, Erasmus, Menno, Ocolampadius and others. These men of God gave the beast the deadly wound; but yet he lives in Spain and Portugal, showing these two horns, but is dying a lingering death elsewhere. Then from 1517 up to 1834, the Roman church has lived, but not in that power, splendor, riches and persecution as formerly. Yet in that age of the church she has drenched the world with blood in an abundance; but she shall soon see her sorrows, her widowhood, and death and mourning, and the burning of her flesh with fire shall soon come upon her, and God give her in his righteous judgment blood to drink since she has loved it so well; for he shall put it in the hearts of his servants to give her a double cup of his vengeance.

Here I shall close in pursuing the church, as the history of the church for the last 300 years is so full and so abundant almost every where. To them I must refer you for men-made preachers, and come immediately to the matter proposed, and give their marks from scripture, so you can know them from God's ministers.

The church of Rome, the Greek church, the Mahometan church, if I may call it a church, and the church of England, all follow this practice of making preachers; and if there was nothing else to prove that all these churches were lustful and loved unsound doctrine, and could not endure sound doctrine, their making preachers is proof enough according to the text. And I am sorry to say that all Protestant sects have got at it; for it is an infallible proof of their hating sound doctrine, and it is a further proof of their lust and love of wealth and honor. For no sect, as I know of, has ever got at this shameful practice until they have grown in numbers, pride, wealth and popularity; then for making preachers. So with the gospel church, so with the Baptist, and others. I refer you to the rise and progress of all sects as proof. And what is still worse, these sects don't require the person to be made a preacher to be born again; but they make preachers by the schools out of any bit of a fellow. It matters not with them about his conversion to God, so much the better for not being born again, for then he plays into their hand exactly to preach unsound doctrine and make gain by this craft, as did Demetrius by shrine making. These men can bawl out like him, great is our sect, our doctrines, our church; as was great Diana. But you have only one thing to notice, and that is, whether the man makes gain to himself by such a crying out; if so, he and Demetrius are brothers, by father's side if no kin by mother's side. Now it cannot be denied that the priests of all the above named churches have, and are making gain and preaching for pay, as did the heathen priests. So then they are proven by the text to be the kind itching ears; the turners of truth into fables. Then men-made teachers they are, to preach unsound doctrine for the church in that state to her liking.

The above churches, with others have now for ages been heaping up teachers; yet all along God has had his in the world also, to oppose them and to testify to the world that their deeds are evil, and bear witness to the apostolic doctrine, of which I cannot now speak particularly. Thus Michael and his angels have fought, and the dragon and his angels have fought; but ere long Christ on the white horse, and his ministers on white horses, shall take the beast and false prophet, which means the church of anti-Christ and that of Mahomet, the false prophet. Then will be sung the song of triumph, Alleluia, and praise will echo through the church in heaven and earth, and the martyrs of Jesus will cast their crowns before the throne of God, with joy and praise at the universal downfall of men-made teachers, that have filled the earth with the blood of the saints of God. Law, religion, and wealth and power in a church, breed false teachers as the locusts of Egypt, or as stagnated ponds mosquitoes, for their abundance; and why? because the church can't in this state endure sound doctrine; and because of that gain and honor, pomp, show and parade, that such an unsound church attaches to her ministry. This induces men to take on them holy orders and preach false doctrine for pay; and promotes such a church, for by so doing do they get their loaves and good fare, as Ahab's and Jezebel's prophets did by telling lies in the name of the Lord. For such men-made teachers must always, like these prophets and old Balaam, lug the name of the Lord into their doctrine to make their lies pass for truth and wish a better grace. The root from which these teachers spring is lust; base root and baser men, you may say thousands of them have been. Don't say it is not so, for the Holy Ghost knows better than you and I. And this base root of pride, show and pomp shows itself in the church, and did directly after these men-made teachers were made, by gay and fashionable preachers, a gay and fashionable assembly, splendid places of worship—but John the Baptist could preach in the wilderness and Christ out of a fisherman's boat, and on the mount, and in private houses)—ornamented pulpit, velvet cushions, canopies, pews richly dressed for men of state and taste, out of which places of worship the poor are shut, that all the great, the grand, the rich and noble may be together, and say prayers for fashion sake, and hear preaching to be honorable, and draw nigh to God with their lips; but give their hearts to the world and devil, and their money to their preacher to tell lies for them and cry peace, peace, when there is no peace; and bolster them up in false confidence that outward morality is religion, and the form of godliness all that is requisite for the salvation of such great folks. However, the scriptures says the poor have the gospel preached to them—God hath chosen the poor, rich in faith—and not many mighty and noble are called—and God has hid these things from the wise and prudent. Then if all these scriptures be true, the most of these gay and fashionable preachers and grand assemblies will find a heel at last, with all their forms of religion and men-made preachers, golden cups and golden candlesticks, and black gowns; all from the same root sprung up, as well as the various titles of honor conferred on members of the church, from the friar to the pope. So that the whole train and apparatus of the church spring from lust, base lust or pride, out of law religion and wealth on the ministry; like church, like priest, birds of a feather flock together. Set up martin gourds in the spring, and you will soon have more martins than the gourds can hold, so settle salaries and honor on the ministry, whether by law or otherwise, and the church will soon have ministers enough to fill every town and village and country; yea two upon a horse to gain the loaves of the beast. Men, with the church's help will soon qualify themselves to pray by books, and preach their written sermons from dead men's heads; sing psalms, speak theology, put on the gown and a disfigured face, for these loaves and fishes. Yet such men-qualified preachers are nothing but hypocrites, a band of purse plunderers of church and world, eclipsers of gospel truth, blind guides, have put on the sheepskin to preach for pay and divine falsehood for hire, and sell something they call gospel for money, a rich wife, and popularity, for the natural man receiveth not the things of the spirit. All the strife, division, discord and blood in the church of God, may be traced to some one or other of these money lovers of church traffic; for God's people are disposed to live, lie and feed together, like a flock of sheep in peace and quietness, were it not for these wolves in the assumed sheep-skin, who scatter the flock and perish and devour the flock of Christ. And these are the fellows that have scattered God's people into so many parties. What says Paul: Mark them which cause divisions among you, (you the gospel church is meant,) the scatterers and dividers of the flock; for their own belly, says he, and serve not our Lord Jesus Christ—which showeth the same men, and that they preach for their own gain. And the reason is these men love the milk more than the flock; and show plainly by such conduct, that if they can but get the feathers the devil may take the goose for them.

We have been on this head a long time beating the bush by history and observation. Now we draw sword and march into the open field. The first mark by which men-made teachers is to be known, is that of itching ears. What does Paul mean by their having itching ears? This word itch, or itching when taken literally, means a cutaneous disease, to feel an uneasiness in the skin; when taken as a principle, it means a teasing desire, and an uneasiness to obtain. Thus when applied spiritually to the teachers that the church should heap to herself, it means a teasing desire to get wealth and honor by preaching, and an uneasiness in heart to obtain it, an ardent desire after it, in their calling of preaching.

Now apply it to the conduct of the Roman men-made priests, to the Mahometan prests, to the priests of the church of England, to American men-made priests, to the French and Spanish and South American priests, to the tobacco priests, to the Missionary priests, and ask yourself if their teasing desire to get money by preaching, and their uneasiness to obtain it, and their itching desire for it, in all the plans of selling indulgences, absolutions, praying out of purgatory for a certain sum, the tithes by law, the beggings of the day the day the plans laid by the priests in the schemes of the day, combined societies formed by priests to raise money, even of old rags, &c. &c.,

ELDER DAVID BARTLEY'S BOOK ON THE RESUR- RECTION.

The title of this work is, "Man Redeemed from Sin and death: the Bible Doctrine of the Resurrection of the Dead by the Holy Son of man." The book is an 18 mo of 342 pages, in pica type, with leaded lines; and is mailed post-paid for seventy-five cents per copy. The mechanical execution is excellent, and the reading is easy and pleasant to the eye.

The book is inscribed to those who are on pilgrimage to the "better country," who desire to be delivered "from this present evil world," who hope to "obtain a better resurrection," who by "patient continuance in well-doing seek for glory and honor and immortality," who live and believe in Jesus, "the Resurrection, and the life." After the introduction, there are twelve chapters upon the twelve chapters upon the following subjects:—"Man; Son of man; Jesus is the Resurrection; Resurrection of the Unjust; Man in Brotherhood with Christ; Redemption secures Resurrection; Baptism assures Resurrection; Resurrection of the Body; Witnesses for Resurrection; The Body sleeps in Jesus; Jesus will come to raise the dead; Resurrection—Glory, and Heaven."

This is the only book in the English language devoted exclusively to the momentous subject of the Resurrection; and the author presents, in a clear and orderly manner, nearly all the passages in the Scriptures that bear either directly or indirectly upon the subject.

Under the almighty power of the Holy Ghost, the primitive disciples "continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers" (Acts 2: 42.) And the resurrection of Christ was the central and leading truth in the apostles doctrine and testimony (Acts 1: 22; 2: 32; 3: 15; 4: 33; 5: 32; 10: 41; 13: 33), by which resurrection He was "declared to be the Son of God with power" (Romans 1: 2—5), without which great truth the whole system of Christianity falls to the ground, while, if the body of Christ has been raised in power and glory, so will the bodies of all his people be raised (1 Cor. 15: 12—58. But as there were, among the early professors of Christianity, persons who erred concerning the resurrection and overthrew the faith of some (2 Tim. 2: 17, 18,) so there was to be, in the last evil days, a more extensive departure from the faith of God's elect (1 Tim. 4: 1—3; 2 Thess. 2: 3, 4; Tit. 1: 1; Luke 18: 8); and, lamentable to record, from among the churches themselves were "men to arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them." (Acts 20;

30). The oriental heathens, the Brahmins, and the Platonists, the Sadducees, the Gnostics, and the Manicheans, "not knowing the Scriptures, nor the power of God." (Matt. 22 : 29), denied the resurrection of the body; and Emanuel Swedenborg (1688—1772), the founder of the so-called "New Jerusalem Church," taught that the soul has an internal, psychical, or spiritual body, as well as an external, natural, or material body, and that at death the latter body is laid aside forever, and the former body passes with the soul into the eternal world, and that this is the resurrection. Ignoring or perverting numerous Scripture facts and declarations as clear to the unsophisticated child of God as the noonday sun in a cloudless sky, some Baptists even, following the ancient Sadducee and the modern Swedenborgian, deny the resurrection or rising again of the dead body from the grave, and say that the Scriptures teach that the dead body is never to be raised, but that at death a spiritual body is given to the soul, and that thus clothed it enters eternity, and that this is the resurrection. Now, as the apostles sealed their testimony with their blood, it becomes all, who are built upon their foundation (Eph. 2: 20), to contend just as earnestly and uncompromisingly against these human inventions and theories, and in defense of the faith once delivered to the saints, (Jude 3) and recived without question by the people of God for nearly two thousand years. The old London Confession (chapter 31.) shows plainly what is the true Baptist faith on this subject:—Article 2. "At the last day, such of the saints as are found alive shall not sleep, but he changed (1 Cor. 15: 51, 52; 1 Thess. 4 : 17); and all the dead shall be raised up with the self-same bodies and none other (Job 19: 26, 27), although with different qualities (1 Cor. 15: 42, 43), which shall be united again to their souls forever." Article 3. "The bodies of the unjust shall, by the power of Christ be raised to dishonor; the bodies of the just, by his Spirit, unto honor (Acts 24 : 15; John 5: 28, 29; Philip. 3: 21), and be made conformable to his own glorious body." A denial of the resurrection and glorification of the same body that dies, is a contradiction of the plainest Scriptures, and a distinct departure from the Baptist faith.

In the admirable little volume under review, Elder Bartley marshals the powerful array of Scripture fact and argument in demonstration of the comforting and glorious doctrine of the resurrection of our mortal bodies from the unspeakable horrors of the grave by the almighty power of the glorified Son of God, when he comes at the last day to take vengeance on his enemies, and to gather his ransomed people to their eternal home.

The following is a brief outline of the argument;—The body, as well as the soul, is a component and essential part of man, and was equally involved in the curse of God's violated law. The Lord Jesus Christ, thereupon as our head and surety, took upon himself our nature, sin excepted, endured all the penalty of the law for us, and arose a mighty conqueror over sin, death, the grave, and hell for us, that we, human beings, composed of both body and soul, might live forever. He is the resurrection and the life of all the members of His mystical body, and has become the first-fruits of them that slept, and they all shall be like Him. The righteous King will raise the bodies of even his voluntary, selfish, sensual, wicked and persecuting enemies, and justly consign them to their appropriate abode in the place of darkness and torment. But the people of God, embraced in His everlasting covenant of mercy, are made by grace his living and loving children, brethren of Jesus and joint-heirs with him, and are predestinated to be conformed to his perfect image. Their bodies, as well as their souls, were redeemed by Him, and shall be raised up by Him at the last day. Their baptism typifies their death and burial and resurrection with Christ both in soul and body. It is that which dies, the mortal, corruptible body and not the immaterial spirit, that is raised from the grave. The ancient patriarchs and prophets, and especially the apostles, were witnesses of the resurrection of the body. The bodies of the redeemed sleep securely in Jesus 'till the morning of the resurrection. Then He who is their Life will come and awake his dead and translate His living saints. And, having judged and consigned the wicked to eternal fire, He will receive all the blood-bought and blood-washed throng, in their reunited and perfected souls and bodies, beyond the reach of sin and sorrow, in the pure, bright, and everlasting glories of the Heavenly Jerusalem.

To every reader, the style of the book is most charming; and to every simple-minded believer in the Scriptures, the facts and arguments are perfectly unanswerable.

SYLVESTER HASSELL.

Williamston, N. C., June 20th 1889.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—I have just read your extract of a sermon delivered at Middle Creek on Sunday, April 2d, 1889. In which you set forth the glorious gospel of the Son of God, and gave each one their portion in due season and how to act one toward another and so fulfill the law of Christ. I hope I wish I could discharge my duty as you set forth, but I feel to fall very far short; but it fills my soul with joy to know that there is yet a people contending for the faith once delivered to the saints I bid you God-speed and may he still prosper your journey. I send fifty cents for the "Book on Joshua," when it is completed.

Brother Gold, I am here as you are aware in a wilderness of mixed population, and I am old, and of course my mind is treacherous; one thing I hope I desire is that I may be found at the feet of Jesus and that he will be my helper and guide me so I may not be a stumbling-block to his dear children and that I may adorn the profession of our Lord and Saviour; how pleasant, yes how beautiful and glorious it would be to me if I could be blessed with the presence of you and the brethren that have been endowed, to hear you proclaim his everlasting gospel to a perishing world. I feel that it would turn all my sorrows into joy. I sometimes feel if the Lord would uphold me, and be mouth and wisdom I could go out in the highway and hedges, and proclaim to this perishing world that they are blinded by the god of this world, that all their garments are moth-eaten, there is no soundness in them, they are full of wounds, bruises, and putrefying sores from the crown of the head to the sole of the foot, and they serve to be unconscious of it; my arm is too short. The Lord can teach and open the eyes of the blind. When Zion travails she brings forth sons and daughters. What a lovely sight to behold the dear saints that have come out of great tribulation coming to the church telling what great things Jesus has done for them. "It seems a little heaven below," &c., Brother Gold I ought to be ashamed of my writing, but I am not ashamed of Him whom I hope my soul loveth. The Lord bless you. Farewell.

A. REED.

DEAR BROTHERS GOLD AND LESTER:—I feel at times that I could pen down what I hope the dear Lord has done for my soul, and at other times it seemed a cross to me; so I have the consent of my mind to do so, the Lord being my helper. In April 1882 my life seemed miserable. It appeared to me that I was not going to live, and after death my lot would be miserable, forever cast away from God and his angels. It seemed that I was to be cast away from God's presence. I felt that if I could say one word that I thought he would accept it would be a relief, but all I could say was, Lord have mercy on me a poor sinner. It appeared that every word fell to the ground, and I went on in that condition: at times I could pass it off, but when night would come it appeared that I would be cast into the flames of torment before the dawning of another day.

I had a severe spell of sickness and all gave me up to die. I saw no hope if I died, but that I should be lost. Alas, alas for me. I lingered for weeks and it seemed that I grew worse. So I went on in that condition and still confined to my bed; the fever settled on my lungs and consumption followed, and I was bound to die, and the good Lord had no place of rest for me.

In July 1884, the 24th day, in the evening all had left the house, except my two smaller children. I thought I must die. My burden was so heavy that I never could live, and my soul would go for my sins, and seemed all at once that all my burden left me and it is impossible for me to tell how happy I felt, all the birds around the house were praising God for me, as I thought and these words came to me.

"Oh when shall I see Jesus,
And reign with him above;
And drink the flowing fountain
Of everlasting love.

When shall I be delivered
From this vain world of sin,
And with my blessed Jesus Drink endless pleasure in."

I thought at the time when my husband came home I would tell him what I hoped the Lord had done for my soul, but when he came home my heart failed me, and I could not tell him; and one morning I said to him, stay with me until they finished their work, then he could go. (He worked in the Wollen Factory one mile from home). I felt at that time that I could tell him, but I could not pick up heart to tell him. I was afraid that I was claiming something that I did not have. I thought that no one else would notice such, so I did not tell him.

On Friday before the first Sunday in Sept. 1884, the section meeting commenced at Little Flock church, one mile from where we lived. I felt like it would never come, as I wanted to hear preaching so much. It seemed that any Baptist preacher could preach for me. The time came and on Friday I did not go. On Saturday my husband put my bed in the wagon, as I was unable to set up, to take me; before we got ready to start Elders Thomas Dickens, Amos Dickerson and P. G. Lester came in to see me, and brother Dickerson asked me if I was going down to preaching that day. I said to him, yes, I aimed to do so if I could stand the trip. He replied you will talk to the church, will you? I replied, I am not worthy, and I noticed old brother Dickens and the tears were running down his face. We went on to the church, and when the time came to receive members, one came forward, and while talking it appeared that I was bound to go and talk, and I was not able to walk alone, and my husband was up listening at the one that was talking, and I went back home and did not talk to the church that day, and when I went to eat my dinner it appeared that I never would have the opportunity to talk to the church. I choked up so I could not eat and I never can tell how miserable I felt. My husband had business that called him away from home that evening.— After he had gone, brother Jonas Boyd come to stay that night with us, and I was afraid that he would mistrust that I was troubled about something. I did not think that I could live. My husband remained out late, and we had lain down when he got home. We got to talking about the one that talked to the church that day, and I asked him if he never felt like it was his duty to talk to the church, as I knew he had a hope for a good while. He said it seemed that there was a compelling power pressing him so that he could hardly stay away to-day. I said to him if I had known it I would have gone with you; then I told him what I hoped the Lord had done for me, and the next day my husband and myself both joined the church, at Little Flock, Floyd Co. Va., and were baptised on Monday after the first Sunday in Oct. by Elder P. G. Lester. I was so weak that I was unable to walk to the water. I was carried in a chair to the water and back. I felt relieved for some time, there I became distressed and was afraid that I was deceived, and had deceived the people of God. I went on that way for some time, I dreamed that I was in a place that I could not see any way to get out, and in there was torment. I thought that I would climb up and go out then I thought there is a way for all God's people, and he that climbeth up any other way the same is a thief and a robber; and then there was a way opened, and I went out, and went into a room that was prepared for the people of God, and it was the most beautiful place that eyes ever could behold. Then I was willing to go if it had been the Lord's will to take me. I had a dear husband and five little children that were near and dear to me, and all I wanted to stay or live for was to comfort them: but I did not think I ever could be cured. I had a long disease and a bad case, and I never had heard of any one being cured of consumption: and we had tried every thing heard of and never had received any benefit. But I have since been cured of it.

EVIDENCE OF HOPE.

ELDERS GOLD AND LESTER:—I have thought or have been impressed from some cause to try to write out the evidence of my hope. I was raised by parents of the Primitive church and faith. Some one may say if I had been brought up under some other profession I would have had different thoughts. I wish to show by this scribble, if the Lord will help me, how I have traveled through this life. I thought when I was with my parents growing up they were right. When I grew to manhood I went over the country and heard most all other professions argue and preach. Now said I, what can I believe? It was then I was led to think that the Universalists are right and I lived under that belief for 20 years, or there about, trusting and some time trying to beg the Lord to show me the right way. I believed there was a God. I was certain I had things revealed to me, time and again. Finally I became much interested in going to Hard Shell meetings, and the people of the church I thought were the most loving, and I wanted to be with them. But Oh? what a mountain of sin came to my mind. I thought there was not a person in the world as sinful as I was, but finally Christ appeared to me, and said, I have paid the debt for you, thy sins are forgiven. Then I wanted thousands of tongues to praise the Lord. Then I could exclaim with the poet, “Amazing grace, how sweet the sound,

That saved a wretch like me.”

Then I “could say with Paul, Sirs, be of good cheer, for I believe God that it shall be even as he told me,” and I can say I think with thousands of witnesses that the Primitive doctrine is right, though I think there are some of God's people in other churches, and some that are in no church. But I do not think they are doing their duty as Christians.

Now let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter, Fear the Lord and keep his commandments.

Now let us hear the prophets and apostles talk, “Wherefore seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us.” Heb. 12: 1; we so often think sin is so mixed with all that we do that we are deceived and cannot be christians, and we become discouraged, and then we begin to doubt and fear. But it is no use, our Captain is at the helm. Christ did not die for the righteous, but for sinners. When we were in debt, and nothing to pay with, Christ paid the debt for us: if so be that we are born again, and we must run the race with patience, and look to Jesus the author and finisher of our faith: for without him we can do nothing. But with him we can do all things: (see Heb. 11: 12;) The apostle in this chapter shows what has been done by faith. He cites them to Abel and Noah and a large number of others. By faith Noah built an ark and found he was right, saved his family and self from the flood. Faith is the substance of things hoped for, things hoped for, things not seen, but an evidence that they will come. Heb. 12: 1; Now let us lay aside that sin that besets us so, for without faith it is impossible to please God. Let us strive for the prize of the mark of the high calling as it is in Christ Jesus. May the Lord help us to run that race for without him my Experience teaches me that I can do nothing.

Written by a poor way-worn traveler marching though sometimes on a dark way and sometimes in the light. I have had much comfort from reading your papers, and think they are written by the Spirit of the Lord, or under it.

I trust that I am your Brother in Christ.

W. F. COVIL.

Pollard, N. C.

DEAR BRETHREN:—I have been impressed from some cause to write what I understand to be the meaning and effects of the gospel.

Where I travel and preach I find different opinions, among the brethren, as to the effects of the gospel when preached. Some believe and contend that God uses the preached gospel as a means by which the dead are quickened.

Now according to my feeble understanding, it is not thus taught in God's word. "It is the Spirit that quickeneth." John 6: 63; "You hath he (God) quickened who were dead." To quicken, I understand, is to give life to the dead. Now let us examine God's word carefully, and see what it is that gives life, and to whom it is given. Is life given to the living? I answer, no; it is to the dead. "That which thou sowest is not quickened except it die." 1 Cor. 15: 36. This is Paul's reply to the fool in reference to the resurrection of the bodies of the saints. The hour is coming and now is when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, (not the voice of the preacher) and they that hear shall live. Again: says Jesus, "I give unto them eternal life and they shall never perish." It is Christ that unstops the deaf ears, that the deaf may hear; that opens the blind eyes, that the blind may see; that takes away the stony heart and gives a heart of flesh, in which he (and not the preacher) puts his laws and imprints them in their minds.

By searching the scripture diligently we find that gospel salvation pertains to this life only. While eternal salvation is Christ's work independant of the gospel and every human effort, means or agency. Paul proves that eternal salvation is the work of God when he says, "Who hath saved us, and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began." 2 Tim. 1: 9. The gospel is to be preached to every creature; to persuade them to come to Christ that he may save them. It is not preached to offer salvation to every creature, nor to bring ungodly sinners to Christ that he may save them; but it is preached for a WITNESS. This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations." Matt. 24: 14. The gospel is preached to quickened sinners to comfort and establish them in the belief of the truth, and to save them from those who "shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils." But those who claim that the preached gospel quickens the dead in sins quote this text, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believe."

They take this declaration of the apostle as a definition of the word gospel. But not the expression, "It is the power of God unto salvation to every one that BELIEVES," and not to the unbeliever to make him believe nor to the dead to give them life. Well says one, I do not care to limit the power of God and say it can not quicken the dead. But to this I will reply and say, I have as much right to call it foolishness as you do to call it the power of God.

"For the preaching of the cross is to them that perish, foolishness; but unto us which are saved, it is the power of God 1 Cor. 1: 18.

So, we see the gospel to the one character, "them that perish," is foolishness; to the other character, which are saved," it is the power of God. Paul continues to argue that the gospel is not the power of God to unbelievers or to them that are not called by making the following declaration; "But we preach Christ crucified, unto the Jews a stumbling block, and unto the Greeks foolishness; but unto them that are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God, and the wisdom of God." 1 Cor. i: 23, 24.

To them that are saved, to them that are called, and to them that believe, the gospel is the power of God, and the wisdom of God; but to them that are not saved, to them that are not called, and to them that believe not, it is foolishness. Do the scriptures teach that it pleased God to save them that believe not, by the foolishness of preaching? No; but they do teach that it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe." I do not deny that the power of God quickens sinners, for indeed no other power can. "It is the Spirit that quickeneth." That God has power to quicken the dead by the preacher I do not deny; but I do say it is not his purpose or way to give life to the dead. But says one, If I ever was quickened it was under the sound of preaching. This may be so, but still that is no evidence that you were quickened by the preaching. To be quickened under the sound of preaching is one thing, and to be quickened by it is another. One may be quickened under the sound of a fiddle, but not by the fiddle; one may be quickened under the sound of cursing, but not by cursing. Paul was quickened while persecuting. Was it by persecuting? No, he heard "the voice of the Son of God." But still they will contend and say I never saw myself a sinner until the preacher spoke that one word, it convinced me of sin.

The gospel is a witness, and a witness is one used to prove something we had never known before. God gives us life by his Spirit alone, and then the witness testifies to the truth that we are poor lost sinners. Then he flees to the law for justification; but what does he learn? Why he learns that "no flesh shall be justified by the deeds of the law." "The life was the light," and the "light makes manifest." God by his Spirit first gives us life, and this light makes manifest that we are sinners. The eyes of our understanding being enlightened, we can see our awful standing by reason of sin and transgression; therefore we are made to cry unto God for mercy. God be merciful to me a sinner. But when he comes to the end of the law, which is Christ, he receives faith to lay hold upon the promises of God as belonging to him, and when they read or the preacher says, "Blessed are they that mourn; for they shall be comforted," the response goes out from that poor mourner's heart—I have been mourning on the account of sin; therefore this promise is unto me, the promise is fulfilled, and I am comforted!

God has but one way to give life, and he tells us how that is in John 6: 63. "It is the Spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing." Cornelius was quickened before he heard Peter preach, therefore it was the Spirit and not the preaching of Peter that quickened him. Without natural life we cannot hear, see, taste, feel, nor smell. So, without Spiritual life we cannot hear God's word gladly; we cannot see the kingdom of God; we cannot taste the pleasant fruits which grow in the garden of the Lord; we cannot feel ourselves sinners, or feel the emotions of love in our hearts when Jesus appears as our all sufficient Saviour; nor smell the sweet spices when the South winds come and blow upon the garden of the Lord. I feel that the "love of Christ," and not the love of contention, has constrained me to write these words. Dear brethren and sisters, pray for one who feels too small and unworthy to write or to speak in the name of Jesus.

F. P. BRANSCOME.

BROTHER GOLD, DEAR BROTHER:— I feel this morning like I want to speak a few words to you, and as I can't have any other opportunity of doing so it is a great blessing I feel that we are blessed with this privilege of speaking with pen and ink: still I have never been able to describe my feelings, but in part.

I want to tell you why I feel to love to read the LANDMARK so well. I shall have to come to visions and revelations that I hope to be of the Lord. Some months ago I had a dream. I dreamed that brother John B. Hardee came to see me, and brought me his Bible that he uses while preaching, and a LANDMARK also, and told me to read them, and he went out. I thought I took them and went and laid down and slept and dreamed that I saw a throne exalted high, and on the throne sat a man and one step below him I saw a man standing looking him steadfastly in the face, down at the foot of the throne on the ground sat another man and out before him lay seven beasts, all of a different nature, and they looked steadfastly on him and he on them, and on his left knee was a hog standing with his fore feet on his knee, there was a snake lying near his feet, a little at his left side was a male goat and out in front of him and at his right side lay four other very large beasts whose names I cannot tell now. I knew it when I woke, and was commanded to write the vision, or it should in part be taken away from me, which has proved true. I thought in my dream that I awoke out of that sleep, and opened the Bible at the first chapter of Genesis, and I saw all that I had dreamed engraved at the top of the page. It looked dim, but was just bright enough for me to discern. Also in the dream I shut the Bible and took up the LANDMARK, on the first page I saw the very same that I had seen in the Bible. I dreamed that brother Hardee came in and that I said to him, brother Hardee, I have been asleep and had a dream, and that I have not only dreamed it, but it is engraved on your Bible and the LANDMARK also, and I told him my dream and what I had seen, and asked him for an interpretation. He told me the one I saw exalted high was the God heaven, and as I saw but one looking to him for life and salvation, and the one I saw sitting at the foot of the throne (for the earth is his footstool) was a worshipper of the beast, and as I had seen them engraved on the Bible and the LANDMARK they were bearing witness testifying to the truth, and the LANDMARK was testifying to the truth of the bible; and I awoke out my sleep and behold it was a dream, and it is as fresh yet as then, still the vision is obscured as I was promised, I omitted writing, through weakness, as I always do when impressed; and dear brother it seems as if that endeared the LANDMARK to me more than usual, and I pray God if it can be his will to spare you dear editors for a long time to contend for the truth of the gospel, as it in Christ Jesus our Lord: for it does seem to me that there is much need for the truth being preached, for it does seem to me that the time is near that he who kills you will think he is doing God's pleasure. They are ready to stone us to death for the truth's sake. There is many a one of us that they are trying to put to death in the estimation of this intelligent world with no other weapons than falsehood. They boast as did Goliath of Gath in their mighty weapons, forgetting the Giant was killed by the lad with no other than a smooth stone out of the brook, and one word of pure clean truth will kill a giant today. But they that are dead in sin, and have never seen their condition will boast as did the giant: they are as ready to defy us as he was little David and the host of Israel. It seems to me that I am one of their chief targets in my section. By the time I can wade through one tribulation, and get on the hill to rejoice in what I have come through, they are ready to meet me with another persecution, and every time they try to bring it more hurtful, and every time I am brought through I have the greater rejoicing. I never have in all my pilgrimage had greater rejoicing than I have had twice when brought through persecution. My God has delivered me out of the lion's mouth, and left me without hurt, and I pray he will yet deliver me. They meant all for evil, but he meant it for good, for he says all things work together for good to them that love him, to them that are the called according to his purpose. Most assuredly they would not persecute us as bad as they do if they knew how we would rejoice to think we were persecuted for righteousness' sake. They have no grounds for their persecution only from a lie, and forget they are serving their old father, the devil, for he is a liar, and the father of it. It is sweet to meditate and say they persecuted without cause.

Brother Gold, can you tell me why it is that some of us have to bear so much more than others, when we feel it is without cause? But I believe that God has a purpose in it, but I cannot see as yet what that purpose is. My heart's desire is to live in peace with all men, as far as within me lies, but God does know, and did know when he said it, that it would be impossible, for he knew the hearts of all people. He knew they hated him, and that they would hate us: for he told us so in his word. I am satisfied from a dream that I had that will continue to be my lot. I dreamed I was in a new building with two rooms in it, standing in the door that looked towards the west, and there stood two images of men, the one on my right side, the other on my left; the one would smite me on one side, and I would turn from him, and the other would smite me on the other cheek. I felt submissive to it all, and at length turned away and saw a little male infant lying perfectly naked prostrate on the floor. I stopped to meditate on the child, and a voice said unto me, this is Jesus Christ, the son of God.

My dear christian friends there was a time of rejoicing with me. I fell at its little feet and put my hands on them, and begged the Lord God to let me die and live on earth no longer, but not so: he said, my will is not finished concerning you, and my dear brother, I hope I can say in Christ I can't see why my unprofitable life is spared; it is for no good ever done in the past, or any prospect of ever doing any in the future: but it was revealed to me one day last year that it was in part for the protection of my children, as I am the mother of ten living children, and my example if followed is that they may be smart, honest, truthful, helpful children, and that can be said so far of the four that are grown.

They have an industrious, kind father to lead their way who is endeavoring to graduate them in the lesson that old father Adam gave all his posterity, to eat bread in the sweat of their face, but the larger portion of this globe says go to college, and get a refined education, and sit in the shade and fan that you may not sweat at all, or you are not fit for society. If every body was of that opinion where would the multitude get bread. I am not condemning education to make people honest and industrious, but if it is to make people lazy and dishonest and hateful (which is the case very often) it is worse than none, but it is a blessing to those who know how to use it as such, but otherwise it is as hateful as false religion. In fact they are twin brothers in my estimation. I see so many who are floating because of a full head who have very empty hands.

I feel to be the smallest and weakest one in my Father's house, if indeed I be a child. Love to all the household of faith. I remain I hope your humble sister in Christ.

REBECCA L. HARDEE.

Greenville, N. C.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—We hear of coldness on every hand. There is a cause, and what is it? I say it is unfaithfulness. Now let us examine ourselves, and not our brethren so much. Sometimes I have seen brethren trying to get a mote out of a brother's eye when they had a beam in their own eye, as I thought. As ye receive Christ Jesus so walk ye in him. How did we receive him, and what condition were we in when we did receive the Lord? We were poor, humble, dependent beggars until the Lord revealed himself unto us: then we were full of praise to almighty God, loving everybody, and praying for our enemies, desiring to meet with God's dear children, and mingle our voices in a hymn of praise, and set under the droppings of God's sanctuary feasting on the bread of Life. Was it any cross to us then to leave our homes and spend our time with our brethren and sisters? No, it was our theme and we could sing with the spirit and the understanding. How sweet the name of Jesus sounds in a believer's ear? It soothes his sorrows, heals his wounds, and drives away his fears. Now brethren and sisters we that are asleep to our duty, let us wake up and be doing. O says one, I have nothing to do only attend to my business all the week and meeting on Sundays. There is no use of my going in the week or to-day. I am so busy I can't get off; and to the merchant, Saturday is a busy day and I can't go. How do you think your pastor feels when he gets there and your seats are vacant, if he fails to go you are ready to say he ought to go, yes he had and you, every one of you that has made a profession of Christ in the pardon of your sins, never stay away from your meeting without you are providentially hindered: as ye received Christ so walk ye in him. The children of God that fill their seats, and comply with their duties are not cold because they have the presence of Jesus. We are commanded to bear each others' burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ. The more you stay away from preaching and the brethren the colder you get. You know whether that is so or not. I was so much built up at Wilson when I was there. Why the brethren and sisters, pure minds are stirred up, and they are fighting the good fight of faith. I met several that had come out of Babylon, and there are others. May they come out also, and be free to enjoy the religion of our Lord. If you want a warm time among us, let each one do his duty. Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and God will abundantly bless us in obedience. We are cursed if we live after the flesh. We will then surely die; but if we mortify the deeds of the body we will surely live in honor and glory to God. As you received the Lord walk ye in him.

If we want to stand fast in the liberty of Christ, let us fill our seat at preaching, let us visit our churches, and brethren.

Let us from this time turn over a new leaf. What a good Union meeting we had at old Union. When we are called on to visit the Unions let's say we will go, if the Lord will, and remember what we have vowed. I notice at our churches when collections are taken up a few have the burden to bear, when it is the duty of all that can to cast in their mite, and sometimes those that are most able don't give anything. They neglect the poor, the sick, the pastor who are in need, and if they give to the preacher it is to the one that dresses and makes the greatest show. Brethren these things ought not to be. You need not ask anybody so what is your duty. The word of God teaches us what is our duty, and if you will be governed by that you will have your seed-time and harvest. Let us press forward toward the mark for the prize of Christ. Then we like David may say, "The Lord is my Shepherd. I shall not want." Yours in great tribulation,

JOHN W. GARDNER.

THE LORD IS MY DEFENCE.

(Psa. 94 22.)

With the child of God there is no doubt that the Lord is a sure defence to his children that put their trust in him, but the great question is with each one, am I a child of God.

There are times in our lives that we are fully confident of the presence of divine interposition and protection, but even then we may be perplexed with the thought that perhaps we are simply being kept for more severe things, and may be in the end only fitted for destruction. And had we no escape from this, or overpowering comforts from the Lord, surely we should sink in despair, but through the graciousness of our God we are so blessed that "in the multitude of our thoughts within us his comforts delight our souls." We know that while the Lord is ever pitiful and merciful towards us, he also endures with much long-suffering the vessels of wrath fitted to destruction, therefore we cannot assure ourselves of his divine and ever-saving favor because of his indulgence and wonderful forbearance. There must be a multitude of thoughts within us in which are found the comforts of God. That is there is and must be a fullness of exercise of mind within us from which to deduce consolation. The child of God is disposed to desire, but the simple thought that, "the Lord is mine and I am his;" while the fruits of the Spirit are many and their opposites are equal. The Lord sends the rain upon the just and the unjust. In all the things of nature there seems to be no favors granted the righteous that are not to the wicked. If there is any difference it would seem that the wicked have the advantage. Wherefore we look and search in a different field for the evidences of God's special favors tending to an everlasting defence, and salvation. The difference between the righteous and the wicked is in the light given to see and appreciate the blessings of God; for the children of God certainly and deeply feel need of defence, and the children of wrath do not. The day of thanksgiving with the people of God is a continuous one, while the world has but few and those by the proclamations of men. The children of God need defence against the strong holds of satan,—the world, the flesh and the spiritual wickedness in high places, while those of men build bulwarks against their fellowman, and shield themselves, as with the battlements of self-aggrandizement fraught with sin.

The Lord does not have to build up bulwarks of defence whereby to defend his people, but he is himself their bulwarks and defence. Their opposition is not theirs but his. Were he their defender for lack in some way he might fail, but he is their defence, Not as something that is yet to be tried but has already been tested and proven impregnable. In the sense that he is their defence they can not be assailed, they cannot be condemned, yea they cannot even be charged with any thing. Who shall lay any thing to the charge of God's elect. It is God that justifieth, who is he that condemneth: it is Christ that died. What a glorious defence is this; as walls of fire around about His people all enemies are consumed without resistance upon his part. As fuel adds vehemence to fire it seems that an assault against this kind of defence would add to the defence. "Our God is a consuming fire." He not only defends as fire, but as light. "The Lord is my light and my salvation, of whom shall I be afraid." There could be no more sure defence against the elements and powers of darkness than that of light. "Light maketh manifest," no manner, nor amount of darkness can prevail for an instant in the full blaze of that light and shining light which shineth more and more unto the perfect day. While we may be filled with anxiety, and feel to be shrouded in darkness at times, yet if we have a hope, we are nevertheless light in the Lord. It is this character of defence that shows us our end, needs and makes us anxious. The wicked know not their condition and therefore are not troubled as are the children of God. Whom he loveth he chasteneth. In this there is great difference. "Before I was afflicted I went astray."

He is our defence as the "truth." No amount of falsehood can stand against the truth. It ever remains the truth. We are not the truth, neither is there any truth in us, only as Jesus, who is the truth, is in us the hope of glory.

There are no experimental stations nor degrees in this defence, but it is perfect in all its attributes, and as it is our defence, so are we as secure as it is immutable and eternal. If we feel to hunger and thirst after righteousness, and are weary, and heavy laden, and feel to be weak and dependent, often anxious, filled with interest and deep heart searchings, and are enabled to hope in the mercy of God, and to put your trust in him, and to wait upon him, and to call upon him in every time of trouble, and to realize that all our help is from and in him, then surely he is our defence, and will be our guide even unto death.

I have merely hinted at the subject, but will leave it, hoping that your minds will further investigate it to your comfort and to the praise of him who is the sure defence of his people, world without end.

REPENTANCE.

Sister C. H. Hines of N. C. requests my view of repentance.

The scriptures show that there is more than one kind of repentance; for they speak of a sorrow of the world that worketh death, and of a godly sorrow that worketh a repentance unto life that need not be repented of.

The sorrow of the world worketh death. There can be no life resulting from any sorrow which proceeds from the world. No doctrines of men can work any other repentance than that which is unto death. It requires a divine power to work or grant repentance unto life. The love of the world, the love of self, or of anything fleshly, causes a repentance unto death. This we do not wish to preach or to encourage. Moses hath in every city them that preach him being read in the synagogues every sabbath day. We see this in the teachings of Sunday Schools and other kinds of preaching, all through the country now by those that preach Moses or teach the works of man.

We do not wish to thus preach or teach: but we wish to preach Jesus and the resurrection from the dead.

The strength of repentance is of that power which is preached; if that name that is preached is weak then will the repentance partake of its character and be weak also. But when repentance and the remission of sins are preached in the name of Jesus, who is exalted a Prince and a Saviour to grant repentance unto Israel and the forgiveness of sins, then the repentance proceeds from a godly sorrow, or a true hatred of sin; and this repentance is unto life, and need not therefore be repented of.

All the power causing or producing this repentance comes from above, and it is the same power that grants repentance unto life that grants remission of sins.

No one perhaps except a Catholic would pretend to claim that man has power on earth to forgive sins. In the scriptures the granting of repentance and the forgiveness of sins are both equally ascribed to Jesus who is exalted a Prince, and a Saviour for this purpose, a prince having power to turn the sinner from dead works to serve the true and living God, and a Saviour to grant forgiveness of sins.

When repentance is preached in the name and power of the sinner by such as state that man has all this power in himself, we see that a sorrow of the world follows in which there is no lasting departure from former ways of sin and death; but there is a return to sinful ways, as the sow to her wallowing in the mire, and the dog to his vomit again. But when Jesus is preached and he blesses every one of us in turning us away from our iniquities then we can depart from evil being dead thereto. How shall we that are dead to sin live any longer therein?

Repentance is preached in the name of Jesus in every gospel sermon that is preached. When we declare the sinful and lost condition of man, and set forth the purity and holiness of heaven we preach that men should repent. When we set forth the guilt of sin, and the blessedness of those that live godly in Christ Jesus we preach repentance: When we exalt Jesus as the only name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved, and he came to call sinners to repentance. when we set forth the sinner as helpless of himself and blinded by the god of this world we preach the name of Jesus who is exalted a prince and a Saviour to grant repentance unto Israel.

The people of God are repenting every day of their lives, or turning from dead works to serve the true and the living God. They desire to repent or turn to the Lord. For true repentance is turning to the Lord. A godly sorrow works it, and those who are thus blessed truly turn from dead works to serve the true and living God. ALSO:—

“That repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem,” Luke 24: 47,

The apostles went into all the world and preached repentance and remission of sins among all nations in the name of Jesus.

This they were not to do until tarrying at Jerusalem they were endued with that power from on high which qualified them so to speak. When the day of Pentecost was fully come they were with one accord in one place. This was the great and notable day of the Lord when Jesus came in divine and glorious power, as the Holy Ghost brought all things that he said and did to their remembrance, and they were loosed from the infirmity of the flesh, and with great boldness and power they bore witness that Jesus is the Christ. They spake as the spirit gave them utterance testifying repentance toward God and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ.

You observe they did not preach salvation on condition, that is that if you would repent and believe then the Lord would forgive your sins and save you, or they did not preach that there are certain things to be done by the sinner before the Lord does anything for the sinner or in him; but it is that repentance and the remission of sins should be preached in the name of Jesus. Suppose one should preach repentance and remission of sins in the name of man or of the sinner, what would that imply? To declare a thing to be done in man's name, such as to preach repentance and the remission of sins in man's name, would not be the same as preaching them in the Lord's name. To preach in man's name would be to preach the power of man. To preach in the name of Jesus is to preach the power of Jesus.

Christ when he was raised from the dead and exalted at the right hand of God in glory received gifts for the rebellious. Repentance is granted to the sinner through Jesus (Acts 11: 18,) who is exalted for that purpose as much as to grant forgiveness or the remission of sins. Always where God grants repentance unto life remission of sins follows.

It is man that repents, but God grants repentance unto life to him, and this is preached in the name of Jesus by those he chooses and ordains or sets apart for that work, and none others.

Among all nations: this does not mean that every individual man will repent. It is then among all nations that the gospel is preached in this sense.

Some object to us because they say we are opposed to having the gospel preached. It would be our delight to see or know that the gospel is preached everywhere, but we wish it to be the gospel or power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth. We rejoice that the gospel is preached. Pray ye the Lord of the vineyard that he send forth more laborers in his vineyard. The field belongs to the Lord, he therefore sends his laborers into his vineyard.

P. D. G.

JUDGMENTS.

We should be warned and humbled under the mighty hand of God, for his judgments are abroad in the earth, and the living will lay it to heart, or consider in the day of adversity. So far as this year has been notable for the destruction of life by water. Of late the rains have been heavy and frequent all over the coast of the Atlantic, and perhaps elsewhere, judging from reports. These excessive rains waste crops as well as long drouths. Now are these rains an accident? Some may so hold: but we say not. The Lord sends or withholds the rain. We know that he is just and righteous, good and true, and that there is a cause for these excessive rains. They do not come by chance. The Lord owns the clouds and the rains, the heavens and the earth with its fulness, nor does he willingly afflict the children of men. God is good and gracious, and when he pours out vials of wrath in judgments on earth there is a cause for it.

Should we not be humbled unto supplication before him and confess our sins and depart from them. Pride, worldly-mindedness, love of money, neglect of the poor, neglect of your pastors are some of the sins we are guilty of. Want of spiritual-mindedness, not having our conversation in Christ Jesus, not seeking those things which be above, nor minding the things of Christ are some of our neglects and omissions of christian walk.

Humble yourselves under the mighty hand of God. We should be abased in the dust under the terrible hand of Almighty God whose word shakes not the earth only, but heaven also.

Obituary.

ELDER A. CRADDOCK.

By the request of Morrattock church, Washington Co. N. C. I attempt to write an obituary notice of the death of Elder A. Craddock.

The subject of this notice was born and raised in Tyrrell Co., N. C. and afterwards came to this county, and according to his own statements and that of others, he was quite immoral. He was a shingler by trade, and worked hard, and spent his money drinking and gambling.

But after awhile he joined the Missionary Baptist church, and he said he supposed some one told the preacher what kind of a character he was, for going from baptism to the place of meeting the preacher said now he must be careful, be sure to pray three times a day, and if anything did hinder him he must pray enough next day to make it up, and in addition to that if he saw that anything was going to make him mad to leave it, and go off and pray, and, to use his own language, I followed the instruction until I thought that I was the best christian that ever walked. I do not know how long he remained such a good christian, but I have often heard him relate the following. He was in Juniper Swamp making shingles, found a bunch of twelve Junipers, and in order to work them all on one yard went in the center and cut one of them, and it lodging he cut another across it, thinking to throw it and it lodged also, and he kept on until he had cut the whole number, except the one in which they were lodged, and he said his religion gave way, and he threw his hat on the ground and jumped on it and cursed until his passion somewhat went down, then he caught his ax and ran under the lodged trees and cut the one they were lodged in and they fell all around him and he was not hurt, then said he coming to myself I sat down on a log when something seemed to say, you have fallen from grace, and for a few minutes I was very much troubled over it, when these words sounded in my ears as plain as if some one had spoken to me, you never had any grace, and this quieted him so that he was as wild as he ever was.

After some length of time however it pleased the Lord to convict him of sin, and according to his statement it was truly pungent. I do not remember the details of his condition, but suffice it to say his trouble was great and I remember hearing him say that he left the house never to return as he thought, but while engaged in prayer in the woods all alone a light encircled him about the size of a cart wheel, and his burden was gone, and he felt to praise God with all the power of his soul, and when the tempter came to persuade him that he was mistaken the Lord was pleased to hear his prayer, and caused the same light to shine around him again. From an oversight I suppose in the church clerk the time of his Baptism into the fellowship of the Primitive Baptist church is not recorded, but from the best information that I can gain it was about the date 1850.

Elder Craddock was a man of good sound mind, and yet strange to say he never could learn the English alphabet, but he would remember as much of what he heard read as any one.

I heard him say when he was laboring under the impression to preach that on one occasion he was sitting by the fire at night, and the impression was so great that he said Lord how can I preach when I can not even read to give out a hymn: when something seemed to say, get thy hymn book: he reached over on the table that was standing near and picked up the book, and as he did the first verse of a certain hymn came into his mind. He asked his wife if that hymn was there: she told him it was, and read it over for him, and in a half an hour he could sing it all by heart. He was liberated to hold prayer meeting, but seemed to make slow progress for sometime, but finally began to improve, and was licensed in Nov. 1871, and ordained April the 20th, 1872, by a Presbytery composed of Elders, Wm. Gray and N. H. Harrison, and proved to be an able minister of the New Testament, not of the letter but of the spirit. Although he could not read, yet the Lord gave him evidence by which he knew the scriptures. He has repeatedly told the writer of this notice that if in his meditations the same word was presented to his mind three different times he never failed on inquiring of some one that could read to find that it was scripture.

Elder Gray once told the writer that he once took his Bible in hand as Elder Craddock began to preach to see if he quoted scripture correctly, and he said I never heard scripture repeated more correctly in my life, and I really believe that he uses scripture while preaching that he could not tell before he begins, nor after he closes, whether it was scripture or not. Elder Craddock was a world's wonder, an humble god-loving and god-fearing man: he was always poor and in his latter days very much afflicted with Rheumatism, but I never heard a murmuring word fall from his lips; and he was my nearest neighbor for some years, and we have spent many pleasant moments together.

Elder Craddock was married four, times, his last wife was a Miss Jackson and was a member of the church at White Plains, in Beaufort Co. before their marriage. She survives him together with three children, two daughters, the youngest is a boy, and the name sake of his father.

Excepting only a few years with the church at White Plains, Elder Craddock was always a member of the church at Morattock, in Washington Co. He was with the church at their Jan. meeting of 1829, which was the third Saturday, and Sunday, and was taken sick the next day, bore his afflictions with much patience until the first Sunday in Feb. when he peacefully passed away, his remains were taken to the grave-yard at Mr. Isaac Harrison's, and decently laid away to await its call in the resurrection morn.

Some words and prayer by Elder N. H. Harrison while we mourn for our departed Bro. yet not without hope, for we verily believe that he is free from sin and strife, and now enjoys a heavenly life, where he is no more poor, afflicted and care worn, but rich in the blessings of his redeemer, and enabled to praise him as he ought.

Your unworthy Brother in hope.

J. T. ROWE.

JOHN SWINSON.

Also, by request of the same church, I write a notice of the death of our beloved brother John Swinson.

He first joined the Free Will Baptist church and was very zealous for awhile, but being convinced of his error he joined the Primitive Baptist church at Morattock, Washington Co., on Saturday before the third Sunday in June 1871, and remained a consistent member 'till the day of his death, which occurred on Tuesday after the third Sunday in November 1888.

He attended meeting Saturday and Sunday, and on Saturday the writer asked him to open conference; when he asked to be excused, saying, "he had a pain in his stomach," it was the first time that I ever knew him to render one word of excuse when called upon. Brother Swinson's seat was always filled when it was possible, and the church greatly misses him. He was a great lover of peace in the church, at home and in the world, and he was charitable and honest in all his dealings, giving at all times the best of evidence that he had been with Jesus, and we verily believe that he is now resting with him in the bright realms of eternal day "where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest."

While we feel that we have lost a brother indeed, and one beloved, and greatly miss him in our assembly, we are sure that to him it is gain to be with the Lord.

We humbly pray the God whom he served to enable us to follow his example, and may his mantle fall on some one of our body. Brother Swinson died at about the age of 76 years, leaving an aged widow and two sons, both grown to mourn his loss. Sister Swinson, though old and infirm attends her church meeting regularly, and has the deepest sympathy of the church.

May the Lord bless the afflicted ones according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus, Amen.

J. T. ROWE.

LINDEE LEE LAWRENCE.

Lindee Lee Lawrence, my beloved wife, departed this life on the 16th day of June, about eleven o'clock. She was the daughter of Marmaduke and Eliza House, and was twenty-six years, six months and fifteen days old. We were married the fifteenth day of March 1882, and there were born unto us three children all living, the youngest my dear little babe over two years old. She had been in bad health and a sufferer more or less all her life, but about five months ago she was taken with a severe cough which we tried our best to cure, but never could. About two weeks before her death she was taken with the dysentery which assumed a typhoid form and terminated in death. What she suffered is past words to express, but she seemed to bear it with christian meekness. I feel that every thing that could be done was done for her both by kind and attentive and generous physicians, and friends who were untiring in their attention in nursing and administering to her, and I pray the God of all grace may remember and bless them for it, for I feel that I can never repay them, or be too grateful to them. She said on Saturday morning before she died that she was sorry she had never confessed the Lord Jesus and never been baptized. On Sunday morning I saw that she was going fast. I felt that I could not bear to see her die without hearing some confession from her. I went to her and took her by the hand and said, darling if it is the Lord's will to take you are you willing to die? She replied in a strong, firm voice, yes sir. I then asked her if she had a hope? She said, yes sir. I asked her how long? She said for some time. I know she had loved to hear preaching for some time. I remember brother Gold, when you were preaching at our association at Skewarkey and treating on the christian hope seeing her shed tears freely which gave me much joy of heart, and a blessed hope for her. In the time of her severe affliction she woke me up one night when she was in so much trouble she could not sleep, and told me some of her troubles, but did not profess to have a hope. I tried to console her by telling her my own feelings and exercise of mind. There is not the shadow of a doubt upon my mind but that she has fallen asleep in Jesus, and is now enjoying the rest that remains for the people of God, while I am left alone, sad and sorrowful, to mourn my loss. It is indeed a sad stroke to me. She was to me a good, kind and affectionate companion, and to be deprived of such a one is the severest loss that one ever meets with in this life. It seems that the hand of Lord is heavy upon me. This is the second time I have been called upon to suffer this trial, but I know that the Lord gave her to me, and he has taken her away, and I want grace and patience to wait upon him, and stand still and know that he is God, and say thy will be done, and feel reconciled to it.

On Saturday before she died the sweet and consoling words of the apostle were with me; "But my God shall supply all your need according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus," which seemed the only proof upon which I could lean my weary head.

Brother Gold, will you and the dear brethren and sisters every where pray for me that I may have grace to sustain me amidst this sad trial, and henceforward my life may be more devoted to my God and Saviour, for I often feel that if a follower of him at all that it is afar off. Yours in sorrow, affliction and trial,

M. T. LAWRENCE.

NORFLEET CUTCHIN.

Again the mantle of sorrow has enveloped our community, and we have been called upon to pay our respects to another departed friend. This time the Reaper did not choose a fair young flower, but the bearded grain for his scythe. Mr. Norfleet Cutchin was born March the 31st, 1805, and died June 8th, 1889.

He was confined to his bed sometime before he died, but he had no disease. He was swept into the grave by the accumulated storms of many years. The many long years that had passed over his head had each left its mark upon him and he gradually drifted from this world into another. Mr Cutchin was one of Edgecombe's oldest and most respected citizens, but few are spared to reach the ripe age which he attained, being 84 years 2 months and 8 days old. We know that in all those years he had many burdens, trials and griefs to bear, but we hope that he was only purified the more by them, and better prepared for his home above. He belonged to the Primitive Baptist church at Williams' of which he was a faithful member until his death. Often have I seen him at church when he seemed almost too feeble to be up. He has left a kind and faithful wife, one daughter and three sons, ten grand-children and two great-grand-children. He was highly respected by all who knew him. He was laid to sleep his last long sleep at Williams where he had worshipped so long and so often. One who has been among us for years will be among us no more in this world, in memory only will he live. Although we could not watch his spirit as it was wafted up through the fleecy clouds and rapped at the gates of heaven, yet we can imagine we hear the words, "Well done good and faithful servant." A man who was always faithful, industrious and steady has passed away, but his memory will always be revered.

MRS. ELIZABETH COBB.

Please allow space in the LANDMARK for the feeble tribute to the memory of my dear, devoted mother Elizabeth Cobb, who, after a lingering illness of about five months, departed this life on the morning of May 16th about 4 o'clock, making her stay in this world 62 years, 11 months and 3 days. Mother's sojourn upon the shores of time was that of a poor orphan, during her days of childhood, her father and mother both dying and leaving her when but a few years old. In consequence of which she had to live from place to place with relatives and friends, and none but those who have been like bereaved could properly sympathize with her in her irreparable loss.

On the 25 of Oct. 1848 mother was married to my father, the late William Cobb, and they lived happily together until father was called home to his reward beyond this vale of tears, whose death occurred on the 7th Sept. 1863, during the late war between the States. He died in the 40th year of his age. Father was an invalid, and came home from the army sick, and lived only about six weeks. He was a consistent member of the Primitive Baptist church, his membership being at Conetoe, Edgecombe county, N. C. In the death of our dear father a terrible blow was inflicted upon dear mother, and her little children, seven in number, the writer, the oldest and in the 13th year of his age; but her Heavenly Father, who knoweth all our necessities, was a father to the fatherless, and husband to the widow, enabling her to raise her children to be grown and all now living. In the death of father it seemed that it was all against her, but in the mind and purpose of God no doubt but it was working for her good.

During the year 1870 mother professed a hope in Christ and joined the Primitive Baptist church at Conetoe, Edgecombe county, and remained a consistent member of that church up to the time of her death, always endeavoring to fill her unless providentially hindered; but mother has been called away from time and timely things, no more to be troubled with the perishing things of this unfriendly world. While we deeply mourn our irreparable loss, we confidently believe it is her eternal gain. She is gone from this sin-cursed world, where the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary are at rest. She has entered that blessed sleep from which none ever wake to weep, a calm and undisturbed repose, unbroken by the last of foes.

The last time it was my privilege to see mother while living, (only three days before she died), she expressed her desire and willingness to die. She wanted rest, and said, oh! that it could be the will of the Almighty that I could take wings and fly away to rest, saying it would be best for all, and I remarked to her, no doubt it would be best for you, and asked her if she was willing to die. She said yes that I am. It is a great consolation to us that she has left such blessed evidence behind.

Oh Lord, give us hearts to be truly resigned to thy Holy and righteous will in our sad bereavement, and when it is thy will to take us from this mortal sphere fit and prepare us to meet our mother and father and loved ones gone before in that happy home above, where sickness, sin, sorrow and death are felt and feared no more, is the sincere desire of the feeble writer.

We extend our heartfelt thanks to relatives and friends who so kindly loaned us a helping hand during mother's long continued illness.

JAMES A. COBB.

MRS. HETTY LEWIS.

My dear afflicted mother, Mrs. Hetty Lewis, was born in Hyde county, N. C., April 3rd, 1815, and died at her residence on Goose Creek Island, Pamlico county, N. C., April 19th 1889, being 74 years and 16 days old.

She was married to Mr. R. B. Lewis in 1836, by whom she was the mother of ten children, three only of which survive her.

Mother professed a hope in Christ and united with the church when young. She remained a faithful member until her death. She was a strong believer in the Primitive Baptist faith. I have often heard her say, and heard her say on her death bed, if she was saved it would be by the grace of God and God alone, not of herself. She believed in God's works, not man's. She attended her church meetings as long as her health would admit of it, she them had meetings held several times at her home so that she might hear preaching which she seemed to enjoy very much. Her health was quite feeble for several years, she had a complication of diseases, the most prominent of which towards the last was consumption. In February 1888, she was taken very bad off, we did not think she could live but she lingered and suffered until warm weather, she got better so went to the church house to hear preaching twice.

On the first of March she was taken bad off again and continued to get worse until her death. She was the greatest sufferer I ever beheld, one could hardly be beset with more crosses, trials, and afflictions of both mind and body than she was, yet she stood it all with christian fortitude.— She said during her last illness she was ready and willing to go, it seemed as if the time was prolonged for her departure.

She often spoke of her hope in Christ. It seemed to be her delight to repeat this poetry:

How sweet the name of Jesus sounds,
In a believers ear,
It soothes his sorrows, heals his wounds,
And drives away his fears.

She leaves her children, many relatives and friends to mourn their loss though we mourn not as those having no hope, for we believe she has gone to a place of eternal felicity.

Mother was a plain, industrious woman ever careful and thoughtful, looking after the welfare of her family, a kind mother, a good neighbor, was ready to sympathize with the distresses of others. She was quiet and peaceable, a well wisher, possessed a forgiving spirit, taught her children to be obedient and respectful at home and abroad.

ZION'S LANDMARK PRINT

The Purpose of Zion's Landmark.

"Ask for the old paths where is the good way."

By the help of the Lord this paper will contend for the ancient Landmark, guided by its stakes of Truth, and strengthened by its chords of Love.

It hopes to reject all traditions and institutions of men, and regard only the Bible as the standard of truth.

It urges the people to search the Scriptures, and obey Jesus the king in the holy hill of Zion, keeping themselves unspotted from the world.

It aims to contend for the mystery of the faith in God and the Father, Jesus the Mediator, and the Holy Spirit the blessed Comforter.

All lovers of Gospel truth are invited to write for it—if so impressed.

May grace, mercy, and peace be multiplied to all lovers of truth.

The Subscription Price of Zion's Landmark.

For single subscribers $2.00 per year. Clubs of eight or a larger number $1.50 each, and the getter up of club receives a copy free for the time the club is paid. ZION'S LANDMARK.

DEVOTED TO THE CAUSE OF JESUS.

WHY DO MEN BELIEVE UNTO SALVATION?

A very esteemed and beloved ministering brother in Missouri writes me that a so-called Christian minister in his country asserts that there is not a verse in the Bible that teaches that salvation is the result of predestination, declaring that the text, "and as many as were ordained to eternal life believed" (Acts 13:48), should be translated "disposed to eternal life." I have before me twenty-four of the latest and most scholarly versions of the New Testament, lexicons, and commentaries, by various denominations, Catholic and Protestant, and not one of them authorizes such a translation. The Speakers' Commentary, by English Episcopalians, comes nearest to giving the above new translation, rendering the words "were set in order for, that is, disposed for eternal life," as in Syriac; or, the passive of this verb being used as equivalent to the middle, for example in Acts 20:13, and repeatedly by Josephus, as many as marshalled themselves, placed themselves in the ranks of those who welcomed the offer of eternal life. Compare 1 Cor. 16:15. The reference is to the efficacy of God's grace, not to His eternal purpose. St. Luke was stating a fact, not setting forth a doctrine. In regard to this remarkable exposition, which is almost totally different from that of all the other twenty-three authorities in my library, I would make the following observations:—1st. The Commentator gives "disposed," not as a translation, but as his own imagination of what the original means.—2d. I have not a copy of the Syriac version of the New Testament, nor do I understand the Syriac language; but the oldest manuscripts of the Syriac versions do not date beyond the fifth or sixth century after Christ; and Mr. Barnes, who perhaps understood the Syriac as well as Mr. William Jacobson, says that the Syriac rendering means "destined, or constituted," instead of "disposed."—3d. In Acts 20:13, where "en dia-tetagemenos" (a compound of "dia" and "tasso") is used, the verb is undoubtedly in the pluperfect middle, meaning "had appointed for himself," and has virtually an active meaning, the adverb "outo," rendered "so," being equivalent to an accusative object of the verb; while in 1 Cor. 16:15, the verb "etaxan," rendered "addicted," is in the aorist active, and has its object "eautous," "themselves," expressed in the accusative. But the direct middle is not common in Greek—instead of it, the active voice with a reflexive pronoun being generally used, as in 1 Cor. 16:15; and "esan tetagemenoi," in Acts 13:48, is manifestly in the pluperfect, not middle but PASSIVE, as there is no accusative either real or virtual expressed, and as the words "eis zoen aionion," "to eternal life," immediately follow; and thus the words must mean "had been ordered, appointed, arranged, assigned, disposed from without, that is, by some one else, by some other power and authority than themselves." The passive forms of tasso in Luke 7:8: Acts 22:10, and Rom. 13:1, certainly can have no active or middle (reflexive) meaning. The passage last cited, Rom. 13:1, contains the words "tetagemenoi eisin," the nearest equivalent expression in the New Testament to the

"esan tetagmenoi" of Acts 13:48; and the agent "upo tou Theou," "by or of God," being expressed, proves conclusively that the verb is in the passive and not in the middle voice. It is highly probable that the same words, "upo tou Theou," "by or of God," are to be understood with the same verb, in so nearly the same form, in Acts 13:48.—I can not comprehend how "the efficacy of God's grace" can be separated from "His eternal purpose;" if God is unchangeable, "the same yesterday, to-day, and forever" (Psalm 102:27; James 1:17; Heb. 13:8), and if "all His works are known unto Him from the beginning of the world" (Acts 15:18; Isaiah 46:10; Eph. 1:11), "the efficacy of His grace" is but the interpretation and expression of "His eternal purpose." So far is doctrine from being different from fact, that all true doctrine is nothing but fact; and, therefore, when Luke states a fact as to why men believe, he states a doctrine also.—5th. The English verb "dispose" seems to have been conveniently invented by recent Arminian expositors as expressing their idea of the meaning of the Greek verb "tasso," because the verb "dispose" in English has two very different meanings, first, to "set in order" or arrange, and, second, "to incline the mind of," "to give a bent or propension to;" and as "tasso" has the first meaning of "dispose," denoting "an arrangement by some one else," they pretend that in Acts 13:48, it also has the second meaning of "dispose," and denotes "an internal inclination," which even these expositors do not claim that it means anywhere else in the New Testament, and which the verb "tasso" does not mean in the whole range of Greek literature.

Jerome (A. D. 340-420), "the most erudite and scholarly among the Fathers of the Latin Church," "the most learned scholar, not only of his day, but of many centuries," "amply prepared, for the work of translating the Bible" "linguistically through his acquaintance with Latin, Greek, and Hebrew, and morally and spiritually by his earnestness and piety," in his Latin Vulgate version of the Scriptures, renders tetagmenoi (the perfect passive participle of "tasso") in Acts 13:48, prae-ordinati, "fore-ordained;" Jerome puts in the prae or "fore," I think, because the form "esan tetagmenoi" is in the pluperfect tense, which denotes an action finished at or before some other past event.—The English Catholic Bible renders the passage, "as many as were ordained to life everlasting, believed." The Italian version translates "tetagmenoi" "ordinati," "ordained, ordered, arranged, disposed by another;" the French version renders it "destines," "destined, fated, intended, designed, purposed;" the Spanish version, "ordenados," "arranged, classed, ordered, ordained, regulated, directed;" the German version, "verordnet," "ordered, instituted, decreed, ordained, nominated, appointed;" King James's, or the Authorized English version, "ordained," which is defined by Webster, "set in order, arranged, appointed, decreed," and by Worcester, "appointed, decreed, set apart, established, settled, ordered;" and by Skeats, "set in order;" and by Stormonth, "appointed, decreed, established." The Victorian Revision of the Authorized version (1870-1885), made by eighty-five of the finest scholars of England and the United States, does not change a word in the King James translation of the passage in question, but renders it, "and as many as were ordained to eternal life believed." Greenfield's Lexicon to the Greek Testament defines "tasso," "to arrange, order, set, appoint, constitute, devote, consecrate," and for Acts 13:48, renders the word "destine." The seventh edition of Liddell and Scott's Greek-English Lexicon, the latest and highest joint production of European and American scholarship, which has superseded all other authority on the meaning of Greek words, and which at once and thoroughly settles the question in the mind of every Greek scholar, defines "tasso," "ordain, order, appoint, arrange, draw up, marshal, post, station, assign, fix, settle," and gives the word no such meaning at all as an internal disposition or inclination. The verb "tasso" occurs only in the following seven other places in the New Testament:—Matt. 28:16; Luke 7:8; Acts 15:2; 22:10; 28:23; Rom. 13:1; and 1 Cor. 16:15. The old and the new English versions render the word, in these passages, "appoint, determine, set, ordain, order, and addict." The correctness of the translation "ordained" in Acts 13:48 is uncompromisingly defended by the eminent critical scholars, Alford, Barnes, Bengel, Brown, DeWette, Hatchet, Kuinoel, Meyer, Olshausen, Usteri, Webster, Winer, and Wilkinson. I will quote the words of a few of these scholars. Says Barnes:—"The language of Luke implies the doctrine of election; it is in fact that doctrine expressed. It was nothing but God's disposing them to embrace eternal life. And he does this according to a plan in his own mind—a plan which is unchangeable as God himself is unchangeable—is clear from the Scriptures." Says Olshausen: "In the words, as many as were ordained to eternal life, we must reckon the idea which pervades the whole Scriptures of a predestination of saints. The attempts which have been made to evade it are in the highest degree forced." Says Brown: "The language can not, without force, be interpreted of anything lower than this—that a divine ordination to eternal life is the cause, not the effect, of any man's believing." Says H. A. W. Meyer, (1800-1873) the foremost Biblical exegete of the 19th century: "Luke regards, in accordance with the Pauline conception, the believing of those Gentiles, as ensuing in conformity to their destination, ordered by God already, namely from of old, to partake of eternal life. Not all in general became believers, but all those who were divinely destined to this life; and not the rest. The literal meaning is to be adhered to, namely, the divine destination to eternal salvation. The faith foreseen by God is subsequent, not previous to the ordination; by the faith of those concerned their divine taxis (ordination) becomes manifest and recognized."

The 39 Articles of the Church of England, of 1536 (Article 17.), the Westminster Confession of Faith, of 1647 (Chap. 3.), the Savoy Declaration, of 1658 (Chap. 3.), and the London Confession of Faith, of 1689 (Chap. 3.), demonstrate that the Episcopalians 300 years ago, and the Presbyterians, the Congregationalists, and the Baptists, 200 years ago, believed in the divine and unconditional predestination and election of human beings to eternal life. The Eighth of even the Methodist Articles of Religion, of 1784, which is an exact copy of the 10th of the Episcopal Articles, uses the following language:—"The condition of man after the fall of Adam is such that he cannot turn and prepare himself, by his own natural strength and works, to faith and calling upon God; wherefore we have no power to do good works, pleasant and acceptable to God, without the grace of God by Christ preventing [preceding] us, that we may have a good will and working with us, when we have that good will;" and in Article 10, it is declared that "good works, are the fruits and evidences of faith."

Even if the verb "tasso" means (which, however, it does not) the internal disposition of the heart, every one who believes God rather than man, knows from the following Scriptures, that that disposition and faith and salvation are the effect of the sovereign, electing, and efficacious grace of God:—John 1:12,13; 3:1-8; 5:25; 6:37,44; 10; 15,16,26-30; 17:2, 3, 9, 20, 23, 24; Rom. 8:28-39; 10; 10; 11:5-9; 12:3; 1 Cor. 2:14; 12:9; Gal. 5:22; Eph. 1:4, 5, 11, 19-23; 2:1-10; Philip 1:29; 2:12, 13; Col. 2:12; 1 Thess. 5:9; 2 Thess. 2:13, 14; 2 Tim. 1:9; Tit. 1:1; Heb. 12:2; James 1:16-18; 1 Pet. 1:1-9, 21, 23; 2 Pet. 1:3.

No man can save either himself or his fellow-creature from eternal ruin; nothing short of the almighty grace of the Most High God can save a single Jewish or Gentile sinner from sin and hell (Acts 15:11; Matt. 1:21; Rev. 1:5, 6).

"THE SEALED DEED, AND THE OPEN DEED." (Jer. 32: 14.)

ELDERS GOLD AND LESTER, DEAR BRETHREN:—It has been sometime since I have written anything for the LANDMARK, and as I have been having some pleasant reflections upon the subject named above, I feel this morning like sending them to you as a token of remembrance for my brethren, the readers of the LANDMARK.

By reading this 32nd chapter of Jeremiah together with the last chapter of 2nd Kings and the last chapter of 2nd Chronicles, it will be seen that because of the transgressions and wickedness of the king Zedekiah, and of the people of Israel generally, the Lord their God had given them over into the hand of their enemies; Nebuchadnezzar, King of Babylon, had invaded their land and was now laying siege to Jerusalem.—Jeremiah the prophet having rebuked the wickedness of the king and having denounced the judgments of God upon him and upon his people, had been shut up by his order in the court of the prison. Like many of his brethren before and since, he had been counted an enemy because he told the truth in the fear of God. Zedekiah chose his own evil inclinations rather than the word of the Lord, and hated the faithful man who had dared to remind him of the right way.

But God did not forsake his faithful servant, but sent his word to him when in prison as richly and clearly as ever had been the case. Jeremiah had been put in prison for declaring that God would give Jerusalem into the hand of the king of Babylon, who should take it, and should carry Zedekiah into Babylon. Now in the tenth year of the reign of Zedekiah the king of Babylon had besieged Jerusalem as the prophet had said, and was evidently soon to conquer. The time of trouble and calamity had come. The whole land was to be overrun and all the people carried into captivity. All could now see that the word of God by his prophet was true.

Now from unbounded self confidence

the people would fall into the other extreme. Even many God fearing men would see, not a temporary punishment for their sins, but utter destruction of their whole land forever.—When there was need the prophet of God had not shunned to utter the judgment of God against the land, and now when the judgments were falling and men's hearts were failing them for fear, the "son of thunder" became the "son of consolation" by declaring that God had not forsaken and forgotten his land, but was only intent in burning up all the dross and filth. Though the people must be scattered and peeled yet God would not suffer his name to be blotted out of the earth. Israel had brought reproach upon his name, by the indulgence of such wickedness and rebellion as would even shame the heathen around them, both in their private and public life, and God would prove to them that he still reigned by sore chastisement. God sometimes vindicates his holy character by judgments as well as by mercies. But when the hour of calamity which he had sent should be past, and his name and truth vindicated in their chastisement, then would he again visit and comfort his people. There was now danger that this would be lost sight of even by the godly. Therefore the prophet speaks comforting to them; and this was the manner of his speech.

The word of the Lord said to him that his uncle's son Hanameel should come to him asking him to buy his field which was in Anathoth, because he had the right of redemption to buy it. Accordingly he tells us that his uncle's son came to him asking him to buy the field. Then Jeremiah perceived that the hand of God was in it. Accordingly he bought the field and gave for it seventeen shekels of silver, or about three thousand dollars. Now let us remember what this act signified to all the people. It was a work of faith. It was the assurance that Jeremiah believed that the land would again be inhabited by his own people. God had given him this assurance and had instructed him to seal his testimony before the people in this way. If any one should ask why does the prophet of God spend his money for this field at such a time as this, it would be answered, he must expect these Calamities to be only temporary and that peace will again fill the land. Faith is the testimony to God's faithfulness in our hearts, and our works are the testimony to our faith. Jeremiah here proved his faith by his works. Jeremiah himself tells us why he purchased the field and commanded the testimony, or the deeds, to be kept in an earthen vessel for many days. He says verse 15th, "For thus saith the Lord of hosts the God of Israel, houses and fields and vineyards shall be possessed again in this land." The general lesson taught us in this chapter is that while God chastises his people and sometimes sorely, he yet loves them and will not destroy them. Their inheritance is theirs forever.

But now I come to consider the special theme that was in my mind. In verse 11th we read that "ACCORDING TO THE LAW AND THE CUSTOM" two deeds were drawn in evidence of the purchase, one sealed and the other open, and were given to the proper officers in the presence of his cousin, and witnesses who subscribed the deeds which were to be put in an earthen vessel that they might be preserved many days; or until all these calamities were overpast, and full possession could be taken of the field. This was the law and the custom in all such purchases. When property was bought in Israel two deeds were always made cut and laid up in evidence. The singular thing in this transaction was not the "two deeds," but the fact that Jeremiah would buy at all in such troublous times. It showed that he believed God as did Abraham before him. And the seen things weighed as nothing before the testimony of God. He walked by faith and not by sight. Everything looked as though the end of Israel as a nation had come, but the word of God said they should inhabit the land again, and he believed God.

Now here was a double witness of his purchase of the field prepared. A deed does not convey the field and neither is it the field. It is simply the evidence that the field is conveyed.—The law and custom of Israel required that two evidences or witnesses should be prepared. One was open and the other was sealed. Both were laid up in a safe place. Neither could perish or be lost. Both agreed in their testimony. What one said the other said in proof also. The open deed could be read at any time, but the sealed deed only when the time for breaking the seal had come. If any man should dispute the testimony of the open deed then the seal would be broken by lawful authority and they would be seen to agree and confirm each other. Thus God had provided for the security of those who had any inheritance in Israel. There were always two witnesses to the right of him who possessed his inheritance there. These records were preserved in a safe place. How great is the care of God for his people!

Now let us not forget that these things are all types, and they are not dead things. We are not to gaze upon them as curious relics of a by-gone age. They represent the very things with which we have to do. Like Israel our sins often rise up against us and bring upon us the judgments of God. Like Jeremiah we have a personal inheritance in the land of Canaan. But it often seems to us that it is lost, that it has passed beyond our possession forever. Like David we cry in our shame and grief, "Will the Lord cast off forever? And will he be favorable no more? Is his mercy clean gone forever? Hath God forgotten to be gracious? Hath he in anger shut up his tender mercies? And I said this is my infirmity, but I will remember the years of the right hand of the Most High." Like Paul we find that we cannot do the things that we would and feel to be wretched and helpless and cry who shall deliver us from the body of this death! But still we have an inheritance in the land. This inheritance cannot be wasted nor mortgaged nor sold, but abides forever. For our transgressions we may be chastised, and the joy of our inheritance may be removed for a little while, and the enemy may overrun the land, but his mercies are not gone forever, he has not forgotten to be gracious, his promise does not fail forever more. But this we do not see. Our title is often hid from our eyes and we question whether we are the Lord's or not.

But our title deeds exist. And where are they? As with Jeremiah so with us. One is open, the other is sealed.—Our title deeds come from God. They are both in handwriting, and they both agree. One is his word in the holy scriptures. This is open to our view. The other his word of grace in our hearts. This is sealed. We may read the bible when we please. But the record in our hearts we cannot read when we please, but only in time of need when God shall break the seal. To read the bible is a comfort. It is the word of God we know. But still it is only when the Lord gives us to read in our hearts the witness of his love and grace in giving us an inheritance with the sanctified, that we can read our titles clear and triumph over every foe. We cannot break the seal ourselves. The lion of the tribe of Judah, and he only, can. The open deed contains life or light in or by itself to us. But when read in the light of the sealed deed how glorious it appears. And on the other hand the open deed confirms the sealed one. We need both. We have both. The possession, and he to whom it belongs are alike described in each deed. God's testimony in the word and our experience must agree or we have no inheritance in the land. If they agree then is our inheritance secure. The enemy may devour, but it is only for a little time. We shall enter in and go out no more forever. May God help us to read what those deeds contain as we have need day by day.

I remain your brother in hope.

ON SELF-MADE MINISTERS.

If all this don't prove the truth of the prophecy, I am a fool; and that men of this character are the very men pointed out by Paul; men who are laying every plan to make money by preaching, men who charge for preaching, men who seek gain by preaching, men who hire themselves out to preach, men who qualify themselves to preach not called of God, men who set out to make money by preaching, men who won't preach without a salary. Find a man with any one of these marks, and he is a self, or men-made, or devil-made preacher; for neither of the above marks had any of the apostles, nor has any minister of God got one of these marks. But the Jewish, heathen, and Roman priests, and all other men-made, have them. Then they have itching ears, itching desire after money, and it is this desire that has made the priests invent so many plans to get it, in all ages of the church. But no such plans to get money were laid by the apostles, as every man knows that reads the New Testament. Then plans in the church of God to get money to enrich priests have arisen from men-made priests and not from God's priests, in any age of the church, as is easily proven. However there can be no doubt but men-made priests have drawn many of God's priests into this snare to get along the better; yet with them and by them, that is men-made priests, has this plan of money-making by preaching been invented and carried on, to the curse of the church of God and the world. And by them it is still pursued both by law and begging; and the conduct of these men in teasing and un-casiness to get money, prove them to be the men that have itching ears; for by their fruits ye shall know them.

Tetzel could be hired by the pope to sell pardons to sinners, and so can some in this day be hired to beg at $40 per month; and thus there is a traffic in the church now as well as in the pope's day, and men show by such conduct that they are of the same breed.

These words, itching ears, again may imply a teasing and uneasy desire to hear things, novel things, and their own praise, on which the text seems to have a bearing, by saying, these men shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables. Now a fable may be pleasing, and by it truth may be illustrated; but fables in themselves are lies told to set forth truth. So if we refer to the origin of men-made teachers, we shall find this thing to be a fact, according to the prophecy by Paul, Was not the supremacy of the pope, mass for the dead, absolution, indulgences, consecrated wafers, purgatory, holy water, the real body and blood of Christ, transubstantiation, holy pilgrimage, and an hundred other fooleries, such as wax candles, images of saints as mediators, &c. all mere fables of the priests, and that too of men-made priests? For God never made a priest that would preach such fables and lies, as you must, I think, acknowledge. For the apostles were God-made priests, did they preach such fables? You know better. And God never did, nor now does, make a priest that would tell such lies for money; therefore so many thousands have been burnt and destroyed. So then a fable is a lie in itself, so were these things. A fable is to set forth truth: but they were lies told by the clergy, and they therefore pretended to set forth: truth but they were lies, and new lies, and novel lies to the church; strange lies, lies from high authority, pleasing lies to sinners, but painful ones to experimental Christians, thus to see the truth of God turned into fables by this heap of men-made teachers who tell lies for money; fairly proving that they have itching ears, and of course will preach novel things to sinners, and make the way to heaven easier than God has made it in his word; fairly proving that men-made teachers won't preach with the word of God, however they may make use of it in their quotatious as did these men. These marks I leave with you until I get more together.

Now the Roman priests were not all the men-made preachers, but other sects had learned from them to make preachers also. It will not be amiss to glance at them also. The Greek church has pursued this plan ever since she was divided from the Latin church, but we know so little about her and she troubles us so little, I shall pass her by; the same with the Mahometan church. But the church of England has given America great trouble in Virginia, Massachusetts, &c. and no doubt would now by her men-made teachers were it not for the cool shade of our Constitution; for they are the same bad breed in England and Ireland as formerly, or else the men-made teachers would not hold so galling a yoke of tithes on the British people as for the Archbishop of York to have for his year's preaching $88,000, and the Bishop of Durham $94,000, and Bishop of Winchester $79,000, and so on until it takes $50,000,000 to support these men-made teachers. For heaven's sake is it a gospel spirit to thus oppress the poor; if so, I vote it out of the world. But not so; the gospel spirit of Paul labored for himself and those that were with him. This is a men-made preacher's spirit; greedy dogs, sleepy dogs called in scripture. Yes, that cannot bark without you shake money at them; or tobacco would do before the revolution, for these men-made horn worms; and horned the poor Quakers and Baptists they did, in the two above States. And so would they now were it not for the laws of the land; for wolves are no better than they used to be before the revolution, they are the same bad breed and now would kill sheep as formerly were it not for the fence; for when the nature of wolves changes, then and not until then will I believe the nature of men will change. Fear and sunshine may keep off wolves from sheep, as well as a good pen. So fear and light, from fear of danger and self-preservation, may keep these wolves off, as well as the ever to be admired and glorious Constitution of the United States. Rally round it ye children of Columbia, and hoist the standard of liberty over it, and never strike it, nor give up the ship of liberty to religion nor civil despots, but with soaking the Constitution in the last drop of blood in your hearts: Remember and think of the blood it cost your fathers with suffering and treasure to deliver you from these tobacco worms and their tithings. Go to England and see there, and this would have been your case, had it not been for the patriotic blood of your fathers, you would now have been groaning under the horning of these worms made of men, made to eat Virginia tobacco and not to vomit it, until the day of Patrick Henry.

Are there any fables in this church? Surely, since they have schools at Dublin, Oxford, Cambridge, and fort William, to make preachers, there must be, first, lust, pride, wealth, and power, and hating of sound doctrine. These are the root of men-made teachers, and if a church makes teachers, it is a proof that lust exists; and she will not I hope at this late age deny she has not made them, since she made enough to supply the ships with chaplains and the colonies with a parson or two, who fled to their king at the approach of the revolution, like swans from cold weather, to look for warmer climes of money. Where are the fables in this church, of infant baptism, holy days, morning and evening service, the catechism, communion of the sick, churching women, burial of the dead, order of prayers, prayers for certain days, confirmation, archbishops, the gown, god fathers and god mothers, with a number of others of such like vanity fables? For all these the New Testament speaks not one word, as every man that reads it ought to know. But as lying is the trade of men-made priests, so as I have told you before, that a fable is a lie of itself, yet it is to set forth or make truth appear. So in this case, there is neither example nor command in the New Testament for these things; don't be mad, for I am intending to make truth appear for your good, this is my design. Then the above doctrines are nothing but fabulous tales, framed by Cranmer and his associates, just as they had emerged out of popery and the dark age; which was a great stride to the light. Yet now more light is come, I hope that the church of England will throw away this popish trumpery, and come to the New Testament for her doctrine, ordinances and discipline, and preachers' pay; and this perhaps she would do, were it not for the men-made teachers who can't bear the idea of preaching without salaries by law or otherwise. And thus they will hang on to their present liturgy and loaves by the church, opossum-like, as long as they can curl the tail. Read Lord King's speech in the house of parliament upon the retrenchment of the tithes of the bishops; the teasing fire for money burns, the itch of uneasiness causes them to oppose retrenchment vehemently, the god of belly is at stake; what man-made bishop will not take his part. Thus the opossums of former days would sing psalms, play the fiddle, dance, get drunk, and preach a little for good tobacco, or £133 6s 8d, marriage and funeral fees in the bargain. And they could turn the word of God into these fables—fables, did I say? Yes, for fables are lies; and they could and would set forth these lying fables for truth; but they must be paid for so doing. For men will tell lies for the devil for nothing, but if they tell lies for God they must be paid for it; hard case indeed. But you will say this is too harsh to censure holy preachers with. Remember words were made for use, and the fault is not in using them, but in deserving them. But I have said that the ministers of the church of England preach fables or lies; do you think it is saying too much of these good men? I hope to prove it upon them, or I am ready to make my recantation: for you will not forget the text: And they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables. You know I have said and can prove, that the Church of England has not a factory to dress ministers over, but to make them from the stump; be as great a fool as he may be, they can prepare him to get a living, if he can but get the license of a demigod bishop.

And in order to prove that they preach fables or lies, we will bring the liturgy or common prayer book along side of the New Testament, and see if I can do it. For this book you know is their common guide in praying, &c., and were it not for this book many of them would be without loaves, unless they went to work. However we will let all this pass and come to facts.—And first, is there such a name or such an office in the church of God as archbishop? If there is tell me the man's name. Was it Paul, Peter, John or James, or Judas? For, for my life, by the New Testament I can't find out; and if you can, you have got a better head and eyes than mine—so one fable. And your church retains this much of popery; put it away, as if you will read all ministers are equal in the New Testament, brethren and fellow laborers, and all of the same grade and authority and support. This office smells of a pope's cap.

Next fable—infant baptism. Every man that reads the New Testament ought to know that there is neither command nor example within its lids for this practice. This then is another fable in the prayer book and not in the New Testament; for there are no subjects but believers pointed out there for baptism.

Third—holy days. Where in all the New Testament will you find holy-days, such as lent, advert, trinity, the saints, days, epiphany, good Friday, Whitsunday, easter, Christmas, &c., &c., as set forth for the observance of the gospel church? Say at once and tell the truth—no where; that they are fables set forth for truth, when there is not a word of such religious observance in the New Testament. In what chapter and verse shall I find morning and evening prayer pointed out? No where. Christ has set forth one form, Our Father which art in heaven, &c. But the church of England has set forth a great many, as in the prayer book, for morning and evening, and many other occasions. By what authority have you bound this burden on professors? Not by the laws of Jesus Christ nor his apostles. Nor can you prove such forms, nor support such a burden and multiplicity of prayers for the observance of the church of God, from the New Testament; they are burdens imposed by the king and parliament, and not by Jesus Christ. And I may add to this tithing to support your men-made priests, and that tithing is not a law for the gospel church; this is a fable as well as the above, and this is a law of your king and not Jesus Christ, no where set forth in the New Testament, the only laws for the government of the gospel kingdom. Add to this, prayers for certain days. Strange indeed, if a man wants to pray, for prayer is want, that he must go and borrow another man's mouth; or pray with other men's words, and not utter his own wants and his own desires. Strange indeed that I must go and dress myself in other men's clothes before I dare appear before my God. Passingly strange that I must carry other people's hearts, words and forms, as an offering to God and leave my own behind. This is only lip service, while the heart is far from God. Carry the heart like Hannah, no matter for words; this is an offering that God requires, and not forms of prayers set forth by other men's heads, and sanctioned by another king besides Jesus—For we know not what to pray for as we ought, but the Spirit maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered. This is the way to pray. And again: I will pray with the spirit and with the understanding also. But in forms of prayer I must borrow my neighbor's understanding before I can pray. Then formal prayer is no prayer, it is fable, it is lying; for if I carry other people's words to God in prayers, and my heart don't want the things expressed by other people's words, my heart at every sentence gives my lips the lie. So then no man can pray, in the true sense of the word, but by expressing in the words the wants and desires of his own heart; and words are not prayer, no matter how eloquent, without the heart it is lip service.

The gown is another strange thing to me. Can you find any law, rule, command or example in the New Testament for this, that a minister of the gospel must put on so much black silk before he dare enter the pulpit? Is not this all show, all pride and fable? John the Baptist could preach in camel's hair and a leathern girdle; Christ could preach in a coat without seam; and Paul perhaps in tent cloth, and the cloak he left at Troas. What and where in the New Testament shall I find the gown pointed out? Why you know, no where. Then how came this fashion so obligatory on the church men? Why the king and parliament passed a law that men-made teachers should not say their preachment but in a surplice or gown. Then the gown is not a scripture fashion, nor found there; not a God-minister fashion, but the fashion of the king and mén-made preachers, both in the Romish and English churches. Then according to the scripture a man may appear in the pulpit in any dress he pleases, but according to high church law a gown must be had before a man dare preach. But suppose I am so poor I can't buy one; why no gown no preach. The first I ever saw was in Raleigh—now you have no idea how I gazed at that gownsman. A curious fashion said I this; this is a kind of dress for a preacher I never saw before. Why the sleeves what in the world could they cut them so large for? why they would hold ten pones of bread; and the tail, why flowing about so much? there is enough of that to cover a herring cart. Upon the whole, I could but conclude the devil had a great hand in the fashion, and that lust of pride was at the bottom, and that the wearer appeared only as a proud hypocrite to me. Since then I have learned more about the gown, that it was a distinguished badge of a men-made ministry to get tobacco.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD: — ZION'S LANDMARK is a regular visitor of our villa, yet it always bears sweet tidings of salvation by grace. And how comforting it is to hear the saints tell of their doubts and fears, as well as of the comforting influence of the Holy Ghost, for we all know the changes.

The piece written by S. E. Broyles was of special interest and comfort to me, as she expressed my feelings, better than I could have described them.

Yet while I know I'm just as prone to sin as the sparks are to fly upward I feel that the goodness and mercy of God have followed me all the days of my life. And he who knows no change has said, I will never leave nor forsake thee. Oh blessed promise! Yet Satan with his deceptive whispering tries to persuade us that we haven't been directed by the lovely Star of Bethlehem to the Holy Child Jesus.

But, "You may know you are passed from death unto life if you love the brethren."

Christ says: "If you love me keep my commandments." "And this is My commandment: That ye love one another."

I hope the house-hold of faith will try to keep this holy command, for God is love, and will be willing to suffer for Christ's sake, remembering that He died for them, and that they are now heirs of God and joint heirs with their Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Then should we not bear each others infirmities and forgive as Christ forgave our sins, and not permit the vain things of this fleeting life to sever our christain affections, but let brotherly love continue.

Brother Gold, I, with christian devotion often wish to meet you in person, and as I'm denied that pleasure, I frequently think of writing to you, yet my mind is so full of vain thoughts of earth that I fear my writing would be of no comfort.

I desire that your mind will direct you to us again ere long and that your coming will be to the good and welfare of Zion.

Asking you to remember me at the throne of grace, I am your sister in hope of eternal life.

EXPERIENCE.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—Having been somewhat impressed in mind, and hoping that it is of the Lord, I wish to pen down what I hope the Lord has done for me, and may it be some comfort to the dear children of God. In the year 1881 I became exercised about the welfare of my soul. I was alone in the field when I saw my lost and ruined condition. It appeared that I must give up all for lost, and sink down into everlasting destruction. All I could do or say was, Lord have mercy on me a poor sinner. I went on in this way about four months. The more I prayed the worse I got until in the month of November, on Sunday night, in the latter part of the night (I had not slept any that night) it appeared to me that I must die and go down with devils or condemned spirits, for it was the reward justly due me. But I hope the Lord spoke peace to my poor soul. It appeared that I was about as good as dead, but bless the Lord, O my soul, it appeared that an unspeakable bright light shone around me and my feelings were inexpressibly happy. I was praising God from whom all blessings flow. This feeling lasted me for about six hours then I began to wonder and doubt, and I often wonder and doubt, Am I his or am I not? This scripture often appeared to me. 2nd Cor. 4:6: "For God who commanded the light to shine out of darkness hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ." I hope that God has called me from darkness into his marvelous light.—About twelve months after I went to the church and told what I hope the Lord had done for me, and was received into fellowship with God's dear servants, and was baptised by Elder J. A. Burch, and in a short time I saw in a dream or vision the Holy Ghost come down in a bodily shape, as the moon, and struck me on the head and covered me to the feet, and in the year of 1887 I saw in a dream or a vision the most beautiful little orchard ever could be prepared by man, about the size of an acre square, and there was a road leading strait up through the middle of it, and a carriage standing there, and it was ornate with gold, and I stepped into it and it carried me up through that orchard and it took down trees fruit and all. The fruit was black. I awoke at the sight and got up. I was distressed about the vision. I prayed to the Lord, if I was deceived to have mercy on me. I then laid down, and it appeared like I had not more than struck the bed when I saw a great host of angels come down from over my head, and they surrounded my body; then I saw the familiar spirits come down from the earth in a bodily shape as a great swarm of yellow-jackets. They appeared to be darting right at me, but the angels of the Lord were between me and them, and they could not touch me, for the angels of the Lord are so I feel that the Lord's power is between his chosen and all the fiery darts of satan, and that they are saved with an everlasting salvation from the foundation of the world. God foresaw the fall of man before the world was, and when the first man fell, which was our father Adam, then we see that his posterity fell, and so says the word of the Lord, by one man's disobedience sin entered and by sin came death; so death hath passed upon all, for all have sinned and come short of the glory of God. So says the Lord when I looked to see if there was any to deliver, there was none; and so I see my dear kindred in Christ, that God made a choice in the fallen race of man, and gave them to his Son for his Bride, and so he left the shining courts above and came down to suffer and die for them, taking the transgression out of the way, nailing it to the cross, and condemning sin in the flesh, and hath ordained us to God the Father; and the blessed Redeemer says, thine they were and thou gavest them to me, and none of them is lost. So he says he came not to destroy law, but to fulfill. He came to accomplish that which the Father had purposed in himself before the foundation of the world; for he says I will do all my pleasure; so the Father works in his people both to will and to do of his good pleasure. So my dear kindred in Christ, it is not of us, but it is God's great love wherewith he loved us even when we were dead in sin he hath quickened us together with Christ. By grace ye are saved through faith and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God, and so he has made us heirs and joint-heirs with Christ, if so be that we suffer with him. So the Father saw the end from the beginning and predestinated us unto adoption of children by his dear Son.

KIND WORDS.

BROTHER GOLD:—Since I have been a subscriber to the LANDMARK it has come to me regularly and in good time. It is a welcome visitor. To peruse its pages is a source of great pleasure. In reading the letters of the correspondents and especially experiences there is much comfort to be found. In these we find a witness witnessing with that cloud of witnesses by which we are encompassed about. The editorials, it seems to me are filled with valuable instruction; sweet morsels to an undone sinner hungering and thirsting after righteousness. Withal I regard it as an able advocate and defender of the truth. May it prosper as it deserves, and when its present editors shall have taken up their blest abodes may the same God who sustains them now raise up others to perpetuate so good a work while there are lambs to feed.

Your brother in hope of a blessed immortality.

ORDINATION.

A Presbytery composed of Elders Isaac Webb, D. S. Webb, P. G. Lester, Jas. A. Matherly, G. A. Reid and G. E. Wilson, met by request of the church at Pilgrims' Rest, Pulaski county, Virginia, July 13th, 1889 for the purpose of examining brother John W. Hurst with the view to ordination to the work of the ministry. After preaching by Elder Lester the Presbytery organized by choosing Elder Isaac Webb Moderator.

Elder Lester led in questions, when it was ascertained that brother Hurst was sound in faith and doctrine. Whereupon he was ordained by prayer by Eld. Lester and laying on of the hands of Presbytery. Charge by the Moderator, and right hand of fellowship by the Presbytery and church.

Elder John W. Hurst is a young man of fair promises of usefulness in the church. He is firm and strong in the doctrine, and we feel to commend him to all lovers of gospel truth, and to the God of all grace who is able to keep him from falling and make him an able minister of the New Testament, to the praise of his grace, and to the comfort of his people. Pilgrims' Rest Church, called Bethel in the earlier years of its history, is perhaps the oldest organized church in South West Virginia. It is several years older in its constitution than the constitution of the United States, being constituted in 1774. The New River Association to which this church belongs was constituted in 1793, being nearly one hundred years old.

This Association has from its organization to the present time been greatly favored of the Lord. Its churches have been sustained through all the floods which came against it. But few of her members have ever turned away their ears from the truth and have been turned unto fables. She has ever been blessed with sound faithful ministers who were and are not afraid to stand forth in the front, and earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints. Those whom she has by the authority of heaven ordained and sent forth have met with a most cordial reception among God's people wherever they have gone, and none of them have ever been turned from the doors of those who are sound in the faith and who love our Lord in deed and in truth.

While the Primitive Baptists in this mountain country are a plain unpretentious people yet they have no compromises to make with error or false doctrine, but in much simplicity, and with plainness of speech do they proclaim salvation by grace for sinners dead in transgressions and in sins. The churches generally are in peace, and on the increase in membership, the quality of which is good.

GIBEONITES.

After the Gibeonites had made a league with Israel, and thus had deserted the other Canaanites, and cast their lot forever with the Lord's people, the other Canaanites formed a strong combination by uniting in the most formidable manner to destroy these Gibeonites. It is the nature of the enemies of truth, not only to hate Israel, but also to despise all that are friends of Israel. So that if one should become a menial servant, as a hewer of wood and drawer of water in the temple of God, he will thereby incur the displeasure of the enemies of God, and they will seek to destroy him. But it is better to be the lowest servant in Israel, even to a door-keeper in the house of God, than to dwell in the tents of wickedness for a season, for the protection of the God of Israel extends to even the most menial servant of the temple. The Lord God will deliver the feeblest and poorest servant of the house-hold, or serves any where in Israel, even if a hewer of wood. That is, all that are connected with Israel by league or treaty, all that are elect according to the fore-knowledge of God, are in safe-guard, and should abide under the wing of the Almighty.

Now when the Gibeonites perceived that they were greatly exposed to the malice of this powerful confederation of their enemies they at once sent messengers unto Joshua saying, "Slack not thy hand from thy servants, come up to us quickly and save us, and help us: for all the kings of the Amorites that dwell in the mountains are gathered together against us.

So Joshua ascended from Gilgal, he, and all the people of war with him, and all the mighty men of valor.

And the Lord said unto Joshua, Fear them not: for I have delivered

"The simple inherit folly: but the prudent are crowned with knowledge."— Prov. 14: 18.

them into thine hand; there shall not a man of them stand before thee." Joshua 10: 6—9.

They that would fight against the humblest dependent upon Israel, or the lowest servant of that people, fight against God. This is a sufficient reason why one had better suffer with the people of God, and serve them in the humblest way, rather than to be found fighting against God. For the Lord will avenge his own elect which cry day and night unto him.

One of the most wonderful discomfitures that ever befel the enemies of God overtook these armies of the Amorites. Never before nor since did God so hearken unto man as he did to Joshua, who commanded the sun and moon to stand still upon Gibeon for a whole day, until the people avenged themselves upon their enemies.

The most noble agencies of material creation, the king of day and the queen of night, obeyed the voice of Joshua and stood still while Israel smote her enemies. In the light of these monarchs that poured their brightness upon the scene of death that day Israel prevailed over his enemies and destroyed them. The sun and moon, representing the covenant of grace and the law or covenant of works, and representing the sun of righteousness and the church of the living God, pour their light upon Israel as they destroy their enemies who can not stand against the truth, nor can any place be found for them. It is in God's Light, and in the light of his continuance all enemies flee apace and are destroyed. The darkness cannot stand before the light.

It has been objected, that Joshua did violence to the laws of nature or of the universe when he commanded the sun and moon to stand still, or Joshua was ignorant of the fact that the sun does not move at all. For the learned men of earth say the sun does not move, and that Joshua was ignorant of Astronomy and of science. It is strange that the sun and moon obeyed him if he was so ignorant. Have you ever heard that the sun and moon, or even a small star, obeyed any one of the professedly learned men of earth? If Joshua gave a command in total ignorance of God's creation why did the fountains of light give heed to him? It ought forever to silence captious, ignorant man to see what obedience the sun and moon gave to Joshua. No commander of men ever gave an order better obeyed than was this command obeyed by the mighty forces of the universe. Is it not true that the sun and moon are the great driving wheels of the machinery of the universe, and that to stop them is to cause every nation of earth in all its parts to stand still? What a scene when all nations stood still for one day as burning and consuming witnesses of the vengeance of God against his enemies.

The world represents that God has done all he can or will ever do to save sinners redeemed by the blood of Christ. But contrary to nature and against all man's theories, a miracle great as the standing still of the sun and moon until Israel avenged his enemies in favor of Gibeon, does the Lord fight for Israel and for Gibeon?

The Gibeonites represent the man—the fallen Gentile sinner that is saved—that is in covenant by salt with the house of Israel, that is a sinner and therefore a servant in the humblest and weakest place against which Satan makes his most terrible attacks. What a dreadful onslaught does sin make on the weak, vile and fallen sinner under conviction as he remembers with shame his sins that cannot be numbered, and has no help or strength in himself.

He can turn the battle to the gate only as he cries unto Jesus our spiritual Joshua. In proportion as one has lain among the pots and dwelt in Egypt, or been defiled in his sins, does he feel the power and force of his sins as they all arise to slay him. What is there in him to resist them? Nothing. But he is in league with Israel. He hates his sins. He has turned his back on them. He has believed the report of the power of the God of Israel, and has come to make a treaty of peace and be a servant to Israel forever. He has forgotten his own people and his father's house. His only hope is in Joshua and the God of Israel.

The light of truth shines to put a difference between Gibeon and the other Amorites. Their hearts are hardened to rush on Gibeon to slay him, and in doing so they fight against God.

What is the difference in nature between Gibeon and the other Canaanites? None. Why did they not come and make a league with Israel?

In manifestation we see a difference. Gibeon chose to be servants to Israel rather than die, for they believed in the power of God, and they forsook all their own people. But the other nations hated Israel and hated Gibeon for making a league with Israel, and sought to destroy them.

The Gibeonites were hewers of wood and drawers of water forever in the temple. This represents the sinner that is saved. He remains a sinner, but he loves Israel. The lowest place is too good for him. He is never so safe as when serving in the temple.

He cannot fill his place unless he is at that service. There is no other place suits him. He must be protected in his place. The Lord defends him.

He always feels that his service is a low one, that is he feels that his service is very poor and not worthy to be named. He considers that others do better than he does, and dwell nearer the Lord, and know more of his truth.

But the light shines on him. The sun stands still and no more withdraws his light. His day is spent under the light of that sun that smites and destroys his enemies. It is in that light he sees he is a sinner, yet lives by the light or power that shows him his helplessness. That same light too separates as far between him and his sins as the east is from the west and destroys his sins.

Does not that sun that rules him control all the universal world, and slay all enemies of the truth? God who commanded the light to shine out of darkness hath shined in our hearts to give us the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ.

In death sin is destroyed, and the corrupt mortal body, answering to the Gibeonites is swallowed up in victory, and our vile body in the resurrection shall be changed and fashioned like unto the glorious body of our Lord.—Then the Canaanite shall no more be in the land. But not until the resurrection will this change come. 'Till then we must serve as bondsmen in our mortal flesh. But our strength is to cleave unto Israel, and be drawers of water and hewers of wood, yet all the while be drawing water out of the wells of salvation, and hewer squared by the Lord according to his word. WAR.

The Canaanites were seized with terror because of the report that preceded the approach of Israel into that country. Trembling got hold of them, and great fear. For the great God who divided the Red Sea, who fed his people in the wilderness, who caused Sinai to tremble, who divides the flames of fire, who caused the rock to follow them and give them water to drink, and slew great kings, who drove Jordan back, had sent great dismay on these kings of the earth, and their hearts melted because of fear. They did what the enemies of God always attempted to do. They confederated together, and sought by arraying their combined strength to overcome the holy one of Israel. Men's idea is to get all their strength together, to organize, combine, and then they can overcome. They said one to another, Go to, let us make brick &c. Let us work together. Let us be joined together. If we can all unite we can overcome the enemy.—The kings of the earth set themselves, and the rulers take counsel together against the Lord &c. Herod and Pilate made friends and acted together in the crucifixion of Jesus. Mankind form societies and organize, and act together, thinking such strength can prevail.—But what is that before the Lord? One can chase a thousand, and two put ten thousand to flight. The Lord can deliver whether with many or few. It only makes the victory more complete when all or so many are gathered against the Lord. As Samson slew so many more of the Philistines at his death by pulling down the house on himself and so many of his enemies, for there were so many more of them assembled within and on the temple at that time: So when Jesus was delivered into the hands of sinful men to do what they pleased with him all the enemies of the church were gathered against him to do what God's hand had determined beforehand to be done.—This was their hour and the power of darkness. Satan enters into Judas, and all the enemies of Jesus are gathered together. Every enemy of the church is present making his accusation. All the sins of all God's people are nailed to the cross, or he bore them in his own body on the tree, as he is made a curse for us. He treads the wine-press of the wrath of God alone. But out of Jesus the true Judah came forth the corner, out of him the nail, out of him the battle bow, out of him ever oppressor together. As every enemy of Jesus and the church was gathered against the Lord and against his anointed, so every enemy was here slain together and not one was left to tell the tale. Such another victory has never been achieved over sin, death and hell. We are more than conquerors through him that loved us. For there is an end made of sin, and everlasting righteousness is brought in, and there is therefore now no condemnation to them who are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh but after the spirit.

When all the kings on the south-side of Jordan, the kings of the hills and the valleys, and all the coasts of the great Sea, the Hittite, the Amorites, the Canaanite, the Perizzite, the Hivite, and the Jesubite heard of the conquests of Joshua, they gathered themselves together with one accord to fight against Joshua and Israel.

Was it not natural for these nations to fight for their own country as they supposed it was? Yet this land had been given to Israel long ago. For when God divided to the nations of the earth the different portions of the earth as it pleased him, he reserved this choice spot for Israel his portion. For the Lord's portion is his people, Jacob is the lot of his inheritance. He therefore gave him this goodly land as he had long before told Abraham, yet the people could not occupy this land until the iniquity of the Canaanite was fulfilled or complete.

Do not our fleshly natures, our lusts, our sins combine against the Lord and fight against him? The flesh lusteth against the Spirit. The elder or first occupant of the land is Esau or earth, and he claims the land. When the Lord sends his law into us does not sin rise up and revive and fight against the Lord? Do not all the sinful dispositions of the flesh rise up against the Lord and go forth in battle array? There is not a motion of sin that is by the law that does not muster its force against the Lord. There is a full enlistment and array of all our sinful lusts, the seven nations of the enemy, all are gathered against Jesus. Every devil and unclean spirit, every abomination and lust is gathered to fight against God. Then it is that there is such distress in the land. Sin becomes exceeding sinful and all its powers are arrayed against truth, "That sin by the commandment might become exceeding sinful."

The slaughter of the Canaanitish nations was indispensable to make room for Israel to occupy the land. For while Israel could not destroy all these enemies, yet the two nations as nations, could not dwell together in the land. You cannot put a new patch or piece of cloth on an old garment, or new wine into old bottles. Canaanites are not turned into Israelites, nor can Israelites and Canaanites dwell together as equals in the same house.

You expect one professing to be a saint to be above a Canaanite, and consider that there is a new creature and a new government, old things having passed away. One professing to be an Israelite must prove his faith by his works, and show that he is not the old original Canaanite with all his corruptions and love of idolatry. The power of Canaan is broken and cast down as Israel enters and occupies the land.

What a war this was. All the powers of the enemy unite and make a common cause against Israel. Kings and subjects, what we call great and little sins, are all opposed to the entrance of Israel. Every sin and lust of imagination, thought, word or deed unites in war against Israel, and when the great ones are weakened so are the small ones; and when the small ones are harbored or strengthened the great ones are too. That which smites great sins is against small ones too, (if there is that distinction) and that which would invite and encourage little foxes or small sins is not so unfriendly to large ones. He that offends in one point is guilty of all.

The entire power of the Canaanites must be broken, and hence all these kings are confederate and as one man go out against Israel, and in dreadful combat they fight for existence; but they cannot stand before Joshua, and are discomfited and slain, some escaping, but their power broken so that as nations they do not again occupy the land; but all that escape are still Canaanites and still enemies of Israel, and watch their opportunities to afflict and entangle the people of God in their distress.

How these lusts appear in us at times enticing us by their artful and specious flatteries and dissimulation into sin and distress. For if we sow to the flesh we shall of the flesh reap corruption.

While sin shall not have dominion over you, for ye are not under law but under grace, yet if you sin you are bro't under its power and die to the peace and rest of faith. For if ye walk after the flesh ye shall die: but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body ye shall live.

As long as Israel occupied the land of Canaan these old enemies sought to regain their old homes, and hence are ever watchful for an opportunity for such a recovery of their former abodes. So as long as we live in this mortal life we are subject to vanity, and the plague of leprosy is in the wall, and often we must resort to the priest with the old cry, "It seemeth to me there is, as it were, a plague in the house." The remnants of these ancient enemies and original inhabitants, sometimes alone, then in squads or troops, attempt to invade the land, and seem to put up a pretty strong claim to the premises. You are almost persuaded you are not an Israelite, and know nothing of the truth and are about ready to open your doors and be turned out of house and home, until your Captain lets you know that ye are not your own, ye are bought with a price, and therefore you should glorify him in your bodies and spirits which are his, and the Canaanite flees. But when you sin by denying your rights, and transgressing, you let the Canaanite in the house, and he wastes your land, eats up your pleasant fruits, robs you of your joys, beats you, shows no pity, impoverishes your land, until you are cast down in the dust; then you cry unto God who hears you and delivers you out of all your distresses. But when the Canaanites acquire the mastery they will flatter as a strange woman whose words are smoother than butter, until you are beguiled, then alas how cruel the oppression, and how devoid of mercy or pity are these Canaanites?

But there is a use for them. All things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose.

It is no more I that sin. It is not the Israelite that sins, but sin that dwelleth in them; for I know that in me, that is in my flesh there dwelleth no good thing. This therefore forbids my having any confidence in the flesh, and serves to kill me all the way long to self, but it is in this dying that behold we live, so that we must die to live. God makes the wrath of man to praise him, and restrains the remainder of wrath. When I am weak then am I strong. God is the God of the hills and of the valleys, or of all deep places and all high places.

While we have no continuing city here and seek one to come, yet every foot of land we take from the Canaanite is ours, and was ours before it was taken from the enemy. We only obtain a foretaste here of what is reserved for us. All we can take with weapons was ours before we took it. But all the Canaanites or all our sins are linked together and conspire together to resist the triumphs of Israel. The desperate fight made as truth enters the soul is typified in the combinations of these ancient Canaanites against Israel, and nothing but death swallows them up, but as we die we live.

Paul says, I bring my body under and keep it in subjection, lest after having preached to others I myself should be a castaway. Any Israelite, even David or Solomon, brought under their power would no more be spared than the most obscure servant. Sin will slay any and all

Mortify your members which are upon earth. Put off the old man with his deeds. The old man is fornication, uncleanness, inordinate affection, evil concupiscence, and covetousness which is idolatry. What a horrible monster is this old man. What are his deeds: anger, wrath, malice, blasphemy, filthy communication out of your mouth. The new man which we are to put on is the true Israelite in whom there is no guile, whose members are bowels of mercies, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness long-suffering. Col. 3: 1-15.

"We wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities and powers, and spiritual wickedness in high places. Put on therefore the whole armor of God that ye may put to flight the armies of the aliens, and having done all to stand, having your loins girt with the girdle of truth, your head covered with the helmet of salvation, your heart shielded with the breast-plate of righteousness, and your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace."

The Canaanites serve under tribute in Israel, but they must be watched every moment. There is no discharge in this war.

Even in Jerusalem the Jebusites or Canaanites dwell to this day, even in the royal city of David, even among the best Israelites, even among the best church members the Canaanites dwell. As long as you live they are cleaving near you, and it is not until the resurrection from the dead can you say the Canaanite is no more in the Land, but the inhabitant shall no more say I am sick.

Obituary.

MISS LILLY F. LUNDY.

On Friday, Oct. 8th 1888, after a brief illness of five or six days from brain fever, Miss Lilly F. Lundy departed this life. She had just arrived at the age of 20 years and a few months. She was one of the purest and sweetest girls we ever knew. Her bright countenance shed sunshine and happiness, not only in her home, but in the rooms and around the bedside of the aged and afflicted of her neighborhood for many miles around. She took special delight in visiting the sick and administering to their wants. She was not a member of any church, but in a conversation had with the writer the previous summer gave the brightest evidence of her love for Christ. She told her sister a short while before her sickness that she had made up her mind to be baptized and become a member of the church. Several times during her brief illness she was heard to repeat such expressions as follows: "Oh for a closer walk with God," "I give my life for thee," "I am clinging close to thee," "Every day, every hour." "Keep me ever near thy side." To her betrothed who watched by her bedside she said: "I am going home."

To her parents, Azariah and Rebecca Lundy and to her dear brothers and sisters, we feel to say that what has been your sad loss and sore bereavement has been dear Lilly's gain. For it cannot be that one so sweet and charming in life and disposition, and so Christ-like in walk can be forever lost to you. She cannot come back to you but it is your blessed privilege to go to her. May God's grace sustain you in this sad hour, and may this affliction work good to each one of you. While you can no more see Lilly on earth be consoled with the thought that her blessed angel spirit daily hovers o'er your heads, whispering words of comfort and words of cheer and calling each of you from earth to heaven.

SARAH CAROLINE WORKMAN.

Sarah Caroline Workman, the daughter of W. F. and M. L. Workman, born May 23rd 1865, departed this life June the 8th 1889, making her stay on earth 24 years, and 16 days. She grew up to womanhood without much sickness, until September 1883, when she was taken sick from cold, and was under the hands of the doctors off and on for about 3 years, when she seemed to get about well: but had a cough which ran into consumption and ended her mortal life. On the 4th day of April she walked out in the yard and fainted, and was carried to her bed and never was up any more; but bore her afflictions with patience and was resigned to her Master's will, and was conscious to the last, and said she would like to talk a great deal, but was too weak. She said she had hoped to get able to be baptized, but did not think she ever would, and said she did not think she had been out of duty as she had never been able, since she had a hope, but said she would like to tell me about her travail from nature to grace, but could not in words, but would in substance; and said for us to look in her bureau, and we would find some lines written by her within that time, which we found as she had said, true. When I read them I was in great trouble, but I was made to bless the Lord for his wonderful works to the children of men.

A short time before she died she took me by the hand and said she was dying, and hoped I would meet her in heaven, and called for the rest of the family and took me by the hands, and bid them farewell: then she called one and all and bid them a long farewell; then talked as long as she had breath to talk and said, Jesus suffered so for me, and said it was he that bought her pardon on the tree. I believe she had the brightest hope of any one I ever saw of her eternal happiness beyond the grave. Although we miss her so much, but we believe our loss is her eternal gain. I believe her spirit joined the disembodied host around the throne to praise Father, Son and Holy Ghost in that world that shall never end, and may we all be prepared to meet her is my humble prayer for Christ's sake.

(These lines were found in her drawer.)

I've been a sinner from my birth,
With my affections placed on earth,
I thought my ways and actions meet,
And thus to me my life was sweet.

I felt no want, went on at ease,
'Thought' I would do what ever I pleased.
And thus I walked the downward road
Which leads unto that dark abode.

But truly it was not long Before I found that I was wrong.
Death and hell came in my mind,
And then I could no pleasure find.

I thought I would amend my life,
And that would drive away all strife.
Thus I by self-work did begin,
But find that I got worse within.

Now o'er two years have rolled around,
Since I first felt my self cast down,
And still I have no pardon felt,
To ease this troubled heart from guilt.

I know that I the truth have scorned,
And often wished I'd ne'er been born,
Or had I died when I was young,
I might with babes God's praises sung.

Oh if I had no soul to save,
I'd ne'er fear death, nor the cold grave,
But now must I lament and cry,
For oh my soul will never die.

If I could only know indeed,
I ever should from sin be freed:
Or ever see my Saviour smile,
I'd be content to wait awhile.

But oh, I fear he'll ne'er forgive,
Nor bid me with his children live:
Then how can I contented rest,
Until I feel my soul is blest.

LIZZIE T. BRIGHTWELL.

I send to you for publication the death of my little daughter Lizzie T. Brightwell. She departed this life Oct. 17th, 1888, and was born Jan. 28th 1885 and was the daughter of James and Ella Brightwell. She was my joy and pleasure here in this world. The good Lord was pleased to take her from this I hope to a better world. She was a kind and affectionate child, and beloved by all who knew her. It grieves my heart to give up my dear little child, but the Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away, and blessed be his name,

MARY N. HARRIS.

I also send you for publication the death of my dear old mother Mary N. Harris, the wife of Anderson Harris, who was born Oct. 5th 1825, and departed this life April 8th 1889. She was born and brought up in Person county, N. C. She has been a member of the Primitive Baptist church for a good many years. My mother and father were both baptised the same day. She was a devoted wife, kind and affection mother, and beloved by all who knew her. She had 11 children and lived to see them all grown but one and that died while an infant. It has pleased Almighty God to take her from us. I hope it is for some good purpose. Oh how we miss her. I hope our loss is her eternal gain. She said she was resigned to the will of God.— She called all her children to her bedside and said I want you all to live a different life from what you have been living, and try to meet me in heaven with that blessed Saviour. Her disease was consumption.

SARAH E. BRIGHTWELL.

JULIA SOPHRONIA MASSEY.

I write to you by request of the bereaved husband and children for an insertion in the LANDMARK the death of the dear wife and mother, sister Julia Sophronia Massey, who died May the 10th 1889.— Sister Massey was born May 23rd 1848, aged 40 years 11 months and 13 days, was the daughter of Joel Hines and sister Julia Z. Mouden. Sister Massey was married to Needham G. Massey on the 6th of Jan. 1869, by Wm. Brown. Said sister with her husband and brother Jno. C. Hood united with the Primitive Baptist church at Smithfield, Johnston county, N. C., on Saturday before the 1st Sunday in May 1876 and was baptised 1st Sunday in June following by Elder Wm. Woodard.

Her funeral was preached by the writer of this to quite a solemn congregation before she was interred, on the 11th of May, from Rev. 14:13, "And I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, write blessed are the dead that die in the Lord from henceforth; yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors and their works do follow them." Also some comments on 32:17 of Isaiah, And the work of righteousness shall be peace, and the effect of righteousness quietness and assurance forever. Surely she was a beautiful one that came with the summons for the dear sister on a white cloud with a golden crown. The sister had been lingering for sometime with heart drowsy, she was on a visit to her step-fathers, hoping to be benefited by being with her mother, where she died.

Sister Massey leaves her husband with ten children to mourn their loss, the youngest about 2 months old; but while we sorrow not as those without hope, believing that our loss is her eternal gain, and that those that are asleep in Jesus will God bring with him.

"In this dark world of sin and pain,
We only meet to part again;
But when we reach the heavenly shore,
We there shall meet to part no more."

The hope that we shall see that day
Should chase our present grief away.

I visited brother and sister Massey when they traveled in birth by the Holy Spirit, and would preach to them at nights when meeting was at Smithfield. They had that great reason for hope, love of the people of God. It is known by those that are acquainted with them that their house was a home for the way-faring; not only so, but they were faithful to donate to God's ministers, and in that they were blessed.

May our God pity the children like as father pitieth his children. Lord bless them all through time temporally and spiritually, even according to thy abundant mercy, according to thy loving kindness. Shield them from all harm, cause them to be brought up in the admonition of the Lord, even in the foot-steps of their mother, give them the spirit of reconciliation to thy will in all things, and finally crown them heirs in thy kingdom above, where there will be no more sickness, sorrow, pain or death, where the weary are at rest, and the wicked cease from troubling, if consistent with thy will, is our prayer for them for Jesus sake, Amen.

NATHAN BROWN.

The subject of this notice was the son of Thomas Brown, a native of Caswell county, N. C., was born Feb. 22nd, 1809, died Aug. 19th 1888, making his stay on earth 79 years, and nearly six months. He was married to Mary Walker, in the year 1842, who died Sept. 22nd, 1847, leaving one child, Sarah Frances by name, who remained with her father until his death. A year before his death his daughter dreamed that her father died, and the road was bad and muddy to travel to the graveyard, and before she started she was bothered about some keys, and was asked whether he had a hope or not, she said she did not know, but she could say one thing, he was honest in his dealings with men. This dream left a lasting impression on her mind causing her to feel if it came to pass she would out-live her father. Two days before his death he told his daughter to get his keys and take care of his things, as he was not able, and when he was buried the road was wet and muddy, which caused her to think of the dream.

On the 14th of Aug. he went to the Arbor, and heard Elders Gold and Harris preach; on returning home he said he felt better than he had for some time. On the 16th he got worse, and laid on his bed and spoke of brother Gold's going into such deep things in his preaching, and the weakness of the people; told his daughter how he wanted her to live, and how he always tried to live, and I think I may truly say his example as a citizen and neighbor is worthy to be remembered.— He was one of the best citizens of the county, an upright, considerate neighbor, a man of sound mind and good judgment. He was remarkable for the quickness and accuracy with which he could make calculations in mathematics, having never learned at school. He made no open profession of religion, but we hope he is gone to reap the reward of such as work righteousness, and walk uprightly.

Since his departure his daughter, sister Sarah F. Walker has also been called from the shores of time. She was a true Baptist, a christian lady, and highly esteemed, and is sadly missed by the church, her neighbors and relatives, but we feel that our loss is her eternal gain.

This brief sketch of her father is written at her request for the benefit of their relations who are scattered in different sections of the country.

Y. I. CHANDLER.

THADEUS LACY JONES.

I am requested to send for publication in the LANDMARK, the following obituary.

Thadeus L. Jones was born in Beaufort county, N. C., March 12th, 1830, a graceless sinner, and grew up without hope and without God in the world, (as all the children of God until the time appointed of their father). Lacy remained a stranger to God till He in his goodness, visited him by his holy spirit, and convinced him of his perfection and his own imperfection. After he believed his sins were forgiven him, he joined the Baptist Church at Blount's Creek, on Saturday before the 5th Sunday in December 1868, and remained in that church a meek, pious and beloved brother until the day of his death, which took place May 31st 1889, caused by that fearful disease dropsy. In his death—sickness his sufferings were beyond human expressions; but like a christian, he bore it all with patience, and the greatest fortitude imaginable. He bore all his afflictions without a murmur. Medical aid was called in, an affectionate wife was by his bed-side, a kind and devoted sister set by him day and night; but all would not avail. The all devouring scythe of time must perform its office, and this bearded grain was gathered into the land of the just.

His great wish in his last illness was to talk, and pray with Elder John R. Rowe who was sent for, but he never came, which was a great cross to all the Baptists and a great pleasure to all the Arminians. But we think he can render a good excuse, for he sent word he would come. His friends and neighbors were kind and true to him to the last, and often talked with of the goodness of God, and we have but little reason to doubt, but he is now set down with our fathers, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob.

He has left a widow, two children, two brothers and two sisters, besides many friends to mourn their loss. A worthy man has fallen, and may the God of all comforts resign the bereaved to his holy will.

“Mr. Edward A. Oldham has resigned the editorship of the Charleston World and will become, about August the 1st, editor and proprietor of the Durham Tobacco Plant, and will change its name to the Durham Daily Globe. The paper will appear in a new and handsome typographical dress, and will be metropolitan in appearance and contents. It will be changed to a morning daily. The franchise of the Associated Press has been secured, and facilities perfected for obtaining the freshest news immediately after occurrence, from all the leading points in the State.

Mr. Oldham is a talented, energetic young man. He took hold of the Winston Sentinel some years ago and raised it from an obscure country weekly to one of the leading papers in Western North Carolina. The experience he has had as managing editor of the Anniston Hot Blast and editor of the Charleston World will be devoted to his new venture, and to making it worthy of support. We congratulate the people of Durham and gladly welcome Mr. Oldham back to the editorial harness in his native State.—Wils. n Advance.

"Ask for the old paths where is the good way."

By the help of the Lord this paper will contend for the ancient Landmark, guided by its stakes of Truth, and strengthened by its chords of Love.

It hopes to reject all traditions and institutions of men, and regard only the Bible as the standard of truth.

It aims to contend for the mystery of the faith in God and the Father, Jesus the Mediator, and the Holy Spirit the blessed Comforter.

All lovers of Gospel truth are invited to write for it—if so impressed.

May grace, mercy, and peace be multiplied to all lovers of truth.

ON SELF-MADE MINISTERS.

The next fable is, that of god-fathers and god-mothers. Can those noble beings that have that great name God attached to them, be found in the New Testament? For heaven's sake, such lying fables to be set forth for public use, is enough to make men pause and think when they read the prayer book. Did the children of Abraham before they were circumcised, have to give security? You say infants are subjects of baptism; if so, do for heaven's sake put your finger on that text in the New Testament, where any person had to give security before permitted baptism. Were there any god-fathers and god-mothers to be security for the jailor and house, or Lydia and house? Are god-fathers and god-mothers requisite on baptism? What foolishness and lying, good heavens, for learned men to impose on mankind, a word of which is not to be found in the scriptures. And what is worse, that even these men should teach and force men to lie by their religion; first, before infants require security or not baptise the child, and thus put men on lying. Where? say you. Look under the head of public infant baptism; what do you make the god-father and god-mothers promise on baptising a child? Dost thou in the name of this child, renounce the devil and all his works, the vain pomp and glory of the world, with all covetous desires of the same, and the carnal desires of the flesh, so that thou wilt not follow nor be led by them? Answer, I renounce them all. Again: Wilt thou then obediently keep God's holy will and commandments, and walk in the same all the days of your life? Answer, I will. Now what are these promises but lies? For who can curtail the covetous desires or the carnal desires of flesh in another person? What control has a god-father over the heart of a child, or how give him a will to walk in all God's commandments all the days of his life? Alas, the very god-father and mother don't do these things themselves: why then vow such lies before God for others? For your soul's sake quit such fabulous lying. There are no such words nor office in the New Testament as god-fathers and god-mothers. This office and practice is like the preacher, men-made so all of a piece.

Add to this the catechism, that piece so highly thought of by some in the world. This is the worst of all, for it is the priest setting forth lies to teach children to tell lies, as if they cannot lie without the teaching of priests when the scripture says we go astray from the womb, speaking lies. Look under the head, catechism. What is your name? Answer. N. or M. Who gave you this name? Answer. My god-fathers and my god-mothers in my baptism; wherein I was made a member of Christ, the child of God, and an inheritor of the kingdom of heaven. My God what lying is this! How absurd when the scripture says, ye must be born again; born not of blood, nor flesh, nor will of man; but of the word of God, that liveth and abideth for ever. He that is born of God hath the witness in himself. Except a man be born of the water and of the spirit, he cannot see the kingdom of heaven. Here born of the water means a natural birth and not water baptism, as is proven by Christ's own words: That which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the spirit is spirit—marvel not that I said unto you ye must be born again. Here the word again signifies a second birth; and if water baptism be a birth, then there are three births. But Christ showed the birth to prepare for heaven, that is a birth of the spirit. Has this child got it? Does water baptism give it him? No. Then baptism don't make a child of God, nor a member of Christ, nor an inheritor of the kingdom of heaven. Then you teach children three lies in this one short sentence. Christ said, except a man be born of the water and of the spirit, he could not enter into the kingdom of heaven. Was the thief baptised? You know not. Has he gone to heaven? This day shalt thou be with me in Paradise. And this was after Christ spoke the words. If then your meaning be that water baptism is one of the births mentioned by Christ, then the thief is not gone to heaven, or Christ contradicts himself. But the truth is, that there are but two births, one of the flesh or water, and the second of the spirit; and in order to confirm this, baptism is no where in the scripture compared to a birth, but is always compared to a burial. And you know there is a great difference between a birth and a burial, but not more than for baptism to make a child of God, &c. Hence I think I have proved upon you, that you set forth fables for truth; and that you have turned truth into fables. There are so many lies in that prayer book, (don't be mad, for I seek your good by telling you the truth, and for heaven's sake don't think me an enemy because I tell you the truth,) that I can't point you them all; such as a particular form to bury the dead, confirmation, churching women, I heartily thank our heavenly Father, the state of salvation, the sanctification of the catechumen, I believe, &c. when this child knows no more about belief, or what true faith is, or what these things mean, than he does what is in the moon. These things then prove upon you, that ye are men-made or self-made teachers. It proves secondly, that your church can't endure sound doctrine; for although your creed, or 39 articles, is sound doctrine, with some exceptions, yet these things prove you don't either preach it, or endure it. They prove also that your church is lustful, proud, wealthy, and wants to be honorable. It proves lastly, that you have heaped up teachers having itching ears, and preach for money, and have turned the truth into these fables. Now a word of advice. It is certain that your church made a great advance when she stepped thus far out of popery; yet all these holy days, arch bishops, catechism, forms of prayer and written preaching, god-fathers and mothers, infant baptism, churching women, with a number of other formalities not found in the New Testament, are the remains of popery and Judaism hanging to your church and these prove you a harlot daughter of the church of Rome, wherefore hear the voice from heaven: Come out of her, my people. Put away from among you all these popish fables; clothe yourselves with the doctrine, ordinances, and discipline of the gospel church, as portrayed in the New Testament alone, as you must soon all of you give an account to him that is ready to judge, before whom you will fall if his word be true. For you have added these things, and the plagues are to be added to such. And in vain do you worship me, teaching for doctrines these commandments of men, kings and queens, parliament and bishops. Come to the New Testament for law, and and leave all this rubbish overboard, and let your church shine in gospel simplicity, and be ornamented in the virgin beauty of the gospel church; so shall the sun of righteousness be a lamp of your path. But alas, you have too many men-made preachers for this; these would lose their bread and gowns, and who among you can bear that, to have nothing yet possesses all things; to be poor, naked and destitute, yet making many rich in the jewels of heaven? So I shall let you off at this and pass by the men-made preachers of other sects until they fall in my way again, and come to my proposition to mark men-made preachers out by scripture more particular, that they may be known no matter what sect they have crept into for money. I shall endeavor to drag them forth from this hiding place of view.

We come now to stick close to the scripture, 1 Timothy, 4, beginning at the verse 1: Now the spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter time some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils; 2. Speaking lies in hypocrisy, having their conscience seared with a hot iron; 3. Forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstain from meats, which God hath created to be received with thanksgiving of them which believe and know the truth. In the above verses we cannot be mistaken, for the prophecy has been exactly fulfilled in the Roman men-made clergy. For the Roman church, with the pope at her head did command the clergy not to marry, and to abstain from meats on certain days and on certain occasions; and the monks were great hands at this, as was Luther before his conversion to God. The Holy Spirit here saw clearly beforehand and pointed it out to Paul, the latter times; some, not all, should depart from the faith. These were men-made teachers. Then one mark of a men-made teacher is to depart from the apostolic doctrine; 2. he is operated upon by a seducing spirit; 3. he is sure to preach the doctrine of devils, or in other words, a doctrine contrary to God's express word. God himself instituted marriage, Christ graced it with his presence; it is every where in scripture spoken of and permitted and counted honorable, the bed undefiled; and no where by God forbidden. Then to forbid to marry is the opposite of God's command and permission, then surely doctrine of the devil and not of God. Thus this is a never failing mark to know men-made teachers, why they are sure to preach a doctrine contrary to express scripture; they are sure to bind on men to do things that God never commanded; witness, abstaining from meats which God gave a general grant for to Noah; and Christ said it is not that goeth into a man that defiled him. This doctrine then, when and wherever found, that is contrary to God's word, or is contrary to his permission, or that sets forth things to be done in religion God has not expressly commanded in his word, is the doctrine of devils; and the men that set them forth by preaching may by this mark be known to be self-made or devil-made preachers. And why? because the reason is given, having their conscience seared with an hot iron. A men-made preacher has then not much if any conscience about what he teaches true or false, whether it be found in God's word or not; so money is coming, they will as soon preach a doctrine contrary to God's word as any how, for to please men or their sect, or get money. Then whenever you hear a man preach doctrine in opposition to God's word mark that man—he is a false teacher. Or if he preaches and contends for doctrines, ordinances, &c. not found in God's word, say, men-made teacher. And why? witness the Pharisees binding their burdens on men; witness the Roman priest; witness the church of England priest; all teaching doctrines that God never commanded. You know I have proved they were men-made teachers. These men won't preach apostolic doctrine, old ordinances nor old discipline of the church. And why? because the reason is given—depart from the faith. Mark how—speaking lies in hypocrisy—seared conscience. Then these men-made teachers are hypocrites, as I said; they preach lies, as I said, and now have proved. Thus every men-made preacher in the world is an hypocrite, and is sure to preach lies. Who preaches a lie but he that preaches infant baptism? and from Roman men-made hypocrites and liars this practice first sprung, and they have found followers to contend for their lies, when there is not one example in the Testament. Go to the Romish church, and see the lying doctrines I have there pointed out. Go to different sects, and see doctrines taught not found in the word of God. And the reason is, men made teachers are about; and they can speak lies in hypocrisy and not choke nor make conscience of it, because seared with an hot iron. The society called the Temperance Society is the doctrine of the devil, yet I hope it will be overruled by God for good; for God sometimes lets the devil do good, but no thanks to him. Why say you, is the Temperance Society a devil doctrine? First, because it set out with a lie in its mouth, calling it a Temperance Society when you know it is an Abstaining Society. Secondly, because it is within a hair's breadth of the length of the devil's foot; for what is the difference from abstaining from meats, and the doctrine of abstaining from drinks, when both equally cross God's word, command and permission, as well as forbidding to marry? If then commanding to abstain from meats be a devil doctrine, why should not abstaining from drinks be a devil doctrine? I can see no reason, when God's word permits one as well as the other. Why say you, because men get drunk, and more is the shame; but God's word permits men to eat, yes, but not to be gluttons.

EXPERIENCE—CALL TO THE MINISTRY.

ELDER GOLD, DEAR BROTHERS:—I have concluded, after passing through a great many troubles, trials and afflictions, to send you some of my experience and impressions to preach, in order that when I am gone my family, brethren, sisters, friends and foes may know some of the dealings of my blessed Redeemer with me while in a state of mortality.

I have had two experiences in my past life, one in the flesh, the other in the spirit; one of the law, the other of the gospel. I was born of the flesh

May 8th 1816. Was the fourth child my father and mother raised. My father's name was Durham Hall; My mother's Nancy Brown. Both born and raised in Wake county, and both Primitive Baptists. My father was a preacher for many years, and absent from home a great deal of the time. I was raised to work on the farm in the week, and sporting in various ways on the Sabbath day. I rolled sin as a sweet morsel under my tongue, believing I could get religion; whenever I would do my part God would do his, and thereby I could become a christian. About the time I was 15 or 16 years old, there came a preacher to my father's, and preached there and in the neighborhood several weeks. He told the people about the punishment of the damned in hell and how to get religion, and not go to that bad place he talked so much about. I commenced the work, as I thought. Would fast and pray, but did not know what a great sinner I was; for I had never seen myself. I went on for one week, trying to get religion. I thought I was getting on very well. I went to preaching on Sunday, took my seat near the preacher, and paid strict attention. After preaching I got in company with my playmates, and left off seeking religion. Thought when I was grown, and settled I would then seek religion. I went on in this way till I was 22 years old. About that time there came on a camp meeting in the neighborhood which caused a great excitement among the people. I attended the meeting. There were a great many mourners; some singing, some praying, some shouting, and some talking to the mourners. It caused me to feel very solemn indeed. I took my seat some distance from the straw-pen altar. One of the preachers came to me. Told me my father was going to heaven; but I would go to hell, if I did not repent. Told me to go into the altar and get religion. I went. He talked to me a great deal, Said if I did not repent, I would certainly go down to hell. That aroused my feelings so much that I cried freely. I remained there until intermission.

Then they went out to dinner, but I went to the woods to pray. I remained there until the evening sermon came on. The preacher said to the sinners come into the altar and get religion, and I went in again. Could cry freely. I remained there until sun down. Then there seemed to be a good feeling going over me, and I could not cry any more. I did not know whether that was religion or not. One of the preachers came to me, asked me several questions, but I gave him no answer at first. He told me he was my friend, and I ought to answer his questions.— He asked me if I felt as bad as I had. I told him I did not. He told me to get up, I had religion. I got up, and it was soon reported in the congregation that Andrew Hall had professed religion. They drew down my name as one of their converts. I remained there all night. The next morning I went home and stayed two days, but I could not feel as I thought a christian felt; so I went back to the meeting again. About the first man I met after my arrival was the preacher who told me I had religion. When I met him I burst into tears. Told him I had no religion.— He said they all doubted their religion at first. My reply was that I did not think I had any. He told me to go back to the altar as a mourner. It was soon reported over the camp ground that I had come back doubting my religion. Several came around me instructing me how to do. Said when they commenced singing I must join them, and if any one got happy I must take hold of them, and that would cause me to feel happy. I was willing to receive their instructions as I believed that preachers knew all about the scriptures, and what it took to constitute a christian. So I sang with them, because animated, and felt much better. I remained there until the meeting closed. And went home from there, believing I was a christian. Several months after I offered to the Baptist church at Eno, Orange county, N. C. When I related my experience they did not ask me any questions, but received me into fellowship. I was baptised the next Sunday, which was the third Sunday in Oct. 1838. I remained very well satisfied the most of my time until the next June.

One day while thinking of my condition, and how happy I would be when I died, somewhat seemed to say within me, no flesh can be justified that occupies the ground you do, There was a touch at my heart which I had never felt before, for I felt condemned before the Lord. So much so that I could not look up towards Heaven. I went on from Wednesday until Sunday feeling more wretched and guilty before the Lord. I went to meeting on Sunday, but I felt like I was such a sinner before the Lord that I wanted to go off to myself to try to pray. When the people went into the house, I went down the road, then turned through the field in order to get out of sight that I might pray the Lord to have mercy upon me a poor sinner. When I stopped I cannot tell whether I knelt or fell down; for there was a power came over me that I had no more power to resist than the shining of the sun.— And there was a light which seemed to shine from heaven. In that light I saw the Lord. He seemed to be 25 or 30 feet from the earth. And in the same light I saw the judgment seat. I saw the dead stand before the Lord.— His power seemed to draw a line of distinction between the righteous and the wicked. And I saw but few on the right hand, only a remnant according to the election of his grace. But on his left hand I saw a large multitude with myself. I saw a large book opened, and in that book I saw my sins recorded. And the Lord seemed to look down on me in wrath and indignation for my sins. I tried to hide my face from his presence, but could not. I saw that I was destitute of the wedding garment, the robe of righteousness. I saw that I had never had any religion, but had been a poor deceived soul, and all that I had ever done in a religious way was nothing but sin and abomination in his sight. I thought that I heard the king say, bind him hand and foot and cast him into outer darkness:

there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. I thought that I was bound hand and foot, and I saw it just in the Lord to send me to hell. And about the time I thought he was going to cast me down to Satan to be tormented forever, I said, Lord it is just. After I saw and felt these things the Lord seemed to withdraw himself from me, and I got up and stood on my feet. I was astonished with great astonishment for the things which I had seen and felt.

This took place on the 2nd Sunday in June 1839. I was about one mile from home, and when I got so I could walk I went home, for I did not want to see any one. I went up into the granary loft, and remained there until nearly night thinking about the things I had seen and felt that day and trying to read the scriptures to see if there was any way for me to escape the wrath to come. I begged the Lord to spare me until I could repent; for I was such a sinner I was afraid he would kill me and send me to hell. I went on in this way trying to repent. One night I thought I should die before day. I felt that all my days had been spent in sinning against God. I had professed religion and thought I was a christian. I saw that I was only a poor deceived soul that had suffered myself to be deceived by false leaders; that I had not taken the warning which the Lord had given, when he said take heed lest any man shall deceive you, and I was without excuse. And O! dear reader, my tongue can never express, nor pen describe the awful feelings and views I had of myself. It seemed to me I was just on the brink of endless woe. It seemed to me I felt the pains of hell in my breast. I expected to soon be with the rich man in hell. I was much distressed. I could not rest anywhere. I walked the yard and wished that I was a dog, then I would have no soul. After sometime in this way I went in the house and felt some better, I lay down and went to sleep. I went on trying to keep the law. I would read the conditional promises in the old covenant and try to keep them; for I could see no other way by which

I could be saved. Thus I went on doing all I could to keep the law, but failed in every point. I saw the law was perfect, and required perfect obedience in me, while I myself was defiled in every part. My whole head was sick, my whole heart faint, from the sole of my foot even unto my head there was no soundness, but full of wounds, bruises, and putrifying sores. I saw that I was an unclean thing, that all my righteousness was as filthy rags. It seemed to me that I was under the very power and dominion of sin, and that it was a sin for me to eat and drink. All that I said, thought or did in some way seemed to be sin. I was afraid that I had committed the unpardonable sin. I would try to find out what it was, but could not. I wanted to be convicted, as I did not take that for conviction, but thought it was the foreboding of what I must suffer after death. And O, the thought of being banished from God's peaceful presence, and from his glorious power forever! It seemed to me that it was more than I could bear. I thought I was like Cain, my portion was more than I could bear. Sometimes I could not work, but would run to the woods, cry, and pray, roll and tumble upon the ground, wringing my hands and wishing I had never been born. Sometimes I would see the little birds in the trees, and wished I was one of them. I thought I was one of the most miserable beings on God's earth. I felt like I did not have a friend in heaven nor on the earth. I saw I was a sinner by nature as well as practice; that my depraved nature constituted me a child of wrath; it appeared to me that I was a vessel of wrath fitted for destruction. Sometimes I was afraid that God would open the earth as he did Korah and his company. I saw that every imagination of my heart was evil. Oh how I abhorred and hated my poor deceitful heart.— Sometimes it would seem to be as hard as a rock, and again I could shed tears freely. I cried to the Lord to have mercy on me a poor condemned sinner. I saw that the Ethiopian could as easily change his skin and the Leopard his spots as I could change my condition before God. I saw that unless the Lord Jesus saved me I should be forever gone. I saw there was salvation in none other. That there was no other name given under heaven whereby I must be saved. And I would cry and pray to him to have mercy on me. But it seemed to me that he would not hear me. One day while praying to him to have mercy on me I thought I heard him say depart from me ye cursed into everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels. I thought I heard the saints say amen to my damnation.

My tongue can never express my feelings at that time. While lying prostrate on the earth I thought that my damnation was sealed. I expected in a few minutes to be in hell to mingle my groans with the damned forever.—But there was a resolution in my heart to pray as long as I had breath, and thus I went on in despair and distraction. Some people who saw me said I was going deranged. And no doubt I appeared so to them; for I was so much distressed that I did not know where to go nor what to do. Sometimes I was tempted to destroy myself, but I knew if I did hell would be my portion. And O how afraid I was of that place. I was afraid that God would suffer the devil to take me off the earth alive, for I did believe that I was the greatest sinner upon the earth. I saw the justice of God in my damnation shine as bright as a star. I saw no way by which I could escape the punishment due my sins. One day while I was lying on the earth weeping and mourning over my condition, these words of scripture came to my mind. "Therefore being justified by faith we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." My burden of sin was all gone. I rose from the ground and felt calm and serene. It seemed like I viewed Christ on the cross, and through his meditation and intercession had peace with God. I felt like I was justified from all things which the law of Moses could not do. Yet I did not take this for religion at that time. I did not feel happy enough to shout. I only felt calm and easy—only having a hope for a hope believing the Lord would bless me.

This took place on Wednesday before the 3rd Sunday in July 1840, about 12 o'clock. That night I went to sleep; next morning everything seemed to have a different aspect from what it did before I lost my burden of guilt. Then I went on for several days not knowing where I was, nor what I was. I could not think I was a christian because I had foolish and vain thoughts. I believed that a christian was perfect, soul and body. I said that I was not perfect in the flesh. I wanted my burden back again, but could not get it.—And one day being in much trouble on account of myself I went to the woods to try to pray for my burden again. But while prostrated on the ground the Lord revealed his love to me again. I saw that it was the soul that was born of the spirit and not of the flesh, I then believed it was religion. So I went on for sometime very well satisfied. But one day I was tempted to curse the cross of Christ, and the temptation would come with such power in my heart it would seem to me it would overpower me, and that I would be bound to curse his cross in spite of everything that I could do. And I would not have been guilty of such a thing for all this world. I would shut my mouth and put my hand on it to keep me from cursing it. It seemed to me it was more than I could bear, for it seemed like my very heart would burst; for I did not believe that any one could be a christian and have such a temptation. This temptation lasted two or three days. One day I was in so much trouble and distress I had to leave my work and go off to myself to try to pray to the Lord to have mercy on me a poor tempted soul. And while I was prostrated on the earth with my whole heart poured out in prayer to God to have mercy on me, it seemed I heard a still small voice say, you have eternal life abiding in you, and that banished all that temptation from my heart. And I think I felt the love of God shed abroad in my heart by the Holy Ghost. (Romans 5:5.) I think I realize the truth of the scriptures where it is said Jesus was tempted in all points as we are yet without sin, and he is yet able to succor them that are tempted (Hebrews 4:15 and 2:18). I felt like the Lord had loved me with an everlasting love, (Jeremiah 31:3). And for a short time I felt as clean of sin and temptation as if I had never been troubled with such things. I thought that all my doubts and fears were gone; for I felt that perfect love casteth out fear. I love my Saviour because he first loved me. I was established in my faith and hope in Christ, seeing and believing from the scriptures and my own experience that there were a great many people deceived in religion by false teachers, as I had been.

And for the love that I had for Christ and for the benefit of souls I felt it my duty to try to preach the gospel to the people and warn them against false teachers. When God convinced Saul of Tarsus that he was wrong he convinced him that the Jews' religion was wrong; for that was the kind of religion he had at that time. (Galatians 1:14). Just so when God convinced me that I had no religion that could save me at my first profession, He convinced me that the Arminian system was wrong. For I was just as well convinced of my sin for professing that kind of religion as any other sin that I had ever been guilty of. And if it is the Lord's will I hope he may convince others of their error as he did me, before it is too late for them, for I cannot. It is the Spirit of God that convinces his people of their sins, (John 16). So I was impressed to talk to the people.

But I was young, and had but little education, and with all I stammered. I would go to meeting and hear other men preach and I thought they were doing their duty, but the Lord required something at my hands, and his word would come in my heart with light and power, and I would go the woods, and preach to the trees, but I kept my impressions as long to myself as I could, and if I was ever impressed to preach the gospel to believers, I was impressed also to warn the wicked; for the Lord said to Ezekiel, hear the word at my mouth and give them warning from me whether they will hear or whether they will forbear (Ezekiel 3rd chapter). The first person to whom I revealed my impressions was brother Simpson Latta, a member of the same church with me, who had been having prayer meetings in the neighborhood and I told him if he would make an appointment at our church on the 5th day of Jan. 1843, that I would take a part with him in the meeting. But he made the appointment for me, and when I got there the most of the members of the church were there. I tried to talk to them the best I could, but made a bad out. As soon as I closed my remarks, brother George Coggin a member of the same church with me, to wit Mt. Lebanon, arose from his seat and endorsed what I had said and recommended it to the brethren, and said that he had been impressed to preach for eight years previous to that time. But had withstood his impressions, but when he saw that I had taken up the cross, he could not withstand his impressions any longer. And then and there we both agreed to have an appointment the next Sunday.

So we both went out together, and he was an able minister of the New Testament, but I could not express even what I knew, but sometimes I would have some liberty, then I would feel much better, so the brethren at Camp Creek requested us to give them an appointment at their church. We sent on our appointment and I got my text a week before the appointment came on. "The Lord is good, a stronghold in the day of trouble and he knoweth them that trust in him." (Nahum 1:7), and thought I had it right so I could deliver it without much trouble, so we met on Sunday, and I went first, and when I read my text I could not see any thing in the text. All I had studied up was gone from me, and was in perfect darkness. so I set down, and brother Coggin rose and preached an excellent sermon, and when he dismissed the congregation I felt so ashamed and mean I left the congregation just as soon as I could get away without telling any one farewell. This taught me never to memorize another sermon. I said I would never try another sermon. I went home and remained in that mind for a few weeks. Then my impressions returned on me with power, and I felt the Lord required more of me than I was able to perform; for I stammered so badly that I could not express what I knew. And some of the people would say, "that fool Hall had better quit trying to preach," for somebody else was called but he answered.

So all these things were against me and I was in great trouble not knowing what to do. But I thought the Lord ought to exempt me from this duty, for I had not made my mouth nor tongue, I could not help from stammering, I felt of myself I had no wisdom nor ability to preach the gospel of Christ. So I went out one night to try to pray to the Lord to excuse me.— And while I was on my knees, this scripture came to me like a still small voice, with stammering lips and another tongue will he speak to this people. I did not know at that time where it was, but found it since (Isaiah 28 : 11). Then and there I was brought to believe that if I would go on and do the best I could that the Lord would enable me so to speak that the people of God could understand what I meant. So I went on to preach Christ and the resurrection for two years or more. Sometimes enjoying myself very well, but at other very much cast down. In 1845 I married and went in debt for land. I then thought I would preach of Sundays and work in the week. So I went on in that way for some four years or more. And I got very worldly minded. But I was brought to feel that I was not doing my duty. And I was in debt and a poor man and had a family to support. So I was in a great straight not knowing what to do. I think I felt "woe is me if I preach not the gospel."

I was in so much trouble that my family nor nothing I had was any satisfaction to me. Thus I went on from day to day until I think I was made willing to forsake all that I had in my feelings for the sake of Christ and his gospel. And one night while I was on my knees in secret prayer, I promised the Lord I would preach more. So I told my wife that I would have to travel and preach more than I had been doing.— And she said to me, "if you do what will become of me and the children?" I said to her, I was impressed to preach more, and if my impressions were from the Lord, and I followed them, and did my duty that she and the children would have food and raiment. And if the time should ever come, when they should not have it, I would then stay at home, and quit preaching. That has been about 40 years ago, and we have all had food and raiment to the present time. So I followed my impressions in trying to preach. I was soon called to the care of four churches, and I preached on the account of death a great deal. I was satisfied to attend to my churches and preach funerals. But in the date 1859, I dreamed that I was preaching, and thought that I was very happy. And that I was preaching the language of the Heavenly host, praising God and saying glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace and good will toward man (Luke 2 : 12). And I woke, and just as I dreamed so I was, for I was so happy that I thought I could not remain in mortality long.— For I was so happy that I became cold and speechless for a short time. I thought of some of the old saints that were gone to heaven. And I felt like I would soon be with them. For it seemed to me that I was as near gone from this world as a man could be not to go. But after a short time I revived again and went on praising the Lord; for it seemed to me that all the powers of my soul were blessing the Lord, (Psalms 103).

And I went on having sinking and reviving feelings from 10 o'clock at night until about 3 o'clock. My wife sent for the doctor and neighbors to come and see me, for she thought I was going to die. The doctor came and examined me and said there was nothing the matter with my system.— He never gave me anything. I told him I was in no pain, that I felt cold. I never slept any more that night. The next day I felt like I was going to die, and be saved. When I was under conviction for sin I felt like I should die and be lost, but I now felt that I should die and be saved. I sent out for two of my neighbors to come in to make my will. They came and wrote my will. I gave my wife instruction how to have me buried. For I believed that I should soon depart from this world. Though I was in no pain, I think I felt the powers of the world to come. I nearly lost my appetite for earthly food. I remained at home one week, I then left home to fill up some appointments with Elder Stadler. We met at the Arbor church, and after I was through trying to preach, Elder Stadler and the congregation sang a hymn, and it overpowered me for some short time. I was not able to stand on my feet. He got some camphor and rubbed my head with it. I revived and went home with him. After we laid down J. J. Scoggin being in bed with me, that same cold feeling returned to me, and he went out and informed Elder Stadler of my condition. He came in and examined me and said I was as cold as clay. I told him if I died, I wanted him to send me home to my family. I remained in that cold condition until late that night. Then I got warm, but never slept any that night.

Next morning, Elder Stadler came in and advised me to return home. I told him I did not feel able to go on with him to our appointments; for I felt so feeble I would try to return home to my family. I was about 35 miles from home. So I went on to Prospect Hill, and from there I went on down to brother John Fuller's. And as I was on the way it seemed to me that the shortness of time and the length of eternity and the worth of souls, and the fulness of Christ to save his people from their sins was all present to my understanding at the same time, and my tongue can never express, nor my pen describe my views and feelings concerning these things. For they were as plain to my view as the sun that shines on the ground. I was impressed to travel and preach more than I had ever done, and truly I think I was full of power by the spirit of the Lord (Micah 3). So much so that I was ready to preach at any time, and the impediment in my speech was partially taken away from me. "The heart also of the rash shall understand knowledge and the tongue of the stammerer shall be ready to speak plainly." (Isaiah 32). And I could not hold my peace day nor night, when I had the opportunity of talking to the people. The Lord has said I have set watchmen upon thy walls, O Jerusalem, which shall never hold their peace day nor night, ye that make mention of the Lord keep not silent (Isaiah 62). And I do believe that I realized the truth of that scripture in my own case, for it seemed to me what I saw and felt was enough to make the stones cry out (Luke 19). For I saw that the church of Christ was complete in him without spot, wrinkle, or any such thing. (Eph. 5). This revelation that I had of Christ and his fullness in the complete salvation of his people stayed with me several months. And I thought preaching would never be any more cross to me as it had been. I had the care of four churches at this time, and there was a refreshing time with some of these churches. I baptized 25 at one church within 12 months. But I was no longer satisfied to confine myself to a few churches, for when I saw the complete victory God would give his church over all his enemies through our Lord Jesus Christ, my very spirit was stirred within me. And I felt like I wanted to proclaim it to the ends of the earth.

And I went on preaching the most of the time until my throat became ulcerated. The doctors said I had the clergyman's sore throat. I also was plagued with neuralgia, and since that time I have not been able to travel and preach as I did before. One of the doctors advised me to stop preaching. I told him there was no discharge in that war until death, and that I wanted to die preaching Christ and his resurrection. I have been trying to preach salvation by grace about 40 years, and I am now 72 years old. And when I die, I hope to be saved by the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ from first to last.

A. N. HALL.

Remarks.

Elder A. N. Hall has long been a preacher in the Country Line Association. For about forty years he has been preaching. When he was shown his error he was baptized, for he felt that he was in unbelief when first received into the church.

He has been a remarkable man for his gifts and faithfulness in labor and zeal, in uprightness of conduct, in preaching no new things, nor ever getting up strife or vexatious questions in the pulpit.

Some men shoot up like straws, and want to be leaders and noticed, and they get up hobbies to trouble Israel. Such men are not worthy of notice, and should be discountenanced in the house of God.

Brother Hall has shunned profane babblings and has faithfully preached the word. Now in ripe and fruitful old age he has a good conscience, and the love and affection of his people, and still is preaching the same gospel.

WARFARE.

I wish to pen a few thoughts this morning concerning my pilgrimage, if the Lord will enable me to do so without offending any one; but I am so offensive to myself I fear I often offend others. It is far from my wishes to do so, for I remember that it is written: "But who so shall offend one of these little ones which believe in me, it were better for him that a mill-stone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depths of the sea." But my mind is so treacherous that neither warnings, admonition nor promises make a lasting impression upon memory's scroll.

I believe that the creator of all things is a God of power, that there is no power but of him. He has power to kill and power to make alive and none can stay his hand. He doeth all his pleasure, and upholdeth all things by the word of his power; the powers that be are ordained of him. He is also a God of purpose—He shapes the transpiring of all events to the accomplishing of his purpose. He has a purpose in bringing the most insignificant little one to his church militant. And this makes me doubt my title to a place among his people, as I cannot find a purpose in my being brought there; but if I am to be used only as wedge-wood, 'tis enough for that is more than I am fit for in myself.

I have had a name among the household of faith above fifteen years, and if I have ever been in the least degree of any use, service or benefit to the members of the family, either individually, or collectively, it is more than I can call to mind. Or if I have ever honored my Master's cause in word or action, served him in a well ordered walk and godly conversation, or glorified him in my body and spirit which are his it has left no imprint upon my mind. Alas: I am short in all my duties, obligations and privileges. I have done many things that I should not have done, and left undone everything that I ought to have done, yet I am allowed to enjoy a reasonable portion of the good things of life. My bodily afflictions have not been so great as some, I have food and raiment sufficient to satisfy nature's demands—I am often allowed to rest in heavenly places in Christ Jesus—to sit down at his banquet under his banner of love, and feast on the good things prepared for his obedient children and faithful servants. What would you think of such an ungrateful child with such an indulgent father, or such a slothful servant with such a kind Master? When his creditor demands payment for the misspent time and unfaithful discharge of duty, what excuse does this slothful servant give? fall at his creditor's feet, acknowledge the whole account, and beg for mercy. Then in steps the surety Jesus, pays it all and lets the culprit go free. Is there anything this servant can do to manifest his gratitude for such unmerited favors? Conscience brings up an innumerable host of things, but I fail to do the least. For when I can but faintly compare the heavy debt with the full and free receipt that cancels every item, I am filled with wonder and amazement.

But it was of childhood I wished to speak, my second child hood—for once a man twice a child. As people advance in life their minds seem to revert to events of childhood rather than present years. Thoughts of my early soldier days loom up before me, when I had been brought low in my own strength that I might be raised in the strength of another, cast down in my vain imaginations, that I might be lifted up among princes; humbled in my pride that I might be exalted in Christ, killed to the love of the things of this life that I might be made alive to spiritual things. I had spent years of toil wandering to and fro, up and down the earth—foot-sore and weary—seeking rest but find none—searching for peace among the children of pride and vanity, seeking the living among the dead, striving to have my name carved in the temple of fame among the wise and the great. But seeing all my fruitless labors are vain efforts overturned, and crumbled to dust—my fond hopes and brilliant notions of happiness and contentment among the gay, the learned and the grand completely obliterated, by disappointment after disappointment—driven like chaff before the wind—till there was no strength left within me, my case was a deplorable one, for all things worked against me. I was without God, without strength, forsaken and friendless, for I found that vain was the help of man. I was starving and fain would I have filled myself with the husks the swine did eat, and no man gave unto me. In due time the Lord took me up, appeased my hunger, took me out of the horrible pit—out of the miry clay, and set my feet upon a rock—established my goings, and put a new song in my mouth, even praises unto God. He showed me the vanity of all my toils. He showed me his church founded upon the rock against which the gates of hell cannot prevail—the people of the living God clothed in the robe of righteousness wrought out by a crucified Redeemer—his church in its beauty and holiness—old things were passed away, all things were new—I had all that heart could wish and was perfectly satisfied.

Then I was enabled to enlist, as a soldier, under King Immanuel's banner, take up the cross and follow the Lamb, buried with him in the liquid grave, aware that I was the only blemish—the only imperfect one among them. They were all well drilled and perfectly disciplined, and understood the handling of their weapons, for the weapons of their warfare are not carnal, but mighty through, God to the pulling down of strongholds. It did my heart good to feast my eyes upon the beauty of their orderly march. But I being a raw recruit at best, and taking too many carnal weapons along which were of no use, but rather a hindrance, soon found my feet were unequal and I could not keep step with this kingly band. My hearing being defective, I failed to understand when to march forward or when to stand still—my mind being weak I could not remember the password, my defensive weapons were awkwardly handled, my armor was too heavy and did not fit well, on account of my trying to mix in a little carnality—being blind I was sure to stray from the track or fall asleep on my post of duty, of a thick and stammering tongue I could not speak distinctly. In consequence of all these defects, the enemy was constantly making inroads and gaining ground on my beat.

Though my Captain was very patient, long suffering and indulgent—never rebuking nor upbraiding me, but encouraging and helping, yea bearing me in his arms, when overcome by fatigue, he would heal my wounds, and give me strengthening morsels—feed me with milk when I was too weak to relish the strong meat that nourished the veterans. And my comrades, the most lovely and forgiving band that ever marched by sea or land, never chided, nor made fun of my awkwardness, ignorance, and imperfections, as I fear I would have done, had the case been reversed, but spoke words of cheer, comfort and advice. Therefore I hoped in time to overcome all these difficulties and be able to endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus, and march with systematic order of the rest, but I have not attained to that perfect order. Instead of improving I grow worse. For as age comes on I grow weaker, and am less able to bear the burden and heat of the day. The journeys at times seem so long and tedious. I am ready to give up in despair of holding out to the end. There is no discharge in this war—my Captian has not forsaken me yet, and always gives a lift at the right time, though I have not learned to render the pure language of Canaan yet my speech being still partly Ashdod, mixed with other tongues. When I attempt to say Shibboleth it sounds like Sibboleth to me.

Though I am not able to speak the language in its purity, yet it is music to my ear, and the order of that happy, happy land, the people of the living God is beautiful to my sight. The food sustaining them is sweet to my taste And I hope to live and die with that precious band of brothers. I hope that blessed Captain will continue to be my strength through the rugged warfare of life, and when I am ready to lay my armor down, take me to that land where the weapons of war are needed no more.

I have not written what I intended, but believe, I'll stop and see what becomes of this. Hope I've said nothing unlawful, or dishonoring to the cause.

Truly yours.

ARE ALL TO BE SAVED?

Brother U. J. Westbrook requests my view of 1st Tim. 2: 4. "Who will have all men to be saved, and to come unto the knowledge of the truth."

Timothy was a young man. How lovely it is to see one in his youthful days remember his Creator. To see one young fleeing from youthful lusts and living soberly, righteously and godly in this present evil world is a lovely scene. However such may be cast off by former associates, and be tempted to run with the multitude, yet let such remember to be called to glory and virtue is so much better. Instead of associating with the profane, they are called to the company of the redeemed of the Lord, and gathered with the excellent of the earth in whom there is no guile.

Timothy was a preacher too, and such are more hated still by the fleshly lusts of the world. But Paul instructs Timothy how to behave himself, and how to teach in the house of God. We do not see or read of one apostle instructing or teaching another apostle.—Paul does not write an epistle to Jude, nor does Peter write one to John telling him how to preach or act. The apostles receive directly from the Lord Jesus by revelation that which they preached. We do not occupy the place of the apostles any more than Timothy did. The apostles have never had any successors, nor will they ever have any.

Gospel preachers in this day occupy the place of Timothy, Titus and other such elders that need instruction as Timothy did.

The apostle told him to pray, lifting up holy hands without wrath or doubting. One cannot lift up holy hands who lives ungodly or unrighteously.—Prayer is to be made too for all men, for all classes of men—for kings, or all in authority. To what end, or for what purpose? That we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty. God is pleased with such a life, and there is salvation in such a life. God will have all men to be saved, and come to the knowledge of the truth.

What does this mean? Some, who hold the universal salvation eternally of all mankind, rely on this scripture to prove their position. Others, who claim that Jesus made a general or indefinite atonement, not in particular for any one, but for all that would have it; giving all a chance, dying as much for one as another; yet his death not the determining cause, reason or ground of the salvation of any, but the sinner's act of accepting it being the cause or turning point that makes his salvation sure, hold that this scripture proves their position; for they say that God wills the salvation of every sinner, or wants and desires to save every one, and has done all he can do for that purpose.

Those who assume the universal salvation of all men trample under foot the scriptures that teach there is a hell and everlasting punishment as early as they teach there is heaven and everlasting life; for those scriptures that teach that the believer shall be saved also teach that the unbeliever shall be damned, Matt. 25; 46. "And these shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal."—Here one state, life eternal, is set over against everlasting punishment. So that we cannot for a moment accept the view of the Universalist. Every child of God knows there is a hell.

The view of the Arminian, which is the general view of mankind naturally and generally, while in a state of sin and death, or in unbelief, represents God as disappointed and failing to do what he wills or desires to do; (for what one wills to do he certainly purposes and desires with the force of his will to do;) and we cannot receive that view of the matter. For we believe that God does all his pleasure in heaven and in earth, and that he is never frustrated or disappointed about anything.

But does not this text say that he will have all men to be saved, and to come unto the knowledge of the truth? Yes; and in the sense that is here meant this will be done. For Jesus gave himself a ransom for all, and in due time it shall be testified or witnessed and proven to them, and thus proved to all. Paul tells us he is the apostle of the Gentiles in faith and verity, or truly. Timothy, as of Jewish extraction and faith, did not know the mystery that the Gentiles were also fellow-heirs with the Jews. The fellowship of the mystery that the Gentiles were saved as the Jews was not then known to all. When Peter perceived of a truth that not only among the Jews, but in every nation, he that feareth God and worketh righteousness is accepted with him, he was shown a great truth. Then he was shown that he should not call unclean that which God had cleansed.

In preaching and in our conduct generally we should feel that God has a people in every nation, and we should pray for all in authority in order that the people of God should be partakers of the benefit of Jesus' redeeming death on the cross. What right has a preacher to conclude that any man is not one of God's loved ones? We should esteem all men with proper good will, and as much as in us is preach the gospel to every creature, not knowing which shall prosper this or that. For the elect's sake the tares are to grow with the wheat until the harvest. We are to walk honestly towards them that are without, and to cherish good will towards them all. For we know the will and purpose of God will be accomplished in the salvation of all Israel. For all that the Father giveth to Jesus shall come to him. All those given to Jesus shall be willing in the day of his power in the beauties of holiness, and being willing they shall call on the name of the Lord, and shall be saved. These things shall in due time be testified to the heirs of promise. How blest are we if the will of God is so wrought in us that we serve him in the gospel of his son in all good will to all men, and in meekness, resting assured that the will of God will surely be accomplished, and that the Lord God shall never be disappointed in his will.

In the preaching of the gospel there is a manifestation of salvation to the heirs of promise, for they believe the word and are gathered into the fold, and are saved from this untoward or ungodly generation of evil doers—and they are saved from the filthy conversation or walk of the unbelievers who are without; and they thus come to the knowledge of the truth. This is a present or time salvation, and it is a prophesy of eternal salvation; and preachers should be ensamples to the flock in these things. Thus it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe.

The good will of him that dwelt in the bush rests on all that hear the word and keep it, and that preacher who so acts as to be an ensample to the flock is wonderfully blest and highly favored in the kingdom of God.

P. D. G.

IN THAT DAY.

Brother Wm. A. Draughn of N. C. requests my view of Zech. 13:1-9. Read this chapter. None could it seem be fuller of glorious truth, of the precious things of the kingdom of heaven, than these few verses.

It is only a few points that I shall attempt to notice.

1st. The reference is clearly to the gospel in the expression "in that day." For that is the true Sabbath or seventh day, and is the thousand years wherein Christ reigns with his people.

2nd. In that day wonderful things shall be done. A fountain shall be opened. The fountain existed before that day, but it was a hidden mystery, but on that day it is a revealed mystery, not something that ceases to be a mystery, but a mystery manifested. He is no longer shut up from the house of David and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, but is opened to them on that day, and opened to them for sin and for uncleanness. What? Is the house of David sinful, and are the inhabitants of Jerusalem in need of such a cleansing fountain? Yes and they need it applied to them. It is not only for them, but it is to them. What is applied to a man is received and appropriated by him, and is manifested to him in a stronger sense than when it is provided for him, though what is provided by the God of heaven for one is sure to be given to him. This is the gospel day which means that the blessings are actually given and applied. It could not be a gospel day unless this were done. Under the law the blessings are promised, but in the gospel they are conveyed and applied. The gospel day is therefore the day of salvation.

(b) Another wonderful effect of salvation is to cut off the names of the false gods or idols out of the land of Judah. The grace of God that brings salvation removes the iniquity of that land. Sin is of the devil, and came by man. Jesus came to destroy sin. God hates sin. His nature abhors it, and it cannot dwell in his presence. Jesus came to make an end of sin, or put it away by the sacrifice of himself. Some seek to argue or hold what charges God foolishly as being the author of sin. My conviction from the teaching of scripture and my own experience of the matter is that the fear of the Lord is to hate evil, and let every one that nameth the name of Christ depart from iniquity. The blood of Jesus speaks God's hatred of sin. Christ did not die to destroy the work of God, but he came or was manifested to destroy the works of the devil. Therefore one effect of the opening of this fountain is to cut off the idols out of the land of Judah, or from among the people of God.

(c) God also causes false prophets and unclean spirits to pass out of the land of promise so that no more forever shall false worship reign. So that if one shall yet prophesy falsely in the true church of God even his own father and mother shall say to such false prophets, thou shalt not live, and they shall thrust him through.

The world thinks it strange and counts the Primitive Baptists as hard-hearted and unfeeling because they cannot tolerate or bear false doctrine at all. Even if a child of one of these Old Baptist should preach or attempt to preach false doctrines or lies in the true church they could not endure it, but would have him thrust through.--- This is true of the church of Jesus Christ. To thrust through with a dart of course does not mean to literally slay him, but that the word of the Lord will slay such in the sense that such could not be fellowshiped nor endured in the true church in this glorious gospel day.

(d) Nor shall the prophets any more take pleasure in false visions nor wear a rough garment to deceive. That is in the light of that day there shall be no false vision nor deceitful handling of the word of God. Not that there shall not be pretenders, hypocrites or deceived persons, but they will not dwell spiritually or truly in the church of Christ. It shall be holiness to the Lord, for where the light shines is no darkness. The God of heaven and his worship is so holy that those dwelling in his courts shall not presume to run when not sent.

But among false prophets they shall be ashamed of their vision, and shall say, I am no prophet. What are these signs or wounds you have, shall be said to such. Have you not cut or wounded and marked yourself as a prophet or teacher? Have you not studied for the ministry, and received the mark of such? Did you not learn to preach? But such will not admit this, but will say these wounds I received among my friends. That which the church considers as wounds and a reproach and shame, such false prophets will consider as tokens or signs of friendship and approbation. The marks and signs of a man-made preacher are considered reproachful and disgraceful wounds in the eyes of the house of David and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, in the day this fountain is opened for sin and uncleanness to them; but the false teachers claim they are honorable badges received in the house of their friends. They glory in their shame.

2nd. A most wonderful truth is stated in verse 7: "Awake O sword against my shepherd, and against the man that is my fellow, saith the Lord of hosts." &c. Jesus is the fellow of the Lord God. What a wonderful Redeemer; the Lord of the whole earth is Jesus.

The sword of justice awakes which had long been slumbering, and it smites the shepherd of the sheep. The shepherd is bound for the sheep and gives his life for them. While justice said Jesus must die, because he bore their sins in his own body, he willingly dies. He gave his life a ransom for many. It was not extorted or wrung from him as a felon convicted dies by force of law. Jesus gave himself in loving obedience to the Father, and because he loved the sheep. As the good shepherd he gave his life for the sheep. The righteousness of God through the faith of Christ is manifested in the justification of him that believes in Jesus. God declares his righteousness in the remission of sins that are passed through the forbearance of God.

The believer receives the witness of his justification before God through the blood of Jesus Christ. How then could one be eternally lost whose sins

Jesus bore on the tree, and for whom Jesus made atonement and obtained eternal redemption?

When Jesus died for the sheep one died for all, and hence all died. For in the one death of the one for the many so complete by efficacious it is that all died; "We thus judge that if one died for all then were all dead: 2nd Cor 5: 14.

Smite the shepherd and the sheep shall be scattered. Jesus said, if ye take me let these go their way. The shepherd is taken and smitten and the sheep go free, for God turne his hand on the little ones to cover and shelter them.

3rd How purging is the power, that saves, and how it reduces to the third part: for in all the land two parts shall be cut off and die, and a third part shall be saved. By the third part is not meant a numerical third part but the remnant or last part, that which men reject,

How small the part that is saved. When the Lord takes a sinner in hand to teach him how does that man become small and get down to be less than nothing and vanity. Before God teaches him he esteems himself as some great one, but when humbled how small he becomes. What is there that fire does not lessen the size if as it consumes it? It reduces wood, hay, and stubble to ashes.

Precious metals are found in small quantities, while matter that can be burned is found in larger bulks. The people of God are tried as gold and silver are tried. They are brought through the fire and shine in glory in the kingdom of God. But in their own experience how small are they. The third part, the last part, a remnant according to the election of grace is but the filth and the off-scouring of this world. Less than nothing and vanity, and the chief of sinners, do the people of God esteem themselves to be.

ORDINATION.

By request of the church at Little Flock, Floyd County, Virginia, for a Presbytery to ordain Brother F. C. Reynolds to work of the ministry if found qualified, Elders Amos Dickerson and P. G. Lester met with the church on Friday, July 19th 1889. Elder William Lundy, from the Mountain Association, being present was called to their assistance.

After a sermon by Elder Lester, the Presbytery was organized by choosing Elder Dickerson, the pastor of the church, moderator. Elder Lester led in questions, whereby brother Reynolds was found sound in the faith. and also of good report of them that are without, whereupon he was set apart by prayer and laying on of hands of the Presbytery. Elder Lundy led in prayer. The charge was delivered by Elder Lester..

We feel to commend Brother Reynolds to the favor of the brethren wherever God in his Providence may cast his lot. And we trust he will have a mind to visit the churches and other places for preaching. Especially is it proper for young preachers to make appointments for themselves, in places where there are no regular appointments by older ministers. Some of our young ministers depend too much on going to the regular meetings of pastors, and preaching to congregations other than their own. To a certain extent this is right, but it is often carried too far, or to the extent that the pastors preach but little to their charges. The way for one to see whether he amounts to anything as a preacher, is to appoint for himself, and see if any one comes to hear him. Then he builds up for himself, whereby his usefulness is fully utilized, or his nothingness fully established.

Many times in our mountain countries where Primitive Baptists seem to thrive best, and where preachers seem to be more numerous, there will be from three to six preachers present, and sometimes the majority, if not all of them, have more or less to say, which would seem to be enough to tire out any congregation of people however patient they might be. While many other communities have no preaching for that day. Would it not be better to scatter out? Christ sent out the apostles two by two, and so they continued as is instanced in a number of places in the Acts of the Apostles.

Sometimes men are ordained, and they rarely ever get beyond the bounds of their home church. Ordination is not a requisite for one to stay at home, but to go and preach. He can stay at home too much without being ordained to the work of the ministry. Preachers should let their moderation be known. They should neither be too timid nor too forward, but each should endeavor to stand in his place. Let each one abide in the calling wherewith he is called. Each one should study to show himself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth.

Obituary.

ELDER JOHN H. MYERS.

Elder John H. Myers was born in Decatur, Ill., on Oct. 12th, 1830, and spent his early days with his father on the farm. He joined Concord church of Predestinarian Baptists, was licensed to preach by said church, and ordained to the gospel ministry by a Presbytery composed of Elders J. B. Moore, Boman, and John Allsberry on Saturday before the 4th Sunday in May 1865. For 30 years Elder Myers was an active minister and able defender of the doctrine of salvation by grace. Until a few year ago he had four churches under his charge. He departed this life at Decatur, Ill. on Feb. 11th, 1889. The funeral discourse was preached by the writer at the Concord church, at Cerro Gordo, March 10th 1889 to a large and well-composed audience of friends and relatives.

M. A. HARRIS:

EMPSON FLORENCE.

The subject of this sketch was the son of Toliver Florence, of Caswell county, N. C., and born Sept. 19th 1820, and departed this life Aug. 28th, 1888, making his stay on earth 67 years, 11 months and 9 days. He was married to Eliza Boswell, and raised six children, 5 sons and 1 daughter, all grown. He joined the church at Arbor and was baptized 1845. He was a useful and orderly member, noted for his constant attendance at the monthly meetings, sound in the faith, showing his faith by his works. He was one of the best citizens of his county, a good neighbor, and friend, of a lively and cheerful disposition, a kind and indulgent father, a good and provident husband; but he is gone to be here no more, and is sadly missed by the church, his children and numerous friends, and acquaintance; but we believe his soul is gone to the celestial city, while the sleeping dust awaits the voice of God in the resurrection morn, when it will rise in the glorious image of Jesus, and so ever be with the Lord.

May the Lord bless the bereaved children and relations, and prepare them to meet where sickness and sorrow, pain and death are felt and feared no more,
Y. I. C.

SUSAN R. HARBOUR.

Susan R., wife of Elder M. G. Harbour, Moderator of Fisher's River Primitive Baptist Association, and daughter of Jas. Joyce, who for years was Clerk of New River Primitive Baptist Association, was born Nov. 15th, 1837, in Patrick county, Va. She was married to M. G. Harbour Dec. 2nd. 1856. In a few days they moved to Surry county, N. C., where they lived until her death. In the Spring of 1869 she joined the Primitive Baptist church at Arrarat meeting house, and was baptized by Elder John Jones. She remained a member of that body some 18 years, when she took a letter and joined an arm of Hagan's Creek church at Union meeting house, which was soon constituted into a church with 45 members. In the mean time a cancer appeared in the right eye. Though thus afflicted she took great interest in the in-gathering at Union, which prosperity she was not long to enjoy; for the cancer soon spread through her system, causing such suffering as none living can realize, even to the dividing asunder of soul and body, which (death) resulted April 4th 1889.

She leaves a husband and 11 children, besides relatives and many friends to lament their untimely loss. She was a devoted wife and took great pleasure in entertaining Primitive Baptists. As a mother, her faithfulness cannot be too highly spoken of. As a christian she had no superior (we believe) giving great devotion to the cause of Christ, rejoicing with them that rejoice; weeping with them that weep. Her seat in the church was never vacant when she was able to fill it. Her voice was ready to defend the truth of Christ. Her tongue ready to lisp his praise. But alas! her husband and children no more hear the coming of her feet, the meekness of her voice, her seat in the family is vacant, her husband has lost a wife, her little children no longer know the protection and love of a mother. Her seat in church is vacant never to be filled. What a loss! What a sad bereavement! But our loss is her gain, while we are yet in the fight, she is free. "No more to weep, no more to sigh, no more to suffer pain. She dwells in happiness on high, where Christ immortal reigns." Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. Could we but behold her as she now is, we could rejoice over her exchange of homes, to see her clothed in wrought gold of Ophir, in a raiment of needlework, all glorious within, with gladness and rejoicing she is now with the King,

"And when she's been there ten thousand year,
Bright shining as the sun,
She's no less days to sing His praise
Than when she first begun."

JESSE A. ASHBURN.

JAMES M. HINES.

He was born April 11th 1811, and died June 1st, 1889. Passing away is truly a part of earth. It lends a death like air to our gay enjoyments, and mingles sorrow with our cups of bliss. It stops forever our happy labors and frustrates our choicest plans. Those whom we learn to love die, and the cold earth presses the lips we loved to kiss, and freezes the heart tuned to beat in unison with our own. Grave-yards are solemn volumes in which even the blind may read upon their marble pages the records of hopes all departed.

The weight of years was on our dear father, and his locks were changed to the gray filaments of wisdom, but his heart was young, and his mind was active as ever, and with the sweet consciousness of having done the best he could, with the precious life God had given, he waited with the perfect resignation for his master to call him home. He was confined to his bed about a week, and on Wednesday night before he died Saturday, he aroused from seemingly a refreshing sleep, raised up in bed, and said, "I feel better, let me sit up." Willing arms supported him, and thus reclining, he talked cheerfully for about five minutes, when suddenly his strength all seem to leave him, and looking upward he lisped one word, the name of his departed wife, and another of his children, then sank back helpless among the pillows. Restoratives were tenderly administered, and when consciousness returned, he asked them not to rub him, saying, "I am nearly gone, you cannot revive me. I am perfectly willing to God's will, Oh! God if it can be thy will take me; this is a sinful world, and I am tired. I want to go home, let me rest." Directly afterward he said again, "I see several lights burning, they have all gone out now, but one. After saying this nature could support no longer, and he relapsed in the stupor which lasted until he died. I asked him several times did anything hurt him, he would shake his head indicating no. As I pressed the feeble pulse and held the dying hand—made brown and rough by many summers' toil procuring homes for his children, dear willing hands that never, never more would clasp my own, I thought much of his noble life. So honest, truthful, kind, generous, patient, and God-fearing, never allowing the impulses of his nature to be governed by a thing so cold and calculative as human reason; for otherwise he enquired of God, and his own conscience the way of duty, and we always saw him forgetting self and trying to lighten the burden of others. He sought to know and do the will of our heavenly Father, and to clothe his thoughts with the precepts of his word. The bible to him was the book of books, his comforter and guide. As the moaning shell whispers of the sea, so the bible to him breathed of love in heaven, the angels, and joys too pure to die. Though his journey was upward in life, mountain path, set on either side with briars and thorns, his pilgrim feet often torn by flinty rocks, we feel assured that all along he had sweet communion and consolation from the Saviour who said, "Lo! I am with you always, even to the end of the world."

In many, very many ways did he relieve suffering humanity. The poor were never sent empty from his door, and many a bare-foot urchin will lovingly remember the kind greetings when he passed them by. "Blessed is the peace maker" was his motto in times of disturbance. He taught his children that it was better to be wronged, than to wrong another, both by precept and example did he teach them to wait upon God who would be their avenger, and never do wrong because others did.

Brother Gold, I feel that God and the angels were around that dying bed. It seemed to me I called up in long review the whole history of virtue and gentleness, and the thousand endearments lavished upon us almost unheeded in the daily intercourse of intimacy. There it was that I dwelt upon the tenderness, the solemn, awful tenderness of the parting scene, the bed of death with all its stifled griefs, its noiseless attendants, its watchful assiduites, the last testimony of expiring love, the feeble, fluttering, thrilling—oh! how thrilling. The pressure of the hand, the last fond look of the glazing eye, turning upon us even from the threshold of existence, the faint, faltering accents struggling in death to give one more assurance of affection. It was there too while witnessing this sublime awe-inspiring scene that I naturally looked back, down the vista of years that has crowned me, wife and mother, oh what did I see? Nothing, nothing, but a mis-spent life, yes; the beautiful innocent life the dear Lord had given me, all black with error and sin, myself a marred and defiled creature. In the presence of death my heart was heavy, and I begged of God to help me to live a better life, and one that would honor and glorify him who has done so much for poor unworthy me. I would not willingly forget this scene. It is far more sacred than all the gaitly and mirth of this fast-sinking world. I feel to thank the dear Saviour for his presence on that all-important occasion to the dear one that has gone, and hope that his children may so live that they will honor the example he has left them, for though dead yet he speaketh.

In the presence of about three hundred people he was interred in the family burying ground on June 2nd, 1889. Preacher Dill of Goldsboro being present, made some very appropriate and comforting remarks at the grave from the words, "Weep not for me, but for yourselves and your children."

Ah! yes, let us weep for ourselves, since we have every reason to believe, though his old arm chair is vacant here that he is in his sylvan home, and his dear parched tongue has already been cooled from the healing waters of Gods' fountain of life eternal, and hence forth let us think of him as of

One whose feet
Press the blossoms pure and sweet,
On the far green hills of God.

Let us think of the living too, our fellow mortals, and settle our conscience for every past benefit unrequited, every past endearment unregarded, ere it is too late, and they too can never return to be soothed by our contrition. Child, if thou hast ever added a sorrow to the soul, or a furrow to the silver brow of an affectionate parent, husband, wife, if thou hast ever caused the fond bosom that ventured its whole happiness in thy arms to doubt one moment of thy kindness, or thy truth: friend if thou hast ever wronged in word, thought or deed the spirit that generously confided in thee: lover if thou hast ever given one unmerited pang to that true heart which may soon lie cold and still beneath thy feet, be sure, all every, one of you, that every unkind look, every ungracious word, every ungentle action will come thronging back upon thy memory, and knocking dolefully at thy heart, to lie down sorrowing and repentant on the grave to be unseen, unheard. The unavailing tear will be more deep, more bitter, because unheard and unavailing. Oh! take warning and speak in life the words that cannot be heard in death, and henceforth for the sake of a meek and lowly Jesus who has borne with us in so many transgressions, be more faithful and affectionate and patient in the discharge of your duty to the living: for after all your self justifying thoughts, how much better are you, in the sight of God than your fellow mortals? Who of you could look down upon the grave, even of an enemy, and not feel a compunctious throb that he should ever have warred with the poor handful of earth that lies moulding before you. Oh! may this awful thought I too must die sink deep in every breast.

Ah! yes, let us weep for ourselves and our children, for dear patient father has bid us adieu.

Adieu sweet friends; I have waited long
To hear the message that calls me home,
And now it comes like a low sweet song
Of welcome over the river's foam. (roam)
And my heart shall ache, and my feet shall
No more—no more! I am going home.

I am going home o'er the river's tide,
Crystal—white in the noonday sun,
I see the friends on the other side
Who the beautiful pearly gates have won:
And far and sweet from the shining do-ne
They call to me still, come home, come home!

Do not weep for me friends; but lay Peacefully over my silent breast
The hands whose labor is done, and say,
"He hath entered into the gates of rest."
And God is merciful, God knows best,
And sweet to the weary is rest, sweet rest.

Why should I linger? I long to go;
And though no price in my hand I bring,
The Christ who died for us loves us so:
And simply still to his cross I cling,
Never more from that cross to roam;
I am going home, I am going home!

Home! where no storm and no tempests raves
In the light of the calm, eternal day;
Where no willow droop o'er the lonely grave;
And tears from our eyes shall be wiped away,
And my heart shall ache, and my feet shall roam
No more, no more: I am going home.

Brother Gold, this is not intended for an obituary, as that has already been published in the Biblical Recorder. as he was a member of the Missionary Baptist church, this is simply a memoir of our dear father, which you will publish at your own convenience and oblige yours truly,

CORNELIA C. HINES.

La Grange, N. C., July 18th, 1889.

SUSAN F. RICHARDSON.

Will you please publish the obituary of our esteemed friend, Miss Susan F.
Richardson, of Henry county Va., who departed this life on the 3rd day of July, 1889, after an illness of four months. Dropsy of the chest was the field officer of death with whom she, her relatives, many friends, and three eminent physicians contended for four long doubtful months, with tears, prayers, affections and skill; but alas, on the 3rd instant death won a sham victory over the lovely personage of this soldier and the weapons of her warfare were laid aside, or exchanged for a crown of everlasting rest.

During this mighty contest between life and death, Susan's mind was directed to the Lamb of God, in whom she found a friend that stick closer than a brother. She often spoke dispassionately of death, though she was then facing him on the "pale house," in the open field of battle. She delighted to hear the Baptists sing, "When christians meet to part no more." She said she would be at rest with her brother who had gone before. Susan was greatly attached to her aged mother and said all she regretted was leaving her mother so lonely.

Her father, Mr. Geo. W. Richardson is now 76 years old, and her mother 72. Susan was buried at her home near Irisburg, Va., by the side of her brother, Maj. Jesse M. Richardson, one of Virginia's noblest patriots, who received a wound in the last battle of the late war from which he finally died.

Now to the memorable father and mother allow me to drop a word of consolation. Weep not as those who have no hope, but turn your eyes from that drowsical battle field of your lovely daughter, and that bloody battle field of strife on which your time honored son, the late Major Richardson received his wound, to Mt. Calvary, and there see the Lamb for sinners contending, with Dropsy, Palsy, Plagues, Fever, Sin, Death, Hell and the Grave, and see him in death conquer the hosts of enemies, and in his resurrection see Jesus leading captivity himself captive, and hear him say to the righteous
"come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." Then may the aged parents meet their victi-rious children at the throne of our victorious Saviour, and crown Jesus Lord of all. Then will you praise God for what you now sorrow about, because you will realize that this sore dispensation of God was in mercy to you and your loved ones.

L. I. BODENHAMER.

ELIZABETH COOPER.

Died at her home near Statesville, Iredell county, N. C., June 27th, Mrs. Elizabeth Cooper, aged 68 years and 2 months. She was the devoted wife of Bluford Cooper who died more than four years ago. She was a member of the Primitive Baptist Church for many years, and a more humble and consistent christian I never knew.— She was what might be termed a sufferer all her life, was delicate from childhood, and for many years had the heart disease which gave her much trouble at times. Notwithstanding she reared quite a large family of children and grand-children, and accomplished much in the way of work that a robust person might well boast of. She was a devoted self sacrificing mother, and a most tender nurse, and having naturally a cheerful disposition, her presence in a sick room would often effect much more than medicine. She never ceased to mourn the death of her noble husband, and her grief for his departure, together with her manifold cares and increasing physical ailments, were very trying, and she would say she could not understand why she was spared.

Paralysis set in in May and for about four weeks previous to her death her lower limbs and bowels were entirely paralyzed. The pain about her heart gradually decreased after paralysis set in, and finally left her entirely, though she kept quite sick at her stomach, and complained of her shoulders aching. She was conscious of her approaching death, and longed for the time to come to depart. She would often tell her children when they were ministering to her comfort not to do anything to prolong her life. Several days previous to her death she requested the hymn "Jesus lover of my soul," to be sung. She was the most patient sufferer I ever knew, and seemed more concerned about the trouble she was giving others than she did about her own suffering. She leaves six children and many grand-children and friends to mourn their loss, though we can hardly wish her back, for we believe her tired spirit is now enjoying the rest for which she so much longed.

HERBERT O'BRIANT.

On June 29th, 1889, little Herbert, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Tuggle O'Briant, passed away from sin, sickness, and suffering, up to that sunny realm to meet the hosts of little ones as they come, like innocent doves flocking home from every land. No wonder the master said when bidding the children come, "for of such is the kingdom of heaven," since half of the human race die in infancy, and the other half must be converted, and become as little children before they can enter the kingdom (Matt. 18:1-4). May God "who works in a mysterious way, His wonders to perform," lead the sorrow stricken parents to Jesus.

ON SELF-MADE MINISTERS.

So God's word permits men to drink but not to be drunkards; both are punishable and forbidden. Now, sirs, let me make the truth appear, for this is my design. Luke 10: 7. And in the same house remain, eating and drinking such things as they give you. Here in this verse you see Christ's directions to his seventy disciples, and his permission to them to drink: you can't believe this was water. Again, Luke 7: 33. For John the Baptist came neither eating bread, nor drinking wine; and ye say, he hath a devil. Verse 34: The Son of man is come eating and drinking; and ye say behold a gluttonous man, and a wine-bibber, a friend of publicans and sinners! And Paul to Timothy: Use a little wine for thy stomach's sake—and of bishops, not given to wine; and of deacons, not given to much wine. Do not all these texts show God's permission to drink wine? And the directions of Christ to the seventy is broad enough to drink cider, brandy, rum, wine, beer, or ale, &c. as they were to drink such things as they give you. And did not Christ turn water into wine to furnish the wedding in Cana of Gallilee? The truth is, every creature of God is good and created to be received with thanksgiving; and nothing, says Paul, is to be refused, if it be received with thanksgiving. This is a broad liberty, but not more than is found elsewhere in the word of God. Then because some men have committed whoredom, you forbid me to marry; because some have been gluttons, like the Roman emperor that could eat forty pounds of flesh a day and drink six gallons of wine, I must abstain from meats; and because some get drunk, I must abstain from drinks. I say then, if forbidding to marry, and abstaining from meats, be devil doctrine—and that they are the text showeth—I cannot for my life see why abstaining from drinks should not be a devil doctrine; because it is equally a lie in hypocrisy with the other two. Then the propagation of such a doctrine proves that there are men-made teachers now in the church; it proves that men-made teachers preach lies in hypocrisy. This is a mark set upon them, set forth by the Holy Spirit, that can't err. Then as I have said, a men-made preacher will preach lies and impose things in religion on the world and church, God has not commanded; and they will contend strenuously for them, and they will yet be mad with them that oppose their errors. These are never failing marks of men-made teachers.

Again, 2 Timothy, 3: 1: This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. 2. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemous, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy. 3. Without natural affection, trace-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good. 4. Traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God. 5. Having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof: from such turn away. 6. For of this sort are they which creep into houses, and lead captive silly women laden with sins, led away with divers lusts; 7. Ever learning, and never able to come to a knowledge of the truth. 8. Now as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, so do these also resist the truth: men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith. 9. But they shall proceed no further: for their folly shall be manifest unto all men, as theirs also was. 10. But thou hast fully known my doctrine, manner of life, purpose, faith, long-suffering, charity, patience. 11. Persecutions, afflictions which came into me at Antioch, &c.

Here in the above verses the Holy Ghost has given these men twenty-four different marks, that Timothy and the gospel church might know them when they come. Surely if any man has on him twenty-four distinguishing marks, any body could know him; therefore Paul is thus particular. For this is a prophecy of the Holy Ghost by Paul to Timothy and church, marking out these men, that whenever they should come the church might know them. And can it be possible that any set of preachers or professors of any sect, or in any sect, can have all these black and sinful marks? Yes, sir, the Holy Ghost can't be mistaken: he possesses a foreknowledge of all things, and this holy man Paul speaks as he was moved by the Holy Ghost, and therefore spoke the truth and gave these marks of these preachers to a hair's breadth. Let us then stick close to the text, to find them out by the marks given; for if we can find a man with these marks upon him, then we may be sure he is the man. But can men as bad as these described, be preachers? Yes, that is proved in the text, by their having a form of godliness; and again by their creeping into the houses and leading captive silly woman; and again, by their resisting the truth and withstanding God's ministers, as did Jannes and Jambres, Moses. These three marks prove that there should be such base preachers as these in the church, at some time to come after Paul's day. First then, we will enquire as to the time they should come; that is precisely pointed out in the first verse—in the last days. This is the time specified in the text. Now what is meant by the last days? Last days when spoken by the prophets under the Old Testament, means the latter part of the Jewish dispensation. So last days, not day, when spoken by Christ or his apostles in reference to the gospel church, means the latter part of the gospel dispensation. Many scriptures from both the Old and New Testament, prove this position. Then if, according to the style of prophecy by the Holy Ghost, in a great number of places in the scripture, one day is put for one year, seven days for a week of years, and one day for a thousand years, and a thousand years for a day, then the conclusion follows, that the present thousand years is the last day of the gospel dispensation but one; which answers to the Sabbath or the thousand years of rest to the church, from the beast, false prophet, and devil. Then it also follows, that the first thousand years of the gospel dispensation was one day; the second thousand, which is now late in the day of the present thousand; and there is yet a thousand to come, which is the third day. Now mark the text: Paul don't say in the first day, or days, then these men did not come in the first thousand years; nor in the first part of the second thousand years. Then it follows that they were to come in the latter part of the second thousand years; and why? because the apostle don't say in the last day, if he had, then we might have looked for these men in the last thousand years; but he says, in the last days. So then these men were to come in the last day but one; that is, in the latter part of the second thousand years, for that is the last day in the language of prophecy but one. So then as to the time I feel assured I am right, for counting the four thousand years before Christ, and the three afterwards, will make the week of days; and also one day as a thousand years, and a thousand years as a day. And the Sabbath of a thousand years is yet to come, wherein such base men shall not plague the gospel church. Remember prophecy always looks forward, therefore I have begun the first day or thousand years with the dispensation; whereas, counting from the creation, it would be the fifth day, but it don't then alter the prophecy, for then it comes to pass still in the six thousand years, and not in the last day or Sabbath thousand.

No believing we have hit the time in the prophecy, let us search for the marks and see if we can find any man or set of men that have got such marks upon them; if we can, then let us take the advice of Paul and turn away from them as he advises Timothy to do; as he thinks such men dangerous to the gospel church. There are too many marks to take notice of them all at this time, as I 'am swelling this piece five times beyond my expectation, much less what is to come; but we will take notice of some of the marks, enough to satisfy him that will look at the marks without prejudice, that such an one is the man pointed out by Paul in the prophecy. The first mark of these men I shall notice is, that of creeping into houses and leading captive silly women; these then show first that they are self and men-made preachers. For Paul here puts the same mark on them as Jude does on a self-made minister, saying, they crept in unawares. And Paul again in Galatians, 2. 4. points to these same sort of ministers, saying: And that because of the false brethren unawares brought in, who came in privily to spy out our liberty, &c. Then these three testimonies prove that these sort of men are false brethren, no matter what sect they may be found in; secondly, they prove these creepers first creep into churches, and the manner is pointed out, unawares by both apostles. And further, they come in privily, not known, like Judas was to the Saviour; and for what they come is also pointed out, to spy out our liberty. Now you know as I have said, this word creep in its common acceptation, means in a low, still, sneaking manner, as the cat to her prey, or the gunner to his game; and when applied to false teachers it means the same, that they

in a low, humble, sneaking, unperceived manner, first creep into the churches unawares to the church. This is done privily by them, that is, to the prey and game they have in view, and their design is unknown to the church. The next step is to creep in the same way into the ministry; this they also do for getting nearer their prey. And thirdly, they creep into houses and lay hold of silly women and lead them captive. Mark the apostle how he don't say they creep into meeting houses, private houses, or public houses; but he uses expressly the word houses, in the plural; which may mean all these three kind of houses. Now were there ever any kind of preachers that did this? or are there any such now that have got this mark, in conduct upon them? Study awhile and think of the history of all sects.

If you go to the Roman church, the priests did not lead captive the silly nuns into the nunnery; for first monkery becoming a popular religion by degrees, and the clergy being forbid to marry, the young ladies could get no husbands and so were of necessity forced to take the veil and devote themselves to single life. If you carry it to the church of England, in the main you can't apply it there, nor to any sect in Christendom. And yet this prophecy is fulfilled and fulfilling every day before our eyes in the church, as plain as the one fulfilled already mentioned, of the Roman church forbidding to marry and abstaining from meats. Well, say you, do tell us where and how. This I will do, as you know I said my design was to bring truth to light.

THE LAW OF TRESPASSES.

(FOR THE LANDMARK.)

ELDS. GOLD AND LESTER, DEAR BRETHREN:—I have had of late some reflections upon the scriptures relating to this subject, recorded in Matt. 18th chap. 15th, 17th verses, and Matt. 5th chap. 23rd, 26th verses, and I feel like spending a little time in penning them down for the LANDMARK. The same things are recorded in Luke 12th chap. 58th and 59th verses, and in Luke 17th chap. 3rd and 4th verses. I have no doubt that nearly all Old School Baptists are familiar with these scriptures and with much that has been said concerning them. The 18th chap. of Matt. especially has been called the book of discipline for our churches. But still it is always well to give a close examination again and again to any part of the word of God, however familiar it may be. There are always hidden treasures in these mines of wisdom, no matter how deep we may have gone nor how thoroughly they may have been explored. This is my reason for now writing upon this theme. I do not desire to go over all the ground that has been so well and so long trodden by many feet but merely if I may to suggest a few things that seem to me important.

In Matt. 18th and 15th, we read, "if thy brother shall trespass against thee." The word trespass means any wrong that one may do in his dealings with another. It may be a wrong done in transacting business, in social concern or in church relationship. It may be in word or in deed. It may be designedly or inadvertently. Be all this as it may, it must be a real trespass or wrong done, something that hurts us in some way.

Now the rule of the Saviour is "go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone." And first I want to notice that this is the rule of love and not of dislike or hatred. It is designed to save, not to destroy the brother. The Lord says, "Go," not wait for him to come to thee. "Go" the brother is in danger. "Go," at once and pull him out of the fire. Thy hurt is nothing but the danger is great. His sin cannot hurt thee, but unless saved from it, it will hurt him. It is he of whom thou must think and for whom thou must be anxious, and not thyself. If it were of thy hurt that thou must think, then stay away from him for thou mayest be hurt again.

Then go, and "tell him his fault." It may be that he is unaware of it, that it was done inadvertently. It may be that he thinks he had provocation. It may be that he is aware of his fault and sorry for it, and yet afraid to approach thee fearing that thou art angry with him. It may be that he knows his fault and meant to do it, and so is in rebellion against God, and therefore he has all the more need that they should try to win him to the better way. Therefore tell him his fault and its consequences. If he is not aware of it he will thank and bless thee for showing him the slippery ground on which he stands. If he is aware of his fault God may so bless the love you have to him as thy brother, and the tender interest thou showest in him, as to soften his heart and lead him to repentance, and so thou wilt have gained thy brother. Thou wilt have saved him from much sorrow and to the sweet fellowship of saints; to peace of conscience and to thyself.

"Between thee and him alone," the object is to gain and save him. Therefore let that charity work, that hides a multitude of faults. Thou thyself art also a sinner. Thou mayest have trespassed against another, or thou mayest yet do so, therefore whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so unto them. If this matter be not spread abroad, but kept between your two selves. What a precious hoard it may prove to both of you in coming time. Therefore tell it alone to the erring one, for the good of both of you and that the name of God be glorified.

"If he shall hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother." Not destroyed him, but gained him. Not gained a victory over him but gained him. He has been thy brother and companion and fellow traveler and helper. Thou wast in danger of losing all this. But now thou hast gained him. Thou canst not afford to lose him. He is of more value to thee than gold, or pearls, or friends, or all human kindred. He is thy brother in Christ. He is thy brother forever. Christ, the all lovely one, whom thy soul loves, dwells in him. And so in gaining him, thou gainest the communion of that Jesus who dwells in him.

"But, if he will not hear thee." It may be that thou hast gone to him with a wrong spirit in thee and with wrong words upon thy lips. It may be that he cannot see himself guilty. It may be that he is not guilty, and that thou art mistaken. It may be that he fancies that thou hast wronged him. And it may be that he is stubborn and unyielding and set steadfastly to do wickedness. In the former case thou must take extra pains to make the matter clear. In the last case his condition is deplorable, and his danger is great. Therefore thou must put forth redoubled exertions to save him. As he has refused to hear thee, there may be danger lest thou also become stubborn and proud and unyielding and un pitying toward him. If so thou wilt say, "I will leave him to his own destruction." But this will be sin on thine own part. This spirit must not reign in thee. He must not thus be given up.

Therefore "take with thee one or two more, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established." Thou hast failed to gain him, thy words may have not been right words. He may have misunderstood thee, thou mayst have misunderstood him, or both of you may have failed to say what was wise. Now if thou takst one or two more, thou mayst be able through them to see things in a different light. What thou hast failed to do they with thee may be able to accomplish. Thou art not to take thy partisan friends, but lovers of God and truth alone. They are to be his friends as well as thine. If thou lovest him and desire to save him, thou wilt take faithful brethren who desire his and thy good and the glory of God. They will not desire thine advantage nor his, except as you both will be advantaged by doing the truth. This does not mean that these witnesses are to be witnesses for thee or against him. Thou art not to take them that they may establish thy charges against him before the church, but only to establish the word of the Lord in both your minds, and if it be God's will, establish thee and him in fellowship and in truth. Thy object is to gain thy brother, whether thou goest alone or whether thou takest one or two more with thee.

But what if all this fails? What must be done then? Still thou must persevere in trying to win him. He is too precious to be given up yet. He is one of the Lord's loved ones. He is in thy heart. Still try to win him and strive harder yet. Now tell it to the whole church. Why? That the church may cut him off? God forbid! No, but that the whole church may join in the effort to save him. Not that they may seek to justify thee or that thou mayst seek for justification from the church, but that he may be saved from the error of his ways and from the sorrow that will follow. The church are not to try the case as a court of law would do, but to beseech him to be reconciled to God. They are to hold over him no threat of what they will do if he refuses to be reconciled but simply manifest their love to him and for the name of the Lord and his cause.

But if he neglect to hear the church, what then? Art thou to seek revenge? Art thou to say hard things about him? Is the church necessarily to exclude him? It is not so said. But simply this. Let him be unto thee as an heathen man and a publican. How is that? Why, have no dealings with him. Let him alone. The meaning is, thou hast done all that thou canst to gain him. He has refused at the last to hear the church, the highest tribunal on earth. He must be left in the hands of the Almighty. It was said in the former days, "Ephraim is joined to his idols let him alone." And so this brother must now be let alone. He is not to be abused, or cursed, or injured, but in sorrow thou art to simply give up the struggle to gain him. Let him be to thee as a heathen man and a publican. To "thee." It does not say here that thou must insist that he shall be to all the church as a heathen and publican, but to thee. It will probably result in the whole church incurring his enmity, and in his withdrawing from them all, but that is not for thee to consider. Let him be to thee as a heathen &c. This will save further danger of conflict, and will save thee from further trespasses at his hand. Afterwards, verses 21st and 22nd, the Savior teaches that if God shall give the trespasser repentance and he shall turn saying, I repent, we are to forgive him 'till seventy times seven. Another way of saying that there is to be no limit to forgiveness.

Turning now to the other text Matt. 5th chap. 23rd—26th we see another side of this subject presented. "If thou bringest thy gifts to the altar," that is if thou comest up to worship God and there rememberest that thy brother has aught against thee, that is rememberest that thou has trespassed against him. We have been considering the duty of the one trespassed against. Now we are called to consider the duty of the trespasser, when he comes before God in praise or prayer or in any way and there remembers that he has done wrong. He must not, he cannot, offer his gift. God will not accept it. He has sinned and done evil in the sight of God, and that evil must be put away. No child of God can profess his love to God when he has acted unlovely to his brother and remembers it.

Now what must he do? Leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way; First be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift. Go and confess thy fault and ask thy brother to forgive, and then thy gift will be acceptable to God. Here is a matter of experience. Now, what I want to suggest is this, viz :—that if both the trespasser and the one trespassed against follow the directions of the blessed Lord, and each starts to seek the other, they will meet half way, and will find themselves already reconciled. How they will love each afterwards, and how they will praise God for his unspeakable mercies. But neither one is to wait for the other. Each is to do his own duty. We must not say I would gladly do my part if my brother would do his.

We must obey whether our brother obey or not.

But now we come to consider a third subject embraced in verses 25th and 26th of this fifth chapter of Matt. "Agree with thine adversary quickly while in the way with him: lest at any time the adversary deliver thee to the judge, and the judge deliver thee to an officer, and thou be cast into prison. Verily I say unto thee, thou shalt by no means come out thence, 'till thou has paid the uttermost farthing."

We have heretofore been considering the people of God in their dealings with each other. But the word of God is a perfect rule regarding the behavior of believers to the world as well as to each other, as for instance when the apostle says "as much as in you both live peaceably with all men" or "do good to all men especially to them that are of the household of faith." And so in this language the Saviour teaches his disciples how they should do if any man become their adversary. I do not understand that the adversary is one of their brethren but a man of the world. Believers would be forbidden by the law of their master to deliver a brother to the judge, and so press an accusation against him that the judge should deliver him to the officer and to prison, where he must lay until he has paid the last farthing. But when transacting business in the world difficulty might arise and all these results might follow. The adversary would be under no restraint from the law of Zion which he would not recognize. And so he might bring charges against the child of God and cast him into prison, to his own distress and to the reproach of the cause of Christ. Therefore make haste to agree even with worldly men, lest they bring sorrow upon thee and reproach upon the name of Jesus by charging thee with wrong. A Christian had better sacrifice some of his rights than be charged with wrong even by worldly men. This it seems to me is the teaching of this last text. In all we do the honor of the most blessed name is to be regarded as uppermost. This is to be sought first of all. Honor, wealth, fame, all are as nothing compared to this. All we do is to be subordinated to this. May God help us to be patterns of meekness and gentleness toward each other and toward all men. I leave these thoughts with the brethren. I remain your brother in hope.

CONFLICTS.

ELDER GOLD AND LESTER:—Dear brethren in the hope of the Lord, for some cause I feel impressed to write a few lines for publication in the LAND-MARK. I feel to say of a truth that I love the dear old Primitive Baptists with an affection which the world cannot give nor take away. I feel that these are they which have come up out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes white in the blood of the Lamb. But ah me, my trouble is, can there be among that favored number one so sinful, so vile, so prone to evil as I know I am. I have now been in the church twelve months, and do not feel that I am worthy to go to meeting, much less to be called a church member. It seems that I have been a draw-back instead of an up-builder of the cause, which oft times makes me cry and say with David, why standest thou afar off, O Lord, why hidest thou thyself in times of trouble? But still much of my pleasure is just after deep distress, and then I can again with the Psalmist exclaim, truly my soul waiteth upon God; from him cometh my salvation. The heavens declare the glory of God, and firmament showeth his handy work. I think I can faithfully say with Paul, I am the chief of sinners, but I have a little hope which is an anchor to the soul both sure and steadfast, and which enters within the veil. It is by this hope I live, without it I would be wretched. One says, if we have hope in this world only we are of all men most miserable. I had a dream some time ago which I have thought about a great deal. It seemed to be a settled fact that we all knew the world would end and be destroyed by a flood. I thought it began to rain in torrents, and soon began to rise in the house coming in great waves of water clear, only looked a little dark. I thought ma and the rest of the children were in another's part of the house: pa and myself being alone in one room. I said to pa it is the flood (meaning the end of all time,) and he said yes, yes, and then I sprung forward and into his arms, expecting to be plunged into an everlasting eternity. The next moment, I thought death had a sting, but still I felt so happy to know that I would soon be with my Redeemer, never more to see trouble again. I thought I did not have a doubt of my acceptance, and was ready to die and go hence. I knew the world would not all be saved, but I bowed and said to myself it is just, and glorified God with all my heart. The last thing I recollect in my dream was that in the next moment I would be with my Savior and reign with him for ever blest.

Dear brethren and sisters, please pray for me as I feel to need the prayers of all God's people. May God bless you Brother Gold in your Labors, is the prayer of your little brother if one at all.

J. W. JONES.

Bennett, N. C.

ELDER P. D. GOLD, DEAR BROTHER:—I will this evening try to write what has been on my mind for several years but felt too unworthy to commence, but will try by the help of God to relieve my mind.

That is the reason of that little hope I have and also the reason I joined the Baptists. When I was about thirteen years of age I dreamed a dream that I thought was to warn me I should soon die, when I did not think I was prepared for death, and went to praying, the best I knew, to the Lord for mercy. I would go off to myself and try to pray. I went on in this way for a month or more. There was a camp meeting commenced near us and I thought it might be if I would go there I could get relief from my troubles. My parents were Methodist and as we went to this meeting I was still burdened from that same impression; there were many of my friends and relatives professing to have a hope in Jesus. I went to this meeting several times, but could not think they could do me any good. Finally I got down to be prayed for but have never known how, and gave up all to Jesus. In a short time it seemed to me that I could see the gates of heaven open and the Saviour standing with out-stretched arms ready to take me in. From that moment I felt I loved every body, and the most of all my dear Saviour, I felt I could praise him all the rest of my days and would see no more trouble, but oh how sadly I have been mistaken. I wanted to see everybody I knew and tell them what the Lord had done for my soul. I was not ashamed to tell it. Oh that hour, how sweet its memory still.

I joined the Methodist church and was baptized, or sprinkled when I was very young. I knew nothing about the Primitive Baptists until I was twenty years of age. I was satisfied a short time, I do not know how long until I heard that Grand-ma said she did not think I had any religion, for I was too young to know anything about religion. So I got into trouble and commenced praying to the Lord to show me whether I was deceived or not, if not to make me feel as I first felt. Grand-ma was at our house one night, and she and the rest of the family were in the other room eating supper and I was by myself singing and the same happy feeling came on me and I rose up and went to Grandmother and told her the Lord had showed me that I was not deceived. She said she would doubt me no more. It has been twenty-eight years and I fear sometimes yet I was deceived, but at other times I do not doubt my hope in the least. Grandmother professed a hope shortly afterwards, and I believe she was a true christian and always spoke well of the Old Baptists. I was satisfied at times until I was married. I married Wm Nichols, he was a Baptist believer, but no christian. We would go to hear them preach, and I thought they could tell my feelings nearer than any others. Then I got into trouble and thought it would never do to join them, for there were none of my relations Primitive Baptists nearer than first and second cousin. I did not own that I liked them until I was the mother of four children. I saw a great deal of trouble though and it seemed something was wrong, I could not tell what. Some of my near relatives said to others they believed I was going deranged but it was trouble. I advise all that desire to join the right church to go and hear the Baptists preach themselves, go among them and talk with them, and not listen to what some one says about them that does not understand, or is prejudiced. They appear to me to have more love for one another than any other people. I went to the first Association I ever attended at Fisher's River in April 1877, and Elder B. G. Caudill preached the last sermon on Sunday and his explanation of Baptist doctrine was sufficient for me. I never heard such a sermon before, and wondered why every body did not understand him as I did. I thought they were the lovely people I ever saw although there were trouble with Fishers River and Mountain Association at that time. When they were taking the parting hand I thought I would give any thing to be among them. I went home troubled worse than I was and remained that way until I joined them in April 1878. I dreamed I was off in a field away from home and I got into trouble and went home being out of place where I ought to be and there were several people there worshipping God. It seems in the way of prayer; and I looked at my hand and it was all withered and it looked very bad, and I showed it to mother. She told me to show it to Caudill, he could heal it, for he was there; I did it and was relieved. The next day we went to Stuart's Creek and heard him, and others preach, and he explained my dream for me. I thought he made it so plain, that I was away from home the Baptist Church, and that hand was something that was wrong; yet I took it to be Baptism and that is one reason why I chose Brother Caudill to baptize me. But I did not consent to join them until about the 1st of next December. The same year Brother Caudill preached at White Plains, and he and Brother Booker and others came home with us; my husband being concerned and in much trouble about his condition. He was a good friend to the Baptists and we were very anxious for their company and their prayers, and felt it a great blessing to have them with us. That night after retiring I was studying very much about offering myself to the church the first opportunity. I was thinking what other people would say if I joined the Old Baptists, as people called them; and it seemed that something said, would you give up all happiness in this life and in the world to come for what some one would say. I then made up my mind to offer to the church the first opportunity at Stuart's Creek. In about three weeks from that time my husband was delivered from his trouble. Oh what precious news to me. If ever I felt unworthy it was then; for I had often tried to pray for that hour, and felt that it was more than I deserved, a poor sinner.

In Feb. 1879 we went to Stuart's Creek. Brother Isaac Webb and brother Draughn and others being there. Brother Webb and others preached a powerful sermon for me. They were singing the last song when I gave way. I felt like I could never leave the place without offering to the church. My husband went up and I followed him; we were received in April afterwards and baptized by Elder Caudill. That was surely a happy day with us. I cannot express my feelings toward those that assisted us in Baptism—Brother Booker, and sister Booker and daughter, sister Kingsbury and sister Key and others. I have been satisfied ever since as to the church, only feel too unworthy to be among as good people as they are.

I am now forty one years old and feel myself more imperfect every day of my life. I know if I were to have to save myself by my good works I would forever be lost. If I am saved it will be by the grace of God, and nothing good that I can do.

I want to write something to the praise and honor of my blessed Saviour. In vain is my attempt to describe the praise that is due him for his goodness and mercy while we are so prone to sin.

I have six living children, one gone to heaven. I hope to live as I would wish to die, so my children will not doubt my happiness after death. I pray the Lord will have mercy on them and save us all in heaven. Not one left out to praise him round that throne where all his chosen will be.

I write this for the benefit of my children and near relatives, to show them why my name is found among the Baptists. My near relations are Friends, commonly called Quakers, and I think they are Christians, but do not see as I do. I cannot tell why it seems strange to me.

Brother Gold remember us at a throne of grace.

"THERE IS NOW NO CON- DEMNATION."

DEAR BROTHERS GOLD AND LESTER:—The Apostle says, there is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death." Rom. 8: 1, 2. The word "therefore," in the first verse calls our attention to that which immediately preceded it. In the 7th chapter the apostle had called the attention of God's dear people to the warfare through which they must pass while in their earthly pilgrimage. While he speaks of himself in that chapter, and tells of the power of sin in his Adamic nature, yet what he says about himself applies to all God's dear people, for they are all taught of the Lord. In that teaching he shows them that the law is spiritual but they are carnal, sold under sin which causes them to cry out. "O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" By a sweet and precious faith, the dear saints are made to answer that question in the language of the apostles. "I thank God through Jesus Christ, our Lord. So then with the mind I myself serve the law of God, but with the flesh the law of sin." Then he says, "There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus." There can be no condemnation to them, for he Christ Jesus is made the end of the law of sin and death. By his death on Calvary he redeemed them that are in him, for He bear them and carried them all the days of old. And their life is hid with Christ in God. The apostle further says, "When Christ who is our life shall appear then shall ye also appear with him in glory." Then surely there is no condemnation to them who are in Christ Jesus, for the Apostle says, "They SHALL appear with him in glory." If there was the slightest stain of condemnation on them, they could not appear with him in glory. But he by "one offering hath forever perfected them that are sanctified." The offerings under the temple service did not make the comers thereunto perfect. But he who was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death was crowned with glory and honor, that he by the grace of God should taste death for every man. For it becomes him, for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the Captain of their salvation perfect through suffering. For both he that sanctifieth, and they that are sanctified are all of one for which cause he is not ashamed to call them brethren. Heb. 2: 9—11. Those who are the sanctified are the all men for whom he tasted death, "they were sanctified, set apart, by God the Father, preserved in Jesus Christ and called." That sanctification, that setting apart, was in infinite wisdom and in accordance with the eternal purposes of God which he purposed before the world began. Those that were thus set apart are of the same blessed family to which the apostle speaks, saying, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ who hath blessed US with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ Jesus. According as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world that we should be holy and without blame before him in love. Having predestinated us to the adoption of children, by Jesus Christ to himself according to the good pleasure of his will." Then surely there is now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus. The prophet when speaking of him says, "Behold my servant whom I uphold, mine elect in whom my soul delighteth. I have put my spirit upon him, he shall bring forth judgment to the Gentiles." It is thus the eternal Father speaks by his servant, the prophet, and he calls his son his elect, and says he shall bring judgment to the Gentiles. He was the elect of the Father and in him was chosen all that blessed family on whom there is now no condemnation. There is now no condemnation resting on them because he in his own glorious person met all the demands of that law of sin and death, and by that one great offering he hushed the awful thunderings of Sinai, and having satisfied that law bro't in everlasting righteousness. He is the life of his people and in that unity with him they were redeemed from the law of sin and death when he said it is finished and gave up the ghost, went down into the dark cavern of the tomb, and arose on the third or appointed morning proclaiming to an astonished world, "Mine own arm hath brought salvation unto me." His elect being one with him he brought salvation from the power—death, and the grave to them when he came forth from the tomb. He said by the mouth of the prophet, "Thy dead men shall live, with my dead body shalt they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in the dust. Your dew shall be as the dew of herbs and the earth shall cast out its dead. In their unity with him condemnation was removed from them when he suffered the penalty of the law which they had violated, and in that unity their resurrection was secured to them when he arose from the dead. Viewing these great and glorious truths the apostle could appropriately say, "This corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality." Then death will be swallowed up in victory. But it will all be through the wondrous work of our Lord Jesus Christ, and for them who are in him. The apostle says. "For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death." By that law is the knowledge of sin, and the wages of sin is death. What a wondrous contrast between the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus and the law of sin and death. On Calvary's bloody summit that law of sin and death received its full satisfaction as to all who are in Christ Jesus for them, there he met all its demands and brought them under a new law which is the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus, and by that law they were made free. It is written, "If the Son make you free ye shall be free indeed." Surely they were free from all the demands of the law of sin and death when he suffered its penalty for them. He was their surety and they being insolvent, the law reached the Surety and he satisfied it.

Then there was no more condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh but after the spirit. These last words are descriptive of those who are experimentally made free from the law of sin and death. "By their fruits ye shall know them." They adorn their profession by a godly walk and conversation, and by them they give evidence that they belong to that class of whom our Lord speaks by the prophet. To this man will I look, even to him that is poor and of a contrite spirit and that trembleth at my word. But ah, dear saint how often do you, like this feeble one, who is now talking to you, lie down on the bed of carnal security, and then look to this vain world for help and for spiritual strength. While in that condition all is gloom and darkness. Then we were walking after the flesh and that flesh lusteth against the Spirit, for in that flesh there dwelleth no good thing. When amidst that gloom and darkness the dear saints say to themselves. Surely I am deceived and have deceived others. Surely I have never walked after the Spirit. But ah, dear little one it is then that you are made to know that you are poor; and when realizing your poverty, deep contrition seized you and you were made to tremble at the word of your glorious Lord. It is then he comes to you and speaks in the sweet accents of an unchanging love and says "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest." The rest which he gives to his people is a rest from under the law of sin and death. By that law you have a knowledge of sin. It is that knowledge that causes you to realize that you are poor and fills you with deep contrition. These are evidences to you that you are in the King's highway of holiness. Your faith leads you away from the contemplation of your poverty, and your inability to do anything good by which you will merit the favor of a thrice holy God. Trusting alone in the finished work of your ever to be adored Redeemer, you look away from the vanities of a sin-cursed world, and by an ever precious faith you cry out in the language of the Psalmist. "God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble." It is thus you in your earthly pilgrimage are daily realizing your poverty. But for your comfort your Lord hath said to you, "Blessed are the poor in Spirit for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." Remember that kingdom is made yours, not by any works of righteousness which you have done. But your being poor in spirit is evidence of your right in that kingdom. You will also remember that the word 'kingdom' thus used by our Lord does not mean the kingdom of ultimate glory, but the kingdom set up by the God of heaven on the earth, and your being poor in spirit is to all the members of that kingdom evidence that all its enjoyments are yours and that you have a right to all its blessed privileges. Suppose you were to go to the church and boast of your good works, and claim that you had a right to a seat in that church because of those works. Do you imagine that God's dear people would accept you? Certainly not. But if you come with a contrite heart, and a broken spirit of which the rich in good works must ever remain in ignorance you will be gladly welcomed into the sweet fellowship of saints, and have secured to you all the privileges of the house of God. Your Lord hath said to you by his prophet. "I will also leave in the midst of thee an afflicted and poor people, and they shall trust in the name of the Lord. The Psalmist says to them, "They that trust in the Lord shall be as Mount Zion which cannot be moved, but abideth forever." They are they to whom the Apostle speaks, saying, "There is therefore no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus who walk not after the flesh but after the Spirit." To comfort them amidst their earthly afflictions the prophet says to them. "No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper, and every tongue that shall rise against thee in judgment thou shalt condemn." This is the heritage of the servants of the Lord and their righteousness is of me saith the Lord. When contemplating the goodness and mercy of their God, their cry is, "Give unto the Lord the glory due unto his name." May all of God's dear people be ever ready to give that glory to his great and wonderful name, is the sincere prayer of this feeble one.

FAITH DELIVERED.

DEAR BRETHERN GOLD AND LESTER:—From some cause my mind has been exercised on the following scripture, "Beloved when I gave all diligence to write unto you of the common salvation, it was needful for me to write you, and exhort you that ye should earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints;" Jude 3rd. I am not able to tell whether the exercise of my mind is of the Lord, or of the flesh. God only knoweth. But be that as it may, by God's permission I will try to put on paper for your consideration the thoughts that may be presented to my mind, humbly as I hope, trusting that I may be guided by the Spirit to speak the truth as it is in Christ, and thereby edify some one of the household of faith.

The apostle is evidently speaking to the household of faith, the church of God. The beloved who had been called, justified and glorified, in that they were delivered from the power of darkness and translated into the kingdom of God's dear Son, (it having been made manifest to them that they had been made partakers of eternal life in him Christ,) were beloved of God, and as such beloved by the apostle. For every one that loveth him that begat, loveth him also that is begotten of him. 1st John 5, 1. This love existing in the breast of the apostle for the family of God begets in him a desire for their peace, comfort and joy. Hence his diligence to write to them concerning the common salvation. He had been industriously studying and seeking their welfare, that they might be fruitful in every good work. They being objects of saving grace, should be exhorted to walk worthy of the vocation wherewith they had been called keeping the commandments of God. For thereby they worked out their own salvation, not eternal salvation but the common salvation. For where this is neglected, coldness, indifference, barrenness, with all the clogs that hinder a patient race are sure to follow. It is often said by those who oppose them that the Primitive Baptists teach a doctrine that encourages sloth, idleness, and indifference. But not so, the doctrine of grace reigning has nothing of the kind in it. But to the contrary speaketh on this wise, "Therefore let us not sleep, as do others; but let us watch and be sober." 1st Thess. 5: 6: In view of these things our apostle writes to them of the common salvation. Diligence is characteristic of christians. It is not commendable in one professing to be a believer in sovereign grace to be sleeping away the time, as they that "sleep, sleep in the night; and they that be drunken, are drunken in the night." Then the call is "Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light." Eph 5: 14. To this end Jude wrote of the common salvation. Then it was needful (necessary) that he should write and exhort (advise, warn or caution) them that they should earnestly contend for the faith once delivered unto the saints; not another faith, but the faith once delivered. Earnestly (eagerly) contend (strive) for the faith. Why this particular faith? Because this faith is a faith once delivered, not often delivered: but once, this is a saving faith; it is too precious to be often delivered: it is a justifying faith: (see Rom. 5: 1.) It is the faith of God's Elect. Titus 1: 1. This faith works by love. (Gal. 5: 6.) It is reckoned for righteousness: Rom. 4: 9. It is born of God and overcometh the world. 1st John 5: 4. This faith will not suffer those which are of the law to be heirs, if so it is made void: Rom. 4: 14. None but the children of God have this faith. None others can have it, it was delivered to the saints. By this faith the patriarchs wrought wonders. Lion's dens, fiery furnaces, dungeons and chains were bid defiance. It overcomes, it lays hold of the premises of God. Being a fruit of the Spirit it is divine in its nature, and faileth not: it is unfeigned: like its divine author it is strength. It will admit of no partner: One Lord, one faith. This faith takes Christ as a complete and sufficient Saviour: it never has, nor never will seek to rob him of his glory by aiming to substitute auxiliaries or helps. This faith ignores all the institutions of men as being means of grace. If Jude or any of the apostles of Christ ever heard of such means as are now resorted to for the conversion of the world as it is called then it is not upon record. The faith once delivered knows nothing but Jesus and him crucified. For in him faith sees grace reigning to the chief of sinners. It sees in him the resurrection and the life, and all power both in heaven and earth given to him. Therefore it embraces none of the modern schemes of men, but says away with them: it sees no Boards or schools to educate preachers, no Sunday School to train up the young, nor anything of the kind; but sees a fulness in Jesus for the accomplishing of the end for which he offered himself, and scorns to offer insults by advocating any of these modern schemes. This faith dwells in all God's children. That being the case they earnestly contend for it, because it looks to the finished work of Christ. To go after these worldly institutions of the latter day, or any other day, would be to ignore faith and shoulder a weight that would burden them to a degree that they could not run with patience the race which is set before them looking to Jesus who is the author and finisher of our faith. Heb. 12: 2. How can the children of God earnestly contend for the faith once delivered, and yet patronize one or all of these institutions of the world? That they are of the world is certain for they are not in all the scriptures. The most eagle-eyed men who contend for them cannot show others saith the Lord for them, even in one place. They never have done it. They never can do it. Not if the present version of the Bible is true. Then dear children of God let us earnestly contend for the Faith which was once delivered unto the saints. What matters it if we are hated, shunned by all the great and noble of earth so-called? We are admonished by the apostle to earnestly contend. If Primitive Baptists do not who will? Not one. For every denomination with whom I am acquainted has wedded these modern idols. There is more said by them in praise of these things, than there is of Christ. It is hard for me to believe that the advocates of these idols ever had any part in the faith once delivered unto the saints. I know that there is much respectability among those who advocate these things. But respectability and friendship are not the religion of Jesus Christ. Neither is it an excuse for failing to contend for the faith once delivered. All men have not faith so says the apostle: 2nd Thess. 3: 2. Hence the contending for these late schemes. Let not the church of Christ be deceived thereby, but let each one stand fast in the faith and earnestly contend for it. It belongs to the saints as it was delivered unto them, and is the gift of God to them. And, comes to them by hearing, and hearing by the word of God. Rom. 10: 17. And this word was in the beginning with God, and in him was life, and the life was the light of men: John 1st. So they who are in this life and light are in possession of the faith once delivered, and are earnestly to contend for it. They who are destitute of this life and light are strangers to the faith and must be classed among the unbelievers, be they who they may. For without this life there is death, and the dead contend not. Oh! how glorious is this light. It reveals the Son of God as an all-conquering Saviour, traveling in the greatness of his strength, speaking in righteousness, mighty to save. This life and light reveals the stronger man loosing or delivering all the lawful captives, bidding the enemy to destroy no more, and causing those who were sometimes darkness to be light in the Lord. Can it be that he is in need of the puny arm of man or men to aid him to bring in all his jewels and crown them in glory? Faith in him says no. It seems to me that the faith once delivered certainly must yield all into his hands, and cry 'tis all that I can do. Now dear brethren to conclude permit me to say that in great weakness I have been trying in a public way to contend for the faith since October 1851. The doctrine of salvation by grace, the sovereignty of God, the unconditional, personal election of the saints, and their final preservation in grace have been the theme aimed at all these long years, and having passed my three score years, I know my work must be drawing to a close. I know that I must shortly quit the shores of earth, leave the brotherhood on earth, and enter into the world of spirits. Yet to save my soul I cannot understand the scriptures to teach anything outside or separate from the obedient life, the passive and vicarious death, the triumphant resurrection, glorious ascension, and effectual mediation of Jesus Christ for salvation. This is what I call great grace, or grace reigning through him unto eternal life. This my faith embraces, and is what I have tried in great weakness to preach. Now I must soon die. But these truths console me. And as the outward man waxeth old and decayeth the inward man is renewed day by day. I feel perfectly willing to go to the bar of God with this doctrine, believing that outside of it there is no salvation. May God bless the household of faith.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—I have a great impression on my mind this morning to try and tell you some things which I hope the Lord has done for me, but I feel too ignorant and unworthy. Dear Brethren and friends you can't begin to know the trouble it has given me. If I have a hope it has been for years ago, almost from childhood. While my father was living, and my health was bad I would look to him so much thinking that he was able to send for the Dr. to relieve me, and the blessed Lord took him away which I think to a better place than here, for in his last hours was nothing but praise to God, and after he had been dead about one year I married J. B. House. Never a kinder husband lived; his stay with me was short, about two years. After I married him I thought my troubles had ended, but alas they soon came back again greater than ever. While we were together I would often have spells of crying and he would say Mollie have I done any thing to hurt your feelings, I would say no Burt, I don't know what's the matter, I feel like I haven't a friend in the world. Burt died the 15th of Feb. and I broke up, and moved to his brother Bob House's the 16th, and the 19th the Lord blessed me with a sweet little girl, also blessed me to undergo my troubles up to now, and I hope will, until the end. I think my troubles were sent on me for a good purpose.

Brother Bob House and wife went with me to town to see the Dr. and that night I thought I would die, but the blessed Lord has spared me awhile longer. On Saturday morning after I went to the Dr. on Friday I never had such feelings in all my life, I had a heart full of love for every body and felt like I was willing to give up all the beauties of this world. I put my arms around sister Lyddies neck, and told her how good I loved her and told her I wanted to see Mr. Ben Strickland, and she said, do you want me to send for him, and I told her I did, and he soon came. I felt like a person real sick, and had sent for the Dr.: that was along week to me. The next Saturday I went to Kehukee and offered, and was baptized by brother A. J. Moore. I am so prone to sin I fear I am deceived in the whole matter, at other times I feel like his grace would be sufficient if I were called to die. I am a mystery to myself. I don't see how the Brethren and Sisters can fellowship one so vile.

Remember me at the throne of grace.
Your unworthy sister if one at all.

MOLLIE L. HOUSE.

Soetland Neck, N. C.

MR. P. D. GOLD:—I am going to tell you something which occurred to me about '45. I was at a Methodist meeting and I became deeply concerned about my sins. I was sitting in the house and feeling very bad, the preacher came to me and wanted me to go to the mourners' bench. I told him I would not that God was present there as well as at that bench, and I would not go. He talked to me some time and left, and they quit for dinner. I went to the spring and still getting worse. They all went back in the house. I went in the school house and asked the Lord to have mercy on me a sinner. When I went into the house I fell down at a bench and saw that I was going to hell, and viewed it as an awful place, and I saw it was just in God to send me there. I thought there were people there, and I would tell them it was just in God to send me there, and about that time I was on my feet and the lightest time I ever saw was then. I loved every body, my burden was gone. I can't tell how I felt. I thought I would go to the meeting house and tell what the Lord had done for me, but that would not do, and went on and stood in the door, and looked on. I never have thought so much that I would go to hell when leaving the world.

The Bible has never read like it has since that time, it looks like that I can see why things were so, and can see deeper in the scriptures.

I will close, I could write much more: this is the first time I ever told this. It has been more than 40 years ago.

J. G. WARREN.

Would not our friend do well to tell this good news to the household? We should bring all this increase which the Lord gives into his house.

P. D. G.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—I have been thinking for some time I would try to write to you. I will now undertake it if the Lord will bear me up in my weakness. My fifth brother received a hope one night during the date of 1873 or 74. I am not sure of what date; the next morning my brother came to the house and told my mother that brother Leonard had professed religion last night. Then I felt like I was left, and was burdened with a heavy load at my heart.

I would feel like it was a sin for such a sinner as I to call on the Lord, but my desire was for the Lord to pardon my sins. I went to bed some nights and lay and cried until my pillow was wet with tears. One night in September, 1875, after laying awake sometime, I dropped off to sleep and dreamed that I was at Stuart's Creek meeting, and when the church was called together, I went and joined the church and was baptized.

"WHY DO THE HEATHEN RAGE."

"Why do the heathen rage, and the people imagine a vain thing?" Ps. 2: 1.

I have simply used the above language to introduce the subjects which I wish to notice in this article. From the beginning of the existence of man, he has been unable to look into and comprehend the purpose and will of God, and has never, as a man, been disposed to admit the wisdom and righteousness of Him by whom, and for whom are all things, and by whom all things consist. Most especially has it been so with him from the time he was beguiled by the serpent, and transgressed the law of God, and became "dead in trespasses and sins." Gal. 2: 1. From that time forth his mind has been enmity against God, not subject to his law neither indeed can be, Rom. 8: 7. There is a saying that it is the mind that makes the man. In the sense that the actions and general conduct of a man prove the character and power of his mind. The saying is true, "By their fruits ye shall know them. A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit." Matt. 7: 18—20. After the mind has by development made the man, then the mind becomes the man, for as is the mind so also is the man. If the mind be evil the man is evil, and if the mind be good the man is good. The carnal mind being enmity against God, the carnal or natural man is also likewise enmity against him, and is not subject to his law neither indeed can be. We need not wonder then that the heathen who are idolatrous and ungodly should rage, and the people who are deceived, blinded, lost, or bewildered, darkened—having not the bright and shining light of the glorious gospel should imagine vain things. When one is at enmity against another he is greatly incapacitated to do him the justice that he otherwise might do, and when he is himself—soul mind, body and spirit not at enmity, but is enmity itself against another, he is wholly and totally depraved, or unable, unwilling, undesirous to do justice by or toward him in any respect whatever. Thus it is with each and every one who is born into the world. He is blind, deaf, dumb and dead. "Without me, ye can do nothing."

The corrupt depraved nature, state and condition of man will not allow him to acknowledge the perfect and unlimited wisdom, power and justice of God in his works and judgments. Did you never see a man who was so wretchedly depraved that he could not speak well of any one? Why does he do this. Because his very corruption suggests that others are better disposed than he, and it makes him hate and condemn everything that is called good, or is thought to be better than he is. And the better others are the worse he hates them, and so his hatred increases until he is made to confront perfect goodness, which is alone with God, and his hatred, or enmity becomes perfect against him.

Show me a man in a community who always has a quarrel against each of his neighbors, and is continually giving vent to his enmity against them, and I will guarantee him to be one of the meanest if not the meanest man in all that community.

So it is with man, with reference to God, and when I say man, I mean it in the broadest sense of the word as applied to Adam and his posterity, which I will term Adamic sinners. "The Lord God formed man of the dust of the earth and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul." Gen. 2:7. This is the only man the Lord God ever created, made and formed, and this is the man I am talking about.

Those who object to that which we understand to be the Lord's way of saving sinners, vainly deduce from the doctrine the imaginary conclusion that he made some expressly for heaven and others expressly for hell, let each do good or evil as they may. Now this is a vain imagination of a sordid and disordered mind. I have shown above that God never made but one man. And he commanded that man to multiply and replenish the earth, and what we call men is simply man multiplied.

A unit multiplied making many units is readily resolved into its prime unit. The same unit divided into fractional parts presents each fraction as a perfect part of the whole which is also readily resolved into its prime unit. An integral whether divided or multiplied always retains perfectly, in all its parts, the character and kind of itself or its unit. Therefore as God only made one man, a unit, and multiplied that one man or unit, it could not be that either the creation, or multiplication could affect any one part differently from that of each and every other part, from the fact that each and every part is in character and kind precisely the same as was the unit from which they were multiplied, and are therefore readily resolvable into their unit, which would be the one man which God created and made. God did not therefore create one part for heaven and the other part for hell. Neither do we believe nor teach such doctrine. "And hath made of the blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth." Acts. 17: 26. "From the place of his habitation he looketh upon all the inhabitants of the earth. He fashioneth all their hearts alike; he considereth all their works: Ps 33: 14, 15.

So we see the difference cannot be in the blood of which all nations of people are made, for they are all of one blood, nor of the fashion of their hearts for they are all alike. All of the same nature, kind and character, as they came from the hand of the Creator, but they are not in the state or condition they were in then. God never created, made nor formed a sinner. That is man was not a sinner, when the Lord God made him, but to the contrary he "was very good." That is was a good natural man, made of the earth and was earthy. He was not a sinner, neither was he immaculate. He was in this state neither fit for heaven nor hell, but for the Garden in which he was placed.

The Lord God in his infinite mind, and according to his eternal purpose gave man a law the penalty for the violation of which was death. It cannot be properly or consistently claimed or maintained that there was any promise attached to the keeping of this law, or that there was really any law to be kept only as it pertained to his not violating it. In point of liberty he could freely eat of all the trees of the garden except the one tree which was the tree of knowledge of good and evil. Man disobeyed this law. By the one act of the one man once sin entered into the world, and death by sin. "Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin, and so death passed upon all men, (that is upon man in all generations) for that all have sinned." Rom. 5: 12.

Now we have man in a state of death, from which he must be delivered and saved in order to be brought to heaven to be in peace with God.

It is not a part of the human family, so to speak, that is dead, but all men, each and every man, woman and child is in this condition. Each and every one is born in this state, therefore all are alike, "dead in trespasses and sins." and that too by the disobedience of the one man, and not of his creation. By virtue of this one transgression, all the children of man both of those who shall be saved and those who will be lost to all eternity, are, while in this state of death just exactly alike in every particular. The children of God "Were by nature the children of wrath, even as others." Eph. 2: 3. Notice that by nature they were the children of wrath. They were all alike born to wrath being in a state of condemnation by nature. Nature only produces children of wrath. It would seem by this that nature produces tendencies to destruction, which must finally and forever end in utter destruction. Nature with all its powers can do nothing better than produce a child of wrath. Then in looking for virtue and power that can save a sinner, we must by no means apply to nature for them, for she only brings forth children of wrath. We would not think of looking to wrath for deliverance or even aid, and yet the elements of nature are controlled by the principles of wrath, in so much that wrath is by nature the common mother of us all.

"How shall man be just with God?" How are sinners saved? This is the point where the difference commences with men. There are two ways claimed by men whereby sinners are saved—one is by works, the other is by grace. As it cannot be by both these ways it must be by one or the other. "And if by grace then it is no more of works: otherwise grace is no more grace. But if it be of works, then it is no more grace: otherwise work is no more work. Rom. 11: 6.

Is salvation by works? No. By grace are ye saved through faith: that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God: not of works lest any man should boast. Eph. 2: 8, 9. Paul not only affirms that salvation is by grace but denies that it is by works. As also again he says, "not by works of righteousness which we have done but according to his mercy he hath saved us by the washing of regeneration and the renewing of the Holy Ghost." And again, "who hath saved us and called us with a holy calling not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began." 2d Tim. 1: 9. Knowing that a man is not justified by the works of the law, but by the faith of Jesus Christ, even we have believed in Jesus Christ that we might be justified by the faith of Christ and not by the works of the law, for by the works of the law shall no flesh be justified. Gal. 2: 16. I understand the works of the law here to embrace all conditions for salvation. These proof texts like two edge swords cut both ways, proving salvation by grace and disproving it by works.

A system basing salvation upon conditions to be performed by the sinner would not and could not save anybody. Why would it not save? Simply because sinners will not, and therefore can not accept terms, or come thus to Christ. Why will they not come? Because they have no will to come. Christ says, "ye will not come unto me that ye might have life." Jno. 5 : 40. Some one will say; "Sinners could come if they would. That is all true, but Jesus says they have not got the would. A man can come if he will, but Jesus says those who have not the love of God in them have not the will to come. He says, I know you that ye have not the love of God in you Jno. 5 : 42. They have no will to come. They will not come to Jesus. If one will not come to Jesus that he might have life is there anything for which he would come? If left to himself, will he ever come, and if so when? Jesus again says. "No man can come to me except my Father which hath sent me draw him, and I will raise him up at the last day." Jno. 6: 44. In the same chapter, verse 65, He says, "No man can come unto me except it were given him of my Father." Except what were given unto him? The will and the power to come. Have all these gifts? If so, then all will come, for they shall be all taught of God, every one therefore that hath heard and learned of the Father cometh unto me. Jno. 6: 45. "All that the Father giveth me will come to me, and him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out." Jno. 6: 37.

Finding that sinners are all dead in sins, and have no power nor disposition to come to Christ and be saved, it is a blessed thing that there is salvation still for sinners and that they in spite of their depraved natures are saved. By what virtue and power are sinners saved? By the election of grace in Christ Jesus according to the will, purpose and power of God.

Peter writes to the scattered strangers thus:—"Elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through sanctification of the Spirit, unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ." 1st Peter, 1 : 2. Again, the church that is at Babylon, elected together with you. 5: 10. 1st Pet. The fact that God has an elect people is too clearly set forth in the scriptures to be successfully refuted, and can not and will not be denied by those who are disposed to give glory to God for his grace without asking why he doeth his will in the armies of heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth. Most especially will his elect grant his personal sovereignty, and bow before him and acknowledge his prerogative to do what he will, and that what he doeth is done forever, and is right. As I have before said, in substance, those who are not elected do not want to be, and are most bitterly opposed to the doctrine. Especially is this the case where one has been biased through contrary teaching. In natural elections it is always those who are not elected that find fault with the election. Sometimes individuals attempt to over-ride the idea of election by tauntingly referring to those who believe this doctrine as "the elect." But who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect. It is God that justifieth. Who is he that condemneth? It is CHRIST that died, yea, rather is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us. Rom. 8: 33, 34. The election of any to eternal salvation is purely the result of the will, purpose and pleasure of God. Why it is thus with him we can only answer as did Jesus, "even so, Father; for so it seemed good in thy sight." Luke 10: 21.

GLADDENING STREAMS.

MR P. D. GOLD, DEAR FRIEND:—Will you please give your views on a part of the 4th verse of the 46th chapter of the Psalms. The part that I want your views on reads thus,

“There is a river, the streams whereof shall make glad the city of God.”

These words came to me while talking on the subject of baptism. I did not know at first that they were scripture, but I found they were.

Your friend,

SHEPHERD EDWARDS.

Polkton, Anderson Co. N. C.

Remarks.

God is himself the refuge of his people, and the center and circumference of their life, comfort, peace and joy. Though the earth were removed, and all things destroyed, God is the same and the refuge of his people. If every thing that God has made were removed or destroyed, God is himself the same God as perfect and blessed; yea, the removal of every thing in the universe would not for one moment lessen his character, nor perfection. The things of his creation are displays of his wisdom, power and goodness; but he would as much exist if they were all blotted up as now.

Hence if the mountains were removed, or the sea dried up, or all earth destroyed, still there is a river the streams whereof shall make glad the city of God. This is no earthly river. But it flows as a river. We know that rivers are the largest streams of flowing water. They cannot therefore be stopt nor dried up easily. Thy betoken power and fulness. The river of God's love flows in power and fulness, and the streams or flowings of this river shall make glad the city of God. The city of God is the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth. It is the habitation where God's honor dwelleth, or the holy place of the tabernacle of the most high. God dwells in his people and walks in them.

This river of the water of life waters the city of God. For naturally as rivers help cities in supplying them, as the great river of Egypt supplies that land with fatness of bread, fish and fowl, so the river of God waters the city of God, and with its streams makes glad the city of God.

There was a river in the garden of Eden that, parted into four streams and flowed in all quarters. This never watered the garden of Eden, or the garden of the Lord. This was typical of the river that proceeds from the throne of God and the Lamb. This is the river of the water of life that is clear as crystal or pure. The water of life is in the believer in Jesus a living fountain. The tree of life that bare twelve manner of fruits ripening every month is this river, the streams whereof shall make glad the city of God.

Now such is the perfection of the happiness of this river and its streams all flowing into the city of God that, though all earthly comforts be removed, its happiness still remains. Indeed to enjoy this happiness it is necessary that earthly things be removed. By the removal of earth'y things is not meant their natural destruction or removal in the sense of their being literally destroyed, but that we see and know true nature to be perishing and vain, and our so dying to them that we have no pleasure in them. We thus forsake them and cease to find any more joy in them: so that God is our refuge and our comfort is in him. Truly we must die to and hence forsake the vanities of earth to dwell in this city and be gladdened by its waters that fail never. Our happiness in God is not the least dependent on earth nor its possession. But as earth is removed our happiness in God increases; nor shall it be perfect and complete until the removal of all things by our entire removal out of time.

But this river, the streams whereof shall make glad the city or church of God, now flows, nor can it be obstructed nor its course turned.

What are the streams of this river that shall make glad the city of God? One of them is what ran through the heart of our friend, washing and purifying the soul, namely baptism. It also may be said that all that Jesus has commanded to be done by his people is embraced in these streams. Whether baptism, prayer, hope, joy, love, meekness, watchfulness, or any obedience, all that is done first in them and then by them, whether in the inward heart witnessing and washing by the spirit of God; for all true obedience first appears in the heart; or whether as it flows out or is wrought out in the act of obedience by the child of God as he makes manifest by outward act that which is first wrought within; all that thus is done as unto the Lord is as streams of this river of love, and they all make glad this city, or church of God.

If for instance our friend is led in obedience to Jesus in love to follow him in the act of baptism, that as a stream of joy washing away sin and purifying the soul, in obeying the truth in unfeigned love of the brethren, will be a stream of joy comforting both the one who is baptized, so that such a soul shall have the answer of a good conscience, and go on rejoicing; and the church or city of God too shall have joy or it will make glad the city of God, for what is the joy of one is the joy of all.

There are many of these streams. Indeed all obedience of faith to Jesus is productive of joy and gladness, for it is not a vain thing to serve God. Nor can any worldly trouble or removal of things of time take away this joy. It abides because it is not of the world. For God is the refuge of his people, and he will help them and that right early. God is our refuge, a very present help in time of trouble.

Obituary.

NANCY FARMER.

Nancy Farmer wife of I. B. Farmer and daughter of Hardy and Mary Yelverton was born the 11th, of Sept. 1835 and died April 10th 1889, making her stay here, near 54 years.

She was always considered a good girl at home and at school, loved by all who knew her. Her mother died when she was about grown, leaving her with the family to care for, consisting of father and two brothers and three sisters, all younger than herself. She cared for them in a woman like manner and tried to speak a word of comfort to her father in his lonely hours of trouble.

She was married to said I. B. Farmer July 8th 1861 to whom she bore seven children, five of which survive her, together with her dear father to mourn their loss. Surely she was a wife who could meet her companion at all times with a smile, like a lovely rose, sending forth its fragrance to cheer him on the pathway of life's journey. She spoke to her children with the fondness and tenderness of a mother: was affectionate to her neighbors, could look into the empty vessel of the poor with pity, her soul would not be comforted because theirs was not.

Soon after the late war it pleased the good Lord to show her what a sinner she was both by nature and by practice, a need of a Saviour, and the Lord Jesus as her hope: she went before the conference of the church at Wilson, related the reason of her hope, and was received and baptized on—day of—18—by Elder John Daniel and went on her way rejoicing. She remained a constant member of the church until her death, always filling her seat when she could.

She surely could be called a tree of righteousness the planting of the Lord; not like a wild tree leaning on, and entangling its branches with other trees for support, not like climbing vines or mass or stagnated ponds; but like a trusting child of faith had learned to cast all her care on the Lord; her inward life was soft and tender, it grew outward and was sound.

About six or seven weeks before she died she was taken with what the Doctor called softening of the brain, with which she died.

Though death had laid its iron weight to crush her hopes, her words hung upon Jesus. He sat enthroned upon her brow; His words were sealed on her lips, He had put them in the quiver of her mind. She might (owing to her disease) vary as to other things, but on this never. Jesus had kissed her lips, therefore she loved Him. The fruit was ripe and mellow with the juice of heaven; her conversation was of heaven, from heaven, in heaven, from whence she looked for the Saviour.

As the disease progressed and the waiting family stood around watching every action and sign, she was breathing the air of heaven; a goodly place. Notwithstanding the shadow cast over the attendants, God's sanctuary was in their midst; beneath the wings of flesh and blood was couched the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of peace. This man shall be the peace.

She was often heard to sing No. 109 Lloyd's Selection "Jesus my Saviour, I know thou art mine," and so on, (her favorite) she would often speak of the Saviour, and say; here he lies by my side, don't you see him, all is so good. Toward the last, she said I want to go to my Saviour. She once had affections below, now they are loosed and above; she would say can't you go and tell my Saviour to come after me, I am ready.

Once she felt to have two homes, one here and one far away; while the season of work and duty lasted she was happy to stay in this, and when God's time came she was still happy to go. She was content to toil and bear the heat and burden of the day while strength was given her to toil; but when the winter of age and infirmity came and the chill of death invaded this earthly tabernacle, and the frail garment of mortality could no longer shelter the soul, then on joyous wings,

"The ransomed spirit to her home,
The claim of cloudless beauty, flies;
No more on stormy seas to roam,
She hails her haven in the skies."

On the night of April 19, 1889 her spirit took its flight, upward and onward, through the uplifted doors, along the arched galleries, along the starry pathway, through the open ranks of angels, through the pearly gates, into her exalted Saviour to go out no more forever, where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest.

On the next day Elder P. D. Gold preached to a goodly congregation from 2 Thess. 4th verse, in a very impressive and encouraging manner; after which the body was conveyed to its last resting place in the family grave-yard, accompanied by husband, children, relatives and friends to mourn their loss; but they do not mourn as those who have no hope, they believe she is gone to rest; they mourn because her seat is empty; she is missed because her voice is hushed forever: but she lives; the heart that once throbbed in sympathy for the distressed has ceased its pulsation, and the once lovely form which stood among us, now sleeps beneath the silent sod. Sadly do we miss her, but she is gone to rest; her resurrection is sure.

May he who has promised to be a comfort to the mourner, comfort and sustain the bereaved ones, enable them to remember her words and follow her example; may He give them grace to cleanse their souls, enable them to live as she did, and die with confidence with which she died.

I have not language to express half my feelings concerning this goodly sister. The half has not been told this piece is lengthy I know, but I love to dwell here and linger around the mansions of the Godly.

ON SELF-MADE MINISTERS.

So then you compare this prophecy with the conduct of missionary preachers, and see if it is not exactly fulfilled. Take up the history of South America, and the Jesuits, and the history of the Roman church in his progress of missions, and see there. But passing these, let me come to what you know. Don't the missionaries creep into meeting houses and lead captive silly women, in forming them into societies to get money? Do they not act silly to pay their money for preaching, on the promise of these men to send them preachers and yet get no preaching? But he gets the money, and away he goes to creep into another meeting house, to prey on more silly women; gets away, and so on; and if he don't get the forming of these silly women into societies, yet he gets it at division, when these creepers come together to divide the spoil and get their pay for creeping. For this is the cat's prey, and the gunner's game; for this some creep into the church, for this game they creep into the ministry, for this game they creep into the several offices to missionary speculation; and for this game of money that as low, humble ministers of the gospel, they creep from meeting house to meeting house, to lead captive silly women to their various money-making schemes. Say is not this the truth, and don't this look like fulfilling the prophecy? Again: let us notice the means of leading these silly women captive; and these means are very seducing to young females who wish their names to spread far and wide, and be enrolled in the records of fame, and fly abroad on paper wings from pole to pole. What are they? Miss Sally, President; Miss Naney, Vice President—Miss Jane, Directress; Miss Martha, Corresponding Secretary; Miss Maria, Treasurer, &c., Is not this good bait for flies, or pride, which? But mark, the creeper's prey is underneath these dignified titles; these titles are only the trap to catch the birds, that he may pluck out of their purses the game for which he first set out. Say, is not this the truth? The girls have given their money to the Lord knows who, for they don't know who is to get it in the end. And the preacher is gone and left them with an empty title and beggar's purse; for two to one if she has not got to beg her father or brother for the money, or to pay her subscription for her. Thus it is often proclaimed on the paper of fame, that missionary such an one is to preach at such a place on such a day; here he comes as a low, humble, gospel minister, having his heart and tongue filled with gospel truth; but alas, when he opens his mouth to let out gospel, money runs out of heart and mouth. For in this day it is—Go ye into all the world and preach money to every creature; he that giveth shall be saved, and he that giveth not shall be damned—for give us money enough and we will save the world. Yes, sir, this is the game for which you preach to us, you hireling; for you are hired at a dollar a day, or $40 per month. And if it had not been for the hire, our ears would have never been stunned by the sound of money; Beelzebub might have laid claws on us and carried us to old satan's house for what you cared, if it had not been for your hire we should have known no more about you than another dead dog, you woman deceiver, you. Thus missionary clergy creep about from one meeting house to another, as unperceived in their intentions as the squatted cat, or creeping gunner to his game. Say, don't this look like the prophecy was fulfilled in these men.

Again: don't missionary preachers in a low, humble manner, go from one private house to another begging? and who more low and humble than beggars, or who may with more propriety of speech be said, creep into houses, or creep about from house to house to beg or get something to eat, than poor begging parsons? See how exactly the term creep into houses fits missionary beggars. If Paul had lived now he could not it seems to me, have made use of words that would have fitted their calling better. And in their creeping about from one private house to another, is it like the apostles when they went from house to house, or daily in every house they ceased not to teach and preach Jesus Christ? No, sir, the apostles proved by their conduct that it was for the salvation of souls, and not money, that they went from house to house. But you prove by your conduct, and begging, and preaching, and subscriptions, and society forming, and dividing, and hiring at a dollar a day, that it is money and not souls you are after. Yet it is cat-like, in such a sneaking manner that you lay hold on the prey, before they find out to the full your intentions. And what is worse, some of these fellows often take the advantage to beg the woman when the husband is from home, and lead her thus into their schemes. And may I not add and say that the church is full at this age of these creepers, that they have led away thousands and tens of thousands of women captive to their schemes of money-making. And Paul calls them in the text silly, laden with sins, led away with divers lusts, the lust of pride, of being called a great donor, and have their names enrolled in the periodicals of the day; the lust of ambition vying with other givers; the lust of letting their left hand know what their right hand doeth; the lust of buying heaven for gifts to the preachers; ever-learning about missions, and yet never able to come to the knowledge of the truth of them nor about them, whether they be of God, man, or the devil. And I will venture there is not a woman missionary in the United States, that can tell and prove it decidedly by the scriptures, when missions began, how carried on, and what is the state of missions now; and whether it be of God, men, or the devil, by all the learning they have obtained from these creepers. Although I speak it with great deference and respect to the ladies, and their good sense in many things, but the missionaries are no fools, they have got a hold of the right handle, they have got hold of the women and led them captive, and be sure the men will follow; for this is a thing of course, unless they should fall in with some old woman haters, and these are very scarce it is to be hoped in this day of miracles—when men rule the world, and young ladies the young men, and wives their husbands, and so we may say the ladies rule the world. The missionaries get their play and access to the purse and all the spoil, as the ladies are their captives and the men governed by the women. So then all are theirs at once, this is the reason why they have met with such great success, and not because missions is of God; for God never made his religion to rest on so mean a basis as money, the love of which is the root of all evil, and while some covet it they pierce themselves through with many sorrows. How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of heaven. Then it is better to be poor than rich. Say, don't this look like the prophecy was fulfilled.

But again: don't missionaries creep into public houses? What is that over the mantle piece? Is it Diana's image, or the image of Jupiter? or one of Micah's household gods? or a calf of Jeroboam's make? No, sir, it is a missionary box. Then I suppose they have crept into your public houses? Oh, yes. Are your wife and daughters missionaries? Surely. Then the creeper has found his way here? Yes. How do you like it? Not much; but they are well pleased with it, and I let them go on. And don't you help them with a little money too, when they are hard run? Oh, yes; that is a thing of course. Can you tell me the mechanic that made the box, and who invented the pattern and practice? Oh yes money-lover was the patentee, and money getter put it here, to beg in his absence. And was he a preacher that invented this traffic in God's church? By the life of Pharaoh he was, for you know they have long heads in scheming how to get money, for have it they will if they have to hang an old black bag at the door for people to put old rags in, and then sell them to the paper makers for money. For heaven's sake you don't say so? What is the difference between this priest-traffic in the church now, and the priest-traffic in the church of Rome, when they sold old rotten wood for pieces of the cross of Christ, and dogs' bones for the bones of the apostles? or the difference between this rag and missionary box traffic, and that of the money changers in the temple? Let the churches drive this gang of speculators and rag and box beggars from among them, as Jesus did those money changers and dove sellers out of the temple, and thus take Paul's advice—from such turn away.

Look there said Tom, after staring about the steamboat awhile; did you ever see the like of that? Why what is it? Is it not a mouse trap? A mouse trap indeed! Well it must be a rat box then. Not so. Then what is it? Why, don't you know Dick? Not I, for I never saw such a thing before. Why then, it must be perhaps to catch flies.

A strange kind of thing to catch flies! And don't you know, Dick, the use of that box? That I don't. Well I will tell you—it is a beggar's box. For heaven's sake! as old as I am I never saw a beggar's box before. Shake it. Why it rattles like there was money in it. Money in it! Yes, that is the use of this box; not to catch mice, rats or flies, as you might think; but to catch money for the church. You don't say money for the church! be sure, you are mistaken. I think I am. It is for the missionaries. Missionaries! and who are they? A set of preachers who beg for money for themselves. Oh, you are mistaken, be sure. I am—for it is for societies; yet and although they are behind the curtain in begging time, yet in sharing time they get most of the fleece. You don't say so! are they poor folks? No, indeed, if you were to see some of them, you would think it was Doctor John, just from his studies from New York, clothed in all the mechanical cuts of the New York tailors. Good sirs, who ever heard of such fashionable preachers before but in the church of Rome? sure they must be a kin to them. A kin to them indeed! Yes, for the pope was their great grandfather, and the Jesuits third cousins. And do they love money as well as the Jesuits? Oh surely; or else they would not have placed this box here, to beg every passenger that goes a wayfaring in their absence. There, there is one of the fellows this minute come to see how much is in the box, and bear it away the Lord knows where; nor how much he may, Judas like, take on his passage I know not; but sure it is, unless he be a better man than Ananias, he will keep part of what was in the box. For who thinks he has a better right to the martins than he that was at the trouble to put up the gourd? for the gourd is mine, and of course the martins too. And thus he like Ananias may keep back part of the price and I shall not know like Peter, whether he was an honest man or a rogue. Oh, you censure them too hard for preachers; they are better men than this. Don't you see that fellow? look at him, he is a missionary, just come to see how much his box has got by begging since he was gone; for all missionary boxes must be palmed on the preachers as their boxes, be they set up by whom they will, as they are the cause, the first and whole cause, of such boxes being put up. Look, Dick, and pause—and tell me what you think of that young fellow? Upon my life he lacks but one thing of being a New York dandy, and that's a ruffle shirt; if he had that I should have thought he had been a New York merchant come to see his old customers and collect his past sales. And do you say that young man is a missionary preacher? I do, sir, I know him well and his father before him. And do you say that man goes about begging? Yes, sir, with only this difference—he is hired to beg by others, Worse, worse still; for if he begged for himself then the people could look at him and give him anything, or let it alone. But now he is hired to beg for this, that, or the other plausible society, they know not whether they will ever get it or not; or to what use they may put it after he gets good part for begging, or his hire out of it. But I am sure of this, to look at the young man no one would think he would condescend to such a calling; for if you look at his head, he wears the finest beaver; if at his hands, they are wrapt in buckskin; if at his clothes, the finest merino and silk waist coat; if at his feet, he is half leg deep in cow leather; if at his watch chain, there are seals and tackling enough to bronze a cow bell; if at his hair, it is blown back as if he had come from the north, sure enough. See him mount his gig and drive off, you would think he was brother to Jehu. See him among the ladies, and he understands the art of gallanting as well as the best beau on the turf. See him in company and he can scrape, bow, and congee up to the best of American buckskins. And still you say begging is this man's trade for a livelihood? Yes, sir; but he wishes to get clear of the shame by begging in other people's names and not his own. These are a new kind of preachers; they are not the old sort, nor like the Baptists of the Old School, as the Philadelphia, Charleston, and Kehukee Associations used to be, who like Paul worked for their bread and preached when they could; these are creepers, the others walked upright; these are beggars, the others were workers; these are dandies, the others were plain men; these are hirelings, the others were shepherds. So then you say these men creep into public houses? Yes, sir, and steamboats too; for the money box proves it upon them, that they or their influence has been there. Then did not Paul say right when he said, creep into houses? Did he not point out these men as with a sunbeam when he said lead captive silly women laden with sins? Did he not say right when he said, silly women?

ELD. P. D. GOLD, DEAR BROTHER:—I have been a subscriber to the LANDMARK for nearly eight years and can say of a truth that I have been greatly comforted by reading the letters of experience, trials, and the unfolding of the scriptures, as it were, of the many brethren and sisters scattered abroad.

I sometimes think there is no one like poor me, but when I see or read of others in trials like unto mine, my eyes are melted into tears, and I am comforted by these and my little "hope" seems to grow stronger, and I am made to feel that hope is the anchor of the soul both sure and steadfast. Now if it was not for this little medium of communication how could we hear from those that we love in the spirit. May the sweet little messenger continue and the God of heaven bless your every effort in trying to comfort and edify the brethren and sisters everywhere. When it goes well with you remember me at a throne of grace. Yours in hope,

J. F. LORD.

TOUR.

ELD. P. D. GOLD, BELOVED BROTHER:—By the request of many brethren in South and N. Carolina that I would write on my return, giving a brief sketch of my visit among them, and as I feel to hope it was of spiritual interest to many and myself also, I will sketch some. I was blessed to reach and fill my first appointment at Wilmington, had a very pleasant meeting indeed; Elder Cavenaugh was with me. Two united with the church on Sunday, a Mr. Horne and wife were baptized Sunday evening. All seemed to be in love and fellowship. How good it is for churches to abide in peace and love keeping the unity of the spirit in the bonds of peace. From here my next appointment was at Mill Branch church which I reached in due time; hope I was blessed to feed and comfort them on the sincere milk of the word. I was conveyed from here by dear brother B. Harrolson to Brother Anderson's that night, which was spent very pleasantly. Next day brother A. took me to Pireway where I met a small congregation, but the meeting was nevertheless good and pleasant. Here I was met and conveyed by brother J. Bell to his home where I enjoyed myself well with brother and sister Bell and his sister who are all members, and I judge worthy ones too. Next day we all went out to Bethel in Brunswick Co., where we met a few precious brethren and sisters who seemed to enjoy the preaching much. From here I was conveyed by dear Elder Thos. Bell and wife to their home where I enjoyed myself well. I would like to claim spiritual relationship with brother Bell's wife, and would if she would go home to her friends, the church, and tell them what great and good things the Lord has done for her; and also many others with whom I met on the tour I am satisfied are out of their duty. I say to one and all who are thus suffering in mind for not complying with their duty, take up your cross in obedience to Jesus and follow Him into the liquid grave and you will feel better. Eld. Bell conveyed me 12 miles along the beach 'til we met bro.

Causey who came to meet me, Eld. Bell returning home to be with the church at Bethel Saturday and Sunday. I journeyed on with brother C. along the beach near the ocean where the scenery was as grand and beautiful as I ever saw. I attended the meeting at Pleasant Hill Church, Horry Co., S. C., the 4th, Saturday and Sunday in June. We had a good meeting indeed. The church here has had some trouble, had to exclude some, but hope the Lord will grant them repentance and that they may come back to the fold. I spent the time agreeably with these brethren and sisters, and was conveyed from here by that dear precious brother King, to Pee Dee church, where we had a pleasant meeting stopped for the night with brother Canon and his dear wife sister Canon, and his mother, old sister Canon who is upwards of eighty years old, but is strong in the faith. From here I was conveyed by dear brother Niel Canon to Conway where I took the train up to Sanford on the Chadbourn R. R. I stopped with friend Mr. Joseph Allsbrook whose wife is a member of Simpson's Creek Church, and is a precious sister indeed. I was made to feel at home at her house though I had never stopped with them before. Mr. Allsbrook is a good friend, and treated me as kindly as a brother. Here I met a dear brother Gore and wife, sister Gore, also a brother Cox and sister Cox who live at Sanford. Next day Mr. A. sent us all out to Simpson's Creek where we had a good meeting. Came back to Sanford where they had made an appointment for me in the new school building where I spoke to a goodly number and felt that the Lord was present with us. Here I tarried until the next evening, having spent part of three days and two nights with these precious brethren and sisters. At three o'clock I bade farewell to them and took the train to Chadbourn's and from thence to Atkins on the Col. R. R. where I took a branch road to Bishopville, Sumter Co., near the Mt. Pleasant church, where I preached Saturday and fifth Sunday. This was my first visit to these dear brethren, who are as good and faithful Baptists as I have found anywhere. Much interest was manifested, and I baptized two on Sunday, Mrs. Keziah and Mrs. Amanda* Brown. I stopped two nights with brother John Brown and found him a good, loving, faithful, and interesting brother, as also the others. I enjoyed myself very much here and may the good Lord bless them all. Monday morning I took my leave of them and went to Bishopville and to Atkins, from there to Columbia; was taken across the city two and a half miles to the house of old Brother Benjamin Brazwell. Brother B. received me kindly, and gave me a hearty welcome. I found him to be a sound Primitive Baptist of the old order, and by the way well informed and established upon gospel principles. His experience is quite interesting to me, so much so, by my request he has promised to write it and send to me and gave me permission to have published in the LANDMARK. I rested with brother B. 'til evening and he sent me out seven miles to brother Jacob Brazwell who I found with his wife, sister B. to be a true warm-hearted Baptist. There are five members here. They were received and baptized by Elder Temples of Georgia, as an arm of Lott's Creek church, Bullock Co., Ga., I would here remind traveling preachers who feel impressed to visit those few destitute brethren in middle and upper South Carolina. I journeyed on from here to Williamston on Columbia railroad where I was met by a dear brother J. Watkins, and conveyed out to his home in Anderson Co., where I had a two days appointment. There are seven brethren and sisters here who have been received by Elder Bell, and they are good and faithful brethren and intend to organize a church here. I enjoyed the meeting here well, and was conveyed back to the R. R. at Piedmont, and went from thence to Greenville. From some cause not known I failed to be met here by the brethren from Cool Spring. I took the cars on the Air Line Saturday at two o'clock, going by way of Black's to Mooresboro and out to brother J. L. McDaniels, filled my appointments at Philadelphia, spending four days among the brethren up here and very pleasantly too. From here I came down to Monroe and filled all my appointments in the Bear Creek Association. The meetings were all good and pleasant. I filled all my appointments in Moore Co., Old sister Matthews has passed away to her rest since I was up there last. Her family and connections desire that I and others who may be impressed will visit and preach for them.

I must close. I could not give in detail all that would have been of interest. Dear brethren, sisters, and friends, I think I have reasons to hope that my visit among you was directed of the Lord and was not in vain, that some good was done in the name of Jesus. I returned in safety and am well. I remember you all in love and in prayer for your spiritual as well as your temporal interest, especially those in affliction. May the Lord from whom comes all our mercies bless you and supply all your needs. Try and live in love among yourselves and pray one for another. My heart-felt thanks to you all for your kindness and care for me, a poor way-faring and way-worn pilgrim, I hope. When you have a spirit to pray and find access to the Throne of Grace remember me a poor unworthy sinner, saved I hope by the grace of God alone. Your brother in hope of eternal life through Jesus Christ. Farewell,

JOSEPH E. ADAMS.

Barclaysville, N. C.,

EVANGELISTS.

The literal meaning of an Evangelist as given by Webster is a preacher or publisher of the gospel of Jesus Christ, licensed to preach but not having charge of a particular church. To Evangelize means to instruct in the gospel, to convert to the belief of the gospel; hence in a general sense any gospel minister is an Evangelist; still there seemed to have been men specially set apart by the Master to travel and preach among regular organized churches, and so we are informed in Titus 1:5; for Paul enjoined on Titus to ordain Elders in every city, if (as in verse 6) he found them qualified. Of course he was not to ordain them in cities where there were no regular organized churches, but in churches. In those days I suppose churches were mostly in cities. How could Titus ordain Elders in churches or cities unless he traveled and was among those churches? Of course it was not his prerogative to lord it over the churches, for even Paul was not to do that, but was with the churches in fear, weakness and much trembling. 1 Cor. 11:3, and called himself an earthen vessel that held God's treasures: 2 Cor. 4:7, and said he was base among them: 10:1, and besought instead of forcing or driving. Titus was to teach these churches in Crete the doctrine, ordinances, etc., of Christ, as delivered him by the apostle, and exhort them to a strict observance of them, and ordain or see that qualified persons were put in office. It is true Paul besought Timothy to abide at Ephesus, while himself was at Macedonia, and to charge some that they teach no other doctrine: 1st. Tim. 1:5: however he was not desired to abide there always, but only while Paul was at Macedonia. We should note particularly that the two epistles to Timothy and the one to Titus were directed especially to them, and not to the churches, only in the sense that they might take them with them to show their authority as humble servants; to require in the name of their Master a strict observance of what Paul had enjoined on the churches through them. I suppose those churches had received the very things to be taught by Timothy and Titus from Paul, when he planted them as churches, but they need continual and constant visits from such faithful unassuming preachers as Timothy and Titus were. Those churches were liable to be imposed upon by vain jangling teachers, and teachers of the law, as the churches of Galatia were, whose faith had been overthrown, and by non-resurrectionists as Hymenius and Alexander were, whom Paul calls blasphemers; and Paul tells Timothy what he had done with them, as much as to say, do them likewise, which was to deliver them to satan that they might learn not to blaspheme: 1st. Tim. 1:20. He tells Timothy to reject a heretic after the first and second admonition. Of course it should be shown from scripture that they were in error doctrinally, if they could be shown, but whether they could or not they were to be rejected, after sufficient labor and pains had been taken with them. Timothy was to be an uncompromising and bold preacher, hence Paul's solemn charge to him. Paul first tells him that some would depart from the faith giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils, &c.; and then solemnly charges him to preach the word in season, out of season. Some weak churches were certain to be imposed upon, whose pastors were weak, timid, and perhaps in the office without being called to the ministry, or ordained too soon; hence puffed up and ruined.

In my traveling among churches I have seen great need of more faithful and more able traveling preachers than myself. I have visited Baptist churches which had been in the habit of holding protracted meetings, and had mourners' benches. One Primitive Baptist lady told me she was baptized by a Primitive preacher in company with seventy-four, she being the seventy-fifth one, and in the same country they had Sunday-schools and the members would sing such abominable songs as the following,

"Come sinners to the gospel feast,
You all may come to Christ and rest,
You need not one be left behind:
For God hath bidden all mankind."

I have visited churches under the ministry of men who preached that preaching was one of God's means of regenerating or imparting eternal life to dead sinners, and I have met preachers who believe in a general atonement, preachers among the Baptists. Last December I visited some churches under the pastoral care of preachers who flatly denied that sinners were born again, or the Adam man saved, and that God as much moved people to murder, steal, commit adultery, &c, as to do deeds of love, and to preach and pray.

Does it not really look like it is right to have men qualified of God to visit, strengthen in doctrine &c, and purge such iniquities or rather heresies from among us? There no doubt are persons whom God has set apart to do the work of Evangelists, as Paul exhorted Timothy to do, but have neglected their gift. They have neglected to read and study the scriptures while at home, but have given their time while at home to their other occupation; hence although they travel among churches they can very poorly do the work assigned an Evangelist. For my own part I have no time to spare to attend to any other business while at home but reading, studying, and meditating on the scriptures, and feel like I will never do much more than crawl. That there were men specially set apart by the Holy Spirit to do the work of Evangelists. (see Eph. 4: 11) Here the Apostle tells us the Master gave some apostles, some prophets, and some Evangelists, and some pastors and teachers, for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ, &c.—Now while the Apostles were Prophets, Evangelists, pastors and teachers, it does not follow that prophets were always Apostles, Evangelists, Pastors, nor teachers; for in Acts 13, and in other places in the Acts, we are told of Prophets who were not apostles, and there is no room to conclude that they were set apart to do anything in the church but to prophesy, that is officially. The names of those prophets are as follows, Niger, Lucius, Manean, and Agabus, and there were pastors then as now, who never felt it enjoined on them to visit and preach to churches not under their pastoral care. Paul had the care of all the churches, 2nd Cor. 11:28, and was debtor to the Greeks and Barbarians, both to the wise and unwise, so as much as in me is, said he, I am ready to preach the gospel to you that are in Rome also, meaning he was under obligation to God to preach to the church at Rome, although she doubtless had a pastor; Rome 1: 14, 15; see also Acts 20th chapter. I myself have had impressions ever since I was ordained and even before to visit and preach to the churches, but did not search the scriptures to see what they taught on the subject, only I went when I became too miserable to resist my impressions any longer. When I would promise the Lord to go I would get relief from chastisement, and while on my tour would be blessed with liberty to preach, and love to God and his people. My tormenters were kept under, and I was kept from being overcome by temptations, but when I would resist my impressions the devil was in a measure turned loose on me. I had my worldly aspirations; my stakes were set or I had worldly ends to obtain. This impression to give myself wholly to the work of the ministry opposed by my carnal desires rendered me at times so miserable, being also sorely chastised by the Lord, that my health broke down, and I became a physical wreck. My life was nearly a burden, and my temptations were almost too terrible to mention. I was being crucified, dying by the inch, being weaned from the world's breast. At times I concluded it was all a delusion, and that surely God did not require such a thing at my hands, being spiritually, mentally, and physically so very weak, I lost about all interest in everything. In fact I was where Jonah was, in the belly of hell. At this extremity I consented to devote what little strength I had to the service of my master, which was but little, as I was an invalid, and a poor excuse for a preacher. In my mind I made a full surrender, when to my astonishment all my tormenters left me, and complete reconciliation to the will of God possessed me, and I felt the sweet and comforting influence of his presence in my soul. and I walked with him in sweet fellowship, not a wave of trouble rolled over me, I had a fair wind and a smoothe sea, my mind became very active on the scriptures, and I began to grow in knowledge of the same. Never had I had such liberty in preaching, praying, praising and loving God and his people since I had been trying to preach. I ate and drank in his praise, and at night I slept in his arms, and I felt the force of that scripture which reads, perfect love casteth out fear; fear hath torment: and that other scripture, for a day in thy courts is better than a thousand. I had rather be a door-keeper in the house of the Lord than to dwell in the tents of wickedness; and whom have I in heaven but thee, and there is none in earth that I desire beside thee: in thy presence is fulness of joy and at thy right hand are pleasures forevermore. At this time I was pastor of four churches, and one day when returning from my appointments to the church at Mewborn's, which church I served at that time, an impression came over me to visit other states, or rather it was whispered in my mind. Immediately I resisted and rejected it as if it had been a viper. I thought it was put in my mind by satan, and concluded it was time enough for him. I was ashamed to think of such a thing. To my mind it was so unreasonable, so absurd, that I resisted every thought on the subject. That day all my liberty in preaching and praying was taken from me, neither could I preach next day. My preaching to me was like one eating without any appetite. I knew something was wrong, that I had done something wrong, else I could not have been left to myself. I tried to think but could call nothing to mind more than common. I went home as my appointments were closed, and as I had given up the world to read, study, and preach I began trying to read as before, but had no liberty in reading the scripture. It was entirely destitute of moisture. To enjoy reading and meditating on the Scriptures was impossible. I prayed to the Lord to show me what was the matter with me, when the voice seemed to whisper to my mind to visit other states, and as Texas was presented to my mind I thought the Lord had called me to go to Texas. I informed my mother of my impression, whereupon she said it was too far, you are too feeble. I readily agreed with her and concluded my impressions were only a delusion. One night soon after I came to that conclusion I dreamed seeing my house on fire, and it was past being saved, but I paid but little attention to the dream. In a night or so I dreamed the same dream again, which somewhat alarmed me. I thought God revealed to me that he was going to take my property, but I knew not for what. Immediately I dreamed again and saw Christ dressed in common clothes in about the appearance of a farmer, he was sitting on horesback, and had the appearance of a common man, or a servant. Immediately, without hearing him speak, or seeing any one else, I knew it was Christ and approached to where he was, when I did he extended to me his hand, and said you are going to lose your property and smiled; also he said, it is for your disobedience. Immediately I awoke and began enquiring and asking myself what I had been disobedient in, when that same something whispered in my mind, not to my ears, to visit other states. Then and there I promised the Lord I would go anywhere he would direct. When I did all fear of losing my property fled, and I was fully satisfied for a short time at least that God had made it obligatory on me to visit other states. I told my mother my dreams which satisfied her it was of the Lord, so she raised no objections, and never to the day of her death did she throw a single straw in my way. I visited Texas early in 1873 but it was in the wet season and cold; and very unpleasant to travel, besides I was sick, weak and despondent, and I did not preach much. I came back home after a short stay ashamed, disappointed and disgusted at myself for having gone so far, spent my money and received almost nothing of the brethren but it was not their fault as I was with very few of them. I was soon driven by chastisement from home again, and since then have devoted nearly all of my time to the ministry. I have had no other business scarcely since. When I come to any other conclusion, except to travel and preach, I am shut up and afflicted and threatened with death and have impressions often to make more appointments before me and preaching every day. Last winter while on appointments in Georgia I became impressed to visit the churches of the Flint River Association, but as I had a month's appointment before me, and had been preaching nearly every day for about one month, I concluded I would not go although I had an unusual desire to see the brethren in that section and was drawn out in love to them. That day I could not preach with any liberty of feeling, that night I was stricken with a pain in my body, in a part that I had never had the least symptom of disease and did not then have any disease, and have not yet, but I was smitten with a pain in a healthy part of my body. Next morning it was plainly revealed to me that it was a chastisement from God because of my rebellion against my impressions. I then readily agreed to let appointments be made for me in that section, when I did the peace of the Lord came into my soul, and that day I had a feast in preaching. When I had filled most of the appointments I was then filling, and had gotten down in southern Florida I concluded to call in those other appointments thinking my impressions might not be of the Lord after all; besides I was tired and wanted to return home to rest, so I wrote Elder Rodgers to call them in. Next morning something seemed to whisper to my mind, that death was close upon me and my departure was at hand. It had no terrors however, but I rejoiced in the pleasing thought of being relieved from the fatigues and suffering of traveling and preaching. I began to have distressing dreams until one night while lying on the bed with Elder George Bennett that same pain seized me in the same part of my body, and was so severe that the cold sweat stood on me. I made known to brother Bennett my condition, but soon the pain passed off, when it was plainly revealed to me that it was sent to me because I had called in those appointments. I told Elder Bennett my revelation, and said to him I was going to have those appointments published again, if the brother has called them in; and said, I will have the pain no more, nor those distressing dreams, and as I told him so it came to pass, and I have not felt the pain since, until last week when I asked the Lord if I might relax my preaching, or might be allowed to stay at home more, when lo, and behold the same pain seized me again. From time to time I have seen something in our religious periodicals which showed the writers were not favorable to so much traveling among churches, and I not being satisfied that the scriptures authorized such preaching, was often perplexed in mind as to what my duty was. I had impressions to give my whole life to it, but was disposed to rely more on the judgment of abler brethren, but I am thoroughly convinced that the Scriptures authorize such preaching, not that every preacher has it to do, for some are chosen to be pastors, and some Evangelists, Eph. 4: 11. But I for one have neglected reading and studying until a few years ago. The churches have generally done their duty so far as helping me with money to supply my needs is concerned, and some times perhaps done more than their duty. It is true some churches have failed to help me any but it was generally when no one would mention it. I dislike to hear traveling preachers complain of being neglected by the churches. The only way we have any right to complain is simply to preach to each church the preaching bidden us, and leave the event with God, and rely on his faithfulness to fulfill his promises; and no doubt but that the great neglect of churches for their pastors is owing to a great extent to our unfaithfulness to explain the Scriptures to them on every point that God has enabled us to understand; but certainly traveling preachers do not get too much help, nor pastors half enough; neither should be neglected. Perhaps pastors neglect their duties to their flocks, and that may be one reason why their flocks neglect them. Let him that is without sin cast the first stone. That is if the stones must be thrown, but I don't believe in this stone throwing in any sense of the word. I hope what I have written will be of comfort to some. In love to the brotherhood, I am yours,

FEET-WASHING.

Proof that feet washing was practiced say 2000 years before Jesus Christ was born into this world. Gen. 18: 4. When the angels appeared to Abraham he gave them water to wash their feet. Gen. 19: 2. Two of the same angels continued on to Sodom and stopped with Lot who gave them water to wash their feet. Gen. 43: 24. Joseph's brethren when they entered his house were given water to wash their feet. Gen. 24: 32. When the servants, who went to Laban's for a wife for Isaac were invited into the house, they were given water to wash their feet. 1st Samuel 25: 41. When the servants sent by King David to the widow Abigail to secure her to be his wife reached her and reported their business she bowed to the earth and said, behold let thy hand maid be a servant to wash the feet of the servants of my Lord. Here is the first Bible example of one person washing the feet of others.

The widow Abigail did not send water, but carried it and washed the feet of King David's servants herself. There are other examples given in the Old Testament, but these are enough to show something of the date of institution of feet-washing; as well as its use. Jesus did not institute feet-washing. We will now examine the New Testament. Luke 7: 44. (read from 36 to 44.) One Simon a pharisee invited Jesus to his house to eat, Jesus went, Simon had a sinner woman there to see if Jesus would eat with sinners. While Jesus ate the sinner woman wept and with her tears washed His feet, and wiped them with the hair of her head. (44 verse)  I entered into thine house, thou gavest me no water for my feet, but she, (meaning the sinner woman) hath washed my feet with tears and wiped them with the hairs of her head. Here we hear from the Saviour's own mouth that feet-washing was a common practice in the world among Jews when he lived here, and that the proper place for it was at the door or when entering a house as a visitor. For Jesus rebuked Simon for not giving him water to wash his feet when he entered Simon's house.

All the examples above given show that feet-washing was done at private houses, and that the water was furnished, and the washing sometimes done by host or landlord for visitors, but there has not yet been a case given in which the visitors at the same time washed the feet of the host. Next notice what John says in 13th chapter of his gospel about feet-washing on the occasion of that memorable last Pass-over supper. It is noticeable that neither Matthew, Mark nor Luke says a word about feet-washing in their account of the same Pass-over supper. In those days people wore no shoes as they now do, but they wore sandals, mere bottoms strapped to their feet. Therefore the feet of walking people would be dusty, dirty, or muddy, and were washed because they needed washing. John 13: 10. Jesus told Peter and the rest of the apostles that their feet needed washing, but that they were otherwise clean. At the last Passover supper Jesus was the Lord or host of the upper room in which he invited the twelve apostles to eat with him for the last time. Proof, Jesus sent Peter and John to obtain that room for the Master. He rebuked Simon who was so impolite as not to give him water for his feet. He is now in Simon's place, and the responsibility of serving or having service performed rests on him. He sets an example of humility and greatness by acting in the double capacity of Lord or host and servant. He does not neglect his company, but waits on them at the table, then girds himself and washes their feet. Pride would have prompted Him to have servants, as was the custom. He taught that greatness consisted in serving His disciples. The apostles were proud, and were contending about who should be greatest. He washed all their feet, did not have John to wash Peter's feet, and Peter to wash John's &c., Why? Jesus was at home acting in the place of landlord, host, or proprietor, as well as Lord and Master. In no other case mentioned in the Bible did the host at the same time either wash his own feet, or have any of those whose feet he washed change places and wash his. Therefore this case of feet-washing was done in regular style—according to common custom—by host for guests. But the consciences of many condemn them when they read John 13: 14, which says, "if I then your Lord and Master have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet." Now also read 15th verse. For I have given you an example, that you should do as I have done to you. 16th, verse— The servant is not greater than his lord." Here lord means host. It is written with a small l.

Do feet-washers now follow the example set by Christ? Not at all. He was Lord—He washed the feet of all his disciples, who were at that time his guests. He did it at a place virtually his home. Now people go to a church where there is neither lord nor servant, host nor guest, and wash each others feet by mutual interchange and that when the least need of washing for such doubtless are careful not to go to a feet-washing with black feet. Thus you see that the example set by Christ is disregarded. But still the question presses on the conscience, how can I obey the order of my Lord and Master Jesus Christ who says, you ought to wash one another's feet.

Well, I will tell you the only way you can possibly do it and at the same time follow the example set by the same Jesus who also ordered that his example should be followed, you must one at a time wash disciples' feet at your house, or at some place procured and presided over by you, for the purpose. Next time another one at home or at a place procured for the purpose, he or she as the case may be must act as host and wash the feet of all the guests, &c., so on 'till all wash and all are washed. In this way and in this way alone can you both wash each other's feet, and at the same time follow the example set by the Lord and Master. Surely the apostles did not neglect this matter and in toto fail to comply with so plain a request. I feel sure they washed one another's feet, but as they did it at home following the example of their Lord, there is no account of it in the Bible. Acts of the Apostles gives a pretty full account of all church matters, but not a word about feet-washing. We find it referred to only once more in the Bible. 1st Tim. 5: 10. Here it is classed among good works by the apostle Paul, such good works as bringing up children, entertaining strangers, relieving the afflicted. These things a widow was to be well reported of before she could be added to a certain number there spoken of. That the officers of a church should require that a member of that church should be well reported of for washing the saints' feet, if feet-washing was then practiced in that church, is unaccountable. Why did not these officers know that said widow had washed the saints feet as well as any one else knew it? Every thing connected with it shows that feet-washing was never a church ordinance, and never practiced by any people in a church capacity in the days of the apostles or early christians. It was not introduced into the world by the Saviour, nor prohibited by him. Necessity was its mother. When the necessity ceased because shoes took the place of sandals then feet washing in the sense spoken of in the Bible died a natural death. It should be allowed to sleep in peace, and humility shown and practiced in some of the many ways now open to us all, wherein some benefit may be done to somebody. Jesus washed the disciples' feet because they needed washing. He that is clean needeth not save or except to wash his feet. If any body's feet need washing, wash them. Help those who need your help. Serve those who need your service.

THE TONGUE.

Brother J. W. Willis requests my view of James 3: 5, 6.

James is a bold and vigorous writer, a son of thunder, not sparing transgressors. His epistle is always appropriate inasmuch as there are always offenders.

In this chapter he warns the brethren of the danger of being many masters. You had better not have many masters to serve, nor seek to be masters over others. Be ye not called of men Rabbi for one is your master, even Jesus, and ye are all brethren. We cannot serve two masters, nor should we wish to rule over others, for if we do we shall offend in many things and receive the greater condemnation.

See what a bad master the tongue is. True it is very small; but a very small helm turns the great ship about, and small bits in horses' mouths turn them about, even so, though the tongue is very small, yet see how it boasts great things. What a bad master the tongue is. The figure of fire is referred to. What a great trouble may spring from a little fire. A spark may blaze and consume much property causing great trouble. So the tongue can produce such trouble as a fire, a world of iniquity. So is the tongue among our members defiling the whole body, setting on fire the whole course of nature, and is set on fire of hell. There could scarcely be a more ghastly and frightful picture of evil than this. Nor can any man tame the tongue. Every kind of beast or bird has been tamed, but the tongue can no man tame.

When it is not governed, but is allowed to become a master, it oppresses other people. There is no member of the body that can smite as heavily as the tongue. It can inflict heavier blows causing wounds harder to heal than the fist or rod. How biting and burning are the bitter words of an ungoverned tongue. The trouble a tale bearer causes among brethren separating very friends is distressing. The back-biting and evil speaking of the froward tongue is as hornets stinging, leaving wounds that smart and burn for many days. How one wild tongue inflames other tongues likewise to offend. The deceitful tongue blesses you to your face and curses you behind your back, and spreads firebrands in the stubble in the minds of falsehood, and what a fire of trouble raises.

But perhaps as great trouble and reproach does the unbridled tongue inflict upon the person himself that does not rule his own tongue. Here is one that allows his tongue to go at large and behold how it corrupts the person himself; he utters perverse words and they react on the one talking and embittering him, and he imagines he is justified in this talking, and he utters lies and concludes they are truth, deceiving himself; he embitters himself more and more by his bitter words, imagining that he is much aggrieved. Do you notice that when one utters angry words against another he seems to be more enraged himself the more he talks, until he is full of rage. Whom has he damaged more by his bitter talk? He has damaged himself more by his bitter talk? He has harmed himself more than he has the one he has assailed. The tongue kindles a self-devouring flame. It rages within. It sets on fire the course of nature, and is itself set on fire of hell. If one even whispers wrong words against another he will imagine the one he has spoken against is his enemy, and still further wrong him, when he deceives himself by his vain talk.

How is the matter of uttering falsehoods in the name of the Lord. How is it with one saying he is sent of God to preach when it is not true, and makes empty the hungry, and by good words and fair speeches deceives the simple. A false teacher deceives others by false doctrines and misleads the blind. He also deceives himself by his own sportings, and carries a magazine of destruction as his false tongue mutters words of deceit and falsehood.

Is it then a curse to have a tongue? It is if you allow it to run at large, or thinking you can tame it or have tamed it, you give it unbridled license. For remember it has never been tamed, nor ever can be. It must be kept chained more closely than any wild beast. It must not have any liberty, nor be suffered to rove at large at all. For every idle word you utter you shall give account.

Did you ever see one of the vain ones of the earth whose tongue never seemed to be wearied with talk? How unceasingly people talk over the same foolishness or perverseness, never tiring, their tongues never tamed. The tongue is the index of their temper and spirit. Their speech betrays them.

When He sets a watch on one's lips, or gives a new tongue then it utters good words, savory speech, and the voice is sweet. When the heart indites a good matter then the tongue is as the pen of a ready writer. The Lord only can control the tongue. Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh. How good then are the gracious words of him whose speech is seasoned with salt. When the Lord opens the mouth then the tongue shall show forth his praise. For then words do not go forth out of feigned lips. Then one is justified by his words, for his speech cannot be gainsaid.

God is in heaven and we are on earth, therefore let our words be few. A fool is known by the multitude of his words. It does not require many words of a wise man to utter what little he knows, but the fool will always be meddling. There is no earthly cure for the wild tongue. Keep it in the cage under bridle and bit. He that ruleth himself is greater than he that taketh a city. If you have a wild beast known to be very dangerous every time he breaks out will you turn him out of his cage? You will be careful to see that he is securely fastened in his cage. That is the only safe way to manage him. The tongue is worse to tame than that beast, therefore never allow it to run at large for no man can tame it.

The election of one does not imply that he is better than another. Nor does it mean the damnation of any. The election of one to heaven does not mean that another is elected to hell. "For the children being not yet born, neither having done good or evil, that the purpose of God according to election might stand, not of works, but of him that calleth, it was said unto her the elder shall serve the younger. As it is written Jacob have I loved but Esau have I hated," Rom. 9: 11, 12, 13. The election of one does not cause the hating of the other nor vice versa.

The doctrine we preach is plainly declared in the written word of God, and we do not feel disposed, in the light of the grace which we trust he has given us, to deny it or disbelieve it. If we were to deny the truth of the doctrine of election, after it is so fully set forth in the scriptures, and so unmistakably defined in all its bearings and connections, we would certainly show ourselves to be most unwarrantably and deplorably prejudiced against the plainest diction of our natural language: Because a thing is not congenial with our notions or desire, or because we do not understand it is no reason why it is not true. Jesus says in Math, 24: 40, 51. There shall two be in the field, the one shall be taken, and the other left. Two women shall be grinding at the mill; the one shall be taken, and the other left. Again Luke 17: 34. He says in that night there shall be two men sleeping in one bed; the one shall be taken, and the other left,— Notice it does not say one shall be taken and the other left, but the one shall be taken, and the other left, a definite one taken, and a definite one left. Now no mortal man can tell why this should be so. Shall we therefore say it is not so? There are thousands of people who do not believe the earth revolves, but does that have anything to do with the revolving of the earth? The time has been that any one who claimed such a thing was considered a fool and a dangerous man. Man is not disposed to believe the simplest laws and powers of nature until they are, as it were, forced upon him. If so with natural things, how much more wonderfully true should we not suppose it to be with him, with reference to spiritual things? The natural man receiveth not the things of the spirit of God, for they are foolishness to him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned 1st Cor. 2: 14.

This is one reason why we do not believe that the gospel is to be nor is preached to the sinner dead in trespasses and in sins. Therefore we do not believe that the church is divinely authorized to send men to what is called heathen lands to preach the gospel to them in order to their salvation. So far as that which we believe to be the gospel is concerned, it would seem to be useless to go and preach it in those dark and benighted countries, until the people in this enlightened country believe it, most especially those who claim to be preachers, and yet do not believe what we preach. And we could not go there and preach what those preach who do go, for we do not believe it when they preach it here.

We do not grant this to be bigotry, nor selfishness in us, but we are honest and conscientious in the matter. Neither do we charge those who believe differently from us with impure motives in the promulgation of their doctrines, but we believe them to be honest, yet though they be honest, we believe them to be honestly mistaken in the design of the preaching of the gospel, and in that which they claim to be the gospel. And we honestly and earnestly oppose by word and pen the doctrines they preach, and the auxiliaries which they use to accomplish their designs, yet in point of force we would not lay so much as a straw in their way. In fact we do not aim to oppose any one in any respect, but our opposition is to the doctrines set forth and the various institutions inaugurated to sustain them. Or in other words we do not believe them to be authorized by the word of God. But as I have argued above that does not disprove their authority, so we will examine the word of God upon these things, and see if it sustains our belief. We are talking about sending the gospel to the heathen. What is the gospel? "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth," Rom. 1: 16. The gospel is the power of God to him that believeth, or to the believer. How can one send or take the power of God? The definition again of the word gospel is "good news." How can it be good news to them who do not believe it? It is not good news to all who will "only believe" but it is thus to them who do believe. Christ said "go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature, he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned." Surely no one can consistently claim that those who are designated by the phrase, "he that believeth" were to be understood as being unbelievers. If "he that believeth" is an unbeliever, then who is he and what is he that believeth not? Christ by the use of the terms undoubtedly means that there is a difference between him that "believeth," and him that "believeth not."

This command was to the apostles, and they did what they were thus commanded to do, for Paul says, if ye continue in the faith grounded and settled, and be not moved away from the hope of the gospel, which ye have heard, and which was preached to every creature which is under heaven. Col. 1: 23.

The gospel is preached for a witness unto all nations as Christ says in Matt. 24: 14, and this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, and then shall all the end come."

The gospel as preached consists in producing with favor and in much assurance and in faith the promises and consolations of Jesus to the poor, the hungry and the thirsty, the weary and heavy laden, and in fact to every one who feels the need of salvation in, through and by a crucified Redeemer. The preached gospel is a witness to the truth as is revealed to quickened sinners, and just what their souls or spirits want and hunger and thirst after. In the gospel is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith, and not from the preacher to the dead sinner. Rom. 1: 17. To preach the gospel is to preach Christ crucified, the wisdom of God and the power of God 1st. Cor. 1: 23, 24.

It is claimed by many that the Bible the Scriptures is the gospel. The Scriptures are not the gospel, but are a witness to the truth of what the gospel is. Jesus preached the gospel of the kingdom of God before the New Testament was written. Mark 1: 14. "And the poor have the gospel preached to them." Math. 11: 5. The scriptures testify of Jesus as the way, the truth and life. "Search the scriptures: for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me. John 5: 39. The letter killeth, but the Spirit giveth life. "Who also hath made us able ministers of the New Testament; not of the letter, but of the Spirit: for the letter killeth, but the Spirit giveth life." 2 Cor. 3 : 6. "The words that I speak unto you they are spirit and they are life." Jno. 6 : 63. Surely no one would conclude for a moment that the written word is either spirit or life. The scriptures in the written word are composed of impressions of letters which serve as mere signs of ideas suggestive to the natural mind only as in the letter, but the New Testament, or scriptures are in Spirit, and are written by the Spirit in the heart and mind of every one who is quickened by the Spirit. "It is the Spirit that quickeneth, the flesh profiteth nothing."

One may learn the entirety of the letter "by heart" and yet know nothing of the spirit and power of the word of God. Again one may know the truth of the Scripture in the power and wisdom of the Spirit, and yet not be conversant with the letter of the word.

The scriptures are addressed to, and were written for the believer. "These things have I written unto that believe on the name of the Son of God ; that ye may know that ye have eternal life and that ye may believe on the name of the Son of God." 1st Jno. 5 : 13.

"All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." 2d. Tim. 3 : 16, 17. If the giving of the scriptures were for the instruction of sinners dead in sins, this scripture should read: that sinners may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works, instead that the man of God should be thus furnished. No one will claim that an ungodly man, a sinner dead in sins, is a man of God. If so the godly man, the christian man, is a man of whom? If the Scriptures were the gospel why should it be tho't

so necessary that one should be a christian in order to preach the gospel? Can not one study the letter of the Scriptures as he would law or medicine and become as proficient in one as in the other? We have lawyers who are wicked men and yet they seem to know as much about the bible as they do about the Code, though that may not be saying much for their knowledge of the Bible, and why not they preach as well as practice law? Perhaps many of them would if preaching paid as well as the practice of law. But would they or could they preach the gospel? There is just as much difference between preaching and preaching the gospel as there is between the scriptures and the gospel. Any one can preach who can speak before the people, but for one to preach the gospel he must have a dispensation of the gospel committed unto him. 'For though I preach the gospel I have nothing to glory of ; for necessity is laid upon me; yea, woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel.' We see there is vastly more in preaching the gospel than there is in simply preaching.

To preach the gospel is to set forth with power in the Holy Ghost the fullness and riches of the precious promises of God in Christ Jesus, which is to feed the flock, the church. 1st Pet. 5 : 2, to comfort them which are in trouble. 2d Cor. 1—4. To save them that believe. 1st, Cor. 1 : 21.

Those who claim to send the gospel to the heathen set forth the idea that God has ordained the preaching of the gospel for the quickening of sinners. If the gospel preached accomplishes this great work, then every honorable means for its promulgation should be adopted and therefore we should quit opposing the various honorable schemes invented to send preachers to the heathen, provided the men to be sent are gospel preachers. It is no-where declared in all the scriptures that sinners are quickened by the preaching of the gospel, or that the preaching of it is for that purpose. I do not claim that sinners are not, or may not be quickened during the preaching of the gospel; but that does not prove that the preaching is for that purpose. An exception can not be made the rule. There was an earthquake when the jailor was quickened, but that does not prove that God has ordained earthquakes for the quickening of sinners. A lady once said: I would not be an Old Baptist if the Lord should make me one. Whereupon she was made to see the wickedness of her heart, and the absurdity of such a remark, and she found no peace of mind until the Lord made her an Old School Baptist, and a most exemplary one too. Two young ladies once tried to drive their horse and buggy over one of our Elders, whereupon they were convicted, and he afterwards baptized them. I mention these as single instances where the Lord by his blessed spirit began the good work in them. Now shall we, from these, claim that for one to be quickened he must put some preachers in jail and make their feet fast in the stocks, or say some presumptuous thing, or try to drive over some preacher? Or must go and hear some one preach in order to be quickened? One might do all these things and yet not be quickened, and why? Because the Spirit does not quicken him. "It is the Spirit that quickeneth, the flesh profiteth nothing." Paul does not say the Lord has been pleased by the foolishness of preaching to quicken sinners, but to save them that believe. We have many instances in the Scriptures where individuals were convicted, as on the day of Pentecost, and converted as with the Gentiles, or believed as with the jailor, but these are the evidences of life, whereas to quicken is to give life, or make alive, or move by the Spirit. The question of "means" has been one of discussion among our people in some sections of the country for years, and all that has been accomplished by it has been a division and the question still the same. The doctrine that "the preacher is an instrument and the preaching of the gospel is an ordained means for the quickening of sinners," is not understood by the Primitive Baptists as being bible doctrine, and is therefore not Primitive Baptist doctrine. I think with many who claim to believe such doctrine it is more through a wrong application of terms, than a real belief in the doctrine. One says, the first time I saw myself a poor condemned sinner, was while such a one was preaching. That is all right and according to the "law and the testimony," but that does not signify that you were quickened by the preaching, but the preaching discovered to you that you had life just as it did on the day of Pentecost; they were pricked in the heart. The pricking was not the life nor the giving of life, but they, having life were made sensible of the fact by the truth preached pricking them in their hearts. I hope the brethren will give this matter careful study, and not allow themselves to become irritated over the discussion of the matter to the producing of confusion, distress and finally division of good and precious brethren. The devil could not be better pleased than to have one of God's servants take the affirmative and another the negative, and get them to sparring each other in the pulpit, and finally make each one believe that if he does not sustain his views the whole church will be torn to pieces and they begin to push with side and horn until finally the church is torn up sure enough; and those brethren, with the devil at the bottom of it, are each more or less to blame for the distressing state of affairs. Aggressive and defensive arguments may each be pressed beyond moderation until both become offensive. It is so easy for one to make a hobby of anything, especially if he is opposed in it. And of all the poor starve-to-death preaching this hobby preaching is among the worst.

If one really believes that the preaching of the gospel is ordained for the quickening of sinners let him believe it, but he should not want to force his views upon others to the division of good brethren, but should quietly go to his own place.

This doctrine coupled with a universal atonement is exactly what all missionary schemes are founded upon. I do not mean to say that one who claims to be a Primitive Baptist shall not believe this doctrine, but I do mean and say that it is not Primitive Baptist doctrine, and that he who attempts to lead off with such doctrine must bear the responsibility, the end of which must result in a separation from him and those who hold with him. I hope those of our brethren who might be disposed to hold to such an idea will do themselves no harm by being rash in the matter, and that they will calmly consider the plain doctrine of the scriptures, and strive to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace, and that all, upon all questions of controversy, will let their moderation be known, and exercise a spirit of love and forbearance, and that the fruits of a sound mind may attend the labors of each one that the Lord may be praised, his kingdom exalted, and his people edified, comforted and built up on the faith which was once delivered to the saints.

Obituary.

GEORGE WASHINGTON TAYLOR.

My dear brother George W. Taylor was born June 3rd 1855, and died July 8th 1889. He was sick twenty days with Bilious dysentery, of which he suffered no tongue can tell. He never made any open profession of religion. Some years ago he became in so much trouble about his sins, that he could not hide it, but his troubles wore off gradually so he was afraid to go to the church. I have often heard him tell his experience, which was one of grace if I know what one is. His walk was that of a christian. I asked brother once why he did not attend preaching on Saturday as well as Sunday. I told him that I knew he loved to hear preaching, and that I thought it was his duty to go to preaching, and the Lord would reward him for so doing. He told me that he did not go to preaching as often as he wanted to, he had so much work to do. I stayed with brother a great deal of the time of his sickness. He was never heard to murmur at his afflictions, but bore them with humbleness and meekness. He was married to Miss Willie Ann Ray December 26 1883, by whom he had three children born unto him, two of them are dead. He leaves a kind and affectionate wife and one child, a mother and six brothers and five sisters, and many relatives to mourn their loss, which we hope was his eternal gain. May God bless the dear grief-stricken wife and the little boy, bless them with every blessing that is necessary to prepare them for heaven when they are called from time to eternity. I will say to many friends and relatives I feel thankful to them for their kindness, and attention to my brother in his sickness. I hope the Lord will reward them.

ELI TAYLOR.

MARY V. THIGPEN.

On the morning of the 1st of June 1889 at the residence of her husband, in Cokerley, Edgecombe County, N. C. died Mary V. Thigpen wife of E. K. Thigpen, and daughter of Wm. and Mariah Hodges, aged 24 years, two months and 19 days. Stricken while in the prime of life, and wafted from the shores of time into eternity without a murmur, to enter that home not made with hands eternal in the Heavens, there to dwell amid angels forever blest, we stand with bowed heads and saddened hearts. Silence seems most fitting, and yet something seems to say, speak, for a dutiful and loving daughter, a devoted and fond wife and mother, a noble and affectionate sister has fallen, and the friend has crossed the shining river.

Words are not sufficient to express our sympathy for the grief-stricken parents left to mourn their loss of their departed child, who never in this life gave them cause to murmur or to grieve; but always with a dutiful step, and a helping hand ready to relieve them of their cares pertaining to this world, and render them all the comforts and pleasures possible for her to bestow, without seeming sacrifice to self. Our tongues would fail to utter our feelings in behalf of the bereaved husband, for the loss of her, to whom he was ever devoted, and kind, and ever striving to make life pleasant, for one so worthy of such love as knew no sacrifice too great for those she loved nor better than her fond husband, and dear little children, too young almost to realize that they ever had a mother, aged respectively a little boy Rowland 3 years and 6 months, a little girl Mary six months old. We feel to know that they have a friend and father who will aid, guide, and protect them through this life, and when done with them on earth will call them home to meet with wife and mama, and to dwell together with him forever blest. "Suffer little children to come unto me for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven."

Brothers and sisters we share also thy grief, in the loss of our beloved sister, whose heart was ever full of love towards us, and her joy and smile at meeting, which we can never forget; but let us strive ever to remember that, though she has been taken from us, that she was taken by him, who is able to save to the uttermost parts of the earth, all who remember him in the days of their youth, as did our dear sister. Relatives and friends, her cheerful form will welcome us no more. A painful melancholy steals over us when we look around, for the loved fall, remembered with emotions of pleasure, and are forced to realize the fact that she is gone from our midst forever, although her voice is hushed, and her seat vacant. We will ever cherish her memory and while we mourn her loss, humbly bow to the will of God, and commend to his care all who mourn the loss our dear departed sister, and say thy will be done.

Dearest sister, thou hast left us,
And thy loss we deeply feel,
But 'tis God that hath bereft us
He can all our sorrows heal.

W. & M.

Remarks.

Mrs. Thigpen was the daughter of our dear brother Wm. Hodges. During the many years of my pleasant acquaintance with him this is the first time he has been called to mourn the loss by death of one of his dear children. May the Lord bless and comfort him and sister Hodges in their sad loss.

P. D. G.

BENJAMIN BUTCHER.

It again devolves upon me to put upon record another sad event, which has draped our church and community in mourning. Our dear old brother and Deacon, Benjamin Butcher of Pittsylvania Co., Va., has fallen asleep. He was born Aug. 20th, 1820, united with the church in 1855, was set apart as Deacon in 1882 by the church at Malmaison. He died in the triumphs of faith May 30, 1889, leaving a wife and four children (all married) to mourn their loss.

The subject of this memoir deserves more than the usual or ordinary notice. He has often told me that from his earliest recollections he had been fully convinced that it was the whole duty of mortal man to keep his Creator's commandments, all of them, often dwelling upon the first that was given to Adam, when driven out of the garden, "To till the soil and to make his living by the sweat of his face."

And he was out of his duty whenever neglecting the more weightier matters, and his life is a living proof. And he not only loved God but none of his commandments were grievous to him.

In the first and very essential place to live a useful life, serving his day and generation, he was brought up in the way he should go, and was a standing monument to the truth of this lesson that is taught by inspiration, that when a child is brought up in the way he should go, he will not when he is old depart from it.

For as the twig is inclined the tree will be sure to grow, and men are only grown up boys.

He was married when quite young and very poor, but by indomitable energy and strict economy he succeeded in bringing up his family in respectability and noted for their honesty and integrity, and he was an ample provider.

He was one that believed that, in morals integrity holds the first place, benevolence the second and prudence the third, and when the first is not the second cannot be, and when the third is not, the other two will often be brought into suspicion.

He was remarkable for his promptness in complying with all his duties, and was a Deacon in its true and scriptural sense.

Therefore purchased to himself a good degree, and not only a great boldness in the faith, but a happy entrance into the New Jerusalem.

For death had been robbed of its terrors and the grave of its victory.

He had been a sufferer for many years from indigestion, which wrought out for him not only patience, but experience and hope, which maketh not ashamed.

Having the love of God shed abroad in his heart which the Holy Ghost had given him, he was very cheerful without levity, very devout but free from ostentation, and all who knew him will say with the writer, a good man has fallen in Israel. And not only his family, but the church and community have sustained a great loss, his pastor a strong arm and a safe counsellor which he sadly bemoans, but we should not sorrow as those without hope, for our loss which will be of short duration is his eternal gain.

And may the God of wisdom who hath so bereaved us, out of his unwasting fulness send all needful and comfortable blessings and enable us to live as he lived, that we may die as he died, is the prayer of one who loved him for Christ's sake.

And may his widow be consoled and his children comforted in the belief that God in whom he trusted is a husband to the widow, and a father to the fatherless is our heartfelt desire.

TURNER WHITEHEAD.

Our much esteemed brother, Deacon Turner Whitehead, departed this life June 18th, '89 at his residence in Halifax county, N. C., aged 43 years. Brother Whitehead was received into fellowship with Lawrence's Church, Edgecombe county, June 1874, and lived a very consistent and orderly member until June 1885, when he was chosen and set apart to the office of deacon by the church and was ordained by Elders M. T. Lawrence and J. W. Johnson, which office he filled until he was called by his heavenly Father to fill his space above among the saints in glory, far beyond this vale of tears in which we are confined. Let us remember him who did such good examples set while here he staid. The sainted life he lived let us imitate. Who was so kind and affectionate; who in his duty never waived. He loved to do his Master's will, and was always ready to administer to the poor and afflicted ones of God, and was not forgetful of the command in failing to assemble with his brethren to help to bear a part in his Redeemer's cause. He showed his faith by his works for it is by the fruit of the Spirit that all men may know that ye are my disciples. He walked as our fore-fathers walked, by faith and not by sight. His faith in God seemed to be strong and went with him through "the Valley and Shadow of death;" for in death he feared no evil, for death to him had lost its sting, and we hope he is now enjoying that sweet rest from all his toil and labor here in this world of woe.

"Ask for the old paths where is the good way."

By the help of the Lord this paper will contend for the ancient Landmark, guided by its stakes of Truth, and strengthened by its chords of Love.

It hopes to reject all traditions and institutions of men, and regard only the Bible as the standard of truth.

It urges the people to search the Scriptures, and obey Jesus the king in the holy hill of Zion, keeping themselves unspotted from the world.

It aims to contend for the mystery of the faith in God and the Father, Jesus the Mediator, and the Holy Spirit the blessed Comforter.

All lovers of Gospel truth are invited to write for it—if so impressed.

May grace, mercy, and peace be multiplied to all lovers of truth.

ON SELF-MADE MINISTERS.

As a proof I know that a certain missionary went to a certain meeting house and crept in there, and told the ladies if they would form a society and subscribe, that he would send them this, that, or the other preacher, as they might choose, and that they should have preaching from these gentlemen in broadcloth. So they counted their chickens before the creeper hatched them, so they subscribed some $5, some $2, &c. Fine times now—the money was gotten and not one sermon did they get for it. Were not these girls silly to buy and pay for the chickens before they were hatched! I hope they will learn to abide by the gospel rule hereafter, that is, let him that is taught in the word communicate to him that teaches in all good things. First get their heart dictates, and give no more, no less; if you do, it is not a gospel offering acceptable to God. Many such cases I could bring you, of these men's leading captive silly women; the ladies ought to be on their guard, money is scarce these hard times. You know captives are sometimes put in chains; these creepers carry their chains with them, ready to bind the ladies and lead them away. The first, is a smooth pathetic tongue and enticing words; the second, is the subscription list—this ties any honorable female fast; the third is, $2 or $5 for membership—this ties their honor head and foot; the fourth is, the office of collector or treasurer—this ties both the lady and the bag. So their having them captives they are sure of their money. Oh the girls will be clever, they will pay the creeper every cent, if they have to beg daddy and mammy for it.

Now I would ask, what is the difference of exchange in the trade of the pope and missionaries? It is not in the thing received, but in the commodity sold. The Roman priests sold indulgence in sin, the missionary priests sell membership into societies. The Roman priests sold or granted absolutions at fixed prices, so much money for killing a father, so much for living in whoredom, so much for killing a wife, so much for stealing a horse, &c. But says the Roman priest, the poor having no money to pay him, they cannot be comforted or pardoned. The missionary priests also sell at fixed prices, so much for membership in a missionary society; it used to be $2, but as money is scarce they may have fallen in the price of this commodity, for the Bible society like the Roman priests they have fixed the price. So much for membership in tract societies, &c. And then like the Roman priests, they invent another trade in the church, so much for life membership, higher still, I think if my memory serves me, at $30 or $50. Good trading this. Like the Roman priests they fixed the price and you must buy or go to old satan's black hole. And the missionary priests are like the Roman priests, as for the poor that have no money to buy membership, they cannot be members, they cannot be comforted with this honorable membership, because they have no money to pay the priests. Then the missionary priests leave the poor that have got no money, like the Roman priests, to die and be damned for what they care.

This is not half I could give you of their likeness, but take this as a specimen of the difference of exchange between the two kinds of trade and traders. Now, you missionary priests condemn the popish priests; and for what? because they were traders in the church. Look at your own foot as well as theirs—upon my soul they are both the foot of wolves in sheep's clothing, or a dog's foot one; however they are so near kin the mistake won't be much out of the way, for wolves are wild dogs. I have one request to make of the missionary priests, and that is before you ever talk about Roman priests again, pull the beam out of your own eye. I shall now leave you, readers, to judge whether these are the creepers Paul saw, or not; and come to other parts of the text to make the matter more plain for I will not let you off at this.

The next mark I notice is in the 5th verse: having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof: from such turn away. What is a form of godliness? It may be reduced to two things; first a profession of religion. Secondly, a complying with the practical part of religion. This is the form of godliness—what is the power of godliness? This also may be reduced to two heads; first love to God—secondly, love to saints. In this the power of godliness consists, in all ages and in all countries; for love is the fulfilling of the law—and by this we know we have passed from death to life, because we love the brethren—and by this shall all men know ye are my disciples, if ye have love one towards another—he that loveth me keepeth my commandments—without charity I am nothing. So then love to God and saints is the essence, marrow, and very quintessence of true godliness. This they deny, Paul says. Then this proves these men to be first professors and practical religionists, yet void of religion itself; their profession then, creeping into houses, their leading captive silly women, their resisting the truth, their withstanding God's ministers as Jannes and Jambres did Moses, proves they were preachers. Then it follows that these men were self-made or men-made or devil-made preachers, or all three together; because the profession and practical part of godliness is the sheepskin. This is the sheepskin that Jesus speaks of, and Paul has an allusion to the same sheepskin when he says: Grievous wolves shall enter in among you, not sparing the flock—in their money nor blood.) To this same kind of preachers Jesus alludes, when he said: I send you forth as lambs among wolves. Then this term, wolves, figuratively used in the scripture, means men professing and practicing religion, yet void of love to God and saints; or they are void of the power of principle of all true religion. And no matter as to the profession of what sect he may take, and no matter what his practical duties may be, nor how great he may preach, nor how great his zeal, nor how fervent his prayers may seem to be, nor how sweet he can sing, nor how much alms he may give, nor how far he may travel to preach, even to compass sea and land, he is a wolf if he denies the power of godliness; that is has no love to God and saints, all his religion is only sheepskin and he a wolf. So then a wolf in scripture language is a man professing and practicing religion without the power and the love; and the practice and profession is the sheepskin. Now see how clear I will prove the sheepskin on these men Paul foresees and prophecies of. First, love to God and saints I say is the power of godliness, and the scripture shows it to be so. Have these men got this? No. Read 2nd verse: Lovers of their own selves—not lovers of God, but their own selves. Read 4th verse: Lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God. Now as to love to saints, read 3d verse: false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good—(mark that word of despisers of those that are good.) Then all is proven that these men have not one spark of religion; they have nothing but the sheep-skin and are wolves, and therefore are men-made preachers, or self or devil-made; and the difference is not much between these three sorts, for they are all a bad breed or at least wolves in sheep's clothing. Altho' there may be some difference in the fineness of the wool, yet not much in the meat; for it is all wolf, wolf, wolf.

This was the reason Paul gave Timothy the advice he did, and the same advice stands good for the church in all ages, against these kinds of preachers. And Jesus you know also gave his disciples the same advice: Beware of them that come unto you in sheep's clothing—(that is, men who put on the profession and practice of religion to make gain)—for inwardly they are ravening wolves. And I also would give the same advice to the church of God, beware of self-made, men-made, and devil-made preachers; for they will do you much harm which I could point out to you but must not, as I am too much swelling this piece.

But do you think it was the missionary preachers alluded to, and which were foreseen by Paul? I do, sir; not only for the reasons given, but for others I will give you out of the texts before us.

And first you know that I have shown the prophecy of Paul, forbidding to marry and abstaining from meats, was the doctrine of the first men-made Roman priests, and others of the same class have carried it on, under various modifications and denominations or sects, in all the four quarters of the earth. Yet you know that the Romish doctrines and ceremonies of that church, were first shapen and carried on for centuries to make money to the priests; this you know is the one of the main traits in the character of Roman doctrines, church usages and ceremonies, and very materially changed their form, yet this you well know, that she retained so much thereof as to agree in this main principle, that is, that her doctrines, church usages, and ceremonies and formalities, should make money for the priests. Here then you see that the men-made priests of the Romish church, and the men-made priests of the church of England, agree in the base principle of selling their priestly service to the church and world for gold, however different their absurd formalities may be in church traffic. Many other sects it could be shown are as deep in the mud as they are in the mire; but these I have given as specimens that men-made priests are of the same principle in all ages, in all countries, and in all sects; however much they may, under different circumstances, modify the articles put to sale in the church, or of the things trafficked on, this matters not nor alters the principle. If it comes out in the end that the traffic is to make money to the priests, all is proven that is necessary to prove them men-made teachers; it matters not in what age or in what country or sect they belong to, since in the prophets, Christ, nor his apostles no such trait of character can be found.

Now upon our setting out to prove from the text before us, that the missionaries are the men pointed out by Paul, don't forget the text—having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof: from such turn away—for in this word turn away is much of my proof. I have told you that Sylvester was Bishop of Rome in the days of Constantine, and that Constantine established religion by law, and that after her establishment she became lustful, proud, wealthy, and therefore could not endure sound doctrine; and that this put the church upon heaping up teachers having itching ears, and turning her ears from the truth, and turning unto fables. Now as the church came to this pass, or as soon as she began to make teachers to preach unsound doctrine for her, and turn the truth into fables, and her ears from the truth, immediately God had a people who all along had continued in her communion that instantly complied with the apostle's advice and did turn away from her men made teachers and unsound doctrines and fables, and protested against her and all her abominations. These were the Waldenses, whose turning away from the church of Rome began in the fourth century of her establishment by law. A gentleman by the name Leo it is thought made the first stand against those popular innovations of Sylvester into the church; such as changing her sound doctrine for unsound ones, and her truths which had been the church's support for 323 years under persecu'tion, for fables; and her attention to truth, for her turning her ears from the truth. So then the change was very great, for she changed God's ministers for men's, truth for lies, and persecu'tion and poverty for prosperity, riches, honor, popularity, wealth and power. This change in the church affairs made the Waldenses turn away from her, who herself had turned from God, truth, and his ministers; as it ever will in all ages of the church, whenever a church becomes corrupt, God's people will less or more leave the communion of such a church and form a new sect to get clear of the innovations; and whenever that sect becomes more abundantly corrupt, God's people will again and again separate and form a new sect on what they esteem gospel truth. This has been the cause of so many different sects in the world, and yet the whole of the sects in Christendom may be divided into only two sects; those that are for salvation by grace and faith, the gift of God not of works in part nor whole, and the Bible as the only rule of faith and practice for the church of God; and those that are for salvation by grace and works, in part or whole, and observance of church ceremonies whether in the scripture or not. These two points form the line of distinction, or you may have it in other words, those who are for revealing religion from the foundation to the top stone, and those that are for natural religion or the religion of reason on good works founded as the cause of salvation. All sects fall on one side or other of this fence.

Reinerus, one of the popish inquisitors, observes that some writers had said that the sect called the Waldenses had their rise from the days of Sylvester, and that others had affirmed from the very days of the apostles. Let that be as it may, the greater part of historians all agree in this, that this sect so-called afterwards from Peter Waldo, a famous preacher of that sect, yet before Peter Waldo became a preacher among them, they had long been a sect and known by many other names. So that the truth of the case is, when the church began to make preachers and turned the truth of God into fables, the men that first formed the sect turned away from her. I just give you a sketch of their character, as given them by the popish priests their enemies and persecutors, because they had turned away from them and testified their deeds were evil, as God's people always have of corrupt churches; and the testimony is of the more worth, as it comes from their enemies. Heretics, says a popish inquisitor, are known by their manners, meaning the Waldenses: for they are orderly and modest in their manners and behaviour, they avoid all appearance of pride in their dress, they neither wear rich clothes nor are they too mean and ragged in their attire; they avoid falsehood and deceit, they live by manual labor, as day laborers and mechanics, and their preachers are weavers and taylors and content with the necessaries of life, they are chaste, temperate and sober; they abstain from anger; they go to church, confess, communicate, hear sermons; their women are modest, avoid slander, foolish jesting, falsehoods and levity; their pastors have to work for their living; they reject infant baptism, transubstantiation; they deny that marriage was a religious institution, but a civil one; they refuse to hold communion with the church of Rome, because she had become corrupt; that they eat not the bread of idleness, but worked with their hands for their support; every thing in the church, not established by Christ and his apostles they call superstitious; they deny prayer and mass for the dead, purgatory, and the supremacy of the pope &c.

This is but a brief outline of the character of the Waldensian sect of Christians, which turned away from the church of Rome; and they, say their enemies, became as numerous as the sand. They infested the country of France, Spain, Italy, England, and many other countries. They had a great variety of names given them, according to the different dialects of the countries where they resided, or the names of their popular leaders; by which means they are often mistook for different sects in church history, without particular attention. And no doubt there were some shades of difference in the different countries where they resided, and in different communities; yet under whatever name found, or in whatever country, they all agreed in this—to turn away from church; because she had got to making preachers, and turned the truth in fables, and had a form of godliness but denied the power, resisting the truth, &c. Thus commenced preacher-making from the lust of the church, and disliking sound doctrine because of her pride and wealth; and thus from these wolves and corrupters of the gospel church, there was a great turning away in the first instance by God's ministers and people. Now do you trace church history from the fourth century, and you will find hundreds of thousands of these innocent witnesses for God and his truth, whose characters I have given you, burned, drowned, banished, tortured, and put to death by the men-made teachers of the Roman church, who proved themselves to be wolves in the sheepskin, a form of godliness denying the power. Here is fair proof: if they had loved God would they not have loved his people? For he that loveth him that begot, loveth him also that is begotten. If they had loved these holy saints, whose lives they had to confess were that of the New Testament Christians, could they thus have killed so many thousands of the sheep of Christ? No, sir, since love worketh no ill to his neighbor. So then from the fourth century all along to 1500, these men-made wolves continued less or more to kill sheep and like greedy dogs eat the fleece in the bargain, by banishing them and then seizing their effects and confiscating their goods.

The holy men that laid the foundation of the church of England also turned away from this bloody church, which was the inventor and first propagator of missions in the world. These holy men were not such as those that now compose the church of England, they were entirely another breed, as I have no time at this time to show: but, however, trace church history all along from the fourth century until now and you will find there has been a turning away from the church of Rome in all countries; that other sects have arisen and triumphed on her own ground, and become large and flourishing communities, where they dared not once show their heads and speak truth. And that in many countries, where the popish flag of tyranny and spiritual despotism triumphs stained with the blood of the saints and martyrs of Jesus, now the standard of free toleration is hoisted to the clouds and the shouts of liberty of conscience, by men delivered from these hellish men-made sheep killers, is almost echoing from pole to pole; while the flag of the pope is trampled under foot and scorned, and he himself and his bulls cease to terrify the nations and beg quarters. Then poland, England, Denmark, &c., which were once the bloody ground of popery, are now out of the paw of the beast, and the claws of the dragon.

That the church of Rome or the Roman Catholic church was the first that began missions, and has done the most at that great business of making preachers and sending missionaries throughout the nations of the world, no man that has read church history will pretend to deny. So I shall take this as granted by both friends and enemies. But as you cannot deny this, so also you cannot deny that the Roman Catholic church is anti-Christ, is the beast, the whorish woman that sits on the scarlet colored beast, that had committed fornication with the kings of the earth, that had made the nations drunk with the wine of her fornication, that this church had made herself drunk with the blood of the saints, and in her was found the blood of the martyrs of Jesus, and that she is MYSTERY, BABYLON THE GREAT, THE MOTHER OF HARLOTS AND ABOMINATIONS OF THE EARTH; and is to be taken and given blood to drink, and cast alive into the pit with the false prophet, as spoken of in Revelation and as pointed out by Paul in his epistles; this you also cannot deny if you have compared church history and the Revelation.

DEAR BRETHREN GOLD AND LESTER:—By the request of several friends and brethren I have been prevailed on to write some of my travels from darkness to light.

While at a meeting held by the Primitive Baptists at the funeral of young Jackson Cockran, in the neighborhood, I saw myself a lost and ruined sinner and was troubled for several weeks. At length I was taken sick, and my load of sin seemed more than I could bear. My friends lost all hope of my recovery. It seemed in a vision that I was in a pond surrounded by plagues of every description. I was then taken up on a high rock when it seemed that my destruction was complete. I was then led through a gate to where everything seemed as lovely and beautiful as eyes could behold, or soul enjoy; but when I awoke in the morning the burden of sin was as heavy as it was before. I went on this way for several days, and in a vision saw my Saviour; but my sins like mountains prevented my coming to him. I reached forth my feeble hands, but my arms were too short. But he reached forth his hands and bade me come. It seemed that I was carried to heaven, and my Saviour told me that the greatest sin I had ever committed was going to Sabbath Schools, but as I was only a child there was but little responsibility resting upon me for it, for I knew no better. I saw Elders Blancett J. M. Barnard, Joel E. Marshall and Isaac Webb with Christ and many angels surrounding him. It seemed that beasts, birds, cattle, insects, and all animals conspired to praise the Saviour. It appeared that some had seven heads, seven horns, seven legs and seven eyes, while some had neither: but when the Saviour bade them those that were destitute of legs arose and praised the Lord. Some had no mouth, but when God commanded, they could eat as well as those which had mouths. I saw a lamb with seven heads, seven horns and seven eyes, which, when it looked upon me cried as a child. All that could sing sung praises to God, and those which could not sing bowed to him glory. The moon and stars gave him glory through their rays of light. I saw a vine which reached from earth to heaven, with its clusters of grapes; also I saw the broad ocean with its fulness, and all its streamlets which run into it, the curiosities of the world's as the mammoth cave of Kentucky, with its eyeless fish and other inmates, all giving the Almighty the praise. He said he made them all to manifest his power. I saw the golden streets of heaven, and the angels sang as they marched upon them wearing golden robes clean and bright, and also a robe prepared for me, and also for young Jackson Cockran, the one at whose funeral I was when first convicted of sin. I thought this young friend was eating bread and wine from the Saviour's breast. On the left hand was eternal fire where all the wicked dwell, such as partake of the forbidden fruit, like Adam and Eve, and the Missionaries who were fighting against God and the true church which is the Primitive Baptist, for these Missionaries were the creation of Satan under whose influence I had attended Sunday Schools. These together with drunkards, gamblers, liars, ball-room visitors, and those who do not drive dogs away from their doors that scatter the Shepherd's sheep, and parents who lead their children to Sabbath Schools, and all that do wickedly, for their doings were adding sin to sin. My Saviour told me to go to Concord church of Primitive Baptists at their next meeting, and tell them the things which I had seen, and brother Joel E. Marshall should baptize me, (I had never seen him only in a vision,) and that I should be dressed in white, as white was suitable to be baptized in, married, and buried in, and that I and other ladies should not disgrace nor dishonor ourselves with the extravagance of the dress and fashions of the wicked of the present day. Those who were on the left hand were clothed and shod in all fine and fashionable apparel, and it was all their glory, but eternal punishment was their doom. Brother Marshall has an impediment in his speech so he can hardly talk at ordinary times. I thought the devil contended that he should die, but the Lord said he should live and serve him. The devil fled from God's presence and tried to draw all creation after him, that they should worship him instead of the Saviour. I seemed to return to the earth, but the singing of angels was with me. When I awoke I was surrounded by visitors and friends. They told me I had been talking about two hours and a half, telling them what I am now trying to write. The angels of God seemed yet to be singing around my bed, that this holy convoy had attended a poor sinner a little girl to her humble dwelling. Oh I saw my dear father and mother, my uncle and aunt sitting by my bed as usual. They asked me many questions for I had been talking as my mind had been traveling. My state of feelings continued until I dropped to sleep that night. In about ten days the Primitive Baptists held a meeting at Uncle Harvey Boyd's; when I entered the door I saw the faces of some of those brethren whom I had seen in heaven. Here I saw brother Marshall for the first time and recognized him from what I had seen in the vision. The only difference was the common earthly appearance from an angelic and heavenly glory, but I knew them. I sprang across the seats to him, it was a happy reality, and admitted of no mistake. The Saviour told me that I should be able to go to the church at the next meeting, and it should be a pretty day. It was, and I went and gave Elder Blancett my hand and related some of my travels, when the church received me in order to baptism. The day for my baptism was also a lovely day. Brother Marshall baptized me for his first. I have had good health ever since. I met Elder Webb and also recognized him from his appearance in the vision, although some of my friends undertook to deceive me in him to test my knowledge of him. The half has not been told: this sketch is so small compared with what I have seen and felt. I can never tell and write it all, it can only be realized and known when we get home to heaven, from whence this glory came. Your little sister, JENNIE BOYD.

EXPERIENCE.

DEAR BRETHREN GOLD AND LESTER:—To-day thirty eight years ago, if I ever was born again, the event took place. And I feel like saying a few things in regard to the exercise of my mind and feelings before and at that time, and since that time up to this date, August 27, 1889.

I was born in Pittsylvania Co., Va., Nov. 25th 1827. My parents were William and Lucy C. Hall. My father was baptized into the fellowship of the Primitive Baptist church in the year 1792, and my mother, then Lucy C. Shaw was baptized in the year 1813, which was long before they were married. My mother was my father's second wife and I was their first child. So far as I know my parents were orderly members. My father died in the year 1851, which shows that he lived with the church fifty nine years. Mother died in the year 1878, which shows that she lived with the church 65 years. She was a model christian in my judgment. My parents both being Baptists it is reasonable to suppose that I was often thrown into the company of these people, and that if I had any religious training as it is called that it was of this kind. In my raising my parents gave me good examples and much good advice. I never had a bad example set me by my parents in all my life that I remember. I never saw my father take a drink of ardent sparents in my life, though he sometimes kept it in his house. He was a deacon of the church from 1802 up to the time of his death. In his latter years he was deranged, but seemed never to loose sight of his experience of grace, but was strong in faith even when his mind seemed to be entirely bewildered on all other subjects. I do not recollect having ever known him to go to the table with his family, but before eating he would humbly ask a blessing on his food. But notwithstanding the good advice and Godly admonitions and good examples of loving and doting parents, I grew up a wild and desperately wicked wretch. To my shame I learned to curse and swear, was drunk twice in my life, after I was grown learned to play cards. I loved my parents and kept these things from them, for I almost idolized my mother, but to love the doctrine they taught and held, I could not. I could not accept the doctrine of sovereign grace, or the doctrine of salvation by grace alone. I believed that my parents were christians, but thought they were certainly wrong in regard to Election, effectual calling, &c. But while I was averse to the doctrine myself, I did not like to hear any speak against it, or to speak in any way disrespectfully of the Old Baptists, because my parents were Baptsts. I would go to hear the Baptists preach but could not understand the doctrine, could not see the justice in God to save his chosen with an everlasting salvation, while he left the ungodly to perish in their sins. I thought that every one was free to choose or refuse life just as he saw proper to do. I believed I was my own agent in the matter, and that I could quit sinning at will, embrace Christ and be a christian whenever I chose to do so, not knowing my weakness. In the fall of the year 1845, the 17th year of my age I concluded I would become a christian, as several of my associates had become very religious, and told me what an easy thing it was to get religion, as they called it. There were several persons belonging to the Methodist church who spoke some in public. They were called young preachers. There was an old preacher who came into the neighborhood by the name of John Dowdy, and in connection with some of the preachers had night meetings at the houses of the brethren and a meeting was appointed at Mr. James Haden's house. I determined to go and get religion, and when the time came I went. We had three sermons and at the close of the last sermon they engaged in prayer. When they arose from prayer I remained upon my knees as that was the custom in that part of the country at that time. Such as desired prayer often remained kneeling. They said this was the way and I had started out to get religion in this way by creature effort, and at that time I believed it to be the way. I felt no conviction for sin, was not troubled on account of sin. For I honestly believed that I could manage it by my own efforts, did not feel that I was poor and wretched and blind, but confidently believed that I was strong and could prevail. Of course I was soon noticed and Mr. Asariah Bagley, one of the young preachers, who was a very worthy citizen and a man that I liked, came and kneeled beside me, and addressed me thus, "Johnnie don't you want to go to heaven." I told him I did. He answered, "Go on and pray, act faith and Jesus will receive you." I asked him if he would pray for me, and he said, "let us pray." Whereupon there was a general kneeling, and Mr. David Thomas led in prayer. Many groaned, others cried out, Lord grant it, Amen, and so on. I had become greatly excited and trembled with fear of hell. After the singing several of my young associates gathered around me and engaged in singing, "I will arise and go to Jesus." "Show pity, Lord," and several other songs. Some shouted aloud while others laughed and talked over me. I was much excited and tried to call on the Lord from a sense of fear. They again engaged in prayer led by old Mr. Dowdy, I think. After this there was not so much excitement, and I became calm and felt well; in truth I felt good. I mean that I felt that I had been rid of the great excitement under which I had been laboring. Old Mr. Dowdy came to me and asked me how I felt now. I told him I felt calm and much better than I did a short time before. He said that is religion, arise and give us your hand, that is all that is lacking, openly confess Christ, you have got religion. I obeyed him, arose and gave them my hand amidst much excitement. Some of my associates shouted, some embraced me, some said this is what we have been praying for, and many other expressions that I do not recollect. The meeting closed, and I went home with James and Daniel Hall. Before we retired they both kneeled at the bedside, and I did the same. I did not sleep much that night, for I felt a dread that I cannot describe. They had told me I had religion; I had given them my hand and they had expressed great joy over my conversion. But I felt there was something lacking and I could not tell what. When morning came I arose and was making preparation to go on home about a mile distant. Mr. James Hall asked me how I felt. I remarked I hardly knew how James, I do not feel so well this morning. He said that was the better evidence that I was changed; that it was only the tempter trying me; that I must resist him by prayer and all would be right. I went home but said nothing to the family about what had taken place. I went on to my work as usual thinking that notwithstanding that I did not feel so well as I had expected, yet those who I thought ought to know better than I had said it was religion, and that I was savingly converted, that it must be so. But with all my care and watchfulness when anything did not work to suit me I would be tempted to swear. I did not feel any love for holiness, or any love for those I thought to be christians. Thus I went on for a few months trying to keep up with my religion; but to save my life I could not keep it. It would slip away from me in spite of me. I began to doubt it, yet I hated to give it up. But it would not stay and finally left me entirely, and I must confess before God that I was glad when it was gone. I became quite outbreking, cared for none of these things, and was bound to pronounce it all a delusion. I felt ashamed to own that I had ever been guilty of such a delusion. I felt ashamed to own that I had ever suffered myself to be thus led. I lost all confidence in the Methodist method of teaching, and from then until the present time have been fully persuaded that there are thousands who have been deceived and persuaded into a profession of religion, that are yet destitute of any knowledge of its power. After this shameful farce of mine and the Methodists, in which I was as much in fault as they, for I played the fool, but did it ignorantly in unbelief, and hope the good Lord has granted me repentance and pardon for the same, my father was adjudged to be a lunatic, and was sent to the Asylum at Staunton, Va. My mother with her five children moved to Floyd County, Va. Here I had a hard time of it, poor and destitute among strangers, and it in the dead of a very cold winter. But we managed to get a small house for shelter, and I worked when I could and kept the family from starving. When the winter broke I hired to Mr. Noah B. Moore, and my little brother hired to old brother Isaac Moore. These kind people paid us promptly for our work and things began to brighten a little. In June 1846 I fell from a tree and knocked my left wrist out of joint. This was a great drawback to us, for of course I could not work, and little brother's wages would not keep the family in bread. Mother and the three little sisters did all they could. Old Elder Sumner aided us some. Mr. B. V. and D. H. Bird were very kind indeed, so were old Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Graham. During the time that my arm was hurt I had my ups and downs. But the good Lord remembered us in our extremity. At length I felt that I could venture to use my arm, and so went back to Mr. Moore again, and continued with him until October, when I went to Staunton and made arrangements to have father sent home, but he was soon as bad as ever. He never was of any financial use to his family again. I then went into business for the Mr. Birds and worked hard for them. They gave me a good name. The Lord gave me health, so that we had enough to eat and to wear. During these years I took two trips to Tennessee. The two trips consumed about nine months of my time. I still continued with the Mr. Birds after my return from Tennessee.

In the early part of the year, or at least in the Spring of 1851, Mr. B. V. Bird professed religion and joined the church at White Oak Grove; but was baptised at home. I witnessed his baptism, and at the moment it made an impression on my mind, but it only lasted a few moments. I came home desperately hardened, was a wretch indeed. But I went on to the White Oak Grove full of myself and determined to have a good time of it. Elder Jacob Corell opened the services. I thought it was a shame for one so weak as I regarded him to be to get up before a congregation to try to preach. So I thought I could look him out of countenance and took my seat, or rather lay down upon the ground with my head resting upon a small log in front of him, but did not lay there very long before a feeling that I have never been able to describe came over me. His words were like pointed arrows piercing my heart, and I was afraid the earth would open and swallow me up. I felt such a sense of guilt and shame. Condemnation seemed to seize on every part of me, and I felt like everybody knew my condition, and was abhorring me. I felt to abhor myself and left that place as soon as I felt able to get away, but felt so condemned I could scarcely hold up my head. I tried to conceal my emotion and probably succeeded in a great measure. I went home determined to mend my way of life, and was very strict, and for a short time thought I was getting on very well, yet there was a constant fear or dread upon my mind. I felt condemned, a burden that I cannot describe rested on me. I tried to rid myself of it but could not. It seemed the more I tried the heavier the burden felt and these words sounded in my ears, "To be carnally minded is death, but to be spiritually minded is life and peace;" Rom. 8: 9. I wondered if I was carnally-minded. I could not understand what this meant. I thought that if I was carnally-minded I would not be troubled on account of sin. I knew not what to do. I could not rid myself of the burden of guilt. Condemnation seemed to rest upon me, and all my efforts seemed unavailing. When I tho't to pray, which was often it seemed to aggravate my case. My prayers seemed to fall to the ground as an empty sound. At length I saw I was carnal, sold out to sin, and that all my efforts could could avail nothing, that unless the Lord in his infinite goodness came to my relief I must perish and that eternally. I wished that I had never been born, for I felt to be the chief of sinners. I upbraided myself for the life I had lived. I was so distressed and condemned that often when I would try to pray I could not utter a word. I feared the Lord would slay me if I took his name between my lips, yet to keep from mentally calling on his name for mercy I could not, still I could not see how he could remain just and I live. I could see how he could be just in sending me to hell; yet I never could feel reconciled to be sent to hell. I did not want to go there. I tried to read the scriptures but could find no promise there that I could claim, every line seemed to condemn me. I read that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners, and that he came to seek and to save that which was lost; and that he shall save his people from their sins: but it gave me no relief. I thought that in all the promises I was left out. I felt to be of all men most miserable, and did not want any one to know my condition, and so said nothing to anyone about it. I was willing to embrace Christ upon any terms. But knew not how to find him. I mourned in secret my sad fate. I had once wished there never had been a bible, that came up prominently before me. I had once sworn a horrid oath before my dear old mother's face. O, I would have given worlds to have those words back. They were like daggers in my heart and to-day it grieves me sorely that I ever was guilty of wounding the feelings of my dear mother by swearing in her presence; it pierces me still. I thought that had I never been guilty of these things there might be some hope for me, but alas, I had thereby committed the unpardonable sin. And so I must live a wretch on earth and at last be lost to all eternity. While in this extremity this text of scripture came forcibly to my mind, "Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world." Jno. 1: 29. My mind seemed to lay hold of this text. I felt to hope that if I could hear some one preach from it that probably there was something in it for me; it seemed to give me some hope. This was in the month of July. So on the second Sunday I went to the White Oak Grove to preaching. I felt so much condemned and so mean that I thought anybody knew that I was the wretch I felt myself to be. I did not feel worthy to go among the crowd at the stand, but walked off to the left of the crowd a short distance and lay down under some small bushes. Elder Jones, a very old and venerable preacher, was the first to preach, and when he read his text, to my great surprise and delight it was, "Behold the Lamb of God," &c., My heart seemed to leap for joy. I thought now I shall surely hear something that will comfort me. I have no idea but that the dear old Elder preached comfortingly to the people of God, but not one word of comfort came to me. I could not control my feelings but wept like a child. I felt that my fate was sealed, and to hell I must go. I resolved to keep it all to myself if possible, and if I must perish forever that I would beg for mercy as long as life lasted. I left the place feeling most miserable, went home, but could find no rest. The family saw that something was the matter, and asked me the cause of my sadness. I told them I was not feeling well, which was the truth; the next morning I went on to my work, for the Bird boys, as we called them, as I had usually done; but was in no condition to work, yet attempted to do so. B. V. Bird came into the house where I was at work, and asked me what was the matter with me, I could conceal it no longer. I burst out crying, and told him I was a poor lost sinner, and must soon pay the penalty of my crimes in an awful hell, that I had done all that I could do, and there was no hope for me. To my surprise he commenced to thank the Lord that he was giving him some good news almost every day; told me that he thanked the Lord in my behalf; said I was not far from the kingdom. This filled me with wonder and surprise, but felt that he was mistaken, for he did not know my condition, and his words brought no comfort to me. Probably it was the next day when I was in the room attending the carding machines, which was my occupation, when I heard a knock at the door. I went and opened it; when Elder Owen Sumner met me. My feelings at meeting him cannot be described. My machines were running. He knew that I had but little time to talk, yet I felt that it was an honor to me to have such a man come under the roof where I was at work. I stopped the machine to attend to some writing at the desk when he said, "Well Mr. Hall, I suppose while there are several in the neighborhood who have professed a hope in Christ, I learn there is something the matter with you." I was full of emotion, and at first could not answer him. Finally I spoke and said that I did not know what to say to him, for I was such a sinner that I felt ashamed to be in the presence of such a man of God. He smiled and said that he was glad and sorry both, glad that the good Lord had commenced the good work in me, but sorry to see me in so much trouble, and added that was the way all God's people had to come, and said, that the darkest hour was just before day. I asked him if he really thought there was a chance for such a poor sinner as I to be saved. He said yes; there was nothing too hard for the Lord, that Jesus died for the chief of sinners, and bade me be of good cheer, saying he that had begun a good work in me would surely perform it. I asked him if he felt it in his heart to do so, to pray for me: he said he hoped to remember me and so bade me farewell and left. I do not think any living mortal ever could have borne up under a heavier weight. It seemed to me that die I should. For the thought came over me that I had deceived him, and that he had been led by me to believe that I was under conviction, and that was not the case, for mine was not conviction, but the Lord was going to make a public example of me, and that for a warning to all men that none should live as I had lived, lest that they should die as I had died. I feared and quaked. After suffering untold agony of mind for several weeks longer, after weeping and bemoaning my sad case, begging for mercy, and feeling that I found none, yet it was of the Lord's mercy that I was not consumed, on the 27th, day of August, about two o'clock as near as I can guess my fate seemed to be sealed. I shut down the gate that let the water on the wheel that drove the carding machines, and thought I would try to beg the Lord once more. I knelt before the picker, and tried to beg for mercy, as I thought for the last time, a darkness came over me, and I sank to the floor in great agony; it was no imagination, I lay prostrate for sometime. What I said or did I do not know; the first thing I recollect it seemed to me that some one said to me, get up and leave the house. Of course there was no voice spoken, but it was only a suggestion to my mind. But it was as plain as if it had been spoken. I sprang to my feet' and walked to the door, and was in the act of opening it when it appeared to sound in mind, as plain as if spoken, go back where you came from. I turned and went back, and aimed to kneel down again, when in a moment all my burden was gone, and a sense of joy and love filled my whole frame. I was full of life, light and joy. I sprang upright, and exclaimed, salvation is of the Lord. I appeared to be in a place of light, the room appeared to be lighted with the glory of the Lord, and I in the midst of it was praising the Lord for his wonderful mercy and grace bestowed upon such a wretch as I. I ran to the window and threw up the sash and looked out, the rippling river seemed to me to be laughing and leaping and praising the Lord's name. The leaves on the trees looked different to me, though of course there was no change in either the river, the houses or the trees. But there was a change in me. I started to run to where Brother E. H. Bird was at work to tell him what a dear Saviour I had found, but notwithstanding he was a short distance away, I felt in my heart that I might be deceived, and so I stopped short, and turned my steps to the place where my burden left me, and to ask the Lord for Christ's sake, if I was deceived to give me back the burden and undeceive me. When I returned I tried to pray to the Lord to show me, when to my great joy I had a second manifestation of his mercy and great love. I then resolved to keep it to myself and went on with my daily labor. My machines seemed to work well, and I felt full of love and praise. I worked and sang, felt that Jesus was mine and rejoiced to believe that I was his. In a few days after this, after I had finished my supper, Brother D. H. Bird said to me, let's walk up to the mill. As we walked along we came to a pile of plank, and he said, John sit down here and tell me all about your hope. I was astonished for I had told no one of it. I told him part of what I have here related. He gave me his hand saying he could fellowship that, he had lately professed a hope but had not been baptized. From that hour up to his death we lived in sweet fellowship. On the 12th day of September I went before the church at White Oak Grove, and related what I hope the Lord had done for me. They received me without asking me any questions. The next day brother D. H. Bird, Jesse Sumner and myself were baptized at Bird's Mill, in Little River by Elder Owen Sumner, a large crowd of people assembled. When I came up out of the water I felt to have an acquitted conscience. The people began to sing, and I joined in with them believing with all my heart. But in a few days I was sorely tempted and tried, but I hope the Lord delivered me. There has never been a charge preferred against me by the church, and so far as I know I enjoy their confidence and fellowship. But I must ascribe it all to the grace of God from first to last, for sure I am a sinner still. But I hope that it is by the grace of God I am what I am.

 GOD EVERYWHERE.

The attributes of deity are wonderfully displayed in nature and in grace. His omnipotence and omnipresence are exhibited in nature from the minutest plant to most gigantic trees of the forest; from the least grain of sand to the towering of the most elevated mountains; from the little spark to the infinite magnitude of the Solar System; the minutest animal to the highest condition of man and the wonderful magnitude of the largest animals that inhabit the land and the water; the least of all seeds to the outgrowth of a magnificent tree in whose branches the fowls of the air lodge.

Not a sparrow can fall without his notice, nor a hair of the head. Known unto Him are all things and without Him nothing consists. He who gave life and existence can at his will instantly take it away. He spoke this material world into existence and at His command it stands fast, having no foundation of its own, but is upheld by the power of the everlasting arm that created it.

He made man of the dust of the earth, breathed in him the breath of life and he became a living soul. He takes away his breath and he is as a lifeless lump of clay. He witholds His power from the inmates of Eden and the soul and body die. He reaches forth the sceptre of grace and mercy to the vessels of mercy and they live forever. But in time the body suffers, dies and ascends to glory as did the King of glory who bore and atoned for their sins and at the right hand of the Father ever liveth to make intercession for His redeemed, the heirs of salvation who receive the gracious visitations of the Holy Spirit according to the will of their King who promised before He ascended that he would send the Comforter to perform the office work assigned Him in His militant kingdom, while he goes away to His Father to prepare a place for them, and at His second coming will receive every one whom the Father hath given Him, and they shall dwell with Him forever.

His glorious attributes are wonderfully exhibited by his distinguishing grace in raising the fallen from the death of trespasses and sins to the life that never dies, that they may ever live in joint heirship with the Prince of life and glory. These are identified in the fulfillment of prophecy with the innumerable workings of grace, mercy, and truth, from the creation of the natural and all thereunto pertaining with the fulness thereof, down to the present and future periods of time.

In nature the bending of trees, the shaking of the limbs and twigs, and the fluttering of the leaves, evince the presence and power of the wind. So in grace the visitation of the Spirit as a mighty wind alarms the sterner in his mad career against the truth and all lovers of it, slays his carnality, and viewing himself a culprit, he is humbled in dust and sackcloth, bemoaning his ruined condition, he falls at the mercy-seat a beggar, having nothing fit to offer and feels unworthy of the least favor of an offended God, who sends his spirit to execute His will in the armies of heaven and the earth beneath. Yea He sends it even into as small a place as the heart of poor fallen man. He sends into the heart of a Saul or a Jeremiah a bold persecutor or an inexperienced youth, all that are heirs of salvation, and as many as were ordained to eternal life believe.

David says: "Had I the wings of the morning and could fly to the uttermost parts of the earth, God is there, and if I make my bed in hell thou art there." His power is known in the depths, in the heated furnace, the den of lions, the Red Sea, the wilderness, the Jordan, Canaan, in death, resurrection, and ascension; in that hope is the anchor of the soul, sure and steadfast, entering to that within the veil whether the fore-runner hath for us entered.

No power can compare with His. He has all power in heaven and in earth, and he will do all his pleasure; weighs mountains in scales, and man is but dust in the balance; the devil with his emissaries is subject to Him and can but go to the end of the chain.

Satan could afflict Job, like the church, by permission, but could not touch his life. Thus he beguiled the woman yet the seed of the woman should bruise his head. What Jehovah permits serves to effect His purpose. Joseph's brethren through the satanic spirit meant it for evil, but God meant it for good. So in the crucifixion of Jesus the seed of the woman bruised the head of satan. The church is built upon the finished work of Christ the foundation, and he declares that the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.

THE SUN AND MOON OBEY.

"And the Sun stood still, and the moon stayed
Ec. Josh. 10: 13.

There has never since, nor was there ever before, such a day as this, that the sun and moon should both hearken to the voice of a man and stand still, and not go down for about a day.

To question this as a matter of fact is as much as to deny the Bible and dispute the word of God.

The common impression of men, especially those that are regarded as the knowing ones, is that the sun and moon both stand still all the time, and never move. They say that Joshua adapted his language to the understanding of man because men say the sun moves, and the sun runs; while truly he meant no such thing. But is that the Lord's way of doing? While he speaks in language suited to man's ignorance, yet does he not always speak truth? One may speak truth to a little child or to an ignorant man on abstruse questions, and yet speak in simple, truthful language; nor is there any excuse in such cases for speaking falsehoods, or making wrong impressions.

The Bible invariably speaks when on that matter as though the sun moves, and also the moon. It speaks of the rising and going down of the sun. The going forth of the sun is from the end of the heaven, and his circuit unto the end of it.

Now would the God of heaven, who made the sun, moon and earth, and knows them all, who tells all the stars by name, use such language as does not represent the truth. For if the Bible utters the truth the sun and moon do move. Is God ignorant of facts and truth?

Would the sun and moon obey Joshua if he was so stupid as to give a command which contained no truth in it? Can the scientific men of the day, who profess to have explored by telescope and figures, the vast boundaries of the universe, and rummaged the vaults of nature, cause the sun and moon to obey them? It is queer and silly, not to say blasphemous, to see the vaporings of men of this age who attempt to cast reproach on the fathers since they have fallen asleep.

When God made the sun and moon he made the sun to rule the day, and the moon to rule the night. Do not rulers control and have dominion? Every part of the earth is turned toward the sun during the year. What causes the earth to turn towards the sun? Does not the sun, the king of day, cause it?

The sun is the great driving wheel of the universe or king of day. He has a motion, as the central driving wheel, and moves all else. You go into a vast and complicated system of machinery, and notice its motions. Every wheel is moving we will suppose. How would the superintendent of that machinery stop all the works? Would he go to some small wheel, or would he go to the great driving wheel that moves every wheel and every part of it all? He would go to the driving wheel, and when he stops that the entire work stops and stands still. So when the sun who rules the day and the moon that rules the night are stopt that causes all to stand still.

The sun has its motion and so does the moon: the earth also has its motion, and all in harmony and all completely under the power of their maker, God, who moved Joshua thus to give this command that the universe obeyed.

The Arminian theory of religion is akin to the world's notion of the sun and moon and the earth.

They say it is man (the earth) that does the moving, for God has done all he can do now, and the sinner must move towards God, and that as the earth has power of itself to revolve or turn over, so man the dead sinner has power to turn himself to God? Is not this a denial of the power of God? As the natural sun rules over the day and controls the earth does not the God of heaven control man, work hitherto, and though there be different dispensations, and diversity of operations, yet it is the same God that works in them all. He begins the good work in the sinner, and performs it unto the day of Jesus Christ, doing all his pleasure.

Joshua is a figure or type of Jesus who is the true light that lights every man that comes into the world, and is the sun of righteousness ruling the day of salvation. For God who commanded the light to shine out of darkness hath shined in our hearts to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ.

There is nothing new under the sun (the natural sun,) but God does create a new thing in the earth, a woman shall compass a man. Behold, a virgin shall conceive and bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name Jesus. But this is not understood, seen or known by the light of the natural sun. It requires a light above the brightness of the natural sun to reveal this. That light smote Paul to the earth and he was blind. Jesus the true Joshua who rules all things commanded Saul and he obeyed. Jesus rules the earth with a rod of iron, or rules all nations thus. When Jesus shines in the heart the man stands still or stops his former course of ungodliness, and walks no longer in the light of his own eyes, nor chooses the road to death. With him there was never before nor since such a day on earth.

He now no longer worships the gods of his fathers which were before the flood, nor the gods of the Amorites in whose land, said Joshua, ye now dwell. The gods worshipped before the flood were no gods, for if they had been they would have saved their devotees from the flood by either not suffering a flood to come, or by rescuing their worshippers from the flood. The gods of the Amorites were no gods, for if they had been they would not have suffered their worshippers to be deprived of their land, nor allowed the Hebrews to take possession of it and dwell therein.

The God that made heaven and earth, the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, is the true God and Jesus came on earth to do his will, and he rules among the armies of heaven and the inhabitants of earth. For all power is his. He has power over all flesh to give eternal life to as many as the Father has given him. All nature obeys him. Sun, moon, and stars, strong wind, times, seasons, men, fishes, lands, seas, winged fowl, and whatsoever passes through the paths of the seas, all stand still at his command.

P. D. G.

WHERE DOES SIN COME FROM?

"He that committeth sin is of the devil; for the devil sinneth from the beginning. For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil."

"Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for his seed remaineth in him, and he cannot sin because he is born of God."

"In this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the devil; whosoever doeth not righteousness is not of God, neither he that loveth not his brother."—1st Jno. 3: 8, 9, 10.

Any theory that in any sense ascribes sin as coming from any source other than the devil is false on its face, and false in fact. While by man came sin it is of the devil who sins from the beginning. He that is born of God doth not commit sin. This ought to teach brethren to shun all theories that ascribe sin in any sense to God.

What did Jesus come into the world to do? He came to destroy the works of the devil. He came to make an end of sin. He came to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself. While in the deep and awful mysteries of the law, which is the strength of sin and which the soul deeply convinced of sin feels and knows to be the ministration of death, there can be no peace nor rest but only guilt, yet we know that the law is holy, just and good, and that it therefore condemns sin. Then that which is satisfaction to the law is that which atones for sin in the obedience unto death of him that is without sin, and full of grace and truth. All that could originate or commit sin is destroyed in the obedience of Jesus, and the work of the law being finished it is satisfied and made an end of therefore.

For Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth, hence the believer is dead to the law by the body of Christ, that being dead (the flesh) wherein he was held. So he is a new creature that is in Christ and in him does not sin. For he that is born of God doth not commit sin.

But is there any man that liveth and sinneth not? No. For if any man say he is without sin he is a liar. How then is this true? As born of Adam we are sinners. As born of God or that which is born of God doth not commit sin. Here is the warfare. That which is born of the Spirit is Spirit. Here are two manner of people that are contrary the one to the other. I am sure when we sin we know that it is not of God but of the devil, or flesh, and when we serve God that is not of the devil or flesh, but of God. Whenever have any excuse for our sin; if we did how could we repent of it or abhor ourselves? "Oh, wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death? I thank God through Jesus Christ."

While you bless God who has taught you that you are a sinner, you also worship him because he has saved you from your sins. His name shall be called Jesus, for he shall save his people from their sins.

Then by nature the spirit of the devil, the prince of the power of the air, works in us and we sin: these deeds are our sins. They come from beneath, not from above. We are the sinners. Jesus saves us from our sins. Those born of God are led by the Spirit of God and therefore their works are good works because of God.

ORDINATION.

Pursuant to a call from the church at Town Creek, Franklin Co., Va., in the Pig River Primitive Baptist Association for a Presbytery to ordain brother A. B. Philpot to the work of the ministry, if found qualified, Elders Peter Corn, John McGhee and S. O. Plybon met on Thursday, August 22d, 1889, and organized by choosing Elder Corn Moderator. Elders Amos Dickerson and P. G. Lester from New River Association, and F. L. Roberson from Smith's River being present, were invited to act with the Presbytery.

After questions to the church by the Moderator as to the general character of brother Philpot, and the report of them that are without, the Presbytery proceeded with the examination. Eld. Lester led in asking questions. Prayer by Elder Dickerson, with the laying on of the hands of the Presbytery. Charge by Elder Roberson.

Remarks.

Elder A. B. Philpot from present indications promises to be useful to the church, and I am persuaded will be, "If the Lord will." I feel to commend him to God and to the word of his power which is able to keep him from falling, and make him a blessing to the church, and the church a blessing to him.

I am convinced that churches, associations, and Presbyteries cannot be too careful, reasonably, in setting apart men to the work of the ministry. My observation has been, that nearly, if not all the strife, contention, schisms and divisions among us are readily traceable to the conduct of some man or men who bear the name of preacher. Ordination does not hurt a true servant of God or the church, but a good member is often greatly damaged, and the usefulness of a good deacon destroyed, and sometimes an impostor, or deceived one is filled with self and puffed up by being ordained to a work to which he has not been called, and for which he is therefore wholly unqualified. It is not improbable that a true servant, being ordained while young, should conclude that the fact makes him a peer among the Elders in matters generally, and he becomes forward and intrusive to his own injury and sometimes to the distress of the churches. It is said that,

'silence is golden,' and it is I think true especially when applied to young preachers. A man's gift will always make way for him, and words of wisdom will find appreciation in the hearts of the people of God.

I have frequently noticed that young preachers are too much disposed to get out of their place and wage war against other denominations, and the result is that their preaching furnishes the poorest quality of food for sheep and lambs imaginable. There is a warfare for each of the servants of God; but the weapons thereof are not carnal. One may acquire such a habit of fighting others that he thinks he is not preaching the gospel unless he says something about what others preach, and often the most of his time is taken up in telling what Arminians believe, when he should be telling what the Scriptures teach and what he therefore believes. The better way to my mind is to set forth the plain truth in its own invincible light in such a clear manner as to expose and pull down error, and establish the children of God in the truth as taught them in their experience.

It is sometimes necessary that an open fight be made to repel the aggressions of the enemy, but this should most generally be left to those who by reason of age and use have their senses and powers more fully in exercise. If a youth, like David, feels that the armies of the living God have been defied, and he has his shepherd's bag, and five smooth stones and his sling, and he has been enabled to deliver lambs from the jaws of wild beasts, then let him go forth to battle; but if he has nothing but dirt and sand in his shepherd's bag he had better stay within the camp or some Goliath may be more than a match for him, and he suffer defeat.

These suggestions are given for what they are worth. While I have not been able at all times to observe them fully yet wherein I have followed this course I have found it to be no disadvantage to me.

P. G. L.

NOT THE DUE ORDER.

P. D. GOLD, DEAR SIR:—Will you please give your views on the text found in second Samuel 6: 6—7.

"And when they came to Nachon's threshing floor, Uzzah put forth his hand to the Ark of God and took hold on it: for the oxen shook it. And the anger of the Lord was kindled against Uzzah, and God smote him there for his error, and there he died by the Ark of God."

Time and again have I read this scripture and as often wanted some one to explain it for me. By what spirit was Uzzah led to take hold of the ark?

Yours truly,
Blount's Creek, N. C.,

LON JONES.

Remarks.

There was an appointed way for the Ark to be borne by the priests. They were to bear it on their shoulders and never to haul it, or have it carried about from place to place in any other manner. (See 1st, Chron. 15: 12; 13,) wherein David declares that they sought not the worship of God after the true order, which is set forth in 4th chap. of numbers. Nothing is omitted there in charging what shall be the part the sons of Levi shall take in moving the tabernacle with its furniture from one place to another.

It was all to be borne by the priests. When the Lord God specifies the manner of doing anything his servants have no right to do any other way, but show their obedience by following the Lord's command.

David and his men went to remove the Ark of God. It was taken by Saul and his men years before into the camp in their distress to shield them in their wars with the Philistines. But if they had been led by the spirit and power of the God of Israel they had not need of the ark of God in the battle-field. For where the Spirit of the Lord is there is liberty.

When we depart from the faith and trust in forms or the mere letter of the word we have no strength or victory. People may cling to the letter of the word and apparently be sound in the faith, and yet be without the unction and the power of truth.

It is always proper to observe the right form and letter of the word; but the heart should also be there. In this case the Israelites were not even observing the letter of the word. For God did not command Israel to take the Ark of God into the camp or battle. When we depart from the truth what distress follows, and how slow we are to return to the truth. The Ark is taken, Israel is smitten, Eli falls backward and is killed, and sorrow fills the land. But of what use is the Ark of God to the enemies of Israel? Dagon their god falls before the Ark, the Philistines are smitten wherever it goes. What good would the doctrine of God our Saviour do to our enemies. Suppose they could rapture it they would not prosper.

The Philistines seek to get rid of the Ark and put it on a new cart drawn by two milk kine that have suckling calves. These cows are turned loose without driver and they leave their calves and the country of the Philistines, and journey towards Israel, lowing as they go. They have natural affection for their young, but, controlled by a divine and supernatural power they journey towards Israel. When they come to the land of Israel they sacrifice the kine that drew it, using the wood of the cart in the fire of the offering, a type of gospel ministers that forsake all in the service of Jesus Christ; that is they are separated unto the gospel of God our Saviour by seeking above everything else the kingdom of God and his righteousness.

For many years the Ark remained in the house of Abinadab the priest who was blessed of the Lord. David desired the Ark to be returned to his place, and he gathers the men of Israel and two sons of Abinadab the priest, namely, Uzzah and Ahio, and they place the Ark on a cart drawn by oxen, and Uzzah drives the cart, and Ahio goes before. On the way the oxen stumble and Uzzah puts forth his hand to steady the Ark, and the Lord smites him for his error and there he died by the side of the Ark. The thing displeased David because the Lord had made that breach on Uzzah. When ones' heart is lifted up he does not like God's way nor his judgments, but finds fault with the acts of God. How much of this we do; and how wonderful is the long-suffering of God.

David was afraid of God that day, and said how shall the Ark of God come to me? Fear is good if of God to check our wrong and restrain us from the evil. But when we sin and judgment breaks out guilty fear bars us from sweet approach to the mercy-seat, and chills blessed fellowship with God.

The Ark is turned aside into the house of Obed-edom, and the Lord blesses this man. Soon deliverance comes to David and his men for they long for the Ark of God to come to the city of David. The true principle of worship of God will show itself in his people, for the anger of God will pass away and his mercy prevail.

David with truer mind under chastening perceives that they had not sought the worship of God in the true order; and now he is desirous to serve and worship God in the true order. He perceives that it was wrong to haul the Ark on a cart drawn by oxen: and that the priests should bear it on their shoulders. When he attempted to draw it by oxen on a cart was he imitating the manner of the Philistines who sent up on a cart from their country or was he endeavoring to relieve the Levites of the burden of bearing it on their shoulders.

When people attempt to write up sermons after the manner of men, or go to worldly schools of men to learn how to preach in an easier or more elegant way than the one of going out by faith, and bearing the burden according to the type is that seeking God after the due order? When men receive salaries or sums of money as a reward for preaching is that seeking God after the due order.

When the oxen stumbled Uzzah put forth his hand to steady the Ark and God smote him that he died. Can human hands steady the strength of Israel? Can man put forth his hand and strengthen the Lord God?

It looks to nature like it would be safer and easier to carry the Ark on a cart drawn by oxen than for men to bear it on their shoulders. But we must bear or carry the cross ourselves. It cannot be pulled by another. The man must himself repent, must himself have faith, must himself feel and bear in his own body the marks of the Lord Jesus. Personally and individually each one must in himself have the witness of truth.

Then we do not steady the Ark but it keeps us. As we die we live: as we suffer we reign: as we sink down we rise up. When we are weak we are strong: when we are poor we are rich; when we have nothing we possess all things.

We cannot reach out to strengthen the Ark. But when we bear about in us the marks of the Lord Jesus then we do not stumble. When we abide in Jesus we are strong and stumble not when he is in us. In the due order of worshipping God we stumble not.

Jesus him elf bare our sins in his own body on the tree. There was not another to help him, nor any to pity. His own arm brought salvation, and his fury upheld him. In the type the priests must themselves bear the Ark with all its furniture; so Jesus must bear up all the pillars and all the burden of the house or tabernacle of God, nor was there any to help him. All the vessels of the sanctuary from the least to the greatest was hung on this nail. Here is the Ark of his strength, and here is the salvation of Israel. As all the types must be observed faithfully to set forth Jesus, so in all our worship it must be after the due order or we do not honor God. When we dishonor him there is a breach made on us and death ensues.

God is a Spirit and must be worshipped in spirit and truth, for he seeketh such to worship him as do worship in spirit and truth.

P. D. G.

NOTICE.

DEAR BROTHER:—I wish you to say to our dear brethren, that on the very day which I should have started from my cottage in order to meet my list of appointments in the up-country region I received a hasty telegram from my brother-in-law, Mr. E. J. Hinson, of S. C., to come at once to my only surviving sister. I could not see the way to refuse, so I left for Scranton S. C., on the evening train South-bound, preceding the morning train North-bound on which I contemplated my trip among the churches. God sees clearly, "We see through a glass darkly, or dimly," and I often fear that I don't see at all, but simply think I see when I am only grasping at the shadow. Please pray for me and mine. My dear sister is now at my humble home, and is on the recovery as we hope. God be praised for his mercy. Yours in hope, D. N. GORE.

Elder S. H. Brady will, if the Lord will, preach the funeral of Mr. Charles C. Massey, at his residence, in Johnson Co., N. C., on the 3d Sunday in October.

Obituary.

ELEANOR EVERETT.

Please publish in the LANDMARK the death of my dear little babe, Eleanor, infant daughter of Lewis E. Everett, and Emily his wife, born the 30th of May, and died the 17th of July 1889, age 1 month and 16 days. Her stay on earth was short like the bloom of spring, flowers that soon fade, and fall, but the sufferings are untold by human tongue. I feel thankful to the Lord who saw fit to take her, though it was a heavy stroke, one I thought I could not bear, but the promises of the Lord are sweet in the hour of need; for He says he will not put more on us than we are able to bear, and will make way for us to escape, and I feel that the way has been made clear for me a great many times, but soon all is dark again and my troubles as heavy as ever, but the will of the Lord must be done, in this and all things. We have four dear little ones left to brighten our household, so will strive by the help of the Lord to bear our loss as best we can, believing our loss is her eternal gain, for the Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away, and blessed be the name of the Lord.

MOTHER.

Washington N. C.

SARAH E. MAGEE.

It has been sometime since the death of my dear sister Sarah E. Magee, and I feel it a duty of mine to say something in regard to her well spent life, and I trust to God to guide me that I may be able to tell as near as I can the truth of her life. The most of her life was spent in trying to make others comfortable. From a child she seemed to take a pride in waiting on the sick and the afflicted, though from a child always in very delicate health, she could not bear to see even a dumb beast suffer if she could help him in any way: her hand seemed always ready to stay the suffering of any creature on earth, even if she knew it was one of her bitterest enemies. She possessed an almost ungovernable temper when thought to be treated wrong, but quick to forgive and do you a kindness in five minutes. Here for several years past in her most feeble days she had more to contend with than the most robust man would like to have, caused by the providence of our al-wise God taking our dear sister in the flesh, and I hope a sister in Christ. She left a husband, an invalid, and three little children, all to the care of Sarah E. Magee, and nothing to subsist on, and nothing to look to but an al-wise God for protection, and she looked to him daily, and bravely and cheerfully, and by the help of God kept the wolf away from the door, and gave them all three a limited education.

Sarah E. Magee was born November 20th 1830, in Southampton County, Virginia, near the Black Water River, three miles south of Franklin, Va., and died September 26th, 1888, making her stay on earth a little less than 58 years. She expressed a hope in Christ quite young, and joined the church at Old South Quay called by some of the Freewills the Hard Shell Baptist Church, and was baptized A. D. 1853 by Elder Cooper, and remained a constant member there up to her death. She was married Dec. the 18th 1857 to, William T. Magee, and had three children two of them dying quite young. She has now one living, Emily M. Magee, two Brothers K. R. and G. A. Johnson, and a large concourse of relatives and friends to mourn her loss. Her last words to me, K. R. Johnson, were that she felt that she would not be with us long, but felt comfortable and satisfied with the faith she had long contended for, and seemed to be perfectly resigned to go, and turned her face from me, and never, uttered another word, and seemed to fall asleep. By her brother,

K. R. JOHNSON.

The Purpose of Zion's Landmark.

"Ask for the old paths where is the good way."

By the help of the Lord this paper will contend for the ancient Landmark, guided by its stakes of Truth, and strengthened by its chords of Love.

It hopes to reject all traditions and institutions of men, and regard only the Bible as the standard of truth.

It urges the people to search the Scriptures, and obey Jesus the king in the holy hill of Zion, keeping themselves unspotted from the world.

It aims to contend for the mystery of the faith in God and the Father, Jesus the Mediator, and the Holy Spirit the blessed Comforter.

All lovers of Gospel truth are invited to write for it—if so impressed.

May grace, mercy, and peace be multiplied to all lovers of truth.

DEVOTED TO THE CAUSE OF JESUS.

Poetry.

THE CONTRAST.

Arminians preach that Christ did die,
To save all those that just would try,
The Primitive cannot with them agree,
He died to save just such as we.
They say he gave to all a chance,
That would do good and never dance.
We say salvation does not depend,
Upon good works of sinful men.
Sometimes they preach both night and day,
And call on all to try to pray.
We say that Christ will find you out,
Whether in church or walking about.
They say if you wait for such salvation,
You'll find at last just damnation.
We say that God gave his Son,
To save his children, every one.
They say he died for every one,
If we will do as they have done.
We say Christ will save his heart's delight,
For they do wrong and they do right.
This they surely do deny,
And say Christ will save us if we try.
We say 'tis all free grace,
Without it none will see his face.
They say we have strayed from the rule,
Because we oppose the Sunday School.
We say the rule that God did give,
For parents to teach them how to live.
They say no one can explain salvation,
Without they have a good education.
We say the servants of Christ can preach,
Without the aid of human to teach.
They say their banner is now unfurled,
Give them money they'll convert the world.
We say without money and without price,
All our hope is centered in Christ.
They say we all should be ashamed,
For such a doctrine to proclaim.
We say we are not ashamed of Christ,
We will proclaim him during life.
They say they send the gospel to heathen land,
That they may save poor fallen man.
We say the gospel is the power of God,
And will save poor sinners wherever they trod.
They say we are hard-hearted and have no compassion,
And our religion is old and all out of fashion,
They said the same about Jesus Christ,
And we want to bear it like him so nice.
They do not believe in predestination,

Because it does not embrace all creation.
This knowledge to them we cannot impart,
Until God changes their sinful hearts.
Many are going to be deceived,
It's not what we do but what we believe.
They have fine churches and organs to ring,
That only a few are allowed to sing.
They have parties to draw in the money,
And many other things that looks very funny.
We know the above to be the truth,
We have seen it and heard it from our youth.
So live or die survive or perish,
Christ is the Christian's hope to cherish.
So now I lay my pen to rest,
But not my heart within my breast.
And shall I ever see the time,
When I am Christ's and Christ is mine.

ON SELF-MADE MINISTERS.

This then I shall also take as granted, for it need not be denied by friends nor foes, nor by the Roman Catholics themselves; for history, facts and scripture, make it as plain as the sun at noon-day.
So then Protestant churches in making preachers and sending missionaries, are patterning after anti-Christ, after the beast, after a whore, after a common strumpet who has committed fornication with many kings, the king of Spain, France, England, Portugal, the Netherlands, &c.,—after a bloody, drunken, seducing Jezebel; after her they continue to follow, to drink out of her golden cup of the wine of her fornication, in this particular of making preachers and sending missionaries; astonishing to me above measure. I can only account for it this one way, and that is, the day of her widowhood and sorrow, death and burning, is at hand; for strong is the Lord God who judgeth her, and he is thus permitting her to rally all nations and all sects in her forces against Christ on the white horse, and his army appears and is prepared for battle. Then the angel that stands in the sun shall call all the fowls of the air to come to the supper of the great God, and eat flesh of captains and kings and the mighty men of earth. Yea, I think there will be an universal conflict of nations and sects, and in this mighty conflict God will give this church blood to drink to the full; for he shall put into the hearts of his servants so to do, whether they be kings, generals, captains, or ministers of the gospel. And in this conflict of the church and states, the beast and the false prophet shall be taken, all the vestiges of anti-Christ, in whatever sect it may be, shall be swept from the face of the earth as with the besom of destruction. And after this great and mighty battle, satan shall be bound a thousand years and the gospel church appear in her virgin beauty, and the Jews to their long forsaken home. You read the Revelation and see if what I say is not there marked out.

Thus you have got a whore and men-made preachers for your pattern and example, and not Christ, nor his apostles, nor gospel church; although modern missionaries want to claim kin with Christ, and his apostles, by saying Christ was a missionary and so they say were his apostles. We are not for names in this momentous affair, but for principles and practices. Can you dare say they were men-made preachers? Can you dare say they were hired to go on missionary tours? Can you dare say they hired themselves out to beg for money to form moneyed societies to sell memberships? Can you dare say they traded titles, memberships, subscriptions, &c.? Can you dare say they scoured the countries to get money to send priest after priest to beg, and teach school theology? Can you dare say they made a trade and speculation of the gospel? Can you dare say they traded in old knives, handkerchiefs, bracelets, coffee without sugar, and old rags; and all this devilish, men-made, speculating trumpery in the church, to get money for themselves and send missionaries to beg for more? Say so and the New Testament provcs you a liar, if you are a wolf in sheep's clothing, or wear a gown in holy orders. And thus you are no more a kin or alike Christ and his apostles, than wolves and sheep; you have one maker and that is about the amount. Remember the text—from such turn away.

Now you know that the Waldenses never began to separate or turn away from the Romish church until she became corrupt, wealthy, proud and popular; then she could not endure sound doctrine, then for heaping up teachers, then for pompous forms of godliness, then denying the power, then turning the truth into fables, then for unmeaning ceremonies and grand show and parade in religion, then to officers and titles in the church, then for religious traffic in the church to make money for the priests, &c. These things caused the Waldenses to turn away from that church, and to keep away forever from her communion; nor was it death or banishment that could make them return to this whore bosom. So, equally so, when we review the Baptist church of the present age, there is now a great turning away from her; she has first turned away from apostolic order, she has turned away from the foundation on which she was first founded, like the Romish church did, from the foundation of doctrine and practice on which the apostles set her, and when she had so turned, then those men that founded the Waldensian sect turned from her. So now when the Baptist church in the United States has turned from the doctrine and practice on which she was set by the Philadelphia, Charleston and Kehukee Associations, for these are the three oldest Baptist Associations in the United States, there is found a people of God in the Baptist churches that will not follow the Baptist church in her departure from God and his word, no more than would the Waldenses the Romish church, nor join in with the Baptist church in turning truth into fables, leading captive silly women to make money, in having a form of godliness but denying the power, in being wealthy, proud and popular through begging and other men's labors; and changing creeds, and making school preachers or heaping teachers of pomp and show, having itching ears; in turning their ears from the truth, not enduring sound doctrine; and all the moneyed schemes of the day. These people like the Waldenses, at turning away from the Baptist church by thousands; or like the Waldenses, are for abiding by the apostolic doctrine and practice, or like them abiding by the foundation on which the apostles had first set the church, before innovations were made. So this people of God are for abiding by their old creed, old practice of doctrine, ordinance, and discipline, before these creepers into houses had made their innovations into the Baptist church. Then the turning away was first by the Romish church, and then the others turned away from her; so in this case the Baptist church has turned after the moneyed schemes of the day, and then these have, as the apostle advised, turned from her.

Now you know while the Romish church was under persecution, she neither made preachers nor turned truth into fables; but could endure sound doctrine. So with the Baptist church in the United States, while she was under persecution she made no men-made teachers, she could endure sound doctrine; and in her creed of truth was her consolation in those days that tried men's souls. But like the Romish church, since she became wealthy, proud and popular, of course the same effect; hence the Baptist church has become lustful, and many thousands of them can't endure sound doctrine, not even their own creed, even the creed of the Philadelphia Association, which the Old Baptist fought, bled and suffered for to maintain and enjoy. Then this shows us, that there is a departure from the faith as the apostle said, and that perilous times should come. It proves that as when the Romish church could not endure sound doctrine, that then and for this cause she would heap to herself teachers having itching ears, having a form of godliness, and make creepers into houses. So also since the Baptist church has become proud and wealthy, and can't endure sound doctrine this has put her upon the same expedient, to erect schools to heap to herself the same kind of teachers also like herself, that can't endure sound doctrine. Again, it proves that the Baptist church and these men-made teachers will turn the Baptist truth, creed, practice and discipline in process of time into fable; and that the Baptist church will turn her ears from the truth, and all vital religion into a form of godliness, show, pomp and parade, as did the Romish church. Again it proves that the Baptist church in this state of things will be a priest money-making church, as was the church of Rome. Again, it proves that these men-made priests and this moneyed proud church will persecute the Baptists that have turned away from her, as did the Romish church, the Waldenses. Again, it proves that part of the Baptist church that cleaves to missions and unsound doctrine, and the moneyed fables of the day, is but the counterpart of the church of anti-Christ. Again, it proves that as the turning away of the Waldenses, and their protest against the evil deeds of the Romish church did not stop that church in her course of evil, so will not the turning away of the present Baptist churches from missionary Baptists, and their protest to the world of their evil deeds, stop the missionary Baptists in their evil course; but that they will go on and fall in the common ruin of anti-Christ. All then we have got to do is to, like the Waldenses, bear a faithful testimony against these creepers, and hear the voice from heaven—Come out of her, my people; that you receive not of her plagues. It proves again, that the missionary Baptists will become worse and worse, as did the church of Rome. It proves again, that a union will never again take place in the Baptist church; but the breach will be made wider and wider, as was the case between the Roman and Waldensian churches. It proves again, that one church lives and flourishes by the grace of God, and the other by money. It proves again, that one church is a den for wolves and a lodging for spiritual dogs and the other shepherds and their flocks. If you ask for my proofs of these things, they are at hand; at least, the most of them prove themselves from the prophecy in the text quoted. First as to the Baptist church not enduring sound doctrine, it has been asserted by a celebrated Baptist preacher in North Carolina, and that in the face of an Association, that he believed there never were more Arminians in the Baptist churches since the establishment of that church in the United States. Since then that Association has altered her creed—the Neuse Baptist Association has altered her creed. It is a thing so notorious among us that I need no proof, that the missionary Baptists are pretty generally Arminians, that no question is made of the matter. And so far as my own personal knowledge goes I can say that I think it is not more than one half, or at least one third of the Baptists that can endure sound doctrine, or bear to hear it preached. As to pride, pomp, and show of wealth in the church, that is written as with a sunbeam in the appearance of all the congregations I see everywhere. As for lust of pride, and money, and popularity in the church, this is too obvious even to sinners who make their remarks on professors, and preachers for those things to need proof. These are the base roots I have told you and showed you that produce corruption in the church. This puts the church on heaping teachers, and all other black deeds of money traffic in the church.

You recollect for what I set out to prove and that was, that I believed those creepers into houses, or mis-ionaries, were foreseen by Paul and pointed at by him in the prophecy. Are you satisfied that they are? If not, we will go further yet. You recollect when the thing was to take pace, in the last days; and this the last day but one. Perilous times shall come. Has not the last 20 years been a perilous time to the Baptist church; in division, strife, discord, reproach, whispering, disunion, tumult, and evil speaking one of another, both preachers and members; rending of churches. opposing Associations, dissensions and colness here and there; one for missions another against? Such a perilous time as this I say the Baptist church in this country has never seen before; and who is the cause? The missionary Baptist is the cause. And don't say they are not, for if you do you lie, as sure as there is a God. They made innovations in the Baptist church, with all their moneyed begging schemes and missionary speculation on anti-Christian lumber; and this is the cause of these perilous times in the Baptist church in the last days. Remove these and union will take place and not without.

EXPERIENCE.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—

It has been on my mind for sometime to tell you a dream that I had before I was baptized. It is as plain to me as it was when I first dreamed it. I tho't in my sleep that there was a black smutty man in the room after me because I had done bad. I heard a crackling noise and thought that the house was on fire. I put my hand on the house to see if it was, and found that it was not so I went to sleep again, and there came a pretty little white man in the room and took me up in his arms as if I were a baby and said, you are one of mine. I shall let you live a little longer and laid me down. I awoke and could not move. I saw him and the room was light as day, and he was the light of the room, when he went out the room was dark. I lay there dozing and said to myself, I don't want to stay any longer. I thought I got up and started to traveling and got lost. I was trying to find a little path to follow that little man. I thought this little man was Christ, and thought he did not look like a man that lived in this world. While I was lost I felt that I did not know what to do. I met a black, smutty man with a torch of light in his hand composed of fat splinters, he kept before me and every time I would turn he would head me off, he wanted me to go with him to his nasty, smutty place. I did not want to go, for I felt like I had done bad and was afraid of him. I thought he said I had not done bad, what I thought was wrong he said was right. I felt the fire in my face and thought I should be burnt up. I said, mercy what shall I do; then the same little man came to me and took me by the hand and said, "you follow me and you will be happy." He carried me to a pretty place and set me down and gave me a little song book and I said to him, I can't sing. He opened the book and told me to sing after him. I thought we sang "Amazing grace," and several other songs. There was a crowd of little people and all had their little books. It was said to me, "Go to hear Mr. Gold preach and you will like it." It seemed that I loved you and all the rest. I want you to pray for me. If you think this is worthy of a place in your paper you can have it put in, if not all will be well with me. Your sister I hope,

EXPERIENCE.

ELDER D. N. GORE, DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—After much delay I take my pen this morning according to promise to write you a few lines in my poor way to let you hear of some of the blessed dealings of the Lord with me. I was born December 1862, and was raised by Primitive Baptist parents who were kind and devoted to their children, and endeavored to the best of their ability to bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.

Oh, what a pleasant thought it is to have such parents who still live to aid me by their advice and instruction, but sad thought that after all these blessings I should have been such an undutiful son. When I was quite a child, in fact from my earliest recollections, I loved the Primitive Baptists more than any other set of people I knew of, and always believed the doctrine they preached to be the truth, I suppose because father and mother believed it. I always loved and revered as fathers the dear old soldiers of the cross, Thomas Godwin, A. Jones, and J. S. Brinson who used to go to father's very often, but who have since passed from this world of sin and gone home, as I feel assured, to hear the welcome news, well done thou good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joys of thy Lord. Later on, but yet while a mere boy, I trust I was made to feel the exceeding sinfulness of sin which made me cry to the Lord for mercy who I trust heard my cry and delivered me out of my distress. I was borne down with a sense of my unworthiness, felt to be condemned in the sight of God, and justly so, felt to be without hope and without God in the world; an alien from the commonwealth of Israel, and a stranger to the covenant of promise. I never believed that I could be justified by the deeds of the law even if I could have performed them, so I was destitute of even that much hope. I believed from the first that if I was saved at all it would be by the grace and mercy of an all-wise God, extended to me a poor lost and ruined sinner. Dear brother Gore, you know the feelings of a poor sinner in that condition. I was blessed with food and raiment, kind friends and relatives, yet I was miserable and knew not what to do. My brothers, John R. and Joshua T. Rowe had both joined the church and commenced preaching the gospel as I believed then, as much as I do now, and oh, how I longed to be with them and the rest of the brethren. After awhile I was made to feel that God, for Christ's sake had pardoned my sins, and then my desire was to join the church and be baptized, and I thought I should see no more trouble; but alas, how much I was mistaken. I joined the church on Saturday before the first Sunday in June 1878, and was baptised the next day by brother John R. Rowe, and oh, how I enjoyed myself for a while, but soon troubles came again. I was afraid I had deceived the church, and lived on thro' many doubts and fears, feeling to say with the poet, "Mixtures of joy and sorrow I daily do pass through; And if few minutes of praise I employ they are succeeded by pain." I was married December the first 1884, and my wife was a member of the church at the time, and so were her parents. I felt that I had a companion indeed, and she has proven to be a loving companion both naturally and spiritually, and I feel that I am greatly blessed in that. Our first child was born in October 1885. It was a girl, a very bright and loving little child. It seemed that everything went well with me then and that I could say with David, "Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life and I shall dwell in the house of the Lord forever;" but how vain is the hope of poor fallen man. In July 1887, my baby died, and we were left alone, and again I could feel like David when he said, "Surely the Lord hath forgotten to be gracious." Our second child, also a girl was born September 1887, and died June 1889. God who works all things after the counsel of his will permitted her to stay with me just one day longer than the first one, and again we were left alone. Dear brother Gore, it was a sore trial to me to twice witness the suffering death and burial of the only child I had. I could say with the poet,

"While sorrows encompass me round,
And endless distresses I see,
Astounded I cry can a mortal be found,
Surrounded with trouble like me."

I want to kiss the rod that smites me, and bow in humble submission to the will of God who is too wise to be mistaken, and too good to be unkind, and feel that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose. Oh, the depth of riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God, how unsearchable are his judgments and his ways past finding out. Dear brother Gore, pray for me that I may be able to say with Job, "The Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away, blessed be the name of the Lord." I fear I have long since worried your patience, so I had better close. Your brother in hope of eternal life,

BENJ. D. ROWE

TYPICAL.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—I have had some pleasant thoughts of late about Moses and the land of Canaan which I wish to give you if enabled to do so.

The leading of the children of Israel out of Egypt by Moses abounds in types and shadows. You know to make a shadow there must be a substance; and a light shining on one side of that substance produces a shadow on the other side. Now if equal light shines all round an object it will not produce a shadow. A shadow is not the object either, but is a fair picture of the object; and by tracing the shadow you will reach the substance.

The children of Israel under the law are a shadow of something. I believe Paul said, The law contained a shadow of the good things to come, and the children of Israel are a type of the church. Now let us see what the church is. I have heard the house of worship called a church. So are all bodies of professors of religion called churches. But I shall not look for a plurality of substances to produce a single shadow. Christ on a certain occasion asked his disciples who he was, and when Peter had told him that he was the Christ, the Son of God, he pronounced him blest, because it was not flesh and blood that had revealed this to Peter, but the Father in heaven. He then said, "Thou art Peter (nothing but a man) and upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." What rock is the church built on? It cannot be Peter, for a rock; is something solid and unchangeable. Peter was not so when he denied Christ, after just telling him, "if all others forsake thee I will not,"

"Flesh and blood hath not revealed this unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven," is certainly a rock as firm and unchangeable as God himself: and this to my mind is the one on which the church is built. Then those to whom Christ has been revealed by the Spirit are the church. Christ often speaks of the church as the kingdom of heaven; and he says it comes not with observation, but is within us; and "except a man be born of God he cannot see the kingdom of God." So I hope you understand that I view the church as a body of believers in Jesus who have not learned him by searching and praying; but to whom God has been pleased to reveal himself.

The sinner lulled to rest with carnal security is under bondage to satan, and until he is arrested by the Spirit of God he does not know what a sinner he is. Then he feels his misery and his bonds. He feels his utter inability to go out of this bondage without a spiritual leader, and as he knows of none to lead him he can only labor and toil under the burden of his sinful master; as he is yet a servant of sin the task grows heavier every day until the Spirit takes him and leads him out, shows him Jesus, a perfect righteousness as his own; then he is clothed with the garment of salvation. Why was it that we did not embrace Christ when we first saw our sinful condition? The cause is unbelief. Unbelief often hinders us from entering into rest. We think we ought to have done something or had more light, hence we fall in unbelief, and fail to enjoy the rest that remains to the people of God who are obedient, and always at the feet of Jesus.

Now I have drawn a brief picture of the christian and will see if we can find in the shadow any resemblance to the substance that produced it.

The children of Israel were in Egypt under bondage to Pharaoh, yet they knew no better than to serve and labor for him, until the Lord raised up Moses to lead them out, and delivered the law to them from Mount Sinai: we hear of them in the wilderness murmuring against their leader, and God sent fiery serpents to destroy them; and the Lord smote them in various ways until not one that was grown when they came out of Egypt was permitted to enter the land of promise save Caleb and Joshua. Why was it they did not go over and possess the land as soon as they left Mt. Sinai? It was because of error and unbelief, wherefore God swore in his wrath they should not enter into rest. They were under the law, hence, in order to enter into rest they must render perfect obedience to that law. This they did not do, and for this cause God smote them and left them in the wilderness forty years. Still he fed them with manna. There is no rest for the chosen people of God except in perfect obedience to the law of God, and these Israelites had already transgressed that law; and God swore they should not enter into rest. They must wander and fall in this wilderness of unbelief. Even Moses their leader was not permitted to enter because he disobeyed at the water of Meribah, but the law demands perfect obedience; for he that offends in one point is guilty of the whole. A Moses might see the land of promise, but he cannot enter it except through perfect obedience.

A sinner convicted of sin is a chosen vessel of God. He may see the church in its purity, and it is to him the loveliest place on earth. How they all seem to enjoy their liberty. He sees it as a land flowing with milk and honey. All the rich blessings of heaven are theirs. But alas, says he, I cannot enter. I have sinned and forfeited all right to this rest which the people of God enjoy. Here is a Moses on Mt. Pisgah. But when Christ is revealed by the Spirit to such an one we have an Israelite indeed in whom there is no guile. His sin and disobedience is so completely covered with Christ's righteousness that he forgets his misery and enters into perfect rest with all the people of God.

He not only sees the land, but enjoys the good of the land. The richness is his, and all he has to do is to possess it, fight Israel's battles and eat the fat of the land.

Now I have said that except perfect obedience is rendered to the law we cannot enjoy gospel rest; and if this obedience was left to us no flesh would be saved, for we all sin and come short of the glory of God: but Christ our advocate, our head, has kept the law for us, rendering perfect obedience to God, then died for us, paying our debt to the law and then set us free. This perfect light did not shine to national Israel, hence they could not fully enter into rest. What a blessing is ours though we do not always enjoy perfect rest here, and it is because of disobedience and unbelief. May we ever be at the feet of Jesus who has given us so much.

I have very briefly noticed this subject, but I hope you may see and drink some of the sweetness which has been so refreshing to me. Your sister in Christ,

S. E. BROYLES.

ELDER P. D. GOLD, DEAR BROTHER:—Day before yesterday I received your "Treatise on the Book of Joshua," and read it more than half through that night: so much, very much interested did I become; had company all day yesterday, so finished it last night. I am more than delighted with it, I certainly think it will be a blessing to God's children.

One great beauty in it to me is that you presented, honored, and glorified only Jesus in it. It does my very heart good and soul good to hear Jesus honored and glorified. I do not and cannot, it seems, honor him myself. And how dear to my heart becomes the one who does do this.

But I started out to thank you for that little book. I do thank you from and with my whole heart I think. I said it was the best thing I ever read save the Bible. I believe it is so. It was a great comfort and strengthening to me, and was suggestive of many glorious truths and principles you did not express. It led me into more than one new and goodly field of gospel truth. Your explanation of the "City of Refuge" was new and wonderful to me, and "Joseph's Bones." As ever,

EXHORTATION.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—I write a few lines for your disposal, not feeling worthy to communicate to the precious brethren that I hope I esteem so highly in love, notwithstanding oftentimes I most assuredly feel that I am not worthy to be among the people of God. But to whom shall I go? Thou hast the word of eternal life, and we believe thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God. Sometimes I hope I have been made to know the truth as it is in Jesus: blessed truth, and when I am permitted to visit my brethren at the Associations, hearing his servants proclaiming so wonderfully the way of life and salvation, and the power of God giving him all the glory and honor and ascribing to him, how consoling it is to the weary, worn-down pilgrim sojourning here in this wilderness of sin, amidst persecutions, trials, tribulations by the way, (if a pilgrim at all though the least of all) but when the poor servant can describe my feelings so plain that this witness within then cries, most assuredly these men are the servants of God who are so wonderfully blest, empowered by his spirit to comfort the poor mourner, to feed the lambs of Jesus, and to confirm and establish the weak. My brethren I am carried back to former days, to our brethren past away, which preached the same Jesus the truth, the life and the way, when my name was received among the Baptists 42 years ago. From then until the present time I have desired to be among them, but whether or not I am a Baptist indeed, is the great trouble with me. I feel myself so far from living the life that I think a christian ought to lead. I should do unto all men as I would have them do unto me. Do I do that? Surely the answer is nay. Then look upon my brethren, seeing the grace of our God beaming in their faces, telling that they have been with Jesus. If I could live the life they do would I have so many doubts and fears while a sojourner here below in this world of sin, but I will say amidst all my doubts and fears, I do believe with all my heart the Primitive Baptist church is the true church, for no other foundation can any man lay than has already been laid, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone, in whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord. If we are of that building, which is our hope, for we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience wait for it, what a great thought? The Lord can make us willing in the day of his power. Wait on the Lord. He has said, Be ye followers of me. Come out from her my people, touch not, handle not the unclean thing, and I will be unto you a God, and ye shall be unto me a people. Abstain from the appearance of evil. So much as we see and feel the evil day approaching, what manner of persons ought we to be to live in love, and so far as we can to administer to each others necessities. If we see a poor brother or sister in need help them, more especially the poor laboring servants that labor in word and doctrine. I sometimes believe for the disobedience of God's people he has caused calamities to come, for he is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever and changes not: so in olden times calamities were sent for the disobedience of the people of God. My brethren, I cannot express myself, or my feelings as I would wish to do, for my imperfections are great, but my desire is to know the truth, Christ the life and the way. Now shall we follow another gospel which perverts the gospel of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ? When he has declared the end from the beginning. All power in heaven and on earth is in his hands. He needs no help for he has laid help upon one mighty to save them that come unto God by and through him. Now are we willing to follow the institutions of the day? If so are we not in disobedience to the heavenly calling? If we permit our children to follow after institutions of men do we not err knowing the truth. All the secret organizations of men profit nothing, cannot make one hair white or black. The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him, because secret things belong to God, and to whom he will he reveals them. We may try to tell of that love unspeakable and full of glory. But poor, finite mortals cannot tell as we hope we have felt it, therefore let us live in love one with another, bearing each others' burdens and so fulfilling the law of Christ. All the law is fulfilled in one word, "Love one another." So as much as he has loved us when dead in trespasses and sins, he has quickened us together with him, for by grace are ye saved, not of works, lest any man should boast.

Let us try to follow Jesus through evil as well as good report. "Offences must needs come, but woe unto him by whom they come." When Jesus comes will he find faith on the earth? If we are followers of the meek and lowly Lamb, not principalities, nor all the powers of men can separate us from the love of God as it is in Christ Jesus. If we are dead and our lives are hid with Christ in God, who is our life, when he comes we shall also appear with him in glory; so we hope to earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the saints. So we will have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them, for it really seems to me the worldly minded are in battle array against the little few who are earnestly contending for the truth, but remember he has overcome the world, also remember the little city with few therein, and the poor wise man who delivered that little city. We are but a few, a little band sure enough, but humbly hope there is a faithful few. We have not chosen him, but hope he has chosen us, not because we were the greatest of all, but because the smallest of all. So in conclusion I hope my brethren will not take any offence at what I have written, for the old woman, now in her 70th year, has no righteousness of her own, but hopes to be found at the great association with my brethren, clothed with the righteousness of the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Brother Gold, I want you to continue the LANDMARK for it is laden with gospel truth. I love to hear from the brethren and to read your editorials. It is next to my Bible, for it is consolation to me to read in lonely hours; how comforting to read when sunk down in doubts and fears to hear from the brethren telling me so much of my feelings, I think better than I can tell them myself. My mind will lead me to write these unworthy feelings.

When I was sitting at sister Lawrence's looking at the brethren that had met at the Association, my mind was, "Oh how pleasant it is for the brethren to dwell together in unity" of the Spirit. Well I felt I was the least in my Fathers' house. So if I never meet any more on earth with my brethren at an Association here, I hope we will meet where parting will be no more, and may the grace of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ ever keep us from the snares and pollutions of this sinful world, ever looking forward when faith will be turned into sight, and hope in to possession, and to Jesus who is the author and finisher of the christians' hope, both sure and steadfast, for He that hath begun a good work will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ. We need no life insurance of men, our lives I hope are already in Jesus the Lord. We need no revised Bible. Give us our old Bible. We need no lightning rods on our chimneys, nor our churches. We can sit upon the grass if required, and be fed with the crumbs that fall from the Master's table; for he is the bread that comes down from heaven, and if we eat thereof we shall never die. So in the stead of human efforts we need more and more of the grace of God to sustain us from the hands of wicked or perverse men. Brethren farewell. Pray for me and my children and Zion's deep decay. O that we may hear the voice of the turtle in our land once more.

EXPERIENCE.

ELDER P. D. GOLD, DEAR BROTHER:—I feel this evening that I must comply with my promise, though it is in much weakness I make the attempt. I have often gained comfort by reading the experiences of distant brethren and sisters in your valuable paper. God being my strength I will try to tell you what I hope the Lord has done for my soul. When I was but a small school-girl I determined at one time that I would make myself a christian which I fully believed I could do, not for the beauty I saw in holiness, neither for the love I had for God and his people, but for no other purpose than to shun the awful hell, which I do not now believe ever led to true repentance. So I went to work in the best manner I could, thinking if I would pray every day and leave off my sinful practices it would induce God to love me and pardon my sins, and not feeling myself to be very wicked it would be a small matter to make myself a christian. I lived in this pharisaical manner sometime, but found it harder to make myself a christian than I at first supposed, and got tired, threw it by, thinking I was very young and that there was time enough for me to do better when I got older. So I went on in my old path of sin again. But my mind would often wander back upon my little pious road, yet I still loved gay and wicked companions better than I did christians and would still think as little about my future destiny as I could. I spent some few years longer in sin. Sometimes I would resolve to quit sinning and live a more righteous life. When I would do anything that was wrong and my conscience would tell me better, I would promise myself that I would do so no more; but again and again I would make this same promise and again and again wo'd break it. A few nights before I was to be married my father called his little family together and proceeded to family worship, which he did not practice doing. Sometimes I hope it was God that called his mind to do so on account of his poor wicked daughter who was going to leave him in her sins. Prayer being over I arose and left the room feeling lost, ruined and condemned. I lay down on the bed but could not refrain from weeping. When mother came in and said, "Ah child, too late to cry now." I thought, yes mother, eternally too late, but if you knew what I was weeping for you would weep for me. After this when I would try to pray my prayers would fall to the ground unnoticed. Then I began to think I had committed an unpardonable sin, that the time had been when I might have done better, but alas, it was gone, too late for me now. When one night I lay down desiring the mercy of God, and my feelings were aroused by a sad and awful dream about my old father who I saw rise from the earth as white as snow, when I exclaimed I want to go with him. No, I was a sinner and I sank down in the flames of fire. Then I thought if God would spare my life, that I would spend the remainder of my life pleading for mercy, though I could not see how God could remain just and save such a sinner as I viewed myself to be. Although I had never danced, neither been very rude; but what sin I had committed had been against a better judgment, which made me think I was the greatest sinner on earth.

When I would go to church I thought everybody knew how I felt, though tried hard to keep them from thinking I was trying to do better. I did not want the best friend I had on earth to know it, until one night a very much loved preacher asked me if I had a hope. I told him I did not. He then asked me to tell him how I felt. When I told him that I feared I was forever lost, that my day of grace was passed, though I desired an interest in his prayers. Then I began to think there was a people that christians should not pray for and I greatly feared that I was one, and I can never tell how much trouble I saw for talking to him and asking an interest in his prayers. Mercy was all I could ask for, for I had got so I felt like it was a sin for me to take the name of the Lord in my sinful lips. Though I felt it would be just for God to cast me into hell. I could not, nor did not desire to change his will, for I felt my condemnation just and right. It seemed to me that my heart was as hard as stone. I felt if I was to see the best friend I had on earth dead that I could not weep. All hope of ever being forgiven was gone. A poor, lost, ruined sinner could not pray, could not weep, nor do one good deed. I laid down on my bed too wicked to ask God for mercy. I only said Lord I am so mean. Very soon I dropped to sleep and had a very sweet dream which seemed to soften my hard heart. I was with a lovely congregation where they were singing and preaching, and myself, mother and sister and a small girl left and went into a secret chamber of the house to try to pray. We knelt by a bench when I heard a voice say, arise, your sins are forgiven: when I exclaimed Lord I am afraid it is all a dream, when the same voice replied, "Your sins are forgiven, they are nothing more than ashes and will never rise in judgment to condemn you." But when I awoke I did not feel happy as others do, and this makes me doubt my case so much. I thought I would tell my husband what I had dreamed, and how I felt, but I could not get up a resolution to do so. This was on Thursday and Saturday was our church meeting. I decided to say nothing about it; if my sins had been pardoned some good preacher would tell his feelings and that would confirm my hope. Saturday morning came and I went to church with a heavy heart. But it seemed that my prayer had changed. The very breath I drew was Lord, if deceived, undeceive me. Two much beloved preachers came with us home. I shunned their company all I could. Night came on, and thinking I was acting imprudently I went to the room door and sat down. It seemed to me that my breast would kill me. I had not been there long when one of the preachers came to the door and asked me if I did not have a hope. I told him no sir. He then asked me if I could not talk, when I answered him that my breast hurt too bad for me to talk. But he insisted that I should talk a little. I began to tell him how I felt, and in a moment of time my breast was as easy as it ever was in my life; and I viewed the prettiest river of water with white gravel bottom my eyes ever saw. I felt at that moment that I was well in both soul and body, but was soon drowned in trouble again. One of the preachers went about family worship and prayed for me, as though I was a christian, when it flashed over me, perhaps you are deceived and have deceived those other good men. Prayer was over and I arose, left the house, knelt down and prayed the best I could. I thought if I could see pa and tell him about my condition that he could tell them I was not a christian, and they would believe him and not be deceived in me. I decided that when I got back to the house I would open the hymn book and the first hymn I opened to would settle my case, either saved or lost, and the first thing which met my eye was, "Where is the blessedness I knew when first I saw the Lord?" I laid the book aside and felt that if I had ten thousand souls I would be willing to risk them all in the hands of the Lord. My burden of sin and condemnation was gone and I could not get it back, for I think I tried as hard as anybody ever did. This was my trouble and is to this day. I felt that I could never rest out of the church for I had promised the Lord that if he would give me but one crumb that I would not live out of my duty. I loved his people so much that I wanted to live with them while on earth and in heaven. Baptism was my study day and night; but I was so afraid I would deceive the church, and I did not want to deceive them. But the thought of never being baptised I could not bear. When I went to the table I could not eat. My husband told me if I did not get better he would get me some medicine from the Doctor, which he did. It did me no good, and told him if I could be baptised my breast would get better. I felt that I must go which I did on the 20th of July 1872, and was received and baptised the day following by my precious old father, Elder S. J.

Lackey, who is now sleeping in the arms of dear Jesus, where none ever wake to weep. Brother Gold, I have not written this for publication, but to ease my mind, as I felt condemned for not talking with you at our Association: not that I am ashamed of it, but perhaps it may take the space of something that would be more interesting to the child of God. Pray for me that my last days may be my best days. Your little sister, if one at all,

DRUSILLA F. LEAKE.

Remarks.

Sister Leake is the daughter of dear brother S. J. Lackey that so many people remember in that mountain section of Va., and N. C., During their troubles a few years ago he removed and went to Colorado where he died. Now these Associations are all in peace. I too have felt while in trouble like moving away. But we cannot thus get away from trouble. The best way is to stand still and see the salvation of God. Abide where we are called and we shall stand in our lot at the end of the days.

Sister Leake's experience is good enough for me, and I feel good enough for the readers of the LANDMARK.

EXPERIENCE.

MR. P. D. GOLD:—From time to time I have had impressions to write to you what I hope the Lord through his tender mercy has done for my soul, but I fear it may only be the prompting of a carnal mind, and not of the Lord, therefore it is with fear and trembling that I make the attempt. I do not write because I have something good to write, or that I feel will be any comfort to you, or any of the family of God, neither because I am good, but because I feel myself to be a vile sinner, and to know if any one has ever had such feelings as I have. I was born in sin, in the year 1852 and as soon as I could practice any thing I began to practice sin: yes without the knowledge that the wages of sin is death, or that there is a God that could not look upon sin with the least degree of allowance: although my parents were strict as to my moral conduct, while in their presence also in their absence, but nevertheless I would in their absence do things they forbid that I should do, and in their presence my mind was yet at work in the practice of sin.

I continued to roll sin under my tongue as a sweet morsel until I was about 16 or 17 years of age I hope the Lord saw fit to arrest me in my wild career, and to show me I was a sinner, and that He being a just and holy God could not admit such a vile sinner as I was in his peaceful presence, and that sooner or later I must die. This however did not seem to have much bearing upon my mind, as these feelings were of short duration. Thus I continued for sometime, not knowing what was the matter with me. At last one day I was struck with such a weight of sin and condemnation that I dropt at my place and tried to pray to the Lord for mercy, but to pray I could not, such was the weight of my condemnation, and too, seeing that He was an holy being. I continued this way for sometime, at times feeling my condemnation, at others not fearing anything, but on the return of my burden it would bring about a solemn thought of death and judgment; so I thought there was something that I must do to make amends before God for my past conduct. I went to work to try to satisfy the law that I had transgressed. For a while I thought I made good progress. My work consisted of working myself in the favor of God, and the examination of those who professed to be christians. In the first I could not see that I made any blunders, but good progress. In the second I became to be an expert, for I thought I could tell when I saw a man whether he was christian or not. I would watch his walk and conversation, and I could see many things to conyince me that many were not christians. I became so smart that if any of them sat, spoke or hollowed in a careless manner I was ready to criticize them, and say they were not christians. Thus I continued until I as I thought had reached perfection, and felt sure of heaven; but while in this state of perfection my religion of works was blown as chaff in the wind from me, and I was left hopeless and in despair. My burden returned with double force and I was made to see that it was not by works that I might reach heaven and immortal glory. Now I saw that I could do nothing, for I was of the earth earthy, a sinner in the full sense of the word, and if not saved by the blood of Jesus I was lost, yes eternally. Now I began to look about as I had never done before, and to try to beg the Lord for mercy: for now it was mercy I wanted, and felt that I needed; but how different just a while ago, for then I wanted justice, that is I wanted to be justified by my works; but now like a beggar I begged the Lord for mercy. Have mercy Oh! Lord, or I die. I no longer wanted justice, for I saw that by justice I would be banished forever, but mercy. My examination of christians now ceased, and now my cry was, Oh! that I was as good as I saw they were. Their conduct did not concern me now, for I was made to look at my own corrupt and sinful nature. I remained in this condition for a long time, but all the time grew worse. My troubles grew from hills to mountains. During this period many things occurred that I can't express, so I will pass on, and try to tell something that left a deep impression upon my mind. First the scriptures were opened to me, and passages would come in my mind, and for a while my mind would run in them, and to hinder these thoughts was impossibility, for oft and again I would try to hinder them by trying to think on other subjects, or by whistling, or singing: but it did no good, for the passage remained on my mind with its connection for a while, and then I could again command my mind. In some of these courses of mind I was I hope taught the justice of God in saving sinners. While in this frame of mind one night I dreamed that I was walled in as it were with a high wall with no way to escape, as it was too high to climb, and contained no door or entrance, so I became alarmed at my situation, and tried to get out, but could not, for the more I tried the higher the wall rose, and in this I was taught two things. First that man was not saved by works, or by the law, but by grace. Second, that God was able to save and he alone must take us out of this state of sin and condemnation, and make us clean in the blood of the Lamb; also that he was a God of power, and man powerless. My troubles grew worse, as I have said from hills to mountains, or as near in this way as I can express it: for it seemed at first I did not see myself so great a sinner, but my sins would rise up before me, yes my great sins, and I was made to cry the more for mercy, Lord save, I perish. I was not as the world says, the more I prayed the better I got; but the more I prayed the worse I got, and I could only say Lord, have mercy on me, a poor sinner, for I felt without mercy I was eternally lost. My friends were no enjoyment to me: yea rather they seemed to be far from me or my enemies, and I too vile to be noticed by the Lord for He seemed to be far off. I continued in this way until I hope I was made to see the glory of God in the face of Jesus. My burden went off like my troubles came on, not as I have read or heard others tell, but the mountains were first removed, and then the hills. When my troubles began to depart I had another dream. I dreamed that I was in Smithfield church and Mr. Isaac Jones preached. After preaching I started out of the house and the members of the church together with Mr. Jones were left standing around the pulpit, and my brother said to me, that was the way to Jesus. At the same time pointing towards the group of members, and I turned and looked and they out-shined any people I ever saw. This was after my trouble had diminished some, and it left an impression on my mind, that to shine as they did was to be baptized as they had done, also that the Primitive Baptists were the church, and here sprang up a love for them that has not died away, but has grown stronger. My troubles died away as I have said, and doubtings and conflicts began to arise. Satan would tempt me and say, you are deceived, you are trusting in too much of an uncertainty, and Oh, I feel too poor and unworthy to have a name among them: but if there is any people I love it is the Primitive Baptists. Time rolled on and I, burdened with doubts and fears, saw one Sabbath eve what I shall never forget. I had started to preaching in the neighborhood, and had to pass Mr. Barden Brown's. As I neared his house I was thinking upon the subject of baptism, and he came to the gate, and out into the road, and if I ever saw the image of Jesus I saw it in this man, for he seemed to be clothed in a robe of white, and his face shined as though it was a star, and if there is a man I love it is this man. From time to time since then I have had impressions to be baptized, but Oh! when I think of it how little I feel to be among the people of God, and I also fear I am deceived, and if so will deceive the church, and thereby bring trouble and confusion in Zion.

The above is a part of what I hope the good Lord has done for my soul, but I fear it is so scattering it will not be understood. It may be of an earthly nature and not of the Spirit of the Lord, if so I wish it to be understood, for I do not wish to deceive any one: if of the Spirit give God the glory, for if I am saved it is by grace, not by any thing that I have done.

J. R. BAILY.

Remarks.

Our friend Mr. Baily speaks as one taught of God. He himself must know that there has been a great change in him for good. What sign are you lacking in your experience? You have been taught the justice of God in condemning sinners, and yet the justice of God in saving sinners in Christ Jesus. You have been taught the lost estate of your nature, and that you are a vile sinner, and it is in Jesus that you are saved: you have been relieved of your burden, and seen the church in her beauty, and felt the love of the brethren, and you have been impressed to be baptized. What more do you want? Oh, but you say, "I am so vile." Ought you not to feel that way? That is true of you and me. Behold I am vile.

But you say "I am so weak." Should you not feel weak? Is not that a sign that you are humble and lowly?

But you say, "I am afraid I may be deceived." Who is it that tells you that you are deceived? Is it not satan, and is not he a liar? All God's people have this fear.

But you say, "I am afraid I may deceive the church, and I do not want to do that." All the people of God feel that way.

A few words of advice. Go home to your friends and tell them what great things the Lord hath done for you, and has had mercy on you. When you are baptized you will have the answer of a good conscience towards God. It is not a vain thing to serve God.

CORRECTION.

ELDER P. D. GOLD, DEAR BROTHER:—Will you please to give notice in the LANDMARK, that there were two mistakes made in printing the circular letter, in the Minutes of the Country Line Association. Or one mistake which occurs twice. First in line 18 and again in Line 30, it reads, thus and creatures. It should have been and preachers, and in line 30, it is creatures and friends, but should have been preachers and friends,

FEET-WASHING.

An Editor should allow a free interchange of views in the paper he is entrusted with. He should open its columns to fair and manly discussions that have for their object the setting forth of truth. Writers should use proper decorum and courtesy towards others differing with them, and not interrupt others, but allow them to present their views. But when a writer presents his views on one side of a question those that hold a different view are apt to censure the Editor for publishing such matter; so you readily see an Editor has a straight place to walk in.

Strange are some of the arguments used by brethren who do not wash feet literally.

1st. One argument is that Jesus did not mean what he said, or that when he said, "If I your Lord and Master wash your feet, ye ought also to wash one anothers' feet," he did not mean literal feet, or literal washing with water, but he meant something else. Is this a fair interpretation? Suppose we apply the same construction to the Lord's Supper. Would it not lead us to conclude that he does not mean that we should take literal bread and wine in that observance? Would not literal baptism be slaughtered and vanish away under that construction? This rule of interpretation has been so freely applied to the Scripture which says, They that preach the gospel should live of the of the gospel has no literal meaning whatever. But they seek a fulfillment of it in some mysterious way of living for the preacher that requires no help whatever of a literal sort, such as needing food and raiment. But while we are in this natural state we must have some things that are literal. Even those brethren that construe all gospel to be spiritual love to eat and drink and possess property. Happy is he that condemneth not himself in that which he alloweth to or in himself. Why do we have literal houses to worship in or eat literal food, or literally baptize with water, and when we come to consider feet-washing we explain that all away by saying that is spiritual? What is plainer than an example? Jesus says I have given you an example that ye should do as I have done unto you. Can you explain away an example? If Baptists would obey the truth, how much better it would be? Paul speaks to the Galatians as bewitched. "O foolish Galatians who hath bewitched you?" They were so bewitched that they did not obey the truth. The words of Jesus are plain. If we would obey the truth, observe and practice, take heed to and live by his word we would not be in such strife.

Whenever we treat the word of God as some mystical thing that we are not to live by and obey every day we are in disobedience. We should seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness.

But it is only an example, and not an ordinance, says one. Well is not an example binding enough, good enough? What is more direct and plainer or more important than an example? Is not the example set by Jesus himself good enough for us? Does he not say, We ought to wash one another's feet.

Then too it is connected with the deep and awful mystery of his own humiliation unto death. It seems that the disciples even during the time of his great distress, when he was about to be humbled unto death, were disputing among themselves who should be the greatest? Jesus lays aside his garments, girds himself with a towel, and pours water into a basin and began to wash the disciples' feet, and said "Ye call me master, and so I am." What an humble service this was. If Jesus the Lord and Master thus stooped to wash the feet of his disciples, does not this teach humility; and he says "ye ought also to wash one another's feet." This means to literally wash feet and it is connected with the Lord's supper.

The number of times it is to be done is not prescribed. The important thing is to do this. If ye know these things happy are ye if ye do them. Is there not many a child of God that desires at times to wash the saints' feet? Instead of disputing about how or when it should be done, the important thing is to do it. If ye know these things happy are ye if ye do them.

Here is one or more, we will suppose, that has never been impressed to wash feet. Now will those who are impressed to wash feet smite those who are not impressed to wash feet, and have no dealings with them? Where is the spirit of feet-washing? Where is brotherly love? Are you then tarrying one for another? If any man be ignorant let him be ignorant. Wait for him. There are some things shown to some christians that are not shown to others. Shall those to whom these things are shown despise those to whom they are not shown? Take care your knowledge does not puff you up. Where is your love? Charity suffereth long, and is the spirit of feet-washing? This matter of washing the saints' feet is too lowly, lovely and meek for spiritual-minded people to quarrel about. But carnal men for or against it can quarrel about that as well as about anything else. The devil would as soon Baptists would quarrel about this matter as about anything else. Those that are carnal and opposed to washing the saints' feet will rather ridicule it, or speak disparagingly of it, using lightness and levity in their manner of talking about it, and cast reproach and odium upon it. While those in favor of it, yet who are not of the right mind about it, (for there are such, even the Roman Catholics wash feet,) will oppress the feelings of such as do not see as they do, and instead of using gentleness, love and tenderness in their entreaties, will use harshness, and will refuse to have dealings with such as do not wash feet. The spirit and true manner of feet-washing would be to show love and forbearance, long-suffering and mercy towards such and endeavor by forbearance to gain those of a contrary mind by good, sober reasoning, and brotherly kindness toward them.

2d. Another objection that is made against feet-washing is to admit that the Lord did literally wash the disciples' feet with water, and that Jews from the days of Abraham did wash the feet of each other, but that it is now out of fashion. That because customs have changed therefore the word of the Lord ceases to be of any force! Well, if the Jews from the days of Abraham washed feet, and if Jesus washed the disciples' feet, is not that a reason why we should at least consider it? But did not feet-washing prevail under the law and with it? Where is the proof that it did? It was not given by Moses. It was observed before he was born. Paul also commands it long after the resurrection of Jesus, and after the passing away or fulfilling of the law that was given by Moses. For in 1st, Tim. 5: 10, in speaking of the good works of a widow woman above three-score or sixty years of age, he says, if she have washed the saints' feet, (plural number—it means more than one saint) and he ranks it not as an ordinance, but with such good works as entertaining strangers, bringing up children, if she have relieved the afflicted. It is a good work then, no more and no less important than other good works. Now if washing the saints' feet was no more to be observed after the death of Jesus, but was fulfilled as the law in the death of Christ, why do we find it observed long after the resurrection of Jesus? Why should we think the word of Jesus is not to endure forever? Did he say wash one another's feet only while you wear sandals and cease it afterwards? Is any scripture of any private interpretation? Peter tells us that no Scripture is of any private interpretation; 2d Peter 1: 20. For a Scripture to be of private interpretation would be that it would cease to be of any force at certain times or under certain circumstances. Now if Jesus had said as long as ye wear sandals ye ought to wash one another's feet, but after you begin to wear shoes then cease to wash each others feet, then we could plead that this Scripture is now obsolete, and therefore dead, or of no force. Peoples' feet get dirty that wear shoes. People are proud that wear shoes. People need to be at each others feet that wear shoes or boots.

When you wash ones feet, or when he washes his own feet he can rest and sleep better. He that is clean needeth not save to wash his feet. In our daily walk as christians our steps are soiled in the dust of man's frailty. To love one another so that love covers the multitude of sins, and we thus wash them away ensures sweet rest. Jesus was going by death to wash away the defilement and sins of his people. Before he dies he lays aside his garments, representing that he laid aside his glory that he had with the Father before the world was, and he became a servant unto death to wash and cleanse his people, and he girded himself with a towel (that which dries and helps to cleanse) and washed his disciples' feet. What he was then doing his disciples did not know. The high spirit of Peter objected to be thus washed. But when Jesus said, "If I wash thee not thou hast no part with me," then Peter said, "not my feet only, but my hands and my head." Peter is an extreme man. He is inclined to go beyond or stop short. There are men of that sort now. Thus Jesus was showing by washing their feet his humiliation unto death, and that it would wash them from all sin, or that his love thus led him to lay down his life for his people, and that we sho'd love one another, and lay down our lives for the brethren and show it being at each others' feet.

"For love is the golden chain
That binds the happy souls above,
And he is an heir of heaven
That finds his bosom glow with love."

Now the spirit of washing the saints' feet is manifested in all that we do, if we have that spirit it bears or suffers long and is kind. It thinks no evil. It has no evil surmising. May Jesus who washed the feet of his disciples grant us his spirit to guide us into all truth that we may dwell in peace and love.

MARY WASHING THE FEET OF JESUS AND ANOIN-TING HIS HEAD.

ELDER P. D. GOLD, DEAR BROTHER :
—I request your views on the 9th verse of 14th chap. of Mark. "Whosoever this gospel shall be preached throughout the whole world this also that she hath done shall be spoken of for a memorial of her."

J. J. BECK.

Brosville, Va.,

Remarks.

(See Mark 14: 9; Matt, 26: 5; John 12: 1; Luke 7: 37.)

All these Scriptures refer to the same event. Mary is the sinner that through love of Jesus anointed his head with the precious contents of the alabaster box, and the anointing ran down on his body even to his feet; yea and she washed his feet with her tears, and did wipe them with the hairs of her head, so wonderful was her love to him. Jesus tells Simon the Leper in whose house this occurred that the reason this woman did this was because she loved much, and she loved much because much was forgiven her.

Then she washed the feet of Jesus with her tears. She also anointed his head, body and feet with the ointment and kissed his feet. This was that Mary (See John 11: 2.) whose brother Lazarus was raised from the dead, and who sat at the feet of Jesus, having chosen that good part that should not be taken from her, and she was a sinner. How she loved Jesus. Much was forgiven her.

This event is connected with the death or burial of Jesus. It was about the time Jesus washed the feet of his disciples. I am inclined to think that Jesus washed the feet of his disciples just after this supper at the house of Simon, and before the feast of the passover; but it is all connected with the passover and the Lord's supper too. Six days before the feast of the passover Jesus came to Bethany where Lazarus lived, and there he remained much of those thrilling and wonderful six days preceding his death. It was during this time and two days before the feast of the passover that Simon made this feast and Jesus sat at meat and Mary came behind him and anointed his head and body and washed his feet. Then this event is connected with his death, and his washing his disciples' feet is also connected with his death.

Jesus tells his disciples why Mary had anointed him. For the disciples objected, saying it was a needless waste. Especially did Judas find fault saying, the value of this costly ointment might have been given to the poor, not that he cared for the poor, but because he was a thief and had the bag and bore what was put therein. He loved money and betrayed Jesus and sold him for money because he loved it.

When objection was made to Mary for emptying this precious ointment Jesus justified her conduct saying, "Let her alone, against the day of my burial hath she kept this." Then she kept what was typified in the law and perceived and interpreted by faith. She foresaw that Jesus would be crucified and buried, and she comes beforehand to anoint him to his burial. Opening that alabaster box of precious contents which when opened perfumes the whole house shadows forth the rich fragrance and merit of Jesus as crucified and risen which would anoint the whole house or church of God, so that the smell of corruption and death should be gone, and as a field which the Lord had blessed it should give forth a goodly smell. Furthermore that wherever this gospel shall be preached throughout the whole world this also, that she hath done what she could, and anointed his body beforehand to this burial should be told.

Jesus never leaves himself without a witness. Though he had told his disciples beforehand that he must be crucified and rise from the dead the third day, yet not one of them believes this. But here comes a woman in whom this faith and blessed knowledge dwells. How she loves him, and shows her faith by her works, and this shall be told wherever the gospel shall be preached in all the world.

As the alabaster box (pure and white) betokening innocence, which contained the precious ointment, must be broken open that its precious ointment might be poured forth, even so Jesus must be crucified before the fountain of cleansing blood that washes away sin could be shed on us, and this perfumes the grave so that death now is nothing but a valley and a shadow that we walk through.

Even so when we are brought down to the troubles of death and godly sorrow causes repentance to break forth, and tears of joy, sorrow and grief, with the weeping of gladness and love for the crucified one pours forth this is linked with the gospel and is told wherever the gospel is preached throughout the world; for this is the fruit of the gospel and is told in all gospel preaching.

Love is the soul and center, the life and peace, of true religion. Our heads may be lifted up with pride and contention, and we may be led away into strife from the simplicity of the gospel, but when we see Jesus in the lowliness of crucifixion and death, or in the meekness of receiving sinners and eating with them, then would we with our tears wash his feet and with our hairs dry them.

A woman's hair is her glory. When Mary wiped his feet with the hairs of her head she laid her glory at his feet from love and devotion.

HEALING.

It does not seem needful that there should be any strife among the brethren about the gift of healing. If one claims that gift and is honest he will not object to coming to the light with his deeds, and will submit to inspection. If it is of the Lord it will stand. If it is not of the Lord it should fall. There is no need of one claiming this gift to force it on churches in preaching or in conference meetings. Let him show his faith by his works. Let him heal diseases. God's works cannot be kept down.

If one has a gift of healing from the Lord it will be of benefit to such as are diseased and oppressed. If one has such a gift let him wait on his healing. We surely should not make a disturbance about it. Let each one abide in his lot. Let him that ministers in the word wait on that; he that teacheth on teaching, he that heals on that; and let there be no strife nor schism in the body or church.

Obituary.

JOANNA A. SMITH.

Please publish the death of our dear daughter Joanna A. Smith. She was the daughter of Elder Job Smith and Nancy M. Smith, and was born August 1854—died August 1889. Her disease was dysentery.

Poor dear child, she suffered much severe pain until her last hour, then she slept soundly, then awoke, knew all around her and thanked them for coming to see her, then died peacefully. The blessed Lord gave her to us, and now hath taken her away from us. Blessed be the name of the Lord. We have lost three children in less time than 5 years, two grown daughters, and one son over eighteen years old. I tell you it makes weeping and sad feelings for a time, and now we don't want them back. Brothers and sisters have to part and we must all try to be resigned to go when our Saviour calls us. I hope we will be resigned to die and meet all the blood-washed throng of Jesus Christ our Lord, where pain and sorrow will be felt no more. I hope we will all be enabled to praise our Saviour forever, with our children, parents and friends, if it can consist with our heavenly Father's will. Brother Gold, I wish to be remembered to you. I never saw you though I wish I could though I read your publication thro' our LANDMARK which affords me much pleasure in my lonely hours. I do wish I could meet with you. Perhaps I may when we have another Association at White Oak. Please try and come, come home with us and make our house your home. I want to see you and all the good brethren and sisters. May the good Lord be with us and bless us all, and keep us from sinning, keep us in love and peace, so that as we grow in love we may grow in grace and faith. Your sister spiritual-ly I hope,

NANCY M. SMITH.

WILLIAM NEAL.

It has become my sad duty to write a notice of the death of my dear father, William Neal of Rockingham Co., N. C. He was born May the 7th 1804, and died Sept. the 19th 1887, making his stay on earth 83 years, 4 months and twelve days. Few men of his country will be more missed. He was a trust-worthy citizen, a devoted Baptist, strong in the faith, and watchful for the peace and order of Zion, filling the office of Deacon and Clerk. He joined the Primitive Baptist church at Hillsdale, in Guilford Co., N. C., in 1835, of which church he was still a member at his death. That church laments the loss of such a member.

He was married twice and had the pleasure of seeing both of his wives baptized in the Primitive order. He was a man of firm principles, was well grounded in the faith, not being blown about by every wind of doctrine. He had long since become to be a man in doctrine, and could eat strong meat, was one who contended earnestly for the faith which was once delivered to the saints of God. I suppose he was one of the oldest members in the Mayo Association, and up to within two years of his death he hardly ever missed going to the Association far or near. He had many acquaintances and friends, and I write this sketch of him that they may see that he was not only firm in the faith while with them, but in the trying hour of death he was enabled to rejoice in the belief that salvation was of the Lord. But for some time before he died he appeared to be in the dark often speaking to me about his troubles; and was fully aware that the end of time was near at hand with him. It seemed to be his constant study. Brother Isaac Jones preached at Sardis church in August before he died in Sept., and he remarked to him that he was surprised to meet with him again, for he had been daily expecting to be taken away, and that he did not think of much else but death. But said that he did not feel right as he would wish to feel. Brother Jones remarked to him, that he was craving dying grace before the time came, that the Lord had only promised dying grace in the hour of death; and he would not forsake his children. This remark appeared to console him as long as he lived, often repeating what Brother Jones had said. For eight months before his death he was a great sufferer, daily expecting to appear in the presence of his maker. The last three weeks of his life it appeared that his misery was more than he could bear. The writer was with him a good portion of the time, and I was made to wonder and exclaim, how can man endure so much, and he said, "My son, the Lord is with me, I hope, and he can enable me to bear it all patiently. I know he will do right with me, and said he often thought of the sufferings of Job and the Lord knew the way that he took." I never have seen any case so near to compare with Job's afflictions: yet he bore it all without a murmur, remarking that some men's sin's went to judgment before hand, while others followed after them, and he hoped and believed his had gone before, that he was sure the Lord would do justly with him, and would put no more on him than he deserved. He said, Oh, "I am a sinner, and if I am saved it will be the mercy of God alone. What wonderful, wonderful, goodness of God to save a poor sinner like me." Two days before he died his physician told us the end was come, and to all appearances it had. We gave him up. His children assembled around his bed-side to see the end. But to the surprise and joy of all he rallied again, and here comes in a scene my pen can't describe. I have long neglected to write this sketch after being requested, because I felt incompetent to write of him.

Just before he died he told his experience, and asked some of us to tell ours. He said all of his children had given him a reason to believe they had a hope, except one of his youngest who had never given him any satisfactory evidence that he had been changed, but that he believed he was. So he got him to talking and telling what great things he hoped the Lord had done for him. At this he became overjoyed and was completely broken down for a while. When he got so he could talk again he said, he had often wandered what the Lord was keeping him here for, and that he had often prayed if it be the Lord's will that he might live to see his children and his neighbors' children truly converted, and that now he could exclaim like one of old, "Let thy servant depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation." It did appear to me almost like one had arisen from the dead, and he remained with us two days. His countenance did not appear as it was before. He seemed to lose sight of this world and all it contained. In his afflictions he told me how he wanted to be put away, and who he wanted to preach his funeral, talked of heaven, and heavenly things.

Here was one of the happiest times I ever spent with him. He kept perfectly rational all the while, talked freely up to within four hours of his death, when he went off to sleep never to wake any more here. He seemed to sleep as easy as an infant babe, and died without a struggle. Brother Gold, I believe that he fell asleep in the arms of Jesus where I have a faint hope I will one day meet him again, for I believe that he is to day singing praises of redeeming grace. Oh! may his children and his grand-children remember his walk while here on earth, and try to follow in his foot-steps, and at last meet with him above is my desire.

A. F. NEAL.

Remarks.

The family of our old brother Neal is noted in the country where they are known as first class men, and they are true Baptists in their principles and conduct. Our aged brother, who so triumphantly passed away falling asleep in Jesus, yet speaks in his neighborhood. May everlasting blessings of peace from heaven abide on his family.

ISAAC GREEN CANNADY.

Little Isaac Green Cannady, infant son of W. E. and Alice B. Cannady, was born Oct. the 16th. 1887, died August the 7th '89. Little Ike seemed in perfect health up to within a few days of his death, when he was taken suddenly with Meningitis in a most malignant form and lingered but a few short days, but Oh! how long to the yearning mother as she tenderly ministered to the comforts of her suffering child through the long midnight hours anxiously watching and hoping to see some change for the better, and when each hour he grew worse and his groanings became louder, hope fled and the faithful mother gave way, the loving Grand-mother and tender father kept the lonely vigil, while the faithful Doctors did all in their power to relieve the little sufferer.

Little Ike having the entire name of our precious departed father felt especially dear to our hearts, and a brighter, more promising child I have never known. Our hearts swell with sympathy for our beloved brother and sister in this, the greatest affliction of their young lives.

O mother, while a thousand sorrows fill thy soul remember the gracious Saviour hides a smiling face behind a frowning Providence—then,

Weep for the days that will come no more
For the sunbeam flown from hearth and door,
For a missing step, for a nameless grace
Of a tender voice and loving face,
But not for the soul whose goal is won,
Whose infinite joy is just begun;
Not for the spirit enrobed in light,
And crowned where angels are to-night.

The Purpose of Zion's Landmark.

"Ask for the old paths where is the good way."

By the help of the Lord this paper will contend for the ancient Landmark, guided by its stakes of Truth, and strengthened by its chords of Love.

It hopes to reject all traditions and institutions of men, and regard only the Bible as the standard of truth.

It urges the people to search the Scriptures, and obey Jesus the king in the holy hill of Zion, keeping themselves unspotted from the world.

It aims to contend for the mystery of the faith in God and the Father, Jesus the Mediator, and the Holy Spirit the blessed Comforter.

All lovers of Gospel truth are invited to write for it—if so impressed.

May grace, mercy, and peace be multiplied to all lovers of truth.

ON SELF-MADE MINISTERS.

We shall hold you, missionary Baptists, responsible for the cause of our distress. We, as the people of God, charge you with our sufferings and disunion; for you are the guilty, for you have forsaken the right way, the good old way of ancient times, that brought peace, harmony and a flourishing condition and love and union among the Baptists throughout the States; and run greedily after the error of Balaam and the golden cup of the whore of Babylon, and you have become so drunk with her errors and money, that the cries and remonstrances of God's people and truth has no effect on your ears but to turn them away. You say you can't give up missions; no, indeed, nor could the Roman priests their traffic, for by it like them many priests get their bread. So away with you, wonder after the beast, but let us alone and not break our peace by your creepers. We shall stand by the creed of the Philadelphia Association, until death remove us where tumult is no more; for men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemous, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy; without natural affection, truce breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce despisers of those that are good. What a terrible picture this of men who wear the sheepskin; who have the profession and practical part of religion, or form of godliness? And do these marks fit the missionaries? Don't they show themselves self-lovers and covetous by inventing every plan to get money out of men, women and children—negroes and Indians, and Congress not excepted? Don't they show covetousness by pocketing a great part of the money they get in this traffic out of widows and no matter who, while the poor and needy are overlooked by them and not even mentioned in all this traffic? This was not the case in the first Christian church, the money was then for the poor and needy, but covetousness has turned the scale that it is now for gentlemen of broad-cloth to ride about the country to seek their fortunes. Are they not boasters? Read missionary publications and see the mighty achievements performed by Tom, Dick and Harry, in conversions, labors, travels, gifts, collections, baptism, and preachments, &c. Are they not blasphemous? In that the world is to be converted by money—in that of money the soul of religion, he that giveth is a good Christian, he that giveth not is an infidel—in that of their treasury is the treasury of the Lord—in that of binding moneyed burdens on the church God never commanded—in that of selling titles into societies God never instituted in his church—in that of God's people for preaching—in that of contradicting the word of God in many different ways, in the preaching of their plans and schemes to get money, &c. Disobedient to parents? Yes, sir. You can't think that Paul meant here natural parents and children, as he was speaking of a sort of professors and preachers, this is clear in the whole drift of the prophecy; but of spiritual parents and children, such as he was to Timothy—such as in 1 Corinthians, 4 15: For though ye have ten thousand instructors in Christ, yet have ye not many fathers; for in Christ Jesus I have begotten you through the gospel. 1 John 2: 13. I write to your fathers &c. So that the apostle's meaning is, when he says disobedient to parents he speaks spiritually; that a young coxcomb missionary just from school, in the pride and fancy of his attained theology, will not listen to the advice of the most aged and experienced ministers, nor to the most aged members of the church of Christ, but in the highness of their minds and headiness disobey all counsel, advice and reproof and go on their own way, while at the same time they are unthankful for the advice of ministers, or church members, and also unholy in their conversation towards these fathers in Israel. And these things I have seen and felt too, therefore I know the prophecy is true; for I have seen young missionary preachers in gloves and boots, merely laugh and make sport when they have attempted to tell them their opinion in opposition to missions. And as for the aged members of the church talking to them and giving them advice, they were treated by them with contempt, and often with an unholy smile, laugh, gesture, and words. And I have never seen one, no, never one, young preacher and missionary, nor one single man or woman that was a missionary, in 20 years, that has ever exhibited or expressed thankfulness for advice from the most aged and venerable fathers in the church of God, when given them; but to the contrary, and an hundred times with unholy conversation and refractory language, accompanied often with sneer and contempt, have I seen that advice treated. Cases I could cite, but it is unnecessary; for they think their judgments better than the fathers of Israel. Young preachers remember one thing, that age is the school of experience at which you have never studied; you ought therefore to listen to their advice, for they know more than you—but above all things, have thus saith the Lord for all you do in matters of religion.

The apostle goes on in his marks of these men-made teachers—traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God, having a form of godliness, &c. These marks well fit the missionaries and all men-made teachers; for I have noticed the treachery and headiness of many of them, and every missionary with which I have been acquainted almost has this mark, high-minded. You take notice of it, and see if what I say is not true; it matters not of their poverty, you see if they don't manifest this mark, high-minded. Without natural affection—he don't mean that natural affection common to our nature, but that natural affection that is common among Christians, or spiritual natural affection of love to Christians. This they are void of, and their conduct proves it by the very next sentence,—truce breakers, that is, peace breakers. Why Paul could not have hit the mark better of missionary conduct if he was alive to see and feel the effects of their conduct as I have done. Have not the missionaries broke the peace of nations? See what they had like to have brought Georgia and the United States to. See what they have done in South America, Wales, &c. They have broke the peace of Associations, churches, families, ministers, and individuals; and planted envy, hatred, shyness, evil speaking, and no dealing even between those who were before in love like Johnathan and David, never to be healed between brethren and friends in this life. Can a spirit that does this be of God? Ask yourself seriously, can it be a christian spirit, or of the spirit of God, that separates brethren and breaks the peace, harmony, love and union of God's church and people? Say. I say I would as soon believe that the mammoth cheese of 1300 pounds sent to President Jefferson was now the moon, as to believe that a spirit that breaks the peace of God's people can be of God; and therefore, if there was nothing else to prove to me that missions was not of God, this is enough for me, to see God's people squandered, one this way and another that, and at loggerheads among themselves. It proves there are wolves in sheepskin about, and these are the peace-breakers: and wolves, you know, love money, Balaam like. Therefore the spirit of missions is a wolf spirit; it was bred and carried on, you know, by popish wolves that eat both sheep and money. The spirit of the impressions may be bounded as a covetous money making spirit; therefore, that and the Christian spirit is at war and always will be. A thousand proofs of this fact you know I can bring. The spirit of missions is a boasting, heady, high-minded, Arminian spirit. The spirit of missions is not only a peace-breaking spirit, and I need not have taken time to prove this, for it proves itself in every State in the Union, but if not watched and resisted it will be a liberty destroying spirit too.

And Paul gives, another mark—false accusers. Yes, sir that is I know a true trait of the missions spirit. Look into the periodicals of the day, and see if you don't find accusations against men much better in principle and practice than the accusers; and you will find accusations there as false as that of the devil, when he tho't to buy off Jesus and said, all this I will give thee for one bend of the knee. Then this proves the mission spirit to be of the devil, for he has always made use of money to support his ministers and his religion in the world; witness Judas, Balaam, and Baal's prophets. And he thought Jesus might be a missionary of this moneyed cast, and he would therefore buy him off his side; but I tell you and have told you, and I will now tell you again, that Jesus Christ, his ministers, nor religion, are not moneyed men nor money's religion; but the devil's is, and always has been and always will be. And this should be proof enough to satisfy everybody that missions is of the devil, because it is a religion founded in money; which is the devil's religion from Shechem, who would be circumcised to get Jacob's daughter and cattle, until this day when men will be preachers and missionaries to get money. And the whole tenor of the Old and New Testaments on false prophets and false ministers proves the fact, line upon line. Don't be made, for as God liveth I will not let you off a hair's headth below or above the truth; but you know what I told you, my aim was to make truth appear.

The spirit of missions again proves itself to be a devilish spirit by its breaking and destroying the peace, love and union of churches and God's people. The spirit of missions is—a fierce despising of those that are good, is given as another mark by Paul. Yes, sir, of all that can't see thro' their spectacles and untie their purses freely and bountifully. See in publications the names given them that don't see out of their eyes and fill their pockets: infidels, ignorant, cold-hearted Christians, want of sense, can't have a Christian heart, and the dear knows what all, are thrown on them. Out of the abundance of the heart, says Jesus, the mouth speaketh. So these words prove that in their hearts they despise those that are good. You may say the many harsh words in this piece prove my heart despises the missionaries. Sir, I am no bush fighter; for there is only one missionary in the world that I have a feeling Christian affection for, and I care not if I never see another but him, unless they would cease from breaking the peace and union of God's people; and if they were all out of the United States it would be so much the better for the Baptists, in my opinion; for then the Baptists would be as they have been, before this moneyed, wolfish, devilish spirit got in among them to scatter the sheep. But I can't write everything, I must, I will stop; yet the subject forces itself upon me, and my hand is so cramped I can hardly hold my pen; yet there is no need for me to take time to consider, my mind is crowded with such as it is, and of the truth of it I leave you to judge.

Now, says Paul in the same chapter, as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, so do these also resist the truth; men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith. This verse clearly proves that the characters all along in the foregoing verses were intended to describe a certain set of ministers of the gospel that should arise in the last days, which I have showed you are now. And I have showed you some of my reasons for believing he meant the missionaries. Remember these men are set forth in the text as resisters of the truth, withstanders of God's ministers, as the magicians did Moses; and as men of corrupt minds, and reprobate or counterfeit as to faith. So then the very marks on them put by the Holy Ghost prove them to be self-made or men-made, or devil-made ministers; as the base marks on them prove. Now you know God sent Moses to Pharaoh, with a message to deliver Israel from bondage and to carry his rod and work miracles with it in the sight of Pharaoh; and that when Moses had delivered the message and turned his rod to a serpent, then the magicians were called for who did so also by their rods; in other miracles they did so except some which they could not do, but confessed that was the finger of God. Here is another proof that by these men all along set forth, he meant false ministers; for he here would point to Moses as a figure of all God's true ministers. He would also here point to Jannes and Jambres as a figure of the false ministers that should arise to resist the truth of the gospel, as these magicians did Moses. So this matter clears all I have said before about disobedience to parents and natural affection, &c. God sent Moses, you don't doubt; but who sent the magicians? Where did they learn the art? Ah, that's the bite. And where or how do they learn the art of preaching, the art to resist God's ministers, resist the truth, as these men did Moses? Now you must agree that God did not send Moses and the magicians too, so you must also agree God don't send false ministers and true ones too; for God sent Moses with a message and to deliver Israel, then of course he could not send the magicians too to counteract his own designs. So God sends his ministers with a message and to deliver sinners from the bondage of the law, satan and sin. Then of course he can't send those false ministers to resist the truth, withstand his own ministers and counteract his own designs in saving or delivering sinners from death and damnation by the hands of his own ministers. Then one of three things you must acknowledge, that Jannes and Jambres sent themselves and prepared themselves to resist Moses; or secondly, that men sent and prepared them; or, that the devil prepared and sent them to withstand Moses; and it matters not with me which of the three you choose, for then my doctrine stands good. Or you may say first, that Jannes and Jambres were willing to become magicians, and men and the devil prepared and sent them; or you may say the devil sent them, all the same. So, equally so with false ministers; you may say that there are men willing to become false ministers, and men and the devil prepare and send them; or that the devil prepares them, or that men help to prepare them, or that they prepare themselves, all the same. They are magicians still, false ministers still, resisters of the truth and of God's ministers from the deliverance of sinners—the same old sheepskin still.

Now then here we have got some marks of false ministers worth a Jew's eye; first, what were the magicians prepared and sent for? To withstand Moses. So all false ministers are prepared and sent for the purpose of withstanding God's ministers, whether prepared of themselves, men or devil; the grand design is to withstand the message of God, in doctrine, ordinance and discipline. Secondly, what were the magicians prepared and sent for? To resist Moses in the delivery of the children of Israel. So all false ministers, whether prepared of themselves, or in the schools by men, or out of doors by the devil, the grand design is to prevent the deliverance of sinners from spiritual bondage. Thirdly, what were the magicians sent for? To mimic Moses in working miracles, to keep Pharaoh and the Egyptians from letting them go. So all false ministers are sent to mimic God's ministers in preaching, &c. to keep sinners from believing the gospel message and keep them in bondage. What effect did the magicians produce by going? Why when Pharaoh saw that the magicians could do the same miracles Moses did, he hardened his heart and would not let them go. So false ministers are sent to harden sinners' hearts, and do harden their hearts and prevent as much as in them lieth from going, or believing the truth of the gospel. The magicians pursued the same plan of miracles as Moses did and this was the very thing that kept them from going and believing. So false ministers pursue and follow the same plan of God's ministers, and this the very thing that keeps sinners from believing and going; for Pharaoh, the Egyptians, nor the Israelites, did not know which to believe, the magicians or Moses, for both seem in their eyes to work the same miracles. So sinners on hearing and seeing all God's ministers do, and all that false ones do, they are so near alike they don't know which to believe. Thus Pharaoh's and the Egyptians' hearts were hardened, and Israel kept in bondage until God came. So the devil and the non-elect are hardened, and Israel kept in bondage in spite of all his ministers can say and do, until God comes with his out stretched and strong arm of power and judgment.

ELDERS P. D. GOLD AND P. G. LESTER, DEAR BRETHREN:—It has been on my mind to write upon the subject of the warfare of the Church of Christ, and such thoughts as I have I give. By way of promise the Lord said of old, "No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper, but every tongue that shall rise against thee in judgment thou shalt condemn." * * * * *
Isaiah 54: 17. This as a promise of God remains true unto this day, and it affords the saints of God much comfort to reflect thereon. The same God of whom Paul testified. The "God who cannot lie promised us eternal life in Christ before the world began." When he could swear by no greater he swore by himself, saying in blessing I will bless thee, and in multiplying I will multiply thee. The burning bush was a bright illustration of God's promise and ability to perform the same, for Moses looked, and while the fire enveloped the bush, yet the bush was not consumed. The like figures have been exhibited all along the line from the ages past, The three Hebrew children later exhibit the same truth and Daniel in the lion's den. The myriads and hosts and divinations and enchantments utterly failed to extirpate and destroy the Church of God in the world. The decree of reigning kings and the various weapons formed failed to carry out their destructive purposes concerning the Church of God. For he has not left himself without a witness, but he witnesseth in every age his faithfulness concerning his people whom he hath formed for himself, saying they shall show forth his praise. I think of Moab and the tricks of divination and enchantments that were practiced against the people of God. Balak hired Balaam and he went upon the mountain tops as carried by Balak to view them from three points, and, if possible, to curse this people, of whom Balak and his people were afraid, and notwithstanding the rewards offered Balaam and his greed of gain and worldly honor, he utterly failed to carry his purpose out, and the secret of it was the promise of God, who met Balaam and turned the curse into a blessing. The weapons, though of the highest order that Balak could employ, were a failure, and God turned the curse into a blessing, and Balak said, I have called thee to curse this people, and you have blessed them these three times. How wonderful are the works of our God, who doeth his will in the armies of Heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth and none can stay his hand nor say whatdoest thou?

I so often think of the efforts of Balaam at this time, and how he tries in vain to curse the people of God. I heard a Methodist preacher say that the doctrine of election and predestination was a dangerous doctrine, and it ought to be consigned to oblivion and them that preach it. Another one said, if he was the hard shells he would go en masse and jump into the Pacific Ocean and say here goes nothing. They have tried to prejudice the rising generation and tell them that these old hard shells preached infants to hell—not a span long—that they are opposed to every good work, and that they were an ignorant set. God has turned this to a blessing in that many have been kept away from us who would perhaps have been an injury to the Church of God. They have also said the old Baptists are right where Christ left them over eighteen hundred years ago, when he hath said, and it is true, I will never leave you nor forsake them.

They say they are not progressive. We admit that the church is perfect in its laws and ordinances, in its organic construction and will admit of no progress. That the church is not a legislative body, but executive body to carry out the laws of Christ which he has given her, but their so-called church is continually undergoing a change, and we believe getting worse and worse, as the evidence proves, where they flourish crime is extant, and on the increase and corruption abounds which is testimony sufficient to prove to us their origin and what will be their end.

We notice also in this modern age or in these last times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils speaking lies in hypocrisy. This is what we call spiritual wickedness in high places. The flood sent out of the mouth of the dragon and the man of sin and mystical Babylon. The mystery of iniquity is now working and its aim is to extirpate the Church of God, but amidst this war the voice of God is heard in Zion. No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper, but every tongue that riseth against thee in judgment thou shalt condemn. The fire and the sword and the flattering tongue and all manner of hypocrisy have been devised by the devil and his host, but they have signally failed up to date, and the Church of God still exists and is a living witness of the faithfulness of our God, who doeth all things well. The tides of infidelity, the weapons of carnal reason from without and from within have failed to destroy the Church of God in a true and special sense. She is hidden in his pavilion in the secret chambers. Jesus says, Oh! my dove that art in the clefts of the rock, in the secret places of the stairs, let me see thy countenance, let me hear thy voice, for sweet is thy voice and thy countenance is comely. She is hidden from the wise and prudent and revealed unto babes even so Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight. "The bride," "the King's daughter, is all glorious within;" she "is the hidden man of the heart." "God is in the midst of her. She shall not be moved." "As the mountains are around about Jerusalem, so is the Lord around about the people." "They that trust in the Lord shall be as Mount Zion, which cannot be removed." While in this great warfare we are to remember that the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but spiritual to the pulling down of the strong holds of Satan. The Midianites were like grasshoppers in the valley for a multitude, but they did not prosper, and their numbers proved in the end to be against them, and now we are not to forget that the grasshopper crowds encamped against the people of God shall not prosper with all their weapons of warfare. They have used the Sunday school weapon, the theological school weapon, the mission board weapon, the organ and the timbrel, and they have all failed up to date, and upon their walls it is written, thou art weighed in the balance and found wanting. The Church of God remains the same. The society weapons have also failed, for it was said Israel shall dwell alone. She shall not be reckoned among the nations. No divination nor enchantment shall prosper to destroy this body, the church of the living God, wealth and popularity is a very formidable weapon, and it has corrupted the church, for as of old, it is the same unto this day, that Jeshuran waxed fat and kicked and forgot the Lord, the rock of his salvation. Tradition is also another weapon, and while it has seemed to hurt the church she is not consumed. How many more are the devices of Satan. No one knows, but he is still devising his plans, but we are to remember the promise of Christ—the gates of hell shall not prevail against the Church of Christ. Truly does the poet say:

Fear not, I am with thee;
Oh, be not dismayed,
For I am thy God and I'll still give thee aid.
I will be with thee thy troubles to bless,
And sanctify to thee thy deepest distress.

“The Lord is our shield and our fortress, in him will I trust. Though the mountains be cast into the midst of the sea, yet will I not fear.” These are a few thoughts that I have. If they are worth publishing you can publish them. If not, withhold them. I am as ever yours in hope,

TREATISE ON THE BOOK OF JOSHUA.

(By P. D. GOLD.)

ZION'S LANDMARK PRINT,
WILSON, N. C.,

Among all the worthies of the Old Testament the mission of JOSHUA was next in importance to that of Moses, and his character is one of the noblest in all history. First a slave in the brick-fields of Egypt, and then a servant of Moses in the wilderness, and thus learning those lessons of obedience which he was to inculcate in his advanced age; possessing and exercising, at all times, simple, child-like, unquestioning faith in God; clothed with the divine power which accompanies such faith; steadfastly devoted to the service of the Most High, and setting for others the godly example which he wished and exhorted them to follow; able, energetic, fearless, calm, dignified, blameless, gentle, humble, patriotic, and unselfish; bearing a name in Hebrew which is even the same as JESUS in Greek, and means Jehovah-Saviour; succeeding Moses and completing his work; leading Israel dry-shod and safe through the overflowing waters of the Jordan; circumcising his followers, and celebrating the solemn feast of the passover with them; bringing them into the land of promise, and conquering their enemies before the luminaries of heaven withdrew their shining, and putting the chosen tribes in possession of the goodly inheritance which their Covenant God had freely given them; distributing first to all his brethren their portion, and reserving the last and least for himself; giving Israel rest from all their enemies; ascribing unto God every particle of the glory for choosing, redeeming and saving His people; and calling finally upon them to put away all idols, and, in loving gratitude and heavenly wisdom, to serve faithfully and exclusively the only true and living God: there is not in all the Old Testament, it seems to the present writer, a finer and fuller type of the LORD JESUS CHRIST than that presented in the person, life and character of JOSHUA.

It is therefore with peculiar pleasure that I note the appearance of the little volume named at the head of this article. The object of the author is to set forth the spiritual and practical lessons to be derived from the book of Joshua; and that object has been admirably accomplished. Elder Gold shows, in a plain and forcible manner, how Moses represents the law, and Joshua the gospel; Rahab, the believing sinner saved by grace; the two and a half tribes, on the east of the Jordan unbaptized believers, who although they fight well for Israel, yet have much cattle, or many worldly ties, and abide in the first resting-place, because it is good pasture land; the Red Sea, the deliverance from bondage; and the Jordan, the separation from the flesh; the Ark of the covenant, Jesus, with the unbroken law of God in his heart, the true, living, and fruitful priesthood, and the heavenly bread, of which if one partakes he shall never die; the plastered altar of stones on which the law was written, the renewed heart on which the law of God is indelibly stamped; the circumcision at Gilgal, the cutting off the sins of the flesh; and the passover, the partaking of the broken body and the shed blood of Jesus; the putting off of Joshua's shoes, and his worshipping the Captain of the Lord's host, the walk of faith and overcoming in the strength of the Lord; the Captain with the drawn sword, the Lord fighting the battles for his people, and causing the cessation of strife and carnality among them at His appearance; Jericho, our worldly affections and desires, that must be cast down, not by carnal weapons, but by the power of God, the preaching of the gospel and the covenant of grace with all its precious blessings; and the sin of Achan and its punishment, the necessity of prompt, faithful and united discipline on the part of every church; the Gibeonites, all our natural powers, that must be made subservient to the worship of God; the Canaanites, our sinful passions, that must be attacked by the hornet of the Holy Spirit, and that must be mortified and kept in subjection, even though they ride in chariots of iron; Israelites, sinners born of God, and established in divine order and unity, in the enjoyment of the promises; Caleb, the life of faith and obedience; Canaan, the church with its rest, ordinances, and peace to the faithful, yet with some of the old inhabitants, sinful propensities, still dwelling in the land, and requiring our constant watchfulness and warfare against them, lest they bring us again into bondage; the tabernacle, Jesus Christ, in whom is all true worship of God, and in whom God reveals himself to all that worship Him in Christ, at which time we worship God in spirit, and rejoice in the finished salvation of Jesus, and the whole land is subdued before us, and we realize that all things are ours, and we are Christ's and Christ is God's; the slack-ness of Israel to possess the land given them by the God of their fathers, the negligence of the spiritual people of God to believe and teach all the doctrine of God their Saviour, and to practice all his holy precepts, and to give all diligence to make their calling and election sure, and their consequent failure to enjoy the precious fruits of the goodly land; the priests, the gospel ministry who are the called and qualified of God, and to be of unblemished character, and who are to preach and visit and oversee their flocks, not for money or fame, but from love to God and souls, and who should reap of the carnal things of those to whom they sow in spiritual things; the cities of refuge on each side of the Jordan, Jesus, our great High Priest, to whom the poor sinner must flee, and by whose death he is saved; the altar Ed (or witness) erected by the two and a half tribes on the east of Jordan, the unity of all true believers in their spiritual worship of the true and living God; the small, scattered, and despised, yet distinct nation of the Jews, the few, poor, ridiculed, persecuted, and suffering people of God found in every part of the world and preserved by a miracle of grace; Joshua and his house, putting aside all false gods, and serving only the God of Israel, Jesus and his chosen, called and faithful people, rejecting every idol, and obeying, worshipping and glorifying only the true God, the Author of all their mercies—true believers being yet continually prone to idolatry and corruption, and needing to be kept by the power of the covenant God from these ruinous evils; and the carrying of Joseph's bones out of Egypt into Canaan, the resurrection of Jesus and all his people from the grave, and their entrance into glory.

I find that I have marked about one-third of the book as very specially worthy of quotation, but I shall have to content myself with only a few brief extracts, and refer the reader to the work itself for the remaining passages.

"Do not our fleshly natures, our lusts, our sins (as the Canaanites united against Joshua) combine against the Lord and fight against him? The flesh lusteth against the Spirit. The elder or first occupant of the land is Esau, or earth, and he claims the land. When the Lord sends his law into us, does not sin rise up and revive and fight against the Lord? Do not all the sinful dispositions of the flesh rise up against the Lord and go forth in battle array? There is a full enlistment and array of all our sinful lusts, the seven nations of the enemy are all gathered against Jesus. Every devil and unclean spirit, every abomination and lust, is gathered to fight against God. The entire power of the Canaanites must be broken, and hence all these kings are confederate and go out as one man against Israel, and in dreadful combat they fight for existence; but they cannot stand before Joshua, and are discomfited and slain, some escaping, but their power is broken so that as nations they do not again occupy the land; but all that escape are still Canaanites, and therefore still enemies of Israel, and watch their opportunities to afflict and entangle the people of God in distress."

"What failures follow unbelief, and what disasters? While faith obtains that which God alone gives, and lays hold on heaven, unbelief never obtains a single spiritual joy, and never can enter the goodly land. They could not enter in because of unbelief."

"And Joshua said unto the children of Israel, How long are ye slack to go to possess the land which the Lord God of your fathers hath given you? Joshua, 18: 3. There is great danger of slackness on our part in maintaining good works which are good and profitable unto men. How easy and natural to be slack and careless! How quickly we leave our first love! How few strive to enter at the strait gate! How few strive to enter into that rest that remaineth to the people of God! We may be disputing about tithing herbs, and yet neglecting the weightier matters of judgment, truth and mercy. We may dispute about some abstruse question we can never understand, to the neglect of things needful to be observed every day; and in the doing of which we surrender no right, nor doctrine, and forfeit nothing belonging to Israel. He that is faithful in preaching repentance toward our Lord Jesus Christ yields not a whit of the doctrine of election. He that preaches that believers should keep their bodies under and, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, should live soberly and godly in this present world, surrenders no part of truth but more fully defends it. He that preaches and teaches that all that are taught in preaching should give to those that teach, denies not one word of the doctrine of truth, but only more fully demonstrates and illustrates its glorious unity and perfection. Churches are too slack about ordaining preachers, allowing some to go out who have not the blessed gift of preaching Jesus. Deacons are chosen merely to officiate at the Lord's supper in handing around bread and wine, not considering that they are appointed to serve tables, to see how the poor are living at home every day, and to see how their pastor is faring at home every day. Many church members too think that when they have joined the church and been baptized, they have but little more to do than to attend preaching at favorable times. It is good to be at preaching, but you have far more than that to do. How many of you pray in your families at home? How many of you encourage your children to read the Bible? How many of you require your children to go to your own preaching places? How many of you allow your children to ramble off, not caring where they go, or what false preaching they hear? How few there be that diligently search to know the Scriptures and devote their lives to the service of God! There is not a promise of the Bible, nor a spiritual blessing that does not belong to Israel, but we must arise and pass over Jordan and possess the land. All that the sole of your foot treads upon, that has the Lord given you. But you must set the sole of your foot on it. You must occupy the land, or you do not enjoy it. The peaceable possession of the land, its goodly fruits and glories, its peace and love are not enjoyed save by those that enter into the land. Surely we must fight if we would reign. Increase our courage, Lord."

"It should be observed that it was Israel that sinned, and they had no excuse for it; nor did a true Israelite ever plead any excuse for his transgression, nor charge God foolishly. No theory of truth can exonerate the transgressor from his guilt, nor charge God as the author of sin. Your conviction of sin teaches you that if you are damned it is just. Let God be true and every man a liar. Jesus came to destroy the works of the devil, which he does when he destroys sin and death. Man's vain theories of sin show his own folly and shame. It is sin in Israel to transgress God's holy law. Nor does God tempt man to sin. Let no man say, when tempted that he is tempted of God. When he is drawn away of his own lusts then he is tempted, and when lust is conceived then it brings forth sin, and sin when it is finished brings forth death. Predestination directly and expressly concerns the salvation of the elect of God, though it so embraces all events that all things are made subservient to the great end of the salvation of all whom God fore-knew, and nothing can defeat that purpose; for we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose."

These practical remarks, and others that abound throughout the volume, are thoroughly scriptural and highly important. Would that every child of God could read this very spiritual and useful work, and give earnest, life-long attention to its godly admonitions.

SYLVESTER HASSELL.

Williamston, N. C.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—There have been some meditations in my mind on the saying, "Thou hast doves' eyes within thy locks," and I feel like penning some thoughts for the readers of the LANDMARK if it meets your approval to publish them.

The words are found in the Song of Solomon, 4chap. and 1st verse. I have for a long time esteemed the Song of Solomon to be a song of love between Christ, the Bridegroom, and the church, the bride. We can generally distinguish between the two by the words, My love and My beloved, the Bridegroom using the words, My love, my dove, my undefiled, &c., and the bride using the words, "My beloved."

The words above referred to are the words of the Bridegroom beginning, "Behold, thou art fair my love, behold, thou art fair;"

The Lord looks on the church as a fair one. Need we to care how the world, either religious or non-professing, looks upon us or how they esteem us, since the All-seeing eye, who searches and knows the heart looks upon us as being fair? I conceive that it is not well for the world to highly esteem us for our religious views, for in such a case one would receive the "Woe unto you when all men shall speak well of you, for so did they of the false prophets." The world loves its own but hates the people of God because it hated Christ their leader and head.

When the christian looks upon himself he cannot see the beautiful, fair garment, but blackness and sin. Therefore it is the eyes of God alone that can see how fair the church is; for he alone knows how clean they are washed in the blood of his beloved Son. He sees us in Christ's righteousness, for the blood of his Son cleanses us from all sin, and there is not a stain left. He gives her the wedding garment and fully prepares her to meet Him in beautiful garments, and looks upon her and says, "Thou art fair," What a consolation to every poor, sin-defiled, worm of the dust to be able to see by the eye of faith their purity in Christ who knew no sin. He says to her, "Thou hast." Here is something that the bride is in possession of, no one else possesses such things, she alone has received such great blessings. What are they? "Doves' eyes." Eyes of faith, by which she is able to behold her Redeemer, her husband for herself and not for another. The hearing of the ear is not enough, but eyes are given her by which she is able to view her Lord and to see in him her life, her support, her dependence, her future destiny. But why should they be called, "Doves' eyes? Why not some other kind? Are doves' eyes different from other eyes?"

The dove is a clean, harmless looking bird, that is it is not disposed to hurt nor to injure other birds. When it lights upon a tree it does not do so as the hawk in order to catch and destroy some other bird. It has no disposition of that kind. Even so it is not the disposition of a christian to hurt nor injure any one. The principle of the christian is, "Peace on earth, good will to men." In all the dark days of persecution through which the church has been called to pass she has not been the persecutor, but instead thereof she has prayed for those who persecuted her and has desired, if the will of her God be so, that their sins should be forgiven them and that they might be brought into the kingdom of Jesus. This proves the dove-like principle that is in the christian's heart. Like their meek and lowly Saviour, they are led as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep is dumb before her shearers so they opened not their mouth, and, in many cases, gladly accepting death in the name of Jesus. One reason she is said to have dove's eyes is because she does not look upon others to harm them, and again, the dove is quite watchful, watching the approach of every enemy; if an enemy comes up to her he comes secretly, unless it is a time when she is either very hungry and weak, or very cold, nearly frozen, but she does not watch the enemy for the purpose of hurting them but to get away out of their reach. So with a christian, for unless they go to sleep, (as they sometimes do) or are very weak or have grown quite cold and destitute of spiritual life the enemy cannot approach unto them to harm them unless they come sneakingly, as a snake in the grass, or as a lion that crouches down and conceals himself and pounces upon his prey unexpected. This shows the necessity of a christian to walk in the strait and narrow way from which all such enemies have been removed and cannot come there again; but if we turn aside in the wild ways of sin we shall surely come in contact with the enemy and like the sheep in the wilderness be caught in the briers, and the more we try to get loose the faster we get fettered; or like the fish in the net which gets tangled worse at every turn. The further we can stay from sin the better and less apt are we to be caught in its snares. But where are those eyes? "Within thy locks." Why are they there? What good could our eyes do us if they were within? -Our natural eyes are given us to see outward things, as the light of day and the darkness of night, but the christian's eyes, eyes of faith, are given to watch for those things that are for and against us as christians, and as the worst enemies are within the eyes are put there. From the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh; our hearts are deceitful and are likely to lead us astray, and therefore must be watched. Again, our carnality is within and must not be obeyed for in obeying that we must die. It is God's enemy and is therefore our enemy, and if our eyes were not within we could not watch this enemy and he would get the advantage of us. This is the principle that puffs us up and exalts,, causing us to think more of ourselves than we ought to think; all of which is contrary to christianity. This enemy does not lead us in the way of life and peace, but leads us into death and entangles our feet in the snares of satan. These are our worst enemies and therefore our eyes are put where we may watch them closely. A christian cannot see any righteousness in himself that is by the eyes of faith, or the doves' eyes: if he sees any righteousness there it is by carnal eyes that always puffs up, but by the eyes of faith he sees that in my flesh there dwells no good thing and is humbled for he is made to feel dependant on the Lord. The gospel minister by the doves' eyes does not see the qualification in himself, and is therefore made to pray to God for strength. If one views his own heart as being pure he looks upon it with the carnal eyes, if he esteems himself to be wise and able to instruct others he is led by the carnal mind and is self-conceited and is not therefore worthy to be trusted with the affairs of the church. Hence the necessity for these eyes to be within our locks, so that they may be nearest our worst enemies.

Brother Gold, I did not expect to say so much, and even now I feel that the subject is just hinted at, but I hope that some of the little ones may be benefited, and if so I shall feel amply paid.

Yours in gospel ties.

EXPERIENCE.

DEAR BROTHER GOLD:—I hope it is of the Lord that I make the attempt to write some of what I hope the Lord has caused me to see, feel and hear. In my tenth year sickness seized me, and something said to me, "You have got to die and if you are not changed you will go to torment." My next words were, Lord have mercy upon me, and save me from that place. I did not know what was the matter with me, and felt worse than I ever did before. Everything looked different to me. It appeared that there was smoke before my eyes. The next words were, Lord have mercy on me and save me from torment. Sometimes I could say nothing but Lord save me. This was in 1853. I told no one of it, but desired the prayers of the good people, loved to hear them talk about their hope, but was sly in hearing them, feeling like I was a poor wicked sinner, and bound to die, and without any hope of heaven. Sometimes my troubles would leave; then I was not satisfied, for I had no hope of ever being saved.

My dear old father was taken sick the 4th Saturday in October. He bore his sickness with patience and died the 3rd of November with a smile on his countenance. After my father died my troubles grew worse. My sins were as mountains. It appeared so dark to me; and I felt a heavy burden in my breast. There was preaching in the neighborhood, and I went though did not derive any comfort therefrom. I thought I should die, and cried to the Lord to show pity, to hear the cry of a distressed sinner, for I am resolved here to trust at thy foot-stool for favor, pleading for life. There was baptism near where I lived, and I went; as brother Oakley came out of the water I was made to say, Mr. Oakley, pray for me, I have done all I can do, and can do nothing. He prayed, and at that very moment my troubles were gone. I was easy and felt free of that burden and have never felt it since. Not a tear did I shed. They were all wiped away and I was set free. I felt different; my soul was full of love. I soon began to doubt and thought my burden would return. I tried to pray, and my prayer was different; it was this, Lord, if I am deceived pray show it to me. I could not say I had no hope. I was not afraid of torment. Then I would beg the Lord to show me if I was wrong. I went to preaching when I could, and loved none but the Old Baptists; they are all and all to me. I felt like I wanted to be with them, and craved to hear preaching and good people tell over their travails, and what the Lord had done for them. I could say, O, what has Jesus done for me. He for me has died, and now I may with pleasure sing, my wants are all supplied. I felt like I could sing, "How sweet the name of Jesus sounds, in a believer's ear." I wanted to hear brother Hall preach, and heard him soon after at the Association. He preached the first sermon, and when he had finished I wanted to go and give him my hand. Sometimes I wished I was a member of the true church, but the Lord's time had not come. The first Sunday in June 1880 I was reading ZION'S LANDMARK, and in it was an experience of a preacher. It was mine, if I have any. It was shown to me that I had a hope and that I professed it when brother Oakley prayed for me. I felt I must go to the church and tell what I had felt. On going home my husband met me in the yard. I told him of the great experience, and that it was mine, if I had any, but told nothing about my church trouble. I was praying, Father if it is right for me to go to the church give me some comfort, and these words came to me

"Shout ye little flock and blest,
You on Jesus' throne shall rest."

A light was over me brighter than the sunshine. In that light I saw Jesus, no one else but him. My tears were all gone and I was ready to go to Old Flat River church and tell those poor, despised people what I hope the Lord had done for me. I felt so unworthy, though was made willing to go. Saturday morning we all went to Flat River. Brother Moore preached. I joined, telling them a little of my hope. Sunday morning my husband also joined. Brother Moore baptized us both. I felt satisfied and that it was enough. Pray for me. Your unworthy sister,

MARTHA BLALOCK.

ELDER P. D. GOLD, DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—I will forward you the notice of our Association, of course it is a new thing to me and others too, but certainly it is not a new thing to the Lord. I gave it much thought since the time we met and proposed it, and after all my consideration I have reached one conclusion of the whole matter and that is this, if it is the Lord's will for us to have an Association it is right, and if it is not his will it is not right. I often tell the brethren that we must simply try to ascertain whether or not it is the Lord's time and will that we should have an Association, and if so why that will do. My advice is not to look at educational powers and similar means and judge that because we are without that, that we can't have an Association, but see whether or not we are on the Lord's side in the matter. What profit would it be to have all the equipment that the world can afford and then be short of Christ? I will answer in mine own ignorant way it would profit nothing, but would be rather a curse, but suppose He in His wise providence orders it, what man or set of men or devils can upset it, or defeat its success? I will answer again none, no not so much as all the world together. He spake and it was done. He commanded and it stood fast. Brother Gold, please excuse me for speaking so much about our weakness and His power, for I am compelled to consider as I am in possession of one (the weakness) and without the other (power) and it is only He that can cause a communication with the two extremes. In the year 1883 the old mother church of Eno saw the gift and impression of the gospel in old brother Luke Webb (now dead) they asked the Association to set him free to the ministry to serve the church at Durham &c. (col.) it was granted by a vote in the majority at the Association, he then served until his death in August 1884, so the church was without a pastor until 1886, at which time Deep Creek church under the pastoral care of that God-fearing man Elder James A. Burch asked the Association to ordain brother Ellis Faucett which was granted, he has been serving dutifully and regularly ever since. I do believe he is to this church a gift from the Lord for he seems to have great patience and long for-bearing and other qualities that are particularly necessary that a minister should have, for we all seem to love him &c., and since he can and does stand us in every particular as he does, I must think he has some extra qualities to get along with us so well, for we are not exactly square nor smooth. In 1886 the Gillam church asked the same for brother Wm. E. Slade. The Association at once accepted their request, and in doing this the Association committed the entire responsibility of ordaining ministers (col) to these two Elders Faucett and Slade. Since that they have ordained two, which makes a total of four ordained preachers (col) in this part of the State, and five constituted churches of the same color. These four ministers, together with the other brethren, were led to believe that it would be good to have an Association for the bringing together of these five churches; since united we stand, divided we fall. So they met last summer and organized. I was a delegate from the Durham church, and can safely say they did this in much love and respect to the white brethren, who had labored so faithfully to establish us in these five churches.

It was thought best by a majority of the delegates to hold the Association in October, so as to allow the Country Line and ours, a long space between so that the white brethren and friends could visit us on that our first Association. May the Lord send some of them. The question is often asked among the brethren, will Elders A. N. Hall, or P. D. Gold, or James A. Burch preach at the Association in October. I can only answer them by saying, I hope so. May some of you sustain our hope in this most particular matter. I will take it upon myself knowing too that I will express the sentiment of all our brethren to ask you to extend an invitation, through the columns of the well known LANDMARK, to our white brethren and friends, inviting them to come. Elder Reid of Washington city and George Robbins of Plymouth, N. C. both expect to preach for us at that time, and they are good preachers I think.

I remain yours in the bonds of Christ I hope.

P. D. G.

DEARLY BELOVED BROTHER IN CHRIST:—If I must own myself so high as to say brother, but I often feel that it is too much for me to say: for if a saint the least and worst of all: but one thing I do know, I love the brethren. I was at the house reading my bible. While I was sitting reading I got to studying about writing you a few lines. I got up and started back to my store thinking about writing to you. My flesh seemed to quiver all over me. I cannot tell why I felt as I did, but Lord what am I, it makes me think how some professors say: they say if they believed as the Old Baptist did they would take their fill of sin. I think they are just professors, and not possessors, for I feel to say let every man be alive to God. True I got my fill of sin along time ago. What grieves me is I am too full of sin all the time. Now I will try if God wills, to write a few hints about my travel from nature to grace, as I hope. When I was about 16 years of age I was at Spoon Creek church, under Joshua Adams' preaching. I was roused up in my feelings, and it put me to studying over my past life, and to begging God for mercy. I was troubled and remained single until I was 31 years old. I came then to the conclusion I would marry. I remained at home thinking perhaps I would do better, and have a change, but at last after I was married the worldly matters choked me up more than ever, for a man that does not provide for his own house-hold is like an infidel that had denied the faith. I passed on until about 3 years ago, I got to studying about selling out and going to Colorado, thinking I perhaps would have a change some way or other. When I got in that lonely condition I went out there, but it did not give me any comfort, but worse. I stayed 3 months and came to the conclusion that I would come back to live, or die. After I got back I went North to get my goods; on my trip I left my bed and went out at the window; when I came to my mind I was on the ground, and badly hurt. I took train and returned home. It put me to thinking: it was for some cause or other: while I was confined to my bed one day I felt like worldly affairs would not trouble me any more like they had. I thought it may be I was changed from nature to grace; but in a few days my troubles seemed to be worse than ever. About that time two good brothers came home with me from preaching: that night they got after me to tell them my hope. I told them I had none: that night I went to bed, and went to sleep and woke up singing, —“Amazing grace how sweet it sounds,

That saved a wretch like me.”

Then I awoke and felt relieved some, but in a few days I left my house and went to the woods thinking to kneel down to beg God for mercy, but alas I never found any place to come to my sinful knees. Oh! that was too much for me. I dropped down on a log, and cried, and begged God the best I knew how for mercy. I can't tell how long I stayed out there. For I did not want my companion to find it out. When I returned back in a few days I got to studying about that cross.

I can't tell how long I was walking around to find a place to come to my sinful knees; but all at once I dropped to my knees and begged God to show me something to put me lower or let me feel like I was changed; but I returned with my same sinful mind. Some few weeks after this time I left my bed to go to my barn to see if my tobacco was in order. I lighted my lamp. I had not been there but a short time stripping tobacco before my lamp went out; I was struck and felt I was one of the foolish ones; in a short time there seemed to be a light shining around me: it did not last long. I kept my seat wanting to see it again. It soon appeared again. I looked towards my field of tobacco to see if I could see it, but I could not. I turned and looked up to see if it shone through the top of the barn, but did not. I could not see it only around me. I can't tell how I felt when it left me the second time. Oh! how had I wanted to see it again. Soon some way I found myself singing,

"How sweet the name of Jesus sounds,
In a believer's ear;
It soothes his sorrows, heals his wounds,
And drives away his fear."

I cannot tell how long I sung before I thought what I had told my companion if I had a change I would not keep it a secret from her: about that time I can't tell how bad my breast hurt me. I sprang out of the door to come and tell; and soon the misery left my breast. As soon as I got to the room I dropped to my knees by her bed, broke out to crying, she said papa what is the matter with you? Then I commenced telling her my travel. This was on Thursday before the third Sunday in January last. I felt like my trouble was gone. I felt so much better. I went to Senter church on Saturday some weeks after; 3rd Sunday in February I was baptized.

DEAR BRETHREN GOLD AND LES-
TER:—My mind has been led to write you some things concerning our peace and happiness while we journey through this wilderness of sin and death, and also to ask your advice as to the course we ought to pursue when we have had strong impressions made upon our hearts that the God of love, mercy and truth called us to feel and realize that it is his will to call us to speak of his wonderful love, and tell of his power in the forgiveness of the sins of his church and people here in the earth. Dear brother, it is a cross indeed when we are led by the Spirit of Almighty God to see ourselves sinners in the sight of a just and Alwise God, and how wonderful it is, so that he will call and lead us into his lovely arms, lead and teach us by the operation of His Holy Spirit. How we ought to labor together as brethren and sisters in love and mercy for the advancement of his church and kingdom in the earth. Dear brother, I love to read from your pen of the blessed way of life and peace. My heart's desire is that you may be spared to write and preach the glorious gospel of the Son of God with peace and demonstration of the Spirit until journeying Pilgrims can sing the song of Moses and the Lamb. And let us all with one accord praise God in the spirit and truth which comes by revelation only. And let us see if we have aught to boast of, for man's boasting is altogether vanity and vexation of spirit.

Dear brother, I hope you will continue to write and urge the brethren to search the scriptures and obey Jesus as the only King in the holy hill of Zion, and keeps themselves unspotted from the world.

Editorial.

ELDER P. D. GOLD, DEAR SIR:—Will you give me your views on the 24th chapter of Prov. and the 9th verse, also the 73 Psalm, the 4 to 7 verses? My husband takes the LANDMARK, and I read every number that comes. I like to read the Experiences. I feel like that I would be willing to give all that I have if I could feel like they do. I have been trying to pray to the Lord to show me my lost condition. Oh! I would give this whole world if I could feel that I am a condemned sinner before God. I know I am a sinner. The Bible says there is none good, not one. If my heart deceive me not I desire to be a christian above anything. I had rather be found in the favor of God than to have ten thousand worlds like this: for what will it profit me if I gain the whole world and lose my soul? I am a stranger to you, but I believe you are a christian, and I want you to pray for me. Pray the Lord to open my blind eyes that I may feel that I am a great sinner in His sight. I do hope I do desire this above all things. I am afraid I am not one of the elect: if I could feel that I am one of the elect I would feel happy.

Remarks.

"The thought of foolishness is sin; and the scorner is an abomination to men."

One that is interested in salvation manifests it by his sensitiveness to the word of God. That word does not give trouble to the dead. A sharp sword might pierce the heart of one dead corporeally yet that corpse would not wince or move at all, nor show any sign of pain or life because it is dead. The dead know not any thing, nor do they feel any pain. So one dead in trespasses and sins does not feel the force of the word of God. But when one is quickened by the Spirit of God then that one feels and knows that the word of God is sharper than any two edged sword.

One dead in sins would never be distressed at his own thoughts as foolish and sinful. Unbelievers in the truth of God's word do not care how foolish or vile their thoughts and imaginations are. It is only when they commit vile deeds and are detected, or afraid they may be, that they are distressed, and even then often but little.

Our friend therefore being burdened with this scripture which searches the hearts and tries the reins of the children of men, gives evidence that she is a subject of grace. For when one is distressed because his thoughts are foolish and therefore sinful that soul is alive from the dead. It is a matter of deep and bitter sorrow to the child of God that so many foolish and therefore sinful thoughts swarm within, and sting and defile him. All foolish thoughts are sinful, and so many of our thoughts are foolish. How can a fool be rid of foolish thoughts?

"And the scorner is an abomination to men." Those who scorn the word of God are an abomination to men; that is to the men of God, or to all that fear God. When we see this scorner in our own foolish thoughts and natures then we abhor ourselves in dust and ashes, and abhorring ourselves we feel that men abhor us, and that there is no mercy for us before the God of heaven who also abhors us. It is thus we are led to desire that we might deeply abhor ourselves and feel that we are condemned for sin; for we think if we could thus feel condemned surely we would repent of it and turn away from such a course, and then we would obtain mercy of the Lord for thus turning.

You cannot convince one that is truly under conviction that this is true of him or her, for such people feel if the burden is pungent that it is the sure omen of destruction and just condemnation from the presence of a holy God; or if the conviction is not so heavy it is construed by this subject of grace to be only the hardness of an impenitent heart that cannot mourn because it is given up to hopeless abandonment by the God of heaven; or such that feel they cannot be numbered with the elect of God, but are cast off forever as unworthy of notice. These tried and distressed ones have an abiding thirst after righteousness, and would rather be children of God than to have all this world and would choose to suffer affliction with the children of God rather than to dwell in the tents of wickedness, feeling what would it profit to gain the whole world and lose one's soul. What better evidence than this could there be that such souls are hungering and thirsting after righteousness? Is this the condition of those that are blinded by the god of this world? What trouble do they have that are under the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience. Such false worshippers are as one kept by a strong man (the devil) and the goods are in peace, or as described in the other scripture that our friend presents for consideration, namely:

"For there are no bands in their death; but their strength is firm."

"They are not in trouble as other men; neither are they plagued like other men."

"Therefore pride compasseth them about as a chain; violence covereth them as a garment"— Psalms. 73: 4—7.

These are such as make a profession of religion without any bands in their death, that is they were not sensible they were sinners, never were plagued with vile and foolish thoughts; but without any fear that they were not the chosen of God, but with fleshly confidence and boasting in their power to do all that is commanded or necessary to obtain salvation, they make a profession of religion by merely resolving in the strength of their fleshly mind, without any dying or bands in their death; while Paul said, "The commandment came, sin revived and I died;" but these have no such bands in their death; nor ever in their natural death is there any fear; but the people of God are subject to bondage all their lifetime through fear of death.

Nor are these wicked ones plagued as other men (God's people) because they do not feel that they are sinners and vile, but they can do as well as they wish and are equal to all demands, and hence dwell at ease. Therefore they are full of pride and self-complaisance, and their eyes stick out with fatness for they have all they wish.

What genders pride and feeds that spirit if it is not that one has all he wants, and considers himself superior to others? The Pharisee considered himself far above that publican and thanked God that he was not such as he was, and boasted that he had done so many things. He was no beggar, nor did he have any confessions to make, nor was he plagued with foolish thoughts or vile feelings, nor did he have any requests to make. Did not his eyes stick out with fatness? Pride compasses such about as a chain which they cannot break. They feel no weakness, but their strength is firm. Now which of these classes does my poor afflicted and distressed friend belong to?

God says, I will leave in the midst of thee an afflicted and poor people, and they shall trust in the name of the Lord. It is the lot of the righteous to be distressed and plagued all the day long as sinners, and they are beggars for mercy, and cannot do the things they would, but do the things they would not.

If any is afflicted let him pray. In their distress the people of God call on the name of the Lord, and it shall come to pass that whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord the same shall be saved.

It is a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptation that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners. Jesus came into the world to save sinners. God did not save sinners before the foundation of the world; though such was his purpose; but Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners. He did not come to save people that feel they are good, a people that feel they are repenting, a people that feel that they are chosen; but he came to seek and to save that which was lost, or to save sinners.

May our friend find mercy of the Lord who is exalted a Prince and Saviour to grant both repentance and remission of sins unto Israel.

You may, and no doubt do say that the Lord is truly good to Israel, even to such as be of a clean heart, while you feel that you cannot be an Israelite because your heart is not clean: but when you come into the sanctuary, and see how the proud and those who are wise in their own eyes, are full of ease and have no distress, then you will see that they stand in slippery places, and their feet shall slide in due time; but that your sense of guilty helplessness and distress is needful that you may call on the name of the Lord.

CLAIM YOUR RIGHTS.

At some of our Associations we see tents erected for traffic, wherein cider, beer, confectioneries, apples, cakes, crackers, and probably liquors intoxicating are sold. In some instances men not friends of the Primitive Baptists owning land near by will grant liberty to such disturbers of the peace to erect tents on their land and sell to the damage of all lovers of gospel worship and good order. Sometimes too such men as sell these things say that some member or members of the church grant them this privilege. Now this is all wrong. Men who sell anything except prepared food for man or beast, on or near such grounds at the time of the meeting, violate the law of the state, and no man that loves the Primitive Baptists will do such a thing. No member of the church should grant any such permission to any one at all. Friends of the cause generally bring plenty of food on the ground and give it to the people. So that there is no excuse for people bringing anything there to sell. Picture tents put up, and tents for selling anything on the ground at one of our Associations is an ugly sight and I am ashamed of it. Our people ought not to allow it either. They can break it up if they will see that no license is given by any church or any member of any church to any one to sell anything on the ground.

The Country Line Association passed a resolution two years ago forbidding all manner of traffic on their grounds, and it has much improved the conduct at that Association. The Kehukee Association at its present session did the same thing. Now let the brethren see that this is enforced, and see that no member of any church grants to any man any right to sell anything on the grounds or near it. As for owners of land near by when they allow such abuse of order, let them be punished also for encouraging such violations of law. Let every Baptist set his face against all such violations of law, and let every Association publicly oppose it and forbid it, and have all guilty parties tried, and have all disturbers of good order at our meetings punished according to law. We are too slack about such things.

When men are allowed to sell intoxicating drinks at such places can we expect those drinking to behave themselves. When did you see a drunken man that could behave himself? When these men are allowed to sell cider, lemonade, &c., they slip in stronger drinks and cause much of the disorder at our meetings. A strong detailed police force should be on the ground to arrest and bind over all offenders and disturbers of public worship; and when any are found guilty they should be punished and not be allowed to escape. One trouble in the country now is that the laws are not enforced. Officers of the law are too slack and allow the criminals to escape just punishment. We are not upholders of the law when we allow the guilty to go unpunished. It is as much the duty of the people to see that offenders are punished according to law, as it is to see that innocent people are protected by the law.

KIND NOTICE.

The following notice of the Treatise on the Book of Joshua written by me appeared in the Signs of the Times of Oct. 9th, 1889.

"We have received a pamphlet bearing the above title, written by our esteemed brother, P. D. Gold, of Wilson, N. C., While the author will not claim for it perfection nor infallibility, it is an interesting and readable treatise, containing one hundred and seventy four pages, clearly printed, and neatly bound in paper. Price fifty cents. We hope it may be favorably received by the brethren and liberally patronized."

This we appreciate from our dear brother Beebe. He expresses the truth when he states that we claim neither perfection nor infallibility. That certainly does not belong to me. While it was on my mind, and I believe of the Lord that I should write it, yet perfection and infallibility belong alone to God.

I am a sinner and an erring one. My brethren show much charity towards me. How good it is to dwell with those on whom this mantle has fallen, and who therefore spread this skirt over the naked and needy ones such as I am. I hope the Lord will bless this work to the good of Israel.

A DISPUTED QUESTION, BECAUSE MANY ARE CARNAL.

(Matt. 19: 5, 8.)

Brother A. Mc. Millian of Tenn. requests my view of the subject of divorce.

We would premise a few remarks of this sort. The more wicked people are the more frequent divorces are. Witness some ungodly sections of the Northern part of the United States where divorces are common for almost any pretext. There is perhaps no section of our country where love of money and lust controls people more than there is where divorces occur by the thousands.

We are opposed to new fashions and changes that encroach on bible doctrine. Nor do we believe that the world is improving in sound morality.

1st. Jesus said from the beginning God made them male and female, one woman for one man, and therefore what God joined together let not man put asunder. Jesus said that there is only one cause for putting away, and that is fornication. No other reason or cause can be found but this, and putting away on any other ground or pretence but this is sin.

2nd. But the disciples say, why then did Moses command to give a writing of divorcement and put away ones wife? Jesus said because of the hardness of your hearts Moses suffered this: but from the beginning it was not so. It was then a sign and proof of their sinfulness to be allowed to put away their wives. If they had been righteous there would have been no pretence for this, nor any desire on their part to do such a thing.

You do not expect as much of a drunken man as you do of one that is sober. But is that any credit to the drunken one? Surely not, but is to his shame for being drunk. The law finds men carnal, hard-hearted and with no minds to serve God, and suffers this state of things showing that the carnal mind is enmity to the law of God, and not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be.

When men therefore put away their wives for any cause save fornication and marry again they commit adultery, and show that they are not spiritual, not under the blessed power of the gospel, but carnal. Such violations of law always bring trouble and distress. When we do that which is right before

God, and so show forth the fruits of the Spirit for love and truth, then we manifest that our deeds are wrought in God, and are according to his revealed word. But when we walk after the flesh we show that we are hard-hearted and bondage follows.

Grace is older than the law—provided first, since the covenant of promise is older than the law given by Moses. So when God made Eve and gave her to Adam it is to represent one Lord, and one true church, my love, my dove, my undefiled is but one. The law was given afterward because of transgression and by it men show that they are sinners. There is only one true church of Jesus, and the Lord hates putting away; but he has betrothed his bride unto him in loving kindness, righteousness and truth forever, and what he has joined together can never be separated.

But there are many concubines or those that do not stand as the true wife, many that take hold of one man and say, let us be called by your name; and there are many divorces, all of which show the corruption of man.

Observe that when we walk in the truth it does not cause trouble, but when we stray away it causes distress and trouble.

ENCOURAGING.

I was favored to visit the Contentnea Association at its last session. Fifteen years ago it met in the same vicinity, in Pamlico County, N. C.,. What a wonderful improvement there is in that section of country and among the Baptists too in their accommodations for Associations. It was a well entertained Association this time and a good one. It occurred to me that the fruits of the labors of such good and faithful preachers as Elders John R. Rowe and L. H. Hardy were visible. It is a great blessing to a country to be favored with good preaching gifts, and with brethren that are alive to their high and holy calling and that love the cause of truth, and show it by good conduct and wise speech that cannot be gainsaid.

Obituary.

MARGARET HYMAN.

On the morning of the 19th of Sept. 1889, our much loved sister, Margaret Hyman, was called from the shores of time to that happy Mansion not made by hands eternal in the heavens. While her afflictions were severe here we feel it was but light compared to the unfading glories of that bright world beyond the vale for all the redeemed of our blessed Jesus. This sister was stricken down with paralysis two years ago last August, and has been confined to the house since most of the time and to her bed; but while passing through the furnace of afflictions she ever seemed strong in the faith once delivered to the saints, with a spirit of resignation to the will of her heavenly Father, ever looking forward to her happy reward beyond the tomb.

The unworthy writer called to see her many times during her afflictions, and always found her seemingly firm upon the rock of eternal ages, with her affections drawn heavenward. As the wise virgin with her lamp trimmed ready to meet her blessed Jesus with the holy angels in the the open firmament of heaven, she seemed to face death with a pleasing smile as though all was well with her; as viewing the city of the living God, and death as the only gate through which she could enter. This sister was born Sept. the 6th 1829, as the writer has been informed, making her stay upon earth 60 years.

She was convicted of sin about the year of 1853, being translated from the powers of darkness to a fellowship with God and his dear people, after relating her experience she entered into the fellowship of the church at Conoho where she remained an orderly member up to her death,

She was united in marriage to Mr. Kenney Hyman about the date of 46, with whom she lived up to his death a devoted companion: she was then left with 4 children three daughters and one son: she lived to see them all grown and married, and two of her daughters happily united into the sweet fellowship of the holy church of the living God. We feel to know there is but one true church, one sure faith, and one strait way to trace the foot-steps of the flock to this last resting place in the immortal kingdom of our God. While we miss the dear sister and mother, we feel it is great gain to the loved one to depart to ever be with her Lord, where no sorrow nor afflictions can enter. So weep not dear children, but ever try to imitate the example of your fond mother, that ere long you may reach that happy shore to be forever blest. Now to the last and youngest daughter, Mrs. Lizzie Bell, let me try to speak a word of comfort, as I have heard of your faith; that you have a hope in the sure mercies of the Holy Child Jesus. Take up your cross and follow him in baptism. There is ever sweet rest to the poor weary soul in the faith of duty. The diseased spent her last days with her dear children, which was at the home of brother Joshua Bell, her son in-law; he and his kind wife, sister Bell, did all they could to give ease to the poor afflicted mother. Sister Edwards was present part of the time in her mother's last hours ready to do her whole duty as best she could. Sister Bell has been a daughter indeed, was ready to administer in any way she could to her poor afflicted mother during her two years of confinement. May the good Lord bless all the bereaved family here in time as far as can be consistent to His holy will, and sweetly lead them forth by the right way, is the earnest desire of the humble writer.

A precious one from earth is gone,

A voice we loved is still.

A place is vacant in her home

Which never can be filled.

CHARY CRAFT.

Chary Craft, wife of Stephen Craft, and daughter of Edwin Whitley was born the 14th, of February 1857 and died May 25th 1889, making her stay on this earth 32 years, 3 month and 11 days. She was always considered a good girl at home and at school, and was loved by all who knew her. Her father died when she was quite small leaving her with the family to care for, consisting of mother and one brother, and one sister all younger than herself. She cared for them and tried to speak a word of comfort to her mother in her lonely hours of trouble. She was married to the said Stephen Craft March the 20th 1873, to whom she bore three children, two of which survive her together with their dear father to mourn her loss. Surely she was a wife who could meet her companion at all times with a smile like a lovely rose sending forth its fragrance to cheer him on the pathway of life's journey. She spoke to her children with the fondness and tenderness of a mother, was affectionate to her neighbors, could look into the empty vessel of the poor with pity, her soul would not be comforted because theirs was not. About seven years after she was married it pleased the good Lord to show her what a sinner she was, both by nature and by practice, her need of a Saviour, and the Lord Jesus as her hope. She went before the conference of the church at the Meadow, related the reason of her hope and was received and baptized Friday before the fourth Sunday in September 1885 by Elder Jesse Baker, and went on her way rejoicing. She remained a consistent member of the church until her death always filling her seat when she could. She surely could be called a tree of righteousness, the planting of the Lord, not like a wild tree leaning on and entangling its branches with other trees for support, not like climbing vines, but like a trusting child of faith, had learned to cast all her care on the Lord. Her inward life was soft and tender. It grew outward and was sound. She was a sufferer of lung disease for years before she died. Though death had its iron weight to crush her hopes, her words hung upon Jesus. He sat enthroned on her brow, his words were sealed on her lips, therefore she loved him: the fruit was ripe and mellow with the dew of heaven, in heaven from where she looked for the Saviour. As the disease progressed, and the waiting family stood around watching every action and sign, she was breathing the air of heaven, a goodly place, notwithstanding God's sanctuary was in their midst. Beneath the wings of flesh and blood was couched the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the prince of peace. This man shall be the peace. She was often heard to sing No. 144.

"How lost was my condition,
"Till Jesus made me whole."

She would often speak of the Saviour and say here he lies by my side, don't you see him, all is so good: towards the last she said, I want to go to my Saviour. She once had affections below, now they are loosed and above. She would say can't you go and tell my Saviour to come after me. I am ready. Once she felt to have two homes one here and one far away. While the season of work and duty lasted she was happy to stay in this world and when God's time came she was still happy to go. She was content to toil, and bear the heat and the burden of the day while strength was given her to toil, but when the winter of age and infirmity came, and the scythe of death invaded this earthly tabernacle, and the frail garment of mortality could no longer shelter the soul, then on joyous wings of cloudless beauty she flies, no more on stormy seas to roam, but hails her haven in the skies. On the night of May the 25 1889 her spirit took its flight upward and onward through to uplifted doors, along the starry pathway, through the open ranks of angels, through the pearly gates, unto her exalted Saviour to go out no more forever, where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest.

I have not language to express half my feelings concerning this goodly sister. The half has not been told.

Her husband was a member of the church about 20 years, during that time he was ordained Deacon at the Meadow church in Green County N. C.
